"I hope what I have said will give an idea of the value of this new musical movement, for it seems to me essentially new. The lads who were given individual instruction showed extraordinary aptitude in learning the fine points of playing the instrument as well as a certain amount of general musical teaching such as scale construction, dynamics, and melodic construction. We expect to try to influence the boys to take up the study of orchestral instruments, and our local contest created such enthusiasm not only among the boys, but generally in the community, that we plan a national contest.

Doctor Blackmar Pleased With Mr. Hoxie's Visit

Doctor Frank W. Blackmar, professor of Sociology, University of Kansas, makes the following remarks concerning the visit of Albert N. Hoxie, general church chorister, to Lawrence, Kansas:

"Mr. Albert N. Hoxie gave a pleasing and profitable talk on music as a means of solving the modern boy problem, before the members of the Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club, and the Kiwanis Club at their noonday luncheon at Lawrence, June 19.

"Also he led the assemblage in community singing which was a real 'songfest.'

"In the afternoon he spoke before the summer session students at the University of Kansas, many of whom are teachers. His talk was very helpful to them in solving their educational community problems.

"Mr. Hoxie has a strong, pleasing personality which admirably fits him for leadership. All who heard or met him were pleased with him and his work."

Young Women's Supervisor Resigns

Miss Addie Belle Chappell, young women's supervisor, has resigned on account of ill health. After having completed a teachers' course at Graceland College, Miss Chappell will now go west and hopes to be able to resume her teaching later in the year.

Miss Blanche Edwards, now in Lamoni, Iowa, will receive all future correspondence for the young women's organizations of the church.

Young People's Convention at Flint

The young people's organization of the Detroit District held its first convention at Orion Lake, June 23 and 24, under the auspices of the Department of Recreation and Expression.

Saturday night, June 23, was given over to a program. One interesting feature was a playlet given by the Pontiac Saints.

Sunday morning Sunday school was held at 9 o'clock in charge of local officers and a prayer service at 10 in charge of District President Kenneth Green, Lloyd Haviland, and Dewey McNamara of Independence, Missouri. An admonition was given the Saints to be faithful and to the priesthood to qualify for the work before them.

In the afternoon Ellis Whitehead gave a report of the Young People's Convention at Lamoni. Virginia Budd, of Independence, told us about the experimental church school conducted by Superintendent A. Max Carmichael at Lamoni during the convention.

At 4 o'clock Elder Charles Mottashed, of Detroit, spoke on the subject, "Training for efficiency." He tried to impress the necessity of taking advantage of opportunities to prepare for service in the church.

The evening service consisted of sermonets by Floyd Horton and Allen Pohley, of Flint, on "Preparation for the work before us."

The convention was well attended and we are looking forward to one in the fall.

SILAS C. ROBERTSON, Secretary.

Battleford, Saskatchewan

Elder James Cornish of Artland visited here last fall, and we have just received word that he and his father, J. J. Cornish, are on their way to pay us another visit.

Last year I opened up the work some twelve miles from our branch where a lively interest was created, but owing to the pressing work on my farm I could not meet the demand. We are in hopes that Brother J. J. Cornish can give us the help needed at this time, for I am sure that some will soon come into the fold.

I noticed in the last HERALD that Apostle John W. Rushton intends to come to western Canada for the summer and fall. We hope he will not overlook this part if it is at all possible to pay us a visit.

Although our Sunday school superintendent has moved away, the work is being carried on very satisfactorily by Brother Carl Zach, who is assistant superintendent.

On Wednesday, June 13, the Saints were invited by Brother and Sister C. A. Hammond to attend the marriage of their daughter Catherine to Mr. Wesley McAdams. The couple will reside in this vicinity.

ALBERT H. TOMLINSON.

San Bernardino, California

George H. Wixom is back in San Bernardino, California, and was very well received by not only the Saints there but also the public. The San Bernardino Daily Sun gave over a column to his recent sermon. Brother Wixom was formerly mayor of San Bernardino.

Independence

The quarterly conference of Zion was opened Monday evening, July 2, at the Stone Church.

The Presidency reported that the Walnut Park Church is almost completed and that Englewood is seriously in need of a church building. The Bishopric also reported on the same items.

It was announced that Paul Craig has taken charge of the Stone Church choir, which will permit Harold Burgess, former chorister, to spend his time in general and stake work.

The purchase of the Swope property for recreation and expression and for the Institute was also announced.

A. L. Sanford has resigned as Sunday school superintendent and C. B. Hartshorn succeeds him.

After the usual reports from the priesthood, the bishop gave a summarized report for the past six months. A shortage in the building fund and an overdraft of the Stone Church were noted. Report on the heating system also was made. The present furnaces are badly decayed and a new heating system is necessary. The vapor heating system would cost about $8,500, and the hot blast could be installed for about $3,000.

A gain of 121, lost 48, net gain of 73 for the quarter was reported by the statistician's office. The pastor's office has succeeded in locating about 700 of the 1,300 unknown members. The present known membership is now something over 4,000 while we are still carrying about 600 unknown.

The following names were presented for ordination, and upon the acceptance of the brethren were approved by the conference: priest, Alma E. Campbell, Reed Gordon, J. Alfred Curtis, Heman Davis; teacher, Frank Redfield, John H. Miller; deacon, Levi Burroughs.

Nominations for delegates to the General Conference were next in order. The rule obtained that the names should be written and ballot presented, also that no person should nominate more than two. As a result about 160 were nominated.

The resolution presented at the local conference in Independence on May 14, and deferred to the July conference was adopted. It provides that local congregations in Zion may assemble in business capacity to formulate reports to the conference in Zion upon questions of local interest.

A recital was given in the Stone Church Tuesday evening, July 10, at 8 o'clock, by the vocal students of Mrs. David Grosch. A beautiful program was rendered by these talented and well-trained singers. A representative group from Independence consisting of several members of the church took part.

The Sunday services in Zion were as follows:

Stone Church—11.00 a. m., preaching by Patriarch H. O. Smith; at 8 p. m., a sacred concert by the band on the lawn and a sermonet, "The place of music in our church program," by R. V. Hopkins.

MISCELLANEOUS

Notices

There is a growing tendency on the part of the branch and district presidents to write missionaries who have been laboring in their locality but are now appointed elsewhere, asking them to return for series of meetings. The brethren of the missionary force have been asked to remain in the fields to which they are now appointed, and it will, therefore, save disappointment and possible embarrassment if those desiring service will communicate with the missionary supervisor having direction of the missionary work in their locality, or, failing that, with the office of the Quorum of Twelve, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

THE QUORUM OF TWELVE.

Reunion committees will please check the list of appointees which they have received with the list of speakers appearing elsewhere in this issue, since the alteration of the plans of some committees has necessitated our complete rearrangement of the original appointments.

Elder T. W. Williams has not been appointed to reunions by his own request. Elder John W. Rushton has not been appointed by mutual arrangements between him and the First Presidency.

All General Conference appointees will attend the reunions of the districts to which they are appointed, but will please refrain from visiting other reunions unless such visits are authorized by the Presidency or Twelve.

F. HENRY EDWARDS.

Notice to Temple Builder and Oriole Leaders

All Oriole, Temple Builder, and young women's correspondence should be sent to Blanche Edwards, Lamoni, Iowa, until further notice.

Musical Festival

Central Michigan, at Bay City, corner of Katherine and Thomas Streets, musical festival, July 15, all day. Everyone invited. Matthew Umphrey, president.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Addie McNew, of Doniphan, Missouri, requests the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed.

Sister W. M. Keck, of Princeville, Illinois, requests the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed.

Brother Hiram Tevis, of Simcoe, Ontario, requests the prayers of the Saints in behalf of their daughter, Sister Branches reported as follows: Kewanee, 136; Rock Island, 101; Dahinda, 97; Joy, 88; Moline (East Moline), 61; Millersburg, 60; Mathersville, 54; Peoria, 53; Buffalo Prairie, 50; Savanna, 30; nonresident, 55; total, 785. Sixteen baptisms were offset by seven deaths. Bishop's agent, Edward Jones, reported total receipts, $1,890.98; paid out for aid, $80; balance paid to Bishop. Treasurer's report: balance at last report, $90.79; receipts, $39.79; paid out, $38.27; balance, $92.27. Sunday school secretary states there were twelve schools in the district with a total enrollment of 541. There has been a loss of seven since October. There are 68 officers and 53 teachers. Average attendance has been 311. Loss of 32 since October. The secretary visited four schools and the superintendent visited five. R. W. Farrell reported for Twin-Cities and the reunion committee. In harmony with request from Rock Island Branch, Leonard W. Stiegel was ordained elder. Two babies were blessed. A resolution was adopted to sustain Brother Sackfield in the district presidency until October, it being understood that the district welcome a general conference appointee, should the church so appoint and such appointment could take effect immediately. Later at Brother Sackfield's urgent request this was reconsidered and the district placed R. W. Farrell in charge with power to choose his assistants. The secretary, treasurer, chorister, Bishop's agent, historian, Sunday school superintendent, and secretary were each sustained until October conference. L. W. Stiegel was placed in charge of Religio until that date. The following delegates were chosen for next General Conference: George Sackfield, B. E. Sartwell, R. W. Farrell, M. E. Gillin, L. W. Stiegel, Charles L. Holmes, Edward Jones; alternates: J. G. Cole, William Willetts, Robert Gunock, Elizabeth Cole, D. T. Williams, R. Maynard, John Stiegel. Musical Appreciation

For a long time there has been a crying need for something that would raise the standard of appreciation for the best that there is in music among the membership of our church. This need has grown out of the simple hypothesis that no great thing can really be appreciated unless that appreciation is based upon a personal comprehension of the art as presented. Many, many times music lovers, on leaving the concert hall, or church, where beautiful music has been rendered, may be heard to say: "Oh, wasn't it great, swell, peachy, nice, gorgeous, superbondonical," and various other qualitative adjectives that may be peculiar to certain localities. This, in one word, represents the extent or limit of their appreciation.

The following morning after a good night's rest, the effect of the previous day's program has totally passed from consciousness and everything restored to its original status. A chorister recently said:

I have frequently used one song in church work twice in succession, and invariably the same people who heard the initial rendition would compliment me on the beautiful new song on the occasion of its second rendition. This clearly illustrates the extent or depth of their appreciation, or in other words, their appreciation may be characterized or defined as pseudo-appreciation.

To enjoy music, it must be attached to some phase of human life, for it is that which gives to it style, color, and form. To appreciate the writings of the masters we must become as it were, their contemporaries, and live at least in imagination the life which they lived, understanding, if we can, the motives and conditions that directed their works. These motives or influences might have been of a religious nature, or awakened in them through the reading of poetry or prose, or prompted by some political movement of the age in which they lived, or there might have been some social movements urging them to give expression to their thoughts in the language of tones, or their writings may have been tempered by individual joys, sorrows, or passions.

It was Beethoven who was reported to have said of his masterpiece, "The Missa Solemnis," that "it came from the heart, to the heart let it go." The way to love, to appreciate, to enjoy music is to know it and to know it intimately, for the mind is molded into the likeness of the things it knows intimately and comes to love. In art, as in all the greatest things of life, love is the condition of genuine growth. Love is the fulfillment of the intellectual as well as the moral law.

In order, then, to enjoy music let us live day by day, in the presence or under the spell of the masterpieces of the great creative geniuses that have lived, thought, and worked for us.

Music viewed in its broadest sense may be considered from a practical or theoretical viewpoint. Every individual may not be able to play an instrument or sing, but certainly everyone can study the question from its historical aspect, and thus their comprehension for the best that there is to be had in music raised. It should be borne in mind that true and real enjoyment in music is based upon a personal comprehension of the lives and works of the great composers.

Music, considered in a specific sense, consists of the elusive and evasive factors of rhythm and sound. To the extent that these factors may be more readily understood and appreciated, we are pleased to announce a series of short articles dealing with musical appreciation, which will appear in subsequent issues of the HERALD. Mr. James Houghton, of Boston, now conductor of the Conference Choir and for a time residing in Independence, is the author of these articles. We call special attention to them, as they are the forerunners of the musical program being prepared for General Conference.

Unity

Humility is the first essential of Christian unity. Without that spirit concerted action is impossible. Men may differ in stature, strength, capacity, and material possessions, but humility can provide a common ground for unity.

Paul preached the doctrine of unity, but he did more than that. His life exemplified it. There are those to-day who are so blinded by the light of their own perfection that they cannot see the good in others. Paul points this out when he said:

"For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith."—Romans 12:3.

Those who exaggerate their own goodness seem to feel that they have been especially blessed and possess a monopoly on religion. This feeling of independence and self-sufficiency soon becomes defined as pride, self-assertiveness, and conceit, and where these are humility cannot be. Again Paul warns against this attitude when he says, "Be not wise in your own conceit." (Romans 12: 16.)

But while humility is a first essential of unity, it itself cannot be born without effort. Only through sacrifice can humility become a part of the life of an individual. This indicates action of a definite nature. It does not mean doing without something which is necessary to growth of the individual and the group, but it means the doing without something which is not essential to the progress of the individual and the group in their efforts to attain the goal, and in such a sacrifice something of greater import can be contributed to the progress of both.

Besides humility, love is the product of sacrifice, when that sacrifice is intentional. Deprivation of necessities is not sacrifice even though this be contemplated. But sacrifice which is planned to release renewed energy and make additional contribution to individual and group life is the mother of love and humility.

Since these divine qualities depend upon sacrifice and that sacrifice must be directed and motivated, how are we to act intelligently in attaining these ends?

Take, for example, maternal love. The mother learns to love her child because of the sacrifice she has made to bring life into the world. When that sacrifice is desired on the part of that mother her love is greatest. This love that is born of sacrifice grows, expands, and becomes more intense as her efforts increase to give that child the things it needs to become what she would have it become. Paternal love is not as great as maternal love, because it is not possible for the father to make as great a sacrifice as the mother can make. The love of the child is likewise a growing love. When it is born it looks to the mother for the satisfaction of its needs. Its love for her is not a love because of the things she gives it, but because she becomes the ideal; and the child desiring to become like her, puts forth effort to do the things she requires in order that it may attain to the ideal. Thus it learns to love. This love develops in proportion to the effort put forth by that child to please the mother or its ideal. This effort is the sacrifice on the part of the child and brings to him that love which makes humility an easy matter.

The family where love is the ruling force is the family whose members are humble one toward another, where perfect understanding prevails. Paul again said:

"Be like-minded one toward another according as Christ Jesus was."—Romans 15: 5.

So we see that love and humility are born of sacrifice, and humility is a fundamental principle of unity.

Too long have we wandered in an aimless existence apart from others. If we are ever to be united it depends upon individual effort to lay the basis. Until the visions of Sunday are applied on Monday Christ will not find a place prepared for him. Neither empire, nor nation, nor church is stronger than the individuals which compose it and there is no act of man, woman, or child that does not either strengthen or weaken the unity of the group.

A plea for unity is useless if there is no basis upon which to build. Until we can work and sacrifice and love and be humble, the redemption of Zion is yet a vision.

We have more to do than get along with our neighbor. We must help him and do so in a spirit of humility and love. Only those who are loyal to service are fitted to live. Zion must be founded on service and not on selfish ambition, and upon individual effort rests her redemption. Where are those who will begin to-day to lay the foundation for a unified people, a church of God?

Opportunity Knocks

We have reason to be satisfied with our educational progress in America during the past twenty years, but it must not be a passive satisfaction.

Attendance in the public schools has increased nearly six million since 1902, there being about 16,123,500 pupils in that year while in 1922, the number had increased to 22,100,070.

The increase in population of the country accounts for part of the advance, but undoubtedly a great factor has been the determined effort on the part of parents to see that their children had a better chance than they had.

The most striking increase in school population has been in the agricultural, mechanical, and technical colleges. The Outlook gives as figures, 6,278 students in agricultural colleges in 1902; in 1922 there were 15,434.

The enrollment in engineering colleges was 18,145 in 1902, and 27,451 in 1922. Architectural and household economy colleges also show large increases.

People of America are beginning to recognize the value of education and are taking advantage of the numerous opportunities offered. All that is necessary is to look about you to see the many chances presented practically free, merely for the taking.

It is regrettable that members of the church do not respond more readily to the educational program of the church. Many fields are open through correspondence and guides to selected readings, besides Graceland College and the Institute of Arts and Sciences at Independence. The HERALD has published many articles, outlines, and courses suggesting profitable home study, and summer courses as well as the regular college year program are offered at our church institutions.

In this issue of the HERALD will be found an account of the summer school at the Independence Institute. Shortly will be published an outline of a course in mothercraft for girls, accompanied by articles supervising the study. Announcement will also be made concerning the program contemplated for the coming school year at the Institute. Graceland College carries in the current issue an advertisement urging enrollment. Other information concerning the newly installed four-year course will be published in future numbers.

We urge the spirit of educational progress upon the people of the church. We stand upon the road of opportunity which leads to the kingdom of God. We cannot fail to follow the path. The energy is ours; the way is open; nothing is holding us back. Let's go!

Senior College Courses

Our attention has been called by Doctor G. N. Briggs, president of Graceland College, to the fact that larger possibilities are offered in five lines for the senior college: first, in social science; second, education; third, English; fourth, music; fifth, religious education. Few subjects should appeal to our young people more than to major in social science and minor in education so that by the end of four years he would receive a state teachers' certificate and could secure a position in any of the high schools as a teacher of social science. Or a teacher could major in English, minor in education, and secure a very desirable position as a high-school teacher of English.

At present the music course is a three-year one but the State of Iowa expects to extend it shortly to a four-year course. This would permit majoring in music, minoring in education, with a similar result.

Or if one preferred, he might major in religious education, and by minoring in education would still be able to secure the teachers' certificate, qualifying him as an instructor in the high school.

The fifth contingency is to major in education. Doctor Briggs calls our attention to the college offering in these various lines.

Borrowing From Public Education

Education has been an habitual borrower. It usually borrows heavily from the current science of its day. In the days of Descartes it borrowed from mathematics. In the days of Herbart it borrowed from physics. It is now borrowing its formulæ from biology. Secular education has but recently begun to do original work in the field of education. To borrow from it is to borrow from a source not highly trustworthy. It is too young to be infallible. Public education has studied the psychology of habit, the psychology of ideas, and the psychology of attitudes, but it has not made any adequate study of the psychology of emotions, sentiments, prejudice, ideals, and those conduct-controls with which religion deals. While there is much of public school technique that may be readily turned to the service of religious education, it is not correct to suppose that the training which will make a good public-school teacher will make an efficient Sunday-school teacher. Religious education has a technique peculiar to the nature and ends of religious experience. Religious education has, also, a content as well as a technique.—Walter S. Athearn.

Cures for Cancer

In recent issues of the HERALD, April 25 to May 16, there has appeared in the Health Department a continued discussion of the subject of cancer, "Precancerous conditions, and what everyone should know about cancer."

From these articles it appears that cancer is increasing. It is not a contagious disease. No method of prevention is known. There remains therefore only the question of cure.

All of the various cures proposed from time to time are rejected. Ointments do not help cancer. Cauterization may retard for a time but does not cure and lays a basis for worse conditions later. X ray and radium may retard the growth but do not cure nor prevent. These articles further state that neither Christian Science nor osteopathy cure, but so far as that is concerned, they also state no school of medicine has any cure. The only remedy is the surgeon's knife, which is used in case of necessity by all schools of the practice of medicine.

The HERALD has received from time to time proposed cancer cures, but has not printed them for the above reason. Whatever faith in God may do, the best of human knowledge does not approve of various ointments when a cancerous condition exists.

It is hoped that all of our readers have followed this series of articles carefully, especially those past forty years of age. Protection rests in regular examinations by a physician, especially if any untoward condition exists in any portion of the body. When serious pain exists, it is often too late even to operate.

Our Zionie Ideals

A sermon by President Frederick M. Smith on Zion Builders' Day at the Young People's Convention, at Lamoni, Iowa, June 16, 1923.

I do not know that it is wise or even necessary to offer any apology, yet I must confess that I do not bring to you this morning my work in as well organized form as I had hoped; but I, like a good many other people, am not able to control the environment in which I move, and, therefore, I met a number of disappointments. However, I trust that there shall be sufficient backbone to what I shall attempt to say so that you can follow it, those of you who are attempting to keep notes, and so that a basis might be furnished for systematic discussion by those who are appointed to follow me.

As I understand the subject which has been appointed to me this morning, it is so broad that one can scarcely hope to encompass a discussion of it in an hour's talk. I have no doubt that you might appreciate some brief thesis of what the Zionie ideals are, and for the moment thinking of certain aspects of the subject it has come to me that the thesis that we might well present this morning would be something like this: "A beautiful people with a beautiful social organization in beautiful homes in beautiful cities and villages with a beautiful religion, and living beautiful lives." In other words, "Zion the beautiful beckons us on." That is the thesis which I should like you to carry away with you.

I have discovered in my various attempts to talk on the subject of Zion that there are always certain aspects that are momentarily to the fore. I presume that is because in contemplating it, after you have mentally canvassed certain aspects of it, in going into other aspects these things are to the fore for the time being. Hence, it may be that there are certain things that seem to present themselves this morning for discussion. If I have presented in a few words the thesis of our Zionie ideal, it means that as a complement thereto we must be constantly preparing for the work, for it is useless for us to draw a beautiful picture attempting to represent the ideals of the goal that we are working for unless we are willing to work for the accomplishment of that goal.

Ideals Are Realized Through Work

A comparison in the realm of psychology would be when religious ecstasy plays an important part. It is perfectly natural that people in moments of contemplation shall have their souls so expanded that they are lifted into realms which they never enter under ordinary conditions, and there they have visions, if you please, and ideals presented to them and emotions aroused which if they allow to pass away in dreaming not only become injurious to them, but if after they have seen the ideals they are at once engaged from then on in the active and practical affairs, realizing those ideals, then their moments of ecstasy have not been wasted. And Latter Day Saints are not so different from other people. They have made the mistake in their religious contemplation and meditation of allowing their dreams to pass away as idle visions and dreams alone, and have suffered as a consequence. This may be the thing that has given rise to a disposition on the part of our people to think that Zion is going to be accomplished in one fell swoop. As a people we are apt to look for a cataclysmic Zion. We do not realize that those things which God has said should be done must take a long time. There is no more miraculous thing than the creation of fruit, a converting of the liquids of the earth because of the magic operations in the cells of the plant into the fruit that hangs on the boughs. It is not done in a nighttime. As a people we are frequently disposed to wait and pray for Zion and are not willing to work for it. Zion is not going to come overnight, and we cannot expect that the Zion that we must people will be let down out of the heavens some glorious night and that we will find it glistening in the sunlight the next morning.

Social Program Has a Spiritual Basis

To any people who are progressing, the next essential step, or the step just before them, is likely to be momentarily emphasized, and we must not think that because we are momentarily looking forward and emphasizing the next step we are to take, that we have forgotten the efforts upon which we have been building in the past. I say this because there is a disposition on the part of some, because we emphasize the economic aspect of Zion, to claim that we have lost sight of the spiritual. But, of course, we have been emphasizing the spiritual aspect of Zion for the last generation at least. In other words, our future accomplishment must be on the foundations which we have laid in the past. The work of the church in the past has been as a preparation for our next development, and that is what we desire to discuss this morning. When a people move steadily forward and recognize what has already been accomplished without attempting to re-lay the foundation when once they move forward to the accomplishment of the next step necessary, they are not likely to become involved in wrangles and contentions over incidentals, and they are not going to discuss methods and forget the principles that underlie.

We as a people must always have under consideration something which is constructive and big enough for the people to accomplish. I have become thoroughly convinced that one of the greatest difficulties that we as a people have is that we do not keep the people at work accomplishing the tasks that are big enough for them. I do not believe that there is another people on the face of the earth so capable according to their numbers as this people, and one of our difficulties to-day arises from the fact that our people have not been kept at work accomplishing something that is big enough for them. Have you not seen individual illustrations of the fact that unless you keep that person working up close to his capacity he is very likely to do something that is mischievous? That is but another way of saying, of course, what we all recognize, and that is that an idle brain is the Devil's workshop. That is just as true of a people as it is of an individual.

So far as this church is concerned, our next step in progress is the necessary social and economic reconstruction that is essential to bring about the ideal we have spoken about as being the thesis of this morning's talk. In other words we have sign-posted our road in the past and yet have not been willing in the past to enter upon that road, and the reason we have not entered it is largely due to the fact that some are disposed to say that unless we are assured of the exact condition of that road we are not willing to enter. One of our bishops came into the office some months ago and was asking me about stewardships. He said that there was no use of us starting unless we were agreed upon all the details; unless we could work out and present to the people all of the details there was no use of us starting. I said to him, Brother, we are about to undertake as a people something which has never been undertaken by any other people. We are entering into a field that is quite unexplored. We do know, of course, that certain principles that have existed in the past and have been the basis of social and economic study will still be in existence accordingly. We are exploring new ground. No one would have discovered the North Pole unless some one had had faith that he could get there, and he certainly did not know the road when he started. If I told you that out there in front was an automobile in first-class condition with plenty of gasoline in the tank ready to go, and I said to you, Lamoni lies north of here about a hundred and fifty miles, take the car, go to Lamoni, and give this message to the people, would you say to me, "There is not enough gasoline in that tank to drive one hundred and fifty miles? Can you tell me exactly how many miles north I can go and when I should make my first turn? Can you assure me that every brooklet has a culvert and that every stream a bridge? Can you assure me there are no mudholes through which I must pass?" Are those the questions you would ask me? If so, how long would it take you to get to Lamoni? He got the point. I said to him, No man living can sit down now and work out all of the details of the untried experiment we must make. But we can agree upon a plan of cooperation for the present and go just as far as we can, trusting that the Lord, with the failing of our own common intelligence, will reveal to us the details later on. That is our problem.

Stewardships the Next Step in Progress

Now to be more specific the next and first next essential step for this church to take is the establishment of stewardships.

It seems to me that we have gone just as far as we can until the membership is socialized, and if the work of the church in the past has not been able to develop a social consciousness, a viewpoint on the part of the people, then to that extent of the lack of a social consciousness has the work of the church in the past failed, and wherein it has failed we must be more active in generating and creating social consciousness. That is essential.

The work of the church is economic in its aspect because it is determining our best relations one to another. Do not think for a moment that I am neglecting either the spiritual or the religious aspect of the work of the church. I do not expect by any means to encompass all of the social ideals of the church.

What is the doctrine of stewardships? I have attempted to define it a great many times. Briefly it is, All for each and each for all, which means the development of such social relations that every individual has in view the welfare of every other individual in the group—something, of course, which is absolutely foreign to our present order of industry. Let me put it in a little different form: It is that attitude of the individual which is the result of religious motivation and the work of the church in the past and the concept of the Christian religion wherein the individual is willing to give of his services and function to the maximum of his capacity and give to the group what comes to him as a result of his activities. It is that disposition that seems to be the spirit of the organization known as the Lambda Delta Sigma, "All that I am I consecrate to the service of man."

Let me put it in a different form: It means that every individual (and that means all individuals in the church) is willing to be activated to the extent of his ability, to use his judgment in the expenditure of what is necessary to maintain himself to the standpoint of working efficiency, to use his best judgment and proper regard for the expansion of his own business, consecrating the surplus or his profits to the group. That means in other words then that it is the application of the surplus of each individual activity and each group activity to the welfare of the whole.

Now in a way that is exactly what has been taking place in time past, for sooner or later whatever margin or surplus you accumulate as a business man (I do not care how tightly you tie it up with law or otherwise) sooner or later the most of that will come back to the group, although for a time it will be applied to individuals. Under the existence of our old customs, recognition of individual property rights, etc., a system of laws has grown up—a system by which each individual can leave to his posterity the surplus which he has accumulated which may be a surplus of debts, and which negative surplus of the individual is thrown on to the group. Why not construct some laws that will give the positive surplus to the group. It is said that it is only three generations from shirt sleeves to shirt sleeves. That, of course, means that where one individual has had the ability to accumulate wealth and pass it on to his posterity in the form of surplus, the law of compensation works out so that that surplus in three generations has been dissipated.

Surplus Should Revert to Group

Now then the question is this: If eventually the surplus goes to the group in spite of your efforts, why not now? Let us get a society organized on such a basis that the surplus will go to the group. Now so far we are pretty well agreed that there is need for a social reform so that in some form or another the surplus shall revert to the group and the blessing shall attach accordingly. How are we going to bring this about? At one time in the history of our country the question of the resumption of specie payment was under consideration, and the question was, How shall we resume specie payment? And one wise man said, "The only way to resume is to resume." The truthfulness of this should be recognized so far as we are concerned. The only way we will ever get on a stewardship basis is to make a start, and, if we wait until everybody is ready for it, we will not make progress. If we had said, We will not send out a single man to go on the basis of a missionary appointment until we have a group of five hundred men who are willing to go out together, we would not have had the missionary force that we have, for the missionary force of this church at one time comprised one man, and that was E. C. Briggs. He was the only man willing to make all the sacrifice necessary to take his hat in one hand and bag in the other and go out, depending on the generosity of the people. He went. Other men joined him, until to-day we have a large number of men who are on the basis of ministerial allowance, so-called, who are in fact stewards. And the same thing is going to be true so far as getting the rest of the membership organized on the stewardship basis. We will get there when we make the start, and the problem is just this: for the church to be organized in such a way that when at any moment an individual comes to the Presidency or the Bishopric of the church and says, I want to go on a stewardship basis, we can fit him into his place.

The difficulty is this, that not infrequently those who are the most ready to go on the stewardship basis are those who will individually be helped by reason of the church taking the responsibility; but that is only because we look at it in a wrong way. It is the duty of the church or society to be so organized that any individual who comes with a willingness can be put to work in some form by which he becomes a profitable steward, and after all it is a sad commentary on our own lack of preparation when we say that we cannot put this steward to work.

You had an aspect of the problem presented to you by Brother Wolfe this morning. If we are going to reach our educational ideals, it means that every son and daughter in the church should have an opportunity for a higher education. In other words, if they are willing to take up their stewardship in preparing for usefulness in the church, it is our duty to be so organized that we can give them that chance. I do not care whether it is the manufacturing of rugs, or butter and cheese on those splendid acres around here. After all, the differences that we have to some extent are very frequently just differences in method in reaching the same goal. It is a question whether we take the right-hand or the left-hand road, if we are working for the same purposes and have the goal well in sight.

Now putting it in another way, the establishment of stewardships means that not only must the business of the minister, the missionary, the high priest, the pastor, the general officer of the church, be organized so that his just wants and his needs according to his circumstances are taken care of and the sacrifice of the rest that he might be making to the church, but it means that every person in the church, sooner or later, must have his business so organized that after his just wants and his needs according to his circumstances are taken into consideration the surplus that flows from his activity shall revert to the group, and if there are activities which must be carried on that will not return a profit in dollars and cents, exactly as the missionaries are doing to-day, then society must be so organized that flowing back from this accumulated surplus there shall be a just compensation for those who are carrying on work that is not profitable in dollars and cents, and yet is socially of tremendous importance. That means then that we must have stewardships on the individual basis, that every individual must eventually become a steward. It means that there are times when groups will be organized so that every possible activity will be carried on with the idea of surplus flowing to the treasury.

Eliminate the Poor

The great problem of this church is to eliminate the poor by destroying the conditions which have made that person dependent. That is the prime problem of the church. Zion the beautiful cannot exist when we have poverty and squalor in one part of it and luxury in another part. It cannot exist. Hence our problem is to elevate or lift up those who are below the poverty line and equalize those who are too far above it, not by bringing them down, but by creating a higher life for all. Not the Presiding Bishop nor all the bishops of the church put together can give personal attention to all the problems that are in connection with this problem, and that is the very reason that the law has contemplated the organization of groups of men who will relieve the Bishop from taking care of these poor individuals or training them or putting them into a position where they can become independent. These men will relieve the Bishop of it. In the Far West Stake there has been a group of those men who are willing to sacrifice all their own wealth, if necessary, who have already expressed a desire to associate themselves together with the idea of helping others to get on the basis of self-dependence. Organizations shall be had of men who are willing to help the temporal authorities of the church in taking care of or in solving the problems in connection with poverty. The elimination, of course, of the poor or the dependent is a social or economic evolution, if you please, that will finally make everyone a fit workman, not a misfit workman. All of you know that to-day there are many people working at certain activities for which they are unfitted, therefore they are making a meager or precarious living. They are existing; that is all. They are not maintaining themselves in that position that enables their posterity to step into something better. Our problem is to organize in such a way that every individual is permitted to work in that place where he is best adapted and can give his largest contribution to society. In other words making everyone a fit workman.

Church Now Ready for Stewardships

Now, how shall we start? I think I gave that answer a little while ago. The church should right now (I think we are ready for it) every time an individual comes to an officer of the church and says, "I am willing to go on a basis of the law as laid down in the Book of Covenants and work and consecrate my surplus," put him to work as a steward. If he is a poor man, put him under the direction of a group of men who have been organized so that he can be directed in his affairs so that he can be made a contributor to society in the place where he is properly fitted to work and immediately put into operation the machinery that will give that man some sort of an examination to determine right where he should be placed. I say we have reached the point where the church should do that for every individual who manifests a willingness to go on a stewardship basis—and do it now, not to-morrow.

One of the first things essential for this is to purchase land. Ever since the inception of this church we have received the direction of divinity to buy land. And listen, never once has the Lord put a maximum on the price we should pay for it. The Lord knows that if land around Lamoni is worth $200 an acre to those not members of the church, it will be worth $200 an acre or more to us. You cannot find anything in the books where the Lord has set any limit on the price. Just recently I heard of an instance where one of our men who was at that time a wealthy man had received instruction, as he claims, from a divine messenger who came to him and said, "Go to Independence and between Independence and Kansas City buy a tract of ground that is there for sale." He went and the price was too high and he didn't buy. One year later the same messenger repeated the instruction, and he went, and the price of the land had doubled and he did not buy. Twice he had refused to obey the divine mandate. Let me tell you as a people we have been guilty of doing exactly the same thing. It does not make any difference to me about the price of that land. If we can buy it, and buy it honestly, we should buy it. Every acre that lies anywhere from fifty miles north of Lamoni clear to Independence should be purchased. We can do it if we make up our minds to do it.

I am going to digress here just a moment to point out another one of our faults of the past. Here we stand to-day on ground which has been consecrated to the interests of the church by furnishing a refuge and haven for our young people. No person who attended the home-coming of Graceland students will say that the church made any mistake in furnishing this home. I say that instead of having the meager 200 acres we have here we should have a ranch that goes into the thousands. In 1869 one long-headed fellow introduced a resolution into the conference that the church should buy a section or two of land in the center of Missouri so that the young men preparing for the ministry might have some means of support. In 1869 the chances are that the price of farm land lying in the middle of Missouri was perhaps five to ten dollars an acre. And yet are we going to wait until land goes up and up and up, and it will be all the more difficult for us to buy? It is not a question of price, but the Lord said secure land and consecrate it to the building up of the church, and when we do that the Lord is going to bless us.

Need for Agricultural Stewardships

Agricultural stewardships are needed. When we get to the point that every acre of ground, every farm implement, every farm animal, and even trucks and automobiles as well as individuals are consecrated to the service of God; when we get to the point when every blacksmith at his anvil, every farmer on his broad acres, every artisan of every kind is wielding his tool or pen with the idea that the Spirit of God gives strength, then this church will go forward, stewardships will be established, and we will be able to accomplish a task so much greater than we are doing to-day that Zion will be here. It can only be done upon a stewardship basis. If our people are not ready yet for stewardships, it is because the church has made a mistake in the past and has failed in making our preparation. I would like to make a test, How many here are ready for stewardships? How many are not? I should judge about half of the audience voted they were ready for stewardships. What is wrong? Well, I am going to let you answer that.

Now let me ask you this question. Where do you want to work? Some of you may have given that matter some attention. "Well, I want to work where I can make the most money," some of you may say. The question that you must ask is this, not only where do I want to work, but where can I best work? For what has the Lord especially qualified me? Am I willing to do any kind of a service that is honorable before God and man and give the results of my work to the church? That is what we must ask ourselves.

You might come back by saying, Well, what is there to do? That depends. I am going to give you a little practical application here. I believe that even cows can be made to serve God. I will tell you how. I expect Brother Carmichael has spoken to you about it. Last night, as we were coming to Lamoni by train, it stopped very frequently. There was a brother on the train who was interested. He asked me why they were stopping so often. I told him to go out and look the next time the train stopped. At every station we stopped they were loading can after can of cream, and that train did not run past Lamoni without loading more. Where was this cream going? It was going to Humeston, and that creamery is run by capital furnished from New Bedford, Massachusetts. And because this is one of the prime butter countries in the United States we send our cream to make that butter, and the butter goes to New Bedford, and home folk who eat butter in Lamoni have to eat an inferior grade which is shipped in. In other words our farmers in Lamoni who are raising cream are sending their profits into the pockets of the capitalists at New Bedford. I say that the cows in Lamoni ought to be working for the church. The cows don't know the temporal law of the church, that is true. They will have to be taught it, or at least the men who own them will have to be taught. There is one answer to the question, what can we do? We have slept on our rights in a number of different ways. We have allowed chance after chance to go by the board. I wonder how long it is going to take us to wake up.

Church Must Organize Socially

The problem before the church then is the establishment of stewardships. I hope I have made that definite enough. The problem of the church is to organize itself socially and industrially until every man and every woman who is willing to go on the stewardship basis can be put to work at once, and that person dedicated, set apart, consecrated, as a steward in the church to the service of the Lord. And when we make a start, I will venture to make this promise to the church that the way will be opened up so clearly and the Spirit of God be given to us in such abundance that this people will not only become one of the happiest in the world, but the richest as well. It is not the riches that I want you to keep in mind, but I do want you to keep in mind the service, when every foot of ground that you own will be consecrated to the service of God and be made to serve God and to worship him because the fruitage and the increase thereof has been dedicated to the service of the church and the interests and welfare of your fellow man. When we do that, nothing will stop the progress of this church, until we shall eventually be able to say that the conditions, the land, exists in which Zion the beautiful will be an established fact and the glory of God shall shine out forevermore.

May he bless us and strengthen us with a determination to enter upon this task is my prayer.

"Whoever controls the motion picture industry controls the most powerful medium of influence over the people," says Thomas A. Edison. This great man is right, but the point seems to be that motion pictures are not yet very well controlled.

PASTORAL

Methods in Officiating

[The following subjects were discussed during the past year by the two quorums of elders in Zion in joint session. They were presented for brief consideration, upon the theory that they were more or less matters of personal opinion after all, but worthy of some thought by the careful worker for Christ. The interest was such that the discussion continued over a year. A new outline of subjects will be taken up now, and of this we may have something to say later.—EDITORS.]

1. Baptism

- a. What steps should precede arrangements for a baptismal service?
- b. What should be the form of a well-arranged baptismal service?
- c. Should candidate be required to make a verbal covenant ere entering the water?
- d. Upon entering the water, is there a preferred side on which the candidate should walk?
- e. How is he to be conducted into the water, and what is the most convenient depth where a stream is used?
- f. In what direction, as related to stream's current and the audience, should candidate face when immersed?
- g. What is the proper method of immersing?
- h. Is there a best position for the hands during the ordinance?
- i. If the immersion is not complete, what should be done?
- j. Is it allowable in case a small tank is used, for the officiator to stand outside?
- k. What is required in reporting a baptism?

2. Confirmation

- a. If two men are named to confirm, with no instruction given, which should speak?
- b. Is it allowable to say, "Receive ye the gift of the Holy Ghost"? Why?
- c. Is it necessary to try to speak so the audience can hear the prayer?
- d. Suppose the officiator in this or any other ordinance is found later to have been under proper official silence. What steps should be taken if he was the mouthpiece? If he was assisting?

3. Ordination

- a. What steps or processes should have preceded ordination to any office?
- b. Can elders ordain to all offices? Which?
- c. Have you observed the necessity for special care when officiating to know the office to which the candidate was to be ordained?

- d. What report must be made of this ordinance, and to whom?
- e. Who is responsible for the quorum enrollment of the one ordained? Should the man take the initiative or the quorum officers?

4. Administration to the Sick

- a. Are there occasions when it is wise to suggest administration?
- b. Need one inquire as to the nature of the ailment if he does not know?
- c. On what occasions is an elder justified in going alone rather than taking another with him?
- d. Is a preceding or preparational prayer always advisable? Who may offer this? If more than one, who may participate?
- e. Are there advantages in asking all present to offer vocal prayers at this time?
- f. What is the method of determining who shall anoint and who confirm?
- g. Should the prayer of anointing be a long one, and of what character?
- h. Is the personal reference in the prayers important?
- i. On what occasions is it wise to prophesy over the sick?
- j. If several elders are present, should they be asked to participate or assist?
- k. On what basis would you assign the work of four elders at a conference for example, who were to administer to twelve waiting persons?
- l. What discrimination do you make in reporting administrations? Who officiates and who assists?

5. Blessing of Children

- a. What should be the scope of a prayer of blessing over children?
- b. Is it necessary to utter the name of the child?
- c. What if by mistake a wrong name is used?
- d. How many may officiate in this ordinance at one time?
- e. What do you consider an ideal location and arrangement, as related to audience, in administering this ordinance?
- f. What if the child is too large to hold in the arms?
- g. Is there an age limit for this ordinance? What is it?
- h. What about reporting?

6. Presiding and Assisting

- a. What are your ideals of good presiding ability and the effect to be sought?
- b. To what extent is one in charge of a service responsible for the welfare of those in attendance?
- c. Is there a distinction in this aspect between preaching services, prayer services, business meetings, etc.?

d. What are some things one should know when in charge of a service?

e. Who should announce the hymn numbers in a preaching service?

f. Who should signal the congregation to arise while singing?

g. Is it necessary or wise to instruct the congregation to remain standing during prayer?

h. If in charge and you found you had forgotten the anthem by the choir, what would you do?

i. If you are in charge of the service and required to lead the singing, what necessary understanding should exist between you and person at the musical instrument?

j. Is the "lining" of hymns helpful?

k. When in charge of a prayer service, what is your responsibility regarding the discernment of spirits in case of a manifestation of the gifts?

l. How far is one who assists responsible for the welfare of a preaching service? A prayer service? Other services?

7. Administration of the Sacrament

a. If in charge of a sacrament service, what are the factors that should be arranged before the service?

b. Is it wise to explain at each meeting the fact that only members are supposed to partake of the emblems?

c. How important is well-planned management in this service?

d. Suppose you were to discover after the opening of the service that no copy of the Doctrine and Covenants was at hand and no one had memorized the sacramental prayers; what would you do?

e. If you were to find that when you attempted to serve the wine it was frozen in the cups, what would you do?

f. Should more than one person at a time partake from the same tray?

g. When administering the emblems in an inconvenient place, is it allowable to hand out the tray to be passed from one to another?

h. What do you do to teach people to place the empty glasses in the outside row?

i. If the supply of either emblem were to become exhausted, what could be done?

j. If some one who is not a member partakes, is any action wise or necessary? What?

k. Is it obligatory that opportunity be given for public confession at the beginning of the meeting?

l. Whose duty is it to report on those who are members but do not partake of the emblems? What action is necessary?

m. Should a priest administer emblems to one known to be in transgression; by him alone? By him and the presiding officers?

n. With an elder in charge, a priest assisting, should the priest take the bread or wine without first having been served by the elder and receiving the emblems from him?

o. How do you report this service?

8. Marriages

a. What are the usual legal requirements to be observed in officiating in this ordinance?

b. If asked to officiate, what steps should be taken to perfect arrangements?

c. With whom should there be a complete understanding as to program in case of a wedding?

d. At the time of the ceremony, what should be the relative position of the bride, groom, minister, others?

e. What ceremony is used? Where is it found? Can any other be used?

f. Are words of counsel and advice in order? When?

g. Where in the program should the prayer or prayers be?

h. What about fees?

9. Funeral Services

a. If asked to take charge of a funeral service, are you clear as to the usual and approved customs in the community? Is it necessary to observe these?

b. Who usually makes out the schedule for a funeral service?

c. Who has charge of the ceremony at the grave? What should this consist of?

d. What is your ideal of a good funeral sermon as to doctrine, enumeration of good qualities of the deceased, etc.?

e. What of reporting this matter for record and publication?

A modern philosopher remarks, "If you would improve your lot in life build a house on it."

Several articles are appearing concerning the Renaissance movement in India and in China. In China this revival has distinctly religious aspects but because they do not find a set religion is not a conclusive sign that they are not hungering for the light. Rather the very unrest in the world signifies that it is the time that the gospel should be preached in all the world for a witness. India is almost a continent in itself. China contains more than the population of a continent. It is one of the great opportunities for the true life of Jesus Christ nor is that opportunity to be found alone in these two countries but appears to be nearly world wide.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

What Psychology Is Not

In a recent number of The Outlook, Martha Guernsey, instructor in psychology at the University of Michigan, discusses "Psychologists so and pseudo." She tells in an interesting and captivating manner the differences between a psychologist and one who travels under that name, exploiting the public.

The usual array of questions which are put to a psychologist are summed up by Miss Guernsey when she tells of a recent afternoon tea she attended, where one member of the party asked what her university work concerned.

"Psychology," I answered, knowing beforehand what species of aftermath it would elicit. And, to be sure, there ensued the customary volley, to-wit: "Can you analyze my temperament?" "Will you read my 'bumps'?" "Can you guarantee the soul?" "Is man a mere machine?" "Will you demonstrate hypnosis?" "What about thought transference?" "Can you recommend a medium?"—etcetera, ad infinitum. And these queries were not, incidentally, rooted in deep-dyed ignorance. They sprang from high school and college-bred inquirers, educated for the most part in psychology, however, through hit-and-miss contact with popular articles, advertisements, and those small cyclones of psychic enlightenment which for convenience may be aggregated under the specimen caption: "Psychology and How to Live. Taught in Six Lessons. Price $50. By the Renowned Psychologist Mr. —, S. T., D. D. P., etc. (I have yet to interpret many of these attached degrees, but I have noticed an ominous paucity of plain A. B.'s, M. A.'s, and Ph.D.'s.)"

Of these pseudo-psychologists there are several varieties. There is the kind that advertises "Psychologist and Medium: Strictly Scientific" which is perhaps most common and may be found in large quantities in any city as evidenced by the "Want Ad" section of the Sunday papers. This type gives "readings," public and private, and "advise" as to the future of any unhappy, ignorant individual.

Then there is the less harmless type that gives the public what it wants in a pleasing but slightly expensive manner. This is the lecturer who enters a city and advertises for a short time that "I can make you happy." These people are usually spellbinders who attract large crowds to "free" lectures where the plate is then passed. Also by special arrangement a short course may be given in small classes at $25 enrollment for the course or in private lessons at $10 a lesson.

Miss Guernsey says:

"A short time ago, during a discussion of the average college professor's salary, the reference was made to a 'psychic' lecturers who recently carried over $75,000 out of Detroit and Cleveland in a whirlwind campaign. Some one inquired why professors and research workers do not follow her example in capitalizing their opportunities. Orthodox psychologists, as a rule, have but one answer to this: they are too honest to fool the people they serve, in spite of the fact that the people want to be fooled. They are perfectly well aware that not all psychological facts would tickle the public palate. In fact, when it came to introducing certain abnormal aspects, such as increasing mental deficiency, nervous diseases, or an honest consideration of the hereditary and environmental limitations of the average individual, the facts might prove quite unappetizing. And the public has established a habit of paying more for flattery than for truth."

Psychology is the youngest of the sciences and its scope embraces all human activity. For these reasons it is the least developed of any of the sciences but perhaps has a future greater than any.

"The psychologist nowadays does not use his imagination to fill in unestablished crannies, and he seldom projects his theoretical conclusions as absolutely infallible. Physics, chemistry, and biology are his basic tools; sociology, philosophy, economics, organic evolution, are his collaterals; honest, exact, untiring, experimental research is his method."

He will not tell you that you can "will" anything in the universe and expect a fulfillment of that will. Instead he will tell you that—

"The will is no separate entity at all, other than a set of good habits of attention based on hereditary capacity and directed by the right kind of social pressure. In the field of learning he will not recommend burdensome mnemonic systems, but, rather, the simple fundamentals of attention, repetition, and wide associations. He will not recognize the worn-out superstition of specialized cranial 'bumps' (or charge you five dollars and up for reading them), but he will point out real differences in the brain dependent upon nervous connections which involve far more intricate and wonderful specialization than the expensive analyses of modern Sludges.

"The conscientious psychologist will refuse to weaken your nervous system by any demonstration of hypnotic trickery, but he will take you to the psychiatric wards where hysteria, shell-shock, and other abnormalities are legitimately treated by hypnosis under medically controlled conditions. As to character analysis, the psychologist will give you wide varieties of mental tests, and, not content with one index, will work out correlations with education, past social and industrial records, physical and, if possible, hereditary endowment. He—and here the public is widely misinformed—will not maintain that the army tests are anywhere near perfection, nor the Binet scale ultimate; but he will maintain that either one is far better as an index of mental capacity than the length of your nose or the color of your hair.

"One more phase—and an ever dangerous one—upon which I am tempted to remark. Not long ago I heard a rather benighted minister classify all psychologists as either atheists or spiritualists, which again stamps with an unjust indiscriminate. So far as I have observed, knowledge of the astonishingly delicate and intricate relation of mind and body, heredity and environment, individual and society, does not necessarily lessen one's interest in or respect for the ultimate Source of it all."

This article places the subject of psychology before the public in a clear and concise way and attempts to remove much of the misunderstanding prevalent on the part of persons not informed as to the nature of this new science. In conclusion Miss Guernsey says:

"If the public wants to continue being fooled by this species of instruction, let them enjoy (and pay for) it, but, incidentally, let them coin another name than psychology for its doctrines."

Earning Power and Education

The question has always been an interesting one, Does education pay? Many teachers and educators in the past have claimed that education cannot be measured in monetary values. However, recently it is being tested from all sides.

The World's Work gives an account of recent investigations where several States have submitted this problem to an extremely practical test.

"The one occupation in which education seemed to count for the least was the original one of farming. The university has seemed to be a natural preparation for law and medicine or for literature; but the tilling of the soil is mankind's primal occupation, and the less scholastic training the 'dirt farmers' possessed the better might he be supposed to do his job. Yet investigations conducted in such farming States as Georgia, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Ohio, Washington, New York, and Maryland indicate that this conclusion will have to be revised. These widely scattered States are certainly representative of the American farming community as a whole, and the fact that they answer the educational question with a unanimous affirmative makes the demonstration exceedingly effective.

"The conclusion is that an apparently invariable law is operating in so fundamental an occupation as farming. This is that the more education the farmer possesses the larger are his earnings. The method used in discovering this law was a simple and obvious one.

"The Kansas Agricultural College, for example, has made an investigation of 1,237 farms in that State, in each case making a record of the educational experience of the proprietor. The result is as follows:

Education of Farmers	Annual Earnings
Common School	$ 422.00
High School	554.00
College Partial Course	859.00
Completed College	1,452.00

"The results in all the other States mentioned were precisely the same. The artist who said that the way to produce fine pictures was to mix his paint with brains hit upon a great principle which is evidently applicable to farming. Cornell University has discovered that farmers with a high school training become tenants two years younger and farm owners four years younger than those whose opportunities have been limited to the district school."

Immigration and Our Population

The recent flood of immigration into the United States has brought forth much comment by the press all over the country. Some of the questions raised are whether immigration, as a method of increasing population, is not a tremendous fallacy; whether population is not regulated by economic conditions; whether the United States would not be just as populous as it is to-day if we had received practically no immigrants in the last hundred years.

A recent statement from the National Bureau of Economic Research, appearing in World's Work, is significant.

"It reports that the population of the United States is 110,000,000, which is a gain of 4,390,000 over the census figures of 1920. At the present rate of growth, the same authority asserts, the population of continental United States by 1930 will reach 120,000,000.

"Since 1920 there has been comparatively little immigration; the total gain in population from this source is about 800,000. The increase, therefore, has been the natural growth of the people already here. A remarkable phenomenon is taking place in American life; our death rate is constantly going down and our birth rate constantly going up. It really looks as though those insistent laws regulating population were already silently at work. The general idea is that population increases as the food supply increases; which is only another way of saying that population increases as prosperity and the wage rate increase. In general the wage rate of the last three years has been high and the prosperity of the working classes has been consequently great. Never have the wage earners had so much good food to eat, such comfortable houses in which to live, such good clothes to wear, or so many comforts to enjoy. These influences necessarily influence the growth of population, and the statistics now presented indicate that the response has been immediate.

From 1900 to 1910 the population increased at the rate of about 1,500,000 a year—almost identically the same increase that is now taking place. But at least one third of this growth was derived from immigration, whereas to-day less than one fifth is the result of the same cause. It is hardly necessary to draw comparisons. Few will question that the present growth is far more beneficial than that of pre-war days. If our population, without the assistance of the steamship companies, is growing at the rate of 1,500,000 a year, and if, in accordance with these forecasts, it will reach 120,000,000 by 1930, there need be no fear about the economic future of this country. These facts are the best possible refutation of those who think that American industry will languish unless millions are imported from Eastern and Mediterranean Europe.

Mexican Prohibition

Mexico seems no longer to be tied to tradition for, according to the Literary Digest, Mexican women in a Feminist Congress in Mexico City, recently assailed the use of alcohol.

True, the resolution taken against it was not very strong, but the step in itself deserves comment as the first of its kind ever occurring in that country. El Democratista remarks:

"Prohibition has already been tried in Mexico and has succeeded. When General Calles was Governor of Sonora, complete prohibition was established. Though our people will never be total abstainers, the curse of alcoholism must be eradicated. The best way to fight Demon Rum would be by adopting gradual taxation on beverages, according to alcoholic strength. Higher taxes being charged on strong drinks, the people would naturally turn to light wines and beer."

This is the tone of the resolution adopted by the women. They voted only for gradual prohibition.

Another Mexican paper, El Mundo, says:

"The feminist organizations have a large field open to their activities, and governmental support will not be lacking. It will take them several years before their efforts succeed, but this must not discourage them, as the forces of habit are powerfully entrenched. When the man-in-the-street realizes the evils of strong drink, and the gain he can reap by abstaining, the campaign will be on the right road to success."

Electrical Science Progresses

Some most remarkable achievements have recently occurred in the field of electrical science. In a laboratory a 2,000,000 volt flash of lightning was produced artificially for the first time in history. It was directed upon a miniature wooden village which was completely reduced to ashes.

At a convention of electric-light men in New York, speeches were broadcasted by radio from a number of stations, covering the entire United States and probably the entire world so that the speakers addressed an audience that probably numbered into the millions.

At the same time a new device was announced by which it is now possible to carry on private conversations by radio, the words of the speaker being "scrambled" at one end of their air journey and "unscrambled" at the other.

The final remarkable announcement was that plans are in preparation for developing electric power throughout the United States in one gigantic system.

Mob Law

Mob law continues to break out in various parts of the United States and at times when least expected, but it is chiefly confined to the South where racial prejudice is strongest. There are, however, fewer cases at present than in recent years, which may be due to a northern migration of Negroes which has shown the Southern planter that the Negro is necessary for labor or because of some turn of mind on the part of the white population.

"In most cases of lynchings," observes The Outlook, "the passions of the mob could have been held in check if there had been honest and determined effort to do so on the part of the officers of the law. Every time, therefore, that the law is upheld and enforced as against a lynching mob a good example is set and the authority of government as against violence and lawlessness is increased.

"The other day at Savannah a mob of many hundreds of men gathered around the jail and announced its intention to break in and kill a Negro charged with a heinous offense. Thus far the story reads like that of many a similar occurrence. One expects to see it continued with a relation of the breaking down of the prison doors, seizure of the culprit, or alleged culprit, and his death at the hands of the mob, perhaps with the added horror of burning alive.

"What happened in this case at Savannah was quite different. The citizens of influence and sober judgment argued with the crowd in behalf of the law, but with no immediate result; then orders to disperse were issued; still no result; then the fire engines were called out and played their hose on the crowd; finally a company of militia with a machine gun was marched to the jail. There was a little rioting and some small attempt at violence, but by this time the mob had become convinced that the officials were in earnest and its members dispersed before serious injury was done on either side.

"The authorities at Savannah are to be congratulated both on their patience and on their firmness. This Southern town has set an example to all towns North or South faced with the fury of a mob of lynchings."

More About Palestine

[In a recent address by Elbert H. Gary, president of the American Iron and Steel Institute, he told of travel in Palestine and the necessity of a knowledge of the Bible in order to appreciate the things of interest]:

If you should decide to visit Palestine, which it is hoped you will, before and after doing so thoroughly read again your Bible, this classic of classics, all in all the most interesting and fascinating of books. There are contained many things which, taken literally, we may not understand. It is not necessary, and it would perhaps be a waste of time to try. Our minds are too small, our understanding too limited. Possibly in some immaterial respects the published interpretations are literally incomplete, misleading, or inapplicable to our time. But in the main the language, as used, is accurate and well authenticated by science and by actual observations. The moral and religious principles of the Bible, both the Old and New Testaments, have never been and can never be successfully combated. Since the preservation of history commenced, there has never been anything approaching the Holy Bible as a literary production or a code for proper and desirable human conduct, or as the foundation for future hopes. If any here should believe this is an exaggeration, which is not probable, read again this book and you will be surprised. Visit Palestine, in the light of and under the inspiration of the Bible. Things that could not easily be destroyed are there. The landmarks of Palestine are as described in the Bible. The River Jordan, the Dead Sea, the Sea of Galilee, Mount of Olives, the Valley of Jehoshaphat, and many other places familiar to Bible readers; all these are indisputable evidence of the accuracy of that book in historical recitation. Many of the tombs, which in many cases referred to were deep down in the rocks, cannot be discovered or located, but others can be. Abraham, perhaps thousands of years B. C., was, according to the Bible, directed to and did secure a burial lot in the caves of Machpelah at Hebron and he and Isaac and Jacob and their wives were buried there. Consult Genesis again. Hebron is still a substantial place, easily located by the written description. The place of these tombs can be seen, though with some difficulty. Many of the mentionel wells or springs are still in use. The general topography of the country, as described in the Bible, you can verify. Also read Josephus, a historian of the first century. In short, the more we read and study the more we must be convinced of the absolute reliability of the "Book of Books." Much more than all this, the better men we will be, the more grateful we will be and the more anxious to have our country and the affairs of all its inhabitants carried on in conformance to its precepts.

The late wars seem to have influenced the rank and file of the men of the Near East to pay more attention to the long future. This appears from conversations with the dragomen or the merchants, the financiers or the working people of Egypt and other countries. It may be true that some, perhaps many, of the clergy or priests or teachers have taught or are teaching doctrines at variance with some parts of the Bible, particularly the New Testament. Others, of course, are better qualified to speak on this question; but that the influence of the principles of the Bible is now particularly extending all over the world and that it is essential to firmly reestablish peace, prosperity and happiness, cannot be reasonably denied.

The religious sentiment of the Near East, which seems apparent to a casual visitor, is striking and a hopeful sign for posterity. Indeed, it is in evidence throughout all continents. A token is found in the recent manly statement of President Harding concerning the Holy Bible. His utterances should furnish a theme for many sermons.

Jerusalem

Jerusalem is the city best known, by name at least, of any city in the universe, because Jesus Christ was crucified there. It is a large place, containing within the walls and outside probably 100,000 people. In many respects it is like the descriptions of the old Jerusalem. The "money changers" are there, though outside the present temple. The Jews on Fridays, possibly at other times, are at the "wailing wall." They constitute probably about one tenth of the whole population. The large majority are Arabs, although a great variety of races, with as many different costumes, are there. A traveler will see women in Palestine and in all the Mohammedan countries with covered faces. The city within the walls is up and down hills, with narrow streets and cobblestone pavements. The mosques and other religious buildings are magnificent. The walls are practically restored and will be maintained. There are pointed out a great many sacred places, such as Gethsemane, Golgotha, Lazarus' burial place, Pilate's court rooms, residences of Mary and Martha, etc., many of which alleged locations are not fully authenticated. The Zion movement, so called, up to date has not been entirely successful. Representatives of England, under the stress of war conditions, made promises that cannot be fulfilled. Jews are outnumbered and, besides, if they were in the majority, they would not, as a rule, be happy there. The motive for a Jew in living at Jerusalem would be strictly religious. There is an American colony in Jerusalem founded many years ago by Spofford, a Chicago lawyer, whose whole family, with one exception, had previously perished in a shipwreck. This colony in charge of a descendant is prosperous and generally respected.

To see Jerusalem with its surroundings, including Bethlehem, Nazareth, Hebron, Jericho, and large numbers of other places, should be the desire and, if possible, the intention of every living person. The hotel accommodations are fairly good, though simple. To describe Jerusalem in much detail would take time which cannot be spared, particularly in view of the fact that so much about it has been written and published. To see it, and before and after to read what has been written in the Bible, especially in the New Testament, is of highest interest and importance.

Public Aid to Children in Their Own Homes

Broken homes mended, mothers saved from the loss of their children, children assured a better chance in life—these are some of the results of "mothers' pension" laws now in force in all but six States, two States having been added in 1923. How these laws are administered in a representative group of communities is described in detail in a report just issued by the United States Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau on "Standards of Public Aid to Children in Their Own Homes."

Boston, Denver, and Saint Louis, Hennepin County, Minnesota (which includes Minneapolis), Haverhill, Massachusetts, Westchester and Montgomery Counties, New York, Northampton County, Pennsylvania, and Yellow Medicine County, Minnesota, were studied as representing communities of various types, from the large city to the rural county.

The purpose of the investigation was to collect material showing the methods and standards worked out in the communities studied, so that other agencies administering public aid to children in their own homes might benefit by their experience.

Reasons why mothers of young children found it necessary to seek public aid were studied. The death of the father of the family was the compelling factor in three fourths of the cases studied; in about one fifth of the cases, it was the father's illness or other incapacity.

In the communities studied, aid was granted for 3,049 children to the amount of $41,781, the monthly average per child for the different communities varying from $19.68 to $10.17.

Amounts granted to the families were in most cases based on carefully drawn-up family budgets, covering necessary food costs, fuel, light, clothing, rent, and miscellaneous items. The public aid granted was usually supposed to cover the deficit between the family budget, as estimated, and the family resources, though in four of the six States visited a maximum was fixed by law beyond which the administrative body could not go, no matter how great the need. Denver had the highest proportion of families with adequate incomes, as measured by the estimated budgets.

Extravagance had no place in the family budgets which are summarized in the report. Food estimates for a woman or girl over 16 varied from $12.35 to $9.78 a month in the various localities; for young children the estimates are several dollars less. Estimates for clothing allow a woman at home from $5.75 to $2.00 a month, and children at home somewhat less.

In all the communities studied, it was recognized that the mere giving of money was not all the help needed by these mothers and children. Nearly half of the fathers of the families had been laborers and semi-skilled workers, and of the group for whom weekly earnings were recorded 93 per cent had earned less than $35 a week. Often the mothers and children had suffered physically through low living standards even before the father's death and needed medical and health service, as well as advice about food and general hygiene. The agencies aimed to bring the families up to par physically, to suggest the best methods of household management, to advise about the recreation of children, and to act as friends of the lonely mother.

Perhaps the most interesting part of the whole report is the chapter entitled, "What the aid meant to the children." Instance after instance is given of the homes and families to whom such aid meant the difference between despair and the chance for happiness. For example:

"The 'S' family came to the attention of the officials administering allowances through the school. The teachers reported that the children were irregular in attendance, habitually tardy, and that they were poorly clothed and appeared to be neglected. Their school work was poor, and they frequently fell asleep over their lessons. Investigation showed that the father had died the year before, leaving little to his wife and four small sons except the heavily mortgaged ramshackle house in which they lived. They earned a scanty living by selling papers. The mother was frail, and she and the children were out in all kinds of weather, often in rain-soaked shoes and too thin clothing. They were up early in the morning to sell and were often out until late at night. They were given aid. It was six years later that the writer saw them in a comfortable homelike flat. The oldest boy held a fairly good position and was going to night school. One boy was in high school, and the others had good grade-school records.

"One brave-spirited woman with six children had tried to struggle along with what she could make out of keeping a confectionary store, at which she hoped that school children would buy. She had no business training, and things went very badly. There were days when her own children came from school to find not even bread, and she heard them cry with hunger. But it was only when a kindly neighbor, suspecting the truth, said to her, 'Look me in the eye and tell me whether you have had anything to eat to-day,' that the truth came out, and public aid was arranged for the family.

"The contrast that exists between many homes struggling along with no such aid and one in which it is being adequately administered was brought out by Mrs. N in telling of her own childhood. 'I thank God for the mothers' pension. My mother says she would not have me take it, but I think I ought to be thankful I can have it. My father left my mother with nothing; we had no clothes and never saw the inside of a school.' Mrs. N's two small boys, clean and healthy, were not suffering the same fate."

Twelve Presidents on Prohibition

According to Cherrington's History of the Prohibition Movement, twelve presidents of the United States signed the following declaration either before, during, or after their occupancy of the White House. The declaration, according to the Ladies' Home Journal, was written by Edward C. Delevan who had been a wine merchant in Albany, New York. The twelve presidents who signed the declaration were: Jackson, Madison, John Adams, Van Buren, Tyler, Polk, Taylor, Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan, Lincoln, and Johnson.

"Being satisfied from observation and experience, as well as from medical testimony, that ardent spirits, as a drink, is not only needless, but hurtful, and that entire disuse of it would tend to promote the health, the virtue, and the happiness of the community, we hereby express our conviction that should the citizens of the United States, and especially the young men, discontinue entirely the use of it, they would not only promote their own personal comfort, but the good of our country and the world."

Progressive Laws for Children's Welfare

Ben B. Lindsey has long been known as one of the hardest fighters for a distinctive children's court, and as judge of a famous juvenile court in Denver. Session after session his bills for adequate protection for children have been defeated, but finally the legislature of 1923 adopted four bills proposed by him. The legislature was Republican; Governor Sweet is a progressive Democrat, but both have broad humanitarian ideas.

Of these four bills, two raised the age of delinquency and dependency from 16 to 18. In other words they extend the right of the state in its chancery court capacity to help children up to 18 instead of 16.

Of the other two bills one is the maternity law which permits mothers' compensation to mothers of children yet unborn. The State, in other words, will give the child a decent chance to be born, thus bringing it through one of the most dangerous periods of life. Colorado is perhaps the first State to pass a law of this kind.

The fourth bill restores the jurisdiction originally exercised by the juvenile court so that it not only specializes in correcting children physically and morally, but also can protect children against all persons whether parents or others. The bill gives the special court in Denver, over which Judge Lindsey presides, exclusive jurisdiction in cases where children are concerned and coordinates in other courts in criminal adults who violate laws for the protection of children.

Military Training Camps

The Radio Corporation of America has offered as a prize an up-to-date receiving set to the young man who makes the best record in radio instruction in this year's Citizens' Military Training Camps, to be held August 1 to August 30, 1923.

This competition will be open to students of the White and Blue Courses.

The Citizens' Military Training Camps in the Seventh Corps Area, which includes the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, the 29 northern and eastern counties of Missouri, Kansas, and Arkansas, will be held at Fort Snelling, Minnesota, Fort Des Moines, Iowa, and Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

The Government provides everything free, including railroad fare, food, uniform, equipment, and medical attendance.

Particular attention will be paid to athletics and social entertainment.

Full information and application blanks may be had by applying to the local Military Training Camps Association representative, post office, or railroad station, or to the Commanding General, Seventh Corps Area, Army Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

Sister E. B. Burton writes that her trip to Nauvoo, after the first day which was uncomfortably hot, was very enjoyable. She has been staying with her sister, Mrs. Ida Layton, but now has rented a house in Nauvoo and expects to make her home there for the present at least.

A Model City

The idea of a model city is receiving wide discussion today. There are garden cities in England established and apparently successful. There are several writing in philosophical journals referring to a city of Zion or a model city under some other name. Utopia is the name often applied to such model cities.

H. G. Wells has recently published a book, Men Like Gods, which gives a further suggestion in this direction. The five principles he lays down in this book, according to Current Opinion, are:

"Every young Utopian had to learn the Five Principles of Liberty, without which civilization is impossible.

"The first was the Principle of Privacy. This is, that all individual personal facts were private between the citizen and the public organization to which he intrusted them, and could be used only for his convenience and with his sanction.

"The second was the Principle of Free Movement. A citizen, subject to the due discharge of his public obligations, might go without permission or explanation to any part of the Utopian planet.

"The third was the Principle of Unlimited Knowledge. All that was known in Utopia, except individual personal facts about living people, was on record and easily available.

"The fourth Principle was that Lying is the Blackest Crime. 'Where there are lies there cannot be freedom.'

"The fifth Principle of Liberty in Utopia was Free Discussion and Criticism."

The President's Tour

Probably no President has spoken to so many people as President Harding has, for it is under his administration that the radio has been perfected. It is impossible to estimate the number of people who "listened in" while the President was speaking on his western and Alaskan tour.

This method of getting before the people the views of the chief executive is invaluable. It affords an opportunity never before realized to place directly before the people the vital problems of the country. The President's speeches on his tour are performing a function of great importance, not only in gaining friends for the President but in informing the public upon matters of immediate concern.

The Near East Relief is again sending out an appeal for contributions of cash or cast-off clothing to protect the refugees next winter. A recent report states that because of American generosity 115,000 orphans are receiving food, clothing, and industrial education.

Contributions may be sent to Near East Relief, 701 Scarrit Building, Kansas City, Missouri.

Kewanee News

The Savanna Saints did nobly in caring for the visitors of the Kewanee district conference at Savanna, Illinois, June 9 and 10. The rain on Sunday interfered with the program as outlined, but even then they considered it a good conference.

R. W. Farrell announced the reunion dates, August 10 to 20, the place, Galva. Speakers expected are J. F. Garver, J. A. Koehler, J. F. Martin, and E. A. Curtis. Brother R. W. Farrell is in charge of Twin-Cities and reports himself feeling encouraged with the outlook there.

LETTERS AND NEWS

J. R. Lambert Has Comforting Experience

My dear wife, with whom I lived in loving companionship for a little more than forty-nine years, passed over into that "other and better world," February 8, 1923. Partly on account of an accident, she suffered almost continuously for eleven years, and at many times her suffering was intense.

Sister Lambert was a good wife and mother. Her home was the little kingdom in which she loved to operate best of all. Nevertheless she found times (and the disposition was always with her) when she could bring help and cheer to the poor and needy, and she did it in her quiet, unassuming way. She was in many respects a remarkable woman, considering the very limited opportunities she had for acquiring a school education in the times of her childhood and youth. She was industrious as a bee, clean, orderly, and very saving.

But you know that we all have some weak points in our make up. She had hers. She was very prone to look on the dark side of the picture. This made her life, to a great extent, a burden to herself, and of course others near her felt the effects of it more or less. When she left us, not one of her relatives was present to witness her departure. She passed away quietly and peacefully.

Just a few weeks before her departure, when she had been expressing her grief and, as she saw it, the hopeless prospect before us (so far as this world is concerned), I felt impressed to talk with her a very short time. I tried to be very careful as to what I said and how I said it. After this she said but little, and was almost entirely free from expressing any degree of sorrow or complaint. But she had already said: "I can't see any light side to the picture. It all looks dark to me, and I cannot be happy under existing conditions." (Mark the word "happy.")

Some time after our return from Lamoni, Iowa, where her mortal remains had been laid away beside our three children, I found a strong and increasing desire to know something of her present condition. This desire became so strong that I concluded to pray. I felt seriously about what the effect might be. In fact, I felt that it was too serious to be hastily dismissed, and without earnest prayer. So, three times within one week I mentioned this, which was the uppermost thing in my mind.

The first time I prayed, I enjoyed a fair degree of the Holy Spirit, which convinced me that it was not displeasing to God, so, after the lapse of one or two days I prayed again concerning the same matter. I was able to exercise more faith, and enjoyed still more of the Spirit. The third time was a feast to my soul, and I felt sure the Lord would answer me in some way, but whether he would grant my request or administer to me a gentle reproof I did not know. But knowing that he would do the right thing, I felt prepared for whatever he would see fit to give. This was my last time to mention this matter in prayer. I felt that I had done my part, and now I could well afford to patiently wait till my request was answered in some way, for I felt sure that I would get some kind of reply to my petitions.

I must not omit to mention some of the statements I made in these short prayers. First I said: "If you will give me the much desired information in a spiritual dream, or through impressions of the Holy Spirit, it will be perfectly satisfactory to me."

Second, I also said: "Lord, I do not know but what my wife is better prepared for full reward than I am, but this does not trouble me in the least. The greater her reward the more I will be pleased."

Third, "Now, heavenly Father, this is what I think about it, with my very limited supply of knowledge; but you can, of course, do what you see will be for the best good of all concerned. If my request is denied, I will try to adjust myself to your decision without any thought of rebellion or opposition, for I know that your ways are always right."

Fourth, "If this request is found to be in harmony with your wisdom and love, and there is anything in it that would have a tendency to instruct, comfort, or confirm the members of the church, or others who believe in thee and in Jesus Christ, and who love and are searching after the truth, I will be glad to furnish it for their inspection."

On the morning of February 28, about 2 or 3 o'clock, or March 1, I am not sure which as I did not note the date at the time, I was suddenly wakened from my sleep by what appeared to be a vigorous effort to secure my attention. I felt sure I heard a voice and was strongly impressed with the thought that it was a call to me. I waited just a few minutes, wondering why they did not call again, as I was then wide awake, and anxious to hear what message, if any, they had for me. (I use the plural pronoun they, for it seemed to me from the very start of this extraordinary and unusual interview, that there was one or more personages with my wife, though I did not see them.) Just as this time I heard a voice, loud and clear, call my name: "Joseph." I immediately turned my face to the direction from which the sound came, and answered, "What is it, dear?"

Her answer came—not in a rush, nor so loud as the call, but without delay. It was deliberate, clear, and emphatic: "I'm happy now."

I answered at once, "Thank God for that." This closed the interview, with my soul filled (once more) in joyful contemplation upon the love, wisdom, and condescension of the infinite God. It is all very simple, but supremely grand.

Much more could be said in connection with this wonderful experience, but I submit it as it is, according to the promise made in one of my prayers, and the growing impression that it will be of real benefit to many of our people, and to some others who are not yet with us, but are lovers of the truth, so far as they have been able to learn it, and who believe in God and Jesus Christ his Son.

J. R. LAMBERT.

Meetings in Trenton, Missouri

Trenton, Missouri, Branch has just closed a series of meetings, beginning June 3, with the writer doing the preaching for the first four nights, when Elder George Jenkins of Independence arrived and continued the preaching each night until Sunday, June 24, except Saturday and Thursday, June 21, when the young people gave a musical program and ice cream supper.

Brother Jenkins's sermons, which were to the point and very helpful to the Saints, were listened to with much interest by many nonmembers who attended the various sessions so that quite a number heard the gospel story. We advertised his subjects in both daily papers and scattered about five hundred Angel Message tracts, so had a fairly good attendance each night though there was a cheap show holding forth for about ten days on the same street and two or three nights were rainy. Elder Jenkins used a large chart to illustrate some of his sermons, which made it very interesting to the Saints.

Brother Marion Bingham, of Saint Joseph, had charge of the music during the meetings and did much toward their success.

Three noonday meetings were held with the shopmen, who listened to the sermons very attentively. No one was baptized but several were left very near the kingdom.

Elder A. C. Anson and Sister J. D. Proffit spoke to the Saints at the Wednesday night prayer service and Sunday morning sacrament meeting exhorting us to be more faithful, using the talents we have for the betterment of the work. Elder Jenkins made many friends for the work and we hope to have him return.

Elder A. C. Anson and family, of Kingston, Missouri, Marion Bingham and wife, of Saint Joseph; E. E. Ranes, of Jamesport, Missouri; Bert G. Horn and family, of Minnesota; Sister W. F. Moore, of Lamoni, Iowa, are Saints who have recently moved here and placed their membership with Trenton Branch, thus strengthening us in the work.

Brother Bingham and a corps of helpers are busy installing a baptismal font in the church and are also making arrangements to reshingle and fresco the building.

Our Sunday school beat the Religio fifty-two points in attendance during the last quarter. The Religio beat the Sunday school two points the first quarter. Now the contest is on in great shape for the next quarter.

The Women's Department is doing splendid work.

J. D. PROFFIT.

Saint Louis News

Bishop B. R. McGuire stopped over and preached Sunday morning, June 24, to the great pleasure of the Saints. He left, however, for the East that same afternoon.

Elizabeth Archibald, daughter of Elder Russell Archibald, and Raymond Hands were married on the evening of July 4 in the church at Saint Louis. Elder Archibald has been president of the Saint Louis Branch for more years than anyone else and also for many years president of the Saint Louis District. Raymond Hands is a son of W. O. Hands, of Kansas City, who has always been very active in church work in that city. Sister Archibald has been active in the Sunday school work and in the choir in Saint Louis for several years.

Mrs. Eveline Burgess left for Lamoni, Iowa, Monday, July 9, for a long visit with her sister. She was baptized into the church there fifty-five years ago, has been a teacher in the Sunday school for 51 years, and has a class of elderly women averaging fourteen or fifteen in attendance. She was married in Saint Louis, and that has been her home ever since. She has been treasurer of the Sunday school, taught in the Religio, was general president of the Women's Auxiliary (as it was then called), and served for several years on the General Advisory Board. She has now broken up house-keeping, disposed of her household goods, so her leaving partakes somewhat of the nature of a removal. The Department of Women of Saint Louis therefore gave her a reception on July 6 at the home of the organizer, Mrs. Zoe Davidson. Sister Burgess has served in the local women's work at various times and in various offices for some thirty-eight years, since the Mite Society was first organized in 1885. The thirty-six in attendance made her feel that she was leaving indeed many warm and tried friends.

The Zion's Hope Sunday School held their annual Fourth of July picnic at Forest Park despite the threatening weather. This Sunday school is one of the oldest in the church as it was organized in April, 1864. It also had the honor of giving its name to our little Sunday school paper.

Elder S. A. Burgess was in Saint Louis for a few days and spoke Sunday morning on "Faith and reason," with particular applications. The evening speaker was the pastor, Elder R. Archibald.

Reunion News

Northern Wisconsin Reunion

The fifteenth annual reunion of Northern Wisconsin District closed July 8 after ten days of educational and spiritual meetings.

The Saints came together on the morning of June 29, praying that the reunion might be a success, and all might be blessed. Not many were present at this meeting, but a good spirit prevailed. The testimonies borne were to the effect that each might not only receive blessings, but that they might render service to others.

Before the reunion began many worked faithfully to have all things in readiness before the Saints gathered on the grounds. Many more tents were set up than in previous years, which were all filled, and many of the Saints were entertained in the homes of the Saints.

The speakers were President F. M. McDowell, Apostle J. F. Garver, Bishop James F. Keir, E. J. Lenox, district president; Leonard Houghton, missionary supervisor, and A. L. Whiteaker. The sermons were educational and helpful, and these men truly proved to be men of God.

The prayer meetings held each morning were well attended, and many earnest prayers and testimonies were offered.

At 10.45 a symposium and problems meeting was held in charge of F. M. McDowell. Missionary and financial problems were considered. J. F. Garver and J. F. Keir assisted in these meetings.

Preaching services held at 2.30 p. m. except Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, when the time was spent in recreation, such as volley ball, boat riding, and other forms of recreation.

At the 10.45 a. m. and 2.30 p. m. service children were entertained in a large tent by Sister Leda Colbert of Chetek, and Sister Effie Hield of Janesville, the time being spent in story-telling, sewing, prayer service, and recreation. Sister Hield was present in the interests of the Department of Women, and her work was much appreciated by the district for her interest in our women and children.

The financial situation was explained at the evening preaching services, as was also spiritual and temporal stewardships, all subjects bearing on the theme of the reunion, "Good Master, what must I do to be saved?" and to bring about a perfect man in a perfect society.

Many attended from various parts of the district as well as from Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, and Missouri. More isolated Saints attended this year than in previous years; their testimonies were a spiritual uplift to those living in branches.

On Sunday at 8 p. m. the Saints came together fasting to the sacrament service, filling the large auditorium almost to capacity, and God wonderfully blessed his people during this service by his Spirit. A letter from Patriarch W. A. McDowell was read. As he has been with us in previous reunions his letter was much appreciated, and brought with it endeared memories of the past. Many spoke of the fatherly council and advice given along life's pathway by him.

At 4.30 Sunday nine were baptized, and at 5.15 a confirmation service was held, and several were administered to after the confirmations.

The reunion was a success both spiritually and financially the net gain from the refreshment stand being nearly thirty dollars and from the dining hall about seventy dollars.

The Saints separated, refreshed in spirit, feeling that the experience here was wonderful and expressed a desire to return in 1924.

Minnesota and North Dakota Districts

The joint reunion of the Minnesota and North Dakota Districts, held at Fargo, North Dakota, has passed into history. The camp, consisting of the new North Dakota tent, a dining tent, a large community tent fitted for cooking and eating for those who desired to take advantage of it, and several smaller tents occupied by some who had come from a distance, was located in a pleasant spot convenient to the city and yet removed from the city confusion. There was plenty of shade and good playgrounds for the children and young people.

The first three days were stormy, a violent windstorm striking the whole vicinity Sunday night, which did considerable damage in the cities and to farm buildings; but the tents all held fast and no damage was done to the camp.

The children and young people had ample entertainment with games and sports and a wiener and marshmallow roast one evening during the week. After Tuesday the young people had their regular morning prayer meeting at 8 o'clock.

After the first few days the weather cleared and remained cool and pleasant through the remainder of the reunion. Flies and mosquitoes were very considerate and did not intrude to any annoying extent.

The speakers were Apostle Gillen and Bishop Keir of Independence; Elder M. Rasmusson of Sykeston, North Dakota; Elder William Sparling of Minneapolis; Elder J. E. Wildermuth of Fargo; and Charles Case, a priest and Bishop's agent of Winnipeg, who spoke several times to the juniors, and who with his wife gave much help in the entertainment of the young people. Elder Rud of Tulsa, Oklahoma, who is traveling by auto during the reunion season, also preached once on the subject of "Charity"; and Brother Ferd Hamil of Fargo, who with his wife has been attending Graceland, gave a talk one afternoon on the work being done at our church college. He probably disabused the minds of some of any misunderstanding they might have entertained in regard to the advantages of college experience.

Mrs. M. D. Graham, field worker for North Dakota, was present and held several institute sessions in connection with the Sunday school, Department of Women, and the Department of Recreation and Expression; and as a result a better understanding prevails as to the purpose and aim of these helps of the church.

The prayer meetings were exceptionally good, the underlying theme of the testimonies being of a character to strengthen the faith of the Saints in the work and in the final triumph of right and truth. Two prophecies were given that were very encouraging. The Saints met one morning in fasting and prayer for an afflicted sister who was also administered to, thereby receiving hope and courage.

The sermons seemed to fit the needs of the hour in a remarkable way. They were simple, clear, and logical, and made special appeal to the members to cultivate a deeper faith in the rites, ceremonies, and ordinances of the church. Bishop Keir preached at the forenoon services—mostly to the Saints—his underlying theme being the daily living of our religion, the regeneration of the individual before the redemption of Zion. He also explained the stewardship plan and emphasized the necessity of living in conformity with the law.

Apostle Gillen, in spite of fatigue and ill health, preached excellent sermons at the evening hour to a crowded tent, some nonmembers attending regularly. He spoke of the power of influence in our lives passing on and on through the lives of others; that every good act forges a link in the chain that binds Satan. The church was exhorted to study and learn its duties and to live in accordance therewith, and was assured that if this was done in love and humility that peace and harmony would prevail.

At the business sessions the officers of both districts were sustained with the addition of the name of Sister Lottie Zuelsdorf as superintendent of the Department of Women for the Minnesota District, which office has been unfilled for some time. The North Dakota reunion will meet next year at Sykeston; the Minnesota reunion at Minneapolis.

Independence

The church library has been moved into Bartholomew Hall, occupying the space vacated by the transfer of the General Church Offices to the Battery Block. The radio broadcasting station will be moved into the little brick house west of the church which was formerly occupied by the library. The radio has long needed better facilities for handling programs and the move is a welcomed one. The little building now is adequate for the station; and the library, which had outgrown its former location, now has room for expansion in Bartholomew Hall.

The radio programs which have been discontinued for several weeks were to be resumed on Sunday, July 15, but on account of poor atmospheric conditions, the one planned was postponed until the following Sunday. George E. Anway is in charge of the musical programs.

The Conference Choir under the direction of James L. Houghton is now being organized. The number of voices is to be unlimited, but it is anticipated that there will be two hundred or over before the opening of General Conference. The choir meets at the Stone Church on Thursday evenings. Two meetings have already been held and over a hundred members are now enrolled.

The Institute Chorus which consists of trained voices only, is also in process of organization, under direction of Paul Craig. Many have already passed the examination necessary for admission.

The Conference Choir and the choir of the Stone Church have been combined for the summer, Mr. Houghton acting as chorister.

Sunday services in Zion were as follows: Stone Church, 11 a. m., preaching by J. W. Peterson. Anthem sung by choir was "Jerusalem, O turn thee" by Gounod; solo entitled "God is our refuge," by Ward-Stephens, was sung by George E. Anway. Preaching at 8 p. m. was by Ammon White. Liberty Street church, 11 a. m., preaching by Ammon White; 9 p. m., preaching by George Jenkins. Walnut Park, E. D. Moore preached in the morning and Edward Rannie at 7.30. Enoch Hill, 11 a. m., preaching by J. V. Roberts; 7 p. m., Amos E. Allen.

The second session of the quarterly business meetings was held at the Stone Church, July 9, at 8 p. m. The following were elected delegates to the General Conference: R. V. Hopkins, J. A. Becker, W. W. Smith, F. M. Smith, R. J. Lambert, B. R. McGuire, E. A. Smith, M. H. Siegfried, Mrs. W. W. Smith, Evan Fry, J. M. Terry, E. L. Kelley, J. F. Keir, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, H. O. Smith, J. F. Curtis, S. A. Burgess, A. K. Dillee, I. A. Smith, Joseph Luff, F. A. Smith, E. D. Moore, C. B. Hartshorn, J. A. Gardner, W. D. Bullard, P. M. Hanson, Dora Glines, E. C. Harrington, F. H. Edwards, Mrs. B. R. McGuire, Ammon White, V. A. Reese, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, D. O. Cato, H. C. Burgess, Charles Blair, J. W. Rushton, Ellis Short, sr., J. W. Peterson, H. W. Harder.

One hundred seventy nominations were made and 472 ballots cast. Delegates are listed in order of the highest number of votes received.

Far West Stake

Missionary work has been resumed after an enforced cessation caused by the illness of appointees or members of families.

Brother O. W. Okerlind has been in the field at various points since the middle of January, although not well as yet. Brother A. H. Parsons, assisted by Brother J. W. A. Bailey with his lantern work, held tent meetings for about a week at Maitland, where Brother C. E. Harpe baptized seven over a year ago. Every effort was made to induce attendance, but the people would not respond. The meetings will be resumed at another time. The falling off of interest shows the lesson of keeping everlastingly at it. Brother Harpe remained as long as he could after his successful work, but a few weeks' meetings, when people are interested and aroused, are not enough. Missionary experiences emphasize "continuity" or, in other words, "hanging on like grim death."

Brother T. C. Kelley, missionary supervisor, is in the northern end of our territory, preaching and preparing for an active season with his aids. He may hold tent meetings at Mound City. Brother W. D. Tordoff, of the Isle of Pines Mission, will work in the stake until he enters Graceland in the fall. He is at Fortescue, preaching, and with his guitar singing the gospel in public and in private. He is a forceful speaker and will do a good work.

Brother R. D. Weaver has of late been able to resume and is holding a series of meetings with the Third Saint Joseph Branch.

Following the last conference of the stake the South Park Mission was organized into the Fourth Saint Joseph Branch, with Brother Coventry Archibald as president. He is assisted by some valuable young men and devoted members. Brother Archibald is a hard church worker although busy with daily toil.

The First Saint Joseph Branch and the entire stake are benefited by the incoming of Brother Orman Salisbury and Milo Burnett with their families from Council Bluffs. Brother H. C. Timm, an active priest, came with them. Send us some more of the same kind, Council Bluffs! Brethren Salisbury and Burnett will assist the president of the stake as acting counselors until such time as a permanent arrangement is made. The retiring counselors, J. W. Roberts, resigning because of ill health, and E. F. Robertson, requesting transfer, have labored well and their services are appreciated and acknowledged.

Until transfer is made, Brother Robertson is making special effort to revive and strengthen the work in the city of Richmond. The old church building of the Alma Branch, located between Richmond and Lexington Junction, will be removed to a lot near the courthouse in the city.

Brethren George Jenkins and J. D. Proffit recently held a series of meetings in the city of Trenton, home of Governor Hyde. Besides services held in the church and on the lawn, meetings were held at the railroad shops during the noon hour. Every known method of reaching the people was resorted to and good results obtained. A follow-up series of meetings will be held soon.

We have lost the big Kansas man, Brother Samuel Twombly, who has been transferred to the Northeastern Kansas District. We miss him; he is a whole-hearted fellow and a good worker. Kansas has gained, Missouri has lost. Success to Brother Sam and his fine family! They are not far away and will "come over" at times.

Work in all the branches in Saint Joseph is moving upward among young and older people. The various lines of department work are developing well and a forward-looking spirit prevails generally. Some missionary openings in the vicinity of the city are promising and preaching appointments for the local priesthood are scheduled in city and in rural portions of the territory, quarterly. The local missionary effort, and the branch work, like all other work, religious and secular, increase as they are taken up and prosecuted with interest and vigor.

We mention the annual banquet of the First Branch choir and associated members although it occurred some time ago. It was an enjoyable occasion. By the way, we have much musical talent in this city, in Cameron, Stewartsville, Guilford, and other places "too numerous to mention." A united effort for the music of the reunion is being developed, all choirs being furnished the same list of musical numbers.

The stake bishopric has been hard at work prosecuting the work of forming stewardship organizations in harmony with the plan published recently in the HERALD. It is acting in conjunction with the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric. A beginning is being made, in the confident belief that by the blessing of God based upon a determination to attack and solve the problem, all will be worked out in due time.

Some time ago Brother Arthur H. Mills gave a piano recital, assisted by Brother Eugene Christy, vocalist, at the Y. W. C. A., Saint Joseph. The work was presented under the auspices of the First Church choir and was well received by musical people of the city. Recently Brother Christy sang the leading tenor part in "The Masque of Pandora," a very chaste and classical performance in the auditorium. Such contributions as these are valuable not only for art's sake but also because they give our work prestige, as the citizens appreciate the talent of our people. Many of our young men and women have made their mark in the musical life of the city, past and present.

The annual reunion will be held on our fine and well-equipped grounds, north of Stewartsville, beginning August 17. Saints from everywhere are invited. We will have good programs, a fine time, and visitors from many localities. Get ready now!

Brother T. W. Williams spoke recently in city branches touching upon subjects of general interest, and especially upon the late convention. Saints were pleased to hear from him again.

"We" and others of the brethren have visited quite a number of the branches during the past summer. It is always a pleasure to go anywhere among the fine people located in this territory. We are sorry we cannot mention all by branch name—we couldn't do justice should we try to commend them:

By the way, we wonder why more outlying people do not move into this great and excellent farming territory. There is no better place in the world in which to farm than this rolling prairie of northwest Missouri. Fine branches and fine groups of Saints are ready to welcome and glad to receive additional members. You are missing it by not looking up this territory!

The energetic brethren of Cameron Branch are alive to demands. They enlarged their present chapel some time ago and also purchased a parsonage. However, the church building is entirely too small to accommodate their large attendance; and they dare not advertise much, lest they be obliged to turn away the army of comers. They have, therefore, purchased another building site and are preparing to build a larger church in the near future. There is a great future in this city and vicinity. Good work has been done, and is being continued by Brethren Sheehy, Fiddick, Sloan, and others. Lots of growing young members are there.

There is not a building in the stake sufficiently commodious to answer the demands in conference sessions. "Give us room that we may dwell." However, these demands will be met, locally and generally, in due time. Incidentally, the First Saint Joseph Branch has installed a new furnace, repainted and repaired the lower auditorium, and installed a new electric lighting system, the latter the gift of Brother Hugh McNutt. The upper assembly room will soon be renovated and repainted. Guilford church is to be repainted and the auditorium redecorated.

Not the least in our work is the Department of Women, which is steadily growing in the branches, so much so that the brethren, in many cases, find much interest in the well-arranged, intellectual programs put forward by the sisters. Every branch needs this important feature to make its program complete. It is the "effectual working in the measure of every part," nothing omitted, that brings success.

Some of our musical artists have signified pleasure in hearing a number of quotations bearing upon their divine and wonderful art. By request, we give to them and to others the benefit of these exquisite sentiments, the interpretations of great hearts and inspired minds, expressing their appreciation of "music, the most spiritual of all the arts."

"Music is the mediator between the spiritual and the sensual life. Although the spiritual be not master of that which it creates through music, yet it is blessed in this creation, which like every creation of art, is mightier than the artist."—Beethoven.

"Music is the harmonious voice of creation; an echo of the invisible world; one note of the divine concord which the entire universe is destined one day to sound."—Mazzini.

"There is something marvelous in music. I might almost say it is, in itself, a marvel. Its position is somewhere between the region of thought and that of phenomena; a glimmering medium between mind and matter; related to both, and yet differing from either; spiritual, and yet requiring rhythm; material, and yet independent of space."—H. Heine.

"The meaning of the song goes deep. Who is there that, in logical words, can express the effect music has upon us? a kind of inarticulate, unfathomable speech, which leads us to the edge of the infinite, and lets us for moments gaze into that!"—Carlyle.

"Yet music is the prophet's art; among the gifts that God has sent, one of the most magnificent."—Longfellow.

Our publicity work has been neglected in the midst of pressing cares and urgent demands upon our time. We hope soon to have a correspondent who shall be able to report more frequently, and better.

May we say one word, and that very seriously and soberly, in closing. The work of the Lord is reviving and growing, notwithstanding apparent difficulties and a variety of hindrances, usual to the progress and development of any very great movement. But, and we say it confidently, the time is very near when the work of the church will move forward in great unity and power, under the divine favor, in marked and peculiar endowment. We have known this to be assured in a time then seemingly far distant, in our youth; but intimations and intuitions of late have indicated the near realization of this great and long-expected day of endowment and power. Let no one be discouraged, but all take heart of grace and go forward!

Pleasure and duty are a hard pair to drive in double harness.

Eastern Michigan District

June 2 and 3 should have been dates of importance to every worker of Eastern Michigan District. A splendid and interesting program was prepared and notices distributed to the various branches. The elders, who should be most interested in the district Sunday school affairs, were to meet in conjunction with the Sunday school workers in a district convention, but as has been the case of late years, Saturday showed a very poor response and few were in attendance. On the day of all days, when the business of the district is to be transacted for such an important arm of the church as the Sunday school, the attendance should be at least representative of the district.

The morning session of prayer opened at 10 o'clock, subject, "Unity." A splendid spirit prevailed and all rejoiced. At 11.15, the opening address of welcome was by W. H. Sheffer. Superintendent L. E. Grice also spoke, using as his theme, "Our aim." The early afternoon session was devoted to the reading of reports and to business. At 3 p. m. Sister Millie Mitchel gave a reading followed by an able address by the president of the elders' quorum on "What the quorum expects to do for its members, departments, and district." "District observation" by the district president was then discussed. The rest of the afternoon was given over to general discussion. In the evening at 7.30 there was congregational singing, followed by a sermon by J. R. Grice.

On Sunday a goodly number enjoyed a splendid prayer service. God came very near to us and we were caused to rejoice. In the afternoon the elders' quorum met in the basement apartments. Congregational singing was conducted by the district chorister, followed by a sermon at 2 o'clock by Elder J. R. Grice, subject, "Coordination." At 3 p. m. the sermon was by Elder W. M. Grice followed by general discussion. Preaching was in the evening again. General discussions give opportunity for all to express their views and are often a splendid thing in bringing out salient points in our workers' experience.

The time was when our conferences were well attended. Hundreds came to our two-day meetings, but to-day we have difficulty in getting attendance on Saturday. Two days of meeting or convention is a thing of the past. It is said that "necessity knows no law." Shall we find it necessary to hold our business sessions on Sunday in order that our districts may be correctly represented? We sincerely hope not.

The above is not only true in this district, but in many others as well, and the great question is: How shall we solve the problem and create the interest which is necessary to the accomplishment of the great work ahead? We may be able to visualize the "Hill of Zion" with the sunlight of God's presence streaming down upon it and see the travelers wending their way toward the top with joyful countenances, but we must not be oblivious to the shadow of the valley ere we make the ascent. Conditions as above are not at all pleasant, but to shut our eyes and say "they do not exist" will never solve the problem. There is most surely a cause, and to find it and apply the remedy is our duty.

May God give us strength to battle on, to see our lack of interest and not to lay the trouble at another's door, thinking thus to avoid our own responsibility, but each be willing to contribute his part in the interest of the district that the work of God may prosper is our prayer. However, prayer alone will never get results. We must work as well as pray. I am in sympathy with one of the pointed paragraphs contained in the printed program which states, "You will have to do more than pat yourself on the back to get results." May we find the statement true, "Disappointments are only rounds in the ladder that leads to success." J. R. GRICE.

News From Council Bluffs

On Monday, June 25, about a hundred and ten Saints met at the home of Elder O. Salisbury and family as they were departing the next day for their new home in Saint Joseph. Elder George Beaty, on behalf of the Saints, presented a silver set as a token of the appreciation of the Saints of Brother Salisbury's work among them. Songs and words of commendation from the present district president added to the joy of the evening.

On the 27th, Bishop Karlstrom gave an illustrated lecture at the church. Those attending seemed to be much interested in the history of his mission and the illustrations of the different parts of the South Sea Islands. That which was of most interest and worth seemed to be the advancement the natives are making in gospel service and Christlike character.

The Sunday schools of the district held a picnic on Independence Day in the reunion grounds. So many were absent from the city that there was not as large an attendance as had been expected, but those present enjoyed each other's association.

The reunion this year will be held at Prospect Park where two previous reunions have been held. All are urged to attend and enjoy the good spirit which we are praying will be present.

We are informed that Brother George Lincoln, wife, and wife's sister Clara, will depart for their future home in California soon, and no doubt will be on their way by the time this item appears in the HERALD.

Brother and Sister McCord, of Malvern, are at the Jennie Edmondson Hospital with their fourteen-year-old son who was injured just before the Fourth while handling some fireworks. Part of his hand had to be amputated.

Brother Lee Landon and Miss Lucile Eliason from Montana were recently married. They will make their home in Council Bluffs for the present.

Wichita Flood Aids Church Building

The flood which struck the city of Wichita June 10 and did much damage to buildings and surrounding country, turned out to be an aid to the workers who are remodeling the church building.

While work was being done on the building the flood broke, rain coming down in torrents. In a very short time the entire neighborhood was one vast lake, and the basement of the church was filled with water in about forty minutes. Since then it has been discovered that the flood has made excavation of the basement an easy matter.

The water stood from one to six feet in Douglas Avenue, the main street of the city. Many of the business houses and homes of the city were flooded, many taking refuge in the school buildings and other available places. Near six hundred were cared for by the charitable organizations of the city.

Several families of Saints were in the flooded district and one or two suffered a slight damage to their household goods. Otherwise they are none the worse for their experience.

Meetings Not Affected by Weather

Philadelphia writes that the interest in prayer meetings is on the increase at the beginning of the summer season, although the weather being warm, it would seem that the opposite would prevail. Prayer meetings are being held in the basement of the church where the temperature is lower, making it more comfortable. The meetings are interesting and inspiring.

Little Sioux

President F. M. Smith was present at the Little Sioux Conference at Magnolia, Iowa, June 23 and 24, giving two addresses, Saturday night and Sunday morning. His subjects related to the social problems of the church, his remarks being edifying and encouraging.

Sunday afternoon, Bishop A. V. Karlstrom, who recently returned from the South Sea Islands, addressed the conference and in the evening gave a lecture illustrated by stereopticon views of the islands.

Large numbers attended the meetings on Sunday, making it necessary to adjourn to the schoolhouse auditorium Sunday morning and afternoon to accommodate those in attendance.

Dry Fork Branch Reports Progress

A very enjoyable time was had at Dry Fork Branch on June 24 consisting of an all-day meeting with basket dinner. Many Saints and friends were in attendance from near-by as well as distant branches, some coming as far as fifty miles.

Our Bishop's agent, Brother Charles Wesner, of Centralia, Illinois, was the speaker at the 11 o'clock hour, and nearly everyone expressed the opinion that it was a wonderful discourse. He surely gave us much food for thought.

We have a nice little Sunday school and are working together for the advancement of the great cause, which eventually must go to all the world.

Brother Bruce E. Brown has been holding meetings at this place for the past ten days with good attendance almost every night. One Methodist lady said to me recently, "It does seem that you people have your church organized just as Christ organized his church." She is reading the Call at Evening and thinks it is wonderful.

B. H. WARREN.

Suggestion for General Conference

Elder J. Frank Curtis and I were present at the opening session of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, held in Indianapolis in May. I also attended several other sessions after Brother Curtis left the city.

There were 877 delegates on the main floor and about 50 officials on the platform, but none of the latter voted. There were no women delegates, but several acted as reporters or clerks for committees. It took nearly three hours to organize, which was in charge of a moderator. A ten-minute speech was allowed in making a nomination, and when the nominations were all made a ten-minute speech was allowed the one who seconded the nomination. They voted by ballot for which the assembly was divided into twenty-two sections, each section having a chairman, secretary, and two tellers. In this way it took thirty minutes to take the vote and have it counted and read. The time of adjournment was known when the assembly opened. It seems that it is limited to about one week, not including Sunday. The morning business session opened at 9.30, following an hour of devotional service, and another business session was held in the afternoon. All these sessions opened with prayer.

The business moved with clock-like precision. Much of the work is done by committees that bring the business to the assembly, so not much of the business has its origin on the floor of the assembly. Each committee knows the day and hour when it is to make its report and when the time arrives the moderator introduces the committee representative to the

Opening for Laundry Man

Owing to recent developments, there is an opening in Lamoni, Iowa, for an experienced and successful laundry man. One is preferred who is interested in the church and the development of her people, especially in Lamoni and Graceland College. He should also have a knowledge of dry cleaning and pressing and such work. Address communications to Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Concrete Workers, Bricklayers, and Plasterers

In the erection of the convention hall and gymnasium, now commenced and to be carried forward as rapidly as circumstances will admit, it is desired that any young men who have had experience in working concrete or in laying brick or tile, or plastering, who are looking for an opportunity to work their way through school, would let us hear from them as soon as practicable. It is our purpose to erect this building with student labor as far as practicable, and we earnestly solicit the cooperation of all. Will those who may know of young men fitted for this work who might be interested if the matter were called to their attention, either present the matter to them or send us their addresses, or both? We shall be glad to take the matter up with them and will be grateful for any cooperation in this direction. Address: Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Quorum Notices

Northern Michigan, during the reunion at Park of the Pines, August 21, an elders' quorum meeting.

Central Michigan, during the reunion at Pinconning, August 24, an elders' quorum meeting. We would like to have as large a representation as possible. Having the meetings at both places should give the elders a chance to attend one of the two places. E. A. White, president of the Northern Michigan Quorum.

Eastern Michigan, during the reunion at Port Huron, August 10. The elders' quorum meets 8.30 a. m., on that date. We wish as many as possible to be present. A program will be arranged. Myron A. Carr, president.

assembly. He reads his report and then has thirty minutes in which to make his speech explaining the report. After this it is open for discussion and the speeches are limited by a general rule applicable to committee reports. In this way the assembly gets first-hand information as to what the report means and what it is intended to accomplish.

In our conference we let free speech go unbridled and a few men talk for an hour or more and then the previous question is called and often the debate is ended and we have only the opinion of a few expressed. In their assembly they act on the theory that it is better to hear six men speak ten minutes each than for one man to speak sixty.

William Jennings Bryan was chairman of the committee on Christian education. The substance of his report was that no educational institution under the control of the Presbyterian Church permitting the theory that man descended from the brute creation to be taught as a fact or truth, should receive any financial assistance from the funds of the church. He was not opposed to teaching the theory as a theory. After a heated discussion by the intellectual giants of the church a substitute was carried to the effect that the men who had charge of the educational institutions of the church should see that nothing was taught that would undermine the faith of the students in God and Jesus Christ and in the infallibility of the Bible.

EDWARD RANNIE.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Ida M. Joehnk, formerly Ida Manifold, widow of Brother C. C. Joehnk who was at one time an active missionary in the church, requests the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed of her affliction, especially that her speech might be returned. Sister Joehnk is a resident of the Holden Home and is paralyzed to the extent that she can scarcely walk around in the building, and her speech is so affected that it is difficult for her to converse with anyone. She is a very loyal and devoted Saint.

Two-Day Meetings

Central Michigan, five miles north and one mile east of Gladwin, July 28 and 29. Matthew Umphrey, president.

At Bisbee, Arizona, August 18 and 19. The Saints of Arizona and New Mexico are invited. Begin to make your plans now to attend this meeting and enjoy a good social and spiritual time. Meeting place, Woman's Club Building, Quality Hill. Pastor's address, Box 453, Bisbee, Arizona. Residence, 125 Higgins Hill. Phone 751. E. R. Davis.

Northern Michigan. At East Jordan Branch, July 21 and 22. At the Onaway Branch, August 4 and 5. Allen Schreur, president.

At Midland, Michigan, July 21 and 22. The meetings will be held in the church on Hailey Street. Matthew Umphrey, president.

Reunion Notices

Utah, at Ogden, Utah, in the Sanitarium Grove at the mouth of world-famed Ogden Canyon, August 23 to September 2. An ideal place to spend ten days in spiritual and recreational activity. Besides our own corps of missionaries we are assured that Brother Gillen, Sister Glines, and some one from the Presiding Bishopric and Order of Evangelists will be in attendance. It is desired that those coming bring their own tents and bedding or write A. W. Bogue, 1538 Hudson, Ogden, Utah, and make arrangements for the same. Such business as should come before the fall conference will be disposed of during the reunion. All reports must be in the hands of the district secretary, Anna Colman, 390 East Second North, Provo, Utah, not later than August 20. V. B. Etzenhouser, president.

Nauvoo, at Nauvoo, Illinois, August 17 to 26. The price for double cots should have been $2.25, instead of the price as printed last week.

Southern Wisconsin, at Monona Park, Madison, Wisconsin, August 24 to September 2. Tents: 10 by 12, 3-foot wall, $3.50; 12 by 14, 4-foot wall, $4.50; 12 by 16, 4-foot wall, $5.50. Order tents of Jasper O. Dutton, Box 36, Route 8, Janesville, Wisconsin, not later than August 10. Anyone ordering later, address him at his home address, 1902 East Main Street, Madison, Wisconsin. Meals will be served at the dining hall, as in other years, at the lowest possible price. As speakers we expect: Apostle J. F. Garver, Patriarch J. F. Martin, Seventy B. C. Flint, and High Priest J. O. Dutton. Besides the district superintendent of each department, Mrs. N. E. Hield for the Department of Women, Miss J. N. Dutton for the Sunday school, and N. E. Hield for the Department of Recreation and Expression, we expect some departmental workers who will be announced later. Jasper O. Dutton.

Kewanee, at Galva, Illinois, August 10 to 20. Order tents and cots of Edward Jones, 926 North Vine Street, Kewanee, Illinois. Prices: 15 by 22, $9; 12 by 14, $4.25; 9½ by 12, $3.50. Cots, fifty cents each. Order now. Meals will be served according to the Word of Wisdom and at a reasonable price. Illinois is indeed God's country. Come and enjoy it, if you have no reunion home. Let us obey the call of the Master, "Come aside and rest awhile." Ralph W. Farrell, chairman.

Black Hills and Western Nebraska, at North Platte, Nebraska, July 27 to August 5. Hubert Case will be one of the speakers. Jessie Morant.

Spring River, at Cunningham Park, Joplin, Missouri, August 3 to 12. A goodly number of excellent speakers and workers will be in attendance. Tents and cots for the ten days may be had at the following prices: 8 by 10, $2.75; 10 by 12, $3.25; 12 by 14, $4.25; 12 by 14 with six-foot detachable wall, $7.75; straight cots, 60 cents; army cots, $1. Those attending will be expected to provide their meals as no meals will be served by the reunion association. It is desired that orders be placed for tents at the earliest possible date. Those desiring tents or cots will address the secretary of the reunion committee. John C. Virgin, secretary, 114 South Roane Street, Webb City, Missouri.

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, at Dow City, August 17 to 26. The reunion will have the use of Dow City's beautiful park. Come early and spend your vacation enjoying the spiritual feasts the committee is providing for you. Brother P. R. Burton and two of the Lamanite elders and their wives are expected to be present. Brother J. L. Butterworth, Dow City, Iowa, has charge of the tents. Write him for information. Lena M. Talcott, secretary, Arion, Iowa.

Far West, at Stewartville, Missouri, August 17 to 26. The grounds are large and fine with splendid camping facilities including good water, dining hall, meals served cafeteria plan at reasonable rates. Prices of tents: 12 by 16, 6-foot wall, $8; 12 by 14, 3-foot wall, $4.25; 10 by 12, 3-foot wall, $3.50. Cots, 75 cents; chairs, 20 cents. Address all orders for tents to John E. Hovenga, Stewartville, Missouri. Tents should be ordered early and all arrangements made in good time that the opening exercises may occur without interruption on Friday, August 17, at 8 a. m. R. S. Salyards, president.

Kirtland, at Kirtland, Ohio, August 9 to 19. Prices: rooms, approximately, $1 per day; tents for the ten days, 10 by 12, $2.50; 12 by 14, $3.50; cots, 50 cents, straw for cots, 25 cents; cot in dormitory for men, $3; cot in dormitory for women, $3. Meals, cafeteria style, lunch counter, or refreshments, at reasonable prices. Advisable, on account of baggage transfer, where possible to make train connection in Cleveland for Willoughby, otherwise it will be necessary to send baggage via Electric Package, which sometimes causes delay, especially when arriving in Cleveland late in the day. Be sure to bring your own bedding for use in tents or dormitory. If you want to be taken care of in approved style and relieve the committee of the usual "mad rush" get your order in at once. Address all orders for reservations to John R. Booher, Route 2, Willoughby, Ohio. F. J. Ebeling, chairman of committee.

Church Members, Social Workers, and Religion

The question occurs to us, "Are social workers religious?" In seeking an answer we cannot help but call to mind the various persons we know who are engaged in the work generally known as "Social Service," and scrutinize their lives in such a way as to determine whether they are what we call religious.

A story is told, and it is a true story, of a grandmother residing in a home for the aged who one day said to her granddaughter who was visiting her, "Sister D is a mighty good woman, but then she isn't just what you would call religious." The granddaughter looked up in utter astonishment.

Sister D not religious! A woman who, at that time, had given without price nineteen years of consecrated service in a home for the aged as a mother to numerous grandmothers and grandfathers. Now this grandmother loved Sister D and could never find enough good words to praise her, yet here she was accusing her matron of not being religious.

"How is that, grandmother?" asked the young girl. "What do you mean—not a religious woman?"

"She doesn't pray or bear testimony. At least I have never heard her yet," answered the grandmother, adding at the same time something about how Sister D always had treated her as though she had been Sister D's own mother.

"Reverend X used to pray and bear testimony. Was he religious?" asked the girl.

"Now Reverend X was a hypocrite and you know it," the grandmother replied firmly.

Very true, he had been. He prayed and preached and bore testimony and then one day absconded with the life savings of many trusting ones of his congregation. But the life of this Sister D of whom they were speaking had been one long, living testimony and there could be no doubt that she often prayed silently and with faith believing.

All that might be said was not going to change the grandmother entirely. She had been accustomed too many years to thinking of religion in certain terms. Of course it is agreed that prayer and testimony are some of the natural outlets of religion, as a smile of welcome indicates love. The grandmother and the girl had between them only the difference in understanding of terms, just as many other good people dispute yet believe essentially the same thing, if only they could understand each other.

This reminds one of the two women who attempted to do a washing together and came at length to the differing place, how to finish the washing. One lady wished to "suds and rinse" the clothes; the other thought they should be "rinsed and blued." The latter finally consented to allow the first to govern, although she was positive the clothes would be ruined. Imagine her surprise when the woman who wanted to "suds and rinse" finished the washing exactly as she herself would have done it. Merely a difference in terms! One woman's suds water was the other's rinse water; and one's rinse water was the other's blue.

To the grandmother spiritual life was made up of two things, religion and duty; to her granddaughter the term religion covered all spiritual activities, praying, testifying, preaching, and daily living.

The twenty-seventh verse of James 1 reads: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

"To keep himself unspotted from the world" is not enough; there must be added also the visit to the widows and orphans. All agree that James did not mean a short call to express sympathy; he meant to supply them with an opportunity whereby they might earn for themselves the necessities of life. He used the term as a type of service that stops woe on every hand, not merely the carrying of a bouquet of flowers to the door where the crepe hangs, but also swatting flies, voting for prohibition, or making the city water "safe for democracy."

Social work includes all activities which are for the purpose of bettering the world and its inhabitants. Yes, in it are doctors, free clinics, visiting nurses, sisters of mercy, juvenile court workers, ministers, professors, and parent-teacher associations, but it does not stop there. The little rural teacher in the unknown community helping the newest ragged urchin to learn to read is one of them; the most insignificant mother, keeping her dooryard clean from refuse, seeing that the slop pail is covered, keeping the quarantine laws, is also a social worker. The farmer cutting obnoxious weeds and draining the mosquito slough is doing a priestly service. All these things they have done in the name of duty, yet it is as Christ would do. It is religion. Up in heaven the recording angels may grant to the inhabitants of some cities a greater reward for the cup of safe water than the cup of gold.

These things are all prosaic enough, too common to be thought of as social work. We are in the habit of looking upon certain charity deeds only as belonging in the social service field, as the Christmas basket, the coin for the beggar, the visit to the prison. Some so-called charities have in reality become as curses.

One of the purposes set forth in the new stewardship covenant is "To aid and assist the worthy and the poor, directly or through such channels as the order may direct, in obtaining employment and homes; to help the sick and afflicted and unfortunate in time of need." This expresses the ideal in social service. To keep oneself unspotted before the world and from the world is not an expression of religion, and the one doing only that is failing.

How many of us know the circumstances which make the needy about us? Do they need our substance so much as they do the opportunity to assist themselves? To pauperize the unfortunate is a crime; to correct their misfortune—that is Christ. This may require the prevention of disease, the removal of temptation, a character building, education, a mental renovation, an opportunity to labor. To provide the needy, not so much with funds as the real thing they lack is the purpose of social work. These things begin to spell religion.

Religion should be broad enough to encircle others not of the same faith. This includes lending vote, voice, finance, and hand to civic life. Such activities need not interfere with testimonies and prayers, but rather they should give something worth while about which to testify and pray.

A social worker is religious because such work, accomplished in the proper spirit, is the expression of the fundamentals of Christianity. "Faith without works is dead," or positively, "Faith with works is living." A church member not bettering social conditions in his community has no religion.

The great troubles have not changed. Suffering and death, the agony of bereavement, the tragedies of blighted hopes and shipwrecked lives—these are not things peculiar to the twentieth century.—Religious Perplexities.

Prohibition Does Cut Offenses

The American Issue has recently printed a number of tables to show that in eighty-seven American cities the arrests for drunkenness have been cut on an average 25 per cent from 1916 to 1922 and that arrests for all causes were cut 1.7 per cent. This decrease occurs in spite of the fact of increases in population and despite also the fact that the police are arresting every man no matter how quiet who shows signs of intoxication whereas in the earlier period a drunken man was rarely arrested unless disorderly or helpless.

Another cause of increased total arrests is the multiplied use of the automobile. The increased number of traffic laws have brought about a great increase in the number of arrests for traffic law violation. Prohibition could hardly stop at once all drinking. It is interesting to note that in the cities where it is notoriously greatest there is still a decrease of 25 per cent.

How Divide the Surplus

Do only the crumbs from our table go to the Lord's work?

There is a falling off in contributions to many of the great denominations of to-day. The decline is so great in the Methodist Church that it bids fair to destroy a large part of their foreign mission work. Yet as an editorial in the Christian Work points out, that which is brought to the table of the Lord as gifts for the Lord is pennies, dimes, and a few quarters. People put in something because they are ashamed not to, but as little as possible.

It would be interesting to take an average congregation, and after deducting household expenses see what proportion went on self for amusement, pleasure, and clubs, and what proportion goes to the church. Does the Lord get only the leavings? A man will put a quarter in the plate, then go to the country and buy an expensive dinner for the whole family and burn up several dollars worth of gas. The amount that the members of a single denomination will spend on amusement and pleasure seeking in a week would do some splendid missionary work.

Again, the energy and enthusiasm that is put into a baseball or football game, if exerted on behalf of the church, how great indeed would be the result. How great would be the gain if a tenth of the energy and enthusiasm were thus given vent, for a man is "crazy" to play golf, "crazy" over his recreation, but not "crazy" in the same sense for the church and the work of God. It is not that recreation is bad. It is not even that riches are bad, but there is the danger that we give our glorious youth and splendid heritage to that which perishes and leave to the kingdom of God only the leavings.

The Idle Hour

"There'll be rest by and by," reads a popular hymn which infers that rest is the desired quality which can only be had in heaven. This represents an age-old attitude on the part of religionists that we live for the hereafter, and life to-day is but a scourging of the soul in preparation for what is to come. Salvation for one, condemnation for the other, is the theory that has whipped sinners into line for the past thousand years or so. But to-day the vision has shifted, and we are realizing the blindness of centuries. It is a time to bemoan the fact that we have wasted years in which we might have progressed. It is time we realize the blunders we have made and right ourselves before it is too late.

The former understanding of rest was idleness. It was a desire to do nothing. The whole idea represents a lack of knowledge of psychology and even of everyday common sense. Nobody is happy when he is idle. Even the loafer sitting on a cracker box at the back of the grocery store will whittle at a piece of wood or the gang of boys hanging around the corner cigar store or pool room will shoot pennies or shake for smokes in order to keep from doing nothing. Of course such actions are idleness, but the profoundest loafer does not want complete inactivity. Yet we sing of a day to come when rest will be ours, having in mind the luxury of indolence.

The modern interpretation of rest is recreation. Anything that renews life is recreation. In this sense sleep is recreation, and where rest is needed but sleep cannot come, then idleness may be recreation, but the latter situation is the rare exception.

If the song we refer to sings of the day when life will be renewed and be of permanent duration, then all should rejoice in the anticipation those words express. That is the hereafter we can desire, when life will be eternal.

Here on earth we can enjoy part of the blessings in store for us by realizing where they are to be found. After the work of the day there should be time for recreation in which life is renewed and energy made over into power to carry us through another day. Sleep is a part of recreation, and there should be time for plenty of sleep. But sleep occupies only a portion of the hours that can be devoted to recreation. All should be educated to such a degree that every individual can best determine for himself what to do with his "spare" time. There are many good ways for using this time, and these should differ as the delights of individuals differ, but all should be directed toward the building up of life forces.

There are periods of time occurring in the daily routine of every life when a spare hour is one's to spend. How to kill an idle hour is a question of much import to some people. These are the people who have been in the habit of wasting time during their lives. To others it is a simple matter to "kill an idle hour," for these persons always have something to do. This is the value of an avocation or a diversion, or a hobby, for here is the opportunity to pursue its pleasure.

The idle hour should be killed by recreation and not by inactivity. Inactivity does not give life; it brings death. Some people have the habit of idleness, and it will not be questioned that they are nearer dead than alive. Do not be idle.

If an idle hour presents itself to be killed, kill it, but not by idleness. Do something that contributes to life, and enjoy now part of the blessings that may be in store for us in the future.

Transportation

Our attention has been called to conditions existing with regard to transportation of delegates to the General Conference and other places where reduced rates are desired. Some difficulty has occurred and confusion resulted when local officers and supervisory missionaries have attempted to negotiate with railroads concerning transportation privileges.

We call attention to the fact that the church has a Transportation Department through which all arrangements for special privileges of transportation should be handled.

In the past the HERALD has made announcements concerning transportation when requested to do so, but in the future all such matters should be taken up with Granville S. Trowbridge, head of the Transportation Department of the church.

It is through that office that all arrangements will be made for General Conference and other conventions. Please take notice of this fact and help avoid confusion which has often resulted in the past, when independent action has been taken. F. M. S.

Every man seeking his own interests, while the Devil takes the weak ones seems to be the general working out of the present order of things. To change from that to an order in which each will be seeking the interests of his neighbor is a long step and a big job, but to accomplish that is the task of the church in establishing the social order our philosophy sets out. Are we to be deterred by the bigness of the undertaking? F. M. S.

The world is full of kickers; and that's what most of us are kicking about.

Suggestions to Religious Social Workers

An address by Doctor Frank W. Blackmar, of the University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kansas. Delivered at the opening of the Young People's Convention, at Lamoni, Iowa, June 7, 1923.

After the rather complimentary introduction by Doctor Smith, and I am sure I appreciate his gracious words, you may think you are going to hear something very profound from me. You are not. You will be gravely disappointed if you expect anything very profound from me. I have come here to talk to you this morning, to reason with you in a simple way on a very simple subject. It is said that God always leaves unfinished work for the workers of the world. I take it that you have come here to study how to complete the unfinished work that Jesus Christ started in the world. You are to study methods of adaptation, methods of interpretation, methods of appliance, methods of doing, as well as methods of thinking. I take it we are fundamentally agreed on some great problems: First, that religion is a great part of life. Yes, indeed, I will say the important part of life; and I may get lots of you to say that religion, properly lived, is life—the great thing for which we exist. I know therefore that in the studies here the fundamental things are to see that we have open minds ready to receive the truth.

One of the things that sociologists and religionists and reformers of all kinds have to look for and find in their way is the binding influence of dogmatic tradition. I have no criticism of tradition in itself. It comes down as a social heritage, and, rightly used, like all good things is useful, and wrongly used is very detrimental. And I pray you this morning to forget for the time being all your creeds, all your various theories, all your notions, all your pre-dispositions and your fears, and face problems of society with the application of the simple gospel of Jesus Christ to the things before you; then you will learn something with an open mind that will fit you for the efficiency of service.

Now I have no objection to creed. It is a pretty good thing; but when I want to work I forget it and take off my coat and go at the thing in hand. It is a good thing to have a theory and sit in the center of it. Don't depend upon that creed or theory doing the work of the world. You will have enough to occupy your mind with the work without discussing the twiddle-dee of the differences of creeds in this world. Altogether too much time has been spent in the past centuries on those things. What we need to realize is how to simplify the truth of Jesus Christ and apply that truth to our lives here.

I think we can agree upon another thing—that there is room for invention in religion as well as in the social world or the economical world. Truth does not change when it is once established. God never changes; but our interpretation of God and truth must change as long as we move upward in human society. That seems reasonable, though we have got to readapt ourselves to the truth. I take it, that is what you are here to study how to do.

I know that in the industrial world it would be silly for us to say transportation used to be carried on with a wheelbarrow and cart, therefore we will not use the automobile, the railroad train, or anything else. We understand that a railroad train is much more effective for transportation than a wheelbarrow. So it would be silly for me to argue because my forefathers once did something with a wheelbarrow, in order for me to succeed I must transport my goods by wheelbarrow. Now the fundamental was transportation. That never changes or dies. I am going to transport in a different and better way.

I find the same is true in communication. The earliest communication was of individual expression one to another. The first social communications were little gossip societies whereby people communicated their ideas one to another. There is a better way: the telephone, the telegraph, the radio, the various methods of broadcasting knowledge throughout the world, information, newspapers, books, and sermons. Very fine. Suppose we abandon all those and say henceforth and forever because our ancestors got together and whispered things to each other we must do the same thing. Communication is the principle. Let us readapt ourselves to the new conditions, for we could not get along with the multitudes of people and the great operations of the world by whisper societies to-day. They are antiquated.

So I bring to you this illustration of the human religion. Why, the human race has been trying to find out God ever since the savages trembled through fear of the unknown power. Do you know Him yet? We know more now than they did, and we have been given a better interpretation of God, and we are nearer him than ever before. I think one of the greatest old hymns I ever heard (and I never speak of a thing of this kind but what I think of it) is "Nearer, my God, to thee." This has been the cry of the human race from the primitive groups up to the present time. So I think we can agree upon that as a fundamental principle. I think we can understand, too, that part of the teachings of Jesus would invite an open mind.

I can't find that Jesus left any definite creed. Creeds are the creations of human beings when they have tried to work to definite principle. Churches are built up around a definite principle for the carrying out of the work that Jesus indicated. But he did live principles. He did give us an example, an object lesson whereby we can see what his great purpose was. We do know that the trail of Jesus was the trail of humanity. It is the only way of finding God. I am sure that in the handling of great questions of the kind we must keep an open mind.

I am still of the old-fashioned religion. I was born a Methodist, as you say. My father was Methodist and my grandfathers were Methodists, and we used to believe in the workings of the Spirit and the revival services. I still believe in those things. Not perhaps in a form as they did, but in a larger and better way of introducing that in its adaptation to the world.

Now there is a radio station down at Kansas City, the Star's radio. We have a little machine in our house. I go to the machine and put the receiver up to my ears and tune in, and then I can catch the music that is floating out of Kansas City all over this western country; but if I don't tune in, the music goes over my head and goes on. God is whispering in a mysterious way all the time, and if you tune in he will speak to your mind and heart to-day as he did in olden times. If we have a personal religion, a personal contact with God, we must have the wires up if we get the communication all the time. The most of the trouble with the world to-day is that they have not the receiver. The truth is floating out just the same, but they pass by on a lower plane. Without the use of the receiver their minds and hearts are not in tune to receive the truth.

I think we can all agree upon those fundamental principles. Now how are we to carry out this doctrine of Jesus Christ in a social way. Let us talk about a few practical things at this time. I do not know anything about theology as a subject. I have followed along in another line. I have had considerable to do with the sociological interpretation of life and of God and the religious experiences which others have. Beyond that I cannot settle these great dogmas and theories of the world, only to say, Let us keep our mind free from the entanglements of dogmatic theories and formulas and creeds, and keep it in tune, and keep the phones up and receive messages from God. I hold that to be fundamental to-day, and all the rest—the creeds and differences—are being swept away day by day as something to be put in the background on the screen where the actors are performing, helping those whose work is in front of that great screen as it touches humanity.

You are preparing to work in town. I hold that the church is a religious agency in doing good. There is a little tendency and a danger in people saying, "Us four and no more." When we get into a little church we build that up and we say, "Our church first, your church second"; and we are likely to forget the great call for humanity as expressed in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Jesus went everywhere; he sought all kinds of people. It was a touch of God in the human life. That is the idea that you will have to express.

I have sometimes thought we have gone too far into institutionalism in modern life. I believe in all these social institutions and organizations. We cannot get along without them. There are not too many benevolent laws, not too many associations of uplift; but we must also understand that we must develop this law of life to all people alike, untrammelled by group association. So when we go to the University of Kansas we hear the people shout, "K. U. first." Yes, that is all right. But "K. U. first, right or wrong"? No. "K. U. first, right." "My family right and my family first." These are some of the reversals that we have. "My country first?" Yes, my country first but right. Let us not be led away by too much institutionalism in this social work.

There is one thing that social workers must get rid of. I am pleased to know how broad minded you are here in receiving people from all nationalities from all over the world and receiving them on the same basis as our own people. That is practical Christianity. That is the real essence of the stuff I am talking about.

Now there is another thing we need to be aware of. There is a good deal of ferment in the world just now. Ferment is not a bad thing if you don't have it go too far. This social ferment, this intellectual ferment, this religious ferment is a very good thing because it develops variety, and variety of life is, after all, a means of progress. Did you ever stop to think that that God you believe in is a wonderful being? Did you ever think that he could make the little flower and at the same time make the largest mountain, make the littlest animal in the water and at the same time make the great sun and moon and stars? Christ gave us a wonderful lesson, fitting his life to all sorts of conditions of mankind; so we must broaden out in that way and not say, "We will not fit the door to your size; you get down and crawl in or else you can't go in." I have had a good deal of that, the question of fitting the door to one's size.

Please bear in mind, workers, that no one has a monopoly on religion. There are some people and churches who think there is a monopoly on religion. God is as broad as the universe, and religion is as broad as he is, so be very careful in your broad, humanitarian spirit to remember that there is no monopoly on religion. You study the history of the past, and you will see how the priest of the tribe had a monopoly on religion. That is a thing of the past. That has nothing to do with the modern life at all. It is a holding over of the traditions of the past where churches and institutions think they have a monopoly on religion. It is just the same with style. There can be no monopoly on style, for style is universal.

Please bear in mind, then, that these controversies that arise in these days do not amount to anything. If you are in doubt just open your Bible and see what Jesus said on this. In approaching people where you want to do them good, please do that. Many young people start out this way. They say to the young friend, "You come in with us now, and we will do you a lot of good." I will tell you a new and better way than that: "We are trying to do a great work here; come in and help us." Oh, do you see the difference? It is simply a play upon human nature. You are trying to do something here; you can do it. Show the people how you can do it, and say, "Come in and help us."

The old attitude of the church is, You come in here, and we will make a new man of you. That is all right. I believe it to be true, but I think it is far better to say, Come in here and help us to make new men out of the world. Then you will get the help.

Your worthy president has referred to the question of evolution. It is a very serious subject to me these days, because a very short time ago a woman came to me and said, "I am in trouble." I asked her what the trouble was, and she said, "One of my high school students came to me the other day and said her pastor said she would either have to give up her zoology or give up her Bible." And then I thought it were better that a millstone be hanged about his neck rather than offend one of these little ones. It was a great blunder to take such an attitude as that.

Do you know that every truth in life is God's truth, whether you find it in the flower or the conscience of man or the small voice in man that speaks to him of right or wrong? Whether it speaks in divine revelation, whether it is found in the starry heavens above as you view them through the telescope, whether of the marvels that are seen through the microscope, or whether you see it under the unfolding of the earth, God's truth is everywhere. He created it all, and it was His business, not ours.

Then let me lay down one principle that you will find to be true. God's truth never quarrels with itself, and the truth in the animal kingdom on the earth cannot quarrel with any other truth. No evolutionist who is sound claims that evolution is creation. It is only a witness of the changes that have gone on in the world. It is only an attempt to find out what God has wrought in his great workshop and how he did it. Shall we shut our minds and say, No, we do not want to know how it is being done? If you do, you will have to shut out the men who invented gasoline, and Mr. Burbank who made the beautiful flowers and the fine vegetables, and you will have to shut out all of the other people who are making the world better by increased knowledge, and you are just going to settle down and say, "No, I cannot study anything that God has wrought in the world. That is taboo; that is irreligious." You know better. You know there is not anything better than what is before you, and that is all evolution is—to see what God has spread out before us in the marvels of his world. God says, I invite you to come and see for yourselves; inquire into it and see what has been wrought in the world. He speaks of it often enough in the Bible.

That is all evolution is. The only trouble is the interpreters of truth get a half truth and try to peddle it for the whole truth. Why, they think the moment you say evolution you must think of monkeys. I have been at the circus. I have looked into the cage and watched those little old faces so remindful of something I think I have seen somewhere off in the distant past in my subconsciousness, and finally I turn round and look at the other folks who are looking in at the cage of monkeys, and I see where I have seen this likeness before.

One day a chancellor of the university gave a lecture on evolution. That was about twenty-five years ago. At that time it was a red flag you know. In those days it would raise quite a storm. I was in a carpenter shop one cold morning after that lecture, and Deacon Wise, a member of our church, came in. When he saw me, he glowered at me. I didn't know what was the matter, and I said, "Good morning." He said to me, "How is that monkey factory getting on up on the hill?" Many people, just the moment you talk about evolution, think of the monkey theory. There is no evolutionist that claims man came from monkeys any more than you can come from a flower or a flower from you. No one pretends that. It is a false interpretation of these things. You are going to meet these things. That is why I mention that. Keep an open mind and get the truth, and remember this: God's truth is divine everywhere under all circumstances, and the truth shall make us free. That is good scripture.

Now as to the question of the community. In the examination of some communities in our State we have examined the boys and taking them at a certain age, and the girls too, we found out what they were doing on Saturday afternoon at any certain hour. We found there were three occupations: one was work, one was play, and the other was idleness. Now work is all right. The instinct of workmanship and the instinct of play came out of the same cradle, and one is just as good as the other in the development of humanity. Anybody who thinks he can regenerate humanity or control young people without considering that play instinct is making a great mistake. When I was a boy it was something like this: "All play is idleness. All idleness is sin. Satan will find work for idle hands to do."

We are built in layers. We think we develop from childhood to youth, from youth to manhood, from manhood to middle age, and then pass on. We come in layers. We lay down a layer of infancy and then one of childhood and then one of young manhood and then one of middle age; and they stay there; they are not lost. When you build a building and put down one layer for foundation, do you take it up before you build the next one? An Irishman, when he was asked the following question: "How do you build chimneys in Ireland?" answered it in about the only way an Irishman could, "Why, we begin at the top and build down." When we build a house, we generally begin at the foundation first and lay the foundation the first thing we do, and that is the way with our lives. Childhood life we never lose. Sometimes you wonder why it is that you do such foolish things all at once. It seems to be illogical. Do you know what it is? Why, it is that your childhood breaks through the incrustation of civilization that you have built over it. If you are normal, you will not have lost your childhood. I have a mother-in-law who is eighty years of age and stricken with paralysis. She is a dear old lady and just as happy, just as cheerful, and mind just as clear as can be. She laughs and jokes all the time. She has carried her childhood all through life, and she is growing old gracefully and will pass on and carry her childhood as well as her womanhood with her.

If this is true, ought we not to pay more attention to this play element? I would say to you that in the moment you expect to make any society, you must begin with young people. We have learned that, and it is universal. The great work of to-day is with boys and girls who are growing from childhood into manhood and womanhood, or who have laid down the layer of childhood and are trying to put down another layer of youth. There is the place to work. There is where you will do the great good for humanity. Take the organization of Boy Scouts or anything that carries with it group activity and the spirit of cooperation, fair dealing, fellowship, love, sympathy unto humanity. That is the spirit Jesus Christ carried on, and you can carry it on with boys and girls without saying anything about sermonizing. You can reach them that way.

You will find that the morality of the boys of the town will be determined by the per cent of idleness as compared with the per cent of play and work. Then you can go a little farther and see the end of that work and the end of that play to see whether they are elevating, and if not it is your duty to see that the work of the child is elevating and the play of the child is elevating. There are cases of play and work that are degrading.

Once in a while I go to the movies, but I always get woefully disappointed. I have wondered what we are feeding the child's imagination on, what kind of a type we are developing. I was tired and went to the movie not long ago. After I got home I rested! Marvelous feat! Why, they had a horse running a hundred and fifty miles a minute. I noticed everything going that way. The child gets in such a feverish state that he wants everything to run that way. I believe in the movie if properly carried on and utilized.

I believe in municipally organized and controlled amusements. I do not believe in commercialized amusements. I do not believe that you want pool, though there is nothing dangerous in pool itself, or marbles, tiddle-de-winks, or golf even. I teach a Sunday school class in the morning, go to service and listen to the preacher, go home and eat a light dinner, and go out and play golf in the afternoon; and my bishop says he doesn't like that. "I am sorry, Mr. Bishop," I say. "I hope you will get used to it." I know what I am about. I know if Mr. Bishop would go out there and let the breezes blow through his locks, he would be clearer in mind and he would preach better and do better service to God and humanity. I know that for I have demonstrated that if I can go to the golf field twice a week I do a third more work and do it better. That may be a fad. It might not help you at all. You might want marbles. Bucksaw medicine is as good as any, only it gets a little monotonous.

If you have an amusement hall in Lamoni where everything could be carried on on the basis of fair play, righteousness, and kindness, and justice, and had a bowling alley and a place to play billiards and pool under certain regulations, and a place for playing golf and tennis and basket ball and football and all of those things carried on by the municipality, you would find it a tremendous help and uplift to humanity, and you would fortify them against a lot of things that would be done in the dark and out from under supervision.

Now in regard to the family life. I am sure there is a great pressure being brought upon family life that we ought to take to account. The home, after all, is the dearest, sweetest place in the world. Out of it come the great social blessings of life. It is the center of our great inspiration for religion, for home, for love, for learning, for truth, for the rights of property. That center has controlled the world, and nations have risen and fallen, empires have passed away, races have passed out of existence; but the home goes on forever. And we as American people must be very careful to perpetuate the home. I am not in despair about it. I am an optimist of the first water. I believe that these ups and downs of life will come. If there is anybody here who has not had them, just please rise. Society has its ups and downs, but indeed in the curve of ups and downs the line of progress is an ascending line.

Now I am sure that that is of great importance. I do not believe the home is going down at all; but here is the trouble: We have developed so much of the social organization, so much of the mass play I spoke of last night, it is getting to be a super-organization trespassing upon the home. Why, you go down to Chicago or any other of our large cities. Here is a home and you go into it any time in the afternoon or evening. There is a father, a mother, and four children. Johnny is off somewhere to his club; Willie is off in his automobile; Susan is out riding with a man; Minnie is playing tennis; mother and father are out dining and away for the evening. What is a home? The answer is, A home is a place where nobody is except the cat. That is a great home.

My little girl came to me one day and said, "Daddy, I want to join the Owls." I said to her, "My dear, I do not believe in little girls in high school joining secret societies." She said, "But Daddy, all of my friends have gone into that society, and if I don't go in I will be left all alone." What did Daddy do? He gave up. Granting that this secret society was the wrong thing in the institution and somebody was to blame for allowing it to exist, could I ruin my girl's life by denying this to her? No; she joined the society, and I had to help her some other way.

The social duty of the home is made up outside. The picnic is planned, and the children come home and say, "Mother, we are going to have a picnic. May I go?" And what can you do? You have lost just a little bit of authority. It reminds me of the story of the man who told his son, "John, go to bed," and the boy answered, "I won't do it." "Well," said the father, "stay up then. I will be minded." The fact is the children are not to blame for this. Nor are the parents entirely. Do you know what we have done in our schools? We have been trying to develop an independent thinking and acting being, and we are realizing on the investment. These little folks go ahead and plan their work and bring it home for father and mother just as they want to. It makes us cringe a little, but we let them go ahead. I would like to say that we will have to guard very carefully that home and hold it together more than we have done. It will never be what it once was, but we can preserve it a little bit by not allowing the outside things to take precedence.

The little community is next to the home. There is the beginning of the democracy. There is the democracy of the whole world. A great many of us are looking to Washington or the State House to do something for us. Sometimes we look to the mayor to do something for us, and he does; but more often if we are going to get anything done, we are going to do it ourselves. Democracy begins at home. These things can be done by the social workers. So you shall universalize this principle in the play organization, in the handling of the children and the child welfare in the community organization in very many ways.

One of the helps, I want to say, that have been growing in recent years is community singing. We can't get along without music. Why? Because there is no creed established in music; there is no tradition in it. It is the touch of the music to the soul universal, and it appeals to everyone without prejudice or without fear or favor. It is one of the best means of bringing people together. You can get the people quicker in tune with music than you can any other way. It is very interesting.

Now, when I went to Johns Hopkins University just a modest young man from California, a little bit worried as to the greatness of that great institution, I called on the president at his invitation to discuss matters. I expected to carry away a load of knowledge. I was all prepared to take a great load of facts with me. He said to me, "We are glad to see you, and we will try to quicken you." It was a marvelous revelation to me. I do not know whether I have said anything to quicken you or not. I thank you for your considerate attention.

Secretary Mellon of the United States Treasury has reduced, according to a news item, the United States debt more than $1,500,000,000 in the past two years and the Government will have a surplus this present fiscal year of $165,000,000. The national debt of $22,400,000,000 remaining seems large, yet it is only about half the national income, hence is small compared with the nations of Europe.

Gounod a Musical Master

By James R. Houghton

An historical review of his compositions and an analysis of some of his anthems, which will be sung by the General Conference Choir.

In order that there may be developed within us a keener sense of appreciation for the real values which are basic and fundamental in the great art of music we find it necessary to become more familiar with the lives of great composers and their various styles. Really to enjoy music we must know it and know it intimately, not only the music itself but also the lives of the great composers and leaders who have been instrumental in creating great masterpieces of tone. The obvious value to be derived from such an acquaintance with the lives of great composers will be (1) a general broadening of our intelligence about music as one of the great fine arts, (2) a personal knowledge of the lives and genius of great composers, and finally the hope that we may provide an intelligent or rational basis for musical appreciation or enjoyment. A great many individuals look upon music as a sort of superhuman mystery. It shall be one of our purposes to show that music as well as any other art is firmly grounded upon a rational basis and has really been thought out along intelligent lines within the grasp of any individual.

The first great genius that we shall become acquainted with is that of Charles Francois Gounod. Charles Francois Gounod was born in Paris, June 17, 1818. His early training in music was under the excellent tutelage of his mother, a distinguished pianist of her time.

At the age of eighteen he entered the conservatory where he soon demonstrated his exceptional ability along the lines of musical composition. During the academic year he composed a cantata, "Marie Stuart et Rizzio," which won for him the second "prix de Rome," a very coveted prize of the French conservatory, carrying with it a large sum of money for further study in the conservatory at Rome. In 1839 he won the grand "prix de Rome" for his cantata "Ferdinand." This was the highest honor which the French school could pay this distinguished boy-genius of twenty-one years.

The following year he went to Rome as a pensioner of the "Academie de France" where he studied music very intensively. He was especially devoted to the old Italian masters, who had developed a pure vocal style in their compositions. This is clearly shown in many of his sacred and secular compositions. In truth we may say that the vocal or lyrical style predominates in all of Gounod's works.

In the year 1851 he produced "Sapho," an opera in three acts, at the academie. This work did not meet with very great success. The following year he was elected to the position of conductor of the "Orphion," a choral society in Paris. This position he held for eight years and proved to be a very valuable experience to him.

On the evening of March 19, 1859, at the "Theatre Lyrique" in Paris, he produced his great opera "Faust." This work won for him immediate success and placed him in the front rank of the great musicians of his time. The opera proved to be one of the most popular of all operas and remains so today. It is essentially predominated by the pure lyrical idiom. It is known to almost everyone through the captivating and melodious "Soldiers' Chorus." There is no doubt but that this opera will always remain one of the finest compositions in the world of music.

The following year he produced another opera, "Philemon et Baucis" (February 18, 1860), which contains many delightful and entrancing melodies.

In 1871 he went to London where he organized a choral society after his own name. This society later became the Albert Hall Choral Society, and ultimately the Royal Choral Society which still functions to-day, and of which his highness the King of England is an annual patron. They are noted for their many fine choral productions.

In 1875 Gounod returned to Paris. The rest of his life was spent here and devoted to sacred compositions. In 1881 he produced his dramatic religious work called "The redemption." This was produced at the Birmingham Festival of 1882. This work is essentially lyric in character with the exception of the recitatives which are patterned after the pure vocal plain-song style of the early Italian masters. It is familiar to most of us through the beautiful choruses, "Unfold, ye portals," and the charming "Lovely, appear on the mountains."

His last great work was composed in 1885, called "Mors et Vita," "From death unto life." He died October 18, 1893, at Saint Cloud.

In a general way he is noted for his beautiful "Ave Maria," arranged from one of Bach's preludes. Some of his finest anthems are "By Babylon's wave," "Send out thy light," "Praise ye the Father," "O day of penitence," "Until the day breaks," and various other arrangements such as "There is a green hill far away," "Nazareth," "O divine Redeemer," and others.

The anthems, "Holy, holy," and "Jerusalem, O turn thee," will be rendered at the coming General Conference. The first of these is for tenor solo, chorus, and orchestra. The anthem begins with a short introduction announcing the main theme or solo in the first six measures. The main theme or melody is then taken up by the tenor solo with the orchestra accompanying. This continues for some fourteen measures or bars where the chorus enters in a series of "Holy's" announcing their fidelity to the Lord of hosts, while the main theme or solo is carried on by the accompanying instruments. This continues for sixteen measures where a contrasting section is introduced, sung by the tenor soloist. This continues for twenty measures, where a development section begins, returning after twenty-two measures to the original main theme or solo. This continues to the coda or end where the main theme is played softly while the chorus sings very softly an amen, pronouncing a literal benediction.

The second anthem, "Jerusalem, O turn thee," is taken from Gounod's "Gallia." "Gallia" is a composition for soprano solo, chorus, and orchestra called a motet. A motet was originally a secular composition but later became a sacred work. This particular motet, "Gallia," was composed for and produced at Albert Hall, London, at the opening of the International Exhibition, May 1, 1871. Originally it was a secular composition, being a lamentation over the destruction of ancient Gaul. Since its original performance it has been rearranged and the theme or text changed from that of Gaul to Jerusalem. "Jerusalem, O turn thee," "Jerusalem, Convertine ad Dominum" is the closing chorus.

The chorus opens with a short instrumental introduction—a sort of summons to attention. Then follows the warning cry of soloist in short recitative, or musical recitation. After the recitative the solo proper follows, announcing the closing theme—a broad, sweeping melody, very plaintive yet dramatic in character. After sixteen measures, this same theme is taken up by the chorus and carried to a very dramatic climax at the close, warning Jerusalem to return to the Lord their God or destruction waits upon them.

Summarizing, we may say that the compositions of this brilliant poet are predominated by suave melody and beautiful harmony.

An Interesting Survey

Last week we published a list of subjects which have been discussed by the two quorums of elders in Zion. This week we are publishing herewith a new list which has just been presented to approximately 130 men of the eldership residing in Independence.

We are reproducing the introduction prefacing the list, so other quorum officers and members of the priesthood may profit by the method in securing the results.

The list of subjects was submitted without any indication of preference by the quorum officers so the men would not be influenced in any way. In fact, related questions were separated.

Only one question which seemed unrelated to the list and not already covered by it was submitted, and it was a suggestion on the study of mind processes, evidently meaning psychology.

The original list with introduction follows, and the list of subjects rearranged in the order of preference indicated by the vote follows that.

SUBJECTS FOR DISCUSSION

FIRST AND SECOND QUORUMS OF ELDERS IN ZION

Please study this list of subjects carefully and indicate in the column to the left, by numbers, your preference for discussion at our regular quorum meetings. Feel free to add any subjects you may prefer (using the back of the sheet if necessary), as your ideas will be appreciated in formulating a course of study for the quorums. Please number the whole list in the order of your preference, setting down No. 1 as your first choice, No. 2 as your second choice, etc. It is not required that you sign your name. Please return the list at once, either with your report or in person at the next quorum meeting. Those subjects preferred by most of the members will be discussed first, and at early meetings. Your quorum officers have not attempted to indicate their preference of these subjects.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Bible Leads in Sale of Books

What is the most popular book of the day? A question of this sort would never elicit a thought of the Bible but instead one would begin to think of the several cheap novels that have had such wide circulation recently.

The case, however, presents a new angle. The Bible, while seldom considered a "popular" book, is nevertheless the most popular, if sales are any indication of popularity.

George William Carter, general secretary of the New York Bible Society, writing in The Outlook concerning the circulation of books says:

"A few books have reached a circulation as high as 200,000 in a single year. One book is reported to have run well toward a million copies in its first year. The Bible, however, to-day has reached 30,000,000 copies a year or 80,000 copies a day. Yet if all the millions of Bibles published since the discovery of printing were brought together to-day, there would not be enough to give each inhabitant of Asia a copy.

"The Bible was the first book on the press, and has never been off. It can be bought at a cheaper price than any other book, and yet $50,000—the highest price ever offered for a single volume—was paid in 1912 for one of the first printed copies of the Bible. An ancient book yet the best seller in a modern world, an oriental book yet the best seller in occidental countries, the Bible seems to prove the rule of the survival of the fittest. If in the tomb of Tutankhamen, the discovery of which has aroused such wide interest, are found, in addition to jewels and fine linen, some records, new interest would be greatly stimulated in the Old Testament.

"Believing with Carlyle that with the open Bible there is the emancipation of the heart and intellect, the New York Bible Society is publishing and distributing the Bible in fifty-three languages and in raised type for the blind.

"One branch of this work is carried on at Ellis Island. The first gift of America to the immigrant is a Bible in his own language, presented by one of the society's representatives. This is a great Americanization work, for the Bible is the foundation of America's principles and institutions. The Father of our Country said, 'It is impossible to govern the world without God and the Bible.'"

8. How to attain unity among priesthood and membership.
9. The ideal group pastor.
10. Democracy as applied to our church.
11. Plans and methods for home missionary work.
12. Preaching methods and results.
13. The evolutionary theory of the origin of man.

Subject No. 1, as preferred by the vote, will be taken up at the next session, with suitable outline for study and discussion.

The method of ascertaining the preference for the subjects was as follows: Under columns numbering up to 13 were placed the number placed opposite the subject on each sheet. These were added, and the lowest number given first place, the highest number last place, etc. The highest number was over double that of the lowest. A number of interesting comments accompanied the lists.

The County Library

One of the astounding developments of the day is the clamor for an education. The public schools are full, high school classes have increased enormously, colleges are turning students away, night schools and summer schools are crowded, and individuals are studying wherever they can get the books they need.

The American City publishes an account of the County Library system now under way in the United States.

"The county library functions in this way: It is established and supported by the county authorities, with the purpose of giving impartial, disinterested library service throughout the county, in proportion to population and needs. There will be a trained librarian in charge with offices at the county seat. She will select the books and distribute them, adapting the city library system to country conditions. There will be branch libraries with local librarians, in all of the towns in the county that are large enough to warrant a library and reading room. In the smaller villages there will be deposit stations in some such public place as a store, and traveling libraries for the still smaller communities, the rural school, rural Sunday schools, grange halls, etc.; and finally, the book truck to hunt out the more isolated families, get them interested and leave books at their doors.

"Its advantage is free public library service for all, in the most efficient and economical way."

This is a logical result of our having builded our national life and our form of government upon the foundation of an educated citizenry. The Great War gave us our first opportunity to test the value of the system of public education we have evolved and in spite of the discovery, through the draft, of an alarming percentage of illiteracy and of subnormal intelligence, the value of our plan is definitely proved. If we are to have the intelligent citizens needed by a democracy, we must give them the chance to study the things which interest them.

At least twenty-eight States have county library laws. That of California is based upon this idea, and fully half of its counties are organized, so that now the library sign is found scattered all over the rural districts. Indiana has a number of county libraries also; so have New Jersey, Wisconsin, Tennessee, and other States.

This is a beginning of what will in time become a great library movement which will carry books to every corner of the United States, placing before isolated sections of the country the advantages we have in our cities. It is an ideal situation but we are rapidly coming to its realization. Parts of the country where there are no such libraries at present may obtain them by concentrated efforts. It does not take a great deal of expense nor elaborate organization to bring this about, and groups of people bent upon obtaining such privileges will have little trouble in getting them if the issue is kept alive in communities now, while the movement is gaining impetus.

Introducing a New Food

Not so very many years ago the tomato was not considered by most people to be good food and was used only for decorations as flowers are used. To-day millions of people eat the tomato and enjoy it.

As with the tomato, so it is with many other foods. They came into use at some time during the progress of civilization and people to-day never stop to think how certain foods were introduced into the home.

A recent article in The Outlook gives an account of the sea mussel as a new food and tells how it was introduced.

"The sea mussel was brought to public notice in an unusual way. A newspaper campaign had been carried on by the Bureau of Fisheries in Boston to introduce sea mussels as food and several hotels had placed them on their bills of fare, but they were not reaching the general public. It then occurred to the officer in charge to start with the firemen and policemen. The fire chief objected, but the chief of police, who had been recommended as 'hard boiled,' said 'Are they poisonous?' Upon being told that they are not, he said: 'All I want you to do is to assure me that my police force will not get sick.'

"A barrel of mussels was then given to every police station in Boston, and copies of a cookbook showing different methods of cooking them, together with buckets for carrying home a supply, were furnished to each policeman. The novelty of this campaign appealed to the local papers, and with their renewed aid the new food soon came into general use.

"A campaign which began in the East in October, 1915, to introduce the unknown tilefish resulted in the sale during the year which ended June 30, 1917, of over 11,500,000 pounds of this new food, which put into the fishermen's pockets in that period over $475,000.

"Many thousands of barrels of herring were annually caught in Alaska, but were used for fertilizer instead of food. The Fisheries Service introduced the Scotch method of curing herring for food at a cost of about $12,000 by employing two experts from Dundee to go to Alaska and explain the process. During 1917 and 1918 the Alaska pack of Scotch-cured herring was over 45,000 barrels (11,500,000 pounds), the market value of which was more than $850,000."

The Leviathan Becomes American

The Leviathan is a prize of war. Nobody went to Germany and bought this great ship; she fell into the hands of Uncle Sam because of the process of war and now will remain in his hands. The Leviathan is American.

We are attached to this ship because she carried nearly 200,000 American troops across the Atlantic without a mishap and because of this accomplishment as a United States Army transport, "doughboys" and friends can be properly proud of her.

Since the Leviathan has been refitted she is hailed as the swiftest merchant ship afloat. Some people would point to her and say, "Made in Germany," but it will be remembered that as a German ship she did nothing of surpassing importance upon the sea. It was when the German coal-burning equipment was thrown out of the Leviathan and an American system of oil-burning was installed in its place, that she broke all records for speed attained by merchant ships, doing 27.48 knots for 25 consecutive hours, which was 0.44 of a knot faster than any other ship in the world had attained during the same period of time.

The Commission of Interracial Cooperation

"Countermining the Ku Klux Klan" is the name of an interesting article by Robert L. Duffus in The World's Work which tells of an organization "without ritual, robes, masks, or hocus pocus of any kind" which has been quietly doing a commendable work, while the institution revived by the Imperial Wizard of Atlanta has been spreading like some contagious disease.

This commission began in an Atlanta hotel in 1919, when a number of Southerners who had been active in war work among the Negro soldiers and civilians desired to prepare the home community to receive the returning colored soldiers. This commission is made up of such prominent white men as: John J. Eagan, a steel manufacturer who has given study to the Negro problems; Doctor M. Ashby, a distinguished Atlanta clergyman; Doctor J. H. Dillard, an educator; Mr. R. H. King, former executive secretary of National War Work Council for the southeast; and Doctor Will Winton Alexander, an executive of the army Y. M. C. A. in the southeastern department. Among the negro members are: Doctor Robert R. Moton, of Tuskegee Institute; Doctor John Hope, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta; Bishop R. E. Jones, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of New Orleans; Doctor Isaac Fisher, professor of Fisk University, Nashville, Tennessee, and Doctor John M. Gandy, president of the Petersburg Normal and Industrial Institute, Petersburg, Virginia.

The World War upset social conditions. Negro soldiers were drafted with the white men; in some parts of the south paraded with them and received as much applause. There has been no doubt of the honorable part the Negro soldiers played in the war. "The first soldiers of the A. E. F. to be decorated for bravery were Negroes. Four regiments and one battalion of another received the Croix de Guerre for valor. Four hundred individual Negroes were decorated for conspicuous courage."

There was no serious misconduct among them. They kept a high average too for courage, fidelity, and self-control. Meanwhile, at home, the colored portion of the South did their part well in the buying of Liberty bonds, in aiding the Red Cross, and were willing to assist their country in every way.

There was some complaint among the Negroes of the way they were treated in the army. There was opposition to the commissioning of Negro officers, white men refused to salute them, colored nurses were not allowed to serve in some cases; but all this did not incense the negro like the continued toleration of the lynching evil, during the years when they were doing their utmost to serve their country.

In 1917, thirty-four colored men were lynched; in 1918, the number almost doubled and five of these were women. White people had in the past treated the Negro with disdain; the colored population now began to refuse to converse with the white man. They were losing faith in the good intentions of even the white men they had trusted. They were not silent among themselves, however, and discussed the question of what to do.

The racial differences were not confined to the South alone. Recall the riots in East Saint Louis; Chester, Pennsylvania; Philadelphia; Omaha; Chicago; Washington; Arkansas; and Tulsa, Oklahoma. While mistrust of each other reigned between the two sides, it is noticeable that in the portion of the country known as "the black belt," the trouble was passed without the greatest disasters, all because of the work of the Commission of Interracial Cooperation.

It is at work continuously, keeping alert to disasters which may arise, especially in the communities where it is apt to materialize. Lynching seldom comes with sudden flurry; it is usually the result of a long unrest. Where there is evidence of differences, the commission begins to be busy—its leaders dealing with the people of their own race.

These are some of the things the commission has stood for and are trying to do:

1. Protect the women, not only white women from black men; but also black women from white men.
2. Protection of the Negro's rights in the courts. There is a long list of noble deeds, tabulated in the article mentioned, in which the commission have done a great service such as securing denied insurance for the Negro, defending him from unscrupulous landlords, and many other like propositions.

3. Granting educational advantages to the colored people; seeing that their allotment from State funds for that purpose is increased.

4. Seeing that if the Negro must be segregated that he is properly provided with cleanliness, comforts, and his quarters well lighted.

5. Influencing States to pass anti-lynching laws.

The Southern women have played a noble part in this corrective movement, cooperating with the clubs of the Negro women for advancements in their problems.

How much better it is to build up an open organization with a corrective influence than to hide under cloaks which fan a flame.

Making a Saint

The Lord knows his saints when he sees them. It is to him a matter of instant recognition, though not everyone who bears that name on earth is entitled to it in heaven. It takes a long time to make an official saint among mortals. It has been only two years since Joan of Arc was canonized and she lived in the early part of the fifteenth century. Mother Elizabeth Seton will probably be the first American saint.

Mrs. Seton was born in New York in 1774. Her family was not Catholic. It was while she was in Italy with her husband, William Seton, that she began to be converted to that church. After her husband's death she returned to New York where she was received into the Roman church in 1805. In 1809, with three others, she established at Emmitsburg, Maryland, the first house of what afterwards grew to a widespread community. She was the founder of the American branch of the Sisters of Charity which now numbers six thousand. She was elected the first Superior of the Order and held that office until her death in 1821.

