The New Year

The harvest we shall reap depends on how we sow, spiritually, morally, intellectually.

A new year confronts us. What shall it bring? It will only be with an effort that we will avoid the consequences of our past acts in wrong habit, but it can be done if necessary, and if we are following the right way, every effort should be made to see that our habits of right living are strengthened during the coming year. What the year will bring to each of us personally will depend upon ourselves.

There are certain matters definitely before the church. We have to look forward to a General Conference in the fall; we have to look forward to our various reunions. The passing years have noted a great increase in these gatherings together in the summer time. It is well that these times should be, in good part, a time of recreation, when we take our vacation. But let us resolve that our reunions this year shall be more noteworthy for spiritual power than has been the case with many in the years now past. They should be a time of refreshing, not for the display of clothing, not for the spending of our substance, but they should be times from which we will go home with new spiritual power to do the work before us, to help and encourage others with whom we come in contact. To make the reunions all they should be, they should be better organized than has usually proven the case in the past, with every detail, so far as possible, arranged by the officers before we assemble.

The first of the year finds the church suffering from the financial stringency. We hope that the conditions in the world will improve early in the new year. But, however it may be with the world, let us not forget the obligations we owe to the church of God.

The old year is past; before us there will soon arise a spring of sowing, a summer of growing, and a fall of harvest. What shall the harvest be? That depends on what we shall sow spiritually, morally, and intellectually now. Many have been studying the financial law of the church; many have been seeking to learn the nature of Zion. It is easier to discuss than it is to act. But let us hope that the coming year will note progress in the things done towards a social solution that will provide not only better for us, but also for those associated with us, our brethren and sisters and coworkers.

A Greeting to the German Saints

At the request of President Frederick M. Smith, Sister Hermine Bennett, of Detroit, wrote the following letter addressed to the members of the church in Germany to be printed in the HERALD.

It is her testimony of the truth of the work and a Christmas greeting to the Saints in that distant land.

THE SAINTS' HERALD and the church in America send greetings for the New Year to all of our fellow members throughout the whole world.

Eine Weihnachts-grüssen und ein Neujahrwunsch

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, November 16, 1921.

An unsere Glaubensgenossen im fernen Deutschland:

Vor kurzer Zeit hatten wir die Freude President Frederick M. Smith, wenn auch nur auf kurze Zeit bei uns in Detroit zu haben. In einer Unterhaltung über seine Reise in Deutschland, machte er mir den Vorschlag, einmal einen Brief an die Glaubensgenossen Deutschlands durch den HERALD zu schreiben. Diesem Vorschlage soll ich nun Folge leisten und begrüße hiermit unbekannter weise meine Bruder und Geschwister in meiner alten Heimat, besonders diejenigen in Düsseldorf, da das mein Geburtsort ist, auch Schwester Kippe nebst Familie mit denen ich schon brieflich bekannt bin.

Ich bin als zwölfjähriges Kind, mit meinen lieben Eltern hierhin gekommen, aber in meinem Enthusiasmus die Englische Sprache zu meistern, habe ich meine Muttersprache nicht vergessen.

Mit sechzehn Jahren habe ich zum ersten Male das wahre Evangelium Christus gehört. Glockenrein und wunderbar zog es in meine Seele ein. Lange brauchte ich nicht um zur Überzeugung zu gelangen das dies die Wahrheit war, so wurde ich denn bald getauft. Natürlich war es mir in vielen Beziehungen nicht leicht, denn erstens waren meine Eltern entschieden dagegen, bis das ich sie durch Deutsche Schriften beweisen konnte, das wir keine "Mormonen" wären.

Zweitens hatte ich viele liebe Freunde, die sich für Religion nicht sehr interessierten denen ich nun "Ade" sagen musste. Aber ich gedachte der Worte:—

"Verzage nicht wenn Freunde dich verlassen
Und will die ganze Welt dich hassen,
Vertrau auf Den der sprach 'Es werde Licht'
Verzage nicht."

So bin ich auch in dieser Beziehung entschädigt worden, da ich hunderte treue Freunde im Glauben gewonnen habe. Leider bin ich bis jetzt die einzige in meiner Familie geblieben die dem Rufe Christi Folge leistete.

Jetzt bin ich aber schon seit mehreren Jahren Gattin und Mutter. Mein lieber Mann (ein Ältester) ist immer darauf bedacht am grossen Werk des Herrn mitzuarbeiten und kann ich auch ein gleiches von unseren zwei Mädchen sagen.

Ich danke Gott das sie beide in ihrer frühesten Jugend zur Einsicht kamen Gott zu dienen. Denn die Stürme des Lebens rütteln oft unsanft an den jungen Bäumen, aber wenn wir gewiss sind, dass seine Wurzeln fest in gutem Boden eingeschlagen sind, können wir ruhig dem Sturme Trotz bieten und dann noch—

"Das Bäumchen biegt sich, doch der Lamm nicht mehr."

Wir haben hier in Detroit ungefähr eintausend Mitglieder. Ein junger Pastor ist am Steuerrad und leitet unser Schiff gewandt und sicher. Obgleich es kaum ein Jahr ist seit er hierher kam, hat er sich doch den Respekt und die brüderliche Liebe aller erworben und jeder ist bereit ihm zu helfen, damit wir nicht schiffbrüchig werden. Wenn jeder sein Scherlein beibringt, jeder tut was in seinen Kräfte steht, dann können wir mit Luther sagen:

"Und wenn die Welt voll Teufel wär,
Und wollt uns doch verschlingen
So fürchten wir uns nicht so sehr
Es soll uns doch gelingen."

Darum liebe deutsche Geschwister möchte ich euch aus der Ferne zurufen—"Vorwärts im Kampfe des Herrn!" Obgleich wir manche Enttäuschung im Lebenslaufe finden, wollen wir uns an der reichen Quelle seiner Liebe erquicken und getrost in die Zukunft sehen, zu überwinden das, was uns sonst unfähig machte mitzustritten für die Erlösung Zions.

Nun steht das liebe Weihnachtsfest wieder vor der Tür. Auch in unserem Heim werden wir die alten deutschen Melodien singen—

"Oh du froliche, Oh du selige Gnadenbringende Weihnachtszeit."

"Von Himmel hoch da komm ich her," und mein Lieblingslied:

"Heilige Nacht, du kehrest wieder,
Stern bei Stern zu glüh'n beginnt.
Froh ertönen unsere Lieder
Christ ist geboren, Gottes kind," etc.

Diese Lieder sind mir unvergesslich im Gedächtniss eingepägt. Sie wecken in mir Erinnerungen. Ich sehe mich wieder als Kind im Elternhause unter dem geschmückten Christbaume freudestrahlend die Sachen bewundern, die mir das Christkind gebracht hat. "Oh Selig, Oh Selig ein Kind, noch zu sein." Aber ich traume. Der Vergangenheit Leben lässt uns stille stehn. Der Zukunft müssen wir unsere Taten und Gedanken widmen, damit wir bald als ein gemeinsamer jubelnder Chor in Zion singen können.

"Ehre sei Gott in der Höhe
Friede auf Erden
Und den Menschen ein Wohlgefallen."

Ihre Schwester in Christo,

HERMINE BENNETT.

A Preparatory School for the Priesthood

Announcement of a series of important meetings in Zion.

The following announcement was distributed to the members of the priesthood in Independence during the last week in 1921. It will be noted that this calls for a preliminary meeting and carries with it the expression of hope, or confident expectation, that presently the school of the prophets may be fully established.

In Kirtland, a preliminary school of the elders was held some years before the temple was sufficiently completed for such occupancy. This school included all ranks of the priesthood, from high priest to deacon.

So this school will be held each Sunday afternoon, beginning January 8, and including all orders of the priesthood.

It is a momentous announcement and one which will be read with much interest by the church everywhere.

Dear Fellow Minister for Christ: It is well known that we are now in the hastening time preparatory to the full redemption of Zion and the second coming of our Lord. In view of this fact we ought not to delay further our preparation for the fuller exercise of our ministry. It is confidently expected that presently the school of the prophets may be fully established. In the meantime we feel that some immediate preparation for service should be made by all the priesthood.

A school for the elders was begun in Kirtland, Ohio, in the winter of 1833, some three years before the Temple was sufficiently completed for occupancy by the school. It was held in private houses and classes were taught by various members of the priesthood who had preparation and equipment for such work as was undertaken. This school included all the priesthood, from the high priest to the deacon (see Doctrine and Covenants, section 85).

We deem the situation at present confronting us in Zion of sufficient importance to warrant us in asking the entire priesthood to meet for a season on Sunday afternoons for instruction. The Presidency will supervise and direct this work, and shall expect every ordained man to attend. It will be advantageous to you if you provide yourself with material for taking notes. We desire that the secretary of each quorum keep record of the members of his quorum attending, and report the same to us.

We will initiate this work on Sunday, January 8, at 2.30 p. m., in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church. Please make arrangements to be present every Sunday afternoon.

Your servants for Christ's sake,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By Frederick M. Smith.

Man's Free Agency

Sermon by Elbert A. Smith in the series for young people at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, December 11, 1921. One of the collection making up the newly issued book, Square Blocks.

I wish to speak to-night on self-determination. Not the self-determination of nations propounded by Woodrow Wilson at Versailles; but the self-determination of individual men propounded by Nephi:

"Wherefore, the Lord God gave unto man, that he should act for himself."—2 Nephi 1: 99.

This Book of Mormon text contains a very explicit and concise statement of the doctrine of free agency. The right of self-determination is the thing that characterizes you as men and women. Inanimate objects move as they are compelled to move by external forces. The animals have no knowledge of good or evil, so are not called upon to choose and cannot exercise free agency in a moral sense. But to you alone of all creatures on earth God says, "Choose ye."

Good and Evil; the Law of Opposites

Good and evil as opposites are recognized by most human philosophies and by most religions. They have been made the subject of endless speculation. Man's curiosity concerning them responded to the Devil's bait in Eden, when he said: "Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil."

I have said that most religions recognize good and evil; however, Christian Science denies the reality and existence of evil. I will read:

"There in reality is no evil."—Retrospection and Introspection.

"Evil is unreal because it is a lie."—Science and Health, p. 527, edition of 1907.

Evil, then, is represented as unreal, a monstrous lie that has been all but universal. But, let me ask, what is a monstrous lie if not evil? So, in the same breath in which evil is denied, it is affirmed. Perhaps that is comprehensible to the incomprehensible logic of Christian Science, which constantly affirms all that reason denies and denies all that reason affirms.

It is worth while to remember that the Lord is reported to have said: "The man has become as one of us, to know good and evil."—Genesis 3: 22. Why deny that which God recognizes?

Evil is self-evident. To illustrate: What man could look upon the dead body of a girl murdered and ravished by some inhuman brute, and then go his way denying the reality and existence of evil?

It occurs to me that primitive peoples quite without revelation would come to perceive good and evil.

Pain would be evil; comfort good. Famine would be evil; plenty would be good. So they might feel their way to moral issues and conclude finally that it is bad to kill, to steal, to lie.

The lines of reason might be crude at first, but would lead up to Socrates, who conceded with the Sophists that pleasure is the chief end and aim of life, but went far beyond them to affirm that true pleasure is found only in rectitude, virtue, and service; or to Roosevelt, who talked about the twilight zone of morals, affirming that it is easy to distinguish black on the one hand or white on the other, but hard to determine whether some shades of gray have in them more of black or of white.

The idea of good and evil runs all through the Scriptures. The Book of Mormon has one very interesting chapter on the law of opposites. I will quote some very brief extracts:

"For it must needs be, that there is opposition in all things. If not so . . . righteousness could not be brought to pass; neither wickedness; neither holiness nor misery; neither good nor bad. . . . And if ye shall say there is no sin, ye shall also say there is no righteousness. . . . Even the forbidden fruit is opposite to the tree of life; the one being sweet and the other bitter."—2 Nephi 1.

Thus the idea runs through the philosophy of the chapter. Bitter is opposed to sweet; death to life; evil to good; sin to righteousness.

Sir Oliver Lodge, the British scientist, has a chapter in his book, The Substance of Faith, many portions of which might have been taken bodily from the Book of Mormon, so far as sentiment is concerned. Is it not strange that an unlettered boy like Joseph Smith, who is supposed by some to have concocted the Book of Mormon, should have presented scientific and philosophic ideas that nearly one hundred years later should be affirmed by one of the greatest of modern scientists? On the law of opposite or contrasts, Lodge writes:

"Some idea of the necessity for evil can be conveyed as follows: Contrast is an inevitable attribute of reality. Sickness is the negative and opposite of health. . . . There is no sickness in inorganic nature; yet, even there, contrast is the essence of existence. Everything that is must be surrounded by regions where it is not. . . . Goodness would have no meaning if badness were impossible or nonexistent."—The Substance of Faith, p. 53.

"The still higher attribute of conscious striving after holiness, which must be the prerogative of free agents capable of virtue or purposed good, . . . involves the possibility that beings so endowed may fall from their high level . . . and suffer the penalty called sin."—Ibid., p. 52.

"Every rise involves the possibility of fall."—Ibid., p. 51.

Here we have the definite recognition of the law of opposites, including good and evil; the power to choose as free agents; and the accompanying possibility of making a wrong choice with the resultant consequences.

Every uphill road is of necessity a downhill road to those who wish to go that way. Elder M. T. Short, in one of his old-time sermons, declared that there are three things God cannot do: He cannot make a three-year-old colt in a minute; he cannot make a sheet of paper so thin that it will not have two sides; and he cannot cut a stick of wood so short that it will not have two ends.

Without blasphemy we may say that in the very nature of things the Lord could not cause man to stand erect without there being the possibility that he might fall. He could not create an uphill road that would not be a downhill road to those who chose to take it—allowing always free agency. That thought may clear away some perplexity concerning divine responsibility for evil.

We recognize then the existence of good and evil. God is the head and the front of all good forces and agencies. All that invites and entices to do good is of him, the Book of Mormon affirms. On the other hand, the Devil is the head and front of all evil forces and agencies. One works to save man, the other to destroy him. We are left free to make our choice as to which shall finally predominate in our lives.

We sometimes wonder why God does not exercise his power to destroy evil and arbitrarily compel men to do good and be saved. As some crudely say, Why doesn't God kill the Devil? Suppose he should go about it in that way and finally compel all men to come in, what would he have? A lot of mechanical toys. Mechanical toys may be interesting to children; but the Creator started out to develop men. To do that it was necessary to respect their free agency. That is what makes the process of redemption so long and distressing. But it is the only way. The Lord chose that way deliberately, knowing the delay and the danger of failure in individual cases. And finally at the end when it is said, "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still," it will be because that man, after good and evil have been fully explained to his comprehension, wills to be filthy still.

The Fundamental Difference in the Approach of God and the Devil

What is the fundamental difference between the approach of God and the Devil. I believe that it is in their attitude towards the human will. The Devil tries to subvert, weaken, and finally destroy man's will power. The Lord recognizes the sanctity of human will, and seeks to strengthen and develop it in all good ways.

In his book, The Personality of God, Snowden has a very interesting chapter on the "Personality of man." I will read a short extract:

"Personality is the distinctive state of a person; and a person is an individual being endowed with consciousness consisting of perceptive and reflective thought, sensibility, and responsible will. . . . We think, we feel, we will; we do these three things, and we never can do more or less."—Page 9.

With thought we perceive and reflect upon things. Feelings of one sort or another are aroused and prompt to action—we are told that feeling is always the dynamic of action. But then enters the third one of the trinity, will, and determines what the act shall be.

So Snowden adds: "The will is thus the spinal column and unifying power of personality, the throne of this kingdom, the crown and captain of self."—Ibid., p. 11.

The will, then, is the pivot of free agency. It is the backbone of human personality—and that is the thing that evil in all forms seeks to destroy.

The Devil puts a cord around a man's neck to lead him about: "Yea, and he leadeth them by the neck with a flaxen cord, until he bindeth them with strong cords forever."—2 Nephi 11: 94.

That is a concise picture of the culmination and climax of a life of sin, beginning pleasantly with a flaxen cord about the neck, the Devil's leading string, and ending in moral slavery.

But God proceeds differently: He puts truth into the heart: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. . . . If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—John 8: 32, 36.

That is a very concise picture of the culmination and climax of a life of righteousness, beginning with the perception of truth, and leading up to perfect freedom.

The Cord About the Neck

To make my points clear I may use some illustrations that you have heard me use in other sermons. The first is this: A man riding on a street car in the days before prohibition chanced to notice an advertisement in the roof of the car: "Pure rye whisky strengthens the body, brightens the intellect, and invigorates the soul of man."

Next his eye beheld, seated directly under the advertisement, a red-nosed, blear-eyed, slobbering drunkard, giving the lie in every particular to the advertisement. There is an old proverb which says, "Truth is at the bottom of the well." This inebriate Disarmament: Why and How?

BY JOSEPH E. JOHNSON

There are many material and spiritual gains to be had in disarmament.

Upon the outcome of the disarmament conference now in session at Washington hangs the fate not only of our world-wide commercial and financial systems, but of civilization itself. When it is understood that all of the great nations of the world have been represented there, each with its problems of commerce, transportation, labor, boundaries, national traditions, and others, whose interests are often in conflict one with another, it must readily be admitted that the subject cannot be adequately discussed in a few pages. Obviously, only a few outstanding features may be covered. My purpose shall not have failed, however, if my readers glean from this discussion some idea of the magnitude of the question, the effect of its answer upon civilization, and come to realize in connection therewith their duty to their fellow men, their country, and their God.

It has always been understood that there should be complete segregation of the affairs of the church and those of the nation, or what we have come to call politics. But the church is realizing more and more every day that it must take an active part in the shaping of the policies that govern the nation if it is ever to fulfill its mission. Largely through the work of an idealist, a devout and far-seeing Christian at the Versailles peace conference, conviction has grown upon the world that nations, as well as individuals, are subject to God's laws, and must, to a vastly greater extent promulgate the doctrine of the Prince of peace. And how shall this become an accomplished fact unless we, as Christian men and women, through our church organizations, see to it that "peace on earth, good will to men" is made a national policy? As a vane to show how the wind blows in the Christian world, allow me to read one of a set of resolutions passed by twenty-five thousand men and women during a Gipsy Smith meeting in Omaha recently. It is not a partisan doctrine, but a Christian doctrine, and we as Christians should never rest from our labors until Congress makes of it a national policy.

"We believe that nations as well as individuals are subject to God's immutable moral and spiritual laws, and that Christian nations especially have unusual international obligations that can only be discharged through a brotherly international understanding wrought out by the machinery of a worldwide association of nations involving all the leading nations of the earth."

A Paramount Idea

Taking up now the question of why nations should disarm, or at least reduce armaments, we find one paramount idea in the minds of the people: "To prevent war." And why prevent war? The answer to this question assumes a number of angles that deserve earnest thought and study. The term idealist has been much misunderstood and therefore abused. Anyone who sees and strives to reach a plane of living above the gross things of earth, who prefers beauty to ugliness, and who would rather live in peace and happiness than in war and sorrow, has ideals and is an idealist. To my mind, the most pitiful and useless being on earth is the man or woman totally without ideals.

The idealist, then, would say that war should be prevented because it is degrading and brutalizing, arousing in men the lust to kill and destroy, and leaving to innocent and guilty alike a heritage of misery, suffering, and crime that serves for many years as an effectual barrier to the march of progress and civilization.

You have heard men scoff at those who all but gave their lives that the world might live in peace, and ridicule the idea that universal peace was a possibility. In my poor opinion, no blessings are given to men for which they are not willing to work. Satan himself is probably now scoffing at the whole disarmament business. But while men scoff at peace and peacemakers, let us remember that something over 1900 years ago o'er the plains of Bethlehem, God rolled back the curtains of night from the windows of heaven while a chorus of angels appeared in a glory of light and sang to the shepherds beneath, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace; good will toward men." Was God's song of "peace on earth" a mockery? Whatever we may think of men who cry "Peace," we cannot assume the responsibility of scoffing at God. For some wise purpose, God wanted peace when he sent his Son to earth, and since God is unchangeable, it may safely be assumed that he still wants it.

The second reason why people want to prevent future wars has to do with the material things of life. Wars must be prevented to avoid world bankruptcy—which would mean world catastrophe—the possible loss of civilization, and a lapse of society into a state of comparative savagery. Supported as I am by authentic reports and figures, I may state here without fear of successful contradiction that every nation that was an active participant in the late war is facing bankruptcy. Let me cite briefly a few cases in point to make my position clear.

Before the war, England's yearly expense was, in round numbers, 200 million pounds or 1,000 million dollars. To-day, her annual budget is 5 billion dollars, and at that she has scarcely begun to pay even the interest on her loans. With her people already taxed almost to the point of confiscation, how can she hope to pay the whole amount of interest, to say nothing of the principal? The answer is, "Eliminate the cost of war."

Russia's tale of woe has been so often told that its repetition hardly arouses our interest. Yet here are some facts that may be new.

A famine, severe even for famine-ridden Russia, has followed a crop failure, and it is estimated that 15 million people are actually starving.

Secretary Hoover has undertaken to save 1,200,000 children until another harvest, but, granting his success in this vast undertaking, there are still between three and four million children that must surely die before relief reaches them. Indeed, children are dropping dead in the streets, and numerous carts are busy continually carrying their bodies to some mysterious place of burial. Thousands of children, forsaken by their parents, are being loaded on to freight cars and hauled to some more favored spot where a few bites of food may be had. Indeed, this relief work constitutes the principal work of the badly depleted railroads. There is almost no gold left in the country, and the ruble that at one time was worth 50 cents is now worth a fraction of a cent, and ten thousand of them are needed to buy a meal. And while large armies march, eat, and draw their pay, the civilian population suffers. Where lies relief? Disarmament and world peace.

Germany, with greatly reduced territory and the loss of all her colonies, has a war debt twice as large as our own, or 52 billion dollars, and is facing an indemnity bill of 30 billions which must be paid in thirty years.

France is indeed bled white, and unless some direct measure of relief is found, she will be bankrupt. More of France later.

What is true of these countries is true to a greater or less degree of all other European countries. But since our chief concern is for our own country, we will now give it some consideration. While the ravages of war touched us only in a small degree, we find our public debt increased from one billion to 26 billion dollars and our annual budget from one to five billions. No need to tell you that the economic and industrial conditions of the country are alarming. You know that millions of men are out of work, that farmers are producing at a total loss, that murder, robbery, and crimes of every sort are part of our daily life, and that the burden of taxation has become almost unbearable.

We have reached, then, a crisis in our national life, and our future course is being determined by the conference at Washington. Now, while the conference was called for the purpose of discussing disarmament, a close study of conditions in different parts of the world soon made it clear that disarmament was conditioned upon the settlement of other important questions. And, since the extent of disarmament and the good resulting therefrom depends upon their settlement, it might be well to give them some attention.

I have very briefly touched upon the condition of France. It now becomes necessary to add that, with the cruel lessons of the recent war thoroughly learned, France will never trust Germany again. With less than half her population and wealth, and with miles of her territory laid waste, France fears that, should she demobilize her armies and reduce her armaments, Germany may seize the opportunity again to invade her land, and attempt to wrest again from her what she had been forced to return. Whether or not those fears seem real to us, they are to France, and so she still maintains an army of 800,000 men, 250,000 of whom Germany is compelled to support on her own soil.

And what is true of France is also true of Belgium. And what does that mean? It means that if our country is sincere in its wish to reduce armaments, she must accept, with other nations, the principles laid down in Article X of the League of Nations covenant, by which acceptance we become an active member in that league. If we agree to this, reduction of military armaments seems assured, for England has made it clear that she is ready.

The probability of naval disarmament has to do with Japan, a nation of proud, ambitious, and virile men, that was awakened to the lure of power and expansion a few short years ago when Admiral Perry entered their waters aboard a United States war vessel. Japan's 50 million inhabitants live on an island in size about as large as Iowa and Nebraska combined. They are pushing each other off the map at the rate of several thousand a year, but instead of the surplus being forced to shift for themselves, their nation is seeking in an intelligent and forceful way to find a place for them in the Orient. They have already absorbed many of the outlying Chinese colonies, taken firm hold of Korea, and firmly established themselves in Siberia. She claims special privileges in the Far West, and that she intends to make good her claims is evidenced by a vast merchant marine and a huge navy. In direct opposition to her claim of special privilege, came President Taft's "open door to China" policy.

It will be seen that conditions are inevitably forcing us into an association or brotherhood of nations, something of world-wide influence for good, and controlled by laws of justice and humanity. On these premises, then, I shall try to name a few of the benefits that may be expected to follow disarmament.

In the happy event, however, that the conference finally decides to reduce arms, prevent war, and protect nations that need it, many benefits lie in store for us. First, let us consider them from a material point of view, for, even though we be Christians and idealists, our material well-being is an important factor and cannot be overlooked. Suppose, then, that we should agree to the conditions that would make disarmament possible: Trade barriers would be lowered, throwing open to our produce the markets of the world, resulting in better prices for our corn and wheat and beef, etc.

To cut the cost of our war expenses 75 per cent would mean more and better clothing, more and better food, more home owners and fewer tenants, more schools for children and fewer orphanages, more stable and satisfactory government, more Christians and fewer criminals, more preachers and fewer lawyers, more libraries and fewer jails, more mothers and fewer prostitutes, more laborers and fewer loafers, and a condition of mind in which we could see the good in our fellow men and the wisdom in God's plan of life.

Or let it be supposed on the other hand that taxes remain as at present and that the Government undertook the expenditure of this vast sum for the good of the people. At the present time the Government owns great natural resources which it leases to various corporations for exploitation. They include among others coal, wood, oil, iron, copper, gold, and silver. With this vast sum of money at its disposal, the Government could take these out of the hands of the profiteers and develop them at cost for the people. We may get some idea of what this would mean if we remember that it was proven that coal operators realized as high as 1,500 per cent on their investment.

Our Government could reclaim every arid acre in the country and release them to homesteaders. Millions of dollars in produce could be raised on the land that now yields sagebrush, cactus, and horned toads. It would mean the release of thousands from the filth, drudgery, and hopelessness of life in our city slums, to God's good outdoors, the clean air, purifying sunshine, and a feeling of independence that would make of them better citizens.

A few weeks ago, a young lady read in our hearing a very able paper on the benefits to be derived from education. I gave hearty though silent indorsement to the many good thoughts contained therein. I for one am convinced that one of the gravest responsibilities of our Government is to see to it that every young man and woman in the country is fitted for his life's work and the highest type of citizenship. Instead of leaving the boy or girl with a common or high school education, valuable as they are conceded to be, it should see that its preliminary education is completed, whether that means a vocational or professional training. Colleges should be as free to the children of America as are the lower schools of learning. When the Government comes to realize its duty in this regard, it will build a citizenry that will be a power for good throughout the world. With this vast sum saved from war purposes, the United States Government could give every boy and girl in the country who cared to have it a complete college education.

One of the greatest institutions in America is the public library. Its advantages are too well known to you to need mention here. In my school days there was only one place of amusement for the boys and girls of our town, and that the public library. Cigaretts were unthinkable, pool halls a myth, and flivvers unknown. Of course the need of a reference book was often made the excuse for a walk with some fair young lady who happened for the time to hold our vagrant fancy, but the means was commendable and helpful, and fully justified the end. With the wonderful saving that would result from disarmament, every town of any size in the country could have a library, containing not only valuable books of reference, but wholesome fiction as well. With less than half the work and expense necessary to induce a young man to become a killer, the United States could induce him to become a reader and a useful citizen.

With the water power under its control, it could develop enough electric energy to operate almost every train and factory in the country, resulting in cheaper commodities of all kinds.

With seventy five per cent of our war appropriations converted into that of rivers and harbors, scores of streams that now flow beautifully but uselessly on their way could be made navigable for fleets of river boats which would tend to lower the cost of rail transportation to that of rivers. It could dike or otherwise control every dangerous river in the country, and make the land adjacent thereto as valuable as any.

In our own cities, thousands of people are dying every year for want of proper care in sickness. Congested as they are in poorly-lighted, poorly-heated, poorly-ventilated, and vermin-infested tenements, nature has no way to effect a cure, and, among this class of people, nature is often the only doctor within their means. With two or three billions of dollars at its disposal, our Government could build and operate free of charge to them, hospitals for the care of every diseased and crippled person in the country who lacked means for the private employment of proper care.

The list is far from complete, but it will give you an idea of the immense amount of good that could be done should our Nation employ the major portion of its income to the upbuilding rather than the destruction of mankind. Some earnest thought on our part will reveal the fact that, great as our Government is admitted to be, she has scarcely begun to fulfill her destiny. She is, God willing, to build a citizenship that will be acceptable to him above. She is to be the rock upon which the civilization of the world may rest throughout the ages. May the Goddess of Liberty stand till the end of earthly things as a token of liberty and justice, while her beams bear to the uttermost corners of the earth our message of freedom, brotherhood, and good will to men.

Sanctification

BY G. W. LINDSEY

A procedure regarding the receipt of sanctification, given in a dream. . .

The linking of the two dispensations by their comparative likeness was a favorite way the apostles and Jesus had of appealing to the Jews in preaching the gospel to them.

The Hebrew people had much faith in the ordinances of the Mosaic dispensation, and it was this faith that was used by them, the ministers of the gospel, to reach the Jews. We find Jesus using the brass serpent, linking it with his own sacrifice to convince them of the divinity of his mission, teaching them that from the truth and facts of their own faith they had a convincing witness of himself. We find also Peter using the recital of what David had said of himself and his Lord, as a witness that Jesus was the Christ, in his memorable sermon on the day of Pentecost.

This way of reaching the Hebrew people was the rule. The writer of Hebrews in the ninth chapter, verses eleven to fifteen, links the ordinance of the two dispensations for cleansing together, comparing their likeness and demonstrating the superiority of the gospel ordinances over that of the Mosaic dispensation.

Reverting back from this ninth chapter of Hebrews we find in the nineteenth chapter of Numbers a recital of the ceremonial process of sanctifying the waters of separation or of purification. The children of Israel were commanded to bring a heifer without spot or blemish to Eleazar, the priest, and he was to take it outside of the camp and kill it and dip his finger tips in the blood and sprinkle it before the door of the tabernacle, and then the heifer was to be burned in its entirety and the ashes to be picked up by one who was clean and put somewhere in a clean place outside the camp. The ashes were intermixed with running water and the mixture was called the waters of purification or separation, for the expressions are used interchangeably and mean the same. When one became unclean by coming in contact with some defilement, he was commanded to cleanse himself or have himself cleansed by having some clean person sprinkle these waters of purification on him. Paul says, "For if the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of a heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth it to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God."—Hebrews 9: 13, 14.

In sprinkling blood of bulls and goats and of ashes of heifers, there was a type of the cleansing process of the blood of Christ.

In the first place we note that after the killing of the sacrifice that it had no effect without an application to the individual by direct contact or anything else that had to be cleansed. So, then, as the first was typical of the second, it is reasonable to believe that some method of application must have been adopted in the second or gospel ordinance, and an application thereof by each individual affected complied with.

The blood in the first to be applied was of bulls and goats and ashes of heifers. The substance to be applied in the second was the blood of Jesus Christ. The method of application in the first was sprinkling. Now in looking up the method under the New Testament, the gospel covenant, we find that it is by drinking, for Jesus says, "This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins."—Matthew 26: 28. In the last of the previous verse he says, "Drink ye all of it." So we learn that the application of the blood in the new testament is by drinking thereof. By the application of the first, the sanctifying of the flesh was accomplished; for we learn in Hebrews 9: 13: "That it sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh," or it purged the flesh to cleanness. But there was not any sanctification accomplished without a proper application, for we learn in verse twenty of the nineteenth chapter of Numbers that the man that shall be unclean and shall not purify himself shall be cut off from among the congregation.

So, also, in the typifying ordinance of the gospel, there must be an application, for Jesus says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day."—John 6: 53, 54.

We learned that Mosaic ordinance sanctified the flesh, but the gospel ordinance sanctifies the conscience wherein is the remission of sins as well as the overcoming of the evil inclinations of the soul. This leads us to the thought that sanctification is a development of the spiritual life by the application of the sacramental communion, for Jesus says there is no life in us if we eat not his flesh and drink not his blood. If we do the blood sanctifieth us. So we are taught in Hebrews 10: 29.

This corresponds with the experience I have had in partaking of the sacrament. First, I was made conscious that the sins that seemed obstacles between me and God were removed, and along with that came an indescribable determination to resist evil and do good. This would last for weeks at a time. I want to say here I have not partaken of the sacrament for nearly eight years, not having any opportunity to do so.

In the partaking of the sacrament there is a remission of sins, for that is why the blood of Jesus Christ was shed. So we learn in the statement, "This is my blood of the new testament which was shed for many for the remission of sins." In the partaking thereof, the application of the blood of Jesus Christ to your soul is consummated if it so be that you have approached the communion table in a consecrated manner. In the sprinkling of the waters of purification, we see the symbol of the sacrament. Also we see in the sacrament a communion of the spirit, for by the remission of our sins, our temple is made clean and a fit place for the spirit to enter and dwell. With the indwelling of the spirit, strength of resistance to evil is developed, but the desire to sin is absent from us to a great extent.

In the sacrament the spirit is present to commune with the participants. Commune means to talk with one another. That is why it is called communion sometimes.

At such times it imparts God's counsel, shows the things of the Father to his children; reveals things to come; in fact, performs the God-ordained functions of the Holy Spirit. How blessed it is to be a child of the living God, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the God of the Saints of eighteen centuries ago, the same God that manifests himself in the same way to-day as then.

In conclusion I will say that the procedures of receiving the sanctifying influences as outlined

Church League on Industrial Democracy

A statement of principles of the church league for industrial democracy.

Preamble

We face a world in revolution. Some regret the fact; some thank God for it. Regret and gratitude are in a sense equally irrelevant; the church is called to act, and the contemporary situation furnishes her with a challenge and an opportunity unsurpassed since Pentecost.

Her right line of action, in the opinion of The Church League for Industrial Democracy, is indicated in the following statement:

Section I

Purpose

The purpose of this organization is to unite, for intercession and labor, those within the Episcopal Church who believe that it is an essential part of the church's function to make justice and love the controlling motives in all social change, and who wish, as Christians, to promote all sound movements looking toward the democratization of industry and the socialization of life.

Membership

Any member of the Episcopal Church who indorses the Statement of Principles which forms Sec-herein was given me in a dream. I then searched the scriptures to find its sanction. I feel that the scriptures amply verify the truth of it. When I started to write this article my intentions were to controvert the misuse of a text used to justify sprinkling as a form of baptism, but I have been led out on this other topic.

In this I do not mean to say that the wine is the actual blood of Christ, but it typifies the blood and the sacrament is the only means of applying the blood to our souls. Without an application we receive no benefit from the blood of Jesus which was shed for us, so it behooves us to partake thereof in a worthy manner every opportunity we can. The soul that would not apply the waters of separation under the law of Moses was cut off.

We are admonished in Hebrews 10: 29: "Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden underfoot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite the spirit of grace?" I have never heard a sermon on this topic, viewed from this standpoint. Would like to hear from some of the elders. I am not an elder.

tion II of this Article of the Constitution and signs the inclosed card, shall be considered a member of this organization.

Section II

Statement of Principles

We, the undersigned members of our Lord Jesus Christ, recognizing that our discipleship pledges us to become like him in sacrificial love, and conscious of our power through him to further the speedy coming of his kingdom on earth, do give our assent to the following principles:

1. We affirm our belief that only that social order can properly be called Christian which substitutes fraternal cooperation for mastership in industry and life.

2. We assent to the following declaration officially promulgated by the general convention of the church, and promise earnestly to assist the church in putting into actual practice the principles therein laid down, viz:

Whereas, the moral and spiritual welfare of the people demands that the highest possible standard of living should everywhere be maintained, and that all conduct of industry should emphasize the search for such higher and more human forms and organization as will generally elicit the personal initiative and self-respect of the workman, and give him a definite personal stake in the system of production to which his life is given; and

Whereas, injustice and disproportionate inequality as well as misunderstanding, prejudice and mutual distrust as between employer and employee are widespread in our social and industrial life to-day:

Therefore, be it resolved:

That we, the members of the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, do hereby affirm that the church stands for the ideal of social justice and that it demands the achievement of a social order in which the social cause of poverty and the gross human waste of the present order shall be eliminated; and in which every worker shall have a just return for that which he produces, a free opportunity for self-development and a fair share in all the gains of progress. And since such a social order can only be achieved progressively by the effort of men and women who in the spirit of Christ put the common welfare above private gain, the church calls upon every communicant, clerical and lay, seriously to take part in the study of the complex conditions under which we are called upon to live, and so to act that the present prejudice and injustice may be supplanted by mutual understanding, sympathy, and just dealings, and the ideal of thorough-going democracy may be finally realized in our land.

We believe that, far from the church being in tendency and membership reactionary and un-awakened, it is, as a matter of fact, ready and anxious, to a degree unsuspected by the world, to discover the way in which it can best be useful in forwarding the new order; and we, therefore, pledge ourselves to help the great mass of church people who are as yet uncertain how they can function, to find the way.

4. We believe that for us as Christians the proper procedure is not to formulate a social policy and then seek to justify it from our religion, but rather to start with our Lord's revealed will and to deduce from it our social program, with no equivocation or evasion.

5. In case of teachers and preachers in our own communion whose positions are endangered by reason of their social radicalism we promise to make investigation and if necessary to publish the facts; and to the limit of our ability we intend to give moral and practical support to those who shall clearly be seen to have incurred persecution through advocacy of social change.

6. We believe that the Church of Jesus Christ has a distinctive contribution to make and responsibility to fulfill which do not characterize secular organizations. We recognize the supreme need of the world for that power by which men and women of faith shall gain the strength and wisdom requisite for the surrenders and readjustments of democratic living. We, therefore, pledge ourselves to encourage the use of prayer and sacraments, that through them people may be released from selfish inhibitions and inspired to work with God for humanity.

7. We are keenly conscious of the urgent need that the church preach the power and will of Jesus Christ not only to the passing era of selfish competition and industrial mastership but also to the emerging democratic order. We recognize that the mere transfer of social control from a self-seeking few to a self-seeking many would in itself be of no benefit to the world and of no honor to God, and we therefore are convinced that in terms of the new day of industrial democracy the gospel of salvation by sacrifice, service, and fraternity must be preached with no uncertain voice.

8. Recognizing the earnest endeavor under difficulties of those working within our theological seminaries to train our coming clergy for useful labors in the new age, we intend to work for such changes in management and curriculum as shall enable theological students to know, preach, and practice the social gospel. We further intend to assist in recruiting such candidates for the ministry as shall enter it with desire for socialized leadership.

9. We pledge ourselves to investigate social and industrial programs as they may arise, to make contact with their leaders and authors, and to spread accurate knowledge of them among our church people.

10. We deplore the contemporary suppression of mediate restoration of those bulwarks of democracy, the rights of free assembly, free discussion, a free press, and a free pulpit. Suppression of liberties proves in history the natural prelude to the violent freedom in America, and shall work for the im-methods of change which this league would most deeply deplore.

11. In making this statement we are convinced that we indorse no things irrelevant to the church's abiding mission, but that we reaffirm the convictions of the great company of the prophets, saints, and martyrs of days past, and of the Lord of the kingdom, our Savior and Redeemer, Jesus Christ, to the fulfillment of whose holy will we hereby dedicate ourselves anew.

Healing Faith

The following article is noteworthy for the high spiritual tone it takes concerning healing of the sick. It is a frank recognition of the fact that such healing is not confined within any principles of suggestion or of mechanical psychology, though it may be true that psychological analysis has discovered some of the material roots of this spiritual reaction of faith.

It is probably true that in the past there have been a few who have been fanatics with regard to administration and the healing of the sick thereby, but against that we may set the many thousands who have suffered from a lack of understanding of what is meant by faith to be healed. The article which follows is clipped from The Christian Work for November 5, 1921.—EDITORS.

The one surprising thing that is happening to-day the wide world over is the rapidly increasing interest in that healing faith which was such a factor and force in the life-message and mission of Jesus. We have begun to feel, as an ecclesiastical order we have almost played Hamlet with Hamlet out, when we have heralded the great world-message of the complete salvation without giving the "gift of healing" its true functional place as a mighty potency and power in the full-orbed message of Jesus.

The place of the gift of healing in the great message of Jesus' full and complete salvation has been voiced in prophetic foregleams all through the Christian centuries, as truly as the coming of the Messiah, by the mouth of the prophets before the appearance of Jesus. During recent years it has broken forth from many quarters with most unusual power. As far back as 1884, Reverend R. E. Stanton, D. D., a leading Presbyterian clergyman, who at one time was Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, United States of America, wrote in a little volume entitled Gospel Parallelisms, these remarkable words:

It is my aim to show that the atonement of Christ lays the foundation equally for deliverance from sin and for deliverance from disease; that complete provision has been made for both; that in the exercise of faith under the conditions prescribed we have the same reason to believe that the body may be delivered from sickness that we have that the soul may be delivered from sin; in short, that both branches of the deliverance stand on the same ground, and that it is necessary to include both in any true conception of what the gospel offers to mankind. The atoning sacrifice of Christ covers the physical as well as the spiritual needs of the race. . . . Let the sick and suffering ones therefore among Christ's people, and all others who would be rescued from the pangs of disease, bear in mind that it is just as clearly God's will that they should be healed in body as it is his will that sins should be forgiven, and that their souls should be sanctified. Ample provision for both is in the death-sacrifice of Jesus. The limitation of prayer to those things "according to his will" has reference to other things than curing disease and saving from sin. . . . Healing the body is not, therefore, "a side issue," as some represent it. It is no more this than the healing of the soul is "a side issue." They are but parts of the same gospel, based equally upon the same great atonement. Both are to be presented to a suffering world, to relieve it of its woes, or the gospel is not fully proclaimed as the good news and glad tidings, as the full salvation for all the world.

Everyone knows how deeply interested the Episcopal Church is in its quest to know the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth about the gift of healing. It burns like the fire of heaven on the hearts of many of the best laity and clergy alike.

Bishop Brent is very bold in his challenge which he flings out to the church universal to return to this lost article of the faith one for all delivered to the saints:

He who waves away the healing power of Christ as belonging only to the early New Testament times is not preaching the whole gospel. God was and is the Savior of the body as well as the soul. He "is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." He who in Jesus Christ heals by stimulating spiritual faculties to appropriate health is not dependent on what doctors can do, nor helpless when doctors fail. Our Lord's words to the imprisoned Baptist are also for those of us who are in the prison of medical materialism—"Go your way and tell John the things which you do hear and see; the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up, and the poor have the good tidings preached unto them." "According unto thy faith so shall it be unto thee." As I write I see the whole pathetic body of the sick and diseased, claiming their rights in the healing power of the Spirit of the Lord, which is denied them by the church, which should know better. God is not the last resort in sickness; he is the first. He is not only the Physician for great-ill, but for small. As thy faith is so shall it be unto thee.

James Moore Hickman, who has been such a wonderful practical interpreter by word and deed of the "gift of healing" to Christendom to-day, feels this "gift of the Spirit" must again function in the church universal to make it realize its almighty and purposed power:

Until the church reinstates the ministry of healing it will be a failure, and will not be carrying out the work of its Lord. . . . If there was ever a time when there was the need for the healing Savior it is to-day. The whole creation is groaning and travailing in pain together, waiting for the re-healing touch of the Lord. There are thousands of wounded bodies and shattered nerves. Disease and sickness are rife everywhere. Our asylums hold multitudes of souls in darkness. Our hospitals and homes for incurable are full. And all the time there is standing one among us "who Himself took our infirmities and bore our sicknesses," and who is the Redeemer of the sinning souls and suffering bodies of all mankind. . . . A living church is one in which the living Christ lives and walks, doing through its members what he did in the days of his flesh. It must, therefore, be a healing church as much as a soul-saving church. . . . Many believe in Christ as the Savior of the soul, but few believe in him, and fewer yet confess him, as the Savior of the whole man. . . . The world will never be free from sin and disease until Christ is acknowledged as the healing Savior for sick bodies as well as sick souls. He alone can free the soul from the power of evil and kill every germ of disease which has gained entrance into man's physical being through man's wrongdoing in breaking the laws of God. . . . Spiritual healing rightly understood is sacramental. It is the extension through the members of his "mystical body" of his own incarnate life. The way must be prepared by the church for the healing Christ. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, not only as the great high priest, but the great Physician for every sickness of the race.

Prohibition is the dominant note of the November number of the Primitive Methodist Leader, of London. There has been an increase in the number of public houses and a decided increase in the amount expended for drink in the United Kingdom. In 1914, the amount was 3 pounds, 10 shillings, 10 pence per head, while in 1920, it was 10 pounds, a total of $2,348,500,000. In addition to this it is estimated that the loss to the labor market equals in wages 150 million pounds.

As we balance the accounts of the Old Year and open account with the New, everyone should make an effort to see that no bad accounts are carried over and that we enter the New Year with a clean slate. And in taking the inventory we should try to rid the shelves of our lives of all dead stock, and see that we carry none of it over into the New Year.—E. R. Davis.

The Wonderful Mayan Calendar System

A numerical notation antedating in development the Hindu and European.

According to Daniel Brinton, the system of Mayan hieroglyphics is based on the vigesimal system and is read from below upward. One dot is one; a straight horizontal line is five; with five dots above it is ten. He considers the codices to be astronomical treatises of the movements of the sun, moon, and stars. They have many pictographs of animals, and are, in fact, highly pictorial throughout, but he and some others consider that these objects are largely symbolic, representing the changes of season and the movement of the heavenly bodies.

Doctor S. G. Morley, in a book prepared in 1914, refers to the remarkable character of their system of calculation. He agrees that the codices are probably astronomical, but says that in the Dresden Codex the numbers many times totaled twelve and one half million days (about thirty-four thousand years), with a series of hieroglyphs showing the destruction of the world by water and the crossbones of death.

The accuracy of their calculation was so great as to rival that of modern research. Modern calculations give the length of the lunar revolution period as 29.530558 days. If we consider the lunar period as 29.5 days, 405 revolutions will make an accumulated error of 12.15 days. This the Mayans avoided by figuring five out of seven lunar periods as 29.6 days, or, in other words, 502 days for the seventeen lunar periods, for which the closest modern calculation is 502.02 days. Thus in thirty-three years, or in 403 revolutions, the Maya calendar, as set down in the Dresden Codex, shows an error of about half a day as compared with the most critical modern calculations.

Also the year of Venus, or the synodical revolution, is 583.92 days by modern calculation. The Mayas used 584 days. Thus 65 Venus years equaled 104 solar years. The solar year was divided into eighteen named periods of twenty days each, and then five days were added for the year. Closer calculations were as follows:

	1 kin	1 day
20 kin	1 uinal	20 days
18 uinals	1 tun	360 days
20 tun	1 katun	7,200 days
20 katun	1 cycle	144,000 days
20 cycles	1 great cycle	2,880,000 days

They had definite glyphs to designate each of these periods. For an initial, or primary series, eight distinct glyphs were required. As a result, the same combination or ending could only reoccur after 374,400 years.

But they used, ordinarily, a secondary series which required a much smaller number of glyphs. In the secondary series, the same date could reoccur once in 18,000 years which was sufficiently accurate for most purposes.

According to this interpretation, there are three inscriptions with a number larger than 1,872,000: 1. East side of Stella N at Copan, 6 periods, which makes 14 great-great cycles, 17 cycles, 19 katuns, 10 kuns, no uinals, and no kins, a total of 42,908,400 days. 2. On the West Panel of the Temple of Inscriptions at Palenque, 7 periods occur. This gives 7 great-great cycles, 18 great cycles, 2 cycles, 9 katuns, 1 kun, 12 uinals, and 1 kin, or 455,393,401 days. 3. Stella 10 at Tikal, 8 or perhaps 9 periods are found. This inscription exceeds all of the codices, if it is to be considered as one series. The two series above are not initial series, but this third series is an initial series and refers to chronology greater than any initial date of Mayan chronology. This third series gives 1 great-great-great cycle, 11 great-great cycles, 9 great cycles, 9 cycles, 3 katuns, 6 tuns, 2 uinals, 0 kin, or 1,841,639,800 days, an equivalent of about 5,000,000 years.

There is much more of interest in this connection. The significant factor is that most of the Mayan chronology is based on a period over 3,600 years prior to the date of the inscription, though sometimes another date 5,200 years earlier is referred to, so that reference is made to events 8,800 years prior to their writings.

We are reminded of the above by a recent item in the Kansas City Star reporting an address by Doctor Morley, some of which has been quoted as follows:

"Nowhere else in the New World did the American Indian produce such an astonishing intellectual achievement," he said. "Here also was a numerical notation which had a symbol for zero before the birth of Christ, five centuries before the Hindus had invented a symbol for zero, and a thousand years before the use of zero came into Europe.

"This chronology, like the Julian Period, kept exact account of the total number of elapsed days since its starting point, a hypothetical date (just like the starting point of the Julian Period) more than 3000 B. C. And the current dates were expressed in totals of elapsed days written in the terms of a vigesimal numerical system, that is, increasing by a ratio of twenty instead of ten, as in our own.

"The relative ages of the ancient Maya cities, therefore, are known more closely than the relative ages of the ancient cities of Egypt, Babylonia, Assyria, or Chaldea, for example. And since the correlation of the Maya calendar with the years of our own Christian era has probably been effected to within a year, we may say that the absolute ages of these ancient Maya cities are better known than those of the ancient cities of the Old World.

"The principle contribution of the Maya chronological system to the study of the course of man's development in the New World is that, for one region at least, northern Central America and southern Mexico, it provides a standard cross section of ancient American history covering a period of nearly two thousand years from 100 B. C. to 1700 A. D. As within the limits of this range, the dates of the Maya monuments are rigidly fixed in the terms of a chronology which has had few equals anywhere at any time in the annals of the human race.

"It is confidently anticipated that by means of interlocking cultural horizons, the careful study of stratified deposits, refuse heaps and the like, and the establishment of chronological sequence in ceramic types, the ordinary routine business of the archaeologist, that it will eventually be possible to correlate with Maya chronology the time element in all contiguous or associated cultures as far south as the great civilizations of Peru, and as far north as the Pueblo culture of our own Southwest. In a word, it now seems probable that Maya chronology will provide the chronological yardstick by means of which all associated ancient American cultures will eventually be dated."

This dating back to 2,300 or 3,000 years before Christ may have some possible significance. The coming of Jared and his party is dated back to some 2200 or 2300 B. C. These figures are, of course, only approximate and may refer to a similar period.

It is also significant that they do not make this the final

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Open Letter to Local Leaders of Women's Department

The general organization of the Women's Department exists that there might be life and activity in the locals, that the daily life and works of Latter Day Saint women, as well as their associations in branches and community, may be marked by intelligence, love, unity, and a common desire to uplift, spiritualize and improve their environment, the care and training of their children, and the nature and atmosphere of their home life.

The general officers desire to assist the units to reach this ideal in order that Zionie conditions may prevail throughout the church and the coming of the Bridegroom be hastened thereby. Realizing that service in the Master's vineyard is enhanced proportionately by the amount of intelligence and spiritual consecration brought to bear, they have stressed the educational part of their mission. They do not wish thereby to discourage any sister who has no taste for study. There will always be found those who wish to give the service of their hands, and they are needed and welcome. Some have misunderstood the department in these matters and have asserted that it has no longer any place for the aid societies and those who labor in various ways to raise money for worthy purposes.

Let the matter be made clear. It is agreed, in harmony with the expressed attitude of the Presiding Bishopric of the church, that branch expenses should be borne by the members thereof in voluntary contributions. It is believed God is willing and ready to bless every offering of that kind. The old custom of expecting the women of the branches to give suppers, socials, and other affairs necessitating a great deal of hard work on their part, to raise the funds necessary for legitimate branch expenses should be discouraged. It is recognized, however, that there are some good business ways of raising money, and when the sisters desire to follow these for some good and worthy purpose of their own, they have a perfect right to do so. Begging efforts, where people are solicited for contributions with the plea that the proceeds are for church benefit, are to be discouraged; but where sisters wish to use their gifts of hand, and make articles to be sold in a regular way at a fair profit, and then choose to use the proceeds for lectures, for library books dealing with women's problems or study, or for other educational or equally worthy objects, it is deemed legitimate and proper for them to do so.

However, it is not considered wise or spiritually progressive for sisters to organize for the exclusive purpose of raising money, eliminating all educational work which is so necessary before all may take the important place waiting in the development of the church. Child welfare work, home improvement, better communities, and enlarged opportunities should be kept in sight. Women should be preparing themselves to prosecute with intelligence and distinct achievement the special commission given to them. What gain would there be for a mother, or a group of mothers, if they struggled for years, perhaps, to raise the debt on the church building, if, at the same time, their children were being neglected, the parents forgetting the injunction to bring them up "in light and truth"? Should they fail to understand their children and their children's needs, should the latter basic date but refer to earlier dates. The settlement on the continent is, of course, a basic date for the chronology of this continent, but it is not a fundamental date as a beginning.

drift away in lamentable paths or fail to learn the great lessons of obedience, courage, honesty, or loyalty, what joy could any find in the new organ or carpet, or freshly-decorated walls—all good and needed, no doubt, but never at the expense of the intelligent guidance and development of children!

So it is, as molders and directors of the local groups, the local leaders must sense the finer and nobler aspects of women's responsibilities. They must find the spiritual values in all things and faithfully stand for that which leads most truly upward. Mental and spiritual gains may be taken with us when we pass on, but material ones must be left behind. Thus the gravity of the task before us and the necessity for urging advanced thinking and study.

In some places are still to be found jealousies, disagreements, women harboring unkind thoughts and selfish impulses—all of which will as surely mitigate against their spiritual growth as if their souls were bound with chains. Unworthy hindrances must be shaken off, and all must come to realize the truth of the assertion, "None can assist in the work [of redeeming Zion] except he be humble and full of love!" Love is the greatest power known to mankind. It is the "fulfillment of the law." None can go far astray if they let love decide every question and direct every action. It will urge kindness, gentleness, and forgiveness. It will prevent pride, display, and self-seeking. It will help each to be thoughtful of others, and point a clear and unmistakable path to the soul's salvation. It is worth obtaining. It is worth holding. It is as a pearl of great price to everyone who possesses it.

It is the special privilege of the local leader to impress these truths upon her members. Upon her vision, vigilance, assiduity, and enthusiasm depend the interest, success, and achievement of the local. To her, the General Women's Department presents the following suggestions, with the hope that they may serve in some degree to assist her in her grave and important commission and trust.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON, Superintendent,

December 15, 1921.

Suggestions to Locals

While in our Yearbook we distinctly stated that the General Department did not presume to dictate what a local organization should be, there have come repeated requests that we give advice on the matter.

We feel that the work of our department, in most of its phases, could be "put over" in any locality by any sort of a local organization deemed adequate to local needs, providing the right sort of spirit predominated among the sisters. Where we are confronted with narrow vision, a spirit of contention over position, jealousy of power or appointment, it is not very likely that much advancement may be made, even with detailed instructions given from headquarters.

In order, however, to be of help to those locals who are desirous of accomplishing most of that for which our Women's Department is organized, and who wish guidance or suggestions in regard to the nature of their local organization and the work undertaken we submit the following, expecting it to be understood as suggestive only, and that it is not obligatory upon any present successful local to change its organization to conform with the plan as given, or that each local must be so organized to be correct.

Organization

1. Officers. The officers may be leader, secretary-treasurer, supervisor of friendly visiting, young women's supervisor, cradle roll superintendent, and home department superintendent.

Other officers may be elected according to local needs, such as: Assistant leader, social service supervisor, historian, librarian, publicity head, superintendents of membership, entertainment, attendance, program, and committees of ways and means, lecture courses, educational work, etc.

2. Duties. Briefly sketched, the duties of the various officers may be as follows:

a. Leader. The leader shall preside, direct activities, suggest studies, ascertain sources of materials and supplies, devise ways and opportunities to instruct, encourage, and inspire her members. She shall seek to cooperate with the local church officers in all possible ways, and endeavor to bring the work of the department before the branch. She shall be responsible for the proper functioning of all phases of the Women's Department work, and shall seek to obtain qualified women to supervise each.

In every particular she shall endeavor to present, explain, and personally demonstrate the ideals of the department, seeking to eliminate gossip, worldliness, selfishness, and pride, and to establish in their places the highest Zionite conditions and atmosphere.

She shall perform all duties usually devolvent upon a presiding officer, in humility trying to qualify for her work and having the best common good of the members as her objective. She shall try to arouse in her coworkers the desire to discharge properly the responsibilities resting upon them as sisters, Saints, mothers, and citizens, and endeavor to bring to them all possible opportunities for development along essential lines.

b. Secretary. The secretary shall perform all the duties usually devolvent upon that officer, and if thought advisable, carry those of treasurer and historian as well. She shall keep accurate minutes of all business, record activities, make full and regular reports as required by the executive, keep all items of history pertaining to the local, and keep in touch with the district organizer through regular letters.

c. Treasurer. The treasurer shall keep the money of the local, with accurate record of same. She shall pay bills upon written order signed by leader and secretary, and keep receipts for same. She shall make reports as may be requested by the local, and perform all other duties usual to her office.

d. Supervisor of Friendly Visiting. This officer should see that regular and systematic visiting is done between the sisters, and calls made upon those who may be benefited thereby. Every home in the branch should be visited periodically and the sisters invited to the women's meetings and church services. The visitor may console, cheer, and comfort, giving helpful and sympathetic counsel, but never attempting to perform the spiritual work of priest, teacher, or deacon. She should avoid gossip and take care not to repeat a confidence, trying to be a friend in very deed.

Under direction of the supervisor, the sick, aged, or shut-ins of the branch, as well as the "stranger in the midst," should receive attention. Should need of material aid be observed, she should report the matter in a spirit of kindness to the leader, who, in turn, will report to proper church authorities that assistance may be given.

She is under the general direction of the leader and should perform her work in harmony with plans agreed upon between herself and that officer. She should make regular reports to the local as desired by that organization.

e. Young Women's Supervisor. The young women's supervisor shall have general oversight of the girls and young women of the branch under direction of the local. She may organize Oriole circles, counseling with the leader of the local and president of the branch in selecting her monitors. She may organize Temple Builder chapters, giving what counsel and encouragement the young women may desire.

She shall strive to direct the activities of these girls into worthy channels and help definitely to link them up with branch work and Zion program. She shall attempt to keep womanly ideals constantly before them, and devise opportunities for them to join with the women in mutually interesting social or educational activities.

Where possible, it is desirable to have her appointed by the local Religio as their girl superintendent, also this will enlarge the area of her service to the girls of her branch, and give her desired supervision of their recreational life.

She shall report regularly to local Women's Department as requested, and keep in touch with the general supervisor of Young Women's Bureau.

f. Cradle Roll Superintendent. This officer shall have oversight of the cradle roll work of the branch and be responsible for its successful prosecution under the general direction of the local. She shall keep its ideals of welfare constantly in view and attempt to bring the work favorably before the members. She shall try to interest all mothers in the betterment of conditions for their children, in study of best methods of child care and child training, in adequate supervision of health (especially in the early years), in proper choice and preparation of food, in supervision of play, guidance of morals and religious instincts, and, in fact, be the child welfare agent for the branch and local. As such she should seek not only to inform herself widely upon subjects connected with that much-needed work, but to stimulate others to an active and constructive interest therein.

She should report the births of children in the branch to the local Sunday school superintendent, and annually, on May 1, report all three-year-old children to the same department. This may be done through the local Women's Department secretary, or direct to the Sunday school superintendent as may be agreed upon. In no way does her position as an officer of the Women's Department give her any position or supervision over children in the Sunday school at the Sunday school hour.

She shall make regular report of her work to the local, as directed, and give her workers such support and encouraging assistance as shall enable them to do their part in an intelligent and progressive manner. It is much to be desired that trained nurses, if such there be in the branch, shall be enlisted in this cradle roll service.

g. Home Department Superintendent. This officer shall direct the work of distributing into the homes of those who cannot come to the Sunday school, Religio, or women's meetings, such literature and study material as will enable them to carry on systematic study at home. She should feel the spirit of the missionary and seek to interest the nonmember, as well, in the good things our church and our department have to offer. She should feel it a privilege to arouse the desire for study and personal advancement and not consider that her duty is well performed until our church literature and department studies are in the homes of every church member, and every possible nonmember is reached and interested. "Let everyone who is warned warn his neighbor," should be ever in mind, and each home department worker should try to live up to that ideal.

Reports should be made regularly to the local Women's Department as directed, and the superintendent should endeavor to enthuse all of her helpers with the true spirit of the task committed to their care.

Reporting and Collections

a. Reporting. The supervisors of friendly visiting and young women and the superintendents of cradle roll and home departments, should report quarterly, in duplicate, to the local. The local secretary will take from these reports such data as is necessary for her records and history, and will forward the duplicate report to the general office of Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri, and the original to the district organizer.

The local Women's Department will report quarterly, in duplicate, sending the duplicate copy to the general office of Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri, and the original report to the district organizer.

In addition to the above, all other local officers or committees shall report to the local as directed by the latter.

Report blanks for the local officers mentioned in the first two paragraphs of this section will be furnished by the general office to the district organizer, who should see that each local in her district is supplied in adequate time for regular reporting.

b. Collections. Collections for local purposes may be made at the discretion of the local as agreed upon.

Since the women's work is now a department of the church and not auxiliary to it as formerly, every woman of the church is considered a member of the Women's Department without the payment of any annual dues, such as were formerly required. The General Department, however, needs the support of the women of the church, financially as well as spiritually. It is undertaking a definite and essential part of the program that is before the church, and none will be more vitally concerned in its success, we believe, than the women themselves. None should be more willing to contribute liberally to the funds needed for carrying this work forward than the sisters who form the component parts of our organization.

Therefore we ask, frankly and in all confidence, that a collection of free-will offering for this general fund shall be taken by each local semiannually (preferably in spring and fall), and forwarded by the local secretary to the general treasurer of Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

Work

1. Arrange for clinics for children.
2. Conduct a "milk campaign" among members.
3. Make a social survey of your branch members.
4. Collect, mend, and make over clothing for relief.
5. Can, preserve, and dry fruits and vegetables for relief.
6. See that subnormal children get specialized opportunity.
7. Cooperate with local efforts to Americanize foreigners.
8. Unite with Religio in stimulating interest in recreation.
9. Make regular and systematic visits to sick, aged, strangers, etc.
10. Make special efforts for undernourished children, to bring to standard.
11. Conduct socials, fairs, or bazaars, on strictly business bases.
12. Create an interest in, and establish, an adequate Women's Department library in your branch.
13. Provide opportunities for Orioles and Temple Builders to unite with the women in various projects for advancement.
14. Arrange for frequent lectures before the branch, bringing specialists in the various lines of departmental work, including the needs of the girls.
15. Make a collection of all historical data pertaining to the development of women's work in your branch.
16. Collect biographical sketches of the women who have influenced the lives and work of prominent church men who live in your branch or locality.
17. Collect and forward as loans to the Women's Department historical collection articles having historical interest—letters, biographies, journals, diaries, or other material connected with the development of our church.
18. Organize a publicity division whereby the influence of your organization may be extended to reach every woman in your branch and community. Make your meetings very much worth while, and invite your neighbors.
19. Build up a home department that will not be content until it is a veritable missionary force in your community. Many a proselyte has been made from the small beginning of home study of the word of God, as set forth in our Quarterlies.
20. Cooperate with the Sunday school in its efforts to train the young in the principles of religion. Make your cradle roll department an agency through which messages for the good of the child may reach into the home.
21. Enter actively into community movements for betterment, such as parent-teacher, associated charities, civic improvement, better movies, supervised playgrounds, food and milk inspection, improved laws and ordinances affecting home and child welfare, school supervision of health, public health and sanitation, etc.

22. Plan with the branch officers for programs, playlets, slides, films, and other educational work intended to benefit the entire membership of the branch. Much instruction is necessary in many places before real constructive work can be done in the departmental activities of the church.

23. Invite the branch officers to your meetings, and to join with you in some of the studies which are of common interest. Especially along the lines of relief and aid for the poor is it necessary for the deacons and women to work in harmony and perfect understanding and along lines of most approved methods. Doling out temporary relief without investigating causes of trouble is not adequate. We should seek to know and remove the causes of affliction.

24. Arrange to have your members visit, en masse or singly, institutions of public benefactions—those where dependent or delinquent children are cared for, the juvenile courts, the houses of "correction," the county homes for the poor, for orphans, or those afflicted in mind. Visit the social settlements, the city missions and other places where good people are extending helpful hands to those in need. These will broaden your vision and help you to better understand and solve your social problems.

25. Visit, also, industrial concerns, especially those where food or materials used in the home are manufactured or handled. One's taste in house-furnishing or personal dress may often be improved by visiting the centers where these things are made a special study. For welfare reasons, get acquainted at first hand with your town's sewerage system, its drainage, its garbage disposal, its water and milk supply, or the conditions under which food intended for public use is prepared or sold. Knowledge in these things is power, to be expressed at the polls if no other place or appeal is potent enough to work the reforms needed. Know your own community.

Feel free to write the Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri, for further explanations.

Standard of Excellence for Locals

At a meeting of the Executive on October 6, 1921, the following "Standard of Excellence" was adopted. It will serve to indicate what the general officers of the department consider a minimum of activity on the part of locals. They hope to have many locals throughout the church which will measure up to this standard. Locals which have done so for the year 1922, may report at the close of the year, and a "Roll of Honor" will be published soon thereafter. To have a place there your local should have:

1. At least one organized group of women studying some Women's Department subject.
2. One half the women membership of branch active in Women's Department work.
3. Active home department.
4. Active cradle roll department.
5. Active young women's supervisor.
6. Active supervisor of friendly visiting.
7. Social gathering of local once a month.
8. Four educational evenings during the year.
9. History of local brought and kept up to date.
10. Prompt and adequate reporting from all divisions to local, and from local to district organizer and general office.
11. Two free-will offerings yearly, for the work of the General Department. To be sent to General Treasurer Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

CHAPTER VII

Perception

1. The power of perception is not developed in the young child, but this development is gradual. How does this power grow?
2. Why is it necessary to know the material world?
3. Why are we becoming an age of specialists? What advantage is there in having specialists? What disadvantage?
4. How is a percept formed?
5. "To him that hath shall be given" has a peculiar significance in this lesson. What is it?
6. The accuracy with which we perceive a thing depends upon what?
7. In the light of this chapter, can you explain the futility of teaching children bare "word definitions"? What would be your way of teaching children the meaning of the following: faith, charity, love, meekness, etc.?
8. Why are there some people who "having eyes, see not, and ears, hear not"?
9. The school alone is not the only place to train perception. In what way may the parents be of great service in this training?
10. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

My Prayer

To live not long but well, I pray
 Clean, upright, honest, and sincere;
 Let me be big in little things,
 And brave when trials come.
 Let me neither condemn nor scorn my weaker brother,
 But always know he does the best he can;
 And that none but God
 Can completely understand.
 If sickness, failure, or suffering should be my fate,
 Give me courage to meet
 Each as a soldier, bravely;
 And when the last Great Adventure comes,
 May I go smiling.

E. H. Tordoff, who was employed in the book-binding department of the Herald Publishing House, at Lamoni, Iowa, for a year, about 1898, has recently discovered a secret process for splitting paper, according to the San Francisco Chronicle of November 27, 1921. In reproducing rare books, duplicates are made by photography and the pages then artificially aged so that they will correspond with the real book. The usual custom is to bind these photographs much as the pages of a book are bound, except that one side is blank. Brother Tordoff's process splits the pages and then re-pastes the printed portion so that the pages correspond to the original and are printed on both sides, and yet the page is of only the ordinary thickness.

Brother and Sister R. E. Newkirk, of Mount Washington, in Kansas City Stake, recently drove through by auto in eighteen days to visit their son Ernest and family at Long Beach, California. Sister Newkirk was injured in an auto accident last summer, which has handicapped her work among the girls of the Kansas City Stake.

LETTERS

The Hard Lot of the Indian

Some striking contrasts presented by a friend of the Indians in a speech before Congress.

Many times a white man tells me, "I wouldn't mind being an Indian myself." When questioned why, the usual reply is: "Well, so I could be cared for by the Indian Bureau, have land, tribal moneys, live on reservation, hunt, fish, and have a good easy time, just like the Indians, and what nature intended us to get."

This sort of statement is amusing to me, or to any reservation Indian, because it shows such total ignorance of actual conditions. I have heard statements of this kind many times since leaving the reservation. The Indian has but one cry, and that is, "Freedom from the Indian Bureau."

I wish again to quote part of Honorable Clyde M. Kelly's speech from page 15, where he makes a comparison between the reservation Indian and the white community, that you may see for yourself whether or not you wish to be the contented (?), happy (?) Indian.

Remember Congressman Kelly is from Pennsylvania—a State in which very few, if any, Indians live. If we only had a few more men of his class, the Indians to-day would be real American citizens, instead of wards. Note the comparison in the following:

"The reservation system may have served a good purpose in compelling Indians of other days to forsake their wild, nomadic ways. But its day is long since passed. It is to-day a breeding place of idlers, beggars, gamblers, and paupers. It is a prison pen where human beings are doomed to live amid sad memories of their ancestors and among the ghosts of the dead. The sooner the whole tribal system and the reservation policy is abolished the sooner we write finis to one of the blackest pages of American history.

"Compare the American community of 7,500 with the Indian community of the same number, and you will no longer wonder at the lack of Indian development.

"In the American community the people are citizens. In the Indian community the vast majority are helpless subjects.

"In the American community the officials are elected by the people. In the Indian community a bureau agent has arbitrary authority.

"In the American community there are banks, where depositors control their own accounts. In the Indian community there are no banks, and the Indians have no right to control their own moneys.

"In the American community the public funds are reported and audited. In the Indian community there is no itemized account of Indian expenditures and the Indians are not told how their money is spent.

"In the American community the individual has his private possessions, to be held against the world. In the Indian community the individual may be shorn of his possession at the whim of a bureau agent, without redress.

"In the American community there are theaters, movies, lectures, recreational and educational programs. In the Indian community there are no recreation halls, and get-together meetings are forbidden.

"In the American community there are public libraries and open forums for public discussion. There are no libraries in the Indian community and open forums are forbidden.

"In the American community there are physicians and dentists giving competitive service. In the Indian community there are perhaps two Government physicians, who are paid the same salary whether they give service or not.

"In the American community there are public schools, grade and high, fitting the youth for the duties of life. In the Indian community there is an Indian school to the sixth grade only, with teachers for useless occupations, unfitting the youth for real American life.

"In the American community there are courts of justice, where wrongs are dealt with according to law. In the Indian community there are police judges, who are absolutely under the control of the superintendent, and whose decisions are without validity until approved by the superintendent.

"In the American community no person may be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. In the Indian community no Indian has any right to life, liberty, or property which a bureau agent is bound to respect.

"In the American community offenses and crimes are dealt with under exact laws. In the Indian community the Supreme Court has ruled that certain heinous crimes, if committed by an Indian against an Indian, are outside the jurisdiction of any American court.

"In the American community there are farmers' associations, housekeepers' clubs, parents' associations, and other mutual-benefit organizations. In the Indian community they are forbidden.

"In the American community there are freedom, development, and democracy. In the Indian community there are serfdom, repression, and autocracy."

Certainly the taxpayers of America should investigate the Indian's problem in connection with the Indian Bureau. The public fund is used in maintaining eighteen thousand useless, healthy, high-salaried employees. Also the biggest part of the Indian fund is used for this, not because the Indian wishes it, but his tribal funds are appropriated without his knowledge or consent. Mr. Kelly asks: "What can be done? Give the Indian simple justice. Emancipate him from the autocratic control of a money-wasting bureau. Take the crushing burdens of bureaucracy off his back and he will walk erect, an American."

I take it that every reader of the HERALD and Ensign is for righteous, equitable dealings with all men. If so, look into our problems. You are helping by your taxes to maintain the Indian Bureau, which is crushing out our lives and unfitting us to assist you in gospel work. Voice your protest by demanding of your Congressman the abolishment of the Indian Bureau.

Yours for justice,

WILLIAM MADISON.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, December 13, 1921.

Editors Herald: Under the heading of "Our Christmas gifts" is voiced my own thoughts and conclusions of two weeks before, when going over the business side of my life for the past year to see if I had dealt squarely with the Lord. Yes, I had had eight dollars increase. I owed tithing on that, but I never have a surplus, neither at the end of the month nor the year. Then it came to me some way, I do not know just how, but the new thought was that whatever I did not use for my own needs was surplus. Therefore, all that I had spent for presents was surplus.

I was thankful that I had kept an account of how I spent my money this year, so that at the end of the year I could tithe all that I had spent for gifts, and resolved then to do so.

It is one of the joys of my life to give those little gifts, especially when so much is given me, but I must not rob God to do so.

Among the Indians

I have thought for some time of telling your readers of the success of the work and the outlook. At present I am preaching at a new place where this gospel has never been presented to the people. They seem hungry.

Last night I opened the work here in the Pentecostal Hall. It will seat about one hundred fifty, and every seat was taken. This is an oil town of about two thousand people. The oil derricks are in evidence in every direction and the sound of the pumping stations are heard day and night. In the back yards and everywhere the oil wells are seen. A very kind-hearted people, while very little class prejudice is manifested here.

My meeting at Teriton recently was a good spiritual feast. The young man, Sam Houston, who was baptized last Sunday, surely will be heard some time, and the three noble young women are to become some of the noblest helpers we have in that section of the country.

Our Indian work is on the sure road to advancement and success. Brethren Shakespeare, Christensen, and Syckles are on the job for the good of the church and the interest of the Indians. They are learning the language and will soon be talking and preaching to them in their own tongue.

I have worked for ten years and more to bring this condition about for the real development of the Indian work. The open door of opportunity is inviting us to occupy in this greatest of all days for our work, both among the white people and the Indians. How can any man holding the priesthood hide his talents, in this the great day for warning our neighbors?

I was invited to the home of a rich Creek Indian the other day to baptize him and his wife. The call is everywhere, "Come and hold meetings; preach for us, if only a few sermons."

A very unique event took place over among the Cheyennes. A wonderful wedding; forty tents; they came and camped. Sister A. W. Sanders was asked to bake the wedding cake. The ceremony was completed after the Indian customs. The dress was gorgeous. The feast was spread on the ground so they could all be seated and Brother and Sister Sanders, being the guests of honor, were asked to be seated in the middle of the table. After the dinner, presents were presented, including the beautiful dress goods and useful presents, as well as horses. They are the greatest people to give presents I ever saw. The big Osage Thanksgiving was held at Fairfax, and most of the Poncas, some of the Otoes, and other tribes were there and there were eighty head of horses given away, and thousands of dollars worth of merchandise.

The sale of oil leases in the Osage territory the other day amounted to over $7,000,000. They are very rich and the money has caused much dissipation among them. An old chief said he thought they had better leave it all behind and go to old Mexico, and live the simple life again. How I long to tell them this wonderful message, as we have begun to do, and get them to see the stewardship plan of doing good with our means.

I saw in an Advertiser paper the other day where one man and wife in the missionary work in South America had baptized two thousand Indians in one meeting. Is it possible that we are sleeping on our rights and letting others do the work we should be doing right now? I trust the Saints everywhere will respond to the call of the good bishop and do their part that the world may be warned. The field is surely white for the harvest.

A Compliment to the Saints of the South Seas

The only document of its kind, protesting against the drink evil, presented to the government by the Saints.

"Sky pilots in the Paumotus" is the title of an article in the September number of the Asia, under the name of Frederick O'Brien. The article deals with the author's tour among the dangerous islands of the Tuamotuan Archipelago on which the majority of the membership of this church lives, and on which the missionaries of the church spend the greater part of their time while in the South Seas.

Traveling among these coral islands is, indeed, very dangerous, and can only be appreciated by those who have had personal contact with such an experience. Mr. O'Brien tells very clearly and humorously, with some coloring, of course, the nature of such a tour which carries with it smooth seas, rough seas, "sunshine and rain," and the exciting and thrilling experience of landing in the ship's boat on the coral reef; also of encountering conditions as they exist on those low, sandy, stony, and unattractive atolls, peopled with a race so unassuming and kind, yet so terribly abused through the cunning and graft of traders and profiteers.

The church has members on the majority, if not all, of the islands mentioned by Mr. O'Brien. The island of Anaa, of which he makes particular mention, is one of historic interest to the church, for it was upon this island that Benjamin Grouard accomplished so much in the old organization. It is here, too, where seven natives were hanged on a bending coconut tree in the early fifties for asserting their rights to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, the cause for which many were taken to Tahiti and forced to work upon government roads, many of them suffering and dying as a result. It is also here where many of the island Saints were made homeless by the tidal wave and flood of which he speaks. And it is not an uncommon thing to see stones weighing tons resting lazily upon the reefs of these islands. But to see them enables one to understand, to an extent, the tremendous force with which they were hurled from obscurity in the sea to such prominence on the reefs by wind and waves. We wonder that so many native inhabitants escaped alive.

The most colored and humorous part of his article appears, no doubt, on page 772 where he speaks concerning his visit to Kaukura, an island of large church membership. In fact, the majority of the inhabitants there belong to the church. Mr. O'Brien, in a very interesting and humorous way, describes his going ashore and meeting a missionary of the Reorganized Church, whom he calls "Reverend Johnny Kidd of Lamoni." No doubt, he is here referring to Elder J. Charles May, whom the natives call John—Ioane, and, who presided over the mission conference of 1914 on the island of Kaukura, assisted by Elder Hinman W. Savage, whom he calls in his article "I. N. Imbel." It was Elder May who, with the epistle written by Apostle Griffiths, toured the islands of the Tuamotuan Archipelago in 1913, baptizing about one hundred natives, perhaps half of them being those who were excommunicated in the days of Elder Joseph F. Burton. It is concerning this event that Mr. O'Brien accredits Elder May on page 808 as saying, in describing this trip: "It was like stealin' persimmons from a blind farmer whose dog is chained." Of course we do not believe Elder May used such phrasology, for it, indeed, sounds more like a "beachcomber" than it does a missionary, especially "Elder Johnny Kidd." The interesting account he gives of the evening's service is not exaggerated, and not nearly so emphatic as I am sure it was.

SAINTS' CONFERENCE IN HANNOVER, GERMANY,
SEPTEMBER 11, 1921

The Saints in Germany are loyal to the work and zealous concerning its interests.

Perhaps the most striking and complimentary part of his article is told on page 810, wherein he quotes the trader, on whose vessel he was traveling, as saying:

"Twenty years ago I was here with a schooner o' booze to a Kanito (Saints') meetin' like this. Right in the road, there was kegs o' rum with the bloody tops knocked in. But this time, a thousand Kanakas an' not one drunk! That's what relig'n does to business. . . . To-night this mob'll be in that meetin'-house, instead o' buyin' rum and dancin' like they used to. You and me had better skin out to the west'ard where there ain't so many bloody preachers, an' you can handle the Kanakas the way you want. Them two sky pilots has got all the francs. Even the Chinks hasn't made a turn."

A better compliment could not have been paid to our native Saints in stating that they would rather be in the service of the church than in drinking and dancing, as was the custom years ago. While the condition of twenty years ago may be considerably enlarged upon, we are sure our people are occupying a much higher plane now. They have overcome many of their primitive tendencies through the transforming influence of the gospel, until to-day we have the highest type, most moral, and cleanest people in French Oceania. And this condition, too, in spite of the fact that there have been, and still are, those among the foreign and half-caste elements who consider "business" to be rum selling and debauchery. Thanks for the potency of the gospel to regenerate and "knock the bottom out" of such business. It is a fact that, although we have two sugar plantations and mills in the islands, so much of our own sugar is converted into rum that it becomes necessary for us to import sugar for local consumption.

In the face of such tremendously strong opposition to prohibition, the members of this church in mission conference assembled in December, 1919, arose en masse and passed a resolution empowering a committee of their own selection to draft resolutions petitioning the governor of the colonies for the prohibition of the manufacture, sale, and distribution of alcoholic drinks. And we assure you it was with pride that we took this petition to the governor in February, 1920, presenting it to him as the desire, unanimously expressed, of nearly twelve hundred members of this church in the islands under his jurisdiction.

To His Excellency,

The Governor of the French Establishments in Oceania, Monsieur le Gouverneur: In view of the fact that alcoholic drinks are injurious to man physically, in that they destroy cell life, induce alcoholism, the effects of which are frequently transmitted to posterity, etc.; intellectually, in that they derange normal brain functions, etc.; morally, in that they destroy thrift, contribute to delinquency, and abet crime, as attested by the following manifesto by men in high public positions in Paris, i. e., the Director and Secretary of the Poor Law Administration, the Dean of the Medical Faculty of Paris, and others, whose work as guardians of the public health brought them face to face with the great problem of how to make France a most vigorous and effective nation:

FRENCH REPUBLIC

Alcoholism—Its Dangers

(Extract from the Report of the Sitting of the Committee of Supervision of the Relief of the Poor December 18, 1902.)
Drafted by—

Professor Debove, Dean of the Faculty of Medicine.

Doctor Faisans, Physician to the Principal General Hospital of Paris.

Alcoholism is chronic poisoning resulting from the habitual use of alcohol, even when this is not taken in sufficient amounts to produce drunkenness.

It is an error to state that alcohol is necessary for workmen who are engaged in arduous manual labor, that it gives energy for work, or that it renews strength. The artificial excitement which it produces quickly gives place to nervous depression and weakness; in truth, alcohol is useful to nobody; it is harmful to all.

The habit of drinking spirits leads quickly to alcoholism, but the so-called hygienic drinks also contain alcohol; the only difference is one of quantity; the man who daily drinks an immoderate quantity of wine, of cider, or beer, becomes as surely alcoholic as the one who drinks brandy.

The drinks called "aperitifs" (absinthe, vermouth, amers), the aromatic liquors ("vulneraire, eau de melisse or de menthe"), are the most pernicious, because they contain—in addition to alcohol—essences, which are themselves also violent poisons.

The habit of drinking leads to neglect of family, to forgetfulness of all social duties, to distaste for work, to want, theft, and crime. It leads, at the very least, to the hospital—for alcoholism causes a great variety of diseases, many of them most deadly: paralysis, insanity, disorders of the stomach and of the liver, dropsy; it is one of the most frequent causes of consumption. Finally, it complicates and renders more serious every acute illness; a typhoid fever, pneumonia, or erysipelas, which would be mild in a sober individual, will rapidly kill the alcoholic.

The hygienic faults of parents are visited upon the children; if the latter survive the first few months of life, they are threatened with idiocy or epilepsy, or, still worse, are a little later on carried off by tuberculosis, meningitis or consumption.

Alcoholism is one of the most frightful scourges—whether it be regarded from the point of view of the health of the individual, of the existence of the family, or of the future of the country.

And, whereas, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, of which we, your supplicants, are a part, does unqualifiedly favor total prohibition;

Therefore, we, the annual mission conference of the Society Islands mission of the aforesaid church, assembled in the Island of Apataki, of the Tuamotuan Archipelago, December 30, 1919, do hereby petition your Excellency, the governor of the French establishments of Oceania, to use the prerogatives of your office to effect the total prohibition of the manufacture and distribution of all alcoholic drinks in the territory over which you have jurisdiction.

So far as we know, the above petition is the only document of its kind, originating with a primitive, native people of the isles of the Pacific Ocean, petitioning any protectorate for prohibition. Is such a people not worthy of our help?

A Sister Wants to Help

If the sisters will send me quilt scraps, I will piece quilt tops for the church institutions. Please, each one throw in a few spools of number forty white machine thread. I will furnish oil and time to make them, also some of the thread; and please put in quilt patterns, or if anyone wants some of them pieced some special way, just mention it, or send along the pattern.

We enjoy no church privileges except the church papers. Our one-time branch of regular attendants are now scattered afar.

Yours for Christ's work,

Council Bluffs Items

The series of services conducted by Apostle J. F. Curtis has met with a hearty response on the part of the Saints and friends. Up to the evening of the 15th thirty-one had been baptized, a large number of them adults, several heads of families. The effect on the Saints has been to increase their activities, and they are in a more spiritual condition. These services will continue a part of the coming week.

There has been some interest in marriages, and we learn that this week one of the missionaries has thought it beneficial to take unto himself a helpmeet. Elder C. W. Morgan, who is now laboring in the Little Sioux District, was married to Miss Cora E. Scott, of McClelland. Elder Charles Noland and Sister Rebecca Weld have broken the monotony of courtship slightly and were married, I am informed, on last Tuesday. We wish them all the peace and courtship that should continue during life.

The branch business to govern the work for the coming year reelected the same presidency, O. Salisbury, George Beaty, and H. H. Hand, with J. J. Hartnett, secretary, and O. E. Currie, financial clerk. The budget for the coming year is about $3,500. There was found a slight deficit in payment of the budget of last year, but it is thought that by the first of the year all will be paid. There has been an increase of membership in the branch of about one hundred during the year. The Women's Department is manifesting quite a considerable activity, and many of those in need either of comfort or necessities have been ministered to through this department.

The branch for the coming year has been divided into ten groups, with an elder and priest or two elders in charge of each group, associated with the assistance of a teacher and deacon. The prayer meetings for the coming months of winter have been arranged to be held in cottages in each group, except the second Wednesday night of each month. Missionary services will be held during the month of February in the Belmont Mission, and a committee has been appointed to secure, if possible, a more convenient and permanent place of meeting for the Riverside Mission.

The Sunday school and Religio have been showing increasing interest during the last few weeks.

Services have been held in the basement Sunday evenings for several weeks to accommodate the crowds at the Central Church.

We have noted several of the Hazel Dell and Omaha Saints at the services during the meetings now being held. These are always welcome.

1921 Christmas Offering

To Our Christmas Offering Helpers and Friends; Dear Co-workers: On Christmas Sunday the Presiding Bishop's office had received $9,820.20 on the 1921 Christmas Offering Inheritance Fund. We expect it will come in much faster hereafter. We hope you will not delay yours, but send it in promptly to this office and get a good start on the 1922 offering.

A brother in Canada writes, "We, as a Sunday school, would like to have one of your thermometer designs for Christmas offering sent to us so we can start the new year to raise the money, for we think it a splendid plan."

We will be glad to supply others with these thermometers upon request. At the bottom of each one are these words, A REGISTER OF DEVOTION. It takes a truly devoted heart to cause one to do without the things he has long wanted and really needs, so that others will be blessed by his sacrifice.

May God bless all of our Christmas offering friends with the willing and devoted heart of true discipleship is the prayer of your brother and fellow servant,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Happiness From Service

Bishop's agent of Northeastern Kansas writes the Saints in his district the following letter.

As far back as history goes, happiness has been the object-quest of all nations and individuals. Each of us in life's journey is constantly seeking happiness. As the years go by we find it in different ways. Yet from our childhood days to the end of our lives we all derive happiness from service—service to God and our fellow men. Service is the true road to happiness. It finds an ever-responsive chord within us and puts us in harmony with our heavenly Father and the better things in life.

Thronging past the eyes of the ages is the glorious procession of those who have served! The scientist, the artist, the inventor, the builder, the teacher, the preacher, the leaders in the promotion and perfection of all things spiritual and material conceived for the good of mankind. History speaks of great ages in religion, literature, art, industry, and the sciences. They are in reality ages which have become great through the quality and extent of their services to the common good. An individual, an institution, and a nation grow in happiness and strength through service—endure through service and by service.

The church—our church—is a golden field of opportunity. Shall we "thrust in our sickles while it is yet called to-day"? This is the last month of the year 1921. Shall the light of its low descending sun go out without a record act of service?

The department which I represent—temporal department—needs the consecrated services of every Saint in their tithes and free-will offerings.

Yours for service,

FRANK G. HEDRICK.

Thanksgiving in Modesto, California

On Thanksgiving Day we had an all-day service in our new church. At eleven o'clock we had a sermon by H. J. Davison which was very much enjoyed, after which we retired to the basement, where the Women's Department had arranged two long tables and had them bounteously filled with everything good to eat, and had it hot, too, since it was a cold, damp day.

After the inner man had been satisfied, we again went into the upper auditorium, where we listened to a short program by the Sunday school children, after which one of the coming men (now a Sunday school boy) was the first to be baptized in the new font by our pastor, I. A. Phelps.

Songs in keeping with the day were used. About forty in all were present, and a very enjoyable day was spent. We were truly thankful to have a good, clean place in which to worship God. A number from the Stockton Church came down, which added to our pleasure, for we always enjoy having them.

Our church is not quite finished, but we are getting the work done just as fast as we can. We are so few in number that it is hard for us to build, but as it was impossible to get a place to hold meetings we were forced to, if we continued to keep up our branch meetings. We have not been able to put the lights in yet, so do not have evening meetings, but we are working hard to raise money to complete it. We are looking forward to a visit from our district president, Brother J. D. White, of Oakland.

We have had a dry winter so far, with only about one inch of rain, or a little more. Our president, Brother Phelps, has been sick for the past three weeks, but is improving.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion,

PUBLICITY AGENT.

Appreciate Problem of Administration

A brother engaged in secular work writes to President Smith as follows:

Dear Brother Fred: Since assuming executive responsibilities myself, I have often thought of you and the great load you must be carrying, with the problems of the entire church organization resting upon you.

I am afraid there are too few of us who appreciate your trials and perplexities (I am sure I did not, and have just come to a realization of this in trying to solve the few that come to me here), and were we to do so, you would receive more kindly assurance of our support than you do.

I do not believe gratitude and loyalty are wanting in your followers, but it is just because "they do not understand."

There have been times when I have differed in opinion with you, but I believe I have been honest in it, and with the light I had, have done my best to cooperate with you.

I write to assure you of my kindest regards and hearty support, believing that if more of us were to do this, the

Central Chicago Branch

Our church has been redecorated, and the first service held in it after its regeneration was the entertainment given by the Glee Club under the direction of Brother Roy Cheville as director with Sister Margaret Wickes as reader and pianist, the proceeds going to the decorating fund.

On the morning of December 18, we had Brother John L. Cooper with us. He gave us a splendid sermon on the one gospel—the gospel of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. In the evening Apostle U. W. Greene was with us.

At the regular annual Sunday school election, all officers were reinstated. The branch election will be held Wednesday, January 4.

On Christmas morning the sermon was by Brother Philemon Pement who is home on his Christmas vacation. The choir rendered suitable anthems, with Sister Vina Campbell, chorister, and Sister Mildred Jowett, pianist.

In the evening, Brother Ward L. Christy occupied the pulpit, and his opening remarks were in remembrance of his pleasant awakening in the morning to the sweet strains of the Christmas carol sung by our young folks under the leadership of Brother Cheville at every Latter Day Saint home near enough to be reached by them.

They wound up at Brother H. P. W. Keir's, and Sister Keir knowing the needs of young people gave them a substantial breakfast.

had been to the bottom of the well. He knew. For years, no doubt, the Devil led him around with a flaxen cord. He boasted, "I can drink or I can let it alone." The man who says that never lets it alone. Too late he awoke to find himself bound with strong cords. His will was gone. The backbone of his personality was broken.

A young man entered the University of Iowa. He seemed to desire to succeed, but almost from the first he failed in his studies. He could not concentrate. Finally the dean called the lad into the study and quizzed him. The young man broke down and sobbed, "I can't quit it. I can't quit it. I haven't the will power to quit."

The dean inquired, "What is it you cannot quit?" And the boy held out his hands to show the cigaret-stained fingers. "I learned it when a boy," he went on. "I learned it at the livery stables and about town. I thought I would never be a man if I could not smoke."

That was the flaxen cord around his neck. But alas, he found that the thing he thought would make him a man, kept him from being a man. The backbone of his personality was broken. The upshot of the matter was that he had to quit college and return home.

At one time I was called to visit an insane hospital in California. I did not find the young man that I sought upon the lawn with other unfortunates who were given some freedom. I found him in the criminally insane ward, where the windows were barred and the doors locked. I was admitted to his cell. I found that at times he was lucid, though often he wept and cursed by turns. In one of his lucid moments he told me his story.

He had been a good, industrious young man, a member of the church; but in an evil day, or rather night, he was induced to visit the vice district of a certain community. Friends told him, "Come on. Have a good time. No one need know." That was the flaxen cord that he permitted about his neck. He contracted a foul disease. The physician confirmed his story. The man was suffering from paresis as a result of that disease and could not possibly live very many months.

As I drove away through the sunny fields and orange orchards of California, the sunlight was blotted out by the shadow of that house of detention and by the thought of that poor unfortunate, a witness to the truth of the declaration: "When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."—James 1: 15.

But if I got nothing else from that sad interview

I did get a new exegesis of the texts which say the wicked shall be turned into the prison house. What is hell if it is not an asylum for the criminally insane of all times where they may be confined until they are recovered. It is necessary for them and for the general good of humanity. All wicked men are more or less criminally insane; they are befuddled in thought, debased in feeling, broken in will; and these three constituting personality, they are not normal at any point.

Truth in the Heart

Jesus said to the Jews, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He works towards freedom by the way of truth—by the way of truth voluntarily accepted by the human will.

But the Jews declared, "We were never in bondage to any man." At that very time they were in intellectual bondage to their rabbis and traditions, in political bondage to Rome, and in moral bondage to their bad habits.

Many who now boast of freedom are not free. I had an interview at one time with a young man who had traveled extensively. Our conversation turned to religious topics. Finally, with much feeling, he confessed: "Mr. Smith, the trouble with me is that I know the things that I should do, but I cannot do them; and I know the things that I should not do, but I cannot refrain from doing them."

I looked at him in surprise and said: "What is the matter with you, a perfect athlete, six feet tall, apparently in possession of all your faculties, in the prime of young manhood, without a visible shackle on your limbs, yet you must do the thing that you do not wish to do and cannot do that which you know you should do? You are a slave. You are not free."

It was his turn to look at me in surprise. Yet it was the truth. He dwelt in "the land of the free" under the shadow of the starry banner, protected by the Constitution for which thousands died—yet he was not free. No man is free until Jesus sets him free. That man is free who can say, There is no power on earth or within me that can prevent me from doing that which my conscience approves, or compel me to do that against which my better nature revolts.

Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."—John 10:10. What did he mean by that? Did he mean that we should be taller, broader, more full-blooded; that alone? If thought, feeling, and will constitute personality, there must be degrees of personality. And that man whose thought covers the widest range most correctly, whose feeling is deepest and best, whose will is ever strong to determine a course consistent with truth and light, has most personality—he lives most—he has "life more abundantly."

That is the work of Jesus, to enlighten the intellect, to purify the emotions, to redeem the will. He respects our wills and appeals to them. But by way of contrast it is said that in that wonderful council in heaven concerning the salvation of Man, the Devil volunteered to go, providing he could have all the glory. He promised to save all men. Yes, he would march them into heaven, every one, whether they wished to come or not. He is the Kaiser Wilhelm of the Universe, and would teach all men to "goose-step." And what is a man doing, who says, "I would like to stop swearing but I cannot; or, I would like to stop drink, or drugs, or tobacco, but cannot—what is he doing if not "goose-stepping" at the command of Lucifer.

Jesus, to the contrary, presents his message and then waits—waits. "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Revelation 3:20.

Christian Science repudiates the human will, and says: "Will power is not science. It belongs to the senses and its use is to be condemned."—Science and Health, p. 144, edition of 1907.

But Jesus knocks at man's door and waits for the will to open the door. I am suspicious of Spiritism, Mesmerism, Christian Science, or any other thing that asks me to be passive and receptive and surrender my will at the beginning of the investigation. God does not ask that. After the investigation is ended and the truth perceived, then the surrender.

Even then, though we pray "Thy will be done," it is in the sense that our wills, having perceived truth, may be thereby intelligently in exact accord with his will. Tennyson has the idea in Memoriam:

"Our wills are ours, we know not how,
Our wills are ours, to make them Thine."

"Behold I stand at the door and knock"—Lord Jesus, you declared that all power was given into your hands, both in heaven and on earth, yet you wait at my frail door and respect the sanctity of my personality! Why do you not force my door and enter to take possession? Because "The Lord God gave unto man, that he should act for himself."

Young people, to-night, and each Sunday night during these meetings, Jesus knocks at your door. If you have not already opened to him, why not open your door and grasp his hand? It is the truest, strongest hand ever offered you in friendship.

Mutual Benefit in Visit of Graceland Students

Through the efforts of the Amalgamated Young People of Zion, presided over by Elder John A. Gardner, the overseas students at Graceland College were brought to Independence to spend the week including Christmas and New Year's.

The local Saints very hospitably cared for these twelve young people, provided entertainment for them, arranged trips to local points of historic interest, and in every way made the week an enjoyable one for them.

At the services at the various churches they were pressed into service until at the close a large number of people felt much better acquainted with these whole-hearted young people whose idealism has brought them together for a season that they may eventually return to their people with the gospel of personal service so impressed on them during their sojourn in this land.

Their talent and easeful grace in public were noticeable features. Whether called on individually to address an audience or to provide an entire Religion program, they were equally at home. The final service in which they participated, Sunday evening, the 1st, was attended by a very large audience, and the time was divided between Job Negeim, a Syrian lad from Palestine, Prescott Foo, a Chinese from Hawaii, Frank H. Edwards, of England, and John H. Blackmore, of Australia. It was an impressive occasion indeed, suggesting at once the extensiveness of our mission work and also the necessity for such unifying situations as the arrangement which brings them together for a season at school and emphasizes the brotherhood that breaks down all racial and national lines.

Among other interesting events in their visit here was the privilege of viewing the original manuscript from which the Book of Mormon was printed, with other valuable records of a similar nature, under the personal direction of Historian Walter W. Smith.

Recreation was had in two games between the men in the group and locally picked-up teams in soccer football, the results being 3 to 1 and 10 to 1, in favor of the religious education students.

Those making up the party were: Frank and Harry Holmes, Harold Dewsnap, Frank H. Edwards, Doris Gibbs, of England; Madge Green, of Scotland; Sidney Phillips, of Wales; William Patterson and John H. Blackmore, of Australia; Alexander Klein, of Austria; Job Negeim, of Palestine; Prescott Foo, of Hawaii. One of the foreign students, Eric Schlote, of Germany, was not with the party, having accepted an invitation to visit his brother in Utah.

They left for their school work on the 2d, having not only enjoyed the visit to Zion very much themselves, but leaving with those who reside there a deeper appreciation of the scope and value of our missionary work.

The Independence choir, under the leadership of Mrs. Fred B. Farr, as director, rendered "The word fulfilled," a Christmas cantata, by Adam Geibel, at the Stone Church Christmas evening. Both the choruses and solo parts were rendered in a manner very pleasing to those who were permitted to attend. The soloists were Mrs. I. A. Smith, Mrs. S. A. Burgess, George Anway, and D. D. Plumb.

Apostle J. F. Curtis closed a series of meetings at Council Bluffs just before Christmas, with some 43 baptisms, of whom twenty-four were heads of families, and only five or six children. He felt indeed to be very much blessed in this work. He begins a new series immediately after the holidays, on January 2, at Woodbine, Iowa.

Announcements have reached us from Papeete, Tahiti, that on November 16 a son, who has been named Frederick Ernest, came to bless the lives of Elder Frank B. Almond and wife. A letter written on December 14, tells of the arrival of a son, named Frederick John, to likewise bless Elder Frederick J. Elliott and wife. The editors join their many friends in extending congratulations.

The Auditorium Orchestra of Independence, which functions chiefly at the Sunday school at the Stone Church, has resumed active rehearsals and announces a special program for the near future. Next Sunday as a special selection, Miss Emma Snead will offer the following violin selections: Scenes De Ballet (by De Beriot): a. Allegro Vivace. b. Adagio Cantabile. c. Tempo De Valse. d. Allegro Appassionata. e. Piu Animato.

Science and Revelation

The materialist cannot adequately explain spiritual things of which he does not know.

The recognition of the place of science, or open-mindedness towards the hypothesis of evolution does not mean we should reject our religious concepts. The manner in which the world was made, the methods used in the creation of the body of man, does not necessarily call in question the fact of God, the immortality of the soul, nor the place of God in creation.

The assertion that man is descended from a pre-simian common ancestor, is not answered by replying God made him, for he may have made him from earlier forms mediately from the dust of the ground, as readily as immediately from the dust or other elements. There seems little reason to drag our most sacred instincts in the dirt or in such opposition to science.

But it is well to consider carefully, for the sake of intellectual honesty, what are the probabilities and what the weight of probability. It is merely a question of fact, and as such should be weighed.

But when in the name of science positivism is presented, in the name of evolution, and we are offered a wholly materialistic concept of the universe, that is to consist of nothing but matter and the attributes of matter without morals or religion, we may well pause to examine the evidences of a Supreme intelligence in the universe, as well as in our souls; and the testimony of other goodly men, as written by the Spirit of God in his word.

Still at times it is well to remember that in our spiritual experience, there is often much that cannot be understood by those who have never felt the divine fire. In such matters we should still preserve the critical attitude of science. But doing so we know as certainly as we know any other fact.

To those who have really experienced the power of God, the spirit of revelation; to those who have felt and experienced a great conversion; to those who have had the ecstasy of true communion with the divine, the attempts to explain conversion, religious ecstasy and inspiration in material terms are merely words without sense, for they write of that which they know not.

Yet the fact of that conversion, of that ecstasy, of that divine communion is as clearly established to our intelligence, as is any other fact of science. For it is science, a fact known to those who have truly experienced such a revelation.

As Paul expresses it:

What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, except he has the Spirit of God. . . . The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned. But he that is spiritual judgeth all things.—1 Corinthians 2: 11, 14, 15, Inspired Version.

When we consider how such experiences are often, if not usually, received by those who know not, the words of the Master on the Mount are not surprising:

The mysteries of the kingdom ye shall keep within yourselves; for it is not meet to give that which is holy unto the dogs; neither cast ye your pearls unto swine, lest they trample them under their feet. For the world cannot receive that which ye, yourselves, are not able to bear; wherefore ye shall not give your pearls unto them, lest they turn again and rend you.—Matthew 7: 10, 11, I. V.

Science is not irreligious or unchristian, though irreligious men and unchristian men are sometimes scientists, and attempt to interpret its facts as though against religion and morality, including Christianity. But it is only fair to add, as does Sir Oliver Lodge, that as it was never the great religious leaders of the past, who were ready to throw stones at all who did not agree with them, but rather the camp followers; so it is not the great thinkers and leaders in scientific thought, who are most ready to throw stones at religion, but it is the third rate workers, who are the Pharisees of the modern scientific world.

There should be open-mindedness, a readiness to receive and value new truth. But open-mindedness does not mean a lack of judgment, a failure to appreciate the truth, nor an inability to hold fast to it when found.

School of the Elders in Zion

The announcement sent out to the ordained men of Zion, as published in the HERALD last week, naturally created a wave of enthusiasm and expectation. Our men as a whole are always anxious to learn better how to do their work and are glad of the opportunity to learn. It is for this reason that the history of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has been marked, both in conference and at other times, by periodic demands for a school of the prophets. It has ever been a living, hope-inspiring theme, considered also as an introduction to the greater spiritual power of the endowment.

While a school of the elders, or rather a school of the ministry, is not a school of the prophets, it is regarded as a decided step in that direction. It was therefore, a momentous occasion, as was shown also by the large assembly of earnest men which completely filled the room, there being over five hundred present at the time and place appointed, the lower auditorium of the Stone Church, Sunday afternoon, January 8.

Now were these expectations disappointed. The service was in charge of Elder R. V. Hopkins, but was preceded by a song service under the leadership of Elder F. A. Russell. A fervent prayer was offered for divine direction and guidance by Patriarch W. A. McDowell.

President Elbert A. Smith was the speaker of the hour and spoke with his usual power and clearness on "The freedom of the will," discussing particularly free agency and the reasons thereof; the plan of God in the beginning and now, as contrasted with the methods of the power of evil. God gives us our free agency, the right of choice. He stands at the door and knocks; if any man will open, he will enter and sup with him; but he will not force the door.

A partial idea of the discourse may be gathered from the outline which follows, but this omits the summing up that man cannot by his own efforts alone or through secular education achieve salvation or the good.

The priesthood were arranged by quorums, and a record kept of those who attended. The patriarchs, bishops, and church historian were seated on the stand. The other high priests, seventies, and elders were seated in the middle of the auditorium; the priests, teachers, and deacons on the sides.

A motion obtained that future lectures be reported. This address was not, but the following outline was distributed to all who attended:

MAN'S FREE AGENCY

I. INTRODUCTION

- A. Free agency distinctive of man.

II. GOOD AND EVIL AS OPPOSITES

- A. Existence of good and evil recognized by many forms of philosophy and religion.
 1. However, evil is denied by Christian Science and some schools of philosophy.
 B. Existence of good and evil self-evident.
 C. Set forth in revelation.
 1. Book of Mormon law of opposites.
 D. Evil inherently evil.
 E. Evil because of some ill effect on welfare of mankind.

III. THE HUMAN WILL FREE TO CHOOSE BETWEEN GOOD AND EVIL

- A. The denial of free will.
 1. In theology, as in Calvinistic predestination, Christian Science, and Mohammedan theology.
 2. In philosophy, as in Spinoza's theory.
 3. In science, as in materialistic concepts of the nineteenth century.
 B. The affirmation of free will.
 1. By modern theology.
 2. In the trend of modern philosophy.
 3. In civil law, which recognizes the responsibility of sane men.
 4. In modern scientific thought.
 5. In revelation, notably in the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Inspired Version of the Bible.

IV. FUNDAMENTAL DIFFERENCE IN ATTITUDE OF GOD AND SATAN TOWARD HUMAN WILL

- A. Importance of the will in personality.
 B. God respects the will and seeks to reach with reason and with a proper appeal to the emotions.
 C. Satan sees first to deceive; then to pervert, weaken, and destroy the will.
 D. He leads first with a "flaxen cord," then binds with "strong cords." (Book of Mormon.)
 1. The "strong cords" of the Book of Mormon are simply the "habit" of psychology.
 2. Hell may be thought of as an asylum for the criminally insane; those who are clouded in reason, debased in feeling, broken in will, bound by evil habit.
 E. Christ puts the truth in the heart, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."
 F. Satan proposed to save all men regardless of their choice.
 1. That is, he would destroy "agency." (Inspired Translation, Genesis 3: 1-5.)
 2. Has changed his objective but not his methods.
 G. Jesus presents his appeal and waits for normal action of will.
 1. "Behold I stand at the door and knock." He waits the will to open.

V. INEVITABLE LIABILITIES AS WELL AS BLESSINGS OF FREE AGENCY

- A. Why not destroy evil and compel goodness?
 1. Moral results cannot be wrought by force.
 2. The Lord wants men, not mechanical toys.
 3. Every uphill road is of necessity a downhill road.

VI. ULTIMATE RELATIONSHIP OF OUR WILLS TO GOD'S

- A. No merging or loss of personality as in Oriental theology.
 1. But thinking as God thinks, feeling as he feels, we come to will always as he wills.

These meetings will be held weekly for the present, every Sunday afternoon. Next Sunday afternoon Elder W. W. Smith will be the speaker in the upper auditorium, on "What is the understanding?" in the light of psychology, the beginning of a series by this brother.

How long they continue will doubtless depend on how well they are received and other circumstances. When we consider our necessities, once a week is not often to give to this great purpose. Those who were permitted to be present sensed the greatness of this opportunity, and many silent prayers were offered that these meetings may lead to a greater unity of understanding and of work among the whole priesthood of Zion and the church of Christ throughout the world.

Radiophone as a Missionary Ally

First sermon by one of our men sent out to hundreds via this modern invention from Independence.

Who among the first elders of the church could have imagined preaching a sermon into a small hand transmitter similar to the mouthpiece on a telephone, with the spoken words heard by hundreds of persons with receivers on their ears within a radius of four hundred miles?

Yet it is a reality. It has been done, and further, arrangements have been made for a regular religious program each Sunday evening, consisting of music and a short sermon by some minister of this church.

On the evening of January 8, at eight o'clock, from the little operating room near the Stone Church in Independence, Elder E. D. Moore, of the HERALD editorial staff and editor of Autumn Leaves, spoke for about fifteen minutes to an unseen but nevertheless real audience on "Main Street religion."

It was truly an inspiring moment, as one considered the possibilities of that first venture and that which is planned to follow. Brother Arthur B. Church, in charge of the Central Radio School of Kansas City, has long dreamed practical dreams of the possibilities of a definitely planned series of programs, including sermons by our preachers. With the rapid development of the radiophone has come that opportunity, and he has taken advantage of it by announcing to the large and increasing number of people equipped with this modern invention, that each Sunday evening at eight o'clock he will put on a program consisting of musical numbers (phonograph for the present) and a short sermon.

No doubt these sermons will eventually be taken down in shorthand by those at a distance as a demonstration of the possibilities of the invention, and from the sheer novelty of the situation secure considerable attention.

The station has had reports from many points on the carrying ability of the sending apparatus. The following places have reported receiving clearly, indicating something of the distance range: Fort Worth and Dallas, Texas; Memphis, Tennessee; Saint Paul, Minnesota; Green Bay, Wisconsin; Boulder, Colorado; and many intermediate points. There are perhaps over two hundred receiving sets in Kansas City alone.

The station number is 9ZH and they use a 375 meter wave length. Those of our readers who hear these programs are requested to report by card or letter to Station 9ZH, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

Even those who work with this sort of apparatus constantly are amazed at the increasing simplicity of the outfits required. The current used is about ten watts, as compared with a thousand watts for the radiotelegraph instruments in the same room, with practically the same sending power. In fact, mere boys can understand and manipulate the apparatus required.

The editors of the HERALD look forward to the time when they will have reported to them right at their desks the latest news developments from reporters all over the church, but especially those near at hand.

The New Ensign

Those who have watched the progress of our church papers are rejoicing to learn that Zion's Ensign will now become definitely a missionary paper, for the benefit of those who are investigating the work, for the benefit of the missionary arm of the church, and for the scattered members. There has long been a field here that deserved careful consideration from our publishing interests, so we extend to the new Ensign and its editor our most heartfelt good wishes for success, hoping and believing that, together, the Ensign and the HERALD will cover the needs of the church for weekly publications without undue overlapping.

The gain of the church in this transfer of the interests and activities of Brother John F. Garver will mean a serious loss, eventually, to Lamoni, though it is probable that he will do his work from Lamoni for most of the present calendar year. As a former citizen and well-wisher of Lamoni, we regret this change, but we are confident that it means, in the end, the best good of the church as well as of Brother Garver.

Elder Garver finished his formal school work at Graceland College several years ago. He was ambitious to have continued this formal training for a few years longer at Graceland and elsewhere, but the work of the church called for his service as a counselor to John Smith as president of the Lamoni Stake, and later in assuming the full responsibility of the work in that stake in 1916.

He acted also for several years as assistant editor of the SAINTS' HERALD, but he has found, of recent years, that his interest has greatly increased in the missionary work of the church, to which he will now give, in increasing measure, his time and attention.

As president of the Lamoni Stake, he has demonstrated his ability as an executive and organizer. These talents will stand him in good stead in his new work.

The special announcement, which out of courtesy appeared first in the Ensign of January 5, follows:

For a number of years it was obvious that the church was wasting energy in conducting two papers issued from two separate plants and covering one field. The initial step in an effort to remedy that condition was taken when the publishing houses were consolidated at Independence. The second step is now being taken in the transformation of Zion's Ensign into a purely missionary paper.

For some time it has been quite evident that the church needed a missionary paper. Appeals have continually come, particularly from the elders, for such a publication. With this current number Zion's Ensign enters upon that phase of its life and activity. Elder John F. Garver, President of the Lamoni Stake, has been selected for the position of editor by the Board of Publication, with the concurrence of the Presidency.

Brother Garver has had fifteen years of experience in the Lamoni Stake Presidency. During that time he has devoted a great amount of time to missionary work. He brings to his task the necessary equipment of experience and preparation and he has that which is of equal importance, the missionary spirit. He enters upon his work with the keenest of interest, and with study and prayer will give to it all that he has to offer. The task came to him rather suddenly and it will be necessary for him to develop his program. He has expressed a desire to receive counsel and suggestions from those who, because of experience, are prepared to give him help or advice, particularly the missionaries.

We trust that in the Ensign the church will be able to place in the hands of the missionary force and all members of the church an instrument that can be used to convey the gospel message to those who need it most. The present financial stringency makes it imperative that the missionary force be limited. The members of the church will therefore exert themselves the more strenuously in the work of warning their neighbors. The Ensign should and we trust will be of inestimable worth to them in that work.

For the time being Brother Garver will continue as president of the Lamoni Stake. He will visit Independence as he may find it necessary in his editorial work, conducting it as much as possible by way of correspondence.

FOR THE PRESIDENCY,
By Elbert A. Smith.

True love will hold the beloved inviolate; true love is as sacred as the touch of an angel, as sweet as the breath of an infant, as fair as the rose and as pure as the lily, as Elder R. V. Hopkins expressed it in a recent sermon.

Local News

As will be noted in the Ensign of last week, January 5, that paper will cease to publish the local news from the various branches of the church. This is work which properly belongs to the HERALD as the official organ of the church. We are, and have been, very anxious to have such news as are of general interest from all of our workers throughout the world, from the general church officials, the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, to the smallest branches of the church.

We must remember, however, that the church has many thousands of members and is growing; it is not possible, therefore, to give space to items which are only of local interest. There may be held a party of much interest to those in the locality but which is of no interest to the church at large. Yet if it is a reception for leading officials of the church, if it is a benefit for a missionary, if it is, for example, for the overseas students at Graceland College, it will be of more than local interest, even though the amount of space that can be devoted to the single item may be small.

We hope to have real news from all of our church institutions, not items of mere passing interest to those who are there, but items of interest to the whole church.

Not every wedding, no matter how beautiful it may be, is of general interest to the whole church, nor is a description of the bride's costume. Where one of the parties, however, has done work in one of the general departments of the church in such a way as to become widely known, such an item is of more than local interest. The criterion and ideal is always, Is it of interest to the church at large or to a sufficiently large number to justify publication?

It is true that more of that which happens in some of the large branches or in branches in some of the large cities will be of interest than will be the case in some rural branches, for the reason that our church members at various times visit the large cities, and hence many of those who reside there and are active in church work, even though locally, are sometimes more widely known.

There is, of course, no room for such items as appear in an ordinary local or county newspaper; for lack of space must govern our usage, and we are in this in somewhat the position of a paper published in a city of a hundred thousand or more.

Special services, the number baptized, special lectures by well-known speakers, are of more than local interest; addresses given by prominent speakers of the church before other bodies, as rotary clubs, high schools, and the like, will also from time to time deserve brief mention. We are very anxious

The Financial Outlook of the New Year

By Benjamin R. McGuire

*An address at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, January 1, 1922.
Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.*

It is in order, and inasmuch as we feel a desire to do so, we extend to you all our sincere wishes for a bright and a happy and a prosperous New Year.

When I returned to the office yesterday, from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, I learned, among other things demanding consideration, that I should be prepared to speak here at this hour upon the financial condition of the church. I will submit to you some aspects of this subject to help you in contributing your part toward its solution.

I am satisfied, from the number present this afternoon, that you are very much interested in the financial condition of the church. Finance, according to Webster, is the science of the profitable management of monetary affairs. If that is an accurate definition, and reports in this and other countries for the past year are to be relied upon, most financiers passed with the signing of the Armistice, and members of the church were no exception.

A World Problem Discussed

I remarked that I had recently returned from Pittsburgh. I went there to attend the meetings of the American Economic Association, the American Political Science Association, and several others operating in allied fields.

Here were gathered men from all parts of the United States who are considered authorities upon these subjects. Men engaged in the business affairs of the world were also in attendance and expressed their views.

I will not be able to tell you this afternoon all that was said but I will refer to some things at least. The railroad problem, the question of marketing, of nonemployment, of workmen's compensation, of economics in general, sociology, ethics as applied to economics, and the general financial condition of the world and of the United States in particular.

Among the statements made was one by Mr. E. R. A. Seligman, who, I think, is generally considered a leading, if not the leading, authority on economics in the United States. He was speaking about "The Nation's finances," and in considering the question as to what the United States would do about the debt owed this country by foreign nations, said that to his mind it would be an injustice on the part of the United States to insist upon the payment of the debt amounting to ten billions of dollars and accrued interest. That if we would not look at it from the moral aspect and could not consider it a matter of justice and remit it, then, from the economic viewpoint, as it was essential to the prosperity of this country, this debt should not be collected. In support of this view he cited our attention to the fact that Great Britain, in securing from Germany certain steamship tonnage, caused ocean rates to fall correspondingly, and to the extent benefit had been derived from the ships received from Germany it had been offset by the reduced amount of revenue received by the steamship companies.

He also called attention to the fact that the price of commodities in France had fallen to the point that benefit derived from obtaining mines from Germany had been neutralized; and contended from an economic standpoint that if the United States insisted upon the payment of this ten billion dollars and interest it would prove a boomerang.

Bankers Have Had Their Struggles

He went further to say if the debt was not forgiven, the business men and bankers in particular, of the United States, would experience conditions in the future akin to suffering the pangs of the damned. Mr. A. W. Krech, president of the Equitable Trust Company, one of the largest trust companies in New York City, in a reply address, remarked that he did not fully assume to grasp what Mr. Seligman had referred to as sufferings of the damned, or the horrors of hell, or some such reference, but if it was going to be any worse in the coming days than what the bankers had endured for the past year, he prayed that he might be excused.

Now if we will for a moment weigh these two statements and their implications, we will realize something as to what men of affairs consider regarding the conditions of the business world to-day.

While I am referring to these things it might be well for me to read a part of a report of the meeting that had for its topic "The business cycle":

Declaring for the "Mastery of the Pocketbook" and preaching the doctrine of individual thrift as a solution of economic difficulties which anyone could understand, Professor T. N. Carver, of Harvard University, appealed to the common sense of the individual following lengthy discussion on more involved solutions of the problem of financial depressions and resultant unemployment and hardship. Professor Carver declared that too much had been said about the "money power" and how to control it. "Money cannot move itself," he cried. "Money has no legs to walk about on. Money can move in only one way, and that is when some man pushes it; in other words, when some man spends it. Professor Mitchell said a very wise thing when he said that we control the business cycle just as surely as we control the cycle of the seasons. He called your attention to the fact that we do not permit ourselves to starve and freeze in the cycle of winter. We can prevent suffering in the hard times brought about by the business cycle just as surely as we can prevent physical suffering from the hard times of winter.

Food and fuel comes to us in the summer months and we use it sparingly and save plenty of it for the winter, when there is no more food to be secured. We don't eat up all the food we get or burn up all the fuel we get as fast as we get it just because we have got it. If we did use it up so extravagantly we would suffer in winter. We should obey the same rule with money. We can prevent money moving by not spending it as fast as we get it. Let us save our money against the hour of our great need. Let us become masters of our pocketbooks. Then and then only will we find ourselves approaching mastery of the money power.

A few words more regarding the present situation as seen by Warren M. Persons, of Harvard University; the significant elements of the situation which, as I judge them, indicate that revival, rather than depression, is probable in 1922, are the following:

The production of manufactured articles was very much curtailed in 1920-21.

The distribution and domestic consumption of goods during the past year were probably greater than production.

The decline in the quality of goods exported in 1921 was not large. The exports of food products increased materially. In our foreign trade figures, there is no evidence that the purchasing power of Europe is seriously curtailed.

Real wage rates an hour appear to be about the same now as they were in 1913. With cost of living at 177 per cent, wage rates at about 180 per cent, and wholesale prices at 150 per cent of the 1913 figures, and the downward trend of prices arrested, it does not appear that a general downward revision of wages is called for.

The gold reserves of the Federal Reserve Banks have greatly increased, while notes in circulation and accommodations to member banks have declined.

Money rates have fallen greatly, and credit is being utilized in the security markets. Bond issues find ready sales.

The availability of credit at low money rates, combined with a volume of manufacturing output less than current consumption, and a fair amount of foreign trade, will result in increased business activity, and an upward movement of commodity prices in 1922.

We might further submit the observation made by Professor Seligman to whom I have already referred, in which he said the possible outcome of the disarmament conference, together with the improvement in the railroad situation pointed to more prosperity in 1922 than we have experienced in 1921. However, the consensus of opinion seemed to be that while we might look for more prosperity this coming year than in the past year, this would not develop quickly, but more or less slowly.

I do not wish to increase the feeling of depression, but I desire that we might all be clearly conscious of the actual situation that confronts us, and being conscious of the situation as it is, in the world, by the wisdom and light of the Spirit which we may expect our heavenly Father will bestow upon us, govern and control our lives so far as it relates to financial affairs in such a way that we may contribute a maximum toward the onward progress of the Lord's work which has been intrusted to all.

The Church Situation

Now referring to our church situation. I have said something about financial matters in general. What is our understanding as to what "the church" is? The building in which we are met this afternoon? The organized activities of this people that are carried on by certain officers of the church on behalf of the membership, or do we look upon the church as constituted by every member?

Since November 1, when I spoke here on this subject, until the present time there has been no increase in the amount of monthly receipts of tithes and offerings. In fact the trend has been in the other direction. I made statements at that time that the amount of our expenditures, as compared to the income, was about as $1 to 65 cents; to-day, or during the past month, it has been about $1 to 50 cents.

That is not altogether surprising when we note that our receipts in tithes and offerings for the year ending December 1, 1920, were, in round numbers, $605,000. The receipts for the year ending December 1, 1921, in round numbers, were $354,000; showing a falling off in the year ending December 1, 1921, as compared with the year ending December 1, 1920 of about $250,000, which is comparable with the financial situation throughout the world.

I think that the real big factor in the decline in our church receipts is due to the financial depression throughout the world. I will have something to say about some other reasons (sometimes stated, at other times implied), possibly, before I finish my remarks; but the one big reason why we haven't an income at the present time commensurate with our outlay is the fact that the membership of this church is not making the money, and consequently have not the increase upon which to pay tithing; and as against that, in a large measure, all other reasons fade into insignificance.

Then this naturally arouses the question, "How are we getting on?"

About June 30, 1921, all family allowances were paid on the basis established in 1920. In May of the past year the Order of Bishops recommended a revision of the schedule, making about a ten per cent reduction in the total amount of the family allowance budget. This was to be effective July 1, 1921, and it has been according to this revised schedule that payments of family allowances have been made since that date.

All the family allowances, and practically all the other current debts, owing by the church have been paid to December 1. All family allowances due today will be paid within the next week or ten days. So far so good; but what about the future?

We have stated that during the past year, as anyone can readily determine by a moment's mental calculation, that as our revenue has fallen off $250,000 in a year, there has been a monthly deficit of about $20,000.

This situation was seen some months ago. There was a meeting of the joint council convened in the fall to give consideration to this situation. Notice of this has already been published in the HERALD and Ensign. The council appointed a committee consisting of a member of the Presidency, a member of the Twelve, and one of the Presiding Bishopric. With this you are acquainted. This committee held daily sessions for the first two weeks of December, and a beginning, effective January 1, has been made to reduce our expenditures, to meet our declining income. The reduction in the department budgets and in family allowance budgets, as agreed upon, amount, in the aggregate, to about fifteen per cent, leaving, however, a prospective deficit this coming month of about $12,500, unless there is an increase in tithes and offerings to overcome it.

Provision has been made for the reconvening of this committee about the middle of this month to reconsider this situation with respect to the financial condition as found to exist at that time.

The question naturally arises, How can we meet this deficit? How are we going to meet it?

If we look at our balance sheet as published in November, we find that we have what we term "current assets," or assets which we would use for current operating expenses, amounting to the sum of $506,000; together with investments of the general fund, amounting to about $63,000. Against this we have liabilities, notes payable, of $185,000; and of these notes payable there is not more than $25,000 which we will be required to pay very soon. The balance is more or less long-time paper, and there is not much likelihood of its being demanded. Also the accounts payable of $31,000. A great deal of this is money deposited with the church without interest, payable on demand, but owed to different societies and different branches and different individuals. Much of it may not be demanded for a long time. Sometime, probably a large amount of it will be turned into the church as an offering.

We have special loans of the general fund of $312,000. A greater part of this is Auditorium fund, and if we want to keep ourselves in readiness so that when prices of material and labor drop we may proceed with the building of the Auditorium, it is necessary that we should not use up all our current assets. We have permanent special funds amounting to $64,000, plus $312,000. That makes $376,000. About $350,000 of this is Auditorium. The other special funds, are the temple funds, etc., and there is no likelihood of an early demand for these. There may be for the Auditorium fund. So we feel that we ought to have sufficient liquid assets among our current assets to meet this when the church says that they feel we ought to proceed to spend the money for the Auditorium.

If all the liabilities were paid to-day we have a net worth of $2,283,000, as shown in the balance sheet. This does not include the assets of the Herald Publishing House and Graceland College and the Independence Sanitarium. Some of this is real estate that can be mortgaged, and probably we can borrow funds for the purpose of meeting these operating expenses of the church without selling or mortgaging our real properties for the present.

I believe we can borrow from the members of the church at a small rate of interest and in many cases without any interest, funds sufficient to meet such deficit for the balance of the fiscal year, provided it was thought wise to incur such an indebtedness. But when five years ago, the Saints readily responded to the liquidation of debt of $370,000 we do not think that a campaign of borrowing—although we have every confidence that it would be sustained—would meet with the heartiest approval of the Saints.

Methods That Might Be Employed

My association with the Saints from day to day teaches me that if the officers of this church were to ask them to loan their funds or to make a special consecration to meet such a deficit of $15,000 or $20,000 a month they would do it, but on the other hand we do not think it would be good church financing to do so, and I believe that the members of the church, the vast majority of the members of the church, particularly men engaged in business affairs, will agree with me. As evinced by the action of the joint council and the finance committee, the so-called authorities of the church, the leading quorums of the church believe that we ought to cut our garment according to the cloth, and we are proceeding to do it, and we believe that in doing this we will be supported by the priesthood of the church and membership generally.

Meaning of Word "Church"

That brings me to another point I want to touch this afternoon. I said in the beginning that there are at least three conceptions as to what the church is: the building, the organized activities carried on by the officers, and thirdly, the body of believers. When considering finances especially I think we are likely to consider the church as the organized activities carried on by the officers, and the finances of the church as the finances raised and expended for missionary and other church activities. If the only way in which the church functions is through the organized activities carried on by the church officers, why should we be particularly concerned as to the manner in which an individual member of the church conducts himself? A scattered member lives where a missionary desires to create an interest. What is the result of that missionary activity? The result of that missionary activity is measured to a large extent by the manner in which this particular scattered member has in his life represented or misrepresented the church. These missionaries' activities are to a large extent dependent upon how the members of the community look upon the conduct of the scattered member.

I believe with the Apostle Paul that we are the body of Christ and members in particular. I believe that we are the temples of the Spirit of God. I believe that we are living epistles to be read of all men. The scattered member should live so his life will be as an open book wherein has been discovered by the community the primary lessons of the gospel; then the audience that greets the missionary is ready to receive the word, and who will tell me that we won't make a dollar go farther in that community than otherwise? Who will tell me that this has not its financial aspect? Who will say that a dollar spent on publicity in such a community won't buy more where there is a member of the church who has been living the life of Christ than where there has been one that hasn't been living the life of Christ?

You will agree with me that there is less likelihood of money expended on elder's expense and the money expended for the elder's family being wasted in the effort of the elder that does not bring results where the member is living his life than where the scattered member is not living his life as he should. Of course I am talking of scattered members—that does not apply to us down here (?). However, if that applies out in the world, how much more will it apply in the center place, where we are professing to raise the banner of King Immanuel and set up a haven of refuge?

An Aspect of Stewardship

There is another angle of this financial situation that I want to speak about. Three of us go into a farm enterprise together. Yes, I am going to say something about stewardships; that is, a certain aspect of stewardships, and, Saints, it is an aspect that is necessary for us to get. Suppose we went into a farming enterprise together, three of us. That is, two of you were going to rent me a farm to be operated on shares. You supply me with seed. Suppose now that with the seed and machinery I started to work, but suppose that one of you as one of these owners thought the tractor, say, was not working right and proceeded to screw a nut here, tighten up a bolt there. So far as I am concerned, I think the tractor is in about the right condition. I have been using it a little and know something about it, and you know how it is, handling an automobile when some one else has had hold of it. I think I know just about how to handle that to get the most out of it, but when I come to put it into operation I find a bolt has been loosened here or a nut tightened there, or something of that kind. Suppose again when I come to plant my corn or other grain, one of the partners comes along and sows a lot of weed seed. Suppose further, that when we do get the crop ready I find that we have a short crop and find that there's a lot of weed seed in it. Do you think if you were one of the members of that firm, one of that combination of three, you are going to tell the world that we didn't get a good crop? Do you think you would try to get as little out of that crop as possible?

Now, take that analogy and apply it to our church. I do not need to refer here to anyone specifically, but this I do wish to say: It is highly essential that those who have been intrusted—and mind you that the Book of Covenants says this work is intrusted to us all—it is highly essential that we don't tighten up or don't gum up the machinery. It is highly essential that we don't sow the seeds of dissension; of faultfinding that has a tendency to hurt the influence of any officer in this church in the performance of his work. We are in partnership, and just to the extent that one interferes with the officers of this church doing the work as best they may under the circumstances, just to that extent we may expect failure.

Let us reserve our criticisms, our adjustments, to the proper officers, proper tribunals, proper time and place. This is not to everyone we chance to engage in conversation, any time, anywhere in interim meetings or conferences.

Secondary Causes of the Slump

I said that I believed that the primary cause of the reduction in our revenue was the business depression from which the membership of this church were not altogether free. There are, however, certain insidious secondary causes that some have predicated upon the consequence of this primary cause. I trust that those who have given their all for the gospel's sake will not permit themselves unwittingly to aggravate this secondary cause.

Our Maker knows more about us than any person. I remarked this morning in the prayer service that to the extent I am normal physically, to that extent do I enjoy a good meal. To that extent do I function normally.

To-day is a day of feasting; it is a holiday. Most of us, if we are healthy, have enjoyed our noonday meal. The Lord said, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me and finish his work." "My meat"; that is, his meal; the thing that sustained him, the thing that made him the potent factor in the hands of God that he was, for the accomplishment of the redemption of the human race. He says, My meat, the thing that sustains me, is to do the will of Him that sent me. Should I not believe to the extent or in measure any officer or member of this church does the will of his heavenly Father in all the activities of life that he is called upon to engage and all the duties he is called upon to perform; to the degree he does the will of his heavenly Father, to that extent will he be sustained and to that extent does he obtain the joy and satisfaction, the blessing, the endowment that our heavenly Father through the gospel designs to bestow upon his children?

Believing such—and I believe the members of the church feel that way—the officers of the church believe that way—cannot we, with Abraham Lincoln, say that with malice toward none, with charity for all we will move forward in the discharge of our respective duties; each learning his duty and performing his duty? I think we may.

Just to the degree that we are deeply in earnest, brethren, and carefully look into our own hearts, our own lives, examine our own works and see wherein ours is askew, where ours does not quite square with the great Exemplar, and go about it to rectify, to that extent will we contribute our part to the advancement and upbuilding of God's work, and to that extent will we help in gathering the necessary finances to carry on this work.

Make Every Dollar Count

Yes, we want to gather a good spiritual crop from the activities of the members of the priesthood and the members generally. We want to make every dollar that is contributed in tithes and offerings accomplish the most possible. If we invest our funds in any officer or any set of officers in any department or any departmental work of this church and then proceed to undermine the influence of that officer or interfere with normal working of that department, we correspondingly reduce the effectiveness of that particular officer or department of the work and correspondingly reduce the purchasing power of the tithes and offerings which we turn into the treasury of the church. It isn't only a question of so many thousands or hundreds of thousands of dollars. It is a cooperative effort, and the financial situation is more than a balance sheet. It is dependent not only upon the amount of money in the treasury, but likewise dependent upon the amount of money in the hands of the Saints, and their attitude toward it.

Financiers throughout the country are hopeful; they say it isn't a barren hope, but it is a business judgment predicated up the conditions that obtain; and they say that if men will take advantage of the opportunities that will be offered them in the coming year there will be a season of business revival and prosperity.

We Should Be Hopeful

If these business men are able to perceive this and are willing to risk their reputations upon the judgment thus expressed, we who believe in the redemption of Zion, in the establishment of the kingdom of God, in the ultimate accomplishment of the work intrusted to us while here, should be willing to exercise our faith. Why shouldn't we, if we haven't already done so, file our inventory and pay our tithing; and if we have filed our inventory and paid our tithing in the past, why should we not now figure up where we have made an increase since that time, and pay our tithing upon it; and if we have no increase and we see the present need of this part of our joint enterprise being helped financially and we have that which is a surplus or have that which we feel that without hurting our business we can, if you please, offer, donate, or sacrifice for the advancement of this work, why should we hesitate to do it?

We want—oh, how the membership of this church long to so live and in their individual and collective efforts so act as to reflect to the world the purity and the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ! How we long for this! Then why should we retard its realization by not doing the thing that we ought to do?

If it is necessary for us as an individual to be perfectly normal in all our parts in order that we should enjoy the blessing and satisfaction that comes from the body functioning normally, how much more necessary is it for each individual who is a part of the body of Christ to perform his respective duty so that as a church we may obtain the endowment of the Spirit that we have heard about for the last fifty or sixty years. Yea, since the inception of the work. How much more necessary is it to see to it that we in our respective duties are functioning as we should, that we may have a normal body of Christ, and enjoy to the full the endowment of the Spirit!

I long for that day. You long for that day, and that day is coming, and we will either participate or not participate to the extent that we appreciate the opportunity and avail ourselves of the opportunities that God has extended to us, and each of us—every man, woman, and child whose name is upon the record of the church.

Confidence Will Bring a Good Harvest

I have hopes for the coming year. I am going to be real frank with you. I often meditate upon the situation, and I know you do. It seems to me sometimes as we meditate that we don't accord—oh, no; I am not going to speak about the officers—we don't accord as officers to the membership that faith and confidence in their spiritual integrity that we should. It seems to me sometimes in our efforts and maybe in my preaching this afternoon (I don't know; you know), it seems to me sometimes that we are somewhat doubtful. I know that in some of our dealings—some of the bishops will probably check me now on this—when we have exercised our faith and confidence in an individual and from a financial standpoint the church has gotten the worst of it, we feel maybe we have been wrong in the exercise of such faith and confidence, but the more I think about it, the more I am satisfied that in the long run, in the ultimate, the manifestation of confidence in humanity is not lost, but it will have its return; there will be a harvest some day, because it is vital; it is living force; it is the thing that God manifested in us when he sent Jesus Christ down to this world.

Certainly the Creator has had faith in us. Otherwise he would not have sent Jesus Christ into the world as a Mediator of the covenant. He sent Jesus Christ into the world to save men and women. He has faith and confidence in us. If God and Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior, can have faith in erring humanity, why do not we, as members of the church, have faith in one another? If God can have faith in erring humanity, how much more ought we to have faith in each other who have made a covenant at the waters of baptism?

May you—as I said in the beginning—have a very bright, happy, and prosperous New Year, in all that is possible for these words to imply.

From Duluth, Minnesota, Joseph A. Northrup writes that he spent Christmas with the Saints there. Last year there were but five or six in that vicinity; this year a happy group of at least sixty sat down to their feast together. Their program for the day was as follows: Prayer meeting in the morning with a goodly portion of the Spirit to attend, an afternoon of social enjoyment, dinner at four o'clock, and program by the children in the evening. A tableau at the close, of "Nearer, my God, to thee," song part taken by Sister Kress and the supplicant acted by Sister Bess, was one of the most enjoyable and striking parts of the program, because those taking part were so filled with the Spirit of their parts that its force permeated the room. Brother Northrup says that he seldom gets to meet with the Saints, and when he does it is as though he had found the peace and safety of the harbor when without there was storm and grief.

Church Advertising

If churches are worth anything, their merits should be made known.

The following article from the editorial column of the Fresno (California) "Republican" contains some very interesting observations from the editor's viewpoint. Our missionaries will be interested and helped by reading it. The list of subjects is particularly interesting, showing the trend of the times among other churches. This clipping was sent in by Brother Alma C. Barmore who is very successful in getting space in the papers for the presentation of our message. He seldom preaches a sermon but what he gets space to tell at least part of his story, to the readers of the papers. Sometimes his sermon reviews run to a column in length. Among the list of subjects given in the editorial below he had three—the three marked with asterisks.—EDITORS.

Various churches and various clergymen have various attitudes toward church publicity. Reluctance to publicity is ascribed variously to modesty, to principle, to expense, to indifference. Eagerness to advertise is ascribed to business appreciation of its advantages, to eagerness to be in the limelight, to "results," and to obedience to the scriptural injunction "Let your light so shine" etc.

In the long run, it should be remembered, there is little distinction in principle, though there may be some in convenience, between paid advertising and publicity that is obtained freely or incidentally. The fact of advertising is the same, though purposes may vary and methods may widely differ. The church official who welcomes or seeks publicity and refuses to pay for advertising may be employing purely business principles, but if he thinks that there is a moral distinction he has not given the thought to the subject that it requires. Just as reliance on a paid choir may be a poor substitute for enthusiastic congregational singing, so reliance upon paid advertising may be a poor substitute for energetic development of opportunities to place one's church before the community in which it operates. But the inherent question of "paying" for either a choir or of paying for advertising is one of proper adjustment of church and community burdens.

If churches are worth anything, their merits should be made public in one way or another. They are advertised by the character of their members, as well as the character of the clergymen and other officers; advertising by the denominational distinction that separates them from other religious institutions; advertised by the degree of affiliation with or separation from the general body of citizenship; advertised by the facility with which the worldly means of the communicants is diverted to church purposes; advertised by the general church activity. But above all, a church is distinguished by the character of the sermons that are preached from its pulpit. All the great religions of the earth, as well as Christianity, have been given their opportunity for human value through their preaching. The church's message has been a gospel, a glad tidings.

While the quality of preaching in a church is best advertised by those that hear it, yet it also receives an independent advertising in other ways. The extent to which this advertising is done through newspapers is an important consideration for the clergyman and for the church management.

It is chiefly to be had through the sermon title.

The title to the sermon is the "sample" displayed for passers-by to see. It may be strictly a title, a descriptive or definite one. Or it may be a text, a suggestion, a line that shows the inspiration of the sermon.

It will be interesting to give here a list of the titles of sermons as given in the "Church Notices" in yesterday morning's Republican: They are:

"The Golden Age—When?"

"Our Far Flung Line, an illustrated lecture showing the educational work of the church throughout the world."

"The Life-sized Portrait of the Christian."

"The False Baptism and Tongue Twaddle of Mrs. MacPherson as compared with the Scriptural."

* "Christian Cooperation."

* "Knowledge the Measure of Responsibility."

* "The Enchanted Isles."

"Unitarianism Examined; Will Unitarianism Prove to Be the New World Religion?"

"Healing in the Atonement."

"Organization."

"Christian Worship."

"Love."

"The Mission of Christ to Earth."

"Man's Abiding Place."

"Stewardship."

"If I Were a Millionaire."

"Your Weak Moments."

"Walking with God."

"The Greatness of Love."

"Victory Through Faith."

"Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth, the Great Fundamental Division of the Bible."

"Responsibility for Our Talents."

"Two Paths."

"The Divine Challenge to the World."

"Demonstrations."

"The Man of Vision."

"The Rock of Christianity."

"Doctrine of Atonement."

There were thirty-three announcements in the "Church Services" column of The Republican. Of these, eighteen contained titles to addresses. That is, of the churches in Fresno that cared to make announcements on Sunday morning, only 54 per cent or slightly more than one half chose to announce the titles to addresses to be made by the pastor or other speakers.

Of course in a few cases, the church had other activity than a sermon, and so announced. But this was a very small proportion.

In the list of subjects given above, representing eighteen religious societies, there are twenty-eight subjects. This means that of the churches in Fresno, thirty-three announced their church services in this newspaper; of the thirty-three, eighteen announce subjects of sermons; and of these eighteen, one announces three subjects for consideration, eight announce two subjects, and nine announce but one subject each, though virtually all churches have at least two and sometimes three meetings during the Sunday.

Does this represent a full seizure of opportunity?

The test is of course not a perfect one. There may be churches which do not care to give announcements through newspapers. There are occasions in church when there may be no sermon. There are occasions when the sermon is of value although it cannot be given a title. And there are times when the title of the sermon, good as it is, is not a striking one.

But in the long run, nothing is worth doing unless it is expressible in a forceful thought. There is an impulse in the building of a house, in the planting of a farm, in the running of a business. There is a theme in the laying out of a day, if that day is to be profitable. We can apply this to church worship, just as to other human undertakings. Church life should not be the same thing over and over again. It should have some new stimulus, week by week. The "love of God and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost" need not be and should not be the mechanical turning of a prayer wheel. They should respond to the rhythm of the human mind, which is the gateway to the divinity in our souls.

"Let your light so shine that men, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father, which is in heaven."

I have known farmers who, in traveling, saw only plows and butter tubs and corncribs; and preachers who, looking across such autumn fields as these would carry away only a musty text or two. I pity some of those who expect to go to heaven: they will find so little to surprise them in the golden streets.—David Grayson.

What Is Your Favorite Bit?

What is your favorite bit of poetry about nature? There is such a wealth of description of all the various phases of nature's phenomena that all tastes may be delighted.

Did you ever notice, for instance, how many lovely descriptions we have of the daybreak, and all so different? Would it not be interesting to have a "poem exchange" where we might divide our treasures one with another? Of course the extracts must be short, but it would add an interest if each would tell why her selection appeals to her, some incident attached, or some experience in which her soul had stirred to Nature's coaxing beauty.

How do you like this from Edwin Arnold's "Light of Asia"?

"... While o'er the waving fields that murmur moved
Which is the kiss of Morn waking the lands,
And in the east that miracle of day
Gathered and grew. At first a dusk so dim
Night seems still unaware of whispered dawn,
But soon—before the jungle-cock crows twice—
A white verge clear, a widening, brightening white,
High as the herald-star, which fades in floods
Of silver, warming into pale gold, caught
By topmost clouds, and flaming on their rims
To fervent golden glow, flushed from the brink
With saffron, scarlet, crimson, amethyst;
Whereat the sky burns splendid to the blue,
And, robed in raiment of glad light, the King
Of Life and Glory cometh!"

Or this legendary fragment from the same poem?

"... The daylight lingered past its time
In rose-leaf radiance on the watching peaks,
So that it seemed Night listened in the glens
And Noon upon the mountains; yea, they write
The evening stood between them like some maid
Celestial, love-struck, rapt; the smooth-rolled clouds
Her braided hair; the studded stars the pearls
And diamonds of her coronal; the moon
Her forehead-jewel, and the deepening dark
Her woven garments; while her close-held breath Came in scented sighs across the lawns."

From the Heart of a Plain Country Woman

"Wrapped in a peaceful stillness Nature lies
As if, while gazing on the quiet skies,
She had looked past their depths and met God's eyes,
And in that gaze grown calm."

How glorious is Jessica Woods this morning! I have been standing by my little French window washing dishes and feasting my soul upon the matchless splendor of the trees against their background of sky—sky as blue, as blue—oh, I do not know of anything as blue as the blue of my sky to-day!

Within a week's time the frost fairies have transformed the trees into Indian princes clothed in gorgeous robes of red, yellow, and russet. The fields, shorn of their wealth of silver and gold, lay bare and unsightly save where the "merry little breezes" whisk the fallen leaves, in a last jolly frolic, in and out, hide and seek, among the stubble.

You know that exquisite little poem of Joyce Kilmer's:

"I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree—
A tree that looks to God all day
And lifts its leafy arms to pray.

"Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree!"

Is it possible, sister of mine, that this wonderful Creator of all that is lovely and fair and good, of the mountains and trees, of you and me, and the seasons and the years of life—is it possible that he meant the frosts of disappointment and pain in our little span of experience to make us as wondrously mature and glorious?

Little sister, you know that never a leaf falls but that there remains in its place a tiny seed baby that shall live through all the winter's cold and snow, and in springtime clothe the naked tree again in beauty! May it not be that when wintry blasts shall strike from us those things that made our lives fair and beautiful, there shall remain in their places seeds of good that shall grow into things of true worth and loveliness in the world?

True Heart Culture on the Farm

Why the harrowing picture of the life of a farm woman, as told in this department October 11?

The greater part of my life having been spent in various rural communities, I have a fund of memories of country homes comparing favorably with more recent observations in suburban surroundings.

I admit the lack of opportunity in many country places for culture of the head, but a better thing—culture of the heart—is not prevented thereby, and hard-working country women as surely know the joy of service to others as do their city sisters who do their good deeds according to by-laws and constitutions.

I have no knowledge whatever of farmers' wives being tied to their work year in and year out without opportunity for friendly sociability. They do visit—not by vote at stated periods regardless of the inconvenience occasioned in the family life, but just long afternoon visits when the heart chances to yearn for a friend and is running over with joys or sorrows to be confided to those who really care to know; or, when the need demands, to ask advice from one long known and trusted. That is a "relief and service" meeting in very deed, the good extended is meat in due season, and the satisfaction far outshines the much-talked-of "men's chats in the country store or post office," which are always alluded to as a selfish advantage on the husband's part, who much more rarely takes a whole afternoon to visit in.

We would advise as a substitute for that heart-warming in a farm kitchen an untimely lesson among half strangers on "preparation of meals," all taken from a book written by some one who never in the world cooked for a farm crew and knows absolutely nothing of how much their appetites demand?

Besides several similar experiences, I listened only recently to a specialist in her line teach (?) an audience of farm women the science of home keeping; and as she gave opportunity for them to discuss the points she introduced from her text, she was bewildered at the real situation confronting them. It was astonishing to see how little the lecturer (a city resident) knew of the time required to prepare a succession of substantial meals for farm hands, the variety of food necessary, especially for breakfast, the time needed to do up the morning work, the complication of making out a budget for a farm home, and the impossibility of having regular hours for study and recreation.

Those country men and women had planned and carried on their work far more systematically and successfully—considering their means—than this bookish woman could have done.

A farmer's family to work advantageously must work together. In a busy season no helpful, sensible wife will expect her husband to quit work or let a team quit to take her to a meeting to discuss "home decoration," etc. And even in the less busy season, certain important farm work will often interfere with any program the wife can make.

This does not mean that the man's affairs deserve first consideration, but the good of the family requires that common sense shall rule in getting the most worth-while matters attended to at the right time.

Then in considering the purchase of machinery and household conveniences: the young husband and wife perhaps are trying to raise money to pay for their home or to do some desired building or house furnishing. The wife as well as the husband knows that one way to secure the money is to get more farm work done in a quicker way, and certain pieces of machinery will accomplish their purpose. They know a power washing machine is desirable, but it will be an expense instead of a money maker so is dispensed with at the time and the machine bought instead. It isn't merely to make the man's work easier but to profit them both.

When children come, more money is needed; more machinery perhaps will yield it. The woman wants the money as much as does her husband, consequently forgoes the cistern a while longer in favor of the money producer. She might demand the conveniences, but often gets more satisfaction in seeing a debt canceled.

I have seen many contented wives on farms without modern improvements, though doubtless hopes of better things kept them contented. The housework, I grant, is extremely hard, but a summer evening on the farm finds also a weary husband who has worked from 4.30 in the morning to 8.30 at night. I know positively that in spite of his labor savers it is not uncommon for the farmer to be more tired than is his wife; and the wife, knowing it, is often glad when her work permits to spend several hours a day helping outside.

I have not attempted to suggest how our Women's Department can help Latter Day Saint women more than it is doing to make life broader, safer, and happier on the farm. I only felt prompted to jot down a few of the proofs that it is already less dreadful than some city people realize, and that there is more reasoning and sensible planning being done between farmers and their wives than they get credit for.

Their time for study is surely limited, and regular class work of any kind next to impossible, but they do read the home columns in their farm papers and try out the advice; and I am confident there is a larger percentage of Latter Day Saint women from rural homes reading this department than there are from the large branches. They may be slow to write and tell you so, but you are already reaching them and help them.

Women's Classes in Sunday School

During my limited travels around among the various Sunday schools of the church, I have noticed several women's classes. We should like to suggest to the superintendents of Sunday schools and to the teachers of these women's classes that we believe that one of the best subjects for these classes to study is that of teaching religion to children.

I can suggest several good books for such classes to use: Mumford: The Dawn of Religion in the Mind of the Child, $1.35.

Betts: How to Teach Religion, $1.35.

Moxcey: Girlhood and Character, $2.10.

Cope: Religious Education in the Family, $1.65.

Cope: Parent and Child, $1.60.

Forbush: Child Study and Child Training, $1.60.

Hartshorn: Childhood and Character, $2.10.

Several other good books can be suggested upon request. Any of the books above mentioned would make good texts.

The first book mentioned, by Mumford, is a very good book on teaching prayer and the consciousness of God to children under eight years of age.

The book by Moxcey on Girlhood and Character treats of the religious education of girls from twelve to twenty-one years of age.

The book by Forbush has been outlined by Sister Maude Peak Parham in the recent numbers of the HERALD under the auspices of the Women's Department.

Some superintendents may feel that putting such work in the Sunday school is an encroachment upon the Women's Department. The Women's Department will not feel so and will rejoice with us if such work is put in the Sunday school. Of course, if such work can be studied at another hour than the Sunday school, well and good—have it so. There is no doubt, however, that in many cases the women can meet only on Sunday morning or even perhaps during the Religio hour. In this latter case, I am sure the Religio authorities would welcome such a study during the Religio hour.

We feel that in general such studies are worth much more to our church and to the final accomplishment of our Zionie program than is oftentimes the study of the technical points of doctrine found in the Doctrine and Covenants. We would make clear that we are not by any means trying to displace the Doctrine and Covenants, for we consider the content of that book of extreme value in accomplishing our church ideals, but we do feel that there is a great need for the women of our church to study the question of how to teach religion to our children.

The religious instruction of children is mainly a function of the parent, for the church has the child in its schools only a few hours a week, perhaps an hour at the Sunday school and another at Religio, and in some branches a special hour set aside during the preaching hour at eleven o'clock, as is now practiced in Independence and Lamoni. Taken all together it cannot, and should not, be considered enough time for this all-important task.

A. M. CARMICHAEL,

General Superintendent of Sunday School Department.

[We are glad to send this constructive message out through our columns, for it coincides closely with our views in the matter. Women's time is limited and the all too rare moments for study should be utilized for subjects of most vital importance.—A. A.]

LETTERS AND NEWS

A General Church Officer Who Knows Not Ease or Luxury

He believes there is no occasion for concern over this part of our problem.

In a current number of the HERALD there appears a letter which states quite frankly that the general officers of the church must not expect to live in ease and luxury while others are living in poverty and want. My purpose in writing is not to slam back at the author, because his statement is obviously true. The revelation of some years ago admonished us to repress "unnecessary wants"; I hold that the advice and counsel are still timely.

As a matter of fact, however, some people are likely to draw the inference from the letter, and, to be plain, have already drawn the inference, that the general church officers are living in wasteful extravagance, quite indifferent to the blood and sweat of their constituency. Rumors to that effect have been circulated in various quarters. Since the thing has been dragged into public it puts every general church officer under suspicion, and almost compels a discussion of personal matters that otherwise would be esteemed sacred. It may be, however, that at this time an exhibition of what might be called a cross section from the life of one church official will be beneficial to some readers. I take it that all that I have done others are quite willing to do, and perhaps more, and that my state of mind is quite generally the state of mind of general church officers.

I am living in a modern home in Independence. We have occupied it now for three years. I may say, however, that it is the first time in my twenty-five years ministerial experience that I have been able to give my family the conveniences of a house containing a bath, furnace heat, etc. This house was purchased at a moderate price, and a very small sum of general church money went into it. Almost entirely it was paid for, so far as it is clear, with property accumulated before I entered the ministry. It is a comfortable house, though the paper in every room is broken and discolored and has not been replaced for five years. It is adequate, but not in excess of that which I conscientiously believe to be my needs and just wants. It may be better than the houses that some Saints occupy, but not nearly so expensive and fine as are occupied by many others of the church members.

This winter in order to avoid calling upon the Bishop for money to purchase a new suit, I am wearing a summer suit purchased in 1916. However, the suit is still comfortable and presentable so I am not complaining. I am wearing an overcoat purchased for me by Bishop Kelley some years before he retired from office. I am wearing shoes that have seen service during three winters, if shoes may be said to see anything. They have their fourth pair of half soles, but are still rendering whole-souled service, so why should I worry? My wife darns my socks and sometimes my underclothes until they look like a map of the new Europe with Bolshevism in the ascendancy, but fortunately men's style of outer garments covers these things. For every economy that I have practiced my wife has practiced two.

Sometimes the so-called luxuries present more of a problem than the so-called necessities. I consider books, magazines, pictures, and music a legitimate part of a man's preparation for his ministry, but in these things, too, have tried to be conservative.

I have not written the foregoing lines in the spirit of complaint or criticism upon the church. I have been happy in my ministry excepting as it has been clouded by reflecting upon the spirit of bickering and quarreling occasionally manifest here and there throughout the church, which is worse in effect upon the Saints than the present financial stringency. I have not attempted to catalog sacrifices, as I do not feel that I have made any worth cataloging, the blessings so far exceed the sacrifices.

It may be that there are some minor contributing causes to the present financial stringency in the church, but these sink into insignificance by comparison with the one great cause. And that is not found in any mistake made by the Bishopric or in waste of funds foolishly and wickedly by general church officers, but rather in the present world-wide depression that strikes nearly all institutions, particularly those of a charitable or religious nature that depend upon voluntary contributions; that has ruined many farmers and impoverished many wage earners.

There is no question that the Lord intends this work to be established by economy and the repression of individual wants. There are two extremes here, however. One may find it difficult to deny any want while another is too rigorous. Bishop Hilliard used to say that he had never ridden in a sleeping car or eaten in a dining car. But if a man is not rugged or has a long trip to make or is pressed for time, it may pay very well for him to eat and sleep on his journey so that he may do his work without interruption. Even the old-time slaveholders considered it economy to keep their negroes in good condition for their work. A man who is half dead from fatigue is not a very good preacher or executive. Spurgeon at one time made a reservation for the night while a companion sat up and boasted, "See what good care I take of the Lord's money." Spurgeon replied, "I find it necessary sometimes to take good care of the Lord's man."

At this time all will do well to practice intelligent economy in conserving the Lord's money but not to the too great detriment of the Lord's men.

Pastoral Responsibility to the Missionary

The needs of the missionary should be given official pastoral attention.

Unity is the great force in the accomplishment of any work. The higher the organization the more need of united effort. Zion demands unity of service for all, teamwork in all departments.

There are two great divisions of church work: Pastoral and missionary. The one cannot exist without the other. There must be unity of purpose and understanding if the maximum of results is to be attained with the least expenditure. In every branch and district there needs to be a live officer, for the branch that is dead to missionary work is dead indeed. The very spirit of the Christ message is, When you have found the Christ, tell another.

That Spirit is best exemplified in the ready sacrifice of our missionaries to leave home and all that is dear to them and take the message of hope and cheer into every part of the earth. Surely they are setting forth the Christ life. Many of these men left good positions and were well able to take their places in the business world. They placed their lives on the altar of sacrifice and trusted in the word of God. "In the hour you need, it shall be granted unto you." Likewise, "By this you shall know my disciples, if they feed you, clothe you, and give you money." How do the pastor and his flock measure up to this test of discipleship? If not, who is to blame? Largely the president of the branch. He should see that his flock understand the true situation. Call to their attention that the missionary must be fed, clothed, and have ready money for traveling. I am satisfied that in the majority of cases the Saints will readily respond to every just need. But the president must take the lead.

Wake up, you presidents; then the Bishop won't have to spend upwards of fifty thousand dollars or more every year on elders' expenses.

My observation has been that money thus collected would not have found its way into the coffers of the church as tithes and offerings. So by thus giving you are not lessening the tithing fund.

Some have urged the objection that it will spoil the missionary if you give him too much money. So they would like to have a part in saving his soul and their own pocketbook. They will give him a hearty handshake but no money.

However, care should be taken not to embarrass the missionary by public announcements made in such a way as to be practically humiliating.

We have a great many branches in the rural parts of the country. Wouldn't it please the missionary and his self-sacrificing wife if they clubbed together and sent them their winter's supply of butter, vegetables, etc.? They would never miss it, and I am sure that God would bless for the manifestation of unselfishness. Then when all is done we are not beginning to make the sacrifice the missionary is making.

Branch presidents, Saints, and friends, think upon these things and prove our worthiness of discipleship.

CHARLES HANNAH.

One of Canada's Oldest Missionaries

A faithful laborer gone to his well-earned reward.

On Saturday, December 17, 1921, there passed to the great beyond one of Canada's oldest missionaries, in the person of Elder Samuel Brown. He died as he had lived, firm in the restored gospel, never tiring in telling of the plan of salvation to man.

Brother Brown joined the church at Carlingford, Ontario, Canada, in 1879, being baptized by Elder Joseph Luff, who in company with Elder John Shippy conducted a series of meetings at the home of a Brother Hartnell who had recently rented a farm and moved into that section of country. But the Hartnells were not permitted to remain long, as persecution soon raged. However, the seed had been sown, and it fell on some good ground at least, and as a result hundreds have been brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Brother Brown was ordained to the office of elder the same year and made president of the Carlingford Branch, and had much persecution both from relatives and friends, but he was convinced of the truth in which he was enlisted, and he chose to serve God rather than man.

At the time of his baptism, or just before, his mother's opposition was broken down in the following manner; She saw the wagons coming, and she commenced to weep and say that the Mormons were going to lead her son away. She heard a voice say, "Woman, why weepest thou? He is as my servant Samuel of old, a chosen vessel unto me." She then and there resolved to investigate for herself, which she did, and as a result she, her husband, and an older daughter were baptized a few days later.

He took his first missionary trip in company with Columbus Scott and J. A. MacIntosh the following year, and participated in the organization of the original London District, which conference was presided over by Joseph Smith and W. H. Kelley. At this conference he met R. C. Evans and George Harrington for the first time.

In 1883 he married Sister Emily Miller, of Blenheim, also a member of the old Buckhorn Branch. They made their home at Saint Marys, Ontario, where Robert Brown, his father, bought and presented to the branch the edifice that now stands. From there they moved to Blenheim, Ontario, he devoting his entire time to missionary work. They remained there until circumstances made it impossible for them to continue living in town and he remain in the mission field, as they were only getting (when they got it) ten dollars a month. Sister Brown had broken her health down weaving in order to keep the home, as it was the farthest from her heart to ever be the means of calling her companion from the field, a thing that she never did. So in April, 1896, they with the four children moved to a woods farm in Tilbury East Township, Kent County.

In 1897, because of troubles that existed in the Canadian Mission, he left off active missionary work, doing all he could in a local way, however; and soon what was known as the Stevenson Branch was organized, over which he presided until 1906 when he again entered the mission field, being assigned to New York State. In the years that followed he labored in Scranton, West Virginia, Virginia, and Ohio. In 1915 he again left off active missionary work, as the burdens of the home were left for him to bear alone, his ever faithful and patient helper having laid down the armor on April 7, 1915, and left for her well-earned reward.

From that time until his death he remained on the farm, doing what he could to assist the work, although in failing health. It was his one great pleasure to tell the gospel story to the children of men.

He was permitted to see the realization of his great desire that his sons should all occupy in the priesthood and assist in carrying the gospel to the children of men, his eldest son, J. Leslie, being an elder, and president of the Windsor, Ontario, Branch for a number of years; Robert T., a member of the First Quorum of Seventy and recently returned from a mission to the Society Islands; S. Gordon, a priest; and A. Fred, a teacher.

He himself was a member of the Second Quorum of Seventy for years, which office he held until his death.

He has suffered for the last two years from an affliction known as pernicious anæmia, which on the 17th of December claimed his life. His only source of help was in administration, and he was often blessed and comforted through the same.

While he was waiting and praying for the return of his son Robert, he was visited by his father in the gospel, Joseph Luff, also a son in the gospel, John McKenzie. He was administered to, and in his own words it seemed as if the very heavens were opened. He was often remembered by those whom he had assisted during his ministrations, both by letter and in person. The Chatham District in conference session kindly remembered him with a well-worded letter and a bouquet of flowers.

He was well known and respected in the community in which he lived, and has held a number of trusted positions. The church will miss him, but we feel that he has finished his course and has kept the faith, therefore his reward is sure.

At the time Elder John Shields entered the church Elder Brown and Elder J. A. MacIntosh were the only two missionaries in the Dominion of Canada.

Brother Peter Laurie writes to protest against the tendency to use the Mr. and Mrs. in address rather than Brother and Sister. To his way of thinking, we lose considerable in the change and cannot afford to do it.

Apostle McConley in Australia

Is welcomed in the land of the Southern Cross.

First Presidency: Elder J. W. Davis and wife arrived in Honolulu on the S. S. Ventura on November 14, but instead of continuing their journey on that ship, they had arranged to take a month's layover. We have arranged to continue the mission conference program a day longer, so he will get in a day and a half at the conference, provided his boat arrives on schedule on the 27th inst. I know they will enjoy their visit in the Hawaiian Mission and trust much good will be done by it.

Brother and Sister Davis and a large crowd of Saints were at the wharf to see us off at 4 p. m., November 14, and as we pulled out of Honolulu harbor it was with a feeling of regret that we could not remain longer, yet with thankful hearts that we had been permitted to return at least for a short while and renew acquaintance with those whom we had learned to love in our former labors in the Hawaiian Mission. I did not feel that I was bidding them good-by forever and think I will yet have something to do with that mission.

Leaving Honolulu, there were five Catholic priests in the first-class quarters and nine Brighamites, one Pentecostal, one Quaker, and I in the second cabin. The Catholics held mass the two Sundays we were at sea at 7 a. m. and both Sundays I preached to a good crowd of passengers in the first cabin saloon at 10.30 a. m. We made quite a number of friends for the work and distributed tracts wherever wisdom seemed to direct.

The first Saturday afternoon I arranged with the elder in charge of the Brighamites to give me the privilege of presenting to them the claims of the Reorganization, after which they asked several questions. The next afternoon, they answered me and gave me the privilege of asking questions. I think that good was done and a very friendly feeling was entertained throughout the discussions. They surely have more respect for our work than they had before.

We stopped four hours at Pago Pago, Samoa, on Monday, the 21st, and four of the Brighamite missionaries left the ship there. They claim to have a following of almost three thousand in that mission. We visited the native village on the outskirts of Pago Pago and visited the Mormon headquarters there. They have schools in each island and are well spoken of by those who have visited Samoa, whom I have met.

On Wednesday night, November 23, we crossed the international date line and the next morning was Friday. This was going to cheat us out of having any Thanksgiving, so the captain had the Thanksgiving dinner served on Wednesday. We had turkey, cranberry sauce, and all the trimmings. I hope all the brethren fared as well.

It was very hot for two or three days in the equatorial belt, and we were all quite happy when we began to enter the South Temperate Zone.

We arrived in Sydney about 7 a. m., November 29. After passing the doctor, the immigration officials, and the police, we were at last landed to run the gantlet of the customs inspectors. It was close to 11 a. m. when we finally were free.

Brethren Haworth, Lewis, and Corbett, with many of the brethren and sisters, were there to welcome us to the shores of Australia, and in the evening there was a joint mission reception under the auspices of the Balmain and Leichhardt Branches. A very strong fraternal tie was manifest.

The program for the mission conference is practically all ready. I will remain in Sydney over Sunday, and next Tuesday will go to Newcastle to assist the brethren in their big campaign which is on there.

Received letter of welcome to-day from Brother C. A. Butterworth. He says his health is such that he can do no ministerial work, but thinks he is improving.

Praying that the Lord may bless this field and with kind regards and best wishes to all the council,

Sincerely yours,
MYRON A. MCCONLEY.

Sunday School Work in Zion

A meeting to which all the Sunday-school teachers in Zion were invited was addressed on the evening of January 3 by A. Max Carmichael, superintendent of the general Sunday School Department. He emphasized clarity of aim as an essential in all our educational work and suggested as one prime necessity the development of the prayer life of the child.

He explained that in the big problem before the Sunday school of revision of present Quarterlies or writing of new ones for class work, several years must elapse ere we can hope for any material results. There has been an insistent demand for teachers' helps, more illustrations, and supplemental material, but this is not feasible for courses that are apt to be changed within a short time.

Brother Carmichael desires to eliminate guessing so far as possible in providing the material and making the appeals to the various ages. To this end he is asking a few teachers in Lamoni and Independence and some other places to keep a careful record on blanks provided, of the expressions and ideas and conceptions of one or more children in their classes as a cross section of the child's life. With such records in hand for a year or two years, it will furnish information that will be invaluable in building a course for the kind of children represented.

Sunday school work in Zion is under the direct supervision of Albert N. Sanford, who is also superintendent of the Stone Church school, the largest in the church. The other schools are all well attended, the constant ingathering of the Saints tending to automatically provide a good attendance, probably to the neglect of many who find it easy to absent themselves from the service when it is probable that the absence will not be noted.

In some cases the pastor makes a nomination for superintendent, and the elected superintendent with him nominates a list of the subordinate officers. This is a method increasing in favor as good results are seen to accrue.

Those in charge of the various schools for the coming year are: Albert L. Sanford, Stone Church; E. D. Moore, Second Independence; Gland Smith, Walnut Park; Robert Whitsett, Enoch Hill; Louis Resch, North Liberty; Corliss I. McConnell, Englewood.

Movements are on foot looking to the production of some distinctively Latter Day Saint material for use in Children's Day and Christmas programs in the Sunday schools. This side of the school work is important and deserves this attention, and we hope that from the results of this effort others throughout the church may benefit.

A letter from the Zion's Hope Sunday school at Jamesport, Missouri, speaks of their happy time together Christmas Eve. They have an enrollment now of twenty and feel that they are progressing and gaining spiritual strength from the lesson studies.

MOORHEAD, IOWA, December 20, 1921.

Editors Herald: As the old year is closing up its work, we are looking back to see the accomplishments of this branch of the Lord's vineyard. We feel that it has been favored with a goodly number of the leading brethren of the church, most of whom have been mentioned in previous letters. However, we would not forget in this letter to mention Apostle M. A. McConley, with his short stay of one day with us, rendering good service to the branch by his timely advice and counsel as well as physical labor in helping the writer haul straw in the morning. He seemed to consider this a sort of recreation, but the writer feels different about such work, as he has plenty of it to do. However we enjoyed the time that we were permitted to labor together, both in temporal and spiritual things, and hope to be permitted to meet again.

We feel that this branch has made good progress during the year, and trust that it may continue and even progress more in the coming year, its record for this year being a gain of fifty-eight by baptism.

I note in Brother Daniel Macgregor's letter as published in the HERALD for November 22, relative to the work of Clark Braden at Moorhead wherein he states that Mr. Braden was left unanswered. This is a mistake; Brother Macgregor must have been misinformed in regard to it, and I feel that it should be corrected, as it is not doing justice to the brethren in charge of the branch at that time.

I have not the date of the year when Mr. Braden was here, hence I cannot just state who had charge of the branch at that time, but if memory serves me right, it was Brother R. A. Ballantyne, now of Lamoni. However, I well remember of Mr. Braden being here both at the time of which Brother Macgregor mentions, as well as about ten years previous when he made a like visit to this place. On that occasion he was met in a public discussion by Brother J. F. Mintun who successfully defended the church, and Brother J. F. McDowell served as Brother Mintun's moderator. This discussion was held at Preparation, which is near Moorhead. Moorhead at that time did not have a building suitable in size to accommodate such a large audience.

Regarding Mr. Braden's last visit as mentioned in HERALD for November 22, Brother J. F. McDowell at once appeared in Moorhead and attended the meetings of Mr. Braden which were being held in the Christian church. At the first meeting that Brother McDowell attended he asked permission at the close of the service to speak, whereupon Mr. Braden, shaking his fist at him, demanded that he sit down and shut his mouth.

Brother McDowell answered that he was not going to do so and proceeded to announce that as there was not Christian freedom in the Christian Church to defend an innocent people against such slanderous attacks as were being made by Mr. Braden that we would proceed to the Latter Day Saint church across the street where he would answer.

In a few minutes the building was filled to its capacity and many were standing outside at the windows trying to hear the noble defense of the truth which was very successfully made by our brother. This was repeated night after night and the people were left without an excuse, and judging from the applause that he met the people approved of Brother McDowell's defense.

We feel to mention these incidents that the public may know that the Saints at Moorhead have not allowed the work to suffer by such attacks as were made by Mr. Braden. At this time Brother McDowell also sought opportunity to have Mr. Braden meet him in public discussion, which was refused.

We hope by careful labor upon the part of the officials of this branch and the faithfulness of the members in general that others who became interested in the recent meetings that were held by Brother Macgregor will be gathered into the fold in the future.

Wishing you all a happy New Year, MARK JENSEN.

Far West Stake

The addresses of President Frederick M. Smith, at Stewartsville, Maple Grove, and Cameron, where recently he presented the subject of stewardships, were heard by large and intensely interested assemblies of the people of the stake. President Smith's vigorous presentations carry force and conviction. Good results are anticipated. The Saints are pleased, always, to hear the President. He is expected to visit the stake again at no distant date.

Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith was with the First Branch in Saint Joseph on Sunday, December 18. Large audiences heard two valuable discourses with much pleasure and profit. Come again, Brother Smith.

Brethren R. D. Weaver and J. A. Koehler held a very interesting series of services in the Second Saint Joseph Branch preceding the holiday season. Attendance was large, many at times unable to gain admission. The branch named has reported this meeting more fully.

Brother Weaver followed that effort with a week of meetings at Fortescue, a point north of Saint Joseph. He will begin a series at Stewartsville, January 8. His work is well received by Saints and nonmembers.

Those desiring special revival or missionary efforts should notify the stake presidency, that arrangements for speakers may be made without conflict or delay. Any knowing of places where special missionary openings are available or may be made, should also so notify, that such be provided for. When we have men ready we desire to use them to best advantage.

Bishop Koehler is to begin a special series of meetings at Cameron on or about January 17. Brother Koehler is available for his special department service, also for general service, and branches would do well to secure him. He is experienced and able to meet demands.

Brethren F. M. McDowell and A. M. Carmichael, heads of the Boy Movement and the Department of the Sunday School, respectively, were with the First Saint Joseph Branch Saturday evening and all day Sunday, January 7 and 8. The program of addresses and round tables covering religious study and teaching, and recreational activities, were well arranged and competently presented. Our department workers were benefited by this series of educational efforts.

The stake presidency is making an effort to introduce a systematic, uniform course of study for the local ministry of the stake. Outlines for use of branch presidents will be prepared. It is expected to have the course ready to begin the work in the month of February. The plan provides for two or more Sunday afternoons per month devoted to combined teaching, study, and lecture work, those attending to copy outlines and take necessary notes; the president of each branch, assisted by such as may help him, to be the teacher; other instructors to be supplied at times by stake officers.

The law of God provides for a devoted, well-qualified "standing ministry." Such provision was made in ancient times, and such was provided for in this dispensation, in the gathering of the church to Kirtland, in the thirties. Such work of preparation was specifically commanded and was taken up by Joseph Smith and his associates. Kirtland became known as a seat of special religious education, while in an earlier day it was a center of secular education. By command of God the ministry sought learning "by study and by faith," and their efforts to prepare themselves were crowned by special spiritual endowment. We believe that such effort to qualify should be made, by men individually, and by collective, systematic effort, as indicated above; also that it should be first, a study of the revealed word, accompanied by other and necessary branches of general knowledge. We are training men and women for public school work, for other professions, also for teaching in our own department work. Shall we do less with our ministry and expect satisfactory results? We must begin and develop our plans and in due time make the course reasonably complete.

We suggest that where possible, department teachers and workers, and all members who are interested in qualifying for larger understanding and better service, be provided opportunity for special study and training. The study movement is a universal movement, and doubtless will reach ultimately every branch and every group in the church.

Council Bluffs Items

When the series of services held here by Apostle Curtis concluded there were forty-three added to the church, many of whom were adults. The seed had been sown by many others in the hearts of many of those baptized, but some had heard but little till the beginning of these services. Besides the good resulting of those added to the church many of those who were already members were encouraged and strengthened spiritually. Brother Curtis stopped on his way to Woodbine to begin a series of meetings this week, and gave the last sermon of the district conference held here. The district conference began Wednesday evening with a musical concert, and a lecture to the priesthood and continued till Sunday evening. Not a large attendance, but a peaceful and pleasant conference. The officials of the district and its various departments were elected, and I believe that nearly all the old officials were reelected.

Several changes have been made in the district and city work. The branch has been divided up into ten groups for visiting purposes, and prayer meetings are to be held in each group in homes of the Saints, except the second Wednesday evening in each month.

The Women's Department is active; the Oriole circles and the Temple Builders are seeking to occupy in a more effectual way. What was called a pageant was presented on Friday night of the conference, and seemingly well received.

During the time of the conference seven more were baptized, mostly children of the Sunday schools. This makes fifty that have been added to the church here within the last eight weeks. The Sunday school has introduced a special class in Bible study composed of the late additions to the church.

An effort is being put into operation here to heed the request to economize in church and home work. The brethren take to the necessary minimizing of expenditures gracefully. All seem willing to turn their attention to the general fund, and if possible recover from the present indebtedness, and there seems to be faith that this will be accomplished in time, and we all hope and pray that it will.

The work of raising Christmas offering has been more of a task than in previous years, on account of the shortage of money, many being out of work, or if having produce to sell, could realize but little for it as compared with the last few years. But even though it was not expected that as much could be raised, yet there was special pleasure in what was raised because of the object for which it was to be used this year. The thought of assisting those who had spent their lives in the interest of the church stimulated the children to a zeal in giving.

We would not be justified in not mentioning the good done by Brethren C. E. Wight, in talking to the priesthood during the conference, and A. Max Carmichael in talking to the Sunday school workers. Brother Wight gave two sermons, both on stewardships, that have left an excellent impression.

Christmas Program at the Stone Church, Independence

A most pleasing and meritorious entertainment was furnished by the primary, intermediate, and junior departments of the Stone Church Sunday School on Christmas Eve. The upper auditorium was comfortably filled, and at 7.45 the 118 participants marched up from the lower auditorium, to a piano march played by Mrs. A. L. Sanford, to their respective places on the rostrum and completely filling the choir loft.

The sacred cantata, "At the sign of the star," was rendered in a most effectual and creditable manner, opening with a chorus by all the singers in splendid effect, responding to the shading by the director in a very pleasing way.