All her documents, memoirs, letters, and papers have been forwarded to the Vatican, where her beatification is being considered. This process is now a prerogative of the pope and is conducted through an elaborate process of inquiry in thirteen or fourteen stages, which ascertains at length whether a deceased person is one of "the blessed" or has attained the second degree of sanctity, entitling him to public religious honor.

Prize Fighting in Disrepute

Prize fighting from the earliest times has been peculiarly an Anglo-Saxon sport, but its professional aspect is comparatively modern. It was developed about the middle of the eighteenth century by Tom Figg, who placed pugilism upon a professional basis. He was owner of a theater in London where contests with and without gloves were regularly held.

With the founding of the Amateur Athletic Club in 1866, scientific boxing came into vogue and for a time overruled the professional game. To-day, however, professionalism has again come to the fore and was never in so great disrepute as at present.

An article in The Outlook calls attention to the fact that "the art of beating a fellow human being into insensibility was highly developed in Homer's time, although the prize was a later addition which made pugilism a profession for some.

"In its essentials the art does not seem to have changed greatly in the long course of its developments. The Greeks knew the cauliflower ear under another name, and the ancient Sicilians possessed a champion in Entellus, who staged what a modern sport writer would undoubtedly call a 'come-back' of redoubtable proportions. If Jess Willard and other elderly boxers would turn to their Virgil and read the account of the games at the funeral of Anchises, they would find much of encouragement.

"We said that the game of personal combat had not changed much in the course of history. We were wrong. In one particular the modern boxing match between professional fighters is on an infinitely lower plane than the heroic contests of classic times or of eighteenth century England. The old fighters fought largely for the love of it and for fame. The modern fighter of any distinction fights for the clang of the cash register, and the clang of the cash register never echoed more loudly than in the recent contest between Jack Dempsey and Tom Gibbons, which, either for good or ill, put Shelby, Montana, on the map of the sporting world.

From Coast to Coast in One Day

Day-and-night air mail service from ocean to ocean in twenty-eight hours is what the Post Office Department of the United States has been carefully planning to put in execution perhaps during the present summer. According to plans, the airplanes will leave New York just before noon and reach Chicago at sundown, where another pilot will take the mail to Cheyenne, passing through three more regular fields, Iowa City, Iowa, and Omaha and North Platte, Nebraska, reaching Cheyenne at dawn. At this point another pilot will take up the journey and will reach San Francisco before sunset.

This means that one third of the distance must be traveled at night, and night traveling has its dangers. It is for this reason that the journey in the hours of darkness will pass over the prairie country which affords better and more frequent landing places than the mountainous regions. In the Monthly Supplement of the United States Postal Guide published in Washington, District of Columbia, is a description of the landing place to be established at Maywood Field, Chicago:

"The huge field itself will be outlined with lights spaced about 200 feet apart. A 50-foot windmill tower will support the great beacon steadily swinging around the skies. The hangars and airplane shop stand out in daylight perspective illumined on every side by gooseneck floodlights, such as are used on billboards. Any large chimneys or other tall obstacles in the vicinity will have warning red lights. In one corner of the field is a large illumined "T" which turns in the wind. This gives a pilot wind direction.

"On top of the hangars another type of floodlight throws a pattern of light on the field. This light is placed high enough to prevent any glare in the eyes of the pilot. Experiments prove that a pilot can land directly facing the beam without any difficulty. Two cinder runways, 2,000 feet long, bisecting the field, are outlined with lights sunk in the ground and covered with glass and a heavy iron grating.

"Having taken a midnight glance at the field, let us take a look at the mail plane which has just arrived from Iowa City. On the lower wing tips of the plane are two lights, small but powerful, each of which produces 250,000 candlepower. These, a pilot uses in an emergency to light up obstacles. Red and green navigating lights as well as the lighted cockpit and the red glare of the exhaust lend picturesqueness to the scene which will be typical in a few months."

The safe landing is not the only problem to be solved. The pilot must be sure he is along the correct route so that he can make these landing places when necessary and not run the risk of losing his way in the darkness or fogs. These are the plans to mark the pathway:

"The pilot will be guided by a pathway of powerful beacons capable of piercing through difficult atmospheric conditions, pointing the way unerringly over the prairie to the terminal fields. Each plane will carry powerful searchlights available for forced landings in case of necessity. Emergency fields have been located and lighted every twenty-five miles on the route. In addition to these precautions and many others, the practicability of night flying is insured by the natural advantages of the terrain over which the pilots must guide their planes. The plains country is, of course, noted for its levelness, fortunately providing natural landing fields, while the lack of humidity in the air lends this route to the illumination plan."

"The air mail beacons will be quite different from the shore lighthouse beacons which guide the ships of the sea. To suit the needs of ships of the air, they will swing around on the top of their towers, throwing a beam three degrees above the horizon, three complete revolutions being made every minute. Pilots can easily pick up these giant beacons and guide their planes to the field. The lights will only be operated at hours when a plane is expected.

"Not depending alone on terminal lights, the Post Office Department is locating less powerful beacons at emergency landing fields every twenty-five miles along the route. Like their larger brothers, they will also swing around the horizon, but their visibility is limited to about thirty miles. These smaller beacons will mark the emergency landing fields to which a pilot can descend in case of necessity.

"But the pathway of light is not complete yet. When the 'ceiling' is low—that is, to translate the language of the pilots, when the clouds hang low—it may be necessary for a pilot to bring his plane close to the land and there is a possibility that he might lose sight of the emergency field beacons. As a final safeguard flashing traffic lights, like those which are placed on city streets, but whose light will be directed toward the skies instead of along the surface of the ground, will be located every three miles along the line of flight. Thus, on a clear night, the air mail pilot 7,000 feet up in the blue-blackness of the heavens, will see a narrow line of light stretching for miles and miles over the level prairies."

The sweeping beacon lights of 600,000,000 candlepower, to be established at the five regular night fields, visible at least fifty miles away will make an artificial aurora borealis for millions of people about the hour the mail plane is due.

The establishment of the day-and-night mail service will be a marked epoch in aviation, and especially in postal mail service. The present time of mail transportation by train will be cut to a fourth or fifth. Compared to the weeks which people used to have to wait for letters, when they were carried by the post riders on ponies from one relay station to another, it is almost unbelievable.

Burbank Active at Seventy-Four

Luther Burbank, the plant wizard, has labored for nearly half a century in Santa Rosa, California. That city had a jubilee recently to celebrate his stay and labors with them. Mr. Burbank is seventy-four years old, of medium height, and brown with outdoor work. For a man whose achievements are represented in such volumes, one would expect to find such a learned man that he would make you tremble with his vocabulary. Therefore we marvel at his simplicity as Morton Todd tells of it in the San Francisco Argonaut:

"We chatted for an hour and a half, during which I considerably let him do most of the talking, and he used only one botanical term in all that time: when he referred to a lanceolate leaf. If he wanted to call a leaf hairy, he just called it hairy; he did not try to hide it, or keep its condition to himself, by calling it hirsute; and if Burbank can do that, some of the botanists whose science seems to consist mainly of cryptic nomenclature might do the same.

"There is the Burbank potato, now propagated under many names, with qualities and accomplishments the natural potato never thought of—a sort of trained vegetable, and that way of characterizing it conforms to Mr. Burbank's way of thinking about plants: he considers that he trains them, and the title of one of his books is, How plants are trained to work for man. The training cannot be made effective with the individual plant, but only over several generations, through cross-breeding, environmental influences favorable to variation, selection of those with qualities valuable to man, and rejection of the others; so it is the family that is trained, not the individual.

"The potato," said Mr. Burbank, "is a wonderful story in itself. We find it in its earliest form high in the Chilean Andes, making a few little roots in the cracks of the rocks, and going mostly to tops and seed because so few seeds can germinate. And the roots would extend so they would have to be traced six or eight feet to find a little tuber as big as a marble. I had a collector in Chile, after primitive potatoes and other things, and sometimes he had to blast to get them out. The original plant was so weedy that in lower ground and more favorable soil it ran to tangled vines and became a pest. But in better environment it would sometimes produce more valuable roots, for human consumption. On the island of Chiloe it seemed to find its favorite elements, and a tremendous number of varieties have been produced there.

"In this country the potatoes were nubby and small and subject to rot, and when they ran to any size it would be in one direction so that they looked like lady fingers. Sometimes they would be all eyes running clear to the center. They had to be trained to produce good roots, and that was a matter of selection and inviting surroundings. They had to be taught to stay in the hill. I began my work on the potato in 1872, back in Massachusetts. I found the seed-ball of an Early Rose, which seldom bears seed, and got thirty-two plants from it that were practically all different. From these came the Burbank potato. I sold it for $150. It has probably contributed $150,000,000 to the food values of the world."

To know just how great the wizard is, it pays sometimes to recall some of the things he has accomplished. There is the white blackberry, produced at the challenge of the blacksmith; and the cactus which yielded its pricklers to become a sweet, juicy fruit for human consumption; the useful earliest tomato, wilt-resisting and two crops a year; the ever-bearing strawberry; the hull-less, beardless barley; productive oats; and "a walnut so prolific and of such rapid growth that it might be relied upon some day to reforest the earth." Many flowers he has to his credit—the wonderful gladioli, growing all around the stem; the giant dahlia; the red California poppies; the Shasta daisy; the multi-colored larkspur; and the huge white sunflower, filled with chicken food. And the marvel of it is, Mr. Burbank claims no exemption yet because of age.

Reunion News

Southeastern Illinois

L. C. Moore, president of the Southeastern Illinois District, takes this occasion to remind the Saints again of the reunion which convenes August 24 at Brush Creek, six miles south of Xenia. He advises that the Saints locate upon the grounds on Friday, so that all will be in readiness for the Friday evening sermon, after which the reunion will organize. He desires the attendance of the department heads early in the reunion, so that the program can be arranged. Good speakers have been provided.

The Saints of the district are requested to give the meetings serious thought that they may even improve upon the good reunions of the past. Jacob of old, who had but a stone for his pillow, upon waking could say, "Truly the Lord is in this place." Brother Moore hopes the Saints of Southeastern Illinois will be able to make that statement of their reunion.

"Some who were in attendance at last reunion will not be present," writes Brother Moore, "but if we walk, work, and wait patiently, doing our part honestly and earnestly until our summons come, we can look forward to the reunion with them in a greater and better place."

Alabama District Reunion

The reunion of the Alabama District opened with a good spirit prevailing. The district presidency was in charge, and Apostle F. Henry Edwards was chosen as their assistant. At the close of the organization of the reunion, Elder N. L. Booker gave a sermon, and in the evening at 8 p. m. C. J. Hunt was the speaker.

Prayer service was held each morning at 9 a. m. which was followed by preaching morning and evening by Elders C. J. Hunt, N. L. Booker, and F. Henry Edwards.

On the 15th a twin meeting was held in the forenoon at which Apostle Edwards spoke to the adults and Elder N. L. Booker to the children. At noon an old-fashioned dinner was spread and hundreds of people were invited to partake. About this time we were blessed with a refreshing shower which gave all a good drenching.

Some of the subjects discussed by the various speakers were: "Dead flies," "The financial law," "The Lamanites," and "Progress."

Recreational features were conducted by local officers.

Looking Forward to the Kirtland Reunion

As August 9 to 19 draws near, the minds of many are directed to beautiful Kirtland where proudly stands, in hallowed reverence, the only God-appointed structure on earth. On this date the annual reunion will be held and many are the hearts anxious to pay homage to the monument and place most outstanding in the restoration of the latter-day glory. That the heart's longings may be religiously and profitably satisfied, the committee is making special arrangements and all plans made that nothing of a spiritual, intellectual, and physical comfort will be wanting.

Special efforts will be made to broaden the vision of the young people of the church and prepare them to shoulder the burdens which sooner or later must of necessity fall to them. And to make this effort an assured realization, the services of President F. M. McDowell have been secured for the entire time. The morning services will be given for this object under the direction of Brother McDowell.

The evening services are to be purely missionary in char-

LETTERS AND NEWS

Los Angeles, California

At the regular branch business meeting July 2, our esteemed pastor, Elder David Dowker, presented his letter of resignation as pastor of the Los Angeles Branch, and Elder Sidney Gray was chosen to act in his place until conference should provide another regular pastor. Elder Dowker and family left for San Francisco and Oakland the latter part of last week in the touring car donated to them by the branch.

On the evening of July 10 the largest crowd the Los Angeles church has gathered for many weeks came to bid farewell to the outgoing pastor and family. An interesting program was rendered in which much talent was evidenced, especially in the musical numbers under the direction of our local and district choristers, Sisters Kelley and Wickes.

For the past few months the Los Angeles Branch has shown much evidence of new life. The church at Eleventh and Wall Streets built several years ago is now too small to accommodate an ordinary preaching service, much less any special occasion. In view of this fact, the branch has purchased a large lot in the beautiful Exposition Park district, on which it is expected a suitable edifice will be erected in the near future.

Unity and concentration of purpose is marking the activities of almost every member in the branch and the keen regrets felt at the departure of our esteemed Brother Dowker, is now like the forming of the pearl crystallizing into a firmer determination to bring the efficiency of every worker up to the highest possible standard.

A goodly number of the priesthood met at the church on the evening of the 15th and listened to an instructive lecture by T. W. Williams on "Duties and activities," and all expressed willingness to perform all services possible in the line of their respective callings.

The work in the Department of Recreation and Expression is receiving considerable attention from our two able dramatists and instructors, Sisters May Lewis and Marguerite Wickes, who are giving the branch the benefit of their talents, both teaching classes in public speaking and expression. The sisters are also lending their services in various other lines, especially Sister Wickes who is our district chorister acter, and to make sure this all-important feature of our work will be fully taken care of, we have secured the services of such enthusiastic missionaries as Apostle J. F. Curtis, Brother G. T. Griffiths, and others.

Recreation will be in the hands of efficient directors who are competent to direct the bubbling fountains of youth.

Much-needed improvements for comfort are now in process. A one-thousand-dollar lavatory system, under our beautiful community building, is being installed, also a water supply system assuring this much needed comfort. Dormitories for men and women are expected to be prepared. Meals on the self-serve plan will be in the large dining hall just across the street from the Temple. A new and added feature will be a complete lunch counter on the Temple grounds, where good lunches and light meals will be served at astonishingly low prices. We have done this so that none may be denied this rare privilege.

Kirtland is fast becoming the modern mecca of latter-day Israel, so you are invited to come and bow down at the living shrine, and is instructing a class of men in an effort to build up a men's glee club. This work is proving quite a success.

F. J. EBELING.

Each Sunday brings many new visitors to the services, and it is impossible to get in touch with all of them. Los Angeles is building up faster than any city in the United States at present and many Saints are coming here for permanent location, among whom are Brother and Sister J. J. Vanderwood from Utah.

Sunday School Picnic at Bradner, Ohio

The Northwestern Ohio District enjoyed a Sunday school picnic at Bradner, Ohio, July 15. Over a hundred Saints from Toledo, Oak Harbor, and Sylvania, were present.

The district Sunday school officers, who had charge of the program, had planned a picnic dinner in a grove but rain changed the plans and dinner was served at the Harms home.

Brother C. W. Clark, of Columbus, was the speaker. In the afternoon his sermon was for the young though not especially to them. He took for his text, "The parents have eaten sour grapes which have set the children's teeth on edge." He pleaded for the young people, that the older members would strive harder to make the church and church work more pleasant for them. The youth gathered together under proper direction will be as harnessed steam, a power for good.

We talk of getting back to the "old paths" and some think it means the ways of our fathers, but in reality it means God's ways and his plans, and we are apt to think that new ideas and methods are wrong because they have not been tried out by older ones. Youth is progressive and we must give them a chance in the church or they will progress out of it to their destruction and to the church's loss.

The evening service was well attended by the Bradner people, a number of nonmembers being present. At this time Brother Clark spoke on "Faith." Many new thoughts were presented and all enjoyed his discourse very much. He brought encouragement to the Saints and expects to return in the near future and lecture on the Book of Mormon.

May the church continue to progress and Zion soon be a reality.

BERNICE O. HARMS, District Secretary.

President Eldert A. Smith in Onset

President Elbert A. Smith and his family have arrived at Onset, Massachusetts, following an overland tour by automobile from Independence.

President Smith writes that he stopped at Kirtland, Hill Cumorah, and Niagara en route, and many less important places where camp was pitched.

The party encountered extremely hot and then cold weather and drove two days in the rain but no trouble occurred and they reached Onset in good spirits.

The family is located in a cottage for the summer where swimming, boating, and tennis are the attractions in sporting lines, while the Southern New England reunion, now in session at Onset, offers ample spiritual refreshment.

Echoes From Zion

San Francisco and Oakland, California, are well represented in Zion. On the night of June 30 twenty-five came together to surprise and welcome Sister Irma Saxe Otis and Sister Edna Frazier en route home from the Young People's Convention. Talks and poems and readings with cake and punch made up a pleasant evening. The sisters left for the West on July 4 in time to miss the big celebration on the campus.

We still feel an interest in the Northern California District and are pleased that the reunion is finally permanently located at historic Irvington. May they have a spiritual re-past July 20 to 29.

Our Fourth of July celebration on the campus, the largest ever held here, was a delightful place to meet dear friends of the past and form new acquaintances.

We find a good spirit of friendship here in Zion. We are not forgetful, however, that "he that would have friends must show himself friendly." True friendship is a fruitage of the gospel spirit. Be friendly.

J. M. TERRY.

Friends of Graceland Will Build

[The following is a letter sent to all the young people of the church by those in charge of the Graceland College gymnasium building fund.—EDITORS.]

You are getting this letter for one of three reasons, either you are a Graceland Alumnus, a former Graceland Student, or a "Friend of Graceland." If you are either of the first two, then you are necessarily the latter and, for that reason, we are addressing you as "Friend of Graceland" and asking you to function as a friend. "A friend in need is a friend indeed." Graceland is in need.

In the past Graceland College has been one of the three highest Junior Colleges in the United States and, because of this, a universal demand has come to make it a four-year college, and in order for Graceland to take its place as a four-year standard institution, it is necessary, according to the laws of the State of Iowa recently enacted, that it have a physical culture course and this course cannot be added until it has an adequate building in which to carry on each instruction.

Therefore, President Briggs, by letter, made known the immediate needs to the church authorities and friends of the college and, in answer to the "Call," out of the East came one Hoxie, by name, to the Young People's Convention, with the vision, desire, inclination, a world of enthusiasm, and a nucleus of finance with which to start this movement. He said "We in the East will give $5,000 toward a gymnasium and convention hall for dear old Graceland if her 'friends' will give the balance." The party was on.

The Lamoni business men, with their usual business acumen and "friendship" for Graceland, in five minutes subscribed $5,000. Then came Hoxie again saying, "If you will make that subscription $7,500, we, in the East, will raise ours $2,500, so to date the Lamoni business men have subscribed their quota.

At the 1920 General Conference, authority was given the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric to spend $10,000 for recreational purposes with special attention to the needs of Graceland College for a building to house these activities. This fund has never been used. Now comes the Bishopric and Presidency saying, "No better opportunity could exist for the expenditure of this sum, so it is yours to use on this gymnasium."

Now my dear Friends of Graceland, comes your turn, for it hath been decreed that the Alumni of Graceland subscribe $5,000, and that other Friends of Graceland subscribe $5,000, which, added together, makes $10,000 from the young people of the church.

At two enthusiastic meetings of the Young People's Convention nearly $5,000 of this $10,000 has been raised.

The ground has been broken in the presence of the church authorities and two thousand spectators. We are going forward with the slogan—"Friends of Graceland will build." The young people of the church do not hesitate, do not contend, do not dream and fail to accomplish, but they dare to dream and dare to carry out their dreams, moving forward in unity. You are one of them. Have you caught the vision? Are you ready? Will you help us build a place you will enjoy as a recreational center and convention hall for future use of the young people of the church?

Sign the inclosed pledge for as much as your heart dictates and your bank account will allow. Mail it to-day to Charles S. Van Eaton, President Graceland Alumni Association, Pisgah, Iowa.

We know it is not necessary to make a church drive, but if you have a friend, and we are sure you have, who you think would like to be a friend of Graceland, tell him this story and ask him to do his bit; send it in with your own, and success will be ours. Let's go.

The New Church at Walnut Park

The story of the Walnut Park Church does not begin with the erection of our present splendid church building. Neither does it begin with the organization of the branch with its forty-eight charter members.

The beginning was in the summer of 1912, when one man heard the voice of God calling him to go to Walnut Park to make his home and give to his neighbors the opportunity of hearing each week the gospel of repentance which he himself had accepted.

This man was not one of the strong, experienced ones of the church that he should be expected to lay the foundation for one of the large branches of Zion. He was not even an elder, but a young priest who felt his weakness and marveled often at the task assigned him. But God knew his heart—that he would endure much for love of the work—and when discouragements became too great he sent other faithful ones to support him.

One is rather surprised to hear the story of the struggle to establish the work in the very borders of Independence, a city in which large congregations were meeting regularly, and where it would seem prejudice should hardly be known.

But when Welton W. Wood brought his family to Walnut Park and located at the corner of Pearl Street and Alton Avenue, across the street west from our present church site, putting up a small tent across the road to the south in which to hold meetings, he found no welcome awaiting him. It seemed that practically no one wanted the message preached here.

Earnest efforts to establish the work in this locality had been made previous to this by Brother Thomas Wheeler and wife, who came here in 1908 and secured speakers at various times to hold meetings in their home, where little prayer meetings were also held, but it was Brother Wood's endeavor which established the work permanently.

When not engaged in his daily employment, he visited the surrounding homes, gave out tracts, and invited the residents to Sunday school and preaching meetings on Sundays, and was grateful if even eight grown people and children attended. Often there were less.

To add to the difficulties, Brother Wood himself was not a gifted speaker in the pulpit, and it was necessary for him to secure other preachers practically all of the time, he superintending the Sunday school and having charge of meetings.

The indifference to the gospel message continued not only for a few weeks, but months and months went by with no better results. If it were hard to be turned coldly from the doors of nonmembers, one can imagine his feelings when stopping at the homes of Latter Day Saints who had moved into the vicinity only to be told, "No, we don't care to help with the work in that tent. We moved here to be in a large branch and shall attend at the Stone Church or at the South Side."

Brother and Sister William Victory, an elderly couple living near the tent, were always loyal to Brother Wood, and by their means and constant attendance at services and faithful care of the tent did much to encourage him.

Nearly a mile from his home lived Brother John and Sister Ethel Schwab, to whom he at last went almost in despair and pleaded for help. This young couple, married only one year, had as yet little experience in mission work, but with earnest zeal they pledged their support, little guessing perhaps the sacrifice the promise might entail.

Sister Schwab began tracting industriously, making friends, and extending invitations. She gathered children into the Sunday school, she taught them, she sang, she played the little organ and acted as secretary, and with scarcely an exception attended every meeting, Brother Schwab also teaching and assisting as his work permitted.

Wednesday evening prayer meetings were begun, and though they received even less support than the other services, they were kept up faithfully. Why? Because there was always in their minds the admonition and promise of the Master they were serving—to be faithful, to continue the work, and in due time Saints would be gathered into this place and a house of worship would be built.

To this meeting the members often came fasting, and this with a double purpose—for their spiritual good and that the price of their supper might be dropped into the collection box for necessary expenses. Week after week they met, and still the meeting opened with four—possibly five or six—present. Sister Hattie Wood, faithful to her little family of four children, could seldom attend evenings, though assisting her husband with the music on Sundays and in any way she could.

Occasionally visiting Saints and members of the priesthood came into their meetings, encouraging them with kindly commendation and sometimes with words given by the Spirit, urging them to continue the meetings in Walnut Park and more would join them.

Meanwhile, as cold weather approached, Brother Wood had secured means from the Independence Stake to build a tiny church on the back of his own lot, but this was ignored as completely by many of the grown people as was the tent, it being scornfully dubbed, "Welton Wood's chicken coop."

The Sunday school, however, grew in attendance, but as so few grown people would consent to help, the workers found the burden almost too great to carry on. Then again in this time of need help was sent. This time Sister Laura Mosier came into their Sunday service, having felt strangely impressed by an experience in the morning that she should attend there rather than at the Stone Church nearer her home. When Brother Wood approached her with a plea to come every Sunday and bring her family to help him, she felt constrained to promise immediately that they would. Thus several permanent and capable teachers were enlisted in the mission, and the leader took heart again.

At last came the glad days when more Saints volunteered their services, when new members moved into the vicinity, when a few were baptized, and the little mission house became so crowded that just before Christmas Brother Wood and his helpers joyfully tore out the end of the building and added ten full feet to its length.

Then a piano was needed, and these Saints agreed to give all they could afford—twenty-five cents apiece each week—toward its purchase. Regularly Brother Schwab collected the quarters and made the promised payment on the piano.

They also looked forward to raising money for lots on which to move their church where they might enlarge it, the membership of the mission having grown to near half a hundred.

They were organized into a branch September 25, 1913, with Elder J. J. Boswell, president; Welton Wood, priest; Harry Smith, teacher and secretary; Frank Phillips, deacon; John Schwab, Bishop's agent.

Later a lot committee was appointed who chose for their new church site the two lots where our present building stands, the price being $650, and they began immediately to solicit means for their purchase. The men on the committee, Brethren Wood, Phillips, and William Tillery, had regular employment, of course, which hindered their work of soliciting, but the two sisters, Laura Mosier and Mary Horne, aided by Ethel Schwab, zealously tramped the streets day after day, stopping at every door to tell the glad news that more room was needed for the Walnut Park Saints and asking for contributions. They did not confine themselves to home territory, but far and near throughout the town they found friends. Some gave dollars, some quarters, some dimes, and all was gratefully received and applied on the debt so promptly and regularly that the banker agreed not to take interest.

Early in the summer of 1914 the church was moved across the street onto the back of the new lots, and week by week the congregation grew. An ell was added to the building, but a little later the call was repeated—More members are coming in; more room for worship is needed at Walnut Park.

A ladies' aid was organized, of course, led successively by Sisters O. K. Fry, Mary Horne, and Mary Farrell, who with the diligence habitual of these organizations raised funds for many worthy purposes. They even seem to have gone one step farther than other aids, for, after paying for white paint for the outside of the church, they met there with brushes and ladders and painted the building themselves.

Visitors to this little structure have smiled at its rude appearance—especially the interior, with its low ceiling, its uneven floor, its little square windows, its walls covered with patches of faded building paper, and its homemade furniture. But the Saints who know of the sacrifice it called for, the prayers for help, and the presence of the Spirit freely bestowed as they met, do not smile. They regard it, as they should, lovingly and reverently.

From July, 1916, to June, 1917, Arthur H. Mills presided at Walnut Park; then Leonard Stover until October, 1917; A. H. Parsons to September, 1920; B. J. Scott to April, 1922; and J. W. Adams until J. A. Dowker's appointment in August, 1922.

During these years there was continued interest in the erection of a new church. The plan was to build the basement as soon as possible and not undertake more until stake financial conditions were better and until need for more room was very urgent. August 15, 1917, the work began, the first shovelful of dirt being removed by one who at every previous time of need in this place had reached forth a ready, helping hand—Sister Elizabeth Victory, she at that time having already passed her seventy-fifth birthday.

On November 25, in spite of the raw, chilly weather, a band of determined Walnut Parkers, with others interested, met on the church lots for the laying of the corner stone.

After singing, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," Apostle R. C. Russell offered prayer and President Frederick M. Smith gave an address. Bishop Mark H. Siegfried gave a brief history of the work in Walnut Park. "How firm a foundation" was sung, and Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire laid the corner stone, in which was placed a copper box containing a copy of the Holy Scriptures, a Book of Mormon, Book of Doctrine and Covenants, SAINTS' HERALD, Zion's Ensign, Unity, the tract, "What we believe"; pictures of Joseph Smith the Martyr, his son Joseph Smith, and President Frederick M. Smith; a list of general and stake officials, pastor, and building committee; one silver coin of the date of 1917, and a receipted bill for the copper box, donated, made, and sealed by Brother D. F. Winn.

Bishop J. F. Keir offered a prayer of consecration; they sang, "I have found the glorious gospel," and Apostle J. Frank Curtis gave the benediction.

The basement was completed the next year, being large enough to seat 350 conveniently. This furnished ample room at the time for preaching and prayer services, but was inadequate for class work, so the little church on the back of the lot was used for the beginner and primary departments of the Sunday school.

Four years later, when John A. Dowker became pastor, his interest in the completion of a suitable auditorium spread through the congregation, resulting in sufficient money being pledged to induce the stake bishopric to consent to the church being finished at once. Work began that autumn and was continued in the spring, the basement being enlarged and a handsome auditorium built above it. It is now almost completed.

The church is 36 by 76 feet with a wing 16 by 43 feet. There are five rooms or alcoves in the basement, besides the main room, suitable for classes. On the main floor there will be five rooms or alcoves besides the main room, also a balcony suitable for two classes, and a room at the top of the south wing. The white plastered walls, light oak woodwork, hardwood floors, and beautifully stained windows make it a delightful place to meet, while the outside, of dark red brick with light stucco in the gable ends, makes a neat and dignified appearance.

The auditorium which, including the balcony, will seat about 550, was opened for use on June 24, the first meeting being an eight o'clock prayer service with a large attendance.

As a blessed climax to the experience of church building in Walnut Park, at this service God graciously blessed our pastor, Brother Dowker, with the gift of tongues and interpretation, in which, among other things, the Lord assured us that He was in our midst, that He had recognized our efforts to erect a house to His name and joyed in accepting it. He asked us to make it a house of order, that His presence might be there from time to time, and counseled parents to instruct their children more diligently to reverence His laws while occupying in His house.

There is still a heavy debt to meet, but if our large congregation shows the willingness to sacrifice that the few did in the beginning, our twenty-five cents a week and our Wednesday night suppers would cancel the debt in a short time and prepare the building for dedication.

HALLIE M. GOULD.

The church at Denison, Iowa, was dedicated June 24, 1923, at the close of the Gallands Grove district conference held at that place. President Frederick M. Smith delivered the dedicatory address Sunday afternoon to the largest audience ever in attendance at their district conference. Brother Smith preached also in the evening, and his sermon was greatly appreciated by those desiring to know more of the doctrine of stewardships.

Elder O. J. Hawn writes that he has started tent meetings at Saint Marys, Ohio. They have a splendid location on the main street and the attendance is unusually good, with splendid order. He says he is feeling his best and is sure good results will follow the meetings.

Mormon President on Divorce

Recently there appeared in the New York World an article on "Mormon divorce and death rates," in which President Grant, of the Utah Church, stated that there are fewer divorces among Mormons than among members of any other religion and that the death rate among them is lower. He also stated that Mormon crops and financial standing are always the best.

The article refers to President Grant as "prophet, seer, and revelator of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" and continues:

"Discussing the doctrines of the Mormons, President Grant said there was no such dispute among them as between the fundamentalists and the modernists in other sects. The beliefs of the Mormons are laid down severely and cannot be questioned. They insist that God is an individual in the shape of a man. They believe rigorously in the second coming of Christ, to take up his reign somewhere in the United States, possibly at Independence, Missouri, a holy city in the story of the Mormon hegira in the days of Smith. They believe literally in the resurrection of the body.

His Career Foreshadowed

Once when he was a boy of five, President Grant said, his mother took him to a meeting. One woman began to talk in a strange language. Her utterances, translated by an elder, prophesied that Grant should be a great figure in the church and should lift up his voice for it in many lands. President Grant went on to tell how, as he grew up, he at first had no thought of success as a preacher, but hoped only to be rich. Yet he was made one of the twelve governing apostles of the church before he was twenty-six, and lived to do missionary work in Japan, Hawaii, all of Europe, Mexico, and Canada.

President Grant declares that such articles as that in the Encyclopædia Britannica about the Mormons are entirely false, and that the church has protested many times against them, but without success. As for polygamy, he said:

"I myself have declared that a man who contracts plural marriage is going against the laws of God and man. We have dropped two of the apostles since 1907 because they insisted on teaching it was all right, and a number of Mormons have been excommunicated."

Australian Items

Movements of the missionaries and workers in Australia are reported in the Gospel Standard. Some items of general interest follow:

Bishop Lewis has acknowledged the receipt of donations totaling £41 16s towards the purchase of equipment for the Maori mission. Elder Loving intends to purchase a horse and sulky with the funds subscribed. This should be of material assistance in traveling from one Maori village to another.

Apostle McConley is back in Adelaide after spending some time in Western Australia. While there he conducted a mission in the Saints' church in Subiaco, and is engaged in a similar effort at Adelaide at this writing. He will return to New South Wales, it is believed, in time to attend the Northern New South Wales Conference. He has been recalled to America, and will doubtless leave here early in July.

Auckland (New Zealand), June 1. The work in Auckland shows signs of life, especially the Sunday School and Recreation and Expression Departments. Last Sunday was a record attendance, forty-two. This was followed by a splendid sacrament meeting to which most of the children remained, and in the evening Brother G. J. Waller (of Honolulu) preaching an encouraging discourse. He left Auckland by the Niagara to-day, homeward bound, and expressed himself pleased with the progress manifested in the church here.

Brother J. H. N. Jones tells of an interesting visit to the Maori natives in New Zealand:

"Since last writing, Sister Jones and I attended a Maori feast, and there met one of Ratana's (the Maori healer) apostles. This man gave me some peculiar information about Ratana's church. They call it 'The Church of God the Father, Jesus Christ the Son and of the Holy Ghost and the Holy Angels.' That is a good, long name. We had quite a discussion on various matters, but when I told him that I believed in all that name, he said, 'Well, there's nothing further to argue about; shake hands, we're brothers.' He then kindly gave me an invitation to preach for them, and I hope to fill the bill. Ratana keeps a book of life into which he is entering the names of all the believing Maoris. I was told that to heal a Maori he had to come into contact, but with a Pakeha it could be done by letter any distance.

"At the feast before mentioned, we witnessed the Maori method of cooking on red-hot stones, watered to get steam and then covered with cloths, bags, and finally with earth to keep the steam in. They cooked a whole pig, lots of eels, kumeras (sweet potatoes), and some ate the pig, the eels, and the vegetables from the same plate. It looked to us a bit on the greasy side, but all seemed to enjoy it.

"The tables were laid in the open air, and it was a fine spread, the viands being quite as good as any European feast, and the waiters as attentive and obliging as one could wish. These Maoris, to the number of from fifty to one hundred, stay together feasting for weeks at a time. We saw at this feast a real Maori greeting—rubbing noses—a widow who had lost a son greeting relatives. They hold hands and place the faces together, and remain in that position for perhaps a minute, with their tears commingling and falling to the earth."

Independence

Music in Zion is rapidly progressing and the program for conference is under way. The Institute Chorus, which is the body of trained voices, had its second rehearsal Monday night, July 23, at the Stone Church. About seventy-five or eighty were present, these having been admitted to the chorus after having passed an examination.

The Conference Choir, which had its third rehearsal Thursday night, July 19, at the Stone Church, now has enrolled 135 members. The combined Conference Choir and the Stone Church choir rendered "Glorious forever," by Rachmaninof, at the morning service. Miss Marcine Smith sang, "But the Lord is mindful of his own," from Mendelssohn's "Saint Paul."

The combined choirs of the churches in Zion expect to give a concert on the Campus in the near future.

The orchestra, under the direction of R. T. Cooper, is working hard on the conference musical program.

Director James R. Houghton announces a course on Appreciation of Music to begin August 10 in the Department of Recreation and Expression, at the Stone Church. It will consist of a series of musical renditions by the orchestra, band, choral clubs, vocal and instrumental soloists. Talent from the surrounding districts and stakes will be used in these concerts.

Elder L. E. Hills has been lecturing at the Stone Church each Friday evening to good audiences. He will close August 3.

The executive board of the Independence Music Club met July 20 at the home of Mrs. A. L. Yingling to discuss plans for its winter concerts. Mrs. W. N. Robinson, honorary president, who has recently returned from Europe, was present. Mrs. Robinson had conferred with Mrs. O. L. James, the president of the club, who is at present in Europe, concerning plans for the coming season. It was decided by the executive committee to continue the series of concerts this winter including a light opera. A course in musical appreciation will also be given.

Two socials are scheduled this week in Zion. One was held Tuesday night on the lawn of James Bennett at Englewood. Proceeds from the social will be applied to the church building fund. The other social on Thursday night on the Mount Washington Church lawn will be to buy seats for the church.

A. Max Carmichael, general Sunday school superintendent, was in Independence over the week end.

Bishop J. F. Keir, of Independence, has left for his vacation. He will visit several reunions in the West.

R. V. Hopkins, pastor in Zion, left last week for the Western Colorado reunion. He will be gone for about two weeks.

Bishop B. R. McGuire is visiting reunions in the East. He expects to be present at about six or seven.

The amphitheater now on the Stone Church lawn will be moved to the Campus where the outdoor programs will be continued for the remainder of the summer. The Campus has a natural incline at one corner of the grounds making an ideal place for an outdoor theater. The regular Saturday night motion pictures will also be shown at the new location on the Campus.

Sunday services in Zion were as follows: Stone Church, Elder A. B. Phillips preached at 11 a. m.; Patriarch Ammon White at 8 p. m. At Second Independence young people's prayer service was held outdoors at 7 a. m.; 11, preaching by Fred Moser; ordinations at 2.30 p. m.; 8 p. m., preaching by Patriarch H. O. Smith. At Enoch Hill, Elder J. V. Roberts preached at 11 a. m. and Elder E. D. Moore at 7 p. m. Elder F. J. Teeter preached at Englewood at 7.30 p. m. Liberty Street speakers were Corral Willis and Elder James Barrett at 11 a. m.; and J. M. Terry at 8 p. m. Walnut Park, preaching at 11 a. m. by Elder H. A. Higgins, of Nebraska City, and at 7.30 by Elder J. A. Dowker.

The regular radio service at 6 p. m. has been resumed, the first program being broadcasted Sunday evening, July 22.

Sunday School at Independence, Kansas

A small group of Saints at Independence, Kansas, organized a Sunday school last October under discouraging conditions but with a determination to do something in the right direction, and we are thankful to say that we are holding our own.

Brother Harrington, of Independence, Missouri, visited us in November. He preached to us for a week and did much to give us new life. Later Brother Lee Quick visited us and gave us something to think about along spiritual development. We feel that the Saints should remember what these men of God say and put the law of God into practice in our daily lives. A responsibility rests upon each one of us.

The use of the Adventist church has been promised us, so we want to extend a cordial invitation to any elder visiting this part of the country to stop and preach to us.

We mean to stand by the Sunday school and by the work, and in so doing hope to do good to ourselves and our neighbors.

MRS. HELEN LOGAN.

Holden Stake Items

Elder J. W. A. Bailey has recently closed tent meetings at Buckner and moved the tent to Atherton. Elder George Jenkins is assisting him.

The Department of Recreation and Expression, of Holden, gave a picnic at Starkeys Grove north of town last Thursday afternoon.

The services of Holden Church on Sunday, the 29th, will be in charge of the Department of Women. They will present their work at both the morning and evening services. Sister J. L. Fender is the superintendent and will have charge.

Sister Gladys Teeter, assistant stake music director, was at Lees Summit last week meeting with the musicians.

Our stake bishop is helping out in the southern reunions. He reports good meetings and expects to return about August 8.

Our patriarch and wife, Brother and Sister I. M. Smith, are on their vacation, visiting in Illinois. Brother Smith while home at Warrensburg usually speaks once each Sunday. Though getting older each year, his sermons are as young as ever and they speak for progress and advancement. The Saints appreciate Brother Smith.

The stake presidency and bishopric have been operating a dining hall at the State Fair for the past two years and will do so again this year. They are arranging for their helpers and are offering board, lodging, and admission to the fair to those who will come and help out for two days or more. Arrangements must be made before coming. Those interested will please write to W. S. Macrae, 202 Clark Street, Warrensburg, Missouri, or I. M. Ross, Holden, Missouri. The proceeds of this venture go into the Holden Stake building and loan fund. If you go to the fair (August 18 to 25, Sedalia, Missouri) look up the Square Deal Dining Hall.

Young Folks Entertain Older Ones

On the 21st of June the young people of the Pittsburg, Kansas, Branch entertained the older folks at a social gathering. It has been hard to get the older members together in a social way and this event was especially appreciated because many came and enjoyed the splendid spirit. These get-togethers are worth a good many sermons in our branches.

A branch reunion was held on July 4 in an adjacent park. A basket dinner and picnic was enjoyed by those present.

Branch attendance has been good so far during the summer including prayer services, Sunday school, and sermons.

Upon request Brother John Blackmore, of this branch, recently addressed the Civic League of Weir on "Community responsibility." The Baptist church building was used with a good attendance.

News From Eastern Maine

Early in February I left my home in Boston, and in company with Elder Gleazer entered the Eastern Maine District to commence my labors as one of the general ministry.

The winter was unusually severe even for this part of the country and the traveling was so difficult that we were unable to accomplish anything outside of Jonesport. However, the winter had an end, and in the spring I returned to Somerville and moved my family to Jonesport. It was with real regret that we left the associations that have become so dear to us in that branch.

The hospitality of the people of Maine is traditional, and we appreciate what it means.

We attended the district conference at Corea, June 23 and 24, and met with pleasure Brother and Sister U. W. Greene, M. C. Fisher, and Elder O. L. Thompson who was en route to Nova Scotia.

I am trying to visit all the branches of the district as often as possible. We are continually reminded that the field is large, the harvest white, and the laborers few. It is inspiring to read about the progress of the cause of Zion, of the investiture of stewardships, and the consecration of men and women to the cause of Christ.

H. A. CHELLINE.

Children's Day at Eros, Louisiana

As it was impossible for us to have our Children's Day in June the program was given the second Sunday in July, and the day was spent pleasantly by a large crowd. The best part of the service was the baptism of Brother Litton, of Zwolle, in the afternoon.

In the evening Brother J. T. Riley preached a wonderful sermon to the young people. As soon as he closed many rushed to him to express their appreciation of his message. We seem more determined to shun the world and its associates than before. May God help us to remember those precious words.

We have a fine group of young people here and ask the prayers of the Saints that we may never be idlers but doers of the word continually. We always enjoy the visits of the missionaries and receive good that can never be forgotten.

GEORGE FULLER.

Saints at Troy Kansas

We are a group of the Fanning Branch seven and a half miles from here. As it is inconvenient for us to attend there, we have regular Sunday school and Religio services here as best we can and have an attendance of from twenty to forty for Sunday school.

We have rented the Presbyterian Church for this year, as their organization has run down so they use the house only for funerals of members, which is provided for in the contract. It is a fine location—a good, commodious frame building one block off the main street and across from the city schoolhouse and rural high school. We wish we were able to buy it.

After our district conference in May, Brother Walter Curtis and Samuel Twombly held a ten days' meeting, with a fair attendance and interest for this place.

M. L. SCHMID.

Elder Harold I. Velt had a leaflet prepared for the church anniversary service April 18. This included a picture of the church with the Sunday school in front. Also a picture of a chart he had prepared with a photograph of the three presidents of the church in order—Joseph Smith the Martyr, Joseph Smith his oldest son, F. M. Smith his grandson. On the inside of the folder there appeared a brief statement of church organization, the gifts of the Holy Ghost, the posterity of Joseph Smith, prophecies, spiritual healing, and an announcement.

Correction in Sunday School Senior Quarterly

An error occurs in lesson 13 of the present issue. The visit of the angel Moroni to Joseph was not on the night between Friday and Saturday, but it was on the night of Sunday. September 23 this year is, therefore, the one hundredth anniversary of the angel's visit, and the family gathering in which Joseph related his experience probably was on the ensuing evening.

The error occurred by the editor's inadvertently tracing the wrong column of days in the calendar referred to in the lesson.

Reunion Notices

Southwestern Kansas, at Winfield, August 10 to 19. Island Park is a fine place to camp. The sisters of the Winfield Branch will have charge of the dining cottage. Meals will be sold at the lowest possible cost. Those desiring tents and cots will write Brother J. J. Wilson, 321 North Grove, Wichita, Kansas. We are not ready to set the price on the tents as we are trying to make a deal for some tents which will make them at a very low price. Those coming will make their own arrangements for bed clothing. We especially urge the Saints of this district to make an effort to come. We are expecting some very able speakers. For further information write Thomas S. Williams, 1306 South Market, Wichita, Kansas.

Central Oklahoma, at Redrock, August 17 to 27. It will be held on a very beautiful piece of ground a mile west of Redrock with the Indian branch. There is good shade and good water near the grounds and it is located on the main highway between Perry and Redrock, so that it is easily reached from any direction. Efforts are being made to make this reunion profitable to everyone who can possibly attend, not only to the white Saints but also to the Indians as well. All who are interested in the Indian's welfare should be there to help make it a good one. Meals will be furnished on the grounds. Tents and cots will be for rent as follows: 10 by 12, 3-foot wall, $4; 12 by 14, 3½-foot wall, $5; cots, 75 cents. Can also furnish 12 by 12, Chautauqua family tent, two rooms, and having special awning, 6 by 12 at one end, which need not be lowered at night to close tent, 6-foot walls, $7.50. All those desiring tents should get their orders in as soon as possible as these tents cannot be had on short notice. Send all orders to W. E. Shakespeare, 502 Main Street, Stillwater, Oklahoma. Earl D. Bailey and W. E. Shakespeare, committee.

At Brooksville, Maine, August 18, business session on the last Saturday afternoon of the reunion. A. Begg, president.

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove, at Dow City, August 17 to 27. Prices: Tents, 7 by 9, $3.70; 9 by 9, $4.65; 10 by 12, $5.25; 12 by 14, $6.40; 14 by 16, $10.25; cots, $1.25; mattresses, $1; chairs, 16 cents. There may be a slight reduction from these prices, but if so, those ordering will get the benefit of the same. Order at once, as orders should be in a week beforehand. Send orders and remittance to J. L. Butterworth.

Detroit and Eastern Michigan, at Port Huron, August 3 to 12. First joint reunion. Location, Tenth and Thomas Streets. Tent prices: 7 by 9, 3-foot wall, $4; 9 by 9, 3-foot wall, $4.50; 10 by 12, 3-foot wall, $5.25; 12 by 14, 3½-foot wall, $6.75; 12 by 14, 5-foot wall, $7.50; 12 by 16, 5-foot wall, $8.25; 14 by 21, 6-foot wall, $14. Curtains for tent, $1 extra. Flies over tent, $1 extra. No orders taken after July 31. Cots, $1. Straw for beds for sale on the grounds. Bring your own bedding. Get your order in early. Send orders for tents to Ray D. Bennett, 200 Harmon Avenue, Detroit, Michigan. Meals served cafeteria plan. Robert H. Huston, secretary.

The reunion at Maqoketa, Iowa, which was announced for August 3 to 13 has been canceled. F. M. McDowell.

Conference Minutes

SPOKANE.—At Sawyer, Idaho, on the reunion grounds, June 24, 1923. Elder Oscar Case, the district president, with his counselor, R. A. McDole, was chosen to preside. Statistical reports were had from Spokane, Washington; Coeur d'Alene, Valley, Gifford, and Sagle Branches in Idaho, and from the Spokane District. Ministerial reports were read from Oscar Case, Robert A. McDole, Carl Crum, L. E. Holmes, P. P. Reed, George Leache, Oliver Shirk, Peter Klaus, and Daniel Macgregor. Reports were also received from the Department of Women of Spokane, Washington, and Sandpoint, Idaho. Bishop's agent's report, from December 1, 1922, to June 1, 1923, showed total receipts of $1,689.24. The request of the Spokane Branch that the next district conference be held at Spokane was unanimously granted. Oscar Case was elected district president and he chose as his counselors, R. A. McDole and Vernon Gunter. Oliver Turnbull was elected secretary. Delegates chosen for General Conference: Daniel Macgregor, Peter Klaus, W. W. Fordham, Oscar Case, Mrs. Oscar Case, Mrs. Eli Bronson, and Carl Crum. It was unanimously voted that the next reunion be held at Sawyer, June 22 to July 6, 1924. Reunion committee selected for next year: Charles Crabb, Clarence Crabb, Leroy Deeter, John Crabb, and Joseph Wilson. A subscription was authorized and taken up for the purpose of purchasing a tent for reunion and missionary purpose. Oliver Turnbull, clerk.

HOLDEN STAKE.—At Holden, Missouri, Friday, June 29, at 10 a. m. Conference was organized with the stake presidency, Brethren Krahl, Macrae, and McWethy presiding; Blanche Christenson as secretary; and R. F. Moorman in charge of the music. Missionary supervisor and department superintendents reported. Stake bishopric reported: receipts for eleven months of the fiscal year, $8,114.07; balance on hand, June 1, 1923, $388.77. Concerning church building needs, he reported: Warrensburg had purchased a very desirable prospective building site, one block from the college campus; East Independence has secured a lot for a new edifice; Sedalia is preparing to build; Marshall is considering the building of a mission house in West Marshall; and Atherton is looking forward to a needed church building. Sister Lola A. Johnson was retained as stake music director, and her request was indorsed for the appointments of Roscoe F. Moorman and Gladys Teeter as assistants. The stake presidency reported the organization of a local church at Buckner, Missouri, on June 24. R. B. Cook as pastor and Sister Elmora Propst as solicitor, nominated by the stake presidency, were approved. A teacher's quorum was organized with Perry L. Hiles, of Holden, as president pro tem, and M. L. Haney, of Holden, as secretary. A second quorum of deacons was also organized with Frank Ball, of Warrensburg, as president, and Joseph Beebe, of Holden, as secretary. Upon approval of the stake high council and conference action, provision was made for the ordination of Milton A. Ferguson, of Holden, and Ralph M. Ridge, of Marshall, to the office of priest, and William S. Ridge, of Marshall, as deacon. Brother Ferguson was ordained and the stake presidency was authorized to provide for the ordination of the brethren not present. East Independence Branch, through the president and secretary of the building committee, Brethren T. W. Thatcher and G. R. Collins, presented plans for a new church building and asked the consideration of the conference. A motion was passed looking with favor and approval on the move and guaranteed the East Independence church such assistance as may be possible in harmony with plans as formerly adopted by the stake. Thirty-seven were nominated for delegates. The following eighteen were chosen: D. J. Krahl, I. M. Ross, J. W. A. Bailey, W. S. Macrae, C. J. Hunt, R. E. Burgess, C. V. Hopkins, F. A. McWethy, H. E. Moler, R. F. Moorman, I. M. Smith, Mrs. I. M. Ross, George Jenkins, J. J. Teeter, Roderick May, James Duffey, Levi Phelps. R. B. Cook was chosen as the eighteenth delegate should the membership at conference time permit one more delegate. Brother Bailey, stake missionary supervisor, reported the need of tent equipment. The stake bishopric was authorized to raise sufficient funds to equip the stake tent. Subscriptions were amounting to $40 to be used for this purpose. Brethren Ross and Macrae called the attention of the conference to the Square Deal Dining Hall which is to be conducted at the State Fair August 18 to 25, proceeds to go into the stake building and loan fund. The stake cabinet presented the following recommendation which was indorsed: "That in matters of emergency, where cabinet consultation cannot be held, that each department have the privilege to make decisions in carrying out the work of that department, where such decisions do not conflict with the laws of the church or resolutions passed by the local church in business session, the local church reserving the right to approve or disapprove such action at a later meeting." We were pleased to have General Sunday School Superintendent A. Max Carmichael with us throughout the conference. He represented all the departments and presented his work in a manner which invited attention and impressed the hearers. Brother Carmichael's work was thought producing, causing self-examination. His "better way" of doing things was strikingly presented. His work will bear a fruitage in the stake. Sister M. A. Etzenhouser spoke on Sunday morning on social service. In the afternoon on Sunday a number of brief addresses were given, the following occupying: A. Max Carmichael, Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, J. W. A. Bailey, F. A. McWethy, C. J. Hunt, and the department superintendents. Brother George Jenkins was the speaker in the evening. Lexington was chosen as the place for next conference, time to be left with the stake presidency.

Our Departed Ones

BURNHAM.—Charles F. Burnham was born in Delaware County, Ohio, March 14, 1858. Married Margaret Cooper at Burlington, Iowa, December 25, 1890, by Elder James McKiernan. Baptized by Elder J. C. Crabb, June 18, 1892. On June 28, 1923, he was run over and killed by an engine in the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railway yards while on duty for that company. Leaves wife and two children, Charles and Catherine, both at home. Funeral from the Saints' church at Twelfth and Locust Streets, at 4 p. m., July 1. Elder James McKiernan was in charge, assisted by Elder John Jenkins. Interment in Aspen Grove Cemetery.

RATHBUN.—Jenette Rathbun was born July 20, 1834, in the State of New York. Married Eason Rathbun, April 2, 1850. Her husband preceded her by several years. She spent the greater part of her life in her native State. Died at Willet, New York, June 15, 1923. Leaves two children, Charles Rathbun, of Buffalo, New York, and Mrs. Florence Gridley, of Bainbridge, New York. Sister Rathbun was next to the last of a family of fourteen children, a sister of the late Bishop Rogers. She was a firm believer in the gospel and in her later years affiliated with the Latter Day Saints. She was a woman of sweet and patient disposition, full of kindness and beloved by all who knew her. "Her works shall follow her." Funeral sermon by F. M. Cooper. Interment at Oak Ridge Cemetery, Sandwich, Illinois.

HOUGAS.—Thomas Hougas was born in the township of Rutland, LaSalle County, Illinois, December 2, 1836. Married Harriet Teale, January 2, 1858. Baptized in 1861 and was an indefatigable worker in the interests of the church up to a few years before he died, when failing health ended his official activities. He served as pastor of the Mission Branch for about sixty years and during his long pastorate many were blessed under his ability and marked spirituality. He was a man of great faith in the promises of the gospel and but few knew better than he, the realities of spiritual life. Died at the home of his son, George, at Marselles, Illinois, June 15, 1923. Leaves five children, Joseph E., Ida M., Nathan A., John B., and George A. Six children have preceded him. Leaves also thirty-nine grandchildren and thirty-five great-grandchildren. Funeral from the Saints' Church. Sermon by F. M. Cooper.

BENNETT.—Susan J. Bennett was born in Illinois, May 10, 1843. Baptized September 29, 1889, at Kansas City, Missouri, where she resided for a number of years. Died July 9, 1923. Leaves four daughters. Funeral from Forster's Funeral Parlors. Interment at Forest Hill Cemetery.

GOLDSMITH.—Ruby Abigail Bronson was born May 25, 1890, at Plano, Illinois. Moved with her parents to Amboy, then to Lebeck, Missouri, and in 1917 moved with her husband to Montana. Married Raymond R. Goldsmith, November 8, 1908. Baptized at an early age. Died at the home of her parents in Andes, Montana, May 19, 1923. Funeral from the Saints' church. Sermon by J. E. Wildermuth, assisted by S. M. Andes. Interment in Andes Cemetery. Leaves husband, three sons, father, mother, four brothers, and two sisters.

From the Log of the Four Ninety

The Chevrolet 490 is a Ford in process of evolution. It has some of the essential characteristics of an automobile. The class in religious education is divided on the subject of evolution. Some hold with Bryan that the Ford is a special creation of Providence. Others hold with Darwin that the Chevrolet 490 evolved by way of the Ford and the ox-cart from a single primitive wheelbarrow which came into existence by chance during the early Irish age—a "cosmic accident," or was it a comic accident?

Our Chevrolet 490 embarked from Independence June 20, bound for Onset, Massachusetts. Besides the skipper, who was also chaplain, there was the first and only mate, the chief engineer, known to his friends as "Tom," registered on the ship's list as Ronald G. Smith, and his brother, the boatswain, Lynn Elbert Smith. These persons with their duffel occupied all available space above and below decks, and on the running boards—here our metaphors become mixed, the 490 being a land craft; but on such a cruise in such a small craft metaphors are often mixed.

The morning was all that could be desired. The sun shone brightly. The crimson rambler on the front porch made vivid love to Dorothy Perkins. Jennie Wren tended her babies in her house by the garage while Jack Wren did the heavy work of singing. Meadow larks piped cheerfully from fence posts. It was such a morning as made my neighbor John Lund declare, "Surely anything that has any life in it at all will show it in June."

But Sister Bishop Becker's parting blessing had been, "You will be a wiser man before the trip is over." Even so, we were soon to learn that all things change. Shortly after noon, and slightly east of Marshall, a very big and black thunder storm poked his head up over the horizon, discovered us, and came on with amazing speed. Soon rain was descending in torrents while thunder remonstrated with us on the temerity of attempting travel on Missouri dirt roads.

So we were condemned to chains and mud, with a puncture betimes, and spent the balance of the day fighting hills and slippery roads. The first night drove us to lodgings in Columbia, not the gem of the ocean, but Missouri's home of learning. But the second day was more favorable, and that night we made our first camp in the open, at Saint Charles. This was a typical western tourist camp, maintained by the city free of charge for the accommodation of the auto tourist, and equipped with electric lights, city water, and various other conveniences. Yet it was far enough from the city to be almost sylvan. On a high hill, well-wooded with native trees, and overlooking the river, it commanded a splendid view and was one of the most beautiful camps seen during the trip. Here east met west, after the custom of tourist camps, and California camped by the side of Maine, while Ford hobnobbed with Pierce-Arrow in truly democratic fashion.

Here we accounted our troubles with dirt roads ended. From that point the National Old Trails Road was well surfaced, the road from Saint Louis on being of new concrete. We had intended to visit several branches en route; but had been delayed in starting by heavy rains, and soon saw that we must press on with few stops if we were to reach Onset at the time we had planned.

So the route of the 490 led on through the level fields of Illinois and Indiana, past primitive rail fences strangely out of keeping with the busy highways they bordered, more reminiscent, in fact, of ox-team days, and into Ohio. In picking our road north through Ohio we were a little unfortunate, and traveled most of the way over the Detour Highway.

After a particularly long and hard day's drive the 490 drew into Kirtland at 10.45 of a Monday night. The members of the crew were very tired, and, be it known, very dirty, or to use the conventional and polite phrase, "travel-stained"—yes, they were travel-stained. They had no desire to meet or greet acquaintances until they had enjoyed an opportunity to clean up a bit and become more presentable. So the first and only mate suggested that they camp in the grove by the Temple and keep their presence secret until morning. This plan the skipper said was quite impracticable. But they compromised by adopting the plan of the first and only mate.

Soon, as we drove through the night, appeared the temple, towering silent and majestic against the stars. With awed voices we said, "There is the temple." Yes, the temple. So the 490 slipped quietly into the shadows of the grove of elms and hard maples in the temple yard. But almost immediately voices were heard from the hotel. Lights appeared. Footsteps drew near. The plan was no more practicable than the skipper had thought it to be. Observing our stealthy entrance the brethren had decided that a band of gypsies had arrived, perhaps to steal the temple; and with entirely commendable vigilance they came to make inquiry—all of which explained the rumor that Gipsy Smith the evangelist had come to Kirtland. At once plans must be altered and soon we found refreshments and comfortable beds in the Kirtland hotel.

We found Brother and Sister Pitt in charge of the temple and deeply interested in caring for visitors, who are many and from all parts of the country. It is Brother Pitt's delight to preach the gospel to such a party of visitors; and for such work his happy smile, pleasing presence, and long experience eminently fit him; while his companion is, as always, of great assistance to him. Here for a time with such friendly and pleasant associates we paused to rest and revive our bodies with sleep and food and our spirits with meditation and prayer in the presence of "the House of the Lord." Surely one must be devoid of reverence who can enter this clean, white, holy temple and fail to feel the healing and abiding presence of the Good Spirit.

Good Words From a Methodist

A copy of the Madison Press, published at Madison, Ohio, under date of Monday, April 2, has been brought to our attention. As it contained an article written by one D. L. Crellin, former West Jefferson resident, on the story of the Latter Day Saints, it will be of interest to our readers. This article contains a very fair-minded and rather accurate account of the history of the church together with a clear distinction between the Reorganized Church and the Utah faction, and closes with the following paragraphs which may be of interest to our readers:

About a year ago one of their missionaries [P. R. Burton] began preaching this strange gospel in Thurston County in this State. He was fearless, forceful, and eloquent. He established himself at the town of Walthill and in one year converted one hundred and eighty new members, having the largest church at that place. He also made great gains in other places, some of the converts being of the Indian race. They have one hundred and seventy-five votes in Thurston County. Last fall these voters, regardless of partisan politics, got into line for a better set of county officers. The result was a "clean-up" of the dirty, rotten political marplots who have infested this county for years. The bootlegging gang that has defied the efforts to dislodge them and who were a disgrace to the courthouse were sent into retirement.

As I am a Methodist and firm in the faith, I am writing this from that standpoint. While I differ greatly with their religion, nevertheless I must admit that they are excellent people and a credit to any community in their daily lives. I feel that religious intolerance and unwonted prejudice accounts in a large measure for the objections lodged against them. Perhaps a great deal of sentiment against them is caused through ignorance. Remember that they are not Mormons or Brighamites. They term old Brig a monster of iniquity and evil practices. I have recently attended some of the evangelistic meetings and heard the history of their church and the doctrine of their faith propounded by an able and eloquent pulpit orator. During the past winter I was invited to speak from their pulpit, from the standpoint of a Methodist, both here and at Walthill, and found them a kind, liberal, God-fearing people. In this great country we point with pride to the fact that the persecuted of other lands are welcome here and they may worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. This privilege may of course be abused, as in the case of Brigham Young, but any religion that makes people better citizens and neighbors is to be commended. As a Methodist I am not flying to the defense of any creed. I am only appealing to the American sense of fair play. And so, if the dreaded Mormons arrive from Utah, they may well be unwelcome. But if the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, who have their headquarters at Independence, Missouri, endeavor to colonize old Madison, give them the hand of welcome. Their coming will tend to purify the ballot, add industry and sobriety to the population, and plant prosperity in your midst, for they are a frugal, industrial people. None others may apply to them for membership.

Again I call your attention to the fact that the Reorganized Church is entirely separate and distinct from the Salt Lake City Mormons. It is not fair to persecute them when they are doing their very best to stamp out the evils attributed to the Mormons. If you consider them apart from and a great improvement over the Brighamites, do not do them the injustice of calling them Mormons. Let us believe that the days of religious persecution are gone forever in this country. We look back with horror to the burning of witches at the stake at Salem, Massachusetts, two hundred years ago. We regret the cruel deaths of Joseph Smith, John Brown, and our martyred Presidents. We deplore the religious differences and intolerance now prevalent in Ireland. We look forward to the future in a more optimistic light. We look for education and enlightenment to stamp out bigotry, intolerance, and violence. We have lived in Madison County, and we have faith that with a few words of explanation and a better understanding, no alarm will be felt in regard to the Independence Saints. And remember the writer is a Methodist.—D. L. Crellin.

Conversion is in early life.

A few years ago there was much discussion concerning the age of conversion, and some research placed it between sixteen and seventeen years of age. There were even some of the men of the church who felt there was probably something wrong with the idea of baptism at eight years of age, even recognizing the difference between children, and taking that as a minimum.

Recently, we are informed from a news item, Boston University, in gathering statistics on conversions in religion, says that chances are three to one that a person who has not joined the church before he is twenty-one years of age will never join.

The Catholic Church has long recognized the value of the first five or six years of life. The Methodist Episcopal Church reports that the majority that join are between ten and eleven years of age.

This is moving back the period toward the age of childhood and is in accordance with the importance placed by modern psychological thought on these early years for health in later life. The ideals or basis of life should be laid in early childhood.

It appears quite possible that time will after all justify the placing of eight years as the age for baptism, and that these few years should be years of a particular effort for the childish declaration for righteousness. Eight years of age was never placed as the average age. It was placed as the minimum; for worthy children, rightly instructed, will then be ready for baptism. Modern research rather confirms the opinion that this is true, and that youth is then armored against, and prepared for, the period of storm and stress of early adolescence.

“How Readest Thou?”

The mere pronouncing of the words is not sufficient. How do you read and with what understanding?

The Master in the parable of the sower distinctly made this point, that the seed that falls upon good ground is he who receives the word of God and understandeth it. It is not enough to receive. It is not enough to possess the book. It is not enough to read the book. It is not enough to have in our possession the word of God and be able to repeat it verbatim. How readest thou and with what understanding?

This same point is touched upon in a recent number of Hibbert's Journal. One of the grave difficulties in the world to-day is the differences of language and the confusion arising therefrom because of lack of common understanding. But even if we possessed a uniform language that would not be sufficient. We may all say the same thing but mean something quite different.

The curse at Babel was not so much that people talked different languages but that they made no effort to understand each other or to cooperate in the same undertaking.

Ideas are more important than words. It is not enough to tell the truth. The grave difficulty is to cause our hearers or our readers to understand the truth.

Even among the brethren in the church much confusion arises at times because of this lack of right and like understanding.

It may well be suggested, as Emile Cammaerts says, that the gift of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost did not mean alone that the apostles were able to talk to all of the people in their own language, but they were able to appeal to a true inspiration which opened the hearts of their hearers to their message.

That is the work of the Holy Spirit—to guide us into all truth, to help us to see eye to eye. The speaker on the platform has gestures, facial expression, intonation of voice to help him in expressing his ideas. On the printed page we have only the words, hence one of the greatest questions that can be asked is, How readest thou, and how understandest thou that which is read?

It is not sufficient to quote a brother verbatim. Circumstances, conditions, the conversation preceding and following, all tend to affect and make clear or unclear his meaning.

If we are ever to come to a common understanding, to Zion the pure in heart; if we are ever to come to the city of our God, it will be because the Spirit of God dwells in us in such a measure that we read our brethren aright and have a like understanding. We shall all speak the same, but we shall do more than that. We shall understand that which is spoken in the same sense. When at last we come to see and understand as God, we shall then possess the complete truth.

Management and the Social Ideal

In noting some of the experiments of state socialism and our government administration in this country and abroad, the problem has been and is to secure the services of able managers. In time of war much is overlooked because of the necessity of accomplishing a certain end as speedily as is possible.

But there comes to our desk many comments on the difficulty, first, of securing competent managers, though this difficulty is sometimes exaggerated because able men are frequently most willing to devote their service to humanity. A government office recompenses in large part for the smaller remuneration. Especially is this true if the plan gives hopes that the man and his family will be amply provided for when he is no longer able to work. The fear of poverty is then overcome. There is also an opportunity to do constructive work for humanity. Many, if not the larger part of able men, are quite willing to do the latter under government administration if permitted to do so.

But there comes the second difficulty: there is a strong tendency for a popular social or government movement to be circumscribed with red tape, and an effort made to bring everything down to one common pattern. With a private corporation, if a man makes good he knows that his job is assured; that he will be given a free hand and opportunity to accomplish what he can, and his reward will be as generous as his results. But too often in government or social work politics play their part, not only in the initial selection, but also in the tenure of office.

It is, then, an open secret that government administration means much waste. We regret to see this, as we hold rather strongly for community service and sociality.

We are convinced that the ideal condition is that in which every man is developed to his utmost possible capacity. He is, in other words, educated; and education means the development of his capacity, not the fitting of every man to the one common pattern. When a man is fitted, he does that work for which he is best fitted, and does it for the social good; that good requires that he be given opportunity for reasonable recreation; that he be given fair opportunity for cultural research; that he be surrounded with such conditions that he is able to do his best work.

Nor do we mean that the man should be coddled and everything fixed for him, as he should be able to go out and give, and should not be unduly hampered by those who should be working rather with him to accomplish the ends in view. He should be given a free scope for his ability and permitted to render the best that he is capable of, giving out his best ideals for the body as a whole.

This argument does not apply to one man alone. It is general to the organization. Confidence begets confidence. A man, even though a subordinate, will do better work when he feels that his associates have confidence in him and expect results, and when he feels sure of their moral support. A manager can do better work when given free scope, and he feels that the stockholders, the managers of other departments, or whatever form his associates may take, will give him free rein to carry out his best ideals.

The Best in Life Is Not Lost

The immortality of the soul is indeed one of the greatest principles of religion. It glorifies even our social efforts here and prepares us for a life to come.

The work of Jesus the Christ laid down first of all the principle of personal righteousness and of social justice achieved through personal righteousness. He gave us the possibility of happiness through brotherly love and cooperation in this life, but he also laid the basis for a life to come and gave us not only that hope and assurance of continuity, but also the hope and assurance of meeting again our loved ones. Robert Browning expresses it in his poem, "Abt Vogler," he gave us the assurance that there shall never be one lost good. That which is good, the best of this life, lasts also for eternity.

In the hour of our greatest sorrow, there are those who would come and say that it never will be again, that it is gone forever. To this Browning well makes answer:

Never to be again! But many more of the kind
As good, nay, better perchance: is this your comfort to me?
To me, who must be saved because I cling with my mind
To the same, same self, same love, same God; ay, what was, shall be.

Therefore to whom turn I but to Thee, the ineffable Name?
Builder and maker, thou, of houses not made with hands!
What, have fear of change from thee who are ever the same?
Doubt that thy power can fill the heart that thy power expands?
There shall never be one lost good! What was shall live as before;
The evil is null, is naught, is silence implying sound;
What was good, shall be good, with, for evil, so much good more;
On earth the broken arcs; in the heaven, a perfect round.

All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist;
Not its semblance, but itself; no beauty, nor good, nor power
Whose voice has gone forth, but each survives for the melodist,
When eternity affirms the conception of an hour.
The high that proved too high, the heroic for earth too hard,
The passion that left the ground to lose itself in the sky,
Are music sent up to God by the lover and the bard;
Enough that he heard it once; we shall hear it by and by.

"There shall never be one lost good! What was shall live as before." That certainly is a splendid hope and not contrary to the teaching of the Master who taught a reward of a hundredfold, who assured us that what we laid down here will find its fulfillment hereafter.

Robert Browning was not only a poet but also a musician. He had the leisure to devote himself to that which is beautiful in art.

His poem, "Abt Vogler," presents music in a new light. The speaker seats himself at the organ, calling its keys to their work and bidding each sound to build him a palace, calling all forces above and below to accomplish this one great end, to build a palace founded on the eternal depths but reaching upward to heaven until heaven itself yearned down and completed the perfect round. From all the arts music stands alone, for as he points out in this poem, if he had painted the whole it would have had in due process to be analyzed and seen. Had he written, made visible, still the effect would proceed from cause. We would know why the forms are fair and hear the tale as told.

But here is the finger of God, a flash of the will that can,
Existent behind all laws, that made them, and, lo, they are!
And I know not if, save in this, such gift be allowed to man,
That out of three sounds he frame, not a fourth sound, but a star.
Consider it well: each tone of our scale in itself is naught;
It is everywhere in the world—loud, soft, and all is said:

Give it to me to use! I mix it with two in my thought,
And, there! Ye have heard and seen: consider and bow the head!

He builds, in other words, a temple not made with hands, and finds therein the hope of the immortality higher in the C major of this life where he finds his present peace.

Do Education and Religion Mix

When men get together in pursuit of knowledge, colleges and universities grow up and become the seats of learning for any particular group of people. They are held together so long as this knowledge is conserved and passed on to new generations and so long as truth is the motivating agent behind such a pursuit.

In the case of such institutions of learning, agreement is not a thing sought after, for truth will in the end be its own test and furnish the grounds for prolonging the life of the institution. Certain subjects are avoided here because men have not yet learned enough about them that truth is recognized when it is brought to the surface. Men's opinions and prejudices still govern their intellects in these fields, the most important of which is religion. This subject is taboo in our schools of learning. But few colleges and universities admit the study of religion, and where they do it is from an historical or literary standpoint, never from a religious (excepting theological colleges).*

What wonder is it that the cry has gone up throughout the Christian world that our colleges and universities are the seats of agnosticism and that the products of these educational machines are replicas of the institutions' thought?

Young minds in the plastic stage are crammed with countless cold and sordid facts, whose rough edges still protruding in ragged bits, tear and scar. The problem is too big and crude and real for many of the minds to grasp and grapple with and the results are often regrettable when they should be desirable.

The mind that fails to weigh the manifold facts and make selection of those that fit his philosophy of life is lost in a deluge of doubts. His fragmentary knowledge fails to fit together, leaving great gaps that must be bridged. Religion could supply these missing links in the chain of life and carry over to the other side where a sound footing can again be found. But where the college offers no balm for troubled minds the individual seeks to build for himself the link that will hold him until he can more fully understand the situation as a whole so he throws around him the protective blanket of cynicism to shield him from the eyes of an inquiring world. If he has the metal he will some day bridge the gap and emerge upon a smooth road. On the other hand he may be lost to the true path and flounder in darkness the rest of his life.

Religion has a place in the life of every individual and its scope should be as wide as the experiences of life itself. All truth no matter from what source is God-given and fits into the scheme of the universe which represents God. But man must be guided along the way and aided to know the truth when it is found, for where there is truth there is also falsehood, and a choice must be made.

We are a fortunate people in possessing a church institution which, while opening every avenue of knowledge, at the same time holds forth the light of religion to guide the footsteps of exploring youth. Religion is the balm that softens the gruffness of life as unfolded before the minds of our youth and provides a shelter for storm-driven lives in time of need.

Too great a realization cannot come to the members of the church concerning the privileges offered at Graceland. A means for disseminating the social experiences of the race, it is at the same time the means for conserving the youthful energy of the church and diverting it into power for good to be used in the plan of God in making a perfect people.

Articles on Music

We wish to call attention again to the articles on music by James R. Houghton appearing in the HERALD. This issue contains another article which should demand the interest of every music lover, whether musician or layman.

The series of articles leads up to the General Conference program, discussing in an interesting manner the anthems which will be sung at that time. These articles attempt to give an overview of the musical numbers which will be presented in order to create an interest which will enable everyone to appreciate more fully the significance of these anthems at conference time. The series is well worth reading.

The city of Detroit has recently taken five decided steps forward: first, pensioning city employees after twenty-five years service; second, accepting a gift of a zoo site costing one and a quarter million over five years; third, approving a $15,000,000 bond issue for extension of street railway system; fourth $12,000,000 for municipal power plant; and fifth, providing through an amendment to the state constitution for incorporating ports and port districts with power to make internal improvements.

Our Aims are One

Lamoni, Iowa, June 17, 1923.*

It is a bit difficult for one who has not attended all of the sessions of the splendid convention which has been held, to gather up the various threads and attempt to weave them into a fabric, but I think that I sense the concept of our work had by the men who have been conducting the affairs of this convention, and I feel that perhaps I shall not go very far afield if I shall attempt to epitomize what my conception is of the activities of the various departments and how they are working toward a unified end. That being true, then, when we outline the aim of each department and then gather them up into an ensemble, we have a fulfillment of the subject which has been given to us showing the unifications of our various aims. If I should attempt to epitomize those aims into a single expression I could say that the unity of our aims is found in our effort to develop a people who are perfect, who are situated in perfect conditions, who are maintaining perfect relations each with the other and with God, individually and collectively. This pronouncement or thesis of the unity of our purposes presages a belief in divine teleosis, the existence of a creative plan, well formulated and well conceived from the beginning and the activities of mankind and the universe directed towards consummation of that great plan in the end. It is the efficacy of the gospel to save mankind.

I am not at all unaware of the magnitude of the task that we as a people are thus undertaking—to develop a perfect people, maintaining perfect relations one with the other and with God. The task would be from the start hopeless if we did not have faith in God and in his power to fulfill the promises he has made to hasten the development in his own due time. So I am approaching the subject, not with any false conception that it is a task easy of execution, and, I trust, devoid of any fanaticism.

I appreciate the difficulty of our task because I know it means the rectification of the mature fruits of many generations of bad environment, and the heritage which has thus come to us affords a burden hopelessly fixed but for the comforting and uplifting faith in God.

Our Goal Is Zion

Man has diversified activities and diversified departmental processes; hence, in order to bring about the perfection which has been indicated in the thesis that we have presented it will require a diversity of effort. And here is exactly where we have at times allowed to come into our midst some of the disunity which unfortunately has existed. For the diversity or multiplicity, if you please, of the various departmental processes does not by any means indicate that we have diversity of purposes; but under the enthusiasm of experts along certain lines, who with the abundance of the spirit and enthusiasm they have brought to their problem have succeeded in presenting so luridly and sometimes so alarmingly the problem which they were attempting to solve, there has in some instances resulted a distorted view of the goal they were attempting to reach. One of the purposes of the church as a church organization is to have such a form of organization, or if you will permit me to express it, such a highly centralized control that the activities of these departments can be coordinated and directed toward the perfect goal. And in order for us to have the benign attitude that we should have, free from being disturbed by these apparently for the moment opposed activities, we must have confidence in the leadership that God has himself placed in the church for the very purpose of coordinating the activities and the wealth of splendid enthusiasm in these departments. We must therefore, at least in a degree, be able to comprehend to the fullest extent the unity of purpose in which we are all striving by recognizing the one great goal towards which we are working; and that, let me say again, is the function and duty of the church to stand forth, to promote and unify, or at least create a consciousness of the unity of these various activities and departmental processes.

I think perhaps most of you will agree with me that this state of perfection which we have indicated as the great objective of the church and the goal toward which we are all aiming spells Zion. For we must not forget that this Zion glorified will become the justification for the return of the Son of Man. It is useless for us to pray for the return of the Son of Man; it is useless for us to find comfort in the promise that he has made that he will return, so long as we fail to comprehend that upon us rests the responsibility of justifying his return to the earth. And that return will only be justified when we do have a people working under perfect conditions and in perfect relations one with the other.

Church Objective Is Missionary

Now then for the few moments that remain to us for the development of our subject this morning, we shall briefly touch the various departments of the church and the church work in the light of the goal which we have erected before you, and, I trust, which all of us have conceded as being the great goal of the church. Therefore, let us touch first upon the missionary department, for one of the prime duties of the church, one of the great duties of the church, and one of its chiefest functions is to carry on a distinct, a definite, a well-outlined and continuous missionary policy. In other words the church is missionary in its objective; it is missionary in every sense of the word, both in efforts to convert those not already converted to God and then to give a comprehensive understanding to those who see God, but who see him "through a glass darkly."

In the past I know that we have to a large extent curtailed the objective of the missionary arm of the church. It is not only necessary that the missionary department of the church, or those who go out to preach this gospel to mankind, shall preach the gospel in its theological aspect, but the still broader view of keeping in mind this one goal, that the missionary arm is not attempting to convert the people to God alone, but to the acceptance of the plan that is laid down, and with their faces turned towards Zion. In other words our missionaries should have a broader conception of the gospel of Jesus Christ than simply to preach the idea that the belief in God alone will save. They must be able to present to the world the idea that the gospel is not the thing which will save the individual, but the gospel is that which, coming into the life of the individual, will give to him the power to save himself. And I would not even have them preach it in that individualistic way. I would have them preach it that the gospel of Jesus Christ can bring to each individual the power to help save others. That is their prime duty. Paul said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." We have too frequently preached simply the idea that the plea is to the individual to let the gospel save him. We should from now on if never before preach the gospel with the idea that it brings to the individual the opportunity and the power to help save the other fellow. That is the social aspect of the missionary work of the church. Hence, if all of the missionaries are working with the idea of converting people and keeping in view the goal of the church, this perfect people in a perfect condition, then they are working along lines that we can wholeheartedly support.

We have neglected in the past, I am sorry to say, one of our great missionary opportunities. We have two sources of gain to the membership of the church. First, by converting those who are not already members of the church. In other words accretions from without, and that has been to a large extent our chief source of gain. For we have unfortunately neglected to a large extent one of the most prolific of the sources, and that is natural accretion from within. For who will be so rash among us as to claim that we have saved to the church all the children of the members of the church? The chances are that if you were to take the statistics of the church you would not only be surprised, but horrified at the large percentage of children of members of the church that have become lost to us, because of our failure to care for them properly.

Hence I am delighted to see the earnestness and the activity and the broadness of view of those who have been placed in charge of our religious education department when they make up their minds that it shall not be any fault of theirs if any child in this church fails to comprehend the mission of Jesus Christ as written in the activities of this church. For we have neglected one of the greatest and most prolific and one of the most secure sources of making accretions to this church. However it is essential that the religious education department carry on its missionary work by teaching the youngsters from the early stage of learning up to the days of usefulness, the stage of the adult, to keep in mind the one thought and teach them religious education with the idea of having it manifested in their lives in good work, always working towards the goal as set out above. In other words, both in the missionary arm, when we are attempting to present the gospel of Jesus Christ to those who are not members of the church, to those who are potential members, the unbaptized children or the baptized children who are not yet really converted, there is this prime essential that must be continuously held out, and that is that the gospel of Jesus Christ is designed of God to become a potential factor in character building. But God never intended that we should build a beautiful and magnificent character except to become of service in the church. Therefore the man who has been reared either on the outside or in the church and who has grown unto the stature of a man in Jesus Christ is the character in whom all those forces have become so loosened that he becomes an active and dynamic factor in the creation and upbuilding of Zion. That is the purpose of the gospel. It is conversion of people to the ideal of God, the development of character for the purpose of building up the kingdom of God.

Spiritualize Temporal Affairs

There is another very important department of church work, but we have attached to it a name which is narrow in its conception. We speak of the financial department of the church. I wonder why the time has not come that we shall more properly designate that department of the church as the economic department whose duty it is to develop, preserve, and so loosen the forces and create pressure that will direct the economic activities of our members along the same line—of pointing forward and reaching toward the goal of a perfect people among perfect conditions. For can you conceive perfect conditions springing from the economic order and heritage of the present unfortunate and evil conditions that exist to-day? Not by any means. Hence this department which has been created to work parallel to and in harmony with the spiritual activities of the church must always and continuously have its eyes fixed upon this perfect condition industrially and economically that will contribute to and not detract from the things that make for perfect interrelations.

And this then means a reorganization, a consecration, a vivifying by the Spirit of God of our activities, both in the agricultural and in the industrial lines. I say those two because basically there is a division that can be made and which should be properly understood, and yet they are so interrelated, and must be, that the one supports the other, and that is the man on the farm, the workman on the soil, produces the necessary raw materials from which the fabrication of the things of wealth is made possible. There must then be that reorganization of those who till the soil so that they can be made to feel that presently as well as in the future their activities and the very ground on which they are working and tools with which they are working are being made to contribute to the accomplishment of that goal—a perfect people in perfect conditions in perfect relations with God and each other, and that shall be applied to industry as well. I shall not attempt here to go into it any further than to say that the doctrine of stewardships thus becomes of prime importance. We must, in other words, spiritualize our temporal affairs.

Graceland the Educational Center

I shall not attempt to take up and discuss at great length this morning the educational aspect of the church, any more than to recall to the mind of those present this morning who were here two or three Sundays ago what I attempted to give as the ideal of the church educationally; and not attempting to repeat what I said then I may say: Long have I looked forward to the time, always have I been trying to get the people to look forward to the time when Graceland College would be expanding beyond its present condition until it has become the educational center of the church. And to-day we are closing the activities which have demonstrated to the people of the church and the people at Lamoni in an objective way just exactly what we are trying to stand for, and they have been made to realize that the young people of the church will be looking with warm-hearted sincerity of purpose toward Graceland as being the home of the educational activities of the church, that which will ramify eventually into every branch of it. I say this, too, for the purpose of disarming the fears of those, if any there may be, who still fear that the church is going to take from Lamoni the educational interests that are centering here around Graceland College. I understand that there are some who fear that the establishment of the Institute of Arts and Sciences in Independence is bound to detract from the activities here at Graceland. Never! It cannot but reflect the larger activities in Graceland. If the institute ever becomes a college, it will have become so after Graceland has become a university.

But there is one point that I have emphasized in a negative way that I shall mention this morning. That is this: there are people who still wonder why we need a system of education of our own. There are people who say that unless we have special purposes in our educational activities then there is no justice in spending additional money, not when we can secure that education in institutions not under our control. My answer is this: There is no educational institution in the world outside of Graceland College and the Independence Institute that has even the slightest idea of looking towards Zion; hence, it is up to us as a people to create that educational machinery that will carry on our educational processes from the cradle to the grave, because education means that. It means learning together, all the time with the eyes of the student fixed on our goal, Zion, a perfect people under perfect conditions. And no educational institution in the world to-day has any such objective as that. That is the justification for our own educational department. That is the reason we must build up Graceland and extend its walls and its activities as well as all other educational institutions throughout the church. Our educational department will fail in its accomplishments if it fails to keep this before the student and finally train his eyes toward the goal of perfect economic conditions, perfect social conditions, and that the people must develop to the place where they will be perfect religiously.

So in our recreational department there is still the goal in sight. I was particularly interested the other afternoon in hearing the discussion on the recreational activities on Sunday. I want to just briefly augment what was said the other day by calling attention to two things. First, when God's laws were in control of his people, and these laws were functioning in such a way that they were marvelously preserving the race, He insisted for social reasons on one day a week rest or recreation. Has God anywhere issued a command that we shall not play on Sunday? He has said that we shall not do any unnecessary work. Why? Because the Sabbath is socially and economically and even religiously set apart by God as a day of recreation when we can rest as He did from six days of labor and thus prepare for another six days. But in taking this envisagement of it we must not lose sight of the fact that he has also said, "Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy." Hence let us keep in mind the purposes to be conserved. Rest and recreation have an economic and social value so that our usual six days of labor shall be better, and nothing shall be done on Sunday that shall disparage or depreciate our ideal of God and the sanctity of his institution. And so when our department that is concerned in the recreational activity of the church attempts to work out its plans they shall keep in mind this one great thing: They are a department of an organization which is keeping the eyes and the minds of the people looking forward to the coming of the Son of Man and realizing that his coming will not be justified until they have developed those perfect conditions that will make us a perfect people. And if the recreational department carries on its activities with this in mind, then there is not the slightest doubt but what eventually we shall realize the importance of the church work and be able to accomplish the purposes of the recreational department and have it, too, running parallel with the activities of the other departments, all of them working with the idea of Zion as their goal.

Health Necessary for Perfection

I wish Doctor Harrington were here to take the subject of health off my hands for a few moments. You cannot conceive of a people with diseased bodies being a perfect people. You cannot conceive of a perfect people being in pain and suffering intensely because of their own sins, and that kind of a people could not develop Zion or maintain it even if they were put into it. Hence I would like to impress every individual member of the church with this idea that he is religiously short of his duty, if through failure to learn of health he permits his body to become anything else than ideally wholesome. The ideal should be this: Every Latter Day Saint enjoying a perfect body and therefore having a perfect physical manifestation of the purposes of God.

Feelings Are Expressed Through Music

I might say something about music if Brother Hoxie were not here, but not being a musician I might create some blunder. I would not give anything for the music department if it was not working for the same ideal toward which we are all working. Without doubt there is something within us that demands music. It demands that concord of sweet sounds of which Shakespeare spoke. I will venture the guess that most of you, if you will analyze yourselves as carefully as I have myself, will have to admit that there is still enough of the savage in you that there are occasions when you need the soothing effect of the concord of sweet sounds. I have found recreation, I have found pleasure, I have found rest in music; and some of the best rest that I have found has been in listening to the Saints of the church singing the songs of Zion. I cannot conceive of a people even thinking they are in a perfect condition or approximating a perfect condition who have not been trained and developed to give expression to their feelings in the concord of sweet sound when convening in sacred places. And the music department will be coming far short of its goal if it does not hold in view the same goal which should be in the minds of all of us, a perfect people, dwelling in perfect conditions, which will make Zion. And the Spirit of God running in their minds shall sing pæans of joy to God and greet the coming Savior under those perfect conditions.

Buildings Should Express Ideals

Even the buildings of Zion must be made to serve his purposes. I cannot conceive of Christ as being willing to return to earth when we have not created cities in which there shall be the highest form of expression of the ideals of the people in the creation of the buildings in which they are worshiping. I cannot conceive of his coming to people where there shall be squalor. It seems to me our people should realize that God has intended that people shall give expression to their ideals in the very buildings they erect, but before we can accomplish this there must be a group of people knowing the ideals of the church and the profession of architecture who shall eventually be able to write into our own buildings our ideals, so that people from outside shall be able to say: We see in these monuments of brick and stone an expression of a people that lifts us higher. That is the ideal of the architectural department.

Perfect Homes in Zion

Last but not least we come to another department. I refer to the Women's Department. I do not know what emphasis has been given to the Women's Department in this convention, but let me say this, no people will attain a degree of perfection which has neglected the functions of home, and Zion the perfect to which Christ will be justified in coming must be a place which has lifted up the home to the highest condition possible on earth. The home, of all other departments, must be functioning and exercising most accurately toward the conditions of perfection which means that every home in all the cities of Zion and in all the regions round about must be an ideal home in which all the conditions which detract from an expansion and the upward development of the child shall be eliminated and replaced by those forces that shall keep the mind of the child centered on God and the eyes of the child fixed on the goal of the church, which is Zion the perfect condition, the ideal condition, where we shall worship God purposefully.

If we are to obtain this unified objective it demands that there shall be a unified effort, and this means unity of purpose, and of course that cannot come unless we have a unified conception, at least in its broader conception, even if we do not comprehend all details. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you," is the slogan that this church must work by and keep constantly before it. That is the ideal, and you must get it into the mind of every convert and every child in the church, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," for we have been taught to pray by the Master himself, "Thy kingdom come," as being the prime objective toward which we shall pray as well as work so that the will of God shall be eventually done here as it is done in heaven. That spells one thing and that is that the affairs of this church, all departments of it, shall be so coordinated that every individual shall be able to make that expansion of soul whereby he can say with Paul, "All that I have, all that I am, and all that I ever expect to be, shall be devoted to the service of God." That means consecration. I trust that that consecration shall be developed in our minds and may we always have our eyes fixed toward the objective of this church: A perfect people, moving in perfect relations one to the other and to God, a condition that will justify the coming of the Son of Man, is my prayer.

The Christian Century makes a strong point under the heading, "Friendly neighbor or bootlegger." But it states that it is a shock to all right thinking people to find our greatest neighbor, the nation with whom we are supposed to have the most in common, aiding the lawless element to violate our Constitution. If the situation were reversed and American ships were violating the law of Great Britain by standing just outside the three-mile limit, we would quite likely hear of the unfriendliness of our attitude. "Such a traffic may be profitable in money, but if it makes friends indifferent if not hostile, is it worth the price?"

Great Russian Composers

By James R. Houghton

Turning our attention to the modern Russian school of church music we find that a great development has taken place along the lines of a pure vocal style of music. Absolutely no instruments are allowed to be used in the Russian churches. The Russian people are noted as a singing nation. They are naturally a singing people. Folk songs abound and are full of expressive national feeling. The Russian basses are noted far and wide for their very low singing. These basses are used in churches as a sort of substitute for the deep pedal tones of the organ. As a result, beautiful effects are able to be produced. They are especially fond of rich color and choral effects. This style they have worked out in a beautiful and charming manner. They have been able as a result to get a style of church music which is very calm and beautiful and has a definite equitable feeling for effect.

Serge Vassilievich Rachmaninof

The first of the great Russian composers that we shall consider is Serge Vassilievich Rachmaninof. This man is a contemporary composer, conductor, and pianoforte virtuoso of no mean ability. His reputation has been well established in this country, and to many of us he is quite familiar. Perhaps, without fear of controversy, he is one of the most talented musicians of the contemporary school of Russian composers.

He was born in the Government of Novgorod, April 1, 1873. This youthful prodigy early in life demonstrated his ability on the pianoforte, and at the early age of nine years he was permitted to enter the Saint Petersburg Conservatory of Moscow. Here he studied piano under Zvierev, and later Siloti, also known by the writer. He received instruction in musical theory under Taneiev and Arensky. At the age of nineteen years he won the gold medal for composition at the conservatory. During that year he also made quite an extensive concert tour through Russia, receiving enthusiastic praise wherever he went.

In the year 1898 he made his first appearance in London as a great artist and conductor of the Philharmonic Society. He was received with a great demonstration for his exceptionally fine work. He made his first visit to this country in 1909. He is especially known to the people of this country as a pianoforte recitalist, and everywhere is greeted by large and enthusiastic audiences. He is known in a popular way to the American public through his wonderful "Prelude in C Minor." To the American "concert goers" his program is not complete until this selection is rendered.

His works consist of a "Symphony" (1895); "The rock fantasia"; "Gypsy capriccio"; "Aleko," an opera performed by the Imperial Opera of Moscow in 1892; a cantata called "Spring" for chorus, baritone solo, and orchestra; many pianoforte concertos and suites; many songs and anthems.

In his anthem "Glorious forever" we find a definite feeling for form and balance. First there is a statement of the principal theme or solo followed by a short development section and then a definite return to the original or principal theme. Then there follows a section in striking contrast to what has gone before. Cross accents and varied rhythms and tempos are introduced. Modulations to different keys and beautiful color effects are brought out until, with a mighty crescendo or increasing of the volume of tone, the chorus swings back into the original theme with the development section repeated. We find that this form gives to the composition a balance which is really very delightful and lovely to listen to. Many times the voice parts move in octaves and fifths—a very common practice with Russian composers. Also the third, and again the fifth of the chord is sometimes omitted, giving an unexpected quality of tone. This music because of its impersonalism, is an exceedingly fine type of church music.

Dimitri Stepanovitch Bortniansky

Dimitri Stepanovitch Bortniansky, another great Russian composer was born in the village of Gloukoff, Ukraine, in 1752. He, too, early demonstrated great musical ability. He studied in Moscow and also in Saint Petersburg under the chapel-master Galuppi. When Galuppi left Russia, Empress Catherine supplied Bortniansky with sufficient funds to follow him and study in Venice (1768). Later he studied in Bologna, Rome, and Naples. His "Creonte" was given in Venice in 1776; "Quinto Fabio" at Modena in 1778. At the age of twenty-seven he returned to Russia and was elected kapel meister or chapel master at the Empress' Church. During this experience he composed some thirty-five sacred concertos in four parts, ten concertos for double choir, and one mass for three voices. Tschaikovsky has edited and published his works in ten volumes at Saint Petersburg. He died September 28, 1825.

His anthem, "Kol slaven" ("Divine praise"), is noted for its richness of harmony. It has been revised and edited by Kurt Schindler and Deems Taylor. It is essentially a hymn anthem with a beautiful flowing melody. The form is essentially two part, i. e., one melody is followed by a second which is different from the first. There are four verses. The last verse is treated as a chorus for eight voices,

Michael Michailovitch Ippolitov-Ivanov

Michael Michailovitch Ippolitov-Ivanov was born in Gatchina, Russia, November 19, 1859. His father was a mechanic. At the age of seventeen years he entered the Conservatory of Saint Petersburg. He studied musical theory under Rimsky-Korsakoff. After completing his studies here in 1882, he was elected director of the music school and conductor of the symphony at Tiflis. In 1893 he was appointed professor at the Moscow Conservatoire, and in addition to this conducted the Moscow Choral Society. In 1891 he conducted the Moscow Private Opera.

Some of his compositions are "Symphonic scherzo"; four "Sinfonettas"; a cantata called "Coronation"; twelve pieces for chorus and orchestra; operas "Ruth," "Asra," "Assya"; one string quartet in A minor; many songs and acappella or unaccompanied choruses.

His anthem, "Bless the Lord, O my soul," is very melodious and possesses a beautiful harmonic texture. There are cross accents, and the rhythm varies throughout. The form of this anthem is essentially three part, i. e., a statement of the principal theme, followed by a contrasting section and then a return to the principal subject or theme. It is very colorful and possesses a dignity and straightforwardness of style that readily classes it with the best choral music written.

P. Tschesnokoff

The final Russian anthem is by P. Tschesnokoff, a modern contemporary composer. We are sorry to be unable to give anything in regard to his life, as there is no available material. The title of the anthem is a "Cherubim song" and is for a chorus of eight parts. A cherubim song is a song directed to the "Trinity" about which the text is arranged. This is a very popular text with Russian composers and nearly every composer has written a "Cherubim song." This one of Tschesnokoff's is among the finest. The form is prescribed by the nature of the Russian church ritual. A characteristic feature of the anthem is that the "Amen" is sung in the middle of the anthem instead of the close. The words are quite characteristic of the music. "Let us who figure forth the cherubim representing them in a mystery, and who sing the hymn thrice holy, now lay aside every earth-born care.—Amen. That the King of all we may raise on high, by the angelic host invisibly up-borne. Hallelujah."

Summarizing, we may say that because of the many impersonal qualities Russian church music is certainly one of the ideal types of sacred music.

The Glory of God Is Intelligence

By L. G. Holloway

In the field of human endeavor, man has found much that has brought him in touch with Divinity. There is not to be found so far as humanity is concerned a stopping place for that investigation. New problems are constantly presenting themselves for consideration. In order to meet these new problems new methods must be employed. The accumulated wisdom of the ages must and will be employed to bring about that which God has designed.

By this we do not mean that the Divine One has not reserved to himself the hidden wisdom by which he will assist man in his search for his Creator, but we do mean that no good force, power, and intelligence in all the great universe will be denied man in his effort to take to himself that which will enable him to comprehend the Infinite and his wonderful works.

The church in its effort to produce a perfect man must use every force at its command to bring about that condition of perfection. As a church, the Lord many years ago gave his people a law wherein we were told:

Teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

Again in this same section, paragraph 10, we find a declaration of facts as they apply to man, and the forces that make for his good:

All beings who abide not in those conditions are not justified; for intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth; virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light; mercy hath compassion on mercy, and claimeth its own; justice continueth its course and claimeth its own; judgment goeth before the face of him who sitteth upon the throne, and governeth and executeth all things: he comprehendeth all things, and all things are before him and all things are round about him; and he is above all things, and in all things, and is through all things, and is round about all things: and all things are by him, and of him; even God, for ever and ever.

The gospel is so broad, its foundation so secure, that every potent factor in the great universe can be used by God to assist man in his upward climb toward the goal of his destiny.

Herein are found the words of the Infinite as expressed by him in the relationship of man to the things of a universal character.

And, behold, all things have their likeness; and all things are created and made to bear record of me; both things which are temporal, and things which are spiritual; things which are in the heavens above, and things which are on the earth, and things which are in the earth, and things which are under the earth, both above and beneath, all things bear record of me.—Genesis 6: 66, Inspired Translation.

Only so far as these things are comprehended by man can they be utilized by God for man's benefit.

Therefore the greater knowledge possessed by man the greater the opportunity for God to help him.

Truly a greater truth was never spoken than this, "The glory of God is intelligence." Man possessing in a very limited sense that intelligence with which his Creator is endowed, must be ready and willing to accept whatever intelligence he may be able to acquire, from whatever source it may come.

God Speaks to Man

The Lord speaks to man in a thousand ways. It may be by the roar of the mighty Niagara; or it may be by the voice of thunder; or again by the rocks in the bowels of the earth. Man may gaze into the great expanse of the starry heavens, and there see unfolded to him the workings of the divine hand. Again he may receive intelligence by that still small voice which speaks to the soul and conveys to him that which is light and truth. Shall we deny to the Giver of Life the opportunity of using any means known to him for the advancement of the race?

When we consider that "Intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence," "wisdom receiveth wisdom," should it not be the ambition of every individual to prepare himself as fully as is possible for him to do? And all this that the name of God may be glorified in us?

There is contained in this same section further instruction regarding our duty in this regard.

You shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand: of things both in heaven and in earth and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which shortly must come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25.

Wisdom From Above

All true wisdom comes from above, having residence with God the source of all intelligence. This wisdom or intelligence is disseminated to man by different means or avenues. Some intelligence is acquired by study. Other intelligence is obtained by research. While by the process of spiritual light, truth may be presented by God for the enlightenment of mankind. Whatever truth has been discovered by man by study or research is just as true as though it had been spoken by the audible voice of God. For this reason God commanded his people to make a study of kingdoms and laws; in fact, he placed no restriction on man as to what he should study, or in what field of research he shall go.

If all things bear record of God as stated in his word, then we should be able to go as deeply as it is humanly possible for man to go, and still find evidences that will lead us to correct conclusions. In all the realms of science no truth coming from God will ever be set aside, provided men have reached proper conclusions in the matters investigated. It is true man has and will make mistakes both in religion and science. Whatever truth is brought to light, however, by either can be accepted by man with safety.

It has been thought by some that it is not safe to enter into the field of science for fear our faith in God and the gospel may become wrecked. The writer can see no danger in entering into this field of study and research, if men will allow the Spirit of God to illuminate their minds in the investigation to be made.

The Wise Man has said, "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding." (Proverbs 4:7, Revised Version.)

The word understanding as defined by Webster means "the act of comprehending." When we are able to divinely comprehend, we make the right use of knowledge, good for man.

Wisdom of the World

We are sometimes warned to beware of the "wisdom of the world." The question may properly be asked, What is meant by the "wisdom of the world"? Certainly it does not mean that none of the information men have acquired may be believed and used by mankind. Men have done some wonderful things as the result of knowledge they have gathered from the combined experiences of the race in all the ages. This knowledge has not been the result of any one man's experience, but the accumulation, the product of the minds of many during the long processes that have made for the development of man. If all this that men have discovered is to be considered as the wisdom of the world, then God would be out of harmony with himself in giving the instruction he did for us to study "all good books," and which is essential to man's progress and happiness. We must therefore conclude the "wisdom of the world" as mentioned by Paul is not truth discovered as a result of man's research, but that which is antagonistic to God and his gospel.

The "wisdom of the world" is not confined to any man or set of men. It may be with the man at the head of some great university, or it may be with the man who is not able to write his name. Any individual who in his misguided zeal sets aside the counsel of God for his own thoughts which are in direct conflict with the things that make for his happiness is not wise. He is foolish in the sight of God.

rance. Men are destroyed for a lack of knowledge, as states the Prophet Hosea. Ignorance has held nations in superstition and slavery, even to their destruction. Ignorance and superstition always go hand in hand. The greater enlightenment, the greater freedom. This is not only true in matters pertaining to the nations of the world. It is also true in man's reaction to the gospel.

It was ignorance that crucified the Christ. It was ignorance of his message that caused the Jews to hate him.

See God in Nature

Just as ignorance impedes the truth, so the man who possesses most knowledge may be of greater assistance in the building up of the kingdom of God. The greater fund of information we have, whether it be in the field of geology, zoology, botany, astronomy or of any of the sciences, the more movingly may we present the beautiful story of life, provided of course we are otherwise qualified, and are in possession of divine help, for we must look to the source of all light for that endowment of God's Holy Spirit without which we cannot be true ambassadors for Christ.

It is self-evident, then, that the more we know of God and his wonderful creation, the better we can represent him, and it has been as stated by one of the prophets on the Western Continent who significantly said in his day and time, "To be learned is good, if they hearken to the counsel of God." (2 Nephi 6:61.)

As the botanist looks into the rose, he does not find the name of God engraven on that rose, but he does find the evidence of a Supreme Designer which bears record of God.

As the miner goes into the bowels of the earth, he does not find the name of God chiseled in the rocks, but he does find the evidence of law, so that he can trace the shining particles of gold for thousands of feet as a result of a Law Giver.

As the astronomer looks up to the heavenly bodies, he sees the handiwork of an Infinite Being bearing testimony to the perfect character of his Maker.

In none of these things can we discover conflict between true science and the religion of Jesus Christ. So is man free. Indeed he is under command to make a careful study of all laws and kingdoms and things, including the sciences, with the assurance that this knowledge acquired by such study will serve to open up to us the wisdom of God, and the immutability of his laws.

It is true that God can only be fully revealed to the world through those spiritual forces which alone can fully illuminate the mind. Man untouched by the divine light has never been able fully to find out

How Lies Are Detected

A discussion of "Human nature" appearing in the American tells how a successful lawyer has learned to tell when a person is lying.

"My observation," says Mr. Steuer, "is that all but hardened liars are likely to betray themselves in a very curious way. As he starts to lie, the liar's hand goes to his mouth, to remain there for a few seconds, and this movement is frequently repeated. I have found confirmation of this when I have been called in to retry a case and have had to go over the record of the previous trial. Often, in connection with dubious testimony, I come upon some such remark as, 'Won't you please remove your hand from your mouth?'" addressed to the witness by counsel or by judge."

Mr. Steuer came from Austria fifty-two years ago and from a humble home worked his way to success until to-day he is recognized as one of the country's greatest trial lawyers.

Regarding human nature Mr. Steuer continues:

"In sizing up jurors, I am not conscious of being guided by any particular principles or methods. Human nature is too complex to be reduced to definite rules and formulæ, and I think I am guided mostly by my intuitions. Of course the lines of the face have to be considered, but what I pay particular attention to is the manner of speaking. A round-faced man is likely to be good-natured. From this you might judge that he is easily carried along by others. However, if he answers my questions in a decided, resonant tone, I decide that such a man will stick to his conclusions, though he will be entirely good-natured about it.

"Contrary to what may be the general impression, my experience indicates that at least ninety per cent of the witnesses heard in court take the stand fully desirous of telling the truth, and conflicting testimony is therefore due in the overwhelming majority of cases to defective observation and faulty memory.

"Such, at all events, has been my experience in my later years. Beginning among small people, I encountered liars and perjurers on every hand. Though anyone with sufficient intelligence to avoid incarceration in an asylum for the feeble-minded should know enough to tell the truth to his lawyer, I was lied to by my own clients. It is not strange, God. So far, however, as God may be revealed through his creation, we can well afford to avail ourselves of his greatness, trusting to the work of his Spirit to bring us to a full understanding of him and his laws.

Every factor that may assist man to comprehend things as they are known to God, we shall utilize, whether knowledge is disseminated from the pulpit, or from the college or schoolroom, or through some good book, or by word of mouth.

Things not helpful, of course we shall reject, and we will leave untouched all such, directed as we shall be by the Spirit of God, which is the spirit of light and truth.

Proving all things, then, let us hold fast that which is good.

of course, that you should encounter less lying as you deal with people of large affairs. Integrity is at the basis of the conduct of such affairs, and liars are not likely to rise in the world."

When asked how liars are most commonly exposed Mr. Steuer replied:

"Mainly through one habit, which practically all of them have, and that is the habit of overstatement. Feeling obliged to supply what Pooh-bah in The Mikado called "corroborative detail" such as will lend to their tales "artistic verisimilitude," they are prone to supply a few details too many, or more than they can comfortably deal with when they are called upon to explain."

Oriental View of Womanhood

With the Jews before the time of Christ, the oriental view of womanhood seemed largely to have prevailed. Even in the law of Moses as handed down by them and in the very ten commandments is found, Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbor's. The husband had the right to give his wife a letter of divorce but she could not divorce him under any circumstances. This was modified somewhat about the beginning of the Christian era. Adultery was defined as "the wrongful relations with another man's wife." It has belonged to Christian times to extend the definition to include the relation with either of the parties of marriage.

There are some few instances in the Bible of recognition of women such as Deborah, who became a judge in Israel, Esther who was more than a plaything. Ruth is also a beautiful picture of the Old Testament but she is depicted at the feet of Boaz her husband to be.

Even in oriental countries to-day the position of women is decidedly subordinate. Some have even denied that she possesses a soul. She is usually illiterate, and that same condition has obtained in Europe and somewhat in America until quite recent times. The Hindu wife may not even eat with her husband, but must first serve him and then eat, often from her husband's plate.

But we have heard of such instances even in England within the past one hundred years. We have seen evidence of people from Central Europe who even in this country in their settlements at times have hitched their women with the beasts of burden to plow in the fields, while in many cases she has been required to follow the reaper on which sits her lord and master and shock up the grain. Then while he rests from the arduous toil of riding and driving she must prepare the noonday meal and do her house work morning, noon, and night.

Such instances may be multiplied, yet are decidedly unfair. If woman is the weaker, as she is sometimes said to be, she should have, rather, man's protection than be asked to carry the greater burden. In many oriental countries the wife is the slave of the household. In a cooperative work lies the only real civilization. Man can only rise as woman rises, and the contrary is likewise true.

It is interesting in this connection to consider the discussion of the attitude of Jesus towards womankind, as set forth in an article in the Homiletic Review, and as we may observe from the Bible. He dealt tenderly in a straightforward manner and with deference. He did not treat womankind as too childlike to be reasoned with or too weak to be reproved. He talked with the women of the world. He spoke directly with all who spoke to him. There is no instance in all of the New Testament of his descending to pay sentimental tributes to woman's charm, while withholding the just claims of woman's rights as a human being. He condemned sin no more among women than among men. The leaders of his day thought it unconventional even to speak to a woman, but he did not hesitate to stoop even to lift the woman from the city street.

He laid down the same standard for men as for women in the case of the one taken in adultery. (John 8:20.) He dealt with Mary Magdalene and with the woman at the well. He recognized woman's place in the home, but when Martha came to complain that Mary was neglecting her household duties, Jesus gently but firmly informed her that spiritual preparation was more important than the bodily.

The Jewish teachers had declared that it would be "better that the words of the law should be burned than delivered to women," but Jesus, on entering Galilee on one of his early tours, took with him, not only the twelve, but "certain women." (Luke 8:2.) At the crucifixion we again find the women that had followed him from Galilee.

We find, then, Paul also referring to various women as workers in the church. We note his declaration in Galatians 3:28; and in Colossians 3:11 that "there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus," and we note the further statement in 2 Corinthians 6:18 that we are "sons and daughters" of God.

The early Christian church, while departed somewhat from this high position given women in the days of the Master, until in the middle ages her position was little, if any, better than that of the women of the Orient. Yet the early church recognized some of them by giving them official positions as deacons in the church according to traditions.

Christianity is recognized as a continued force in behalf of womankind. It was so in the past. It should be so in the fullest sense of the term in this day of restoration. It is not, therefore, surprising, the position held by women in Nauvoo in the organization of the aid society, nor is it surprising that the Daughters of Zion was the first organization recognizing the need of especial training for motherhood and that, if anything, our women have rather led in the development of women's work.

What Income Would Satisfy You?

One hundred leading Americans were asked, How much money would satisfy you? and the results of the query are published in a recent number of the American.

Of the men whose answers were used, ninety-five per cent of them are listed in Who's Who, so this indicates the degree of success to which they have attained. These men have developed wide interests and represent many fields of endeavor.

The average income which was taken from all the answers appears to be $9,000 a year. This is considered sufficient to furnish an outlet for the major motives of life. This income represents the equivalent of interest at six per cent on a capital of $150,000, so any man having accumulated that amount may retire and devote himself to such pursuits as he desires.

The article, however, continues to say that money is not to be considered as the only kind of capital. Children constitute another kind. Many parents that might have been accumulating a fortune, have spent all their surplus in rearing and educating a family of children and sending them into the world fully equipped. Some of the views as expressed by the one hundred men are as follows:

"When Chauncey M. Depew was president of the New York Central Railroad he wrote to Grover Cleveland, at that time an attorney in Buffalo, offering him the position of general counsel of the railroad for up-state New York.

"I am exceedingly anxious that you should accept this place," said Mr. Depew, who relates the incident in his Memories of Eighty Years. "I think, by an adjustment of the administration of your office, you can retain your private practice; and this will add about fifteen thousand dollars a year to your income."

"Mr. Cleveland replied: 'I have a very definite plan of life, and have decided how much work I can do without impairing my health, and how much of additional responsibility I can assume. I have accumulated about seventy-five thousand dollars and my practice yields me an income which is sufficient for my wants and a prudent addition for my old age to my capital. No amount of money whatever would tempt me to add to or increase my present work.'

"Says Mr. Depew, in commenting on the correspondence, 'I doubt if there were many lawyers in the United States who had that philosophy or control of their ambitions. His (Cleveland's) annual income from his profession was considerably less than the compensation offered by the general counselship of the New York Central.'

"Read in the light of subsequent history, that letter of Grover Cleveland's is wonderfully revealing. What a resolute certainty there was in his make-up! No toying with the proposition, no sparring for time to think it over, no mention of it to his friends. 'I have a very definite plan of life, . . . No amount of money whatever would tempt me to . . . increase my present work.' In those sentences one gets a picture of the man. All through his career he thought things out in his slow, labored fashion and, having taken his stand, he settled himself like a mountain."

One of the answers takes issue with the question asked by saying, "Your inquiry seems to me to reflect the general and pathetic illusion that money is a major concern," he writes. "To me, and to most of the men and women in whose company my days are spent, the accumulation of money is incidental, and not especially interesting either as a process or a topic. We have, so far from 'setting ourselves a financial goal,' declined, by engaging in our several arts and professions, to compete in any foot race in which cash prizes are incentive or reward. . . . Most of us save a little, and rely on insurance policies of different sorts as our chief protection. . . . We should enjoy money, no doubt, if it came to us in the course of the activities which occupy us, but we feel that the poorest known investment is that which exchanges hours for dollars, and that the best is that which invests the hours in the joy of effort, accomplishment, or service, with pennies, now and then, as a by-product."

"An eminent scientist, well along in years, has worked out the problem more in detail. He writes: 'A modest competence for an elderly man, retired from business, married but with no other dependents, may be estimated at say $1,000 a year for rent, $400 for food, $200 for fuel and gas, $40 for electricity, $300 for clothing, $100 for reading matter, $500 for labor (it is assumed that the wife is able to be housekeeper for two, but not do heavy labor), $460 for all other expenses: $3,000. A small automobile would mean about $500 more, but most people too old to work would not want one. This would be $60,000 capital. You may cut this a third and yet not be poor.'

"The editor of a publication known all over the world says: 'I can easily see how a man with the proper perspective on life could use the income from several times a hundred thousand dollars, and still be a very great asset to his community.'

"He points out that Roosevelt's service to the country was made possible because he had enough money so that he did not need to earn.

"The highest figure mentioned as constituting a competence is half a million dollars; the lowest fifty thousand. The figure which is given the largest number of votes is $150,000. If these answers are typical, therefore—and I think they are—they give a pretty good picture of the mind of the average business or professional man."

British Rapped for Prohibition Opposition

The following resolution was adopted by the Primitive Methodist Church in Great Britain at its recent conference regretting the action of ships that defy the American prohibition enforcement, according to the American Issue.

"That this conference of duly elected representatives of 5,000 churches congratulates the American people on the wonderful success resulting from the passing of the Eighteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution of the Volstead prohibition enforcement act passed thereunder. But this conference learns with deep indignation that not a few British subjects in the United Kingdom, Canada, and the West Indies are engaged directly or indirectly in the smuggling of intoxicating liquors into America in defiance of the United States Government, and calls upon the British Government to take such steps as shall prevent persons trading under the British flag from committing the unfriendly act of cooperating with the outlaws in the United States who are engaged in a business which violates the Constitution and law of that country."

In addition to this resolution the Reverend Lionel Fletcher of London, president of the British Christian Endeavor Union, spoke before the International Christian Endeavor convention held at Des Moines, Iowa, denouncing British shipping officials for refusing to cooperate with the United States Government in enforcing the three-mile liquor regulations.

"Do not judge Britain by the line of ships that is trying to run liquor into this country," said Doctor Fletcher. "I as the representative of the British Christian Endeavor and representing hundreds of thousands of other Christians, assure you that we feel contempt for every man who gets money from this thing. The day is coming when there will arise such a public spirit of indignation against it that political officials who do not strive to prevent violations of the laws of our kinsfolk in America will have to face the anger of an awakened people."

Health of Working Children Safeguarded

Twenty-two States now require the physical examination of every child applying for an employment certificate, according to the newly revised edition of a bulletin on Physical Standards for Working Children, issued by the United States Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau. The bulletin contains the recommendations of a committee of physicians who were appointed by the bureau to prepare a standard form for use in examination of children seeking to enter employment.

Since the publication of the first edition of the bulletin, two years ago, a considerable number of changes have been made in the various State laws with reference to such examinations, and the summary of legal provisions which it contains has now been brought up to date. One State, Virginia, is said to have advanced in this respect to a stage beyond that of the other States, in that it now requires the examination of every working child at regular intervals during the years when he is especially susceptible to the strains of industry. It should thus be possible to determine whether the work at which he is engaged is injuring his health or interfering with his normal development. In certain other States a child must be reexamined when he goes from one employer to another, but since he may remain with his first employer until he passes the certificate age, the bulletin points out that this is not so adequate a provision as the new Virginia law.

In addition to the twenty-two States requiring physical examination for every child before an employment certificate is first granted, eight others and the District of Columbia allow the certificate-issuing officer to require an examination when he is in doubt as to the child's physical fitness, but many officers, it is said, do not realize the importance of this phase of their work. In eighteen States there is still no legal provision of any kind for examination, even when a child first enters employment.

The Unity of Social Interests

At the commencement exercises of the Iowa State College of Agriculture, George E. Roberts, a native of Iowa, but now vice president of the National City Bank of New York, delivered the address and took for his theme, "The unity of our social interests." We cannot live alone or live in classes, but must recognize our essential unity, not only as communities and as States, but also as a Nation and as part of the world. If the farmer suffers, in time we all suffer. If Europe suffers, we must suffer with her.

Especially did he stress the unity of industry and its interaction, the necessity for study for more effective production, but having social ends in view. All institutions that supply moral and intellectual leaders are needed. The following extracts indicate the scope of his review of existing conditions and his remedy through the spirit of cooperation:

"The most important factor in social progress is the growth of the faculty for cooperation—the development of the ability of people to live together harmoniously, to understand each other and work together for common interests.

"The primitive man did everything for himself, and he was independent; but it was discovered that if a man applied himself to one thing he would acquire skill, and gradually it developed that if everybody devoted himself to one thing and all exchanged products and services with each other, there would be more of everything for everybody. And that was the beginning of the division of labor and of the highly organized system of industry that we have to-day. It has gone on developing until it has reached the stage of to-day, because the principle of specialization has been demonstrated to be sound. The farther we advance in every branch of learning, the more necessary it is that men shall be specialists. . . .

"Moreover, it is a great voluntary system. It is a go-as-you-please system. Everybody is expected to find his own place in it. There is no overhead authority to tell anyone where he shall go, what he shall do, or what pay he shall get. All of the relationships are left to mutual agreements. It is no wonder under the circumstances that there is some confusion, some jostling and lost motion.

"The great characteristic of the existing order of society is individual liberty. The greatest thing in the world, the most important from the standpoint of social progress, is individual freedom—freedom of initiative, freedom to do one's own thinking and to order one's own life, subject only to the restrictions that are necessary to assure equal rights to others.

"It is common in every period of business depression to have men say that there must be something radically wrong with the existing order of society, when millions of men are out of work through inability to exchange their products as usual. Of course it is true that there is something wrong; there are maladjustments, and disagreements, and sudden disturbances, like a great war, which throw the nicely adjusted organization out of balance. . . .

"The theory is wrong in assuming that all the difficulties would disappear if the organization of society was changed. The difficulties are not inherent in the private management of industry, but in the interdependence of modern industry. They arise from the fact that the people are exchanging goods and services, and that disagreements and contentions arise over the terms upon which these exchanges should be made. . . .

"The vital question in the whole problem of social amelioration is how to bring home to every member of the social organization the fact that the welfare of each depends upon the efficiency of the organization as a whole. Because men do not understand this, we have the tendency for society to break up into groups and blocs and unions and ententes, whose energies are devoted mainly to antagonisms, until the advantages of the whole system of specialized industry is in large degree lost.

"The truth is that it requires a higher order of citizenship, a higher sense of social obligation and responsibility to be a citizen of modern society than it did to be a member of primitive society.

"There is more gain for the members of any group or class in promoting the efficiency of the organization as a whole than in attempting to promote the interests of their own group by means which impair the efficiency of the whole. There is a just relationship between all the branches of industry and business, the maintenance of which is worth more to everybody, by promoting general prosperity than any special advantage can be worth. . . .

"There never was such a demonstration of the essential unity of social interests as we have been having in world affairs in the last few years.

"The greatest obstacle to social progress is the want of understanding and of the spirit of cooperation that depends upon understanding. The system under which men give their lives to the pursuit of knowledge or the development of skill in special lines is dependent upon the spirit of cooperation and of fair play. It depends upon mutual confidence and good faith. We must trust each other or go back to the primitive conditions of life.

"The most insidious appeal that can be made to men is that which is calculated to raise their suspicions about matters in which they are concerned, but which they do not fully understand. Men are readily suspicious where they do not understand. The race history is a continued story of the suspicions, antagonisms, and conflicts of men. The primitive man thought that the other man across the river or over the mountain was his enemy as a matter of course. And so there is to this day a readiness to believe that the other man, the man of another business, of another place, another country, is an enemy, plotting against him.

"The most potent suggestions of distrust are those that appeal to class prejudices and antagonisms. They blind men to the great fundamental truth that the real interests of all groups and classes are not conflicting, and are served best by harmony and cooperation. To throw such suggestions broadcast in the modern social organization is just like throwing sand in the bearings of machinery. . . .

"We expect and believe that a college education will qualify the young men and women who receive it to have a larger and clearer view of these social questions than that which has produced so much confused thinking in the past. We expect these graduates to be open-minded, receptive to ideas from every source, tolerant and eager for the truth, with minds trained to perceive it and to eliminate error; and we expect them above everything else to be loyal and devoted to the great social organization as a whole, and to supply the leadership which it needs."

Thinkers

The following clipping is of interest as one of the signs of the times. It is only to be expected that with more enlightenment, with increased education, there will be less and less willingness to follow blindly any kind of leader or boss. There will come more and more a demand for intelligent leadership rather than unquestioned power, a leadership which instructs and explains as it leads. To such there is the added consolation of an intelligent constituency, that true conviction will be a source of solace and dependable support. It makes for a sure foundation of our building. The item which, we believe, is from one of the Omaha papers, follows:

"Defending the college girl, Miss Jean Marie Richards, dean of women at Syracuse University, offers this observation:

"She thinks sometimes selfishly, sometimes altruistically—but she generally thinks."

"We wonder if Miss Richards hasn't touched upon a modern trend which accounts for some of the apparent ills of humanity as well as making for solid achievement.

"It is true, undoubtedly, that college women think more than women generally used to; it is true also that men and women of all classes, with or without college training, think more to-day than they have in the past.

"Politicians lament sometimes that the 'boss' no longer has unquestioned power; the candidate must appeal to the individual judgment of each voter to a very considerable extent. Newspapers have found that their approval or disapproval no longer wins just because it is offered; the reader must be convinced by the whys and wherefores. Old-fashioned employers who believed in a rule of threat and coercion find that their employees expect to be consulted nowadays in matters affecting their welfare.

"Everybody, in fact, is thinking—some more than they used to, some who never thought before. Not all the thinking is sound. Not all is directed toward substantial achievement. Some of it merely produces confusion, merely heightens the 'jazz' of the times. Individual thought, individual passion, individual prejudice tend to run riot. But such is the way with everything new; it is the way with a child who has a new toy. Nevertheless, little by little the individual is groping toward a settled public opinion that in time will rule—and rule wisely."

Control Pistol Traffic

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—From the editorial columns of one of our dailies is taken the information that at the third international police conference, held in New York recently, one of the leading discussions was in regard to the regulation of the sale of pistols. "Not that there is much difference of opinion; the police officials who have come together from all parts of the world are unanimous in their belief that the indiscriminate distribution of pistols is one of the principal factors in the prevalence of crime, and that regulation in the traffic of pistols by international agreement and cooperation is necessary before the situation can be fully remedied. . . . Drastic regulation of some sort, having nation-wide instead of state-wide scope, is an imperative need of the times."

This brings to mind again the menace of the "empty gun," and the man who "didn't know it was loaded." This menace and danger to human life continues, notwithstanding repeated warnings to the public through the press, in the schools, and elsewhere; that firearms should not be placed within the reach of irresponsible persons. Almost every day in the year we read of some one being maimed or killed by having what was supposed to be an "empty gun" pointed at him, sometimes in play (?).

Keep firearms out of the reach of persons who have no business with them—an appeal is made to parents, employers, and to the public in general to bear this in mind. Some boys think it is "smart" to make believe they are going to "shoot something"; sometimes they do—to the sorrow of many concerned and to their own lifelong regret.—M. L. H., Humane Press Bureau, Boston.

The Value of an Apology

Two boys who had not known each other before became roommates at school and quite good friends.

Fred was a big-hearted fellow, smart in his books, and a leader on the playground. He had a pretty high temper, but then, it didn't flare up very often, so that on the whole he made friends rapidly among his schoolmates.

One Friday afternoon he was taking part in a game of tennis. They were playing off a match and both the sides were eager to win. Perhaps the boys were a bit excited; at any rate, Fred disputed a certain play, and a heated discussion followed.

It ended by Fred losing his temper completely. He threw his racquet down angrily and left the tennis grounds.

An hour later Walter found him sitting by the window in their room. The boy turned around, his face still frowning.

"I suppose you are thinking that I made a dunce of myself on the tennis field—letting my temper get away with me as I did," he said.

"No, not that so much as the fact that you were clearly in the wrong, Fred, and talked pretty rough. I would advise you to hunt the other boys up and make your apologies as soon as possible. You will feel better when you get that done."

"I think such things are best left alone. It will all blow over in a few days anyhow," said Fred.

"I don't agree with you. But even if I did, I don't see how you can feel very comfortable yourself until you have acknowledged that you were wrong and acted in an ungentlemanly way."

"I hate apologies," declared Fred. "I would rather do anything in the world than make one."

Walter looked at his roommate in surprise. "What a queer view to take of it," he said. "Why, in our home we make it a rule to apologize whenever one is due. And the rule applies to father and mother just as much as to the rest of us."

"Whom do your parents apologize to? Surely not to their children?" asked Fred curiously.

"They certainly do if they have been in the wrong," said Walter.

"I never heard of such a thing as parents apologizing to their children, even if they were at fault," said Fred.

"I am glad that isn't the way my father and mother look at it," said the other boy. "I know that they make every effort to deal fairly with us children, but then, as father says, they are human after all, and liable to make mistakes at times, so if they have accused one of us wrongfully, or been a bit hasty in judgment, or speech, they are always careful to acknowledge it and ask our pardon."

"And your father isn't afraid it will lessen his influence over you?"

"How could it?" answered Walter. "It makes me have more respect for him to know that he doesn't hide behind his position as a father, but is manly enough to come out and say so when he has been wrong. He has always told us that that is the least a person can do under such circumstances. But it wouldn't do much good to tell us that if he didn't practice it himself."

Fred was quiet for a few minutes. He was thinking about what he had heard. Then he rose, hat in hand. "Well, if the father of a family isn't too proud to set himself straight with his children, I suppose I am equal to it with boys of my own age," he said with a laugh.

Since beginning the above article, I came across the following incident which was given as an illustration of this text:

"Children, obey your parents in all things, for this is well pleasing unto the Lord. Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged."—Colossians 3: 20, 21.

"A lesson for fathers: I knew a child of exceptionally quick and strenuous impulses. Though affectionate, he was not obedient, and needed to be watched as a weasel to be kept from mischief. His father told him to pick up a pin. The father thought the boy refused, but the father was mistaken. A sharp rebuke. The boy began to sulk. 'Come here, sir!' The child did not stir. The father lost his temper. He seized his boy tempestuously and carried him into another room for punishment. The moment's delay brought the man to himself. He sat for a little while with his child in his arms. Then he said: 'My son, we have done wrong. I have lost my temper and you have lost yours. It is worse for me to do so than it is for you, because I am bigger and stronger and ought to be wiser than you. I ask God to forgive me. I ask you. I must be right before I can help you to be right. Help me to be a good father, so that I can help you to be a good son.' The sullen defiance left the child's face. His arms clasped the father's neck. 'Father, I didn't say what you thought I did!' The child was six years old. He is now sixteen. The father is a quick-tempered man. But I have heard him say repeatedly that for ten years he has never had occasion to rebuke his boy, by word or gesture, for the slightest approach to disobedience. The man of fifty and the boy of sixteen appear to live and have their being in each other as a single soul."

This father was big and brave enough to do the right thing before his child, even when it meant an humbling confession on his part. It won the child's respect and love. What sort of impression are we making upon our children about such things?—Herald of Holiness, April 18, 1923.

Sing Sing Population Decreases

Five hundred and ten fewer prisoners were taken to Sing Sing during the fiscal year ended July 1 than in the previous fiscal year, according to figures compiled by Warden Lawes of Sing Sing. He said he believed this showed that crime was decreasing. In the last year 1,103 were admitted to Sing Sing from this State, as compared with 1,613 of the preceding year. From New York City and suburban counties 881 were sent, compared with 1,450 the year before, a reduction of 569.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Reunion News

Northern Wisconsin District Reunion

The Lord did not forget us in our reunion held at Chetek, for he gave through Brother Gerber a very edifying talk in which he spoke words of promise to three of the young men as well as to the young people as a whole. However, the talk was not all of promise for he told the isolated ones that they had worlds to conquer at their door and that their daily walk and conversation had a great influence on their associates. If we wish to bring others into the work we must let our light shine so that those around us can see we are striving toward the goal of "A perfect man in a perfect society."

President F. M. McDowell read a letter from his father in California addressed to the Saints of the Northern Wisconsin District. A letter of appreciation was sent to him by the people here.

In our problems meeting conducted by Brother McDowell, we were made to feel our responsibility with regard to the young. We are sure if there were more workers like Brother McDowell our problems would be more easily and quickly solved.

Alabama District Reunion

For the last six days we had with us Apostle F. Henry Edwards, and Brothers C. J. Hunt, James Davis, and N. L. Booker, also our district president, W. J. Williamson.

Priesthood meetings were held each day in addition to the regular prayer meetings, preaching, and departmental meetings. Recreational features were held each afternoon and we had community singing in the evening in connection with the preaching service.

A good spirit prevailed throughout the reunion, and many isolated Saints testified of the Lord's goodness to them. On the 19th we were warned by the Spirit of things that will shortly come to pass and words of encouragement were spoken to the Saints.

The farewell sermon of Apostle Edwards was the most forceful we have ever heard.

One of the marked features of the reunion was the increased attendance. On the last day we had an overflowing house and there were three divisions of the young in the grove. At this time thirteen were baptized and about the same number of babies blessed. The reunion was without doubt a success and closed with a great desire for another next year so a committee was appointed to arrange for the reunion of 1924.

More News From Onset, Massachusetts

The Southern New England Reunion is progressing nicely. The preaching services have been very instructive with President Elbert A. Smith, Elder Joseph Luff, and Apostle E. J. Gleazer as the speakers. The character of the instruction presented has been of a high standard, tending towards the development of a perfect man in Christ.

The Sunday morning service was directed by Elbert A. Smith, the results of which service, he states, was a happy surprise to him. Following this prayer service the young people were given a digest of the Young People's Convention at Lamoni by Albert N. Hoxie, John Zimmermann, jr., and Lillian Zimmermann, which was much enjoyed by all.

The reunion has now entered upon its two weeks of special meetings and everything indicates expanded spiritual possibilities and a spiritual awakening that will have a lasting effect throughout the district.

The young people are actively and earnestly pushing to the front, and their services are all that could be desired. Those in charge of the young people are D. S. McNamara and Peter Whalley, with one of the Presidency each day in attendance.

The new innovation of the Forum promises to be an interesting addition to our work. President Elbert A. Smith presented the first subject, "Decorum in the house of God," and the responses occupied the entire time. In fact, many more would have taken part had the time permitted.

The reunion is of a high spiritual character, with seeming complete harmony and cooperation on the part of all. Every department of the exercises seems to be functioning perfectly, and smiles and words of cheerfulness greet everyone.

Our latest arrivals are George W. Robley, of the seventy, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Haas and son Hale, with Craig Siegfried, of Independence, Missouri.

Another Idea for Your Reunion

The Spokane reunion met June 15 to 25 at Sawyer, Idaho, upon one of the most beautiful grounds that nature has provided. Nestled in a little valley between the mountains, on the shores of the Pend O' Reille Lake and on the banks of a beautiful little trout stream, in a natural opening in the forest just large enough for the gospel tent and a splendid playground, the stakes were set for the camp of the Saints.

In the opinion of the writer, and I think of all who attended, the reunion was a grand success. Several important factors contributed to this success, and it is of these I wish to write.

The first and most important factor was a wide-awake, active committee. The committee became active, not five or six weeks before time for reunion, but one year before. At the 1922 reunion the committee for 1923 was chosen and before that reunion was over the committee was organized and had started action for the next year.

Brother Charles Crabb, secretary and treasurer for the committee, announced that he was going to make the 1923 reunion so inexpensive for those who attended that no one could afford to stay at home, and he did it.

The factor second in importance was the early and loyal support of the Saints throughout the district. Early in the summer of 1922 each branch and locality of Saints was solicited, and arrangements were made for all of the fruit and vegetables that would otherwise go to waste to be canned by the community and donated to the reunion. Sugar and cans were furnished by the committee. As a result some eight hundred quarts of good things were donated, with little or no expense to anyone, and that which would otherwise have gone to waste was preserved and used with thanksgiving.

As a result of the united efforts of committee and Saints over seven thousand meals were served during reunion absolutely free of charge. Rich and poor all ate at the same table, and distribution was made unto every man "according as he had need."

If anyone is of the opinion that under such a plan the committee would run behind financially, permit me to report: The average cost per meal was seven and one fourth cents. This cost includes the purchase of dining hall supplies to set a table for one hundred and seventy-five, glass jars enough to can 800 quarts, and fifty dollars paid for the hire of the cook. The entire cost of the reunion was eight hundred and fifty dollars, and the books were closed with a balance on hand of sixty dollars, all bills paid.

But the physical and financial success is not the most important; they are only factors contributing to the real success. The services were well attended and of a high spiritual order. Forenoons and evenings were devoted to services and the afternoons to recreation, with an occasional experience meeting around a large camp fire after the evening service. Some of these experiences were seasoned with roasted wieners or marshmallows. Aside from the regular services in the big tent, a young people's prayer meeting was held each morning at sunrise, and a young people's preaching service at eleven. Thirteen young people were baptized.

Besides the missionary force, we had with us for speakers Brother F. A. Smith, of Independence, and Brother C. E. Jones, of Seattle. The preaching was of a very high order. God spoke by his Spirit several times and gave wonderful words of wisdom and admonition.

Our slogan now is: "A bigger and better reunion next year." And we'll have it, too, because we already have a real committee at work, the loyal and active support of the Saints, a beautiful place to meet, the most wonderful gospel the world has ever known, to preach, Zionistic ideals, and the Spirit of God to help us. With all of these at our service success is inevitable.

Saints, when time for the 1924 reunion has rolled around it would be most extravagant for you to stay at home.

ELI BRONSON.

Northern California Reunion Opens

The Saints of the Northern California District are gathering fast to our annual reunion, some coming two days in advance. To-day, the second of the series, finds sixty-two tents occupied. Every hour of the day and into the night sees some new arrivals. Out of two thousand Saints in the district we expect that fifteen hundred will be in attendance for at least some of the meetings.

At the organization of the reunion Apostle James A. Gillen and Bishop James F. Keir, with the local district presidency, were chosen to preside over the reunion.

Our commissary department is up to date, including steam-heated tables. The grounds are electric lighted and the accessories for health and sanitation up to the minute.

Patriarch W. A. McDowell spoke the first evening to a large audience while Elder Hinman W. Savage preached on the morning of the second day and Brother Gillen in the evening.

We also have with us Sister Dora Glines, general superintendent of the Department of Women, and Elder David Dowker, recent pastor of the Los Angeles Branch.

W. H. DAWSON.

Second Letter From Northern California

We are now on the fourth day of the reunion. There are eighty-six tents occupied as well as many rooms in the near vicinity. Many Saints spent the week end here over the first Sunday.

Elder David Dowker and wife, of Los Angeles, on their way to his new field of labor in Des Moines, Iowa, were with us over Sunday. Elder Dowker preached two very excellent sermons urging the Saints to keep close to God and not give up, as it only meant sorrow to their own souls and would drag others down as well.

It was necessary for us to have Apostle J. A. Gillen conduct an overflow meeting on Sunday morning notwithstanding ing we were anxious to help him conserve his strength as he had had ten weeks of strenuous work before coming here from the Portland reunion.

Sister Dora Glines, Superintendent of the Department of Women, is doing good work. She has succeeded in getting the children of the elementary group arranged. All children up to twelve years of age are taught and taken care of during the morning hours. Sister Helen Rood, who has been in charge of kindergarten work for several years at our reunions, has full charge of this first division of the church activities.

Sister Vida E. Smith, Dean of Women at Graceland College, arrived and conducted a round table, although she was here for only a few hours. By request she related how by inspiration she received the words of "The old, old path."

W. H. DAWSON, for Press Committee.

News From the Spokane District

Our reunion has passed into history, leaving its record as being the largest and best in the experience of the work here. Patriarch F. A. Smith and Elders Daniel Macgregor, Carl Crum, and C. C. Jones were the principal speakers, and we need not tell the Saints that these men are able and willing defenders of the truth.

Our reunion was held at Sawyer, Idaho, the place where we had our first gathering in this district. It is an ideal camp ground and it was voted to return there next year.

Much credit is due Brother Charles Crabb, of Lewiston, Idaho, for the success of our meeting, as he took general command of material things and put things over in good shape. It is not necessary to go into detail as to how the meals were provided, but I will say that those who gave of their means and those who could not were provided for out of the same pot, and the plan of equality worked out so that there was plenty and to spare.

Brother Oscar Case has returned to the office of district president, and has chosen for his counselors Brothers Vernon Gunter and R. A. McDole.

The passing of Brother Oscar Case's daughter Zada, who lost her life in the Columbia River when the ferry at Marcus, Washington, upset, has been one of the saddest experiences we have been called upon to pass through. Truly our hearts go out to our brother and his family in their great grief. Apostle J. A. Gillen preached the funeral sermon.

We had the pleasure of having Bishop J. A. Becker and Elder F. A. Russell with us last Sunday and were instructed and edified by their talks. We are always glad to have the men of the church visit us.

The work is proceeding well in our district and we are gathering a few sheaves along the way. Mushrooms spring up over night, but it took Noah a long time to build the ark, but when it was completed it was what the Father had ordered so it served its purpose. Let us keep on getting out good timber and the ark of our safety will be completed when the call comes.

Two-Day Meeting at East Jordan, Michigan

On July 21 and 22 a two-day meeting convened at East Jordan, Michigan. Due to the busy season, the crowds were small on Saturday but the meetings were nevertheless good and created a fine spirit for the Sunday meetings. The first meeting on Saturday was a prayer service at 10 a. m., followed by a short business session to organize. The district presidency was put in charge, and organist, chorister, press committee and ushers were chosen. Preaching services were held in the afternoon and evening.

Sunday morning brought many more Saints to East Jordan and the young people met at 8 o'clock for prayer service. Perhaps of all the meetings this was the best. The young people were told that great trial was before them and that they should go forth with a prayer on their lips that they might not fall.

The young people's service was followed by a general prayer meeting which also proved to be very spiritual. Sunday school at 11.15 was in charge of the district officers. Brother Willard Parks of Onaway preached a very interesting sermon at 2 p. m. He ended with a plea to the young to be the best in whatever line of work they intended to follow. Another preaching service followed at 3.30 and one in the evening.

The crowds were large all day Sunday and all had an enjoyable time together. Many Saints brought picnic dinners and enjoyed a sociable time on the lawn of Sister Whiteford's home. Many plans for the reunion were discussed and everyone in the district is wide awake and ready to go. The East Jordan Saints took care of us in fine shape and we are looking forward to the meetings to be held August 4 and 5.

Home-Coming and Rally Day at First Chicago Branch

These are busy days at the First Chicago Branch as we are planning to hold a Home-Coming and Rally Day at our Branch, Sunday, August 12. We are planning for this to be a big event at First Chicago. Visitors are always welcome, but visiting Saints are urged to meet with us at this time especially, at 4416 Gladys Avenue.

Recently several of our young men were ordained to responsibilities in the priesthood and they will be a valuable asset to our branch.

We were fortunate recently in having Elder Daniel Macgregor, Bishop James F. Keir, Apostle John W. Rushton, and Bishop C. E. Irwin speak for us. It is a treat to have such men with us from time to time. Other recent visitors are Brother M. A. Lukehart and his sister Doris, Brother and Sister Nieuwenhuyze, his brother and their families.

Those who attended the picnic on the Fourth of July report a splendid day spent in the woods. Our Department of Recreation and Expression is planning another outing on August 4 with swimming and a wiener roast on the shore of Lake Michigan.

Our choir has a surprise in store for the members. This is the busiest department in the branch and we are expecting something extraordinary in the near future.

The local priesthood are occupying where and when opportunity permits.

Annual Conference of Southern Saskatchewan District

The annual conference of the Southern Saskatchewan District opened July 4, and lasted over Sunday the 9th. Weather conditions were not very good, as it rained the first three days and some had to leave their motor cars at different points on the road and proceed to the conference by train. However, a representative group of Saints gathered and a spirit of peace and joy was felt by all.

Elder James Pycock was with us throughout the conference, also Elder J. J. Cornish who imparted much spiritual strength both from the pulpit and in visiting among the people.

The sisters of Bethune and Sunset Branches arranged a dining room for the convenience of those attending the conference. A cook was hired so that all of our women were able to attend most of the services.

The main services were in a large tent. A very successful entertainment was staged here on Saturday night.

One of the fine things about the conference was the number of young people present. It was encouraging to note the spirit in which they bore their testimonies in support of the work and their keen desire to advance.

A very beautiful baptismal service was witnessed on Sunday afternoon when ten people entered the waters of baptism. A special confirmation service was held the next morning at which time Elders J. J. Cornish, James Pycock, J. R. Neill, and O. L. D'Arcy confirmed the newly baptized members.

Arrangements are being made to organize a branch in Webb as soon as possible. The Saints in this district seem to be heart and soul in the work, and feel that the Lord is with them even though their numbers are small.

OTIS L. D'ARCY.

Two-Day Meeting at Houghton Lake, Michigan

The Houghton Lake two-day meeting was a marked success, with a good representation from both central and western districts. In spite of the rain on Saturday everything moved smoothly and a goodly portion of the Spirit was with us.

Just before dinner was served on Sunday the congregation retired to the lake to witness the baptism of one more person into the kingdom.

The closing sermon was delivered by our district president, Matthew Umphrey.

The Saints have reason to be thankful for the generosity shown by the outsiders at this place.

E. S. MILLS.

Independence

The week-end on the Campus was a lively and enjoyable affair. On Saturday afternoon the usual baseball games were played by the L. D. S. Baseball League. The Bar-Gar team went into first place by defeating Walnut Park 13 to 6, while the Herald Office swamped the I. X. L.'s by a score of 21 to 2. The standing of the teams in the league now is:

Teams	Won	Lost	Per Cent
Bar-Gar	4	2	667
Herald Office	4	3	571
I. X. L.	4	3	571
Walnut Park	2	6	250

Saturday evening was given over to music and pictures. The L. D. S. Band gave a concert at 7.15 which was followed at 8.30 by a free motion picture.

The new amphitheater is a large affair, with a splendid new and massive projection screen for the pictures. The ground gently slopes, making it possible for those in the rear seats to see as well as those closer to the front.

On Sunday, July 29, at 7.30 p. m., the L. D. S. Band gave a sacred concert. Following the musical entertainment President F. M. Smith was scheduled to address the audience on "The church in relation to the community." He was compelled to quit in the midst, however, because of a shower which suddenly came up and which would have drenched the audience. A large crowd had gathered to enjoy the outdoor services, and was disappointed in having to go home without hearing the completion of the address.

However, the week-end activities on the Campus were successful as showing what the possibilities are for using the grounds. This was the first attempt to transfer the outdoor services from the church lawn to the Campus and they were accepted by the people as shown by the large number attending. The number of people present was estimated at four thousand.

Before the sermon, representatives of the Laurel Club announced that a reception would be given by the club on the Campus next Friday evening to all the Saints of Independence in honor of the twenty-sixth anniversary of the wedding of President and Mrs. F. M. Smith.

During the next eight weeks on Saturday and Sunday evenings the Campus will be the scene of some wonderful community services. The grounds are ideal. No effort has been spared to equip them properly, and programs of the highest order have been arranged. This is a community project and will not be run for profit. Families and parties are urged to come early and bring their supper. The grounds are open for the community and those in charge desire that they be used to the best advantage during these summer months.

Next week's program will consist of a band concert and motion pictures, August 4, at 7.15 p. m., and on Sunday, August 5, at 7.30 p. m., there will be a community service. This will consist of a concert by the chorus and band, followed by a sermon on "The city beautiful," by President F. M. Smith.

On Sunday, July 29, the band was taken by automobile to Atherton, Missouri, where it was served with dinner by the Saints after which a two-hour concert was given under the direction of Roy Turner.

Sunday services in Zion were as follows: Preaching at 11 a. m. at the Stone Church by H. O. Smith; Liberty Street, Ralph W. Farrell; Enoch Hill, President F. M. Smith; Walnut Park, F. A. Cool. At the Stone Church the choir sang in the morning, "Sing to the Lord," by Haydn, and Job Negeim sang, "I am a pilgrim," by Johnson. In the evening at 7.30 all the churches in Zion united in a community service on the Campus.

Orchardville, Illinois

Three years ago when Brother J. M. Henson moved to Orchardville the Skillet Fork Branch had been disorganized, but through his faithful effort, with the support of the Saints, thirteen have been baptized and others are near the kingdom, all bright young people who, if they are faithful, will be bright and shining lights in the work.

The branch was again organized in April and we now have a full set of officers. All are live wires willing to do what they can for the uplifting of the work here. We also have a good Sunday school.

MRS. CLARA FLEECHARTY.

Sister Leona Counts, of Ellington, Missouri, writes that Brother W. P. Bootman has been holding meetings there the past week. Three have been baptized and the Saints are taking a greater interest in the work.

A brilliant Christian preacher in a southern city, notes the Christian Standard, lately aspired to the office of mayor. However he had little chance, for he lost in the primaries.

In filing an account of his campaign he summed it up as follows:

"No money, no booze, and $70 in advertising, which no-body seems to have read. Lies told me by individuals, 4,711; by me to individuals, one lie, but to approximately 30,000 persons, to the effect that I was going to be nominated mayor by the moral forces of the city; handshakes, individual, 6,113."

He reported casualties: "Kicked by three mules, and some minor kicks." Also reported were loss of two nights' sleep—the night before the election wondering how he would manage the mayor's job, and the night after election wondering what had become of the 4,711 sanctified Ananiases who had squeezed his hand and touched his heart and purse.

Conference Minutes

LONDON, ONTARIO.—At Springbank Park, reunion grounds, July 14 and 15. J. F. Curtis and B. R. McGuire, associated with the district presidency, were chosen to preside. Statistical reports were read, showing the district membership to be 904, a loss of one during the year. Election of officers resulted as follows: F. Gray, London, president; David Smith, of Stratford, first vice president; L. Burnard, of London, second vice president. The district was favored with the visit of some eight missionaries among whom was Patriarch John Martin, of Kirtland, Ohio, through whom the word of the Lord was received to the great edification of all who were present. The speakers were: B. R. McGuire, J. F. Curtis, R. C. Russell, John Martin, and our missionary supervisor, H. A. Koehler, now of London, Ontario. Conference voted in favor of a Sunday school convention, distinct from and independent of the conference as was the custom previous to the introduction of the coordinating system. The conference also voted to meet sometime in September, independent of the reunion. P. H. Philippin, secretary.

ALBERTA.—At Ribstone, June 23. Conference convened at 10 a. m. with the district president, William Osler, in the chair, assisted by William H. Roy, first vice president, and James Pycock, missionary supervisor. A splendid spirit prevailed throughout the conference. Officers appointed were: William Osler, president; William H. Roy, first vice president; J. R. Beckley, second vice president; William McLeod, secretary; William H. Roy, treasurer; Sister William Osler, musical director; Herb Burton, member of the library board; William A. Cooper, auditor. Two splendid priesthood meetings were held, presided over by Elders Pycock and Osler. Meetings of the Department of Women were held, Sister Phemie M. Cooper being placed in charge of that department. Sunday school convention met at 2 p. m. and was presided over by the district superintendent, assisted by William Osler and James Pycock. This department reported considerable progress and a standard of excellence was established for the schools. Officers: W. A. Cooper, district superintendent; William H. Roy, assistant; Sister Minnie Burton, secretary; Joseph Dallyn, treasurer; Victor Dallyn, member of the library board. Sermons during the conference by Brethren Pycock, Osler, and J. J. Cornish were very inspiring. W. A. Cooper, secretary.

NOVA SCOTIA.—At Williamsdale, July 14 and 15. O. L. Thompson presided. Statistical reports showed: South Rawdon, 5 members; Williamsdale, 16 nonresident, 9; total, 30; two addresses unknown, Brother and Sister John Clark. Three deaths occurred during the year, James Ripley, Thomas Murphy, and John Henwood. Bishop's agent's report: tithes, $243.70; Children's Home, $7; Sanitarium, $14; College, $6.75; Christmas offering, $57; building, $20; total, $348.45. Expenditures: paid Elder Thompson, $20; Bishop McGuire, $303.45; cash on hand, $25. Elder Thompson was chosen delegate to General Conference. Time and place of next district conference left to district presidency. Services were as follows: preaching at 9.30 Saturday evening; Sunday, sacramental service, at 10.30; services also at 3 and 7.45 p. m. The meetings were well attended and a pleasant and profitable time spent. All enjoyed the splendid sermons by Elder O. L. Thompson. It had been just a year since one person present had heard a Latter Day Saint sermon. Saints and visitors were entertained at the home of Brother and Sister Leander Johnson. The same officers were retained. Collections, $7.35. Lois G. Johnson, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

SCHULTE.—Elizabeth Bierlein Schulte was born in Hanover Township, Butler County, Ohio, March 11, 1855. In her childhood she moved with her parents to Sauk County, Wisconsin. Ordained elder, March 22, 1891. Moved with his family to Independence in October, 1897, where he was engaged in blacksmithing. He took two short missions, was an active teacher and student in the Sunday school. Died at his home in Independence, July 21, 1923. Funeral from the Stone Church, in charge of W. H. Garrett. Sermon by I. N. White. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery. Leaves wife and four children.

From the Log of the Four Ninety

The night following our arrival, the Kirtland Branch held a business meeting at which they discussed Form 4. It was rejected. We felt very much at home in Kirtland.

We were greatly interested to meet and greet old friends, the Pitts, the Curries, the Webbes, the Biggs, and many others, including the Ebelings. Elder F. J. Ebeling, of the seventies, of long and faithful service in the mission field, is now conducting a combined truck farm and dairy at the edge of town, and as a result of out-of-door work and change of mental occupation is returned to excellent health.

Naturally the one great thing that overshadows all else in Kirtland, the splendid pearl in Kirtland's lovely setting of hills and woods and river, is the temple. Standing by itself upon an eminence, with its tower one hundred and twenty feet high, without other tall buildings in the neighborhood to compete with it in point of eminence, the temple is an imposing structure, its proportions and architecture simple and dignified.

The interior is even more impressive in its arrangement of seats and pulpits, its upper and lower courts, its hand-wrought decorations carved with excellent taste and skill and many of them symbolical in character. For example, Brother Pitt pointed out one of the larger of the windows in the upper court, with two arches, one above the other, the lower conforming to the upper in general line but naturally of inferior position, and informed us that the upper arch was intended to be symbolical of Christ, the lower of the priesthood. The superior arch, always dominant, determined the position and outline of the inferior arch. So may it always be in the church: Christ exalted, the priesthood humble and conforming to his pattern and character.

Painted in pure white, the interior of the temple seems spotless in purity, and as one enters that clean and holy sanctuary with its solemn and brooding quiet and its reverent traditions, he can but feel the influence of the Holy Spirit. Even the worldly uncover without bidding and stand with bowed heads to listen to Brother Pitt's story of the temple's history, well interspersed with gospel teaching.

Built by direct commandment from heaven, given as early as June, 1833, and constructed of hewn native rock, the temple is at once a product of earth and heaven. Here the labors and devotions of humanity met the approval and benediction of Divinity. Here, if we read it right, is revealed the purpose of religion, which is always to serve man and help him in his development toward God and his growth toward perfection in the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Surely the Lord did not need such a house for himself. The God who controls the elements needed no roof to shelter his head. The God whose temple is the universe, domed by the blue vaults of space and lighted by the candleabra of the fixed stars, stood in no need of a house built of Ohio rock.

But man needed such a house in his religious development and growth. God could meet man anywhere, in the forest or on the mount or by the sea. But man must get ready to meet God. And I can well believe that after their long labor of love, their great sacrifice, their toil and preparation, in this beautiful and consecrated place, they found it easy to meet God, and that they did experience and see and feel all that they record. For they dedicated here more than a house; they dedicated themselves.

This church temple was erected at a very early date in the history of the church. Projected when the church was but three years old, it was dedicated March 27, 1836. The Saints were few in number and mostly very poor people. But they were united. If they could do that great and costly work then, what could we do now with equal sacrifice, devotion, and persistency—if we were only all agreed to do some one thing? There is a power in unity of purpose that draws down the very forces of heaven, and there is more meaning than we had thought in the declaration of God that where even "two or three shall agree on earth as touching any thing . . . there am I in the midst of them." The church has not been asked to do a thing that we cannot do on those conditions.

It was my good pleasure to be permitted to preach in the temple the evening before we renewed the journey, taking for a theme the validity and power of the gospel principles, and endeavoring to consider ways by which they may be interpreted and presented so as to appeal to the present generation of men with the maximum drawing power. To a generation that has largely lost interest in doctrine, and measures religion by service, we must show how the great fundamental doctrines find fruitage in service. We confront a generation that when told, "It is written," replies, "Why is it written?" To them we must show that the gospel is written in logic as well as in scripture. And we must "demonstrate" our religion in life. Saints must be like the temple, clean, strong, plain, simple, enduring.

Brother Pitt was called to visit an adjoining town one afternoon during our stay, and requested the youngest member of the party, Lynn Elbert Smith, to show visitors through the temple, which task was attempted with some reverence as well as evident pleasure. So it happened that a member of the fourth generation, a great-grandson of Joseph Smith, held the great keys to the temple and for an afternoon was "a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord."

Time arriving to renew our journey, the Chevrolet 490 was put in shape and laden with camp equipment ready for the final leg of the voyage. Our last act before leaving Kirtland, however, was to assemble in the lower court of the temple where Brother Pitt led the little gathering in a fervent farewell prayer.

Religion and Social Control

Religion is so universal that it is now almost an established fact that there is no people on the face of the globe that does not possess some sort of a religion. The religion of many people, to be sure, is conceived by man and as he progresses from savage to the civilized state his religion progresses correspondingly. Thus religion is a social fact and cannot be considered apart from the standards of society.

Some religions we would consider unethical because of their low standards of morality, but strictly speaking there is no such thing as an unethical religion because without exception they support customary morality and they do this necessarily because the values which the religious attitude of mind universalizes and makes absolute are social values.

Religion, then, being a social fact, becomes a part of the life of a child as early as social customs. Its obligations are assumed by the child at the time social obligations are being learned. Thus religion becomes the chief means of conserving customs and habits which have been found to be safe by society or which are believed to conduce to social welfare.

As the guardian of social standards religion develops certain institutions for preserving and disseminating its ideal. These institutions for a time act in the interest of progress but there is great danger that they become the stumblingblocks to future progress. In this way religion may lend itself to maintaining a given social order longer than that order is necessary. When this becomes the case, religion is an impediment to progress.

Briefly this is the explanation why the world has been so long in attaining a religion beyond the social conditions of the time. Christ came that he might give men a social standard which would lead to a better world. His gospel was far in advance of anything to which the world was working and was eagerly grasped by men for a time in the realization of its greatness. But men forgot and for centuries religion dropped back into the old paths, where its chief function was conservation of social customs.

Then there came to the world a reestablishment of that gospel, giving religion a new life, and because of it this church we represent was born. Religion became once more a progressive thing, and the static state of society no longer could be the justification of its religion.

The new religion conserves the tried and true customs of years of experience but it also sanctions social ideals and standards beyond the existing order. Such an idealistic religion will, however, have the disadvantages of appealing mainly to the progressive and idealizing tendencies of human nature rather than to its conservative and reactionary tendencies. Necessarily, also, it will appeal more strongly to those enlightened classes in society who are leading in social progress rather than to those who are content with things as they are. This is doubtless the reason why progressive religions are extremely rare and why those that do exist do not have a more popular appeal.

It is to be regretted that the gospel as taught through the medium of the Reorganized Church is not making greater strides in numbers converted, but on the other hand it is not difficult to understand the reason. There are those also within the ranks who are of the nonprogressive type who cry for the "good old times."

The time is here when the "good old times" must be displaced by the better times of the present, and when the better times of the present must give way to the perfect times of the future.

This is a progressive religion because it is God-made and not man-made. It is living and eternal because man cannot limit it. God is with us to direct and lead; man must follow but at an accelerated speed; he cannot hang back.

Better Homes

In another column of this issue of the HERALD will be found an article by Elder M. A. Etzenhouser under the title, "A successful experiment to secure better homes," in which description is given of the Wellington Home Foundation which has proven to be so successful at Wellington, Kansas. Space is given this article, which was written at the request of the editors of the HERALD, for the purpose of stimulating thought among our people in regard to the question of securing better homes, for surely if Zion is to be finally established, as we desire it shall and believe it will be, a work which must be fundamental in its character is the establishment of every family in a suitable and well-appointed home. The work which is done by this group of men at Wellington, Kansas, could be done by a group of men organized on a stewardship basis to do such a work as is being done by the group at Wellington. Such a group organization might well constitute an Order of Enoch. We will hail with delight the time when men of means in the church are willing to organize themselves in such a form under the direction of the general authorities of the church and with their full approval to get our people into better homes. The church itself should be doing work of this class, but under conditions we may have for some time to depend upon groups doing the work that the church is not in a position now to do.

The Passing of a President

"The King is dead. Long live the King," an expression of early days, applies now to the great loss experienced by this Nation, for while mourning the death of our President we hail the office of the new chief executive. The President is dead. Long live the President!

Little did the world dream when our Nation's leader left Washington on a tour of the country and Alaska that the end would be so tragic. Eagerly the people followed the Presidential party through the newspaper accounts and enjoyed the many delightful experiences of the party on its trip. The President's speeches were followed from day to day and with growing popularity, President Harding was winning his way into the hearts of his people. They loved his smile, his splendid physique, his friendly manner, and his able statesmanship. The loss is great and the shock one which will be hard to overcome. The President is gone. We loved him.

Now devolves upon the shoulders of Calvin Coolidge the burden of the Nation. We are thankful that our Constitution provides for a continuous government and that we have a man who is able to step into the office and carry on its functions. Mr. Coolidge expressed in an early message to the people that he would continue with the policies laid down by President Harding and call upon the men who had assisted the President to assist him.

We are pleased with the splendid way in which the reins of the Government are assumed and believe whole-heartedly in the righteousness of this Government as expressed in the words of President Coolidge, "I have faith that God will direct the destinies of our Nation."

Sorrowing at the loss of our President but confident in the success of his successor, we look out beyond the confining grief of the hour and see ahead the long lane that will lead this Nation ultimately to the throne of grace, for the city of Zion lies within the bounds of this country and God must be with us.

A Martyr for World Brotherhood

"A martyr for the cause of the brotherhood of the world," was in reality the sad import of the news which was taken up by wire and wireless when President Warren G. Harding died at San Francisco, California, the evening of August 2, 1923. It was 7.30 in San Francisco; 9.30 in Kansas City; and 10.30 in Washington, District of Columbia when he passed away. The news sped with lightning swiftness and was known almost immediately from one end of the Nation to the other.

Broadcasting stations took up the news, interspersing their evening program with the sad announcement of his death; newspapers hastened an extra issue, and out of the darkness, out of the air, came the wail of sorrow, "The President is dead. President Harding is dead." Another martyr for the brotherhood of the world was what the cry meant.

President Harding left Washington on June 20, 1923, for an extended visit through the West and to Alaska that he might convince the Nation of its duty in securing something which will insure world peace. In a speech at Arlington not long previous to this last journey the President said: "I have tried to visualize the carnage and conflict and horrors and suffering of the war . . . but I came to understand how imagination had failed me when I stood at Hoboken pier among 5,000 dead, in their flag-draped coffins, two years ago. Here was death in war's unheeding allotment, corridors of sorrow and sacrifice as far as the eye could see, and grief that no human soul could appraise. Under the spell of the great sorrow which gripped my heart I said then and repeat now: 'It must not be again! It must not be again!' But saying is not enough. We must do the things which rational thinking leads us to believe will tend to render war less likely."

It was for the cause of world brotherhood also that President Wilson four years ago made a similar trip. Though the two men saw the means in different ways by which this might be accomplished, yet each had in his heart and mind the same end—world peace, with no more carnage and sufferings of war. Though his journey did not end so disastrously, it is well known how President Wilson was stricken on his mission.

As early as the second day on the trip, June 22, when stopping in Kansas City, President Harding was not at his best. His afternoon engagements had to be canceled that he might be physically fit to fulfill his appointment at Convention Hall that evening. His wife, who had just recovered from a long illness, had insisted on accompanying her husband on this tour and rose to meet the needs. She greeted the Boy Scouts who had gathered at Swope Park to pay tribute to their chief. Though disappointed in not seeing him, they found her cordial manner quite winning. She also visited the veteran's hospital in place of the President, shaking hands with the one hundred twenty-five patients there.

This first indisposition was slight, but the strain of the journey and other minor drains began to undermine his resisting powers. His last illness had its beginning on board the transport, Henderson, when he was returning from Alaska. Tainted sea food caused an attack of ptomaine poisoning, but he continued his journey as far as San Francisco. His intended trip through the Panama Canal zone was canceled and the seriousness of his condition was made known. Broncho-pneumonia developed and the Nation trembled for his safety. He overcame the disease, yet when doctors, nurses, his dearest friends, and the Nation believed him to be mending, death came suddenly from cerebral apoplexy.

His wife had been reading to him an article by Samuel G. Blythe in the Saturday Evening Post, "A calm view of a calm man." The President enjoyed it. "That's good! Go on! Read some more," he said, then a gesture, and the change came. It was over. Another leader had passed on into other hands this charge, "World brotherhood must be, and war must not be again."

Between three and four hours later Calvin Coolidge, at his old home in Plymouth, Vermont, took the oath of office as President of the United States. To him falls the responsibilities which slipped from the dying hands. Coolidge says, "It will be my policy to carry out the policies which he has begun for the service of the American people . . . I have faith that God will direct the destinies of the Nation."

Calvin Coolidge, our thirtieth president, was spending some vacation days at the old homestead with his father when the sad news came to him. He had pitched hay the day before, and was roused from his sleep by the message which his father brought upstairs to him. His father, John Coolidge, seventy-five years of age, who is a notary public, administered the oath of office to his son in a room across the street from the house where his son Calvin had been born. The old family Bible in which their records were kept, was used in the administration of oath, in this very commonplace room with braided rugs, a dim oil lamp, few witnesses, and no music except the chirping of the crickets. President Coolidge left immediately for Washington, District of Columbia, and arrived in the capital at 9.10 the same evening.

Meanwhile the remains of the late President left San Francisco at 7.15, about the sunset hour of August 3, on the longest, saddest journey ever made across the continent. There were short services at the hotel, and then the body was taken to the same train which had borne him laughing and cordial out upon his mission. The outside of the car was garlanded with ferns and cypress greenery. Inside, the car was hung with black. Garlands of purple and white asters hung from the roof and everywhere were festooned cypress, ferns, and flowers. Two soldiers and two sailors, members of the guard of honor of sixteen enlisted men and two officers, stood at attention beside the casket.

The route of the funeral train passed through Reno, Ogden, Cheyenne, Omaha, Chicago, and Washington. All along the way, multitudes of people gathered to watch the passing train.

The services to be held at Washington on Wednesday will be simple and marked with dignity. On its first arrival the body will be placed in the East Room of the White House, where private services will be held if Mrs. Harding wishes them. On Wednesday morning the remains will be moved to the Capitol and placed in the rotunda to lie in state until five in the evening. Ten thousand Washington school children, as the cortege passes, will lay down a carpet of flowers for the caisson bearing the casket, and will sing the favorite hymns of Mr. Harding.

After the services in the rotunda in which President Coolidge, Chief Justice Taft, members of the cabinet, and others will participate, the public will be admitted, marching in from the east entrance four abreast. On reaching the bier the line will separate to two abreast on either side. The doors will be closed at five o'clock and at seven the funeral party will continue on its way to Marion, Ohio, the old home, where simple services will be held on Friday and interment made at that city.

President Coolidge has issued a proclamation asking that the Nation assemble on that day at their churches and places of prayer to observe the day fittingly. All citizens are urged to observe a five-minute period of silent tribute at 3.30 p. m. when all business activities and traffic should cease.

The story of President Harding's life is, briefly:

Warren G. Harding, eldest of the eight children of G. T. Harding, was born near Corsica, Ohio, November 2, 1865. His father was a country physician. His mother's maiden name was Phebe Elizabeth Dickerson. After finishing the village school, he entered Ohio Central College in his fourteenth year. He graduated in 1882 with a B. S. degree, then taught school one year, read law the next year, after which he became owner of the Star of Marion, Ohio. This paper he conducted against financial odds for some time and finally sold it. He next took a position as reporter on the Marion Mirror and later became owner of the Star again. This time he and his wife, Florence Kling Harding, made it successful. In 1900 he was made State senator; in 1904, lieutenant governor; in 1910, he was defeated for governor. He made the speech in 1912 which nominated Taft for president. In 1914, he was elected senator from Ohio which position he held until he was elected President of the United States.

His last message which was read by his secretary because of his illness was a striking plea for Christianity. He said: "There is nothing mythical or mystical in the code of living preached by Jesus Christ."

And again:

I tell you, my countrymen, the world needs more of the Christ; the world needs the spirit of the Man of Nazareth, and if we could bring into the relationships of humanity among ourselves and among the nations of the world the brotherhood that was taught by the Christ, we would have a restored world; we would have little or none of war, and we would have a new hope for humanity throughout the earth. There never was a greater lesson taught than that of the Golden Rule. I would almost be willing to wipe out the other commandments.

And yet again:

We should glorify the Holy name, not by words, not by praise, set by displays at arms, but by deeds and service in behalf of human brotherhood.

Human Brotherhood. For this he died. The flags, flying at half mast for the past week have plead with us, asking, "What will you do with the cause he laid down? What will you do about Human Brotherhood?"

The President's Proclamation

Plans are being laid throughout the Nation for observation of Friday, August 10, as a memorial day for services dedicated to the memory of the late President of the United States, Warren Gamaliel Harding. In respect to the proclamation of President Calvin Coolidge, churches will hold prayer and memorial services on the appointed day.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at headquarters in Independence, Missouri, will hold services in the open air on the Campus. The congregation which assembled there on Friday evening, August 3, also paid respect by standing in silent prayer for one minute for the rest of the soul of the President, and again at the services on Sunday prayer was offered.

The following telegram was sent to Mrs. Warren G. Harding, expressing the sympathy of the church people:

MRS. WARREN G. HARDING,

White House,

Washington, District of Columbia.

Dear Mrs. Harding: Three thousand of the Independence members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints assembled on the Campus last night by unanimous rising vote requested me to send you a message of condolence and sympathy. We have lost a conscientious and able president. You have suffered that loss with us and a devoted faithful life's companion besides. We, as a home loving people, admired Mr. Harding's devotion to you and your home, and we sense your great loss and the keenness of your sorrow. May God fulfill to you His promise to comfort the widow, and His grace attend you through your great trial.

Very sincerely yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The deep mourning of the country has tempered the spirit of all public meetings and it is fitting that homage be paid the late chief of our Nation.

The following proclamation has been issued by the President of the United States:

To the People of the United States:

In the inscrutable wisdom of Divine Providence, Warren Gamaliel Harding, twenty-ninth President of the United States, has been taken from us. The Nation has lost a wise and enlightened statesman and the American people a true friend and counselor whose whole public life was inspired with the desire to promote the best interests of the United States and the welfare of all its citizens. His private life was marked by gentleness and brotherly sympathy, and by the charm of his personality he made friends of all who came in contact with him.

It is meet that the deep grief which fills the hearts of the American people should find fitting expression.

Now, therefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States of America, do appoint Friday, next, August 10, the day on which the body of the dead President will be laid in its last earthly resting place, as a day of mourning and prayer throughout the United States. I earnestly recommend the people to assemble on that day in their respective places of divine worship, there to bow down in submission to the will of Almighty God, and to pay out of full heart the homage and love and reverence to the memory of the great and good President, whose death has so sorely smitten the Nation.

In witness, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, the fourth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, and of the independence of the United States one hundred and forty-eight.

CALVIN COOLIDGE,

By the President.

CHARLES E. HUGHES,

Secretary of State.

THE WHITE HOUSE, WASHINGTON, August 4, 1923.

If reward is ever to be measured by improvement, then there are many doomed to go unrewarded, for those who are making consistent efforts to improve their personal powers for good are far too few. "Study to show thyself approved," goes unheeded in far too many instances.

A Successful Experiment to Secure Better Homes

By M. A. Etzenhouser

The home is the foundation of Zion and the child is the chief asset. We are aware that the word home means much more than lumber, plaster, and nails, the material structure, yet we realize that the attitudes of the members of the family towards these material things have an important bearing in their general concept of a home. Everyone thinks more easily in terms of concrete things than in abstract ideas and many people can think only of concrete things, and therefore home is objectified in the houses in which they live.

Better houses should make better homes; better homes will produce better children; better children will establish Zion. If these statements are true, then one of our chief problems in Zion becomes how to get better houses and better homes, and so we desire to call attention to a movement carried on for a brief period at Wellington, Kansas, known as the "Wellington Home Foundation."

The ideals of the founders of this organization are Zionistic and the motives Christlike, for on their stationery is to be found, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," also "Shame and disgrace be ours if in our eyes the light of high resolve is dimmed, if we trail in the dust the golden hopes of men." Enough for their hopes, let us see how they purposed to attain them. (We quote from a pamphlet issued by them):

Wellington is the county seat of Sumner County, one of the counties forming the southern tier of Kansas. It had the usual proportion of poorly painted, unkept, and neglected houses which are always an "eyesore" in the community and it was for the purpose of eliminating these and effecting a remedy that Mr. Harry L. Woods, owner and publisher of the Wellington Daily News, conceived the idea and organized the Wellington Home Foundation.

The Wellington Home Foundation

Twenty-five of the leading business and professional men of Wellington met on Sunday, March 23, 1919, and organized the Wellington Home Foundation, the purpose of which is briefly and clearly set forth on their stationery and is as follows:

Established in Wellington on March 23, 1919, to encourage habits of saving and thrift; to secure more home owners and a happier home life; to give employment to Wellington workmen; to improve and beautify the physical appearance of the city; and thereby promote the general welfare.

To convert tenants into home owners; to substitute thrift for reckless spending; to relieve poverty and unemployment and to remove uglies from the city is the problem of other urban communities as well as Wellington. "Save and own a home" is good advice but these men prefer to change the order, and so "Own a home and save" was substituted as a slogan. This brought the goal from remote hope to immediate realization and thus made a much stronger appeal.

To finance the Foundation, donations were received of money, loans from those who were willing to let their money work for awhile without interest, and gifts of residences or other property, etc. In administering this fund two things were to be considered, what property was to be purchased and to whom should it be sold when repaired and placed in a suitable condition. We quote from their declaration as follows:

The directors are hereby authorized at such times as in their judgment in such foundations will permit, to purchase residence property, repair or remodel buildings thereon, or build a new, to make sales of the same, or secure prospective owners, on such terms as their discretion dictates. So far as possible only Wellington labor shall be employed and Wellington material purchased. The Wellington Home Foundation hereby created is not a charity fund, and the directors are prohibited from using any part of such fund as a gift for any purpose whatsoever.

Not a Charity

The Foundation is not a charity fund. In most cases, without doubt, the usual interest charge will be made when any money is loaned from it, but that is left to the directors, who will use their judgment. Probably its largest function will be that of a liberal building and loan association. Stout-hearted men shun charity. They do not want gifts; they want to help themselves to be independent, and so the Foundation goes to men on a strictly business basis but for cases needing extra help there may be money in the interest and profits fund to use in a humanitarian way. If so, the directors may use their judgment. The Foundation itself cannot be touched for any work of charity.

What the Home Foundation Contemplates

While the activities of the Foundation may be various, probably its principal service may be described as follows:

When sufficient funds have come into the Foundation for the purpose, the directors will purchase a residence property, preferably a house which is run down, ramshackle, in need of paint, and in appearance a dirty spot on the face of the city. Plans will be made to clean up the property and put in the place of the outcast, a neat modern cottage of four or five rooms. The directors are restricted (and of course with the present board the limitation is not needed) to the employment of Wellington workmen, and the purchase of materials in Wellington. Presently in the place of a blemish is found a beauty spot.

When the new building is ready the directors probably would give the first chance for ownership to a man with the cash to buy it, if such person appeared. This would place it in the hands of a home owner and the original expenditure would return at once to the Foundation and be immediately available to go out and remove another blemish. But if no one was at hand with the cash, any applicant to own the home on payments would be considered. Doubtless the directors would look into the character of the applicant and learn what prospect he has for making his payments. Such ready money as he had he would of course pay at once, to save interest. The deed to the property would remain with the trustee for the Foundation, and the applicant would be considered only as a tenant until his payments had reached an amount equal to one third of the value of the property. Then the Wellington Building and Loan Association would accept him on their well-known plan, the deed would be made to him and the balance of the value of the property would be paid in to the Foundation. From that time on he would deal with the Building and Loan Association and the amount expended on the property would go back in the Foundation, ready to go out and do its work over again.

The directors may lend the applicant one third of the value of the property, or any part of that sum to bridge him to the Building and Loan Association, taking a second mortgage to cover the loan. Each applicant, and his wife, is made the object of careful study as to character, prospects, and the necessary enthusiasm in desiring to pay out on a home. In some cases the directors may find that the applicant is able to handle his own problem without the aid of the Foundation, and is only in need of good advice and encouragement.

An Illustration

How the Wellington Home Foundation might have helped a certain business man, had it been in operation many years ago, was told by him in the meeting when the Foundation was established. He said:

At twenty-one I was married. When the ceremony was over and the minister paid for his services, about all I had left was a wife. And about all she had was me, and an inexpensive wedding ring.

For twelve years, much of our time was taken up by moving from one house to another. That is not an uncommon experience, but it usually is discomfiting, and at times the sight of my wife struggling to make old, worn carpets fit new quarters, old curtains blend with new surroundings and fit new windows, almost made me choke. For in this, as in most of domestic misfortunes, the woman bears the heavier cross.

The last time I moved—it's years old now—I am pained to confess that it was because I couldn't pay the rent. I had made money enough to have lived fairly well, in spite of heavy doctor's bills, but having no considerable amount at any time, the dribs were not conserved.

Came then a Good Samaritan who proposed that I buy a home and quit moving. It seemed impossible, but he said if I could raise fifty dollars he had a house he would sell for seven hundred, and I could pay the balance almost like paying rent. I seized the opportunity, raised the fifty dollars and moved in. How much happier my wife was in that removal than in any previously made will be well imagined.

To my own astonishment I paid out and had a deed in one year. True we lived on almost nothing, but after all they were the best days we had ever had, for every simple meal meant a little more clipped from the balance due on the home. And it did several things for us. Saving and stinting to be able to say, "This home is ours," put in a better way of saving. It also taught me that while some could save for investment I couldn't. I had to invest first, and then save. And that's the way I have been doing ever since.

And from those days to now, I never see a family moving that it does not recall my bitter experiences and bring a lump in my throat. Fortunately, although I feel that I more than wasted twelve precious years, the home I bought might as well have been bought twelve years earlier had the Good Samaritan come that much sooner. I have prospered some since then, and I am for the Foundation, and all I can afford shall go into it.

The First Fruits

The first applicant was visited at his home, which he wished to purchase. He had two hundred dollars and the directors learned that he had an automobile which he was not able to own. After a heart-to-heart talk he and his wife were made to see that a home was of first importance and consented to selling the auto. The directors helped him to sell the car and he made his initial payment without requiring any financial aid from the Foundation.

The second case was that of a man who lacked a small amount of being able to get a sufficient loan from the Building and Loan Association. After his character and prospects were studied, the directors guaranteed his first payments to the Building and Loan Association and he is now on the way to ownership. The third case was that of a man who wished to purchase a nice bungalow for $2,700. He had a good job, a little money, and some Liberty Bonds. The Building and Loan advanced eighteen hundred and the balance of the amount necessary was furnished by the Foundation, taking a second mortgage.

How It Has Succeeded

On March 7, 1923 we have a letter from the President of the Wellington Home Foundation, Mr. Burks, from which we quote:

The capital of the Foundation was contributed entirely by public-spirited citizens of Wellington and as an absolute gift. There is no expense, for everybody connected with it works without charge. Owing to the limited amount of capital, we have been compelled to require the prospective home owner to procure as much as he can from the local Building and Loan Association, pay as much as he can from money saved and the Home Foundation furnishes the balance, taking a second lien on the property subject to the first lien of the Building and Loan Association. We require that the applicant for the home be of good moral character, frugal, with a job and a little money, $50 and up, to pay down.

In the four years forty-four or forty-five families who would otherwise be paying rent live in their own homes and are making their payments promptly, with the exception of one who is now a few months in default.

The problem of Wellington is not very different from that of every other city, and what Wellington has done can be done by other cities or communities where men have a vision and where the same high and worthy ideals are found in the hearts of those men. Independence, Lamoni and other cities could well profit by the successful experience of Wellington, Kansas.

The Very Little Tots

By A. Max Carmichael

Suggestions for training and handling small children at home, during church services and upon the reunion grounds.

What can be done for the very little tots, say those under three years of age, in any church program?

The most that can be done for them is through their parents, chiefly the mother. Only in so far as the church can stimulate the mothers of these children to the desired activity, only in so far as the church can get the mothers to better their methods, to reconstruct their policies for the better, can the church do much for the little tot.

It would seem to us that the reunions offer a great opportunity to thus stimulate the mothers. At the reunions we are somewhat free from the traditional methods in the church. All are out there on the grounds for the entire day. Some part of the day can be set aside for a mother's class, both for the study of the theory of child rearing and in actual demonstration. There is, too, in the associations on the reunion grounds, a feeling of unity which helps much in gaining the right atmosphere for a mother's class. Mothers are apt to be somewhat reticent in discussing their policies with some supposed theorist in front of them posing as a teacher, and before the other mothers of the group. They are afraid their methods will not get the approval of the "theoretical expert" (?) in front of them, and may not get the approval of the other mothers in the group. The week days of the reunions offer an opportunity to overcome this handicap which the church back home with its regular Sunday services, and regular midweek prayer meeting, the order of which services no one dare offer to disturb, does not offer.

In the "Program for reunions" issued by the Department of Religious Education, as suggestions for reunion activities for 1923, three books are specifically mentioned for parent problems, Parenthood and Child Nurture, by Baker; The Father and His Boy, by Galloway; and Religious Education in the Family, by Cope. But none of these books treat specifically of the baby. If there is on the reunion grounds a group of mothers of babies, it might be well to have a special class for these mothers as many days as possible.

A specific text need not be followed in many cases. Let the mothers bring up their own specific problems, and let these problems be discussed. If the mothers seem a bit reticent, or seem a bit disposed not to be confidential, the teacher will need to bring out problems which are common in the lives of all

This is really the work of the Department of mothers of babies.

Women, and the superintendents of that department could take an interest in this part of the work. It would not be amiss to permit the leader of the cradle roll to take hold of this work, or it could be divided between a nurse and some one who can take up the side of moral training. With the baby, there is specifically the question of health and moral training.

Every mother ought to have hundreds of questions to ask in these matters. Questions about specific situations which the mothers themselves could bring up could be talked about, even though no specific rule could be laid down for the mother to follow.

By specific situations, we mean somewhat as follows: Every mother has not weighed her child regularly, perhaps does not appreciate the value of it. Mothers differ upon the amount of clothing they use upon a six months' baby. Some are dressing such babies in the summer with wool and some with cotton. In the matter of moral training, mothers could discuss what action is proper when an eighteen months' baby offers to strike rudely his older brother or sister, or when a year-old baby gets into an unusual fit of anger.

After a bit of confidence has been established between the women in the class, and between the women and the leader, hundreds of such situations can be suggested by the women. As said above, it would pay no leader to tell specifically what should be done in each case, but the general principles applicable to each situation could be discussed. One would have to leave the specific application of those principles to each specific situation to the mother involved.

If there are as many as five mothers of these little tots on the grounds, get them together for a discussion of their problems. It should be our endeavor to organize the class work on the reunion grounds around groups having common problems.

A bibliography for a study of the problems of babyhood is suggested at the end of this article.

Besides doing something for the little tots through the mothers and fathers, the church can provide a place for them to be cared for during the adults' meetings, so that the mothers and fathers can attend these meetings undisturbed. Girls of Oriole and Temple Builder ages can be assigned with proper adult leadership to care for these little tots in a group, either on the reunion ground or during regular Sunday morning services. A separate tent or room should be provided. This tent or room can be equipped with a sand pit, small shovels, or buckets, blocks of all sorts and sizes; small swings can be hung to the ceiling; catalogues of mail order houses will supply amusement for small children for many hours. This room should be supplied with pictures which the leaders can show the little tots either singly or in groups, pictures of the following types: "Robin Redbreast," by Munier, Perry Picture No. 3156; "Two mothers and their families," by Gardner, Perry Picture No. 3194; "Can't you talk?" by Holmes, Perry Picture No. 1063; "Kiss Me," by Holmes, Perry Picture No. 1064; any of the Madonnas. For the very little tots, such toys as rattles, ivory rings to chew, rubber animals, and rag dolls should be on hand. For further suggestions we would mention tin dishes and wooden spools, large rubber balls, stocking dolls, kiddie kars, brooms, and other small household utensils.

No one need expect to make a success of a room for babies and those under three years of age, without some equipment. Further, no one need expect that girls of Oriole or Temple Builder ages will make a success of such work without having equipment. It is up to the church to supply such if they expect to make a success of the work. Yet we feel that it is quite worth while.

God's Protection Withheld

By B. R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop

"I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."

We are counseled in the Book of Mormon to pray over our flocks and our herds and our families. This would indicate that the Lord is interested in every phase of our earthly life, and that when we do his will in all things he will answer our prayers, and bless us in our business affairs. The opposite, however, might be expected when we are negligent and fail to give a listening ear to the teaching of his word.

Just recently there came to our desk the following letter, which clearly indicates that when we are negligent the protection which God might otherwise give us is withheld, and disaster follows:

I am sending a money order of $5 as tithing. I shall send more as soon as I can. I am sorry I couldn't send more this time, as I had hoped I could. I know the Lord needs our tithes, and I do not want to hold back anything that belongs to the Lord. My husband was out of work thirteen months, about a year ago, and it seems as though we can never get caught up again. I have wondered many times what the Lord wanted me to do about tithing, as I want to do what is right. On May 27, this year, I had a dream. This is it: I dreamed it was just at twilight. I stood on a knoll overlooking a village. There were places of business, as well as homes, and it all belonged to the Saints. As I stood there looking, I saw smoke rising from first one place and then another, until the whole village was going down in ruins. Then I heard the Lord say, See, what has come upon my people, because they have not given me my tenth. They were always waiting until they were better fixed, comforting their minds with the thought that they didn't owe any tithing until they had got the things for themselves they felt they needed. They could not bring themselves to the place where they could part with the tenth they owe me. Now all they have striven so hard to gain for themselves is gone—their nine tenths and the tithe they owed me. How much better for them if they had trusted in me, and given me my tenth, for then I would have prospered them, and they would have been protected from this, and all harm. But now I have allowed this to come and destroy all they have, because they would not give me the small portion I have asked of them.

After I had dreamed this I awoke, and lay in bed thinking for about two hours. The vividness of the dream did not wear off. And I believe it is true and was given me of God.

The very next letter that we read after reading the above confirms the truthfulness of the thing which was revealed to our sister in this dream. This letter reads as follows:

Since my companion refused to let me pay tithing he has lost everything except the house in which we are now living, and it is badly in need of repairs.

How unfortunate it is that many times it takes a bitter experience like this to teach us the lesson that "obedience is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." Of course, we know that there are instances in which even those who pay tithing may meet with reverses. The paying of tithing alone is not a guarantee that success shall crown all of our efforts. There are other commandments to be kept, as indicated by the Savior when directing his apostles, Teach them to observe all things. When we have observed all things, then we may feel confident that the full measure of the blessings of our heavenly Father will accompany our efforts. Our prayer is that God's people may remember that his ways are the best ways, or as expressed by Brother J. R. Lambert, "The pathway of duty is not only the pathway of safety, but the pleasantest way in which we can walk."

The New Awakening

By James R. Houghton

Within the last few years there has been a decided increase in the amount of interest taken in music; a veritable "new awakening." This "new awakening" or "renaissance" in the field of music has made itself manifest in the numerous musical organizations and community enterprises throughout the entire Nation. Symphonies, choral societies, operatic organizations, orchestras, bands, and community sings are now fostered by cities where before puritanic silence prevailed. People have commenced to realize that music is as much one of God's gifts as speech. Everywhere a revival of interest is being taken in the wonderful realm of music. Due to the efforts of Doctor Lowell Mason and his followers, who have so nobly advanced the cause he set out to accomplish, our public-school children are now being taught the rudiments of music. Classes in public school instruction are being formed in many of our large cities so that everyone who desires and has the determination may play an instrument. Owing to the ever-increasing demand for concert performers and teachers of first-rate ability many of the finest musicians of Europe have come to our shore. This added increase of fine musical talent from Europe has been a decisive factor in converting America very rapidly into a musical nation.

Only a few years ago common consent favored the old-time brass band and the ever-to-be-enjoyed Negro minstrel concerts. Through the influences of great artists and the wonderful development made in the field of science and invention by which we have received the talking machine and radio, we are fast outgrowing our former desires. The old days of the three-ring circus with its accompanying troupe of musical clowns and cheap brass bands is passing rapidly and we are turning our attention to something newer and far better. Communities are now supporting great symphonies, opera and oratorio organizations, and bands devoted to classical music. Music festivals, concerts, and summer Chautauquas are becoming a common thing. Conservatories are springing up in many of our large cities, and even our large universities have added instruction in practical and theoretical music to their curriculum. Motion picture theater managers have recognized the influence of this general growth of musical culture and its great drawing power and have installed expensive pipe organs and in some larger cities small orchestras are engaged to suit the public demand. Also great artists have been engaged to sing and play before the public. In this respect the theater has outreached the church in many instances. However, the church has also recognized the value of music, some to a greater extent than others. Churches are installing fine organs and some are maintaining choirs. However the popular medium of vocal service in the church has been the quartet and the solo. We need to turn our attention more whole-heartedly to the question of larger choral organizations and choirs in churches rather than devoting our entire attention to that peculiarly American institution, the solo quartet. We have become actually tired of cheap commercialized music and are waking up to the real values of good choral music.

Famous organizations that have been foremost in this new effort are: "The Harvard Glee Club," "The Musical Art Society" of New York, "The Æolian Choir" of Brooklyn, "The Musical Art Society" of Boston, "The Handel and Haydn Society" of Boston, "The Apollo Club" of Chicago, "The Bethlehem-Bach Choir" of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, "The Mendelssohn Choir" of Toronto, "The Saint Olaf's Choir," and finally the "Lindsborg Chorus" of Kansas. All of these organizations, together with many foreign organizations such as the "Ukrainian Choir" have done much for the advancement of pure choral music. These organizations have demonstrated that wonderful effects can be produced simply by massing voices in beautiful choral singing.

And then congregational singing is reviving and community singing is on the increase. One is really surprised at the wonderful treasures of musical praise we have discovered. It has been possessed of such great dynamic power that it has even reached the dark recesses of the tombs of ancient Egyptian kings! Marvelous, is it not?

Hymn tunes and psalms that have been held in derision for years are now being sung. "The young miss of the quartet has said, as she turned, with a sniff of her pretty heaven-tending nose, 'Psalm tunes, indeed! They are dreadful. Who cares for them? Very good for a sleepy prayer meeting; but to think any musical person would condescend to sing one for the pleasure of the thing argues an ignorance as deplorable as profound.'" There you have it in a few pertinent words. Not so in England? We are told that two thousand people meet every Saturday night at Saint Paul's Cathedral in London to sing the week end out and welcome the new one with psalms of thanksgiving and praise.

"Vanitas vanitum!" exclaims the musical missionary. "They know not what they say. A choral-psalm tune, so-called, is one of the most beautiful and majestic forms music ever assumes. The highest efforts of the greatest masters have been spent in the writing of chorals." The reason they are not generally liked is very plain. Most people do not know how to sing them. They are taken in the tempo of a processional rather than a broad sweeping rhythm. Perhaps we shall learn as we advance.

"History does not deal with the future, though it gives grounds for hopeful optimism. From its point of view, the musical world seems to have been incessantly forced to harmonize two great interests, which are certainly now before us and which are to continue in constant interaction in the future. One of these is the interest of high art, with its technical learning and skill, its delicately sharpened taste, its aspiration to stretch the boundaries of achievement to the utmost. The other is the interest of the common people—always sensitive to music of some sort, yet often seemingly devoid of breadth, depth, and intensity of artistic life, and sometimes expressly scornful of the eagerness of an artistic class which it regards as detached and extreme. The chasm between these two interests is certainly obvious to-day. Yet it is surely a lesson of history that it is nothing new and that ways of bridging it have always been possible. Otherwise, music would never have come to the world-wide significance it has. Reconciliation must always be effected by efforts from both sides. The artistic instinct may be trusted sooner or later to forsake the pursuit of the merely curious and esoteric for that which is intelligible and impressive to the typical or average human mind, and the infinite work of education has always been to keep raising the level of intelligence and feeling so that the unmusical may become musical and the musical may become more finely artistic. The nineteenth century showed a prodigious expansion of the range of advanced musical art, the pendulum of effort swinging at the end toward what seems like an extreme; but, if this be extreme, it will swing back again. It also showed a wonderful awakening of enthusiasm in various lines of musical education, technical and popular. It is safe to say that this side of music will be still further developed, giving to the art in its highest forms atmosphere in which to live and environment in which to work, and making more real what all earnest believers in music desire—that music shall be the delight, the inspiration and the spiritual purifier of all peoples and classes.

Putting It Over

[This brief of a talk, given by F. M. Kirkendall to the young people at the Saints' branch at Dayton, Ohio, has come to our desk, so we are publishing it under our own title, "Putting it over."—EDITORS.]

We think we are thinking sometimes when we are only rearranging our preconceived ideas or notions. There can be no soul growth so long as we simply reassemble our antipathies.

Righteousness consists in right attitudes, supported by constructive thought, enforced by right conduct. Soul growth is possible only when right attitude is paramount. Your source must be higher than your tap. We are too much interested in "putting things over." We put it over on our employer; we put it over on society; we put it over on the church; we put it over on our wife and family, and sometimes keep it over for a long time; but you can't put it over on yourself. The least violation of the moral law, the least infraction of your highest ideals of right and wrong, stand out as mountain peaks in your personality. You can't put it over on yourself.

We are too retrospective. Retrospection keeps us in sackcloth and ashes. When we reflect upon the bad of our past we are mortified. If we think of the good we might have done we are overwhelmed.

Start where you are to-morrow morning and on waking say to yourself, "The attitude and spirit that was in Christ abide with me this day." Repeat this at every crossroad during your day's mental journey. Think constructively, express your thought in the choicest words at your command. Do not harbor any ulterior motive. Do not become over-anxious or despondent.

This course, pursued daily, will enable you to attain the maximum of self-approval and the minimum of self-reproach. Before you are aware you will have espoused a cause and on some glad day in a moment of intense zeal your soul enters the kingdom of heaven. That moment will be ample reward for the week, the month, or the years of consecration.

Don't give away all your good advice. Save a little bit of it for yourself.

DEPARTMENTAL

The Home Study Workers

By A. Max Carmichael

An explanation of the duties involved in the office of the home department.

The general heads of departments are advising that the departments in districts and locals combine in selecting the home department superintendent or home study worker.

We are advising the heads of departments in districts with the district president to nominate some one, subject to the approval of the district conference to act as home study worker for the district. Of course, anyone in the district conference may likewise nominate.

The district home study worker should be supplied at all times with the names of the isolated members of the district. He can get these from the clerk of the district who is provided regularly with a list of such members by the general church statistician. It will necessarily be the duty of this district home study worker to consult with the clerk of the district frequently in order always to have a correct list of isolated members.

The alertness and interest of this district home study worker must be relied upon in discovering new members who, isolated from church privileges, are still willing to study. The home study worker should encourage them to study all good books. It is his personal task to interest those isolated members in study. It may not be best to attempt to dictate what should be studied. Let these members who are isolated choose from among all the various courses that the different departments offer. As soon as a sufficient number of these isolated members can be gathered together in organized class work, let them do so. They will either become local organizations of the Department of Women, of the Department of Recreation and Expression, or of the Sunday school, depending upon the nature of the work which they are studying.

The district home study worker should be willing to urge the isolated members to organize as soon as possible, no matter under which department they may come. Prior to organizing these isolated members the district home department worker should consult with the rest of the district officers and leave the matter of organization up to the district superintendents of the departments.

The district home study worker should make his report once a quarter to the district superintendents and district president, and annually to the district conference. He should report the number studying and the courses they are studying.

In the branches the superintendents of the various departments and the branch president should unite in nominating a local home study worker, subject to the approval of the local branch business meeting. Anyone in the local branch meeting may also nominate.

It should be the duty of the local home study worker to search out the members in the environs of the branch who cannot attend the local classes of the departments yet who are willing to study the work of the departments. Much that was said of the duties of the district home study worker will be applicable to the local home study worker. If he can get a few such members together during the week or at any time when the regular class work is not being held, he, in conjunction with the superintendent of the department covering the work which these people are studying should see that a teacher is provided for such class. He should be willing to urge these members to attend the regular class work of the departments as soon as possible. He should make report to the various superintendents of departments and to the branch business meeting as they require. He should report the number enrolled for study.

He should attempt to get the work to finance itself if this can be done; if not, he should get each department, if working separately, to provide funds; if working together, to provide a common fund to finance the work. He should report quarterly to the various local departmental superintendents and to the branch president, and annually to the branch business meeting, the amount of money collected and spent.

Department of Women Finances

By B. R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop

All will agree that every department of church work should be self-sustaining. To accomplish this a well-defined program must be adopted and followed. In the past the funds necessary to carry on the work of the Department of Sunday School and the Department of Recreation and Expression (the Religio) have come from the profits arising from the sale of the quarterlies. It is hoped that this source of revenue will be sufficient, as this method equalizes the financial load very satisfactorily. The Department of Women have had no such source of income, nor will they have during the present year. We must, therefore, provide the funds either by an assessment upon each local or by calling for a voluntary offering at stated intervals.

We advise that at the first meeting of each month, of the Department of Women of every local organization, a free will offering be given. This monthly

Maternity and Infant Care

Twentieth-century mothers and babies, facing hardships of 17th-century pioneer life, are described in a report on "Maternity and infant care in a mountain county in Georgia," made public by the United States Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau.

This study is the eighth of a series of studies of country babies and mothers made by the Children's Bureau in six States—Kansas, Wisconsin, North Carolina, Mississippi, Montana, and Georgia.

Georgia is praised by the Children's Bureau for its "rapid strides in public-health achievement" since the time of the bureau's study. The report adds: "Noteworthy results, especially in the protection of maternity and infancy, were obtained through legislation and an especially vigorous and effective administration of the State board of health."

Better prenatal and natal care is still urgently needed by the mothers of the district studied in Georgia, however, if their young babies are to have even as good a start in life as the babies born in many crowded cities.

The Georgia county surveyed by the bureau lies in the southernmost extension of the Blue Ridge Mountain belt. Its people are American by birth and descent. Because of the mountainous character of the district and the lack of good roads, their homes are isolated and often almost inaccessible and they have not shared in the development of the rest of their State and Nation. Some homes visited could not be reached even by wagon and had to be sought out by trail over mountains and through streams. A few mothers and fathers were visited who had not been to nearby villages in years; some had never seen a train.

In one family, separated by a mountain range from the nearest store and post office, the father had not called for his mail in twelve months, the mother had not been to the settlement in seven years and the father's mother had lived sixty years before she saw a train. Another woman had not been to the nearest settlement, six miles away, in twenty years. A mother who lived only three miles from town, one third of the distance rugged trail, stated she had lived there a year before she saw another woman. At one home, the father answered most of the questions and explaining his free will offering to be not less than one dollar and more if the local feels that it is able financially to make a larger contribution. These funds are to be turned over by the officers of the local Department of Women to the local solicitor of the Bishop's agent. These funds will be forwarded by the Bishop's agent of your district to the Presiding Bishop, who is the treasurer of the Department of Women.

The invitation to assist financially in the support of this department should be extended to every woman of the local church because every girl and every woman belongs to the Department of Women.

Funds to meet local needs may also be met by collections or offerings at other meetings of the local or by such other methods as the local may adopt.

wife's shyness, said, "She has seen mighty nigh no strangers and never seen a train."

The county had almost no public health resources. It contained no hospital; none of the nearby Georgia counties had hospitals. There were only seven physicians in the county and the difficulties of travel made it often impossible for the mountain mother to secure any physician. Sometimes a sick mother or child had to be carried over miles of rough road to reach the nearest doctor.

Mothers and babies suffered from the lack of medical help. Eighty-six per cent of the mothers who were questioned went through the period of pregnancy without any medical aid whatever. The others received totally inadequate care. Two thirds were attended by physicians at childbirth but in a number of cases, the doctor did not arrive until after the baby was born. Seventy-seven per cent of the mothers who were attended by physicians were not visited at all after the birth of the baby. No physician was reported in attendance at the deaths of more than two thirds of the babies in the group studied who died in their first year.

Few mothers knew the best way to feed and care for children, not only because they lacked medical advice but also because many of them could not read or write. Practically all mothers nursed their babies but some babies received solid food even during the first month. Buttermilk, sweetened coffee, syrup, butter, eggs, cornbread, meat, potatoes, and other vegetables were among the foods given in the first month. Some of the foods given before the sixth month included sausage, pickled beans, and chocolate candy.

When children became sick, patent medicines were used by many of the mothers. Almost one half of the babies included in the study, all under 2 years, had such nostrums. A number of the patent medicines reported as given to babies had been analyzed by the Bureau of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture and declared misbranded under the Federal Food and Drugs Act. In one case, for instance, a medicine containing 60 per cent of alcohol by volume and also chloroform, ether, and red pepper was claimed to be a panacea for internal and external use and a cure for diphtheria, rheumatism, la grippe, and all aches and pains. Many of the mothers took patent medicines for their supposed help during childbirth. Even after the medicines had been analyzed and declared misbranded by the Federal Government, they continued to be used widely.

The report recommends as the most immediate need of the mountain mother a rural public health nursing service, so that instruction on maternity care and also on the care of babies can be brought to the mother in her home. Other recommendations are "hospital service which would provide for maternity cases; medical care available to every home in the area; a full-time county commissioner of health and regulation of the practice of midwifery."

The report adds:

"A survey of State health activities up to the close of 1921 shows marked progress in Georgia in the promotion of measures of protection for maternity and infancy. The State has been admitted to the United States death-registration area and registration of births is rapidly being perfected to meet the requirements for admission to the birth registration area. A division of child hygiene organized in the State board of health has developed a well-rounded program for the conservation of the health of mother and child. State legislation for the prevention of blindness was enacted in 1918. County organization for health work, provided for by legislation in 1914, has developed slowly."—Children's Bureau, Washington.

Putting a Stop to Dope

American representatives at the international opium commission at Geneva took the stand recently that the way to solve the opium problem was to cut its production to that which was needed for medical purposes only. That the recommendation of the American representatives was not adopted shows that the opium-growing nations are not in earnest about their efforts to stop the drug traffic.

Opium addicts exist because they can obtain opium. As long as there is a greater production of the drug than is needed for medical purposes, the surplus will find a field for its sale.

The Literary Digest quotes:

"Settlement of the world-wide opium problem cannot be made without the full cooperation of every civilized nation in whose territory the growth of the opium poppy is carried on. For Great Britain and France to interject a series of 'ifs and buts' in the consideration of the American opium plan recently presented before the League of Nations opium commission at Geneva, means only one thing. In their own minds, the delegates of these nations are against any drastic restrictions in opium production and also opposed to cutting off the supply of nonmedical opium from the natives of their colonies. To solve a combined moral and political problem of the opium type is impossible if insincerity lurks behind the high-sounding phrases of the delegates of great nations attending the meeting of an international commission.

"The only method which can effectively stamp out drug addiction all over the world is to reduce opium production to the exact needs for scientific and medicinal purposes. Laws piled upon laws without this control at the source have been, and will continue to be, ineffective. In America, manufacturers and distributors of narcotics have been overwhelmed with all types of laws, forms, and restrictions, both State and national, and still the reform associations say that drug addiction is on the increase. Federal and local authorities have made statements indicating that well over ninety per cent of all narcotics seized in and near New York City in original packages, have been of foreign manufacture. This seems to point the finger of accusation directly at Europe."

Clubs and Homes Lose to Movies

English country homes and feudal castles as well as exclusive New York club life are in process of dissolution, according to the Literary Digest. The English novelist, W. B. Maxwell, declares that many fine country estates have closed because it is impossible to get servants to stay where there are no moving pictures. The high taxes also seems to be another motive for closing the old estates, but this is not given prominent mention.

The New York Evening Post gives an account of several old and exclusive clubs which have closed or are in the process of closing or joining with others, because the movies have brought too great competition.

"The 'movies' have taken up the slack. There are a dozen motion picture houses for one club nowadays. The husband or father who used to stay at the club now rushes home for an early dinner and takes the family to the 'movies' or a similar form of entertainment. The 'movies' are the most popular and accessible medium of escape from the commonplace and the fretful round of routine duties. Observation of motion picture audiences, whether on Broadway or in the smaller community theaters scattered throughout the city, will reveal many who were formerly known as 'clubmen,' accompanied by their families or the men they used to meet at the club."

An interesting account follows, in which the extent of the motion picture industry is estimated in comparison to other fields. The New York Times says:

"There are in round numbers in the United States about 18,000 theaters given over to motion pictures. As a mass agency of popular appeal this number is to be compared to about 2,500 daily papers and 4,000 public libraries. The number of newspapers of all types, daily, triweekly, semi-weekly, and weekly, is still something more than a thousand less than the number of motion picture theaters. Total publications of all types run to only 3,000 more than the number of motion picture theaters.

"When it comes to circulation, that is, to daily contact with large numbers of people, the daily newspaper has the advantage, leading with more than 40,000,000 circulation for the country as a whole. The daily attendance at motion picture theaters is largely a matter of conjecture."

After considering the various means for ascertaining what the daily attendance at the movies is, the article says,

"Estimates of attendance the country over run from a minimum of 50,000,000 a week to a maximum of 15,000,000 a day. The first figure is probably too low; the second probably too high."

Will Taxes Be Less?

The Treasury report for the fiscal year ending June 30, shows a surplus of $310,000,000. The people might be expected to heave a sigh of relief and settle down to a less heavy burden of taxes but not so, says so eminent an authority on finance as Senator Smoot.

The Senator is quoted by the Literary Digest as saying:

"I am opposed to a reduction in taxation. I am convinced that it would be an unwise governmental policy to reduce the taxes so soon after the excellent showing made in the last fiscal year. The war debt has not been reduced sufficiently to justify any radical, in fact, an appreciable reduction in the present revenue laws.

"I know that there is a nation-wide demand for some relief from the tax burdens, and that hasty political sense agrees with this demand in the face of a Presidential election. But I, for one, am against this move. . . .

"There is sure to be a great demand for great expenditures in the next Congress. In fact, the expenditures will not be reduced next year. They will be greatly increased."

Senator Smoot, who it will be remembered is Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, also expects the next Congress to pass a soldier bonus bill, and over the President's veto if necessary.

A more encouraging tone is taken by Congressman Madden, Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, when he says the public has a right to expect a reduction in taxes when a surplus is shown.

Other expressions on the same side are being made throughout the country. Fear is expressed that the surplus may lead to extravagance by the next Congress.

An inquiry as to the source of this unexpected surplus leads the Literary Digest to note:

"Enormous receipts from customs under the new tariff act, receipts which officials could not foresee, constitute one of the chief reasons. The customs receipts for this fiscal year exceeded $557,000,000, more than $200,000,000 in excess of the last fiscal year. Never before did the Government receive such returns from customs.

"Heavy income and profits tax returns this month, amounting as of date June 28, to $360,000,000 as compared with $288,000,000 in June a year ago, have materially helped on the surplus and made it greater than forecast.

"Another aid to the Treasury has been nearly $70,000,000 received this month in the form of interest on foreign obligations. In fact, for this fiscal year, the receipts from this source have been upward of $201,000,000, as contrasted with $26,000,000 for the last fiscal year. About $6,000,000 increase in Panama Canal tolls also has been a factor."

Award Roosevelt Medals

The Roosevelt Memorial Association has made the annual award of the three medals for distinguished public service in the fields of activity in which Theodore Roosevelt felt a strong interest.

The first medal was given to Miss Louisa Lee Schuyler, great-granddaughter of General Philip Schuyler and great-granddaughter of Alexander Hamilton, for practical betterment of living conditions. The service this woman has rendered to the welfare of women and children through the eighty-six years of her life has been universally recognized.

The recipient of the second medal is General Leonard Wood, personal friend of the colonel's. This award was for the preparation that leads to peace. General Wood's preparedness program has made him a great man in the eyes of many who recognize his motives in desiring peace.

The third award was to Professor Henry Fairfield Osborn whose scientific work on the origin and development of man was personally known by Roosevelt.

The Outlook says regarding the medals:

"The awards take the form of medals of gold designed by Mr. James Earle Fraser and bearing, together with the portrait of Roosevelt, the inscription, 'If I must choose between righteousness and peace, I choose righteousness.'

"Thus this form of honoring Roosevelt's memory begins with fitness and has met wide approval from the public at large."

A Reformer Indicted

A great deal of material has come to our desk recently in the form of letters and news articles, regarding the indictment of William H. Anderson, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of New York State. He is charged with larceny and forgery in connection with the handling of the funds of the Anti-Saloon League.

However Mr. Anderson claims the opposition comes from the "wet" faction in the country and is the result of his fight to uphold prohibition. Mr. Anderson is one of the most influential men in the National Councils of the Anti-Saloon League and for a number of years has been considered one of the country's foremost reformers. He has lost much popularity recently, however, during the fight being made upon him because he claims to have evidence which he will not lay on the table. His evasion of the issue has gained him nothing in the eyes of the public.

We are reminded by the Outlook that an indictment is not a conviction and therefore the public must remain open-minded toward the whole affair until the facts in the case are definitely known.

The Bok Peace Prize

Edward Bok has offered a prize of one hundred thousand dollars for the best practicable peace plan. The committee in charge says:

"The winning plan must provide a practicable means whereby the United States can take its place and do its share toward preserving world peace, while not making compulsory the participation of the United States in European wars, if any such are, in the future, found unpreventable."

If a composite plan is adopted by the Jury of Award, subsidiary prizes of five thousand dollars each may be given for each part of a plan used.

Conditions for the contest as set forth in the Outlook are:

"Half of the main award is to be given upon the acceptance of the winning plan by the jury, the other half if by March 4, 1925, the plan is accepted by the United States Senate or has won, in the opinion of the jury, an adequate degree of popular support. Each plan must be limited to five thousand words, aside from the required summary of not more than five hundred words, and must be received at the office of the American Peace Award (which is 342 Madison Avenue, New York City) by November 15, 1923. These indicate only some of the conditions. Any aspirant for the award (to which only American citizens are eligible) should write to the American Peace Award, at the address given above, for official instructions as to the conditions which must be observed."

Profiteering in Coal Should Cease

The Coal Commission has returned its report regarding hard coal mines with the recommendation that they be seized by the Government in times of emergency to protect the interests of the public. The report declares that profiteering in coal and coal famines such as the country experienced last year must cease.

According to the Literary Digest some of the findings and recommendations of the Coal Commission's report are as follows:

"The Commission recommends at this time no punitive legislation. It awaits with interest whether the next agreement entered into shall show a cooperative spirit, and a proper conception of the rights of the American people.

"It recommends that Congress shall give the President authority, in the event of a cessation of operations, to declare an emergency, take charge of the mines, fix wages and the compensation to be paid the owner, subject to review by the courts, and to distribute the product as he deems wise and just.

"Coal is quite as much a public necessity as gas, street railway service, or any other service or commodity that has been brought under public regulation. In the operation of coal mines, as in the operation of railroads, telephones, water companies, or banks, the public interest must be respected and served.

"The commission is convinced that publicity of costs, prices, and profits must be provided to protect the interests of the public.

"As the item of freight alone takes from 16 to 30 cents of the anthracite consumer's dollar, a material reduction in the price of coal might come through a reduction of freight rates. The Coal Commission urges upon the Interstate Commerce Commission a reexamination of the reasonableness of anthracite freight rates.

"It recommends that the anthracite contract shall not expire at the same time the bituminous one does, and that the contract shall provide for its renewal except as to any subjects which either side may desire to review and of which notice is given ninety days before the expiration of the contract.

"It offers a number of suggestions looking toward bringing the operator and miner together in a more friendly spirit, and for the speedier adjustments of differences than now exist.

"The commission recommends that each side forget past differences and grievances, and attack the problem in the spirit of justice and fair dealing, not only between themselves, but with due regard for the rights and sensibilities of the American people."

The commission's report is evidence that the Government and the people have learned their lesson and will not permit further infringement upon their rights. While it is true that nothing can be done with the commission's report until Congress meets in December, nevertheless it may be remembered that the President can call a special session at any time and may do so if the situation grows darker.

The anthracite industry is just another added to the list of public utilities.

Manitoba Abandons Prohibition

The people of Manitoba by an overwhelming majority have rejected prohibition after a seven year's trial and voted to adopt a modified form of the Quebec system of government sale, according to the Literary Digest. The plan provides for the sale of liquors to licensed dealers and delivery to homes, but does not allow the open bar. The new system is to be tried for three years.

The Windsor Border Cities Star says:

"If, as seems probable, the desire for extra provincial revenue from liquor profits was one of the motives of the Manitoba majority in voting for the system, government control will likely defeat the end which was one of the chief talking points of its friends. That has been the experience in British Columbia and Quebec, where the system is in force. Where a profit is possible, there is always a temptation to increase it. The commission which is empowered to administer the law will doubtless want to make a good financial showing, such as is openly boasted in Quebec. The administration of Ontario's prescription system of liquor sales is open to the same criticism. Government sale of liquor as a strictly temperance measure should eliminate all possibility of profit, and those in charge of it should work to discourage sales as much as possible.

"Another effect of the new plan will undoubtedly be to encourage smuggling of liquor across the border into the United States, leaving the bootlegging element practically untouched. Elimination of this vicious practice was one of the chief arguments of the Moderationists. Again, their professed goal seems impossible of attainment. Experience in British Columbia and Quebec will support such a view.

"This aspect of the question has been a serious one for Canada for some time. It involves a point of national honor, which the government at Ottawa should heed by taking stern measures to repress a trade wherein there is no good for this country. As a result of it, border points have gained an undeserved reputation for lawlessness and insobriety."

France Signs Naval Peace Plan

An encouraging piece of international news comes to us when it was announced that France has signed the Washington Conference Naval Limitations Agreement and the Four-Power Pacific Treaty. This comes as the result of eighteen months of deliberation when the international horizon looked dark and foreboding. The three other Washington treaties have not been ratified by France as yet.

In summing up the conditions existing at present with regard to action on the Washington treaties, the Literary Digest quotes the New York Tribune as follows:

"The United States agreed that when the treaty was ratified it would scrap eleven out of the fifteen capital ships (battleships and battle cruisers) it was building at the time of the conference. Without waiting for complete ratification, this country has stopped work on all these vessels. Plans have meanwhile been drawn up by the Navy Department for the cancellation of the contracts for the new battleships Washington, South Dakota, Indiana, Montana, North Carolina, Iowa, and Massachusetts, and for their sale for scrapping, and the same thing applies to the new battle cruisers Constitution, Ranger, United States, and Constitution.

"This country also promised to scrap seventeen completed capital ships, which are variously classified as of old, pre-Jutland, or obsolete type. Of these vessels the United States has sold two, the Maine and the Missouri, which are now being broken up. Five others have been dismantled, so that they are no longer serviceable for purposes of war, and the Navy has placed eight others in reserve. This accounts for fifteen which have been placed hors de combat, the others being the Dakota and the Delaware, which, in accordance with the terms of the treaty, are not to be scrapped until two of the new modern battleships, the West Virginia and the Colorado, are completed.

"England, at the time of the conference, had a program calling for the construction of four new giant battle cruisers of the Hood type, with a tonnage of about 50,000. The British delegation agreed that two of these vessels should not be built, and that the other two should be kept within the limit of 35,000 tons provided as a maximum by the pact. The British plans for new construction have been altered in this sense.

"In respect to complete tonnage, the treaty calls on England to scrap twenty-four old capital ships. Of these the British have sold seventeen to ship-breaking firms, and rendered one incapable of further warlike service. England has already done away with twenty vessels. She has thus accomplished more than two thirds of the treaty requirements, and has a somewhat better percentage of fulfillment to her credit than the United States.

"Japan had four capital ships under construction in the fall of 1921. The 5-5-3 ratio requires her to abandon them. This she has already done, for though the most recent reports are to the effect that two of these Japanese vessels are to be finished up as aircraft carriers, this is allowed under the treaty, and is the same thing the United States is doing in the case of two of its battle cruisers. Work on the other two Japanese capital ships has been suspended.

"The Japanese Government is further called upon to get rid of ten of its old capital ships. Up to the present time it has removed the armament from nine of these obsolete vessels, rendering them virtually useless as fighting units of the fleet, and in addition has placed three capital ships in reserve."

If the naval limitations treaty is carried out to the letter it will terminate for a period of years competition in the building of war vessels and be a saving of millions of dollars to the world. It should also remove one of the great provocations of war and pave the way for future conferences on disarmament.

What's in a Name?

There is not much in a name unless you consider it from the angle of the postal clerk. There are 52,000 post offices in the United States but even this would not be so bad if the names were not duplicated, triplicated, and even multiplied many times.

The Outlook observes:

"Forty-three names are used more than twenty times each. That means that there are forty-three post offices of the same name in twenty or more States, for the Post Office Department does not permit duplication of a post office name within State lines. Thirty-one States have each a post office named Franklin, thirty a Clinton, twenty-nine a Chester, twenty-nine an Arlington, twenty-eight a Washington. No name has yet been quite popular enough to be adopted as a post office name in all the States of the Union, and the name of the first postmaster-general, Franklin, will probably head the list for all time. In this respect the father of the postal service leads the Father of the Country by three post offices."

Why Lynching Has Decreased

The great colored exodus from the South apparently accounts for much of the decrease in lynching parties. The press is of the general opinion that such is the case.

There were fifteen lynchings for the first six months of 1923 as against thirty the year before and thirty-six in 1921 during the same period:

The Literary Digest says:

"From this it appears that altogether four of the ten lynchings involved crimes of some sort of violence against white women. This explains the conclusion of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot from similar totals in the Tuskegee report, 'with a fair allowance for the natural bias of the colored statistician,' that 'offenses against women have ceased to be the prime provocation to lynching.'

"The main impression created by the report among Southern papers, such as the Columbia Record, Birmingham Age-Herald, Charlotte Observer, Louisville Courier-Journal, Atlanta Constitution, seems to be one of gratification coupled with a sincere hope that the slump in lynchings is permanent. Northern papers point out a number of cases where mobs intent on lynching have been stopped by resolute officers or awakened public sentiment. For example, the Ohio State Journal tells us of a notable instance at Savannah, where a plucky sheriff, backed by law-abiding citizens, stopped a mob's first attack so thoroughly that no other efforts were made. This was done, it appears, by turning a hose on them, and without firing a shot. The essential point in the story, as pointed out by the Milwaukee Living Church, is that the sheriff, firemen, militia, and Governor all did their duty, thus vindicating 'the ability of an Anglo-Saxon community to govern itself.' Such instances lead Northern papers like the Indianapolis News, deploring the 'tendency to think of the South as a unit in its approval of lynching,' to give full credit to 'the continued struggle of Southern organizations and newspapers to have right prevail.'"

Ending the Twelve-Hour Day

Little has been said in the HERALD columns concerning the twelve-hour day in the steel industry which has been discussed so freely in the press of recent dates. However, now that some definite action is resulting we will include here a brief summary of the situation.

Judge Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the board of directors of the Iron and Steel Institute, is quoted in a pamphlet as saying that he was opposed to the twelve-hour shift but that the corporation could not abolish it because the men themselves wanted it. The reason was that men could earn more in twelve hours than in a shorter time. The work does not appear to be oppressive because the heavy work is done by machinery, but the chief objection to the twelve-hour day is that it allows men no time for recreation and family enjoyment.

Judge Gary notes that men would be willing to work a less number of hours but demand the same pay. The situation was widely discussed for several weeks and now the report comes that the twelve-hour day is to go.

According to the Outlook:

"Without waiting for that 'surplus of labor' which both the President of the United States and the Directors of the Iron and Steel Institute, as we recorded last week, seemed to think prerequisite, the United States Steel Corporation is to begin within six weeks its undertaking to abandon the twelve-hour shift."

Villa Passes Into History

The bandit chieftan who occupied the front page of papers for several years preceding America's entry into the World War, the guerilla-man who is accredited with perpetrating the Columbus, New Mexico, raid, which resulted in the Pershing Punitive Expedition, costing the government $100,000,000, is dead.

Shot while motoring into the town of Parral Chihuahua for supplies, Pancho Villa died as he had lived—by violence.

For several years Villa had lived the life of a peaceful farmer but the "Terror of the Border" was not forgotten by the little farmers and townspeople of the border who for years worked and slept in fear of a day or night raid by this wolf of the Mexican waste lands.

His life was picturesque even in a country where and during a time when the commonplace was a rare thing. Uncouth and cruel, he nevertheless had a personal magnetism which made many love him who did not approve his bloody deeds.

Many things are attributed to him by rumor and legend which undoubtedly do not belong to his life. But among the most unique of the stories is one recently appearing in an American paper which pays its respects to Villa for aiding the United States in preparing for her entry into the World War. Villa, by his raids upon American soil started the chase which led Pershing and his men over many miles of rough country and through many hardships. It was this experience which prepared Pershing for his leadership in the World War and which added the finishing touches to the great general's preparation for his historic task.

Yes, to Villa goes the credit for aiding the United States in its preparation for entrance into the conflict across seas.

Racial Differences

Race and mental character were discussed at the recent meeting of the British Association in charge of anthropology and psychology at London. The Literary Digest, in reviewing the meeting, notes that the work of travelers, geographers, and historians abound in characterizations of the mental qualities of various peoples, but that when the ethnologist investigates racial differences in mental qualities, he is confronted with a two-fold difficulty. The account continues:

"On one hand he is dependent upon observation from which it is difficult to eliminate the personal factor, and, on the other hand, it is not clear how far mental characters can be correlated with the physical characters of races. In the solution of this problem it is essential that the anthropologist should secure the cooperation of the psychologist, and it was with this object that the discussion on 'Mental character and race' was held. The discussion was opened by Professor J. L. Myres, who said that the principal consideration was that in many individuals in any modern society of mixed ancestry, dispositions and faculties differ. Such mental qualities are inherited like physical qualities and characters. It might be assumed that they stood in some direct relation to some element in the nervous system. Further, some mental qualities seemed to be associated with some physical characters, as for example a 'fiery' temperament with red hair.

Some of these physical characters are racial, or (like red hair) seem to result from crossing of racial elements. The analogy from the artificial selection of the breeds of domesticated animals indicates that it is possible to enhance or combine mental qualities.

"Professor Myres went on to point out that the older ethnologists characterized racial types by mental as well as physical characters. The individual has a postnatal experience as well as a prenatal equipment and in investigation it might be difficult to eliminate disturbing factors. Professor Myres stated, however, that he himself had found that the offspring of British fathers and Greek mothers brought up in a Greek environment differed as markedly from pure Greeks in their attitude toward discipline and labor as they did in physique, temperament closely following breed.

"In summing up the problem, Professor Myres said that the ethnologist, and, in particular, the social anthropologist, must define more clearly the elementary terms in their characterization, while the psychologist must go further in laboratory work on such complex manifestations as the 'sense of right or wrong,' irrespective of race or breed.

"Doctor C. S. Myers, president of the psychological section, said that the chief determinants controlling mental characters were heredity and environment. On the physical side environment—climate, temperature, food supply, and the like—acted directly and indirectly, especially on the internal secretions which affect the functions of the emotions. Environment must have played an important part in producing such differences as distinguished Americans, Australians, and New Zealanders; but it was not known with certainty how these differences came about, or how permanent they were likely to be. Different parts of the same country exhibited distinguishing characteristics."

Twenty thousand dollars an acre is the price paid for an acre of ground on the water front of some parts of Long Island. At any seaside resort the water-front property is the most desirable and therefore the highest priced.

There are other people, however, who live on the water front who do so because property is the cheapest, but this is not at a popular summer resort. Many lakes and rivers in this country support house boats which are tied to the shore property. People live in the boats and garden in the front yard, but often this is not a healthy life. Our rivers and lakes have become the cesspools of cities and the waters defiled by the sewers drained into them.

It would be a pleasure to live on the water if it were not for this sewage, and we have chosen to devote too many of our rivers and lakes to sewage rather than residence.

The Outlook notes: "Bathing beaches have been ruined, fish life destroyed, and the waterways of the Nation made into an abomination through heedless indifference and uncalculating greed. Possibly it might help us to realize the facts in the case if we started frankly calling such an erstwhile magnificent waterway as the Hudson by the name of 'sewer' instead of 'river.' Perhaps we might be aroused to action if there was a general adoption of this suggestion. 'Where is Poughkeepsie, or Newburgh, or Yonkers?' a stranger in America might ask. 'Why, don't you know?' we could reply. 'That's charmingly located on the banks of the Hudson Sewer.' New York State would have no monopoly of the right to adopt a more accurate, if less pleasant, title for its bays, lakes, and streams.

"More of us ought to get out on the water, and, even more than that ought to make sure that there is water to get out on."

Less Law and More Religion

"We do not need more government; we need more culture. We do not need more law; we need more religion," declared Vice President Coolidge in a commencement address at Wheaton College recently.

"We have looked to our industries, we have looked to our Government." Now "we may as well let a season of adjustment and experience disclose the results of the theories which have been adopted in the past forty years."

The Literary Digest quotes him in continuing:

"The time appears to have arrived when we may more properly look to the people, when natural laws may well be left to supplement artificial laws. . . . In complete freedom of action the people oftentimes have a more effective remedy than can be supplied by government interference. Individual initiative in the long run is a firmer reliance than bureaucratic supervision."

Air Swallowers

We are all air swallowers to some extent, observes the Literary Digest.

"It is only when we swallow too much air that it becomes troublesome. Physicians have now recognized for some time that the gas which afflicts 'dyspeptics' formerly ascribed to fermentation, is in many cases nothing but swallowed air, taken in too large quantities."

Doctor J. Frumusan, a French expert, writes:

"Whenever we introduce solid or liquid food into the stomach; whenever, as well-brought-up people, we swallow our saliva instead of spitting it out, we take in a certain quantity of air. We all swallow a considerable volume of air daily, which mingles with the alimentary mass, traverses the digestive passage, is in part absorbed by the mucous surfaces and in part eliminated through the intestines, or more rarely by the mouth. Aerophagy is thus a natural phenomenon, and so long as it remains within its physiological limits, it causes no trouble. But when, for any reason, these swallowings increase and become more active, and consequently the volume of air introduced into the stomach is considerably larger, a series of abnormal reactions take place and bring about trouble in all the great functions of the body.

"The quantity of air dilates the stomach, which becomes very large; its top pushes up the diaphragm, touches and envelops the tip of the heart, compresses and irritates the sympathetic nerves and the solar plexus, provoking spasm of the sphincter muscles. The enormous bag, doubled or trebled in volume, swelled and painful, interferes considerably with the neighboring organs, which it displaces and compresses.

"These mechanical troubles lead, little by little, to profound physiological modifications, and we reach a pathological stage; the individual becomes a dyspeptic, a sufferer from intestinal or liver trouble, emaciated or obese. Here it is important to recognize the fact that he is an air swallower and to be able to act upon the source of the trouble."

The treatment is simply to stop swallowing air. But to accomplish this another series of treatments has to be resorted to until the air swallower is trained to do differently. Doctor Frumusan warns us that we are not dealing with a trivial abnormality. Some of the acute crises of air swallowing, he says, may end fatally, in which case death is often attributed to some nonexistent malady.

A critic of our churches says that they are "dominated by a lot of old hens." Does he refer to the lay members?—Nashville Southern Lumberman.

Overflow Meetings at Irvington

A glorious day was had yesterday. Sister Vida E. Smith gave a very motherly talk to us on Graceland. She was introduced to a large audience by Bishop J. F. Keir. There was on the platform in addition to Bishop Keir and Patriarch W. A. McDowell, the full representation of the District Presidency and Apostle J. A. Gillen, who said he was "sold out to Graceland." The meeting was a big boost for our college, well received by an appreciative audience.

At the afternoon round table Sister Dora Glines continued her departmental work. This meeting was also impressive, showing the united efforts of the general church. The following were on the platform before a full house, Apostle Gillen, Bishop Keir, Patriarch McDowell, Sister Vida E. Smith, District President J. D. White, and his assistants W. H. Dawson, and J. T. Smith, jr.

Apostle Gillen spoke at night to a packed house.

Already Bishop Keir has made a favorable impression with his first sermon to-day on the financial law. He urged the "stopping of leaks" in order to have an increase. Using a chart to speak from, he set forth the law clearly.

Patriarch McDowell, with wise counsel, fervent prayers, spiritual sermons and giving of patriarchal blessings has greatly added to the cheerful feeling prevailing here.

Saints continue to come from branches, isolated towns and the rural localities.

We are arranging to take care of two overflow meetings on Sunday, using Patriarch McDowell and Elder H. W. Savage to address those who cannot get near enough to hear Bishop Keir and Apostle Gillen.

Our young people are having a splendid time under the social committee. We have had all sorts of activities, weinie roasts, watermelon feeds, and all kinds of games. We had an original song contest with prizes for the best ones. The big bonfire at night attracts about three hundred of those who are not too much adult to enjoy the evening in story-telling, etc.

Erie Beach Reunion

The thirteenth annual reunion of the Chatham District was held July 20 to 30 at Erie Beach, a beautiful resort on the shores of Lake Erie twelve miles south of Chatham. The camp was a large one, people being in attendance from many parts of Canada and the United States. Delightful weather prevailed and the reunion was a decided success.

Bishop B. R. McGuire was with us the first few days and all were glad to meet him again and hear his instructive talks on the temporal needs of the church. President F. M. McDowell, on his first visit to Canada, made a good impression and all pronounced him a good fellow. All were glad to welcome Apostle J. F. Curtis again and hear him. He has always had the respect and confidence of the Canadian people. Elder H. A. Koehler also proved himself a good fellow from the start and he and Brother McDowell devoted every minute to the work among the young people giving valuable instruction, and kept the young lively in all manly recreation. Their efforts were appreciated. Elder R. C. Russell spent the last Sunday in camp and all were glad to meet and hear him. Grant St. John, Arthur Leverton, and John R. Grice also were present and delivered interesting sermons. Ruth Mifflin Abey looked after the Women's Department work.

Brother John Shields was suddenly called to Toronto on account of the death of his wife. Many expressions of sympathy were extended Brother John who has attended all Erie Beach reunions, and he is looked upon with respect as one of the pioneers of Ontario gospel work.

The committee in charge of the present reunion were sustained and the time and place for the next reunion was left for them to decide. This reunion has always been a success and those in charge are grateful to all who assisted in making the camp enjoyable and interesting to the throngs of people who attended.

Western Montana Reunion

The location of the Western Montana reunion is on the Tewey Ranch, one mile from Race Track and seven miles from Deer Lodge on the main road which runs between Butte and Anaconda.

It is a fine place for a reunion with plenty of good water and a wide open field where all kinds of games can be played. While the Saints are expecting a spiritual and educational time, there will also be plenty of recreation for both old and young. There will be a morning study based on the pamphlet written by President F. M. Smith, entitled "Our social ideal." Plenty of these pamphlets will be obtainable on the reunion grounds for ten cents each. The Saints should bring their Doctrine and Covenants with them.

Bishop J. A. Becker and Sister Ward L. Christy will attend and probably other visitors. With these and the local missionary force there will be an efficient corps of workers.

Saints of that district should plan their vacation for the dates August 17 to 27.

Midland District Reunion

A reunion of the Midland District was held on the 14th and 15th of July, 1923, at Clay Cross, Derbyshire, England.

On Saturday evening several talks were given on departmental work and Apostle D. T. Williams made very clear the use and aims of the departments.

Sunday was a red letter day for the district. In the morning the prayer service was followed by a preaching service. Brother Bullard delivered a splendid sermon on "Sacrifice." At 2 p. m. Sister Gertie Edwards gave an excellent talk on "Religious education." Everyone was greatly enthused and had plenty of food for thought. This was followed by a "Fellowship meeting."

At the evening service Apostle D. T. Williams was the speaker and his talk was a fitting end of a "perfect day." Everyone went home rejoicing, having spent a good spiritual time together.

Hold All-Day Service

The Saints in the country between Niles, Michigan, and South Bend, Indiana, held an all-day meeting Sunday, July 8, at the home of Brother and Sister Weaver. Saints from Buchanan and Berrien Springs, Michigan, and South Bend and Mishawaka, Indiana, were present.

Elder S. W. L. Scott was the speaker at both the forenoon and afternoon services. Before the afternoon preaching service a social and sacrament meeting was enjoyed. The sermons were very encouraging and uplifting—just what the scattered Saints needed.

At noon we partook of a sandwich lunch which also enabled the sisters to visit.

In the evening we gathered at the home of an aged sister who was not able to meet with us and heard another good sermon by Elder Scott.

The scattered Saints look forward to these little gatherings as they are a great help to us. We are looking forward to the time when we can have a regular place of meeting and have regular services. At present we have prayer meeting on Sunday evening, at the home of Sister Longdens, 215 East Broadway, Mishawaka, Indiana. Any Saints visiting this vicinity are cordially invited to meet with us.

Rally Day at Rockford, Illinois

This has been such an eventful month for us we feel we should let others know of the feast of good things we have been enjoying.

To begin with, on sacrament Sunday, Elder Norman Hield and his father met with us. We rejoiced to see these brethren and to hear Brother Norman's report of the Young People's Convention which he gave in the afternoon. Brother Hield also spoke to us on the subject of stewardships. One especially impressive statement that he made was that the time has come when we are to put forth a greater effort to become successful in our special line of business. I had often wondered why we as God's people should not be the most successful in the world and have wisdom to use that success aright.

At Brother Hield's suggestion, at this meeting we started a building fund. One hundred dollars was pledged at that time and we are hoping and praying for its steady growth.

July 15 was our Rally Day, and through the efforts of our branch president, J. A. Daer, who mailed cards to all the surrounding branches inviting them to attend, we had a crowd of about sixty. All brought basket dinners and a social time was enjoyed from twelve till two-thirty.

Sunday school convened at 10 a. m., after which Elder Oliver McDowell, of DeKalb, Illinois, preached on the subject, "Study to show thyself approved of God." He showed us plainly why we need efficient workers, and the need of preparation from childhood both in the Sunday school and in the home. He also brought out the thought that we should render service for value received, and that the more we study the clearer becomes our vision of the great work ahead of us.

At 2.30 p. m. a meeting was held wherein the older ones in the work were asked to give some of their experiences in the gospel work. A number of interesting testimonies were given.

After a sermon by Elder J. L. Cooper at 3 p. m. on "Social responsibility in the church of Christ," we all went to our homes feeling that the success of the day was far beyond our expectations.

On Friday, July 27, the district organizer for the Department of Women met with us and organized a department. We were greatly encouraged at the number who responded and more expressed their desire to be there, but on account of the short notice were unable to attend.

Echoes From Zion

We were pleasantly surprised on visiting the Mount Washington Church recently to find an up-to-date building with opera chairs and basement for Sunday school. It reminded us of our Seattle, Washington, church. We found a congenial, earnest congregation and felt well in trying to encourage in the blessed gospel cause. Mount Washington is worthy of prominent mention along church lines as a welding link between Zion and Kansas City, since it lies between.

We occupied at East Independence Church on the fifteenth of last month and found them housed in a small building but rejoicing in the gospel work. They have a well-ordered Sunday school and the good work moves on.

Yesterday, we met Brother J. W. A. Bailey, an active missionary, who is holding a very successful tent meeting at Atherton, a small town about ten miles out. The interest is good. Singers from Lees Summit and some from Independence went to help—a proper thing to do.

Lees Summit Branch, which we recently visited, has a very comfortable church and a good congregation. Bishop R. May, as elder in charge, is doing a good work there. We enjoyed speaking to them about some of the sure witnesses, that our religion is founded right and composed of proper material. Brother Chester Young and wife, whom we knew in reunion work at historic Irvington, California, live there. Success to the Lees Summit Branch!

On a recent visit to Fourth Kansas City Branch we found a large addition to their church building inclosed. We were specially pleased with their Sunday school, its perfect system and order. Brother Oliver Worden, the elder, has the genius of his father and the stern integrity of his mother.

Zion and vicinity has been visited by some very warm weather, some vivid lightning, and louder thunder than is ever heard by Seattleites or Oaklanders. It is now cold enough to sleep under the sheet. However, these hot nights and frequent showers are the making of a large corn crop. Corn is king in Missouri.

By invitation of proper authorities, on the first Sunday, my companion and I visited the encampment of a number of young Saints under the care of Brother G. A. Gould, the Scoutmaster. This encampment is some five miles from Independence. Sacramental emblems were administered under solemn yet unique conditions. A suitcase served as a table and a camp plate covered by a napkin held the bread, while the common cup was again brought into use. The congregation sat on the ground; all was solemn and appropriate. The Nation's mourning for the departed President was a subject under discussion.

After the spiritual feast, the physical feast was served in the form of a good chicken dinner. Ammon Fry cooked the chicken.

J. M. TERRY.

New Beresford Church, England

Opening services were held on July 15, for the Beresford Road Church, Northern District, England. A spacious, lofty, and in every way commodious building, costing about $8,500 has been erected by the Saints and represents the earnest efforts of the many who contributed either directly or indirectly toward its building.

The first service was held at 10.30 in the morning which consisted of song and prayer and an address by Patriarch R. Baldwin on "This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven, and he called the place Bethel." About two hundred were in attendance.

The afternoon service was at two o'clock. A great number of the members of the branch and Sunday school, also friends and members of other branches, met at the old meeting room in Mundy Street, Longsight, formed a procession and marched via Stockport Road, Dickenson Road and Beresford Road to the church. Here a large group was formed and pictures taken. Prominent in the procession and group was the district banner which flashed in the sunlight of a glorious day.

Services were then held at which two violin solos were given by Charles Barton, and scholars of the Sunday school sang in chorus. Patriarch R. Baldwin was again the speaker, his subject being "Influences and example." The talk was particularly adapted to the children who displayed interest by answering questions put to them by the speaker. The Sunday school superintendent then spoke to the children, telling them a good story with a moral. About two hundred thirty were present at this meeting.

In the evening at 6.30 another service was held. A friend of the branch, Miss M. Smith, rendered a vocal solo, "Abide with me," which was greatly appreciated. Brother Preston and family sang the anthem and the speaker was Patriarch R. Baldwin, on "I will build my church." The attendance was larger than at the other meetings, two hundred fifty being present.

July 15 marks a most auspicious day in the history of the Beresford Branch. All rejoice in the results of their efforts and are happy to possess such a fine new church building.

Council Bluffs and Vicinity

For the sake of those expecting to attend the reunion who might want to know where to find church books, we will state that the following may be found in the public library: Inspired Version of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Instructor, four volumes of Church History, the SAINTS' HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and the Ensign.

The reunion of the Pottawattamie and Fremont Districts will be held in Prospect Park where it was held last year, beginning August 10. We believe the reunion will be a helpful experience to those who may have the privilege of attending.

The tent meetings at Hazel Dell are to be continued till August 5. The preaching is of a high order and some interest is manifest. We understand that one has been baptized.

Several social events have taken place recently. On the 18th of July the Temple Builders and Oriole Girls had a surprise party in honor of Sister W. T. Spanwick. About forty gathered on July 9 to commemorate the sixty-eighth birthday of J. F. Mintun, and a social evening was enjoyed. The Sunday school of the Belmont Mission held a picnic at Fairmont Park the 29th. A nice gathering of children and Sunday school workers were present. Also the Department of Women held a social and business meeting at Fairmont Park July 19 where a pleasant and profitable time was enjoyed.

Recently we have had with us Elder T. A. Hougas and Brother and Sister George Hoisington. They remained only a short time.

A quarterly business meeting of the branch has been announced for Monday evening August 6. At this time it is expected that another counselor will be chosen for the branch presidency.

The extreme heat has somewhat damaged the crops but showers on Saturday and Sunday nights have given the vegetation a new lease on life. The Saints appreciate these blessings of a temporal nature. J. F. MINTUN.

Alfred Needham Fire Hero

When the shoppers of Moline, Illinois, on June 25, 1923, were thrown into a panic in a $40,000 fire, caused by exploding fireworks, one of the heroes in the rescuing force was Brother Alfred Needham, assistant pastor of the East Moline Branch.

An innocent boy, who was tinkering with a flint friction lighter while he was planning the purchase of some supplies for the Fourth of July in the Fisk and Loosley's department store at Fifteenth Street and Fifth Avenue of that city, let a spark leap out and ignite a "flower pot" in the stock of fireworks. Immediately there was an explosion of sky rockets, Roman candles, and other pieces which soon spread the fire among such inflammable things on that floor as wall paper, toys, paints, and furniture.

This blaze, imperiling the lives of thousands and threatening destruction to a number of large business blocks started on the second floor where the shoppers stampeded, as the shoppers did also in the floor below when they heard of the fire upstairs. Clerks on the second floor mounted their counters and shouted in vain to the men, women, and children to take their time. The crowd insisted upon scurrying and elbowing each other in attempts to escape.

Brother Alfred Needham, the department manager upstairs and a coworker, Mr. Nessley, with the assistance of a police merchant were instrumental in ushering the people from the burning room. The people were brought to the fire exit by Brother Needham and Mr. Nessley operated the fire doors.

At one time a frantic woman, with a babe in her arms, flung herself on the sill of the window on Fifth Avenue side and was ready to toss the child into the crowd below, when Brother Needham found his way to her through the smoke and carried her and the child back through the exploding fireworks and handed her down the ladder to the firemen and safety.

Brother Needham also assisted in rescuing five boys who were entrapped in the fireworks department. As the rescuers reached for the boys, Brother Needham and the firemen had to grab them from their perilous positions and carry them to the rear of the building to the rescuers who lowered them to the ground.

Though the nature of the fire kept the crowd terrified to the extreme, not a single serious accident occurred. We are proud to find Brother Needham among those men who were ready to risk their lives to save others.

Letters to Visitors at Young People's Convention

Open letters to those who attended the Young People's Convention at Graceland in June are being sent out by President F. M. McDowell and President G. N. Briggs. Following are extracts from the letter by President McDowell:

"Well, it's over! I mean the convention; not life. Wasn't it wonderful? Did you ever have a better time? You didn't regret a single penny it cost you, did you? Which would you prefer as a steady diet, young people's conventions or the cheap revelry of the street carnival or vaudeville? Not hard to decide, is it?

"You're home now. Rather lonesome? It's hard to keep up courage when you stand alone? Church services often drag, do they? Have you done anything to improve conditions since your return? Why not? Have you improved in regard to your personal habits? You know we each vowed either silently or publicly to live more like Christ. Have you caught the spirit of service? The ordinary man likes to 'get' and it's only the superior man who delights in service.

"Then there's that matter of being trained for service. What are you doing about it? Better read over the fine letter from Brother Briggs which I am sending and decide at once to get busy at the task of training your God-given talents. Several have already decided to enroll at Graceland this fall. Better come along. You'll never regret it."

Also included in the letter was a request to each convention visitor to write a "peppy" letter to ten other visitors, selecting the names from an inclosed list, and also to friends who were not at the convention. The names and addresses of these friends not at the convention were to be sent to President McDowell. In this way a lively interest is being built up for the next convention at Graceland.

The letter closed with the following appeal for cooperation:

"Well, I won't bother you longer, but I did want to remind you that we have a big job before us and we cannot possibly succeed unless we pull together. You know how it goes in football, don't you? Well, everything is set for a touchdown for 1923 by the Young People's Team. The captain has called a forward pass. Here we go. Nothing can stop us!"

President Briggs's letter, which was also sent to the convention visitors, telling of the great spirit aroused at the convention and urging the young people to prepare for work, is as follows:

"The Young People's Convention was full of inspiration for all who attended. It was an epoch-making event in the history of the church. Hundreds of young people caught a new vision of the church and its possibilities. There was a wonderful spirit of consecration—a desire to render devoted service in the great work which we all love.

"President Frederick M. Smith struck the keynote of the convention when he urged intensive preparation and education along all lines of service. You, no doubt, with many others, went away from the convention filled with a strong desire to do your part, to occupy some place of usefulness in the church, or in the active work of the world, and to do so efficiently. No doubt, you made strong resolutions to prepare and be ready when your call for service comes.

"I talked with several, their faces aglow with enthusiasm, and they said, 'I am coming back to Graceland next fall!' We desire to suggest that you seriously consider this also.

"Last year was a splendid one at Graceland, and the Graceland spirit was carried over into the convention. Next year will be better than any previous one. Would not a year of such enthusiasm, such inspiration, such ideals and instruction, be a powerful factor in your further preparation for life?

"The vision gained by the young people who attended the convention will be far-reaching. Resolute determination was written in their faces. Many are coming back to continue their studies and preparation. Are you going to be one of that number? We feel sure that you will not fail to see the significance of association with such a group, of becoming acquainted with them, and marching on with them to the success and triumph which awaits the church. We shall be pleased to greet you on opening day, September 10, 1923.

"In the meantime, feel free to write us in regard to the problems of your further education and training for life. Do you have our catalogue? A postal card will bring one."

Two-Day Meeting

At the two-day meeting held at Gladwin, Michigan, July 28 and 29, many good sermons were enjoyed. Among the speakers were: Israel Goheen, George Bailey, Matthew Umphrey, Elder Fultz, and G. W. Burt.

On Sunday morning at 7.30 there was a priesthood meeting. E. S. White, president of the quorum of elders, gave a very spiritual talk.

At 9 a. m. a general prayer service was enjoyed by all.

Independence

The success of the week-end outdoor community services on the Campus is assured. There were four thousand people attending these meetings on Saturday and Sunday, July 28 and 29. That shows a splendid community spirit. No program seems too big for our people to undertake, and one success wins another.

A reception for President and Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, celebrating their twenty-sixth wedding anniversary, was held on the Campus Friday evening, August 3, by the Laurel Club.

A steak fry and basket dinner began the evening where the guests were served with a lovely supper. Following the supper the L. D. S. band gave a concert.

Elder D. J. Krahl, president of the Holden Stake, offered prayer. President Smith was then congratulated and introduced by Walter W. Smith, Church Historian, after which President Smith made a short address. In view of the depressing news of the day when the country was mourning the death of the President of the United States, President Smith requested the audience to stand for one minute in silent prayer for the rest of the soul of the country's President.

Mrs. Smith spoke a few words, expressing her appreciation of the reception. The Laurel Club then presented the guests of honor with a basket of flowers.

Pictures of past conferences, showing President Smith and wife, with others, were shown on the large screen. The evening ended with personal congratulations to President and Mrs. Smith. Many expressed the joyousness of the occasion. There were about three thousand present.

At the suggestion of Mrs. Smith a telegram of sympathy was sent Mrs. Warren G. Harding.

On Saturday night, August 4, at 7.15, a concert was given by the L. D. S. Band, followed by a motion picture entertainment.

At 7.30 Sunday evening, August 5, the L. D. S. Band and choir rendered a sacred concert. President F. M. Smith preached on "The city beautiful." Following the sermon the first of a series of motion pictures on the Bible was shown, the picture being entitled, "The Creation." Every Sunday night for several weeks will be shown this series of religious pictures following the sermon. The amphitheater was filled to overflowing, and the attendance was estimated at about four thousand.

The program for next week will be a band concert and motion pictures on Saturday night. The band and choir will give a sacred concert on Sunday evening followed by preaching by Cyril Wight, president of the Lamoni Stake. The second religious picture in the series will be shown, entitled, "Cain and Abel."

Memorial services will be held on the Campus on Friday, August 10, for the late President Harding. President Frederick M. Smith has offered the use of the grounds to the mayor for union services which would be conducted by the town. Definite arrangements have not yet been concluded, detailed announcement at this time is not possible. The local papers will publish notices of the services, whether held by the town or by our own church. However it is certain that on Friday some kind of memorial services will be held on the Campus.

George A. Gould and wife chaperoned a party of twenty young people on a Saturday night hike and camp about five miles north of Independence. Elder and Sister J. M. Terry accompanied the party, and early Sunday morning they held a communion service in charge of Brother Terry. The crowd

Western Montana, at Race Track, August 17 to 27. There will be tents to rent quite cheap, free straw, and a dining tent where you will be fed cheaper than you can feed at home. Also you will be able to buy provisions on the ground practically at cost. Bring all the bedding that you can. See Reunion News in this issue for further particulars. Eli Bronson, George W. Thorburn.

Eastern Oklahoma, at Mount Zion Church, four miles west of Dalby Springs, Texas, August 17 to 27. All expecting to come by railroad must come to De Kalb, Texas. For conveyance out to the reunion grounds write Clyde Dalby, Dalby Springs, Texas. We trust you have made arrangements to attend. If you haven't, begin to-day; come and enjoy the ten days with us. We are looking forward to meeting many young people there. This is a fine opportunity for us all to get together and become better acquainted with each other. Don't allow some little excuse to hinder you of one of the most joyous ten days you will have for some time. Get on the train, come in the car, hitch up old Dobbin; just any way to get there, for we are looking for you. Come, "let's go." H. E. Winegar, missionary.

Married

BENDEL-BABCOCK.—William Bendel of Sarnia, Ontario, and Velma Pearl, second daughter of Brother and Sister Francis Babcock of Petrofka, Ontario, were married at the home of the bride's parents, June 20, 1923. Ceremony was performed by S. W. Tomlinson. Miss Birdie Babcock was bridesmaid; Willard Jones, groomsmen. Miss Gertrude Babcock played the wedding march; Miss Irene Jones sang, "Because." About one hundred guests were present. Mr. and Mrs. Bendel will be at home in Sarnia.

Conference Minutes

NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN.—At Pleasant Lake Branch, near Shellbrook, July 19 to 22. A very enjoyable time was spent, the Spirit being enjoyed by all, especially in the prayer services. The following district officers were present: James Pycock, district supervisor; W. J. Cornish, president; Eva Land, secretary; and Pearl Irwin, chorister. On Friday evening the Sunday School Department held a very good program entitled, "In which we got even with the preachers." The Sunday school officers present were: A. J. Cornish, district supervisor; A. H. Tomlinson, assistant superintendent; Grace Huggert, secretary. John W. Rushton, J. J. Cornish, and several other visiting elders were present, who were appreciated very much. They delivered some fine sermons.

Nemo's Noddings

There was once war in heaven; so it may be expected that even in the church peace may at times ebb.

There is a line of a hymn which reads, "O watch and fight and pray"; but to some persons the three verbs are all spelled like the middle one.

God has said he will have a tried people, and there are some persons in the church who feel they have an especial assignment to see that officials do not fail to qualify on that line.

Business and religion will not mix, according to the belief of some; but a truly religious man ought to be able to transact business in a way to enhance both his business and his religion.

To strengthen Zion and expand her borders is the duty of the church and its members. To circulate false rumors and distrustful remarks about church officers and officials is scarcely the way to help increase the reputation of Zion for beauty and holiness.

A public official is at times wholly at the mercy of his friends; for unknown to him vicious rumors are set afloat which can only be stopped by the good offices of friends; and one enemy can by innuendo alone start more ugly rumors than a score of friends can stop.

Sometimes we use prayer as a means of escaping responsibility. We ask God to do something we should do for ourselves; and as we have thus put it up to him we think to free ourselves from responsibility if it is not done.

How many times we hear persons in prayer fervently exclaim, "Lord, make me what thou wouldst have me be," and yet see no evidence of their putting forth efforts to make themselves that.

To know what we should attain or become and fail to make consistent efforts to reach the goal is a sin of negligence; while earnest and persistent efforts in climbing higher becomes a spiritual asset.

To aspire to great power for selfish ends is non-Christian and detestable; but desire to become great in serving others is commendable and Christian.

What finer spur to achievement in personal preparation for great work than the idea that qualification for great service to the community becomes a measure of our power to love God, for love of God issues in service where needed.

Brutus, when he was nerving his arm to strike Cæsar, fain would cloak his envy by claiming to strike in the interests of the people. How often in state, in church, and in business organizations, officials are the targets of shafts aimed by envious persons who would cloak their real motivations under the claim of acting "in the interests of democracy."

What Are Your Chances?

25 to 1, or 2500 to 1

Statistics show that one out of every twenty-five with a college training or its equivalent wins success in a big way. Only one out of twenty-five hundred without a college training or its equivalent wins this big success. What are the odds in your favor?

A Sharp Ax!

Is Your Ax Sharp or Dull?

It has been well said that an educated man has a sharp ax in his hand, and an uneducated man a dull one. The purpose of a college education is to sharpen the ax to its keenest edge.

No Time Lost in Sharpening

The man who has a forest to clear realizes the importance of sharp tools. Time spent wisely in sharpening is his best investment, because it leads to greater efficiency. So it is with an education. It has been proven conclusively that a college training pays. Education aids nature in the development of the physical, intellectual, and moral faculties of man. It adds to his perfection, his happiness, and does not leave his social destination to mere chance.

The Man With a Plan Succeeds

Plan your career! A general studies the country, considers the line of march, takes account of his supplies and equipment, calls into consultation critics of the plan, because he knows that conquest or captivity depends upon a plan. So it is with you—young man, young woman—whoever you may be. A plan determines whether you will succeed or fail, whether you will be master or servant. The difference between economic independence and industrial slavery is a plan—an education if you please.

To Fear Is Cowardly

Fear is considered to be one of the primal emotions in man. Its accompanying action is flight or the preparedness to get away from the thing that frightens. It seems to be a thing that is developed after we come into this world. The possibilities of fear are present, but fear itself is a thing which is cultivated or arrested in life. Babies are not inherently afraid of anything, but soon after their advent into this world fear is developed in connection with things about them. A baby is not afraid of a snake until he has been taught the snake will hurt him, or of the dark until something of danger has been attached to darkness.

"For God hath not given us the spirit of fear: but of power and of love and of a sound mind."—2 Timothy 1:7.

Later in life the child learns to distrust anything which is strange to him for it might hurt him. He becomes afraid of things he does not understand.

"Fear God," we have been told. But this does not mean that fear should be attached to God himself and that we should flee from him or draw apart. Instead it means we should fear things that are not of God for they destroy us. Draw close to God and fear what lies away from him is the interpretation that the expression should mean.

Formerly people were in all probability afraid of God for to them God was wholly unknown and the unknown calls forth fear. But to-day when men are coming into closer contact with God, they know him better and fear is attached not to him but to things that are not of him.

Fear is not only to be applied to our attitude toward God. It enters into our life every day. One of the most prevalent forms of fear is superstition. This is a social heritage which is taught the child by those who do not understand. Some people will not walk under a ladder or break a mirror because they are superstitious, afraid of "bad luck." This dominates their actions because they are ignorant of what the actual consequences are. The real danger of walking under a ladder is that it might fall, and the "bad luck" of breaking a mirror depends upon the value of the mirror.

Fear also enters into the modern thought. Psychology is "feared" by many religious people. Why? Because they do not know what it is all about. It is the unknown and therefore a thing to be afraid of.

Fear is cultivated and grows in proportion to the lack of knowledge of a person. The man who is always learning is unafraid, while the man who shuts progress out of his life is a coward. He is afraid.

"God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, of love and a sound mind."

Where God has given a sound mind let there be also love and power. These things grow by use. If a person never tries to love his neighbor his love will never grow to astounding proportions. If he never puts forth the effort to succeed he will not know the joy of power. Only the athlete knows the divine feeling of exaltation at the power of his body, only the thinker can reach the intellectual heights which give the greatest satisfaction of his power of thought, while only the deeply religious can sense the Spirit of God in all its power resting upon the soul of man.

While power and love must be developed, fear is the foe that every man must overcome in his own heart. In the words of Reverend Raymond C. Knox, "whoever fails to bear witness to the truth, whoever keeps silent in the presence of wrong, whoever yields his principles of honor under the pressure of circumstances, whoever stands faltering and faithless before some lofty enterprise, is the slave of fear."

Within you is the gift of power and love and of a sound mind. These are of God. But opposed to them is the man-made product, fear. It will strive to make success a failure, to cause a doubt as to the powers of attainment, and prey upon the soundness of mind.

But life to you is what you make it in proportion to what God gave you. Success is yours if you only take it; you will not fail until you fail inside.

To follow Christ is to follow a victor in life's battle, a conqueror over suffering and death, through the completeness of his loyalty to the Great Companion. Hence the power which makes his teaching live; hence the driving force which makes his Gospel effective for the regeneration of society.—Religious Perplexities.

Prevention of Crime

The theories of crime have changed considerably in the past several centuries. In the first instance crime was repaid by revenge, only the avenger gave a larger measure of the punishment than would have been justified by the crime itself. The next step was the theory as expressed in "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth." A further step toward civilization was taken when men were removed from society as a protection to it, but the final advancement to date came when men who are marked as criminals are isolated and are supposed to be given a chance to build a character suitable for living in society, a process of regeneration as it were.

But now is advanced a theory which is being put into practice, that brings the dealings with crime up to a Christian standard. It is not punishment that we desire but prevention. As long as men dealt with the crime, the only form of protection possible for society was punishment. But when men are able to deal with humans, then prevention can be administered.

A demonstration of this theory is found in the Kansas City Boys' Hotel and the Bonnie Brae Farm, Millington, New Jersey. Everybody knows of the work done in Denver by Judge Ben Lindsey, and it is the outgrowth of his pioneer work that such institutions as mentioned above have come into existence.

What would you do with a boy who was, say, about aged twelve, and who was brought into juvenile court on a charge of stealing? The old system would have relegated him to a reform school which in fact is a crime school where the boy is not reformed into a good citizen but instead made into a potential criminal. The new theory of crime would cause a judge to inquire into the life of that boy. In most cases something of the following evidence will be found. John had a stepmother who disliked him and who constantly nagged at him, beat him and made things generally uncomfortable for him. His father was not possessed of a highly intelligent mind nor an over religious character, so John found little sympathy from that quarter. One day he could stand it no longer, so finding some money around home, he "skipped the country" and went as far as he could go. Of course he was apprehended and brought to the juvenile court as a thief. What would you do?

Judge Porterfield of Kansas City would send John to the Boys' Hotel and Judge Osborne of Newark, New Jersey, would get John into the Bonnie Brae Farm.

Now the Boys' Hotel is a beautiful building where everything is bright and cheerful and as homelike as possible. It was sponsored by the Rotary Club of Kansas City and a certain Bob Gees, Judge Porterfield, and others. It grew out of a need such as is presented in the story of John, and so far is satisfactorily meeting that need.

In the hotel is a fine library, a large auditorium where entertainment can be given which will attract the boys instead of the many unhealthy amusements in town. Also a gymnasium and swimming pool are special attractions. Several large classrooms are provided where night classes are arranged for boys who cannot go to school in the daytime because of work. A cafeteria where good food is served and clean tables conducive to refined manners are also features of the hotel.

The smaller boys go to school and their expenses are allowed. The older boys work at jobs in the city and pay part or all of their hotel expenses which of course are very moderate. The older boys have rooms of their own, small but clean and attractive, while the small boys live in dormitories, several boys in one room.

The best part of all is that there are no guards around, yet the supervision is efficient. This unconscious discipline is the height of perfected methods, making conscious, apparent discipline unnecessary.

This is where John would go and he would grow up into a fine citizen instead of a disgruntled criminal. He did not need reforming but his parents did, yet they were outside the reaches of the law. John needed a chance and in the Boys' Hotel he could get it.

The Bonnie Brae farm is unlike the Boys' Hotel in that it is a regular farm. The boys may stay there or leave if they wish, but they usually stay. Equipped with everything a model farm should have, and in addition things which attract boys such as a swimmin' hole, this farm is an ideal place to live. The boys go to school part of the time and work on the farm part of the time.

Behind this farm is the support of the Kiwanis Club of Newark and other organizations. Other cities probably have such places but the two mentioned are most outstanding.

If more money were spent on crime prevention, less would have to be spent on its punishment.

Souvenir Leavers

A clean-up, and at the same time a round-up was conducted recently in the New York parks. The clean-up was for papers and trash left by picnickers on the grounds after their wooded repast and the round-up consisted in the arrest of offenders. A proper lecture and fine was imposed upon these thoughtless souvenir leavers.

We trust it will serve as a lesson to others in New York, and wish that its influence might be felt elsewhere in the United States.

As a Nation we are prone to scatter evidence of our good times to the four winds, cluttering up our parks and playgrounds, and thoughtlessly dirtying up our cities. It seems to be a very general American habit to leave a trail of disorder behind our picnicks, and when anyone is reprimanded concerning his offense he is usually very indignant.

It is a mark of good citizenship to see joy seekers also considerate of the public interest by picking up stray papers or gathering together into a trash barrel the residue of a picnic lunch. Any city or town that conducts a drive against paper scatterers ought to have the support of every intelligent citizen.

The many picnics now being held on the Campus in Independence and the many social gatherings on the grounds will tell the tale of a thoughtful or thoughtless people. It is an easy matter to keep the grounds of the Campus, or any other park, clean if each will do his part, while on the other hand great expense is incurred when the gardeners have to do the work the picnickers should have done.

We earnestly hope that the people of Zion as well as those in any other city where there is civic pride, will keep the city clean and beautiful and set an example for others to follow.

Isolation

Absolute isolation of the person from members of the group is unthinkable and impossible. If a babe were separated from its mother at the earliest possible moment and allowed to grow up in isolation as an animal might grow, nevertheless the influence of the mother on the early years of that child's life would be felt as long as the child lived whether isolated from other people or not. So isolation, even though considered as far back in human life as possible, is not absolute. It can only be relative.

It was an early belief in the Christian church and prevalent throughout the Middle Ages that to be near God one must draw apart from the world. Hence great monasteries and convents grew up where men and women entered to be away from the contacts of the world. To-day there is evidence of but one good result of this isolation, and that is that some of the early and priceless manuscripts were preserved in the monasteries during a time when there was an intellectual darkness over all Europe. These were spared when others were destroyed by the enemies of knowledge. The effect of religion upon the world was not felt during this period of isolation and not until later during the Reformation when the theory of isolation was overturned did people again respond to the stimulus of religion in their lives.

God and the Father is this . . . to keep himself unspotted from the world." A strict and old interpretation of the passage would be to isolate oneself from the world, to shun worldly associations, to draw apart and live a life of solitude. But even before we accept such a doctrine the Inspired Version corrects that thought by reading, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this . . . to keep himself unspotted from the vices of the world." This recognizes not only the impossibility but also the undesirability of complete isolation.

The isolation desired of an individual is that which removes him from the contacts with the "vices" of the world. What those "vices" are must be determined by the social standards of the day, the ethics of his religion and the intelligence of the individual himself. Thus what is isolation for one will not be isolation for another. Certain physical and mental defects and differences in and of themselves tend to separate the individual from the group. The physically handicapped are frequently unable to participate in certain human activities on equal terms with their fellows. The idiot and imbecile are obviously debarred from normal communication with their intelligent associates. On the other extreme is the genius who knows only the isolation of eminence.

As with individuals, so it is with the group. A certain amount of isolation is necessary because it is natural, but complete isolation is as undesirable as it is impossible.

The solidarity of the group implies a certain amount of isolation from other groups and persons as a necessary condition of its existence. Membership in a group, the church for example, makes for increasing contacts within the circle of participants, but decreasing contacts with persons without. Isolation is for this reason a factor in the preservation of individuality and unity.

To withdraw from the world means that I take with me all the world has given me, the good along with the bad, and take the benefits unto myself. It is selfishness of the highest degree for I offer nothing to the world. On the other hand to withdraw from the sins of the world but remain in contact with the world means that I bring all the good that is in me and find joy in service to humanity. If I have drawn close to God what will it avail me if I cannot help others to see God as I have seen him?

Isolation is relative to service, for where humanity is served isolation decreases, and where social contacts are not possible, isolation creeps in.

Isolation, or the doctrine of saving one's own soul, has been replaced by service, or the doctrine of saving the souls of others.

Problems of the Churches

A questionnaire was recently sent out by a religious paper regarding the problems and difficulties confronting the churches of to-day and also regarding the successes. The Christian Century reviews the results of the questionnaire which throws some light on the views held by the ministers of the various churches.

The chief hindrances to the accomplishment of the work of the churches are first, that "leading" people attend only once a day; second, Sunday evening has a small attendance; third, a lack of denominational spirit; fourth, failure to take religious papers; and fifth, several other objections such as dancing (with some additional comment as "some of our most faithful workers dance") and the movies (with the notation here that "This is the worst curse"). Finally lack of training in giving, covetousness, and general indifference are given as objections.

Among the successes may be listed, good attendance, "picture shows knocked out of business," "church keeps up on pastor's salary," good contributions, many conversions and "a spiritual church."

It seems that the movies is a problem in most of the churches and plays a part in the successes as well as the failures. Some of the leading churches are beginning to realize that the motion picture is not a curse but that when properly utilized is one of the greatest mediums for reaching the public. We wish to refer here to the outdoor motion pictures presented on the Campus in Independence where great crowds are drawn to the social services and where a good selection of pictures makes for the betterment of the community educational and recreational life.

Contributions, training to give, and ministers' salaries come under the financial system in use. Free will offerings still seem to be the main source of revenue for the church. With few exceptions the tithe and idea of stewardships have not yet been brought into usage. When tithes and stewardships, as we understand them, are functioning properly, there will be no cry for contributions. God's law is perfect and when allowed to function will take care of all things that are now to us problems.

Small attendance may be due to a lack of sense of duty, but in many cases it is due to poor preaching and liresome services. This is what may appear to be a lack of denominational spirit, although it is a known fact that when religious bodies have determined to "hang together" to "clean up the town" or do some other service which takes concerted action, the result has invariably been one of success. Perhaps there is not the conviction that is necessary to make men act as one in affairs of public interest.

These problems and many others are common to all churches. Some churches are solving them in one way; others are handling them in another. They are problems which come up for consideration at some time and must be met. More thought and discussion are necessary before we are ready to meet successfully these problems.

Honor

Honor is that moral force which binds an individual to any particular group, the group representing an alliance of persons bent upon the accomplishment of some certain ideal. An individual may belong to many groups and his honor in each group distinguishes his actions in that group from any of the others.

For instance, a man may belong to a certain church, and so long as he casts his lot with that church his honor binds him to its ideals. At the same time he is in business, and his honor to business ethics binds him to his business associates. His honor may be strong on one hand and weak on the other, as in the case of the world when honor in business is often considered lightly.

The essential thing is the specific idea of honor in narrow groups—the family honor, the community honor, the church honor, the business honor, and even the "honor among thieves." The honor of any individual is the sum of the many honors he displays by belonging to many groups. One may preserve honor in the family and forfeit honor in business. One's honors are independent of each other.

Sociologically speaking, an honorable man is one whose sum of honors totals highly. If he is honorable in every walk of life he is to be considered as above the man who is honorable in a smaller number of things. Nevertheless, if a man is dishonorable in one walk of life he does not thereby become dishonorable in others.

Through an appeal to honor, society preserves itself. By the demands upon its members contained in the group standard of honor, the group retains its unified character and its distinctness from other groups within the same association.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has an honor which distinguishes it from all other churches within the same association, that is Christianity. This honor must be kept by the members if the church is to remain distinct. Breaking the honor of the church impairs its foundation. It is not an individual's right. It is a group responsibility to keep the faith. Severing connections from the church is allowable, but destroying that honor which binds the individual to the church and which makes it possible for it to be a distinctive organization is not possible.

Radio sermon by A. B. Phillips, delivered at Independence, Missouri, May 27, 1923.

In our study of religion we learn that nearly all cults teach some principles that we heartily indorse. That organization which maintains most fully the principles which we recognize to be divine, or which appear best adapted to progress and development toward the realization of our highest aims and ideals, offers us the means of cooperatively expressing our best endeavor in the fullest measure. In all the ages of human experience history records no teachings which are comparable with those set forth by Jesus of Nazareth. They are fundamental to life itself in its most rational expression, and constitute the only true basis of growth into happiness and ideal achievement. Though they are wholly concrete and practical, they are also supremely lofty and inspiring to the soul. One of the first and fundamental teachings of the Savior was the doctrine that his church and the kingdom of God are one.

The Church Is a Department of God's Kingdom

Jesus said: "I will build my church." The church does not trace its origin to man, but to Christ, and was designed to stand as the agency by which the kingdom of God is represented and promoted on earth. Its laws are therefore not subject to the caprice of man, and cannot be changed by man. They can only be accepted or rejected by him. The church organization forms a part of the great kingdom of God, of whom the Apostle Paul affirms "the whole family in heaven and on earth is named." Even the name of the church was confirmed upon it by the Lord, as many Bible texts abundantly show, and is not subject to change by human agency. There is a most important reason to be found in this divine ownership. That reason lies in the purpose for which the church was instituted. The object of God in bringing into existence the church was and is the salvation of man. What this means should be easy for even a child to understand.

Salvation means to be freed from sin and error, and to acquire righteousness and truth. This involves the attitude and purpose of the individual concerned, by which he exercises his choice and agency, and makes possible the operation of the power of God in his life, upon which the application of the sacrifice and atonement of Christ is based. Jesus said: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness." To choose wrong leads to bondage, and in bondage no one can be saved.

The result of salvation is beyond our present full comprehension, and makes possible that happiness which shall never end, because the conditions producing it shall never cease nor wane. True happiness never comes from sin, selfishness, or unworthy motives, but is the result of right doing and thinking, kindness, and love. It therefore means a higher concept and purpose, expressed in a higher life.

Character is the supreme test of citizenship in the kingdom of God, and is expressed by obedience to the divine laws. Our study of the laws of nature reveals how perfect and wonderful in their operation are natural laws, by which order and development in the physical world are secured and made certain. So the laws of human progress are revealed in the divine will. God seeks the growth of the soul, so that man may become fit to associate with the supreme intelligence and participate in celestial activities. To attain to this loyal citizenship in the divine kingdom will comply with his laws, which are necessary to the stability of the divine government and the accomplishment of its purposes.

Christianity Is Older Than Human History

The Jews looked for a coming Messiah because this hope was expressed by and through all the prophets prior to the Savior's advent. This fact is not only clearly stated by Paul and other New Testament writers, but is found in the writings of the Old Testament prophets as well. It is therefore clear that Christianity was not a new concept nineteen centuries ago. A study of the Scriptures will show that it was taught in the times of Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and the prophets of other ages. The progressive plan of God had provided for it from the beginning of the world, and in fact was conceived in heaven before the world was made. The writer of the book of Hebrews gives expression to the inquiry: "What is man that thou art mindful of him." This inquiry is answered to one who understands the wonderful nature of man's relationship toward God, and the eternity of that relationship.

The eternity of the universe is a mystery that no human mind may fully grasp. No one can conceive the time when nothing existed, or even comprehend the possibility of such a condition, and the scriptures do not teach such a notion, which originated in human philosophizing rather than in sound doctrine. The universe and intelligence have existed from all eternity, and will continue without ceasing throughout all ages, worlds without end. Forms may and do change, but substance is eternal. We may therefore understand why it was Christ said to God: "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." For Christ, who came into the world, preexisted in the spiritual realm as an intelligent being, and Paul tells us that it was by him the worlds were made. So, also, he states that "as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same." (Hebrews 2: 14.)

In the probation of man on earth he is being tested. What we are, and the use we now make of life, determine what we shall become in the life beyond our earthly career. The station we shall occupy is to be according to our faithfulness here. For this reason Paul tells us that "if any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss," but if it endure, he shall receive a reward according to what he has done. Thus God will judge man according to his deeds and purposes. To provide for a just measure of reward to every man, the scriptures tell us that there are three glories designed for the future estate of the upright, and that these glories differ as do the glories of the sun, moon, and stars from each other.

In these provisions we discern the justice, impartiality, and loving-kindness of God. But we also see in his wonderful plan a wisdom marvelously grand, which reaches into unending futurity, and provides for all that the capacity and character of each individual can possibly receive and enjoy. With even a partial comprehension of this great truth we may better grasp the inspiring language of Paul when he tells us that "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." Life here is therefore closely related to life hereafter, and the divine purpose of the church is that we may better execute the provisions of the plan by which life in its highest and fullest measure may be assured to us. This necessitates an inflow of spiritual light by which the church may be constantly guided.

The Church Needs Revelations To-day

If God had never spoken to man there would be no knowledge of God in the world to-day. It is because revelations have come from him through various ages that we now have the Scriptures. Sacred history shows that in each age when the people of God rendered him proper service, they were entitled to receive from him through the prophets and inspired messengers such instructions as their own age might require. This principle has governed during the period covered by Bible history, embracing over four thousand years of time. The notion, which in the Dark Ages became prominent, that God had nothing more to say to the human race, is not supported by either Bible history and promises, the principle of God's impartiality to all men, or the demonstrated needs of the world to-day.

The inability of man to receive divine guidance is based only on his unwillingness to do the heavenly will, or upon a refusal to believe the sacred word. No other limitation has ever been set by God to his promise that he would speak to his people if they would heed his voice. Never in the history of the world has there been greater need for man to become receptive to divine guidance. The multiplied differences existing in the creeds of to-day prove that God was not the author of them all. In ancient times, when the people departed from the Lord, they were given a prophetic message from an inspired prophet sent to them, who would call upon them to return to the old paths. Such a message is needed to-day.

In the Christian church these messages were received from time to time, and in the wonderful book of Revelation we have a most remarkable illustration of this principle, in which God spoke to the churches of that time a message of warning, and of contingent promise if they would heed his voice. In the epistles of Paul the existence of prophets in the church is several times mentioned, and some of his instructions explain how the gift of prophecy is to be enjoyed by the Lord's people. The divine messages came in visions, dreams, by angels, and by audible voice, as recorded in the ancient sacred record. This rich endowment from the Father above is in harmony with his character as outlined in the Scriptures, and as experienced in the ages of long ago. It is in harmony with definite promises which he has left on record for us, and is also entirely consistent with the needs of mankind in every age of the world. It is the conviction of the Reorganized Church that God has spoken to-day as he has done in the past, and that his people are still entitled to receive further instructions as the requirements for them may arise.

The basic principles of Christianity, which include our supreme love of God, and love of neighbor as ourselves, must be put in better expression than card mottoes and repeated phrases. They must be lived in daily experience, before it can be truly said that the religion of Christ has been put to the test. The time has come to judge a religion by what it does, quite as fully as by what it says. It ought to be evident to all who consider the matter in seriousness, that failure to uphold and maintain the Christ ideals by the church constitutes a state of apostasy. What is true of the church collectively is equally true of the individual, for it is by the individual that the teachings of Christ must be demonstrated. This expression is provided for, however, by group activities as well as by the ordinary conduct of the true believer. The world has not yet consented to displace selfishness by altruism. It has argued that such a course would be impractical. But the centuries have not yet given us one example that shows such arguments to be sound. All the evidence directly tends to show otherwise. The greatest manifestations of selfishness and avarice have produced the most suffering and unhappiness, while the best expressions of the golden rule and of altruistic conduct have produced the greatest good and satisfaction. We read of an ancient time when the people of Zion dwelt in righteousness and were united in serving each other, thus demonstrating in a practical manner the higher rules of conduct. This is the goal of our religious ideals.

We Envision a Zion of Service

The religion of Christ deals with life in all of its phases. It reaches into the social and business affairs of life as a means of concrete expression. It is concerned with the health and recreational activities of the individual and the group, because it seeks to make the world better in all of its concerns, thus giving capacity for higher and fuller enjoyment and accomplishment. The time is past when religion is to be considered a thing apart from life. Religion is life. It is life lived in fullest measure. It is life in completeness, as contrasted from life in a contracted and narrow scope of experience. It comprehends the awakening and developing of every faculty possessed, until it responds to the divine in rendering increased service to others as well as to the self.

This concept of Christian expression involves the principle of cooperation by which the friction and consequent retardation of individual progress may be lessened and eventually eliminated. Experience shows that much of the striving of mankind is a striving against each other. This consumes much energy, and is a most extravagant waste of human powers. When men learn to work with each other instead of against each other life will be more rich, full, and happy, and will produce more abundantly of needful things. Properly to coordinate these cooperative forces is a secondary, though an important consideration.

It is the purpose of the church to maintain these ideals, and to provide means for their concrete expression by those of like purpose. Out of these ideals grow the activities of the church. To love our neighbor means cooperation for the good of all, which good returns to each through the exercise of this principle. God has lent us all the things of life, and we are his stewards in the use we make of them. This doctrine of stewardship is emphasized by the Reorganized Church, because it is the concrete expression of what Jesus taught should be our attitude toward God and toward each other. Only by deeds of righteousness can it be expected that the potency of Christ's message will be experienced, for his teachings have always proven their great worth whenever and wherever they have been fairly tested. To make both an individual and collective application of these sublimely great and supremely practical teachings is the cherished hope and ambition of the Saints.

A Great English Composer

By James R. Houghton

Henry Purcell, 1658-1695

Mr. Henry Purcell, called "the Bacon of Art," "the English Mozart," "that divine author," "sublime, beautiful, and ornamental," "the first of English musicians," and "a genius whose laurels will retain their freshness as long as his art shall endure," was born in the year 1658. The exact place of his birth has been disputed by various writers but it seems to be generally accepted that it was near Old Pye Street and Saint Anne's Lane in Westminster. At this intersection will be found three old dilapidated red brick houses. It is believed that in the third one resided the parents of England's great musical master. Here, according to tradition, the boy genius was born.

It is to be remembered that during this period Puritanism held irrepressible sway over England and Cromwell was at his ascendancy. Puritanism with its revolt "against luxury and corruption, had become blind to all beauty except the beauty of holiness, and deaf to all music except that of penitential psalms. Instruments in churches were regarded as profane, pagan, popish, idolatrous, dark, and damnable. Hence fanatical Puritans made their way into the cathedrals, cut down paintings, destroyed stained-glass windows, mutilated carvings, broke statuary, tore up gowns and surplices, and took down the organs. Few were left. The soldiers quartered in Westminster Abbey, pawned the pipes of the organ there, for pots of ale. Church books were burned. The organists were turned adrift, and obliged to earn a precarious living by giving lessons in private families. As Burney says: "The art of music, and indeed all arts but those of killing, canting, and hypocrisy, were discouraged."

So completely were the means of performing church music dissipated that when, after the Restoration, it was attempted to restore the old service, there were almost no organs, and only few organ builders in the kingdom. So few boys were found capable of singing in the choirs that the treble parts were either played on cornets or sung by men in falsetto. Boys were even "pressed" into a church service, much as men were forcibly enlisted into the king's navy. Such was the condition of affairs when Purcell was born. Surely, if England ever needed a leader to arise and effect a restoration it was at this time.

Story of His Life

His father was something of a musician and actor and served as a singer in the Royal Chapel under Charles II. Pepys refers to him as a "Master of Musique." When the boy was but six years of age his father died, whereupon he was adopted by his father's brother, Thomas. He was admitted to the boy's choir of the Royal Chapel under the capable leadership of Captain Cooke, the master-teacher of children. In the year 1672 Cooke was succeeded by Humphrey and it is generally conceded that the young Purcell learned much of the French form and style of music from him since he had studied under Lully, the great French composer. At the early age of eight years it is said that Purcell composed a piece of music for a special occasion at the Royal Chapel. The title-page read thus:

The address of the children of the Chapel Royal to the King, and to their Master, Captain Cooke, on His Majesty's birthday, A. D. 1670. Composed by Master Purcell, one of the children of the said chapel.

Again we are informed that his famous "Macbeth" music was written during his fourteenth year. Thus the boy prodigy worked on, unceasing in his labors. He has been compared to Mozart in that his genius was of a highly developed order, exceedingly vivid and inspirational, requiring but little training for its development.

In the year 1680 we are told that his kind-hearted teacher resigned his position as organist of Westminster Abbey in favor of the young artist of unusual possibilities. During his experience at Westminster Abbey he composed his famous opera "Dido and Æneas." Mr. Josias Prast, a theatrical manager, was the principal of a "Boarding School for Young Gentle-Women at Chelsey, removed from Leicester Fields." Here the opera was first performed with apparent success. It is reported that Purcell sang one of the leading roles himself.

The following year at the age of twenty-three Purcell married Frances Peters, daughter of "Thomas Peters, Gentleman, of Saint Clement's Danese." To this union six children were born, three of which preceded him in death.

Purcell loved companionship, and above all a good jovial time. "Lock, his father's old friend, loved him dearly, and was never content to spend a merry evening without Harry." One of the priceless manuscripts that we have to-day is one by Lock. It is as follows:

Dear Harry: Some of the Gentlemen of Mis Majestie's Musick will honour my poor lodgings this evening, and I would have you come and join them; bring with thee, Harry, thy last anthem, and also the canon we tried over together at our last meeting. Thine in all kindness,

M. Lock.

Purcell's compositions are so numerous that space will not permit the enumeration of them. A summarized list of his works shows that he composed nearly seventy-five anthems and church pieces; twenty-five hymns and miscellaneous music; some fifty operas; songs, duets, trios, and rounds upwards of two hundred; many odes, and pieces for piano-forte as well as organ.

Perhaps it will not be amiss to relate this story about one of Purcell's pieces which clearly demonstrates the greatness of his genius.

One day Queen Mary, being in the mood for music, sent for Purcell, Gostling, and Arabella Hunt, the great soprano—she to whom Congreve wrote the ode: To Mistress Arabella Hunt, singing. Purcell was the accompanist, and as a matter of courtesy alone, might reasonably have expected to be asked for one of his own compositions, especially as he had written many for Mistress Hunt. To his chagrin and the amusement of the other artists, the queen's first request was for the popular country ballad, "Cold and raw"!

The queen's birthday followed upon this episode, and Purcell, in setting to music Sir Charles Sedley's ode, "Love's goddess sure was blind," in honor of the occasion, built his bass upon the air of "Cold and raw"! So marked was this melody that the queen could not fail to recognize it, and she was duly surprised. William H. Husk says: "Purcell, nettled at finding a common ballad preferred to his music, but seeing it pleased the queen, determined that she should hear it again when she least expected it!"

Purcell died on the eve of the "Feast of Saint Cecilia," the patron saint of music. November 21, 1698. A vivid account of his death is given by Cummings.

In a house on the west side of Dean's Yard, Westminster, in a darkened chamber, the dying musician was lying on the couch, in full possession of all his faculties, as he himself had just said in his will, but with a thorough knowledge that he was about to pass into the land of shadows. He could possibly hear some faint murmurs of the evensong service wafted from the old Abbey close by, perhaps some well-remembered phrase of one of his own soul-stirring anthems. The psalm of the day which would be chanted at that evening service concluded with words which he had set to music the world was not likely soon to forget—music which still remains unsurpassed in truthfulness and dignity. A more noble or a more fitting death chant for a child of song it would be difficult to find.

"Blessed is the Lord God of Israel,
From everlasting world without end,
And let all the people say Amen."

The music which he had composed for Queen Mary's funeral a short time before was played at his own funeral service.

The great theologian and poet, Wesley, said of him:

Purcell bears a close connection with Shakespeare in his rare faculty of exciting mental emotions of every kind by his magical and marvelous modes of expression on all occasions.

Again Burney gives expression to these sentiments:

While the Frenchman is loud in the praise of a Lulli and a Rameau; the German in that of a Handel and a Bach; and the Italian of a Palestrina and a Pergolisi; not less is the pride of an Englishman in pointing to a name equally dear to his country, for Purcell is as much the boast of England in music, as Shakespeare in the drama, Milton in epic poetry, Locke in metaphysics, or Sir Isaac Newton in mathematics and philosophy. As a musician he shone not more by the greatness than by the diversity, by the diversity than the originality of his genius, nor did the powers of his fancy prove detrimental to the solidarity of his judgment. Upon the name of Purcell we dwell with delight, and are content to identify with his the musical pretensions of our country.

England's Greatest Composer

Much may be said of the art of Purcell. First of all he is to be recognized as England's greatest composer. His style is very unique in that he attempted to work out a relationship between words and their tonal embodiment. Prior to his time words were considered as mere vehicles for musical expression, but he seemed to think that all possible strength should be given the words in the way of chord arrangement and melodic progression. Each word was studied and given its proper accent so as to make it as conspicuous as possible. Of this particular work, Purcell says:

Both music and poetry may excel apart, but surely they are most excellent when they are joined, because nothing is then wanting to either of their proportions for thus they appear like Wit and Beauty in the same person.

To Carrisimi Purcell was undoubtedly indebted for certain examples of form and style of expression which he used extensively in his work. Purcell made innovations in harmony which were peculiar to his own inventive genius. He varied rhythms so as to bring out the desired effect in the text. He was especially inclined to create great effects and stunning climaxes. His melodic progressions are very unique in their quaintness, oftentimes approaching the old Florentine monodies in resemblance. One of his characteristics is to place the accent upon a weak beat in the measure.

The Anthem

His anthem, "Remember not, Lord, our offenses," was composed for the festival of Saint Cecilia, the patron saint of music, November 22, 1683. It is for a chorus of five parts. The first eight measures of the anthem are written in familiar or hymn style. The composition begins in A minor, modulates to various related keys and finally ends in A major. The central portion is unique in its contrapuntal development, i. e., one melody is superimposed upon another the second of which is like the first. This style of treatment continues for some eighteen measures, where the anthem swings back into the familiar style and proceeds with an ascending melodic line to the close. Perhaps the most characteristic features of this anthem are the unique modu-lations from one key to another; secondly accents placed on weak beats to bring out the desired effects in the text; third, the skilled contrapuntal treatment of the middle portion of the anthem, a very good example of close counterpoint; fourth, the last few measures closing not in A minor but A major as if to say that the expressed desire of the anthem had been answered in the closing cadence banishing all doubt and suspended fear.

Children Pay Tithing

By Benjamin R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop

It is gratifying to us from time to time to receive the contribution of those who are young in the church, for we realize that habits are formed in early life which have a distinct bearing upon character building, and this is the thing in which we are chiefly interested—in receiving the tithes and offerings of God's people. The following letters which have been received during the last week are interesting to us, and we believe will be encouraging to the Saints everywhere. You may not realize what effect the paying of tithing will have in tying your children's interest to the Lord's work. Every time they do this they are reminded that they are a part of the kingdom of God, and the desire to be active supporters of it will increase as the days go by. We are therefore anxious that the children of Latter Day Saints everywhere shall be taught to observe this feature of the gospel law.

Am inclosing $1 for tithing. Our public school gave a music memory contest. The one to receive first honor was given $10 prize. I promised the Lord that if I won I would give one tenth as tithing. So I am glad to send the $1, as I won the first prize.

I am thirteen years old, but have never lived where there was a Latter Day Saint Church, but mother and father and my grandmother, Mrs. I. P. Baggerly, are all members, and we study our Sunday school lessons at home, and I enjoy it very much. I love to read the Religio quarterly also.

FRANCES SKINNER.

I am a boy ten years old, and I have earned ten dollars this summer, so I want to pay my tithing, for my mother has taught me it is one of God's laws. I want to be baptized this summer if Brother Knisley comes to visit us.

BERNARD NELSON.

The House of Laity of the National Assembly of the Church of England has approved a condensed version of the Ten Commandments, omitting such statements as "The Lord thy God is a jealous God visiting the sins of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation," and condensing to ten short concise statements. But they have added an eleventh and twelfth: "Love God with all thy heart," "Love thy neighbor as thyself." These much abbreviated and quite terse commandments have not yet been passed upon by the House of Bishops or the Clergy.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Church Becomes Community Center

On a drizzly evening in May a crowd of five or six thousand people gathered in and about Saint George's church in New York City for what was called a parish party. Nothing was sold except refreshments at cost. There was no appeal for money, or for church attendance or for the support of some particular cause. "There was just an assemblage of human beings," notes the Outlook, "gathered together to enjoy one another's presence and the color and the brightness and the music. The church, facing the mid-town East Side open space known as Stuyvesant Square, was the host, and these people were the church's guests, coming together to practice neighborliness, good understanding, and mutual acquaintance and respect. In one corner was the Seventh Regiment Band, in another the New York City Police Band. Here was a Maypole, there a folk dance. The streets were decorated and illuminated. And amid it all stood the church, the benign, spiritual friend of all.

"To some who went there the scene appeared like a picture taken out from the best of the life of the Middle Ages, when the church was the source of all that was good and hopeful as well as all that was solemn and true in life.

"This parish party is a very different thing from what many churches practice. It was not an attempt to compete with the movies or the theaters or the dance halls, to entice people into church. It was not bait thrown out to attract fish into the church's net. It was the natural expression of one side, and an important side, of religion. Indeed, it was evidence that here in this church at least religion is conceived, not as a part of life, not as something that is added to life, but as life itself related to what is best and highest for which men can hope and toward which men can aim."

The Outlook remarks that it is not likely that other churches can do just exactly what Saint George's has done, but the example has been set and the spirit ought to be followed in churches throughout the Nation in city and country alike.

International Advertising Convention

America entertained the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at the nineteenth annual Convention held at Atlantic City, New Jersey, in June.

British delegates outnumbered those from other foreign countries, having a representation of one hundred and fifty persons interested in advertising and publicity.

Other representations were from Austria and India, coming over 12,000 miles and spending approximately five weeks on the way for the purpose of attending the convention.

Among the subjects discussed were photoengraving, or the use of pictures in advertising; retail shops and church advertising; community advertising; theater advertising; public utilities advertising; and the relation of education to advertising.

A further account of the convention is given in the Outlook:

"It may be said, we think, that the development of advertising as a profession based on psychology, science, and art, with a code of ethics as high-minded and exacting as that of lawyers or physicians, is a production of American industrial life. It is certainly one of the good things that 'chasing the almighty dollar' has produced. Advertising men are the liaison officers, so to speak, that bring, not only the separate industries of each country; but the industries of various countries together. The thought was presented by various speakers at the convention that the getting together of men actively engaged in the promotion of business, and concerned in its success, will do a great deal for the betterment of international relations, possibly in some ways even more than the contact of Government officials, who are necessarily more or less detached from the normal commercial life of their respective countries.

"The convention quite properly had a technical and professional function, but it was a good deal more than a mere business-getting conference; it was really an international gesture."

Suggestions for Church Advertising

In an article appearing in the Christian Work, Reverend P. B. Hill, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, San Antonio, Texas, gives an account of the advantages he finds in church advertising.

The business end of the church is not different from the business end of any other organization, he says. Other organizations sell through proper advertising, so why not the church? The church has lost greatly in the past by its failure to present properly its appeal to the public through the press and other media of advertising. The church has more to offer the world than any other organization, and its hesitancy to use the means of advertising for spreading its message must be counted among its failures.

Reverend Hill continues:

"I have always believed in the church advertising in every legitimate way, and wherever I have seen this tried it has been characterized by good results. My church has a contract for space each week in the morning and one of the evening papers, and is also using other methods of publicity.

"There are two things to be considered in the matter of getting results from church advertising.

"I. The results to be expected. These are, generally speaking, five.

"1. Increased attendance upon the services. This may not come in one grand rush, but it would be unfortunate were the increase to come that way.

"2. Increased gifts. Where a church has entered in a real way into an advertising program, the offerings have invariably increased. The businesslike aspect of such advertising naturally prompts men to give to such a church in a businesslike way.

3. "Increased enthusiasm.

"4. A general interest in religion and in the church. Apart from the direct results accruing to the individual church that is advertising there is a reaction on the rest of the churches of every faith and order. The man or woman who is inspired by an ad to become a Christian, to unite with the church or to lead a better life will often go to the minister of the church or faith of his or her parents or friends.

"5. There are also intangible results such as the inspiration that goes out to all sections of the country through the ads in the newspapers. Other churches are aroused to use practical methods, and individuals are challenged to think of the things for which the church stands.

"II. Four things must be kept in mind if you would get results from advertising:

"1. The truth. Robert Burns says in one of his poems:

"'Even ministers ha'e been kenned in holy rapture
A rousing whid to vend and nail it wi' Scripture.'

"If truth is essential to advertising in general it is peculiarly so to the church.

"2. The character of the advertisement. There is a dignity that should characterize all ads, and this reacts with telling force upon the people you are hoping to reach. The form of the ad should be studied with care if it is to make an impression. The type to be used should be carefully considered, the crowding, overwording and misplaced emphasis should be avoided in newspaper ads. In other forms of advertising poor printing, unattractive covers and too lengthy presentation should be avoided. This phase of advertising takes time and thought, but it surely repays every effort.

"3. The place of the ad is important. Do not put your display ad on the church page. Only the ripe saints read that. Get it on the editorial page or on the sport page or wherever the people you want to interest are accustomed to read.

"4. The kind of advertising. Each church must discover what form of advertising is best adapted to its needs. I use the 'direct by mail method' with good results. The newspaper display ad is also effective. Blotters, attractive folders, free lithographed postcards of the church and the billboards as well as other methods are open. Our church contemplates the use of the billboard, special paper and other forms of advertising in the fall.

"Wonderful things are in store for the church that has a vital spiritual message for the age and that makes this fact known to the public by every form of legitimate advertising."

An Appeal for Peace

The International Christian Citizenship Conference recently held at Winona, Indiana, adopted the following statement which was cabled to the rulers of twelve nations in Europe:

"Humanity is staggered by the possibilities of another world war. Homes in every land, over which the shadow of sacrificial death still hovers, are saddened by the prospect of still further heartbreak and suffering. The people in these lands have already given millions of their sons in the belief that their supreme sacrifice would make the world safe for democracy, create a high idealism, and end war for all time. None of these hopes has been realized. Men hate each other as intensely as ever. Chaos reigns in every human relationship. Economic and political conditions have sunk to low levels. Nations have been guilty of promoting selfish and ignoble loyalties. Efforts have been made to avert the disaster which is inevitable if present tendencies continue. Every such method for adjusting these difficulties has failed.

"The time has come to try Christianity. It has never failed in any field when given a fair chance. And civilization is entitled to every opportunity to free itself from its present predicament. There is an inescapable obligation on the part of every nation to make its contribution to consummate this desired end, even at great sacrifice to itself. The nations of the world must depart from selfish individualism and inhuman isolation. They should unite in creating new standards which are based upon the teachings of Jesus. He must be acknowledged as the Supreme Arbiter in every national and international difficulty. Loyalty to him should be the chief desire of the nations. It should be recognized that nations are accountable to the same Christian principles as those which pertain to all Christian men and women as individuals. There is no double standard of morality and ethics—one for men and another for nations. There is only one morality, one honor, one righteousness.

"We believe that the state belongs to God, and that he is the ultimate source of all civil and political authority.

"We believe that the divine right to sovereignty and civil authority is vested in the nation, and that the nation is an intelligent moral entity which God holds responsible for the use of the sovereignty and authority which he has vested in it.

"We believe that God's judgments can be averted only by national repentance for sin and by national obedience to the laws of love and brotherhood and fair play, as taught by Jesus, and that such obedience will bring peace to the world, and a restoration of prosperity and happiness to all the peoples.

"We further believe that civil rulers are his ministers as certainly as are the rulers of the church, and that these rulers are directly and immediately responsible to him for their official conduct. It is because nations and rulers have held themselves above all moral law, becoming a law unto themselves, as far as their civil lives are concerned, that present-day world conditions have become so chaotic."

Now that the world is coming to realize that war is futile and every conflict must be more destructive than its predecessor, it is indeed time to try Christianity. The St. Louis Globe-Democrat asks, "How is that to be done?" and the answer may be found in the Pittsburgh Post "that a whole-souled application of the Golden Rule would speedily put the world on a permanent basis of peace."

Anti-Saloon League War

The war between the New York Anti-Saloon League and the State continues. William H. Anderson, president of the league, was indicted on charges of fraud in handling the league's money. However the directors of the league came to the defense of Mr. Anderson and declare the charges are the evidence of forces bent on killing supporters of prohibition.

An investigation by the legislature was recommended, and immediately the directors challenged the investigation as being unfriendly.

Press comments seem to regret such an action, because if the league's record is clear it should welcome investigation. However, the situation grows more complicated and the fight continues. The Christian Work says:

"William H. Anderson, of the New York Anti-Saloon League, charges that there are bankers to-day who are lending money to finance bootleg operations, just as there were bankers who gambled on warehouse receipts for whisky after prohibition was a certainty. They belong to the stripe that is trying to kill off the Anti-Saloon League because, unless they can bring to naught the effort of the people to compel the Government to be responsive to their moral convictions, these wealthy purchasers of politicians of both parties will find they have come to the end of their political overlordship. 'The kind of men who will pay bootleggers $150 a case for whisky, running the risk of damning the souls of their children as well as corrupting them into outlaws,' we quote Mr. Anderson, 'would make a scrap of paper of the Constitution of the United States, a failure of self-government, and a mockery of the moral leadership of the churches'—if they could."

Women Preachers

Women preachers continue to increase and make themselves noticed. The International Association of Women Preachers will hold its annual assembly in Chicago, August 28 to 30.

The program is announced by Miss Madeline Southard, Winfield, Kansas, the president, and appears in the Christian Work:

"Eight denominations will be represented on the program, and women from sixteen denominations are members of the association. The Reverend Victoria Booth C. Demarest, Chicago, and granddaughter of William and Catherine Booth, will speak on 'The Virgin Mary.' The Reverend Stella B. Irvine, Riverside, California, who is the national and world superintendent of the Sunday school work for the W. C. T. U., will speak on 'Women preachers: Why?' Miss Culla J. Vayhinger, Upland, Indiana, is in charge of the Americanization work for the W. C. T. U. and will speak on 'The woman preacher and the immigrant.' Brigadier Annie J. Cowden, Chicago, is in charge of social work for women in the Salvation Army in fifteen States. Her subject is 'The woman preacher and the outcast.' The Reverend Mary Lyon, Cleveland, Ohio, a missionary secretary of the Disciples of Christ, will speak on 'Women as home missionaries.' 'The woman preacher and the child' will be discussed by the Reverend May E. Bullock, Dayton, Ohio, in charge of children's work of the Sunday school board of the Christian Church. 'Echoes from the field' will be given by Miss Lee Anna Starr, Bellevue, Pennsylvania, of the Methodist Protestant Episcopal Church."

A Cold Winter

The public continues to suffer while the coal war is waged between the anthracite coal mine owners and miners. The two opposing groups of coal people are now supposed to be engaged in negotiations at Atlantic City, New Jersey, but if the negotiations continue without result during August the war between the operators and the miners will begin on September 1. Up to that day they will continue to observe the treaty which was made at the close of the last war.

The Outlook continues in explanation of the existing situation:

"On July 27 these two belligerent forces, temporarily at truce, broke off their parley. The negotiators of the mine workers demand that the operators not only recognize the Mine Workers' Union, but definitely provide for what is known as the 'check-off.' According to the 'check-off' the operators withhold from the wages of the mine workers whatever amount is required by the union for the payment of the miners' dues, assessments, and fines, and pay that amount into the union's treasury. The operators strenuously object to the check-off; for no belligerent willingly becomes a collector of taxes to be used for providing its enemy with munitions of war. Sometimes a belligerent is forced to do this, but only after defeat. It is rather humiliating to be required, not only to fortify oneself against one's enemy, but also to fortify one's enemy against oneself. The mine workers, however, are very powerful, and they can force a war if they choose. The operators are powerful too, for they control the supply of a limited but at present necessary resource. If operators and miners choose, they can break off their parley and start their fight next month.

"The 'check-off' is not the only subject of dispute, by any means, but at present it stands first on the list. Among other disputed points are wages. The operators would like to put in force a wage cut. The miners, on the other hand, are demanding a wage increase. Both sides expect to give way; but how far each side will yield and whether they will yield before or after a fight cannot be foretold."

In the meantime the consumers are anxiously awaiting the outcome of the dispute and wondering where their coal is coming from. Some communities are without a supply, and under the circumstances there is no assurance that such a supply is forthcoming.

The Coal Commission's report provided for seizure of the mines in time of stress, but the only action possible would be through a congressional law. Unless the President sees fit to call a special session, nothing can be done to relieve the situation this winter.

Some day people who now require coal and cannot get it will lose their patience, and then something will happen in the coal industry.

Protest Repeal of Child Labor Laws

A storm of protest throughout the country follows upon the act of the United States Supreme Court in invalidating the National Child Labor Law and the law establishing minimum wages for women. Chief Justice Taft has come to the defense of the court and attempted to answer its accusers in a speech on Memorial Day, although Justice Taft voted with the minority to uphold the laws.

Certain suggestions are being made regarding the function of the Supreme Court which would curtail its present powers. An article in the Outlook says regarding these suggested remedies:

"One of these remedies would require that no Congressional act could be declared unconstitutional except by a considerable majority, as six to three or seven to two. There are several objections to this remedy. One of them seems to us complete. It has been expressed by John W. Davis, former Ambassador to Great Britain, who points out that this would erect into a principle the practice of minority rule. Under this remedy a small minority would be able to prevent a law from being declared unconstitutional, which amounts to giving power to establish the validity of a law to a minority. This is a wholly wrong principle, and the objection to it should be regarded as decisive.

"Another remedy proposed is that Congress should have the right to overrule a decision of the Supreme Court by re-passing the law with a two-thirds majority. The objection to this, it seems to us, ought also to be decisive. The reason for a Constitution is that the people wish to have it as a legal protection against the errors or arbitrary will of their own representatives. If the Constitution itself can be interpreted by the representatives of the people, the Constitution is deprived of the reason for its existence.

"To put it in a familiar form: It is as if two athletic teams in contest with one another could by vote override the decisions of the umpire. If the Constitution is a valuable document, it should not be invalidated by a violation of its own principle. If it is not a valuable document, it should be abandoned altogether and not reserved as a meaningless institution. We do not think that the American people are ready yet to abandon their Constitution either directly or indirectly.

"Another remedy, or series of remedies, consists in the proposal to overcome a decision of the Court in each case by Constitutional amendment legalizing what the Court has disapproved. This has been proposed in the case of the Child Labor Law. It is likely to be proposed in the case of the Minimum Wage Law. The difficulty with this is that, if followed consistently, it would fill the Constitution with statutory provisions, and would to that extent change the Constitutional from an embodiment of principles to a collection of laws."

Much less radical than these proposals is that which Theodore Roosevelt made several years ago. He believed that when any State law was invalidated by a State court the people should have a right to pass upon the interpretation of the constitutional provision applied. If it would have been adopted, it would allow the people to say what their Constitution meant. This proposal was not intended to apply to Federal laws, although such application could be made.

One other remedy is suggested, and that is the "enactment of an amendment to the Constitution providing that in any case in which the police power of the State, invoked for the general welfare and public health, comes in conflict with constitutional provisions for the maintenance of property rights, the police power shall be supreme. In particular, this amendment should also provide that in cases in which a State, exercising its police power for public health, was placed at an economic disadvantage because of its police regulations, Congress under its authority to regulate interstate commerce could enact whatever legislation was necessary for the protection of that State against unfair competition by prohibiting interstate commerce in goods manufactured in violation of the police regulations."

Such remedies would be unnecessary if all the judges realized the flexible character of our Constitution and made their decisions fit the conditions of modern life instead of their ironclad interpretations of an inflexible law.

The Public and the Movies

The Committee on Public Relations had its beginning on June 22 of last year, when representatives of various civic, religious, educational and welfare organizations met at Mr. Will H. Hays's invitation to discuss the problem of the motion picture industry in relation to the public.

The committee began to function during last September by holding meetings and interviewing representatives of various organizations. The effort has been to bring about a better situation concerning motion picture production and public welfare. The committee is able to do this by acting as a channel of communication between the public and the industry, bringing to the attention of the industry the attitude of the public as represented by the committee.

The committee invites church organizations to use the committee in any way that occurs to them in their desire to increase the value of the motion picture. The address is 522 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The Oil Supply of the World

The United States is the greatest oil producing nation in the world, having produced last year 550,000,000 barrels in a world total of 850,000,000. But the figures are misleading, for seven eighths of the oil reserves lie outside the boundaries of this country. Only one eighth of the oil supply of the world is within the United States, yet we are exhausting our supply at a greater speed than the rest of the world.

"For years we have been prodigally wasteful in our methods of production" according to an article reviewed in the Christian Work.

"On an average less than twenty-five per cent of the oil underground has ever got into the pipe lines. And to-day the demand for gasoline is increasing so rapidly that we may face continually higher prices and perhaps an actual shortage. Our petroleum supply is not inexhaustible. And meantime we are discovering new ways to make it work. Ship after ship on the high seas is being changed from a coal to an oil burner. Land transportation is increasingly dependent on the same fuel. Already we are importing heavily to meet expanding needs. 'The United States' own reserve of oil is not illimitable,' said Sir John Cadman, chairman of the Inter-Allied Petroleum Council, during war days. 'On the contrary, one official survey after another during the past decade has definitely suggested that they are approaching exhaustion. . . . Before 1930 the United States may easily be relying upon foreign sources of supply for at least half, possibly more than half, of the oil demanded by her domestic requirements.' We do not ring the world with oil-bunkering stations and rich seaboard fields. On the other hand, says the Federal Trade Commission, 'a British steamer leaving New York for a voyage around the world, calling at every important point of Europe, along the Mediterranean, in India, the East Indies, Japan, the Philippines, Australia, and the west coast of North America, and then returning to New York through the Panama Canal, would find oil-bunkering stations operated by a member of the Royal Dutch-Shell group at every important port of call.' 'It appears obvious,' the commission adds, 'that a nation having widely distributed supply and storage facilities, and owning the means of distribution, will have certain advantage in world trade against one having a concentrated supply.' Meaning, of course, the United States. We are to-day the great producers. But the rest of the world has the great reserves. Seven eighths of the world's supply, presumably, lies outside our frontiers. And each day we have more imperative use for that eighth we own."

Cost of Living Increases

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, United States Department of Labor, has announced an estimate of the increase in the cost of living. The increase in the cost of food since 1913 is about forty-six per cent.

The percentage of increase is based on the average of the increases in the cities of the country selected as typical. The Outlook analyzes the situation as follows:

"The largest increase, fifty-six per cent, is shown by Richmond, Virginia. The smallest, thirty-one per cent, is shown by Portland, Oregon. Detroit and New York are next to the highest, and Los Angeles and Denver next to the lowest. Midway of the list are such cities as Saint Louis and Atlanta. Indications are, therefore, that the increase in food costs has been greatest along the Atlantic seaboard, least on the Pacific slope, and has ranged between the two in the interior."

The peak of high prices does not seem to have been reached, despite the ten-year increase for from May 15 to June 15 of this year about eight per cent of the selected cities showed increases ranging from three to less than one half of one per cent.

"During the year from June 15, 1922, to June 15, 1923, more than ninety-five per cent of the selected cities showed increases, the greatest being seven per cent, and the smallest less than one half of one per cent. A single city, Saint Paul, showed a decrease of one per cent."

It is apparent that the ordinary family will have to count the cost even more carefully than before. The family budget should allow for this increase and make provision accordingly.

The United States Mystery Ship

The latest word in naval architecture is the mystery ship, U. S. S. Langley. It is designed to carry an aircraft which can be launched from midocean and which can return safely to the mother ship.

According to the Outlook:

"The U. S. S. Langley, which only recently made her maiden voyage, is the first and for the present the only aircraft carrier in our fleet. She is an experimental ship—a mystery ship, she has been called—and her mission is partly to solve the problems incident to maintaining a large air force at sea as a strong aggressive arm of our navy. The first cruise of the Langley, which was begun early in January, was undertaken with the end in view of solving these problems."

Picture in your mind a flat deck covering the entire ship. At the side and to the rear is a smokestack which does not interfere with the landing or starting of planes from the deck.

"Aircraft must be carried in large numbers within the confined limits of a ship. Facilities for repair, over-haul, and upkeep in the form of shops for wood, fabric, and metal working must be included in the equipment of the vessel. Means must be provided for efficiently and speedily transferring the planes from the stowage spaces to the flying deck. Similar means must provide for keeping the flying deck clear of planes by transferring them below to the stowage spaces as quickly as they land on the carrier. The planes when landing on the deck must come to rest in comparatively narrow limits, and to accomplish such landings retarding gear must be designed which will arrest the speed of the plane and bring it to a full stop within a few feet.

"Then there is a device for literally hurling the planes into the air. This is the so-called catapult, and by means of it seaplanes are shot at high speed from the deck of the carrier. Land planes take off from a standing start by running along the deck for the full length of the ship and rising into the air as they attain flying speed. Landing a plane on the deck of a carrier is a feat to test the daring and skill of the most seasoned pilot. From an altitude of a few hundred feet the deck of the Langley appears incredibly small. A postage stamp on a very large envelope furnishes a descriptive comparison of this deck is an expanse of sea. And yet a thousand miles at sea it is by far the most inviting spot to head for, and for the pilot who is initiated it is all in the day's work.

"For a brief interval the pilot hovers in his plane over the carrier, and then, when the signal comes from below that all is well, he swoops toward the stern, handling his plane with an almost uncanny instinct, a perception and a skill little less than marvelous.

"As for the ship, the Langley was originally commissioned as the U. S. S. Jupiter in 1912, was the first electrically driven ship in the navy, and was used as a fleet collier. Her conversion to an airplane carrier was authorized by Congress in 1919, but it was not until the autumn of 1922 that she was finally completed."

A Silent Railroad

Philadelphia has a silent elevated railway, so constructed that the passing of a seven-car train at full speed overhead does not interfere with the conversation below, since the sounds are only heard like the distant boom of big guns. The quiet has been secured in quite a simple manner from the viewpoint of the engineer. William A. McGarry tells of this railway in Popular Mechanics:

"In the Frankford line, two major developments were made on the structure itself in addition to the improvements in the cars. The first was to fill the interstices of the H-beam uprights, on which the road is carried, with concrete. Various experiments have shown that such beams act as sound transmitters, carrying to the pedestrians vibrations that otherwise might have been dissipated in the air above. The second change was in the support for the rock ballast in the roadbed. Instead of using the familiar bolted lattice-work of steel, the engineers put in concrete arches. The result was a structure almost as solid and vibration-proof as masonry.

"For about a mile near the terminus, the line runs through a part of Frankford Avenue, which is so narrow that a center column structure had to be used. Even here the engineers managed to attain an unusual solidity. A special type of column was designed, supported below the street surface by plate girders that in turn rest on concrete piers twelve feet apart. The result has been a considerable deadening of noise, even when the old-type cars are used.

"The new cars are similar in some respects to those in use on the later lines in New York, but they have some additional safeguards. Fully automatic couplers were installed, the use of which not only eliminates the necessity of brakemen standing between the cars when trains are being made up in the yards, but also equalizes the speed of each car so that the train acts as a unit. It makes for less noise and more comfort. Another step is dual control of the air brakes, one of the old type, and the other electrical, the latter being instantaneous. In the old equipment, when the motorman applied the brakes, the first car in the train was the first to slow down. The second car bumped into the first, and so on throughout the length of the train."

This new high-speed transit is a six and one fourth mile stretch. It was begun in 1915 and the aggregate cost has been $15,000,000, one fifth of which was spent upon the cars alone. The elimination of the deafening clatter of such roads represents a forward step in comfort and health.

Mummy Discovered in Argentine

A news item in the Arkansas Gazette tells of the discovery of a mummy in Argentine, South America. The account reads:

"A perfectly preserved mummy, believed to be that of an Inca chief, has been unearthed from a hill in the province of Salta Argentina, near the Chilean border.

"It was brought to Buenos Aires to-day together with a large number of implements and artistic carvings and art objects of stone, copper, earthenware, and onyx which were buried with it.

"The discoverer, Senor Leonardis of this city, said he found the mummy sealed in a large earthen jar after he had carried out excavating work to a depth of six feet.

"The teeth, the nails, and most of the hair of the ancient are in a perfect state of preservation, as are the vital organs, indicating a method of embalming that may be superior even to the Egyptian.

"The art objects include serpents, fashioned in copper, and also copper receptacles, carved heads of cats, monkeys, and other animals, parrots, and serpents.

"The methods used to unite the various parts of the implements suggest handiwork like that of the Egyptians. Senor Leonardis, who is an amateur archæologist, has presented his find to the National Museum."

Poison Liquor

A statement recently made by the United States Prohibition Director shows that a man who puts his trust in a bootlegger very often drinks with Death.

One man in a hundred who buys illicit liquor to-day gets genuine unpoisoned and unadulterated liquor, says the Outlook, and continues:

"This fact is shown by analysis of 80,000 samples seized in all parts of the United States during the past year, and made up of all kinds of liquor illicitly sold in this country."

"There are," according to Commissioner Haynes, "four sources of supply for bootleg liquor. They are 'moonshine' liquor, redistilled denatured alcohol, smuggled goods and liquor illegally withdrawn from bonded warehouses and directed to beverage purposes. Each class has its own peculiar dangers. 'Moonshine' is poisonous, first, because it is new liquor containing all the poisons that would be eliminated by proper aging. It is vile because it is distilled under conditions that make it, in most instances, unspeakably filthy. Redistilled denatured alcohol is poisonous because it is impossible to remove the denaturants by any means at the command of the illicit distiller. Smuggled liquor and liquor diverted from

Los Angeles Branch News Items

At the regular quarterly business meeting, July 2, provisions were made for a special meeting to be held on the night of August 1, for the purpose of legally instituting proceedings for the sale of our present church property upon which is contingent, under present circumstances, the building of a church suitable to the needs of the branch.

Several years ago the present building served the purpose, but with the growth of Los Angeles in the last few years has also been the growth of the branch and the prospects are fair for the addition of several hundred members to the branch in the near future so we feel we must have a main central building.

Every day in the year from two to five thousand people arrive in the vicinity of Los Angeles, many of whom never leave, so the city is growing with leaps and bounds. It must be remembered in this connection that there is but one glorious Southern California in all the world, and with this large influx is a proportional number of Saints coming here to make their home. Therefore it is not necessarily prophecy to say that in the very near future Los Angeles will have a large, commodious church for the Saints, and after that, beyond all probability, outlying districts and suburbs will build suitable buildings for those who find it inconvenient to attend the central church.

At the special business meeting above mentioned, considerable business of importance was transacted under a prevailing spirit as peaceful as was ever witnessed. Also the attendance bonded warehouses is usually adulterated to increase the volume without diminishing the intoxicating power. So, from whatever source it comes, practically all the liquor that can be bought in the United States to-day is deadly or dangerous. Yet many men hold the blind faith that they are getting 'pure stuff, from these polluted streams.

"One fact, however, is to be borne in mind. Spectacular and violent as are some of the cases of illicit liquor poisoning and inevitable as are the slow poisonings often incurred, the number of men killed by alcoholic drink in the United States to-day is much smaller than it was before prohibition. A larger proportion of those who drink are killed, but drinkers to-day constitute a proportion of the total population so much smaller than in pre-prohibition days that the aggregate is much diminished."

Professional Slaughters

Prize fighting has come into its own and a whole lot more than it should own. Never before have professional fighters been able to attract such vast assemblages of people or obtain such huge rewards.

The boxing arena has played to crowds far exceeding those attracted by a Harvard-Yale football game and the gate receipts exceed anything ever before imagined.

"The cash-extracting power of Babe Ruth's bat," notes the Outlook, "is as nothing compared with the alchemy which lies in a pair of boxing gloves attached to the proper fists."

Boxing for sport is a clean and manly game and its value has been demonstrated many times. But when boxing has turned to slaughter and it is done at the beck and call of money, then the sport is no longer a sport but a debasing influence.

was larger than for some time. The branch has purchased a suitable lot in the vicinity of University Park, which the Department of Women rented in turn for a parking station, with a handsome revenue in return. The branch approved their action.

Various working committees were appointed, such as a finance committee and one to have full charge of advertising, sale, and disposition of the present church property.

Pastor S. N. Gray presented the names of five brethren whom he had selected as his assistants and asked authority from the branch for their regular assignment to duty. They are as follows: Elders J. I. Spencer and Dana Crum, counselors to the pastor; J. C. Stewart, presiding priest; Fred Crum, presiding teacher; O. C. White, presiding deacon; and J. H. Camp, publicity agent. These are to hold office until the next general election.

All regular branch meetings were ordered suspended from August 18 to the close of the reunion.

The Sunday School Department is undergoing a period of one hundred per cent activity. The men of the branch have organized a "Men's Bible Class," fully officered from president to secretary, which started with a membership of about forty. It is setting out for a hundred as first stop, and we believe they will get it. Efforts are being made to round up all the absentees and put them to work in classes. Pastor S. N. Gray called a meeting of the priesthood and is outlining a systematic program for the future which will insure work for all the priesthood who will accept duty.

In the Department of Recreation and Expression the wheels are humming. President Motter is getting right down to business and at the last meeting was greeted by the largest attendance for several months. The programs are spicy and of a high character, and Sister May Lewis, who teaches a class in public speaking and decorum, has consented to act as critic for the department. Her suggestions are of much value, considering her years of intense training and natural keen judgment. Every member on the program looks forward with interest to her personal suggestions. Sisters Kelley and Wickes are putting forth their best efforts for originality and "point" in the programs and their work is rated high by the interest shown in each number. President Motter suggested that a society paper would be of interest and called for an expression from the body. The suggestion took the form of a motion calling Brother J. H. Camp to the editorship of a society paper to be called The Echo, to be read the first and second meetings of each month.

Monday night, July 30, the members of the Department of Recreation and Expression gave a marshmallow and wiener roast at Hermosa Beach, there being from forty to fifty present. Our pastor is not to be considered a "dead one" judging by the number of wieners he can roast and eat and the hearty manner with which he enters into all the fun. But when he goes into the pulpit the outside, jocular man vanishes and, never lacking for thought or word, his sermons are fraught with the salt of seasoned logic and eloquence.

Among the visitors of the past few days is Sister Ada B. Hoisington of Boise, Idaho, who is visiting friends here.

Simcoe Branch Progresses

An item from the Simcoe, Ontario, Branch tells of the progress and growth of the branch. Five young people were recently baptized, the ceremony taking place in the beautiful Spring Creek. Many members and friends in attendance were deeply impressed with the services, a splendid spirit prevailing.

Denver Publishes Paper

The Little Missionary is a weekly paper published by the Denver Branch in the interests of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Every Thursday this little paper comes out, and it is now on its fourth week of life. It consists of a double sheet, four pages about five and a half by seven and a half inches in size.

The first page consists of the name of the paper, the name of the church with its location, the weekly service schedules, and the names and addresses of all branch officers. The remainder of the paper contains branch news items and comments. Frank B. Almond, city missionary, is editor.

Some extracts from the paper are as follows:

"The Weekly Biography

"Probably the oldest Saint in the branch is Brother Peter Murie. He and Sister Murie came a few weeks ago from Columbus, Nebraska, to make their home in the "Queen City of the Plains." Brother Murie was baptized in 1854 at Genoa, Nebraska. When many were being led west through the deception of the Utah Mormons, our brother remained loyal to the truth, and later on, when Alexander and David Smith started on their trip to the Rockies, Brother Murie and others were organized by them into a branch at Columbus. This was in 1865.