The singers then resolved into their several groups, typifying the American children and their friends, being dressed to represent the different nationalities, French, Italian, English, Belgian, Holland, and Swiss shepherds, each in turn coming to the front of the platform paying homage and worshiping at "the sign of the star" and carrying appropriate banners. The main theme of the opening chorus was an adaptation of Adeste Fidelis and the individual songs being partly transpositions of national and patriotic airs.

The entire program was unusually well rendered in detail, and the singing was good, all the different parts of the elaborate presentation moving and articulating into each other without hitch, and free from confusion. A vast amount of painstaking and patient work has been done in the training and drilling of the many singers, the preparation of the varied costumes, and marching of the various groups.

The production was under the immediate direction of Sister J. T. Westwood, the chorister of the lower auditorium, assisted by Miss Ruby Williamson, the superintendent of the primary department, and Sister A. L. Sanford.

This mention has been delayed by the serious illness in the family of the local correspondent.

Chetek, Wisconsin

A new year has dawned upon us and everyone is filled with enthusiasm for the coming year.

The following officers have been elected: P. L. Richardson, branch president; A. L. Whiteaker, counselor; F. A. Atwood, Sunday school superintendent; Marshall Shedd, Religion president.

At sacrament Sunday quite a large crowd was in attendance. Many good testimonies were borne. Roy Smith was ordained a priest. A. L. Whiteaker was the evening speaker.

The routine of our meetings is: Sunday, 9 a. m., young people's prayer meeting; 10 a. m., Sunday school; 11 o'clock, preaching; 7 p. m., congregational singing; 7.30, preaching; Wednesday night, prayer meeting; and Friday night, Religion. Priesthood meeting is held the first Tuesday night of every month; second Thursday night, Sunday school and Religion teachers' and officers' meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Colbert and Marshall Shedd attended the Minnesota conference at Minneapolis on Saturday and Sunday. They reported a good time.

Holden Stake

WARRENSBURG. Christmas was celebrated by exercises, during the Sunday school hour on Christmas morning, followed by a special prayer service at eleven o'clock. The children received their usual treat, and a fine Christmas spirit prevailed.

The marriage of Sister Hazel Johnson and Brother Francis M. Ball was solemnized at the church Christmas evening at six o'clock, Patriarch I. M. Smith officiating.

Brother Shoemaker was reelected superintendent of the Sunday school and Brother Edgar Ravell of the Religio.

A number of Warrensburg young people spent Thursday evening of Christmas week with the young people of Holden. A fine time is reported.

Our Religio gave a special program Friday evening in the way of a short play resulting in an unusually large attendance.

Our communion service on New Year's morning was spiritual and uplifting. Elder L. W. Fike was the speaker at the evening hour.

Our teacher training class is doing good work.

The Warrensburg Temple Builders sent a box of Christmas gifts to the Children's Home in Lamoni.

MARSHALL. We enjoyed a real lecture course, beginning December 18, on the history of Israel, Solomon's temple, and its holy significance, by Elder J. W. A. Bailey.

HOLDEN. The early morning young people's prayer meeting was well attended and very spiritual—a splendid beginning for the new year.

New teachers were appointed in the Sunday school, taking their places the first of the year along with the new officers. A greater willingness to serve was found by the different superintendents as they assisted the classes in selecting their teachers.

The sacrament service was the best in attendance and activity that we have experienced for some time.

The priesthood meeting in the afternoon was a very instructive one. In these meetings there is a fine opportunity to help each other in coming to a unity.

Brother W. S. Macrae was the speaker at the evening hour. Many expressions of approval were heard. Brother Macrae has a very pleasing way of presenting his subjects.

We are glad to announce that our pastor, Brother D. J. Krahl, is continuing to improve. While he has not entirely recovered, we are looking very hopefully to a complete restoration in the very near future.

Our young people held a reception in the church for the young folks of the stake, but on account of the distance of some of the groups and bad roads, only Warrensburg and Post Oak were represented. A splendid social time was had, resulting in a stronger feeling of love and fellowship for the members of the different groups.

The young people of the Holden group gathered at the home of Brother and Sister Jay Lycan Saturday night to watch the old year pass out and the new one enter. Games were played until about twenty minutes till twelve, when everyone joined in singing some well known songs, the last one being "Consecration." The Spirit of God was there, and when Brother F. A. McWethy offered prayer just as the year was passing, there was not a sound other than his voice, and every young person there was certainly impressed and will be able to carry out some of the good desires of his heart this coming year.

The stake office is in receipt of the program announcing the good things in store for those attending "Farmers' Week," Columbia, Missouri, January 17-20.

This Christmas season at the Holden Home has been the most cheerful and enjoyable of any experienced since the opening of this institution. The Saints and friends in various places who have sent such generous gifts for the benefit of our aged Saints should be given due credit for this Christmas spirit which has prevailed and brought joy to their hearts. In behalf of our aged folk we wish to express our gratitude and appreciation by giving honorable mention of those contributing so liberally to make their Christmas complete.

Those giving cash were Sister J. W. Stringer, Wichita Falls, Texas, $10; Mr. O. G. Boisseau, Holden, Missouri, $1. With this money all the dainties for Christmas dinner were bought. Christmas treats: Brother and Sister F. G. Pitt, Santa Ana, California, two pounds of English walnut meats; "Santa Claus," of California, one case of oranges; P. S. Raw & Son, of Kansas City, Missouri, one case of oranges; Brother A. C. Dempsey, Nevada, Missouri, thirty pounds of candy; Mr. J. A. Anderson, Albin, Wyoming, six pounds candy; "Santa Claus," of Holden, Missouri, twenty-five pounds of candy; Sister Clara Fleearty, Fairfield, Illinois, one box of pop corn. Meats: Brother and Sister Burton Barwise, Kingsville, Missouri, one fourth beef; members of the Post Oak Branch, eleven chickens; Ralph Baker, Holden, Missouri, thirteen rabbits; "Santa Claus," of Holden, Missouri, five chickens.

One quilt and second-hand clothing sent by Long Branch Ladies' Aid, California; one quilt by Alethea Circle of Orioles of Kirtland, Ohio; one bundle of second-hand clothing by Susan Hollibaugh, Greenville, Pennsylvania; one dozen white enamel trays equipped for serving sick folks, purchased by a member of the home who procured subscriptions from Saints and friends to pay for same.

ATHERTON. Two weeks ago Brother F. A. McWethy of the stake presidency was with us and delivered two very helpful and encouraging sermons at the morning and evening hours.

A very interesting priesthood meeting was held in the afternoon. On Monday evening a business meeting was held in which Brother McWethy presented the name of Brother George I. Hansen for pastor for the coming year. The nomination was accepted.

Brother Hansen has resided in this community for the past year, and we feel encouraged to have so able a local man for our pastor.

We are made sad to report the death of our beloved young sister, Pearl Kearns, on Christmas Eve. She had been in our midst only four months, but we all had learned to love her; were looking forward to the help she could give in behalf of the young, and were appreciative of her influence among them. Because of this sad bereavement our Christmas program was called off.

Brother Alvin Knisley preached our Christmas morning sermon, and indeed it was a feast to our souls.

Note to Our Correspondents

In the change which gives the HERALD the correspondence usually going to the Ensign, we have been handicapped in not having time to use all the items the week they would have otherwise appeared. But if our correspondents will mail items so they can reach us by Tuesday morning, they will ordinarily be used in the issue of the following Wednesday. This may require earlier mailing than usual, since we go to press a day earlier than the Ensign does.

EDITORS HERALD.

Kansas City Stake

(Last week's items.)

MALVERN HILL. On December 25 the services for the day were well attended. Bishop Blair was the speaker at 7.45. The Christmas program was rendered Christmas eve. On January 1, the speaker at 7.45 was F. J. Cleveland with a stereopticon lecture on Book of Mormon evidences.

GRANDVIEW. Lula M. Sandy met with a number of the ladies on December 21, and organized a study class which will meet at the various homes of the members. They meet next with Sister Ross Evans, 1852 Armstrong Avenue. Mrs. John Tucker will be the teacher.

A Christmas program was given Saturday evening by nine of our young people who acquitted themselves very creditably. The pastor, L. W. Hays, was the speaker at eleven on Christmas Day.

SECOND KANSAS CITY. Two were recently baptized. A varied program was rendered Christmas night and enjoyed by all.

A series of meetings will begin on Sunday, January 1, by Elder Amos T. Higdon and Apostle Paul M. Hanson, who was the speaker at 7.45, the first of our series. Several nonmembers were present.

MONTGALL. Sacramental services were well attended. New Year's Eve was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Sister McDermont where a good prayer meeting was enjoyed. A little girl was praying as the New Year was ushered in. We are expecting 1922 to be our banner year. Our Religio is held Thursday night. Brother Henry Davis is president.

At 7.45 Alvin Knisley preached the first sermon of a series of meetings that start here.

BENNINGTON. The special meetings closed a week ago and we are back to normal again with our group meetings and Religio. On last Friday night we elected officers for Sunday school and Religio. For superintendent of Sunday school, James Cleveland was elected, and for Religio, Elmer Curtis. The speaker of the evening was the pastor, Brother Selbe.

ARMOURDALE. Fine attendance at all the meetings for the week, and on Sunday eighty-one at Sunday school. Elder Charles May was the speaker at the 7.45 service.

Bisbee, Arizona

The Sunday school reelected F. M. Dearborn, superintendent. The Christmas offering to date amounts to about $98 for 1921. Some of the classes started the first day of the year by making contributions to the 1922 offering. The Religio elected Henry Goldie as superintendent.

Brother William Anderson and family, with two of their friends from Douglas, spent New Year's Day in Bisbee, and Brother Anderson preached a very appropriate discourse in the evening.

Sister Enyert, one of our new members, offered a very good testimony at the morning service in which she presented some New Year's resolutions which she hoped by the grace of God to be able to keep. One of her resolutions was that she would set aside light reading, and devote her reading hours to the study of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. She also resolved not to speak evil of others, and that if she could think of nothing good to say of a person, she would refrain from saying anything. If more Latter Day Saints would make this kind of resolutions and live up to them, much more effective work would be accomplished in trying to eliminate selfishness and ignorance, two of the greatest hindrances of the present age.

Spokane, Washington

The test of true religion was the subject of the New Year's morning discourse, using for my text James 1:26. The government of the tongue seems to have been James's test of true religion. How easy to splash mud with the tongue! Would it not be better to help a man keep his coat clean? The doctor looks at the tongue which indicates the physical condition of the body. So also is the tongue an indicator of the spiritual condition of the soul.

We enjoyed a very spiritual sacrament and social service in the afternoon. The Spirit present bore witness of God's divine recognition.

Brother Oscar Case was the speaker in the evening. His discourse was on the power and authority as given through the laying on of hands. It was a very able discourse as well as interesting.

The Sunday school reelected Rufus Smith as superintendent. This organization is progressing nicely.

The New Year was well started with a splendid interest at all services throughout the day.

Niagara Falls

First Presidency: You will, no doubt, be interested in a summary of 1921 work, and as regards Niagara Falls, New York, we feel we have had a good year. Numerically, the branch has increased about twenty, the majority being by baptism. The attendance has increased considerably at all meetings, and quite a number are investigating. The priesthood has made, we feel, very satisfactory progress and are doing good work. We now are making an effort to increase the tithes of the branch and have divided the membership among the priesthood, thus assisting the Bishop's agent. The response is quite encouraging.

Our prayer services, we believe, have almost doubled in attendance and interest. The departments are flourishing and growing, and the young people have had some excellent early morning prayer services, one each month, and sometimes twice, during the summer.

Elder G. W. Robley has given us excellent and, in fact, wonderful help despite the fact that he has such a large field for missionary work and is also district president. He truly is one of the big men in the church and also is a great student.

Our choir has made marked improvement and is now, we believe, second to none in the city. They rendered a cantata Sunday, Christmas night, and it was a decided success. It was entitled "The light of the world." The junior choir is also doing good work.

Our baseball team made quite a good showing during the summer, but we expect to have a stronger combination next year. We would advise the Toronto Latter Day Saint team to "get busy."

Elder Daniel Macgregor gave us three nights recently to a full house, even though he had no previous advertising. But he can certainly stir up things. It was like a reunion, however, as some of us first heard the message from him over twenty years ago when he was a boy near Arthur. May God continue to use him in such power.

President F. M. Smith made a good and forceful impression on our number when we met him recently at Buffalo, but we were not able to cause him to come with us to the Falls.

We saw the passing on into the great beyond during the year four of our number, Brother and Sister Faul, Brother Honsberger, and little Margaret Jacklin, and though these were caused to go, yet the Lord granted us many blessings and some miraculous healings.

The financial slump hit Niagara Falls quite hard, and when we think that our Christmas offering was raised entirely—"almost"—by donation, we feel that a little over two hundred dollars is very good.

The vision of the work here at the Falls looms up big for the next year, the possibilities for a great scope of work to be accomplished. We plan and hope to do it, as the right spirit appears to be moving the forces on to the issue; and thus we pray may the church move on, and we trust we can help.

Yours in bonds,

W. J. LANDES, Branch President.

Independence

Into the home of Elder R. J. Lambert, until recently associate or acting editor of the Ensign, has come almost suddenly the angel of death, taking away his son Harold, twenty-two years of age, the immediate cause of demise being after effects of scarlet fever. Death came on the 6th, and the mother, seriously ill from infection from caring for him, is in a precarious condition, while a younger son, Bruce, is also confined to his bed. Funeral services were held at the home on Sunday the 8th, with W. D. Bullard delivering the sermon. Brother Lambert and family have not only the sincere sympathy of those who know them personally but of many who have known and appreciated his work in a public way for the church.

The biggest event of many a day in the city of Zion has been the congregating of over five hundred men of the priesthood in the first meeting of the school for the elders, quite fully reported in the editorial columns of this issue. But important as it is, and portentous in meaning, it is greatly supplemented by the school spirit pervading the Saints in the community. Quorums are studying practical courses, Sunday school officers and teachers, Religio executives, Women's Department officials, special committees, are constantly meeting, each participant earnestly anxious that the most good may come from their efforts.

As will be noted in the sermon by Bishop B. R. McGuire in this issue, he recently attended an important conference at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, mingling with and listening to some of the most prominent financiers of the day. In his sermon are reflected some of the impressions he gathered at that time.

The quarterly conference of Zion met Monday evening, January 9, and went on record indorsing a recommendation of the First Presidency that a reunion be held in Independence or suburbs during the summer of 1922. Kansas City and Holden Stakes were invited to participate. A committee of three were authorized to be responsible for the details, and a committee of five chosen to seek out a permanent location, with a view of purchase later if thought advisable. The following were recommended for ordination and indorsed by conference action: William T. Gard, Amos Allen, Harry Blake, Charles Constance, priests; and Alma Tankard, teacher. The church statistician reported a net enrollment of 4,906 members in Zion, which includes 800 names of persons whose whereabouts are uncertain. P. G. Fairbanks resigned as secretary and Arthur Allen was chosen, which arrangement allows the records to be on file and accessible in the office of the pastor in Zion, since Brother Allen attends to the office routine in that department. The report of the pastor, R. V. Hopkins, indicated increasing harmony among the priesthood, there being over four hundred active in Zion. There are now thirty-eight groups, a new one having been recently organized in the Enoch Hill district. The report of Bishop Becker showed a considerable decrease in various deficits prevailing at the beginning of the year and he recommended that the present arrangement, of a collection being taken at the morning services in Zion be continued, which recommendation was indorsed. John W. Bailey was expelled on findings of a bishop's court.

The Independence Music Club, most of whose members are of our church, has arranged for a series of five very high grade concerts to be given in the junior high school auditorium, one each month throughout the winter. Artists of wide reputation have been engaged for the first four programs, and the artist members of the club itself will give the fifth concert in May. Any profits accruing from the series will be applied on the new concert grand piano which the club has placed at the Liberty Street church. Tickets and reservations are being sold at the Watkins Music Company Store.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium during the week ending December 31: Isabelle Gildehaus, Atchison, Kansas; H. M. Stumpe, Ruth Peterman, and Master Niegugge of Englewood; W. T. Shippy, Genoa, Colorado; Raymond Young, Lamoni, Iowa; Joseph E. Carr, Woodbine, Iowa; Miss Erma Owens, Mrs. Laura Elliott, W. O. Hands, and Glenn Hands of Kansas City, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Mrs. Rosa Spurlock, Arthur Daniel, jr., Gertrude Carlile, Hazel Brown, Sarah Chapman, Mrs. G. T. Twyman and Baby Twyman, and Mrs. Edna Rodgers. X-ray patients: Lela Ruckdeschel, Raytown, Missouri; C. Moore, Englewood, Missouri; James R. Clark, Buckner, Missouri; Mrs. W. R. Fisher, Mount Washington, Missouri; and Henry Witsette, Mrs. Harry Nihill, Geneva McGraw, Mrs. J. M. Painter, Mr. G. A. Green, and E. T. Atwell of Independence. Those entering for the week ending January 7, 1922, are: Mrs. Georgia Nickson and baby, Mount Washington, Missouri; Master John Barker, Pleasant Hill, Missouri; Mrs. Helen Hendrix and Miss Erma Owen, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Ethel Redfield, Knobnoster, Missouri; Mrs. Kate Goodwin, Raytown, Missouri; Chester Snow, Mr. E. G. Noll, Mrs. H. J. Matthews, Mrs. Bertha Friderichsen and baby Friderichsen, Carl Hoffman, Mr. G. R. Berry, Mrs. Olive Hattey, Mrs. Addie Brubaker, Miss Gertrude Carlile, and Mrs. Thirza Cochran, all of Independence. Patients for the X-ray were: James Chapman, Lee's Summit, Missouri; Miss Ollie Booker, Miss Carrie Russell, W. W. Twyman, and Mrs. Lulu Jepson, of Independence.

Saint Louis

A very pleasant surprise was the presence of our former pastor, Brother Clyde F. Ellis. All were happy to see him looking well and to learn he will stay a few weeks before going to his mission in the Islands.

On December 24 the Mite Society sent big baskets of provisions to certain families and decorative plants to the sick members, trying to insure that none of our members should lack Christmas cheer.

December 25, the Christmas spirit was carried out in the Sunday school service, our superintendent filling in vacancies where others were absent. The music was exceptionally good. The organ voluntary by Mrs. Walsand was a medley of Christmas airs; then the anthem, led in Brother Bell's most animated manner, formed a beautiful prelude to the Christmas sermon by Brother Archibald on the theme so old, yet ever new, "God so loved the world." The speaker brought out the thought that "not in force nor in physical power did the Savior of mankind excel," but in love and compassion for the creature man; encouraging our young people by the thought that a Christ character is a product of growth, and all have power to grow.

Two babies were blessed, and it seemed especially solemn and touching to see these little ones presented at the altar on the birthday of the One who took the children in his arms and blessed them.

The evening anthem was even more inspiring than in the morning—every part was so well sustained and the climax of "glory to God in the highest" must have inspired the speaker, Brother Ellis, for his sermon was fine and carried along the idea of the morning service to a practical conclusion. "How long does this Christmas spirit of good will to all men last in our daily lives? a day? a week?" We should strive and pray that it continue throughout the coming year. The character of the Christ stands supreme in all the world. There never was one like him before or since. Yet he achieved all by love, so that his influence is world-wide. No world, fame, or power ever achieved what his simple and unostentatious life of service and sacrifice achieved. "He spake as never man spake."

New Year's Day was so fine that many came to the sacrament service, and the new rule to close at twelve o'clock hardly gave time for all who wanted to speak; but it is a success because the early part of the meeting is not allowed to drag, but is kept moving, and the services close while all are interested and before interest begins to die. Any service that is allowed to drag does not cause people to want to come again. The gospel is a living issue and should appeal to the active spirit in man.

The evening sermon was a good one to begin the New Year and to encourage a peaceful spirit. Paul's letter to the Corinthians, especially that part about "Charity suffereth long and is kind," was a basis. If we can live up to that one sentence, there will be more evidence of holiness manifest than in spiritual dreams and gifts of the gospel; in short, those very gifts come from the abundance of charity that is necessary in order to think no evil, envy not, or to always rejoice in the truth. E. B.

All is going nicely in this branch of the church. Our meetings are well attended, and we are moving onward and upward. Nonmembers are always in attendance at our services, so we have to tell the gospel story in its purity. All the local ministry take their turns in presenting the word, so all are more or less busy.

Sunday, December 18, the writer was the speaker in the morning, and Apostle J. W. Rushton addressed the Saints in the evening. He was greeted by a houseful, many Saints coming from Oakland, where he spoke in the morning. We recently had Bishop Ingram preach for us at the morning service and Priest Fulton Hartsough occupied at the evening hour. It was his first attempt at preaching. He did very well and acquitted himself nicely.

We had our business meeting December 21, and adopted the coordination system and the budget system for future work of the branch. At the election of officers, Elder E. E. Hartsough was elected pastor for the year, Sister Ruth Thorman secretary.

The bazaar held by the sisters recently was a grand success socially and financially. The Christmas tree was a pleasant feature, and still decorates the church. The entertainment was enjoyed by all. GEORGE S. LINCOLN.

All Saints living in or near Hutchinson, Kansas, are asked to get in touch with Elder R. J. Wildey, 228 West Eighth Street, Hutchinson, Kansas.

Holden Stake

GRANDVIEW. Elder F. A. McWethy was with us December 4, and had charge of the communion service and preached for us in the evening.

Brother C. V. Hopkins delivered an address to the high school students recently.

Brethren Edgerton and Danforth are still preaching at Martin City on Sunday afternoon, and Brother Martin goes to the Pickering Farm each Sunday night.

Another year with all of its achievements and failures has gone into history. What has been written in that great book of "Life" kept in the archives of heaven of our past efforts? As a summary we find much to be thankful for. No serious sickness has visited our group; death's hand has not visited our number. Some Saints have moved in from other parts, and we have had a few baptisms. Our new church home has been occupied now for a year and many sacred gatherings have been held there. The departments of the church have indeed gained higher ground. The Sunday school, under L. E. Danforth, has grown from five classes to seven, fully organized in every particular. By advice of Stake Superintendent C. F. Scarcliff, the teacher training course was taken up, and one examination has been passed with much credit to all the students. The standard of excellence passed by the stake conference, which had been thought to be rather rigorous, was found to be not so bad after all, as the report to the stake secretary shows that our Sunday school has qualified on all ten points, making our school a first grade school, of which we are proud.

The Religio has made advancement under Brother C. Edgerton. We have four classes, two of young people. Several young people have been added to our number, and they are active and always ready to do their part.

The Women's Department have just made the last payment on the new piano that they purchased when we moved into the new church. The piano cost $150, and only eight or ten are interested in the Women's Department, so we feel that a few can accomplish much if they work together.

We are now entering upon a new year. C. V. Hopkins is our pastor again; E. W. Trimmer, Superintendent of the Sunday school; Charles Martin, superintendent of the Religio; and Sister Nellie Chipley, superintendent of Women's Department.

HOLDEN. W. S. Macrae delivered a fine sermon Sunday morning. At the young people's service in the evening, our young Brother M. L. Haney delivered the sermon. His subject, Faith, was nicely handled. At the conclusion of the service about fifty of the Saints, old and young, visited the home of our pastor, D. J. Krahl. They gathered in the front yard of his home and sang the songs which were so popular at the young people's meetings, after which the entire group filed by Brother Krahl's bed and shook hands with him. This little experience brought the happy smiles to our pastor's face.

Brother Kenneth Krahl, our wireless operator, had the pleasure of hearing the Independence radiophone musical program and sermon last Sunday evening. He said it was fine.

The Religio organized a Booster's and Pusher's club last Friday evening. The side which secures the greatest number of members by April 1, is to be the guests of the losing side at a luncheon.

Editor S. A. Burgess, of the HERALD staff, left Monday for a trip to Saint Louis, to be gone about two weeks.

Come that you may have a spiritual time of rejoicing and that the older ones may be benefited by your presence. It will assist the committee on entertainment if those coming will write beforehand to C. W. Keck. Edward Rannie, president.

Pastoral Notes

To the Saints of the Youngstown-Sharon District: Having been assigned to labor as a missionary in your district, I would like to get in touch with the Saints and become acquainted with your needs and wishes as to the opportunity of getting our work before the people of this district. Let me hear from you and let us work together for the upbuilding of the One Great Cause. Field address, James McConaughy, 1029 Owen Street, Youngstown, Ohio.

Requests for Prayers

Friends of Sister Bertha Perry, of Rockville, Missouri, request prayers in her behalf, her affliction being mental derangement. All interested are asked to observe Sunday, January 15, in fasting and prayer.

Our Departed Ones

WIGGINS.—Willis Wiggins was born November 1, 1846. He was a very exemplary man and the church loses a faithful member. Died November 27. Five sons, five daughters, with other relatives and many friends are left to mourn. Funeral at Pleasant Hill church. Sermon by W. J. Williamson.

BELLERS.—Georgia E. Sellers, wife of James Sellers, died October 26, at the age of forty-two. Her husband, three sons, six daughters, and many relatives and friends are left to mourn. Three times in dreams she was permitted to visit paradise where she begged to remain, but was told she must come back and stay awhile. Funeral sermon by W. J. Williamson.

PALMER.—Elma Fay, daughter of David S. and Minnie Palmer, of Tuff, Texas, was born October 11, 1911. Baptized August 3, 1921. Died at Bandera, Texas, December 21, where she was taken a few days before for medical treatment. Father, mother, and three brothers are left to mourn.

HAYWARD.—Velma Eliza, daughter of Joseph E. and Addie Hayward, was born near Pollock, Missouri, January 13, 1894. Baptized August 19, 1904. She was a sufferer for nearly three years, her affliction being caused by influenza. Died December 15 at Genoa, Colorado, where she had gone to regain her health. Remains brought back to Pollock, Missouri. Funeral from Liberty Union church by J. A. Tanner. Interment in the cemetery of this church. Father, mother, three brothers, three sisters, and other relatives are left to mourn.

KEARNS.—Pearl E. Kearns was born July 27, 1897, at Washington, Michigan. Baptized June 3, 1903. Died December 24, at Atherton, Missouri, after two weeks' illness. Funeral from the Stone Church at Independence, sermon by William Fligg. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery. Father, mother, three brothers, one sister, and a host of friends are left to mourn.

CAMPBELL.—Jane Black was born in Dumfries, Scotland, October 31, 1830. Married John Campbell in 1851 and with him emigrated to Canada, locating in Proton, Grey County, Ontario, in its early pioneer days. Baptized thirty-five years ago, and has been a staunch and consistent Latter Day Saint. Notwithstanding her great age of ninety-one years, her mental faculties were unimpaired and her bodily vigor was retained until two days before her death, when she became suddenly ill and died on November 24. Her husband and two children preceded her. Six sons, two daughters, nineteen grandchildren, and thirteen great-grandchildren are left to mourn. Funeral sermon by John H. Taylor.

SHERMAN.—Charles E. Sherman was born August 4, 1852, at Walcott, Wayne County, New York. Married Margaret A. Bell, December 7, 1875. Baptized August 27, 1878, and continued a faithful and devoted Saint. Died December 18. His wife, three daughters, two sons, and friends are left to mourn. Funeral sermon by A. Leverton.

JOHN.—Mary A. John was born April 10, 1865, in Wales. Came to America and was baptized February 8, 1892. Lived a consistent Latter Day Saint up to the time of her death, November 25, at Samaria, Idaho. Three boys, three girls, a father, and many friends are left to mourn. Funeral services in charge of E. E. Richards; sermon by Elder R. C. Chambers.

FUNDERBURGH.—John J. Funderburgh was born in Indiana, June 23, 1851. Married Susannah Akes, August 1, 1874. Baptized about thirty-five years ago. Died in Saint Joseph, Missouri, December 1. His wife, four sons, and three daughters are left. Three other children have preceded him. Sermon by E. F. Robertson; interment in Mount Auburn Cemetery.

LEWIS.—Mary, wife of Patriarch William Lewis, died at the age of seventy years, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. D. C. Kinnaman, Saint Joseph, Missouri, after many months of suffering caused by a cancerous condition of the liver. Baptized fifty-five years ago and lived a devoted life to the end. She accompanied her husband twice on a mission to Wales, besides upon various missions to different parts of the United States, including New York and Philadelphia and westward to the Rockies, making many sacrifices for the work's sake. Four sons and three daughters are left; her husband preceded her two years before. Funeral from Saint Joseph church; sermon by V. M. Goodrich, assisted by W. W. Scott.

WIND.—Mary H. Hansen was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, October 10, 1849. Married Peter H. Wind, April 19, 1868. Died at her home in Council Bluffs at the age of seventy-two. Her husband preceded her ten years before. Eight of their eleven children, with her three brothers and three sisters, mourn her departure. Baptized early in life, she continued faithful, always trying to tell the gospel story in word and deed. Funeral conducted by J. F. Curtis, assisted by J. F. Mintun.

ROSEWARREN.—Rebecca Rosewarren was born June 29, 1863, in Pattonsburg, Davis County, Missouri. Baptized June 10, 1874. Married John Rosewarren in 1882. To this union seven children were born, five boys and two girls. All were present at the funeral except one boy, who died when he was two years of age. Departed this life December 15, 1921, at Hardin, Missouri, Sanitarium, where she had undergone an operation six days previously. Funeral from the Central Church, Alma Branch, two miles south of Richmond, Missouri. She had donated the land on which the church was built. A faithful Saint. A large attendance at the funeral. Sermon by L. F. Ferguson. Interment in Sunny Slope Cemetery, Richmond; her grave not far from that of David Whitmer.

to make the HERALD of the greatest possible interest to our readers; hence will be pleased to receive suggestions and will be pleased to include such items as will be of interest to the church at large.

At the same time, with these news items, we hope to continue to give much space to work which is educational in a gospel sense, helping us to become informed and better prepared for the work lying before us.

Publishers' Announcement

With this issue of the SAINT'S HERALD and the current number of Zion's Ensign we have reached a point in our literary field long looked forward to by those who had to do with the shaping of ideals and carrying out of policies in our publication interests. Step by step the arrangements have been completed which allow a complete amalgamation of the publishing houses at Independence, and now we have reached the time when this coordination has allowed the fields of the periodicals to be more clearly defined.

The possibilities in the new arrangement are great, and we assure the Saints that in every possible way the business department will seek to make it possible for these two papers to function in their special fields.

Introductory Numbers

In order to introduce the new Ensign to HERALD subscribers who are not already on the Ensign list, we are mailing to them a copy of the first issue of the Ensign on the new basis, hoping it will be welcomed as a friend indeed in the missionary work that comes as a responsibility to each member. The editor hopes not only to help convert people to the gospel but to convert us as Saints to the necessity for doing efficient missionary work, no matter where we may be.

Quite naturally the editor prefers that you do not judge the new paper entirely by the one issue. As the days go by and he is able to create and collect material he will be able more nearly to approach his ideal. From a material viewpoint also the first few issues will not be fairly representative, as we are forced to use paper of a lighter weight than is desirable until we can get a supply of heavier stock.

To Ensign subscribers who are not on the HERALD list, we are sending this copy of the HERALD as an introductory number. The editors of the HERALD have not had opportunity as yet to complete arrangements to assimilate the new material coming to them in the change but expect to do so at once and make the paper invaluable to the Saints in informing and enthusing them over the internal aspects of the church. The HERALD will carry exclusively most of the church news, including the news from the various branches formerly carried in the Ensign, official notices, and important miscellaneous items.

In early numbers will appear large supplements containing the annual detailed reports of receipts and expenditures of the Presiding Bishopric and their agents, which will only be available to members through this source.

Several special numbers are issued each year. Already in hand is material for a British number, a Kansas City Stake number, and a Graphic Arts number, which issues will appear in due time.

Extension of Subscription

Ensign subscribers will note in a short time that their wrapper labels have been changed to extend the time of their expiration of subscription on the basis of one half of the remaining unpaid subscription. This because we have reduced the price to $1 a year. For instance, if a year's subscription is now due the subscriber, his time will be extended to eighteen months. If for any reason we fail to do this, kindly notify us.

Lowering Prices

We want very much to lower the prices of our periodicals, but there is only one way that we know of whereby it can be done: i. e., a material increase of subscription list. After a certain point is reached in the publication of any paper, the production cost is lowered very rapidly. If the Saints will respond, as we have reason to believe they would if they appreciated the situation, we should be glad to respond with a lowered rate. We were able to reduce the price of the Ensign by slightly reducing the size of the paper but not the number of pages, and by exercising our faith that there will be a hearty response in increased subscriptions. When it is considered that all duplication of matters appearing in the HERALD will be eliminated, Ensign subscribers will really get more than formerly.

Books and Tracts

What we have said regarding periodicals is largely true of books and tracts. Our new catalog shows some material reductions in the prices of books, and we hope to reduce others because of the demand from you which will allow larger editions and consequently lower costs. We also hope that our members and friends will place their orders for other books, supplies, and printing with us, as all profit made from these sources will be applied towards a reduction in the price of our literature.

Yours for a year of progress,

G. S. TROWBRIDGE,

Next Year's Course in Religious Education

The work being done at Graceland College by the group of young men and women preparing for church work holds so much promise for the good of the church and its work that it appears wise to issue a call for another class to enter Graceland College next fall. The preparation will be not alone for foreign service, but for domestic as well, the ratio to be determined after the applications are in, showing the material available for the next course. It is expected that the course next year will be extended to two years and will articulate with the university course for those who wish to go on. The great demand for qualified workers requires speeding up in preparation. This course carried on in Graceland will include:

1. A thorough study of the doctrine and beliefs of the church and methods of presenting them.
2. The language, history, geography, customs, etc., of the foreign country to which the missionary is to be sent; or courses in American political history, political science, economics, or sociology, for those expecting to do local work, with particular reference to the problems of Zion.
3. Certain academic studies to meet the needs of individual students, including philosophy and education.
4. Elementary sanitation, hygiene, first aid, simple nursing, etc.
5. Recreational leadership, Scouting, Oriole and Temple Builder work.
6. Sunday school, Religio, and women's work.
7. Other incidental subjects closely related to the work to be accomplished.

The selection of the young people to make this preparation is highly important. The qualifications of those selected must be such as to assure the highest degree of success possible. These will include:

1. Consecration and call to the work of the church and intense interest in the welfare of the church and the prosecution of its work.
2. The necessary education and general intelligence; a high school education or its equivalent.

Systematic reading courses and travel experiences function as developers of intelligence.

3. Not over thirty years of age, with general good health and physical fitness.

Those desiring to enter the course should apply at once by writing to the president of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa. From those applying, selections will be made by the general church authorities for admission to the course.

Since the establishment of this course, many of the conference appointees and church workers have spoken to me about young people qualified for the course. Such should write to President George N. Briggs, of the college, so application blanks can be forwarded.

Owing to the present financial situation, those applying who are not under missionary appointment should be prepared to finance themselves. Enrollment carries no guarantee of mission appointment, but does offer an opportunity for preparation for service in any field that may later open up.

This work of preparation for church service is highly important, and all interested in the progress of the church work should assist in securing a group of workers in the course whose qualifications are exceptionally good. Those who have taken the courses thus far deeply feel the responsibility and importance of the work, and are earnestly working to meet the divine approbation; and the standard for next year's class must be raised rather than lowered.

May God bless our efforts.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

Annual Tithing Report

Noting that the Presiding Bishop was issuing a new form of the annual tithing report, we asked permission to reproduce it in the HERALD to indicate the improvement in the matter of simplification.

Surely no one can say that it is difficult to understand these blanks, one of which is for those who have not hitherto paid tithing and the other for those who have previously filed an inventory.

However, all bishops and bishop's agents are glad to help the membership arrive at a satisfactory basis in filling out the blanks.

Support the Saints' Herald

To keep in touch with church thought, its advancing program, its officers, its varied activities, every family should have the Herald.

The HERALD deserves and needs your support. Increasing costs are forcing many magazines and papers to sell out, be reduced in size, to change their character, the frequency of issues, or else to go out of existence. A great many periodicals went out of existence during the war, but this loss still continues. Some newspapers that had been in existence for over a hundred years were sold shortly after the war. For instance, the oldest newspaper in Missouri, the Saint Louis Republic, was sold to the Saint Louis Globe Democrat.

As a further instance, we note that the Independent Magazine, after a continued existence of sixty years has now been sacrificed. We note certain of the large New York papers were sold and combined with other dailies. Also certain of the religious weeklies are being printed on a poorer quality of paper, and yet are facing possible bankruptcy and are applying for donations, though the subscription price is much higher for the quality of the magazine, as well as absolutely higher, than is the case with the SAINTS' HERALD.

If the SAINTS' HERALD is to continue, it must have your support. If sufficient support is given we are assured that the Board of Publication will be able and glad to reduce the price of subscriptions. The SAINTS' HERALD is the official organ of the church. It is the authorized means of communication between the officers of the church and the church. No family of Saints can afford to be without it. There are few, if any, that do not spend much more on inferior publications.

We are not able to give a full prospectus for the year, because so much of the material for the HERALD is new material coming in week by week and month by month. But, as those who have subscribed for the paper have written time and time again, the editorials of President Elbert A. Smith alone are worth the price of subscription. In addition thereto, there are occasional communications from President F. M. Smith, from Bishop B. R. McGuire, and some other leading officers of the church.

The Forum is a field for open discussion, not according to the views of the editors or necessarily the principles of the church, but that we may work out some matters which are more or less disputed. In fact, the editors allow a great deal of latitude in every department. Anything the editors know the church will be especially interested in is brought out, and we believe the articles submitted are well worth the careful attention and reading of our members.

There appear in the HERALD the authoritative statements of the leading church officials; there appear letters from the missionaries and others which are of general interest. Week by week the Women's Department makes its appearance and, from time to time, The Staff and Health Department. In addition to these departments matters of broad general interest occupy on an average of two pages each week.

Articles of interest to pastors appear under the head of Pastoral. Articles of interest to students will appear from time to time in the Seminar. The aim is to present in the HERALD something of interest to every member of the church. Some are interested in advanced philosophical thought; others are not. Some of our readers have only been able to complete the eighth grade and some have had to leave school before accomplishing even that much of school. Our aim is to supply in each number of the HERALD something of interest for each class of our readers, but to do so requires your support.

To keep in touch with what the church is thinking and doing, to keep in touch with its advanced program, to keep in touch with the church officers, every family should have the SAINTS' HERALD.

From time to time special magazine numbers appear. At present we have the material for a British Isles number, for a Kansas City Stake number, and for a Graphic Arts number. Material for other special numbers has been planned.

A new year is before us. What better gift can there be for the family than a subscription to the SAINTS' HERALD which is now about to enter upon its sixty-third year of service to the church and which presents week by week the present problems and status of the church.

Kansas City Not Under Quarantine

We have received several letters asking about the condition in Kansas City with regard to smallpox. Several have evidently heard that Kansas City is under quarantine, or else that no person will be permitted to enter or leave unless he first exhibits a new vaccination scar.

This report has been very much of a surprise to those residing in Jackson County. The plain facts appear to be that about the first of September a few cases of smallpox developed in Kansas City. As the season went on, this number increased. Nothing was said about it until after the Legion Convention. Some have therefore supposed that it started from the Legion Convention, but that is not the case, as publication followed too soon after the convention for the smallpox epidemic to have been a result of that meeting.

It is true that those affected had the disease in a very severe form. The percentage of death of those afflicted was high. But from reports so far published, there were not altogether more than about one in two thousand affected and not more than one in five thousand at any one time. A great deal was printed in the local papers, but it was done as propaganda in a drive for vaccination.

It is perhaps not surprising that, as a result of this propaganda, such reports should have gone out. But there are now notices posted in the union station at Kansas, City, signed by the mayor and board of health, stating definitely the above facts. The situation has been not only under control, but has been declared to be normal for over a month past. The proclamation declares that the city was never under quarantine, that there appeared to be an incipient epidemic of severe character, so the slogan was adopted of 100 per cent vaccination.

It will be seen from the above figures that those desiring to come to Kansas City and vicinity run no extraordinary danger, as the percentage is so small that it would be practically disregarded in many rural communities, and in the second place, the situation which existed a month or six weeks ago has decidedly changed for the better and is now normal according to published accounts. Herald Again Mailed on Wednesday

Our readers will, no doubt, be very glad to note the change of date of publication of the HERALD back to the historic Wednesday, which was the date of issue until it moved to Independence. This return to Wednesday will permit of our publishing more news of the various services held on Sunday and yet permit of the HERALD reaching most of our subscribers during the week in which it is published.

Another return to the previous practice is publishing one half of the HERALD, including the editorials and articles, in larger type. Two years ago, the change was made to a smaller type and the same type throughout the HERALD. This permitted of publishing more material without increasing the size of the HERALD. But some of our readers prefer the larger type. Also the use of the larger type permits a more ready difference in type between quotations and original matter.

In both particulars, it is a return to the previous style of the SAINTS' HERALD.

According to a press dispatch from Salt Lake City, the Episcopal Church, in its Fourth Annual Synod, Province of the Pacific, seemed to develop a consensus of opinion that the Mormon people had been grossly misrepresented by so-called lecturers and that the policy of general attack might be modified.

Graceland College and Lamoni

The report has come to us that one of our young people attending Graceland College made a remark to the effect that coming to Lamoni was to him almost like going to heaven. "We are so separated there from the temptations and attractions of the world and are placed nearly in an ideal location for contemplation and study."

We have also heard that some, at least, of the residents of Lamoni considered it amusing. Superficially, it may appear so, and especially to those who see only the surface of things or those who have eyes to see faults. Certainly there are faulty people living in Lamoni; there are even good people who have their own peculiar shortcomings. But so far as we have been able to observe, the average of intelligence and spirituality at Lamoni is remarkably high, and equals and even exceeds any other place of which we have knowledge. There are, it is true, many of remarkable spiritual power, who do not and never have resided in Lamoni; there are, it is true, intellectual giants in the world who do not even know that there is such a place as Lamoni. But speaking of the community average of intelligence, we repeat that it is very high and the same is true also of its morality.

For those who want to find a good time, who go for the sake of personal amusement, such may be able to find some of it in Lamoni and some of them may not be able to see there much that is desirable, so are ready to reject the college and all that it stands for; since what they are really seeking is only the amusement of the hour rather than the deep happiness and joy that comes only with right knowledge.

But for the young man or young woman who wants to study, who wishes to get away from distraction and concentrate on the work before him or her, there is offered there a splendid opportunity. We can readily appreciate that to such earnest-hearted young men, the opportunities offered, after what has previously confronted him, may indeed appear as a bit of heaven on earth.

There is a lesson to be drawn even from this for all of us, and that is, we are quite likely to find what we are looking for. And the Master has assured us that if we seek, we shall find the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 7: 7, 8.) What we seek for hard enough we are likely to find, whether it is in a community or an individual, hence it may be well to consider the advice of the Apostle Paul: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, or if there be any praise, think on these things."—Philippians 4: 8.

Our Christmas Gifts

In this issue there appears an editorial from the Kansas City Star again emphasizing the thought that on Christ's birthday we should give our gifts to him.

This is no new idea to our readers. One of our sisters some ten years ago wrote a short poem presenting this same thought, including the idea that we should give gifts to Christ by preferring one another. This poem was afterwards published in Autumn Leaves.

We have been presenting the same thought in recent editorials. This added note is just to say that it is not yet too late to pay our tithing on our Christmas gifts, nor is it too late to make a freewill offering to him. In this church our course is clear, for there are designated officers to receive our offering for the cause of Christ, men called and appointed, we believe, by the direction of his Spirit.

As we cast up the account of the year, it is well to consider all that has been spent for things not essential to life, all above a reasonable minimum, and we should arrange to pay our tithing also on these amounts. This will, of course, include tithing upon our Christmas gifts. But in addition thereto, there remains the double appeal for Christmas offering through the Sunday school for the purpose of assisting in securing an inheritance for those who have devoted the best of their life to the church; or by those of us who are older in years, a Christmas offering directly to the church for the purpose of sending the gospel abroad in all of the world, a freewill offering, a gift to him in commemoration of the day of his birth.

The Famine in Russia

We are receiving numerous appeals on behalf of the starving peoples, and especially the children in Russia. One appeal is on behalf of the committee of which Secretary Herbert S. Hoover is the head. Another is on behalf of the Quakers who have done a splendid work in central and eastern Europe. They are now making an appeal to all religious organizations, bankers, chambers of commerce, rotary clubs, women's clubs, lodges, and labor unions, as well as a direct appeal to the millers for flour.

Fifteen million people are in danger of immediate starvation. Three million barrels of flour are needed. The millers are willing to sell the flour for this purpose at the lowest possible price as well as donating many barrels themselves. The basic cost of a barrel will be put at $5. The request is that a barrel be contributed for every ten members.

All we have given heretofore has been of our surplus. Our surplus will take care of this further demand; yet a real consecration calls for more than that which we do not need, it calls for a giving of something from our actual needs and wants.

Regardless of what the cause may be, drought is one prominent factor; the economic breakdown also has directly contributed; but it is the fact of famine which confronts us. They have gathered leaves, grass, and bark, and ground it up for flour. Its continued use for the feeding of children is far from satisfactory, yet there is no other flour in the whole Volga district of 400,000 square miles. The peasants search the whole area to find even the stunted grass, horse hoofs, or edible animals.

The Women's Department Year Book

Church workers throughout the world as well as the women of the church should note the announcement in the Women's Department of the HERALD this week, that the price of the Centennial Year Book has been reduced.

As Sister Anderson points out, these books have never been, in the strictest sense of the term, year books. They have defined and outlined the different phases of the work of this department, and this Centennial Year Book is as up-to-date this year as it was last and will be good for next year and the year after.

It should be remembered that these books have already been printed. This project is to turn them into cash, so that those purchasing will relieve the church expenses to that extent as well as helping this department in particular. At the same time, you will be securing for yourselves a copy of his book with its ideals of the Women's Departments of church work.

Palestine expects to reap a rich harvest from an influx of tourists, according to an Associated Press dispatch, and is, therefore, stocking up on silks, satins, oriental perfumes, and the usual array of eastern products which bewilder American tourists and tempt them to spend much money. Hotels are being refitted, donkey boys are brushing up their steeds and polishing saddles and harness, while the railroads are in a better position than ever to care for traffic. The trip from Dan to Beersheba can now be made in four hours time by motor car, and in less than forty minutes one can make the trip from Jerusalem to Hebron, where the grave of Abraham is said to be located. One may travel from the chilly heights of the Mount of Olives to the intense heat of the Dead Sea Valley, twelve hundred feet below sea level, in an hour. Seven Mediterranean cruises are being organized in America, and Egypt is rejoicing and expecting to participate in the harvest of dollars from the American tourists.

The Disarmament Conference

By John W. Rushton

An appreciation of its possible significance, with comments on the opening prayer.The Opening Prayer

Almighty God, we thank thee for the coming of this eventful day. We have seen it from afar and now we rejoice that it has at last dawned. May it bring untold blessing to a troubled world. O thou omnipotent One, to-day as in other days, we believe that thou dost guide in human affairs. Thou hast made of one blood all nations that dwell upon the earth, and though we are of many races and many tongues, yet the interests of the few are the interests of the larger number.

May we feel assured that the welfare and happiness and prosperity of the human family are inexpressibly dear to thy heart. We pray for clear vision or we shall grope blindly for the light and lose our way. We pray for hearts lovingly sympathetic to human distress, wherever it may exist, or we shall sink into the depths of a miserable selfishness. We pray for minds willing to believe that the strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, or we shall miss the great joy of service. We pray for the forward look or we shall be overwhelmed in hopeless pessimism. Give us the ability to think clearly, to judge fairly, to act wisely. Help us to think less often of our rights and more often of our duties and responsibilities.

We pray at this hour on behalf of a world in sore need. Thou art not unmindful of the sufferings of thy people. The cries of multitudes of widows and orphans have come up before thee, O God. We have had our terrible baptism of blood. There is hunger and pestilence and unutterable anguish. God forbid that the woes of these years should ever again be visited upon the earth. Can it be that thou hast permitted us thus to suffer in order that we might turn from our own devices to thee and acknowledge thee as King of our lives and our destinies? Out of the depths we cry unto thee, "Save us, or we perish."

May we walk softly and humbly before thee, this day, and throughout the fateful days of this great conference. May we be intent upon knowing thy will; and knowing it may we have the courage to do it. And may it not be that the findings of this conference shall be so wise, so far-reaching, and so beneficial, that all mankind may take new hope and fresh courage. And to thee shall be the praise and the glory forever and ever. Amen.

The above copy of the prayer offered by Doctor Abernathy, the pastor of the Baptist church which President Harding attends in the city of Washington, is forwarded for publication, as its impressiveness seems to lie in its simplicity, and universality, as well as its intense fervor. There is a remarkable absence of anything which could mark it as a sectarian or doctrinal matter, and it makes its appeal to the "Almighty God" without any adjectives which might limit it or humanize it; and then its scope of sympathy is so wide that none is excluded. Above all, its note of optimism, while chastened with that due sense of dependency which urges humility, suggests the prophetic afflatus which characterizes all great souls in the attitude of prayer and devotion.

How could it be otherwise, considering the unusual event which brought together that small gathering of the world's highest and noblest minds in statescraft? The awful agony through which humanity had passed in the recent past has fused the many nations into a oneness which makes it impossible that any can think of themselves in splendid isolation any more. The consciousness that we are members of a common whole, and that when one suffers all suffer with it, is but a recognition of solidarity which has been gradually growing upon us in every department since Christ revealed the spiritual principle of the atonement, by identifying himself with our race in its sin and weakness in order that the race might become identified with God in holiness and power.

There may be many weaknesses in this great adventure at Washington, and there are those whose mental twist will discover all sorts of sinister influences at work which have the ruin of our own country in mind; and there will be and are those whose morbid nationalism will decline to accept the international responsibilities and seek to deflect the spirit and effort from its real intent; and it may be that those who are skilled in such Jeremiahlike lamentations can find evidences to support their conclusions; yes, it may even be that the splendid resolves of these noble men will fail to produce the ends which they have in view; but after all, is it not a wonderful and impressive thing that from the Orient and the Occident, at the center of the earth we have the age-long wisdom of the Chinese, with the cultured and experienced statesmanship of the Anglo-Saxon, the fiery chivalry of France, with the quickly bounding Japanese who are scarcely yet out of the shadows of barbarianism, all around a table discussing ways and means of removing the causes of irritation and proposing in all solemnity the turning away from the arts of war to usher in a decade of peace!

What a wonderful Christmas season.

The centuries-old strife between the British Parliament and the Irish people is settled, and the happy conclusions of the Washington conference, together with a deepening sympathy for the heavy burdens which the defeated foes have to carry, with a disposition to lighten those burdens, and the general humanizing of the entire scheme of things, promises that the fulfillment of the angel's chorus is within measurable distance of realization.

We may still sneer at the dreamers, and cruel whispers may scandalize the Josephs of all ages, and new interpretations may be given to the apocalyptic visions, but still we follow the dreams and become alert in the radiance of the Vision which can and does promise the Golden Age while we still live in the age of brass. It is still true, "Where there is no vision the people perish."

Let the church of Christ rejoice in this advancing light which is being shed abroad, and may it prove to be the foreshadowing light sometimes preceding the dawn, which is the harbinger of the "Sun of Righteousness arising with healing in his wings." With deeper meaning and more fervent passion than ever before we pray for the coming of that day when we shall have "Peace on earth and good will towards all men." And while we wait patiently for the developments which are in process of gestation, let us with reverence and deep solicitude unify ourselves with the prayer of Doctor Abernathy:

May we walk softly and humbly before thee, this day, and throughout the fateful days of this great conference. May we be intent upon knowing thy will; and knowing it, may we have the courage to do it. And may it not be that the findings of this conference shall be so wise, so far-reaching and so beneficial, that all mankind may take new hope and fresh courage. And to thee shall be the praise and the glory forever and ever.

What Is the Sunday School Movement?

By A. Max Carmichael

Interesting observations by our new Sunday school superintendent.

Our Sunday school movement has been in times past called an association, and at later times it has been called a department of the church. Neither appellation carries with it the significance of what the Sunday school movement of the church is.

The Sunday school movement is rather a phase of church activity, just such a phase as the visiting from house to house by the Aaronic priest, or just such a phase of church activity as the ordinary prayer meeting. If this idea be true, it carries with it some far-reaching conclusions in the practices and organization of the Sunday school movement and in our conception of the relationship of the Sunday school to the church. The reader himself will see that many of the statements which shall be made concerning the practices and organization of the Sunday school are a direct result of this conception of what the Sunday school movement is. As these statements are made, no mention shall be made of the fact that they are the direct conclusions from this conception. The reader will be left free to note this.

It is true that the Sunday school movement could in times past be rightly called an association, "subject to its own rules and regulations," independent of the church "in its government and direction." This is an historical fact. It was so because the church did not by the voice of the common consent or by the direction of its administrative officers direct that this phase of church activity be undertaken by the church as such. The church seemed to prefer that this phase of church activity be undertaken by a separately organized body of individuals. It is true that the greater portion of these individuals did belong to the church, but membership in the Sunday School Association was a separate and distinct affiliation from that of their membership in the church.

In fact, many members of the church were antagonistic to the Sunday school. Many were antagonistic to it as a movement or as a phase of religious activity. They claimed that the movement was unnecessary. They thought that everything was being done for the spiritual uplift of the church members and their children that should be done in the ordinary preaching service and prayer meeting. Up to that time there was no precedent for it except in other churches. To some the fact that the Sunday school movement existed in other churches was an argument against the Sunday school. Further, they could see no provision made for it in the standard books of the church. Therefore it was unlawful.

This antagonism, which was quite prevalent, made it all the more necessary that this phase be carried on by an entirely separate organization, made up of those individuals who were extremely zealous that it be started, and who were chafing under the delay in getting the so much needed movement started, and who would have chafed still more had it been delayed in its beginning until the church had been willing to adopt the school movement as a legitimate part of its regular activities.

Once becoming an association independent of the church, but carrying on an activity which was designed to raise the spirituality of the people, the very purpose of the church itself, the Sunday school movement could be subjected to a new attack, or at least an old attack from a new angle. The sum and substance of this attack was that the Sunday school was an association assuming to do the work which God had designed the church to do. This would have been a justifiable objection had the officers of the church been willing to accept the Sunday school method of religious development. But as a matter of fact the church officially did not assume this phase or method of religious development. It was left to be initiated by its ardent advocates. It was initiated spasmodically at first by its advocates, and it is but natural that its advocates should have sought to promote the movement by organization among themselves.

It is but natural that we should first hear of the Decatur District Sunday School Association, and later of the General Sunday School Association, organized "to consolidate and unify the forces engaged in the Sunday school work, to devise and put in operation methods and means for its promotion, for the purpose of teaching God's word according to the best methods suggested by experience and the Spirit of truth," an auxiliary, a "help" unto the church, but independent of the church in its direction and government.

An association which has a worthy purpose and is composed of ardent members was bound to grow. It was quite natural that it should become proud of itself, proud of its associative features, proud of its organization. Becoming strong under its worthy purpose and impetus, it is quite natural that such an association should assume the prerogative of carrying on the activity and religious development characteristic of the school independent of both the general and local church activities.

It is quite natural that such an organization, after it had functioned a long time as an organization separate from the church, should be self-centered in promoting its organization as such more than in promoting the idea which gave rise to the organization, the idea of teaching by classes, or grades. Such were the facts with the Sunday school movement. It was far more jealous of its organization than it was of the purpose of the organization.

The following comments will illustrate this historical tendency. Very little opposition was expressed by Sunday school leaders when the Religio was organized and began a study of religious matter by the class method. In fact, many of the same people who were interested in promoting the Sunday school organization were also interested in promoting the Religio organization. It little occurred to them that the Religio was using the very same method of promoting the spiritual interests of the members of the church as was the Sunday school, which method was the very occasion for the rise of the Sunday school.

Again, in several of our branches to-day, pastors are organizing so-called junior meetings during the preaching hour, and even meetings for children of other ages, as for the primary age, and for the adolescent age of fifteen to eighteen years. This they have done without even thinking of connecting the Sunday school authorities with the movement. And the Sunday school authorities haven't even thought of wanting to be connected with the movement. Yet these junior and primary services during the preaching hour are the application of the very method which gave rise to the Sunday school.

But when the administrative authorities of the church began to recognize that the Sunday school and Religio were using means of enhancing the spiritual interests of the members of the church, which the church itself was interested in, and which were rightly but activities of the church itself, and as a result of this recognition, the church administrative authorities sought to make the Sunday school an inherent part of the church, and thus to destroy some of the formerly enjoyed independence of the Sunday school, considerable opposition arose. The Sunday school adherents were jealous of their organization, but not particularly jealous of the method of religious activity which they were promoting by their organization.

In the evolution which must necessarily follow in bringing back to the church this method of instruction which gave rise to the Sunday school, it became necessary to make the Sunday school organization a department. This would bring the activity of class instruction which the Sunday school was exercising in common with the Religio, and with some branch pastoral activities under the church. From an administrative point of view it was necessary to "departmentalize" in order to be able to coordinate the efforts of the various organizations which were using independently of one another, and independently of the church, the best means of promoting the spiritual interests of the church members, namely the school idea, the division of the members of the church into grades or classes according to their growth and development. These organizations, each jealous of its own organization, could better work together under a common head. Again too, making them departments was a happy solution of the problem because it tended to preserve the already existing unity of the Sunday school, of which we were so jealous.

The old Sunday School Association has, then, evolved into a department. The old organization remains much the same. Making the Sunday School Association a department has made but very few changes. The greatest change has been in the principle which governs the Sunday school concept. The Sunday school is now a part of the church, dependent upon the church. Many of the changes which "departmentalizing" would logically make have not been effected. This is a matter of time. These minor changes will easily follow when we once get the new viewpoint.

But let us question just what has been made a department. Is it the idea, or method, of teaching the gospel, which gave rise to the Sunday school? Or is it that organization that usually met at 9.30 or 10 o'clock on Sunday morning in every branch under a leader called the Sunday school superintendent? It is the latter thing that has been made a department, not the former. The thing that has been made a department is a derived form of organization from the organization or association originally established to carry out an idea, or method of teaching.

But the thing we should be attempting to administer effectively is not a worn-out shell of an organization, but the method of promulgating the gospel, used by that organization. The center of emphasis in our administration is not the organization which is occupying common ground now with other organizations, but rather the common ground of action, the common ground of activity.

But what is this thing that the Sunday school has been attempting to do or use along with other organizations? As has necessarily been hinted at before, it is a way or mode of teaching religion, of promoting the religious growth of children, and indeed of adults. It seeks to determine the capacity of children and adults at various stages of their religious growth to receive a larger portion of religion. It seeks to follow the process of growth determined by God himself. It seeks to discover the laws of learning, which God has set, and to follow them. It apportions to the individual such phases of the religion of the church as the individual is capable of grasping and understanding.

It is, then, not inherently an organization or a department of the church, but rather a phase of church activity. It is a phase which we can see permeate every organized activity of the church. Even the prayer meeting is not free from this phase. The having of young people's prayer meetings is an acknowledgment of the principle. It is quite natural that a young people's prayer meeting should take on a different tone and content than an adult prayer meeting. The religious capacity of the coming generation is different than the capacity of adults. The religious experiences of the older are more settled and convincing than those of the young. The young have as yet not arrived at stable ideals.

These are the reasons why the graded method of imparting religious ideals, and arriving at religious ideals, is of such importance as to come naturally under the administration of the church, and not of separately organized and independent associations. Even the Oriole, Temple Builder, and Boy Scout movements are applications of the principle. We repeat that the idea or principle that the Sunday school organization has been using is a phase of church activity so fundamental in its connection with our growth, religious and otherwise, that it runs through all other of our church functions, as well as the Sunday school.

Being an inherent activity of the church, how shall this principle be administered? Shall we allow this administration to be determined or dictated along the lines of existing organizations which have grown up without any reference to a logical analysis of the principle? In other words, shall the divisions of labor into which the administration must necessarily be separated in order to execute the principle be along the channels set by organized precedents, if such precedents do not constitute the most effective administration? This is not a statement that existing organizations do not rightly divide the application into its logical features. It is a plea that the administration of the application be not in any way hampered by precedents, that we do not allow our jealousy for existing organizations to stand in the way of an intense loyalty to the principle which we are trying to execute.

An intense loyalty for the principle will demand that at this point of our church history, when the church is recognizing the value of this idea which the Sunday School Association has so gloriously put into effect the last half century, we permit a logical analysis anew in the light of the larger place which the use of the principle is now taking in every activity of the church. To carry this out in so large a scope will demand a division of labor. This division should be made according to some logical plan. There is no doubt that several different groups may be made according to various arrangements. These divisions may or may not correspond with the division of existing organizations, but whether they do or not should not be considered. We should look for the most logical and effective method of administration, and adopt it, fearless of consequences upon existing organizations, loyalty to which should be tenacious only so long as they agree with this most logical division, and no longer.

Our chief administrative officers having once determined upon the proper basis for division, it is but natural for us to examine the already existing lines of division to see how well they agree with the adopted basis. If they agree, how happy it would be, especially for those who do not easily brook changes in organizations or whose loyalty is superficially about an organization rather than about principles. If they do not agree, it is but natural that there should be a gradual growth from the old line of division to the new. This growth will come about by a gradual shifting of emphasis upon the part of the sub-administrators from those things which occupied the center of consciousness under the old to those things which are scheduled to occupy the center of consciousness under the new division.

However this may be, the important thing is what division of the work we as administrators of what was called the Sunday school association, and what is still called the Sunday school for the want of a better name, feel has been assigned to us. Acting under the First Presidency of the church, we feel that we are primarily concerned with that phase of growth that has to do with the religious education of children and adults through various branches, and missions, which education is accomplished through a grading of such children and adults according to their religious capacities.

Who Should Stand the Loss?

We should treat the Lord as fairly as a landlord, in case of misfortune.

A brother, in a recent letter to this office, asks how much tithing he owes under the following circumstances:

Upon entering the church he was worth $1,000 and paid $100 tithe. The next year he was sick and went behind $900: "Is he entitled to $900 worth of property before he is to pay tithing again?"

Our reply will no doubt be of sufficient general interest to justify its publication. We answered as follows:

In the first place we might define the tithe, for it is quite essential that we get a proper understanding of the thing with which we are dealing. According to the rendition adopted by the Order of Bishops, it is one tenth of the increase. "The increase is that which is left from one's income after deducting the necessary living expenses." Section 106 of the Doctrine and Covenants declares the tithe is one tenth of our interest annually. Turning to the Bible, we find this statement: "Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed that the fields bringeth forth year by year." (Deuteronomy 14: 22.) Each tenth dollar that one receives (after deducting the necessary living expenses) belongs to the Lord. Hence, if you have $900 which is fully tithed, it is obvious that you have paid at least $100 as a tithe; or as in the other case cited by you, the man has $1,100 which is fully tithed, he must have paid at least $122.22 as tithing, laying out each tenth dollar as the Lord's share.

One difficulty that we frequently encounter in figuring how much tithing we owe, is that we act on the supposition that the tithing we have paid is comparable with the amount of our possessions, which we can set forth on an inventory blank. This supposition implies that all our increase has been retained by us either as cash in the bank or as investments in material possessions or tangible assets, which is seldom the case. Thus we are liable to be led to the erroneous conclusion that we do not owe God any tithing, when we do. However, I am sure we all want to be fair with God, our partner, and when we have a proper understanding of these matters, we will all keep the law of God alike. Each year we should make a reckoning and determine our increase or loss, as the case may be, and use this annual return as a basis of our tithing.

There is a danger of encountering difficulty when we make the plan cumulative from year to year by reason of the fact that some of the increases of past years, which have gone from us in the shape of gifts or losses, are unintentionally substituted for some of the increase of the current year on which tithing is really due; thus making the tithe previously paid on a similar amount do double duty.

Surely none of us would treat a landlord in that fashion if we were renting a farm on a crop basis. To make this more clear, let us suppose that you had agreed to pay one tenth of all the grain and stock raised on a neighbor's farm as rental. At the end of the first year it is found you have made $1,000; you pay him $100 and keep $900. The next year you go $400 behind. Would you ask the landlord to apply his tenth of the crop and the stock actually raised during the year against the cost of production to lessen your losses, and again the following year ask him to apply his tenth towards wiping out the deficit, and repeat this request year after year until the $400 loss has been made up to you? This situation would be similar in many ways to the tithing problem involved in your question.

Let us think of the tithe as being the amount due on that which is received—on a part of the income, the increase, rather than being an amount paid to the Bishop on your possessions or what you spend. To illustrate further: Let us picture an irrigation system. At the intake is a device which registers the amount of water you receive. The question is not what results do you get from the water, how much of it evaporated, nor whether the yield of the land brought a profit to you as a producer. The amount you owe to the water company would be determined by the number of gallons of water you received, as shown by the meter.

Of course, there must be a starting point in tithing, and to assist the Saints in this beginning, we have prepared the Annual Tithing Report Blank which carries out the principle as stated above as nearly as we have been able to express it. Each year, after the first report is made, the process is more simple. It is to "tithe your increase," and the increase, being the "amount left from one's income after deducting the necessary living expenses," it really becomes a process of subtraction. It is then a very simple matter to determine the tenth which is the Lord's share.

A Little Child's Christmas Discovery

Why don't we give birthday presents to Christ on his birthday?

Now, whether these are words of wisdom or of ignorance, they are the words of the pure in heart, and, therefore, can do us no harm to hear. They are the words of a little girl who made a discovery of her own. She made it only last night, or it was then she spoke the words, but the thought back of them may have been working in her mind longer than she knew herself.

Now, this is the little girl speaking:

There's one thing I don't understand about Christmas. What it really is, is Jesus' birthday, isn't it? Well, then, why don't we give birthday presents to him? He gives them to us. At least everybody does, don't they? But on Jesus' birthday, we don't give presents to him, he gives them to us. At least, Santa Claus does, but he sends Santa, I'm sure. How would Santa know where to come if Jesus didn't tell him? Somehow, they seem almost like the same person, but I suppose they're not really. I can't quite explain what I mean, but I know Santa couldn't be so good if he didn't come from Jesus. Especially to little children. But why does he send us these presents when it's his birthday and not ours?

Now these are the words of the little girl's father, who helps her in her arithmetic, but you can see he is very helpless here. And from now on you can tell by that sign when age is speaking and when the pure in heart.

I suppose it is because he loves you.

Yes, but I love him, too, and it's his birthday. We give presents to those we love, don't we? That's how we show we love them. If we didn't know when his birthday was he might understand why we never give him presents. But we do know. It's Christmas, and he knows we know because he sees us giving presents to each other and getting them from Santa. Doesn't it make him feel sad then when he gets none from us?

No, I don't think so. He's happy when he sees you happy.

But I couldn't be happy if everybody forgot my birthday or just used it to give themselves presents—my presents. It doesn't seem fair to use another person's birthday to make yourself happy. I think we ought at least to share Jesus' birthday with him, don't you?

My dear, he doesn't need presents from us. He's rich. He's the son of a King.

Well, we don't positively have to have presents, either. We could live without them. But we couldn't live—at least it wouldn't be pleasant to live—without showing we love each other, would it? How does he know we love him—especially on his birthday when we show we love each other—if we don't give him presents?

He reads the hearts of all his children.

Just the same I think it would please him if we showed him we didn't forget his birthday. I would like to give him a present if I knew where he was. That's where he has the advantage of us, isn't it? He knows where we are and what we want. If I knew where he was I wouldn't know what he wanted, and yet I'd like to give him something. I'm sure it would make him happy, even if he didn't especially want it or had one just like it. That's the way I feel. I like some of my own presents better than others, of course. I suppose everybody does, really. But all of them make me happy because I know they mean that everybody loves me. Do you know where Jesus is, and how I could give him a present?

He is everywhere, my dear. But I do not know how you could give him a present. Nobody knows that.

The wise men did. They brought him presents on his first birthday. Why can't we now? Aren't people as wise now as they were then?

That was when he was a babe and on earth. They knew where to find him then.

But don't we know now, when we know so much about everything? Grown-up, wise people, I mean, who write books and make airships and build such high buildings? Why, he knows where we are and we're hard to find. We're in different houses, all over the world—so many of us. And he finds us all. Can't we find him, when he's only one? I think it ought to be easy, on his birthday anyway. I should think he would want us to find him. That is, if he knew we wanted to, very much. What I mean is, do you think it's our fault or his? If he knew I wanted to give him a present on his birthday don't you suppose he would let me know where he was? If he knew it would make me happy to give him something?

He would want you to be happy, I am sure.

Then he will let me give him a present. Only, the trouble is, how would a little girl know how to do it? If you don't, I mean. When we give presents to live people we know just where to go. If I could just go some place and carry my present, then I would know he would get it. But if he isn't here himself—if he stays in heaven all the time—how could I do that? Don't you suppose there's somebody here, some live person, to take presents for him, just like Santa Claus takes ours from him and brings them to us? I should think there might be a Santa Claus from us to him, don't you see? That is, if we can't find Jesus himself. I wonder if there isn't somebody he would like us to give presents to for him. Don't you think there might be?

My dear, perhaps you have found the way.

I could try it, and even if I didn't find the right person, he'd understand what I was trying to do, wouldn't he? And, maybe, he wants us to try. Maybe that's the reason he doesn't let us find him—because he wants us to send his presents, like he sends ours. And, don't you see, if we do it that way, we'd be sure to send the right presents, because we'd give what we know the live person wanted or needed. That's the way he does. Maybe he's just been showing us the way all the time, and we didn't understand. Don't you suppose?

My dear, perhaps he has shown you the way.—
Kansas City Star.

Church Etiquette

1. If possible, be in time. You need at least five minutes, after coming, to get warm or cool, to compose your body and mind and to whisper a prayer before the service begins.

2. Never pass up the aisle during prayer or Scripture reading. If you do, your presence will distract the minds of many.

3. Be devout in every attitude. All whispering should be studiously avoided. Find the hymn, and sing it if you can. Share the book with your neighbor. If in a strange church conform to its custom of worship.

4. If the sermon has begun, take a seat near the door, no matter if you are "at home."

5. Be thoughtful of the comfort of others. Take the inside of the pew if you are the first to enter, and leave all vacant space at the end.

6. Speak a bright, cheery word to as many as possible at the close of the service. If you are a stranger, ask one of the ushers to introduce you to the pastor or to some of the church officers. This will always insure you a hearty welcome.

7. Never put on your overcoat, overshoes, or wraps during the closing hymn, and do not make a rush for the door immediately after the benediction is pronounced.—Selected.

At a recent monthly meeting of the First Quorum of Elders in Zion, Sister Etta J. Hunt, women's organizer in Zion, was invited in to address the quorum briefly on the methods and ideals of the women as expressed in their departmental work. Following her address, questions were asked, and altogether good was done in establishing a better understanding all around.

Danger Signals of Insanity

Recognition of personal danger signals in industry is often tardy or absent, thinks an editorial writer in The Nation's Health (Washington). In illustration he tells of one of the steadiest mechanics in a large factory who shot himself the other day, apparently without reason. His family life was happy; he was not dissipated; he was a quiet, hard-working man. His foreman reported that he had only one peculiarity: no matter how good a piece of work he turned out, he always belittled it, comparing it with the jobs his father used to do. The rest of the tale is in words of the general manager, who said.

"I talked the case over with our shop doctor and he told me a lot about 'sense of inferiority,' which I understood, and threw in a lot more which I didn't.

"At any rate, it started me to thinking about several cases we had had in our plant. I recalled a man who had been driving a shop-mule—a cracking good man with a record for reliability and carefulness. All at once, he began hitting things and had a series of small accidents, winding up with a grand smash-up which killed one man and injured several others pretty badly. We fired him, and he landed in an insane asylum, where he died about a year afterwards. Then there was a foreman in the woodworking plant, a good, sober man, full of energy, apparently a comer. He began getting rough with the men, and at first I thought it was just his way of hurrying up production. Then he went over into the foundry and tried to tell our foreman molder how to do things, got into a fight, and spent a week in the hospital. From that he went from bad to worse, got to drinking bootleg whisky, and we had to let him out. He died about eighteen months afterwards, crazy.

"I could go on and tell about a good many cases I've come across in our office force and sales staff, cases which are clear enough to me now after twenty years of experience and a tip from our doctor. The point is this: Why didn't I recognize what was going on at the time? Why was it necessary to let these people go on to destruction before somebody realized that something was wrong? Of course, we have been paying attention to these things only a few years, and, of course, if we had brought these cases to the dispensary the doctor would have discovered what was wrong; but we didn't send the men in because we had no idea that they were going wrong. There were danger signals sticking out all over them, but we didn't see them because we didn't know that the man who suddenly changes his ways or who becomes queer is a danger to himself and everybody in the plant.

"It strikes me that what we need is a little instruction along these lines. I don't want my foremen trained so that they could qualify as expert witnesses in a murder trial, but I wish somebody would describe the danger signals in garden-variety language that could be understood by those in close contact with the man on the job. If the foreman could understand that the skillful man who suddenly gets clumsy, the meek man who all at once becomes chesty, and the steady church-goer who takes to high-power swearing, should make a trip to the doctor, I believe our plant and its employees would be a good deal better off. They tell me, too, that a lot of these men may be salvaged; at any rate, their chances of being scrapped would be much reduced."—Literary Digest.

Sister Hetty Hutsell, of Elliott, Iowa, writes that they have recently moved to that place and would like to know if there are any other Saints living in or near that town.

ANNUAL TITHING REPORT

Date192.....

Post Office State Name

THIS REPORT FORM CANNOT BE USED FOR YOUR FIRST REPORT. The first step is to fill out the INVENTORY form on the reverse side and figure tithing due thereon. Each year thereafter this blank should be used.

Your tithe is one tenth of your increase and should be paid at least annually. The Order of Bishops has given a rendition of the word "increase," when used in connection with tithing, as being "the amount which is left from one's income after deducting all necessary living expenses."

Having once filed a complete Inventory and Tithing Report, as called for on the reverse side of this blank, the form on this side should be used each year thereafter to determine the annual increase, one-tenth of which belongs to the Lord as tithing.

PLEASE ANSWER THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS BEFORE FILLING OUT THE FORM BELOW:

Have you ever turned over to the Bishopric a tithing report listing all of your holdings, as called for on the reverse side?.....
(If not, do not fill in information called for below, but use other side of this form.)

Is any tithing due on your previous report as yet unpaid?..... If so, how much?.....

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Hot School Lunches

The extension department of one of our State Universities has sent out to rural women's clubs a most helpful bulletin on "Hot lunches in rural schools." We have obtained permission to use anything we desire from the material sent us, but the bulletin referred to is too long for these columns. We are wondering if among our women there is enough interest in this subject to justify our arranging for a supply of this most splendid pamphlet. If you are interested, just drop us a line and say so, and we will be guided thereby.

We append a few extracts from the pamphlet referred to, which was prepared by Florence J. Atwood.

"Pa warms the milk for the little calf,
Ma heats the food for the chicks;
They eat a hot dinner at noontime, too,
But my lunch's as cold as bricks!"

"The Nation's greatest resource is not its forest reserve, not in its coal, nor in its gold, nor in its vast plains, nor in the wealth of the cities. The wealth of our country, the hope of our Nation lies, in its children! Our greatest responsibility is to them. The most worthy of all tasks is to make the world fit for the child and the child fit for the world!

"Who does not like to see strong, healthy boys and girls! How about those in your school? Have you given serious thought to how one warm food at noon with the usual cold lunch may help the boys and girls in your charge? Doctors, nurses, and Red Cross workers all urge serving regular meals to assist in developing strong bodies. School life tends to interrupt the regularity of meals, especially when the school is so situated as to keep the boy or girl from returning home for the midday meal. The aim of this circular is to offer suggestions for those who are interested in serving one or more hot foods to be eaten with the school lunch."

Method of Procedure

"The school lunch may be a most worth-while part of every rural school system. In many schools it may be found that the school officials will be willing to provide equipment and food, the same as they do the books, etc. This is material to be used for the physical development which is as important as the mental development; and these two should go hand in hand. If the school funds are too limited to provide the necessary equipment and food, it would be well to have the school board make provisions for funds to cover the cost of equipment and for at least one month's food supply. This will give the teacher an opportunity to start the work, to prove the value of it, and to provide other arrangements for continuing the work.

"If the school district funds are limited, or if the school board feels that this would not be a legitimate expenditure of the school money, funds may then be raised by a school entertainment, or, both food and utensils may be donated by the parents. When the food is furnished by the parents, these supplies should be apportioned according to the number of boys and girls in school. That is, a family who has three children would furnish supplies for three consecutive days, while the family of five will furnish supplies for five days. It will be necessary for the teacher to exercise good judgment in planning this distribution so that one family does not furnish more than its share of expensive foods. Or, if it seems more feasible for the teacher to pay each family for the supplies furnished, she may in turn charge each pupil enough to cover the expense of the hot dish served. The older pupils could serve as purchasing agents and cashier each week. This would relieve the teacher of the task of buying and collecting, and give the pupils valuable training in accuracy in handling funds.

"The hot lunch means extra work for both the teacher and the pupils, but with the cooperation and interest of the entire community, the boys and girls are going to be more interested in school work. The extra time and effort taken in the preparation of the hot dish will be more than compensated for by the good fellowship created during the noon hour, and the improved physical and mental condition of the school as a whole."

Then follows a description of the equipment needed and its approximate cost, with descriptions of cupboards and tables necessary for the project; a discussion of the preparation and serving of the lunch, and of the washing of dishes afterwards, all of which is calculated to gain the interest of the children and their enthusiastic cooperation.

A "weight contest," with a class room weight record equipment, is described, and a "health game" which was suggested by the Child Health Organization of New York City. This organization sends out two very helpful booklets which appeal to young children. These are The Child's Health Alphabet, and Cho-Cho and the Health Fairy. It is suggested that parents can help to keep up the interest in this health game by giving the smallest members of the family the Health Alphabet for playing the game of drinking a glass of milk each meal for a month, and the Cho-Cho book for keeping up this good habit for the second month.

A "food drill" is explained, and what the parents can do to help the teacher put across this splendid health work for their children.

Advantages of the hot lunch are set forth as follows:

"1. The health of the child will be improved. Something warm excites the flow of the digestive juices along the alimentary canal, getting it ready to take care of the rest of the food. Pupils will be encouraged to eat slowly and to thoroughly masticate their food.

"2. Better mental work will result because of improved eating habits.

"3. The children will learn to express themselves more readily in talking together, as one family at mealtime.

"4. Table courtesies which are often neglected in the hurry of everyday life will be improved if the teacher uses her opportunity for this training.

"5. School attendance will be improved. The responsibilities given each week to 'cooks' and 'housekeepers' will make them feel the all importance of their presence every day. The noon lunch may be made such a pleasure that the children will not want to miss the good time which the lunch hour gives, hence a greater effort for regular daily attendance.

"6. Knowledge of the necessary food elements will be gained.

"7. Better planned lunches will be brought from home.

"8. Children will learn to eat a greater variety of foods. Many foods, especially vegetables, are very likely to be cooked differently from the way mother does at home. This will be an inducement for the boy or girl with the finicky taste to learn to eat a greater variety of foods.

"9. Lessons in geography on the production and manufacture of foods will take on new meaning when associated with food prepared in the school."

The bulletin contains suggestions for keeping record of the lunches and who served as cooks, housekeepers, or commissary agents, as well as the cost and percentage of supply. A daily food calendar emphasizes the need for a well-balanced diet, and has reminders to have:

- "1. A glass of milk for each meal.
- "2. Fruit once a day.
- "3. Vegetables other than potatoes once—and better twice—each day.
- "4. An egg or small piece of meat or some other muscle-builder once each day."

A table dividing into groups according to character and uses the common varieties of food, is most useful, for it visualizes before the child the need for different food elements, and the parts they play in building a healthy body. This chart was adapted from one sent out by the Agricultural Extension Service of the University of Illinois.

The bulletin closes with twenty recipes for food which may be prepared in the school to augment the lunches brought from home.

Health Habits for Undernourished Children

The National Tuberculosis Association reported to-day that more than 5,000,000 school children in the United States were suffering from malnutrition.

To correct this, the association soon will put into effect an unique plan for instructing these children in correct health habits. The plan has been developed with the aid of Doctor W. R. P. Emerson, of Boston, nutrition expert.

Each child will be required through his teacher and parents to submit a card indicating daily performance of eleven health chores. The card reads:

"I was weighed this week on the day checked (x).

"Besides a good breakfast and the noon and evening meals, I ate mid-morning and afternoon lunches as directed.

"I ate only wholesome food to-day, including vegetables, fruit, and at least a pint of milk, as directed; and tried always to eat and drink slowly.

"I drank four glasses of water, some before each meal, and drank no tea, coffee, nor any injurious drinks.

"I was in bed last night ten or more hours, as directed, windows open.

"I rested lying down not less than twenty-five minutes both this forenoon and this afternoon.

"I played in the fresh air to-day, exercising for the time and in the way directed.

"I washed my hands before each meal to-day.

"I brushed my teeth thoroughly after breakfast and after the evening meal.

"I took a full bath on each of the days of the week that is checked (x)."

By doing these chores for five to fifteen weeks, the child becomes a squire, knight, or knight baronet, and is entitled to wear the insignia of the Modern Health Crusade. When he gains normal weight, he may earn advanced honors, by performing standard Modern Health Crusade chores and be admitted to the Health Round Table through physical fitness tests.—Exchange.

Every year is leap year among the Garo women in Assam. Among those who have not been Christianized the bride takes the initiative in marriage and goes to fetch the bridegroom, and it is etiquette for him to hide and resist until victoriously carried off.

Milk as a Food

Milk is often called a perfect food. If this be true, it must contain all the essential elements for normal growth and development.

It must contain protein to build and repair the living tissues of the body.

There must be a goodly portion of the substances that furnish energy for the body, such as fats, starches, and sugars.

The body must have mineral substances to make blood, brain, and bone.

The vitamins, which have lately been discovered, play a very important part in our diet; even the guinea pig cannot grow and develop without them. Clean milk fulfills all of these requirements for an adequate food better than any other single food stuff.

The size of the body is determined by the growth of the bone. If we fail to eat the food that contains mineral matter (the bone building material), the body becomes stunted, and the teeth suffer, soon become soft, and decay follows.

Vitamins, which are very essential to the growth and development of the body, are not found in large quantities in many foods. Milk supplies a sufficient amount to allow normal growth and development.

Milk is much better than meat for children. It is less expensive, more easily digested, and can be prepared in many different ways. It is better to take milk raw, if it is pure and clean, but if it cannot be taken this way it should be used in cooking as much as possible. Corn bread and milk, or corn meal mush and milk, furnish an adequate meal.

As a rule babies get plenty of milk until they are two or three years of age; then, too often, milk is taken from their diet and they suffer in after life from the lack of it.

All children under twelve years of age should take one quart of milk every day. One pint each is sufficient for those over twelve years. There is no food that will take the place of milk in the diet.

Milk is then the indispensable food for children, and whole milk in some form must be given them in order that the nutrition of the average child be maintained and a normal growth in weight and height be assured.

Governor Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, has said:

"The cow is a most wonderful laboratory. She takes the grass from the pasture and the roughage of the field and converts them into the most perfect food for man. In that food there is a mysterious something which scientists have found essential to the highest health of the human race and which cannot be found anywhere else. Men have sought for centuries the fabled fountain of youth. The nearest approach to that fountain is the udder of the cow."

Women Lawyers

One of the first of the fast-growing list of Portias to be admitted to the bar in this country was Miss Bess C. Sullivan of Chicago. After a short but successful practice, Miss Sullivan was appointed assistant prosecutor by State's Attorney Crowe. She is the first woman to be associated with the Illinois State attorney's office. Miss Sullivan assisted in the prosecution of the case against Carl Wanderer of Chicago, who was convicted last year of killing his wife and who was recently sentenced to death for the slaying of the "ragged stranger."

School Ventilation

We noted a discussion which appeared in some current publications on the comparative efficiency from a health standpoint of window ventilation and that produced by mechanical devices. From studies based on the sickness rates of school children during the winter in several city schools, some of which were ventilated by the former and some by the latter methods, Mr. George T. Palmer gives evidence in favor of the window ventilation.

He writes: "There appears to be something inherent in the indirect method of ventilating schoolrooms by means of forced draft and gravity exhaust, as practiced in this study, that is productive of respiratory affections—something which is not present in rooms ventilated with windows and gravity exhaust."

While he does not claim that window ventilation is entirely satisfactory, he insists that it is more nearly so than that obtained mechanically, and states that the temperature of window-ventilated schoolrooms can be reduced to 59 degrees without increasing the prevalence of colds. There should be ample exhaust outlets and pipes, located on inside walls with due thought given to the location and size of windows. Radiators beneath windows, which, as well as all other inlets, should be provided with a deflector to avoid direct drafts, frequent changes of air, and a maintained temperature of between 64 and 70 degrees will give a reasonable standard for health, according to this authority. Above all he emphasizes the value of cleanliness and the sterilizing properties of sunlight, and his conclusions are summed up as follows:

"1. Respiratory sickness is no greater in window-ventilated schoolrooms where the air is kept at 59 degrees, than it is where the temperature is 64.

"2. The respiratory sickness rate is greater in fan-ventilated rooms even when the rooms are more spacious and when the temperature is regarded as the proper temperature.

"3. In determining wholesomeness of air it is low temperature rather than chemical purity that counts."

However, for assemblies, theaters, and such larger rooms and more numerous crowds, he sees no escape from mechanical ventilation.

Diet for the School Child

A pamphlet coming from the Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior, bears the above title, and the legend, "Every child has a right to be as healthy as present knowledge can make him. Proper feeding is one of the chief factors in health."

It deals with good food habits, advises regularity, plenty of water, teaching of children to like what is good for them, and insists on avoiding hurry, or mental or emotional disturbances when eating. A discussion of the value of milk, eggs, fish, fowl, or meat or their equivalents, bread cereals, and other grain products, with tables showing comparative nourishing values, is followed by directions for cooking. Vegetables, fruits, sweets, and fats are given consideration as relating to the needs of children, and are followed by menus suitable for different ages. Basket and school luncheons, sandwiches and desserts, precede a summary which is as follows:

"The conservation of the health of the child is more important than the conservation of food.

"Every child should have at least one pint of milk a day, either to drink or in his food. It is the very best food there is. He should drink plenty of water between meals. Children should not drink tea or coffee at all.

"There should be plenty of bread and cereals, particularly oatmeal and whole wheat breads, which should be used freely. They are better for the growing children than white bread.

"Children cannot be healthy and strong unless they have plenty of vegetables every day. Fresh vegetables are to be preferred, but when these are unobtainable, dried or canned vegetables should be given. Fruits are necessary and should be given every day if possible.

"Fish may be substituted for meat, and eggs at fifty cents a dozen should not be considered a luxury when over forty cents a pound is paid for meat.

"Milk, vegetables, and cereals are more necessary than meat and should be provided first."

The pamphlet closes with sample summer diet for a week, for children from seven to twelve years, and similar diet suitable for winter. It was written by Lucy H. Gillett, and may be obtained from the Government Printing Office, at Washington, District of Columbia. Write to them for a list of their publications on home and child welfare.

Price Reduced

The price of the Centennial Yearbook of the Women's Department has been reduced by action of the General Executive, to 45 cents per copy. This action was taken as a result of a recent conference with a financial committee representing the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and Quorum of Twelve, at which conference were considered ways and means of reducing expense of the department and increasing its income.

The sale of the Centennial Yearbook has been extremely gratifying, but in recent weeks other things have deprived it of deserved attention. It has not been brought frequently before the readers of the HERALD, but we are glad to take this opportunity to assure them that the booklet is as vital to-day as it was a year ago. Dealing with fundamental principles, giving a broad glance over the field of the women's work in the church, and setting forth processes of a general nature concerning the prosecution of that work, it is still up-to-date, and a valuable addition to the library of any woman or man who wishes to get in touch with the ideals and objectives of the Women's Department.

Let each and all do a part in seeing that a copy of the Centennial Yearbook is in each Latter Day Saint home, thus contributing to both the spiritual and temporal success of this important department of the church. Order from the Herald Publishing House, sending cash with order.

GENERAL EXECUTIVE.

On Walking Westward

To get the fullest of nature,

To glimpse the landscape's deepest features,

To see the purest browns and greens of Lowland, field, and forest—

Go walking westward in the morning!

The sun's glow speeding on before you

Will light the face and every outline

Of every tree and rock and grass-blade,

Till you pause to look in silence—

While walking westward in the morning.

CHAPTER VIII

Mental Images and Ideas

1. A number of individuals are thinking of the same object or incident at the same time, but each will have a picture of the thing or incident peculiarly his own. Why?

2. What forms a large part of one's mental stream?

3. Why cannot the man or woman who has never taken part in athletic sports, really enjoy them nor appreciate what they mean to those who are wild with enthusiasm about them?

4. Paul says that Jesus was "unto the Greek, foolishness." Why?

5. In the light of the present chapter, how do you account for an individual continuing to make failures in his undertakings?

6. What determines the place which an individual occupies in the scale of creation?

7. Discuss the relation of habit, image, and idea.

8. The power of imagery varies in different people. At what age, generally, is it most vivid, and why?

9. When, according to Binet, is a man only the "fraction of a man"?

10. Much of one's memory and imagination are dependent upon what?

11. Why do students of geometry, mechanics, trigonometry, and other sciences have difficulty in understanding a theorem?

12. Why do great writers use types of images in their description and narration?

13. Where are images of greatest service?

14. What are the absolute requisites in cultivating the power of imaging?

15. Observe and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

DORA GLINES.

Building Our Temples for God

"The groves were God's first temples"—not made by man, but created by him under the operation of his laws. They grow to his glory and live to fulfill the purposes of their creation.

We hope to live to see the day when God's people shall build a glorious temple to his name, where rich blessings shall be poured out upon them, and they be baptized anew to holy purposes.

Who shall do this? They who dwell in Zion. And who are they? Those who have attained unto a certain condition called "the pure in heart." Only such can successfully live in this holy place, but the opportunity of qualifying for citizenship there is open to every individual.

A temple is a place where God's spirit especially resides, and this is what we are expected to make of our bodies. Paul, in his Corinthian letter, says, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

If we are not yet fit temples for the indwelling of this Holy Spirit it is ours to build to that condition. Building is defined as raising anything on a support or foundation. Surely we have foundation! What is it? The precious gospel, given to man as soon as he was placed upon earth, in order that he may develop towards a condition of salvation. It is at once a foundation and a means, through the use of which we can rear our individual temples to receive the abiding Comforter:

It is something which we can and should use every day of the week, and every hour of the day. Once a week is not sufficient, for it is the daily deeds which add to our structure, and finally result in a residence for whatever spirit we have builded unto.

Every day! The rotation of the earth bringing to us day and night, the seasons of the year in ceaseless succession, our eating, our sleeping, our work, our prayers, our tears—all are part of the school in which souls are shaped and molded for eternal purposes. To become fit temples for the constant indwelling of God's Spirit, we must enlist our daily efforts, over and over again. Thus we may become purified and exalted to the plane designed.

Doctor Crane has said, "The most honest man is the man who has been honest every day; the most virtuous woman is she who has behind her present virtue the inertia of a whole life full of virtuous thought and deed; the happiest person is the one who has long practiced being happy, and that soul is coolest and surest in a crisis who every day has schooled himself to self-mastery!" This is true because every act and thought has its influence. We may deem them of little consequence, but every little deed and habit, whether of unrestrained irritability or of self-control are as so many little bricks in the building we are erecting. Our little nameless, unremembered acts, even, will help or hinder not only our own building but that of others.

"Oh, I am of no consequence," says one. "I do not do enough of good or bad for anyone to follow me." Oh, but there is an influence you exert which you cannot escape. Some one is following your very neglect to do the right thing, and shaping their own actions thereby. As a matter of fact, it is a physical, mental, and spiritual impossibility to do nothing!

Thus the question becomes what and how. Since all our doings have an effect, let us consider for a moment, what shall a woman do, and how shall she build? Her views and outlook are changing. In Paul's time and for many generations thereafter she was the mild, dutiful, "ask-your-husband-at-home" type. Is she now? Ask the present brothers, fathers, and husbands. No, the twentieth century woman has come to know that she has an entity of her own, and should take an active stand for good or bad for herself, and not simply lean upon the decisions of men.

Marden has expressed it thus: "The twentieth century has been one of marvelous enterprise in every line of human endeavor—in discoveries, in invention, in social evolution, but the greatest discovery and the greatest surprise to civilization has been the discovery of woman as a new being!"

Man has been regarded for generations as the only one who counts; but we have come to realize that there are lines of achievement for women outside of ministering to the physical wants of man—where women must count for themselves. For these places and this work women must be trained and developed. She has always been given the work in the home, but has she been trained to fill that place scientifically? Not until the late century was it thought worth while to give a girl anything but an elementary education and even that did not include training in the only work woman was supposed to do! She had nothing of domestic science, or mothercraft, and yet she was supposed to do just that and do it well! It would seem that man must have thought her a marvelous being to be able to do her highly important work without preparational training, while he must needs be carefully instructed in his special lines.

Women, however, have discovered quite the contrary. They find that to properly manage a household they need training, and to properly train and develop their children, mentally, physically, and spiritually, they must have a knowledge of many sciences. To manage to fill these needs within the limits of the family income requires careful training in food values, body needs, and economical purchasing.

Woman has learned that the four walls of her home cannot form the boundary lines of her duty. There are matters needing the attention of the mothers wherever the members of her family must go—the school, the factory, and amusement places. Looked after only by man, some things have received only half the attention the Creator planned, for man power is but half the world power, and needs the cooperation of the other half, woman power, to successfully manage the problems of home, community, and nation. To do her share here, woman must study and become trained.

Since our educational system in the past has not provided this training for women, it is well that through the Women's Department of the church many of us may find what we lack, supplied in a brief and simple way through study courses, which lead us to fuller and wider research. If we take advantage of these opportunities, the present mothers who now have a voice in public affairs, may work intelligently to the end that the education of our girls shall not lack in these essentially important lines.

The girl who trains for some useful work that gains her an independent livelihood is more likely to leave the choosing of a life-partner to a time when her judgment is more mature, and she sees life in a truer sense, realizes that she must face sorrows and difficulties as well as smell roses and enjoy sunshine. Many a lovely dream of a newly wedded pair has been ruined when the wife failed in ability to cook a wholesome and appetizing meal, or when the purchasing power of the family income was so unwisely used that it disappeared, and still the family was illy-provided for. These are sad pictures, it is true, but a course of the proper kind of training might change them to happier ones.

Properly managed homes with atmospheres of love and unity, make for happy, useful lives, in the church and in society at large. Such homes are blessed of God, and such lives are the ones useful in Zion, such hearts, temples for God.

MRS. J. E. WILDERMUTH.

Mrs. F. L. Waters of Enoch Hill, Independence, Missouri, writes that in leaving their home in Houston, Texas, to move to Zion they crossed seven States and distributed tracts as they came. They were thus the means of her sister accepting the gospel since then. They received a welcome from the Saints in Independence. They are happy in the gospel and are looking forward to making this year the best one they have yet spent.

Inclosing ten dollars in gold as tithing, Brother and Sister W. R. Davison, of Sterling, Virginia, inform the Presiding Bishopric that having recently celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary, at which they received various presents and $85 in gold coin, they feel under the necessity of sending the amount stated as tithing. About thirty were present and the bride cut a fifteen-pound wedding cake.

Sister W. A. McDowell after twelve weeks of confinement in the Independence Sanitarium, has been removed to the home of Brother August Gratz in Independence and is now able to be about the house and outside a little. Brother McDowell has been in the city during that time visiting her daily and, because of the restrictions on visitors, has been her chief human stay in addition to the medical attention at the institution.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Faith in Affliction

A missionary with an incurable disease continues hopeful and cheerful.

I would like to express myself through your columns once more. It may be the last time, as two physicians say my disease is incurable (pernicious anæmia).

I wish to write of events dating from March 20, 1921, while holding a series of meetings at Crosswell, Michigan. Being associated with Brother A. Leverton, he spoke to me by the Spirit and said, "Unto you, my servant Brackenbury, thou art facing trials, but I the Lord God will send mine angels before you to prepare the way."

Now, this I believe has been realized, as about the last of April my hands began to get numb and I felt a shortness of breath when under physical strain. This was at Elkton, Michigan.

About the 15th of May we started a series of meetings at Orion, Michigan. We got bills printed, and we billed the town. Sisters Forbes, Hammond, and Ellen Lambkin helped to make a house to house canvass; here we enjoyed our labor, though feeling weakness of body increasing. Four were baptized. This was the last series of meetings we held.

I wish to relate an experience which came to me while at Pontiac. A Brother Miller, when preaching, said Satan was doing all in his power to change the kingdom of God into the kingdom of darkness, when an open vision came before me and I saw the power of Satan, and his work of darkness. As I beheld it I said, How can the people stand against such an element? The answer by the Spirit was, I will endow my faithful Saints that they can stand.

The last sermon I preached was at Bay Port, July 17. There was a two-day meeting at this place July 24 and 25. Sunday at prayer meeting we had a large crowd, Brethren Grant, St. John, and I presiding. Here, as well as at Pontiac, there came another open vision before me such as I never had before; but it was in fulfillment of a promise to me in my patriarchal blessing given years ago by J. J. Bailey, that I would be so enwrapped in the Spirit, that, like Paul of old, I could not tell whether in the body or out of the body.

Here is about what I saw: I saw the Savior standing with a pointer in his hand, and upon the wall a very long chart; and my deeds in life as far back as I can remember, both good and bad, were upon it. He pointed to the bad deeds and said, You know you did this and that. With shame I had to admit it. He finally said, I have forgiven you for all this; nevertheless, whatsoever a man soweth that he shall also reap; that forgiveness does not do away with the result of a broken law. As I came to myself and realized that a prayer meeting was in progress, Brother Sheffer spoke by the Spirit to me as follows, "Thus further saith the Spirit unto you my servant, known among men as Frederick, Can you not trust me? Have I not cared for you in sickness, in trials; yea, have I not protected you from the assassin's knife? I have beheld your works; yea, they lay before me. Your sins are all pardoned; you stand clean and pure before me this day. Because of this I have raised up unto you a host of staunch friends."

It is easy to see the beautiful harmony between what I saw in vision and what was spoken to me by Brother Sheffer, thus giving me as it were a double testimony of a Father's kindness and watchcare, or the angels preparing the way.

My mind went about blank here, so I went home July 26, and on to Traverse City, Michigan, the 27th, to Brother H. A. Doty's.

I finally was treated by one Doctor Johnson, who has a hospital there. I was in his hospital four days. He gave me a general examination and treated me for three weeks with a serum treatment. When I gave way in weakness again he came to see me and said he had done all he could. I said, "Then, if that is it, the next is your charge. You give me your account and I will turn it over to the Bishop and he will check you up for it." He said, "You do not owe me anything. Tell your Bishop to keep that money to do some other poor soul some good with." I said, "Bless your soul, doctor; you don't want to do that, do you?" He said, "Yes, I do; that is the only way I have of earning my way into heaven." I said, "Well, that is better than a lot of this glory and amen stuff some people have." He said, "I am not perfect; I do many things that are wrong; but if I do a kind act, I try to do it in harmony with practical Christianity." I said, "God will not let you go unrewarded."

October 24 I left the loving Saints of Traverse City to go to the Sanitarium at Independence, Missouri. Examinations were begun by Doctor Harrington, whose final analysis was, incurable.

I heard President F. M. Smith once call the nurses angels of mercy. Well, after being under their fostering care for about five weeks I will not dispute the term.

I stayed nearly two weeks in the hospitable home of Brother William Campbell and arrived at home December 17 where we are in about two feet of snow.

It seems unless the Master intervenes the only thing is to await the messenger of death. Let that be as it may, I trust the angels are leading the way.

I cannot answer my many friends personally, though it would please me much to do so.

May the good Master bless the church in general, that I know to be divine. Thanks to all who have assisted me in my affliction by writing encouraging words, also giving financial help.

I ever remain your affectionate brother in life or death,
F. S. BRACKENBURY.

Yearbook of the Women's Department in Zion

We are pleased to note the issuance of a new yearbook by the Women's Department of Zion, of thirty-two pages, in neat cover with detailed information concerning local ideals and organization, selling at a nominal cost of twenty-five cents. A subheading on the title-page indicates the scope of the book: Organization, objective, program.

We notice there are thirty-seven groups in Zion, with the elder in charge of each, and the leader, secretary, friendly visitor, home department worker, cradle roll worker, the addresses of each, time of meeting, and character of the activities of each group listed. They also list the general officers of the organization, with bureaus and special departments; also the Zionie officers. The quarterly council meets at the Stone Church and is composed of the General Women's Department officers, Zionie Women's Department officers, and the pastor and bishop in Zion.

The "Zionie Council" meets quarterly and is composed of the following: General officers, Zionie officers, group officers as mentioned above, presidents of other women's organizations, etc.

Their calendar of general activities lists eighteen meetings extending from September 7, 1921, to July 21, 1922.

General statements are made concerning the work of the various officers and the general objectives before the Women's Department in Zion, which follow:

1. Preschool children brought to clinics at intervals.
2. Special effort to obtain "opportunity school" privileges for those children who need it.
3. "Milk in the diet of the growing child" campaign.
4. Warm school lunches in cold weather.
5. Milk at school for the undernourished.
6. Pure milk for Independence.
7. Proper garbage disposal.
8. A "baby week" exhibit.
9. Renewed civic improvement propaganda.
10. Evening classes for business girls.
11. Survey for the Young Women's Bureau of all girls over eleven in Zion.
12. An enlarged and functioning Zionie Women's Department Library.

ESTACADA, OREGON.

Editors Herald: I am writing this from our far western shores. I am one of the isolated Saints, living thirty-five miles from our Portland Branch. But I love our work and in reading the HERALD for December 6, I found Brother McGuire's letter and financial statement of the church.

And now, dear Saints, brothers and sisters in the family of God, I feel led to make this appeal to you, all over this broad land of ours. Will you, dear Saints, from ten years old and upward, give up your Christmas presents this year and send Brother McGuire every cent of money that you had planned on using to buy Christmas presents with for the loved ones of our families and friends.

Saints, if we will do this wherever this beloved HERALD and Ensign will go to the Saints, I feel sure that the deficiency will be wiped out, because I am sure that there are but few of us who would spend less than a dollar and the great majority would spend not less than five or ten dollars apiece.

Now, Saints, I am sure that we can easily sacrifice that amount and I am sure that if we will tell our little ones that the Lord's church is in debt, and that we must give up something for him and the work we love, and ask them to do without the presents this Christmas, then God will bless us abundantly for all we do.

I am willing to give or have others who would give to me send the amount that the presents would cost to the raising of this deficiency. Let us give presents only of what we may have on hand, or make something of what we have on hand, except to our loved ones under ten or eleven years of age. Come, Saints, let us rally to the call of our Bishop and rise up in our might and give all we can in this way and perhaps God will bless us so much this coming year that this will not be necessary another year.

I pray God will guide us all in this.

Your sister in the work,

ALMA L. COOP.

From Jamesport, Missouri, John R. Garr writes that they have a fine Sunday school, prayer meetings on Wednesday nights, also preaching once a month by C. T. Orr. They had a nice Christmas program with about fifty Saints and friends attending. They would be happy to have a few more families of Saints move into their neighborhood.

Building permits in Independence in 1921 were double those of the previous year, and the tendency is towards a still further increase in erection of buildings.

LITTLETON, COLORADO.

Editors Herald: At the regular business meeting of the Denver Branch, Brother E. J. Williams was chosen to preside. He chose elders E. F. Shupe and Clarence Bruno as counselors. Sister Ella Branna, who has so successfully superintended the Sunday school the past six months, will continue for another six months.

Last week a system of indirect lighting was installed in our church, a great improvement over the old system.

Hale W. Smith has been laid up most of the past week with a sore arm. He is not the only one afflicted in that way.

George Wixom, district president, has gone home to California for the holidays.

Sunday school Christmas entertainment will be held Saturday night, December 24. Our Christmas offering is coming along nicely.

E. F. SHUPE.

BORING, OREGON, January 2, 1922.

Editors Herald: I wish to bear my testimony to the world and the dear Saints of a great blessing I have received from my heavenly Father. A year ago those who knew me thought I would not be living now. I was sorely afflicted with cancer of the intestines. The doctors said there was no hope without an operation. The dear Saints united their faith and prayers and fastings with mine. To-day I am healed, and at fifty-seven years old I feel better than I have for years. I can eat, sleep, and work as good as I ever could.

I pray that others who are afflicted as I was will not get discouraged. Stand firm in the faith. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may use the life God has so kindly spared to me in his cause, that I may never grow weary of well doing.

Kansas City Stake

Kansas City has the world beat on winter weather. The middle of the season is nearly here, and so far our coldest weather has been eight degrees above zero. Sunday was a beautiful day. While the air was brisk and invigorating, the sun shone brightly; just the kind of a day that people like to be outdoors. The reports from various parts of the stake are that there was a good attendance at the various services. At Central the speakers were Samuel A. Burgess and Pastor J. A. Tanner.

The pastor reports the group work generally on the upward tendency. Some groups are doing splendidly in the way of interesting meetings. At Argentine Henry M. Gunion was elected to care for the Religio interests for the ensuing year, and Roy E. Browne heads the Sunday school. Group officials appear to be active here.

At East Argentine a round table session was held, conducted by W. S. Brown, the discussion of which was upon the immediate activities of the church, including stewardships, Auditorium, and various institutions of the church.

Malvern Hill for the past two weeks reports splendid activities all along the line, including the group services which show splendid interest. Brother F. J. Cleveland has favored them with a stereopticon lecture on each Sunday evening on evidences of the divinity of the Book of Mormon. The pastor, W. O. Hands, is able to be in attendance again after a short absence, he having had to undergo a slight operation at the Independence Sanitarium.

At Mount Washington Nellie Walker, one of their Oriole Girls sixteen years of age, was accidentally killed Sunday, the 8th, when the motor car in which she was riding was overturned. She died soon after reaching the hospital, her injuries consisting of a fractured skull and a broken neck. Phyllis Laska of the Argentine Church, an occupant of the same car, was very severely injured also.

At Armourdale the series of meetings started Sunday, the 1st, are to continue another week. F. J. Cleveland was the speaker at 11, and George Jenkins dispensed the word at 7.45. Auxiliary services are good and well attended.

At Montgall the special series of meetings conducted by Alvin Knisley are well attended and will continue another week. All are spiritually built up.

Lula Sandy organized a woman's class, which will meet each Thursday at 1.30. Sister Oxendale of the Second Church is teacher.

At Second the special meetings conducted by Amos T. Higdon will continue another week. The speaker at 7.45 was Paul N. Hanson of the Twelve.

Christmas at Holden Home

Days before Christmas packages and mail rolled in and everyone seemed enthused with the spirit of the season. Voices were heard through the hall singing praises to God until the bell called us to the dining room, beautifully decorated for the occasion. After partaking of the morning meal, reading and prayer followed as usual.

Then, by request of the matron, Mrs. Carr, we repaired to the living room again to be reminded that it was Christmas by the pretty decorations and the beautiful tree placed there the night before. Santa Claus (the spirit of love) had not forgotten the Holden Home on his rounds. He had entered and left many gifts, also a generous supply of fruits, nuts, pop corn, and candy, also a box of candy for each one. Santa Claus knew we "children" like sweets.

After all the excitement a rest was necessary before the noon meal. Again we were seated in the dining room. The tables were filled with a bountiful feast of chicken, dressing, and all that goes to make a Christmas dinner, practically all donated from Saints and friends. It is good to grow old when friends emphasize the years with increasing kindness.

Sunday school was held at 2.30, with a short program. The lunch was served later, consisting of fruit salad and cake. Preaching in the evening by Brother Hancock. So closed the day.

"Thank God from whom all blessings flow."

MARY LAMSON.

Lamoni Stake

Brother D. T. Williams is just now in the middle of a missionary effort among the Saints and outsiders at Chariton, Iowa. He is enjoying good liberty and an agreeable interest on the part of the people.

As Brother Garver has often said, "Me and the Home Pond are still here!" Although we have many times been afraid that the Home Pond would dry up and leave us, we had never entertained any such fear concerning Brother Garver! He has administered to our needs in a pastoral way for some fifteen years, and many of his younger and more recently arrived charges can remember the guidance of no other hand from his office. The announcement of his new appointment as Ensign editor was a shock.

In this time when we are to witness his departure, we are inclined to forget the stern things which he may have said concerning our sins and shortcomings; we are more inclined to remember his compassion for our weakness, the trying struggles he has passed through in the leadership of this people, the Christlike unselfishness with which he has given to the limit of both physical and spiritual strength, the continuation of his heavy labors under severe trials and weaknesses of body and loss of health. The remembrance of his vigils both night and day with our sick and dying, of his comfort and counsel in times of distress, will always be clear and strong. And we will remember the great benefit his life and ministry have been to us the more when he is gone from us.

Lamoni has long since become reconciled to her fate of producing leaders only to have them taken away for service in the other fields of the church when the fruitage of the greatest service and power was about to take place. It is felt that it is so in the case of the taking of Brother Garver.

The young people of Lamoni have appreciated and will miss him particularly. The Graceland student body have always been among his most ardent admirers and friends. This may be taken as fact from one who is in a position to know.

To those who may have the opportunity of doing so in the future, it is recommended that they get acquainted with his powerful, remarkable, and lovable personality. This has been the source of the unqualified admiration in which the young people here hold him.

Independence

Word from President Frederick M. Smith is that he will be in San Francisco on the 18th and Salt Lake City, Utah, on the 23d, and from there will return to Independence.

Word from Bishop J. F. Keir, who has been at Clearwater, Florida, for a number of weeks, with his wife, recuperating from a breakdown of his health, is to the effect that they will leave on the 14th for a trip leading homeward. He is feeling good and has gained in flesh. He will visit various points in Florida and Alabama in the interests of the church ere reaching Independence.

Apostle U. W. Greene recently returned to Independence from a trip to Oklahoma, having spent two weeks of that time among the Indians. The Otoes, Iowas, and Cheyennes held their usual big camp-tribal meeting at Christmas time, which gathering includes visitors from various other tribes. Brother Jack Koshiway was on the arrangement committee. Brother Greene had the privilege of addressing several assemblages at this time and to see the Indians participating in one of their typical gatherings.

He addressed the Otoes at Redrock on three occasions, where he was associated with Elder A. H. Christensen. He visited the Iowas in company with Elder Shakespeare, and the Cheyennes with Elder Harvey Syckle. These points are some fifty to eighty miles apart, but the distance is covered by auto quite conveniently. Elder Greene had preached at Ripley, Oklahoma, also Oklahoma City, and has arranged to return to the latter place for a series of meetings to begin January 15.

The attendance at the school of elders or school of the ministry at the Stone Church at 2.30 Sunday afternoon was very good, about 430 being counted, including a large number of visiting priesthood from Kansas City and other near-by points. Elder Walter W. Smith, church historian, gave the first of a series of lectures, this one being entitled, "Teaching the first duty of the minister." The outline appears in this department and arrangements are being made to publish these lectures in some convenient form, so they will be available for general distribution. Announcements will be made as soon as they are ready. There is much interest manifested in the meetings.

An installation service was held in the evening at the Stone Church in honor of the officers and teachers of the Mount Zion Sunday school. The program included the arrangement of the entire official and teaching staff on the platform and a program consisting of four numbers by the Auditorium Orchestra, an address on "Religious education," by Walter W. Smith, and a charge to the officers and teachers, by Paul M. Hanson.

Printed programs were distributed, listing the entire staff, including forty officers, sixteen teachers in the adult department, eighteen senior, two normal, twenty-one intermediate, sixteen junior, twenty-seven primary, eighteen beginner.

Christmas offering total at the Mount Zion Sunday school to date is $4,001.85, which is $1.85 over the aim for the year. The attendance Sunday was 1,315. Second Independence School, with an attendance averaging around 260, has raised about $1,126.

The Liberty Street choir is planning to render the cantata, "Esther," this winter.

Some distressing accident occurred in Kansas City on the evening of the 12th, in which David, eldest son of Elder David J. Krahl, of Holden, Missouri, was seriously injured, receiving a fracture of the skull, and concussion of the brain. He has no clear remembrance of the accident and was taken to his boarding place by unknown persons who left without divulging their identity. Brother Krahl has been employed in Kansas City and is now in the Sanitarium. He seems to have a faint remembrance of waiting for a street car and of later giving some one the address of his rooming-place. His clothing was badly soiled and bloodstained, and somewhat torn.

Elder Krahl is still confined to his bed at Holden from a paralytic stroke, but is making slow recovery.

The wife of Elder R. J. Lambert has made some improvement, but is still seriously ill. Their son Bruce is also confined to the house and making but indifferent progress in recovery.

On the evening of the 12th there was born to Brother and Sister G. H. Hulmes a baby girl, who died at once and left the mother in a very critical condition. For a while her life was despaired of, but at this time she is making fine progress towards recovery. Sister Hulmes is well known as the leader of the Stone Church choir. Her work is now being carried on by Sister Fred B. Farr.

The series of concerts arranged by the Music Club has been well subscribed to so far, and seems to be recognized by all as a high-class course, worthy of patronage.

The Religio program next Friday evening will consist of an address by Superintendent of Schools E. B. Street, on "Recreation in community life." The program begins at 9 p. m., following the usual lesson period. A debate was recently held on "Resolved that exclusion of Orientals is un-American," the decision being in favor of the affirmative.

The radiophone sermon sent out from the church station, 9ZH, was again by E. D. Moore. The arrangement was that Walter W. Smith should deliver this address, but the installation service prevented. Reports on the initial effort last week were had from Cameron, Holden, Plattsburg, Missouri, Topeka, Kansas, and local points. No doubt other reports will yet come in, and the interest increase. The mechanism was not in perfect condition, which will be remedied, and these eight o'clock Sunday evening services, managed by Arthur B. Church, become widely known and appreciated.

The children's and young people's services at the Stone Church are continuing their most successful work. At the service for children twelve years of age and under, about two hundred attended on Sunday, where Brother A. L. Sanford has presided for several years, loyally assisted by Sister Sanford, Sister J. T. Westwood, and many others. Within recent weeks the meeting was divided and those over twelve placed under the care of Walter W. Smith, and it has been successful from the beginning.

A check-up on the attendance at the various Religios in Zion last Friday evening showed a total attendance of 714 and the Sunday schools on Sunday, 2,175, a veritable army of students.

ENOCH HILL. A special local missionary effort was conducted last week by this church at the Pleasant Grove Schoolhouse, six miles southeast of Independence. A few days prior to the meeting, circular letters bearing a general invitation and containing the texts which were used, were distributed throughout the neighborhood. Many came as a result of this publicity and the little schoolhouse was crowded each night with an interested congregation.

Their choir provided special music and also some of the young folks from Walnut Park helped along this line. One of the results of this and previous efforts is that it will now continue as a mission or group with a local elder in charge. This elder has recently moved into the district and regular sermons and visits to the various homes are planned to further stimulate the interest. May God bring into the fold the many honest in heart there.

There is surely a great need for the local ministry everywhere to make openings and to carry the gospel to the children of men. The lack of funds to sustain missionaries in the field in large numbers ought to be a stimulus to each one holding the ministry to do all he is capable of performing along these lines.

WALNUT PARK. The eight o'clock prayer service was enjoyed by all and the good Spirit prevailed. We sincerely hope that others may join us in the good feast.

The Sunday school is doing good work under the leadership of Gland L. Smith and the Religio functioning well with Doctor T. B. Griffen as superintendent.

The afternoon prayer service was well attended, notwithstanding very few of the priesthood were present. The special request that all ordained men attend the school of the ministry at the Stone Church diminishes our ranks, but while these leaders of ours are preparing for more efficient service to God and his people, he is watching over and assisting us. We were cheered by the testimonies and prayers.

The evening service was preceded by a half-hour musical program by choir and orchestra, with a spiritual feast following by Patriarch Ammon White.

As a result of considerable personal work, the women's meeting of group 28 on the 16th was excellently attended and the sisters greatly inspired to enlist more fully in the work before us. Sister Etta Hunt, organizer, addressed us, and her talk with others present found favorable response.

ROCKLIN, CALIFORNIA.

Editors Herald: During the Christmas week an informal reception was given Sister Mary H. Grant, the occasion being her ninetieth birthday. She lives at Rocklin with her daughters, Sisters C. W. Earl and Ada M. Grant. Sister Grant has been a member of the church since her early childhood. She was personally acquainted with the martyrs and endured many of the hardships of the early days of the church.

JULIA A. CROCKER.

Phoenix, Arizona

Phoenix is still one of the active branches of the church, with preaching services, prayer meeting, Sunday school, Religio, and the Women's Department—all held regularly each week. I venture to say that the average attendance of this branch for the past year is equal to, if not better than, that of any branch in the church, considering the number of Saints who are living in Phoenix and vicinity.

Last Sunday our attendance at Sunday school was seventy-four. Since the cooler weather has come our Religio, which meets every Friday, has also increased in attendance, with an average attendance equal to that of the Sunday school. Our preaching services and prayer meetings are also well attended, and of late our prayer services have been very spiritual.

We have a nice lot of young people and they are now organized into a choir. The leader and organizer, Brother Johnson, plans to have young people's prayer meetings in connection with the choir as well as social times. Sister Helen Rogers was chosen choir director at the recent election of branch officers.

Among the new arrivals this fall was Brother Jesse R. Johnson from Omaha, Nebraska. Since his arrival here he has been called to the office of elder and at the election of branch officers, Tuesday, January 3, was chosen branch president, relieving the writer who is now free to do missionary work. We are confident Brother Johnson is well qualified for pastoral work and will be in God's hands a blessing to the Saints.

The writer during the past two weeks has been assisting Brother J. M. Simmons in some street preaching services in the town of Mesa, a Mormon settlement. We have had large crowds out to hear us and there is quite an interest aroused among them. We are sowing the seed which will bear fruit in God's own due time. We also have several friends among the Gentiles who are always on hand to encourage us.

K. H. ROGERS.

Manteno Developments

At a largely attended trial at Manteno, Illinois, on last Thursday—the vicinity where the Deselm Saints' church edifice was desecrated some months ago—a young man who had been working in the interests of the Saints was found guilty of disorderly conduct on the evidence of his accusers and with no defense offered assessed a small fine and costs. The judge in charge explained that because of the feeling rampant in the community he was levying this small fine. The case was appealed to the circuit court where a jury trial may be had.

The altercation from which the charge arose was an attempt by local citizens to eject the young man from a public meeting, and he attempted to defend what seemed to be his right to remain.

The sentiment continues strongly against the Saints, as manifested in the large attendance at the trial. Perhaps three hundred people were on hand. Bishop I. A. Smith was in attendance and has since returned to his office at Independence.

Brother Morris McLaughlin writes from Albin, Wyoming, to say it is a fine location with a number of privileges for Saints who are interested in a location in that section of the country. Those interested might write him at the above address.

MISCELLANEOUS

Chatham District Presidency

Elder A. G. Larkey has filed with the Presidency his resignation as president of the Chatham, Ontario, District. Pending the convening of the district conference, we are asking his assistants in the district presidency, Elder W. R. Leverton and Elder Stewart Lamont, to assume charge of the district.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 12, 1922.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of the Eastern Oklahoma District: Owing to the resignation of B. F. Brown as Bishop's agent of the Eastern Oklahoma District, on account of moving out of the district, it has become necessary to appoint a successor, and George C. Thompson, Haileyville, Oklahoma, has been selected to take up the work.

Appreciation is hereby expressed for the faithful services of Brother Brown and for the support you have given him. We are sure you will also find Brother Thompson a faithful servant and we solicit your confidence and support in his behalf for the welfare of the Lord's work.

Praying that the Lord's blessings, both spiritually and temporally, may be meted out in rich measure unto the Saints during the year before us, thus making it possible for them to contribute the means necessary for the prosecution of the gospel work, I remain,

Your fellow laborer,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

Outline for Study

The following outline was distributed to all the members of the priesthood in attendance at the afternoon service on Sunday, January 15, at the Stone Church in Independence. It was the basis for the lecture by Walter W. Smith and the lecture will be printed later from stenographic notes.

I. The Statement of the Problem.

- a. The scriptural injunction is to teach. (Matthew 28: 19.)
- b. The nature of their work demands teaching. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 22.)

II. Teaching Governed by Laws.

- a. All things governed by laws. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 10.)
- b. Teaching has its natural laws. (Seven Laws, chapter 1.)
- c. The laws of thought basic in the power to change man. (Jevons.)

III. The Advantage of Knowing the Laws.

- a. To consciously avoid error and loss. (Jevons Logic, p. 8.)
- b. To gain the largest returns for the effort. (1 Corinthians 9: 26.)

IV. The Definition of Teaching.

- a. Teaching is "causing to know." (John 8: 32.)
- b. Arousing in another the idea you have in your own mind.
- c. Every item of knowledge is gained in the same manner.

V. The Elements Involved in Teaching.

- a. The actors.
- b. The factors.
- c. The actions.

VI. The Laws of Teaching Stated.

- a. The teacher must know.
- b. The learner must attend.
- c. The language must be common.
- d. The lesson must be explainable.
- e. Teaching must arouse the pupil's mind.
- f. Learning is thinking into one's own mind the thoughts of another.

VII. The Rules of Teaching Stated.

- a. Know thoroughly the lesson.
- b. Gain and keep the attention and interest of the pupil.
- c. Use only words understood by both teacher and pupil.
- d. Proceed from the known to the unknown.
- e. Use the pupil's mind, leading him to discover the truth.
- f. Require the pupil to reproduce, himself, the truth or fact.

VIII. Cautions in Teaching.

- a. It may seem too simple.
- b. No danger of losing enthusiasm—skill creates it.
- c. Information important equally with emotion.

Christmas Offering Receipts

The Presiding Bishop reports having received to January 15 a total of $20,555.31 as Christmas offering.

Foreign Students Royally Entertained at Independence

Our foreign students enjoyed a rather strenuous vacation in Independence. They came back gloriously happy and excruciatingly tired. They were fat from overeating, thin from undersleeping, paralyzed in the arms from shaking hands, cramped in the lips from smiling, exhausted in intellectual resources from much talking, and drunken from intoxication of the "viewpoint."

Altogether, we were much afraid that Independence people had so pampered and spoiled our foreigners that we would neither be able to entertain nor take care of them any longer. But one thing saved the day. The foreigners came back so tired and worn out that they were glad to get back where they could rest and sleep awhile.

The rest of the students, as well as the foreigners, are very happy for the open-hearted hospitality of Independence people which enabled these students to put in the vacation so merrily.—Graceland Record.

Appreciation From Children's Home

We have no way of identifying the senders of some of the boxes and packages that were received by us during the holiday season, as post mark and name for some reason did not appear, and as no letter has come regarding them. I am taking this means of acknowledging them and expressing to those who may not have heard from me personally, our appreciation of their thoughtfulness in helping to make for the children a very happy Christmas.

LAMONI, IOWA.

ZILPHA MONROE, Superintendent.

Edward I. Yoder, pastor of the Toledo, Ohio, Branch, writes that the work is moving forward in that place. They had a three-week series of meetings in which many new friends were made and three baptized. One of the young men recently baptized was called to the office of deacon. Their attendance has increased and on last Sunday evening reached as high as seventy-seven. The Wednesday evening prayer service had an attendance of forty-one, with the Spirit attending in power. Women's work, with Sister Pearl Yoder as leader, is advancing. A number of outside ladies are attending and others expect to in the future. Religio is doing fine with W. G. Kimball as president. Satan, however, is busy, but so are the priesthood.

The Niagara Falls, New York, choir, under the leadership of Mrs. George Landes, as director, rendered the Christmas cantata entitled, "The light of the world," by F. B. Holton, at the chapel Christmas evening. Both the choruses and solo parts were rendered in a manner very pleasing to those who were permitted to attend. The soloists were: Miss Mary Discon, Miss Emma Sharp, Mrs. James Musgrave, Mr. W. C. Hill, and Mr. James Musgrave.

W. H. Chandler writes from Calgary, Saskatchewan, that at their annual election William H. Atkinson, a priest, was elected president and A. S. King was chosen teacher. He hopes the Saints of that place will unite to encourage and support the officers in their endeavors to lead and guide during these times of stress.

A Christmas concert at Jonesport, Maine, was postponed on account of a diphtheria epidemic, but held on the evening of January 8, and well attended, the church being filled to its utmost capacity. The musical part only was given at this time. The large choir, accompanied by a six-piece orchestra, gave a program which was greatly appreciated.

Some Methods of Higher Criticism

Variety of names means but little in tracing origins.

Following the lines of the so-called higher criticism, we would secure some remarkable results. Some of these critics have proceeded upon the assumption that the name Elohim could not have been used by the same writer who used the name Jehovah; so, through a critical analysis, they find two or three main sources in the Old Testament.

Again, in considering the religions of other peoples of antiquity, we are quite prone to find everywhere polytheism. It is quite possible that there did exist a real polytheism, especially with the rank and file of the people, but traditions that have come down to us lead us to believe that the priesthood, at least, recognized, even among these heathen people the truth of the one God, the Eternal Father, the Maker of all things, heaven and earth, though various names were used to represent his various attributes and some of these names have, doubtless, been taken by later students to signify a different deity.

Recently, while seated in a church service, we started to write down some of the names used to-day to refer to the Deity. We have first of all that word Deity; then God, Jehovah, the Lord, Providence, our Father, the Supreme One, the Highest, the Omnipotent, the All-seeing, the Eternal, Everlasting, the Soul of the Race, Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End, the Unchangeable, the Changeless, as well as various combinations of these names, as the everlasting Father, heavenly Father.

As referring to Jesus, we have in addition to that name, Christ, the Messiah, the Lord, the Son of Man, the Son of God, the Lamb of God, the Lion of Judah, the Lamb, Shiloh, the Only Begotten, Immanuel, the Prince of Peace, the Savior, our Redeemer, the Logos.

The Holy Spirit is not called by so many different names, but it is also known as the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, the Great Teacher, the Breath of God, the Spirit of God, the Power of the Highest, the Spirit of Truth, the Eternal Guide, the Light, the Second Breath.

To these there may be added other names not quite so common, but after all it makes quite a considerable list, though we recognize that these names do not indicate a polytheistic attitude. They are not the names of different beings but are, for the larger part, descriptive and interpretative terms.

Drawing Power

The power of God, though not seen by carnal eye, is plainly felt.

A man, on one occasion, saw a boy standing still, looking upward, and asked him what he was doing.

"I am flying my kite."

The man looked up and searched the sky in vain and said, "I can see no kite."

"Well," the boy answered, "I am sure it is there; first because I saw it go up; and next, because I can feel the pull and moving."

The Christian, of London, England, uses the above as the basis for an editorial on the drawing power of God, "And I, if I be lifted up, shall draw all men after me. Therefore, with loving kindness have I drawn thee."

But they base the argument entirely on this drawing power and say "in these latter centuries where the voice of inspiration has ceased and when it is not possible to stand on Olivet to watch the ascending figure of our Lord as he passes within the veil, we may yet feel the pull of the unseen power of the world to come. There may be no vision, no voice, . . . but the heart senses that you are in his very presence."

It is a wonderful thing and it is true that men do feel that pull of the eternal, even though invisible. But there appears no logical reason why, for these later centuries the voice of inspiration has ceased except that man has become deaf to that voice. Where there is no vision the people perish, and great and important as is that drawing of the Spirit of God, the Lord intends that his people should also possess the vision of his divine presence and audible voice.

If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.—John 14: 23.

Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me.—Revelation 3: 20.

The World Sobbing in Grief

A plea for unity of the churches to prevent war.

"Never has the world sobbed in grief as it sobs to-night. You here are well fed and well clothed and comfortable, but millions of people in Europe are starving and cold and desolate to-night. Hundreds of thousands of professors and students are in dire want," said Doctor Peter Ainslie in his address at the First Christian Church in Independence recently.

Doctor Ainslie is on a year's leave of absence from his pastorate in Baltimore, touring the United States from coast to coast in the interest of a unity of the churches to prevent war. He is a churchman of international repute.

He addressed a small congregation, principally of Disciples and Presbyterians, and was pleased to note that there could be even this small degree of unity manifest, and was very urgent in his plea for a greater unity among all Christians, at least on the one purpose of preventing another world war.

He told of how, in the beginning of the war, he and several other international workers in France came to the conclusion that they should issue a public protest against the war, which was at that time so seriously threatening the very life of France, and the peace of the world.

After being advised not to do so by the American ambassador in France, on the grounds that the French might not understand their motives, these men, after serious and careful consideration, drafted a two-hundred-word protest to be cabled to President Wilson, and presented it to the European editor of the New York Times.

This editor responded feelingly with this sentiment: "Your communication will not only be printed in our paper in the morning, but will be featured on the front page. I have waited for this for three weeks. I have heard from every other organization in a similar vein, and had come to the conclusion that the church was dead."

Doctor Ainslie says the church was, to all appearances, dead, or it could have prevented the outbreak and, says he, "The white race cannot stand another war. . . . In case another war does break out, the white race will pass, and the colored races of Japan, China, and others will rise and take their place," quoting the opinion of a number of our most prominent military men.

He pointed out that the white race is now greatly inferior in number to the other, and that the utter terror of another war can be prevented, if the churches will unite, at least outwardly, in an insistent demand that, instead of trying to settle difficulties by war, world complications be taken before one of the two international courts now existing, and then, around a table, come to a settlement. He argued at length that war has never settled anything; that the Civil War to abolish slavery resulted in the death of hundreds of thousands of men, yet left us with one of the greatest problems of the age, the Negro problem.

Testimonies were repeated from various Southerners who were firmly of the opinion that, had the war not taken place, slavery, at the rate it was giving way by the freeing of slaves, could not have gone on longer than 1890, at the most. In fact the United States was cited as the only nation that had ever freed its slaves by war.

The speaker even urged that the Revolutionary War aroused a fighting spirit in us which has been our attitude ever since and even dominated our religious life, and even it could have been brought about better by slower and less disastrous means.

Interesting figures were offered which included the fact that one half of the entire evaluation of France is owed in war debt. Austria owes two thirds of her evaluation, and, in fact, one half of the total value of the world is represented in war debts.

Yet the preparation is going on, England doubling, since the war, her fighting capacity threefold, Japan threefold, and the United States sixfold. Quoting an army authority, he said that in the event of another war, the recent World War would be but as a skirmish. With four airplanes carrying the deadly Lewisite gas, every living creature in New York City could be killed in one night.

We noted that Doctor Ainslie's argument for church unity was principally predicated upon a union for some general aims, and an avoidance of the discussion of theological differences. He believes that if the churches get together (he used as examples—though no doubt he intends to include all so-called evangelical churches—the Presbyterians, and Disciples, and Methodists, and Baptists) they can afford to forget minor differences, and in fact his experience has been that they do. He related some important historic developments in this regard in England.

Doctor Ainslie is a contributing editor of The Christian Work, and has written some very stirring articles on the demand for church union, is very thoroughly imbued with his ideal, and speaks convincingly, in so far as his immediate problem is concerned.

It is easy to believe that the churches have failed, but equally as easy to see that they will continue to fail so long as their religious concepts do not reach deep enough into our modern civilized life that it can revive and change and direct the spiritual life of its devotees.

Those who subscribe to a superficial code which does not modify the natural selfish tendency of humanity, are not inclined to consider seriously the needs of others, especially when that need is thousands of miles away and is not brought personally within the vision of those who should be deeply stirred.

It is quite evident that the religious world at large needs a new evangel. It needs a new concept of God's purposes and plans as to the consummation of his plan of salvation.

But no unity can be effective unless the cohesive power which holds it together is deeply and strongly laid upon the true gospel principles.

The tendency has been, among those who have worked so hard for church union on this basis and appear to be so liberal in their desire for a unity of all classes of religionists, to exclude representatives of our church. Yet we too are interested in peace, and in establishing a basis for the prevention of war. As a church we have been as active, perhaps, as any other church in the promulgation of peace ideals and efforts towards development of character which shall form an individual viewpoint, fusing our members into a unified force to this end, and have, upon various occasions, offered to affiliate in this most desirable work. Yet the privilege of association has been denied us. We believe in present-day revelation, which is "unorthodox!" We can only hope that, as these men develop more liberality towards each other, they will, in like degree, become more tolerant of the altruistic views of this church, and others engaged in the uplift of humanity.

The Sunday School

Our most important problem in this relation is to see that religious education in the church is adequately handled.

The article in the HERALD of last week on the Sunday school movement is timely and thought-provoking. That which is essential about the work of the Sunday school is not the officers and teachers, the organization, nor is it the fact that it meets at a certain hour on Sunday. The two vital factors are Bible teaching in classes, the meeting for the study of the word of God in organized classes; second, the arrangement of this work according to the age and ability of the students.

The history of the Sunday school in general has been discussed many times. This holding of classes goes back to remote antiquity, for in fact the church has been the repository of education, and the priesthood the teachers from the dawn of history till very recent times.

In the Reorganized Church, a Sunday school was organized in Nauvoo shortly after 1860. The Zion's Hope Sunday School was organized in Saint Louis in 1864, hence this latter is probably the oldest Sunday school in the church to-day.

At the same time, arrangements for other classes were made, as there was a philosophical and theological institute in Saint Louis in 1868. There was a students' society in Lamoni in the '80s. There were various gatherings of young people in Saint Joseph, and elsewhere a Young People's Mutual Improvement Society.

Early in the '80s, a district Sunday school association existed for a short time in the Saint Louis District, and no doubt similar organizations were attempted elsewhere, including Decatur County. Finally, in 1890, the General Sunday School Association was established and has grown stronger ever since and more effective in the service of the church.

A few years later, in 1892, a meeting was held to organize the various young people's societies, and in 1893 a constitution was adopted and Zion's Religio-Literary Society was organized as a general association.

At the same time priesthood meetings have been held from time to time. So it will be seen that the Sunday school did not attempt a monopoly of the idea of teaching religion in classes, nor of adapting the teaching to the ages and ability of the students. In fact, this latter part is comparatively recent in the Sunday school, as we are coming more and more to recognize the necessity of such special adaptation of means according to age and ability and the end in view.

The school of the prophets is an adaptation of this method. Of course, it cannot be under the supervision of the Sunday School Department, but it is an attempt, not only to use the class method, but when divided into quorums it also is an adaptation according to work, and in part according to ability. We fully believe and expect that this educational method in the church will occupy a larger place in our work in the years to come.

It will be premature to attempt to forecast the future. For one thing, the whole Sunday school movement, curricula, and methods, the whole question of religious education is now in a state of flux. In the second place, just how the work can best be handled by and for the church remains a problem for the future and for those on whom has been placed the burden of directing the work of the church to determine. It is far more important that the religious educational work of the church be adequately handled than it is that the Sunday school be continued as a department of church work, let alone as a separate association.

The time may come when much more time will be given to the religious study and to organize class work on Sunday. A step in advance has been made with the junior meetings and sermons for children and young people at 11 a. m. But much more, doubtless, yet remains to be done in utilizing more fully this method of religious work, teaching in classes and the work adapted to the age and ability of those to be taught. But what shall be its form the future will determine, and it will be determined through the initiative of those on whom rests the burden of directing the work of the church.

There can be no serious question as to whether the work can be done more effectively than has been the case in the past. It is important that we seek earnestly the best methods and be willing to utilize them when found.

Local Workers Need Support

We should not suppose that all church work must be done by the priesthood, nor be niggardly in our support of the workers.

We do not, as a rule, comment on articles appearing in the HERALD, but with the consent of the author, we may refer to an article in this issue, "The perfect man." The title does not give any intimation of the real character of the article, which is a discussion of the perfect operation of the organization of the church and the grave necessity for the local work to be well done.

We have expected the local men to give their time and money and effort to the work of visiting and laboring in the church and have not even assisted them with our prayers in many instances as we should. When a stenographer reports a sermon, he or she is usually remunerated for the actual work done. The question of remuneration is not the most essential factor, but it is essential that the branches be properly looked after and that there be given to the workers sufficient time and energy to see that the work is well done.

It is not sufficient simply to baptize people into the church. The same writer adds, "It seems that we have carried our people to the extreme of thinking that all church work should be donated by the ones holding the priesthood. The result is that we have been encouraging a spirit of niggardliness with the rank and file of the body."

Other churches entirely support their pastors; when our church sends a man with a local appointment, the local church is expected to provide for him and his family. If a local man is able to do the work adequately by giving only part of his time, then why should we not support him so far as is necessary, so that he may see that the work required at his hands is well done?

The author adds in a personal letter:

The thing that has caused me to study this, is the failure of our work to function. There is no question in the matter. Our work has been almost a failure in many instances. Branches have been built up only to go down almost as soon as the one who has done the pioneer work has left them.

Men have been called into the priesthood, have taken hold of their duties with enthusiasm, and, for a while have paid the full measure of personal sacrifice and to the body has come the blessings of their ministry; then they have found that they are up against the matter of their daily bread, and the support of the family, and they have cooled in their ardor for the church service. We have blamed them for this lapsing back into their old habits of life, when the fault was largely, if not fully, the fault of the body. We have said unto them, "Be warmed and filled," and have let them go on in their destitution, or take the only alternative open to them, go back to their nests. . . .

When Paul told Timothy that the burden of the financial support for widows should fall upon their relatives, if they had such who were able to relieve them, he was talking of finances, and in the same connection he continued, "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor." So, also, in latter-day revelation the Master has said:

"He who is appointed to minister in spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit."

Much more might be said, for the necessity of caring for those who have been initiated into the kingdom has not grown less, but is one of the grave needs of the hour. It is useless to baptize a number, organize a branch, and then leave the membership and the branch to drift more or less rapidly down hill.

The Lord has set certain ones in the church, not only for the work of the ministry, but also for the perfecting of the Saints and the edifying of the body of Christ. We do not plead for an extravagant support; our plea is not for the men of the priesthood primarily; it is for the good of the work of the church.

The Outlook is running a series of articles on teaching the world to play and the value of fair play and teamwork. The Y. M. C. A. is trying to build up a spirit of play for everybody, continuously leading up in regular steps to local championship games, national championship games, international games, and finally, the Olympic games. People who associate in this way will learn in truth the brotherhood of mankind and will be much less likely to submit to the anger of war.

The Perfect Man

By A. M. Chase

In the perfect body of the church it is necessary that the local men be supported so they can do the work to which they are called and ordained.

There is nothing in this life that challenges the admiration of the average person more keenly than the individual who has so developed himself that physical and mental perfection is evident in every act. "A well-developed mind in a strong, perfectly developed body" is the goal of our educational institutions everywhere. To this end we have both physical and mental training given by those who are supposed to be experts in their lines of specialization.

A Self-Perpetuating Organization

When the Master gave revelation instituting his work of restoration in the latter days, he designed to give to the world a perfect organization—one that would be self-perpetuating, having in it the elements of growth and development, even unto the "perfect man," of which Paul writes to the Ephesians:

But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Jesus Christ. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; . . . for through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father.

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.—Ephesians 2: 13-18, and 4: 11-16. (Italics mine.)

I have quoted from this epistle at length, because I wish to emphasize the fact that Paul was writing here of the perfect body, of which Christ is the head—the church. In the building of this body, there has been nothing left out that would prevent the growth and completion of this wonderful "temple of the Spirit of God." If its every part works effectively, it must increase until it does attain to its full stature, the stature, not of a child, but of the perfect man: in the full glory of the manhood of Christ. Of course, if some of these parts are not working, it is a sick body, and needs "adjusting," as our chiropractic or osteopathic friends would tell us.

Reason for Dead Branches

In the organization of this church, there is nothing lacking of the members needed to represent the physical body of Christ—the church manifest among men; but we do often find that, for some reason, we organize a branch (the primary organizations of the body), and after a few months or years find that there has not only failed to be a development, but there has actually been such paralysis of the members that they are atrophied, or so infected with other leaven that they are not potent, but must be gotten rid of, or the whole body is destroyed.

In how many instances do we find that these branches are either wholly dead and lost sight of, or are only branches in name; and the reason urged is that they need a missionary stationed there to keep them alive. (Often it means, to raise the dead.) Why is this so? Were these bodies still-born, or has Christ failed to communicate to them of his life? If the latter is the real cause, why has he withheld of his Spirit? Let us examine ourselves. I am convinced that there never has been a case of this "suspended animation," this death and dissolution of a branch, but that the cause would have been found to be in the body itself and not with the plan.

A favorite scripture with us in our preaching to the world is,

The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple: the statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes: the fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever: the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold: sweeter than honey and the honeycomb. Moreover by them is thy servant warned: and in keeping of them there is great reward.—Psalms 19: 7-11.

Let us see if we can find this perfect law which will do all of the things herein enumerated for the body, and thus save the whole body. In December, 1830, the church received a command to go to the Ohio, and in January, 1831, the Master told them that he gave them this command, "That ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot, and blameless"; and he promised to give them there his law. (Doctrine and Covenants 37: 1 and 38: 7.) Section 42 is that revelation of God's law. Can we come unto perfection and ignore the law given for our development? Let us examine the law, then measure our obedience to the same—not by our traditions, but by that which is written.

Positive Side of the Law of Moses

In this examination of the law, I do not propose to spend time on those parts of it which are, obviously, so plain that we have not stumbled over them, except when we have sought to justify infraction of the accepted moral code contained in the ten commandments. These are only the prohibitory clauses. Let us go at once to the positive commands. But before we do this, let us look at the design, and its counterpart as found in the administration of the law of Moses.

Man has no greater need than the development of his sense of responsibility to the race—his awareness of the fact that he is only a part of God's great plan, and as such his obligation to hold himself and all that he has as belonging to his Master and for the service of mankind. This is developing his spiritual capabilities and nature. "The liberal soul shall be made fat," is not especially a physical promise, but is a promise of a feast of fat things . . . a supper in the house of the Lord." Surely this will make the man who so partakes "fat," to the fullest degree. (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 3.) If we neglect the necessary discipline of our inner natures, the development which comes by obedience to the commands of God to "sell that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth," we will never succeed in developing so that we are prepared in all things for the time when we shall have no law to govern us but the law of the Savior. (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5.)

Enforced Giving

That Israel of old might not miss this development, they were commanded to appear before the Lord three times every year, there to eat the tenth part of all the seed of the field, and increase of the flock; and in addition to this they were not to appear before the Lord empty. "Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the Lord thy God which he hath given thee." (Deuteronomy 16: 16, 17.) In addition to this, every third year they were required to take stock of their affairs and "bring forth all the tithe of thine increase the same year, and lay it up within thy gates." (Deuteronomy 14: 28. See verses 22-29.)

In the law just cited there is a laying down of hard and fast regulations which would compel us, to-day, in making out our family budgets, to set aside one tenth of our expenditures for our local church expenses, besides the law of tithing of our increase, to be devoted to the general fund for the poor and the support of the general missionaries, etc. If we did this, do you suppose there would be a shortage of funds in the church treasuries to-day? There might be fewer joy rides and hunting trips for some, but there would not be the "forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is" and there would be a growth and establishment in spiritual values.

Of course we do not look for the law that makes one obligated, under penalty of death, in this gospel plan; but the law has been given us, and the keeping of it is full of promise of good things, while the neglecting thereof cannot fail to bring spiritual death and loss. Is it any wonder, if, in process of time, we are to have no laws but the laws of God, that he tries to qualify us for occupation under that rule, by giving us a glimpse of them now? How else may we prepare our hearts than by obedience to the celestial law?

Another Side to Consecration

The law of consecration and equality means much more than running a large business and turning the proceeds over to the Presiding Bishopric. It must mean that we are willing to take our place among God's people and labor on equal terms with our brethren for the upbuilding of the cause, not requiring any to serve without a fair remuneration, even in our branch affairs. Under no other terms can there be a full development of all of our potential powers for good.

In the scheme of organization of this church, there is provision for every man learning his duty and doing it. If that duty takes more time than the local officer may be able to devote thereto, and keep the home fires burning, then he must be so helped out of the funds of the branch that he will be permitted to do his work for the body, thereby bringing the full benefit and development, both to himself and to the body, which was intended to be so brought when Christ gave these gifts unto men. "What?" asks one. "Pay our branch officials, local men, for their work for this church?" Yes, and your Sunday school and Religio and other workers, if it is necessary, that the work may be done and well done. Why not? Does the nonofficial member give many days to the work of the church, either as stenographer, bookkeeper, or in any other capacity which takes the most of his time, without a recompense being made? Surely this is the law of equality! Let us examine that law:

In your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

This was given in November, 1831. Now let us go back to the revelation of February of the same year, which God declared was to be his law to govern his church:

Thou shalt stand in the place of thy stewardship; thou shalt not take thy brother's garment; thou shalt pay for that thou shalt receive of thy brother; and if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse, that all things may be done according to that which I have said. . . .

The priests and teachers shall have their stewardships, even as the members, and the elders, or high priests who are appointed to assist the bishop as counselors, in all things are to have their families supported out of the property which is consecrated to the bishop, for the good of the poor, and for other purposes, as before mentioned, or they are to receive a just remuneration for all their services; either a stewardship, or otherwise, as may be thought best, or decided by the counselors and bishop, and the bishop, also, shall receive his support, or a just remuneration for all his services, in the church.

Why Hamper Local Workers?

Has there ever been a branch of the church where this has been fully carried out? What development it would have brought us, had we remembered that the law of the Lord is a perfect law, and that only in keeping it is there great reward? How many, many of our brethren have been called into the local service, ordained to the priesthood, and begun their service with joy and vigor, only to be compelled to give up because their hands were not loosed for the work that the Master and the church has asked them to do? And how many branches have utterly perished because there has not been an effectual working of every member in its place? Nor has this been always the fault of the man so called into the work. It has often been because the rest of the body made no effort to see that he had an opportunity to do the work.

Not all the sacrifice is required to be made by the priesthood, in this church. Of course, they should and must be the ensamples in this work. But, if the rest of the body fails to fully function in their part of the work, then must the local pastors and teachers provide for their own families, even though it does mean that the work of the church suffers.

It has long been recognized by our general authorities that when a branch asks for a general appointee, that branch should make an effort to pay the expense of that missionary. Will it take any more effort on their part to make it possible for their local men to do that work? And what development must come to the body if this work is so done? Surely it is time that we awake to the fact that we cannot better the plan given by the Master for this "latter-day glory."

Thou shalt not take thy brother's garment [either directly or indirectly]; thou shalt pay for that thou shalt receive of thy brother [either in labor or material]; in your temporal things you shall be equal, and that not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.

Brethren, I lay no claim to virtue in presenting this matter, other than to say that "it is written." And I am convinced that in failure to obey this law, we have failed of a full converting of the soul of the church: failed of the full measure of the reception of that testimony which makes wise the simple therein: failed of the full rejoicing that would have come to the heart and enlightenment of the eyes of the body, had we kept these statutes: and have, in a measure, lost the fear of the Lord that is clean, enduring forever.

If we cannot, or will not abide the celestial law, we may not look for the development of the body, which will enable us to present it unto Christ, perfect, when he comes to receive his Saints unto himself, that where he is, there we may be. My excuse for having so written is this: the responsibility has been laid upon the elders of this church to see that the law is kept, and this is certainly a part of the fundamental law of the body, and without the observance of this law, there can be no equality of temporal things, neither will we receive those blessings which he has promised to bestow, even the endowment from on high. May God add his blessing.

The Heritage of War

By T. W. Williams

The more one contemplates war, the more repulsive it becomes.

While the nations of the world are spending large sums of money to commemorate the achievements of heroes dead, the maimed and ruined survivors of the Great World War are starving for bread!

It is a sad indictment of civilization when men are forced to take up arms against other human beings with whom they have no grievance and who, thereby, sacrifice everything for a nation's glory that these men and their families are forced by economic handicap to become the flotsam and jetsam of society and are left to suffer and starve and die whilst church and state offers no helping hand.

The following recital taken from the London Daily Express of December 14 is only one of thousands; such are of daily occurrence!

"Starving in London

Young Mother Collapses in the Street
Family's Plight

Husband a Gunner at Jutland

"A young woman carrying a child in her arms collapsed from exhaustion in Mare Street Hockney, yesterday.

"Her exhaustion was due to starvation. Her husband, Mr. J. Greer, an ex-naval gunner, who fought for his country in the battle cruiser Tiger at the Battle of Jutland, has been unemployed since last Christmas.

"These facts were disclosed when the young wife after her collapse was taken to the Salvation Army Headquarters.

"Our position is desperate," said Mr. Greer, in the bare single room which is his home at Mildmay Grove, Islington, to a Daily Express representative last night.

"I have gone without food for days myself, but when I see my wife and baby practically starving before my eyes it breaks my heart. I have tramped miles in search of work and I am prepared to do anything.

"I worked for a firm of furriers until last Christmas, when I was discharged owing to bad trade. Since then I have had only a few odd jobs. Gradually we have had to pawn parts of our home, even to some of the bedclothes.

"Each morning when I go out I feel like a rat in a cage, not knowing which way to turn. When I come home after searching for work my wife tries to smile bravely. I do not want charity. I want a job."

"Mr. Greer's discharge papers and references give him an excellent character. He is a bright, intelligent looking man of thirty. His wife is the same age and the baby is eleven months old."

We commend a prayerful reading of the foregoing to the defenders of war, as well as to those who feel that the present system of society is God-ordained.

And what has the church of the living God to do with this? What? Let courageous, God-fearing, humanity-loving men and women give answer!

Stopping the Leaks

By Benjamin R. McGuire

Who is the wage earner who owes no tithing? He is the one who has not spent a dollar outside of "necessary living expenses."

Before the war many families were living well on $1,000 a year, but men were called from their peaceful vocations and, because of labor competition, salaries increased rapidly. To illustrate (and it is only an illustration), let us say that while the income increased 60 per cent, living costs increased only 20 per cent over a certain period of time. In other words, the income amounted to $1,600, while living costs went to $1,200. The family could live just as well on $1,200 as formerly, but did they? In most cases they lived up to the limit of their income.

Humanity is willing to make great sacrifices—when it has to. Experience teaches us that society will not willingly go without, and when forced to do so, by extreme conditions, sets about the task with great reluctance. "Verily it is a day of sacrifice and a day for the tithing of my people." (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.)

So many times we hear members of the church say: "I have no tithing to pay, because I have no increase." By this they mean that an inventory would not show their possessions to be any greater now than they were a year ago. Perhaps not, but why? Look at the leaks in the barrel. Make some unprejudiced comparisons with the treatment of your own income. Proceeding on the theory that "charity begins at home," we may never have any increase to tithe. God has said, "Sacrifice." Appetite says: "I want it now; I'll save to-morrow." So, like the steward who "buried his talent in a napkin," we accuse the world of not giving us enough to leave any margin for saving, and consequently we haven't even "interest" to give back to the Lord.

Look again at the leaks. These must be stopped before the barrel will fill to the point of overflow. This illustrates clearly a very common error in finding the increase to be tithed. Let this be definitely understood by the membership, and a new financial era will begin. Only our necessary living expenses should come out of the big barrel. In other words, food, shelter, and raiment, in their broad sense, deducted from one's income, leaves the true increase.

Who is the wage earner who owes no tithing? He is the one who has not spent a dollar for things outside of "necessary living expenses." Do you know him? The man who spends one dollar for "knick-

Darwin's Theory Remains Unproved

Lower forms of man have been found, but they are still man.

Asked by a representative of The Globe as to whether science had yet found the missing link between man and the ape, Doctor Bateson said: "We have bridged the gap to some extent, in that we have found much lower forms of man than we ever realized—but they are still man."

The crucial problem that confronted the biologist to-day, according to Doctor Bateson, was that hybrids were sterile, and that new species do not arise.

"When Darwin discussed the problem of inter-specific sterility," said the speaker, "this aspect of the matter seems to have escaped him. He is at great pains to prove that inter-specific crosses are not always sterile, and he shows that crosses between forms which pass for distinct species may produce hybrids which range from complete fertility to complete sterility. The fertile hybrid he claims in support of his argument.

"If species arose from a common origin, clearly they should not always give sterile hybrids; so Darwin is concerned to prove such hybrids are by no means always sterile, which is to us a commonplace of everyday experience. If species have a common origin, where did they pick up the ingredients which produced this sexual incompatibility?"

What Has to Be Discovered?

"The production of an indubitably sterile hybrid from completely fertile parents which have arisen under critical observation from a single common origin is the event for which we wait," said Doctor Bateson. "Until this event is witnessed our knowledge of evolution is incomplete in a vital respect."

Doctor Bateson also cast doubt upon the Darwinian claim of natural selection as the main directing force. He said: "The survival of the fittest was a plausible account of evolution in broad outline, but knacks" and will not pay the ten cents tithe would not "dip seven times in the waters of Jordan." As a steward he is "unfaithful in that which is least." "If, therefore, ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?"

It is a day of sacrifice.

It is a day for the tithing of my people.

May the Spirit of God help us to be faithful to every trust committed to our care, is my prayer.

failed in application to specific differences. The Darwinian philosophy convinced us that every species must make good in nature if it is to survive, but no one can tell how the differences do, in fact, enable the species to make good. The claims of natural selection as the chief factor in the determination of species have consequently been discredited."

In dealing with the origin of domestic poultry, Doctor Bateson said he did not believe in the theory that they are all derived from one common stock known as the jungle fowl. He said that the jungle fowl did not supply the ingredients that are found in domestic poultry. This was true of any animals and plants.

Species Lose, Do Not Gain

Referring to the variations occurring in the different species, Doctor Bateson stated that there was no evidence of any one species acquiring new faculties, but that there were plenty of examples of species losing faculties. Species lose things, but do not add to their possessions.

"Biological science has returned to its rightful place," said Doctor Bateson, "namely, the investigation of the structure and properties of the concrete of our visible world. We cannot see how the differentiation into species came about. Variations of many kinds, often considerable, we daily witness, but no origin of species. Distinguishing what is known from what may be believed, we have absolute certainty that new forms of life, new orders, and new species have arisen in the earth, but even this has been questioned. It has been asked, for instance, 'How do you know that there were no mammals in palæozoic times? May there not have been mammals somewhere on earth though no vestige of them has come down to us?' We may feel confident there were no mammals then, but are we sure? In very ancient rocks most of the great orders of animals are represented. The absence of the others might by no great stress of the imagination be ascribed to accidental circumstances."

Evident in Dim Outline

After discussing the transition of plant life from one form to another, Doctor Bateson said: "In dim outline, evolution is evident enough. From the facts it is a conclusion which inevitably follows, but that particular and essential bit of the theory of evolution which is concerned with the origin and nature of species remains utterly mysterious."

Speaking of the separation between the laboratory men and the systematists, Doctor Bateson said: "The systematists will feel the ground fall from beneath their feet when they learn and realize what genetics has accomplished, and we close students of specially chosen examples will find our eyes dazzled and blinded when we look up from our work tables to contemplate the brilliant vision of the natural world in its boundless complexity. I have put before you very frankly considerations which have made me agnostic as to the actual mode and processes of evolution. When such confessions are made, the enemies of science see their chance. If we cannot declare here and now how species arose, they will obligingly offer us the solution with which obscurantism is satisfied. Let us, then, proclaim in precise and unmistakable language that our faith in evolution is unshaken. Every available line of argument converges to this inevitable conclusion. The obscurantist has nothing to suggest which is worth a moment's attention."—Toronto Globe.

Man's Normal Life One Hundred Years

Doctor Steven Smith declares, according to the American Magazine, that every man should live to be one hundred years old, that any man who dies before he is ninety is a departure from normal, as biologically every mammal should live five times the length of time it takes for his bones to form and mature, and in man that is twenty years.

Yet some men die at twenty-five and do not know it. Others never live and do not know it. Still others get more out of life after passing the prophet's "threescore years and ten" than ever before.

Doctor Smith is in his ninety-ninth year of life. As a child he was puny and not expected to live. He has been a contemporary of every president except Washington, and heard Daniel Webster and Henry Clay. Physically unfit for the army, he served in the medical corps during the Civil War and wrote a handbook on surgery that was carried by every doctor in the Union Army, according to the article in the American Magazine, which also informs us that he has been appointed to public office by two Presidents of the United States, seven governors of New York, and three mayors of New York City.

One half century ago, he changed New York from a pesthole of epidemics into a model of sanitation. The methods used by him were later copied by every city in the country. At seventy years of age he became vice president of the New York Board of Charity and continued as an active member for twenty-five years. Aided by Florence Nightingale, he introduced the first women trained nurses into the United States.

Fifty years ago he founded the American Public Health Association and was its first president. At ninety-four he finished his history of surgery. He is at present preparing a compendium of how to live long and a revision of certain old medical brochures.

Woodrow Wilson Foundation

A campaign has been launched to raise a million dollars for the creation of a fund to become The Woodrow Wilson Foundation. It is planned to give the income from this each year to the man or woman in any land who has done the most to promote Christian principles and ideals and further international relationships. A quota has been allotted to each State and committees appointed to solicit funds. Republicans as well as Democrats are found on all the committees, and politics have been kept out of the movement. Mr. Wilson is recognized by the principals of the movement as the Christian prophet of internationalism and this is designed to perpetuate his name in this regard.

Results of Noncooperation

The Indian National Congress, representing ten million paid-up members, is becoming a potent force in India in its quiet but insistent demands for democratic government for that country. Within the past year they have adopted and put into effect an effective boycott system which has developed into a veritable crusade that is pounding at the very vitals of British economic welfare. Refusal to participate in civic affairs, to purchase cotton goods of English make and finally a policy of refusal to pay taxes has produced a most difficult situation indeed. As they follow the instructions of their leader, Mahatma Gandhi, they commit no crimes and make no disorder.

We often speak of cooperation and what it might do theoretically and is doing practically, but here is a demonstration under way of the effects of deliberate refusal to cooperate.

The teacher is presented as the real antidote for criminality by Police Captain, Max Fisher, in an article in the Sacramento Union. The public schools are a protection, not only against crime, but also against the expense of crime. He stated that it cost the State of California $41,000,000 in 1920 to combat crime. Still, this amount was reduced because of the excellent school system of that State.

Archæological discoveries in the Caroline Islands reveal the ruins of a city which are a mystery to archæologists. Walls are found forty feet high and fifteen feet thick, according to the Kansas City Journal, indicating a high degree of engineering skill in quarrying and placing the immense stone slabs. No plaster was used in the construction. Innumerable canals are in evidence, evidently making of the city a Venice of the Pacific, it being in area approximately eleven square miles.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Aim High

By Hattie Hughes

Would you know the joys of living,
In this world of sin and sinning,
Had you ever thought to try?
Here's the subject, you must view it,
If a vow you'd made, renew it,
It's a simple thing—Aim high.

As you think, this old world's mirthless
All its worth is only worthless
When for gold a man will die.
Would it not be so much better,
If in action, word, and letter,
Each man were aspiring high?

Oh, you should attempt to do it,
There would be no cause to rue it,
To God's word you should comply;
Then whatever might befall you,
Where your duties large may call you,
Let your motto be—Aim high.

Do not wait until the morrow,
Or some sorrow you may borrow,
As the precious days go by,
Now's the time you should begin it,
God will give you grace to win it,
Win eternal life on high.

Lo, the Hast'ning Time's at Hand

By J. L. Williams

(Given January 9, 1918. Original tune published in November, 1918, Autumn Leaves. May be sung to tune, "My Redeemer.")

Oh, my people, why not hearken?
Lo, the hast'ning time's at hand.
Earthly kingdoms now are falling;
Saints, in holy places stand.
I have spoken, often warned you
Of the per'ous times to come;
When the hearts of men shall fail them,
'Less they trust in me alone.

Oh, my young men and my maidens,
Cast aside the Tempter's snare.
All is vain without my favor,
Heed a loving Father's care.
Be not set on worldly pleasure,
I, your Savior, call for thee;
I will bless you in the measure
Thou dost serve and worship me.

Be more earnest; be more pray'rful;
Strive a crown of life to win.
Soon the Lord will come in glory,
To redeem the world from sin.
Be more humble, be more faithful,
Consecrate your all for me:
And my arm will shield, protect you,
From the scourge, where'er you be.

Lift Your Heads in Joyful Praise

By Louise Bishop

(To tune of "My Redeemer.")

Oh, my young men and my maidens,
Lift your heads in joyful praise;
To your dear and blest Redeemer,
Let your hearts and voices raise.
God will bless you in your efforts,
You have started here to-day;
He will make you strong when humble,
If in weakness you will pray.

Now, be true, all my young people,
To God's church upon the earth.
If you'd have a testimony,
You must receive that second birth.
God is pleased with all your efforts,
Let the flag still proudly wave,
Till it reaches all the people,
Waving there some souls to save.

You will be the church to-morrow,
You young people of to-day,
Tell to all the gospel story,
Heeding not what men may say.
Men may scorn you and revile you,
They did scorn our Savior too;
Carry them the message bravely,
He will then your strength renew.

Be not set on worldly pleasures,
Pass them by as things of naught,
Think upon the lowly Jesus,
He your aims by ransom bought.
Then, I'll be your God and Father;
Follow in my footsteps still;
I will pour on you my blessings,
And I will reveal my will.

Persecution then will follow,
You'll be tried and purged as gold;
Be ye then my faithful children,
As your prophet was of old;
He was tried and persecuted,
When he preached the gospel true,
And he gave his life so precious;
Left the gospel still with you.

Mutilating the Hymns

All preachers, who leave it to the choir, are acquainted with the thoughtless and altogether harmful custom of church choirs in omitting "the third verse." This is done without discrimination, indicating that the choir itself places a poor estimate upon hymns and hymn writers, and encourages the same spirit and practice in the congregation.

The great hymns contain a great idea. It is just as sensible for a preacher to slice out a section of his sermon without consideration as for his choir to cut into the hymns merely in order to limit the number of verses sung.

The fact is there would be a very real enrichment of public worship if preachers would educate their choirs and congregations in the singing and understanding of the great hymns of the church.—The Christian Standard.

Harmony

[NOTE: This and the following paper by Brother Higdon were both read at the First Musical Institute of the Kansas City Stake, at Mount Washington Church, December 11, 1921. Preceding this address a very enjoyable violin solo had been rendered by Miss Lillian Green, of Independence.]

I have been listening, with you, to the beautiful solo that just preceded me on this program. It made me feel warm, responsive, happy; and brought me a satisfaction that only good music can bring. Analyzing this a little further, I come to the conclusion that harmony is created by a succession of notes or chords, piled one upon another until, at the completion of the musical structure, the Creator's idea is brought out and demonstrated. We call this harmony, and so it is.

Contrasting now this musical number with some music I have heard, I find there is quite a difference. You have all had the experience of listening to a number of instruments or voices wherein there was what is called discord; a sound or a number of sounds that if we had singled them out would have been unpleasant; sounds that seemed to us unsatisfactory, depressing, because they were unfinished. We call these discords, and so they are.

My thought here is a simple one: a harmony is a literary work, a musical concord, a finished production, giving unity to a pleasing whole; while a discord is a combination of sounds that grate on the ear harshly, an unfinished production, whether in music or in life.

You note that I say a harmony is a finished production, while a discord is an unfinished one. What a wonderful example this gives us of life as we know it. For one writer has said, "All one's life is music, if one touches the notes rightly and in time." In the lives of every one of us there are places that are discords, black and dismaying. If we should stop at these discords and call our compositions finished, our lives would certainly be sad melodies. If the artist that preceded me had been silenced ere she had played her melody to a close, what a disaster it would have been to us who listened. For the harmony came only when she continued to build upon her idea, to work out her goal, to sustain her effort until she had reached the last note of her brilliant climax.

If we should stop when our work is unfinished it would be sad. Should we cease our song before it is ended, how unsatisfactory it would be. But if we go on working until the end of life, what a beautiful climax, what a sweet majestic closing to our sonnet of life!

So we might well ask ourselves this afternoon: Are we stopping at a discord? You who can play some instrument, but do not? You who can sing, but will not? Did some discord cause you to cease? Is your song unfinished? Is your melody incomplete?

We have a wonderful example of a perfect life in the Savior of men; and I know of no one else who has lived here on earth whose life was such a complete concord, so rich in inner music. What a song was sung in his great deeds of service to humanity! His life, taken in its entirety, was a masterpiece; the greatest harmony that has yet been lived.

But if you will look at his life in parts you will find that it contained discords that grate on our spiritual ear. The Savior did not call it finished at Gethsemane, nor yet at Golgotha. Although his melody was shaken and his song wavered, he went on and on until he struck the final beautiful chord of harmony, upon the Mount of Olives, and gave to us in his life a perfect harmony, a finished production.

And so my message this afternoon is a helpful one—as helpful and beautiful as the music on this program. I want it to come to you as the spirit of the music has come, or the worded inspiration of the afternoon program. I want it to sink deep into your hearts, transforming your minds until you feel the need to resolve your whole life into a concord.

And my message is this: Go on. Life is not a fixed point. Life is a stream ever flowing. Life is a moving picture continually unfolding. So, go on. For life is a puzzle. But every puzzle has its solution. To high hearts and undaunted minds there is always hope.

Take up your work again and go on until you have builded it into a thing of beauty, and then when the Father shall say enough you will know that it takes discords with concords to build up your melody of life; and you will then be able to bring to him a harmony, a finished production.

And so let us learn to look past men and things, to God, and let harmony find its way into the inner places of our soul, and so on and on.

The Value of Good Music to the Missionary

It will be recognized that it is a hard proposition to estimate the value of good music in our missionary efforts. However, we know from our experience that the better our music is rendered the more effective it is.

If we can promise people a few special numbers at any given service, we have noticed that some will be present who would not have been had we not made a special effort along the musical line.

Some will naturally think that if the music is all they come out to hear, the gospel will do them no good. But there are many people in the church to-day who were not interested in our message when they first heard it, and in fact they did not come for the purpose of hearing the gospel. Some of these came merely to hear our music.

A few years ago, while laboring in the Clinton, Missouri, District, we met each evening in a certain place and had a song service of fifteen minutes to half an hour before the preaching. The people became greatly interested and tried just as hard to get out to the musical part of our services as they did to hear the sermons. In fact, there were many who would not have been there had we not given a musical program each evening. We heard many people say we sang the gospel as well as preached it.

We know there is a power in music, and when we take into consideration that many of our hymns are sermons in themselves, we cannot overestimate what an influence good singing has upon the people.

A charge of taking the gospel to the people of the world has been committed to us and it is our duty to do everything in our power to make the message attractive.

Knowing that music has such an influence over people, many of our number have taken it upon themselves to heed the admonition to "cultivate the gifts of music and of song," and have greatly enhanced their powers for good. We truly appreciate the efforts of those who have thus striven to qualify themselves for more efficient service along this line, and we are of the opinion that many more are going to heed the admonition.

We want to do all we can to get the gospel before the people of Kansas City, and realizing the enormity of the task before us, we want to do everything within our power to accomplish this work. Recognizing that there are many who would not think of coming out to services unless we present a good musical program, we want to do all we can to encourage the musicians in the stake, that together we may be able to reach as many with our gospel message as possible.

The value of good music to the missionary is inestimable, and to send out a missionary without music is like sending out a hunter with a poor gun.

I wish to thank the musicians of the stake for the assistance they have rendered the missionary activities, and to extend them an invitation to continue their services.

AMOS T. HIGDON.

Music a God-Given Talent

Music is melody and harmony; any succession of sounds so expressed as to please the ear, or any combination of simultaneous sounds in accordance; and these may be uttered through the medium of either voice or instrument.

We know that good music is indeed pleasing to God and he is indeed the author of sweet harmonies that we are at times privileged to hear. The ability to express and appreciate good music is one of the greatest of the God-given talents.

While it is indeed true that some have abused the gift of music by the composition of what is commonly called "jazz" or "rag time," (which we often feel Satan is the author of,) yet we know that real music is of divine origin.

At the time the evil spirit took hold upon Saul, David took the harp and played upon it, and Saul was refreshed and made well and the evil spirit departed from him.

Also, when David gathered together all Israel at Jerusalem to bring up the ark of the Lord, they came with shouting and with sound of the cornet, and with trumpets and with cymbals, making a noise with psalteries and with harps.

At the time Hezekiah restored the worship of God, he set the Levites in the house of the Lord with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, according to the commandments of David, of Gad, and Nathan the prophet. David was a great lover of music. Some of the beautiful oratorios of modern times are arranged from the psalms of David.

In one of his psalms he says, "Praise the Lord with thy voice; sing unto him with the psaltery and harp, and instrument with ten strings." He sent word to the chief musician upon Gittith, to "Praise God with a psalm. Sing aloud unto God our strength; make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob."

The psaltery was a stringed instrument much used by the Hebrews in ancient times, supposed to be a species of lyre, or harp.

Did not John hear the voice of many waters from heaven, and the voice of harpers playing upon their harps? And they sang as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders; and no man could learn that song but the forty and four thousand which were redeemed from the earth.

Thus we realize that God is pleased if we cultivate the gifts of music. He tells us in the Doctrine and Covenants (section 119, paragraph 6): "The service of song in the house of the Lord with humility and unity of spirit in them that sing and them that hear is blessed, and acceptable with God; but song with grievous sadness in them that sing and bitterness of spirit in them that hear is not pleasing to God. Therefore, in all the congregations of the people of God, let all strife and contention concerning song service cease; that the worship in the house of the Lord may be complete and wholly acceptable, let them who shall be moved thereto by a desire and the gift to sing take upon them the burden and care of the service."

As God has given us the gift of music, this rich treasure, let us not merely hoard what we have received. Let us not forget the giver of this great gift, as there can be no greater slight than to leave his gift neglected. How many cups filled with gifts and blessings are presented to us which we refuse to taste! And the cup of blessings from which we drink, we should never hesitate to let others drink therefrom, but share our blessings with them.

As we have said before, every talent is God-given, and though we are gifted in large or small measure, we should be willing to so use our talents that we may bless others; and in this way honor God.

A Series of Musical Institutes for the Kansas City Stake

There has been planned for the benefit of the Kansas City Stake, to be held during this winter season, a series of musical institutes, at important centers of the stake. These are to be under the auspices of the general Department of Music of the church, in conjunction with Sister Bernice Griffiths, chorister of the Kansas City Stake.

The first of this series was held at the Mount Washington Branch on the Sunday of December 11, when the following program was rendered with great interest and enthusiasm.

Program and Outline of Sessions

Prayer service, 8.30 a. m. Central theme: "Our hope in music." In charge of Elder Thomas C. Lentell and Arthur H. Mills.

Sunday school, 9.30 a. m. Opening song, No. 37 in Zion's Praises. Prayer. Duet, cornet and trombone, Juanita Winn and Scott Winn. Lesson study. Chorus by junior choir. Closing song, No. 145, Zion's Praises.

Preaching service, 11 a. m. Opening song, No. 1, Zion's Praises. Invocation. Violin solo, Miss Louise Hunter. Scripture reading. Anthem. Sermon: "The place and work of music in the church," by Arthur H. Mills. Closing song, No. 87, Zion's Praises. Benediction.

Institute session, 2.30 p. m. Opening song, No. 190, Zion's Praises. Prayer. Violin solo, Lillian Green. Paper, "Harmony," by Mrs. Lula Sandy. Address, "The value of good music to the congregation," by J. A. Tanner. Vocal solo, Mrs. Lulu Lentell. Paper, "The value of good music to the missionary," by Amos T. Higdon. Round table. Benediction.

Musical, 7.30 p. m. Selection by the stake orchestra. Congregational song service, selections taken from Saints' Hymnal. Opening hymn, No. 39. Invocation. Anthem. Violin solo by Doctor Bryan. Ladies' quartet, Bernice Griffiths, Viola Davidson, Mary Helm, Lulu Lentell. Address, "The cultivation of our talents," Arthur H. Mills. Selection by orchestra. Vocal duet, Bernice Griffiths, Lulu Lentell. Violin duet, Marian Young and Joseph Jones. Closing hymn, No. 1. Benediction. Postlude, orchestra.

The second institute of this series is to be held at the Grandview Church, Fourteenth and Central Streets, Kansas City, Kansas, on the Sunday of January 22.

Among Our Musical Workers

An account has been given in a previous number of the HERALD concerning the rendition by the Independence Stone Church Choir of the Christmas cantata, "The word fulfilled," by Adam Geibel, hence we will not do more than state that the cantata was well rendered and enjoyed by the large audience that assembled to hear it. Sister Fred B. Farr, acting director of the choir in the absence of Sister Cordie Hulmes, had the chorus numbers well prepared and conducted them with success.

This cantata is a bright, pleasing, very tuneful work; not difficult in character, and one that a number of our church choirs could profitably and successfully master for Christmas rendition.

Brother Charles Romig, chorister of the Kirtland District, writes very encouragingly of the musical work of that important district. He states that interest in the district is growing apace, some new choirs and orchestras being in process of organization, and everywhere there is an increased demand for musical service. He accompanied his letter with a photograph of the Kirtland reunion orchestra, formed of the instrumentalists throughout the district who visited the reunion. We are glad to have this addition to our collection of photos.

Some of our district choristers who are in charge of thickly settled districts, containing a number of choirs and where the musical situation is in at least a fair state of development, would be far less likely to complain of their hardships and the indifferences met with if they could only experience for a short time the lot of some of our district choristers in sparsely settled districts. Take, for instance, Sister Bessie Clark, chorister of the Florida District. All of the few branches of this district are small and widely separated; but one branch only has a choir; yet Sister Clark is working steadily to encourage the young of the district to individually cultivate "the gifts of music and of song," that they may be the better able to serve the church when the time comes. And we feel that her efforts will inevitably bear fruit in time.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

From a Foreign Field

From the mission field of the British Isles is sent us a program showing the activities of Brother Morris Williams, chorister of the Wales District, which shows a most wholesome condition of musical interest in that field. You know the Welch people just naturally take to singing, and Brother Williams is concentrating his efforts in this program for the development of congregational singing, particularly at the coming session of the district conference. His program, which is in the nature of a letter to the choristers of the various branches of his district, shows a careful and well-thought-out plan for the accomplishment of this work. We particularly commend Brother Williams's efforts in the line of congregational singing to our other choristers, for it is the most important form of musical activity in the church.

Sister C. A. Galland, of Cumminsville, Nebraska, sends an order for two copies of the Voice of Warning and one of the Call at Evening, to be used in informing her neighbors of our belief. She says they are having a hard struggle to make money enough to keep from starvation; nevertheless, their greatest desire is to help the work and they are willing to sacrifice and do what local missionary work they can. This sister has been working away from home for six weeks, though greatly needed there, yet finds it possible to spare the money to buy literature for this noble purpose.

Sister F. A. Rowe writes to express appreciation of the privilege of being in Independence this winter and attending the Institute. She is constrained to think often of the many people she has met who would appreciate this privilege. She prays that God may bless the Institute that its good work may go on.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

About Dues and Offerings

We have often pondered upon the viewpoint of some Saints who seem to feel their whole duty is done, so far as church finances are concerned, when they pay their tithing and drop a nickel each Sunday into the Sunday school collection. We have wondered if they ever considered very thoughtfully the sentence, "Behold, this generation hath robbed me in tithes and offerings." Notice the last two words. How is it possible to rob God of offerings? Why, simply by withholding those offerings.

We have often been asked why the Women's Department did not give the sisters of the church an opportunity to make offerings for that particular portion of the church work which has been intrusted to the women. It is conceded that the women membership of the church has done and is doing its full share in tithes and offerings to the general treasury, but some have wished that they might be privileged to consecrate a little more particularly in order that the Women's Department may move steadily forward and the sooner accomplish its great mission among God's people.

Since being recognized as a regular department of the church, it has become clear that all baptized women become automatically members of the Women's Department. Coupled with that conviction is the one that an annual per capita tax of a paltry dime is hardly adequate to the needs nor commensurate with the breadth and scope of the work of this department. Counsel with presiding officials of the church relative to these matters paved the way for an executive action which has formally abolished the rules for initiation fees, and stipulated yearly dues, and substituted therefor the policy of asking the locals to take up two freewill offerings each year, for the prosecution of the general work of the department.

We feel sure that this change will find a responsive chord in the hearts of the sisters the church over, for it will give them the desired opportunity to contribute specifically for our work in the generous fashion for which they are noted.

None should be more interested than the women themselves in the successful accomplishment of the work before this department. The helps for study, instructions, report blanks, letters, pamphlets, and materials of all kinds, require finances. In the desire to retrench expenses wherever possible, in order that the church treasury might not be entirely depleted, we feel it would be a mistake to cease to send out these necessary helps for our workers. However, we feel a great confidence in thus throwing the interests of the Women's Department upon the women themselves, for we know the spirit of women: we know their pride and independence, and feel sure their response to this appeal will be both ready and generous.

The annual dues, collected and sent in the first of the year, will be construed to be the last ones of that nature that need be forwarded to our general office. They will no longer be deemed "dues," or "fees," or "taxes." Instead they will be termed "offerings," and as such will come winging their way to us, glorified with the good wishes of the sisters. They will speak for the givers, telling of sincere interest in the work, of free-heartedness and consecration, and sacrifice, and will become missionaries for good, coming in blessing; and in turn blessing those who so freely gave. A. A.

Earnest Workers

To our desk comes from the general superintendent of cradle roll, Sister Anne Roberts, a list of books, recommended as a reading course for cradle roll workers. We have always known that association with children develops an appreciation of childhood, with all its graces, purity, and truth, in the soul of those who love them and work for them, and we are not surprised to know that this love and appreciation is creating within the hearts of our cradle roll workers a yearning desire to become more qualified for their service and ministry.

Doctor G. Stanley Hall says: "To know a child is to love it, and the more we know it, the better we love it. To know, love, and serve childhood is the most satisfying, soul-filling of all human activities. It rests on the oldest and strongest and sanest of all instincts. It gives to our lives a rounded-out completeness as does no other service. No other object is so worthy of service and sacrifice; and the fullness of the measure in which this is rendered is the very best test of a nation and race and a civilization."

We hope to see the day, and that not very far distant, when every sister who is now rendering service to childhood in our cradle roll (or child welfare) department, will have so developed in vision, knowledge, and devotion, that her efforts, combined with that of all her fellow workers, will result in an uplifted childhood throughout the church and kingdom of God. A pure spirit in a perfect body should be the ideal for which we are laboring. To this end do we consecrate our time and energy, and gladly enter the wide and inviting fields of knowledge and learning.

Mothers who sense their divine mission—nay, let us say fathers, as well!—will rejoice to scan this well-chosen reading course, and let us hope before 1922 shall have closed its pages, each and all will have made the messages contained in these books their own.

From a Western Ranch

All day my mind has been burdened with thoughts of the rural woman and her problems, and ever one thought is uppermost: She is not different from the city woman in heart and mind, save as she has been influenced by her environment!

May I open my heart to you to-night, and will you understand? No one loves the country, country life and country people more dearly than I, and yet my dearest, closest friends have been city people. Under rather peculiar circumstances last winter I had a chance to learn the truth of a statement made by Brother Frederick M. Smith in a sermon in Jerusalem: "If you would know God, go into the midst of the plentitude of his chiefest handiwork, man!"

I have not studied deeply the conditions existing in the world of business to-day, but I have sensed the feeling of strife between city and country folk. A child raised in the city, I longed for country life; a woman now, living in the country, I yearn for some of the advantages of the city, and so I love them both. Like Patrick Henry's assertion, I am not a country woman altogether, neither a city woman, but rather, just plain woman!

Oh, if we might wipe out that feeling of "difference." We can; we must! The country woman may have been in a rut, it is true, but she is very human and lovable, and quite often has had a college education. When we sum up the advantages and disadvantages of the two environments, we may find they just about balance; for city women, too, have their limitations and their ruts and hobbies.

If the Women's Department can call to the country woman, can get her to come outside the four walls of her home duty, and can enlist her in the widening circle of social duty and responsibilities, in which she can share with others her great wealth of spiritual contacts, it will have aroused a great power, for the country woman is strong and resourceful.

It has been because of this feeling of "difference," this age-old feud between city and country, that the country woman hangs back, afraid to make her offering, thinking she has nothing to give. "Nothing to give"? Do they not make the best of jelly, preserves, and butter? Why not let them make an offering of some of these to the Bishop for use in the various Homes and Sanitarium? Various articles of sewing, and quilts too, are always needed. If we Marthas are given something to do with our hands, to help in the actual building of Zion, it may not be long until we discover that we have become Marys, also!

Study? Now, do not smile—but say, do not blame us too much if we do not show great and enthusiastic interest in the "Food and Body" study course! Please do not misunderstand me. I think it an excellent course in its place, but we country women must prepare three hearty meals a day, week in, week out, year in, year out—no restaurant lunches, no hotel dinners, no women's luncheons to break the monotony! No doubt we need to know the relation of food to the body, but oh, do please let us start our study in some other line—just for a change! Our lives are so practical, so engrossed in the material, we are hungry for something that will lift us away from the daily necessities for a while.

Why not give us a bit of poetry? You recall Whittier's "Among the hills," and the bit:

"How rich and restful even poverty and toil
Become when beauty, harmony and love
Sit at their humble hearth!
I would fain. . . .
Invite the eye to see and heart to feel
The beauty and the joy within their reach—
Home, and home loves, and the beatitudes
Of Nature, free to all!"

Here is understanding of country life as it is and should be, with wonderful descriptions, and the story of love that never grows old. And through it all he weaves the beauty and the poetry of life.

I think, too, of Bryant's "Sella,"—an exquisite little classic, with unrivaled descriptive parts, telling of one who was forced to live her life apart from the friends and scenes she loved. And where can be found a more wonderful portrayal of the effect of an ideal upon one's daily life and character than in Hawthorne's "Great stone face"? Who is not better for even the simple reading of Browning's immortal "Pippa passes"?

If some one would take some of these short classics that have lived in the hearts and lives of men, and outline a study in English or literature for a winter's reading—the country woman's only vacation time—I do not see how it could fail to reach the hearts of rural women—in fact, of all women—and give to them the very things they need: "Culture, personal vision, and outlook broader, higher, deeper!"

After that we might be ready for the study of civics, parenthood, school systems, and many other lines of interest to us not merely as a family, but as a church, a state or nation—in fact, as citizens of the world and the kingdom of God. Am I wrong in thinking that we are living in an age when we cannot consider ourselves as separate, apart from the rest of the creations of God? Zion means something so immeasurably big to me!

To go back to our "just wants." I spoke to some of my neighbors about a study club and all expressed this opinion: "I'd love it if we could learn something besides fancywork or cooking!" Why could not kindergarten work be stressed for our country children? The outlay for materials is small; it does not require a great deal of education for home work; and best of all, it would help to keep the little ones happy and content in play that is developing their minds, while mother is left free to do a bit of reading for herself. It has been one of my biggest helps with my little ones, especially in the "shut-in" months of winter.

Pardon me if my letter is too long. I have spoken from my heart.

"I know my God he hath no need of me,
Wherefore I think I should more grateful be
That he doth use me still."

A MOTHER IN THE COUNTRY.

Revised Texts in Study Courses

Sister Dora Glines wishes to explain to those following her course in psychology now appearing in these columns that she is using the latest revised text as a basis. Those with the older editions may be annoyed by not finding all the references, especially not knowing that the newer one is being used.

The Women's Department and the Priesthood

Our General Secretary recently sent us a bunch of twenty-six letters and cards which had come from as many men of the priesthood, asking for material explaining the work of our department.

Well, this is encouraging, indeed! We surely feel grateful to be assured that the number sufficiently interested in our work to desire further information about it is larger than the original fifteen who applied! We are specially pleased with the attitude expressed in these letters. It indicates to us the fact that we are becoming better understood and that many of our brethren feel that there is a very real and very important work intrusted to us to accomplish.

These days are full of peril for many of the old-time institutions which have contributed to the progress and the improvement of the race. As we near the fulfillment of time, the end of probationary days, and the days of "wrath and judgment," it seems evident that the souls of men are being tried as never before. All that can be shaken is trembling, even to those institutions which have been the bulwark of our advancement.

Among these are the home and the family, both of which seem threatened to-day with ultimate disintegration. Who can deny that it is a day rife with instances of men "being without natural affections," a day when God is forgotten, and the mad thirst for pleasure is making of home but a place to eat and sleep? The alarming increase of divorces shows how insecure are the foundations of the once strong and impregnable institution of the home and family. Countless children to-day know nothing of the combined love of father and mother, nor the saving influence and grace of a godly home.

To whom should these tendencies bring greater alarm and concern than the mothers of the nation? Who has a better reason for fighting to retain the permanency and efficacy of the family group than the "mothers in Israel," the women of the church to which has been intrusted the sacred commission of establishing Zion—a condition of purity and love and self-abnegation?

And in her effort to combat the destructive forces of the present day, so fraught with the power of evil, to whom can she look for encouragement and assistance if not to the ministry, dedicated to the service of good and the advancement of the cause of Christ upon earth?

Oh, for the time when righteousness shall prevail, when knowledge shall cover the earth as the goodness of God envelopes it, albeit unrecognized in many quarters! Oh, for the time when profession will be accompanied by demonstration, when those who claim to love Christ and are named among his followers, will have the strength and courage to live that love and allegiance; when expediency and diplomacy, contentions and suspicions, accusations and disloyalty will have given place to perfect truth, perfect trust, and perfect harmony!

Straws Which Show Which Way the Wind Blows

"I am interested very much in the Women's Department, for I think there are splendid possibilities and opportunities for service for the Master, awaiting the women of the church."
—E. F. H.

"I am desirous of knowing more concerning the work and organization of the Women's Department. Please send literature to cover same."
—L. G.

"Some time ago I availed myself of an opportunity to obtain a package of literature from your department, which cost me twenty-five cents and was worth a good deal more! I try to speak a good word for your department wherever I can, and shall be glad to receive any additional published matter you can send me."—W. C. E.

"I am really quite interested in the work of your department and think all our ministry should be. . . . I have tried to place the Women's Department where it should be in our branch, and am making every effort to get the women to work out along the new lines of endeavor outlined by your 'advance agents' at reunions, etc., to the best of my understanding."—D. A. Y.

"I wish to assure you that it is an inspiration to me to read such letters as Brother Amos Berve has but recently written to your department. After reading his letter I made a dive for my typewriter, to get this letter off, asking you to send me just the things you think I ought to have in my work as a district officer. . . . Your organizer and director of your work in our district is a welcome visitor in any of the branches of our district, and my anxiety is to give this department an intelligent and comprehensive support in all of its phases."—J. L. C.

"I am glad of this opportunity to learn more of God's work in your department. The work of the sisters is badly needed at this place, and I am anxious to help them broaden their field of activity."—J. L. C.

"Being a pastor, I have often desired to become acquainted with the work of the Women's Department, and I assure you, if you send me the pamphlets, I shall be pleased to study them, and to assist when and where I can to further your work."—W. B. F.

"I assure you that I appreciate your offer, and I also appreciate the good work you are doing. I did not respond to your first offer, but it was not narrowness, nor yet indifference. I am not prejudiced, unless, peradventure, it might be in favor of your most excellent work, for I have long since insisted that we men would amount to little or nothing if it were not for our noble sisters. Believe me, I am an ardent supporter of your good work, and I pray God to give you light and wisdom so as to be able to reach the best that is in store for you, and that, by means of your excellent organization and program, you be able to pass the vision on to others.

"I will gladly give your literature my consideration and render you all the assistance it is possible for me to give. I have always been a supporter of the women's cause. You see, my good mother is a woman, and my good wife is a woman, and my sweet little daughter will some day be a woman. What would this world be were it not for the women and the excellent work they are doing?"—J. E. V.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Resolve to Be Economical

We are just beginning a new year when good resolutions are in order. Many resolves are being made. Good resolutions are solemn and should not be made lightly. Resolutions being the order of the day, I would like to suggest that each member should pray at least once each day for the success of our Christmas offering. But as prayer without works is valueless, let us prove our faith by our works and contribute to this worthy cause by making some sacrifice, doing without something which would really be a sacrifice. For instance, could we not forego some article of clothing which probably in our mind we think we need very much—a hat or coat may look old-fashioned, but when worn a season longer for such a cause it becomes glorified.

I was in a friend's house the other day and picked up a book lying on her parlor table, giving an account of Abraham Lincoln, illustrating his birthplace and also the place where he worshiped God. I could not help, in my mind, making a contrast of conditions and of the many luxuries of our time and the extreme poverty from which he arose to such a great eminence, and it occurred to me then that part at least of this luxury could be avoided and used for a better purpose.

A day of reckoning is close at hand and our stewardship will be required. Is the cut of a garment once to be compared to the noble work of sacrificing for God's work? Which is of the most consequence? Will power and determination to succeed are what will win and God will bless the effort. Then we can make this a banner year for the Christmas offering.

Financial depression looms large before our eyes, but that is only to test our faithfulness. The question is, Are we willing to sacrifice? We sing, "Though the task be great that lies before us, We trust in one divinely strong," But do we? Have we really come to the point where we can trust? Then if we can, nothing can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord, neither height, nor depth, nor any other creature.

Revival Services at Pontiac

Elders W. I. Fligg and M. W. Liston are given considerable space in the Pontiac, Michigan, Daily Press, of January 14, announcing a series of revival services beginning at the Central Theater on the 15th.

Elder Liston is to have charge of the musical features, having been identified with musical work in Flint for the last to see and understand the subject taught, what must she first be able to do?

7. The power of our imagination depends upon what two factors?

8. Explain by giving an illustration other than the one given by the author, "the imagination is limited by the stock of images." Also an illustration of what is meant by "the imagination is limited also by our constructive ability."

9. Explain what is meant by "daydreaming." What is the result of such a habit?

10. Even though every field of human experience and every line of human interest is in some way affected by the imagination, yet all these activities can be classed under two different types. What are they? Give illustrations of each.

11. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

DORA GLINES.

four and a half years, during which time he was assistant director of the Flint Community Musical Association. Elder Fligg will do most of the preaching.

Elder Liston has done considerable work in conducting song-fests for clubs, boards of commerce, and similar organizations in the State, and has offered to assist in any way in Pontiac during the stay there. A question box has been provided and replies to inquiries will be made each Friday night.

The topics announced are of special interest, and no doubt a large attendance will be had.

The regular announcement notice says that no services will be held at the Saints' Church on Front Street until further notice, all meetings to be held at Central Theater.

An Important Series of Articles in "Autumn Leaves"

In a recent letter to the editor of Autumn Leaves, Apostle T. W. Williams says: "I have found some good material for coming months. It will be matter particularly interesting to our own people, as it has to do with solving the problem of industrial activity in relation to employers and employees, the housing of workers, and the recreational and sanitary essentials to an up-to-date industrial institution. These articles will be: 'The factory in a garden'; 'Work and play combined'; 'Bournville, the ideal village'; 'A model Sunday school'; 'The friend's institute.'

"I have found the basis for these articles in the Cadbury Institution, near Manchester. The other articles which you announced for the coming year from me can wait. I consider these far more important just now, as they have to do with the solution of our industrial problems."

ASHLAND, KENTUCKY, December 14, 1921.

Editors Herald: Brother David Burtch and wife, of Michigan, dropped in on the Ironton, Ohio, Branch unexpectedly one Sunday morning about three months ago, and since their arrival things have been moving. We have had some very spiritual prayer meetings and two brothers have been ordained, Brother Michael Cleary as priest, and Brother George Williams, teacher. We have renovated the interior of our little meeting house and Brother Burtch's powerful sermons have aroused the interest of so many outsiders we had to buy more chairs. There has been a committee appointed to draw plans for a new church, something that we need badly. There have been several requests for preaching from LaGrance, a little town three miles away, and several meetings have been held there at the schoolhouse to packed houses, and many are interested. We believe there will be several baptisms soon.

Our Sunday school is growing nicely and we are going to work hard and continue the good work.

Ever praying for the success of the work,

GARD H. KIRKENDALL.

BRADY, MONTANA, January 11, 1922.

Editors Herald: As we wish to secure a Latter Day Saint to take charge of our ranch, we take this means of letting those of the church who would be interested in farm life in Montana know of our needs.

We would like to hear from some who would be interested in spreading the gospel in this big country.

In gospel bonds,

N. B. WILLIAMS.

Box 51.

Central Chicago

Central Chicago has every reason to feel encouraged at the outlook at the beginning of this another year of service for the Master.

Our sacrament service on New Year's Day was indeed a spiritual feast and all present felt encouraged and uplifted. Brother H. P. W. Keir spoke to the young people by the Spirit, telling them that some present would soon be called to service.

In the evening we listened to an eloquent sermon by Elder Joseph Luff on "Seeing Jesus."

January 16, a series of meetings was begun. Preaching by J. L. Cooper, district president; Ward L. Christy, city missionary; and Philemon Pement, of Ottawa, Canada. Brother Pement preached Sunday morning and evening on "God's unchangeableness."

At 3 p. m., union sacramental service was held and many Saints from the district were in attendance. God's Spirit was present in power. After two hours of continued prayer and testimony the meeting was closed and all felt encouraged to go forward more earnestly and zealously than ever before.

Our series of meetings having such an auspicious beginning encourages us to expect great and lasting good.

Yours for the upbuilding of Zion,

HATTIE K. BELL.

Boston, Massachusetts

The Boston, Massachusetts, Branch has just celebrated a Merry Christmas, made doubly happy in that the birthday of the King was also the birthday of four souls into the kingdom.

The year now closing has been a busy one and marked by many changes. Even the church building has been changed extensively, and completely renovated, as will be noted from the following clipping from the Somerville Journal:

Church Alteration Completed

Extensive alterations and an entire renovation of the church building have been completed by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Sewall Street, corner of Grant Street. The building has been painted inside and out, and a new roof put on. The seating capacity has been increased, and the arrangement reversed so that the pulpit now occupies what was formerly the rear of the auditorium. The floor has been raised at the rear of the building and sloped toward the front.

The color scheme used in the inside of the building is light gray, trimmed with darker gray and white, and an ornament of gold in the center of the ceiling. New lighting fixtures and floor coverings are being provided by the Progressive class of the Sunday School and Religio Department.

Much of the credit for these improvements is due to the labor of our energetic pastor, Brother E. L. Traver. Brother Traver has labored long and hard to bring about these improvements.

We feel that we have now an excellent little church home and are prepared to meet those who in obedience to the gospel message may come in with us. We trust there may be many souls added to our number soon.

Two farewell receptions have been given to our missionary workers during the past year, one to Brother Baldwin on May 3, and one to our district president, C. Edward Miller, on November 11.

Our city missionary, E. J. Gleazer, is laboring diligently to win souls to Christ and build up souls in Christ. His program sounds like that of a busy man. In addition to preaching locally he preaches at Lynn Sunday afternoons, teaches a class in Sunday school, a large class in Religio on "The social problem," and a class in public speaking. This, too, in addition to his school work at Harvard.

The Sunday school is ably presided over by Sister Jennie Studley, with Ralph Hardy as assistant. Brother Hardy is also proving himself a capable assistant to Brother George Sinclair in directing the affairs of Religio. This department has provided some excellent programs recently. Two of unusual interest were, "Maine night" and "Canadian night."

Brother Dutee J. Hall was recently elected chorister and has taken hold of this work with a zeal worthy of his unusual talent. The cantata, "The hope of the world," which the choir rendered Christmas night, was a tribute to his ability as a director.

On November 13, the branch was favored by a visit from President Frederick M. Smith. In his forceful, clear-cut manner he outlined the high ideals of the church. May each of us labor unceasingly to make the realization of these ideals a living reality is our earnest prayer.

In bonds,

H. A. CHELLINE.

Kansas City Stake

Our missionary force is very active. During the past week, series of meetings have been conducted in three of the local churches under the direction of Stake Missionary Amos T. Higdon. At the Montgall Church Alvin Knisley has been holding forth, and at Armourdale George Jenkins, assisted by Charles May and Joseph G. Smith. And at the Second Church Brother Higdon is personally in charge, with Apostle Paul M. Hanson helping with special sermons and stereopticon lectures. The meetings closed at Montgall Church on Friday night, while they are to continue at both Armourdale and Second for some time yet. Splendid attendance at all three places, with Armourdale drawing the largest crowd; the net results so far are the giving in of one name for baptism, but there are assurances of more additions. There is also spiritual benefit to the Saints who attend, who of course are the backbone of the meetings. The music is under the management of the stake chorister and orchestra leader, who are able to give splendid support by way of directing congregational singing and with special numbers, both vocal and instrumental.

That the neighborhood may be made acquainted with the approach of these meetings a house-to-house canvass is made, and where possible announcements are placed in the hands of an adult member of the household.

Often this furnishes an opportunity for conversation upon gospel themes, in which case the canvasser spends as much time as wisdom directs in delivering the message to his audience of one or two as the case may be. Literature of the church is also left with those who it is believed would appreciate it. While but few of the great numbers visited, respond, yet some nonmembers do come who finally obey, and in this way the twos and threes are added to the church, "such as should be saved."

A girls' hotel and home was established when Bishop Blair came to Kansas City and became bishop of the stake. He saw the need of a hotel for girls, where our girls from out of town who work for a living could have not a mere room, but a real home. The residence building located one door east of Central Church at 1406 East Ninth Street was fitted up and named Temple Hall, which has proved a success, except that it is not large enough to take care of those who would take advantage of its accommodations. At present Sister Viola Dawes is in charge as matron. The hotel is filled to its capacity. To girls who desire a place with comforts and genial surroundings with motherly care, Temple Hall should be very attractive.

Of the eldership under general appointment who dispensed the word in the stake on Sunday we note J. W. Peterson, Alvin Knisley, Charles May, Joseph G. Smith, Ammon White, and J. E. Vanderwood.

On Sunday, the 22d, the second stake musical institute, under direction of general and stake choristers, will be held at the Grandview Church all day. Those churches directly participating are Argentine, East Argentine, and Grandview.

Dallas, Texas

We are in the "forward march," as was expressed in one of our recent sermons. We are not many in number, but are striving to do all we can.

Patriarch Ammon White was with us sometime ago and we are still reaping benefits from his short stay. Besides, holding meetings for about a week in which the Spirit was manifested to a great degree, a number of blessings were given, and we feel greatly helped by them, referring to them often as a spiritual support.

At our branch business meeting Brother R. F. Moore was elected for our president, our past president, Brother H. H. Davenport, having served us with untiring efforts for the past two years.

We welcome visitors to our meetings held at Third and Dallas Streets. The Sunday services are as follows: Sunday school at 9.45 a. m. Preaching at 11; prayer meeting at 6.30 p. m., preaching at 7.30. Every first Sunday of the month, sacrament service in the morning instead of preaching. Our services during the week are: Wednesday, 7.30 p. m., prayer meeting; Friday, 7.30 p. m., Religio.

We also have three normal classes, which are being conducted by Sister J. E. Nicoll through Graceland College. We find this of great value to us.

Our relief and service ladies are busy doing their part, mostly by handwork. Last year through their services the church was redecorated, and though not a large structure it is a comfortable place of worship.

Artland, Saskatchewan

The winter weather has been delightful, there being very few cold days here this season.

Elder Birch W. Whiting is with us now, encouraging and strengthening the Saints and friends. We have arranged with him another week's stay.

Our Christmas entertainment was a success.

The last Thursday in the old year the three branches came with well-filled baskets for a Christmas dinner in the hall. A large crowd was present. After dinner, a prayer service was held, and a collection taken up for the Christmas offering fund. This was divided equally between the three branches.

W. J. Cornish, president of the Northern Saskatchewan District, and A. J. Cornish, district superintendent of Sunday schools, have returned from a tour of the district. They report many interesting experiences, such as branches and individuals coming up higher, seekers of truth finding the right way, and sharp encounters with those who had missed the way, or, blinded by the light, walked in darkness.

Elder J. J. Cornish was with W. J. Cornish part of the time and expects to return in the spring to Ruthilda to resume the work.

Bisbee, Arizona

Having received letters from editors of Ensign and HERALD informing us of the recently made change in the policy of the Board of Publication in regard to the character of THE SAINTS' HERALD and Zion's Ensign, we shall hereafter greet the readers through the official organ of the church relative to local news; and shall endeavor to confine ourselves to those things which might be more or less of general interest to the membership, and will try to avoid going into detail with reference to things of minor importance and entirely of local interest.

We appreciate very much what the Ensign has done for the church in this field, and feel assured that its new venture will open greater fields of usefulness, and that its pages will be laden with many valuable messages of truth which will gladden the hearts of its army of readers. We bespeak for Zion's Ensign the hearty cooperation of every member of the church.

The Women's Department decided that their efforts during 1922 should be devoted to the interests of the local building fund; that one social gathering should be held each month where a silver collection will be taken, and one other meeting each month where the business of the department should be attended to, and where the sisters should meet to do fancy work, or sewing, while the educational leader reads some interesting book or article, or presents some other educational feature. The secretary was authorized to send to the Children's Home at Lamoni the dresses and aprons left over from the bazaar, and to send to the general department the annual assessment of ten cents per capita. Mrs. J. R. Enyard was elected superintendent. E. R. DAVIS.

Topeka, Kansas

The sacramental service in November will long be remembered as a veritable endowment of spiritual blessing, which seems to be the dominant note of meetings held since.

A two-day meeting was held November 26 and 27 with very excellent results. Several of our members attended the conference at Troy.

Newly elected officers in the various departments are: Branch president, Ira G. Whipple, with Elders A. P. Crooker and A. A. Goffe as counselors; Sunday school superintendent, B. H. Bunten; superintendent of Religio, Roy Whipple. The election of C. J. Sheets as custodian of funds was ratified by all departments.

Seattle, Washington

We still continue our services at "The Mother Ryther Home for Children" every Tuesday night, where there are nearly one hundred children of various ages. We are teaching the pure doctrine of Christ to the children. My missionary companion tells them a story with a good moral, and Sister Ruth Marshall reads some beautiful Bible story. As a part of one of the services, three girls of the home repeated in concert the names of the sixty-six books in the Bible in regular order, an unusual accomplishment. Who can beat it?

We were pleased to have with us on New Year's Day Brother and Sister Van Eaton, from Canada. They formerly lived in this region and did much in establishing the work here. They will spend the winter in this district. His testimony in our meeting possessed the element of confidence in the work and in those whom the Lord had placed as leaders, a commendable condition.

On September 14 Brother Claude H. Slemmons was baptized.

One pleasing feature of the recent priesthood meeting was a reading by W. W. Powers from Unity of May 1917, on the duties of the priesthood, following which he read a poem of his own entitled, "Duty," a copy of which we inclose for your use.

J. M. TERRY.

3625½ Second Avenue North West.

Oklahoma City

All of our departments have elected officers for 1922. The leaders are as follows: R. E. Miller, president of branch; Brother McCarter, superintendent of the Sunday school; Ralph Vickery, president of Religio; and Sister Florence Miller, president of Women's Department.

The Women's Department cleared about $650 with the dining hall at the fair last fall and about $150 at the bazaar. This seems very small compared to the success we have had the last two years, but we are not discouraged, as it was as good as we could expect considering the financial conditions that are prevalent throughout the country at the present time.

Brother U. W. Greene, of Independence; Brother W. E. Shakespeare, of Stillwater; and Brother Harvey Syckle, of El Reno, were with us last Sunday. Brother Greene preached two excellent sermons Sunday. The services were well attended and were enjoyed by everyone present. We were disappointed that Brother Greene could not remain and hold a series of meetings, but we are looking forward to his return in the near future.

Atchison, Kansas

Special meetings were held in November by Brethren Fike and Ely. The city was canvassed with announcements and tracts but seemingly with no success.

Sister Emma Lentz who had been in attendance at Graceland College returned at Thanksgiving time, was taken ill, and did not recover. Her death occurred December 21. We mourn for one who was a patient sufferer and making the most of her opportunities.

The election of officers resulted in choice of Everett Bowser as Religio superintendent. The Women's Department elected officers and are doing a good work, as also the Temple Builders, who are active.

Honored by State University

Lonzo Jones received word last week that he had been elected a member of the fraternity of the State university known as "Phi Beta Kapa." This is an honorary fraternity, membership to which is awarded on account of high scholastic standing. Not more than ten per cent of any graduating class can be thus honored and no student whose average scholarship is below 90 per cent can be received as a member. Lonzo was one of five elected at this time, his average scholarship being about 93 per cent. This is considered the highest honor that the university can bestow upon its students. It will be remembered that Inez Smith Davis won the same honor at the Ohio university last summer.—Lamoni Chronicle, December 29, 1921.

Brother Jones is in charge of the department of religious education at Graceland College, and Inez Smith Davis has accompanied her husband to Australia where they will be engaged in missionary work for the church.

Independence

The council of the amalgamated classes of young people in Zion, including the pastoral authorities, recently decided to hold a series of services for young people for seven evenings, beginning February 19 and concluding on the 26th, omitting Saturday evening the 25th. There will be seven speakers, who will present the following subjects: "The theory of continued revelation," "Second coming of Christ," "The scriptural church," "Authority of the priesthood," "Book of Mormon," "Zion," "Spiritual gifts." The series is built around the fundamental contributions of this church to the religious thought of the times. The appointment of speakers has been left with the First Presidency and will be announced later.

The plan of operation will be largely as last year. An age limit will be placed and tickets issued for seats. However, it will be arranged so that there will be a meeting in the lower auditorium each evening where the same speakers will speak on the same subjects, and the music had above will be given below on other evenings.

The radiophone sermon Sunday evening in the radio room near the Stone Church was by Walter W. Smith, on "The mission of Jesus Christ to save people from their sins." A male quartet sang two selections: "Let the lower lights be burning," and "Wandering child, come home." The singers were Fred Friend, Evan Fry, Doctor Frank Criley, and Kenneth Morford. Those having good receiving sets heard the entire program with ease, and it is evident that it is but a matter of a short time till with a little more apparatus the sermons at the Stone Church, with the entire musical setting, can be broadcasted, and the other churches in Zion or any other place within the receiving radius who wish can install a receiving and amplifying set at moderate cost and hear the sermon entire in their own churches. The missionary department, with receiving sets available, can go out into the schoolhouses of the country and invite an audience to hear the sermons thus delivered, relieving for other places many of the priesthood.

The Religio program this week will be given by the nurses of the Independence Sanitarium.

The third of the lectures to the priesthood of Zion was delivered at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon by Walter W. Smith, this being his second lecture on teaching as a duty of the ministry. A short song service led by F. A. Russell, and a few voluntary prayers from the audience preceded the lecture. Next Sunday a few testimonies will precede the service.

Doctor G. L. Harrington recently returned from a trip of a few weeks in the West, including California.

Mrs. Fred B. Farr, assistant director of the Stone Church choir, has been off duty on account of two operations performed at the Sanitarium, but is getting along nicely, having returned to her home.

The regular council of the Women's Department in Zion met recently, with a good attendance of local women and some out-of-town visitors. Milk inspection and warm lunches for school children, also cradle roll information, were discussed with profit. They will report more details of the meeting in another place.

The following patients entered the Independence Sanitarium during the two weeks ending January 21, 1922: Mrs. Thirza Cochran and baby, Mrs. Jennie Cole, Mrs. H. J. Mathews and baby, Mr. J. S. Kelley, Miss Ina Hatty, Mrs. Cordie Hulmes, Mr. James Hamilton, Miss Virginia Hunter, Mrs. F. B. Farr, Miss Lottie Inman, Mrs. Teresa Ryan and baby, Mrs. Carmen Kinsello, all of Independence; Mrs. Martha Lasitter, Roy Curtis Webb, and Miss Bertha Frank, of Mount Washington, Missouri; Miss Jonnie McPherson, War-rensburg, Missouri; David Krahl, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Teresa Hutchison, Raytown, Missouri; Charles A. Malinson, Sugar Creek, Missouri; Mrs. Myrtle Martin, Collins, Missouri; Mr. Vearl Bailey, Cameron, Missouri; Mrs. Viola Mannering, San Antonio, Texas; and Doris Gibbs, Lamoni, Iowa. X-ray patients were: William Cruwell and Mrs. Dubie, of Independence; Mrs. E. C. Judy, Buckner, Missouri; Mrs. G. D. Boyd, Weiser, Idaho; and Mrs. C. Kearns, Atherton, Missouri.

About fifty people met last Thursday evening and organized a Michigan Club. This organization is officered by B. C. Harder, president; W. F. Smith and F. W. Rauh, vice presidents; W. E. McKindsey, secretary; Mrs. Oral J. McClain, treasurer; Mrs. Zella Harder, historian; W. J. Campbell, publicity agent.

A welfare committee and lookout committee were appointed.

All Michigan people not registered in this organization are invited to register at the Wolverine Candy Kitchen, 218 West Lexington Street. The club is composed of people who have lived in Michigan, and its objects are to keep in touch with each other and promote good feeling and sociability.

A drive to raise five thousand dollars in Jackson County outside Kansas City to employ a paid scout executive and carry on a summer camp will begin January 30, with Brother George A. Gould in charge of the committee on preliminary work. The drive itself will be in charge of a committee headed by Brother Mark H. Siegfried.

A bulletin of the Chamber of Commerce, of Independence, announces that they are working on a plan to provide a memorial building for soldiers and sailors to be used as a community center.

A committee recommends that a bond issue of $200,000, to be backed by the Chamber of Commerce, be taken out for the erection of a memorial building, to be located within three blocks of the square on one of the main traffic streets.

It is hoped in this way to solve the problem of clean recreation and amusement for those who have no place for such things, and it is urged that the cost of each tax payer be so slight as hardly to be worthy of consideration, in comparison with the benefits to be derived.

Brooklyn, New York

Although the Brooklyn Branch is a small unit in a very large unit in one tiny corner of this big world, the few of us are right here, working for the advancement of God's kingdom here on earth, though we have been silent for a long time.

The annual business meeting of the branch was held January 6. Brother Ephraim Squire was made president. An organization was perfected and plans are being laid for the improvement of the branch. Everybody is going to work, as the burden of the work falls upon the local men for the present at least. That is one reason for giving all an opportunity to get under the old ship and lift.

We feel much encouraged over the work in Brooklyn. Surely if all the resolutions that were voiced at the last sacrament are carried out, there will be no doubt of our success the coming year.

Brother Hinkleley, of Jonesport, Maine, whose business brings him to the city occasionally, reports having seen Brother John Sheehy recently and that he is very much improved in health and is doing considerable church work. Brother Sheehy is much loved by the Brooklyn Saints.

Priesthood meetings have been frequent of late. It is said a very fine spirit prevails.

Brother Paul Craig, of Lamoni, who is making his home in Philadelphia while pursuing his musical studies in New York City, preached for us Sunday evening, January 15. He said many things which deserve careful thought.

The repairs on the furnace having been completed, we can promise a warm church for Wednesday night prayer service. Prayer meetings are the backbone of the church.

Our new Sunday school superintendent, Roy Squire, and his assistants, Brother Valentine and Violet Haan, have started out in earnest to promote the interests of the school. We look for good results. A pretty cantata, "Heart of the bells," was given Christmas evening by the Sunday school.

Saint Louis, Missouri

The Religio had a most remarkable business meeting the first of the New Year. Although there were two or more names placed in nomination for every office (except pianist) no one declined. We do not remember of ever having such harmony and unity of sentiment in any business session before.

On January 15, S. A. Burgess was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour.

In the evening we were again favored with a practical sermon from Leslie S. Wight, who has preached each Sunday evening for some time.

We would like to chronicle the marriage of William Cowlshaw and Mary Bourgeret because Brother Cowlshaw is a grandson of pioneer members of Saint Louis District, and from infancy has been a faithful attendant at all church services, while his wife is equally active in choir and Sunday school work.

The five-year-old son of Rob Lloyd was thrown through the windshield of his father's auto by a sudden stop of the machine. Rob picked him off the radiator, fearing he was killed, and could hardly realize how greatly blessed he was when he discovered his boy was unhurt—not even a scratch from the broken glass. Rob sings the doxology with unusual fervor since then.

Cold, snow, freeze, and blow is the weather we are having, and is the cause of some staying at home.

Anna DeJong Smith is no longer our Religio president, as Howard Cook was elected to that office. Sister Smith is still on the staff, however, and just as ready to be a helper as a leader. Harry Burch is the leader of the boy movement. Women's Department is having all-day sessions every week and making articles for the Sanitarium.

Jack Trowbridge, nephew of Granville Trowbridge, was struck by an auto Friday evening while coasting, and expired an hour later.

Lincoln, Nebraska

We regret to report that our former pastor, J. L. Parker, deemed it best, considering the financial stress under which the church is laboring, to engage in secular work for a time. He had the advice and counsel of those in charge and has moved his family to Des Moines, Iowa. Elder J. M. Baker has been elected branch president and takes an interest in all the departments. He has attended two meetings of the Women's Department already this year.

District conference will meet here February 10, 11, and 12. First session Friday evening under auspices of the Religio, Women's Department will have Saturday evening. All meals except breakfast will be served in church basement, with no charge. A resolution will be presented to change date of dis-district conferences, in view of the change in General Conference date.

Sunday school is moving nicely under leadership of Sister S. E. McWilliams. The Christmas cantata portrayed the Christmas of the rich and poor, showing what the true spirit of Christmas will do.

The Religio has its ups and downs, and just now it is mostly downs, but we are not discouraged.

The Women's Department is meeting every week in an effort to prepare an entertainment feature at the conference.

Elder J. M. Baker's address is 1145 E Street, Lincoln, Nebraska.
BLANCHE I. ANDREWS, Correspondent.

An interesting feature of the successful services at Council Bluffs, Iowa, by Elder J. F. Curtis, closing December 21, and marked by the baptism of forty-three, was that prayer services were held prior to each preaching service except on Sunday evening. The Saints responded well and a number of new converts took an active part, greatly to their benefit.

please write Mrs. Pearl Greenwood so arrangements will be made for your abode while here. Pearl Greenwood, secretary.

Pastoral Notice

To the Saints of Southern Wisconsin; Greeting: I am sure it is time I was sending you a few lines in explanation of what I am doing, as I know some of the branches have expected to see me with them for special meetings long before this. Something over eight weeks ago, Sister Dutton took sick with a pain in her left side, which continued to cause her such distress that she has had to be in bed nearly all the time since. The first thing we did was to call the elders and administer several times. She did not gain, but rather got worse on the whole. The doctor was called on Thanksgiving Day, and he continued for about two weeks. His treatments, together with administering, brought some relief, and he advised that she dress and sit up, which she did, but in a few days she took a relapse and was much worse. So another doctor was called, and he agreed with the first that there might be some gathering forming in her side, and it caused a state of peritonitis, which was very painful. So she continued for six weeks, when one morning the doctor discovered a rounding bunch in her side and advised that she go soon to the hospital in Janesville. She came here Friday, December 30, and on Saturday, December 31, was operated on to drain the pus sac. This proved a success and brought relief. It continues to drain at this writing (January 17), but the doctor here looks for it to end soon. I assure you that it has been a trying time. But withal there have been seasons of blessing and comfort experienced. The Saints here and there have remembered us, and we thank them for their faith and prayers, also temporal blessings that have been sent. In some cases, and especially in our home branch, at Evansville, seasons of fasting have been held which have brought much comfort and blessing. Since Sister Dutton has been here, her stepmother and Sister Edith Hadley have cared for our children in our home, excepting one week of vacation when they were at my mother's, two miles north of Janesville. They have kept well, and are now in school, with Sister Brohmer, of Madison, caring for them in our home. Many, many kindnesses have been shown by Saints and friends, and we say, "May God bless them one and all." We hope and pray that this trouble may soon be at an end, and we thus be able to take our place in church work, which is ever our desire.

We certainly desire the faith and prayers of all Saints, that this condition, which has so hindered, may soon be removed. I assure you all it has been a trying time, but still we see many who are suffering worse. God alone knows the reason why, and what the end will be. We wish to say, "Thy will, not ours, be done."

Our district conference convened at Madison, the first Saturday and Sunday in December. I attended the business sessions and returned at night to our home, as Sister Dutton was quite sick at the time. The conference gave me the choice of one as my associate in the district, and I wish to name Norman E. Hield, jr., of Janesville, as vice president of the Southern Wisconsin District. We desire that success may attend.

Your servant in Christ,
JASPER O. DUTTON.

MCDONALD.—Julius Sharpe McDonald was born March 15, 1854, in Clinton County, Ohio. Moved to Appanoose County, Iowa, in 1856. Came to Harrison County, Iowa, at the age of nineteen. Married Caroline Garner, November 16, 1879. Baptized September 15, 1878. Called to office of teacher May 31, 1890. Ordained an elder October 23, 1904. Acted as president of the Magnolia Branch for two years and was elected president of the Missouri Valley Branch in September, 1915. It was through his earnest efforts that the new church edifice at Missouri Valley was erected. Moved to McAllen, Texas, in 1918. Died of paralysis December 31, at the home of his daughter in Logan, Iowa, his wife preceding him one year and four months. Leaves three daughters, eight grandchildren, a sister, and a brother. Funeral services from the Saints' church at Logan, conducted by Daniel Macgregor.

BORBRIDGE.—Albert Warren Borbridge was born September 10, 1865, at Corinth, Ontario. Baptized June 7, 1885, at London. Ordained a teacher January 24, 1915, and to office of elder October 19, 1919, and a counselor to Bishop J. L. Burger October 3, 1920. Attended the General Conference of 1920. Died December 5, 1921, leaving a widow. Funeral sermon by J. L. Burger.

McKEOWN.—John J. McKeown was born at Liverpool, England, March 9, 1843. Baptized May, 1892. Ordained a deacon February 14, 1894. Died at Jonesport, Maine, November 19, leaving an aged wife and one son, Bernie. He was a devoted Saint, faithful and true to the work. Funeral from Jonesport church in charge of W. E. Rogers; sermon by O. L. Thompson. Interment in Hillside Cemetery.

MARSH.—Ellen Mefford was born November 24, 1855, in Harrison County, Iowa, near the place where the town of Woodbine now stands. Baptized when fourteen years old. Married January 1, 1871, to W. D. Marsh. Two of their five children died in infancy. Died January 20, 1921, at Omaha, Nebraska. Her husband, two sons, one daughter, three sisters, two brothers, and thirteen grandchildren are left to mourn. Funeral from the Omaha south side church. Sermon by James Huff, assisted by George W. Steele.

He and his wife moved to Independence in November, 1920. Died at his home, December 18. Wife and son in Independence, two sisters and other relatives in Sweden, are left. Funeral from Carson's chapel in charge of O. W. Okerlind, sermon by C. A. Swenson, interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Watch It Rise

We get the word thermometer from the Greek word thermi, meaning heat, and combine it with "meter," which means "to measure."

It is a heat measuring device. Energy must be expended to get heat. It may be through human effort or the consuming of fuel, but either way it costs money to produce heat, and no thermometer will rise without it. For every degree that the "mercury" rises in this thermometer, some boy or girl, some class or school, perhaps all of them together, we had better say, has raised $1000.

Now let us consider the cost.

It has meant many miles of weary travel for tired feet. It has meant days of laborious work and sacrifice. This fuel, kindled by the spark of the Holy Spirit, makes our fires of devotion, and from that warmth comes the heat to raise our thermometer.

Like a great engine of mighty power, we have all been working for this Christmas offering inheritance fund. "Horsepower" is the term applied to the unit of energy generated by engines and other devices. One horsepower is said to be an equivalent amount of energy to that required to lift 100 pounds 5½ feet in one second. We have no way of measuring the human energy expended in raising our thermometer one degree. Yet we know that it has taken the combined energy of all those engaged in Sunday school work one year to raise the amount which will finally be indicated on this thermometer.

Love, the great dynamic, has produced the energy and borne our burdens with ease. Love lifts. It's a mighty power when directing human energies against a single purpose.

The 1920 Christmas offering amounted to $86,273. During the last year our tithes and offerings fell off 36.4 per cent. After noting this fact, observe how high the mercury has already risen on the British Number Next Week

Our issue for February 1 will be devoted almost exclusively to the work of the church in the British Isles. It has been compiled by Apostle T. W. Williams from contributions furnished by representative men and women in the church work in England.

With the articles covering all the important aspects of our past and present situations in that land, are pictures of most of the leading workers.

The cover design centers around an interesting photograph of the Ann Hathaway cottage and garden at Stratford-on-Avon—a typical English scene that brings up memories of the great Shakespeare.

What is your best guess?

We will publish the names of the ten persons who come the nearest to the grand total. We should have your estimate in the office of the Presiding Bishopric, Box 256, Independence, Missouri, not later than February 20.

Now, altogether! How high will it go? What do you say? Total Christmas offering received to January 22, $29,012.38.

Elder J. B. A Prayer by Charles Derry

By the General Conference of October, 1862, Elder Charles Derry was appointed on a mission to Great Britain. He left America about the first of the following year and arrived in Liverpool February 4, 1863. It was, doubtless, at this time that he uttered the prayer which appears below and shows the spirit of consecration with which he went forth. He traveled in the steerage in order to send as much money as possible home to his wife.

BADE FAREWELL to my wife and children, and started on my mission to England. But oh, my God, it was hard to tear myself from that woman thou hadst given to be my companion and those children thou hadst blessed me with. It wrung the grief drops from my heart. It was hard to see her fold my clothing and cook the last meal we should eat together, perhaps for years, but now to say the last farewell, to gaze for the last time into those blue eyes brilliant with tears, which told how deeply she loved, and how faithful was her heart, yet while her bosom heaved with silent anguish that words could not utter, as her mind would fill with dark forebodings that we might not live to meet again in this world, not one obstacle would she lay in my path, nor utter one word, nor give one look that would say, 'Do not go'; but her heart sought comfort in thy promises.

"She consecrated me to thy service by her years and prayers, and I ask thee, oh, my Father, to accept the sacrifice she has made upon thy holy altar, and let the oil of comfort and consolation be poured into her stricken heart and into those of my beloved children. May they all be preserved from disease and death, from poverty and woe, and above all may they be preserved from the snares of sin and Satan and kept spotless and pure, ready to enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb. And may we have the privilege of enjoying each other's society here on earth, and afterwards in unfading and eternal joys, where the pangs of separation should be no more felt. I ask this in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen and Amen."

EDITORIAL

Credit for the British Number

Through the energetic kindness of Elder T. W. Williams, the excellent material for this number was procured from the various writers indicated under the caption of each. The editors and readers of the HERALD appreciate this service, made so efficiently possible by his journalistic experience in America.

This material was secured some months ago, and at that time we used a smaller type face. On our present basis, we had sufficient material for two HERALDS of ordinary size. Because their classification would allow it, we held out for later publication several excellent articles, among which we note especially, "A mighty empire," by J. W. Rushton; "A visit to Stratford-on-Avon," by Frederick M. Smith; "Reminiscences," by W. R. Armstrong; "A short history of the work in Britain," concluded by S. A. Burgess; "An appeal to the young people," by Nephi Dewsnup; "Street preaching in Great Britain," by Thomas Taylor; "James Baty—A biography."

In the British Isles

President Smith has an intense interest in the British Mission.

I cannot but feel hopeful for the work of the church in the British Isles Mission, and I shall experience keen disappointment if the developments of the next few months fail to indicate that greater impetus has been given to the forward movement. The work of the church generally is forging steadily ahead with greater energy than before, and I fully expect that the officers and members of the church in the British Isles Mission will fall into step with the advancing host.

Before visiting the British Isles I was deeply interested in its work and welfare, but I find that the visit which I have made in company with Brother Williams to all the districts and most of the branches, and the many personal acquaintances I have formed with officers and members, have greatly intensified this interest. After our trip around the mission Brother Williams and I felt better qualified than before to analyze the conditions existing there, and we made full report and recommendations to the joint council. I am glad to say that the council has agreed with our views and sent some of the needed help, more being promised for a later date.

With a few exceptions, the officers of the mission are alert to the interests of the work, and officers and members seem anxious to give of their best that the tasks ahead of us may be successfully accomplished. It is fully expected that every officer and every member in district, branch, and auxiliary will stand ready to assist in every way possible.

The brethren sent by the joint council on the recommendation already referred to, have gone to the mission in the same spirit with which Brother Williams and I went, viz, with a sincere desire to serve the interests of the work in every way possible. I therefore most earnestly plead that every Saint in the British Isles enter into the activities of the church with renewed zeal and freshened determination, heartened by the prospects of bigger and better things.

The establishment of mission headquarters at London will at once strengthen the ties between the Saints in the British Isles and the body of the church, and facilitate and expedite the work, for it is the plan of the Presidency to have one or more of the members of the joint council in charge at Saint Leonard's at all times. This, together with the educational work planned among other activities at Saint Leonard's, cannot but add greatly to the efficiency of the organization in the mission. Let us hope that the fruits of the activities at Saint Leonard's will soon be manifest.

In this connection let me make an appeal to the mission. It is a day of consecration. The work of the church must become of prime importance to every member of the church. So great is the demand for laborers in various phases of church activity that there must be a host of young men and women in training for that work.

Foreign fields, as yet untouched by our missionaries, are opening up opportunities which must be improved. Many activities demand the work of devoted research students and trained specialists. This must be held before the young of the church by their parents, and the spirit of consecration developed to the point where thousands of young persons will give themselves to the service of the church, and be willing to enter upon any course of training and preparation, long or short as the case may be.

Turn the eyes of your sons and daughters to Saint Leonard's, and tell them that Brother and Sister Daniel Sorden have been sent to help in this educational work. It was with keen pleasure that I saw the boys and girls, who January 8, 1921, sailed for America from Liverpool, respond to our call for this work of preparation, and I sincerely hope that they will prove to be but the vanguard of the host of young Saints of the British Isles Mission who will come forward and give their services to the church in response to the general and specific calls being sent out demanding their help. It requires a deep devotion to the cause, and, to develop that devotion throughout the entire membership becomes a present duty of the membership.

Saints of the British Isles, the work is on! The church expects every member to do his duty. In my experience among you I have learned to have confidence in you, and I fully expect to see a whole-souled response to the call; come, let us "Carry on."

May God add his blessing and give us strength, wisdom, and courage for the task.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

The Outlook in Britain

*Apostle Williams says, "Let me emphasize:
The church is international."*

The outlook is bright. There is an open sea—no icebergs; no fogs. We may encounter rough seas. There may be adverse winds and occasional storms. But we have our bearings. Our course is clearly outlined, our destination definite, our captain reliable.

The crew is efficient, the ship seaworthy. All on board, with few exceptions, are joyously looking forward as we sail into new waters and untried seas. Some readjustment is inevitable. Reorganization and displacements may be necessary in some instances. There will be no mutiny or insubordination. Our motto must ever be, The best man or woman for the place. Efficiency counts with God as with men.

We congratulate the Saints in Britain on their heroic and Spartanlike devotion to the church throughout the long and trying years of the war. It is difficult at best to maintain the honor of the church. To do so under circumstances such as attended the late conflict is praiseworthy.

Our hearts have been cheered and our spirits stirred while visiting the various districts and local churches throughout the mission. The association enhances our appreciation of real manhood and genuine womanhood. Surely man was God's noblest creation, and woman his crowning embodiment of love and goodness and virtue.

The general church is extending its helping hand to the Saints in England and Wales and Scotland and Ireland. No longer can it truthfully be said, "The church has left us to ourselves." The old lines of national separation are being wiped out. The interests of the church in all the world are identical. The spirit of provincialism must be discouraged. Let me emphasize: The church is international.

The time has come when we will not think in terms of "my branch" or "my district" or even "our mission." As children of the kingdom, we are as interested in the progress of the work in remote fields as at home.

The wider the outlook the greater the reaction. We grow as we perceive greatness. Isolation and selfish purpose are the meed of little souls. Communal service makes for individual greatness. The Saints in Britain will do well to forget the branch in which their names are registered, the district of which their branch forms a part, and even the mission in which they reside, and think rather of the universal church in its world-wide aspect. We are not members of branches, or districts, or missions. We are members of the church.

Forward, ever forward. Old landmarks are serviceable as they suggest new attainments. We must look backward only that we may move forward. We must not hug shore. Traditions have no place with God. They should not have weight with us. It is not, How have our fathers wrought? but, How best can we achieve? If we are moving forward, the program and method of yesterday are not sufficient for to-day. Doing things constantly in the same way eventuates in ruts. New occasions demand new methods and new tactics. This is as true in England as in America. It is not, How do they do things in America? or, How have we done them here? but, What is the best plan of action now and here?

A young man is not to be despised because he is young. In nearly every instance God has chosen young men to do specific work for him. I speak for the young men of Britain. This does not mean that the older men are to be relegated. There is room for all to work to capacity. No man need be jealous of another's achievements. We grow together, not apart. Let us encourage and stimulate our young men. The only superiority an elder has over a deacon is his ability to do better service. Ordination is not a badge of greatness; it must, if effective, be an insignia of power.

There is a definite place for women in our forward movement. Woman has equal place with man in the divine program. He made them twain. He called them MAN. God has placed no embargo on woman. Wherever man has permitted, God has always exalted womanhood. It is man who has degraded woman, not God. We may well lift the ban which has all too long been placed upon woman in the church, and welcome her to our councils and afford opportunity for expression and service.

When God indicates I have no objection to women occupying in any field now occupied by man. Have you? If so, why? Ministry for God is always contingent upon divine call. When God calls women to service I will not resist the call. I will not permit prejudice to darken counsel. I will not allow tradition to warp judgment. The place and position which women will have in the church in the future rests with God. I am justified in the belief that it will be extended and enlarged. It is possible that her limited field hitherto has been due to the prejudice of man rather than the purpose of God.

May God bless the church work in Britain. May his Holy Spirit lead and comfort. My heartiest congratulations to the noble band of Saints in this land. It has been a joy to minister among you. I shall ever treasure as among my richest experiences the time spent with the Saints in the British Isles.

Editorial Notes

The church at Warrington records the largest number of baptisms of any church in the mission during the past year. Brother Chandler is a fearless and aggressive defender of the faith. He attributes the additions largely to the street meetings which have been held in proximity to their place of worship.

The recent conference of the Wales District held at Nantyglo, September 17 and 18, was in every way a success. The Saints were cheered and comforted and there was a manifest desire to revive the work in Wales. The one great need in that country is houses of worship. Resolutions were passed directing the district and branch authorities to make a survey of the needs in this direction and to report their findings to the general bishop of the church.

Steps are being taken to place the Sunday school, Religio, and Women's Departments on a better footing than hitherto. The financial condition of the Saints has prevented them from securing the necessary publications, but now that the industrial crisis seems to be passed we are hoping for better times, and in the event thereof we will be able to order supplies and effect organization in the various local churches.

Brother James E. Bishop is winning his way with the Saints in the Sheffield District. He is a capable district president and we have nothing but good reports of his work.

Brother Fry has been visiting the churches of the Sheffield and Manchester Districts. It is his purpose to visit every church in the mission. He is careful and painstaking, and we believe that after the Saints come to know him, that there will be an appreciable increase in tithes and offerings.

There has been keen disappointment over the inability to open Saint Leonard's Institute, owing to the lack of funds in the church. But we are pressing on with determination, and despite disappointments and reverses and deprivation we are determined by the help of our heavenly Father to succeed.

The conditions of unemployment in Great Britain are acute. The Government is put to it to devise ways and means to keep the people from starving. Our people have suffered along with the rest of the people, but we know of no cases of dire want among them.

Sunday Schools in Britain

By Blanche Edwards

The conviction is borne in on us as never before, that the realization of our hope of the future lies in the work of to-day.

During the last few years we have been hearing rather a good deal about the League of Nations. Has it ever occurred to you that as Sunday school workers a large measure of the success or failure of such a league depends on us; on the way in which we train the children of to-day to become the citizens of to-morrow; on the ideals we hold before them; on the lofty aims we give them; on the great personalities to which we introduce them; on the help we give them to overcome evil, and to love and work for the good, that the kingdom of God may be established here, that there may be "peace on earth, and good will among men"? Success depends upon whether or not we turn out from our schools real, living, thoroughgoing Christians, who will at all times, in all places, under all circumstances, uphold the honor of our God.

Possibilities

Listen to what Basil Matthews thinks of this. Writing in the Sunday School Chronicle and Christian Outlook of November 13, 1919, he says:

The task of preparing the world of men to take on their shoulders the responsibility of the League of Nations, which is the last great hope of world peace, is a task of Christian education. It is in large measure a part of the task of the day-school teacher, who can so teach history and geography as to reveal and stimulate the kinship of man with man. For just as the roots of the war may be traced back to the purely nationalistic and imperialistic teaching of history in the classrooms of Europe, so the League of Nations—if, and when, it is a working system—will be traceable to the teaching in the classrooms of not only Europe, but of all the continents of the world.

But [and here is the point of supreme importance], after all, the fiery heart of the League of Nations—the flaming center from which it takes its energy and creative strength—lies just in that sphere where the day-school teacher must end his work. The heart of the League of Nations is the person of Christ drawing all men to himself and to one another. He alone of all the world's story reveals a Father to all men. He alone, for that very reason, reveals an effective spirit of world-brotherhood that even breaks the international barriers and bridges the interracial gulfs.

For this reason Harold Cooping's picture of Christ, surrounded by the children of the different races, is [in an infinitely more vivid sense than we realized when we designed it and gave it its title] the hope of the world.

With him in the center and the children of all races at his side and at his feet, the world's future is secure.

It was my privilege for about eighteen months to teach the wide world geography to children of eight or nine years of age. We worked on the plan of "Children in other lands" and learned how these children lived, worked, played, dressed, and ate; their manners and customs; what their homes were like; what was the contribution of their country to the commerce of the world, etc. We were so interested that we ceased to think that anything different from our own conventional way of doing things was "funny" and a subject for ridicule. I know beyond any shadow of a doubt that it is possible for the day-school teacher to so teach geography and history as to reveal and stimulate the kinship of man to man, but here, unfortunately, my work had to stop.

If, however, these lessons could have been enriched by the work of a big-souled, consecrated, Sunday-school teacher, how much might have been done! With the knowledge of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man in his heart, this teacher could have trained his children to realize that the little yellow children of China and Japan; the black children of India and Africa; the little ball of fur rolling down a snowy slope, and then straightening out into a squat little Eskimo; the little Turk in his strange clothes; the little Dutch girl in her fly-away cap and wooden shoes; the dark-haired, dark-eyed, rainbow-clothed Italian child; the little Red Indian children; in fact, every child in this wide, wide world, from north to south and from east to west, is his brother or sister; that for him or her Jesus came, that they might enjoy the beauty and freedom of this gospel; that Jesus belongs to these children just as much as he does to us, and that Zion shall be a place of safety for them, too, if they so desire. Why not?

This is only the beginning. This work could be accomplished in the beginner and primary departments. As the children advance through the school so they are brought into contact with the great worthies of all time. Through the instrumentality of a skilled teacher they see God, and his Son, as the "flaming center" of the whole universe, giving men their energy and creative strength, until in deeds of righteous valor, in acts of self-sacrifice for the good of their fellows, and in nobility of character, they surpass themselves, until we realize that man was created only "a little lower than the angels."

All over the world, children may claim kinship with these heroes and in their hearts may be stirred such love, such admiration, such hero-worship, that from their souls, if not from their lips, comes the longing cry:

"Oh may I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence; live

www.LatterDayTruth.org

In pulses stirred to generosity,
 In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
 For miserable aims that end with self,
 In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars,
 And with their mild persistence urge man's search
 To vaster issues.
 So to live is heaven:
 To make undying music in the world.

"May I reach
 That purest heaven, be to other souls
 The cup of strength in some great agony,
 Enkindle generous ardor, feed pure love,
 Beget the smiles that have no cruelty—
 Be the sweet presence of a good diffused
 And in diffusion ever more intense.
 So shall I join the choir invisible,
 Whose music is the gladness of the world."

Here is a grand outlook, Sunday school workers! Once more we are made to realize the world-wide significance of our work. Once more are we reminded of our "high and holy calling." The mists of doubt and discouragement clear away. The insect stings of life lose their power, and we see the Sunday school work as it is (in its grandeur, and its dignity) and making for the establishment of Zion, our city set on a hill, a living monument to the glory of God.

As we turn our eyes from the vision of this glorious future, "with the glory about us clinging, of the glorious future we see," we hear the clarion cry ring out once more: "Prepare ye. Prepare ye the way of the Lord." Through the churches, through the chapels, but nowhere more boldly than through the Sunday school rings the cry. So strongly, piercingly, commandingly, pleadingly, comes the call, that all prejudice, all littlenesses, are swept away and the conviction is borne in on us as never before, that the realization of our hope of the future lies in our work of to-day. We have been told again and again that the hastening time is upon us. How then dare we delay?

Holding in our hands so great a power, shall we not go forward? We have undertaken the Sunday school work, and it is for us to make a real, living thing out of it. It is our privilege, but our duty, too, so to equip ourselves by study, by faith, by constant discipline, that we may safeguard the children from the evil powers of the world, and lead them to find joy in the service of God. We must fill their lives so full of the beautiful, the noble, the truly great, that evil shall have no place there. To give our children these high ideals it is imperative that we should give the children that uplift that comes from heart contact with great and undying personalities.

To the little ones, we must give an ardent love for their wonderful Elder Brother. To the boys and girls, a true reverence for the gentlest but noblest of all heroes, their King of kings. To the adults a firm, strong religion, giving them an unassailable conviction that God wants them, cares for them, and lovingly asks for their service: that in times of trial they may stand steadfast, unmovable, arriving at the dignity of "colaborers with Christ"—their Redeemer, Hero, Friend!

How shall these things be? In the language of a very beautiful hymn:

"Thou must be true thyself
 If thou the truth wouldst teach,
 Thy soul must overflow, if thou
 Another soul wouldst reach."

No one has any more right to go about unhappy than he has to go about ill-bred. He owes it to himself, to his friends, to society, and to the community in general to live up to his best spiritual possibilities; not only now and then, once or twice a year, or once in a season, but every day and every hour.—Lillian Whiting.

Policies and Prospects

By Charles Fry

The church is dependent upon voluntary contributions for the finances with which to carry on the various lines of gospel work. Any officer, whose duty it is to receive money through such voluntary offerings, must have the undivided confidence of the people in order that his work and that of the church may be wholly successful.

As representing the department of the Bishopric, and having to do with the finances of the church in Great Britain, it is the purpose of the present bishop, while his work in this office is yet in its early stage, to seek and to hold the confidence of the Saints by

- (1) Personal association with them.
- (2) Careful and wise teaching of the law in the revelations of God touching the giving of tithes and offerings.
- (3) A faithful handling of all money and accounting for the same; and in all other ways, as may be proper and practicable.

A Complete System

No extensive work of any kind can be carried on without means by which the necessary and unavoidable expenses can be met. The divine law, as given to the church, comprises a complete system for the gathering and expending of money. As is generally well known, this law includes tithing, which, in contradistinction to the devices of men, provides a reasonable and equitable plan for obtaining means adapted impartially to rich and poor, and imposing hardship upon none. It provides also for offerings, which may be general or special, the amounts given being dependent mainly upon the faith and financial ability of the donors.

In either case the giving is by the voluntary consent of the givers, though tithing is that portion which the Lord claims as his share by right of primary ownership, and offering is that which is given to the Lord as a gift out of the fullness of one's heart. The law of the Lord further provides for a special class of officers known as bishops, whose duty it is to teach the law, gather and care for the means contributed, and expend the same for the purposes of the church, besides other duties.

Three Departments

There are three departments of church activity which are mainly dependent upon the church treasury for their support, viz: Missionary, pastoral, and educational, to which may be added the assisting or caring for the worthy poor and needy. Missionary work includes the sending of missionaries with the gospel into new fields where expense must be in-involved for traveling, food, clothing, lodging, advertising, and other things according to circumstances, besides the supporting of their families while they are thus engaged. Pastoral work has to do with the nurturing, protecting, comforting, and instructing of the Saints and involves the keep of the pastors and their families, with various other expenses. The educational work looks to the future progress of the church by training the young for whatever lines of endeavor they are adapted, and is a very essential part of the church's work. The care of the poor and needy is a duty under the law of nature and the law of God.

The program of church work in Great Britain provides for the extension of the gospel in other places than where now established, the locating of pastors where most needed, the establishing and sustaining of a school. The extent to which these things can be carried on will be determined largely by the amount of tithes and offerings furnished by the Saints from which to pay the necessary expenses. There will be other expenses, such as assisting the needy, keeping up Saint Leonard's as the headquarters, and providing equipment and supplies for the several offices and departments of work.

Saints in Britain Liberal

The financial contributions in Great Britain, while falling much below the extraordinary needs in the purchasing of property and the development of the several activities have, when considered in relation to the adverse industrial and economic conditions existing of late, been very liberal indeed, and with the general improvement in the industrial world we look for a corresponding or even greater increase in the church's income. Many of the Saints have done well in the spirit of sacrifice in fulfilling the law as applying to temporal things, though there are many more who need to fall into line and come to the support of the Lord's work with their means. The motto previously adopted by the Presiding Bishop's office (Every member a tithe payer), should become the universal one for this land.

We hope, in time, to secure on the books of this office the name of every member as having fulfilled the law. Such a condition will not only help to carry on the gospel work, but will bring to the members an increase of faith and joy which will add to the spiritual life of the church.

The Judicial Work

As pertaining to the judicial work of the bishop's office, the teaching of the law, by which the members can avoid error or transgression, will be considered the primary work; while the matter of trying transgressors will be held as secondary. It is hoped to avoid the second by diligently doing the first.

With the many excellent Saints, the large number of young people and children, and the numerous non-members who are desirous of serving the Lord, there is no good reason why the church should not grow in number, in faith, in knowledge, and in spiritual power in this land. The nation which responded most readily to the gospel call in the early days surely has the elements of faith by which it can respond to-day. Such a response is expected both within and without the church. The church in this land should not only become self-sustaining but should, in time, be able to send ministers and support them in other lands while they are bearing the gospel there.

A Short History of Church Work in Britain

By Frank Henry Edwards

It was the first of June, 1837, when Heber C. Kimball and Orson Hyde were called and set apart by the First Presidency of the church to preside over a mission in England. This took place at Kirtland, Ohio. A few days later James Fielding was set apart for the same mission. On the evening of the 12th, Willard Richards, who had been absent for some time on a mission, was also set apart to accompany them.

On the 13th of June these brethren bade farewell to home and loved ones and, without purse or scrip, started out on their mission. These men displayed the spirit and genius so characteristic of the early men of the church. To start out on a journey of nearly four thousand miles and travel under adverse circumstances, among strangers, and with no apparent prospects of sustenance or aid, required both faith and courage.

A number of the Saints accompanied them as far as Fairport, where they took steamer for Buffalo, arriving the next day. At Buffalo they expected to receive some money from Canada, but were disappointed. They arrived in Albany on the 19th, and by the 22d all were in New York. There providential aid was received and on July 1 they sailed on the Garrick for Liverpool.

During the week they were in New York they lodged in an old storeroom, sleeping on straw placed on the floor, eating what cold victuals they could get, and conversing with the people as they had opportunity. On the 29th of June they sealed, super-scribed, and forwarded to the ministers of the different religious denominations of the city one hundred and eighty of Orson Hyde's "Timely Warnings."

On the 16th of July Elder Hyde preached on the aft quarterdeck. In twenty days they reached Liverpool. They were in a foreign land. They were breaking new ground. They immediately took lodging in a private house on Union Street until after the inspection of the ship, and on the 22d took coach for Preston. When they had alighted from the coach and were standing by their trunks in front of the hotel, a large flag was unfurled over their heads on which was printed in golden letters, "Truth will prevail." At the sight of this their hearts rejoiced and they cried aloud, "Amen, thanks be unto God; truth will prevail."

During the day they secured lodgings. In the evening they visited the Reverend James Fielding, a brother of Elder Fielding. He had previously been apprised of the latter-day work. He had requested his parishioners to pray that God would send them his servants, and exhorted the people to receive their message when they should come. On the following Sunday they went to hear Reverend Fielding preach. He voluntarily announced that an elder of the Latter Day Saints would preach in the afternoon from his pulpit. In the afternoon Elder Kimball preached and Elder Hyde bore testimony. In the evening Elder Goodson preached and Joseph Fielding bore testimony. On Wednesday Elder Hyde preached, and thereupon the reverend gentleman closed his doors against the brethren and began to oppose the work, stating that the elders had promised to say nothing about baptism in their services before he consented to permit them to occupy his pulpit, whereas the subject had not been broached before Mr. Fielding gave out the public announcement.

On Sunday, the 30th day of July, nine members of Mr. Fielding's church offered themselves for baptism. Mr. Fielding forbade the elders to baptize them. He was told that all were of age. Elder Kimball did the baptizing. George D. Watts was the first person baptized in England. He afterwards became a stanch defender of the faith. Elder Russell (who in connection with John Goodson and John Snyder of Canada had joined the brethren in New York) preached in the market place that same afternoon and from that day the doors of private houses were opened upon almost every hand for the elders. After a night of prayer, praise, and thanksgiving, the brethren separated, Goodson and Richards going to Bedford, and Russell and Snyder to Alston.

The Reverend Fielding continued to oppose the doctrine of baptism, but finding that he was about to lose all of his members, he offered to baptize them himself. They were now aware that he had no authority and refused. He thereupon secured the services of a Baptist minister of Preston to do the baptizing for him. Only one came forward for baptism. Mr. Fielding's people now charged that he had acted the part of a hypocrite and had deceived them when he read the letters announcing in public the coming of the elders, by keeping back those parts which related to baptism.

Miss Jenneta Richards was the first one confirmed in England. She was visiting friends in Preston at the time of her uniting with the church. She soon returned to Walkerford and informed her people and requested her father to send for Elder Kimball. He complied, and Elder Kimball arrived the following Saturday, and the following day preached three times in Mr. Richards's pulpit to crowded assemblies. He spoke twice during the week and also on the following Sunday. He was kindly and courteously entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Richards. Six persons were baptized within the week.

After a short visit to Preston, where Elder Hyde continued preaching and baptizing, Elder Kimball returned to Walkerford. The work soon spread to Clitheroe, Waddington, Downham, Ch at b u r n, Thornly, and Ribchester. On August 2 Elders Goodson and Richards arrived at Bedford, with letters of introduction to the Reverend Timothy R. Matthews. He received them very cordially and expressed great joy on their arrival. He walked arm in arm with the elders through the streets of Bedford, calling on the members of his church and extending invitations to attend the lecture of the elders at his chapel vestry the same evening. He was a brother-in-law of Elder Fielding.

Elders Goodson and Richards addressed the congregation, also on the three following evenings with the hearty approval of the Reverend Mr. Matthews who, at the close of the lectures, publicly bore testimony to the truth advanced and called upon his people to accept baptism. They, in turn, wanted to know why he did not set them the example. Shortly afterwards Reverend Matthews engaged another house in the neighborhood for the brethren to speak in, as he was not disposed to allow them to longer use his church. He continued to attend the services and spent most of the time each day with the brethren in conversation. He admitted two ordinations to the ministry, one from Bishop West whom he had proved an impostor, and another from the Church of England, which he acknowledged to have descended from the church of Rome. He admitted that he had no authority from God.

A short time afterwards five were baptized by Elder Goodson. Joseph Saville, a member of Mr. Matthews' church, desired baptism. He desired that the pastor accompany him. This was agreed. At an appointed hour the elders repaired to the River Ouse. Mr. Matthews did not put in an appearance. Mr. Saville was baptized. The elders called at the home of Mr. Matthews to find out why he had not come for baptism and was informed that he had gone in the country to preach. A few days later it was learned that he had baptized himself, reasoning on this principle, "If I have authority to administer the sacrament to my people, why have I not authority to baptize?" From that time on he preached baptism. He kept on adding one thing after the other as it suited his purpose. It was some time before he arrived at the heaven-daring, conscience-seared hardihood to lay hands on those he baptized for the reception of the Holy Ghost, while, at the same time, he acknowledged that he was not in possession of it himself. His effort was a dismal failure.

In Preston the work was attacked by a Reverend Atkins. He collaborated with the Reverend Fielding, but all to no purpose. The work spread far and wide. On the 6th of August, Elders Kimball, Fielding, and Hyde addressed a large concourse of people in the market place, amid the most bitter persecution. On the same evening some forty or more of those previously baptized were confirmed. Most of these had formerly been members of Reverend Fielding's church. The brethren at Alston were not idle. A branch was soon organized. The work spread. Soon branches were organized at Clitheroe, Waddington, Downham, Ribchester, Eccleston, Whittle, Leylandmoss, Dauber's Lane, Thornley, Chorley, Euxton, Hexkin, and other places. On December 25, 1837, a conference was held in the "cock pit" at Preston with three hundred Saints in attendance. On April 1, 1838, another conference was held at the same place. Joseph Fielding was chosen to preside over the church in England. At this conference there were twenty baptisms, forty confirmations, and sixty children blessed, as well as the ordination of several elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. During this conference one session was held for eight hours without intermission.

On April 20, Elders Kimball, Hyde, and Russell returned to New York on the same vessel on which they had gone over. About this time Alice Hodge died at Preston. It was such a wonderful thing for a Saint to die in England that Elder Richards was arrested and arraigned before a mayor's court, charged with "killing and slaying" the said Alice with a block of wood. He was discharged without being permitted to make his defense, as soon as it was discovered that the iniquity of his accusers was about to be made manifest.

On December 8, 1839, Hiram Clark, Alexander Wright, and Samuel Milliner arrived in Preston from America. On January 13, 1840, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, and Theodore Turley arrived, and on April 6, 1840, just ten years from the organization of the church, Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Parley P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, George A. Smith, and Reuben Hadlock landed in Liverpool from New York, having set sail on the 9th of March. Manchester was made the center of activities. The Millennial Star was started. John Taylor stated that at the first sermon he preached in England ten came forward for baptism. He continued in about this way right along. Wilford Woodruff baptized thirty-two in one week, thirteen of whom were Methodist preachers.

At a General Conference held in Temperance Hall, Preston, on April 15, 1840, there were sixteen hundred and seventy-one members represented, thirty-four elders, fifty-two priests, thirty-six teachers, and eight deacons. The largest branches represented were Preston, with three hundred members; Manchester, two hundred and forty; Potteries, one hundred; Herefordshire, one hundred and sixty. Thus, in less than two years we see how rapidly the work advanced. In Herefordshire forty preachers of other churches united with the church, and in this short time forty available places for preaching had been secured.

Willard Richards, writing at this time from Ledbury, said, "In two weeks one hundred and twelve had been baptized, two hundred confirmed, two elders, twenty priests, and one teacher ordained." Heber C. Kimball wrote: "Sister Richards was healed by the imposition of hands; some speak in tongues, some prophesy, and some have visions." A council of the Twelve was held at Preston, April 14, 1840, and twenty of the Seventy were sent for from America.

Provisions were made for the printing of the Millennial Star. Parley P. Pratt was chosen as editor. Copyright was secured for Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. A conference was held. There were two thousand four hundred and ninety-five members in the mission. A conference was held in Scotland, May 9, 1840, at which Orson Pratt presided. Sixty members were represented. On July 27, Elders John Taylor, McGuffe, and Priest

JOHN W. RUSHTON

Elder John W. Rushton was born in Great Britain, and for many years gave his best services there as a missionary, both as a seventy and also as an apostle; but England has now loaned him to America in return for the men America has loaned England.

Black sailed for Ireland. Elder Woodruff reported preaching at one place a month and five days and as a result he baptized forty-five preachers and one hundred and fourteen members. At another time, he reported that he and Heber C. Kimball had baptized forty in one day. In the next three months they baptized thirteen hundred. During the ministry of the Twelve in England, Manchester was headquarters. Carpenter's Hall, which held two thousand people, was the central meeting place. It was many times crowded.

"There was a conference held at Gadfield, Elm Chapel, in Worcestershire, June 14, 1840, at which the entire church formerly of United Brethren (with few exceptions) in that entire shire was organized into a district of the church. On July 25, William Donaldson sailed for the East Indies. Heber C. Kimball returned to America. In an epistle of Joseph Smith to the Twelve on January 1, 1841, they were all called home except Parley P. Pratt, who was left in charge of the work in the British Isles. At the conference held in 1841 in Carpenter's Hall, Manchester, three thousand six hundred and twenty-six members were represented, and forty-two names presented for the active ministry.

The first definite account we have of the work in Wales was October 30, 1840, when a branch of thirty-two members was organized at Ourton, Flintshire. In February, 1841, two hundred and forty Saints sailed from Liverpool for America. At a council of the Twelve April 6, 1841, nine of the Quorum of Twelve were present, five thousand eight hundred and fourteen Saints were represented, not including eight hundred who had previously emigrated to America. There were one hundred and thirty-six elders, three hundred and three priests, one hundred and sixty-nine teachers, and sixty-eight deacons reported. At this conference Elder Albertson was ordained a patriarch, also ten high priests and twelve elders were ordained. The mission was divided into fourteen conferences. At a conference held at Carpenter's Hall, Manchester, October 17, 1841, the ship Choos was chartered and carried a shipload of the Saints to America.

Elder Wilford Woodruff and family, in company with H. Clark and Captain Dan Jones, left New York for Liverpool, December 6, 1844, the latter going direct to his mission, Wales. It was through the instrumentality of Captain Dan Jones that the work made such rapid strides in Wales. He was a native-born Welshman. He had a brother John who was some years his senior. When boys, John was selected by his parents for the ministry. Dan was not much concerned with religion. One day while he and his brother were engaged in gathering hay, Dan was on the stack and John was pitching the hay up to him. Dan beheld a singular thing:

He saw, just as plainly as though it actually occurred, a funeral start from a certain place and wend its way along the highway. He knew every person among the mourners. His one question was, Who is dead? After a short while the vision (for such it was) passed away. When Dan regained his normality John was lustily urging him to attend to the hay which had accumulated around him. He did not communicate his experience to anyone, feeling that it was a portent of his own death.

He became greatly concerned, and instead of his former fun and frolic, he repaired at frequent intervals to a secret place to pray. Shortly afterwards he saw his vision markedly fulfilled. This did not cause him to abate his praying. Subsequently he received a visit from an angel. He was told that God was pleased with him and that the time would come when he would leave his native land and go to a foreign shore and he would hear the true gospel preached. The order of the church and the doctrines were clearly indicated, all of which he made note of.

He begged his father to allow him to go to sea. His father would not consent at first. He finally was able to ship as a common sailor and visited many foreign ports obsessed with one quest—the gospel as taught to him by his heavenly messenger. He visited the East Indies, the various parts of Asia and Africa. He learned the language and religious rites of the various nations visited, but in his research he failed to find a religion which compared with what he had on his "slip of paper." After a time he began to lose ardor, despairing of finding the true gospel. Having accustomed himself to the sea he became a captain. He followed the sea for years, finally came to America, and became captain of a steamer on the Mississippi River.

This was about the time when the Saints were driven out of Missouri. On one of his trips several of the Saints approached the captain and asked that they be transported to Nauvoo. They had no funds. He asked them as to their religion. They said that they were Latter Day Saints. He consented, provided they would outline their religion on the way up the river. They acquiesced. They were hardly on board until he was engaged with them in an earnest conversation. He excused himself, went to the cabin, and returned with his "slip of paper." After reading same he was astounded to have his newly found friends exclaim, "Why, that is an exact representation of the Latter Day Saint Church." Whereupon the captain remarked, "Well, if that is the case, I am a Latter Day Saint." He gave up his ship, went to Nauvoo, was baptized, and ordained an elder. He was with Joseph Smith in Carthage jail just before the latter's death, and was by him set apart and sent on a mission to his native land, and was told that God would through him perform a marvelous work.

In 1845 there were ten thousand members in Britain. This in face of the fact that many had already migrated. A conference was held in Merthyr Tydfil in January, 1847, showing thirty-three branches in Wales with nine hundred and seventeen members.

At a semiannual conference of the Reorganized Church held near Sandwich, Illinois, October 6 to 9, 1860, it was resolved, "that Brother Jason W. Briggs be requested to go to England on a mission. The request was not immediately complied with, whereupon the Quorum of Twelve met April 8, 1861, at Amboy, Illinois, and, on motion, resolved that Brethren Jason W. Briggs and Samuel Powers are hereby requested and authorized to go to England on a mission, accompanied by Brethren Henry Green, Jeremiah Jeremiah, and George Rosser, who are requested to go on a mission to Wales."

Neither of these appointments was then fulfilled. At a semiannual conference held in Gallands Grove, October 6 to 9, 1862, it was resolved "that the English mission, consisting of Jason W. Briggs and Samuel Powers, as before appointed, be sustained, and that Charles Derry be associated with them in the same." Brother Derry would have entered immediately upon his mission, but sickness prevented. He started for England on the 6th of December, sailed from New York on January 24, and reached Liverpool on the 4th of February.

Brother Derry immediately ordered printed one thousand of President Joseph Smith's first epistle to the Saints. He called upon George Q. Cannon, who was in charge of the European Mission of the Mormon Church, and asked the privilege to present the position of the Reorganized Church to the members of this church. Mr. Cannon treated him with contempt. He refused to read anything relating thereto. He was invited to a discussion. He emphatically refused. Shortly afterwards an editorial appeared in Millennial Star, signed by Elder Cannon, entitled, "The whisperings of the Spirit." The "Saints" were warned that the Spirit had manifested that apostates would soon be in their midst seeking to lead them from the truth. The subsequent appearance of Elder Derry among the Mormon churches was a striking fulfillment (?) of this spiritual manifestation.

Here let me quote from the pen of Brother Derry: "One morning my landlady noticed I did not eat my breakfast (I boarded myself) and she inquired why. I informed her that I had only money to pay for my lodging. She insisted upon my going into her parlor, and there she had a beautiful breakfast for me, fit for a king. My heart was full of gratitude, and I felt to bless her with all the powers of my being. I told her that I felt the Lord would open the way for me and I renewed my visits among the people."

At the annual conference held at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1863, it was resolved "that Elder J. W. Briggs preside over the British Isles"; also "that J. W. Briggs, in the prosecution of the English mission, be empowered and directed to print and reprint such matter for circulation as he in his discretion may deem best for the advancement of the work." It was also resolved "that Elder Jeremiah Jeremiah be associated with Elder J. W. Briggs in the mission in the British Isles," and "that J. W. Briggs be supplied with funds from the treasury of the church to publish whatever he may deem advisable for the prosecution of his mission in the British Isles."

Brother Derry, in his diary, records that "on the night of the 21st (April) I dreamed that I received the HERALD and that Jason W. Briggs was come, that he looked fat and well, and that his eyesight seemed stronger. So may it be quickly." Again, "May 2. I received a letter from Brother W. W. Blair which made my heart rejoice. He says, 'Thoroughness, unity, wisdom, and truth marked our deliberations at conference. Jason W. Briggs and Jeremiah Jeremiah were to start for England in a few days.' Again, 'On the 11th of May I found four HERALDS in the post office, but I could not obtain them without paying four shillings and nine pence. I had no money, but I was hungry for church news, and I pawned my overcoat to get the money to pay for them. This of course left me exposed to the weather, but from them I gained much encouraging information.'"

Brethren Briggs and Jeremiah arrived in Liverpool on the 16th of May. On the 18th, after deliberate counsel, it was decided to publish the "Word of Consolation" with some little alteration. Brother Derry recorded in his diary, "When the brethren learned that my overcoat was in pawn, Brother Jeremiah told Brother Briggs he would give two shillings and six pence towards fetching it out. Brother Briggs responded that he would give two shillings, so my coat was soon released from the pawnbroker's shelf and found its way on to my back, to my joy and comfort, and my heart swelled with gratitude to my brethren."

Brother Derry returned to America June 21, 1864. Speaking of his experience in England, he says: "The sum total of my receipts from the first day of January, 1863, until the day I left England on my way home being the 21st of June, 1864, is thirty-two pounds, seven shillings, and seven pence. With this, I repeat, I published one thousand of Joseph's epistles, hired rooms to preach in, and paid for printing of handbills, giving notices of my meetings, as well as paying my fare from Sandwich, Illinois, to Liverpool. Nor did I receive a cent from the church treasury while in England."

Musicians and Music

By William T. Goullee

Brother Goullee is one of the most capable musicians of the church in the British Isles.

The past year has been a year of unusual activity and development. It has been a reconstructive period.

There is a saying that "It is the amateurs that make a musical nation." We have many instances of this during the past year. The majority agree with Plato, "Music is to the mind as is air to the body."

How do the members of the church feel about it? Have we made progress musically as well as spiritually? Have we progressed in line with the commandment in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6 and the first hymn in Zion's Praises? This command, given many years ago, is being carried out by those of the outside world more than our own church people in Great Britain.

Musicians are the last to need reminding that the provision of music for the benefit of the general public is a duty, and takes equal place with the provision of free education in our schools. Music is a constructive force, a positive agency. It thins the ranks of criminals, helps to cure disease of mind and body, and increases the value of the human element to the nation and the town. No great work has ever been performed unless, at its root, as the origin and incentive will be found an ideal and an idealist. At the beginning of every great movement we find an idealist with an overwhelming ideal.

If we all started now we could get many and varied interesting studies, which would help us as a church to take our place in the world, and also prepare us for that ideal which many of us long to see realized.

Some in Great Britain do not have the opportunity to hear and see what is going on around them. Many in other lands are interested to learn what position Great Britain is taking in the world of music. At present the church is not well represented musically in Great Britain. I trust that in the near future, there will be a decided move forward.

Many of the varied musical organizations whose activities were either retarded or completely suspended during the war, have not only recovered lost ground, but broken into fresh territories and achieved new and greater triumphs. This progress has been so great and so comprehensively general that existing bodies have been inadequate, with the result that new societies have made their appearance in all parts of the country. This is especially noticeable in choral societies, choirs, and glee parties generally.

With the forming of choral societies very often a small string orchestra develops. The present amateur orchestras in this land compare very favorably with the professional orchestras, of which Great Britain can well be proud. I look forward to the day when the church can form an orchestra to compare with any in the world. I know there are some symphony orchestras in the United States. I listened to one last summer.

There is an opportunity for us to do our share in Great Britain, even in the instrumental department. The variety of instruments, string, wood, wind, percussion, and bells, needs no comment; even if we resort to the pianoforte and church organ, there will not be sufficient.

If you have never given this your consideration, just think what a difference it would make to a district conference, reunion, or social service, to have a string orchestra, and as we advanced, a full orchestra with organ and choir! The next opportunity you have to hear an orchestral concert, do so, and note its influence upon you.

It would be unfair in passing not to refer to the wonderful musical organization of the Salvation Army. The Army has been making great strides with its bands, principally brass bands. The public appreciates its musical festivals. Considering that the bands of the Salvation Army play for the "love of their religion," they certainly give a good example to many other churches. One band has toured twenty-four thousand miles. The last countries visited were Norway and Sweden. They played to crowded and enthusiastic audiences on every occasion.

Military bands have grown during the past year. Much good has been done the public, especially in the poorer districts. One can hear a good selection of music, and enjoy a dance round as well. I have looked from the band stand on more than one occasion, and could see it was more for musical education—than, perhaps, to while away the hours.

Wales is making a decided move forward. The National Eisteddfod for 1920 proved a success, the attendance for the week being 125,000 people. Doctor Walford Davies is paying a great deal of attention in the secondary schools; and many school lecture concerts are being organized by the University Council of Music of Wales.

Ireland keeps up the record for contests and festivals, and the colleges and academies have given some very fine concerts. Their flute bands are going as strong as ever.

In Scotland the orchestras, choral societies, chamber concerts, organ recitals, and lecture recitals, in both big and small towns are well appreciated.

In England, music has taken hold of the population. The interest shown in operas, orchestral and choral concerts, chamber concerts, (trios, quartets, etc.) glee parties, organ recitals, cathedral and church performances; the renewed interest shown in old music, carols, part songs, folk songs, madrigals, sea-chanties; the extensive use of the gramophone; the activity shown by the Daleruze School of Eucythmics; the Glastonbury Festival School; the class of music performed by cinema orchestras, clearly show the attitude of the people.

The proportion of people in Britain who are interested in music to-day is probably greater than at any period since the early part of the seventeenth century. This interest is increasing, largely as a result of the efforts being made to bring people, and especially children, into touch with good music, enabling them to have a more intelligent understanding of the art.

Music has always been associated with religion. The fine arts have made a supreme contribution to religion, but music and religion are akin. Each is vital and essential to the other. There is no need to mention the great composers, the interpreters who have been endowed with the speech of God, and who have spent their lives endeavoring to translate it into a language that man could learn and understand.

The Department of Music of the church in Great Britain can do its share. We can if we only try. I am never tired of referring to Ruskin: "It is the effort that deserves praise"; nor is it a question for any student whether he is cleverer than others or duller, but whether he has done the best with the gifts he has. It is this effort we need now. Let us have an ideal and stick to it. Whenever we think, make it a practice to think with our whole minds. Make it whole-hearted instead of half-hearted. Make every action firm, strong, positive, and determined. In other words, let us put our whole soul into everything we think, feel, or do.

Music will help to elevate us to a plane which many look for in the near future. It will give us tone, color, and quality in our daily lives and church work. It will tend to promote that joy of life, so essential for mental and bodily recuperation.

May we in Great Britain realize the position music has in the church work. I trust that our Father's blessing will be bestowed on our efforts.

Echoes From Graceland

By Sidney Phillips

I trust that by going to Graceland College to have that training which will enable me to do something that will be of service to the church, and to assist in doing the work which is seriously needed in the British Isles.

The Lord promised me when I was confirmed that, if I would be faithful, I would be called to preach the gospel in the Welsh language, and to my own people.

There was a time once in Wales, when the gospel was first preached in this land, that one third of the people obeyed. After the time when Brigham Young went out of the true church and taught polygamy, our numbers have materially decreased until in all of Wales there are only five or six churches.

It has been revealed by the Spirit of God, however, that the valleys and hills of Wales will again ring with the gospel message. I am trying to secure such training in Graceland that I will assist in fulfilling this prophecy.

Owing to the extended coal strike and the prolonged drouth, it was deemed advisable to cancel the annual reunion and conference for 1921. Plans are already now being consummated to make the reunion of 1922 an unprecedented one.

DISTRICT PRESIDENTS

Manchester District

By Joseph Dewsnup

Brother Dewsnup is president of the Manchester District. He is an indefatigable worker and thoroughly consecrated.

The Manchester District was organized in 1876, with Joseph Dewsnup, sr., as its first president. He held this position until 1901, a period of twenty-five years. He was a valiant, noble, true, and steadfast man. His life from 1876 to his demise in 1908 was spent in trying to establish the church of God and to spread the righteousness of Christ. His earnest desire was to see the church in the British Isles established upon a permanent basis.

His successor in the presidency was our esteemed Brother Henry Greenwood, who, though growing old and feeble, is yet amongst us. During his tenure of office, from 1901 to 1915, he strove to maintain the efficiency of the district. His sterling worth is well known to those of us who have had the privilege of laboring with him. He was, and is, a devoted laborer for Christ.

An Exemplary Executive

Like his predecessor in office, he lived entirely for the work of the church. He was always ready to counsel and encourage those who were working with him. He was lovable in disposition. Like Simeon of old, he is now waiting to see the salvation of God and longing to be spared to see the work of the church firmly established in the British Isles. The foundation laid by these two men has contributed largely to the present conditions. Subsequent presidents have been W. H. Greenwood, Nathan Weate, George W. Leggott, John W. Taylor, and Joseph Dewsnup, jr.

At present the district is composed of eight churches, viz: Southeast, North, and Northeast Manchester, Farnworth, Wigan, Stockport, and Eccles. Prior to October, 1920, Leeds (Wortly) and Bradford (Yorks) were included in the district. Under advice of F. M. Smith and T. W. Williams these were detached and added to the Sheffield District.

Churches in Good Condition

The churches are in a healthy condition. The local pastors are seeking to discharge the duties devolving upon them in a way that speaks for the future good of the work. The Saints are awakening to a sense of the responsibility that rests upon them. While many are dormant there are some in each place who act as leaven, which I hope to see leaven the entire membership and enable them to reach the standard of righteousness designed by God.

The ministry, in the majority of cases, are men of God. Some have forgotten the responsibility that rests upon them and have forsaken their duties, preferring to enjoy the good things of this world rather than deny themselves and offer their bodies as living sacrifices to God.

Some of the young in the different churches fail to realize the necessity of preparation for the great work that lies before them. Instead of making ready, they shake their heads and complain that some of those whom they have been taught to look up to for example are guilty of things that have brought the blush of shame to their cheeks, when they have had to acknowledge that these men were not only members of the church, but ministers as well.

Ministerial Deportment

Think of it, you ministers? Does your conduct bring the blush of shame to the cheeks of some young brother or sister, when they have to acknowledge that you are a minister of the church? "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea."

We have young people who are striving to let their lights shine and are qualifying for service in the church. It is a delight to see them, Sunday after Sunday, engaged in branch and Sunday school work, and other departments of church work.

The Time Is Propitious

If ever there was a time when men and women longed for a knowledge of the truth about God and Christ, it is to-day. The field is white, ready for harvest. Where are the reapers? The poet has aptly said,

"O reapers of Life's Harvest, why stand with rusted blade,
Until the night draws round you and day begins to fade?
Why stand ye idle, waiting, for reapers more to come?
The Golden Morn is coming. Why sit ye idle, dumb?"

Watchmen, what of the night? Oh, that I had the power to describe the vision of the future as it appears to me. On the 8th of January, 1921, I stood on the landing stage at Liverpool, England, watching the steamer Megantic as she started on her journey to the land of America. My thoughts were with the young people on board who had voluntarily offered themselves to God, so they might go to Graceland College to prepare to discharge efficiently the duties of missionaries for the church. These are the vanguards of the work of Christ in the British Isles, as well as the Continent of Europe.

Return to England

I see that small band returning to the British Isles equipped and prepared as ambassadors of God, their Christian deportment giving evidence that they have been trained for the Christian ministry; whose armor has been girded on, and, standing in the strength of God's Eternal Son, count all things else as loss.

If only our people will awake to righteousness, and our ministry, both local and missionary, will two by two at specified points, supplied with literature and financial aid to enable them to hire halls and keep up an appearance, both personal and official, that will reflect credit on the church.

For years I have advocated a progressive policy for the mission. This requires the assistance, for a time, of the church in America, so that the foundation of a permanent work may be laid in this country. May this be reached in the near future.

Indorses Plan

With all sincerity I may say that Brother T. W. Williams in his letter "Lap two," on page 18 of the SAINTS' HERALD for January 5, 1921, voices what I have advocated for years, as the only remedy for existing conditions in this mission. I have faith to believe that I shall live to see a well-organized, disciplined, virile, and aggressive campaign entered upon and amply supplied with men, means, and material, commensurate financial aid, and missionaries of both sexes.

If the church in Great Britain will rise to the occasion and put into operation a progressive policy, the vision of to-day will be the realization of to-morrow and demonstrated by actual results, blessed by God to the salvation of his people, which will prove that the British Isles is a fruitful missionary field.

A Survey of the London District

By John A. Judd

Brother Judd is the energetic president of the district.

The Enfield church was organized twenty years ago by Gomer T. Griffiths and John W. Rushton. Prior to this the work in Enfield was under the ministry of the London church, supplemented by the efforts of J. A. Kemp and William Judd.

The work in the district has not made great progress. The London church as I first knew it held meetings in Bow-common Lane in a hall belonging to the Saints. The attendance was fair. They had a lively Sunday school, with over fifty children. Troubles arose. The building was sold. From that time the meetings were held in different places. Now the general church authorities have arranged for the local church to occupy Saint Leonard's Hall, East Bank, Stamford Hill. Brother John W. Worth, for many years associated with the work, is still pastor. We are looking for advancement as a result of the close association of T. W. Williams, J. A. Gilen, Charles Fry, and D. B. Sorden.

I sincerely hope the London Saints will appreciate this privilege. Other churches in the mission would welcome this opportunity for achievement and work.

The Gloucester church has not accomplished great things. Brethren E. J. and T. J. Trapp have respec-enter into the spirit and service of their calling with an eye single to the glory of God, the future will demonstrate that the tribe of Israel, in these islands, will not be deaf to the voice of God and will, with all others, be gathered into one fold, with one God to reign over them forever and ever.

Missionary Effort Required

The success of the work in the British Isles requires a missionary force equal to the demand. This should be wisely selected and appointed to labor tively been pastors. Exeter is about two hundred miles southwest from London. Here we have a small church. Its former pastor was Brother Wilson. The present pastor is Brother Ireland. He is holding out faithfully and waiting for younger hands to assume the burdens now resting on him. Brother Frank Wilson, grandson of the former pastor, gives promise as a worker.

Exeter is located in the beautiful surroundings of Devonshire. It was the favorite stopping place of William Newton, of whom many bright memories linger. The members here are different from any I have yet labored with. They have a childlike, humble faith in God, which is worthy of emulation.

The Plymouth church is located in the famous town of Plymouth—"great in peace and great in war." This church has been presided over by Sergeant Fred Brooks, of the marines. He has done much to keep the Saints together, one among whom is Sister Riddell, who is the oldest member in the district.

My work in the district is confined to assisting the churches to come to the necessary standard. The members of the priesthood are willingly coming into line. The spirit of cooperation is in evidence between the ministry and the churches. We trust God for results.

In all lines of work it is customary to take stock. We sum up assets and liabilities. If liabilities mount above assets we, at once, look for the cause and seek a remedy. We of the London District are now taking stock. We have carefully noted our liabilities and assets and weighed our work in the balance.

This church must be run like any other successful enterprise, and, as such, be an example to every other institution in the world. It is not enough that our records should contain many names. It is with us, as with old Israel, to determine "who is on the Lord's side?" Every man, woman, and child should be an asset to the church. The realization of this depends upon leadership. While we recognize that Christ is our leader and commander, we also acknowledge that those who are called to represent him should be examples.

The pastor who can control men, not through force, but because he has a vision of Zion ever before him, and can see ahead all of the time, becomes trusted and respected. He finds work for all. He sees that every department is in working order. Organization is his password. Like the head of a great department, he is always on hand to assist and encourage. He never wounds, nor unduly reprimands. He enters into sympathetic relation with all. He sees things through others' eyes.

The Lord says if we honor his ministry we thereby honor him. This ministry is limited to our willingness to accept the same. If we have confidence in them we will receive the blessing which comes through them.

This is Christ's church. We should think of the church as a whole. Let each labor that his work may become a church asset. We stand in need of consecrated men and women. Some churches need pastors, others need visiting officers; priests, teachers, deacons. We need men who will put on the whole armor of God—large-hearted, unselfish, true—men who think more of this work than of themselves, men who are prepared to lose their lives for the work's sake. We need women, mothers, wives, and sisters who will stand courageous, firm, and true, who will not flinch or become discouraged.

Let us be united—"Workers together with God."

An order for sixty thousand tracts was recently placed with Publicity Department and they have been shipped. It is our purpose to inaugurate a vigorous and extensive campaign of tract distribution.

Christianity is not a thing to be proved, but a life to be lived.—Henry Drummond.

The Work in Wales

By E. J. Trapp

Brother Trapp was president of the Eastern Wales District and also pastor of the Gloucester church.

The Eastern Wales District is now disorganized. It consists of the Cardiff, Gloucester, Lydney, and Nantyglo Branches, Lydney and Cardiff since becoming disorganized.

Under new arrangements affecting district boundaries, Nantyglo Branch, with the members at Cardiff, become attached to the Welsh District, while the Gloucester Branch, with the scattered members at Lydney, were assigned to the London District. Hence the year 1920 records the passing of the Eastern Wales District.

The life period of this district was less than twenty-five years. During that time it was presided over by A. N. Bishop, T. S. Griffiths, Thomas Gould, and E. J. Trapp.

As we look back the question arises, What has been accomplished by our late district organization? What account may be rendered in the day of judgment? How essential it is for all branch and district presidents to sense their responsibilities. Each must give an account of his stewardship. We have been asked for a message. This expresses it:

"Dare to do right; dare to be true,
Keep the great judgment day always in view,
Look at your work as you'll look at it then,
Scanned by Jehovah, angels and men,
Angels will hasten the story to tell,
Dare to do right; dare to be true."

It has been said a man's work reveals the man who has performed it. This is as true as the building reflects the capabilities of the builder. In our respective callings we build up branches, districts, and other organizations in the church. The Apostle Paul said, "Let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon"; referring to the foundation given by the Master builder.

Sometimes there has arisen a need to rebuild, and while we endeavored to make secure the foundation beneath the structure, it fell a heap of ruins, and sometimes there it had to remain.

What a great need for education and inspiration to make of us approved workmen, so that our work may abide, and to see the branches, though geographically separated, still coming to a unity of the faith and prepared to fit into the great structural building, called Zion. Thus we reflect, "Every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed as by fire."

Twenty years ago there were few of the standard church publications in our possession; consequently, through lack of knowledge, our work was not so well done, and some of it was wholly wrong. The majority of the ministry had but little opportunity for study and preparation; still they did the best they could. But imperfect knowledge renders imperfect vision, and we obtained imperfect results in our work. Thus we see the need of the elders obtaining Brother Trapp notes that as the Saints read the church periodicals less they did poorer work and some that was actually wrong. The people of Zarahemla neglected this side of their lives and lost even their language.

a more efficient knowledge of the law of the church, so they may, as the Lord said in Doctrine and Covenants 41: 1, "Know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me."

Past experience with greater opportunities before us prove the incentive to continued service and with more worthy results to the glory of Him who has called to us, "Come up higher."

There is an idea abroad among moral people that they should make their neighbors good. One person I have to make good—myself—but my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying, that I have to make him happy, if I may.—R. L. Stevenson.

Among the Birmingham Saints

By John Schofield

Brother Schofield was, until recently, the president of the Birmingham District. He has been succeeded by Brother T. J. Norton.

The Birmingham District is in a progressive spiritual condition. This is evidenced by the keen activities inside and outside of the local churches.

The aim of each minister is to be active in the line of duty. In the exercise of this duty he finds the greatest pleasure of life. For some time, quite a revival in visiting among the members has taken place by the elder, the visiting priest, and, when there is need, by the teacher of the church. In some instances, where members have become discouraged

With true pastoral appreciation, Brother Schofield recognizes the value of the various departments of church work, and appreciates the work they are doing. And he is not forgetting the needs of humanity in general.

and apparently lost to the church, they have been renewed in faith and hope through this God-ordained channel.

Local Ministry Has Much to Learn

I believe the local ministry has much to learn in relation to the art of retaining to the church the members under its charge. The Lord, in Doctrine and Covenants, calls it a "burden of care." The life manifested in the local churches is shown by the zeal and enthusiasm displayed in Sunday school work, Religio, teacher training, Women's Department, boy movement, and last, but not least, the Temple Builders and Orioles.

While aiming to be fully alive in our local churches, we are not unmindful of humanity outside. Local ministers do tract distribution on Sunday mornings, both summer and winter, weather permitting, and this is supplemented with open-air preaching during the summer months. In promulgating the gospel of Jesus Christ from door to door, very many interesting experiences develop. Some unpleasant things come up. It is painful to contemplate that the poison of Brigham Young's apostasy has so blinded the minds of the people that they will not give us a hearing, and sometimes they shut the doors in our faces. Nevertheless, the joy of ministering to the people far outweighs the unpleasantness. Recently the Lord called two of our young men to the office of elder, namely, Edward Norton and F. Henry Edwards. The latter is now a missionary and doing very useful and important work for the church. He is the first missionary from Birmingham.

An Army of Young Men

An army of young men is growing up in our district. These are useful and are bearing responsible positions. Who is more responsible and honorable in the local church than the deacon? With greater training comes greater efficiency. We are looking forward with faith to the school at Saint Leonard's.

Besides the four branches, Priestly Road, Summerfield, Leicester, and Stafford, we have opened up a mission at Rugby. Thither local men go occasionally, assisting Brother and Sister Foster to bring the truth to the people. Brother Foster is worthy and faithful. We have been stimulated and encouraged of late by the visit of Brethren F. M. Smith and T. W. Williams. We confidently go forward.

Honest Toil

Every mason in the quarry,
Every builder on the shore,
Every chopper in the palm grove,
Every raftsmen at the oar;
Hewing wood and drawing water,
Splitting stones and cleaving sod—
All the dusky ranks of labor;
In the regiments of God;
March together towards his triumph,
Do the task his hands prepare;
Honest toil is holy service,
Faithful work is praise and prayer.

—Henry Van Dyke.

In the Sheffield District

By James E. Bishop

Territorially, the Sheffield District is composed of Yorkshire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, and Lincolnshire. Industrially, Yorkshire is noted for woolens and coal; Nottinghamshire for boots, fine lace, and coal; Derbyshire for potteries, locomotive building, and coal; Lincolnshire being chiefly agricultural.

These counties are thickly populated, mainly urban, and to a small degree, rural. The means of transportation and communication are unexcelled. The standard of living averages with the rest of the chief countries of the world.

In Yorkshire we have the noted town of Leeds, famous for its woolens, its parks, and its fine town hall; Sheffield, world famed for its steel and cutlery; Bradford, noted for its woolens; Hull, one of the great shipping centers of the world; Nottingham, the county town of Nottinghamshire, is noted for leather goods. Derby, the county town of Derbyshire, is the headquarters of the Midland Railway Company. Lincolnshire has the county town of Lincoln and its wonderful Cathedral; and Grimsby, the great fishing port. Both Lincolnshire and Yorkshire have their noted seacoast pleasure resorts; while each of the four counties has its famous inland spas. The scenery of these counties is superb. Parts of Derbyshire are called the Switzerland of England.

We have branches in Leeds, Sheffield, Clay Cross, Sutton-in-Ashfield, and a small organized group in Bradford. The total membership of the district is about 300. Leeds Branch has a record membership of 100, but unfortunately the working element numbers scarcely more than twenty. But with the small number there are great possibilities. Sheffield Saints are few in number, struggling hard against great odds. In both these cities, as in many other places, what we lack is the psychic factor of strong social influence. In Clay Cross we have a nice church building and a good congregation. Clay Cross, used as a base for missionary work, can be utilized to a great advantage. Sutton-in-Ashfield's chief characteristic is its Sunday School Department. When they erected their building they went through the neighborhood and succeeded in recruiting a Sunday school of over one hundred strong. This is an example of what can be done in most any other place.

From the standpoint of a pastor, the need of the Saints is to be educated in the fundamentals, and the growing and varied movements in the church work.

The opportunities for the missionary are immense. Open-air work in England is popular, and while it is very difficult, yet soul may speak to soul. Tracting can be carried on extensively and intensively.

The reaction of the masses to the gospel call is very discouraging and we feel that men will not be moved to accept, that is in any great numbers, until the endowment be given from on high. Then it is my opinion that the Lord will perform a mighty work which will be rapid in its movements, short in its duration, and tremendous in its results. The world is waiting for Zion.

Brother J. Arthur Gillen has won the confidence and love of the English and Welsh Saints. He is keeping busy in his work and there are calls for his services throughout the mission.

Not until you make men self-reliant, intelligent, and fond of struggle—fonder of struggle than of help—not till then have you relieved poverty.—Phillips Brooks.

Thoughts, like snowflakes on some far-off mountain side, keep on accumulating until they form a mighty avalanche which breaks away and lets some truth upon the world.

The Will to Do

The masterpieces of art are all cloud-capped. Few men, indeed, ever reach the summit. The mountain does not go to you. You may famish out there on the plain, and your bones whiten amid the alkali in the glistening sun, but the majestic mountain looks on unperturbed. The valleys are there with the rich verdure and the running brooks, where the trout frolic amid the cool springs, where the world game gather, but what cares the mountain for you? You must go to the mountain. Success does not come to us. We must go after it. Life is a struggle. We win through effort. We can do what we will to do, providing we will hard enough, and our will is in unison with the Universal Will.—Anonymous.

The Church at Sheffield

By John Austin

Brother Austin is a long-time member, and a credit to the church.

I will not go over the ground covered by the forty-one years' association in the latter-day work. Early in 1879 I was solicited by a Salvation Army representative to attend their meetings. My first visit revealed a system of confusion. Some were praying, others singing, and others clapping their hands. This did not impress me. I did not care to take up with that order of things. I was not interested in religion of any sort.

Shortly afterwards the young man who had sought to interest me in Salvation Army work, came in touch with an elder of the church. The elder's name was William Booth. The young man, Henry Hoole, came and informed me that he had found something better than he had previously invited me to. He had already identified himself with the church.

First Meeting Attended

I went with him to a meeting of this peculiar people, held in a small room with a seating capacity of about twenty. There were present at the time some six or seven persons. I found a quiet group. The services were orderly.

I continued attending these meetings, and, in the month of June, was baptized by Jonathan Woolston. At the subsequent business meeting of the church, a resolution obtained recommending me to the Manchester district conference for ordination to the office of elder.

The conference considered the recommendation and provided that I be ordained a priest, which took place under the hands of Joseph Dewsnup, sr., and Henry Greenwood.

Made Branch President

A short time after the ordination it was thought advisable to place me in charge of the branch, and for the purpose Brethren Joseph Dewsnup, sr., and Thomas Taylor came to Sheffield. I was then selected for this work.

The Church Grows

The work in Sheffield grew. Numbers united with the church. Some of the old-time Saints renewed their covenant.

Subsequently James Baty ordained me to the office of elder. The work progressed. We were able to maintain a large meeting room. District and mission conferences could be accomplished.

In 1893 Gomer T. Griffiths organized the Sheffield District, comprising Sheffield and Clay Cross churches.

Many of the general church missionaries have visited the Sheffield church: Gomer T. Griffiths, J. W. Gillen, H. C. Smith, F. G. Pitt, R. May, James Caffall, Joseph Smith, J. W. Rushton, R. C. Evans, U. W. Greene, F. M. Smith, and T. W. Williams.

The work of these brethren is appreciated. To those now living we extend our confidence and well wishes for their success, and to the others, we feel that they have passed on to their reward.

Echoes From Yorkshire

By Herbert Harper

Brother Harper is a railroad engineer, efficient and capable. Though living some eight miles from the meetinghouse, he still finds time for pastoral work.

It was on June 30, 1879, when John Haywood, of Hanley, Staffordshire, baptized his son Martin in the town of Leeds. John Haywood had been a cripple. He was under the necessity of propelling himself in a wheel chair. He was miraculously healed by the Lord. He discarded his perambulator and walked as other men. His son Martin was enthusiastic and refrained not from telling others of the blessing which God had bestowed upon his father.

He got into communication with the Saints at Manchester. The late Joseph Dewsnup, sr., came over and held meetings occasionally. On the 25th of May, 1884, Henry Warren, his wife and son, were baptized, and a local church was organized, which has continued to the present. In 1875 I came to Leeds to work on the railroad. I have continued as engineer ever since.

I was born in Huntingtongshire and was christened and confirmed in the Church of England. My father was a high churchman. My mother was born near Cambridge, was reared a Quaker, later became a Wesleyan, then she with two of her sisters united with Charles Spurgeon's church. One sister affiliated with John Bunyan's organization.

Not Satisfied With Any Church

I was not satisfied with any church. Finally I came in contact with Brother W. Seekins who talked to me, loaned me books, and invited me to the church services. The first evening I attended, Brother Dewsnup was preaching. I was impressed, and have been at home with the Saints ever since. My wife, Sister Meadowcroft, and two others and I were baptized by Brother Dewsnup on January 14, 1888, and confirmed by Brethren Thomas Taylor, of Birmingham, W. Seekin, of Leeds, and Joseph Dewsnup, of Manchester.

Shortly after this Brother Newton, Brother Rush-ton and family, Brother Sharp, and others came to Leeds. These were followed by Brethren J. W. Gil-len and Gomer T. Griffiths. These last two did a good work in Leeds. Heman C. Smith and F. G. Pitt came later. We came to know these men as servants of God. Finally, President Joseph Smith, accompa-nied by his counselor, R. C. Evans, visited Leeds at the time of our district conference. The work was flourishing at this time. We had three rooms opened up in Leeds for meetings.

The Evil One became busy. Jealousy arose be-tween different families, and this has persisted throughout the years. I finally removed with my family to Ardsley, a short distance from Leeds. We expected to do great things in connection with Elder Paxton. With the assistance of the Leeds Saints we opened a room in Ardsley. Our late Brother James Caffall labored faithfully with us, but the people were not ready for the gospel.

Debates and Lectures

We have had debates and lectures and meetings to advertise our work in Ardsley, but without result. Some of the Leeds Saints went to Zion. Two meet-ing places were closed. Brother W. H. Greenwood was then appointed to labor in Leeds. Brother and Sister Jenkins were appointed to labor here. They did a good work visiting and working their way among the people. Then they were called to go to Palestine. We parted with them with regret. They are highly spoken of among friends.

About this time Brother Abel Hall was appointed to labor in Leeds. He was with us during the ter-rible war. He did a good work, especially among the young people. We lost two members and two Sunday school workers through the war. We have lost six by death within three years. These were all valiant members. One sister went to Canada to join her son. We have one hundred names on our record. There are about forty members in good standing. Brethren Thomas Taylor and Arthur Manderfield have proved able helpers.

During the past year Frederick M. Smith and T. W. Williams paid us a visit. This was a real treat to the Saints. We sincerely hope they will come again. We learned to love Brother May who has been in the British Isles for the past ten years. We have had a mission in Bradford. There are a few faithful Saints at this point. They have been neglected hitherto. But the Lord is with them. At a recent meeting which I attended there the Lord spoke through a sister giving words of comfort and advice. We had a glorious meeting.

May God bless the work of his servants wherever they go.

Church Work in London

By John W. Worth

Brother Worth has been connected with church work in London for many years.

The London church has had to struggle to main-tain its existence. We have labored under very ad-verse conditions. It is a waste of time to discuss the past.

The outlook has changed. We are to occupy the hall at Amhurst Park and with the assistance of the missionaries, we hope to build up the church as it has not existed in London before.

In order to do this we trust the Saints will unite and work together. If we do this we will realize in very deed the joy of service.

The Bradford Saints

By G. W. Leggott

Brother Leggott is quite well known to the Saints in America as well as Great Britain.

I will attempt a review of our past and present, and express our hope for the future. Familiar faces come before our vision, who used to meet with us. We recall the pulling down of the middle wall of the little house on Oak Street and the many happy sea-sons we had with old-time souls, among whom were Brother and Sister George Baty, Brother and Sis-ter Wheate and family, Brother and Sister Mills, Brother and Sister Thomas Taylor, Sister Whittiker, and Brother William Deacon.

Some of these are now in the United States; some are in Canada; some are in Australia. We recall Brother and Sister Nixon and Brother and Sister Smith and family, who went to Australia also at a much later date. Brother and Sister Worth and family, and Brother and Sister Maiden, daughter and husband, from Stockport. All these revive pleas-ant memories.

We trust that all who have gone from us are en-joying life. Though we are growing older, may we each have a desire and wish in accord with Brother Joseph Smith, who said, when in this country a few years ago, "I wish to grow old gracefully."

The Manchester district conference was held in our church room. The meetings were fairly well at-tended. All seemed to be happy. Many of the old-timers were present. Among the old-timers we still have with us, Brother Schofield; Brother and Sister

Bryan; Brother and Sister Mayne; Brother and Sister Tapping. Our young families are growing up. These in turn are marrying and raising families of their own.

We have a membership of about eighty. Many of these are promising young people. Thus our hopes for the future are bright. We have a nice little meetinghouse and all meetings are fairly well attended, which we think is a real sign of life. With our nation, as others, after such a horrible, long war, all the exchequer coffers are nearly empty. Industrial conditions are very bad, many thousands being out of employment. We are hoping for improvement so that life may be more certain and greater toleration obtain for all mankind.

We are pleased to read of the progress made to organize Zion, and also to hear such optimistic teachings and belief in this latter-day work from President Smith. It has been a great pleasure for the Saints in Britain to have Brother Smith and his collaborator, T. W. Williams, with us. We hope that they may be able to so discern and regulate, that the church may make progress.

A Word From Exeter

By Stephen S. Ireland

Brother Ireland is one of the older representatives. He yields to a younger man.

I cannot say much for our church, as it is so small. We have not been able to do much for some time. We have been able to hold our own—that is all.

We have not gained any since the beginning of the war. One or two strangers attend the meetings occasionally.

We may be able to do more good, though there is not much in view at present.

Leicester

By T. J. Norton

Brother Norton has recently been elected president of the Birmingham District, succeeding Brother John Schofield.

On August, 1920, the Saints in Leicester deemed it advisable to choose me to be their pastor and shepherd, to care for their spiritual welfare. I am endeavoring, through the aid of the divine Spirit, to prove to them a worthy servant of Jesus Christ. I feel the responsibility resting upon me.

My desire is to become a leader, not a driver; one in whom the Saints and officers can confide. I pray always that I may be kept humble and submissive to the divine will. I am striving to so act that the Saints will have no regret over their choice.

At present love and unity prevails in every heart. All are of one mind. Every heart is melted to tears at times through the operation of the Spirit. We hold priesthood meetings once a fortnight.

At our last priesthood meeting Brother John R. Etherage, teacher, read an interesting paper entitled, "Justification by faith." Discussion followed and some fine points developed.

Brother Newport (priest) and T. J. Norton (teacher) have also taken part in given subjects.

The manifestations of the good Spirit encourage us to still continue in so grand a cause.

Our Sunday school is small; T. Newport is the superintendent. There are two classes, or grades: senior and kindergarten. Senior grade teacher, T. J. Norton, jr.; kindergarten teacher, Sister Hetty Norton.

The Religio meets every Monday evening at 8 p. m., Brother J. R. Etherage, superintendent; T. J. Norton, assistant superintendent. Attendance is good.

Our motto is, "Onward and Upward."

The Birmingham Outlook

By Albert Kendrick

Brother Kendrick is pastor of the Priestly Road Church, Birmingham.

As followers of Jesus Christ we are called upon to justify our faith. To do so we must submit ourselves to critical self-examination. We must do this to determine our course, to vindicate our hope and to prove whether the gospel is preached as Christ would have it or otherwise.

We are surrounded by contradictions, seeming and real. We live in a world of unreality. The conditions under which we are forced to live tend to divorce us from God. We query, Has Christianity failed? Jesus emphasized conduct. By this we determine the value of every man's religion.

Jesus denounced pretenders. He called them "whited sepulchers." He warned his disciples to beware of such. He compared them to wolves in sheep's clothing. "By their fruits ye shall know them." The gospel is reflected in the lives of true followers of Christ. "Let your light so shine," is a divine precept. We attract men by our exemplary conduct.

Progress may seem to be slow, but that which is founded on truth cannot fail. Facing the light, shadows fall behind. The gospel is a panacea for all world ills. God is revealed in the life of Jesus Christ. This was expressed in love. Christ identified himself with the outcast and needy. Let us follow his example. Let us present what we know to be real to the people.

This is our golden opportunity. The harvest is great. The sheaves are ready to be gathered. Let the local ministers form themselves into flying columns, and by every available means carry the gospel message to the people.

Activities at Stafford

By John Schofield

Brother Schofield, though a resident of Birmingham, is acting pastor at Stafford.

The Stafford church has suffered keenly in recent years, through the death of many of its members. Many noble witnesses of the gospel have been developed here. Aside from the many deaths, some have removed to other branches of the mission. Quite a number have migrated to Canada.

As a result of this the members of our local church do not number many. Brother and Sister Coggan and Brother H. Carter are wide-awake, active members, and are keenly alive. Brother and Sister Coggan are recent members. They have been members only a little over two years.

It is remarkable how the Lord has raised up this brother and sister to care for the work. In connection with the Stafford church we have a lively Sunday school, composed largely of the children of non-members. In the case of Brother and Sister Coggan, it is a case of go and do likewise. They were converted through tract distribution. So, each Sunday morning, summer and winter, with rare exceptions, Brother Coggan will be seen going from door to door with a number of the Angel Message tracts, and inviting his friends, neighbors, and townspeople to the services.

Abercomboi (Wales)

By John Pughly

Brother Pughly is in charge of the church work at this point.

The work of the Master in the Abercomboi Branch shows signs of life. I think that the work will move in this place, as it shows light in that direction. The brothers and sisters are awakening, and commence to realize their duty and calling before God.

I carry on open-air work each Sunday, both morning and evening. I have a good hearing in the neighborhood around. We labor under some difficulty, as we have no place in which to hold meetings. We hold our meetings from house to house. The meetings are held at my house on one Sunday and at Brother Snook's on the alternate Sunday. The Wednesday night prayer meeting is held in the same manner.

There are times when I feel much discouraged over the condition of things. By remembering the sayings of Jesus, that we should continually pray, I receive a renewal of strength in accordance with the promise of our heavenly Father. I have a strong testimony that this latter-day work is of God. My earnest desire is to help others, who seek God in spirit and truth, possess the same testimony, as the promise is to all.

I solicit your prayers on my behalf, as well as the branch. I also wish to be remembered to all of the ministers who have labored here in Wales, especially those whom I have known: Brethren E. B. Morgan, William Lewis (deceased), Gomer T. Griffiths, John W. Rushton, U. Thomas, also the present missionaries now in charge of Wales. I pray that the heavenly Father will protect them, as well as us, in the work, and supply power and blessing.

Good Word From Wigan

By Arthur Smith

Brother Smith is a young man. He is wholly consecrated to his work.

Our church is in a very good condition. It is composed of a band of live wires, working in harmony one with the other, and rejoicing in the latter-day work.

It was organized about the year 1882. It was subsequently disorganized and then reorganized in 1893. Since this time, thanks to our old stalwarts, James and William Spargo, who are still with us; and William Hawkins, who has recently gone to his well-earned rest, the work has been carried on through calm and storm.

Persecution

The year 1912 will be long remembered by our members. During that year the anti-Mormon campaign was in full swing. Strange though it may seem, our church was selected, either willfully or ignorantly, for special attention.

This put no stop to our work, for since then we have organized a Sunday school, Religio normal class, and a good choir, and we have also added to our numbers—more than thirty new members who are eagerly responding to the angel message, and most faces are turned Zionward.

Will Build a Chapel

We have a building fund and are anxiously looking forward to the time when we can have a commodious church building of our own. When that time comes, rest assured the door hinges will not rust for want of usage but will be kept on the swing, as we desire to take in all departments of church work. Our motto is "Progress."

May the work prosper in the British Isles.

Things Doing at Warrington

By W. H. Chandler

It is a pleasure to report progress and to state that church work in Warrington is making headway.

During 1920 we almost completed the purchase of the church building. We feel assured that the Lord has directed in this matter.

In 1915 we were asked to share this building with

NEPHI DEWSNUP

"The church calls for your service now, with all your youthful enthusiasm and vitalizing energy." His article on "An appeal to the young people," will appear later.

the Adult School people. Although at first, we felt reluctant about leaving our old room, which we had rented for about ten years, yet we could not help but feel that God was directing us.

Time passed on and gradually the whole scheme developed favorably for us, and we were faced with the problem of either purchasing or vacating. In the latter case we would have been left without a place in which to meet.

Purchase a Home

The Saints rose to the occasion and almost unanimously decided to shoulder the responsibility and purchase the room. In nine months they paid two thirds of the price. We have now one of the best rooms in the district. We have our own baptismal font and most other conveniences necessary to our meeting room, including anteroom, boiler, and heating apparatus.

From the time of our decision to do this work for God, we began to forge ahead. A number have been added to the church. Many others are drawing near.

Social Work

Our social work is a special feature. Most of the Saints and friends throw their homes open for social meetings, where we gather together and sing the songs of Zion and entertain ourselves in a truly saintly way and so avoid some of the pitfalls of modern society—picture houses, theaters, dances, etc.

Why not the Saints cater to their own social life? It is surprising how one's love for worldly pleasure diminishes under right conditions.

An A No. 1 Sunday School

We have an A No. 1 Sunday school under good, careful management, with a normal training class. Our young people are taking up amateur plays for children.

I have nothing but praise to offer for all the good work being done by this small body of Saints. My colaborers are doing their best to push onward the great work for the Master. I commend to God all our dear Saints and friends who have rallied around the cause here in Warrington. They shall in no wise lose their reward.

Truly we are in a state of progressive evolution. I am willing to work and wait for God's triumphal revelation of Zion. Surely it will come if we hold up the hands of those who labor for Christ and not for money.

We have a family who seventeen years ago opposed the church in a bitter and heated way. Now they are learning to love the work of the Lord in these latter days. This, in itself, is evidence of the power in this work to change the idea of a lifetime.

God grant that many more may come to the throne of grace and enjoy the secret influence of the spirit of the gospel of the Son of God.

Gloucester

By A. T. Trapp

Brother Trapp has recently been ordained a high priest. He is dignified and quiet.

As we look back over the last eleven years, we have no reason to be discouraged over the progress made in this part of the vineyard.

On July 4, 1909, the branch was organized by

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Brother J. W. Rushton, with a membership of nine.

To-day we number over fifty.

Brother E. J. Trapp was first chosen to preside and held that responsibility until the writer took it over in 1920.

In the early history of the branch we had to contend with prejudice and criticism. Some of it came from those who are now with us.

By determined effort on the part of those who have been called to labor here, we can say assuredly, "The Lord has truly blessed us in these the latter days."

We have endeavored to build upon the foundation that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. (1 Corinthians 3: 11.) It is pleasing to see that the disposition of the Saints here is to learn all they can about the establishment of this great latter-day work, and to be zealous, trying to live in harmony with the profession of our faith.

There is a jealous regard for that law which governs the people of God, and we realize that it is only by strict observance of the same that the gates of hell cannot prevail against the church.

Our Sunday school is in a healthy condition. We have recently formed a recreation club, thus endeavoring to meet the needs of our young people.

The following are branch officers: Priests: J. H. Smith, J. R. Harris; teachers: R. P. Sims and P. Miles; deacon: E. Meadows. All of these are active and earnest workers.

We hope to continue and play our part in the building up of Zion, and to be numbered with the redeemed.

North Manchester

By John Bailey

Brother Bailey was recently killed in a motor cycle accident. He was counselor to the district president.

The North Manchester church was organized in January, 1894, by James Caffall. I have been identified with it from its inception. To me it is a church par excellence. No doubt this is accentuated because it is my church home. Although I have traveled extensively in the district, there is a feeling pervading "our branch" that is "ne'er met with elsewhere."

The first pastor was Henry Greenwood, whose record is one of continued faithfulness. Although he has passed the allotted span, he is one of our most regular attendants, especially at the Sunday morning services; and this despite the fact that his dear wife is a confirmed invalid, confined to the house for years. This brother is a veritable patriarch.

W. H. Greenwood

The fame of his son, W. H. Greenwood, has spread abroad, though at the present time he has ceased his activities so far as official labor goes. Yet I feel confident in saying that his heart is in the right place. He has the right church perspective. If it were not for circumstances over which he has no control, the work in Great Britain would receive the benefit of his services.

Another product is Abel Hall. This brother, during his services in the mission field, proved himself a capable and efficient worker for the Lord. We regret the occasion of his temporary withdrawal. He will yet leave his mark for good on the Lord's work.

Joseph Dewsnup

Who has not heard of Joseph Dewsnup? He belongs to us and was at one time pastor. During his term of office we made our greatest progress. Another of our boys is Edward Maloney, now president of the elders' quorum. The brother is a marvel of development and one of our brightest minds.

Of those who have gone over to the great majority, we recall Thomas Hughes, my wife's father. He was a pioneer and among the first members of the Reorganization. Some of our "shoots" have spread far abroad—Brother E. Niseon, of Brisbane, Australia, and John Smith, of the same place—a branch “snatched from the burning,” and now a polished shaft in the hands of the Lord.

America also holds our worthies, Thomas Mills, of Wheeling, West Virginia, being one of them. Although many have gone from us, yet we still have a few good men left. We have James Waugh, a valiant worker, and Albert Hall, who has occupied the position of pastor on two occasions.

Resume of Brother Bailey's Labors

I wish to be included among those who are trying to forward the Lord's work. During three separate periods I have been pastor of the North Manchester church. Have been counselor to three presidents of the district, and now counselor to the present president of the elders' quorum. I was ten years superintendent of the Sunday school, and for many years teacher of the Bible class.

We have some splendid members and an army of young men to whom we look to carry on the good work. The prospects are bright, the opportunities great. It needs but for us to enter in and occupy. The fruits of our labors are bound to follow.

May the Lord prepare us for the great and glorious service, and inspire our hearts to accomplish the work set before us.

South Manchester

By S. F. Mather

Brother Mather is one of the young-old men of the church. He radiates cheer.

The Southeast Manchester church is, as its name implies, an amalgamation of the late South and East Manchester Branches. The former was the remaining section of the original Manchester Branch, after the formation of the North, Northeast, and East Branches.

This present Southeast Branch on the whole is in a very fine spiritual condition. About one third of its members (quite alive) are thoroughly reliable, regularly and most faithfully fulfilling their obligations, spiritual and temporal.

A few of the remaining two thirds might be classed as simply spasmodic in temperament and only seem to be in evidence at weddings, funerals, or social parties (we call them tea parties).

The Sunday School Department is in a very thriving and promising condition, being most ably superintended by Elder W. R. Armstrong, assisted officially by several assiduous and faithful young brethren and sisters.

Of the former, Brother Harold Dewsnup sailed last January [1921] for the United States of America to take a collegiate training at Graceland. His inestimable services are greatly missed.

The Religio and Woman's Auxiliary Departments have each done excellent work.

Fall on Shoulders of Few

The only regrettable feature of these various undertakings is that the onerous duties belonging severally to each are shouldered generally by the same willing helpers.

On the whole the outlook here is not at all discouraging, but might be more effectually enhanced if more volunteers, young and old, would present and offer their services to assist.

Plymouth

By F. J. Brooks

Brother Brooks is a deacon. Throughout the war he kept this branch alive as best he could.

Plymouth. Who has not heard of Plymouth? Does it not strike a note in history? What a story I could relate.

The Pilgrim Fathers sailed from this port in the year 1620. They landed in New Plymouth, United States of America, or what was afterwards called New England.

Among the ranks of those who sailed, were the ancestors of Joseph Smith. Our present President Frederick M. Smith, in company with Brother T. W. Williams, landed at this port on their arrival in Great Britain, attended the Three Hundredth Anniversary Celebration, and stood on the Mayflower Stone, which marks the spot where the Pilgrims had prayers prior to embarking for America.

A Stirring Moment

How their hearts must have thrilled with such an experience! I know they will carry pleasant memories of their visit to the place. What better link need we have with our friends from overseas than this historic spot?

The history of Plymouth Church is not so glorious. It could be summed up: Missionary effort, branch establishment, exodus of officers, disorganization, re-establishment.

Various Missionary Efforts

Brethren James, Newton, Rushton, Pearce, Jones, and others have labored here. Of each much commendation could be made. Their efforts have not been successful, mainly, no doubt, through lack of local officers or officers removing to America.

At present the church numbers ten who attend, and fourteen nonattending members, though the majority of the latter have gotten out of touch altogether.

The deacon is president, secretary, treasurer, and any other office that comes along in connection with church funds and committees.

We rent a room for meetings and are going ahead until a special effort is made to revive the work.

Our President's visit was encouraging and we have high hopes of still making a name in the history of the church.

Farnworth

By James Spargo

Brother Spargo is pastor of the local church and has valiantly supported the work against great odds.

The outlook for the Farnworth church is very encouraging. We are proud of the services of Brother Samuel H. Hope (priest), also Brother William Bothwell (teacher), who are trying with God's help to push the work on successfully.

We do not forget the able assistance rendered to us by our esteemed Brother Joseph Harper, who has just given up the position of pastor of the local church after many years' labor in that position. We are looking forward to the coming year with optimistic vision. We are trusting that God will bless the young sisters and friends who are rallying round us with a renewed zeal, and an energetic desire to further the cause.

We do not forget the able assistance rendered to us by our aged sisters, who have stood the test for twenty and thirty years.

Looking back and recounting the many clouds we have passed through, I think I can safely say that we now see the silver lining.

Summerfield

By Francis H. Edwards, President

Summerfield. Little Summerfield, the church with the name almost as long as the roll call, yet the church which has the honor of contributing fifty per cent of the girl students going from England to Graceland this year.

The members of this church are delighted with the prospect of a British Isles number of the HERALD. It will do much good and will make for a better understanding. It will develop deeper sympathy and stimulate the few Saints here to spread the gospel.

I am convinced that each church representative must learn his duty, and do it with a zeal never felt before. The hastening time is indeed here. The sifting time is upon us.

Joseph the Martyr once said that this work had come to stay. It appears to me that those who are not willing to step forward with the progress of the work must step out of the way.

This work will surely go forward. God is preparing the hearts of his people for the reception of his word and his servants shall yet speak with assurance, as men having authority.

Let us heed the admonition of God given in Doctrine and Covenants 83. If we do, we shall yet do a great work.

THE ELDERS' QUORUM

Retrospect

By J. E. Meredith

Brother Meredith is one of the oldest men in the mission. He is well known to the Saints in America.

I suggested to Brother T. W. Williams shortly after their arrival in Great Britain, "If President F. M. Smith and yourself think it would be to the best interest of the work for me to resign as president of the elders' quorum, and a younger man be appointed, I am quite willing."

Brother Williams said, "Where will we find the young man who can do better service and work?" I said, "Look around and see." They found him; a real live one; and I am pleased. I may say it has been a great pleasure to relinquish the position as president of the elders' quorum in favor of the young man with fire, energy, zeal, and push. I hope he will receive as much respect and consideration as has been bestowed upon me. If he gets more, so much the better. I shall not feel jealous, but will rejoice and hope to stand at the back of my successor and will be glad to play second or third fiddle.

I was appointed president of the seventh quorum of elders at the mission conference August, 1906, succeeding our worthy Brother George Baty, who removed to Brooklyn. The members of the quorum have treated me with the greatest respect in all parts of England and Wales, and have sent many times requesting me to pay visits. Some I have been able and very pleased to accept; others I could not comply with, owing to business engagements and other causes. The time was well spent. The joy, pleasure, and satisfaction received well paid for time, trouble, and expense.

Our Young Men

There is now a fine lot of young men growing up who are very much interested in the Lord's work, and are trying to do something to create interest in the membership, also with nonmembers. It is a pleasure to some of those growing old to see the young, energetic, and active. I am glad they have had better opportunities than many of the old folk, and hope they will use them in the right direction. If they do so, there will be much progress made in local churches, districts, and mission.

I have walked and talked with Apostle J. W. Rush-ton and cycled with him in different parts on mission work. He wrote some time ago, stating if he came this way again he would be glad to have a motor cycle ride with me. I hope he will come along soon, then we will be able to see who is the better man on a motor cycle or driving a motor car—or automobile, as Americans term it.

Some men are old-young, others are young-old. The latter term has been applied to me many times. I still enjoy a good trip by motor, train, motor cycle, horse vehicle, or push bike. If none of these means are available—well, I can walk and enjoy it. I am very thankful for the many blessings, and have had my share of cares and worries along with ups and downs. But joys outweigh troubles.

The Elders' Quorum in Great Britain

By Edward Maloney

Brother Maloney was selected last year to succeed Brother J. E. Meredith as president of the elders' quorum.

The task set before a new president is difficult. He must live up to the achievements of his predecessors. He must meet new conditions. He must deal with new problems which may require an entire change of front.

On assuming responsibility for directing this arm of church work, one is astounded at the wide range of possibilities. The problem is to persuade the members so that these may become realities if they will only avail themselves of the means within the organization to qualify them for their work, regardless of its character, in every branch of church service.

Having carefully considered the task which lies ahead, we must take a careful inventory of the material at hand and at our disposal, and which we can

Duties Defined

What are the duties of the elder? When we settle this question then we can better state what are the duties of the quorum. Ruskin, in his masterpiece, Unto the Last, gives a very significant exposition of the best way to achieve an object:

"Let us have a right application of labor to capital, the right governments of the fruits of labor applied to capital, and the right disposition of the fruits of labor applied to capital according to the needs of the individual."

The Ruskin policy will be applied in answering these questions. What is the outlook? What are the advantages? What are the benefits of membership in the quorum?

First. The duty of the elder: To minister in all spiritual things; to have the keys of the kingdom of heaven, to preach, teach, ordain, administer the various ordinances of the church, preside over districts or branches, to lay on hands, baptize, etc.

Powers

The powers to discharge these great responsibilities comprise the capital of the individual elder, and the needs of the people comprise the field of labor calling for said capital. The joint union of the two will bring into play the power and capabilities of the sons of God.

In the quorum we have men from every walk of life—banker, lawyer, builder, scientist, engineer, navigator, plumber, miner, schoolmaster, spinner, and even down to the lowly navy. From these we can and must produce the preacher, lecturer, missionary, teacher, counselor, organizer, president.

Can Meet the Demands

Every demand can be met. Out of this diversified material should come a wonderful school of intellectuals that will meet present and future demands. Seeing that we have the right kind of capital (those who know the peculiar conditions of the British Isles Mission will concur in the affirmation just made and concede that we have done well), and the best kind of labor, all that is required is for each man to learn his duty and walk in the office unto which he has been called with all diligence, and with his fellows gather together in solemn assembly and canvass the questions of the hour.

EDWARD MALONEY

use in creating an intellectual structure for each member to move and have his being in.

We Are Workers

"We are workers together with God." Every elder accepting ordination must acknowledge the following to be true: The great architect has placed in each individual the possibility, the intelligence, the power, to become a fellow worker with him in the building of a system whereby mankind will find refuge in the time of storm.

The people, by acquiescing to the divine selection, guarantee help and fidelity to the minister as shown in their continual voting to sustain the various authorities customary in our conferences.

Out of these deliberations we will find that new and living way whereby all the sons and daughters of man will be transformed by the renewing of their minds to become heirs of God.

With apologies to Wheeler we conclude, "There can be no work without a worker." That worker is an elder. The work is in the church and the quorum. The quorum is in the British Isles.

CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES

A Testimony

By Henry Greenwood

On request of my brethren and as the only surviving patriarch of the British Isles Mission, I herewith present my testimony to the verity of this latter-day work.

Seven years ago I assumed the work of this office. I was associated with the late Patriarch James Baty until the time of his death, over a year ago.

I have given but few patriarchal blessings. In the few instances wherein I have been called upon, I have realized the power and spirit of my calling. I regret that the work of the patriarch has not received more attention from a general church point of view. It surely is the divine design that the people of God should receive counsel and instruction to inspire faith, trust, and confidence, and thereby qualify them to cheerfully meet the depressing conditions of these perilous times.

One of the patriarchal duties is to fortify the Saints and prepare them in mind and spirit to do battle with the Adversary of souls, whose power is not always indicated in darkness. God has appointed the patriarchs to be spiritual fathers to the church. They should be men of experience in the world as well as the church, who will counsel and encourage the Saints and thereby fortify them against the subtle wiles of worldliness and evil.

The Saints of the British Isles Mission have not, as yet, entered into the spirit of this patriarchal work. There is great need for the patriarchal department in this mission. It should receive the immediate attention of the First Presidency of the church. The church should provide better facilities for this department. I am assured that if this department is properly sustained that it will be the means of imparting added spiritual power to the work in this land.

I cannot hope to realize much change in my lifetime, with the burden of seventy-four years weighing upon me. My faith is in the work. My hope is for the future. My consideration and love is for those who will follow after me.

It is fifty years since I decided to accept the Angel's Message. I have been actively engaged in upholding the work during that time. I have fulfilled the offices to which I have been called to the best of my ability. I have always encouraged my brothers to do likewise. During this period, I have witnessed many changes, have sensed the many pitfalls and dangers to which we were subjected. My love for the work is still increasing. My hope grows constantly brighter.

As a final word of counsel I would exhort the brethren to be upright, honest, and true to each other. Avoid the very appearance of evil. Put away all feelings of jealousy. Be honorable in your dealings with each other and with the world. Assist each other in the faithful discharge of every duty which the church may call you to perform. Jealousy and selfishness are the besetting sins of the age. They have and do hinder the progress of the work in every land. Come, let us reason together. This is our invitation to the world. We cannot afford to do less.

Blue Pencil Notes

Had the Saints in Missouri in 1833 been told that some day our ministers would stand on the hill in Independence hard by the Temple Lot and preach to people in Saint Paul, Minnesota; Boulder, Colorado; Dallas, Texas, and other points within a radius of four hundred miles, they would have considered such a feat impossible or at least miraculous. But that is what we are doing every Sunday evening by means of the wireless telephone.

As Lodge says, "Miracles lie all about us: only they are not miracles." Had the Saints attempted to picture such a performance they probably would have thought of the speaker as being in some way endowed with such volume of voice, or equipped in some way with some gigantic megaphone, so that he could drown out all noises and override all speech of other men with a great shouting, and be heard thus at such distance—a fulfillment, perhaps, of Isaiah: "Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion," or even of Jeremiah: "An howling of the principal of the flock shall be heard."

Had Paul thought of standing in Jerusalem and causing his voice to be heard plainly by the Saints in Ephesus he probably would have had some such mental picture of shouting with a great voice to be heard at that distance above all other sounds. But how different it is in reality! The preacher speaks in an ordinary voice. The radio picks it up. It disappears in space. Silently, quietly, unheard by the unaided ear, it slips under all noises, through all tumult, over prairies and rivers, through brick walls and living people, and is heard distinctly by the man who is equipped, attuned, and attentive; whether he be four hundred or a thousand miles away, according to the equipment used.

After all, power is not always demonstrated by outward sound and fury. The waters that roar over Niagara are impressive; but their power is wasted, dissipated. But from the falls radiate copper wires that carry to distant cities current, silent, unseen, undemonstrative, yet capable of lighting cities, driving vehicles, running factories, conserving life, or dealing instant death.

Elijah mocked the priests of Baal and told them to "cry with a great voice," that they might reach their god, who seemed to have gone on a journey, or perhaps was gossiping, or even asleep. But when the word of the Lord came to Elijah it was in "a still small voice." Others heard it not—but Elijah heard it very plainly and wrapped his face in his mantle—it searched him to the soul.

There is something suggestive about that expression, the "still small voice." If the wonders of man's achievement are so great, who shall deny the power of the Lord. He does not need to fill the heavens with shouting and drown out the babbling of the whole world in order that he may be heard by those who believe. But his still small voice travels through space, knowing no time or distance, under all earth noises, through all obstructions, to reach the heart of the one who is attuned to receive.

The world does not hear the message, so does not credit its existence. When the Lord spoke to Paul, those who were with him "heard not the voice of him that spake." The lesson of the wireless telephone teaches me that my brother may clearly hear from a great distance the voice of one speaking, while I in the immediate neighborhood hear it not—it passes by me, yea through me, and I do not even suspect its presence or its import, or the intelligence conveyed. Atheism should stand abashed and abased. Agnosticism has no argument left. It may deny man's power to comprehend an infinite God; it cannot deny God's power to reveal himself to man, and in ways, too, that may not be at all within the powers of perception of the agnostic standing hard by.

Cooperation as the Only Solution

Men of affairs realize a change must be made, and quite naturally arrive at cooperation as the ideal theoretical basis.

A group of local business men had assembled for the regular chamber of commerce meeting, but lack of interest among the members resulted in a light attendance. The dozen there were representative of the typical leading business men in the average small town, and very frankly discussed their mutual problems. It was the consensus of opinion that instead of there being a community spirit of "You help me and I'll help you," it was rather "I'll look out for myself and the other fellow may do likewise."

They were compelled to admit that many of their own members of the chamber of commerce were as guilty as the average citizen in the community. Somehow there was a lack of loyalty to each other, a lack of an underlying basis of confidence, since there was not a unification of unselfish ideals. Quite naturally the discussion was finally crystallized in a feeling that, while competition had its value, yet they were offering daily a demonstration of an entirely unnecessary aspect of competition in the fact that there were so many selling in the same kinds of goods and attempting to serve in the same fields, whereas it could all be done much more conveniently—and profitably if rightly managed—by the cooperative or collective ownership method.

We have, as a church, preached for many years the necessity for cooperation, but further have insisted that an arbitrary arrangement whereby men pooled their interests could not succeed unless with it there was interwoven an earnest desire to put into effect the Golden Rule. Without it, any outwardly good situation attempted in which cooperation is the dominant note will fail, for the vital point at issue is intelligent management. The tendency towards a lowering of incentive by those entrusted with management on what approaches a stewardship basis has frequently been noted by writers on economic subjects. Yet our contention is that the missing element is a deep appreciation of the meaning of brotherhood.

Still another and as important factor is that too frequently it is presumed that a group of people cooperating in the management of a business must hire men from among themselves to manage their affairs on the basis that it will thus be more efficiently done than by some one not included in the group. Sometimes this results rather disastrously, for the requisite skill and efficiency in handling business affairs does not necessarily result from a mere election or appointment.

We must cooperate, but we must manage. We may appreciate the benefits of solidarity, but without the complement of earnest and intense application with the highest possible degree of skill we shall never succeed in solving our economic problems, whether they be on a small scale or a large scale.

Religious Education Next Year

In the HERALD for January 18 appears, on the first page, an announcement signed by Frederick M. Smith as president of the church, concerning the course in religious education at Graceland College. Those who desire to take up this work beginning next fall should write to George N. Briggs, President Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for application blanks, at once, furnishing as soon as possible the needed information, so that the matter may be laid before the proper church authorities, and the selection made of those who will attend this course next year, 1922-1923.

It should be noted that it is planned next year to make the course two years in length, and to include such studies as will qualify for the continuance of collegiate work if so desired. That is, that those who wish to do so will be able to go to other universities and take the regular college degree.

It is keenly appreciated by those having the work in charge that many important matters have had to be omitted in the one-year course, and it is their desire gradually to extend the scope of the course.

Those who are not already under missionary appointment should make provision to finance themselves, on account of the present financial conditions. This is an opportunity to prepare for service, wherever our life work may be led.

Those interested in the work of the church and in the development of our young people should also give attention to this announcement, for modesty or some other reason may prevent some of those who should take advantage of this opportunity from doing so. It will need your cooperation to make the work as successful as it should be.

Passing of H. N. Hansen

The sad news of the death of Elder H. N. Hansen, February 3, has just reached us from his home at Underwood, Iowa. Elder Hansen was born in Denmark in 1850, but removed to this country and was baptized in Utah in 1867. As early as 1874, he was appointed by the General Conference in September to Scandinavia, and was reappointed by the April conference in 1875, at which time he was ordained an elder. He left immediately after the conference, and arrived in Copenhagen on the 16th of May, but found conditions very unfavorable, and with difficulty secured a hall for a short time. When he returned at the end of the year, he reported six baptisms at Aalborg and three in Copenhagen, with good prospects. His missionary work, therefore, was continued for more than forty years. For eleven years, at different times, he was appointed to Utah or the Rocky Mountain District. For fourteen years, at different times, he was appointed by the General Conference to Pottawattamie and Little Sioux, Iowa, District, especially the former. One year he was appointed to the Southern Mission, and for more than three years labored in Scandinavia, being placed in charge in Scandinavia and Germany by the conference of 1912.

He was ordained a seventy on the 12th of April, 1886, by Elder James Caffall, and a high priest the 13th of April, 1917, by F. M. Sheehy. He was appointed regularly by the General Conference up to the conference of 1918, being appointed in later years to local work, as his ordination as high priest indicates.

We have not at this time received any details as to the cause of his passing, but by his going, the church loses another stalwart.

New Priesthood Journal

It is arranged to change the name and size of One, the priesthood journal, and let it carry to the men of the church the valuable lectures being delivered to the priesthood meetings in Independence each Sunday. The plan is to change the name to The Priesthood Journal beginning with the January issue, and expand the size so an ordinary lecture will fill from two thirds to three fourths of the space.

The same editors are retained, Frederick M. Smith and Benjamin R. McGuire. They plan to give more attention to the new journal and use it as a medium for carrying current and important matters of special interest to the priesthood.

A very general response was had by the attending priesthood to the first announcement. If these men who have already heard the lectures are so anxious to secure printed copies of them in this way, it would seem that those not having heard would be doubly anxious to secure the paper which will carry monthly one of these inspirational discourses on teaching as a responsibility of the ministry. The subscription price is forty cents a year, and should be sent to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri. All will begin with January number, which will contain the first of the lectures, by Elbert A. Smith.

The Cost of Living Declining

The report of the United States Department of Labor released January 14, 1922, indicates the changes in the cost of living in Chicago, Detroit, New York, Philadelphia, and Washington for the last year, in particular. Three of these cities are in the East, and two in the eastern part of the Central States. Still, they can doubtless be taken as a whole as fairly indicating the change in the cost of living for the country as a whole. The list of food, housing, clothing, furniture, fuel, and miscellany are all separately listed and weighed.

Taking an average of the five, we find that from September, 1921, there was only a very slight decrease in the cost of living, but from June, 1920, to December, 1921, the average is 19.7 per cent decrease a matter of nearly one fifth off from the cost of June, 1920, when the cost of living was at its peak.

It is interesting to note that the adjustment on the budget plan of the allowances to the missionaries was made the last of June, 1920. Since then there has been a steady decrease in the cost of living, amounting, as a whole, as above indicated, to nearly one fifth.

This same report gives the items back as far as December, 1915, giving it for each year for the first four years, then twice a year for 1919 and 1920, and May, September, and December, 1921. The percentages are based on the cost of living December, 1914, and show an increase of 1.4 per cent in the East, and of 3.2 per cent in the Central States for December, 1915. By December, 1916, this percentage had increased to 14.7 per cent in the East, and 20.9 per cent in the two western cities. The increase is rapid from then till June, 1920, when it reached the peak, 111.3 per cent in the East, and 125.3 per cent in the two western cities. It must be remembered, however, that all of these figures are of increases only, so that the cost of living was more than 211 per cent in the East and was more than 225 per cent in the two western cities, as compared with December, 1914. From this, a decline has been made to December, 1921, showing an increase of 71.8 per cent over December, 1914, or, in other words, the cost of living would be represented by 171.8 per cent in the East, and in the two western cities, by 177.3 per cent of the cost in those cities in December, 1914.

These figures permit of an immediate comparison both with the first year of the war, and also the period of maximum prices, and show what expenditures we should expect as compared with both of these earlier dates, and also what income is needed to maintain the same standard of living.

This decline in the cost of living, together with the general stringency in the world, which is reflected in receipts by the church, will probably result in an adjustment of missionary allowances in the near future.

A Biography of Frederick M. Smith

The Saints will be interested in knowing that Sister Ruth Smith is preparing for publication a personal history of her husband, Frederick M. Smith, President of the church. Sister Smith has been so long associated with him in his study and in the many activities of his church life that she is in a position to present to the public an interpretation of her husband's character which could come from no other source.

Her work is a characteristically bright account of many of the humorous and dramatic incidents of the President's life, including childhood experience, his school life, his courtship and marriage, the circumstances which attended his entering into the work of the church, and the more personal side of his reactions to the situations and problems of his later life and work.

A leader of President Smith's type is necessarily known only by a few friends, and is frequently misunderstood by those who know him only slightly or by reputation. Such an analysis of his personality is consequently of the greater interest in that it pulls aside for a little the curtain of official reserve with which such a leader is always surrounded.

Some Comments on Darwin's Theory

In our General Interest department this week appears a newspaper account from the Toronto Globe of an interview with Professor William Bateson, who gave a strong address on evolution, "Faith and modern doubt," at the general session of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, held in Toronto the last of December.

We have briefly referred heretofore to the important factor of sterility of hybrids, to the failure to secure new species, to the fact that the scientific ideals of to-day on evolution are quite different from what they were fifty and seventy years ago, also that missing links have not been found. That from the point of view of anatomy, the skulls and bones have either been distinctly human or distinctly simian. Several students in 1919 wrote very clear analyses of the so-called Java man, reaching the conclusion that the bones represented two individuals in one.

On the other hand, the principles of evolution, the general idea of evolution, seems to be well established. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—John 3: 2. Also, "The resurrection is not of that body which is sowed." Evolution, in view of Mendel's Law, implies an involution, so that it is the unfolding of that which has been before closed, or folded in.

We should be able to approach the whole subject from a scientific point of view, proving all things, holding fast to the truth.

A Solution of the Farm Problem

The plan of Joseph to store grain from the years of large crops for lean years.

According to a statement made by Congressman Sidney Anderson, of Minnesota, the chairman of the Joint Congress Commission on Agriculture inquiry, the producer, or farmer receives, in general, about 37 per cent of the commercial dollar; 14 per cent represents all profits; while 49 per cent is taken for the cost of service, including packing, transportation, grading, insurance, selling, advertising, display rent, wages, and delivery.

This is, evidently, too high a percentage. Greater efficiency of this distribution is needed to compare with the efficiency of producers and there is probably needed better organization of the producers and commerce, for at present they exercise but little influence. Proper organization might secure better distribution.

The plan of Joseph should prove successful even in a world sense. That is, to secure and store, not releasing to the market a definite surplus until there is sufficient for more than one bad year and then aim to produce in quantities to meet the deficit of the previous year or years. It is, indeed, a profound pity that often years of bumper crops are the poor years for the farmers, and years of poor crops are his best years.

We find in the South men having produced abundant cotton crops cannot get enough to eat, and men in the West who have produced abundant crops find that there is such a surplus that the year shows a net loss.

Brother Ingram McVay writes from Follansbee, West Virginia, that Brother McConnaughy has just been holding a series of meetings at Wellsburg. A certain man, not of the faith, attended every meeting. Brother McVay loaned a copy of The Call at Evening to the investigator, who after reading two chapters asked where he could purchase the book. The man said that The Call at Evening should be in every home. He expects to continue his investigations.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

A Mighty Empire

By John W. Rushton

This article was written especially for the British number, which appeared last week, but lack of space prevented its use.

Great Britain is not a very large country, its area being less than 90,000 square miles; in length not much more than 600 miles, about 320 in breadth. Its natural resources are insufficient to supply the needs of its nearly 45,000,000 of inhabitants, yet it is a great land, and one of the wonders of human history.

Were it possible to subtract this country, with its influence, from the history of the race, how much poorer that history would be in every department it is impossible to compute. In art, science, politics, commerce, industry, music, letters, painting, drama and oratory, poetry and literature, she has made contributions to the world's store of treasures which are truly immortal.

In and through it all can be seen the fire of Celtic passion, the restraint and judgment of Teutonic and Scandinavian phelgm, the courage and indomitable urge of the Roman, with the brilliance and chivalry distinctly Gallic, like the subtle fires and colors of a beautiful gem which under tremendous pressure and terrific heat has been made in crystalline glory from mud and waste.

Theater of Great Heroes

In this small and almost pigmy land, so filled with delicate beauty and awe-inspiring grandeur, is found the theater of great heroes wrestling with gigantic problems and generating bewildering enterprises, widening its influence more and more until upon its vastness the "sun never sets."

A study of the history of this land and its people shows that while it has not always attained the summits in every realm, it has maintained a high level of consistency, in all, and in this has become the recognized standard for the world.

It would be too long a task to catalogue the illustrious names which are associated with philosophy, art, science, and culture which Great Britain has given to the world. It must suffice to say that the monument of her power and influence is to be found in the empire which has grown up, the ramifications of which reach to the uttermost parts of the earth. This empire is rather a mighty commonwealth, for each of the unitary parts is autonomous in domestic affairs, yet no one can doubt the reality of that intangible power which unites these parts into an indissoluble whole which stands out so conspicuously in times of stress and crisis.

Development of Democracy

Within her life and evolution can be seen the development of democracy, and the gradual growth of the power of the majority, and while retaining the symbols of authority in almost the unchanged garb of medieval theatricality, has transferred the dominion and power from the monarch whose only claim was the accident of blood and name, to the real king who because he was the "man who can and did," became the ruler whom the people chose.

She has made an asylum for all kinds of outcasts and sheltered many movements—religious, political, and social, which had been driven from the land of their nativity, and just as generously scattered the blessings she has found, so that all may share in the possibilities involved. Truly she has been loyal to that cause of Humanity which has unified her in storm and conflict, prosperity and peace, with all who were loyal to the same great cause.

To be sure, many mistakes and tragical blunders mark her passage from squalid obscurity to the splendor which is hers, but none have been more deadly and incisive in the just criticisms which were leveled at her than her own sons, but withal she has had that peculiar quality of life, to adjust herself to ever-changing conditions, which in spite of the reputation which the thoughtless or casual student has created, is the real secret of her length of days and exhaustless strength. She labors to secure and apply the unchanging truth in the ever-changing circumstances of its unfolding and mechanism of its application.

Played Her Part Religiously

Religiously, this land and people have played a great and important part. It is one of the traditions of the historic Church of England that Saint Paul, crossing over from Spain, brought the first news of the Christ to the wild Celts of Albion. It is true that Saint Augustine with his forty monks set up the first church of Christ at Canterbury, and gradually won the several kings of the Heptarchy to her fold. The early history of Christianity in Britain carries the names of many men and women redolent now with the canonization they earned in martyrdom, service, scholarship, missionary enterprise, and defense in times of heresy and schism.

Even the Reformation period had been anticipated by men like John Wycliffe and the Lollards, so that when Luther and his contemporaries led the great attack upon the church once so powerful and influential, now because of recreancy to the trust imposed in her, distrusted by these distinguished men, Great Britain responded to the call, and though the instruments of the championing were not always what they might have been, yet why are we to complain of the processes of divine selection? Has it not always been that God takes the "weak" things of the earth and things which are "despised" and even "base" to accomplish the wonders of his grace?

Freedom of Conscience

We watch the changing scenes and with appreciation acknowledge the labor of the great men who in this land of Knox and the Covenanters, of Cromwell and the Puritans, labored for the freedom of conscience without which religion must perish and leave nothing but the rags and straws of an effete superstition in its place, and prepared the way for the coming of the Wesleys and Whitfield in England and Chalmers in Scotland, who revived the country from its deadly and sensual apathy following the age of crass materialism of the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries, and the overbearing ecclesiasticism which threatened the spirituality of the nation.

The monumental work of the British and Foreign Bible Society, together with the London Missionary Society, must not be overlooked in the work which they performed, making it possible for others to follow in their steps and carry on the work of Christianizing heathen peoples and nations, preparing the way even for our own work, in the islands of the seas and elsewhere.

The effectiveness of the work done is seen in the fact that when the gospel of Christ was restored in this generation it came through the agency of a scion of the Pilgrim Fathers who laid the foundations of the mighty Republic which has blossomed from the parent stock. And this young church which was nursed in America made its first missionary conquests in Britain, which gave a hearty welcome to the evangel, so that before the dark cloud of apostasy and folly assailed the very life of the church, it had a following in Britain of 62,000.

Voice of the Good Shepherd

Though the shock of disappointment and the truculent wrecking of the faith and confidence of the people resulted in the falling away of many thousands of the British converts, yet when the missionaries of the Reorganization went to that land and the "voice of the Good Shepherd" was recognized again in the message delivered, many rejoiced and sought to build up the waste places. Of the men and women whose strength, intellect, fortitude, patience, and intrepidity have conjoined to make what may be termed "Mormon" history, and made the work of the true church what it is to-day many either came from that land or were the posterity of its ancestral strain.

May the day be speeded when the church will be revived in Great Britain, and through the agency of her ministrations in that land, as well as America, the two great Anglo-Saxon countries be united into a great and mighty force, making for righteousness and justice to all, and so prepare the way for the coming of that kingdom which shall be called the kingdom of God, in which all men shall be brothers, and whose aims shall be the happiness of all to the glory of God.

Street Preaching in Great Britain

By Thomas Taylor

The writer is noted throughout the British Isles as one of our most successful street speakers.

Experience has taught me that street preaching is the most practical and economical way of bringing the gospel to the attention of the people. We have tried to bring them into our halls and churches and have failed. They will not come to us. We must go to them.

Street work brings you into contact with all classes of people. Your audience invariably represents all shades of opinion. This enables you to know what the man and woman on the street are thinking. It gives you a chance to supply the demand; to anticipate as well as answer questions.

The first essential in a successful campaign is to discover the point where the people are in the habit of gathering for open-air meetings, dealing with political, scientific, social, and religious themes. Every city in England has one or more such places.

Select Strategic Point

London has a large number. Hyde Park and Marble Arch are the principal points. In Derby and Nottingham it is the Market Place; in Leeds, the Town Hall Square; in Birmingham, it is the Bull Ring. Cardiff has Llandaff Fields. Every town and village has a similar place.

Having selected your place, now secure a suitable stand. This should consist of a small, secure platform—not too high from the ground, but sufficient to enable you to see over the heads of your audience. On the front of this improvised pulpit, have printed the name of the church in clear, legible lettering, also the time and place of the regular services of the church.

Never lose sight of the fact that you are a spiritual salesman. You are there to make people want your message. After stating your case, give your hearers an opportunity to ask questions and criticize you. By this you discover your own weak points, as well as those of your critics. You will find cranks of every description. Do not be disturbed or irritated when they try to heckle you.

Keep cool. Do not lose your temper. Treat all courteously. Remember, they are serving a useful purpose. They help to gather and hold your crowd. Others will be listening very intently while the argument is proceeding. Truth always shines the brighter when it is being attacked. The people who are listening will see it more clearly.

Subject Matter

Be sure that the foundation of your subject is sound. State your premise carefully and deliberately. Avoid extravagant statements, then you will have nothing to fear. You will soon discover that the honest, fair, and unprejudiced people will approve of your conduct and subject and give their assent to it. In this way you make friends in the crowd. The majority of the people stand for fair play. When you are in the right they will protect you from imposition. This is true, unless you happen to be where prejudice warps judgment.

Spasmodic efforts do little or no good. Street and park work must be conducted systematically. It must be continued for weeks, and months, and years. The people must come to know you—to look for you.

Speaker's Qualifications

The speaker must be versatile, well informed, gifted, capable of turning a point, equal to any emergency. He must know men. He must be fearless, yet frank—firm, yet tractable. It will be a waste of money to keep a man at this work who is not fitted for it. Organize on a business basis. A business house would not assign a man to a position unless he had the ability to carry out its wishes, to sell its goods, to bring in the orders.

Use up-to-date methods of advertising. Secure, or have printed, different three-minute sermons. Do not tell the whole story in your tracts. Arouse interest: create the desire for more; keep the people guessing.

Associate together one man who has had experience and one who has not, but who has ability and aptitude. Let the second man assist and gradually develop confidence and ability. He will soon learn from practical observation and experience. He will, in a short time, become able to take the lead, thus releasing the first man for a new field.

An item from Los Angeles states that Doctor Melvin Grove Kyle said that a discovery has just been made of a Persian tablet containing the story of the creation and the flood which would tend to prove that the antediluvians possessed the old gospel in its primitive form.

W. F. Clifton, of Toronto, has noticed the reference by the Niagara Falls Branch to the ball games of the season, and assures them the Toronto team plan to do some big things the coming summer.

Appeal to the Young

By Nephi Dewsnuip

Brother Dewsnuip was appointed last November by the joint council to do missionary work. He is a grandson of Joseph Dewsnuip, sr.

I was, at Saint Leonard's when the cablegram conveying "Greetings and well wishes from the A. O. Y. P. Z. to President Smith, his fellow laborers, and the young people in the British Isles" was received.

Joy filled our hearts as we realized that the young people of the church were moving out and demonstrating their willingness to cooperate in building up Zion.

We in the "Old Country" do not have the same privileges and opportunities to come together in large numbers as our more favored "cousins" do, in America. We cannot well emulate the A. O. Y. P. Z. We can and should seek to do our utmost.

Boys and girls of Great Britain, what are you doing? Are you alive to the opportunities before you? Will you rest content to read about these Zion Builders and not evince the slightest interest or desire to follow their lead?

Despite handicaps, I make bold to assert that within our ranks we have latent talent which only requires development to produce corresponding results. We should feel a pang of regret that we, the mighty nation which has produced so many noble and valiant men in the work of the church, are so far behind in this progressive movement of the church.

We should not be one whit behind. The church calls for your service now, to-day, not to-morrow, not when you are matured, but now, with all your youthful enthusiasm and vitalizing energy. Think of the stalwart men which this country has produced: Charles Derry, John W. Rushton, and many others, whose names are household words throughout Britain.

We should not be content to rest on the reputation of those who have preceded us. Rather should we esteem it a privilege to reach even higher points of vantage. We have the heritage of their service and experience to aid us. We should go forward.

It is possible that you are diffident, or do not realize your powers. Possibly you have been discouraged because the needs of the young people in Great Britain have been neglected. But let not this deter you. Possibly you have not realized your place in the church. Have you been content to go to church and be a looker on? Have you felt that all that was required of you was to attend the church services on Sunday?

With due respect to those who have preceded us, they have been so much absorbed in their effort with the grown-ups that they have neglected and overlooked the tremendous forces and possibilities resident in our young people. There have been some exceptions, but the other has been the rule.

But conditions have changed. The days of repression have passed. The coming day is yours. On every hand there are signs of an awakening on the part of the young people of Great Britain. In the course of my missionary labors I have been permitted to visit the various parts of the mission and have noted with satisfaction the awakening desire and purpose to work for the church.

A tremendous impetus to this movement has been given by the visit of our big Brother T. W. Williams. When we hear him portray the privileges and opportunities before us, it cannot help but impel every one of us to do our utmost.

The way in which Graceland has been opened to us is an inspiration. We now have a small group of earnest representatives of our land in that institution of learning. There is our Sister Madge, from the land of Bobby Burns; Doras, from Brum; Harold, from Cottonopolis; Sidney, of the ancient Britains; Frank and Harry, from Clay Cross. Our one and only Frank will soon join them. Cheering reports come from Graceland as to the way in which our representatives are comporting themselves.

All have not the opportunity to go to Graceland. Here and there, scattered throughout this mission, we have small groups of young men and women who are doing all they can to assist in this great forward movement of the church.

London, Birmingham, Sheffield, and Manchester Districts have all their quota of young people doing their best to become Zion Builders. I could mention individual examples of real consecrated service. We have a young army of recruits which will be equal to the demands of the years to come.

I wish to quote a significant statement recently made by Brother Elbert A. Smith, as reported in the SAINTS' HERALD for February 16, 1921:

Yesterday Brother R. V. Hopkins and I spent the afternoon in the woods in search of recreation. When we came to light our camp fire in the evening, do you imagine that we attempted first to kindle an enormous log? No, indeed, we had trouble enough as it was. We took a great many very small twigs with which to start our fire, and with their aid we presently had all the fire we needed.

Think of the thousands of little, apparently unimportant, perhaps tedious, tasks that have been done by hundreds of hands that made possible the great revival meeting of young people that closes to-day. This is true in the building of Zion. Zion will not be built by an Hercules, piling buildings up to the skies, but by a great many common people doing their day's work every day, as God wants it done.

The big wheels of the church cannot function properly unless the little wheels are in their places, contributing their quota to the forward movement which, like the clock, is progressive, not retrogressive. The keynote is cooperation.

Saint Leonard's as a school for prospective missionaries looms in the near future. Brother Daniel B. Sorden and wife are ready to assist in preparing our young people for this service. Our mission superintendent of Sunday school is one par excellence in her chosen calling. She is in a position to aid, guide, and instruct us in this field of service. She is ready and willing to sacrifice for others.

Our local officials of district and branch are realizing our needs. The missionaries are anxious to help. It is for the young people to take hold and become a power in the church.

Address of Welcome to President F. M. Smith

This address was presented to President Smith on the occasion of his visit to Manchester, England, October 2, 1920. It was prepared and read by W. R. Armstrong.

PRESIDENT SMITH,

Brother: We, the members of the Manchester District of the Church of Jesus Christ in England, welcome you as we did your saintly father, at Leeds, sixteen years ago. His name was then a household word, breathed even in the prayers of the children.

We welcome you to our city, which was the early home of our work in this land. In 1841 a conference was held in Carpenters' Hall, an old building recently demolished, when a report was presented, showing the membership in this country to be 5,814, and that 800 others had emigrated during the year. Volume One of the Millennial Star, which I hold in my hand, dated 1841, and edited by Parley P. Pratt, was published at 47 Oxford Street. In 1844 a Saints' procession was held here, when the mother of your speaker was one of a number who carried craped banners in honor of our martyred Prophet, your grandfather, and later, in 1876, there was a revolt against the priestly tyranny of a missionary elder named Snelgrove, backed up by Apostle Albert Carrington, of the European Mission, which ended in the secession of twenty-one members from the Utah Church, and the subsequent establishment of a branch of the Reorganization with sixteen members, two of whom are present at this meeting.

This one branch increased afterwards to ten, which were presided over by the late Joseph Dewsnup, sr., father of the present president of this district. A few of us have participated in and seen this work grow from a handful to several hundreds during the past forty-four years. Brother Thomas Taylor, of Birmingham, baptized the first members of the Reorganization in this city and organized the first branch of the church here.

It seems strange, Mr. President, that your visit should synchronize with the tercentenary of the departure of the Pilgrim Fathers in the Mayflower in 1620, which also commemorates a revolt against tyranny and injustice. In the former case it resulted in the establishment of our local church, and in the latter of the greatest republic the world has ever seen.

We welcome you to our city, which has a peculiar attraction for many Americans, from the scholarly President Wilson downwards. The old Romans had a camp here and it was said of them that "they built for eternity," as we trust you are doing. In later times came the fluffy, silky, white cotton, from the plantations of Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, and the Carolinas, to the looms of Lancashire. It came in the form of candle wicks at first—as a light bearer, if you please—just as you do, Mr. President, bearing the gospel message.

We welcome you to Manchester where "Cotton is king": the home of free trade, of music and painting, literature and song. Whilst you are amongst us we hope you may accomplish lasting good.

You come at a time "bewilderingly grave"; a time when the old lines are "shifting," when the things we thought permanent are shaken, when nothing but the word of the Lord seems likely to endure. Men were judged in the old days by the material in which they worked. Now they are judged by the thing which they produce.

As ministers of the gospel we are not asked so much about our doctrine, but, "What have you done? What are you doing?" The people have judged us hitherto as visionary and impractical, while we know our work to be eminently practical. Indeed, we believe you will do here, as you did in the world's metropolis recently, manifest to the satisfaction of all who hear, that our work meets every need, both for body and soul.

We hope, dear brother, that by this meeting we shall be drawn nearer to each other—religiously, politically, and racially, more than ever before. This thought was especially brought home to us on the occasion of a recent visit to our Southern Cemetery, where the braves of our American, British, Canadian, New Zealand, and Australian boys lie beneath the same green turf, awaiting the resurrection morn.

We saw that in the world's recent great war, our dear boys made the great sacrifice together, and our girls likewise left the comforts of home to nurse the sick and dying who had fallen on the stricken fields of France and Belgium, braving the awful perils of land and sea and air for the one great cause—the freedom of the race from tyranny.

At this juncture we are reminded of the memorable and comforting words of your fellow countryman, James Russell Lowell, who, whilst his country was in the throes of revolution said, "I take great comfort in God"; also of the Psalmist David, who said, "With great things, wondrous things, in righteousness wilt thou answer us, O God of our salvation, for thou art the trust of all the ends of the earth and of the sea afar off."

Well might Doctor Cadman, at a recent Mayflower gathering in Manchester, say that one third of the textbooks in the American schools should now be thrown away, for they had not told the truth about England, and instead of eighty or ninety per cent of her young men entering the universities of Germany, they should now come to Oxford and Cambridge or Victoria (Manchester) University, where our one-time Graceland president, Elder E. R. Dewsnup, graduated. How this harmonizes with your memorable address, delivered at Amhurst Park, Stamford Hill, London, last August, Mr. President!

All this seems to point to the welding together of the two great Anglo-Saxon countries for mutual benefit. Yes, the old animosities are dying. And now, in these times of peace, you come amongst us as a herald of the gospel of peace; as a successor of your father in the prophetic office, we hope with an inspired message.

You will find, Brother President, that some of the stalwart men and women, whom your father greeted with the shake of the hand, have passed to their rest; some have fallen in battle and left widows and children, while others have fallen from their steadfastness because iniquity abounded. We fervently hope, dear brother, that you may be instrumental in "strengthening that which remains, lest it die."

As we sustained your father with our daily prayers, so do we sustain you.

Amidst the wave of social upheaval and unrest that has swept over this and other lands of earth like the breeze over the prairie grass in the storm, the individual soul of the living Saints longs for peace and finds it not. May the Holy Spirit alight upon you as it did upon Jesus in Jordan, and enable you to deliver a message that shall fill the yearning soul with a sure and certain hope in the beyond.

In conclusion we pray, in this Manchester conference, that the spirit of true brotherhood shall possess us, that harmony shall prevail in all our meetings, and that love shall so truly fill each soul in the future, all that we have and are—our reputation and our money—may be intrusted to others' keeping without anyone suffering loss; and that you, the mes-

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

What Shall We Study?

We are often asked the question, "What would you suggest for study for our local? We want to keep in touch with the Women's Department ideals and would appreciate advice on the selection of our study material."

We herewith present a list of the study courses which the department is placing before our women, and we feel it affords a range wide enough to meet any ordinary taste or condition. It is a matter of pride with us that we have sisters who have given so generously of their time and talents in either writing these courses or preparing helps and outlines on the chosen texts.

Write to the Herald Publishing House in regard to all textbooks and study courses. Some of these are ready for mailing, others will be available in a short time, while still others are in the process of preparation.

Food and the Body, a consideration of the elements of nutrition and their action and use in the body. This course was originally in leaflet form, but has been revised and published as a pamphlet. It was written by Sister Mabel Knipschild Smith, and is the result of years of study and research, as well as presenting the gist of many lectures by specialists on the subjects treated. A textbook recommended to accompany this course is Feeding the Family, by Mary S. Rose.

Child Care, by Sister Lydia Thomas Wight. This course covers the simple, essential points in the daily care of children, and, beginning with three or four lessons on prenatal care, continues step by step with the growing and developing child up to approaching adolescence.