"Since then Brother and Sister Murie have lived consistently the life of a true faithful saint. Now, in the twilight of their lives, they have come to Denver, and we surely trust that they may be spared to enjoy the association of the branch for many more years. At present Brother Murie and his companion are located at 251 South Sherman Street, but they expect to move to their permanent home by September 1.

"Stay in the Church

"Stay in the church, young brother, young sister. Not only retain your name upon the records, but give your ability, whatever it may be, to the church. Stay in the church in heart, in spirit. Place your affections upon the church and its work. Do not let them wander to things outside.

"If you desire joy, peace, or wisdom, seek them in the church through the gospel. Oliver Cowdery tells us, in describing the angel's ministration which he received in company with Joseph Smith, that this earth has not the power to give the joy, to bestow the peace, or comprehend the wisdom which was contained in each sentence as they were delivered by the power of the Holy Spirit.

"Seek your happiness in the church; in doing your duty there. Let not your hearts go abroad, like the prodigal son, after pleasures forbidden in the law of God. Happiness comes only by the law of right-doing, of which the gospel is the most perfect exponent."

"Denver News

"Brother and Sister Conley, of Independence, Missouri, are in this city, where Brother Conley is doing special service for Armour & Co. Sister Conley is a former student of Graceland, and a faithful worker in the church. They are staying at the St. Francis Hotel, and expect to be with us for a few more weeks."

Tent Meetings at Duluth

Tent meetings are being held at Duluth, Minnesota, by Elders William Sparling of Minneapolis and Leonard Houghton of Madison, Wisconsin. A little over two weeks of services have resulted in four baptisms but the interest is growing and greater success is expected before the meetings close.

Reunion News

Northern California Reunion

July 29 closed a very pleasant reunion for Northern California. It was one of the best and one of the largest reunions held in our district. We were obliged near the close of the reunion to have the side curtains of the big tent rolled up and extra seats placed under near-by shade trees within hearing distance to accommodate the large numbers.

The following were the speakers: James A. Gillen, James F. Keir, W. A. McDowell, David E. Dowker, H. W. Savage, C. W. Hawkins, Dora Glines, and Vida E. Smith. W. H. Dawson, during instruction hour, gave a twenty-minute lecture on the Book of Mormon, and answered questions on the subject. Brother Gillen was to have occupied this time but was ill. It was a happy surprise to have Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith step into the meeting on the 28th.

The Friday evening entertainment was held in the open; the program was well received by an appreciative audience of about seven hundred. The cantata was held on the following evening also in the open. The district choir, under the direction of acting district chorister, Birdie Clark, was at its best.

Those speaking on the closing Sunday in their order to very large audiences were Bishop James F. Keir, Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith, and Apostle James A. Gillen. There was power in the preached word, fervor in the prayers, and wonderful experience in the testimonies. The spirit of love, good fellowship, and service was manifest to a marked degree.

Ten were baptized and five children were blessed. Confirmation of those baptized took place at the prayer or preaching meetings, adding to the solemnity of the occasions. All the general church officers were recognized in their places, backed by the district presidency. There were meetings in charge of the bishopric and patriarchs respectively.

The young people had the time of their lives; it was the biggest showing of young people we have had, nearly one hundred being present. Many older ones also caught the spirit of youth by attending young people's prayer meeting. Wiener roasts and melon feeds, a mock funeral, field meet, and entertainments were some of the activities. The big parade which for the first time in Irvington history blocked traffic on the main street for about half an hour, was a great success.

One busy man at the reunion was the district president, J. D. White. He was up early and late looking after the comfort and convenience of the Saints. The commissary department was his stronghold for the first part of the reunion, but after getting the rough places ironed out he joined later in the more active arrangement of the meetings.

Brother W. H. Dawson found some place to busy himself from near 4.30 a. m. to midnight each day—a real rest from secular affairs. Brother W. A. McDowell was busy with preaching, presiding over meetings, and giving patriarchal blessings. He gave twenty-five blessings and said at the close of reunion that it was one of the best he ever attended.

Brother Gillen showed himself a master of the art of preaching, so earnest and forceful, clinching the arguments with facts.

How beautiful the contrast of "the strong oak tree that stood in his path," and "The sweet full bloom of the pretty flower near it," and God's purpose in having each to fill its own mission. Bishop Keir's talks were clear, forceful, and logical.

Three hundred forty dollars were pledged to Graceland College.

The first step in reunion program work was taken up this year by organizing an elementary group, ages one year to twelve. Sister Helen Rood did splendid service, aided by the other public-school teachers and others present.

Three quiet, peaceful, harmonious sessions of conference were held during the reunion. The following seventeen listed according to votes received were elected delegates to General Conference: J. B. Carmichael, Mrs. J. D. White, Vida E. Smith, Alfred E. White, W. A. McDowell, F. A. Smith, Lillian Ewing, J. A. Gillen, Ruth Clegg, James F. Keir, Dora Glines, Ruth G. Thorman, Mrs. M. L. McRoberts, A. J. Damron, Mrs. L. M. Norwood, H. W. Savage, and Julia Mockler.

The personnel of the district remains as before with three exceptions: Birdie Clark was elected district chorister; Gertie Bidwell, district librarian; Ruth Clegg, superintendent of the Department of Women. Sister Clegg was nominated by Dora Glines and approved by the conference.

Lamoni Reunion

Reunion activities at Lamoni continued throughout the time set in spite of the disagreeable weather conditions. During the first five days it rained continuously day and night and made camping less delightful than it otherwise would have been.

All day the first Sunday it poured, preventing many from town getting out to services. The roads were very bad, but in the afternoon and evening a few from town braved the mud and came to meetings. Sunday night saw a sorry-looking sight—wet bedding and a disheveled camp—but the majority were still optimistic. On Saturday following the opening of the reunion a severe storm broke, blowing down the main tent and doing considerable damage to the camp.

Attendance was smaller at this reunion than in previous years. While there were as many campers as usual, the attendance from town was lighter. One reason was that there was no bus service, and without street cars many have no means of transportation.

Splendid meetings were experienced, especially those of the young folks. Local speakers were assisted by Apostle F. Henry Edwards and Patriarch Ammon White.

On Monday a large crowd of young people assisted in a program followed by a bonfire.

The rain continued through the week up to Friday, and by Sunday morning the roads had dried sufficiently to enable a goodly number to attend the closing services of the reunion.

Pottawattamie and Fremont District Reunion

A miscellaneous program was given on Thursday evening as the prefatory session of the reunion.

Regular services began Friday morning with prayer service at 9.30 and business meeting at 11. At this time the presidency of the district, associated with Apostle F. Henry Edwards, were chosen to preside over the reunion. H. H. Hand was chosen secretary. A memorial service was held at 3 p. m. with preaching by J. F. Mintun. Preaching was also held in the evening at 8 p. m. with Elder P. T. Anderson as the speaker. About two hundred gathered to hear the sermon.

The music is in charge of Sister Vinnie Hatch.

During the afternoon Elders C. F. Putnam and F. Henry Edwards with his sister Blanche Edwards, arrived on the grounds.

The rains of the last few days put the ground in good condition for camping. The location of the large tent is ideal.

On Friday evening there were twenty-four living tents, one Oriole tent, one for the boys, the dining tent and others on the grounds to be erected.

The spirit of cheer pervades the camp.

Reunion at Deer Park

The reunion of the New York and Philadelphia District opened at Deer Park, August 4.

An official book has been issued defining the daily program which is both entertaining and educational.

Prayer meeting is at 7 o'clock in the morning; school of methods from 9.30 to 12 o'clock; from 1 to 2 the Department of Women; 3 to 6 the Department of Recreation and Expression; and 7.30 to 9 in the evening preaching service, lectures, and entertainment.

The prayer services are under the direction of A. E. Stoff, the school of methods under the direction of John Zimmermann, jr. The Department of Women, with good attendance and interest, is taking courses in mothercraft and child welfare under the direction of Barbara W. Milligan. The recreation and expression activities are conducted by Duane Anderson and N. E. Milligan.

Apostles D. T. Williams and E. J. Gleazer, Bishop Fry, Elbert A. Smith of the Presidency and others, are attending the Deer Park assembly.

Some noted speakers addressing the meetings are Professor F. W. Blackmar, of University of Kansas; Reverend Henry Heine, of Crescentville, and Professor T. F. Herman of Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

Eastern Colorado

The Saints of the Eastern Colorado District are looking forward to the happy reunion time which always brings good cheer and pleasant experiences and which gives to each and all renewed courage and strength for the gospel work through the rest of the year.

The camp grounds are beginning to take on the appearance of life and activity. The two big tents are up and ready for services which are to begin next Friday, August 17.

Elder C. H. Rich, who has charge of the commissary department is busy getting the cafeteria in shape to accommodate all who wish to be served. He announces that prices will be reasonable.

Elder J. D. Curtis, who has charge of supplying all with cots and tents, is on hand and ready for service. His prices are: Cots 40 cents and 75 cents; 10 by 12 tents, $4.75, and 12 by 14 tents, $5.25.

The grounds are beautifully located at 1015 Cheyenne Road at the mouth of Cheyenne Canyon between Ivy Wild and the Stratton Park, and is favored with beautiful scenery, good water, and a climate that is unexcelled. To reach the grounds from Colorado Springs, take the Canyon car to the end of first car fare, walk one block south and four blocks west. If you pay second fare get off at O'Malley Street and walk south one block, or take the Broadmore car to Cheyenne Road and walk four blocks west. To call the grounds by phone, call C. H. Rich, 3838-W.

The reunion will be favored by the presence of able and interesting speakers who bring with them a message of first importance. Among the speakers will be: Apostle J. A. Gillen, Bishop James F. Keir, and Field Worker, Mrs. Dora Glines, who will be assisted by the local force among whom are men and women of wide experience and splendid abilities.

Every member of the district is urged to be present and enjoy this rare treat.

GEORGE H. WIXOM.

Ridgeway, Missouri

We have no branch here but hold Sunday school every Sunday. We have fifteen members but no one holding the priesthood, so Brother Carl Ballantyne comes or sees that some one comes from Lamoni when the roads will permit.

Sister Ward L. Christy did a noble work for us this spring by helping get a mothers' meeting started, helping the people to see the need of better living. Everyone speaks very highly of Brother and Sister Christy. They held a four-week meeting in Blythedale, Missouri, and many seemed very much interested. There are three other churches in that place.

Elder Christy held the first meeting in Ridgeway two weeks ago and we are hoping for a big gathering in of the honest ones in due time.

DORA P. HERNDON.

Eastern Montana District Conference

As many of the Saints of the district were hindered from attending our district conference last June we thought it would be interesting to write concerning it.

The session opened on a Saturday evening in charge of Elder Eli Bronson who had just arrived from Outlook, Montana, where he had baptized six young people. Saints from the western part of Montana were unable to cross the Missouri at Culbertson so returned home, all except Brother Eli who induced some one owning a row boat to attempt a crossing.

After reading the reports, the following officers were elected for the coming year: Elder James C. Page, president, Glasgow, Montana; A. R. Ritter, vice president, Fairview, Montana; Earl Wilcox, district secretary and Bishop's agent, Glasgow, Montana; S. M. Andes, treasurer. Sunday school officers for the year were chosen as follows: Sister Clara Wheeler, superintendent, Andes, Montana; W. R. Hillman, assistant superintendent, Fairview, Montana; Mrs. W. R. Hillman, secretary-treasurer.

All enjoyed a good basket dinner Sunday, and a program was rendered which was encouraging as well as uplifting.

A committee was appointed to make arrangements for holding a joint reunion with the Saints of Western North Dakota at Willistown, North Dakota. It was decided to hold our fall semiannual conference at Glasgow, Montana, November 16, 17, and 18. We look with hope to see a larger attendance and hope the weather and financial conditions will permit it.

EARL WILCOX, Secretary.

Church Views Told in College

One of our young pastors who is also carrying work in one of the colleges of the country writes as follows of one of his interesting experiences:

"I was very pleased to have the privilege of giving a talk before the sociology class of the college here last Tuesday to explain the difference between our organization and the Utah people. It was an invitation by the professor, because there had developed a controversy in the class the previous day as to the distinction between the two organizations. I was not a member of the class. In my talk I quoted the Kirtland suit decision which would be considered by the class as good evidence, ending my talk by making the plea that in justice to the students of the college who were members of the Reorganized Church and the hundred thousand good folk who were members, it is only fair that all teachers make this distinction. I was surely pleased with the hearty handclap that was given at the close. Most of these students (60 plus) will be teaching young Americans in the schools of Kansas.

"We are now preparing for the work of the reunions, busy outlining for the study hour which I am to have charge of, and wife is to have charge of a church school for the children during the forenoon.

"I am pleased to say that I have successfully completed another term at school. That this added efficiency will be used in church work is my sincere desire."

Burgess on Vacation

When we left Independence the night of July 14, it was with the expectation of an immediate vacation, but it has not proven such. Arriving in Billings, Montana, at 6.45 a. m., July 16, we found conditions not good for an early trip to Yellowstone, as planned; also that some business we had expected to attend to later was pressing.

Elder A. M. Chase, who is also here visiting his son, Doctor C. S. Chase, volunteered to take me by auto about 350 miles to north Montana, so we left at 4.45 a. m. Tuesday, the 17th. Within fifty miles we found evidences of a severe storm the night before, hail which broke most windows on north and west, and rain washing out culverts. As our trip was northwest, we discovered the destructive hail covered a width of about one to three miles, but some fifty to seventy miles long.

The second day we struck some of the worst roads imaginable. It was like driving over a plowed field after a rain. It was curious to travel so far and to see so very few houses or signs of habitation. And sad to relate those we did see were usually vacant and the land deserted. The second day we traveled from 6.30 a. m. till 8.30 p. m. without seeing a town or getting a bite of food or even a good drink of water. I had to get out and open some nine gates, and found an equal number open, also we had to make short detours, because of culverts washed out, some seven or eight in sixty miles. The detours led around and down and then up, instead of across.

Montana is not a desert but is hurt by a three years' drouth and also by high bank interest. Ten per cent does not give the farmers opportunity to recover in a good year the loss of dry years, so in many sections it is a case of more than half the land foreclosed, then going to ruin. They tell us of homesteaders who walked east, earning enough in a town to take them to the next and thus moving back east. Mortgages are taken not only on the land and personalty, but on the crops. So they walk out with say fifteen dollars worth of property all told. It is enough to make one realize anew the grave need of a social remedy, and of brotherhood.

The sights included homes built in the rock, from half to five sixths being the original cave, some little more than a cave fronted off. Again we saw majestic sweeps of scenery, or the bad lands along the Missouri River. This latter requires a steep descent to a ferry, run by cable and river current. The river is not too wide to "halloo" over, though it took the ferryman over an hour to cross, but only about five minutes to take us, when he reached us. Then after a few miles along the river bank, there was a long ascent, rather trying in part. (At one point there was not an inch to spare on either side of the car wheels, a washout having taken earth on both sides.) It was a "Religio" hill, "Onward, ever upward," but like other hard tasks was worth while for the view and the coming up out of the depths, even though in so purely physical a sense.

Returning we took the Glacier Park road for 140 miles to Havre, thence southwest to Great Falls. A traveling man rode with us for forty-five miles "to talk religion." The night was spent at Fort Benton, once the head of navigation in the sixties. Its name and the name of the county, Chouteau, and other old names bespeak Missouri and even Saint Louis.

This roundabout way made the trip about five hundred miles coming back, but it was easier and took no more time than the shorter route.

After two weeks spent on manuscript and hard work, Saturday, August 4, Elder Chase and wife, and all our family drove forty-five miles northwest to visit some church members—the Crawford family. John Crawford and wife of Emerson, Iowa, were there for a summer's visit, as each of their four sons, Frank, Earl, Gardner, and John, and their daughter Mary have taken homesteads of 320 acres apiece. They have fine farms and excellent crop prospects and are also prepared to care for their crops and property.

We remained over Sunday and had a good visit for they all made us feel at home. John Crawford, the son, was at Graceland College two years, 1918 to 1920, and remembers his experiences with great pleasure as well as profit. Of course they have the church books and church papers, as well as many other good magazines and books.

Our trip makes us appreciate more than ever the value of our church services. So to-morrow we start with Doctor Chase and family to drive through Yellowstone Park and thence on to the Western Montana Reunion August 17 to 26.

Somehow, standing on a mountain height it is easier to take a broad view of life and pray for the church and God's blessing on his people.

S. A. BURGESS.

Work in Auckland

The work is moving onward in Auckland. The meetings at the mission house are becoming more interesting and better attended as time passes. I had the pleasure of baptizing a fine young man recently and another is inquiring. The Sunday school is a good feature of the work. It averages about thirty. The Department of Recreation and Expression is running fortnightly.

We still go on with the street work. There are so many infidels and agnostics of every type that it keeps one busy meeting them. Last Sunday I had an open-air debate with a Catholic. I invited him to come every Sunday as I intended to continue the discussion and would give him time for reply if he cared. It is splendid to find the latter-day work so defensible from the point of view of scripture and history.

We are expecting Brother and Sister McConley soon and expect to have a profitable time.

J. H. N. JONES

Meetings at Halfway, Michigan

We have been making a special effort at Halfway, Michigan, a few miles from Detroit toward Mount Clemens, Michigan. We began services in a large hall there Sunday night, July 22.

I had announcement of the meetings put in the local paper, and had three thousand circulars printed and distributed from house to house. About twelve Saints did the canvassing. Also, a large cloth sign was put on the hall announcing the meetings. About seventy-five Saints with a few friends attended from Detroit, most of them from that section of the city near the meeting place. In addition we have piano and other instrumental music and singing. Yet, with all of this, we get about two or four of the people of the town out to hear us. It appears that the people are becoming very well satisfied with themselves and what they know of religion, or don't know.

Brother R. C. Russell was in Windsor and heard of our efforts and has come over to give us a lift. He preached last night in the open, leaving the nice, large hall and coming down to the street, endeavoring to get to the people. The response from the people was disappointing even then. A few lingered and listened. We will try it on the street again to-night if the weather be favorable, and again next Sunday night in the hall. If by that time the people are still as indifferent as thus far, I think I shall leave them in their smug satisfaction.

I believe, will be the conditions that will make people keen to hear our message.

I believe that the big task before the church is to husband their own resources and energy and devote themselves to the work of development to a point where they will be independent and self-sustaining, from the products of the soil to the finished, manufactured article, so that we will be immune to the effects resulting from the clashes between the classes in the world. And in their desolation following their disorder, they will be glad to learn from a people who are orderly and secure in their ways. I am of the opinion that the big work of conversion of the word will begin then. But we must prepare, or else the opportunity to save will not be ours at that time, and with them we shall suffer. The church work in the city among our people seems fair.

G. R. KUYKENDALL.

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove

The joint reunion of the Little Sioux and Gallands Grove Districts will convene at Dow City, Iowa, August 17, and continue for ten days.

The success of the reunion will depend upon the attendance and the spirit in which people take part. This will be an occasion for earnest study, educational growth, spiritual development and for the enjoyment of the good things of our Master's kingdom.

Dow City is a pretty village in Crawford County, on the Illinois Central and Northwestern Railroads. Connections with the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul is made at Orion, two and one half miles away. It is also on the Lincoln Highway, one of the best automobile roads of Iowa.

The commodious city park at Dow City has been kindly granted us for the use of the reunion. It is a beautiful, shady park, supplied with good water and camping facilities.

Tents of various sizes, also cots, may be rented for the season at reasonable rates. Rooms may be secured in homes of the town. Those desiring the committee to secure rooms, tents, or cots should correspond at once with J. L. Butterworth, Dow City, Iowa, for terms and reservations.

A dining tent will be operated on the grounds where good meals may be had at the following rates: Breakfast, 25 cents; dinner, 35 cents; and supper, 30 cents.

There will be ample room for Boy Scouts, Oriole Girls, and Temple Builders to camp in groups where they attend under the direction of local leaders.

Competent leaders of recreation will be in attendance and provision will be made for a series of athletic games and contests each week-day afternoon at four o'clock. The schedule will be printed with other announcements and distributed each day.

A cordial invitation is extended to all Saints and friends to be present and worship with us for the ten days. Those who cannot plan to camp should try to attend as many days as possible, especially on the two Sundays.

It is desired that all departmental heads and others interested in special lines of work at the reunion be present at the organization meeting Friday morning, August 17.

Bishop A. Carmichael, of Lamoni, Iowa, will be present throughout the reunion and will conduct the study hour each morning at 7.30. He will especially present and discuss the economic and financial problems before the membership of the church, together with such other questions as may be raised for discussion. His will be a continuous series of subjects and one must follow them each morning to derive the greatest benefit. This is a fine opportunity for one to become acquainted with the real issues before the church; and the methods proposed and being used for their solution.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards will be present the first five days of the reunion. Patriarch Charles Butterworth will attend during the whole time.

Miss Blanche Edwards, recently from England, will be present the first five days and will have charge of departmental work at 2 p. m. each day. Bring your problems and be ready to join in the discussions.

Elder Charles Putnam, missionary supervisor; Elder S. T. Pendleton, missionary; and Elder P. R. Burton, missionary in Nebraska, will attend throughout the reunion and assist in the services.

Special features of the daily programs are as follows:

Lectures and study hour each day at 7.30, beginning Saturday morning, in charge of Bishop Albert Carmichael and others. Prayer meetings every morning at 9. Preaching daily at 10.30 a. m. and 8 p. m. Department round tables daily at 2 p. m. as follows; in charge of Miss Blanche Edwards and others: Friday and Saturday, Sunday School Department; Monday, Department of Recreation and Expression; Tuesday, Women's Department; Wednesday, Health Department; Thursday, Department of Music; Friday, preaching at 2 p. m., Graceland College program in the evening at 8. Saturday, 2 p. m., reunion business meeting. Recreation each week day at 4 p. m. in charge of trained leaders.

Friday, August 17: The opening service of the reunion will be a general prayer meeting held at 9 in the large tent; 10.45, organization meeting. Address of welcome, Mayor of Dow City. Response by the chairman of the reunion committee. Organization of the working forces of the reunion; 2 to 3.30 p. m., Sunday school departmental round table in charge of Miss Blanche Edwards; 4 p. m. recreational activities in charge of J. E. Keck; 7.30, orchestra and song service; 8, preaching.

Saturday, August 18, 7.30 to 8.30 a. m., lecture or round table in charge of Bishop A. Carmichael, whose main theme will be the economic and financial problems of the church. If there is sufficient demand for other lines of study they will be provided. Nine to 10.30, prayer meetings. The young will assemble in the small tent, joining the general session later in the hour; 10.45, preaching in the auditorium tent. Talks for children, Bible stories, etc., in the small tent; 2 p. m., Sunday school departmental work; 4, recreational activities; 7.30 p. m., orchestra and song service; 8, preaching.

Other week day programs will follow the above order except as otherwise announced.

Severe Storm Visits Lamoni

About 10 o'clock Saturday morning, August 4, a severe storm struck Lamoni. In approximately half an hour .83 of an inch of water had fallen. Telephone and light service was impaired, but the trouble was soon adjusted. A pole on the reunion grounds was blown down and had to be reset.

Several small buildings in the vicinity were blown over, and corn crops generally damaged.

The Lamoni Chronicle gives the following account of the effect of the storm on the reunion grounds:

"Perhaps the greatest consternation reigned at the camp ground where the Saints' reunion is in progress. The morning prayer meeting was just drawing to a close when the storm broke. Many fled to their tents, but a few remained on the advice of those in charge, and before they got away the large assembly tent collapsed on top of them. On hands and knees they crawled from under the water-soaked canvas. Several were bumped and bruised by falling poles, but no serious injuries were received. The children's tent collapsed also but was unoccupied. Most of the smaller tents withstood the gale, and by 2 p. m. the assembly tent was back in readiness for the afternoon meeting."

About three inches of rain fell during the first week of the reunion.

Independence

The offer of President Frederick M. Smith to the mayor of Independence, of the use of the Campus for memorial services on August 10, was accepted.

Mayor Cappelle appointed a committee representing all the denominations in Independence to meet and devise a plan for the union service. President Frederick M. Smith and Church Historian Walter W. Smith were the representatives from our church.

It was decided that at 3 p. m. on Friday, August 10, the townspeople would assemble on the Campus to pay a last tribute to the late President Harding. A program was arranged for the occasion.

Over three thousand people met on the Campus and took part in the memorial services in spite of the blazing hot sun, and Mayor Charles D. Cappelle presided. "America" was played by the augmented Legion Band and sung by the audience, and a choir consisting of the united choruses of Independence churches, led by our own leader, James R. Houghton. This was followed by another piece, "Nearer, my God, to thee," by the band and choir. Invocation was offered by Doctor J. Wesley Smith, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Special music was then rendered by the band and choir. L. T. Dryden delivered the address eulogizing the late President. "Lead, kindly light" was next sung by the choir, assisted by the band. President Frederick M. Smith pronounced the benediction. The audience sang the "Star-Spangled Banner," and taps was played, sounding forth from the tower of the Institute.

Five minutes of silence was observed by the audience at 3 o'clock, at the opening of the services.

Every civic organization in Independence was represented at the meeting, including the various churches. The Independence Examiner aptly notes, "There will be such a bringing together of the various elements which make up our population as perhaps never has taken place before."

A rehearsal of the music for the occasion took place last Thursday night, the united choirs assembling under the direction of James R. Houghton. The choir consisted of about two hundred persons.

The augmented Legion Band marched to the Campus playing "Onward, Christian soldiers" and assembled on the platform. It consisted of about fifty pieces, under the leadership of Earl C. Cox, a member of our church.

By courtesy of the Herald Publishing House, programs were presented for the occasion.

On the Campus over the week end, the summer activities continued. Saturday night saw a packed house to hear the concert by the L. D. S. Band and see the motion pictures that followed. Sunday, August 12, at 7.15 p. m. the choirs of the churches in Zion, assisted by the L. D. S. Band, rendered a sacred concert. Cyril E. Wight, president of the Lamoni Stake, preached the sermon. The second Bible picture, "Cain and Abel," was presented following the sermon.

Next week's program will consist of band concert and motion picture entitled "Back home and broke" on Saturday night. On Sunday, August 19, at 7.15 p. m. a sacred concert will be given, followed by preaching by Elder A. B. Phillips. The third Bible picture, "The Deluge," will be shown.

Sunday services in Zion churches were as follows: Preaching at 11 a. m. at the Stone Church, Elder J. W. Metcalf;

Enoch Hill, Elder W. A. Smith; Liberty Street, Elder A. B. Phillips; Walnut Park, Elder J. A. Dowker.

At the Stone Church Miss Margaret Gard, of Walnut Park, sang "O Rest in the Lord," from Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The choir sang "God is love," by Shelley.

Bishop Charles Fry has just returned to Independence from England.

R. V. Hopkins, pastor of Zion, returned from his trip to Colorado but left immediately for Michigan where he will attend reunion.

The first program of the "musical appreciation" course being given by James R. Houghton at the Department of Recreation and Expression meetings, was presented last Friday night. Owing to difficulty which arose in adjusting the radio, the program was not broadcasted as had been announced.

Plans are being made for broadcasting the next program August 17, 7.45 p. m. at the Stone Church which is as follows.

Holden Stake Items

On July 30 the Holden Home Sunday school and Group One gave a farewell service on the home lawn to Brother and Sister G. W. Hancock who have been serving as superintendent and assistant superintendent respectively in the Home Sunday School. Also Brother Hancock has been in charge of Group One and Sister Hancock was the "friendly visitor" in the same group. They are leaving for Bates City to take charge of the F. E. Ford farm while Brother Ford is absent on school work in Lamoni, Iowa. Brother and Sister Hancock have been faithful workers in Holden and their services should be appreciated in Bates City.

Bishop C. J. Hunt is back in the office after a few weeks' absence on special reunion work in the South. He reports a busy time, having preached thirty-seven sermons in twenty-five days.

Brother and Sister Perry L. Hiles have moved to Independence where Brother Hiles has a position with the state grain inspection department. They will be missed very much as they were numbered among our best workers.

The Sunday school class of young married people gave a program at the home at the close of their Sunday school recently which was much appreciated.

The Department of Recreation and Expression meeting has been changed from Friday evening to Sunday evening at 6.30.

Special services were held in Holden Friday afternoon in memory of the death of President Harding. Music was furnished by the DeMolay band and male quartet and addresses were delivered by the ministers of the Baptist, Methodist churches, and by Elder D. J. Krahl of our church. In the evening at 8 o'clock services were held on the Holden Home lawn for the home family and those who could not attend in the afternoon.

A special conference of the pastors of the churches in the southern and eastern parts of the stake with the stake presidency was held at Knobnoster, Missouri, on Sunday afternoon, August 12.

All who are able to assist in the work of the Square Deal Dining Hall at the State Fair, August 18 to 25 should advise Brethren I. M. Ross or W. S. Macrae as to when they will arrive at Sedalia. All Saints attending the fair should look up our dining hall and tell others.

A number of our school-teachers will teach outside the stake. Brother and Sister James N. Curtis will occupy as superintendent and principal of schools at Naylor, Missouri. Frank E. Ford will act as superintendent of schools at Lamoni while Misses Edna Johnson and Lourissa Dillon will also teach in Lamoni. Miss Bertha Johnson will be in Independence, Missouri.

There were three baptisms at Bates City on Sunday, the 5th.

The fifty-second annual commencement of the Central Teachers College at Warrensburg was held on Tuesday the 7th. A total of 454 degrees, diplomas and certificates were granted. Sisters Ethel Macrae of Warrensburg, and Lillian Nunnemaker of Independence received the degree of associate in arts, and certificates were issued to Sisters Myra Nunnemaker of Independence and Edith Curtis of Holden. There were fifteen Latter Day Saint students at the school this summer.

"They Say"

"They say" is a shelter frequently sought by those who thoughtlessly or intentionally would injure by a shaft but who would not sponsor the blow.

"They say" is a cloak never sought and a refuge never taken by one who seeks first his neighbors' interests.

If all that "they" say were true, my son,
Then there's much that is wrong in the world,
And many a man we thought quite straight,
Is crooked, and warped, and gnarled.

But "they" have tongues which are mordant and harsh,
Which pour out rank venom and bile,
And characters white have been hurt by the words
Which "they" have spoken the while.

So join not your words to what they have said.
Hold close to the truth, and be strong,
And refuse to repeat what "they" may have said
Lest you make yourself party to wrong.

PART THREE

It was Sunday when we reached the Hill Cumorah; a most appropriate day, we thought, for such a visit; the first and only mate was reconciled to the idea of traveling on Sunday with such an objective. Arriving at Manchester we made inquiry, and the first person approached told us exactly where to find "Mormon Hill." So taking the road north to Palmyra, in a very short time we came within sight of the Hill, made familiar to us by tradition and by numerous photographs.

But no photograph has done justice to the Hill Cumorah. It is not appreciated until one has climbed its rugged slopes and reached the very summit. A wonderful panorama is then unfolded to view. Nothing obstructs the vision in any direction—north, south, east, west, one may look to the far purple horizon for many, many miles over the lesser hills that consort with Cumorah. Cumorah dominates them all. We could well imagine both Lamanite and Nephite sentinels of the long ago seeking this eminence to watch for enemies.

Here the faithful servant of God deposited the plates. Here the angels kept guard. Here one hundred years ago this coming September came Joseph Smith to obtain his first view of the records. We considered it a very beautiful and happy juxtaposition of events that at the time of our arrival Nature should have clothed the Hill Cumorah from base to summit with wild white daisies—a lovely robe of pure white. For that beneficent act we were grateful; the otherwise somewhat rugged and forbidding hill seemed more friendly and hospitable to us and lingers in memory pleasantly, flower-starred with millions of white blossoms and softly flooded with the Sunday afternoon sunshine. Not under any other conditions that I can think of would we have chosen to first see the Hill Cumorah. There is a solitary rosebush said by local tradition to mark the resting place of the plates. It, too, was in full bloom, and we plucked some of the blossoms to preserve as mementos.

We also visited the old home of Joseph Smith, some little distance from the hill. This farm is the scene of some of the first visions and revelations that presaged the coming forth of the "marvelous work and a wonder." But the house was locked and no one about the premises to admit us to the ancestral home.

From this high point in the journey, the Chevrolet 490 directed her course as rapidly as possible toward Onset. One other scene of the journey is remembered as being exquisitely satisfying—a night camp in the Berkshire Hills shortly after we had crossed the line between New York and Massachusetts. Here evening found us near the summit of these mountainous hills, noted for their beauty. Taking a side road, we drove directly into the forest, and presently abandoning even the side road, we climbed through sloping open fields to a commanding position where we made camp by a thicket of birch trees. Quite by ourselves in this secluded place among the lofty ranges of hills we spent a most delightful evening and night. Here, too, Nature had kindly prepared a surprise for us. There were acres upon acres of wild strawberries, just in their prime.

They were of excellent flavor, though quite small—about right in every way for Bishop Keir or Bishop Hunt—and right gladly would we have shared with these two genial friends. So lavish was the treat prepared that we could not find a place to pitch our tent without crushing wild strawberries.

The impression of a western man driving across the populous States of the East is that there are too many men on the board. They complicate the game. And too many of them are of strange speech. The melting pot is not doing her work so thoroughly on the peoples from southern Europe as it did upon the English, Germans, Irish, Welsh, Scotch, Scandinavians, and others who in a past generation, when "God was sifting the kingdoms to find seed for this planting," brought their best racial contribution and laid it on the altar of America. Will the starry banner ride over and rise above this darker, strangely muttering tidal wave?

It is very refreshing to note the good will manifested almost everywhere toward the wayfaring man. The tradition that the masses of the people in the East are more cold, formal, and inhospitable than the western people was badly shattered. This friendly good will did in no way diminish even as we drew toward Boston, poor victim of Doctor Bushnell's poetic "tag":

The home of the bean and the cod;
Where the Cabots speak only to Lowells,
And the Lowells speak only to God.

Stopped momentarily by a traffic jam in a crowded eastern city, the writer expressed a desire for a newspaper. Two men overhearing the wish raced each other to the nearest news stand and returned with the coveted sheet. Halted for a moment at a cross road to determine our route, a man in a big touring car drove out of his way to inquire, "May I help you with directions?" The traffic policemen, unlike those in the comic supplement, were always friendly and helpful. "Hello there, Missouri! This way toward Boston," was a typical greeting. "See that big white church on the hill; drive to it and take the road east." The librarian at Wareham, a town hard by Onset, finding me interested in a volume, said, "Here, take it with you and keep it as long as you wish." So without money deposit or references I carried the book with me. These are but typical little incidents.

Finally, in the evening of a rainy day, we drew into Onset. At a certain cross street we saw the welcome sign, "This way to the L. D. S. Camp." But an enterprising fish peddler had written on the sign, "Live lobsters." This confused us for a moment. Bishop Fisher, Doctor Sinclair, Brethren Traver and Joy—no, truly they are live wires, but not lobsters; pardon, "lobstahs." We decided the two legends had no connection; and in a moment were sure of our way when we read another sign, "Please do not smoke on these grounds." So very shortly we were in the heart of the Onset camp, where in a moment we were made to feel at home by the splendid and hospitable Saints of the Southern New England District.

Lesson of the Withered Fig Tree

It will be recalled that after Jesus had made his spectacular entry into Jerusalem, after he had gone into the temple and there had given that manifestation of the volcanic power which was in his somewhat turbulent soul by ejecting the money changers, that as he was leaving the temple, fatigued from teaching and mental stress, he wished to eat. Seeing a fig tree he approached it, thinking to eat of its fruit. Finding the tree barren he cursed it. The next day as he and the disciples passed it some one called attention to the withered condition, withered even to the roots.

Why did Jesus curse the fig tree? Do you picture Jesus on that occasion as being a man whose brow was wrinkled by anger, and whose face grew black in disappointment and wrath because he did not find something that he wanted? Can you imagine Jesus as being a man like a spoiled child, stamping the ground in his anger, and saying, "Because I have not had my way, cursed be this tree?" Do you imagine that Jesus had even so small a motive behind him when he cursed that fig tree that he wanted to demonstrate to his disciples that he did have the power to curse that tree until it was withered up, even to the roots?

He undoubtedly knew that there was in him divine power. He had seen it. He had experienced it from the time he passed through that terrible ordeal in the wilderness where for forty days and forty nights he fasted and prayed and wrestled with temptation. He knew that there was resting upon him a mission to the world; the divine Spirit of God had impressed this, had burned itself into his very soul. He had heard the word of the Messiahship ringing in his ears until it was vibrating through his whole soul. He was conscious of the power that was in him. Yet we can scarcely think he cursed the fig tree simply to demonstrate that power. Jesus did not at any time perform miracles simply to demonstrate the power that was in him. What, then, is the meaning of the withered fig tree? Does it contain a message to you and to me?

When Jesus' attention had been called to the fact that the fig tree had withered, even to its roots, he turned and delivered to the disciples a dissertation on faith, "Have faith in God." And this recalls another expression from Holy Writ, "Faith without works is dead."

What is the function of a fig tree? Growing in the soil, sending its roots down into the ground, it gathers there certain elements, and through its leaves certain elements from the air with which it is surrounded, its environment if you please, and gathering these elements into the roots and through the veins of the leaves, into the tiny laboratories, produces the fig—a definite purpose, a definite end. It doesn't make any difference if it is in the same soil along side an apple tree; always the elements that pass through the wonderful little laboratories produce a fig.

And that is what it was that had caused Jesus to rebuke the fig tree; it had failed to discharge its mission and do its work. He gave an object lesson right there, and the incident stands as an everlasting warning to those who have talents God has given them, but which they refuse to use. And when we in our activities fail to produce from our environment those things that will bring to us our specific fruit, that which is to us what the fig is to the fig tree, then we are failing in our mission, just as the fig tree failed.

"Faith without works is dead." "Have faith in God." Exercise the talents God has given you. Such is the lesson of the withered fig tree, and it should be borne well in mind by those looking forward to Zion.

Training for a Career in Agriculture

The average farm in the United States to-day is capitalized at about $20,000—that is, there is invested in the average farm to-day the sum of $20,000.

The management of a farm factory capitalized at that amount is a matter of importance, and involves responsibilities of no small proportions. And yet a large number of farmers make no preparation for this task nor yet do they give serious consideration to the preservation of the investment. Our public school system is largely at fault for this condition of affairs; for the eyes of the farm boy and farm girl are too often directed toward the city as the land of golden opportunity. Both the public school and the private educational institutions must see to it that the proper emphasis is given to agricultural education to the end that a better type of farmer may be developed and to the end that the whole industry shall become more stabilized.

Graceland College is entering upon an epoch-making program in that it is offering a service to the Lamoni community and to the church which maintains it, which is designed to give the proper emphasis to agriculture.

Courses in agriculture are being offered this year for the first time in the history of the institution. Young people who are interested in college work in agriculture should make plans at once for entrance this fall.

Fundamental courses which are regularly offered at Iowa State College will be offered at Graceland, so that students may be able to take the first two years at Graceland before going on to the State Agricultural Colleges.

Elsewhere in this issue of the HERALD will be found information concerning the new agriculture course being installed at the college.

Why Men Differ

How men differ is seen in the daily acts of individuals and can readily be discerned through observation, but why men differ is a question not so easily answered.

The greater part of the daily actions of individuals is the result of hidden motives, not hidden because they are of a questionable nature, but unconsciously hidden. Often these motives are not known to the person himself until brought to his attention in some way. They escape our observation, yet they are there, operating and motivating our actions.

It is perhaps in these unconscious elements of human nature that men are most alike, while the differences are chiefly due to the experiences gained in life, and also to the hereditary background of each individual. So the greatest differences perhaps lie in education, while underneath it all, men resemble each other more closely.

Men who are very unlike in their intelligence possess instincts, passions and feelings that are very similar. In these things which may be expressed in sentiments towards religion, politics, morality, or through affections, the most eminent man will scarcely surpass the standard of the most ordinary individual. While great chasms may separate the lowly and exalted intellectually, there may be no difference in character.

Because of this fundamental nature in man, religion is the common ground for all souls. The rich can claim no privilege here greater than the poor, and the educated must drink of the same waters as the ignorant. The Son of God has given us a formula that will save all men, regardless of their station in life and that formula is based upon a fundamental element in man, feeling. He has given that formula to the world in the form of service expressed in, "Love one another."

Men's differences are due to their education and capacity, while their likenesses are basic in their feelings. Let men love God and his church and their differences will fade in the light of their passion for truth.

Placement Bureau Needed

It has been our desire for many years to see some system developed for keeping in touch with our people so closely in a business way that when positions are open in Independence or the "regions round about" that we can at once fill them with worthy persons of our membership, and when business opportunities occur we can take steps to have our people take advantage of them. But not much progress has been made in this direction as yet, though of course some attempts have been made in this direction. Here is a case in point: Our attention has been called to the fact that in Independence there is a business concern controlled by Latter Day Saints which is now wanting a competent and experienced bookkeeper. It is a rapidly growing business, and a Latter Day Saint bookkeeper is desired. A lady with from two to five years' experience is wanted, or a bright young man of experience who wishes to make himself a permanent position. If any bookkeeper desires further information concerning this, a letter to us will receive attention.

The Conference Daily

The regular Conference Daily will be published this year during the sessions of the conference at Independence, Missouri.

It will contain all last minute news, sermons, talks, addresses, descriptions, and will give a thorough and comprehensive view of the conference. The publication of this daily for thirty-five cents is a privilege not to be lightly overlooked. It is within the reach of every pocketbook, and the value received in reading matter will scarcely be equaled by any other such publication.

To be well informed on matters pertaining to the church and its activities and especially upon the action of the General Conference is a thing which should be of paramount importance to church members.

An early subscription will insure prompt delivery of your daily. See the Conference Daily advertisement in this issue of the HERALD and order now. Be assured of the first news of the conference on opening day.

Social Unrest

If social unrest is a symptom of disorganization, as we are told by our sociologists, then its opposite must be true. People socially at rest must be an indication that organization is fixed and immovable.

The extreme in either direction is obviously undesirable. A society so unstable that its social system is in process of disorganization is headed for chaos, while the society so content with its achievement that its organization has become stuck in the mud, is either stupid or else has reached the state of Enoch's city of old, perfection.

But social disorganization must be considered in connection with reorganization. In order for an individual to make adjustments to a new situation he must break his old habits, and in so doing there is a time when it appears that his plans are not altogether well organized. As with the individual, so it is with society. Any change from the existing order of things will bring about a certain amount of disorganization and social unrest. In this case social unrest is a symptom, not of disorganization, but of reorganization. Such a condition of unsettled affairs is to be considered as progressive and should therefore be welcomed as a move toward a better condition.

"Divine discontent" has been applied to individuals so why not to society? Discontent with the present state of society must be divinely given, in order that we may move forward to something better. That we have a plan for a society which will change the sufferings of the world into happiness, is known by all our church members because upon that basis is our organization built. Perhaps the reason why we have not effected such a plan is because we have been content with things as they are. If that be the case, what of "divine discontent"?

The social unrest that is upon the world as well as the church, and which invades every manifestation of human endeavor, should be regarded as a hopeful sign. Terrible may be the conditions existing in the process of reorganization, but may they not be tolerated, and may we not rejoice in the evidence that it is a preparation for a better world, a world ready to receive the Son of God when he returns?

The signs are hopeful, but the situation is dangerous. The social unrest that is the means of a reorganization of society must be controlled to such an extent that it does not disorganize the old order before the new order is established.

The evidences of progress in the church must be looked upon with the utmost confidence as the plan of God to bring this people into a perfect social organization. Fortunately we are not placed in the position of the world, where darkness and doubt may lead it into the wrong path, for we have a divine guide watching over our journey and speaking to us through his prophet. How can we go wrong when the way is light and the direction clearly indicated?

On the Purchase of Land

Some people think of Zion as a place, a geographical location. Others think of it as a condition, as "Zion is the pure in heart." But Zion must involve both elements before it can rightfully be called by that name.

Zion must be a geographical location for the pure in heart, if we are ever to think of it as a definite group of people distinct from other groups and possessing certain qualities specifically recognizable.

It is not possible to think of man as detached from the earth's surface. Land is the basis of society, and without land there can be no society. Every clan, tribe, state, or nation has its land and its people. One is unthinkable without the other. So with Zion, if it is a social group it must have people and land.

In the early days of the church it was made known that a place would be set aside for the gathering of the people and that all the land should be purchased "that ye can in righteousness." Later commandments provided for the purchase of all the lands in Jackson County and the surrounding country. Plainly the possession of land and a gathering of people is necessary to the establishment of a social group to be known as Zion.

When we recognize that the stability of the group depends upon the permanency of the relations of the people to the land, we may come to realize the imperativeness of the purchase of more land. Weak communities are those where the group has established only a few slight and temporary relations with its soil. While on the other hand the strong group is that which establishes more complex relations to the land and which puts the land to a discriminating and more highly differentiated use.

The possession of a few town lots and a small acreage out of town is not a satisfactory basis for the establishment of a society. The possession of

DEPARTMENTAL

Important Notice to General Conference Visitors

A reduction of one and one half fare for the round trip on the "Certificate Plan" will apply for members (also dependent members of their families) attending the General Conference to be held at Independence, Missouri, beginning October 1, 1923. The arrangement will apply from the following territory:

All points in the United States and we hope for favorable action by Canadian lines.

The following directions are submitted:

1. Tickets at the normal one-way tariff fare for the going journey may be bought on any of the following dates (but not on any other date): California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, September 25 to October 1 inclusive. Arizona, Idaho, Montana, Utah, September 25 to October 2, inclusive. All other authorized points, September 27 to October 3, inclusive.

2. Be sure when purchasing your going ticket to ask the ticket agent for a certificate. Do not make the mistake of asking for a receipt. If, however, it is impossible to get a certificate from the local ticket agent, a receipt will be satisfactory and should be secured when ticket is purchased. See that the ticket reads to Independence or Kansas City, Missouri. See that your certificate is stamped with the same date as your ticket. Sign your name to the certificate or receipt in ink. Show this to the ticket agent.

3. Call at the railroad station for ticket and certificate at least thirty minutes before the departure of the train.

4. Certificates are not kept at all stations. Ask your home station whether you can procure certificates and through tickets to the place of meeting. If not, buy a local ticket to nearest point where a certificate and through ticket to place of meeting can be bought and get receipt for fare paid to such point as well as certificate from there to Independence or Kansas City.

5. Immediately upon your arrival at the meeting present your certificate to G. S. Trowbridge, as the reduced fare for the return journey will not apply unless you are properly identified as provided for by the certificate.

6. No refund of fare will be made on account of failure to either obtain a proper certificate, or on account of failure to have the certificate validated.

7. It must be understood that the reduction for the return journey is not guaranteed, but is contingent on our receiving not less than 250 regularly issued certificates from ticket agents at starting points showing payment of normal one-way tariff fare of not less than 67 cents on the going trip.

8. If the necessary minimum of 250 regularly issued certificates are presented to the joint agent, and your certificate is validated, you will be entitled to a return ticket via the same route as the going journey at one half of the normal one-way tariff fare from place of meeting to point at which your certificate was issued up to and including October 25, 1923.

9. Return tickets issued at the reduced fare will not be good on any limited train on which such reduced fare transportation is not honored.

Special Notice to Pacific Coast Delegates

Delegates from Pacific Coast points should inquire from agents regarding tourist ticket rates as the summer tourist rates are much less than the special conference rates and these tickets are on sale to and including September 15 this year and are good to return till October 31. These permit unlimited stopovers at intermediate points and are good on all fast trains.

If you cannot get the information you wish about rates or routes write me.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE, Transportation Manager.

all the land that can be purchased in Jackson County and the regions round about is essential to the gathering of the people.

A people is understood and comprehended only in connection with its activities upon its land, and the land cannot be understood apart from its effect upon the people. A people without land is a weak social group which can disintegrate at the slightest provocation. But with land in its possession, the strength of the group is determined by its production in use of the land. Land gives strength.

As an example of the integrating qualities land has upon the social group take the purchase of the Campus in Independence. A people divided on numerous trivial issues united as one in the purchase of this piece of ground. Since that time the community interests have been pooled and all efforts are toward the activities on the Campus. Some of the most enjoyable community services ever to be imagined have been held on that ground and the united spirit in making these services a success is gratifying. That is what interest in land can do.

As a people, collectively and individually, we must buy land and do it now. To wait will be folly in view of rising prices and other obstacles. A people owning land and causing it to bring forth the maximum of production should be our distinction.

Radio sermon by R. S. Salyards, August 12, 1923.

Man's long history, past and present, is a history of the building and decay of civilizations. Greatness and goodness, positive elements in construction, are ever confronted by the obverse, negative side of human nature, in multiform evils based finally and fundamentally upon selfishness, the root of all disorder. Our present civilization is trembling in the balance; statesmen and others qualified to speak question its survival.

The world needs "a philosophy of life." Where shall we find it, and how apply it to our problems? Has God enriched only the material world with that which is necessary to human welfare? Or has he provided for the moral and spiritual, which are eternal?

Before Abraham Lincoln, that mysterious Christ-like man, "the savior of his country," appeared upon the scene, "no one was wise enough after the flesh" to solve the then vexing problem and unite the nation. Seeking some fundamental principle upon which to base a policy, Lincoln found in the Scriptures these words of Jesus Christ: "A house divided against itself cannot stand." From that statement he deduced the doctrine that this government could not endure "half slave and half free." He succeeded in preserving the union by destroying sectionalism.

Jesus Christ is "the light of the world." Let us go to him for a solution of its problems, for a philosophy of life. He was asked a question which put him to the test: "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" He met the issue; he rose to the occasion. He stated the philosophy of life; "Hear ye him." He said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

God is supremely a lovable being. In physical nature he is disclosed as expressing power, sublimity, harmony, and beauty in all the vast range of his works; he has been lavish in abundance and variety of his gifts. In the statements of his word he is interpreted to us as possessing omnipotence, knowledge, love, purity, benevolence, and every attribute essential to perfection. In the revelation of himself through Jesus Christ we have a perfect life, expressing God in deepest compassion and sweet tenderness toward human suffering and welfare."

Man, made "in the image of God," is capable of the truest expression of love, and must love God, not abstractly, but in deep, comprehensive love and sincere appreciation of his supreme qualities. God embodied in Christ all the qualities which human experience and human necessity have proved to be the present and the eternal verities. To produce and to maintain a normal, abiding civilization, men must receive and cultivate the qualities manifest in the Perfect Man, the Man of Galilee. We are commanded to love God and fellow man—not a mere theoretical sentimentality, but to possess and to manifest a genuine, abiding richness of love that shall pervade and suffuse our human natures and thus place the race in true and rational fellowship with God, "the Father of all," and with man, our brother.

The great artists have deeply devoted themselves to their art; the great benefactors have given themselves unreservedly to fellow man. While "balance is a fundamental verity," and perhaps no attribute of the Divine Being overbalances another, thus giving us symmetry, yet we read that "God is love!" Should there be any quality of our natures that should stand out prominently, it should be "the heart nature"; and we are commanded to love God with "all the heart," with all the soul, with all the mind, and all the strength.

In every home circle there ought to be a deep, underlying conscious love for God. It should be breathed into the very breath of life of every child. Children reared in such an atmosphere are bequeathed a priceless heritage, woven into the very warp and woof of their beings. As such they go out into life full of promise as citizens of the state. Reared in deep, sympathetic love for truth and purity, thus for God, they will maintain spiritual and moral standards and will not be satisfied with present-day shallowness, conventional artificiality, and much else that passes current in our present life. Parents rob their children if in the formative periods of their lives, when largely they have the forming of habit or character in their own hands, they fail to take advantage of what through nature has been placed in their hands as a privilege and a responsibility. Too often we supply all the physical needs, seeking the bodily comfort and welfare, with eyes blinded to or neglectful of the "better part," and learn to our sorrow that we have been guilty of gross neglect.

We have largely reversed the order of living as God has ordained it in the "eternal fitness" of things. We have made the material first, and thus has it overshadowed and made dim the spiritual. We are largely dominated by our material conceptions, pleasures, and modes of general living. To love God is to cultivate our higher natures, to let the man of spirit and of moral power rule within and dominate the outward temple, the body. Self-control, self-direction, power to rule one's destiny by an enlightened, purified mind, is the true order of life. It must not be by impulse, nor passion, nor physical appetite, nor inclination, nor self-will, nor ruthless disregard of fellow beings that life is governed; but by the rule of pure love, unselfishness, justness, considerateness, brotherly kindness, by the good management of one's own powers and through all this, and more, the rendering of service to fellow beings.

True love always is generous—God has given this in nature, in everything, with lavish bestowment. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." We receive by abundant but judicious giving; we shrink and contract by selfish motives and methods. The Savior said, as one expression of love, "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again." This he did of himself; this "policy" he laid down for our observance, the policy of love expressed in generous service wherever opportunity permits or whenever we can make the opportunity. Mere "social standing," "position," "family name," place, station, etc., are not in it with a big broad mind and generous heart.

Then, too, we may have light and not have warmth. Great intellect, well-developed mental powers, mere scholastic attainments, with sympathy for the common people lacking, with disinterest in human welfare, and coldness, passiveness, or indifference to human want, needs, and suffering—all these manifestations indicate the need of development of the heart nature in man or woman. We read that "the common people heard him gladly," when Jesus mingled with the throngs who followed him. The masses of the poor in that impoverished and wasted land were in condition to appreciate the loving-kindness and compassion of the Son of God, who paid especial attention to the lowly and the suffering. He pitied the people in their distresses; he went among them; "he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance"; "they that are whole need not a physician, but them that are sick." "The poor ye have with you always," was his admonition. Had he turned his back upon the poor and the suffering, the mass of humanity might well have given up hope. God's love, the marvel of it! Why are we so blind to its marvelous power, why so dis-inclined to give our best sympathies to its cultivation!

Napoleon said that while Cæsar and Alexander and he had built up empires upon force, Jesus Christ had built an empire upon love; that while the empires of the past were dissolved and largely forgotten, Jesus was constantly growing in the love of thousands and his spiritual empire was destined to be the enduring kingdom; that Christ was more loved than any other being. It is the spiritual kingdom, "the kingdom of God," that must finally rule in all the earth, when "the will of God shall be done upon earth as in heaven"—"the kingdom of love" over which Christ shall rule when he shall come again, and for the prevalence of which kingdom he uttered his model of prayer.

Our late and beloved President Warren G. Harding, in one of his Pacific coast speeches, plead for nearer conformity to the Spirit of the Christ in the social and political relationships of men. This expression of the late President is striking, as from a statesman who bore a heavy burden in seeking to find solution of the burdens and problems of our own nation with those of others. This with similar statements by other statesmen and publicists, bears strong corroborating testimony to the virtue of the philosophy of life expressed by the Savior. Does it foreshadow the time to come when, according to prophetic prediction, "the nations shall learn war no more"; or as Tennyson wrote, foreseeing the preparatory steps in international development to the ultimate reign of peace, when there should be "the parliament of man, the federation of the world"?

To love God with all the "heart," with all the "soul," with "all the mind" furnishes a self-evident, comprehensive philosophy of life.

There is a probation of character, when truth, in any of its phases, is placed before us as a rule of action. To love one principle is to grow into larger love for other principles. We cannot love without the compensation of development; we cannot deny adherence to truth without the compensation of loss in shrinkage of soul. We cannot be complete in character without love which opens the heart and the mind to appreciation and understanding. Thus love is a pathway to realization in all its richness of progressing perfection. The philosophy of Jesus is not merely ideal in sentiment. It is based upon and in its observance unfolds the strongest realizations of the things that will endure and remain eternally. Our bodies and our earthly accumulations disappear or are left when our earth life here is ended; our principles, our affections which are true, our characteristic qualities go with us into the world beyond. God is the Supreme Being, the Eternal Perfection, because of his qualities.

The life of Christ shines out in enduring, undimmed luster as the light of the world, because of his qualities. Had his disciples ever beheld weakness, selfishness, ambition, loss of self-control or anything of similar import in him, they could not have portrayed the life which they have pictured to us in the Gospels. They have given us a life supreme in its love for God and fellow man, in its self-devotion to the principles of truth which, if obeyed, will bring "every knee to bow and every tongue to confess" that Christ is Lord to the glory of God in a redeemed humanity.

Without love this world would be a barren, lifeless place. What there is in it "worth while" in the best of paternal and maternal and family ties, and other loves and friendships among the race, we have in trustworthy love. The sooner the world bows at the shrine of love, directed to God and man and expressed in the manifestations indicated in the philosophy of life taught and exemplified by the Christ, the sooner, and not before, shall we see "the abundance of peace" necessary to human welfare in time and in eternity.

Why We Believe in Divine Revelation To-day

Radio Sermon by A. B. Phillips, delivered at Independence, Missouri, August 5, 1923.

Among the doctrines that distinguish the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from other religious bodies of our time is one that is fundamental to religion itself, without which a knowledge of God could never have been brought into the world. It is the doctrine of divine revelation. Every Bible believer accepts the fact that God anciently spoke to men by prophets. The Old Testament would not exist had it not been that prophets were inspired to speak the word of God in the various centuries that preceded the Christian era. The Bible books thus written at different times show that God spoke to the people through prophets in whom had been inspired the God-consciousness. They were instances of the divine Spirit speaking to the Saint, the Creator talking to his child.

No Christian doubts that God is his Father in heaven, for did not Jesus tell us to pray, "Our Father who art in heaven?" And did he not encourage us to believe that our Father will answer the prayers of his children? The Bible is also appealed to as evidence that God has revealed himself to man; but the same sacred record tells us that he is no respecter of persons, and he who has in the past spoken to his people has power to speak to them to-day. It is in this respect that the belief of the Saints concerning divine revelation is unlike that of other Christian bodies. It is our testimony that God has spoken to us in this age by means of the gift of prophecy and revelation. This belief in present-day revelation and in living prophets is fundamental to the Reorganized Church. If it is true, the church is a divinely directed body. If it is false, then the church is based upon a fallacy.

Is This Belief Reasonable?

Against this belief it has been urged that all that God has spoken to man is found in the sixty-six books of our modern Bible. It may surprise those who hold this view to learn that the Bible itself mentions twenty sacred books which have been lost. No one knows what inspired words, what divine instructions were contained in the book of Samuel the Seer, the book of Nathan the Prophet, the book of Gad the Seer, the book of Shemaiah the Prophet, the book of Iddo the Seer, and other books mentioned in the Bible, but which are nowhere to be found. (1 Chronicles 29: 29; 2 Chronicles 12: 15.) The inspired writings that are now lost are not confined to the Old Testament period. Paul's so-called first letter to the Corinthians (5: 9) states that he wrote them a previous epistle, his letter to the Colossians (4:16) mentions an epistle from Laodicea, and Jude's epistle (3) speaks of a previous letter which he had written. These epistles were doubtless all of equal inspiration with those we fortunately still possess in the New Testament. If we had them we should prize them greatly. This is undeniable proof that the Bible does not contain all that God has revealed to man.

If God should see fit to reveal again some of the things which these inspired prophets spoke by his command, would the world receive the message? It is not unthinkable that a similar need for such a message might exist in our time; and if so, why should not God speak to us again? Peter tells us that anciently "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Why should not the same conditions that called forth the word of God to the people anciently, also cause righteous men to utter revelation from him in this age? Truths once known, may be lost to a later age which is less ready to receive; but a subsequent age may be in need of these truths, in which case we believe God will reveal them again. It is this divine care which identifies him as our Father.

Revelation Is Adapted to Progress or Growth

The Old Testament dispensations were not simply repetitions of the same words from the divine mind. At a very early date Israel was informed, and Christ emphasized that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matthew 4: 4). This word proceedeth indicates very definitely a continuation of instruction from God to man. While some may not have an adequate conception of what God has spoken, there are others who by development are ready to receive further revelation from him. This is one of the means divinely provided whereby we may "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord."

Human necessity alone determines how, when, and what God shall speak to his people. That he speaks in the revealments of science, the processes of nature, and even in the whispers of the wind or the murmur of the waters, we gladly acknowledge. But, as through the centuries long since past, his voice may come in the message of the prophet whose inspiration is clothed in human speech. Whatever may be the means by which God speaks to us, the all-important thing is that we try to understand. For though he should utter marvelous mysteries of infinite wisdom, of what avail is it to the man who does not understand? When Daniel heard the message of God, the record tells us that he "set his heart to understand." In life's great arena we may all play our part if we only will understand and follow the word of God. The messages of God found in the Bible itself are perceived in fullness only by the soul who struggles constantly upward, until the mystery of life is solved, and the divine purpose becomes clear to an awakened consciousness of God.

The history of man is largely a history of religion in which this God-consciousness has become more and more clearly experienced in the soul. It is a history of development, a development in which God has wonderfully supplied both the material and spiritual food needed by man in his upward climb. The revelation of history is therefore a revelation of God speaking progressively, as man has struggled to comprehend and apply. That which was obscure to the many of ancient times is becoming clear to day to those who study to know. Life is taking on new meanings to us day by day; but to God those meanings were present from before the dawn of the world. From the fundamentals of his revelations we may step up to a comprehension of the sublime heights of life. He has always thus sought to elevate mankind.

This Belief Is Scriptural

When we affirm that God speaks to-day by the revelation of his Holy Spirit in the gift of prophecy, and through prophets raised up and inspired with his message, the unusual statement has at times excited the objection that God has ceased to speak to man, and that the Scriptures do not warrant our claim. If such objectors will closely examine the sacred word they will find that not only does it support our position, but it positively affirms it. That it is God's intention to give progressive revelations to man is clearly stated by Isaiah, the orator of inspiration, who tells us that it is the divine purpose to give "precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little" (28: 10). Coming forward to the Savior's day, we read that he said to his disciples (John 16: 12), "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." In the light of this statement it is significant that John (21: 25) should say that if all the things which Jesus did should be written, the world could not contain them; or that Paul should speak of one who was "caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter" (2 Corinthians 12: 4).

Through all the ages man has never drifted beyond the divine reach. The voice of God has come to him to show him the way whenever he was willing to follow the right path. So in the books of the prophets we may discern the contact of heaven with earth. The earth as his area of operations, but heaven not far away when sought truly and in faith. To Adam, Enoch, Abram, Moses, Christ, and others God spoke with audible voice. At other times the marvels of his revelations came in spiritual dreams and in visions. Again his messages have been sent by angels clothed in shining garments, who came from the regions of celestial light and intelligence. Revealments of the divine wisdom have also been given through the Holy Spirit speaking to the inner consciousness of the soul. All of these means of communication are not only scriptural, but such as are in harmony with the nature of God and his great love for humanity.

The New Testament Church Had Prophets

The gifts of inspiration and prophecy were well understood to be in the church in the apostolic age, and for some time afterward. Paul had cautioned them to "despise not prophesyings" (1 Thessalonians 5: 20), and declared that the saints should "covet to prophesy" (1 Corinthians 14: 39). This divine gift was a feature of the Christian religion, and was one of the means by which the believer might go on unto perfection. The prophet held a regularly established office in the Church of Christ, hence Paul states that "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets" (1 Corinthians 12: 28), and (in Acts 11: 27) we are told that there were prophets in the church at Antioch, and in other places.

As the great head of the church Christ became the supreme director of its affairs, not only while on earth but also after he had ascended into heaven. By the Holy Spirit he manifested himself to the entire church, speaking through the prophets and revealing his will to his people. Ecclesiastical history shows that this gift of prophetic revelation and direction continued for some time after the apostolic age, or first century. There is no evidence that God ever changed this divine plan. We do learn, however, that when men began to reject the principle of revelation to the church, and refused to walk in God's ways, these spiritual manifestations became less and less frequent, and were finally confined to very rare instances, until they were no longer enjoyed in the church.

Revelation Is Needed To-day

During the progress of the centuries many of the divine utterances have been recorded and collected in a volume. Many others have been lost. Through the copying of records various differences have crept into the biblical manuscripts, and how accurate they are to-day, especially with respect to certain passages, is a disputed point among Bible scholars. Differences of translation also exist, some of which are of great importance, and the many interpretations placed upon doctrinal passages of the Bible have added to the confusion of denominational viewpoints. Never in the history of man has there been a greater need for inspiration from God, to make clear these disputed points of doctrinal theology. To concede sincerity and earnestness in all the Christian bodies, which we feel is their just due, is to concede the need of an authoritative revelation from God to point out the path of light, so that all may come to the unity of the faith for which Jesus so earnestly prayed while here among men.

There are several hundred Christian sects to-day, all doubtless equally sincere, and all equally confident that they are more nearly right than any of the others. Denominationalism has multiplied until we do not even know all of their names, much less the tenets of their faith. When the newly engaged young man said to his girl, "I must tell you, dear, that I am a somnambulist," it is not altogether strange that she replied, "Oh, never mind; we'll go to your church one Sunday, and to mine the next." If the truth were known, perhaps the state of nominal Christianity to-day might well be given the title of "Somnambulism." The religious world has strayed from the divinely appointed path, and has fulfilled the prediction of the Prophet Isaiah (29: 9, 10) when he said, "They are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink. For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes; the prophets and your heads, the seers, hath he covered."

Let no one make the mistake of supposing that the Reorganized Church is composed of fanatics, when it affirms that God has again spoken from his heaven, and has restored his church with a divinely called ministry and the prophetic office, through which inspired direction comes to his people as in Bible days. The Bible represents progressive revelations of truth. Truth is eternal. It can come to man only as he is able to realize it. It is consonant with development, though it is itself complete and needs no growth. It simply awaits our comprehension, and God therefore reveals it from age to age, to the extent that man is receptive. This is the principle by which scripture is made known to human experience. If it were not so the divine word would not constitute a revelation to man; for revelation is essentially that which reveals.

A church in harmony with God the eternal Father must be a church which receives instruction from him from time to time. Its faith is not built upon the past alone, but more particularly upon the living present. It conceives a God who not only spoke in former ages to his children, but who still speaks to them to the extent they are willing to hear and heed his voice. Its religion is not confined to remote history, but includes a present actual contact with the spiritual world from which flows a refreshing stream of inspiration, the source of which is inexhaustible and all-satisfying to the soul. We invite all who thirst to come to this fountain and drink of the water of life, which still flows from the celestial throne.

The Executive and the Man

Memorial address by President Elbert A. Smith, at Deer Park reunion, Pennsylvania, on the day of the funeral of President Warren G. Harding.

The flags of the Nation are at half mast. Since the day when Mrs. Ross sewed the stars to our flag until to-day the starry banner has been lowered before but the one enemy, Death—the dread enemy to which empires and republics as well as individuals must bow.

In common with the people all over this land and in many other lands we mourn the death of the President of our country. In speaking of him we may consider him in two capacities: First, as the President, the executive; second as the citizen, the man.

The president is president of the whole people. He is entitled to the respect, the sympathy, and the prayers of the whole people. Too often if the president be a Republican and we democratic, or the reverse, he has only our criticism, perhaps our enmity. But the moment a man takes the chair of the chief executive he ceases to be the president of a party and becomes president of our country and is entitled to and should receive the sympathy, the support, and the prayers of all good men and women.

As Latter Day Saints we can well see why this should be. The Book of Mormon declares that God reserved America to be a choice land, a land of liberty and freedom for the oppressed of earth, whose inhabitants should never be brought into bondage unless they should first fall into iniquity. It is not the only land of God's blessing; but it is one of the lands of his blessing and favor.

We may note the working out of his purposes. For centuries the new world was kept from the knowledge of undesirable peoples until the best nations of the earth were ready to send their best contributions of ideals and of blood. Then Columbus came, led of God, as he believed, and discovered the new world to the knowledge of the peoples of earth. Then came men and women of high political and religious ideals.

The president of the Argentine Republic told Roger Babson that in his judgment North America has always been greater than South America because South America was peopled by Spaniards who came seeking gold, while North America was peopled by the Pilgrim Fathers who came seeking God. In Provincetown harbor before they disembarked these men entered into the Pilgrim's Compact, "In the name of God, Amen." And they pledged themselves to enact and obey democratic, just, equitable laws. Two great ideals, religion and democracy, were born to the new world. These have greatly influenced the destiny of America, both in the United States and in Canada.

The work went forward. When the convention assembled to draft the Constitution, George Washington said to the assembled delegates, "Gentlemen, the event is in the hands of God." Leadership was given us from time to time in hours of crisis—such men as Lincoln, who himself held to the idea expressed in the Book of Mormon, and declared, "If destruction be our lot, it must spring up among our own selves and not come from abroad. There are not armies enough in all Europe and Asia in a trial of a thousand years to dip one cup of water from the Ohio River or make one footprint on the Appalachian Mountains. We must live through all time a free people or die of suicide." (From memory.)

We can realize then what it means to preside over such a nation with such ideals and with the possibility of such divine leadership from on high. The man who is asked to assume that task is entitled to our support and our prayers, to our orderly and intelligent help as citizens, that the nation may go forward along the predetermined lines. And when he passes in death those who succeed him are entitled to similar support. Particularly to-day which is more than a time of national crisis—but rather a time of world crisis, when thoughtful men are asking the question, "Are the foundations of civilization crumbling?"

Lastly we may think of the President as the citizen, the man. President Harding was perhaps not so strenuous as Roosevelt, not so scholarly as Wilson, or so versatile as Lloyd George, or so belligerent as Clemenceau, but in a way he was a typical American citizen. Not excessively endowed along any one line, he nevertheless had a great store of that saving grace, good common sense. Springing from the common people, he worked his way up to the highest position within the gift of the people, receiving it by an overwhelmingly large popular vote; and he was also endowed with that kindly personal spirit which kept him in touch with the people so that he will be remembered tenderly. And possibly out of this human sympathy sprang the motive which led to the undertaking for which he will be most honored and longest remembered, his call to a disarmament conference, when he said to the nations of the earth, Come let us sit together and devise ways by which we may limit the possibility of war and make more certain the preservation of peace, that our sons and daughters may be saved the horrors of another world conflagration. All fathers and mothers everywhere should honor and love his memory for that one high endeavor if for no other.

So to-day we pay our tribute to him as executive and as citizen. And though the occasion may be melancholy, I have a degree of happiness to represent the general church at this time in tendering such a public expression of our feeling.

George Frederick Handel

By James R. Houghton

Surely of all the arts to develop and come under our observation, music is the most recent. The facts in the case seem to demonstrate that it is also quite an old art. We find in its very rudimentary forms that it was even practiced by the uncivilized races of long ago. From frigid zones to temperate and torrid some forms of music may be found. It seems as though the natural impulse is to give spontaneous expression to some form of music either through song, instrument or the dance, which is and has been closely associated with music in its development or evolution. This primary impulse may be found in all classes of people and in all lands to-day.

The most perfect instrument of all in the art world—the human voice—was as completely at the command of the most ignorant savage as of the happiest child of our higher civilization in his untutored state; and yet this great art of music is the latest to receive the full attention and development that it should receive.

Turn back the time-worn pages of history to the "Golden Age" of Athens and there you will find that men turned their attention to the development of architecture and sculpture. The æsthetic impulse of those ancient peoples fitly expressed itself in rigid stone. We have yet to see the day when sculpture will even approximate the creations of those old Grecian artists.

Then later on, the art of painting was developed to a stupendous height. It is impossible to-day to point to anything which can compare to the great works of Michaelangelo or Rembrandt. Thus, another period produced its great artists.

Turning our attention to the modern age, we find that great strides have been made in music. Where is there to be found such marvelous productions as those of Handel, Bach, Haydn, Beethoven, Mozart, Purcell, Mendelssohn and numerous others that might be included? It is conclusive proof that the art par excellence of this age is music.

Back in the year 1685, on the banks of the River Saale in Lower Saxony, some twenty-five miles from Leipzig, there lived a family by the name of Handel. Here in a house known as "Grosser Schlamm No. 4" within a few minutes' walk of the market place, the second son of George and Dortha Handel was born on the 23d of February, 1685. Little did they know that this baby, christened on the following day George Frederick, was destined to become the "Father of the Oratorio" and with perhaps one exception, that of Bach, the greatest composer that ever lived. Here the child spent his early youth under the loving care of a devoted mother and the inspiring direction of an aged father.

This infant may well be characterized as a born musician. We are told that "his earliest delight was a mimic orchestra of toy drums and trumpets, horns, and flutes, and jew's-harps." This inclination of the child so aggravated his tutor, who had determined that the child should be trained for a legal profession, that he forbade "no more of such jingling and said henceforth all houses in which music was practiced should be avoided." This prohibition did not stop the child, for he secured an old clavichord. "A clavichord was a keyed instrument, the wires of which were so muffled by a general damper of cloth that the tones produced were scarcely audible. On this account, the instrument was much used in the cells of monasteries, when studious monks or nuns wished to practice without disturbing the community. Small clavichords were sometimes made without legs and placed for use upon a table. Some were even small enough to be carried under the arm; and it was, no doubt, an instrument of this description which Handel succeeded in conveying to the garret."

This clavichord, as mentioned was taken by the boy to the garret. Here, unnoticed and unheard, he worked diligently upward in the night while his mother and father slept in the rooms below.

When the boy Handel was nearly seven years of age his father decided one day to go to Weissenfels. The child was very anxious to go with his father because he had heard of the splendid musicians at that place, but he was denied. When the carriage pulled away from Halle, little George was not far behind, trudging along trying to keep pace with the horses. When the carriage reached a suitable resting place and came to a halt the tired little boy came running to his father. His father was quite angry at such disobedience but nevertheless allowed him to continue the rest of the journey.

Of the experiences of the child in Weissenfels we quote the following:

On arriving at the castle the child made immediate friends with some members of the Duke's Kapelle (or chapel) who admitted him to their rehearsals and took him on Sunday into the organ loft, where, after the conclusion of the service, the organist lifted him upon the stool and permitted him to play upon the finest instrument he had as yet had the happiness of touching. The duke listened attentively to the performance; and, struck with its style, inquired the name of the player. "It is the little Handel, from Halle, my grandfather's youngest son," said George Christian, to whom the question was addressed. Thereupon, the duke summoned both father and son into his presence, filled the pockets of the latter with money, and discoursed so eloquently to the former upon the duty of encouraging the natural bias of his son's extraordinary genius, that the good chirurgis yielded at last to the power of princely persuasion and without actually giving up his original intention of educating the child for the law, promised that he would at least offer no further opposition to the free exercise of his natural gifts.

Thus it was that the boy Handel was permitted to devote his life to the great cause of music by demonstrating to his father in this peculiar way his unusual talent.

Upon their return to Halle, Master George placed the child under the capable organist and theorist, Friedrich Wilhelm Zachau. Under his inspiring instruction the boy learned rapidly, and in three years time had learned all that his master could teach him. He mastered the clavier, organ, violin, and oboe, and in addition to this become an accomplished theorist. At the age of eleven years he was taken to Berlin where he again demonstrated his unusual abilities. The following year his father died and he was left in his mother's care—a loving and devoted woman.

At the age of seventeen he entered the University of Halle where he acted as cathedral organist. It is said that in these early years he studied much and wrote quite a volume of original compositions as well as transcriptions.

The following year he entered Keiser's Theater Orchestra at Hamburg as a second violin player. While here he produced four operas and a passion. A passion is a sacred work treating with the theme of the life and death of our Lord.

In the year 1706 he went to Italy to study in Venice, Naples, Rome, and other cities. No doubt he came in contact with the works of the famous Italian writer Scarlotti. While in Italy he produced several operas and quite a lot of very fine church music. Returning to Germany in 1710 he became chapel master to the Elector of Hannover with further permission to travel. He went to London and produced the opera "Rinaldo," which won for him immediate success, and also some very fine church music including the Utrecht Te Deum and the Chandos Anthems.

In the year 1720 he was selected by an aristocratic group of people in London to be an impressario for an opera company. For this particular company Handel wrote fourteen operas. In 1728 this enterprise was dissolved and Handel was forced to seek other avenues for his creative talent.

Some ten years later we find him devoting his entire time to the writing of oratorios. This particular work occupied his attention until 1753 when he became almost totally blind. Despite this handicap he continued active, conducting his "Messiah," playing organs, etc., until within ten days of his death, which occurred in 1759.

In summarizing we find that Handel produced: "Vocal works, nineteen English oratorios; two Italian oratorios; two German passions; five Te Deums; six psalms; twenty anthems; forty-seven Italian operas; three German operas; two English serenatas; four odes; twenty-four chamber duets; ninety-four cantatas." In the way of instrumental music we find that he produced: "Concerti Grossi; organ concertos; sonatas; 'water music'; suites, pieces and fugues for harpsichord."

Handel is known as a "universal composer." This is due, no doubt, to the fact that he was a deep student of all styles of music, and incorporated those styles in his music. We must bear in mind also that he was raised in Germany and consequently imbibed much of the atmosphere of German music which is quite straightforward. Then, too, we must keep constantly before us the fact of his sojourn in Italy where he learned much of the Italian style which he afterwards used in his vocal compositions. In his permanent residence in England he surely came in contact with the works of his predecessor Purcell. There is much in Handel which is an image or a direct reflection of the art and style of Purcell.

Handel was essentially a dramatic or operatic composer. He utilized the existing forms of his day to suit his own purposes. He excelled in being able to lead up to and develop effective contrasts and soul-thrilling climaxes. His melodies are always singable and beautiful. He knew how to group voices so as to bring out a given place in bold relief. Despite the many criticisms hurled at him for plagiarism, he stands to-day as one of the greatest composers that ever lived.

In the field of oratorio Handel used much of the same material which he had used in the opera. He conceived the idea that a large chorus would add much to the dramatic element in an oratorio. With this view in mind he combined the operatic forms of his day with the old sacred motet and out of this union grew a style of composition which has made Handel the "father of oratorio." He truly developed the oratorio to a magnificent scale which to-day remains unsurpassed in artistic beauty. The name of Handel will always be fraught with many fine memories of his beautiful writings.

Hallelujah Chorus

The selection known as the "Hallelujah Chorus" is taken from the second part of Handel's "Messiah." This beautiful chorus is without doubt one of Handel's finest choral compositions. It was composed in the year 1741. Its technical characteristics reveal the true genius of Handel. It has been ventured that this great chorus is based upon the old German choral, "Wachet Auf, ruft uns die Stimme." There is much evidence to prove this point. In measures six to twelve, thirty-three and thirty-four, we find striking similarities to the old choral. Handel has been known to take old melodies and work them over and the manner in which he has treated this subject is really remarkable. I submit this upon the basis of the evidence as found in the two selections. The hallelujah chorus type of composition seems to have been a favorite with Handel for we find many of them in his compositions.

Analysis

The first three measures is an instrumental prelude announcing the "Hallelujah" motive or theme. This is followed by four measures of "Hallelujahs" in the tonic. The next four bars are in the dominant, raising the voices slightly to give a more brilliant effect and greater sonority of tone. The movement which opens with, "For the Lord God omnipotent reigneth" announces a new subject which is treated in unison; then contrapuntally for the next thirty measures, interspersed with frequent "Hallelujahs" in the other voices. Then there follows eight bars in familiar style, announcing: "The kingdom of this world is become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ." Then the motive, "And he shall reign forever and ever" is picked up by the basses, imitated by the tenors, carried on by the altos, and finally by the sopranos. The sopranos then continue with "King of kings" on a long sustained note while the other voices sing "Forever and ever, Hallelujah." This continues for some sixteen bars where the motive "and He shall reign" returns, sung by the basses and repeated by the sopranos. In the closing measures the "King of kings" motive is combined with the previous motive and they, together with the hallelujah motive, rush rapidly to the last grand hallelujah, which is sung in a very stately manner.

It has been reported that Handel said in regard to the "Hallelujah chorus," that: "I did think I did see all Heaven before me, and the great God himself." It is also recorded that "the glorious Hallelujah," which so affected the audience when it was first sung at Convent Garden on the 23d of March, 1734, that the whole assembly, with King George II at its head, rose up as one man and remained standing until the end of the chorus—a reverent custom which has been continued from that day to this whenever the oratorio is performed in any part of England.

Let Their Celestial Concerts All Unite

The chorus "Let their celestial concerts all unite" is taken from Handel's oratorio "Samson" composed in the year 1743. In technical detail it is something like the "Hallelujah chorus" in its development. The sopranos open in the first two bars with the main subject or motive which is answered exactly by the basses. Then the organ in the next two bars announces the praise motive which is taken up by the basses, tenors, and sopranos in succession. The original motive is again repeated by the altos accompanied by the other voices. This is answered by the basses. The praise motive is then taken up by the basses, this time in an inverted position, accompanied by the other voices. This is repeated by the sopranos. In bar twenty-seven the basses again announce the first or original motive. This is repeated while the tenors sing the praise motive. This procedure continues for some twenty-six bars, each part interchanging with the other in the singing of the main themes. The next two bars contain a duet for the tenors and altos, the tenors having the original motive. This is repeated by the accompanying instrument. The praise motive is repeated again by the basses while the other voices accompany. The tenor-alto duet is repeated as before, as well as the instrumental interlude. The next two bars, the praise motive, is repeated by instruments and sopranos. The last four measures close in a broad sweeping tempo, similar to the "Hallelujah Chorus" of the "Messiah" with the words: "In endless morn of light."

In conclusion we might say in summarizing that the choral music of Handel is essentially of the objective, colossal type, always presenting huge climaxes of tone at the concluding cadences. In his contrapuntal treatment he exercised great care in the use of the vocal parts in which he was writing. He never composed for a voice out of its natural range. In this respect he was much like Palestrina who lived two hundred years before.

Handel's works shall ever be fresh in spirit to the appreciators of his music. Surely all will delight to dwell upon the name of Handel because of the wonderful heritage he has passed on to us. May we learn to know him better as a living, moving personality in his music.

Agriculture a Business

By C. E. Irwin

There was a time when it was generally supposed that if a man could not make good at anything else, why, he could, of course, be a farmer. Happily that kind of a nation is being relegated to the scrap heap. It is all right but it has one fault—it isn't true.

The successful farmer to-day is a business man. Many townspeople have not yet learned this fact, but sooner or later the farmer must be so regarded and should take his place on a basis of equality with other business men.

Graceland is one of the first small colleges of this country to recognize the dignity of agriculture; and she has definitely committed herself to the task of rendering service to the most important industry of the Middle West.

Courses have been arranged to meet the needs of high school graduates who wish to do the first two years' work at Graceland. Full credit will be given for this work, toward the bachelor's degree, so that students need not suffer the losses which they have formerly been compelled to do when they have applied for admission to the land grant colleges of the country.

For specific information, inquiries should be directed to the President of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Lady Astor is pushing the bill in the House of Commons in the British Parliament to prohibit the sale of intoxicants to persons under eighteen years of age. According to the American Issue she has won the first tilts in the efforts made by the opposition to kill it by a series of amendments. Thus one amendment sought to exempt beer and wine. In her reply she brought out the fact that all these amendments were designed to wreck the original measure.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Picking Cotton by Machine

The vacuum harvester is the latest cotton picker and so far its use has been declared satisfactory. Many machines have been built for picking cotton but the cotton-boll exudes a gum which quickly clogs and disables the machine. But the vacuum harvester has overcome this difficulty.

The method that is used in the house on rugs and walls to remove dirt is applied here. The suction does the work.

At first the cotton must be picked from out of the middle of a circle of dried sepals and second the cotton must be taken from a variety of positions ranging from several inches off the ground to six feet as in some of the districts of South Carolina. Third, the plant must be protected because the harvest crop consists of three pickings.

Cotton men will look with skepticism upon the announcement of a successful cotton picking machine because so many have been failures but this one is practically an assured success. A description of the machine is given in the Literary Digest:

"The machine exhibits two big sheet steel tanks, on the inside of each of which is a cotton sack some twelve feet long with its mouth held open. A delivery tube enters the mouth of the sack. From this delivery tube leads a flexible rubber hose, on the end of which is a nozzle of a little less than one inch in diameter. A centrifugal pump exhausts the air from the tank. Now open the nozzle of the flexible rubber tube, and a powerful blast of air rushes into it. Approach the nozzle to a cotton boll and the extremely light cotton is caught by the inrush of air and 'jerked hence' in a manner so unbelievably swift that it looks like magic. The dried leaves of the cotton boll, being relatively heavier than the cotton and offering less of what you might call sail surface to the inrushing wind, are left on the plant. The cotton speeds through the tubes at such a rate that if part of the tube be led through a glass vessel all you see in the glass vessel is a faint white streak. Once inside the sheet steel tank the cotton is 'strained' out of the air current by the bag and the air passes through the pump."

The whole apparatus is attached to a Fordson tractor of which there are about 100,000 in the South. Six pickers constitute the crew of one machine. The time involved in picking cotton in the new manner is greatly shortened. Whereas 2,100,000 people had to work 100 days to pick the 1920 cotton crop, the new machine could do the work in the same length of time with 350,000 people.

The Salvation Army College

The Salvation Army has a West Point all its own. Located on a hillside in the Bronx, New York City, this college trains its officers for the army.

The training is perhaps as rigorous as that required in the United States Military Academy on the Hudson. The cadets are specially picked for service. They must have exceptional spiritual, mental, and physical ability and show a complete consecration of their lives to the cause. The cadets arise at 6.30 in the morning and retire at 10 o'clock at night. Each student cares for his own bed, washes his own clothes and does certain work about the building. After a strenuous four years the cadet is rewarded for his work but the reward is not permanent. He is given one year probationary trial before he is confirmed a captain or lieutenant.

The New York Times published an article from which the following is an extract:

"The claim that this is the most economically administered educational institution in the United States is borne out by figures. The weekly payroll for thirteen members of the faculty and staff is $82. Colonel Charles Miles, the principal, and Mrs. Miles, his chief assistant, received just $16 a week between them. The only outside employee is the engineer, who is paid $30 a week, or twice the compensation of Colonel and Mrs. Miles. Colonel Miles is a preceptor who rules with an understanding hand, and the visitor instinctively feels the cheerfulness and well-being of those under his guidance."

Many interesting characters are to be found among the students. In a class of 203 recently graduated one was a young man who had been night city editor of a Cleveland newspaper and who might have risen to an important position as a journalist. Another in the Army is Wong Chong, a Chinese boy who one time "professed a longing for something better." Among others were several ex-army men who had fought in the war and had had varied careers. One of them was an ex-prize fighter.

Colonel Miles, head of the college, has this to say about those who fought in the war and who have now joined the Salvation Army:

"Fundamentally every man is religious, although he may not suspect it himself. Often this instinctive veneration for his Creator and longing to reach a higher plane do not become active until he undergoes stress of spirit. I believe that soldiers who have entered the army will become some of our most valuable officers, because all of them are imbued with a fine aspiration toward nobler things. The events of their soldier days have helped them to gain a gentleness and humility which is the true basis of Christian character"

Methodists in Rome

The American Methodists in Rome have purchased the top of Monte Morio Hill overlooking and near by Saint Peter's Cathedral. The Catholics do not seem to be overly pleased with the additional advance on the part of Protestantism in Rome.

The American Methodists are forward in their propaganda and for a long time have been a thorn in the papal side, notes the Outlook. Some of them have referred to the Catholics in terms hardly conciliatory and assertions have been made that the height of the hill upon which the Methodists threaten to build a basilica with a cryptola bigger than Michelangelo's, symbolizes the difference between Catholicism and Protestantism.

The Methodist buildings already upon Monte Morio are being used for educational purposes. An excellent boys' school is now located there and will probably serve as a preparatory school to the contemplated college of Monte Morio.

There is already a theological college in Rome with which the Methodists are connected so no difficulty will be raised in establishing a new one. However the objection seems to be in "planting the new institution on the highest point about the city, a point near Saint Peter's—the Mother Church of Christendom"—and having a necessary dominating and, as the Italians claim, menacing character."

The resentment is not so much because the Methodists are Protestants as because they are foreigners. There are, however, Italian Methodists who number among them some Italian gentlemen of influence and refinement such as Professor Tagliatela of the Theological School, and the Reverend Carlo Ferrari. But the Italian Methodists are largely dependent upon their American brothers for their "sinews of war." Herein lies the trouble.

Some of the American Methodists in Rome sound the superiority of Americanism and Protestantism and let it be known that they come to Italy to convert the Italian people from a "religion of superstition and mummery to one of reasonableness and light."

The resentment has grown until something worse than mere exasperation may follow. With the doctrine that the end justifies the means, the Catholics are ready to use every means for removing the foreigners. They have petitioned the government to clear out the intolerable Americans from Monte Mario.

"The other day a prominent American Methodist put the case well. He said: 'The Catholics may win. Then the rights of American citizens abroad will be exposed to mockery. The right of free worship will be impugned. What does Mussolini think will be the result on American relations with Italy, and what does the pope think will be the result on the Roman Catholic Church in free America?'"

If the reactionary movement succeeds, the resentment would be felt not only by Protestants but also by some liberal Catholics in America and England. This would hardly help the cause of the Roman Catholic Church in those countries.

In the meantime the Methodists are firmly squatted upon the top of Monte Morio and it may take an earthquake to bring them tumbling down, as many Italians are avowedly hoping.

Increasing One's Vocabulary

Anyone has a vocabulary of ten thousand words, according to Doctor Frank H. Vizetelly, editor of the New Standard Dictionary. This remark is exceptionally encouraging when we have always been told that the average man's vocabulary does not run over a few thousand words, or it may even be in the hundreds.

An interview with Doctor Vizetelly in the New York Times says that this editor has compiled a list of 1,500 words which "everybody" knows and expanding upon this an almost unlimited vocabulary can be obtained. He explains how the number of prefixes and suffixes added to root words will create a vocabulary of thousands of words.

"For example," says Doctor Vizetelly, "take such words as 'abolish,' 'accent,' 'accept,' and 'access.' By adding suffixes we get:

"From 'abolish,' eleven words—abolished, abolishable, abolisher, abolishment, abolition, abolitional, abolitionary, abolitionism, abolitionism, abolitionist, and abolitionize. From 'accent,' ten—accentor, accentric, accentual, accentualist, accentually, accentuality, accentuate, accentuable, accentuation, accentus. From 'accept,' sixteen—acceptable, acceptableness, acceptability, acceptably, acceptance, acceptancy, acceptant, acceptation, accepted, acceptedly, acceptilate, acceptilation, acceptation, acceptive, acceptor, and acceptress. From 'access,' seventeen—accessary, accessarily, accessariness, accessaryship, accessible, accessibility, accessibly, accession, accessional, accessit, accessive, accessively, accessorial, accessoriness, accessorious, accessory, and accessorially. This gives a total of fifty-four words. Add to these such other forms as may be made by the use of the common privatives, in non, un, etc., and we get an increase of twenty. Thus out of four parent words we have obtained a total of seventy-four. Apply this plan to 10,000 other parent words and the total could easily be increased to 740,000."

This is an optimistic attitude but one will have to remember that reading vocabulary is far greater than a speaking vocabulary. One may define the "sense" of a word in reading whereas he could not define the word or even use it in speech. The only way actually to increase one's vocabulary is to begin to use new words. Doctor Vizetelly suggests the "Daily Dozen" applied to vocabulary.

The fact is that the average person knows much fewer words than he imagines if the test is strictly applied, but his vocabulary will appear quite formidable if he includes all the words which he can give the meaning of in the process of reading.

Twentieth Amendment Advocated

Not satisfied with the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution which gave nation-wide suffrage to women, some of the leaders of the National Woman's Party are advocating a Twentieth Amendment to give women equal rights with men under the law.

The comments of the press recognize that while something is to be gained by the women on one hand, they have much to lose on the other, for many existing statutes are especially designed for the protection of women.

The Woman's Party, however, calls for the "complete emancipation of women and absolute freedom from all discrimination—legal, economical, professional, and educational.

Miss Alice Paul, vice president of the National Woman's Party, is quoted in the Literary Digest:

"The party will bring the proposed amendment to the special attention of the President and of the leaders of all political parties on the reconvening of Congress. We plan to have this amendment introduced as promptly as possible and to have hearings before the committee to which it is referred in each House.

"In the past two years 23,000,000 women have been benefited by the passage of equal rights legislation in fourteen States. In Delaware, Georgia, Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, Mississippi, Louisiana, Pennsylvania, the rights of women as guardians of minor children have been enlarged. In Delaware, Georgia, New York, and Virginia the right to inherit property has been equalized. In Delaware, Louisiana, Maryland, and Oklahoma women have been made eligible to public office. In Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Virginia married women have been empowered to choose their own residences for voting purposes. In Maine they have been admitted to jury service. Various other minor reforms have been effected. But in only one State—Wisconsin—has our general equal rights bill met with success.

"The only way in which complete equality can be gained for all women within a reasonable time is by Federal amendment, just as the right to vote was gained for women throughout the country that way."

Whistling at Crossings

The many accidents occurring at railroad crossings makes us wonder at the report of a recent test applied to the enginemen on the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas railroad system which shows that six per cent of the engineers did not whistle at crossings.

The general manager of the road thinks this is a good record but an editorial writer of The Railway Age would like to ask any engineman or road foreman if he is satisfied with ninety-four per cent efficiency.

There are some rules that should be obeyed because they are rules, and judgment should not be substituted when the rule if applied would operate satisfactorily. Whistling at crossings is one. No matter whether the engineman can see the crossing is clear, the rule properly observed may at some time save a life.

The same writer is quoted in the Literary Digest:

"Of course, if one's permanent record were to depend on close adherence to the rule to whistle for all crossings, and the runners most neglectful were to have their names put at the bottom of the list, there would be no difficulty in making 100 per cent. We may assume that the 6 per cent of engineers, in that M. K. T. record, who did not whistle, were alert and could see the highway far enough in advance to be sure that no wayfarer was in danger—the officers of the road must have made some such assumption or they would not have called the record 'good'—but if satisfactory records are to be kept and are to be of use, it is necessary to cut out all such indeterminate elements. To have comparable records which will be of value for future studies, and available for defense in case negligence is charged in a court, it is necessary to do a lot of whistling which, from a narrow local and temporary point of view, may be wholly unnecessary. Somewhere, sometime, some engineer will assume that no whistle is needed and his assumption will prove to be wrong. Many a time an express train could make a hundred-mile journey, safe from derailment, if 10 per cent of the spikes in the track were gone; but the only business-like rule for the trackman is to keep 100 per cent of them in place all the time. Careless ears in the heads of automobile drivers, needing an audible warning every time they approach a railroad track, are now about as numerous as the spikes in the track. The engineer, like the trackman, must make his safety record by means of systematic attention to countless small details, with his thought centered on the one point of doing the duty, oblivious to any speculations about 99½ per cent being as good as 100."

A Movie-Made Reputation

Just what impression other countries would gain concerning America through the motion pictures we have sent abroad would scarcely be guessed. That a true idea of American life could be had from the movies would also not be contended. But whoever could imagine that America is like this? Following is an account published in the London Evening News, based upon a description of America gained through the movies:

"It is inhabited in the East by unscrupulous but enormously successful business men, who devote their nights to squandering in cabarets their ill-gotten gains of the day before. In the West 'bad men' rob stage coaches and banks and shoot sheriffs and their partners in crime and spend a good deal of time rolling on the ground in attempts to gouge each other's eyes out. The North is peopled by bearded scoundrels, who go there to escape from the law, to steal mining claims and to menace lonely girls snowbound in log cabins. The South is notable for cacti and half-breeds. The last-named have no particular vice; they are just bad."

The Moving School

You have heard of singing schools and spelling schools and other kinds of schools but have you ever heard of a moving school?

This is the school that goes about on wheels expanding the educational possibilities beyond the walls of the schoolroom. The first school busses were used in the country to gather up kiddies and bring them to the schoolhouse and then to take them home. The next step was in connection with the consolidated schools, where the motor bus brought pupils from miles around. But some ingenious person wondered why these busses should be idle all day long, so the moving schoolhouse came into vogue. Afternoon on Saturdays the busses were used to take the children to athletic events, and sometimes the nature study class was taken out in the middle of the day in the bus.

Now this moving schoolhouse works all the time, taking the botany class out into the country, the sociology class into the environs of the city, and the geology class into the hills to hunt fossils. No longer does the child learn that the "Ox eats hay," as the Review of Reviews suggests, by reading about it in the book. The class goes out and looks at the ox eating hay and then reads about it. The trip will long be remembered and talked about. That is the way to learn.

Perhaps one of the greatest uses of the bus is for transportation to summer camps. This is now done in many communities when children are conveyed to and from the community summer resorts for children and others.

The school bus has come to stay and it is another means for spreading education. Modern methods are indeed a time saver and they also make study a pleasure. The child that used to have to be whipped to get his lesson now has to be sent home because he likes to stay at school. The school that is not up to this standard is still failing in its mission with young people.

Brain Food

Brain food seems to be what is more commonly termed "food for thought" for an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association ridicules the idea that fish is brain food.

Fish and some certain prepared breakfast foods can no longer be considered as special nutrients conducive to clear thinking. The idea, of course, is an old illusion which has never died out. With the modern means for spreading propaganda through advertising, however, certain persons have taken advantage of the old illusion to sell their products.

During the war the hope of increasing the consumption of fish to conserve meat met with the problem of educating the public to eat fish on other days of the week as well as on Friday, fish day. A legitimate form of advertising was carried out but recently campaigns have been directed to increase the use of specific fishes.

"In widely circulated advertisements of 'Shad—order it today' we are told by the promoter of the sales effort that 'it is a tissue builder and for brain-workers has no equal.' Here is an unworthy perpetuation of the old absurd adage that fish is brain food. The fallacy of the assumption that there are specific foods for brain, skin, muscles, lungs, or liver building have been pointed out too often to require repetition."

Old Clothes Pay Rent

Alexandropol Armenia: A bale of second-hand American clothes paid the rent bill of the largest orphanage in the world for the past six months. It was given by the Near East Relief in exchange for the use of the few privately owned buildings that are included in the equipment of its orphanage center here where approximately 20,000 Armenian youngsters are sheltered, the greater part of them in former military barracks provided rent free by the government.

The native textile industry has been almost entirely destroyed during the war conditions which have prevailed during the past seven years and the depreciation of native currency has made the importation of cloth practically impossible. As a result garments of all sorts are in high demand and American relief workers have been able to draw on clothing contributions from the United States, thereby effecting a tremendous saving in relief funds and at the same time preventing widespread distress among people of all classes who otherwise would have been unable to clothe themselves against the bitter Transcaucasian winter.

London Reunion at Springbank

With rippling waters, clear blue skies, the ground rising tier upon tier, whose sides are covered with maples, spruce, pine, hemlock, and willow trees, the London district reunion opened in the most picturesque spot one could imagine. Springbank Park is the place of gathering, a spot about five miles from the city of London. Its springs are widely known for their medicinal properties, always attracting people from far and near who think them a source of good. A more beautiful location could hardly be obtained unless one took a trip to the valley of the Dee or Don in Scotland.

Bishop B. R. McGuire, Apostle J. F. Curtis, Patriarchs John Shields, J. F. Martin, and R. C. Russell, and Missionaries S. G. St. John and H. Arthur Koehler were obtained for speakers at the reunion. Institute work was in charge of Mrs. Arthur Koehler. Music and recreation were under the supervision of Arthur Koehler.

Our Episcopal cook not only treated us in the most humane way, but felt inclined to speak of our people in glowing terms.

The work of the reunion committee was greatly appreciated, and this second two week's reunion was considered a successful project.

Yes, we are going to have another such gathering next year and, if signs do not mistake, it will be larger than the one this year.

ARTHUR KOEHLER.

Reunion of Kentucky and Tennessee District

The Kentucky and Tennessee District reunion convened at Foundry Hill, July 28, 1923. In the absence of District President J. R. McClain, the chairman of the reunion committee was in charge and proceeded to organize in the usual order. Elder William Bath was chosen to preside over the reunion with Brethren J. R. McClain, A. E. Stone, and Bishop C. J. Hunt associated. O. S. Caldwell was chosen secretary, and others were chosen to fill various offices.

The presidency arranged the order of meetings as follows: 9 a. m., prayer service; 11, preaching; 2 and 8 p. m., preaching. The time in between was filled with song services and Bishop Hunt lectured on the ancient inhabitants of the American continent, the building of the Kirtland Temple, the financial needs of the church, and other subjects that were equally interesting to all. There were some round table meetings and many questions were asked and answered.

Brother and Sister Burrell and son Robert, from Louisville, Kentucky, were present at the beginning of the reunion. Brother Burrell remained over Sunday but his work with the railroad company prevented his remaining longer. Sister Burrell was there in the interest of the Department of Women and did a splendid work. She occupied many times in explaining her line of work and on various occasions entertained the little folks by holding prayer and testimony meetings and lectures.

The old folks as well as the young engaged in games on the grounds and all seemed to enjoy themselves. There seemed to be more unity of spirit than at any previous reunion in the district.

The preaching throughout the reunion tended to build up and strengthen. All felt very favorably impressed with the addresses of Elder Stone and Bishop Hunt. They manifested a fatherly spirit while here and all seemed to love and honor them. They will long be remembered. Elder Bath and Bishop Hunt were both called home before the end of the reunion but Elder Stone was permitted to remain with us to the end and delivered an excellent sermon on the closing Sunday night.

At the close the congregation sang "God be with you till we meet again," with great fervor.

D. S. CALDWELL, Secretary.

Reunion at Eagle City

The reunion of the Western Oklahoma District was held August 3 to 12. The weather was exceedingly dry and hot but there seemed to be such a peaceful spirit present throughout the meetings that even the hot weather became tolerable. It is conceded by all who were in attendance that it was the best reunion ever held in the district.

The attendance was better than in previous years and the meetings were spiritual and uplifting. All left the camp with a determination to do more for the cause of Christ this year than they have ever done before. They also plan to come back next year to make the reunion even a greater success.

Western Oklahoma is on the map so far as real active, consecrated Saints are concerned. There are few districts ahead of this one in true, noble, unselfish service. Surely nothing but good can follow the efforts of this united people.

The most commendable of all is the group of young people who are an honor to any people. These young people met in the woods every morning for prayer meeting and were indeed blessed in their gathering. Like Abraham of old, God met with them under the oak, and they were comforted and encouraged by the presence of the divine Spirit. They have at least learned that only as they continue in communion with God are they able to be of assistance to the church.

It is a source of great encouragement to see the activity and ability of the young people of this district. Surely the church will be safe in the hands of such noble young people whose lives are consecrated to the service of Christ and humanity. Surely they will be instrumental in pushing forward the cause of Zion.

Council Bluffs Reunion

Sunday was a very busy day. The preaching was done by Elder C. F. Putnam at 11 a. m., Elder P. R. Burton at 2.30 p. m., and Apostle F. Henry Edwards at 8 p. m. Young people's prayer meeting was held at 6 a. m. and the regular prayer service at 8. Study class work was conducted at 9.30 and at 4.15 p. m. At the latter hour priesthood meeting was conducted by Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

On Monday at 7.45 a. m. a recreational season was enjoyed. At 9 a. m. a very spiritual prayer service was held, at which time many hearts were touched and made tender. Preaching at 2.30 p. m. was by Brother Amos Lamson, an Omaha Indian, who had been ordained a priest. His talk was well received $85,000 in value made during the past six months by Walter L. Ambrose, Superintendent of the Near East Relief purchasing department for the Alexandropol district, were paid for in old clothes. Less than five per cent was purchased with cash. Corn grits were used for the remaining five per cent.

Fuel for the orphanages and equipment for the industrial training shops were the chief articles purchased locally.

and was emphasized by a touching talk by Elder P. R. Burton. At 4 p. m. some of the young people went for a swim.

Patriarch Ammon White arrived Monday afternoon and entered at once into his patriarchal work. All were saddened that he should be called home August 15, on account of the death of his wife's mother, Sister W. D. Bullard. His sermon helped some to see more fully the value of living in accord with the laws of health and to observe the Word of Wisdom as given in section 86 of the Doctrine and Covenants.

Other visitors at the reunion are: Elder P. R. Burton and Brother Amos Lamson who could remain only a short time, Elder B. S. Lambkin, Sister Blanche Edwards, Elder F. T. Mussell, and Bishop F. B. Blair. Bishop Blair preached for us on August 15, giving a very practical sermon along temporal lines.

A large tent has been put up for the Oriole circle at the Belmont Mission, several of whom are not members of the church.

The serving of lunches and the sale of groceries and confectionery is very satisfactory. No sales during the services has been a pleasing feature.

The reunion at Council Bluffs has been very satisfactory. The preaching and prayer meetings as a rule have been very uplifting and spiritual. The study work is of a high order, and the priesthood meetings are of much interest. Recreational activities are also well spoken of.

Memorial Service on Reunion Opening

An article in the Council Bluffs Daily Nonpareil tells of the opening of the Pottawattamie and Fremont district reunion at Prospect Park, Council Bluffs, on August 10, at 9.30 a. m. The evening preceding the opening a miscellaneous program was given. Prayer service opened the session, with a business meeting following.

J. F. Mintun will represent the Herald Publishing House, taking orders for books and papers. Apostle F. Henry Edwards of Independence, Missouri, Blanche Edwards, recently from England, Elder C. F. Putnam, who has just closed a series of tent meetings at Hazel Dell, Elder F. B. Blair of Kansas City, and Patriarch Ammon White of Independence, Missouri, will be speakers at the reunion.

The afternoon of the first day was devoted to a memorial service for the late President Harding. Elder J. F. Mintun preached the sermon. A poem eulogizing the President was also read.

Excellent Reunion at Lamoni

The twentieth reunion of the Lamoni Stake closed last Sunday under ideal conditions. The weather was of the best, the attendance large, the meetings of a very high order and the Saints in excellent spirits. We mention the closing day in particular because weather conditions during the greater part of the reunion were very discouraging, yet did not dampen to any great degree the spirit of the occasion. There were only two nights out of the twelve that it did not rain, and a large percentage of the days as well. This made the roads almost impassable and prevented people not camping on the grounds from attending and thus the general attendance was materially decreased.

The number camping was almost up to the average, the slight decrease being due to the fact that some from outlying districts attended the young people's convention in June, who otherwise would have been with us at the later date. There were pitched: Ninety residence tents, six service tents, and three pup tents. There were in attendance one hundred and seventy visitors from twenty-eight other stakes and districts.

Outside the discouraging weather conditions, the reunion was very successful. The theme of the gathering was "Our need of Zion," which seemed to strike a responsive chord. The cooperative spirit of service was very marked and opportunity was seized by many to help make the reunion a success. Especially was this noticeable among the young people.

Prayer services were held each morning, followed by preaching service or a departmental meeting. The evenings were given over principally to preaching services. Girls and boys meetings were held daily, and special story-telling hours for the children. Young people's prayer meetings were held each morning and the attendance and percentage of participation in them was very encouraging. The devotion of the young people during the entire reunion was very marked. Afternoons were given over on alternate days to organized play, and on other days to the cultivation of sociability. One evening was also devoted to recreation with a mixed program preceding a bonfire and marshmallow roast. The recreational activities were whole-heartedly entered into by a rather larger number than usual.

Besides excellent choir numbers, special musical features in the way of solos, duets, quartets, orchestra numbers, etc., were furnished daily and half-hour concerts each Sunday evening. Lamoni has such splendid musical talent and it was made to play a very great part in the success of the meetings.

Besides the local ministry we have had with us of the Quorum of Twelve J. F. Garver and F. Henry Edwards; of the order of patriarchs, Ammon White; of the missionary force, Ward L. Christy, L. G. Holloway, John R. Lentell, G. R. Wells and James Thomas, also Bishop F. B. Blair.

The health of the camp was excellent especially considering the extremely damp weather and the difficulty experienced in keeping bedding dry. Rules of health and sanitation were carefully observed by the camp, regular hours for rest and quietude, resulting in a physical condition conducive to spiritual growth.

The meetings during the reunion were of a high spiritual order. The prayer meetings were inspirational, the preaching full of good advice suited to the needs of the people, all to the end that an understanding of the theme, "Our need of Zion," might work out a spiritual growth in the Saints conducive to a full realization of their dreams.

Reunion Opens at Pinconning, Michigan

We awoke this morning when the bugle blew at 5.30, and everyone assembled in the large tent at 7 for prayer. We had prayer service at 8.30 followed by business meeting for organization. Elder Matthew Umphrey was chosen to preside and to be associated with Apostle P. M. Hanson when he arrives.

Brother J. Shields of Canada came this afternoon and Elder B. H. Doty is here and was the speaker at 2 p. m. From 3 till supper time is given over to recreation. At 10.30 the bugle blows and all lights must be out by 11.

There are fifty-two tents pitched with about two hundred in attendance. Several Indians attended the evening service and show a great interest. Our meetings are very good so far, and we hope that our work and life during the past year will merit us the spiritual blessings we had last year.

Meals are served free, as is the custom in this district. We serve no meat, tea, or coffee.

Each day's program will be similar to the above.

GLADYS UMPHREY.

Independence

Saturday night, August 18, a crowd of about four thousand people attempted to squeeze into three thousand seats to see the motion picture, now a regular feature on Saturday night through the summer.

Sunday night saw another capacity house gathered on the Campus to hear Elder A. B. Phillips's sermon.

At 7.30 o'clock on both Saturday and Sunday nights the L. D. S. band gave a concert.

The quiet and order prevailing at these immense outdoor gatherings are the remarkable features of the events. Not a sound is to be heard within the quiet zone except that which comes from the platform in course of the programs. Truly it is a marvelous sight to see these large community meetings every week end on the Campus.

The series of Bible pictures was continued Sunday evening following the sermon, the last one being entitled, "Noah and the ark."

Services in Zion churches were as follows: Stone church, 11 a. m. preaching by Bishop Charles Fry who has recently returned from England. Enoch Hill, 11 a. m., preaching by Elder Charles Edmunds. Liberty Street Church, 11 a. m. children's services. Walnut Park, 11 a. m., Walter W. Smith, followed by Mrs. Walter W. Smith who talked on kindergarten work.

The Stone Church choir sang, "Unfold ye portals," by Gounod and Miss Thelma Vincent sang, "I know that my Redeemer lives."

The Bar-Gars still lead in the L. D. S. Baseball League, winning from Walnut Park by a score of 14 to 6 on Saturday afternoon. Their percentage in standing is now .777. The Herald team stands next with .600, having defeated the I. X. L.'s by a score of 15 to 4, also played on Saturday. The I. X. L., with .400 per cent follows, and Walnut Park stands last with .272 per cent. Two more weeks of games will close the season with the contest growing keen.

The Book of Mormon centennial will be celebrated on September 21 and 22 by the churches in Zion. On the evening of the 21st the opening meeting will be held, when testimonies will be given by a group of older people who have seen and heard the three witnesses who handled the plates and saw the translation being made. The next morning and afternoon will be devoted to meetings of the priesthood. On the evening of September 22 a pageant, written by Mrs. S. A. Burgess will be presented by the Independence Dramatic Club. There will be about one hundred taking part in this pageant. So successful was the one presented at the last General Conference that the one this year is attracting wide attention.

Beginning September 23, a series of evangelical services will be started, which will last for one week. General Conference opens on Monday, October 1, at 10 o'clock.

The music appreciation course being conducted by James R. Houghton at the Stone Church on Friday evenings is attracting large crowds. These programs and lectures are occupying the time usually devoted to the study of the Department of Recreation and Expression and are under its auspices. The meetings are open to the public and no charge is made for attendance. At the second meeting held on August 17, Mr. Job Negeim, from Jerusalem, sang folk songs in four languages—German, Russian, Spanish, and Arabic. Miss Emma Sneed on the violin and Mr. Houghton with vocal solos also contributed to the evening's program. These numbers were supplemented by records on the Victrola and by congregational singing. An old English folk song entitled "O no John" greatly delighted the audience which attempted to learn it.

Besides the programs printed for the occasion a sheet containing words for congregational singing was also passed out.

The program for August 24, is as follows:

1. Hymns:
 - a. "Abide with me".....Lyte (1793-1847)
 - b. "Lead, kindly light".....Newman (1801-1890)

Congregation
2. Bass Solo: "Lord God of Abraham"—Elijah Mendelssohn (1809-1847)
- Mr. George Anway
3. Band: "Dance Macabre".....Saint-Sæns 1835-19)
Vessella's Italian Band (Victor Record)
4. Chorals:

Holden Stake Items

Elder J. W. A. Bailey closed his services at Atherton on Sunday August 12, and the tent has been loaned to Independence to be used in a series of meetings in that place. Brother Bailey had splendid interest at Atherton. Four were baptized and much good was done in the way of building up and strengthening the Saints.

Three were baptized at Lees Summit last Sunday and more baptisms are expected in the near future.

On Friday the citizens of Lees Summit met in a united service at Memorial Hall. Appropriate exercises in memory of our late President Harding were held. The pastor, Bishop R. May, was on the program.

Sunday, August 19, is set aside as young people's day. All the services of the day will be particularly for the young people.

At Bates City on Sunday, August 5, three were baptized by Brother Frank Cotterell, the Sunday school superintendent, and confirmed by Elders Davis and Hancock.

Brother F. E. Ford and family have moved to Lamoni where Brother Ford will take up his work as superintendent of the Lamoni public schools. Elder G. W. Hancock will occupy Brother Ford's farm.

The pastor of the southern and eastern part of the Stake met at Knobnoster on the 12th in special conference with the stake presidency. The pastors present were: James Duffey, Post Oak; G. S. Daniel, Warrensburg; H. G. Thayer, Marshall; and Frank Good, Knobnoster. Elder F. A. McWethy preached in the morning and Elder D. J. Krahl at night.

The Department of Women at Holden had a social the 14th in the interest of beautifying the cemetery grounds.

Brother Martin L. Haney and family, who have lived here for a few years, are moving back to Clarksburg, West Virginia. Brother Haney is one of our reliable teachers and will be missed. We trust the Clarksburg Saints will enlist the services of Brother and Sister Haney in church work there as they are good workers.

There is a noticeable quietness in Warrensburg since the close of the summer school. More than two thousand students who were here during the summer have nearly all departed for their homes. Elder W. S. Macrae preached both morning and evening, August 12, the evening service being held on the lawn.

Elder Lyman Fike and family and J. D. McPherson and his family are moving to Independence. A. E. Weaver and family moved to Sedalia the 14th.

Brother Nalmar Johnson, who for the past few years has been conducting the Fourth Ward Grocery, has erected a modern store building next to the old building.

Kansas City Stake

Our stake missionary, Amos T. Higdon, concluded a series of three weeks of special meetings Sunday night, August 5, at the Argentine Church. The Argentine people had previously erected a platform at the rear of the church large enough for the speaker and singers; the lawn was leveled up, and with a screen fence on the street side, made a fine lawn meeting place, and here the meetings were held. The attendance upon the part of nonmembers was not very great. They preferred to remain on their own porches and lawns where they could hear well. As Brother Higdon has a good strong voice, it was possible for a great many to hear him, even though they were not on the premises. Bernice Griffith, stake chorister, when not in attendance, provided leaders for the music most of the time. While there are no immediate results as to baptisms yet, their neighbors heard the gospel as we teach it, perhaps for the first time.

Brother Higdon will begin a series of meetings at the Second Church, Twenty-first and Belleview, probably the 21st of August.

The Fourth Church people are making some extensive repairs on their building. They are much needed, as there is not sufficient room for their constantly growing congregation. Brother J. O. Worden, the pastor there, has been quite successful in building up the work, and this is shown in the Sunday school, which now numbers about one hundred.

The Northeast Mission has allowed their pastor, Brother Joseph Curtis, an extended vacation. He is spending the time with relatives in northern Arkansas. During the interval Brother C. A. Selbe is looking after the pastoral work for them.

Two-Day Meeting in Central Michigan

On July 21 and 22 the Saints of the Central Michigan District enjoyed a two-day meeting at Midland, Michigan.

The weather Saturday and Sunday was fine and the Spirit of God was there to a great extent. The people of Midland turned the schoolhouse over to the Saints to serve dinner in. The meals were free, as is the custom in the Central Michigan District, not excepting the young people's reunion.

The Saturday morning prayer meeting was in charge of Elder B. H. Doty, assisted by Elder George Bailey. At the close of the meeting, Matthew Umphrey, district president, was chosen to preside over the two-day meeting. Brother Doty was elected chorister and Sister Emma Methner organist. Also ushers and an administering committee were chosen.

Elder Matthew Umphrey preached at 10.30, after which, at 12.30, dinner was served in the schoolhouse. In the afternoon Elder Bailey and Elder Ed Welch preached some good sermons.

Sunday morning prayer meeting was called at 9.30 and over a hundred were present, while eight prayers and fifty-seven testimonies were offered. One little girl was confirmed and a baby girl blessed. The Spirit of God's love flowed from heart to heart throughout the meeting which ended at 12.20. We feel safe in saying that this prayer meeting is among the best that we have ever attended, and we believe it is only a small taste of the meetings awaiting us at the young people's reunion at Pinconning in the near future.

The preaching services in the afternoon and evening were accompanied by the Spirit that is promised to the elders in the latter days.

Progress in Manchester, England

It seems quite a long time since anything from this part of the world has appeared in the HERALD, so despite the fact that we are busy, we thought we should let people know we are still alive and making ourselves felt both in the affairs of men and in the church.

Many changes have come to us since our last letter. Some have been taken from our midst by the hand of death, some have left for other climes and scenes of action, and others forced by circumstances to retire from the field of activity. The latter are a source of help with their counsel and advice and prove the old saying to be true, "Old men for counsel and young men for war." If this could be sensed throughout the church, especially in this country, the church would make more advancement than it has for some time past.

There may not be any glowing account of the work done by the ministry, that is, the eldership in particular, because of the peculiar circumstances obtaining in the relationship of master and man in commerce. The great setback to international affairs caused by the European tangle, affecting as it does the whole of civilization, has caused bad trade, loss of wages, and a general hindrance to our progress.

However, despite these things, we are attempting to buy land and build a church where we can invite our friends and neighbors to come and worship without a feeling that we must apologize for our humble place of meeting. The task of raising sufficient funds seems gigantic with our small numbers but we have faith that we shall be successful.

When those who at one time worshiped with us read these lines their hearts will be made to rejoice at the upward progress we are trying to make, and we know they would be glad to help the good work along.

The British Isles stands high as a branch of the church and the Manchester Branch is no small part of the mission and its sons and daughters are desirous of maintaining the prestige, the lofty pinnacle of honor and good will, and with our clarion call "Service for mankind" we are going to charge the ramparts of doubt and infidelity and carry our banner to the heights.

EDWARD MALONEY.

Another Means for Advertising

Attractive stationery has been issued by the New York and Philadelphia district reunion. It consists of a letter-head reading "Deer Park Reunion Grounds, under auspices of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S., New York and Pennsylvania District, August 4-August 19, 1923. (Full Moon.) New Hope, Pennsylvania."

In the margin of the left-hand side of the paper is printed

Conference Daily

The General Conference is soon to convene. Missionaries and Saints from all over the world will be there, each contributing color to these great church gatherings, of prime import to young and old.

The news is written right on the scene of action and hurried to you in the mail of the same day. Last year's experience with the post office department indicates that we can get prompt service and speedy delivery.

The Conference Daily will be issued beginning the first day of the conference, Monday, October 1, and continue each day (except Sunday) till the close. It will average eight pages the size of the weekly HERALD and contain vastly more interesting material than can be published in the weekly edition.

Every branch ought to send in a large club of subscriptions. Every family ought to have the Conference Daily.

Please order early. We need time to make up the special mailing list required, and can do this more satisfactorily if we have time before conference to do it. During each conference many send in money, asking for back numbers, and often are disappointed. We cannot promise to furnish back numbers after conference starts. Order early and get the whole series promptly.

the names and addresses of the general reunion committee. Also is printed a description of what will be offered at the reunion as follows:

"Give yourself a real treat at the big spring and lake in the Solebury Mountains. Inspiring services and pleasing programs arranged for all with camping, canoeing, camp fires, and tennis, berrying, baseball, swings, swimming, and water tobogganing. Grounds electric lighted, high, cool, and dry. Commissary, refreshment tent, fresh food from fine farmers served daily. The ideal place for an ideal vacation in open woods and fields, among real people. All are welcome. Apply for particulars. Register now to select your tent location, with small deposit."

This is a bit of advertising that is not only attractive but useful. It offers a suggestion to other reunions as one way for advertising the reunion, and from all reports the one at Deer Park is enjoying a season of marked success.

Wife of Patriarch Shields Dies

Janet Ann Robson, wife of Patriarch John Shields, died on July 24, at the Weston Sanitarium, Toronto.

She was born sixty-three years ago and spent her early life in Shelbourne as a member of the Templar Lodge. There she became acquainted with John Shields whom she married. Four sons and four daughters were born to them; John Stanley, William Nephi, Ethel Robena, Margaret Oracy, Thomas Alma, Percy Claremont (deceased) and his twin sister, Lilly May, who died in infancy, and Mary Elizabeth.

In the Shelbourne Free Press is given an account of the recent years of her life and her family:

"Percy, who enlisted for service in the late World War, was wounded in one of the last heavy struggles in France. On recovery he returned home to Toronto, then to New Ontario, where he was drowned in Kenogami Lake on October 21, 1919, and whose body was not recovered until May 9, 1920. Had he been slain overseas the blow would not have been so unexpectedly crushing to the fond mother, but only those who have passed through a similar trial can realize the grief and anxiety of that mother as day after day she waited at the home of her daughter in New Liskeard for the recovery of his body, as the father, brother, and other men grappled in vain until the lake became frozen over. Those long months of worry and suspense seemed to undermine her health, and to make matters worse, soon after her return home to Toronto she fell down cellar and broke her right arm. This was not long restored to use when she was taken with nervous illness and had only recovered therefrom when the two daughters, Ethel and Mary, were seriously hurt in an automobile accident on the Toronto and Hamilton highway. Early in the summer of 1922, when Mary went West with Ethel to recuperate, Mrs. Shields took a trip to Timmins and New Liskeard, visiting with her son and daughter till the fall, and later visited at Acton, Guelph, Hillsburg and other places, intending to spend the winter with her sister, Mrs. Mowat of Shelburne. On January 18 last when she and her husband were at the home of his brother, William, on the thirtieth anniversary of the marriage of the latter, her health seemed better than for years. However, on returning to her home in Toronto she caught cold, and later returned to Mrs. Mowat's, where she was pronounced tubercular. After a month and a half at Weston Sanitarium she passed away suddenly."

The funeral service was held in Toronto, sermon by Elder J. A. Wilson.

Her faith in the work enabled her to bear the sacrifice of loneliness and care for the family during the many months of her husband's absence in the mission field.

Department of Agriculture Graceland College

It is believed that this new department in Graceland will afford an added opportunity to render the young people of the church a piece of service of very great value. Being located in the midst of the principal agricultural belt of the United States, and, with the full cooperation of the United States and the State Department of Agriculture, Graceland is in a position to carry on courses in this department on a very efficient basis.

The new college year opens September 10, and a catalogue giving details and information of a general character will be sent on application to The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Died suddenly July 24, 1923, at Weston Sanitarium where she was being treated for tubercular trouble. Sermon by James A. Wilson at Toronto. Interment in Shelburne Cemetery in charge of John H. Taylor. Leaves three sons and three daughters: John Stanley, Timmins, Ontario; William Nephi, Toronto; Thomas Alma, Regina, Saskatchewan; Mrs. Ethel Robena Wilson, Melfort, Saskatchewan; Margaret Oracy Bartleman, New Liskeard, Ontario; and Miss Mary Elizabeth, Toronto. Two children, Percy Claremont and Lilly May preceded her.

BOZARTH.—William T. Bozarth was born at Mirable, Missouri, March 25, 1847. Baptized by J. S. Lee, December 13, 1870. Ordained an elder on the same day. Ordained a seventy September 30, 1879, by Apostles James Caffall and W. H. Kelley and Elder J. C. Crabb. He spent many days in active missionary service at great sacrifice. Died at Colorado Springs, August 6, 1923. His first wife and a son, William, preceded him. Services at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, in charge of Elder R. S. Salyards. Sermon by Elder J. M. Terry. Leaves wife and five children: John Bozarth and Mrs. Anna Murphy, of Independence; Alice Bozarth and Mrs. A. A. Buschow, of Wichita, Kansas; and Mattie Mills, of New Mexico; also nine grandchildren.

PART FOUR

A stranger to Cape Cod may have had in mind an outthrusting of sand into the sea, possibly with a village at the extremity, all of which might be walked about in a few hours. A visit to the cape will greatly help to correct his erroneous impressions.

A drive from Onset, where our reunion is held, to the point of the "lower cape" will take one a journey of some seventy-five miles, through numerous towns and villages, most of which have a stirring history of adventure by sea and land going back to early colonial days.

Such a land cruise the Chevrolet 490 took, by way of old Dennisport, where your servant had an appointment to speak to the Saints. Continuing our trip the next day through the forests of scrub pine and oak, over hills and low sand dunes, presently we came to the end of our quest, Provincetown, at the extreme end of Cape Cod.

In a way American history began at Provincetown. It is one of the oldest and most interesting of American towns. And yet it is in appearance most foreign and old world. Its most important thoroughfare, Front Street, is long and crooked and so narrow that vehicles pass with difficulty. It is bordered by a motley collection of buildings, both old and new. On this street in the days of Andrew Jackson was built a board walk with money derived from the city's share of public revenue. Many of the older inhabitants regarded it as a dangerous and extravagant innovation and never set foot upon it—always plodding down the sandy middle of the street. To-day there is concrete pavement and one narrow concrete walk. Yet for all that the street seems foreign, and in more than one sense, one may, as Thoreau said, "Stand here and put all America behind him."

Of late Provincetown has become a sort of artist colony, which makes it seem more "other world." We saw several rather ancient ladies and some gentlemen of distraught appearance painting by the wayside. Genius did not appear to predominate. A resident of the cape said to us, "They are just nuts. Do you have nuts in Missouri?" We assured him that we have nuts in Missouri, native hickory and walnuts—and others. In the shop windows appeared some very pretty paintings mingled with cubist and impressionistic atrocities such as a man with delirium tremens might paint with the aid of a pot of paris green, Monday's bluing tablets, a bottle of shoe polish, and a whitewash brush.

Presently our threading of the winding streets brought us to the beach, and there confronting us was a granite monument bearing a bronze tablet which informed us that at that place the Pilgrim Fathers first set foot from the Mayflower, November 11, 1620. Now we had always thought of them as sailing to Plymouth, selecting a suitable rock, and landing. But it seems they had trouble finding the rock, and landed here first, stayed some time, and then moved on to what is now Plymouth. In Provincetown one never hears Plymouth mentioned; in Plymouth one never hears of the landing at Provincetown.

If we at the point of the cape may put all America behind us; they, landing, found all America before them—a vast continent with great rivers, broad plains, sky challenging mountain ranges, all to them unguessed. But they brought ideas enough in their heads and fervor enough in their hearts to store such an empire. Not lesser men were fit to land on Cape Cod at that particular epoch. In the cabin of the Mayflower, before they landed, they drew up and signed the "Pilgrim's Compact," the first state paper in American history, forerunner of the Constitution, equal in importance, according to Edward Everett Hale, to the Declaration of Independence.

By this document they did "solemnly and mutually in the presence of God," combine themselves together "into a civil body politick," they themselves, the people, "to enact, constitute, and frame such just and equal laws, ordinances, acts, and constitutions," as might be for the "general good of the colonie," and pledged themselves to obey such laws when enacted. The document began, "In the name of God, Amen."

Religion was the life blood of the democracy conceived in the cabin of the Mayflower in the harbor of Provincetown, born later in battle and inspired legislation, and nurtured by such men as Washington and Lincoln. The pernicious anemia of atheism and skepticism now impoverishes that blood. We need a band of Pilgrim grandsons to infuse again new blood into the veins of the state. The president of the Argentine Republic told Roger W. Babson that North America has always been greater than South America because while Spaniards came to South America seeking gold, the Pilgrim Fathers came to North America seeking God. What now if their descendants shall altogether divert their energies to the search for gold and pleasure?

While the Pilgrims tarried here they made some explorations of the cape. They met certain Indians who fled from them. They found a store of Indian corn which helped save their lives. They discovered one of the innumerable fresh water ponds of the cape, and found the water "as pleasant to them as wine or beer had been in foretimes." Not so now with all who come to Provincetown.

But there were Pilgrim mothers as well as fathers. And they proceeded to inject the feminine into the situation—the "eternal feminine," always mixed with love and joy and tragedy, birth and death. Here Perigrine White, the first English child born in New England first saw light; and at about the same time Dorothy, young wife of William Bradford, future governor of Plymouth, fell into the sea and was drowned; here too the women observed the first New England wash day.

In Provincetown now stands a great and imposing Pilgrim Memorial Monument of Maine granite, a little more than two hundred and fifty-two feet high, from the top of which we may see at a glance much of the territory that the Pilgrims so laboriously explored. But the contribution that these men and women made to America, to civilization, to the cause of rectitude, and virtue, and sobriety, and religion, is their greatest memorial.

EDITORIAL

Attention Mr. Brisbane:

Attention Mr. Brisbane

There comes a time in the lives of men when greatness dims the sense of justice, and zeal for truth is smothered in the all-enveloping cloak of personal opinion.

Indignation should fill the hearts of the hundred thousand Christian members of this church at the recent ridiculous comment by Arthur Brisbane in an editorial appearing in papers throughout the United States.

We quote for the benefit of the few of our readers who may not have read the editorial as it appeared:

It is touching to read in Senator Capper's Topeka Daily Capital, last Wednesday's paper, of Mr. and Mrs. Bath, both aged 82, both praying every day for fifty years not to be separated, and dying together. You know their life was worth while. Then you read that they were buried after "a double funeral in the Reorganized Latter Day Saints Church in Scammon, Kansas."

By whom, how and why were the Latter Day Saints reorganized?

Reorganize the New York, New Haven and Hartford, the Rock Island or the B. R. T. by all means, but why reorganize the Latter Day Saints?

Dear old Mr. and Mrs. Bath. What a surprise when they reach heaven, hand in hand, and learn that there is no special section set apart for "Reorganized Latter Day Saints."

Can it be possible that one of the foremost editorial writers in the world is ignorant of a subject upon which he is writing, and is asking of the public information concerning the topic? We fear to the contrary, that the spirit of open-mindedness which should be a virtue among writers of so prominent a nature has been vacuum sealed and that truth was throttled in the momentary effort to gain a laugh. The closing paragraph may have been intended as cynicism or skepticism, or may even have been intended as humor, but to many intelligent beings it is truly ridiculous.

To avoid the thousands of letters that may find their way into the office of Mr. Brisbane from indignant but indulgent members of the church, we are printing below a brief explanation of why the Latter Day Saint Church was reorganized.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized April 6, 1830, by direct revelation from God to Joseph Smith. This church preached belief in God the Father and Creator, in Jesus Christ, His Son, and in the Holy Ghost, as is taught in the New Testament.

It taught that all men will be saved through the atoning blood of Christ when repentant and obedient to the gospel law.

It taught that God made but one helpmate for man, and any other relationship in marriage is condemned by him.

It taught that if man kept the law of God he had no need to break the law of the land.

A law of tithing which required one tenth of the annual interest (and not one tenth of all), was also taught and practiced.

This was the faith of the church that was organized in 1830. After the assassination of Joseph Smith by a mob at Carthage, Illinois, in 1844, Brigham Young unlawfully claimed leadership of the church and led the great exodus across the plains to Utah. Many members of the church refused to follow the apostasy, so rallied to the standard of the old faith.

After reaching Utah, Brigham Young installed the institution of polygamy and other practices which were contrary to the original teachings.

It became necessary for the members who did not go to Utah to reorganize in order to preserve the identity of the church and its teachings that they might not be associated with those who had departed from the first principles. This reorganization took place at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860, the son of Joseph Smith being chosen and ordained to succeed his father as president.

Decisions of the United States courts have determined the status of the church as follows:

Judge L. S. Sherman, in the court of common pleas, Lake County, Ohio, February 23, 1880, decided:

That the said plaintiff, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is a religious society, founded and organized upon the same doctrines and tenets, and having the same church organization as the original church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830 by Joseph Smith, and was organized pursuant to the constitution, laws and usages of said original church and has branches located in Illinois, Ohio, and other States.

That the church in Utah, the defendant, of which John Taylor is president, has materially and largely departed from the faith, doctrines, laws, ordinances and usages of said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has incorporated into its system of faith the doctrine of celestial marriage, and a plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam-God worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of said original church.

And the court do further find that the plaintiff, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the true and lawful continuation of and successor to the said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830, and is entitled by law to all its rights and property.

This case was to determine whether the defendant or plaintiff were the legal possessors of the Temple at Kirtland, Ohio, which property is now held by the Reorganized Church.

In the Temple Lot Case at Independence, Missouri, 1894, Judge John F. Philips of the United States Circuit Court, decided in favor of the Reorganized Church and agreed with the decision of Judge Sherman as quoted above.

We have answered Mr. Brisbane's spurious questions: "By whom, how and why were the Latter Day Saints Reorganized?" and "Why reorganize the Latter Day Saints?"

We stand ready to furnish Mr. Brisbane with any information concerning this church which might be necessary before he could intelligently write further upon the subject.

Just Getting Along

Getting along with people is a divine gift. Christianity means brotherhood, and brotherhood means getting along with each other to the best of human ability. Sometimes it seems as though this ability was rather limited, but perhaps after all it is just the result of habit.

When a child begins this life, he is a member of a small social group, the family. He can get along well or not so well, depending upon his training and of course upon his ability to be a social being. But the average child can get along if he wants to. Much trouble comes where the parents themselves have never learned how to get along, and then the child has little chance to be taught.

Perhaps it will startle some to know that social habits are fixed by the age of about eighteen or twenty years. Our leading psychologists will bear out this statement. In the course of that time any person will have fixed his social habits perhaps beyond further repair. With this fact firmly in mind, think what it means to learn how to get along with people.

The child who begins at home to kick and squall when it does not have its own way is making the first step toward establishing a habit that will lead to disaster in later life. This child cannot or will not get along with its family—how then can it get along at school? It won't! This same child all through life can be followed, and it will be found that the child has never gotten along with the various groups with which it has been associated. The child grows into an anti-social being and it will be remembered that our state institutions for crime, the feeble-minded and the insane are filled with anti-social beings.

The basis for life is begun at home, and all social habits are well established before the teen age is over. What is not learned before then will never be learned. New adjustments will of course be made, but these will reflect the same quality that has already been established.

The individual who gets along at home will get along at school, in church, in business and will become a good citizen. The individual who is never taught to get along at home will be the one most likely to be expelled from school, to fail in business, to scorn religion, and to become a useless citizen and may even become so anti-social as to land in the pen.

Eighteen or nineteen years to become a good member of society with all the prospects for a successful life! Think of it! The opportunity is great for the one desirous of becoming a member of society, but the time is short and the way dangerous for the one who would rather not get along with people.

The church wants in its membership only those who have learned how to get along that they may become brothers indeed and build homes for children who may have a chance to become even better men and women. Our problem after all is just to get along together.

The First-Class Man

Zion must be made up of only first-class men. No one wants to be in the second class, anyway, but unfortunately there are many just such men. What are we going to do with them?

Well, we are not going to do anything with them, but they are. A second-class man is trying to do something for which he is not fitted. All he has to do is find something he can do and something that he likes. In this he can go to the top. He will become a first-class man.

There are many "square pegs in round holes," as you have often heard. We don't need to change the pegs—merely change the holes.

A first-class city where everybody is a first-class man, doing first-class work and living first-class lives is just another way of saying "Zion." No second class here.

From the Log of the Four Ninety

PART FIVE

From Provincetown the Four Ninety followed the Pilgrims to Plymouth—not across the bay, but around the bay by land. From our reunion grounds at Onset it is but an hour's drive to Plymouth. The road follows the Cape Cod Canal a part of the way. The canal is an interesting waterway which reduces the terrors of the coast line. Upon the Cape Cod coast there have been many tragedies, beginning with the wreck of the Sparrowhawk in 1626. During the past seventy-five years, two thousand vessels have perished thus. The canal cutting across the cape minimizes this danger.

Arriving at Plymouth we soon found the memorable rock. We have seen more imposing rocks in Missouri but none so renowned. Of greenish syenite this rock is said to have been brought by glacial action from some far coast to await the Pilgrims. On the hill back of the rock stands a bronze statue of Massasoit, the Indian sachem. He stands by the tomb of the dead who perished that first winter, (one half the company) and gazes far out over the harbor as though looking for another such band to come—they come not.

There are many very interesting historical points in Plymouth that bring back vividly to the imaginative mind the scenes of the past. There still flows the spring from which the Pilgrims drank. At every turn is noted the site of some old building. Upon "burial hill" is pointed out the place where the fort stood; and all about are very ancient tombs with slate stones bearing the weeping willow and the urn or other symbols and interesting and curious epitaphs.

We have noted that there were Pilgrim Mothers and Pilgrim Children as well as Pilgrim Fathers. So tragedy and comedy were mixed with austere lives. Dorothy Bradford was drowned in the harbor at Provincetown. Mrs. White gave the new world a new baby. Priscilla played havoc with the heart action of Miles Standish and John Alden. Bradford records: "Dec. 15, Francis Billington, a boy, got hold of a loaded gun and some gunpowder, and nearly set the ship afire."

It is refreshing to learn that Francis Billington, "a boy," with the Pilgrims on the Mayflower, was quite like other boys. Later: "John Billington, jr. lost himself in the woods." The Indians got him and it was necessary to send a relief expedition down the cape to rescue him. These boys and women no doubt vexed the pious souls of the elders. But one woman, as usual, got the last word, even in death. Buried between two husbands on "burial hill," upon her tombstone is carved a hand pointing toward the grave of one of the two husbands. She has answered the old question, "Whose wife shall she be in the resurrection?" Any disturbance of the sod on the third mound in this ancient "triangle" may have been caused by the occupant turning in his grave at the thought of that silent but eloquent hand.

The Mayflower could not carry a great cargo besides her 102 passengers—some weapons, tools, seeds, provisions, clothing, etc. There are to be seen in Pilgrim Hall certain interesting relics of the Mayflower's contents. Governor Bradford's Bible, printed at Geneva in 1592, is matched by Elder Brewster's sword. Elder Brewster probably took Peter as his precedent. Miles Standish naturally carried a sword, but did not always use it. At a time when things were at a crisis and their lives all at stake, a burly Indian contemptuously said to Standish, "You may be a big general but you are a very little man." Standish grappled with him, wrested his tomahawk from his hand, and killed him. More successful in war than in his love affair with Priscilla he left this famous sword to be admired to this day—a Damascus blade bearing Arabic inscriptions, it was captured in the Holy Land during the crusades and brought to England, thence to journey to America. This is the sword mentioned by Longfellow:

"Spake in the pride of his heart, Miles Standish, the Captain of Plymouth,
This is the sword of Damascus I fought with in Flanders."

Governor Carver and Elder Brewster each had a big armchair. And there are a number of other well-authenticated articles, including some which indicate the undying sentimentality of the human heart: for instance the little shirt which Governor Bradford wore when he was baptized as an infant. He brought it with him as a reminder of a ceremony to him sacred. Here, too, are four little white caps worn by Peregrine White, the first white child born in New England, born on shipboard, November 20, 1620, also a cradle and chest of drawers brought by the father and mother of Peregrine, in happy anticipation. By the way, was Peregrine a boy or a girl? The curator says he settles disputes almost daily on this subject, women holding Peregrine was a girl; men insisting that he was a boy. Well, he was a boy. The men score this time.

Some of the articles seen indicate the refinement and culture back of these men and women thus pitted against the wilderness and the savage. What show had they to win again buckskin clad aborigines innured to hardships? But the woman who broided baby caps was of pioneer type; the man who brought the baptismal shirt overseas was of hard fiber. They won.

"Not winter's sullen face,
Not the fierce, tawny race
In arms arrayed,
Not hunger shook their faith."

But we must not forget the good Indians who helped them—Massasoit, Sachem of all the Cape Cod and Massachusetts Bay Indians, who made a treaty and kept it; and Squanto who taught them how to till corn, and was pilot and interpreter, who, as Bradford records, "was a special instrument sent of God for their good . . . and never left them till he died."

No, the Mayflower could not carry much of a material nature—the store was pitifully small for a colony set down in the face of winter on the bleak shores of a wilderness continent. But she brought a cargo of ideals sufficient to last a great nation, if they are not forgotten. She brought religion and democracy. "In the name of God, Amen," began the "Pilgrim's Compact"; and it proceeded to provide for just laws to be framed by the people and to pledge obedience to those laws.

And the Mayflower brought something else of interest to Latter Day Saints. Their beloved pastor, Elder John Robinson, in his farewell address to the Pilgrims before their departure, delivered July 21, 1620, said:

If God hath anything to reveal to you, by any other instrument of his, be as ready to receive it, as ever you were to receive any truth by my ministry. For I am very persuaded, I am confident, that the Lord hath more truth to break forth out of his holy word.

So to this new land the Pilgrims came duly admonished to hold themselves ready to receive new revelations. The old spring from which they drank still flows at Main and Leyden Streets, and all may drink who will. The fountain of revelation to which they were directed still satisfies those who come to it. Yes, Governor Bradford may be read with a double meaning: "And there is a very sweet brooke under the hillside, and many delicate springs of as good water as can be drunke."

But another sort of business than visiting historic places took a part of our time at Plymouth. Some five miles from town, at a little union church among the pines, I preached the funeral sermon of Sister Sarah Burgess, ninety-two years old, Brethren Fisher and Leland in charge of the service. Sister Burgess was a typical New England woman who had lived all her life near Plymouth. With silver white hair and refined and almost youthful features, even at her great age she was a mother to the neighborhood. She lived in a little gray, shingle-covered house by the church. It was like preaching the funeral sermon of old New England, for as we stood in the church yard the pastor said, "All of our young people are gone. The new generation here are almost entirely of foreign birth." The Portuguese and Greeks and Italians are taking the land of the Pilgrims.

What became of the Mayflower? She returned to England. There were several Mayflowers registered at the time and soon she was lost among them. Like a nobleman afflicted with loss of memory she lost her identity and was swallowed by the mob never to be identified. Will the land of the pilgrims forget her ideals, her aims, her identity? A Latin inscription on Governor Bradford's tomb is interpreted: "Do not basely relinquish what the fathers with difficulty attained." ELBERT A. SMITH.

The Self-Made Man

President F. M. McDowell has often made a remark to the effect that the self-made man is the one who worships his creator too much.

That brings to mind rather forcibly the thought, what am I that God is mindful of me? A child comes into this world with a congenital heritage centuries old, a being that owes everything it has to its creator. The world rears that child and gives to it a social heritage. The experiences of ages, the trials, and disappointments, the failures and despairs, the successes and joy of countless men and women are given to that child and he has but to

Problems of Agriculture

With the break in prices in 1920, agriculture was one of the first industries to be stricken. Furthermore, the blow seemed to fall much more heavily upon this industry. Why should this have been the case?

One general explanation to be offered is that the farmer has been too much devoted to the task of producing goods, and too little concerned with the job of marketing those goods. The day is here when the farmer must not only be an efficient producer, but he must be also an efficient business man and know how his products are handled in the market. It is not enough to know how to prepare a seed bed or test seed corn, but he must know the functions to be performed in the movement of the harvest to the centers of consumption.

These are important problems, and ignorance of that fact means failure while knowledge means success. The most successful business men were those who knew how to read business conditions and who on the basis of their knowledge prepared for the depression through which we have been passing. Furthermore, they are now preparing for the future by zealously studying the conditions of the present.

The success of the agricultural industry in the same way will depend upon the business foresight of those who are engaged in the industry.

Make your boy or your girl a partner in the farm business, and let them help you tackle these problems of the market. Give them a training in agriculture both practical and theoretical, then let them become familiar with the business side of the farm by taking over the job of marketing the grain and the livestock.

You, Mr. Farmer, did not have the opportunity to go to college in making preparation for your life work, but you can give your son or daughter that opportunity. Graceland College is now seriously engaged in a program designed especially to be of service to farmers. You will do well to make inquiry. You will be surprised how little it will cost to give your children a scientific course in agriculture at Graceland.

Justifiable Individualism

By Frank W. Blackmar of the University of Kansas, delivered at the commencement exercises of Graceland College, at Lamoni, Iowa, June 6, 1923.

The Class of 1923, Ladies and Gentlemen, I thank your president for his gracious words concerning the work of the University of Kansas. I assure you it was one of the special pleasures of my life to have President Smith study with us for two years at the university. I have retained for him warm friendship and great admiration ever since.

I see before me an audience gathered from many parts of the United States and from Old World countries, an audience united around a great purpose and a high ideal, called out of the masses of the people to demonstrate a great scheme of social life and education. But I also see before me a group of individuals, no two of which look alike, smile alike, think alike, or have the same traits; but they have different capacities, different tastes, and different traits, both physical and mental, and, I might say, spiritual.

This, of course, represents fundamental facts. We know it is so, but how it came about that we have on one side this group activity and on the other side so many people of different purposes and different tastes and talents is somewhat of a social mystery.

We have two groups of people in this world, those who are called individualists and those who are anti-individualists, and I find that when you apply scientific principles here as elsewhere in life, differences fade away, and that in reality the difference sometimes between individualism conceived in the right spirit and social grouping conceived in the right spirit is the difference of tweedle-dee and tweedledum.

Doctrine of Individualism

We have a group of people who insist that man started out an individual. He was in primitive times struggling with the forest and with the wild beast, going to the carrot patch for his breakfast or to the berry patch. If things were in his way he only went out and removed them and struggled on. If men were in his way he pushed them aside and went on. He had two great motives, the preservation of this life and the perpetuation of the species; and this was a relentless struggle hand-to-hand with his fellows and hand-to-hand with any who rose by that struggle to his present situation, and that is based upon the law of economic evolution. That is a biological solution of the masses coming into this world. There are some reasons for believing that.

I find men trying to amass fortunes alone and struggling to pile up money, regardless of the effect upon other people. I find that this man also in the very beginning, after he had come in contact with his fellows, began to associate with them and build up a group which was selfish just like he was in the beginning, seeking to serve self. I notice that individuals not only have a good deal of that spirit, but groups have it, too. I notice that men do not neglect to organize for the noble purpose of helping the Negro. I do hold that we have in some cases men like Judge Gary who insists that twelve hours a day ought to obtain in the steel plant when we are all working to reduce the day's labor to a rational time of eight hours and then bring our moral agencies and forces to take the other time for the improvement of these individuals. We do find individuals and groups to-day exercising their own ideas as to the survival of the fittest. But that, as a formula, will not satisfy the equation. It cannot be accepted as a full determination of why we are here or what we are doing.

There is another group of people that are in communities and that cannot go beyond the community, and they seem to work in communities like ants and bees, and in that way they work and build up individualism, and the individual is the product of the community. We do see something of that kind to-day. I do find communities where they are working together and cooperating with brotherly love, seeking to build up each other in faith and righteousness and in economic principles. We sometimes find large community interests of people made up of individual interests, and while it seems paradoxical, still we find there has been added to the biological formula the religious formula of the whole of life.

So then we must take both of these rules to answer the problem of our presence here as individuals and as a community. Neither one alone will satisfy that point.

We shall find also that if we look at society as it is to-day there is a little tendency to superorganize, that the group activity has grown so far it looks like a machine-made world socially. We have organization upon organization, superorganizations, group upon group. The people are organized and over organized. It looks to-day as though we had a great mass play of human society. It looks as if the individual was forced to the background and that we have brought forth the associated group and lost the social existence.

You will notice this particularly in the economic world, of the man who works and toils for a day's wage. He puts his labor into a great machine-like process, and the effect of that labor travels on days, months, and years before it returns to pay him for his services. It is true that the money is returned to him in the form of wages almost immediately. The laborer becomes as a cog in a great industrial machine. Apart from it he is powerless to create, powerless to initiate.

I find the same in philanthropy. We have organized our work so that it extends all over the world. We used to give a little coin to the worthy poor. We gave it to the individual; but now we give it to a great organization that carries it to the furthestmost parts of the earth to relieve human suffering, and instead of the old, simple method of giving alms to our neighbor who is in need, all this is administered by a great organization, great social groupings.

Who Is a Neighbor?

But we come, you see, to the question of the neighbor. Who is your neighbor? It is supposed to have been somebody who lives near you. The Master made that quite clear when he was here. It was not geographically located. It was the state of mind. The individual who needed your service was your neighbor. And so neighbors are to-day actually on the opposite sides of the globe. The coin that formerly was bestowed by the givers to relieve the immediate suffering of the neighbor now travels thousands of miles and is administered by great organizations to relieve distress and reform the human race. Philanthropy has become a vast centralized business.

I come to the religious world and I see the same is true. Churches are organized. They used to be little community organizations, a little society of people meeting together to talk over the laws of life and the ideas of religion. Now what is it? It is an organization extending around the world. It is all right now to rejoice over one sinner that has repented, but the churches of to-day do not propose to stop there. They propose to spread their institutions all over the world in mass formation.

And so I say again in regard to our education, the child used to be educated at her mother's knee, if it got any education at all. To a large extent the child went into the school of rough knocks, and ups and downs, to the school of experience for his education. But now we finally put the children in groups and organize them in groups and develop them into great educational systems so that the individual enters that system and goes through. It reminds us of manufacturing economical products. You know how it is in a shoe shop. Here is one man that gets out the pattern. Here is another that cuts out the leather. It runs along and the last man polishes the boot heel. It takes forty men to make a boot. You see how it is. Here we have mass formation. It seems as if without any intention we have forgotten the little, old individual. When I was in college they used to say a great deal about the man of sound body and sound mind learning a little Latin and Greek and then he was good for anything. No doubt that was good to an extent, but we have gone into a machinery of education so far that it would appear we have lost sight of the individual entirely.

It is true in the development of our work the social scientists have given us fundamental principles regarding this. The economists, for instance, have told us that every product of wealth is made by many hands—food products, a machine, a piece of furniture, a house, a work of art, even the smallest article of use has been created directly or indirectly by the work of many hands. No man can say with truth, By my hands alone have I made this or placed it for the use of others. Even the market gardener who tills his own little bit of land uses the hoe made by others for cultivating the vegetables he brings to market. This wonderful vase here was made by the hands of hundreds of people directly or indirectly interested. The very breakfast you had this morning, you little folks will remember, was made possible by the labor of perhaps thousands of people. You may have had coffee. Suppose you had, where did you get the coffee? Well, there was the maid or mamma or sister or maybe dad who made it for you. Then some one waited on you at breakfast, but don't stop there, go back a little. Who brought it from the grocery store? Who sold it in the store? Where did the store man get it? Who brought it to him? And if you will think back you will find that there are a good many people interested in getting your breakfast to you. And who made this spoon with which you serve your coffee? And where did the metal come from? Who dug it out of the ground? Who furnished the food and clothes for the laborers who dug the metal out of the ground? Why, don't you see how many thousands of people there are who are waiting upon the people who are waiting upon you? And these people are all working directly or indirectly for you. So we can understand when the economist says that all production of wealth is social production, the reason for this is that there is nothing made but what is made by thousands of people. It is a product of the community. Sociologists tell us that society is a vast system functioning as a whole and in groups, that the individual finally is created by social action, that the great social achievements are through group activity and the individual survives and achieves only by cooperating with his fellows. There is a public opinion that controls social organization and social life, and individual effort and life are subordinate to it.

The possession of property is essential in human life. I would not do anything to relieve the individual of the right of possession of property. From the economic standpoint we do work together in the building up of all the wealth there is. We will see a little later what a man's duty is concerning that which he possesses.

Democracy a World Concept

The sociologists take a little different view. They say individuals have been built by society. We are working together in a great cooperative way in building up our mental faculties and spiritual powers. The scientists say we will just have a great enveloping democracy over all, and they will demonstrate justice and righteousness to everybody and we will all be united the world over, and that is a great expression. Democracy is spreading to become a world concept.

Now in the educational way we say the same is true. In the educational world all achievement comes from human association. The contact of mind with mind, the direction and leadership of others, the use of social heritage, all are group processes without which no individual may receive an education. I used to say I got my own education, but I have learned since that I didn't have much to do with it. Did you get your own education? Who made the books that you use? You went to school. Who made the schoolhouses? You will find in the libraries great volumes of learning in the past. You have been handed down a social heritage in the past for thousands of years, and we find this product in this country. Then there were the teachers and your parents and other society. And so we say that no one can be educated except by mental contact with his fellows. Mind against mind, whether in the library or in the human being is the only process of education, and so it is that education becomes a social product.

The very idea of education involves a social use of the same. Education is a social function. The individual inherits the learning of the past, and society puts him in touch with it. Educational achievement is a group achievement, and not an individual matter. Nevertheless, when you look at this in the right way you can easily see that while the social sciences are right and we believe them in the generally accepted term, we find a great lot of people that are misinterpreting them. With a meager understanding of the principles advocated by the scientist they jump to the conclusion that the present individualistic system cannot be maintained, and therefore must go to socialism, sovietism, or some other "ism" in order to solve the problem. They base their argument on the theoretical assumption that individualism is selfishness, and therefore that the individual must go, that society and the community are the only forms of life worth considering; and so they have built up a great system of argument showing that socialism will solve the problem to-day.

Justifiable Individualism

In my conclusion I cannot say that it is necessary to socialize property, that is, to put it all in a common fund; but I do say that a man should socialize his conscience and his will so that his property is held in trust to work out the social problems of the world. He cannot become an individual of the right heart without it; and while that old individual that was pictured in the beginning, while that old individual may have passed away or been transformed, we must have a new individual consecrated to the service of his fellows and building himself up along that line. There is what we know as justifiable individualism and that individual is justifiable only when he is cooperating with its fellow beings. And as such individualism is of tremendous importance. This individual is very important. All progress begins and ends with him. You cannot escape it. He starts out with the little germ of life and grows biologically and psychologically as an individual. We depend on him for the reception and transmission of life. We depend on him for getting power from God and transferring it to others. We cannot escape the individual idea. Men were not born in phalanxes. They did not come in swarms. They came as individuals, and they came as biological factors, and we developed those factors and psychological or spiritual factors through that process.

This individual, this little human dynamo, is responsible as a center from which emanates all of the powers we have. You say you get power from society? Suppose you drop out the individual, where will your power come from? God creates the individuals and he gives these individuals power to transmit life to others. And there is something else, there is a little dynamic power there where there seems to be a generation of power within the individual, and it grows and is expanded through him and handed down to others.

Of course this individual seems to be a pretty small creature. If on a clear night one stands on a lofty peak of the Sierras with the broad expanse of mountain ranges extending in every direction and with the infinite, starry heavens above him, the consciousness of his littleness is overpowering. Yet the individual is greater than the mountain, greater than a star, and a group of individuals greater than a galaxy of the heavens. Why? Because you have received and may transmit power like any other work of God can. You have the conscious effort of service, and no star has the conscious effort of service. So you are greater than any star. Likewise the youth of to-day standing at the doorway of the future and catching a vision of the vast mechanism of society realizes his own insignificance. He lives his little round of duties, according to order, a little cog in the system, and when he has finished his life the great social machinery goes on without him and he is replaced by another cog; yet he is the material out of which systems are built, the source of power whence organizations spring, the germ of life that perpetuates the generation. This little human dynamo has the capacity to receive and then transmit power that comes from God, and he is the initial unit through which it may be transmitted in human achievement.

Regenerate the Individual

Therefore I want to call your attention to the fact that we must not eliminate the individual as a process, but we must regenerate him if he is not right. So those individuals who are inclined to be too socially minded could be easily swept away. Please bear in mind that all civilization hinges upon it, and the physical life of man and the psychological life of man hinges upon it. I say, too, that we have through the past ages developed a social heritage and it is handed on down to us from generation to generation. To-day he uses this social heritage as tools to work out his problems, but this individual in working out those problems has to be better and better prepared.

We talk a good deal about the wonderful opportunities of the young folks to-day. Did you ever hear anything about it? Civilization grows larger and larger, and for every opportunity you get please bear in mind, young folks, there is an added responsibility. Civilization is something to be borne. It is worth bearing, but it has to be borne. Let us take that side of the question and remember it also.

Why, yes, I can remember when a man would get along pretty well if he had just a common school education. I can remember when a man would go a few months to school and become a pretty good business man; but the more civilization, the more he has to bear. It is just that old story of Milo. Milo was seen going through the streets of Athens one time bearing an ox on his back. Some one asked him how he ever got strength enough to do that. "Well," he said, "it was a very simple matter. I started when the ox was a calf. Each day the calf grew a little bigger until I was finally carrying the ox." Civilization is an ox and you have got to bear it, but you will have the strength given to you that others did not have and you can bear that civilization.

This individual has a biological foundation, too, I would beg you to remember. The knowledge we have of man as an animal is largely derived from a study of his anatomical structure and his physiological functions and by comparative biological studies of other species. His historical beginning is still enshrouded in mystery, yet the earliest archæological relics of man indicate a more limited physical and mental capacity than we have at present. The evolution of his brain demonstrates a growing capacity for progress, and the product of his industry attests the utilization of that capacity. There is no evidence that early man did not congregate in groups. In fact his present mental endowment indicates that gregariousness was necessary to survival, but association for cooperative undertaking was limited. Of course, to travel the same road as his fellows largely impelled by fear, companionship was imposed upon him; yet life was individualistic in its physical existence, in its preservation, and in its perpetuation in the generation. Biologically, man was an individual before he was a social being. He did not appear as a swarm, but as an individual. His physical form may have changed slightly through influence of social environment, and of a certainty his form changed through natural selection. The variations occurring in the germplasm determined the greatest changes in his physical and mental structure. Variations are the raw material for his development. This variation is shown in the individual differences of the most socially related groups in the same family, even in twins born of the same parents and starting from the same germ cell. It is fatal to ignore these individual differences which the countless generations have not overcome and which neither education nor association can obliterate. Human association through group activity may furnish means of nutrition and growth, means of preservation, only to accentuate the individual factors. In the germplasm of the individuals are the factors that determine the physical and mental traits of the offspring. This is not a social function. No rule of action of the group, no wise laws, no social cooperation can change this fundamental law. By social action nature may be given a better chance, and that is all.