Training in Relief and Service. Nineteen lessons reviewing the history of charity and social welfare, and adapting modern methods to the needs and ideals of our church. This is in leaflet form. Family budget books recommended for increasing efficiency methods in the home, may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House, also.

Parents' and Teachers' Problems. A question outline covering the chapters of the textbook, Child Study and Child Training, by William B. Forbush, an acknowledged authority upon subjects dealing with children. These questions were prepared by Sister Maude Peak Parham, and are intended to help the teacher or student get the essential points out of each chapter, as well as to apply them to our church ideals concerning childhood.

Psychology. Question outlines prepared by Sister Dora Glines, assistant general superintendent of our department. They cover the text, The Mind and Its Education, by George Herbert Betts, and are intended to help the mother to understand her own child, and the principles by which she may gain its obedience and train its will and mind along other desirable lines.

Sociology. These are also question outlines prepared by Sister

Glines. They cover the text, Sociology and Modern Social Problems, by Charles A. Ellwood. As we are able to recognize our place in our social group, and the place of that social group in the universal plan of God, we are better qualified to teach and train our children for their place therein. Parents should strive for this broad outlook upon life and their individual responsibilities.

Mothercraft. Sister Etta Hunt, organizer in Zion, has prepared outlines covering that most excellent book, The Mothercraft Manual, by Mary L. Read. This text is used in the Mothercraft course in the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, as well as being widely used throughout the country for teaching the principles of true mothering.

In Preparation

Mothercraft for Girls. Sister Alice Mae Burgess has covered the same text, adapting it to the needs of our girls in their attempts to better prepare themselves for life's highest duties. The last General Conference requested the Women's Department to select a course in mothercraft for the girls of the church, until such time as the public schools of the country shall provide for this gravely needed instruction. These outlines are in line with that commission, and the monitors and leaders of Orioles and Temple Builders, as well as mothers throughout the church, will be glad of these pointed helps.

Civics. Outlines based on The New Civics, by Roscoe Ashley, are being prepared by Sister Dora Young, in charge of our citizenship division. These will help our women to connect their new suffrage power with the protection and welfare of their home interests.

Child Study. The splendid book already well known to our members, A Study of Child Nature, by Elizabeth Harrison, is to be covered with outlines and helps, also. Mrs. Harrison has a wonderfully fine attitude towards children and a parents' responsibilities and privileges. Those who read her book cannot but have a deeper appreciation of the beauty and value of child life.

Child Psychology. Using for text, The Individual in the Making, by E. A. Kirkpatrick, and in collaboration with the Sunday School Department, these outlines are being prepared by Sister Maude Peak Parham. Teachers of children as well as parents need to understand the principles by which a child's mind unfolds, and how his character may, with definite and intelligent purpose, be built up, step by step, instead of in the haphazard fashion too often seen used by those who have this responsibility.

Beginnings of Life. A question outline based on Plant and Animal Children: How They Grow, by Ellen B. Torelle. None can hope to teach children or young people regarding sex life and inspire within them a wholesome attitude towards and reverence for it, without having a background of knowledge concerning the laws governing. This is a simply-told story of the beginnings of life, and we are using it as a foundation for our work in social purity.

Bio-Physiology. Using for text, Biology of Sex, by T. B. Galloway. This is intended to follow the other books and gives a clear, concise, and wholesome discussion of the field, his deductions being largely in harmony with our highest ideals. Ministers as well as parents should qualify themselves to wisely guide and counsel our young people concerning these truths so vital to their purity of life, and ignorance of which is fraught with such grave dangers to soul and body.

senger of the everlasting covenant, may deliver to us in an earnest and fearless spirit the bread of life—the portion of meat in due season which we hunger after. Then, indeed, shall the British Mission really live and thrive again, and God willing, "bring forth fruit forty or even an hundred fold."

Who Is Jane's Teacher?

(By Anne Goodwin Williams, National Kindergarten and Elementary College.)

"Who is Jane's teacher?" we asked of the mother of a charming little eight-year-old-girl. The mother mentioned the name of Jane's teacher in the public school, and then together we performed some arithmetical problems to prove that "Miss Bennett" was only one of Jane's many teachers and that her teaching hours were less than those of some of the others.

Suppose, we said, that Jane sleeps from seven o'clock until seven; then in a year she has 4,380 waking hours—and only 1,000 of those hours are spent in school during the year. What of the 3,380 hours remaining? Who is teaching Jane, then? She is certainly learning. Sometimes her playmates are her teachers, with lessons sometimes helpful, sometimes harmful. The father's teaching hours are limited to Sundays and holidays, with an occasional evening hour; the Sunday-school teacher may get twenty-five hours a year, but of course the real teacher is the mother. Every day of the year she teaches her little daughter. Even during the child's sickness, lessons continue, lessons of patience, gentleness, and self-control.

If anyone were to ask of the school-teacher that she teach music, art, literature, domestic science, and manual training, she would know it was impossible. And yet, that is just what is demanded of the mother as an educator.

Music! Yes, she is teaching music when she sings at her work or helps Jane select good music for the phonograph instead of jazz. And as she arranges her home tastefully, with appropriate pictures, she is often unconsciously forming the child's taste in art.

"What stories shall I read to the children?" we kindergartners are asked again and again by eager mothers who feel that ordinary "trashy" stories are not good enough for the children who are so greatly influenced by the stories they hear and read.

The mother knows—this wise mother-educator who is asked to teach domestic science—how necessary it is for her little daughter to learn helpfulness in household duties. "I can't iron big things yet, but I can iron all the handkerchiefs; daddy's and mother's and John's and mine," said little Jane with pride.

Actions are judged right or wrong according to mother's approval or disapproval. She is, indeed, the great teacher of morals. "Slip in behind those people so the conductor won't see you," I heard a woman say to a little boy one day as I was boarding a crowded street car. He succeeded in "fooling the conductor" and in getting a definite lesson in cheating and in dishonor.

Religious training, as well as moral, is part of the great task and the joyous task of the teacher-mother. And is it not a glad sign for future America that so many mothers of our great country are, in their hearts, uniting in the prayer of "Motherhood" so beautifully given by Eleanor Robbins Wilson in a recent number of Good Housekeeping?

"So short a time at my command,
These children that I hold to-night;
God give me grace to understand,
Wisdom to guide their steps aright,
That I may be throughout the land,
A lamp unto their feet for light.

"So short a time do small hands cling,
With confidence of babyhood,
Let me not idly dream the thing,

But live the noble part I should,
That henceforth from such mothering
They shall instinctively seek good.

"So short a time for my embrace,
For love, cheer, comfort, lullabies,
God help me hallow the brief space
That turns to gold each sacrifice—
So surely does a mother's grace
Build her soul's mansion in the skies."

CHAPTER X

Association

1. Knowing that our thoughts move in a connected and orderly array, and not in a hit-and-miss fashion, and that they come one after the other as they are beckoned or caused, why should parents and teachers be much more careful to see that the child's environment be as desirable as possible?

2. It is difficult to teach elderly people new ways of doing; it is not easy for those who learn a foreign language late in life to speak the language with facility and ease. What is the psychological analysis for this?

3. What is necessary in order that an individual have good memory? In the light of this chapter, how can you assist your child greatly in learning the multiplication table or other things difficult for him to learn?

4. Who is considered the best thinker?

5. Since our conduct follows the trend of established association, what are we likely to do in great moral crises?

6. Give the fundamental law of association from the physiological and the psychological side.

7. Give three examples of association by contiguity.

8. Upon what is one's mental make-up dependent?

9. Why do evil thoughts, evil memories, and evil imaginations come into one's mind?

10. What is the psychological analysis of the after effects of "sowing wild oats" before one settles down to a correct life?

11. Why should parents or other people be very careful in regard to relating stories of misconduct before children or younger people?

12. What should all punishment have for its object?

13. What do you think of the method of assigning the committing of poetry, or Bible verses, or of a literary masterpiece as a punishment for offense?

14. Discuss the method used by some teachers in giving a large quantity of unorganized information encouraging pupils to cram for examinations in order to receive good grades.

15. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

Just Questions

[These are among many scores of queries which reach our desk. Who will write answers?—A. A.]

1. Should a parent listen to the complaints a child brings home with him from school or Sunday school? If not, how avoid injustice to the child? With what attitude should such complaints be met?

2. Should a child be allowed to play constantly with neighbor children?

3. What household tasks should be assigned to a child of six? Eight? Ten?

LETTERS AND NEWS

4. Should punishment ever take the form of having to do tasks about the home?

5. How can a very busy mother "supervise" her child's play when that child is old enough to wish to be out-of-doors and with playmates?

6. How can the Women's Department reach those women who do not care to improve their home conditions?

7. What should be the attitude of parents towards the various ones who are teaching their children in public school, Sunday school, music, etc.?

8. How can you get mothers of a community to join together in laying out a general program for recreation of children? How obtain general conformity to such a plan?

9. How can a parent obtain obedience from a child?

10. What can organized mothers do to make Sunday afternoons the interesting time it should be for children?

11. What definite means can a parent employ to awaken spiritual perceptions on the part of their children?

12. What is the "golden mean" between harshness and discipline?

13. What is the best plan to follow in regard to children's spending money? How train them to observe the law of tithing? Freewill offerings?

14. How can you teach one child to be unselfish and give up to his companion without the companion becoming unduly selfish and exacting?

15. How can a mother teach her boys to show her proper deference and the little acts of courtesy, without appearing selfish or desirous of special attention? How can this be done if the father is one who was never taught those same little acts of courtesy?

16. What should a mother demand from a daughter in her teens that will counteract the decided tendency to selfishness shown by the young people of to-day? How teach either a boy or girl of high school age to be respectful towards parents who have had less educational advantages?

The United States Veterans' Bureau Training Center, of Nauvoo, Illinois, requests discarded shoes for their shop training in shoe repairing. They will pay all transportation charges (freight), and will do work free of cost for any reputable charity cases indicated. They are doing an excellent work for the disabled soldiers, and no doubt some of our Saints will be in a position to help them as suggested.

A recent newspaper item which has come to our desk without the name of the paper being indicated, carries a rather striking title and subtitle, which are as follows:

Miracle Stage Now Reached in Scotch Revival. Merchants and Shopmen Reported So Fervent in Conversion That Prices Drop.

The Breckenridge, Missouri, Sunday school, Mrs. Charles Holmes writes, has only three families, but they are striving to do the best they can. They had church every first Sunday of the month until the first of the year which they then discontinued until it is a little warmer. Breckenridge is in Far West Stake, Missouri, and they are badly in need of a priest or elder to move things along. They meet in a private house.

Joppa, Illinois, has about twenty-six members who are regular in attendance at Sunday school, preaching, and prayer meeting, according to a recent letter from W. G. Barrett, of that place.

Encouraging Results in Wales

Much interest and a number of baptisms reported in a letter from Patriarch Richard Baldwin to the First Presidency.

We have worked from morning until midnight, either in the church, distributing tracts, or cards advertising our meetings, and after preaching in the evening we have had people come home with us and remain until midnight nearly every night, while we have tried to tell them the gospel story. We have also visited wherever we have been invited, and preached in homes to groups numbering ten or twelve, and then talked for two or three hours, answering questions.

During the last part of the first week of our series of meetings, we noticed, in one seat near the front, there were five people who seemed to be deeply interested, and we knew that they agreed with the story we were telling because many times during the sermon they uttered amens. On Friday evening they came again, bringing more people with them, and during our discussion, one young man of their number arose and said he would like to ask a question or two. He put two questions to us, and then said, "Well, from to-night I am a Latter Day Saint." We saw consternation written on the faces of those who were with him, but we did not know until after the service that he was their minister, and that they felt their church had gone to pieces when he arose and said that he was a Latter Day Saint, for they were suspicious of us, and thought that, in some way, we were connected with the Mormons. He invited us to his home on Saturday evening to take tea with them, and then he gathered together about twelve of these people who resided near his home, and we talked with them until midnight.

During the second week of our series of meetings they suspended all meetings of their church in order that they might attend the rest of our series of meetings, and become acquainted with our doctrines.

We found that they have a membership of eighteen people, and an attendance at their meetings of about seventy-five, and they have been meeting in a schoolhouse, which they rent. They have no affiliation whatever with any other church and have tried to build a church after the plan laid down in the New Testament. They did not know what to call their church, but they thought, since the people of Christ had been called apostles, they would call it the Apostolic Church, but it has no connection with the Apostolic Church as we know it. They have met Tuesday and Thursday evenings for prayer, and we believe God has been blessing them, and that he has led them to the light of the gospel.

We labored with them continually each night for two weeks, and succeeded in bringing them to a realization that as far as they had gone they had done well, but there was still more for them to do.

They invited us to their Christmas dinner on Monday, the 26th, (as that was the day they celebrated Christmas here,) and in the afternoon we met with several of these people and talked with them until after ten o'clock. They are a most earnest people, and just sit at our feet to drink in the gospel, as is evidenced by the fact that they sat and listened to us expound the truth for eight hours, without interruption.

As a result of this labor, ten of them signified their desire to be baptized and unite with us, and as Tuesday was a holiday, we hired a motor and journeyed to Carway, and there, in the Baptist Church, where permission has been granted us to use their font at any time we need it, we baptized them, and also another young lady not connected with them, who had asked to be baptized.

There are more of these people who were away, who have asked us to baptize them. We expect to do this the latter part of this week or early next week. Among this number is a young man about twenty-two years of age, who does considerable street preaching. Also he has an excellent baritone voice which he is cultivating. He was away at Maesteg on Tuesday, as he did not know the people were to be baptized, and he preached there on the streets and sang to the people, and he said several people were interested. We have explained to him that he will have to give this up until he has been authorized by the church to preach, and we are sure that God will soon see fit to call him, for he will be a wonderful asset to the church.

Ten of the eleven baptized were adults, but the one child, a boy of ten years, is a marvel. He knows the Bible, and has faith in Christ, and talks continually along gospel lines. He has a clear, soprano voice, and sings like a nightingale. One of the young ladies is an organist, and they are all singers, and love music. These people are tithe payers, and as soon as they were baptized wanted to know how much they owed the Lord, and to whom they should pay it. They believe that if they do not pay their tithing they are breaking a divine law, just as much as if they broke any other command of God.

Besides these people baptized yesterday, and those whom we have already mentioned, there are at least four others who have asked for baptism. One young man followed us almost a mile on Sunday night, after we had preached, as we were walking with one of the sisters, and when she left us he crossed the street and told us he wished to be baptized. He had attended nearly every meeting we held during the two-week series. He is now a member of the Independent Congregational Church.

Another young man who lives at Maesteg became interested, and has asked for baptism, and as soon as he can get away from his work, he is coming to Llanelly to be baptized.

Then another young lady, of excellent character, is to be baptized. She was nursing on Tuesday, and could not come with the people, but we expect she will be at liberty early next week.

Sister Edwards's son, a young man thirty years of age, has also asked for baptism.

This series of meetings was such a success that we have planned another series to begin on January 15, as there were people who followed nearly every sermon during the two-week series just closed, and we feel confident that there are more honest souls to be gathered in. We are going to try to get Brother T. W. Williams to come and help us with this series. These meetings will carry us up to the first Saturday and Sunday in February, the dates fixed for the convening of the district conference of South Wales, at Llanelly, and we feel it would be an opportune time for Brother Williams to come here.

We are rejoiced to think that from these people who were baptized we are to have help, as we have had to do everything alone. Sister Baldwin has had twenty children each Sunday at Sunday school, ranging from five to twelve years, and it has been quite a task for her to take care of them, owing to the difference in ages, and on last Sunday she divided the class into three groups, each one making a nice little class. Therefore, it will be quite a help for her to have these people help with the teaching of the lessons. She plans to organize the Temple Builders, and has already six interested girls. She intends to use three of these young ladies as teachers, and in order for them to become better acquainted with the doctrines of the church, she plans to teach the senior lesson to them, as a study, once a week in their Temple Builders meeting, devoting about a half hour of the evening for this work, and then use the remainder of the evening to develop the social life among them, which seems to be crushed out of the lives of the young girls of this country. It has made us sad to see how hard they have to work, and do not have any such advantages as our American girls do. She has invited Mr. Price's wife, the leader of the people baptized, a fine young woman, to meet with the Temple Builders, and when we leave here she will be able to carry on this part of the work.

Tuesday, when we visited Carway and Pontyeates, the Saints again requested that we hold a series of meetings there, as they have several people interested, but have had no missionary there to preach for a long time. We have promised them a series just as soon as we can see our way clear to go there. There are four there now who are ready for baptism, and each one of the Saints desires patriarchal blessing, as they told me they had never had a patriarch visit them, and they have desired their blessing for many years.

Our work in this land, thus far, has been remarkable. God has blessed us wonderfully in our ministrations. We receive, almost daily, letters from the friends we made in Manchester, and at Christmas they remembered us with many gifts, and they ask when we are coming back there to hold more meetings.

Getting Acquainted in Hawaii

In a letter to the Presidency, E. B. Hull writes the following from Honolulu.

The work here is about the same as at the last report. I am beginning to learn more of the habits of the people. They are very shy.

The last of the royalty of the Hawaiians died last week, and a big time is being enacted by the natives. Prince Kuhio Kalaniana'ole was removed from his home in Waikiki last night with weird, ancient customs. They had a parade at twelve o'clock (midnight), passing near our home. Rare relics were carried in the procession, such as feathered ahulas, for this is the last time that these relics of the ancient regime can be paraded on behalf of a scion of royalty of monarchy days. Some of these feathered cloaks are priceless, as the birds from which they obtained these feathers are no longer on the island. In the parade men carried lighted torches, made of kukui nuts. Surrounding the vehicle in which the body of the prince was carried were the royal kahilis. This strangely weird procession of the dead was the antithesis of the pomp and panoply and splendor of the kings and princes who are alive and make their royal progress in the blaze of the sun.

The body is to lie in state in the old Kawaiaha'o church all this week, where former members of the royal families have been. This church is near Queen Liliuokalani's palace, which is now the Territorial capitol. Then on Saturday he will be removed to the throne room in the capitol building, and on Sunday afternoon to the royal mausoleum where the Kamehameha and Kalakaua dynasties are buried. The funeral procession on Sunday afternoon will be a big event; the army and navy will be represented by soldiers and sailors from the forts and ships. Prince Jonah Kuhio Kalaniana'ole was the last male representative of the royal line of Hawaiian chiefs. He was the delegate from these islands to the United States Congress. He was elected in 1902. The capitol building, the consulates, and all public and many private buildings have flags at halfmast. The prince is being mourned for as if he had been reigning on his throne. He was well liked by all the Hawaiians and many of the haoles (whites).

Last night we had the young people's club at the mission house, eighteen of the finest young people you could find anywhere. After election of officers and other business, refreshments were served, and then games were the order. Volley and hand ball are among the games that can be played in the mission yard at night. On Friday nights when the Waikiki Religio meets in the mission house yard, the young people (younger than the young people's club) have a good time playing games, as the mission yard is large, and well suited for outdoor sports of this kind.

President Smith Visits Utah

Saturday, January 21, President Smith arrived in Salt Lake City from San Francisco and other coast cities. This was the beginning of several very busy days for him and several very profitable days for the work in Utah.

Saturday night was spent in renewing acquaintances with the missionary force of the Utah District. His visit had been planned ahead, and the announcement that he would speak on Sunday morning and evening appeared in all three of the Salt Lake papers as a news item and also in the announcements of Sunday services.

Sunday came and we anxiously awaited the results of our personal invitations and the news items and were much gratified to see the church full to seating capacity by eleven o'clock. We predicted then that the church would be inadequate for the evening services and such proved to be the case. At night the main auditorium was filled by seven o'clock, and the people kept coming and coming and coming, until the gallery was full, the anteroom was full, people sat on the rostrum, chairs were placed in the aisles, and half a hundred stood up. The keen interest of the audiences was manifested by the marked attention which they gave to both sermons. Both were referred to by many with various adjectives indicating their appreciation. Many thought they were too short. At the close of each service a little reception was held in which a large portion of the audience came forward to meet President Smith and express their pleasure at having the opportunity to meet him and hear his message. Both sermons were on a phase of stewardship. It was a great day for the work here in Salt Lake City.

It was decided after Brother Smith came here that it would be well to speak in Ogden Monday night. Realizing that the church there would be inadequate, the brethren got busy and, to the surprise of all, secured the Ogden tabernacle, which has a seating capacity on the main floor of about one thousand. We were all dubious as to whether we could make a showing in so large a building, there being only about one hundred of our members there, and such a short time in which to advertise the meeting. However, by reason of the excellent advertising secured under the direction of the publicity department there, our fears were pretty well dispelled by the hour of meeting. The people came from all directions, and it was reported by a local paper the next day that a capacity house had turned out to hear President Smith. Again the subject was stewardship, and again the people gave marked attention, which is the best indicator of interest. At the close of the service several hundred came forward to meet Brother Smith and express their appreciation of his message.

We give herewith a report of President Smith's Ogden sermon as printed by the Ogden Standard Examiner for the following day.

On Tuesday we went up to visit the University of Utah and call on some friends of President Smith and some professors who had been to hear his sermon here on Sunday night and expressed deep appreciation and interest in the subject as presented by him. Also we visited some institutions organized for social work, to investigate their plans and methods of operation.

President Smith entrained on Wednesday for Independence and left us feeling that his visit here had given the work a great impetus. The prospects for our work here are brighter than they have ever been before, and we are enthusiastically trying to advance the cause. The report follows.

With much hope,

M. A. ETZENHOUSER, President Utah District.

Report of an address delivered in the Ogden tabernacle, Monday evening, January 23, by Doctor Frederick M. Smith, grandson of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Reprinted from The Ogden Standard-Examiner.

Declaring that the time was near at hand when they that will not take up their swords against their neighbors must need flee to Zion for safety, and that the great mission of the church to redeem Zion had been neglected, Doctor Frederick M. Smith, president of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church, delivered an address in the Ogden tabernacle last night upon the subject, "Stewardship and the redemption of Zion."

The visit of Doctor Smith, who is a grandson of the Prophet Joseph Smith, to this city, attracted a capacity audience in the tabernacle. At the conclusion of the service, Doctor Smith shook hands with the majority of those in attendance, when many expressed their "pleasure at meeting a descendant of the Prophet Joseph."

The service was conducted by M. A. Etzenhouser, of Salt Lake, president of the Utah District. In introducing the speaker to the congregation, Mr. Etzenhouser said he realized that many in the congregation had assembled because of their interest in the posterity of Joseph Smith.

Holds Congregation

Doctor Smith, in his opening remarks, said he did not care if he had the sympathy of the congregation, his was the responsibility to deliver the message and he intended to deliver it. For about forty-five minutes Doctor Smith held the interest of the large congregation while he discussed his subject. He is a man of large stature and a forceful speaker.

Doctor Smith said that since a boy he had been looking forward to the redemption of Zion. When he referred to Zion he meant just what the Prophet Joseph Smith had said it was, both a location and the pure in heart. He said the prophecies of his grandfather indicated a time would come when contention and wars would be general and that they who would not take up their swords must flee to Zion for safety. He said this indicated a time would come when the power of governments would be minimized. If the prophecy was inspired it would be fulfilled.

Some of the signs that indicated that such a condition was beginning to come to pass were seen in the decay of governments. Several of the powerful governments of Europe had changed over night and there was not a government in existence to-day that had charge during the great world war.

Says Society Is "Rotten"

The moral conditions of society to-day, which he termed as "rotten," was another indication that the times of trouble were near at hand, Doctor Smith said. He declared that America had made no improvements in its morals during the past few years. Marriages, he said, had become degenerated, a mere contract of convenience, and can be as easily broken as any other contract. Ministers of all churches are afraid to speak out upon the great evil, he said, and declared that the pulpit was used for entertainment and not for the teaching of religion.

The easy means for both marriages and divorces in America were denounced by Doctor Smith, who said he was glad to note that in some States legislatures were seeking to minimize the evil by passing laws which made both marriage and divorce more difficult.

Modern Dance Denounced

Continuing his tirade against the immoral forces that are at work to-day, Doctor Smith denounced in great severity the modern American dances. He said both the modern dance and dance music were barbaric. Continuing he said, "We must frankly admit that attendance at modern dances is actuated by the lusts of the flesh."

Unemployment, poverty, and suffering at one end of the social scale, and wealth and opulence at the other end, was commented upon by Doctor Smith. The unemployment in America, the richest country in the world, was a positive disgrace, he declared. He called attention to conditions existing in New York, the richest city in America. Here he said one can find the most distressing cases of poverty brought about by unemployment. New York also has its idle men who are so rich that their chief concern is how to spend their income to save it from piling up upon them.

"There is a decay in the social fabric of America that will affect it from top to bottom, both economically and politically," Doctor Smith said.

As a remedy against the oncoming destruction because of the immoral forces that are at work, Doctor Smith declared the church must enter upon its most sacred duty, "the redemption of Zion." The work, he said, had been neglected too long. The church, he said, should be social in its work. It was a mistake to think the church was established for discussions on theological questions and degrees of glory in the hereafter. The work of the church was to save humanity, and the church must awake to a social consciousness that the way to God lies in service to man.

Explains Stewardship

Doctor Smith said he had kept in touch with the social movements of the day and had read much literature upon the subject, but he had failed to find any book wherein the subject was taught so clearly as in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. He said the keystone of the arch of the gospel is stewardship. He defined a stewardship briefly as meaning "service from any man according to his capacity, and rewards according to his needs." "Stewardship," he said, "was not communism, it was not socialism. It was not possible for all to have things in common, neither was it possible for all men to become equal. But the ideal condition was that men should be taught to love their work so that it might become a pleasure instead of a burden, that every man should labor according to his capacity and receive rewards according to his needs."

Zion, he said, would be redeemed by consecrated service. Members of the church should lay their stewardship before the bishop and consecrate their service and their increase to the church. He called attention to the teachings of Christ that men should love God with all the powers of their beings and their neighbors as themselves. Man cannot live alone, he must have concern for his fellows, he declared.

Doctor Smith explained that the Reorganized Church was purchasing property in Independence, Missouri, for the redemption of Zion, that the property would be held by the church with the church membership assigned to their rightful portions.

The Reorganized Church has a membership of more than 100,000 and maintains a missionary force in all parts of the world, numbering approximately 240. These missionaries are serving life terms in the mission field.

Lamoni Stake

[From an interesting account of the annual business meeting in Lamoni we excerpt the following items for this week, since we have not space to print the report in full, and will print the letter entire next week.—EDITORS.]

The budget plan of finances presented by the branch presidency was approved.

Ordination of the following brethren to offices indicated was approved: Roy C. Foreman and Glaude L. Smith to the office of deacon; Willard C. Moon to office of teacher; Rupert A. Wight to office of priest; Joseph Braby, Gustav A. Platz, H. H. Gold; Frank McDonald, and Leslie S. Wight to office of elder.

A proposition to put athletic courts on the grounds near the church has been under discussion for some time, and after considerable interesting debate was adopted by an overwhelming vote.

A proposition to use the Lamoni high school building for Sunday school use was approved. Senior classes will use the new space as arrangements are made. Meetings there on all mornings except sacrament Sunday are to be arranged for the adolescents.

Island Young People Send Greetings to Young People in Zion

The following is the English translation of a communication in Tahitian sent for publication in the Herald.

To the Young People in Zion: We rejoice greatly in the news which we have heard concerning your activities in behalf of the work of God in the land of Zion; especially are we glad to hear of the wonderful meetings which you have been holding, and in which you have become united as a great army of the Lord.

And so we desire to write to you, telling of the work in this far-away island. While we are distant from you in the body, we are trying to live close to you in the spiritual things, so that we may all work together for the great task of these last days.

Because of this real desire to be one with you, we have organized a society for the young people similar to that which you have in the city of Zion. We have meetings every week, and learn the fundamentals of Zion, and what we all must do before we can expect to see Zion ready to meet the Savior. We also have programs in which we sing the songs of Zion, and give readings, and have short talks on gospel topics. We enjoy these meetings very much, and feel that we are becoming better acquainted with the work of the Master.

Our great desire is to see you face to face in Zion, and to mingle with the Saints in that far-away land. Pray for us, that we may accomplish our part in the building up of Zion, and in assisting in the gospel work in these islands of the sea.

THE SOCIETY OF ZION BUILDERS,

Maria Almond,
Lucie a Fawura, Committee.

TARONA, PAPEETE, January 7, 1922.

[Brother Frank B. Almond writes that the society of Zion Builders who send the above communication is building an addition to the church building in Papeete for the meetings of the society, young people's prayer meetings. It is made of reeds like small bamboo.—EDITORS.]

Madison, Wisconsin

If the branch here continues to develop in the coming year as it has done in the last, Rand McNally will have to place a red line round the Four Lake City so the eye of the saintly traveler may more readily be drawn to this center of progression.

We are fast becoming a real live branch, with most everybody working. Those that are not working have either left the city, or died. The young people of the Religio have organized a basket ball team, with Brother Charles Hield as coach.

Social parties are also held every two weeks for the young people, and skating parties with a wiener roast as the main attraction, are frequent.

We are trying to let our light shine on the face of a black-board (which is set up on a vacant lot facing the main street) upon which we chalk our church notices, epitome of faith, verses of Scripture, etc., which seem to attract some attention at least.

CHARLES F. CLARKE.

ALVA, OKLAHOMA, January 24, 1922.

Editors Herald: We are entering well upon the labors of the New Year; the first month will soon be past. I wish to use the columns of your valuable paper through which to make a special appeal to the Saints throughout Western Oklahoma, the Panhandle of Texas, and Eastern Mexico.

It has pleased the powers that be that I should continue my labors with you, and I count myself fortunate to have the privilege of laboring with those who have proved themselves loyal to the work that has been intrusted unto us. We are confident that you will not slacken your interest and energies in the work. May the ever gracious God give you even a stronger determination to push forward the work of the church in this field.

We appreciate greatly the support you have given the church heretofore, but there are present needs that must be considered. We have confidence that you will rally to the cause and impart of your substance as God has prospered you, whether it be great or small, and thus the truth will prevail. Even if the contribution be small, it will be of valuable assistance; let us have your support now!

Funds, whether in tithes or offerings, may be sent directly to our Bishop's agent, L. D. Dyke, Eagle City, Oklahoma, or I will receipt you for it as his solicitor. Just a little from each will keep the work moving.

Let us make the present year one in which the truth may triumph and in which the name of our God shall be made honorable.

Very truly,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Not Foreigners

In reference to a report in the Herald of January 18, 1922, concerning the students from Graceland College, who spent their Christmastide here:

I beg to state that the word foreign is hardly a becoming substitute for brethren in Christ, which is the only suitable term for Latter Day Saints to use concerning fellow members.

The word foreign can be understood to mean alien, unconnected, not belonging to, besides the term from another country.

One of the brothers from Australia made this point very clear in his short talk to the Saints here prior to the students' departure. He inferred that irrespective of our color or nationality, we have all been baptized into the one faith, church, and kingdom of God.

Yours very sincerely,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

NORMAN ISSOTT.

Slides for Canadians

I have just received lantern slides on the Book of Mormon, which I believe are very interesting and can be used for local and missionary work. I recommend that the Canadian Saints get in touch with the undersigned, so the above slides can be secured direct, without having the trouble of going through the customs in each case. Any person familiar with custom house work will certainly recognize the inconvenience they will avoid if they can get the slides on this side of the line.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: Having received letters from friends asking me of my welfare, and being personally acquainted with hundreds of Saints, I am imposing on the good nature of the HERALD by using its column as the medium of furnishing a few items concerning my work for the past year.

In February, 1921, I resigned my work as chaplain at the Sanitarium and in the month following began work with the Bible committee preparing the Inspired Version for a teacher's edition. I labored at this task till the adjournment of the committee in the latter part of June. In the four months I prepared the scriptural references for over five hundred topics, including headings and subheadings. I was then appointed to labor as a missionary in the Far West Stake. Owing to circumstances I did not attend any reunion, but instead for a few weeks took up a course of study to prepare myself more thoroughly for a certain phase of church work. Then I entered my field of labor and took up again the old life of traveling among strangers and seeking to interest them in the gospel of Christ. It all seemed a bit strange, after nearly a decade of standing work, but I did not shrink from my duty and succeeded in making an opening in a schoolhouse twenty miles from Independence.

I found the people in this place very ignorant of our message, though one of the trustees of the house had lived many years in a town where we have a branch; and a young Baptist student knew only what his grandmother, who lived in Warsaw when Joseph Smith was killed, had told him. In this place I was allowed the use of the schoolhouse on Sunday afternoons only, so it was slow work to present the gospel of the cross and tell the people what they must do in order to be saved; but, considering the location of the place, the effort was worth while. Going out on the other car line, I attempted to make an opening in three other villages, but found no building suitable for meetings. I visited and distributed tracts, and learned that about the only way to reach many hundreds of people in the regions round about Zion is to do personal work and hold meetings on the public squares. In my judgment this sort of work should have been done long ago, for we have hundreds of automobiles in Independence which should be mustered into such service. The only thing necessary is organization and the willing spirit.

In the meantime it was possible for me to take up a course of lectures on the great philosophies, given under the auspices of the university center. From the mixture of truth and error I think I was enabled to select some valuable teaching. I may say that it was somewhat amusing, though not at all surprising, to have the professor give a lecture on Henri Bergson, who completely contradicts the once sworn-by theories of the materialistic philosophers. It is all in the game, but it reveals the absurdity of men boasting of their great accumulation of knowledge, which is composed often of much contradictory stuff, which the passing of time eclipses by advancing more plausible theories. Doubtless Bergson is much more reliable than Spencer and Darwin, but all are far afield from truth if they disagree with the word of God.

In the fall it was possible for me more fully to occupy by teaching a Sunday school class at the Stone Church at 9.30 a. m., which did not interfere with my field work. We had a large and intensely interested class in church history. The truth was given as it is, and openings made for the proper defense when necessary. This class was sufficiently interested in my work to pay my fare to and from my field until the nature of my work made it necessary for me to resign from my teaching. On Wednesday afternoons it was also possible, for a while, for me to teach a group class of sisters. This work was very pleasant and profitable, I judge, to the class, who appreciated my work sufficiently to give me a valuable present, as well as remember my home.

Dear friends, I am still in the faith. The divine arm that God placed under me many years ago is still there. He has never failed me; he never will.

Thus far this fall and winter the weather in this part of the country has been delightful. We do not mind the taste of the terrible Missouri River water, as we did. The great West, of which this place is only the rim, still interests us. We are well and always have been. Our work is out where the West begins. We are here in the interests of God's work, and as members of his kingdom shall go on doing right as he reveals to us the right.

Thus, with my extensive preparation for greater usefulness, the new openings, the three other towns tracted, the use of my pen for the church paper and my voice in preaching in Zion when requested, my Sunday school class, Wednesday class, gospel talks, lecture course, three baptisms, etc., I feel that my six months have not been wasted, and that I can go on with a conscience void of offense towards God or man.

Yours ever interested, and hoping to hear from you again,

RALPH W. FARRELL.

Preliminary to the beginning of the series of services at Pontiac, Michigan, by Elders W. I. Fligg and Matthew W. Liston, they used, with other advertising the following in the want ad section of the Daily Press: "WANTED, male help, 500 people to hear Elder Fligg at 10.45 and 7.30, and Elder Liston at 2.30. Help pack the Central Theater. Questions answered on doctrinal subjects."

Kansas City Stake

The second stake musical institute, under the auspices of the general Department of Music of the church, was held at the Grandview Church Sunday, the 22d, Argentine, East Argentine, Armourdale, Armstrong, and Grandview churches participating. The rehearsals have been held during the past month or more under the direction of Bernice Griffith, stake chorister. As a result of the effort a splendid day was enjoyed, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, it being quite cold, and icy underfoot. Special numbers were rendered by local talent, such as violin and cornet solos, duets, and choruses. The principal addresses were by Brother Arthur H. Mills, morning and evening.

A special feature of the afternoon service was a round table session in the interests of music. Lula M. Sandy, in charge of the Women's Department of the stake, addressed the afternoon meeting. The pastors of Chelsea and Grandview churches also gave addresses at this meeting, in the interest of music in the church. Capacity audiences were in attendance both morning and evening.

These institutes are filling a long-felt want among the musicians of the stake. Truly, "Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast," as well as in harmonizing and bringing together the latent musical talent of the church.

President Tanner is kept very busy in the discharge of the many duties that are constantly made a part of his work as president of the stake, teaching classes in the Women's Department, administering to the sick, and otherwise directing in the affairs of the stake. He was the morning speaker at Central on the 22d, and broke the bread of life at 7.45 at Chelsea.

A partial report of the activities of the Religio was secured from the field worker, F. J. Cleveland. While he has not the time to give this department the attention it needs on account of his business, yet the young people of the various locals are ready to carry out any new enterprise, in keeping with the rules of the society, that could be suggested to them.

At one local an attendance of seventy-five is noted. The methods pursued are very similar to those which have obtained in the past, viz, a study hour, using the Religio Quarterly as a basis for the lesson, which is followed by a program consisting of music, educational contests, addresses on educational subjects, declamations, etc. A new local has been organized which gives promise of successfully carrying out the above outline in their work. The social feature necessary in carrying on church work successfully is aided materially by the Religians of the stake.

The cradle roll department has begun to find itself in the way it should function. At a recent meeting the new mothers of the stake with their wee tots and brand new babies were brought together partly by the assistance of one of the good sisters who kindly loaned her auto for this purpose. The scene of the affair was laid in Mount Washington, at the home of an interested mother who acted as hostess. A clinic competent to judge was ready to pass upon the merits and demerits of the subjects presented. For the enlightenment of the mothers, the little Tootsies submitted to a close examination, were measured to see how tall, heads measured, chests also, color of hair and eyes noted, and finally placed in the balances, to be weighed; if found wanting, expert advice given as to diet, temperature, quietude, etc. All this for better babies.

You may rest assured that none of the good sisters forgot to be sociable. There was plenty to sustain the inner woman. Good music by local talent and addresses by Sisters Walter

W. Smith and Lula M. Sandy on "Church clinic work" and "Understand the child."

The missionary force is mighty persistent. They feel justified in continuing another week at Second and Armourdale churches. Four were baptized at Second. Elder George Jenkins, upon the announcement that he would introduce an expose of Mormonism, drew a big crowd Sunday night at Armourdale. He is supported by a splendid orchestra and chorus of local talent that is really commendable to so small a congregation.

One of the unique departures in church work is the organization of men in the stake known as the Men's Progressive Club. Its chief aim is the mutual help intended to be given to any of its members, in a material way, finding situations for those unemployed, to create or stimulate efficiency. Its members are those in professional and business occupations, as well as men in other walks of life; Bank tellers, managers, clerks, craftsmen, and those who have no regular occupation. The club has for its president an attorney, Brother James H. McVay, and the secretary is Roy Howery. The stake president and bishop are advisory officials.

The club has been successful in carrying out its work, but being young and growing, it expects to be more useful as it becomes more able to do. There is this in its favor: It need not hesitate to recommend any of the young men of the church, as they are usually free from the vicious use of intoxicants, tobacco, and cigarets, therefore are the kind of men that are sought for by employers.

The club meets the second Tuesday of each month at Central Church.

The Women's Department has instituted Bible class study at several of the churches held on some week-day afternoon, and one of the best teachers the stake affords to teach those who come. A course of lessons for the season is outlined. The aim is that better teachers may be had for the various departments of stake work and its auxiliaries. The classes reporting claim an excellent attendance and attention. An eagerness to learn is manifested. Professor Hugo Helmstadt, director of the stake orchestra work, gave a musical program last Tuesday evening at the Grandview church and entertained a nice turnout with several splendid numbers.

Forty-five dollars were raised for the Christmas offering fund by the North Montgall Saints with a box social.

Wiley, Colorado

We are all trying to keep the work going here, although we find the great financial depression is in the Arkansas Valley as well as other places. But we feel the Lord is taking care of his people, and has blessed the Saints in a great many ways, and especially when the elders have been called to administer to the sick.

We had a contest in our Sunday school to see who could bring the most new members into the Sunday school.

We have had some fine programs at Religio. The members choose captains and then the captains choose sides and named them "Boosters" and "Erodelphians," and gave alternate programs. The young folks take much more interest in the Religio if we have a good program.

At our election of officers, George Fletcher was elected president, and we feel with our officers to boost that our Religio will still keep growing.

We are having good attendance at most of our meetings, and hope we may all live worthy of our Master's watchcare.

Logan, Iowa

Our membership is now about two hundred and forty-eight, and for a town with a population of but sixteen hundred, we feel that we do not need to be discouraged.

With the entrance of a new year an increased interest is manifest—every service being well attended and a good spirit prevalent throughout.

We, as others, have our little ups and downs, but soon all is smoothed away by the sweet spirit of the Master, whose great love disperses the cloud and heals the wounds and brings peace and love to all.

Brother W. R. Adams is acting shepherd over the flock and we feel that the sheepfold will indeed thrive under his leadership.

Our auxiliaries are also progressing nicely. Brother Fred Lanpher, acting as superintendent of Sunday school, and Sister Ora Butterworth Derry, president of Religio, are doing commendable work. Our Religio has indeed grown the past year and much interest is apparent.

So we feel hopeful for the work at Logan and feel that it is going to continue to grow.

Sister Rose Adams, who for so many years was sorely afflicted with cataracts, causing her blindness, underwent an operation last year under the hands of Doctor Gifford, and through the mercies of God the operation was successful. I'm sure the many friends and those interested in Sister Adams's affliction will rejoice with her that her eyesight is restored.

We feel we have much to be thankful for and are desirous of doing all that may fall to our hands in rendering service to the Lord's work.

Sincerely,

OLLIE DERRY.

Western Colorado

Beginning the New Year, Brother Yates, his daughter Evalena, and myself, opened a series of meetings in this place. They continued for seven nights with the most interest ever manifested in this little town. Many are interested to the extent that I believe when Brother Yates comes again they will be ready to be baptized. We had to discontinue on account of the district conference.

District conference convened at Delta, Colorado, January 14 and 15, with about one hundred and fifty present. It was one of the most wonderful conferences I have attended in this district in the six years that I have been in the church. The wonderful way in which the sermons were delivered showed that God's power was present in a great degree.

Friday night a sermon was delivered by our missionary, J. E. Yates, in that manner mentioned above. Saturday was a busy day for all present. The morning hours were for Sunday school work and the afternoon for church business meeting. At this time Brother Chester Young resigned as our district president. His request was granted, but the Saints surely hate to see him leave our district. In his stead we elected John T. Scannell, of Durango. He is a worthy man and we ask all the Saints to help him and let him help you in the onward progress of this gospel work.

Brother David S. Boyd, our bishop's agent, also resigned, which was accepted. We elected George Caviness, of Durango, in his stead, pending the approval of the Bishop.

Your writer was elected publicity agent for the district, pending the general publicity agent's approval.

Saturday evening was given over to the young people of the district in charge of Mrs. N. E. Slick, women's organizer, and Evalena Yates. They had a fine program worked out which brought forth some of the wonderful young talent we have in our midst. This is a work that has long been needed, so let each and every one put his best efforts forward.

Conference voted to have a reunion this summer, also to raise money to purchase a tent for missionary work. Brother L. Park, of Delta, George Caviness, of Durango, and myself were appointed the committee to raise the money and purchase the tent. So, should any wish to contribute to this fund, they may send their donations to any of the above committee.

Sunday morning, Sunday school was held at 10 a. m., in charge of district and local officers. Eleven o'clock found our supervisor, J. D. Curtis, delivering one of his wonderful and powerful sermons, which was enjoyed by all. At this time the writer made an address in behalf of the church publications, asking all to give their support by ordering or renewing their papers at once.

Prayer and sacrament services were at 2 p. m. All the Saints were on the job and responded well in their duty.

At 3.45 p. m. Sister N. E. Slick addressed the Saints in behalf of Women's Department on child care and training. Again at 8 p. m. Brother Yates delivered another sermon to the Saints and a large number of nonmembers.

A New Year is again at our service, therefore, let you and me try to make it a better year, financially and spiritually, than any year that has past, that we may see God's work roll on to victory.

Yours in God's work,

N. E. SLICK.

RIDGWAY, COLORADO, Box 233.

Topeka, Kansas

Elder A. P. Crooker, who has faithfully served the Topeka Branch as president for four and a half years, is now president of a branch at Fairfield, Nebraska. Saints there are driving sixty miles to service.

We are glad to know his efforts are not all lost to the Northeastern Kansas District, as his work as a traveling salesman is so arranged that he can visit practically every branch in the district every three weeks.

Elder Crooker has preached in every branch in New York State. He assisted in organizing the first Sunday school in Waterloo, Iowa. Never has there been a time when his work has kept him from the work of the church. At one time when the thermometer stood at a hundred and ten in the shade he assisted Elder Sparling, a missionary at Clinton, Iowa, in a ten-day meeting and accomplished as much for his firm as would ordinarily take a month. He has preached in Traverse City, Michigan; Des Moines, Iowa; Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Dallas and Houston, Texas; Fargo, North Dakota; Trinidad, Fort Collins, Delta, and Colorado Springs, Colorado.

On January 8, District President J. A. Thomas, of Troy, Kansas, preached both morning and evening. There was much vital interest to Saints in both sermons and especially the central thought in the evening, "Am I by my daily life betraying Christ?"

On January 15, Elder Ira G. Whipple occupied in the morning, and Elder Lyman W. Fike, of the missionary force, in the evening. He visited Saints during the week and preached again on January 22. Held two missionary services at the home of Brother and Sister Griffin in North Topeka. His co-laborer, Elder John Ely, of Independence, Missouri, held services during the week at Scranton, Kansas.

The Women's Department held their business meeting January 19, and organized in harmony with instruction from the general department. Sister A. P. Crooker was elected president. Sister H. C. Pitsenberger will have charge of the work as social visitor and will be glad to receive items of interest from Saints abroad having friends or relatives in the city who are nonmembers. Her address is 1160 Clay, Topeka.

On January 29, Bishop's Agent F. G. Hedrick, of Atchison, Kansas, occupied both morning and evening and remained for official visits for a few days. Both efforts were excellent.

San Bernardino, California

In the past three months, with the quarter ending December 31, 1921, we have been busy, trying more than ever before to press forward. The Lord has been with us and blessed us abundantly. We all love our pastor, D. Amos Yates, and family, and are glad we can have them with us. Brother Yates has been our speaker most of the time and has given us some very encouraging sermons.

George H. Wixom, missionary for Colorado District, returned home for the holidays and has been preaching to us some splendid sermons. We are glad to have him with us again.

While here his wife went through a rather serious operation at the general hospital, but at present writing she is doing splendidly and will be moved home within a few days.

The Sunday school gave a lovely program in the church Christmas Eve. They had a beautiful tree, a jolly Santa Claus, and plenty of good things to make the children very happy. Our Christmas offering reached $209.55, better than any time heretofore.

On Christmas Day at the morning hour a dear soul entered the waters of baptism—a fitting day for such a service.

Our branch has entered upon the budget system. The heads of each department, together with the pastor and financial deacon, compose the budget committee. We are all confident this system will prove satisfactory.

At the Interchurch Christmas Bazaar our Women's Department met with another success. They are studying along educational lines, taking as part of their study, "Food and the body," and the "Mothercraft Manual."

We are all looking forward to a brighter new year and we wish the same to everyone.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

On Sunday evening, January 29, the president of the branch will begin a series of services at the Belmont Mission to continue several weeks if interest will justify.

Several cases of illness prevail in this city and vicinity, none of which is serious among the Saints.

Elder Charles Putnam, of Woodbine, Iowa, will hold two stereoptican lectures at the Central Church Monday and Tuesday nights, the 23d and 24th instant.

For several days Brother F. M. Sheehy and wife were in the city, since and at the time of the holidays, visiting relatives and friends. Those who saw Brother Sheehy were interested in his association, and some in the conversations held.

The Women's Department held a meeting at the home of Sister Mamie Wood last Thursday, at which Mrs. Shaben gave a demonstration on home economics, and Sister Hand gave a talk on visiting the poor, and a piano solo was enjoyed. It was decided to begin a series of sessions on the food and body course at the Belmont Mission, to be conducted by Mrs. Shaben, next Tuesday.

Elder George Beaty spent Sunday, the 15th, at Woodbine, Iowa. Brother J. F. Curtis was still continuing the services there.

Brockton, Massachusetts

Brockton is a city in southeastern Massachusetts, noted the world over for its chief industry, the manufacturing of shoes. It contains some sixty-five thousand inhabitants and is known for its push and progress. It is surrounded by many small towns, which makes it an excellent center for business and also for the preaching of the gospel.

Our work was started here some forty-one years ago, and of course, like others, we have had our ups and downs, but now it seems as though we are passing through our golden age: our branch is prospering and we have a vision of the future.

One of our last happy changes was the purchasing of a new church home, which is ideal in location. Under the leadership of our pastor, Elder E. L. Baker, our Bishop M. C. Fisher, and our local priesthood, consisting of F. S. Dobbins, John Hoxie, Howard W. Reynolds, W. C. Booth, J. W. Roberts, and the united cooperation of the Saints, this seemingly impossible task was performed.

Bishop Fisher was speaker at our first service and his wise counsel was well received and will bear fruit.

Elder G. W. Robley occupied the second Sunday and we shall not soon forget his inspiring words. And we know that all the faithful missionaries who have wended their way to Brockton will rejoice with us at this time when they hear the good news and know that their efforts to hold up and strengthen the work here has not been in vain.

As great events cast their shadows before them, these shadows in world's events reveal to us the necessity of a careful consideration of those words given by inspiration:

"Time is ripe! my work must hasten!
Whoso will may bide the hour.
Naught can harm whom God protecteth—
Elements confess his power.
Up ye then, to the high places
I have bid you occupy!
Peril waits upon the heedless!
Grace upon the souls who try.

WILL ROBERTS.

Holden Stake

Patriarch I. M. Smith began a series of meetings at Holden on the 22d.

Our pastor, D. J. Krahl, is steadily improving. He is now walking around in his home, but has not been able to attend church yet.

Brethren F. A. McWethy and Robert Dillon attended the farmers' week at Columbia. They report many things said and done toward the betterment of the farmers.

WARRENSBURG. Stake Superintendent C. F. Scarcliff visited our Sunday school on the 15th and preached at the morning hour. A conference of officers and teachers was held after the morning service. Our Sunday school is making an effort to measure up to our stake standard of excellence and qualify as a first grade school.

Bishop C. J. Hunt and Patriarch I. M. Smith addressed us on the 22d. Attendance has been good at all services recently, especially group prayer service.

EAST INDEPENDENCE. A very profitable series of services was held here, beginning the 8th, by Elder J. W. A. Bailey. Both Saints and nonmembers were pleased.

Duluth, Minnesota

As we look back, and think that just a few short months ago (fifteen, I believe,) there were only six or seven scattered members here, and now we have a present membership of eighty-six, we are made to rejoice and marvel at the way God's work is coming to the front. We are indeed thankful for the precious souls that have been gathered in. Much credit is due Brother Kress and family for their unceasing and untiring efforts.

Brother Kress has been chosen as branch president. We voted to adopt the coordination plan, and also have adopted the budget system in all departments. I am pleased to see the branch taking this step, as it shows a progressive spirit, and I am sure we will be quick to adopt other measures as they become practicable.

The Saints were requested to come fasting, and a spirit of unity prevailed such as I have witnessed only a few times in meetings of this kind.

In the year that has just passed, I can say that the Saints here have been wonderfully blessed, both temporally and spiritually, for any sacrifice that they have made. The Lord has blessed us with the gifts of the Spirit, it seems, more than we have been worthy. We were told in prophecy the day the branch was organized that if we continued faithful, our "coffers would be full." This prophecy has been literally fulfilled, for I am sure all can say they have not stringently felt the effect of the world-wide depression.

We held some special meetings last week. A good interest was maintained, and feel that good was accomplished. We expect to put on another campaign in the near future.

MRS. H. S. OLSON.

De Kalb, Illinois

During the early fall of last year, 1921, we held a series of meetings lasting four weeks, conducted by Brother Ward L. Christy, of Chicago, assisted by F. M. Cooper, of Plano. At the conclusion of the effort, Brother Christy led three precious souls into the waters of baptism and others seemed very near the kingdom. Saturday, January 21, he was again called to our little city to baptize four others, and still the interest grows. Our hearts are surely made glad to welcome these dear ones to the fold of Christ, as they are all workers and can assist in this glorious work.

A great many of our people are suffering with "grip," but we trust all will soon be well again.

All of our services are well attended by the membership and a number of outsiders. The Lord has blessed us here with his Holy Spirit and we are cheered and comforted as we labor and pray for the success of his work.

Stockton, California

An inspiring meeting was held in the church at Stockton on the evening of January 16 in the interest of the Health Department. J. D. White, president of Northern California District, was in charge. A splendid lecture was given by Doctor G. L. Harrington, of Independence, Missouri, followed by an excellent and stirring address by President F. M. Smith. Both addresses were heartily enjoyed by an interested audience. The local choir and orchestra assisted.

Since the Christmas activities there has been a marked improvement each week in attendance and interest in all the lines of church work in the Stockton Branch. Two have been baptized of late, both of whom have been placed in active service.

Independence

The Second Annual Series of Gospel Services is the name of the special services for young people to be held in Independence Stone Church beginning February 19 and continuing each evening, excepting Saturday, including the 26th. There is already much interest in this series and no doubt the attendance will again be very large.

The campaign committee have arranged to have office space at the Order of Enoch House each day from one till nine p. m. till the period when the services are held, when they will be there from one till seven.

The slogan of the campaign will be from Paul's admonition: "Stand fast in the faith."

The subjects and speakers are: Sunday evening, February 19, "Continued revelation," by Walter W. Smith; 20th, "The Book of Mormon," by Paul M. Hanson; 21st, "A restored priesthood and authority," by John F. Garver; 22d, "A restoration of the gifts and blessings," by C. Edward Miller; 23d, "A scriptural church organization and scriptural form of doctrine," by J. F. Curtis; 24th, "The second coming of Christ," by Elbert A. Smith; 26th, "Zionite ideals: gathering, stewardships, etc.," by Frederick M. Smith.

The same speakers and subjects, with program features will be had in the lower auditorium, with necessary transposition of dates. The age limit is the same as last year for the upper auditorium, thirteen to thirty years of age.

A mass prayer meeting of all the young people in Zion is announced for Tuesday evening of this week at the Stone Church, and judging by past interest in this sort of meeting, seats will be at a premium and the plane of spirituality high. The coming meetings will be the theme.

The evening of Sunday the 5th was given over to a program by the Auditorium Orchestra at the Stone Church. It was largely attended and greatly appreciated, many expressing themselves as enthusiastically impressed by not only excellence of technique, but the spirit of the occasion. R. T. Cooper was conductor, Gomer Watson concert master, Pauline Becker accompanist, George Miller assistant. Two orchestral numbers were directed by Orrin K. Fry and two by Arthur H. Mills. An address on "The orchestra and its construction," was given by Arthur H. Mills, and an offering was taken for orchestral work. There were several special numbers by members of the orchestra.

The Sunday afternoon lectures to the priesthood continue with Walter W. Smith as speaker, he delivering the fifth of the series on the afternoon of the 5th. It was announced that the size of the priesthood paper, One, was to be changed with the January issue and issued thereafter under the new name of The Priesthood Journal. This periodical will carry each month one of these lectures with other matter of definite interest to the priesthood. It will sell for forty cents a year. The response by those who attend is excellent and many favorable comments are offered as to the value of the lectures.

A drive is being made in Jackson County to raise funds to pay the expenses of a hired secretary for the Boy Scouts. Much interest is being manifest in this movement and good results had.

Athletics is proving a boon to many boys and young men under the care of M. T. Williams, and some very interesting games have been played by our boys. They have met and defeated some strong basket ball teams from surrounding places. And a soccer football team has been developing some skill and considerable enthusiasm. We shall secure some detailed items later regarding athletics in Zion.

President F. M. Smith is again at his desk after a trip to the West where he visited his family at Los Angeles. He visited in addition to Los Angeles the Saints at Oakland, Stockton, Sacramento, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Ogden, and on the 5th visited Saint Joseph, Missouri, where he spoke twice to the Saints of the First Branch on stewardships. His entire Western trip was one round of addresses, and the local publicity agents were successful in getting excellent reports of the meetings into the newspapers. One of them appears in this issue. President Smith has been very busy of late with innumerable conferences and sessions of the finance committee of the joint council since his return.

Accompanying President F. M. Smith at Los Angeles, Oakland, Stockton, and Sacramento, California, was Doctor G. L. Harrington, who addressed the Saints, and worked in the interests of the Health Department of the church.

Bishop J. F. Keir is again at his work, enjoying the privilege after his enforced vacation.

The First Presidency have appointed Harold C. Burgess to be in charge of all choir, orchestra, and departmental music in Zion. He will give immediate attention to the problems of his work but plans to do but comparatively little personal directing. Brother Burgess is employed as an executive in the power department of Kansas City Street Railways Co.

Mrs. M. T. Short, librarian of the church library in Independence, has left for Houston, Texas, for a month's stay ere she goes east for a few months.

Patients entering the Sanitarium for the week ending January 28: Ina Brown and baby, C. A. Guinand, Mrs. Brun Namur, Elsie Barnett, Florence Mann, Irene Burroughs, George Barton, and Charles Millard, all of Independence; Eli Mukulich, Sugar Creek, Missouri; Violet Malone and baby, Kansas City, Missouri; and Oscar Lewis, Mount Washington, Missouri. X-ray patients: Virginia Hunter, Mount Washington; Irene Burroughs and Doctor S. Green, both of Independence; Jennie Gunlock, Rock Island, Illinois; and Velma Boyd, Lees Summit, Missouri.

The radiophone sermons and programs continue to go out each Sunday evening. Elders Paul M. Hanson and Walter W. Smith have been the speakers on the last two Sunday evenings, and with the mechanism restored to excellent working order the results are very gratifying.

President Elbert A. Smith was in Lamoni the past week over the 5th on church business, attending the Lamoni Stake conference.

D. J. Krahl, who has been at the Sanitarium since the 1st, is making gratifying improvement from his paralytic stroke.

Elder R. V. Hopkins has been suffering considerably of late from bleeding following an operation for removal of his tonsils about two weeks ago. He had been at home for some time but has returned to the Sanitarium for treatment and observation. He has suffered considerably the past few days but at the time we go to press is somewhat improved.

Denver, Colorado

The winter has been fine! Twelve were baptized in the font, Sunday, the 22d.

Elder Delbert Kemp has been confined to his home for several weeks from vaccination; he was in bed three weeks.

Our district conference will convene in Denver, February 24, according to word from the district president.

We had the pleasure of attending a meeting of our Boy Scout troop a short time ago and were pleased and surprised at the large attendance and the manliness of our boys. Steps have been taken to furnish some gymnasium equipment for them.

Convention Notices

Northern California, February 24, at Fresno. All local secretaries are requested to send delegate credentials not later than February 20, to undersigned district secretary. Mrs. L. Day, 3839 Clark Street, Oakland, California.

Church Secretary

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to presidents of stakes, districts, and branches not in districts. These officers are requested to have their secretaries forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their organizations at the General Conference to convene October 1, 1922, to President Frederick M. Smith, Box 255, Independence, Missouri. A number of districts will probably elect their delegates at the spring conferences, hence the blanks have been sent early in the year.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in stake, district, or branch, and names of its delegates and alternates, signed by the president and secretary of the body appointing, with name of such organization, place and date of conference or business meeting, is sufficient; separate, individual credentials to delegates are unnecessary. Please insert "total membership" in all cases; scattered and absent members may be included in the number; also report if delegates are authorized to cast majority and minority vote in case of division and the full delegation not present.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the Presidency's office. Credentials should be made upon the official blank, for proper filing and ready reference.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restriction of delegates voting" will be found in chapter 17 of the Rules of Order, with the exception that such rules have been amended to provide that the basis of representation shall be one delegate for every one hundred members.

Districts should take notice that fractional numbers—less than one hundred—do not entitle them to another delegate.

Branches having a membership of less than one hundred, when not included in districts, are entitled to one delegate.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 1, 1922.

District Secretary-Treasurer Appointed

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District: Whereas, Brother C. E. Buckley, secretary-treasurer of the above-named district, has tendered his resignation because of his absence from the district, I therefore appoint Brother P. A. McCarty to take care of this work till the convening of our next conference, to be held at Clear Lake, Indiana, June 9 to 11.

I commend Brother McCarty to the confidence of the Saints as a safe, careful, and faithful man. He may be addressed at Battle Creek, Michigan, Route 7, Box 2.

H. E. MOLER, District President.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Henry Bronson of Orange Center, Florida, requests the prayers of the Saints for her son who is afflicted, and also for herself.

Send Money and Orders to Independence

Though the Herald Publishing House was moved from Lamoni, Iowa, to Independence, Missouri, in May, 1921, a large number of letters are still sent to Lamoni, and a considerable number of money orders are made payable at Lamoni. This occasions delay and increases expense, as we must send these orders to Lamoni to be cashed and pay the postage both ways. It is not uncommon to receive these misdirected orders accompanying subscription blanks on which is plainly printed the new address of the publishing house. The Ensign Publishing House has been amalgamated with the Herald Publishing House, and all orders for church periodicals, books, tracts, etc., should be made payable to and sent to the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE, Business Manager.

Yates. Interment in Mountain View Cemetery.

Taking Short Course at Ames

Bishops A. Carmichael and A. J. Yarrington, C. E. Irwin, A. E. Bullard, and Roy Derry left Sunday morning by auto for Ames where they expected to take the short course work offered by the State College. Their attention will be centered on the study of economic problems as applicable to conditions in church centers.—Lamoni Chronicle.

Brother William J. Bavington, secretary-treasurer of the Canadian association of the International Association of Master House Painters and Decorators of the United States and Canada, who is in attendance at the Kansas City International Convention February 7-10, made us a call recently. He is from Toronto and was one of some twenty from Canada attending.

Elder E. E. Long is holding a series of services at Norfolk, Nebraska, though bad weather interferes with the success of the meetings. The subject of his first sermon was, "Where is heaven?" and there appeared in the Daily News a summary of the discourse, with an announcement that the second subject would be, "A reward for every man, or, The moral man's chance."

How High Will It Go?

The names of the ten guessing nearest the grand total receipts for the 1921 offering will be printed in these columns. Send in your guess not later than February 20, to the Presiding Bishopric, Box 256, Independence, Missouri.

Total Christmas Offering to February was $36,473.06.

Yearbook of Graceland College. Published annually by the student body. Summary of the book.

It is composed of 144 pages—every page worth while. It reveals in print and text all the important student activities of the college. It has a brown double overlapping cover with a new cover design in two colors, gold and blue. It is dedicated to Frederick M. Smith. The first seven pages will be in two colors, gold and blue, and will be composed of a number of beautiful scenes of the college campus and town. There will be 150 individual student pictures, 22 individual pictures of the faculty, about 20 group pictures, comprising baseball team, basket ball team, football men, orchestra, glee club, Acacia staff, Athenian council, boys' debate, several society groups, and a number of club groups, together with a number of pages of snapshots. In print will be a brief, lively description of the different activities in the form of write-ups, sayings, jokes, the winning oration, the winning short story, class editorials, etc.

The price this year will be $1.50 a copy, postpaid. L. G. Hoisington, editor, Roland Travis, business manager, Lamoni, Iowa.

Recommending the Lesson Helps in Autumn Leaves

The following letter to A. Max Carmichael, superintendent of the General Sunday School Department, is of interest to not only Sunday-school teachers, but to all who are struggling with the problems involved in functioning as successful teachers:

"Dear Brother: I am writing you a brief note of appreciation concerning the material you are furnishing for teachers in your Sunday School Department of Autumn Leaves.

"It is just the thing we need, since so many of us have not known how to analyze our teaching problem nor how to evaluate our material. I am trying to get all my teachers to study these helps, and assure you that I am setting them a good example in this regard at least.

"We only wish you could thus treat all the lessons, but no doubt you are limited in your space. But in the meantime, till the Sunday School Department is able to furnish similar material for all the teachers in convenient form, I am urging that every teacher make the best possible use of what you are now furnishing monthly in Autumn Leaves."

Lincoln Play in Leaflet Form

The play entitled "Abraham Lincoln," by Margaret Davis, appearing in February Autumn Leaves will be available soon in convenient leaflet form for Religio and other groups who desire something worth while in the way of simple dramatics.

While it is a little late for use for Lincoln's Birthday this year, it is worthy of production at any other season, and it is excellent for the customary Friday evening program usually put on at conference time.

The price has been made low and the costuming is an insignificant item of cost. They sell for ten cents apiece or fifteen for a dollar. Order of the Herald Publishing House.

Elder and Sister J. W. Davis report having arrived at Sydney, Australia, after twenty-one days at sea. They stopped for a visit in the Hawaiian Islands en route.

An Excess of Things

The attitude of Jesus toward wealth is well illustrated by the instance of the rich young man who came to him asking what he should do to be saved. The Christian Century suggests that most churches to-day would be inclined to say, "Yes, yes, we need you almost on your own terms." But Jesus, instead, told him that he was surfeited with material things, that he was so wrapped up in the things of this world that he could not see the kingdom of heaven. The first thing for him to do was to get rid of his excess property, to sell it and give the money to the poor, "Then come and follow me."

To many to-day this would seem to be quite impractical. It is curious to note that Jesus did not command him to give the money to the church, but directed him to distribute it to the poor, and he made it clear right then and there that the wealth of this world is not to be accepted on its own terms. The young man went away. This is probably what wise men of to-day would have expected. Yet he was given food for thought and the possibility of his soul's salvation.

Local Work in Religious Education

We have discussed many times the value of the work undertaken in this department of Graceland. There is a need that these facilities be extended to those who are not able to give one or more years in residence. The work being done in Independence and Lamoni on Sunday afternoon is meeting this need in part. The work in the priesthood meeting, and the advance work of the Sunday school and Religio is also helping in this work of religious education.

We do not want to be like the colored man, giving all of our attention to our own job first. No one else can do the job marked out for you. There is no danger that any man is going to learn too much, or make too much preparation. There may be danger that he will give too much emphasis to things of less worth, or that he may be exalted in the pride of his own intellect, and so reject, in part at least, the work of the Spirit of God. Certainly to do so would be a grievous mistake.

But the need of preparation concerning the ideals of the church and church procedure cannot be over-emphasized. If we are to do the work of God, there must be much more in earnest preparation than has ever been the case in the past.

This need is met, in part, by the class in religious education at Graceland College. Next year, the course will be extended to cover two years.

Attention has already been called to President Smith's announcement in the HERALD for January 11. Those who are going to take this work next year should write at once, should decide now, and take the necessary steps so that all things are prepared before you.

The Industrial Outlook

The American Economic Association and allied organizations consider world conditions.

At Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, there was held, December 27 to 30, meetings of the American Economic Association, the American Sociological Society, and other allied associations, in statistics, accountancy, political science, and farm economics. Naturally, at such a meeting, much time was given to the existing economic conditions in the world to-day. Some, as Doctor E. C. A. Seligman, of Colorado University, say a trade revival is due in 1922. The American Bankers' Association also took a most encouraging point of view, and stated that the middle of 1922 would see recovery well established.

The outstanding factor that was much discussed in the Pittsburgh papers was the question of the continued trend of population toward the cities. Doctor G. J. Thompson rather approved the movement to the cities, and called attention to the fact that much more grain was now produced than ever before, that modern machinery required a smaller percentage of men to be engaged in farm production, while the development of a consuming population in the cities has brought to the farmer profitable markets.

Doctor Wehrwein, of the University of Wisconsin, considered absentee ownership a problem which must be settled by community action rather than by national legislation. B. H. Hibbard, also of the University of Wisconsin, forecast a decline of property values in the large cities through a movement of industries nearer the centers of raw materials to avoid transportation charges. This would naturally tend toward smaller industrial groups than in the case with our present large cities. High freight rates will eventually force this exodus and cause a decline in the value of city real estate.

Another problem taken up was that of unemployment. It has been an evil of civilized society for centuries, but it is only recently that we have sought for a cure. Whiting Williams, a former vice president of the Hydraulic Press Steel Company, deliberately went to work as a laborer to learn the worker's mind. In 1899, over six million people were unemployed for from one to twelve months, according to the census of 1900. The remedies are being carefully tried out by individual employers in order to reduce unemployment in their own plants. This is attempted first, by a reduction of seasonal orders by getting customers to order well in advance of the season; second, the increase of the proportion of the nonseasonal orders, with long delivery time; third, the planning of all stock items more than a year in advance, together with the planning of other needs well in advance, and the building up of out-of-season items, including an attempt to vary the line so as to balance one demand against another. Workers are thus transferred from one department to another as needed, though an effort is made to transfer them to the same department as before so that they will be well trained in more than one department, this for the benefit of themselves as well as the employer.

The immediate result of such a procedure might be to decrease the total number of men employed, but will give to those employed regular work. That is, it will avoid the bringing in of men for short seasonal employment who are thus out of work a good part of the year.

A second method suggested was public works, and an effort is already being made in this direction in several States and by the Federal Government to have government work done at a time when there is a minimum of unemployment, or when otherwise unemployment would be at a maximum.

A third method suggested is a state compulsory unemployment insurance.

S. A. B.

"After some effort we have been able to purchase land for the church," writes Aziz Elias Hanna, in a letter from Jerusalem, published in the Ensign of recent date.

A letter from A. E. Stone states that during the year 1921, 7,021 visitors registered at Kirtland Temple.

Apostle Williams to Return March 1

In response to cabled request from headquarters, Apostle T. W. Williams will set sail from England for America on the Aquatania on the 18th and reach Independence on March 1. He is returning that he may attend meetings of the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, which is to convene on February 27.

Elder Williams left America for the European trip during the summer of 1920 and visited points in England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Holland, Germany, France, Italy, and the Holy Land. He has recently spent some months in England laboring among the branches.

The Journal of History

There is much of lasting interest in recent numbers of our historical quarterly—The Journal of History. In the July, 1921, issue the periodical literature of the Latter Day Saints is listed. Several pages are devoted to The Evening and Morning Star and the Times and Seasons. The literature of the various factions is listed and finally that of the Reorganization. This is not a history of these periodicals, but is a convenient bibliography.

It is of great historical interest to note that the present Herald Publishing House is on the same block and within seventy-five feet of the location of the Evening and Morning Star building.

In the October, 1921, issue some interesting extracts are published from the History of Missouri in four volumes by Walter B. Stevens. It is an impartial report on conditions surrounding and following the difficulties of the members of the church in Missouri.

The biography of James W. Gillen, by H. O. Smith, is continued and completed in a very able manner and with sympathetic treatment. It has taken much labor to search out of occasional letters and reports the scattered details of his life, as Brother Gillen was slow to say much about himself.

The history of the High Council by Roy L. Roberts was begun in the issue of July, 1921, and is continued in the October, 1921, and January, 1922, issues, the latter of which is already on the press and will soon be ready for mailing.

In the January number there will also appear an article on city planning by the church architect, Henry C. Smith; this will include the plans of Zion, Far West, Kirtland, and Nauvoo. This is followed by the journal of Ethan Barrows.

Questions on church history are answered from time to time as they arise and add to the value of this journal. Another new feature is an index of twenty pages, fine print, giving reference to details in the various articles published during the past year.

Work of the Church Distinctly Social

Sermon by Frederick M. Smith to the young people of Zion, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Sunday evening, December 18, 1921.

If I need to take a text to-night, and it will only be for the purpose of having a point of departure, you will find it in the reply made by the young child Jesus to his mother at the time he was lost from his parents, and when found was discussing with the doctors. When Mary reproved the child for not having been careful to observe the parental discipline, the young man gave the astounding answer to Mary, "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

And it cannot but be remembered that from that moment, and perhaps before then, Jesus as a child was conscious that there rested upon him a tremendous responsibility; and a careful scrutiny of the word of God, so far as we have the history of the life and development of Jesus, will indicate that there never was a time that this consciousness was not with him; there never was a time when he was not busy preparing for the great work before him, though some are inclined to hold that the idea of being the Messiah did not enter into his consciousness until later in life. But so far as I am concerned, that makes no difference. We do know that the life of Jesus was one of tremendous activity and that always his life was given direction by an absorbing, dominating interest. That is the thesis that I wish to present to you, and if I were permitted to give to the young people of Independence a slogan, I would say, "Let us make the business of the church ours, and then let us be about the business of the church."

"Study to Show Thyself Approved"

There is another passage of scripture. To Latter Day Saints it has a significance that attaches to divinity, for we believe them to be words which came to us from a divine source: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Now, let me say I am glad that the quotation, or the words, did not stop at the first phrase, "Study to show thyself." That is what altogether too many of us are doing to-day. In other words, not only young people, but some elderly people are sometimes so imbued with the idea of becoming exhibitionists that their whole study and thought is what their fellow man might think of them, and their study is to show themselves. But listen; I do not want you to stop there. Stop there long enough, however, to think what a spectacle you make of yourself if that was all you thought about.

But the word says, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed" of the work that he is giving to the world. And if our young people would become to-night or any time in life imbued with that great fundamental thought, and it can enter into their lives and become the dynamic of their activities as that slogan became the dynamic of Jesus' life from the time he was eight years old on, then we can hope that the future of this church will show tremendous results as the aggregate of the activities of the young people. I might say that to-night my hope of the working out of the great problems of the church and my hope that this church will make demonstration to the world of what its social philosophy is, lies in the young people.

Not only does this passage, "Study to show thyself approved, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," keep before us the idea that our workmanship and its approval should be of prime importance, but it also holds out the idea that that approval shall be a divine one, so that it links not only workmanship with good results, but it links workmanship with divine approval. In other words, it links workmanship with God and with the idea that God will pass upon the question of workmanship! and I wish from the bottom of my heart that I could take every Latter Day Saint to-night, young and old, conscious of the fact that God does intend that the workmanship of his people shall pass his scrutiny and shall be a criterion by which the worth of the individual is to be measured. Not only does that workmanship then become of prime importance in a social way, but it becomes of even greater importance in a religious way. In other words, it connects our activity with religion and therefore with God.

Now, let me repeat what I have said to you many times, and probably will keep right on saying to you many times more. The work of this church is distinctly social. You cannot get away from it, hence we must be about doing something more than attempting to create a consciousness that God is. That, of course, is of prime importance. And when I say the work of this church is social I do not lose sight of the fact that we have a tremendous work to do in developing a religious consciousness, but I do want to say that that religious consciousness is worthless unless running parallel to it is a social consciousness that will make a man aware of his brother at the same time he sees God. What this church to-day needs more than any other one thing besides the idea that God is and that he lives and moves and controls the universe, is a social consciousness that is pervasive among the membership of the church—an awareness that we are individuals among other individuals.

I would not have the church cease its activity in calling the attention of mankind to the fact that there is a God. I would not have the church cease constantly calling the attention of the people to the fact that we must love God with all the powers of our being. I would not have the church cease its work of creating a faith in God that will cause us to see wherein we commit errors and make us conscious of our sins, and therefore create within us a desire to turn away from them. I would not have the church cease teaching that God has a plan and that when we become conscious of it and are therefore made conscious of what we shall do, that we should obey the law of baptism, both of water and spirit. I would not have the church cease to call attention to the fact that following baptism there is a work for every individual to do to go on to perfection, and that going on leads into the other world where we shall be definitely judged for what we have done here. But I would have them also tell every individual when he has been baptized, that he must realize that his service to God can be rendered only by service to his fellow man. That means, then, that we have not only to do with the religion of the other side, but we have a tremendous task of making that religion vital and dynamic, ever working towards that which leads to the establishment of a little of heaven here and causing us to worry less about what is on the other side.

Be Concerned Over the Present

I care little whether I shall be bald-headed in eternity or not. I am more concerned about the condition of that scalp and head here. And if we can better our condition here and create some happiness, much more than we have had in the past, why not, indeed, do it? Some people cannot enjoy happiness here because they are worrying about what is on the other side. All the nervous energy they can waste in that direction will not open the gate an inch wider, nor, perhaps, close it any tighter. It would be repeating to you what I have said a great many times, that Jesus himself has called attention to the fact that his religion is social, for he laid down the fundamental law which becomes then the framework, if possible, upon which the whole philosophy is hung. You might say it is the skeleton upon which the whole body of flesh and blood is eventually shaped. Love God and thy neighbor. I say, our people should become aware of the fact of that one statement, especially when we realize that it has become the fundamental upon which hang all the law and the prophets. It is not only religious, but it is distinctly social; and not only social, but it is distinctively economic. It has a bearing on our economic theory. This church is demonstrating its fealty to the fundamental law of Jesus Christ when it presents in its economic philosophy and its social philosophy the concrete fact that church members can see God only when they love their neighbor.

This makes the very spirit of the church social. Yet in order for us to become socially conscious we must become distinctly adept in our knowledge of our own selves, for as the knowledge of each individual self expands, then our capacity to know our brother increases.

Self-Control Demanded

We cannot know our brother until we know ourselves. One reason that it is necessary for us to know ourselves is that we might have self-control. And let me tell you, fellow Latter Day Saints, never was there a time in the history of this church when the members of the church needed self-control as they need it now. Let me repeat, You cannot have perfect control of yourself unless you know yourself. "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city." If you stop to think for one moment you will realize how truly disregarding of the admonition of James people are becoming to-day when he calls attention to the fact that wagging tongues become the means of letting loose the fires of hell. Have you ever seen the time in the history of the church when there was the disposition for wagging tongues, particularly among some of the Saints, and doing the damage they are doing, as there is to-day? The reason for it is this, that the whole world has lost control to a certain extent. We have gone through a great nervous strain; but let me admonish the Latter Day Saints particularly, to be especially careful that they shall learn self-control, and certainly no one has self-control that has not learned to control his tongue. One of the greatest accomplishments is to know how to keep still. It is easy enough to speak, but it is particularly hard to know when to say the right word. A silent man sometimes passes for a wise man; therefore you can sometimes run a pretty good bluff on people by keeping still, and at the same time save yourself a lot of trouble. So I would advise young people to learn to know themselves; and having that as their great objective, as they increase their knowledge of themselves, they are increasing their knowledge of their brothers.

Study God's Handiwork

I would advise young people then to study to know God. I am not going to send them to the Bible entirely to attempt to know God, but I would certainly advise our people to attempt to know God, by studying his handiwork. This earth has been called by the Bible, God's footstool. It has a relation to the world. There is in this footstool the handwriting of God that has traced God's own laws; and so his laws reveal to us God. It is the duty, it seems to me, of young people who appreciate the significance of this church and its work, to study those things that will give them an intimate, deep, and accurate knowledge of this world and its natural manifestations, its natural laws, that they might know more of God.

The heavens declare God's handiwork; so it is also a necessity for us to know something about the creation that represents God's handiwork, even beyond this world. And I would certainly hold that one cannot love something he knows nothing about; hence, if you are going to love God with all the powers of your being you must know something about what he is. I do not believe it is possible for anyone to study even that degree of knowledge, small though it be, that has come to the human family that tells us of the laws of God as God has established them, without having his love for God intensified, deepened, broadened, and made brighter.

If we are going to have a knowledge of ourselves, I could certainly advise our young people to study those laws according to which we operate. In other words, I would advise our young people to attempt a deep and continuous study that we might not only know ourselves so far as our own powers are concerned, but that we might know them in relation to our fellow men, to our brother. Not only physically, but that we might know them in their relation to the handiwork of God. There is no getting away from it. Your life is intimately mixed up with the operation of the laws of nature, of the world and of the universe. Until you know something about those relationships you cannot appreciate the magnitude of God.

I would suggest as a principal study right here in regard to knowing thyself, psychology. I would say that for this reason, psychology as I understand it is an attempt to know the operation of the laws by which we become conscious of the things around us, and that means that we become conscious of ourselves. Did it ever occur to you that a child born without his five senses would have difficulty in recognizing the fact finally that he was an individual or being? Did it ever occur to you that only as we become conscious of those senses we are aware of ourselves?

You remember that a little while ago I spoke about the need of developing in this church a social consciousness. The attitude of the world so far as the business relation is concerned is determined very largely along the line of individualism. We have our individualistic attitude in commerce and industry and I am simply going over ground that I have time and again covered when I say that our Government, so far as its industrial organization is concerned, is based upon an appeal to selfishness that says to the individual that he should increase his earning power so as to prepare against the coming of the rainy day.

Way to Become Socially Conscious

We have got to change that. The only way we can become socially conscious is to make a study of those sciences which have to do with the interaction of men, for we cannot become conscious of our own relations to the fullest extent until we have some knowledge of the laws by which those sciences are governed. So in studying to prepare themselves for execution of the work that will result in a relationship for which even God will be proud, it seems to me it becomes almost a maxim that our young people should study the social sciences. And the fact to-day that we are having difficulty in starting some of the very commonplace things mentioned in the Doctrine and Covenants is because the people have not the social viewpoint and therefore cannot see and appreciate some of the things that our books are teaching us. That is one of the reasons I am so very anxious that our people shall be studying these things I have mentioned.

If there is one thing above another that marks us as a peculiar people, so far as our teaching is concerned; if there is one thing that will enable this people to make a contribution to the welfare of society that justifies their existence more than any other one thing, it is our social philosophy. And our social philosophy is wrapped up in the word stewardship. And I would rather talk the doctrine of stewardship to an economist and to one who has been trained in the social sciences than to those who know nothing about it. I could talk the doctrine of stewardships with a surety of a better understanding to a man of the world who has the social viewpoint, though he may not have a knowledge of the spirit of this work, than to some of our own people who have not this social viewpoint. Some of you may think that is queer, yet I have found it to be true.

Stewardships Not Communism

Now let us make another statement that I have made several times. The doctrine of stewardships or, let me put it a little broader, the social philosophy of the Latter Day Saint, is not communism. Let me repeat that statement: The social philosophy of the Latter Day Saint as outlined in the Doctrine and Covenants is not in any way related to what is called communism to-day, or all things common. I say that in spite of the fact that the New Testament tells about the apostles trying to have all things common. They tried it and made a failure of the experiment. I am going to leave that right there and let you think about it. I may have some more to say about it later on.

In order for us to have our social philosophy put into operation, it is necessary for us to have a religious foundation. That is why Christ, when he gave the law which is so broad that on it can be hung all the law and the prophets said, first "Love God," and then comes the social part; so that any doctrine or social philosophy that ignores religion is doomed to failure. It will not succeed. And I might say also that any religion which works obversely, any religion that leaves out the social question to-day, will die. I don't care how strong the church is, it will become not a promoter of religion, it will become a sort of Sunday entertainment organization. Every church that is alert to the problems of to-day, every church that is alert to the maladjustments existing in society, must come to the front with a social program if it is going to live through this time of turbulence.

This religion then that becomes fundamental is particularly logical because of the determination of the attitude of the individual, and that is fundamental to the doctrine of stewardships. You cannot put the doctrine of stewardships into effect by force. You cannot say to this, that, or the other individual member of the church, "You must become a steward in the sense presented in the Doctrine and Covenants." But it is absolutely essential that there shall be created in the individual a religion so vital and so all-absorbing and there must be a contact with God so close that he becomes cognizant of the fact that his brother stands at his side, and because of his religion he assumes an attitude towards his brother that is pleasing to God. Have we that religious concept in the church? If not, then we cannot put into effect our social doctrine. Our social philosophy will fall flat unless it is founded on a basis broad and deep, which reaches to the roots of the soul and determines our consciousness towards God. Religion! Seek ye first the kingdom of God and these things will be added unto you. That is economic welfare; that is social betterment; that is everything of good that comes to the community and from the community to the individual.

Do not misunderstand me when I said this doctrine was not communism in any sense, that this doctrine does not have anything to do with the community, and vice versa. The essential, fundamental attitude then is this, "All that I am, all that I am capable of becoming, all that I have and all that I will get is for God and his kingdom." That is the attitude. All that we have, all that we can do, manifesting ourselves to God by assisting our brother who needs it. We are all a long way short of perfection. There will be need for group uplift. Is that attitude yours? That is the attitude that I would that the young people would develop in their activities here until they will lose sight of the plea that is so strongly made to them in their schools, in their business houses, and on the street and everywhere, Do something that you might aggrandize yourself. Get rid of that idea and be impelled with the slogan, Do something for somebody else for the happiness that it will bring you in accomplishing good for your fellow man. That is the difference.

I know that in some quarters of the church there is a disposition to say, "Well, we don't need to change our form of organization at all. I consider that I am steward over my own property, answerable to God for it." Why, that is just an excuse; that is all. It simply indicates that you have not yet approached the point where you can stand before God and say, "As I stand in the presence of God, all that I have belongs to my brother if he needs it above me." And there are many men and women in the church to-day who are seeking to dodge the application of the doctrine of stewardships by saying, "I have always considered myself to be a steward before God, answerable to God for the administration of the wealth he has permitted me to get."

I remember one time a few years ago a great coal baron in the East was brought to the bar of justice because of his manipulation of the coal business. When he was asked why he had appropriated so much of natural resources, he said that he had done it because God had given him that greater ability and he was using it to demonstrate that he had it and was administering this property for the benefit of humanity. God had given him it because of his qualifications. You laughed at him then, didn't you? How much different from that man is the Latter Day Saint who, still clinging to his property, says, "Never will I concede the rights of the community in this property. Never; because of my ability it has come to me and I am going to hang on to it"?

A Mistaken Idea of Stewardships

On the other hand, don't get the idea that this doctrine of stewardships applies only to those who have nothing. Do not get a notion that this doctrine of stewardships is a plan by which any beggar can come to this church and have a fortune put into his hand and administer it as a stewardship. Have you ever seen that notion prevailing anywhere? There is a statement in the law that the idler shall have no place in Zion, and it is also not quite so plainly stated, but it can be read into the law repeatedly by proper inference, that a man who has not developed a capacity to handle a stewardship shall not be trusted with a stewardship that is bigger than his capacity. Do you remember the parable of the talents? I have always been glad that this parable did not say that the man gave to each one an equal amount. He gave to one one talent, to another two talents, to still another more talents. Why? Because that man who had charge of those men knew that they differed in capacity.

I want to lay down something else that I have mentioned several times, and it must be recognized. You people who have the idea that there shall be all things common, that there shall be equality, must get rid of that notion, because God would not be guilty of the rank injustice of treating unequals as equals. Would he? God never has and he never will. He will always treat his Son, Jesus Christ, in a far different way than he will me, because Jesus stands out and above the rest of the world, and I am only one among men; hence for him to treat me in exactly the same way in all respects as he does his Son, Jesus Christ, would be inequality, wouldn't it? It would be unjust. So that law of justice must run through the church and we can expect that we will receive according to our ability, according to our capacity, and according to our development. God hasten the day when we will all be equals, because then we will have reached perfection.

This is perhaps a good time to give a word of admonition to the young. Paul and all the other writers in the church have repeatedly warned us against envy, jealousy, and suspicion, and that to-day stands as the great triumvirate that is threatening the existence of the church. I should like to see the young people of Zion get in such complete control of their passions and powers that they will never find in their hearts to feel one iota of jealousy or envy of the man or woman who can do more for the church than they. That is causing the church a great deal of trouble to-day. When you can see and recognize and are made to feel that there is some one who, because of the endowment of God or of his application to work, can do a great work for the church, do not find it in their heart to be jealous, but say, "God grant that there may be others, even bigger, who will be brought forward to do the work of the church." And if you cannot do anything more than hold the coat of the man who can do more work, do your task pleasantly and do it well and thank God that there is somebody who can do more than you.

Stewardships Needed Quickly

Stewardships should be organized as quickly as possible. They should be put into effect without delay. Years ago the law was given to us and the church was told to put it into effect, and something over a decade or more ago still the word came to us that the law as given in section forty-two as applying to the doctrine of stewardships must be considered in effect to-day. We are still unorganized. I am calling your attention to the fact that God intends that this day we shall put into effect the law of stewardships which the last General Conference approved when it approved the statement of your leader. Why aren't we about it? The difficulty, of course—one of the difficulties—is this, and that couples it with what I said a little bit ago; too many of us are assuming the attitude that the doctrine of stewardships if put into effect will mean that the church will be giving to us, when we must realize that the doctrine of stewardships if put into effect will mean that we will do the giving, of service, devotion, love, sacrifice, development. You will be giving it to the group, but at the same time you will be receiving what you never had before—a greater degree of happiness and joy because you changed the criterion of the measure of your success from the accumulation of property to the piling up of credit in the way of service to those in need.

I said a little bit ago that my hope in this church so far as the establishment of the doctrine of stewardships and the establishment of our social philosophy is concerned lies in the young, for, for some reason or another, those that have accumulated much experience, those who are capable of taking and controlling stewardships, are not inclined to "let go," as they say, because they are fearful that somebody else will get it; but the law contemplates that you shall become a steward over your property and you shall run that as a stewardship for the benefit of the group, and to do this your attitude must be that you are willing to go before God on this basis, come what will, and take your chances with others and be willing that that which is given you shall be given to the service of your fellow men and that your own welfare shall come with that of the group. I am not going to attempt to go into detail on this, as it would be endless.

The Order of Enoch

I want to say just a word in regard to the Order of Enoch. I never have been satisfied with this Order of Enoch as it is established here. It is accomplishing good, but the Order of Enoch is a bigger thing than the organization here. The Order of Enoch might be an association of men not all of whom are bound under the same articles of association; but I hold that when a man becomes a steward of this church, not with the idea of saying to God, "I hold myself as a steward before God in the control and operation of that property which I have gained through the ability God has given me"; but when he goes before the authorities that the law has provided and takes a covenant with a deed and with a covenant that cannot be broken, when he makes those covenants before the proper authorities in the church and he is himself sanctified with those ceremonies which will make it divine and therefore approved of God, he becomes a member of the Order of Enoch, and this Order of Enoch therefore can become as wide as the church, and the time will come when all that have taken that kind of a covenant can become members of the Order of Enoch. If you will study your Book of Covenants again, (do it when you go home, get down your book,) run through the passages pertaining to our social development, read section 42 and the other sections that apply to this question of stewardships and note the numbers of times that statements are made such as this: "We lay our all before the feet of the bishop to receive a stewardship with a deed and a covenant which cannot be broken," you will begin to see the significance of the Order of Enoch. It is that group of consecrated servants to God, men and women, who take a solemn covenant that they go on the basis of a stewardship for the purpose of serving the church, and their articles of association will follow according to the needs of the particular stewardship for which they were organized. It may be a group of two in one place, five in another, one hundred in another, and so on, all of them organized with that covenant and bond which cannot be broken, to assist the general officers of the church in carrying into effect the law of our social philosophy.

Both Mental and Physical Energy Required

Do not think for a moment, either, that all will become managers. There are those who are willing workers and who are good workers, but of themselves never can make a success, never can accumulate. What finer thing can be accomplished as a social effort than when every man will be given an opportunity to give the best that is in him to magnify the calling that God has stamped upon him and be relieved from the burden of managing and have his stewardship, that through which he can give his maximum of service to the church, and know that his calling is just as honorable as the man who is able, because of his experience, to manage a group. I can testify because of my own experience there is a whole lot more tiresome thing than working with your hands. My head must be pretty poor, because I assure you that it gets more tired than my hands ever did. Sometimes I long for a chance to go out and work with my hands again. I remember the time when this last draft law went into effect. It included all up to forty-five years of age, so, of course, I had to register. After I registered, my wife said to me, "Suppose you are drafted, will you plead exemption?" I answered, "No, I shall be pleased to serve two years in the army as a private where somebody else has to do the deciding for me."

When some of you people have a decision to make, the first thing a good many of you think of is, Well, we will go up and see what President Smith has to say about it. Most of you come up there with the idea that if what he says harmonizes with what you want him to say, then you will take his advice, otherwise you will do as you please.

The big thing in the way of equality in this church, of the equality that this church stands for, is that every man and every woman shall have opportunity to do the best that is in him. There is where the equality comes in, as I see it. And if this church will give to every man opportunity to develop the thing that is in him, equal opportunity for him to develop the best that is in him, to develop it to the highest point of efficiency, that is the equality that is worth while, and I believe it is the equality for which this church stands.

There is much to be accomplished that has not yet been accomplished, and unless the church gets pretty busy before long we are going to come short of accomplishing it, so far as time is concerned.

I certainly hope that God will bless us and the young people, that he will by the presence of his Spirit create within them that which will keep them restless until they accomplish their work, as was Jesus at the time he made the expression used at the opening of this discourse, so that they can feel that there is a chance for them to enter in upon the work that will make a contribution to the business of the Lord. And may His blessing attend, is my prayer.

Church Finances

Speech by Elbert A. Smith at the Lamoni stake conference, in the lower auditorium of the Brick Church at Lamoni, Saturday afternoon, February 4, 1922.

There are many things in the church work to encourage us at the present time, and some to bring discouragements. Among the latter I presume you are interested in the financial situation.

First of all, what are the causes of depression? Different opinions are expressed. Some attribute the shortage to the Auditorium drive; some charge that the Bishop has made mistakes, in bad investments, etc.; others may be disposed to blame the Presidency. It can hardly be said, however, that these various things are to blame for the distress of the banks in the country at the present time. They can hardly be responsible for the disaster that has overtaken farmers. They could hardly have produced the wave of unemployment. Certainly the Auditorium drive was not responsible for the depreciation of the German mark or the British pound. The fact is that we are in the world if not of it and are having our part in a condition of financial depression that is world-wide.

There may have been contributing causes, but without doubt the real causes were: first, the sudden and tremendous drop in the price of farm products and farm values, which ruined many farmers and caused others to be greatly embarrassed and hampered; and second, the decline in wages, and general unemployment, throwing many of our working men out of employment and reducing the income of others. The people have not had the money to pay into the church in the way of tithing and offering that they had one or two years ago. The church naturally is the first to suffer. People must pay their taxes or lose their holdings. They must meet their notes or be sued, but they are not obliged to contribute to the church. Contribution is voluntary, and so the church, like all institutions depending upon voluntary contribution, suffers first and perhaps worst.

It is possibly true that mistakes have been made by general church officials, perhaps by the Bishop in some investments and expenditures, possibly by the Presidency and others. But have not the members of the church also made their mistakes? The sum total of the wealth of the whole church is the wealth of all the members of the church. Only a small percentage of that wealth is in the hands of the Bishop. Is it not a fact that thousands of the members of the church have invested in gilt-edged mining stocks and other stocks which are not now worth a match to set them on fire? I am always suspicious if anyone tries to sell me five dollars worth of gilt-edged securities for fifty cents. Despite the repeated warnings printed in the church papers, members have invested in such stocks and later perhaps have desired us to prosecute the ones selling the stock. Did not many of our farmers, when times were prosperous, borrow to the limit of their credit, invest in lands, and think to reap enormous profit on the rise in value, in the face of the revelation warning them against "the spirit of speculation"? Now they are caught, and some of them ruined. If the Bishop had the thousands of dollars that have been lost in bad stock and in speculation by church members, there would be no depression in church finances.

So if the general officers have made mistakes, it is equally true that the members have made mistakes. There is no use in recrimination. So long as the affairs of the church are administered by men, mistakes will be made. The only infallible human being on earth is the Pope of Rome—and he is dead at this moment, and as yet they have not been able to find an infallible successor. All we can do all the time is to liquidate our errors, profit by them—not repeat them—and go forward.

What are the results of the shortage in church finances? Naturally we shall have to curtail our program for the time being, both in regard to foreign missions and at home. In fact, we have already been obliged to curtail our program abroad, and at home as well. One of the most distressing and bitter experiences resulting from the present situation is that we have been obliged to cancel the appointment of some of the missionaries. In this, however, the church has endeavored to be fair, and such action has been taken only after correspondence to discover if it is possible for the individual to secure employment and self-maintenance.

We were talking with a brother this morning who raised the question as to what might happen to him if he should continue in the mission field until possibly fifty or sixty years of age, when perhaps he would be discontinued and be thrown upon the world without resources. The church tries to prevent such a distressing turn, but of course cannot give an iron-clad guarantee. Where can men find such a guarantee? If a man should go into business, is it not a fact that perhaps seventy-five per cent of the business men ultimately fail? If he goes upon the farm, note the present distressing situation of farmers, many of whom are being turned from their acres in about as bad shape as the missionaries' families can be. If he seeks employment as a laboring man, is it not a fact that thousands of laboring men are out of employment and some of them destitute? Whether a man enter the ministry or some other field of activity, this thing may come upon him. No matter where we work, we can only go forward in faith.

What are the remedies? First of all, it would seem to me that there must be greater economy in the administration of church and personal affairs. And as a matter of fact retrenchment has already been made and will continue to be made. Personally, I am willing to share with others in the matter. Secondly, the membership of the church at large must do what can be done to tide over the present situation. If the returns of the year leave them owing no tithing, possibly by sacrifice they can make an offering.

We must not think to abandon our program. We must hold our ground so far as we can until times are better and then be ready to push forward with renewed vigor. I see no reason why we should not weather the storm. This is not by any means the first shortage that we have passed through. In years gone by, as you perhaps well know, there were times when for months the missionaries' families did not receive their allowances. They were obliged to live on credit or the best they could. Eventually they re-

A Short History of the Work in Britain

By S. A. Burgess

This concludes an article under the above title begun in the British number, written by Frank Henry Edwards.

Elder Jeremiah proceeded to Wales the last of May, where he was joined by Elder Briggs the latter part of June, 1863. The Restorer made its appearance in March, 1864, being edited by Jason W. Briggs and published in Merthyr-Tydfil, Wales. It was printed partly in English and partly in Welsh.

After Brother Derry had returned home the work was continued by Elders Briggs and Jeremiah, and a branch was organized at Birmingham on September 18, 1864. The General Conference of April, 1864, had sent John T. Phillips, T. E. Jenkins, and David Evans to Wales. Elder Briggs returned to America on October 6, but the first two, at least, of the men above appointed had arrived in England and T. E. Jenkins presided over the conference in Wales.

In 1865, at the General Conference, J. D. Jones and Joseph Boswell were appointed to Wales; George Hatt and John W. Lewis to England; while Jason W. Briggs was continued in charge of the European Mission.

In the meantime, however, J. T. Phillips presided at the conference of the European Mission while he and T. E. Jenkins and Thomas Revell were in England.

In April, 1866, Thomas Standeven was appointed to go to England, and Josiah Ells was appointed, jointly with Jason W. Briggs, in charge of the European Mission. In the fall it was decided by the Joint ceived their back pay, if the church was able to give it. I have worked in the Herald Office in years gone by when for long periods we received no salary in the way of money or check. We would receive occasional due bills. Some store in town was willing to trust the church or the Herald Office and would advance credit, giving due bills to be passed out to the employees who could then take their wages in groceries or dry goods. We have lived through all those things, and there is no reason why we should not pass through this shortage. The thing for us to do, as I have said, is to render all the assistance we can at the present time, retain as far as possible all the ground that we have gained in all departments, and the moment times are better, press forward. I trust that that will be the spirit of Lamoni Stake.

council that Elder Briggs should not go until Elder Ells should also go.

In April, 1867, Elders Thomas Revell, Standeven, and Boswell were released, and in April, 1868, Elders Briggs and Ells were sustained in charge of the European Mission and set sail on the 14th of August, Elder Briggs returning to England after nearly five years. At a conference held in Birmingham in April, 1868, T. E. Jenkins was appointed to preside in Wales, Thomas Taylor over the Birmingham District, John and William Morgan in the Forest-of-Dean, in Gloucestershire, R. Adams in Nottingham District, and others to local appointments. Elder Briggs returned to America on October 26, 1869, having been again sustained at the October conference in charge of the European Mission. His continued ill health was the reason for his return.

Elder Josiah Ells succeeded him as president of the European Mission and editor of The Restorer, but returned to America in May, 1870.

At the semiannual conference at Council Bluffs in September, 1870, Thomas Nutt and William Pruell were assigned to the English Mission. At the annual conference in 1872, we find M. H. Forscutt appointed as the president of the English Mission. He left on the 20th of June with J. S. Patterson and was followed a week later by John Avondet. By the last of July, Elder Forscutt had reached his mission and reported back that conditions were in a very unsatisfactory state, as most of the Saints were so situated that they could not ask an elder home with them and have peace. The burden of the work, therefore, was resting upon a few. Also a majority of the Saints were poor, none of them rich, and very few in comfortable circumstances. There were but three branches, Birmingham, London, and Hanley. It is evident that the dark and cloudy day after the death of Joseph Smith had left a heavy depression in the work in England. Open-air meetings met with abuse and there existed a shortage of funds with which to secure halls for meetings.

At the October mission conference, Elder Forscutt recommended the establishment of a publishing house in the interests of the church in England. In April, 1873, at the mission conference a quorum of elders in the English Mission was organized under the authorization by letter of President Joseph Smith. But this does not appear to have met with the approval of the General Conference, which was meeting at the same time at Plano, Illinois, at which time a publishing house in England was also disappointed.

The following conference of the English Mission, which was held in Wales, finds John S. Patterson as president of the conference as he had been appointed in charge of the European Mission, and Elder Forscutt was honorably released at the General Conference in April. Reports were received quite frequently thereafter from Thomas Taylor in England. John T. Davis wrote from Wales in July, 1875, and also concerning the work in England.

In 1876, Joseph Gilbert wrote from Birmingham, strongly commending the labors of Thomas Taylor, and C. H. Caton wrote from the same place to the same effect. He refers to Saints in Birmingham, London, Hanley, Stafford, Farnworth, Sheffield, and other places, and refers to Elder Taylor as in charge of the affairs of the English Mission. In 1876 several items appear in the SAINTS' HERALD concerning a number who have been associated with the Utah Church, in Manchester, severing their connection therewith and uniting with the Reorganization and giving their reasons therefor. An important reason for dissatisfaction was because of the tyranny of the authorities sent and also because of the erroneous teachings of that church. By November there were twenty members, representing five different families in Manchester, according to a letter from Elder Joseph Dewsnup. Elder Caton wrote approving of the work done by Elder Thomas Taylor and urged that he be continued as president of the mission, as it would save both time and money. It would appear that for several years thereafter, the work in England was left largely, if not exclusively, in the hands of the local brethren, and that this was done with the approval of our brethren in England. We note the names of Elders Thomas Taylor, Joseph Dewsnup, and C. H. Caton time and again, though they are also profuse in giving credit to other brethren in charge of the local work.

There are frequent reports of an excellent spirit in the services. Thus, in 1884, Elder Joseph Gilbert, returning for a visit, states that there are men in England well able to handle the work, and that the young men are not behind by any means, and on May 12, 1886, Elder Dewsnup writes very favorably of the work in Manchester. He reports, both then and in August, additional baptisms, and James Baty wrote in April, 1877, that one of the best conferences ever held in the Manchester District had just been completed.

Elder Patterson was released from the English Mission at the General Conference of 1874 and J. T. Davis placed in charge in Wales, but he returned home on August 26, 1875, and was released from that mission at the fall conference.

James W. Gillen and G. T. Griffiths, appointed as presidents of the mission, left America in June, 1892, and were continued by the conference of 1893. In 1894, James Caffall was appointed in charge of the European Mission, and in 1895 was continued, with Gomer T. Griffiths. Brother Griffiths, however, returned home in November, 1895, on account of ill health in his family, but Elder Caffall remained until August, 1897.

The conference of 1897 had appointed Heman C. Smith in charge of the European Mission, so he left home in the summer of 1897 and remained in England one year, until August, 1898. F. G. Pitt went over with Heman C. Smith in 1897 and was placed in charge of that mission when Elder Smith returned, and so continued for two years. Elder William Newton also labored in England at this time.

In 1901, Gomer T. Griffiths was returned to England, and in 1902 was associated with John W. Rushton. This is an important event in the history of the English Mission. At the General Conference of 1902, Elder John W. Rushton, who attended, was called to the apostleship, and England was given an apostle in charge who was not only an Englishman but who was born and raised in the "tight little isle" and was a resident at the time. Elder Rushton continued in charge of the work in England, at times being associated in the European Mission, until 1910. Brother Griffiths was released from appointment there after the conference of 1902, but was reappointed in 1910.

When Elder Griffiths was appointed to Great Britain in 1901, he and Bishop E. L. Kelley were sent together at the appointment of the joint council. Bishop Kelley's visit was comparatively short, as was also the visit of President Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans, who went to England in June, 1903, and remained until the last of September. They visited as many of the branches as possible and presided over various conferences held during their stay.

Elder Gomer T. Griffiths was continued in charge, in 1911, of Great Britain and Palestine, but from 1912 to 1915 U. W. Greenwood was in charge of the missionary work in Great Britain. His appointment had made it possible to relieve the hands of one of the Quorum of Twelve, U. W. Greene, who was appointed to Palestine in 1913, 1914, but on account of the World War, was appointed in charge of the whole European Mission in 1915, which included Great Britain, Scandinavia, Germany, and Palestine. Elder Greene, after visiting the churches in England, returned to America about the first of January, 1916. He was appointed in charge of the European Mission again in 1916, but took care of the work from his home in Somerville, near Boston, Massachusetts. The conditions existing in Europe did not appear to make it advisable that he should return, and war conditions greatly limited travel. He was in a position, however, to act on behalf of the church if any opportunity should arise.

Beginning in 1917, the members of the Quorum of Twelve have not been appointed to particular fields, but have been more closely associated with the First Presidency. On account of war conditions and conditions growing out of the war, the work has not been aggressively pushed from 1914 until 1920. However, the membership of the church in England has continued to grow. We note that there has been comparatively little change in the membership in Wales and Scotland, which was 205 combined in 1891 and 277 at the close of 1918 as reported to the conference in 1919 and nearly all of these were in the branches in Wales. The membership in England, however, increased from 764 in 1891 to 1,046 in 1900; to 1,297 in 1910; to 1,395 in 1915, which is the figure at the close of 1914; and to 1,510 in 1919, which is the figure at the close of the year 1918. We have not immediately available any later return of the membership in Great Britain. From the earlier years until recent years we find comment made on the fact that the members are most of them poor. Few are in comfortable circumstances, but they are a devoted people, striving to do all that their means permit.

In July, 1920, President F. M. Smith and T. W. Williams went to England, President Smith spending ten months in the European Mission and much of it in Great Britain, visiting Ireland, Wales, England, Scotland, as well as visiting the various branches and getting in touch with the work. As a result, a permanent headquarters has been secured, and Elder J. A. Gillen, of the Quorum of Twelve, went in January, 1921, to share with Elder Williams the burden of the mission. Bishop Charles Fry, Elder James E. Bishop, Daniel Sorden and wife, and D. R. Baldwin and wife have been sent over during the current year, and there is a desire in the church to see the work in the British Mission pushed as energetically as the means of the church will permit. A large number of the members of the original church and the leading officers of the church are of English descent and naturally hope for a great revival of the work in Great Britain and thence throughout all Europe.

The Sacramento Bee announces the visit of President F. M. Smith to that city in its issue of January 16, and prints a brief summary of his discourse in the issue of January 18. In this address, President Smith is reported to have ascribed the divorce problem to jazz music and jazz dances of to-day. These are not a direct part of twentieth century development, but are a reversion to a lower civilization, an outcropping of the cave men's dance when people shimmied to the beat of the tom tom. Syncopated music is related to the barbaric races. He also referred to the present economic system to marriages of convenience, and the decay of the pulpit and press to being subsidized by the counting house.

James Baty—A Biography

A man of sterling worth and unquestioned integrity. One loved and revered by all who knew him. Submitted for the British Number.

James Baty was the son of Robert Baty. His father was born in 1824, at Carlisle, on the banks of the river Eden, in the border country near the Salway Moss. Here he resided until after maturity—married, and reared a family. He had two sons: James, and George now of Brooklyn, New York. There were two daughters, Ann and Mary Jane.

In 1878 the two girls came to Manchester in order to work in the cotton mills. Here they became interested in the latter-day work, and were the means of bringing the entire family into the church.

While living in Carlisle, the elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints had been proselyting and, placing emphasis on the first principles of the gospel, won the confidence of the family.

The subject of this sketch was born in Carlisle in 1847. When ten years of age he was baptized into the local branch of the Mormon Church. When but a lad he was employed in a wholesale grocery store. At the age of twenty-two he married Miss Elizabeth Curran, also a resident of Carlisle. As a result of this union there were eight children, six of whom survive.

Removal to Manchester

At the age of thirty-one our brother removed his family to Manchester. There he met representatives of the true church. Due to the efforts of Brother Joseph Dewsnup, sr., he, with his family, was baptized in April, 1878. His parents, brothers, and sisters, also united with the church. Throughout the years they remained true to their original vows.

James was soon called to the office of elder, in which he labored assiduously both in branch and district work. He was president of the branch in Manchester, and district secretary for many years. For a time he was but an indifferent speaker, but finally became lucid, fluent, and inspiring in address.

Called to Patriarchate

He was called to be an evangelical minister by Gomer T. Griffiths. The man in the office, his brother in the church, and his wife in the home, felt he was God's minister.

In debate he could reflect light without heat. Plain living and high thinking enabled him to ascend to the heights where his vision was far and clear. He brought down to his brothers and sisters on the plain, visions of the Holy City, both strengthening and encouraging.

As we recall his association, we are reminded of Bunyan's recital of the Holy Women whose conversation he listened to in the streets of his native town.

"I heard," he said; "I heard, but I understood not, for they were far above and out of my reach. Their talk was about a new birth, the work of God in their hearts; also they were convinced of their miserable state by nature. They talked how God had visited their souls with his love in the Lord Jesus, and with what words and promises they had been refreshed, and comforted and supported against the temptations of the Devil, and methought they spoke as if joy did make them speak. They spoke with such pleasantness of scripture language, and with such appearance of grace in all they said, that they were to me as if they had found a new world, as if they were people that dwelt alone and were not to be reckoned among their neighbors."

Happy Married Life

Brother Baty was twice married. His first wife died in April, 1917. About twelve months later he was married to Mary L. Lenton, of East Manchester, with whom he lived on most affectionate terms until his death, which occurred February 20, 1920.

He left the home with his cheery "Good morning," went to the office, worked till noon, registered his leaving with the electric clock, passed out, and proceeded along one of the busiest thoroughfares of Manchester.

Amongst crowds of hurrying throngs and the din of city life, he fell and expired without a word or a groan. The summons was sudden and his spirit passed to the region of which his eyes had already seen.

"Don't worry," he said; "don't worry; it's a sin to worry."

He was indeed a patriarch, venerable in appearance, holy in life, beloved by all.

A Visit to Stratford-on-Avon

By Frederick M. Smith

Written for the British Number. One of his pictures appeared in that issue.

To one who has found pleasure and benefit in reading the writings of Shakespeare, a trip to England is scarcely complete without a visit to Stratford-on-Avon. Thanks to the kindness of Brother Frank Swan, of Birmingham, Brother Williams and I had opportunity to make a call at Stratford. We were staying at The Elms, the beautiful and hospitable home place of Brother Swan, and one day he said: "To-morrow we go to Stratford." So, quite early next morning, we went by train. Approaching Stratford to one who loves Shakespearean literature is quite like a visit to a sacred shrine, a moment of quiet excitement, though the matter of fact conditions under which one finds the various objects of interest is quite likely to give the idealistically inclined visitor somewhat of a shock. But I was not disappointed, for it has given me another point of contact, with a resulting greater appreciation.

Brother Swan is a splendid guide and host, for he let us do about as we pleased. He and Brother Williams even went for a stroll while I "fussed" with my camera. Of course I had that with me, and after we had visited the birthplace of Shakespeare, made a call at Ann Hathaway's cottage, seen the old church and grammar school, I spent a busy but interesting hour or two with the camera.

No photographs (as is usual in so many places in England) are permitted in the Shakespeare home, and because my camera was not a hand camera, they wouldn't let me take any pictures in the yard. But I photographed the building from various angles from the street, and secured some pictures from the yard by setting my camera high enough to "look over the fence." I thus secured two pretty good views while the old gardener who had "chased me and my camera" out of the yard was working within a few yards of me, quite ignorant of what I was doing.

The walk from the Shakespeare home to Ann Hathaway's cottage is a beautiful one. Through the town, across the railroad, and through the fields, through typical lanes, and everywhere the rich English foliage. The poet might well have chosen to make the walk frequently for its beauty, even if he had no interest in the occupant of the quaint cottage with its pretty garden. One view of the cottage caught through the trees from the bridge over the brook, just before the last turn towards the cottage, would alone pay for the walk. And even if one found no welcome or cheer within the cottage, yet to stroll past the homey place, to lean on the wall and feast one's eyes on the picturesque cottage and its garden might well tempt one to repeat the journey. It is little wonder, then, that the poet wended his steps that way, especially if he found hearty English cheer and welcome within.

Near the center of the town is the old church, with which is connected the grammar school, famous now for having been attended by the poet, while off in the edge of town lies the church in which lies his body. It is quite impossible for a lover of Shakespearean literature to gaze upon the stone marking the spot and remain free from emotion. And surely he finds no temptation within him to bring upon himself the curse the stone pronounces upon him who would disturb the bones beneath, but rather is he led to exclaim, "Rest, wonderful singer of Avon! Though your bones quietly and slowly rot beneath this stone, your name lives on, while your thoughtful and smooth expressions still stir within us the emotions you so keenly sensed."

What matters it who wrote the lines of Shakespeare? They were penned by one who knew man and could keenly portray his emotions, his frailties, his foibles, as well as his virtues. And at Stratford stand the close reminders of the poet. So we go on making pilgrimages there, and paying homage to the author of "Hamlet," of "Macbeth," of "As you like it," and pay respect to the greatest of contributions to English literature. And may that respect and homage not be paid as well to the memory of William Shakespeare as to anyone else? For it is what was done that moves us to respect, not what he may have been as a man or citizen.

I greatly enjoyed my trip and photography, and as I joined Brethren Williams and Swan, who were waiting for me on the banks of the Avon, almost in the shadow of the great theater erected to the memory of the playwright, I packed up the camera and folded the tripod, feeling thankful that because of the camera I could at least partially share the trip with the HERALD readers. But for all that I cannot but hope for each one who admires the writings of the poet that he may some day visit Stratford.

A considerable drive is being made for world prohibition in order to insure prohibition in America. One reason that is urged is that Spain and other European countries are trying to interfere arbitrarily with the attempt of Norway, Finland, and other places to inaugurate prohibition, even though it is the will of a large majority of the people of those countries. The force that is brought to bear is economic, a threat to withdraw all trade and so to regulate the economic life of the people. This, we believe, has already been effectively carried out in Iceland. This is merely another instance that we cannot live to ourselves alone. Another aspect, of course, is the heavy importation of liquors into the United States along both borders.

The census rates for England and Wales give a population of nearly 38,000,000, an increase of slightly over 1,800,000 in the past ten years. Scotland, with 5,000,000, shows a gain of a little over 100,000. As a result of the war the population, therefore, has not decreased, but the preponderance of women has increased slightly. They outnumber the men now in England, Wales, and Scotland by slightly over 1,900,000. This means that for every 1,000 men there are now 1,095 women. This shows a slight increase over 1901 when the proportions were 1,000 to 1,057, and in 1911 when it was 1,000 to 1,068. Greater London reports a population of nearly 7,000,000.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Friendly Visitor

[Some have asked what are the duties of the "friendly visitor," of whom we heard little until recently. During the session of the executive council in the fall, the following definition concerning this officer and her work was approved. The sisters in the branches may adapt it to fit their local conditions.—A. A.]

As the name so clearly implies, friendly visiting is the work of a friend, and is one of the surest means of unifying the membership of the church. But the term friendly should be given its true meaning—the same that Christ meant when he said, "I have called you friends."

Great care should be used in the selection of the woman to do this important work, and for that reason she should be chosen by the Women's Department leader in consultation with the branch president. (The district organizer should counsel with the leader if possible.)

She should visit every home in her territory once every three months, or more frequently according to the needs and her discretion; or by direction from the leader, the branch officers, or the district organizer.

It is her duty to invite women to attend church services, the prayer meetings, women's meetings, etc. To be able to do this with best success, the friendly visitor must be conversant with all the spiritual activities of the branch as well as the nature of the work undertaken in her local, and be prepared to so discuss the subject matter that she will actively interest the individual invited.

It is her privilege to encourage, cheer, comfort, and counsel with helpful and sympathetic suggestions. She must acquire the art of being a good listener, yet never to tale-bearing or bitter complaints. When real discord and lack of harmony appear, she should counsel with the proper church authorities—never attempt to perform the spiritual work of the priests or teachers. If her help is requested by the visiting priesthood, she should work in harmony with them in humility and prayer that the church may be built up in unity. Where she is convinced that the honor of the work is at stake, it is her duty to bring such to the attention of the proper church authorities.

Where material need is apparent, she should report to the local leader, who in turn shall take it to the proper church authorities. When requested so to do, she may assist in ascertaining material conditions, but her work is primarily friendly visiting in the strict sense of the term, and should not be construed to be social service work.

She should report such data concerning her work as the local leader may desire. In no case should she be required to betray a confidence in so reporting.

The Friendly Visitor's Prayer

"Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer."

A nice order for Ensign subscriptions is sent by Sister C. F. Rehwal, of Bisbee, Arizona, and we commend her for the good work of getting our literature before the people.

What Do You Eat?

Several periodicals have lately carried a short article entitled, "What you eat, you are." The attempt is made to show that certain qualities of disposition and character may be developed or controlled by a wise choice of foodstuffs. While we may not be ready to go the entire distance with the writer of the article, we may concede that in so far as food affects for good or ill our bodies, and those bodies affect for good or ill our minds and spirits, we are, indeed, "what we eat."

An interesting article, too, is the one which tells how a woman's council in one of our large cities, comes to the assistance of women in helping them to determine what their diet should be. They list the foods which contain the needed iron, in this way:

Breads: Boston brown, entire wheat, graham.

Cereals: The various kinds of oats and wheat.

Vegetables: Spinach, lettuce, chard, asparagus, dandelions, rhubarb, cabbage, sprouts, string beans, kohlrabi, egg plant, tomatoes, peas, potatoes, beets, carrots, squash, turnips, onions, pumpkins, celery, radishes, cauliflower, dried beans. (A commentary remarks that all Southerners should know that they might have added "all other kinds of greens.")

Fruits: Strawberries, raisins, cranberries, pineapple, blueberries, prunes, blackberries, figs, watermelons, dates.

Protein Foods: Eggs, lean beef, fowl, fish, lamb, milk, buttermilk, almonds, hazel nuts.

Sugars: Molasses and maple syrup.

One wonders what vegetables, for instance, were omitted. But it serves to remind us that housekeepers often get into a rut, and often serve meals in which potatoes are the only vegetable represented. Extreme care should be taken to include plenty of the green type of vegetables at least once a day.

These ladies issue a booklet on corrective diets, in which besides giving the above list of foods, they suggest menus, etc.

They advise that vegetables be cooked, and served in their own liquor; that greens be eaten daily; that the meat juice be served with the meat; that the yellows contain the iron of eggs, and that plenty of dried fruits, such as raisins, prunes, etc., be used freely.

Continuing, we quote from this booklet:

"Dietary treatment of obesity includes a study of dietary habits, exercise habits, health habits, and suggestive treatment. The suggested treatment is medical, dietary, and physical, especially as to exercise.

"Under dietary treatment they advise: (a) That a plan for six months be mapped out and followed. (b) That the loss in weight be limited to three pounds a week or less.

"Dietary suggestions:

"1. Fatty Foods. Sugars and starches are fat builders. Decrease the amount of each. In order to satisfy the hunger, fill the stomach with such watery foods as lettuce, asparagus, cauliflower, raw cabbage, tomatoes, carrots, string beans, spinach, and chard.

"2. Abandon such desserts as puddings, pastries, rich cakes, and ice cream.

"3. Never take a second serving.

"4. If you cook, don't taste.

"5. Abandon evening lunches, afternoon teas, and treats.

"Number 4 is sufficient to prove that a woman wrote the pamphlet.

"Those who are underweight are advised to eat four meals a day, as follows:

"Bread.—Two slices at each meal.

"Cereals.—Served with cream.

"Vegetables.—Served with butter or mayonnaise.

"Fruits.—Eat those which are sweet.

"Soups.—Cream, cereal, and thick vegetable.

"Meat.—All kinds.

"Beverages.—Four glasses of milk daily.

"Desserts.—Cereals and pudding."

We are glad to announce that our study course, Food and the Body, by Sister Mabel Knipschild Smith, has been revised and printed in pamphlet form. It is now obtainable from the Herald Publishing House, at thirty-five cents a copy. It will form a basis for some most interesting studies and demonstrations for class work, and we hope many groups will include this in their plans for this year. It is not divided into lessons, as formerly, but presents the matter in chapters, allowing each class to go as rapidly or slowly as desired.

Suggestions for Mothers of Young Children

The following suggestions to mothers who must use bottle feeding for their infants, are sent out by the baby welfare department of a company supplying a well-known brand of condensed milk.

Orange Juice. When baby is four months old, give one teaspoonful of strained orange juice diluted with equal quantity of boiled water, once daily before feeding time. Gradually increase the amount until you are giving the strained juice of a half of an orange undiluted, once daily before feeding time. Orange juice may be continued until child is old enough to eat other fruits, as well as oranges.

Oatmeal Jelly. When baby is five months old, add one teaspoonful of oatmeal jelly to each feeding. Gradually increase the amount until you are adding three teaspoonfuls of oatmeal jelly to each feeding. To make oatmeal jelly add four ounces of oatmeal to one pint of water; boil for three hours in a double boiler, and add enough water so when cooking is completed a thin paste will be formed. This while hot is forced through a strainer to remove coarse particles. When cold a semi-solid mass will be formed. Oatmeal jelly may be continued until child is old enough to eat well-cooked whole cereals.

Constipation. Oatmeal water very often relieves this condition. To make oatmeal water add one heaping tablespoonful of oatmeal to one pint of water, and boil for three hours in a double boiler. This will make a little more than a half pint of thick gruel, to which add one pint of water that has been boiled. After straining mixture through fine strainer, you should have a little more than a pint of whitish liquid. This should be used with each feeding instead of the plain boiled water. If you find that this makes the bowels too loose, dilute oatmeal water with plain boiled water.

Diarrhea. Give nothing but plain boiled water for twenty-four hours. Then start feeding with barley water, or rice water, to which has been added a little salt to improve the taste. If these feedings are retained, and bowel movements lessened, small amounts of very weak regular feedings may be started and gradually increased according to baby's condition. If your baby does not improve after trying the above suggestions, consult your doctor at once.

Barley Water. Obtain the very best barley flour. Add one rounded tablespoonful to one pint of water. Boil for thirty minutes; strain; then add enough water to make one pint.

Rice Water. Add one tablespoonful of rice to a pint of water. Boil three hours, adding water from time to time so that you will have one pint of rice water at the end of the three hours.

Lime Water. It is seldom necessary to use lime water with prepared milk, but should there be undigested particles of food in the bowel movements (which seem to be otherwise normal) or should there be vomiting of large curds shortly after feeding—or colic—it would be then advisable to try lime water. Obtain freshly prepared lime water at the druggists, of which add one to two teaspoonfuls to each feeding.

Colic, or Vomiting. These conditions may be due to over-feeding, or constipation. Reduce quantity of food and use constipation formula, or lime water formula, as given above.

CHAPTER XI

Memory

1. A poor memory is a handicap in what ways?
2. In discussing the nature of memory the author says, "It is not the remembered fact which is retained." What is it?
3. How do we remember?
4. Why do we find it impossible to memorize or recall when the brain is fatigued?
5. James distinguishes four different types of brains. What are they? Describe each.
6. Name and discuss the four factors involved in memory.
7. Since the material of memory comes in the form of images, a wide range of facts or ideas and meanings of all sorts, cannot you readily see that the memory of different individuals will vary greatly, even though they are analyzing the same incident? Illustrate.
8. The development of a good memory depends upon four well-demonstrated laws. Name and illustrate each.
9. After much experimentation scientists are now able to give us certain simple rules which we can employ in using our memories. Discuss and apply these rules in your preparation of these lessons.
10. In order that the memory return us the right kind of matter, with what must we store it?
11. Illustrate each of these:
 - A good memory selects its material.
 - A good memory requires good thinking.
 - Memory must be specialized.
12. Discuss the use of memory devices.
13. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

Food for Backward Children

It is easy enough for a paragrapher to make flippant remarks about the experiment to be tried in Chicago of administering tablets of desiccated sheep glands to the backward children in the hope of curing their defects. The experiment is to be tried under the direction of Doctor Frank G. Bruner, head of the special schools of Chicago, on 200 children who have been found so mentally deficient as to be unable to keep up with ordinary school work.

We do not pretend to the slightest knowledge of the physiology of the cases and the proposed treatment. However, we are certain that a scientific approach to the problem of mental deficiencies in our schools is much to be preferred to our habit of depending on semimoral methods of stimulating backward children. There is no mental defect which does not have a physical basis. We can see no a priori reason why so-called mental deficiency should not be susceptible to treat-

LETTERS AND NEWS

Review of the Year in Zion

The report of R. V. Hopkins as pastor in Zion to the First Presidency, states that there are more than four hundred men holding the priesthood in the confines of Zion, and of these, two hundred and forty men are appointed specifically to labor in the thirty-eight groups. There is increasing harmony among the priesthood and members of the church. Despite the financial depression, the report of the bishop shows a marked improvement in the financial condition of the church in Zion.

Some of the men now appointed to group work have been recently appointed. The two hundred and ten previously laboring during the preceding six months report 2,707 personal spiritual visits, and that the territory in Zion has been covered, with few exceptions. The elders have made 986 visits, the priests 980, the teachers 446, the deacons 295. This latter figure does not include the calls the deacons have made to collect pledges for the local church expenses. During the past eighteen months, more than 8,000 visits have been made by group officers.

There has been a general increase in attendance at the services of the various churches, with only one exception. Special services were held in the Stone Church for young people for eight consecutive Sunday evenings, and also in the Second Church. Both were well attended.

The Spring Branch: A church a mile east of Independence on the Spring Branch Road, has been added, making seven now within this jurisdiction.

Special services for young people have been carried on at eleven o'clock under the supervision of Walter W. Smith. This means four meetings every Sunday morning: the usual services in the upper auditorium, young people of high school age in the lower auditorium, junior meeting in the dining hall, and a nursery in the old library building.

Summary of Bishop's Report, Lamoni Stake

Bishop A. Carmichael, of the Lamoni Stake, reports to the First Presidency that it is his intention to continue the series of letters to the Saints of that stake which we have been permitted to publish in the HERALD from time to time. These letters concern the interpretation of the financial law. There is a need for a common definition and understanding of the words ordinarily used in discussing the financial law, such as "tithing," "tithes," "surplus," "consecration," "stewardship," and the like. It may be as Aristotle says, "Define your terms and debate will cease."

The Lamoni Stake officers have a list of all of the families in the stake arranged on an addressograph so that in a little over an hour letters may be mailed to all families in the stake.

In addition to this work through the mail, the bishopric have occupied nearly all of the pulpits in the stake, discussing the problems of Zion. They feel keenly the crying ment through a tablet as directly as a disorder of the stomach or of any other bodily center.

The best attitude for one who has no expert knowledge on a matter which is open to scientific experiment is to postpone judgment until the proof is in and has been put into such form as a layman can understand.—Minnesota Star.

need of the hour, the vital necessity of properly educating our people in the law of God. The lack of understanding is depressing, the lack of willingness to understand, in a few instances, is even more depressing, but the church must and will move forward.

In addition to the work in the stake, many appointments have been held outside of the stake, working under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric. The possibilities of this work are without limit, and the more we contemplate the law of temporalities, the more wonderful it seems.

The stake bishopric has also had the responsibility of the various church homes in Lamoni. This has been principally in the hands of Bishop A. J. Yarrington, who has also handled the greater part of the office work for the bishopric, and in addition thereto has operated a department of insurance.

The reasons for this insurance business are twofold: first, the financial help it has given to the work of the bishopric, enabling them to employ needed office help; second, the experience gained should prove profitable in the further work of the church.

During the year, a thorough business survey has been made of all of the important towns of the stake. This was done by Rupert Wight of the office force. (Brother Wight is the son of the late John W. Wight.)

In prospect, and undertaken in good part, is the work of properly settling the stake. Lamoni should be a strong dairy center. At present, quite a number are already engaged in that business, but the state of finances among the farmers is not at present very encouraging.

The spirit of cooperation has been fully manifested in all of the work of the stake officers, so that the utmost harmony has existed and does exist between the stake presidency and stake bishopric. This close fellowship is by no means a small factor in the success of the wise administration of the work.

In addition to this regular work of the office, a continued effort has been made to study subjects closely associated with our church problems to become better fitted for future service in the church.

Notes From Great Britain

Great Britain is now in the third week of a bitter and intense anti-Mormon campaign conducted by certain newspapers of secondary standing. Daily articles are published loaded with falsehood and vindictiveness and of a character to arouse most violent opposition to the "Mormons," some of them demanding government action for their expulsion, while suggestions are made as to their being "hounded out of England," and of "unpleasant consequences," etc.

We have no plea to make for the Mormons, though we do like to see fair play, or fair fight; for no opponent can fight dishonorably, even when fighting an evil, without the dishonor falling back upon his own head with its "unpleasant consequences." Further, when men resort to such unworthy weapons as falsehood, false accusation, and base passion to gain their purpose, it evidences the absence or ineffectiveness of any better ones and is itself a confession of wrong.

The Reorganized Church has not been mentioned in the campaign so far and may not be. The prejudice and bitter feeling being aroused will, however, be unjustly applied to this church by many of the people. The good name of the Reorganized Church is established in many places in this country, and the church is not altogether without friends among people of standing.

Elder Richard Baldwin and wife are laboring for a time at Llanely, Wales, where a commodious chapel was awaiting occupancy. Fifteen had been baptized there at last account and the work which had declined in former years is being revived. Brother T. W. Williams expects to visit there soon.

Brother J. A. Gillen has been laboring for some time in the Manchester District with some good results showing. The conference held there on January 7 to 9 was educational and helpful towards mutual understanding. It was presided over by the district officers, Joseph R. Dewsnup and G. W. Leggott. T. W. Williams and Charles Fry were also present.

Brother T. W. Williams has for nearly two months been engaged in adjusting and strengthening the church in Birmingham. The two branches have amalgamated and are lining up some progressive work. Brother James E. Bishop is now in charge.

A change in district boundaries has been proposed, involving connecting Leeds and Sheffield Branches with the Manchester District and the other two branches of the Sheffield District having associated with them the two remaining branches of the Birmingham District, Birmingham and Leicester, with possibly a change of name to "The Midlands District." The proposal is subject to assent by all the bodies concerned.

Brother John W. Foster, acting secretary of the mission, has been pushing the work of getting the records of names in up-to-date form under the new system, in which work he has been assisted by Elder Nephi Dewsnup. The change will be a most helpful improvement in the matter of keeping records.

The bishop has in recent months visited the Sheffield and Welsh Districts in the interest of his department, and also a number of the branches in the Birmingham and Manchester Districts. His appeal has been, "All the Saints keeping all the law."

Industrial conditions are still bad in this country. Mr. Lloyd George, the prime minister, said in a recent speech that there were two million men unemployed here. There are probably more. The government dole of a few shillings per week stands between these millions and starvation. Many mines are idle and many factories shut down or running short time.

Great satisfaction and relief are felt over the happy settlement of the Irish question. Ireland has now reached dominion status similar to that of Canada and Australia, and can work out her own destiny.

The brethren present at Saint Leonard's recently took up as a special study the articles published in the SAINTS' HERALD from the pen of Bishop J. A. Koehler, entitled "Social and economic aspects of the latter-day work." Much light and knowledge were gained by the study. A course of lessons in sociology is starting under the direction of D. B. Sorden.

Little Miss Marilyn, three-months-old daughter of Brother D. B. and Sister Gladys Sorden, is fast becoming the leading attraction among the personnel of Saint Leonard's.

The Sheffield District conference held at Clay Cross January 14 and 15 was a profitable one. James E. Bishop was in charge, and was assisted by Brethren Gillen and Fry. Brother Bishop was reelected district president and Elder John Holmes vice president. The bishop's court held a sitting on the day after the conference.

Some of the friends in America have not written to the missionaries here because they have not had their addresses. All letters or other mail matter addressed to any of the brethren and sent to Saint Leonard's, 19 Amhurst Park, Stamford Hill, London N. 16, England, will reach them.

CHARLES FRY.

The Work in Denmark

I thought a few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard would be of interest to the HERALD readers. The old year has gone over the threshold of eternity, and a new year has come to us. What we have done or left undone is no more. I hope we shall be able to profit by the experiences we have had during the year that has gone and be able to do our work more effectively in the year that has come to us, both as individuals and as a church.

When I read of the success some of my brothers are having in the States, I sometimes feel like going home, but I come to myself, knowing that we will be rewarded according to our work, and I go on trying to do the best I can.

We got the work started here in Aalborg and I have baptized six here the last year. That is not much, but it is a start, and I hope and pray that the new year will be a better one and bring better results. We started the new year with a sacrament meeting, the first one held here in Denmark since I came. We were only five, and three outsiders, but the good Lord blessed us with the Holy Spirit, and verified his promises to us that when two or three gather in his name there he will be to own and to bless. It did me good to hear our new members bear their testimony that they had been made to know since coming into the kingdom that this is the church of the living God, and that the light became brighter day by day. Brother Caspersen told us that he had received more light since joining this church than he had ever had the twenty-one years he had been a member of the Utah Church. If Brother Caspersen will continue as he has started, he will be a power for good in this mission. He is well liked, takes well wherever he goes, is a good speaker, and if he will be humble and full of love he can assist in the work. We need such men in this mission and I hope he can be ordained an elder before I leave. He is a great help now, and would be more if he held the priesthood.

We are going to start Sunday night on the differences between the two churches going by the same name. I think we owe it to our own people, as well as to the world, because we are called Mormons too, and when they hear the name, they do not know the meaning of the name Reorganized. But if the Lord will be my helper they will know before I leave. I am going to send a special invitation to the Mormons through the papers, and invite their missionaries by letter, so they will know. I want them to come, and if they think I misrepresent them in the least they will be on hand to correct me. They are telling their members that I am a wolf in sheep's clothing, an apostate, and their worst enemy. I am going to give them a chance to pull off that sheepskin coat; but I think they will not come out, because "every one who doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved. But he who loveth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest." (John 3:20, 21.)

The Mormons have three men here in Aalborg, one older man that presides, and two young boys, but neither one of them can speak the Danish language very well, and especially the younger men. They can say they know that the gospel is true and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, then the congregation say, "Amen." At their last conference here their mission president, Carl Petersen, told them that Brigham Young was not a prophet, but he was a great man. All his time was taken up by something else. "Brother Kimball is my prophet. He likes to prophesy, and I like to listen to him." I did not think that a man like President Petersen would come out with anything like that in a public meeting, and the members did not like it very well either, because I had told them that Brigham Young had never made the claim that he was a prophet and that their church never had a prophet, and then here comes their leading man in the Scandinavian Mission and verified my statements. When the blind lead the blind they both fall in the ditch.

Working conditions here are not very good at present. There are over 80,000 working men out at the present time, and no prospect for anything to open up for some time to come. The cities here are doing much for the unemployed. They have an eating house where you can buy your meals very cheap, and they give the unemployed free dinner every day. I eat there myself when I am not invited out.

I see by the last HERALD and Ensign that the date for our next General Conference is set for October 1. I think it a good time of the year to hold it, and hope I shall be permitted to return in time to attend it. I hope to see some one here between now and spring to take up the work here when I am released.

I spent a very joyous Christmas with Saints and friends here in Aalborg. Santa remembered me, too, over here. I hope and pray the good Lord will remember all that so kindly remembered me here so far away from home and my dear family.

Wishing you all, dear Saints and friends, a joyous New Year, I am your brother in gospel bonds,

P. T. ANDERSON.

Independence

President Frederick M. Smith was in Chicago over Sunday. While there he attended Lincoln's Day Dinner at the Illinois Club, given by the Sons of the American Revolution. General J. J. Pershing was the guest of honor.

President Elbert A. Smith was in Des Moines at the weekend attending the district conference of the Des Moines District.

The fifth lecture of the series to the priesthood on Sunday afternoon was delivered by Walter W. Smith, continuing to discuss the laws of teaching. The first lecture, by Elbert A. Smith, is on sale at ten cents each and copies will be mailed at the same price.

The Second Annual Series of Gospel Services on Fundamentals of the Gospel is gaining pleasing momentum. All the prayer services in the thirty-eight groups of Zion were visited by teams of young people in the interests of the coming services. The teams were made up of about four each, who took part in the services and made the announcements of the meetings, with a plea for prayerful support.

On Sunday similar teams visited every home of the Saints in Zion and delivered tickets to those eligible, on account of the age limitations for admittance. All are sorry that the large auditorium is not larger so there would be no need for discrimination as to age, but the fact that the same speakers and program features are provided for the lower room balances the matter quite well.

Names of those who have lived in Independence and would appreciate the daily letters to be sent out reporting the meetings in detail are being secured, and if any at a distance know of such people who would appreciate these letters they should send the information to Campaign Headquarters, 102 North River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri. If finances would allow, there would be no limit to the number thus remembered, and those sending the names would do well to help defray the necessary expense.

The speaker at the first meeting Sunday evening will be Walter W. Smith, on "Continued revelation." Monday evening, the speaker will be Paul M. Hanson, on "The Book of Mormon," Tuesday evening J. F. Garver on "A restored priesthood and authority." The balance of the program, which has already appeared in these pages, will be repeated in our next issue.

The speaker at the radio station last Sunday evening was Arthur B. Phillips, and next Sunday evening it will be Paul M. Hanson.

The Michigan Club held a reception at the Stone Church on the evening of the 13th in honor of Clyde F. Ellis and wife, attended by about two hundred people, including the Saint Louis Saints, among whom Brother Ellis has been laboring of late. The usual program was had and a nice cash donation made by the assembly. They will sail for Tahiti, March 1, and reach the Society Island Mission on about the 15th.

The Religio has been having interesting programs and good attendance. About four hundred were there last Friday evening. It is preceded by a song service of fifteen minutes under direction of Harold C. Burgess. The nurses of the Sanitarium recently gave an appreciated program of their own creation. Another program was four impromptu speeches on subjects found in a sealed envelope when the speaker arose to his feet to address the audience. Young to middle aged men were participants.

The women of Zion were addressed last Friday afternoon by Doctor G. L. Harrington. The general executive of the department have been in session of late, Audentia Anderson being in the city for the purpose.

Pastor R. V. Hopkins has made some improvement, but still is weak from hemorrhages in his throat.

An intellectual treat was had at the Stone Church Sunday evening when Judge Joseph H. Johnson, formerly of the Kansas City Court of Appeals, addressed a large audience on "The trial of Jesus." There were in attendance the large class from the Kansas City Law School in which a number of our general officers have been enrolled the past year. Bishop I. A. Smith was in charge of the service and Bishop E. L. Kelley was on the platform, attention being called to the fact that Brother Kelley had been an attorney for forty-nine years and was still a member of the bar.

The address was masterly, being a wholesome presentation of both the legal and religious aspects of the last days of Christ, summed up in the idea that the trial of Jesus was grossly illegal and that Christ submitted on the basis of doing the most good in that way.

Patients entering the Sanitarium for two weeks ending February 11: Velma Boyd and Lida Williams, of Lees Summit, Missouri; Rex Johnson, Buckner, Missouri; Nellie Valley, Williston, South Dakota; Saburna Stephens and Mrs. J. C. Stephens, of Shitook, Oklahoma; D. J. Krahl, Holden, Missouri; Mrs. John Earp and baby, Norborne, Missouri; Edith Storms, Grain Valley, Missouri; Nealy Pearl Leap, Blue Springs, Missouri; Jennie Gunlock, Rock Island, Illinois; Lula Smith, Raytown, Missouri; Soma Peto, Englewood, Missouri; John Davison, Dunnegan, Missouri; Hyla Pendergraft, Lamoni, Iowa; Olive Millard and baby, Kansas City, Missouri; Tom Blaskovick, Sugar Creek, Missouri; Carl Schafer, Odessa, Missouri; Opal Brown, Kansas City, Missouri; Emily Reynolds, Mildred Larson, Etta Oldfather, Ada Hopkins, Hulda Flinn, Bessie Curtis, Julia Campbell, William C. Smith, Glenn Paxton, R. V. Hopkins, Isabelle Lanham, Mrs. E. A. Green, Alfred Peterson, Iram Ault, of Independence, Missouri. X-ray patients: Mrs. Henry Stahl, Sarah Triplett, R. L. Archibald, Mrs. B. R. McGuire, John Dale, of Independence; Mrs. Emma Hanback, of Kansas City, Missouri; and H. A. Gould, of Mount Washington, Missouri.

Lamoni, Iowa

Lamoni Branch held its business meeting for the winter quarter, the most important of the year, on Monday evening, January 30, in the basement of the Brick Church. A larger representation could have been had, but a more active one could not. A keen interest in some current local church problems stimulated activity to a degree unusual for church business meetings. The budget plan presented by the presidency was approved.

Ordinations Approved

The ordination of the following brethren to the offices indicated was approved: Roy C. Foreman and Glaude L. Smith, to the office of deacon; Willard C. Moon, to the office of teacher; Rupert A. Wight, to the office of priest; Joseph Braby, Gustav A. Platz, H. H. Gold, Frank McDonald, and Leslie S. Wight, to the office of elder.

Shall Church Property Have Playgrounds Equipment?

The proposition to put athletic courts on the grounds near the church has been under discussion for some time, both proponents and opponents being firm in the conviction of the rightness of their sides. The problem of child play and its direction is an important one to Lamoni people, and more people are coming to see the necessity of some steps towards intelligent supervision. There is a difference of opinion as to how and where that direction shall be effected. Twelve men, most of whom are influential not only in Lamoni, but also in contributing to the Sunday school, Religio, and young people's movement in the church, spoke on one of the two sides. Leaders as they are, these men brought up arguments which will be of interest to the people of every branch in the church where the problem of doing something for the young people is seriously considered.

The discussion took somewhat the form of a debate, with the proposition, "Shall we have athletics on church property near the church building?" for discussion.

The negative, peculiarly, was given the first opportunity of expression. The contribution was to the effect that our church property is too sacred to be desecrated by the pursuance of athletic sports on it. To permit athletics there would decrease the reverence in which the house of God is held. The boisterousness of play is not conducive to spirituality. Rather than permit athletics on church property, we should try to have it held in more sacred regard.

The affirmative replied with questions. Are we to regard property as being more sacred than the welfare of human life? Are we worshiping the church as a building, or the God whom we should meet there? The church property is meant for the use of the people, and in a question of human welfare we should not be swayed by prejudice or tradition.

A negative speaker replied that he wanted to see provision made for the children to play, and further would subscribe liberally to a fund to make that provision. He did not, however, wish to see the church properties used for athletic purposes. The sacred atmosphere of the church should be preserved.

By this time the affirmative was on its feet in force.

A brother who is well qualified to speak on the question of child training and discipline made statements to the following effect: Since the child spends nearly seventy-five per cent of his time in play, he learns just about that percentage of his religious training in play. The child's ideas of religion, ethics, morals, and personal conduct, which are the chief things that religion proposes to control, do not stop in their formation immediately when the child is out of Sunday school or away from church. Rather, he learns more of his religion on the playground, because there he is self-active, participates, and lives his part, while he does not always comprehend the meaning of the church services. Too long have we made the child believe that everything that he wants to do is sinful and evil; and thus we have forced him away from home, away from the church, away from the direction of those who should be interested in his welfare, for his amusement and diversion. It is necessary for us to get the child back, to put proper ethics, morals, and religious motives into the self-expression that he will find in play in spite of us. We must tie up his ideas of religion with his ideas of his daily life, which in his case is play life. We must bring that play under the control and supervision of the church, let the child see that the church is interested in his life and his happiness. The best way, the necessary way, is to bring child activity, which is play and athletics, right up beside the church building, and weave the child life into religious life.

Another affirmative speaker, prominent in church work, asked the question, "Is the church an institution to be worshiped, or is it an institution to develop worship?" also, "Which is more sacred, our children—who in the next generation will be the backbone of the church—or this building and grounds?" The normal child is the playing child. Crush the play, and you crush the child. You speak as though the child was—as once expressed by a modern church—that the child was conceived in iniquity and by nature evil. The child is the most sacred thing that God has given us! In him is the future. Without this child of to-day, there is no future. God has planted in him the instincts that drive him to play, and then some of us have the temerity to treat him as being so evil that his natural tendencies are suppressed or break out into all the troubles that we find in our modern youth to-day. The issue, the challenge, is before us: suppress this child, and we lose him; direct and encourage him, and he will be the stanchness and strength of the church to-morrow. May we get over the superstitious regard for property, the fallacious traditional reverence for mere buildings, and come to think in terms of the welfare of human souls, which are, after all, the most precious things in the sight of God.

A negative speaker came back with the statement that already the children were doing too much playing for their own good, and that what was wanted was not more play, but some good, honest work. Children are hard enough to control without having them away from home at some playground learning wickedness. Another negative speaker suggested that if we were to turn the church building into a playground, perhaps we had better install pool tables, card tables, etc., for the diversion of the young. This suggestion was clearly of a sarcastic nature, and not intended seriously.

The affirmative again got the floor. One brother who has for some years been prominent in reunion supervision said that our orderly reunions have been the ones where the young people have had provision made for their play, and that as interest has grown in the young people they have become more active in the church services.

The last affirmative speaker made an effort to clarify the issue, in which he succeeded quite well. He showed that the real issue was not one of whether the children should play, but that rather it was a question of whether they should play on church property, and near the church buildings. He said that, stripped to the essentials, the negative argument was based on the assumption that to have play and athletics near church buildings and property would tend to make the children irreverent towards them. The proof of the contention would then rest on whether or not the assumption was actually true.

As an authority on the subject he had eighteen years of service in connection with Lamoni Stake reunions on which to base his conclusions. In past days, when no provision was made for the supervised play of the young, a dozen or more police were required to keep order on the grounds during the night, with the young in mischief and rebellion most of the time. At the last reunion, where every opportunity was given for the young to engage in play and recreation, where the games were held next to the auditorium tent and people went from them immediately to prayer meetings and preaching services, no police were necessary, and disorder was absent. Over two thousand people dispersed from an evening social outside, and within a few minutes everything was quiet on the grounds. Under the old plan the young had neither pastime, nor part in the services. Under the new plan, every morning found over two hundred young people active at a prayer and testimony service. The experience has been that, without control of play, there have been disorder, dissatisfaction, and trouble; while with the supervision of play right on the church grounds, by church leaders, the young people have not only had the right kind of recreation, but they have also been brought closer to the church, into its services, and are promising to become such material as the church may depend upon in the future to carry on its work when old and feeble hands have laid that down.

It is not felt that what Lamoni Branch can do will be practical in every other branch; but it is quite certain that young people are everywhere the same, that older members can and are either driving them away or holding them close to the church, according to how they administer treatment. The child and the young person must be recognized and given self-expression; directed and encouraged, not suppressed and shut out.

Lamoni Branch went on record by a vote, not unanimous, but whether as a result of previous conviction, prejudice, or of the discussion, it was overwhelmingly in favor of the rights of childhood and youth. At some time in the future, when conditions make it possible, there will be play and athletics on church property.

Through self-activity the child shall be brought to Christ.

Additional Room for Sunday School Adolescent Meetings

A move was approved to get the Lamoni High School for Sunday school use. The crowded conditions in the Brick Church have made it almost imperative that more room be had to accommodate the present attendance and to provide for the increase which should come in the future. The senior classes will be the ones to occupy the new quarters if arrangements can be made.

Meetings on all mornings except sacrament Sunday are also to be arranged. Adolescents have not attended any services outside of Religio and Sunday school classes in anything like the numbers that they should.

Study Periods for Priesthood

It is felt that the quorum meetings do not provide sufficient opportunity for the priesthood to study their problems. The regular Sunday afternoon prayer service is to be arranged for some other time, in order that the priesthood shall meet at that time, and take up such matters as shall enable them better to function in their offices.

Further Business

Martin Hynden was chosen and approved as the auditor of Lamoni Branch, to take the place of O. W. Parker, who removed to Independence.

Just one vote was registered against sustaining the incumbent presidency of the branch.

Holden Stake

Through the efforts of Stake Presidency McWethy and Macrae, about 33 of our farmers and their wives met at the stake office, and discussed ways and means of producing better hogs, chickens, and cows. A great deal of enthusiasm was manifested, and we look for results to come from this meeting, which will be of a very substantial nature.

Holden Saints acknowledge a flying visit from Bishop McGuire and wife, Bishop Becker and wife, and Brother and Sister William Murray, of Chicago, Sunday. Brother McGuire was requested to stay and preach for us Sunday evening, but pleaded other appointments.

WARRENSBURG. The Temple Builders held their semiweekly meeting at the home of Patriarch and Sister I. M. Smith Tuesday evening, February 7. Their visit was in the nature of a surprise to Brother and Sister Smith. Lunch was served by the Temple Builders, and a pleasant and profitable time was had.

Young people's Sunday School Class No. 3 held its monthly meeting Saturday evening at the home of the teacher, Brother Wesley Raveill. This class is organized and is doing good work.

The interest in our young people's prayer service held at 8.30 a. m. Sundays, continues fair. This service was inaugurated more than two years ago. Our young people are beginning to plan to attend the next stake conference to be held at Holden in March.

Elder R. E. Bozarth has returned home from his mission in the East and will engage in secular work.

MARSHALL. Elder Phelps is creating quite an interest in his special Book of Mormon lectures. He has made quite an extensive study of this work.

Seattle, Washington

We greet the HERALD gladly, but are sad to bid adieu to the Ensign with which we corresponded for a number of years. While the Ensign is sent on a different mission, a very important one, we cannot afford to withhold any help we can render along missionary lines, and in this regard we shall contribute what help we can. We do, and always have enjoyed the news features of the Ensign, especially so since being so far removed out here beyond the West. It is good that the HERALD has taken it up.

On January 8, we introduced a new preacher in the person of Wilford W. Powers, a young teacher. He was greeted by a good audience which appreciated and enjoyed his analysis of "The armor of God." He displayed wisdom in selecting his subject, and tact in handling it.

Our young people have started a weekly prayer service held on Friday night. They are very successful so far. May they continue.

Our Women's Department is quite active. On the 19th they held a reception in the church basement and had a fine program and lunch and a good social time together. Their program rendered Sunday evening was crippled by so many being sick.

While in California we became very much attached to Brother Lewis Cooper, of Santa Rosa, who was a pioneer in the church work. Recently we learned of his passing away at the age of ninety-three. He leaves behind a clean record of an honest and sincere life.

Our semiannual conference convenes in Centralia on February 24 with auxiliary work on Friday and an entertainment at night. Saturday and Sunday will be devoted to the general work peculiar to conference.

Brother G. R. Brundage, one of our missionaries, preached the morning sermon here and in the afternoon went to Tacoma, where he had an appointment for night, thence to Centralia.

Brother S. S. Smith was called home on account of the sickness of his son, Sammie.

Seattle is being visited by an epidemic of grip in a lighter form. No deaths have been reported so far.

We greatly enjoyed a visit to our mission in Tacoma where we met a goodly number of the Saints scattered through that city. The meeting was held at the home of Edward Thomas and his sisters, Mary and Emily, relatives of Gomer T. Griffiths. We met Brother and Sister Van Eaton, of Canada, who formerly lived in Tacoma. They are visiting relatives and friends.

J. M. TERRY.

Cornwall, Ontario

I am forwarding you a few facts concerning the work which has been accomplished in our branch since its inception and organization in October and November, 1920, at the hands of Apostle R. C. Russell and Elder Philemon Pement. Since that time we have made some very respectable strides towards a regular working organization, under the able leadership of our pastor, Elder O. L. Weaver, with many helpful boosts from Apostle Russell, who has tried many ways to get the people of this place interested in the gospel message. But this is new ground to the work, and he has had a lot of prejudice to contend with, but there are many people in this town who know more about Latter Day Saintism, both reorganized and otherwise, than they ever thought existed previous to the time of Brother Russell's coming here.

We have a very lively lot of workers in this branch. Practically everyone wants to be up and doing. We have also been greatly blessed spiritually, having had three gifts of prophecy and several cases of healing.

Our Sunday school is in a flourishing condition, with a membership of twenty-two. We raised $42 Christmas offering for the preceding six months. We also had a splendid Christmas tree and entertainment. Brother Russell spent Christmas with us.

May the gospel prosper is our prayer.

J. E. MULLEN.

Central Chicago

The young people of the branch have been active of late. A few weeks ago the Orioles gave a bakery sale at which they made twenty dollars which they contributed to the decorating of the church.

Recently a very successful musical program was given by the Religio Glee Club with Roy Cheville as director and Sister Margaret Wickes as pianist and reader. "The viking chorus," "The hunt," "Come where the lilies bloom," and "Gloria" were some of the choruses. There were many interesting and amusing songs and stunts, but possibly the most impressive feature of the evening was the simple, pleasing manner in which our young people sang the first verse of, "Jesus, I my cross have taken," immediately following "Gloria" as the last number.

Though Brother Cheville is with us for only a short time, he is doing a splendid work, and while Sister Wickes has been with this branch for years and always responds, she is ever greeted with enthusiasm. The success of such an evening's effort makes us realize that there is much talent among our young people and we believe they are awakening to the fact that it should be cultivated. We are glad when they can have such leadership as they have had in the past few weeks.

Saint Louis, Missouri

An innovation in our Sunday school efforts was a supper to which all teachers and officers were invited. After a very pleasant meal they pushed back their plates and with elbows on the table discussed in a social way problems for the betterment of our work with the children. The ideas advanced by S. A. Burgess in a sermon the previous Sunday were made the basis of a talk on forming good habits and having the attitude of respect for the church by Sister Anna de Jong Smith. The meeting was entertaining, helpful, and thoroughly enjoyed.

At the morning meeting, January 29, Brother Leslie S. Wight again held the attention of the congregation on the idea and text, "Contend earnestly for the faith," from Jude 3. The ideas advanced on faith were so well put that a child could have been interested. Faith in ourselves; in those we are associated with; faith in the plan of salvation and in those who direct our activities in the gospel; and most important, "Have faith in God."

Brother Hampson occupied the evening hour in his usual earnest and convincing manner. His theme, "Charity," was to show that not what others do to us makes or mars, but our attitude, words, and works will have to be answered for. Can we as individuals suffer long and be kind, think no evil, and go forward, trying to follow the Christ example when others mistreat or misrepresent us?

There are several on the sick list and one, the mother of R. B. and Granville Trowbridge, passed away on Tuesday, January 31, in her eighty-first year. All her sons and the one surviving daughter were present to see her laid to rest. She was a beautiful example of gentleness and affectionate consideration for others. We loved her and will miss her greatly.

On Tuesday, February 7, the members of the Saint Louis Branch gave a big reception to Clyde F. Ellis and his fiancée at the home of Sister Crabtree. A good-sized "purse" was presented to them as a token of esteem. A fine program in charge of Pastor Archibald and refreshments furnished a most delightful evening.

Wednesday evening at Lansdowne church occurred the wedding of Brother Ellis and Miss Dana Watts. The bridal party was a little late, and the interim was occupied by some excellent music. The ceremony was impressively performed by Elder J. M. Hampson. Brother Ellis and wife leave this mission with the prayers and good wishes of all for a safe journey to their island mission.

February 5, the sacrament was well attended, three babies were blessed, and the prayer for each was so spiritual that we felt it should and would call down a special blessing for each little one.

Our choir, under the leadership of Brother Ed Bell, were invited to sing at the Masonic Home this afternoon. Those present were enthusiastic in their praise of the music rendered. There was no prejudice exhibited, but all seemed delighted.

Brother C. Ed. Miller spoke at the evening service and should have had a larger attendance to absorb so excellent a sermon. "Lest we forget," was the theme, but the spirit and inspiration of the sermon cannot be transferred to paper. The conclusion on the necessity of partaking of the sacrament to remind us of the Savior's love for mankind was truly inspirational.

San Francisco, California

On January 16 we were given quite a treat. President Frederick M. Smith and Doctor G. L. Harrington spent the day at Oakland. The San Francisco Branch closed the door of our church and spent the entire day with the Oakland Saints. Brother Harrington preached at the morning service; also in the evening. He also held one meeting for men only and one for women only. It was a busy day for him and much appreciated. They claim an attendance of three hundred fifty. Two meals were served at the church, so all could remain there all day. A good social and profitable time was had.

On January 19, President Smith preached in this city on "Stewardships." It was a very interesting and instructive talk and much enjoyed by all who heard him. We hear he has since preached at Salt Lake City.

At our recent business meeting, our secretary reports our membership as two hundred eight, average attendance at services fifty; not many out of a city of six hundred thousand. But many baptized here have gone to other branches so two hundred eight does not represent all our work done here. All is going nicely with us. We have our eyes still Zionward.

January 29. For the first time in this city I went to church in a snowstorm. It has been years since snow fell here. It did not cover the ground in the city, but "Twin Peaks," one of our suburbs, was covered three feet deep. Mount Tamalpais, across the bay, is a beautiful sight with its five feet of snow. All the surrounding country was covered; in many places for the first time known.

January 31. This morning about 5.30, we had a slight earthquake. We are living in times of change. Watch the signs of the times.

GEORGE S. LINCOLN.

London, Ontario

A very enjoyable evening was spent last week by the members of the young ladies' and young men's classes of the Sunday school. The object was to create a stronger social interest among the members, who are not regular attendants at Sunday school and church services. The program was in charge of the men, the lunch prepared by the ladies. The success of the evening was due to the untiring efforts of Brother and Sister T. B. Richardson. We believe it will be conducive to good.

We also are pleased to announce a hearty response to the request of Bishop McGuire for financial aid for the general church. Our branch took the matter up, with the result that over $1,400 in tithes and offerings were received by the solicitors for the month of January.

MISCELLANEOUS

Traffic Manager

It has been deemed advisable to appoint a traffic manager to handle all questions of passenger and freight traffic for the church. The Presidency has so appointed G. S. Trowbridge, and we request that all representatives of the church seeking clergy rates, or special rate concessions, do so through our transportation bureau, and also inform the traffic manager as to concessions held or secured.

All applications for clergy credentials or certificates, etc., will be indorsed by the traffic manager, who will deal with the various clergy bureaus direct, and also have the handling of rates to conferences and conventions, etc.

The appointment of Brother Trowbridge as traffic manager dates from February 8, 1922.

The Bishopric

Mobile District: Having received the resignation of Brother W. L. Booker, who for a number of years has acted as Bishop's agent of the Mobile District, we hereby appoint Brother Henry B. Scarcliff, Route 1, Box 107, Mobile, Alabama, as his successor.

The paying of our tithe is a means, in the hands of God, of developing our characters. Our prayer is that God may abundantly bless his people in their material welfare and that, being blessed, they may have a desire to render unto the Lord that portion that he has required of them.

We wish to express publicly our appreciation of the years of service which Brother Booker has rendered as bishop's agent.

Clinton District: Having received the resignation of Brother W. E. Reynolds, who for a number of years has acted as Bishop's agent of the Clinton District, we hereby appoint Brother R. T. Walters, 400 South Forest Street, Eldorado Springs, Missouri.

Brother Walters is well known in the Clinton District, having served the church in a missionary way for a great many years. Our prayer is that God may abundantly bless his people in their material affairs and that, being blessed, they may have a desire to render unto the Lord that portion that he has required of them. The paying of our tithe is a means in the hands of God of developing our characters. Our observations will teach us that he who sows sparingly, will reap sparingly, while he who sows freely will reap a bountiful harvest.

The Psalmist has declared that "He who giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord."

We publicly express our appreciation of the years of service which Brother Reynolds has rendered as Bishop's agent.

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Loan Wanted

A certain brother residing in a very unfriendly place, is in dire need of a loan of $2,500 to take up one about to become due. It does not appear that he can make such a loan from local people, though he can give ample security. It would be an act of brotherly kindness to assist this brother. If any will volunteer they should write Elder Ward L. Christy, 6532 South Hermitage Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, who knows all the facts and who will make all necessary arrangements for the transaction. Let friends to the cause give this consideration.

Yours truly,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Delegates for General Conference

Notice is hereby given that all Sunday school districts should elect their delegates for the next General Conference, October 1, 1922.

A. MAX CARMICHAEL,
General Superintendent.

Requests for Prayers

Sister M. A. Hughes of Clarinda, Iowa, requests the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed of heart trouble. God has healed her in the past and she has faith in prayer.

Sister George Wass, of Addison, Maine, desires the prayers of the Saints that her health may improve.

Addresses

Elder Myron A. McConley, 65 Nelson Street, Rozelle, New South Wales, Australia.

Our Departed Ones

CONYERS.—Marian Durfee was born in Iowa, October 15, 1861. Married George Conyers, December 25, 1877. Settled near Hagerman, Idaho, as pioneers many years ago. Died January 9. Funeral sermon by William Glauner. Her husband, six of their seven children, four brothers, three sisters, and her aged mother survive.

WHALLEY.—Ann, widow of William Whalley, was born at North Meuls, Lancashire, England. Was a member of the church for thirty-eight years. Died January 30, at the age of seventy-nine years, eleven months, and twenty-two days. Four daughters, fifteen grandchildren, and fifteen great-grandchildren survive. Funeral sermon by H. A. Koehler.

SMITH.—Esther A., daughter of David and Hannah Terry, was born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, April 23, 1843. Married James J. Smith in June, 1893. Baptized June 4, 1893. Died at the home of her brother, J. L. Terry, in Millersburg, Illinois, February 3. Her husband preceded her in 1914. Two brothers and one sister survive. Funeral from the Saints' church, H. L. Cady in charge. Sermon by George Sackfield.

LAMPSEN.—Lena M. Lampsen was born March 4, 1876, at Neenah, Wisconsin. Baptized June 13, 1920. Died February 4, after a lingering illness which she bore with patience. Funeral at Holland, Michigan. Sermon by Archie Whitehead. One son, one daughter, and one granddaughter survive.

PARMAN.—Marian Sylvester Parman was born January 13, 1863; at Hamburg, Iowa. Married Victoria C. Wheeler at Kansas City, Missouri, September 23, 1886. Died at Saint Mary's Hospital, Kansas City, Missouri, January 13. His wife, one daughter, and four sons are left to mourn. Funeral from Walnut Park Church in charge of A. H. Parsons. Sermon by B. J. Scott. Interment at Elmwood Cemetery, Kansas City.

Watch It Rise

How High Will
It Go?

The 1921 Christmas offering books will be closed February 28. Funds now in the hands of local treasurers or Bishop's agents should be sent in so as to reach this office on or before that date so it will be included with last year's offering.

The total receipts to February 11, are $41,593.72.

The 1920 Christmas offering amounted to $86,273. How high will the indicator rise on our 1921 Christmas offering thermometer?

What is your best guess?

We will publish the names of the ten persons who come the nearest to the grand total. We should have your estimate in this office not later than February 20.

Now, altogether!
How high will it go?
What do you say?

B. R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 13,
1922.

Who Will Provide Homes for These?

The merciless economic conditions of the world have produced some tragic conditions in the homes of our people and we now have letters requesting us to assist in finding homes for children who are depending upon their mother for support, and she must leave the home in order to obtain a livelihood, thus giving neither the children nor their mother an equal chance in life's struggles. This presents a test of true religion, to help the widows and the fatherless.

Kindly appeal to the Saints through your columns to find homes for one fourteen-year-old girl, one thirteen-year-old girl, one thirteen-year-old boy and his brother eleven years old, and a girl nine years old. Can the Saints give these children homes where they can work for their board and attend school?

Very sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, Box 256.

Donations to Sanitarium and Holden Home

We are in receipt of lists of donors and items received by the Independence Sanitarium and the Holden Home for the aged. The lists are too extensive for publication just now, so we are referring them to the Presiding Bishopric for their files.

It is pleasing to note that the Saints have been so generous in their gifts, and that from Maine to California, from Texas to Michigan, articles and cash have been sent, all of which is greatly appreciated by those who have direct responsibility in the institutions and those who as patients enjoy them.

Williams Articles in Autumn Leaves

Three of the articles announced in these columns recently to be contributed by T. W. Williams have reached the editor of Autumn Leaves and are very interesting and inspiring. An error occurred in the announcement, in saying that Bournville was near Manchester. It is near Birmingham. It is to be hoped that Elder Williams will also find it possible to visit the garden cities of Letchworth and Welwyn or some other noted demonstrations of civic and industrial possibilities, and report in his illuminating way on the results they are attaining.

Reduced in Size—Same Price

The Christian Leader, with its issue of January 31, appears in a reduced size, a manifestation of the difficulties encountered in the religious publishing field these days. Formerly they had four fourteen-inch columns, while now they have three columns about eleven and three quarters inches deep. The price remains the same, $2 a year for the sixteen-page paper.

Canadian Postage Reduced

Postage on Stepping Stones and Zion's Hope addressed to Canadian points will be reduced at once, as follows: Stepping Stones, in bundles of five or more to one address, reduced to ten cents per copy per year extra postage; five cents a copy on Zion's Hope. The extra charge on less than five copies to the same address will be continued at the rate of twenty cents a copy per year on Stepping Stones and fifteen cents a copy per year on Zion's Hope.

The Name of the Church

Occasionally a member of the church is disturbed over the argument that the church should be called after the name of Christ. There is no reason why anyone should be disturbed, for the argument is a very good one—but it is one that has been strangely perverted.

It has been a stock argument with the followers of David Whitmer for years. They ask, Why not call the church The Church of Christ, rather than The Latter Day Saints' Church? The question would be pertinent, only that it contains two misapprehensions—which are rather too many for one question.

The Book of Mormon says:

Have ye not read the scriptures, which say, Ye must take upon you the name of Christ, which is my name? for by this name shall ye be called at the last day; and whoso taketh upon him my name, and endureth to the end, the same shall be saved at the last day; therefore, whatsoever ye shall do, ye shall do it in my name; therefore ye shall call the church in my name; and ye shall call upon the Father in my name, that he will bless the church for my sake; and how be it my church, save it be called in my name? For if a church be called in Moses' name, then it be Moses' church; or if it be called in the name of a man, then it be the church of a man; but if it be called in my name, then it is my church, if it so be that they are built upon my gospel.—Nephi 12: 18-20.

That seems to clinch the argument. But what is the name of the Christ? At that point appears the first misapprehension of the question. The angel said to Joseph, concerning Mary: "She shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus." (Matthew 1: 21.)

Jesus is his name. Christ is, more properly, his title, though it came to be used as a name and he so used it at times. But he himself, very often, recognized the title also: "Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ." (Matthew 16: 20.) Note this also: "And Peter answereth and saith unto him, Thou art the Christ." (Mark 8: 29.) And, "That ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ." (John 20: 31.) Instances might be multiplied at great length.

David Whitmer in his "Address to all believers" refers to the Book of Mormon passage quoted above, and then very adroitly clouds the issue by saying: "If he had wanted them to call it by the name Jesus Christ he would have said so, but he said the name Christ." (Page 73.) As you will observe, the text says, "The name of Christ" (which is Jesus, Matthew 1: 21); but Whitmer conveniently says, "the name Christ."

"Thou shalt call his name Jesus." (Matthew 1: 21.) "The name of Jesus is the proper name of our Lord, and that of Christ is added to identify him with the promised Messiah."—Smith's Bible Dictionary. "The Hebrew 'Messiah' and the Greek 'Christ' were names which represented his office as the anointed Prophet, Priest and King; but 'Jesus' was the personal name which he bore."—The Life of Christ, by Farrar, volume 1, page 11. "The word Christ was not originally a name, but a title. In the Gospels we scarcely ever read of Christ, but always of 'the Christ.' It was only after the resurrection that the title gradually passed into a name, and 'Jesus Christ,' or later still 'Christ Jesus,' becomes one designation."—Encyclopædia Britannica.

Even granting that the title, Christ, by usage came to be regarded as his name, or at least a part of his name, as without question it was used at times in the Book of Mormon and elsewhere, and with his sanction, surely those are straining at a gnat who would forbid us to associate with it the proper name conferred on him by the angel, that of "Jesus," and call the church "The Church of Jesus Christ." They hang up on a hard and strained interpretation of one or two texts to do so, and thus come in conflict with scores of other texts with which there need be no conflict. Yet Whitmer did actually object to the use of the God-given name "Jesus" in connection with "Christ" as the name of the church. (See Address to Believers, page 73.)

To argue that my wife takes my name upon her when she is known as Mrs. Smith, but does not bear my name when she is known as Mrs. Elbert Smith, is strange logic. It is Whitmerite logic. It is the same logic that accepts the Book of Mormon while rejecting the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. It is quite capable of other strange conclusions.

It is true that very often the full name and title appear, omitting the conjunction, as in the following, and may very properly be so used:

"Yea, behold, I say unto you, that as these things are true, and as the Lord God liveth, there is none other name given under heaven, save it be this Jesus Christ of which I have spoken, whereby man can be saved."—2 Nephi 11:39.

The second misapprehension is in supposing that the title, Latter Day Saints, constitutes the name of this church. The corporate name is "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

"The name of this association and organization shall be, 'The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints' and shall be incorporated under the laws of Iowa in and by that name."—Article 1, Articles of Association, Rules of Order and Debate, p. 116.

Strip away the qualifying words and clauses and you have the essential name of the church: The Church of Jesus Christ. It is the Church of Jesus Christ, reorganized, and composed of Latter Day Saints. It is called after his name. The assault upon the church on that ground has no force or logic, and by it many other assaults may be judged, being of like nature, differing only in degree of inanity.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Ordination of Members of the High Council

A very splendid and spiritual meeting of the priesthood in Zion was held in the Stone Church, Sunday afternoon, February 19. Probably four hundred ordained men were in attendance. The late General Conference authorized the First Presidency to reorganize the Standing High Council of the church. Having made the selection of men, the Presidency felt fully authorized to proceed, subject to the action of the next General Conference, to which, naturally, report will be made. Still, they felt it highly desirable to submit the matter to a representative body in the interim for their support and approval. Accordingly the matter was submitted to the mass meeting of the priesthood in Zion.

The Church Historian, Walter W. Smith, gave a brief outline of the procedure in organizing the council originally, also in reorganizing it from time to time. Following this President Frederick M. Smith presented the names of the new members and they were voted on one by one. In each instance the vote of approval was unanimous. The men were then ordained, or set apart by blessing under the imposition of hands. Those officiating were Presidents Frederick M. and Elbert A. Smith, Apostle U. W. Greene, and Historian Walter W. Smith.

Seven new members were thus set apart, namely: Mark H. Siegfried, John F. Garver, J. A. Becker, Nathaniel Carmichael, R. V. Hopkins, I. A. Smith, and John M. Cockerton. Brother Nathaniel Carmichael was first ordained to the office of high priest. The five members holding over from the former High Council are: J. A. Tanner, George Hulmes, Walter W. Smith, Samuel Twombly, and R. J. Lambert.

Men of various callings were selected under the direction of wisdom and the spirit of inspiration, so that the varied matters, both judicial and temporal, which may come before the high council in Zion may be approached by a group of men of varied experiences and temperament. It is understood of course that where a case comes before the council which has previously been heard by one of the bishops thus selected or by one of the stake presidents, another man will substitute during that particular case.

Following the ordination the priesthood sang, "I need Thee every hour." President Frederick M. Smith then delivered a short address which was much appreciated. He admonished every ordained man to make a new consecration of his life, to combat evil in all forms, and to protect the interests of Zion against all corrupting influences. He remarked in a jocular tone that in the preliminary meeting held by the council the first recommendation that he had presented, and one which he desired adopted, had been rejected by a very large majority vote of the council, indicating that the men selected are men of integrity, of independent thought. They are just men, before whom a criminal may well fear to appear; but an innocent man in trouble need have no anxiety in appearing before them. The meeting closed with the song, "Jesus, I my cross have taken." There was no lecture. The splendid feeling present cannot be described in writing. The good done will long remain.

"Brother J. E. Macgregor is the pastor of this branch in the Far West," writes Sister C. A. Hammond, from Battleford, Saskatchewan. "We have a membership of thirty-five and meet at the various homes. We have Sunday school at one o'clock and preaching at two. On Wednesday afternoons, Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon classes meet with Brother Maurice Pierce. Our president and his wife are absent for the winter. They are in London, Ontario, where a little daughter was born to them, January 21. All missionaries have a standing invitation to our home."

Teamwork

Recently a boy was asked how it was that boys, when they quarrel, do not remain angry at each other. He replied that it was because in all their games the captain of their team would always say to them, "Now you fellows settle your differences or you can get out," so they would at once make up, and, even if they had been fighting, would shake hands when the fight was over, for that is a rule of the game, and necessary to teamwork.

This shows not only the advantage of cooperative or social games, but also shows the value of teamwork as applied to everyday life. If boys on a ball team quickly make up their difficulties in order to continue the game, how long can brethren and sisters safely remain angry one with another?

This is one of the things that is meant by teamwork. It is one of the things that is meant when we speak of a spirit of cooperation. We should not wear our personal difficulties and feelings so much on our sleeves. It is probably one of our most common experiences that when anyone injures us we wish to get even. Great souls overlook little offenses and finally overlook all offenses, whether intentional or unintentional. It is a peculiar experience when one tries to injure us and we feel his shaft of ill will passing beneath our feet, for we are not where he thinks we are at all.

When one is striving for better things, to "get even" means primarily that we will come down to the level of the one who has offended us. There are only two ways to get even: One is that when some one wrongs us, we come down to his level in order to respond with a similar wrong; or we can get even by helping him to rise until we meet on a higher plane; for in helping him to rise, we will also rise to a higher level ourselves.

There can be no question about which is the right way, or which is the way approved of God. We are commanded to "forgive one another," to "pray for those who despitefully use us," "to do good to all men."

There are times when we may feel like the little boy did whose brother was tickling his foot while he was saying his prayers. He wiggled his foot a few times, but finally said, "O Lord, please excuse me for a few minutes while I lick Jimmy." There are times we wish the Lord would look the other way for a little while. We have no intention of getting down and staying down, but we would like to get even, or pay the other man back in his own coin, even though it be counterfeit.

The Master, though he came to earth, did not descend to the level of sinning humanity. He was tempted, it is true, but without sin. He was raised up that he might draw all men unto him. He sought to get even by lifting all others to his plane so they might also be the sons and daughters of God.

Young People's Services

Beginning at Independence last year young people's meetings were held at various places throughout the church with uniformly good success. It was a first venture into the field of such specialized meetings and it was gratifying to the promoters to know that such good results were to be had.

Pioneering is always interesting, though not always personally profitable to those who must carry the burdens. Its advantages and disadvantages are not known quantities, and achievements are carefully noted and greatly appreciated. It was the consensus of opinion that this new kind of meeting had come to stay. Smaller places, with no need for seating restrictions, threw the house open and through sheer interest kept up the attendance the same as in the larger places which appealed to the human trait of appreciation for that which is difficult to acquire.

Now this year Zion arises to announce a new method based on the old plan, having advantages and disadvantages, both accepted on their face value. We refer to the plan of having separate speakers each evening. Each speaker has the advantage of specialization in his subject and the disadvantage of being denied the psychological follow-up. Those who have studied the subject from the audience or from the pulpit will understand what is involved here.

Big attendance is important; song service generally and enthusiastically participated in, a requirement; speakers clothed with power indispensable—but above all there must be motivating results that live on in the lives of those who have seen and heard and felt. There must be not only pleasing subconscious memories, but distinct and impelling impressions.

Over into the devotional life of the members must be carried and deeply planted the seed of gospel endeavor that with cultivation will open into godly fruitage.

The underlying aim of these services seems to be more informational than revivifying, more to urge forward than to bring back.

We are pleased to see them continue and succeed, demonstrating that they do not depend on novelty for their success, but rather have won a place in our religious life and are holding it. Let the good work go on till the Zion Builder ideal of "Go forward" becomes a mighty factor in leavening the lives of the Saints.

Business Conditions

A decline of about thirty per cent in cost of living in four years.

The Babson chart of American business conditions, issued January 24, 1922, shows a slight gain in the price of stocks, commodities, and bonds. The inference is that stocks and bonds will increase during the coming year, but that general conditions will not be greatly improved, but will be felt more in the West and by the laboring men.

The discussion of general business conditions, the price of stocks and bonds, is probably not of general interest to our readers. The commodity prices, however, should more or less reflect the condition of the cost of living, though it does not do so as accurately as does the Government report to which reference was made last week, because it is the average price of ten commodities, not including foodstuffs, while the Government report takes into consideration the cost of food, housing, clothing, fuel, light, furniture and furnishings, and other miscellaneous items. Still, when the curve is considered in a broad way rather than in detail, it reflects, indirectly, the cost of living.

Thus we note that for the twelve years, 1904 to 1915 inclusive, the commodity price scale varies between $1 and $1.53, averaging about $1.20. During 1916, there is a general and rapid rise from $1.30 to $2.20, with an average for the year of about $1.60. For the four years from 1917 to 1920 inclusive, the variations are from $2.20 to $3.70, the highest figure being reached in the middle of 1920, and apparently with a general average of about $2.83. For 1921, and beginning, in fact, in the middle of 1920, the curve shows a rapid decline down to about $1.72, an average for the year of $2. Of course the decrease in the wholesale price of ten leading commodities should be reflected, eventually, in the cost of living, though not a perfect index.

These figures would mean, approximately, that for each dollar used from 1904 to 1915, there would be needed, to maintain the same standard of living for the years 1917 to 1920, $2.40, but the same standard of living would still be maintained during 1921 with $1.67. This indicates a similar result to that pointed out last week. While the extreme changes are more radical, still the general result is approximately the same, though these figures of Mr. Babson's would indicate a decline of about 30 per cent from the four highest years, 1917-1920.

In making a comparison of our personal living, or in making a comparison of missionaries' allowances, these general figures should be kept in mind. The increase for the four highest years at the close of the war and afterwards, and then the corresponding decrease in the cost of living as confronting us at the present time, and which, it would indicate, will be the prices for 1922.

Trust Deeds Are Construed by Common Sense

A few years ago a suit was filed in Boston between the trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society and the directors of the First Church of Christ, Scientist. The suit involved an interpretation of the deed of trust of the publishing society, as the board of directors of the First Church of Christ Scientists had presented a resolution removing one of the trustees of the publishing society. It was an interesting case, as the deed of trust was absolute in its terms making the Board of Trustees a self-perpetuated body with power to fill all vacancies.

The Master in Chancery, to whom the case was referred, found for the trustees of the publishing society because of the form of the deed of trust, on technical law points. The matter, however, was taken up before the supreme judicial court, and they found according to common sense despite the legal complexities, that where all irrelevancies are shorn away and the essential terms only considered, the great principles of the law support common sense, which, of course, is the self-evident rule of good management, that the chief organized authority of any organization shall be recognized also as the final authority over the subordinate organizations.

This is of interest as showing the disposition of the court to interpret according to the broad intent of the maker and not according to minor or legal complications and technicalities.

They also found that although certain authority had been vested at the time the deed was made in the First Members of the Christian Science Church, that these powers had since been delegated to a board of directors. The court held, in the absence of any legal contravention, the members of the church are competent to govern its affairs as they see fit, and that the act of the members or of their representatives takes validity from the common consent of the members and need not be made perfect in the technicalities required of a commercial corporation.

A third interesting point was that while as a general rule removal from office requires a trial, where the matter had been well discussed orally and in writing, somewhat forcibly, the failure to give a formal hearing before removal does not invalidate such action.

Reminiscences

By W. R. Armstrong

Interesting historical matter written for the British Number of recent date.

Since receiving a request to write for your columns we have several times sat by the "Ingle Neuk" and striven to revive the weird images of the past. Gradually they have assumed living shapes, breathed, spoken, and moved. While these are varied and many, we can introduce you to but a few. We trust they may be of lasting benefit to you.

We will first present two quotations for your consideration and in the light of these we will proceed.

1. If we work upon marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble to dust: But if we work upon immortal minds, if we imbue them with right principles, with the just fear of God and love of our fellow men, we engraven on these tablets something which will brighten all eternity.

2. We need absolute truth correlated by all departments of experience and knowledge.

The Writer's Parents

My parents were born in Ulster. On both sides they were of Scotch extraction, which may account for their ingrained piety.

My mother became a member of the church in her youth, before the martyrdom of Joseph Smith, and my father had been brought up by a Roman Catholic mother after the untimely death of a Protestant soldier father who had been wounded at Waterloo in 1815.

When my father first met my mother he had just returned from service in India and was wearing the uniform of a soldier of the Sixty-second Infantry. He asked her to become his wife, but she replied: "We are considered weak in the faith if we marry outside our church." He then told her that he was not bigoted. However, he afterwards attended several Saints' meetings, heard the manifestations of the Spirit, one of which foretold his joining the church, and he was ultimately baptized. He married my mother soon afterwards and became an elder of the church. A branch of thirty members was raised in his regiment, which held its meetings in the Rotunda Dublin.

Childhood Training

In my childhood we were daily familiarized with the establishment of the work, its history, the church ordinances, and the fulfillment of prophecies, much as it was in the case of ancient Israel. (Deuteronomy 6: 6, 7.) Here we would like to say in the words of William Dean Howells, of Belmont, Ohio: "If my mother was the heart, my father was the soul of the family. . . . They endowed their children with the real golden age, of which the retrospect is worth a king's ransom." My mother told us that at one time she had a companion named Sarah Perkins, a cripple, who conceived the idea of going to Nauvoo for the purpose of appealing to our prophet for the anointing of oil in order that she might be healed of her affliction. She accomplished the journey and was duly anointed by Joseph and Hyrum Smith, who did not promise her restoration, but eternal life in the world to come through her suffering here.

She returned to her native land and, whilst crossing the ocean, our Prophet and his brother were assassinated. A procession marched through the streets of Manchester to commemorate this sad event, when my mother and other young women carried creped banners to show their love for the departed.

"The mystery of iniquity" began to work soon. How? Well, an attempt was made to teach polygamy to my mother's companion, in a deceitful way. It was passed from one to the other. It was circulated and poisoned the life blood of the body.

John Taylor's Advent

When John Taylor made his advent my mother questioned him about the matter: "Are you not afraid to speak to big folks like me?" he replied. "No, indeed, I am not," said that godly mother. He dissembled there as he did at Boulogne-sur-Mer. As I open volume 3, page 74, of the Millennial Star, I read:

But for the information of those who may be assailed by those foolish tales about the two wives, we would say that no such principle ever existed among the Latter Day Saints and never will." (August, 1842.)

Again, on page 144, volume 4, Millennial Star, we read:

Inasmuch as this Church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication and polygamy, we declare that we believe, that one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband, except in case of death when either is at liberty to marry again.

These passages were published in the official organ of the church before the Prophet's death, and circulated far and wide. Yet when deceitful workers came along after the death of our Prophet, even the editor who recorded these departed from the right way of the Lord and went into apostasy, losing his life in consequence. The majority seem to have been possessed with a spirit of blind fanaticism. We have shown these statements to members of the Utah Church in this land. They have acknowledged their truth and then, in spite of knowledge of right, they have done wrong. One woman left her husband to go to America and when I called at the house another woman opened the door.

A Case of Healing

"In spite of the evil that crept in like a flood," there were some good folk left in the work and they continued good in spite of the evil. Two of these were named William Walker and William Gibson. Some of your readers may remember the latter by referring to "Orson Pratt's Tracts," where he takes part in a discussion with the Reverend Woodville Woodman, at Belton, in 1851. On one occasion this godly Scotch missionary came to stay in our home. Our eldest sister lay ill with brain fever and she had been unconscious for several days. The brother was asked to anoint her with oil. He did so, and when he removed his hands she regained consciousness and spoke, after a silence of several days.

The subtlety of the working of the Utah hierarchy was only made manifest to us in Manchester after many years, and the departure from the right way of the Lord was almost imperceptible.

Crisis in the Church

Nearly forty-five years ago, a crisis was reached in the Manchester Branch of the Utah Church. This was not the work of a moment. Through the tyrannical conduct of a man named Edmund Snelgrove about twenty persons seceded in a body. The man named was one of the counselors to the quorum of high priests in Utah. On May 14, 1876, just after the sacrament had been administered to the assembled worshipers in a Sunday afternoon fellowship meeting which met in the Temperance Hall, Grosvenor Street, this representative man arose and said that he wished to speak the sentiments of his heart.

He told the people that he had been under the droppings of the sanctuary for the past twenty years and that he had come to govern Manchester and the conference as well. We were informed that he intended to be master. It had happened, he said, in the exercise of his prerogative, that he had undertaken to make an appointment without consulting the wishes of the almighty Manchester council, which appointment had set all hell boiling, but the scum was coming to the top and he would skim it off.

After this effusion he proceeded to make personal allusion to some who were present whom he supposed were conspiring against him. They were charged with being short of faith and apostates. Several of those present rose and left the assembly. One of this number said: "Brother Snelgrove, you are no gentleman." He called out: "Oh, you are non compos mentis." This scene is indelibly printed on my mind. But two of those who were present in that assembly are now living: Sister Bruton, of Manchester, and your correspondent. The principal actors have passed to their rest.

Saints Stood Aloof

The disaffected members stood aloof from all churches for some time. They felt that they had been grossly deceived. Dear HERALD readers, have you ever had a similar experience? With what fervor had we sung "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," and, "O Zion, when I think of thee," along with other soul-stirring hymns. A little while before this severance took place my mother had reason to rebuke some of these Utah elders for improper conversation. They resented her correction and were overheard by my father to say: "Wait till we get that lady out yonder." We can see now why our father in those old days bought a breech-loader to go to Zion with. Visions of a militant church began to loom from the subconscious area. He passed to his rest without going to Zion, but the gun remains to keep in mind those stirring times.

My mother had asked the Lord fervently at this time to open up the way for us to go to Zion (Salt Lake City, we thought), and she was shown in a dream a dray at our door loaded up with coffins. She never prayed to go there again.

A Man Like Moses

The Saints thus liberated from the bondage of Utah found a man like unto Moses to lead them. Strange to relate, about this time Thomas Taylor, president of the Reorganized Church in England, was passing through Manchester on his way to Farnworth when he heard a man preaching in the street. Mentally he appealed to the Lord, asking whether he had not some true followers in our large city. The answer to that prayer came almost immediately.

In some way communication was set up with Brother Taylor, who resided at Birmingham. Numerous tracts were forwarded, which conveyed the necessary information regarding the Utah apostasy. This resulted in our uniting with the Reorganization on September 16 and 17, 1876. Fourteen persons were then baptized and six more requested baptism.

The first church of the Reorganization was then established in Manchester, under the presidency of John Miller. This branch afterwards increased to nine branches, with a membership of several hundred. They were organized into a district under the very capable leadership of Joseph Dewsnup, sr., the father of a former president of Graceland College. Soon after the organization of the Manchester Branch we received occasional visits from Elder Coward, of Birkenhead. This gentleman was formerly a merchant on the Liverpool Exchange. He became interested in the Utah Church, entered its fold, and emigrated.

Before leaving England he was commissioned by Brigham Young to bring out sugar-refining machinery with him. He did so, teams being sent to drag it over the plains to Salt Lake City, but not one cent was ever paid to Elder Coward for it. By this and other crooked and sinful doings our brother became convinced that this people had departed from the right way of the Lord. He returned to his native land, united with the Reorganization, performed numerous charitable acts, and passed to his rest in the full hope of eternal life. I might name others, worthy souls, but I refrain, save in the case of one sister who recently joined our ranks.

A Ministering Spirit

About eleven years ago a lady named Mrs. Newton came to my home. She knew that my wife had recently died and she requested that she might be engaged as housekeeper. She had previously been engaged in the home of the King's Proctor Guernsey. Why she came to me I do not clearly know. The question of wages did not appear to trouble her. She proved to be an excellent woman in every way, and desirous of serving the Lord. Our two motherless boys and myself benefited by her care and skill. While she was with us she became convinced of the truth of our work. She saw that the missionary, the tramp, and the woman of fashion received hospitality for Christ's sake.

During the time that Sister Newton lived in our home much excitement and downright ill feeling was stirred up in the press against the Utah Church. We were, designedly or otherwise, associated with them. Sister Newton's friends came to see her and asked her what she was going to do. They thought she would certainly leave us, but she informed them that she would do no such thing. Ultimately several newspaper men called to make inquiries. Our position in the press was vindicated and the excitement, as far as we were concerned, was allayed.

Companion to a Blind Woman

After twelve months our sister left our home. She became companion to a blind lady who made certain specious promises to her which were never fulfilled. At this time she was living at Blackpool, a watering place on the Lancashire coast. Whilst she resided in this town she was invited to attend a Roman Catholic church. During the service the preacher made uncomplimentary allusions to the Latter Day Saints, which she openly contradicted from a front pew where she sat. She called out to the priest that she would give him the address of a gentleman who would satisfactorily answer any questions he might choose to ask. He called out that he would see her at the close. He did not do so, however, but her friends commended her for her boldness.

Our sister fell ill and lost the use of her legs shortly after this incident. This completely unfitted her for her task and she was therefore brought to Manchester and finally to a widowed daughter's home.

Our sister's medical adviser could not explain the cause of her affliction. For about three years we visited her week by week and prayed for her recovery. Many times she regretted that she had not obeyed the Lord's command whilst she was able to do so. During one of these visits we learned quite casually that our sister's aunt had been a Latter Day Saint fifty-six years before. Her name was Sarah Perkins, we were told, and she proved to be the young woman who was companion to my mother and had made the journey to Nauvoo over half a century before. It seems clear to us that "It was the Lord's doing and it is marvelous in our eyes."

Visited by Leading Men

Sister Newton was visited variously by Apostle U. W. Greene, Bishop R. May and wife, Patriarch James Baty, and ourselves. Plans for baptizing her were discussed, but did not mature. The sisters' Prayer Union was also appealed to. At length she began to manifest signs of returning strength. By degrees she was able to stand upon her feet, and then to walk about her bedroom. Finally she descended to the basement from the third floor. We next decided to baptize her. It was a long-looked-for privilege and the Lord had granted it. On the night of her baptism her granddaughter called to ask whether it was advisable for her grandma to enter the water, for she had a weak heart. We assured her it would be all right and she departed.

The dear old sister was helped step by step to the water. Joyfully and with true penitence she entered, and came out stronger than she went in, exclaiming: "I forgot all about my heart." She attended the Lord's house many times afterwards and entered and alighted from street cars. Twice she had serious illnesses, from which she recovered. On the second occasion her daughter met Brother James Baty and myself at the door to tell us that the end was near, but our brother declared by the Spirit that she should be restored. This actually happened, and the daughter who met us at the door died first.

The constant desire of this saintly woman was to do some good before her departure. Our sister did much more good than she knew. At length the end came on December 23, 1918. She was laid to rest in the Mode Wheel Cemetery, Ecclestone, Brother S. F. Mather and myself officiating.

Some Worthy Characters

Now my task is nearly concluded, dear readers, and I pause to think of some of the worthy ones whom I have met in my brief span of labor round Cottonopolis. There was John Miller, the dapper little Scotchman, a teacher of the blind. He was faithful unto death, like the Covenanter of his native heather-clad mountains and rugged glens; Joseph Ramsay, the exciseman of Bolton, faithful and true, the Saint Paul of his day, and mighty in the Scriptures: "old John McHugh," of Carlisle, who built up churches in Lanarkshire, the naturalist of the border country, who bade us "Live a day at a time"; James Baty, of Carlisle, too, who lived so near to his Master that he seemed to peer through the veil and see the Holy City; therefore he said, "Don't worry"; Thomas Hughes, who remembered the widow and the fatherless. He was the soul of generosity; William Clarke, of Didsbury (Manchester), too, who opposed the insidious teachings of the Utah hierarchy from the earliest times, and at last, when past eighty years of age, tottering with a stick and almost blind, was the means used by the Great All-father to originate the Northeast Manchester Church, one of the most flourishing in the British Isles; William Armstrong, who agitated for sweet music and singing, comfortable meetinghouses of our own, and punctuality; the Spargoes, the Cornish miners, noted for piety and steadfastness, who exchanged copper mining for coal mining, and found the Lord through that godly man, Henry Boyle, of Farnworth. These men, with their faithful wives, have passed to their rest, and their children's children carry on the glorious work which their forefathers began, and though they are "unhonored and unsung," yet their holy work lives in the hearts and minds of many.

A great deal of space is taken in the daily press concerning the tragedies arising out of the immorality of the day. As is pointed out in the Omaha Bee, the serious situation is not in these comparatively few fatalities in which a life is sacrificed, but because of the general lowering of the moral tone. Most motion pictures may be clean, and probably most of them are. The greatest pictures are irreproachable, but there has been the public support of pictures of a very different kind and a seeming tendency not to care how other people live or what is the matter with their private life. These incidental tragedies are only the superficial symptoms of the moral sickness of the age.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The Cost of Armament

In the cost of armaments and the expenses of the national debts, the following figures are rather striking, and will be surprising to some.

The appropriation for armaments in 1921 were greater than for the previous year, both in the United States and elsewhere. Great Britain's army and navy appropriations aggregated more than $1,000,000,000, while Japan's appropriation was over $282,000,000. The United States spent as much as both of these put together, but the greater cost of labor in the United States should be taken into consideration. The figures follow:

Armament Expenditures of United States

	Army	Navy
1881	$ 40,466,461	$ 15,686,672
1891	48,720,065	26,113,896
1901	114,615,697	60,506,978
1911	160,135,976	119,037,644
1921	771,530,000	651,222,000

The Meaning of Christianity

Recently, the editor of the Union Republican, of Machias, Maine, attended one of the services of our church at Jonesport, Maine. He is writing a sketch of each of the churches in that vicinity and intends to write up the Congregational and Reformed Baptists and others later, but in the issue of November 3, he prints an article under the heading, "Testimony," in which he gives a very fair presentation of some of the ideals of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He draws at once the distinction between this church and the Utah church and presents frankly the fact that Brigham Young introduced polygamy into his new colony and that he alone is responsible therefor. He emphasizes also the fact that our church holds for the New Testament and uses it, as a rule, as the basis of most of the sermons. Elder O. L. Thompson was evidently the speaker on the occasion when Mr. Richard Vincent Donnavan was in attendance. He quotes with approval words used by Elder Thompson, and expresses the opinion that the words, "Christianity is not excitement; it is the peaceful fruits of the Spirit," should be engraved in letters of gold on the back of every Bible and on the door of every congregation.

Far North Not a Frozen Desert

In the articles by Vilhjalmur Stefansson which have been appearing in the World's Work and which are also set out in detail in a recent book, The Free Arctic, one gets a new viewpoint of conditions existing under the Arctic Circle. The temperature in North Alaska and Greenland is not lower than is the case in Montana or the northern part of the United States. This is because there are three elements which affect temperature, one of which is latitude. Another is distance from the sea; a third is altitude. Only latitude affects the temperature of coastal Alaska. Again the snowfall is very much less than one would suppose. On the high tablelands of the interior of Greenland, there exists continual snow, but in the lowland of north Greenland there are many open meadows and only comparatively light snow, with a reasonable fall for the protection of vegetation.

His articles change so decidedly the ordinary viewpoint concerning conditions in the Arctic regions that they are well worthy of our careful consideration.

High Tariff

The Fair Tariff League points out that the present tariff is considerably higher than that of the Dingley and Payne Tariff Law. At first glance, it appears to be lower, but is in fact higher, as the rate is based on American valuation and wholesale prices instead of on the foreign selling price. It is significant to note that higher tariff taxes the consumer a possible $4,000,000,000 for protection granted to twenty-four of the industries affected, the Government collecting in duties less than $57,000,000. Over 8 per cent of the imports are not at all competitive, as similar articles are not produced in America. At the same time, the tariff has not increased, nor does it maintain wages, because with American machinery, the wage cost is less than for most others and probably for all other countries and also because the tariff rate is usually very much higher than the total percentage of wages paid in the industry.

However, competition prevents these various industries taking full advantage of the amount of protection actually granted, though it does insure high prices in many American industries.

Did He Call Himself?

The Outlook for November 23 contains an article under the title "Did he call himself?" It discusses a minister who was at one time much troubled by this question. He stated that if he had preeminent talents as a preacher, he would have considered that

Caroling in New England

I was requested by members of the New Bedford and Fall River choirs to assist in choral singing on Christmas Eve and night in these two places. Supplying myself with a lemon, some cough drops, and a bottle of listerine, I proceeded to prepare for a long siege of caroling.

As dusk fell, preparations for greeting the spirit of the Christ-child commenced. Sweet-faced girls and boys appear at the windows, placing candles that are to shine forth our welcome. Two rows there are of these; one on the broad sills at the bottom and the other where upper and lower sashes meet. Between rows of creamy-white pillars of light, are gay wreaths of laurels, holly, or evergreen, with flaming bows of red ribbon. Candles in place and burning, all other lights are extinguished. Within, the soft yellow glow of candle-light, augmented by the deeper red from fireplaces, flows like a benediction over the occupants of the room. Christmas Eve is surely the time for family confidences. Mother, father, and children spend the evening in pleasant conversation. A spirit of contentment pervades the atmosphere; discord and strife are far removed.

On Christmas Eve, in the town of Pomfret, nestling among the hills of Connecticut, a Christmas pageant is given each year, portraying the glorious birth of Christ. In Paris, at the same time, small bands of men playing instruments stop at intervals on their march over the streets, while the people open windows and doors to join in singing praises of a Savior's birth. Across the channel in Merrie England is heard the singing of countless thousands as they wend their way from place to place, caroling the advent of Jesus into the a call, but lacking such and not feeling interested in other lines of work, the question was raised in his mind, Was he called? or, Had he called himself?

When he went to work, he no longer had time to think about it, which the editor evidently considers a sufficient answer. He is thankful that he went into the ministry, but was he really called, or did he, like some others, in all sincerity and honesty, call himself?

Such a question may arise with those who are sensitive, so long as their call is of man. Good work can be done by social workers, it is true, but the minister of God, the ambassador for God, must be sent. How can he preach except he be sent? (Romans 10: 15.) No man should take this honor unto himself except he be called of God as was Aaron. (Hebrews 5: 4.) A man should be both called and ordained of God if he is to be a minister of God. All others, as we have long insisted, while they may do good work, must speak as those having authority from the scribes and not from God. (Matthew 7: 29.)

world. The Roman Catholics in Palestine, beneath its pale moon which turns the hills of Judea into silver, can be seen wending their way to the manger in Bethlehem to pay tribute to the "Son of Mary." The writer witnessed this pilgrimage, which produces a very worshipful effect. Benighted Russia, dimmed by the infidelity of her own, in the very gall of bitterness and anguish, has stopped for a moment to build fires in the streets which are kept alive by contributions of fuel of those who participate in singing praises of their Redeemer. The atmosphere of New England is also charged with the same spirit of rejoicing, and to her I wish to pay tribute for giving me the opportunity to participate in it.

Early in the evening the carolers met to start on their message of cheer. First we assembled at the church to dispense with our entertainment and distribute our gifts; then each gleefully repaired to the home of Sister Norton in New Bedford, where an English potpie with the "fixin's" awaited us. Coming in from the crisp, clear air, nothing could have been more welcome to the caroling pilgrims. Soon after the clock in the tower of a church struck the hour of midnight, the singers wrapped in their winter togs sallied forth into the clear air to inculcate into every avenue the spirit of Christmas, by voicing its sentiments in song. We stop beneath the bedroom windows of the home of friends who are (supposedly) slumbering in preparation for a strenuous day of celebration. Sweetly and softly the strains of "Silent night" are heard; there is a message unmistakable in its import that arouses the sleeping inmates of the home. Soon we see lights appear in the house, while others in other homes respond in like manner. Sometimes the sleepers lie awake without attempting to arise until a second song is heard, but they never fail to respond. Presently, as the voices peal forth with "O little town of Bethlehem," there are seen at the windows, faces which inspire the singers to renewed enthusiasm, while our pulses throb with emotion. Finally the windows are shoved high. "A Merry Christmas" is passed; a gift of money is seen to float down and fall among the minstrels. Then with a song of triumph and a message of cheer the carolers glide from beneath the windows to stop at another home to announce the birth of a Savior. Far away can be heard another group of singers, and the commonplace city sounds glorified in an atmosphere of stilled expectancy as each chant their songs of "peace on earth, good will to men." Under the brilliant moonlight these songs have a new meaning, a new message. All the worries and cares of the world seem inconsequential compared to the great truths embodied in these songs of the nativity.

On the line of march the pilgrims are occasionally invited in where food and drink are set before them. All the while mirth and joy still continue to fill every crevice and corner of the homes, until at an early morning hour, as light begins to dawn upon the carolers, these songs are still heard. Then, as the last caroler wends his way to his own fireside, a heavenly peace descends. The last flickering candle is sputtering in the windows; the kiddies are awakening and the whole environment is surcharged with the exultant cries as they grasp their gifts in rapturous surprise. The caroler in his sacrifice gets no rest until eventide again plays its shadows around him and he quietly retires with the satisfaction of having done his part in eliminating strife and discord by casting over all a spirit of contentment. On this occasion the Fall River choir succeeded in raising over fifty dollars, and the New Bedford choir nearly thirty dollars.

What One City Is Doing Musically

Elder Matthew W. Liston sends us a very interesting article describing the musical activities of Flint, Michigan, where he is living and where he has been laboring for several years in the interest of the spread of the gospel. Flint is unquestionably one of the most alert and progressive cities, musically, in the United States. To begin with, it was fortunate enough to be chosen as the manufacturing site for three of the largest automobile plants in the world, which contributed more than anything else to its phenomenal growth; it rising in a few years from an inconsequential, little-known, small city of but a few thousand to a metropolis of nearly a hundred thousand.

Those to whom the task of directing this city's growth and development fell have been in many ways blessed with remarkable foresight. They planned broadly for the future. They knew that if true civic success was attained the æsthetic and spiritual growth of the people must be cared for; and what more effective means could be found than music? So they early provided for an abundance of this ennobling art. The Flint Community Music Association was organized, and Mr. William Wellington Norton was secured and placed in charge of the greater development of the city's musical resources.

While at Flint this past summer we had the privilege of meeting this very capable man and becoming acquainted with his ideals and objectives. We enjoyed hearing, under his direction, a very creditable rendition of Haydn's "Creation" by the community chorus, accompanied by the community orchestra.

Mr. Norton of course did the "usual" things; he planned and conducted community sings in various sections of the city; he organized a chorus with the rendition of oratorios in view; a community orchestra to accompany this chorus and to give orchestral concerts was developed; a community band was built up. But Mr. Norton also did other things of much importance not so "usual." He took music and its culture right into the foundation of all civic and social education—the public schools.

Not only have the schools of Flint the usual course in singing, in common with all other schools, but large and flourishing classes in many of the various musical instruments are being successfully conducted. For instance, nine hundred children are taking piano lessons; two hundred and fifty are studying the violin, while smaller groups are being organized for instruction in cornet, clarinet, flute, oboe, bassoon, trombone, and other instruments of band and orchestra.

The private music teachers at first opposed the innovation, as has been the case in other cities where it was under consideration, on the ground that it would infringe upon their field, but after careful examination of the arrangements suggested by Mr. Norton the great majority were not only completely won over, but a number of them even took the intensive training course instituted prior to the establishment of the classes to fit themselves to assist in the group teaching. Under the Flint plan, no child is admitted to the classes who is taking lessons privately or has recently been doing so. On the other hand, it is expected that many who show talent in the classes will later develop it under private teachers, and this, together with the general musical interest aroused in the community, will actually rebound to the distinct benefit of the teachers.

At the head of the article sent in by Brother Liston is a half-tone cut showing a piano class in one of the Flint schools. In front of each pupil on the desk at which he sits, is a "dummy" piano keyboard upon which he "practices" the material being used in the lesson. One girl pupil in the front of the room is seated at a real piano, and near her, superintending the instruction, is the teacher. Brother Liston informs us that this teacher is Sister Ruth Wilcox, one of the members of the church at Flint, who has taken a very active interest in this department of the school's work. In passing, we will further say that Brother Liston himself has taken a very active and effective part in the musical development of Flint. He has assisted both Mr. Norton and the preceding community director in successfully carrying out projects for the advancement of the musical interests of the city. Many of our church people there are workers in this civic movement, and the fair name of the church is held there in greater esteem in consequence.

Now, what is the harvest that shall be reaped from the musical activities of Flint? Most of that harvest is yet in the future, of course, and it will consist of the enrichment of human lives in many ways. The children of the schools will be taught the elements of a beautiful art that will enhance their characters. The coming generation of Flint will be a music-loving one. The civic life of the city will be infinitely more worth while because of the presence within it of this breadth of music culture.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Among Our Own Music Workers

Brother Brit Coombe, writing from Winnipeg, Manitoba, gives us the following concerning the orchestra of the Sunday school of the church at that place:

"I will give you a little news as to what our orchestra is doing. The Winnipeg Branch has appointed the writer as director for the coming year, and it is my desire to do my best. I am very pleased to say that I have the support of all the members, and we are on the road to success. The members of the orchestra are very much in earnest and have voiced their desire for two practices each week.

"Some of our church members have instruments but are a little shy. I have assured them that there are none of us finished musicians but that practice makes perfect. We need a few more instruments, so the young ladies of the branch are going to help us to get them.

"Other Sunday schools have orchestras; why not ours? We have the material; why not harness it? I believe it will help keep our young people together."

Brother Edward C. Bell, director of the choir at Saint Louis, sends us an interesting program of a special religious service at the Masonic Home of Missouri, given at three o'clock Sunday afternoon, February 5, 1922. In reading this program we note that our Saint Louis choir has been honored by being given the principal place in the musical part of this program. This choir, under Brother Bell's direction, rendered two fine anthems: "Not unto us, O Lord" (E. L. Ashford) and "Arise, shine" (Fred C. Maker). Entire credit is given on the program to the fact that the choir is from the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Edward C. Bell, director," and thus the cause of the church is honored by their services.

The "Auditorium Orchestra," which is better known, probably, to many as the orchestra serving the "Stone Church" Sunday school at Independence, gave a very enjoyable and successful evening of music on Sunday, February 5, 1922. Brother Robert T. Cooper, the conductor, has ample reason to feel gratified at the success of this occasion and the quality of their work. Upon the inception of the project to build the auditorium he conceived the idea of developing this orchestra (heretofore known as The Liberty Orchestra) to the point where it could serve the needs of that structure when it was ready. Much progress has been made since that time, and Sunday night's program was such as to strengthen all hopes in that direction. The following is the program as it was then rendered:

Program by Auditorium Orchestra

"War march of the priests," from "Athalia," F. Mendelssohn Bartholdy, by orchestra; hymn, "Coronation," Saints' Hymnal, No. 92; invocation by C. B. Hartshorn; "Ave Maria," Fr. Schubert, solo for violin, by Mr. Watson and Miss Wiggins; "The heavens are telling," from "The Creation," Joseph Haydn; violin solo, "Legende," Wieniawski, by Miss Columbia Wiggins; address, "The orchestra and its construction," by Arthur H. Mills, general secretary of Department of Music; piano solo, "Thou art repose," Fr. Schubert-Liszt, by Pauline Becker; "The lost chord," Arthur Sullivan, solo for cornet, by Walter Davis; "Calvary," Paul Rodney, by orchestra; remarks by Mark Siegfried; offering; march, "Pomp and circumstance," Edward Elgar, op. 39.

Brother Harold Burgess, who for several years conducted the "Brick Church" choir at Lamoni, and who has conducted the musical part of a number of prominent revival and young people's services, has recently located in Independence, and the First Presidency of the church have appointed him director in chief of the musical interests of Zion, that a uniformity of development of them may be had.

A Pertinent Thought

Brother R. J. Farthing, of Toronto, Ontario, sends us the following, clipped from an account of a convention of choir directors and organists, recently held in his city:

"The majority of choir leaders are concerned in having well-trained choirs whose singing will bring prestige to their names. It is the exception to find an organist or choirmaster anxious to select and prepare music the text of which will blend with the sermon. The majority prefer the freedom of selecting music best suited to exploit the ability of their singers."

This is so excellent that we deem it unnecessary to comment upon it at much length.

If our choir directors will concern themselves first with making sure that the musical part of our services is of the character to enhance the spiritual message of the services, then their efforts will be more successful and will redound to the glory of God. Just as often as music has for its purpose mere show and self-glory, that often does it lead people away from God.

A. H. M.

"We feel that we can truly appreciate the heroic and intelligent appeal of Bishop McGuire," writes C. C. Randall, from Columbus, Kansas, "and believe it will stir many Saints to activity. In trying to examine ourselves we have come to the conclusion that we need more faith in God and his promises. We note in the daily press that influenza is raging in the East. Should the Saints have fear? Has not God told us in the Word of Wisdom how to escape? If we have not earnestly and prayerfully studied it, now is a good time to do so, for we have not in the past felt the real need of the blessings therein promised."

The Alva Review-Courier is printing daily items concerning the services being conducted at Alva, Oklahoma, by Elder J. E. Vanderwood, including a brief resumé, or extracts, from the discourse.

"Who Hath Desired the Sea?"

In response to the request from the editor that we send our favorite bit of nature poetry, I am sending some verse which I happen to have reread recently. Living as I have for the past year and a half between the cliff-rimmed beaches of Santa Monica and the hills of Hollywood, I have found a new pleasure in the dramatic fervor of Kipling's "The sea and the hills" from which the following is quoted:

"Who hath desired the Sea?—the sight of salt water unbounded—
The heave and the halt and the hurl and the crash of the comber wind-hounded?
The sleek-barreled swell before storm, gray, foamless, enormous, growing—
Stark calm on the lap of the Line or the crazy-eyed hurricane blowing—
His Sea in no showing the same—his Sea and the same 'neath each showing—
His Sea as she slackens or thrills?
So and no otherwise—so and no otherwise—hillmen desire their Hills!

"Who hath desired the Sea?—the immense and contemptuous surges?
The shudder, the stumble, the swerve, as the star-stabbing bowsprit emerges?
The orderly clouds of the Trades, and the ridged, roaring sapphire thereunder—
Unheralded cliff-haunting flaws and the headsail's low-volleying thunder—
His Sea in no wonder the same—his Sea and the same through each wonder:
His Sea as she rages or stills?
So and no otherwise—so and no otherwise—hillmen desire their Hills."

Righteous Desires

[The following letters are typical of many which find their way to our desk. Do not the pure thoughts and desires expressed stir our hearts in gratitude to God, who is pleading patiently with his people? How long shall any of us hold back, and forget to improve the shining hours of our probation?—A. A.]

I notice in the HERALD that some of the matter under the "Women's Department," touches on the subject of teaching small children. That is the subject in which I am very much interested at present, for I have a dear little boy, seventeen months old, and I do so want to start him out right.

I am wholly inexperienced in child training, and that is why I am so much in need of good advice as to what studies to follow, that my little son will have every possible advantage I can give him in his early training.

We are isolated from the church and my husband is not a member, though not strongly opposed. I regret that religion is not given a more prominent place in our home life, but I am very anxious that our baby shall grow up to feel the importance of religion. I want to teach him along those lines, that they may be blended with the rest of his early education. I should like to have some outline to follow, that from the very first he may not learn useless things that will have to be unlearned later.

I have access to a fairly good library, which has a special children's department, and I hope your time is not too crowded to give me a start along the right road of study in this earnest undertaking.

MOTHER OF ONE.

I am very much interested in your article, "Hot lunches," and should like to be counted one who wishes to receive a copy of the bulletin, Hot Lunches for the Rural Schools.

I would like to learn of any other books and pamphlets in regard to children, whether it concerns health, morals, play, or whatnot. According to my patriarchal blessing, my work will be largely with children, and although at present I am not situated in a position which throws me into contact with any who are more than four or five years younger than myself, I feel that it is wisdom to be prepared for whatever work may come to my hand.

In making this preparation, I feel the need of getting as much as possible of the material available which will help me to do so intelligently. I realize to a certain degree the crying need for teachers who live proper lives, and try to be fit examples for those whom they teach to follow, as well as all others with whom they come in contact.

I realize, too, that there is more than a "Sunday school side" to a youngster's existence, and if we teachers cannot grasp the everyday problems in an efficient way, we cannot hope to teach little folks to be that which they know we should be but are not!

Hoping for a consecrated effort among the young of the church to "carry on" and increase the knowledge of the gospel, I am,

A SISTER WHO LOVES CHILDREN.

Psychology

Text: The Mind and Its Education, by George Herbert Betts. Herald Publishing House, $2.10 postpaid.

CHAPTER XII

Thinking

1. What gives men preeminence over the animals?
2. Carefully discuss and give examples of the four different types of thinking.
3. One writer has given three things which one's education should do for him, instead of solving all his problems. What are those three things?
4. Of the four different types of thinking, which is the most important? Why?
5. Besides supplying certain information, what should all school subjects present?
6. The meaning of anything is determined by the degree in which we have realized the different relations. Our religion, then, means only so much to us as we are able to see and realize its different relations. Is the commonly accepted Latter Day Saint idea of salvation broad or narrow?
7. These relations are only discovered by thinking. Have we been thinkers or have we accepted things as told or handed down to us by others?
8. Since "each separate thing, be it large or small, forms a link in an unbroken chain of relationships which binds the universe into an ordered whole," is there not much for us as a church to do if we ever hope to do the things we have long held as ours to do? What are some of them?
9. What constitutes the difference in the thinking of the child and that of the sage?
10. Some parents have thought the babe did not think. What is the opinion of your author?

11. True thinking takes place by means of what three things?
12. Define animate and inanimate things.
13. What enables the psychologist to determine in the process of classification?
14. Is not the definition of a concept clear after reading the paragraph on its "Growth"? Unless our concepts grow, what do we become?
15. So far as mental life is concerned, what is the secret of perpetual youth?
16. Define judgment. What class of people are prone to make judgments more hastily than others? What remedy does the author give for faulty judgments? What psychological basis is there for our judgments to be faulty?
17. Discuss the difference between judgment and reasoning.
18. Define deductive and inductive reasoning.
19. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

A Series of Worth-While Lectures Free

The ladies of the northeast group under their leader, Mrs. Henry Minor, have arranged a series of lectures to be given once a week, beginning February 1, in Herald Hall at 3.30 p. m. To these they have invited all the other groups and any other citizens who wish to attend. They have secured some of the best talent of the town to lecture on a diversity of themes, and believe they will be able to present something worth while. These busy men and women have promised their services free for the benefit of the people, and the ladies are especially anxious that as many as possible avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing them. The outline for the course follows:

- February 1. "Woman's civic responsibility," G. N. Briggs.
- February 8. "Benefits of the household budget," A. Carmichael.
- February 15. "Food and its relation to the physical and mental life of your child," Cora Schild.
- February 22. "The well-filled market basket and its cost," Vergie MacCray, E. A. Lewis.
- March 1. "The economic production of home products," Eva Lewers.
- March 8. "Religious training of the child," A. Max Carmichael.
- March 15. "Education as a community task," F. M. McDowell.
- March 22. "Chats on Australia," John Blackmore, William Patterson.
- March 29. "Evaluation of the Bible," Lonzo Jones.
- April 5. "The church in action," Cyril E. Wight.
- April 12. "The relation of community recreation to the church," J. Vincent Gray.
- April 19. "Our city laws," R. A. Wight.
- April 26. "Health laws," Doctor Peterson.
- May 3. "Business prophecies," C. E. Irwin.
- May 10. "Consumer's cooperation," Hazel Putnam.
- May 17. "A lesson in the appreciation of music," Mabel Carlile.
- May 24. "Constance D'Arcy MacKay and eighteenth century life," June Whiting.
- May 31. "Music and story-telling," Joseph Anthony, Mrs. Cyril E. Wight.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Cooperation and Sacrifice

I read the article, "Stopping the leaks," by Bishop B. R. McGuire. He presents many things in that message that all Saints should consider carefully and prayerfully.

I see the thermometer registers $20,000. Can we raise it? I answer, "Yes." How? By complying with the two words heading this message.

We read in the gospel in many places about fasting. The Christ, when he came to lay down his life to redeem us, fasted forty days and forty nights. When some of his disciples were called upon to cast out devils they failed. When they asked why they had failed they were told that it was because it could not be done except by prayer and fasting.

There is a meaning in that statement—sacrifice—that should engage our best thought. I will suggest that every Saint in the church fast every Sunday. Go without breakfast. Give to the church. What we would save might be but fifty cents a month, though that is a low price. Still it would make six dollars for one year. I do not know what our membership is, but suppose it is eighty thousand. That many times six dollars would raise the thermometer to $480,000. Is it worth while?

This is a personal proposition for every Saint to decide. Personally I feel if this plan can be carried out it will help us spiritually as well as financially. Possibly those whose duty it is to look after church finances can devise a plan to bring it before the Saints.

Ever desiring and praying that the gospel may be preached to all the world.

M. K. LYKE.

Te Orometua for December

Editor Frank B. Almond sends us a copy of the Society Island mission paper for December, 1921, which we presume is interesting reading, judging from the translations accompanying the headings. The leading editorial is on "Christmas." There is an article by Na Taraita (Clyde F. Ellis), entitled "The church should exist." Another extensive article by Elder Almond is "What did Jesus preach?" "The nature of the good husband," is a contribution by Na Maria (Sister Almond), while Arabera (A. V. Karlstrom) contributes an article on "The Bishopric." There is a page of To Parau Api "News" from which we can elicit the information (having already known the facts) that to Farameta raua o Maria (Frank and Mary Almond) was born Federerika Eraneta, and to Fereta raua na Me (Frederick and May Elliott) was born Federerika Ioane.

Brother Almond's experiences in the mechanical department of the Herald Publishing House evidently serve him well in his publishing work. From a personal letter we quote regarding this issue of the mission paper. The finished product is a work of art, considering the difficulties.

"I am sending you another issue of the paper, which was printed in our own little shop, and if you could understand the conditions under which it was done, you would not only have sympathy for 'ye editor,' but you would consider it a work of art. For instance, I had just enough type of cracked and worn letters to print a little over one page at a time. The chases had been broken, and put together again with rivets, which made a twisted page; the screw was missing to the bed of the press, which made it absolutely impossible to print cuts this time, and which made me endless work at adjustments; instead of gauge pins I used broken safety pins; I had no quoin key, and used a hammer and a screw driver to lock up the forms, etc. The press work was mostly done by a native girl, who was certainly wonderfully adaptable to the work, and in a month or two, if she stays at the job, will be fit for a job in the Herald Office."

Down by the Pacific

Leaving my home in Pasadena, California, I took the train for Los Angeles and made connections for Hermosa Beach. At this place, about one half mile from the water, is Convention Park, the reunion ground of Southern California District. The cafeteria building, outside of encampment time, is used for a place of worship.

Brother Charles Salter, in charge of the work in San Pedro, had invited me to come down to attend to the blessing of several children and to administer to some who were ill.

At the close of the service we made arrangements for baptism at Hermosa Beach, the Saints at Mission uniting their services with us for the following Sunday. The Saints drove over by auto.

Baptizing was announced for two o'clock. Previous to that a dinner was served in the grove near the chapel. Seven candidates came over from San Pedro for baptism and two from Hermosa desired it. The ocean was very rough, and as I watched the incoming tide and the white-capped waves tossing and realized that some were a little fearful of the water, I breathed a few words of prayer and saw the ocean change from wild tumult to a peaceful attitude. I realized that the hand that stayed the Red Sea could hold back the stormy elements. One young man who had a broken limb was carried down into the water for baptism.

Several nonmembers were attracted to the services. Some of them in bathing suits watched through curiosity; others in street dress followed us to the chapel for the confirmation services.

As to the general work at Hermosa, I will say that we have had discouragements to contend with, but know that such can round out true men and women to the formation of characters that will endure to the end.

LEVI HEMENWAY.

Arrived in Sydney

Elder J. W. Davis writes of their safe arrival in Australia, and of a month's stop in Hawaii.

We are pleased to report that we have arrived safely in Sydney after twenty-one days at sea. Our ship had one of her propellers disabled the first day out of Pago Pago, which caused two days delay in our arrival. The voyage was rather uneventful for us, except that we had a very nice visit in the Hawaiian Islands. The month we spent there was most enjoyable to us, and we were kept busy in church work. A few days after our arrival in Honolulu Brother and Sister Hull arrived, and we were able to assist in making them welcome and helping to introduce them to the people and the work.

We visited the Saints in Hilo, and were made very happy to see just about all those with whom we had been associated while there before actively engaged in church work, they having been baptized in the meantime. We felt very much pleased with the way Brother Reeves and his splendid wife have the situation there in hand. An excellent spirit was felt and manifested among the Saints. I did some preaching in both Honolulu and Hilo, and was greatly blessed in doing so. I did not hear Brother Reeves preach, but he is reputed to be a fine speaker. In my judgment he deserves credit for the work he is doing. The Saints at both places enjoyed the visit of Brother and Sister McConley very much, and they were able to render them some very substantial assistance.

We are pleased with the outlook here, and hope to be able to do our reasonable share of the work as we go along.

With best wishes for the New Year, J. W. DAVIS.

From Australia's Only Patriarch

In a letter from Patriarch I. T. Gresty to President Elbert A. Smith, he says:

"I have been greatly blessed in my work. At present I am the only patriarch in the church in Australia, but I am trying to do my best, and God's blessing has greatly attended my efforts, as you know the two other patriarchs, Brethren Barkus and Jones, are dead. I am blessed in having a fine helpmate in my wife, a fine speaker, especially to Woman's Auxiliary, of which she has been appointed field worker. At present she is not traveling with me, but does sometimes as a scribe for blessings, and otherwise helping me in my work in visiting the homes, etc.

Next year (1922), all being well, we will have to visit Queensland to finish Brother Barkus's work—probably between thirty and forty blessings to give besides the revival work.

I have recently also had a request from Western Australia from twenty Saints who want their blessings, but I shall have to consult our bishop here before undertaking the journey so far distant, and also to take a scribe, as none can be obtained there. But they are all good Saints and tithe payers and thus entitled to all the blessings of God. I am laboring at present with the three branches around Melbourne, Victoria.

I was glad to hear that you have recovered your former health and strength. I am splendid in health, never better, for which I thank God. I trust you are well and being greatly blessed of God. I enjoy your writing in the HERALD and the great gift God has given you. May God bless you and our President, Brother F. M. Smith. I always pray for you both, and all the quorums of the priesthood, as you have a great responsibility and many problems to face in the building up of Zion. But God is all-sufficient, and will supply the wisdom.

Anti-Mormon Crusade in British Isles

A virulent anti-Mormon crusade is developing throughout the British Isles. This crusade is well organized and extensive. The Daily Express and Daily Mail of London are giving publicity.

The most extravagant, weird, and uncanny stories are being published. There is no attempt to stay within the facts. Sectarian bias is clearly evident. An attempt is being made to arouse the passions of the people even to mob violence.

Rabid editorials and articles are appearing containing the following:

"Turn them out."

"Fling them out."

"Those already here should be deported as undesirables."

"Banish the Mormons."

"We must drive the Mormons out of the country at once."

"Put the Alien's Act into force."

"Clear out the Mormons."

"Picket their halls."

"Deport the undesirables."

"If their propaganda be tolerated, there will be trouble."

"Clergy call on England to drive them out."

An employer: "If I found out that one of my work girls was going to a service at the Mormon church here, I would get rid of her at once."

An appeal to fanaticism and passion is never justifiable, but the supposedly orthodox ministers resort to their old-time weapons.

Polygamy is a crime which is revolting. It may appear in many forms. It would be well, however, that the Church of England sweep before its own doorstep before an attempt is made to stone others. Immorality is rife in Great Britain. The morale of the people has fallen. It is a common occurrence to read of some minister of the Church of England being hailed before some court to answer to a charge of immorality.

We believe that the Mormons should not be permitted to exploit their subversive tenets and to lure unsophisticated, ignorant people to migrate to Utah. But persecution and mob violence will not solve this problem.

The Church of England is dying out. The people of England are disgusted with the attitude of the churches here towards the needs of the people. The church buildings are empty. There is need that something be done to hold the people. This anti-Mormon crusade gives hope.

Canada's First Woman Member of Parliament

The Farmers' Magazine, of Canada, (and a large number of periodicals in this country) gives a page to Sister Agnes McPhail, recently elected a member of the Canadian Parliament. It gives an account of her life, how under difficulties, she secured her education and, when permitted to go to high school, studied the whole of the preceding summer so as to be able to enter the second year instead of the first year. She has long been interested in the problems of the farmer and the farmer's wife, and it is this interest that has been instrumental in good part, for taking her into politics. Her interests, however, are quite broad. Sister McPhail is the niece of Sister Daniel Macgregor.

Lamoni, Iowa

At the stake Sunday school business meeting Saturday morning, reports were received from the various officers. They were sustained in their offices for the coming year as follows: H. H. Gold, superintendent; A. L. Kean, assistant superintendent; E. Dewey White, secretary; E. D. Downey, treasurer. No important business was transacted, aside from a ten-cent assessment on the membership authorized to provide the traveling expenses of the officers.

At the stake business meeting Saturday afternoon, President Elbert A. Smith was chosen conjointly with the stake presidency to preside over the conference. A very interesting report was read by the stake president, indicating that during the past year special services had been held in the majority of the branches throughout the stake. Increased activity was reported on the part of many of the men of the ministry. The women of the stake were especially commended for their zeal and effort manifested in the various activities to which their energies had been devoted.

A number of ordinations were provided for, these being taken care of as indicated below.

Action of the elders' quorum in the selection of Lonzo

Jones as its president was indorsed by the conference, as was also his selection of C. E. Irwin and C. R. Ballantyne for counselors.

At a conference some years previous, provision was made for a special conference to be held during the stake reunion, the business to be transacted at this time being limited to the work of the reunion itself. On recommendation of the presidency, this limitation was removed, the reunion conference being thrown open for all business. This will permit the selection of delegates to the General Conference.

A resolution favoring the freeing of the Indians from the burdens now imposed on them by the Indian Bureau was adopted, following the presentation of this matter by Elder Elmer E. Long and others.

One of the most important actions of the conference as touching the better organization of church affairs within the stake was had in the adoption of a recommendation providing that hereafter all stake business, including that of the departments, be handled in the regular conference business session.

All of the present stake officers were sustained.

On Sunday morning, carrying out the action of the conference, the following men were ordained: R. C. Foreman and G. L. Smith to the office of deacon; Willard C. Moon to the office of teacher; R. A. Wight to the office of priest; Joseph Braby, G. A. Platz, H. H. Gold, Frank McDonald, and W. L. Morey to the office of elder. Other provision was made for the ordination of David Smith, of Hiteman, to the office of deacon, and L. S. Wight to the office of elder.

At the afternoon priesthood meeting, the brethren selected to preside over the quorum of elders were set apart to this work.

At the closing session of the conference, a special musical concert by the choir and orchestra was enjoyed by a crowded house. The sermon by President Elbert A. Smith was both timely and inspirational.

Kansas City Stake

About the time the disorganization of branches took place in the stake, which virtually resolved itself into one large branch, the stake adopted what is known as the group system. The city was accordingly divided into 33 groups with, when possible, a high priest or elder, priest, teacher, and deacon as officers. In some instances, however, a less number of the officials named have charge.

This arrangement started more than two years ago. Where the officers in charge of groups have operated as instructed by the conference, that is, holding their meetings at private houses in their group rather than at the church building, it is safe to say that the best results have been obtained. This arrangement has made it possible for devotional and other meetings to be taken to the homes of those who found it impossible to attend midweek meetings at the church.

Shut-ins were in this way favored with a service they could not attend if it had been held at the church. Those not of our faith could be invited to attend; thus, if those in charge were wise, no home would be neglected.

A variety of meetings was arranged for: prayer meetings, round table talks, lessons from the books of the church, but the service that has met with greatest favor is the good old-fashioned prayer and testimony meeting, so those in charge have yielded some ambitions they otherwise held, in favor of the wishes of the majority.

It has been observed that with the five groups of Central Church, for instance, that on a single night there have been a hundred and twenty-five in attendance, whereas formerly half that number was considered a large attendance at the church building.

However, there have been more, and sometimes a considerable less number at service. In the extreme hot weather, with some groups, it has been found more comfortable at the church building than at the homes of the people, so joint meetings have been held in them. This is, however, but for a short period, when services are taken up in the usual way.

Throughout the stake, occasional joint meetings are held where the meeting place for both groups is near the same corner on their boundary line.

The best method adopted in securing attendance by any one of the groups is by personal or letter notification; this is done sometimes weekly, but usually notice is made where and when group meetings will be held for the entire month. It is also noticed that where group officers take pains in regard to their notification, they are using their spare time in visiting their membership. This is a provision made in the economy of the church that cannot be overlooked, if a group is to keep the interest up to the normal condition anticipated in the above.

Another feature of group work, and a very important one, too, is that there is work for all of the ministry—a special work with authority delegated to them by the conference of the stake. No minister can say, "They never call on me to do anything," for everyone from high priest to deacon has a job.

Another feature is that the bishop may work through the deacons of each group in the collecting of moneys and the care of material things of the homes of the various members of the church, when required, observing and reporting those who need help—relief, of whom we are glad to note there are but very few; he does not want any who are worthy to suffer for necessary things of this life.

When we consider that the territory of the stake is about fifteen miles long by an average of ten miles wide, and that the members live in all parts of the same, some idea may be had as to what confronts the officials of the stake in ministering to the membership, which numbers now more than three thousand souls.

Of course the fourteen regular meeting places, in church buildings, are maintained, presided over by pastors who also have general oversight of the groups of their church, sometimes being a group pastor.

We therefore conclude that the group method of church work in a metropolitan community is absolutely necessary to enable the stake officials to keep in touch with its members.

A series of meetings will begin next Sunday evening at the Chelsea church, Twenty-eighth and Garfield, Kansas City, Kansas, in charge of Elder Amos T. Higdon, who will have associated with him Elder Paul M. Hanson. These services will continue for at least two weeks.

Elder George Jenkins is opening a series of meetings at Armourdale, 940 Miami Street, Kansas City, Kansas, next Sunday evening, to continue a week.

Central Church young people announce a series of special young people's meetings at Central Church, to begin April 6 and continue till the 16th, with D. T. Williams as speaker and congregational music in charge of Harold C. Burgess.

Elder Alvin Knisley begins a series of meetings at Grandview Church, Fourteenth and Central, Kansas City, Kansas, Sunday evening, February 26, continuing for a week or more.

Independence

The theme of the hour in Independence is the series of gospel services for young people now in progress at the Stone Church. The meetings Sunday and Monday evenings were well attended, especially Sunday evening, when the capacity of the lower room was tested and extra seating put in, so far as the law would allow.

So far the weather has been of the same order which has prevailed all winter, delightful and suggestive of March and April.

Extensive preparations for the meetings have borne fruit, and people from all over Zion are in attendance and responding with fervor to the suggestions of the song leaders in the half hour of congregational singing preceding the preaching service.

An eight-page leaflet is furnished, with the words of some of the favorites for such meetings, most of them well known, with a few new ones. A verse of "Redeemer of Israel" is furnished, the whole of "Let us shake off the coals from our garments," from the Hymnal, with "The old, old path," "Pass me not," and "The Savior at the door," from Zion's Praises.

In addition to the congregational singing accompanied by orchestral instruments, three special vocal or instrumental numbers are given, furnishing an excellent balance to the service.

The speakers have been Walter W. Smith and Paul M. Hanson, the first mentioned speaking in the upper room the first evening and in the lower room the second evening, with Brother Hanson reversing the order. They have fundamental subjects, instructional in their nature, but susceptible of motivating appeal according to the personal tendencies of the speakers.

The ushering is divided among a number of younger men, and the care of the children under thirteen is undertaken by various self-sacrificing sisters who have as many as one hundred twenty-five boys and girls and babies in their charge in the big dining hall back of the church.

One of the requisites of success in such ventures has been developed very highly—organization—and we are glad to see it bearing fruit. Elder J. A. Gardner, as president of the amalgamated young people, who has associated with him a young army of loyal helpers who have for days sacrificed their own interests that the machinery of the enterprise might function, deserves much credit for the commendable smoothness with which everything now functions.

The speakers and subjects for the rest of the week are as follows: Tuesday evening, 21st, "A restored priesthood and authority," by John F. Garver; Wednesday evening, 22d, upper auditorium, "A restoration of the gifts and blessings," by C. Edward Miller; 23d, "A scriptural church organization and scriptural form of doctrine," J. Frank Curtis; 24th, "The second coming of Jesus Christ," Elbert A. Smith; 26th, "Zion's ideals—gathering, stewardships, etc.," Frederick M. Smith.

The momentous occasion of the ordination of new members to fill the Standing High Council of the church is reported elsewhere in this number. It not only means much to the church to have these important councils and quorum filled and functioning in their place, but to Zion it has much significance.

The historic aspects of the situation deserve publication and no doubt will in due time be collated for that purpose.

The speaker at the radio station for Sunday evening was Bishop J. F. Keir. Inquiries come into the editorial offices concerning equipment, etc., to keep pace with this fast developing invention, and it is planned to publish an interview with Arthur B. Church, of the Central Radio Company, Sixth and Grand, Kansas City, Missouri, who has been in charge of this work in Independence and who takes a keen interest in adapting it to our church needs.

Pursuant to the action of the late conference in Independence, the First Presidency has appointed as a reunion committee for Independence for the year 1922, R. V. Hopkins, Bishop J. A. Becker, and Arthur E. McKim.

An interesting contest is now in progress in Independence between two divisions of the Pen and Ink Club who are working to provide some material for children's day programs. The losing side is to furnish an evening's literary entertainment for the winners. The contest closes February 28 and we shall be glad to announce results.

The Graceland College basket ball team accepted the invitation of the local aggregation and came to this place on the evening of the 18th for a game with the best players from the four local church teams. The score was 36 to 20 in favor of Graceland. It was a worthy venture, and the local teams expect to return the visit ere long.

Patients entering the Sanitarium for the week ending February 18, 1922: Andrew Williams, Jennie Cole, Ollie Booker, Maynard Redfield, Gertrude Paxton, Bessie Parker, Vera Davis, Victoria Singleton, and Catherine Stephens, of Independence, Missouri; Pete Oreski, Sugar Creek, Missouri; Mrs. Ernest Hymes, Annie Guss, Anna F. Stewart, and William W. Reese, of Kansas City, Missouri. X-ray patients: Chester Auld, Mrs. L. Daniels, O. W. Newton, and Susan Witthar, of Independence, Missouri.

The third of five concerts under the auspices of the Independence Music Club will be at the Junior High School auditorium on the evening of March 2, with Barbara Maurel, mezzo soprano, the feature.

Departmental Institutes

Announcements of interesting inter-departmental institutes have reached us from Toronto and Warton, Ontario. This sort of meeting is growing in popularity in eastern Canada and is eminently worth while. It is a manifestation of progressiveness. Toronto meets on Thursday forenoon, March 9, and concludes the following Sunday evening, meeting from nine to twelve each morning and having a lecture in the evening only, following each day except Sunday, when they have class work at three p. m. Toronto Branch holds regular services on Sunday. Their subjects are quite general in their nature. The Owen Sound District program, at Warton, is on Saturday and Sunday, February 25 and 26. Their time is packed to the limit with specialized subjects pertaining to various departments of church work. We note that Daniel Macgregor is to be at both places and deliver sermons and lectures. Toronto is to have an institute newspaper.

Both districts have sent out neatly printed programs giving all details concerning the programs, evidently seeing to it that each branch is notified in ample time to send delegates.

From Fresno, California, Sister L. N. Roberts writes that the branch is losing Brother J. B. Carmichael and family, which will be a great loss. Brother Carmichael has been the pastor of the church there for a number of years and his wife active in the musical lines. They are moving to Berkeley, California, where their daughter Gladys can take a special course in the university. A farewell reception was given to them at their home.

Living in Zion

To live in Zion—what a privilege! Yes, it is one I have prayed for for many years. Whenever the opportunity seemed to present itself though, it slipped out of my hold and left me desolate. How bitter I have been over the disappointments. How little I dreamed under just what circumstances I should at last come into the city of my hope.

Yes, I am here at last, but it was because of a terrible "scourge," a fearful flaying of Satan, one which I really had no power to overcome without God's aid—namely nervous prostration—my only help (from prayer) seeming to be just enough to keep me able to get here for administration—that I was at last compelled to come and given the opportunity to do so.

As I review the particulars of my trial now, I am thankful to my Master that he allowed me to suffer so, for it has indeed placed my life in the narrow way, as I did not realize before that I had not been strictly walking as he would have me walk. I thank God indeed that he did not make it possible for me to come before to this city.

Appreciate Zion! Oh, I love her. This is my home henceforward. I love the earnest people here, the finest of the earth, and the consecrated ministry. I would say to the Saints all over the world, "Place your hope and desire here. Come, for we shall meet you with gladness. Don't come to "carry a chip on your shoulder," (and thus lose your heritage) if some of the careless here do not give you their hands in greeting as you think they should. You will find your friends if you come in the right spirit and determination.

My experience leads me to ask just here, How many of us say in our hearts, "Oh, Father, I love thee. Thy will is my will. Thy desire is my desire," but with a small aside (breathed upon us by Satan) "until the next time I get disappointed"? How soon we could come closer to him, come up higher indeed, if we would only in the moments of our sorrow, when constrained to cry out, "O Father, why must I suffer so?" hear the still small voice answer, "My people are not cowards." We indeed should be glad to take as he gives. What a privilege and delight, really.

"I know there are no errors
In the great eternal plan,
And all things work together
For the final good of man.

"I know that the soul is aided
Sometimes by the heart's unrest,
And to grow means often to suffer,
But whatever is—is best."

I have indeed been marvelously blessed. As soon as I arrived here, I was given peace, through administration, from the fearful suffering I had endured. I was given a patriarchal blessing that clearly proved to me it was directed only by God. Wonderful were the answers to my prayers of years' standing, and the acknowledging of conditions of my heart that no one but Him and me knew.

I can say right here to those who may be discouraged, to those who feel they are fainting by the way, "Cling to the rod of iron." You will at last know God's will and his manner of dealing with men is perfect. Yes, I have the testimony of the Spirit, and I say without any doubt, without any fear, that he upholds the words I write. May God take my part in his kingdom when he comes for me if I do not speak truly now when I say, "This gospel is the true gospel of Jesus Christ. He will come very shortly to his people. Fearful times must, very necessarily, and will come soon, upon the careless and unbelieving of the world."

Friends, I am not afraid because of having written those words. I am not afraid to send them out. I will receive no condemnation from Him whom I love, for writing such a testimony. My burning desire for the salvation of humanity prompts me to write this, in fact, compels me to.

From a Tithing Payer

I have felt somewhat duty bound to write you since receiving a letter to-day mentioning tithing. Since the death of my dear aged parents in 1903 I have been a pretty steady worker with the exception of a few weeks while unable.

In 1908 I paid up my tithing and have continued since then to pay on my annual increase. I am glad to return to my loving heavenly Father that which belongs to him. I neither want nor need my Lord's tenth, but possibly I would need it and more too if I did not love to pay it.

I imagine those who put off paying their tithing are carrying a load because they still owe it; neither do they know how long this uncertain life will extend them the privilege to pay it.

I know this effort will not be in vain if each one who has not done so will get his Bible and read Malachi 3 and ask himself the question, On which side would I rather be, with those who do or do not observe the law in this life?

I love to work and have felt richly blessed in paying free-will offerings also. To me it is beautiful and inspiring to have our young married people start their home making by observing family worship and tithing, so our heavenly Father can prosper and bless them with true happiness for service.

I profit by reading the SAINTS' HERALD and Zion's Ensign. The former I have taken about sixteen years. I pass them on for others to profit by the beautiful sermons and spiritual food contained therein.

I am anxious to look through them as soon as they come, because of the divine assistance and many rich blessings that have come to me through their pages of inspiration, and I love to remember those who ask an interest in our prayers and to get the church news. They are good company for me.

When the Lord will make up his jewels, I hope to be one of the righteous who have loved to serve him.

We Are Reaping the Whirlwind

"See ye not the clouds portentous?" It is with genuine alarm and apprehension we look on the fast-growing advance of the divorce evil and wonder what makes the conditions possible that it should be so. It is surely a day when "God is forgotten" and the mad thirst for pleasure is making of home but "a place to eat and sleep."

The large and steadily increasing number of divorces is truly alarming, and in the words of the same writer shows how insecure are the foundations of the once strong and impregnable institutions of the home and family. The home, once the bulwark of the nation, a Gibraltar of power, is now only a convenience, "a place to eat and sleep." God pity the people of whom these words are true. No nation can rise higher than its homes, as no stream can rise higher than its source. The sacred hour, when the family gathered together and listened to the reading of the Holy Word, when all knelt to offer their devotions to God, is no more.

Why have we given it up? The rush and stress of business affairs is urged as an excuse. It is too true that God is neglected in the insane rush of modern days. But "As we sow, so shall we reap," and the home and the family are threatened with entire destruction.

There is a strong influence at work undermining the home. An enemy who never wearies, who has worked quietly and industriously, and stolen upon us, as it were, in the night and taken us unawares. But we should have been on the watch tower. "Everything will be shaken that can be shaken," and the world is now trembling in the grasp of a pitiless monster. It is only a short time ago since public-school teachers began the day with reading and prayer, but we are far removed from reading and prayer to-day.

But in the meantime, the enemy has not been idle. There has been "method in his madness," and while we were leaning on our oars he was busy sowing tares, demoralizing our institutions.

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." We have chosen, and what have we gained? Only a generation of pleasure-loving youth whose chief joy is jazz and joy rides. And would we complain of the great number of divorce cases in our courts? It is surely a sad commentary on our boasted civilization that, with the increase of knowledge and education, schools and colleges, in many cases the divorce court is the end.

We have sown to the wind, and we are reaping the whirlwind. The word of God was lightly brushed aside, and now we are reaping the harvest. Instead of walking in the old paths we virtually say, "We will not walk therein." But be not deceived. God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

Sacramento, California

Easter week, last year, we had Patriarch F. G. Pitt and wife with us. Their missionary songs and fine sermons make them ever welcome here.

Mothers' Day, last May, and two following evenings we had Elder George H. Wixom, then on his way to his Eastern Colorado mission. Such good attendance and interest were manifest that we were more than glad to secure another visit from him recently, during his holiday stay with his family in San Bernardino. Brother Wixom's live gospel topics and splendid personality made a strong appeal to our audiences, and his introduction to our local editors by Sister C. H. S. Bidwell, wife of one of our city councilmen, enabled us to get a liberal hearing through the press. The morning paper, previously misunderstanding our position, was especially courteous, giving us a full column on the history of the church.

Thanksgiving week we had Apostle J. W. Rushton with us for several able addresses. Our local pastor, Brother C. E. Ball, made arrangements with the few members at Rocklin, a small town twenty miles away, and through the noble lives and efforts of Brother and Sister C. W. Earle and Sister Ada Grant, who are keeping the work alive there, Brother Rushton addressed a group of about one hundred there one evening.

One evening last month our chapel was crowded to the limit to welcome President F. M. Smith and Doctor G. L. Harrington. Our district president, Elder J. D. White, made this visit possible for us, bringing the brethren here by auto. Brother Smith's address on "Stewardship" and Brother Harrington's on "The Health Department and its ideals," were greatly appreciated. The papers gave us fine write-ups of the evening's meeting and published a lengthy interview given by President Smith.

We have had so many good things the past year that our members and their friends gladly respond to our invitations now with an attendance in goodly numbers. Much credit is due the local officers and our publicity committee, Brother T. J. Lawn, agent, and Sisters Birdie Clark and Hazel Blohm.

Saint Joseph, Missouri

FIRST BRANCH. At the annual business meeting of the First Branch of Saint Joseph a goodly congregation greeted President R. S. Salyards, who made a very interesting and satisfactory report, showing much work done and great good accomplished since the last annual meeting. The treasurer, Brother McCormick, by his untiring energy was able to report that the finances were in good shape. Missionary Robertson made an interesting report on his labors here during the past year.

The following branch officers were elected for the year: President, R. S. Salyards; secretary, Minnie S. Dobson; treasurer, E. E. McCormick; historian and correspondent, H. S. Salisbury.

Our Religio is interesting the young people greatly under the management of W. W. Salisbury. Superintendent Stone is doing able work for the Sunday school.

President Frederick M. Smith was with us the first Sunday in February, and made many friends. The house was crowded to capacity, and some turned away, at his addresses morning and evening on the subject of stewardships. The large audiences listened with great interest and satisfaction to his masterly elucidation of the subject.

H. S. SALISBURY, Correspondent.

Rockford, Illinois

We are pleased to report that there has been a great improvement in our branch the last six months. Those who have known the conditions here such a short time ago will rejoice to hear of our spiritual advancement, although there is room yet for improvement.

We have rented a hall and nearly always have some outsiders at our meetings. Several of them are active workers in our Sunday school.

Our district president, Brother Cooper, was with us the first Sunday in January. We enjoyed a very spiritual time both at our sacramental meeting and at our preaching service in the evening. There was one promise that cheered many of the Saints who have quite a distance to walk in order to attend services, as they put forth the effort to come, the promise that they should walk and not be weary and run and not faint would be verified to them.

Two baptisms last Sunday, Brother and Sister Kell. They, with their four children, make a nice addition to our branch and Sunday school. They had been baptized into the Mormon Church, but through an outsider who is interested in the gospel they were brought in contact with our branch president, Elder J. A. Daer, who labored faithfully, and now they have accepted the true gospel.

February 5, we had a very spiritual sacrament. Sister Hans and Sister Kilgore, of Pecatonica, were with us. I am sure it gave us all a greater desire to be coworkers in this wonderful work to hear the testimony of those who have been in the church so many years.

Any persons coming this way will find a hearty welcome at our place of meeting, 115 North Third Street.

Central Chicago

Our series of meetings closed, and while no additions were made to the fold, much good has resulted in renewed interest and enthusiasm among the Saints. This is shown in all departments of the work.

Our Sunday school, under direction of Superintendent Harry Jowett, has opened several avenues of interest, among them the normal class, which meets one evening each month, thereby giving Sunday-school teachers a chance to attend, as well as any others who want to prepare themselves as teachers.

We are having an auto race by the various classes in Sunday school. Mileage is given by lesson study and collection, also for the classes in place promptly at ten o'clock. The interest taken in the opening of this race makes us confident of good results.

Religio under Superintendent Roy Cheville is proving both interesting and instructive. Following lesson study, some unique and interesting programs have been given. Among those recently given were those by the priesthood and Gleaners (women's organization). At present a series of indoor baseball games have been inaugurated. Four teams were organized, and interest is good.

The women's organization is also filling its place creditably, and while having organized a regular study class, also finds time for other good work, having recently quilted two quilts.

The choir is fulfilling its duties in a splendid way under Sister Belle Simmons.

So with all departments wide awake and progressive, 1922 should be a wonderful year for Central Chicago.

HATTIE K. BELL, Correspondent.

ENID, OKLAHOMA, February 13, 1922.

Editors Herald: We are having nice interest in cottage meetings and feel we are being rewarded for our continual efforts put forth for the last fourteen years, as several seem more than interested at present.

We had with us a few days last week Brethren Harvey Syckle and Peter Anderson of Tulsa, Oklahoma, and on Wednesday night we had Lemuel Dyke of Eagle City. We were made glad by such a treat all at once. Since being isolated all we get to hear is what we have in our cottage meeting as elders come through and what my husband and a brother now living here preach every Sunday evening and every Wednesday.

We have quite an attendance, all the way from fifteen to twenty-one each time, and one man is very near the door. So we surely feel repaid for our efforts.

My husband is working on toll lines out through Okeene and Southland, Oklahoma, and if there are any Saints in or near those towns let us know and he, being an elder, will hunt them up.

Now if the Lord is willing, and I think he is, we hope for a good interest here, and when warm weather comes we will try to get a tent or building and hold meetings. Hoping for the pure in heart to be gathered in, in this place, I am,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. L. C. HOPKINS.

"We have real nice crowds at evening services," reports Mrs. Vida Hill, from Burrton, Kansas. "We have organized a teachers' training class with R. J. Wildey as teacher. It seems interesting. We elected Brother Wildey as branch president during the absence of Brother T. Comer Turpen. We also started a piano fund. We have regular Wednesday night prayer services at the homes of the different Saints."

What One Community Has Demonstrated in a Musical Way

In the little town of Princeville, Illinois, flourishes this band of thirty-two pieces and an orchestra of twenty pieces, with Brother W. M. Keck, manager of the Keck Telephone Company, as director. The band and orchestra were organized about two years ago with all beginners except two. The community club is back of the organization and loaned them some of the money with which to start. They have raised the rest by putting on concerts, playing at Fourth of July celebrations, managing stands, and furnishing dinners. Some time ago, when Brother Keck wrote us, the instrumentation of the band was one piccolo, six clarinets, ten cornets, four altos, four slide trombones, one baritone, one B flat bass, three E flat basses, two drums. They have the usual trouble of keeping the instruments balanced. The orchestra contains some who play in the band, and some who play only in the orchestra. The orchestra instrumentation reported is: One flute, two clarinets, eight violins, two cornets, two horns, two trombones, one cello, one double bass, one tuba, one trap drum. The spirit of good music does much towards developing a community spirit, and we congratulate Brother Keck and Princeville on the success attained.

Toronto, Ontario

We are still struggling along and hope to accomplish much before we are through. As I look over the congregation that meets in our little church from time to time, I think what a change from about three years ago. There is much more interest and a nice congregation and the Saints seem to be stirred up to greater things.

We had a very profitable sermon from our pastor, Brother Crowley, last Sunday evening. He asked the question, "What do we come to the meetings for? What is our motive in coming? Is it to get good and to follow it, or some other motive that will not get us anywhere? We hope to hear often from Brother Crowley.

I am so thankful that the Lord has raised up men in the church who are not afraid of the opinions of men when it comes to doing the Lord's work. I often think of how we meet together and testify that we are thankful for the gospel. I wonder how thankful we are. Are we one hundred per cent thankful? Or fifty per cent? Or ten per cent? Are we really and truly helping in the support of the gospel and the church? As much and as willing as it is our privilege to do?

I read not long ago of a man in the Baptist Church whose son had been raised up from a very serious illness and who was so thankful to the Lord that he gave that church one thousand dollars as a thank offering. Compare what we have as Latter Day Saints with what they have (I was a member of that church myself for many years) and it seems to me we have a charge to keep and will have to answer some day how we have spent our time and money. I desire to assist in any way I can, though it may be small.

Our Women's Department is moving on nicely. We have a change in our officers this year. Sister Barnes is superintendent.

Your sister in the gospel,

MAY E. HATHAWAY.

Ontario, California

Our branch is steadily growing. We have a live Sunday school and Religio. A number of outsiders attend.

We were happy to welcome to our morning services recently, Sister Frederick M. Smith and daughters of Hollywood.

Brother Rushton was with us for morning and evening services just recently. Also Brother Wixom preached for us January 22. Both preached excellent sermons. Brother Rushton addressed the Sunday school and Religio. Brother Wixom addressed the Religio, but was excused from speaking to the Sunday school, as he was not in good health. We hope to hear of his return to good health speedily. We have good speakers in our branch, but we love to hear our traveling missionaries as well. May we be united and humble that God may use us in his service.

Bisbee, Arizona

E. R. Davis has been unanimously elected branch president. He is very ill with typhoid-pneumonia and many of the Saints are sick.

Missionaries Simmons and Rogers have been with us for a week. They held services for a couple of evenings but owing to the sickness among the Saints closed them with the mid-week prayer meeting. They remained with us the remainder of the week, making calls and administering to the sick. Yesterday being sacrament Sunday they stayed and conducted the services. Some of the Saints who had not been present for several months were with us again and renewed their covenant with God, and all felt the presence of the Holy Spirit in great power.

Bryan and the Great Commission

F. M. Ball writes that he was privileged to hear William Jennings Bryan speak in Delavan, Wisconsin, last summer; that while Mr. Bryan was there, he spoke on the subject, taking his text from the Bible, "Where are the nine?" Several times in his address, Mr. Bryan remarked that by chance reading, he was brought to see the matter in a different light than he had ever noticed it before. He laid great stress on the commission in Mark 16, emphasizing the word all, stating it was used with a promise, and further said the reason people do not get answers from God to-day is because they fail to do their part.

Brother Ball had written a letter to Mr. Bryan, expressing his appreciation of him as an orator, and as a man, especially in the cause of temperance. He referred also to his address on Immortality, and his appeal for the Bible against the materialism of the age. He therefore took occasion to hand him, with the letter, several tracts, such as, "Which is the church?" "The epitome of faith," "The Kirtland Temple," and "Findings in court." This was done for the purpose of acquainting a leading citizen, like Mr. Bryan, with our position. However, President F. M. Smith took the matter up with Mr. Bryan several years ago in a personal interview, so that he is fully informed with regard to our standing.

A letter from the Society Islands states that Bishop Karlstrom left Papeete, Tahiti, early in January to visit various points in the islands and attend to business matters. Elder Merchant has been away in the other islands for some months, but was expected to return before the first of February. There have been excellent reports from his work. Sister Hanson also left to make a tour of the islands early in January in connection with the health work, while Brother and Sister Almond and Brother and Sister Elliott were kept busy with local work, the printing of the mission newspaper, work with the young people, and a Religio quarterly. Their experiences have proved trying at times, but we learn that they are developing splendidly through their experiences.

Healing the sick was not, or is not now, the primary object of the gospel, yet it has its place in the gospel plan. It is quite convincing to note that Jesus said, "Heal the sick." He unhesitatingly admits sickness. Jesus took that stand when on earth.

James did not say, "If any among you think you are sick, send for some one to come and convince you that you are not, on the ground that there is no such thing." After giving the formula, James says, Confess your faults, etc., that ye may be healed. One cannot be healed of a sickness he never had.—H. J. Davison.

Forty-two baptisms are reported from Pisgah, Iowa, by Joseph Lane, president of the Little Sioux District in a letter to the Ensign. Through the efforts of the local priesthood, supplemented by some special meetings by J. F. Garver and Charles F. Putnam, this is made possible in a typical village of western Iowa.

Watch It Rise

"A Child of the Sun"

How High Will
It Go?

The total receipts to February 18 inclusive are $43,214.47.

The 1921 Christmas offering books will be closed on February 28. Funds now in the hands of local treasurer or Bishop's agent should be sent in direct to this office so as to reach here on or before that date, otherwise they will not be included in last year's offering or be published in the next Blue Stepping Stones.

We have a large and varied assortment of estimates from the guessing contest now on file, and will publish the names of the ten persons who came the nearest to the final amount of the 1921 offering as soon after the final figure is available as we can conveniently do so. This will likely be about the third issue in March.

B. R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 20, 1922.

A new serial to begin in the issue of Stepping Stones for March 12, by Elder D. T. Williams, is entitled, "A child of the sun," quite suggestive of the sun-worshipping Incas in whose land the plot is laid. Those who have read Prescott's Conquest of Peru and marveled at the wonderful development of which they seemed to have a shadow, will realize the possibilities for an imaginative story in that setting. Elder Williams has studied assiduously all the available histories of that wonderful time when gold was so plentiful that rooms could be filled with it, at the command of the conquering Spaniards; when the social order was so perfected that there were at least no poor among them, and from it all has given us some interesting dramatic scenes.

Free Headstones for Veterans

There are doubtless some unmarked graves of World War veterans of your community, and I will appreciate it if any members of their families or former friends will write me for application blanks for headstones.

The Government will furnish these headstones upon application for the graves of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the Army or Navy of the United States during the World War, whether they died in the service or since their discharge.

These headstones are of the best American white marble, 39 inches long, 12 inches wide, and 4 inches thick, the top slightly rounded, and that portion of the stone above ground when set is sand-rubbed. Each headstone is inscribed with the name, rank (if above private), company, and organization to which the deceased belonged, cut in relief within a sunken shield.

I will be glad to furnish the proper form upon which to make application for a headstone, or any further information desired upon the subject, if the relatives or friends of a deceased soldier, sailor, or marine will write me. These headstones are furnished and delivered at Government expense, freight prepaid to railroad station.—W. O. Atkeson, 164 House Office Building, Washington, District of Columbia.

Be Careful About Printed Matter

We have of late received various samples of printing from the brethren which indicate very good intentions but give some very unfavorable impressions. Violations of established rules for printing, misspelled words, poor arrangement in general are bound to give a bad effect and drive intelligent people away from us rather than to draw them toward us.

Preacherless Pulpits

Those who look into the facts and find that there are thirty-five thousand pulpits in the United States without pastors and that the supply of ministers is gradually decreasing each year, are considering a real problem. Religion requires leadership, but if the leaders are not appearing over the horizon, the outlook is not bright. So long as congregations demand interesting sermons yet refuse to accept the doctrines from which real messages are made up, they will continue pastorless.

Next week the Women's Department column will begin a monthly feature comprised of suggested programs for use by locals. Sister Charlotte Dryden will have charge of this work, and her years of experience in study and teaching of subjects connected with domestic science will be invaluable.

The Church as a Medium of Instruction

All of the teaching of the church, through preaching and otherwise, has for its purpose religious education, and should have for its purpose the creation of right attitudes and habits.

We are confronted at once with the fact, however, that the lecture method is not the most effective method of teaching, but that the plan outlined for the school of the prophets, in which each one expresses affirmatively his opinion and the whole matter is finally summed up by the leader, is far more effective than the lecture method, whether it be in a sermon or other form of address. Preaching may often be made effective for emotional reaction, and naturally the lecture method makes a decided intellectual appeal, especially to those of older years. But for children particular instruction is necessary, and for all the class method is most effective.

That the preaching method is not alone sufficient for children is clearly shown by a study of the Doctrine and Covenants in which Oliver Cowdery and W. W. Phelps were directed to prepare books for children. Doctrine and Covenants 55: 2; 57: 5. Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Frederick G. Williams, and Bishop Newel K. Whitney were all condemned for not teaching their children (90: 7-10). They had all preached. This clearly indicates that the method of preaching to adults is not sufficient for the instruction of children.

Whether the teaching of children is to be in an organized association or department, called the Sunday school, is of very third grade importance. Its importance is that rooms be provided sufficiently numerous to provide for class work. The smaller the children, the smaller, as a rule, should be the group. With adults and late adolescents, thirty to fifty, or a hundred, may at times be gathered in one class, but with little children the numbers should be kept sufficiently small to permit of individual attention to each child.

This need of church work should soon be given very serious attention in connection with our construction of church buildings. To have one room in which to preach is by no means sufficient, nor is it desirable, in our larger Sunday schools, that all the Sunday school members should be brought into one room for either the opening or closing services, for the nature of the exercises should be different from beginning to end, for primaries and beginners, from what it is for seniors and adults; and to a lesser degree, the same is true of the junior and intermediates.

Even leaving out all consideration of the value of separate assembly rooms for the different departments of the Sunday school, and the equally great need of sufficient small classrooms; even in the preaching services of the church our future needs would appear to indicate the value of more than one auditorium with suitable sermons for children and young people, at least, as well as for adults.

A beginning has been made in Independence. In the future we will expect to see this method of intensive instruction increased rather than decreased, with both the matter presented and the manner of presentation determined by the age of those to be instructed. Such needs are entirely away from the ideal of a single large auditorium, and tend rather to emphasize the need of smaller places of assembly.

In the school of the prophets, so far as the records have come down to us, the priesthood were gathered in small groups, and the president went from room to room, meeting with them and instructing them. The groups were not too large to permit of discussion affirmative to the subject being considered. The auditoriums in Kirtland Temple were divided by curtains into small rooms, and the third floor was partitioned.

It is interesting to note at this time, when this need of rooms for our educational work is coming to be recognized, as well as the further need of reaching large groups at one time, that the difficulty would seem to be met, in part at least, by the use of the wireless telephone. This would permit of meeting in various assembly halls, where it is found desirable to reach a very large group, and rather more effectively than is possible in most of the large auditoriums in existence throughout the country to-day.

In all God's creation there is no place appointed for the idle man.—Gladstone.

Thy Kingdom Come

In the past the greater emphasis of the evangelical churches has been placed upon the life to come. The recent war, according to an editorial in The Christian Work, has probably hastened, though it has not caused, a decided change, so that to-day more and more of the thought of the churches is, What is meant by the kingdom of God and the kingdom of heaven?

To some there appears to be a departure from Christianity, while in fact it is a return to real Christianity, because when Jesus Christ spoke of the kingdom of God, he was thinking of something which was to come upon the earth. In his prayer he taught us, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." Hence the sectarian churches are giving more thought to social and economic reconstruction than ever before, for the churches at large are coming to see that the essential idea of the kingdom of God as presented by Christ was not a future paradise to be realized after death, but a paradise regained in this world and continued despite death into a fuller life.

In modern revelation we are commanded to pray "that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth; that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God which is set up on the earth; wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come, that thou, O God, may be glorified in heaven, so on earth, that thy enemies may be subdued; for thine is the honor, power, and glory, for ever and ever. Amen."

The kingdom of God on earth is one of the foundation stones of the gospel, and has been so emphasized by us since 1830.

Our Problems and Economic Ideals

Some of our readers wonder why we publish so much in our General Interest department and make so many references to what others are doing. They insist that we should rather present to the world the evangel of Jesus Christ. In part, this criticism is quite well taken. We have a definite message to present, but in order rightly to appreciate that message we must know something of what others are doing.

We do not present the views of others as authoritative or binding upon the church, for that which is printed in our church papers is presented only for edification and instruction as a rule, even though it be entirely by our own members.

We must realize that we are not doing the work of God in simply talking about the plan we have.

Others are also awaking to the economic situation. Unless we can really do something and demonstrate, wherein do we exceed what other organizations are attempting? In plain fact, there are groups here and there who are trying to carry into practical effect the ideals of economic justice, of cooperation and equality, of help for the poor.

If the church has nothing else to offer except an economic solution, it would seem that we could well associate with some of those who are attempting a demonstration. But fortunately we have presented in the word of God the very best plan, if once we understand it and will put it in force. We have also all of eschatology. And we have also the assurance and privilege of divine inspiration and revelation to-day, not only as a church, but as individuals. We should, therefore, be indeed a light set upon a hill which cannot be hid.

We present the ideals of others, so that these questions may be considered from every angle. Unfortunately, we suffer, as yet, as a church, from those within who have given only a very partial consideration to our problems, who after reading what appears in the books of the church, put upon it their own limited construction, which in the end actually contradicts the plainly written word.

It is necessary and wise that we consider carefully all that has been written and said on those subjects which confront us, but this only in the hopes that such study will help to a clearer understanding of our privilege and duty, and because we, too, are awake to the opportunities before us.

The world is suffering for the gospel of Jesus Christ. They are coming more and more to see the necessity of a return to the New Testament principles, for a return of the blessings of the Spirit of God through divine healing, as well as the other gifts of the Spirit. The need for a prophet to bring forth a new evangel. The need is to bring the kingdom of God on earth to-day, and not simply sing about the "Sweet by and by."

We assume that our readers are familiar with the word of God, though we print from time to time many articles discussing the remedy there laid down. We present these things in the hopes that the church, individually and collectively, will awake to its opportunities and necessities, and that we may individually be better informed as to what are the actual problems confronting us in the world.

S. A. B.

Life presents itself to us as something to be attained, something to struggle against, and in that struggle our will is born.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

The Cross as Referring to the Savior

It is a mistake to suppose that every use of the cross is a sign of the Mediator.

It is not always easy to evaluate rightly the real belief and teachings of others. For example, one who would find in every cross on the American Continent a sign of the Christ would, of course, make a mistake, whether he be referring to the American Indians or to modern America.

The Saint Andrews cross is used by us to signify many things, the letter "x," the multiplication sign, the Roman numeral ten. It is used for making a mark when one cannot sign his name. It is also used to signify that an answer is wrong. It is used on merchandise to signify the degree of fineness, as XXX and XXXX sugar, and XXXX flour.

In like manner, a number of meanings attach to the Greek cross. To the ancient Americans, it signified the four quarters of the compass, or the four winds, which sometimes were referred to as presided over by different deities. It is found among many nations with this significance. It also leads to the form of swastika, the sign of good luck, as well as the sauvastika, which is sometimes taken as a sign of bad luck. In numeration, it is the plus sign. In like manner, one can add many other meanings that are given to it in the various parts of the world, as well as to the many other forms of the cross, as the Latin cross, the tau; the ankh cross, and many others.

But on the other hand, there are others, who, because the sign of the cross has so many different meanings, would deny to it all significance connected with the Savior. These would be guilty of an equal, if not a greater error, for the cross is found on the great Buddha of China. It was found all over Ireland; it was found in Egypt; in Persia; in Babylon; it was found in Mexico. In fact, it appears to have been found over most of the known world, even in ancient times, as the sign of hope in a crucified mediator, who, though called by many different names, bears certain resemblances. It was also used as the sign for immortality quite universally. Nor is it surprising that this should be so in view of our record that the gospel was preached to Adam and was on earth until the days of Moses; that Nephi was given a vision of the coming of the Son of Man. It is not at all surprising, then, that various stories concerning the Son of God who came for the redemption of mankind are found scattered over the ancient world. These stories are upheld by many passages in the New Testament. "They were all baptized unto Moses in the sea, and did all drink of that spiritual rock which fed them, which rock is Christ." Also see the third chapter of Hebrews, as well as other passages.

This story of the sacred record is confirmed by many traditions of a great primeval revelation between God and man.

When we consider some of the stories that have arisen in Europe in the Christian era concerning Mary and Jesus, it is not at all surprising that before he came to earth the story of his coming and of his life, as foretold with meager detail, is found corrupted with many other tales in various lands. But that does not mean that the thoughtful student who proves all things and holds fast that which is true, will fail to recognize the fundamental truth back of all these stories and traditions. There is, naturally, reason to believe that these forecasts were not as complete in detail as are the records we now possess in the Christian era of his life, thus allowing a fuller scope to symbolism and imagination to have full play.

It may be a strange commentary that so much attention is given to these vagrant stories of antiquity, while very few are acquainted with the stories told in Europe concerning Jesus.

It is, of course, a mistake to twist anything to make a case; it is also a mistake to take every reference or allusion and interpret it according to our preconceptions. It is a mistake to find in every cross the sign of the Mediator, but it certainly is as great a mistake if, in our processes of so-called rationalization, we lose the fundamental truth of Jesus the Christ, the Only Begotten of the Father, the Son of God, and if we fail to recognize the fact that the cross was in fact used as a symbol of his coming, his life and death, and hence, of immortal life for every man.

The Divorce Evil

The church must manifest its opposition to sin, yet recognize its duty towards saving the sinner.

One of the serious evils to-day is the lightness with which the marriage relationship is considered. We have referred to this several times in a condemnatory way in our columns, yet evidently some of our correspondents have not noted this fact of condemnation.

There are counties in the United States in which there were more divorces last year than there were marriages. There are cities showing as high a ratio as one divorce to every four marriages. The average in the United States is far beyond that of other civilized countries. A defense is sometimes attempted on the ground that one may be relieved from any other contract, and if the relationship is found to be intolerable, the state should grant relief.

Historically, this is a great problem, and many volumes have been written upon the subject. We have in our desk rather voluminous notes on this subject of marriage and divorce, but while we recognize the evils existing in some marriage relations, the evils of divorce are by no means less.

We have entered the court rooms many times when the divorce docket was called, and have been astonished to see young girls surrounded by evil looking women and have wondered why those young girls were there, only to learn that a hasty marriage had resulted in too early disillusion, and that these girls were the brides of only a short time before. How much the interference of others may have affected conditions, we are not prepared to say, but it is certain that marriages too hastily entered into are one of the most prolific causes of divorce.

The church owes it to itself as well as to its membership to set out clearly a high ideal of the marriage relationship, with the distinct understanding that the relationship is entered into for life.

In a recent editorial, we reviewed a book by Doctor Charles and referred to an article in the Journal of the American Bar Association. These were not presented as being final authorities, but as of interest to us in the consideration of certain passages of Holy Scripture. The article in the Journal of the American Bar Association plainly pointed out that the statement of the Mosaic law was not a provision in the law for divorce, but to the contrary. Certain evil conditions existing, it was attempted to minimize and reduce the evils of those conditions and to limit rather than to grant divorce.

This statement is quite in accordance with that of the Master, as set forth in the nineteenth chapter of Matthew. When the Pharisees asked, "Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorce, and to put her away?" Christ at once indirectly challenged that statement that it is a commandment, for he says, "Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so." (Matthew 19: 7, 8.) Matthew 19: 6 gives the great divine command of God: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

Matthew 5: 31 and 19: 9, gives one cause which justifies the putting away. We will confess that, here, we are rather inclined to agree with Doctor Charles, that the word, originally used, means unchastity, which, in this connection, means adultery, rather than fornication in the modern sense of that term. In other words, it is not limited to fornication but is unchastity, in other words, adultery.

The church has also interpreted this as meaning that where divorce is secured because of adultery, the innocent party is left free to marry again. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 42: 20.)

Reviewing briefly that former editorial which was principally a book review, this point is emphasized, that adultery released from the marriage vow, yet could be forgiven by the innocent party (see also Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7).

Yet, on the other hand, Paul in the seventh chapter of 1 Corinthians provides that where the spouse is an unbeliever and leaves, the one who remains is not bound. It seems to be a reasonable inference that such an one, being free, may marry again. Of course, that presupposes that a divorce has been granted according to the law of the land.

The law on divorce in the New Testament is clearly set out in these various passages: Matthew 5: 31; 19: 9; Mark 10: 2-6; Luke 16: 18; 1 Corinthians 7: 10, 11. We also have in modern revelation, Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7, 20. With this, perhaps, should be associated the law denouncing adultery.

General Conference Resolution 412 raises a question with regard to presumed adultery. If the believer is free, when the unbeliever departs, are we to presume that church members who desert their families are always true believers? There are many grave problems. For example, a recent letter relates that a man who was much away from home left the burden of household management and the rearing of the children to his wife for many years. When she grew old, he left her and attempted to secure a secret divorce. She happened to hear of it in time and attended, with the result that the divorce was granted to her. He was guilty of extreme cruelty; there was no proof of his adultery, so the divorce was granted her. He at once married another woman. Such cases would certainly seem to come very close to Doctrine and Covenants 42: 20, putting away for the sake of adultery, if it is not, as in our judgment it is just such a case.

In many countries the guilty persons are forbidden to marry, even after divorce. In certain States of the Union, a marriage is forbidden within a limited time, some six months, and some two years. The principle of the gospel would appear to be plain, that immediate marriage after divorce evidently shows that the divorce, or putting away, was for the sake of remarriage, and hence is, under the law, adultery.

But what shall be our position towards the faithful wife who has thus been put away? What shall be our position in the case of sinners who repent? While our heavenly Father cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, it is evident that he has compassion for the sinner, so that Jesus, when the woman was taken in adultery and was taken to be stoned, first confronted her accusers with "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone," and then Jesus bade her, "Go thy way and sin no more."

The church, in dealing with this problem, is confronted with both aspects, the necessity of making clear its opposition to sin, its duty to strive to save sinners. The church should lift high the standard of marriage, should condemn the evils of divorce, but should also extend to the sinner the helping hand.

Rauschenbusch: Christianizing the Social Order.

Ward-Edwards: Christianizing the Community.

In answering objections, the fact that the Religio has but two quarterlies is emphasized, so it is evidently impossible to meet the needs of all ages.

Second, the Sunday school has charge of the task of preparing a large variety of courses in religious education suitable for both the Religio and Sunday school, which when completed will be better adapted for each age. In the meantime the Religio must do the best it can.

As the course is only suggestive, a terse outline, because of the limited space, a variety of questions is offered from which to select, and the teacher must in each case adapt the work to the particular age and needs of the class, no matter what may be the contents of the lesson in the quarterly.

It is of special importance that we improve our teachers by more thinking and preparation. Also, since more than one course is offered in each quarterly, that these subjects be taken up whenever most convenient and best adapted; therefore the quarterlies furnishing these outlines should be preserved.

The Canceling of Subscriptions

Occasionally we have heard complaints from some of our old subscribers because their names have been dropped from our subscription list. Some have even gone so far as to say that they would never subscribe again, if their credit was not good; for after having subscribed so long they objected to having been dropped on short notice.

Now the publishing house belongs to you, and it is one of the church institutions. Still it must be handled in a businesslike way. The postal laws have prohibited the mailing of copies where there is no subscription, still would permit subscriptions being continued where there is a written promise to pay.

With the HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, Journal of History, Stepping Stones, Priesthood Journal, Zion's Hope, etc., and especially with the first three, there are often five hundred or more expirations in a single week. It is evidently out of the question for the manager to give these all individual attention. They are handled, therefore, in the regular course of business, and a notice sent a few weeks before expiration; also a second notice is sent at the expiration. Now, that is the plan to insure that the subscriber will receive due notice.

If for any reason you cannot pay promptly, it is at least the courteous thing to do to advise the business office promptly and give them at least a chance to take care of you rather than to leave the matter go, and then object if you find that your name is no longer on the mailing list.

It happens many times that the paper continues to be sent after a person has passed away; but we do not always know, unless advised, but that some other member of the family is still receiving the paper and enjoying it. A subscription is not discontinued before the expiration date for any cause, until we are advised. But this is an additional reason why a subscription should not be continued too long after it has expired.

Every home should have the SAINTS' HERALD as the official organ of the church. The mere fact that through some oversight a mistake may have been made in your subscription is no reason why you should cut yourself off from the communication which it furnishes you. The manager of the Herald Publishing House and the editors are more than willing to do everything they can, but the manager acts under the direction of the Board of Publication, under the immediate supervision of the Presiding Bishop, and they have directed that we do not attempt to do a credit business, but instead keep prices as low as practicable.

We can assure you, one and all, that it is with the most profound regret that we learn that the name of any of our subscribers has been taken from the list and that they are no longer receiving the paper; so, please cooperate with us for the benefit of all, and at least let us know before you get offended, because of what may have been an oversight, or which may be the carrying out of necessary business rules.

The Older People of Zion

Possibly there should be a U. O. O. P. Z. to coordinate with the A. O. Y. P. Z.

While the A. O. Y. P. Z., the Amalgamated Order of Young People in Zion, were meeting night by night in the upper auditorium the past week, the older people, those past thirty years of age, were meeting in the lower auditorium listening to the same speakers and the same music that was offered upstairs, though in a different order. They also met each evening at 7.30 p. m. for song service with formal opening and sermon at 8. They might be referred to as perhaps the U. O. O. P. Z., the Unamalgamated Order of Older People in Zion.

Some splendid meetings were held each night. The attendance percentage rather exceeded that in the upper auditorium. At least the room was night by night better filled. At one time thirty per cent of the young people detained at home were kept there by sickness. The young people were splendidly organized. They were pledged to attend and tickets were furnished them, each one receiving a ticket agreeing to attend not less than six of the seven services. Each day those who were absent were called by phone and reminded. No such an effort was made with the older people, yet night by night they were to be found in their places, until Friday night at 7.30 they were rushing in extra chairs, as the room was already filled and was soon crowded.

The older people made a splendid record in their faithfulness in attendance. The services were also marked by the high grade and spiritual enthusiasm of their congregational singing under the leadership of A. H. Mills, and in the deep spirituality of their prayers. In these three particulars they quite excelled throughout the week, except that on Sunday night the upper auditorium was also filled at 7.30 p. m.

After all, this is not surprising. For after all the emphasis placed on the importance of the young people, it is those older in years who are in fact carrying the burden of the work. It is those older in years who have the experience, which many of the young people frankly recognize that they themselves do not as yet possess. Still the humility of the young people, their desire to consecrate and desire to learn and to do deserves our hearty commendation.

We must remember on one hand that these services were planned for and by the young people primarily, but in fairness we must also recognize that the burden of directing the work and of planning was on those who are not within the limit defined of thirteen to thirty years of age. Every one of the speakers has passed the upper limit. They will never see forty again. The chorister also belonged with the older people. A number of the older people for special reasons were also seated night by night in the west nave of the church in the upper auditorium.

This is as it should be, for if the work of God is to be carried on, it cannot and will not be by a few, nor by a class, but by a whole people. The young are needed, as are also those in the prime of life and those who are older in years. As a rule, we look to the young people for enthusiasm, but in this instance the enthusiasm of the older ones was especially noticeable.

The young people deserve very great credit for their organization, for the humility shown by those who attended the various ward meetings, for the splendid spirit of devotion shown in the prayer meetings on Tuesday and on Sunday morning. We would not detract in the slightest degree from the credit due them, nor of the church's need of their help. We would, however, emphasize the tremendous resources for consecrated service for the building up of Zion, the unselfishness and devotion of those older in years, and the great need that the church fully utilize their ability and consecration.

A Special Request

Sister W. H. Mannerling is in the Independence Sanitarium, suffering intensely from tuberculosis of the spine and confined to a plaster cast. She thinks of the many people to whom she has ministered in gospel service in association with her husband in the Southwest, and desires that they and others join in special fasting and prayer in her behalf on Sunday, March 12. She has faith in their support that she may be relieved.

Gathering to the Central Places

By Edward Rannie

Saints should either settle in colonies or where there is an organized branch.

The subject of the gathering is quite an extensive one. What history reveals of past attempts, their successes and failures, is very important. Its religious, moral, agricultural, and industrial aspects are all parts of the great question. But in this article the writer will be content to try to make plain one principle or idea.

From the information contained in Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11 we learn that the organization of stakes and gathering are closely allied and that until stakes were organized the Saints should gather in the "regions round about." When the command to organize stakes was given it was an indication from the Lord for the work of the gathering to move forward. Such a command was given in 1901 (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 10), and in 1909 the same principle is given recognition. (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1.)

In referring to the gathering of the Jews, Jesus used for an illustration a hen with her chickens gathered under her wings, which would not be if they were all scattered over the lot. When the command was given to gather into stakes and the regions round about the center place, it did not mean to scatter into those places. The Lord said as many should gather into one place as was "practicable and profitable and in accordance with the feelings of the people." (Doctrine and Covenants 128:5.) There are two ways in which we may be gathered: first to where a branch is in existence; or, organize a colony under the direction of the Bishop. In either case the Saints would be gathered, but if they locate at some point remote from a community of Saints, they are scattered, and they have failed to receive all the benefits which were intended from the gathering.

There may be exceptions to this general rule, and success come where a family is located away from a branch, but my observations lead me to believe that the losses are greater than the gains, because in so locating they have been deprived of religious privileges, and thus entire families are lost to the church. It is a mistake many make when they move into one of the stakes and believe that they have fully complied with the law in reference to the gathering when they are located on the land of Zion.

There are three things that should be kept in view in moving into one of the stakes, when all other requirements of the law have been complied with: religious privileges for both old and young, opportunities for education in the public schools, and a way by which a living can be earned and so be able to supply the family with the common necessities of life.

Many families at present are depriving themselves of the benefits of the religious privileges that come to those who are gathered, and are permitting their children to grow up without any religious association who could change their location without any financial burden to themselves or to the church and have just as good—and sometimes better—opportunities to earn a living. This condition applies with greater force to those who are rearing their families remote from church privileges, and not so much where well organized branches exist.

It is well for our members to keep in mind that in the four stakes (which do not include Independence, the center place, which is now the city of Zion) there are many branches located in the cities, towns, and country places with just as good an opportunity to earn their living as any other place in the United States.

There is another important point in the gathering that we must not overlook; that is, to reach our neighbors with the gospel; and there is no greater missionary force than the righteous lives of God's people. When living in the various communities we should as citizens of our country take an interest in the public affairs of the community, the county, State, and Nation, and always be found on the side of right and justice without being a noisy agitator, but following the instruction of the Lord, "living and acting honestly and honorably before God and in the sight of all men, using the things of this world in the manner designed of God, that the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord." (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 8.) By converting our neighbors to the gospel of Jesus Christ, for they are just as precious in the sight of the Lord in the land of Zion as elsewhere, much of the land will already be redeemed by purchase.

Victory Over Blindness

[At the funeral of Arthur Pearson which took place early in December in England, more than a thousand blind men assembled at the grave to pay him a last tribute. All night before the services, blind men and women were arriving at the railroad station. Many of them were ex-service men who had lost their sight in the recent war. Most of these men had passed through his school at Saint Dunstan, and many of them taught a trade there, and willingly sacrificed a day's work to testify to their gratitude.

One of the most touching episodes, according to the London Daily News, was when the mourners, themselves blind, sang "Lead, kindly light" at the grave. Upon this event, Elder John W. Rushton has sent the HERALD the following comment]:

Elder Rushton's Communication

The tragic death of Sir Arthur Pearson, whose funeral is described in the accompanying newspaper clipping, reminds me of the wonderful life of other men who have suffered under tremendous handicaps, and out of apparent disaster, with the strange wizardry of will power, have literally wrested from a truculent fate a triumph which is nothing short of miraculous.

Of such, is the story of Henry Fawcett, the blind postmaster of Great Britain, whose life makes one of the most interesting and romantic of all the characters in British politics during the Victorian era.

Fawcett was a brilliant scholar at Cambridge University, and on his way to be recognized as one of the leaders in the science of economics. However, during the hunting season, this man was out shooting with his father, when owing to some accident the gun carried by the father accidentally exploded and the charge destroyed the eyesight of his son. The grief of the family was acute. Everything possible was done to bring back the lost function, but in vain, and at twenty-five years of age Henry went into the "darkness that can be felt." For thirty-six years he moved in the blackness of night where, for him, there was neither sun by day nor stars by night, at the very time when all of the joy and glory of life is inviting youth to enter upon the romantic adventures opening before it. To everyone but himself, his career was ended.

Instead of giving up his work, he continued his studies and went through his examinations with honor and was made a fellow of the university and finally held a chair in economics. Thus he gave a new meaning to the apocalyptic saying, "God himself shall be the light." Afterwards, he entered Parliament and sat as a member in the House of Commons. In course of time he was made the postmaster general of the United Kingdom, and when death claimed him in 1884 he was immortalized in the hearts of his countrymen, and his spirit still lives in the glorious triumph he achieved.

Sir Arthur Pearson was one of the most successful and capable men in the British newspaper world, and was a rival of the famous Harmsworth Brothers, whose best known representative is Lord Northcliffe. In the very zenith of his life and prosperity the night of unceasing darkness came upon him and shut him out of the ordinary affairs of human enterprise. Instead of allowing this paralyzing experience to benumb him, he set his face towards victory over his blindness and won.

During the recent World War Sir Arthur had his great opportunity, and rendered splendid service to the many victims who in the cruel strain and under the diabolical enginery of the war were made victims of the same misfortune which had overtaken him. As a courageous crusader and an invincible apostle of a new gospel of hope to those who "sit in darkness," he led them out of "darkness unto light," and they "saw a great light." For in the institution which he founded at Saint Dunstan's in London, to these unfortunate people he gave opportunities for self-expression and deliverance from a dismal and grinding poverty, with a sense of joyous freedom heretofore denied to the blind.

The story of the continuous miracles which have been and are still being wrought in this institution has been told in many papers and magazines throughout the world, impressing upon all that there can no calamity befall one which can overwhelm the intrepid soul of him who will insist upon being the "master of his fate."

It is just such men who through such experiences give the world a revelation of the essence of immortality, and invest the inspiring lines of Henley with a deeper meaning and a most glorious vindication:

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud.
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.

Beyond the place of wrath and tears
Looms but the horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years
Finds and shall find me unafraid.

It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishment the scroll,
I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul.

The Harvard University Committee on Economic Research reports a heavy falling off both in exports and imports for 1921, with no prospect at present that we have turned the corner. There was a decline from more than ten billion to nearly 5 billion, a falling off of five billion, or 48 per cent in the volume of foreign business in 1921. Manufactures are just beginning to pick up in recent months.

Group Work in Council Bluffs

By O. Salisbury, Branch President

Organization plus activity manifests life.

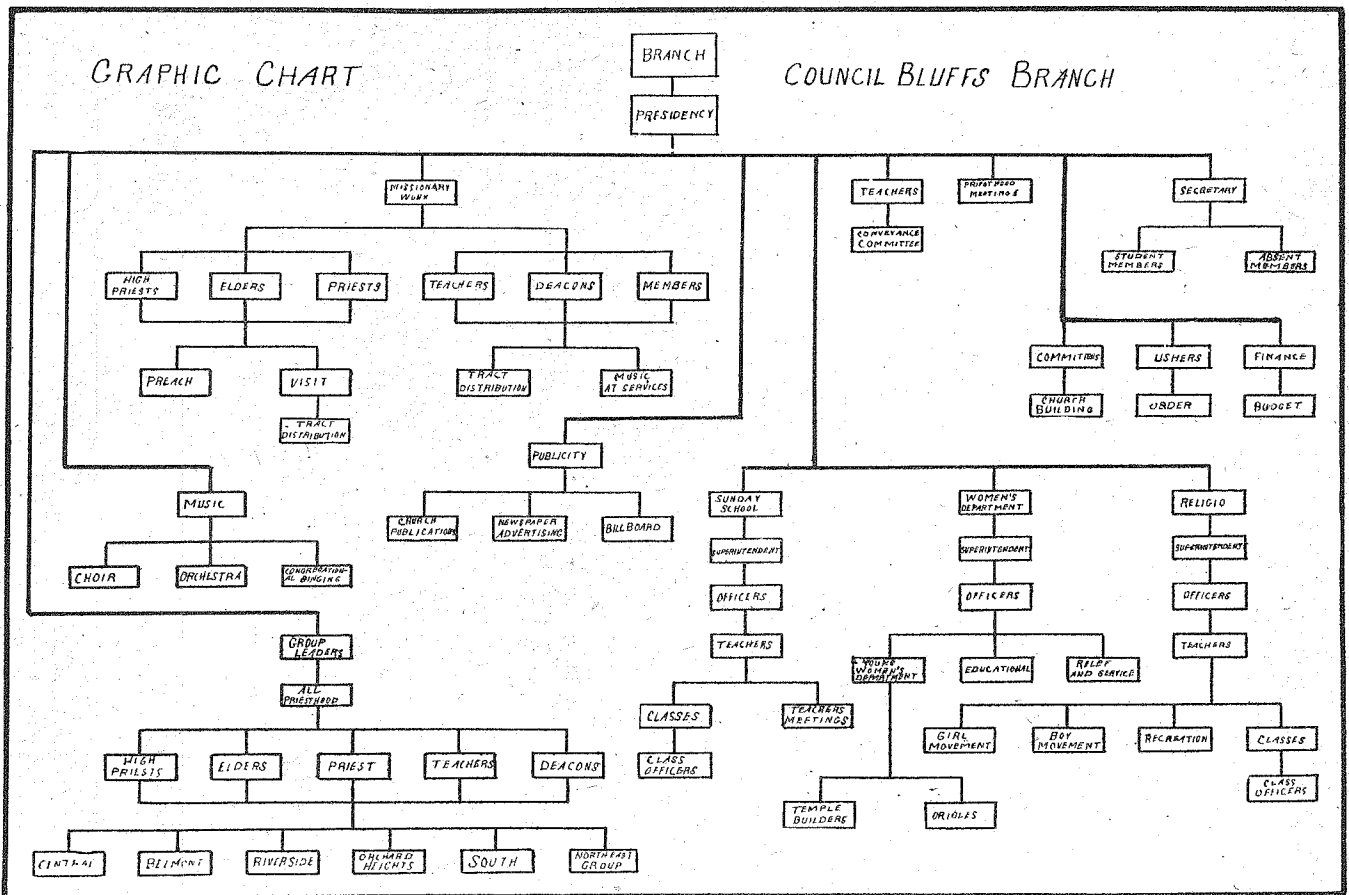

Some months ago we were asked to give an outline of the organization of the Council Bluffs, Iowa, Branch. The accompanying chart perhaps will assist the reader to have a clearer vision of the work here.

Council Bluffs Branch is located in the city of Council Bluffs, Iowa, a city of approximately forty thousand inhabitants. It will be remembered that this place was the place known as Winter Quarters are not fully officered. The group system for a large branch is a big step forward in that it brings a group pastor close to the membership. It relieves the branch president of a great deal of detail work, gives him time for other matters.

All Priesthood in Group Work

All members of the priesthood are assigned to group work. This gives each member of the priesthood an opportunity to work in the office whereunto he is called. Under the group system the priesthood membership has definite work which gives opportunity for development. We have members of the priesthood in the various offices as are outlined in for Brigham Young and his following, when they were moving westward to the valley of the mountains.

The branch is presided over by a presidency consisting of a high priest and two elders. We find that in a branch of this size this arrangement is working well.

Referring to the chart, and following the line down at the extreme left hand side, we note the city is divided into six groups. Each group has its officers. Where possible, there is a high priest or an elder, a priest or priests, a teacher, and a deacon, but due to the fact that we do not have a sufficient number of teachers or deacons, some of the groups the chart. Every member of the priesthood is urged to do visiting, or what is commonly termed pastoral work. Instead of one elder presiding we have nine presiding officers.

Central Church is what we call our church group, and within this group is our central church, located on Pierce Street. Our regular services are: Priesthood prayer meeting at 8.15 a. m. the first Sunday of each month; Sunday school at 9.30; prayer and sacrament service at 11; Religio, 6:30; preaching, 8. Each Sunday except the first Sunday of the month we have social service at the 11 a. m. hour. On the first Sunday of each quarter the missions all come to the Central Church for prayer and sacrament service.

Church Buildings

We can seat fairly comfortably about two hundred and twenty-five to two hundred and fifty people in our Central Church auditorium. This, however, is not adequate for our needs. We have a basement, and beginning with the first Sunday in October, we have had illustrated lectures for the children up to fifteen years of age each Sunday evening. Our week-night services are as follows: Senior orchestra meets 7.45 Tuesday night; Wednesday night, prayer service; Thursday night, junior orchestra; Friday night, choir rehearsal.

In our Belmont Group we have our Avenue B church building, which we purchased something over a year ago. It has a seating capacity of perhaps one hundred fifty. We hold regular services, including Sunday school, two preaching services, and Religio, each Sunday, except the first Sunday of the month at the 11 o'clock morning service, which is sacrament service.

At the Riverside Mission we lease a building at $25 a month, in which we hold the same services as are described in the Belmont Group.

The Orchard Heights Group is just north of the city. Regular services are held in the schoolhouse. The services are at the same time and of the same nature as has been outlined in the Belmont Group.

The South Group does not have very many members, but just recently we have opened up a mission. We anticipate a Sunday school organization there in a short time.

The Northeast Group does not have any regular services.

It will be noticed that the items in the chart are arranged in regular order, from left to right, so reference to the chart is thus made easy.

Music Well Managed

At our annual business meeting last December the presidency was asked to name a committee of three who would have direct oversight of the musical activities of the branch. This musical committee selects a chorister for each group and also a pianist. Neither is congregational singing neglected.

The choir at the central church has a complete organization. It has a membership of about fifty. We also have a choir organization at the Riverside Mission. A musical director is expected to be at the other places of meeting.

There are two orchestras in the branch: a senior and a junior. No doubt they will add very materially to the success of the work in the future.

Perhaps there is no place in the world that is more favorable for missionary work than in this part of the country, and as we do not have a very large corps of missionaries in the district and none in the city, we have organized a missionary department of the branch. Two elders have charge and they are working in conjunction with the group leaders and have already opened one place, and have several more in contemplation.

Everyone in Missionary Work

It is our aim to have everyone in the branch according to his capacity, to assist in the missionary work, whether it is to preach and visit and distribute tracts, or to be faithful in attendance, assist in tract distribution, and with music at the services.

We have distributed a great many tracts in the past two years. This will have further attention and will be carried out systematically in the future. The systematic distribution of tracts, etc., has proved to be not only a good thing for the nonmember, but our young people have intensely enjoyed the experience of making a house-to-house canvass.

Our publicity department is fully organized. One has been appointed who takes subscriptions for the church papers. In a short time we will start a special subscription campaign with the idea of putting at least one church paper in every home.

Our publicity agent also looks after getting the announcements in the daily papers. It may appear that the publicity and paper advertising should come under one head, but we believe a distinction will be made in the future.

You will note on the chart the division marked "Billboard." This department is just starting to develop. We have a committee who is preparing to do billboard work. We hope to see billboards on all the main thoroughfares of the city. Our idea is to have the church emblem in the center at the top, just under it in plain black, "Reorganized." Just under that, in large, two-colored block letters, "The Church of Jesus Christ." Under that in black letters, "Of Latter Day Saints." Under this will be the place of meeting, etc., and on the lower right-hand corner we anticipate having a picture which will represent some Bible truth such as the return of the prodigal son, or a baptismal scene, etc. In the lower left-hand corner the program for the following Sunday will be placed upon each billboard every Monday evening. This billboard proposition has not materialized, however, but we are working to that end.

Deacons Very Busy

Let us omit for a moment the line running to the various church departments. Outside of the regular work of the teachers, we have asked them to have charge of the conveyance committee as mentioned in the chart. They get in touch with the members who are unable to get to church because of physical disability or other causes, and their work is to see that these members get to church once on Sunday. They take them in autos. Of course this is free of charge.

Our deacons are probably about the busiest men of our priesthood corps. Besides their usual work of taking care of the church and their other duties as specified, they are chairmen of a committee on caring for the buildings, including the care of the buildings, the utensils, and janitor work, and also the preparation of the emblems. This committee is composed of one deacon and a number of young men who willingly devote their services in assisting, cleaning, warming, and taking care of the buildings.

The deacons also have to look after the ushering. They have young men to assist them in this work. Our deacons look after the financing, which is carried on under the system of subscribing so much a year. They keep an account of all funds that come into their hands. Their accounts are audited once a year. Brother Orace Currié is the treasurer, and was a deacon up to a recent date, when he was ordained an elder. We use the budget system, each department placing in the hands of our financial clerk what it is going to need. To illustrate: Whatever the Sunday school is going to need, or the Women's Department, or the Religio, for their year's work. The amount is brought to the branch business meeting in December and the branch acts upon it. The budget system is working satisfactorily in most cases.

Enrollment Carefully Kept

The secretary has a great deal to do in a branch of this size in an effort to keep an account of the membership and to keep up a correct mailing list.

On October 1, we had an enrollment of 709 members in the branch. Since the above date the secretary advises that about twenty more have been added. [Since this article was written, about thirty-five more have been added.—EDITORS.]

While we have in our chart resident membership, we are not able to give the exact number. We have a committee consisting of three stenographers, who are donating their services one night each week, and we expect to be able to get this definitely worked out in a short time.

We also anticipate having a corrected list of the absent membership which no doubt will change our records as to present membership, when transfers are completed.

Returning to near the middle of the chart. Under the heads of the departments as outlined in the chart, you should have no trouble in understanding clearly our organization, which is perhaps familiar to some of your readers. The presidency of the branch nominates the heads of the various departments. Quite a large number of our inexperienced members have been pressed into service the past year.

It is not our policy to hold out this system as being perfect. We do not claim that our methods would fit the requirements of every branch. The work has been growing and at least a large majority of our workers appreciate the organization and procedure.

This question of nomination has proved, based on results, to be a goodly success. To illustrate: We nominated a young man for a Sunday school superintendent who had never done any public work of that character. Up to the time he was nominated and elected he had never attended Sunday school at this mission. Under his methodical direction, the school has increased about four hundred per cent, and if the percentage is kept up another year, this school will be crowding in numbers our central school.

Some of these methods are new to some of the workers, and as all become accustomed to this procedure, it will prove even of more value.

Organization is the basis of success. However, an organization means nothing unless imbued with the spirit of life. No organization, however perfect, will succeed to its highest point of efficiency, unless every unit is working towards a single ideal. It has been proved to be a mistake about a "Ford running on its reputation." The facts are, it must have gasoline, air, oil, and a good spark of electricity. Put the necessary elements into the above organization and it will become as popular in the church circle of our people as the Ford has in the automobile world.

The Near East Relief Bureau reports the case of an Armenian girl who had branded on her back the cross, not all at once, but each day a little piece was added. Each day for one week they asked her to give up Christ, but when she refused they added a piece to her cross. Finally, on the seventh day, they added the alternative, "Mohammed and you live; Christ, and to-morrow you die." She replied, "I shall have died knowing the cross with Christ." But that night she escaped.

The Near East Relief states that their workers give frequent events of heroism, that they suffer from disease from the natives, even with all sanitary care. Their goal is not alone the saving of life, but it is to save life and also make better lives in the East.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Clean Newspapers

In a recent address in Sacramento, California, President Frederick M. Smith is quoted as calling in question the independence of the modern newspaper. Several articles have recently appeared concerning the large Sunday newspapers of the country and the character of news, so-called, which they present. The People's Popular Monthly for November, 1921, sums it up as follows:

It is the common thing for these so-called great family newspapers, in their Sunday feature sections, to give a whole page or maybe two pages, with suggestive pictures, to some movie star's experiments with her third husband. Or perhaps some society butterfly tells of her experience in some Turkish harem. And if nothing else is at hand to make a paper that should not be permitted the use of the mails, the editor puts in a page or two of pictures of bathing beauties, with costumes that would not be permitted by the police on most of the large bathing beaches.

Everybody who sees the Sunday newspapers from the larger cities knows that these statements are true. Probably the publishers will say that the public wants this sort of stuff. If so, and these publishers are not fools, who is to blame? The question you should settle is, Do you want papers of this kind coming into your home each week? There can hardly be any one thing more demoralizing to the moral stamina of your boys and girls than to have the big newspapers of the country constantly filled with stories and pictures that appeal to the baser passions. How can you expect your boys and girls to be clean minded if they are fed up every week with pages of salacious pictures and reading matter?

It is mighty near time that the decent people of this country let the publishers of these big daily newspapers know what they think about this class of literature. The publisher is only human and will be glad to give his readers what he thinks they want. You are directly to blame if you allow papers of this kind to come into your home without protest. They are a constant menace to the morality of our youth, and if you, who believe in clean living, say nothing, you are partners with the newspapers in this destructive work.

But perhaps the most severe criticism appeared in the Kansas City Star recently in a cartoon, in which a mother took away the daily paper and substituted The Life of Jesse James. But the boy objected that he did not care for those tame Sunday school books.

Those who have observed widely the nature of the Sunday newspapers know how true these criticisms are.

That the death warrant of Jesus Christ has been found engraved on a copper plate in Hebrew, is the argument of a certain article appearing in various newspapers at present. It is said to be secreted in Rome, and to have been found in 1810 in Italy. It may or may not be authentic, but at least is interesting from various angles.

Emerging From Depression

The Harvard University Committee on Economic Research is issuing a series of letters on economic conditions. The letter for December 1, 1921, on general business conditions includes a chart showing first the New York bank clearings, shares traded on the New York stock exchange excluded. A curve of speculation shows a rise from January, 1919, to July and October of same year, and then a general decrease until 1921. Interest rates on four to six months commercial papers is indicated by a second curve. A decline of the curve usually precedes and forecasts an upward movement of the curve of speculation. The result is that bank clearings of New York City have shown a decided decline since March, 1920. At present there are evidences of easy money condition, the last three issues of the United States Treasury Certificates, amounting to eleven hundred million dollars, while the subscription was over three times as large. Interest rates will decline, with higher prices for investment securities. The country is just beginning to emerge from profound business depression; prices have fallen abruptly, bank loans have been liquidated.

British Review of Washington Conference

The London Spectator for December 19, 1921, prints an excellent review of the Washington Conference and the Quadruple Treaty between Great Britain, France, Japan, and the United States. It emphasizes the closer union between Great Britain and the United States; this dream of Balfour and Bryce which has at last been consummated. They show a keen appreciation of the political divisions in this country, and of the rights and problems of the United States Senate.

This treaty attempts to meet conditions not only in the northern Pacific, but also in the southern Pacific. It makes no provision for defense, but only that the parties concerned will confer over any complications which may arise. American and English men should no longer refer to each other as "foreigners."

Governor of Missouri for Better Schools

In an address before fifteen hundred farmers and farm organization leaders of Missouri, Governor Hyde recently went on record with some strong declarations in favor of good roads and better schools.

The school system has long been subject to much merited criticism, and on this subject, Governor Hyde said:

The greatness of Missouri will not be measured by her natural resources. These are less to-day than they were fifty years ago, and will be less fifty years hence. The greatness of Missouri will be measured by the greatness of her people, and their greatness will be determined by the efficiency of her roads and schoolhouses. . . . But you can put this down—as long as I am governor there is going to be a red hot fight in Missouri for an equal educational opportunity for all the boys and girls in Missouri, whether they live in the city or the country; and I am proud that in the last year the State put more than one million dollars more into the schools than it ever did before.

It was predicted by some that he would hardly dare go on record before the farmers with this sort of program, but no doubt all interested in the civic welfare of Missouri will join in such an expression of ideals for the State, and hope that no matter who is in control, they will be attained.

Women's Influence in Nationalist Movement in India

It seems that the wife of Mahatma Gandhi, leader of the noncooperation movement in India, whose efforts towards democracy for India are at present finding much favor among the natives, is herself a character of no mean capabilities.

She adheres to the same policy as her husband, that of no violence, and thereby has become very influential in many ways.

She has associated with her some very influential and wealthy women, who are able to wield considerable influence with the laboring class.

Jews Taxed One Tenth to Restore Zion

"Every Jew in the United States is being taxed one tenth of his earnings to assist in restoring that country (Palestine), which is destined, in time, to become one of the richest areas in the world," said Colonel J. H. Patterson in a recent speech in Omaha, Nebraska. V. Jabotinsky, who is accompanying him on his speaking trip to arouse enthusiasm for the restoration of Palestine, says it will not be long before the Jews again will have their own country, their own government, schools, homes, and customs. "There is no nation in the world where such a variety of products can be grown as in Palestine," declared Colonel Patterson, "but everything there, including the land, trees, huts, springs, have doubled in price since the Arabs found out the Jews were coming back. What we have got to have is money, and the United States must furnish it."

He further says, with the exception of the rich Jews in the United States, the Jews are anxious to settle in Palestine, and are willing to sacrifice their money that the land may be built up.

HYMNS AND POEMS

If—

By Mary E. Gillin

Oh, wouldn't life be happy,
And wouldn't life be gay,
If every day were sunny
And pleasures came to stay?
And if 'twere always summer,
And roses bloomed to last,
With never any winter
With chill and killing blast.

If never we felt sickness—
If never pain were ours,
And only gladness tarried
Through all the golden hours—
If youth with all its visions
Endured throughout our life,
And every wish were granted
Without so much of strife—

If grief, and pain, and sorrow,
Were not on every hand;
If only joy-bells tinkled
In every foreign land.
But famine, flood, and tempest,
'Midst heat, and cold, and rain
Are stalking through their highways
And followed close by pain.

If we could solve these problems—
We'd come to feel and know
That light must follow shadow,
And Joy come close to Woe.
For never yet a valley
But lies between two hills:
And the Law of Compensation
A mighty purpose fills.

The finest piece of sculpture
Has felt the hammer's blow;
And those with hearts most tender
Some hours of pain must know;
'Tis well if, on the morrow,
The passing years reveal
The stamp of the infinite
On brows that bear His seal.

Millennial Year

By Samuel Blair

(Written about the time of the reorganization of the church, nearly seventy years ago. Copied from the original by W. H. Deam, nephew of the author. Brother Blair was the first recorder in the Reorganization.)

Let glory to God in the highest be given,
By Saints here on earth and reechoed in heaven
Let every nation now their offerings bring
To Christ, their Messiah, their Prince, and their King.

His angels have come on the wings of the wind
To bring us glad tidings, although we have sinned;

To bid us rejoice and to trust in his word,
For He hath in mercy the priesthood restored.

For soon will the clouds of the mid-heavens rend,
And Christ with the ancients in glory descend,
To reign o'er the nations a thousand blest years
And crown with rich blessings His prophets and seers.

Let Israel now gather from east and from west,
From every clime and nation, in Zion to rest.
For soon will commence the millennial year
And the earth in her beauty again will appear.

All sorrow and sighing will then flee away
And all nations the laws of Messiah obey.
The Saints will their gardens of fig trees possess,
And their foes will have power no more to oppress.

Going Home Alone—A Song

By Mrs. Mary H. Carpenter

I'm facing towards the sunset, onward going,
While Memory with her fleet but silent wings
Keeps even pace, and flowers round me throwing,
Makes bright the graves of dead and buried things.
Vanished the home, my happy home of childhood,
And friends of youth I cherished all my own.
Only echo voices linger in the wildwood,
I'm going toward the setting sun alone.

Chorus:

The fading leaves of life are thickly falling,
The sighing winds around me sob and moan,
Alone I follow voices softly calling,
I'm going toward the setting sun alone.

The hearthstone where I held my place as mother
Lies cold beneath its heap of ashes gray;
The one once held there dearer than a brother
No longer seeks its cheer at close of day;
No more for me the children's merry laughter
Rings through the chambers all so quiet grown,
All these are safely kept in God's hereafter,
I'm going toward the setting sun alone.

Chorus.

Were there no realm beyond this world of weeping,
A land whose wealth can ne'er be counted o'er,
Where treasures lost are held in God's safe keeping,
Where time robs not "For time shall be no more";
No hope would light my weary down hill faring,
Drop flowers upon those graves so thickly strown,
And make the sunshine last through all the caring,
While going toward the setting sun alone.

Chorus.

Consecration

By Albert McCullough

(This is one of the most popular of the songs used at special young people's meetings. To tune of "Aloha Oe"—Farewell to thee.)

Unto God, who knows our ev'ry weakness,
With faith, we lift our hearts in prayer.
Asking, in humility and meekness,
For his love, his direction, and his care.

Monthly Programs

We are glad to announce that, beginning in this issue and appearing monthly, we are planning to present suggested programs for use by our locals. We count ourselves fortunate in securing the services of Sister Charlotte Dryden for this purpose. Sister Dryden's years of study and teaching in subjects connected with domestic science, as well as extended contact with children and mothers in her work in the public schools, preeminently qualifies her for directing the studies of our women in this manner. She has a sympathetic attitude towards childhood, and an exalted perception of the parent's responsibility thereto.

It is contemplated to run the lessons for the entire year upon the subject of "Home decoration," taking up various phases throughout the months ahead, thus entering a field not, as yet, covered by any of our special courses.

We trust the sisters will build as widely as possible upon the outline Sister Dryden gives, and will find in it and her accompanying article, food for profitable thought and discussion.

Write us your opinions freely. We are anxious to give our sisters suggestions and materials which can be used in a practical way and through a discussion and study of which we may all be encouraged to bring up the standards of our homes. Is it too high a goal for us to wish to have our homes reflect the highest and most spiritual ideals of our church? We think not!

Lesson: Effect of home decoration on children.

Chorus:

In these latter days, with songs of praise,
We all must help to spread the gospel story.
Our ev'ry deed from sin be freed
Till Zion we redeem.

Though the task be great that lies before us,
We trust in One divinely strong.
Knowing well at last we'll be victorious,
We will pray that the time will not be long.

Lord, accept the humble consecration
Of our lives, our talents to thy cause,
Till thy word is preached in ev'ry nation,
And all men have a knowledge of thy laws.

Effects of Home Decoration on Children

(Paper for March meeting of Women's Department locals.)

Some one has said, "The race marches forward on the feet of little children: The progress of humanity is measured, not by what we add to our own lives, but by how much better we make the lives of our children."

Influence of the Home on the Child

In days past a great deal of emphasis was given to the physical care of the child, even extending preparation to months before its birth. This is a necessary part of the mother's duty, but we are also beginning to realize how much the mental and spiritual welfare of the child is dependent upon the feelings and character of the mother. We also know we must begin years before a child's birth, and train parents and grandparents if we would see the noblest character in the children. Upon physical strength and health, depend the mental view, the spiritual beauty and, in fact, all the joy of fullness of life. Who has more influence over this than the mother? And she who marries and contemplates assuming this blessed name should prepare herself physically, mentally, and spiritually for wielding this wonderful power.

Responsibility of Mothers

The perfect home was ordained by God, and the plan is given in Psalms 128. Let every mother read this carefully and also 1 Timothy 5: 14 and Titus 2: 3, 4, 5.

How little do many parents realize the great influence of beauty in the home! Beauty does not require elaborate or expensive decoration, but, first of all, cleanliness, orderliness, good color schemes applied in paper, or tinted walls, artistic drapery, and rugs in harmony with the other surroundings.

Expense of Proper Decoration

Expense is not always measured in money or labor, but may often be more truly estimated by the effect produced. "Is it worth while?" we often hear asked. Let us remember that choice of proper colors, of tones which are restful and harmonious and soothe us when we are weary, is not necessarily any more expensive than ugly ones, though often these desirable colors may be more elaborate or richer in hue when we can spend more. What is more cool and refreshing on a hot summer day than a white cottage, overgrown with green vines and overshadowing trees? Is the large gray stone mansion more attractive? For this very reason green draperies of thin goods, requiring little labor to launder, a light gray or cream white wall, and rugs with green and tan—or even a bare floor with only a few small rugs—and wicker chairs would attract us all on a warm day, rather than walls with dark blue, red or deep yellow—all of which are oppressive when one is warm.

The effect on the person who lies ill in a room in which large figured paper, too many pictures, heavy bric-a-brac, or bright colors and light prevail, is often disastrous, as it annoys many to such an extent that nerves are overwrought. We notice this effect on nerves more in one who is ill, but there is always present that subtle influence, and thus the child's whole future is molded by the home surroundings, physical, mental, and spiritual.

Social Value

A child who has been reared in a home where harmony and beauty were considered in the decorations, never outgrows its influence. The story is told of a home where hung a large picture of a beautiful ship on the ocean. Later two boys went from that home to become sailors. When asked the cause of their decision, each stated that from early childhood he had been influenced to love the sea and to long for the time when he could sail on such a ship. Then we have the story of "The great stone face," by Hawthorne, in which a child lived for years where he beheld an image in the rock on the mountain side near his home. This rock was so broken that it resembled a noble, strong, human face, and in years to come the village folk saw to their surprise, that the face of this boy who had loved that rocky prominence, had grown to resemble the noble face he had watched through many years.

So in our homes the choice of pictures in which there are beauty and refinement, produces a marked effect upon the minds of those who dwell there. A beautiful statue, good choice in color, and orderly decorations leave an impression never to be forgotten. This does not mean great expense, but rather, greater care in choosing. In fact, guarding against gaudiness and over-decoration means less expense. It costs no more to choose plain paper or tints for our walls, than to select large-flowered and festooned paper such as glares before our eyes so prominently in many a home. A whole community may be uplifted by considering these things carefully, that every home may become more attractive and restful.

The Artistic Spirit Should Be Developed in America

In Italy it is claimed one cannot sell a cheap statue to even the common laborer, and often the best operas are heard whistled and hummed amongst the rush of labor. Why is this? Simply because good music and art have been a part of the home life. Why should we, as Saints and mothers, seek to develop this love of the beautiful? Psychology teaches us that if thoughts are along the lines that are uplifting, they grow to be a part of character. When thoughts are on beautiful things, they are purified, and the tendency is to "come up higher" as we have been so often commanded.

We put flowers in a sick room to brighten it and cheer the invalid. We place a picture on our walls to give loftier or more beautiful thoughts to the inmates of the room. Who ever looked at a beautiful scene from nature, or that of a strong character as depicted in Hoffman's paintings of Christ, and was not uplifted! America needs this uplift. If God chose this continent for presenting his latter-day revelations and Zion, should we not give thought to increasing every means for its improvement and beautifying?

State schools now send workers out to give free lectures, literature, and numerous encouraging and uplifting suggestions. Are we taking advantage of all these aids? If not, why? Our taxes are paying for them, and they may be used for our improvement.

We have many such artists in America as Lorado Taft, of Chicago, who has planned wonderful and instructive municipal decorations, which are an inspiration to all who see them. Why do we put in our cities beautiful parks, filled with flowers, shrubbery, and trees? Why build costly boulevards, ornamented with flowers and statues? Because American artists have proved that it pays to give clean and beautiful surroundings, for they result in uplift to character. We have learned that environment has more influence than inheritance. Therefore, we have our cities, highways, and public buildings made beautiful with statuary, paintings, and landscape gardening.

The old-time highly-colored wall paper, rugs, and draperies are less seen now. In their places we often find a delicacy of coloring and harmony of design which is no more costly than the former gaudy and glaring ones.

External Decoration of the Home

The attention of the general public is often turned now to the architectural improvement needed in our homes. Choice of more artistic plans and designs in architecture, and of uniformity in size and location from the street, have combined to produce a better effect in our towns and cities. Too many cupolas, and too much decoration are in as bad taste on the outside of our houses, as are gaudy wall paper and rugs on the inside.

The planting of flowers and shrubbery to hide bare brick and stone foundations, or to break the monotony of too high walls, always adds a great relief to old or poorly-planned houses.

A yard sloping to the south or east seems most desirable to the larger number of people, but even if one cannot find a yard facing in these directions, he can find an elevation that is well-drained, and where he may have a few trees, some flowering plants, and carefully placed shrubbery, to make even an old house look home-like and comfortable. A coat of paint, which is of the same shade on all the buildings, adds much to the presentability of a place, as well as being of service in preserving the frame buildings.

Let us not feel it is extravagant to make our homes home-like. After all, which is most essential—our property and money, or our children and their present and future welfare?

Food Combinations

I saw on the cover of Physical Culture Magazine particular notice given to an article by Mrs. Kimball Jones, on "These food combinations fixed me up," so I bought the magazine and have been trying the combinations advised.

The editor says: "This question of food combinations is one that is more or less in dispute among food authorities. Some students hold that if you have a balanced diet of healthy, natural foods, it does not matter in what combinations they are consumed, provided they are thoroughly masticated. Other students hold that food combinations are fundamentally important. We do not presume to officiate as the court of last decision in the matter. Probably the truth is that one with a strong stomach may eat healthful foods in any combination with impunity, and that one possessing a weak stomach or impaired digestion may have to be careful. If it is necessary to take note of food combinations, then we believe that the classifications and combinations presented in this personal story are very nearly right.

After taking the "Rest and milk cure" for one month, with a gain in weight of sixteen pounds, the following list of food classifications were given to Mrs. Jones.

Column I.	Column II.	Column III.
Acid Foods.	Neutral Foods.	Starches.
All meats	Lettuce	Potatoes
Poultry	Onions	Rice
Game	Endives	Tapioca
Fish	Asparagus	Macaroni
Acid fruits	Peas (fresh)	Spaghetti
Pumpkin	Celery	Flour
Berries	Squash (summer)	Corn
Citrous fruits	Beans (string)	Beans (dried)
Peaches	Artichokes	Peas (dried)
Pears	Carrots	Bananas
Cherries	Turnips	Sugar"
Tomatoes	Spinach
Dates	Brussels sprouts
Etc.	Cabbage
	Cauliflower
	Egg plant

She says: "Do not eat acids and starch foods at the same time.

"It is very easy to select an appetizing and nourishing combination of foods without combining acids and starch.

"Any combination of foods in Column I may be eaten or combined with any in Column II. All in Column III may be combined or eaten with those in Column II. It is only Columns I and III that must not be combined. Milk, cheese, nuts, and all dairy products may be eaten with anything. Butter-milk or a little lemon juice are always aids to digestion. Do not eat fried foods or gravies. Many people insist on meat, potatoes, and bread for almost every meal, but if they will try another green vegetable instead of potatoes and eliminate the bread with the meat they will soon notice the change.

"I do my own work and lead an active life and feel altogether 'made over.' My husband is in perfect health. He was gassed in the war and had a great deal of stomach trouble until we began our diet.

"The best thing about the diet is that it cures constipation. We have discarded all laxatives which were formerly a daily necessity."

These food combinations came to my attention after I had suffered more than usual with my stomach for four weeks. After trying it for two days I was much better, and in a week's time I was exceedingly comfortable and thankful for release from pain. Now, after a six weeks' trial, I would hesitate to go back to the old hit-or-miss mixing of foods, though some may thrive on it.

A week's menu is given, but there will not be space for it in our department. Mrs. Jones's breakfast is always the same, "a quart and a half of milk, or a quart of milk combined with a cereal or fruit."

In combining the proper foods from the three columns, "hog and hominy" would be in the discard, or pork and beans, especially with tomato sauce; but using such a delicacy as sauer-kraut with hominy, or spinach with beans, (navy,) we are within the rules laid down.

This diet is a preventive as well as a cure and is well worth trying.

Some Zionie Cradle Roll Activity

The health board in Zion with the assistance of the cradle roll superintendent of the Women's Department is holding preschool clinics, where mothers may take their babies for examination and advice.

Mrs. Maude Halley has this work in charge for the Women's Department, and Mrs. Eunice Winn Smith gives a lecture to each group, explaining its object and advantages.

There is a Cradle Roll worker in each of the thirty-eight group organizations, and an effort is made to encourage the mother to be the best mother possible to her child.

One of the means used to accomplish this is the distribution of literature. Recently Mrs. Halley secured for each mother a package of the literature published by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company for free distribution. This package contains the following pamphlets: Food Facts, First Aid in the Home, The Child, Tonsils and Adenoids, All About Milk, A War on Consumption, How to Live Long, Health Alphabet.

The cradle roll worker has a package of the pamphlets for each mother, but gives out only one booklet at a time. After time has been given for the reading and understanding of this, another is given out until the mother has had the eight booklets.

The Women's Department, through the cradle roll workers, is educating for better babies.

CHAPTER XIII

Instinct

Note the clear and important expression "that each individual is endowed at the beginning with all the impulses, tendencies, and capacities that are to control and determine the outcome of the life. Education adds nothing to what heredity supplies, but only develops what is present from the first." Think this statement over and try to understand its real meaning.

Note again: "Through heredity the achievements, the passions, the fears, and the tragedies of the generations long since molded to dust stir our blood and tone our nerves for the conflict to to-day."

1. What is instinct? Note Mosso's definition of instinct.

2. If possible, observe the various ways in which the babe's dependence on instinct is demonstrated.

3. In what way are we benefited by instincts?

4. Since all our instincts do not appear at the same time, when do the different ones appear?

5. Under the heading, "Instincts to be utilized when they appear," we will find much to study. Parents should become aware of the appearance of these instincts and give the proper advice and training at the time needed. Here is the chance for the wise and intelligent guidance of the parents to transform these instincts into habits of the proper kind. Can you appreciate the force of the four beautiful lines of poetry? Who wrote them?

6. Since in the earlier years we are at the mercy of the models which are placed before us, is there any greater need of proper conduct upon the part of those who serve as models?

7. Children learn to use the language of those with whom they associate, as well as the thousand other things which are done. Try to sense the great responsibility for those who have children to rear. What should parents and teachers keep continually in mind?

8. What determines whether a nation or individual is progressive?

9. Children are usually an index to the home. Mothers, fathers, are you satisfied with what the child finds to imitate in your home? Many homes are unworthy of imitation. Why?

10. Which is greater, the influence of personality or environment? Why?

11. After reading this author's ideas of play, try to read other writers' ideas and see if they agree. Who was Froebel? What did he think of the importance of play?

12. The instinct of curiosity is present in every normal individual. How should parents treat the endless questioning of children?

13. Parents should appreciate the value of learning to do by doing and give the child opportunity to do things. Where can the young mother get suggestions?

14. In what way do some parents handle the collecting instinct in their children? How can this be properly handled in such a way as to prove an advantage to the child? How can the migratory instinct be handled? What organizations are now trying to properly take care of the instinct to a certain extent?

15. How should the impulse to form gangs and clubs be handled? In what way can education properly utilize the gang instinct?

16. Should the mother attempt to make the child obey by telling fearful stories or threatening to have the police or some hobgoblin come and take the child? What do you think of shutting a child up in a dark closet for punishment? Should children be left alone? Discuss.

17. What is the author's idea of the instinct of selfishness? Of pugnacity?

18. What part does imitation of elders play in the formation of clubs and gangs by young people?

19. How can parents prevent the necessity of clubs and gangs?

20. How should a spoiled child—one that is selfish and not properly socialized—be dealt with?

21. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

LETTERS AND NEWS

Dollar Day

We quote below two letters from two of our correspondents at widely separated places, showing that the idea of a Dollar Day consecration plan has started to work.

A letter published in the HERALD of December 20, suggested this plan, and it was published not with the thought of putting on a "drive" or a campaign, but that others catching the spirit which had motivated this sister would, out of the goodness of their own hearts, respond as they felt like it.

We hope that God may move upon others here and there among the branches to follow out the example that is so beautifully portrayed in the following letter:

"There are only four of us in our family and we are sending you a five-dollar bill. It is lucky in this case they don't make four dollar bills.

"Really, Bishop, it is hard to go without, but I don't know what makes me so cheerful in the matter. In order to send you this let me say I have earned this myself and a little more besides. I expected to get something for our home, which I need very badly, but I'm going to do without it. I hope and pray God will bless you. We must not lose faith in our leaders."

A brother in a moderate-sized branch in Iowa came to the branch president one day with the suggestion that as most of the members of the branch were farmers they would have very little, if any tithing to pay, "as tithing is one tenth of the increase," and they had but little, if any, increase during the year. Therefore he thought it would be well to put on a Dollar Day sacrifice campaign in the branch. The result is quite well indicated in the communication which follows:

"We made the appeal one Sunday morning and set the day two weeks ahead so that all could make the effort and try to get the dollar. During the week we sent cards to those members who live out so far that they seldom come to the services, telling them of the drive. Many responded promptly.

"During this two weeks some interesting incidents came to our attention. One sister sent her boy to our store to see if we would pay cash for some ducks so she could get her dollar in time for the offering. In another case two brothers worked and with difficulty sold wood to get the dollar for the offering. We know that with each dollar there is a story, and although we may never know all these stories, still there is One who does know and the sacrifice will not be in vain.

"This offering was a success, for we raised over a hundred and fifty dollars, but the best success was that it came not from the few, but very largely a dollar in a place from men, women, and children. The young people stayed away from town for several nights for fear that they might spend the dollar they wanted to give for the Master's work. It is good to learn to give something that we want for ourselves, and in this respect our Dollar Day was a great success.

"We think that each and every branch in the church could easily do what we have done and the dollars never were needed more by the Bishop than now. In a sermon, set forth the needs, expenses, and details of the church at this hour, remembering that Zion is to be built, not from the wealth of the few, but from the sacrifices of the Saints, the mites which become mighty when all respond to the call, and we believe the Saints will respond and much aid will come. We hope this suggestion will be acted upon by the branches throughout the church. Let us make the goal a dollar a member, thus starting an account with the Bishop which we will add to in the future as the Lord blesses us, which he has promised to do if we will in turn use a part of those blessings for the support of his work."

Holden Stake

HOLDEN.—President W. S. Macrae called together a number of those interested in music the evening of the 14th to discuss the musical condition of the branch. A program was outlined which is hoped to add new life to this department of church activity. A brass band is one of the features hoped to be realized in the very near future.

The hearts of the Holden Saints were made glad last Sunday when eight names were added to their number by baptism, all of them adults but one.

Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire was the speaker at the morning hour on the 19th. We were pleased to see Bishop Keir with us, and to know that he had recovered from his recent illness.

MARSHALL.—The Marshall Saints enjoyed a visit last week from Bishop Richard Bullard. It was largely through Brother Bullard's untiring efforts that our little chapel was built. Elder W. P. Buckley and family, stopped over here on their way to Denver, Colorado, leaving their son, Raymond, here for a time.

LEXINGTON.—The Sunday school shows an increase in interest and attendance; also the Religio. Every teacher is either trained or enrolled in a teacher training class except one.

The mission cash store has been sold, with a neat earning for one and one half years of about $700. We will probably continue business after the pending mining depression. The Summit Camp mission is in very good condition, under direction of Gomer Macrae and Ivan Beebe. Group services have increased the attendance, and spirituality of the people.

BATES CITY.—On January 8, Brother and Sister Schofield, of Independence, were with us, Brother Schofield occupying the morning hour.

The women's organization has had several meetings and has organized for work. Some of our girls will enter the contest for the best darning and buttonholes. Brother W. S. Macrae, of Holden, preached for us last Sunday, both morning and evening.

SEDALIA.—On February 5, there were no services here on the account of our number attending the funeral of Sister Mabel Brandell at Knobnoster.

Our Religio meets now at 6.30 Sunday evening instead of on Friday evening.

GRANDVIEW.—We have been indeed blessed for some weeks past by the wonderful series of lectures that have just closed.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey came on January 15 and preached four weeks, although he was very much handicapped by his throat, he indeed accomplished more along the missionary line than has ever been done heretofore. A number of outsiders were regular attendants, and on quite a few evenings our commodious church was crowded. A number were very deeply interested and if they can be kept in touch with the gospel we believe will eventually come into the fold. Some were heard to remark that they had never heard any preaching like that before. Elder R. W. Farrell came out the last week to relieve Brother Bailey for a few evenings, as he had such a cold and his throat was so bad. Brother Farrell was liked very much by all, and especially by the Saints, so we say, Come again, Brother Farrell.

Elder I. M. Ross, of the stake bishopric, came to Grandview with Brother Bailey, occupying the eleven o'clock hour on January 15. He stayed a few days with us.

A number of the priesthood here have been attending the priesthood meeting at Independence and report the lectures to the priesthood to be wonderful and to be a long stride towards the unifying the ideas of the general priesthood.

MARSHALL.—We enjoyed a very full and complete day of service on the 19th. The word of the Lord came to us through Bishop Bullard, which was very encouraging and instructive. We hope, by our lives, to show our appreciation for the blessings of our heavenly Father.

Brother Bullard has been giving us some very timely sermons, both to Saint and sinner.

Independence

The Standing High Council of the church has been in session almost daily since the 15th, attending to both cases of appeal and original jurisdiction. They concluded their work with a session on the 27th.

The joint council of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric had planned to begin their work on the 27th, but the delay in arrival of one of their members caused a postponement till the 28th. Elder T. W. Williams is on his way here from England, and reached New York on Saturday the 25th.

The young people's meetings at the Stone Church, held each evening of last week except Saturday, closed with a grand finale on last Sunday evening, with a crowded house out to hear President F. M. Smith on "Stewardships," etc., and the same sort of a crowd to hear President Elbert A. Smith on "The second coming of Christ."

Considerable sickness prevails, evidently mostly influenza or a similar affliction, with some typhoid cases, and it has affected the attendance. About thirty per cent of those not attending who had tickets were found to report sickness as the reason for nonattendance.

But the sermons were interesting and fundamental, with excellent attention to the song services, including the various special numbers, vocal and instrumental. Daily letters were sent out to about two hundred and fifty absent ones from Independence, each written by a different interested participant in the services. Responses were had from a goodly number of those who not only received the letters, but were appreciative enough to send word to that effect. Their names were read at the meetings. The expenses were more than covered by two general collections.

A prayer meeting is announced for Wednesday evening of this week strictly for young people from thirteen to thirty. This is to be a regular appointment, the meetings to be held at the church.

The early morning prayer service for young people on last Sunday was well attended and of much spiritual import. The gift of tongues and interpretation was had and the young Saints inspired to further devotional effort.

The Women's Department lecture program has as its next number a lecture on March 7 at 8 p. m. at the Stone Church under the auspices of the Laurel Club. Miss Gilday will speak on the subject of "Civics." The public is cordially invited. Seven groups of women in Independence are now studying citizenship, and the Laurel Club itself, making in all perhaps more than seventy members studying this important subject.

The civic officials of Independence are making consistent efforts to improve the water supply of the city, which is not and has not been for some time at all satisfactory. The proposition has been before the state commission on utilities but action deferred till spring, pending several other factors, such as whether Kansas City would vote to extend and improve its water system. One of the possibilities is to secure water for Independence from Kansas City, which would no doubt be an improvement. In the meantime Doctor Harrington has had public notices read to the Saints urging that all drinking water be boiled.

Baby Week will be observed in Independence, the program being under the auspices of the Women's Department of Zion, Mrs. H. B. Roberts, general superintendent of cradle roll department, in charge. The Women's Department requests cradle roll workers to join in observing the week beginning April 2, the first feature being a sermon based on the situation, by A. Max Carmichael. Afternoon meetings will be held each day during the week at 2.30. There will be lectures, story-telling, exhibits, auto rides, and a baby parade. A trained nurse will have charge in a comfortable, convenient place at the church, of the children of the mothers who wish to attend the meetings. There will be two evening lectures, one by Doctor G. L. Harrington on "The mental hygiene of childhood," and the other to be announced later. Every mother in Zion, and others, should attend these meetings.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium during the week ending February 25: Marion Smith, Dow City, Iowa; Teodor Plachase, Cement City, Missouri; Fred Keller, Eustis, Nebraska; Mrs. Amanda Gillmore, Kansas City, Kansas; W. E. Brown and H. L. Williams, of Kansas City, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Mrs. Mary Green, Mrs. Bessie Srader, Mrs. Harry C. Smith and Baby Smith, Russell Waterman, Mrs. Mae Namur, Mrs. Stanley Green and Baby Marjorie Anne Green, and Frances Hill. X-ray patients: S. Gwinn, Blue Springs, Missouri; and B. A. Pixley, Maroni Himes, H. C. Etzenhouser, and E. Ray, of Independence.

Kansas City Stake

The quarterly conference of the stake was held on Sunday the 19th and Monday evening, February 20. The Sunday services started off with a banner attendance at Sunday school which was followed by a discourse by President Frederick M. Smith at eleven o'clock, on the subject of stewardships. In his masterly way he set the matter forth in a very convincing and logical way, many expressed themselves as understanding the plan better than ever before.

At 1.30 the elders' quorum was addressed by Amos T. Higdon.

At 2.30 a spiritual feast was had in the prayer and testimony meeting; many were moved to tears. Two spoke directly under the influence of the Holy Spirit.

At 4.15 the Women's Department was favored by a continued lecture by Doctor Leonard Harrington on mental hygiene.

At 4.15 the ministry of the stake were given a lecture by Samuel A. Burgess on the subject of comparative religions.

At 7.30 the stake orchestra furnished several good numbers, and the accompaniment for the hymns for the 7.45 preaching service. Brother S. A. Burgess was the speaker at this hour, building his discourse around the scriptural injunction, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." The members of the stake found that through the meetings of the day they had a spiritual feast indeed.

On Monday at 7.45 p. m. at the business meeting it seemed the Saints were ready to do most anything in the way of sacrifice as the adoption of the following resolutions by a goodly majority would indicate.

That we look with disfavor upon the serving of meats, tea and coffee or any other article not in harmony with the 86th section of Doctrine and Covenants at Central Church, at conferences or in any of the churches in Kansas City Stake in the future.

The second one is a little more drastic: Whereas, we wish to be in harmony with the practice and words of wisdom as have come down to us through our former presidents, therefore; be it resolved, that we abstain from serving any kind of food at our conferences and follow their practice of fasting and prayer.

An invitation from R. V. Hopkins, pastor of Zion, to the Kansas City Stake to unite with Zion in a reunion to be held near Independence was referred to the stake presidency and bishopric with power to act.

Brother H. W. Goold was placed in charge of the Mount Washington Church by the conference.

Pearl Dawe, the young people's organizer, organized a group of Orioles at the Montgall church, there being eight girls in the group.

The work of the various groups of the stake is making a better showing in attendance than for some time.

A new departure in missionary work was launched at the Malvern Hill church by Alvin Knisley. He conducted a series of meetings at the homes of the members of this locality. This was experimental and the results are hardly up to expectations, but quite a good many nonmembers came out to hear him.

A splendid missionary effort, peculiar in that the chief effort was by a sister, has been conducted in Kansas City, Kansas, meetings being arranged for in the home of Brother Downing, 2024 North Twelfth Street, commencing on Sunday, February 12. Her chief work was to make a canvass of the neighborhood, getting the attention of the people wherever she could, using two gospel charts where time was given to set forth our claims, and arranging for the ministry to speak. As a result two have already been baptized and one name given for baptism. This sister has adopted a method in canvassing that would be well to copy by any who are engaged in missionary work. She asks divine guidance of her heavenly Father before she starts out on her day's work as to the places she should visit, and this has proved to be wonderfully helpful as places she would enter of her own accord but prompted otherwise by her Master, has been found to be a time saver, as she has noted that places she was told to avoid proved to be not worth while. This sister's name is Phoebe Tucker. It will be remembered that Sister Tucker labored in a like capacity just prior to the organization of the Quindaro Branch. After an effort in that locality of nine months forty-two were baptized and a branch organized.

A mission will be organized in this new location on Sunday, March 5.

At Quindaro six have been baptized recently.

Through error in the notice of the young people's meetings on the Missouri Side to be held at Central Church it was stated that D. T. Williams was to be the speaker, which is incorrect, as no speaker has been decided upon as yet.

The opening date of the meetings to be held at Grandview Church by Alvin Knisley is Sunday the 5th, not February 26, as stated in last issue.

East Saint Louis, Illinois

Lansdowne Branch, G. F. Barraclough, presiding elder, residence Fifteenth and Lincoln, phone Bridge 1563-W.

You will want to know that it is well with us; that over here in East Saint Louis the Saints are keeping the banner of our King Immanuel floating, and that as a united, happy body we are moving forward and our ranks are being added to from time to time. Brother Carmichael visited with us one summer and "suffered," but we natives do very well, thank you, and find it anything but flat, stale, or unprofitable.

We have a young man here, Brother Robert Dickens by name, who some time ago felt impressed to urge having a series of meetings for the young people. In due course of time plans were perfected; Brother Clyde Ellis was invited to be the speaker, and upon the evening of January 15 the services opened; over one hundred fifty were in attendance, and during the week following the average was seventy plus. So good was the interest the meetings continued another week.

An occasion of this kind brings out prominently the stuff of which we are made; were I to start mentioning the good work done by the young people for these meetings, their earnest endeavors to put them over strong, their unflagging zeal, their zoning advertising work, walking blocks and blocks to tack up publicity matter, and were I to try to do them justice, you would think I had kissed the Blarney Stone; but, enough; we are proud of our young people and of this effort.

Wednesday evening, February 8, was a very happy occasion. Friends were busy all the afternoon at the church making it festive looking for the wedding of Brother Clyde F. Ellis and Sister Dana Watts. Brother Ellis was well remembered in a financial way by the young people, and "they" received a purse the night of their wedding.

Brother W. H. Kelley dropped in and made a very happy little talk Tuesday evening; also was the speaker morning and evening of the 12th. Both sermons were splendid. We had two baptisms during the meeting period.

Brother E. C. Bell, district chorister, recently visited our choir, which meets regularly, Sister Flora Doepke in charge. Sister Elsie Barraclough has been kept at home owing to a disagreeable affliction. We'll be very glad to have her once more in our midst.

Well, we have a Laurel Society; wonder if Independence will object or be pleased. We like the name, and it has spelled good fortune for us, for we have had excellent meetings, good attendance and a disposition to work. We sent, in January, a large box and a barrel of goods to a worthy brother and his family. An all day meeting, (a quilting party,) was held yesterday.

Our Religio now meets on Sunday evening at 6.30.

Brother C. Ed. Miller is very busy; doesn't seem to neglect a minute and is very well liked throughout the district.

Brother Barraclough occupied the morning hour of last Sunday; Brother W. C. Carl in the evening. The attendance at all meetings is quite fair. Brother Robert Dickens and Brother Phil Hitchcock are in charge of the Sunday school, and our orchestra is improving right along under the watch-care of Brother Prosper Carl.

Conference in Saint Louis next Saturday and Sunday; Sunday school will be held here, as usual, as we have children of outsiders who would miss the service. It is well with us and His peace abides.

ETTA WEIDMAN, Publicity Agent.

Western Maine

It is the middle of February. We are located on the island of Vinal Haven in Penobscot Bay, about twelve miles from the mainland. The Maine coast represents a very different picture now than in the summer. Instead of the nicely kept, white-winged pleasure craft of the summer tourists that swarm these parts in July and August, we now see the storm-beaten and wave-tossed craft of the fishermen coming and going. It is not a summer sea that we look out upon, but the great ocean, cold and forbidding, sending up to our ears its low moan, mingled with the sound of the fog trumpet, the whistling buoys, or the warning blast of a steamboat, as she plunges her way past us, being hidden from view by snow or fog. These are sights and sounds that belong to these parts. They are as welcome as the songs of the birds in spring. The sea with its ceaseless singing, its varying moods, and its mysteries casts a spell over us that causes us to love it.

We are far removed from Zion and the lines of communication that connect it with other parts of the country. Traveling in this section at this season is very difficult. In summer we have visits from the noble men who have spent considerable time here in past years. Their love for these kind and hospitable Saints draws them back. But sometimes I feel it is the refreshing sea breeze for which they yearn, or to renew their genial relations with our lobsters, fish, and clam chowder. Not many come at this season. The "pickled air" is too chilling. The weather too strenuous. Mark Twain said that in New England one sometimes gets fifteen different kinds of weather every twenty-four hours.

This district is composed of six branches, numbering about four hundred and fifty members. Four of the branches, viz: Vinal Haven, Stonington, Mountainville, and Little Deer Isle, are located on islands. The other two, Sargentville and Dixfield, are on the mainland. Getting from place to place is very uncertain as to time, and often disagreeable, especially in rough weather. The steamboats that run on this route are small and cannot go in rough or thick weather. We often do without mail for a day or two at a time. In making appointments for preaching we always insert the clause, "if the weather permits."

The branch here at Vinal Haven is small, numbering about fifty wide-awake and energetic workers. It is ably presided over by Brother Archibald Begg, who is also district president. The Saints here recently purchased one of the finest buildings in town, a house that cost $17,000 to build about twenty years ago. It is finished with finely polished black walnut. It has been renovated and presents a fine appearance, in the best locality in the village, only two minutes walk from the post office and the bank. The church rooms will seat two hundred people. In addition we have a fine kitchen, with excellent accommodations for the missionary's family on the second floor. We have electric lights, water, and a bath. The Saints here are busy with their Religio, boy movement, women's work, besides the other services. The future of this branch looks bright. It is clean, morally and spiritually.

At Stonington, the work is gaining ground under the faithful care of Brother Henry Eaton. Many Saints have moved away in recent years, but enough remain to carry on the work. In company with Brother Begg, the writer held a series of meetings there the first two weeks in January. We were quietly blessed in our efforts. There are those there who will soon unite with the church.

We visited the branch at Mountainville. This branch is presided over by Brother Emery Eaton. We certainly enjoyed our labors while there. We visited every home in the place. Our services were well attended, some coming a distance of four or five miles. After our services in this place, we took our grips and walked to another small island settlement, called Sunshine, about three miles distant. We had to cross a stretch of water. The tide was in, so we had to take our chance on the ice. Brother Begg allowed me to go well in advance to test the thickness of the ice. We crossed without accident.

We had an appointment for a meeting that evening at the home of Brother Eaton. There were about thirty out and the majority of them were Christian Adventists, as this settlement is made up principally of these people. They were pleased to come and hear our message. After some friction among their congregation we were granted the privilege of using their chapel for a couple of nights. We were pleased with this, as it was their own suggestion. A full house greeted us both nights. It seemed strange to be preaching to a whole congregation of this people in their own church. I never have seen a more attentive and interested audience. At the close of our last service one of their leading members arose and spoke in appreciation of what we had said. He affirmed it to be the word of God. He also said it was wrong to persecute and speak evil of the Latter Day Saints. It was the best service we were ever in. We propose to return there as soon as possible.

Little Deer Isle is a historic place in the Reorganization. It was to the island that Father Landers came as the first missionary of the Reorganization to Maine. A few of the old Saints remain who remember those interesting days. They love to tell us about it as we visit among them, and we certainly enjoy hearing it. They tell of the visit of the late Joseph, also of many more of the stalwart men of that early day. I think it was in the summer of 1915 that President Frederick M. Smith attended conference here. Brother H. H. Billings presides over this branch and is faithful to his mission.

Across the "reach" we come to the branch at Sargentville and Brooksville. This is one of the liveliest and most promising branches of the district. It is presided over by Brother Arthur Robbins, who has the assistance of a live priesthood. They have recently finished their church on the inside and are ready to begin a more vigorous drive for the cause of Christ.

Dixfield Branch is far removed from us geographically, but we get regular reports from them, showing that under the care of Brother Myron Holman, they are doing their bit. Their financial remittances speak volumes for their love and service for Christ.

The Saints always inquire concerning the many faithful missionaries who have labored here in years past. These kindly people never forget their services. They are deeply interested in the redemption of Zion and look forward to the gathering with hope.

N. M. WILSON.

Burlington, Iowa

On January 26, the building fund committee gave a bag social for the benefit of the fund. Results realized were satisfactory, and the attendance was good. An enjoyable evening was spent, with games and music.

Elder C. J. Smith conducted a series of meetings here from February 1 to 16. The attendance and interest all the way through was exceptional. Said by some to be the best attended series held here for many years. Two were baptized the last evening. Some who had not attended for Northern Michigan District, August 18 to 27, at The Park of the Pines, their own grounds, near Boyne City, Michigan. We are hoping to have one of the Presidency with us, and are already arranging for the attendance of the Church Physician and one of the leaders of the Women's Department. Let all our people who can do so arrange to buy a tent for themselves and save the big rental each year. Other announcements will follow later. Remember the date and begin to plan. Arthur E. Starks, district president.

Notice to Eastern Saints

Prior to our coming to the British Isles we gave blessings at the New York and Philadelphia, Onset, and Kirtland reunions. We had no machine nor opportunity to have this work transcribed before leaving America, and since we have come here, Sister Baldwin has done just as many as she could, but we have been so busy with other work that seemed absolutely necessary that all of these have not been transcribed as yet. Many inquiries are coming to us, and we are glad to report that from now on we shall be able to take care of these in their order, and if those who are waiting for them will have a little more patience, they will soon be in their hands. Address: Saint Leonard's, 19 Amhurst Park, Stamford Hill, London N 16, England.

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL OKLAHOMA.—At Teriton, February 10 to 12. Friday 10.30 a. m., prayer service, Joseph G. Smith, district president, in charge. Afternoon, given to the Women's Department, Mrs. Pearl Greenwood in charge by request of the district organizer, Mrs. Ed Dillon, of 331 East Tenth Street, Oklahoma City, who a few days previous was taken suddenly ill and had to undergo an operation for acute appendicitis. Our prayers are for her complete recovery. The Women's Department program years came quite regularly, and a number of new faces were seen each evening. The sermons were clear-cut, forcible, and affirmative.

Some ten or more from Burlington attended the conference at Fort Madison, February 18 and 19, more coming for Sunday. The conference was held in the new church building at Fort Madison. Sessions were all alive and interesting. The joint department program was rendered Saturday evening, and appreciation expressed, particularly of the Women's Department feature; cradle roll playlet. Following this session, the Nauvoo District Builders invited all in attendance to a social and get-together meeting in the basement. The prayer and social service Sunday afternoon was of a high order. A part of the Saturday afternoon session was given to department business, election of Sunday school officers, etc. Steps were also taken in preparation for the 1922 reunion.

CORRESPONDENT.

consisted of the following: "Citizenship," by Hubert Case, and continued by U. W. Greene, speaking relative to citizenship of the woman in Europe. "Woman's work," by Sister W. E. Shakespeare. We felt it a treat to have Sister Shakespeare with us. "Woman and Zion," by A. H. Christensen. These talks were highly commendable. Saturday was given to Sunday school and church business sessions. District Sunday school officers were elected: W. E. Shakespeare, superintendent, who chose A. H. Christensen assistant; Pearl Hixson was elected secretary. At conference business session, statistical report of secretary showed a membership of 1,259, net gain of 425. The nonresident list is coming to the front. The recommendation of W. A. Millner, of El Reno, and Joseph A. Wise, of Tulsa, to office of elder approved and ordinations provided for. The report of the priesthood included 16 elders, 2 priests, and 1 deacon. Reunion committee sustained. The committee reported a meeting would be called as soon as possible and a notice placed in the HERALD stating location of the reunion. Bishop's agent, Earl D. Bailey, reported receipts of tithing and other church funds for the year 1921 as $3,119.09. Motion carried to disorganize the Piedmont Branch because so many have moved away and the scattered condition. Motion carried that J. W. Gilbert, of Tulsa, be recommended as district chorister. The world is suffering financially; so also is the church. Much to our sorrow and regret our missionary force is being cut down, and it is going to require more sacrifice on the part of the Saints to forward the work. We are sorry to have to give up our district president with whom we spent profitable and enjoyable associations; he also had a good influence among the young people. Earl D. Bailey, of Tulsa, will be our district president, and we ask God's Holy Spirit to be with him in his efforts in the work of the district. Saturday evening, "The friendly road," the Oriole and Temple Builder play, was given in the school auditorium. An impression was made on their hearers, and an inspiration for future accomplishment of the work along that line was manifested. Visiting Saints will take it home to their branches. Sunday morning we had Sunday school and preaching and in afternoon and at night, preaching. All were spiritual feasts. All meals except breakfast were served at the church. The Saints had ample room for all visiting Saints. We all feel blessed in our efforts for the conference. Meetings will continue a week or more following conference. Mrs. Pearl Greenwood, Teriton, Oklahoma, secretary.

WESTERN COLORADO.—At Delta, January 14 and 15. Attendance good, Saints from all over the district being present. Elders J. D. Curtis, J. E. Yates, and Chester Young, of the missionary force, were present. The Spirit of the Lord was present and much encouragement and good was accomplished. The young took an active part. Committee appointed to solicit funds and purchase a tent for the district. Reunion will be held in connection with the next conference, which will be held in Durango; time left in the hands of the district presidency. Jewell Harshman, secretary, Cory, Colorado.

LITTLE SIOUX.—At Logan, Iowa, February 11 and 12. J. W. Lane, Fred A. Fry, and C. B. Woodstock, the district presidency, in charge of business sessions, assisted by J. F. Curtis. Official reports indicated the spiritual condition of branches in general as encouraging. The eleven branches in the district reported a gain in membership during the past quarter of 129 by baptism. Present number enrolled 2,175. Bishop's agent reported receipts of tithes and offerings from October 1, 1921, to February 1, 1922, $2,087.49. Glenn Wilson, of Moorhead, and J. E. Swalley, of Magnolia, were recommended for ordination to the office of priest by the respective branches. The district presidency were authorized by the conference to provide for the ordinations. Brother Swalley was ordained at the Sunday morning prayer service by J. F. Curtis and Fred A. Fry. Benjamin R. McGuire was present Sunday and addressed the conference on the subject of "Stewardships." The Saints were privileged to have J. F. Curtis also in attendance and enjoyed the association and sermons of these two brethren. The attendance was large throughout, although the weather was quite cold. Conference adjourned to meet in June at Magnolia. Ada S. Putnam, Secretary.

Leaves husband, three daughters, three brothers, and two sisters. Remains brought to Jonesport for burial. Funeral services from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Oscar Rogers. Prayer by W. E. Rogers. Sermon by O. L. Thompson. Interment in Greenwood Cemetery.

HANSEN.—Hans Nelson Hansen was born April 28, 1850, in Storeheddy, Denmark. Died February 3, 1922. At fourteen he came to America with parents who had accepted the latter-day faith. They crossed the plains to Utah; here he met the elders of the Reorganized Church and was baptized in March, 1867, and the same year returned to the Middle West and located in Pottawattamie County, Iowa, and remained in this county the rest of his life. Married Agnes Kirkwood on November 14, 1878, at Crescent, Iowa. To this union one son was born, Elder John A. Hansen, who lives near Council Bluffs. Leaves wife, one son, one foster daughter, and six grandchildren, besides a host of friends; for he is widely known throughout the church, having labored as a missionary for years, both in this country and Scandinavia, having made four missionary trips to the Old Country. His life was one of service, exemplary and worthy as a servant of the Master and the work he loved. He was highly respected by his neighbors where he has lived for so many years. Funeral services at Underwood, in charge of Joshua Carlile and Peter Muceus, the sermon by Frederick A. Smith.

Twombly. Her husband preceded her in 1917. Nine of her ten children survive, also ten grandchildren and three great-grandchildren, a sister, and a brother.

CAFFALL.—Eliza Caffall, daughter of Nathan and Sarah Pratt, was born at Studams, Herefordshire, England, October 13, 1825. Married June 5, 1850, in London, England, to James Caffall, then a traveling missionary of the Latter Day Saint Church, of which church she was a member. She came with her husband to United States in 1852; lived in Saint Louis eight years. Moved to Utah in 1861, to Denver, Colorado, in 1865, to Council Bluffs in 1866, and to Magnolia in 1905, where her husband died the next year. Died January 30, having lived ninety-six years of noble, spiritual life and seventy-two years in the church. Four of her six daughters, eleven grandchildren, and seventeen great-grandchildren survive. Funeral from the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. D. Stuart; sermon by Alma M. Fyrando, assisted by D. R. Chambers.

ATKINS.—Reuben Atkins was born December 20, 1832, at Coventry, Warwickshire, England. Baptized February 1, 1869. Died at the home of his son, C. B. Atkins, near Aurora, Illinois, January 7, 1922. Three sons and a number of grandchildren survive. Funeral from the home; sermon by F. M. Cooper.

ATKINS.—Alma Jennette Larson was born September 16, 1870, at Chicago, Illinois. Married C. B. Atkins, January 1, 1894. Died at her home near Aurora, Illinois, January 13. Sermon by F. M. Cooper. A son and daughter survive.