The same is true in the psychological realm. The little child begins its career with sensation and reflex action. He is born with an equipment of primitive instincts that begin to assert themselves in his development. No revolution of society can initiate one new instinct or one new emotion. These always appear as needed. All that society can do is to accelerate or accentuate their development. Social environment, social heritage, even the formation of habits, each may modify these primitive powers, but they cannot create them nor replace them if they were destroyed. As the child develops, intelligence appears to direct his efforts, and society increases its aid. But the inherited mental traits are all there are on which to build. No social order, custom, will, or dictum may subtract from or add to these mental traits, but environment and training help to develop them.

The Problem of Society

The directing influence of society is great in the modification of the mental development of the individual, but that does not make him less important nor less real. The great social problem is his survival and his efficiency. Will society help him to live? help him to become efficient? train him in helping others? and thus assure him survival and progress? These are the prime problems of society. It begs the question to assume that this can be done by eliminating the individual or refusing to recognize that he is the material of which society is made and upon which its survival and progress depend.

But there is another thing in connection with that. How are we going to get this individual? What are we educators going to do about it? The child is made up of inherent qualities. We have got to make something of him in training. Here he has a complex. What are you going to do with it? In the first place I am sure that we will admit, as educators, as mothers and fathers and citizens, that a boy or a girl ought to have a sufficient amount of knowledge and training to prepare him or her for a vocation in life. Service in life—we should educate towards that. He ought to have a sufficient amount of knowledge to enable him to help himself. Here is something more important. It is the idea of intellectual integrity. We must in our schools see to it that children have intellectual integrity, which means the ability to see straight. You know most of the troubles of the world come up these days because people do not see straight. They don't get all the truth. They get part of the truth and go blundering on.

It is the taking of a half truth and passing it off for a whole truth that I don't like. I have a friend whom I have known for years. His name is William Jennings Bryan. Bryan has done a great deal of good in this world, but he has done some harm because he did not see straight. In other words he is talking a good deal about the conflict between science and religion, and that reminds me of some one asking what metaphysics was. Metaphysics is a blind man hunting in a dark room for a black cat that isn't there. Mr. Bryan is that. He is all right except in two particulars. He doesn't know the Bible very well and he doesn't know science very well. Otherwise he is all right.

We must teach our pupils in school to see opportunity. We must have it so that their minds can determine the truth. They must have moral integrity, and that applies to individuals, individual moral responsibility for the conduct of life. See if we cannot lessen some of this crime that is going on. Moral responsibility is not only for the individual action, but for society as well, the moral responsibility for the community in which we live. It does not stop with the individual. We must teach our students moral responsibility. I find that the tendency of modern students sometimes is to dodge a little instead of coming squarely up and facing the truth. We need to teach moral responsibility, and there is nothing in all this world that will take the place of the lack of that moral responsibility.

I hear a man whining and saying that society was bad to him, that he did not have a chance. It may be true. I am sorry for society because that needs to be mended; but each individual has moral responsibility and we cannot excuse him just because society was not what it should be. Suppose you took your car out on the street without putting gasoline in it and the car stopped. Would you say that the car was not treating you fair? You did not discharge your moral responsibility, therefore the car stopped on you. The world is full of good things, things not so good, and things just a little off, as well as things not at all good. We have to measure them, selecting the best there is—the best books, the best friends, the best church, the best teachers, the best laws, the best communities, and the best occupation that we can lend our talents to. That is your duty, your share. We find the estimation of values is one of the great discriminating things between a student and a non-student. This person comes in and gathers a lot of things out of the library and they all look alike to him. He cannot be a good student. Many people fail over and over again just because they could not choose. As I look back over my life I see many places where I might have chosen a little better.

Need Higher Ideals

We have got to teach people to raise their ideals. We need higher and higher ideals. You know the difference between a man and another animal. Some one might tell me the difference between a boy and a frog. A frog hops; so does the boy. The frog goes to the water and gets his breakfast. The boy opens his mouth and the potato goes in and he gets his breakfast. The front leg of the frog will look pretty nearly the same as a boy's arm. Well, then, what is the difference? Why, when nature says to the frog, hop, he hops. When it says, open your mouth, he opens his mouth. That little frog did not say, I wish I had a big voice like dad's. He didn't think. He didn't say, I wish I could jump as far as dad. No, because he does not think at all. But the boy does think, and he wants to be as big as dad and have a voice like dad's. And one of these days he is going to be better than his dad, according to his opinion. In other words, the boy has an ideal; the frog has not. Men have ideals and we live up to those ideals and build ourselves up to those ideals.

Now it is true we have a good deal of the elements of the frog in us. Nature makes us hop sometimes without us having anything to do with it, but the great laws of improvement, the things that lift us up come from the better. We set up an ideal and then we try to build ourselves up to that ideal. We must teach our students higher ideals, to take the higher road and not the lower one, to set up an ideal and then to raise the standard.

Once I had the pleasure of climbing the Sierra Nevada Mountains. Day after day I trudged on. Just before me would rise a mountain, and as I looked up I thought when I reached the top I could see beyond; but, when I reached it, beyond was a valley and a still higher mountain, and so the goal of achievement constantly rose as I traveled on, until finally I reached the crest and caught a vision of a new world of mountains and plains; but I had reached the end of the trail, the journey was done. That is the epitome of life. Faith and hope and work lead on to higher and higher ideals to the end. Some one has said that success consists, not in never failing, but in being able to get up when you do fall. Success consists in taking defeat good-naturedly.

We as Americans are accused of worshiping the dollar sign, but that is not our ideal. The great mass of American people do not want the dollar as an end. They want it as a means. I have nothing against dollars or against wealth. I believe in it sincerely. It is essential. What I want to say is that wealth should be used as a means to an end, while in many cases it is used as an end. What is life worth? I will tell you. Unless you can leave a margin of profit, it is just as well that you do not live at all, and that margin of profit comes in assisting some one else, and living in such a way that you will help others as they come on afterwards when this life is done.

I told you to get your ideal above the dollar. Keep in mind that it is wealth of spirit that we want as well as wealth in cash. I know a great many people who go up and down the country complaining. They spend more time complaining about the things they don't have than in using the things they do have.

If people who complain will spend as much time in trying to use the things they do have as they do in complaining about the things they do not have they would get along better.

Then we go a little further. We find the fellow who says, "Oh, he has got more than I have!" He envies the man who has more than he has. Then there is another fellow who says, "He has got more than I have and I am not going to rest until I even it up." We have got to get above such selfish ideas. Why, sometimes I walk up to the university and climb the hill on foot. Before I get to the top a beautiful young girl driving a beautiful new Cadillac car passes me. My, how she does majestically go by! It is a beautiful picture. I am glad she has a Cadillac. I am glad she can go to school that way.

I am glad there are so many people who are more religious than I am so that I can learn of them. I am glad that there are so many people with better intellects than I have. I am glad that there are people who have more wealth than I have, so that they can build beautiful homes and I can look at them. It is marvelous. By the way, if I cannot have a good Cadillac I am so thankful that God lets me stand on the corner and see it go by.

Education Is Social Responsibility

Then there is one other thing that must be taught the student and that is social responsibility. The individualism that I am talking about seeks to put more into the world than it is taking out. I am inclined to think that we need a little instruction along that line. As Peter Cooper said, "I have tried to put more into the world than what I took out of it." I am certain that we do need education in social responsibility. I find a man in our town complaining about the streets. I say to him, "Why don't you rectify it?" He says to me, "I don't have anything to do with it." Then I tell him that he is making his money there and he has a right to vote. He can at least be a decent citizen. He can take up that idea if it is worth while and build up a social consciousness on that street, and then he will be a real citizen. But there is a lot of shirking of social responsibility in this world. I see a man running for office. What for? To become a better servant of the public? He never thought of it. They are not all that way, of course. Don't imagine that I am telling you any half truth, but a whole truth. There are people of that type. There are people who are willing to make money in a town and are never willing to spend a cent towards its upkeep or beautification. I know a man who for a good many years evaded the law and did not pay taxes on his property, or bonds. Finally the tax collector got him and taxed his bonds and his property. It broke his heart and he died, because justice had been meted out to him.

Socialize the Individual

Another thing that we must say before closing, and that is we want to socialize individuals. We want an individual that is alive to the real needs of society. In order to do that we will have to study human society. His education ought to lead him into the study of society. We as a people must study these problems more and settle them or we will have some trouble on the face of the earth, and in the United States, too, that we cannot manage some of these times. There are some things that we have got to face right away. One is this question of the liquor problem. The other is the question of peace or war. We must study these questions because we are connected up with the whole world, and, if we do not take some move of working for and with the whole world, then we as a people must suffer in connection with the whole world.

What is needed is a socialized individual, one that seeks survival through service to others, one whose personality has been molded through an intelligent, a socialized education of its distinctive traits and capacities. Call it personality or individuality; it is the timbre, the tone, the very essence of social life. A system of politics or religion or a social order that fails to recognize this is doomed to failure. The world needs not more benevolent enterprises, not more beneficent laws, not fewer group activities, but a better utilization of all these and more through the development of an intelligent, unselfish individualism. Human progress demands that we depend on a justifiable individualism that seeks the fullness of life in devotion to the common good.

Let our education see to it that this individual shall be well born, well trained in body and mind, sound in moral ideals, effective in moral practice, and filled with a spirit of service to others. Let him pride himself in his individualism as an instrument for the betterment of the race, and he will be endowed with a justifiable individualism, which, put to the service of the Master, will become a glorified individualism.

World Needs Efficient Leaders

It is the boast of colleges and universities that they train for leadership. If it is true, then the members of this graduating class are all in the way to become leaders. Doubtless most of you will go on in further training for that leadership. How the world needs efficient leadership! It has a good many idealists and long-range reformers who can tell how it ought to be done; but so few real leaders of men or institutions who can enter the laboratory of humanity and work out the problems there.

I look at the church, and I respect the churches who are doing so much. But we are falling down a little because we have been depending too much upon the positions of the past and not enough on the problems right before us. I do not believe the churches of to-day are more than on an average fifty per cent efficient to what they might be if they were organized to utilize their powers, their wealth, their organization, and consecrate themselves to the laws of reform for making the world better. I am thankful to have lived long enough to see them coming out from under the cloud of medieval theology. I am sure they are going to win because I have great faith in them.

How can you escape the social life if you are going to have the conduct of life taught? How can you escape that? You cannot do it according to the scriptures as I read them. Social life is the application of religion to life, but do you know that religion is not worth anything unless it is used? Did you know that embalmed religion was a drug on the market? It is just like education. It is worth nothing unless all of our high spiritual ideals we get be put to a practical service in leading the community to a higher plane.

Now, young people, I wonder if you are going to be leaders. That is what you are elected for. That is what they say. You are in college. You have started to become leaders. Are you going to take up these problems that are before us, these problems of religion and of the church; for, let me tell you, religion is not only a part of life, but it is an essential part of life? A great many people think it is like a coat that can be put on and taken off at will. Religion to be useful must be used. There has got to be leadership in it. Are you going to allow human society to develop the evils that may be developed without leadership? Are you going to have higher ideals? Are you going to have such a faith and such an insight, such intellectual integrity, such moral responsibility that you will say, Come on, come with me? I don't mean long-range reformers; I don't mean degrees. I mean leaders who can get right down to the laboratory of human society and say, Come on with us, let us make this old world better. If you will take that attitude and prepare yourselves, the world will eventually have peace, and you will be one of the happy causes of it.

I congratulate you upon this great opportunity of education. Having passed even a junior college, you have laid the foundation. I am not saying whether you shall go on or not. That is your business, but I am saying that the way is opened and I hope that you will go on and keep going on until life is completed. I congratulate you upon the opportunities you have had of going as far as you have. If you are desirous of going on, I hope that the way will open to higher achievements to better fit you for the leadership of life.

Ladies and gentlemen, let us understand, finally, that I believe in a great individualism which means social service, which seeks the good of its fellows, which seeks to build up society; but I do not believe in the selfish individualism which seeks for itself the right to live at the expense of others. It is a question of putting more into the world than you are taking out of it, for human society, and for education, and for our country. I thank you.

Joseph Haydn

By James R. Houghton

"I know that God has bestowed talent upon me, and I humbly acknowledge his goodness in so doing; I think, too, I have done my duty in giving to the world the result of my labors; it is for others to follow my example." Thus spoke one of the greatest musical geniuses that ever lived, revealing in no other than Haydn a religious and social consciousness that calls forth from us our deepest sympathy and profound admiration. It is certainly a fact worthy of admiration to know that a man so great as Haydn in the musical world should recognize and place implicit faith and trust in the Creator of all life; and not only that alone, but in addition acknowledge that fact before the entire world.

Then, too, there is something more which makes that far distant scene even more beautiful. He possessed a social consciousness worthy of emulation in that he believed that his gift should be handed down as a sort of musical heritage to others who might follow in order that their lives might be enriched as his own had been enriched. He lived not unto himself alone, but in the interest of others.

Story of His Life

Franz Joseph Haydn, known to the world as Joseph Haydn, was born in the little village of Rohrau on the banks of the River Leitha which forms the boundary between what was formerly Lower Austria and Hungary. The exact date of his birth is variously disputed as the 31st of March or the first of April, 1732. He held tenaciously to the latter date, declaring that his brother Michael had invented the former in the event to save him from being called an April fool!

Haydn's father was a wheelwright by trade and followed that profession throughout his life. In addition to his trade he was "by nature a great lover of music," possessing a tenor voice of mediocre quality. His musicianship seemed to be a natural gift, for we are told that he accompanied himself on the harp without knowing a note. He loved music with a consuming passion. His delight at eventide was to assemble his family together and sing the old folk songs of his native land. The boy Haydn found great pleasure in these early musical experiences, and later in life recalled them with mingled feelings of joy and sadness. Thus Haydn obtained from his father a taste for music of a very simple grade.

From his mother, Haydn learned certain habits of order and neatness. In the twilight of life Haydn said: "My parents were so strict in their lessons of neatness and order, even in my earliest youth, that at last these habits became a second nature."

He early showed a passion for music, and at the age of six years was taken by J. M. Frankh, a musical relative and choir leader, to the neighboring town of Hainburg where he studied diligently for the next two years. He learned considerable about the rudiments of music. In a later sketch of his life he says: "Almighty God, to whom I give thanks for all his unnumbered mercies, bestowed upon me such musical facility that even in my sixth year I sang with confidence several masses in the church choir, and could play a little on the piano and violin." His master and cousin was quite exacting, for in later years he made this confession: "I thank this man, even in his grave, for making me work so hard, though I used to get more blows than food."

In reference to the style of musical instruction which Haydn received from his cousin we have the following humorous example: His cousin and teacher "Frankh was in great trouble owing to the death of his kettle-drummer, but espying little 'Sep-peril,' as Haydn was called, he bethought himself that he could quickly learn. He showed him how to play and then left him. The lad took a basket, such as peasants use for holding flour in their baking, covered it over with a cloth, placed it upon a finely upholstered chair, and drummed away with so much spirit that he did not observe the flour had sifted out and ruined the chair. He was reprimanded, as usual, but his teacher's wrath was appeased when he noticed how quickly Joseph had become a skillful drummer. As he was at that time very short in stature, he could not reach up to the man who had been accustomed to carry the drum, which necessitated the employment of a smaller man, and, as unfortunately he was a hunchback, it excited much laughter in the procession. But Haydn in this manner gained a thoroughly practical knowledge of the instrument and, as is well known, the drum parts of his symphonies are of special importance."

When Haydn was eight years of age a certain man by the name of Reutter, an organist of Vienna, made a trip to Hainburg in search of singers for his chapel choir. Fortunately he selected Haydn as one of the singers, took him to Vienna and placed him in the choir at Saint Stephen's Church. Here he remained for the next nine years receiving such instruction as was offered in the choir school as well as singing in the court. Besides his school training he studied indefatigably the works of his predecessors.

Finally the time came when Haydn was forced to give up the choir, due to a natural change in his voice. The empress said of him in sport that "he could not sing any more, he crowed." It happened that his younger brother Michael was chosen as the logical successor.

Haydn at the age of seventeen started out in the strange world, "helpless, without money, with three poor shirts and a threadbare coat." He was taken by some friends and given lodging until he secured employment. From this time forward his life was fraught with periods of joy and despair. He received little money for his compositions and hunger stared at him continually.

At one time his thoughts were so gloomy, or more likely his hunger was so keen, that he resolved, in spite of his prejudices, to join the Servite Order so that he could get sufficient to eat. This, however, was only a fleeting impulse, for his nature would never allow him to really take such a step. His disposition happily inclined to joyousness and saved him from any serious outbreaks of melancholy. When the summer rain or winter snow, leaking through the cracks of the roof, awoke him, he regarded such little accidents as natural, and made sport of them.

Thus this great man struggled on under conditions synonymous with poverty.

His First Compositions

In 1751 he wrote his first mass, in 1752 a comic opera, and in 1755 his first quartet. He learned to know Metastasio the poet; Porpora, the singing master and composer (whom he served as a valet in return for instruction); Gluck, the opera writer; and Dittersdorf, the young violinist. For the musician Von Furnberg he wrote eighteen quartets. Under Count Morzin of Bohemia he had a fairly good orchestra, and for which in 1759 he wrote his first symphony.

In the year 1760 he married the oldest daughter of a wig maker which marriage caused him continual regret and sorrow for the rest of his life. She was a woman possessed of a fiery temper and continually tormented the composer. In addition to this she was extremely extravagant and always kept him in poverty. In one of his letters he said: "My wife is ailing most of the time and is always in the same miserable temper, but I do not let it distress me any longer. There will some time be an end of this torment." And again in "Jungere Gelehrten," "I am obliged to admit that I have had no other aim than this: to practice those virtues which enable one to endure such a woman." In the year 1800 she died.

There is no doubt that these experiences of Haydn during his married life were reflected in his music.

Compare the last part of the "Creation" with the first and there you can see for yourself. The unrestrained outpourings of love Haydn could not express. His life had been one of suppression. The full grandeur and dignity of womanly virtue is wanting in the last part of the "Creation." No doubt this was directly due to the influence of his quarrelsome and undevoted wife.

The following year he was very fortunate in securing a position with Prince Paul Esterhazy, the head of a wealthy family and great lover of music. At Einstadt the Prince kept a small force of musicians. "In 1762 Prince Nicholas succeeded his brother and greatly enlarged the musical forces, of which Haydn became director in 1766." Here Haydn lived and worked until 1790 when the prince died. He was provided with a first-rate orchestra and good singers, for which he wrote quite a large number of compositions, including orchestral works, songs, operettas, and church music. Occasionally the orchestra was taken to Vienna, but outside of these trips Haydn lived an exclusive life at the Estate. Musicians heard of his fame and sought him out. Among those who came to him was the youthful Mozart for whom Haydn had an unbounded appreciation.

In 1790 Haydn made his first visit to London at the invitation of Salomon, the violinist. Arriving in England he was received with great welcome and universal praise. On the occasion of his arrival in London Doctor Burney wrote the following poem for the Monthly Review:

Welcome, great master! to our favored isle,
Already partial to thy name and style;
Long may thy fountain of invention run
In streams as rapid as it first begun;
While skill for each fantastic whim provides,
And certain science every current guides!

Oh, may thy days, from human suff'rings free,
Be blest with glory and felicity,
With full fruition, to a distant hour,
Of all thy magic and creative power!
Blest in thyself, with rectitude of mind,
And blessings, with thy talents, all mankind!

While in England he composed several new compositions including six new symphonies. He was accorded the degree of doctor of music by Oxford at the Summer Convocation during July.

In the year 1792 he returned to Vienna and was received with great demonstrations. During this period he gave lessons to Beethoven, a great musician whose works will be considered in the article appearing next week.

In the year 1794 he returned to England where he was again received with welcome. He composed six new symphonies on the occasion of his second visit. In 1797 he wrote his Emperor's Hymn which has since become the National Hymn of Austria.

In London he had the occasion to hear Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah." Upon hearing the "Hallelujah chorus" he exclaimed: "He is the master of us all!" This great work so inspired him that he undertook the "Creation," an oratorio which was first produced in Vienna. This was followed by another oratorio, "The seasons," almost as successful as its predecessor.

The next ten years of his life were uneventful. The infirmities of old age had seized him, and in 1809 he died, leaving to the world a wealth of beautiful music mingled with sad memories of his life of sorrow and abandonment.

The summarized list of his works includes: instrumental—125 symphonies, 20 concertos, 38 trios, 53 sonatas, 4 sonatas for clavier and organ, and various other pieces, including 175 baryton pieces, 31 concertos, 30 trios, and 77 quartets, numbering 700 in all. His vocal works consist of 14 masses and 30 motets; two large oratorios, "The creation" and "The seasons," as well as 13 Italian operas and a large number of songs, part songs, etc.

Style

Haydn was first of all an instrumental composer. In this respect he was much like Bach. Like Bach, his style was very mature in this field. The chief objection which can be urged to his oratorio, "The creation," is that he gives the orchestra more to do than the chorus. The orchestra is made the dominating factor instead of the chorus. The things which impress us most about Haydn's works are their freshness and youthfulness. "They possess a wealth of spontaneous and sparkling melodies." Being of Croatian ancestry he inherited an unusual gift for melody and "never had to cudgel his wits for a tune."

Again, he presents his ideas with great precision and clarity. This was due, no doubt, to his well-balanced and logical method of thinking.

Haydn is popularly known as the "father of the Sonata, the Symphony, and the String Quartet." He established these forms or types of compositions which have since become the foundation of modern music. "With Haydn music begins to be truly a popular art."

Anthem

The anthem, "Sing to the Lord," begins with an allegro movement in the key of A Major. All voices join in unison at the beginning in announcing the first few measures of the piece. Evidently Haydn had in mind the horns of the orchestra instead of the voices when he started this way. Thus we see a peculiar leaning toward the instrumental style of

Less Drink, Less Poverty

A request comes to us, with a clipping from the "Referee" column of the Des Moines Daily News, to publish an article on prohibition appearing in the clipping. We are quoting parts of the article.

A letter to the editor of the News from H. S. Hollingsworth, general secretary of the Associated Charities in Des Moines, tells of the effect of prohibition in that part of the country.

"A year before the 86 saloons were finally closed in Des Moines, our office made a survey of the current cases in order to determine how many of them were in poverty on account of drink. We discovered that 26 per cent of all the families then under consideration by our organization, were in difficulty because of intoxicating liquors."

A year after the closing of the saloons another survey showed that only 9.6 per cent of the cases for the year could be traced to drink.

"Since that time the percentage has gone steadily down and the study of our 1922 work in which we carried the peak load of 8,510 persons, drink as a cause of poverty was in composition for voices. The central portion of the anthem is quite cleverly written. The accents placed upon the weak beats and crossing of voices presents a style which was used prolifically by the composers of the old Roman school and which makes fine choral music. The closing measures contain beautiful melodies full of jollity and spirit. This is the characteristic idiom in which Haydn thought. It is essentially an anthem of praise, not of the more serious devotional type.

In summarizing, we should keep in mind that Haydn's style is essentially instrumental, proceeding from the homophonic and harmonic point of view rather than the contrapuntal. He was essentially a melodist of the first order, his mind being saturated with the forms and style of folk music. He always stated his ideas in very clear and concise manner, revealing an unusual amount of intelligence and originality. "His works have a crystalline sharpness, every melodic outline, every harmonic mass or progression, and every element of internal structure being presented with absolute distinctness. But his love of exactitude and perspicuity is kept from mechanicalness by the pervading healthiness, animation, and humor of his imagination, and by his fine sense of large total effects, and of the color contrasts essential to them."

His method is similar to Handel's, being described as the objective method. From a technical point of view, his works mark a new era in the instrumental style, and it is this which marks Haydn as one of the greatest composers that ever lived.

evidence in less than 7/100 of 1 per cent of the cases—practically a negligible factor.”

Attention is called to the 18th amendment and the opposition being made to it with the remark that should this country retreat from its support of the amendment the prophecy which Professor Karl Pearson made regarding England, to the effect that unless liquor drinking and the social evil are conquered, civilization must wane and eventually die out, may unfortunately be true here.

Bootleg Sermons

Since bootlegging liquor is so profitable, why not bootlegging sermons? asks the Literary Digest. This outburst is prompted by an article in the Christian Century that tells of preachers who are either too busy or ignorant to prepare their own sermons, securing sermons already written for a small payment.

“For a modest sum he can secure his sermons ready-written—all sorts of sermons: evangelistic, expository, patriotic, funeral, and baccalaureate. It is persuasively argued—lest some of tender conscience should hesitate to avail themselves of this assistance—that Jesus never laid claim to originality and that Paul sent for his books. Moreover, if a preacher who wishes to be the only one in his community to receive this service, he can receive this assurance for a small additional payment. One wonders who the ‘experts’ are who prostitute such meager sermonizing ability as they have to this nefarious industry, and what are the sources from which they collect the excerpts which make up their spurious eloquence, for it is too much to believe that these professional promoters of plagiarism are above the practice of it. There is something to be said for the system of Sir Roger de Coverly’s vicar, who, since he could not write good sermons, chose good printed sermons and read them well. He brought the book into the pulpit and announced the author before he read the text. He may have been stupid, but he was no liar. There are plenty of legitimate helps and suggestions to fertilize the minds of ministers and start lines of thought. But this surreptitious and clandestine system—bah! Put out such a preacher and install a radio—receiving only!”

To Simplify Laws

It is estimated that in a single year in thirty-five of our States 40,000 bills were introduced and 13,000 were passed at a cost of about $900 per law. The Review of Reviews tells of the efforts being made to simplify the situation.

Our courts are congested and our laws are too numerous. Many questions are brought into court that could be settled easily outside if only some provision was made for such a settlement. Our American courts have had to resort to the precedents of old English common law where our statute laws have not directly applied. This is one of the contributing factors to the chaos of laws.

Last February there met at Washington a representative body of lawyers and judges to discuss ways and means for bringing order and simplicity into our laws. From this body Mr. Elihu Root aided in organizing the American Law Institute which has for its purpose “to promote the clarification and simplification of the law, secure better administration of justice and carry on scientific legal work.”

Mr. Root said in addressing the Institute:

“To-day our authorities are always in conflict. Where we find one court interpreting a given statute one way, we will find another which takes the opposite view just as strongly. Our system of laws has become so vast and complicated that it is almost impossible to make a competent investigation. In the five years which ended in 1914 a total of 62,000 statutes were passed by Congress and the legislatures. In the same time there were 65,000 decisions handed down by the courts relative to them.”

While the civil law is badly congested, the criminal side is perhaps even worse. Attorney General Daugherty comments on the criminal side of the situation:

“Painful as the admission may be, it is nevertheless true that under existing conditions, the law, as a science, has lost the element of accuracy, the virtue of simplicity, and the perfection of reason. The tendency of some courts, yearly growing more pronounced, to ignore fundamentals and to render opinions based on inclinations rather than principle has contributed in no small degree to the present complexities of the situation.

“With a learned judiciary, relieved of the embarrassment of irreconcilable inconsistencies, which a restatement of the law will effect, a scholarly and scientific administration of justice must be the inevitable result.”

The investigation by the Institute showed that the causes of the law’s uncertainty are: Lack of agreement among members of the legal profession on the fundamental principles of common law, misuse of legal terms, ignorance of judges and lawyers, great number of laws and nature of novel cases.

A council of twenty-one eminent lawyers manage the affairs of the American Law Institute. William Draper Lewis, of the University of Pennsylvania Law School, is director, Elihu Root is honorary president, Benjamin N. Cardozo, vice president, and George Welwood Murray, treasurer. Immediate action is being taken under the presidency of George W. Wickersham, the Carnegie Corporation having agreed to give $100,000 annually for the next ten years to assure prompt prosecution of the work.

This is the most ambitious undertaking ever made by the legal profession in any country, concludes the article, and will, it is hoped, reestablish law in its simpler form.

Eats Concrete

A concrete-eating mollusk has been found, according to the Literary Digest. He is about three inches long and one and a quarter wide, and his name is Pholad.

“When the piles were constructed a number of years ago, they were jacketed with concrete to protect them from the common wood-boring marine animals. Recently it was found that the Pholads had bored through the concrete and so made way for the wood-borers to get at the wooden piles. Just how the mollusk works is unknown. The forward, rounded portion of the shell has a surface resembling a rasp or file. Whether the cutting of the concrete or rock is due wholly to attrition with the rough shell, or whether it is aided by some secretion which softens the material, has not been surely determined. These mollusks have been found in some hard rocks, but are generally in shales. Reports state that at every point in the inner harbor where mortar-jacketed piles exist, about 50 per cent had been more or less attacked, of which more than one fifth were badly bored; and of those not attacked a number were so far inshore as to be but little exposed. To allay unnecessary alarm, it should be said that the mortar was below average in quality, from two to five inches in thickness, some being decidedly poor. That these jackets had escaped attack for fourteen years is attributed to the fact that the wooden forms used in depositing the mortar had been left in place. They were gradually destroyed by marine wood borers.”

Reunion News

Tent City at Hermosa

The Southern California reunion is well advertised at Hermosa Beach, and favorable comment has been given them by the press. An interesting bit of publicity was obtained in the Hermosa Daily Breeze regarding the reunion, under the heading of "Canvas City, Unique Place Rising Behind San Dunes at Hermosa; Public Invited." The article follows:

"It is like discovering a new land to come suddenly upon that canvas city of the people of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, tucked away as it is over the brow of the sand dunes of Hermosa Beach. Riding along Hermosa Avenue one has no idea of this little village of 350 souls, scattered over thirty acres of ground, with the tabernacle rising in the center of the town. Seventy-five tents and a dozen or so of bungalows house the families who are here for a ten-day conference of the church. To-morrow the young women of the camp, in groups of four each, are going to canvass the homes of the South Bay cities and invite folk to visit the camp and get acquainted with the folk there.

"It is an interesting place, that city on the hill. The location itself enriches the spirit. The distant mountains, and the sea below, and the evening sun kissing the hills good night, make for peace and contentment. Children must grow big in thought there; for low horizons and meager boundaries make petty spirits rest in satisfaction. The camp belongs to the Southern California Church of the Latter Day Saints, and Doctor T. W. Williams, apostle of the church is in charge. The future plan is to greatly improve the property, making streets, and terracing down the hill, and putting in green lawns, etc. There is a model school training for the children, a kindergarten, commissary department, and training school for Sunday-school teachers, where beneath the impulse of religious influence their young people may become imbued with the ideals and aspirations of the church. Doctor Williams made it very emphatic that the Latter Day Saints are not Mormons, but an entirely different division of the church, and though the Mormons have driven polygamy out of their church, the Latter Day Saints have never countenanced polygamy in their religious teachings. The conference is of an educational nature. There one finds the eagerness for a culture domesticated in character; a range of life-interest imbedded in religious teaching. They are the defenders of primitive religion and exponents of the spiritual characteristics of the new age.

"Recreation and games, wholesome play for the children, the best of meals and social interests of people with a common objective, make these conferences very enjoyable as well as educational. They own the land, and are coming every year for their meetings. It is a unique place, and very much worth your accepting the invitation to visit. The camp is situated on Longfellow Avenue, Hermosa Beach."

Northeastern Kansas

The Northeastern Kansas reunion, while disappointing in the number of attendants, was a grand success in spiritual and intellectual development. Our district president, Samuel Twombly, assisted by James A. Thomas and Frank G. Hedrick, was chosen to preside.

The first session of the reunion was on Friday evening, August 10, memorial services for President Harding being held. Reverend Sisney of the local Methodist congregation was invited to deliver the principal address.

Bishop A. Carmichael was present the first half of the sessions, and conducted classes morning and afternoon on the subject of stewardships. It was very evident that the brother had devoted a great deal of study and research to his subject and was prepared to present it in a very intelligent as well as enthusiastic manner. A. Max Carmichael arrived on Wednesday, and was not long in getting into action. He proved to be a human dynamo for the conversion of knowledge into understandable and comprehensible illustrations. He stressed the necessity of greater activity in religious training in church and home. Northeastern Kansas is solid for the Carmichaels. In the early days of the reunion before her arrival, many made inquiry of the writer as to whom Sister Constance was, where did she live, etc. Wednesday morning the subject of the inquiries came into camp from the Winfield reunion like a busy bee, and it was but a short time until she had all the little tots in camp busy. She was an indefatigable worker, as well as a constructive interpreter of the needs for the intellectual and moral development of the child. She demonstrated her ability as a leader and director of the activities of children, and those who were present at our reunion will long remember Miss Bertha.

Patriarch Frederick A. Smith was with us for two or three days and preached two powerful sermons that were very much appreciated by the Saints. Missionary Supervisor T. W. Curtis preached a number of missionary sermons with his usual vigor and power. Brother Twombly gave us some reviving pastoral sermons. Other speakers were Brethren Guinand, Thomas, and Hedrick.

By a unanimous vote it was decided to hold a reunion next year. While the attendance was much smaller than past years, the absence of sickness or physical distress, the high intellectual tone of the lectures and sermons, the manifestation of God's Spirit in our prayer meetings, were factors that made our reunion rank high in the estimation of those in attendance.

Little Sioux and Gallands Grove

The joint reunion of the Little Sioux and Gallands Grove Districts opened last Friday, August 17, under favorable weather conditions in the beautiful city park at Dow City. The commodious tents belonging to the districts had been set up and the grounds put in excellent shape for the occasion. Not so many individual tents had been ordered as formerly, but many campers have driven in, bringing their own tents and prepared to care for themselves.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards and Sister Blanche Edwards were upon the grounds early, ready to lend their support and counsel to the various reunion activities. Brother Edwards has been appreciatively received in his apostolic office. His preaching has been instructive and his keen vision and vigorous presentation of the gospel message and our present-day needs has been the source of much inspiration.

Sister Edwards has won the confidence and esteem of all by her able presentation of vital issues in departmental work. Clothed in beautiful English, her message is given an individuality by quaintness of expression and aptness of illustration which adds charm to her work. Religious education is taking on a new meaning in our districts, and we look for progress and blessing to follow.

Under Sister Edwards's advice, constructive work is being done for the children and young folks each morning at the preaching hour. These exercises follow the young people's prayer meeting in the young people's tent and consist of varied exercises including special singing, sermonets, Bible talks and stories, Boy Scout and Oriole activities, and constructive work for the little ones. The hour is fairly popular with the young folks, and some very fine work is being done, even though the effort is in an experimental stage.

Bishop Albert Carmichael has been with us from the first day and is a stalwart expounder of the gospel law. A large class of earnest people greet him at an early hour each morning and listen to his able discussion of the financial law, especially as pertains to stewardships. Brother Carmichael never fails to impress us with the soundness of his argument and the consecration of his purpose. We long for the day when the membership of the church may be wholly converted, when all may be "stewards indeed." The light of the new day dawns upon us; we rejoice and are eager for active service.

Elder P. R. Burton arrived Sunday from the Omaha Indian reservation and has preached some powerful sermons in his own way. Monday he talked to the children at their hour on his work among the Indians.

Each week day afternoon there are recreational activities—volley ball, croquet, baseball, horseshoe and other contests for the young people. These are under the able direction of Brother J. E. Keck of Sioux City who is a valuable leader of young people. The play activities are a necessary part of happy, healthful, camp life.

Patriarch F. A. Smith and wife are expected soon from Independence. Brother and Sister Edwards will leave Tuesday for the Nauvoo reunion, and Elder Putnam is expected to arrive that day.

The attendance Sunday was very good. The weather continues fine, and the general spiritual condition of the reunion so far is good.

Notes From Southern California Reunion

The Southern California reunion is now in full swing with Apostle T. W. Williams presiding, associated with Apostle J. A. Gillen, Bishop James F. Keir, and Patriarch W. A. McDowell. The attendance is above the average in the number of tents pitched and the number of people attending.

The Saints are enjoying spiritual prayer meetings, inspirational preaching, and stirring music. Brothers Gillen, Williams, and Keir have been the principal speakers. Sister Dora Glines has spoken a number of times on departmental work.

Des Moines District Reunion

August 19 closed a very pleasant and happy reunion for the Des Moines District. There were thirty-six tents on the grounds, but a number of these were large house tents that accommodate more than one family. Some forty families, or nearly two hundred people composed our little tented city. Many young people from Des Moines drove down each evening and enjoyed the evening services and recreation and returned in the morning to their work.

The reunion opened at 10 a. m. Friday, August 10, with a very good prayer service. At 2.30 p. m., with flag at half-mast, a fitting and appropriate memorial service was held for our departed President.

Some of the speakers who had been scheduled to attend the reunion and whose names appeared on the program did not arrive but our district president and missionaries were so resourceful and well prepared and so eager for the success of the services that all were willing to substitute, and as a result a very good reunion was had. Elder Cyril E. Wight was the only speaker outside of the district until a few days before the close when Elder Clifford came to assist Elders Lentell and Holloway in missionary work until conference.

One day the hearts of many were made glad to see coming across the campus the new pastor of Des Moines, Elder David E. Dowker, and his family. They made the overland trip from Los Angeles by automobile. He was heartily welcomed by all and was soon made to feel at home in his new surroundings.

The morning services were quite full, with priesthood meetings at 7, prayer meeting at 8.15, departmental work at 9.45, and preaching at 11. The entire afternoon was given over to recreation. Preaching services were held at 8 each evening, followed by more recreation and bonfires and wiener roasts for the benefit of the young people who could attend only in the evening. Each night as we watched a large crowd of the younger element at play we could not but observe how our reunions had grown and how many more of the young are in attendance since recreation has become one of the features of our gathering. Who can estimate what an asset these young boys and girls will be to the church in the days that are to come if we can hold them during their adolescence. We have observed, too, that our youth respond more readily at our educational and devotional services if given plenty of wholesome, well-supervised recreation. At one prayer meeting for the young held at 6 a. m. eighty were in attendance and sixty participated in the service.

Sister Lentell had charge of the small children in their tent, teaching them hand work, telling stories, and with one of the priesthood, conducting prayer service each morning, teaching the little people how to pray and for what to ask. The bedtime story from 7 to 7.30 p. m. was a popular feature with the little folks.

The Department of Women was represented by lectures by Sisters Lentell, Enslie, and Davis.

The music was well cared for by Sisters Wolf and Rudkin and Brother Evans.

Nine people were baptized, two of them being a couple in their seventies. Though the brother was blind and had to be led around by his companion they radiated such a cheery, happy spirit that their tent soon became a popular one. Each morning as he spoke in the prayer meeting it was as a benediction. The true spirit of service and consecration was expressed in the prayer service one morning when his wife asked the prayers of the Saints that she might retain her sight in order to enable her to lead her blind husband.

Sometimes we are apt to think that the spirit of sacrifice and love for this work was stronger in the earlier days of our organization than now, but some things at our reunion made us believe otherwise. Brother Castings told of going out in the woods each morning at 4 o'clock to pray for the spiritual welfare of the camp. One young brother who was reared in Des Moines but who has been absent from the district for ten years told how he and his wife got so hungry for a real sermon that they often traveled five hundred miles to hear a Latter Day Saint preacher. More than once they went this distance for administration. Yes, they had passes, but they also had a love for this work to prompt such action. The train service between Runnels and Des Moines did not correspond with one young man's hours of work, so a number of times he walked the entire distance—seventeen miles. Sometimes an auto picked him up for a way.

We feel that in every way the Des Moines district reunion was a success and that the spiritual life of the branches will be richer for it.

Pottawattamie and Fremont District Reunion Closes

The reunion of the Pottawattamie and Fremont Districts is a matter of record. The last session was held Sunday night, August 19.

The preaching was of a high order. The study hour work was very interesting and instructive. The assistance of Sister Blanche Edwards was a great contribution towards its success, although all others did good work. The priesthood meetings were quite well attended and much good done. The prayer meetings were excellent and very spiritual. Speaking by way of exhortation and instruction, with promises of better things, the Saints were urged to make the coming conference a special subject of prayer.

While the number of campers was less than in previous years, the order was excellent as a rule and the health of the camp good. The recreational features were not excessive but were enjoyed by those engaging in them. On the whole the reunion was profitable and one the best held in this place. The manner of conducting the lunch counter and commissary was commended except by a few who thought there should have been no coffee or tea served, but these were served only to those calling for them.

At the business session it was decided to hold a joint reunion in 1924. The district presidents of these districts were authorized to appoint the necessary assistants and complete the reunion committee. This committee was authorized to decide upon time and place of the next reunion.

Colorado Springs Reunion Opens

A splendid spirit of friendliness characterized the opening of the reunion at Colorado Springs last Friday, August 17. There was not a large attendance the first day but the Saints have been coming in from all parts of the district, and some from other States, until there is a large crowd present to enjoy the splendid reunion spirit. Visitors are here from the following States: California, Kansas, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Iowa, and Nebraska.

Apostle J. A. Gillen arrived from California Sunday noon, August 19. He preached a powerful sermon on Monday morning, taking for his text the incident of Peter's life after the resurrection of Jesus Christ when he determined to go back to his old job of fishing. His message went straight to the hearts of all present.

Monday morning over fifty young people went to Stratton Park near the reunion ground for a sunrise prayer service. A good spirit was present and all enjoyed the meeting.

Sister Letha Tilton, the district chorister, is handling the song service in an able manner. She says the choir this year is the best she has directed at any reunion.

Sister Dora Glines, superintendent of the Department of Women, and Bishop James F. Keir arrived August 22, from the Southern California reunion. Sister Glines spoke at 11 o'clock and Bishop Keir at 8 p. m.

A remarkable spirit of good cheer and friendliness is present this reunion. Not one word of criticism has been heard regarding the reunion arrangements, and everything is running smoothly. Every one is doing his part to make the meetings a success, and God is blessing us in good measure.

Elder Calvin H. Rich was charge of the commissary department, and everyone is complimenting him on the good meals being served and the promptness with which he can handle large crowds.

The weather has been very cool and very pleasant. We are anxious to see the splendid spirit of reunion spread to every limit of the district.

More News From Pinconning Reunion

The prayer service on the second day of the reunion was in charge of Elder J. Shields and Otto Bartlett, preaching at eleven by Elder E. D. Fultz, and again at 2 p. m. by Elder Shields.

During the afternoon a severe storm came up, blowing our tent over and making it rather disagreeable for some in the small tents. The big tent was raised for evening service, but the crowd had just left the tent when another storm came up as if by magic, and the tent went down again, even the big pole in the center. It has some large rents in it, so we are holding open air services to-day.

The morning prayer meeting, Sunday, August 19, was in charge of Matthew Umphrey and John Wade. A wonderful spirit prevailed. It surely was a blessing, and we feel that we need not be discouraged.

One hundred and forty-three young people gathered in a sheltered spot about a quarter of a mile from our meeting place and had prayer meeting at three o'clock Sunday afternoon where we enjoyed a splendid service.

Elder B. H. Doty preached this evening, and his sermon was surely inspired. We are in an Indian settlement and several Indians were here. They pay the best of attention, and during his sermon I observed tears streaming down the faces of some of them.

The Saints' Camp at Gautier

We have great reason to rejoice because of the success thus far of the Mobile District reunion held at Gautier, Mississippi. This is the third reunion we have held. The first was far from what it should have been; the second was even more unsuccessful, but by the efforts of a few it was decided to try it again this year.

We of the committee deeply felt the responsibility, because we knew if this one should not be a success then no one would have the courage to try it again.

We worked hard and prayed earnestly, and now we are seeing the results. We have more than fifty campers. That number is small compared with some of the large reunions of the North, but it is twice the number we have had heretofore. By far the majority are young people.

We have been greatly blessed by the Spirit of God in all our services. The prayer services are especially good. Patriarch James Davis told us our efforts had been recognized by the Lord and were pleasing unto him and that if the young people would be active in discharging their duty the time would come when there would be hundreds assembled in the reunions of this district.

This admonition has been well received by the young, and they seem to have awakened to the wonderful opportunities before them and are consecrating themselves to the service of the Master. Never before in this district have we felt so much of the Spirit or witnessed such an expression from the young people.

I believe the Lord directed us in selecting this place. We are about ten miles from the nearest branch and there is not a Saint living here. There had never been a sermon preached here by our elders before we came. This is a small village on the banks of the Pascagoula River. Our camp is among large, moss-covered oaks near the river. Practically the entire population comes out to the evening services, and they seem to be very favorably impressed with both preaching and singing. After the evening service we gather on the river bank, and there accompanied by Elder J. Charles May with his guitar, we spend an hour in song service.

We have with us Patriarch Davis and wife of Michigan,

Elder J. Charles May, and of course the two Booker missionaries, and yesterday Father Booker joined our ranks. Sister Taylor, whom many ex-students of Graceland will remember as Mamie Worlund, is assisting with departmental work and has charge of our recreations. FRANCES C. BOOKER.

Visitors Praise Los Angeles Reunion

All services were suspended at the chapel, 1114 Wall Street from August 10 to 19, on account of the Southern California District reunion held at the regular reunion grounds at Hermosa Beach, and which was said to have been the best from every point, ever enjoyed by the district. There were an even 100 tents on the ground, all of which were occupied by regular campers, beside the many autos which came down from the city and vicinity bringing scores of visitors to say nothing of the electric railroad, with its quota.

The weekly programs consisted of diversified studies, lectures, symposiums, and music. The whole work of the reunion was carried out in systematic detail by well regulated and working committees functioning in the finest order under the masterly supervision of Apostle T. W. Williams who was never more at his best than through this triumph of his genius as a leader and director. On Sunday the 19th, Brother Williams looked weary and tired, and he must have been, for never for one minute during the ten days was he at rest from conversation, answering questions and attending to the detail of the program, but despite it all, his sermon Sunday afternoon was a masterpiece, sinewy and poetic, throbbing with the pulse of power, constructed around the Mosaic command, "Go forward."

The sermons by all the attending ministry were pitched to the key and spirit of the "revival," breathing hints of an awakening.

That was the purpose of the reunion, and that is what it accomplished. And that is the real and spiritual side of the work. But that was not all for which the Saints gathered. There must be a human side to all questions with which man has to do. And the other side in this case was just as essential to the welfare and progress of the church as were the more serious exercises. There were games for the young, music and entertainment for all, the exchange of friendly greetings between visitor and resident member. The Saints had the pleasure of meeting and hearing Apostle Gillen and Bishop Keir, both sensing the needs of the times and giving instructions accordingly.

I believe the best way to sum up the effects of the reunion is to let those who were there give in a short, terse style the outstanding features impressing them as the greatest good to the greatest number.

Elder J. I. Spencer, an old-timer in the district: "The thirteenth reunion on these grounds, the most spiritual and harmonious of all."

Bishop Keir: "A most pleasing feature of the reunion was, the expression of an earnest desire on the part of so many to square their lives with the ideals of Christ."

Brother W. A. McWowell, stately, grave, ever sober, yet ever smiling, after some persuasion said: "I see a strong desire to be of service to the Master and the interest of his work and quite a spiritual uplift on the part of the Saints."

Sister Catherine Exley, another old-timer: "The symposium as conducted has been a departure for good and an outstanding feature, alone in its class accomplishing an end which nothing else can reach."

Brother W. E. Badham, State representative, another old-timer a big one, over 6 feet and under 600, works harder going down hill than up, shy of reporters but said: "The people have seen that our reunion grounds must be improved and that it be made a permanent camping place to be used any time during the year for an outing."

Brother F. B. Van Fleet, "The crowning feature of the reunion was one to do away with the destructive influence of contention and strife and to amalgamate the people under the spite of Jesus Christ which is 'peace and good will.'"

Elder William Anderson: "I see this, a strong appeal for a closer walk with Christ and a response to the appeal and a desire on the part of the Saints to know that which is required of them."

Brother R. E. Leslie, representing the young: "The outstanding things in the reunion was the spirit of unity expressed and the desire of all to serve God and, also, the putting of young people forward in the offices of the church."

Several of the young people were questioned as to what the reunion had meant to them, and in every case there was a beam of delight in the bright young eyes, as they would say, "We have had the best time of our lives." That sounds good and will be a comfort to Brother Williams, who set out for that very thing in regard to the young. No one understands better than he that the young of every species of God's creation, must have recreation, they must play and be amused. "The child shall play on the den of the asp," is a forecast for that great day of peace. Then why not play here? Let them play, rejoice and be exceedingly glad for the God of our salvation delights in the heart that makes merry in the holiness of peace.

But in the midst of our joys there must be some of earth's woes and heartaches; there must be some bitter with the sweet. So it was, Sister Margaret Wickes, who was head of the program committee and who had staked so much upon the program, was permitted but a few brief visits on account of her sister's sudden and unexpected sickness at the opening of the reunion and which finally took her to a hospital.

J. H. CAMP.

Far West Stake Reunion

Nature is the form, the tabernacle, the outward expression of the indwelling life. God has created and endowed her of himself; thus she gives us of his magnificence, in storm, in calm, in majesty of dominion and domain, in brooding calmness, in harmony, in beauty, in all the vast realm of mountain and valley, of sea and sky and hill and vale—in the varied aspects of her rugged manifestations and also in her gentler mien. Men and women who toil in the cities and towns in stress of labor seek her kindly presence and healing sympathy for repose and invigoration. Thus the vacation season and the reunion time make their calls and Nature opens her arms and her soothing bosom to her wearied children.

"The groves were God's first temples"; therein the modern man finds God in the majestic cathedral under the all-covering dome of sky, in the fretted aisles formed by overarching giant monarchs of the primitive forest. Here is serenity, repose, a spirit of overruling calm, a consciousness of Majestic Presence through which the beauty of the Father is revealed in the all-pervading sense of dominion and overruling, controlling power.

From the times of long ago in our annals in this Far West region of country the Saints with their children and friends have observed a season of annual outing or reunion. Like Israel of old who kept their feasts in the open country, our people meet and camp and enjoy the spiritual, social, and physical benefits of an annual "outgathering." It gives bodily rest, mental change, and gets one out of the rut of comparatively unchanging, rigid grind—good for body and soul and necessary to mental as to physical health. It offers opportunity to secure untold, wholesome benefits, without great expense and lacks the strain, stress, hurry, and pell-mell of the average "trip." Then, too, the spiritual and intellectual benefits are innumerable and incomparable to ordinary benefits, great and beneficial as the ordinary may be and is.

Well, we are here, encamped a division of the great army in this stake adjoining the city of Zion, trying to strengthen the center place, as an outlying unit. There are about seventy-five tents; we lack about thirty or more of the usual number. There is, however, a vast membership in the adjoining region—Oakdale, Kingston, Far West, Cameron, Delano, Maple Grove, Saint Joseph, Pleasant Grove and other places who come and go by auto, many of whom do not find it necessary to entrench upon the grounds.

An addition has been built to the large dining hall and meals are served en cafeteria. The light and power system has been housed in a new building with pump to well from which water is forced to a sanitary tank equipped with faucets, also to the dining hall. The grounds, twenty-five acres in a body of sixty acres, is splendidly timbered, is gently sloping, well carpeted with a profusion of tufted green, in all a superbly rural temple suited to the present high purpose to which annually it is dedicated by prayer, by praise in thanksgiving and preparation for advancing service.

The large tabernacle is nicely outfitted; seating and other facilities are well suited to the purpose. A large bulletin program on muslin, 12 by 6 feet, on suitable frame, artistically lettered by Brother G. F. Weston, the church map maker, gives the program for every day.

Now these are some of the physical or outward features; and while much of the physical is worthy, essential, and that through which the spiritual is outbreathed and expressed, yet the spiritual life is primary, fundamental, basic; for "God is a Spirit," and "man is spirit." When the spiritual rules, permeates, controls, and shines out through the material, life becomes harmonious, scientific, sweetly reasonable, and is glorified in a balanced, consistent wholeness. Man thus lives not "after the flesh" nor "by bread alone," but in conscious communion with the infinite Creator; thus life is happified, useful, and lived in unison with the mind and purpose of the great Father of all.

To promote the general welfare, to secure the ends enumerated, to develop others, in harmony with the consensus of those in charge of departments, three divisions are made: Children up to twelve years, in special tent, Sister Edith Koehler in charge; young people, twelve to twenty-four, junior tent, Sister Anna Salyards supervising; adults, under charge of the stake presidency and assistants; special services in the three tents adapted to all. Departments of Women, Study, Recreation and Expression, and of Music, all represented in their seasons.

Prayer meetings in all tents every morning; class work, addresses, lectures, sermons at 10.45; 2 p. m., department work, sermons, round tables; 3.30 recreation. Sometimes there will be special meetings in first and second tents. Priesthood meetings are at seven p. m.; community singing or experience meetings at 7.30; sermons, lectures, cantata, and other numbers at 8 p. m.; good preachers, competent workers, and leaders; the service is excellent. Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, A. Max Carmichael, of the Department of Education, A. B. Phillips, J. F. Sheehy, E. F. Robertson; T. C. Kelley, and O. W. Okerlind, stake missionaries; and Orman Salisbury, and Milo Burnett, acting counselors to the stake president, also Brethren John Hovenga and Z. J. Lewis of the bishopric, with local officers and brethren and sisters, make up our force. We look for President Frederick M. Smith to be with us over the closing Sunday.

The appeal of the intellectual, the spiritual, and the moral, is the appeal of the eternal verities to the soul of man, which must finally prevail over all contrary illusions or lesser things. We must have faith in the true, the good, the eternal. This is our program here. "By this sign we conquer"; in such conviction we press on. We shall keep ourselves in this attitude, this state of mind, and not fail to pursue a steady course of plain living and high thinking, in the midst of so much of the passing folly and vain show of the fleeting world.

Young people are here galore; beautiful, stimulating, inspiring in their growing, unfolding powers of body and mind, brimming with life and energy, full of optimistic imagination, with hope all-impelling, with expectations unlimited. They are being taught, too, and are responding—not quite as fully as the army commanders in their envisagement of the pressing needs may wish, but they are coming.

Recreation in charge of A. B. Constance and John Sheehy, the little giant from New England, is seasonable and wholesome; social enjoyment is good and all are happy. The stalwart men who dwell on the fine farms of this choice land are on hand as usual; they have worked hard; without their horny hands of toil the reunion could not be maintained.

What shall I say more? We are on the fourth day, and so far so good. We may be able to write more, though we have done this grind in the midst of the burden of administration of much detail, some while sitting in the social service listening to the appeals and other expressions of the people. The Herald Office bookstand is in charge of Brother E. E. McCormick, of Saint Joseph. Not enough books were sent, however. We sell, usually, over two hundred dollars worth in a season. People must read and think, so they say, to carry on. The increasing thought being given to the problems of the church and its literature are among the hopeful signs of the present. People from Independence, Holden, and other stakes are with us and more are coming. We commend their good judgment in visiting this territory and this reunion.

R. S. SALYARDS.

Southwestern Kansas Reunion

The reunion of the Southwestern Kansas District became a matter of history on August 19. While we did not have the attendance we would like, yet the good accomplished in a spiritual, educational, and social way cannot be estimated.

The opening of the reunion found Sunday school superintendent A. Max Carmichael and Sister Bertha Constance in the camp ready for work, Brother Carmichael taking charge of the study hour. The people of this reunion should have a deeper appreciation of the meaning of religion and the methods of teaching it since hearing him lecture. Sister Constance did fine work in her line. She surely demonstrated it was possible to care for the children all day. Sister Constance seemed untiring in her efforts, working from early morning until late at night. While we did not have the children there one would wish in that line of work, yet we are of the opinion that a reunion in this district which did not have a teacher in kindergarten among its corps of workers would be incomplete. We find this work not only entertaining but the best way to teach religion.

We were made sad by receiving word that our only missionary, Elder C. E. Harpe, was very sick with appendicitis and rheumatism so would not be able to be with us. He holds a place in the good will of the people of this territory. We have heard since that he is slowly recovering. May the Lord hasten his complete recovery.

In the absence of Brother Harpe, Brother Carmichael was pressed into service as a missionary. He preached two very fine sermons, which he informed us were the first he ever preached.

Sunday morning Apostle R. S. Budd came, staying until Friday. He preached a series of missionary sermons which were pronounced good by all present. The sermon Friday morning was exceptionally good, in which he advised us to "get self out of the way of ourselves." We were sorry to let him go.

Monday Patriarch Joshua Carlile was one of our number. His visit was enjoyed by all. Preaching and giving blessings occupied all his time. He is surely a father to his people.

Bishop A. V. Karlstrom came Thursday. He was hindered considerably in his labors because of ill health. However he preached twice and delivered his illustrated lecture which was greatly enjoyed. We have heard several lectures on foreign lands, but this is the best we have heard.

We believe the people of this district are greatly benefited through their association with these people. We are boosting for a bigger and better reunion next year.

T. S. WILLIAMS.

Independence

On the Campus Saturday night, August 25, the L. D. S. Band gave a concert followed by a feature film and comedy. Sunday, August 26, at 7.15 p. m. was a sacred concert by the band. Elder W. A. Smith preached, and a two-reel picture, "The Deluge," was shown.

All day, September 3, Labor Day, will be devoted to a big celebration on the Campus. Athletic events, ball games, band concerts, moving pictures, and picnic dinners will be features of the occasion. Governor Hyde has been asked to be the speaker. Definite arrangements cannot be announced at this time as plans are not completed and Governor Hyde has not as yet answered.

Sunday morning services in the churches in Zion were as follows: Stone Church, preaching by Elder J. W. A. Bailey; Liberty Street, Elder J. M. Baker; Enoch Hill, Vernon A. Reese; Walnut Park, Elder W. H. Kelley.

The choir at the Stone Church sang "Holy, Holy," by Gounod. A male quartet consisting of Evan Fry, George Anway, Paul Craig, and James R. Houghton, sang an original composition by Mr. Houghton, entitled "A song of degrees." The words are taken from the 130th Psalm. The composition was written in Boston but presented for the first time in Independence at this service.

Beginning next Sunday, September 2, a special feature of the music at the Stone Church will be the rendering of original compositions written by members of the church. All writers of music and verse desiring to have their compositions entered in the series of presentations should send them to Mr. James R. Houghton, 101 North River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri.

The purpose of this feature is to encourage original compositions within the church membership. It is a privilege for new writers to be able to have the benefit of Mr. Houghton's criticisms and suggestions regarding original work. If the opportunity is observed by a number of members some good material may result from the efforts for the benefit of the church and of each writer.

A brief account of the history of the writing of each composition would be of interest in connection with the feature work. Not only will members in the United States be encouraged to write for this series of presentations but also members in other countries should take advantage of the work.

Continuing the music appreciation course in the Department of Recreation and Expression, the program Friday night, August 24, was greatly enjoyed by the large attending crowd. The program for August 31 will consist of selections by the orchestra and band as follows:

1. Baritone Solo: "Largo al Factotum"—Barber of Seville
Rossini (1792-1868)
Pasquale Amato (Victor Record)
2. Orchestral: "Invitation to the Waltz"
Von Weber (1786-1826)
Philadelphia Symphony (Victor Record)
3. Orchestral Selections by the Auditorium Orchestra; Mr. R. T. Cooper, Conductor.

"Knowledge is the only fountain, both of the love and the principles of human liberty. . . . Knowledge, in truth, is the great sun in the firmament. Life and power are scattered with all its beams."—Daniel Webster.

Your Big Opportunity

LAST CALL

You know, of course, that you are not likely to start to school when you are old—at least few people do.

And you know that every time you defer beginning your course you add to the improbability of your ever starting to college.

So when we refer to your "Big Opportunity" and call your attention to the dates on which you may make your upward start towards success, higher service, and greater efficiency, we are saying something that deserves your most earnest attention.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10

On this date your "Big Opportunity" will look you squarely in the face. Will you grasp it? Will you have the vision to picture yourself a dozen years in the future? Will you be able to realize that if you are educated your chance to get on in the world and to be of the greatest service will be a thousand times better than it will be if you miss the opportunity for an education?

Of course you will. But—and here's the test—will you have the good judgment to do now the thing you ought to do? Or will you wait and wait, while your neighbor boy or girl makes the temporary sacrifice and attends college, thus making the preparation essential for the work of life?

What do you say?

Don't let neglect fool you into failure.

Miss Frances Krahl, daughter of D. J. Krahl president of Holden Stake, was married on August 22, to Doctor R. A. Richardson of Kansas City, at the home of the bride's parents. Doctor and Mrs. Richardson will make their home in Kansas City.

Bishops J. F. Keir and Israel Smith are expected to return this week from their reunion work.

Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire will return about September 3.

Brother W. D. Bullard, pastor of Enoch Hill, was called to mourn the departure of his wife who died last Wednesday morning, August 15. The funeral was held at the Stone Church Saturday, with Brother F. A. Smith conducting the services. The family are well known, having resided in Independence for twenty years. The children are Mrs. C. H. Blackman of Kansas City, and Mrs. Ammon White and W. J. Bullard of this city.

Sperry, Oklahoma

The Saints here are still trying to live their religion and to tell the gospel story to others. The warm weather has been responsible for decreased attendance of late but we are hoping it will be better in the future. We still hold all the services, but would be glad to have our new church done.

Important News of an Important Conference

With the increasing demands made upon the church in these days of social anxiety, the annual sessions of the General Conference are growingly important.

Problems of the church are sure to be discussed and legislated upon. Each Saint should have the Conference Daily for full details of the daily sessions.

Order early and include a subscription or two for your friends. We cannot promise back numbers to late subscribers. Beginning October 1 and for the full time of the conference for

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Independence, Missouri

We now have to use the high school auditorium for our special meetings.

We have decided to hold a singing school as we want to learn to do better along that line.

The Oriole girls still have their meetings and are doing good work.

The Sperry Saints expect to hold a reunion this year and all are hoping for its success. The reunion will probably be held at Red Fork.

MRS. BELLE KENDALL.

Toronto, Ontario

A popular song of long ago started out with, "A great big house and nobody living in it." This accurately describes our church here during the last few weeks. The upper auditorium seats seven hundred, but there is always plenty of room. During the reunion at Lowbanks and the vacation period the old song has especially described it. However, the reunion is now over and will long be remembered in the minds of those who attended.

There is considerable dissatisfaction with our church building and its location. While it is centrally located and accessible from all parts of the city, the neighborhood has deteriorated. A movement has been started for some time to sell out and erect a new church. The committee appointed intends to find out from the donations offered just how great this demand is.

The "Christian Brotherhood," the church of the late R. C. Evans, apparently is prospering. They claim a membership of about six hundred, and recently paid off the mortgage on their $40,000 church. This is the material side. Just how successful they are in "declaring the whole counsel of God" and with authority, is another matter. Our policy is not one of antagonism toward them. Where they are helping to make the world better we wish them success. Several families who went with them have returned to our church during the past year.

The Toronto Fair, which reaches almost World's Fair proportions, commences this week. It well indicates the number of articles modern civilization demands. It causes us to realize what a wonderful being man is when we think how simply he can live when necessary.

Two "Yankees" have recently been added to our number and are a welcome addition. The musical department will be greatly reinforced with Sister Needham's ability and voice. Doctor McLean's bride has been put in charge of dramatics.

We have found a junior service to be a splendid thing. It bridges the gap between the Sunday school and the regular preaching service. Our whole Sunday school meets in the lower auditorium. Announcements are made there and then the adult classes go to the upper auditorium. When the lesson period has expired the junior and primary classes march to the upper auditorium where a short prayer is offered and a verse or two of some song is sung. Sometimes one of the children sings a solo, or we may have a choir of children. Brother Miller then gives them a sermon of not over six or seven minutes. He uses the blackboard frequently in teaching the doctrines of the church, and along ethical lines always tries to illustrate with a true story. The older members enjoy this ten-minute service also. The object in view is to impress vital truths upon the child's mind and convince the juniors that a sermon isn't something to be afraid of. We want to get them in the "listening-to-a-sermon" habit.

Sunday School Exhibit for General Conference

Again it has been arranged to have an exhibit of material and equipment for departmental workers, especially those interested in Sunday school, on display at the coming General Conference.

Schools and individuals everywhere are invited to contribute to this display. Articles will be received, displayed, cared for, and returned. There will be no charge and no competition, the idea of the display being to help others to the greatest extent by presenting pictures, handwork, maps, etc., for teachers and officers to use in their home school.

Address Mrs. Maude C. Halley, 1619 West College Street, Independence, Missouri. Exhibits may be sent to her in care of the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Plan Now to Sell Scripture Text Calendars for 1924

Though it is still several months till the Christmas and calendar season, it is not too early to plan on securing some of these popular scripture calendars which sell at sight. Many who successfully sold large numbers of them last year reported: "I wish I had started earlier."

The attractiveness of this calendar makes it a year-round joy. The beautifully colored Bible pictures, with the daily texts for meditation are an inspiration and help to religious progress.

And the price is reasonable. Produced in large quantities, they can be sold at a low price and still make the agent a good profit. Get your copies so you can start out early this fall. People will buy these and be glad to have their Christmas gift problem solved so early and so easily.

Sunday school and other classes could well organize their forces to sell these, covering the territory thoroughly, and as a result could raise a considerable fund for any worthy purpose. Plan to do this by beginning now. Prices to points in United States follow:

	Cost	Sell for	Profit
100 Calendars	$17.00	$30.00	$13.00
200 "	32.00	60.00	28.00
250 "	40.00	75.00	35.00
300 "	46.50	90.00	43.50

Prices to points outside United States on application.

The retail price is 30c each. Terms, cash. Calendars are not returnable.

To those who desire a quantity for personal use as gifts, we herewith quote smaller quantity rates:

Single Copies, 30c; 5—$1.40;

Beautiful Graceland

Beautiful Graceland, majestically resting on the crest of the hill overlooking the town of Lamoni and the surrounding country, offers to the youth of the church unprecedented opportunities in the history of this worthy institution.

A four-year college, fully standardized and accredited, Graceland now grants the bachelor's degree. To old students who wish to return and complete the college course and to new students who desire to learn amidst the delightful associations of church members and under the stimulating influence of a religious atmosphere, is now offered a large curriculum from which to select.

Graceland is fully equipped to give a music course this year, which will include vocal, instrumental, piano, band, orchestra, and public school music.

Also a commercial course including stenography, typewriting, bookkeeping, salesmanship, business English, commercial law, and other subjects.

The special addition this year will be the agriculture course, which will be recognized by the land grant colleges and other agricultural institutions. This prepares for a successful farming career, including the business essentials of farming as well as the scientific aspect.

Besides these special courses there is a full academic course which is standard in any similar collegiate institution.

Finally, and this is now becoming a powerful argument for Graceland, is the Department of Religious Education. Courses are offered in Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, religious history and literature, psychology, applied religion, church doctrine, principles and administration of religious education, and supplementary lectures by leading men of the church. Here is an opportunity that will aid in solving the problems of Zion. Learn what these problems are, get a vision of the future Zion, and bring your offering to aid in the solution of these problems.

Now comes the announcement that Graceland will help her sons and daughters to put themselves through college. A self-help plan is being inaugurated whereby part time work and part time study will be arranged. The building of the new gymnasium and convention hall will give work to many, the rug industry to others, and other plans have been completed for obtaining work for students desirous of earning a part or all of their college expenses.

Never before has the church been able to offer so great an opportunity to its youth as to-day. Graceland provides for a complete college course and even plans to help her students obtain it. Send for further information to Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Beginning her fall term on September 10, Graceland is already receiving applications for admission and is arranging work for those requesting the same. If you cannot attend, perhaps you can interest others. This is an opportunity too great to miss. Take some part in its privileges yourself. Be instrumental in the success of beautiful Graceland.

To Save a Nation

"The sum of the whole matter is this—that our civilization cannot survive materially unless it is redeemed spiritually," says ex-President Wilson. The same thought was expressed in one of the recent addresses of the late President Harding when he said that the problems of America can only be solved by the aid of the religious consciousness.

What is meant by that is not that we need more churches but that we need to fill the empty seats of the many churches already established. But that is only figuratively speaking. At the bottom of the whole thing is the spiritual drive that makes men and women conscious of the divine power, humble in its presence and strong in its faith. It is that something inside that finds expression in the daily lives of the people and which is renewed at the spiritual feast in our church services. The worship of God must find expression if his consciousness is realized in men's lives.

It is common to hear from the lips of certain people that "I don't have to go to church to be religious." That is a fact. One does not go to church to be religious, but he goes to church because he is religious. The person who hesitates to go down on his knee in the sanctuary of God will be even more adverse to such an attitude of humbleness in the privacy of his own home.

It is not a church-going Nation that we want; it is a church-loving Nation. The consciousness of God in the lives of men will insure the perpetuation of this Nation. Men must be "redeemed spiritually" if we are to survive.

The whole-hearted consecration of one's efforts on the altar of service is the cry of the twentieth century. God wants a good people. May he find that people within the boundaries of this great Nation!

Prison Reform

Of the many articles on prison reform which have appeared lately, most of them tell of the improved conditions in this institutional life where men are "made over." It is true that men are made over, but often it is into a dangerous criminal. The Literary Digest calls some of our prisons "schools for crime," and says that treatment of prisoners in many parts of our land is practically unimproved.

The law still metes out punishment in proportion to the guilt because our statutes are rigid and our custom too soundly rooted to be moved.

Modern psychology has revealed a background for crime that hitherto was not known. It explains why one person is criminal and another is not. It tells how that criminal can be made over into a different man or whether there is any hope for him. Yet the law takes its blind course, heedless of human nature.

In a recent editorial we called attention to the steps being taken in juvenile cases to deal with boys instead of the offense. This must come to the attention of our criminologists and be forced upon the laws of our land before we can properly deal with crime. As long as our handling of criminals is un-psychological, just so long will our results be failures.

Only in very recent years have laboratories been established for the study of the mentality of the prisoner. The work is still in its earliest stages, yet it is revealing wonderful things which are coming to the attention of our country's legal officials.

Doctor Hart, quoted in the Literary Digest, says:

We are recognizing that the proper treatment of the prisoner cannot be determined in advance by the judge on the bench, who listens for a few hours to the testimony of witnesses.

The jails contain prisoners convicted of crime, prisoners accused of crime, witnesses accused of no crime but held for the convenience of the State, insane persons, and in some States debtors. The prisoners are herded together usually with little or no classification, and are kept in enforced idleness for periods of from one day to two years.

In every jail there are found some prisoners who are not hardened in crime but who desire reform, but they are forced into association with the vilest criminals, who ridicule their penitence, exert themselves for the corruption, and blackmail them after their discharge.

Religious services are carried on in many jails by Christian people representing different Christian bodies. Such services are sometimes wisely and helpfully conducted. In other cases they are sentimental and injudicious.

A government inspector of prisons tells of the terrible conditions in some of our jails that would make one wonder if we are after all even human, let alone Christian.

The situation existing to-day in crime is not growing better but worse. We read every day of the most awful crimes perpetrated by lads between fourteen and twenty-one. Such conditions cannot be handled in the old way. We must stop putting all our efforts on the punishment of crime and put some of them upon its prevention.

Our rigid laws so bound by precedent must give way to intelligent laws based upon the understanding of human nature. It cannot take place by legislation until the people see for themselves what is needed. It should begin in every community where there are public spirited people and where there are social organizations wanting for something to do.

Clean out the village lock-ups, renovate the town jails, build psychological laboratories in the cities where criminals can be given a chance, by looking into their individual cases.

The people must take an interest not only in the punishment of crime, not only in crime prevention, but in character building.

Have your children the best home environment you can give them? Have they the physical equipment that will enable them to grow into strong men and women? Have they access to good schools? Have they time to play, not in the street but in well-equipped playgrounds under proper supervision or in a clean back yard?

These are community problems as well as individual problems. They should be solved in the small town as well as the big city. The people must do it. Legislation can do nothing without an intelligent people.

Is Religion an Opiate?

Under the above heading an article by the Reverend Samuel Batten, appearing in the Christian Work tells why the question has been asked.

Placards in some Russian cities display the words of Karl Marx, "Religion is an opium," and school children have paraded the streets of Germany carrying banners inscribed, "Down with the God superstition; religion is an opiate!" Everyone knows of the hostility to the church in Russia and of its opposition even in other countries. Anyone who has attended a meeting of radicals in England or America has met this same phrase, says Doctor Batten. What does it mean?

In explanation it is said that the corruption of the best is the worst evil. Religion has suffered much from the wrong thinking of bad men, but it has suffered more from the small thinking of good men. Designing men have exploited religion to gain their own ends. The "divine right of kings" is a doctrine that ruled the world for centuries and was echoed loudest in the recent empire of Kaiser Wilhelm. In some cases Christians have deserved criticism because of their imperfect apprehension of the gospel and their neglect of obedience to its teachings. Of course these were not Christians, but they have masqueraded for ages under that name. What wonder the reaction has come in the world to-day. Has religion drugged the spirituality of Christians? Has it made men insensible to the teachings of Christ?

We answer that religion has never done any such thing. Religion is not an opiate; it is an antiseptic. Religion has never lulled to sleep the morals of any people; it has only purified the baseness of immoral thought. Religion is an antiseptic because it counteracts the evil extant in the world to-day, but it also is more than an antiseptic. It is a tonic. Creative and positive, religion is dynamic and its drive fills men with vigor, transferred into a power for good.

People have slept but never under the effect of religion. Their dulled brains have become inactive and immoral because of ignorance of the true gospel. Their religion has been functioning to the smallest possible degree rather than operating in such force as to grip the lives of men.

Religion as an antiseptic to counteract evil is a thing the world needs in large doses. The radical element has not discovered that religion is an opiate to be left alone, but it is shunning the powerful influence of this antiseptic for fear it will kill the carnal lust that brings momentary satisfaction. Drink deeply of this liquid of life and make immune the soul to that dread disease immorality that penetrates every avenue of thought to-day. We answer, Religion is not an opiate.

Prohibition

"When the Governor and the Legislature of New York disgraced themselves by repealing the State enforcement code for the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States," says the Christian Work, "the Superintendent of Schools of Sioux City, Iowa, M. G. Clark, immediately sent to every teacher in his schools a communication bidding them to include respect for the Eighteenth Amendment as one element in good citizenship." Superintendent Clark's letter was in part as follows:

Not since the war of 1812 has any man dared to make a statement which was in any way comparable to the statements of Calhoun and Hayne. It has been left to the Governor of New York to put himself in their class and to place New York State, if it follows his leadership, in a class with South Carolina. Never since 1862 has the Constitution of the United States been questioned until the Governor of New York dared to stand before the world and to place his great State before the eyes of all the people as a State, in the year of 1923, refusing to acquiesce to the will of the people in the enforcement of the spirit of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Never since 1862 has anything occurred in the political and economic history of any State that should bring every citizen of the United States so quickly to his feet in the defense of the Constitution, the Nation and the flag as does this act of the Governor of the State of New York.

... The issue is the supremacy of the Constitution of the United States. If the action of the Governor of New York can stand unchallenged, the Constitution of the United States is but a mere scrap of paper.

I am sending this circular post-haste to each teacher in Sioux City, before the close of the school year, because I feel that this challenge should go out to every boy and girl and the disgrace of New York should be placed in their eyes, exactly where it belongs. . . .

The action of the governor and the legislature of New York is most regrettable. The constitutional law must be upheld throughout the country and enforced by all loyal agencies.

Many States have passed enforcement laws and are now doing all in their power to make the Eighteenth Amendment a force in the moral life of the Nation. New York politicians are either weak in the moral code or as Superintendent Clark says, the governor's action can be compared to the life of Benedict Arnold, only the governor "would sell the Constitution of his country."

PART SIX

A typical Cape Cod industry is the making and purveying of toys. We had read Joseph Lincoln's inimitable Cape Cod stories, particularly "Shavings." The eccentric but lovable hero of this tale dwelt in a house by the side of the road in which he manufactured and painted toys, and all about his yard on fence posts and walls were ships under sail, dutch windmills running full tilt in the brisk wind, Indians paddling canoes, veering weather vanes, all in motion, all in flaming colors.

While cruising down the "front side" of the cape one day the four-ninety came to just such a yard full of toys and back of it a house the windows of which seemed to bulge with other ships and windmills. To our surprise the establishment bore aloft

Fundamentals of Christianity

By M. A. Etzenhouser

Radio sermon August 18, 1923.

With the coming of each day there are multiplied problems of human adjustment and an ever increasing need for the application of the teachings of the Master.

Almost daily since 1914 when one picks up the paper he is confronted with rumors or reports of war. This has not been confined to non-Christian nations but rather almost wholly to Christian nations, and even now there is hatred smoldering between the two great Christian nations of England and France. Also in the current news there are rumors of coal strikes and many other problems of economic maladjustment within our own country.

It is our opinion that all of these differences between nations and between employer and employee might be adjusted amicably, if the principles enunciated by Christ might be made effective in the lives of men. Many have thought that these continual troubles and difficulties are an indictment against Christianity, and some of the scoffers have gone so far as to say that Christianity has been weighed in the balance and found wanting; that it does not have the potency that is claimed for it; that it is not equal to human needs.

Christianity Has Not Failed

With this idea we disagree. We believe that Christianity has never been fully tried and has not been applied to human problems as it might be and therefore it has not failed.

We are aware that in the chief nations of the earth Christianity is preached and Christian churches predominate, but in denying that it has ever been properly applied we have in mind two distinct aspects which we desire to consider.

First, too many who have become identified with the Christian movement have done so in a passive way, that is, they have joined the church, but have never become actively interested, and therefore the Christian doctrines have not motivated their lives. Nominally only, have these people become Christians yet they help to swell the numbers in statistics. They are not a factor in promulgating the principles; they are recipients rather than contributors and are willing to accept the fruits of Christianity but are not willing to attempt to affect human conduct by applying it.

Second, many others have become actively interested and have even subjected their lives for the advancement of the cause of Christ, but they have thought that Christianity consisted chiefly in forms and rituals and have made them their basis of Christian conduct. In this respect they are not very different from the Pharisees, against whom Christ spoke in unequivocal terms. It seems strange that some Christians to-day assign a place of such importance in religion to the very things which Christ condemned in other religious societies.

Among some of the largest denominations of to-day a disagreement has arisen, and a difference of opinion has been expressed over what has been termed fundamentals. We desire to consider the matter of fundamentals, but not in just the sense in which it is presented in these denominations. Rather, we prefer to deal with fundamentals as distinguished from incidentals. Not all of Christ's sayings are of equal importance to us, though all are true. This difference in evaluating the various statements of Jesus Christ accounts largely for the six hundred or more Christian denominations which are in existence to-day. One church places stress, and gives an important place to one set of ideas, believing that they are the fundamental ideas that are offered by Christ in his teachings. Another church stresses or emphasizes other doctrines. If all Christians to-day placed emphasis upon the same doctrines that the immediate followers of Christ did there would be but one Christian church now. All Christian churches accept Jesus Christ as their leader, but there is a great difference in the evaluation that each places upon his various teachings.

Fundamentals Become Incidentals

Rightly to understand the belief of the great body of professed followers of Christ to-day, we must take into account the nineteen hundred years of human history which has intervened, during which time stress or importance of various teachings has shifted, and the things that were evidently essential in the early teachings of Christ may have become quite incidental to-day, and things that were incidental in the days of Christ have to the present day Christian become fundamental.

We must remember that Christianity has come down to us through nineteen centuries, seven of which are known in history as the "dark ages." During this period of human history education, art, and literature and all human achievement were on a very low plane. Christianity lost much during those Dark Ages. During that period the monasteries came into existence and discipline became the chief end of endeavor in the church. Asceticism was given an important place, so much so that it was thought that to worship God acceptably it was necessary for one to "mortify the flesh." Therefore all sorts of bodily pain were inflicted in order that God might be pleased with their suffering and pains. During those ages great stress was apparently put upon the statement of the Savior, (Matthew 6:19) "Lay up treasures in heaven," for the sole endeavor of the church at that time was to prepare its members for a future life. The great body of Christian believers has not been able to throw off this idea and to-day the chief purpose of religion, in the minds of most Christians, is that it is a preparation for the life beyond. Primarily and fundamentally Christianity is not a system of belief which prepares men to die, but rather which prepares men to live. We are reminded that Christ said, (Matthew 6:34) "Take therefore no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself," whereas, with regard to the present life, he stated, (John 10:1) "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly" and in the prayer which he left for us, we are told to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Evidently it was Christ's desire that God's kingdom might be established here on this earth, therefore this life became of importance.

With the acceptance of the belief that this life is primarily a preparation for the life beyond we see the growth and development of that extreme individualistic concept of religion; that selfish idea which would set at naught the very essentials of the teachings of Christ. Nowhere in Christ's teachings do I get the idea that a man should save his own soul, but rather that he should serve others. Christ said, (Matthew 16:25) "For whosoever shall save his life shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it." Also "no man liveth unto himself." The religion of Christ is not individualistic but is one hundred per cent social. Christ did not spend his life trying to further his own interest, either here or hereafter. He went about seeking whom he might serve, and his services and even his life he gave freely.

There have been many changes in the church during the centuries since Christ. I am sure our Protestant friends will agree with me in this for otherwise there would be no justifiable reason for any church other than the Catholic. We must admit that these changes have not been for the better but rather have been for the worse, for if this were not true it is tantamount to saying that the early fathers did a better work than Christ. I think that no one would take the position that mortal man could improve upon the work of the Master.

The Greatest Commandment

If some of the teachings of Christ have more importance than others, as we have asserted, which ones may be considered fundamental or essential?

Fortunately we are not left to conjecture on this point for the lawyer thinking to catch Jesus asked that very question, "Master, which is the greatest commandment in the law?" and Jesus said unto him, (Mark 12:30, 31) "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul and with all thy mind. This is the first and the greatest commandment and the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself and on these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." We are not left in doubt on this matter; on these two hang all of the law and the prophets. They are the fundamentals according to Christ's own evaluation.

We do not have all of the teachings of Christ, for he evidently said much to his disciples about the means, or methods, or ways, whereby these great commandments might be effective in their lives, for immediately after his departure from their midst we find that they established a Christian community in which the love of God and each other might be the dominating force. The account of this Christian community is to be found in the fourth and fifth chapters of the Acts of the Apostles. This perhaps is the best demonstration that has ever been presented of the real effects of the gospel of Jesus Christ on the lives of men and women. They not only accepted Christian doctrines but altered their lives in harmony therewith. What became of this community might well be asked. It is my opinion that they came to believe poverty to be synonymous with sanctity, and their chief concern was to become poor, rather than to love, and this finally degenerated into asceticism of the Dark Ages, and was a perversion of the doctrine of Christ.

If emphasis has been shifted from fundamentals to incidentals during the centuries so that the chief doctrines taught were not fundamental, then a change was inevitable. Martin Luther realized this and was so impressed with the need of a change that even though it might mean the loss of his life he had the courage to step out and renounce the teaching of the mother church. Like him were such men as Zwingli, Calvin, Knox, and others who also had the courage of their conviction, and thus the great Reformation got under way. This became the greatest movement for human progress since the inception of Christianity.

These teachers and their immediate followers who had been cradled in the mother church were not able to throw off all of the customs and traditions and formalisms of the centuries and therefore were not entirely free to alter their belief in harmony with the fundamentals of the doctrines of Christ. In the wisdom of God it apparently became necessary to start anew, or in other words to reestablish the principles of Christ so that the fundamentals might again have their proper place.

The Gospel Restored

It is the belief of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, of which I am a representative, that the gospel was restored, that is, reiterated or begun anew, in 1830, and the fundamentals of His gospel set forth and given their proper consideration.

If there were no other reasons, we believe the following from a revelation to Joseph Smith, which was given about a year before the church was organized would justify the existence of this church and should commend itself to all Christian men and women. The quotation is as follows, "Keep my commandments and seek to bring forth the cause of Zion." Seek to bring forth the cause of Zion. Zion has been the hope of the children of God since the days of Abraham, but as yet it has never been realized. Zion is to be a Christian community similar to the one established in Jerusalem but more perfect. A community where the will of God prevails and where each loves his neighbor as himself, a community in which there shall be equality, equality not on the basis of dollars but on the basis of needs, that is, there shall be a fair distribution of the fruits of production so that every individual shall receive all that he needs for his development to his utmost capacity, mentally, morally, physically, and spiritually. Zion is to be a community in which the principle of stewardship shall be the underlying economic element—stewardship is an attitude of mind in which each individual recognizes that the earth is the Lord's and that man has the right only to acquire that which he can appropriate for his advancement. The fruits of his labor above his needs shall be held jointly by the group for the benefit of others who are less fortunate or less capable than himself.

In Zion there shall be an environment in which a man can manifest the Christian principles and can love his neighbor as himself, and every man's hand will not be against his neighbor as it seems to be to-day, but each shall be seeking the interest of the other.

This ideal condition would give opportunity of a practical demonstration of the gospel of Jesus Christ and this is the thing for which the world is looking to-day—a practical demonstration of Christianity. Christianity has not failed. Christianity in the true sense with the proper emphasis upon the fundamentals has not been tried in modern times.

May God speed the day when the teachings of Jesus Christ will motivate the conduct of humanity, and his will shall be done on earth as it is now done in heaven.

Vocation Versus Avocation

By Frederick M. Smith

An address before the Kansas City Quill Club at the annual banquet, Hotel Baltimore.

For what does the Quill Club exist? Is it a mutual admiration society where we meet to praise unsold goods? or is it a cooperative selling organization through which we aid one another to dispose of our literary wares? or is it an association of lovers of literature mutually interested in the art of literature?

If the latter, then we should approach the task with a full comprehension of its immensity, for scarcely less arduous is the task of checking the pernicious effects of commercialism in the realm of writing than was that of the old woman who would broom back the sea. To crystallize this envisagement of the purpose and goal of the Quill Club I would say its job is to preserve in the minds of at least a few, the firm conviction that the making of great books, the construction of poems which shall live to unborn generations, and the writing of stories which shall still be recited to our children's children demand the preservation of a group of people who look upon writing as other than a process of bread and butter purchasing.

Even some of our present-day writers, held as they are in the relentless grip of publishers greedy to supply the people's maw with loads of trashy literature are protesting against the grind; but the protesting voice is too frequently squelched by the insatiate demand for more money, or falls on far too many ears which are deaf to its meaning. "The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceeding fine," may be paraphrased into, The mills of the press grind coarsely, but grind, and grind, and grind.

I know this protest against the commercialization of writing, against the dominant tendency to make it a vocation rather than an avocation, will be about as effective in stopping it as would be the deflection of a few gallons of water above the falls in checking the flow of Niagara; but let enough water be taken from above the falls and it might eventually be stopped. And if protests enough are made, eventually there might be developed a more general idea that the art of writing must be preserved by others than those of the penny-a-line group. Hence it is gratifying to hear from some quarters earnest pleas for a stop in the lowering of the literary standard of the country, and especially from those in the field of literature itself.

Mr. O'Brien, compiler of Best Short Stories, who in 1915 began his efforts to raise the standard of the American short story, said that "Commercialization has never affected any literature more than it has affected the American short story of the past. It is affecting our writing more than ever to-day."

In the "Antescriptum" of his book The Broad Highway, Jeffery Farnol has his hero say:

As I sat of an early summer morning in the shade of a tree, eating fried bacon with a tinker, the thought came to me that I might some day write a book of my own: a book that should treat of the roads and byroads, of trees, and wind in lonely places, of rapid brooks, and lazy streams, of the glory of dawn, the glow of evening, and the purple solitude of night; a book of wayside inns and sequestered taverns; a book of country things and ways and people. And the thought pleased me much.

Then follows an interesting discussion between tinker and Peter on the essential points of a novel. And when the tinker speaks of what "they" will like in a novel, and defined "they" as "the folks as will read" the book after it is written, Peter said he had forgotten them.

"But," said the tinker, rubbing his nose hard, "books are written for people to read, aren't they?"

"Not always," said Peter. "Many of the world's greatest books, those masterpieces which have lived and shall live on forever, were written (as I believe) for the pure love of writing them."

"Oh," said the tinker. "O" say I.

"Yes," said Peter warming to his theme, "and with little or no idea of the eyes of those unborn generations which were to read and marvel at them; hence it is we get those sublime thoughts untrammelled by passing tastes and fashions, unbounded by narrow creed or popular prejudices. . . . Many a writer has been spoiled by fashion and success, for, so soon as he begins to think upon his public, how best to please and hold their fancy (which is ever the most fickle of mundane things) straightway Genius spreads abroad his pinions and leaves him in the mire.

Then in chapter eight Farnol makes his hero express the thought that truly great books never are written—they only happen—and very rarely, and that a scholar may write a great book but no one will publish it, and nobody trouble to read it.

"Why so," said the tinker.

"Because this is an eminently unliterary age, incapable of thought, and therefore seeking to be amused. Whereas the writing of books was once a painful art, it has of late become a trick very easy of accomplishment, requiring no regard for probability and little thought, so long as it is packed sufficiently full of impossible incidents through which a ridiculous heroine and a more absurd hero duly sigh their appointed way to the last chapter. Whereas books were once a power, they are, of late, degenerated into things of amusement with which to kill an idle hour, and be promptly forgotten the next."

Is art—real art—a vocation or avocation; that is to say, has art been best created by those who work for pay or by those who work for ideals or the love of the task? Is literature an art, and if not, why? Has it ever been an art, and if so, when was it lost?

Doctor Henry T. Schnittkind in The Poets of the Future: (College Anthology for 1921-22, current issue) says in his introduction:

Literature is a lost art. We have forgotten how to write. We can still write cleverly, interestingly, "salaciously"; but we cannot write deeply, because we have forgotten how to think deeply. Literature has become a competitive struggle; and every professional writer is so anxious to be in the periodical limelight that he turns out several books a year instead of taking several years for a single book. Creation is a very slow process. Masterpieces do not spring up overnight. We write as we live, too hastily. . . . But our present-day writers have failed to learn the lesson. They are bent upon motion rather than vision, volume rather than value, reputation rather than achievement. In the cohorts of our modern prophets those that can cry loudest and oftenest become the leaders. The modernity of their style is but an unsuccessful attempt to conceal the antiquity of their thought. A beautiful idea need not be dressed like a clown in order to arouse our attention. The sun rises and the stars set with no flourish of celestial trumpets. The writers of our new schools, our imagists, dadaists, pornographers, are merely trying to substitute vengery for veneration, sensationalism for sincerity, somnolence for solemnity, vulgarity for vitality. Our realists have attempted to transform our dreams into reality and have only succeeded in transforming reality into a nightmare.

A terrible indictment, this, and we can scarcely deny its truthfulness. Rather hopelessly does Doctor Schnittkind suggest that a restoration of Literature as an art will come when writers will look upon literature as an ideal rather than a business, and poetry as a divine sport rather than a marketable commodity and purveyor of bacon and beans, when writers will stop "emptying their brains in order to fill their bellies," and when they will be willing to "earn their bread by selling machine-made shoes and shirts instead of machine made satires and sonnets," when "leisure unprofessional moments for years may be devoted to the production of a single hand-made and brain-made story or poem."

Do you expect to see that time again? You smile, and you will smile again as you pass the groaning counters of the magazine vendors.

What, in brief, is the substance of the arraignments made by O'Brien and Schnittkind, and Farnol? Commercialism of writers, startling increase in numbers of those who would make writing a means of livelihood, and the greatness of the numbers of such may be holding in check those who might write for art's sake.

Not alone on the art of writing has the blight of commercialism fallen, but the pulpit, the rostrum, the lecture, the canvas and the marble have felt its contaminating effect. Perhaps no more striking example of the blighting effect of commercialism is presented than in the case of the cartoon.

A powerful instrument of education, combining as it does the quickness of the graph and the pungency of humor, the cartoonists (so-called) have for gain so degenerated their art that to-day the papers present whole series of cartoons so idiotic that one continuously marvels that they can "get by" with them.

The short story has also felt the degenerating effect, and to-day tons of short stories are flooding the news and magazine tables and yet among the hundreds of thousands of stories printed, few if any are destined to outlive a single issue.

Art, it has been said, died with Michelangelo, and since then we have had only echoes. Was he the last of those who followed art as an avocation? And if as Schnittkind says, literature is a lost art, its death came when writers ceased to write for the love of it or under the urge of genius and desire for gain began to push their pens.

In the literature of to-day there is needed an exodus from the fleshpots of Egypt into the promised land of writing as a vocational art. Where is the Moses to lead us? Until he comes, the lamp of literary learning must needs be held high by groups such as this, who glimpse the ideals of art and deplore the inroads of greed; who stand ready to nourish genius and denounce the prostitution of a holy calling; who will seek to encourage artistic story building and the "divine sport" of versification for the pure love of it.

When the Mists Have Cleared Away

By Audentia Anderson

Which of us has not memories of the baseless fears of childhood, when things often became distorted out of all resemblance to their real natures, and assumed shapes and terrors which owed their existence entirely to our own fantastic imaginings? With dread we look about in the semi-light of our sleeping chambers, seeing sinister forms moving in dark corners, or ready to spring, with pitiless, gripping clutch, out of gloomy recesses!

We have learned to smile upon those childish fancies, recognizing them as "vain imaginings," mere nothings, which disappear in the revealing and assuring light of day and truth. But I wonder, will we ever outgrow some other misconceptions which to-day disturb us so grievously as a church, and are, doubtless, as vain and unreal, as completely creations of our own fears and fancies as were the vague terrors of childhood! I wonder if we even want to give up our "men of straw," and relinquish the fun of knocking them down and battering them to pieces! Shall we not be honest, I wonder, and squarely face our fancies, examine them fairly, and then, discovering them to be but creatures of our own minds and opinions, try to banish them from our lives, and ultimately be able to say with the octogenarian: "I have lived to a ripe old age; I have passed through severe and heavy trials; have had grief, sorrow, danger, accident, disaster, shame, disease, disgrace, pain, agony—and most of it never happened!"

As we peer "through the glass darkly" of this earth life, each one attempts to discern and describe that which is seen and felt, and the visions and interpretations are as many and as varied as the eyes which peer. One sees a thing in one light, and to him it has a certain meaning. Another sees the same thing, and reads into it a far different message. One, witnessing a scene or incident, tells of it in one way while another has an entirely different version of the same affair. Shall any of us say this or that version is the absolute truth? Does it not, after all, resolve itself into a species of inordinate vanity and egotism for any to attempt to interpret absolute truth for all the rest of mankind? Who am I that I should assume that my life, my studies, the environment thrown about me, the sermons or lectures I have heard, the books I have read, the experiences I have had, the emotions I have felt, have all been such that I have been able to arrive at the only correct understanding of life and its purposes, meanings, and objectives? Perish the thought, repulsive to true humility!

Rather, let me go upon my knees in gratitude to God that I have been able to learn a few simple truths which have been of value to me, and, with broad tolerance, to pray, "God, grant that others, too, may receive, in what measure thy wisdom may permit, that which will be to them the bread of life!"

Why should I seek to dictate? Can I become the conscience of others, or they, mine? Who has the true measuring rod, who but Christ Jesus himself? And until that time when the mists are cleared away and we shall "see Him as he is," how can I know that my conception of Him or his measuring rod is true or just, I, with my human limitations, finite mind, and circumscribed experience? Shall I set myself up as an interpreter of the Absolute, I, with my puny intellect, beclouded earth-vision, and dulled and feeble spiritual perceptions? Ah, no, rather let me learn my small lessons in the primer of my earth school; let me struggle with my a, b, c's, and my "two and two make four," and never once say to my brother in the trigonometry class, "You have transcended the bounds of truth and absolutism!"

Let me learn to love, to live my daily round with thought, word, and deed squaring with my ideals of truth, kindness and wisdom, and in all charity, allow the fellow men at my side to live their lives according to the light that is within them. Why should word of mine, in harshness, criticism or intolerance, add to their burdens or discouragements? "Cease to find fault, one with another," was no idle counsel. Is not fault-finding as destructive to my own spiritual advancement as it is discouraging and damaging to my brother in his efforts to climb Godward? Oh, if we could but look beneath the exterior of our associates, and see their yearnings to grow, to understand divine things, to struggle upward, to rise above the petty things of earth life, and see as well the heartache there because of weaknesses or failures, think you we would add censure, blame, reproach, or condemnation to burdens already heavy unto death?

While it is the privilege of each of us to worship God according to the dictates of our own consciences as an organized body with recognized leaders functioning in God-appointed places of responsibility, have any of us the right to withhold from those leaders the loyal, whole-hearted support God requires of his people? He has said: "Let contentions and quarrelings among you cease. Sustain each other in peace, and ye shall be blessed with my Spirit, in comforting and strengthening you for my work." And again: "My servants have been harsh one with another; and some have not been sufficiently willing to hear those whose duty it is to teach the revelations which my church has already received. Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstandings and confusion among the members." And in the same revelation it is plainly designated those who are so "set in the church": "The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach, according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation from time to time."

No vague language this, and surely nothing behind which to hide when any shall attempt to discredit the office and service of any of our appointed leaders. And so far as the work of the one at the head of the church is concerned, if he has been found to be "unstable and unfaithful," there is but one course for his brethren to pursue and that is the open, aboveboard, manly one indicated in the law. Until that is done, can any self-respecting person justify himself in listening to gossip, and privately or publicly withholding his allegiance?

"When the mists shall roll away!" When we shall see beneath the seeming, and find the real, when the now inscrutable shall be opened to us as a book that is familiar, when we "awake" in the likeness of perfect love and understanding, think you we shall retain these black-robed, deadly soul visitors, called Doubt, Suspicion, Aspersion, Hate, Envy? Will not the sense of our own insignificance and shortcomings rather cause us to be generous to the faults of others: will the "mote" in our brother's eye longer annoy us as we struggle to remove the "beam" we have found in our own? Will we have any time to try to adjust other people's lives to our standards of right-doing, forgetting as we thus labor, all about the fundamental beauty of brotherly love, of trust, confidence, and loyalty—surely Christian graces fit adornments for even these of our brethren of the priesthood!

Meanwhile, of this one thing we may be sure. In so far as we succeed in bringing love, forbearance, kindness, trust, and charity into our lives, "thinking no evil," "seeking not our own," preferring one another in all humility and righteousness, thus far have our feet progressed safely on the upward path to God, and it becomes ever easier for us to forgive as He did, to feel divine impulses, and to more nearly understand the beneficent purposes of a loving Creator who implores us to "cease to permit the spirit of recrimination and accusation to find place in our discourse, either public or private" and who declares: "There should be harmony, and the Spirit enjoins it upon all, that the Master may be remembered as in meekness and due sobriety he carried on the great work to which he was called!"

Dear God, "whose hand has led us and whose patience has borne with our infirmities," accept the "generous praise" which is thy due from us. Look with compassion and tenderness of mercy, as long as possible, upon the waywardness and stubbornness of our foolish hearts. Gently pour upon us the magic of thy perfect love, until we soften towards all thy creatures, and especially towards our fellow men, that we may come to see thee in them and learn to serve thee through service to them! "May our renewed consecrations add to thy glory, and bring to thy church prosperity and peace!"

Ludwig van Beethoven

By James R. Houghton

The closing years of the eighteenth century saw the coming of one of the greatest musical geniuses that ever lived. By a great many critics he is considered to be the greatest. Viewed from any angle we must consider him as an exponent of a new era in musical composition. "We must recall in him, wrought even from youth, the progressive instincts of a mighty seer and leader, an idealist and creator."

In order more fully to appreciate the life and struggle of this great man let us for a moment examine the existing environment and atmosphere into which Beethoven was born. Students of history will recall that at the close of the eighteenth century France was undergoing a great internal struggle. The French Revolution, with its accompanying bloodshed and devastation of human life, had France in its power and threatened entire Europe. "With it began the gradual overthrow of the medieval notion of society as existing for certain privileged classes, and the setting up of the modern ideas of equality and liberty, with a new valuation of the individual in all relations."

But before this new democratic evaluation of human society had an opportunity to spread very far the fearless Napoleon pounced upon Europe with a seemingly overwhelming power. The end of his reign culminated, however, in the battles of Leipszig (1813) and Waterloo (1815). At the same time various contemporary struggles were going on, such as the War of 1812 and various other international controversies. Nevertheless, with the dethroning of Napoleon and the settlement of the dispute between England and America there came again a growing demand for liberty, equality, and freedom. Even to-day the struggle of mankind for complete liberation has not finished.

We must also keep in mind that about this time great strides were being made in scientific methods and development. With the opening of the nineteenth century came an unusual advancement in the field of modern thought which characterizes and defines our modern world to-day.

In the realm of philosophy we recall the glowing efforts and contributions of such men as Kant (d. 1804), Fichte (d. 1814), and Hegel (d. 1831). In the realm of poetry men like Herder (d. 1803), Schiller (d. 1805), and Goethe (d. 1832) who made wonderful contributions to the realm of literature.

Story of His Life

Into this repugnant yet philosophical atmosphere the boy Beethoven was born on December 16, 1770. The home of his birth is Bonn, a small university town on the Rhine near Cologne. His father, of Belgian ancestry, was an illiterate and "good-for-nothing fellow" intemperate in his manner and method of living. His mother, the daughter of a cook, came from Ehrenbreitstein. Like most mothers, she was undoubtedly a gentle, devoted and loving mother. Ludwig was the eldest of seven children.

Beethoven's boyhood days were very unhappy. His father seemed to delight in treating the boy shamefully by using him for the purpose of making money. As a result Beethoven received very little education, which was always a cause of deep regret to him in later years. At the age of seventeen he lost his mother, his only hope, of whom he said: "She was so good to me, so worthy of love, the best friend I had! How happy was I when I could utter that dear name of mother and she could hear it!" This passing of his mother added greatly to the sufferings and depressed spirit of the boy and made an impression on his life that could never be erased.

Like the youth Mozart, Beethoven showed signs very early in life of being a prodigy. At the age of four he had lessons, played in public at the age of eight, composed a cantata and some variations at the age of ten, assisted his good teacher, Neefe, the court organist, at twelve, became conductor of the theater orchestra at the age of thirteen, and had his first salary as assistant organist at the age of fourteen. In 1787 he made a short visit to Vienna where he met the great genius Mozart, who prophesied that he would "make a noise in the world." In 1790 and 1792 he had the privilege of meeting Haydn under whom he studied some few years later. Haydn viewed the innovations of Beethoven with seeming distrust. About this time he was recognized as a first-rate pianist of extraordinary ability. He also started a commendable practice of keeping sketch books for the purpose of recording and elaborating his musical ideas.

Soon there followed a terrible catastrophe. Between the years 1796 and 1800 deafness began its work. He avoided company in order that his affliction might not be noticed, but in 1801, distressed in spirit, he wrote to one of his most intimate friends:

My dear, good, loving Amenda, how often have I longed to have you near me! Your Beethoven is very unhappy. You must know that the best part of me, my hearing, has become very weak. Even at the time when we were together I was aware of distressing symptoms which I kept to myself; but my condition is now much worse—can I ever be cured? Naturally I hope so; but my hopes are very faint, for such maladies are the least hopeful of all. How sad my life is! For I am obliged to avoid all those I love and all that are dear to me; and all this in a world so miserable and so selfish! How sad is this resignation in which I take refuge! Of course I have steeled myself to rise above all these misfortunes, but how is this going to be possible?

And still to another he wrote:

I lead a miserable life indeed. For the last two years I have completely avoided all society, for I cannot talk with my fellow men. I am deaf. Had my profession been any other, things might still be bearable; but as it is, my situation is terrible. What will my enemies say? And they are not few! At the theater I always have to be quite near the orchestra in order to understand the actor. I cannot hear the high notes of the instruments or the voices, if I am but a little distance off. When anyone speaks quietly I only hear with difficulty. On the other hand, I find it unbearable when people shout to me. Often I have cursed my very existence. Plutarch has guided me to a spirit of resignation. If it be possible at all, I will courageously bear with my fate; but there are moments in my life when I feel the most miserable of all God's creatures. Resignation! What a sorry refuge! And yet it is the only one left to me!

It is quite sad when we think of Beethoven deaf at such an early age; yet wonderful when we know that most of his compositions were composed after this period. Surely this demonstrates a thorough knowledge of composition and musical theory. From this time forward Beethoven produced volumes of beautiful, inspiring works. It will be impossible to go into any exposition of these compositions within the limits of this article.

Late in the year 1826 Beethoven was taken seriously ill with dropsy and after a supreme struggle, he passed away during a terrific thunder storm in March.

Introduces New Style

With Beethoven we find that "music ceases to be a mere concourse of sweet sounds; it must always bring some message to the brooding human soul, and be something more than a skillful example of abstract ingenuity." He is recognized as the master of the sonata form, the air with variations, which he raised to the nth power. He not only changed the form but he gave to it a new vitality which has ever made it supreme even to the present day. He developed a new method of treating the introduction and coda, thus making them vital and living parts of an entire composition. Not only did he do this, but he expanded the development section and made of it a great musical edifice.

Then there are other things to notice in his works that mark him as a composer of no mean ability. First of all he gave to his compositions "marvelous rhythmic vitality." In this respect he differed from his predecessors. His music pulsates and throbs with life-giving force. His music is no longer a dreamy, apathetic type, but on the contrary is full of life, spirit, and invigoration.

Second is his "use of fiercest dissonance to express the heights and depths of our stormy human existence." In this respect he gave to music a vitalizing agent that heretofore had never been used. It was his purpose to give in a musical way expression to every emotion experienced by man. This he has very aptly done by the usage of the element of dissonance. "One of his favorite conceptions was that music should strike fire from the soul of man; it was not meant to lull the hearer into a drowsy reverie, but to awake his spiritual consciousness with a shock at times positively galvanic."

Finally his clever use of expression devices was a marked characteristic of his style. Mighty crescendos and sforzandos on weak beats abound. Long pauses and periodic formations mark Beethoven's music as unusual in imaginative content.

A summarized list of his works shows that he composed nine great symphonies; twelve overtures and five orchestral selections. In addition to his orchestral works he composed sixteen string quartets; four trios and several quintettes. For the piano he composed five concertos with orchestra; eight trios; ten duos for violin and piano; five duos for violin-cello and piano; thirty-eight sonatas and various other compositions too numerous to mention. In vocal music he composed one oratorio; two operas; several cantatas, masses, and scenas, together with the choral or Ninth Symphony. Besides this he wrote many songs, part songs, and obligato studies.

In his book, Angels' Wings, Carpenter makes this wonderful statement:

Beethoven is the prophet of the new era which the nineteenth century ushers in for mankind. As things must be felt before they can be acted out; so they must be expressed in indefinite emotional forms of music before they can be uttered and definitely imagined forth in words or pictorial shapes. Beethoven is the forerunner of Shelley and Whitman among the poets, of J. W. Turner and J. F. Millet among the painters. He is the great poet who holds nature by one hand and man by the other. Within that low-statured, rudely-outlined figure which a century ago walked hatless through the fields near Modling or sat oblivious in some shabby restaurant at Vienna, dwelt an emotional giant—a being who, though his outer life by deafness, disease, business worries, poverty, was shattered as it were into a thousand squalid fragments—in his heart embraced all mankind, with piercing insight penetrated intellectually through all falsehoods to the truth, and already in his art work gave outline to the religious, the human, the democratic yearnings, the love, the comradeship, the daring individualities, and all the heights and depths of feeling of a new dawning era of society. He was in fact and he gave utterance to, a new type of man. What that struggle must have been between his inner and outer conditions—of his real self with the lonely and mean surroundings in which it was embodied—we only know through his music. When we listen to it we can understand the world-old tradition that now and then a divine creature from far heavens takes mortal form and suffers in order that it may embrace and redeem mankind.

Hallelujah Chorus

The "Hallelujah Chorus" by Beethoven is taken from his only oratorio, "Christ on the Mount of Olives." It is the concluding number of the composition and forms a fitting climax to the entire work. The oratorio was composed in the year 1801 and produced for the first time in 1803. There is nothing significant about the oratorio itself with the exception of the final Hallelujah. Some critics have compared it to the one by Handel in style and grandeur. In many respects it is much more simple than Handel's composition, yet it does not equal it.

Analysis

The anthem opens with a beautiful introduction which may be described as a huge cathedral of tone. The movement is very marked with a broad, sweeping tempo. The chorus enters, singing "Hallelujah

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The Immigration Race

The frantic race that took place in New York Harbor August 1, shows the need of an immigration law that will regulate immigration at its source.

The present law which admits immigrants to this country on the basis of percentage of the number of that nationality in this country, is proven unsatisfactory. Great numbers of immigrants sailed from home and arrived in New York Harbor at the same time. Those who arrived first got into the country. Others were sent back to their native lands.

A description of that race is given in the Literary Digest by a captain of one of the vessels:

"There were thirteen liners jammed together like a flock of rowboats at the start for the invisible line between Fort Hamilton and Fort Wadsworth. If anything had happened to the machinery of any ship during that crush there would have been a terrible disaster. All's well that ends well, I'm told, but I hope I'll never be called on to take part in another such adventure."

The New York Immigration Commissioner says, "The more I see of the absurdities and cruelties that result from the present system, the more I think that our own State Department will have to be directed by legislation to regulate it at the source."

The present scramble that takes place for entrance to the unto God's almighty Son" while the orchestra carries on the thematic material used in the introduction. The anthem then changes to an allegro movement quite contrapuntal in nature. The soprano voice announces the fugal subject and it is answered exactly by the altos, tenors, and basses respectively. Then the procedure is varied a little and the basses start the same theme, followed by the tenors, altos, and sopranos as if they were building a cathedral by placing one stone upon another, in this case, of course, being the superimposing of a melody. In the treatment of the theme announced in the words, "Man proclaims his grace and glory" we have the melody reduced to a simple triadic basis. This is treated contrapuntally, strictly so, as before, interspersed with hallelujahs and followed by a third theme of praise which is taken up by all voices. After a short instrumental interlude this procedure is repeated, serving as a sort of balancing agent to the entire allegro movement. The anthem then changes to a third movement in piu allegro time. This movement is largely sung in unison by all voices and is in some respects an anti-climax to the entire anthem. The principal thing of interest about this anthem is the beautiful introduction. In summarizing we might say that the instrumental idiom predominates in this anthem, more so than in Hadyn's works. Nevertheless it is a beautiful composition and one which humanity will never tire of.

United States seems undignified and haphazard. Why could we not select our own immigrants like Canada has done for a long while, instead of allowing "first come first served"? The way to do this, as Canada has demonstrated, is to select the immigrant at home. There he can be certified by the American representative, and we can be more certain of his qualifications. Such a plan would also prevent congestion at this end of the line.

Automobiles Make Us Lazy

Motor cars are making us lazy, according to a writer in the Medical Review. A large number of our people who own automobiles prefer to drive even a block than to walk, and it appears to be nothing but laziness. He asks, "Are we going to become a physically lazy nation, and through lack of exercise, a people of pendulous abdomens and small legs?"

It is well known that walking is one of the best forms of exercise and when practiced regularly is one of the best means for keeping us healthy.

Not only does walking enable one to keep feeling "fit," but it also makes people "fit to look at." Walking keeps down excessive flesh and prevents "pendulous abdomens."

During the war, men who had not walked to speak of in years, who had yellow skins, large abdomens and were fatigued on slight exertion, soon were put into good physical shape by setting-up exercises, drills, and hikes. "The Daily Dozen" or other sets of exercises should be used more often by a larger number of people and there would be less doctor's bills. The article continues:

"Women often consult a physician because they are fat and want to reduce; they diet (by eliminating food they do not care for), follow every fad, from rolling to the Bergonie treatment, yet they are leading exponents of a sedentary life. They hate to walk. When they are advised to walk to reduce their weight they invariably say that they cannot because their feet are sore. The very woman who tells her children about the old custom of the Chinese women pinching their feet, unconsciously follows the same custom by wearing pointed-toe shoes which are so uncomfortable that she is crippled as far as walking is concerned."

Iodine Purifies Water

At last a simple means for purifying water has been announced by the Army Medical School. In the science service's Daily Science News Bulletin, quoted in the Literary Digest, the perfected method is described. We read from the account:

"Hold your quart thermos bottle in one hand and fill it with water. Add one drop—two will do no damage—of tincture of iodine, the ordinary 7 per cent kind that you buy at the corner drug store. Shake the water up a bit and that's all! In twenty or thirty minutes all the harmful bacteria that are likely to be there will be killed, says Major A. P. Hitchens of the Medical Corps. The amount of iodine added is too slight even to taste. Bacteriologists used to think that all the bacteria in water had to be killed before it would be fit to drink, or 'potable' as our waterworks friends say, he explained to-day. It has, however, been found that it is seldom that any harmful bacteria will be present that cannot be rather easily destroyed. The greatest danger in drinking water of unknown purity is from diseases, of the typhoid fever and cholera group, that are caused by nonspore-forming organisms and can be easily killed as compared to many entirely harmless bacteria. It is for this reason that the simple iodine treatment is so effective."

LETTERS AND NEWS

Reunion News

Brush Creek Reunion Opens

The reunion of the Southeastern Illinois District began August 24 on the permanent reunion grounds located near the Brush Creek Church. The grounds consist of two acres quite thickly covered with beautiful shade trees. The Saints have built a substantial dining hall and kitchen, with sleeping rooms upstairs.

The purposes of our reunions are spiritual, social, and evangelical.

There are approximately forty tents erected on the grounds, and the services are attended by many people who live in the surrounding neighborhood, which is quite thickly populated.

Our speakers are: Bishop C. J. Hunt, Patriarch I. M. Smith, Elders C. E. Wight, H. Sparling, L. C. Moore, B. E. Brown, and several local brethren of the district.

Sunday, August 26, the high school orchestra from Xenia gave a concert at 2 p. m. which was greatly appreciated.

The children are being entertained during the preaching hours in a separate tent.

Eastern Colorado

The Eastern Colorado reunion came to a close August 26 after a very pleasant and enjoyable time. Apostle James A. Gillen preached the closing sermon, which was enjoyed by all.

The sermons and talks which were given by Sister Dora Glines in the interest of the departments, and of Bishop James F. Keir for the Bishopric, and Apostle J. A. Gillen, received much favorable comment, and their labors were greatly appreciated and enjoyed.

Elder Frank B. Almond of Denver had charge of the young people's activities, and his work was an outstanding feature of the reunion. The early morning prayer meetings were held in Stratton Park just west of the reunion grounds and in full view of Pike's Peak and the beautiful mountain range to the south. A good Spirit was present in abundance, and the young people received much encouragement.

Sister Letha Tilton, our district chorister, conducted the music in a very able manner, and she was pleased to have the hearty cooperation of all the singers.

The reunion ground is composed of a seven-and-a-fourth-acre tract near Cheyenne Canyon and adjoining the city of Broadmore. There is a large brick building on the grounds which is used for wash rooms, kitchen and dining room, and a place to store tents and cots when not in use.

These grounds were purchased for $9,250, but payments are still due on this debt, so an effort is being made to pay it off as soon as possible. A committee was appointed to draw up a plan to assist in this work. This plan was adopted, and provided that members of the district should be encouraged to give fifty cents per week for not to exceed two years, to be paid to a collector in each branch and forwarded to the district treasurer, A. E. Tabor, Wray, Colorado, each month.

All those contributing $50 or more are to be given a lease to build a permanent summer cottage on some lot which may be assigned them by the reunion committee. The committee was authorized to plot out the grounds for this purpose, this privilege to be extended to members of other districts. All who can pay one or two hundred dollars down or who can loan this amount to the committee are urged to do so in order to save the interest that is accruing.

The district conference was held the last Saturday and Sunday. Delegates were elected to represent the district at the next General Conference. The election of officers was held, resulting in the following being elected to serve for another year: G. H. Wixom, president; C. H. Rich and E. J. Williams, vice presidents; A. E. Tabor, district treasurer; W. E. Wolfe, district secretary; Letha M. Tilton, district chorister.

Two were baptized by Elder G. H. Wixom on the closing day, a young lady from Otis, and a young man from LaJunta, Colorado. The beautiful spirit present at the closing sacrament service on the last day concluded one of the most successful reunions ever held in the district. The Saints all feel sad to have to say good-by, but they are cheered and encouraged for the big tasks before them. We all feel the song of gratitude welling up in our hearts: "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Western Colorado District Reunion

The Western Colorado District reunion at Delta, Colorado, opened July 30 and closed August 5. The purpose of the reunion was a combination of the spiritual, social, and educational.

Consecration and living daily our religion seemed to be the theme running through the reunion, both in the sermons and the prayer services.

The speakers were: Elders James E. Yates and R. V. Hopkins, Patriarch F. A. Smith, and Mrs. Ward L. Christy. Special music was furnished each night. One entertainment was given.

Special recreation was provided for all. One afternoon autos conveyed all the people to a farm home six miles in the country where they enjoyed the ripe fruit and many outdoor games. Another afternoon was spent in boating, fishing, and swimming.

A rooming house was rented and free meals were served. All expenses were met by donations. The day meetings were held in the church and all night services were conducted in the district tent which was set up on a vacant lot on Main Street.

Kewanee Has Good Reunion

GALVA, ILLINOIS, August 25.—"A city of brothers and sisters, ten days of peace, Zion in miniature trying to reveal itself" is the description of the Kewanee district reunion, according to a letter just received by the HERALD.

"An apostle to give general instruction, a patriarch to bless, a bishop to teach how Christianity might be interpreted in terms of service, a seventy to help round out the program, and Saints willing to offer the glad hand and complete the setting of what was pronounced by many to be a unique and most profitable reunion" the letter states was the condition prevailing.

The members of the district contributed generously to the support of the reunion, which made it possible to prepare things in advance.

Recreation for the young folks and directed play for the smaller ones were features. Sister Boyer, of Victoria, took charge of the little ones, and by sacrificing the pleasure of attending many of the services did a splendid work.

A "word of wisdom" eating tent was erected upon the grounds. R. W. Farrell gave an analysis of the Word of Wisdom as he understood it at the study hour one morning.

The Department of Religious Education held two study hours under the direction of Harland Cady. The preparation for teachers in the Sunday school was discussed.

The Department of Recreation and Expression, in charge of Leonard Stiegel, was active. It occupied the social hours, gave a sacred concert and literary and musical entertainment. Discussions were had on the place of play in the church. The opinion was that an excess of anything is detrimental but that a normal amount is desirable.

Bishop J. A. Koehler at the eleven o'clock hour presented "Studies of Zion," dealing with the temporal side.

The apostolic sermons of Apostle John F. Garver were well taken. He also presided over the prayer meeting and met with the young people at their early morning services. In the social hour, in the priesthood meetings, and from one end of the grounds to the other, his cheery voice could be heard.

Seven were baptized by Brother Ed Curtis. He also preached two sermons and aided in the social hour.

The district chorister, Sister Denton, ably assisted by Sister Willets and Brother Willets, with the orchestra, made the singing and music of the camp a joy to all.

Brother J. F. Martin administered in patriarchal capacity, giving blessings, admonishing the people, and at times preaching.

Much credit is due the willing sisters who aided in the dining tent and in many other capacities. Brothers Bean and Jones also did a good work, and are to be commended.

Considering everything, the reunion at Galva, consisting of only about forty tents, was a great success, for where numbers were lacking, quality more than made up for the deficiency, for the energy and good will and love of service which were manifest, made delightful the Kewanee reunion camp.

Detroit and Eastern Michigan

With fond memories we now look back upon the beautiful joint reunion of the Detroit and Eastern Michigan Districts held at Port Huron, Michigan, August 3 to 12 inclusive.

In a grove on Tenth Avenue, an ideal spot where past reunions have been held, this year's reunion was located.

In an adjoining grove on the north was a spacious tabernacle, seating in the neighborhood of twelve hundred people in which the services were held. This and the convenience of city water, gas, and electricity added greatly to facilitating the expense of carrying on the reunion and also to the pleasure and added comfort of all who attended. A large dining tent was thoroughly equipped, having four long tables seating over two hundred people at one time. The meals were served in cafeteria style and were fine. Ideal weather also contributed to the success of the reunion.

The order of the program was: Morning prayer service at 8.30; study hour, 9.45; and preaching at 11. At 2 p. m. Boy Scout and Oriole work was held, and recreation at 3 p. m. Community singing was at 7.30, and preaching at 8 p. m.

President F. M. McDowell was present and gave a touching address on the needs of the church, saying in part that the battle cry of the church to-day should be "Jesus, I my cross have taken, all to leave and follow thee." His earnestness touched the hearts of the people and awakened a ready response. Brother McDowell spoke several times, giving sermons and talks to the young people, and discussed with them their problems.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson was also present, preaching several times. One of his sermons on "Christian progress," said that science in making her discoveries does not question sex or nationality of people from whom she derives her truths. It is truth we want no matter where it comes from. Organization is a mark of distinction. Truth is the supreme thing in all the world. All else is secondary. In another sermon he dealt with the age in which we live. He quoted Secretary Weeks of the White House as saying: "Civilization is no longer stable as before the war." Lloyd George of England says that the "Dove of peace is perched on a cannon post." Brother Hanson asked the question if we could see a miniature heaven in our own homes. Can we see God in the founding of this country? In bringing forth the Book of Mormon and the return of the Jews to Palestine?

Other speakers were Evangelist R. C. Russell, Elder William Davis, Elder R. Kuykendall, and Elder J. R. Grice. Their addresses were greatly appreciated.

The Department of Women occupied at one of the evening meetings where musical numbers and speaking helped to constitute the program. A Mothers' Day playlet was put on by the sisters of the Port Huron Branch and was much enjoyed.

At the Eastern Michigan District Conference which convened at 10 a. m., August 11, the following officers were elected: William Grice, president; Myron Carr and William Davis, counselors; Herbert Swaffer, secretary; R. H. Huston, treasurer and bishop's agent; Mrs. C. C. Whitford, chorister; Marion Link, organist; Arthur Nye, orchestra leader; Milla Mitchell, librarian. Delegates to the General Conference were elected. Reunion committee is R. H. Huston, William McAuley, C. C. Whitford, and William Grice.

Music for the reunion was furnished by singers from both districts, choirs from each district rendering beautiful anthems. Soloists were Sister Henrietta Davis, Sister St. John, and Mrs. Earl Garden. Nye's orchestra of Port Huron furnished the instrumental music.

The preaching was very fine and thoroughly enjoyed. The talks were instructive, and we feel that much good material was obtained for work throughout the coming year. The prayer services were of a spiritual character, many bearing testimonies, and a patriarchal admonition was given by Patriarch John Shields.

The reunion was pronounced a success by many, and we are looking forward to just such a gathering again next year.

Far West Stake Reunion

Continuing: As the reunion progressed, attendance and interest increased. There was some wet weather followed by one or two quite cold nights, but weather and temperature were quite satisfactory, and good roads and clear moonlight evenings made travel dustless and pleasant. People came from all parts of the territory; there was attendance also from Independence and other stakes and districts.

The lecture-teaching work of Brother A. M. Carmichael, head of the Department of Religious Education, was especially well received. He presented the spirit and purposiveness of prayer, of worship, and of other church activities in such normal, comprehensive simplicity that it enabled a large percentage of his hearers to assimilate it. Previous years of educational effort in the stake had prepared the way for his special presentations, and he was listened to by large audiences of adult and younger people. We are sure that both the spirit and the method of his message were assimilated by ministry and laity in such interest as to equip for larger and more rational service as parents, teachers, and general workers. "Brother Max" is a growing man, well qualified for leadership in the department to which he is assigned, and is contributing a service almost invaluable. The Lord is with him. We enjoyed him, and he enjoyed the reunion. He addressed adults, young people, and children in their respective tents.

This reunion, in the opinion of the writer, was by far the best we have witnessed since coming into this stake. Why not? Our work should be cumulative in its power-for-good results. In every previous reunion there have been clear evidences of distinct advancement; but this one impressed us as a great stride forward. While there was not the full spiritual response desired, in the degree and amount of personal expressions of the people themselves—the deep, all-pervading spirit of worship, yet the Spirit of God blessed the people in various manifestations, in peace, in light, and in prophetic admonition and instruction. Intellectual development, greater comprehension, more intelligent equipment, effectual preparation for local service, were more in evidence than heretofore.

Young people by the hundreds were present, strong, sturdy, brimming over with life and energy, keen in intellect, vivid with imagination and activity. They presented an inviting picture of potential possibilities. By study of the word, of music, of social life, and of life in general, all participate to advantage in the work of their branches. Soon they will be much more in evidence, because of the better opportunities than those available to the preceding generation. Many were present as interested participators in all kinds of services—study, lecture work, preaching, prayer, and recreation. We were deeply impressed by their vigor, their interest, their potentiality. We have now and soon shall have a larger enlightened, well-equipped corps of splendid young men and young women in this territory; and spiritually endowed by love of the work, and with power from on high they will be powerful factors for good.

We thought, too, of this splendid region of country, where Saints can obtain homes and establish rural and urban agricultural and industrial communities. The State and the National Government are building hard-surfaced roads across the State of Missouri thus making access to markets and general communication very ready. Could the poor who toil amidst adverse city life, with its perplexities social and economic, and its crime and immoralities—could these people and the poor Saints of Germany, Great Britain, and other countries—could these children of God, with many others, be gathered into this fine, productive country, they would find health of body and mind, peace, plenty, and great favor in maintaining themselves under advantageous conditions. "Brother Joseph" once wrote, "We believe God will bless the land in proportion to its occupancy by Saints." We thought of Whittier's lines, as we looked at the people and at the beautiful country.

"I hear the murmur of the wave
Of nations yet to be."

Not as expecting nations, not now "a multitude which no man can number," but tens of thousands of good Saints gathered in the process of building up Zion, a good, a happy, a prosperous and spiritual citizenship. It is realizable; moreover it is coming. Under the providences of God unity and power and progress soon will be enjoyed by his church, to the assurance of his people and the spread of the gospel "in all the world."

Brother Charles Fry, lately returned from England, came with his family and ministered acceptably. Brother J. M. Terry, formerly of the Far West District, was also in evidence and found pleasure and welcome.

Recreation was abundant, but not overdone. The stake choir rendered the cantata "From Olivet to Calvary" in good form, assisted by an orchestra assembled from different branches. The camp fire, with lunch, song, and other features, was in evidence.

Priesthood meetings were held daily at 6.30—good attention and interest. The slogan for the ministry in this stake is: A competent local ministry; unity; every man active, doing duty every week, and doing all he can for the cause.

All departments were well represented. The head of the Department of Women was especially gratified by the constant attendance and intelligent interest of the women of various ages, and which means much to the church.

Some may say that the undersigned writes always in hopeful spirit. Certainly; why not? We have our trying experiences, our vexations, our problems, our sore and depressing years; but through them all we grow, and the church 'merges phoenix-like from her testings and trying scenes, with larger understanding, broader comprehension, greater realization of her need of the divine and of less of the merely human. The people of the United States have come up through the Colonial periods, the fighting of the French and Indian Wars (which qualified them to fight the war for independence), and on through the period under the Articles of Confederation, and finally to the adoption of the Constitution. "First the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear." This was followed by the Civil War, which tested our political institutions to the very core, but from which the Union, ordained of God, came out forever supreme as a united nation. In all this progressive development of a great people, our fathers cleared away the wilderness, fought the savage, defended themselves against aggression and disruption, and the end is not yet. In Congressional debates, great leaders of opposing views, like Webster and Calhoun and many others, came to the front and debated the great issues upon the settlement of which the welfare of the country depended. We grow through friction, by tests and experimentation, and demonstrate the utility and harmony of truth by seeing both sides of issues wrought out. We are in the great laboratory of life; combing, eliminating, analyzing, demonstrating, learning the whole truth, destined finally to build into the kingdom of God only the good, the right, the pure, and the eternal. Under the direction of Almighty God we shall succeed. Let us not hesitate to face the issues, but go forward. We have nothing to fear. The work will stand the testing of these times of critical, intelligent analysis. That which is not of God must ultimately be made to appear in its real status as ultimately weak, wrong, and discredited. Let us believe with Lincoln that "right makes might"; and with Esdras, who though in captivity in exile by the willow-fringed rivers of Babylon, still believed and hoped in Israel's God as he wrote: "As for truth, it endureth and is always strong. It liveth and conquereth forevermore!"

The church must become and continue to be an intelligent, spiritual, moral citizenship of the kingdom of God, able to know the truth and to act upon the truth, the whole truth, and to refuse to abide by anything not of the truth, ere her people shall be able to stand by the work in the progressive supremacy of its unfoldment. God never has and never will hedge up his church against erroneous and disintegrating influences appearing to mislead and corrupt. Our safety must rest upon the willingness and ability of his people to "discern both good and evil"; to have "our senses" so developed as thus to do. "God cannot be tempted of evil," wrote James, the brother of our Lord. Nor can he be beguiled by the false, the deceptive, in any form. By the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ we must see and know and act, as an incorruptible, devoted, consecrated body called to know the truth and qualified to maintain it in all the issues of life, particular and general.

We have written more than our caption covers; but here it is.
R. S. SALYARDS.

Sister W. A. Pierson of 515 Grove Street, East Chicago, Indiana would be glad to know if there are any Saints living near her. If so, she would appreciate having them write or call at her home. She is lonely for church associations.

Onset Reunionites Escape Death

[The harrowing experience of several members of the Onset reunion at Cape Cod, in which their lives were spared after an all-night spent at sea in a storm, is told in a letter from Mrs. Dewey McNamara, of Independence, to her mother. The letter in part follows]:

We have been through the most terrible experience of our life since last Tuesday morning, and it is a wonder our hair hasn't turned gray. We had made arrangements to go fishing out to Hoxie's last Tuesday and had looked forward to it ever since we had been here. You know I had never been fishing in my life and had never been on the ocean, so the idea of "deep-sea fishing" rather thrilled us. Lillian Zimmermann (Mrs. Albert Hoxie's sister) has been on the beach all summer and is quite a fishing enthusiast and had invited us to go fishing.

We left our cottage here at Onset, Tuesday morning (August 21) and drove fourteen miles out to Hoxie's all ready to catch a lot of big fish. They have a little fishing dory about twenty feet long that they have an Evinrude motor attached to, and it is a dandy little boat. They have a buoy on the fishing ledge and we went out there for a couple of hours, but the fish weren't biting very good. We only got sixteen perch and Mac (Mr. McNamara) and I caught fourteen of those. Jerry Hoxie went with us. He is Albert's brother and has lived on the Cape all his life and is quite a seaman. Then there was Mrs. Hoxie and her two children and another little boy from Philadelphia. We came in about twelve o'clock and had our perch for dinner. We sat around for awhile after dinner and Jerry fixed the fishing tackle all up and then he said he would like to try it out. Well, we were all ready to go as I was anxious to catch some more fish, and so we decided to go out for a little while. Lillian, Mac, and I, and two of the youngsters went out and got some crabs for bait. It took us quite a while and when we got ready to go it was nearly four o'clock. Jerry said it was almost too late to fish but we could go out for a little while anyway. By that time Edward Traver and the dog came, so they were with us. Mrs. Hoxie didn't go, but there were eight of us in the boat—Jerry, Lillian, Edward and the dog, Mac, four-year-old Lucile Hoxie, six-year-old John Hoxie, eight-year-old Harry Gerhard from Philadelphia, and myself.

We got out nearly to where the buoy was when the motor stopped and Jerry worked and worked with it and didn't know what was the matter. Pretty soon he found that a pin had broken in the rudder and he had to take the whole motor off the boat and make a pin out of a nail he got out of the side of the fishing tackle box. All this took time, and when he got the motor back on and started it was time to go home for supper, so we started in and went about ten minutes when the motor stopped. Jerry took it off again and fixed another pin in the rudder as the first one didn't hold, but then he couldn't get it started. By that time a pretty stiff gale had blown up and was blowing us off shore. There we were with no motor and headed toward the open ocean. They took the oars and tried to row in, but the wind was too strong and they couldn't make any headway. It was nearly eight o'clock by that time and the waves were terrible. When Jerry said: "Throw the anchor, boys; take in the oars and bail water" you can imagine how our hearts sank. Luckily we had three pails in the boat to bail water with. Oh, it was terrible! Each hour seemed about like ten and I had little Lucile in my arms. Most of us had on bathing suits but we had taken Mac's raincoat and gaberdine coat along with us and they helped out a lot. By one o'clock (I had my watch along) the moon was gone and it began to cloud up and get pitch dark. Every once in a while a big wave would just about drown us. Then it began to hail and thunder. The lightning was terrible, and for awhile I thought we would not see land again. The waves were thirty feet high Jerry said, and they surely looked higher than that. The anchor didn't hold and we gradually drifted all night. Mac had to stand in the end of the boat and hold the anchor rope so it would keep the boat headed into the waves because if they had hit us broadside we would have been swamped. Jerry bailed water all night long and part of the time Lillian did, too. Along with this, four of us were so seasick we could hardly hold up our heads.

Well, we were in that boat all night long. About three o'clock we saw a light of a steamer about five miles from us, looking for us with a searchlight. They threw it all around us but every time it would nearly touch us a big wave would swallow us up. It didn't get light until five o'clock and then the storm had turned the wind so it began to blow on shore and the boys took to the oars and rowed us as hard as they could until we landed at eight o'clock Wednesday morning. We were almost even with Provincetown and could see the lights, but the wind blew so strong and with the boys rowing we landed on Sandy Neck, which is near Barnstable Harbor if you will look on the map.

We were all so exhausted that we could hardly walk. When the boat struck the sand we all jumped as the waves just bounded right up over each side of the boat. They dragged the boat up on the beach, which almost seems like a physical impossibility, and then we started to look for a house. We walked about two miles over one sand dune after another in the most forsaken looking part of the country I ever was in. Those little kiddies were just about frozen, and all of us so weak we could hardly move, but one never knows how much endurance one has until put to the test. At last we got to a shanty and the man and woman took us in. They were wonderful to us and they built a nice hot fire and helped us get out of our wet clothes and wrapped us in blankets and fed us and put us to bed. Not until then did we give up, but when we got to that house none of us could talk intelligibly. They had everything possible to make us comfortable. Then the man walked three miles to the next house and telephoned to the Hoxies. You can imagine what a night Clara Hoxie put in, knowing that her babies were out on that ocean. Her oldest boy, Albert, was in Boston for the day with some neighbors or he would have been with us. Albert Hoxie was in New York so he didn't know anything about it. The party of rescuers arrived about eleven o'clock and we rode in a wagon about three miles to where the cars were, as they couldn't get any farther with the machines, and then they took us to Hoxie's and put us all to bed again. There were five cars there to meet us.

Oh, such a nightmare, and the reaction afterwards! I hope we will never have to go through such a thing again. Every life-saving station on the coast was out patrolling the water looking for wreckage. There were fifteen boats and one steamer out at six o'clock but they never expected to get us alive. They said they were actually looking for wreckage. It was all over the Cape, and in the morning papers that we were missing. From Provincetown down along the Cape everyone knew it. The postmaster at Sandwich told us they had prayer in the Catholic Church all Tuesday night for us. Doctor Sinclair was over twice Wednesday to see us and he was one of the first ones to get to the little shack where we first landed. He belongs to our church and is certainly a splendid man. He gave us some medicine, but we all suffered some from the exposure and shock of it all. I just got back from Hoxie's to-day and pretty nearly every one in the whole camp has been over to see me this afternoon. Oh, the people out here are the best ever, and I like them so much. Everyone says that Tuesday night was the worst night and the worst storm they have had there for years and we were out in that open boat through it all. Grandma Joy told me that where we were is called the Graveyard of the Atlantic, as more boats have gone down in Massachusetts Bay than anywhere on the coast. Her husband was an old seaman. Albert Hoxie's uncle came Wednesday night. He is 84 years old and has lived on the ocean most of his life and he said it was the biggest miracle that we ever came out alive. He told us about trips he went on back in 1856, so you can imagine he knows the water pretty well.

Well, mother, don't worry, because we are through with the ocean. We had thought it so wonderful, but now we are satisfied with Missouri just as it is. I don't even care to go in bathing now. My first trip on the ocean was rather thrilling, but too thrilling for me.

Sacramento, California

Summer weather and vacation days have greatly depleted our regular attendance, though we still have a goodly number at the regular monthly sacrament service.

Our branch functions under the old, or Form One, with a budget and one general treasurer.

We have an excellent location in our city, the corner of Twenty-fourth and Kay Streets in a church neighborhood, there being five churches within a radius of six blocks. We are just two blocks from historic Fort Sutter. Our building is the one-large-room type, with two small anterooms and choir loft. It is neatly furnished, but the building is very old and we now have a fund started for a new building. Some of the women are planning a bazaar this winter to add to the fund, though our plans are for monthly subscriptions, with a special drive later on. Our collection of fancy needlework was exhibited at our recent reunion as were those of other branches. Ours netted us about $25 toward our new building fund.

Our choir now consists of women's voices only, but with the aid of some outside talent at Christmas time we gave a cantata for women's voices, using two violins, piano, and organ for additional volume.

Our Department of Women meets monthly at the homes of the members. A brief business session is followed by a program, often with prominent outside talent, and then refreshments are served.

Our choir work in the last three years, with special missionary efforts here and the usual newspaper write-ups, with other efforts, have removed much local prejudice until we are able to secure many prominent local people to respond on our women's meetings programs.

The general church program for Mothers' Day was carried out in all departments, beginning with Sunday school in the morning, eleven o'clock church service, and also at the Department of Recreation and Expression in the evening.

Twenty-nine of our members, with ten children, attended our recent reunion at Irvington, including our four local elders. Ten of those attending reunion were from the neighborhood of Rocklin, California, about twenty-five miles from here where a Sunday school is maintained by the group there.

Our Sunday school and the Department of Recreation and Expression are active and we have had many enjoyable entertainments and socials. The Social Service Sewing Society, formerly the Ladies' Aid, and the Orioles are also active.

We have three district officers in our branch; Elder W. H. Dawson, district vice president; Sister Gertrude Bidwell, librarian; and Sister Birdie Clark, chorister.

Our most recent visitor was District President J. D. White, of Oakland.

Missionary Work in the Far West Stake

As I was called in from my mission to the British West Indies in time for the Young People's Convention, I had about eight weeks from the time convention closed till the opening of college. At the request of the appointing powers I first went to Fortescue, Missouri, to hold a series of meetings there. The Saints there have a nice church about four miles from town and I commenced preaching the night I arrived and continued for three weeks, preaching every night when conditions were favorable. The interest in the meetings was better each night until at the close many were driving out from town to attend. I was told that I had only to ask for the coliseum in town to obtain its use as four or five of the directors were favorable to my using it. These men, you understand, were all nonmembers and I certainly would have taken the opportunity but had already been asked to hold another series of meetings at Hamilton, Missouri. These meetings were already announced so I had no alternative. Three were baptized at the Fortescue meetings and much good can yet be accomplished there.

From Fortescue I went to the Ross Grove Settlement where Elder Roscoe Ross is in charge. I expected to preach there Sunday evening and then go on to Maitland where Elder A. H. Parsons has been holding tent meetings. However, the Saints at Ross Grove prevailed upon me to stay, and I preached four nights. Good interest prevailed and a series of meetings there would perhaps be successful.

After a few days of rest at the home of Sister Rawlett I left for Hamilton. As the reunion at Stewartville began in less than three weeks we had to begin at once with our meetings. Some of the people I believe were disappointed when they saw me and one young Latter Day Saint said, "Well, I'll believe that 'kid' can preach when I hear him." I suppose they expected to see an older man.

I could only stay at Hamilton about two weeks, so occupied every night except one or two rainy nights. We had fine interest and the Saints in this part showed a good spirit. The young people, of which there are many, ought to be proud that they have such a man as Elder Coleman Snider for a leader, and certainly Brother Snider is proud of his young people. They have a growing orchestra, a good choir, and some fine talent among their number. One of the young men who will attend Graceland was first in his classes in the Hamilton high school. Another was first in the county school grades. Two other young Latter Day Saints were second and third in the Kingston high school, and one tenth of the membership of this branch (of the young people) were in high school during 1922-1923. This speaks well for our church there, and our people are treated with great respect.

At the close of this series of meetings I baptized three fine young people—one, the wife of Brother Earl Craven, another young lady from town, and a promising young man.

While at Hamilton I visited the scene of the "Haun's Mill Massacre" and Far West, the place where many Saints had to flee for their lives. When I looked over the country and thought of the past, the sufferings of the Saints, I wondered if we would be as faithful as the Saints of earlier days.

There are calls for preaching everywhere throughout the Far West Stake. I received invitations from six branches of the stake to hold series of meetings, distributed hundreds of tracts, and in six weeks' time had the pleasure of baptizing six, preached thirty-eight sermons, and spoke at other gatherings.

It is hard to leave the field, but I feel that my sojourn at Graceland will be a great advantage to me. To our many friends in the islands who may read this letter we send our greetings. Our address will be Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

We now meet in the high school auditorium for our regular services, and last Sunday being the first of the month, it was sacrament. We enrolled one hundred and sixty-eight, had a good prayer service and many enjoyed the Spirit. Our thanks are extended to the people of this place for being kind enough to allow us to use the school building which makes it nice for us. We hope in the near future to have our own building ready for our regular meetings.

The ladies' aid still meets at the homes of the Saints and continues to do its part.

We are looking forward to the time when we can get into our own building, which will enable us to do many things we cannot at present do.

BELLE KENDALL.

Bisbee, News

The two-day meeting, held August 18 and 19 at Bisbee, Arizona, proved to be a decided success. A good spirit prevailed all through. The musical and literary program and the singing on Sunday night were good, considering the size of our membership, and the chance they have had for development.

We had with us Brothers Coberley, Snell, and Higginbotham, and Sister Putnam of Phoenix; Brothers Condit and Farley of Douglas; and Sister Sherwin and daughter of Tombstone, as out-of-town visitors. The local Saints turned out well. A fine lunch was served at the church on Sunday, and all seemed to enjoy themselves at the dining table, as well as in a social and spiritual way.

Brother Coberley preached twice, Brother Condit once, and the pastor once. The sermons were all good and seemed to touch the spot. The Saints are planning a reception for the pastor E. R. Davis and family on Saturday night, August 25. The pastor will preach his farewell sermon on Sunday night, the 26th, and the family will leave by automobile on Monday morning for Lamoni, Iowa.

Harry Passman Writes From Syria

At Roun, Djezzine, Lebanon, Syria. We are spending two weeks in Roun at the home of Brother George A. Nejeim and are holding services here. This is a Roman Catholic village. The people are asking our church to establish a school here to teach Arabic, English, and French.

Elder U. W. Greene visited this village before the war and made a very good impression upon the people. I baptized Joseph A. Nejeim, George's brother, yesterday in a nearby stream. Elder U. W. Greene used this same stream for baptism before the war.

We leave next Monday for Damascus, where we intend to purchase a stone for the grave of Elder Rees Jenkins.

Palestine is infested with bandits, so we will not be able to see the Sea of Galilee.

News From England

From a Letter to the First Presidency

The opening day at the new church here at Manchester was very successful, and also the meetings we held during the week after. The church was packed each service. We baptized two, and another is ready at the Beresford Road Branch, formerly known as the Southeast Manchester Branch. Just at present we are going through what is known as the Bank Holidays, and the majority of the people in England are having their holidays. Factories, banks and places of business are closed, and the people are going away to the seaside and country. However, we have promised the Beresford Road Branch that we will hold a real campaign in their new church some time in the fall after all have come back from their holiday making.

On the 26th of July we started a series of meetings in the Northeast Branch. In spite of the rain and cold weather we have had excellent attendance at our meetings. Last night four gave their names for baptism, and these will be attended to on Thursday evening, August 9. At this branch they have a rule that for all baptisms there must be given a week's notice in order to get the font ready. Three of these people attended our meetings when we were in Manchester soon after we came over here two years ago, and they followed our services all through the three different branches here for about a month. They have been interested ever since, and last night decided to come into the church.

From Manchester we go to Wigan, where the Saints have engaged a hall for two weeks' meetings. They usually rent this for only Wednesday and Sunday evenings, but have decided to make a special effort now. They have never held meetings for longer than one week before, and they are expecting big results.

Sister Baldwin is also kept busy taking and transcribing blessings. She is also talking to the women and girls in each branch along the lines of Women's Department work, and expects to organize the Temple Builders and Orioles in each branch, and also stimulate the women to study.

In reply to a letter which we sent out to the branches asking if they desired us to come and hold meetings, we have had hearty invitations from every one, and we scarcely know how to plan to be able to take care of them all.

We are busy visiting the homes of the Saints in the afternoons and encouraging them. We are preaching and giving patriarchal blessings, and are extremely happy in the work we are able to accomplish.

Brethren Williams and Fry left us last Saturday, and we feel rather lonely at their going. However, we are going to keep busy until next spring.

We note the reunions are in full swing at home, and if we could attend just one we might be satisfied, for it makes us dreadfully lonely not to be in on any of them.

RICHARD BALDWIN.

Waterloo, Iowa

A few words from our little branch might be of interest. We are still alive and trying to do the best we can under the circumstances. We need a good active worker who can devote his time and energies to local missionary work. Our local officers are interested in the success of the work but have to labor daily at their secular employment and have but little time for missionary efforts outside of regular church services.

A visit from any of the Saints passing through this place will be greatly appreciated. Our little stone chapel is located at the corner of Parker and Columbia Streets on the Litchfield street car line. We have Sunday school at 10 a. m. with preaching at 11 and Religio at 6.30 p. m., also preaching at 8. Our branch president, Elder A. J. Fisher, lives only a little over two blocks from the church at 1221 Ackermant Street. Other Saints also live in that vicinity.

Sister Myrtle Grapes of the Sanitarium in Independence is visiting us during her vacation and is helping to make our meetings more interesting.

Church Papers Are Appreciated

Several years ago we moved to a place where we could have no church privileges and I was very apprehensive for the children and feared I could not bring them up in the church. I dreamed I saw a large fruit tree uprooted and loaded with immature fruit. The Lord was with me and showed me two roots still holding. One was the HERALD, the other the children's paper. I was not to let these roots be loosened.

I have eleven children. They are not where they can be in active church work, but all love the church and never apologize for being Saints. We hope to be in a branch some time.

Recovers From Illness

Sister A. E. Martin writes us that after many years of illness she is regaining her health. She came to Independence from Saskatchewan about five years ago and settled at Enoch Hill. At the time there were only a few families of Saints there, but since then the place has grown so that now there are about fifty families. She was stricken with paralysis and was not expected to live, but through the prayers of the Saints and faith she is recovering. Sister Martin also tells of the use of herbs which she says has given her relief.

It is always a pleasure to hear of the recovery of our brothers and sisters and of the faith expressed by them in the prayers of the Saints.

First Chicago

Our rally day and home-coming was a success from every angle. Even the weather was favorable. It was surely a home-coming, for there were many ex-Chicago Saints in attendance. The church was packed to capacity which was an inspiration to the local priesthood who have been trying to awaken some of the people who have been rather negligent in their duty. President Frederick M. Smith was with us and was kept busy during the day. Our district president, Elder Cooper, and Elder McDowell and wife were also with us. Everyone was inspired by the sermons and talks given by President Smith.

Our Department of Recreation and Expression is active, and all who were in attendance at the beach party and wiener roast enjoyed themselves. We are looking forward to another beach party before the season closes, which most likely will be after our reunion.

Recent visitors have been Mrs. Glen Fairbanks and children, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Smith, Mrs. Guy Fairbanks, Mrs. Floyd McDowell, Mrs. Durbin and daughter Mary, Mr. and Mrs. Abe Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. McGuire, and Mr. Moran.

Young People Active in Flint

The first of July the Young People's Organization of Flint, Michigan, elected officers as follows: George McNamara; president; Glen A. Hardy and Ira Hawks, counselors. It was decided to call the organization by its three initials—Y. P. O.

On Tuesday night, July 30, the Y. P. O. drove to Brother Charles D. Brewster's for an old-fashioned lawn party. It was planned to turn on all the lights to play games but the moon assured them that only a few were necessary. After playing, all filed into the house and registered as charter members of the Y. P. O. The registration over, marshmallows were roasted, watermelon served and more games played. About 12 p. m. all started for Flint, every one of the fifty saying he had had a good time.

The boys and girls hope to make the Y. P. O. a greater power for good the coming year than it has been in the past. They plan to promote sociability among the members, make welcome those who come into their midst and assist in missionary efforts. In other words, they are to be minute-men, ready at all times to do service.

Successful Meetings in Atherton, Missouri

Elder J. W. A. Bailey just closed a successful series of tent meetings at this place. Though success is not always measured by the number of baptisms, he had the pleasure of baptizing four. We feel the greatest success, aside from those who were inducted into the kingdom, was the knowledge which he portrayed to the Saints and all who attended.

The Saints express as one that they were strengthened in the faith, and this latter-day work looks bigger than ever before. Both old and young can more efficiently give a reason for the hope that is within them. His way of presenting the truth is clear and concise, and in a manner that none could take offense unless offended at the truth.

His pictures and accompanying lectures were very fine, full of manifold evidence of the divinity of the Book of Mormon.

Any community that has the privilege of having Elder Bailey give a series of sermons and lectures will be enriched, and will enjoy a feast of good things.

Great Meetings in Pottawattamie District

Early in the year the presidency of the Hazel Dell and Boomer Branches felt that an effort should be made to conduct a missionary effort some time in July. The missionary supervisor, Charles F. Putnam, was consulted and arrangements perfected for the effort to start with a two-day meeting to be held July 13 and 14, with the expectation that this meeting would be followed up or carried right on with a two weeks' missionary campaign in the same tent.

Plans were made to locate the tent about midway between the two branches until Brother Putnam appeared on the scene and took the responsibility of urging the location in a grove on the farm of the writer. In this matter he claimed direction. The tent was accordingly located as per his suggestion and request.

Prior to the opening of the two-day meeting the Saints were called into service. Bills were printed and several cars went out in all directions to advertise the meetings. Something seemed to tell us that many would come to hear, though it has seemed for years that we could not interest nonmembers and secure their attendance at such a series of meetings. With faith in God the officers and members moved forward in their work of preparation.

The time came; the meetings started. One week passed; the attendance was surprisingly large. The second week opened and closed and the interest and attendance still increased. On Tuesday of the second week we had our first baptism. Then we went on into the third week. Still the interest increased and the crowds grew larger in number. On Wednesday, August 1, ten were baptized; on August 2, five more, and on August 3, one more. A heavy rain on Sunday morning, August 5, kept some away for the day services, but the largest crowd of the entire campaign was present at the closing service on Sunday evening, August 5. Had it not been necessary to close the meetings in order to move the tent to Council Bluffs for the reunion the meetings would have continued at least another week.

The Saints rejoiced through it all and were strengthened.

Friends understand us better, and seventeen were baptized. We hope for a greater harvest in the future.

All appreciated the effort of our brother to present the message. It was a time of spiritual feasting to all; a meeting never to be forgotten by many. As each evening for three weeks we watched the cars come gliding onto the grounds we felt thankful to God and glad we had made the effort. Brother Putnam, who did the preaching, has won a place in our hearts that can only be enjoyed by the true servants of Christ.

The reunion of Pottawattamie and Fremont Districts is now on in earnest, and while conditions presented a discouraging outlook at the opening, weather threatening and other things seemingly against us, all is lovely now. A beautiful spirit is present and the best of prospects for a grand reunion. During the service Saturday evening a storm was threatening and the wind began to blow but the Spirit bore testimony to Brother P. R. Burton, who was in our midst, that the camp was safe. The surrounding country had a very heavy rain and in places much wind and hail but in the camp only a very light shower and a beautiful Sabbath followed. Saints coming to the ground that morning were surprised to find it so nice here.

The Business of 100,000 People

Delegates and ex-officios from all over the world will be assembled in Independence on October 1 for the annual General Conference of the church. Not only will routine business be transacted, but policies and problems confronting the church in its effort to extend the gospel influence and establish Zion.

The Conference Daily will be issued as usual, each week-day evening an issue going out on the mails to Saints far and near, carrying the news of the big gathering.

At considerable expense because of not being equipped for daily paper work the publishing house issues this daily for the accommodation of the Saints. The price charged will approximate the actual cost. The paper should be widely subscribed to in order to make it pay its way.

Subscribe early. Supply of back numbers is usually exhausted very early. Those who send remittances now get all the numbers as issued.

The Land of Ten Thousand Lakes

I want to tell you of a little missionary tour in the land of many lakes and beautiful and picturesque scenery.

According to previous arrangement, Brother Peter Van Someren picked me up at the clean-looking little village of Milaca, Minnesota. Here we began our tour, traveling in a northeasterly direction through numerous small but energetic towns, and among settlements of Hollanders which could be told by the prosperous-looking farms, large barns and silos and large numbers of dairy cattle in that vicinity.

We arrived at the home of Brother Arthur Bundy and his pleasant little wife in time for a good dinner, which was duly appreciated. We then went to the community hall near by to fill an appointment previously announced. Brother Van Someren told the one-time soldier boys and their families the gospel story, and the writer filled the evening appointment at the same place.

This is the Silver Star Colony of late war veterans, where some who were more or less disabled are being assisted by the Government to obtain homes for themselves. But they have a big proposition to hew a home from a place so full of old pine stumps and stone.

We continued our journey north through McGrath and on to Glen, where we found a welcome with Elder Jay Myers and his congenial wife. He has done a good work, continually filling appointments in near-by schoolhouses and union churches whenever possible. There are a number of good people in the church as the result of his efforts.

We also found old Brother Goff and his wife, who is a sister to Bishop C. J. Hunt, of Holden, Missouri, and they treated us royally. We had strawberry shortcake made from the everbearing kind, but I will not undertake to tell how many pieces of the shortcake Brother Peter ate, as I was busy myself.

We made arrangements for a series of meetings later on and then started for Glory, but when we arrived there Brother Peter said he was not prepared to stay, so we drove on in a westerly direction until we arrived at Lone Lake, the home of Brother W. E. Griffith and wife and daughter who are all members of the church. It is wonderful how these isolated Saints keep alive with so little to help and encourage them spiritually.

We made some plans for future efforts in their vicinity and the next day journeyed toward Aitkin, Deerwood, Crosby, Ironton, and Riverton. Near these places are some of the finest mines of iron ore in the State, and possibly in all the world, for we are told that in some of them there was a thousand feet of good ore after taking off from thirty to fifty feet of gravel and earth on the surface. Most of the ore is mined by hauling away this vast amount of surface covering and then great open pit mines are made by digging out and loading the cars with great steam shovels and cranes. Giant mogul engines haul the long trains of the ore across to Duluth and Superior where it is dumped into the great ore docks for loading into the steamers that haul it to the smelters in the East.

Near Deerwood we found Sister Boardwell and her pleasant family who were glad to see us and hear a gospel sermon. We could not continue longer there just at present, as a lady evangelist was occupying the schoolhouse with a revival meeting. We attended one of her meetings but Brother Van Someren did not seem to appreciate her style, so we soon moved on. She shouted and screamed until hoarse trying to bring the people to the "mourners' bench" saying she was preaching the old-fashioned gospel and that was part of it. She did not mention the chapter and verse where proof of it could be found. She urged everyone to stand and sing, "O Lord,

I come, I come," and then said, "You ought to be ashamed of yourselves to say that and then not come forward." Again she insisted that everyone should sing, and then stopped them saying, "Oh, how can you stand there and lie that way," for they had been singing "I give myself to thee." She shouted, "I am saved, sanctified, and ready for glory," but stayed with us until we wearied and left her with a faithful few groaning and weeping as in agony. We hope to hold a series of meetings in the same place in the near future and try to prove that the old-fashioned gospel as taught by Christ and his apostles is very different from her message.

Again we took up our journey among many lakes and hills, farms and woods, and arrived at Mille Lacs, a body of water covering thousands of acres, about thirty miles long and fifteen miles wide. On the west shore are several camps of Indians as well as hundreds of summer cottages and resorts. From there we returned to our starting place, having traveled several hundred miles in Brother Van Someren's faithful Ford.

We made plans for a rally picnic to be held at Lone Lake about the middle of September and will try to get as many of the scattered Saints together there for one day as possible.

Successful Meetings Closed

WILLIFORD, ARKANSAS, August 27.—Elder E. A. Erwin assisted by Elder W. H. Davis, branch president, just closed a series of meetings at this place. Attendance and interest have been fine, some coming from five and six miles away. Some of the finest citizens in the surrounding country became interested in the gospel, and on August 21, Elder Erwin baptized six. Some of the boys in my Sunday school class were also baptized. They are studious scholars, and we believe that there is a wonderful opportunity before them in church work.

The Saints are very hopeful for the work in this place.

While Elder Erwin was here he received word from Sugar Creek, a point not far distant where he conducted meetings last summer, that several there wanted to be baptized, but owing to previous appointments he could not go. Elder W. H. Davis is expecting to visit Sugar Creek soon, and will attend to the baptisms.

We learn that Elder W. P. Bootman is to have a debate with a Reverend Fry, a Christian preacher at Biggers, about thirty-five miles from here. We are praying for a victory for the faith.

We have a fine Sunday school here at Williford.

Big Brother Writes Again

"Big Brother," President F. M. McDowell, has sent another letter to the young people of the church which is encouraging and hopeful. His interest in the youth of the church is a great factor in holding together this powerful body, upon whose shoulders will fall the great and splendid task of redeeming Zion.

The letter reads in part:

LAMONI, IOWA, August 25.—Just a word to express my appreciation for the letters that have come from a great number of young people since the convention last June. The confidence and best wishes of the young people are a source of great encouragement to me. Many reports have come to me of the excellent spirit manifest in the young people's activities in reunion work all over the United States. There is great hope for the church when we have such a body of enthusiastic young workers for the Master.

Now is the time of year when another school year begins. Another summer is almost gone and we must provide plans for the coming year. Are you making all the effort possible in order that you may be better fitted for the work to which we, as the young people of the church, have dedicated our lives? Perhaps you are not situated so you can attend Graceland this year, but you may be in a position to help some one else who needs Graceland, who needs to be inspired by her ideals, who needs to catch the new vision of the goal and ideals of the church. It may be that you are one who needs this help. If this is true, Graceland needs you. Graceland needs young men and young women who are dedicated to the work of the Lord and who are willing to give their lives in the interest of humanity. Graceland can help you to "seek learning," not only through books, but also in your associations with your fellow students. Better think it over, and write President Briggs that you will be here on September 10. You will never regret it.

Don't forget to write to those other young people that you promised yourself you would do when you received the list of convention visitors. Probably you can help some one else to be a little stronger for his battle alone. After all, why not all help each other to work out this great big problem of human living together? Let me assure you that I am anxious to be of any assistance to you that I can. I would like to hear from you about your problems and your joys.