KNOWLTON.—Cynthia B. Knowlton was born in Brooksville, Maine, December 12, 1834. Married Captain John B. Knowlton in December, 1851. Baptized May 3, 1869, which means more than a half century devoted to the cause of Christ. She has been a cripple for twenty years. Since the death of her companion, in 1890, she made her home with her son, George H. Knowlton. Died at Stonington, Maine, February 6. Eight of her thirteen children survive, also twenty-three grandchildren and eighteen great-grandchildren. Funeral from the home. Sermon by N. M. Wilson. Interment in private cemetery.

WILKINSON.—William Wilkinson was born in Phoenix, Maryland, March 14, 1871. Married Hannah Mayers, in February, 1897. Baptized in early manhood and later ordained a teacher. Died at his home in Hite-man, Iowa, January 14. His wife preceded him in 1919. Three of their four children survive. Sermon by D. T. Williams. Interment in Albia Cemetery.

RASMUS.—Lena Hinderks was born in Wenner, East Friesland, province of Hannover, Germany, July 13, 1847. Came to America when a young woman. Married M. W. Rasmus, August 10, 1867. Baptized in 1879. Ten of her eleven children, and eleven grandchildren survive. Funeral sermon in Lamoni, Iowa, by D. T. Williams, assisted by C. E. Wiley. In another sermon at Mount Pleasant, he was assisted by the Reverend Weston of the Baptist Church. Interment in Mount Pleasant Cemetery.

The Record to Date

How High Will
It Go?

The total receipts to February 25, inclusive, are $46,284.71.

The thermometer will appear but once more, and that at the final report on the amount received.

At that time will be published the names of those guessing nearest the total amount received.

But more important than the history of last year's achievement is our plan for this year's work. Schools and individuals should make consistent plans for the development of the giving habit.

B. R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Five Best Books for Sunday Schools

Superintendent A. Max Carmichael recommends in March Autumn Leaves five best books for those who would add to their normal course collection, and further adds five as second choice. These may all be had from this office.

The Best Five

Cope: Religious Education in the Family.
Betts: The New Program of Religious Education.
Fergusson: How to Run a Little Sunday School.
Betts: How to Teach Religion.
Munkres: Primary Methods in the Church School.

The Second Best Five

Hartshorne: Childhood and Character.
Coe: A Social Theory of Religious Education.
Weigle: Talks to Sunday School Teachers.
Athearn: The Church School.
Esenwein and Stockard: Children's Stories and How to Tell Them.

"Be Kind to Animals"

How many words can you make out of these letters?

The American Humane Education Society offers four cash prizes, amounting to $25, and ten additional prizes, branch memberships in the American Humane Education Society, including one year's subscription to Our Dumb Animals, to the children under fifteen years of age who find the largest number of words in the slogan, BE KIND TO ANIMALS. Proper names, such as States, cities, etc., provided they contain only the letters in the slogan, may be included.

The prizes are as follows: First prize, $10, cash; second prize, $7.50, cash; third prize, $5, cash; fourth prize, $2.50 cash; ten additional prizes, each one year's subscription to Our Dumb Animals.

All words must be numbered and written in columns, on one side of the paper only. The motto may be used as the first four words as follows:

1. BE 2. KIND 3. TO 4. ANIMALS 5. KIN 6. IN
7. DIN 8. BEST

All contestants must mark their envelopes plainly and mail them so they will reach the office of the American Humane Education Society not later than May 31, 1922, addressing the envelopes to—

"Be Kind to Animals Word Contest, 180 Longwood Avenue, Boston, Massachusetts."

Results of Short Story Contest

At last the results of the Short Story Contest are in. The decisions were read in Chapel Wednesday morning. Three people tied for third place, so that four places were given. The winners were as follows: First place, Olive Elefson; second place, Eugene Closson; third place, Prescott Foo; fourth place, Iola Hicks. It is said that the judges had a hard time deciding as to which stories were to be given the upper places.—Graceland Record.

Most runaway marriages are failures, according to the Reverend Doctor George Clark Houghton, of Atlantic City, New Jersey, who turns away fifty couples a month, refusing to marry them for various reasons. He is not able to estimate the percentage of happy marriages resulting from the carefully planned arrangements usually necessary, but is sure that it is much greater than that of elopements.

The Organization of the High Council

Methods employed in securing appointments in the past.

The reorganization of the Standing High Council has brought to the fore the method of its appointment.

We note that the first Quorum of Twelve, a traveling high council, was chosen by a committee, the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon. We note in the Reorganized Church the first Quorum of Twelve was again chosen by a committee, and vacancies filled in like manner. But since 1865, vacancies in the Quorum of Twelve Apostles have been as a rule filled by revelation, duly presented to the church and passed upon by the quorum as well as accepted by the General Conference.

With the Standing High Council, the first was chosen at a meeting of twenty-four high priests. It would appear that three of this number were the presidents of the church. Twelve were chosen as the first high council. This left nine high priests to vote in the name of the church and for the church in approving this first high council. But there were also seventeen elders, four priests, and thirteen members present, so that there were forty-three so acting in the name of and for the church. This is clearly set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 99.

The same procedure was adopted in the organization of the High Council of Zion, and evidently in the organization of other high councils.

The law governing is found in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 17:

Every president of the high priesthood (or presiding elder), bishop, high councilor, and high priest, is to be ordained by the direction of a high council, or general conference.

This as affecting a high councilor would possibly apply in the case where only one or a small number of high councilors were so appointed, as evidently when a majority were to be appointed a minority of the high council could not pass on the nominations. A query may arise, in such a case could the Traveling High Council, if represented by a majority of its members, so vote and approve? However, so far as we know, this has never been done in the history of the church. There is a certain equality of importance in these two quorums acting within the scope of their respective office. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 14, 15.)

In section 99: 4 it is provided in the case of absence of one or more high councilors that seven shall have power to appoint other high priests; or, in other words, approve the appointment by the president of other high priests to fill the vacancy. It evidently requires the presence of seven ordained high councilors so to fill a temporary vacancy.

In the case of permanent vacancy, from death, and evidently from any other cause, the vacancy should be filled by the nomination of the president or presidents, and sanctioned by the voice of a general council of high priests, convened for that purpose, to act in the name of the church. (Doctrine and Covenants 99: 5.)

In the Reorganized Church, the first high council was appointed in 1860. The nominations were made to the General Conference and approved by the General Conference. Without exception, so far as we know, permanent vacancies have been filled by nomination to the General Conference; and as a rule, or if the General Conference were in session at a time conveniently near to the meeting of the High Council, in some instances nominations to fill temporary vacancies were also made to the General Conference. This evidently was not necessary under the law of the church, as the High Council itself had full authority to fill such temporary vacancies.

In the course of time the High Council became very nearly disorganized, so that in 1890 the revelation then given provided for the reorganization to fill the vacancies existing in the high council. (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 9.) From the record in Church History, volume 4, pages 646, 647, 654, 655, it appears that twelve men were then chosen and ordained, so that it was a complete reorganization of the high council and the establishment of a new high council. This committee reported to the General Conference and their nominations were approved by the conference.

The organization of Zion made necessary a reorganization of the General or Standing High Council of the church at the seat of the First Presidency.

The President of the church so recommended to the General Conference of 1920:

The Independence Stake, in the opinion of the Presidency, has reached a condition in its evolution where we can easily and logically complete its transition into the "center place." The organization of the stake has gradually been brought into a condition where the final changes can be made with little or no interruption in the work, or jar in transition. The Presidency and Presiding Bishopric should therefore assume control of its affairs. To accomplish this, and to provide for the final steps, it is only necessary to authorize the dissolution of the present stake presidency and high council, and the reorganization of the present Standing High Council of the church into such an organization as will enable it to function freely as the Standing High Council of Zion. To so reorganize the Standing High Council has long been in the mind of the Presidency, but we have awaited this occasion. We recommend an enactment fully authorizing the the Presidency to complete the transition already so nearly consummated.—General Conference Minutes, p. 2872.

This paragraph was adopted by the General Conference on Saturday, April 10, as shown in the General Conference Minutes, page 3021:

It was moved that the paragraph headed "Reorganization of the Independence stake" be adopted. The motion prevailed.

Pursuant to this authorization, the Presidency named seven new men to the General High Council, and as the work before this council was urgent and there were a number of cases to be heard, these nominations were submitted to a meeting of the priesthood of Zion, meeting in the Stone Church on February 19, 1922. At this meeting there were present 21 high priests, (aside from the men to be approved), 68 elders, 52 priests, 30 teachers, and 27 deacons, and 13 visiting members of the priesthood. In this number were 2 of the First Presidency, 1 apostle, 2 high councilors, and 6 of the seventy.

This action, however, was taken to meet the emergency, and the nominations were stated to be subject to the approval of the next General Conference. In this way the procedure not only complies with that taken in the organization of the first high council in 1835, but also recognizes the custom established in the reorganization of the church of submitting these names to the General Conference.

Many a thing pleases us well at first which does not please us afterward when it has become a permanent part of our memories. We judge it then by a different standard, not with reference to momentary happiness, but to life as a whole.—Ellwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

The Work of the Women

Women's Department, Sunday schools, Religios—all should carefully consider why they do what they do.

Rather a fundamental note is sounded in the plainly-expressed views of the Presiding Bishop in the columns of the Women's Department in this issue. And it is wholesomely supplemented by the thoughtful editorial of Sister Audentia Anderson.

While it is true that where there is a Mary, one usually finds a Martha, both the Marys and Marthas ought to check up on themselves occasionally to see whether they are devoted too much to the æsthetic or are slaving their lives away on unprofitable serving.

Unto what purpose are the women organized? And what is the purpose of raising money, when such a venture is engaged in? And will it pay to do it? Not only is the immediate project profitable, such as the making of a quilt or the serving of a dinner, but are the results in general on those served as well as those serving, justified?

Sometimes they are not, as a little careful thought will demonstrate. For instance, if an ice cream social is had to raise a little money, and it is found that five or ten dollars have been "cleared," what does it really mean? If the material was donated, who paid for it? Is that amount actual profit to the church, or simply the transference of so much money from the pockets of the Saints and a few nonmembers to the fund of the sisters, at the expense of the tithe and offering or other justifiable fund? Did it have the right effect on the young people who were encouraged to spend money for something they did not need? And is it a worthy excuse to say they would have spent it anyway? And was the hard work and worry equitably divided?

We are not attempting to judge such matters at long distance, nor to say that even a majority of such ventures are not worth while, but we do urge that there be a careful consideration of all the factors involved to ascertain whether or not the time and energy might not be better spent. If after such consideration it is decided that it is worth while, let there be a united effort to make it a success. But the next suggestion of the kind should be as carefully scrutinized and evaluated, for it is not safe to judge all situations merely by seemingly similar experiences.

But the sisters in organized capacity are not the only ones who need this attitude. Sunday schools and Religios, for instance, have the same need.

The Sunday school which forgets its primary aim of religious education and runs pell-mell after overemphasized Christmas offering campaigns, tempting with banners and charts and prizes "red" and "blue" and any other color of the rainbow that will compete in anyway, is still just that deep in the wilderness and ought to come out.

Is it unto the establishment of good habits that we engender undue competition in money matters, causing some to remain at home rather than be under constant pressure to raise certain amounts of money constantly and without regard to personal ability to pay?

Or let the same thing be carried into another field. Is it appealing to the higher impulses to award a class of youngsters a banner because they have done the simple duties of attending a session and have perfunctorily read a quarterly lesson? Does it ever pay to offer rewards for good deeds that might better be encouraged as the expression of desire from within? The whole matter of contests between ourselves is apt to be cheapening and to the prostitution of real spiritual progress that will of itself solve all the difficulties for which contests are presumably staged.

The law of Moses was a schoolmaster to bring Israel unto Christ. It was composed of outward ordinances and ceremonies to bring a nation of slaves to a stage of development where the new law could be given them. Must we under the new law constantly go back to the same sort of observances in our church school and thus sacrifice our real purpose of implanting higher ideals and developing religious knowledge, attitudes, and skills? We ought to do better.

The Religio which has a matter-of-form lesson study by an unorganized staff of teachers with no common teaching ideals and methods, no connection with the administrative ideals of the department, followed by a pick-up program with no definite aims, is still far from its rightful place in the church work.

This organization has wonderful opportunities for the development of the social consciousness of our own members, as well as presenting our peculiar social ideals to the world. It has an opportunity for not only studying, but doing. But above all, it ought to clarify its aims (speaking of local units) so that a lesson study will come to mean something definite to the community. The program still had in ninety-nine of every hundred Religios needs an aim, a purpose which will tie one to another and lead somewhere. Otherwise it becomes a mere mechanical habit and a standing testimony to the unprogressiveness of our real methods as compared with our ideals as a church.

We plead for more thought concerning the why of what we are doing. We urge that every group of leaders think of coordination as a method of unifying ideals and methods to the end that the members of the church in that community may develop consecrated leaders in all lines, administrative, missionary, business—all. It will pay an hundredfold in results.

There is no occasion for one organization to stand around pointing a finger of accusation at another. There is too much to do to allow any pointing at all unless it be the adjustment of the hands of our compasses of progress so they will lead us into fields of genuinely purposeful progress. E. D. M.

Anti-Mormon Attacks in England

The church in Great Britain is suffering from the anti-Mormon campaign waged by a number of newspapers who do not know the distinction between the Mormons of Utah and the true Church of Jesus Christ. As a result an attack was made on Saint Leonard's and some of the windows broken. While this attack is inconvenient it may also tend to open up an opportunity through British fair play.

An amusing feature is that Brother T. W. Williams, while attending conference at Llanelly, Wales, wrote an article to the London Daily Mail, giving some important facts of church history showing the origin of polygamy and the position of the Reorganized Church, and the story of his mother's trip to Utah in the early days. The Mail deleted practically all reference to the Reorganized Church and in publishing the story, gave the name F. W. Williams. As most of the anti-Mormons are women, the readers jumped to the conclusion that it was Miss F. W. Williams. As a result he received many communications under that name and finally a check for the first story and asking for another.

As a result of the twenty windows being smashed, Bishop Fry was given a short interview in the Daily Mail in which he stated the difference. Shortly after, a similar attack was made on the Mormon quarters. One development is that the Mormon bishop in immediate charge in London, Mr. Savage, has been called before the Home Secretary and asked to furnish a list of the Mormon missionaries now in Great Britain, and several of these have also been asked to appear.

As a rule, no distinction has been made between the two churches, but in one or two instances the differences have been pointed out. This is the case in the South Wales News which publishes over half a column from T. W. Williams. It is also briefly indicated in the Evening Express, which states that the original church is now known as the Reorganized Church. This paper also states that this original church does not practice polygamy and that the so-called revelation was not given by Joseph Smith but by Brigham Young. There is still some confusion in this account, as it says that Brigham Young put this so-called revelation in the Book of Mormon, which, of course, is not the case as it was added to the Doctrine and Covenants.

This is a very uncomfortable experience for the missionaries in that land, yet we have confidence that through the British spirit of fair play the distinction will soon be clearly seen and that they will recognize that the original church, of which this is a continuation, has never at any time sanctioned polygamy nor the other doctrines introduced in Utah, to which so much objection is taken.

Have We the Five Per Cent?

One of our missionaries was recently at one of the western universities and the dean who is personally acquainted with President Frederick M. Smith asked our brother to give his regards to Doctor Smith. In introducing our missionary to another professor the dean told him about having met President Smith and what he stands for along lines of social betterment.

The professor asked, "Where is Doctor Smith? Is he in town?"

The missionary said, "I thought by his actions that he was going to go right down town to meet him if he had been there. He seemed very much interested with our social program. We had a nice visit and after talking with him he remarked, 'Why, I could affiliate with a church of that kind.' Of course I had to explain that the things of which I had been speaking were ideals yet to be accomplished and that many of our people were unprogressive, so every inch of the way would have to be fought, but we hoped to succeed. He answered, "If your president can win over five per cent of the people to stand by him in the carrying out of the social program you have been telling me about you will succeed, and he must not expect to get any more. No leader does, nor should he expect to.'"

The meeting of the International Sunday School Association at Kansas City, June 21-27, will offer an excellent opportunity to our Sunday school workers in the middle part of the country.

In the long run a man becomes what he purposes, and gains for himself what he really desires.—Mabie.

Self-control, I say, is the root virtue of all virtues. It is at the center of character.—King.

Disposing of Property

Some of the religious press coming to our desk is urging the need of money, and calls attention to the question of bequests. People intend to do something for the church or for the publishing interests, or some particular department. They intend to do it by will, but put off carrying this intention into effect until too late. In some States, a will must be made at least thirty days before the death of the testator. There are certain other provisions which must be carried out if the gift after death is to be good. In Iowa, not over one fourth of the property may be given to charitable uses; that is, to a corporate organization for benevolent purposes, providing the spouse or children are living. In California, not more than one third can be so left to charity where there are direct heirs.

It is well, if one intends to make such a gift, to see that the will is executed in due season; but, as we have suggested before, there are sometimes long lawsuits over a will, and a gift made during a lifetime is completed and is not left open for argument after death.

Moral Values in Christian Practice

Nothing can be more disastrous than a policy of silence, observes the Guardian, of London, England, in discussing the subject of moral values in the church, and the danger of the policy of simply ignoring facts, especially as regards young people. A church congress was recently held in Birmingham, which brought up the subject.

The church should see that its young people are frankly informed with regard to the danger confronting them in the world, but not unduly or with too much repetition. The church, no more than physicians, can confine itself entirely to nice subjects.

But, on the other hand, what is needed more than anything else on the part of the church, is a constructive policy, a frank meeting of spiritual ideals as concerned with the marriage relationship.

We agree that it is not simply a matter of being found out. There must be an anchor in the soul. There must be a standard of righteousness well established, a desire to choose that which is good. A morality that is founded upon fear only is no morality at all.

That which confronts the church and the world is, in good part, an outgrowth of the war, but that is no excuse for continuing wrongdoing.

What we need above everything else is high ideals of the marriage relationship and what it means, a realization of its sanctity and of its beauty, a thought as pure as a lily, a touch as fair and gentle as a child.

The Social Aspect of Religious Experience

By John W. Rushton

Sermon at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Sunday evening, September 4, 1921.

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service." This is from the twelfth chapter of the letter of the Apostle Paul to the Romans.

To-day has suggested the theme which I have in mind—Our sacramental service. The sacrament of the Lord's supper belongs to that part of our ecclesiastical code which has been called ritualism. The rite, of course, is not of any value in itself, but for what it represents. The spiritual content back of the mechanical ways and means is that with which we are directly concerned. That, of course, is in keeping with the main thought of the afternoon speech. It matters not what the name of the servant may be, his value consists in the quantity and the quality of the service which he renders and to the good of those he serves.

I think that probably religious people have given a great deal more attention to theological and ecclesiastical aspects than they have given to what might be called the social aspect of their religious experience. We ought to remind ourselves very frequently of the fact that there is no such thing as intrinsic value, at least from a moral point of view. All values are created by the reaction which the individual or the thing can set up in the social group of which the individual performs a part or in which the thing itself may function. The word value as we have it to-day comes from a very dignified ancestry and has found its expression in various ways and all of them more or less royal and romantic.

The word valere is the Latin ancestor of our English word, value. It has two meanings; applied to a person, valere means valiant or valorous; to a thing, valere is value. No sooner do we mention these terms than our minds are filled with memories of romance and knight errantry; and we can conjure up without any difficulty at all the splendid scenes of those wonderful days when Richard Couer de Lion gathered up the flower of British chivalry and set out on that heroic crusade with others which, while filled with many evidences of personal heroism, ended so disastrously, because while they went to redeem the grave of the dead Christ, they could not behave themselves in life along the highway. They left us one of the greatest spectacles of human weakness now on record.

But that does not interfere with the beauty of the word about which I am speaking. As the minds of men became more and more commercialized, this word found new relationships and finally came to be the symbol in English for all that our science of economics reads into the word value. This word value, as we have it to-day, I think, easily proves what I have tried to state at the beginning. This word means that there can be no such thing as intrinsic value in anything, but value is the result of the possession of a thing which may be "availing for life" in the hands of a "valorous" or "valiant" person, so that the word value must be considered as having a more idealistic concept than economics puts into it. Therefore there must of necessity be a serious consideration of the "social aspect" of any philosophy, any teaching of anything or of any individual, who may be acclaimed as the leader. And every man's value to society must finally be demonstrated in what Gladstone said was the end of all legislative processes. That is, "to make the world in which we live a better place, in which it shall be easier for men to be good and do good and harder for them to be ill and do ill." And when you take into consideration the analysis of the judgment day to which our Lord himself in all his teachings directed more or less directly the attention of his auditors, he makes it very clear that the judgment of God will be based upon the quantity and quality of social service which the individual may render to the group of which he finds himself a part.

When I was hungry, ye gave me food. When I was thirsty, ye gave me drink. When I was naked, ye clothed me. When I was sick, ye visited me. Therefore inherit the kingdom prepared for you before the foundation of the world. Why, Lord, when did we see you in this state you describe? Inasmuch as you did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me.

Rites Valueless Except as They Help Society

I think we ought not to overlook the fact that however advantageously we may employ our rites, and ceremonies, and doctrines, and theologies to ourselves personally, the fact remains that none of these can be of any value until they teach us to react upon society in such a way that the society is made sweeter, cleaner, purer, holier, and better for every one who may live in that society.

The Apostle Paul must have had this in mind, for you cannot help but notice in this twelfth chapter of the Roman letter how directly he comes to this self-same thought. It is interesting also to know that the letter to the Romans was written as the first attempt to systematize the Christian belief. And in his socialization of Christianity as a philosophy, and institutionalism, there must be demonstrated its value in the effect it has upon the social group. Therefore one of the first things the Christianized man or woman is taught to do is to cultivate the broad sympathy that will enable us to "rejoice with those who rejoice" and "weep with those who weep." The psychology of Christianity, the particular discovery of the Apostle Paul, again is brought to bear in a socialization that we must not lose sight of. "Be of the same mind one toward another."

Now all of these references are fixed in the modern word sympathy which grows out of two distinct Greek words, syn equals with; patheis equals suffering. Our identification as individuals with the social group must be so close and intimate that the relationship attained as the result of personal sacrificial suffering will be real. Sympathy, we are told by one of the great French writers of modern times—and surely no nation in the world can speak of sympathy with greater understanding than the French people, for since 1914 they have learned through the tortures of the dreadful war what true sympathy is, "Sympathy is the mark of an aptitude as it were to put one's self in unison with others, especially from the emotional point of view."—G. L. Duprat.

We blend our common sorrows, we unite our common joys upon the basis of a common emotionalism, and learn to appreciate a common idealism in the unifying of the ideal and of the loves and hatreds of life, so cooperating in the attempt to realize in the passions of the soul and service for the common weal the ideal we have espoused. That is the sympathy which even the Frenchmen of to-day can see, and is born of the analysis of this word, and which is the peculiar witness to modern civilization.

Social Aspect Needs Stress

I say once more by way of emphasis that the social aspect of the Christian life has not been stressed as much as it should be stressed, and as I look over the Doctrine and Covenants, which I believe is distinctive of this latter-day work, far more so than either the Bible or the Book of Mormon, I cannot escape the conclusions that if there is any meaning at all in that book it is to give a social application of the ideals which the work represents.

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants, in a very liberal and broad sort of way, may be divided into several sections. I would of course classify the mystic. All that may be gathered up under the term, individualistic in a spiritual experience may be called the "mysticism" of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants—that is personal.

Then there is the legalistic and institutionalistic, adjusting the individual to his God and to his fellow men in all his personal relationships informing his understanding as to right and wrong; and through the organization of the institution he achieves what he cannot achieve through his own personal endeavor in wider application of his principles to the communal life. Personally, we are limited, our powers are comparatively small, but in association with the group the whole of us can achieve more through organized effort than the individual can.

Of course, this must be modified always by the consideration of the fact that no mass or crowd or mob is ever as intelligent and as moral as the individuals of which it is composed; hence a mass movement is slower in its development. The responsibility of every leader is to have a higher and purer moral vision and a much keener intelligence in regard to duties and obligations, but however high and glorious the morality and morals of the individual may be, he waits for the mass to move through the efforts of the institutions and organizations through which the great ideals may find realization.

Doctrine and Covenants Largely Social

I would say also that our Book of Doctrine and Covenants is concerned with the ethical; and, so far as the ethic is concerned I would insist that the ethic shall mean the duty of the spiritual functioning of the individuals and the group and bringing the life of the individual and the whole into perfect unison with the mind and will of God. It means in that the fusion of both the loves and the hatreds, the moral consciousness and the intellectual insight, and the willing in activities of the whole shall blend harmoniously with that of the Almighty God. Nothing less may be included in this third division of this book.

Finally, perhaps sixty-five per cent of the matter in that book is concerned directly or impliedly with the application of the latter-day ideals to social concerns regarding economic, political, and domestic affairs, building up a societal structure that shall be at least identifiable with the kingdom of God on the earth, which is Zion.

I believe that ultimately we shall find in this book justification for our philosophy, and, I cannot but feel that we have neglected or at least have left unimproved a vast province of idealism and philosophic speculation that we shall do well to remember and keep in mind for our future program.

There are two features of our ritualism which I think will bear me out in the position which I have taken to-night. It is not often that people go to ceremonies and rites for social messages, but I am going to show to-night that even in baptism there is a social justification that we ought to stress; and in the Lord's supper there is a much deeper indorsement of a social program than we have perhaps been able to concede. I admit that in both of these there is a tremendous urge to individual spirituality and that possibly men and women may be justified in believing they have gotten out of baptism and out of the Lord's supper everything which they are entitled to receive, and yet have overlooked this important social province.

I call your attention quite incidentally and with brevity to the statement of the Apostle Paul found in the letter to the Galatians. Here is what he has to say about baptism:

You are all the sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus; for all of you who have been baptized into Christ, have clothed yourselves with Christ. In him the distinctions between Jew and Gentile, slave and free man, male and female, disappear; you are all one in Christ Jesus. And if you belong to Christ, then you are indeed true descendants of Abraham, and are heirs in fulfillment of the promise.—Galatians 3: 26-29.

Baptism Establishes Solidarity

Here it is clear that if baptism means anything at all, it establishes the solidarity of the individual with a new social whole, and with Jesus Christ, and God, and heaven; for baptism can mean nothing less than the receiving of the "freedom of the kingdom of heaven" and the establishing of relationship with all the spirits of just men made perfect in the past and present, as well as the future.

Water baptism implies therefore a social responsibility in which we are lifted above the conventionalities and artificialities of nationalism, of all cults and human groupings, and become unified with all who claim Jesus Christ as their ideal and profess loyalty to that which is worthy of the loyalty of all the loyal people of the race, whether prophet, apostle, saint, philosopher, or scientist.

I believe, therefore, in our regard and esteem for this baptismal ceremony there must be more than a mere conformity to a spiritual text; there must be more than the personal satisfaction of individual obedience to a doctrine of the Christian church. There must be nothing less than the intention at least, that in baptism I become one with Christ and with every man and every woman for whom Jesus Christ has any meaning, to whom he can offer any help, and to whom he can be and is the soul's ideal. If that does not imply a social responsibility I confess my inability to comprehend the meaning of language.

How many of us have ever thought of that, either in being baptized or in baptizing individuals. To reiterate the word already employed, our baptismal regeneration indicates both divine and human solidarity in the union of the bonds of sympathy, the bonds of loving service, of willing sacrifice of the individual Christianized man or woman, with all who call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ on behalf of all who sense the need of the help which he alone can give.

Baptism a Witness of Unity With God

Now in talking about this question of baptism, I think that probably a reference to one of the most sainted preachers England ever possessed would be timely. I refer to Frederick W. Robertson, of Brighton, a man who stood in his day in the forefront as one of the finest exponents of homiletics Britain had known. This is what he said: "Baptism is a visible witness to the world of that which the world is ever forgetting—a common humanity united in God. Baptism authoritatively reveals and pledges to the individual that which is true of the race."

As in Adam, the human federal head, all die; so in Christ, the spiritual federal head, we are made alive. This represents all that is fitting and worthy of perpetual vitalization, so that in baptism we are relieved of the burden thrust upon us by the federal head, Adam, and we become the inheritors of all the spiritual inheritance which is ours because of the racial solidarity with Christ. Let us not postpone our rights and privileges until death robs us of opportunity for service in this great world.

Now, when we discuss this same theme, illustrated by the holy eucharist or the sacrament of the Lord's supper, let us go over to the Apostle Paul's pronouncement on this subject found in the tenth chapter of the first letter to the Corinthians, beginning, I believe, about the 16th verse: "The cup of blessing, which we bless, does it not mean a joint participation in the blood of Christ? The loaf of bread which we break, does it not mean a joint participation in the body of Christ? Since there is one loaf, we who are many are one body; we, all of us, share in that one loaf."

Now in this argument of Socratic flavor, the Apostle Paul establishes what I consider the essential truth lying at the back of our ceremonialism: that through the common cup and through the common loaf we establish once again the solidarity of the individual member with the whole and with God. And though we do this we are also establishing our separateness from everything which is a challenge to Almighty God. You cannot sit at the table of demons and enjoy the bounty of divine hospitality at the table of the Lord. (See 1 Corinthians 10: 21, 22.) To be socialized with God must mean desocialization from everything unlike him.

God Loves, Approves, Wills Baptism

Now there is a social responsibility as well as a social solidarity that must be considered in this, and while I believe that instinctively rather than luckily we have adopted what we call close communionism, there is a justification for this that I think will at least challenge those who think otherwise. Personally, I like to be as free and as liberal as I can, and would like to see everybody go to heaven without the inconvenience of baptism, if they can. I shall never complain if in answer to my question to any one with whom I come in contact over there, Have you been baptized by immersion? Have you a properly signed and dated certificate, and were you never expelled from my church? Did the man who preached your funeral sermon preach it by authority of the church? If he shall say, No, I shall have no complaint to make; I shall congratulate him upon his wonderful success. I shall want to know how it is that this solidarity of which this New Testament speaks did not hold good in the case of this particular friend I refer to. I have no complaint to God Almighty saving everybody in any way, but I do believe that if salvation is given logical definition it can mean nothing less than the development of that state in which we all love what God loves and hate what God hates, cultivating a knowledge of what God knows and will what God wills. If the Bible is any authority it tells me that God loves baptism, God approves baptism, and God wills baptism.

Bishop Cranmer, one of the first minds which ruled in British ecclesiasticism in those dreadful days when King Henry the Eighth made shipwreck of the British Catholicism and established Protestantism, once preached a sermon on the Lord's supper, in which he said, "For we see by daily experience that eating and drinking together maketh friends and continueth friendship. How much more then ought the table of Christ to do so still more." There is a sentiment in Oriental countries to this effect, that if you eat with a man enmity ceases. There is still a word in the German language, "Tafelfähig," which means "worthy to sit at the royal table." Common hospitality is one of the evidences of a cessation of hostilities. "Sitting at the same table elevates one, as it were, to a paternal relation with the host, making of them one family." (R. T. Ely.)

Is not that one of the experiences of the Lord's supper, that when we stretch forth our hand and eat of the common loaf and drink of the common wine that we are exhibiting union with God and freedom of everything like hostility with our friend? Is it not an expression of solidarity between ourselves and God and ourselves and man?

One of our own poets, James Russell Lowell, has written: "He is true to God, who is true to man; wherever wrong is done to the humblest and the weakest 'neath the self-beholding sun, That wrong is done to us."

Our Racial Solidarity Encouraging

My dear friends, I believe that never in all history throughout racial consciousness was there a time when we ought to lay to heart more than now the truth contained in these few words. We are so closely allied with the race of which we form a part, and solidarity is such a real thing, that just as much as we are willing to rejoice with those that rejoice and suffer and groan under the sufferings and miseries of our fellow beings, are we proving our real worth as Christian men and women.

I rejoice to-night as we look over the newspapers and see that Russia, with all her dreadful treachery during the war, and the horrors of Bolshevism, no sooner cries for help than we forget our grievances and, under the solidarity of the race, we rush our supplies to save her from disease and famine; that no matter from where the cry for help arises, our nation responds quickly and generously.

Now, so far as the church is concerned, we believe that still more than nationally we must break down the artificial limits of sectarianism. There is no such thing as sectarian truth. Truth is one and always the same. This church, if it is the church of Jesus Christ, must respond to the call of service, and it must give allegiance to the truth no matter how it shall come, or whence it shall come, or through whom it shall come. I believe that Ruskin's definition of the church is a good one: "Wherever one hand meets another helpfully, that is the holy mother church which ever is and ever shall be; world without end."

Go Beneath the Mechanism of Ceremonies

Is there not a deeper and a richer and a wider meaning to the idealism of our own people in Zionism and the kingdom of God than that which sectarianism would permit? Is there not a call to-night that we shall lift ourselves above the limits of an ecclesiastical circle, and go beneath and beyond the mechanism of our ceremonies and become identified with the spirit and the spiritual meaning in the terms of God and Christ which these only weakly and imperfectly represent? Shall we not find our joy in our service by uniting ourselves in common spirit of solidarity with God in heaven whose power to save is ours, and man in earth to whom that power to save may be applied through us?

Perhaps some of you remember that story so beautifully expressed by Tennyson in his "Idylls of the king." He tells, you will remember, of Joseph of Arimathea to whom was given that cup, blessed because it was used by our Lord in his last supper. This cup was taken to England and was long an object of adoration. And as long as that cup remained there all sorts of wonderful things were done. The lame were made whole, the sick were healed; but when the stain of sin once touched this cup these miracles were discontinued. It could be kept only by those chaste in thought, word, and deed. One proved unfaithful, and the cup disappeared. So the search for the Holy Grail began.

The beautiful story in that wonderful series of poems represents the finest idealism of England. James Russell Lowell calls it Tennyson's masterpiece. The Holy Grail is found always when a noble man or woman will render service to those who are in need.

Not what we give but what we share,
For the gift without the giver is bare.
He who gives his alms feeds three—Himself, his suffering neighbor, and me.

Christ's means of blessing is found always in service to others rendered without concern for self.

While we aspire to comradeship with the divine, and while we strive for entrance into the treasure of God's inestimable riches, we should remember that the proof of our worthiness to hold that "Holy Grail" is in the quality of service we can render to our fellow men.

I suggest one closing thought; that never was the call so clear and incisive as to-day if we can lift ourselves above the narrow selfishness, sectarianism, and nationalism of the age in which we live, and become the devoted disciples who hunger for the truth; and in our baptismal service we recognize our solidarity with God, and in the common sacrament we aspire to the refreshment that comes to us through the body of Jesus Christ, and thus we may be worthy citizens of his kingdom and find our blessing in the privilege to serve.

Now, I haven't much to say in regard to the service we may render, because I think that would be trite. You cannot look abroad to-day in your towns and cities, upon the industrial unrest of to-day, upon the waste and the perversion of power in the hands of those who enjoy the confidences of the multitude; you cannot see the wonders of life and enjoy the riches of personal pleasure and say your eye sees no duty and your ear hears no call for service. If there ever was a time when the church of Christ can demonstrate her power, it is now.

Let us insist that Zion shall be clean and sweet and pure. Let us make up our minds we shall not enjoy a minute's immunity from poverty and all that goes with it while one of our fellow-men groans under the consciousness of insufficiency. Let us not rejoice in the success of our own children scholastically, physically, or socially, while the child of our neighbor or friend is put to a disadvantage because of conditions he cannot help. Let us see to it that in this church of Jesus Christ the "Holy Grail" shall become accessible to the weakest as well as to the strongest; and in the common heritage of Christ's salvation we shall rejoice in the ability of the gospel to make us all free from those things which impair, deform, and spoil, and in the sharing of the common blessings which mean health of body, clearness of mind, buoyancy of spirit to the individual and the general enrichment of the social life.

Moving to Zion

By Benjamin R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop

The past year has brought to the office an ever increasing number of inquiries by Saints who desire to move to Zion. We have thought it might be well to set forth briefly some of the principles involved in the gathering.

The successful building up and establishment of Zion depends upon the faithfulness with which God's people comply with the laws governing in its development. Of course, it is easy for one to become discontented with his lot, especially in these troublesome times, and it is just as easy to become enchanted with the distant view of a life in new surroundings and a new environment. However, as a natural sequence of nearly a century of teaching the principles of the gathering and Zion, the Saints are looking this way and longing for the time when they can enjoy the fruits of a Zion redeemed.

The history of Jackson and Caldwell Counties reveals the disappointment of the early church at Independence and Far West in their search for this goal, and some of the reasons why our hope has been so long deferred. The Fishing River revelation (section 102) leaves no doubt that the cause of their disappointment was the lack of individual preparation on the part of the people as a whole. We must not repeat their mistakes. Surely, we can profit by their costly experience. In the seventh paragraph of this section the Lord gave instruction to all his people living in Zion and the regions round about to be faithful, prayerful, and humble, and then he said: "Talk not of judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works; but carefully gather together, as much in one region as can be consistently with the feelings of the people: and, behold, I will give you favor and grace in their eyes."

We cannot disregard the feelings of the people in this region without disregarding the counsel of God. Some one person must be in full charge of the gathering and the temporal affairs of the church, so that the Saints can counsel with him and avoid coming here unprepared and at inopportune times. He would know best the housing problems, the industrial situation, and whether it is consistent with the feelings of the citizens of this community.

It takes more than car fare to Independence and a strong pair of hands to "build up Zion." The past year furnishes us an example. We are now passing through a testing time. It has been said that during the last ten months there has been only one job for every two men out of work. To move here and become a charge upon the church or county reflects discreditably upon the cause of Zion. We must "have all things prepared before us."

How is the Bishop to know who is prepared and who is not? "According to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion." (Doctrine and Covenants 72:3.) Another law requires that those who move to Zion should "carry up unto the bishop a certificate from three elders of the church, or a certificate from the bishop, otherwise he who shall go up unto the land of Zion shall not be accounted as a wise steward." The certificate blank we are now using sets forth eight qualifications by which the elder or bishop who signs it may judge as to the worthiness of the applicant. To quote from the certificate: "The above requirements approach the ideals we hold for citizenship in Zion. They are not intended to be arbitrary nor conclusive; but are suggestive of a saintly standard." It would be well for every one who desires to participate in the gathering and help redeem Zion to become familiar with these eight points in the standard suggested. They are as follows:

1. That they have made satisfactory adjustments with all their creditors, if any.
2. That they have shown the true spirit of repentance by confession and forsaking their sins.
3. That they are free from the evils of contentions, evil surmisings, reviling, backbiting, talebearing, quarreling, and deceitfulness.
4. That during the last two or more years they have dealt honestly and truthfully with all men.
5. That they have honored the laws of God referring to temporalities by filing their inventories with the bishop, and have paid their tithe and surplus so far as they were able.
6. That they are given to hospitality as becometh Saints, and are industrious, frugal, and self-sustaining.
7. That they are worthy of the confidence and fellowship of the Saints in Zion.
8. That by a godly walk and conversation before the world and the church, they have shown that they can be relied upon to contribute an influence and power for good in spiritual Zion, "The pure in heart."

PASTORAL

The Dynamics of Church Advertising

By W. R. Hotchkin, former advertising manager for John Wanamaker, New York.

[We recommend the reading of the following article to all branch and district officers, as well as the missionary force. The problem of church advertising is presented in a very helpful and interesting manner. This is the work the Publicity Department is trying to develop.—Arthur E. McKim, General Publicity Agent.]

The church should advertise upon the same principles, and by the same methods, as any other distributor of a commodity. The church and commerce have varying vocabularies; but both must appeal to the desires of human nature in words that all will understand. Both have valuable commodities to exploit, and each depends for its success upon getting its commodities into general use.

The church is probably the most ancient of advertisers, and in the past it has used many different kinds of advertising mediums. The steeple bells of to-day and yesterday ring out an impressive invitation that still has its effect, even upon the most callous ears. They not only carry an insistent appeal to the faithful, but they are a constant reminder to nonchurchgoers that God still reigns, and that the followers of Christ are loyal and active in their praise and devotion.

The successful advertiser has two chief things to consider in planning his exploitation:

1. The commodity to be sold—and
2. The market—the people who will consume it.

So, in advertising our church, we must know all about it—its objects and aims, what it is doing for us, what it hopes to do for others. The advertiser must believe in it himself.

Next, the advertiser must study his market. Christ said: "The field is the world!" So our commodity is for universal consumption. We can make our appeal to everybody.

Our public is divided into two sorts of people:

1. Those who know that they want our goods—and
2. Those who have no thought of buying our goods.

The first class is composed of our own church members—the good, reliable, regular clientele, furnishing the very life-blood of the business, to whom we must sell our goods every day, or every week. These are not customers whom the store "takes for granted," not people to be overlooked in our rush for new customers, not by any means. They are the people to whom the store makes its strongest and most continuous appeal.

Does your church do that; or does it take too much for granted? Does it let its own sheep stray from the fold?

The second class of people, in the advertiser's category, are those who have no thought of buying our goods.

This is the class from which the store gets its new customers, the church its new converts and attendants.

We are told that, in the United States, there are fifty millions of people who have no church affiliation! Fifty millions of people who ought to use our goods, but have not been supplied! What an amazing field for the ambitious church advertiser!

The first problem of the commercial advertiser is to analyze his commodity and tabulate its various appeals to the many different kinds of people who are likely to use it. In church work exactly the same condition exists, and precisely the same "selling" effort needs to be made, by various radically different appeals.

First of all, the church must sell its proposition to its own members. This is a vital work. The first work of the commercial advertiser is to keep his own customers sold. This is the foundation of any successful business. The good will of regular customers is not only a concern's greatest asset, but it is the greatest existing power in securing the interest and confidence of new customers.

So I would say that the most vital element in advertising a church to outsiders is the living picture of the joy, satisfaction, comfort, and peace, expressed by the people who are members of the church.

The millions of people who have bought automobiles, have not paid big prices because they were tempted to possess a complicated piece of machinery, that would cost a lot of money to maintain in active service. They have been overwhelmed with desire to enjoy the open road, to feel the car speeding under them, to get out into the country, to have a quick, easy way to visit friends. And they have been finally stimulated to the purchase by seeing the pleasure that others realize in owning automobiles.

So it is with religion, with church membership. What benefits have you got to offer with your solicitation? What have you got to sell?

Suppose we tabulate the "selling points" of a typical church:

A comfortable, well-appointed church home.

A pastor who is sociable, likable, universally respected.

An organ, and organist whose performances are stimulating, spiritually as well as musically.

A choir composed of real musical artists.

Church societies that really promote genuine sociability and good fellowship among the members.

A faith that provides courage and assurance, for this world and the future.

Church friends who contribute to the real joy of living.

Sunday services that are a mental and spiritual stimulus.

Weekly musical events that inspire and entertain.

Social functions providing diversion and enjoyment.

Sunday school that shares responsibility for educating the children in religious knowledge.

These things are not such as we must force down the throats of our own members, or outsiders. They are things of the highest possible value, and we, as advertisers for our churches, are inexcusably ignorant unless we can make every argument alluring, so as to arouse desire, and make the thing we have to offer seem to be the most desirable thing in the world to those whom we wish to win!

Have we assumed that it was the duty of people to come to church, and tried to force obedience on them?

Have we tried to force people to accept "eternal salvation"?

Are we trying to sell them escape from hell?

Religion must be something that we can live and love. It must be something that blends with every activity of human happiness. The religion that chills any normal human emotion is artificial and therefore repellent to normal human beings.

Every time a church disappoints an individual it becomes harder for all churches to win new converts. But every church that benefits and humanly helps those depending upon it becomes a great power for progress and growth in all churches.

What have the churches got to sell? And to whom will it appeal?

Naturally devout people will be attracted by a church home.

Mentally alert people will be interested in live sermons.

Music loving people will be attracted by the organ and the choir, if the artists are high grade.

The social life of the church will win its own friends, if it is of the right character, and will add attractiveness to the church advertising.

Christ performed miracles in order to draw crowds to listen to his teachings—thus providing the highest possible precedent for the use of church attractions. He made his first appeal to human nature—even to the curiosity of man, woman, and child.

The church whose pastor is a great orator should make all the publicity possible out of the preacher's reputation. The strength and standing of a church in its community usually depends upon the popularity of the preacher. His topics should be made into magnets to attract the public, and to keep up the attendance on the part of the members.

Every church should have an object—some special work to do. A church as a mere place of religious entertainment for its members is an anomaly, and will die of rust—as hundreds have died. The church should be the active center of its community, and should always have some public activity under way.

But it costs money to advertise. How shall we find the ways and means?

In the first place, it pays to advertise. Advertising will definitely cause church growth—if the church deserves to grow.

If the church grows, the collections will be larger; the members will be willing to contribute more, and there will be more of them to contribute.

As a straight business investment for the church, advertising should pay its own way, as it does in any worthy business.

If there is not enough money in the treasury to pay for the advertising, make an estimate of the annual cost, and ask for definite advertising contributions, to support this work; and do it consistently, regularly, year-in-and-year-out, as other business concerns do it.

Remember that a vital element of resultful advertising is enthusiasm. No advertiser can successfully sell his commodity, unless he is himself tremendously enthusiastic about it. He must believe in it, and he must be filled with the conviction that his goods ought to be possessed by thousands of people, who read his advertising.

But even enthusiastic words must be earnest. There must be no writing of hollow phrases. There must be no exaggeration, no conventional twaddle.

Put human nature into the story, and make every word natural. Touch the human sympathies. Don't command. Rarely entreat. Maintain public respect for the thing you have to sell.

Don't give the impression that it is necessary to force members to go to church; and don't make people think that you must beg outsiders to come.

Let your advertising create the impression—true and genuine, as you know it to be—that church attendance is a delight which you invite others to share; that your religion is a joy which you are eager others should find.

Poetry is simply the most beautiful, impressive, and widely effective mode of saying things, and hence its importance.—Matthew Arnold.

Former and Latter Rains—A Review

By T. W. Williams

"A mistake was made in accepting what seemed to be favorable material without thorough investigation."

When I wrote the "Former and latter rains" articles I was prepared for vigorous criticism. The complete absence of same is a compliment to the position taken. In buttressing each point with an array of scientific facts and invulnerable arguments the avenues of attack were closed. Considerable matter was held in reserve in anticipation of criticism, but this is not needed.

Quite recently I have been running through some of the church publications which treat of this question—of Palestine, its curse and blessing. Arguments have been made and conclusions reached which will not bear scientific criticism. These have been based on unconfirmed statements, newspaper clippings, and isolated theories. A mistake was made in accepting what seemed to be favorable material without thorough examination. Some of these theories will have to be discarded. Others will require modification to conform to fact.

In the earlier years of the church little was known as to the conditions in Palestine, the fertility of the soil or the amount of rainfall. A theory developed something like the following:

For a period of eighteen hundred years following the anathema of Jesus the curse of God rested upon the entire land of Palestine, as well as the Jewish nation; the former and latter rains ceased for over eighteen hundred years; the soil lost its fertility; what was once a garden lapsed into a wilderness; the Promised Land became a desert: Jerusalem became a mass of ruins, shunned by all save wandering bands of Bedouins or Arabs.

It was asserted also that about the middle of the last century, or in 1852 to be exact, a miraculous change took place; the curse was removed; the former and latter rains returned, to the astonishment of the natives; the fertility of the land was miraculously restored. It is likewise urged that the blessing of God displaced the curse of 1852 and Palestine is now "a land flowing with milk and honey."

There is nothing to show that Jesus cursed the land. The rains did not cease. The fertility of the land was not miraculously destroyed. The fertility of the land was not renewed in 1852, or at any other date, for that matter. This is pure assumption. It is disproved by fact.

It is true that the Jews were dispersed according to divine prophecy. They did become a "hiss and a byword." Owing to their departure from the divine plan the blessings which always follow obedience were withheld. The land of Palestine did become barren and waste in large areas. This was due to neglect and natural as well as political causes. Jerusalem has not always been a mass of ruins. It has been inhabited throughout the years save during periods of assault and demolishment.

I have no desire to reflect on the work of my brethren. I have held similar positions. Only the facts have caused me to revise my attitude. It is not a question of personal integrity. It is a question of fact. Let us deal with the subject matter of some of the writers in question.

Brother A. H. Parsons has compiled a very excellent work known as Parson's Text Book. This is not a textbook in the sense in which the term is used in educational circles. This its author never claimed. The contents of the work have never been passed upon by any accredited representative part of the church. It is not official. This is said without any intended disparagement of the work as it stands. It is simply a compilation of facts and theories and writings which are used for what they are worth. Brother Parsons did not, and could not vouch for the positions taken. He tried to verify the accuracy of each quotation. This is as far as he went. He did not claim that this was an authoritative textbook.

Let me again affirm that:

No Material Change in Palestine

(a) There has been no material change in the climate of Palestine.

(b) The rainfall throughout the centuries has been quite similar to that which fell during Israel's occupancy.

(c) Deforestation has made little change in the rainfall.

(d) Jesus did not curse the land of Palestine.

(e) The desolation of Palestine has been due to:

1. The overthrow of the Jewish commonwealth.
2. Abandonment of the extensive land cultivation and water conservation of the Jews.
3. Ruthless vandalism, rapacious greed, and maladministration of the governing nations.
4. Abandonment of the divine plan which produced Israel's greatness.
5. Forfeiture of God's blessing upon land and people.

There is much of merit in the statements of authors quoted by Brother Parsons. They are not wholly reliable. The statements of the Reverend R. H. Hershall do not deal with the rainfall or land fertility. This suggests confession and remission—a position borne out by Scripture.

Reverend Hollis Read, A. M., deals in general terms with the evidences of the return of the Jews. It is a resume of various theories extant among the Jews as to their return and the second coming of Christ.

The clipping from the Jewish Chronicle (London, England,) of 1854 has much in it which is meritorious. The assumption, however, that the latter rains were withheld century after century and as a result, the land was brought to "the state that we now find it" is out of harmony with authentic observation and facts. The closing paragraph is pertinent. Speaking of Palestine the author says: "What can be done to reclaim it from barrenness? I know not that a better answer can be given than this—cultivate it and trust the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob for the 'former and latter rains.'" So say we. But this will apply everywhere. (See Parsons' Text Book, p. 203.)

Van Buren Statement Unreliable

We have shown hitherto that the statement of Louis Van Buren to the effect that the "rain and the dew are restored; recently [in 1853] the former and latter rains were restored to the astonishment of the natives," is wholly unreliable. This is disproved by the statement of McClintock and Strong's Encyclopedia quoted by Brother Parsons on the opposite page. It says:

Eighteen centuries of war, ruin and neglect, have passed over it. Its valleys have been cropped for ages without the least attempt at fertilization. Its terraced walls have been allowed to crumble, and its soil has been washed down its ravines, leaving its hillsides rocky and sterile. Its trees have been cut down and never replaced. Its fields have been desolate.

There must have been some heavy and continuous rains to destroy the terraces and wash all the soil into the ravines, leaving nothing but the bare rock. Again, if the valleys were cropped for ages there must have been moisture else nothing would have grown.

We have this from the Edinburgh Encyclopedia: "The soil of the mountains, formerly kept by terraces and covered with vines, is washed down into the valleys." This author also says, "This melancholy change is not owing to any deterioration of the soil or of the climate, but to the degeneracy of the inhabitants, who groan under the most intolerable oppression, and are exposed to every kind of pilage."

The Reverend Hugh Stowell is quoted. (See Parsons' Text Book, p. 205.) He wrote to the Scottish Presbyterian Magazine in 1853 that "the latter rain returned last year (1852) to Mount Zion." He affirms that the former rain had not yet returned. His statement is on a par with that of Mr. Van Buren, and entirely unauthenticated. Both of these men jumped to conclusions. One may have based his opinion on the other's statement. In any event, they were ignorant of the actual conditions.

The official table of rainfall by Mr. Glaisher and quoted in Parsons' Text Book, page 207, positively disproves the position taken by Herzog's Encyclopedia quoted on the preceding page. Herzog claims that the average rainfall of Jerusalem is 60 inches. Glaisher gives it as 27.87 inches. This is less than fifty per cent of the other. I would prefer to take Glaisher rather than Herzog. His figures are based on scientific tests and gauge measurements.

Brother Paul M. Hanson took this report of Glaisher and showed that there had been a gradual increase in the rainfall from 1861 to 1901. But this theory of gradual increase is disproved by the diminution of the rainfall subsequently. The average rainfall from 1901 to 1909 was 25.6 inches as against 29.03 for the preceding ten years. It is unsafe to form a conclusion as to the rainfall of a country based on a few years' observation. There are periods of drought and moisture and no one as yet can prognosticate the exact duration.

East Winds Blow To-day

A quotation is then made by Brother Parsons from the Giant Cities of Bashan, page 210. This is a very gripping description of one of the dry east winds which blow to-day as at the time in which this was written. If this wind be taken as a curse it existed throughout the occupancy by Israel and through the years of dispersion. It exists to-day. It cannot, therefore, be used to prove that "the prophetic curse pronounced by the Almighty on a sinful and apostate nation was now being fulfilled."

The Chicago Inter-Ocean for August 17, 1895, had an article which read: "A sign which is undeniably miraculous, too, is that Palestine is again becoming fruitful, after years of desolation, during which scarcely anything would grow. It was under a curse and the curse is now being lifted." The reason why things did not grow was because the land was not cared for. Wherever the land was tilled and the moisture husbanded, luxuriant crops have always grown in parts of Palestine.

Brother W. H. Kelley, in Presidency and Priesthood, reproduces the Van Buren letter and makes an argument thereon. There is nothing whatever to show that any curse was lifted from the land of Palestine in 1853, nor yet that there was any evidence of divine blessing in regard to the rains of that year. (See Presidency and Priesthood, pp. 216, 217, 240.)

Brother Jason W. Briggs, in his Analysis of Isaiah 29, and published as an appendix to the Voice of Warning, quotes the Van Buren letter. He also quotes from a Doctor Barclay's observations to show that "the greatest fall of rain at Jerusalem in a single year was eighty-five inches and the smallest forty-four, the mean being 51.6."

This statement of Doctor Barclay is reckless and not borne out by a single other witness.

As against this we have given the actual, Tables of Rainfall by Hastings, and Glaisher, and Chaplin, all of which agree. Doctor William Smith, who quotes Doctor Barclay, shows that the climate and climatic conditions have remained unchanged from the time of our Savior.

Brother Daniel Macgregor has made use of the Van Buren and Stowell letters. His reference is Parsons' Text Book, so there is need for further comment here. On page 137 the comment is made: "The land of Lebanon is Palestine. Sterile for seventeen hundred years, it was turned into a fruitful field in 1853. Proof has already been proffered." This "proof" has been shown unreliable and untrustworthy, hence the need for a revision of deductions made therefrom.

A Perpetuated Error

Now let us turn to From Palmyra to Independence, by Rudolph Etzenhouser. The writer analyzes Isaiah 29 and takes up the argument that the "little while" which was to elapse before the coming forth of the book and the restoration of the land of Lebanon was covered in the period from 1830 to 1853. There is not a line in any sacred book of the church which warrants the assumption that the "little while terminated in 1853. In fact, the interpretations of the prophecies would preclude this. The only reason that I can form for this application is that the brethren discovered in these statements a seeming fulfillment and without question used same as proof. It does not strengthen our general position. In the light of the facts it weakens it.

Brother Etzenhouser remarks, after quoting the Van Buren letter:

"Thus it is seen that only twenty-three years had passed after the publication of the Book of Mormon before the long promised restoration came." This is a far-fetched conclusion and wholly unnecessary to vindicate the truth of the Book of Mormon. It is a mistake to hurry prophecies to fulfillment. The "mills of the gods" cannot be speeded up.

Rabbi F. De Sola Mendes is quoted by Etzenhouser. This writer shows that this "is the pressing need of the land, to build up the waste places, to

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

In Word and In Deed

We are indeed glad to present to our sisters, this week, a letter from our Presiding Bishop, in which he explains his position in regard to money-raising in the locals. From some unknown source has arisen the idea that he is opposed to our women engaging in any sort of money-making enterprise, and because of the prevalence of this idea, some of our sisters who have formerly been very active in our midst have become discouraged, and thought that there was no longer a place for them.

We are thinking that great good has been done by the emphasis that has been placed upon this matter, and the wholesome consideration and discussion which have thereby been engendered. It often only requires thinking on the part of our sisters, for them to see that there are other ways in which they can serve the Master and his church on earth than simply by toiling to make money. When they face the fact that the main purpose of our church organization is a spiritual one, they readily see that there is a work of development for each one of us to do, of far more permanent value than merely providing material needs for a local branch.

The perception of this truth is the cause of the growing number of our study circles, earnest women who yearn to grow mentally and spiritually in order that they can, the more nearly, approach the plane where they may understand things of divine nature, and the more effectively assist in the spread of spiritual truth upon the earth. How often we have had repeated to us the statement, "The glory of God is intelligence," and we accept with ease the thought that it is possible for each of us to reach a condition of some "glory," its degree to be determined by our earth experience and attendant development. Can we, then, rest contentedly if we fail to strive for as full a development towards that "intelligence" as is possible for us to attain?

If the Woman's Department has seemed to some people to stress unnecessarily the idea of study for our women, may it not be admitted in justification therefor, that there was, and is, in very truth, a work for them to do in the spiritual task of redeeming Zion—a task which could not be accomplished by the old-time money-making organizations? Can it be said, in this day of advancement for women, that they are not included in the command to "study all good books," or the other, "bring up your children in light and truth"? And who, facing the fact of to-day's complex life and increasing degeneracy, will presume to say that either command can be carried out successfully without serious effort and deep concern?

While the leaders in the Women's Department are anxiously interested in establishing the habit of study among our women in order that their responsibilities to home, children, community and church may be the more intelligently accepted and discharged, it has not been in their hearts to discredit the achievements and worth of those sisters who have not yet cared for this phase of our work. On the other hand, they have recognized that the preparation for service and the service should go hand in hand, and that unless coupled with deeds, thoughts are often but empty things. It is in order that they may work the more effectively that they study to obtain a breadth of vision and knowledge. Thus the sisters who are devoted to the deeds of service, who are giving freely of their gifts of hand, who are always ready to join in whole-heartedly with the task in hand, whether it be the raising of the church debt, the rescue of some youth headed in the wrong direction, or explaining the "mysteries of the kingdom." All these are needed and have place in our organization and there is nothing to hinder all from working in harmony together.

Let us not organize primarily and only for purposes of money-making. While we may and should be willing to give the lift that is needed along temporal lines, let us be as willing to place our minds upon spiritual things also. Even as we sew, let some one read aloud, that our spiritual natures may be nourished. Read the Bishop's letter thoughtfully, and take new courage to move forward in the task that is closest at hand.

From Our Presiding Bishop

We shall endeavor to set forth our position on the efforts of the women's locals to raise funds, and see if we are not able to make it so clear and definite that it cannot be misconstrued, and, if possible, clear up some of the misunderstanding of the past.

We are in sympathy with any legitimate efforts to promote a worthy cause. It is all right for an individual to bring together the materials and prepare a meal and offer it for sale for profit, using the proceeds from such endeavor in any way he sees fit. What is right and proper for an individual would, generally speaking, be just as righteous and honest when engaged in by two or more. If a Sunday school class or women's local wished to undertake a box social, oyster supper, bazaar, or entertainment to raise funds for a worthy cause, it would be perfectly proper to do so. However, in carrying on these undertakings we have felt that a word of caution should be given against using the name of the church or connecting up the endeavor with the church work in such a way that the world would be left with the impression that this was a part of our financial policy for raising funds for general church work to supplement the tithes and offerings plan which God has given.

In other words, it does not always depend upon what we do, but how we do it, that leaves the impression for good or for ill. The world may take some of our earnest efforts to make a success of one of these local endeavors, as an eviplant the desolate fields, and to restore the washed away soil to the mountain plateaus, whence the unchecked and uncontrolled rains of centuries have been allowed to flood it away."

Sister Abigail York Alley wrote a letter to the SAINTS' HERALD on December 3, 1892, which would suggest the possibility of an unusual precipitation that year. Reference to the table shows that it was slightly above the average, or 38.2. She speaks of "slight showers of rain all through the summer." This was unusual, but no one who understands the climate of Jerusalem can take this as a blessing of the Lord.

When God sets his hand for the last time to rehabilitate the country which he gave to Abraham for an everlasting inheritance we will not be dependent on the statements and opinions of travelers for verification. The whole world will stand afar off and say, "See what the Lord has done for his people."

dence that the church has forsaken its primary object, that of religious education, for business enterprise; yet fundamentally, the business of the church is not commercial, but to save souls and bless humanity.

The sisters have rendered very timely help in times past, in paying off debts on local church edifices, or purchasing church equipment, such as pianos, electric lights, etc., or contributing towards the maintenance of the branch. Recently we learned of the sisters in one branch holding a bazaar and raising $375 to aid the families who were in need because of unemployment of long standing. In several places the sisters have made over clothing or made comforters, and supplied some worthy Latter Day Saint families, or the church institutions, such as the Sanitarium and the Homes. These manual services are just as commendable now as they were in the days of Martha and Dorcas, who served their fellow men with "good works and almsdeeds," and were praised by Christ and his disciples.

We hope that what we have said will only place emphasis upon the fact that these specific acts of helpfulness and practical Christianity, whether done by one or a group of individuals, are perfectly proper. In doing this however, let us not fail to make a proper discrimination between work which is carried on as a church function, done in the name of Christ's church, and the activities we have here enumerated.

We feel to accord with the general policy of the Women's Department to elevate the home and prepare our women for the duties and responsibilities of home-making, by educational courses. Yet there are emergencies and "needs of the hour" which, for the time being, can properly engage the attention and whole-hearted support of these faithful little bands of workers scattered throughout the church. There are a number of very excellent sisters in these various branches who find that they are not now able to adjust themselves to courses of study, but are able to utilize their time and talents in hand-work. Even if we could get along without the products of their labor, the department could ill afford to thus lose contact with them by any disparaging of their efforts.

I trust that this explanation will be satisfactory to you and all the other good sisters engaged in this noble work. I have found so many things crowding in upon my time, that, judging from the past, I do not know when I will be able to "edit" my address of last May, for publication as you request. However, if you choose to do so, you may use this letter in your column.

Very sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Gossip

A thoughtful writer to our columns this week, refers to the statements of a western worker among and for girls. We give space to the clipping and would call the attention of our sisters to one of the points contained therein.

It is the matter of "gossip." Oh, we know! We can hear one and all catch their breath, and declare that never, never do they indulge in so common and contemptible a thing as gossip! But don't they? Don't you? How many, think you, hearing a "choice bit" about another, fail to confide it to a "select few," who, in turn have their circles of friends to whom they tell it, and it goes and goes, until it becomes twisted out of all resemblance to the original fact, sorrowful even as that original fact may have been! Now, to be honest with ourselves, how many of us are guilty? How many could, with fearlessness, look into the face of the Great Judge, and say that never at any time, by word, look, or lift of eyebrow, had we added fuel to the disastrous fires of gossip and innuendo which have blackened and ruined the life of another?

Ah, just how much has been contributed to the downfall of a young girl by the older women of her community, will never be fully measured until that great day of questioning and accounting shall arrive! As is pointed out by this "officer for girls," many an unfortunate and mispersuaded girl, soul-sick because of her errors, could be reclaimed to a life of honor and usefulness were it not for the vicious tongues that will not let her mistakes lie buried with the forgiving Christ! Oh, may we appeal to the good Christian men and women of this church, that one and all may from this moment rededicate their powers of speech to the ministry of love, refrain from scattering the poison and weeds of suspicion and doubt; but instead, fill their hearts and charge their lips with only words of faith and encouragement, of tenderness and life, in order that blessing and not cursing shall follow in their wake!

Danger Ahead

While sitting at my sewing this afternoon, my mind was turned to our girls in the church as well as out—and my heart went out to all of them in a yearning prayer for their safety in a world of sin and selfishness.

Something has been said of the lowering of the standards of the fair sex, even to the downfall of many. We wonder what is the cause? Miss Ruth Vincent, of Denver, "Chief Officer for Girls," acting in the capacity of judge and jury for wayward girls, was asked the question, "Are conditions worse now than in the past?"

"Undoubtedly worse," was her reply. "The chief reason" she continued, "I believe to be the great freedom that girls have now. And the greatest agent of harm is the automobile."

Though she has made a strong point here, I do not wholly agree with her, for I believe there is another one, preceding the automobile, and one which influences our girls in the church more powerfully, and that is the modern dress, and the immoral shows of to-day. Why, they simply strip a girl of her "armor, modesty," for how can a girl continue to be modest and at the same time expose her body as so many do to-day? I believe it is letting down the first bars of defense!

Modesty is the greatest safeguard for a girl, outside of true virtue and a proper knowledge of nature. How, then, can a modest girl, in the company of a young man, sit through a four or five act play, throughout which immorality is the chief attraction and the keynote of the whole thing, without even an attempt to camouflage or modify the vileness presented? Surely, surely, such experience will strip a young girl of every vestige of modesty, and prepare her for the disaster of the automobile!

The mothers must be wide awake to existing evils. If their girls are going to shows, it would be well for them to visit some themselves, and get acquainted to some extent with the stage "follies"! Then, surely, they will use every possible influence to keep their daughters—and sons, too—from such places.

May God help every conscientious, striving mother to teach her girls not only the value of truth, virtue, and honor, but also of modesty, that shield and guard of purity, that censor of conduct which will cry out against the modern dress and play!

Yours for purity,

MRS. CLARENCE RESCH.

CHAPTER XIV

Feeling and Its Function

1. Define "physical" and "inertia."
2. If to convince one's head is not enough, what else is necessary to rightly guide our children?
3. How many and what are the different feeling qualities?
4. On what is feeling always based? You can readily see, then, that this knowledge element makes us believe that there are many different feeling qualities unless we carefully analyze each feeling.
5. Note that there is no phase of our mental life without the feeling element. Hence mental activity is more beneficial and productive when there is a feeling of pleasure attached to it. Having this knowledge, can the parent and teacher work to any great advantage? How?
6. What is the seeming mental zone spoken of by the author?
7. What constitutes the mood in which one may be found at different intervals of time?
8. Since our judgment and decision are influenced by mood, is it ever wise to make hasty judgment or decisions? Explain the statement, "Make haste slowly."
9. What is the philosophy, in the light of this chapter, in one's keeping youthful enthusiasm and energy always with them?
10. Define "disposition" and "temperament."
11. What does the psychologist mean by temperaments being sanguine, choleric, melancholic, and phlegmatic? Try to think of some one individual who illustrates these different temperaments.
12. Distinguish between mood, disposition, temperament, and sentiment.
13. How does the author explain a child's love for his mother?
14. Read and digest the following, and see if you can verify it in the lives of people whom you know: "A deep and abiding faith in God is fatal to the growth of pessimism, distrust, and a self-centered life. One's sentiments are a safe gauge of his character. Let us know a man's attitude or sentiments on religion, morality, friendship, honesty, and the other great questions of life and little remains to be known. If he is right on these, he may be trusted in other things; if he is wrong on these, there is little to build upon."
15. In what ways have literature, music, art, sculpture, and painting been influenced by sentiments?
16. Memorize, "Slowly, day by day, from the cradle to the grave, we are weaving into our lives the threads of sentiment, which at last become so many cables to bind us to good or evil."
17. What is it that furnish the deepest, most constant, and most powerful motives which control our lives?
18. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

A Woman's Court

By Edward Thierry

NEW YORK.—"Gossip ruins more girls' lives than anything else."

That's Miss Ruth Vincent's opinion. She knows, for that is her business—helping girls to unravel the tangled skeins of their lives.

She has been called Denver's "Lady cop." But she is not merely a police-woman. Her title is "Chief Officer for girls of Denver." Often she is also court, judge, and jury.

"Public courts hurt rather than help wayward girls," Miss Vincent said, while on a vacation in New York.

"A woman's court should not be a public room, where morbid-minded people can sit and listen to testimony about a girl's innermost life. That breeds gossip.

Privacy is Needed

"When a girl meets misfortune she is not ruined—as people are fond of using the word ruined—unless other people know about it.

"We need privacy in the courtroom in cases of this kind. All cities should adopt this method.

"In Denver there is as much privacy as in a doctor's office. A girl is arrested—or perhaps she comes in voluntarily. She is not frightened by the austerity and the publicity of a courtroom.

"I talk with her in my small office. She knows it is confidential. Therefore she always tells the truth. Out in a public courtroom in a delicate case involving sex she will lie nine times out of ten."

Miss Vincent is an assistant to Judge Ben B. Lindsey, of Denver juvenile court. She has held her job four years.

She is young and good-looking and smiles as she talks. She is slim and has a gentle voice. She does not look more than twenty-two or twenty-three.

"My youth helps me in my work," she said. "Girls who come to court are surprised. They usually say they expected a severe, matronly woman with spectacles and a sharp tongue."

Conditions Worse

"Are conditions worse now than in the past?"

"Undoubtedly worse," Miss Vincent said. "The freedom that girls have now.

"The greatest agent of harm is the automobile. Jazz dances? No, I don't think jazz dances do so much harm. It is greatly exaggerated."

A prison sentence is the rarest thing Miss Vincent's office deals in.—Exchange.

Now I Lay Me Down To Sleep

By George Matthew Adams

The day is spent. The good-nights have been said. Now I lay me down to sleep!

Father of All, it was a good day—not perfect, but good. Down the lanes of the hours I found much to make me happy, and, as I draw the covers about this body of mine, I close my eyes to thank you, while my brain is awake.

Soon the stars will shine over the drawn curtains of my heart, and while your billions of constellations hover about my lost consciousness, I ask that you wash my heart out for the new streams of light that the coming day shall bring.

Now I lay me down to sleep. Oh God, walk through the paths of my brain while it is so silent, and take out all the weeds that have grown up there during the unthinking moments of this busy day.

Take down the pictures of my failures and mistakes and put in their place the maxims of your goodness and beauty so that I may go forward in better faith and fuller confidence.

Arouse me from lethargies. Quicken me in spirit. Show me the better ways—when I have awakened.

Now I lay me down to sleep. Thank you for putting me in this world, at such a time as this.

Rest my body from this day's activities, and bathe me in

LETTERS AND NEWS

Watch With Me One Hour

A vision portraying conditions in the world to-day.

At midnight, just as December 11 was crowding the previous day from the stage, I was awakened from my accustomed peaceful slumber by some strangely oppressive influence. The solemnities of eternity weighed heavily upon my mind. I was at once in great trouble. I arose from my comfortable bed, determined to shake from me the cause of this great sorrow that had so suddenly seized upon my soul. When human efforts failed me, I instinctively turned to the divine. With bowed head and upstretched palms I asked, "Oh Lord, my God, what does this ominous foreboding pre-sage? Are any of my loved ones dying? Whence comes frightful or oppressive news? Is there anything I can do to avert some impending great evil? Oh, help me remove this unbearable burden from my soul."

Thus with receptive mind I continued my prayer for light and for relief until at length the chill air pinched me sharply, and I was returning to my bed for warmth when the still voice whispered to me, "Tarry ye in Gethsemane and watch with me one hour."

The thought of association with Jesus reassured me somewhat and brought a slight feeling of resignation, but the crushing burden of sorrow was not lifted.

Presently there came into my vision in rapid succession the more alarming features of our vanishing civilization. But for lack of space, I cannot tell you half that was shown to me, and the poverty of my vocabulary prevents me from giving you more than vague outlines of what I try to relate, for we see things in the Spirit which cannot be expressed in finite words, as well as things unlawful to appear in your paper.

First. Among other things, I saw the sad, haggard visage of our six million workless workers, and I drank the bitter dregs of their cup as I perceived their troubled thoughts of dependent loved ones.

Then millions upon millions of thinly clad, shivering, hungry children gathered around and covered all the valleys and hills in sight. These workless fathers gathered their little ones into their arms and bathed them in tears because they could provide for them neither food nor clothing. A great mountain arose in the north. I perceived that it was composed exclusively of all that was ever written of the advantages of education. A mighty shaft of lightning split the mountain of literature in twain and the thunders roared in audible words, "The half has never been told." Thus was flashed into my understanding Doctor Hall's comparison of mind to an iceberg with one eighth floating above the water and seven eighths submerged. The visible one eighth represents the conscious mind to which this mountain of literature is addressed, while the seven eighths submerged portion illustrates the superior conscious mind, or spirit intellect.

When I was informed that no one can partake of the more abundant light of life in this world until his conscious mind unfolds so as to cooperate with the superconscious seven eighths, of themselves, and saw that nothing but a ceaseless struggle for a mean imitation of life remained for these blighted buds of promise, my heart yearned for them, and I groaned and murmured, "It is too much. It is too much. Take the sad vision away. Why should the life be wrung from my soul by all this misery for which I am not responsible? I have done my best to warn my country of the way to escape this impending evil. What more can I do? Be pleased to show me the root of all this trouble, and if in any way I can help subdue it, 'Here am I, send me.' If not, then why cannot

"Each chord in nature's harp for me
Be tuned to one grand symphony?"

The only response that came repeated the request, "Watch with me one hour."

Then in seeming reply to my request I saw a perfectly formed human body, which at once became transparent, or rather, my vision brightened until I saw that it was "wonderfully and fearfully made" of infinitely small individual units or cells. Under my observation these cells would form, function, and die. They were carried away and replaced by other individual cells, all done by an intricate circulation of the blood. In conjunction with this, the one hundred million citizens of the United States appeared upon the scene, functioning as individual units of the body politic, and I saw a bewildering, entangled, congested, and spasmodic system of finance circulating in the body politic as a counterpart of the life blood of the human body. Thus was the appropriate simile of Harvey burned into my conception.

Hark! What is this I hear? The far-off symphonies of heaven, the distant echoes of the old, old chorus, "Peace on earth, good will to men." But when I saw our administration spending ninety-three cents of every dollar it can wring from the people for war, my heart sickened and I became unable longer to watch. But, covering my face, I repeated the words of the great poet, Schiller, "Take back this sad clear-sightedness; take from mine eyes this cruel light! Give me back my blindness—the happy days of my sense; take back this dreadful gift."

The following response came to my ears: "While the Son of God is crucified afresh, can you watch and not see? Can you see and not perceive? Can you be related to Jesus, see and perceive, and not partake of the world's great misery? Would you dance upon the trembling crater of Ætna with the infatuated who rejoice and are glad."

Sleep had gone from me, so the remainder of the night was spent in deep meditation.

For fifty years I have prayed to be made more nearly like Jesus. Then to realize that I had not only been unwilling, but had actually felt rebellious when asked to watch with him one short hour was intensely humiliating.

This experience has given me a clear conception of the serious life of our Savior. I understand better how the sins and suffering of the world weighed so heavily upon his great sympathetic soul; understand his experience in the Garden of Gethsemane and the cause of his sleepless nights spent in prayer. His great desire to remove the sin and thus banish suffering is more nearly like an open book to me than ever before.

your love, so that my dreams may be pleasant ones. And when you lead me into your light again, make me ready for every worthy call.

What a short day it was! How fast it ran—how fast they all run!

Now I lay me down to sleep. Thank you for the bed and shelter, for my food—and my friends. In appreciation do my eyes grow heavy and full of languor.

Now I lay me down to sleep. Everybody—good-night!

Fifty-Seven Years a Missionary Home

Sister Mary E. Anthony was born at Northwich, England, February 12, 1842, and at the age of nine years, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Ruffley, moved to Melbourne, Australia, in 1851. There they heard the angel's message and accepted it, so concluded to move to Utah.

They landed at San Francisco in 1859, and while making preparation for Utah, our missionaries informed them of the conditions there, and of the Reorganization, so they remained in San Francisco, Mr. Ruffley ordering the wagons containing their wealth unloaded, for he was considered a wealthy merchant in those days.

Sister Anthony, who was at that time Miss Mary E. Ruffley, became engaged to T. J. Andrews, and in 1861 they were married, and to this union, Sarah F., Mary, and George T. were born.

Joseph, Alexander, David, Elbert A., Frederick M., and Frederick A. Smith, W. W. Blair, Joseph Clapp, Joseph and Emma Burton, many of the Quorum of Twelve, quorums of Seventy, high priests, elders, many of the Aaronic priesthood, and members too numerous to mention, have enjoyed her hospitality.

At present Sister Anthony is living with her daughter at Corte Madera, Marine County, California. She crosses the bay every Sunday morning, a two-hour ride, and attends Sunday school and church in San Francisco.

She has an older sister living in Oakland, Sister Sarah Ashman, and a younger sister living in San Francisco, Sister Elizabeth Davidson. A few months ago her only son, George T. Andrews, passed away, causing her much sorrow and grief, for she loved him dearly.

Sister Anthony enjoys good health, and hopes to continue faithful to the end. EMERY S. PARKS.

Brother Andrews was an elder, and president of the San Francisco Branch for many years, and for over fifteen years Bishop's agent. He died in 1886, after which Sister Anthony was appointed Bishop's agent, and continued as such for over four years. She then recommended Brother C. A. Parkin, who was afterwards ordained a bishop, serving faithfully and well.

In 1891 she married Elder J. A. Anthony, whose service was very commendatory in the Northern California District. On September 1, 1918, Brother Anthony passed to an honorable reward.

After the earthquake of April 18, 1906, her home was open for Wednesday night prayer services and the annual bazaars.

Brother E. C. Briggs was the first missionary to find a home with them in the early sixties, and since then Brethren

A Practical Suggestion

We have been making an effort here to get the gospel before the people. Brethren H. Arthur Koehler and John F. Sheehy were here for about a month. We hired the Masonic Hall at New London, and the Odd Fellow's Hall at this place and advertised the meetings in the papers, but there are five theaters open every night. On Sunday night the people go to the theaters, and as it isn't lawful to charge an entrance fee, a collection is taken. There are also dances every night, so the people do not have much time to devote to religion.

Very few attended our meetings and those who came did so to please the ones who invited them. We didn't seem to have any opposition. The papers gave us a nice little write-up but the people are lukewarm.

We are not discouraged, however, but hope to live that the pure in heart may come to the knowledge of the truth. Our neighbors are friendly to us, but do not go to church anywhere. On Sundays, they work around at home.

I am much interested in the gathering and would like to enter into a community of ten or twenty families and pool our resources and live on a stewardship basis. One man could sell for the whole and one man could buy for the whole. You will seldom find more than one or two really capable salesmen out of twenty families, and good buyers are scarce. Just think of the saving of time! Now the twenty families each buying and selling their own goods, use twenty times the time it would take for their best man to sell and buy, to say nothing about the saving in buying in wholesale quantities. Where twenty men would have to go to market, nineteen could stay at home reaping, plowing, planting, threshing, and nineteen transfers and autos could be put to other uses.

My brother and I once dealt in fruit and produce here in New London and he went down to New York and bought oranges and we sold them to the merchants here at twenty-five cents per box cheaper than they could buy them in New York and pay their own freight, and we made a good profit.

The Lord says to come out of the world and be separate. Our young people are surrounded by all manner of sinful influences. Saints living in branches and are so widely scattered that the collective influence is largely lost and the influences of evil surroundings while at school or work nearly crowd out the influences for good that the church services should bring to them.

There is nothing to be gained by waiting. If this church had only given heed to the word of God to buy the land in 1832, we should to-day be the richest people in the world.

But let us organize ourselves into communities and send one of our men to buy a site located, and put into practice our religion.

Secret orders, insurance companies, theaters, and lost energy are taking the resources of the Saints, and in their scattered condition they are losing spirituality. It isn't necessary that we should settle right in Independence or Kirtland or Lamoni or Holden. We can get good land and be just as near the central place as some of the places mentioned, at much cheaper prices.

I would like to hear from others on this subject. I have been in this church thirty years this spring and the gathering was talked then just the same as now. Thirty years ago the lands in Zion could have been purchased at a fraction of the present price. It is a time for action. Nearly all the cooperative societies that have hung together have prospered financially: the Shakers, Mennonites, Oneida Community, and others.

With a great desire to see Zion come forth under the celestial order, I am as ever your brother in the restored gospel,
THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

GROTON, CONNECTICUT.

Independence

The joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric is very busy in two sessions daily. T. W. Williams arrived last Wednesday from England. All the others in America are also present: G. T. Griffiths, R. C. Russell, J. W. Rushton, J. F. Curtis, Paul M. Hanson, U. W. Greene.

When these men are in the community their services are in demand and the various meeting places of the Saints within reach are frequently filled to hear one of them. At the sacrament service at the Stone Church on Sunday the time remaining after the serving of the emblems was occupied by request of President Elbert A. Smith in charge by Brethren Griffiths and Russell, of the Twelve, and Elder H. C. Burgess, the latter being asked to give his impressions of the late series of young people's meetings. In the afternoon following the priesthood lecture in the upper auditorium, a number of the priesthood went into the prayer service in the lower room, and among others Brother G. T. Griffiths related interesting experiences and bore convincing testimonies. The Saints greatly appreciate the participation in the services of those to whom they look as leaders.

The first session of the young people's prayer meetings to be held on Wednesday evening was a great success in its initial effort on the 1st. A very large percentage of the young people in attendance have not been hitherto reached by the group prayer meetings. They plan to send out teams of young people to attend the group services, which will serve to unify in a definite way the spiritual activities of all the people.

The various sacramental services in Zion were, as usual, well attended on Sunday. At the Stone Church the audience is so large that little time is left for the usual prayer and testimony, by which one comes to judge the spirituality of a meeting. But the evening preaching service, preceded by a half-hour song service, was very interesting from the beginning. The choir, out in force under the direction of H. C. Burgess, practically filled the platform, while the congregational singing was all one could desire. Elder J. W. Rushton was the speaker, and as he operated under the power of the Spirit of God the universal expression was, "Wonderful!"

President Frederick M. Smith addressed the Chamber of Commerce of Independence at its weekly luncheon on last Thursday on art in relation to civic expression, basing his talk on the architecture of Europe. He urged a higher civic ideal and more consistent efforts to attain it. He has had a large collection of his pictures which he made on his trip enlarged and mounted, and already there is considerable demand for his lectures. A few of these pictures have been appearing in Autumn Leaves, but they cannot do justice to the fine qualities of the photographs, especially as they appear when enlarged.

The lecture to the priesthood on the 26th was by President F. M. Smith, concerning the necessity for proper correctional methods in relation to community morals. On the afternoon of the 5th the lecture was by Walter W. Smith, on principles of teaching.

A. E. McKim, publicity manager, has secured two months' leave of absence and will accompany his wife, Ruby Short McKim, on a trip to the South, East, and Canada. They will travel in the interests of Sister McKim's newspaper syndicate features for children. They will first visit Galveston, then tour the South on their way East. They plan to visit the branches of the Saints en route. In the meantime all correspondence for the publicity department will be handled by an assistant at the office, or if necessary, forwarded.

The Mount Zion Sunday School has set its Christmas offering aim for this year at $5,000, having raised $4,000 in 1921. Second Independence set the pace in Zion in per capita amount raised, with $1,126 for about 275 average attendance, but they found they were doing it at the expense of efficiency as a school, so they have lowered their aim and increased their school budget. But the teaching and practice of the law of tithing will be stressed, so the total amount raised during the year will perhaps not vary a great deal.

To the home of two very popular leaders among the young in Independence came on the morning of the 5th a baby daughter to reside, who will be known as Lois Jean. Her parents are M. T. and Lottie Williams.

The purchase of sixty acres of land at Forty-third Street and Blue Ridge, a little south of the line between Independence and Kansas City, by Elders J. M. Cockerton and Nathaniel Carmichael for orchard purposes, indicates that fruit raising is considered a real factor in this country. The tract is at present planted about one third to apple trees and the balance will be set. It cost $37,000. Elder Cockerton is an experienced orchardist of Independence, and Elder Carmichael is a specialist in the same line from California.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium during the week ending March 4: Henry Atkinson, Sugar Creek, Missouri; Mrs. Florence Dopp, Lees Summit, Missouri; Mrs. Frank Leap, Blue Springs, Missouri; Mrs. Clifford Forties, Kansas City, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Mary Tucker, Mrs. Arrabelle Gentry, Mrs. F. E. Davis and Baby Davis, Mrs. Pearl Thomas, Miss Iva Davidson, Mrs. Pearl Redford, and Frances McKetrick. X-ray patients: Charles Cachach, Cement City, Missouri; and Chester Auld and Doctor A. M. Boyd, of Independence.

"The Lord demands a true-hearted service from his people," observes Sister Mary A. Ferguson, of Bellair, Illinois. "He demands a family altar in each home. Many homes by neglecting their devotions have brought sorrow into their hearts and lives. Brethren Bruce Brown and Lester Wildermuth have been here for several weeks and two were baptized. Sister Bruce Brown, superintendent of the district Sunday school, is also with us."

Des Moines, Iowa

February 10, 11, 12 were red letter days in the calendar of the Des Moines District. Perhaps few conferences in this or any other district have been of a higher order in attendance and material aspects as well as spiritual values. A long step forward was made when the district decided to hold one conference each year, in the largest branch of the district (Des Moines), the expense to be borne by the district.

Out-of-town delegates numbered between seventy-five and one hundred. These were all cared for, with a few rooms to spare. Thus the Saints are qualifying on one principle mentioned by Paul, "Given to hospitality." An efficient committee prepared the meals (three per day) in the church basement, thus freeing the other sisters to attend the services.

A great deal of credit is due the district presidency for the efficient planning and execution of the work of this conference. Good feeling and fraternal love prevailed throughout. No jar or parting of the ways to mar the peace and happiness of the occasion. On the other hand, great strides were made in saintly fellowship and communion.

An impressive scene, and perhaps the outstanding feature of the conference, was the ordination service of Saturday afternoon. Only at General Conference have we seen its parallel. Thirteen men were ordained. Eight elders, three priests, one teacher, and a counselor to the district bishop. These men will be a tower of strength to the work in this district.

The music added much to the beauty and spirituality of the services. District and local officers worked together to this end. Preaching by John A. Dowker and Elbert A. Smith was of a high order. Brother Smith was with us from Saturday morning 7.15 until the close of the evening service Sunday. His ministry was well received and much good done.

Des Moines Branch feels that it received an impetus from the conference which will mean much in the coming months. We have resumed the various group activities with renewed zeal and courage. Every department seems to have accepted the instructions that we strive to "excel to the edification of the body" as applying to groups as well as individuals and are working to that end.

A. E. WARR, for Press Committee.

Holden Stake

SEDALIA. We have had no services the last two weeks excepting Sunday school and Religio, owing to the sickness of our pastor and others. In addition to a severe attack of influenza, Brother House has been suffering from an inflamed eye.

Brother Roscoe E. Moorman was called to Knobnoster Sunday, the 26th, to administer the ordinance of baptism.

Another addition was made to the church building fund by a "bake sale" held Saturday, the 18th.

MARSHALL. There is a movement on foot to organize a real orchestra. Though this has been a dream in the past, we are in sight of its materializing. We are fortunate in having a competent director in the person of Brother Fred Mollison.

Peoria, Illinois, has an active membership of about forty, and holds regular Sunday meetings. On Friday night the young people meet to practice music and song, under the direction of J. G. Cole. Sunday evening, February 26, a patriotic program was rendered, mostly by the young. They hope to see other activities develop in the near future.

Saint Louis, Missouri

On February 14 was held the branch business meeting. Not a very good attendance, but those of us who were there enjoyed the spirit of unity and voted to have our church building dedicated on May 14 and to have two weeks series of meetings, inviting all the district members to participate.

On February 26 closed one of the best conferences ever held in Saint Louis District. Institute session on Saturday, at which some splendid talks and papers emphasized the "Let's go" idea. It closed with a talk on psychology by Doctor Woodfin, an expert on this subject. The evening session was harmonious. After a crowded Sunday school session, Brother Walter Wehrli spoke in the upper auditorium on stewardships, a meeting was held in the basement for the children. (Two weeks previously Leslie Wight spoke on stewardships.)

At one o'clock the Women's Department held a session, discussing woman's work and duties. At the same hour the priesthood held their usual session.

Inspiring testimonies were borne at the social service in the afternoon and the young people's service in the basement was of high order.

At 6 p. m. Brother C. Ed. Miller discoursed on the text, "These are my mother, my brothers, and my sisters, they that do the will of my Father." He emphasized the fact that we are all animal in our selfishness and only in the gospel of Christ do we rise above the animal tendencies and love one another to the extent that selfishness is overcome—a beautiful thought and the only one that would make for the ideal existence of stewardships.

Musical program at 7.30 under the direction of Brother Ed Bell.

The fact that the crowds grew larger at each session in spite of the inclement weather, speaks volumes for the spiritual condition of our district.

Denver, Colorado

We have been a resident of Colorado for nearly thirty-four years, and in all that time have never experienced so cold a February as the present one. Usually we expect a nice spell of weather in February, but we have been sadly disappointed this time.

Our district conference was not largely attended from outside branches, the weather being too cold to come by auto, and the railroads have not yet reduced their rates to a scale where Latter Day Saints can afford to travel much by that route.

There were a few delegates from the near branches; two of the large branches, Wiley and Wray, were not represented. Business was transacted quickly and pleasantly. The most pleasant part of the sessions was a short call from Elder J. W. Rushton, who spoke for us Saturday night and Sunday morning, when the church was filled to capacity. Those who have heard Brother John before, realize what a treat we had in these two sermons.

The family of our pastor has been sorely afflicted with influenza, all of them being down at once except Sister Williams. At present writing they are convalescing. E. J. has had a hard siege of it, being confined to the house ten days, and is not out yet.

Brother O. E. Sade has passed through another operation at Saint Joseph's Hospital, and has suffered excruciating pain most of the time since; some of the time his mind has wandered because of the pain. We have administered, and hoped and prayed, but seemingly no permanent relief is had, and we wonder why and are led to cry, "How long O Lord? how long?"

Sister Brown, who was injured in an automobile collision two weeks ago, has been taken home from the hospital, and is slowly recovering.

There is to be baptizing again next Sunday.

E. F. SHUPE.

Honolulu, Hawaii

Elder G. J. Waller baptized two Chinese late in January, a lady and a young man. The lady has taught in the Chinese Sunday school years ago, but was prevented from joining the church until she married. She comes into the church with a knowledge of the gospel that would shame some of the Saints who were born in the work.

The Chinese have concentrated their educational work around their religious book for ages, hence the tendency to a concentrated and consecrated study of the word of God.

Sister E. B. Hull organized a circle of Orioles about the middle of January, and Elder Hull reports that the children in Hawaii are more polite, especially with strangers, than any place he has previously labored.

Some Athletics in Zion

We asked Brother Williams, who is in charge of the boys' recreational work at the Stone Church in Zion, what they had been doing, and here is what he says.

The time was, and not so many years ago, either, when it was considered orthodox and all that was necessary in the rearing of a child to well-developed manhood or womanhood to take the boy and girl to church three or four times on Sunday and as many times through the week, keep them in school five days of every seven, and at work what time there was left.

Some are now going to the other extreme, for we are quite sure that many of the young people of to-day fail to go to church as they should and do very little, if any, work.

Efforts have been made in Independence the past few years to develop the youth of Zion along all lines, for surely we have plenty of church privileges. Educational facilities are good, and most of the boys and girls can get work enough, even though they may not all have opportunity to earn money. Yet there are few homes which are unable to furnish some kind of work to keep their children busy a few hours each day.

During the winter the dining hall in the rear of the Stone Church has been given over almost every afternoon and on two evenings of each week to the boys. Most of the time allowed the boys has been used for basketball, this being the most popular sport for winter months.

Early in the fall there were four basketball teams organized from as many Sunday school and Religio classes, these forming a Stone Church league which played and are still playing two games each Saturday evening. A schedule was arranged so that each team played each of the others four games, making twenty-four games in all. The season closes Saturday evening, March 18.

Tuesday evening has been used for practice by the four teams forming the league. The afternoon games have been given to the younger boys for practice and play, probably one hundred boys having been taken care of in that way.

Besides the scheduled games, there have been quite a number of games with teams from Kansas City and near-by towns, the Stone Church teams winning a majority of the games.

One of the best events of the season was a game with the Graceland College team. A picked team from the four Stone Church teams played Graceland, losing the game, but losing it gracefully and glad the boys came.

These games have all been well attended. Many times the crowds could hardly get inside the hall. This was especially true of the Graceland game. There has been no charge for admission, but collections have been taken each Saturday evening to meet the necessary expenses. During the series of young people's meetings at the Stone Church, the hall was closed to all kinds of recreational activities.

While we are not entirely satisfied with results, we feel that good has been done and that we will be justified in making more of an effort along these lines another year.

We hear that already efforts are being made by at least one class to organize a baseball team. We are hoping that places can be found for two or three tennis courts, as several are planning for them.

We are not in any way trying to have these activities take the place of the spiritual or educational part of our work, but we are satisfied that if all are given the proper attention, it is not only possible but highly probable that a well-developed character and body will be the result in each individual case.

M. T. WILLIAMS.

"We are having the hearty cooperation of a noble band of faithful Saints in the Dinuba, California, Branch," writes A. S. Votaw, branch president, who incloses forty cents for the new Priesthood Journal, desiring that he shall not miss a number, especially since it is to carry the lectures to the priesthood. He reports one baptism lately, a noble young man of marked business ability, manager of a large wholesale rubber house in Fresno. They were recently visited by Elder T. Smith, second vice president of the Northern California District. He reports that they have been able to bring their church building debt down to $250, and feel that they have been wonderfully blessed as a branch. He expresses deep interest in the stewardship discussion, as it appears in the church papers from time to time.

We started our Sunday school here in Breckenridge, Missouri, the first Sunday in January, 1921," writes Jessie E. Atkinson, who was then ten years old. "In April, I told them that I wanted to be baptized and two other little girls were baptized at the same time. We started with six members and a family of eight have recently moved here. There are six of us who have not missed a Sunday for fourteen months."

"We have in our branch one elder, two priests, two teachers, and one deacon," writes Mrs. G. C. Simms, from Nowata, Oklahoma. "We have preaching, Sunday school, Religio, prayer meeting, choir practice, and an active Women's Department. We are striving to bring our department up to the standard of excellence. Sister Lula May Duncan, who died February 3, will be greatly missed in this community."

Elder Samuel Wood, pastor of the Fresno, California, Branch, had printed for distribution during the services of Mrs. McPherson, the healer operating in the West, some double cards bearing his name and address, with location of church, and bearing a brief statement of our beliefs, including healing. He was also able to get a half-column report into the Morning Republican concerning his sermon on "The Old Jerusalem Gospel."

Reunion Notices

Western Oklahoma, at Eagle City, at the usual place beginning August 4 and continuing ten days. Let us make this reunion the most successful we have ever held. This will mean that all will begin to arrange their affairs so as to be able to attend the entire ten days. Many wait until the last three days. We might just as well hold a three-day reunion and lighten the expense. Since we have decided to meet for ten days, let us do so. Lemuel D. Dyke, secretary.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Cintha Douglas and Sister Ella Rogers, of Eureka Springs, Arkansas, who are isolated from church privileges, request the prayers of the Saints that they may be healed of their afflictions.

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL TEXAS.—At College Station, February 10 to 12. District President A. J. Banta in charge; W. H. Mannering associate. A letter was read from our missionary, Elder D. S. Palmer, announcing his inability to be present, and informing us of the death of his little daughter, Elma Fay, who died December 21, 1921. A committee consisting of J. M. Clevenger, R. L. Spiller, and A. J. Banta was appointed to draft resolutions of condolence in behalf of the bereaved family. Reports were received from eighteen members of the priesthood, showing that most of them have been actively engaged in the Lord's work. The Sunday School Department elected the following officers: D. A. Fuller, superintendent; J. M. Clevenger, assistant superintendent; Sheldon Armstrong, secretary-treasurer; Sister M. E. Mitchell, chorister; and Mary Beth Mitchell, organist. A resolution was adopted that the Christmas offering hereafter be sent monthly to the Bishop's agent through his regular appointed solicitors. Sheldon Armstrong, secretary.

GALLANDS GROVE.—At Denison, Iowa, February 11 and 12. Ministerial and statistical reports were read. Provision was made for supplying necessary funds for missionary work with the district tent. Lectures were had from Elder O. Salisbury. Cherokee was chosen as the place for the next conference, the time being left to the district presidency. Lena M. Talcott, secretary; J. B. Barrett, president.

March Autumn Leaves

"A factory in a garden" is the leading article in the March number of the church magazine, the first of three articles by T. W. Williams, who sees in the practical demonstration at Bournville, near Birmingham, England, a situation definitely inspirational to us. Each article is well illustrated with fine photographs.

"Some experiences in the Philippines" is the first of a series of articles by "Billie" Carpender (Mrs. S. P.) who spent some time in those islands and also traveled in Japan and China. She tells in a very interesting way of experiences and customs in these lands, and brought back a nice lot of pictures with which the articles are illustrated.

"Pride and porch paint" is a little character sketch by Roy Cheville. It was submitted in last year's story contest at Graceland, and is so well written that when the editor was asked to cut out five lines so the story would go into a given space, he had to admit failure. When an editor whose work is primarily condensation cannot cut down, the author has used his words with effect.

"Why should we be religious?" is a monthly sermonet by J. E. Wildermuth, especially for young people, and affording some very good answers to the universal question.

The departments teem with valuable material. The Parthenon begins a series on pine needle basketry. The Religio Department suggests a wider use of the Religio Quarterlies and a disregard of dates on the lessons, with a summary of the good work the Religio is doing in the Society Islands. The Sunday School Department feature is a list of best books for Sunday school workers and a study of the beginner and primary lessons for the coming month.

The New Zion's Ensign

Launching courageously into the sea of missionary ideals and developments in the church, the new Ensign has made many friends and continues to improve with each number.

Though the local items and miscellaneous church notices have all been dropped, the department of "Missionary news and activities" keeps one in touch with many local places, especially as they manifest the missionary spirit.

The letters inspire one to go and do likewise, while the editorials and articles are evidently contributed with the direct aim of affording a firm foundation upon which to build one's faith.

An appreciated department is "Old-time letters," from the SAINTS' HERALD. At present the selections are dated about 1877, and we notice letters from J. J. Cornish, Heman C. Smith, Myron H. Bond, Charles Derry, and others who were then in the prime of life and very active in missionary work.

The reduction in price to a dollar a year makes the Ensign available to everyone.

Advertising Evil

An editorial in a current newspaper condemns the tendency on the part of reformers to render attractive and interesting the very wrongs they decry so strenuously. This writer suspects that some of these persons find a sort of fascination in dwelling on the morbid and the bizarre and as time goes on the attitude becomes suspiciously overcurious. It is easy to agree that there are easy possibilities in this line, yet from Noah down to our day there have been those who attacked motives and forgot the message. We may expect it to continue till the end of time.

Australasian Conference

The Gospel Standard, of Rozelle, New South Wales, Australia, the mission paper for the church in Australia, carries in its issue of January 2, 1922, a report of the sixth annual conference of the Australasian Mission. Apostle Myron A. McConley, president of the mission, was in charge. Depression in finances has affected the mission, in common with the church in other lands, yet the board of publication showed a net profit of about 300 pounds.

Sister Inez Davis was chosen superintendent of the Sunday school in the mission, in harmony with a recommendation of the general superintendent of the Sunday School Department.

Apostle C. A. Butterworth was not able to be present, so the conference sent a communication expressing appreciation and sympathy. Resolutions were adopted concerning gambling and liquor laws, expressing denunciation of all gambling and opposition to the existing liquor laws of the land.

An excellent series of services was held, to the good of all who attended. Grounds are being sought for erection of conference buildings.

New Quorum Card

The secretary of the Independence Quorum of Elders, Elder Clifton Resch, 1600 West Walnut Street, has worked out and had printed a very convenient record card for filing information concerning each member of a quorum. It is on the usual 3 by 5 inch card and has place for name, telephone number, address, date of enrollment, attendance record covering each year by months from 1922 to 1937, with blanks for recording whether or not annual or semiannual reports have been received or dues paid, with room for remarks, date of release from quorum, cause, and signature of the secretary at time of release. Quorum officials may secure a copy of the card upon request addressed as above, and if it meets their demand, could order any desired amount printed by this office.

Scout Training Keeps the Boys Out of Trouble

Scout training has proved successful in Chicago. Not only in theory, but in practice. Of the 25,000 boys tried by Judge Victor P. Arnold, of the juvenile court, only five were Scouts, and they were arraigned for trivial offenses. Judge Daniel B. Trude declares that no Scout was ever tried in the Chicago boys' court.—Chicago Tribune, March 1, 1922.

Repeating Notices

Frequently we have requests to the effect that certain notices be "run in the next issue and each issue till"—a certain date. It sounds easy, but with our limited space for the increasing demands of the church we cannot well accede to the request. If later items develop concerning an announcement, which deserve publication, write them briefly and send them in. Otherwise, one notice in the HERALD, about the right time, supplemented with letters to the branches or communities most interested, should be a much better way of imparting information.

The Duty of the Church Towards the Morals of To-day

Parents, church officials, community, all have responsibilities in maintaining high moral code.

At the weekly priesthood meeting Sunday afternoon, February 26, President Frederick M. Smith was the speaker. He emphasized the necessity of education or of preparation to teach. He also emphasized the existing moral condition of the world, the evils resulting, the present condition of modern dress, dancing, and automobiles. The United States Government reported, covering a period of a few months, 70,000 cases of illegitimacy, but the saddest factor is that forty per cent of the mothers were fourteen or under.

At the priesthood meeting Monday evening following, (February 27), he again addressed the assembly as urging protective measures, that the group officers do not wait until conditions possibly become bad, but that they see that there is family instruction, that they visit with and advise the young people when they see a possible danger, in a way to protect and help them.

We may add that this responsibility is upon the visiting officers everywhere. To make a case is, of course, the least desirable thing to accomplish. To prevent evil, to help the young people to a higher standard should be our first desire and aim. This instruction, as a rule, can best be given by the parents; but it is also the duty of the church officers to advise from time to time in a kindly way so as to prevent even the appearance of evil.

In the breakdown of moral conditions in the world, we cannot help but feel ourselves more or less affected. The church is the one defense against these unfortunate conditions. Our duty is first to our own people and then to all people everywhere.

We have long thought that this subject has been approached from the wrong angle. It is truly a difficult one to discuss properly. Too much discussion is ill-advised. Public discussion is often unwise. That which is especially needed is that the church should set forth a strong affirmative program, not simply present through its officers that which is ordinarily called social purity, in a discussion of the evils of sin, but give the affirmative teachings of the beauty of right home life.

Our bodies are the temple of God. How holy, then, should we keep that temple that his Spirit may dwell therein! It is true that we are in some ways akin to the animals, but since we are men, we should be more than animals. Through the control of our desires, whether it be in eating or drinking, or in any other way, there comes that sublimation through self-denial to greater intellectual and spiritual, as well as physical power. We cannot prevent the appeal to consciousness from time to time of our physical nature. We can prevent dwelling unduly on that which is not profitable. As some have expressed it, we cannot help a bird alighting in our hair; we can prevent the building of a nest. We cannot prevent an occasional thought; we can prevent its retention.

We are partners with God. The building of the true home is the nearest thing to the divine that we have yet on earth. Right teaching to children and young people, the laying down of fundamental principles, and by this we do not mean that which is sometimes called the teaching of social purity, nor even always the discussion of right family living, but the teaching of right principles, right ideals of honesty, of loyalty, of truthfulness, of physical cleanliness, of worship, and of honor, even in general terms, conduce to right living under all conditions.

It is not only unwise, but foolish to think that our children will not be tempted. By our home life as well as by our instruction we may erect a bulwark of protection for them. There are few, if any, who have never been tempted. In this age the temptations and opportunities have rather increased with the exposure of modern dress, with the facilities of the automobile, and through a general breakdown throughout society in moral restraint. But the solution lies not in forbidding, but in displacing with better ideals and with something better to do.

We have stated that this is a problem to be met by the church officers everywhere. It is also a problem of the home, or we should rather say it is a divine opportunity offered us for right teaching, by example as well as by precept; for the creation, in other words, of right habits and attitudes even more than the inculcation of knowledge, important as the latter truly is.

But it belongs not only to these; it is a work especially undertaken by the Women's Department. It behooves them especially to be up and doing, after sincere prayer for divine direction, so that their work may be as helpful and as healing as is possible.

Through self control, through loyalty and honor, there comes the greatest happiness that belongs to this world. Through perversion there comes only the sins which lead to corruption and death. But our eyes should be turned to the pure and lovely, as the Apostle Paul instructed the Saints in the ages now long past,

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things. Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and the God of peace shall be with you.—Philippians 4: 8, 9.

Evolutionary Faith and Modern Doubts

The ideas on evolution held generally in the eighties are generally rejected by deep thinkers of to-day.

At the recent meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, in Toronto the last of December, Sir William Bateson, of the John Innes Horticultural Institution, of London, and late president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, spoke on evolution. Doctor Bateson has devoted his life to biology. He was one of the principal speakers at the meeting of the association.

We are fortunate in having his address reported in Science for January 20. He says concerning evolution: "I may seem behind the times in asking you to devote an hour to the old topic of evolution. But though that subject is no longer in the forefront of debate, I believe it is never very far from the threshold of our minds."

He continued that he came to Johns Hopkins University in 1883 to do research work studying the development of Balanoglossus. At that time morphology was the principal study, and embryology was considered the very quintessence of morphology, and the one topic of proficient conversation was evolution. But to-day these problems scarcely allow a moment's concern. Forty years ago, we were talking about evolution in connection with the physiology of heredity.

Discussions of evolution came to an end primarily because it was obvious that no progress was being made. Morphology having been explored in its minutest corners, we turned elsewhere. Variations and heredity, the two components of the evolutionary path, were next tried. The geneticist is the successor of the morphologist. We became geneticists in the conviction that there at least must evolutionary wisdom be found. We got on fast. So soon as a critical study of variations was undertaken, evidence came in as to the way in which varieties do actually arise in descent. The unacceptable doctrine of the secular transformation of masses by the accumulation of impalpable changes became not only unlikely but gratuitous. An examination in the field of the interrelations of pairs of well characterized but closely allied "species" next proved, almost wherever such an inquiry could be instituted, that neither could both have been gradually evolved by natural selection from a common intermediate progenitor, nor either from the other by such a process. Scarcely ever, where such pairs exist in nature or occupy conterminous areas, do we find an intermediate normal population as the theory demands. The ignorance of common facts bearing on this part of the inquiry which prevailed among evolutionists, was, as one looks back, astonishing and inexplicable.

The evolutionist of the eighties considered species merely a figment of the mind not worthy of enlightening attention. Then came the Mendelian law and variations, and it was thought that the origin of species was no doubt a similar phenomena.

But soon, though knowledge advanced at a great rate, and though whole ranges of phenomena which had seemed capricious and disorderly, fell rapidly into a coordinated system, less and less was heard about evolution in genetical circles, and now the topic is dropped. When students of other sciences ask us what is now currently believed about the origin of species we have no clear answer to give. Faith has given place to agnosticism for reasons which on such an occasion as this we may profitably consider. . . .

Regardless of the obvious consideration that "modification by descent" must be a chemical process, and that of the principles governing that chemistry science had neither hint, nor surmise, nor even an empirical observation of its working, professed men of science offered very confidently positive opinions on these nebulous topics which would now scarcely pass muster in a newspaper or sermon. . . .

Biological science has returned to its rightful place, investigation of the structure and properties of the concrete and visible world. We cannot see how the differentiation into species came about. Variations of many kinds, often considerable, we daily witness, but no origin of species.

Doctor Bateson continues that new forms of life, new orders, and new species have arisen on the earth. This is shown by palæontology, though even this has been questioned on the grounds that absence of remains does not prove there were no such individuals. However, he considered that we are justified in being confident, and in many instances sure, that new species have arisen.

We are not certain, using certain in the strict sense, that the Angiosperms are the lineal descendants of the carboniferous plants, but it is very much easier to believe that they are than that they are not. Where is the difficulty? If the Angiosperms came from the carboniferous flora why may we not believe the old comfortable theory in the old way? Well, so we may if by belief we mean faith, the substance, foundation of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. In dim outline evolution is evident enough. From the facts it is a conclusion which inevitably follows. But that particular which is concerned with the origin and nature of species remains utterly mysterious. We no longer feel as we used to do, that the progress of variation, now contemporaneously occurring, is the beginning of a work which needs merely the element of time for its completion; for even time cannot complete that which has not yet begun. The conclusion in which we were brought up, that species are a product of a summation of variations, ignored the chief attribute of species first pointed out by John Ray that the product of their crosses is frequently sterile in greater or less degree. Huxley, very early in the debate, pointed out this grave defect in the evidence, but before breeding researches had been made on a large scale no one felt the objection to be serious. Extended work might be trusted to supply the deficiency. It has not done so, and the significance of the negative evidence can no longer be denied.

Darwin touched upon the problem in the origin of species and went to great pains to show that crosses are not always sterile, but if species have a common origin, where did they pick up this incompatibility and sterility which appears to be the tendency with hybrids. Variations can very commonly be distinguished as positive and negative.

Now we have no difficulty in finding evidence of variation by loss. Examples abound, but variations by addition are rarities even if there are any which must be so accounted. We do not even know how the differences of species, often very sharply different, enable the species to make good. The claims of natural selection as the chief factor in the determination of species have consequently been discredited. . . . Of variations we know a great deal more than we did. Almost all that we have seen are variations in which we recognize that elements have been lost.

Doctor Bateson then renews his discussion of 1914, and argues that the barnyard fowls cannot be traced to a common origin. If a round seed be found on a wrinkled variety of pea, no such result could be obtained except by crossing. It may be only superficial and transitory, or may have been produced by some stray pollen. "Nor can I imagine a fern-leaved Primula producing a palm-leaf, or a star-shaped flower producing the old type of sinensis flower. And so on through long series of forms which we have watched for twenty years."

The argument, as previously pointed out, as made in 1914, is the continuation of unit property so that the Jonathan or Grimes Golden apple is merely developed properties which have been dormant in the original wild crab apple; but that you cannot get properties which were not already inherent. A strong argument is made for the permanency and continuity of species, and all through, one by one, the various theories to account for the origin of species are taken up and discredited. Yet Doctor Bateson was raised in evolutionary science, so says, as above quoted, that it is his faith, for evolution was the salt of biology for the time when Doctor Bateson was receiving his education. His attitude all through is scientific, and he closes with a repetition of his belief in the actual mode and processes of evolution, and reaffirming his faith and hope to those enemies of science who accept every such confession as a chance to offer an obscurantist solution. Such, he says, have nothing to suggest that is worth a moment's attention.

But his address very clearly affirms the continuity of species. There are variations, but they are not changes of species nor even the beginning of changes of species. Science is finding that every living thing produces after its kind.

We think we are safe in saying, that while the scientific world of to-day recognizes Darwin as a great teacher, the theories of natural selection, and in fact, the origin of species and the ideas of evolution then held and presented are not held by the thinkers of to-day. Darwin represents a phase of biological science, but appearing at a time when science was becoming popular, his name has been brought more distinctly to the fore. The ideas of evolution then held are quite generally rejected today. Many different theories are now offered.

But while no origin of species has yet been found, it appears even probable in the light of facts that many of these scientists, especially of the older age, those who received their education along in the eighties, yet consider that new species as they appear on the earth are probably the descendants of earlier species, which are now extinct. But it must be recognized that this is a convenient hypothesis for the discussion of the scientific problems, while at the same time we recognize the value of the facts which have been discovered.

A Large Spiritual Family

From a letter to the HERALD we learn that Elder J. J. Cornish was baptized into the church fifty years ago, February 22. He has been a missionary for the church most of that time, going out when he could neither read nor write.

He has baptized more than fifteen hundred people, how many more we do not know, but many of these have in turn come out and baptized others, and we have no doubt but that many of those thousands baptized are also acting in the priesthood of our heavenly Father. So as a spiritual father he views not only his children, those whom he was instrumental in introducing into the family of God, but also the grandchildren and possibly great-grandchildren.

It is certainly a life which must give him joy as he reviews it and the results of his humble efforts under the direction of our heavenly Father. How many thousands there are in the church who are there directly or indirectly through the result of his preaching and baptism and the baptisms conducted by those whom he in turn has baptized we do not, at the present writing, know. But if there is great joy over one soul, how great indeed then must be his rejoicing.

Stewardship

Our Little Minister, the bulletin of the Saint John Universalist Church, of Joliet, Illinois, contains the following:

"The Stewardship Plan

—that is to say the dedication of one tenth of one's income to religion and its good works—is sweeping like wildfire through the other great denominations and is beginning to make steady headway in the Universalist Church."

This is only one out of many such items which are crowding the church press of to-day. The world is thinking about stewardships. The religious world is discussing economic problems. The religious world is considering carefully, "I am my brother's keeper," and hence the conditions under which the working man earns his living.

Of course such analysis, to be fair and successful, must also consider the problem of the employer, the whole of the social problem, with all who are interested in production.

Tithing is being taught and practiced in many churches to-day. Cooperation is also being talked of and taught. When the revelations were given in the thirties, it was not apparent to men in this country that there was a real necessity for cooperation, for there was then an abundance of land. But in Europe, the land had long been the property of a few families, and as early as 1844, the Rochdale Weavers had formed the first cooperative society in Great Britain. We have pointed out before how this small society, meeting for sales once a week in a shed without artificial light, heat, or clerical expense, has grown into an organization doing a business of hundreds of millions in Great Britain, while it has spread over the known world. The cooperative movement is one with which every person concerned with the financial situation should be interested.

To-day, and for some years past, land is at a premium in America. We are coming more and more to see, as citizens, the necessity for social reconstruction. The law given in the thirties is still in force, though the world is moving up, and will soon force us, if we do not voluntarily move forward as a church.

It is doubtless true that mere organization of groups will not effect a remedy. There must be individual conversion. At the same time, the industrial solution of the church is that which will make the most ready appeal to thinking men and women to-day, and it is one of general concern to all those whose eyes are opened to the conditions confronting us throughout the world.

So far, the plan of stewardships as presented by others meets but part of the problem. It aims to take care of the needs of the church—"Every man is a steward unto God." That is true, but the whole plan of stewardships provides not only for the church of God but also for our fellow men, and provides for each one who moves forward with faith in the path the Lord has pointed out. The command is still in force, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God to establish his righteousness, and all these things will be added unto you." Or, as it is expressed in the Sermon on the Mount, in speaking to the ministry, "The Lord knoweth ye have need of all these things," namely of what ye shall eat and what ye shall wear.

Elder F. B. Farr Stricken by Apoplexy

On the evening of March 7, while at dinner, Elder Frederick B. Farr was suddenly and most unexpectedly stricken with apoplexy, from which he expired the same evening. His death is a severe shock, not only to his companion and immediate relatives, but also to his many friends.

Brother Farr was born August 27, 1873, in Shellbrook, Iowa, where he was baptized in August, 1902, by J. R. Sutton, and ordained the following July 26 by A. J. McCoy. On the 28th of February, 1904, he was ordained an elder, also by Brother McCoy, and at the April Conference, 1905, was appointed to labor in eastern Iowa, where he continued until 1910, with the exception of one year, when he was appointed to the Nauvoo District.

In April, 1906, he was married to Ellen Louisa Hills, the daughter of L. E. Hills, and on the 19th of April, 1907, was ordained a seventy under the hands of George H. Hilliard. As a seventy, he continued to labor in the service of the church in northern California, eastern Iowa, Utah, western Oklahoma, and the Panhandle of Texas. He also took an active part in the conventions of the auxiliaries, the Sunday school and Religio, and wrote occasionally for the church papers.

In 1920 he was appointed to northern California as a local minister, but had recently been released on account of the existing financial stringency of the church, he voluntarily becoming self sustaining, practicing dentistry in Independence at the time of his death.

The funeral sermon on Friday, the 10th, was by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, who had been associated with him for several years in the First Quorum of Seventy, and also in mission work in California.

Zion, the Pure in Heart

By W. H. Deam

"My belief in Zion and confidence in the people therein grow daily."

I heard a sister say in prayer meeting recently, "It is wonderful that I have the privilege of living in Zion." This sister came to Zion in the right frame of mind; that is, to profit by all the good she finds, instead of hunting for that which might not be in harmony with some preconceived notion of how everybody and everything should line up. During her temporary sojourn in Zion, she is taking advantage of the opportunities afforded here for adding to her store of knowledge, so that when she again joins with her husband in missionary work she will be better qualified to assist him.

What a difference there is in people! Some are hunting for happiness by appropriating all the good they can find and avoiding that which brings discontent and worry, instead of happiness. On the other hand, some people are always looking for trouble, and they generally find it wherever they go. Some people (few, thanks,) come to Zion, seemingly with a measuring stick and a pair of balance scales with which to measure and weigh all others to see if they come up to their standard, never thinking to apply the test to themselves. If everyone would do likewise, what a disgruntled lot of people there would be in Zion. They certainly would not be pure in heart. (Right here, brother, what are you doing to make Zion the pure in heart?)

With the exception of a few, and the younger generation, the Saints in Zion are composed of people who came from all parts of the United States, Canada, and foreign countries; consequently there are many nationalities and a great variety of customs, manners, tastes, and dispositions to be harmonized to the environments and conditions in Zion and her borders. Taking this into consideration, it is nothing less than wonderful that harmony, unity, and good will will prevail to the extent that may be found, if one makes an effort to look it up.

My work among the groups and in having charge of one of the prayer meetings at the Stone Church gives me a chance to know something of this unity and good will. The faithful ones and the workers are steadily advancing towards perfection and purity of heart, which augurs well for Zion. All meetings are absolutely free from faultfinding; the prayers are earnest and full of devotion; the testimonies are full of love towards God, his cause, and the brethren and sisters.

This is the kind of Saints I come in contact with, although I hear of some faultfinders, and, in fact, in the past I have encountered some, but I don't care to bother with them because they have nothing to do one any good. They should be avoided. They are not helping to build up Zion, nor are they helping to build up the kingdom of God on earth. They are not becoming more spiritual, nor are they making themselves happy, and consequently could not make me happy or make me more devoted to God and his cause. Their talk could not make me pure in heart. If they should do anything in winning me to their way of thinking, it would be to make me grow cold, discontented, and unhappy. Who is the worst, the faultfinder, or the one he finds fault with? By that I do not mean friendly criticism with a Christian spirit.

I believe that as a whole the Saints in Zion are more united, more stable and devoted than any large body of God's people since the city of Enoch went to heaven. There were many faultfinders during the wanderings of the Israelites, and at one time, at least, came very near mobbing Moses. At other periods in the history of that people they were unfaithful and prone to go into idolatry, although they had so many evidences of God's miraculous power from the time they left Egypt up to and during the time of the prophets. In deference to the faultfinders of to-day, I don't suppose they are any worse than those who came near to mobbing Moses.

My belief in Zion and confidence in the people therein grows daily. They are a good people to worship with and they are good to live among. May the cause of Zion be built up and the city made Zion indeed, because the dwellers therein are pure in heart, is my prayer.

Why Consumers' Cooperation

By C. A. Smurthwaite

"Democratic control and ownership of industry is bound to come with the increasing intelligence of the workers."

Experience shows that, to be a success, cooperation must be between consumers.

Wherever producing cooperation has been tried, without the foundation of consumers' cooperation having first been laid, it has been a failure. The reason is simple and obvious.

Whatever its ideals or theory may have been, producing cooperation, unallied with consumers' cooperation, is compelled to sell its products where it can get the most money for them, by reason of having no consumers' market ready at hand. Which is to say, it exploits the consumer.

Who is the consumer? Everybody.

What does exploit mean? It means, in commerce, getting the biggest profit you can.

The purpose of producing cooperation is to get more money for the product: that is frankly the purpose. Naturally, therefore, cooperative production is not favored by consumers, who object to being exploited on a sentimental basis. The result is that the consumer does not cooperate with cooperative production.

Successful cooperative production is carried on by the cooperative consumers themselves, because production is not commenced until the consuming power of the consumers' cooperative equals the minimum at which production can be carried on profitably.

The idea behind consumers' cooperative production is to save for themselves the cost of marketing the product, which is the heaviest charge which the ordinary factory has to pay, and represents a great big margin of profit. This cost consists of advertising, salaries, and expenses of traveling salesmen, and the profits of the jobber or wholesaler in selling to the retail trade. If you will start with one dollar as the unit and add the proportionate costs of all these items, you will be astonished at the resultant figures, probably on an average doubling the manufacturers' prices.

The cost of marketing the goods of a consumers' cooperative factory is eliminated. Their market is already in existence before they commence factory operations. It does not have to be created. The factory is created for the market, not the market for the factory. The cooperative consumers' factory simply writes letters to the cooperative stores advising them that the goods for which the factory was established are now ready, and the stores order the goods. The factory is a separate organization from the stores, but the latter have organized the factory and raised the money for it to do business with. Each store pays cash for what it buys from the factory, therefore the latter can operate with a minimum of capital, and always has money on hand to buy the raw material at the most favorable time and in the most favorable producing areas.

What Is Consumers' Cooperation?

The worker must spend money. It cannot be avoided. He has the choice of buying the necessities of life, food, clothing, furniture, house, etc., at retail prices from the private merchants, or he can put his money with the money of his neighbors and with them spend it in the wholesale market. The latter is called cooperation. It is simplicity itself. It has been successful for three quarters of a century. It is not an experiment. It is a stable form of business, "standardized with mathematical exactness." There need now be no failure.

The benefit of cooperation to the worker is much more than saving money on his purchases. It enables him to get experience in business affairs, in administration, in understanding the intricacies of business. He is placed in the position of the "boss." He learns about the responsibilities of management; he can bring to bear his own experience in the difficult job of making working conditions and wages satisfactory. It is the only real method of democratic control and ownership of industry. There is no way in which this can be achieved except by the cooperation of the workers themselves with themselves. Workers don't want to be put in the position of taking favors from the owners or employers. Any sort of magnanimity on the part of the employer is unsatisfactory to the worker. Democratic control and ownership of industry is bound to come with the increasing intelligence of the workers.

The Social Problem and Its Solution

By E. F. Shupe

If we were to put into effect our theories the social problem would be solved, since it would be a convincing demonstration to the world.

There are many problems agitating the social world, such as religion, marriage, and divorce; trusts, the labor problem, etc., but they all virtually hinge on one: the condition of supply and demand, or the needs of the human family.

When the needs of both the spiritual and physical man are supplied the social problem will have been solved. If man was created with a dual nature, viz, physical and spiritual, and the great Creator was sufficiently wise to bring into existence such a being, then the same was wise enough to formulate laws for his government that if obeyed would perpetuate the conditions intended. The conditions are that all men were created free and equal.

Through disobedience man lost his right to an inheritance, both spiritual and temporal. Had he remained faithful to the trust imposed, to replenish and subdue, and have dominion over all this great creation, trusts and monopolies could not now or at any time have an existence. Man voluntarily surrendered his dominion, and will only through voluntary obedience regain his right to that surrendered.

Man, though he may be intelligent enough to conceive of a better condition than now exists, yet the influence that predominates in his nature (viz, selfishness,) is such that it is impossible for him to bring this better nature to bear upon a sufficient number of the race to put into effect his Utopian ideas. "To whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey."

We must rise above the thought of "me and my wife and my son John and his wife." The earth was made for man, in the generic sense. Governments are for the many, not for the few, and while the gospel may not convert the majority, yet the principles contained in its teachings will revolutionize the governments of the whole world, and all the rewards will be given and the different glories be under the dominion of our Lord and his Christ according to the gospel.

The dominating principle of civilized peoples is that the benefits of the few must be subordinate to the many. That corporation, body of men, or society, that monopolizes an industry or controls the great part of it, and puts restraint on legitimate competition is illegal, and was not intended from the beginning. For years man has in his own strength fought these monopolistic conditions with the result that monopolies and trusts have grown stronger. Then with these conditions facing us, why not try a higher and better law, even if only as an experiment? "Bring ye all your tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it, and I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruit of your ground: neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts, and all nations shall call you blessed, for you shall be a delightsome land."

"Ye are the light of the world, a city that is set upon a hill whose light cannot be hid." Are we?

Already the law of equality as taught by the Church of Jesus Christ is beginning to bear fruit in other religious bodies; many of them are teaching the law of tithing as the best means of finances.

I fully believe that if the hundred thousand people holding membership in the church we represent would at once put into effect the whole law of God, in less than ten years the social problem would be solved. The success would be so great the world could not resist the effects and would be forced to join in with us.

Money is not desirable for what it is, but for what it will purchase. It is also an error to regard as wealth such things as mortgages, bonds, stocks, and the like. These are simply indications of wealth which exists in another form. These are signs, not substance. It is also an error to exclude from the list of the things that make up wealth a song, speech, or other things that are not tangible or durable.

The law of equality provides that every man shall have a home, and those things which will make him and his comfortable; when that condition is reached, is he not rich? The time is to come when all are to sit under their own vine and fig tree, when they shall long enjoy the work of their own hands. Can this condition be brought about by any other law than that of the celestial kingdom, or gospel law? We think not.

"But who shall be called my Zion? my habitation? and through whom shall I execute my purposes? where shall my hand find its weapons of execution and its instruments for performance? Shall it not be among those whose hearts are found pure and whose eyes shall be single? Yea, verily: Stand ye, therefore, in holy places, and if ye will enjoy my intelligence, be ye mine and mine only: for such is your agreement."

Will we do it?

The Prospects of World Peace

By A. B. Phillips

Short sermon by radiophone, Sunday evening, February 12, 1922, Independence, Missouri.

A long time ago a man who was reputed to possess great wisdom uttered a truth of such meaning and importance that it should be graven in the hearts of the people of every nation on earth. It is a truth which applies to the needs and conditions of private or social life, and also to those of national and international affairs as well. It may be found in the seventh and eighth verses of the sixteenth chapter of Proverbs, which says: "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him. Better is a little with righteousness than great revenues without right."

Solomon had reaped as a part of his heritage from David some of the experiences resulting from war. That he endeavored to profit by these experiences is shown in the fact that he was a man of peaceful dealings with his neighboring nations. He was therefore particularly qualified to speak on a subject that is to-day of greater moment than all other international questions combined. The wisdom of his unbiased but friendly counsel has been accentuated by the history of practically every nation of importance throughout the centuries that have since then elapsed, and his words to-day constitute a real basis upon which enduring peace may be made possible in the world.

The inexpressible horrors of the greatest and most sanguinary conflict ever known have awakened the nations as never before. We have learned something of its awful conditions and something of its consequences, but its cost, as well as its moral and physical effects, must in large measure be handed down to our posterity as a part of their unwelcome though inescapable heritage. And we are now in the midst of an endeavor to avert future calamities of such magnitude, an endeavor inspired by the hatred of its results as sensed in irreparable loss and shock to moral consciousness.

To what extent the fear or dread of war actuates the situation to-day may not be easy of determination, though that it constitutes a considerable factor can hardly be doubted. But the dread of war is one thing, and hatred of underlying attitudes and aims that breed war is something quite different. It is more important to know what lies deep down in the heart of the world. A large portion of it is sick of war, it is true; but is it sick of the evils, the unrighteousness, the effects of which are incentives to war? Those who maintain or acquiesce in the conditions that breed envy and hatred help to sow the seeds of conflict.

The world does not yet see eye to eye in regard to the principles essential to the stabilizing of peace. The hearts of nations beat more or less diversely, and antagonism is often but thinly veiled if veiled at all. A misconception of self-interests grows out of selfishness, and a broader concept is beclouded or set aside for policies which have resulted in the wars of the past. While there is recognition of and respect for the rights and the welfare of others, the destructive weeds of war cannot thrive. This attitude is the groundwork of world peace, as well as of national and communal tranquillity. The world is full of precepts of unquestioned truth and merit, but though they may fall freely from the tongues of men, the question is forced upon us as to whether or not they are clearly sensed. More important still is the inquiry: Are they assimilated so as to actuate the purposes of life?

The prospects of world peace depend upon what is in the heart of the world and in the hearts of those who occupy the executive posts of national governments. And these in turn depend upon the principles that are instilled therein and maintained by environmental influences. Unless these are favorable peace cannot long be preserved. Treaties, however carefully drawn and whatever their sanctions, will be broken when emergency strains the ties of brotherhood and the heart no longer responds to the call of the larger humanity. Thus have treaties been changed, annulled, or broken since time began. Thus have hopes been crushed and the most worthy efforts brought to naught, because the foundations were not sufficiently secured for future years as well as for the present. The immediate or obvious causes of war are not usually, if ever, the real or fundamental causes, which lie in the depths of human character. If these, the primary factors, are not removed or modified, what may we hope for except a repetition of this devastating scourge? These underlying causes of war must be determined in order that its repetition may be made impossible.

To insure future peace we must do something more than sit back with a sigh of relief, when we hear that new treaties for the preservation of peace have been signed. The world has witnessed many treaties of peace, but they have not, save for a time, prevented war. We must with brotherly devotion uproot the weeds of selfishness and strife that spring up in the human heart, from which arise antagonistic interests, conflicting ethical viewpoints, national atmospheres, and discordant governments; and with a broader charity we must awaken the nobler responses among all nations, kindreds, and tongues. We must, in a true sense, be brothers to all the world. To establish this relationship must bring immeasurably better fruitage than will follow acts of selfishness and aggression, and its benefits will endure as long as the actions producing them continue. The time is now opportune for us to combine to sow the seeds of concord and uprightness in the hearts of our children and children's children, and by so doing the lesson that lies heavily upon us to-day need not be in vain.

The eyes of the world have been turned with hope, mingled with anxiety, towards the arms conference at Washington, recently adjourned. But whatever good may result from the efforts there put forth must be stabilized by the disposition of all to support the ideals and principles of peace if that peace is to endure, for it is not a plant which grows to full maturity in sterile soil. The priceless flower of peace unfolds to perfect bloom only when its roots are nourished in the hearts of men. Candor, and not deception, must characterize the world that would enjoy the blessings of peace and good will. An attitude that pretends what we do not intend shall soon or late be laid bare, and as inevitably react to the shame of the deceiver, as in the case of the parson who informed a friend that his congregation consisted of a lot of asses, but a bit later acknowledged his relationship by addressing his congregation in honeyed tones as "Dear brethren."

Our attitude towards the nations of the world must be genuine and sincere if we would profit by the terrible experiences of the past. But it must be something more than an attitude of quiescence with respect to the development of peace-loving principles in the thoughts of the world. The machinery of educative influences must be put in operation and backed up by such deeds as prove the integrity of our purpose. By so doing the heart of the world may be won and uplifted, and security and happiness may be enjoyed by ourselves and by the generations to come.

Roger Williams and the First Baptist Church in America

By F. M. Ball

Quotations from authentic history.

Believing it might be of interest to our readers to know something about the rise of the first Baptist Church, we quote from authentic history (American Church History, by A. H. Newman, D. D., LL. D., professor of Church History in McMaster University, of Toronto, page 79). Speaking of Roger Williams he says:

Accordingly about March, 1609, two years after his banishment, he repudiated the baptism he had received in infancy, and was immersed by Ezekiel Holliman, who before he left Massachusetts, had a strong inclination toward Baptist principles. Williams then proceeded to baptize Holliman and eleven others. Thus was founded the first Baptist church in the New World.

That Roger Williams left the Baptist Church he had organized, on the same page we have the following:

It is, of course, a matter of regret to Baptists that Roger Williams was not able to rest in what he had done in the direction of restoring the ordinances whose valid administration had, in his opinion, been lost through apostasy.

Notice now he begins to doubt the authority by which he had started the Baptist Church. Like John Smyth, the founder of the English General Baptists, he soon began to doubt the warrantableness of thus introducing anew believers' baptism.

He had no question whatever as to the proper subjects on the act of baptism. The only question that concerned him was that of the validity of the administration. If the church had never apostatized, believers' baptism would have been continued and would have been obligatory. But the ordinance having been lost, he doubted whether it could be restored apart from a special (miraculous) divine authorization.

In his old age (1676), in his writings against the Quakers, referring evidently to the Baptists who by this time had greatly increased in numbers and influence both in England and America, he remarks:

After all my search and examinations and considerations . . . I do profess to believe that some come nearer to the first primitive churches and the institutions and appointments of Christ Jesus than others. If my soul could find rest in going into any of the churches professing Christ Jesus now extant, I would readily and gladly do it.

On page 82, the writer goes on to say, speaking of Roger Williams:

We may be sure that if he had seen his way to the founding of a denomination more apostolic than the Baptists, and with ordinances administered more authoritatively, he would not have contented himself with the one experiment but would have gone forward to embody in practice any new light attained: that he would have sought either to convince his Baptist brethren that something was lacking to the completeness of their apostolic standing or to win others to his supposedly more apostolic and authoritative position.

That the principle of the laying on of hands was taught and practiced in the early Baptist Church, is evident from the statements of this same writer on church history. On page 86, he says,

From a remark in one of Williams's letters, it would seem that some members of the community had adopted radical views, involving universalism such as the denial of the reality of hell, etc., but the chief matter of controversy was the doctrine of the imposition of hands. Roger Williams himself laid considerable stress upon this rite, and placed it alongside of baptism and the supper as following the former and a condition of properly receiving the latter. In England as in America, the laying on of hands was the occasion of much controversy, those who advocated it regarding it not merely as an appropriate symbol of the receiving of the Holy Spirit, which might be employed or dispensed with, but as a foundation principle which could by no means properly be set aside.

Again, on page 82, we find this statement made of Roger Williams:

The two first principles and foundations of true religion or worship of the true God in Christ are repentance from dead works and faith toward God before the doctrines of baptism or washing and the laying on of hands.

On page 85, we again have a statement of the belief and practice of the laying on of hands in the early history of the Baptist Church. We read:

William Wickenden, Gregory Dexter, and Chad Brown seem to have united with the church soon after its organization and to have held to Arminian views, along with the Arminianism imposition of hands after baptism as an indispensable qualification for fellowship.

In regard to one of these men, Roger Williams wrote in 1669, "As that noble spirit, now with God, Chad Brown." (Page 95.)

Much might be said and comment made in regard to this first Baptist Church in America. We let the reader draw his own conclusions. Suffice to say the origin was some different than the marvelous work and a wonder by the hands of a messenger from God in the year of 1830.

The Law and the Gospel

By H. J. Davison

The decalogue versus the gospel covenant.

Paul had some adroit, logical, and convincing methods of drawing the lines of distinction between the ten commandment covenant and the gospel covenant, both in regard to their respective powers, and also to time limitations, which in our day seem by many not to be understood. One of these arguments is found in Romans 7.

First, he strikes out by reminding those who knew the law regarding matrimony that the woman is bound to the husband so long as the husband lives. But when the husband dies she is free, and can become the wife of another. Just so with the Hebrew people. They were bound to the Mosaic covenant so long as that covenant was alive, i. e., in force. After that, they were free to marry (become wedded to) another covenant; even Christ, or the Christian covenant. Therefore, he says in verse 4: "Wherefore my brethren ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ: that ye should be married [wedded or covenanted] to another, even to him who is raised from the dead."

Again in verse 6: "But now we are delivered from the law that being dead wherein we were held."

To show that Paul did not have reference merely to the outward ordinances of the Jewish church, he says in verse 7: "For I had not known lust except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet."

Where was that law found? In the tenth commandment of the decalogue. And was not that a good law, or commandment? It certainly was—much better than no law. There were many fine sickles and scythes in the grainfields once, and they are good yet for those who know nothing about the use of the self-binder. But who that has learned the use of the higher precepts of the gospel, has any need of that commandment? One can find just as good as that in our statutory laws, with perhaps a better ministration.

But to be wedded to a higher covenant, that has in it precepts covering not only the commandment as given, but the formation of the character which precludes the necessity for the commandment itself, is to be beyond that covenant and its administration, which is called the administration of death. So Paul says we are free from that law.

Not only that, but he recognizes yet another law, even the law of sin found in his human make-up; which working with the old commandment, slew him. And unless that be overcome he must remain dead—spiritually. And the worst of it was he could find no way out of the dilemma—no way out from under that body of death under the old covenant.

But in the gospel covenant he finds it possible to be made free even from that law of sin in his own members as well as from the sin committed. In chapter 6 he says: "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ [the gospel covenant] were baptized into his death?" That is, death to sin.

And in verse 8: "Now if ye be dead with Christ [that is to say, dead to the sins that are past] we believe that we shall live with him."

Here in a nutshell is the law for getting out from under the penalty of sins committed, which under the law slew Paul. But what of the law in his members that might cause him to sin some more? Paul rejoiced in the fact that he could be made free even

Stewards of God and the People

Pointed paragraphs from Christianity and the Social Crisis, by Walter Rauschenbusch.

The most fundamental evils in past history and present conditions were due to converting stewardship into ownership.

Christianity certainly has more affinity for cooperative and fraternal institutions than for competitive disunion.

The force of religious spirit should be bent towards asserting the supremacy of life over property.

In a savage community we have robbers and bandit chiefs; in a civilized community we have a parasitic class who live in idleness and splendor by converting to their own use some kind of intrusted wealth or delegated power. "Grafting" is a highly perfected modern sin.

As the monopoly value of farm land increases, it will be a more profitable form of investment for huge industrial capital anxiously seeking investment.

Our rich men will become large owners of agricultural lands. In time we shall have three layers of population on the land, as in England and East Germany—the great proprietor, the tenant farmer, and the agricultural laborer—and that means poverty and ignorance in the country.

If the twentieth century could do for us in the control of social forces what the nineteenth did for us in the control of natural forces, our grandchildren would live in a society that would be justified from that, and so he says, in chapter 8, verse 2: "For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus [What is the law of the spirit of life in Christ but a life actuated by the love of God as manifest in Jesus?] has made me free from the law of sin and [of course its consequences] death."

So not only was Paul made free from the Mosaic law, wherein he was formerly held, by the gospel, but also from the law of sin in his members which caused the former covenant to be an administration of death. No wonder he wrote: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ."

in regarding our present social life as semibarbarous.

The first apostolate of Christianity was born from a deep fellow feeling for social misery and from the consciousness of a great historical opportunity.

The situation is repeated on a vaster scale to-day. If Jesus stood in the midst of our modern life . . . he would create a new apostolate to meet the new needs in a new harvest-time of history.

Theological heretics are rarely persecuted now. The only rival of God is mammon, and it is only when his sacred name is blasphemed that men throw Christians to the lions.

The splendid ideal of a fraternal organization of society cannot be realized by idealists only.

The idealistic movement alone would be a soul without a body; the economic class movement alone would be a body without a soul. It needs high elation and faith that come through religion.

Christian principle and brotherly association must be allied with the working class. Each depends upon the other.

The Christian Church could make a splendid contribution to the new social justice if it assisted in pointing out the latent public rights and in quickening the conscience of stewards who have forgotten their stewardship.

Every man who holds wealth or power is not only a steward of God, but a steward of the people.

Foreign Financial Affairs

Our readers may be mystified by the news dispatches emanating from various foreign points as to the economic conditions actually prevailing. We may well be interested in economic conditions in this and other lands, as they have much to do with the possibilities in our missionary program as well as furnishing us the essential cultural poise to give us breadth of vision and intelligence concerning the world in which we live.

The HERALD editors receive twice each month a finance bulletin from a large stocks and bond house in New York City which specializes in foreign securities. They frankly present the brightest side with a view to encouraging investment in that sort of securities. Their presentations may be prejudiced, but perhaps no more so than the same class of information from other sources. So we print the following from Foreign Topics for February 23, 1922, issued by L. L. Winkelman & Company, purely as a matter of general interest and not as investment information.

During 1921, nine hundred new companies formed in Germany. Production costs are going up sharply with advancing wages the principal factor. For December, 1921, the trade balance was favorable. Heavy exports of manufactured goods are noted. Coal production is considerably above the same period last year. The commercial treaty has been concluded with Portugal. German manufacturers have advanced a credit to the Russian soviets of 100,000,000 marks. Heavy machinery and equipment orders from Poland are being filled. Control of the Rhenische Dye Extract and Tanning Company, of Benrath, has been secured by English interests.

Czecho-Slovakia. Despite steadily increased petroleum output, there is a great scarcity of this commodity. The Standard Oil Company expects to intensify drilling operations in the Government-owned fields at Gebly. A commercial treaty with Russia may be signed shortly. This does not imply Soviet recognition. In 1921 there was a favorable balance of exports and an increase in gold reserve with outstanding circulation of paper money not increasing.

England. It appears that the international financial center, held since war time by New York City, is being transferred to London. The opportunity to make the dollar the international unit of exchange instead of sterling has not been taken advantage of. The oil trade at Liverpool is expanding rapidly. State docks and tank sites have been prepared. Most of the largest oil-producing companies in the world have erected storage tanks at this point.

Argentine. Railway construction is active. Crop prospects are excellent. Peso exchange is strengthening and there is renewed buying in all lines. Commodity prices are going down and bank rates are lower. Foreign capital is coming into the country in increasing amounts. The budget is expected to balance for the coming fiscal year. Strikes are decreasing and the labor situation is fairly quiet. Bond prices of both internal and external issues are mounting. Unusually large shipments of summer fruit to the United States are being made.

Mexico. President Obregon has vetoed the special state tax on the oil industry. Such taxation is to be Federal only. The retail toy trade is supplied almost exclusively by German manufacturers. Round trip fares on Mexican railroads are greatly reduced to encourage tourist traffic. Banks rapidly increasing deposits. A decrease in petroleum production is predicted, which should cause crude oil prices to advance to the benefit of both the operating companies, stockholders, and the treasury department. Recognition by the United States appears an early probability. Extraordinary good crops are anticipated.

Italy. Sugar production for 1921 was 78,000 metric tons above 1920. A machine for unreeling silk has been perfected by an Italian silk expert. This may revolutionize the industry. During the last quarter of 1921, imports of cotton reached 24,800 metric tons, a decline of 13,000 tons from the same period in 1920. Financial conditions are improving through rigid governmental economies. Electric power is to be transmitted from Switzerland. Note circulation is decreasing.

Austria. The Alpine Montan Gesellschaft, one of the large iron and steel companies, is increasing its output, and making extensive enlargements to its plants. Tin sheets are exported on a considerable scale. Heavy exports of iron and steel work are being made to Roumania. Trade with that country is mostly carried on through Poland.

France. Iron industry conditions are improving steadily. The Government's financial position, while poor, is fairly well in hand. We may expect continual improvement. Subsidies in the form of greatly reduced railroad rates are being granted to exporters.

Poland. There was a marked reduction in new money issued during January. Internal price changes are holding a fairly stable level. Strikes have practically been eliminated. A trade treaty with France has been signed.

Russia. Banking connections have been formed between the State bank and New York bankers. Remittances payable in Soviet rubles can be forwarded to Russia. The Bolshevik press places the population as of July 1, 1921, at 130,707,600.

A further sidelight is thrown on conditions on the Continent of Europe in an article in the Appeal to Reason (a socialist paper). This article states that more than two trillion rubles are now in circulation in Russia. This is much the largest circulation of any nation on earth. It provides a method of taxation. The government, needing money for supplies, to purchase the produce of the farmer or peasant, to pay its debts, does so by the simple device of printing more paper money. This money is issued against the general wealth of the country. The fact, however, is that with this increased circulation there follows at once a decline in the value of the ruble, so that it is less valuable in the hands of the seller than it was at the time the sale was transacted. So indirectly the peasant class are taxed for the support of the government.

The peasants uphold the Bolshevik government for the reason that they now have the actual possession of the land, which they did not have before. Also comparatively few are able to see through this method of taxation.

According to Mr. Foster in this socialist article, it now takes thirty thousand rubles to equal one dollar, though the par value of the metal ruble is fifty-one cents.

This method of indirect taxation has also been applied generally in Continental Europe, though not to the same extent as in Russia. That is, the various governments have issued paper money against the wealth of the country instead of levying taxes to meet the expenses of the war. The result has been invariably a decline in the value of the national currency, so that the German mark has been as low as one twentieth of par value. The French franc has been down to about one fourth or one fifth of par, though both now show recovery.

The money of neutral nations, as Sweden and Switzerland, has remained close to par. England

Consecration and Stewardships

By W. A. France

We must be organized according to the law or be cut off.

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose.

And it shall come to pass that after they are laid before the bishop of my church, and after he has received these testimonies concerning the consecration of the properties of my church, that they cannot be taken from my church, agreeable to my commandments; every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, 9.

We see by this that when a man consecrates he does it with a covenant and a deed that cannot be broken. They are laid before the bishop; he receives these testimonies (covenants and deeds), and they, the properties, cannot be taken from the church. Then the property is deeded to the church. Every man is made a steward over the property that was his own or that he has received by consecration. If he has not consecrated enough for himself and family, he shall receive from the church sufficient for himself and family.

Paragraph eleven tells us that if he sins and does not repent he shall be cast out of the church, and shall not receive again that which he has consecrated. He cannot receive it because he has deeded it unto the church.

Now turn to section 51: 1:

Hearken unto me, saith the Lord your God, and I will speak unto my servant Edward Partridge, and give unto him directions; for it must needs be that he receive directions how to organize this people, for it must needs be that they are organized according to my laws, if otherwise, they will be cut off; wherefore let my servant Edward Partridge, and those whom he has chosen, in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and has attempted to meet the expense by heavy taxation and as a result the English pound has never declined more than one third or one fourth, and is now over 90 per cent of par value.

their wants and needs; and let my servant Edward Partridge, when he shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion, that he shall hold it, even this right and this inheritance in the church, until he transgresses and is not accounted worthy by the voice of the church, according to the laws and covenants of the church, to belong to the church; and if he shall transgress, and is not accounted worthy to belong to the church, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and needy of my church; therefore he shall not retain the gift but shall only have claim on that portion that is deeded unto him. And thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of my church.

This harmonizes with section 42. Every man must have enough for his family and his wants and needs, and the bishop is here instructed to give him a writing, securing unto him his portion until he transgresses. He is made a steward over this, as stated in section 42, and when he is no longer worthy to belong to the church this stewardship is taken from him. If he had a deed the church could not take it from him, but he could hold it whether he left the church or not. However, there is a portion deeded to him (his inheritance or home) that he can keep even if he should leave the church.

Now let us see how the Prophet through whom these revelations came understood the law. Turn to Church History, volume 1, page 300. Here we find some instructions to the bishop by the president of the church and signed by the three members of the Presidency, as follows:

Brother Edward Partridge. Sir: I proceed to answer your questions concerning the consecration of property. First, it is not right to condescend to very great particulars in taking inventories. The fact is this: a man is bound by the law of the church to consecrate to the bishop before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion; and this, too, without constraint; and unless he does this, he cannot be acknowledged before the Lord, on the church book: therefore, to condescend to particulars, I will tell you that every man must be his own judge how much he should receive, and how much he should suffer to remain in the hands of the bishop. I speak of those who consecrate more than they need for the support of themselves and their families.

The Prophet here states that a man is bound by the law of the church to consecrate to the bishop before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion or be acknowledged before the Lord on the church book. He is to consecrate without constraint, and put all into the hands of the bishop. Then there is to be a decision made as to how much he is to receive back, and how much is to remain in the hands of the bishop. This refers to those who consecrate more than they need for themselves and their families. If they had not enough to support them before they turned it over to the bishop, there would be no question as to how much should remain in the bishop's hands, for he would have to receive back all he had consecrated and more, for every man should have enough for the needs of himself and family.

Further, on the same page he says: "Therefore, those persons consecrating property to the bishop in Zion, and then receiving an inheritance back, must show reasonably to the bishop that he wants as much as he claims."

From these revelations and the teaching of the Prophet through whom they came, it seems very plain that when consecration is complied with according to the law, every person will deed to the church, or bishop, all his property, and then receive back his inheritance, which would naturally be his home. This he has a deed to from the bishop. This deed will not be any more legal according to the laws of the land than the deed he had before he consecrated to the church, but receiving it from the bishop will show that he has received it by consecration. This portion the church cannot take from him even though he should transgress and not be worthy to belong to the church, but the portion he receives for the needs of himself and family, the property he makes his living from, his stewardship, to this he receives a writing, not a deed, but certificate, entitling him to hold it until he transgresses. Then he has no further claim on it, because the church or the bishop holds the title. It is claimed that in the early days of the church stewardships were held by deeds to the individuals. This may have been, but the Lord says, "It must needs be that they be organized according to my law. Otherwise they shall be cut off." Were they not cut off and the church rejected? Shall we go through the same experience again, or shall we stick to the law?

 Look to the Day,
 For it is Life, the very Life of Life;
 In its brief course lie all the Verities
 And Realities of your existence.
 The bliss of Truth, the glory of Action—
 The splendor of Beauty.
 For Yesterday is but a dream
 And To-morrow is only a vision;
 But To-day,
 Well lived, makes every Yesterday
 A dream of happiness
 And every To-morrow a vision of Hope;
 Look well, therefore, to the Day—
 Such is the salutation of the Dawn.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Southern Viewpoint

When the request came for farm women to state their needs so the Women's Department could best serve them, I wondered what the response would be. The farm woman's needs, what are they? They are as varied as her environment. There is as wide a range of strata in the development of farm women as there is among women of the city. They can no more be all lumped together and given one prescription as a panacea for their ills than could the women in a city ranging from the elite to the dwellers of the slums.

"'Tis true 'tis pity, and 'tis pity 'tis true" that there is a deplorable lack of good feeling between city people and people of the country. It is unnecessary, and all suffer loss from it. While the most of my life has been spent in the country, some of my dearest friends lived in cities. I never thought of them as city folk, but just as very congenial companions, and they, I am sure, viewed me in the same light. They were kind enough to let the fact that I was not as "up to date" as they in some respects pass as immaterial.

Lack of understanding is the cause of this discord and it is not only between city people and country people, but between the different classes everywhere. "One half the world does not know how the other half lives" and, as a rule, lacks interest enough to try to see the other's viewpoint. What we need to stress most of all (and, I think our church is making great efforts in that line,) is the universal brotherhood of man. We must strive for a sympathetic understanding of our brothers and sisters, it matters not what their nationality, whether rich or poor, bond or free. The class spirit must be abolished and the duty of those who have had a few more advantages than others less fortunately placed, is to go more than half way in trying to disarm suspicion and misunderstanding. Of him, "to whom much is given much is required." This spirit is being beautifully exemplified, I think, in many of the young folk at Graceland who are taking training for service, to minister to the wants of the world both spiritually and temporally. Let us sisters be not too far behind these clear-eyed and unselfish young people. In spite of wide differences we are all "sisters under the skin" whether our lot has been cast with the colonel's ladies or the Bridget O'Gradys of life.

But to get back to suggestions that could help farm women: my idea would be to give a varied program, something that would be useful to people in all walks of life. Then each woman, farm or otherwise, could select the material suited to her needs.

Some, like "A mother in the country" in a late HERALD, will require intellectual food, something to lift them above the drab realities of life. I can sympathize with her, for I well know how deep that yearning can be and how barren life seems if it must go long ungratified. But there are others who need help much worse—those with whom this craving is just in embryo form, whose lives have been so circumscribed that this longing has had no chance for development. As Whittier so understandingly puts it, one who is "filled with a vague unrest

And a nameless longing filled her breast
For something better than she had known."

Loaning good books and magazines to such people often does wonders in developing latent abilities.

Some farm women can meet with others in club work. For these the way is open to do many interesting things. There are others who are isolated among folk who do not yet seem ready for any progressive movement. It is that way here. I have shown some of the farm bureau programs for farm women's clubs to some neighbor women, but they did not seem interested. The farm demonstration agents have succeeded in getting clubs started in some near-by sections, but so far could get no foothold here. One woman told me they needn't come around her with any of their child welfare work; she could take care of her children without any help from them. I replied that Uncle Sam had been spending vast sums for years for pigs', calves', and chickens' welfare and I thought it was time he did something for children now. I added that if I had a child, I should think its welfare was of as much importance as that of any calf or pig, and should want to do all I could for its development. I reminded her that up-to-date farmers were careful to give balanced rations to their stock, and I should want my child to have a properly balanced ration also. I have frequently had a chance to put in a word for the children this way by comparing their well-being to that of stock, and women will assent to that when they would disagree with me if I were to advocate the work of the welfare workers. One has to tread very, very carefully in such matters, for many are quick to resent any "interference in their affairs," as they express it. But, oh, those are the very ones who need help the most. The woman who resented the child welfare movement so much was pronounced to have pellagra within a year from the time she was speaking to me! And there is no excuse for pellagra here, as even the renters and sharecroppers are all allowed all the garden they will care for, and usually a cow and chickens also if they want them.

About all that an outsider, as they call a person not a native, can do is to loan good books and magazines to those who are groping towards the light, and drop a few remarks that may help the more open-minded to view things from a different angle. Meanwhile many of the girls are marrying at from fourteen to sixteen years of age, and greatly need instruction.

I don't remember of talking with a farm woman in this section who was in favor of women voting. They condemn it as unwomanly and claim woman's place is in the home, and that the rearing of children is the highest sphere to which a woman should aspire. I sometimes tell them that we all admit that to be the case, but remind them that since a woman who wants to follow any other calling must spend from several months to years in training or qualifying for her position, that it must also require some training to properly equip a woman for motherhood. A mere child who should still be in the public school is not competent for this high calling. She is then in the most critical time in her life and needs careful watching over herself. When put in this light they will usually agree with the sentiment.

But the leaven is working. The past ten years has seen much improvement and the sentiment for education is much stronger than it used to be. It seems to me state-wide consolidated schools would help backward sections more than any other one thing, for as a rule the schools in such places are very poor, and often last but four or six months a year. Even that amount is given in two-month terms, so the children can work in the cotton fields.

I fear I have written too lengthily, but have presented the situation as seen by one

SOUTHERN FARMER'S WIFE.

To My Wife

By W. E. Emerson, Pisgah, Iowa

(The first stanza was written by the author twenty years ago, when he was a mining prospector, alone on the mountains in the distant West. It was sent as a part of a love missive to the Iowa sweetheart who later became his wife, and to whom the poem is now dedicated.)

I'm only a miner lad in a dirty little shack,
And as I sit in this lonely place
My thoughts will wander back,
To the distant scenes of my boyhood days,
Past and gone beyond recall,
And to a sweet maid with golden curls
Whom I still love the best of all.

Long years have passed since first I penned those lines to you,
But all the way you have walked by my side,
Steady and stanch and true.
Stony has been the way, your burden hard to bear;
But patiently you have carried your load,
Trusting to God in prayer.

Four times you entered the vale and traveled that shadowy way,
That you might bring forth those joys to us
Which no human hand can stay.
Loving and tender care you've given their whole lives through,
Asking not that they ever should know
The cost they have been to you.

We have crossed life's "great divide," and started our downward way,
And threads of silver have entered the gold
That reflected the sun's bright ray.
All the reward I ask, when this life's great battle is o'er,
Is that I may be worthy to walk by your side,
When we reach the other shore.

Hymns of Nature

The heavens declare the glory of God;
And the firmament sheweth his handiwork.
Day unto day uttereth speech,
And night unto night sheweth knowledge,
There is no speech nor language
Where their voice is not heard.
Their line is gone out through all the earth,
And their words to the end of the world.
The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice;
Let the multitude of isles be glad.
The heavens declare his righteousness,
And all the people see his glory.

He telleth the number of the stars:
He calleth them all by their names.
He covereth the heaven with clouds,
He prepareth rain for the earth,
He maketh grass to grow upon the mountains.
He giveth to the beast his food,
And the young ravens which cry.
He giveth snow like wool:
He scattereth the hoar frost like ashes.

He casteth forth his ice like morsels:
Who can stand before his cold?
He sendeth out his word, and melteth them;
He causeth his wind to blow, and the waters to flow.

Great is our Lord and of great power:
His understanding is infinite.

Organizers and Local Officers, Attention

Reports for the first quarter of the new year are due March 31, 1922. Let our slogan for this year be, All reports made out properly and handed or sent to proper person not later than the 5th day of the month following the end of quarter.

New report blanks have been prepared for all divisions of our work. Organizers will send out these report blanks to the leaders or secretaries of the locals before the 25th of the month. If, for any reason a local does not receive its report blanks, write to your organizer at once, so there may be no delay at the end of the quarter.

The secretary of the local will please see that the different workers receive their report blanks before the end of the month. She will receive these reports from the different workers after they have been filled out (in duplicate), take such data from them as is necessary for her record and then forward the duplicate copies, (together with a duplicate copy of the local's report,) to the Women's Department, Box 255, Independence, Missouri, and the original copies, (together with the original copy of the local's report,) to the district organizer. These reports should be sent to their proper places by the secretary not later than the 5th of the month following the end of quarter. If for any reason the workers are slow in turning in their reports, local secretary should get in touch with them at once and urge them to be prompt.

We trust, at the end of this year when we make out our annual report to the general church authorities, it will show an organizer in every district and an active organization of the Women's Department in every branch!

Is Home Life Dwindling?

Much has been said with tongue and pen on the subject of home life in America. There are untold volumes of printed matter setting forth the fact that to-day the home is not doing either for children or grown-ups the thing for which it was designed—the providing of opportunities for a wholesome family life. And in these volumes there probably may be found some suggestions on how it is possible to make the modern home yield these opportunities.

But unless we address ourselves actively to the task of putting into practice our voluminous preaching on this subject we shall not advance greatly towards a solution of the problem.

It would be folly to regard this thing lightly and to hold that it will remedy itself. No permanently wholesome life either in the community or for the nation can be built on a substantial basis unless home life and home training play a great part in this process. The situation is not to be taken lightly. Nor will it remedy itself in the course of time, if, as this educator maintains, we are going in a direction away from it.

The obvious conclusion is that if we cherish ideals that make for desirable manhood and womanhood and for a more efficient citizenship, we cannot afford to lose sight of the fact that these ideals are best maintained in the home. Other institutions may help in this process; but they can only help; they cannot supplant the home. It may be that the writing of many books on this subject and the delivering of many lectures will help us to realize this; and to that end they serve a good purpose. But the real remedy to the waning influence of the home lies in a thorough recognition of what we are losing when home and family life become less important with us and in a resolute determination to prevent this at all cost.—Marion Star.

Back Yard Playgrounds

Not enough use is made of the back yards of city homes. There is little justification for so many children playing in the streets to the danger of their lives from passing vehicles. It is a simple and inexpensive thing to provide enough amusement devices to make the deserted back yard a safe and interesting playground.

Formerly, when so many homes had stables in the back, with a horse or a cow and a hayloft, there was a natural attraction that kept the boys of the neighborhood off the streets; but now there is little more than a garage and an ash heap.

A writer in the Pictorial Review tells an inspiring story of what has been accomplished at Visalia, California, through a home play week contest. The details are of no great matter, but any home which had met six of the following specifications was eligible:

1. Play-space. Outdoors. Clean. For babies should be fenced a portion of the porch, or a four-sided baby pen.
2. Swing. For the little tots should have sides; back so can tie tots in.
3. Horizontal bar or trapeze.
4. Sand-box. May be shallow box, small or large. Main idea is clean, dry sand. Cover to keep out rain.
5. Garden. Must be child's own. May be only a window box.
6. Pet. To feed and care for. Even baby enjoys observing chicks or rabbit.
7. Museum. Child's own collection of anything, and special place to keep.
8. Workshop. Hammer, saw, etc. Special place to keep and space to work, if possible.
9. Playhouse. A place in which to create.
10. Doll house and doll carriage. Counting one point. Doll house to furnish.
11. Seesaw. Not too high.
12. Slide. Of hard wood.
13. Bird bath. To keep clean and to observe. Place high to keep away from cat.
14. Equipment for playing ball, tennis, croquet.

Here is something to think about. Warmer weather soon will be on the way, and the boys and girls ought to be given the best possible opportunity to play in the open air.—Omaha Bee.

CHAPTER XV

The Emotions

Note: "Emotion is but a feeling state of a high degree of intensity and complexity." Feeling and emotion are not two different kinds of mental processes. This simplifies the two chapters.

1. When we understand that emotion is caused by the reaction of certain deep-seated physiological conditions, is it not much easier for parents and teachers to control the child's emotions?

2. Think of some illustration by which you can follow out the orders of the entire event which results in an emotion.

3. Explain "Nature is inexorable in her dictates that only that shall persist which has proven serviceable in the largest number of cases." Which of the factors in the theory of evolution does this illustrate?

4. What determines the duration of an emotion?

5. In order to control emotions, what two things are necessary?

6. In the light of this reading, how can love, religious emotions, sympathy, and interest be perpetuated? Since the "end and aim of our emotions is to serve as motives to activity," what results if the opportunity for this activity is missed?

7. How do you explain "the relief which comes from having had a good cry"?

8. How do civilized and savage men differ as to emotional control? Is there any likeness in this regard to the adult and the child?

9. How do we interpret the feeling side of the lives about us? We note that without this emotional experience we have missed the most significant phase of social experience.

10. "The ability to read the finer feelings, which reveal themselves in expressions too delicate to be read by the eye of the gross and unsympathetic observer, lies at the basis of all fine interpretation of personality." Inability to read the finer feelings gives rise to one of the great sociological problems of the present age. What is it?

11. Since the emotions are to be cultivated, as the intellect or the muscles, through proper exercise, by whom and where should this exercise be given?

12. What is the psychology of the expression, "Everybody has some good in him"?

13. What do you think of the statement of the author, "This self-centered attitude of mind is fatal to any true cultivation of the emotions"?

14. How can literature aid in the cultivation of the emotions? What is the psychological value of "story-telling"?

15. What is the danger in the overwrought descriptions of the emotions as found in literature or in "emotional over-excitement"?

16. What does the author think of those who merely feel as compared with those who do?

17. How is this thought expressed in the Scriptures?

18. Note carefully the compelling force of emotions. List the various acts which the emotions have caused men to do.

19. Understanding the importance of habit formation, what responsibility rests upon parents in permitting emotional habits to be formed that are not desirable?

20. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

LETTERS AND NEWS

Can the Expectant Mother Influence the Teeth of Her Child?

(First of four articles.)

That the care of the teeth should extend long before a child's birth, and that every attention to diet should be paid by expectant mothers, if they desire their offspring to have good teeth, is the striking statement of a prominent dental scientist, whose views on this subject have received the unqualified approval of numerous influential dentists. In a well-thought-out interview he expresses his views as follows:

The conditions obtaining during the prenatal period of a child's life are of very vital importance in determining the future health and development of a child. The health and well-being of the mother are wrapped up in the health and well-being of the developing child. As long as she supplies nourishment from herself to her young, so long will that influence last. That would naturally be till the time of weaning,

It then behooves the mother so to regulate her life during this period that she may enjoy the fullest measure of health that it may be imparted to her young.

This prenatal influence affects all the organs of the young body, and not least among these organs—the teeth. About the fortieth day of the inter-uterine period, the little teeth begin to develop; and at the time of birth their crowns are fully formed, though they do not appear in the mouth, except in rare instances, until the child is six months old.

Thus, it will be seen that since the teeth are developed to such an extent during this period, the nourishment supplied must contain the necessary elements that enter into their up-building, and that nourishment must first be taken by the mother.

For instance, if a nursing mother were to eat large quantities of sweets, cake, bread, and so forth, and very little meat, fruit, and the less starchy vegetables, it would be found on examination that her milk was overrich in sugar and lacking in proteins and the necessary salts found in the fruits and vegetables, with the result that the child's digestion would be disturbed and its nutrition interfered with.

Cases have been observed where some of the temporary teeth began to appear in the mouth during the nursing period and promptly began to decay and the gums around them to become inflamed—periclasia—as the result of the milk being too rich in sugar and lacking in proteins and so forth, due to the mother's diet being as before outlined. The milk lacked balance in proportion as the mother's diet lacked balance. Needless to say, digestive disturbances were evident, such as vomiting after feeding.

If the mother indulges in the use of alcohol or drugs, the teeth as well as other organs of the child are seriously affected, and of course, any syphilitic condition is sure to be visited upon the teeth of the unoffending child.

Health in plenty! How may this very desirable thing be obtained? Principally in two ways: First, plenty of pleasant outdoor exercise with adequate rest and a contented mind. Secondly, a proper amount of proper food well masticated. The first requisite requires no comment, but a few suggestions regarding the food question might be helpful.

The question of proper food is one that should receive careful consideration, because so much depends on it for the com-

A Large Spiritual Family

Elder J. J. Cornish reviews the experiences of the past fifty years, during which time he has baptized over fifteen hundred people.

To All Readers of the Herald, Members and Nonmembers: Believing that I may be permitted to occupy a little space in this the official paper of the church, I write to tell you that it is fifty years ago to-day that I was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, for the remission of my sins, according to the order given by Christ. It was further emphasized by the leading ministers whom our blessed Lord and Master Jesus Christ had chosen, commissioned, and authorized to preach his gospel, and whom he had commanded to preach and baptize those who would believe. Those men began their work on the memorable day of Pentecost, and before that first meeting closed, some of the congregation cried out, being "pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" And from that apostle who preached the first sermon after the sermon of Christ, answered, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 38.)

I believed Christ, and the commission he gave to the apostles, which was to be preached in all the world, among all nations, a perfect system. A perfect system cannot be changed, and remain perfect.

Another apostle also said that if men or angels preached any other gospel, "Let him be accursed." (Galatians 1: 6-9.)

With all this and many other gospel topics before me, and by the like authority, I believed, to that which was in the Apostle Peter, Elder Arthur Leverton upon my request on the 22d day of February, 1872, baptized me into the Church of Jesus Christ. And as Peter in Acts 2: 38, also promised: "Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost," I testify I've tried it, and I know! And all who will, with a true and honest heart, in full faith, obey that gospel with a determination fort and health of the mother. Highly sweetened foods, confections, jams, toast, biscuits, pastry, and flour products, as well as cereals, should be used in considerable moderation, while the less starchy vegetables, fruits and greens, should be used liberally. The daily use of some uncooked fruit up to but not later than the middle of the afternoon is very beneficial. Moderate amounts of protein food, as meat, fish, fowl, eggs, cheese, milk, and so forth, should find a place in a well-balanced menu.

Highly seasoned foods, condiments, and so forth, should be largely avoided, as well as overeating.

Thorough mastication is very essential. Inefficient mastication and bolting will cause indigestion and consequent poisoning of the blood stream, and through it, of the whole body.

With a good set of teeth, which are a necessity for efficient mastication, soft foods should be chewed about twenty times; food like bread should be chewed about forty times; and the more fibrous foods, like meat and corn, about one hundred times.

This is only a guide to mouth efficiency. Do not depend on counting but strive for the efficiency to which this is the guide.

DOCTOR O. L. WEAVER.

to fully live it, will receive like evidences to their entire satisfaction, and full salvation in the eternal world, where there is fullness of joy, and pleasures forevermore.

The twenty-second of February! Yes. Washington's birthday! Yes, a founder of that Government under which I have spent about half of my life as a citizen, and I do not believe that my mind ever reverts to the anniversary of my coming into the church but what I also think of the birthday of that grand old man, General George Washington.

I was born a British subject, but became a citizen of the United States, and on coming back into Canada I took out my papers and became a citizen again according to the laws governing. I love both countries. I have my rights and privileges here to preach this beautiful gospel and administer in all the ordinances of the church, while I am willing to keep the laws of the country. This I have tried to do, whether under "Johnnie" or "Sammie." Thus, I break no law of God or man.

"The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it, and human laws require it." (Swift.)

And "If the citizens of the United States should not be free and happy, the fault will be entirely their own." (Washington.)

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."—Doctrine and Covenants 58:5.

At the time of my confirmation, a promise was given to me that through faithfulness I would be clothed with authority to preach this gospel to the nations of the earth. Three years later I was called and ordained; and although I was unable to read the Scriptures or the hymns at that time, there were always those on hand willing to assist along that line. On the other hand, there came a power from the Almighty which helped me in every time of need, so much so that many wonderful and marvelous manifestations were given us as in days of old, to the joy and satisfaction of my brethren and me. So many have been brought to the knowledge of the truth by the assisting grace of God, that I have been enabled by the assistance of my heavenly Father to baptize over fifteen hundred people. Scores of these have been ordained to minister the gospel of life and salvation to others, so that at this time thousands are rejoicing in this gospel who came through my ministrations, and my sons, and grandsons in the Lord, whom we shall be glad and happy to meet over on the other shore, where our joy will be complete.

Since February 22, 1872, I have had many trials, both in and out of the church, but I have had so many more blessings that I praise God, forgetting the trials, and pressing onward. It is brighter on before me!

Lest I weary you, I will close by saying, I am happy in the thought that my wife and all of our children are in the church. I baptized them all. Two of my sons are elders, and all are trying to advance the cause, both spiritually and financially, for which I rejoice.

And I rejoice also to tell you that for the last two or three years, the Lord has so wonderfully blessed me with light and liberty, freedom of thought and speech, with strength of body and mind, that there is nothing for me but to remain a Latter Day Saint.

Sister C. T. Donkin, Pipestone, Minnesota, would like to locate near a branch of the church either in Reynolds, Taney, or Madison County, and would like to correspond with some of the Saints in those communities concerning this.

An Estimate of the British Attitude

I feel it is a duty and a privilege to express my appreciation for the British Isles number of the SAINTS' HERALD. I am sure there are many in this land who gave it a glad welcome, for we are vitally interested in the progress of the gospel in the land of our birth. Perhaps there are many like myself who eagerly scan the pages of each issue of the HERALD for news from that mission before looking for any other news; but, alas! how little is written. May we not hear oftener from the British Saints?

I received a few cuttings from South Wales newspapers from an investigating friend in South Wales, and am sending them on to you. You will notice that, in the fierce anti-Mormon war that is being carried on there, the Evening Express, an evening paper issued in South Wales, publishes a letter from T. W. Williams which carefully distinguishes as between our church and the Utah Church; points out that the Reorganization is the true continuation of the original church, and that the Utah Church is an apostate church. It also points out that the so-called "revelation" on polygamy was the work of Brigham Young, not Joseph, the Martyr; also that we do not sanction or practice polygamy. Also that the Book of Mormon is a nonpolygamous book.

One needs to live among the British people to realize the degree of fearsomeness that the name Mormon conveys to them, and Latter Day Saint is regarded as synonymous with Mormon. I pray that the work will be pushed to the front there, for in all the years that I lived in South Wales, I never heard of the Reorganized Church; but the Utah Church I could come in contact with every day.

The anti-Mormon war in England and Wales is going to work advantageously for the Reorganization, because the Evening Express, Western Mail, and perhaps other papers, have been the means of bringing to the attention of many people in South Wales for the first time, the fact that there are two distinct organizations commonly called Mormons: the one polygamous, the other non-polygamous, and what is true in Wales is probably true in England, Scotland, and Ireland.

The attitude of the British people towards religion can be aptly described by a saying common among them: "Once bit, twice shy." Their confidence in religion was broken down by the terrible World War; they have come to realize that religion as they know it, will never bring "Peace and good will to all men." Having failed so miserably once, they are loath to try it again: as Brother James E. Bishop, of the Sheffield District, said in the British Isles Number of the HERALD, "The reaction of the masses to the gospel call is very discouraging. . . ." (Romans 10:13-15) and so they argue that if religion, after the long trail it has had cannot establish the brotherhood of man, something else might: perhaps this is why socialism increases as churchism decreases.

Again: Brother Armstrong, in his address of welcome to the President of our church, at Manchester, England, had this to say: "As ministers of the gospel, we are not asked so much about our doctrine, but, 'What have you done? What are you doing?'" This harmonizes with the statement of a nonmember, who, writing to me from South Wales says: "The people of England and Wales do not care two straws for any church; because they, like myself, can see that the church as at present constituted is the 'Tragedy of the age.' He further says: "What is the cry of the age? Why, it is 'Demonstrate! Demonstrate! Demonstrate! ! !'" In speaking to a young man recently from South Wales, the writer was told that the war had destroyed the people's confidence in religion; that they were turning away from it.

Impractical religion and "cunningly devised fables" have been tried and "found wanting": idealistic institutions founded upon the shifty foundation of human nature will suffer the same fate. Great Britain, like the rest of the world, needs a religion that will appeal to the reason as well as to the emotion; to the physical as well as the spiritual: a religion that can be demonstrated as well as preached; a religion that the common people will hear gladly. We have such a religion; it is our duty to prove it.

The reluctance of the British people to react towards religion is not in reality a discouraging feature: perhaps it is the best thing that could happen, for it will cause our ministry to realize as nothing else will, that it is not by might nor by power, nor by eloquence, nor by oratory, nor by craft, nor by any other scheme that the human mind can devise, that people are brought into the light and truth of the gospel; but by the Spirit of the Lord: the endowment from on high; by possession of that promised Comforter that will reprove the world of sin.

The deep emotional and religious nature of the Welsh people has been crushed and stupefied; it is for this church to awaken and restore it again; beneath the conservatism of the English lies a genuine religious instinct, twisted, warped, and betrayed, (by incorrect religious systems and international disruptions between so-called "Christian" countries), but not dead as may be seen in their incessant urge towards universal brotherhood. The task of directing this instinct into the right channel belongs to this church. The British Isles presents as fruitful a missionary field for the Reorganization as it did for the early church, before the Brighamite apostasy; but it needs as consecrated a ministry as it had then.

Will Brother John Pughly, of Abercumboi, South Wales, please send me his address, because I want to give him a letter of introduction to a young man in Mountain Ash to whom I have been teaching the gospel for a long time by correspondence. He is intensely interested and wants to get in touch with the work; also a young man in Ynysboeth. It might interest Brother Pughly to know that the writer helped to plant the Wesleyan mission in Abercumboi several years ago.

Ever praying for the prosperity of that mission, I am your brother in the gospel of our Lord, Jesus Christ,

Bothwell, Ontario

Our 1921 reunion at Erie Beach was as full of interest as any in the past and the date for this year has been set. We hope that our neighboring districts will arrange their holidays so they may spend the time at Erie Beach.

We have just held a series of services over five Sundays with Brethren James Pycock and John R. Grice in charge. It was a feast to the Saints as well as others and has been a number of years since nonmembers took as much interest. Five were baptized and we expect a number more to join in a few weeks. We have never seen two men try more to make a success of their work and so far as we could observe the membership stood by them to assist. We are pleased with the result and hope for years to come to see results from this effort.

We have just completed a schedule of two-day meetings throughout the district for the year and hope to see the branches put forth every effort to make them a success.

JOHN C. DENT.

Sister Taylor a Toronto Teacher

Six teachers were added to the temporary staff of the Toronto, Ontario, schools early in January, according to the Evening Telegraph of that city. In each case the name of the teacher is followed by the name of the church to which she belongs. We note in this list the name of Sister Vida A. Taylor.

This appointment was made without question, and is an interesting result of the discussion which occurred a year ago when Brother B. H. Hewitt was appointed to the regular teaching staff of the Toronto public schools. At that time the school board went thoroughly into the teachings of the church and had the distinction clearly made between this church and the church of Utah. In the matter of Brother Hewitt, the church there was put to considerable expense, but it was well worth this necessary cost to have our position fairly presented.

Kansas City Stake

Outline of successful missionary methods.