F. M. MCDOWELL.

Bulletin of Waterloo Saints

Our Little Missionary is a local bulletin published for the home mission work of the Waterloo, Iowa, Saints. It consists of one sheet printed on both sides and contains announcements of meetings and names of all branch officers. Short items fill the rest of the paper making the bulletin interesting as well as purely informational.

Recreational Activities Desired

LUCASVILLE, OHIO, August 25.—We have quite a large membership here in the Pleasant Valley Branch, but feel that we are not awakening as much interest as might be expected. We have a large and commodious building that will accommodate a considerable number of people. Elder J. D. Shower, of Independence is now with us and intends to stay a few days. Quite an interest is manifested, and it is hoped that ere his departure many will see fit to embrace the gospel.

I note that other branches are enjoying many recreations which we are not familiar with, that is, in gymnasium exercises, etc. We are hoping to learn soon some things along this line, for we are sure it would be exhilarating. True Latter Day Saints should be the happiest people in the world, and we feel that they should engage in proper recreation.

Our Sunday school is doing a great amount of good. We have an average attendance of sixty members, and often have thirty or more visitors. We have a good staff of officers and teachers, and the work is moving along nicely. It is hoped that it will continue to grow and that the interest will steadily increase.

We have a Bible class which meets every Sunday evening with Brother Roy Culp in charge. Quite a number, principally the younger Saints who have just recently been baptized, take an active part in this work.

Do you know what your delegates are doing? Find out in the Conference Daily.

Independence

INDEPENDENCE, September 4.—Activities in Zion continue to center around the Campus. Labor Day saw a crowd of about five thousand people assembled for the day's program.

In the morning games and other athletic events were held. Picnic lunches were much in evidence for the noonday meal, and a large quantity of soda pop was sold at the confection stand. In the afternoon there was a concert by the L. D. S. Band and a feature baseball game between the North-Mehornay team of the Kansas City Sunday School League and the Independence L. D. S. team. The Independence team, which was made up of players selected from all four L. D. S. teams, beat the invading team 15 to 0. At 7 o'clock Judge Albert L. Reeves, of Kansas City, addressed the assembled crowd. He highly praised the activities in Independence and the splendid site for the Campus. Moving pictures followed the speaking.

A true Labor Day celebration was had, and a good time was evidenced by the numbers attending all events throughout the day.

Saturday night, September 1, the usual L. D. S. band concert and movies were given.

The picture Saturday night, September 8, will be Mary Pickford in "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

Sunday morning services at the churches in Zion were devoted to the sacrament. Speaking on the Campus in the evening was by Bishop James F. Keir, who has just returned from an extensive western reunion tour.

The speaker on the Campus for Sunday night, September 9, will be Apostle James A. Gillen.

The general offices are now repopulated, practically all officers having returned from their vacations. President Elbert A. Smith is again in evidence at the meetings in Zion, as is also Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire. Patriarch F. A. Smith, J. A. Becker, bishop in Zion, and Bishop Israel A. Smith have also returned.

The Bar-Gar team won the L. D. S. Baseball League title, the final game of the league being played Saturday afternoon, September 1, on the Campus. A reception and presentation of the pennant will be had during this month when the winning team will be honored by the league. The final standing of the teams is as follows:

Teams	Won	Lost	Per cent
Bar-Gar	9	3	750
Herald Office	7	5	583
I. X. L.	5	7	417
Walnut Park	3	9	250

Post season games are scheduled as follows:

September 8, Vulcanizing Roofing Company, Kansas City
15, Unity School of Christianity
22, Central Kansas City.

Promotion day at the Stone Church Sunday school will be on September 16. Appropriate exercises will be held at that time.

Laurel Club will meet on Swope Campus, Tuesday, September 11, at 2.30, to resume their fall work.

Kindergarten classes opened on Tuesday, September 4, at the churches in Zion. Classes will be held morning and afternoon at the Stone Church, and at 1.15 p. m. at the other churches. Mrs. Eunice Winn Smith is in charge of the kindergarten work. Since the public schools in Independence do not offer kindergarten, this work is being assumed by the Reorganized Church. A small fee is charged for attendance at these classes.

Graceland Now Senior College

The year of 1923-1924 sees Graceland start upon a four-year program to take her place among the senior colleges of the country. As a junior college Graceland is rated among the best, and plans being laid for the future should make her foremost among the small senior colleges.

Graceland now has the material assurance of a long-needed gymnasium and assembly hall. It is also inaugurating a self-help department which will make it possible for a student to work half a day and go to college the other half day.

Another addition this year is an agriculture course which offers wonderful possibilities for those wishing to make a scientific study of that branch of industry. The first two years' work in agriculture taken at Graceland will be recognized for credit at the state land grant colleges.

The new gymnasium is well under way, the excavation being completed and the basement walls in process of construction. Student help, under the self-help plan, will be used principally in the erection of this building.

These are some of the things which are included in the new four-year expansion plans at Graceland.

Our Departed Ones

COZADD.—Ellis E. Cozadd was born in Mercer County, Pennsylvania, November 20, 1863. Died at Beaver Center, Pennsylvania, August 12, 1923. Ordained a priest September 12, 1902. He had been superintendent of the Sunday school in the Kirtland District, also secretary of that district for some time. Leaves wife and four children. Sermon by Elder T. U. Thomas. Interment at Beaver Center Cemetery.

BULLARD.—Rachel A. Bullard was born April 22, 1850, at Saint Joseph, Missouri. Died at her home in Independence, Missouri, August 15, 1923. Baptized April 16, 1865, at Unionburg, Iowa, by W. W. Wood. Married W. D. Bullard March 26, 1878. To this union were born two sons and three daughters. One son and one daughter preceded her. Leaves her husband, W. D. Bullard; one son, W. J. Bullard; and two daughters, Mrs. Ammon White and Mrs. C. H. Blackman; also one brother and two sisters, Joseph Seddon, Mrs. I. J. Copeland, and Mrs. B. N. Waller. Sermon by F. A. Smith, assisted by Elder J. M. Terry. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

KING.—Darius King was born at Colden, Erie County, New York, July 18, 1837. Married Julia Carpenter, October 5, 1860. Moved to Palo Alto County, Iowa, in 1871, where he has since resided. Baptized October 16, 1892. Died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Charles Carmichael, August 3, 1923. Leaves aged wife, two children, Mrs. Charles Carmichael, of Mallard, Iowa, and A. D. King, of Berkeley, California, seven grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren, three children having preceded him.

FOSTER.—Zenas D. Foster was born in Indianapolis, Indiana, February 1, 1836. Died July 20, 1923, at Whitehall, Montana, of the infirmities of old age. He had been a Methodist and also a Christian Campbellite, but was converted to this faith by J. D. Stead and baptized July 30, 1905. He was always ready to help the missionaries and would deny himself that he might give to the church. Funeral services were held from the Methodist church with Mr. Lee of that denomination officiating by request of his relatives. Leaves wife and seven children, none of whom ever accepted the gospel.

SORENSEN.—Caroline Catherine Sorensen was born in Auldenburg, Prussia, October 5, 1842. Died August 4, 1923, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Eliza Kaiser, at Stockton, California. Joined the Utah Church but in 1911 was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Apostle Peter Anderson. Mrs. Mary Larsen, of Independence, Missouri, was also with her at her death. She leaves two other daughters, Mrs. Agnes Jensen and Mrs. Josie Hamlin, twenty-one grandchildren, and twelve great-grandchildren. Her husband and four children preceded her. Sermon by W. H. Dawson. Interment in Parkview Cemetery.

FLEEGER.—Barbara Ellen Fleeger was born in Indiana, January 20, 1860. Married Wesley Fleeger, November 3, 1880. Baptized in November, 1896. Died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. E. Warne, in Independence, Missouri, August 27, 1923. Leaves two daughters and one son, Mrs. J. E. Warne, and Miss Bernice both of Independence and Doctor Robert Fleeger of Lead, South Dakota; also three grandchildren and one great-grandson, two sisters, and three brothers. Her husband preceded her five years ago. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ARMSTRONG.—James Edward Armstrong was born at North Cayuaga, Ontario, May 24, 1850. Married Emaline Garvey in 1871. Baptized June 11, 1923, at Simcoe, Ontario, by Hiram Dickhout. Died July 12, 1923. Funeral sermon by John Shields. Leaves wife, five sons, and four daughters.

MOORE.—Gardner Moore, son of Eli and Prudy Moore, was born near Creal Springs, Illinois, January 12, 1847. Married Mary E. Stonum, July 26, 1865. Baptized in 1876. Died at his home in Tunnell Hill, February 7, 1922. Leaves wife, three daughters, and six sons, also thirty-three grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren. One daughter preceded him. His children are: Mrs. Belle Lenon, Mrs. Nancy Carter, Nellie A. Webb, Granville, James, David C., Charles E., Lloyd C., and Isaac L.

a big sign "Shavings." To our further surprise we discovered the proprietors to be members of the church, the Brethren Bearse, father and son. It seems that they know Joseph Lincoln personally and have permission to use the name Shavings. The proprietors are anxious to move to Independence, provided it is concluded that their industry will thrive on other than Cape Cod soil. But here is a singular thing, how pleased Latter Day Saints are to find each other—a Baptist or Methodist would think little of such a meeting. Clannish, the world says? Well, so is heaven:

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.

This fellowship we found in rich measure at the Onset reunion, as we have found it elsewhere from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and in Canada—and as our missionaries have found it in distant nations and among the friendly Saints of the South Sea Islands.

A very brief sojourn at Onset made us feel that we had known these New England Saints for many years. One thing that pleased us greatly was the absence of any considerable amount of gossip and rumor. We did not hear the people often speaking against either general or local ministry or against each other.

The Saints here have now some seventy-five cottages, a large and well-built auditorium, and a well-equipped commissary department. The grounds not only serve them during two weeks of intensive reunion work; they are used all summer by numbers of the Saints, and services are held each Sunday. In fact the grounds are a community center for all the branches in the district.

A great many men and women have contributed to the development of this community center and the organization of the reunion on its present scale, among others being Brethren Sinclair, Traver, Joy, and Fisher. But perhaps most credit belongs to Bishop Fisher, who saw the possibilities of the place and then threw his untiring energies and his own personal finances into the work of making the possibilities realities. Many, perhaps most of the cottages were built at his personal expense and without profit sold to members on easy payments. As an expression of appreciation of this work the Saints gathered at his cottage on the Fourth of July and unveiled a marble tablet set above the mantel of his fireplace and inscribed: "A token of grateful recognition from the campers to M. C. Fisher, for the untiring efforts which have made possible this camp of Zion."

Reunion committees interested in working out plans for permanent reunion grounds might well correspond with the officers of the Southern New England District. An exchange of experiences is profitable. Reunions are a matter of growth, not to be worked out in a year; but usually improve with experience under wise leadership as the years pass and organization is perfected.

One feature of the Onset Reunion greatly pleased us. I refer to the part taken by the young people.

I have met with the young people of Southern California as they marched to the sea to hold their prayer meetings on the sand dunes between the blue waters of the Pacific and the golden orange orchards of the interior; with the young people of Canada on the banks of Lake Erie; with those of Independence and Lamoni in their splendid revivals and conventions; and now with the young people of the East on the Atlantic Coast. The spirit is the same. Here is great hope for the future. A vineyard that has no young vines coming on is in a bad way—hopeless in fact. But the Lord is extending his vineyard. As old vines are removed by age or disease he plants many young and vigorous ones that will soon bear abundant fruit. The Lord of the vineyard moved among the vines of his setting at this reunion.

It was a revelation to us to see children from eight years up rise one after another and testify. At the sacramental service the last Sunday a little lad was the first to speak; he said, "I want to speak first for fear I will not get another chance." When the young people met at Brother Hoxie's beach for such a service, Albert, jr., a true son of Ye Chorister said, "I want to bear my testimony now for fear the church may never come out here again."

Brother and Sister McNamara of Independence did a good work in supervising recreation. This devoted couple, "Mac and Bee," were besieged constantly by boys and girls seeking advice about this or that. Many children and young people who would otherwise have been scattered here and there at their own will, seeking their own pleasure, were thus held to wholesome and well-directed play under counsel and fellowship that worked to their good. This supervision bore fruit in another way: when these workers said, "Come, let us go to the young people's prayer service," or, "Let us meet to-day with the older people," the children and young people were eager to follow the leadership previously established.

So our prayer services of a Sunday were much better balanced than is usual, the ages of those taking active part running from seven years to near ninety. Here too was evidence of previous labor—and in connection therewith was often heard in honorable mention the name of John Sheehy. Peter Whalley of Attleboro too did an excellent work in connection with Brother McNamara in charge of the young people's prayer meetings. Peter, as he is known to the children, will attend Graceland this coming term. And if he continues faithful will make one of our very best pastors in years to come.

An overseas man, he has had strange experiences. Here is a little story: Thirteen men went from Attleboro to the World War. Prayer was held for their safe return. A prophecy was given that all should come back. Peter was the last to return. He saw war on many fronts, in Greece, the Balkans, France, Belgium. Left a wreck in the hospital, nevertheless, at last, in 1920, he got back to Attleboro. A little boy who had prayed for him every day, then said to his mother, "Mama, Peter is home. Now I can pray for what I want." He had wanted a bicycle. When we learn to pray first for what our brother needs, and afterward for what we want, we will be as wise in the things of the kingdom as that little child.

Family Altar

The family altar is becoming quite old-fashioned according to the Literary Digest, and attendance at college chapel is also looked upon merely as a tradition that can be dispensed with, as is shown in 760 Harvard freshmen absenting themselves from a chapel service especially arranged for them. This naturally brings in question the validity of an education which neglects the true basis of our culture. The Chinese may go too far in making their religious books the key, the sole basis of education. In fact, we would literally agree that more than that is needed. But when one considers the grave importance of religion and especially the Christian religion for the upholding of our civilization, let alone for civic and economic progress, it certainly is a tremendous indictment that so many young men and young women are permitted to receive their college degree in gross ignorance of that which the Bible contains.

Some of the leading universities are now including a Department of Religious Education in which fine opportunity is offered for study of religious books. But as yet no religious course is made compulsory in these universities, so many students go through college without knowing anything about the Bible and other religious books, unless they obtain a knowledge elsewhere. Many of these do not attend church so their spiritual education is neglected.

In the faculties of the big universities will be found agnostics who tend to influence the minds of the students but, on the other hand, great numbers of professors are sound Christians and teach according to the Christian standards. A national authority on English literature, a professor in one of our great universities has said, "The man is not educated who does not know the Bible."

So it is seen that while a student may obtain a degree without a knowledge of the Bible, nevertheless the opportunity is afforded him and the Christian influence is felt by him, perhaps to a stronger degree than opposing forces.

The religious atmosphere of Graceland is one of the best reasons for attending that institution of learning. There, one is assured of a complete education, spiritually as well as physically and intellectually. With a splendid faculty, all Christians, in a religious community and on a beautiful campus, Graceland stands as the seat of education in this church. Graceland trains for a complete living, neglecting nothing that is necessary for a full understanding of life and furnishing a basis for happiness.

College Day

College Day is announced for Sunday, September 23. On this day special offerings in all the branches will be accepted, the offerings to go into the Graceland College fund.

This day is now observed annually in the church and a great deal depends upon its success. Our educational institution must be supported if we are to reap the benefits therefrom. The extensive program for the coming year affords unprecedented opportunities to our church members, but it also adds responsibilities. This duty we cannot shirk. Graceland needs the whole-hearted support of the branches on this day which comes only once a year.

It is suggested that wherever possible, those who have spent some time in Graceland and know the spirit which prevails in that institution as well as the value of its training, be utilized at the Sunday services, September 23, in the various churches where they may be now residing.

Branches are enjoined to set aside this Sunday for observance of College Day. May the support of the membership be greater than ever before in rallying to the standard of Graceland.

I Work. Do You?

Do you like your work? The question is a common one, but it is not to be answered by yes or no.

The man who likes his work so well that he is satisfied, is dead mentally and might as well be in the same condition physically. To be satisfied with accomplishments but dissatisfied to remain static should be the desire of every worker. Only that condition can bring happiness.

An employee once asked the new manager, "Do you like your work?" The new manager answered, "Yes, but I am not satisfied with things as they are." This admission of dissatisfaction was quickly met by the employee who wished to reassure his boss, "Oh, that's all right, you will like things after you don't have to think about doing them."

Yes, we believe some people are too lazy to think, but they are not happy. The blessed are they who can solve each problem with confidence and power and realize what that satisfaction is that comes from success. Wrestling with problems of life makes one strong physically, mentally, and spiritually and brings life and vigor into one's veins. It is glorious to be privileged to work.

From the Log of the Four Ninety

PART SEVEN

At the close of the Onset reunion the Chevrolet Four Ninety was put in dry dock, and we took a more seaworthy craft, the Commonwealth, to New York City, bound for the Deer Park reunion. The night ride down the sound is very pleasant and interesting. As we drew into New York in the fog and smoke of early morning, we noted the typical harbor scenes more or less familiar to all Americans, at least by reputation.

There, for instance, stood the Statue of Liberty in her familiar pose—and we were right glad to see her from behind rather than from before. In imagination at least we could sympathize with the colored soldier who had been overseas some three years. When he passed the Statue of Liberty on the return trip he admonished her, "Madam, if yo' evah sees me again yo' sho' gwine to turn around."

Ellis Island, the purgatory of souls bound for the promised land, fascinated us. It is the material expression of the old saying, "So near and yet so far." There many sit awaiting judgment. Whether they will be admitted or deported is a heart-breaking question in each individual case. The inviting shores of the land they have come so far seeking with such high hopes are in plain sight, yet the Greek might as well be in Athens, the Italian in Rome, the German in Berlin. Once out of purgatory and finally admitted to citizenship such may well marvel at the lightness with which native born citizens sometimes wear their citizenship. With the captain of the Roman guard to whom Paul said, "I was free born," they might answer, "With a great price obtained I this freedom." Ellis Island reminds one that to be a free-born citizen of America, whether it be in the United States or in Canada, is a thing to be thankful for with an increasing thankfulness as these days darken over the trou world.

The skyline of lower New York is a magnificent spectacle. Rising from the sea it seems to buttress the sky. Here commerce and trade have erected their most wonderful temples to the god of materialism.

Soon we were riding dry-shod under the Hudson River. No miracle now. For here men do the engineering feats of supermen. It is a great change from the quiet ponds and lonely sand dunes of lower Cape Cod to the crash and roar of New York City, and the flying shuttles of the subway which weave the tangled threads of human lives into a curious design. Greater New York? What is the spirit of greater New York? One sat in her limousine by the curb, waiting her—husband, shall we say? Her hair was bobbed. Her arms and shoulders were bare. Her gown was destitute of sleeves and pauperized as to neck. Her face was calcimined a tombstone white with an over-layer of vermilion on the cheeks. She was bedezined with jewels. Her eyes were hard and bold. She seemed to say, "I am the spirit of New York." Another came down the walk carrying a baby. Her dress was plain but attractive. Her sensitive face bore the tinge of health. In her eyes was the light seen in the eyes of all young mothers in all lands. She seemed to say, "I am the spirit of greater New York." Here the base and the noble dwell together in modern Babylon. There is no question which is the greater. But which will win out? What will come out of this welter of humanity, this whirlpool at the foot of humanity's Niagara?

Right glad were we to be rid of it and into the open fields of New Jersey. Arriving at Deer Park, just across the line in Pennsylvania, we found one of the most beautiful reunion grounds that it has been our lot to visit. The Saints here have seventy-six acres of land, a large auditorium and dining hall, and sixty-six tents with cots and other equipment. The camp is located at the top of a slightly hill in a grove of tall oak trees. Water is obtained from a natural spring, clear and cold, said to be the largest east of the Rockies. It is traditional that the Indians of this region held their last council meeting at the Deer Park spring.

Bishop Zimmermann has made this camp possible, and now has a worthy assistant in his son, John Zimmermann, jr. Brother Zimmermann is now considering plans by which he hopes to make these splendid grounds available to colonies of children and mothers from the city during the entire summer, excepting the two weeks of reunion time. To a city-born child, accustomed to dirt and brick walls, to a weary and poverty-ridden mother, such a vacation would mean heaven on earth.

Deer Park is located in a section of the country where points of historic interest abound. Near at hand is Philadelphia, claiming the "cradle of American liberty"—though to be candid New England seems to boast several "cradles of liberty"; probably because during the Revolution New England rocked with patriotism. The new-born child of democracy had many faithful nurses. Boston donned her cap and gown, following her tea party, while Paul Revere rode for the farmer surgeons who at Lexington and Concord whetted swords for the Cæsarean operation. The maternity ward was very busy. But it was from the Philadelphia convention the final word went out: "The child will live." Hopeless confusion often follows revolution; the Constitution drafted by divine guidance insured the longevity of the new Republic.

Close by the park runs the beautiful Delaware River. And our young people went often to bathe at the spot where Washington made his famous crossing. To be sure the summer setting does not remind us very much of the picture that thrilled us in boyhood's days. The river is not choked with enormous cakes of ice. But possibly the picture was not in all details accurate. It seems incredible for instance that Washington should have crossed standing up in the boat. A bad example for the Father of his Country to set his children. But there were the elements of the dramatic which still fire the imagination—the enemy, well fed, well armed, comfortable, feeling secure in Trenton—so secure that they are engaged in holiday revelry; across the river the ragged continentals, poor, without adequate arms, cold and hungry and despised. There, then, entered the daring genius, the nerve and courage that leads the shivering ones across the river and launched a victorious surprise attack upon the surfeited ones. Every boy who has read the story remembers it, and will forgive the hero even if he did stand up in the boat, which any good Boy Scout knows is a foolish thing to do.

During the reunion, district conference was held, and the district officers showed us how to do the business of the district, even including electing delegates to General Conference, in two hours. But they did not discuss Form Four. We were privileged to meet with the young people at their Sunday morning prayer service in the open. And a memory that we shall ever prize records a visit from these young people who serenaded us one evening after we had retired to our tent, and greeted us in a friendly speech by their spokesman, Louis Ostertag, a French lad born near the last resting place of Joan of Arc. We were then happy to join them in their rounds to sing for Bishop Zimmermann, John Zimmermann, Elders Stoff, Squires, and finally for Apostle D. T. Williams, who stopped at Deer Park on his way home from the British mission. Brother Williams had been the moving spirit in this little excursion of night singers, and at last dismissed them with the advice that they go at once to their tents. But no sooner was he comfortably ensconced in his own tent than they reassembled and gave him a pleasant surprise.

An interesting feature of the reunion was a series of three lectures by Reverend Henry Heine of the Crescentville Evangelical Church, Philadelphia, on the theme of stewardships, as understood and taught by various denominations. It is rather surprising how very closely he paralleled our ideas on tithing, stewardships, consecration of surplus, even the taking of a covenant as steward. There were some differences of moment, but not many. It may surprise some to learn how many books and pamphlets are being published and circulated by the various churches—literally millions of copies, dealing with tithing and stewardships. The speaker gave us a list of twenty-six such publications appearing below.

Even those who hold that we should "teach and not be taught" on such a theme would perhaps find it exceedingly interesting to canvass the ideas of other peoples and see how they stand on this doctrine, even as we have always been eager to make comparisons on baptism and various other doctrines. Certain questions are suggested by the comparison.

It is remarkable that very many of the religious ideas advocated by the Saints in the early days, and at that time denounced by other churches, have at a later date been taken up one by one and are now preached by the most orthodox: divine healing, the second coming of Christ, and various other doctrines will occur to the reader. And now the principles of tithing and finally stewardships, revealed to Joseph Smith ninety years ago, are taken over and preached from the house tops. Did we saturate the world with these doctrines? Did others by study and thought arrive at the same truths that we learned by revelation? or was the spirit of revelation accompanying the Restoration more or less pervasive, and has the Holy Spirit led many honest-hearted ones in many places to a perception of truth? Certain it is that the young and unlettered lad of Palmyra was inspired or he could not have so far out-visioned the wise and learned ones of his day.

All too soon the time came for us to leave Deer Park. We had found a warm-hearted welcome among the Saints of the New York and Philadelphia District, and we were loath to leave them, but we were scheduled for the Maine reunion. And so of a Sunday afternoon, with Brother John Zimmermann at the wheel, we drove to the depot at Trenton. As we left the grounds, the Saints gathered by the roadside under the lofty oak trees and waved us good-by, while they sang, "God be with you till we meet again." A mist seemed to come over the landscape and obscure their faces for a moment; but when it cleared away, we saw them more perfectly than before, as brothers, sisters, colaborers. But that was a good wish: "By his counsel's guide uphold you; with his sheep securely fold you."

LETTERS AND NEWS

Reunion News

The Bigger and Better Reunion

"A bigger and better reunion next year," was the slogan of one of the reunions even before its close. A bigger and a better one—is your district planning that too?

Forty or more reunions are over now with the ending of this reunion season, and the response for news from these gatherings has been well given. You have read of reunion activities in Australia, Canada, England, and almost half the States in the Union where these tent cities have been erected. Cities "of brothers and sisters, ten days of peace, Zion in miniature trying to reveal itself," is the way one district expressed it.

These news letters have not been competing with each other to make the biggest and best reports. They have been written that those who could not obtain their vacation at the time of the district reunion might not feel left out. The brothers and sisters who have moved from your district have read the news eagerly, too, for they wanted to hear from the folks "back home." The isolated have been cheered with your progress and planned to attend somewhere next year. Best of all, there has been an exchange of experience that the various districts might thus help each other. Let us see what can be gleaned from the various letters.

The purpose of the majority of the reunions seems to have been fivefold: spiritual, social, revival, educational, and recreational. This is as it should be, and to overwork any one phase brings disaster to the camp.

If active, healthy bodies suddenly become inactive and allow themselves nothing to do for ten or twelve days, except to sit still at church services, the sudden reaction from loss of exercise will be detrimental. To add enough play to keep the blood stirring produces health, and health is a strong factor with the majority of people in their peak of spirituality. Yet recreation must be wisely governed, for to overdo it would be to lose the valuable things for which the Saints gather together.

Many lines of activity have been found by which the camps have found this recreation. You can hear the young people yet discussing that wiener and marshmallow roast, the camp fire, the volley ball, croquet grounds, tennis court, the horse-shoe games, the mock funeral or wedding, the melon feed, the bathing, the hikes, the old-fashioned games, the basket-picnic dinner and all the things one omits in trying to recount them.

Some of the reunions convened at the hour when the Nation paused for an hour of sorrow, and memorial services were held on the grounds for the late President Harding. Flags were flown at half mast throughout the reunions as a reminder of the Nation's loss, and for once the admonition to pray for the welfare of the Nation was not forgotten.

So it has not been all play. The themes which have been discussed at the prayer meetings from east to west and north to south bear witness of the earnestness of the Saints. A few of the themes have been: Consecration, Zion building, the influence of our daily walk and conversation, and our need of Zion. After discussing our need of Zion at one reunion for ten or eleven days, the question was turned about, "Zion's need of us." The first form was easy enough to talk about, the retrospection each of himself made many wonder if in Zion there was a place awaiting.

Besides the prayer meetings for young and old, there have been many spiritual sermons. The topics have been varied, their themes educational and evangelical. Some of these have been preached to the gathered Saints; some sermons were spoken for the benefit of the visitors. The timeliness of some of the subjects is seen in the following list: Charity, regeneration, daily living, stewardships, dead flies, progress, religious training in the home, stopping the leaks, the financial law, and sacrifice.

There were lectures, symposiums, study hours, plays, music, cantatas, pageants, busy field workers, tireless home officers, energetic leaders. The children were not forgotten, nor the young people. The older ones were provided for, and the various departments found expression.

Old friends have been met, new acquaintances made, we have come to know each other better. We have laughed together, played together, dined together, lived together, prayed together. Ought we not to be more united? We need not sadly sing at parting, "God be with you till we meet again." Keep in mind that bigger and better reunion next year. And if God shall between now and then, draw some nearer to himself who were with us this year, there is yet the Great Reunion to come.

One of the news letters said that the success of their reunion was due to a wide-awake committee. Not one that began five or six weeks beforehand, but one year before the committee was organized and in action. This sounds better than the call for departmental heads to be on hand the first day of the reunion to make out the program. The program should be in formation all year. Your district choir members should know months ahead what anthems will be sung so that they may be practicing in the home branches. The Orioles should anticipate for a long time that evening which is their responsibility.

The reception committee for visitors and dining service needs to be well informed and ready before the reunion starts. It cannot be planned successfully if you wait until the last week. And don't forget to distribute the honors of service. Where many are working, the greatest happiness is found. One reunion reported privately, "One of the best things about our reunion has been the number of people who have contributed to its success. On previous years the responsibility has sometimes fallen a great burden upon a few. This year it has been so distributed that none can complain of being too overtired to enjoy the services."

The cafeteria, help-your-self plan, seems to work best with our people. Carry your trays back, help the kitchen workers as much as possible so they can enjoy the program too, seems to be the spirit which characterizes the brothers and sisters.

The committee should not neglect the health of the camp. Make strict rules to apply to the careless. No water of any kind, not even clean wash water, should be thrown upon the ground. All garbage must be covered. The dining room and kitchen must be screened, the toilets supplied with sanitary chemicals and covering. Then will the flies be considerate and the babies healthy and cooing. And oh, how we sometimes sigh for a bath, and mothers of babies long for washing conveniences! Surely those districts that own their own reunion grounds will be waking up to those needs some day.

So the bigger and better reunion which we plan has many angles to be considered that the saints may go home with even a greater store of spiritual strength than they have obtained this year, although we hear them expressing the profit they have gleaned for religious living, their broadened visions, their refreshed spirits, their strengthened faith, their increased love for their neighbors. Earnestly, unitedly they should be able to sing, "God be with you till we meet again."

MARCELLA SCHENK.

Eastern Oklahoma

DALBY SPRINGS, TEXAS, August 30.—Twenty-five were baptized at the Eastern Oklahoma reunion which has just closed.

The attendance was splendid, the preaching of a high order and the prayer meetings of a spiritual nature.

Sister J. S. White was in charge of the Department of Women. Fine work was done by the department, and the program is a progressive one.

Visiting speakers were Apostle Roy S. Budd and Elder H. E. Winegar. District President J. Arthur Davis also preached, in addition to his numerous other duties. Local officers also assisted with the reunion program and responded readily when called upon.

Renewed courage was gained at the reunion, and a bright future lies ahead in the district. Many expressed it as the best reunion the district has ever had.

Idaho District Reunion

RUPERT, IDAHO, August 27.—The Idaho district reunion has now become history. A time that all who attended shall look back to with fond remembrance because of the blessings received, and the kindly association of the Saints.

We are pleased to have the pleasure of reporting it as the most spiritual reunion ever held in this district, and was conceded, by several old timers who were there, to have been the best they ever attended. It seemd that before the reunion, discouragement and despondency had entered into the hearts of many, but we are glad to say that this was speedily removed, and was supplanted by a great desire and a zeal to continue faithful to the end.

Nearly every part of the district was represented, and the local attendance was also good. Especially was this true at the evening services at which time the large gospel tent was always filled to capacity, and often there were some on the outside. Conference appointees present were: Brothers J. A. Becker, R. L. Fulk, Guy Levitt, and Sister Ward L. Christy, all of whom rendered very valuable service. We were also pleased to have with us Brother and Sister A. Z. Rudd of Tulsa, Oklahoma. They are enjoying a camping tour and have been on the road since last April. This was the third reunion they attended this season.

Brothers R. C. Chambers and R. L. Fulk presided over the reunion, and under their able direction attention was given to all departments of church work. Each afternoon from 3.30 to 5 o'clock was given over to "The daily dozen," and volley ball, under the direction of Brother Levitt. It was a good variation, and needless to say that the Saints enjoyed it very much. Brother Fulk refused to indulge in the daily dozen on account of his frail (?.. condition; however, his very conspicuous figure was never missing on the volley ball field.

On August 23, Sister M. C. Condit, (Grandma Condit as we all call her) was 69 years old, and after the evening services the Saints remained in the big tent with grandma as the guest of honor. A very pleasant evening was spent. Songs were sung, and ice cream and cake were served, after which grandma addressed the crowd, giving expression of her appreciation for the kindly consideration of the Saints in remembering her. She has been an active resident of this district for forty years, and will represent the district as a delegate at the coming General Conference.

On Friday evening a program was rendered, followed by a wiener and marshmallow roast. A short two-act play was included in the program: "Garden of Gethsemane"; first act, "The morning of the resurrection," second act, "The risen Lord."

Dedication of the local church took place Sunday morning, August 26 at 11 o'clock with Brother R. C. Chambers, branch president, in charge. Dedicatory sermon was preached by Bishop Becker, dedicatory prayer by Brother R. L. Fulk, presentation of property, and brief history as to the building of the church, by Bishop's Agent Ed. L. Haas.

The Saints at Rupert are surely to be commended for their diligence and thrift, as the construction of the building was only started in November, 1921, and the building is now completed and paid for at a cost of over three thousand dollars, and notwithstanding the fact that the greater part of the construction was done gratis by the Saints. You will hear more about this later.

The conference voted to held a reunion in the district next year, time and place to be left to district presidency.

By a resolution unanimously passed by the conference they are asking the General Conference to appoint Brother Guy Levitt to the Utah-Idaho District.

At the conclusion of the reunion those under General Conference appointment started for the Utah district reunion at Ogden, while others returned to their respective homes. We are quite sure that all went on their way rejoicing.

Clinton District Reunion

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, September 2.—There were so few who gave us any promise of attending that we feared for the success of the reunion. And this condition of uncertainty continued right up to the time of the beginning, August 17. However on going to Fort Scott, Kansas, and visiting Gun Park, all fears vanished, and there came a wonderful feeling of assurance that the reunion would be a success, which feeling continued with us till the closing service on Sunday night, August 26.

There were some hitches in getting our tents, and some failed to order in time, but the way opened up splendidly so that all were provided for in some way. While there were only sixteen tents on the grounds, beside the district tents, many drove back and forth from their homes in automobiles. Thus the attendance was fairly good all the way through, and especially so at nights and on Sundays.

The location was a beautiful one, and the park pavilion at our service was the coolest and most pleasant place we had found during our long spell of hot weather. True, there was some dust to mar our perfect enjoyment, but a splendid rain disposed of that prior to the last Sunday.

The health of all in the camp was excellent. A good feeling was prevalent, and the time well occupied. Prayer meeting at 8.30, study hour at 9.45, preaching at 11 a. m., departmental work at 2, recreation 3 to 6, song service 7.30, and preaching at 8 p. m., was the general order of services during the week, with some slight variations. While there were no manifestations of the gifts in our meetings, all were marked by a good degree of the Spirit which brought joy and comfort to the Saints.

The chief speakers for this reunion were R. D. Weaver, W. E. Haden, H. O. Smith, A. Karlstrom, J. Blackmore, Lee Quick, and R. T. Walters. Brothers Weaver and Karlstrom were just convalescing from serious sickness and were thus physically handicapped. However all enjoyed their efforts. Brother Blackmore had charge of the study hour and of the departmental work and made it interesting to all. The attendance was good and much was presented worthy of thought and careful consideration.

Sisters Blackmore and Juanita Haden did splendid work with the little folks, practically and profitably entertaining them in the big district tent while services were being held in the pavilion in the forenoon. Their efforts were very much appreciated. Sister Silvers, district Sunday school superintendent, was present. On Friday night a playlet was given by the young people in attendance. This was written by Sister Mina Kearney, and entitled "The call to service." This was in charge of Sister Silvers. Sister Jessie Silvers gave a talk in the interests of the Independence Sanitarium. Sister Martin also gave an address on health hints.

In harmony with a request by resolution from the district conference, the reunion association was dissolved and report made back to the conference, with a view of making the reunion a department of church work in the district, rather than existing as a separate and independent organization. In an expression by vote taken at the business meeting of the reunion, Rich Hill received a majority of two votes as the place for the next reunion. The district conference, of course, will decide finally.

The indications were, at the close, that the reunion was a financial success as well. Prospect was that all bills would be paid with a surplus left over for the next year.

Nauvoo Reunion

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS, August 30.—One more milestone is passed in the closing of the reunion at Nauvoo. Time alone can measure the great good accomplished. From a spiritual point it far exceeded the fondest anticipations.

The presidency were, Elders D. J. Williams, Amos Berve, and W. H. Gunn, later associated with F. Henry Edwards of the Quorum of Twelve. These brethren operated as a unit throughout and had the heartiest cooperation of the Saints in attendance.

Other speakers besides those mentioned were Patriarch Ammon White, Bishop George P. Lambert, and Charles J. Smith. All enjoyed the Spirit of the Master in their labors.

The social services were a great source of inspiration, and the class study period a great aid. There were three groups with able instructors for each group. The recreational activities each afternoon were enjoyed, though they were not featured above the rest of the services.

Thursday was Nauvoo Day and was represented by many of the citizens. Mayor Berger gave an address of welcome in which he expressed the hopefulness of the citizens in the gathering of the Saints, desiring that many more of like kind come in and help build up the city. This was followed by an address on the history of Nauvoo, by the city attorney, Mr. William Hemmy. Mr. Hemmy's eulogistic remarks with reference to the present members of the church were very much appreciated. His sketch then drifted back to his boyhood days and his praise of Emma Smith and the two sons, Joseph and Alexander, with whom he was personally acquainted, brought tears of joy to the eyes of nearly all present, including himself.

Many were the times, said Mr. Hemmy, that "Aunt

Emma" had cared for them when cold and wet! fed them her cakes, dried their clothing and told them stories which helped them to grow into manhood. "Always she warned us not to cross the island and swim in the rapids. We went 'swimmin' those days [he scorned bathing] as many times as we could get into the water, and Aunt Emma was always watchful of us." "No more truthful or honorable people ever lived than the Smith family," said Mr. Hemmy. His closing statement was, "An honest man was the noblest creation of God, and then to crown that he created woman and that woman was 'Aunt Emma.'"

Honorable mention is made of Sister Emma Burton who was in attendance at nearly every meeting, encouraging and exuding the Spirit of the Master. Her experiences in the Islands and Australia as related were in the large sense revelations and much of it applied to the needs of the present day. Surely the Lord has sent her on here to assist in building up this waste place. May he sustain her to this end.

At the business meeting, steps were taken to plan the next reunion. It is hoped to build permanent buildings and develop this as one of the largest and best reunions in the church. It can be done.

Pinconning Reunion Closes

BENTLEY, MICHIGAN, August 27.—The reunion held at Pinconning closed on the night of August 26, and we feel that much good has been accomplished in spite of the cold weather and rain which prevailed the whole week causing some sickness and discomfort to those attending. The assembly tent was blown over twice and torn in several places.

Some interesting sermons were delivered by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, and Bishop F. B. Blair spoke on "The law of tithing and stewardship." Other speakers present were Elders J. Shields, G. W. Burt, J. Bailey, William Davis, William Grice, William Flegg, B. H. Doty, and G. E. Burt.

The district orchestra under the direction of Elder B. H. Doty furnished music during all of the reunion.

Thursday evening was devoted to a musical program after which stunts were given by eight groups. There we saw "The old-fashioned school" "Wash day," "The wild man from Borneo," and even "Spark plug."

There were not as many spiritual gifts as we had at our preceding reunion, but every service held was inspirational, and fully as good as those of last year. We are planning on having another reunion at the same place next year with Otto Bartlett as president of the Young People's Association, with Mildred Mitchell, secretary, and Verna Burt, treasurer.

Brush Creek Reunion Closes

CENTRALIA, ILLINOIS, September 5.—The Brush Creek reunion came to a close Sunday, September 2. The weather was very good with the exception of thunder showers which came at the latter part.

The daily program was as follows: 8 a. m., young people's prayer service; 9 a. m., regular prayer service; 11 a. m., preaching; 2.30 p. m., departmental work or preaching; 7.30 p. m., preaching.

The preaching, which was of a high order, was done by Elder C. E. Wight; Bishop C. J. Hunt; Elders H. Sparling, I. M. Smith, B. E. Brown; L. C. Moore, district president; and C. H. Wesner, Bishop's agent.

The prayer meetings were good.

The last Saturday night the Saints of Centralia presented an eight-act play, "The opportunity of the Sunday school."

Mrs. B. E. Brown and Mrs. H. Sparling had charge of the departmental work.

A business meeting was held, and a committee chosen to have charge of the reunion next year.

Thirty Baptized at Central Oklahoma Reunion

REDROCK, OKLAHOMA, August 28.—The Central Oklahoma district conference and reunion closed August 27 after ten days of profitable time spent enjoying the spiritual side of life. The Lamanites and the white Saints were as one. It is remarkable how the Lamanite Saints are grasping the gospel, and so humble and sincere in their work. Two Lamanite brothers were called to the priesthood: Brother Robert Small Koshiway, of Perkins, Oklahoma, to the office of priest, and Brother Hoke Dent, of Redrock, to the office of elder. Their ordination will be provided for. Thirty baptisms were recorded, Elders Hubert Case and Jack Koshiway officiating. We wish to mention here the baptism of Brother Earnest Hart who is afflicted, whom we have hoped to see come into the work for a long time. He is the husband of Sister Bernice McGeorge Hart. Also their little girl, Earnestine, was baptized.

In the business meeting time and place of the next reunion was left to the reunion committee and the committee instructed to solicit any kind of donations that go to help carry on the reunion, such as money, canned fruit, vegetables, etc. If this meets approval we expect to have a free reunion. Let us all get our shoulders to the wheel and help so that all may have a chance to come and have a spiritual feast. Those living in branches or the neighborhood where one of the committee solicitors live, should get in touch with them at once. "Make hay while the sun shines." Those on the reunion committee are as follows: Earl D. Bailey, district president, Tulsa; T. P. Greenwood, missionary supervisor, Skiatook; W. A. Ammermon, Terilton; W. P. Rumsey, Sperry; Jack Koshiway, Red Rock; Robert Small, Perkins; H. K. Rowland, Piedmont; E. D. Dillon, Oklahoma City; B. R. Hixson, Holdenville; A. H. Christensen, Kaw City; and Sister Alice McGeorge, Enid.

During the reunion the Department of Women met daily under the supervision of Sister Ed Dillon. Good meetings were reported, which consisted of talks, demonstrations, and instructions that go with that line of work. Sister Dillon is a faithful worker with the Indian sisters. She would not miss a tent in her rounds over the camp to visit with each one. She talks, eats, and prays with them, and they all love her.

A young people's class met daily, supervised by Sister McGeorge. She made it very interesting for the young folks. Programs consisted of Bible story-telling and recreation. We wish to mention one gathering at a marshmallow toast where we had an attendance of seventy-five. Brothers Moore and Koshiway led the crowd to the woods to a beautiful spot cleared off where the Indian boys proceeded to build the fires. All were lined up, marched to a spot where marshmallows were served, and the toasting began. Many pleasant words were exchanged as well as new acquaintances made. Sacred hymns were sung, and then "America," after which Brother Koshiway offered the dismissal prayer and all marched back to camp.

Sister H. K. Rowland was supervisor of the children's activities. Excellent work was reported. The picture and clay work appealed to the Indian children very much, also the little health plays and drills she taught them.

The Oriole work was under the supervision of Sister Pearl Greenwood. Commendable work was reported. Daily meetings were held which consisted of talks, stories, first aid work, kodaking, and basketry. Sister Leah Rowland, teacher, was a very efficient one. Merits were awarded and ranks completed. The Terilton Oriole girls were the only circle represented there, of which Sister Pearl Greenwood has been the leader since they were organized. They have attended the reunions and made expenses by giving socials, bazaars, etc. The girls completed the Oriole work and had a graduating exercise at reunion. Sister Doris Compton gave the valedictory address which was splendid. They were then initiated as Temple Builders under Sister Ed. Dillon, district organizer, and Sister Alice McGeorge, district organizer of Idaho. The Indian girls were present during the meetings, which gave them an idea of the work. Four of the Orioles were baptized, two of whose parents are nonmembers.

Many good things which were enjoyed could be reported, such as programs, picture slides by Brother Karlstrom and Brother Case, and good speakers throughout the reunion.

Kansas City to Have Special Meetings

Missionary Efforts Being Made

KANSAS CITY STAKE, September 3.—Special meetings are being planned by three of the churches of the stake, Central, Grandview, and Malvern Hill, for one week beginning September 23 and ending September 30. The meetings in these churches will be held simultaneously. Speakers arranged for are: Apostles E. J. Gleazer, Clyde F. Ellis, and Myron A. McConley.

Stake Missionary Amos T. Higdon commenced a series of special meetings at the Second Church, Twenty-first and Bellevue, August 25, which are to continue until further notice.

Malvern Hill made its regular monthly special effort Sunday, August 19. Bishop Charles Fry, recently of England, was the speaker at 7.45 p. m. Music was furnished by the junior choir.

A missionary effort is being made at Washita Station some distance from Malvern. Elder W. O. Hands, assisted by George O. Sherman and Fred J. Cleveland, is in charge. The interest is good.

Speakers at Central for Sunday, August 26, were J. A. Tanner at 11 a. m., and F. S. Anderson at 7.45 p. m.

The regular quarterly conference business session of the stake was held on Monday night, August 20, at Central Church. The hearing of routine matters included reports and the election of twenty-nine delegates to the General Conference. The work was accomplished harmoniously. No conference meetings were held Sunday.

Bishop F. B. Blair has been in attendance at several reunions but is expected to return soon.

The local choir at Grandview under the direction of Sister Maude Evans, gave a musical Tuesday night, August 28, which was much appreciated. Brother James R. Houghton assisted with two vocal numbers which were well received. A silver collection netted about seventeen dollars.

Mount Washington Church gave an ice cream social August 21, near the station, which was enjoyed by all who attended.

A social affair on August 28 at the Heathwood Mission resulted in the neat sum of $125. Two young sisters were in competition for the possession of a quilt, the one raising the most money being the winner. They succeeded in getting $87.

Argentine followed suit on the 30th when an ice cream and soft drink festival given by the Sunday school increased their exchequer $40.

These affairs, while carried on for a monetary benefit primarily, are also a big asset in a social way as there is usually a full turnout on the part of the members. Also the neighbors near by are in attendance.

Holden Stake Issues Bulletin

Volume 1, Number 2, Appears on August 15

HOLDEN STAKE, September 3.—[The following are extracts from the bulletin which will appear regularly in Holden Stake, issued by the presidency, bishopric, and department heads.]

Editorialettes

On July 15, the stake entered on its eighth year of history. At the time of organization there were six branches, viz., Holden, Knobnoster, Warrensburg, Post Oak, Lees Summit, and Lexington. Six have been organized—Sedalia, Grandview, Bates City, East Independence, Atherton, and Buckner, making twelve churches at the present time. New church buildings have been erected or purchased at Lexington, Grandview, and Lees Summit. Churches at Marshall, Knobnoster, and Post Oak have been dedicated. The Saints at the following places have committees at work preparatory to building—Sedalia, East Independence, West Marshall, and Atherton. The Saints at Warrensburg have purchased a lot near the college campus for a building site. Then we must not forget the purchase of the building which is now known as the Holden Home for the Aged.

What will be the story of the next seven years? May it still mark progress for the great church of Jesus Christ.

News Items

Atherton.—Six children were recently baptized, three of whom were in a family whose parents are not Saints. They have attended our Sunday school, however, ever since it was organized. Our Children's Day program was given to a full house. The Methodist Sunday school accepted our invitation by a vote of their school and dispensed with their services.

Bates City.—Brother and Sister F. E. Ford are leaving for Lamoni, where Brother Ford is to act as superintendent of schools.

Stake Bishopric

The stake bishopric sent printed blanks to "scattered members" with Bulletin No. 1, to be filled out and sent with church funds to our office. One energetic young member wrote: "I certainly am glad you sent me a blank to fill out, because I want to try to do all I can for the church . . . I have paid my tithes, but will give you a freewill offering." We trust many more young Saints will follow the splendid example of the one referred to, also all older ones.

We are proud of our growing list of names of children who are tithepayers. Of the number is a son of a missionary who made four payments in two months, ranging from five cents to fifty cents. This emphasizes the result of careful teaching of tithing in the home. From the very small earnings this boy has faithfully observed his duty. We sincerely trust all parents will be thoughtful and persistent in teaching their children this divine and helpful law of giving to the Lord's work.

Department of Recreation and Expression

During this season of the year when we are experiencing warm and sweltering weather, there seems to be a waning of interest in this department of the work. In order to keep up the attendance and interest—let us have a good intensive lesson period, then an instructive, uplifting, and entertaining program.

Department of Women

When the camping season is on, and also the extremely warm days, the housewife has not much time and energy to give to outside work.

In the Holden group both morning and evening services on Sunday, July 29, were given over to the Women's Department.

Since the cradle roll was organized, there have been one hundred seventy-two babies enrolled.

The Holdea Aid Society has one hundred forty-two members enrolled.

Summer Activities at Lamoni Close

Opening at Graceland Brings New Problems

LAMONI, IOWA, September 5.—A pie supper was held in Central Park by the Orioles for the purpose of securing funds for the prosecution of their work. There were pies and girls galore, but only a few boys with an equally small amount of change developed. However a few loyal ones came and enjoyed a good program and games, and most of the pies were disposed of at a profit, which netted around five dollars. The affair was carefully chaperoned by monitors and others.

The community pictures, the last of which was held Tuesday, September 11, have proved a greater success this year than ever, Central Park being taxed to its limit at each session. A series of twelve pictures was shown. Good, wholesome pictures, carefully censored, were screened. The project was sponsored by the Commercial Club and the Ladies' Booster Club, and financed by personal subscription.

With the coming of the college students, the necessity of dividing the Sunday school again becomes apparent. During the summer the entire school has been housed at the church. The division this year will be somewhat different from last year. Instead of caring for the adolescents and seniors at the high school building, as was done last year, they will meet with the adults at the church, and the primaries, juniors, and intermediates will meet at the school building.

It is hoped that this will overcome several difficulties encountered under the other arrangement. Firstly, it will give the seniors an opportunity to attend the 11 o'clock service at the church which they were compelled to miss when meeting the other way. Secondly, the choir is being reorganized and will furnish music at each session. When the young people were held at the other building during the entire Sunday school hour, this was impossible. The primaries were terribly crowded in their allotted portion of the church, and this will be avoided by the change.

Elder D. T. Williams addressed the people of Lamoni, September 2. Having just returned from his mission to the British Isles, naturally his talk was concerning conditions there. He visions, as no one can who has not been in close contact with these peoples, the awful conditions industrially, socially, and spiritually. These were discussed in the light of the attitude which the church should occupy toward these peoples. There is no use to offer them theory, he said, because they demand something tangible, something which has been tried out and found successful. The economic system advanced by the church is a panacea, but the church must put it into operation before they can hope to accomplish anything among other peoples.

Lonzo Jones, who was at the head of the religious education class of Graceland last year, has been home for a couple of weeks from Iowa City. He returned this week with his family and will spend at least two years at the university according to present plans when he hopes to complete work for a doctor's degree. He has accepted an assistantship and will do personal work among the students while doing regular work. At this he is not a novice, having secured experience while acting as dean of men at Graceland.

There is no need for dormitory students to go hungry this winter, judging from the amount of fruit and vegetables put up at the cannery this summer. This work has been in charge of Clark Hursh, of Independence, and the work done mostly by the boys of the college. This gave Mr. Bullard, superintendent, more time to devote to the different building projects under way during the summer. The canned goods enumerated are as follows: string beans 54 gallons, peas 29 gallons, corn 223 quarts and 267 pints, tomatoes 189 gallons and 197 quarts, apples 478 gallons, apple butter 3½ gallons, grape jelly 14½ gallons, sweet pickles 40 gallons, salt pickles 60 gallons, rhubarb 12 gallons.

Lamoni to Have New Railway Station

Lamoni is very enthusiastic over the prospects of a new railway station. Work has actually begun, and everyone is breathing easy now. For at least twenty years citizens have been trying to persuade the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company that the old station, which has served the town for forty years, was not adequate to our needs and they have at last fully succeeded, for the new depot is to be one of the finest in this section of Iowa. So visitors at the Young People's Convention next June will meet a much more pleasing scene on entering Lamoni than last year. The old station and surroundings have been an eyesore for many years and one of the greatest drawbacks to the progress of the town.

The new station will be 24 by 60 feet, of pressed brick and stucco construction, with stone trimmings and a green asbestos shingle roof, which will make it very attractive and durable. The interior will be modern and commodious in every respect. Brick pavement will surround the building. The old building has been moved back and will be remodeled into a freight depot.

Lamoni has almost finished eighteen blocks of brick pavement, and more is under construction, so the town is going forward commercially. Tourists are loud in their praise of its cleanly and progressive appearance, all of which is conducive to the good of the people.

Graceland College has been the busiest place around here this summer. The management has employed a force of between fifteen and twenty students during the summer vacation. Part of them have worked on the excavation for the new gymnasium and convention hall, some on the new modern cottage being erected at the College Farm, others remodeling Herald Hall, and still others at the cannery and farm garden. This is a good start toward the self-help department to be inaugurated this fall. The farm cottage is nearing completion, the plastering being in progress this week. Excavation for the gymnasium is about completed and sewer connections are being made.

College opened September 10 with splendid prospects. Herman Hale Smith, former student, now secretary to Governor Sweet, of Colorado, delivered the opening address. A number of junior graduates who have been teaching have returned for the senior work which has just been added. The new agricultural course is a much-talked-of addition attracting wide attention. Graceland is in the front ranks of colleges of her size in the recognition of this branch of industry educationally.

Elder Charles Harpe has been very sick in his mission field in Kansas. He is now thought to be out of danger and will be home for a rest soon.

The Sunday evening preaching services in the church park are well attended. Special music is provided at each meeting.

Wilbur Long, son of Elder E. E. Long, one of the editors of Scout Chum, a Lone Scout monthly, and his companion, Fisher Carlile, hiked to Chicago to attend the National Scout meeting there last week. They made the distance of approximately four hundred miles in three days, only being obliged to walk about fifteen or twenty miles of the whole distance. They were very fortunate in securing rides and are enjoying the "windy city." They expect to try to locate work.

Denver Appreciates Apostle's Visit

DENVER, COLORADO, September 4.—Denver, the Gateway to the Rockies and the Golden West, is quietly going "about its Father's business," in spite of the fact that little is heard of its activities through the HERALD.

Many of the members of the branch have just returned from the reunion at Colorado Springs. All seem to realize that this was one of the best reunions the district has ever held. One visitor said he would not have missed Apostle J. A. Gillen's sermon on the first Monday for fifty dollars. It was a soul-stirring appeal to the Saints to occupy worthily in the gospel service to which they had been called.

Apostle Gillen passed through Denver last Wednesday on his way to other parts of the field, and the branch was privileged to hear him preach the gospel of faith in Jesus the Christ. We hope he will come again soon.

At the young people's meetings on Wednesday evenings special lectures are being given on the Book of Mormon. The book itself is being studied, chapter by chapter, and fresh evidences of its divine origin are brought to light.

The work is onward in Denver; peace and harmony prevail, and the Saints are striving faithfully toward the ideals of Zion.

Educational Conference at Niagara Falls

New York District Holds Meetings August 31 to September 2

NIAGARA FALLS, September 3.—This has been an educational conference in the highest sense of the word, both intellectually and spiritually, which after all are but different manifestations of God working through various agencies to bring to pass his purposes.

All of the various departments of church work were well and ably represented, and there were also some very pleasing contributions to our program from our Lamanite brethren. Both at the Friday evening service held under the auspices of the Department of Recreation and Expression and at the church service on Sunday afternoon we were privileged to witness some striking evidence of the fulfillment of the prediction that the Lamanites would become a delightful people. Some of that race at least are working zealously to that end.

The program of the Department of Recreation and Expression was confined almost entirely to music, some excellent selections being given, among them being a piano solo by Mr. Willard, a Lamanite living at Niagara Falls, and a vocal solo by his wife, both accomplished musicians.

This not being a business conference, the only business transacted was the selection of delegates to General Conference and provision made for the disposition of money taken up at collections during conference, which was authorized to be given to the missionaries present. Elders Arthur Allen, C. A. Spillsbury, J. F. Rudd, and A. E. Stone were chosen delegates to General Conference and were given the usual instructions regarding voting.

Elder F. G. Pitt, substituting for Apostle Gleazer, opened the church part of the educational program with a very timely talk on the important subject: "Who will abide the day of his coming?" applying it especially to the inhabitants of Zion, the pure in heart.

The Sunday school and Department of Women gave a very interesting program Saturday evening under the direction of Superintendent M. E. Whitehead and Superintendent Clara E. Bradt, consisting of music, talks, reports, etc., by able workers in these departments, all of which impressed upon those present the importance of the auxiliaries in building up Zion. Miss Elsie Elms, a Lamanite, sang very beautifully, "Open the gates," and Mrs. Blanche Allen Needham, gave two of her favorite songs in her characteristic and pleasing manner.

The peace and harmony that prevailed throughout conference reached its climax at the sacrament, prayer and testimony meeting held at nine o'clock Sunday morning, which was preceded by an excellent preparatory priesthood service, which was well attended. At this meeting Elder Stone gave some very fundamental suggestions as to the dignity of those called to represent the great God of the universe, and also specifically as to their calling. The priesthood being called to teach and not to be taught, those holding these sacred offices must therefore have something definite and authoritative to teach—they could not give something they did not possess.

At all three preaching services the Spirit of the Master was present and all rejoiced in the bountiful repasts consisting principally of the bread of life. All were edified. But one of the most interesting phases of the entire conference was the subject of the address Sunday afternoon by the very talented speaker, Miss Elsie Elms, who took as her theme, "The American in reality." With her wonderful eloquence she alternately moved her audience to tears and determination to help her race out of their present position of Government wards to places of citizenship and individual responsibility where alone development is possible. This woman is now reading with great interest the Book of Mormon and when she started to speak from the pulpit she asked that she might be allowed to speak from the floor, as she felt that she was standing upon holy ground.

Many other very interesting features were enjoyed at this conference which it would be impossible to give in detail, but when we report that we were all edified we want you to understand just what that means in the full sense of the word. And throughout the conference it was strongly urged that with these great blessings would come additional responsibility. Our new district president, Elder Arthur Allen, has been very active during the short time he has been with us and reported that one new branch and a mission had been organized, the branch at Syracuse and the mission at Rochester, both near the cradle of our faith.

Community Chorus Organized at Holden

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, September 11.—A community sing, held at the auditorium, Tuesday night, September 11 at 8 o'clock, was a great success, according to the numbers present and the enthusiasm shown.

Under the direction of Brother James R. Houghton, the townspeople gathered to enjoy a community song fest. The program opened with the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner." An address by Mayor E. James on "Music and its relation to community life" was then given. Two more songs were sung, and then the Reverend J. C. Needles, head of the Ministerial Alliance, spoke on "Music, the spiritual purifier of life." The program continued with community singing and a solo by Brother Houghton, followed by a short address by Mrs. E. James, head of the Commercial Civic Club, on "Music and its relation to the home." The program closed with a talk on "Music as an important factor in war and peace," by Mr. C. W. Watkins, head of the American Legion, and then "America" was sung.

The purpose of the gathering was to organize a community chorus. This is an activity that is becoming popular in many towns and cities, and Holden is not to be behind other live communities in its musical expression.

Independence

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 10.—The conference choir, now known as Zion Pilgrims Chorus, will make a concert tour of three branches on Sunday, September 16. The chorus of one hundred voices will leave Independence by automobile in the morning, and go first to Holden for one hour of sacred music at 11 a. m. The concert will be held in the town auditorium. At 2.30 p. m. the chorus will repeat the concert at Warrensburg in the Market Street Methodist Episcopal church building. In the evening at 8.15 the third concert of the day will be given at Lees Summit. The concerts offer not only a splendid privilege to the membership of the three branches where the concerts will be given, but also to the membership in the near-by towns. The Zion Pilgrims Chorus has been rehearsing all summer, and has given many public concerts in Independence under the direction of James R. Houghton. This has been in preparation for work during the General Conference, and the chorus at this time is well trained and nearly ready for its conference concerts.

Next week's program on the Campus will be: L. D. S. Band concert at 8 p. m. and feature picture, Douglas McLean in "The Hottentot," September 15. Sunday night services will consist of a sacred concert by the L. D. S. Band and preaching at 8 o'clock by President Elbert A. Smith.

A series of evangelical services beginning September 23 and running daily until the opening of conference has been arranged. The preconference speakers have been assigned to the various churches as follows: Stone Church, Apostle John W. Rushton; Walnut Park, Apostle T. W. Williams; Liberty Street, Apostle D. T. Williams; Enoch Hill, Apostle Roy S. Budd; Englewood, Apostle James A. Gillen; Second Independence, Apostle Paul M. Hanson; Spring Branch, Apostle J. F. Curtis; Central Kansas City, Apostle E. J. Gleazer; Grandview, Kansas City, Kansas, Apostle C. F. Ellis; Malvern Hill, Kansas City, Kansas, Apostle M. A. McConley.

The pageant written by Mrs. S. A. Burgess will be presented on the Campus, September 21, by the Independence Dramatic Club. A cast of about three hundred persons will be used in the production. Elaborate costumes and stage effects have been worked out and the leads are being taken by experienced club members. The pageant will be presented again during conference.

With the opening of Graceland College on September 10, and other colleges and universities in the near-by States, the young folks of Independence are rapidly decreasing in numbers. Having returned from summer vacations several weeks ago the activities of the young folks increased, but now a sudden slump can be expected.

The Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences will open September 18 for the fall semester. Registration in all departments will take place on Monday, the 17th, and classes will begin on Tuesday. A larger enrollment than ever is expected.

Sunday morning services at 11 o'clock at the various churches in Zion on September 9 were as follows: Preaching at Stone Church by Bishop B. R. McGuire; Liberty Street, Apostle Roy S. Budd; Second Independence, Elder T. C. Kelley; Walnut Park, Patriarch F. A. Smith; Enoch Hill, Elder W. T. Brewer. Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the speaker on the radio at 6 p. m.

The choir at the Stone Church sang "The prayer of thanksgiving," a Netherland folk song supposed to have been written one thousand years ago. James R. Houghton sang, "The Lord is my light," by Allitsen.

The music appreciation course is being continued in the Department of Recreation and Expression at the Stone Church. The chief soloist for the program on September 14 will be Miss Katherine Raw.

Apostle M. A. McConley and family sailed from Honolulu on September 5 and were expected in San Francisco on Monday, the 11th. It is thought they will be in Independence by September 15.

Alliance Branch Entertains Canton Saints

ALLIANCE, OHIO, September 3.—On Sunday, August 12, while singing our opening song two strangers came in, but by the hearty manner in which they joined in with the singing, we felt they were not strangers to the faith. They proved to be Brother and Sister Dooley, of Mulberry, Kansas, who were visiting their son here. Brother Dooley was the speaker in the evening. We enjoy such surprises, and hope any Saints journeying this way will remember to call at 70

Rules of Order

The convening of our General Conferences always emphasizes the need for a general understanding of parliamentary rules. The most obscure delegate or ex officio is often called upon to vote in deciding some parliamentary proposition that is of itself important, and which leads to other issues of even more importance.

Personal and general misunderstandings are often avoidable if there is a general understanding of the rules by which deliberative assemblies are to be conducted.

The church used the new book of rules at General Conference last year. It will be used again this year. All who attend and those who follow the proceedings at long distance, should have a copy of the book for close study.

Workers in local and district work should have copies. It is a worth-while achievement to be conversant with proper usage so all may have their rights conserved and the best type of legislation be enacted in all cases.

The new arrangement of the book is considered by many as far superior to the old Book of Rules, and there are several changes in procedure which make it imperative that the book be studied so there will prevail confidence and efficiency instead of confusion and distrust.

Railroad Rates to Conference

As announced in the HERALD of August 22, page 796, special rates have been arranged of one and one half one-way fares for the round trip on the certificate plan. Delegates, except from the Pacific Coast, (see full explanation, page 796, SAINTS' HERALD, August 22) should buy a one-way ticket, being sure to get a certificate or receipt for the fare paid, and turn in to me immediately upon arrival.

Canadian Delegates

This arrangement has been approved from Eastern Canada as well as from all points in the United States, and we expect approval from Western Canadian lines.

Special Cars from Chicago, via Chicago and Alton Railroad

We will arrange for a special chair car on the Chicago and Alton train leaving Chicago Sunday evening, September 30, at 6 p. m., arriving in Independence about 7.15 a. m. Monday, October 1. A special tourist sleeper will also be provided on this train if there is enough demand. Double lower berths in this sleeper large enough for two persons would cost $2.25 from Chicago to Independence. Upper berths, $1.80.

It is hoped that all of those coming from or via Chicago will have their tickets routed via the Chicago and Alton Railroad from Chicago to Independence and avail themselves of this special service.

If you will come via this route and wish a tourist sleeper berth from Chicago, please let me hear from you at once.

East Grant Street and test our welcome. Our pastor's home is at 737 South McKinley Avenue.

We had no services Sunday, August 19, because so many of our members were attending the Kirtland reunion. Our pastor and family, Brother Alba Smith and family, Brother Gordon and family, and Brother and Sister Saunders attended as well as Brother Arthur Gordon who was home from the navy on a furlough. All had a splendid time, and thought it the best they had ever seen.

On Labor Day the Canton Saints were the guests of the Alliance Saints at a basket dinner given at Lake Park. Singing, games, boating, and bathing were enjoyed, although we need not have gone in bathing to get wet. Just as the tables were set and all were being seated it began to rain. All grabbed a handful and scampered for shelter, where tables were once more prepared. Following the dinner it was decided to hold our picnic jointly, semiannually. There were fifty-four present.

Saturday, September 1, one was added to our number by baptism, Sister Gertrude Thomas. She with her family of five children are regular attendants at our Sunday school. Her husband was killed one year ago in a mine accident.

The Social Significance of the Principles of the Gospel

I. Faith

It has become more clearly apparent that we need trained men in our ministerial force, and we should be alert to the fact that while experience in actual work furnishes the best of training, this training should be but the finishing touches of previous or preparatory training. This preparation can best be accomplished with the aims of ministerial work clearly in view, and a scrutiny of the work of the ministry in the past will at least indicate the tendency. To "preach, teach, exhort" and "invite all to come to Christ," as the instruction on the duties of the priesthood puts it, has gradually developed into the slogan, "preach the gospel in all the world," and primary and almost all emphasis has been placed upon efforts at conversion, and baptisms has been the criterion of success largely. Individual righteousness has been urged as an escape from punishment.

Of course the efforts of the ministry have not ceased there, but we can fairly urge that personal salvation as a fruitage of the gospel principles has had too large emphasis in relation to some others of the fruits of the Spirit. One's own salvation must be envisaged, if the true Christian spirit is present, in relation to that of "The other fellow," for Christ preached other than a self-serving religion. In the past work of the ministry, the social application of our message has had too little place.

Another way of saying what we have just said (the repetition for the sake of emphasis) is that the "principles of the gospel" have been presented in their eschatological aspects, and our message given as a means of escaping hell and gaining heaven, "faith," "repentance," "baptism," and "laying on of hands," being the factors in securing escape from hell and admittance to heaven, while "resurrection from the dead" is rising for the "judgment" which shall determine our advent into "eternal bliss" or consignment to "everlasting punishment."

Not for a moment should the importance of the eschatological bearings of the principles be disparaged, but certainly "individual righteousness" as a factor in salvation should be Christianized by being given its fraternal coefficient. Of this we are certain, our knowledge of what lies beyond the grave is slight compared with the sum total of our experiences here, and if we are to obey the admonition to "preach" and "teach" in our efforts to "go on unto perfection" the aim of our church must be translated into terms of social interrelation and justice.

From this viewpoint faith is more than mere belief in certain theological dogmas, it is even more than belief in the existence of God; it is belief in man also, and man as our brother. It is even more than belief in God and man; for as the power to remove mountains it is the inborn potential possessed by each to become what he should be as one of God's creatures associated with others—a social dynamic, an active power, and it is a basic principle in our social redemption as well as our individual salvation. Such faith is essential for us if Zion is to be. Faith thus seen is our individual portion of the creative power of God. "You have within you the power to accomplish much good," etc., and "he who waiteth to be commanded in all things is a slothful servant." "Faith in God" and our brother as the fellow creature of God is the power which will redeem Zion.

Faith, then, must be preached by the ministry who would make converts, and also by those who would have the Saints "go on unto perfection."

II. Repentance

To present repentance as merely that which leads to water baptism is to take a short view of this principle. It is of prime importance when seen as godly sorrow for a sinful attitude and a turning to God; but as a principle its functioning is continuous and ever present so long as there remains a tendency towards error. It is more than a mere turning point in one's life, a single instance of "feeling after God."

With progress there is continuous need for re-adaptation. Social life is constantly becoming more complex, and this growing complexity demands the power to adjust; for unless adjustment is continuous the individual becomes a misfit. To become a misfit means to fall into error. To become aware of the error is the first step towards adjustment; but even awareness of maladjustment will not rectify the wrong unless there is desire to do so; and even desire to reform is inadequate, for there must be the power so to do.

Consciousness of maladjustment, plus desire to reform, plus the power to do so is the equation of social adjustment. It is God-given, and best developed by religion.

We should, then, preach repentance as a first step in synchronizing with God's plan of human progress—as a prime factor in conversion; but we should also present it as the principle of continuous adjustment to life's complexities.

Zion is impossible without the principle of adjustment and readjustment being active; for in advancing towards Zion conditions in the ideal, complexity will increase, and the willingness to repent must be a prominent characteristic of the workers for Zion.

Faith is the principle of urge, and repentance is the principle of adaptation. They must never be absent in the activities of a people working towards a better social order.

III. Baptism

The place in our theology occupied by the principle of baptism is generally well understood, and yet here again we may have failed to stress certain aspects, thus at least relatively overstressing others. The defense of water baptism as an essential to salvation has been well made, and as a "covenant with God" it seems to be generally comprehended; but not enough importance is attached to the renaissance without which the kingdom of God cannot be seen.

Socially both baptisms have deep import and significance, and we should not fail to present these aspects especially in their bearing upon the processes through which perfection is to be reached. Water baptism is not alone a "covenant with God" but is an initiatory rite to the fraternity of the Saints, and as such has significance as the contract by which the candidate binds himself to the work of the fraternity—the dedication to its cause.

Of even greater social import than water baptism is the baptism of the Spirit; for without it the kingdom of God cannot even be seen, to say nothing about establishing citizenship therein. Our eyes once opened, vision cleared, then begins the task of earning our citizenship. The rebirth so vital to our "salvation," the renaissance which reveals to us the kingdom of God, we may well hold to be the development of the social consciousness which reveals to us our brother and the identity of his interests and our own. Water baptism as the sign of the contract should be followed in the soul expansion of the individual by the birth of the Spirit—a larger and dynamic social consciousness. The covenant made, the vision cleared by the rebirth, the kingdom glimpsed, the right of citizenship certified, the identity with the fraternity established, then begins the task of working out our salvation with our brother and God. In "going on to perfection," Saints, how vital socially is the renaissance through baptism. The beauty of Zion will come only through this rebirth.

IV. Laying on of Hands

Theologically, the laying on of hands means to us the rite through which is bestowed the gift of the Holy Ghost, the priestly authority, or the blessings of the Spirit; and as such we have presented and defended this principle. It is well to have so done, and continue to do; but we might well also emphasize the idea that while baptism marks the initiation into the fraternity of the church, and is the covenant of the initiate with God and the fraternity, the laying on of hands becomes the seal of the contract, the witness on the part of the society that there is mutual agreement to labor jointly for the promotion of the interests of the fraternity—the seal of the covenant.

There is, of course, much in the realm of mysticism unknown to us which ought not to be repudiated just because we fail in comprehension. As those who adhere to the idea of divine authority in the church, we can well believe that the laying on of hands as commanded of God for the rite of initiation and contract, the conveying of authority, etc., has biological import and purposiveness which augment the social significance of this principle.

V. Resurrection From the Dead

Here the eschatological nature of the principle has had with us chief and we might even say sole emphasis. And we would not have the principles do other than remove the fear of death. The great joy of the gospel in dispelling this the greatest of fears has perhaps been responsible for losing sight of other applications of this principle.

But resurrection from the dead as a principle has continuous application here. The rebirth of the water and the Spirit is a rising to new life, to new conditions, and when we put off the old and put on the new in Christ it is a resurrection from dead works. Let the dead bury the dead—for we have arisen to the new life whose goal is ideal social conditions here.

VI. Eternal Judgment

The goal of individual righteousness as developed from the eschatological viewpoint is successfully to pass scrutiny before the great bar of judgment as a pass into eternal bliss. And it is well that always there is with us this great and attractive incentive for righteous conduct.

Righteous judgment is divine, therefore God's. And such judgment whether now or hereafter is eternal. The judgment by society upon the life and work of one of its individuals, when righteous, is of God and might well be considered as one of the coefficients in the final equation which will express our location in the realm of eternal glory, or the curve of our progress towards perfection.

People look either backward or forward to a "golden time." To believe in eternal bliss beyond the grave is putting that golden time far away. It well serves its purpose in God's plan to be worked out by the principles of the gospel. But our "golden time" might begin here, and extend beyond. To look forward to ideal conditions here is not out of consonance with the idea of future celestial judgment inducting us into celestial glory. But righteous judgment exercised by potential sons of God in time leading surely towards ideal social conditions here will spread out our "golden time" to which we look forward so that we can at last enter into the edge of it here.

Leaving not the principles of the gospel, let us go on unto perfection.

From the Log of the Four Ninety

PART EIGHT

Leaving the Deer Park reunion we returned to Onset for a brief stay of two days. This gave us opportunity for one more visit with Onset Saints; also for one more visit to the hospitable Hoxie cottage on the beach at East Sandwich. Then the Chevrolet Four Ninety was taken from dry dock and we renewed our cruise, this time toward the Maine reunion.

Being delayed on the road we camped for the noon meal before reaching Boston. Our camp was made in a wood some little distance from the highway, by the side of a small brook. Following the rocky course of this brook to a little waterfall, we discovered a tremendously large boulder in the top of which were two circular pits, perhaps two feet across and nearly as deep, worn perfectly smooth and standing partly filled with water. No doubt Indians of long ago generations made this their place for grinding corn. Many years of patient grinding were required at this primitive mill to make such indentations in solid granite. Two (or more) were grinding at a mill and all were taken. Here dusky women toiled, children played and shouted, and warriors lounged after the strain and

General Conference Arrangements

Final plans for General Conference are maturing rapidly, and we are enabled to announce the following details.

Place of Meeting

The conference sessions will be held on the Campus in Independence, and the entire property of twenty acres, together with the buildings, will be at the command of the delegates and visitors. There is a natural amphitheater on the Campus, and a tabernacle tent will be erected over a space large enough to comfortably seat three thousand people. A large platform has already been built for the rostrum and all will be in readiness for the first session Monday, October 1.

All of the business sessions, as well as most of the sermons, lectures, and programs will be held in this tabernacle tent. The preconference lectures will be given in the Stone Church, and the missionary services will be conducted in the various Latter Day Saint churches of Independence and Kansas City.

Reception Committee

The local pastor, R. V. Hopkins, and Brother Ed. C. Harrington, will be at the head of the reception committee, and all arrangements for lodgings should be taken up at once with the committee. In writing them, address Box 255, Independence, Missouri. They will have their office in the Battery Building, until October 1, and thereafter it will be on the Campus. Rooms will be provided for visiting Saints at reasonable rates.

Camping Sites

A tourists' camp is being arranged on the Campus, where those coming from a distance may park cars and erect tents free of charge. Water, light, and tourists' oven will be provided.

Cafeteria: A cafeteria will be conducted on the Campus at reasonable rates.

Credentials Committee

Brethren F. A. Russell and P. G. Fairbanks will head the credentials committee, and they urge that dangers of the chase or warpath. It must have been a delightful place for their "community center." The mill became their granite monument and memorial, bearing their own inscription deep worn. Serving them in life it speaks of them in death.

Passing through Boston we observed the famous Bunker Hill monument on our right, but had little time to visit the many historic points of the city of culture. Proceeding on our way, a part of the time over the route followed by Paul Revere, in time we came to Lexington and later to Concord.

all credential reports not yet in, be sent them at once. Their office will be in the Battery Building until October 1, and thereafter on the Campus.

Transportation Department

Final Notice to Conference Delegates: G. S. Trowbridge, Transportation Manager, says, "Do not forget to get a certificate or receipt for your railroad fare in buying your one-way tickets to Kansas City or Independence and do not forget to turn it in just as soon as you arrive in Independence so we can get the necessary 250 certificates for validation. No one can get the benefit of the one half fare rate until we have 250 certificates, and some delegates may be forced to return early and will have to pay full fare unless we have the required number.

"Special Cars via the Chicago and Alton from Chicago. Remember the special cars leaving Chicago, via the Chicago and Alton Railroad, Sunday evening September 30, at 6 p. m. If you wish a berth in the tourist sleeper at $2.25 for a double lower berth or at $1.80 for a double upper berth, let me hear from you at once as there will be no tourist sleeper on the train unless enough wish to use it to justify hauling the car."

Brother Trowbridge will be at the Herald Stand on the Campus every day at conference. Please observe his instructions regarding certificates.

Am I My Brother's Keeper?

*Sermon by Cyril E. Wight on the Campus,
Independence, Missouri, August 12, 1923.*

I have chosen to weave my lesson to-night around the theme of the picture that is later to be shown, the story of Cain and Abel. The story, I am sure, is familiar to all of you. You will remember how Cain allowed selfishness and jealousy to creep into his heart and how in a moment of anger he slew his brother Abel; and that when the Lord came to chastize him for the crime he did so by asking of Cain, "Where is Abel, thy brother?" And Cain, with that selfishness still in his heart, made the reply, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Let us consider as applying to each of us the question asked by the Lord, "Where is thy brother?"

Religion Attempts to Answer

Religion has grown out of man's attempt to answer this question. Religion is primarily social. It has to do with the needs of the human heart and particularly with the relationship between individuals. We therefore bring to you a consideration of religion rather than theology and ecclesiasticism, because we are made deeply conscious of the fact that after all the one vital test of the worthwhileness of an individual is the kind of a life he lives as he comes in contact with his fellow men. To-night, then, I am particularly interested in the religious life of the individual and not so much interested in his theological beliefs nor the ecclesiastical molds that may be formed for the conservation of the religious experiences of the race. We consider especially the religious motives that may actuate an individual to do good, that may lead him to try to answer this question which religionists of all ages have attempted to answer, "Where is thy brother?"

Too often have religionists considered this question from the spiritual standpoint only. We shall attempt now to consider it in all of its phases. We might suggest that so long as our brother is living on a physical plane below his possibilities, we have a direct responsibility concerning him. "Upon what physical plane, then," may I ask, "is your brother living?"

I do not believe we should assume a meddling attitude toward our brother—we should not pry into his private affairs; but there comes a place where the individualistic life is a failure and where it must be blended into the life of the universe if both the individual and society are to be benefited.

Not many months ago I heard it stated by one of the great educators of the day that there are to-day one hundred points of contact as compared with one a few years ago. By this he meant that to-day there are the great unifying forces such as the newspaper, the airplane, the telegraph, the automobile, and others, all of which go to bind the people of the world into a great social unit and to make our civilization more complex than that of a few years ago. We are compelled to recognize this fact, even though at times we may desire to go back to an individualistic existence. We could not do it if we would, my friends; we dare not do it, and we ought not to try.

So long, then, as your brother lives on a physical plane below that he should occupy, you have a definite responsibility concerning him. But this is only a very small part of your responsibility. With the increasing complexity of human existence, society claims a greater portion of the individual's time and talent. If, then, the social standards of your fellow men are too low, you have a definite task in helping to raise these standards. If your motives do not move you to help in this task, then they are not truly religious motives.

There is yet another phase into which our responsibility enters, and that is the economic life of man. As our social life becomes more complicated, there comes immediately an increasing complexity in our economic life. I can take you to-night to the slums of your neighboring city and point you to social conditions that are deplorable, conditions resulting largely from our irreligious economic system. I can take you across the ocean and into the land of India, proclaimed the mother of religions, and I can show you there millions upon millions of men and women who are living on such a plane that to-day many of them have been reduced to practically an animal existence. Again economic conditions are in part responsible. So long as these situations exist we have a direct religious responsibility. Let me recall to your mind again that I am talking not with regard to theology. I am not talking about the varied beliefs of men over which we may differ; but I am talking about the religious life that will carry us forward to a maximum of activity in helping to raise the economic standard of the world.

There is yet another relation that must be discussed. I refer to the spiritual life of your brother. Where is your brother to-night spiritually? Is he living upon a spiritual plane that enables him to work in harmony with the teachings of the Master of Men? Is your brother living on a plane that will enable him to rise to the heights that the Master intended all of us to reach? Perhaps some may wonder who may be included in the classification of "brother." The Master has answered.

Who Is Your Brother?

You will remember that on one occasion Christ's disciples came to him and told him that his mother and his brethren stood without, asking for him. The answer of the Master may appear to some to be harsh. He refused to recognize that his earthly kinsfolk had a special claim upon his time. His answer was, "My mother and my brethren are those who hear the word of God and do it." He had come to recognize that his mission was one that carried him away from the humble home of the carpenter and took him out among the needy people of the world. Every man, then, is potentially a brother of Christ and therefore your brother.

To sum up our responsibility toward our brother, we suggest that we have not truly answered the call of religion until we have helped to develop our brother physically, until we have helped him broaden his concepts of life, until we have struck from him the shackles of economic bondage, until we have placed in his hands the torch that lights the way to spiritual freedom.

The Vitality of Jesus' Message

The religion of Jesus Christ has never been fully understood or appreciated. Even the apostles of the Master, who went with him by the Sea of Galilee and over the hills of Judea, who many times went hungry, who saw the Master of men perform the mighty works that he alone was able to do, even they failed to appreciate the magnitude of the message that the Master delivered to the children of men. It is not strange, then, that the people who came after them should fail to appreciate fully the message that the Master has left. His was a message of inspiration first and dogma second. While he stressed fundamental doctrine, he considered this always in the light of its bearing on the individual and social needs of men. Recently an analysis of the teachings of Jesus was made by one of the young men in Graceland College, and he found that while Christ did talk with regard to doctrine a few times, he talked with regard to the life of the individual and of the group many, many times.

The Obscurantism of the Middle Ages

With the coming of the period known as the Middle Ages, there was cast over the gospel of Jesus Christ a deeper shadow, and there was taken from it the life-giving message Christ intended to convey to the hearts of mankind. As a result of this obscurantism of the medieval period, a period of time when men's hearts were turned away from God, a period of the world's history known as the Dark Ages, there were taken out of the message of Christ those vital elements which deal with the individual and social life of man, until it lost the power accompanying it when it fell from the lips of the lowly Nazarene.

Theological controversy all but put out the flame of life and made the message of Jesus a cold and hardened formula. No longer was it a divine message that could touch the hearts of men and turn them to God and toward their fellow men. Men all but ceased to think of the present and considered the future in terms of theology. They had become so interested in theological disputes as to forget that the gospel was intended to give to men inspiration, hope, and joy, to the end that they might meet the problems of the living present.

I do not wish to cast any reflection on the individual who is looking forward to the great beyond, but if the message of the Master teaches anything it is that our earthly existence is but part of a great eternity. It is not for us, then, to look forward to the future life only, but we must recognize that life began long before we had any appreciation of the things of this world and ends long after the activities of this world. If the Master taught anything at all, he taught that his message was not one of the past or the future alone, but that it was a message of the present. He impressed this lesson with the declaration, "God is not a God of the dead, but of the living."

The Present Day Message of Hope

With its power diminished and its light all but gone, it became necessary for God to give back to the world a true appreciation of the message of Jesus. So at the beginning of the nineteenth century he spoke to one who was willing to listen and told him that the creed building of the ages was an abomination in his sight. He told the young man that there must be a restatement in this age of the definite fundamental principles that had been presented to the children of men in the days of the Master. So there came a restatement of the wonderful doctrine of Christ. There came a re-recognition of the fact that if man wants to stand on the highest possible plane he may do so only through faith in God and through faith in his fellows; that if he wants to reach the heights that Jesus Christ had intended him to reach, he must repent or in other words adjust his life on the basis of the divine life. He must recognize, also, that before he could become a true follower of the Master, there must come to him the experience of baptism, or in other words, a vitalization of his life forces.

I wonder how many of us have come to know that this wonderful principle of baptism is that which will carry us forward to a dedication of our lives, to an appreciation of the fact that God desires every fiber of our beings to be actuated by a divine grace and power that shall enable us to reach heights not attainable otherwise.

There came, then, a reemphasis of the message of the Master upon the part of a people who believe that this message is paramount; who believe that to-day we are our brother's keeper and that if religion does not carry us into the workshop and the factory, then that religion should have no place in our lives.

A Test of Fellowship

There is a simple test that may help us to determine whether we believe in the principle of brotherhood as a vital part of the message of Jesus. This test was once given in the form of a question asked of a group of people who claimed to be followers of the Nazarene. I am going to ask that question of you people to-night—the same question that was put to this other group of people: "Unto what then were ye baptized?" I wonder if there has come either the principle or ordinance of baptism into your lives? I wonder how many of you have been baptized to the one end that salvation might come to you? Then listen to one of the most wonderful declarations that ever came from the lips of the Son of Man: "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it."

There is within this message of the Master the very thought that I want to make plain, that if we have gone through the waters of baptism to the end that our own souls might be saved we have entirely missed the wonderful content of the gospel. Jesus intended that we should appreciate the gospel not in terms of ourselves, but in terms of our fellow men. At what time in the life of Jesus was there ever a thought as to his own safety and comfort? His thought was always with regard to the things of his fellow men. And only as you and I shall see that through service to our fellow men are we serving God, shall we have a real appreciation of the message of Christ.

A Message of Giving

There were many even among his followers who did not appreciate the content of his message, so they rebuked the Master because on different occasions he sat at meat with the publicans and sinners and with those who were rich. On one occasion an individual who was not rich in this world's goods asked the Master to compel another to divide his inheritance with him. One of the most stinging rebukes that ever came to man was delivered by the Christ at that time. He turned to this man and said, "Who made me a judge or a divider over you?" The man had failed to appreciate the spiritual content of the Master's message. It was a message that did not touch the pocketbook first and the heart second, but the heart first and the pocketbook second. Jesus wanted this man to realize that he was allowing to come into his own soul a canker that would eat it out, lest he have a care.

Jesus did not come to the end that the man who is rich should be made to give to the man who is poor, but he came to the end that the hearts of men might be touched so that they will desire to use their possessions to the advantage of all. Furthermore, he came to the end that the man who is poor in this world's goods might fill his heart so full of the richness of God that instead of desiring that his fellow man might divide with him he would desire to go and cast his all into the treasury. This is the vital point of the message, that we come to appreciate that God is not thinking of us in terms of physical but of spiritual entities. Jesus desired that we see the spiritual process of giving, but men have seen all too often the physical process of getting.

The Need of Christ's Message Now

I stand before you to-night conscious of the fact that we are met together under situations that are ideal and peaceful. Yet we are living in a world that is torn by tumult and strife and war. These are times that try men's souls. Do you know that there are in the world to-day more possibilities of another war that there were in 1914? Over on the battle-scarred plains of Europe to-day, those who should have learned a lesson from the recent cataclysm through which the world has passed are sowing the seeds of another war. Ex-President Wilson made the statement just recently that our civilization shall soon be a thing of the past unless there shall come to the people of the world a rebaptism and a reconsecration of spiritual power.

In the business world, Roger Babson and men of his type have been lifting the warning voice for many years. During the time of economic stress through which we recently passed and from which we have not yet fully recovered, Mr. Babson made the statement that the one thing most needed in business is that it shall be actuated by the spirit of the living God.

Some months ago while in Flint, Michigan, it was my privilege to meet a Mr. Clifford, personal representative of Mr. W. C. Durant, the automobile manufacturer. He told me something of the idealism of Mr. Durant, how he had attempted to establish among his employees working conditions that would be on the basis of the gospel of Christ. On a certain occasion they were out for a ride. Suddenly Mr. Durant turned to him and said, "My God, Clifford, what we need to-day above everything else is that the people of this world shall have an appreciation of the message of the Master."

Let it come as a challenge to you to-night that while we are met under ideal conditions, the world is torn by tumult and strife and war and has need of the message that we may carry to it. Many of you have received the message of life, but if you have come into conscious relationship with Almighty God with the intent that you might be able to receive thereby, in the name of God let me plead with you to realize that this is the most selfish and lowest spiritual plane upon which you can exist. If you have taken upon you the name of Christ, you have not received of his vital message in the fullest measure until you are imbued with the spirit of service and with the earnest desire to carry the message to your fellow men.

Jesus is called the Christ, which means Savior. Jesus came to save mankind. He came to relieve men of the terrible physical distresses of life. But of infinitely greater worth, he gave a message that would strike fire into their hearts, a fire that should grow until their souls were aflame with righteous purposes. And Jesus intended that when he had struck this fire into the souls of his own disciples, they, too, should go out and strike that same fire into the souls of others.

My dear friends, I beg of you to allow the message of Jesus Christ, not the ecclesiastical message alone, but that vital, throbbing message that shall touch the hearts of humanity, to come into your lives to the end that you shall be moved from the comfortable places you occupy and that you shall never rest until you have answered the challenge that Christ threw down to the sin-cursed world. To this cause have thousands dedicated their lives. I appeal to you that you dedicate your lives to the unfinished task that Jesus has left for us, to the end that the hearts of humanity might be touched and turned to this wonderful message of life, that the world might be saved.

Toward the close of his ministry, Jesus went up into the mountain overlooking his beloved city of Jerusalem. Realizing that these people, busy with their daily tasks, had failed to recognize the way of true life, he cried aloud: "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace!"

You are your brother's keeper. Where is your brother to-night? If you would learn the way of life and become responsible for the life of your brother, you can discharge that responsibility only by teaching him through word and example the things which, in this his day, belong unto his peace.

Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy

By James R. Houghton

The romantic period or age of music found Felix Mendelssohn as one of its important contributors. In him we find one of the greatest composers since the days of the intellectual and classical Bach. In many respects Mendelssohn was a Bach reincarnated in the spirit and atmosphere of the great period of Romanticism. In fact, he has been aptly called a "Romanticist with a classical equipment." If any evaluation be necessary to prove the superiority of one genius over the other, let it be known that Bach was the greater by far. Mendelssohn only represents the foothills of musical achievement while the great genius Bach represents the mountain beyond. But in his day Mendelssohn stands for practically the same importance as Bach did in his time.

Granted, then, that Bach is the greater of the two, we must pay due respect to Mendelssohn for having "restored the lost art of counterpoint" and of reclaiming classic forms in a day when romanticism was actually causing composers like Schumann and Weber to tread on foreign soil. This service alone is of tremendous value, and in itself would justify the placing of Mendelssohn in a class with many of the greatest composers. In addition, however, he "restored Bach to a world that had forgotten him for over a hundred years. This service alone was an immortality."

The virtues of this great man are summed up by the American translator of his Life, Lampadius:

The son and heir of a rich Berlin banker, he always wrought as a poor man's son, and never indulged himself in ease or sloth, as he might have done; tempted to write down to the masses, to win popularity, rather than write to the few, to set a high standard and leave good work behind him, he always did the latter; flattered beyond any man of his age, not only in Germany but in England, he never lost his head for a moment, and remained one of the most unaffected of men; living in loose capitals and surrounded by unprincipled people, he was true to all moral obligations, and perfect in all relations of son, brother, lover, husband, and father; surrounded by intrigues, he stood above them all, and was frank, transparent, honorable, noble; tempted by his sunny, enthusiastic, alert nature, to do simply bright and genial things in music, he was thorough, studious, earnest, religious, and steadfastly consecrated to the highest and the best.

This splendid eulogy typifies the wonderful and blameless musician that Mendelssohn was.

Son of Wealthy Parents

This great genius was the son of an orthodox Jew, a wealthy banker by profession. "His grandfather was the famous Moses Mendelssohn (d. 1786), the philosopher, Jewish historian, and Biblical student." He started out in life as a poor peddler boy on the streets of Berlin. "He was so poor that he was in the habit of marking his miserable loaf of bread into rations by means of a string, so that it might last as many days as possible. He was a deep thinker and methodical student. Despite the hard conditions under which he labored he studied hard, learning all that he could about philosophy, science, and art. Later he secured a position as a tutor with a rich family and eventually married a wealthy Jewess." He wrote a dialogue on the immortality of the soul that was translated into a dozen languages and gave him the title of the "modern Plato."

Abraham, the father of Felix, was the second son of Moses Mendelssohn. He was a man of cultivated tastes and refinement, interested in the higher values of life. He received most of his business training in Paris, and upon returning home to Hamburg organized a bank in partnership with his brother. He married an accomplished lady, Lea Salamon.

Their second child, Felix (meaning happiness) was born November 3, 1809.

"It has been said that Titania, Queen of the Fairies, flew on that day over the prosaic city of Hamburg and kissed the child on his forehead as he slept, endowing him with all the graces."

In his youth he was surrounded with all of the necessary comforts and necessities of life. His parents were deeply interested in his education and gave to him the finest tutors and surrounded him with the finest influences possible. In addition to this wonderful parental interest he also cultivated the friendship and interest of Weber, Goethe, and Herder. From his mother he received his first lessons in music as well as instruction in several languages. He later spoke five different languages fluently.

His Early Education

At the age of seven he was taken to Berlin where he studied piano under Madame Bigot. At Berlin he studied drawing under Rosel; violin under Henning; Berger on the piano; counterpoint from "the old bear" Zelter. He was taken to Paris for advice from the great Cherubini who pronounced him a genius.

At the age of ten he made his first appearance as a pianist and was much applauded by his enthusiastic audience. About this time he commenced to do a little composing, and during the next four years composed some forty-four pieces which are now kept in the Berlin library. These early compositions were quite simple in technique and style. Nevertheless, as he grew older his style matured.

At the age of fifteen he had grown to be a tall, slender lad with short hair and an illuminating countenance. He was mischievous and always playing jokes. In fact, he was called "the king of games and romps." This characteristic is very marked in his music which is always quite gay in nature.

About this time he was presented with Bach's "Passion Music." This great "Passion according to Saint Matthew," had been unknown to the world since the date of its composition, over one hundred years prior to that time. Mendelssohn received it and made a deep study of it. It had a great influence upon his development, and at a late date he was instrumental in having it produced for the first time since the composer's death.

At the age of fifteen he produced his first symphony in C Minor. Two years later he appeared with the famous overture to "A midsummer night's dream," inspired by a reading of Shakespeare's drama by the same name. This composition is in itself a gem and would have made him famous and even immortal. It is in itself a perfect and well-balanced composition.

During the same year he entered the Berlin University. It is not known what courses he pursued, but ten years later the University of Leipzig conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Philosophy and B. A. M.

Produces Passion Music

About this time he began rehearsals on the "Passion according to Saint Matthew," by Bach. The work was performed for the first time since the death of the composer on March 11, 1829. A vivid account is given by Nathan Dale:

The apathy of the people which Mendelssohn had so much dreaded, was stirred to enthusiasm. Every ticket was taken, and hundreds were turned away. The success was complete in every respect. This was the beginning of the Bach revival. Mendelssohn remarked one day to Desirient, one of the soloists, with some glee, "It is a Jew and an actor who have restored to the people this great Christian work."

It is supposed by many critics that this great oratorio or Passion inspired the production of the oratorio "Saint Paul" which will be discussed in a subsequent article. In fact, there are many striking characteristics of sameness in both. These points will be duly noted in another article. We shall continue the story of his life, interweaving the story of the oratorio with it, in our next article, deriving our material from the personal letters of the composer written during this period. The oratorio "Saint Paul" will be given at the coming General Conference.

"Do not put off until to-morrow what you can do to-day" applied to religion should read, "Do not put off until the millenium what you should do now."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Launch Helium Airship

The United States navy has just launched its newest achievement in aeronautics—the giant helium airship Z R-1.

The use of helium as the lifting power for the big dirigible is something new, and its possibilities are yet to be firmly established. The wife of Secretary Edwin Denby christened the new ship when it was launched upon its first flight. Every precaution has been taken to insure the maximum of safety and efficiency.

No lighter-than-air craft has yet attained the speed equal to an airplane, but this ship will be able to make seventy-five miles an hour, which is faster than any previous record for this type of ship in the United States service.

A description of the ship is given by Admiral Moffett quoted in the Literary Digest:

"The Z R-1 is 680 feet long, 79 feet high, and has twenty gas cells with a total capacity of 2,115,000 cubic feet of gas, and a gross lifting power, with helium, of 120,000 pounds. The cruising range is 4,000 miles. Its six 300-horse-power engines can drive it at a maximum speed of 75 miles an hour or 65 miles an hour cruising speed. These six engines are located in six power cars, four of which are located amidship; two on each side of the car. One is in the midline aft, and one is located in the control car in the forward part of the ship.

"In this control car are located the rudder control and other instruments used in navigating the ship, while a telephone system connects it with the other cars and parts of the ship.

"The mess, bunks, and living quarters of the crew of thirty men are located on a platform laid on the keel and inside the duralumin metal frame which gives rigidity to the ship. The gasoline storage tanks are also located along the walkway, which runs for 600 feet along the keel.

"There are two observation platforms on top of the ship, access to which is had by means of ladders and hatchways running up through the center of the ship. In the bow is a mooring device with cable by which the giant dirigible can be moored to a mast.

"The framework is of duralumin metal, the twenty cells for the lifting gas are made of gold-beaters' skin, while the outer envelope of the airship is made of cotton fabric doped with a special preparation to resist weathering.

"The hangar which now houses the Z R-1 at Lakehurst is so large that the United States Capitol could be placed entirely inside, with the exception of eighty feet of the dome, which would project above the roof."

Typhoid Victims Sue City

We read of an epidemic of typhoid fever in Pittsburg, California, where, during the month of June one hundred fifty cases were reported.

The cause was purely negligence on the part of town officials who allowed water of the Sacramento River to be pumped into the water supply of the city without proper precautions being taken to purify it. Investigation showed that due to a lack of liquid chlorin, the proper treatment of the water was not made.

A suit against the city brought by eighteen of the typhoid victims was won, the damages awarded being $32,821.

An editorial in The Canadian Engineer, quoted in the Literary Digest says:

"There will undoubtedly be an increasing number of successful damage suits of this nature against municipal officials and water companies. In cases where the supply is commonly known to be of a dangerous or potentially dangerous character, and where the danger has been called to official attention, it would seem that not only civil suits but even suits for criminal negligence would be well founded. Surely the official who knowingly permits a questionable water supply to be served to a community, without having taken every possible step to remove danger of death from typhoid, is just as criminal in his negligence as is the reckless motor driver who is jailed for manslaughter."

New Party Rises in Mexico

The assassination of Villa and the recognition of Mexico by the United States seem to form the basis for a new party in Mexico.

President Obregon is accredited with personal responsibility for the prosperity of Villa, so the assassins of this "bad man" are publicly boasting the deed and demanding political honor. The Outlook continues:

"At all events, a new party has appeared in Mexico under the name of the National Revolutionary Union. It announces its tendencies to be progressive. Its chief claim to popularity is the old slogan of 'Mexican land for Mexican workers,' and a protest against too friendly relations between Mexico and the United States. In other words, the new party is a combination of the ideas of the farm bloc and anti-capitalistic agitations. Its proclamation deplores, among other things, the fact that capable Mexicans are emigrating to the United States and that those who remain are not only suffering from taxation, but that the taxes are imposed capriciously, without rhyme or reason."

On the other hand, the supporters of Obregon have been congratulating the country on reaching an agreement with the United States, and the opinion among them indicates that the long-standing uncomfortable state of mind existing between the two countries is about at an end.

Rum Running May Be Stopped

If the recent decision of the United States District Court in Brooklyn handed down by Judge Woodrough, is sustained by the Supreme Court when it reaches there, rum running may be stopped.

The decision would make it possible for rum runners to be seized beyond the three mile limit when they have communicated with ships coming from shore. The decision includes an interpretation of the phrase "have been in contact with the shore" which makes "contact" apply to rum runner's transferring liquor to ships which have been to shore, and making seizure legal.

The Outlook cites an almost parallel case to what will be the situation if the Supreme Court upholds the decision of the lower court. This is the case of the British Columbian schooner Araumah, which was seized in 1888 by Russia in the Bering Sea, six miles from land on the charge of killing seals illicitly.

"The British Government admitted in this case that, even if the Araumah was outside the three-mile territorial limit, the fact that the boats belonging to her were carrying on fishing in the proscribed waters warranted the seizure of the ship itself, the officers of which were cognizant of and party to the action of the small boats. This, to be sure, is not exactly the same case, but it does show that the commission of an illegal act may be started at a point outside the three-mile limit."

LETTERS AND NEWS

Reunion News

Large Attendance at Mobile Reunion

OCEAN SPRINGS, MISSISSIPPI, September 4.—The latter part of the reunion at Gautier, Mississippi, was even better than the first, despite the fact that we had some very heavy rains. The attendance continued to increase, as also did the interest in the services. On the closing Sunday there were near three hundred people in attendance.

Friday, August 24, was observed as Education Day. Brother John Worlund and Sister Mamie Worlund Taylor were the principal speakers. This effort resulted in good, as a number of young people who had dropped out of school expressed their determination to take up their school work again. Many look forward to the time when they can enter Graceland.

On the closing Sunday we had with us Brother and Sister Robert Rupp, formerly of Chicago. Sister Rupp had not been in a gathering of Saints in eighteen years, and she and Brother Rupp both greatly enjoyed the day. Both bore very strong testimonies to the truthfulness of the work.

Two evenings after the close of the preaching service, Elder Alma Booker gave stereopticon lectures which were much enjoyed. Elder J. Charles May, with his guitar, was always much appreciated.

Three children were blessed, and Elder N. L. Booker baptized five children and one adult on Sunday afternoon.

We have a cordial invitation to hold our reunion at Gautier next year, and are looking for a much larger gathering of Saints, as all who attended are now reunion boosters.

Much of the success of the reunion is due to the presence of Brother and Sister James Davis, who were ever ready to do their part.

Colorado Springs Reunion Over

DENVER, COLORADO, August 30.—[From The Little Missionary.] Last Sunday, (August 26) evening one of the best reunions that this district has ever held came to a close. From beginning to end the spirit of peace and intelligence was with us, and everyone felt glad that he had been privileged to be there. The young people's prayer meetings were very well attended, and the gifts of the gospel were manifest in admonition and prophecy. The lectures and sermons revealed power and inspiration, and each speaker was able to say that "our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

The program on Friday night (August 24), especially the part played by the little children, deserves particular mention. Sister Cordelia McCormick, of Denver, was in charge of this feature, and she spent every effort in making it a success. It surely was. The costuming, the singing, and the confident manner of the little tots captured the hearts of the crowd which packed the tent to the doors.

The conference on Saturday (August 25) was peaceful, not a bit of malice or personal feeling was noticed, and the work done was progressive toward the building up of a bigger, better district. It was voted to keep the reunion at the Springs, and a committee was authorized to find ways and means of reducing the debt against the grounds. The pastor of Denver Branch, Brother Williams, is chairman of this committee, and he will shortly outline his plan to the Denver Saints.

We have not space here to relate every event which contributed to the success of the reunion. One thing is certain: this gathering marked a special point of progress in the development of the district, as well as in the lives of the attending Saints.

Northern Michigan Reunion

GAYLORD, MICHIGAN, September 5.—Another milestone for Northern Michigan District has been passed. The third annual reunion at Park of the Pines took place from August 17 to 27.

The reunion of 1923 proved to be very successful. The Saints gathered in humility and meekness, desiring to be blessed, and they were not turned away disappointed. The weather was damp and cold but nothing daunted their spirits. Good fellowship prevailed in the camp.

Elders R. C. Russell and R. V. Hopkins were present the entire reunion. They were always at hand to give service, and their teachings as well as the association with them was very helpful. Bishop F. B. Blair came for two days and instructed in the laws of tithing and stewardship. We are sure his efforts were not in vain and that more tithing will be paid and more blessings received as a result of his counsel and teaching. We were also given the treat of having President F. M. McDowell and his wife with us for the last three days. Although conference was in session and the schedule was pretty full, Brother McDowell conducted several round table meetings and gave us some fine talks that made his visit very beneficial.

In our business session the Saints voted to erect an auditorium at Park of the Pines. Subscriptions were taken, and the amount necessary for the building was raised in a very short time. We have a beautiful park, and every year we are trying to add a few improvements. The auditorium is the largest project we have attempted yet, and feel that it will take sacrificing to accomplish our task.

Nauvoo Reunion Closes

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS, August 27.—The reunion at Nauvoo closed August 26 with a large attendance. Expression from visitors and members claim the series of meetings to have been as fine as ever held.

Prayer meetings were especially good with a marvelous spirit pervading all. Many testimonies, admonitions, and other gifts were presented.

Six were baptized—two adults and four children. The ceremonies took place on the beautiful banks of the river.

Clean grounds, grass around the tents, and a well of ice-cold water helped to increase the attractiveness of the reunion.

Swimming was the chief recreation of the young and old, and this was especially appreciated during the warm weather.

Altogether the reunion was a splendid success where the people were strengthened and encouraged spiritually and where all profited by the educational and recreational features as well.

Northeastern Illinois Reunion

MANTENO, ILLINOIS, September 8.—The Northeastern Illinois district reunion opened August 24 on the district grounds at Elmhurst, Illinois. Willing hands had been at work days before to get the grounds in shape. While the weather was decidedly wet, the rain falling in torrents several times, it failed to dampen the ardor of the Saints, but rather seemed to draw them closer together.

Bishop J. A. Koehler was on hand to help erect the tents, and remained several days giving his forceful lectures on stewardship and the Zionie plans. Patriarch J. F. Martin was there over the first Sunday and preached some soul-stirring sermons besides giving several blessings. Both Brother Koehler and Brother Martin are men of our own district, but their efforts will not soon be forgotten.

Sunday evening, August 26, the First Chicago Branch choir, consisting of about twenty-five voices, gave a cantata entitled "The Carpenter of Nazareth," which was of a very high order and demonstrated what can be accomplished when Saints will unite and consecrate their talents to the service of the Master. Sister Ruby Newman was conductor and pianist, and deserves special commendation for her excellent work.

Bishop B. R. McGuire and General Sunday School Superintendent A. Max Carmichael arrived Monday. Bishop McGuire preached a splendid sermon the following evening, his subject being "Let's go." Brother McGuire inspired the Saints to greater service, not only by his sermon, but by his participation in the various services and by his pleasing personality.

Brother Carmichael gave lectures every morning on "Religious training," and carried home truths in his characteristic manner. Much interest was manifest in his work, and many were made to think. Brother Carmichael gave some special talks to the priesthood, women, and the young people, preached on Thursday evening, and conducted a story dramatization on Friday evening.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson arrived Wednesday and rendered valuable help in all the services, preaching three inspiring sermons.

Our district missionary, Elder Ed Curtis, was a handy, all-around man, preaching, baptizing, and having special charge of the young people's evening amusements. W. B. King, of Joliet, was baptized Wednesday afternoon. This was the forty-third wedding anniversary of Brother and Sister King, so they were given a reception at the close of the evening preaching service.

Our cheery district president, Elder J. L. Cooper, seemed everywhere reaching out a helping hand. Largely through his efforts some isolated Saints were permitted to enjoy the reunion. It was the first reunion one old sister, seventy-one years old, ever attended.

The Department of Women was cared for by the district leader, Sister Mamie Hayer, who with her assistants had charge of the children in the dining hall every forenoon. The sisters of the various branches held an exhibit one afternoon, and on another day made a dress form.

Elder F. E. Bone, assisted by his wife, had charge of the dining hall and served excellent meals.

The prayer meetings, both old and young peoples' services and the regular prayer services, were characterized by the spirit of the Master.

Various forms of recreation—volley ball, baseball, horse-shoe, and swimming were enjoyed each afternoon.

There were forty-four tents on the ground, and a goodly number turned out to each service. Each one seemed anxious to push the reunion; local brethren vied with each other to make each service helpful. Some Saints living a distance of from fifty to seventy miles who could not camp made several trips to the grounds. There were ten baptisms during the reunion, and Brother J. H. McGuire was ordained to the office of priest.

The Sunday school was in charge of Elder J. W. Pettersson the first Sunday, and the second Sunday Brothers A. M. Carmichael and J. J. Oliver had charge.

All were made to rejoice Saturday evening when President Floyd M. McDowell appeared on the grounds. His sermon Sunday morning on "Consecration" was presented in a forceful manner that betokened the consecration of the speaker.

Sunday afternoon was given over to a sacrament and prayer service in which many expressed a determination to reconsecrate their lives to God in accord with Brother McDowell's sermon.

The sermon Sunday evening, September 2, by Apostle Paul M. Hanson was a fitting close for one of the most successful reunions ever held in Northeastern Illinois. We feel grateful indeed for the splendid talent present and the able manner in which the various phases of the church work were handled.

The reunion committee was sustained, and the 1924 reunion will be held one week earlier.

Southwestern Texas Reunion

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, September 6.—August 26 saw the close of a splendid reunion for Southwestern Texas, it being one of the best and largest attended reunions ever held in the district. The reunion was held twelve miles south of San Antonio on the Medina River under a large pavilion. Those in charge were Brother T. J. Jett, jr., and Brother Crowfield Jackson, associated with District Supervisor D. S. Palmer. Brother Jett was one of the busiest men during and before the reunion, having charge of all the arrangements. Brother Joe Smith made himself useful in hauling most of the drinking water in his truck.

The reunion opened with a good program in charge of the district superintendent, Sister Flossie Wait. Most of the numbers on the program were by the young people of the San Antonio Branch.

The speakers of the reunion were Elders S. S. Smith, D. S. Palmer, and W. H. Mannering of the seventy, and Elder T. J. Jett, Sister George Hiles, and Elder Crowfield Jackson of the local force.

Sister Zeda Jett, superintendent of the Department of Women, had charge of that phase of the program. She and Sister Flossie Wait had charge of the recreational features also. An early morning hike and young people's prayer meetings were features in which nearly all took part. On Friday night before the reunion closed, a bonfire was built near the camp where wieners and marshmallows were roasted and distributed to about two hundred, both young and old. Quite a nice impromptu program of the comic order was rendered, Brother S. S. Smith contributing with a comic reading which was enjoyed by all. There was a tennis court on the grounds where the young people enjoyed themselves in the afternoon between services.

The prayer services, which were held each morning, were of a high order. The spirit of brotherly love and unity was felt to a marked degree in these meetings.

The evening services were well attended both by members and outsiders. The pavilion was filled each evening, and many cars filled with attentive listeners were on the outside. The speakers were blessed with an abundance of the Spirit, and some who had not heard the gospel before were anxious to hear more.

The choir, in charge of Sisters Emma Jackson and Laura Lasitter, rendered good music. Brothers Rob Jett and Gifford Edwards rendered valuable assistance with their violins.

There were fifteen tents on the ground including the children's tent which was in charge of Brother Edison Wait, Sister Jarvis, and Mrs. John Harp. The tent was first designed for a dining tent, but we were left without anyone to act in the capacity of cook and dishwasher, so those who were intending to board at the tent were allowed the privilege of using the range and cooking utensils. All fell in with the change of plans and set about preparing their meals good-naturedly.

A fine bathing pool was near the camping grounds which furnished comfort and pleasure to both young and old.

Two business sessions were held during the reunion which were characterized by peace and harmony. At this time delegates were appointed to the General Conference.

The reunion was a decided success, the last day being crowned with the baptism of fourteen people. Some had been long associated with the church, and it caused our hearts to rejoice to see them take this step. The last sermon was preached by Brother S. S. Smith to an audience of about three hundred. Everyone seemed to be enthused with the spirit of service.

Southern Wisconsin District

EVANSVILLE, WISCONSIN, September 6.—The twenty-fourth annual reunion of the Southern Wisconsin District convened at beautiful Monona Park, Madison, Wisconsin, August 24 to September 2, with Apostle J. F. Garver, District President J. O. Dutton, Missionary Supervisor B. C. Flint, and Bishop J. A. Koehler in charge. It was a spiritual, intellectual, and recreational feast to all who attended.

Madison, the capital city of Wisconsin, is situated on the famous four lakes, Kegonsa, Waubesa, Monona, and Mendota, one of the beauty spots of Wisconsin's beautiful lake region, considered by some tourists as the most beautiful in all the world. A man from New England, here on a visit this summer, told the writer that he came to Wisconsin at the suggestion of a friend who had visited the entire world and had found more quiet beauty in Wisconsin than he had found anywhere else in his travels, and this man said he had not found this representation overdrawn. Monona Park, across Lake Monona from the city of Madison, was originally Monona Lake Assembly, an organization patterned after the famous organization at Chautauqua, New York. There is a large auditorium that will seat approximately seven thousand people, built in a circular form, the sides being doors that slide up, making an open air pavilion. It was built to conform to the contour of the little hill whose crest it crowns, and there is not a post in the interior of it, the mammoth roof being hung on a trusswork similar to a bicycle wheel; there is only one other building like it in the world. Here noted ministers, statesmen, and philosophers have spoken from the rostrum, also prominent music organizations and musicians have come from all parts of the world.

With the coming of the traveling Chautauquas, Monona Lake Assembly became a thing of the past and sold their beautiful grounds, covering about sixty acres, to the city of Madison for a park, and here we have held our reunions for the last ten years, enjoying the good will of the city to the extent that all this, including a dining hall, fully equipped with tables, kitchen, etc., is enjoyed gratis. This year we were even given an added favor in being permitted to pitch our camp on ground near the dining hall, that heretofore has been reserved from campers in order to form a sort of lawn on the shores of the lake; the idea was that we might be isolated from the large number of tourists that now use the park as a tourists' camp.

There are ten small branches in the Southern Wisconsin District, yet there were nearly forty tents on the grounds, the attendance being as good if not above the average. A little rainy season added "zest" to camp life but failed to dampen ardor or zeal for the cause of the gathering.

The preaching was by J. F. Garver, J. A. Koehler, J. F. Martin, J. O. Dutton, B. C. Flint, L. Houghton, L. O. Wildermuth, and E. J. Lenox. At 9.30 each morning J. A. Koehler lectured on stewardships and Zionistic ideals. These lectures were highly interesting and instructive. Elder N. E. Hield, jr., of Madison, had charge of the recreational activities.

The Department of Women work was cared for at the reunion by Sister May Engel of Detroit, Michigan, and Sister Effie Hield, superintendent of the Southern Wisconsin District. A very interesting lecture was given Monday morning by Sister Engel, thus getting her work before the reunion early in its sessions. Three women's meetings were held, and four early morning prayer meetings in a tent provided especially for them.

Saturday afternoon Patriarch J. F. Martin preached a sermon on the work of the women in the church. It was a masterly effort and certainly gave our good sisters their proper place in the great work of God for man's redemption, not only in ages past but now.

The babies were cared for in the rest tent where cots and other things necessary for the comfort of the little ones were provided. There were also children's classes every day in the women's tent for children from three to fourteen. One half hour was devoted to music and singing. The last Sunday Elder E. J. Lenox occupied this time in a sermon to the children. In addition to this, Elder B. C. Flint with an assistant led a young people's prayer meeting every morning at 6.30, where additional class work was carried on, stories were told, and questions were asked which, in addition to the prayers and testimonies, aroused such an interest that the attendance increased until on the last morning there were sixty present. One little tot was heard to say that they wished these meetings might continue each morning indefinitely. Our plan in the district is to develop a real church school at our reunions where we can put across to the children some of the ideals and vital problems of the church in such a way that they will enjoy it, and have something worth while to take home with them, and thus early in life become Zion builders.

Sister Engel's work and quiet Christian spirit were deeply appreciated. Sister Leroy Colbert, superintendent of the Northern Wisconsin District, was present and rendered valuable assistance.

By an oversight at the district conference held at Soldiers Grove in June, delegates were not chosen to General Conference, so at the close of the reunion, District President J. O. Dutton called the assembly to order as a conference, and delegates were chosen. They are J. O. Dutton, Mrs. J. O. Dutton, L. Houghton, Mrs. L. Houghton, and Mr. Wesley Davenport.

Brush Creek Reunion

ORCHARDVILLE, ILLINOIS, September 11.—The Brush Creek reunion has passed into history and will long be remembered as one of the most successful. Elders Henry Sparling and L. C. Moore were in charge, and the speakers were Elder C. E. Wight, Bishop C. J. Hunt, Patriarch I. M. Smith, Elder Bruce E. Brown, Sister Henry Sparling in charge of the Department of Women, and Sister Brown for the district Sunday school work. We especially appreciated Brothers Wight and Hunt as they were new to us.

Forty-two tents were on the ground besides the permanent buildings and boarding house. Ample funds were raised to pay all expenses of the reunion. These grounds were made the permanent reunion grounds of the district. We look forward to the reunion next year and hope to make it still better than the one just past.

The success of the reunion was largely due to the committee, for they all did their work well. The good cooks turned no one away hungry.

Brother Henry Sparling and wife came to the Skillet Fork Branch where the church was dedicated Sunday, September 9, with Brother Sparling as the speaker. A good dinner was served. Brother Sparling gave us some very fine sermons, and we hope he and his wife will return soon.

MRS. CLARA FLEE HARTY.

Troy Has Good Meeting Place

TROY, KANSAS, September 3.—Our reunion is now a thing of the past, but from all reports it was very successful. The reunion was held in Netawaka, Jackson County, Kansas, in the city park. A boarding place near by operated by some Methodist sisters served good meals at a reasonable price.

There were in attendance Bishop A. Carmichael, Patriarch F. A. Smith, and A. Max Carmichael, general Sunday school superintendent, besides our missionary supervisor, Elder T. W. Curtis. Also the district officers were in attendance.

Last spring Brothers Curtis and Twombly held a two-week meeting at Troy, also one at Fanning, Kansas, before our district conference. The members at Troy have rented the Presbyterian church there which is good sized and in good condition. It is a good railroad point, and many of our ministers might do well to stop off there when passing through, as it is only fourteen or fifteen miles west of Saint Joseph, Missouri, on a paved road. Fanning is seven miles farther on the P. P. O. Highway. These churches are well located and there are regular appointments at both places.

MRS. WILEY DITTEMORE.

History of New Westerly Branch

WESTERLY, RHODE ISLAND, September 3.—This is the first time Westerly has been heard from in the columns of the HERALD, so a brief sketch of our activities may not be out of place here.

At one time Westerly only had two or three Saints, who were instrumental in having tent meetings here during the summers of about 1905 and 1906. These meetings were conducted by Brothers Richard Bullard, A. B. Phillips, Ralph Farrell and Cushman. The seed was sown at that time, and in 1919 Brother George H. A. Gates led four souls into the river. Brother C. Ed. Miller was president of the district at that time and assisted in the confirmation.

We had meetings once a month on sacrament Sunday until 1920, when we were privileged to have with us Elder E. J. Gleazer, who inaugurated the weekly meetings, sending us speakers every week when he could not be with us. His plan has surely been successful, as we have continuously had these meetings for three years, and many honest-hearted souls have entered into a covenant with God and many more have heard the gospel; and we have been self-sustaining during that time.

On August 25, 1923, we were visited by Brothers E. J. Gleazer, Doctor Sinclair, Ed. Traver, and H. B. Johnson and organized into a branch, having now a membership of twenty-seven. Three were called into the priesthood and two ordained. Our plans for the future are not laid yet, but are being worked up, and we hope that sometime in the near future we will be able to put Westerly on the map so far as the church is concerned.

We have had many speakers during the last three years and have become better Saints for having had the association of them all. At this time we bring to mind the happy hours spent with Brothers "Johnnie" Sheehy and Arthur Koehler in their series of meetings here, Johnnie being in charge of this mission at one time. Before him we had Brother H. A. Chelline with us who was in charge. Brother H. B. Johnson has labored with us longer than the others and his record has been cited by President Elbert A. Smith in a recent issue of the HERALD.

At the first sacrament meeting of the Westerly Branch we had an outpouring of the Spirit of God to encourage us and admonish us to live our lives and there would be an ingathering of souls here to bring honor and glory to God.

New London Saints were also organized as a branch by Brothers Gleazer, Sinclair, Traver, and Johnson, with Brother Alma Whipple in charge, he being ordained to the office of priest. One speaker has taken care of Westerly and New London, speaking in New London in the morning and Westerly in the evening.

Publicity Gains in Australia

On the church page of the Adelaide Advertiser, Stepney, South Australia, there appeared recently an account of the beliefs of the Reorganized Church which distinguishes it from the Utah faction. This paper is one of the foremost in South Australia, having a circulation of over 70,000. This bit of publicity is important to our work in the Australian Mission.

Appearing in connection with the article is a cut showing the pictures of the three prophets of the church. The article in part follows:

"Elder M. A. McConley, one of the general officers of the church, and at present missionary in charge in Australasia, is now conducting a series of meetings in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Eastry Street, Norwood. These will be continued next week. The subject to-morrow evening will be the healing ministry of Christ. Elder McConley has recently completed a tour of the congregations in Australia and New Zealand. He will leave for America in July to represent Australia at the world conference of the organization, at Independence, Missouri, in October. He reports a steady growth of the church throughout the Commonwealth. He states that the program toward which his church is working is as follows: Social reform by individual regeneration; love the dynamic; righteousness the principle; and justice the basis of social relationships."

A brief history of the church is then given followed by the statement: "This church has no affiliation whatever with the Utah Mormons. It is represented by over two thousand members throughout Australia."

New Church Building at Sedalia

Through the activities of the Saints in Sedalia, Missouri, a new church building is to be erected. During the campaign to raise funds the following by way of publicity was secured in the Sedalia Democrat:

"The members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who, for a few years, have held Sunday school and preaching services in a hall over Williams Drug Store, Corner Main and Osage Streets, have secured two lots, corner of Ninth and Montgomery for their new church building. A special soliciting committee to secure money, composed to Claude L. House, Roscoe F. Moorman, Thistlewait, and others will canvass the city and vicinity. Roscoe F. Moorman, 923 Tenth Street, is secretary-treasurer of the building committee.

"The headquarters of this church are at Independence, Missouri. Its president is Frederick Madison Smith. It has no affiliation with the Latter Day Saints, whose headquarters are at Salt Lake City, Utah (commonly called Utah Mormons)."

The principles and doctrines taught by the church are then set forth in a few words, also giving the stand the church has taken on polygamy:

"The Reorganized Church neither teaches nor practices any doctrine or principle that is not wholly and indisputably within the laws of the land, and harmonious with the code of good morals. An accepted tenet of the Reorganized Church reads—'Let no man break the laws of the land,' also 'Be subject to the powers that be.' This church never did sanction polygamy. It never can in the future, for the reason that its constitution provides against it. It says, 'Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else.' The marriage ceremony binds both man and woman to one partner in wedlock. They covenant to keep themselves 'wholly for each other and from all others,' during their lives. The church articles also say, 'We declare that we believe that one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband, except in case of death.'"

The article concludes:

"The enterprising citizens of Sedalia should assist in building the proposed chapel. The doctrine of the Reorganized Church is identical with that of the New Testament church also in organization. It has local congregations and church buildings in several towns in neighboring counties, namely, Knobnoster, Warrensburg, Post Oak, Holden, Bates City, Marshall, Lexington, etc."

Memorial Services Aboard Train

When the train on which Elder F. T. Mussell was riding stopped for five minutes at a small town to pay respect to the late President Harding, Elder Mussell arose and addressed the people in the car. After gaining their attention, he offered a short prayer and was about to take his seat when the conductor approached him and said, "Reverend, that was very nice indeed of you to think of that. I hadn't thought of having a minister on the train. Would you mind going with me back to the other car and repeating the same service?"

Elder Mussell consented, and with the unanimous response of all the passengers, carried on the service as requested.

He was heartily thanked for his timely action.

House Saved From Fire

I have been happy in different ways during my life, but one thought especially dear to me is that the great work in which we are engaged teaches us that God hears and answers prayers when we are right in heart.

I bought a home about two years ago, and while tilling the garden in the back yard, I felt as though a person came to my side and told me to pray over my work. It occurred to me that this was the advice of the Lord in the word given to the Saints to pray over their belongings. So I prayed that the heavenly Father bless my plans for my garden and I could not help the tears of faith coming down my cheeks.

Now there was a building in the rear of my property, about forty feet from my shed. It was a large affair containing veneering lumber and thin wood. One night in July as I was retiring, I felt like asking the Lord to protect us from fire, and again at family prayer we requested the Lord to do so. That same night the building in the rear caught fire and threatened to spread to surrounding buildings and to our house. The fire department spread water upon other houses but failed to do so to mine. The dry shingles were very hot and the fire threatened the place, but nothing on my property was harmed. The garden was scorched from the fire, but we got all good crops and plenty.

We are making monthly payments on our home and also paying our tithing monthly as well as general tithing once a year. Our prayers are for the Saints and the good of the work.

MR. AND MRS. ELVIN BRACKENBURY.

Central Chicago Gives Operetta

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, September 10.—Central Chicago Branch has been busy in various activities. The Department of Recreation and Expression under Roy Cheville presented an operetta entitled "The new minister," which was splendidly rendered to an appreciative audience. Another enjoyable evening in this department was spent in a song fest in which all took part in specially prepared songs by various departments and groups, in which a good spirit prevailed.

The last three sessions preceding reunion were devoted to round-table talks on Zionic economics by Bishop C. E. Irwin, who has been attending school here this summer. A good interest was maintained throughout the entire series of talks.

On August 16 the Glee Club held a beach and farewell party in honor of Roy Cheville, who has been with this branch for the past two years and so ably assisted in various activities of the branch. In appreciation of his work and their regard, the club presented him with a gold watch. On August 18 the branch also held a farewell party in his honor at the home of Sister Faye McDonald, and presented her with a beautiful gold chain.

On September 8 a farewell party was given in honor of Brother Jean Keir and wife, who are leaving to make their future home in Indianapolis, Indiana. A silver bread tray was presented them as a token of esteem and friendship. The loss of these active members to this branch is regretted but what is lost here is another's gain.

During the reunion, August 23 to September 3, no services were held in the church here, there being few who did not attend the reunion.

All have returned from reunion with greater enthusiasm and determination to go forward. The choir, Department of Recreation and Expression, and the girls' department have resumed activities and are planning work for a busy year. Other departments are making similar preparation so Central Chicago will have an active year.

On Sunday, September 9, at 11 a. m., Apostle Paul M. Hanson preached an able sermon, using as his text, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Burgess Attends Race Track Reunion

BILLINGS, MONTANA, August 30, 1923.—After a few weeks of strenuous work on manuscript, but in this cooler climate, on the afternoon of August 8 we started for a week in Yellowstone Park on the way to the Montana reunion at Race Track. We went by way of Cody, and found the roads good on the whole. Our party consisted of Elder A. M. Chase and wife, Doctor C. S. Chase, wife, and two small daughters, all of Billings, Mrs. L. Walker (Mrs. C. S. Chase's mother), Mrs. Burgess, our two small daughters, and myself.

We carried three tents, and bedding for cold weather, provisions for a month, flour, bacon, butter, lemons, and canned goods, fishing tackle, cooking utensils, gasoline stove, and other necessary implements. But we did most of our cooking with regular camp fire of fallen timber. Several mornings and a few evenings we built a big fire for warmth. We all slept on the ground except Elder Chase and wife, who slept in their auto, having arranged it so as to make a suitable bed. Our transportation department consisted of a Buick (six cylinder) and a baby Overland (four cylinder) car.

As to the trip up the beautiful Shoshone Valley and through the park, an account of our trip and of the park was promised to the Autumn Leaves some time ago. Suffice to say we lived outdoors, prepared all our meals, with Elder Chase as chef, slept under five thicknesses of heavy woolen blankets and four of cotton, found ice on our water bucket, and were above 7,000 feet most of the time.

Our visit there was extended to ten days, as trouble with the engine and waiting for new parts held us at the Upper Geyser basin near Old Faithful for four days and five nights. So instead of being in Race Track for Sunday, August 19, we were just leaving the Park that evening during a rain which continued off and on to Livingston.

In order to save time we went to a hotel for that evening and made an early start westward, driving along the old railroad right of way from Livingston, passing through Bozeman, where we have a church building and a live branch, to Three Forks for lunch.

Bozeman is in the Gallatin Valley, the home of the State College of Agriculture, and hopes by next year to be the entrance from the Chicago, Milwaukee & Saint Paul to Yellowstone Park. All of this trip was through mountain scenery, rugged hills, fair valleys with heavy crops, dry farming with light crops, and occasional sections of bad lands. The Gallatin Valley, however, has splendid crops.

Three Forks is the junction point of the three rivers, Gallatin, Madison, and Jefferson, which unite to form the Missouri. This is the beginning of the Missouri River. The Madison River is formed by the junction of the Gibbons and Firehole Rivers in Yellowstone Park and flows thence west thirteen miles to the west entrance, thence north to Three Forks. The Gallatin also rises in Yellowstone Park in the northwest quarter, so lies to the east of the Madison. The Jefferson comes from the west near the Continental Divide, so we follow it approximately westward to Jefferson Island.

Unfortunately for us, shortly after leaving Three Forks it started to rain. While we were never in much rain nor for long, we suffered the consequences in wet and slippery roads. It took four hours to drive the forty-five miles to Whitehall, though the increased elevation was less than 300 feet. Then four hours more to drive the 34 miles over the Divide to Butte, through beautiful scenery and over roads generally good, though occasionally slippery. But that meant a climb of 2,600 feet and then down to Butte about 1,400 feet. It was too late then for the remaining 33 miles to the camp ground, so we remained all night in Butte.

Butte is the largest city of Montana, with about 70,000 population. It started as a gold town; then as a silver city, and still produces several million of silver and nearly a million of gold a year. But the great metal there is copper. Some of the mines are 3,000 feet under the surface, but the surface is about 5,600 feet above sea level. As it is on a hill or butte, it looks beautiful from a distance as its twinkling lights throughout its length show for several miles away all together like stars. But this beauty of the distance is not maintained upon closer acquaintance.

With the writer of "The log of the four ninety," we agree that the Saints are alike open-hearted, East and West; and that aside from them the people of the East are not behind those of the West, even though in both places and in the middle States one finds at times the reverse.

As a mining and smelting city, Butte's population from southeastern Europe is large, its American and English stock small. But we saw there in the Butte Miner an item of interest, namely that Saint Louis has the largest percentage of American born population of any of the large cities of the country.

Reaching Race Track on Tuesday we met with a royal welcome. If we easterners were interlopers, Doctor Chase and family were not, as they have lived in Montana for nearly seven years.

The week-day mornings were given over to young people's prayer meeting, regular prayer meeting, study class, and departmental work or sermon, except Saturday when the Sunday school convention, district conference, and baptism of seven candidates took the time, except the earliest hour for the young people's prayer meeting.

Sister W. L. Christy was in charge of the departmental work but had to leave Wednesday morning. Bishop J. A. Becker conducted the study class with the text of President F. M. Smith's opening address of last General Conference as the text. He also was naturally the preacher until he left Friday morning; his theme—stewardship.

Sunday was taken with eight services. Young people's prayer meeting, priesthood meeting, Sunday school, and preaching; the afternoon with sacrament service including confirmation, and preaching; and at night an hour again for priesthood meeting and then sermon. Eli Bronson, missionary to that district; George W. Thorburn, for many years an active missionary, and president of the reunion; John C. Page, president of the Eastern Montana District, A. M. Chase, and the writer were speakers for the last few days. Elder Mark Hutchinson did not preach, but it was he who assigned Elder Thorburn to speak as part of the district conference. This spirit of modesty or humility and preference for one another was manifested throughout, so it is not surprising that the reunion was a success.

The Chase family took charge of the music from Wednesday on and sang quartets, duets, and solos, as well as conducting the congregational singing. (The conducting was by Elder A. M. Chase and Doctor Chase his son.) Mrs. A. M. Chase addressed the mothers on Friday afternoon, and Mrs. Alice M. Burgess conducted a class for young women some four sessions.

The evening of each week day was given to preaching, except Friday evening, when "The pleasures of the world" was well presented. The afternoons were given to recreation; Tuesday to visit Anaconda, another mining and smelter city, in which we have a good branch; Wednesday, the State Penitentiary at Deer Lodge; Thursday baseball; Saturday the Hot Springs, some twenty or twenty-two miles south; while croquet was played every day between times.

Driving to the Hot Springs a car overturned, but most fortunately no one was seriously hurt.

The reunion ended with general good feeling, as the result of a spiritual season which seemed short, but was good.

Elder Chase had made an appointment with the district president, Elder Mark Hutchinson, who is also president of the branch at Bozeman, about one hundred fifty miles southeast of Race Track, to hold services there Monday night. But his car broke down at Three Forks, thirty-five miles away. As the writer was riding with Doctor Chase, we arrived in time to wash and brush hair, but not to brush up even if the suit case had been there, which it was not. So we had the unusual experience of speaking in blue shirt, shabby khaki pants, and weather-beaten shoes. Doctor Chase and wife and Mrs. Burgess helped with the music, and they gave us a hearty welcome. Especially did Brother and Sister Hutchinson, our hosts, accord us splendid treatment. They are very gracious people and naturally well liked by all,

Tuesday we drove on and reached Billings about 1 a. m., the roads were very rough about half the way. They are not dragged out here; if they were they would be excellent. Elder Chase arrived Wednesday evening, as he was held up for about twenty-four hours with his car.

We plan to leave to-morrow, Friday morning early, for Sheridan, Wyoming, and then on to Spearfish, South Dakota, for Sunday, September 2, also for the 3d and 4th. Next on to Bonesteel for two evening meetings, and Sioux City for Sunday and Monday, the 9th and 10th. We shall probably be in Iowa all that week, reaching Independence, we hope, Monday, the 17th, for the preconference meetings.

German Saints Thankful for Donations

Alexander Kippe Writes of Conditions in Germany

HALLE-ON-SAALE, GERMANY, August 17.—In the name of the German Mission I herewith beg to express our heartfelt thanks to all kind donors, who, during the meeting of the Southern Ohio District, took occasion to send us $22 through the medium of our dear Brother Halb, of Middletown.

This money was used to procure a good typewriter for about twenty dollars, as well as the necessary paper for our mission field. It does not take more in German to procure these things in best quality, and we were, until now, in great need of them, having all of our writing and all of our translation work for the Sunday school lessons, etc., to do. So it is a matter of relief for me now to be able to stop scribbling and instead tap down the keys of the machine. I have had some practice but little opportunity to use a typewriter. Not being any longer the "youngest one" (to use a German expression) that little traveling typewriter with a case is now a fine helper. Now I can mark the "Klapperschlange" (rattlesnake), as such young girls are called in our country who handle a typewriter.

May the good Lord bless our kind Ohio friends, is our prayer.

We received eight dollars at the same time from the Department of Women of the Detroit Branch through the medium of Sister Hicks. This was used for the needs of some of the needy German Saints, our own humble selves included. A number of the German Saints are in distress and may well use such a help, especially next winter when some can scarcely pay for any kind of fuel. One centweight of briquets-coal now takes 900,000 marks (some thirty-five cents) a very high sum here where wages and salaries, especially of women, are much behind the extreme dearth in Germany.

Our younger daughter, eighteen years old, now makes only 500,000 marks per month, (about twenty cents), and our elder daughter twenty years old, is a Kinderfräulen (nurse) at Berlin-Schöneberg. She makes 500,000 marks and her room and board, so both of them need help from home. Their monthly earnings will buy only one stocking, and the other one of the pair would take another month's wages. It takes two million marks to repair the soles and heels of one pair of shoes, and five million marks to buy a new pair of inferior quality.

Well, young sisters of the church over there, have you a mind to come to Germany and make your way on your own account? All of your smartest arithmetic would soon "go to the dogs" over here, but your sisters in the Lord in Germany may see how to make both ends meet.

We return thanks as well to the kind sisters of Detroit in the name of the German Saints, who will get help by their love token. May our good Lord bless all of them for their good will in helping us, will be our daily prayer.

German children are in great need of underwear, stockings, and shoes in good condition. Anyone who has laid aside such things and has no use for them, may gain a God's blessing by sending such things to the needy German children, provided they reach their right addresses in due time.

There are now fourteen church members in Berlin. Only last Sunday the writer baptized four at Berlin, Grünan. At Tilsit, Prussia, the writer also baptized two more.

We send kindest respects to all our brothers and sisters in the everlasting gospel.

Bootman-Fry Debate Closes

WILLIFORD, ARKANSAS, September 7.—The Bootman-Fry debate at Biggers, Arkansas, ended with the Saints rejoicing at the success of the meetings. Mr. Fry represented the Christian Church and Brother W. P. Bootman the Reorganized Church.

Brother J. T. Riley, who assisted Brother Bootman, writes that many friends were gained and prospects for the advancement of the work in that section of the country are better than ever before.

Kewanee Visitor at Hermosa Beach

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA, September 6.—I have read of "Hermosa Beach" reunion for quite a while, and last year Brother and Sister F. G. Pitt not only wrote and told me of the splendid meetings enjoyed there, but also sent me pictures taken while they were in attendance.

Imagine my feelings, then, when this year I found myself getting out of the automobile which had taken us from Pasadena to Hermosa Beach and walked into the big tent where the morning prayer meeting was just drawing to an end. I did not expect to see more than one or two familiar faces, but before long I heard Patriarch W. A. McDowell speak and felt a little nearer home after that. I was more than glad to see Sister Vida Smith, Apostle T. W. Williams, Mrs. Dora Glines, Bishop James Keir, and others present.

I was not permitted to stay long enough to hear these brothers and sisters occupy on the program, except Brother McDowell, who preached a most excellent sermon exhorting the Saints under the Spirit of God to join in a united effort to move forward with faith in God to the accomplishment of the work intrusted to us. The only evening service I was able to attend was given over to one of the branches which gave a playlet. There was a large attendance, and it was well presented. The next morning constructive criticism and objections were considered with Apostle T. W. Williams presiding. Some most excellent ideas were presented pro and con. The general sentiment seemed to be in favor of the young folks being permitted to teach by means of the drama in the church and at reunions.

I soon found other Kewanee District Saints. California Saints are very much like them, for they sing the same songs, petition the same Father for the same blessings, and hear testimony to a faith in the same gospel, so I felt at home even though mountain, desert, and plain separated me from where the Saints were assembled at Galva, Illinois, in the Kewanee district reunion. My heart was comforted with the assurance that the same power that has guided us thus far is still with us all, and that the problems confronting us will be solved with the aid of His wisdom if we seek where wisdom is to be found.

I stood recently on the bluffs at San Pedro and looked across the Pacific and felt in my soul to say, "Great and marvelous are thy works," when I saw the great guns placed there for our protection against a foreign foe. I remembered the promises made to those that dwell in Joseph's land, and trusted that we might remember and so live that we might be fortified with a greater security than these war ships offer us.

Breaks Fire by Friction Record

Eagle Scout Dudley Smith, son of Walter W. Smith, church historian, recently broke the fire-by-friction record held by Scout James Walker, Troop 11, of Waterbury, Connecticut.

The new record of nine and one fifth seconds was made at a contest held before the Chamber of Commerce, Independence, Missouri, in the presence of Mayor Charles D. Cappel and scout officers. Two scout officers from Kansas City, William B. Hands and William M. Rhodes, held the stop watches. There were four contestants.

Dudley Smith holds the highest rank in the scout organization, that of an eagle scout. He also holds the flint and steel record of four and three fifths seconds, made at the same demonstration at which the other record was broken.

Scout Smith has experimented on over twenty varieties of wood in making fire by friction and finally found the one which gives the best results against the advice of those experienced in fire making, he used a coarse-grained wood instead of a fine-grained wood and found in the American white elm the ideal variety for making the fastest fire.

Scout Smith now makes his own fire-by-friction sets and also has them for sale.

Omaha Radio Program Well Received

BEVIER, MISSOURI, September 10.—The Omaha Saints' program came in clear and strong Sunday night. President F. M. Smith's sermon on the "Social ideals of the church" was very good. The violin solos and singing were very good. The selections could have been greatly improved by using some of our own inspired hymns, especially in the quartets.

We heard the Des Moines, Logan, and Lincoln Saints' telegrams read.

J. L. WILLIAMS.

Great Interest Among the Indians

EL RENO, OKLAHOMA, September 6.—The Redrock reunion was a very profitable meeting to all who attended. Thirty were baptized, about half the number being Indians. After the last meeting a very fine young Englishman gave his name for baptism, and others are to follow there I am sure. Apostle Roy S. Budd, Elders Christensen, Shakespeare, Bailey, Simmons, and the writer did most of the preaching.

We did not have the regular Pentecost that we had three years ago but it was a much more profitable meeting, as there were better educational features. The Indians were very anxious to ask questions so we had the round table work every day, and many questions were asked.

Brother Budd could only stay over the first Sunday and the conference on Monday, as he was billed for the Dalby Springs meeting in Texas. Brother Carlisle, the patriarch, was very much appreciated and did much good.

Our dining room equipment and the order of cooking was conducted by Brother and Sister Shakespeare, and the work was well done. I believe the meals were the best we have ever had.

I am holding a meeting here in El Reno at the request of Brother Budd. Interest is beyond the expectation of any of the Saints. Sunday night we had about a hundred and fifty. We have held five meetings, and now we have over three hundred, and three names have been given for baptism.

HUBERT CASE.

Davis Family Cross Country in Ford

LAMONI, IOWA, September 9.—After a journey of nearly 1,500 miles in a Ford car from Arizona to Iowa, we thought some might enjoy hearing of our trip.

On the evening of August 24 the Saints and friends of Bisbee gave a reception in honor of our family. A suitable program was rendered and refreshments served. As part of the program my Sunday school class presented me a bouquet of beautiful roses, the superintendent of the Department of Women presented a check for $20 with which to purchase a new book satchel, and a purse of $61.50 was presented on behalf of the branch. These gifts came as a surprise, but were accepted with great appreciation and respect for those who so kindly expressed themselves in this way.

Our farewell sermon was preached to the largest audience that has attended our preaching services in that place, quite a number of our nonmember friends being present. Nearly everyone was in tears when good-bys were said. We rejoiced to know that we had made so many friends during our four years' stay in Bisbee.

Quite a number came to see us off on Monday morning, August 26. We loaded the family of seven into the Ford, tied our bedding, tent, trunk, grub box, and dishes on the outside, and started down the canyon. We made good time, camping out each night, and reached Independence, Missouri, shortly after noon September 5, where we renewed old acquaintances during the remainder of that day and the next, leaving for Lamoni, Iowa, Friday morning. We reached Lamoni late that night and camped on the Lamoni camp ground, moving into the house that had been engaged for us the following day.

We got along fairly well during our entire journey. We had one puncture and one blow out, and the seventh day I ran down a mule that jumped in front of the car as we were climbing a hill on high, and the same day I lost my hat. We are now comfortably located in the beautiful town of Lamoni, where mail will reach us at 210 South Maple.

Church Remodeled at Beardstown

BEARDSTOWN, ILLINOIS, September 11.—The Latter Day Saint church at Beardstown is being extensively remodeled. The building is being raised and the basement fitted for Sunday school primary grades and social functions. A furnace will be installed, and the rostrum enlarged to accommodate a larger choir and orchestra.

It is estimated that the cost will approximate two thousand dollars in addition to the labor that is being donated by the Saints. Also Mrs. Margaret B. Whiteford, of New York City, is paying for the painting and finishing inside and out in honor of her father, S. J. Bartlett, lately deceased.

When the remodeling is finished, Elder Lester O. Wildermuth will preach the opening sermon and will follow up with a series of sermons.

Remarkable Recovery of Portland Brother

PORTLAND, OREGON, September 4.—The Portland Saints were made to rejoice, and their faith was strengthened a few days ago by the miraculous healing of Elder John Hanson after the doctors told him that he could not live without an operation for gall stones. Brother Hanson preferred to put his trust in God, and refused to submit to an operation. He testifies that from that moment he began to recover, having been administered to by Elders Barker and Hager. So rapid and complete was his recovery that he preached a very fine sermon at the local church on the evening of September 2 and appeared to be in good health.

The Saints here are reshingling the church building and are planning on painting the outside and redecorating the interior. The roof is about completed, and the painting will be next in order.

As soon as the building is put in order plans will be made to begin a campaign to increase the membership and also to revive the attendance of those who do not attend regularly at present.

The Saints who were fortunate enough to have a vacation are nearly all back on the job. The choir has resumed its regular Thursday evening practice, and everyone seems to be ready to take up the work again and help to carry it onward and upward.

A farewell party was given Brother and Sister Mitchell, a young couple who were baptized during our last reunion, and who will start in a few days to drive across country to visit relatives in Montana, Minnesota, and other central States. A goodly number of Saints assembled at the home of Brother and Sister Hager where lawn games were enjoyed, and watermelon served.

New Branch at Evansville Progresses

EVANSVILLE, WISCONSIN, September 6.—This branch was organized January 14, 1923, with thirty-nine members, many of whom are children. Having no church building, the Saints meet at the various homes for services.

All the departments are organized, and weekly meetings are held. Many difficulties arise in a new and small branch, but progress is being made as these difficulties are overcome. Struggling together over a rough path is made a pleasure, and hearts are glad when it is realized that all leads toward the establishment of Zion.

Church Building Renovated at South Bend

SOUTH BEND, INDIANA, September 5.—Recently the church building here has been repaired and changes made, it having been originally built thirteen years ago. The floors were scraped and refinished and a new carpet for the rostrum laid. An addition, to seat one hundred, has also been built. New basement chairs were purchased as well as three new rostrum seats. For Sunday school and other classes the auditorium can be curtained off.

The meetings are mostly union services, the branch not being large enough for groups and other divisions.

The Orioles and Temple Builders have regular meetings and are doing a good work.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is continually putting on something different in either programs or recreation. A wiener roast was recently held at the home of Brother A. Jones, a few miles out of Windsor. It began with a baseball game and other games and ended with the roast.

Marriage celebrations were abundant during August, for three weddings took place in the branch. Sister Jessie Gilbert, formerly of Lamoni, Iowa, was married to Elder L. D. Campbell, who was once in the missionary field. Sister Nina Wood was married to Brother Richard Rae, supervisor of the local Department of Recreation and Expression, and Sister Golah Porter was married to Brother William Gernier, one of the local deacons.

Visitors to the district conference held at Windsor, Ontario, September 1 and 2, were Elder H. A. Koehler, Patriarch R. C. Russell, Bishop J. C. Dent, and District President R. T. Brown.

Patriarch R. C. Russell was a recent visitor at the branch here.

Special Meeting Near Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, September 5.—In and around the Los Angeles groups of Saints there has been general activity since the reunion, but after all it takes a little time to get adjusted to normal conditions.

The activities of the branch are at present largely concealed in the undeveloped work of various committees appointed to handle the enterprises of the branch and district. For instance, for the new church there is a committee on plans and architecture, a finance and ways and means committee, and others. The work is all well organized and in the hands of interested and earnest workers who are intent on putting the matter over in good shape.

During the last week in August and the first week in September, Apostle T. W. Williams conducted a series of sermon-lectures in the Bijou Theater, at the solicitation of the Belvidere Saints. The meetings were fairly well attended by members from all sides of the city, as well as a few nonmembers. Many of the Saints here responded in the true missionary spirit, delivering tracts and inviting others, both by their own presence at the meetings and calling upon them to come also. But the missionary spirit is not as strong in the entire branch as it should be. This can hardly be helped when we consider the matter of isolation and traffic congestion, and indifference on the part of the "world" toward anything spiritual or intellectual.

Too much cannot be said of the high character of the lectures. Brother Williams's efforts were richly seasoned with the intense sparks from his wonderful personality and storehouse of knowledge, tempered by an intense spiritual nature. His lecture Monday night, September 3, was a masterpiece never to be forgotten by those who heard it. Coming into the theater within a few minutes of the time to take the stand, a subject in mind, and finding that the publicity agent had scheduled and advertised him for a subject altogether different, he wheeled from an intended course to a new one, and the results are best known by those who heard him. This happened by reason of his being away from home from the time the circulars were printed until a few minutes before starting for the theater, and it was impossible to notify him of the change in subject. Brother Williams was master of the occasion just the same.

Elder Clarence Moran, of Omaha, who has been with us for the past eight or ten months, preached a farewell sermon at the church Sunday night, September 3, before leaving for Omaha. He made many friends while here.

Quite a few outside Saints have visited the branch lately, but we failed to get their names, except Sisters Maud Guinand and Lillie Cook of Independence, Sister A. A. Swenson of Kansas City, and Sister Steward of Canada, the last-named being here for educational purposes.

We are sorry to note that Sister McGhan, formerly of Chicago, who underwent an operation early in the season, is still confined to her bed with no hopes of immediate recovery. Our Sunday school superintendent, Sister Lytle, has been closely confined to her home for the past few weeks on account of the serious sickness of her husband. Sister May Lewis, who has been rendering valuable services in the Department of Recreation and Expression, has also been sick for a few weeks.

Independence

Independence is taking on quite an air of General Conference. Most of the official family is back to town after the reunion season, and all the general offices are busy with preparations for conference. President Floyd M. McDowell has come to Independence to work with the other members of the Presidency in arranging the many details of the conference program. He will be here now until after conference.

Eleven members of the Quorum of Twelve are in town, and the quorum began its regular meetings Monday morning and will be in session every day making up the appointments. Brother Clyde F. Ellis has not yet arrived from his South Sea Island mission but is expected to reach Independence soon.

The concluding union service on the Campus was prevented by a cold, all-day rain Sunday, and President Elbert A. Smith who was scheduled to preach there, preached at the Stone Church instead. He chose for his subject "The first vision of Joseph Smith," and gave in outline the various events that have distinguished the rise and development of the church in its relation to the religious thought of the century. Some of our other Independence churches also had Sunday evening services for the first time in several weeks, all having joined for the summer in the union services on the Campus. The local congregations will now get back on regular schedule for, beginning Sunday evening, September 23, there will be a week's missionary service held in each of the Independence churches and in three of the Kansas City Latter Day Saint churches.

The success of the Campus during the summer months has been more than gratifying. Every Saturday and Sunday evening there has been an immense crowd gathered there to view the feature pictures and to join in the religious services. At the outset of the season the Campus committee spent some $1,500 in equipping for the pictures and services and, though no charge of admittance has been made, the collections and profit from the stands have more than repaid the expense, and much of the $1,500 went into improvements that are permanent, such as the picture screen, background, seats, etc., and will not have to be replaced next season.

Hundreds of cars have been parked on and around the grounds, and thousands of people have streamed in from all parts of the town every program night, and yet not a single accident has been reported. This certainly speaks well for the carefulness of the people and for the efficient supervision of the volunteer traffic men.

In addition to the weekly Saturday and Sunday night programs, there were all-day celebrations on Decoration Day, the Fourth, and Labor Day; and the Harding memorial service was also held on the Campus. Every day of the week there have been picnic parties by families and by classes, oftentimes by entire groups.

A four-team interclass baseball league played a regular schedule of baseball on Saturdays, and the last few weeks an All-Star L. D. S. team has been winning games from the crack amateur teams of the Kansas City Sunday School League. A very fine athletic field has been laid out on the Campus, large enough for baseball, football, and track, and it is well employed every week day.

There will be yet another month of activity on the Campus, as the General Conference will be held there. A tabernacle tent will be erected over the natural amphitheater that has been used this summer, and a cafeteria tent will also be arranged. Immediately after conference, however, the scene will shift indoors, and in preparation for it the entire building has been overhauled, the woodwork and floors redone, the walls and ceilings redecorated, and the heating plant very thoroughly reconditioned. All that remains to be done is the furnishing and the making up a schedule of programs, and a real winter community center will be ready.

The center of Campus activity this winter, of course, will be the Institute work, and classes will be held there afternoon and night, five days a week. Regular enrollment was had Monday afternoon and evening, and there was a most enthusiastic response. One hundred fifty enrolled for the various classes, and this, of course, will be largely increased by late applications. Regular class work started Tuesday and will continue until conference, when a vacation will be had until conference adjourns. A volunteer staff of forty teachers will conduct the various classes. Walter W. Smith is dean of the faculty, and Sister Eunice Smith is registrar.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter W. Smith gave a reception at their home Sunday evening in honor of Miss Lillian Zimmermann of Philadelphia, who has come to Independence to help in the teaching and organization work of the Institute for this fall and winter. About forty of the faculty members were at the reception.

Samuel R. Reeves, one of our aged brethren, died at his home in Independence Saturday and was buried from the Stone Church Monday morning. The sermon was preached by Bishop E. L. Kelley and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The Independence Latter Day Saint choir was to have given three concerts Sunday, one each in Lees Summit, Holden, and Warrensburg, but owing to rain and dirt roads they were enabled to fill the appointment at Lees Summit only. Next Sunday they have promised to go to Warrensburg but will be back in Independence in time for the evening services.

The pageant, "Revelation," will be given Saturday evening, September 22 at 8 p. m. on the Campus, and all are invited to attend and bring their neighbors and friends. This is the centennial of the vision initiating the latter-day work, and eight scenes will be depicted by two hundred persons, showing the manner of God's revealing his will to man in the various periods of sacred history. A great deal of effort has been taken in the writing and staging of this pageant, and it will be very much worth your seeing. Time: Saturday, September 22. Place: The Campus.

Holden Stake Items

HOLDEN STAKE, September 11.—At Grandview on August 26 during the Sunday school hour the Camp Fire Girls from Camp Shawnee were entertained. They are bright, intelligent girls. An invitation was extended to them to call again.

Brother and Sister Danforth and daughter Louise have returned from an extended trip to New York State. Sisters Ida and Jane Martin and children returned a few weeks ago from a visit to Michigan and Brother and Sister C. V. Hopkins returned from a week's visit to the State Fair, where they assisted in the work of the Square Deal Dining Hall at Sedalia; they also attended the Clinton District reunion at Fort Scott, Kansas. Brother Hopkins was looking after the interests of the Holden Stake and Clinton District Quorum of Elders of which he is president. On September 2, a splendid sacrament service was enjoyed in the morning, followed by a priesthood meeting. In the afternoon the officers and teachers of the Sunday school held their regular monthly problem meeting. In the evening Brother Hopkins was the speaker, using as his subject, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

On Monday, September 3, the annual Sunday school picnic was held in a beautiful grove southeast of town, with about one hundred and fifteen in attendance. Games and other amusements were provided, and a basket lunch with ice cream was served at the noon hour. After lunch a short program was given, consisting of "History of Grandview Sunday School" by Brother Trimmer; "Sunday school prophecy" by Brother Martin; original poem, "Our picnic" by Sister Goddard; reading, by Brother Hopkins, and a clever "auction sale" reading by Brother Danforth. An exercise by the Oriole Girls concluded the program.

Tuesday, September 4, Brother and Sister Hopkins with several members of the choir drove to Stanley, Kansas, Brother Hopkins preaching the sermon and the choir furnishing music at the funeral of Wade, sixteen-year-old son of Brother and Sister Isaac M. Mathis. He died at Bethany Hospital in Kansas City. The funeral was held in the Methodist church at Stanley. The Grandview Saints extend sympathy to the bereaved ones.

The Bates Sunday School held a picnic on the Campus at Independence September 6. Nearly all members attended and were joined by Independence Saints who were formerly members of the Bates City Branch. The fine spread and good time were enjoyed by all.

Elder F. A. Russell and family of Independence visited with the Cotterells and attended services at Bates City Sunday, September 9.

The Lexington church has an addition of twenty-three members for the year 1923 due to the missionary efforts of J. F. Petre and R. E. Burgess, both of Knobnoster, Missouri. Several weeks' meetings have been held south and west of Lexington and at the church in Lexington. The missionary spirit has seemed to dominate this year. Now that Sister Lola A. Johnson has returned from a visit to the South for her health, we are going to have a good choir and orchestra which has already started work. The next stake conference will be at Lexington and a good attendance is expected.

Brother and Sister Floyd Danielson have moved back to Holden. Brother Danielson has purchased the grocery store and meat market of Charles Gibson. The Saints are pleased to welcome this family. Brother Floyd was scout leader when living here before and took active part in the Sunday school and orchestra.

Sister Cora Young, who is the leader of our junior chorus, has located in Holden. Her increasing number of students has made it necessary to leave her country home. She will live with her sister, Sister Sarah Masterson, who has recently moved here from Clinton, Iowa. Sister Priscilla Young, the aged mother, is still living on the farm. Though 92 years of age, she is alert and quite in touch with church and national questions of the day.

Services were well attended Sunday, September 9. In the morning, the pastor spoke at the church; William Sisk, at the Holden Home; and J. W. Paxton at the church in the evening. I. M. Ross preached at Post Oak.

Fortune

Dream mist, far away,
Shadows cast on waters gray,
Ghost ship drifts ashore,
Fortune's here then seen no more.

Graceland College Opens

LAMONI, IOWA, September 17.—Graceland College opened under very promising conditions September 10, and everything foretells a successful year, a record-making one for the educational work of the church. The framework for the new convention hall is up and forms an inspiring background to the scene on college hill, especially to the new student.

The registration the first day reached 250, which exceeds that of last year by nearly one hundred. Registrars were busy until late in the evening. The faculty this year numbers twenty-three.

The opening exercises were held at the chapel at 9.30, September 10, and were largely attended. The program was opened by congregational singing, led by Miss Mabel Carlile, instructor in public school music. The invocation was by Apostle D. T. Williams. President G. N. Briggs then introduced Apostle J. F. Garver, an ex-student, now secretary of the Board of Trustees, to take charge. In his characteristic style, he introduced each performer, adding humor to the occasion.

Miss Helen Bootman sang a very pleasing solo, "Hey ho for the morning," after which Heman Hale Smith, a former student and faculty member, now executive secretary of Colorado, gave the principal address.

Mr. Smith brought to the students and friends of Graceland a threefold message, first the necessity for an accurate, scientific knowledge, second, a plea for charity of viewpoint and third a message of service. The time is past for a general education, he said. Men and women must specialize. He succeeds who knows a little more about a certain subject than anyone else. Men are lazy in their thinking. We need that kind of scientific research that refuses to pass snap judgment.

The second phase of his subject was a strong plea for charity of viewpoint, not only toward individuals but classes and nations. It is a very necessary part of education. Men are often charitable to the individual but not the masses; while business men are honest with the mass but dishonest with the individual.

Charity toward criminals was urged and a scientific accurate investigation of the environment, the cause of their downfall. His investigation in the state penitentiary of Colorado was the stimulus for his plea. Such research revealed a number of university graduates, men of higher learning, men of unusual ability who had stepped aside in the pathway of crime at some particular period in their lives, through evil association or unfavorable environment, but who were anxious for an opportunity to begin life anew. Elimination of crime will come about, he said, through a greater equality of opportunity.

The third division of his subject was that of service, that genuineness of nature which stamps a man as a gentleman and a woman as a lady. That spirit of service to humanity which casts its bread upon the waters not that it may return threefold, but who casts it on though it never returns. The service itself is the thing to be loved. True religion is service to mankind, which leads to a desire for equality of privilege.

Mr. Smith is an orator and his wide study and careful research has given him a thorough knowledge of his subject, while the personal interest of a home audience naturally added a charm.

This was followed by speeches of welcome from leaders of various groups in Lamoni to college students: Mayor G. W. Blair for the town, W. E. Prall for the branch, A. M. Carmichael for the Sunday school, F. E. Roberts for the Department of Recreation and Expression, and Reverend J. Vincent Gray for the Methodist Church.

Biggest Thing of the Hour

General Conference of 1923

Convenes October 1, at Independence, and Continues Ten Days or Longer

Every Saint worthy of the name cares what the church is doing. The urgency of the hour toward personal responsibility is very strong. The "they" who make up the church includes each of us. We are to have a conference soon.

We want to know what is going on at that time. We must know, and we ought to know in detail.

To meet this legitimate demand for knowledge the Conference Daily is being published. It will come to you promptly each day with the news of the sessions rushed from the reporters' table to the press and from the press to you, in a few short hours. Reports in detail as made to the conference by officials and departments, full comments and reports on the proceedings, with quorum and committee actions, etc.

You must have the Conference Daily to keep informed, and you ought to order it right now.

Conference Minutes

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—At Everett, Washington, on the reunion grounds, August 4, at 2 p. m. with C. E. Jones, president, and F. W. Holman, secretary, presiding. An appeal from the Independence Sanitarium, asking for $130 for repair and improvement, received too late for the February conference, was accepted and granted. The district officers were empowered to allot to each branch their respective portion to raise, considering the nonresident membership. Reports were read from the president, vice president, and secretary. Treasurer's report showed a total indebtedness of $117.18; a disbursement of $96.23; and a balance of $21.65. Bishop's agent's report showed receipts of tithes, offerings, Auditorium, college collections, Christmas offerings, Department of Women, and special missionary fund, $1,261.87; oblations $154.31; all with even disbursements. Statistical reports showed: Seattle, 357, loss 33; Roslyn, 23; Centralia, 219, gain 21; Everett, 52; Bellingham, 70, loss 6; New Westminster, 58, loss 1; Vancouver, British Columbia, 73, gain 5; and Chilliwack, 44, loss 1. Disorganized branch records having been cleared showed nonresident, 93, a gain of 18. The total for the district was 989, a gain of 45. Spiritual reports were had from New Westminster, Chilliwack, and Centralia only. Local elders reporting: H. A. Sprague, F. W. Holman, and Duncan Calder. Report from last year's reunion showed receipts from all sources, $457.89; expenditures, $288.22; balance, $169.67. District officers elected: C. E. Jones, president; I. S. McMullen, vice president; F. W. Holman, secretary; H. A. Sprague, Bishop's agent; Amos Tomlynson, member of library board; H. A. Sprague, chorister;

Melva Ward, assistant; D. S. McDole, member of auditing committee. Delegates to General Conference: Charles E. Jones, Ida Jones, Daniel Macgregor, Carl Crum, Sister W. L. Christie, S. P. Cox, Leonard S. Rhodes, Richard Hartnell, and G. R. Brundage. A resolution was adopted authorizing the holding of a reunion in the month of August next year, within or near the city of Everett, also a further resolution prevailed that a permanent reunion committee be established by each branch electing one member, to be presided over by the district president. Committee was authorized to take under advisement the matter of procuring permanent grounds, obtaining prices, terms, and different advantages of sites within or near Seattle, Everett, and Bellingham, and report findings to next conference. District secretary was empowered to furnish to each branch subscription lists for the purpose of raising funds for this. The budget committee's report and recommendations were adopted. Seattle was designated as the place for holding the February conference, date left in the hands of the presidency. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 3683 Whitman Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

NORTHWESTERN KANSAS.—At Netawaka, August 18, on the reunion grounds. Conference convened with the district president, Samuel Twombly, presiding. Reports were read from: Samuel Twombly, district president; Cecil E. Schmid, Sunday school superintendent; Walter L. Chapman, superintendent of Department of Recreation; Mrs. Emma Hedrick, superintendent of Department of Women; and Vera Twombly, musical director. Frank G. Hedrick, Bishop's agent, presented his report for six months ending June 30. This report was audited and found correct. Of the ministry reporting there were two high priests, six elders, four priests, one teacher, and two deacons; reporting a total of 111 sermons and 8 baptisms for the quarter. Statistical reports show: nonresident members, 205, gain of 35; Atchison, 97; Fanning, 171; Topeka, Seranton, Blue Rapids, and Netawaka did not report. Delegates for General Conference: Samuel Twombly, Frank G. Hedrick, Benjamin F. Jackson, Roy L. Tilden, Clinton Ross, and Theodore Christensen. Time and place of next conference to be selected by the district president. Frank G. Hedrick, secretary.

CENTRAL OKLAHOMA.—At Redrock, August 20, during the reunion. Two Lamanite brethren were ordained: Robert Small Koshiway, of Perkins, priest; and Hoke Dent, of Redrock, elder. A motion prevailed that the district president, Earl D. Bailey, be instructed to confer with all districts involved in the following action: "To General Conference concerned; We, the body of the district conference of the Central District of Oklahoma, hereby request the following reform for Oklahoma touching boundary lines: That the three present districts be reduced to two and that the boundary line between the two shall be the ninety-seventh meridian from the Texas border to the Arkansas River at the southeastern corner of Kay County, and from thence north via the eastern boundary of Kay County to the Kansas line." At the last conference a motion prevailed that a committee, Earl D. Bailey and Roy S. Budd, should investigate Ripley and Vera Branches relative to disorganization since so many Saints have moved away that no one is left to carry on the work. They reported Vera as reviving and that E. P. Hopkins, of Collinsville, would care for that branch, but could see no hopes for Ripley, so it was disorganized. The following delegates were elected to General Conference and instructed to cast full vote in case of division: Ed Dillon, Sister Rodella Dillon, George Kelley, Sister George Kelley, Jack Koshiway, Sister Jack Koshiway, Sister Emilie Shakespeare, Sister Earl D. Bailey, Hubert Case, and Sister Hubert Case. Pearl Greenwood, secretary.

SOUTHERN MISSOURI.—Near Tigris, August 25 and 26. Conference convened Saturday at 10.30 a. m. with J. C. Chrestensen, the district president, presiding, assisted by J. B. Ansley. The following branches reported: Beaver, 72; Thayer, 47; Springfield, 303; Ava, 74; Naylor, 35; and nonresident group, 61. Logan Creek and Millspring did not report. Membership of the district from last reports, 659. G. A. Davis, Bishop's agent, reported: Receipts, $286.86; paid out, $281; balance on hand, $7.86. Secretary-treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $8.86. Ministry reporting were: J. C. Chrestensen, J. W. Paxton, J. B. Ansley, Benjamin Pearson, G. A. Davis, and C. L. Munro. Time and place of the next conference left with the district officers and missionary in charge. Delegates to General Conference were elected as follows: J. C. Chrestensen, Mae E. Gibbons, W. Judson, Lulu Rawley, J. W. Paxton, Estella Starkey, and C. L. Munro. Sister Lulu Rawley was elected district superintendent of the Sunday school to fill vacancy caused by Brother C. E. Beal leaving the district. Preaching during the conference by J. B. Ansley and C. L. Munro. Benjamin Pearson, secretary.

Paul Revere's midnight ride has always stirred the imaginative mind—moonlight, danger, adventure, pursuit, the call to arms, the voice of liberty riding by night to arouse a potential nation, all conspired to make the dramatic:

A hurry of hoofs in a village street,
A shape in the moonlight, a bulk in the dark,
And from beneath, from the pebbles, in passing a spark
Struck out by a steed flying fearless and fleet:
That was all! And yet, through the gloom and the light,
The fate of a nation was riding that night.
And the spark struck out by that steed, in its flight,
Kindled the land into flame by its heat.

—Longfellow.

Revere himself writes that when he began his journey, first by water across the river, "it was young flood, and the moon was rising." His first duty was to cause two lanterns to be hung high in the tower of North Church, a prearranged signal. After crossing the river he obtained a horse from Deacon Larkin (a deacon as well as a church was involved in this high escapade) and began his wild ride, pausing at intervals to arouse farms and villages, and warn them that the army of the enemy had begun to move toward Lexington and Concord. And soon other messengers were riding to more distant points at top speed, shouting the fateful tidings, "To arms! to arms! The war has begun."

Revere's ride covered between eighteen and nineteen miles and lasted four hours. With a modern automobile and a good megaphone he could have accomplished as much in thirty minutes—but then, with the modern telephone or perhaps radio he need not have ridden at all—so would have been lacking the night ride, Deacon Larkin's horse, the yet warm petticoat loaned by a young "daughter of Liberty" with which Revere muffled his oar locks while crossing the river—gone also the beacon lights of old North Church. Romance abhors such deletions. (Here an irreverent, random thought inquires, "How would Revere muffle his oar locks to-day?")

We found the Commons at Lexington, where the first blood of the Revolution was shed, to be a peaceful little triangle of green sod, basking in the summer sun. At one point of the triangle stands a heroic bronze statue of a minute man. At another is a granite marker where the line of minute men stood, summoned by the long roll of William Diamond's drum. The tablet bears the words of Captain Parker: "Stand your ground! Don't fire unless fired upon! But if they want to have war let it begin here!"

It is strange how inanimate things persist. William Diamond's drum which sounded the long roll that began the revolution, whose deep rumble that day caused men to spring to arms, children to shiver with æsthetic alarm while their hair stiffened, women to look with tear-dimmed eyes into the tragic future of widowhood, that purely material, now silent thing is to be seen at Lexington in good repair; but the hands that beat upon it, the men who marched, the children who thrilled, the women who wept have long been dust.

It is refreshing to recall the reluctance of the common people on both sides, as represented by the soldiery, to plunge into this conflict. The struggle began in no ill will among the people on either side. Parker, seeing the tragic uselessness of resistance to the odds against him (having but seventy-seven men to oppose some four hundred) in spite of his brave words, finally ordered his men to disperse without firing. And when the commanding officer of the enemy gave the word to fire, the soldiery did not respond at the first order. When it was repeated: "Fire! Damn you, fire!" they deliberately fired over the heads of the minute men. Not until the third command, "Damn you, fire at them!" did they shoot to kill. (See the account by Coburn published by the Lexington Historical Society.) Eight Americans died at Lexington, among them Jonathan Harrington, who staggered almost to the door of his home and fell at the feet of his young wife. Thus, as usual, women began to pay the real price of war. A few of the minute men then returned the fire. A short-sighted court and the bellicose attitude of commanding officers in the field had forced the unwilling peoples of the mother country and the budding republic to armed conflict.

At Lexington and Concord we were made happy to reflect that to-day the will of the people is more nearly expressed in a reapproachment of all English-speaking peoples. And we conceive it to be the duty of all people, particularly our people, whether in England, Australia, Canada, or the United States, to promote good feeling and cooperation. The day for vain-glorious boasting and inflation of national pride on either side is long past—having never served any good purpose. The needs of the world are so great that all should unite. We trust that never again, either in America or on British soil, will any Paul Revere ride by day or night with a call to conflict. The great principles of law, liberty, democracy, commonly held in all our history furnish abundant material for united effort along constructive lines. Even then there were generous and courteous as well as courageous opponents, who could say with General Burgoyne: "There is a charm in the very wanderings and dreams of liberty that disarms an Englishman's anger."

The affair at Lexington lasted but thirty minutes, thirty crucial minutes in world history, and at the end the morning sun of April 19, 1775, rose upon the scene even as the evening moon had lighted the beginning of Paul Revere's ride. Immediately the enemy proceeded to Concord, their objective being the destruction of military stores at that place. At old North Bridge the battle was renewed, and the expedition soon turned into a disastrous and bloody retreat to Boston. We visited these scenes also, and then turned our attention to more peaceful, less sanguinary themes.

Concord is famous for other than militant reasons. Here dwelt some of the most brilliant members of that remarkable school of early New England writers: Emerson, Thoreau, Hawthorne, Alcott, and others. The region abounds in places of literary interest, most enticing among them being Walden Pond, where Thoreau dwelt in philosophic seclusion, to which enchanting spot we next turned our course.

The Place of Social Conditions in Our Religious Development

In a letter to one of the Presidency one of the younger men of the Presidency recently wrote:

By the way, I might suggest just here it seems to me we have been stressing our social program, or some of us have at least, as an end, whereas I am inclined to believe at the present that development of Christlike characters is the heart of the Christian message and that the social scheme is only one of the large contributing factors to conditions for that development.

It is not likely that anyone looks upon our social program as an end, but especial emphasis laid upon it as a next necessary step may give such appearance. It is well recognized that character and environment are interactionary. A more highly developed character looks for and creates a better environment, and the better environment in turn makes possible a better character. So we "go on unto perfection."

In the past we have been too strongly individualistic in emphasizing the factors of religious development, and if for the time being the coefficient we attach to social conditions is unduly large, it is but to learn the limits of the factors to be determined.

The social conditions in our development have large evaluations, however, and we must not lose sight of the fact that we are to develop conditions into which the Master will feel justified in coming.

Zion and the Child

The home is the foundation of Zion; but to be such it must be more than a place to sleep. Home is a refuge, a place of security, a "house of learning."

To say that home is Zion's foundation is to say that our hope lies in the child, for the chief function of the home should be child development. Home from this viewpoint can be defined as the permanent abode of parents seeking safety for their offspring.

The problem of Zion is inextricably mixed up with the problem of the child; and that in turn becomes the problem of getting parents to recognize the physical, social, and religious responsibilities of parenthood.

Properly envisaged it is the duty of potential parents to make this contribution to society in the best possible way. This requires early physical, mental, and spiritual education with the ideals of Zion clearly in view.

As a people we must not permit the present general home-destroying influences to enter our midst, but must work for the highest ideals of home and children.

A Time Limit on Speeches?

A certain brother in the field sends us the following clipping from the Toronto Globe under date of July 16, 1923.

The Art of Condensation

An interpreter is sometimes complete master of the situation and may take it upon himself to practice a little condensation, as in the story told in a recent book, Sergeant 331, written by F. J. E. Fitzpatrick, an officer of the Northwest Mounted Police from 1879 to 1885. During part of that time the Marquis of Lorne was Governor-General, and, accompanied by the Princess Louise, he made a tour of the Northwest. Near Calgary the Blackfeet Indians prepared a great reception for him. About 5,000 of them were present, and after displays of horsemanship and other ceremonies the regulation "pow-wow" began. Jerry Potts, a famous guide, acted as interpreter. Loud Voice, the chief Indian orator, started off at a mile a minute. The Marquis of Lorne, after listening attentively for about fifteen minutes, motioned the Indian to stop, and inquired, through the colonel in charge of his escort, for an interpretation of the speech so far, saying that the interpreter would not remember all if it went on without interruption. Jerry Potts simply replied: "Let him go on."

They let him go on, to be interrupted three or four times again, but always with the same result. The marquis finally gave up further attempts at premature translation. Loud Voice spoke for fully one hour and a half, at the end of which time he sat down at the sound of thousands of "how-hows" on the part of the other Indians present, signifying their concurrence in what he said. All heads were now turned toward Jerry Potts for a full interpretation of what must surely be a most interesting and complete statement. The colonel again inquired of him what the Indian had said. Jerry Potts hesitated a moment and then replied: "He said, 'Grub!'"

There can be no doubt that in this case the interpreter gave a fair translation of the Indian's oration.

The brother who sends us this clipping does so in an argument in favor of a time limit being placed upon speeches during the General Conference. He would introduce the following resolution, "Resolved that we limit all speeches to twenty minutes." Then he goes on to say, "Any man who cannot condense, boil down, his sentiments into that space better keep the seat he has been sitting on. There will be fewer wounded spirits and sore hearts." And he continues by saying that if this resolution should pass he and a great many others would be delighted to come to the conference under such a rule who otherwise will not come, feeling that a few men will monopolize the time and they themselves will have no opportunity to be heard.

As a matter of fact, while the church is loath to apply a time limit, feeling that it would interfere with free speech, to the contrary a time limit of a reasonable length would promote free speech, as it would give many more men opportunity to be heard from and the delegates would thus have a greater variety of arguments and viewpoints and facts brought before them upon which to base judgment. Instead of one or two being heard from during the sessions of an entire day, a dozen or more might have opportunity to present their views upon the questions under discussion. In that way a reasonable time limit imposed at the very beginning of conference would conserve rather than destroy the just requirements of free speech.

Acknowledgment

In response to a telegram of condolence sent Mrs. Warren G. Harding by President Frederick M. Smith for the assembled people of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on the Campus, shortly after the death of her husband, the late President of the United States, the following message has been received by President Smith:

Mrs. Harding deeply appreciates your message of sympathy and begs that you will express her sincere gratitude to those associated with you.

Editorial Changes

The Board of Publication met in Independence Friday and, following the recommendations of the board of editors, made the following editorial changes:

S. A. Burgess was released as associate editor of the HERALD and was made editor of the Journal of History, to take the place of Walter W. Smith, who was released from that editorial position for educational work. Some time ago E. D. Moore was released as assistant editor of the HERALD, and Alfred White was elected to the HERALD staff. At the meeting Friday, Arthur E. McKim was elected managing editor of the various church publications.

Following is the complete editorial alignment: Board of editors and editors-in-chief of HERALD, The First Presidency; Staff Editor, Alfred E. White. Editor of Ensign, John F. Garver, Editor Autumn Leaves, E. D. Moore. Editor Journal of History, S. A. Burgess. Editor Stepping Stones, Estella Wight. Editor Hope, Estella Wight and Ethel Skank. Managing editor of church publications, Arthur E. McKim. Business manager, G. S. Trowbridge.

When All Else Fails

Once more disaster sweeps across an unsuspecting world, terrifying nations, and leaving destruction in its wake.

Five years of slow but hopeful recovery from the desolation of the great war was marred almost beyond recognition during the past few weeks. An accumulation of misfortunes unparalleled in recent history marks the breathless trend of events during this short time.

What wonder the Saints of God are reminded of his admonitions to them? What wonder we renew our pledges to the restored gospel and cleave only closer to the firm foundation of our faith?

And after your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunderings, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds. And all things shall be in commotion; and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people; and angels shall fly through the midst of heaven, crying with a loud voice, sounding the trump of God, saying, Prepare ye, prepare ye, O inhabitants of the earth, for the judgment of our God is come: behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him.— Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25.

We read with horror the reports of the cataclysm in Japan which took a toll of lives vastly in excess of that in any other earthquake and tidal wave in history. The Messina disaster of 1908 recorded the loss of about 95,000 lives, and the destruction of Lisbon in 1755 saw 40,000 dead. Can it be comprehended when the estimated loss in Japan is placed in the hundreds of thousands of lives and destruction of property placed in billions? Figures too great for the mind to grasp! Notes the Outlook:

Typical facts stated in the dispatches are, that Tokyo's business and financial section is wiped out and scores of thousands of houses destroyed and the water system has broken down; that Yokohama's foreign and business sections are destroyed; that Nagoya, with a population of 620,000, has been virtually destroyed; that 600 people perished in the collapse of one railway tunnel; that martial law has been established in ruined cities.

Italy startled the world by making advances upon Greece; and her bombardment of defenseless Corfu, where innocent women and children were killed, all but plunged Europe into another struggle of death. France scarcely adds anything of benefit to the disturbed conditions when she continues her occupation of the Ruhr. Spain is in the throes of a revolution, while her government at the same time wages war in Morocco. The famine in Russia, the starving thousands in the Near East, made worse by the burning of Smyrna and the prolonged massacres of Armenians by the Turks, have not been made lighter by the typhoon which followed the earthquake in Japan and took a toll of another five thousand lives.

In our own country the wreck of a part of the Pacific fleet on the rocks off the western coast, the Berkeley fire which destroyed a great section of that city with loss into the millions, forest fires in twenty California counties, and the State of Oklahoma which is under martial law, are some of the unusual situations existing.

Scarcely does the world accustom itself to one great disaster until another is added to the already riotous mass of conflicting emotions.

And in that day shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars and the whole earth shall be in commotion . . . and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled; and there shall be men standing in that generation that shall not pass, until they shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come over the land; . . . and there shall be earthquakes, also in divers places, and many desolations; yet men will harden their hearts against me, and they will take up the sword one against another, and they will kill one another.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4.

Surely the signs of the times are sufficient to bring forcibly to the attention of the Saints the warnings and promises of God in the past. With the hastening time upon us, faces should be turned Zionward and hearts quickened to the significance of the moment. Shall we wait until all else fails? Preparation must be hastened if we would make for ourselves a place in the building of God's kingdom on earth.

Build Ever Better

Eternal motion seems to be nature's universal order. Nothing stands still. Backward or forward, up or down.

And so it is even with our individual development, our progress, our activity. We advance or retrograde—never stand still. Fortunately for us, within certain limits we determine which it is.

The lesson we learn, then, in looking out upon nature and her wondrous activities is to "keep moving," onward and upward.

Holmes thanked the chambered nautilus for the message it brought from heaven and then exclaimed:

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll.
Leave thy low-vaulted past,
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea.

As a people, individually and collectively, we have greater incentive than others for upward activity—progress—for Zion beckons us.

Are you moving upward in preparation and service?
F. M. S.

Habit Thinking

We are told that a church paper recently congratulated a certain Sunday school because a number of its pupils could repeat the names of the books of the Bible in fifty seconds by the stop watch.

Could it be possible that this feat marks the acme of religious thought in the Sunday schools of to-day? More accurately speaking, it is not brain thought, it is spinal cord thought. The impulses never could have reached the brain in so short a time and expression be given.

Yet we are told by some that the ideal situation in life will be when we can react perfectly to all situations by habit—that is without thinking. It is true that if we get into the right habits we are more successful in life than when we fail to make a habit of good things. Habits give us time to think about other things. How much time would be wasted in life if we had to stop and think each time we took a step! Habits are fine things. They release us from bondage, yet they also bind. If situations in life never changed, then habits once established could be made ideal, but unfortunately new problems in life are constantly presenting themselves. Old habits must be broken and new ones made.

The child in Sunday school learns to repeat the books of the Bible, but such an accomplishment is not giving that child a religious experience. All it does is to enable him more readily to find the books of the Bible when looking for them. This saves time and gives the child opportunity to pursue other lines of thought. We are sure the object of learning the books by heart to be repeated in a short time in the case of this certain Sunday school was not the aim of the instruction but that instead it was a trick to stimulate interest.

Many such contests in the course of the lessons in Sunday school classes are the means for interesting the pupils and as such are desirable. But as the expression of religious experiences in the lives of the young people they are nil.

One habit occurring to us that should never be changed is, "Do unto others as you would be done by."

Follow that little rule in making your actions habitual and you will never deviate far from the true path that leads to the throne of glory.

Everybody Is a Scientist

Every man is a scientist but many do not know it. The baby that sees the pretty white flame of the candle and sticks his finger into it, is a scientist, that is, if it learns that the "pretty white thing" hurts. In that case the baby will keep its finger away from the flame. The baby was only experimenting with things about it and having tried them out, knows how to behave with regard to them.

The home is the experimental laboratory of the child. When it grows up the world offers broader things in which to experiment.

A certain class of men who devote their time to experimenting and classifying their results so others will know about them are called scientists. That is a profession, but everybody is a scientist to some extent.

If we as parents would escape condemnation, the education of our children must be so carefully safeguarded and developed that at no time can an erring child say to us, "You did not tell me of the danger, and I was off guard."

To accomplish this, a persistent and thorough process of education of parents must be carried on in order to make Zion possible. F. M. S.

PART TEN

God loves beauty. Otherwise he would not take such pains to color a violet blooming unseen in the woods or the inside of a sea shell fathoms deep in water. Because his creative power is always pouring forth new creations he can afford that many of them should be evanescent, like a butterfly's wing lasting for a day, or the evening sunset changing as you watch. God loves beauty, and while many of his creations are evanescent, when he has had particular pleasure in working out a design, he makes it more permanent. So when he made the coast of Maine he reinforced her hills with granite and covered them with oak and pine and set before her the eternal sea that changes always yet never changes. And when all was done he smiled, and

Nemo's Noddings

Many persons experience the thrills and enthusiasm which come on visiting historic spots and places in the church. And our zeal is not infrequently renewed by such visits.

A visit to Far West is quite sure to arouse not only the enjoyable sensations of being on ground sanctified by the sacrifices and devotions of the past, but meditations upon the present.

Did the Saints in Far West and Independence in the thirties have greater faith than we? Did they have clearer vision of our goals and ideals? Was their devotion to the cause greater than ours?

Our admiration for the Saints of the thirties in meeting the adversities of persecution and subduing new territory causes us to ask, Would those stalwarts be pleased with what we have done in the way of accomplishment of our ideals?

Comparison while sometimes odious may be stimulating as well. The Saints at Far West, though few in numbers, had the courage of their convictions, and they undertook tasks which shame us when we compare conditions.

If at Far West the Saints amidst such comparatively unfavorable conditions undertook the erection of a magnificent church edifice, what should we be doing? And in the light of this what excuse have we to offer for our delay on the auditorium? And if our delay in building this (in such marked contrast to the promptitude with which the Far West Saints approached the task of building) is characteristic of our temper now, when may we expect work to begin on the temple?

Obedience was a characteristic of the Saints at Far West. Their belief in an authoritative religion was active and dynamic, not passive and static.

The Saints at Far West heeded the admonition to buy land. In comparison to our possibilities, what are we doing?

Team work was a characteristic of the Saints at Far West, and of that time—team work for the interests of the whole church. Our team work now seems to be teams organized to fight one another.

Ahead of us lies a great work as a church. Will we approach the task with the same faith and devotion the Saints of Far West approached their tasks?

Trained Men and Their Relation to the Modern Social Problems

By Samuel A. Burgess

The world is awake to conditions. What will the church do? There are needed men of God, trained for service, who know the history of social problems and what has been done in the past to meet the problem of to-day.

[The following manuscript was written before the World War, namely in June, 1914, and is interesting as showing the conditions existing at that time and for purposes of comparison. How much progress have we made in nine and a quarter years? —EDITORS.]

Past ages have been much concerned with religious toleration and political liberty. That has been gained. In this age, in spite of the remarkable advancement in mechanical and scholastic lines, the great cry is for economic freedom and social justice. We need to consider first the problem that confronts modern society, then the necessity and advisability of having trained men to cope therewith, and in what their training should consist.

In this country many men can remember the time when the greater part of the land was still open and unfenced and they could ride at will the unbroken prairies. It was a haven, a land of the free and home of the brave to the overcrowded peoples of Europe. Land was to be had as a gift from the Government to any who would farm it. It seems scarcely a generation since Texas was offering a league and a labor of land (about ten sections) to bona fide settlers; and when a man in Arkansas, in selling a tract of land, but in double the acres agreed upon, and when his attention was called to it, replied, "Sh—, don't say anything; maybe the other fellow won't notice it."

But that day is past. With the present crowding of the country the increasing population of the city, and the consequent high prices, there is an awakening to the necessity for economic justice. The problem is ages old. In England and other European countries, more progress has been made in intensive use of the land than in America, largely for the reason above set forth, the abundance of natural resources in America, not only of land but of timber, of mineral and other raw material until so recent a period. But the rising cost of living, together with the splendid resources of this country brings more vividly the question, Why must some, while others are suffering for the bare necessities, and the bread lines growing, have a superfluity? The army of the unemployed becomes a serious problem for society. "Charity" we have, but is "charity" enough?

We may condemn quickly the Industrial Workers of the World. But is their rebellion against society without cause? Their methods are radical, and so is the suffering which has called forth their organization. It is a sign worthy of consideration.

Then while we grumble of conditions in Mexico, there is war in West Virginia, in Michigan, and in Colorado. There is centralization of power and of wealth in a few hands, gatling guns, hired guards, and bloodshed. To meet organized capital, there is an attempt at organized labor in the labor union. What are the causes of this social unrest? How far are they justified? What is the remedy?

There remains also the problems of child labor, of working hours for working women, of rest rooms, and proper surroundings. Yet there are the ill-paid garment workers and the neglect of common precaution which brings so serious a loss in factory fires and elsewhere in industry. We talk of liberty, yet what of the man who dares not testify for his fellow worker in court? (This from a case under personal observation.) We talk of freedom, but what freedom is there if a man must accept what he is given; and if he leaves, goes on the black list, and must starve or submit?

Then there is the realization of an awakening public conscience, as shown by the movement of the Socialist Party. These things are symptoms and signs of an inner condition. It is not enough simply to try their principles and accept or reject. Before we can remedy, we should have a real grasp of the conditions out of which they have grown. Thinking men admit the need of exact information, and only then, we may have some hopes of a solution.

In the thirties a plan was laid down in the revelations to the church, which is as yet but little understood by our own people. Much that is plain is being done and developed by the men of the world. In England in the forties cooperation took its rise, and has proven successful in its relief for the laboring classes. The necessity for a nearer approach to equality of opportunity; for justice rather than charity, which contents itself with the giving of material things, is coming to be realized in the world by thinking men.

But there are other problems yet to be solved, and the greatest of all waiting solution. The time appears to be approaching when those who will not take up arms must flee to Zion for safety. The church should be in the front ranks in social service, in considering the modern social problem, and in attempting its solution, in giving something of a heaven here on earth, rather than always talking of the heaven that is to come in some other world.

But for the church and for society, trained men are needed. Men are needed whose hearts are tender to the suffering of others; who will not therefore refuse to consider the problem, yet men stern enough not to be moved by first appearances, but ready to use, if need be, the surgeon's knife to discover the seat of the trouble. The problem must be understood before there is hope of a solution.

Men are needed with a physical strength for the work and its strain, with the intellectual capacity to bring to the realm of reason all the various elements of the problem and consider them dispassionately. For justice should be done to every interest. It is not enough to condemn and punish. There must be first the capacity and ability, God given if you choose, inborn if you prefer, all that can come from these elements of heredity, environment and will to cope with and meet the issue. Education can only develop this; it can only unfold the talent and ability already latent.

We rather like that line at Hampton Institute, "The object of education is preparation for life; the test of life is capacity for service." All too often the cramming of the mind with abstract facts is considered and treated as education, rather than seeking for the development of the natural individual capacity. So some have suggested like Baltasar Gracian (though we believe others have made a similar suggestion) "Man, in the zenith of his development, may be known by the purity of his life, the cleanness of his thought, the maturity of his judgment, the firmness of his will." But we still prefer the answer made by the editor of Colliers' Weekly in November, 1913, "that man is at his highest point who, upon attaining the top of his ambition (or upon not attaining it) sees the true value of all mundane ambition and turns his energies to service and self sacrifice."

But however we may differ in our view of education, the word trained itself is significant and can only mean that the natural capacity has been developed after the figure of a man preparing for some great test. He should have knowledge of concrete facts: What others have studied, what others have tried to do, what others have discovered, where others have failed. Doubtless it will take many—some to observe and report phenomena and others to study and bring together the conclusions reached from each group of experiments or observations, so as to learn where lies the difficulty and where the possible solution. Why waste time, as is still too often done, with the fruitless presentation or discussion of plans that have been tried many times and found wanting?

But to have the book knowledge is not enough. To solve the problem there should also be the sympathy that comes only from personal contact with humanity. We can scarcely consider a hermit, however wise, capable of helping greatly with the problem. There should be that common touch, which not only gains the sympathy of our fellow men, but also their good will, and for himself gains the knowledge that personal contact alone can give of their suffering and of their problem. True social leaders must get under and lift.

As Kipling has it, "If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue, or walk with kings nor lose the common touch; if neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you; if all men count with you, but none too much; if you can fill each unforgiving minute with sixty seconds worth of distance run, yours is the earth and everything that's in it, and what is more, you'll be a man, my son." Or again, "If you can dream and not make dreams your master; if you can think and not make thoughts your aim."

In other words, experience is needed as well as a trained mind. We must have the learning that comes from the association with men, from contact not only with wise men, but with others as well, until we can understand their problems, their trials, their suffering, and their infirmity. It is not hard to get up and preach of service to humanity; it is not hard to sit and write of service to humanity and the plan that the Master has laid down and lived himself, but it is another thing to follow in his steps and show by precept and example in our own lives a willingness to sacrifice, to do without, to set for others an example that gives reasonable hopes of success for all. Example must always outvalue precept in dealing with problems of this kind. "If you can think and not make thoughts your aim." But make your thinking only a means to action, and that action of definite service to mankind. One step at least will then have been taken.

There should be also something of that compassion, of that understanding, which only the Spirit of God can give, that light which lighteneth every man that cometh into the world, but which the devoted one may receive in ever-increasing measure. Yet it is strange to see in the counsel of the divine mind for the solution of this very problem, how frequent is the admonition to study all good books, to gain knowledge by study and also by prayer. Nor is this set forth only in our book of Doctrine and Covenants, but in both the Old and New Testaments as well.

The solution of the problem requires something more than intellectual ability. It requires something of the compassion that our Elder Brother had; of the understanding of the sufferings of humanity. It requires more than the making of laws and the changing of material environment. It requires for the final solution the real genuine answer of a change in the hearts of men and a putting on of the divine likeness. We must have a development of the individual man, of the element of the will to do righteousness, as well as an improvement of the laws of material environment and of open and just opportunity.

It is significant to note what mere instruction or education in the narrow and popular sense has done to fit man for efficient work. There is a very marked percentage of increased gains from even a selfish standpoint. This is only what should be logically expected, that the trained or developed man should be better able to deal with any problem than he possibly could before his abilities were unfolded, whether that training is secured in recognized schools, or whether he has had to work it out largely for himself.

Briefly, then, we must have; first, capacity. Too many of those belonging to the university student body have been aptly described as "natural hewers of wood and drawers of water." There must be intellectual ability. There must also be moral courage and strength. There must be the training and preparation, not only intellectual but also social, moral, and even religious; a training not only in knowledge but also in wisdom; through the direction of the Spirit of God.

Such men are attempting the consideration of the social problem. Such men are associating the church with social service. Such men are uniting the forces of right against the evils of the day, and more of such men are coming forward each year.

God grant that the men of the church and the church herself, called forth in these latter days, may assume their rightful place in bringing to suffering humanity a solution.

What Is Our Duty to the Indians?

By Aura Fike Jones

Recently a question was raised concerning books and literature about the Indian. There seems to be a growing desire on the part of the membership to inform themselves more fully about this people and the manner in which they are being treated by the Government.

The Sunset Magazine has been publishing some splendid articles about the Indians, and for the benefit of those who may not be able to see this magazine I will give a list of some of the articles that have appeared since the November, 1922, issue. They are as follows:

America's Red Armenians—The Blackfeet Starve to Death, but the Indian Bureau Blocks Private Relief, by James Willard Schultz.

The Indian and His Master—From a Guardian the Indian Bureau Has Become the Despotic Ruler of Its 300,000 Wards, by Clyde Kelly, Member of the House of Representatives.

Our Treatment of the Indians—It Comprises the Blackest

Pages in the Record of the United States, by Stewart Edward White.

Plundering the Pueblo Indians—The Pueblos Are Fighting Desperately Against a Quick Destruction, by John Collier.

The Pueblos' Last Stand—If the Arizona and New Mexico Tribes Lose Their Land Their Ancient Civilization Dies, by John Collier.

Our Indian Policy—Why Not Treat the Red Man as Wisely, as Generously as We Have Treated the Filipino? by John Collier.

The Filipino and the Indian—Why Has America Uplifted the One and Slaughtered the Other? by Walter V. Woehlke.

No Trespassing—The Indian Bureau Proposes to Eject All Investigators From the Reservations It Rules, by John Collier.

The Paiute "Uprising"—The Indian Bureau Is Responsible for the Fighting Between White and Red Man in Southern Utah, by Major General Hugh L. Scott.

Let 'Em Die!—California's Neglected Indians Appeal in Vain to the White Man's Sense of Justice, by Walter V. Woehlke.

There is also a very good article in the July, 1923, Current History magazine by Frances A. Blanchard, title as follows:

The Deplorable State of Our Indians—The American Indian, deprived of all civic and property rights, given land allotments too small for self support, and forced to live in poverty, though possessing millions of dollars held in trust.

This article also gives us the aims of the Society of American Indians, stating the suggestions for the reorganization of the Indian Service.

In the Ladies' Home Journal for July, 1923, is an article which all should carefully read, especially the women as it may help them to realize the power that they have had to use in saving the Pueblo Indians. The article gives us a true picture of the home life of the Indians. The beauty of symbolism, the poise and serenity of environment is a heritage we might well look forward to sharing. The much-debated question of the dance is here clarified. We should no longer be deceived as to its true character and meaning.

Those of you who have these magazines or can get the back numbers cut these articles out and preserve them for reference. See that they are placed in the hands of your missionary or any of the members who are apt to be delegates to the next General Conference.

We must all inform ourselves on this subject, for soon we are going to be called upon to decide what our policy as a church is going to be in regard to the treatment of the Indian. Is it going to continue to be one of indifference or are we going to join hands with the fearless men and women who are willing to face the truth and fight for right and justice?

Our church was organized only a little over a year when the command was given to carry to the Lamanites the record of their forefathers. It was January, deep snow lay on the ground when those brave missionaries started out to walk the fifteen hundred miles to the borders of the Lamanites. Why did they not wait until spring and go in greater comfort? or why did they not wait ten or twenty years or until the railroads were built and go in still greater comfort? The command was given—it was their choice to obey. We have the same command to-day. Are we doing as much now with all of our present-day comforts and facilities as they did in their day when there was little else than a stout staff to lean upon and a guiding hand to direct?

The head of anything can move forward only as fast as its body is willing to carry it. A very simple truth indeed. As a church let us be ready to move forward with our leader, and the only way to be ready is for every member to inform himself and decide what he thinks the church should do to help the Indian. Also if you want to do something really effective let your Congressman know you are informed and that you are watching to find his attitude on this subject.

We have several missionaries working among the Indian people, and much credit is due them for their splendid services. But they are handicapped by the condition in which they find this people. They are beginning to realize it is hard to teach the gospel story to people living in servitude or to teach the principle of tithing to those who never have anything they can call their own. So the appeal comes to us for clothing and for help of any kind to supply the needs of a people who are suffering in the midst of plenty. In the words of Brother P. R. Burton: "Many people want to send tracts and papers. This is a very good thing in a way, but old papers and tracts don't warm people's bodies and the tract is soon forgotten. But an old overcoat or some clothing that will add to their comfort is the thing most needed."

Can we as a church afford to make converts among a people who must immediately be placed upon a list of permanent charities? Is it not our policy to help others help themselves, and as rapidly as possible put them in a position where they can give instead of receive? Then if we are true to that principle we find on our hands a work of immense proportions, very few of us understanding just what it is, or how to go about to perform it. It is a work that must be done and we are the people to do it.

Was the Book of Mormon given to us only for our pleasure and enlightenment, or, does it convey a sacred trust and a duty to perform?

As a church we must win the confidence of the Indian by showing we are his friends, and proving it by doing all in our power to free him from the bondage of the Indian Bureau.

When once free, the Red Man will then naturally turn to his friend and benefactor for light and guidance in other directions. It is then that he will be ready to listen to the story of his forefathers, and to think on the wonders of this marvelous work. It is then that he will be ready to take his place and perform the work that is his in the building of Zion.

The Oratorio "Saint Paul" by Mendelssohn

By William T. Goullee

To be presented during the coming General Conference.

At Offenbach one of the party stayed behind to pay the toll for the rest. "Is not that," said the toll keeper, "the Mr. Mendelssohn whose music we sing at our society?" "It is." "Then if you please I should like to pay the toll for him myself."

This little incident is not related so much to show the recognition of the musician, but to show the affection and regard of his friends and relatives, and all who came in contact with him. In the ideal purity of his thought and character there is a sacredness which many times is recognized in his compositions. Perhaps the oratorio "Saint Paul" by Felix Mendelssohn is not so often sung as some of the other oratorios, consequently it is not so well known or so popular although parts of it may sound familiar.

For the text or libretto, Mendelssohn made his own selection from the Bible, with the help of his friends Furst and Schubring. Like Handel, he knew his Bible well, and as he once said, "The Bible is best of all."

He began the music for "Saint Paul" in March, 1834, and anticipated it would not take him long to finish it, but unfortunately, through illness and the death of his father, the music dragged on and was not completed until 1836. The passing of his father affected him as some of his letters go to show. He was very fond of his father and much affected by the loss.

The oratorio "Saint Paul" was to have been produced at Frankfort but it was postponed and eventually given at the Lower Rhine Festival at Dusseldorf in May, 1836. It was not produced under the best of conditions, in a small room, and naturally overheated. But although there were these disadvantages, the performance was executed with the greatest enthusiasm and produced a deep impression. For details of this performance the reader should go to the accounts given by Klingemann, Hiller, and Polko. The Musical World for June 17, 1836, gives an interesting account. To English readers the interest of the performance is increased by the fact that Sterndale Bennett, then 20 years of age, and fresh from the Royal Academy of Music, London, was present. Although the oratorio was not produced in Frankfort as intended, another incident occurred which had a very important result in another way, for Mendelssohn there met Mademoiselle Cecile Jeanrenaud, and in March, 1837, they were married. It proved to be a very happy union and as one said "a wedded life of pure unclouded happiness to the very end."

The first performance of Saint Paul in England was given at Liverpool in October, 1837, under the direction of Sir George Smart. The second performance was given in London, and some notes taken from Mendelssohn's private journal of performances given by the Sacred Harmonic Society at the Old Exeter Hall, goes to show the pleasure it gave him. He writes, "I found it very interesting," etc. "I can hardly express the gratification I felt in hearing my work performed in so beautiful a manner, indeed I shall never wish to hear some parts of it better executed than they were on that night. The power of the choruses—the large body of good and musical voices, and the style in which they sang the whole of the music gave me the highest and most heartfelt treat."

Undoubtedly enthusiasm for choral singing was just as good then as it is now. An American musical critic recently at the Handel Festival held at the Crystal Palace, England, noted the exceptional high standard of quality of the voices in the choruses, etc. Mendelssohn had the pleasure of conducting the "Saint Paul" at the Birmingham Festival and at this time it must have been a foretaste of that wonderful performance of his famous "Elijah" which followed some time after the "Saint Paul" performance. After the Birmingham Festival Mendelssohn again came to London and conducted and also played at the famous Philharmonic concerts.

Only in few instances in musical history, in fact in the lives of great and famous men and women, do we find them so amply gifted with every good quality of mind and heart, so carefully brought up amidst good influence and with every circumstance that would make them happy and so thoroughly fulfill their mission. In Mendelssohn's life he had very few things to conceal or regret.

Mendelssohn's last public appearance was at Leipzig where he conducted "Saint Paul" on Good Friday of 1847. To oratorios Mendelssohn restored the deep religious feeling of Bach and Handel, and as Moschales wrote of "Saint Paul," "Its chief qualities are, in my judgment, majesty and noble simplicity, deep feeling and an artistic form."

Mendelssohn attached great importance to the text of his work, and in the libretto into which it was framed. Not only did his refined taste and cultivated intellect require dignity, beauty, and fitness in the words which he was to set to music, but as a reverent earnest student of the Bible, he would have no selection or transposition of the Scriptures which was not in keeping with the divine spirit of revelation. He did not regard his own work as perfect, but like the great apostle, left the things which were behind and pressed on to those which were before.

And so in the forthcoming performances of the "Saint Paul" during the conference I feel sure we as a people will leave a testimony of our musical efforts. We all should realize even in our social and economic problems, as Herbert Hoover tells us, "We cannot march on toward better days unless it is inspired by things of the spirit." So it should be in our musical efforts. Even after a period of twenty-seven years Russia realizes she cannot get on without the oratorio and, with the sanction of the Soviet, the "Elijah," "Saint Paul," and a few others of the old masters are to be revived. Whatever may be said, these famous old oratorios still live and are sung throughout the world.

To prevent the loss of those newly baptized in isolated places we should first make sure they are truly and fully converted. A fully converted man is slow to retract, but will stand firm through every trial. Second, stay with a good opening and return to care for those found worthy. Third, utilize the church literature for the instruction and information of those interested and to retain those converted. The missionary power of the Ensign should not be ignored, nor the educational value of the HERALD.

Our Perfect Day

By Charlotte Pearson

The Saints look on to a perfect day,
When the Master of men will reign,
When the sun will rise with a quickening ray
Bringing peace to the earth again.
But while we wait and long for that day
Thinking God will perform it all,
We forget that we must his agents be,
And be ready to answer his call.

If we withhold the means he has given,
To scatter his great truths abroad;
If we keep back tithes and our offerings too,
We will have to account to our God.
He will find the mark of the beast on our hands
And 'twill be on our foreheads, too,
For if self is our goal that binds us with bands,
We cannot to his law be true.

We must consecrate to him all we have,
To escape from all Babylon's sin.
The motive for all our actions must be,
That the world for truth we would win.
If we will do this for the love of God,
And for love of our fellow men,
Then all our days will be perfect days,
And Christ will dwell here again.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Negro Exodus From South

Reports have shown that the Negro is rapidly leaving the South and moving northward. Recently a great exodus has taken place and is still going on. Some writers have attributed the cause of the exodus to the activities of the Ku Klux Klan and the frequent lynchings and floggings. Another reason, however, is perhaps the most significant, and that is the economic.

In the Literary Digest the press of the country is reviewed and some of the various attitudes given. It appears that the boll-weevil is destroying the cotton crop and with the failure of crops comes the economic depression of wages. Work becomes scarce and the Negroes depend chiefly upon work in the cotton fields for their existence. What wonder that they are moving away?

In Baldwin County, Georgia, the Negroes are reported to be leaving at the rate of from fifty to one hundred a week, and homes are now being evacuated at such a rate that whole communities are now nothing but empty houses.

At a conference of educated Negroes in Atlanta recently they admitted that they could do nothing to cope with the boll-weevil. Last year they lost ninety per cent of the cotton crop and this year the failure may reach equal proportions.

When one considers that the negro receives only one dollar and twenty-five cents a day wages in a great area of the South and that the plantation owners furnished a shack for him to live in and also such extras as bacon and meal once a week, but that now the owners can no longer finance such a project, what is to become of the Negro? His standard of living was low enough before the present trouble. To sink lower would mean starvation.

The Norfolk Journal and Guide denounces urban living conditions as well as rural:

"It is a fact that the average colored man hopes and strives to have his family live in a decent home in decent surroundings. They want conveniences, such as electric lights, bathtubs, gas, and other things conducive to sanitary living. But it is sadly admitted, that with rents at top prices for shanties in these cities, it is entirely out of the question for the average Negro family-head to even think of enjoying these conveniences at the prevailing wages in this section. Rents are high in the North and West, and so are wages. Again, you get something for your rent there. People will pay the rent because they can live in comfort and decency. Nobody objects to paying high rent when wages are high, and they get conveniences commensurate with what they pay."

The Negro is going north because of economic pressure in the South and living conditions which for a time have been growing worse rather than better. James S. Peters, president of the Georgia Bankers' Association, says:

"I believe that the Negro had rather remain in the South. The South needs him. We are his best friends and he is our best source of labor supply. The question of how to keep him is largely a local one.

"First—Wages must necessarily increase to par with those of the North and East, with proper allowances for the difference in the cost of living. It may be said that we cannot pay the wages offered by industrial centers, and if this is true, then the emigration will continue until the oversupply either brings down the wage level in the North and East, or the undersupply here justifies an increase.

"Second—Living conditions in the Negro sections of our own towns and cities must be improved by the authorities.

"Third—Our educational facilities must be increased. I believe that the Georgia Legislature should establish a commission with suitable power and funds to establish, at a convenient point in the State, a real industrial school, where the Negro boys and girls can be trained at a minimum expense.

"Reports reaching here from South Carolina show that 48,000 Negroes have migrated from that State since November 1, 1922."

Ancient Palace Duplicated

The spirit of Paris invades the Golden Gate, for an exact reproduction of the Palace of the Legion of Honor of Paris has been placed in San Francisco to house California's new Museum of Franco-American Art.

The original building was designed by Rousseau and erected in 1786 for the Prince of Salm-Salm. The new building in San Francisco was a gift of Mrs. Adolph Spreckles. The Literary Digest quotes L'Illustration in giving an account of the donation:

"Several weeks ago M. Leon Berard, Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, surrounded by Marshals Foch and Joffre, and a brilliant group of artists, including Besnard and Bartholome, opened an unusually interesting exposition at the Palace of the Legion of Honor in Paris.

"Messieurs," said a young and charming American woman in welcoming them, "I am happy and proud to be authorized to receive you in this home of French honor and to present to you the work my husband and I have undertaken with a view to perpetuating French genius on the American shore of the Pacific, where there will soon be completed a palace exactly resembling the one in which we now stand."

"The speaker, Mrs. Adolph Spreckles, is a great-granddaughter of the Marquis de Bretteville, the heroic colonel of Louis XVI's Swiss Hundred, and, in proof of her devotion to France, she is founding a museum of French art whose building will exactly reproduce our Palace of the Legion of Honor. It dominates a cliff overlooking the Golden Gate at the entrance to San Francisco Bay."

The idea originated in 1915 when France took official part in the International Exposition in spite of her action at the time in the war, and built a frail building modeled after the Palace of the Legion of Honor. Mrs. Spreckles decided to erect a permanent edifice dedicated to French art so the completion of this building marks the culmination of her idea.

The museum is to be devoted mainly to French art, but will also extended hospitality to the arts of Belgium, Rumania, Poland, Greece, Jugoslavia, and America, says Mrs. Spreckles.

About thirty important pieces of sculpture have at this time been obtained through the enlistment of the interests of the famous Rodin. Exhibits donated by the countries mentioned bring the collection up to a considerable size. More is to be added before the official opening of the museum next year.

New Sunday School Class Books

We are offering a simplified class book for Sunday-school teachers. It takes the place of those we have sold for years, which have become out of date. It is an excellent book in every way, and local officers should order a copy with a view to improvement in record keeping for the coming year. Price 5 cents each.

Interferes With Religious Narrowness

People who have been too narrow to place their feet inside a church to which they do not belong are now having their religious narrowness interfered with by the radio, says an editorial in the Christian Century. With special reference to Catholic and Protestant churches this article reads:

"It is a well-known fact that one of the mortal sins which Catholics have been counseled to avoid has been that of attendance at Protestant services. With the coming of the radio, and the broadcasting of sermons by Protestant divines, a new and acute angle has been given to this problem. Thousands of Catholics are now hearing occasional sermons by gifted Protestant preachers. If only the wave length of Protestant truth were of a different length to that of 'Catholic' truth the problem would be greatly simplified for the Roman church. But that is their problem, not ours. Meanwhile the stations in their broadcasting of these sermons are enlarging the straitened concepts of many a Catholic mind."

Care for Movie-Mad Girls

Movie-mad girls who find their way to Hollywood only to be disillusioned, now have a place to go in their disappointment where care will be given them until they can return home or get a position.

The National Board of the Y. W. C. A. at Hollywood has established a "roundhouse" which was devised for the purpose of saving these girls from despair and perhaps ruin. Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has moved the organization to donate $120,000 to the project.

Hundreds of girls come to Hollywood each year to act in the movies. They come with the idea that stars are made over night and that million-dollar salaries are to be had for the asking. Some come with no money, others with provision for returning home if they fail to make good, but the latter are in the smaller class. Girls who have a pretty face or who have shown some aptitude in amateur dramatics, and others who believe they will screen well come to this nebula of the drama, according to the Literary Digest. Little do they know the hardships which must be undergone in climbing to the top, and less do they know that it is almost impossible to obtain a living by starting at the bottom.

The roundhouse plans to look after such girls until they can return home or obtain work that they can do. The Presbyterian believes it would be wiser to send out information over the land informing parents and girls concerning the actual conditions. It continues:

"Let every girl be sent home as soon as possible, and warning be sent out that no more are wanted. When a life of useful industry is thus supplanted by a life of artificiality, imitation and indulgence, we can hope for nothing but breakdown and disaster for the rising generation. These well-meaning agencies must beware lest they sow the seeds of a nation-wide and generation-long misery and shame."

Do You Believe This?

Appearing in The Western Machinery World, San Francisco, is a weird tale of a haunted restaurant. This restaurant was started in a building behind which was a station for the generation of electric current for light and power. The restaurant opened as most restaurants do and patrons came to partake of the dainties offered for consumption. In the Literary Digest may be found the following quotation:

"Not long thereafter, the manager of the light and power company found in his morning mail a letter from the restaurant keeper, complaining that 'electricity' from the adjoining sub-station was cutting up such pranks in his restaurant that his business was being seriously interfered with, and would the lighting company please take steps to confine their loose current within their own station walls. Indeed, he could do no business. No 'help' would stay, nor patrons come, because of the strange happenings in his establishment. His silver and plated ware were blackened and his utensils of iron and steel were magnetized; customers' watches were stopped, and table knives would not stay where they were put.

"The manager called one of his electrical engineers and showed him the letter. 'The man has queer ideas, very queer; but let's make an investigation and have an eye open as to the man's truthfulness. Don't let him suspect, however, that you think he may be unbalanced.' Soon the investigator returned. 'Our friend has the goods on us. Conditions are as stated in his letter.' 'How can that be? I'll see for myself!' And to the restaurant they went.

"'Mr. Restaurateur, please be good enough to show us the evidence on which you base your remarkable charge against the electric light company.' 'Kindly come with me. See! Here is my silver, black, as stated. And, now, please watch!' Some knives and forks were placed upon the table as if it were being set for a patron. Instantly they shifted and pointed toward the wall between the restaurant and the electric station. 'Remarkable! Mr. Restaurateur, this is a dangerous state of affairs. Suppose one of your guests should attempt to eat his peas with his knife! The knife might switch round and cut his mouth from ear to ear!' Oh, Mr. Manager, this is nothing! Come to the kitchen.' An iron pot was taken to the stove; when near its place, it suddenly went down with a bang, as if seized by a mighty unseen hand.

"The explanation was easy and the remedy, too, thanks to science. On the substation side of the party wall were many large electrical conductors, leading heavy currents into and from the converters. These conductors created and maintained a powerful magnetic 'field.' For the 'lines of force' of this field, the brick wall was no barrier. But magnetic screens could be simply made. In this case it sufficed to cover the restaurant side of the wall with heavy steel plates, just as the lighter stamped steel plates are often used on ceilings and walls in lieu of plaster. For the blackening of the silver, however, the manager refused to accept responsibility, but suggested that a little more liberal use of elbow grease and metal polish might take care of that condition. Of course, another obvious solution would be the equipment of the tables with non-magnetic knives and forks."

"This King Business"

When the Bolsheviks began to rule in Russia, two million people were driven from their homes and forced to seek shelter elsewhere. These exiles found homes throughout all the principal cities of Europe, but the majority of the throng turned to Paris for refuge.

It would be hard for us to conceive just the situation. If one could imagine all such people as the President, all the governors, doctors, teachers, judges, preachers, bankers, manufacturers, merchants of every city and small town, with their entire families, forced out of the country to find homes elsewhere, then one could begin to understand.

Frederick L. Collins in his new book, This King Business, tells of meeting some of these Russian exiles in Paris and how he found them living. They had been of the leisure class in Russia and many of them knew nothing at all of how to make a living. Finding themselves in foreign lands with little or no money, each was forced to find something to do.

There was one group attempting an embroidery factory in which a dowager princess was the forewoman and saleslady. She was sixty-five years of age and was tired and sad except when she was admiring the embroidery work of her daughter-in-law. She and her husband worked, ate, and slept in the rickety shop, yet she insisted that she was content because she had her own with her. Her husband, who was vigorously plying the iron to transfer embroidery patterns, was not so content with such uncongenial occupation.

There were a dozen embroidery machines in another room of the building, each operated by the Russian nobility, working at sixteen cents an hour. But to be a Russian did not insure continued services unless the workers excelled the native Frenchman, therefore they labored diligently.

A dressmaking establishment in Paris is in charge of Princess Kougoucheff. She was a heroine in the time of the exile, "who, through her courage and devotion, had saved her mother and her old governess and her two young children from the horrors of Bolshevism; who was personally responsible for the care of 48,000 refugees and the distribution of more than 300,000 articles of clothing in Constantinople, in those dark days following the Russian hegira." Now she looks like a brisk young business woman instead of a princess.

Three charming girls of the Russian nobility are dancing in the Follies chorus. Every night they are chaperoned to and from the theater by their mother, a lady of the Romanoff court, who was unwilling for her daughters to so earn their living, but it seemed dancing was the only thing they knew how to do, and they did not wish to starve.

Mr. Collins found also Admiral Possokhow, seventy-six years of age, who had been commander-in-chief of the Imperial forces at Archangel. We was peddling woolen goods from door to door. Often people were unkind to him and sent him away roughly. Yet he was proud of how his people were meeting the situation. He boasted of how some young noblemen were washing cars in a garage, another was a chauffeur, another a waiter, and some were taxi men.

In the midst of all this bitterness and tragedy, the exile has meant happiness to some. Mr. Collins gives an instance of one case in which the exile brought happiness to four people who were involved.

An old Duke Peter had in Russia entered into one of the convenient marriages, the result of an imperial decree. Neither he nor the woman were happy together. The social upheaval, which sent them strangers into other lands, gave them also the opportunity to marry persons of their choice. This they had long wished to do. The former husband and wife were each very willing to congratulate the other. Duke Peter was happier doing odd jobs for one of his former servants and living in the servant's cottage than he had ever hoped to be as a nobleman in Russia.

"O horse, you are a wonderful thing; no buttons to push, no horn to honk; you start yourself, no clutch to slip; no spark to miss, no gears to strip; no license-buying every year, with plates to screw on front and rear; no gas bills climbing up each day, stealing the joy of life away; no speed cops chugging in your rear, yelling summons in your ear. Your inner tubes are all O. K., and, thank the Lord, they stay that way; your spark plugs never miss and fuss; your motor never makes us cuss. Your frame is good for many a mile; your body never changes style. Your wants are few and easy met; you've something on the auto yet."—Ranger H. R. Elliott, of the Malheur, in American Forestry (Washington).

LETTERS AND NEWS

Pueblo Branch Has First Birthday

PUEBLO, COLORADO, September 11.—This branch is just one year old on September 27, and this is its first public hearing. While few in number, yet there is cause to rejoice at the manifestations of God's Spirit in the gatherings.

Apostle John W. Rushton, accompanied by Elder G. H. Wixom, district president, was here for a week this spring. Many things were learned from the excellent sermons. Elder Keith Rogers also was here for a week and assisted with some fine cottage meetings.

On June 29 the Department of Women gave a social at Bradford Park, which was well attended. The Department of Recreation and Expression gave a pleasing program, and the evening was enjoyed by all. The ladies donated half of the proceeds to the building fund which is being raised for a new church building. Sunday services are held in a hall, which is not altogether satisfactory.

At this social it was announced that Sunday evening services would be held in the different parks of the city. Pastor W. Richards is endeavoring in this way to get the gospel message before the public. These meetings, which were continued until time for the district reunion, were well attended except on two occasions when bad weather hindered.

Services were discontinued during the district reunion at Colorado Springs, which the majority of the Pueblo Saints attended, they coming home with renewed vigor ready for work.

Sister Richards has expressed her appreciation of the kindness of many friends during her sad bereavement. Her father, Eli Glass, was killed, and her mother was badly injured in an accident on September 2. A contribution was taken up for flowers and telegraphed to Pontiac, Michigan, hospital to cheer the mother on her birthday September 10.

Cayman Island Mission Grows

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 18.—A letter received from J. Charles May, missionary in the Cayman Islands, tells of the wonderful progress of the work in that part of the world.

During a recent campaign on the Cayman Island, covering a period of four months and one week, forty-two were baptized and three Sunday schools established, with an average attendance at each of about fifty.

Special meetings at each place drew an attendance of over one hundred.

The total membership on the islands is now sixty, with many more expressing a desire to come into the church.

At Georgetown, the principal island town, the work under Elder T. M. Carr has progressed nicely. There are now thirty-five members there and the church building has recently been improved.

The Spring Garden Saints, numbering eight, attend the services in Georgetown regularly, walking three miles to every meeting. A number of people in Georgetown have expressed themselves as assured of the truthfulness of this gospel and desire to become members. Opposition to the work is gradually dying.

When work was started at Bodden Town, opposition at once began. The people were told by the missionary in charge of the only other church in the town that the new missionaries would hypnotize them by their singing, music, and preaching, that once attending they always would attend.

A large storeroom was obtained, and the services began. The opposition evidently had good effect, for about one hundred attended the opening meeting, and more came the next night.

A lecture was immediately announced by the opposition on Mormonism. The evils of the cult were told and the people urged to throw the missionaries into the sea.

On the third night the use of the building was prohibited because it stood on ground owned by the opposition. Open-air meetings were then held, and the attendance grew even larger. The result was baptism of twelve at this place and twelve more at a town three miles distant.

The building has now been moved onto another lot, owned by a sister, and Sunday school is now being held there. It was an inspiring sight to see about forty members and non-members pushing and pulling the building across the sand to the new lot all the while singing:

"Give ear to his voice, oh, ye people!
Fear not, work for God and the right.
This church though by many despised
To Cayman will be a delight."

The people are still "pulling together."

At Savannah, the settlement three miles from Bodden Town, and lying between that place and Georgetown, the twelve mentioned were baptized. Here first efforts began in a large room in the home of a friend. It seated only eighty, but at the first meeting about one hundred crowded in. Attendance increased at following services. A Sunday school is now being held at this place.

All-Day Service Near Joliet

MANTENO, ILLINOIS, September 13.—About twenty-five Saints here attended the district reunion at Elmhurst. All feel that this gathering was a source of inspiration and are anxious to push the local work.

An all-day service was held on Sunday, September 16, at the home of Brother and Sister William Bell, near Joliet.

On Sunday, August 5, a home-coming was held at the country home of Brother and Sister Reginald Jones. Sunday school and sacrament service were held in the forenoon and then all repaired to the woods and enjoyed a basket dinner, after which our district president, Elder J. L. Cooper, preached a splendid sermon. There were about eighty present, including visitors from Chicago; Hammond, Indiana; Ottawa; Marselles; Aroma Park; Joliet; Wilmington; Manteno; and Sherburnville, Indiana.

On August 19, Mrs. Isabel Loverin of Sherburnville, Indiana, was baptized and confirmed here. Sister Loverin is a devoted lady and is striving to reach the fullness of the stature of Christ Jesus.

Special Meetings Held Near Flint

FLINT, MICHIGAN, September 11.—During the past summer several series of meetings have been held in and near Flint, all directly or indirectly in charge of our very able missionary in charge, Elder William I. Fligg. He has held a series of tent meetings at both Lapeer and Mount Morris.

A young man from Flint has been sent to Otter Lake to speak to the Saints on Sunday evenings.

Brother Benjamin Anspaugh has preached at Flushing at a schoolhouse located about five miles from Flint.

In the northern part of the city of Flint, Brethren L. Glenn Sager and Guy Yager preached in the tent for three weeks to interested crowds.

The gospel story has been told to thousands of Buick employees at noon hours in Oak Park, just opposite the factory by Brethren Fligg and Sager. Each noon the crowd numbers hundreds (600 to 800) who listen with interest as they sit on the green beneath the giant oaks.

Brother Fligg is now speaking in the tent on the corner of Lewis and Imperial Streets in the east part of Flint. He is being assisted by Elder Matthew W. Liston as song leader and in the preaching by Brethren Liston and Sager. In spite of the cool weather, the meetings are well attended.

Recently Brother Fligg's three children, Miss Cora, James, and Kenneth, visited him here. Flint was glad to meet them and tried to show them that it appreciates their father's faithful service and willing sacrifice.

In all these missionary efforts in and near Flint the Saints have assisted by their presence when opportunity permitted and by their prayers at all times. SILAS C. ROBERTSON.

Industrial Department at Akron

AKRON, OHIO, September 6.—Formulation of plans for another year are just beginning after enjoyment of a spiritual feast at the Kirtland reunion. There a greater determination was found to carry out the plans of the church, and the need for development of the young was indelibly impressed upon the minds of the Saints by President Floyd M. McDowell.

The Department of Recreation and Expression entertained all members and friends at an old-fashioned corn roast in an old orchard about three miles in the country Friday night, September 7.

The Sunday school has established an industrial department wherein the Christmas offering is materially boosted by all Saints saving their newspapers and magazines. At various appointed times these materials are gathered and sold at a very nice profit, which is turned into the Christmas offering.

Missionary Has Encouraging Outlook

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA, September 6.—Our work is onward in this district, and I have every reason to believe that the near future will see much greater developments in the progress of the church. The spiritual growth of the young people of this district in the last three years in which I have been permitted to associate with them in our reunion work is of sufficient value to repay me for all the efforts that I have made in this field during the nine years I have labored here. I have every reason to be encouraged in the work, and hope for the ultimate triumph of Zion and her worthy cause.

At our reunion I told the young people of the effort we were going to make here, and that we would appreciate their support. They were unanimous in pledging their ablest and most untiring assistance. They said that, regardless of where their work took them, they would remember us daily before the throne of grace, and pray often for the success of the meeting. I attribute the good attendance and careful attention quite largely to the earnest prayers of our noble young people. Surely it is a blessed privilege to feel that in part we have been of assistance to them in inspiring within them this worthy ambition. We feel sure that our work will triumph if we are able to keep this united band striving to reach the goal of unselfish service.

There is no part of our work that I have appreciated quite so much as that of directing the activities of the young. I am glad that their aims and ideals are in advance of many of the older ones. They went out from the reunion this year to begin to work and plan and pray for a more successful meeting next year. Their influence will be felt for good in this church, and may the day be speeded when we shall have more of them.

If people writing to me will remember that my address is 1302 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri, it will save a great deal of delay.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

One-Day Meeting at Cheboygan

CHEBOYGAN, MICHIGAN, September 11.—A one-day meeting was held with the Cheboygan Saints September 9. Our district presidents, Elders Allen Schreur and Elmer Parks, were chosen to take charge of the meetings, while Sister Opal Harker was appointed chorister, Sister Lillian Emerson organist, and Sister Josephine Wilson as press committee.

A prayer service was held at 10 a. m. in charge of Elders Allen Schreur and Elmer Parks. This was a very spiritual meeting, and enjoyed by all present. At 11 a. m. a short Sunday school session was held, and at 2 p. m. Brother Schreur gave us a very fine sermon. He was assisted in this meeting by Elder Willard Parks. At 3.30 Elder Dirk Schreur preached a very spiritual sermon. Elder Pushman assisted at this meeting.

Many of the Saints living at a distance could not remain for the evening service which was held at 7.30. Elder Willard Parks was the speaker, Elder Dirk Schreur assisting. The speaker enjoyed great liberty and delivered a very fine sermon.

Saints coming from out of town brought well-filled baskets and enjoyed a basket dinner.

Great Numbers Hear Gospel in Alabama

From a letter of J. Charles May to his father, Bishop R. May LOCAL, ALABAMA, September 8.—It is now getting nearer the time when I will be returning home. I am intending now to go from here to another place called Coldwater, and from there to McKenzie, Alabama, and to leave there for Birmingham, Alabama, going direct to Kansas City via the Ozarks and Springfield over the Frisco. In that event I will reach Independence about Tuesday, September 25.

We had a fine reunion at Gautier, Mississippi. There were no Saints at this place, but the people of the neighborhood who had never heard any of our preaching turned out at the evening services in great numbers, and six were baptized the last Sunday of the reunion. A friend offered us the Episcopal Church building there to hold meetings in any time. He was one of the trustees. The people of that community gave us a most cordial invitation to return there with our reunion next year. The manager of the large mill and the foreman and the chief engineer and many of the employees were among those inviting us back. It was an ideal place for a reunion, being on the banks of the Pascagoula River and just about one quarter mile from the Gulf of Mexico. We had good fishing and a fine place for bathing each day.

We are surely having some fine meetings here at this place, and crowds—I have never seen the like, and to think it is so hot at nights after the people have worked hard all day in their cotton fields, and then to come out and sit, as some do real early in order to get seats, from an hour and a half to two hours. Though the meetings begin at seven forty-five, many of them gather by seven o'clock.

Last night was an immense crowd for this place. People from all over the country within six and seven miles were out. A local man of McKenzie, Alabama, by the name of Williamson, was here up to night before last, assisting me. He has gone to another place where I will meet him early next week. He is a fine man and a live wire. Several are to be baptized at the place where he has gone, and I am wanted at a place where I held meetings just before the Gautier reunion, where five are waiting to be baptized. I will be there a week from to-morrow. At this last-mentioned place, the Coldwater Branch, their church was in a very inconvenient place to get to, so I used a comparatively new schoolhouse on the main road, which had been abandoned for school purposes. We had an excellent hearing and the Saints decided to try to secure it for a church building. They have succeeded. Two brethren have purchased it with two acres of shaded land, and have or will deed it to the church. I advised the Saints to secure it.

The people are enjoying our special singing and programs each evening before the opening of the services. Last night there were at least two hundred and fifty nonmembers out. They were not able to find room to seat all. Elder Vickery said that there were at least one hundred standing in the doors and at the windows and seated in cars near the windows where they could hear. It was the biggest crowd in the history of the church here, he said. Eight have already given in their names for baptism, but we are expecting more for to-morrow when the baptisms take place. They are already calling for another series of meetings after General Conference. The Saints who have been heretofore somewhat negligent are getting enthused, which would have been worth the effort even though we didn't get any new members. I have been told that there have been over one hundred Primitive and Missionary Baptists out some evenings. Some have expressed themselves favorably.

The marvel of the whole thing is that heretofore the people, when Brethren Kelley and Slover and others were here, would pass by the church and hardly look in. They were terribly prejudiced, but now something is surely working with them, and they are continuing to come out so good that we cannot find room for them. This, however, is something unusual, but it seems that in most all of the places I have been since leaving home we have had good hearing, but not such good crowds and so many nonmembers as here.

Vinal Haven Has Special Meetings

VINAL HAVEN, MAINE, September 14.—Several years ago the gospel was being preached in Vinal Haven at the various schoolhouses, but with the growth of the branch there came a change so great that the Saints purchased one of the best residences in town, and that is their present church building. The church has not yet been dedicated, but it is hoped that the dedication may be held in a few years. The present building serves the needs of the branch. Preaching services are held on Sunday at 2.30 and 7.45 p. m., and prayer meeting is held every Wednesday night.

In the Department of Recreation the wheels are not humming yet, but the new president, Ralph Candage, has the promised support of all, and it is hoped that more will be accomplished. Regular services are held every Friday evening.

The prospects are fair for the addition of many members to the branch in the future. Elder U. W. Greene, of Independence, Missouri, held a series of meetings here from September 4 to 6 inclusive. The attendance was fair and the spirit good.

Pastor Archie Beggs is kept busy each Sunday night preaching the gospel, as at present he has no assistance.

Bureau of Information Established at Salt Lake City

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, September 12.—This church is located in the heart of the city, and is a very pretty and attractive building with a spacious lawn in front. Preachers' names and the time of services are posted weekly on a frame made for that purpose. The branch is presided over by Elder Roscoe Davey, and the missionaries are Elder R. L. Fulk, missionary supervisor; Elder Guy Levitt, three local elders, and two priests, all active.

Services are held twice each Sunday, with Sunday school at 10 a. m. The Department of Recreation and Expression meets every Friday night.

A bureau of information to aid in advertising and explaining the position of the church has been established throughout the district, with headquarters at Salt Lake City.

Bishop J. F. Keir recently preached two very fine sermons, making plain the law of stewardship and its relation to Zion. The Saints also enjoyed a visit from Bishop Israel A. Smith and family, of Independence. Salt Lake Saints are often favored with visits from Saints and officials from Independence, as this city is a convenient stopping place en route to the coast.

Elder Virgil Etzenhouser, who with his wife has been in charge of the work here, has now left for California. The new branch president and his wife are much appreciated by the Saints.

Twin Cities Branch Plans to Build

SAINT PAUL, MINNESOTA, September 13.—The growing needs of church work in the Twin Cities has made it necessary that the Minneapolis Branch find some way of providing more room for its people, and the problem has been a question of discussion for over a year.

Many plans have been suggested for meeting this problem, such as remodeling the old building or buying a church structure vacated by another denomination. But these methods were found to be either impractical, or there were too many objections to them. Finally, the branch directed its building committee to consider the matter of buying lots and of putting up a new structure entirely. The committee looked into the matter very thoroughly and studied the proposition carefully. After going over the city and considering every possible district in which the church might be located, getting the prices of lots and studying the possibilities of the city's growth in the future, the committee recommended that the new lot be purchased in the south part of Minneapolis, in that district bordering the Mississippi River and next to the city of Saint Paul. The branch adopted this suggestion and authorized the committee to purchase two or three lots in that part of the city. Several locations are now in mind, and one in particular promises to meet the situation very well, being only one block from each of two important street car lines serving the two cities.

As the building fund at present is sufficiently large to pay for a good share of the cost of these lots, it is hoped they will soon be purchased, and plans made to go ahead and build a basement thereon.

The missionary work in South Minneapolis is starting to move and will gather momentum as the efforts continue. Elder C. A. Kress, who is very active and who has been responsible to a great extent for nineteen baptisms within the last year, has bought a lot and a small dwelling in this part of the city and is holding cottage meetings in his home and in the home of another brother and sister two times a week. A number of Saints are buying property in this district, too, and moving in, and it is hoped that a Sunday school and a week-day prayer meeting may soon be established.

In North Minneapolis where the church is at present located, cottage meetings have been held and will no doubt continue through the winter. The interest of the Saints in all the meetings is very good. The prayer meetings and sacrament services are well attended, and a good spirit prevails in all of them.

Interest among the young people particularly is beginning to pick up, and points to an ever-increasing activity among them for the coming year. Sunday, September 16, was set aside as Young People's Rally Day, and a full program, beginning with the usual young people's prayer meeting at 9 a. m., was held that day.

Brockton Organizes for Winter Activities

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS, September 6.—The July and August reunion was a great success in the Massachusetts District, and the various members returned ready for activity, both along spiritual and intellectual lines.

Active branch work starts September 1 with all home from reunion. Three classes have been formed for winter study: one in dramatics, one to study organized play, and one in athletics.

Kirtland Temple

[From "Sayings of Say" column in the Willoughby Republican.]

In recent days
We drove just Out of town
Across the smiling valley
And climbed the hill
With summit crowned
By the old Temple
Of historic days.

There before our eyes—
No deserted ruin
Of antiquity,
But vibrant life—
Tents beneath the trees
By the score,
And a multitude
Of happy persons,
Teachers, workers, and Learners of the way
Of service to Humankind.

Melody was in the air
And in the heart,
And many passing
Companies of folk
Stayed and made the tour
Of the old Temple,
And asked its history,
And what of its purpose
And place in
The future?

Come if you can. Otherwise get your news promptly through the Conference Daily.

"Willing Workers" Help Redecorate Church

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, September 7.—Meetings are beginning to be larger now that the numerous summer activities are drawing to a close. During the summer Sunday was made a visiting day for other branches throughout the district. This condition is more noticeable now that so many of our members are the owners of cars. Then, too, in this branch there is a large number of district officers who find Sunday a good day to pay official visits.

The church building has recently undergone several much needed repairs. The floors have been scraped and refinished, new cork matting has been laid in the aisles and on the platform, and a new curtain around the platform has also been put in place so that a marked improvement in the interior of the church is the result. The work is being carried out by the "Willing Workers," a women's society of our branch which has been in existence for some time, and which has been the medium of carrying out a large amount of work along the lines above mentioned.

Brother H. A. Koehler, who is the missionary supervisor of this district, paid the branch a visit on Wednesday, September 5.

The district conference convened August 31 and September 1 and 2. The Saints who attended report a good conference.

New Interest Shown at Council Bluffs

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, September 17.—The vacancy in the superintendency of the Sunday school made by the death of Brother John Campbell, of Orchard Heights Mission, was filled on September 16 by the selection of Brother Woodward. This brings a new element into active work in the branch, which is pleasing to see.

Sister Mae Skinner, superintendent of the Music Department, is slowly improving and has great hopes of recovery. All the Saints here are rejoicing to believe that such will be the case. She has been greatly missed.

The Department of Women held the regular monthly business session on Thursday afternoon, September 20, at the home of Sister Bessie Mattison. This gathering was accompanied by literary features and refreshments.

Of late there have been several birthday parties which have given a social feature to the branch.

The present pastor has been urging and exhorting the Saints of late to become more active, more self-sacrificing in the interests of the work of the departments. It has had some good effects.

On Thursday, September 13, the sisters under the supervision of the Aid Society of the Department of Women gave the church a much tidier appearance.

Since the reunion the prayer meetings have been much more spiritual and the attendance has been improved.

The sermon by Bishop Albert Carmichael the last Sunday night of the Dow City reunion on the subject of stewardships, individual and group, was very interesting.

On September 16 Elder P. R. Burton gave an excellent sermon on the name of the church. He called attention to the one hundredth anniversary of the receiving of the plates of the Book of Mormon, and thought at that date there should be some evidence of appreciation in an appropriate service of thanksgiving.

After several weeks of absence in the West, Sister Charlotte Dryden has returned much improved in health. Her influence in the Department of Recreation and Expression is again noticeable.

Many of the Saints have been attending the tent meetings being held at Crescent by Elder C. F. Putnam.

On Sunday, September 16, a prayer meeting was held by the Sunday school officers and teachers which was well attended, the time being wisely occupied.

Visiting Elders Preach at Persia

PERSIA, IOWA, September 17.—The branch at Persia was organized about 1880, and from that time till now there has been quite an army of presidents. Elder Frederick Hansen is the presiding officer at present.

Sunday school, in charge of W. J. Chambers, is held regularly and is doing a very good work, but the Department of Recreation and Expression does not now hold services.

Outside ministers have to be depended on for preaching services. On September 9, Elder Joseph Seddon, of Woodbine, once president of the Persia Branch, preached in the morning. In the evening Brother William Kemmish occupied, and all felt blessed from the day's work.

Omaha Saints Active in New Building

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, September 18.—The conference of the Northeastern Nebraska District, held in the new church at Thirty-Sixth and Burt Streets, Omaha, was enjoyable throughout. Reports from the branches for the past six months show a comfortable increase in membership, most of it being caused by the one hundred sixty-six baptisms in the Decatur Branch. This gives the Decatur Branch, now numbering three hundred fifty-two, the lead in size, Omaha coming next with three hundred eighteen.

In choosing the delegates to General Conference, the conference was pleased to comply with a request from Macy, Nebraska, that Elder Thomas Walker, Priest Charles Guitar, and John Kemp, a lay member, be on the delegation. These three Lamanite brethren, whose interest in and devotion to the church are marked, will attend conference as representatives of the several hundred Lamanite members of this district. The complete list of delegates to General Conference is as follows: Thomas Walker, Charles Guitar, John Kemp, B. M. Anderson, Mrs. B. M. Anderson, J. M. Kelley, jr., Mrs. J. M. Kelley, jr., P. R. Burton, T. J. Elliott, Mrs. P. R. Burton, and E. E. Long.

Brother Amos Lamson, a young Lamanite brother, was recommended to the district conference by the Winnebago Branch for ordination to the office of elder. This was approved by vote, and provision will be made later for his ordination. A similar recommendation coming from the Decatur Branch regarding Brother J. N. Mann was also approved, and his ordination to the office of elder took place Sunday afternoon, September 16.

An entertainment of music and readings, with a short talk by Elder W. E. Stoff, was given Saturday evening, September 15, under the direction of Sister Grace Wallace, district superintendent of the Department of Recreation and Expression.

At a women's meeting held Sunday afternoon, September 16, problems connected with Sabbath keeping and what to do with the children on Sunday were discussed under the leadership of Sister Audentia Anderson. Is a forced attendance at Sunday school beneficial to a child? At what age should compulsory attendance be discontinued if ever required? Are out-of-doors games on Sunday more irreverent than indoor ones? Is the colored supplement a menace to the lessons of the Sabbath? to proper taste in art? to morals? Are parents justified in attending all the church services on Sunday, leaving their children to themselves or the care of others less qualified to make the day a profitable one?

Brother Long expected to leave for home Monday morning, September 17, by auto, "even if it rains pitchforks," he said. Alas, J. Pluvius must have heard him, and taken him at his word, for a steady downpour more or less heavy began and continued for two days thereafter!

Brother Burton is holding nightly services in South Omaha, but plans to reach Independence in time for the memorial pageant scheduled for Saturday, September 22.

The Omaha Saints are enjoying their new church building, even though it is only the "basement." The word may be misleading, however, for but a small portion is underground, and the many windows give ideal light. Already its capacity has been taxed, and a common expression is now heard, "When we get the upper auditorium built—"

Since the opening on Sunday, August 12, the following brothers have occupied the pulpit: Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Elder Charles F. Putnam, High Priest Carl T. Self, Seventy Henry A. Merchant, Elder James C. Crabb, Professor Gustav Platz, President Frederick M. Smith, District President T. J. Elliott, Missionary P. R. Burton, and Missionary Supervisor E. E. Long—surely an assortment of which any branch might be proud.

Connected with the opening service, at which time Brother Edwards was the chief speaker, a short memorial service in honor of President Harding was held, Brother Merchant paying generous tribute to his worth as a man and as a citizen, as well as chief executive. Black and white bunting simply draped back of the pulpit, a silken flag lying upon the stand, and patriotic hymns sung by the congregation helped to make the service an impressive one.

"Constitution Day" was observed Sunday, September 16, in the form of a specially prepared sermon on "Loyalty" given by Brother P. R. Burton. Intensely patriotic in nature, with a clear analysis of the historical setting which gave the Constitution such significant meaning for us, a tracing of God's hand in the destiny of the Nation, and with a ringing call for loyalty to the church and its leaders, to the Government and its officers, the sermon was indeed a brilliant one, with a distinct and effective appeal to all who heard.

Brother B. M. Anderson, branch president, is in Colorado for a short time for his health.

The music in the Omaha Branch since moving into the new church home, has been as varied as the sermons. The young choir of sixteen voices has given a number of appropriate anthems; soprano solos have been offered by Sisters Nelle Kelley and Lois Francis; Brothers Roland Scott, Howard Elliott, T. J. Elliott, and Harlow Frederick have given baritone solos, while Brother Harry Greenway has consecrated his tenor voice in a similar service of song. A quartet composed of Nelle Kelley, Chloe Fleming, R. W. Scott, and Harry Greenway has given numbers; and Sisters Kelley and Fleming a duet. These Saints have often broadcasted music at the W. O. A. W. radio station in connection with Sunday evening devotional programs, and are quite a favorite with radio fans hereabout.

Under the direction of Sister Gertrude Kirkpatrick, the Sunday school has a flourishing orchestra—not many numerically, but devoted in spirit and service. They have made themselves quite indispensable to the success of the early Sunday services, as well as appearing frequently at special programs.

Among the small children there are several gifted little song birds who frequently delight the attendants at Sunday school. They are Evelyn Elliott, Anne Self, and Rosalie Fleming. These and others offer great promise if they will but remember to "cultivate the gift of music and of song."

Eighteen Baptized at Saint Clair

SAINT CLAIR, MICHIGAN, September 17.—Eighteen people have been baptized here since last December, and others are expected to take the step later.

Elder J. R. Grice is missionary for the Saint Clair Branch and lends much spiritual strength to the members.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is active, as well as the Sunday school. Each has a good attendance. The Department of Women is also active, and deserves credit for what it has done in the branch.

The branch president has started a movement which may prove a help to the spiritual development of the branch. Anyone may bring in a question and all take part in answering the questions.

Mrs. Daniel Macgregor paid a four days' visit to the branch, and her talks were very much appreciated.

Your eye is more dependable than your ear. Read the news in the Conference Daily.

Kansas City Stake

KANSAS CITY STAKE, September 20.—The Fourth Church enjoyed its annual rally day Sunday, September 9. Stake President J. A. Tanner was the speaker at 11 a. m., and Apostle Roy S. Budd occupied in the evening. The two services, as well as the auxiliary services, had representative attendance.

Brother Budd used for a foundation for his sermon the tenth verse of the seventh chapter of Ezra emphasizing "seek," "do," and "teach" the law of the Lord. For almost one hundred years the church accepted the challenge of the world to establish a community where there would be no rich nor poor, a condition of equality. Our effort, he said, is to give the world better opportunities. We need more good honest work. We need an affirmative, not a negative gospel. Where we have failed it is due to our false conception of life. What is our problem? It is to deal with men. Ninety per cent of our divorces are caused by the failure to study each other. If we understood our children we would not make the mistake of injuring them by hasty correction. We are desiring to be served—not to serve. By an adherence to the teaching of the text our problems will be solved.

The speaker at 7.45 on Sunday, September 2, was Apostle F. Henry Edwards who dropped in unexpectedly.

A chicken supper on Tuesday evening, September 4, netted $80, which will be applied to the amount needed for repairs on the building.

The special meetings at the Second Church are to continue another week.

The speaker at Central Church on Sunday morning, September 9, was Bishop F. B. Blair, and at 7.45, S. S. Sandy.

Commencing Monday, September 17, Elder Amos T. Higdon held a five days' meeting at Northeast Mission.

Patriarch F. A. Smith was the speaker at Central Church on Sunday morning, September 16, and Elder J. A. Tanner occupied in the evening. On account of rain, attendance at both meetings was interfered with, not nearly the usual number being present. What was true of Central with regard to attendance was also true at all the other meeting places in the stake.

At Grandview the annual home-coming services were held. The morning service was impromptu. W. S. Brown gave a historical sketch of the Armstrong and Grandview churches; Daniel Tucker devoted his time to reminiscences; and J. A. Harrington gave a sermon on possibilities and accomplishments. The speaker at 7.45 was Apostle Roy S. Budd. His theme was the query, Where is God? We believe in a personal God, but not so much a God of the future as a God of the present. Jesus while here was trying to do what he taught us to pray for. He was pointing out the way to us. Get yourself out of the way of yourself. You hold the destiny of your soul in the hollow of your hand. The big thing in your life is the church. Are you in the future going to think of yourself? Jesus changed my prayer, he said. It used to be, "Keep me from all temptation," but now it is, "Lord, make me strong for the ordeals of life." Jacob thinks not of himself as he lies on the earth, a stone for a pillow. In the morning he blesses the stone, promises a tenth to the Lord. Unselfish? Men and women should be honest with themselves. Study each other. Will you pull together or pull in your own way?

The choir is doing splendid work under the leadership of Sister Alma Warren. All in all they spent a very profitable day.

At Malvern Hill the meeting at 7.45 p. m. was addressed by W. A. Smith from Independence. Music for the day was furnished by the junior choir.

Saints Suffer Loss in Berkeley Fire

The home of Brother and Sister Evan Inslee of Berkeley, California, was burned in the recent fire which destroyed a large section of the beautiful Berkeley residence district.

The fire drove Sister Inslee and her two small daughters from their home at about 2 p. m. Monday, September 17. No personal belongings were saved in their haste to reach safety. Mr. Inslee was away at the time, so Mrs. Inslee went to the home of Mr. and Mrs. John D. White, about a half mile distant.

In the evening after the fire had been placed under control, a search was made for whatever might have been left. It was discovered that some furniture, including a piano, victrola, and trunk, had been rescued by some university students. These things were found intact in a vacant lot. All other belongings were lost.

The homes of other Saints were menaced, but no other loss is reported. Many moved out their household goods and were in readiness to flee if the fire approached closer.

The entire city was threatened, and in the business district offices and stores were hurriedly vacated. Elder John D. White, district president of Northern California and pastor of the Oakland Branch, writes that he removed as much of his office equipment as possible in preparation for leaving. Only by constant surveillance was his home, as well as many homes of other Saints, saved from catching fire from flying sparks. The Inslees are at present staying at the home of Brother White.

Central Michigan Conference Held

BEAVERTON, MICHIGAN, September 21.—The event of the season at Beaverton was the Central Michigan district conference September 8 and 9. Many Saints from all parts of the district partook of the opportunity to get together while transacting the business of the district. A good spirit prevailed from beginning to end, and every meeting was a success.

On September 8 the prayer service was preceded by an excellent address by the president on returning to the old paths by meeting often in solemn assemblies with fasting and prayer that peace and dignity may meet in the homes of God's people.

The conference business of the Sunday school and Department of Recreation and Expression was disposed of at 10 a. m. in charge of their district officer, Brother John Wade. The regular church business was transacted at 2 p. m. with Elder Matthew Umphrey, district president, in charge.

The sermon in the evening by J. W. McKnight on organization of the church to "stir up your minds by way of remembrance" recalled the fact that Christ organized the church and that his people must carry it on to final triumph.

The priesthood meeting on Sunday morning, September 9, proved of educational value to all.

A meeting of the Department of Women was held at 11 a. m. in charge of Sister Mary Harder. The demonstrations of first aid in the home, and the school child's health talks were beneficial to all. The exhibit for the Sanitarium numbered over two hundred articles. Sister Harder advised the parents to procure the social purity books for boys and girls, recommending especially those by Doctor Winfield S. Hall, that the young people might have first aid to perfect character in the home without going to the library for them.

The Sunday afternoon sermon by Elder B. H. Doty was an admonition to the young to live righteous and humble lives that they might assist in the building of Zion.

Elder E. S. White preached at 4 p. m. on "Lift up a standard." Each must gather the stones of evil from his nature to be perfect.

The farewell address by Elder Ernest Burt on "The two ways" recalled how far we had gone on the narrow way and how many bypaths we were traveling.

Conference adjourned to meet at the same place the coming year.

Lamoni Stake Items

LAMONI STAKE, September 24.—The Sunday school is now quite thoroughly organized under the new division and is running smoothly. The beginner and kindergarten departments hold all of their activities in the small rooms at the church, the former under the leadership of Miss Olive Elefson and the latter under Mrs. Verna Brackenbury. The senior and adult departments assemble for opening exercises in the auditorium of the church, and both that room and the large basement room are used for classes of this department. The primaries have all of their work in the kindergarten rooms at the school building. They are under the efficient direction of Miss Martha Young. The junior department under W. E. Hayer and the intermediate department under Roy Cheville meet in the assembly room at the schoolhouse for opening exercises and repair to different classrooms for study, reassembling for a sermon hour at eleven o'clock. G. W. Blair has been placed in charge of the senior and adult department. It is indeed pleasing to see Mr. Blair again directing the Sunday school. He served for years as superintendent of the local school, and his efficiency in this work is very marked. A feature introduced in the adult department by the chorister, Mrs. W. H. Blair, is proving a stimulus. The songs for the day are selected with reference to a certain theme, and then some special number carrying out the same idea is rendered. Last Sunday the songs were all on the subject of prayer, and they were followed by the reading, "The fool's prayer." The orchestra also assists in this department.

A number of new classes have been organized in the senior-adult department, as follows: church history, Forest Roberts; Doctrine and Covenants, Roy Roberts; social problems for the girls, Vida E. Smith; social problems for boys, F. M. McDowell; Book of Mormon, Flora Scott; stewardships, Bishop A. Carmichael.

A movement large in scope, with possibilities unbounded, is the organization of the "Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society." The organization is composed of singers of both the town and college, and has eighty charter members, with applications for membership reaching the leader daily. Heretofore the Graceland Chorus and the L. D. S. Choir were separate bodies, but they have both disorganized and joined under the above name. Miss Mabel Carlile was chosen director, and by-laws were accepted at the first formal meeting last Sunday. The oratorio society will furnish music at the church services, give an evening program as a number of the Graceland Lyceum course, and also give an annual oratorio. Enthusiasm over the new organization is very gratifying, and these combined forces should give Lamoni something very fine in the musical line.

The Graceland Athletic Society is going in strong for football this season. Coach A. R. Gilbert has had a hard task picking eleven regulars for his team, having had such a lot of good players as candidates. They start their season in a game with Still College of Des Moines on Saturday, September 29. They have a schedule of eight good games, four of which are to be played in Lamoni. The Commercial Club appointed a committee at its last meeting to cooperate with the college in helping to sell season tickets to these games.

The annual faculty recital of the studio department of Graceland was held at the Brick Church the evening of September 21, before the largest audience that has greeted this recital for many years. This was due somewhat to the fact that the members of this portion of the faculty, with one exception, are with the college for their first year's work. J. H. Anthony, instructor in band and orchestra music, has been with the college several years and continues his work again this year. Miss Virginia Carley is instructor in piano, Miss Margaret L. Armstrong in voice, and Miss Ruth Fisher in public speaking. From the quality of work done at this recital the audience was assured that the high standard of the college studio department will be maintained.

The air in Lamoni, as elsewhere, is astir with preparations to attend General Conference. There will be a large delegation from Lamoni in Independence next week.

Utah District Reunion Held

OGDEN, UTAH, September 19.—About a month before the Utah District reunion Elders R. L. Fulk and Guy P. Levitt held a ten days' series of meetings in the local chapel, speaking each evening to fair-sized crowds, considering the fact that Chautauqua was in session at the same time. The purpose of these meetings was to start an interest among the local Saints for the reunion that was to come.

The reunion convened at the mouth of beautiful Ogden Canyon, Ogden, Utah, August 23 to September 3. This Ogden Canyon with its many wonderful and beautiful scenes was a source of interest to all visitors, one of the wonderful spots being the place where water appears to be growing. It is the Artesian Park where approximately twenty streams furnish Ogden with the finest of water.

The grove where the reunion was held was in an uncleared condition to begin with, but with the combined efforts of the Saints who were camping on the grounds, paths were soon made and brush over head and under foot cleared away until a very neat appearance was the result. There were some fifteen tents on the grounds and about one hundred people, including the children. The Boy Scouts and Oriole Girls of the Malad, Idaho, Branch made the trip to the reunion and home again in a large sight-seeing bus, there being about twenty in the party.

Friday morning the reunion opened by perfecting the organization, with recreation in the afternoon and preaching in the evening by Elder Roscoe Davey. Each morning everyone was awakened at six o'clock by a very beautiful-sounding cowbell in the hands of Brother Davey. At 7.15 each morning the younger members were taken on a sunrise hike with prayer service in charge of Elders Davey and Levitt. These meetings were well attended, and at times every child present either testified or prayed. At 8.30 a general prayer service was held in the tent with good attendance. Classes on Sunday-school teacher training in charge of Brother Levitt were held each morning at 9.30. The attendance showed that all felt the need of preparation. At 11 a. m. preaching was the order of the hour, and then two hours were allowed in which to prepare lunch.

At 2 p. m. problem meetings were held, the different departmental workers being in charge. These were Patriarch W. A. McDowell, Bishop J. A. Becker, and Sister Ward L. Christy who so kindly cleared our minds in many ways. Sister Christy also held classes for the children at 11 a. m., showing them how to grow up to be better men and women in the church and in the world.

The hour for recreation was 3 p. m. Daily exercises under the direction of Brothers Levitt and Davey were used to limber us up for the games, such as volley ball, ground ball, races, etc. At 4.30 swimming was enjoyed by nearly everyone at the sanitarium just a short distance from the camp grounds. At 8 p. m. a preaching service was held. Sunday school was in charge of Brother H. E. Robison of Ogden.

All were sorry when Bishop Becker was called away so quickly, but all were thankful that he was permitted to be present even for a short time. The sermons by Patriarch W. A. McDowell were a source of spiritual uplift to all, making all feel the necessity for greater and more consecrated service. Through Sister Christy's lecture each one was caused to see that he should draw himself away from the world and prepare for Zion. Sister Vida E. Smith was delayed and was only permitted to be present Saturday evening and Sunday, but in her address Sunday afternoon she made many of the young people feel the call of Graceland. Some very uplifting thoughts were gleaned from the sermons and lectures delivered by Elders E. E. Richards of Malad, Idaho; S. S. Holm of Provo, Utah; Roscoe Davey, Guy P. Levitt, and R. L. Fulk.

Large bonfires were prepared Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings, at which time a marshmallow toast and wiener roast were enjoyed. The melons for a watermelon bust were furnished by James Wilson of the Perry Canning Company. Mr. Wilson is a staunch friend. Ice for all purposes was donated by C. E. Erwin, another friend to the cause.

Among the visitors present were Mr. and Mrs. Fishel, of Washington; Mrs. Teagarden and small daughter, of Long Beach, California; and Sister Bertha Meinooke, of Rupert, Idaho.

Only one thing marred the reunion, the automobile accident in which Mrs. Nane Cooper had her collar bone broken and received a gash over her eye. Sister Cooper is known to all in the church as Aunt Nane. She is the daughter of the former Wells Chase so well known to all.

All are rejoicing over the baptism of four new members by Elders Fulk and Levitt.

An interesting talk was given to the Department of Women of the Ogden Branch on Tuesday afternoon, September 18, by Sister Christy who gave them a new idea of their responsibilities in the church. After the conclusion of the talk ice cream and cake were served.

Chicago Saints Give New England Dinner

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, September 21.—The reunion of 1923 is now history. And as Longfellow wrote, "The day is done—and the Arabs shall fold their tents and as silently steal away." It is wondered if these experiences are fully appreciated. The value of the lectures and other meetings are without price, and if the suggestions could be fully incorporated in the lives of the membership, Zion would be redeemed.

The First Chicago Saints were agreeably surprised to have Apostle Paul M. Hanson drop in on September 9. He always brings a message of cheer. The visits of the general church officers are bright spots in the experience of the branches that do not often have the opportunity of hearing them.

Local men are occupying when and where opportunity permits. Some intensive visiting has been done lately by way of reviving interest.

The choir, under the direction of Sister Ruby Newman, gave "The Carpenter of Nazareth" recently. Sister Newman promises a full measure of music and song for the fall and winter season. Special music is planned for the holidays also.

The evening of September 19 was a time long to be remembered. A New England dinner was served in the church dining room from 6 to 7 p. m., after which a social hour was spent followed by the baptism of a young sister, and a very spiritual prayer service. It was a full day, and all were unanimous in saying it was a day well spent.

Visitors are invited to meet with the Chicago Saints at 4416 Gladys Avenue when in the city.

Missionary Meetings Held in Idaho

KELLOGG, IDAHO, September 16.—A successful series of meetings closed here Sunday night, September 9. Elder Carl Crum held forth in the district tent for one week. There was an average attendance of about thirty-five people. The services could not be continued longer because the evenings in the mountains are so chilly.

Sunday school is held each Sunday in a private home, with an average attendance of about twenty-two, mostly children.

Holden Stake Items

HOLDEN STAKE, September 23.—Bishop C. J. Hunt spent Sunday with the Lexington Saints, delivering two very beneficial sermons. All feel encouraged from the visit of prominent leaders because of the fact that much good can be gained from their experience. It also brings a realization that we are not alone in the work.

Brother Petre returned last Sunday, September 16, and is continuing to hold services in a schoolhouse about twelve miles south of Lexington.

The workingmen who have idle days now and then are working on the church building, making classrooms, painting, and various other things that need to be done. It is hoped that the church will some day be completed, and every effort is being made to increase the building fund.

Brother and Sister George Gould and three children, of Independence, visited Grandview on September 9.

Elder H. E. Moler, from Holden, spoke both morning and evening on September 16. He came for the purpose of tuning the church piano, and while here tuned others as well.

The musical program rendered in the Memorial Hall at Lees Summit by Zion Pilgrim Chorus, of Independence, on Sunday night, September 16, was largely attended and highly appreciated. A cordial invitation is extended to come again at their earliest convenience.

Topeka Branch Adds to Membership

TOPEKA, KANSAS, September 20.—Three children and one adult were baptized on September 9 by Pastor Ira G. Whipple. Six children were also blessed. Elder Whipple travels during the week but is permitted to be present each Sunday and look after the interest of the branch.

Brother L. M. Sarratt, of Genoa, Colorado, has moved his family to Topeka. They will be a welcome addition to the Topeka Branch. Elder A. P. Crooker, who has been planning to move his family to Sioux City, has decided to remain in Topeka indefinitely. Brother Crooker is a good mixer, which means much to a small branch in a city. Sister Helen Hays, of Coffeyville, Kansas, has also taken up her abode with the Topeka Saints. Also W. W. Walden and H. H. Elefson, two Graceland College students, were here during the summer and rendered their assistance.

On September 2, W. H. McLaren and family of Lawrence, Kansas, attended the sacrament service, and Brother McLaren assisted in the service. Elder James Baillie, of Scranton, Kansas, delivered the sermon in the evening. Brother Baillie made a substantial offering to the Publicity Department of the branch. As a father to the branch in an early day, he has not forgotten how to give good gifts to his children.

Most of the Saints attended the last day of the reunion at Netawaka, August 19.

District President Samuel Twombly, and Missionary J. A.

Thomas were present at the sacrament service in July. At this service W. L. Chapman was ordained to the office of elder. Brother Twombly delivered a missionary sermon in the evening.

Another visit from the district president was enjoyed in August, when he preached two excellent sermons.

Independence

Independence is already well filled with visitors in anticipation of General Conference. The general ministry have come one week in advance of the opening of conference to attend a series of preconference lectures. The lectures are being given at 9.30 a. m. and at 3 p. m. in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church. The lectures Monday were by President F. M. Smith and E. A. Smith and on Tuesday President F. M. McDowell and Bishop A. Carmichael. Great interest seems to be taken in these lectures and as an additional stimulus an hour's discussion is given the assembly following each lecture. An effort is made to confine the discussion to a limit of three minutes each and to an affirmative point of view, but at that a wide range of comment is developed.

Those in charge of conference arrangements keep an anxious weather eye out these days, for much depends on good weather. However, if as Brother Rushton says: "Faith is the rational inference from accepted facts," we are justified in having full faith and confidence that the weather will be all right, for October in Missouri is our pride, and seldom fails to provide gloriously warm and colorful days, the rain of last year notwithstanding.

The Campus is being made ready for the big meetings. The tabernacle tent, large enough for an assembly of 3,000 has been made up new by the Baker-Lockwood Company of Kansas City and will be erected Thursday. Several hundred comfortable eight-foot park seats are being built which, together with the seats already on the Campus, will insure room for at least 3,000.

The Pageant "Revelation," which was to have been given on the Campus last Saturday evening had to be postponed owing to the fact that rain had prevented completion of the necessary arrangements. The event had been widely advertised and although efforts were made to inform the public of the cancelation, hundreds went to the Campus anyway. This pageant will be given in the Tabernacle Tent Saturday night, October 6 at 8 p. m. All are invited.

The missionary services at the various L. D. S. churches started off most auspiciously Sunday evening. Every church was well filled and from various reports the sermons were uniformly excellent. The attendance Monday and Tuesday nights was not so large but in the aggregate, numbered many hundreds as Independence now has congregations meeting in seven churches. These missionary services will continue over Friday of this week.

The first business session of the conference will be on Monday afternoon at 2 p. m. in the tabernacle.

Officer Elected at Tryon

TRYON, NEBRASKA, September 20.—The Saints met about the middle of August and elected officers. All are striving to be more active but rain, distance, and visitors prevent some from attending as regularly as they would like.

Sunday school is the only regular service that is held.

The home department is active though few in number. They study hard and have good reports.

Conference Minutes

OWEN SOUND.—At Garafraxa Branch, in Grand Valley, Ontario, June 29 to July 1. The district presidency associated with Apostle J. F. Curtis was in charge. The various officers of the district reported and also rendered their financial reports which were accepted. The officers appointed are: president, D. B. Perkins, of Wiarton; vice president, Joseph T. Thompson, of Grand Valley, and J. L. Mortimer, of Owen Sound; secretary, J. H. Leeder, of Port Elgin; chorister, George T. Furness, of Owen Sound; treasurer and Bishop's agent, F. B. Slade, of Harriston; superintendent of Sunday school department, R. J. Wilcox, of Owen Sound; secretary, Percy E. Farrow, of Port Elgin; vice presidents, Chester Smith, of Manitowaning, and Robert Campbell, of Arthur; superintendent of Department of Recreation and Expression, Melvin Perkins, of Wiarton. The delegates to General Conference are: John Shields, J. F. Curtis, J. L. Mortimer, Sister J. L. Mortimer, S. G. St. John, Joseph Yager, Sister Joseph Yager, W. A. Smith, Sister W. A. Smith, G. C. Tomlinson, N. E. Leeder, S. W. Tomlinson, David Pycock, James Pycock, Robert Farthing, and Sister Robert Farthing. A letter from the Sanitarium at Independence, Missouri, was read; their request for financial assistance was not sustained. The name of the Sanfield Branch was changed to Providence Bay Branch. The conference of 1924 will meet with the Guelph Branch, the time to be designated by the presidency of the district. The present yearly budget is $328. Prayer services were held each morning and preaching services followed. The speakers were: S. G. St. John, Joseph H. Yager, A. F. McLean, D. Pycock, and J. F. Curtis. One business session was held and one recreational session. A vote of thanks was tendered the Saints who so kindly cared for the conference.

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—At Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri, August 20, 1923. Nominations of delegates to General Conference resulted in listing sixty-two names. As we were entitled to only twenty-nine, a committee was appointed to ascertain which ones were actually going to attend, with the following result: J. A. Tanner, F. B. Blair, John Tucker, J. Fred Cleveland, Joseph Curtis, Mrs. F. M. Smith, Mrs. W. O. Hands,

Last Chance for the Conference Daily

For the past weeks we have been calling attention to the Conference Daily as a means through which every Saint might keep in touch with the coming General Conference, to convene officially October 1.

Many have heeded the call and have sent their remittances. Many others have overlooked this privilege and to date have not responded.

Every year many write to us late, asking for copies of the Daily from the beginning. Each year most of these people are disappointed.

We want to avoid that this year. Let us enter your subscription early so you will get all the copies as issued. You will thank us for our apparent insistence.

The conference grows in size each year. This year the large tent procured will seat three thousand people, and judging from last year, every seat will be filled most of the time. It is an important conference in an important era of the church.

The facilities of our large publishing plant, with our able corps of editors will all be bent toward making the Daily all you would want it to be. You may count on about eight pages of live material each day, with the latest news developments reported in detail.

Just buy postage stamps or include the amount with some other order you have been expecting to send.

35 Cents

Isn't it worth two cents a day to keep in touch with the conference?

MISCELLANEOUS 921

Mrs. Fern Lloyd, Mrs. John Tucker, Bernice Griffith, Loreno Gross, Mrs. F. B. Blair, Maude Gunsolley, Mrs. Adam Young, Mrs. Edith Lungwitz, Lena E. Oxandall, Mrs. F. A. Evans, Mrs. J. E. Wickham, Mrs. J. H. Paxton, Mrs. J. A. Tanner, Julia Walburn, Sarah Hawkins, Bessie Largent, Myrtle St. John, Ethel Union, Mrs. R. E. Newkirk, Mrs. A. W. Sears, Mrs. Daniel Hawkins, Mrs. Charles Scrivener, J. R. Lloyd was appointed supervisor of the Departments of Religious Education, and Recreation and Expression. Sister Massie was appointed superintendent of the Department of Women at the Central Church. The stake presidency and bishopric to whom a commitment was made to work out a financial plan for the various departments stated that under our coordinating plan as adopted by the stake conference, all of these local societies are but the church working through that department, consequently and logically all finances received by these departments for the conducting of the work should pass into the treasury of the stake bishopric. They recommended a three-months trial of the plan, with frequent meetings of stake pastors with the committee to reach a proper understanding of the plan. The vacated church building at Grandview was turned over to the stake bishopric. The church building offered the stake for the use of Armourdale Saints was found to be an unwise consideration, as the expense of repairing and putting in habitable condition was not justified by the demands of our work at that place. Progress is being made in the improvements on the fourth Kansas City Church building and in the near future they will be housed with more room. W. S. Brown, secretary, 1446 South Thirty-fifth Street, Kansas City, Kansas.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—At Netawaka, August 18, on the reunion grounds. The minutes of this conference were by mistake put under Northwestern Kansas in last week's issue.

ALABAMA. At Lone Star, August 25, 1923. W. J. Williamson presided, assisted by J. R. Harper. Reports of the priesthood, Bishop's agent, and branches were read. Branches reporting were: Pleasant Hill and Lone Star. Tent committee reported about $100 subscribed. The recommendation from Pleasant Hill Branch that George W. Miniard be ordained deacon was adopted and the ordination provided for by the presidency. A motion to authorize J. C. May to ask the appointing power for a man to give his entire time to preside over the Alabama District was carried. The president was requested to appoint a committee to solicit means to pay an account of $25 which the district owed R. B. Booker. Delegates chosen for General Conference were: J. C. May, N. L. Booker, Sister N. L. Booker, Alma Booker, and Sister Alma Booker. Delegates were given right to cast majority and minority votes. Conference adjourned to meet at the call of the presidency. G. W. Miniard, secretary, McKenzie, Alabama.

CHATHAM.—At Windsor, Ontario, September 1. Conference opened at 10 a. m. with Robert T. Brown, district president, presiding, assisted by Stewart Lamont, Henry Atkinson, and John C. Dent. Anthony R. Hewitt acted as secretary, with S. Ezra Mifflin to assist. Reports from the officers showed increased interest in the work. Branch reports were received from the following: Bothwell, 103; Glen Rae, 25; Melin, 51; Olive, 54; Petroia, 20; Sarnia, 107; Wabash, 32; Wallaceburg, 44; and Windsor, 287. Bishop Dent, district treasurer, reported a balance on hand of $35.83 with Department of Recreation and Expression, and Department of Women having a deficit of $24. Sunday school had a balance on hand of $87.62. Bishop's report: balance on hand at last report, $147.58; receipts, $5,992.91; paid out, $1,505.01; sent to the Presiding Bishop, $4,635.48. The several accounts were audited and found correct. Form four plan of coordination was adopted. Resolutions of condolence were adopted in behalf of Sister John Hildreth and family; David Snobelin, John Shields, and the family of our late Brother Minnis Mifflin. Officers elected: Robert T. Brown, president; Duncan Clatworthy and Stewart Lamont, vice presidents; Anthony R. Hewitt, secretary; John C. Dent, Bishop; Duncan Clatworthy, superintendent of Sunday school; Ezra Mifflin, superintendent of Department of Recreation and Expression; Ruth Mifflin, superintendent of Department of Women; G. Orlov Coburn, chorister. Delegates to General Conference: Robert T. Brown, S. Ezra Mifflin, H. A. Koehler, Stanley Phillips, Willard Kettlewell, John Dent, Emma Dent, John C. Dent, C. W. Badder, Mabel Badder, and John Shields. The delegates present were authorized to cast full vote of district and in case of division the majority and minority vote. Next conference will be held at Sarnia at a time designated by the district presidency. John Dent was ordained elder. The meeting Saturday night was in charge of the department heads. Prayer service Sunday morning in which were noticed twenty-three who had been in the church thirty years or over, and two who had been in the church fifty years or over. Sunday school session was held at 11 in charge of district officers and Windsor school. Preaching by John C. Dent and J. A. Koehler. Anthony R. Hewitt, secretary, 41 Lowe Street, Chatham, Ontario.

WHEELING.—At Fairview Branch, near Glen Easton, West Virginia, September 1 and 2. The district presidency, associated with G. T. Griffiths, presided. The first session was occupied with Sunday school business. With one exception the Sunday school officers were reelected; W. A. Schoenian was elected superintendent. Several of the branches failed to send in their statistical reports, and no missionaries reported. Bishop's agent's report showed receipts of $1,913.59 for the year ending June 30. Officers elected: O. J. Tary, president; L. A. Serig and Thomas Mills, vice presidents; Samuel Martin, secretary-treasurer; Sister Anna L. Schoenian recommended for appointment as chorister. Delegates for General Conference: G. T. Griffiths, James E. Bishop, James McConaughy, Thomas Newton, and L. D. Ullom, with instructions to urge the appointment of missionaries to the district. Our Italian brother, Phillip Boston (Sebastiano Vadala), was ordained an elder and Charles DuBois ordained deacon. Fine sermons were delivered by G. T. Griffiths, Thomas Newton, and James McConaughy. The gifts were manifested during the sacramental meeting. Samuel A. Martin, secretary.

LITTLE SIOUX.—At Missouri Valley, Iowa, September 15 and 16. The conference was in charge of the district presidency, and the usual reports were received. Bishop's agent reported $1,247.06 received since June 1. Membership of the district numbers 1,887. Former action to dispose of the missionary tent was rescinded and the district presidency and missionary supervisor given authority to purchase a smaller missionary tent, retaining present tent for additional reunion equipment. J. E. Carr, of Woodbine, Iowa, was ordained elder. The Sunday meetings were not as well attended as usual, due to the inclement weather. Speakers of the conference were Charles F. Putnam, C. B. Woodstock, W. R. Adams, and J. W. Lane. Conference adjourned to meet in Sioux City at the usual time in February. Ada S. Putnam, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

SCHULTE.—Hilda Evelyn Hanhela Schulte was born in Brown County, South Dakota, July 1, 1892. Spent most of her childhood in Sargent County, North Dakota. Married George H. Schulte, at Independence, Missouri, in September, 1921. Returned to Straubville, North Dakota, to make her home. Three weeks ago she went to Minnesota to visit her parents. Died at Sebeka, Minnesota, August 24, 1923. Leaves husband, two step-daughters, father, mother, one brother, and four sisters. Body was taken to Straubville and funeral services were held from her own home. Sermon by J. E. Wildermuth. Interment at Sebeka, Minnesota.

HOLBROOK.—Kate Holbrook was born December 15, 1843. Married Aruna Holbrook November 19, 1860. Baptized when only a girl, and was isolated most of her life. Died August 25, 1923. Leaves four sons and fifteen grandchildren. Her husband and two daughters preceded her.

COLLEY.—Arthur Colley was born August 7, 1887. Baptized June 26, 1921. He was a member of the Pleasant Valley Branch. Died at his home in McDermott, Ohio, September 9, 1923. Leaves wife, one son, and one daughter. Funeral service in charge of Clarence L. Cuneat.

BREWSTER.—David Brewster was born March 10, 1837, in England. Came to United States when a young man and was married in 1863. Baptized fifty-seven years ago. Soon after his baptism, he was ordained to the office of priest and later ordained an elder. Ordained counselor to Bishop C. J. Hunt in June, 1900, in the Gallands Grove District, continuing in that office until he moved to Far West, Missouri, in 1913. Died August 29, 1923. Funeral from the Saints' chapel at Far West in charge of Elders Giles Koger and W. D. Bullard. Sermon by Bishop C. J. Hunt. Interment beside his wife in Cameron cemetery.

OLIVER.—Francis H. Oliver was born in Blanchard Township, Perth County, Ontario, January 24, 1871. Baptized January 4, 1895. Married Mabel Grice, July 11, 1900. Ordained deacon, May 27, 1898; teacher, July 19, 1903; priest, July 4, 1909. Died April 30, 1923. Leaves wife, two daughters, and one son, Idella, Norma, and Eldon; two brothers and two sisters Fred, of Saint Marys, Ontario; Ernest, of Los Angeles, California; Mrs. James Clark and Louie, of Toronto, Canada. Funeral sermon by J. L. Burger, assisted by E. K. Evans. Interment in Saint Marys Cemetery.

RANDALL.—Newton John Randall was born at Beverton, Boone County, Illinois, September 26, 1863. Baptized in 1874. Later he was ordained to the office of priest. Married Cora Spencer in 1896. taking a double handful of his most beautiful islands he scattered them all up and down the coast.

Through such scenes the Chevrolet 490 took her way from Haverhill to the Maine reunion. Here we enjoyed some of the most pleasant experiences of the trip. The Maine Saints had approached their reunion with some trepidation, as it was rather an experiment with them. The district officers and the committee worked hard and faithfully, so much so that our Brother Newman Wilson gave way under the strain and was unable at the last to attend. But Brother Gleazer came to their aid, and the Southern New England Saints, particularly Brethren Sinclair, Traver, Fisher, and Joy, gave valuable assistance. The reunion was in every way a success—being particularly helpful in reaching nonmembers, who attended in considerable numbers. Some of the best members of the community were baptized and others are to follow.

It needed but a short time to convince us that Maine is one of our most promising fields. The Saints there by their lives have won the respect and good will of the people generally. They are industrious, sincere, pious, godly people with whom it is a pleasure to associate. The gospel is their all in all. Sister Gray, ninety-three years old, walked four miles to attend. One branch of twenty-one members had nineteen in attendance. Uncle John Billings of Little Deer Island was there with his "tribe." He has seven sons and more than fifty grandchildren. When one of his sons comes of age to take to the sea, it is said that Uncle John goes into the forest, cuts the oak trees, and builds him a vessel. As a result, the "Billings fleet" is now of considerable size. But in conversation with us Brother Billings said, "Yes, I like to build boats; but I like best to build faith in God." For many miles around on land and sea men and women have heard the gospel story from his lips.

The physical surroundings of the camp were ideal—hills and forests on every hand, a beautiful lake adjoining the camp, and close by the blue waters and green islands of Penobscot Bay. There was one spot in particular to which we loved to repair—a big projection of granite boulders on a high hill back of the camp. There one could sit and meditate or pray, back of him a rampart of dark evergreens, in the foreground at a distance below him the quiet waters of the lake, on every side stretching away vistas of hills and valleys clad in pine, oak, balsam, fir, and hackmatack, and at the foot of this rough primal altar a richly dyed carpet of blueberries. This seemed a natural sanctuary, needing no dedication or purification by ceremony or ritual.

But speaking of blueberries—the Maine blueberry combines the blue of the morning sky with the sweets of first love and the flavor of breaking day. Thoreau says:

It is a vulgar error to suppose that you have tasted blueberries who never plucked them. A blueberry never reaches Boston; they have not been known there since they grew on her three hills. The ambrosial and essential part of the fruit is lost with the bloom which is rubbed off in the market cart, and they become mere provender. As long as eternal justice reigns, not one innocent blueberry can be transported thither from the country hills.

Bishop Fisher went wild the first day and lived in the hills like a bear dining on blueberries. But no bear ever ate a Maine blueberry pie. No restaurant pies these, sallow and emaciated panderers to dyspepsia. The Maine blueberry pies to the contrary are deep, luscious, wholesome; and Maine hospitality, having given us one helping, always said to us, "Repeat the dose as often as needed." To which we replied, "Our need is great; and after our needs are supplied, you have still to reckon with our wants." So Bishop Fisher soon returned to camp and was of great help to us in looking after the surplus.

At the Maine reunion it was our pleasure to meet Brother and Sister U. W. Greene. Brother Greene, now of the Order of Evangelists, began work in that field more than forty years ago. His labors have borne permanent fruit. Also with us was Doctor Joseph Luff, whose powerful and appealing sermons there as well as at Onset enthralled Saints and nonmembers alike.

With genuine reluctance at the close of the reunion we bade this people good-by. Returning to Haverhill we spent one night at the Thayer home, and the next day with Brother Hatch as guide visited the old Whittier home. Here dwelt the gentle Quaker poet, apostle of nonresistance, whose antislavery verses without doubt by a strange paradox put thousands of armed men upon the battlefield. Here were many of the scenes made familiar to us in "Snowbound," the well curbed, with its "long sweep high aloft," the immense old barn from whose oval window "the old horse thrust his long head out, and grave with wonder gazed about." Here the room where he worked, and his mother's bedroom, her high canopied bed throned two feet higher than the main floor because the house had been built over a big boulder that could not easily be moved.

From here our course led directly homeward, first over the old Mohawk Trail, which the Mohawks formerly traveled on their way to eastern New York. Our visit among the Eastern Saints was ended. The Chinaman described the toboggan slide thus, "Swish—walk a mile!" Thus our "vacation" had passed, and now it was a matter of driving nearly two thousand miles. But soon, as we journeyed, I noted that the whole family was singing, humming, or whistling a certain tune. What was the tune? "Home, sweet home." We were thinking not alone of the house where we dwell, though it is a sweet home; but also of the association and fellowship of the Saints in Zion. And when on the first Sunday night we met with some three thousand of them in their open air devotions under the trees and stars on "the Campus" we felt to say, "It is good to be here." But we could not forget the splendid Saints that he had visited. They have made the church respected in their localities. They have held the banner high, and brought many to the knowledge of the truth. Their eyes are Zionward. When their work in their field is done, and they come to join forces with us, will we be able to match their strength with our strength, their piety with our piety, their consecration with our consecration? God grant that it may be so. Forget not Zion, O Lord, for her need is very great.

CONFERENCE NEWS

Sixty-Ninth General Conference Opens

The sixty-ninth General Conference opened Monday, October 1, in the big tabernacle on the Campus at Independence. The skies that were lowering all day let loose a torrent of rain just prior to the opening of business, but in spite of the rain and sea of mud under foot, the great tent which seats nearly 3,000 was well filled, and the eagerness with which the officials and delegates always face a new General Conference was in no way dampened in spirit.

All preliminary arrangements were well in hand before the opening session.

On the main platform was seated the First Presidency. Just back of them was seated the Quorum of Twelve, which for the first time in years has all twelve members present. All three members of the Presiding Bishopric were also on the platform, and with them were their secretaries and staff men. The church secretary and assistants have a table just to the left of the President's desk, and to the right are a staff of expert stenographers to get every word as spoken.

High Priests, including Bishops and Evangelists, were seated just in front of the speaker's platform. Back of them were the Seventy, and to the right of the Seventy were the Elders and delegates. There are seats this year for 3,000, and yet every foot of space is taken up.

In spite of the immense size of the tent, the acoustics are excellent, and the speaker's voice comes traveling up over the great crowd with remarkable clearness. To make sure that everyone can hear without difficulty, a microphone is placed just in front of the speaker's stand, and amplifiers magnify the voice many times, yet it synchronizes so perfectly with the speaker's voice that it seems as though it were not mechanical at all.

Promptly at 2 p. m. President F. M. Smith called the session to order, and song number 14, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," was sung under the leadership of Albert N. Hoxie.

The opening prayer by President Elbert A. Smith follows:

Opening Prayer

"God, our heavenly Father, another year has passed into history, and we, thy people, are again assembled to take up the affairs of another conference. We pray that thy Spirit may be here to lead and direct; that its kindly and beneficent influence may be felt in every heart, bringing joy and faith and peace, and as we have just sung, when dark clouds of trouble hang o'er us there is still a way of deliverance, with peace ahead of us. We pray that indeed thy Spirit may lead us on in that way that shall eventually bring us all together; and that our forces may be united and thrown behind that which is good; and all the strength of thy people be thrown against that which is evil.

"As we assemble here we pray for those who may need thy particular blessing during the conference. Wilt thou bless the quorums, the missionary quorums, the Twelve and Seventy, the pastoral arm, High Priests, those who have charge of finances, and us of the Presidency who greatly feel the need of thy blessing.

"Wilt thou bless us all together, each and every quorum, that we may have more than human wisdom in the particular work that devolves upon us to do. May there be that pervasive Spirit of Jesus Christ that shall lead us closer together, that we may be able to present a more harmonious and united front.

"Bless also the delegates, that they may have wisdom when matters are presented for their consideration, with spiritual solemnity and without levity, and finally in righteousness, to cast their vote.

"May they realize that this is indeed the work of God; that all who are engaged in it are entitled to consideration according to their needs and just wants.

"Be thou, we pray, with the assembly. Help our people in their needs. Guide their lives. Keep every destroying influence therefrom; danger from tempest, sickness, or any evil that might tend to mar or spoil the peace of this assembly.

"Let the spirit of tolerance, we pray, be with this assembly, that we may be broad and tolerant, that we may all be consecrated with all the forces we have, that thy work may go forward.

"O Lord, we commend this meeting to thy care, and all succeeding meetings of these sessions, invoking thy divine blessing in Jesus' name, Amen."

It was moved that the First Presidency preside over the conference and make the necessary organization appointments. Church Secretary R. S. Salyards put the motion which carried.

Prior to General Conference the regular department reports were printed in booklets which were given out to the ex-officios and delegates as they signed and were given their badges. President Smith presented these reports, and they were placed on the minutes of the conference subject to further action. A supplementary report from the Credentials Committee was read. Several changes were suggested from the floor. By motion and vote the supplementary report was indorsed.

President Smith next called attention to the printed report coming from the Department of Statistics, the Church Secretary, Historian, Publicity Department, Presiding Bishopric, the Department of Women, Graceland College, Department of Recreation and Expression, Board of Publication, Order of Enoch, the Church Architect, the Church Auditor, the Graphic Arts Bureau, the Church Physician, and reports from the individual members of the Quorum of Twelve.

Apostle D. T. Williams asked to be privileged to amend his report before it be officially published, and his request was granted. He stated: "There are some paragraphs in my report that do not altogether tell what I would like to tell. There were some things the Presidency were previously acquainted with that were referred to here in a very brief manner. I would like to ask the privilege of making some corrections in my report." President F. M. Smith made the following statement: "There are some errors or mistakes which have occurred inadvertently, and unless there is objection these men will be permitted to make any correction deemed wise before they are published in the official minutes. We suggest the corrections be submitted to the Presidency to be included."

Reports from the Board of Trustees of the Children's and Saints' Homes, also the Order of Evangelists were presented. Reports were received from the Committee on Memorial to the Martyrs, on Vocational School, and the Church of Christ. These reports were received by the President and spread upon the minutes subject to further action of the conference.

The President announced the details of organization of the conference. The ushering is taken care of by the deacons of Zion. Any other announcements on organization will be made by the Presidency later.

The committee on sick administration was announced as follows: George Harrington, David Dowker, C. Ed. Miller.

The chairman suggested that the business sessions be held from 2 to 4 p. m.

The President made announcement of the various meetings of this evening and Tuesday, the quorum meetings and classes.

The ordination of Brother Gomer T. Griffiths as an evangelical minister was provided for at this time. The congregation sang Number 58, "Consecration," and following it Brother Griffiths came upon the speaker's platform and made the following statement:

Statement of Brother Gomer T. Griffiths

I did not feel to accept the office last year, and I have been praying about it all the year. A short time ago I had what I considered a spiritual dream. I thought a great deal of our grand old brother that has passed away, Charles Derry, and in this dream he came to me, and he had a book in his hand and it was blank, just a heading here and there. He handed it to me, and he said it was my calling to fill that book.

I awoke, and the Spirit came to me, and the Spirit said, "He held the office of evangelical minister when he passed away [I always had confidence in him as a man of God] and it is your calling to accept."

I did not give way then; but to-day while here in this assembly the Spirit came upon me in great power and filled my entire being and directed me to accept and to be ordained to the office that you provided for a year ago. I will do the best I can in the office to magnify it as I have in the other positions (I have been ordained seven or eight times), for I find from past experience that in whatever position we are called to occupy we should do our best and trust in God Almighty to do the rest.

President Frederick M. Smith made the following prayer just prior to the ordination:

Prayer of F. M. Smith

Our heavenly Father, we have paused in the midst of a business session long enough to attend to one of the sacred ordinances of the church, the provision which thou hast made by which thy servant shall be set apart and invested with authority, which we believe to be divine, and through instrumentality which we believe to be recognized by thee. We approach the ordinance, O God, with solemnity; with a full realization of the responsibility that we are placing thus, as officers, upon the head of our brother, and feeling that he senses this responsibility, and knowing that he is willing to accept, believing in and relying upon the strength of the Lord, do thou be one in our midst, solemnizing the occasion, bearing witness of the righteousness of the step, and thus bearing testimony to the brother that he will be supported and sustained in his undertaking.

We deeply sense the responsibility that rests upon thy priesthood, and we earnestly plead that there shall come from thee that source of great and eternal strength, that which shall bear us up, and enable us as a mass of men, as individuals, and particularly in our collective work, to accomplish thy purposes and accomplish them speedily.

We rely not in the strength of man. We hope only that we will be sustained, and did we not have the assurance that thou art with us, our task would be only surrounded with gloom, but we are illumined by the hope, the faith, that thou hast instilled in us. We have courage to go on, and we ask thy divine approbation upon us, as we move forward.

Let thy Spirit brood peacefully over us as we now wait before thee, and unto thee shall be the praise, through Jesus the Lord, Amen.

Brother Griffiths was ordained under the hands of Presidents Elbert A. Smith and F. M. McDowell and Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith. The ordination prayer was by President Elbert A. Smith as follows:

Brother Gomer, we, as the servants of God, representing the church, place our hands upon you to ordain you to the office to which you have been called, and we feel, as we do so, that indeed God is pleased with the long and faithful and arduous service you have rendered in the high and holy calling that you previously occupied. You have indeed at many times been able to sustain the faith of the Saints, and indeed you are an apostle to the church. Now you are called to another line of work, which will perhaps bring less vexation, and more joy and more hope—to give spiritual and fatherly advice and counsel to the people. And so, in harmony with the order of the church, and we believe with the direction of the Holy Spirit, we place our hands upon your head and ordain you an evangelical minister and a patriarch, and thereby give into your keeping the authority and rights pertaining to that office. O God, we ask thee now, in our prayer of ordination, that thou wilt indeed recognize this our brother, and thy servant, a long time engaged in thy cause. His voice has been heard in many lands, and his example has strengthened many people. Be with him now, we pray, and help him as he moves out in this new line of duty, that he may be filled with the power of thy Spirit; that he may comfort, sustain, strengthen, and encourage thy Saints, and give those who are troubled fatherly counsel in the time of need, that shall cause them indeed to lift up their heads and rejoice, and take their stand in defense of that which is right, and order their lives in harmony with thy will. Bless him, we pray, with yet extended years; order the conditions in his home so that he may be free to wait upon his ministry. Bless him in the midst of thy people, so that in his declining years he may reap the fruits of fellowship and love that may come back to him from the many to whom he has brought cheer in years gone by. May the fellowship, confidence, and love of the Saints be his, and the divine commendation from on high be his, we pray. O Lord, take him and bless him, and may these blessings be his to enjoy, we ask, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, Amen.

Following the ordination the President announced the closing of the opening session with "My times are in thy hands." Benediction by President F. M. McDowell.

The threatening weather which was present at the opening services of the Conference Sunday morning and which continued until Tuesday morning, finally cleared and the sun once more shone through the clouds.

Clyde F. Ellis Ordained

The Sunday morning services, September 30, were to have been held in the tabernacle tent on the Campus, but the terrific storm early Sunday morning made it impossible, and the eleven o'clock services were transferred to the Stone Church. Even though there had been a veritable flood, there were hundreds who went to the Campus and then back to the Stone Church, which was crowded to the doors.

There was a quiet dignity and solemnity in the service held in the Stone Church and the music and the sermon were of a high order. The spirit of praise and worship was feelingly present. Added to this general solemnity of the hour was the ordination of Elder Clyde F. Ellis to the office of apostle.

Preceding the ordination, President Elbert A. Smith addressed the audience with a few brief remarks concerning the call one year ago of six men to the Quorum of Twelve. Five of these men had been ordained soon after the call had been given; but Brother Ellis, being at the time in the Society Islands, had not been ordained. For a year he had been facing the responsibilities of this call and would now enter actively into its duties.

President Smith spoke of the ordinance as one dedicatory in its nature. "With great solemnity," he said, "we dedicate a building to God; but to-day we offer a man." He then called upon Apostle J. F. Garver to offer a prayer of dedication, Brother Garver responding:

Dedication Prayer

Our heavenly Father, we stand in this place made sacred by the covenants of thy children upon many occasions. We are come hither this one more time to speak with thee, and out of the authority of heaven to invest another of our dear brethren with responsibilities on earth.

And oh, thou God of thy Saints, wilt thou answer our cry of faith to-day, and visit our brother with that divine unction which we know he needs under the circumstances, that his faith may waver not, that his preparation may be complete, that his life may be clean, that he shall be found not only worthy but capable of the great trust imposed.

While we know there shall be with him the joys of service, there shall also come many times of heaviness and of sadness. So as we thus consecrate him to thy purposes on the earth, we pray that thou wilt be with him to sustain him and help him. We know he shall need it, and we know thou art abundantly able.

Receive him, therefore, we pray thee, thus at the hands of the church, and when our brethren shall set him apart, may it be in fulfillment of the promise that the Spirit of God shall accompany them to his strength, to his edification, and unto thy glory for the performance of much good, in Jesus' name. Amen.

President E. A. Smith, President F. M. McDowell, and Apostle J. F. Garver then performed the ordination, the first-named being the speaker:

Ordination

Brother Ellis, we the servants of God, obedient to the voice of our heavenly Father and the order of the church, place our hands upon your head, and ordain you as an apostle, and set you apart to be a member of the Quorum of Twelve. And, O God, our heavenly Father, we pray thee to recognize this ordination; for we realize that it is written that we do not choose thee but are chosen of thee and ordained by thee. May thy Spirit be with our brother. Take him, we pray, from this hour. May every doubt be removed from his mind. May he realize and feel that he is called of God, that he may have the testimony to be with him—abiding with him—to sustain him. Give him strength of body and mind. Give him length of life. May his life be long in the service and result in much good. And we pray thee, our Father, that as he moves into his quorum, may he occupy in the spirit of wisdom, that he may be a wise counselor, well contained, not easily provoked, not inclined to break over thy gospel law; but that he may compose himself and conform his conduct to thy will. Help him to be sober and discreet, careful, faithful, and wise, and one that in the hour of need is able to give counsel that shall help his brethren and help the church. Bless him, we pray, that he may go wherever he may be sent, in this land or foreign lands or to the islands of the sea, that he may go with the power of thy might, in holiness, carrying the great commission which is his to fulfill.

So bless him, Lord, that thy truth may be very dear to him, that he may sense thy divinity, that he may not be partisan; but that he may seek to follow Jesus, seek to build up the kingdom of God among men and establish thy righteousness upon earth. So be with him, we pray, that the favor of the people may be his, and their fellowship sustain him as well as the fellowship of God on high, that he may keep the faith and finish his work, and when he shall come to give an account of his apostleship may receive the confirmation that he has done well.

So, Lord, we ordain him, we set him apart, we bless him, and we ask that this blessing may be his to enjoy. These favors, these blessings we ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

From the Log of the Four Ninety

NUMBER NINE

Part Ten Was Inadvertently Published Before Part Nine.

From Concord we directed our course through certain byways to Walden Pond, made famous by Henry David Thoreau. Thoreau was a philosopher and naturalist. He loved to explore the Maine woods, the lakes and ponds of Massachusetts, the coast of Cape Cod, to study, to philosophize, and to embody his musings in books, such as Walden, In the Maine Woods, and A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers. He writes:

For many years I was self-appointed inspector of snow storms and rain storms, and did my duty faithfully; surveyor, if not of highways, then of forest paths and all across-lot routes, keeping them open. . . . I have watered the red huckleberry, the sand cherry and the nettle tree, the red pine and the black ash, the white grape and the yellow violet, which might have withered else in dry seasons.

To find leisure for his favorite pursuits seemed one of his problems. Apparently he had not the means to continue his studies at the universities, and perhaps was impatient of their discipline, even skeptical of their benefits. He said, "To my astonishment I was informed on leaving college that I had studied navigation—why if I had taken one turn down the harbor I should have known more about it."

Nemo's Noddings

One may be a student and yet be without a purpose. To study to satisfy curiosity or just to gain knowledge is one thing, and to study to gain knowledge for a definite purpose is quite another. Each method of study has its place.

The student of society who is a student per se, sees things as they are. The student with social objective in view compares conditions as he finds them with ideal conditions or as they ought to be.

In studying to grasp the full significance of Zion, the two methods should be used successively. To see things as they are should be the first efforts, to be followed later by purposive social study.

For example, to appreciate adequately how stewardships will solve the problems of insurance, a study of insurance as it is is the first move, then a study of stewardships per se, to be followed by a comparative study of both.

What will be the labor problems of Zion? Who can say?

Comprehension of the labor problems of to-day determined to-day as they are by present social conditions, is the first step towards comprehension of the labor problems of Zion.

In a problem in proportion we find the fourth term because of its relation to three known conditions. The labor problems of to-day will be the labor problems of Zion as the social conditions to-day are to those which will prevail in Zion. Can you satisfy the equation?

The common practice to-day in settling disputes between labor and capital is to consider only the interests of labor and capital, ignoring a very important third part—the public—whose interests are closely allied to both.

Under Zion conditions no industrial dispute can be settled without its bearings on society being carefully weighed, for society's interests are even paramount to those of either capital or labor.

Under stewardships, social welfare being the primary objective, social interests come first, class interests second, individual last.

Under Zion conditions the long-suffering third party—the public—will come into its own.

Sooner or later every well-organized people, purposively organized, gives expression in its buildings. Zion will find expression in some form of architecture. What will it be?

The emotional element is always a large factor, rightfully so, in all religious movements, and the Zion movement, our Zion movement, is rich in emotional content, and also rich in reason.

An essential of all good architecture is that it ad-resses itself not alone to the mind but to the emotions as well. A rich field, then, awaits the architects in Zion.

Every building should clearly deliver a message. Here, too, lies a rich field for the designers of the buildings in Zion.

An essential of good architecture is the absence of deception. Good architecture will always be what it appears to be, and does not deceive the eye even for a moment.

A building, like the activity of a man, should express its purpose. A building erected for the purpose of worship should express the idea of worship. It cannot be said of all our church buildings to-day that they express either religious ideals or worshipful emotions. How long before we rectify these anomalies?

It will be well if in the physical development of Zion no public building for church or civic purposes shall be erected which does not express in unmistakable terms its purpose.

It is worthy of note that most if not all beautiful features in architecture have been developed from what originally designed to serve practical purposes. There lies in this a promise that there will yet be developed many beautifying features of architecture. What will be our contributions in this direction?

Noddings on architecture as it is with the Latter Day Saints is largely with their eyes towards the future, and the question to the fore is "When?" But that may have its advantages; for in right appreciation of and proper admiration for noble examples of architecture existing there has developed a tendency to idolize unreasonably styles which prevailed long ago and which also waned long ago.

Closely akin to the unreasoning idolatry of old style of architecture, is the ineptitude of admiring the antique simply because it is old, disregarding either real beauty or merit. This is seen not alone in architecture but in furniture and other lines.

It even applies to preaching, lecturing, and reading. It may even account for the warning against the "traditions of the elders."

The record of the church in architecture is still to be made. What are the signs of its tendency?

President Coolidge announces that the world can be saved by cooperation.

Does it not worry us a bit to see that men of affairs are catching up to the ideas we have advanced for a number of years and threaten to get ahead of us? We think we are waiting for something to move us but in fact we are waiting from force of habit.

The only way to change a habit is to impose upon it another habit and that one should be the habit of progress.

CONFERENCE REPORTS

GRACELAND COLLEGE

To the First Presidency: The following reports of the president and business manager of Graceland College were at a formal meeting of the Board of Trustees, held at Lamon, Iowa, September 5, 1923, adopted, and by motion made the report of said board of trustees of Graceland College to the First Presidency and General Conference.

REPORT OF PRESIDENT

To the Board of Trustees of Graceland College:

Home-Coming

The college year 1922-23 closed with the first general Home-Coming Graceland has ever held. As the years have come and gone, past graduates and ex-students have been in the habit of returning to their alma mater at commencement time in ever-increasing numbers, but never before has an officially called home-coming been held. The event brought together hundreds of alumni and ex-students, and reunions of most of the graduation classes were held with a very fine representation of each class in attendance.

Young People's Convention

The home-coming was followed by a twelve-day Young People's Convention, which brought together hundreds of the young people of the church for a period of religious, devotional, social, and educational inspiration. Graceland was happy in the opportunity to turn over her half-million-dollar equipment in the way of buildings, libraries, laboratories, and grounds to the young people of the church for this most excellent gathering.

Expansion

With the growth of the college during the past several years, and the official recognition which has come to her from the state, district, and national accrediting associations, the demand from the students, alumni, and parents and friends of the college has been on the increase for the expansion of the college into a full four-year institution. Increasing from year to year, as this demand has, it was only a question of time until the Board of Trustees was under the necessity of officially recognizing this situation.

It has been felt by those responsible for the development of the college that the first essential was to establish a junior college on such a basis that her worth was fully recognized in all of the departments of the State and Nation having to do with the official recognition of institutions of higher learning.

With the recognition on the part of the State, it was felt that the needs of the young people of the church would be fully met as well. With these matters in mind, the past several years have been devoted to the building up of the following departments of study: Liberal Arts, Teacher's Course, Pre-Medical, Engineering, Pre-Law, Commerce, Pre-Dental, Public Speaking, Music, and Religious Education.

The full development of these courses has brought such general official recognition, and met with such a high degree of success, that the demand for expansion in the way of providing further study opportunities must be met. With this in mind, the college is happy to announce that it is now ready to inaugurate a four-year program of study leading to the bachelor of arts degree. It is believed that this movement will meet a long-felt want on the part of the young people of the church, and will enable us to do a much more satisfactory piece of work for the State as well.

Agriculture

In the work of expansion there has been added one new department, that of agriculture. It has been recognized for many years that Graceland, having its seat in the midst of the best agricultural section of the country, and drawing its students from many agricultural States of the Union with the expectation of returning them to the farm, some provision should be made for courses in agriculture. Up to the present time this has been impossible, but with the opening of the present college year courses in agriculture as follows will be offered: Animal Husbandry, Farm Crops and Soils, Horticulture, Breed Studies, Soils, and Dairy.

These subjects of a special agricultural nature, together with the other subjects belonging to the regular college departments, will provide a two-year course in agriculture, which will be of special value and worth to our young people.

Public School Music Course

In line with the general expansion of the institution, and in harmony with the new provisions and rules of the State Department of Education, Graceland has enlarged her department of public school music into a full three-year course in lieu of the two-year course heretofore provided. Completion of the course will entitle the graduate to the special public school music state certificate. The demand for competent and well-prepared public school music teachers throughout the country is very great, and through this expansion it is believed that Graceland is offering her young people a rare opportunity for preparation for service of an exceptional character.

An Opportunity to "Earn While You Learn"

In view of the increasing interest on the part of the young people of the church in education, and the increasing desire for an opportunity to attend college, although without the full amount of means necessary to meet all the expenses of a college course, investigations have been made during the past year with a view of enlarging our self-help department, thus making possible the attendance of a larger number of young people. As a result of that investigation, and with the fullest cooperation on the part of the faculty and townspeople, who will have a large part in making the self-help plan a success, our program of studies has been so arranged that the class work of any one student can be completed in a half day, leaving the other half day for preparation of lessons and for a maximum of three hours of work per day.

It is estimated that with $200 in money during the course of the year, and the earnings for these hours of work per day, a student can meet all of his required expenses for a year in college. The work provided for students consists of cooking, waiting on tables, janitor work, firing, farming, dairying, clerical, library, construction of buildings, hauling, assistants in laboratories, positions in the homes and business houses in Lamon, etc.

It has been demonstrated that an industrious and prudent student, prudent with respect to use of money and time, can carry on a four-year college course with credit, and at the same time earn part of his expenses while in attendance.

Gymnasium and Convention Hall

The Iowa State Legislature in session during the winter of 1923 passed a law known as the "Physical Education Bill," providing that "after September 1, 1923, every high school, state college, university or normal school giving teacher training courses shall provide courses in physical education." Graceland, as one of the accredited colleges of the state, whose graduates from the normal training department are granted state teachers certificates, comes within the provisions of this new law. With our existing equipment, we have no building in which to carry on standard courses in physical education.

For the past several years we have been graduating an average of twenty-five students annually from our teacher training department, who receive from the Iowa State Board of Educational Examiners state certificates to teach. Due to the reciprocal relations existing between Iowa and other States, these certificates granted Graceland graduates are accepted in those States where they desire to teach. Members of this year's class, who received state certificates and desired to teach, were elected in this and other States at salaries ranging from $900 to $1,350 annually. Estimating the average salary at $1,000, which is probably considerably below the actual average, it means that our graduates who enter the teaching profession are receiving $25,000 annually because of the fact that they held state certificates in this and other States.

In view of the constantly increasing popularity of this department of the college, and the constantly increasing number of our young people preparing to teach, it was thought that the interests of the college and the church would be very greatly injured if the college were discredited by the State Department of Education because of our failure to meet the requirements of the new law.

During the session of the Young People's Convention, which met in the buildings and in a large tent on the campus of the college, it became apparent that if the meetings were to be of the greatest possible good to the church, an assembly hall must be provided to hold the large numbers in attendance. Neither the college nor the town has a building large enough to seat the Young People's Convention which assembled early in June this year.

The needs of Graceland along the lines of meeting the requirements of the new Iowa physical education law became known to some of the friends of Graceland and to many of the young people assembled at the Young People's Convention. These needs, together with the need for a convention hall for the annual meetings of the young people of the church were combined, and on an offer of some of Graceland's friends in the East to subscribe $7,500 if the citizens of Lamoni would subscribe a like amount, the young people undertook the raising of a like sum to be added to the $10,000 already available by appropriation some time ago for the purpose.

The prime importance of this matter to the standing of the college and to the welfare of our constantly increasing number of graduates was such as to require that this offer be laid before the general church officials, which was done, there being available for conference in the matter two members of the First Presidency, all three members of the Presiding Bishopric, and several members of the Quorum of Twelve.

It was unanimously agreed that the emergency must be met, and that prompt action was essential. In view of this fact, the entire matter was laid before you, and the offer of Graceland's friends in the East, supplemented by the subscriptions of Lamoni and the young people of the church was accepted.

The church architect immediately prepared the plans for the gymnasium and convention hall so as to enable us to meet the requirements of the law at the earliest date possible.

Building Constructed by Students

In view of our program of expansion in the direction of the larger establishment of our self-help plan, it was determined to construct this building largely by the use of student help, thus making every dollar subscribed serve the treble purpose of giving to Graceland her much-needed gymnasium and to the young people of the church their much needed convention hall, and at the same time giving to worthy students who desire a college education but who do not have the full amount of cash to meet all the expenses, an opportunity to "earn while they learn."

Already the excavation is completed, the footings are in, and the walls in process of construction.

A large number of students have had a part in this work, and as the building progresses, additional students will be able by working a few hours a day, to enter college, who otherwise would have been denied the privilege.

At the breaking of the ground, which occurred as one of the closing exercises of the Young People's Convention, the following, which indicates something of the sentiment of the young people in making this offering to the church and the college, was published in connection with the ceremony:

"Another Milestone in Graceland Has Been Passed

"Graceland has now passed her first quarter century milestone, having celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of her first graduating class at the commencement exercises in June, 1923.

"In connection with the commencement season this year, Graceland invited her alumni and former students to a general home-coming as preliminary to the Young People's Convention, which followed in a ten-day session. This invitation was accepted by hundreds of Graceland's loyal friends from Maine to California, and one of the finest gatherings in the long career of Graceland has passed into history.

"The Young People's Convention followed, and brought approximately a thousand enthusiastic young men and women from all quarters of the globe to launch the movement which cannot help but have a very large influence in the work of the redemption of Zion, and the development of the plans of the church.

"At this twenty-fifth anniversary the Board of Trustees of the college, in compliance with the general demand throughout the church on the part of Graceland's alumni and friends, announced a program of expansion which will more easily meet the needs of the church than has hitherto been possible. This expansion is in the way of extending Graceland into a four-year standard college which will grant the usual B. A. degree to her graduates.

"Because of the loyal support of the people of Lamoni, the faculty, the student body, the general church officers and the church as a whole, Graceland has in recent years developed into a fully standardized and officially accredited junior college of very high grade, and this next step is taken with the full assurance that the same support from all sources which she has had in the past will continue to make possible her extended program.

"That this faith has not been misplaced is fully shown by the fact that the friends of the college in attendance at the Young People's Convention, recognizing one of Graceland's most crying needs, launched a movement for the construction of a gymnasium and convention hall not only to meet the requirements of Graceland during the college year, but to provide a home for the young people of the church who desire to assemble from time to time to make preparation to have their share in the solution of the great problems of the church.

"The reception given this movement by the young people themselves, representing more than thirty States of the Union and several foreign countries and the community of Lamoni, which has always had very much at heart the development of the church college, was so enthusiastic that the much needed building is assured, and not only will Graceland have a place for her needs in the development of her program of physical education and an assembly hall where her constantly growing student body can meet, but the young people of the church will have a home for their conventions.

"Such loyal and enthusiastic support cannot but be a guarantee of the good that will come from this Young People's Convention. It means that the same enthusiasm for doing things that has characterized this convention will be carried back to the hundreds of branches represented here and untold good will result."

As one of the chief activities of the college during the past year, this has been reported to you in considerable detail with the recommendation that you forward it as part of your annual report to the General Conference with the confident belief that your action, having had the unanimous approval of the members of the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, and the members of the Quorum of Twelve, available at the time for consultation, will meet with like approval of the General Conference.

Financial

The complete report of the treasurer of the college, covering some fifty-seven typewritten pages is on file with the general church officers. This is the annual financial report of the college for the period closing June 30, 1923, and includes the itemized inventory, assets and liabilities, losses and gains for the year 1922-23. The following extract from that report is included as being perhaps the most important part of it, and the part in which you and the delegates and others in attendance at the General Conference will be most interested:

Expenditures Compared With Budget 1922-23

Items	Allowed	Used	Over	Under
Allowances for faculty	$27,000.00	$26,687.07		$ 312.93
Extension department	1,000.00	845.62		154.38
Heating plant, fuel, and labor	5,500.00	5,789.17	289.17
Insurance	200.00	1,807.75	1,607.75
Library upkeep and care	1,150.00	1,228.99	78.99
Library accessions	150.00	231.79	81.79
Advertising, catalogue, etc.	450.00	410.91		39.09
Office help	1,000.00	830.07		169.93
Light and water	1,200.00	1,968.19	768.19
General expense	500.00	895.80	395.80
Repairs, upkeep, and improvements	3,400.00	2,478.93		931.07
Notes payable	4,650.00			4,650.00
Land contract (Carpenter lots)	700.00	746.18	46.18
Students in training	2,000.00	1,983.68		16.32
Water system	1,500.00			1,500.00
Laboratory equipment	1,000.00	1,000.00
	$51,400.00	$46,904.15	$3,287.87	$7,763.72

Estimated Income

Tuition and fees	$30,000.00	$24,925.40		$5,074.60
Offerings	1,400.00	3,950.60	$2,550.69
	$31,400.00	$28,876.00	$2,550.69	$5,074.60

This tabulation of the budget and expenditures shows, among other things, the following:

Allowances, extension department, advertising, office help, repairs and upkeep, and students in training, each represent an expenditure of less than the amount allowed.

Notes payable and water system each show no expenditure.

Heating plant, insurance, library, upkeep and care, library accessions, light and water, general expenses and land contracts, each show an expenditure of more than the amount allowed by budget.

The amount of items underdrawn exceeds the amount overdrawn by $4,495.85.

The income shown is $2,524.00 less than the income estimated.

The account with the church, not indicated in above tabulation, shows the amount received from the church on budget to be $16,871.41 or $3,128.59 less than the appropriation.

In General

The past year has, without question, been the most successful in the history of this institution. There has been that complete harmony and cooperation between the citizens of Lamoni, the Board of Trustees, the faculty, and the student body, which can but result in one thing—success of the very highest order.

The continued recognition given to the college by the accrediting and standardizing agencies of the State and the Nation, the continually increasing interest on the part of the young people of the church in Graceland's program, and the ever-increasing cooperation on the part of the church generally, encourages us to look into the future with the hope that it may find us continually more able to meet the enlarging demands from the State and from the church in a way which will merit the greater support necessary if Graceland is to fulfill her complete mission.

Ever praying that that may be the result, and that Graceland's part in the hastening time toward the redemption of Zion may be such as to warrant the hope of God's presence in our efforts for good, is our fondest desire.

Respectfully submitted,
G. N. BRIGGS, President.

LAMONI, IOWA, August 25, 1923.

ANNUAL REPORT OF J. A. GUNSOLLEY, TREASURER
June 30, 1923

To the Board of Trustees: A statistical report has already been made in detail, and filed with the secretary of the board, a copy of which has been furnished to the Presiding Bishop, and Church Auditor. This report consists of the financial statement for the year, including assets and liabilities, profits and losses, the assets being fully itemized in the inventory sheets forming a part of the report.

In this report it will be our purpose simply to mention matters in a general way without burdening the record by repetition of details. A general statement of assets and liabilities, however, will not be out of order, and is as follows:

Net gain 1922-23	7,916.67	$225,891.58

Present net worth		$238,032.67

Liabilities

By comparison of liabilities with a year ago, we find that there has been a reduction of $2,461.43. Taking into consideration the financial stringency it would seem that this is a very favorable showing. While our notes payable has increased somewhat, our accounts payable has been reduced.

Scholarships

Our general scholarship fund seems to be serving a large number of people. About thirty scholarships were issued last year, aggregating in round numbers three thousand dollars ($3,000). This amount was practically covered by the offerings made on annual College Day, so that the effort made upon this occasion should be strengthened. It is a source of great benefit to so many of our young people and it would seem a pity to neglect it in any degree. These scholarships are beginning to mature now, and the returns from their being repaid should about equal the amount issued each year, so that it will be a revolving fund, in fact, as well as in theory. We collected a considerable amount on scholarships during the year. It is felt that nearly all these scholarships are good, and will be repaid, and that they are indeed a very good investment, considering the best interests of the church and its young people.

Student Ledger

The balance due from students is $1,821.78 less than a year ago. This is due to quite an extent to the fact that special effort was made to call attention to the urgent need of funds by the institution, and urging students to do their utmost to pay up, even if they had to borrow money elsewhere. The balance is still very large, but when we consider that this has been accumulating for many years, we believe that it is not a bad showing, and indicates that the young people of the church are very dependable, and consider their obligations as being a sacred trust. A comparatively small percentage has to be charged off as uncollectable.

Student Help

About forty young people were assisted last year in the self-help department, some earning their full board and room, others only in part. While in one sense of the word, student help is always expensive considering the irresponsibility of those employed and the inefficiency of the service rendered as compared to skilled labor, when we consider the large number of young people admitted to the school for training who could not otherwise secure it, it is felt that the undertaking is well worth while. Plans have been adopted by which this department is to be greatly extended the coming year, and confidence is felt that the new plans are going to commend themselves to all concerned.

Office Equipment

We greatly need better facilities for handling our accounting and business of the office. Our filing system, if it may be called a system, is very much out of date, and modern equipment would greatly facilitate the work and render it much more effective. We are hoping that in the near future we may feel that we can spend a modest amount in supplying something more adequate.

Gymnasium and Convention Hall

At the time of closing the books, June 30, work had commenced upon the new gymnasium and convention hall. It has been decided to erect this building very largely by student labor under the supervision of our superintendent of buildings and grounds. Of course it is expected to employ skilled workmen for certain parts of the construction. Other schools construct their buildings by student labor, and certainly what others can do Graceland should be able to do. We are hoping that this will be a practical demonstration of her ability in that regard.

Farm

In our reports in former years attention has been called to the need of the farm in regard to better conditions. It was found that the farm residence which has been occupied for about forty years was becoming so dilapidated that it was an imposition to ask a family to occupy it. The executive committee of the board therefore concluded that it would be wise to convert it into a modern residence, and work was begun immediately looking to this end, a full account of which will appear in our next report. It has also been decided to erect a machine shed to take care of the farm equipment.

Some of the old horses have been disposed of and a new team purchased. An effort has been made to build up our dairy herd by the purchase of two additional registered Jersey cows. This, with the securing of a number of common stock that will relieve the situation temporarily, and will put our dairy herd upon a very high basis. We have a lot of fine young stock coming on, so that within a year or two we shall have a herd of Jerseys that will be among the best. Some of our older stock has been sold, or has been lost, making this addition a necessity.

We have been slow to undertake improvements on the farm, owing to the tightness of money matters generally, hoping that in time the farm itself would pay for these improvements. The statement of profit and loss indicates that the farm has run behind the past year. This is not only true of the College Farm, but is probably true of ninety per cent of the farms throughout the country. If the dairy and garden products might have returned to the farm in cash, a reasonable valuation, there would have been money nearly sufficient to have paid for all improvements. As it is, some of these payments will have to be deferred for a time.

Our next undertaking should be the rebuilding of the barn upon a new site, much more favorable for better results.

Heating Plant

The old boilers are wearing out, and some day will give out. The additional demands by the new classroom building required that during extreme weather two boilers should be running at the same time, so that in order to protect ourselves and to insure adequate heat another boiler was deemed necessary. This was supplied by purchasing a boiler, which the Lamoni Power and Light Plant had displaced, and which was what we required. This was purchased at a reasonable price and has been installed; a debt of $300 being incurred as a result, which is still standing, but which will be taken care of in the near future.

Commissary

This department has been running to its full capacity, owing to the fact that the commissary at the Herald Hall was discontinued. Notwithstanding the price of room and board was reduced from $7 to $6 a week, by careful and economical management, this department shows a safe condition.

In the event of the attendance increasing to any considerable extent as now seems quite likely, more adequate quarters will have to be provided for this department. Our service would also be very greatly improved and without increasing the running expenses any, with the installation of a refrigerating machine, but owing to the fact that new quarters will have to be provided in the near future, it probably would be wiser to make out with the present room and equipment until the more adequate place may be provided. To give proper service to the patrons of the institution in the matter of boarding makes it imperative that as soon as can be done, better provision must be made for this department. Only because of the very fine spirit of the student body has it been possible to continue with the present facilities without meeting some dissatisfaction.

In order to accommodate the boys being housed in Herald Hall it has been decided to reopen a boarding department in that building. This will be operated on a different plan from the former effort, which it is believed will be a decided improvement.