The following is in continuation of last week's missionary items and is mainly from the report of Elder Amos T. Higdon, stake missionary. The feature of missionary work that Elder Higdon emphasizes is getting ready for the meetings, whether held in private houses or a church. They are very simple but must be carried out. He says that after arrangements have been made for a missionary effort we get out our advertising matter, which consists of the following: Enough private mailing cards so one can be placed in the home of each family within several blocks of the meeting place. The following form being printed upon them.

HEAR YE THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST IT WILL BE PREACHED

Every evening at 8 o'clock. Song service 7.45

Commencing(Date)

At(Place)

(Name of Speaker)

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Also enough large cards 11 by 14 inches to be placed in the business houses and conspicuous places within four or five blocks of the place where the services are to be held, and a canvas sign, 3 by 4½ feet, placed on the building or bulletin board of the meeting place.

We try to meet with the Saints in their prayer meeting on the Wednesday night before the services are to commence on the following Sunday, and lay our plans before them, so as to get things in readiness for the canvass of the vicinity, a part of which is done on the next Sunday afternoon. We try to impress upon all the necessity of assisting in this work, and usually receive a hearty response.

Finally the day of action arrives. The teams are organized at the close of the 11 o'clock service and assigned to the territory they are to cover by the presiding officer or one whom he may delegate to look after this part of the work.

We meet at the church at 2.30 p. m., and after the tracts and cards are apportioned to the different teams we kneel in a short season of prayer, after which they go to the territory they are to canvass. Where the people show a disposition to be sociable, a short conversation is entered into, and if they have a desire for the missionary to come to talk with them, names and addresses are taken and some time during the week they are called upon.

After the meetings commence, the missionary spends a portion of the day, usually the afternoon, calling upon the people who are interested, or whom it is thought might become interested in our message. Thus we carry out a follow-up system. In some places we have valuable assistance from the sisters during the week. During our seven weeks meeting at Second Kansas City, Sister Fred J. Cleveland made more than one hundred visits in trying to get the people to come to the services.

Of course we consult with Stake President J. A. Tanner before going into a place, and usually with Bishop Blair. Both of these brethren have given us their whole-hearted support, which has been a great help to us in our labor.

Meetings have been held in the following churches; Armstrong, baptized 1; Quindaro, baptized 2; Montgall, baptized 2; Armourdale; East Argentine; Malvern Hill, baptized 21; Grandview, baptized 3; Fourth, baptized 2; Bennington, baptized 7; Chelsea, baptized 3; Mount Washington; and Second, baptized 19. At Centropolis, near Bennington, there were five baptized, which together with those above mentioned, total 65 baptisms. There were also eight different efforts made at private houses.

While Brother Higdon has been the chief missionary, yet he has had splendid help in Brethren U. W. Greene, Paul M. Hanson, Joseph Arber, Alvin Knisley, J. E. Vanderwood, J. Charles May, Walter Curtis, Ammon White, George Jenkins.

The time covered is from November, 1920, until the present.

Of course some of those baptized by Brother Higdon no doubt would have been baptized anyway. It also may be remarked that a great many are nearer the kingdom and have a better understanding of our work than ever before, who as a result of his labor may become members in the near future.

We also have in the local force a splendid corps of workers, for as a result of their labors during the above period 139 have been baptized. This is not the result of any well laid plan, other than taking care of the work in an energetic way in the various localities of the stake. The speaker for the meetings to be held at Central Church for the young people of the Missouri side commencing April 6 is Floyd M. McDowell.

Joseph Luff was the evening speaker at Mount Washington. They report one baptism.

The Oriole Girls of Second Kansas City Church gave a box social and program the second instant, using the proceeds to buy uniforms and defray Oriole expenses. A large audience was present. Lula M. Sandy, stake organizer, gave a talk on ideals for Oriole Girls.

The Central Church public speaking class is holding up well in attendance and interest. Visitors are welcome.

All study classes are maintaining a good interest and attendance, regardless of the bad weather.

Mrs. Harold J. Kennard, 122 Cattell Street, Easton, Pennsylvania, inquires if there are any Saints living at Easton or near there, or in Phillipsburg, New Jersey, just across the river from her. The reunion grounds at Deer Park, Pennsylvania, near New Hope, are but thirty miles away, and if any Saints are near there, she would like to get in touch with them and attend Sunday school or church services if she can. She adds her testimony that true happiness comes by living close to the Father and in communion with him.

Detroit, Michigan

Since the amalgamation of all branches of Detroit the Saints are gradually attaining to a higher spiritual condition. Although no great increase has been noticed in the actual members, there has been more diligence shown by most of the people. All departments of the work have been and are increasing in activity.

The Women's Department is doing a great deal in helping with the financial matters of the local branch. The social welfare department is taking care of many of our poor and needy, thus helping the bishop.

The attendance at the early morning prayer meeting is a big improvement, and the Sunday schools of the city are doing exceedingly well. The two largest are under the leadership of Brother Alex Barss and Brother Innes Fenton.

The Religio activities are causing quite a stir. The attendance at the First Church Religio is fine, but the work being accomplished by the East Side is even better. It is under the leadership of Brethren Bert Cooper and Edward Fenton. The attendance has increased from sixteen in December to eighty-seven in February. One of the features of this Religio was a slogan contest for the Religio. This is the winning poem composed by Wilbur Morley:

"Religio is God's playhouse,
Enlightened by his love.
Let us have amusement clean,
Intended from above.
God loves to have us mingle
In pleasure so divine.
Onward with Religio,
Religio for mine."

The Men's Club, recently organized, are looking forward to a big year.

These are only a few items of what is being accomplished, and we hope to move onward and upward in this great work.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa

Recently, Elder Amos Berve preached a remarkable sermon on "Suspicion," a soul-destroying demon that is gnawing at the very vitals of our society and making serious inroads upon the spirituality of the Saints, individually and collectively.

We shall present a few of the outstanding thoughts therein:

1. Suspicion is always indicative of a weak mind.
2. It often suggests evil to designing men, and lays the unwary open to their attacks.
3. It breaks the bond of trust, whereby friends are lost and business paralyzed.
4. It sours the temper and fills the heart with bitterness; disposes kings to tyranny; husbands to jealousy; wise men to irresolution, and weak ones to melancholy.
5. It greatly embitters life. A man had better be deceived than to suspect without good cause.
6. It betrays a very evil heart. Men judge others by themselves, and those who are most prone to plot mischief are always most ripe to suspect it in others.
7. It leads to many sins. Example: Abraham tells Pharaoh that his wife was his sister; and again, he tells Abimelech the same—suspecting that they would look upon her and slay him. Isaac was also guilty of a similar offense.
8. Suspicion is totally inconsistent with Christian charity, which "thinketh no evil," but "hopeth all things."

9. It is a positive wrong and a positive injury to those who are the objects of suspicion.

10. It is like the jaundice, which tinges everything with a yellow hue.

11. It may be likened unto an "evil eye." "If thy eye be evil thy whole body shall be full of darkness."

12. It beholds every good thing in a convex mirror, but everything evil in a concave mirror. (Convex diminishes the image—concave increases.)

13. Men of base nature, if they themselves are suspected, will never be true.

14. Suspicions, like dreams, take their color from the thoughts of the mind, but are greatly distorted because judgment is asleep.

15. Suspicion is fear, and fear hath torment. "Perfect love casteth out fear."

"By their prayer meetings ye shall know a branch." Time and again our prayer meetings have been one hundred per cent in participation, and of late our prayer services are crowding one hundred per cent in attendance—a decided mark of progress.

Our Sunday school is making steady strides forward. Our Religio is growing and the Women's Department is progressing nicely; in fact, the entire branch is on the upward trend, and by the grace of God we shall do our bit in redeeming Zion.

Our priesthood meetings are one hundred per cent in attendance, interest, and participation, and every meeting is helping the brethren to render a more efficient service to God and man. Again we are indebted to Brother Berve, our able teacher.

When in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, look us up. Our invitation is to all the Saints—Come, sit, mingle, and dwell with us and feast upon the good things of God.

ELMER K. PATTERSON, Correspondent.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

The men and boys met at the church on the 26th ult., to consider and effect an organization for the recreational work of the Religio, and for all activities into which we as Saints should enter. A committee was appointed to draft by-laws for the organization, and C. A. Skinner was selected to have the superintendency, with Lloyd Graybill as assistant or associate, and Henry McIntosh as secretary-treasurer. It was decided at an adjourned meeting on March 5 that no Sunday games should be entered into, neither should those who use profanity or liquor or tobacco engage in the activities on the ground or in the place where games are held, unless they should refrain from these wrongs. The association members were divided into three groups, or classes, according to age; those up to twelve in the boys' class, those from that age to sixteen in the young men's class, and those above sixteen in the men's class, with a proper division as to the games entered into.

Young married women have been organized into a class of Temple Builders and are placed under Sister John F. Stageman as a teacher. I understand that they met for one study this week at the home of Sister Stageman.

Brother O. Salisbury is still continuing the missionary services at the Belmont Mission, and others are near the kingdom. One was baptized last Sunday, the son of Elmer Bartholomew.

Brother C. A. Riley has got located with his gallery in an excellent place, where he is, as he has ever been, at home to the Saints who call in the city.

The prayer meetings are now being held at the Central Church, the group prayer meetings not proving the success that was anticipated. Enjoyed a peaceful and excellent prayer meeting last night. At this meeting the general quorums of the church were remembered in prayer by several. A feeling of sadness has affected several on account of the necessity of releasing some of the missionaries from general appointment on account of the lack of funds, but many of the Saints have been releasing several of their wants so as to be able more easily to meet their obligations and be free from indebtedness. It is a time for the study and practice of economy, and an increased knowledge of what we really need, as a church and as families and individuals. It is not the time for the purchase of a forty-dollar article when a twenty- or fifteen-dollar article will be as convenient, and answer the real need. It is not the time to become burdened with debt, if possible to avoid it.

Some of the organized classes have held a social gathering, and others are preparing for such gatherings. Here is where economy can be more fully exercised. When one has eaten a good supper it is not a necessity to have rich refreshments in order to have a social time; besides, such an act as eating at a late hour is physically injurious, instead of being a necessity. Some say that the members of the class will not gather unless they know that they are to have something to eat, but I believe that such are few; at least I had rather think that.

In this branch it is proved a possibility to meet our financial obligation without appealing to the stomach to get money. A freewill offering for local expenses is given, which has met the budget expenses, which care for all departments, and it seems so much more in harmony with the will of God.

Last Sunday Brother Henry Castings, district president of the Des Moines District, and one of his counselors, Brother Clyde McDonald, worshiped with us, and rendered assistance. The sacramental service was one that will be for good, and remembered for the spiritual encouragement given. By decision of the high council of the church, Brother Henry H. Hand was ordained a high priest under the hands of O. Salisbury and J. F. Mintun. The Spirit was present to bear witness of the calling, and the acceptance of his offering, giving admonishments suited to his necessities. It was a very impressive ceremony.

Quite a great many have been or are ill, most of the trouble being influenza, or la grippe, and in some cases these have resulted in pneumonia. God has specially heard the prayers and honored the authority of his servants when they have administered to the sick.

Des Moines, Iowa

Writing to the First Presidency, Elder A. E. Warr states that Elder J. L. Parker began a series of missionary sermons to be preached each Sunday evening from March 5 to April 2. They distributed small handbills, and as a result, fifteen nonmembers were present. Elder Parker has a pleasing personality and an enthusiastic manner that holds the attention of his hearers.

The young people will hold special services April 23 to 30, but will use home talent entirely, both for speakers and musicians. In this way, they will encourage local talent of ability in their midst and enthuse them with a realization of their loyalty and support.

Independence

President F. M. Smith has been in Lamoni most of the past week on business connected with the church. He plans to return to Independence on the evening of the 14th. In the meantime the work of the joint council has been progressing, as much of the business before them is submitted to subcommittees of their own number who must work out details for the consideration of the council.

Walter W. Smith gave the eighth lecture in the series for the priesthood in the afternoon of Sunday, the 12th, on "The learning process." The basis for his outline is the book Seven Laws of Teaching, though he is not by any means confined to its scope for elucidation.

There is considerable interest in local politics, the local paper publishing statements from various candidates as to their policies. Consistent efforts are being made to have all eligible voters register in time to vote.

The Laurel Club is again seeking to cultivate higher ideals as to civic responsibilities, and to this end secured Miss Anne Gilday, an experienced teacher and lecturer of Kansas City, to give an address on the subject at the Stone Church last Tuesday evening. She is a vigorous character and deserved a larger audience.

The passing of Doctor F. B. Farr, of apoplexy on the evening of the 7th, was sudden and unexpected. He had built up a successful dental practice in Independence and was a member of the Stone Church choir which Sister Farr, his wife, has been leading for several months. Some details of his life work appear elsewhere in this issue.

The Pen and Ink Club of Independence has had an interesting contest on securing of material for children's day program. They asked for "plots," a literary term meaning the basic idea in skeleton form, which may be developed and completed. As a result, the committee of judges was handed thirty-six contributions, but to date have not reached a decision. They have considerable good material for use.

Saints with a literary bent who have had original contributions published in the church papers or periodicals of equal rank are eligible for membership, and club officials will be glad to receive applications for membership. Dues are twenty-five cents a year, to help pay correspondence expenses. Sessions are held once a month, and for the next meeting plots are to be submitted as a basis for children's stories. Sister S. A. Burgess is now conducting a study of stories and their mechanism. If interested, write the president, Mrs. Ellis Short, West Lexington and Fuller, Independence, Missouri.

The sermon at the Stone Church Sunday morning was by G. T. Griffiths, on habits and attitudes among the Saints that weaken our spiritual power. In the evening T. W. Williams spoke, and the audience was so large an overflow meeting had to be provided in the lower auditorium, and H. O. Smith was pressed into service as speaker. Brother Williams referred to the crisis in the world and its relation to the church and plead for a higher concept which would allow us to realize that Jesus Christ is our real leader, yet with no disparagement to our earthly leaders who are his ambassadors.

Next Sunday R. C. Russell will speak in the morning, and T. W. Williams in the evening in an appeal for the home. The platform will be occupied by the junior choir, in charge of Mrs. J. T. Westwood. This is composed of children in the grade schools.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium during the week ending March 11: Mrs. Irene Cassell and Baby Cassell, Raytown, Missouri; Mrs. May Graham and Evelyn Graham, of Hardin, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Mrs. Hattie Pickett, Doctor Fred B. Farr, Mrs. Herman Ralston, Mrs. A. A. Chrestensen, Mr. A. E. Terryberry, and Master Arthur Guss. X-ray patients: Ralph G. Smith, Mrs. George F. Millard, and Mrs. C. A. Barton, all of Independence.

ENOCH HILL. A very interesting case of answered prayer has come to the young people of this church as an added testimony of God's wonderful power and mercy. The daughter of Brother and Sister Foulks lost her voice several months ago. She requested the young people of Enoch Hill to come to their early morning prayer service, Sunday, February 19, 1922, fasting and praying that her voice might be restored to her. Arrangements were made to administer to her at that meeting. In the evening of that same day God made manifest his compassion and answered the prayers that ascended up to his throne. He recognized the effort and the faith exercised by those young people. Her voice was restored to her and she could talk and sing again. By virtue of this added testimony to her and the other young people there will surely come to them a greater desire to be active in the work of the Master.

The local Religio here, has organized a class in public speaking, consisting of twelve members mostly composed of the priesthood. They appointed one of their number, Brother Dan Shirk, as teacher. He is creditably occupying in the position. One hour and fifteen minutes is the allotted lesson period. After fifteen minutes drill on synonyms and antonyms the rest of the time is given over to the lesson from Winan's textbook.

The class is enthusiastic and all are hoping that they will derive from the studies the necessary qualities which will help them further in dispensing the word. The call is for workers; the demand is for efficient helpers in all lines of church activity. May the effort in this instance bring increased desires for further studies and be as a stimulant to cause others to prepare for the fight.

The basketball team from Independence which left here on last Thursday evening for Lamoni to play Graceland team on Friday evening found the roads very heavy, and arrived in Lamoni on Saturday afternoon. Games were arranged for and they lost to both the Graceland and high school teams.

J. L. Gunsolley, of Mapleton, Kansas, writes that Mapleton needs a doctor. There are two doctors in the place but one is an old man past seventy who wants to quit practice and agrees to help a good man get started. Anyone interested can write to Doctor J. B. Reese, or Brother Gunsolley, of that place. There are about thirty families of Saints in and around Mapleton.

"If there are any Saints living in Portland, Oregon," writes Mrs. J. E. Alfrey, of Elmont, Kansas, "will they please call on Mrs. Bertha Finnie, 403 Cook Avenue, Portland. This lady is not a member of the church but wants to know more about the church and will attend if she knows where to go. She found no church notices of the Latter Day Saints in the papers."

I owe all my success in life to having been always a quarter of an hour beforehand.—Lord Nelson.

Using Senior Religio Quarterly During Sunday School Hours

In THE SAINTS' HERALD of March 1, 1922, is an editorial and in the March number of Autumn Leaves, 1922, Brother F. M. McDowell had an article concerning the courses of study found in recent issues of the Senior Religio Quarterly. Some of these courses have been used in Sunday school with good success, especially in places where there is no Religio. We earnestly urge that in Sunday schools where conditions seem to justify various subjects of the nature of this work, that it be attempted.

A. MAX CARMICHAEL,
General Sunday School Superintendent.

Address of Lillie Hoyt Wanted

Sister Elizabeth Emery, who has been a member of the church for eighty years, and is now in her eighty-ninth year, is very anxious to hear from her daughter or any member of her daughter's family. Her daughter's name was Lillie Hoyt. She was a member of the Fruita, Colorado, Branch, which was disorganized. She was last heard from there in 1902. Five years ago, she heard indirectly that they had moved to Utah, but does not know the exact location. Their children were Donald, Inez, Vernon, Eva, Stanley, and Joseph.

Conference Minutes

CLINTON.—At Nevada, Missouri, February 17 to 19. Edward Rannie, district president, and A. C. Silvers, vice president, presided. A committee of three were elected to propose a more suitable name for the district, since there is no branch at Clinton whence it takes its name. The young people rendered a musical and literary program Friday night, and after preaching on Saturday night, the young people of Nevada entertained the visiting young Saints at the home of C. W. Keck. Preaching by Ammon White and Lee Quick. Time and place set for next conference, Butler, Missouri, June 9 to 11. Brother White remained to preach at Nevada, Monday and Tuesday nights; Mrs. A. C. Silvers, secretary.

KIRTLAND.—At Akron, Ohio, March 4 and 5. F. J. Ebeling, district president, associated with L. G. Holloway, presided. Officers elected: A. R. Manchester, district president; Edna M. Rhodes, secretary; C. Romig, chorister; bishop's agent, L. H. Lewis. At Sunday school business session, it was reported that one school had been organized at Mount Vernon, Ohio, Saturday evening, a musical program was rendered. Priesthood meeting held. Preaching by L. G. Holloway and John Martin. Time and place of next conference left with district president. Edna M. Rhodes, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

TREMAIN.—Clarence Elmer Tremain was born February 28, 1879, at Saint Clair County, Missouri. Married Anna Thomas Helm, March 25, 1903. Baptized in 1912. Died from pneumonia, February 16. The past four months the Saints of Jefferson City, Missouri, have assembled at his home for Sunday school and other church services. Brother Tremain was one of the guards at the State prison and the prisoners had great respect for him. Funeral sermon by W. S. Macrae. Leaves wife and six children.

CRATON.—Lena Craton was born at Aalborg, Sweden, August 10, 1877. Married Charles Craton, November 27, 1913. Baptized at Hazeldell, Iowa, September 30, 1891. Sister Craton was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Madison, former residents of Independence, and the last member of their large family of father, mother, and twelve children. Died at her home in Independence, March 5. Leaves husband, two stepsons, three nephews, and five nieces. Funeral in charge of W. D. Bullard and E. L. Kelley.

HENDERSON.—Vivian Marie, infant daughter of Clinton and Minnie Lea Henderson, was born July 5, 1920. Died February 23 at Bay Minette, Alabama.

CONKLING.—Ira H. Conkling died at his home in Beaver Crossing, Nebraska, February 27. He had a paralytic stroke some months before, was cheerful and patient and had an abiding faith in the restored gospel. Married Maud E. Hanthorn October 26, 1891. Baptized in August, 1921. Funeral from the home. Sermon by Sam Broliar. Song service by the Pentecostal people. Leaves wife, three daughters, and two sons; one daughter died in infancy.

BARKDOLL.—Nettie Barkdoll, at the age of sixty, died December 25 after an illness of five days. Baptized in early womanhood and remained true to her covenant. Leaves three sons and three daughters; two sons and two daughters have preceded her. Funeral from the home. Sermon by Samuel Broliar.

QUICK.—Maud Quick was born at Hamilton, Missouri, July 13, 1883. Married to John S. Quick, December 1, 1904. Baptized May 16, 1910. The early part of her married life was spent in and near Rich Hill, the latter part spent in travel for health. Leaves husband, one daughter, four sons, mother, one brother, three sisters, and other relatives. Funeral from Enoch Hill, Independence, Missouri, in charge of W. D. Bullard. Sermon by J. V. Roberts. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

FARR.—Doctor Fred B. Farr was born at Shellrock, Iowa, August 27, 1873. Baptized in 1902 and ordained a priest in 1903, an elder in 1904, and a seventy in 1907. In 1906 married Louise Hills, daughter of Elder and Mrs. L. E. Hills, and granddaughter of Samuel Powers, one of the apostles of the early organization. Doctor Farr was a descendant of the Carter family of Kirtland, Ohio, well known workers in the early church. In 1915, he took up the study of dentistry, graduating in 1918, and practiced his profession in Morrill, Kansas, for two years. In 1920, he again accepted a church appointment and went to San Francisco, returning to Independence, Missouri, in 1921, where he opened up a dental office and was practicing at the time of his death. Stricken with apoplexy at one o'clock p. m., March 7, and died in the Independence Sanitarium at 10.55 the same day. His father died almost in the same way two years and two days before. Leaves wife, a sister, Mrs. J. G. Kendall, a stepmother, an aunt, and an uncle. Funeral at Stone Church, in charge of Joseph Luf, sermon by Paul M. Hanson.

HOOPER.—Mary E. Hulse was born March 11, 1855. Married Erastus Hooper, October 18, 1876. Baptized April 27, 1887. Died of influenza at her home in Decatur, Michigan, February 27. Leaves one son, Lester; her husband and two daughter have preceded her. Funeral from the home, sermon by H. E. Moler.

Excellent Results Among Nebraska Indians

In the Ensign of March 9, two letters from Walthill, Nebraska, relate how as a result of meetings by Elder P. R. Burton fifty-two have been baptized, twenty-four of whom were Indians. The church building is to be enlarged, a Religion has been organized, and "Walthill is now in shape to take care of itself," says Brother Burton.

For the Poultryman

I wonder if chicken raisers would be interested in this item taken from Good Health for July, 1921? If chickens were fed correctly not less than 150,000,000 chicks would be saved annually in the United States. First two days feed nothing but buttermilk, then add bran. After the first week give cooked oatmeal, also green stuff and other natural foods. "Meat scraps are no longer fed the chickens at the Michigan Agricultural College." At the Battle Creek Sanitarium 4,000 were hatched at one time. Of this number 96 per cent were raised. When they were five weeks old they weighed from 18 to 20 ounces each. The White Leghorn breed. Proper feeding of chickens would mean a saving to the United States of $250,000,000.

The writer tells us to "put meat scraps round the currant bushes." He argues that impure food fed to hens results in germinous eggs. We have been taught that fresh eggs are fresh, but analysis reveals the fact that filthy food makes filthy eggs. Of course table scraps, if given fresh to the fowl, do no harm, provided the scraps contain proper fowl food. Inspiration itself has spoken on this subject, when it said, "Rye for the fowl." This hardly means that no other kind can be given, but that rye is the staple. Oats for the horse has been proved to be the proper food. Likewise corn for the ox.

Double Use for the Ensign

Elder A. H. Christensen, who is laboring among the Indians of Oklahoma, proposed to the readers of Zion's Ensign that to all who would send him fifty-five cents he would return fifty-two addressed wrappers in which the Ensign could be wrapped after being read, and sent weekly for a year to some Indian's name which had been written on the wrappers.

In this way the paper would do double duty at about fifty per cent additional expense.

The response has been very gratifying. Elder Christensen has already received ninety-five subscriptions on this basis and is getting others in each mail. He feels convinced that fifty-five cents invested in this way is equal to twenty dollars on the expense account of an elder. By dividing the subscriptions among the elders working among the Indians they can use at least a hundred more. Address Elder A. H. Christensen, Redrock, Oklahoma.

"Te Orometua"

The January number of Te Orometua (mission paper of Society Islands) has just come to hand. It is published on a better grade of paper and makes a better general appearance. It contains a sermonet, quoting Malachi 3: 6; Jacob 1: 5; and Galatians 1: 11, 12; also a sketch of Robert Koch, a statement of the Religion by Elder F. V. Elliott, an article including the principles of the gospel.

We are also in receipt of a tract just published in Tahiti, "Eaha ta Iesu i a' o?" "What did Jesus teach?"

Brother and Sister G. W. D. Twyman, of Waverly, Ohio, report a series of misfortunes in which he fell and shattered his arm severely, she had been suffering from serious pneumonia, their house had burned just prior to finishing, and they had spent most of their resources defending a relative in a legal suit.

The Temple of God

What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.—1 Corinthians 6: 19, 20.

And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.—2 Corinthians 6: 16.

Our bodies are the temple of the living God. What tremendous significance is indicated in those words, the dwelling place for the Spirit of God. This being true, how clean should we keep our bodies, both outwardly and inwardly!

The whole social problem is answered by this fact. The young man or young woman who realizes that this physical frame is given us, not only to clothe these spirits of ours, to contain the life that is with us, but that it is also designed to be the temple of God, the dwelling place of his Spirit, will never be at a loss on any question of conduct which may arise.

Is the temple of God a proper place for cigaret smoking? Is the dwelling place of his Holy Spirit to be found in the dance hall? No, for the Spirit of God does not dwell in all bodies for it will not dwell in an unclean habitation.

But it is our privilege as well as duty to keep our temple holy that it may be a fit place for the Spirit of God. Jesus, through his sacrifice, has bought us with a price. Being a God, he became a man to show us the way of righteousness. Are we tempted? So was he. Do we feel ourselves at times forsaken? So did he. There is no pain, no trial, no temptation that confronts us that he has not experienced and does not know. But he was without sin, and overcame every temptation.

It is not simply a matter of preaching, but a statement of fundamental fact which we cannot avoid. Whoever keeps clearly in mind this high calling will never have to pray, "Cleanse thou me, O Lord, from secret sin," for it matters not how closely the sin is covered, we must realize clearly the time is coming when it will be proclaimed on the housetops and will be known. There is no sin so secret but what it leaves its mark of pollution; there is no place we can go from his presence. This is not a threat, but rather a wonderful promise, that as he watches the sparrows that not one falls to the ground unnoted, so does he watch over, care for, and love us.

With that protection, wherever we may go, wherever life may find us, wherever duty may take us, it is not the outward surroundings that pollute, but it is that which proceedeth from the heart. Where duty calls we shall not be found wanting, yet we shall pray, "Suffer us not to be led into temptation, but when temptation confronts us, deliver us from evil." That way lies all the happiness and joy in the world, as well as of the life to come.

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.—1 Corinthians 3: 16, 17.

Another Missionary Gone

Elder Frederick S. Brackenbury, whose letter to the HERALD a few months ago bespoke faith and confidence in the outcome even though he was afflicted with an incurable malady, passed to his reward at his home in South Boardman, Michigan, on March 12, 1922.

Last summer he had a breakdown of his health and was compelled to give up missionary work which had engaged his time for eleven years in Michigan. He was later brought to Independence for treatment, but the pernicious ænemia from which he was suffering would not yield to human skill, and he later returned to his home.

He was born in 1862; baptized March 23, 1890; ordained a priest September 13, 1891; an elder July 24, 1901. Though no longer a young man, he was of the energetic type, always alert and active, while his radiant good cheer made him beloved by all with whom he associated. Not only his immediate relatives and friends will miss him, but Michigan and the church as well.

Passing from Youth to Maturity

Probably the situation in the church to-day whereby youth and youthful vigor come in for occasional emphasis is but little if any different from what it has been from the beginning.

It is true that recently there have been some services for young people and in the largest centers lack of seating capacity seemed to require an age restriction. The idea was transplanted to other places throughout the church where the age limit was not necessary and only the emphasis remained.

But this of itself is not disturbing. It is not a dangerous symptom, but rather an indication of what may be done if we enlist the energies of the young.

It is our own fault if there is overemphasis. Youth demands activity, progression, stir, and because of its very effervescence becomes a sort of spur to complacent maturity. Youth will go in gangs and groups and try to break shackles which tie them to what they think is fossilization. Youth may often be mistaken in its judgments, but it will keep on going ahead.

However, there comes a time when this all subsides—or should. Some one asked us about the need of an age limit for Boy Scouts. A boy can get in at twelve, but how does he get out? He grows out. No one needs to tell a boy he is too big or too old to be a Scout. He is transformed as easily as a snake outgrows its skin, and he or we hardly realize what has happened.

The transition from the next stage should be as easily and quietly effected, and will be if we are wise enough to make it possible.

If every teacher and leader of classes, instead of spending time keeping up a big division line plainly marked between the "young people" and the "old people" would stress attitudes, such as loyalty, devotion, consecration, responsiveness, etc., and have as an ideal the placing of their pupils in positions of active service instead of using might and main to hold the young people in a class together, the problem would solve itself.

Yet we go on teaching knowledge as an end, consciously or unconsciously maintaining an atmosphere of exclusiveness, and as a result we prevent the metamorphosis of assimilation and lo, we have division instead of unity.

Teachers, it is far more important that you fire with zeal for service, inspire with loyalty to principle, move with faith the skeptical, than to spend hours on discussion of whether Elisha plowed with his oxen single file or abreast, or whether the Dead Sea is 1,292 feet below sea level or some other distance.

It is far more important that you turn out a product that will respond to the needs of the church locally or generally and bend its energies towards qualifying than that you keep a large group of persons together for a space of years. Be willing to give up your best pupils, see to it that they are willing to sacrifice the privilege of being under your care, knowing they can succeed if they are as noble in purpose and wise in method as you have been.

Then there is the important consideration that while groups may originate ideas and take initiative, the church in its administrative department should always control and direct and coordinate. When we are led by the whims of groups among us, no matter of what age or distinction, we are inviting chaos. But with administrative officers alert to the needs of all the people all the time, we shall then be able to use the best abilities of each person among us and thereby develop ourselves by a consistent missionary spirit that will know no bounds as to service.

New Utah Doctrine and Covenants

Polygamy is still taught in this latest edition.

The Utah Church has issued a new edition of their Book of Doctrine and Covenants. It bears the imprint of 1921, and has been copyrighted by them in the new form. It is published in two columns, which gives shorter lines, and is more convenient for reading. They also have increased the headings of the various sections, giving a summary of the character of the revelation which follows. They have revised the foot-note references, and have printed fifty-four pages of index and concordance, in two columns, at the back of the book.

All of these mechanical improvements will naturally meet with the approval of the general reader.

We are therefore the more surprised to note, that with their frequent reiterations that polygamy is a past issue with them, still in this issue of 1921 there is published their section 132, with the following summary or heading:

"Revelation given through Joseph Smith the Prophet, at Nauvoo, Illinois, recorded July 12, 1843, relating to the new and everlasting covenant, including the eternity of the marriage covenant, as also plurality of wives—The prophet's inquiry of the Lord—He is told to prepare himself to receive the new and everlasting covenant—Conditions of this law—The power of the Holy Priesthood instituted by the Lord must be operative in ordinances to be in effect beyond the grave—Marriage by secular authority is of effect during mortality only—Though the form of marriage should make it appear to be for time and eternity, the ordinance is not valid beyond the grave unless solemnized by the authority of the Holy Priesthood as the Lord directs—Marriage duly authorized for time and eternity to be attended by surpassing blessings—Essentials for the attainment of the status of godhood—The meaning of eternal lives—

Plurality of wives acceptable only when commanded by the Lord—The sin of adultery—Commandment to Emma Smith, wife of the Prophet.

It is true that on pages 256 and 257 there appears what is often referred to as the Manifesto, but this is published merely as an official declaration "to whom it may concern," is printed at the end of the book, with lines running clear across the page. It is not published in the same style as is the rest of the book, nor is it given any comment or heading. It is evident that anyone reading the book would not consider this statement as a revelation nor would classify it as more than a footnote.

In the face, therefore, of their repeated denials, this book is a reaffirmation and a redeclaration of their belief in plural marriage. It may well be considered also in connection with the argument made by some of their missionaries in favor of polygamy, and their attempts to prove by the Bible that it is divine. These declarations of individual missionaries may be denounced, but the publication of this Book of Doctrine and Covenants is evidently official, as it bears the approval of Heber J. Grant as trustee in trust.

Another change is the omission of the minutes of the General Assembly, and the declaration concerning marriage. They have also omitted "Lectures on Faith," which heretofore have been bound in with their Doctrine and Covenants. Reference, however, is made in the introduction to the General Assembly so far as the approval of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants by the twelve apostles is concerned, but not so as to show its approval by each quorum, including the deacons, and by the assembly as a whole. In fact the minutes are omitted; merely the resolution of the Twelve is included.

S. A. BURGESS.

Continued Revelation

"Is there, at the last, much difference between making one's self a stark 'fool,' saying, 'There is no God' (Psalms 53: 1), and saying there is a God (or some equivalent), but that it is impossible that we have a revelation from him, making known all that is needful to know of man's origin, duty and destiny? As if such a God as the Bible reveals would not most certainly make known to his rational creatures precisely such desirable and necessary information. Are matters improved much by admitting the existence of a God concerning whom there is no satisfactory knowledge? It is the Bible, or no revelation."—Ben's Budget.

The above extract is from the Christian Leader and is good so far as it goes. It certainly is unreasonable to suppose that God would not reveal himself to his children. But it is equally unreasonable to suppose that he would speak just once, or at various times for several thousand years, and then refuse to say anything for the next two thousand years.

No Bible manuscript exists written within a few hundred years of its author, the prophet or man of God whose name it bears.

Further, these communications were received in a different age of the world, were written in a different language; they have been transcribed, not always accurately. This makes it become doubly clear that God will not cease to communicate with his children to-day.

The very fact that he has communicated and revealed himself in ages past; the very fact that some portions have evidently been lost, and some parts are not clear as we have them to-day, as is shown by the fact that those who profess to follow him and accept his teachings do not agree on the meaning of many passages of scripture, makes it imperative that he should speak to his children to-day through the means he has ordained.

The argument, therefore, cannot stop by claiming divinity for the Bible, though it is good so far as it goes. But it requires logically a belief in continued revelation to-day.

Full Use of Church Holdings

It is valuable for us at times to note what others are doing, so it is with interest we note a recent article on the church house, based on actual study by the Interchurch World Survey, and sent out by the committee on publicity of the Home Missions Council, in which they state that the church has ministered to the deepest needs of men and women, but it is not possible for it continually to change its program every time some one arises with a new panacea. It adds, however, the fundamental challenge to make its services count. The church is greatly handicapped by having to use the old buildings which are often dreary and poorly adapted to community needs, but schoolhouses, libraries, and town halls also fail in these respects.

At Azuza, California, the president of the church conducts a church house in a bungalow in two large front rooms, a dining room, kitchen, etc., on a lot 100 feet by 150 feet. Mexican men come here to study English and learn American citizenship. Their wives come to learn home making.

At Sargent, Colorado, twelve hundred people from twelve square miles come to use their consolidated schoolhouse as a community church.

At Dimick, Pennsylvania, the county has erected a community house with gymnasium, basket ball and indoor baseball courts, and there are others.

As we have recently pointed out, there is a growing need for a community house for the social uses of the community, which may include gymnasium and other recreational facilities, moving picture machine, a meeting place for other than religious services. Such a building may also provide a suitable place for institutes and study classes. It may also, in the not distant future, be utilized to supply the church needs for adequate space for religious education.

As we have recently pointed out, whether we call it the Sunday school, or by whatever name it may be called, there is a growing recognition of the fact that most of the church work should be done in smaller rooms rather than in a single large auditorium, in order that the work in religious education may be adapted to the age and condition of those receiving the instruction.

Then when we turn to church history, it is with some surprise we note that the Kirtland Temple provided two main auditoriums, but that the auditorium could be divided by curtains into twelve rooms, while the third floor was divided into a series of smaller assembly rooms.

It may be questioned whether division by curtains is the best method. This is being done in the Sunday school at Lamoni, Iowa, but certainly it expresses an appreciation of the need for smaller gatherings for intensive educational work which is almost always better done in a class where discussion of the subject can be carried on rather than by a single lecture to a large assembly. S. A. B.

Questions and Answers

Question. Elder Derry in his autobiography speaks of "an unpardonable sin" which shuts out from God's salvation those who have been guilty of it. (See Journal of History, vol. 6, no. 3, p. 322.)

Referring to Doctrine and Covenants, sections 42: 6; 76: 4; and 83: 6, we learn that there are several unpardonable sins: denying the Holy Ghost; denying the Only Begotten Son of the Father; breaking the oath and covenant of the priesthood, and turning altogether therefrom; and the crime of murder.

The Book of Mormon is equally emphatic as the above on the sin of "denying the Holy Ghost" but not on the sin of murder, for which it says, "It is not easy to obtain forgiveness."—Alma 19: 1. Does it necessarily follow that the penalty in each case is the same? Of one class we are told, "they shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels . . . the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord."

Do all those who commit the unpardonable sins pay the same penalty? (See also Mosiah 8: 6 of edition 1874.)

Answer. On such questions as these one may give his opinion, but it should be recognized as the opinion of the author, and the reasons given weighed. We know of no specific texts that answer this question exactly in the form in which it is asked. Yet there is a strong inference that with God the punishment is always made to fit the offense. We note that there are various grades of reward for those who do well; not only the three glories, but they differ within the glories. Those of the celestial glory, which includes some who have been guilty of lying and some who have been guilty of other grievous sins, it is stated plainly that as one star differeth from another in glory, so they differ. (1 Corinthians 15; Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7.) Those who receive the celestial glory receive of the same, even a fullness, and according to Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6, a comment has been quite well made that how much it takes for a fullness depends on capacity.

The Master also stated that certain sinners shall not come forth until they have paid the uttermost farthing. (Matthew 5: 26.) If such is the case, their sin is evidently not pardoned. Yet it gives an inference of a terminus or end. This is rather confirmed also by inference in Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4. This class is also referred to as those who receive a kingdom of no glory, not being willing to receive. "For what does it profit a man if a gift is bestowed on him and he receive not the gift?" (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 7.)

The inference would appear to be plain that God gives us all we are able and willing to receive. And it would appear from the whole divine economy in dealing with the dead that their reward or punishment is adjusted to meet their circumstances and conditions. Hence it would appear probable that all those who commit unpardonable sins will not pay exactly the same penalty.

The Master, in referring to those who committed a certain sin, stated that he who knoweth the will of the Father and doeth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes. While the one not so well informed or well advised shall be beaten with few stripes. (Luke 12: 17, 48.)

The dead are to be judged, every man according to his works, when death and hell give up the dead. (Revelation 20: 13.) This clearly infers that the punishment of the wicked will be apportioned to the offense. S. A. B.

The Meaning of Youth

Sermon by Elder Floyd McDowell, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, November 13, 1921.

Paraphrasing a bit of ancient verse we have the following: "Look to youth for its life, the very light of life. In its brief course lie all the verities and the realities of your existence, the bliss of growth, the joy of emotion, the splendor of beauty. For childhood is already a dream and old age is only a vision, but youth well-lived makes every childhood a dream of happiness and every old age a vision of hope. Look well therefore to youth."

The hour is so tense with responsibilities and opportunities that I have dared to change the subject that was announced for me, because I do not believe that any man should be proscribed by a subject if he feels that he has a message. I believe the songs we have heard and the spirit of this gathering, if I may sense it, has made me feel that perhaps I, in a weak way, may bring to you some message. I have chosen to call my talk "Youth," and I have taken as a text Paul's instruction to Timothy: "Let no man despise thy youth," though we may change it just a little and make it read, "Let no man have cause to despise thy youth." And with this text in mind I wonder if I may be permitted to reread this bit of ancient verse that has come down to us: "Look to youth for its life, the very light of life. In its brief course lie all the verities and the realities of your existence, the bliss of growth, the joy of emotion, the splendor of beauty. For childhood is already a dream and old age is only a vision, but youth well-lived makes every childhood a dream of happiness and every old age a vision of hope. Look well therefore to youth."

What Is Youth?

What is youth? It is that period of infancy, that period of plasticity, that period of growth, which covers twenty-odd years of our lives. May I illustrate?

Not long ago I sat at the table of a very cultured family. In the midst of the meal, a lad of eight years became so restless that his mother said, "Can't you sit still?" The boy, as much a boy as he probably could be, replied, "Ma, don't you know I can't sit still; I have got to wiggle."

If you want a definition of youth, that is it.

This summer at a reunion I had finished a very excellent meal at the dining hall, but on leaving the hall I found some friends dining picnic fashion and was offered a piece of apple pie. I refused, stating that I had already eaten too much. A small boy in the group spoke up and said, "Oh, can't you eat more when you are full? I can."

If you want a definition of youth, that is it.

I know a family in which there is a little girl four years old. She was penned up in three small rooms for a winter. The floor was rather rattly and the girl was rather heavy for her age, but two or three times in a week she would say, "Ma, I've just got to run." And her parents would move the furniture and she would run until she was literally tired out.

If you want a definition of youth, that is it.

At a reunion a couple of summers ago a little boy of six summers had formed a habit of turning cartwheels, until he did it automatically. He would turn cartwheels all over the reunion ground. One evening at the Religio hour I was talking on my hobby and when I was illustrating this point this particular boy helped me out. He started across the front of the tent and to our surprise right there in front of the audience he turned cartwheel after cartwheel. Everybody laughed, of course, but I turned the incident as an illustration and made good use of it.

Just some more youth.

In the young man, youth is that age of doubt and inquiry. It is that age that says: "Ma doesn't know and the teacher doesn't know; just watch me."

Youth takes pride in his own daring. At a Halloween celebration a group of young men had committed a number of misdemeanors and had been called in question by some of the property owners. The leader of the gang, a young man, exhibiting a mighty chest said, "Bet you don't know who I am; I am the son of So-and-So (one of the leading men of this church). I am the worst fellow in town."

That is youth.

It is the young man who suddenly becomes interested in his personal appearance. In boyhood it has been a bore for him to comb his hair and clean his teeth, but things have changed and he spends a great deal of his spare time getting ready for that date.

That is youth.

On the street corner we find a number of young girls about teen age. I have thought that the boy problem was some problem, but the more I have to do with a group of girls of a certain preadolescent age, the greater hopes I have of solving the boy problem. It is that age when they stand on the street corner and giggle and all you can hear them say is, "He said this, and he said that."

That is youth. I see you get the definition. Why continue the illustrations?

The Meaning of Youth

Did you ever stop to think that the animal has practically no youth, and that in two or three weeks he is practically mature? It takes years of training to make the human a mature man. Did you ever stop to think of the immense cost of our public school, the building and maintaining of homes to take care of our youth who are not able to take care of themselves? Why, if human youth were like animal youth that twelve-thousand-dollar bungalow could give place to a nest in the leaves that costs nothing, save a few hours of effort, and our public school education would no longer be necessary, because the parents could in a few weeks train the young and give them all the knowledge they themselves had acquired. Did you ever think about why we have twenty-one years of human infancy? The difference between the animal world and the human world is summed up in the difference in the length of infancy and youth of the two.

Youth means two things, the need for education and the capacity for education. The human youth is helpless. Education in its broadest, truest sense is absolutely necessary for youth. All that the human animal stands for above what the animal of the world stands for is probably summed up in the differences in the length of youth. "Look well to youth. In its brief course lie all the possibilities of your existence." Look well to it because in the young man and young woman to-night lie possibilities of rising to heights not yet known in the world. Youth is a rope with which the men and women to-day can hang themselves or by which they can climb to heights that the animal world cannot possibly attain. I sometimes think that that free moral agency we talk so much about is simply this, that God has said, "Here is twenty-one years of youth. You have it in your power to do what you will with it. You can drag yourself down to depths lower than the animals in the field or rise to heights far greater than man has ever yet attained. What will you do with this youth? Therein lies your free moral agency."

Rights of Youth

Now young people, I am going to tell you a few rights that you have. I know American youth will delight to hear this part of the talk particularly. Every individual born into this world has a right to be well born. Not only have you a right, but you have a responsibility that the youth that is born tomorrow shall be well born. I wish I might talk a half hour on this point, because I could tell you some things that I think would attract your attention to this thought as never before. Fifty per cent of the crime in this world is due to the fact that the boys and girls were born physically defective, in a way which made it impossible for them to be anything else but criminals when the temptation came to them. Twenty-five per cent of the blind boys and girls in Iowa were born that way because of the sins of their parents.

Youth has a right to demand that it be born with a strong body and mind. Youth has also a right to grow. So insistent is that right that some modern educators have said, "You ought to get out of the way and let youth grow! At birth the child is wrapped in swaddling cloths and at death we nail him up in a coffin. Get out of the way and let youth grow." If a child is not eating properly he cannot grow properly and at State expense he should be fed. The State says that Johnny must go to school. The same State will sooner or later also say that Johnny must be fed properly.

Youth has a right to play, and no community of adults has a right to take away from youth that right to play. We made a social survey of our town a couple of years ago, and we found a family with six children, in whose house there was not a single game suitable for children to play. They did not want a community center building; but all their neighbors did.

Youth has a right to receive its share of our rich social heritage. Is there anything in art? Is there anything in music? Is there anything in books of the world to-day? If so, youth has a right to receive the very best of literature, the very best of music and the very best of art. In some States if a child went to school every day he was required to go to school by law it would take him twenty-eight years to go through the eighth grade. Let me tell you, with all respect to modern education, that the best sixth grade education of even the best school cannot give a man a taste of our rich social heritage. What can he know of painting? What can he know of the best music and art that the world has produced? There are men to-day who would fight to the last ditch to get a thousand dollars financial heritage at the law, but they will not turn a hand to give the child the social heritage that is rightfully his.

Any community that deprives its youth of the right of youth has taken that thing which will eat at the very roots of any civilization. You show me a leading civilization, and I will show you a civilization that looks to its youth. You show me an institution that is protecting its youth and I will show you a living organization, and vice versa.

What are our social institutions for? Only that they shall provide for our youth of to-day in training that which shall bring us our youth of tomorrow. All these rights and tendencies are God-given. While you have these rights and while you have the right to demand of your community that you be well born, that you receive the best of your social heritage, you also have a responsibility because these tendencies may push you in one direction or the other. In a list of the greatest vices and of the noblest virtues of to-day you will find their roots in these same God-given tendencies, and those instincts and tendencies are not wrong. It is not wrong to want to run; it is not wrong to mingle with the young people of our own age; it is not wrong to have the sex impulse. It is what we do with that impulse. It is what path we take as the result of that impulse that makes us to go wrong or right as the case may be.

Characteristics of Youth

We have mentioned some of these characteristics of youth. I want to speak of some of them more at length to-night—growth, play, activity, desire for companionship, excitement, and hatred of hypocrisy. Every child hates a hypocrite. You hate the pious man who on Sunday does not crack a smile, but who on Monday would beat you out of your false teeth. There used to be a man in our neighborhood, a Latter Day Saint, too, by the way, who would let bushels of apples go to waste under his trees rather than give them to a poor missionary's family. I remember, on the other hand, a man who made no profession of religion so far as our church was concerned, but who frequently went by our home, and the best apple on the load was none too good for him to roll to us. If there are school-teachers in this room I think they will bear me out in the statement that there is no use trying to "put one over" on the average American youth.

There are alternating periods of doubt and faith, and of emotionalism and rationalism. Sometimes it is called the period of sowing wild oats. Before I speak of the major theme to-night, that of pleasure, I want to speak of one of these characteristics, doubt. When you come to the age where you say, "I don't believe it. I am not going to believe that Sunday school story any more. I do not believe this old-time religion. I do not believe the stories of the Bible." That is the age of doubt—characteristic of the adolescent age.

Doubt is the ladder by which we mount from credulity up to faith. The characteristic of the child up to that age is to form habits of obedience. The characteristic of adolescence is to question authority, to doubt, to negate, and oppose. It is the right of every human being to doubt in the sense that he has the right to question that which is given him. Eighty per cent of the college men vote as they do because their fathers voted that way, but those who rise to heights are those who question authority and attempt to find out the reason for this and that teaching. Without this doubting, civilization would have remained where it was in the middle centuries.

Progress has come together with all its dangers because young men and women have dared to doubt. Luther doubted and they threatened to take his life. Huss doubted and they burned him at the stake, but he would not take back what he had said. Men of all ages have stood out and said, "We will grow," and progress has come to-day as a result of such un-fearing men who have dared to question. But the trouble is, young man, if you remain in that stage of doubt you stop growing. You are then negative and destructive.

There are three paths open to you. You can accept blindly and without question the authority that has come down to you. If you do that, stagnation will result. You may cut loose entirely from the teachings of your fathers and mothers. If you do that, individual lawlessness will result. The third path seems to me to be the reasonable one. Take the old and take the new, and in the clear light of reason and with the spirit of prayer try to bring the old and the new together upon a new platform of progress and growth. And if we do that, we will go forward step by step and advance without the dangers that usually come from doubting. Do not be afraid of doubting, of thinking, of questioning. If our religion to-day cannot stand all the reasoning and questioning that can be brought by the human mind then there is something wrong with that religion.

Pleasure

I want to talk to-night particularly of pleasure, and I want to read in that connection a story with which you are all familiar:

A certain man had two sons: And the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living. And not many days after the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living. And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want. And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his fields to feed swine. And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat: and no man gave unto him. And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger! I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants. And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him. And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son. But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet: and bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry: for this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. And they began to be merry. Now his elder son was in the field:

and as he came and drew nigh to the house, he heard music and dancing. And he called one of the servants, and asked what these things meant. And he said unto him, Thy brother is come; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, because he hath received him safe and sound. And he was angry, and would not go in: therefore came his father out, and entreated him. And he answering said to his father, Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment: and yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends: but as soon as this thy son was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf. And he said unto him, Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine. —Luke 15: 11-31.

You are familiar with this story and you are familiar with the usual treatment of it. I have sat in many a Latter Day Saint audience and heard an exposition of this story that I did not like. I want to review some of the characteristics found here. This son lost the true sense of the values of life. The average American youth who starts on the path of "pleasure at any cost" loses the sense of values. Did you ever look through a telescope backward? Well, that is just the way that the teachings of the Sunday-school teacher appear to the boy when he starts out on this path of life. The first step on the downward path is to lose the sense of real values in life. Everything worth while looks to be of little value.

This boy was lured into a far country. I think I have heard Brother Elbert tell something about this far country. It may be a far country to you in the sense that it is a long ways from the things your mother told you; it may be the street corner; it may be the ballroom. Oh, it is the cherry at the top of the tree rather than the one you can reach which is the most beautiful and delightful to look upon. Look out, young people, for the call of that far country. Many American boys and girls are leaving home for that far country to-day never to return, or, if they do return, it is to come back as the prodigal son.

He wasted his inheritance in riotous living, not only the money that he took with him, but far more than that. He wasted his name, his character, his father's name. Young man and young woman here to-night, the next time you wish to dabble in those questionable pleasures of to-day please remember you are doing that which you have no right to do. You are taking your father's name and mother's name into those dens of immorality. If you don't care a thing for your own name and reputation, look out for your father's and mother's.

Then the time came when famine came and he had nothing. When you have wasted your money and your name and you have lost your reputation and character and all—then comes the time when you will be in want. There were none to befriend him. How true a story it is. His so-called friends deserted him. That is usually the case. The most popular fellow in the university or the college is the fellow whose dad has fitted him up with a limousine. He has everything he wants. He can even have one of those misplaced eyebrows on his upper lip, which is such a symbol of intelligence among certain groups of young men. He can do everything damnable and be as low as he will, but there are certain groups of young men who will worship him. Sooner or later the truth comes to light. His dad has to sell the limousine to pay the taxes on the old farm. He has no money. He has no friends. Girls, there are some fellows in college worth considering. I have seen them every year and you girls would turn up your noses at them. They haven't any decent clothes. They perhaps don't even know how to use a knife and fork properly, and when they go to a party they fall all over the rug. But you watch them! I have seen them. There was one of those fellows in college a few years ago and the girls all laughed at his awkwardness, and yet he is getting six hundred dollars a month and his expenses in South America to-day. I know some girls that laughed at him then who would like to be along with him now.

He had to care for the swine. This was as degrading a task as Christ could have mentioned to the Jews. And then he came to himself. If he had been on the right track he never would have had to come to himself, would he? Who had been off the track? the fellow that stayed at home? No. Some people never change their minds unless under compulsion.

I heard of a fellow not long ago that belongs to this class. A certain farmer had a very cantankerous creature out in the pasture. He could not catch him and he offered a man twenty-five dollars if he would get that animal, dead or alive. Mike undertook the job. He went out to the field armed with a double-barreled shotgun. The bull came after him. He let one barrel go. The bull shook his head and came after him again. He let the other barrel go. The bull shook his head and came after him again. Then he dropped the gun and ran for the gate, calling out, "Fellows, let me out. I have changed my mind."

The prodigal son was in the group of those who change their minds. He came to himself. That was the first step in repentance. His father forgave him.

I want to speak just a minute of that fellow who stayed at home. When he found out what the merrymaking was all about he wouldn't go in the house. Finally his father went out to see him and he said to his father, "I have stayed at home all these years. I have worked early and late and I have done everything that you wanted of me and you never yet gave me a party."—How many of you parents have made home life a delight to your children?

Some Latter Day Saint preachers have condemned that boy for feeling that way. I can't. You have to give us a chance to be human. The father's answer is significant, and I want every young person to hear it to-night. This is what he said, "All I have is thine. You won't begrudge a party for this, your brother, will you? All that I have is thine." I once asked seventy-five Boy Scouts which of these two they would rather be and they were unanimous in saying they would rather be the one who stayed at home.

What about the fellow that did come home? Do you imagine that he went to work the next morning and did just as good work as though he had stayed at home? Do you imagine that with his body diseased as it must have been after such riotous living that he could do as good work after he came home as though he had stayed at home all the time? Do you imagine that he worked day after day on the farm, that he never was tempted by the life that he lived? If so, you don't believe that "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

I have known men in this church who have told me that in their most sacred moments of service they have been handicapped by the recollection of those old stories and songs which they had learned when they were sowing their wild oats. Why, all these Boy Scouts know that if you want a crop of corn you have to plant corn, and it is just the same with oats. Yet there are a great many mothers and fathers that will let their young men believe the doctrine that you can sow wild oats and reap tame ones. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked. . . . Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." This is as true psychology as is found in the Scriptures.

I am not an old puritanical preacher that has come to you this evening. I am not here to tell you that to be good means that you must have a face so long that you can eat oats out of one of those old-fashioned churns. I am here to tell you that the trouble is you have wanted a good time and have not known how to find it. You have assumed that dabbling in the vices of this old world was having a good time. Sooner or later you will have to come to yourselves. Sometimes I think it is useless to try to tell the American youth anything about these things until they do come to themselves.

How Does Your Pleasure Leave You?

What is the acid test of pleasure? My answer is, How does that pleasure leave you? Does that pleasure leave you disgusted with life in general? Think of it now. Think of those pleasures you have enjoyed. What was the effect? I am not saying you shall not have pleasure. I am saying that you have yet to taste the sweetest pleasure which life can afford if you have thought that it can be found in the pleasures of this world. Does it leave you with less respect for your friends? Does it leave you inefficient for your work, whatever that work may be?

Does your pleasure leave you able to meet the world with a frank countenance, or do you have to sneak around all the time like a whipped dog? How does it leave you? Can you think of your mothers and sisters at the same time you think of some of those pleasures? Can you do both without blushing for shame? Can you think of that vice in which you have indulged and think of your mother and sister and not blush for shame? Does it leave you with an increasingly less desire for the beautiful and pure and true? Do you love good music more or less after your pleasure, or do you find more pleasure in the very best of harmonies and art and music?

Are you going up or down the ladder? Every time you dabble in some of those amusements do you come home with less and less a desire for the good things of life? Do you want less and less of your home, Sunday school, and the beautiful in art and music and literature? Look out, then, for if you do you are on the wrong path. Does your pleasure leave you keen in mind? Does it leave you with a love for health, for beauty, for achievement? Does it leave you with a greater respect for mankind? Does it leave you with a physical power and mental vigor that will win?

Test the things that you do by the effect upon you. I have led social gatherings of young people of this church after which I have felt that I knew them better—when I have felt that we could work out the problems of Zion together; and when I have left that kind of gatherings I have known that I have engaged in the right kind of pleasure. Last week I went to a young people's prayer meeting. I went discouraged, feeling that the young people were not with us and that I had not been able to accomplish that which I desired. I felt somehow that all my work was in vain. I left that meeting knowing that we had been reaching the lives of hundreds of those young people, knowing that the boys and girls in my control were, to some extent, catching the feeling that we wanted them to catch. When I left that meeting I knew I had been in correspondence with God because there is no other source for such feeling. I said to those young people, "You may doubt God, but you have come into contact with that divine power this evening which has caused you to say you will go on and win."

How does your pleasure leave you? How does the ballroom leave you? How does that cigaret leave you? How does that vulgar song leave you? If the vulgar song makes you strive more earnestly to achieve, then by all means sing the vulgar song. Do you know that you can learn to like and enjoy the bad? And the best is always building up and the worst is always tearing down.

Zion Builders

We talk a good deal about Zion builders. They must be pure. "Except you have clean hands and pure hearts." Can you leave the modern ballroom as pure in heart and as pure in mind as you were when you went? Zion builders must be clean. Does the hearing and repetition of a vulgar song leave you clean? Zion builders must be spiritual. Is the last one home from the Saturday night dance the first one at the Sunday morning prayer meeting? I have yet to see the advocate and enthusiast of the modern dance who is a frequenter of our social gatherings and the life and soul of our religious worship. If you have an odd-shaped hybrid of that kind down here I would like to see him. Do you leave the gambler's table with any other desire but to continue a parasite on society? For that is what a gambler is. A community can rid itself of a man who steals a loaf of bread from a hungry child, and yet it cannot rid itself of the gambler who robs the child of its very soul. Does gambling leave you with the best in life? Pick out the best gambler on the street. Do you like his reputation? If so, please follow him. If you want that kind of a life, it is yours for the asking. Trot off to him and he will tell you how. Sometimes he will tell you better than the Sunday-school teacher and day-school teacher.

Zion builders must be home builders. I am going to leave town to-night on the first train. I am not going to tell you which train it is, so if you do not like this you will have to get after me pretty quick.

Does your appearance on the street half clothed and over painted increase man's respect for woman and woman's respect for herself? If so, continue to do it. In some of our States there is one divorce out of every four marriages. Maybe you are like the small girl I once heard of. She was bragging at school that she had something in their family that others did not have and when pressed for an answer she said, "We have a divorce in our home." It used to be that way, but it's not any more—divorces are too common.

Zion Builders must be trained individuals. Has your desire for pleasure increased or decreased your desire for an education? Are you doing the common thing? Are you doing the lazy thing? Are you doing the thing which thousands of people are doing to-day—quitting school because you do not want to make any effort? Is your quest for pleasure such that it crowds out every desire to study? If so, look out for that pleasure. Do you know that college men who constitute only one per cent of our entire population have eight hundred and seventy times the chance to achieve that the uneducated person has. Do you know that college men have eight hundred and seventy times the chance to do something in this world compared with the individual who gets so imbued with the idea of pleasure that he wants to quit the effort to train himself and go out on the search for selfishness? The great twin sisters of our social decadence to-day are ignorance and selfishness. The man who is too lazy to train himself for social betterment is both ignorant and selfish.

What Are You Doing With Youth?

Get that, young man, young woman!—What are you doing with this twenty-one years that God has given you upon which the civilization of the world depends? Are you hanging yourself with this rope? The prodigal son did. Think it over. Are you planting seeds of physical and moral degeneracy? "Be not deceived, God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." You cannot escape from that law. It is as true as two times two makes four. Are you sowing the seeds of physical and moral degeneracy? Are you paving the way for the decay of the family life in which you hope to be merged? Are you one of those thousands of young men to-day who say they can sow their wild oats and can contaminate their bodies with social disease and then come home and marry a pure girl?

What do you parents know of the young man your daughter is to marry? Yet she may give birth to a child whose brains are fairly eaten out with paresis. One quarter of all the blind children in Iowa are blind because of their parents' delinquency. If your boy does not reap this social heritage, the race will reap it. Fifty per cent of crime to-day is committed by boys and girls born defective because of the sins of their parents. I am not a staid old puritanical preacher, young people, but I am trying to tell you with all the power I have the truth of modern psychology which says that you cannot participate in those things without reaping the result.

Are you planning that the next generation shall have a greater number of blind children than this? If so, look out for the modern ballroom with its appeal to sex. Look out for all these things which eat out the very vitals of your lives.

Are You Loyal?

In closing I want to appeal to this young people and to their sense of loyalty to this church. I want to do it in a personal way. For each of you as Zion builders the time will come, if it has not yet come, when you will have to choose between the call of the world and the call of the church. I know whereof I speak. The hour struck for me and I had to choose. I want to appeal to your sense of loyalty. Shall the work of our fathers have been in vain? I want you to answer that question. You can make only one choice, and this should be that all the ambition and the talent you have shall be given to this work.

Over in the Sanitarium lies my dear mother. She is there partly because she overdid in her time of sacrifice for this church. She let me go to school with the money that should have bought shoes for her feet, and she did many other things of that kind. She is not complaining, but when the hour struck for me, young people, I had to say that if my talent was for teaching, then I would employ it in teaching in the church. Your talent may not be for teaching. It may be for medicine or law or what not. The call of the social world to-day, young man and young woman, is that every ounce of your energy shall be trained to the utmost and then given to the cause of humanity.

Are you going to join the ranks of those who are building civilization, or are you joining with the ninety and nine per cent who worship the greed for gain. It is nothing new to worship mammon. It is nothing new to fall for these temptations. They did that back in Babylon. The new thing, young man and young woman, the new thing is to rise to the call of the age and offer your all to the service of humanity. I am wondering if the young people of Zion will rise to the call and say, "Here, Lord, use me. I am going to use the talent you gave me. I am going to use it in the service of humanity and in the service of God."

Our Young People

By Edward Rannie

Neither the young nor the old can do the work alone. There must be hearty cooperation between them.

The progress and development of the world's peoples are always in the keeping of the young, the rising generation, and this applies to all departments of human effort, religious, social, industrial, educational, agricultural, mercantile, commercial, and political.

The young are called upon to build up. Marconi and Edison began early to experiment with electricity and their labor has brought untold blessings to mankind and the foundation that they have laid for others of the younger and rising generation will move the world ahead in electric science. Even in war the youth are called upon to destroy life. After crafty statesmen and selfish politicians have tried their wits to outwit each other and having failed they call on the young to fight it out for them. Alexander the Great had conquered the world at the age of thirty-two, and most of the noted generals during our great Civil War were young men and the greatest number serving as privates were between eighteen and twenty years of age.

In Reformation and Restoration Young Men Predominated

In things religious the young have filled a very prominent place. Their zeal and enthusiasm have moved ahead every effort in religious reformation and restoration. Martin Luther was ordained at the age of twenty and at thirty he wrote his ninety-five theses in protest against the doctrines and practices of the Roman Catholic Church and nailed them on the door of the Castle Church at Wittenburg. What was intended first for the ministry became food for the hungry souls of the common people and it was the small flame that started the great Reformation which was the forerunner of the Restoration.

John Wesley was the son of a minister of the Church of England and he became a minister in the same church at the age of twenty-two and at twenty-five in association with his brother Charles began the work that laid the foundation for Methodism, which now counts its numbers by the millions.

Young Scriptural Characters

David was called and anointed to be the leader of the children of Israel in his youth, and God blessed him with the indwelling of the Holy Spirit which qualified him for his great work. So long as he kept himself free from sin he was a great leader and a blessing to his people. It was only when he defiled himself with sin that he lost favor with God and the people.

Samuel was dedicated to the service of the Lord when he was a child in his mother's arms (1 Samuel 1: 28) and when a young man he was called into the service of the Lord (1 Samuel 3: 4) and became one of the great prophets of Israel.

Nephi in his youth because of his fidelity and upright life and absolute trust in God became the leader among the Nephite people on the American Continent and during his entire life he had the confidence of his heavenly Father and of all his brethren that remained true and faithful to God. The righteousness of his life had a marked effect for good on the Nephite people for centuries afterward.

Mormon at the age of ten was an observant and sober child, and this had been observed by Ammoron, one of the great leaders among the Nephite people, and at the age of fifteen was visited of the Lord and he knew of the goodness of God and of Jesus Christ his Son. At the age of twenty-four he went to the Hill Shim, having been directed to do so by Ammoron, where he obtained the records upon which the history of the Nephite people was written. He became their great leader, and was a statesman, historian, general, and prophet, and served them until he was about eighty years of age.

Young Men in Latter-Day Work

Joseph Smith, before he was fifteen years of age had communion with Jesus our Lord and was given instruction that his heavenly Father had a great work for him to do. At the age of twenty-two he took from the Hill Cumorah the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. Before he was twenty-five years old, in the year 1830, he organized the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

A very large percentage of the men associated with Joseph Smith were young men. Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer, two of the witnesses to the Book of Mormon, were young men. Several of the apostles were young men. Orson Pratt was ordained a high priest at the age of twenty-one, an apostle at twenty-four, and during the period of his faithfulness to the ideals of the church he was one of her most brilliant men. Parley P. Pratt was an apostle at the age of twenty-eight. Many of the useful and faithful men were in their early thirties.

The late President Joseph Smith began his work at the age of twenty-eight and was assisted by a small but loyal army of young men. A few only will I mention as my memory recalls them; some of whom I have been acquainted with: Edmund C. Briggs, W. H. Kelley, Edmund L. Kelley, Charles Derry, Heman C. Smith, Columbus Scott, James McKiernan, Hans N. Hansen, and many others. But these are enough to show that in all parts of our country where the work was being carried on the young were helping their older brethren bear the burdens that were necessary to build up the work.

Some Work to Be Done

The work that must be accomplished before our Lord shall come again in power and great glory is great, and it will take a combination of the wisdom of the old and the energy and enthusiasm of the young, warmed by the glowing fire of the Holy Spirit, to accomplish the task. Some of the things that are to be done are as follows:

Missionaries must take the gospel in all the world as a witness to all nations.

Zion must be established and her children become a light to the world because of their righteousness and the abolition of poverty and its attendant evils.

The branches and Sunday schools, and Religios and Women's Department must have their faithful workers to care for the children of the covenant.

We must have business men, and professional men and women, mechanics, artisans, and agriculturists. All such are needed in the Lord's work, and they must come from the ranks of the young people.

Neither the young nor the old can do the work alone. There must be a hearty cooperation between them. It will be necessary for the older members to manifest by their works that they have faith in the latter-day work. A half-hearted loyalty will not be sufficient to inspire confidence in the young. We who have passed the half century mark, or are approaching it, must not forget that we at one time in the buoyancy of youth thought that what our seniors did was as strange as what we now do seems to them.

The great danger to our young does not lie in doing things differently from what we did them, but in the lapse from pure morals to become the servants of sin. Our surest way to save them from the contaminating influences of present-day evils is to make our own lives harmonize with the scriptural teachings and examples of our Lord Jesus Christ. What seem small hills to us of maturer years are to them big mountains of trouble and difficulty. For fault-finding we should substitute praise and commendation. The weakest effort and smallest results deserve our heartiest appreciation and commendation. Otherwise we may kill the tender plant that with a little care and nourishment would become a mighty oak strong enough to stand against all the storms that would beat against it.

In their failures to accomplish a great task or to reach the goal in struggling for a great ideal they need our sympathy and cooperation and not our condemnation. The young advance because of commendation and not because of detraction. Continually knocking against the evils of the world that surround them, will not save them without the presence of good in our own lives and encouragement by precept and example to drink from the same fountain that we have drunk from, provided that our own lives bear the fruit of righteousness as an evidence that we have been born again, of the water and of the Spirit. It is only on condition that our own lives have been right before God, that we will be free from condemnation if the young go astray in by and forbidden paths, which lead only to sorrow and heartaches.

Four Fundamentals

There are four fundamental principles that must be a part of the daily lives of our young people if they would make a complete success in their spiritual and temporal affairs.

1. Honesty. An honest person is one who is just and free from fraud, and such must be our relationship with God and our fellow men.

2. Industry. Without the habit of industry life must be a failure. It is the royal road to success. God and all good men condemn the lazy man, the idler. He is a burden to society. He is kept by the labors of others. Whether by mental or physical effort, success comes to the persistent worker who "digs in." If we desire to be happy and make others happy by rendering a service, we must work and continue to work while life lasts. Jesus said, "Work while the day lasts, for the night cometh when no man can work."

3. Economy. We must not waste our time or our money or other material wealth in our possession. It will bring us to poverty and want. If we are not frugal in the use of our material wealth we cannot give proper care to our homes, and in the church and other public ways we will fail to do our part. It should be our aim and ambition to be "laborers together with God" and not be shirkers in the great big busy world of opportunity.

4. Efficiency. An efficient person is one who has power to produce results, to accomplish something. If we cannot do things and do them well, we will fail in all that we undertake to do and the church and the business world are losers because of our neglect, and we must take our place in the crowded ranks at the foot of the hill.

Not a Joyless Life

I can imagine that I hear a chorus of voices from the young people saying, "Why, you have marked out our life to be one continuous round of work and drudgery, and left no place for pleasure, amusement, and recreation. Ah, that is where you make a mistake. I want you to have all those things, but they must be had in moderation, because the Holy Scriptures teach that we should be temperate in all things intrusted to our care. Pleasure is agreeable emotion and gratification; and that can be had from good books, music, art, rambles amidst natural scenery, and association with good companions who are refined and cultured and seek to find satisfaction only in those pleasures that enrich the soul, for such is the word of inspiration.

Amusement and recreation should not be used to waste our time, but to build up our wasted physical and mental powers. Recreation comes from the word recreate, to make new that which has been wasted by work or sickness. To play baseball, football, basket ball, take hikes, and engage in the various games which are common to childhood and youth; go only to picture shows that are morally clean, that enlighten the mind and stimulate to higher ideals and nobler resolves; to have only parties that bring innocent merriment and cheerful hearts, are all forms of recreation that should be indulged in by the young. There is no sin in it if it is done in moderation.

Our aim and purpose in life should be to do our part in the great drama of life faithfully and well;

What Young People Expect of the Church

A cross section of such views extracted from actual observations by young people.

[At a special service for that purpose, held at Creola, Ohio, December 28, 1921, various young people read papers and delivered addresses on the theme, "What do the young people expect of the church?" These young people were isolated and had no opportunity to use other ideas than their own. It being the holiday season, they could be at home for the occasion. We are using here only sentences and paraphrased ideas, specially pertinent to the subject, striving to preserve the individuality of the writers or speakers.—EDITORS.]

By Melba G. Kirkendall

As a young member of the church I expect spiritual support. This may be obtained by a clear, concise, definite presentation of the principles of faith, not once or twice a year, but a frequent repetition in order to instill them into the mind. A direct result will be a reverence for the church as an organization and for those in authority.

Because of our location, persons here are seldom if ever called on to do the several things that we who are out in the world are required to do—duties imposed by the complex society of the present day. We find the bulk of the responsibility transferred to our shoulders. It should be transferred, not shoved.

In some instances we find solutions for certain problems and they shove the responsibility upon us. Consequently when we need most the support of our elders, we are left at sea, and it is no wonder that often affairs left in our hands are disposed of in a worldly manner.

"Come unto me, all ye that are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Does that not sound far away, as something that used to be? It is a duty of the older ones of the church to keep watch over the young, and of the church itself that it may not lose its distinction as a house of God. Let us heed our elders; take advantage of their experience, and to render that measure of service to our fellow men that is due from us, according to the ability and talent that we possess. All our amusement and recreation should be to keep us "fit to fight" and not to gratify an abnormal craving for amusement. The young must ever keep before them the thought that life is a serious proposition, and it must be worked out with mathematical precision, and amusement and recreation indulged in with moderation will greatly assist them.

never lose sight of the ideals they have set for us, so that the worldly spirit cannot overcome the influence for good which our parents have bestowed upon us.

By Thelma Fri, Just Entering College

We may ask what we expect the church to do for us. To answer this we must ask ourselves, What are we willing to do for the church?

The church should be a place of worship where we may learn of the teachings of God and his servants which will bring us closer to the Divine Being and his works.

By the works of the church our lives should be made richer by the blessings bestowed upon us. How are we going to gain these blessings? By keeping the teachings of the church, and unless we are willing to sacrifice many of the worldly things, we may not hope to gain great benefits from the church.

The church should prove a great school where all the members could gain knowledge of the principles of the truth for which Christ gave his life. We must at all times be ready to make sacrifices.

By Maggie M. Stocker, School-Teacher

I expect to gain in proportion as I give. But I expect to gain better than I give. I would not be satisfied with anything less than the very best, and that is celestial life. By giving my best I could not give as much as I expect to receive.

The young people of the church are in quest of happiness. Happy is the man that findeth wisdom and the man that getteth understanding, says Solomon. I expect the church to direct me in the steps and when an opportunity comes to have me prepared for it. In seeking for the things of this life, our happiness depends on the motives and methods employed in the seeking, and from the church I expect the training that I may be prepared to use the proper ones, whether in the face of the world it spells success or failure.

In the social affairs of this life I expect the church to direct the activities of the young. If I want to play, the church should furnish the right kind of play. If I must entertain or be entertained, let the church furnish the right kind of entertainment.

I expect the church to develop me spiritually, physically, and mentally.

Then the duty of our church is to grant to its young people all the good things, whether they be social, educational, or spiritual, but with the good of the church, the body of Christ, always in view.

By Ethel C. Fri, School-Teacher

Surely we expect much of the church, but we should give accordingly. Now as never before the young need the church to draw them nearer to God.

Daily we meet temptations that can only be overcome by remembering the teachings of the church. The church should by its teachings be the means of enriching and enlarging our lives so that the world can readily distinguish us from those who have not accepted Christ as their teacher and guide. The church has an important work to perform and mission to fulfill. Its real function is to bring its members to the divine ideal and form the divine image within them. Often we hear people say: "I am not yet perfect enough to enter the church." The church should be the means by which our lives may be enlarged and perfected.

The church should be our education and school wherein we may learn from day to day to obey the principles of divine truth and the art of applying them to our lives until in the end we will be more nearly like Christ in life and character.

It should be the function of the church to teach mankind the divine law so that the ideals of Christ's philosophy might be translated into terms of human conduct.

We expect the church to demonstrate that as a learned man lives in a much larger life than the illiterate man does, so also does the person in whom the Christ character is formed live in a much larger world and enjoy much richer experiences in life than in unregenerate man.

We expect the church to be our refuge in times of doubt and when temptations are upon us. If our heart is in the church, there we shall be also.

By Mrs. Ethel Kirkendall

I was greatly impressed by Brother Elbert Smith's sermon in the HERALD of December 13 on "Two philosophies of life." He points out the good and evil of the world and we all know the church represents all that is good. The part that impressed me most was that we should be workers, never idle, ever ready to do something for the upbuilding of His kingdom, and to do this we must be prayerful.

By Ada N. Fri, School-Teacher

The age in which we live has everything in it to destroy the deeper emotions. So it requires a careful observance of our own tendencies and moods lest we become neglectful.

We must know the fundamentals and many of the details of the church organization before we can write intelligently upon it. I believe we should expect nothing more from any organization than we put into it, and I know that through the church we are blessed according to our faithfulness. After we become members of the church we cannot allow our spiritual development to come to a standstill and receive all the blessings promised to those who believe, but we must grow and obey the commandments of the church to prepare ourselves to receive these blessings.

By Gard H. Kirkendall, Business Man

This is a question that is not to be adequately handled in a short essay, nor even in an evening's discourse, as it has many phases and each phase a sermon in itself.

First, From what and from whom may the young rightfully expect anything?

Second, The real reason, not fancied, for this expectations?

Third, The proper means of obtaining the fulfillment of these expectations?

Fourth, What may they reasonably expect?

Or to sum up, from whom, why, how, and what may they reasonably expect their relationship with the church?

Each of these divisions may well be considered a topic well worth prayerful thought and study of each and every one interested in the young and for the young themselves to ponder and meditate over.

Briefly discussing the four divisions: First, from God, the Creator and Father of all humanity, we may expect the loving consideration he has promised. From Christ, Lord and Mediator, we can call upon him for all our spiritual needs with the assurance that our requirements will be properly taken care of. From the Holy Ghost, that God and Christ will through this medium give us comfort, admonition, and spiritual requirements necessary for our development.

The above three being one, and the divine head of the church here upon earth being an organization in which we as individuals are members, this organization owes to us many things.

The Presidency owe to us the best of their ability in the direction of the work. The ministry by their preaching may assist in bringing us to a full and complete understanding of the gospel plan. The branch officers may assist us in raising our spiritual level by teaching the various ways of keeping our minds on things spiritual. The individual members owe us a correct and moral life in every-day walk, setting a daily example for us to follow. The young, themselves, owe as their duty to follow the teachings, copy the example, heed the admonition, and joyfully accept the comforts which they receive, and through their own efforts, assisted by the heavenly One who trod the wine press of life alone, they should seek to obtain the crown, the reward of the faithful.

As to a reason, only one of many may be given. We are looking for eternal life as our reward and it cannot be obtained in the world at large. We must,

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Social Hour

Some sisters have written asking definition of the term "social hour," as used in connection with our suggested programs for social meetings. Other sisters are asking what the executive means by requirement No. 7 in the Standard of Excellence: "Social gathering of local once a month."

One of the recognized values resulting from societies and organizations which bring people together in a common purpose, whether that purpose be work or play, is that of social gain. Man is a social animal. That is why we have cities, companies, churches. That is why we have neighbors and beloved family ties. Meeting one another at rare intervals, in church or Sunday school, nodding across the room, or shaking hands with a pleasant good morning, is not enough to satisfy the innate hunger for social contact with those of like faith.

As sisters, we should seek to build up and cement the fabric of our common womanhood, and strive to make every member of our department—and now that means all the baptized girls and women of the branch, you know—feel that there is "a tie that binds," a common love and unity of purpose, which forms a circle too strong and loyal to be lightly severed.

In our earnest efforts to study and reach the heights of knowledge God has pointed out for our encouragement, we must recognize that he also planted this beautiful flower of sisterhood in our midst, and it is ours to cherish and nurture in every possible and holy way. "I am the vine, ye are the branches." The Spirit of Christ unites us all, and just as all parts of the body suffer with one ailing member, so the ideal of our locals should be to become so cemented by love and sympathy that together we suffer or rejoice, toil or play, study or serve.

This condition cannot be brought about by holding aloof from each other. It cannot be reached by the casual and superficial associations of the large or formal gathering. It cannot be reached wholly by participation in communion or therefore, apply to that which is not of the world for our needs and wants.

Means of obtaining or realizing our expectations. We should follow closely the gospel plan given to us by Christ, and through his agents more clearly explained; and, fighting a good fight and keeping the faith and enduring to the end, we receive our inheritance.

Briefly as to what we expect. Spiritual control or directions that we may not go astray. Educational control in that we may be better fitted to be workers in Zion or as messengers of Zion. Recreational control, that the physical being will be rationally developed and not be in contact with things that are unclean or even suggestive of uncleanness.

May the blessing of the Father and the Son and the sweet communion of the Holy Spirit help, aid, and assist us in coming to full realization of our needs and the carrying to completion the great work the Lord has for the young.

testimony services. It remains for the social hour, for exchange of experiences, expression of desires, opinions, plans, hopes, successes, and failures, to acquaint us fully with each other.

So we plan to spend a little time, once a month, when all may relax, may be joyful, smile, chat, and be happy together. This time may come after study hour or over a bit of handwork. In a lively game or discussion, vital forces may be renewed, youthful impulses revived, clouds and foreboding banished, and hope and confidence for the future re-established. Sometimes we mothers ponder too long and steadily our cares and duties, forgetting that it is sometimes our duty to turn our back upon care, snap our fingers at misfortune, and defy any experience of life to steal from us our unflinching and spontaneous good cheer. Are we not admonished: "Forget not the gladness of thy youth" and "Lift up thy heads and rejoice"? It is plainly our privilege then to combine with our serious study, the social hour.

Shall we serve refreshments? Well, why not? There is a peculiarity about human nature that makes us enjoy partaking of food in the midst of congenial company. Not that we need the "fourth meal," and often "Friend Husband" pays for our plenty with a scantier dinner that night! And then there is always that bugaboo of "Fair and forty" to consider! But where is the woman who will not take the risk, in order to sample Sister Jones's angel food, Sister Smith's prune whip, or Sister Brown's chicken salad? And as we sample, we exchange recipes, and then try them out on our long-suffering families—sometimes with amazing results! (Ever notice how a particular cake or salad will sweep through a community like measles or the mumps?)

So we say, let us include definite plans for our social hour along with our study. Let refreshments, if such there be, be simple and within our means, and never, at any time, make obligatory upon anyone who should not afford it. Many there be who make up most generously in labor what they cannot spare in money expenditure, and such should be made to feel that they are doing their full and just share. If, for any reason, any local has cause to believe that the serving of refreshments will keep any sister from joining or attending because she feels she cannot afford to follow the custom, let that local abandon the rule, and substitute other quite as pleasing features in their social hour. "Is not the life more than meat?" and are not harmony and unity more to be desired than "eats," which after all, are only intended as a means to the ends of sociability and enjoyment?

For the social hour in the April meeting, when the discussion is about the kitchen, the laboratory of the home, and exchange of favorite recipes would be interesting, or a description of a favorite cooking utensil. In some places it is possible to get a demonstrator who will cook a light meal in certain kinds of kettles or bakers and serve the food afterwards to the assembled ladies, which certainly is an interesting variation. Games bringing in the names of utensils, vegetables, fruits, grains, etc., could be indulged in. A little daughter of hostess or friend, dressed as Spring, in crepe paper fashioned like petals or calyx, could serve bonbons or wafers from a tray suspended by green ribbons around her neck. Music could be selected to emphasize the note of joy, and all present could join in singing, "Earth with her ten thousand flowers," found in our Hymnal.

Some locals follow the custom of meeting Wednesday afternoons at the church, serving light supper to which men and children come, and all staying for the midweek prayer service in the evening. Surely an excellent interpretation of the "social hour"!

The Kitchen

(Paper for March meeting of Women's Department locals.)

Since our physical bodies must be supplied in order to keep us mentally and spiritually capable of doing our best work, we must have a place suited to the preparation of our food. We all know from a few years of experience that we can work better if we have pleasant surroundings, and the proper conveniences for our work. We might ask ourselves the question, "How does kitchen decoration affect our work in cooking, or in other lines?" To answer this question, imagine the most beautiful kitchen you know and ask yourself whether you could do more efficient work in it than you could in one untidy and lacking in harmony of decoration.

The first requisite of a good kitchen is tidiness and orderliness. This in itself bespeaks care on the part of those who make the preparations for our meals. You may ask whether this is a part of decoration. I ask you: Is it not? When we look at God's handiwork do we not see perfect order? When man has not deformed it, we know it is so.

Light gives cheer, acts as a germ-destroyer, and makes it possible for us to work more easily and quickly. The light and proper ventilation keep our utensils in better condition than is possible in damp, unventilated quarters where dust and rust collect.

Good utensils should be chosen. One can buy a few at a time and care for them carefully, which in the end is less expensive than to buy cheap dishes which wear out quickly. Moreover, cheap porcelain and tinware are injurious to health where they are not carefully used.

Why not paint our kitchen a good shade of gray, with a light ceiling? In cities, where gas or electric stoves are used, a white or a blue kitchen is not only practicable but beautiful, restful, and a joy to those who work in it. Window shades should be in harmony with the walls, but of a slightly lighter tone, perhaps. Our cooking utensils may be chosen in the shades of the predominating color. Even gas and electric stoves are now made in these dainty shades.

Many kitchens otherwise neat and clean contain neglected stoves. Even a common cooking stove can be kept black and clean. A grease-bespattered and dusty stove, with rusty pipe and discolored nickel, gives one the impression that the housewife might forget properly to care for some of the cooking utensils, to be clean and sanitary in the preparation of some of the food served on her table.

The effect upon going into such tidy, dainty kitchens as one sometimes sees is refreshing. The housewife in her gray or blue house dress—for she, too, can be in harmony with her kitchen decoration—is pleasing to herself, as well as giving others the impression that she is a master workman in her shop. Her family will carry down through the years a picture of a noble woman, with neat hair, and pleasing dress, and it will form only one more part to that most important “home decoration,”—an ideal housewife! It is only too sad to-day that there are too few real homekeepers, ideal helpmates to their husbands.

The expense of a properly decorated room, harmonious, light, and orderly, is not necessarily much greater than that of a dingy, many-colored room, where everything is crowded and cluttered. In fact, the gray walls are not only tidier, but save the time in frequent redecorating and they can be easily cleaned. A painted wall is best, as it can easily be washed. The woodwork if new can be varnished, as this is neat, and is quickly refreshed with water, or an oiled cloth.

A Questionnaire for Guests

Ask yourself these questions and answer them truthfully, urges the Designer:

Am I a social asset?

Or am I a liability to any party?

Do I help along the fun?

Or do I have to be carried, a perfect deadweight, till things get really started?

Do I think all the time about whether I am enjoying myself or not?

Or do I realize that a welcome guest always more than “pays for her victuals”?

Am I the kind of woman that asks the pleasant introductory questions that start a new acquaintance?

Or am I always the one that waits for them to be asked?

Can I keep my head in a crowd that is telling entertaining gossip and not reveal a lot of things I will wish afterward I had not said?

Do I realize that simple, well-bred dignity will carry me through any situation, even when I do not know beforehand exactly what to do?

Or does it put me in an agony of shame for the evening to make some small “break”?

Do I know how to talk to an older woman without being impertinent or patronizing?

Do I ignore young girls?

Or do I, from motives of worldly common sense, if nothing more kindly, make friends of them?

Can I talk about anything but myself, my house, my husband and my children?

Or do people like to tell me all about theirs?

Do I have attacks of “foot and mouth disease”?

Or am I so afraid of making people sore that I agree spinelessly with everything everyone says to me, trusting to luck that they will never compare notes on my “opinions”?

Am I genuinely interested in other people?

Or do I constantly consider the impression I am making?

In other words, have I the subjective or the objective point of view?

Do I always think of other people in their relation to me?

Or do I get outside myself and consider them first?

Do people ask me to their houses because they want to, or because they feel they should?

An asset or a social liability—which am I?—Kansas City Star.

CHAPTER XVI

Interest

1. Contrast the effect of instinct and interest in the early life of the child.

2. Upon what do mental habits depend?

3. Try to express in your own words the meaning of interest: (a) subjectively; (b) objectively; (c) functionally.

4. We advocate, strongly, doing away with grade cards in school. Is there any psychological reason for our belief?

5. Explain “interest is finally an infallible barometer of the values we assign to our activities.”

6. Are we, as churchmen and women, “dominated by mighty interests grown into enthusiasm for some object”? Are the “great purposes growing so that our lives will be one of activity and achievement”? What is the achievement?

7. When people settle into an unmodified rut, why is it not possible to interest them easily?

8. What relieves our work of drudgery?

9. The fact that interests come and go, should be the source of much comfort to parents and teachers who have in their care those whose interests are in things of little consequence, or along evil desires. What should we seek to do?

10. Wise parents will utilize desirable interests when they appear and not put them off until the interest is fading, or gone entirely. Illustrate.

11. What is the danger in following too many interests? What should be done if our interests are too narrow?

12. Specialization is the clarion call of this age. What does the author say as to the time for its beginning in order that a proper balance may be sought?

13. Note that “Interest is not to supplant the necessity for stern and strenuous endeavor, but rather to call forth the largest measure of endeavor, of which the self is capable.” Try to read a treatise on the “Psychology of work.”

14. Discuss carefully the interests of early childhood; interests of later childhood; interests of adolescence.

15. Perform and discuss “Problems in observation and introspection.”

LETTERS AND NEWS

Graceland News

Graceland life has continued to be one of stirring activity for her many busy students. The programs given every day at chapel (9.30 a. m.) have been interesting, educational, and entertaining. Bringing as they do, lecturers, special music, or movie films, every student is found at chapel nearly every day, no compulsory attendance rules being necessary. Many down-town people find it worth while to attend at various times. The activities of the students in inter-literary society competitions have used up any spare time that might seem to be dull. More than ever, Graceland students are participating in the Sunday educational efforts being carried on at the church.

Alpha Chapter, Lambda Delta Sigma

The Lambda Delta Sigma Society, having the approval of the church authorities, is attempting to bring together the people of the church who are particularly interested in higher education, and will make an effort to promote higher education and research, and provide a competent seminar for the hearing and discussion of philosophical, educational, and church problems.

Graceland was fortunate in organizing the Alpha Chapter of this society. Already a number of excellent meetings have been held.

In the first formal meeting, President Lonzo Jones gave a discussion of some of the fundamental considerations in the "Problem of progress." He pointed out some principles of vital interest to the church, which he may later see fit to give wider circulation than was given by the discussion before the society.

In the second formal meeting, the president of the college, G. N. Briggs, discussed "The problems of peace." His considerations of the recent movements towards peace and the amicable settlement of international differences, together with an analysis of the means used, pointed the way towards the possibility of a new day when mankind would through agreement abolish war. He pointed to the disarmament conference as one of the most hopeful accomplishments of recent years.

The society holds meetings regularly each month, and will continue to have such discussions as those previously mentioned at each session. It is composed of the faculty, and also members of the previous year's freshmen class whose grades stood among the highest twenty-five per cent.

A key has been adopted as the badge of membership, the symbols on the key denoting some of the prominent church ideals and traditions.

Pageant of the History of Education

One of the biggest events ever attempted in the history of Graceland will be undertaken this spring. It will be a pageant on the "morality play" order, of the history of education. Every means will be used to make this spectacle one of very high educational order, dignity, dramatic power, and interest.

It has long been thought at Graceland, that in the history of education lay one of the mightiest human dramas ever known, a theme of the long upward struggle of the mind of man to be free, the fight towards light and truth, and toward a clearer consciousness of God, and the right ways of life.

This educational problem has much in common with our church ideals, in fact, in their broader significance, their problems are almost identical.

Already four acts of the pageant have been written, and the rest of the work is under way. Students are now at the task of making ready for it. There will be a cast of more than sixty-five persons in full costume, a large orchestra, and, if possible, an outdoor presentation.

Professor F. M. McDowell has supervised the educational content, and under his direction Leonard Lea is writing the pageant itself. Miss June Whiting will be in charge of the dramatization and production, Joseph Anthony and Mabel Carlile in charge of the music, and Mrs. Wilhelmina Johnson in charge of the choral movements and expressional features. The students are enthusiastic about the production, which promises success to the venture.

At present it is planned to have the pageant given on May 20. Anyone visiting Lamoni at that time might find it worth their while to stop and see what Graceland can do.

Ammon White to Hold Meetings in Little Sioux District

Owing to financial conditions we have been without a missionary for some little time but we have made arrangements now with the campaign committee for an evangelist to be with us soon.

Evangelist Ammon White is to be in the district after the 20th of this month and will start young people's revival meetings at Pisgah on Tuesday evening, March 21, 1922.

While these meetings are termed young people's meetings our numbers are too few to be exclusive so all will be needed so we can have full attendance.

Evangelist Ammon White expects to hold a week in each place. He will go from Pisgah to Moorhead, then to Mondamin. Other appointments will be provided for. All other branches not mentioned should get in bid as to dates after the branches already mentioned.

Now let us get busy and get behind this proposition and do some advertising and pushing which will be necessary to make these meetings a success.

Will say also that Brother White is a patriarch and any Saints desiring their blessing will have the opportunity during his stay in the district.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH W. LANE.

The work here is gradually growing. A number of new faces are among us. Brother and Sister Crane, from Tulsa, Oklahoma, have permanently located here and have proved to be good help in the branch. We are glad to welcome Brother Buschow among us again. He is planning on moving his family here in the near future. Past experience has proved their loyalty to the work. We want workers, not shirkers.

Brother E. A. Curtis spent last week at Blackwell, Oklahoma, on business, and preached to the Saints while there.

Our Bible class meets each Friday afternoon at the home of the sisters. We feel specially favored with such an able leader as Sister Kanady and are reaping wonderful results from our study.

The church is located at Osie and Water Streets. We are glad to welcome Saints.

Holden Stake

KNOBNOSTER.—The Saints here are rejoicing over the baptism of three persons, two adults and one child, which took place on Sunday, February 26.

Brother Earl Ross, who is a brother of I. M. Ross, of the Holden Stake Bishopric, has moved his family to this place from the Far West Stake.

February 26, President W. S. Macrae, of Warrensburg, was present and delivered a splendid sermon at the 11 o'clock hour. His sermon at 7.30 was well received. A wonderful outpouring of the Holy Spirit was experienced at the sacramental service held on March 5. Elder I. M. Ross was with us and preached for us in the evening.

BATES CITY.—We have one more added to our number. Sister Ruby Ford, wife of Brother John Ford, was baptized on February 19.

The committee appointed to arrange class quarters for our cradle roll class, has provided a low table with raised edge to keep playthings from rolling off, and a pretty homemade screen that shuts them off from the rest of the room. The class numbers eleven and our cradle roll superintendent, Sister Anna Bailey, is the teacher. Sunday, February 26, Elder George Essig, of Independence, occupied the pulpit at the morning hour.

The Saints here are glad to learn that our stake president is improving, and hope the Lord will answer our prayers for his final recovery.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

The work is making considerable progress here; some missionary services have been held and more are to follow. We believe earnest, systematic work among nonmembers is a very important part of branch endeavor.

Knowing that Brother J. D. Curtis, one of our missionaries who resides here, would be home for the holidays, our pastor, Brother Rich, made arrangements for a series of meetings. Accordingly services were held from December 27 to January 12. The little chapel was full every night and some nights all standing room was taken. A large part of the congregation was nonmembers, many of them attending nearly every night and hearing for the first time in their lives a regular series of sermons on the first principles of the gospel, divine authority, the early church, the apostasy, etc. Those who are well acquainted with Brother Curtis say he was at his best during this series. Several evenings, elders of the dominant church in Utah were present, and during the time for questions commenced their usual tactics, but Brother Curtis handled them nicely with their own books, as our men always do.

Sister Chandler, our musical director, is to be commended for her steady, faithful service, as well as others who assisted in special numbers, and the speaker who sang gospel songs accompanied with his guitar.

During the forepart of the series a lady was baptized, and last evening seven heads of families and four young people in their teens were baptized, making twelve in all.

The success of the meetings is also due in large part to the earnest and consecrated music, distribution of all kinds of church literature, fireside talks, newspaper advertising, and the prayer of faith from the entire branch—all most necessary in an undertaking of this kind. After all is said and done, we give all the praise to the great God of all mercies, the fountain head of all truth.

It is unnecessary at this late date to go into detail concerning last summer's work here, but it is sufficient to say that at that time, after considerable campaigning, the branch bought a missionary tent for $150, with seating capacity of two hundred fifty, which was pitched two blocks from the post office, where from July 24 to August 7 we held forth with Brother Wixom. Also Brother O. E. Sade preached one night, a rousing sermon on the Restoration.

Some of those who heard their first Latter Day Saint sermon there began investigation, resulting in their baptism during the series this winter. Others are to be baptized on next Sunday evening, a number who have been studying the claims of the church for a long time.

February 22, Brethren Wixom and May, en route from Pueblo to conference in Denver, were with us: each gave us a good, rousing, enthusiastic talk. Brethren May and Curtis accompanied the singing with their guitars, the former having with him a good many gospel songs of his own composition which he has used effectively throughout the district.

We are now working and praying for divine aid during the series of meetings to begin next Sunday evening and run over the second Sunday and a week more if interest warrants. Brethren Wixom and May will do the preaching and of course J. Charles will have his guitar—he just can't travel without it.

In July, 1920, Brother Calvin H. Rich was sent here to preside over this branch and conditions began to improve immediately, slowly perhaps, at first, but surely; and now a new day has dawned. We have a united priesthood, which is absolutely necessary if a branch is to do its work. With this equipment, together with a wise and capable pastor, and a faithful, consecrated membership, we expect to accomplish good. Another factor which is helping us is that much new blood has come in. Among the late arrivals is Brother E. W. Rogers, of Burlington, Colorado, who came about Christmas time and who is in a few days to have his wife and six children with him. Space forbids personal mention of many who have joined our ranks lately by baptism and transfer—they are all equally welcome. We need them.

We are trying to keep in mind that we are "called to be Saints," and are anxious to move forward in faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, and diligence. May God help us to put away all selfishness and grow in selflessness and service to mankind.

R. S. SALYARDS, JR.

Orion, Michigan

Orion Branch is in a fine condition at present and we are looking forward to a brighter future. Last June Brother F. S. Brackenbury held a series of meetings for three weeks and baptized four. One week ago, Brother William Fligg came and stayed a week, and last Sunday five more were added to the church.

Brother Curtis Lambkin is our branch president and is loved and respected by all the Saints. We are looking forward to the time when the whole branch can come to dwell in Zion, but we feel that there is a great work to accomplish here.

We hope to have Brethren Fligg and Liston at Oxford next summer. Oxford is but three miles distant from Orion and many of the Saints belonging to the Orion Branch reside there. We feel that a work is to be done there, as the people have heard but three or four sermons and those were preached by Brethren Glen Sager and Clyde Gault on the street corner last fall.

JULIA HAMMOND.

First Saint Joseph, Missouri

Far West stake conference was held in our church the 11th and 12th. The stake presidency, R. S. Salyards, and Elders, Roberts and Robertson presided. Under their management the business sessions were ably and satisfactorily conducted.

During the Sunday sessions the church was crowded to capacity for the first time since the large audience that recently greeted President Frederick M. Smith.

The weather was mild and pleasant. An interesting feature of the Saturday night meeting of the Women's Department, Sister Anna Salyards in charge, was an initiation ceremony by the Temple Builders of this branch, led by Minnie Scott Dobson, assisted by Edna Christianson. Sister Leggett, of the Third Branch, also did well in this program.

Church Recorder F. A. Russell was present and conducted a discussion of vital interest with a large class of the priesthood at the Sunday school hour. Apostle Rushton addressed the priesthood at eight in the morning, and preached both in the forenoon and the evening to very large and delighted audiences. We are especially thankful to President Salyards for bringing Brethren Rushton and Russell from Independence to edify us during the conference.

Brother Salyards and Apostle Rushton presided over the crowded social meeting in the afternoon, during which W. W. Scott was ordained to the office of high priest, and made a member of the stake high council. The First Branch highly appreciates this ordination, and feel that it comes as a well earned reward to Brother Scott. At the same time two excellent young men from Stewartville were ordained, Frank L. Hinderks to the office of elder, and George W. Hinderks to the office of priest, after which their father, T. T. Hinderks, made an impressive talk, expressing his pleasure at the fulfillment of his hopes in the life work of his sons.

We hope President Salyards will arrange for more visits from church officials of Independence from time to time.

H. S. SALISBURY, Correspondent.

Omaha, Nebraska

Omaha is attempting to maintain her place among the recognized progressive branches of the church. Our immediate activities along the building line are further curtailed, due to some unwise local legislation which at present is being tested by others before the appeal court. A favorable decision for them means we will be able to proceed also.

Brother Frank Hupp, of Woodbine, Iowa, has been here in the Presbyterian Hospital for twelve weeks. He has had four blood transfusions and is now making some improvement. It is the hope of himself and his wife, who both have exhibited the greatest patience and trust in God, that the united prayers of God's people may now bring about his speedy recovery.

We had a pleasant visit from our worthy Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith. His ministry on the Sabbath day, both at South Side and Omaha Branches was superseded only by his personal contact as he visited among the membership from day to day. He is loved and respected because of a splendid record established here while he was pastor for six years, twenty years ago.

Brother T. J. Elliott assisted Brother Burton on the Indian reservation at Walthill. The effort by Brother Burton resulted in a great ingathering. Fifty-two were baptized, about twenty-four of them Indians. He will baptize others the coming week. He is again holding meetings at Decatur and baptizing people there also. This indeed makes our Northeastern Nebraska District feel the wholesome effect of the missionary spirit.

Our Sunday school is climbing skyward. Last Sunday one hundred fifty were present. We have been fortunate in securing the services of Sister Rose Adams on the Sunday school executive, as an assistant to Brother Harry Wrenn.

One of our organized classes, "The Garden Fairies," provided the closing exercises and program last Sunday. Dorothy Elliott, president, had charge and announced the program: Class history read by Lois Wrenn; a very beautiful poem composed and read by Phyllis Leeka; class song by all the girls moved many in attendance.

A supper, fair and entertainment was given by the local Women's Department, Friday, February 24. It was one of those wholesome, enjoyable affairs in which the Saints delight, and all present expressed themselves as satisfied and benefited by the experience of the evening. In the eight booths erected, sales were made netting the Women's Department a fine cash profit. This money will be used to help furnish our new church.

Our West Side Mission Sunday School is still prospering. Brother J. C. Crabb, now eighty-eight years old, hale and hearty, clear of mind, preached a well received sermon at our evening service. He had also preached at the South Side Branch in the morning.

Sister Nettie Anderson, who organized the Garden Fairies, has returned to Lamon. She was a splendid worker and we regret very much our loss.

Seattle, Washington

February has passed with its budget of events and experiences since our last writing. Among the most prominent events was our conference at Centralia on February 25 and 26. The attendance was light but the spirit was peaceful. A forward movement was made towards purchasing a new tent for reunion purposes. All are urged to contribute to this end. Those isolated can send to undersigned or H. A. Sprague, 1321 Humboldt Street, Bellingham, our treasurer, also bishop's agent. The next reunion will be held in Centralia in August.

The most pleasing feature of the Friday night entertainment was the reciting of "The two pictures" by Brother George Sowers, a lad thirteen years old. His brother Roy also did some excellent reciting. Great care should be taken to present only that which is elevating and purifying, for the end to be attained is purity.

Brother S. S. Smith visited us Sunday and gave us a good sermon in the evening taking the eleven o'clock boat for home. He held a pleasant service in the morning at Tacoma where we have a struggling little mission under the care of Brother J. O. Hower of Roy.

Brother H. A. Sprague, our wide-awake bishop's agent, attended conference and made his calling known upon every suitable occasion. He is zealous and wise.

Our sacramental service was usually good and spiritual. Seventy-five partook of the emblems.

We miss very much our chorister, Sarah Barney, from our musical department also her daughter Gale from our Sunday school work, but we look forward with fond hope to our incoming chorister, Sister Florence Love, who with the competent help we have will lessen the loss, if not supply it.

The Mother Ryther Home has passed into new management, under which we, with all other religious people are shut out. Legal protest has been inaugurated against the change.

The Everett Mission is progressing very well. Brother

Stearns is standing at his post with Brother Nichols as a good support. There is one candidate there for baptism.

Brother G. R. Brundage is working in the region of Anacortes and Lynden and other points. The invitations for missionary work in this district are very few, the spirit of indifference is dominating the people.

J. M. TERRY.

Independence

As Pastor Hopkins remarked Sunday, it seemed to have developed into Apostles' Day at the Stone Church. At the eleven o'clock hour R. C. Russell addressed an audience in the upper auditorium, T. W. Williams an audience of young people, ages twelve and up, in the lower room, and G. T. Griffiths was at the same time addressing an audience of children in the dining hall, aged from twelve down. Then at night T. W. Williams preached in the main auditorium. Brother Hopkins estimated that there were fifteen hundred people in attendance at the various services in the morning and that the total attendance during the day was around five thousand. And the day was rather raw and blustery, too.

President F. M. Smith has been ill the past week and unable to be at his office. He has had influenza but is convalescent, having been out a few hours on Monday of this week.

The concluding address of the series to the priesthood at the Sunday afternoon meetings was given by President Elbert A. Smith last Sunday. His subject was "The fruits of the Spirit." Much interest has been manifested in these meetings, and the lectures will be reported in The Priesthood Journal from month to month and available sooner in tract size at ten cents each.

Considerable interest is manifested in the coming election. Bishop I. A. Smith was nominated on the Republican ticket for councilor from the fourth ward but resigned and Henry C. Smith has been chosen in his place. Bishop Mark H. Siegfried was nominated by the Democrats as councilor from the fourth ward but he resigned and R. J. Lambert has been chosen in his stead. Bishop B. J. Scott, pastor of the Walnut Park church, is seeking the office of city marshal on the Republican ticket. The city marshal is chief of police.

An interesting development of the young people's movement in Zion is the plan of holding special two-evening meetings in the various groups under the auspices of the young people. Group 18 recently held the first of such meetings at the home of Walter W. Smith. They do their own advertising, provide their own song services, and distribute tracts and announcements in the territory themselves. In this instance the time was divided by some of the younger men of the priesthood, Wayne Smith and Francis Holm occupying the first evening and Kenneth Morford and Evan Fry the second. Other groups are arranging for similar efforts and likely each of the thirty-eight will have such meetings. The young people are securing many tracts and doing some intensive studying so they can represent the work more efficiently.

At the Religio last Friday evening T. W. Williams, superintendent of the general department, was given most of the time, and he made a keynote speech on the status and ideals of the Religio. It was much appreciated. Next Friday evening the program will consist of two reels of motion pictures on the life of Lincoln, followed by round table discussion on the Religio in charge of T. W. Williams.

The radio sermon Sunday evening was broadcasted from the studio of the Central Radio Company, Kansas City, by E. D. Moore, his subject being "The basis of true religion." For several weeks there have been no sermons sent out, there being several technicalities, mechanical and otherwise, involved, but it is planned from now on to send out such sermons each Sunday evening from Kansas City at 360 meter wave length, beginning at eight p. m. with a concert, and the sermon beginning at 8.15. Brother Arthur B. Church, president of the company, and who is managing the work, thinks he will be ready next Sunday evening to send out some vocal and instrumental numbers by our own talent. Heretofore this has been limited to phonograph selections.

The marriage of Brother James Bunt, formerly of Plymouth, England, to Frances Ecclestone, eldest daughter of Brother William Ecclestone, formerly of Leicester, England, but now of Independence, occurred at the home of the bride's parents on March 11. The ceremony was performed by Elder J. W. Rushton. Brother Bunt was for a time an active general officer in the Religio Society.

The social held by the Laurel Club at the home of T. J. Watkins recently was attended by most of the apostles now in Independence, in addition to other local notables, and being Saint Patrick's Day, the wit of the Irish and English blended with that of the Americans and made the evening one of much social success.

San Francisco, California

On February 23 Clyde F. Ellis and wife arrived in this city, en route to the South Sea Islands. He preached in Oakland and San Francisco. They were well entertained by the Saints here. A reception was given them by the Oakland Branch, where brotherly love was well demonstrated. On March 3 they sailed on the Tahiti for their foreign mission.

Last Sunday we had a splendid sacrament and prayer service. A few nonmembers were present who said they enjoyed the service. We had with us G. M. Shippy and his son and their wives from Oregon. They took part in the meetings and felt at home with us. They were strangers among us, but not to the cause, and enjoyed the spirit of the meeting.

All the preaching here of late has been in presenting the word. Much of the Holy Spirit is enjoyed in all our services and the speakers are very ably assisted by the Spirit which inspires and teaches and strengthens all in the faith. The Sunday school and Religio are doing well; attendance good and lessons interesting and instructive.

GEORGE S. LINCOLN.

Saint Louis, Missouri

At the evening service on the 5th, we were permitted to hear a good lecture by a member of the Anti-Saloon League, who assured us the war is still on against the sale of intoxicating drinks, and, since we as a church have always been on the side of prohibition, all could heartily indorse the speaker's views. The only wonder to us is that any can desire to continue the sale of liquor when the benefits of prohibition are so self-evident.

On the 12th Brother Archibald gave one of his convincing sermons on the text, "Teaching for doctrine the commandments of men."

The evening sermon was to a somewhat larger attendance than usual.

It seems wise to have our young people informed as to the origin and reasons for some of the beliefs promulgated as religious creeds.

Our Sunday school is in a very healthy condition, Religio good, and choir improving.

E. BURGESS.

HANFORD, CALIFORNIA, March 6, 1922.

Editors Herald: Early on the morning of February 23 Elder W. A. Brooner and the writer left Guernsey, near this place, where we had been preaching since January 29, and started for the district conference at Fresno. We missed the Religio institute, which was the forenoon meeting, but were present at the Sunday school convention in the afternoon, and also at the entertainment, a splendid program, which was rendered by the Religio and Sunday school combined in the evening.

Saturday was the business day for the conference. J. D. White, the district president, was present and filled his office with great efficiency. W. H. Dawson, vice president, also Religio field worker, was regrettably absent, but the other vice president, J. T. Smith, jr., who is also the district superintendent for the Sunday school, was in attendance and occupied in his office in both departments. In the conference work the writer did what he could.

Saturday night W. A. Brooner occupied acceptably on the blessings of the Holy Spirit, while I spoke Sunday at 11 a. m. on the special subject of "Divine healing: is it a farce or a fact?" The Sunday school session at 9.45 was in charge of Brother Smith, assisted by the officers of the local school. In the afternoon at two Elder J. D. White spoke, in which effort he gave some timely counsel, as he did also in his report on Saturday. This sermon was followed by a prayer and priesthood meeting. A sermon at night closed the conference. Elder Brooner and I left in the afternoon and I have not heard who delivered the evening sermon.

No regular elections were held in either church or Sunday school. However, the resignation of Brother Robert Cowden made the election of a new secretary necessary. Elder A. C. Hawley was chosen to fill the unexpired term; and the state of health of Sister Fred Lawn, of San Jose, made the selection of another Sunday school librarian needful. Brother Rush Gilbert, of the same place, was elected to act in her stead. This was much regretted, both because of Sister Lawn's efficiency in office and her affliction. We believe, however, that Brother Gilbert will be a worthy successor.

A good spirit was present in the institute, the convention, and the conference; altogether the gathering was the best winter assembly I have attended in the district. Although there was earnest controversy it was conducted in good temper. All regretted the absence of Brethren Rushton and Pitt. The former had gone to attend the sessions of the joint council at Independence, Missouri, and the latter was detained at home because of the state of Sister Pitt's health.

The Fresno church being too small to accommodate the gathering, the Odd Fellows' Hall was secured for the occasion. Elder Samuel Wood, the branch president, worked night and day to promote the work of the conference; and all the Fresno Saints were courteous and hospitable.

With bright hopes for the future of the district and the work of the church in general, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

A letter from Molly Rohlig, of Bell Rapids, Ontario, states that Brother Archie Watson, of Petersboro, Ontario, who has been a patient sufferer the past six years, three of which were spent in bed, has gone to his last reward. He formerly lived in Detroit, and will be remembered by some of the Saints there. Though crippled, he was a faithful worker for the church, distributing tracts and books to all who would read. He set a good example for those better able to serve God.

Old Books and Periodicals Wanted

The General Church Library and the library of the Historian's office are greatly in need of a number of early church publications which could be supplied by the Saints, and would be acceptable as a loan or gift.

A few days ago Sister M. E. Hulmes, of Independence, made a gift of some very rare old publications. These she discovered in her library which had come down from her father who was a member of the church in an early day. These books had not been in use for half of a century, but the gift to the library puts them in constant use by the various departments of the church. This is very desirable and doubtless many others could do the same with great profit to the church.

During the year 1921 the following persons made donations of books and pamphlets for the Historian's Library. We appreciate these gifts, and offer our thanks on behalf of the church.

John Davis, Stewartville, Missouri.

Parley Batten, Chariton, Iowa.

Mrs. Joseph Arber, Independence, Missouri.

Ruth Lewis Holman, Xenia, Illinois.

C. H. Barrows, Lamoni, Iowa.

E. L. Trout, Trenton, New Jersey.

Granville Trowbridge, Independence, Missouri.

Paul Hanson, Independence, Missouri.

A. B. Karlstrom, Papeete, Tahiti, Society Islands.

W. J. Haworth, Rozelle, Sydney, New South Wales.

C. H. McClure, Warrensburg, Missouri.

Hosea H. Bacon, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Will those having old church books, papers, periodicals, and pamphlets kindly write us, as we would be glad to know who have them, even if they do not care to part with them now.

Very sincerely,

WALTER W. SMITH,

General Church Historian and Librarian.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of the Western Colorado District: Owing to the resignation of Brother David S. Boyd as Bishop's agent of the Western Colorado District, Brother George W. Caviness has been appointed to fill the office.

We desire to express our appreciation of the services of Brother Boyd and the support which the Saints of the district have given him as the representative of this office. We are sure you will find Brother Caviness to be a faithful servant in teaching the financial feature of the gospel law and assisting you to comply therewith.

May you be abundantly blessed, both spiritually and temporally, in your efforts to honor the Lord by obedience to his will.

Sincerely, your coworker,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of the Southeastern Illinois District: Having received the resignation of Brother L. M. Edmunds as Bishop's agent of the Southeastern Illinois District, we have appointed Brother Charles H. Wesner, 429 South Maple, Centralia, Illinois, as his successor. Beginning April 1, 1922, you should send your tithing and offering to Brother Wesner.

We want to express our appreciation of the services Brother Edmunds has rendered this office, which, at times, have tried him heavily, owing to the demands made upon him in his secular work.

Soliciting your support of your newly appointed Bishop's agent in the work of his office, and praying that the Lord may add his blessings as you endeavor to live by every work which he has given for the welfare and happiness of his believing children, I remain

Sincerely your coworker,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

Presiding Bishop.

Second Assistant General Superintendent

Having received the resignation of A. W. Smith as second assistant of the general Sunday School Department, we hereby appoint Floyd M. McDowell to this office.

An appreciation of the work of Brother A. W. Smith as second assistant in boosting the Christmas offering during the past few years should be recognized by all Sunday school workers.

We solicit your hearty support for his successor.
A. MAX CARMICHAEL, Superintendent.

Reunion Notices

Clinton District, Rich Hill, Missouri, August 25 to September 3. Saints should plan to be present. We make a special appeal to the young people to be present, and it will be well for their parents to help them plan so they can be there. The committee is anxious for the welfare of the young people and their plan is to have a good leader of young people so they will have a happy time and in a spiritual way, and otherwise they will be amply provided for. We want a hearty response from the old, middle-aged, and the young. Edward Rannie, for the committee.

Pastoral Notice

To the Saints of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District: Notwithstanding that the expiration of my general church appointment is set to take place April 1, the First Presidency have requested that I still continue to act as your district president until the convening of the next district conference, which will be June 9, 10, and 11, at Clear Lake, Indiana. My work now in the district presidency must be done by correspondence, and through my counselors, Elders E. K. Evans, 519 Ottawa Avenue, N. W., Grand Rapids, Michigan, and Elder William F. Shaub, Ray, Indiana, R. F. D.

All matters pertaining to the district may be referred to the undersigned at 400 East Fourth Street, Holden, Missouri, and the same will receive prompt attention, and can refer matters needing personal attention to one or the other of my counselors. In case of an exigency needing immediate attention, branch presidents may call on the counselor nearest to them. Brother Evans will be in easy reach of Grand Rapids, Michigan, Alto, Belding, Lansing, Hartford, Kalamazoo, and Galien; Brother Shaub will be in easier reach of Clear Lake, Coldwater, Hibbard, Knox, and Battle Creek.

Let us all do all we can for the maintenance of the work wherever we are. The time that is now upon us demands action, devotion, sacrifice, and consecration. Let us waste neither our time nor substance. Best not to undertake any proposition requiring a great outlay of money either for ourselves or for the local work of the church, only in cases of real necessity.

May the peace and blessings of the heavenly Father rest and abide with you.

Your servant for Christ's sake,
H. E. MOLER, District President.

Conference Minutes

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS. At Atchison, March 3, 4, and 5, with all departments of church work represented. The Women's Department was ably presented in two lectures by Mrs. Anne Roberts, cradle roll superintendent, of Independence, and Doctor Caroline Juergens, of Topeka. Brother Hedrick, bishop's agent, reported total receipts for the year ending December 31, as $2604.60. District officers for the year: James A. Thomas, Troy, president; A. P. Crooker, 966 Lindenwood Avenue, Topeka, Sunday school superintendent; Ira G. Whipple, 1034 Garfield Avenue, Topeka, Religio superintendent; Mrs. Emma Hedrick, 714 Parallel Street, Atchison, organizer Women's Department; Roy L. Tilden, Fanning, district secretary. Next conference on reunion grounds, Netawaka, August 18 and 19. Conference sermons were by Brethren Short, Fike, and Thomas. Frank G. Hedrick, reporter.

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA. At Centralia, Washington, February 25 and 26. J. M. Terry and S. S. Smith, district presidency, in charge. Spiritual reports showed branches in fair condition, Bellingham and Roslyn not reporting. The treasurer's report, for one year ending December 31, showed a balance on hand of $52.31, which included $28.50 belonging to the district Sunday school, derived from a debit of $114.74 and expenditures of $62.43. Bishop's agent's report showed total receipts of $2,488.48 with an even expenditure consisting of tithes, offerings, and auditorium fund, for six months ending December 31, including two months of his predecessor. Statistical reports showed Seattle with a membership of 365, gain 8; Centralia 192, loss 5; Bellingham 92, gain 21; Roslyn 23, loss 14; New Westminster 111, gain 13; Chilliwack 46, loss 1 and nonresident 33, gain 9. Total number as reported, 862. Disorganized branches: Tacoma, Castle Rock, and Nanaimo with enrollment of 14, 27, and 6, makes grand total 909 for the district. Ministry reporting: S. S. Smith, G. R. Brundage, F. W. Holman, H. A. Sprague, Duncan Calder, and H. O. Hower. No report of the tent fund, but the amount understood to have reached upwards of $250. Efforts to still increase the amount were ordered and the district presidency and treasurer authorized to select design and purchase new assembly tent in time for use at the coming August reunion. Recommendations were granted for the ordination of James E. Howard, of Centralia, to office of priest, and George H. Welch, of Chilliwack, to office of teacher. Centralia is selected as place for holding reunion. District presidency were elected reunion committee with power to elect such assistants as needed. A petition that a branch be organized at Vancouver, British Columbia, is granted. The secretary is ordered to purchase four dozen each of Hymnal and Zion's Praises for district and missionary purposes, to be placed in the hands of the librarian. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 3633 Whitman Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Our Departed Ones

HOLBROOK.—A. Holbrook was born in the State of New York, eighty-five years ago. Died at his home on Spicerville road, February 17, after several weeks' illness. Served in the Civil War, two years and two months. Lived in Hamlin Township, Michigan, fifty-four years. Survived by his wife, four sons, and several grandchildren. Funeral services from the home, under the auspices of James B. Brainard Post, No. 111, G. A. R., Reverend Claffin officiating. Interment in Oakwood cemetery.

Died at his home in Ottawa, Kansas, February 9, at the age of forty-four years, two months, and seven days. Leaves parents, one sister, wife, and five children. Funeral sermon by Ellis Short, jr.

Why Not Beautify Church Premises?

All too often the building and grounds where we hold our religious services are sadly neglected, and instead of being objects of beauty and inspiration, are ugly and unattractive.

Since the cost is so little in making the premises of our church buildings look inviting and beautiful, we may well conclude that it is often principally a lack of definite purpose or organization to the end of making not only the building presentable and attractive, but the center of a well-planned arrangement of grass, flowers, vines, and shrubbery.

High-priced landscape gardening skill is not required, though it might pay rather than make expensive blunders that could not be corrected in years. Work like this should be done with the future in mind and definite plans made to get the right effects in grouping and coloring.

However, a sensible study of the situation, together with care in the selection of plants that will give the effect desired, and a little hard but interesting work, are the real requirements. Every average community has people in it who can and will attend to this important task if they are supported and given a little fund with which to work.

The amount expended ordinarily need not be large, especially in a rural community, for very often bulbs, plants, and seeds will be gladly donated for the purpose in sufficient amounts and varieties to satisfy most of the needs.

Most nurseries and some seed houses will gladly offer advice as to the right arrangement and selection if correct diagrams and descriptions are furnished, with an idea of general desires.

We know of one of our brethren who has become the star salesman with his nursery company because he studied the problem and was able to offer such excellent advice to his prospective customers on planning and selection. Of course he expected to sell them the stock, and usually did it, but his service was the appreciated kind, and it paid him and satisfied them.

The branch custodian deacon should be given the support he needs in this matter of beautification, even to the extent of associating with him if thought advisable members from the Religio and Sunday school. Let everybody help with advice, assistance, and funds—mostly the latter two.

The chief thing is to have something done and done this spring. Start now before it is too late for things to do well. Then be sure to see that the tender young things planted and set out are cared for. Keep the weeds down but also keep up a dust mulch. If the trying hot days later cause the plants to demand water, give it to them.

The reward will be an hundred fold, not in financial remuneration, but in esthetic values. You will have a legitimate joy in difference manifest. Your children will come to think more reverently of the house of God. Their latent artistic ideals will be developed, and some of them will go straightway home and demand that they be permitted to live under better surroundings. Others will see in this community effort a consistent supplement to parental ideals under which they have been reared, and appreciate the thoughtfulness of those who have made their homes beautiful.

One Sunday school we know of is already planning to have flowers in the room each Sunday possible, and further, to see to the distribution of them to the homes of the shut-ins. This is to be supplemented by learning of songs so the children can cheer the hearts of those who need it most by not only an offering of flowers, but an expression of their souls through the favorite songs of the church. It is an example worthy of emulation.

Unto Thee, O Proof Reader

Who has not taken delight in finding on the printed page something the proof readers overlooked? But how many realize the large number of errors which might have appeared but for the constant alertness of those who are expected to be a hundred per cent perfect, yet find no other human beings built that way? The following letter and poem present an interesting sidelight on the subject:

Dear Editor: At a session of the Pen and Ink Club, in Independence, one member, a former proof reader, had given expression to some of his grief against writers in general, because of their carelessness and their depending upon the information of the proof reader. He told of some of the matters which he had been compelled to verify, and of some discrepancies left for him to correct. Within a few days he received the following poem from one of the members who had been present at the session, which convinced him that he had done full justice to the failings and frailties of writers, and to the task of the professional reader.

Unto Thee, O Proof Reader

Proof Reader wondrous! Whose erudition Beats college!
Who givest down without intermission
All knowledge!

We sow our words on our copy
Heedless and free,
Lightsome are we and sloppy,
Trusting in thee!

For lo! Thou knowest all things!
The words of Saint Thomas;
The names of Fijian kings
And when to use commas;

How to spell Beloochistan,
When Venus makes her transit;
The name of the unknown man
Who brews hootch in Amagansett;

The law of rhythmic vibration,
The length of any river,
The statistics of immigration,
And the function of the liver;

Who discovered uranium;
How deep is the sea—
All, all is in thy cranium!
Blessings on thee!

How about the shade trees on the church premises? Have they been pruned of excess branches and attention given to the shape of the top? Have scars on the trunk been cared for as one would care for a cavity in a tooth?

Are the bare spots on the lawn seeded and raked, with care to give the new grass a start? Do you know that clover is a biennial which if not allowed to seed will die out the second year?

Has the entire lawn been raked and cleaned, not only for its own sake but to kill the insects and eggs which flourish in trash and come forth to destroy each spring?

Every church should be representative of the ideals of the people who worship in it—are you willing to be judged by yours?

The Meaning of the Lord's Supper

"Do this in remembrance of me."

The Lord when he instituted the sacrament service, plainly directed the church, "This do in remembrance of me." "This is my body." "This is my blood." In the prayer in the consecration of the emblems we eat in remembrance of the body of Jesus and witness unto God that we are willing to take upon us his name, and always remember him, to keep his commandments which he has given us. This prayer is repeated with the wine, which is in remembrance of his blood which was shed for us.

From the Corinthian letter we learn that the Apostle Paul stated in his day that he that eateth or drinketh unworthily does so to the condemnation of his own soul. He does not discern the Lord's body. For this cause many among them were sick and many had fallen asleep.

We cannot for one moment suppose that they had forgotten so soon the fact of his crucifixion and resurrection. It cannot be sufficient, therefore, that we remember in a vague way that it is related in the New Testament that he was crucified for our sins, that we remember in that way the historical fact that his body and blood were offered for us, for they doubtless held that in remembrance, yet ate and drank unworthily because they discerned not the Lord's body.

When we discern in the bread and wine the body and blood of Jesus, then in partaking we partake of his nature, and our body becomes, in a way, his. This, of course, is not true in any cannibalistic sense; it is only symbolic, to impress upon our minds the great truth that perhaps is more clearly expressed by the Apostle Paul when he states, writing to the Corinthians, "Know ye not that your bodies are the temples of the living God? He who polluteth the temple of God, him will God destroy." Or again, "Know ye not that your bodies are the temple of the Holy Spirit? Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price." When, therefore, we discern the Lord's body, we recognize as a ransom that he has purchased our bodies and they are his, and should be kept for the dwelling place of the Holy Spirit.

We recognize that in taking this bread and blood within ourselves that it is symbolically to express the similar thought that our bodies should be the dwelling place of God. This is to be remembered not simply in the hour of the sacrament service, not alone on the Lord's Day, but on the morrow and the the next day and the next week and next month and year.

Our bodies are the temples of the living God. If we make them the dwelling place of that which is unclean, if we pollute our bodies, we then have corrupted the temple of God, and can no longer discern his body in the Lord's Supper. But with or without, we have brought to pass condemnation upon the temple of God.

We are bought with a price, for we have taken upon us his name. The world will judge, and rightly judge by the effects shown in our lives, by the sample we give of Christ.

To observe the Lord's Day, to remember his body was slain for us, is to remember also that our bodies have become his, and as the temple of God, must be kept clean and holy.

The Basis of True Religion

Radio sermon by E. D. Moore, broadcasted from Central Radio Company Studio, Kansas City, Missouri, Sunday evening, March 19, 1922.

"For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."—John 3: 17.

"For I came not to judge the world, but to save the world."—John 12: 47.

As Christians we recognize Christ as the greatest exponent of religious principles the world has known.

Fair-minded men in all walks of life seeking the true bases of the highest forms of human expression practically all agree on Christ as a historical character, even though they may not accept average modern interpretations of his code of ethics and methods of developing them.

So thoughtful people, whose names are recorded on the records of the churches to-day, not only accept as established the historicity of Christ, but consider his teachings as a fundamental basis of moral conduct.

Yet when we come to interpret his teachings as he gave them to a race in political bondage, and fully evaluate the fact that his illustrations were of necessity drawn from the commonplaces of life, we differ: usually honestly and sincerely, but still we do not see alike. All efforts looking towards church union bump hard against the fact that simple truths may be interpreted complexly.

The fundamental doctrine of William Jones is but the narrow prejudice of Samuel Brown. The essentials in my code are but the trappings of yours.

How, then, shall we find a basis of agreement? Or is there such a basis? Are there constitutional premises upon which we may build—build for eternity?

Let us suggest one idea as a point from which to start: the unchangeability of God. The Prophet Malachi represents God as saying, "I am the Lord, I change not," while the fabric of the Bible is woven around the woof of this sentiment.

We are bound to concede that his laws are immutable, and surely the laws are no more perfect than the Lawgiver. God is perfect, and perfection is the ultimate—need we argue this point?

Having agreed, then, on this attribute of God, what are some of his purposes concerning man? Our texts sum up a universal sentiment—that his purpose was to save the world—unto which end he sent his Son, a part of the Godhead, that humanity might be brought back to his presence. Having given man his agency, it is not possible arbitrarily to compel man to accept this privilege, but instead he extends the opportunity, sets in order the necessary human machinery (the church) and thereby allows man to choose his future state.

Contrasted with the perfection of our Creator are the imperfections of his human creatures; with the unchangeability of God the constant demand for progress in man.

The Christian believers at large easily agree that it was necessary for man to be in touch with and be guided by his revealments. Created in the image of God and in excellent environment, man needed and was granted this natural communion with God as the Father of all. The posterity of Adam on down to Christ, received messages from on high, and as they observed or disregarded them, progressed or retrograded not only in civilization, generally speaking, but in the high morality that denotes general observance of higher laws.

In the revealment of God to man through Christ we have a new epoch in religion. Being in human form a manifestation of the attributes of God, he was the personification of expression.

The New Testament developed as a record of that visitation of the Son of God and thus perpetuates not only the teachings of Jesus Christ, but ineffaceably emblazons the principle of divine revealment.

Man's salvation depends on progress. His progress in all ages had depended on the observance of the laws of his being, emanating from his Creator. The New Testament depends for its efficacy on the validity of our contention that God reveals his will to humanity.

It is evident that God's purposes have not been fulfilled in man, but that our real basis for progress toward him is to know the methods by which we may meet our modern problems.

We have a different set of problems than Jewry of old, cast in different environments, and we need—must have—divine light, or fail in our solution.

Unto whom could we expect God to speak? Unto those who insist that the canon of scripture is closed and the heavens sealed? Hardly.

Unto those who profess ability and willingness to get along without God? Not likely.

Unto those who profess faith in him and agree that man's progress and ultimate salvation depend on acceptance of God, not only as he was but as he is? It is logical, is it not?

Ambassadors from God, who act in the stead of Christ, must have authority, else their official acts are a mockery. That sanction cannot come from the New Testament commission, for the line of authority was broken. It must be in a restoration, a new revelation, and on that basis we come to you—a new revealment confirming and revitalizing the old, eternal plan of salvation. It is the true basis of religion, a oneness with God.

Duncan Campbell

A man of culture who was one of the Seven Presidents of Seventy at a critical period of the history of the church.

Again our hearts are made sad to record the passing of one of the stalwarts of the early history of the Reorganization, since Duncan Campbell passed away at the home of his son, Macey, in Cedar Falls, Iowa, on the 16th of March.

He was born November 29, 1845, at Breadalbane, Ontario. His grandparents came from Scotland. His grandfathers were both deacons in the Baptist Church in Ontario and he was urged to enter the ministry, and in April, 1871, became pastor of a church in Moore, Ontario.

Studying the word of God, he became dissatisfied with that church and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints August 13, 1871, and two weeks later was ordained an elder. During the winter, he labored with Robert Davis in the vicinity of Saint Claire, Michigan, their labors resulting in the organization of a branch.

The General Conference of 1872 appointed him to preside over the Canadian Mission. With Joseph Snively, he entered Quebec, where an opening had already been made, and before their returning, a branch of some seventeen or eighteen members had been organized. During the fall he labored in southern Michigan and northern Indiana.

In 1873 he attended his first General Conference, at Plano, and was ordained a seventy and one of the seven presidents of seventy, pursuant to the revelation to the church of that year. Thereafter he continued to labor in Michigan and Indiana and Canada, except for one year in northern Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin.

In 1878 he was appointed to northern Missouri and southern Iowa, and henceforth that was the principal field of his labor, being appointed later to Decatur District, then to the Lamoni Stake. He spent a period of thirty years in that field, being part of the time in charge of the missionary work there. He had first visited that vicinity in 1875 when returning from the fall conference in Council Bluffs in company with Joseph Smith and several others. After visiting Lamoni they attended the district conference.

In 1885, he and E. C. Brand were sustained and five new men chosen to complete the number of the seven presidents of seventy. In 1891, at the Kirtland conference, he was set apart as senior president of the seven presidents of seventy and also as president of the First Quorum of Seventy. He continued in that office until May, 1901, when he was ordained a high priest and high councilor in the organization of the Lamoni Stake.

His work as one of the seven presidents of seventy covers a very important period in the history of the church. He did a splendid work both as one of the seven presidents and also as senior president and president of the first quorum. It was a formative period, requiring a steady hand and a wise head. He did much to establish the work of that body on a firm basis for the church.

As a high councilor in the Lamoni Stake, he continued until the spring of 1916, when he was released because of continued absence from the stake.

He had married, in October, 1876, Lida Hulse. The following spring they had removed to Pleasanton, Iowa, where they made their family home on the edge of the woods for the next thirty-two years, he continuing to reside there after her death in 1900.

Their life was one of sacrifice, and, at times, of very severe self-denial. They exemplified the spirit of a time when many men of the ministry not only believed in giving their all to and for the church, but actually did so. At times the family suffered severely from lack of support and even from lack of the very necessities of life, all that this gospel of the kingdom might be carried abroad among the nations of the earth. Their life as a family is an example of unselfish devotion to duty.

In 1893 he was forced, because of ill health, to withdraw from formal appointment, but he still continued to labor as conditions and circumstances permitted, at Pleasanton, Iowa, and in the vicinity.

He was one of those who believed most firmly in the value of education. As early as 1891 he urged the "latter-day work is from first to last educational, and the education aimed at is not of a narrow or stunted kind, either. It takes in the entire range of the best literature as well as the sciences." (SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 38, p. 834.) He wrote several very able articles at different times for the SAINTS' HERALD, from one of which the above extract is taken. In this article, as early as 1891, he not only urged the need of a college, but that the church buildings in Lamoni and Independence should be utilized for that purpose, dividing the building into smaller rooms.

He urged, at that comparatively early date, the value for Sunday school work of such division. Of course in so utilizing the church building it would be necessary that the partitions be temporary in character. But he saw the need not only of the college, but also of provision for separate classrooms for our work of religious education in the Sunday school.

He had taken advantage of every opportunity himself, beginning with the common school, continuing in the high school at Bay City, Michigan, and taking up also college or institute work and lectures as opportunity offered. He was a profound student and mastered the Hebrew language in his later years for the new light it would give him in studying the Holy Scriptures and for any other benefit it might be to the work of God.

At the conference of 1873 and 1875 he acted as assistant secretary. For two years he was copy editor in the Herald Publishing House, and for many years he was historian for the Decatur District and for the Lamoni Stake, continuing in that office until about 1916. He also worked on the concordance to the Book of Mormon and on the present concordance to the Doctrine and Covenants, both of these being the concordances at present in use in these two books. He edited a department in Autumn Leaves for a short time, the Intermediate grade of the Gospel Quarterly for one year, and was for several years one of the revising committee for the Sunday school quarterlies.

Of late years failing health, because of the privations of his work in the early years of the church, have limited his activity. He was laid at rest on March 24 beside his wife at Pleasanton, Iowa.

Joseph Smith and His Children

An Error Corrected

One of our goodly brethren has sent us the following:

Editors Saints' Herald: In your last week's first editorial you make it appear that the Lord "condemned" Joseph Smith, jr., for not teaching his children. "Our Joseph" was born in November, 1832, and the revelation to which you refer was given in May, 1833. Was not Joseph the oldest then living? If so, he was rather young to be taught. That appears to me to be worse in the HERALD than the "bad spelling" you refer to in a former issue.

Reference is evidently made to an editorial in the HERALD for March 1 on page 201. In this editorial the statement was made that Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Frederick G. Williams, and Bishop Newel K. Whitney were all condemned for not teaching their children.

A more careful examination of section 90 shows that Frederick G. Williams and Sidney Rigdon were reprovved concerning their children, but that in the case of Joseph Smith and Bishop Whitney, the term "children" is not used, but that they should set their households in order. The passage concerning Joseph Smith is, "You have not kept the commandments, and must needs stand rebuked before the Lord. Your family must needs repent and forsake some things, and give more earnest heed unto your sayings, or be removed out of their place.

The facts concerning his family appear to be that young Joseph, born on November 6, 1832, was their fourth child, but the other three children had died. In their stead, they had adopted two other children, one of whom had passed away, but one, Julia, was still living, and is referred to in a letter from Joseph Smith dated October 13, 1832. We note also that Joseph Smith had a brother, Don Carlos, born in 1816, who would be about seventeen years of age, and a sister, Lucy, born in 1821 and therefore nearly twelve.

Evidently it would be an error to say that Joseph Smith had erred in the teaching of his own children. Just who was referred to as his "family" to be set in order, the family who must needs repent and forsake some things, we are not at present fully advised.

The writer of the above letter is quite correct that we should be more careful, though of course, one error will never justify another. S. A. B.

Bryan on Darwinism

A great deal is appearing in the papers now concerning William Jennings Bryan's criticism of Darwinism. In a recent issue of The Commoner he reprints a letter to the New York Times in which he states that while the idea of natural selection is not now generally held, the Darwinian idea seems to him to be held by more evolutionists than is the case with any other one theory.

His objections are stated to be: first, that Darwinism is a guess; second, it is not supported by the Bible and is, in fact, somewhat contrary thereto; third, not in one single instance has one species changed into another; fourth, the character of explanation offered, such as that man's mind is superior to woman's because among our brute ancestors the male fought for the female and thus strengthened his mind. The eye, according to evolutionists, was brought about by light beating upon the skin; the ear came in response to air waves, and the leg is the development of a wart that chanced to appear on the belly, and finally that it leads to atheistic conclusions as well as to agnosticism.

In this connection he refers to Belief in God and Immortality, by Professor Leuba, in which it is stated that belief in God and immortality is dying out among the educated classes. As proof Professor Leuba gives the figures from a recent questionnaire to prominent scientists. This conclusion is reinforced by questions to students of nine representative colleges. In these colleges unbelief increased from fifteen per cent in the first year to thirty per cent in the junior class and to forty-five per cent at graduation. This the professor attributed to the influence of the scholarly men under whose instruction they passed in college.

British Mission History

The historical sketch of the church in Great Britain which appeared in the recent British number of the HERALD, was prepared by Elder T. W. Williams. The intention had been to have it prepared by Elder Frank H. Edwards and accordingly the make-up sheet was sent with his name as author. Since they did not receive the copy from Brother Edwards in time, Brother Williams prepared a manuscript and sent it in unsigned. Hence the error arose in the make-up of THE SAINTS' HERALD.

The happiness or the unhappiness of life is a very imperfect criterion of its value or usefulness.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The Appearance of Evil

Elder T. C. Kelley has forwarded the following clipping from the Birmingham (Alabama) News. It appears that there has been considerable discussion in the Birmingham paper on public dancing. Brother Kelley offered the following reply, and urges that we should consider, in addition to the moral standpoint, the money that is spent on the dance, theaters, picture shows, wrestling matches, etc., as rather a waste of money, especially when the missionary work of the church is suffering for lack of support and Zion languishes for the same reason.

"Shun the Appearance of Evil"

To the Editor The Birmingham News:

I am much interested in the discussion of the question of public dancing by different writers in "The Voice of the People" column in your paper.

One or two points sought to be made by those favoring the dance:

First, other forms of public amusements are bad and "lead to immorality." One writer in Friday's issue asks the commissioners what they are "going to do with your public bathing pools? Do they not lead to immorality?"

Just so. What then should be the attitude of all moral, not to say religious, people toward the dance or other public amusement that "leads to immorality"? The writer referred to tacitly admits in the above quotation that dancing is in a class with other amusements that "lead to immorality."

Second. A number of writers favor dancing with or under, "proper supervision," or "proper restriction."

Does a thing that's right need any restriction other than the moral or religious restriction, self-imposed?

Think of a prayer meeting or Sunday school meeting under "restrictions!" We never heard of it. Why not? There is no need for restriction. Why "restrict" the dance? Is it not because the dance has within it, as an elemental part of it, that which needs restricting because of its leading to impurity of thought and often to wrongdoing?

Professor T. A. Faulkner, an ex-dancing master of Los Angeles Academy, is quoted by Evangelist Beiderwolf to the effect that of two hundred abandoned women, one hundred and sixty-three of them ascribed their downfall to the ballroom and dancing school, and thirty-seven to other causes.

In this instance four and one half times as many women and girls were ruined by the dance as by all other causes. It is safe to assume that as many men and boys were lured into the way of vice at the same time and by the same agency.

Mr. W. H. Winn thinks if dancing is wrong, then public bathing is also "rotten" because many of the women are not properly clothed while bathing. Precisely so. What now shall we do? Shall we add to public bathing, which is admittedly "rotten," another amusement which, according to Mr. Faulkner's figures, is four and one half times as bad? Surely not.

If the sexes would dance apart, much of the evil to which dancing leads would be averted. But when those of opposite sexes assume on the ballroom floor, positions that would disgrace them if done in any other place, the restrictions have been too loosely drawn and in many cases evil is sure to follow. Here is one good place to heed the scriptural injunction, "Shun the appearance of evil." T. C. KELLEY.

Opposition to Education Bill

Some opposition has arisen to the Towner-Sterling Bill providing for a Department of Education with a secretary having a seat in the President's Cabinet. Stephen B. L. Penrose, President of Witter College, writes to the Christian Century, objecting on the ground that it proposes too heavy a general expenditure on the national government, that it takes away from state and local communities work which should be handled by them. There is an unnecessary extension of the Federal power, and will tend to decrease home rule and home interest in educational work. Certainly his criticism of the bill does not arise from any lack of interest in education of the whole, but because he believes that local initiative should be strengthened rather than decreased.

Education as an Investment

The family which devotes its energies to the education of its children is contributing much to society.

A short time ago the writer visited the home of a tenant farmer. It was modest and was neatly and comfortably furnished; the equipment of the farm was sufficient for all reasonable needs. In thirty years the family had moved but once. Both the husband and wife had worked hard and saved consistently, yet they had no land. Many of their neighbors had bought and paid for farms while this farmer had continued landless.

The visitor at once concluded that there had been something lacking or out of line in the scheme of management of this couple, since by the time they had reached middle life they were not able to own a farm; but on looking a little deeper into this situation the reason was made clear.

This tenant farmer and his wife had reared a family of five children. All but the youngest had received a high school and college education, and are now out in the world with every promise of distinguished success. The youngest has finished high school and is a student in a theological seminary. All of these children, be it said to their credit, helped themselves partly while in college, but at last father and mother back on the rented farm had most of the burden to bear. In a word, this father and mother had invested the earnings and savings of a lifetime in the education of their children, instead of in a farm. In the same neighborhood, children grew up with those of the tenant farmer who are

A Clarion Call

By T. W. Williams

We must discard so far as possible production for profit and inaugurate production for use.

Latter Day Saints are theorists. This, however, is not a crime. Many of us are visionary rather than practical. We like to dream dreams and see visions. It is easier and more engaging to dream and dream, rather than to dream and do!

Dreams and visions are to be encouraged when they become the inspiration for constructive action. As a means to an end, they link time with eternity. As an end, they are elusive and reactive, and make one oblivious to the real and tangible relations of life.

There is fascination, aye, intoxication in pursuing the psychic. You are not limited by circumstances, nor are you hindered or circumscribed by material things. You are not disturbed with the details of action. You can build castles and not trouble yourself with either brick or mortar. You can soar, and soar, and soar, and not land. You can establish kingdoms and not have to deal with real people at all.

One can be visionary and practical at the same time. The happy medium is expressed by Solomon, now no further along than they were when in the country school. And thirty years from now they probably will be about where they are now. But can anyone foretell accurately where the children that came out of this rented home will be a quarter of a century from now, and what part some of them may then have in the world's affairs?

At this Christmas time, when we are moved to place a higher estimate on character building and service than on the mere getting of money or a farm, is there one who doubts the wisdom of the investment of this tenant farmer and his wife? Who will fail to see that the course they pursued has already brought them greater prosperity and more lasting satisfaction than could the owning of a dozen farms?

"To work, to help and to be helped, to learn sympathy through suffering, to learn faith by perplexity, to reach truth through wonder; behold! this is what it is to prosper, this is what it is to live."—Kansas City Star.

"Where there is no vision the people perish; but he that keepeth the law, happy is he." Our spiritual life depends upon divine revelation. To stop here means condemnation and loss. Jesus said, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." We need sails, but sails without ballast invite defeat and shipwreck.

The Day After

Latter Day Saints believe in the "day after." We have not enough faith in the possibilities of the "day which now is." We lack perspective. We are long-sighted on far-away projects. We are decidedly shortsighted when it comes to dealing with present-day issues. We know exactly how we will do things a hundred years hence. We, seemingly, are at a loss to know how to adjust relations to-day. We can, with certainty in our own minds, predict the future conditions of the dead, but have, thus far, failed in making the conditions of the living either equitable or desirable.

Some of us presume to know just how the church will be run during the thousand years' reign, yet most of us have but a hazy and indistinct understanding of the things which are vital to the life of the people and the success of the church to-day. We can tell exactly of what material the streets of the New Jerusalem will be paved, while the streets which we use each day are left unpaved and uncared for.

We can visualize a future commonwealth where there will be "all things common," and yet be oblivious to the rank injustice and glaring inequality which obtains throughout our social system. We have a well-defined program for Jesus Christ when he comes, but it is clearly evident that the great majority of us are muddled and uncertain as to the exact methods we should employ in preparing for his coming.

The following from the Sanskrit is commended for special reading:

Salutation of the Dawn

Listen to the salutation of the dawn,
Look to to-day,
For it is Life the very Life of Life.
In its brief course lie all the Verities
And Realities, of your existence;
The bliss of Truth, the glory of Action,
The splendor of Beauty;
For Yesterday is but a dream,
And To-morrow is only a vision;
But To-day
Well-lived, makes every Yesterday
A dream of happiness,
And every To-morrow a vision of Hope;
Look well, therefore, to the Day,
Such is the salutation of the Dawn.

Manana! The Idealist's Paradise! The Dreamer's Utopia! To-morrow, always to-morrow. With such the future is far more desirable for realization than the present. Far-away pastures appear luxuriant and inviting. The fields of to-day seem hedged in and barren. Despite all this, living in the future is a fool's paradise. It is the Devil's trump card. It is the "fly in the ointment," of all things religious. It is the twin evil with living in the past. And these only will permanently retard the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth.

It was David Starr Jordan who wisely said:

To-day is your day and mine; the only day we have, the day in which to play our part. What our part may signify in the great whole, we may not understand, but we are here to play it, and now is our time. This we know is the part of action, not of whining. It is the part of love, not of cynicism. It is for us to express love in terms of human happiness.

The Sweet By-and-By

Anyone can do great things in the "sweet by-and-by." It takes heroes and martyrs to do the real things which God wishes us to do now. The time is here when men who stand for the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth will be called upon to pay the supreme sacrifice. For these are times that try men's souls. They call for men, heroic men, men of action. Paraphrasing another: The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of humanity, but he who stands it now, deserves the love and thanks of men and women. Yet we have this consolation with us, that the harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph. What we obtain too cheaply, we esteem too lightly; 'tis dearness only that gives everything its value.

We love to sing that hymn, the first verse of which runs as follows:

This world will be blessed by and by;
By our faith we can see it afar;
For our Father has said by his word,
He'll prepare us inheritance here.

Instead of making this an inspirational hymn for present purpose and action, we too frequently turn it into a spiritual lullaby—a sort of religious anæsthetic which deadens our sense of moral and social shortcomings and causes us to feel that "all is well in Zion" notwithstanding "ravenous beasts" stalk forth unchallenged and unafraid, and "briars and thorns" grow unnoted and undisturbed.

To-day alone is ours. The past is dead. The future is not born and to us has no existence. As Bishop Frazer has said: "The present moment is the sole reality, and to fill it with good is the best provision for the possible to-morrow." Another writer remarks:

Yesterday now is a part of forever,
Bound up in the sheaf which God holds tight.

Fellow workers for Christ! Now is the time. To-day is the day of salvation—not Yesterday—not Tomorrow, but To-day. We are traitors to God if we fail to apply all of our powers of mind and heart in dealing with the vital things of our day. To-day demands the full measure of our interest and vitality. "The majority of the people destroy the beauty, and the security, and the comfort that life ought to bring by failing to live in the present."

The Lure of Death

It is related that desert travelers, famished and weary, have sunk to sleep only to dream of luxuriant gardens and bubbling springs, and then to waken and face the desert. Such dreams make only more poignant the disappointment which follows the illusion. Oftentimes, on the plains of the West the mirage presents fields of plenty with oceans of water. But the mirage of the plains is the lure of death. So visions, which lead us away from the divine plan and God's highway into the morass of speculation and theory, are a menace to our social and spiritual life.

In the early part of the nineteenth century Joseph Smith projected his new vision of social regeneration and economic justice. His was the new evangel. The objective—the kingdom of God on earth. Thousands rallied to his clarion call. Together they visualized Zion, a city built after the divine pattern—an ideal community.

What does the record show? We have set the pace in church organization, in doctrine, and ordinance. We have revived the old-time belief and forced concessions among all classes of religionists. God has vindicated our ministry. As to theology and doctrinal accuracy, we yield to no organization under the sun. We can be justly proud of our achievements in this field.

But as to this vision of social regeneration and economic justice, let us inquire. A century has passed. Theoretically, in this direction, we have made progress. Practically, we lag behind. Socially we sail uncharted seas and in our business affairs we are only slightly removed from the "heathen round about." In some respects the Samaritans "within our gates" have put us to shame.

We postulate a "city of brotherly love"—a community wherein there will be no poor and no rich—a domain where equality of opportunity will be the universal law. We sing with fervor, and with apparently good intent of the "coming, glad, new day," and yet we go on day by day, week by week, and year by year, following the worn-out methods of the Gentiles. We know full well what the leaven of capitalism has produced. If proof seems lacking, consider the conditions of the peoples of the world today. Are we in any sense immune from the calamities of an unjust and inhumane social system? Let the depleted coffers of the church and the worsted condition of the membership give answer.

But One Way to Build Zion

We know that God has said that "Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself," and still we wheedle ourselves into believing that he will overlook our worshiping of idols as do "the nations round about," and the adoption of business and even social relations at variance with his law. Some of these days prophets will speak to us in terms which will reveal our infidelity as did the prophets to the Israel of the long ago. We must renounce the "leeks and onions" as well as the "flesh-pots" of the inhabitants of the land wherein we have sojourned these hundred years before we can even glimpse the land of promise.

I am not pessimist. I am an optimist. I believe that God is in his universe. I believe that he holds sway over all his creations. I believe in the ultimate triumph of the divine plan. I believe in the survival of the truth. I believe in the vindication of the right. I believe in universal justice. I believe that compensation is just and inevitable. But I wish to say, freely and frankly, and without mental reservation, that we are not far enough removed in equity and social justice and moral purpose from the aliens round about. The golden rule does not play its rightful part in the everyday business and industrial activities of our people.

True, we teach tithing and consecration. A great many of our people pay tithing. Many have complied, so far as they have been permitted, with the law of consecration. But we are not alone in this. Other religious institutions are doing these things. When it comes to the mere act of collecting tithing, there are organizations which apply the principle more universally than do we. We have preached equality for decades, but it is one thing to talk equality and quite another thing to practice it. To theorize on equality and at the same time perpetuate inequality, is treason to God. We are commencing to talk of stewardships and inheritances. Up to the present there has been only a babel of tongues. The Saints are mystified and confused. Teaching stewardship without equality is like preaching temperance with a flask of whisky in one's hip pocket. Equality of opportunity and stewardship are synonymous.

Equality in Theory and Practice

The Lord has said, "For if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye cannot be equal in obtaining heavenly things." It is useless to wink at infraction. A mere plaster aggravates rather than heals. We must not cry peace when there is no peace. I am quite sure no one will dispute my words when I say that we do not have equality in the church to-day. And when I speak of equality I do not mean uniformity. I mean equality of opportunity—equality as defined in the word of God. There is not equality among even the ministry. Necessarily, there cannot be equality among the membership.

Equality seems little more than a shibboleth with many. From indications one might conclude that it was not seriously intended for home consumption. This church will never move forward as it should until the representative men of the church comply, not only with the letter, but with the spirit of this statement: "For if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye cannot be equal in obtaining spiritual things."

How can we give consistent leadership unless we practice what we preach? We must accord to Jesus Christ such leadership as will make of us exemplars of his will and purpose. We cannot consistently ask the people to enforce the law of Christ if we ourselves are side-stepping it. Equality in earthly things means equality in earthly things, or it is a travesty—a stench in the nostrils of God. If you would know whether equality obtains among either our ministry or our people you have only to visit the homes and workshops where our people live and work to have your answer.

What have we done and what are we doing to make possible a worth-while industrial environment? What are we doing to bring the physical and mental energies and activities of our people under the organized system of service contemplated in the divine plan and which necessarily is in direct contravention to worldly exploitation? Where is the industrial institution to which we can point with commensurate pride as an institution operated in Zion under the laws of the celestial kingdom? Other people, both within and without the church, are asking these questions. We cannot side-step. We must answer in deeds, not words. Until we can do so our claims to social adjustment are as "sounding brass and tinkling cymbal."

A New Order Needed

To-day in business life, our people are upholding and using the instruments and means of exploitation and expropriation which govern industrial life everywhere, with scarcely an exception. They are following the business rules which have made for inequality since the days of Cain. As individuals they could not well do otherwise and play the game in business. Some have endeavored to make adjustments along the lines of equity, as an easement to conscience, but the great mass are enmeshed in the social and economic maelstrom. It is impossible for the individual to extricate himself. This is one of the chief reasons why God instituted the Zionian plan. Until the church exhausts its power to make better adjustment we cannot consistently ask or receive divine approval.

I am heartily in favor of the effort of the general bishopric to bring all of the church membership under the law of tithes and offerings. This is commendable. It is God's way. But let me emphasize that tithes and offerings which come to the church as the fruit of selfish purpose are a menace rather than a blessing to the church. I know how easy it is to close our eyes and stifle conscience by saying, "It is not the business of the church to ask the members how they acquire the money which they turn over to the church." This is the Devil's own lie. It is the province of the church, aye, its bounden duty, to do this thing. To the man who offers tainted money as tithes and offerings there should be but one answer, "Thy money perish with thee."

The chief concern of the church should not be as to the amount we collect in tithes and offerings, or even consecration. Our first responsibility has to do with the methods and means employed by the members in acquiring increase. We should be prayerfully and aggressively interested to see to it that our members are not doing business at the old stand of capitalistic intrigue and speculative purpose. The amount of money which comes to the church is incidental. It need not be a problem at all. The vital thing which must concern the church is how each member is applying his or her energy in the interest of the church as well as of the individual himself.

Do We Apply the Golden Rule?

Are our people making the golden rule the slogan of their business and industrial lives? Are they conforming their financial, commercial, and social activities with the far-flung slogan of the Nazarene, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them"? We can unhesitatingly answer, "No" for those Saints who are living outside the land of Zion and, at the same time, make allowance for their inability to adjust their lives to the divine plan. And as to the members of the church in Zion and her stakes, if the golden rule does not govern, this, in itself, becomes an imperative demand for general church direction.

We have declared for stewardships. I am unreservedly in favor of putting this law into operation at the earliest possible moment. Whenever we do so it will work a revolution in our economic and industrial life, or else it will not be stewardship after the divine order. People cannot keep on conducting their business as they have been doing when stewardship is understood and applied. The purpose of stewardship is to offset the evils of the present social system of selfishness and greed. A stewardship which has as its objective the mere raising of more money to cover the needs of the church will defeat itself. We must not compromise God.

God Will Not Condone Exploitation

We cannot have divine stewardship and continue to exploit one another. A citizen of Zion cannot hold for himself some special privilege, made legal even by the law of the land but expressly prohibited under the divine law, and thereby demand tribute from his brethren, and expect to win favor with God by contributing the excess earnings to him. Special privilege, aye all privilege, is at variance with the law of true relationship.

God is the Father of us all. We are all his children. He has provided equally for all. It is his purpose that "one man shall not possess above another." It is inherent that each shall have access to God's gifts to all of us. God is concerned as to the way in which we make our money. Let not tithing or consecration become a mere easement to conscience, or an attempted bribery of God.

The system of unconditional tenure, of bartering in natural commodities, together with profits, rents, and interest, and even wages, as these things obtain in the world to-day, is abortive of human right, equality, and justice. There is no place for such in the divine commonwealth. We can never build up Zion and foster a business system based on speculation and which makes profits the primary purpose of industrial and commercial action. Doing business or carrying on industry for the purpose of expropriating the producer and exploiting the consumer is at variance with divine comity. To compromise in any sense with these in the establishment of Zion will neutralize our efforts and make divine blessing impossible.

Production for Profit Must Go

Making things for profit—robbing the hireling of his wage and charging the consumer all that the market will bear, is incompatible with justice and equity. It is subversive of the law of service. No man with proper perspective can possibly indorse the profit system. The man who asks another man to pay more in value for a given product than he himself has placed in value in said product, is getting something for nothing, and his act is thereby dishonest. To make things as cheaply as you can, and to sell them as dearly as you can, is unchristian.

To purchase land in Zion, plot it, and then sell it to the members of the church for all the market will stand, is a reversal of the law of land redemption. To purchase houses and land in Zion, hold for speculative purposes, and then sell to another at a price beyond created value, is prohibited in any order of society claiming to represent the lowly Nazarene.

Shall Not Labor for Money in Zion

"The laborers in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money they shall perish." So, too, the church in Zion which labors for money shall likewise perish! What applies to the individual applies with equal force to the collectivity. It follows, then, that in Zion—in real Zion—things will be made for use instead of profit. Things will be done for service rather than gain. The modern methods of barter and trade are necessarily obsolete in a community of Saints. Let us make these things taboo without unnecessary delay. Now is the time to declare for the divine order. Let us not excuse our practices because of the doings of our neighbors. What have we done; what are we doing to overcome the selfishness which has well-nigh wrecked the world? If we seek to build up Zion according to the laws and practices of the Gentiles round about, it will result in our undoing, and we will be engulfed when the overflowing scourge makes an end of nations.

Fears of "Wise Men"

Some of our "wise men" are very fearful lest, in the establishment of Zion, individual holdings will be invaded. They talk as though God has circumscribed himself to conform to the limitations of human enactments. Let us not make a farce of this thing! When God wished to place the descendants of Abraham on the land of their inheritance he entirely ignored the rules governing the surrounding nations. He revealed an entirely new order of things. To-day some express fear lest we make departure from the rules of the game as laid down by men. True, we must and should respect the rights of all men, but it is our bounden service to execute the will of God. The church is asked by these same "wise men" to throw around the individual every possible protection to prevent the church, at any time, from invading the "rights" of the individual. This is making a travesty of a serious matter. One has but to study the evolution of the doctrine of private property in natural commodities, both in Rome and Europe and Great Britain, to recognize the utter absurdity of even thinking of maintaining the old order of tenure. This thing is responsible for much of the inequality and inhumanity of medieval and modern times.

Herbert Spencer, Britain's ablest individualist, sums up the situation as follows:

Equity, therefore, does not permit property in land. For if one portion of the earth's surface may justly become the possession of an individual and may be held by him for his sole use and benefit, as a thing to which he has an exclusive right, then other portions of the earth's surface may be so held; and eventually the whole of the earth's surface may be so held; and our planet may thus lapse altogether into private hands.

Again:

Given a race of human beings having like claims to pursue the objects of their desires—given a world adapted to the gratification of these desires—a world into which such beings are similarly born, and it unavoidably follows that they have equal rights to the use of this world. For if each of them has freedom to do all that he wills, provided he infringes not the equal freedom of any other, then each of them is free to use the earth for the satisfaction of his wants, provided he allow all others the same liberty. And conversely, it is manifest that no one, or part of them, may use the earth in such a way as to prevent the rest from similarly using it, seeing that to do this is to assume greater freedom than the rest, and consequently to break the law.

An inheritance is not an alien possession. It is something held in common with all others of the group. It is not held against the group, but with the group. There is something in common and that is the right of every man to his own inheritance in contradistinction to every other man's inheritance. An inheritance is a community guarantee to the individual. It is an individual guarantee to the community. The benefits of that inheritance must be contingent on conformity to the communal purpose. Let it be understood that an inheritance is more than a title deed to land. An inheritance is a home in all which that term implies. It consists of a home among the people of God. It is a right guaranteed by God to every one of his children. Under the laws of human tenure, it may be necessary and even expedient to hold one's inheritance in one's "own name and title," yet this must not do violence to communal interest. Every human being is amenable to God and dependent upon him for his right of inheritance. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." Absolute ownership rests only with God.

By maintaining the colossal error of the unlimited right to private property in land, many of our modern States have developed a condition where the property of one individual is more sacred than the lives of all the people. The armed forces of the Nation are employed to preserve this so-called sacred right of property, although millions of citizens are starving for bread. Under this rule workmen may suffer and die on the highways and byways of all the nations of the world and have no place to lay their heads, while a few individuals hold out of use large areas of land under the colossal error of the rights of the individual. So long as this continues, so long will the nations be unable to find remedy for the consequent ills. God grant that this church shall not follow in their wake!

Interests Must Be Identical

The interests of the people of Zion must be identical. We cannot develop independent sovereignties. There are some things in life which are, in their very nature, private. The right of a man to his home is inherent. It should be his home. There are some things which a man should not be permitted to do, even with his very own. An inheritance implies a family. The family has rights as does the community.

The right to buy and sell and barter in natural commodities is meaningless unless we grant profit and exploitation. The profit system is a counterfeit. It has no place among real Christian believers. Loaning money, inspired by the desire to exact interest thereon, is a passing phase in Zion. It will become obsolete as people come to observe the law of consecration.

When Zion is fully established there will be no place for the present fiscal order. No man with the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants in his hand can possibly justify the present financial system. Loaning money on interest is quite unnecessary in an ideal state of society. Surely, if the members of the church will square their lives with the divine law, God can and will make good his promise that each and all will have plenty and to spare. The law of consecration fully applied obviates the necessity of the loaning of money. No man will be subjected to the humiliation of asking a loan from another. The bishop will not loan or borrow money when God's law obtains in Zion.

A condition wherein the bishop is under the necessity of borrowing money from members is its own indictment. Consecration and interest paying are incompatible. You may say that these things are yet in the distance; possibly; but we must hold the ideal, else we will never realize.

And this brings me to the question of rents. Rents are inevitable if we grant to an individual the right to hold property out of use. With people who believe in inheritances it should require no argument to establish the fact that God has made no provision for the taking of rents. Every man should have his own inheritance. He should not be dependent on any other individual for the privilege to occupy. This must be secured to him, not for private exploitation or gain, but for occupancy and use. Inasmuch as rents are incompatible with the divine order, why should we continue? Are we to go on forever in the ways of the Gentiles, hoping that over night the new order will be installed? Verily, No! The only way to begin is to begin. I am in favor of starting now.

Before we can have stewardships we must, as far as we can, discard production for profit. We must inaugurate production for use. We must, to our ability, abolish the practice of private exploitation. We must divorce ourselves from the taking and giving of interest. We must make impossible the imposing of rents as a condition of having a home. We must develop industry so that our people are not under the necessity of working for a boss who determines the when, and where, and how, and what of labor. Stewardship involves the thought that each steward shall have the privilege of developing his own talents without embargo or hindrance inasmuch as he does not invade similar privileges by all others.

Let Our Leading Men Set the Pace

Let the leading men of the church set the pace. Let the members of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric forswear themselves of everything which is not compatible with equality and the full order of Zion's purposes as clearly stated in the books of the church. Let all the bishops in Zion and her stakes cooperate. Then let the "men of business" in these various places respond. It will not be long before the rest of the people will follow suit. God is calling for consistent leadership. If we will do our part, God will bring blessing, spiritual and temporal, and our present embarrassment will pass away, never to return.

It was Lyman Abbott who said:

Religion is nothing if it is not the rule of life and the whole life; a man is not religious at all, if he is not religious in every part of his nature, at all times, and at all circumstances.

Doctor Alexander Clark well represents this thought:

Unless your religion changes you from a mummy to a man—makes you honest in business, pious behind counters, temperate at dinner tables, loyal to your country, affectionate to your family, neighborly in your community, conscientious at the ballot box, patient in affliction, humble, cheerful, and hopeful everywhere and always; unless it links you in brotherhood with the poorest of God's children; unless it leads you on errands of mercy to hovels and hospitals and prisons, as well as to cushioned pews and sacramental boards; unless you live Christ on week days, as well as worship him on Sabbath days; then is your religion spurious, hypocritical, and abhorrent—a refuge of lies.

A Final Word

And let me say in conclusion that unless our religion finds expression in the lives of our people, in all of their relations, we are little better than the world. If we fail, we are actually worse, for we claim greater light than do they. Why not take God at his word? Why not submit his promises to the supreme test? Why continue to shy, and stutter, and hedge, and squirm, instead of acting like men with a purpose and who not only have the vision, but the faith and courage to make the vision a reality here and now; why? Let me be counted one in doing this very thing, and to-day! It is now or never so far as we are concerned.

Is the Touring Car Wrecking the Church?

By A. H. Christensen

There is a need for the truck and the tractor, but a question about the passenger car.

I have been following all that has been written in the church papers and some from other sources regarding "the after effects of the war."

The "financial depression" and the "unemployment condition" have received lengthy notice in the press and pulpit; and all the evil conditions of the present by Scotch verdict, are charged to the war. Not one person in a thousand questions the assertion, but passes it along to his neighbor.

It was not so very long ago that when an eclipse occurred, of the sun or moon, all the calamities of the year, whether public or private, or even sickness, were attributed to the eclipse.

I do not believe that the present "financial depression" was brought about principally by the war; but is the result of the economic, or industrial, or the commercial program, and would have arrived regardless of whether we had a war or not. It might have arrived a year or two later, for the burning up of wealth and resources during the war made the machine which brought the depression grind a little faster, that is all.

Now I introduce the touring car, which is to blame more for the present distress than the war, by quoting some words from Daniel:

But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end; many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.—Daniel 12: 4.

A Ford advertisement puts the modern rendition of that fact thus:

Everywhere you go you see 'em; and everywhere you see 'em they go.

Some Figures

I shall take some figures from the Ford papers which are put out by the management; and this will be representative of the whole industry. We shall also find from that, the result of the growth of the touring car phenomenon upon the public; and from that shall reason back again to the church; and thus identify a condition which is being much discussed.

There are in use to-day over 4,000,000 Ford cars. And cars bearing the numbers 5,447,816 to 5,529,519 were shipped during October, 1921. This would be 81,000 cars for the month. And to keep up this average for the year would bring the total to 978,436 for the year. Only lacking a few of a million a year. It is said that Ford cars constitute about one half of all the cars in use; and this would bring the grand total of cars in use at the present time up to 8,000,000.

There are about 100,000,000 people in the United States. And if the families average five persons, this will give 20,000,000 families. Now that many cars for that many families will give one car to every two and a half families. In other words, every two and a half families must buy and keep up a car, and the expense will average more than the expense of a Ford, for they are only one half Fords.

A Ford car will cost about $500, and the average family (this includes all cars in use) will ride out about, say, $2 a week for gas and oil, or $104 a year. The interest on the purchase price for the year will be $35 a year. Repairs and tires, etc., about $30 a year. And it is estimated that the life of a car is about seven years. The principal fades away at about the rate of $71 a year. So the expense of a car for the year may be recapitulated about as follows:

Depreciation	$ 71.00
Interest	35.00
Repairs	30.00
Gas and oil	104.00
	Total
	$240.00

So we have $240 a year expense for two and a half families, or about $100 a year for each family. I think these figures are approximately true.

The Latter Day Saints are taken from the middle strata of society, and for that reason we may say that what is true of the general public is also true of the church.

We have a membership of about 100,000, and an average of five to a family will give us 20,000 families who are burning up $2,000,000 a year running to and fro.

I remember when I was a boy that some of the Saints from our branch had come home from conference at Independence, and the report was circulated by them that a certain bishop was squandering the money of the poor; for, said they, he has electric lights in every room of his house! But now, it is just possible that some of the critics of the financial policy of the church not only have electric lights in their bedrooms, but on the front and rear of their cars as well, and they seem like torches, and they run like lightning to and fro, but knowledge is not increased.

Another fact that I glean is that "approximately $30,000,000 profits are shared annually by the Ford employees." I wonder how many tithes found their way into this strong box.

The Place for Retrenchment

A few weeks ago I read with sorrow that the church must retrench; that the missionary force must be reduced in number; and that other retrenchments must be made. It was in the same article, I believe, that I read that other churches were compelled to do the same.

This fact argues that it is not the expense side of the proposition that is the cause of the financial depression of the church, unless, peradventure, it occurred before the funds reached the treasury department of the church. For why should church expense which is incidental to expansion of our church, lap over on other churches so that they must retrench?

It thus becomes evident to the thoughtful person that the basis of the present church financial depression is on the side of receipts. The money simply is not coming in; that is all. And the reason for this exists in a number of very great errors, of which the touring car is only one; yet a very great one.

We believe the membership of the church still will to give freely to support the Lord's work. But they find their giving power has been limited. Now, I want to make it clear that this is the cause of the recent retrenchment order which will retard the promulgation of the gospel so much. To my mind it seems that the retrenchment came at the wrong end of the proposition.

Dis-fliver-ment Conference Needed

We have just had an illustration of active economy in the nations that have been assembled at Washington to discuss disarmament. And I think the church could with profit hold a conference to discuss dis-fliver-ment; and this would be applying the principle at the fountain head of the difficulty. We make a mistake when we discuss limiting the Jerusalem program, or the Indian work, or the Sanitarium, or the Children's Home in this connection.

When we contemplate the figures revealed by the automobile industry, and then know that the Saints are as deep in as the average person, we are reminded that there is an abundance to redeem Zion even now, if they who call themselves after his name were willing to impart as the law requires.

When I went out from America a few years ago, via the Golden Gate, I left behind a city whose streets were filled with horse-drawn vehicles; and when I returned last year, not a single horse was to be seen, and the cars moved by squads, by block signals at the street corners. Instinctively I shuddered. And as a few days later I went in and out of Los Angeles (the Angels), I was ever depressed in spirit by the sea of cars that jammed the streets day and night. And picking up a paper I read of 7 killed by traffic; 518 injured by traffic; 2,140 accidents in all reported to police headquarters; 231 stolen automobiles; all for the city of the angels for the one month of January. Many times the question would recur to my mind, What shall the end of all this be?

There may be some who will read this who know more about the automobile business than I, and who can out-figure me, too; and they may think that I would like to go back to the days of the prairie schooner. Not so; but there are a lot of people, millions, who should go back to the street car, and take the money they have invested in the touring car, and put it where it will help build up some fallen people. And there are multitudes of others that ought to spend their time on the farm and at the bench, and at the desk, which they now spend on the boulevard and the highway.

Truck, Tractor, Touring Car

We shall now divide the automobile business into three parts, viz, the truck, and the tractor, and the touring car. From a booklet, The Ford a Business Utility, and under the heading, "With truck owners," I quote the following:

I am sure that I am getting more service from these four machines and four drivers than I could from ten horses and eight drivers.—A User.

After two years of experience with the Ford truck, we recommend its efficiency in the retail coal business. On straight load deliveries within the mile and a half circle, it is capable of distributing fifty tons of coal in a ten-hour day, which is equivalent to the work of three teams. The fuel consumption averages nine miles to the gallon of gasoline, and one quart of oil every hundred miles. The depreciation, including tires, together with incidental repairs, has not exceeded one dollar per day.—A User.

The truck is a producer. I have no quarrel with it, nor with its brother, the tractor, for the same reason. In fact, it is such a good producer that four machines, as seen above, displace four drivers, who will go to the teamsters' union headquarters and take their place in the long line of unemployed, which at one time during the last year was 3,000,000 deep; or peradventure find work in some garage repairing touring cars.

Did you ever take the trouble to count the garages and filling stations in your town that were not there ten years ago, all of which employ groups of men who have families to support? And can they be supported out of an industry that is nonproductive?

Another user from Arkansas states that his truck costs for repairs and tires and gas and oil, $13.50 a month. This will about equal horse power, and the investment in horses, harness, wagons, etc., will about equal the investment in the truck. So, with the added efficiency there is no fault to find with the truck save to assimilate the displaced men in a productive line of work. It seems to me this is a Zion problem.

What is true of the truck is true of the tractor. I quote but one of the many testimonials concerning the tractor:

W. H. Rathburn, who operates the Fordson on a ranch near Somerset, Arizona, says, "I have used it on the plowing of heavy Bermuda grass which I was heretofore obliged to do with eight head of stock, the feed alone for same costing $4.68 a day. The expense incurred in the use of the tractor in a day's work will not exceed $3, and I have been able by the use of the tractor to perform one third more than I would if I had used stock. This tractor is certainly a wonder, not only from the standpoint of service, but equally as well in its low consumption of fuel, fifteen gallons of distillate serving the purpose of nine hours' continuous use, and it does not consume in that time more than one gallon of oil. In addition the use of this tractor also eliminated the cost of the services of the men whose services at the cheapest price would be $3.60 a day each.

So the tractor and truck are producers and are friends to man and should be befriended by him; as is also every other invention that helps to lighten the labors of man or beast. The touring car in a few instances is a producer, but I do not believe it to be more than ten per cent producer and ninety per cent nonproducer. I shall therefore class it as a nonproducer.

It will not do to fail to here define fully what a producer is. I think, too, that this is one of the key-notes of a Zion builder. Let every Saint learn to be a producer.

Sometimes a salesman who has been turning in $500 a month of orders, and then gets a car and turns in $1,000 a month, is heard telling his friends that the car is a producer. Here is such a testimony from B. B. W., Brookville, Indiana:

The Ford truck which we purchased from you a little more than a year ago has given us splendid service, having been driven nearly every day over all kinds of roads. We cover nearly twice as much territory as with our two teams.

It produced business; of course it did. But we are not speaking of business, but of wealth. The question is, Does the touring car cause two blades of grass to grow where but one grew before? Does it do some necessary work related to the bringing forth of the necessities of life? Or does it simply help money to change pockets or banks?

A certain man of my boyhood days gave his son an old pony with the privilege of trading as he felt like doing. After eight trades the boy had the same pony back again and $85 "to boot."

Percentage Used for Pleasure

I am informed that some one sent out a questionnaire last year to a multitude of car owners to see what percentage of cars were used for business and what percentage for pleasure. How stupid! All their effort for nothing. They obviously intended to find out what percentage of cars were necessary appurtenances to human existence, but they went wide of the mark.

I have seen bakery wagons in a town not their own, stealing trade from the local baker; and the next day the local baker sent his truck to the other's town to steal it back again. Is this production? Each may have been producing business, but not wealth.

A touring car that hauls eight men to their work helps to produce the commodity that the men are producing. A car that carries the physician to the sick chamber is producing health (not money). The car that carries the missionary to the place of his appointment is producing righteousness, etc.; but millions of cars that are used by salesmen—there may be exceptions—produce nothing but money for their masters, like the billboards that line the highway. I do not think it can be proved that the touring car is more than a ten per cent producer. Let us have a five-year touring car holiday in the church.

I have often gone into the shopping district of Kansas City and found the curbs on all the streets literally jammed with cars, from Baltimore to the Library and from Ninth to Thirteenth, it seemed to me; and some parking yards are said to park daily more than one thousand cars. These represent either shoppers or office men at work, and the whole thing could be taken care of by the street cars at a saving already pointed out, which would furnish a tremendous sum which could be used for more necessary work.

Go into any small town on any day of the week and you will see the streets well filled with cars; in some towns parked in the center of the street and in others at the curb. Ten years ago the hitch rack tethered but a few teams on all days except Saturday, and on Saturday not half so many as the cars that are parked in the streets on Monday or other days. This argues that people spend more time in town than they used to do. And they spend more money to get to town; and they spend more money after they get in town.

The argument that the farmer can keep a car as cheaply as he can keep a team loses its force when we know that the car will not plow corn, so he has to keep a team anyway.

The touring car increases railroad passenger rates, and whether the railroads give another cause for the raise or lay it on to the union, it is nevertheless a fact that if only a fraction of the people ride trains that used to do so, they cannot haul them for the same money. I know that ten years ago one could scarcely get a seat on any of the trains between Kansas City and Saint Joseph, while now one may have two seats.

In Fort Scott, Kansas, they have discontinued the street car service and grubbed out the tracks entirely. Was it not the jitney that made it necessary?

Good Cartoon Subject

If I were a cartoonist I would draw a cartoon of a member of the church standing beside his car in front of a filling station. And the filling pump should have two hose; the one a discharge and the other an intake. The discharge hose, of course, should be discharging gasoline into the car tank; and the intake hose should be inserted deep into the trousers pocket where the tithing is wont to be kept; and I would write below, "Will a man rob God?"

If I owned the car that I use in getting around to the Indian camps and to haul the gospel tent about, I should feel somewhat justified; for I made out my inventory and paid the tenth thereon fifteen years ago. Since that time, for the greater portion of time I have been living on the true stewardship basis; and if I feel like making additional offerings, I do so. If I have need in my stewardship, I am supplied. If I have a surplus that I do not need in my stewardship, I gladly turn it over. I have never wanted nor worried about wanting, for I trust in about 100,000 Saints who are back of me. You can do the same, and ought to.

If you have to take extreme measures to meet your obligation to God and to them who keep the whole law—and to them also you owe it—do it. It is no worse for you to owe a bill at the filling station, to keep the church property clear, than it is for the church property and that of the missionaries to assume a mortgage to keep your bill paid up at the filling station.

When I see my colaborers who have been valiant, laid off from a field already white to harvest; and the very early ideals of the church threatened with postponement, I cannot refrain from making this appeal to all car owners: not to let the sun set on the present situation until they have done all in their power to alleviate it.

God help you to arise in the glory of your faith.

To do nothing by halves is the way of noble minds.
—Wieland.

THE STAFF

Some Interesting Old Hymns

It recently fell to our lot to trace the origin of some of our old, well-worn hymns, and we found material enjoyment in the task. We personally inspected original copies of the first two periodical publications of the early church, The Evening and Morning Star, published at Independence, Missouri, from June, 1832, until the expulsion of the Saints in 1833; also The Latter Day Saints' Messenger and Advocate, published at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1834 and 1835. In these we found the publication, ninety years ago almost, of some of the hymns we so often sing to-day with fervor and enjoyment.

The first hymn (words only) to appear in any publication of the church, reading in the order one would naturally follow in the columns of newspaper print, was found in the June issue of The Evening and Morning Star, volume one, number one, on the last page of same. It was typically a Latter Day Saint hymn, breathing the spirit of the restoration, as follows: (first two lines).

"What fair one is this, in the wilderness trav'ling, Looking for Christ, the below'd of her heart?"

Appearing in the same issue we find three other characteristic hymns. There next appears our much used hymn, found in our Hymnal, number 279;

"Glorious things of thee are spoken,
Zion, city of our God."

Another hymn, which however does not appear in any later published editions of hymnals of the church, is "The time is nigh, that happy time,

That great, expected, blessed day."

But most interesting of all, in this same issue was found what is perhaps the most used hymn of the church to-day, found in Hymnal, number 158:

"Redeemer of Israel,
Our only delight."

Here was the face of an old friend, tried and true, coming to us from the dim haze of years that are all too veiled in mystery. We read it again, although we know it by heart, and we found what many do not know: there is a fifth verse, not found in our hymn books of the past half century, omitted for the sake of brevity doubtless, as it is the only one that possibly could have been omitted. That our readers may know what it is, we quote it entire:

"The secret of Heaven,
The Myst'ry below,
That many have sought for so long;
We know that we know,
For the Spirit of Christ,
Tells his servants they cannot be wrong."

A number of other well-known hymns are found in the succeeding issues of The Evening and Morning Star, until its last number, July, 1833, after which the spirit of persecution prevailed to the expulsion of the Saints from the land to which they had gathered.

But the publication of many of our well-known church hymns went on, and in the files of The Latter Day Saints' Messenger and Advocate, published at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1834 and 1835, are found a number of them. Therein is found that most distinctly characteristic of all Latter Day Saint hymns, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning." It was published under the title of "Hozanna to God and the Lamb," by W. W. Phelps, author, and the tune designated to be sung to it was "American Star." Whether this is the same tune now used we are unable to say. But an interesting fact concerning its first publication is that there is found a verse that does not appear in either the "Saints' Harp" or our Hymnal, our two most recent hymn books. It is the fourth verse of the original, and as many doubtless have never seen or heard of it, we herewith reproduce it:

"We'll wash and be washed, and with oil be anointed,
Withal not omitting the washing of feet:
For he that receiveth his penny appointed,
Must surely be clean at the harvest of wheat."

Were we able to glean all the sentiments and surroundings in which our early hymns sprang into being we would doubtless have a most excellent presentation of the spiritual aspirations, as well as sufferings, of the early church.

Musical Activities at Sacramento, California

Sister Hazel Blohm, a member of the publicity committee of the Sacramento, California, Branch, and also an energetic member of the choir there, writes us a very interesting account of the musical activities of the branch for the past year, which we think will not only be of interest to our musical workers everywhere, but will be helpful as well. This account came just as the last issue of The Staff was "going to press" (to use a journalistic phrase) hence had to lay over until this number. The choir of this branch has accomplished so very much during the past year that the chronicle of their doings furnishes an example and an incentive to all other branches and choirs.

Beginning Easter Sunday, almost a year ago, the choir sang for the special Easter services the second half of Gillette's cantata, "The Light Everlasting."

Following that, on "Mothers' Day," special anthems and solos suitable for the occasion were rendered. During the anthem, "For mother's sake," little girls passed through the congregation distributing red and white flowers, thus lending an affecting touch to the sentiment of the day.

On June 12 a specially augmented choir, under the direction of Sister Birdie Clark, rendered the cantata, "Olivet to Calvary." Some of the singers of the choir had been cooperating in friendly association with the local music clubs and they brought to the assistance of the choir for the occasion some of the prominent singers and soloists of the city, augmenting the choir sufficiently to render this fine cantata most successfully. Sister Christianna Waller, chorister of the district (Northern California) with some of the music workers from San Francisco and Oakland, motored to Sacramento and were present on the occasion. Later, at the annual reunion of the district in August, this cantata was again rendered under the direction of Sister Clark, in the absence of Sister Waller.

Special music has been rendered on several occasions since, such as Thanksgiving Day and Christmas; and on a recent

Sunday evening the choir again repeated the cantata, "The Life Everlasting."

What the Sacramento choir has done a number of other choirs of the church could easily do; but they won't do it as long as they sit contentedly, satisfied with the regular production of the commonplace and the things they have been doing all along.

Independence Choir Prepares for Easter

The Independence Stone Church choir is busily engaged, under the direction of its leader, Brother Harold C. Burgess, in preparing DuBois' sacred cantata, "The seven last words of Christ," for rendition at Easter time. This is one of the standard cantatas and was about a year ago rendered by the choir of the Brick Church at Lamoni, during Brother Burgess's leadership there.

During the young people's services at the Stone Church at Independence, during the week of February 19 to 26, Brother Burgess had charge of the congregational singing for the services, conducting such in the upper auditorium each night with great interest.

Music and Beauty

Sister Audentia Anderson, of Omaha, Nebraska, formerly editor of The Staff, sends us the following which appeared under the above caption in the Omaha Bee, of March 2, 1922.

NEW YORK.—(Special Correspondent.)—At a dinner party recently, following the usual lull after a big dinner and coffee, the hostess, whose apartment boasted a fine grand piano, began to solicit talent among those present. There were ten women guests, most of them quite young, but each and every one of them pleaded inability to produce a musical note either by song or piano.

"Isn't it strange," said one fair guest. "Here we are ten what might be called reasonably well educated women. We can talk about books and talk about plays and about food and the latest dance steps, and still we seem, as a body, to have neglected something that ought to be more vital in a way—music. It plays an important enough part in our lives, after all, so that more of us should respond to its charm, and be able to dispense some of the latter as well."

Adds to Feminine Charm

At which the host projected, "Well, I don't know what is the matter with you girls, anyway, especially you unmarried ones. Take Marion there (nodding in the direction of his wife), she used to be able to play and sing. In fact, that's how I fell in love with her. But now she won't do a thing with her music, and I often long for the old days when she would play some melody and chase away my cares and worries.

"I think it adds tremendously to a girl's beauty, don't you? And, as an element of charm it ought to be considered in a girl's education, not to be dropped once she gets herself tied up at the altar. A homely woman can make herself the center of attraction if she can play or sing well. And a pretty one with a talent—well, she is the bright star of the occasion. And I don't mean she has to have professional ability, either."

Talent Sadly Neglected

By a curious coincidence this incident came to my ears directly after I had been going over some medical and health books, and I had just been struck with the importance attached to music by several writers. And I remembered having remarked on various occasions after parties how comparatively few girls are able to contribute anything to such occasions in a musical way. However, I never thought of it so much as a beauty asset as a feature of education, which it were decidedly too bad to neglect. But the host's comment recalled to mind occasions where a girl had gone up many notches in the estimation of those present when she contributed in a musical way to the pleasure of the party.

There is something feminine about it that carries its own appeal, isn't there? It lifts one above the commonplace, too, does it not? And the better one performs the farther one is removed from the commonplace. And, after all, there is hardly a house in America of any pretensions whatever that does not harbor a piano, and studying music is no more difficult, except in a few rare cases where there is a total lack of ear, than any other study which contributes to a finer intellect.

Helps in Sickness and Grief

So much for the beauty side of it. Now for the health angle.

Doctor John H. Huber, who has written a fascinating book on retaining youth, says every one should have a hobby, and the most satisfying of these and the most comforting he claims to be music, the appreciation of good music, with some little skill on a musical instrument.

"Music is indeed a most salutary medicine," he says, "because its component tones are regular vibrations, even auditory waves, precisely so many to each note; being thus unlike cacophonies, noises that are made up of irregular, dissonant, conflicting vibrations. Thus is the pleasing sense of perception of good music conveyed to the brain, where its benignancy is in turn transmitted to the sympathetic nervous system, which directs the functions of the heart, the lungs, the stomach, and other organs. Thus is good music not only psychic for the soul, dissipating mental depression and soothing emotional disturbances, but it also enhances nutrition, furthers digestion (wherefore Voltaire spoke of 'liver music'), quickens the pulse, and helps to restore organic unity.

"Indeed, the entire human machinery will run all the better for occasional lubrication with a stream of melody that is sweetly played in tune, and which 'will help thee in thy need in sickness, grief, and all adversities.' It is truly one of humankind's most inestimable blessings that into our stream of consciousness there may (be we so disposed) empty themselves most melliflously "those purling rivulets, those rippling brooks, those laughing waters, those sparkling cascades which have their springs in concords of sweet sounds."

The effect of music on the human system is well exemplified in the fact that the music of a band will carry marching men along with a swing, whereas without the band they drag along with a dispirited gait. It is a distinct stimulant, as even the hurdy-gurdy has proved to you time and again. It tones up the nerves and gives courage.—By Antoinette Donnelly.

Music Is Conducive to Home Contentment

There probably is nothing in the home on the farm, or in the city, for that matter, according to the Dallas News, so conducive to the happiness and contentment of its inmates as music.

"So plainly is this evident and so universally conceded," the News continues, "that one might with some show of cogency, in his argument, assert that music is of itself a necessity as well as a joy—indeed, a comfort, too. Certain it is that in a family where there are members blessed with musical talent there is an attraction for the home that does not exist in the absence of music.

"The lack of musical talent has in this present age, however, been in great measure overcome through inventive genius, for although there may not be those in a family who are gifted with both the talent and desire to make music, the mechanical devices for making music now obtainable are both numerous and satisfactory. And not only are they satisfactory in the manner in which they render the numbers played, but it is possible to have the classic productions of the century produced with absolute correctness as to melody and technic. Where mechanical attachments are not used this is not possible except in extremely few families, for extraordinary indeed is the amateur musician, on whatever instrument he may play, who is capable of rendering the world's greatest gems of classical music.

"With the player-piano one may buy every piece of music, whether classical or ragtime, and this mechanical musician will render it for him with perfect technical expression. At the same time these wonderful instruments—and they are certainly wonderful—may be changed in a moment to be played by a pianist. Thus is the home doubly blessed which has one of these great instruments within its walls—it plays anything offered it, and is ready at any time to give way to the talent of any musician who may be present, or for practice by the beginner.

"And the player-piano is not the only musical instrument with appealing merits. The various talking machines not only do 'talk' but they sing, or render with amazing correctness and musical intonation the songs sung by the world's greatest human songbirds, and in addition will reproduce with faithful and remarkable exactitude the beautiful instrumental productions not only of single instruments, but of orchestras or bands. Indeed, these wonderful instruments make it possible for a family to enjoy any evening, or, in fact, at any time, a lecture or recitation, vocal renditions by any of the world's most noted singers and a concert by a great musical organization in the form of a band or orchestra.

"We are rather inclined to the belief that few people realize to their full value the capabilities of these great musical contrivances and their effectiveness in adding to the pleasure and attractiveness of any home, whether in city or country. For the same outlay in money it can scarcely be gainsaid that there is no other attraction that can approach in any reasonable degree a musical instrument, especially one which is so capable of interesting, instructing, and entertaining not only the members of a family, but all who appreciate music and the other entertainments they afford."

Abraham Lincoln's Piano Is Heard in D. A. R. Musical

A Schomacher piano purchased by Mrs. Lincoln when she became first lady of the land was used in a musical given by the Kaskaskia Chapter of the D. A. R., at the Chicago Historical Society rooms recently.

The musical was devoted to the singing of melodies that were in vogue during the time of Abraham Lincoln, and which our grandparents sang and played.

Members of the society that took part in the recital were attired in the costumes worn in the period between 1830 and 1860.

Brother Charles Lundeen, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, writes to express appreciation of various articles that have appeared in the HERALD the past few months. With some he agrees and with some he disagrees in some points, but from all of them he learns much of value to him in his work.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT

Edited by Audentia Anderson, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

How Shall We Train Our Daughters?

These are indeed most progressive times. To keep abreast of the advancement, one surely needs to shake himself loose from old traditions and be willing to come out into the light of to-day, and try to view conditions and opportunities from newer vantage grounds.

Time has been when no women were admitted to the higher institutions of learning. We have come to regard that period as belonging to the "Dark Ages." As we emerged from the gloom of those days, all we could ask or seemed to desire was to be placed upon a footing of equal opportunity with our more fortunate brothers. We were glad to pore over abstractions and more or less vaguely-outlined principles and theories of philosophy and so-called culture. Many an ambitious feminine brain has been crammed with theorems and Greek verbs which, no doubt, developed therein some added ability to think and reason and remember, but which proved rather "a broken reed" when the owner of the brain was compelled to turn it to the homely and practical duties of home and motherhood.

We are slowly emerging once more, from the gloom of traditional curricula. Schools and colleges are coming more and more to see that study which does not qualify for life's most probable responsibilities is but lame, and education which does not fit a young man or young woman to meet experiences with the strength born of at least a modicum of knowledge concerning them is but superficial.

We are told that seventy-five per cent of American women marry, and almost all of them become mothers. How much definite preparation for either position think you have these women made? Silent answer might be made by the 100,000 tiny graves, or the 25,000 longer ones wherein rest the spent forms of our annual sacrifices on the altar of motherhood.

Some of these facts have begun to startle our Nation. They have within the past few years, through the instrumentality of the Children's Bureau, been able to decrease perceptibly this dreadful toll taken by Ignorance. This has been accomplished by spreading the gospel of truth and knowledge concerning the facts essential for mothers to know.

That this educational work has met with many obstacles must be admitted, and perhaps one of the most influential has been the indifference to these opportunities, on the part of the mothers of the present girlhood of the Nation. Hard as it is to believe that mothers would be guilty of indifference or neglect in regard to the knowledge for their daughters which will often spell the difference between success and failure in marriage and parental experience, a thoughtful survey of to-day's conditions compels us to that conviction. From pulpit and press, from rostrum and conference table, comes the challenge to American mothers, to arouse from their lethargy, put aside their old-time traditions, and map out for their daughters a course of education which will prepare them for their most probable duties in life. It is time to face the question squarely and honestly, and to find the answer that will secure the highest and most-to-be-desired results.

This answer need not bring less of science, culture, or philosophy into the training of our girls, but will rather choose those branches with greater care and greater consideration of future needs. Cannot a girl's mind be as highly developed through a study of household accounting as of banking, or by a knowledge of household engineering as well as of bridge building?

"The higher institutions of learning, naturally among the most conservative forces of society," wrote Mary Read seven years ago, "have not yet begun to perceive the significance of such a subject as mothercraft in the curriculum, although the beginnings of some phases are being made. Secondary and elementary schools, bound by the fetish of college requirements, are only beginning to show here and there indications of efforts to prepare for living instead of simply for college. And the young woman—still immature, inexperienced, and therefore not appreciative of life's values and impending responsibilities—has had neither the guidance of school and home, nor the educational opportunity, nor the personal foresight to prepare adequately for this vocation.

"What is the consequence? A generation of women, the majority of whom are notoriously (and sometimes shamelessly) ignorant and unskilled in the most vital and significant human responsibilities. In millions of homes women are wasting their time and energy, losing the joy of their motherhood (and too often their little ones), perplexed, harassed, overburdened, because they are bungling, stumbling blindly, groping at their vocation."

Why this editorial? Why are we trying to present this matter to our readers again, and in this form? Simply this. Are you Latter Day Saint parents widely enough awake to the situation portrayed, to feel in your hearts and to carry out in action, that you are willing to break loose from some of the old educational traditions, and urge upon your daughters the taking of homecraft subjects? If you cannot do much towards changing the established curriculum of your local high school, introducing there such subjects as nursing, household physics, and mathematics, nutrition, etc., as elective for girls, would you be willing to make the attempt to send your daughters to schools where these branches are taught?

Let us go a step farther. As members of a church which is attempting to establish a condition of purity, health, and happiness conserved by and through loyalty to the common good, and as members of a church which is supporting a school for learning where not only the minds but the souls of the students are of prime consideration as they are being trained for service to God, the church and community, would you be interested in seeing placed in that school a course of study in homecraft? After its placement there, would you support it, if possible, by sending your daughter there, helping her to see that a real preparation for happy and useful living is an opportunity far above mere old-time scholastic knowledge?

What would you like to see included in such a course in Graceland? Already there is a part of the usual home economics course, where many practical phases of homecraft are taught. Other things will be provided as needed. It is for us parents to ask, that it may be granted unto us, to "seek, that we may find" for our girls that special training which will fit them to carry successfully the management of a home and the care of children, and to do it with a fair perception of the spiritual values involved. It is not enough for one to learn how to sweep a room, but to be able to do so with a sense of its real relation to life is far better. The old couplet expresses the thought:

"She who sweeps a room as unto God Makes that, and the action, fine."

Could we inject this comprehension of the worthiness of all duty, into our lives, would any of us find our daily tasks irksome? And would we ever perform them in a careless, superficial, or inefficient manner? And could we give to our daughters a better heritage than a perception of this great and elemental truth, viz, that "not a sparrow falleth but its God doth know," and that it is possible to serve God as truly in the smaller tasks of life as in the larger ones? And, since it is service to God, shall we not try to make it worthy of him?

Now, may we make an earnest request of each parent who reads this? Will you please write to us, and tell us what are your desires for the education of your daughters? Will you not take the time to thoughtfully consider what elements you consider of paramount importance in their training? Will you give us the benefit of your observations and experience along these lines, pointing out advantages or disadvantages you may see which would arise from our girls concentrating upon such a course instead of the usual college course?

What parent will be the first to reply, we wonder!

How shall we train our daughters?

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Leadership

A leader has many duties. Her work must be planned, and her plan worked out. She must preside at meetings, teach and instruct her workers, and report the work she has been able to accomplish. Besides this, she must work in harmony with her superior officers, and coordinate her work with all other departments of the church.

Sometimes she will find it necessary to take over the duties of a resigning worker until another can be appointed to fill the vacancy. Quite frequently, too, she must substitute for absent teachers.

Perhaps a few hints may help her in arranging her work, and these are offered in all sincerity and with the hope that some may benefit.

1. A leader must consider broad policies. What has been done, the present needs, the possibilities of the future, should all engage her thought. In visioning the future, remember that nothing worth while has ever been done until it was first dreamed or visioned.

2. Installing new methods and devices. Study organization, and perfect yours. Through organization a leader multiplies herself. By organization a division of labor is made possible. Unless old plans have been very successful, try a new one. People like new ways of doing things, and respond quickly to new plans. Try the new "group" method that is becoming so popular in many places.

3. Instruct workers. A leader must organize, deputize, and supervise her work and workers. It is the executive's task to give out clear-cut statements on which action may follow. A leader must not work on the exterior, prodding and forcing; but on the interior, stimulating and releasing. She should inspire and control her workers. A good commander is one who knows how to obey. One must always follow, even while leading.

4. Set high standards. See that good work is done. Work that is slighted in any particular or department is not a credit to a leader.

5. Find special capabilities. Investigate the special abilities of workers. Know them; teach them to specialize according to their gifts and talents, especially to train as teachers.

You will find many types among them. An accurate knowledge of each will be a remarkable help to you. You will find some who are keenly interested in their work, some who are unusually accurate, some who are possessed of infinite patience, some who are very retiring and shrink from prominence, some who are untiring in their efforts to keep their departments up to a high standard, and some who are able to concentrate for long periods of time upon problems, and give wise counsel thereon.

You will find the steady, quiet worker, who will work side by side with the speedy one—one slow thinking, and the other able to decide and act quickly. There will be some who are willing to study the theory of their work from books, and some who will not study under any circumstance. Among these last named, you may find your great doers—the people who work with their hands. Many useful tasks can be found for them. If you look closely, you may find one or two splendid teachers, and perhaps a few who are real specialists, those who are skilled in some one art. Know their specialties, and find a place in your ranks for each and every one who is willing to work!

6. Manage your workers judiciously. Some are impulsive workers who need to be held back. Some are self-centered and must be patted on the back. Then there is the grouchy worker, who gets things done but is always whining about it. A good leader can use all types, knowing that often not half of what is said is really meant.

There is just one kind of worker for whom we seem to have no place, and that is the one from whose mouth there continually flows a stream of sarcasm. Such a person should be kept out of office until self-control is learned, for more harm than good is done by her services.

7. The work to be done. Consider the size of your district or group. Note the needs, and the possibilities before you. Set your goal, and work towards it. Have a definite plan, and patiently pursue it.

8. Sequence of work. Order is heaven's first law, we are told. You must have system to be a successful leader. Without it you may expect failure. Everything has a beginning, a middle, and an end. Consider.

9. Methods. Methods should be standard, advanced, and honorable. Nothing short of this is becoming in Saints.

10. Who shall do. Get the right persons in the right places, and then try to keep them willingly at the top notch. Congenial work should be a joyous work.

11. Where. Meeting places, in mass or in groups. Note the conditions of your members, their needs and preferences, and conform to what seems most convenient and profitable.

12. Take time for the work. Do not expect results too soon. Some of the best and most desirable things are of slow growth. All education comes slowly. Be patient. We cannot go faster than the group is willing to go.

13. Quality of finished product. Always we want good results. A leader must be measured by the quality of her work, by her methods, her capacity to learn and her capacity to teach. She should build solidly, taking time to lay foundations well, and then erect the structure patiently, of materials that will bear inspection.

All in all, let us have patience with each other, working together in harmony for the advancement of the work as a whole. Upon such effort we may, with confidence, ask the blessing of God.

Building Cathedrals

Modern civilization, one might truly say, is based on the home. Back of the home, often almost submerged in drudgery, is the mother. Yet to the best of them, however hard pressed by domestic duties, life is an achievement more than a task. Cooking is not merely the preparation of food, nor sweeping simply chasing dust, nor is the teaching of cleanliness, religion, and love for the beautiful in nature and art only toil. All these things go to the strengthening of civilization.

The spirit of the housewife is needed throughout every activity of modern life. Whatever the task to which fate has assigned one, it has its connections with something greater. To view it thus is to find joy in work and to gain in craftsmanship.

Three men all engaged at the same employment were asked what they were doing. One said he was making $5 a day. Another replied that he was cutting stone. The third said he was building a cathedral. The difference was not in what they were actually doing, although the spirit of one might quite possibly have made him more expert in his task. They were all earning the same wage, they were all cutting stone; but only one held it in his mind that he was helping build a great edifice. Life meant more to him than to his mates, because he saw farther and more clearly.

The farmer may be only planting seed, but if he opens his eyes he is feeding the world. The railroad man, the factory hand, the clerk in the store, likewise are building their cathedrals. The investors in stocks and bonds, the executives in charge of great corporations, they are building cathedrals likewise, if only they can catch the vision. The housewife does not count the dollars she receives for her exertions, and if she did her life would be unhappy indeed. The rest of us, the great figures in the industrial world more than the humble ones, are thinking too much about such things as cutting stone and making profits really to be realizing the beauty of life.—Editorial in Omaha Bee.

CHAPTER XVII

The Will

1. Why is the will necessary?
2. How is our strength of will measured? Parents and teachers should often resort to the legitimate practice of telling the child to do something else when he is doing something objectionable, instead of saying, "Don't do this or that." Get the attention on something foreign to the objectionable, and the chances are, he will not care to go back to the original thing.
3. Explain the steps necessary in making a choice.
4. Discuss the difference between reasonable and accidental decisions?
5. Why is the habit of indecision to be fought against?
6. What is the crucial point in human experience? We find many striking examples, such as Jean Valjean, in literature. It is our duty as parents and teachers to select splendid examples of strength of will power for the growing children. What would you suggest?
7. What is the greatest test of our will power?
8. In the light of the paragraph on page 284, "Objective tests a false measure of will power," do we not again see the inability of one man to judge another? "The only point from which a conflict of motives can be safely judged is that of the soul which is engaged in the struggle." Illustrate.
9. Carefully study the three types of will and explain

Holden Stake Conference

Holden Stake conference held at Holden, Missouri, opened on Friday, March 10, at 10 a. m. with devotional services in charge of Brethren C. V. Hopkins and Roscoe Moorman. At eleven o'clock business session for the organization of the conference was held in charge of Brethren W. S. Macrae and F. A. McWethy. The stake presidency were sustained to preside over the conference and make such provisions for same as they deemed necessary. Also secretary of the stake was sustained as secretary of the conference with power to choose an assistant if she desired. Stake musical director was given charge of Brethren C. V. Hopkins and Roscoe Moorman. At motion was adopted authorizing the remaining members of the stake presidency to appoint a committee for the purpose of formulating an expression of greetings and love to be sent to Brother D. J. Krahl, whose physical condition had made it imperative that he cease his active work in the stake for a few months. Brethren F. A. Cool, J. W. A. Bailey, and C. V. Hopkins were appointed on this committee. Conference programs were distributed and explanation was made by W. S. Macrae as to the purpose of the exhibit of milk and dairy products in the Sunday-school room. The Women's Department and Educational Association put on and supervised this exhibit, taking this means to impress the relative value of milk and dairy products, illustrated with charts, pictures, etc.

At two o'clock in the afternoon the meeting was turned over to the Sunday School Department with Brother C. F. Scarcliff, stake superintendent, in charge. The fifth section in the Sunday school standard of excellence was revised and made to read: "A first grade school must have all teachers either trained or enrolled in a teacher training class; second grade school seventy-five per cent teachers thus enrolled or trained, and a third grade school sixty per cent. The stake presidency presented the name of Brother C. F. Scarcliff as Stake Sunday-school superintendent for the coming year. The nomination was accepted and Brother Scarcliff was elected. Brother George W. Beebe was sustained as assistant superintendent. A motion prevailed that hereafter the stake secretary will have charge of the Sunday school secretary work. At 3.30 the meeting was turned over to the Religio Department. Since this department is under direct supervision of the general department, no business was transacted as a stake. Brother I. M. Ross as stake field worker gave a short talk as to the condition of the Religios in the stake at the present time.

The committee appointed to formulate greetings to Brother Krahl submitted such expression as they believed the confer-each in your own language. Note carefully the author's way of dealing with children having the obstructed will.

10. How may the will be trained? What is the best method?

11. What are the two limitations of the will? What is the outlook?

12. Treasure these thoughts and make them a part of your lives: "What he is, coupled with what he may do, leads him to what he may become." And the sublime words of Oliver Wendell Holmes from his poem, "The chambered nautilus," at the end of the chapter.

13. Perform and discuss "Problems in observation and introspection."

DORA GLINES.

ence wished to convey to our stake president, and the same was unanimously adopted.

At 7 o'clock in the evening a program was given under the auspices of the Religio Department at the auditorium of the Holden Home. A set of slides on dairying was shown, which was especially given for our rural Saints. After this a radio-phonograph concert was rendered. This concert was a success and the significance of radio work in the stake was demonstrated more completely than ever before. A collection was taken for wireless work, amounting to $8.31.

Saturday at 8 a. m. prayer service was held in charge of Brethren F. A. Cool and Doctor G. W. Rodger.

At 9 o'clock regular business session of the conference convened. Elder U. W. Greene was present and the presidency requested him to come up and assist them during the business session.

Report of stake presidency was read. A message from Brother D. J. Krahl was read expressing his inability to be present, and submitting to the conference word received from the First Presidency of the church. By the advice of Doctor Harrington, church physician, the First Presidency made arrangements and recommended that the work of the stake be turned over entirely to the other members of the stake presidency, Brother W. S. Macrae to act as stake president and Brother McWethy counselor. The recommendation of the First Presidency was approved and a unanimous vote was cast to give these brethren our whole-hearted support in carrying on the work of the stake. Bishop's report and auditor's report on same were read and accepted. Reports were read and approved from stake Sunday school superintendent; stake Religio field worker, stake organizer of the Women's Department; stake recorder and the First Quorum of Priests. The following recommendations for ordinations were submitted by the stake high council and approved by the conference: To office of priest, James Brendel, of Lexington and Mark Ford, of Bates City; to office of elder, J. S. Watson, of Jefferson City; to office of teacher, Ivan Beebe, of Lexington; to office of deacon, Finis Beebe, of Lexington, James Ford and Wesley Ballinger, of Bates City, and Brother E. L. Ross, of Knobnoster. The stake presidency recommended that no reunion be held in the Holden Stake in 1922. The same was approved and provision was made for holding two-day meetings in every group in the stake instead. The invitation of Zion to meet with them in reunion this year was accepted. The conference voted as looking with disfavor on the matter of holding a joint reunion. The stake bishop's recommendation was accepted relative to dividing equally between the three stakes the old reunion fund, and placing the part of Holden Stake with the Presiding Bishop for use of the church until the stake wants to use it.

At 2 o'clock business session was resumed again. Recommendations of bishop's court relative to expelling Oscar Wheeldon and Alfred Raveill from the church were accepted.

The stake presidency and stake bishopric were elected as the committee to have charge of dining hall project at Sedalia Fair for this year. Reports of radio committee, stake musical director, and stake educational association were read and approved. The stake presidency were authorized to select a stake recorder. Sister Blanche Christenson was sustained as secretary of stake, and Sister Lola A. Johnson as stake musical director. The matter of Sunday school budget was left in the hands of the stake bishopric to work out. The budget of the Women's Department was left with stake bishopric and organizer, and that of the department of music was left with stake bishopric, director of music and departments whom they serve. At 3 o'clock the Women's Department had charge of the meeting, with Sister I. M. Ross, stake organizer, in charge. An address was given by Sister Dora Young on the Shepherd-Towner Bill, also an address was given by Sister D. J. Krahl on social purity. At 4 o'clock a priesthood meeting was held in the Sunday-school room and talk was given by Brother U. W. Greene. At the same time in the main auditorium the Women's Department held a meeting especially for the women. At 7.30 a concert was given by the stake department of music under the leadership of Sister Lola Johnson.

At 8.15 Sunday morning young people's prayer meeting was held in charge of Brethren W. S. Macrae and C. L. House. At 8.30 the Aaronic priesthood met in the building of relief and service department. At 9.30 a. m. Sunday school in charge of C. F. Scarciff. At the same hour the elders' quorum met in the hall of relief and service department. Preaching at 11 o'clock by Elder U. W. Greene. At the close of the hour a collection was taken to defray the expenses of the conference amounting to $27.12.

At 2 p. m. ordination services were held. James Duffey was ordained high priest and member of the stake high council; J. S. Watson, elder; Ivan Beebe, teacher. Finis Beebe, deacon.

At 3 p. m. short talks were made by I. M. Ross, C. L. House, W. S. Macrae, and Sister I. M. Ross.

Adjournment was had to meet at Knobnoster, subject to call of the stake presidency.

BLANCHE CHRISTENSON, Stake Secretary.

Independence

The following resolutions were adopted by an open meeting of the Women's Department of Zion at a session at the Stone Church on March 17, 1922:

"Resolved, That we, the mothers in Zion, urge the parents of children of tender age—eleven years and under—to discourage their attendance at evening services and all evening functions.

"Resolved, That we recommend to parents as a protective measure, that young people under the age of seventeen attending evening services and functions be chaperoned.

"Resolved, That night parties for young people at the age of eleven to seventeen inclusive close at ten p. m., and that all children under the age of eleven years have parties only during the day, that the time for closing each party be stated on invitation."

Baby Week will be observed in Independence during the week beginning April 2 by an extensive program under the auspices of the Women's Department. The sermon next Sunday evening will be by A. Max Carmichael. The organization is functioning effectively, and no doubt the affair will be well patronized by all. An appreciation of the importance of child nurture and care and protection is steadily growing under the impetus given the movement by the women in organized capacity.

Though news items from Independence center around the Stone Church activities, it should not be thought by any means that the developments in the smaller churches in the community are relatively less important. One finds some most interesting and worth-while developments there, as in all the typical communities of Saints, wherever they may be.

Each week a paid advertisement is inserted in the local daily paper, announcing the services at the various churches of the Saints. The one appearing March 25 for the services of the 26th, included the following items:

Stone Church, 11 a. m., preaching by Apostle J. F. Curtis;

7.30 p. m., program by the Indians of Greater Kansas City; 8 p. m., preaching by Elder Hubert Case.

Second Independence, 11 a. m., preaching by Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths; 7.30 p. m., preaching by Apostle T. W. Williams.

Liberty Street, 11 a. m., preaching by Elder F. J. Lewis; 7.30 p. m., preaching by Apostle R. C. Russell.

Walnut Park, 11 a. m., preaching by Elder E. T. Atwell; 7.30 p. m., preaching by A. K. Dillee.

Enoch Hill, 11 a. m., preaching by Apostle T. W. Williams; 7.30 p. m., preaching by Elder W. H. Kelley.

Spring Branch, 11 a. m., preaching by Elder W. H. Kelley; 7.30 p. m., preaching by Elder E. T. Atwell.

Englewood, 11 a. m., preaching by Patriarch I. N. White; 7.30 p. m., preaching by Elder S. A. Burgess.

The round table discussion following the pictures at the Stone Church Religio last Friday evening, in which T. W. Williams answered questions regarding the Religio was interesting and profitable, and will no doubt result in the publication by Brother Williams of similar views for the benefit of others.

The program Sunday evening at the Stone Church, by the Indians of Greater Kansas City, was enjoyed by all who could secure entrance, many not being able to find seats.

The radio sermon from Kansas City Sunday evening was by Elder Chris B. Hartshorn, whose subject was, "Does the world need the church?"

The Pen and Ink Club contest resulted in the development of twenty-four usable "plots" for Children's Day programs. Many of these will be developed for publication and use. The winner of first place was Mrs. Mollie Davis, of Independence, on the subject, "Zion redeemed." Because of the demand for such material, it is planned to publish this at once and send out, for those who wish some distinctively good material for the coming Children's Day. A card to the Herald Publishing House will furnish information as to the date of availability and probable prices. This program will be put on at the Second Independence church this year under the auspices of the committee as a trial of its qualities.

An interesting feature of the follow-up work of the young people's amalgamation here is the correspondence with those who responded to the daily letters sent out during the young people's services. It is sought to make the ties of brotherhood so strong between those who are here and those who have gone elsewhere that the church will come to have a very definite meaning in the lives of all concerned.

Elder J. W. Rushton will address the Religio next Friday evening on a subject of vital interest to the young people.

Walnut Park has had recently a special meeting each for the men and women of the church, at which the pastor addressed them very frankly on topics of social purity, much to the edification of all. Perhaps this will be a regular feature at certain intervals, probably once every three months. A morning service was given the sisters not long since, at which time three of the officials known as friendly visitors occupied the time in explaining the various aspects of this part of the work. A junior orchestra is being organized, while the junior choir is already functioning nicely as well as the usual choir organization.

The sessions of the joint council are being held daily.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium for the week ending March 25: Miss Alice F. Smith, Chicago, Illinois; Miss Eula Vickrey, Pensacola, Florida; W. B. Wilson, Mount Washington, Missouri; and the following from Independence: L. W. Closson, Walter Cargyle, William A. Turner, Master Forest Waddle, Miss Garnett Brunson, Mrs. Etta Oldfather, Mrs. Joseph R. Lambert, Mrs. Anna Blakeslee, William Bailey, Miss Carrie Russell, Master Edward Bracht, Mrs. En-geborg Soper, and Mrs. Laura Hamilton. X-ray patients: Mrs. T. M. James, Buckner, Missouri; and Milton Wiggins, Mrs. Eben Miller, and Baby Donald Miller, of Independence.

Lamoni Stake

The community was saddened to learn of the death of Brother Duncan Campbell, a resident of Lamoni for many years, at Cedar Falls, Iowa, on March 16, at the age of seventy-six. He was well known to citizens here, and loved by all who knew him. Though it is said that he was not possessed of great eloquence, he was a man of such intellectual power and deep abiding faith and spirituality that he was a strength to all with whom he came in contact. His death came after a severe sickness, with the additional misfortune that his son, Macey, a well known educator in Iowa, was at the same time so near death in a hospital in Cedar Falls, Iowa, that he could not for a time be told of his father's death. The passing of such men as Brother Campbell is always attended with the yearning and sorrow both of relatives and friends, and members of the communities where they were known.

A recent Lamoni Wednesday evening union prayer meeting was attended with much spiritual power, in which the Lord saw fit to speak to his people in the most earnest admonition for increased faith and consecrated lives. His promise of the hastening of the work here and in all the church, if the people should faithfully perform their duties, was encouraging indeed to the Saints.

Brother D. T. Williams has been successfully carrying on a series of young people's meetings in Taylorville, Illinois.

Opening the Windows of Heaven

Inclosed please find check of $4 on the dollar consecration that was asked of each member. This includes four of us, my husband, two girls, and myself, all members. It does seem as though we ought to be able to send a dollar each, and just think what that would amount to, and the church so much in need of it, too. When we consider the large amounts the Jews raise for their work we surely ought to be able to do likewise when this work means so much to us.

I often think the reason we are not blessed more abundantly is because we do not follow the commandments in regard to our tithing. I must relate our experience along this line for an example. We gave each fall about what we thought would be right, but the amounts began to be less. There seemed to be so many places for it and so much to pay, and poor crops, too. So last year we said that on whatever stock we sold we would give one tenth right away. We all know last year the market on hogs and cattle was not very high and we sold at different times, but each time we received a good price and there were others who shipped at the same time that did not receive as much for their stock as we did, so it seems to me that though we labor under difficulties, if we will do the will of the Lord, he will bless us as he has promised. We were very thankful we tithed as soon as we sold, for the crops were poor here last fall and we would not have had much to send if we had not done so. I hope the dollars will be many that will be sent in, and that the debt of the church will be lightened a great deal.

I think at all times we could always find uses for the money if we think so. I know there are many things we need and would like, but if we always get these first we never have anything for the Lord's share, and if it were not for the blessings he sends to us we would have nothing, so we can well give our tenth, which is very small compared to some shares we have to give.

Concerning Request of Samuel Garner

Samuel Garner, Liverpool, England, has written a number of letters to the Saints in the United States for financial assistance to enable him to join his family in New York City. Inasmuch as this appeal has been sent out broadcast, it would be well for all branches and Saints receiving these communications to send same to this office. The matter has been referred to the church authorities in England for investigation and the extending of such assistance as the circumstances justify.

Your colaborer,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Correction

Brother Frank P. Sweetman, of 5021 Commonwealth Avenue, Detroit, Michigan, complains that we omitted part of his address in connection with his letter in the issue of the 15th, and that the rest of the sentence quoted from Elder James E. Bishop should have been included, which was, "The people of themselves cannot distinguish our church from any other church."

Reunion Notices

COUEY.—Minnie Morrison was born at Holstein, Ontario, April 25, 1879. Married Frank Couey, October 20, 1904. Baptized at eight years of age, though isolated all her life, she has been stanch and faithful. Died at Wolf Point, Montana, March 16, 1922. Leaves husband, three children, mother, five sisters, two brothers, and other relatives. Two children have preceded her. Funeral from the Presbyterian church, James C. Page in charge. Sermon by Eli Bronson. Interment in Poplar Cemetery.

RODGERS.—Edna Evans was born at Bevier, Missouri, August 22, 1890. Married John Rodgers in February, 1909. Baptized December 8, 1920. Died at 608 South Crysler, Independence, Missouri, March 18, 1922. Leaves husband, son, one brother, one sister, and other relatives. Ellis Short and E. L. Kelley in charge of the funeral. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Radio Progress

Perhaps no development of an invention has made such rapid progress as the use of the radiophone. We were recently complimenting Brother Arthur B. Church, president of the Central Radio Company, on being in the midst of the popular deluge at the right time. "I have been dreaming of this for a long time," he replied, "but I had no idea it would come so soon." His surprise is shared by thousands of others, both in and out of the business.

As a result of the enormous demand for supplies and equipment of all kinds for radio work, this company, in common with others, has to put in a great deal of its time enlarging quarters and adding to its force in order to care for its business. Many communities have their amateurs who are making up home-made sets and offering them for sale, and in the daily paper want ads one man advertised a built-in radio set that went with the home.

Everybody is asking how to get one of the receiving sets in order to catch the numerous messages, reports, concerts, sermons, etc., that fill the air nowadays. Simple receiving sets are sold for about twenty-five dollars, but one who is a little ingenious can make his own and insure a receiving radius of twenty-five to fifty miles for around twelve dollars.

Sending sets are not so common, and are subject to greater restrictions, but even they may be had at from about seventy-five dollars up, or may be built by the studious mechanic.

Newspapers in the larger cities are sending out daily concerts, reports, and news features, which are picked up by theaters and other publicly patronized institutions, which have them amplified on the principle of phonograph horns and whole audiences hear with ease.

In Kansas City two leading newspapers are competing with each other in sending out programs, one of them using the equipment of the Central Radio Company. They have been having a weekly page on radio problems and items of interest, but have lately increased this to a full page daily.

We have had letters from various points inquiring about this subject, but since we are not in a position to give intelligent advice nor to devote space to a discussion of the mechanics involved, we have been referring the inquiries to the company named above, who have facilities for such work, with literature, free and otherwise, for those who wish it. Their address is Sixth and Grand, Kansas City, Missouri.

The newly assigned wave length for broadcasting (an interesting use of this word) sermons, concerts, and matters of a general public appeal is 360 meters. The sending of messages is regulated by Government officials, who so far as possible will equitably assign wave lengths and hours among those with instruments. We understand that amateurs have the 375 meter wave.

Some church congregations are contemplating the installation of the sets, but ere this is done, the field should be surveyed to ascertain whether or not the kind of material desired will be available. It would be embarrassing indeed if an audience should assemble to hear a sermon and sacred concert and could only hear a riot by a jazz band.

The broadcasting of the weekly sermons by our men, which has been done from Independence, will hereafter be done from Kansas City, from the studio of the Central Radio Company. Those within receiving distance should have no difficulty in hearing these.

It should be a boon to invalids who are unable to get out and hear the sermons of our people, and the simplicity of the entire proposition appeals to the popular mind. With some of the best sets one may hear concerts near at hand with no aerial of any kind, or desiring a little assistance of this kind, can hitch it to the bedsprings.

The 1921 Christmas Offering

The Grand Total of the 1921 Christmas Offering is $46,942.93.

The winners in the guessing contest are shown below in the order given:

1. $46,697.84 Pearl Andrew Courtwright, Ontario.
2. $46,599.63 Allen McDonald Courtwright, Ontario.
3. $47,694.87 Murvel Murphey Courtwright, Ontario.
4. $48,000.00 Myrtle Andes Eldorado Springs, Missouri.
5. $45,869.40 Winnifred Chute Courtwright, Ontario.
6. $48,642.60 Annie Ruddick Courtwright, Ontario.
7. $48,654.28 James McDonald Courtwright, Ontario.
8. $48,723.17 V. A. Reese Independence, Missouri.
9. $48,793.14 Goldwin Andrew Courtwright, Ontario.
10. $49,000.00 Mrs. John Shaw Courtwright, Ontario.

$2,981.95 intended for last year's offering has been received after our books were closed on February 28. We have received word that there is more than this yet to come. We regret that we cannot hold our accounts open long enough to accommodate all. But two months grace after the year has closed is all that can be conveniently allowed.

A Day of Prayer Appointed

April 9 to be observed as a day of prayer by the church.

The Presidency desires to appoint Sunday, April 9, as a day of prayer throughout the church. No doubt the branches everywhere will observe April 6 as the anniversary of the organization of the church; and it is fitting that the Sunday following should be observed as a day of prayer.

Specific things are suggested as the burden of petition, as follows: That greater Christian fellowship and unity may obtain among the leading quorums of the church and throughout the membership of the church in all branches and districts; that greater power and success may be had in missionary work, both at home and abroad; that divine blessing and direction may attend local pastoral work in branches and districts, and particularly in Zion; that the financial law may be more generously observed, to the end that the church may be liberated from present financial embarrassments that her work in Zion and abroad may go forward unhindered.

The Saints are advised to observe the day designated in prayer in their homes and in their places of worship. Those who desire to fast may abstain from the morning or noon meal, or from both, as wisdom and their physical condition may direct. This proclamation should be read in the assemblies of the Saints, so that there may be a common understanding of the purposes set forth. Distant branches and scattered members who do not receive this notice before April 9 may observe a later date at their discretion.

The joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric now in session by vote concur in this announcement.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 29, 1922.

Man becomes greater in proportion as he learns to know himself and his faculty. Let him once become conscious of what he is, and he will soon learn to be what he should.—Schelling.

The Bishop's Annual Reports

As a supplement to this issue is the report of Presiding Bishop B. R. McGuire for 1921, and also a similar report for the year 1920. The change in the fiscal year of the church so that the year closes now on June 30 of each year has made some difference in the publication of these reports in order to have them coordinate with the past, but with this report we have them brought up to June 30, 1921.

We hope the Saints will be careful to file this issue for it is published at considerable expense to the church and is valuable not only for the immediate presentation of facts, but for future reference.

Every member of the church should be a tithe-payer. It is true that some are so unfortunate as not to have any possessions and no income except for the barest necessities of life, but the average Saint has some increase annually and should feel it a privilege to make an offering at least to the general funds.

It will be observed that the reports for the two years are separated. Those paying into district and stake funds are credited under the alphabetically arranged list of districts and stakes. Those who remit directly to the office of the Presiding Bishop are credited in the alphabetical list preceding the others.

Disarm or Die

Doctor E. E. Helms, of Los Angeles, has recently published a pamphlet, Disarm or Die, in which he comments upon the tremendous cost of present and future wars.

Germany has been saved the expense of continued arming by the terms of the treaty and is greatly profited thereby, while the United States is spending close to a billion dollars a year. Germany is able to devote all of her energy to industry. The result is that her railroad is returned to a little more than two thirds normal and will soon be a hundred per cent normal, and this despite the fact that she turned over 150,000 cars and five thousand locomotives, and these of her best, at the time of the armistice.

Her commercial shipping is also increasing; her automobile manufacturing is practically a new industry with more than a hundred plants. She is able, in these plants, to produce and sell cars at about one third the ordinary price and to give employment to a hundred thousand workmen.

The result is that unemployment is one fourth that of England and about two million below that of the United States. Her universities have taken up directly the scientific study of the problem.

In agriculture, the researches of Doctor F. Borne-man, Doctor Hugo Fischer, and Doctor Friedrich Riedel have brought the investigation of carbon fertilization to a practical basis. The greater percentage of our plant life is carbon. But the use of carbon fertilizers has proved to be more effective than all other fertilizers combined. By its proper application a decided increase has been secured in crops.

On the other hand, the rest of the world is confronted directly with the challenge to disarm or die. The manufacture of poison gas is carried to the point where an invisible gas has been found which gives no warning of its approach, is heavier than air so will sink into the low places of the earth, and is fatal upon contact, so that it is not necessary to inhale it, and kills all vegetation for years to come where it falls. At the same time, there is the threatened use of germs in the next war. There is practically no limit to the expense and danger of war. The millions that are spent, not on previous wars, but on preparing for future wars, would be a tremendous force for better living if applied to education and industry. The world is confronted with the serious situation that we must disarm or commit practical race suicide.

Blue Pencil Notes

Time is an inveterate thief. He steals the hairs from our head, the teeth from our mouth, the hearing from our ears, the sight from our eyes, the spring from our step, the lightning reaction of our brains.

Finally, having stolen all, he blows out the candle, tucks us away under a mound of earth, and puts a tombstone at our head. Presently he returns and steals the tombstone.

No one has ever apprehended him or punished him. If he were committed to jail, in a few years he would steal the jailer blind.

There is only one way to get even with Time. First, to rob him of his most priceless commodity, opportunity; and second, to make friends with eternity.

True it is that those who are strong and spiritual may not be disturbed when they see division and lack of love among brethren. But it is not that class of which we are commanded to take special thought. We are told to strengthen the weak.

We call ourselves the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. We must not so live as to justify the world in writing a question mark after any part of that title.

We had a unique experience on the street car some days ago. A lady stepped on our toes, and to make the matter worse turned and apologized to the man sitting next to us. At that she was probably not the first woman to trample on one man and bestow her smiles upon another.

About the time that the discussion on "mixed bathing" was raging in the General Conference of a certain year, we observed a sign posted at the municipal pier at Hermosa Beach, California, which said pointedly: "No bathers allowed on this pier unless robed to the knees." In view of all that we had heard (and seen) we concluded that this notice had but one defect. It was not sufficiently explicit. It did not specify whether it meant up or down.

Our enemies say that the "Mormon virus" affects many generations, passing from father to son. They perceive a fact but through prejudice misstate it. The true gospel, as taught and lived by fathers and sons, does take a wonderful hold upon children, even from generation to generation, so that some family names become and continue to be historic. Paul knew this when he wrote to Timothy: "The unfeigned faith which is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and in thy mother Eunice."

A Subscriber for Sixty Years

We have a letter from J. J. Billings, Little Deer Isle, Maine, who says:

"I have been a subscriber to the Ensign for many years. I have taken the SAINTS' HERALD ever since Isaac Sheen was editor. I joined the church in 1866. I will be eighty-one in July and can now read the papers in the evening without glasses. I enjoy reading the news and wish you good progress in your work.

Quite a record indeed! Are there any others who can say as much? Through good years and poor years, month in and month out, over half a century, this brother has sought to keep in touch with the developments of the church and found that it paid. May there be many J. J. Billingses.

Will We Too Fail?

Some of the religious press state that of the 105,000,000 population of the United States, the church population is about 45,000,000. They spend $50,000,000 for church extension work, $16,000,000 for foreign missions, and $400,000,000 for overhead expenses, which includes the expenses of the local church and pastor. This makes an average expenditure of $10 a year for each member, or probably, to be more exact, for twenty-five per cent of the church population, for it is they who pay the bills. That means an average of over $40 per paying member per year.

But on the other hand, while the religious people have paid $466,000,000 for the churches, the American people have expended $1,000,000,000 for candy, $800,000,000 for cigars, $750,000,000 for perfumes and cosmetics, $510,000,000 for cigarets, $2,000,000,000 for automobiles, $800,000,000 for snuff and other forms of tobacco.

Some one has sent us this clipping and asked the question, Will we, too, fail?

The same clipping from the Baptist Advance shows the amount invested on colleges by the leading denominations for their church members. To make the same average, we should, as a church, have an endowment of $1,300,000, and with property value of about $900,000, to equal the Baptists, or of about $800,000 property and $800,000 endowment to equal the Methodist Episcopal Church. To meet the general average of the churches in America, we should have spent $100,000 for church extension, $32,000 for foreign missions, and $800,000 for overhead expenses, or nearly $1,000,000, as a church, for the year.

Methodists Accept Faith Healing

The Denver Post reports that the Methodist Episcopal churches of Denver have resolved that Christian healing shall become an integral part of their work.

This is the result of a series of conferences considering the interest in Christian Science, in so-called new thought, in divine science, and that arising from the revival conducted by Mrs. Aimee S. McPherson. The conference adopted a sympathetic attitude towards persons who claim to have received physical benefit through special meetings under whatever heading. They deprecate any attitude which would tend to discredit the medical profession and recommend a sympathetic study of Christian healing, which must include not only bodily ills, but the afflictions of humanity and society as a whole.

Wrong Thoughts Lead to Wrong Acts

It is one of the great tragedies of life that in a moment of time, apparently, an act is committed which has blasted a whole life. One minute the sin has not been committed; the next, the act is done.

Those who have lived long have witnessed and mourned such tragedies. Men whose service has been given to the church of God have fallen in a moment. Men who have given years of time in faithful attendance have their whole life changed, and go down thenceforth to their grave in sorrow.

But it may seriously be questioned if this is indeed the truth, that it has been but the work of a moment. That may be true of the overt act, but the Master plainly taught that the sin is in our thoughts. "He who looketh upon a woman to lust hath committed adultery in his heart." "He who looketh and lusteth shall deny the faith and shall not have the Spirit." The overt act is not the result of a minute, but it is the result of thoughts which have been allowed long to go astray.

We may plead, at times, insanity, and men have been perverted by the sudden shock of an unforeseen disclosure. Yet from the standpoint of religion or from the standpoint of psychology, as a rule the overt act is the result of long-continued sin, in thought at least, and is the culmination, rather than the beginning, of wrongdoing.

We do not urge this to condemn any. All men are tempted. We do urge, however, that we should not permit evil thoughts to have dwelling in the tabernacle of our bodies, which should be kept clean as the temple of God.

S. A. B.

Who Is Courageous?

It is a common experience for those following the pathway of dissipation in any form to urge upon other young men to be a man. "Don't be tied to your mother's apron string." But which takes the greater courage, to run with the crowd or face public opinion and stand true to the ideals taught at the mother's knee?

It sounds fine—take a chance; but, alas, the young man or young woman who takes a chance, as it is called, is at heart a coward, because while he may be called upon to pay the interest, the principal is presented to wife and children, and perhaps grandchildren. To run a risk without any commensurate gain is not courage, but foolishness. To run a risk when it is the happiness and lives of others that are put in danger is, after all, akin to cowardice.

The ideals of religion are true, for physical life as well as for spiritual existence and growth.

Man Here and Hereafter

The general officers in Independence have been much gratified to receive, through the courtesy of the author, Elder W. J. Haworth, copies of his book, Man Here and Hereafter. We do not know how many copies have been thus sent, but we do know that the general church officers each have a copy and that one has also been sent to each of the editors. We hereby express our appreciation.

The book has a twofold purpose. Its first purpose appears to be to answer the mortal-soulists and certain observations, Here and Hereafter, by Uriah Smith. Its further purpose is to discuss the nature of man here on earth, body and flesh, matter and mind and spirit, whence comes the spirit, and their nature, the scriptural use of the words spirit and soul, mortality and immortality considered historically and biblically, the condition of the spirit after the death of the body, the various conceptions of hell, and finally the resurrection and condition in the resurrection, and the second coming of Christ.

Each point is taken up in order and considered from the standpoint, first of the Bible, and then incidentally in the various departments of science, particularly physiology. In the earlier portions of the work, a strong point is made that the breath of man is not the spirit or soul of man, and is not that, and cannot be that which returns to God, because the breath is the method of throwing off the greater part of the waste matter of the body. Billions of cubic inches of air are exhaled in the life of seventy years. Why should the last of these breaths be distinct from any others?

This book makes quite a careful review of the subject, taking up in order the different points made, including the constantly repeated assertion that the Devil in the Garden of Eden was the author of the idea of immortality. Some are quite fond of referring to this, ignoring the plain statements by the Master, "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; he who liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

The falsehood of Satan evidently was concerned with the spiritual death, for man was in that day separated from God. The above passages cannot refer to the physical death, for Jesus himself died on the cross. Adam did not die the physical death for hundreds of years after his sin, but he did die the spiritual death of separation from God at once.

This book takes up the subject as discussed by J. R. Lambert in What Is Man? It again brings in many of the same arguments, and considers the subject also from a slightly different point of view.

It can be ordered through the Herald Publishing House, for $2.50.

A Home Wanted

The cry in the heart of every child is for a real home and father and mother. At times our Children's Home has approximated very closely, in the spirit there manifested, to the private home.

For babies, a private home is vitally essential. For older children, a good institution is better than a bad private home; but nothing can compare with the right kind of a private home and individual care.

In this issue we are publishing a letter from the superintendent of our Children's Home at Lamoni, asking those who are able to do so to consider the adoption of orphans now in the Children's Home.

The church, the Children's Home committee, the superintendent, are all naturally anxious to secure a real home for these children, not simply a place where the primary consideration is, What work can we get out of this child? but having the child's best interests and development as the first consideration. Of course, incidental to this, a child should learn responsibility according to age, and those in the Children's Home are given specific duties and are expected to do their share of the work. But there have been instances where children have been taken from an orphanage simply for the sake of summer work and abuse. This we certainly wish to avoid. A child needs play.

So we would urge the Saints to be very careful and very sure in giving letters of recommendation, and also that you take an interest in the children adopted into your neighborhood. There are surely, throughout the church, hundreds, who are both able and willing, when the matter is properly brought to their attention, to assume this great trust and give a real home to some child who would otherwise have to grow up without it.

Dissipations of Youth

"The dissipations of youth are drafts upon old age payable with compound interest about thirty years after date."

Unfortunately the literal truth of the above quotation is not seriously appreciated in youth, or again, youth considers thirty years so far off that he is willing to take a chance, not realizing how quickly the years will pass. Furthermore, the interest, when compounded, is a high rate, and the bill is often presented in one year instead of thirty, compounding interest by weeks instead of by years. That is the chance that is run, but it is certain that within thirty years the bill comes due with compound interest.

Wanted, a Home

You are wondering what you can do in this great work? Wanting a chance to serve? Here is a golden opportunity to give your little brother or sister a lift.

Left in the world, alone, so far as home ties are concerned, and yet, brave little soldiers of the cross cheerfully trying to do the things they understand to be right, taking no thought for the morrow.

Are there not those among you who could open the door of your home and make a place in your heart for some boy or girl from our Children's Home, giving them the same chance that you would wish your child to have under like circumstances?

At present we have a very fine group of children, physically fit, and whose mental test ranks them normally bright; some are much above normal. They are deserving, and surely the joy that would come from doing this service for the great world of those who need such help would more than repay you.

Perhaps they are not made to order, with curly hair, blue eyes, perfect disposition, and various other qualifications that you would wish; maybe they have not happened to remain babies waiting for some one to think about them and come to their rescue; but they are trying to make their lives beautiful regardless of the color of their hair, complexions, and the features that the good Lord gave them. Do I wonder which will count for the most when the Great Master of Men comes to choose his own? Not at all.

Who knows how many times some humble little prayer, asking God for a father and a mother, has been offered? Never doubting that the answer would come even though the weeks and months, yes, and years, go by and still no home is offered. Are there not those who could help to bring this answer to their prayers?

We recognize that there may be those with willing hearts who have not the qualifications requisite for such an undertaking, or whose present circumstances would not permit the added responsibility. And we appreciate their position. However, if you are one who could respond to this suggestion, give it your careful and prayerful consideration. Do not set it aside, but think what can be done.

A Message to the Priesthood

[The following letter was addressed to the priesthood in the Little Sioux District. We are taking the liberty of extending it to all, for all should appreciate the value of The Priesthood Journal. Brother Lane, as district president, of course can authoritatively address the priesthood of his district.—EDITORS.]

I have just received the first issue of the January number of The Priesthood Journal. This journal takes the place of the One that has hitherto been published for the interest of the priesthood of the church. This issue of the Journal contains a lecture delivered by President Elbert A. Smith before the priesthood in Zion at Independence, Missouri, Sunday afternoon, January 8, 1922, and this lecture alone is worth the price of the Journal a year. The subscription price is forty cents. I take this method to advise every member of the priesthood in the Little Sioux District that they cannot afford to be without this journal. The paper is edited by Frederick M. Smith and Benjamin R. McGuire.

It is announced that the readers of The Priesthood Journal will have the opportunity, from month to month, to read and study transcripts of the lectures delivered to the priesthood of Independence. While you and I will not be able to attend these lectures, if we are subscribers to this little journal we will get the benefit of all the essential features and many other things which will be of vital importance to the priesthood, and thus we will be able to keep pace with the advancement of the church. I am of the opinion that this new system of instructing the priesthood of the church will lead up to the school of the prophets, and I feel sure, too, that all you younger men, especially, hope to have a scholarship in that school.

And, by the way, there is another feature of the church work I want to mention in this connection. Just recently I made a visit to Lamoni, and while there was privileged to listen to a lecture delivered by Elder C. E. Wight to the priesthood of Lamoni Branch which was well worth listening to and gave much food for thought. In my short stay there I did not have time to visit the college, but I met some of the young missionaries and students of the religious education department, and among others I met Elder H. E. Winegar, missionary, and this is his second year in this religious department, and being quite well acquainted with the man, I said to him, "What are you getting out of this, anyway?" "Well," he said, "Brother Lane, I am getting that which I believe will be of vital importance to me when I go back in the mission. I shall be far better qualified to meet the opposer of this church than I ever have been before." He said he felt as though he would like to stay another year, but he would probably be sent back to the mission and that he would go feeling that the college work had been a blessing to him. As for me, if I were a young man I would surely take advantage of this opportunity which is offered to the young men of the church to-day.

Ever praying for the success of this work we all so dearly love—"The Angel Message." Your brother, JOSEPH W. LANE, District President.

Kansas City Stake

The special meetings at Chelsea Church conducted by Amos T. Higdon are to continue for at least another week. Two have already been baptized. Armstrong church also reports two baptisms recently.

Alvin Knisley conducted a series of meetings at Grandview, commencing March 5, holding over Sunday, the 12th. Only a fair attendance was had. The Montgall mission inducted two into the church through the waters of baptism, last week.

The monthly priesthood meeting of the stake was held at Central Church Sunday, the 19th, at 3 p. m. Brother T. W. Williams, of the Twelve, addressed the gathering on the topic of education; he emphasized the necessity of the ministry being especially adapted and educated for the work they take up. Very necessary that they devote their entire time to the ministry; none excused, deacons, teachers, priests, elders, all must apply themselves. Suggested the necessity for a manual for each order of the priesthood, outlining their duties plainly. He stated that education is the dynamic force that brings us to God. He said deacons should understand the principles of sanitation, ventilation, cleanliness, the heating of the building, etc. They should be able men.

Teachers should understand human nature. They should be psychologists. This is the science of ascertaining why men do things; my definition is that it is common sense. Be a friend to all.

The priest is a house-to-house visitor; should understand home economics, sociology; the relation of parents to children. They should study to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not be ashamed.

The various branches of the priesthood represent a federation of men in the service of God. What we need is more action, rather than more preaching.

The special meetings to be held at Central from the 6th until the 16th of April, for which Brother Floyd M. McDowell will be the speaker, is absorbing the attention and activities of those in charge on the Missouri side. A vigorous campaign has been inaugurated. Just now personal letters are being mailed to the young people between the ages of eight and thirty-five years.

Elder Philemon Pement, en route from Chicago to New Mexico, stopped over Sunday in Kansas City and favored East Argentine with a very instructive discourse, at 11 a. m. on the 12th inst.

George Jenkins was the speaker at East Argentine at 7.45 p. m. on the 26th. Elder W. D. Bullard, from Zion Stake, was the speaker at the 11 o'clock hour at Argentine on the 12th inst.

The Oriole Girls of the Montgall Church gave a social, the proceeds of which will go towards the purchase of their Oriole suits.

Independence

Brother T. J. Watkins, of the Watkins' Music Company, Independence, Missouri, has donated to the Stone Church a fine Star Phonograph, a three-hundred-dollar machine. This phonograph is for use in the upper auditorium on occasion. At the same time Brother Watkins donated a second phonograph for the use of the kindergarten department of the Stone Church. He intimates as well that he has certain plans for the Sanitarium. Needless to say these generous gifts are appreciated. It is suggested that Saints who have records of suitable character to donate may forward them to the office of the First Presidency and they will be distributed to the various institutions where most needed.

Elder James E. Bishop writes that Nottingham is noted for lace, silk, and other finery, not for leather goods especially as stated by him in the British Magazine HERALD. This is a quaint, pretty, and rather large place, with a castle on the hill.

Considerable interest is manifested in the coming International Sunday School Convention to be held in Kansas City in June. A. Max Carmichael, superintendent of the General Sunday School Department, has obtained delegate privileges and will be in attendance. Perhaps not many of our people from Missouri will be admitted, because of the demand for seats.

He Has Risen and Is Alive Forevermore

On Easter Sunday throughout the world voices are raised in song to proclaim in varying tones, and with various words, the one great theme, "He has risen from the dead."

While there is doubt concerning the exact day in the year of his birth, the times of his death and resurrection are clearly fixed in the spring of the year, since it was at the time of the Passover. And as the Passover is a movable feast, so does Easter, the day on which we celebrate his resurrection from the dead, change its date from year to year.

On that first great Easter Day, the hope of the whole world was fulfilled. Humanity had been looking for the coming of the Son of God, a crucified Mediator was the hope of the whole world. The very springtime had been taken by some as a type of revived life, and hence a symbol of resurrection. But this Galilean, but little considered then by the ruling powers, had come up in accordance with the law to celebrate the Passover, knowing, however, that the time of his sacrificial death was near at hand, and that he was the Son of God, the hoped-for Mediator.

And Jesus answered them, saying, The hour is come, that the Son of Man should be glorified. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal. If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be; if any man serve me, him will my Father honor. Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour; but for this cause came I unto this hour. Father, glorify thy name. Then came there a voice from heaven, saying, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again. The people therefore that stood by, and heard it, said that it thundered; others said, An angel spake to him. Jesus answered and said, This voice came not because of me, but for your sakes. Now is the judgment of this world; now shall the prince of this world be cast out. And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. This he said, signifying what death he should die.—John 12: 23-33.

He spake of this hour of suffering, this hour of trial, as the hour when the Son of Man should be glorified. The day of anguish was the day of glory for a work fulfilled. The necessity of his death can be plainly seen by the student of history and the student of humanity. His death meant the end of the bloody sacrifice of the law, not only among that people to whom he came, but practically throughout the world. His death was a fulfillment of their need, a sealing of his testimony and the work of his life.

Nor was death to him a thing terrible. Physical death from the divine standpoint is but an incident. (John 12: 25; Matthew 16: 28; Mark 8: 35; Luke 9: 24; Matthew 10: 28, etc.) Adam died, but it was not the physical death that was terrible, but that spiritual death which he died that day when he was separated from the presence of God. So we are led to believe that it was not the approaching physical death that caused the suffering in the garden, nor was it even the excruciating physical pain of the cross with the nails through his hands and feet, but the agony of Gethsemane when he sweat great drops of blood, and the cross was that for a time, he was left alone and the Spirit of God was taken from him, causing even him to cry in that hour of agony, "Elui, Elui, lama sabachthani," "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Yet he drank that bitter cup to the bottom. He gave that great sacrifice, sealing the work of his life before humanity. He died the vilest death. He was separated even from the consolation of the Spirit of God. He descended into the nethermost regions that, having descended beneath all, he should be able to offer healing and help to every man in that he had suffered all things, been tried in all things, and yet is without sin and holy. Finally, as completing his life and death, he rose from the dead, giving us thereby the assurance of the resurrection from the dead, having taught plainly, not only the greater life he came to bring, but also the continuity of life.

Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die.—John 11: 25, 26.

But this does not give us the assurance that there is no physical death, for he himself submitted to physical death. It does give us the assurance of a continuity of life, that he who follows in his footsteps, keeps his commandments, is not dying the spiritual death of separation from God, but shall continue to live. The teaching of the word of God clearly sets forth the resurrection of Jesus as the assurance to us of our later resurrection from the dead. (1 Corinthians 15.)

So we approach this day with glad thanksgiving and adoration for him who came to open to us the way of a return to God, bringing the assurance not only of immortal life, but also of the resurrection from the dead, and opening up before us the glorious possibilities of eternal life, which is promised to those who are privileged to know God and his Christ. (John 17.)

Therefore we go forth in perfect faith, without fear, but with confidence in him who hath said to John in the vision on Patmos:

Fear not; I am the first and the last; I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore. Amen.

The Spirit of Lawlessness

There is a general revolt against law.

Those who would ignore the existing conditions in the world might read with profit the address of James M. Beck, Solicitor General of the United States, before the American Bar Association.

Mr. Beck states that the Federal Court indictments have increased from 9,500 in 1912 to 70,000 in 1921. Perhaps 30,000 of these are under a prohibition statute. Eliminating these cases, there is still shown a 400 per cent increase within the narrow sphere of the Federal criminal jurisdiction. The losses from burglaries paid by casualty companies were less than one million dollars in 1910, but over ten million in 1920, while embezzlements have increased fivefold, and thefts from the mails, express companies, and other carriers have greatly increased. The holding up of railway trains is not confined to the unsettled parts of the country, and is of frequent occurrence.

In Chicago alone, 5,000 automobiles were stolen in one year. Murder was once infrequent and abnormal; now it is almost daily in our large cities, such as Chicago and New York.

This rebellion against law is shown in the disregard of prohibition statutes, jazz in music, in the plastic arts, futurists, etc. In poetry the beauty of rhythm has given place to the grotesque. In commerce, there is a revolt against the clear standards of the past, and science is attempting to cover deterioration in quality, while advertising has become so professional and so mendacious as to defeat its own purpose.

Mr. Beck is not a pessimist, and is evidently reluctant to chronicle such conditions. He quotes the late pope as stating that there has been an unprecedented challenge against authority, an equal hatred between man and man, an abnormal aversion to work, and an excessive thirst for pleasure as the great aim of life, culminating in a gross materialism which would deny the reality of the spiritual in life. India is in a stage of submerged revolt. Throughout Europe, the balance is kept sometimes by resolute men, and even England, the mother of democracy, has been threatened seriously by extremists, groups ready to act outside of the legal methods of government, and disregarding the ballot box.

During the World War, international law, so slowly built up, was practically submerged.

In 1920, Italy lost fifty-five million days of work through strikes. In Germany nearly a like amount of time was lost for like reasons, while in New York State alone, strikes caused a loss of over ten million working days in 1920.

Mr. Beck thinks that this is in large part the result of the rapid advancement of the nineteenth century. There has been a greater revolution of the environment of man and the conditions of human life in the one century than had occurred in all the thousands (or hundreds of thousands of years, according to some estimators) which have been attributed to man's life on this planet.

Up to the discovery of steam, life had not changed greatly from that of eighty centuries ago on the banks of the Nile and Euphrates. There has been an increased dominion over the powers of nature, but all of these improvements still require the physical strength and mental skill of man. Man dominates the machine. Now the work is done by the machine. His voice can reach from the Atlantic to the Pacific. He can fly from Nova Scotia to England. He can out-fly the eagles themselves, but this has meant the decrease of the necessity of his own physical exertion and mental skill. The machine not only works for him, but often thinks for him.

Conditions have also changed so that the hundred million of Europe at the beginning of the nineteenth century has become five times as many, and these added millions have left the farm to crowd the cities and exploit their seemingly easy conquest of nature.

In America in 1880, only 15 per cent were crowded in the cities. Forty years later, more than 50 per cent reside in the cities, not a natural existence, but artificial and feverish. These men do not work, but spend their time watching machines work. These workers do not see the results of their labor. Their work is narrow, confined to a single action without human skill. Their work is monotonous, with the machine dominating the man in the repetition. It is irrational, as it separates the mind of the worker from the satisfaction of achievement, though he does not see the result of his labor in completed form.

Finally, quality has given place to a destructive effort for quantity. The result is that current thought is superficial, understanding but little, and rather confused with the multiplicity of opportunities for information. We scurry like ants in a disturbed ant heap. We have a thousand ideas suggested where the man of a hundred years ago had one, but, too, we have the opportunity to inquire into facts wisely.

Athens, in the age of Pericles, had thirty thousand people and a few mechanical inventions, but she produced philosophers, poets, and artists whose work remains to-day despite all would-be imitators. Shakespeare had a theater with the ground for a floor, the sky for a ceiling, but New York, with fifty theaters, spending a hundred million dollars a year, has not in two centuries produced a living play. To-day a thousand images are impressed on the screen of consciousness, but few, or none, abide.

The university of Gutenberg (the press) is one of the greatest of all colleges. If it printed only the truth its value would be tremendous.

A hundred years ago the current of thought was like a mountain stream, in narrow banks, but crystal clear and sweet. May not the current of thought of to-day be compared to the mighty Mississippi in spring freshet? The banks are wide, its current swift, but the stream flows on in muddy swirls and eddies, and overflows.

The most tremendous loss has been, according to Le Bon, in 1910, the deterioration of human character. Another describes the symptoms as "the progressive enfeeblement of the human will." Nordeau, as a pathologist, wrote a book understood by few, Degeneration, in which he argued our complex civilization has placed too great a strain on the limited nervous organization of man. That which is not digested is not only without profit, but is also a source of danger.

Mr. Beck continues:

The specialization of our modern mechanical civilization has caused a submergence of the individual into the group or class. Man is fast ceasing to be the unit of human society; self-governing groups are becoming the new units. This is true of all classes of men, the employer as well as the employee. The true justification for the anti-monopoly statutes, including the Sherman anti-trust law, lies not so much in the realm of economics as in that of morals. With the submergence of the individual, whether he be capitalist or wage earner, into a group, there has followed the dissipation of moral responsibility. A mass morality has been substituted for individual morality, and, unfortunately, group morality generally intensifies the vices more than the virtues of man.

Possibly the greatest result of the mechanical age is this spirit of organization. Its merits are manifold and do not require statement; but they have blinded us to the demerits of excessive organization. We are now beginning to see—slowly, but surely—that a faculty of organization which, as such, submerged the spirit of individualism, is not an unmixed good. Indeed, the moral lesson of the tragedy of Germany is the demoralizing influence of organization carried to the nth power. No nation was ever more highly organized than this modern state. Physically, intellectually, and spiritually, it had become a highly-developed machine; and its dominating mechanical spirit so submerged the individual that, in 1914, the paradox was observed of an enlightened nation that was seemingly destitute of a conscience.

But he concludes that judged by the light of reason, there is little hope, "but I have in man. With Taku Jonescu, I have faith in man's inextinguishable impulse to live." The inextinguishable spark of the divine in the human soul has not been extinguished by our mechanical, complex civilization. This also the World War proved. The solution offered is that we must champion the human soul in its God-given right to exercise freely the faculties of mind and body, and defend the right to work against those who would destroy and degrade. Of this spirit of right individualism, the American Constitution is the noblest expression. And something of that spirit has continued to the present day, and remains with the American people. That vision will remain with us as long, and no longer, as there is a consciousness and willing acquiescence in the wisdom of the work of our fathers, for "where there is no vision the people perish, but he that keepeth the law, happy is he."

Ideals of Christ and Industry

Personality, brotherhood, and liberty, are to be sought as aims.

The ideals of Christ and modern industry is becoming more of a live subject in the religious press. The Christian Century for January 26 has an article, by Sherwood Eddy, from the standpoint of the business man, the employer. He sets forth three great principles as Christian ideals: first, personality, or the value of the individual man; second, the relation of men to each other in brotherhood; third, that this relation should be one of mutual service, not self-seeking. If these are to be carried into effect the individual must possess liberty and opportunity for self-realization. Brotherhood will require justice, the right of all members of the Christian family to a more abundant life. Finally, the whole teaching of Christ is summed up in the great command of love.

Considering the worth of the individual and the value of brotherhood, industry should secure adequate support and protection for all workers, including decent and comfortable living, continuity of employment, regulation of hours for the social good, with provision for health and safety. This will require a limitation of hours of work, a reasonable wage, insurance against unemployment, some share of democratic control of industry, and a larger share to laborers of the products of industry. It means that unemployment, because of ill health, shall be protected against as well as from any other causes.

Brotherhood implies cooperation and a friendly relation, which naturally leads to service as the highest expression of the life of Jesus.

Under liberty, Mr. Eddy emphasizes freedom for self-expression and self-determination. Lordship or authority from without implies repression of personality. Christ, in his opening sermon at Nazareth, proclaimed his program, good tidings to the poor, release for the captive, freedom for the oppressed, and a year of jubilee or liberty for all. Incidentally Mr. Eddy includes in this the right of collective bargaining as being both necessary and right. The ultimate prevention of strikes will be the justice and humanity of a square deal for all.

Justice is against the selfish accumulation of wealth. Jesus pronounced his woes against the selfish rich who will hardly enter the kingdom. With justice and true charity in brotherly love, the mis-called charity of to-day will no longer be a necessity.

The great principle of love is the ideal of the kingdom of God and involves a Christian social order. It includes the golden rule. It means the giving of self for others. With such a principle, we are ready to carry to the poor all of which they stand in need, whether it be knowledge or material help.

Near East Relief

Every convict in the state penitentiary of Virginia has contributed to a fund for the assistance of the children of the Near East. This fund, though small, as it is $91.46, represents 914.6 days of hard labor, as they are remunerated at the rate of only ten cents a day. No one gave less than one day's hard labor; a few donated a month's labor.

Again we are advised that Rabbi Wise, of New York, made an appeal over the radiophone for the benefit of the Christian children of Bible land, and especially for the three hundred thousand children of Armenia.

Even Japan is taking up the appeal and is raising funds for the war orphans of the Near East, as the need, because of famine, is very great.

Doctor Henry C. McCook is quoted in Science as saying that the bites of the most poisonous spiders are, in most instances, of small consequence, and the great majority of cases of little more effect than the bite of a mosquito and not nearly so serious as the sting of bees.

Conference Daily

There is no General Conference this April. The joint council has been meeting for more than a month and probably will continue to meet for another month. But the next General Conference, as was announced in the HERALD for December 20, 1921, will be held beginning October 1, 1922.

But the manager of the Herald Publishing House has been receiving of late a number of subscriptions to a General Conference daily. There probably will be a General Conference daily, though the price has not yet been announced, nor have any other items as yet been decided upon. Full announcement will be made in due season.

The Open Grave

The story is told that in the city of Hannover, Germany, there is a grave known as the open grave. A German princess, who was an infidel, died over a hundred years ago and, on her deathbed, gave orders that her grave should be covered with a great marble slab weighing about a ton, surmounted by solid blocks of stone firmly bound together with strips of iron. On the lowest stone of the tomb was placed the inscription, "This grave, purchased for eternity, must never be opened."

But, somehow, along with the tomb, there was buried a seed of the birch tree. Soon it began to sprout. Though soft and pliable, it found its way between the ponderous stones and the massive masonry. Slowly and imperceptibly, but with irresistible power, it grew until it burst asunder the bounds of iron, and opened this never-to-be-opened grave, leaving in the end not one single stone in its original position.

An illustration of this grave, it is stated, may be found in Bible Readings for the Home Circle, page 498, published by the Review Herald Publishing House.

While this event does not prove the immortality of the soul, it does show the tremendous power of life to overcome inanimate matter, however powerful.

Some forty years ago the Salvation Army in America proposed the social solution of soup, soap, and salvation. The poor are taken and are first of all fed, then given a bath, and finally they strive to interest them in religion. But everyone who wants it can have the first two. They have taken as their slogan, "A man may be down, but he is never out," and in this they include women. This giving of practical economic help was early recognized as an important preliminary for religion.

The Ideals and Ethics of Jesus

By John W. Rushton

Through the atonement of Christ we may become also the sons of God.

(Sermon at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, March 20, 1921.)

As we were reminded this morning, to-day is Palm Sunday. It is the day which witnessed the collapse of the materialistic concept many of the Jewish people held in reference to Jesus Christ. The day when the spiritual idealism of Jesus Christ had its real birth. All of us, I feel sure, now will admit that upon every page of the New Testament the fact that our Lord is an ethical teacher stands out very conspicuously. Indeed very much more so than the idea that he is a mere trafficker in doctrines and ritualism. So far as doctrines and ritualism are concerned, these are incidental and do not occupy anywhere nearly so important a place as the ethics which underlie the work and the philosophy of Christ. Of course, I would not suggest that because of this, doctrines and rites and institutions have no value. It may be that they themselves incidentally, if not accidentally, possess an importance and value which is every bit as real. But it does seem that the mere fact that ethics occupies so large a place in the entire sweep of our Lord's teachings is sufficient to impress us with the importance of this and we should pay strict attention, possibly stricter attention, to this than to any other aspect of our Lord's teachings.

Christ the Greatest Ethical Teacher

This emphasis on ethics must be designed, and is quite in keeping with the philosophy of all expressions of religion. From the earliest days of human adventure into the great continent of moral responsibility and all questions of right and wrong, men have held it to be that the supreme duty of every man was to become acquainted with what is known as the highest good; that they should also become familiar with duty and virtue; for in this quest for the desideratum or the objective of all thoughtful men and women, is to be found the reason why men exist. Around this great attempt to solve the mystery of existence all philosophies of every age seem to revolve. Jesus Christ stressed the need of interpreting beliefs and ideals in terms of conduct, and in the judgment each man will be appraised in the light of conduct. It is therefore no surprise that Jesus Christ himself should be regarded as the greatest of all ethical teachers and concern himself very definitely with the clarification of these three aspects of the end of human existence: What is the highest good? What is virtue? What is duty? And as Christ set himself to a discussion of these three questions it is quite clear that he lifts the whole problem out of the realm of human speculation and gives to every definition an authority which was quite unusual to the ordinary student and inquirer. So much was this in evidence that the common people said, "This man speaks with authority, and not as the scribes and Pharisees."

The authoritative word spoken by Jesus Christ must not be distinguished from authority as we understand the word in the usual affairs of mankind. Not only is it a mistake which will threaten the safety of our conclusions, but I believe also that the mistake would more or less be detrimental to the real interests and value of his teachings if we do try to make an exception of Jesus and classify him as superhuman, or divine, or regard him as apart from the ordinary development and growth of spiritual and moral affairs of human life. I believe that this distinguishment and separateness with which men are wont to think of Christ is injurious to the real work, authority, and results which otherwise might be appreciated by men.

Authority Comes From Knowledge

As a matter of experimental fact, authority in the ordinary experiences of the human race means that word spoken or acted which is the positive and direct outcome of knowing how. Knowledge is born of experience. Nor can it be born or transmitted in any other way. Authority is the power which comes from knowledge. When, therefore, Christ spoke with more authority than the scribes and Pharisees the plain inference is that he knew more than the scribes and Pharisees, and the supremacy of his knowledge is the direct outcome of the vaster, deeper, and wider experience which our Lord had had in reference with and to the things of which he spoke. It might be well for us to keep this in mind as we consider the fact that Jesus Christ, so far as his mission was concerned, disowned everything which might be interpreted as materialism and impinged the vision of his auditors upon the intangible realities of the spiritual realm. And the lesson which I have read can have no other meaning than that which I now seek to emphasize and express before you to-night.

Throughout all the intricacies of ecclesiastical ritualism, Jesus Christ speaks the word which divides the substance from the shadow and puts in contrast, which is always the most impressive method of the most impressive teachers, contrasting the commonplace in the experience of the people with that which he himself approved. "You have been taught thus and so by your teachers, but I say unto you." And he at once follows the commonplace teachings with a spiritual meaning and gives back the familiar platitude charged with meanings they had never dreamed of.

Meager Rewards in Exhibition

When you indulge in benevolences and seek to cultivate a Christian demeanor, don't make an exhibition of it. Let not your right hand know what your left hand doeth, and your Father who sees the secret things will give you true recompense. Whenever a man undertakes to indulge himself in any activity for the mere purpose of exhibition, the fact of a big crowd, the fact of thunders of applause, constitutes the only reward which such a man has or can have; and to suggest divine approval is discussing the matter in unknown tongues. That is the process of Jesus Christ. The breaking down of materialistic conceptions was one of the big jobs which Jesus Christ had on hand, and how strenuously, how painfully, how persistently and undeviatingly he pursued his course, and yet how strangely we seek to interpret Jesus Christ in the terms of materialism to-day. And we seek even to interpret the ideals of our Christian faith in terms of mechanism and deny to ourselves the value of true spiritual interpretations which lie at the back of all Christ had to say. I may say, therefore, that in the discussion of the question of ethics it is quite right and proper that we shall try to find what Jesus injected into these ordinary and accepted terms of ethics to which I have made a passing reference.

To find out what is the highest good to engage our attention has been one of the problems of all schools which have ventured to deal with the matter, the highest exposition being in what is known as the Benthamite school, which declares that to find the greatest happiness to the greatest number is the end of life. This school does not discuss the basis of happiness; but it says only that if a man is happy he has found the gate to success.

I have met with people who try to interpret our ecclesiastical formation, our doctrinal program, in this way. And when they speak of the kingdom of God they interpret it with a materialism of the five established necessities for the kingdom and every one of them materialistic in the crassest of terms. Yet Paul shouts at us through the centuries and insists that the "kingdom of God is not in eating and drinking, but righteousness, joy, and peace in the Holy Ghost." You cannot measure any of these in a test tube. They are not to be discovered in any spectrum. They are moral and spiritual qualities and their distinguishing feature is that they are born of God—of the Holy Ghost, characterizing the Divine Disposition. It must be the righteousness of God. It must be the cheerfulness of God. It must be the harmony and the music of the Spirit. These are the characteristics of the kingdom. Not a word about apostles and prophets. Not a word said about the elaborate ritualism of any church organization. But these qualities of soul are characterized by divine righteousness, divine joy, and divine peace.

No Happiness Without Goodness

Well, I think in this I am almost ready to suggest here without imposing too rude a shock upon you, that what Christ read into these outstanding features of the end of human existence is accepted by all of the leading philosophers, beginning with Aristotle and coming down to this age. We accept as the duties of life these ordinary principles, not that man shall pursue happiness, but goodness, without which there can be no happiness. No man can be happy unless he is good in the sense in which goodness is defined by our Lord Jesus Christ. In other words, the happiness of the soul is predicated of goodness and righteousness. This is the end of the human experience. To realize the kingdom of God, is Christ's definition of happiness. For the kingdom of God, in the language of Jesus Christ, means the divine rule, the government of man by God. A kingdom is much more than its mechanical aspect and organization. "The kingdom of God," said Jesus, "is in you," and no matter how much we may juggle with that preposition and try to use even the suggested change of the Revised Version, "The kingdom of God is among you," so far as Christ is concerned the work of God is primarily inward, and then outward.

Whatever Christ looked forward to in the way of social improvement, social organization, it depended upon individual regeneration and individual adjustment. The kingdom of God, therefore, originates in the moral and spiritual relationship which every individual must assume towards God. God is good. God is true. God is just. God is love. And when Jesus undertook to interpret duty he lifted it above the ordinary legalistic processes which must be enforced either by a bribe or by the thunderings and threatenings of penalty, and insisted that the whole duty of every man is in faith, hope, and love. Whatever a man believes must become the program of his life. Hope is desire with expectation, and love is the dynamic of the soul which fuses all things into one. But love can only love the lovable. Salvation from this point of view consists, therefore, not in going somewhere, not in being something, but rather in becoming identified with God.

What we call the atonement means nothing less than this. I do not suggest that this is all it means, for I think that its full meaning is beyond the wisdom of man; but I suggest the atonement at least must mean this. God in his great love becomes identified with man in his sin and limited condition in order that man, sinful, limited, broken, may become identified with the righteousness of God. And only upon our acceptance of this principle can the Christianity of the Apostle Paul be understood and properly interpreted. "He who was rich for your sakes became poor that you might become rich." "He who knew no sin was made to be sin that we might become the righteousness of God." The doctrine of the atonement, therefore, must be interpreted, not in terms of substitution, but in terms of moral and spiritual identity. Salvation is the completion of the work of God, the work of atoning grace in which I know as God knows, I love as God loves, I will as God wills. "Breathe on me the breath of life. Fill me with life anew, that I may live as thou dost live and do what thou wouldst do." Into these meanings Jesus Christ pours the wealth of his spiritual experiences and through these meanings Jesus Christ reveals and establishes the ethics of the kingdom of God; and any attempt to build up Zion, to realize the kingdom, without a consideration of these ethical aspects, is going to result in a cruel disappointment.

Virtue a Necessity

So far as virtue is concerned the New Testament makes virtue a necessary element in perfection of character. Virtue means nobility of character, including the four elements of character which the pagan world accepted: Love, virtue, temperance, and justice. These make for nobility of character; and in the discussion of what we might call the eschatological features from the standpoint of Latter Day Saints, we have clearly accepted that definition in Paul's first letter to the Corinthians; of the graduation of the eternal glory. And as we look forth to the coming judgment, we expect there will be the glory of the celestial, the glory of the terrestrial, and other glories of the stars, or telestial. That can mean nothing less than that we accept the doctrine that in the day of God's judgment every man will get his due reward; and what a man is will determine and condition what a man shall get. And, after all, that is the basis of valuation at the present time. A man is only capable of seeing that which he brings the power to see with. No man is able to absorb more than he has the capacity for absorbing. Consequently the law of the gospel of Jesus Christ is an ethical system based upon the simple principle of pedagogy in which he undertakes to interpret the spiritualities of the kingdom of God in terms of everyday principles. Therefore every parable of Jesus is a miracle of meaning, and every miracle of Jesus is a parable of teaching.

Character at the Foundation

Character lies at the foundation of the kingdom. Character is the basis of divine judgment, "Come ye blessed of my Father, enter into the kingdom prepared for you before the foundation of the world; for when I was hungry ye gave me meat, and when I was naked ye clothed me, and when I was sick and in prison ye comforted me. Why, Lord, whenever did we see thee in this condition? Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." That is heaven. Christ said, "Leave me, ye cursed." Not leave me because I cursed you, but because you were cursed you shall leave me; for when I was hungry ye gave me no meat; when I was thirsty, ye gave me no drink; when I was in prison and sick, ye did not visit me. Why, Lord, whenever did we neglect thee in that way? Inasmuch as ye did not do it unto the least of these my brethren, ye did not do it unto me. What you are, conditions what you will get. Character includes not only patience and self-control, and courage, and justice, but it also includes faith, hope, and love.

Now one thought about duty. This word duty has been a word with which men have conjured and over which many of us have stumbled. The right thing to do and the thing we should not do constitutes the recurring daily problem of every man's life—when and how to speak the word, when and how to be silent. Around this problem many platitudes have developed in the course of human progress. But until we come to Jesus Christ, the rules of Christianized individual conduct never were so clearly stated and authoritatively spoken. A man's duty is summed up in the two brief sentences gathering up the dynamic forces of the human soul, circumscribing the idealism of the human imagination, and laying the foundation upon which human experience may build; standing foursquare to every difficulty that is confronted, there is peace for every man. For in that law, said Dante, is our perfect peace. And the rules are these: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, thy soul, and mind, and strength; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." These are the rules of the kingdom. This is the duty of the Christianized individual. Within the two catalogues described by Jesus Christ is to be found the whole duty of every man.

Revive Our Idealism

What we are needing to do to-day is to revive our idealism. There never was such a time as that in which we are living, because we are living amid the wreckage of broken ideals. It is said of Lincoln that when he was a very young boy he would delight in listening to his neighbors as they would come in and talk to his father. When he would retire to his bed at night he would turn over in his mind all that had been said in the evening and he would try to reinterpret what had been said in the language familiar to his companions and associates of the farm, so that he was able to give back "as rain that which he received as mist." And in a much wider and bigger and truer sense, that is the work of Jesus. His life was devoted to grasping the ideals of God and giving them to us in terms of experience, gathering up the divine dew, condensing it as showers of mercy as they would fall upon the soul.

The ideals of the kingdom are gathered up in two catalogues. First of all there must be the passionate urge of every individual soul for fellowship with God. The atonement of Jesus Christ is expressed in conscious emulation of the divine, in which the loves and the hatreds, the knowings and the reasonings, and the willing of the divine find human expression in us; and as has been said by one great teacher of modern time, Every human soul is the localization of God, and every man becomes the incarnation of the divine. Let me repeat it, Every one of us—common, ordinary men and women—each man is the localization of the divine, and every man is the incarnation of God to some extent in the same way that Jesus was the incarnation of God.

Now, isn't that a great discovery? That discovery could come only through one who had got a vision of the ideal in the way that Jesus had. In this you can gather up what Harnack discovered in the course of his studies, the three big things with which Christ is concerned: God; the value of the human soul; and the establishment of the kingdom. Around these three great fundamentals the tides of moral and spiritual power ebb and flow. God is our Father. In every human soul there is the localization of God and all of us together shall labor to express in a socialized way that power of God.

And now, my friends, my closing word is this: I am sure none of you would wish to contradict me when I say that all of us are here to-night because we believe that in this place God Almighty in our own day has commenced a work which is going to spread outward and upward until its little wavelets shall reach the remotest parts, in which movement the conversion of the kingdoms of this world into the kingdom of our God and his Christ shall be completed, that all humanity in its organized existence shall become the family of God upon the earth, and this group shall break down all the barriers and the defenses and wipe out the great chasms and fissures which have existed for ages so that in Jesus Christ there shall enter neither bond nor free, male nor female, but all one in Jesus.

World Leads the Church

We are making some wonderful strides in this, and the world is marching on ahead of the church, as is customary. The church in all ages seems to have been the camp follower of the mighty movements. For in the world we have already given to the women the right to vote and already two women have sat or are sitting at the present time in the Congress of the United States. I would not be at all surprised if, when the time for the next nomination comes, some sort of expression comes into the minds of the women such as this: We have had enough men for presidents; give us, for God's sake, a woman who knows how to run a kitchen! Now, that all would suggest that probably one of these days we will have a female bishop. Why not? Is there not room and urgent need for women's work in building up the house of the Lord? I read that in England they have made one of the greatest attacks upon aristocracy that has ever been made. An American woman who had the nerve to marry an Englishman was finally elected to Parliament. She sits in the Parliament as a member of a very important committee. And the reports of that woman's work certainly are to the credit of that woman's splendid enterprise, and I believe I am safe in saying that there is no man in the whole of that great historic chamber who would ever raise his hand to keep a woman out of the House of Commons any more.

Now, I think the time has come that we should remind ourselves that in the building up of this great commonwealth, this movement that is going to result in the conversion of the worldly kingdoms into the kingdom of God, there must be a place for every man and a place for every woman. The business of this church is precisely the business of all of the sociologists of the present time, and that business is to find that every man is capable of doing and being, and provide the opportunity for every man to do his best, and do his best for the common weal, which is a problem in sociology, a problem in mechanics, a problem of scientific culture, a problem which reaches every part of our life, no matter whether you go north, south, east, or west.

I believe in the program of the Lord's prayer. Sometimes I think that we believe in too much documentary matter. We have so much that we are in danger of losing the principal thing. The principal thing, I believe, is wrapped up in the prayer of Jesus Christ, "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed

Religious Life in Germany

There is every indication of the deepening of the religious life of Germany, as is natural. Great revivals have usually followed great wars, as at the close of the Civil War. The people in their need and heartbreak and poverty are turning to the consolations of the gospel, and the church which brings the most spiritual message is the church to which they turn. Hence our Methodist churches are crowded; so crowded that in some places our own people have been requested to remain away every other Sabbath so that others to whom the church should minister may come. Thirty-five hundred members have been added to the churches in the Berlin district during the last two years, with like growth elsewhere. In spite of the fact that financial conditions demand much attention, spiritual opportunities are being improved. At Berlin thousands of Germans, forced out of Poland, and housed in railroad cars in the Stretslitz suburb, are crowding our extemporized church.

The call of God is reaching the hearts of young men, who are enlisting for the ministry. In the Martin Institute at Frankfort, are ninety young men of different nationalities, who are being prepared to minister to their own people. Our visit be thy name. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done as in heaven, so on earth. Give us the daily supplies for daily needs, and forgive us our wrongs as we forgive those who have wronged us." That is the only part of the prayer upon which Jesus Christ comments and it means that the measure of my willingness to do to others what I want God to do to me, is the measure of God's ability to bless me in proportion to my need. The key of the whole thing is in our hands individually. I think we can go beneath the objectivity and group the spiritual possibilities of the ethical teachings of Jesus Christ. The miracle of converting material things into spiritual values. After all that is our job. The kingdom of God is not in dietetics. The kingdom of God is not in geographical limitations. The kingdom of God is in righteousness and joy and peace. The kingdom of God means the acceptance of the rule of God, and to this end we have devoted ourselves. May God help us at the close of this Palm Sunday to rejoice that materialistic conceptions were smashed to pieces and from out of the ruins the glory of the spiritual kingdom shines and envelops us in its baptismal glory.

was most interesting and significant. There are good buildings, a very fine faculty, with Doctor Melle at the head, and strong laymen, all intelligently devoted to the task of spiritual reconstruction. From the point of view of language it was a Babel, but in purpose and achievement, it was a Pentecost of tongues speaking as the Spirit gave them utterance, every man hearing in his own tongue in which he was born. Our interpreter was Doctor Luring, to whose repertoire of a score of languages and dialects greeted us, stating their country or language:—Letts, Lithuanians, Russians, Armenians, and others, all being prepared to carry back to their own people a spiritual message.—J. B. Hingeley, in Central Christian Advocate, March 22, 1922.

Skill of Ancient Builders in Syria

At Baalbek, in Syria, there is a great temple that some traditions have attempted to date back to the time of Cain. The style of the temple, however, would seem to belong to the Roman period. The temple, though 1,100 feet long and 440 feet wide, was not erected on the solid ground, but was built upon a platform with rooms underneath. The remarkable factors are the size of the stone, 15 feet square, and 44 to 65 feet long. Such stones would weigh from 900 to 1,250 tons. How were they raised and set in place? At the quarry from which the stone was taken, there remains a single block, without flaw, 69 feet long and 16 feet square. Such a stone would weigh 1,500 tons.

A second remarkable factor is that despite the size of the stones no mortar was used, but the junction appears to be perfect. In fact, it is almost invisible, and is like the invisible joints in a mahogany table top. When one realizes how hard it is to make a perfectly straight line of even one yard, it will be seen how remarkable it is to have polished two areas 15 feet by 65 feet so that the two surfaces are perfectly flush, and form an invisible joint.

Ruins Under Mexico City

A recent item from the Scientific American notes that recent excavations in the city of Mexico disclose complete ruins underneath, so that the buildings are not erected on solid ground, but apparently over a buried city. The excavations have not been carried far enough to determine whether such rooms extend under a large part of the city, though so far as they have been carried, they give the inference that the present city is built on the roof of an ancient town. It will be remembered that in letters from President Frederick M. Smith, while in Palestine, he calls attention to a similar condition in Jerusalem. The original pavements of the streets of old are far below the present buildings, and are evidently of a different character and width than is the case with the present city.

Something Lacking

"The leaders of the intellectual life in Japan desire a godless religion and a creedless faith just as they are charmed with wireless telegraphy and horseless vehicles. They reject all Christian dogma as a superstition not less fantastic than the wildest perversion of Taoism. The Japanese idea is that Darwin and Spencer between them have solved the whole riddle of the universe. In the nineties the Japanese thought of adopting Christianity as a state religion; but it was to be carefully deprived of whatever conflict with 'scientific' notions."—From E. F. Raymond's book, Portraits of the Nineties.

"I visited Argentina and Brazil, where men of the educated class have practically dropped Christianity."—Viscount Bryce.

You are told you should love your neighbor as yourself; but if you love yourself meanly, childishly, timidly, even so shall you love your neighbor. Learn, therefore, to love yourself with a love that is wise and healthy, that is large and complete.—Maeterlinck.

The Agricultural Conference at Washington in January brought out very clearly the sharp decline in farm income while there has been practically no decrease in operating expense; hence the past two years farm business has been operated at a loss. Very earnest consideration was given to economic conditions confronting the country as a whole, as they recognized that the problem of the farmers is not one to be solved as a class problem alone but is part of the social problem confronting us.

Benjamin Franklin said: "So what signifies wishing and hoping for better times? We may make these times better if we better ourselves. Industry and thrift need not wish, and he that lives upon hopes will die fasting."

We can make better times for ourselves if we will recognize the value of thrift and practice regular saving. The value of thrift and the need to practice it is just as great now as in Franklin's time.

Shall Stewardships Be Appointed Now?

By Bishop Ellis Short

When we reach our Jordan, will we step in, or hesitate and fail?

We will briefly direct your attention to evidence in the law dealing with the appointing of and administration of the law governing personal stewardships.

The statement of the Lord in Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, is so clear and free from ambiguity that any doubt or disputation should not arise in the church, especially when this very important section contains, largely, the constitutional law given to the church at an early date, and as stated in section 122: 6, is as binding upon the church today as when given. Section 42: 9 states:

Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family.

The manner of the administration of the law is clearly set forth, defining the duty of the steward as unhesitating fealty to God, unto whom he must account in his stewardship.

In support of section 42 the reader is referred to Doctrine and Covenants 70:1. The Lord states to certain men that they are stewards. "I, the Lord, have appointed them and ordained them to be stewards over the revelations and commandments." It is further stated in paragraph 3: "And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God." There is no room for doubt to whom this applies.

We find in section 101: 2:

It is wisdom in me; therefore, a commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship, that every man may give an account unto me of the stewardship which is appointed unto him; for it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures.

The statement continues, "All things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my saints . . . but it must needs be done in mine own way"; which is in full accord with sections 42 and 70. The Lord says the appointing of every man his stewardship is the way, and that it is expedient that it be done, and if so, why should there be hesitancy in the execution of that which God declares is "an expedient."

Law of Stewardships an Ancient One

In our consideration of these citations, we should remember that the law of stewardships is not confined to that which is given in our day, but is as old as the gospel, was practiced by Enoch and his people, was taught by Christ and his ministry, and is one of the most essential parts of the great work of restoration and the basis of our hope and religion.

In considering the revelations bearing upon the principle and law governing stewardships, I do so knowing that with many who are students of our sacred books this doctrine of stewardships is not a new one; but it is one that has been swallowed up in the vortex of doubt, dissension, and delay.

Because of onrushing conditions now confronting us, it behooves us to render hasty obedience to that which is so clearly recorded in our sacred books. Contentions and delay are disastrous and dangerous. Should we not move forward?

It may be asked, Why? and how will the appointing of stewardships be of any special benefit or permanent advantage to the people?

My answer is that it will place the faithful steward in close cooperation with God. It is stated that the men of the church, both those who are in the ministerial work and those who labor in the affairs of men, should labor together with God to accomplish the work intrusted to all. Therefore, we can be successful laborers with him only through the appointed channel. Furthermore, the gathering of the Saints and the redemption of Zion can and will be accomplished only through appointed stewardships; for every man is under this law.

Zion can only be established by conformity to the law governing her redemption.

Equal Opportunity to All

One of the Zionie principles is equality which provides that equal opportunity be extended to all who are worthy—ability, wants, and needs always being taken into consideration by the administrative department, before whom all must go. The "opportunity" referred to is to be made possible by the steward's rendering a just account of his stewardship unto God, always having a lively concept of his relationship to him, continuously remembering whose servant he is. Thus we become the salt of the earth and the saviors of men.

Some may contend that we are stewards now, which, in a broad sense, we are, but the Lord, as has been cited, made provision for individual and personal appointment, and has said unto his people, "None are exempt who belong to the church of the living God," and that "such appointment is expedient in him." Our work being both constructive and progressive, should there be delay upon the part of the administrative department to call upon the people for their inventories, preparatory to calling for applications for stewardships? It must not be understood that the appointing of the stewardship submerges the title to property into the group, or church, without the full desire and consent of the steward. But as saith the law, "Every man is made a steward over his own property inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family," the steward holding in fee the title in his own name, unless there was a debt formed to the church or group. Then title would be withheld until such time as there was a cancellation of the debt; then title would be given.

Duties of the Steward

It may be asked, What will be the duty and privilege of the steward under the law? To this we will say: He must move forward in his new appointment, endeavoring to realize he has entered into a new covenant and has taken a forward step which will be accompanied with great responsibility, as every steward, in the day of judgment, will be held accountable for the stewardship granted unto him. (See section 70: 1-3.) Thus it is seen that everyone is brought in close personal affiliation with God by doing the things that he has commanded, and he says when we do that he is bound. Otherwise there is no promise.

It may be asked by many, How much will we be required to consecrate? The answer: That which you have to impart, without destroying or seriously hindering your earning capacity as a steward, taking into consideration your just wants and needs. And here is where the supreme test of true saintship and godly devotion is resident with the steward. It is here he must decide between necessary expenditures and a repression of imaginary needs. Unnecessary wants will continually assert themselves, as an insidious foe, to overthrow the intent of the law by which our work is to become an ensign to the nations of the earth. The appointing of stewardships and unhesitating and loyal occupation of the stewards is the "Jordan" before us. Will we halt, hesitate, and fail, or will we move forward?

We Wait for Our Joshuas

There may be those who will say it is not practical and cannot be made a success; our numbers are small; it is full of vagaries; and such undertakings have always failed. We should remember that some of the men sent as spies into Canaan declared that the going was impossible and created a great furor in the camp, saying it was a land that eateth up the inhabitants; all the men are of great stature; moreover, we saw giants, which came of giants, and great walled cities, and terrible, strong people, dwelling in all parts of the land, and we were as grasshoppers in our own sight, also in their sight.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Hope of the Ages

By C. E. Guinand

O Zion, the hope of the ages,
Of prophets and seers of old,
Where Saints will dwell unmolested,
While eternity's cycles shall roll,
Put on thy beautiful garments,
Behold the Bridegroom is near,
Let virtue be your adorning,
And you shall have nothing to fear.
Awake! O beautiful Zion!
The days of your sorrows are past,
The time of the latter-day glory
Is dawning upon you at last.
The Lord Jehovah, your Savior,
Is ruler, redeemer, and king,
Oh, arise with one thought and one purpose,
Unto him an offering bring.
Come, bring him an offering most pleasing,
Of meekness, contrition, and love;
His power will then rest upon you,
By his Spirit brought down from above.

But Caleb and Joshua, the men of God, stilled the people before Moses and said, "Let us go up at once and possess the land, for we are able to overcome its inhabitants." Have we not men like Caleb and Joshua who are saying to the people, "We can cross the Jordan; and the walled cities, giants, and men of great stature can be overcome by faithfully and unitedly going forward"? It was not until the priests who bore the ark of the covenant stepped into the waters of Jordan that the waters were stayed and the priests stood firm, on dry ground in the midst of the Jordan, and the people passed over. (Joshua 3: 15, 16, 17.)

When the Joshuas of to-day call upon the people of Zion and her stakes to cross the Jordan of stewardships, should we longer remain in the wilderness and stand aghast at the onward rush of the most perilous times known to humanity, or shall we concede God's way by doing the things required of us?

Stewardship is the triumphal archway that God has appointed which solved the demands of the economic world, and especially his people, and opens the gateway for humanity to bless humanity in that the wants and the needs of the unfortunate are met by the fortunate contributing of their means, where it can be used in the channels of adversity, all in strict harmony with gospel provisions and the revelations of God given for the establishment of Zion and the salvation of his people.

The Fire of Love

By Doctor Anna Key Swift

Light up the fire—the fire that nature burns;
Let it sparkle and blaze and glow; I'll quick return
And set a fire ablaze, aflame in you.
'Twill make your red blood boil, through and through.

Light up the fire of love, that love that never dies.
Sun, moon, and stars will banish from the skies;
Your soul will be aflame with love divine
And I'll be wholly yours and you'll be wholly mine.

How cold and hard the soul that knows not love,
That has not tasted of the heavenly wine,
Who has not tipped nor dared to sip the fount above,
Or kneel a votary at fair passion's shrine.

Plea for Freedom

By Samuel Blair

First Recorder of the Reorganization.

Copied from the original (which was written between sixty-five and seventy years ago) by W. H. Deam, nephew of the author.

My heart is grieved within me now,
In looking o'er the past,
To see the Saints of latter days
Among the nations cast.
The Saints are in captivity,
Oh, free them from their woes.
Their prayers are now for liberty
And power o'er their foes.

For our transgressions still we bleed,
While scattered o'er the earth,
For Zion's children still we plead—
O God, remove the curse.
Then let the Gentile nations feel
The power of thy rod,
That every nation, isle and tongue
May know that thou art God.

Remember now thy covenant, Lord,
Which thou with Israel made.
Though they have wandered far from thee—
Thy laws they've disobeyed—
May they be gathered to their land,
Forever to remain;
To dwell in peace and righteousness,
Thy precepts to maintain.

Oh, bring the Ten Tribes from their tents
Beyond the frozen sea,
And may the icy mountains melt—
Before thy presence flee.
Oh, haste and bring the remnants in,
Which thou hast long dispersed,
That Israel may be gathered in Before thou sendst the curse.

Forget not Ephraim's children, Lord,
Let them all gathered be,
That they with us in Zion may rest
When Zion is made free.

May they their savage ways forsake
 And learn to do thy will,
 That they with thee redeemed may stand
 With joy on Zion's hill.

Preserve us through all trials here
 That we may have to bear;
 And when thy judgments do appear,
 Oh, take us in thy care.
 Secrete us in thy chambers, Lord,
 That we there be secure,
 And when thy judgments are passed o'er
 Preserve us by thy power.

Seek Early His Kingdom

By Catherine Thomas Booher

Take time for reviving God's people on earth,
 The young to enliven—they are of great worth.
 There's work in his kingdom, both here and on high,
 For them if God's banner they hold to the sky.

If they will remember in their youthful days,
 The Savior who loves them and give him due praise,
 Seek early his kingdom, help Zion to build,
 For them is the vict'ry, doing as God willed.

Desire

By A. A. and E. E. Yates

We want to dwell in quietude;
 We want to think and act
 With a trait and attitude,
 To keep within the latitude,
 Of firm and solid fact.

We want to serve humanity,
 And keep ourselves aloof
 From every form of vanity,
 Condemning all profanity,
 Accepting every truth.

We would provide our sustenance,
 By dint of toil and give
 Without restraint, our sufferance
 To "down and out" inhabitants,
 That they may hope and live.

We fain would stop to mitigate
 The pain that mortals feel;
 Their sad, dark souls illuminate,
 That they may, too, participate
 In health and life's loved weal.

Help us, Lord, most beautiful,
 Of human traits employ;
 Make our choice most suitable;
 To thy mandates dutiful;
 Thus fill the world with joy.

Playing the Game

The "game of life" is one all must play; character will denote how it has been played.

The general rule of the game is that "life—the life of boys and girls—must obey certain definite laws in order to be a success."

Our code for the game includes the exercise of kindness, faithfulness, truthfulness, forgiveness, generosity, obedience, courage, self-control, and service to others.

How best to teach these principles in order to make them both interesting and effective is the problem before those who would train children.

Modern psychology finds in natural play a more valuable means of education than in any pedagogical device ever formulated by a teacher, because it is the instinctive manner of expressing the mental and physical powers of the child.

Social games create certain rules. One cannot be the leader unless another will be the follower. The fact that the football game was lost through disobedience of some "rule of the game" shows the similarity between life and the playing of a game,—both require that rules must be followed.

Story-telling is perhaps the oldest of the arts, and the traits that served the race in its infancy are the ones that mark the unfolding life of every child. More and more, in these days of progress, are the leaders of educational thought coming to recognize the significance and value of story-telling in the training of children. Precepts may fail to impress, while personality expressed through mental pictures never does.

Long before teachers or textbooks appeared, instruction was given in story form to children. "I would rather be the children's story-teller than the queen's favorite or the king's counselor," said Kate Douglas Wiggin. And Doctor G. Stanley Hall says, "Let me tell the stories and I care not who writes the textbooks."

Modern mothers often use story-telling unconsciously as a means of instruction or correction. Natural instinct guides them to use this great art. In every age really great teachers, who have had character building as a conscious aim, have known the value of stories, and have made it a most effective means of shaping the lives of both old and young. Jesus, Plutarch, Froebel, and the kindergartners of to-day have used this method with marked success, and modern educators are admitting that good story-telling is one of the best intellectual qualifications of the teachers of all grades.

Human nature in general can more easily be laughed into any direction than reasoned or persuaded into it by any other means. In a case at law, some lawyers will try to make people reflect, which they won't do; others will try to make them weep, which they can't do; while others, with well-told stories well and aptly applied, make the people laugh, which they like to do, and the case is won.

The minister who understands psychology uses the story method quite noticeably. It is easier to remember a story than a statement of fact. When the story is used to illustrate a point, then the mind later will not recall the story without thinking of the point it illustrated.

The whole world loves stories, though often many do not truly estimate their value. What would life be without them? Some people object to "fairy tales," probably from lack of understanding their real place in our development. In most fairy tales we find this distinctly moral value: virtue is rewarded and wrongdoing punished. While this is as true in real life, it is not always the child is able to trace the relation between cause and effect, and the lesson is not impressed. Nature's penalties, for instance, are sure, but often one waits a lifetime to recognize them or to see their completion. In a fairy tale the moral is often more effectively pointed out than in a story drawn from real life.

A child does not see things as an adult does. His imagination is so strong, things are transformed from the ordinary to the marvelous. A broom handle becomes a prancing steed, a crooked stick a gun, and a row of chairs a wonderful train of cars. He has the instinctive knack of grasping a moral lesson in a tale without dwelling on the fictitious part of the story, and his world of make-believe is very real to him.

"It is not the gay forms that he meets in the fairy tale which charms the child, but a spiritual, invisible truth lying far deeper," says Friedrich Froebel. Sara Cone Bryant tells us, "The story of 'The ugly duckling' is much truer than many a statement of fact."

The story of "A good turn" may be taught from the story of the "Good Samaritan," but the story-teller must know the background of history, the times concerned, and something of the dangers involved in a trip far from frequented regions in those days, in order to impress its significance. This story teaches concretely the lesson of human kindness, and after its telling you might plan with the children for a week of "good turns."

The story of "David killing Goliath" may be used to teach that faithfulness to small duties prepares one for larger tasks which lie ahead.

When a story is well told, moralizing is omitted. It only serves to weaken the moral influence aroused. The mother who says to a child, "Go out in the sand pile and play a while," is likely to secure the desired period of rest and privacy; but if she adds, "I want to be alone a little while," the reaction will likely be something else.

"The normal boy would rather read of a good boy than of a bad one, if the good boy will only do something. He will have action, good or bad," says Warren F. Gregory. Boys and girls both desire to see their heroes in action, and they glory in their acts of bravery or sacrifice.

At the age of about eleven or twelve, habits take on a rather permanent form. Stress should therefore be placed on the forming of desired religious habits, such as churchgoing, sharing with others, proper Sabbath observance, Bible study, and loyal support of the Sunday school class. Judge Porterfield of the Kansas City juvenile court, says less than five per cent of children who attend Sunday school regularly are ever brought into court. The Sunday schools use the story-telling method very largely in their teaching, and while they have only one hour a week to impress truth, we see this great effect in the lives of the boys and girls brought under their influence. What might we not hope for if this scientific method were used every day with our children?

The movies are only stories told in pictures, and the effect they have upon the lives of young people is deplorable because the stories depict undesirable lessons. Human beings act out their thoughts. We do the things we think about. When minors are questioned as to the cause for the crimes they are committing, the great majority say they were inspired to do them because of the picture shows they had attended where the hero was an expert robber, burglar, or thief. If the pictures had told a different story, one that would have inspired to honesty, truthfulness, self-control, and service to others, the results might have been quite different.

On one point the teacher must be very clear, and that is, that he is to teach boys and girls and not the subject matter, stories, Bible lessons, and so on. Stories are but instruments in his hands by which lessons can be impressed. Truths in the story, if properly brought out, will stimulate, inspire, and guide young lives into a successful playing of the game of life. Those fundamental principles mentioned in the beginning of this article as being necessary to our development must be trained into our children if we would save their souls in rightdoing. Stories will help us in that task.

Walter L. Hervey says, "The children thirst for stories, but has it no significance, and does it not lay a responsibility upon us?"

Amos R. Wells says, "Of all things that man can do, the most blessedly fruitful is wise talking to children. This is the supreme art. No sculptor molds a statue so superb as a growing life. No artist has ever painted a picture that compares with a lovely character. The architect cannot rear a building, the poet cannot write an ode, the inventor cannot design a machine, that is worthy to stand for an instant beside the completed, living, loving, achieving product of wise teaching."

Leadership

The Leader Planning Her Work

There is one part of the leader's work that requires careful concentration of mental power, and that is its planning. Visioning, dreaming, is only the beginning; if order and system are to be had, there must be proper planning.

So plan, plan, plan! Plan definitely, plan broadly, plan minutely, plan incessantly, and plan systematically. Plan carefully everything that can be planned. And having planned, make a note on it. Plan in black and white. It is an excellent habit to carry a pencil and pad of paper in your apron pocket. Be absorbed in your work, so utterly that inspiration may come at any moment. Nothing was ever accomplished without enthusiasm.

Take all your ideas and systematize them. Develop a passion for re-shaping and subduing. Do not approach tasks as isolated things, but link them together like parts of a chain. See the detail, but only as a part of the whole, a means to an end.

Try to visualize your work at every stage of its progress and even before it begins. Consider broadly, always looking ahead with an enlarged vision. Plan big things in a big way; handle little things in a little way, leaving details to your helpers.

Do not worry over what you cannot do, but do try to do constructive planning of that which you are able to do and intend to accomplish. Get your ideas clear. Hard mental work—creative work—can only be done when the mind is at its best, and it never remains at that point more than a few hours at a time. Postpone a difficult job when you begin to weary and your mind to lag. Try it again in the morning when you are fresh and rested, and see how much easier it will be to do the clear thinking necessary.

A person should know what he is doing and why and how. The one who dislikes planning should be relieved of leadership duties. A leader should not go whining to her work, but approach it smiling. Attention, desire, interest, decision, are all needed for its success.

In planning your work, and adapting its organization to your local needs, look over your territory carefully. Know how many miles or blocks it covers, how many branches and how many members. Note the work already started, that which should be done first, and what is possible in the future.

Have a definite idea of the duties of each of your workers. Outline their work as you plan the development of each special department. A definite goal set for each, both worker and department, is a splendid thing. There is always interest when there is competition or a stake set. Do not plan a one-sided organization. Give each department its proper place and attention, and try to meet the needs of all.

Make your community the center of every advantage for the work of the Women's Department. Keep your mind fresh, your ideas invigorating and appealing. Keep your door and ear open for suggestions and new methods. Be open to impressions. Be willing to seek patiently through chaff to find the golden wheat. New ideas are rare, and originality is a precious possession. Try a new way; it is intensive work that counts and wins.

Have a definite line of conduct resolved upon, weigh the inconveniences and the advantages, and then, after decision, go forward toward the goal without hesitation, without apology. It is not the one who gets to the corner first who is to be commended, but the one who knows what to do when he gets there.

There are plenty of people who can do things if you tell them how, but not so many who do things well without being instructed. No man gets the ability to accomplish the seemingly impossible without doing it—the power comes through the effort. Genius will find a way, or make one.

The surest and quickest way to get to the top is to begin by being the best man at the bottom. LULA SANDY.

The Greatest Artist in the World

I sat watching her from the opposite side of the car. It was a long journey, so I had a fine opportunity to study the work of this infinitely skilled artist.

She held a baby in her lap. Between its smiles and tears, the artist worked—and worked—and worked. Artists are not artists unless they work long and hard.

Little reaching toes. Smiles—every one with a dimpled setting. Soft, silky hair—like threaded gold. A wiggling body of no really great importance—except to the artist. A heart with blood smoothing its way through, which is just as sensitive to the warm touch of the artist's hand as is the cultivated mind to a noble thought.

The hours go by, yet the artist works on at her masterpiece. And she knows that she is at work on a masterpiece. Therefore weariness and the toll that toil takes from her heart and body are as nothing.

Now the restless little body falls asleep—and lies across the seat where the artist's eyes may watch and love.

What will the completed picture look like? Who will look upon it? In what galleries will it hang? Will the critics understand that a real artist put her lifeblood into this supreme effort? And that her paints were mixed in her heart?

Now the dreamer has come into day again. And the work of the artist goes on.

And it will go on through the years, until the work of this indefatigable one is ended and the masterpiece has been completed.

For no artist ever mixed paints or wrote literature or builded structures, which in beauty and expressed love can compare with what a mother puts into her child!

Just so long as time shall last, will a mother remain the greatest artist in the world.—George Matthew Adams.

Children at the Movies

A recent questionnaire in six Chicago high schools shows that 87 per cent of the 3,000 students attend the movies from one to seven times a week. These students spent $920 a week at the movies, or $46,000 a year. Most of them were frank to admit that they preferred the thrillers with gun plays and hairbreadth escapes.

The results of such a questionnaire might, no doubt, be duplicated in other cities. Movie-going is a habit that has a large hold on both young and old. Probably the movies now constitute at least 90 per cent of the Nation's entertainment.—Minneapolis Journal.

Mothers in Israel

(Tune: "Mother Machree.")

There's a place in this world for us mothers to fill,
There's a mission for us we must do with a will;
'Tis to teach our dear children the principles true
Of this glorious gospel, and what they should do.

Chorus

Yes, we love the dear children who are left to our care,
And we want to so mold them that they may prepare
For the coming of Jesus, whose love we all tell—
Oh, God help us and guide us, mothers in Israel!

'Tis a wonderful task which we find at our hands,
This of teaching the children for future demands;
They will form the great church of to-morrow, they say;
We can't treat it lightly, this opportune day.

Then shall we not leave them examples so grand
That when we depart for that "far better" land
Our teaching will still in their memory remain
A constant reminder of all they can gain.

ELSIE GOUDY.

"Prayer Is the Soul's Sincere Desire"

Surely a man's religion is wholly an affair between God and himself. . . . In a jungle of theological beliefs God is lost sight of. Small wonder we lose our bearings in the maze of words. That we should seek God, and, having found, should love with mind and heart and strength; that we should express this love to all men—this is the sum of religion! . . .

Such prayers as we commonly make are evidence of our lack of trust. Only a perfect trust can render our religion stable and a solace to us. He who has risen to a true idea of God is content to be left in his hands. In this lies his security; his reliance is his strength. Herein is the real beauty and solace of religion.

Prayer is but the response to the mental attitude. As we live, we pray. The difficulty lies in praying wisely. Every god gives of his own. Bacchus and Mars yield of their gifts readily, but they will not pay in the coin of Apollo or Minerva. God alone gives happiness; only the spiritual prayer brings peace.

Let us choose wisely then; let us have a care as to the manner of our praying. What are a few Sunday morning petitions as compared with the incessant flow of our thoughts? It was a trite question that was once put to the young people—"Have you said your prayers?" Poor wights! What else have they done from morning to night? And now some have prayed themselves into the asylum and the hospital. The boy that loved money too well has prayed himself into jail; the girl that married for pretense and the world has prayed herself into a world of misery! God's children all—and if they will but pray wisely they shall pray themselves out of their difficulties again. Now and again in history a man has forsaken all, and prayed himself into the kingdom of heaven through wisdom and love! . . .

Thankful should we be in these days for this influx of truth. Thankful above all for the saner ideas of God, the more philosophical perception of the soul, the deeper, broader, more spiritual conceptions of life that are proclaimed. All these are tending to a rational religion wherein we are to find a new liberty and some assurance of peace.

But religion is still and forever a matter of the individual. It is not to be gotten wholesale. The poets and philosophers are full of suggestions for thoughtful minds. The broad tendencies of the times set us to thinking for ourselves. But only that is worthy which makes us self-reliant, or God-reliant, if you will!

Wisdom alone can save. Regeneration is our hope—and this comes through renewing the mind. Religion offers no exception to the rule that whatsoever is worth having must be sought for. Truth is not to be acquired second hand. Any candid and impartial consideration of religion brings us to this—Be true to thyself! Be true, and the way shall be revealed!—Stanton Kirkham, in the Ministry of Beauty.

CHAPTER XIX

The Psychology of Prayer

Another and a final chapter of this course, "The psychology of prayer," has been given for the purpose of helping those who have followed carefully this course and are beginning to be able to analyze and give a reason for some of the things that we are doing and have been doing for ages past. We are now living in the time when people, especially our educated young men and women, are wanting good, substantial reasons why certain things are done or are not done. Parents, teachers, ministers, and leaders are repeatedly asked to give reasons why certain courses are pursued, why a given method of action is ethical or unethical, why certain amusements are considered harmful, why certain formalities must be adhered to so rigidly, why various religious observances are still continued, others discarded, etc.

These and thousands of other questions are coming up for solution. A large majority of those asked are unable to give a satisfactory analysis of the particular problem in question. These same individuals may feel that they have reasons which are sufficient to justify their conclusions in the matter, but perhaps a more unbiased analysis must be made to satisfy the critical mind of the questioner. It is with this thought in mind and to help those who wish to analyze carefully and investigate thoroughly some of our age-old customs and recent admonitions that we give some direct and positive statements in a brief discussion of the psychology of prayer.

First: The psychology of prayer reveals that it is an alliance with the Infinite. It is an undisputed fact that an alliance of nations or an alliance between men, all of whom are working toward a desired end, makes for strength and conserves peace. How much more peace and strength can be insured in an alliance with God. In an alliance with him, the individual feels much more keenly that he is working with not a mere power, nor an abstraction, but a real God who is ready and anxious to hear and answer prayer.

Second: The psychology of prayer brings about an adjustment in our life. In the busy conflicts of life, amid the din and strife of existence, among the sordid and callous natures, in the selfish competition, one's moral nature oftentimes becomes depressed and his courage relaxed, one's clear eye of conscience may become dimmed and he finds himself out of adjustment. Prayer braces one's moral nature and helps lift the clouds of despair, transporting one into an invigorating atmosphere where God's righteousness meets the soul and there comes about an adjustment in our life.

Third: The psychology of prayer demands concentration. In your earlier lessons you have learned the meaning of concentration. To pray aright, to see God and be in his presence, one should take time to pray well. There is much difference in saying a prayer and in a real prayer. A prayer with no heart in it, no love in it, no concentration in it, no faith in it, no submission in it, receives no recognition.

Fourth: The psychology of prayer recognizes the unity of mind and body, and the reaction of one upon the other. The spirit of prayer has a tendency to sooth, to quiet, to dispel fear, and brings in hope, faith, and renewed trust and confidence in God. With these comes renewed vitality conducive to recovery. One cannot commune with God without catching something of brightness, power, health, and joy.

Fifth: The psychology of prayer makes for creative force. Ordinarily one prays to be stronger, to do better, to act more wisely, to be less selfish, to work constructively. These desires and resolves make one stronger by having thought and resolved to do them. They tend to recreate a clean heart and manner of life. Prayer purifies, inspires, and makes over the whole being.

Sixth: The psychology of prayer recognizes affirmation. Prayer arises out of that side of our nature which distinguishes us from the beast and the star. It affirms our supernatural origin and our immortality. The possession of this supernatural origin gives us the right, if we have met the conditions required, to expect communion with God and that he will do all that he has promised.

Seventh: The psychology of prayer shows it to be powerful autosuggestion. The thing which I permit my mind to want and to dwell upon, that I do, or become, if persisted in for sufficient duration. Many of our thoughts and feelings are submerged beneath the plan of consciousness, and, unknown to us, rule our thoughts and influence our wills. Every thought has a physical reaction. Through prayer of suggestion, in times of mental excitation, things that had hitherto been impossible are made possible for the mind.

Eighth: The psychology of prayer for others recognizes the telepathic communication between human souls, that we influence each other by invisible waves. To pray for another is to bring to bear upon him a spiritual force, which may do more for him than any personal influence can do.

Ninth: The psychology of prayer recognizes communion with our Father. The highest result of prayer is to feel, to realize, and to live with God. By this prayer track, we come in touch with the Divine. The by-products of prayer are: the strengthening of the will; the enlightenment of our mind; the visioning of our faith; the deepening of our trust; and the elevation of our love.

1. Discuss more fully each of the nine statements made in the discussion of the psychology of prayer.
2. Can you name other reasons why men should pray more?
3. Explain the statement that "prayer is an instinct of the race."
4. Paul's career was shaped in the school of prayer. Trace the power of prayer in the life of Paul. On what occasions and when do we have record of his wonderful belief in prayer.

5. How could you explain the statement, "Our heavenly Father knoweth what things we have need of before we ask Him"? Why ask him?

6. How often do you do as George Herbert Betts tells us to do in these beautiful lines:

"By all means use some time to be alone.
Salute thyself; see what thy soul doth wear.
Dare to look in thy chest—for 'tis thine own—
And tumble up and down that which thou findest there."

Speak! Summit of beauty!
Fiery challenge productive of Being!
My soul attends!

Oh, might the path transcendent to Intelligence,
Blaze in a stream of Light Unquenchable,
Cragged regally by heights eterne,
of Purity and Love;
Guarded and marked beyond the chance of loss
By flaming angels hurtling into dark
(In never ceasing play of two-edged swords,)
Still-born, abortive destinies—false gods!
The myriad, vain imaginings of woe!

O Majesty sublime! Sun-spreading Glory
Which t'were annihilation but to breathe thine Endless Name!
Send one true ray—unspeakable—undreamed.
Shatter this substance!
Crash to infinity the Me unreal.
In pity gather thou that uttermost sob
my heart reverberate;
Summon the spirit, broken and contrite.

Sing!

Immutable Mandate—
Sing!

Quivering cosmos yields
In silence consummate Insatiate ear.

Take Thou my soul—my heart—cleansed in a sea of grief.
Fashion to suit Thy subtle touch,

Care of Children's Teeth

(The second of four articles.)

If the mother has properly regulated her life during pregnancy and until the child is weaned, its teeth should be off to a good start. For upwards of a year before the first baby tooth appears the germs of these teeth have been slowly developing and during that time have had to depend upon the nourishment supplied by the mother. Breast-fed babies usually have the best teeth because mother's milk contains all the elements necessary to the building up of sound teeth. As soon after birth as feasible the baby's mouth should be daily washed with a mild solution of salt and water. This can be most conveniently accomplished by wrapping cheese cloth around the index finger, dipping it in the salt and water solution, and carefully rubbing under the tongue and between the cheeks and the gums.

It is well to continue this method of washing even after some of the teeth have erupted. By the time the child has most of its first set of teeth, it should be taught the correct method of using a toothbrush. The most suitable brush at this age is the smallest brush obtainable, and it should have only one or two rows of stiff bristles. The most important time to brush the teeth is before retiring and before breakfast, but if they are brushed also after each meal it is still better.

Proper Brushing

To brush the teeth properly begin at the upper back teeth, placing the bristles high up on the gums, and by an oscillating motion carry them down over the gum and the surface of the teeth, thus massaging the gum as well as the teeth. Never brush across the teeth, but brush the upper teeth downward and the lower teeth upward. The inner and grinding surfaces should be brushed as carefully as the outer surfaces; it is advisable also to scrape or brush the surface of the tongue. The mouth should be thoroughly rinsed with

The Tongue

"The boneless tongue, so small and weak,
Can crush and kill," declared the Greek.

"The tongue destroys a greater horde,"
The Turk asserts, "than does the sword."

The Persian proverb wisely saith,
"A lengthy tongue—an early death."

Or sometimes takes this form instead,
"Don't let your tongue cut off your head."

"The tongue can speak a work whose speed,"
Says the Chinese, "outstrips the steed."

While Arab sages this impart,
"The tongue's great storehouse is the heart."

From Hebrew wit the maxim sprung,
"Though feet should slip, ne'er let the tongue."

The sacred writer crowns the whole,
"Who keeps his tongue doth keep his soul."

—Reverend Philip Burroughs Strong.

clear water after each meal. To do this efficiently the teeth should be closed and the cheeks alternately distended and contracted as forcibly as possible.

It is of the utmost importance that the twenty teeth which constitute the temporary set remain in place with their crowns undiminished in size by decay until the permanent teeth are ready to replace them. If these teeth are not properly cared for and prevented from decaying, the following disastrous results are likely to ensue: The child is caused unnecessary toothache and pain, which interferes with its nervous system, its digestion, and its sleep. A child with decayed teeth suffers with indigestion because it cannot properly chew its food without causing pain and, therefore, gets into the habit of bolting it. This throws unnecessary work upon the stomach and other digestive organs, causing many bodily disturbances. At the same time the proper development and growth of the jaws is interfered with through lack of use, which in turn may produce irregularity of the permanent teeth for want of space to accommodate them in their proper place and arrangement in the arch.

Cavities Breed Disease

Cavities of decay in the teeth are ideal places for the breeding of germs of many contagious diseases, such as measles, German measles, chicken pox, whooping cough, mumps, scarlet fever, diphtheria, influenza, and even smallpox, making their possessors a menace to themselves and their playmates.

By properly caring for the teeth of the first set and keeping them in their places until the appearance of the permanent or second set which is to replace them, the jawbones are so developed that there is plenty of room for the proper and regular arrangement of the permanent teeth.

At the age of six or seven years a large double tooth makes its appearance on each side of both jaws behind the last temporary tooth. These four teeth are the vanguards of the permanent teeth and should never be mistaken for temporary teeth or in any way neglected, as they are the most important members of the permanent set and can never be replaced. Upon the proper placing of these teeth and upon their preservation depend to a very large extent the safety, beauty, and usefulness of the other teeth. The beautiful, symmetrical arrangement of the teeth in the arches so that the grinding surfaces fit perfectly into one another, producing an efficient masticating apparatus, depends upon the care and preservation of these six-year permanent molars, the sixth tooth from the center and the first of the thirty-two permanent teeth to appear.

To Preserve the Teeth

Whatever promotes good health—fresh air, sunshine, properly selected nutritious foods, thoroughly chewed, hygienic surroundings at all times, plenty of sleep, good habits—all of these tend towards the building up of good, sound, healthy teeth. With proper care, however, even poor teeth may be preserved almost indefinitely.

To-day the aim of progressive dentistry is to prevent tooth decay rather than repair the damage after it is done. Dentists are becoming convinced that diet as well as cleanliness is a very important factor in the prevention of decay. An excess of sugary, starchy, pasty, mushy food, as well as too much bread, toast, biscuits, etc., and not enough vegetables and fruits have a very bad effect upon the teeth, as well as upon the general health. Thorough, persistent chewing of hard, coarse foods has a beneficial effect upon both. It also tends automatically to cleanse the teeth.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Continuous Inspiration

To have and enjoy continuous revelation, or the inspiration that ever incites to new and higher ideals is man's privilege to-day. There is social advancement in the community when the people have faith enough in association to get together more frequently than in the past, that they may be enabled to advance the interests of the schools, the churches, and the public welfare work, by introducing better methods, and by a more general cooperation. Here we get inspiration.

In this way groups will grow and prosper whether they are engaged in religious, educational, industrial, or administrative labor among the people, and it is through a higher power good to all will come. Social progress in these matters means consecrated work, and the end sought for is the greatest good to the greatest number, or, in other words, the common welfare of the whole community.

The constant demand is for better-trained leaders and teachers, more improved methods of instruction, as suggested in the latest works on pedagogy and social ethics, as taught throughout the religious world.

Too often the preacher looks for his model and suggestion in the teachings of antiquity; but the inspiration to the common people which comes when they get together for the common welfare, and for a purpose that reaches all alike, without respect to creed or race distinction, is the need of the present hour.

Present revealments we are all entitled to, if social progress is the aim of the community and if individual effort leads in the honest, efficient search for truth, and the general good of all concerned.

In the new order of things, the world and the church are not so far apart after all, and through the get-together spirit and with the end in view of social progress, association in good works, and individual effort, the powers of man will be aided in their higher unfolding, and the inspiration leading to higher and better achievements will help to complete and bring to all the desired end and aim of all who participate for the loftiest in life's ideals.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

A Belligerent Opponent

When Elder D. C. Clevenger came to Alabama, he preached a doctrine entirely different from any which the people of this community had ever heard.

So great an interest was manifested in Elder Clevenger's discourses that some one evidently became burdened with the idea that these people were being led astray and it was his duty to bring about the exposure of this false teaching. He accordingly sent for what he termed, "The world's champion debater," Mr. I. N. Yandell, a Baptist minister. He was accompanied by a Mr. Roup, also of that church. They were both said to be noted for their ability to tear down and set at naught the doctrines of other churches.

They came to fill the Baptists' regular appointment at this place, and though they seemingly were on a peaceful mission, we knew they had come to expose "Mormonism."

In his discourse that Saturday evening, Mr. Yandell announced that he would thoroughly uproot and bring to light the many base practices of the Latter Day Saint Church. That evening and in his lecture on Sunday, he slandered and vilified that church with every vile and foul word to which he could resort.

I, though I am a Baptist, sent for Elder Clevenger, thinking that Mr. Yandell would exchange scriptures and give him a chance to defend his church.

That Sunday evening Mr. Yandell began services with a continuation of slander, not giving any scriptural quotations at all. When asked by Elder Clevenger to bring forth proofs for what he said, he handed him some more from the same package. Elder Clevenger remarked that no gentleman would talk like that, and Mr. Yandell then proceeded to show us a specimen of his skill in the art of boxing.

Of course he didn't finish his "sermon." The doors were closed, Mr. Yandell was arrested, paid a fine, and withdrew his promise to come back the next appointment to denounce "Mormonism."

Some one of Mr. Yandell's followers had Elder Clevenger arrested. He willingly paid his fine and still retains the respect of all honest-minded people.

WELEETKA, OKLAHOMA.

MISS BLANCH LEE.

Good Religio Methods in Des Moines

The Des Moines Religio has arranged for a series of lectures to be given each month during the year by the best intellect of the city. We feel that we are going to get some very desirable results, so pass the suggestion on to other locals.

Potentially we are the light of the world, but sometimes we keep that light in such obscurity that we are either charged with being clannish or else we are completely unknown. To invite other people to appear on our program occasionally accomplishes a twofold purpose—it gives us an opportunity to come in touch with many worthwhile persons, and incidentally it lets them know who we are and what we are doing. If prejudice exists, it is a very good way to remove it. It pays big dividends to work with other good people.

One month a criminologist lectured on "The value of universal registration of finger prints." This was indeed splendid and something very much out of the ordinary.

This month Mr. Moorehouse, the instructor of astronomy, of Drake University, gave an illustrated lecture on "The heavens through my telescope." His time being limited, and the subject being so large, he could do little more than give us an introduction to the wonders of the heavens, so he invited different groups of the Religio to make reservations for certain nights when the moon is in the right position, to meet him at the observatory, and through his telescope he would show us the many worlds we have not seen with the naked eye. Groups are being planned and are looking forward to this with interest.

Next month Mr. Harvey Ingham, editor of the Register and Tribune, has consented to talk on Indian treaties. Mr. Ingham has given much time and thought to the Indian question and is interested in every phase of it. A year ago when Brother Daniel Macgregor was in the city conducting a campaign, one of the brethren had a long interview with Mr. Ingham on the Book of Mormon. He was keenly interested in the import of its message. When the brother offered to order him a copy he was delightfully surprised, not thinking we would allow a nonmember to read it. So we hope his appearing before us will mean something to him as well as to us.

For the next month Mr. Burton, principal of East High, has accepted an invitation to speak. We trust by his meeting our people and knowing them better that it will be of advantage to us in getting our prominent ministers before the high schools when they are visiting in the city.

Every speaker who has been asked has gladly and graciously responded.

MARGRET DAVIS.

Church Dedication at Tigris, Missouri

Years of effort and sacrifice on the part of the Saints of the Beaver Branch, supplemented by the assistance of friends in the neighborhood, encouragement from the missionaries who have labored in Southern Missouri District, as well as a great deal of practical assistance from all, resulted in the dedication on Sunday, March 5, 1922.

It was about the year 1900 that Elder J. C. Chrestensen located his family near Beaver post office, where there were already a few Saints living, and soon the question of a house in which to hold meetings came up. Of course it was soon determined to build a church. Blanks were prepared and an effort made to raise the necessary funds. This resulted in enough to make a start and some material was brought together.

Soon after this, in 1902, the Beaver Branch was organized with P. W. Premo as president, and the members, who were widely scattered over a large territory, were deeply in earnest in the work. But it was not until 1904 that a building committee was chosen and the original plans for a log building discarded.

The committee set to work getting material for a frame house 24 by 36, by 12 feet high. After many ups and downs the building was in condition to be occupied in the fall of 1913, since which time many of the missionaries have lifted their voices within its walls.

It may seem to the reader that we were a slow group of workers, but it was early decided that we would not go in debt on the building. So by adhering to that decision we were only able to proceed as our finances permitted and finally able to present the building to God.

Responding to a call from the resident membership, Elder Lee Quick, district supervisor, came on February 28 and held a series of meetings, Elder A. V. Closson being associated with him.

On Sunday, March 5, we had an all-day meeting. The dedication service was in the afternoon. Elder J. C. Chrestensen led in prayer, sermon by Lee Quick. Brief history of the branch and building, including approximate cost in cash outlay of $500 and much labor and sacrifice, with an expression of thanks to all, both far and near, who have assisted directly or indirectly in the work, was given by Benjamin Pearson, branch president. Dedicatory prayer by A. V. Closson. Special song service for the occasion, some numbers being rendered by nonmembers. The meetings were continued over the following Sunday, and we hope that the word spoken found favorable lodgment in honest minds. The Saints have cause to rejoice, for their one-time hope is now realized. May the love of God always prevail in the house.

BENJAMIN PEARSON.

From the Isle of Pines

Extracts from a letter to the First Presidency from John A. Fisher; in which he rejoices over progress made.

It is now about four years since we wrote you concerning a missionary for this place, and things did not look very encouraging for a time, as we were so isolated and a suitable man did not seem to be so easy to find. It is now almost two years since Brother Tordoff and family arrived here, and how different it has seemed to live here since we have the help and fellowship of brothers and sisters. It seemed we could do nothing much by ourselves, having no ordained help. But since Brother Tordoff is here he has held services constantly and at many different points. Attendance and interest have gradually increased, and let me say that I think you sent the right man to this place. With his kindly, congenial way, he has won his way into the hearts of even those who at one time seemed to be enemies to the cause.

Elder Tordoff has also opened up a field of labor on the Cayman Islands where great interest has been awakened and many souls are being gathered into the fold.

The work down here is really more than one man can handle, and though I have been called into the ministry, I feel that I can do but very little compared with what there is to do. At present Elder Tordoff and family are at the Cayman Islands appointment, so we are holding the fort as best we can, and indeed we are having some very good, spiritual times. On Sunday afternoon we have Sunday school; in the evening preaching or prayer meeting. Wednesday evening we have prayer meeting, and Friday evening our woman's auxiliary. Sister Pender is giving us lectures on food and the body which are proving very interesting. We have also opened up a day school with Sister Pender as our teacher, giving lessons in both Spanish and English.

We do indeed appreciate the great effort that the church has put forth to sustain a mission here, and we sincerely hope that the day may never come that Brother Tordoff and family will be taken away from us. We now number twenty-one Saints and I don't know just how many there are on the Cayman Islands. But we are looking forward to a prosperous year in the mission work.

As we look back over the past few years on the island we can indeed say that God has blessed us in our efforts, even though we have had so much opposition to contend with. Our Sunday school and prayer meetings are attended by about from thirty to forty, and preaching services more, especially Spanish-speaking folks who seem to be fine people, and I believe that if we had a good, interesting man who could speak Spanish fluently, he could accomplish much among the Cuban people.

We do hope and pray that this will be a successful year in the history of the church and that much will be accomplished towards the building up of Zion. We are all very much interested, and as soon as we can will help along the good work.

Kansas City Stake

The awakening at Chelsea. The Chelsea Saints are located in a community of very conservative people. Heretofore they have seemed quiet indifferent to the appeal that has been made upon the part of our ministry who have labored there. They are in a community of churches. Our work was established there some thirty years ago, and while there has been a permanent growth in the congregation, it may safely be said that it has been mostly from children baptized and the additions of those who were already members coming from other parts. Of course there were a few adults baptized during this time. They worship in a very good building of their own. Several series of special meetings have been held there without any appreciable result. This does not say that the labor of all these years has been in vain. It was the preparation for better things to come. Just recently there has been a change in all this. During the five weeks' special meetings conducted by Stake Missionary Amos T. Higdon, commencing February 26 and ending April 30, there has been an attendance of from fifteen to thirty nonmembers at each service. The interest upon the part of these nonmembers demanded continuing the length of time above stated. Needless to say, our own people have heeded the call for service and have rendered noble assistance. The music was in charge of Stake Chorister Bernice Griffith and consisted of congregational singing supported by the local choir and orchestra. Special numbers were rendered by the vocalists of the stake. Outside of the preliminary house-to-house canvass prior to the beginning of the meetings, no advertising was done. It was not needed. The people wanted to hear more. The missionary was called to the homes of the various nonmembers where a fireside round table was conducted, which was helpful. There no doubt is a potentiality in subjects announced and spoken upon in the meetings. Brother Higdon has the faculty of sticking pretty close to his text, speaking to it rather than away from it, as is the fault of many.

The subjects discussed were: "Workers together with God," "Investigators," "Preexistence of man," "Privileges and responsibilities," "Personality of God," "Unchangeability of God," "The gospel," "Revelation," "Faith," "Repentance," "Baptisms," "Laying on of hands," "Resurrection," "Eternal judgment," "Church of Christ," "Utah Mormonism exposed," "Joseph Smith not the author of polygamy," "Authority," "Apostasy," "Succession and church presidency," "Prophetic mission of Joseph Smith," "Purposes of revelation," "Everlasting and eternal punishment," "The Book of Mormon," "Errors of Utah Mormonism," "What must I do to be saved?" "Signs of the second coming of Christ," "Last great war," "One thousand years of peace," "The Sabbath," "Angelic administration," "Continuation of apostolic and prophetic office."

So far there have been four baptized. Our work is much better understood now by a larger per cent of people. Splendid interest and attendance at the second church follows the special meetings held there during the early part of the year. An enrollment of one hundred and twenty in the Sunday school and fifty in the Religio shows that the young people are working hard. Brother Losey was recently placed in charge of the choir, and as a result the local singers show good interest. Heretofore it has seemed difficult to organize the talent so that it would show loyalty to the work of this department.

Those in charge of the young people's meetings at the Central Church from the 6th to the 16th of April, desire to announce that while it is especially for those between the ages of eight and thirty-five years, yet where one's wife or husband is above that age they are invited. Likewise where one's companion is older than thirty-five years who is a non-member he is also invited. All are asked to join the force of workers to make the meetings a signal success.

J. W. Rushton was the speaker at 7.45 at Central Church Sunday evening.

First Saint Joseph, Missouri

Winfield Salisbury, president of our Religio, has been off duty for two weeks from internal injuries due to a collision with a motor truck. He is improving rapidly, and solaces himself by listening to the news and the Independence sermons by means of his homemade radio telephone.

R. S. Salyards provided another treat for Saint Joseph people last Sunday by bringing Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths out from Independence. Apostle Griffiths made an interesting address at the close of the sacrament meeting and in the evening preached a good old-fashioned sermon to a large audience. All were glad to see him.

Because the HERALD went to press so early last week we were not enabled to report the week-end happenings, consequently will need to go back another week to catch up.

The past week has been Baby Week, beginning with a sermon the evening of the 2d by Elder A. Max Carmichael, and continuing throughout the week. It was under the auspices of the Women's Department, cradle roll department, Mrs. H. B. Roberts, general cradle roll superintendent for the department, and Mrs. H. R. Halley, superintendent of cradle roll department in Zion, immediately in charge. The music was in charge of Mrs. H. W. Harder; nursery in charge of Mrs. D. F. Waits. There were excellent lectures by Doctors G. L. Harrington and H. E. Shorer, Mrs. B. E. George, R. N., and Dora Glines. The exhibit was educational and the programs entire, inspirational and worth while. There was a surprise element in a little playlet by Sister Halley, entitled "Mimic mothers." Many of the stores about the city decorated their windows appropriately for the occasion.

Easter will be observed generally at the churches in Zion by devoting the evening to cantatas by the choirs. The Stone Church choir will sing, "The seven last words of Christ"; Second Independence choir will render "My Redeemer"; Walnut Park "The disciple," by the young people's choir, North Liberty has already given a cantata on last Sunday and Monday evenings, entitled "Esther." These various services will begin at 7.30, and those planning to attend must go early.

The Stone Church Religio program next Friday evening will be a rendition of "A hundred years of Latter Day Saintism," the pageant which appeared in Autumn Leaves, by Margret Davis. This is the Religio's contribution to the celebration of April 6.

A unique service was held in the Stone Church on the afternoon of April 2, in honor of the date on which the church was organized, April 6. It was arranged and conducted by Walter W. Smith, Church Historian.

All who had been in the church for fifty years were seated on the platform, and there must have been fifty thus honored. Among the number we noted the following: E. L. Kelley, W. H. Garret, Brother and Sister I. N. White, Ellis Short, W. D. Bullard, Charles E. Blair, Sister Ella D. Whitehead, Mrs. David H. Smith (mother of Elbert A. Smith), Sister Emslie Curtis, Mrs. Fred Hanson, (mother of Paul M. Hanson), Emery Downey. Brother Charles Blair is the only surviving member of the church present at the jubilee celebration here in 1910, who was at the Amboy conference in 1860. U. A. Austin was ascertained to be the oldest ordained man in the audience, having been baptized into this church in 1861, and ordained a priest in 1864.

Brother Walter W. Smith had said he desired five hundred testimonies at the meeting, so he worked out a way to secure them. He asked all those who had had angelic visitations to arise. Perhaps twenty-five arose. Then all who had received an open vision were asked to arise, and as a result probably a hundred arose. Likewise those who had operated under the direction of the Spirit of prophecy, in unknown tongues, who had received the voice of the Spirit in a direct way, and who had had inspired dreams were asked to manifest it. A multitude expressed themselves as having enjoyed the latter privilege, with a considerable number in the others.

In response to the question as to who had been baptized at the age of eight years, not a large number responded—not nearly as many as would respond in a similar service fifty years hence, as the chairman remarked.

A prayer of thanksgiving was offered by Elbert A. Smith, and testimonies offered by A. B. Phillips, representing the seventies, Paul M. Hanson, representing the Twelve, Elbert A. Smith the First Presidency. These were personal testimonies in which the power of God was manifested in their lives in a distinctive and momentous manner. The songs used were numbers 158, 190, 120, 355 in the Hymnal. The entire service, of which this is but a suggestion, was fitting and effective.

At the quarterly business meeting in Zion on the evening of April 3 the report of the pastor showed that 225 men were under appointment in 38 groups. (Through an error in a previous item this number was reported incorrectly.) The present membership is 4,119. A committee was chosen, consisting of the pastors of the various churches in Zion, to select a list of delegates for the coming General Conference and report back to the July meeting. The following ordinations were indorsed and effected on the following Sunday, at the various churches represented: James Bunt, elder, Stone Church; Laurie V. Aldridge, elder Enoch Hill; Charles Joice, teacher, Second Independence; Charles A. Binger, deacon, Second Independence; Ellis Murdock, deacon, Second Independence; Walter Chapman, deacon, Stone Church.

A bishop's court recommended disfellowship in the case of Evelyn Ashbaugh and excommunication in the case of John G. Clark.

Several meetings of the heads of various departments in the church were held here on Sunday, the 9th. Those in the meeting were F. M. Smith, G. N. Briggs, Audentia Anderson, A. Max Carmichael, T. W. Williams, F. M. McDowell, Lonzo Jones. Matters of coordinate interest was discussed at length with good results.

The speaker at the Stone Church Sunday evening, the 9th, was Judge E. E. Porterfield, of the juvenile court of Kansas City, on "Citizenship building among our boys and girls." In the morning, Elder Lonzo Jones, in charge of the class in religious education at Graeland College, was the speaker.

The radio sermons continue to go out each Sunday evening from the Central Radio Company station, Kansas City. A week ago the speaker was T. W. Williams, on the 9th E. D. Moore. Those desiring to tune in should do so at 8 p. m. at 360 meters.

A considerable number attended the services at the Central Church in Kansas City Sunday evening, and reported that the building was overtaxed in caring for the large audience. Elder F. M. McDowell is the preacher in the series of young people's meetings in progress from the 6th to the 16th.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium during the week ending April 1: Mrs. Amelia Burton, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Mae Houserman, Topeka, Kansas; Mrs. Dora Busby, Berryville, Arkansas; Mrs. Elizabeth Walters, Eldorado Springs, Missouri; and the following from Independence: Myron Fligg, Mrs. Gladys Hamilton, Mrs. Mary Cox Russell, Mr. G. W. Nesbitt, Miss Carrie Russell, Mr. William Amick, Mr. Harry Carr, Mrs. Jewel McDougal, Mrs. Evelyn Gibson, Miss Olive Booker, Mrs. Blanche Armstrong, Mrs. Madge Thatcher, Mrs. Jesse Hess, and Mrs. E. D. Moore. X-ray patients: Baby Melvin Hugill, Blue Springs, Missouri; Mrs. A. A. Hughes, Hardin, Missouri; Mrs. George F. Hanson, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Ray Reinking, Greenwood, Missouri; and J. C. Sexton, Doctor J. C. Hickerson, Mrs. Eben Miller; also Baby Virginia Hodges of Independence.

The following patients entered the Sanitarium during the week ending April 8; Mrs. L. L. Barnett and Baby Barnett, Kincaid, Kansas; Mrs. W. A. Grenawalt and Ruth Grenawalt, Lamoni, Iowa; and the following from Independence:

Miss Bernice Fleeger, Mrs. Iva Roberts, Miss Myrtle Grapes, Mr. Frank Bush, Mrs. Evelyn Gibson and Baby Gibson, Miss Elizabeth Logsdon, S. A. White, Walter F. McCallan, and Mrs. Eben Miller. X-ray patients: Miss Anna Cinnamon, Roy F. Ethington, Mrs. A. E. Nunn, and Mrs. Jessie Hess, all of Independence.

Church at Manteno Wrecked in Blast

This letter is to inform you regarding an atrocious act committed against the church property at Deselm, Illinois, Wednesday morning about 3 a. m., whereby our beautiful new church building which we had occupied only five months was totally destroyed by a bomb or other high explosive.

Entrance was gained by cutting the screen on basement window and the charge was placed in basement, which wrecked the furnace, burst every window and door out, and threw debris for ten rods.

Nearly every floor joist was broken and the double floor, partitions, and walls all heaved out of place. The edifice is a total wreck.

This was the fourth attack made upon the church property, the first one being October 20, 1920, when our new building at that time nearly completed was burned, the fire being of incendiary origin. The next an attack on our present building early Sunday morning September 4, 1921, upon the date set for formal opening, when the building was entered by a mob and desecrated by smashing up the furniture, organ, and windows, and throwing tar over furniture, walls, and floors.

Again, early in the morning of November 29 an attempt was made to burn this building, when it was miraculously protected. Sister Augusta Sheffler, who lives about twenty rods from church, was shown in a dream that the church was afire. She sprang from her bed, ran to the window, and saw the fire just starting. She aroused her husband, called by phone other Saints and friends, and the fire was extinguished without any particular damage.

Our Saints here are in the faith, as evidenced by their testimonies last evening. They are determined to push forward, feeling confident of final victory.

The county papers have given us a fair deal in their write-ups, and justice-loving people are forced to take a stand for the right as they have not done before.

We are not without a meeting place, as Mr. O. C. Sheffler at once offered us the use of his hall which we formerly occupied, so our regular meetings will continue as usual.

Our special services planned for Easter, including basket dinner, will be held in the hall.

We express our thanks to the Saints far and wide for their interest and prayers and ask them to continue in our behalf.

We remain in the faith,

EARL D. ROGERS, Branch President.

MANTENO, ILLINOIS.

Hutchinson, Kansas

We are glad to announce that since our branch organization last November to the present date we have made some advancement.

The splendid system of financing our branch as advanced by the branch clerk, E. P. Sanders, of each wage earner contributing one day's salary out of each month to branch expenses keeps our treasury in fair condition.

We have established a regular midweek prayer service which is well attended and very active, which proves to us that the Saints are earnest in their efforts and fully determined to build the branch, spiritually as well as numerically. Our regular Sunday evening preaching services are well attended by nonmembers, and at the present time we have some outsiders practicing the songs in Zion's Praises, preparing to help us with the music.

A teacher training class of fair size has been organized with a good attendance, including a nonmember of the church. We have real, live priesthood meetings once a month, and a definite line of study is pursued.

We have effected an opening at the State Reformatory and have preached twice this month at that place to about three hundred men and boys. We expect to make this a permanent appointment and feel sure that it is a fine opportunity to tell others of the gospel. The Master has very graciously blessed us in the preaching of the word, which has caused some to become quite interested and for which we desire to thank Him.

We are doing all within our power to have the reunion here this fall, which thing would be a very great help to the work. However, if this cannot be done we expect to put on a special campaign and series of gospel services, so we feel quite sure that this coming summer will mark some advancement in our little branch.

Regular services are held every Sunday, including Sunday school, two preaching services, teacher training class, and choir practice; and in addition to these services we have Wednesday evening social service, priesthood meetings, and our appointment at the Reformatory.

The Hutchinson Branch is coming to the front, and if there are any of our people living in or near here we desire to get in touch with them and give them an opportunity to assist us in spreading the gospel here. R. J. WILDEY.

Central Chicago

Sunday, February 19, three children were baptized. They have come into the fold by the way of Sunday school. We rejoice to see the Sunday school pupils show their eagerness for further development.

Our sacramental service on the first Sunday of the month was well attended, and those present were certainly made to rejoice. Brother Keir spoke by the Spirit, calling several to service and admonishing others to prepare themselves. He spoke to the young women of the branch, telling them God recognized their true, earnest service and encouraging them to continue in faithfulness. J. C. Oliver was called to office of teacher, Gene Keir to office of priest, and Arthur Sherman to office of deacon.

Our Sunday school auto race enthusiasm still runs high, with the young men's class in the lead, young ladies' class and girls' intermediate class close seconds.

Brother Rowe, who was on his way to Independence, stopped over with us on March 19 and occupied at the evening service. His sermon was very interesting and educational, on the subject, "Charity." HATTIE K. BELL.

Sarnia, Ontario

We are making steady progress. We have built a nice little church. This was quite a big undertaking as we were few in number and not any too much laden with this world's goods. This meant a big responsibility on the part of each, but God has blessed us and still is. The different auxiliaries are doing their bit and we are looking forward to the time when we can have our church dedicated.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Some five years ago Elder James Phillips and some more of the old-timers from Warton came here, and with the few who were already here, made a determined effort to get the gospel before Sarnia. As it was a united pull and a strong pull, something had to happen, and it did. Although slow it was sure, and to-day we have our church which was opened January 9, 1921. We have a good number of officers, including three elders, four priests, two teachers, and three deacons, also quite a large membership of respected Saints.

Our young people have a club. Brother Stanley Phillips is president of Religio. The Women's Department is doing a great work. We have to give a large share of credit for the help received in paying for the church to them.

We have had to meet persecution, and at the present time are getting a terrible flailing by a Toronto paper called Jack Canuck. His remarks are very hard to take as they are so unjust. He has mixed us with the Salt Lake people and refuses to make any distinction.

Among the worthy missionaries who have labored with us are R. D. Weaver, C. M. Clifford, and John Grice. We, who hail from the north, still have fond remembrances of some of the missionaries and hope they will sometime make us a visit, namely, W. D. Ellis, George Tomlinson, Daniel Macgregor, Joseph Thompson, and James Pycok.

MRS. IDA BURLEY.

RICH HILL, MISSOURI, March 17, 1922.

Editors Herald: For the past month I have been trying to render service to the Saints of Fort Scott, Mapleton, and Rich Hill by preaching and otherwise, but the weather condition has given us snow, rain, and mud, so that my efforts have been greatly hindered. I have preached six sermons here in the past week, three of them as follows: "The Book of Mormon story," "What the Bible and Book of Mormon say about America," and "What the Book of Mormon teaches," the members and nonmembers seemed to be more interested in those subjects than in a regular gospel sermon.

This is an old camping ground for many of our faithful missionaries, some who have gone on to their reward and their names are spoken in honor: among some of the names that I hear mentioned are Alexander Smith, Joseph Luff, T. W. Smith, I. N. White, J. C. Foss, H. H. Robinson, John Kaler, and others.

Many of the faithful Saints who lived here have passed on to the other side. I preached the sermon when old Sister Nancy Burcham was laid to rest from her cares. "Uncle" Tom O'Neal is patiently awaiting the summons. A cancer is slowly but surely eating away his life. He will be remembered by the oldtime missionaries. He still loves the gospel and is dying in the faith that he accepted many years ago.

EDWARD RANNIE.

Brother and Sister Elias Hayer, of the Mission Branch, near Seneca, Illinois, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on March 19 by inviting in neighbors and friends. They have lived in that community all those years and on the same farm.

Elder J. M. Terry writes from Seattle, Washington, to the First Presidency: "I am glad indeed to report to you a very successful visit to Vancouver to finish the work of organizing the branch. I can say in a few words that the meeting was very peaceful and the spirit of peace prevailed. I spoke to them morning and evening with good liberty and to their joy. One remarked at the close of the last service, 'The end of a perfect day.' Brother Isaac McMullen was chosen almost unanimously as president."

Notice of Release

Notice is hereby given that because of continued illness and consequent impairment, R. B. Trowbridge has been released as Church Auditor. His release is based upon unanimous action had by the joint council of Presidency and Twelve.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 27, 1922.

The Bishopric

Agent's Notice

To the Saints of the Southern Missouri District: As your bishop's agent I solicit your cooperation in the Lord's work in paying your tithing, and offering. I am of no service to you or to the church as Bishop's agent if you hold your tithing and do not give that part to the Lord which he requires. That is one tenth of your increase. You own only nine tenths of your increase and the remaining one tenth belongs to the Lord. Malachi 4 says, "Will a man rob God? . . . Wherein have ye robbed me?" The answer is, in tithes and offerings.

Dear Saints, we do not want to be of that class to rob God and hinder the progress of his good work. We see that some of the missionaries are being taken from the field because of failure of some in paying their tithing and offerings. I hope and pray that you will cooperate with me in this work and hold up old Southern Missouri, that she may not be a back number. I am able to receipt you for all tithing and offerings that you may send in.

GEORGE A. DAVIS, Bishop's Agent.

Department of Music

This is official notification of the appointment, with the approval of the First Presidency, of Brother J. W. Gilbert, of

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Tulsa, Oklahoma, as chorister of the Central Oklahoma District. For him we urge the loyal and earnest support of all the musical workers of this district.

ALBERT N. HOXIE, General Director.

ARTHUR H. MILLS, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 4, 1922.

Correction

In the report of the Holden stake conference, appearing on page 316 of the HERALD for March 22, the 11th line, occurs an error. The complete sentence would read: "Stake musical director was given charge of all music and song service of the conference. A motion was adopted," etc.

Conference Notices

New York, at Niagara Falls, June 3, 4. Business session Saturday at 2.30 p. m. Saturday evening will be devoted to Religio and Sunday school work. A good program is arranged. G. W. Robley, president; Anna M. Lloyd, secretary, 36 Tremont Avenue, Buffalo, New York.

Convention Notices

Detroit Sunday School, at Pontiac, Michigan, April 7. First session at 10 a. m. Daisy Bannister, secretary, 4032 Brooklyn Avenue, Detroit, Michigan.

Reunion Notices

Eastern Colorado, Colorado Springs, Colorado, August 19 to September 3. District conference August 26 and 27. R. S. Salyards, jr., for the committee.

Toronto, at Lowbanks, Ontario, July 29 to August 14. Full particulars later. J. L. Prentice, secretary.

Wants to Help

Sister E. A. H. Gutzman, Adin, California, requests again that if those who have quilt scraps will mail them to her, she will piece quilt tops for the church institutions. She has received three lots in response to her other request. Two other sisters wrote, to whom she replied, but has heard nothing further. If they still have the scraps, she would be glad to get them.

Requests for Prayers

A sister requests that the Saints unite their faith and prayers in behalf of her son, who is afflicted.

Sister T. D. Collins, of Mapleton, Iowa, who is isolated, requests the prayers of the Saints.

Conference Minutes

IDAHO.—At Rupert, Idaho, March 4, 5, with R. C. Chambers and Earl F. Hoisington presiding, Boise, Hagerman, and Rupert Branches reported. R. C. Chambers, L. G. Holloway, M. A. Etzenhouser, W. P. Bootman, and A. J. Layland were elected delegates to the next General Conference. A resolution was adopted and a committee appointed to compile all resolutions and acts now binding, passed by the conferences of this district, for publication and report to next conference. The Sunday School Department adopted a resolution requesting the local schools to raise funds to establish a district circulating library. The Rupert school gave a very interesting program Friday evening. Sacramental service, 10.45 a. m. Sunday. Preaching by M. A. Etzenhouser and William Glauner. The conference occupied the new church just completed by the Rupert Saints for which accomplishment they are to be commended. Adjourned subject to call of district presidency. R. C. Chambers, president.

Our Departed Ones

JARRAD.—Rachel Susana Campbell was born April 5, 1852, in Chickasaw County, Iowa. Married Edward Trask in her early youth. Moved to Nebraska that fall. This husband and two sons preceded her, a daughter survives. Later married James Wakelin who died leaving one son. Married David Jarrad, who died in 1901. Baptized in 1894. Died March 4, 1922. Leaves a daughter and son, aged mother, seven sisters, four brothers, eight grandchildren, and other relatives. Sermon by E. E. Long. Interment in Fairfield Cemetery.

Thirty-five Years an Apostle

Brother Gomer T. Griffiths was ordained April 13, 1887.

On the 12th day of this month a significant ceremony was arranged during one of the sessions of the Quorum of Twelve. The office secretary, P. M. Hanson, called attention to the fact that this year, President of the Quorum G. T. Griffiths celebrated the thirty-fifth anniversary of his ordination as an apostle, and suggested that the event be noticed in a formal manner, and some gift which would typify our regard be purchased.

By motion, Brethren U. W. Greene and J. W. Rushton were selected as a committee to purchase the gift in commemoration of this event.

During the session of the 13th, the secretary requested the privilege of interrupting the business at this time in order to present the congratulations of the Apostolic Quorum to the president, G. T. Griffiths, who this year celebrated his thirty-fifth anniversary as a member, and to present a token of affection and esteem which had been secured in harmony with the wishes of the brethren.

In the course of a brief speech, mention was made of the fact that probably no minister of the church to-day was so well known for good and faithful service in the ministry of this church of Jesus Christ as our brother whom we were honoring to-day. As an apostle, he had borne witness of Jesus Christ in many foreign lands and in various parts of the United States and Canada. His ministry commenced when hardships were the common lot of the missionaries of this church; opprobrium and scandal were the handmaidens who waited upon the footsteps of the pioneers, making discomfort, enmity, and distress the daily experience. While our brother started handicapped because of a lack in many ways of equipment considered essential to success, yet he cheerfully and courageously met the situation. Throughout the church he has ministered by his wisdom, advice, executive ability, and influential preaching. He has proven that "God may choose the weak things of this earth to confound the wise and mighty," and has shown a humble and willing disposition and a faith which cannot be daunted.

Through all sorts of experiences in the sacrifice of loved ones at home, in almost constant voluntary exile from things and people held dear, his ministry has been enriched by manifestations of divine grace, and now in the autumn of his experiences, his reminiscences are an unfailing means of comfort, encouragement, and strengthening to the younger men, who, while moving out under somewhat better conditions, nevertheless need a foundation of personal association with God, such as characterizes our well-known and beloved brother.

The present which has been selected to symbolize the affection and esteem which generated this little ceremony, is this gold ring, beautifully engraved, containing on the panel his monogram "G" in Old English, and on the inside of the ring the date "1887-1922, from The Quorum of Twelve." May this ring to Brother Griffiths be the symbol of unbroken friendship, of undying affection, and of an esteem that shall not end. May it please God to bless, sustain, and comfort you through the remainder of your long ministry, so that your life may have fitting close in the spirit of apostolic service, with which it has been characterized for these thirty-five years.

In receiving the gift, Brother Griffiths was deeply moved, and expressed his thanks for the kindness shown in a few words of heartfelt appreciation. He took the liberty of reviewing the history of the quorum since his entrance into it, and gave a synopsis of the characteristics of the men who had been associated with him in the work from that time until now; particularly of those who had passed on to their rest and reward, after the burden and heat of the day had been borne.

It is intended that this review will be transcribed and prepared for publication in the near future.

During this little ceremony, President Elbert A. Smith was present, and at his request shared in the gift, and also Bishop B. R. McGuire came to give his congratulations.

Such an experience illustrates the fact that while men in official capacity may carry heavy executive burdens, under pressure of the heavy problems fronting the church, they still manifest the brotherly love which should always characterize the children and servants of God.

Prohibitions of the Broad Way

The Master, in a parable, presented two pathways of life, the narrow way with the strait gate, the broad way with the wide gate that leadeth to destruction.

If one would walk in the narrow way, it means personal restriction; it means that certain things will be prohibited or inhibited. It means self-denial; that is, it means that the desires of the flesh must be curtailed, whether it be for food or drink or for other pleasures of the flesh, in order that the mental and spiritual powers may develop and be established.

The facts of this self-denial have been emphasized over and over again. The fact that it requires sacrifice is set forth time and again. The fact of the various prohibitions involved have been reiterated, but the reward is commensurate. For present self-denial, we receive a future reward much greater than the denial of present pleasures.

But in this ascribing prohibition only to the narrow way, have we not rather misrepresented the facts? The pathway of right is not the only one that involves prohibition. He who walks in the broad way may go with the thoughtless crowd. He may give way to every fleshly desire of the eye and ear and palate. He may not restrain himself from strong drink and tobacco nor from the milder narcotics of tea and coffee; he may not restrain himself from becoming a gourmand of the table. He may not restrain himself from thoughts and acts which conduce to the passing pleasures of the flesh. But while he is not prohibiting any such desires as these, the walking in the broad way does absolutely prohibit other pleasures.

The higher nature of man cannot function except as the lower appetites are inhibited and hence our desires sublimated. The one who follows the broad way soon finds that good music is prohibited him. He may hear, but he cannot enjoy it. He is at liberty to enjoy syncopated music, but the best becomes a closed book. He may feel himself free for ribald verse, but the masterpieces of poetry soon lose their appeal. He may attend the theater and feel himself free in a revue, but soon finds himself unable to appreciate the finest operas and plays. His course of life prohibits enjoyment of the best.

He who pursues the way of pleasure soon finds himself blasé. No longer can even these pleasures of the flesh satisfy. He finds himself shut out from his ablest performance. The intellectual joy of consistent study is soon lost, and then becomes practically impossible. He is barred, prohibited if you choose, from the higher intellectual, to say nothing of the spiritual life.

Something of this is presented in Doctrine and Covenants 42:7, where it says of those who commit a certain sin, "He shall not have the Spirit."

There are prohibitions no matter which pathway we follow. No matter which way we go, we are cut off from certain other pleasures. It is a matter of choice, that which is most worth while in the eternal now as well as in the eternity to come. We have sixty seconds in every minute and sixty minutes to every hour. We come to the counter of life. What shall we buy?

We can buy the jewels of eternity, the "pearl of great price," or we can buy glittering glass that sparkles for a little season. No matter which we buy, we pay the same price. We are prohibited, if we buy the one, from securing the other. It is not, then, a matter of prohibition, but of choice. Which way shall we go?

Ideals of the Young

A careful reading of the literature of the past will show for several generations those older in years fearing what will happen to the young. On the other hand, the young people have been, and even are, quite flippant towards the experience of those who have found wisdom through years of experience.

In the midst of the discussion of to-day, it is rather interesting to note the summary published in The Outlook, by William I. Engle, of a questionnaire submitted to the four classes in the high school in Binghamton, New York. These included one thousand boys and girls, some of whose genealogy leads back to the Mayflower, some the children of immigrants, the children of rich as well as poor; country children as well as boys and girls of the city.

The first question was to name the man or woman in history nearest the ideal. About one half the boys answered Abraham Lincoln, one fifth of the girls, Florence Nightingale. Second among the choice of boys was Theodore Roosevelt, and with the girls, Alice Freeman Palmer. With both, the third largest number was mother.

The second question, "Will you marry for money, position, or love?" nine hundred ninety-two answered love, from "plain love" to "absolute," "true," and "reciprocated" love. Six thought they might marry for money, and two for position.

"What do you consider your finest achievement?" brought forth a great diversity of ideals, but standing above others was that of helping others, and next in rank was thrift; third, prowess in school work; and fourth, in music and writing.

The answers to the question, "What would you do with $5,000 if you had it?" were, three times out of four, "I would invest it." Second in order was a college education, then help the family, and travel. But these latter two were only about half as numerous as those whose ideal would be further education. Higher college education was named less than half as often as investment.

"Is the woman's place in the home, or in business and the professions?" was answered in the old-fashioned way of home, nine times out of ten.

"Should young women enter men's field of work?" was answered by the girls that they should have that privilege, to which one third of the boys agreed; both, however, adding the limit that the women be unmarried and forced to work for a living.

Favorite amusements were athletics, reading, music, and dancing as the form of recreation from which they secured the most benefit and pleasure. It was the heavy vote of the girls that brought dancing up among the leaders. But in all classes reading and music were second and third choice and well ahead of the dance, motion pictures, vaudeville, or drama.