Canning Plant

Hundreds of gallons of garden products were canned last season, which served in quite a large part the demands of our tables for such supplies. While the venture resulted in some loss so far as the showing on the books was concerned, it should be remembered that this was an experimental year, and that we did not know so very much about that kind of business, but enough was learned to convince us that it is a feature that should be continued and extended as opportunity may make it possible. Quite an extensive garden has been planted and it is expected that a like amount of stuff shall be canned for table use this year.

Dormitories

The old frame buildings, Marietta and Patroness Halls, are still rendering good service, but are entirely inadequate, in connection with the temporary dormitory Bide-A-Wee, to meet our demands, so that further remodeling of Herald Hall is being undertaken, in order more fully to meet our requirements for the coming year. If the increase in attendance measures up to the present prospects, even then we shall not be able to house as large a percentage of the students as may be desirable. The need for a new dormitory for girls is more and more apparent and will have to be supplied at no distant day.

Herald Hall

The college has been given the use of this building and considerable expense has been incurred in fitting it for a dormitory for boys. The large rooms have been subdivided, so as to accommodate to much better advantage the needs for dormitory purposes, individual radiators are being installed for each room, so that it is expected that this will furnish a very comfortable home for about fifty boys the coming year. The Lamoni Stake officers still occupy a part of the upper floor of this building, but these rooms in time will also be fitted for dormitory purposes, as well as those being occupied by the community library and downtown studio. With all this space brought into use, the building should house very comfortably about seventy-five boys. It has been found necessary to renew the roof on this building as it was leaking beyond repair.

New Offices

Establishing headquarters of the Sunday School Department and also the Department of Recreation and Expression at Graceland has called for additional office room. Consequently Class Room No. 105 on main floor of old building has been remodeled for this purpose, affording three very excellent office rooms, to be occupied by Superintendent of the Sunday School Department and Floyd M. McDowell, of the First Presidency, with their secretaries. The college feels that it will be greatly to the advantage of the educational work that these departments should have their place of residence here, and is very glad to make this provision for them. The old building otherwise is in fairly good state of repair and gives promise of many years service.

Rug Factory

We have been, for a number of years, looking for some industrial activity which would give employment to students during the year. Our attention was directed to the making of washable bath and bedroom rugs. The manufacture of these rugs has been undertaken in a small way as an experiment with the result that ready sale has been found for the product, and gives assurance that it will be possible to dispose of whatever rugs the factory may be able to turn out. Other looms are in prospect and it is contemplated to arrange to give employment to ten or a dozen students in this activity. The Saints are taking quite an enthusiastic interest in this venture, and are promising help in disposing of the rugs for us. These rugs are standardized at 24 by 48 inches, are made of good yarn filler and durable warp, and sell to the trade for $1.50. Various patterns and colors are produced; a liberal commission is allowed to agents. We shall be glad to hear from any persons who might be interested in helping us by selling these rugs.

Typewriters

Following out our established custom of renewing our typewriter equipment every three years, it will be found necessary to exchange our present equipment for new machines. This will involve an outlay of from $250 to $300.

Garden

The management of the garden hitherto has been delegated to the superintendent of buildings and grounds. The undertaking has grown to the point where, in connection with the canning plant, so much time has been required that it has been found necessary to give almost the entire responsibility to one of our students.

It ought to be that a large percentage of the products used in the commissary would be of our own growing, either in the garden or orchard, and this will be true when we are able to assign the responsibility of this work to one who can give it his undivided time and attention. The necessity for other departments is similar, that is, the division of labor should be carried to a greater degree than has been possible hitherto.

There can be no question but that the soil and climate here are favorable for the production of fruit, as well as most vegetables, and with proper cultivation, it would not only afford products for our use, but some for market, as well as opportunity for the young people to learn up-to-date methods of cultivation.

Budget

Our budget for 1923-24 appears in detail in the statistical report previously referred to, and may be consulted by those who may be particularly interested.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Treasurer.

In connection with the above report, your attention is called to the fact that there being no General Conference in 1921, no trustees were elected that year, as ought to have been done, had the conference been in session. This situation was overlooked at the time of the 1922 conference. These three vacancies, with the two occurring regularly at this time, make necessary the selection by the conference of trustees for a three-year term to succeed G. N. Briggs, C. E. Wight, and J. F. Garver, and for a two-year term to succeed Albert Carmichael and W. E. Hayer.

Respectfully submitted,

J. F. GARVER, for Trustees.

DEPARTMENT OF RECREATION AND EXPRESSION

To the First Presidency: Report of T. W. Williams, General Superintendent Department of Recreation and Expression.

During the years 1919 and 1920 I presented to the executive officers of the Religio a definite program for future work. This was taken up, carefully considered, and finally adopted by the executive committee. We then went before the convention during the General Conference of 1920 with definite recommendations. These were agreed to by the convention. The committee was authorized and empowered to carry out the expressed purpose of the convention. It was also empowered to make such readjustments and changes as would conserve this purpose.

During the past three years and a half we have been diligently working to that end. We have had to overcome conservatism and to avoid radicalism. We have been under the necessity of conciliating honest, devoted members of the church who had not caught our vision and who feared that we were making departures which would be detrimental to the church. The criticisms which we received were helpful. They caused us to consider carefully every move. We were under the necessity of being pleasant while doing this.

On the other hand there was urgent necessity to avoid taking extreme positions or to run off on a tangent. We were in some respects entering new fields of service. Some fields were not even surveyed or explored. We had no guide posts. But I am assured that God has been with us and that he has interposed his power and suggestion. He has supplied caution as well as enthusiasm. He has led us along the way, helping us over the pitfalls and pointing the way of safety. And this is as it should be.

This program which we had in mind, and which to-day is far more than a dream, comprehended the following:

(a) The transition from a purely auxiliary society to a definite church department.

(b) The discarding of a constitution and by-laws with separate organization from the church and taking our place as a part of the church and functioning therein.

(c) Doing away with duplicating activities wherein one department overlapped the work of another one.

(d) Making the primary function of the department recreational and expressional.

(e) Developing such recreational and expressional activities as will supply all the needs of all the membership of the church.

(f) The selection, training, and direction of play leaders.

(g) The planning and erection of buildings for recreational purposes.

(h) The selection, purchase, and installation of recreational and gymnasium equipment.

(i) Promotion of athletics, embracing track work, baseball, volley ball, hand ball, and all other indoor and outdoor sports.

(j) The promotion of athletics and recreation among the church members and particularly industrial workers and using its influence to secure facilities for such expression.

(k) Promotion of athletic tests and the institution of physical tests for boys and girls throughout the church.

(l) The development of community music, including band and orchestral concerts and park singing.

(m) The institution of church dramatics and pageantry.

(n) Extending of the influence of the department into the home and home environs with a view to teaching parents how to play with their children; to provide places where parents and children can take their recreation together.

(o) Organization of public speaking and debating classes throughout the church.

Most, if not all, of this activity has been started, and with every reason to justify our belief that it will succeed. Our young people are taking hold of this work with enthusiasm. We are receiving word from all parts of the United States and Canada as well as foreign countries which evidences that the workers generally are taking up the work.

The one big and overwhelming need is competent workers to take the lead. The general department should have an athletic director both for men and women. There is great call for a director in dramatics. We need some one who can take the general supervision of our organized play department. There is an excellent field for the promotion of public speaking and debating if some one could take the general supervision and direction of this work.

I suggest that some competent person who is qualified and prepared, be placed in charge of the Department of Recreation and Expression with the understanding that he devote his entire time to this work. In this way only can we secure the best results.

I recommend that we cooperate with national organizations which are seeking to promote such activities as we are interested in.

A very thorough and comprehensive campaign of education should be inaugurated, looking to the dissemination of needed information on the value and direction of play in childhood, the discrimination as to amusements and recreational activities of the young and the supplying of information along these lines.

Sincerely yours,
T. W. WILLIAMS.

DEPARTMENT OF SUNDAY SCHOOL

To the First Presidency and General Conference: We herewith submit the report of the Department of Sunday Schools for the year ending September 1, 1923.

GENERAL STAFF

The personnel of the general staff of the Department of Sunday Schools has remained the same throughout the year. To-wit: A. Max Carmichael, Lamoni, Iowa, general superintendent; Blanche Edwards, Heathfield Road, Handworth, Birmingham, England, first assistant superintendent; F. M. McDowell, Lamoni, Iowa, second assistant; E. D. Moore, 1015 West Van Horn Road, Independence, Missouri, secretary; Mark H. Siegfried, Independence, Missouri, treasurer; Anna De Jong Smith, 2903 Sullivan Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri, organized class superintendent.

The general superintendent has carried on his duties as an avocation throughout the greater part of the year up until June 1, 1923. At this time he entered full time upon his task. An analysis of his time from June 1 until September 1 would result in about the following division: 18 days upon the Young People's Convention; 12 days administrative work for the departments; 3 days attending stake conference; 8 days upon the joint manual of the departments; 11 days in preparing for the work of the reunions; 28 days in attendance at reunions; 5 days in preparation for week-day religious instruction by various locals of the church; 3 days in finishing up odd jobs as a part of his prior vocation as superintendent of public schools of Lamoni, Iowa. A great part of his time spent upon administrative work, and upon the joint manual and in reunion work was spent in behalf of the other departments, as well as in behalf of the Sunday school.

The first assistant superintendent has acted as mission superintendent of the British Isles. She attended the Young People's Convention in June, and June 19 began working full time for the departments. She has since that time been acting as supervisor of Young Woman's Bureau for the Department of Women and the Department of Recreation and Expression and also been editing the Young Women's Department, "The Parthenon," and the Sunday School Department in Autumn Leaves. She acted as field worker for the departments during the recent reunion season. An analysis of her time since June 19, would result as follows: Young People's Bureau, 19 days; Sunday school, 18 days; Religio, 11 days; reunions, 27 days.

The general secretary has acted as the representative of the department in our relationships with the Herald Publishing House; in superintending the exhibits at General Conference, and in fostering the development of religious drama, and its use by Sunday schools, and in developing lantern slides to be used by locals in developing the missionary spirit. A set of slides about the Australian Mission has been developed and given into the hands of Albert Knowlton, as manager of the Graphic Arts Bureau.

We have been employing a stenographer for about two thirds time throughout the year.

The work of the historian has been left in the hands of the General Church Historian.

The remaining members of the general staff have been acting in their respective capacities as advisors.

The office of the department is now situated at Graceland College as a part of the educational work of the church.

We would consider that the main tasks of the general workers to be those of stimulating to activity the district and local workers, and the training and assisting of these workers in their task of teaching religion and in organizing the machinery by which this process of teaching religion may most effectively be carried on.

AUTUMN LEAVES

To this end we have used the six pages of Autumn Leaves allotted to the Department of Sunday Schools. We have used three issues of that magazine for the discussion of current lessons of the Junior Quarterly, three for the discussion of the current lessons of the Intermediate Quarterly, four for the discussion of general administrative and teaching problems of Sunday school workers, and two (the two edited by Sister Edwards) in the discussion of the principles of teaching religion as illustrated in the experimental church school held during the Young People's Convention.

THE "HERALD"

We have been permitted to use the Herald several times in this capacity.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES

We feel that a greater part of this help to local workers can be performed by visiting district conferences and reunions. Accordingly we have visited such district and stake conferences as we have been permitted, one at Saint Louis, and one at Holden. At these conferences we discussed the process of teaching religion applicable to the work of all departments. It shall be our endeavor to extend this work.

REUNIONS

Reunions, we feel, offer us an especial advantage to carry on our work. Accordingly we attempted to get the work of the Sunday school represented at as many reunions as possible. Here again every departmental worker was encouraged to take up the matter of religious education as applied to all departmental workers. Of the Sunday school staff, the general superintendent attended five reunions, and the first assistant superintendent attended four reunions. We wish to give special mention to the work of Sister Bertha Constance, of Independence, Missouri, at the reunions of Southwestern and Northeastern Kansas. At these two reunions she took full charge of the children under twelve years of age, and demonstrated to our satisfaction that the children under twelve can be kept busy under supervision from eight in the morning until nine at night, supervision which carries out the entire process of religious development. We feel that this sort of work should be extended.

Further, we feel that the opportunity afforded by the reunions for the development of the work of religious education is of such advantage as to warrant a more intensive training of the workers who go out to represent the departments. This is our problem of the future.

MANUAL

The call for a manual containing helpful information for local workers is of long standing. The function of the manual in instructing with regard to forms of organization is incidental to the function of providing information helpful to the process itself of developing religion. The manual should be crowded with information that will be helpful to the Sunday school teacher, the Boy Scout leader, the Oriole leader, the Recreational leader, the chorister, the Women's superintendent, etc.

At this point we may suggest that the several departments are working together in putting out this manual. Notes toward this end have been amassed, but brevity of time has not permitted its issuance in printed form. The actual work of gathering the data has been left with the Sunday school superintendent. It is hoped that the work can now be more speedily pushed because of increase of time put upon church work.

RELIGIOUS NORMAL TRAINING COURSE

We feel that this course needs revision very much, not because of lack of intrinsic quality of the course itself; for it is a very excellent course, but in the last year or two books have been put upon the market, the use of which would very materially increase the quality of the course, if such books were substituted for the ones recommended in the course now. However, we do not feel it wise because of other considerations to revise it now.

The course does not pay for itself. The charge of twenty-five cents per section does not cover the expense of running it. It is a question in our minds whether the course should be expected to pay its own way, or whether money should be deducted from the general fund of the departments to pay the deficit. We are planning, however, to run the course for another year upon the same basis as it is run this year.

COURSES OF STUDY

For the beginner, primary, junior, and intermediate grades, repeating the lessons as edited some ten or twelve years ago. Sister Anna Salyards is editing anew the lesson for the Senior Quarterly. The third quarter of the series is now running. It is planned that she shall edit three years of work. It is not yet decided what disposition of the lessons of that grade shall be made after the series have been edited.

The editor is putting out of the senior and junior Religio Quarterlies has been under our supervision for some time past. This is a preliminary step to the accomplishment of the joint action of the executive committees of the Sunday School and Religio Departments over two years ago, that in the getting out of courses of study for the Departments, the work should be done as a unified project so as to be sure to fill all needs.

We have been making efforts to get the Quarterlies printed early enough to reach foreign missions as Australia and England on time. We have not fully succeeded. Our last Sunday school quarterly, the fourth quarter of the year, was sent out from the Herald Office August 20. This would not be in sufficient time to reach Australia by the beginning of the quarter, October 1; but would be sufficient to reach England on time.

We have continued to study and prepare for the work of getting out courses of study that will adequately cover the field. There seems to be an insistent demand for a course covering the Book of Mormon, and a course covering elementary work for the newly converted adult and the prospective proselyte. These needs should be among the earliest met.

DISTRICT SCORES

As a means of stimulating district workers in their task we have used the score rating as issued officially in our bulletin, "Instructions for Districts," in 1922, and submitted in our report to the General Convention of 1922. As stated at that time, the score card was to be used instead of the standard of excellence. The rating has now been in use about a year. We prefer to use the rating another year before making an executive decision as to its value. It has been amended so as to give credit for correspondence between district and local workers, and for the visiting of local schools by district officers, even though a full report of the visit is not made to the general officers by the district officer making the visit.

The value of the score rating cannot be estimated until the district has had a chance to sum up its second score. Its value cannot be estimated for those districts which do not report. In fact it, or any other such system, cannot be evaluated for districts which do not report. We do not know the exact number of districts which do not report, but a few do not.

The following districts have reported sufficiently to permit us to assign them score, but in the majority of the cases, we feel that if the reports had been sent in the score would have been much larger than we were able to report in Autumn Leaves. The exact score assigned to each of these districts can be found in different issues of Autumn Leaves:

Alabama District, Arkansas, Alberta, London, Owen Sound, Northern Saskatchewan, Southern Saskatchewan, Southern Wisconsin, Winnipeg, Eastern Colorado, Western Colorado, Central Illinois, Kewanee, Northeastern Illinois, Nauvoo, Southeastern Illinois, Des Moines, Eastern Iowa, Fremont, Gallands Grove, Lamoni, Little Sioux, Spring River, Southern New England, Detroit, Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, Clinton, Far West, Saint Louis, Eastern Montana, Western Montana, New York and Philadelphia, North Dakota, Kirtland, Youngstown-Sharon, Central Oklahoma, Spokane.

The following districts are reporting more or less regularly. For these scores will be figured up at the end of the district year. FINANCE

We herewith inclose a copy of the statement of the auditing department of the church of the examination of the books of M. H. Siegfried, treasurer.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 30, 1923.

I have made an examination of the books and records of the Sunday School Department, as kept under the direction of the treasurer, Brother Mark H. Siegfried, for the year ended June 30, 1923, and now submit as a result thereof statements and schedules enumerated below:

Exhibit "A," Balance Sheet at June 30, 1923.

Exhibit "B," Statement of Income and Expense for the year ended June 30, 1923.

BALANCE SHEET

Cash, net.....	$1,489.13
Cash in banks has been verified by communication with the respective depositories and that in the custody of department heads we have verified in the same manner.
Graceland Scholarship Fund	$234.74
This amount is in the hands of Graceland College and is being used for the benefit of students who desire assistance at that place.
Accounts Receivable: Herald Publishing House	$13,612.83
The net income from the sale of the Gospel Quarterly has been retained by the Herald Publishing House and is subject to the demands of the Sunday School Department. Interest is received from the Herald Publishing House, on these funds, at the rate of four per cent.
Inventories: Furniture and Fixtures	$551.59
The amount shown represents previous book balances of inventories in the departments shown plus charges for additions made during the year. These additions were as follows:
Framing picture	$ 3.30
Film, J. Zimmermann	50.00
Superintendent's library	62.79
Total	$116.09

Present Worth:

The balance as shown by our report at June 30, 1922, was $12,805.82 to which has been added during the year the Graceland Scholarship Fund of $234.74 not previously carried on the records, and the net income for the year as shown by Exhibit "B" amounting to $3,347.73 and making the present net worth of the department at $15,888.29.

Statement of Income and Expense

In Exhibit "B" we show in detail the respective items of income and expense and the sources from which they arose.

The main source of income of the department is from the publication and sale of the Gospel Quarterly. The net amount received was $4,552.02.

Interest received from the funds left in the hands of the Herald Publishing House was $606.12.

Items of expense by the department, aside from the cost of the publication of the Gospel Quarterly amounted to $1,810.41, and are detailed in Exhibit "B."

We shall be pleased to furnish any information relative to the audit made by this department should it be desired.

Respectfully,

ALBERT H. KNOWLTON,
General Church Auditor.

RELATIONSHIPS OF THE DEPARTMENTS IN GENERAL

The general heads of departments have held a number of meetings together during the year. It is their endeavor to coordinate their work sufficiently to eliminate any unnecessary duplication, and yet to meet all needs adequately. In this work they have been acting under the chairmanship of the superintendent of the Department of Sunday Schools. The particular features of cooperation have been in the preparation of a joint manual mentioned above, and in the advice sent out to local workers regarding forms of organization. No courses of study are put out generally without the concurrence of the general heads of departments. Each department has its separate organization and each departmental head is directly responsible to the First Presidency for the administration of his department.

RELATIONSHIP OF DEPARTMENTS IN DISTRICT ORGANIZATION

No joint instructions have been issued to district departmental workers by the general departmental heads, regarding joint forms of district organization except with reference to the district home study workers, and district librarians. Instructions to district workers regarding the home study work was issued in the Saints' Herald of August 8, 1923. In correspondence district departmental superintendents have been urged to have a district library committee composed of representatives from each department of the church, or to unite upon a single librarian to represent all the departments of the church. This advice has the approval of the general church librarian. Regarding the form of district organization, each departmental head has been issuing separate instructions.

Whenever district Sunday school workers have asked our advice we have advised them to put the business of the Sunday school into the business meeting of the main church as soon as the district membership feel that it would be profitable. We have not advocated their doing so until the membership was willing. But as we have often expressed it we see no more reason for doing the business of the church school outside of the business meeting of the main church than for doing the business involved in running prayer meetings outside of the business meetings of the main church, except for the reason that it has been done so. Whether this is an adequate reason is not determined by any intrinsic quality in the reason itself, but rather in the attitude of the membership toward the reason. Thus we are quite content to leave it to the membership.

RELATIONSHIPS OF THE DEPARTMENTS IN LOCALS

The general heads of departments have issued joint instructions regarding the organization of the departments in locals, either separately or in some joint form. The first instructions were printed in the Saints' Herald of November 8, 1922. These were reprinted in pamphlet form and issued to all departmental superintendents and district and branch presidents from the departmental offices. These instructions were supplemented by articles in the Heralds of December 20 and 27, 1922, January 3 and 10, and May 2, 1923.

It was our endeavor in these instructions merely to state or describe typical forms of organization now in existence in various locals over the church. Further than that one form of organization was described which is not now in use, at least not to any extent.

It has been our policy up to date to urge that each local department be permitted to make its own choice of organization, that not even district conferences or conventions attempt to legislate for locals. With more or less intensity, depending largely upon local factors which we considered material to a decision as to the best course to pursue, we have advocated locals proceeding as fast as possible to that form of cooperation which would permit the departmental business being done in the business meeting of the main church, but in so doing not to lose the identity of the departments as such. The local factors which would enter in to determine the nature of our advice would be size of local, proximity to the geographical center of the church, above all, the feelings of the membership, and too, availability of workers who see the point of view of a larger extension of the principle of cooperation.

Respectfully submitted,

A. MAX CARMICHAEL,

Superintendent Department of Sunday Schools.
September 1, 1923.

DEPARTMENT OF WOMEN

To the First Presidency: The executive staff of the Department of Women is as follows: Mrs. Dora Pankey Glines, superintendent; Mrs. Ida Pearson Etzenhouser, first assistant superintendent; Miss Nellie Sampson, second assistant superintendent; Mrs. Grace Morrison, secretary; Miss Blanche Edwards, supervisor of young women of the church; Mrs. Anna Murphy, superintendent of Department of Women in Independence; Mrs. Jennie Robinson Yingling, member of Sanitarium committee; Miss Pauline James, supervisor of young women in Independence; Mrs. Anne Friend Roberts, general cradle roll superintendent.

At the present writing, with a few exceptions the seventy-five districts of the United States and Canada have active superintendents of the Department of Women. The following foreign districts have superintendents: Norway, British Isles, South Sea Islands, Australia, Hawaii, and the West Indies. We have two special representatives superintending work among the Indians. These two superintendents are: Mrs. W. E. Shakespeare in Oklahoma and Mrs. P. R. Burton in Nebraska.

The district superintendents have under their supervision every local organization in their respective districts. Each local organization has a local superintendent and as many other officers as they deem wise, together with the following special workers: Cradle roll worker, home department worker, leader of young women, and friendly visitor. We are advising the closest cooperation between the workers of the Department of Women and the workers of other departments, as well as those of the priesthood. We are happy to report at this time that wherever our people, both men and women, are fully converted, have a vision of the objective of the church, and sense the fact that the departments are not separate organizations, but only different aspects of the workings of the whole organization, there is harmony and progress. Human progress may be properly defined as that which secures the increase of human happiness.

The Department of Women has immediate supervision of the cradle roll. We are, however, working unitedly with the other departments in the interest of child welfare in all its phases and constantly urging home study in every family and by every individual whether isolated or in close contact with local churches. Mrs. Anne Friend Roberts, Box 255, Independence, Missouri, is general cradle roll superintendent. Under the present organization, the Department of Women in each local is financing the cradle roll work in their respective branch. We urge close cooperation between the cradle roll worker and the local superintendent of the Sunday school. Wherever possible we advise the superintendent of the Sunday school to see that the cradle roll worker is in charge of the children of cradle roll age in the Sunday school.

All questions pertaining to the home department and young women's work should be addressed to the Departments, Lamoni, Iowa.

Generally speaking, the women have enthusiastically worked in the interest of our church institutions. It is with pleasure that we extend to the women of the church this open avenue of service. The general executive, together with Miss Gertrude Copeland, superintendent of the Sanitarium, Miss Zilpha Monroe, superintendent of the Children's Home, and Mrs. Edith Carr, superintendent of the Home for the Aged, wish to thank all who have contributed to these institutions. It is with much appreciation that your contributions have been received. Miss Copeland reports that local organizations of women and girls all over the United States and Canada, as well as the Oriole girls of Honolulu, have rendered service. We wish to acknowledge appreciation of the splendid work done by the Patroness Society.

The 1922 plan in regard to reunion programs was followed in 1923. The following women were indorsed as general field workers to represent the departments at the various reunions assigned by the general reunion committee: Mrs. L. Lenor Christy, Mrs. Jennie Robinson Yingling, Mrs. M. D. Graham, Mrs. Dora Pankey Glines, Mrs. Anne Friend Roberts, Miss Lucie Sears, Mrs. Hazel Burwell, Mrs. Mae Engel, Mrs. E. A. Davis, Mrs. Barbara Milligan, Miss Bertha Constance, Mrs. J. R. Lentell, Miss Blanche Edwards, Mrs. B. E. Brown.

Many inquiries have come to us in regard to the apparent discontinuance of the Women's Department column in the Herald. After consultation with the editors the following plan was deemed advisable. Since all are interested in topics of general interest, the departments were asked to contribute at any time, also being given privilege to use the Herald columns for anything the editors and general superintendents thought advisable to give space. Every individual should read carefully every article that appears in the Herald.

STUDY COURSES

At present the following question-outline study courses are ready for use:

1. Psychology. The Mind and Its Education, by Betts.
2. Parents' and Teachers' Problems. Child Study and Child Training, by Forbush.
3. Mothercraft. The Mothercraft Manual, by Read.
4. Sociology. Sociology and Modern Social Problems, by Ellwood.
5. A Study of Civics. The New Civics, by Ashley.
6. Mothercraft for Girls, on the same Mothercraft text by Read.
7. Elementary Biology. Plant and Animal Children, by Torelle.
8. Child Nature. A Study of Child Nature, by Harrison.
9. Our Food and the Body.

Beginning soon in the Herald will appear the question-outline course in Mothercraft for Girls. The question-outline of each chapter will be accompanied by a lecture intended to amplify the reading in the text.

Requests for all publications should be made to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

The matter regarding the financing of the Department of Women has been clearly stated by Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire, copy of which appears here:

"INSTRUCTIONS REGARDING FINANCES

"All will agree that every department of church work should be self-sustaining. To accomplish this a well-defined program must be adopted and followed. In the past the funds necessary to carry on the work of the Department of Sunday School and the Department of Recreation and Expression (the Religio) have come from the profits arising from the sale of the quarterlies. It is hoped that this source of revenue will be sufficient, as this method equalizes the financial load very satisfactorily. The Department of Women have had no such source of income, nor will they have during the present year. We must, therefore, provide the funds either by an assessment upon each local or by calling for a voluntary offering at stated intervals.

"We advise that at the first meeting of each month, of the Department of Women of every local organization, a freewill offering be given. This monthly freewill offering to be not less than one dollar and more if the local feels that it is able financially to make a larger contribution. These funds are to be turned over by the officers of the local Department of Women to the local solicitor of the Bishop's agent. These funds will be forwarded by the Bishop's agent of your district to the Presiding Bishop, who is the treasurer of the Department of Women.

"The invitation to assist financially in the support of this department should be extended to every woman of the local church, because every girl and every woman belongs to the Department of Women.

"Funds to meet local needs may also be met by collections or offerings at other meetings of the local or by such other methods as the local may adopt.

"MONEY MAKING

"Women take great delight in matching their ability with men in 'making money,' and they are especially enthusiastic in doing so when it is to be contributed to a worthy cause. This disposition to be 'laborers together with God' should be encouraged. Care, however, should be exercised as to the methods pursued.

"God's plan for financing his work is by tithes, offerings, consecration, and surplus, but there are hundreds of ways in which the women can earn, either individually or collectively, the funds by which to make these contributions. The church people should not undertake to finance the church in any other than the God-appointed way above mentioned. For example, the church need not sell aprons to build a church, but any member can do so and their contribution will make an acceptable offering. If two worthy sisters, or a dozen, join in that effort, it is none the less acceptable.

"Wherever talent or desire is seeking an outlet of expression in the interest of the Lord's work the Department of Women encourages giving full vent to those righteous impulses for service.

"Sister Elizabeth Lawhead, eighty-two years old, a member of the Home family at Holden, has made and sold $72 worth of rag rugs as her contribution to the cause of Christ. This is a concrete example of what willing hearts and hands can do and be made happy in the doing.

"B. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop."

OUR RESPONSIBILITY

To-day humanity itself is at the crossroads. There is a path that will lead to a human race which shall at last reach the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." There is also a path that can lead to nothing less than the suicide of humanity. There is presented to us to-day the choice between a world beautiful, noble, full of life and health, and a world of fear, of hatred, and destruction. The Christian home is really the greatest success that Christian teaching has yet produced.

Women have in their hands the children of the world. The infancy of humanity is yours to train. Humanity itself is in your hands. It is necessary that there be born a generation which shall have a spiritual power equal to the intellectual and material advance that has been made.

If God made the world, the more we know about the world the more we know about God.

We hope in the coming year that many may be able to find themselves.

Sincerely,
DORA PANKEY GLINES,
Superintendent Department of Women.

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS

To the First Presidency and General Conference; Greeting: The following is the brief summary of gains, losses, etc., drawn from reports received during the year 1922:

Net enrollment December 31, 1921	95,496
Gains:
Baptisms	3,640
Unreported baptisms and "restored" ..	735
Total gain	4,375
Losses:
Death	1,338
Expelled	91
"Unknown"	2,859
Correction	218
Total loss	4,506
Net loss	131
Net enrollment December 31, 1922	95,365

During the first half of the year 1923, 1,402 baptisms have been reported. For the same period in the year 1922 we received 1,490, in 1921, 2,503, and in 1920, 1,806. Our total loss for the period, January 1, 1923, to June 30, 1923, is 2,274, revealing a net loss for the first six months of 1923, of 872, and showing a net enrollment June 30, 1923, 94,592.

Our priesthood record December 31, 1922, which includes 483 ordinations entered during the year, is viz: Melchisedec, 2,101; Aaronic, 3,878; total, 5,979, divided, viz: Apostles, 11; bishops, 27; elders, 1,680; evangelists, 25; high priests, 205; seventies, 153; priests, 1,778; teachers, 1,075; deacons, 1,025. During the first six months of 1923 various ordinations were reported, making the priesthood record on June 30, 1923, to show a net gain of 61, a total of 6,040. With a net enrollment of 94,592 we discover that we have one ordained person for each fifteen members.

On December 31, 1922, we had enrolled with 672 branches in United States and Canada, 78,540. On June 30, 1923, enrolled with 679 branches, 78,931.

NONRESIDENT

In the past great numbers have been lost to the church because of being located far from branches. Names of these persons were carried on branch records but no contact was had with the branch. As a result of urging the various branches to locate those enrolled upon their local records we have carried to the "unknown" account a total of 7,481 names up to December 31, 1922. On June 30, 1923, this number had reached 9,141 with many of the branches yet to report. In an attempt to avoid some of this loss we have for some time been enrolling the names of Saints remote from branches as "Nonresident" of the district in which they are located. Such persons are thereby placed under the direct supervision of the district officers. If the latter utilize the opportunity offered we are confident that loss from that source will be diminished very materially. Some districts have over three hundred, several over two hundred, and many over one hundred nonresident enrollments. On June 30, 1923, there was a total of 6,677 enrolled as above provided, in United States and Canada exclusive of the stakes; and about 650 outside of any organized field.

Through the splendid efforts of Brother J. W. Foster, London, England, who serves the branches in that field as this department serves the branches in United States and Canada, and those who have assisted him, we believe the records of the British Mission to be in a splendid condition. For December 31, 1922, he reports a total of 1,298 known members. Adjustments in the general record are made from monthly reports submitted by Brother Foster. Likewise, Brother E. B. Hull is doing splendid work in maintaining the record in Hawaii. On December 31, 1922, our enrollment with that mission was 408.

We are disappointed because of being unable to advise the conference of the numerical strength of the church in the Australasian and Society Islands Missions. We have received no reports from either of those fields for 1922.

We are pleased to report that a splendid spirit of cooperation is manifested by ministers and others who are expected to forward data for record. Greater care may still be exhibited in preparation of reports. All names should be printed, using the simplest style of capital letters. For many years this office has been urging branch and district to use care in selection of secretaries. There is yet room for improvement.

It might interest some to know that from the reports for 1922 showing the former church connection of the person baptized we learn that the churches from which we receive the largest numbers are in the following order: Methodists, Baptists, Christians, Catholics, Presbyterians, Mormons, Episcopalians, United Brethren, Congregational, Salvation Army, Evangelical, etc. Also that we find a total of fifty-five trades or professions represented by those baptized.

Net enrollment August 31, 1923, 95,267.

Respectfully submitted,

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS,

F. A. RUSSELL.

CHURCH HISTORIAN

To the Presidency and General Conference: I beg leave to report the work of the office of historian and librarian for the year 1922-23.

Little change has been made in the conduct of the office. We have done the best we could to economize by using part-time help, which has greatly lessened the efficiency of the office as there is a limit to the amount of work that any one person can do.

We have continued the policy of gathering local history through mission and district historians which are usually nominated by the historian's office and confirmed by the missions and districts. Some very excellent work has been done during the year, several local historians having brought their work up to date. On the other hand there are still some territories from which we have no satisfactory history.

The Journal of History has been continued, and we believe has been more useful outside of the church than in, as indicated by a large number of inquiries coming from libraries and associations who subscribe for the magazine, or who may be carried on exchange.

We have answered many inquiries, both to the ministry of the church, and to educators, historians, government officials, and private individuals outside of the church. We have tried to make the office as useful to the ministry and membership of the church as was possible. We have rendered considerable assistance during the year to the brethren conducting debates and making defense against the attacks on the church.

The work of the general church librarian has been conducted from this office as heretofore. The library in Independence, having outgrown its quarters, was removed to the Bartholomew Hall, 916 West Lexington Street, and much expanded during the year. There are now about eight thousand bound volumes and as many pamphlets. In the new library we have been able to arrange the books, giving a science room, a room for religion and history, one for fiction, another for reference, and another for juvenile books, and the vault for valuable manuscripts and first editions.

Sister Viola V. Short has acted as assistant church librarian and has supervised the library work at Independence. Miss Lyda Elefson, acting as assistant church librarian, has supervised the library work at Graceland College.

We again appeal to the general church for books, manuscripts, papers, periodicals, and tracts that may have to do in any way with the church. Several donations of considerable worth have been made during the year. President Frederick M. Smith has again made a large contribution. Hale W. Smith has loaned us his scientific and philosophical books, which were greatly needed. Mrs. Jennie Weed Young contributed a fine library of classics with bookcase. Other contributions during the year have been made by Brother Atwell, Arthur Dutton, Alma Davis, Mrs. R. Warnock, Walter W. Smith, Sherman Sloan, Mrs. Anna Lawrence, T. C. Kelley, E. H. Tordoff, George Essig, Mrs. A. L. Sanford, the Laurel Club, and Roy Chapman. We shall be very glad to have donations from anyone who may care to part with books for the library. We are,

Your servant for Christ's sake,

WALTER W. SMITH,

Church Historian and Librarian.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Institute of Arts and Sciences Opens

The Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences opened September 17, for the fall semester. Registration continued throughout the week and has now reached over two hundred. An enrollment of about three hundred is expected.

Classes began on September 18 and have been in regular session since that time. Owing to some confusion in entering the new quarters on the Campus and the pre-conference activities, some difficulty has been encountered in arranging the class schedule. It has now however been definitely announced.

Classes meet both in the afternoon and evening, five days per week. Afternoon classes begin at 1.30 and continue until 5 o'clock. They are resumed again in the evening at 7.30 and end at 9.30.

Several complete courses are offered, for which certificates are awarded upon completion. They are normal kindergarten-primary training, religious education, social service, mothercraft, trained nursing, music, and engineering. Preparatory classes are conducted for students who are not qualified for entrance. Work in commercial subjects is also offered.

History

The Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences came into existence as a means of supplying educational facilities "for those who must work" to support themselves or their families, "but are willing to study" in order to equip themselves for better and more efficient service.

President Frederick M. Smith, seeing this need, appointed an educational commission during the summer of 1916, consisting of Walter W. Smith, Mark H. Siegfried, Eunice Winn Smith, Alonzo H. Parsons, and Eva Bailey Short. A survey was made. Classes were begun the first of October and the enrollment of pupils indicated considerable interest in the movement.

The school was regularly organized before the close of the school year, and opened in the fall of 1917 with classes in kindergarten-primary training, religious education, social service, and high school. A mothercraft course and pre-engineering course were added in 1920, and a course in music in 1923. The nurses training school of the Independence Sanitarium, which had been organized in 1909, was consolidated with the institute at the close of the school year in June, 1923.

The institute began its class work in the Annex to the Stone Church; the second season the Library Building on the east lawn. Subsequently the brick building at Bowen and Lexington was secured and the library moved there, greatly increasing the class room. During the spring of 1923 the property on South Pleasant Street was purchased, giving the institute adequate quarters for all classes, and a beautiful campus.

The Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences was regularly incorporated as an educational institution during the fall of 1922.

The institute is unique in that as far as is known there is no other school or college in the country where a faculty serves absolutely without pay. No instructor in the institute is without either a college degree or a State or county teacher's certificate. Not one cent is paid in salary, all serving freely and willingly. It is a cause worthy of some sacrifice and those assisting in its development are pleased to give a portion or all of their time to instruction.

The school conflicts in no way with Graceland College for it is primarily a part time school for those who must work but who also wish to study. Full time students are recommended to attend Graceland if they have the means and qualifications.

These represent courses being given at the institute. Others are given at the Independence Sanitarium and other places, including additional instructors who are associated with the faculty of the institute.

Marshall Holds Union Services

MARSHALL, MISSOURI, September 19.—The Saints voted to dispense with all meetings except Sunday school to attend union revival meetings in a big tent. Evangelist Tory was the speaker.

Brother Marion Johnson, superintendent of the Sunday school, is increasing both the interest and attendance in that service.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is presided over by Brother R. M. Ridge, and is doing good work both in classes and programs.

Elder H. G. Thayer, the pastor of the branch, entertained the Saints Sunday morning, September 16, with a good sermon on the fulfillment of prophecy.

Cleveland Prepares for Rally

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 20.—The Cleveland Branch is preparing for a rally day on October 14. The church building has been reseated and the interior redecorated. It is hoped that the rally day will create a renewed interest. Meals will be served in the basement, and all are invited to attend.

The departments will have their place, starting with young people's prayer meetings at 8.30, Sunday school at 9.30, a branch service, Department of Recreation and Expression, and Department of Women. Matters of interest to the branch will be presented.

The coordination plan has been adopted here in part and departmental work has progressed to some extent along these lines. For instance the Department of Recreation and Expression and the Department of Women have worked together in operating a girls' department, etc., but there has been a lack of initiative action. How to govern ourselves and reach perfection seems still to be somewhat of an unsettled question with some. The departments still have their separate yearly business meetings and separate auditing. One department has adopted a budget system.

The branch adopted quarterly business meetings but has not been inclined to interest itself in department business. Neither has it as yet ever had a meeting of branch officers with department officers, but there is hope of progress, and the expectation is that the rally will be a means of advancement.

There is now a west side branch known as the Lakewood Branch, where Brother Patterson of Australia has been holding forth for the last week. The two weeks previous he was in Lorain, Ohio, where there is also a part of the Cleveland membership.

The young people's prayer meetings, held each Sunday at 8.30, have been quite a success.

Many Los Angeles Saints Attend Conference

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, September 23.—Although separated by a great stretch of mountains, sandy wastes, rocky deserts and lava beds, endless plains and farms, which lie between here and "there," Los Angeles Saints are all in suspense, anxiously waiting for the first news of the General Conference at Independence.

Several members have departed for the East, three of them young people to Graceland, and others to conference. Pastor S. N. Gray and family took the road by auto, and reports of a "Log of the Olds 8" may rival that of the "490." With Brothers T. W. Williams, W. A. McDowell, Sidney and Ture Gray, Clarence Moran, and our late pastor, D. E. Dowker, gone from our midst, the preaching devolves upon the few remaining ones who are standing up under the task quite bravely.

The lot, the new church, the building committee, the price to pay, the amount paid, and the residue to be paid are on every mind, and there is a general spirit of harmony running through the branch, all determined on making good. The building fund committee recently called for contribution to a "slogan" contest, to which there was a liberal response. Brother F. A. Ball was winner with his contribution, "A new church worthy of the Los Angeles Branch." This will be the slogan in the work which lies ahead, and will be printed on all local church advertising, collection envelopes, etc.

Sister Fannie McGhan, who has been confined to her bed since some time in April, after undergoing an operation is still cheerful. Sister Fannie is quite well known throughout the church, especially in Illinois, and all who know her are asked to remember her in their prayers. All love to hear the testimony of "dear old Brother McGhan," telling how the Lord healed him of cancer and gave him a vision in which he was assured that he would be watched over by an all-seeing eye, when he was sent to California by his physician several years ago as the only means of saving his life. He is the picture of health, cheerful and surprisingly strong; all considered. It is hoped Sister Fannie will receive a like blessing.

Good Attendance at Lucasville

LUCASVILLE, OHIO, September 17.—Large attendance is reported at the services in this branch, there being from seventy-five to one hundred at every preaching service and also at others.

The Saints were made to sorrow recently over the death of Arthur Colley, an esteemed and loved brother here.

J. D. Shower has been conducting services at the Pleasant Valley Branch, but has now discontinued meetings. One was baptized.

Home-Coming Held at Providence

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, September 19.—Sunday, September 8, was a home-coming Sunday for church and community, and the increase in attendance at all church services was very noticeable. The spirit of work is good in the branch.

The president of the branch is Elder Edmund M. Brown whose experience in business as well as in the ministry has made him particularly successful in his office.

The membership of the branch is divided into groups. Each group is headed by an elder and a priest, who have accepted the group assigned to them as their spiritual stewardship for the year 1923. A record of the visits of the various officers is kept in plain view of all. In the lower auditorium is posted the name and address of each member of the several groups, and when the elder or priest makes an official visit the date is recorded against the name of the member.

The Wednesday evening prayer services are truly wonderful. It is a revelation to see so many take part, and particularly the young people.

On Sunday, September 23, services to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the bringing forth of the Book of Mormon were held. A special program was rendered for each service of the day with this theme in mind. All were filled with the spirit of cooperation, ever bearing in mind that the church supplies the three grand essentials of happiness: something to do; something to love; something to hope for.

Suggestions for a Better Reunion

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, September 25.—In reading the article in the HERALD on the "Bigger and better reunion," I feel that I can heartily indorse every suggestion, but there is one point more which I would like to add as a thought to make our reunions "bigger and better."

While not able to attend a reunion myself this summer, I talked with some who did attend one or two of the larger reunions. They were enthusiastic over the splendid time they had had, and over the many new things learned, but they were agreed in one criticism which they had regarding the refreshment stand. They were strong in their disapproval of this.

A stand with its soda pop, cracker jack, and all-day suckers is a constant temptation to children to spend money, and their plea from early until late is for nickels and dimes to spend. If they are denied, they are unhappy when they see others buying. If they are gratified, their appetite is spoiled, and wholesome food is left on their plate to go to waste. Before the next meal they are really hungry, so they must have something from the stand to "piece out," and again they eat little at table. Here is a double waste, and a child's stomach is being upset with the very grave danger of impairing general health. Those who manage the stand are usually young people and often are kept from services to provide for the needs of those not attending.

By way of suggestion, here are presented a few ideas for the reunion:

Those who have had experience in the kitchen of our reunions say that there is apt to be fruit juice from canned fruit, such as pineapple and cherries, that goes to waste. If this were saved it could be made into delicious fruit drinks. Lemonade could be made with little expense, and this could sell at five cents a cup, or a better way would be to give it free, with a donation box near by. There is many a father or mother who would gladly drop a dollar into the box if they knew that their children could have wholesome drinks, thus avoiding the constant request for small change. This stand should be open only between services. Cool drinking water should also be convenient in the hope that we might sometimes satisfy our thirst with that.

If we must have ice cream cones, let them be served only during recreation period, but if there is sufficient good lemonade and fruit punch on hand the need will not seem so great. Ice cream never makes us cool; the fat in it only adds to the body fuel which produces greater heat. But it is nourishing, and often children need that nourishment between meals. The practice of serving milk and graham crackers at the morning hour helps to meet this need.

If there are some who must eat oftener than three times a day, the left overs from the noon meal could be put in a cupboard in the dining room to be available as long as they lasted. These should be free, with a donation box near by to remind us that the money we would have spent at the stand is saved for the church and is not going to the makers of chewing gum, cracker jack, and soda pop. This cupboard should not be accessible to children, but only to grown people who wish their children and young people to eat between meals.

Here is a suggestion of something which might take the place of ice cream cones for the children: There is a little device which looks like a small cup with a long handle, with a cutting edge in the bottom. This is scraped across the block of ice until the cup is filled with ice shavings resembling snow which is then turned into a paper cup or frill; then a few drops of flavoring syrup is sprinkled over it and the children have what they are delighted to call "snow balls." The children could manage this part of the refreshments by themselves. During the recreation period they might be allowed to have a block or two of ice and make their own snow balls. The syrup should be in bottles with sprinkler top. All summer I saw the children conduct their own little refreshment stands, and they seemed to do a thriving business. Snow balls sold at a penny each. It would seem that this might be considered a safe refreshment for the children, for a half dozen snow balls would not much more than equal a bottle of soda pop, and if the fruit syrups were made at home we would know they were wholesome. No doubt we would soon find the older ones calling for a block of ice so they too might help themselves to a snow ball.

May these suggestions help to point the way a little nearer to a perfect reunion.

Sunday School Organized at Grand Island

GRAND ISLAND, NEBRASKA, September 23.—A small Sunday school was organized at Grand Island recently when W. F. Sivits, his wife and five children moved to the town. Another family of Saints was found, and together they formed a nucleus for a Sunday school which has promises of growth.

Brother Sivits writes that they miss the church privileges very much but are doing their part to help spread the good work.

Visiting elders are cordially invited to stop at Grand Island and are welcome at Brother Sivits's home, 722 East Seventh Street.

Missionary Meetings in Kansas Successful

WEIR, KANSAS, September 24.—Missionary meetings at Weir, Kansas, conducted for two weeks by Elder Lee Quick, have just closed. Three were reported baptized and a friendly spirit created.

The Saints here have purchased new seats for the church building, a new piano, recarpeted the church, and put in a baptistry, including two dressing rooms.

The Department of Women is quite active, and their work is a great help to the branch.

Flat Rock Branch Smallest in District

OWASSA, ALABAMA, September 22.—The Flat Rock Branch is the smallest branch in the Alabama District, located about five miles from the railroad on the Travis Bridge Road. There are fifty-seven members on the roll including two priests, one teacher, and one deacon. The branch has been organized for some fifty years, but has not seemed to grow much.

Sunday school is held every Sunday at 10 a. m., sacrament every first Sunday, prayer meeting the first and third Sundays at 9 a. m., preaching once a month. The Department of Recreation and Expression has been discontinued temporarily, but it is expected that it will soon open again.

The need of more priesthood workers is painfully felt. Those of the branch are workingmen, and their occupations are such that their time is limited. Considerable help is extended from the other branches of the district, which is greatly appreciated.

McConleys Visit in Denver

DENVER, COLORADO, September 27.—Apostle M. A. McConley and family stopped in Denver en route to Independence from Australia. Brother McConley spoke both morning and evening at the church Sunday, September 16.

As Denver is the home of the McConleys, they were heartily welcomed and their visit greatly appreciated.

Priesthood Conference Meets at Fayette

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 24.—The Pittsburgh District priesthood met in conference September 15 and 16 at Fayette City, Pennsylvania. The program consisted of a discussion of the following subjects: "Citizenship in Zion," by Elder Samuel Gaskill; "Unity of the priesthood," Elder Frank L. Shinn; "Echoes of the reunion at Kirtland," by Elder Joseph A. Jaques; "Pastoral work," Patriarch J. A. Martin; "Preparation and delivery of the sermon," Elder L. F. P. Curry.

During the social service a beautiful and impressive message of admonition, counsel, and encouragement was delivered through Brother Martin.

All sessions were open to the members and were well attended. The Saints were renewed in their desire for "the wages of going on."

Toronto Finds Novel Way to Raise Money

TORONTO, ONTARIO, September 23.—The big aim of the Toronto Saints at present is to build a new church, as the one they now occupy is in a dilapidated condition. Every possible means is being employed to raise funds for a new church. The young people got up a dollar auto ride which brought in a few dollars, besides giving them a good time.

Special meetings were held on September 16. Bishop A. F. McLean gave a good talk in the morning, and Elder C. Ed. Miller spoke in the afternoon. A session of the Department of Women was also held in the afternoon with Sister Alice McLean in charge. Elder Ben Huett gave a talk on teaching children, after which he invited people to ask questions. The discussion proved very interesting. Elder James Pycock occupied in the evening.

Elder Miller recently gave an illustrated lecture on the South Sea Islands, which was very much enjoyed.

Omaha Saints Celebrate Centennial

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, September 22.—[The World Herald recently published the following article concerning the centenary celebration, in that city, of the visitation of the angel to Joseph Smith.—EDITORS.]

Celebrating the 100th anniversary of the revelation of their faith to Joseph Smith at Palmyra, New York, three hundred members of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints met last night at the Omaha Branch, Thirty-Sixth and Burt Street, and listened to a granddaughter of Joseph Smith, Mrs. B. M. Anderson, 5020 California Street, tell of its establishment.

She said her grandfather was but eighteen years old when three times a vision came to him in the night and directed him to the Hill of Cumorah. There he met the Angel Moroni, who revealed to him the plates of gold, buried since 420 A. D., making up the Book of Mormon, and gave him the key to their translation. This book contains the early history of the American Indians, it being the Mormon belief that the Indians are the descendants of a Jewish tribe exiled from Palestine.

After Joseph Smith had translated a portion of the records they were returned to the custody of the angel.

Mrs. Anderson told of accounts of these early happenings as they were given to her by her father, Joseph Smith the second, who founded the Reorganized Church after Brigham Young and his followers had embraced the doctrine of polygamy. Young's claim of receiving an additional revelation upholding polygamy was denied by Joseph Smith's widow, Emma Hale Smith, and his children. Mrs. Anderson's brother, Frederick Madison Smith, is the present head of the Reorganized Church.

Carl T. Self, Omaha attorney and student of the Book of Mormon, told last night's audience of the persecutions of Joseph Smith, ending finally in his murder by a mob at Carthage, Illinois, June 27, 1844. It was after this mob violence in Illinois that the group of Mormons under Brigham Young crossed the plains to Utah, spending part of the winter of 1852 at Florence. In 1860, when the church of the Latter Day Saints was organized by Brigham Young, the Reorganized Church, refusing to follow his teachings, came into being, and now has its headquarters at Independence, Missouri.

P. R. Burton, missionary, who spent two years among the Omaha Indians where he converted three hundred, was the last speaker, giving the significance of the early Mormon history as it related to the American Indians.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson were named delegates from the Omaha church to a conference at Independence, beginning October 1.

Holden Stake News

HOLDEN STAKE, October 1.—Stake President D. J. Krahl visited the Lexington Religio on Friday, September 21, and occupied the lesson hour. He announced that Brother Talley had resigned as pastor and that James A. Brendel had been appointed in charge temporarily.

Brother Finis Beebe, a beginner in the ministry, preached a very fine sermon on September 23. Love, growth, and service were the main theme.

A musical was held at the church in the afternoon at 3.45, and Brother James A. Brendel preached in the evening.

Brother and Sister Atwell and Sister Adkins of Independence visited over Sunday in Grandview, Brother Atwell preaching both morning and evening. Also Sister Williams, daughter-in-law and two sons, of Atherton, visited there Sunday and attended the morning services. Brother and Sister Keith Rogers, missionaries to Colorado, arrived Sunday night to visit Sister Rogers's father, H. H. Danforth. They are in this vicinity for the General Conference. Sister Gladys Teeter, assistant chorister of the stake was also at Grandview on September 23 in the interest of the Department of Music. She occupied the seven o'clock hour, giving a very encouraging and instructive talk.

The church at Lees Summit is doing nicely. Brother Roderick May is a faithful pastor. He has made it possible to have many different speakers from Independence, which is a big treat to the Saints there.

On Sunday, September 9, Brother Baker occupied the morning hour, giving a splendid sermon. In the evening the orchestra from Walnut Park Church in Independence gave a concert which was followed by a sermon by Elder John Dowker.

On the evening of Sunday, September 15, at the Memorial Hall, the Independence choir rendered some very beautiful music. It was appreciated and enjoyed by a large audience.

Some of the priesthood occupied the morning hour on Sunday, September 23, giving sermonets on stewardships. The evening hour was occupied by Patriarch F. A. Smith.

Wyeville Church Nearing Completion

WYEVILLE, WISCONSIN, September 27.—The new church at Wyeville is nearing completion. It has been in use over a year, but the finishing has been slow, owing to the fact that most of the labor has been done by members of the branch after their day's work has been finished. The church has a large basement with furnace, a fully equipped kitchen, a large room for recreation, as well as rooms for Sunday school and Religio classes.

Some of the brothers of the branch planted seven acres of potatoes, hoping to buy new pews for the church with the proceeds, but the early frost put a sudden end to that enterprise. However they refused to become discouraged.

Union prayer meetings are held every Wednesday evening. The Department of Recreation and Expression meets every Friday evening with a half hour of study. The study hour is followed by programs and games, which are alternated. A special program committee is in charge of the program work. The games are in charge of the leaders of the boys and girls and both old and young enjoy the fun. A volley ball and net, also an indoor ball and bat, have been purchased with funds raised from a basket supper.

The Department of Women is creating a great deal of interest in their work, several belonging to their classes who do not belong to the church. At present they are studying the child care course. A great deal of the success of this department is due to the visits of Sister Effie Hield of the Southern Wisconsin District, and the encouragement and help of Sister Leta Colbert of Chetek.

The Oriole girls are now getting too grown up for the Oriole work so a group of Temple Builders will be organized during the next district conference. The girls have formed a gymnasium class which meets in the church every Friday before the Department of Recreation and Expression meets. Several girls outside the church belong to this class.

In the branch business meeting last year form four was adopted, and so far has proved very successful. All departments work in unity, and the program committee especially has done good work as a good program was given at Easter, one on Mothers' Day, and one on Children's day. Each of these programs was one put out by the church.

This branch has no pastor, and the only sermons heard are those preached by missionaries who occasionally visit the branch. But the priesthood is faithful and the branch president, Elder Floyd Griswold, deserves commendation for his untiring efforts, as he is young in the work as well as in years. Many of the members have been blessed through administration as some severe cases have been healed instantly. Naturally the visits of missionaries are eagerly anticipated, as we are anxious to hear the restored gospel.

Arkansas Meetings Increase Membership

WIENER, ARKANSAS, September 24.—Elder E. A. Erwin has just closed a five-day meeting where fine interest was manifest. Large crowds attended throughout the meetings. Four were baptized.

Missionary and Wife Hurt in Accident

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 20.—Arriving at Independence with minor physical injuries as the result of an automobile accident, but still in good spirits, Elder Frank B. Almond and wife had an interesting experience to relate.

While declining to write a "Log of the Four Ninety" (Ford in this case) Brother Almond did tell the main events of the disastrous trip.

Leaving Denver early Monday morning, September 17, the couple had driven about eighty miles in their car, when they were forced to leave the main road to detour. While rounding a turn, the car was suddenly plunged over the embankment by a slope in the road, and was hurled below, overturning three times. Sister Almond was pinned underneath the car but with help, which arrived immediately, was soon removed. The injured occupants were taken to a hospital at Lyman, a near-by town, and treated. It was found that only minor injuries were suffered, Sister Almond breaking her thumb and receiving some cuts about the body, while Brother Almond received a dislocated shoulder.

It was soon learned that Sister Almond was a nurse, and the doctor in charge, needing an extra nurse for an urgent case, prevailed upon her to take the case for the night.

The car was found to be a total wreck, so Brother and Sister Almond continued their journey the following day on the train.

Nothing short of a miracle saved the couple from serious injury or death, as the car was demolished in its triple overturn down the embankment.

Missionary Reports a Full Month's Work

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 27.—Elder Richard Baldwin, missionary to the British Isles, reports the following items for the month of August: Sermons preached, 22; times in charge of services, 24; total services attended, 52; baptized, 21; children blessed, 3; administrations, 11; patriarchal blessings, 31; pastoral visits, 28. Brother Baldwin evidently finds plenty to do in England.

Clitherall Branch Visits Almora Saints

BATTLE LAKE, MINNESOTA, September 26.—A departure from the regular program was planned by the officers of the Union Branch at Clitherall, Minnesota, for Sunday, September 23. An appointment was made for preaching to be held at the little town of Almora, about twenty miles distant where there are a few families of Saints. The Clitherall Saints expected to attend in a body. However, word was received on Saturday that some Frazee Saints were coming to attend services in Clitherall that day, so only one car load was permitted to go to Almora, where Elder Alonzo Whiting preached to a good crowd in the Presbyterian church.

An enjoyable prayer meeting was held in the afternoon at the home of Brother Horne. This was a treat to the Almora Saints, as they cannot attend services often.

In spite of the small crowd at Clitherall, the day was profitably spent with the regular services and in the pleasant association of the Frazee Saints.

Baptisms Result of Oriole Work

TERLTON, OKLAHOMA, September 23.—The baptism of four girls has recently taken place, all of whom had been converted through taking part in the Oriole work. The parents of two of the girls are not members.

The Temple Builders have also been organized quite recently.

Sister Alice McGeorge, of Idaho, is now visiting the Saints of the Terlton Branch. She was formerly a member of the branch and was instrumental in bringing the work to this place. She is teaching school here this winter, and her presence will be much appreciated by the Saints.

Northwestern Ohio Holds District Conference

BRADNEE, OHIO, September 25.—Despite the gloomy and rainy weather that had prevailed for some time, the district conference of the Northwestern Ohio District, held at Saint Marys on September 22 and 23, was quite representative, as there were in attendance members from every branch in the district except one, and we believe this branch would have been represented had there not been a misunderstanding as to dates.

A prayer service was held Saturday morning, September 22. In the afternoon there was a larger attendance, and a business meeting was held in which district officers were elected for the coming year. The evening was given to the Department of Recreation and Expression.

Priesthood meeting was held Sunday morning at 7.30, which was followed by a short period devoted to Sunday school work, after which a social service was held. A fine spirit was manifested at this meeting, and different ones testified as to the truthfulness of the work. Before the service was dismissed, four ordinations took place—one elder, two priests, and one deacon. Preaching services were held both afternoon and evening.

It is hoped that all will support the new officers, for only by unified effort can anything be accomplished.

Small Branch Holds Regular Meetings

SPEARFISH, SOUTH DAKOTA, September 24.—A recent religious survey of the city and adjacent territory showed that there are only seven Latter Day Saints at this place, nevertheless regular services are held as follows: Sunday school at 10.30 a. m., preaching at 11.30, and Book of Mormon study at 8 p. m., prayer service Wednesday night, and sacrament service the first Sunday of each month instead of preaching.

Brother F. E. Cohrt is the mainstay in the pulpit, but is relieved occasionally by Brother G. W. Newton, branch president, and Brother J. C. Mabbott. The text is closely followed in the Book of Mormon study, and the common feeling is that much knowledge of the work is being gained.

The membership has again been depleted by the departure of two young ladies for Graceland: Alta Willard and Dorothy Mabbott. However all are glad that they have had the opportunity to attend even though they will be missed in the branch.

Several members of the missionary force have visited the branch this summer. Elder A. M. Chase and wife were here in midsummer for a week's services, and returned a few weeks later accompanied by Brother and Sister S. A. Burgess. Between these visits Brother David E. Dowker and family stopped over night on their way from San Francisco to Des Moines. Few outsiders came to hear these brethren, but the Saints were strengthened and encouraged by their visits.

Saints Widely Scattered at Farmington Branch

FARMINGTON, KENTUCKY, September 27.—The branch at Farmington is not flourishing at present, as the Saints are widely scattered. Only six members live close to the church. All the rest live four miles or more away so that they cannot attend church often. The only officer in reach of the branch is Brother H. R. Shupe, the presiding priest.

Elder William Bath was here in the spring to preach the funeral of Sister Jessie Mangrum who died on April 30. He returned in June and preached for two weeks at Belle City, about four miles from here, to large crowds. He also preached several times at Farmington at the close of the meetings in Belle City.

San Francisco Entertains Visitors

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, September 23.—San Francisco is a sort of receiving station on the Pacific Coast where our missionaries find friends and a stopping place. Apostle M. A. McConley and wife were here on September 12, and Brother McConley preached at the Wednesday evening service.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis and family arrived on September 13 but left on the 15th anxious to reach home.

The meetings are quite well attended. Visitors and strangers are almost always present. Soldier and sailor boys are not uncommon, and they come from all over the world. On September 16 District President J. D. White was present and preached for the Saints. Other speakers of late were Branch President J. A. Saxe, H. B. Simpson, Cecil Hawley of Oakland, Emery Parks, and Brother Shippy.

Four groups have been organized in different parts of the city and another is to be organized this week. All meet in their own groups every Wednesday evening.

Sixty-nine were present at Sunday school on the 23d. The Department of Recreation and Expression is doing nicely, and the women's organization is still flourishing. The Saints are mostly well and happy.

A regular priesthood meeting was held on September 17 where the good of the cause was discussed.

Glasgow Branch Membership Grows

GLASGOW, MONTANA, September 26.—District President James C. Page puts his car to good use in filling Sunday night appointments near Glasgow. In August he baptized Mrs. James Kent and her sixteen-year-old son, who live twenty-seven miles west of Glasgow. Other points visited are Nashua, where a Sunday school has been organized and a good interest aroused; Grain, forty miles northeast of Glasgow; Baylor, thirty miles north; and Galipin, fifteen miles southeast. Elder Page is invited to Baylor for October 7 to address a union gathering.

The branch at Glasgow was organized in December, 1919, with twenty-two members, which has now been increased to thirty-five. The Saints meet in a large hall, seating about two hundred, which is located in the heart of the city. Elder E. D. Chase presides over the Sunday school.

Brother Earl Wilcox is at the head of the Department of Recreation and Expression, which meets on Friday night. The program for October 2 is the first set of a series of slides on the Bible. This set includes the creation and continues down to the receiving of the law by Moses.

Three weeks ago a young people's prayer meeting was started with Brother Joseph Sandige in charge. Thirteen were present. It is hoped that these meetings will prove a success. Prayer meeting for the older members is held every Wednesday night at the home of the members. One advantage of holding the meetings in the homes is that those who do not go at other times have the meeting brought to them occasionally.

Sister Page took the Oriole Girls for a hike to the river on September 14 where they enjoyed a wiener and marshmallow roast. Brother Page brought them back in his car in time for the Department of Recreation and Expression meeting in the evening.

The family of Webster Rogers, from Roanwood, has recently moved to Glasgow to attend school which makes a worthy addition to the numbers here as there are nine in the family. Juanita Richardson, from Malta, is also attending the Glasgow high school.

Brother and Sister Page spent Sunday, September 23, at Andes where they have a farm. Brother Page spoke three times to the Saints of the Andes Branch, also addressed the Sunday school, held a meeting of the priesthood, and showed some pictures after the evening sermon.

New Branch at Sherrill Thriving

SHERRILL, NEW YORK, September 26.—The Sherrill Branch membership has been reduced by the organization of the Syracuse Branch. The new branch, however, can more adequately administer to the needs of that big city than could the older organization at Sherrill.

The Sherrill Branch opened about four years ago and the church building is still adequate for the membership. A large room on the second floor is unfinished and unused. This will allow for expansion. An anteroom to the auditorium and a room in the rear are in use and have proved of great service. The building is in a church district, two new ones being recently built, the Episcopal and Methodist Episcopal churches.

Brother Arthur Allen, district president, visited the branch recently and held special services. Brother George Robley often visits the branch and his sermons are much enjoyed.

The Sunday school is progressing rapidly under the supervision of Orville Comfort.

A corn and wiener roast was held early this month, at which a good attendance foretold a good time.

The regular attendance at services is about twenty. This is considered a good number for the size of the branch.

Elder Floyd Rathbun and family, formerly of East Pharsalia, are now with the branch.

Miss Elsie Elms, a nonmember who spoke on "The American in reality" at the late district conference, is expected to lecture at the church shortly. She will attend the Eastman School of Music in Rochester again this winter. She also plans to attend a general conference at some time in the future.

Cold Corners Church Dedicated

WAGNER CITY, ILLINOIS, September 12.—The church here, known as "Cold Corners" was recently dedicated. A large crowd attended the ceremonies, Brother Henry Sparling delivering the address.

Following the services a dinner was given in a beautiful shady grove. Music was then furnished by some visiting Saints.

At 2.30 there was preaching, and again at 7.30, by Brother Sparling.

A basket dinner was held at Poplar Creek Sunday, September 16, with a good crowd present.

The "Cold Corners" branch has taken in new members recently, several being baptized.

Elder Jefferson Henson is the branch president, and he is active in bringing new life into the work.

The church was repaired and repainted preparatory to the dedication services.

Tribute Paid to Missouri Roads

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 30.—Elder J. F. Martin in his sermon Sunday morning at the stone church, paid his tribute to Missouri roads in the following verse:

"Missouri, Missouri, I've often heard of you,
Your fields are so lovely, your skies are so blue;
But speaking of roads now, you surely are there,
With your roads, Missouri, no State can compare."

GANO.—Allie Gano was born on December 3, 1871. Died at her home near Arkansasaw, Wisconsin, September 14, 1923. She had been in poor health for some time, but the direct cause of her death was sudden. In years past she has acted as the superintendent of the Porcupine Sunday School, and has been one of the earnest workers of that branch. Funeral from the home. Sermon by L. Houghton.

CONLEY.—Thomas H. Conley was born in Springfield, Ohio, December 23, 1858. Married Elizabeth Ranbarger, May 19, 1878. Baptized October 21, 1917. He has made Arizona his home for the last eleven years. Died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Maude McSpadden, August 15, 1923. Funeral from Whitney Parlors. Sermon by J. R. Johnson. Leaves widow, two sons, one daughter, and nine grandchildren. His children are: W. D. Conley, of Kansas City, Thomas E. and Mrs. McSpadden, of Phoenix, Arizona, and Brother David Conley, of Soldier, Kansas. Two daughters have preceded him.

FENNER.—Joseph Herbert Fenner was born at Johnston, Rhode Island, March 10, 1870. Baptized March 4, 1894. Ordained priest October 29, 1899. Married Cora Belle Randall, June 27, 1897. Died at his home at Greenwood, Rhode Island, September 16, 1923. Services at the Remington Funeral Home, in Providence, Rhode Island. Sermon by Patriarch J. D. Suttill. Interment at Coventry, Rhode Island. Leaves wife, one son, and two brothers.

BARTHELL.—Lola M. Barthell was born near Tilden, Nebraska, in 1898. In 1917, she married Nathan Wilson, who died four years ago, leaving his widow and one son. Baptized some years ago. Married Carl Barthell, January 8, 1923. Died at Kola, Nebraska, September 17, 1923. Sermon by F. S. Gatenby. Interment in Chambers Cemetery.

DYKES.—Mary Effie Peasley was born in Bloomington Township, February 20, 1865. Lived in Muscatine County, Iowa, all her life with the exception of three years when she taught school in the western part of the State. Married C. G. Dykes November 11, 1885. In early life she was a member of the Friends' Church. Later she was baptized into the Reorganized Church. After a long illness of cancer of stomach she died at her home in Park Place, September 16, 1923. Funeral from the Saints' church at Muscatine. Sermon by Wesley W. Richards. Interment in Bloomington Township Cemetery. Leaves husband, three daughters, one brother, and nine grandchildren.

ANDERSON.—William Thomas Anderson was born at Parsons, Kansas, May 30, 1873. Married Vera McVay, June 10, 1910. Died at Mount Washington, Missouri, September 19, 1923. Funeral from the Mount Washington church. Sermon by Ammon White. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery. Leaves wife; one daughter, Helen; one son, Charles; aged father, G. S. Anderson; three sisters, and one brother.

Autumn Leaves for October

The cover feature of the October Autumn Leaves is a photograph of Alice Viola Pualani McConley, three-year-old daughter of Apostle and Mrs. M. A. McConley who have been in Australia the past few years. Little Miss McConley sings solos in street preaching services, and thereby helps to attract audiences.

An interesting sketch of a thriving little Sunday school in the Australian bush, by Mrs. M. A. McConley, is characteristic of the sort of material to be found in each issue.

This number is strongly a human interest number. Marcella Schenck, author of "Social graces," has a humorous letter on attending a musical concert. Bessie Sodersten, teaching in a state institution in western Iowa, gives us an intimate view of how a great commonwealth cares for its unfortunate children.

Our poets are in evidence, with their inspiring product. S. A. Burgess gives us an interesting experience in delusion, how for several days while ill he lived a sort of dual existence. For diversion he extracted the square root of two and the cube root of three to six places to find out the difference.

Emma Burton tells of a dream trip to the moon. "Rome Wild" excites us with an account of a battle with bees. There is a typical experience of the Illinois school-teacher out West, who accepts a life job of teaching one. Experiences at a Utah Mormon conference are told by J. E. Wildermuth.

These are a few of the items one is furnished in having Autumn Leaves come to the home. There are many others, all worth while. The magazine is monthly and costs $1.75 a year.

Several tents on the Campus care for the needs of the General Conference.

There is the big tabernacle tent, seating over three thousand people, especially made for the occasion. Then there are two tents used for the cafeteria, seating two hundred fifty at one time. Besides these, there are two smaller tents, one for the Herald Publishing House and one for special committees, chief of which is the committee on credentials.

The Campus paths and driveways, made muddy by the rain of the past few days, are drying up. It is hoped that good weather will attend the conference henceforth.

So he resolved to strip life of its impedimenta in order that he might live. To dwell in a hut made with his small hands. To eat bread baked by himself from corn that he had ground. To wear clothing for warmth and not for show. To work perhaps six weeks each year for wages and make the returns support him the balance of the year that he might have leisure to study, to think, to make friends with woods and waters, with the chipmunk and the turtle dove. For his experiment he selected one of the most beautiful spots imaginable, the shores of Walden Pond. Here he built his cabin, mostly from material near at hand, even burning shells from the shore to make lime for the plaster in his chimney, "making no haste with his work," but rather "making the most of it." He writes:

Near the end of March, 1845, I borrowed an ax and went down to the woods by Walden Pond, nearest to where I intended to build my house, and began to cut down some tall arrowy white pines, still in their youth, for timber. It is difficult to begin without borrowing, but perhaps it is the most generous course thus to permit your fellow men to have an interest in your enterprise. The owner of the ax, he released his hold on it, said that it was the apple of his eye; but I returned it sharper than I received it. It was a pleasant hillside where I worked, covered with pine woods, through which I looked out on the pond, and a small open field in the woods where pines and hickories were springing up.

His purpose in going to Walden he sets forth thus:

I went to the woods because I wish to live deliberately, to front only the essential facts of life, and see if I could not learn what it had to teach, and not, when I came to die, discover that I had not lived. I did not wish to live what was not life, living is so dear; nor did I wish to practice resignation, unless it was quite necessary.

Of the lake and surroundings he wrote:

The scenery of Walden is on a humble scale, and, though very beautiful, does not approach to grandeur, nor can it much concern one who has not long frequented it or lived by its shore; yet this pond is so remarkable for its depth and purity as to merit a particular description. It is a clear and deep green well, half a mile long and a mile and three quarters in circumference, and contains about sixty-one and a half acres; a perennial spring in the midst of pine and oak woods, without any visible inlet or outlet except by the clouds and evaporation. The surrounding hills rise abruptly from the water to the height of forty to eighty feet, though on the southeast and east they attain to about one hundred and one hundred and fifty feet respectively, within a quarter and a third of a mile. They are exclusively woodland.

Though I am acquainted with most of the ponds within a dozen miles of this center, I do not know a third of this pure and well-like character. Successive nations perchance have drunk at, admired, and fathomed it, and passed away, and still its water is green and pellucid as ever. Not an intermitting spring! Perhaps on that spring morning when Adam and Eve were driven out of Eden Walden Pond was already in existence, and even then breaking up in a gentle spring rain accompanied with mist and a southerly wind, and covered with myriads of ducks and geese, which had not heard of the fall, when still such pure lakes sufficed them. Even then it had commenced to rise and fall, and had clarified its waters and colored them of the hue they now wear, and obtained a patent of Heaven to be the only Walden Pond in the world and distiller of celestial dews.

There is a certain fascination about the life of woodland hermits—especially such charming philosophers as Thoreau. Having read and loved his works in early life, the opportunity to visit Walden was greatly prized. And on the day of our visit we had a striking testimony of the power of men to draw disciples after them. By the cairn of rocks which now marks the site of Thoreau's cabin, sat an elderly man with a copy of Walden by his side. Upon forming his acquaintance, we learned that he was an admirer of Thoreau who had come on foot all the way from Texas to dwell a while by Walden Pond and read the book at the spot where it was written, among the pines and by the waters of the little lake. He called himself, "Jack Taylor, lone camper, gypsy scholar, and loiterer." Eccentric no doubt, but a sincere disciple, and one with whom Thoreau would have delighted to converse.

Thoreau was an individualist—intolerant of convention—not fitting well into the order of things. Indeed the order of things rather resented him, and it is said that civil authority pursued him and threw him into Concord jail because he had not paid certain small taxes. Whereupon his friend Ralph Waldo Emerson came in great distress, exclaiming, "My dear Thoreau, why are you in jail?" at which Thoreau with much gravity replied, "My dear Emerson, why are you not in jail?"

His philosophy would hardly produce an ordered and complex society. It would breed a race of individualists. Rather it would breed no race, since it seemed to make no provision for marriage or the raising of a family (unless women and children content with stark simplicity could be found) or for the doing of much of the world's work. But probably if Thoreau were here he would reply characteristically that much of the world's work were better undone. And he might even retort that his associates under their scheme of things had found it impossible to breed a race, since the old New England stock is dying out; and young men to-day frankly state that they cannot afford to marry, or if married they cannot afford children.

But in any event Thoreau did not urge his philosophy upon others. He would have each man find how he should live and each live in his own best way. And his writings at once take one to the pine woods and the blue lakes. They are simple, fresh, rejuvenating, like the morning and the woodland path.

With reluctance we turned from Walden Pond and continued our journey. That night we spent in Haverhill, Massachusetts, at the home of Brother Frank Hatch, and were privileged to meet with the Saints at their Wednesday evening service. There was the rather small attendance usual with small branches at the midweek meeting. But we felt to tell them that if we dared to write another beatitude, it would be, "Blessed are the old stand-bys, for they can be depended upon." It is easy to be enthusiastic at conference, or during a reunion or a revival; but the men and women who work steadily away all during the year are the ones who count in branches big or little. And we reminded them also that they did not meet alone, for on that evening many groups of Saints in all parts of the country and in other lands were meeting, so that they could think of it as one great religious service in which they had part.

CONFERENCE NEWS

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 2

The second business session of the General Conference opened Tuesday, October 2, at 2 o'clock. The weather was favorable, after having been stormy and threatening for a few days past.

The conference is now well organized, and the various quorums were in session yesterday following the business session. For the first time they are enabled to meet on the conference grounds. Other years they have had to meet wherever room could be found, and that was usually in far places. This year the Institute Building on the Campus affords plenty of room for all.

The minutes of the opening session were read by the church secretary and by motion were approved. The Presidency announced the following appointments to complete the organization: R. S. Salyards, church secretary, and P. G. Fairbanks, assistant secretary, as secretaries; Howard W. Howard, conference stenographer, to select assistants; A. N. Hoxie, jr., church chorister, to select assistants; ushers to consist of organization of the deacons in Zion, Henry Stahl in charge; reception committee, R. V. Hopkins, E. C. Harrington, George A. Gould, and J. A. Gardner; committee on administration to sick, G. E. Harrington, D. E. Dowker, and C. Ed. Miller.

President Elbert A. Smith

President Elbert A. Smith made the following statement:

We are in something of a quandary this afternoon. Brother Frederick M. Smith, as you probably have learned, is ill. He was not able to be at the prayer meeting this morning, over which he was to have presided. He is not able to be here this afternoon. We, not having personally seen him, simply having had conversation over the phone, do not know just how ill he is, but he does not stay in bed unless he is feeling quite badly. Brother McDowell and I have absolutely nothing in the way of business for the conference. If there is any business, President Smith has it in his case. However, we know of very little matter to come before you at this time.

There has been no time for the deliberation of the quorums upon matters that may come before the conference, and, as I have said, we are placed in a quandary. After consultation with the president of the Twelve, we have decided to occupy this afternoon with a series of speeches from men representing different parts of the work, who may speak on different problems touching their work, such as pastoral, missionary, evangelical, and so on. This was the custom for many years in the church—to begin the conference with such a symposium. Perhaps we may make a grace of a necessity and occupy this afternoon in that way. These speeches need not be long. I will ask the men to occupy a reasonable length of time, and then you can form some opinion as to their idea of a reasonably short speech.

Last summer it was my privilege, as well as Brother Mc-

Dowell's, to visit the Kirtland Temple. I visited it on the way east, and on the way returning, and felt again, once more, the wonderful spiritual influence in that building, and while there I could see why it was that it was necessary that a temple should be built. Not that it was necessary that God should have it in order to meet man. God can meet man anywhere: in the mountain, on the desert, or by the sea, but it was necessary as a help to the Saints of God themselves to get into a condition to meet God. Having made their very great sacrifice, which shames anything you and I have done, to build that building, having thus devotedly consecrated themselves to that work, then having come to the sacred and solemn courts of that temple, they were greatly helped to meet God; and I do not doubt that everything occurred that they say they witnessed.

In charge of the temple this summer has been a man long known, honored, and loved by the Saints. Brother F. G. Pitt and Sister Pitt have been conducting visitors through the temple, and I can say that in appearance, in personal presence and address as well as in spiritual qualifications, they harmonized perfectly with their surroundings and with their task.

The last Sunday afternoon when I was there, Brother Pitt told me that about 450 strangers had visited the temple and received spiritual instruction. Brother Pitt takes these people in groups and preaches the gospel to them in the courts of the temple. A great missionary undertaking, as well as evangelical.

Perhaps you will wonder what my idea is of a reasonably short speech; so I had better cut this short and ask Brother Pitt to speak for a few minutes about the temple work.

Patriarch F. G. Pitt

Patriarch F. G. Pitt, in responding to the introduction, spoke on Kirtland Temple experiences. At the suggestion of President Elbert A. Smith, the hymn sung at the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning," was sung by the assembly.

Evangelist F. G. Pitt addressed the congregation, telling of his recent experiences at the Kirtland Temple as host to visitors.

Following the year of the church organization about fifty families moved to Kirtland, Ohio. Joseph Smith the Prophet was commanded to build a temple. It was begun in 1833 and completed in 1836 at the cost of about $60,000. It would cost now at least $250,000. The building is unique in many ways. A set of pulpits is at each end of the building. At one side the bishops, priests, teachers, and deacons are seated. In another place are the elders, high priests, and the high council.

There are several styles of architecture represented in the temple. They are Roman, Doric, Egyptian, and Corinthian, Gothic, and Colonial. They harmonize and are beautiful.

This building was built by divine direction. No architect was employed. Men and women built it, made great sacrifices, and built well. Visitors praise the building. The temple was unoccupied for over thirty years. Sheep and cattle roamed the building. This condition was caused by the death of the Prophet. He was killed at Carthage, Illinois, in 1844, because he claimed God could speak as of old.

The church was thrown into confusion when the Prophet was killed. Factions split off, among them the Utah faction. Polygamy afterwards was introduced. Joseph Smith gave a revelation saying but one wife was right.

In 1860 Joseph Smith, jr., took his father's place. The courts recognized the Reorganized Church as the successor of the original church. The temple was then repaired.

Visitors are told what the object of the church is. The gospel was lost, and ours is the restored gospel. All churches have some gospel but not all. We need all. Churches do not unite because they do not know how. We believe in a divinely called ministry that represents God with authority. The first principles of the gospel are then told to the visitors. There is no baptism of children because they have no sins. We bless little children as Jesus did.

Our belief in healing of sick is most difficult for people to believe. They cannot understand why we are not Christian Scientists.

Jesus came to save all the world. His mission is not complete until the whole world is saved. His church as we represent it is for spreading the gospel.

Many people visit the temple every year. Thousands hear the gospel that otherwise would not hear it. They feel God's Spirit present and wonder what it is.

The world is ripe for the gospel of Christ. They are looking for what we have to offer. By the help of God's Spirit the work will move forward.

President Elbert next introduced Apostle J. A. Gillen who spoke on the missionary opportunities of this hastening time.

"It was well said by the previous speaker," said Apostle Gillen, "that the 'field is ripe unto the harvest.'"

Apostle J. A. Gillen

In making his observations of the quorum with which he was identified, he said that he wished it were possible for everyone in the hearing of the sound of his voice to sit with the brethren of the Twelve for two weeks, that they might sense to some extent the grave responsibilities that rest upon the missionary arm of the church. In his labors with these men he had learned to know them as godly men, men consecrated to the service of God.

He stated that there were two special factors that were essential to the progress of this work. One was sacrifice, the other consecration. These two, he said formed the wonderful foundation of our faith.

An individual once asked him if he thought there would ever come the time in this church when there will be no longer the necessity of making the sacrifice we are now trying to make. Apostle Gillen answered the question thus: "I hope and pray that the time will never come to this church when we will be relieved of the necessity of making sacrifice; for as I look upon the great work of Jesus Christ, it brings forcibly to my mind this thought that the work as it relates to our Savior among men was conceived and carried forth in sacrifice, and will continue to require sacrifice until the mission of Christ has served its purpose among men."

He spoke of men in the audience who had performed their work in sacrifice, honoring them for that which they had done. He paid high tribute to his mother whom he said had borne her burdens and sacrifices without a murmur, and concluded by saying that we should consecrate our all, whether it be talents or whatever it be in our possessions. He closed with a feeling statement of his love for and confidence in the church.

Following Brother Gillen's talk, the congregation sang,

"Send forth the sowers Lord," which, as Brother Elbert said, while not in the conference song leaflets is yet in the hearts of our people. Brother Cyril Wight, president of the Lamoni Stake, was next called upon, and spoke on pastoral problems.

Cyril E. Wight

When Brother Wight's father was called to the other side, the family wished the funeral sermon to be preached by Brother Elbert A. Smith. In that sermon Brother Smith said the departed left a wealthy heritage—that of many friends. Brother Wight feels that he has been privileged to retain many of those friends. He has also made many new ones since he has taken up himself the duties of pastoral work.

Brother Wight feels that when a missionary is called to work, that work must not be in vain. Two fundamental ideas were presented in the address of Brother Wight. First, the missionary service must be conserved. When people are brought into the church they must not be allowed to drift. Second, full and complete preparation is necessary by each individual before Zion can be redeemed.

Bishop James F. Keir

Bishop James F. Keir was asked to speak as a representative of the Presiding Bishopric. He told the people gathered in the tabernacle of his work in the financial department. Relating a dream, he said the Lord spoke to him saying, This testimony is to those who are faithful in keeping the commandments in paying their tithing.

The testimony to Brother Keir was that the temporal law must be taught the people and that it was his mission to teach.

It has been Brother Keir's experience that the law of tithing is just as important as the law of being baptized. Christ told his disciples to go out and "teach them to observe all things." So with the church to-day all laws must be observed.

This is the day of sacrifice and of tithing. But the tithing is not sacrifice. When we go beyond tithing then we have sacrifice. Surplus is not sacrifice but free will offering is.

The spirit of the age is to live above one's income. We must learn to live within our income. Do not discourage anyone in doing what God has commanded.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" "Yes," said Brother Keir. He continued: "I want to make a pledge this afternoon. I want to pledge myself before God and before this audience that during the coming year I will seek to repress my unnecessary wants, that I will exercise care in expenditure of every dollar that comes into my hands, that I will observe the law of God and be found faithful."

Patriarch F. A. Smith

The Presiding Patriarch, F. A. Smith, spoke in harmony with the preceding speakers who, he said, pretty well expressed his thoughts.

He said that when he was a boy he declared he would never be a preacher, but like others then on the stand, he had to take it back.

For a number of years Brother Smith was a miller. He was sent to Salt Lake City on business, but he regretted the move because he feared that he might also be asked to do missionary work in that city, and it was his desire as a boy not to go into the ministry. However, in a few years he accepted his first office in the church and to-day is a loved member of thirty years' standing.

The Saints of to-day cannot conceive the difference between the demands made upon the early Saints and those of to-day. The sacrifices were very great. Have we to-day backed the missionaries so they may offer to the world peace, certainty, assurance, confidence? Can we ask God to bless our services if we are not willing to put on the character of Christ?

We need an army of missionaries in the field to-day. Then would we be performing the work in a measure. God is waiting for us. It is for us to awaken to our responsibilities.

Brother Smith asked the question of each one, What are you doing?

Must this church divide and fail, or will we rally to the cause? God will raise up another people if we are not ready. Brother Smith, however, is confident that God's hand is in the work.

A series of notices and announcements was read.

The assembly sang as a closing number, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and benediction was pronounced by President F. M. McDowell. Adjournment taken at 3.50 p. m.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3

The third business session of General Conference opened to-day with President F. M. Smith back in the chair after a day's absence caused by sickness.

A feature of each day's service is a quarter hour of congregational singing as the delegates and ex officios are being seated.

President Floyd M. McDowell called the business session to order and No. 6, "God is marshaling his army" was sung. Opening prayer was by Apostle E. J. Gleazer of Boston.

No Limit on Speeches

The minutes of Tuesday's session were read and approved.

The following motion was moved and seconded: Resolved that the speeches on any subject during this conference be limited to twenty minutes. A motion to lay this resolution on the table was made and seconded and without debate was voted by a large majority.

The secretary announced the following as tellers of the conference: L. G. Holloway, F. A. Russell, L. F. P. Curry, J. E. Bishop, Charles F. Church, E. L. Traver, Arthur Allen.

The following motion was presented:

Rules of Representation

"Resolved that the rules of representation adopted on April 12, 1881 (General Conference Resolution No. 234) be hereafter the rules to govern this body."—Edward Rannie.

Brother Rannie made the following statement:

"Brother Chairman: I would like to move the adoption of the above to-day and if it receives a second then I will move that some day next week it be taken up for consideration. In that way the quorums can consider it, and when it comes back to the body it will the more quickly be disposed of."

It was moved to refer to a committee of one each from the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric. The motion to refer carried.

Vacancy Filled in Presidency of Seventy

A recommendation came from the Seven Presidents of Seventy as follows:

"To the General Conference: There is one vacancy in the Council of the Presidents of Seventy. To fill that vacancy, Elder R. L. Fulk has been selected, and approved by the Seventy in joint council.

"E. E. LONG,

"Secretary Presidents of Seventy."

Brother Fulk made the following statement:

"I can assure you that this came to me as a great surprise. I was somewhat surprised this morning that my name was presented for this office, but in turning over in my mind my experiences of the past, I remembered that upon one occasion I was spoken to in prophecy, and various ordinations were spoken of.

"While occupying as a priest I was told that I would yet occupy in three higher offices. I have also had impressions of this kind which I have kept to myself, that some time I might be called upon to occupy in that quorum and in that office.

"If these people see fit to put me in that office I will do the best I can to discharge the duties that devolve upon me. I ask an interest in your faith and prayers that I may do it faithfully."

By motion and vote the conference indorsed the recommendation.

New Members of Seventy

These further recommendations come from the Presidents of Seventy.

"To the General Conference: The following-named elders have been approved for ordination to the office of Seventy:

"E. Y. Hunker.

"V. D. Ruch.

"C. O. Johnson.

"H. I. Velt.

"A. L. Loving.

"E. H. Peisker.

"William Patterson.

"A. V. Robinson.

(Signed) "E. E. LONG,

"Secretary Presidents of Seventy."

Brother Hunker being in his mission in Norway, Apostles J. F. Curtis and J. F. Garver spoke in indorsement of the recommendation, and by vote the conference indorsed his ordination.

Brother C. O. Johnson also being abroad, Elder L. G. Holloway and J. E. Vanderwood spoke as vouchers for him.

Brother A. L. Loving is in New Zealand, and Elder H. W. Savage spoke of his excellent qualities, and the conference by motion and vote indorsed his ordination.

Brother Herman Peisker, of Australia, was indorsed by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, and the conference voted in favor of his ordination.

Brother A. V. Robinson, of Australia was indorsed by Elders H. W. Savage and William Patterson, and the conference voted favorably on his ordination.

Brother V. D. Ruch, who is also in Norway was indorsed by Elders J. F. Garver, F. T. Mussell, and A. M. Chase. The conference approved his ordination.

H. I. Velt, of Australia, was indorsed by Apostle M. A. McConley and Elder H. W. Savage.

P. T. Anderson Makes Statement

Brother P. T. Anderson being present made the following statement:

"I really don't know what to say to this this afternoon. I would like not to have been here and yet could have heard what you people had to say about me, but I have to speak for myself to a certain extent.

"I went to Denmark on a mission in 1905. A brother told me he thought the day would come when I would be raised to the quorum of Seventy. I laughed at him. I didn't think he knew what he was talking about, and I felt he didn't know anything about it. I have been across three times as an elder, and felt perfectly satisfied to work in that office. It takes a man to fill the office of elder, and I don't know that I am capable of carrying any more responsibility than I have now, but I have always tried to say, 'Here am I, Lord; do with me as you will,' and if it is the will of this body, I am willing to accept this office."

Apostle J. A. Gillen spoke in approval of Brother Anderson's ordination, as did Elder J. F. Mintun, and the conference by vote expressed approval.

Elder Patterson's Statement

Elder William Patterson made the following statement:

"I appreciate the confidence that is imposed in me. I sense in a degree the responsibility that shall rest upon me; but since coming in contact with the church, as a young man of nineteen years, I resolved that I was willing to go anywhere and do anything that the church wanted me to do. I feel the same way to-day. I hope that with your vote there shall come the earnestness and sincerity of your hearts, giving me your hearty support and your prayers and devotion."

Patriarch G. T. Griffiths indorsed the ordination, as did Elder J. F. Martin. The conference voted to approve.

The chair announced that the ordinations would be provided for.

"Memorial to the Martyrs"

The Presidency called attention to the report of the committee on "Memorial to the Martyrs." They recommended that this committee be no longer continued but that it be referred to the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric. By motion the recommendation was approved.

The chair called attention to the report of the Children's Home Board.

Bishop B. R. McGuire moved the following recommendations:

Children's Home Board

That Bishop A. Carmichael be successor to himself, and also that the vacancy left by G. Leonard Harrington, resigned, be filled by Sister Martha A. Young.

Some question arose as to the number of vacancies and the length of term to be served.

A motion prevailed to refer matter of filling vacancies in the board of the Children's Home back to the Order of Bishops for a formal report.

Trustees of Graceland Elected

The chairman called attention to the report of the trustees of Graceland College, particularly the following statement:

"In connection with the above report, your attention is called to the fact that there being no General Conference in 1921, no trustees were elected that year, as ought to have been done, had the conference been in session. This situation was overlooked at the time of the 1922 conference. These three vacancies, with the two occurring regularly at this time, make necessary the selection by the conference of trustees for a three-year term to succeed G. N. Briggs, C. E. Wight, and J. F. Garver, and for a two-year term to succeed Albert Carmichael and W. E. Hayer.

"Respectfully submitted,

"J. F. GARVER, for Trustees."

"Lamoni, Iowa, September 6, 1923."

It was moved that each man named in the report be elected to succeed himself.

Bishop McGuire made the following amendment to the above motion.

"In the light of the statement of Brother Garver and Briggs [in printed report] to the effect that the three who have already occupied one year of their term be elected for two years and the other two be elected for three years." Moved that those be the terms of the men named.

Considerable discussion was had regarding the term each trustee should serve. The previous question was moved. The amendment was lost by vote of the conference. The original motion carried.

Moved and seconded that the setting of a time limit for new business be left to the First Presidency. Apostle T. W. Williams spoke in opposition to this motion.

A motion to lay the matter on the table was voted by the conference.

Moved that the next General Conference be held beginning April 6, 1925.

Motion to lay on the table was carried.

Graceland Gymnasium

Moved to take up the matter of Graceland report and the request contained on page 929 of the Herald for October 3, entitled Gymnasium and Convention Hall.

This motion to consider prevailed.

Bishop McGuire Endorses Gymnasium

Bishop B. R. McGuire moved that the action of the Graceland College trustees in providing for a gymnasium be approved. Bishop F. B. Blair seconded the motion.

Elder E. E. Long spoke in opposition to the motion and read the following from the minutes of the 1922 General Conference Minutes, page 3284:

"Owing to the fact that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction among the ministry and the membership at large contingent upon the matter of dropping so many missionaries from active service, and believing that the greatest and most vital asset and power contributing to the success of the church, and most essential to its present crisis, is increased missionary activity; we therefore

"Resolve, That all proposed projects involving the expenditure of church finances be postponed for another year, and that the missionary arm of the church be immediately returned to appointment and activity to the extent of the financial possibilities of the church; be it further

"Resolved, That we pledge our support to the Twelve in an endeavor to carry out the spirit of Sections 114 and 122:5 of the Doctrine and Covenants, and that the expenditure of money in any sum not authorized by the General Conference or indorsed by the Council of Presidency, Presiding Bishops, and the Quorum of Twelve, be strictly prohibited." Elder Long argued that the expenditure of money for the Graceland gymnasium was a violation of this resolution.

Speech by Apostle Garver

Apostle J. F. Garver spoke in favor of the motion, and stated that in 1920 the General Conference voted $10,000 for this purpose, and left it to the discretion of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric as to when and how this should be spent; therefore this was not a violation of the conference resolution of 1922 but a carrying out of the conference resolution of 1920.

Bishop McGuire's Statement

Bishop B. R. McGuire made the following statement:

"I recognize the feeling of the membership of the church upon this question. I voted in the affirmative upon the resolution which was adopted at the last General Conference to limit or curtail our expenditures.

"I also know at this time, although I did not recall a few weeks ago, or a few months ago, a resolution was adopted by the General Conference in 1914 which provides that: 'It is the sense of this body that no further debt be incurred by the Board of Trustees of Graceland College for the extension of gymnasiums, dormitories, etc., until such work of extension shall have first been presented to the body for its approval.'

"My understanding of the question is that the building of this structure, the eminent necessity for which seems clear from the statement of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, will not involve the incurring of a debt, but the funds will be raised by donations that were made without any urgent solicitation, but because the individuals desired to make the contribution.

"At the time this matter was under consideration by the Presidency, members of the Twelve, and college trustees at Lamoni, I was in Independence, Missouri. I received a telephone message with respect to the matter, and called attention to the fact that I thought it would be unwise, and protested against any general solicitation. I do not know that any official of this church or any member of this church can compel anyone that desires to make a contribution to refrain from making that contribution, so I did not tell the citizens of Lamoni not to make any contribution to this proposition.

"When the proposal was afterward made to me that the church contribute the $10,000 that was appropriated in 1920 for this purpose, I, at that time, saw no reason why we could not consistently, in the emergency, apply this $10,000 to this purpose.

"I quite agree with the sentiment, which I perceive some members of this assembly feel, that when we have made a resolution we should keep the resolution. I do not believe that it makes for moral development for an individual or a church institution to make resolutions and then break them. I think the thing we ought to do is to keep our resolutions when we have made them. However, under all the circumstances, it would be to the best interests of this church to approve that which has been done, with reference to this building, and if in your judgment any of the officers of this body have been guilty of anything for which they should be censured, so far as I am concerned I stand ready to take my disciplining."

F. F. Whipper

Brother F. F. Whipper called attention to the following from the 1922 General Conference Minutes, page 3283:

"Graceland College Gymnasium

"The following was read and it was moved to adopt:

"To General Conference: Greeting: The following is presented for your action after passing the order by unanimous vote:

"The Order of Bishops recommends that Graceland College be authorized to raise the necessary funds for the erection of gymnasium, estimated to cost $15,000, by subscription from the alumni and friends of the college.

"Order of Bishops,

"VERNON A. REESE, Secretary.

"INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 16, 1922.

"After discussion a motion to lay the matter on the table prevailed."

Elder Whipper argued that this conference action was practically a rejection by the General Conference of the proposition that Graceland College should be allowed to solicit funds for the building of a gymnasium.

Elder H. W. Savage spoke against indorsing the action of the college trustees.

Elder Lee Quick plead for the return to the "old paths" as he called them, and urged that the church funds be used more extensively in direct missionary work. His talk, while very earnest, as is typical of Brother Quick, was also full of good humor, and he had the audience bubbling over with laughter at several points in his talk. He was strongly against the gymnasium proposition.

Elder Daniel Macgregor was recognized by the chair, and the hour of adjournment having come, he was asked to yield until to-morrow at 2 p. m.

Song No. 29 was sung as a concluding number, and the benediction was pronounced by Apostle Clyde Ellis. Adjournment was taken at 4.15 p. m.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4

The fourth conference business session opened to-day with clear skies and a big audience in the tabernacle tent. All members of the leading quorums were present.

President F. M. McDowell called the meeting to order and "Redeemer of Israel" was sung, after which Apostle J. F. Garver offered the opening prayer.

The minutes of Wednesday's session were read and approved.

Elder Daniel Macgregor had the floor at the conclusion of Wednesday's session, and after the reading of the minutes Brother Macgregor was given the floor.

He presented the following, which was moved and seconded as a substitute:

"Resolved, that we recognize the splendid spirit of sacrifice and consecration manifested by the friends of Graceland College in contributing their funds to the advancement of its interests.

"Resolved further, that we disapprove the procedure followed in the raising of money and proceeding to the erection of a gymnasium and assembly hall as in violation of General Conference Resolutions numbered 727, 728, and the resolution adopted October 17, 1922, page 3284, General Conference Minutes.

"Resolved further, that the whole matter relating to the erection of a gymnasium and assembly hall be placed in the hands of the Presiding Bishopric."

Explanation for College Board

Elder J. F. Garver spoke following the motion by Elder Macgregor. He said he wished to clarify the report of the board of trustees as reported. The board of trustees wish to make the statement that this board will not build if the General Conference disapproves. The board also states that no debt is expected in the building matter. But it must be remembered that if the order comes not to build the gymnasium it will jeopardize Graceland College.

The board had already noted the actions of the previous conferences and found nothing to hinder the action taken on the gymnasium. The board did not intend to take from the church treasury other than the $10,000 already appropriated.

The board knew that Graceland must have a gymnasium in view of the new laws of Iowa and the new college program. Meeting with President F. M. Smith, the board decided to do nothing until the conference acted further.

Then another plan was presented. Money was promised from other sources: $7,500 from friends in the East; $7,500 from men of Lamoni; $5,000 from young people of the convention; and $10,000 from private solicitation among friends of the college.

Then in the midst of this proposition, while the convention at Lamoni was in progress, the proposition was reconsidered. It was decided to accept the gift. The matter is now laid before the conference.

The board has asked for the $10,000 already appropriated. The bishop promised this money. As yet none of it has been touched.

The objection that the board might have delayed, was answered by a brief story. The board might have delayed but two things might have been the result. One was that the psychological opportunity might be lost. Would the same gift be offered again under the same circumstances? Also action at this time made it possible to complete the building practically with student help.

The board is confident the conference will accept the report and not misunderstand the motives of the board.

Opposition Views of J. E. Yates

Elder J. E. Yates next secured the floor following Brother Garver. He believes the board intended to do right but the question is, Has it done so? He opposed the acceptance of the proposition, saying that $10,000 was to be spent for the building, although the board says the money had not been spent. He also called attention to the statement of the former speaker that the board knew of the sections in the previous conference minutes, but he questioned that these objections had been removed.

The speaker then said that another purpose besides the needs of the gymnasium, was advanced, that of a convention hall, to provide meeting place for future young people's conventions. He challenged the right of any assembly or committee other than the General Conference to take an action of that kind.

The board has intended to do right, but has it done it? The delegates should reprimand the action by their vote, he insisted.

The last conference, so the speaker said, did not intend that money should be expended for any other than specified purposes.

He decried the pleasure-seeking tendency which he claimed to have noted among the young people in his ministerial work in various places.

The speaker said that if we follow the dictates of our own spirits, our work will be of no avail. It must be the Spirit of God that leads us.

Elder Macgregor's Objections

Elder Daniel Macgregor next secured the floor. He called attention to previous conference resolutions which said that business such as the building of the gymnasium, should first be brought before the conference. Yet, he said, the business was presented to another body.

As the conference heard yesterday the proposition was sponsored by certain members of the Twelve, Presidency, and Bishopric. He called attention to the fact that on this improvised committee there was one member of the Graceland faculty (President McDowell) and one member of the board (Apostle Garver) and that they were already predisposed to favor Graceland. He summarized his objections under fifteen points.

1. The board, seeing that the $10,000 should be asked of the conference, forewent the use of this money, having already used many other thousands. But in so doing, the board has incurred a debt of honor upon the church.

2. There is no committee that equals the "musical voice" of a General Conference, he said, Why was the statute ignored?

3. Ignored the law, because he interpreted conference resolution of 1922 as forbidding this building.

4. Because it presumed to set up another organization in place of the General Conference.

5. Because it encourages administration by council rather than by General Conference.

6. Because General Conference is made subordinate to improvised committee.

7. Because it sets up a bad precedent.

8. Because it gives license to other bodies than the General Conference to set up a general program.

9. Because it constitutes rebellion toward General Conference.

10. Because it is disloyal to General Conference.

11. It provokes unfriendly feeling.

12. Hurtful of tithing of the church.

13. Endorses violation of General Conference resolutions.

14. Adds insult to injury.

15. Makes for rebellion rather than for obedience.

L. G. Holloway Favors

Elder L. G. Holloway said he felt compelled to speak on the subject because of developments since the meeting convened. The substitute motion provided for the whole matter pertaining to the gymnasium to be turned over to the bishopric. As the speaker understands it, this would allow the money to be used for any purpose. This would be wrong because individuals who have given money, gave it for a specific purpose. If this substitute motion were adopted we would have to give back $30,000 in order to save $10,000.

In referring to the statement of a previous speaker: Shall we break the law of God to keep the law of Iowa? the speaker called attention to the Doctrine and Covenants in which it states that we as a people should keep the law of the land and would thereby have no need to break the law of the Lord.

He concluded by appealing for support of the gymnasium project.

T. W. Williams Explains

Apostle Williams took the floor, saying he was present at the meeting in Lamoni at which the faculty, some of the Twelve, and the First Presidency were present. This body considered the matter of the gymnasium and took no action. This in no way invaded the General Conference action, for they decided to let it alone.

The speaker talked to the Presiding Bishop by phone, and it was learned that the Bishop was opposed to anything that would cause the tithing to be interfered with.

Then Brother A. N. Hoxie arrived on the grounds and was elated, as were others, over the building project. Ways for raising money were discussed, and Brother Hoxie offered to represent friends in the East and pledged $7,500 for the gymnasium project.

Plans were laid, but Brother Williams made a public statement that nothing should interfere with the tithing and offering funds. He was for the gymnasium with that reservation.

Graceland belongs to the church and her welfare should not be left to her friends, Brother Williams said. The General Conference would be and is her best friend, outside of God.

To presume that this conference will not support Graceland is a presumption without the right of evidence.

There was an avenue open which should have been resorted to. The joint council should have been called together to consider the matter. God has provided that the joint council can act between General Conferences.

The council could have been called together, and an explanation should be made why this was not done, but do not cloud those who contributed to the matter. Place the responsibility on the men on that committee.

The President of the church made a mistake in not calling the joint council together, the speaker said, and if others think so they should tell him so manfully. Apostle Williams said he felt he himself had made a mistake in not standing out for a joint council action in the matter.

As a conclusion he said that he recognized that Graceland needs this building. That she should have the necessary means to go ahead and train our young.

C. E. Wight Explains As One At Sessions

Elder Cyril E. Wight was the next speaker. He stated that the college board refused to do anything toward initiating the building of a gymnasium. The joint council was not called together because the board absolutely refused to have anything to do with the matter except to accept the money offered from different sources.

Why should the President of the church call the joint council together when the money offered came from outside sources? he asked.

The $10,000 was not under consideration to the memory of the speaker. But when the Presidency and Bishopric offered the board the $10,000 already appropriated the board accepted.

The Vote Approves Action Taken

The previous question was called and by motion ordered.

The substitute offered by Brother Macgregor was lost.

The original motion carried, which means that the Grace-land gymnasium project was approved.

Resolutions on "Common Consent"

Near the close of the conference session to-day Apostle J. F. Curtis introduced extensive preambles and resolutions.

Apostle T. W. Williams seconded the resolution which Apostle J. F. Curtis had moved.

Apostle Williams then moved that the resolution be printed and placed in the hands of each ex officio and delegate.

Apostle J. A. Gillen moved that it be referred to the next General Conference.

Apostle T. W. Williams spoke in opposition to delaying the matter.

Apostle Gillen Wishes to Defer Action

Apostle J. A. Gillen spoke in favor of deferring.

The previous question was moved.

The chair was asked if this carried with it all the previous motions. The chair ruled it did. Appeal was taken from the decision of the chair and the chair's decision was not sustained.

Previous question was voted down.

Moved as a substitute by A. H. Parsons that this matter be put into print and circulated for study and that on Tuesday next at 2 p. m. it be further considered.

Moved by Apostle J. F. Curtis that the substitute be amended by striking out the word Tuesday and inserting Saturday.

The amendment carried.

Substitute as amended carried which means that the following resolutions were the special order of business Saturday, October 6, at 2 p. m.:

The Preamble

Whereas, the law of "common consent" is fundamental in the usages and practices of the church, as contained in the following:

"All things shall be done by common consent in the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1.

". . . Neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church contrary to the church covenants, for all things must be done in order and by common consent in the church, by the prayer of faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 27: 6.

"Now it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right;

"Therefore this shall ye observe, and make it your law to do your business by the voice of the people."—Mosiah 13: 35, 36.

Right of Nomination

And whereas, it has been recognized in the practice and customs of the church that the right of nomination is inherent in membership, as explained in the following editorial, entitled "Nominations to office, etc.," by the late president of the church, Joseph Smith:

"The right to primarily name the candidates to be chosen by a branch to fill the various offices in it, does not inure to any one or more persons, by virtue of the office which they, or he may hold; the right of 'voice and vote' in the branch attaching to every member alike, by virtue of membership in the church, and not by virtue of office. The right to a 'voice' in the deliberations of the branch, includes the right and the privilege to name persons as candidates for any and all offices in the branch, and the giving of reasons therefor, as well as the right to express an opinion upon any and all measures presented for consideration and action at the business sessions, general or special.

Common Consent

"The common consent of a branch may be ascertained and secured when nominations to offices in the branch are made by the missionary in charge, or the district president, if it be conceded that the members of the branch are at liberty to vote either for, or against one so nominated; but, if it be held that either of these officers has the only right to nominate, and that the branch should ratify the nominations made by him because of that right, then the common consent cannot be obtained, because consent so enforced is not free, and cannot be freely accorded by all. . . .

"Any method of procedure that does not offer an equal chance to all to express in freedom of speech the freedom of choice would be a mistake, and would be liable to gross abuse of the liberties of the people. And by so much as this rule by which nomination to the office of presiding elder of a branch is confined to one or two by virtue of their office rather than their membership, by just so much is there a restriction upon the membership of the branch at large, and by so much will there be a failure to obtain the common consent.

Branch Rights

"We believe that the right to nominate men to be chosen to preside over a branch should remain with the members of the branch, to be exercised at their discretion; which right they may delegate to the missionary in charge, the district president, or a committee of their own number, from time to time, as they may choose; but we see no necessity and no propriety in conceding that right to nominate as belonging to such missionary in charge, or district president, as a prerogative of right appertaining to them."—Saints' Herald, July 16, 1892, pp. 454, 455.

And, whereas, the principle of "one-man power" invades the right of private judgment and free discussion, endangering the welfare of the church, as stated in the following editorial by the late president of the church:

"It has often been asserted, and with perfect consistency with truth, that one-man power was not desirable, nor tolerated in the Church of Christ. . . .

Voice of the People

"The power of one man to rule and guide the church we admit would lead to wrong; would endanger both the prosperity of the church as a whole, and the liberties of its members as individuals, would have a tendency to make them subject to his will, and the powerful temptation of self-exaltation and aggrandizement would surround him too constantly, for his welfare, and the safety of the church. This necessitates the great truth constantly affirmed by the Book of Mormon, that the voice of the people should rule.

". . . To say unto one man, or two men, or three men, that they are wholly responsible for the moral standing of the church, is to place into their hand the full power to continue or abolish the Church of Christ in the hands of one man, or two men; and to admit that there is but one man, or two men in the church worthy of being recognized of God and man."—Saints' Herald, October 15, 1873, page 650.

The Resolutions

Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the officers and delegates in General Conference assembled, hereby reaffirm our belief in, and adherence to, the principle of "common consent," as set forth above; and further,

We reaffirm that the right of nomination is inherent in membership in the church, and further

We express disapproval of any centralization of power in the hands of any administrative officer, or officers, whereby the expression of free choice and the deliberate will of the body may be invaded or abridged.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5

Friday's business session opened under favorable circumstances. All members of the leading quorums were present, and the tabernacle tent was filled. The bad weather of the starting days has given way to real Missouri October and many visitors who hesitated about coming in the rain and mud are now flocking to Independence.

The Campus makes a happy place on which to hold a meeting of this kind, weather such as we had at first being barred, and between meetings hundreds of Saints from all parts of the country are seen renewing acquaintance and visiting with evident pleasure.

President Elbert A. Smith called the meeting to order at 2 p. m. Song number 56, "He leadeth me," was sung, and Patriarch W. A. McDowell offered the opening prayer.

The minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

An additional report was had from the credentials committee, and by motion and vote was adopted.

Seventy Asks Legislation on Representation

The following resolution was presented by the Seventy:

"Independence, Missouri, October 4, 1923.

"To the General Conference: At a meeting of the Seventy in joint council, October 3, 1923, the following action was had:

"Resolved, that the ex officio members of the conference be seated in harmony with the rules of representation adopted by the church until otherwise ordered by the action of this body."

"It was moved further—

"That we submit this our action to the General Conference with our protest against the seating of those in this conference not authorized by our present law, as was done last year."

"Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) "E. E. LONG, Secretary."

It was moved to refer the document to the committee on representation.

F. F. Wippen Opposes Reference

Elder F. F. Wippen spoke against the motion to refer it to the committee because of existing irregularities as he claimed. The rule at present is as found in Conference Resolution No. 278, from which he read as follows:

"Rules of Representation

"Section 1. That the general officers of the church, known as the Presidency, the Twelve, the High Council, the Seventy, and the Bishopric (proper), are ex officio members of conference, and entitled to a voice as representatives of the spiritual authorities of the church at large.

"Section 2. That all high priests and elders are, ex officio, entitled to voice and vote in General Conference when present."

The speaker objected to extending an ex officio vote to heads of departments, for example, the head of Oracles. This is an irregularity, he said, and therefore the document should not be referred to the committee but decided here.

D. T. Williams Favors Reference

Apostle D. T. Williams spoke in favor of referring, saying the action of the committee would then be referred back to the conference. The conference could then take whatever action it might choose.

Elder James E. Yates opposed reference. He quoted a statement of the President of the church which recommended the extension of ex officio vote to heads of departments.

Brother Yates objected to granting ex officio votes to department heads on the authority of anyone, but wanted the decision to rest upon the rules already adopted.

Daniel Macgregor arose to oppose referring the document because, he said, the committee may keep it out of the conference so long that no action could be taken by the conference this year. It is not a question of the ability of these women (officers of the Department of Women) to vote but it is a question of law.

Apostle John F. Garver said that these ex officios were seated without protest the first day when the conference voted on the credential report. This makes it advisable to refer to committee.

Elder Frank A. Russell said that last year's conference settled this question on the floor and it was not referred to committee. Why, then, now refer to a committee? The conference has a right to take different action but it is not what has been done. This conference should say now what is its pleasure. If there has been an error, this should be adjusted.

To a question injected, "Were ex officio badges issued heads of the Department of Women last year?" Brother Russell was unable to answer. He however stated that he was willing to seat anyone, if the conference so stated. But he believes the younger men are being schooled to disregard General Conference resolutions.

President F. M. Smith Speaks

"I didn't intend to take part in this debate, but there have been some insinuations made, and made rather recklessly, too, that make it necessary for me to set myself right, if that is possible.

"The integrity of this committee has been attacked. I suppose I am at present chairman of that committee, and I certainly don't want anything coming to us if you haven't got confidence in our integrity, and I would rather you kept it. Furthermore, you have certainly overlooked some long-standing customs in trying to make out that the President of the church has tried to seat delegates, or ex officios, here for the purpose of padding the voting.

"There have been some rather sharp pointed bullets sent in my direction, and if they come back you can say 'ouch!' I have to say it now and then myself. I remember some thirty years ago, when I was a boy, I was asked to take the responsibility of acting as librarian of this church, and I was granted ex officio privileges rightfully, I thought, and I didn't hold the priesthood either. I felt that because I was doing this work in a department of the church it was courtesy for them to grant me an ex officio.

Many Tents Care for Conference Crowds

The tabernacle tent, seating three thousand people, has been erected over the natural amphitheater on the Campus.

All summer Independence crowds have enjoyed the outdoor services on the Campus where a natural sloping ground has made possible a beautiful amphitheater. A large platform and moving picture screen were built at one end of the theater; and the seats, inclining gradually toward the front, enabled all to see the platform.

Now the huge tent, especially made and designed for the occasion, has been pitched over the seats and platform, forming a fine tabernacle for General Conference purposes.

The aisles have been strewn with shavings to make walking easier and to save the sod. Seats are placed close together in order to crowd in as many as possible. At present the place seats about three thousand, and the platform will allow for a number more. There is also an orchestra platform directly below and in front of the main platform.

Two other large tents are used as serving tents for the cafeteria. These are pitched adjoining the Institute Building, in which basement the kitchen is located. The seating capacity of the cafeteria is two hundred fifty.

Two smaller tents are arranged for special purposes. One is the Herald Publishing House tent, where will be displayed all the various publications, such as tracts, books, and papers. The other tent is the general headquarters tent. This will be used for the Credentials and Reception Committees, the post office and information booth, and such other committees as may be assigned there later.

A telephone booth is also located in the headquarters tent. One other telephone is in the Institute Building on the first floor.

Provision has been made on the grounds for campers who wish to pitch camp for the conference. The grounds are well equipped for such a privilege, with lavatories and an open-air oven for cooking. Water can be had at the large water tank provided for this purpose. On hot days this water is ice cooled and very desirable.

The large grounds offer plenty of parking space for automobiles. Traffic officers on the Campus direct the parking of machines.

The Institute Building provides many rooms for committee meetings and classroom work. The building also contains a bath.

Recreation facilities are also provided. There is a baseball diamond and a gridiron for football. Volley ball courses are another feature. A sand pile and slide for the little folks are also on hand.

Other features may be added as the need develops during the course of the conference sessions.

Institute Chorus Renders Oratorio

The Institute Chorus of the Stone Church, consisting of eighty-five voices, trained and directed by Brother Paul N. Craig, Tuesday and Wednesday nights sang to raptly attentive audiences the oratorio, "Saint Paul."

The rendition was preceded by an invocation offered by Apostle F. Henry Edwards and a brief introduction descriptive of text and composer by Walter W. Smith.

"Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy was born in Hamburg, February 3, 1809. At an early age he showed his great love and talent for music, playing his own compositions before he was eleven years of age to circles of admiring friends. In 1827 he listened to a revival of 'Saint Matthew's Passion' which had been written by Bach a generation before. This inspired Mendelssohn to attempt to express the dramatic story of Saint Paul's conversion in music, using scriptural texts. This task he began in 1833 and finished in 1836, thus giving to the world a musical picture of human emotion and experience seldom equaled and which has continued to minister to the uplift of humanity unto this day."

In last night's rendition, Brother Craig successfully played upon his great choral organ, bringing out many tonal contrasts and a wide range of feeling and expression. The joyful praise of the Christians in their opening chorus, "Lord, thou alone art God and thine are the heaven, the earth, the mighty waters," was followed by the stately choral, "To God on high be thanks and praise," whose quiet harmonies diversified, elusive, gave earnest of what angelic pæans of adoration may be.

Soloists

Sister Nelle Atkinson Kelley of Omaha, Nebraska, sang the soprano and alto solos. If "Saint Paul" leaves anything to be desired it is that its composer might have been a bit more chary with his recitatives and more prodigal with his arias. Chief among the latter is the well-known "But the Lord is mindful of his own," which Sister Kelley sang with confidence and assurance only equaled in beauty by the pathos and pleading of her "Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that stoneth the prophets!"

Brother Eugene Christy sang the tenor solos, with earnestness and conviction, lending to the clear statements of Stephen before his accusers, the recital of the stoning and death of that martyred disciple, and the later descriptive passages concerning Paul and his conversation on the way to Damascus, the resonant beauty of a well-trained voice and the power and vigor of a sincere delivery.

The authoritative voice of Saul in his outbursts against the Christians, its modulation to humility when he heard the pleading, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" and its penitent cry, "O God, have mercy upon me and blot out my transgressions," were consistently presented. Brother Houghton is a Harvard student and has won an enviable place in the Glee Club of that university, being a member of its famous quartet. He sings with ease and facility, his rich baritone having remarkable qualities of blending and harmonizing with other voices, as was delightfully demonstrated in the duettino with Brother Christy when, as Paul and Barnabas, they sang, "Now we are ambassadors in the name of Christ."

Of the heavier numbers, the chorus of the Hebrews, "Stone him to death," was outstanding in its clear-cut and vigorous attacks. One could easily picture the gathering fury of the mob intent on murder, its outbursts of hate and menace, and its hideous culmination, and after the cruel stoning and Stephen's tender, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge," the same chorus, in sudden change of mood, sang with infinite pathos and charm the choral, "To thee, O Lord, I yield my spirit, who breakest in love this mortal chain."

The closing chorus, "The nations are now the Lord's and his Christ's" made a fitting climax with its spirited measures ringing with faith and confidence, victory crowning the lives of those who have come up out of great tribulation and have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb.

Doctor Carl Busch, prominent Kansas City symphony director and composer of note, expressed his enjoyment of the evening's performance, commending the chorus for its successful handling of the difficult intricate passages and the leader for the precision and decision of his directing.

All of the 3,000 who heard the oratorio paid the high tribute of absolute quiet throughout the performances, and in addition responded generously to the opportunity of contributing to the chorus fund.

The oratorio was broadcasted by the radio station K F I X on Wednesday night.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Consecration and Sacrifice Needed

Apostle James A. Gillen addressed the second business session of the conference, October 2, on the needs that are coming to the quorum with which he is associated. His remarks were as follows:

My first observation will be in order to impress upon you the significance of the demands which are coming. I wish, and this is not a wish by which I seek to bring about your discomfiture, that it were possible for everyone in the hearing of my voice to sit with the quorum with which I am identified for perhaps two weeks while we are in session. I believe if you could do this you perhaps would sense the responsibility resting upon the missionary arm of the church as you have never done before. I have labored with these men. I know most of them beyond a superficial acquaintance, and I know they are godly men. I know they are men consecrated to the service of God.

There are two factors which appear to me to be essential to the progress of this work. These factors are highly necessary. The two I wish to mention at this time are sacrifice and consecration. In offering these two factors I believe I am giving to them a wonderful importance if we are faithful to that which comes to us by the power and direction of God's Holy Spirit, enabling us to move out and occupy in a way that would completely meet the demands of this church.

Repeating an observation that I made not long ago at the Central Church in Kansas City, it has not been many weeks or months since a lady came to me and asked me, "Brother Gillen, when will the time come to this church when there will be no longer a necessity of making the sacrifices we are undertaking to make now?" I paused for a moment and I said unto this sister, "Sister, I hope and pray that that time will never come to this church when we will be relieved of the necessity of making sacrifices."

Sacrifice Required

As I look upon the great work of Jesus Christ, it brings forcibly to my mind this thought that the work in which we are all engaged, not only as it relates to our immediate time or this last dispensation, but as it relates to the work of our Savior among men, was conceived and carried out in sacrifice and will require sacrifice, until the mission of Christ has served its purposes among men, particularly as it relates to the work with which we ourselves are identified. So long as that purpose has not been accomplished just so long there will be a necessity of making sacrifices.

As I look before me and around me I see such men as Brother Joseph Luff, Uncle Gomer Griffiths, Brother F. G. Pitt, the speaker who has just retired from the stand, Brother J. R. Lambert, and many others; and as I look upon them and the work they have done years ago, and by all of the men who preceded them, I realize that the sacrifice made at their hands is more or less responsible for the wonderful gathering at this time. From that influence we cannot be separated to-day; and when I think of the wonderful men who have preceded us in going as it were out into the primitive forest and blazing the way that these conditions we enjoy to-day might obtain, I cannot help but feel that it was a day of sacrifice. It was a day of great sacrifice. And inasmuch as those men under the courage born of experience, under the consciousness of their discipleship with God, let nothing stand in the way of doing their part to further this work, it is for us to continue on.

I know a little something about what it means to sacrifice. I can recall the time when my father was in Australia, when I was about thirteen or fourteen years of age, and I was committed to the necessity of going fourteen or fifteen miles, to cut trees down, and in many instances to await the coming of some one to gratuitously help me load these logs; and then to arrive at home at ten or eleven or twelve o'clock at night only to find my mother, who is now a sainted being, awaiting my return. I want to say in tribute to the memory of my mother, that in all the years of sacrifice I never heard her murmur once. I am wondering to-day if that spirit of sacrifice is in the church, if that spirit of sacrifice is so within the church that we are willing to move out and occupy.

Because of some of these early experiences and not fully understanding the significance of the sacrifices made by my parents there came a time when I prepared to leave home, when I stood before my father, both feet on the ground, and said to him, looking him fairly and squarely in the face, "I am going to leave home. I have made sacrifices as long as I propose. I am going into the marts of the world and seek that for which I have in mind to seek." He put his hand upon my head and he said, "Yes, you may be reasonably successful in the choice you have made, but the day will come when you will be put to the necessity of preaching the gospel." It hurt me; it put me rebellious. The answer that I made to him was practically this, though not in these words, "You attend to your business and I will attend to mine." The day came when I changed my view.

A Consecrated Ministry

My brother and my sister, I am glad that I was put to the necessity of making those sacrifices. As I sit with our quorum, those upon whom God has placed the responsibility of protecting the affairs of the church as it relates to the missionary arm, I say when we look out upon the world and understand and sense the demands that come to us, I dare say that there is not a member of this body with which I am associated that has not been in many instances found agonizing in prayer and sometimes all night. That has taken place within my own soul within the last two weeks, when I shut myself within my room and agonized all night praying that the time would come when the spirit of sacrifice would so seize this church individually that they, under the spirit of sacrifice, would be willing to consecrate their all, whether it shall be the talent with which God has endowed his people to represent him officially among the children of men, or whether it shall be to consecrate that which they have in a substantial way, or what not. I am of the opinion that when the Spirit of the living God, that Spirit which was with the Master of men when he was on earth, that Spirit which was with the people in the early days, shall seize this church through its individual membership all difficulties relating to the attempt to meet the demands will disappear.

I will say in conclusion that I love this work. I believe I am rooted and grounded in it. I have reason to believe that the ministry of this church now are just as earnestly engaged in this work as the people of any age, and when I see them going out, I breathe a prayer that under the Spirit which moved the Master, we may occupy, and in our occupancy may bring about a better condition within the church. I pray that the experiences through which we pass, whether they shall be pleasing or painful, whether or not they shall be of our choosing, may give us the fortitude to bear, the certainty to endure, and the faith to look beyond.

Conference Daily Published

When a weekly becomes a daily and the machinery of the organization is speeded up seven times its usual rate, every cog in the wheel must stand the increase in pressure in order to function properly. The least hesitation will cause delay, for the mails wait for no one.

The regular editorial staff of the church publications constitutes the staff of the Conference Daily, and at the same time it continues the regular publications. A description of the process involved in publishing a daily, using the machinery of a weekly, will explain an interesting bit of organization.

The editors of each church publication continue as usual to edit their own papers, but they must so arrange their time that their work does not interfere with the demands of the moment, that is, the Conference Daily. That is the problem of each editor, and it certainly is a problem.

Under direction of the managing editor of all publications, the editorial staff meets every morning at 8 o'clock in the editorial rooms and the assignments for the day are made. All meetings occurring that day are "covered" by some representative of the Daily. This assures that the regular conference program is consistently reported.

In addition to these regular assignments, each reporter has a list of special assignments which must be covered. These consist of stories about happenings at the conference that are not listed in the conference program. In this way all news is reported, none of importance escaping unnoticed.

Business Meeting

At 2 o'clock daily the entire staff of reporters, at present consisting of seven, is at the press table directly below and in front of the tabernacle stand, to report the business meeting. The news of the meeting is written on the spot and dispatched by messenger to the printing office, where it is "set" as fast as it arrives.

Each reporter at the table has something special to look for in the order of business. One keeps track of the names of speakers and the order of the day. Another looks for unusual expressions gleaned from speeches, another takes a stenographic report of prayers and speeches. Still another derives the substance of each talk made from the floor and writes a summary. One reporter reads all the material and puts it into story form ready to send to the office. Special stories are assigned to the other reporters while the session is in progress.

The last material must be in the office at 4.30 p. m. if the Daily is out in time to be in the mail that same evening.

The material must go through the regular routine after it reaches the office. It first goes to the copy desk where it is re-read, properly punctuated, and put into Herald style. The heads or titles are also written for the stories. It is then sent to the composing room, where the men at the linotype machines set the "copy," as the material is called. The copy comes out of the linotype machines all set in type. This type is arranged in galleys or columns about twenty-one inches long. The galley is inked, a long paper placed upon it, and a heavy roller rolled over it. A proof comes off. This printed paper, or proof, is then sent to the proof room where it is read and compared with the original copy. The mistakes are marked and it is sent back to the composing room where it is corrected. This process is continued until all mistakes, or as many as can be found in so short a time, are corrected.

The Make Up

The pages of the paper are then made up. That is, the stories are arranged as they should appear in the paper when it is completed. This takes some time, for the stories must be taken from the galleys and made up in final form. If a space is left at the bottom of a page because the story ends too soon, the space must be exactly filled with some other items. These extra items are called "fillers."

When all the pages of the paper are made up, they are placed together in a steel form and locked in tight. This form is then placed upon the press which turns out the printed sheets. The sheets are then run through a machine which folds them as they finally appear.

These papers are sent to the bindery department where they are bound together. From there they go to the mailing department where they are addressed and sent to the post office.

Numerous small steps have not been mentioned in this process. The description tells only of the general order of organization in a newspaper office.

By 2 o'clock in the afternoon, four of the inside pages must be made up and on the press. This is called the first form. One side of a large sheet is printed at this time. The other side of the sheet is left blank until the second form is placed on the press, and then it is printed.

The second form, consisting of the outside four pages, must be on the press at 5 o'clock. This gives just enough time to complete the edition and have it in the mail at 7 p. m.

Staff Enjoys Work

The life of a weekly staff accelerated seven times is not a bed of roses. The meetings of the conference mean work, not pleasure. Oh! for the life of a reporter! Yet there is a sense of enjoyment in the responsibility of letting the members of the church who cannot be present know of the daily happenings of the conference. But sometimes nothing much happens during the day. Then what goes in the Daily? Well, something goes in, and it is the duty of the staff to see that the material is of current interest and worth while. So sometimes the Daily is better than other days, but that depends upon the business of the conference.

The force in the Publishing House must not be forgotten in the process. It works on as usual, but also at greater speed. Many hours of overtime are also necessary for the force in order that the news of the conference be sent to the world on time. And the great thing about it all is that every sacrifice and extra demand is met cheerfully and with a smiling face.

After knowing how the Daily is published, it will perhaps be more interesting to see the news as it arrives in some distant part of the world. It will be interesting to reflect upon the activities of the staff, and remember at the same time that the organization in itself is unique—for the same staff that is organized for the weeklies and monthlies is at the same time doing the work of the daily.

Wonderful Conference Music Rendered

The music of our General Conferences has always been of a high and inspiring order, and this year it promises to be even better than before.

The musical part of all services has been wonderful. Three special leaders have the music in charge, and they cooperate in bringing a tribute of song to the service that is inestimable in value and in the blessing it gives. Brethren Albert N. Hoxie, Paul N. Craig, and James Houghton are a trio indeed, and each gives his best.

Brother Hoxie is a genius at getting the congregation to singing, and even the oldest hymns take on new strength and meaning when he gets 3,000 voices lifted as one in praise and gladness. Brethren Craig and Houghton as directors of choir and chorus and as soloists themselves, give unusual dignity and beauty to the musical part of each service.

Those who observe see a marked trend upward in the quality of our music, both in the special numbers and in the congregational service. Music plays a great part in all group activities, and in our church is an indispensable medium for worship and for the unifying of the Saints which comes when they sing together of the glories of Zion and of the visions that our souls would see accomplished.

Missionary Work Must Be Conserved

At the second business meeting of the conference, Tuesday, October 3, a number of short speeches were given, among them being that of Elder C. E. Wight, president of Lamoni Stake.

In introducing the speaker President Elbert A. Smith said: "Another member of the Twelve in years gone by who left a fragrant memory in the minds of those who may have disagreed with him, as well as those who agreed with him—a man whose influence was always splendid and admirable—was Brother John W. Wight. He, too, has a son who has seen fit to respond to the call of service, but in a different line of work; in pastoral work. The commandment to carry the work to all the earth is binding. The command to feed my sheep is also binding, and it is sad that many times our missionaries have sacrificed, toiled, and gone afar, with great labor, to make a convert, and then we have neglected him and let him drift from us until presently he is the subject of an elders' court.

"We need pastors. Real pastors, who love the sheep. Real pastors who know how to take care of the sheep, and pastoral problems are very important. Brother Cyril E. Wight is president of the Lamoni Stake, and has had some experiences facing and meeting this problem. We would like to hear from him."

Brother Wight continued with the following address:

At the time that my father was called home, it was the unanimous approval of the family that his decision to have Brother Elbert preach the funeral sermon be concurred in. There was a comment made in that sermon that I have never forgotten. Brother Elbert, in speaking to us on that occasion, called attention to the fact that my father was a rich man. He said, There are not very many people who have known this, but Brother Wight was a rich man, and he has left great riches to his sons. He said, He has not left wealth or money or property, but he has left a heritage of friends. I believed that statement when Brother Elbert made it. Since that time, I have proved it to be true, for while it is true that I have been assigned to local work I have not been able to tell during the past year whether I was a local man or a missionary, for I have been called into quite a number of branches of the church. I feel that in a way I have been fortunate in having the opportunity of making a little study of local problems, not only in the community where I was practically raised, but also in other branches of the church; so that perhaps I may be able to talk a little bit more understandingly on the problem concerning which I have been called to speak this afternoon.

Makes Suggestions

I want to emphasize very strongly the words given in the introduction a few moments ago. Brother Elbert gave almost word for word some of the thoughts I wished to express—that we should not continue to vitiate the work that has been done by those who have gone out as missionary representatives of this church by failing to follow up with adequate pastoral work, that work which they have so splendidly done; and it seems to me that the missionary would make the demand, should make it, that when he has been called upon to make the sacrifices that have been set forth this afternoon, these sacrifices shall not have been made in vain. I want, then, this afternoon, to make two suggestions with regard to the carrying-on of our pastoral work. In the first place, it is absolutely necessary to see that the splendid work done by the seventies and those others who go out in missionary capacity, shall be conserved. It is a shameful waste for them to spend their time and energy, for them to make sacrifices necessary, in the leaving of their home and loved ones—realizing that when all this has been done and many have been brought into the church, these proselytes are allowed to drift away because of our failure to care for them.

I invite your attention to a second thought this afternoon: If there is one great ideal toward which we, as a people, are working, it is the ideal of Zion, and there are all too many of us who have conceived of Zion as some external process by means of which, people having been brought together, we can be suddenly brought into a higher condition of life. Let me call your attention to the fact, my friends, that if Zion is ever to be really established it can be done only on the basis of full and complete preparation having been made by the individuals who come to this place. So the stakes of Zion have been established, and places around the stakes have been established to help prepare people for Zion.

Organization Necessary

If I understand correctly, the work of the missionary is to go out and teach to the people the fundamental and divine principles of eternal life, and as soon as the missionary has told the people the story of eternal life, he is to turn these people who have come in contact with the church, over to those who have been placed under pastoral responsibility, and then the gigantic responsibility rests upon these men to try to fit and prepare these people, to the end that some day they may be gathered together in a Zion condition. My friends, it cannot be done through any external processes, and here is the place where the pastor works, in the great piece of machinery that has been established of Almighty God. I want to emphasize the thought that was expressed by Brother Pitt. It is necessary that we shall have the machinery. I want to use now a little illustration that I have used on a number of occasions. What is it that makes this flower appeal to us? [Picking up a flower from a bouquet.] There are two things that make a strong appeal. One is its beauty; the other is its fragrance. My friends, are beauty and fragrance physical things? They are not. They are spiritual entities, and yet if I were to crush these flowers in my hand, immediately would their beauty be destroyed, and in a little while the fragrance would be gone. If we want the fragrance and the beauty of these flowers, we must, first of all, have their beautiful symmetry, their perfect organization. But remember this: that the organization is not the end. The end is the development of beauty and fragrance on the part of the flower. This is the end for which it was created, and also, my friends, the creation of the church was to the end that perfect men and women under Christ Jesus might be secured, and I pray God that the day may speedily come when we shall be able to work together to the end that this problem may be really solved.

"The only way Zion can be redeemed, the only way that the proper social conditions can be brought about in this world is by living this gospel."—R. J. Wildey.

Bishop Makes Pledge Before People

Bishop J. F. Keir spoke in representation of the Bishopric at the two o'clock meeting, Tuesday, October 2. In introducing the speaker, President Elbert A. Smith said: "Sunday afternoon many, perhaps most of you, heard from Bishop McGuire. This afternoon I have asked Brother Keir to present such thoughts as he may have touching the work of receiving and disbursing finances."

Brother Keir then addressed the congregation as follows:

Associated with the coming forth of this work there was a record brought to us. It is claimed by Joseph Smith that an angel came to him and delivered the golden plates from which this record was translated. This is either true or it is false. We believe it is true, for God has raised up an army of witnesses who are able to testify as to the divinity of the record. The chief purpose of the record is to bear witness that Jesus is the Christ. Truly this is a worthy purpose, and one that should challenge the attention of all mankind, particularly in this day and age of the world when the only other record that we have upon which to base the claims of Christ is being assailed.

Relates Dream

I was reading this record at one time. I have read it over several times, but at this particular time, with my companion, I was reading that record. We came to that place in the record where it is stated that Lehi found in front of his tent a peculiar instrument. I made the remark to my companion that it was a strange thing that this intricate and delicate instrument should be found away off there, far from civilization, in the wilderness. I passed on and thought little more about the comment I had made, but a few nights later, I had a dream, and in this dream I found that a Mexican gold coin had been placed in my pocket. I wondered how it came to be there. I was made to know that this coin had a spiritual significance, and I was elated over it, and I found myself showing it to a great many of my friends. The dream was so vivid that in the morning I jumped out of bed and went to my trousers to find out whether or not it was actually a fact that that Mexican gold coin was in my pocket. In my dream I heard the voice of God from over my shoulder saying to me these words, and the voice was just as audible to me in that dream as my voice is to you now. The voice of God said to me, "The same power that placed the directors in front of Lehi's tent, placed this coin in your pocket." This testimony is for those who are faithful in keeping the commandments of God, and paying their tithing. I wondered at the time why this particular commandment was singled out, and emphasized. This was a great many years ago, before I had anything to do with the work of the Bishopric, but since becoming identified with this department of the Lord's work, I think I understand why God emphasized that particular observance of the law.

At another time, while acting as Bishop's agent, I had it in mind to make a tour of the district. I thought I would write to the branch presidents, and tell them that I was coming to their branch, and that my purpose was to teach the temporal law, so that they might tell the Saints, and they wouldn't invite their friends in. I thought they wouldn't be particularly interested in the financial phases of our law; and so, with this thought in mind, I was proceeding, and again the Lord helped me out. In another dream I saw myself standing before the Saints teaching the temporal law, and as I looked here and there in the audience, I saw people who were not members of our church, and they sat with their mouths open, drinking in every truth which I was presenting to them, in which I was showing the advantages and the beauty and justice of the law that God had given for the financing of his work.

Teaches Temporal Law

With these experiences, I have been made bold in presenting to the Saints the temporal law, for I verily believe with all my heart that God has a very definite purpose in giving to us that law. It has always seemed to me that no matter what God required of his children, he required it that they might grow and develop into that perfect likeness that he expects of us, under gospel dispensation. I believe that the law of tithing is an ordinance in the household of God. That it is just as much required that we should observe that law as it is that we should be baptized.

You will remember that in Malachi when the people of God were accused of robbing him, the Lord said, You have gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings.

To me it is just as important that we observe the law of tithes and offerings as it is to go down into the waters of regeneration; to partake of the Lord's supper; to indulge or take part in any ordinance that God has set before his church.

I call your attention this afternoon to the statement made by Christ as he sent his apostles out, and commanded them "to teach them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo I am with you always, even unto the ends of the earth"; so I can see the need of every member of this church becoming actively identified with the financial program of the church, that there may come to them the rich blessings that God has promised to us.

Temporal Law Important

I am sorry to say there are a great many in the church that do not recognize the importance of this law. I taught a Sunday school class of young ladies just a short time ago. I asked them the question, How many of you young ladies are wage earners? About a dozen put up their hands. How many of you are tithepayers? Three out of that dozen put up their hands, as being tithepayers in the kingdom of God, and then I wondered whether or not that same proportion held throughout the church. There rests upon each one of us, as children of God, the responsibility of endeavoring to encourage all to do that which God has required of his children.

The brother spoke this afternoon of this being a work of sacrifice. That's what we may expect. God has said it would be so. He has declared that this is a day of sacrifice, and of the tithing of my people. But Saints! Tithing does not require any sacrifice. Tithing is one tenth of the increase. It is one tenth of that which you have left over after taking care of your necessary living expenses. Sacrifice only comes into operation when we go beyond the law of tithing, and make our freewill offerings. Surplus does not call for sacrifice, for we have been abundantly taken care of before God requires the surplus, but we believe that it is a very wholesome thing for us who are able to pay tithing, to sacrifice for the Lord's work. Jesus said, If any man will come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me. Self-denial, Saints, has a very definite purpose in the development of character. The man who would be spiritual in this church must learn to deny himself. He must be able to say to his fleshy nature, Sit down! He must be able to say to his carnal desires, Stand aside! in order that the spiritual man might rise to the stature of Christ.

Practice Self-Denial

So I can see the change that comes to us as a people in practicing self-denial. We are apt to be carried off by the spirit of the times. The spirit of the age is to run riot. I have in my possession a little booklet in which it says "the statistics show that some twelve or fifteen cities, in their municipal affairs, are spending more than their income." The spirit of the age among people is to live beyond their income. We must be frugal in order that we may have, and having that we may have a disposition to do the thing that God has required of us. It is not sufficient to save. We should save. We must also give! We should practice economy. We should practice the repression of unnecessary wants, but that's not enough. Having done that, we must purpose in our hearts that we will observe the law which God has given. Let none in my audience this afternoon be found discouraging anyone in doing anything which God has required of his people. For in the day of judgment you will be held accountable for the things which you have done, whether in your individual life or in the actions which have affected others, and which may have discouraged them, or caused them to neglect to do the things that God has required of them. So let us consider seriously the effect of our attitude upon others. Am I my brother's keeper? Yes, and God will hold us responsible for seeing to it that we encourage all to do the things that God has required.

Pledges Himself

I want to make a pledge this afternoon. I want to pledge myself before God and before this audience, that during the coming year I will seek to repress my unnecessary wants; that I will exercise care in the expenditure of every dollar that comes into my hands; that I will observe the law of God, and be found faithful in paying my tithes and my offerings and encourage others to do likewise. Will you join me in that pledge? If you will, stand. Let's stand. (The larger part of the vast audience arose.) Thank you.

Unity Found in Prayer Service

A multitude of earnest faces lifted up in song and testimony is what one sees at the morning prayer services. To give an idea of how large the tent is we can best quote Brother Hoxie, who called out to those in the rear seats, "Folks, you look a mile away." At his daily invitation to the Saints to "move forward," an army of obedient ones are seen to move down the aisles to fill up the front seats as he indicates.

Thus massed in the center, one sees them; the spontaneous youth, the strength of middle age, the wisdom of the older ones. Here one finds the fathers and mothers of the younger men of whom we are proud to-day. Praying fathers and mothers they are, to whom the workers refer with pride. From all walks of life the Saints have come to mingle with each other where they learn to love each other in the togetherness of prayer and testimony as they pray with and for each other.

"This should be a praying conference," is a phrase heard over and over. Therefore much attention is given to the prayer service, and it becomes the theme of the service.

There are in all about six prayers and a dozen testimonies. The request that those who pray, as well as those who testify, stand and face the audience is quite well observed. If there is any criticism to offer, it is that some who participate in prayer speak too low and continue too long. Some cannot be heard as far as twelve feet away, which of course is not edifying to many, and the majority of the bowed audience is forced to find strength in silent prayer. The switching freight trains, which are very close, interfere with the prayer service each morning.

Theme of Sermons Is Salvation

Salvation is the theme of sermons preached at the sixty-ninth General Conference now in session at Independence, Missouri. Each week day a sermon is delivered at 11 a. m. upon some subject of this theme, and on Sunday at 3 p. m. As will be noted in the General Conference program (HERALD of September 19, 1923), the subjects assigned upon this theme are: "What must I do to be saved?" "What must the moral man do to be saved?" "What must the citizen do to be saved?" "What must the world do to be saved?" "What must the Saint do to be saved?" "What shall we do for financial salvation?" "What shall we do to save the church?" "How can we save the religious life of the child?" "How shall the home and family be saved?" "How can we help youth to save itself?" "What must our women do to be saved?" "How can the small branch be saved?" "How shall the stakes be saved?" "What must we do to save our missionary program?"

These sermons will be reported daily in the Conference Daily. Below is a summary of each sermon in order as it has been delivered. The remaining sermons will appear in the following week's HERALD.

"What Must I Do to Be Saved?"

Patriarch J. F. Martin presented an interesting discourse at the 11 o'clock hour, Sunday, September 30, at the Stone Church, on the first subject of the theme "Salvation."

The question, "What must I do to be saved?" he said, was one which has since the earliest time of human experience been uppermost in the mind of mankind. Every individual sometime in his life considers the question of his final destiny, and how he may determine it for his eternal good. It is a universal instinct and one not confined to the civilized nations alone, but to the uncivilized as well.

Speaking of the many peculiar ideas of what constitutes salvation and how it may be obtained, he said if we were to visit the many churches of the world we would probably receive as many different answers to the questions as there were churches. This difficulty seems to arise from the fact that men are unwilling to stick to the old paths, and in their tendency to modernize, become dissatisfied with the word of God.

He drew the attention of his audience to the text found in James 1:25: "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."

Perfection, he said, is something mankind has sought for ages, but seldom, if ever, attained. Perfection is the attribute of the divine, while imperfection has followed human efforts and endeavors. Only God, being all wise and all powerful, can conceive, interpret, and execute a perfect law. If, then, you would have perfect salvation, you must render a perfect obedience to the perfect law of God.

Bondage to Sin

It is quite possible to have national, political, and economical liberty, and at the same time be in bondage to sin and to ignorance. We may be strong physically, we may be ever so bright mentally, but we may be weak in point of character and in bondage to sin. At no time in the world's history is strength of character more indispensable than at the present time.

In seeking the goal of their ambition, men forget that the only right road to happiness is the road of character. If we would attain salvation we must lend a perfect obedience to the perfect law of God. We must, therefore, obey all that is contained in the law of God.

In seeking the answer to "What must I do to be saved?" one class says, "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." They believe this to be the only requisite.

A second class will say, you must repent and be baptized before you can be saved.

Another says all this belief in baptism and repentance is unnecessary. What you need is the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

A fourth says all that is required is to live a good moral life.

A fifth says to obey your conscience. If you follow the dictates of your conscience you will be saved.

Many answers are given to the one question. Finally we ask one who answers in the language of the Master: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." The speaker laid special emphasis on the word all, saying that it was necessary for us to observe all these things, for all of them constitute the law of Jesus Christ. Any one alone could not save; but we must observe the whole law, the perfect law.

Love would enable one to abide the perfect law, for love was the fulfilling of the law. If we love God with all our hearts and our neighbors as ourselves, we shall fulfill the law.

Summing up his discourse he said that each of us, as individuals, must start from wherever we are. If we have repented and been baptized, we should start from that point and continue on unto perfection. We must develop. We must bear fruit. If we would be saved we must observe all the commandments.

"What Must the Sinner Do to Be Saved?"

On the second subject of the main theme, Brother O. L. Thompson delivered a discourse on "What must the sinner do to be saved?" He spoke to a large audience in the tabernacle at the morning service, October 1.

He took his text from Proverbs 25: 4, "Take away the dross from the silver and there shall come forth a vessel for the refiner," and Isaiah 59: 1, "Behold the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither his ear heavy that it cannot hear."

The mission of Christ and his church is to save mankind, he said. There are two programs which may be followed to accomplish this: first, the conservation of youth; secondly, the reclamation of the straying. The conservation of youth is, of course, the better way, but the same Jesus who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," gave also the parables of the lost sheep and the prodigal son. Since there will always be a large number of prodigals and straying sheep, the work of reclamation must go on, fostered by the church which represents the Man of Calvary. The church to do this must go out to bring in the sin-sick soul, who is not in touch with Christ, and must answer the cry of the mother who sings, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?"

God is an economist, he continued, who does not cast away the clay in which there is dross, but seeks to refine. The church is expected to assist in this work of casting the dross from the sinner. Man has two selves, a higher and a lower. He can be true to either; and either one neglected will degenerate. God gives to each the tools with which to work either in the building process or the tearing down, for the same tools will do either. The church must recognize the tools and help the soul who is returning to know how to discover his higher self.

Reclaim the Sinner

Brother Thompson outlined twelve requisite steps in the reclamation of the sinner.

1. His conscience must be aroused. His heart must be touched before his reason will give heed.

2. He must be given knowledge. The sinner must have a clear understanding of the forces of good and evil and their effects.

3. He must have love. This must be given him by others and engendered in his own heart. Love is the mighty force which draws to God.

4. He must be taught to exercise his will. "Whosoever will may come."

5. He must have faith. Faith in God and those who seek to reclaim him is essential. "God sends the thread to the web begun."

6. He must repent. Repentance is symbolic of humility.

7. He must be baptized. This is symbolic of cleansing.

8. He must experience the laying on of hands, symbolic of the sustaining force from above.

9. He must give expression to the Christly virtues within himself. It is necessary to remember that after being enrolled in the church, he is still a man and liable to err again.

10. He must practice Christian ethics, such as prayer and giving.

11. He must study to develop both mind and body that his higher self may not degenerate.

12. He must live the fuller life, developing a character in Christ without whom he can do nothing.

Brother Thompson closed with a plea for the drowning sinner, and a cry of some that we let the multitudes of them perish while we pause to quarrel over who shall throw the line to him and how it shall be done.

O. L. Thompson is one of our young seventies, who grew up in Michigan. He was a member of the class of religious education at Graceland last year. The past few months has found him laboring in Nova Scotia and Eastern Maine.

"What Must the Moral Man Do to Be Saved?"

At the 11 o'clock sermon, Tuesday, October 2, Elder S. A. Burgess gave as a scripture reading 1 Corinthians 2: 11 to 3: 9, taking as his text, "We have the mind of Christ," and associating it with Philippians 2: 2, that "we be of one mind."

Basically the moral man is derived from Morea customs, and the moral man is he that keeps the law. The scribes and Pharisees kept the law, yet our righteousness must exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees if we enter the kingdom of heaven.

Again, the moral man is one who is intelligent, lives a good, clean life, but rejects religion. He may possess a social consciousness, but is not converted.

The speaker emphasized that saved, in a primary sense, means to keep from destruction; in a religious sense, it is salvation from hell, salvation from sin, and from self. A mean man may be hard to live with, but even his wife can walk off, while he has to live with himself all the time. In its deeper meaning, saved comes from the same root as salus which means health or welfare. It is intimately connected with life more abundant. As life is response to environment, we are dead if we do not respond. Life eternal is to know God. Spirituality means to possess the mind of Jesus Christ.

Intellectual Man

A man is animal and may live like an animal or even worse than the beasts. He must eat and sleep as the animals do; but he is separated from them in possessing a mind. To live intellectually is far greater than to live only on the animal plane.

As an intelligent being he may recognize the value of moral life, his duty to his fellows, but still is separated from the sons of God until he is touched by the finger of God, and comes to know him.

In biology there is a time when it is difficult to distinguish between the vegetable, animal and human embryo, even under the microscope. But there comes a time when anyone can tell the difference between a cabbage, a dog, and a boy. So with our spiritual beginning, the new life is difficult to perceive by the common observer at the start; but if we continue to grow spiritually the time will come when anyone will be able to tell the difference.

Man must eat and drink and thus live or respond on the physical or animal plane. He thinks and so lives on a mental plane; but as he knows God, as he possesses the mind of the Spirit, so he may live on the spiritual plane and live more fully.

Religion or spiritual life is not book learning or mental development alone. It is not morality alone. It is not social mindedness, but the man who is truly converted, who is spiritually born again, will and must be intelligent, and will continue to learn and grow. He must be socially minded or he cannot love God and not love his brother. He must live a clean, moral life. Therein is where some professors of religion fail. They fail even to live a good physical life. They justify themselves in moral wrongdoing or rest upon their intellectual oar; but they thereby deceive themselves; for the truly spiritual man lives fully, even though he knows that spirituality and religion mean something more than all of these, in the consciousness of the nearness of the divine.

This spiritual development is possible to all. Some students do not secure it because their whole effort has been for intellectual development, to the neglect of that which is most worth while.

Evidences of God

Brother Burgess also touched briefly on the evidences of God, for the man on the street objects that God cannot be determined by our human measurement, and so cannot be known; but man has learned to project a three-foot rule into the universe and measure the millions of miles to Betelgeuse and the trillions of miles of stellar space. So may he project spiritually his little measure to appreciate in part the wonder of the divine. Nor is God limited in his ability to manifest himself to man according to man's comprehension. To deny this is to deny the power of God or attempt to limit him.

The very story of the embryo leads us to believe that almost impossible sequence of chance, or to believe in a law-giver. That from the single cell, the cell that has produced vegetable and animal creation, there should once have sprung a man, thinking, capable of following a concept of the divine, is a miracle. But that in the birth of man this same sequence should be followed, not once but almost with invariable regularity, is a miracle too great for credit, especially if we must add or concede the existence of the first cell of light.

Again, there is the marvelous laws of the universe manifested in the movements of the great stars and in the movements of the small particles seen by the microscope.

To many more evidences, may be added the inner consciousness of man and the many men who have credited to inspiration their greatest work. Belief in God is therefore reasonable.

The moral man needs, then, higher ideals to rise above the average. He needs to live more fully. He needs to live especially to learn the value of religion and let it be manifested in his life more fully in intellectual power and social service. He needs to become spiritually minded, that is, conscious of God and communing with him, so that his soul will cry, "As the hart panteth after water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God."

"What Must the Citizen Do to Be Saved?"

M. A. Etzenhouser told a large audience in the tabernacle Wednesday morning, October 3, what the citizen must do to be saved.

A citizen, he says, is one who owes allegiance to and is entitled to the protection of a government. The citizen is not a subject. To say one is a subject implies that he has a lord or master to whom he owes personal allegiance; the term citizen implies membership by the tie of loyalty to his country or State with a reciprocal right to the enjoyment of the privileges and protection following from these. This right is granted not by the president or governor or mayor or any other official, but by every other citizen.

To be saved, the citizen must be brought to a place of safety, and preserved and kept there. The placards commonly seen on autos now: "Howdy. Half the road is yours," implies generosity, liberality, and that I will see that you have your rights. It implies also that you are not to infringe on any more of the road. The individualist says, "I will get my half." The road hog undertakes to acquire more. The socialist says, "I will see that he gets his half and there will be a half for me. If I see that your rights are secure, I need not concern myself about my share." The citizen carries a great social responsibility and realizes this is the only way the citizen can be saved.

"No man liveth unto himself; no man dieth unto himself." Every person's liberty and happiness depends upon another. If the citizen is to be saved he must substitute social consciousness for individual consciousness. Christ said that he who would save his life shall lose it, but "he who would lose his life for my sake and the gospel's sake shall find it." The citizen to be saved must interest himself actively in all of the social institutions.

Right to Be Well Born

There are two factors and only two factors which make up life—heredity and environment. The greatest right that should be vouchsafed to a citizen is the right to be well born—well born physically, well born mentally.

If the child is born with a physical or mental disadvantage he cannot do his part as a citizen, and therefore all of the rest are handicapped by just that much. If the citizen is to be saved he must see that every other citizen is well born.

This is one of the most serious problems confronting our citizenship to-day. United States census for the last fourteen years showed a thirty per cent increase in the general population, 100 per cent increase in the insane in institutions. Among the feeble-minded we find various stages: the imbecile, idiot, and moron, the latter class making up that large body we know as moral delinquents, prostitutes, paupers, and criminals.

The United States spends $150,000,000 annually on its dependents; more than the education in all of the state universities. Every criminal in New York costs an average of $1,000. At the present rate of increase it will take only three hundred years until every able citizen must spend all his time to support the subnormals. The birth rate among subnormals is said to be from two to six times greater than among normals.

The notorious Kallikak family is an example of what poor heredity will do in a few generations. The trait of feeble-mindedness traced back to one individual has spread to hundreds in six generations, the forms of subnormality evidencing themselves in feeble-mindedness, criminals, prostitutes, etc.

Preserve Good Traits

But good traits are passed on as well as bad ones. These should be preserved and the bad ones stamped out. To this end there are now twelve States in which there are to be found eugenic laws. These laws provide for education, segregation, and sterilization.

Next to the great right to be well born is the right to be born in a good environment. Our modern social movements want better homes, better schools, and better recreational advantages. In the home there must be better marriages and less divorce. Marriage must be considered a sacrament. The child is in the home 70 per cent of the time, therefore the home is a tremendous factor in the environment of the child.

A civic consciousness is being developed so that our communities are better places in which to live. Hygienic conditions are improving under the new social movement and sanitation laws now protect and preserve life as never before.

A citizen must become socially minded in order to be saved. He must think of the other fellow. "Love thy brother," we have been commanded, and this is the essence of salvation for the citizen.

"What Shall We Do to Save Zion?"

By Frederick M. Smith

Gathering over one hour before the services began, hundreds of people patiently waited to hear from the President of the church the message he had for them. Over four thousand people jammed the tabernacle and stood outside, endeavoring to catch a word from the speaker, President Frederick M. Smith, as he addressed the congregation Sunday night, October 7.

Introducing the President, Brother F. M. McDowell said that from one to whom much is given much is expected, but at all times is the Spirit of God necessary. He asked for the prayers and attention of the vast audience to the message of the speaker.

President Smith came forward and in a few brief words, stated that he had a message for his people but that it would not be long. He stated that he need not support his remarks by argument for he believed his audience was sufficiently versed in logic and in the gospel to do that for him.

Launching directly into his subject he asked, "What must Zion do to be saved?" It seems, he said, that the authors of the program were fearful lest Zion might not be saved, so they changed the reading of the subject to, "What must we do to save Zion?" Nevertheless, the President said, Zion will be redeemed, for Christ will come again and we must have a place to receive him.

What Zion Is

Zion is a land, characterized as a place where the people of God can find safety. But it is also a people, characterized by purity of heart. It is a people that has reached the acme of culture. Zion is also a condition in which the relation of man to man and group to group shall constitute a social order recognized by God.

This, said the speaker, distinguishes Zion from all other societies, this people from all other peoples.

No social reform will ever succeed that leaves out God, reiterated President Smith. Let us emphasize the social side of our program but not forget God.

For Zion to be saved it must be freed from all unfavorable forces, and such influences are not confined to extraneous powers. This people must heed the warning when it is called to their attention that forces are within our midst that are making for disintegration. We must recognize not only these forces, but also those which are necessary to release in order to overcome the unfavorable forces.

For Zion to be saved, it must be free from all maladjustments. These exist in the world to-day and are all around us. God has called upon this people to be instrumental in correcting these maladjustments.

Zion will be the product of religion made dynamic.

"Too long has it considered the task of the church to get the heart right and there leave it," said the President. "What good is it to get the kingdom of God in the heart unless there issues from the individual as well as from the group of which he is a part something that will make the kingdom of God a dynamic, living force in society? This means, if it means anything, that if Zion is to be saved we must first of all have an infusion of spirituality, and by spirituality I mean that state of society, that state of the individual that will recognize God in everything. Not only that will see God in the stars and in the planets and in the great systems of the universe, not only that will see God in the rocks of the earth, but that will see God looking out of the eyes of every man and every woman whom we meet. For on such a foundation only can Zion be established."

Unless there be a spiritual foundation, the superstructure cannot be spiritual. From the ground up, every story must become more perfect. Religion must be upon a moral and an emotional basis.

Zion will be the cumulative product of the missionary work in the past. We would be enjoying a larger fruitage of the product if we had conserved it to a greater degree. Every member of the church must be a direct convert, or a child of a convert or a child of a child of a convert. That is why Zion is cumulative.

There are two ways in which the church loses, said President Smith. It may lose by death and by disaffection. Until these are offset by conversion and natural increase, the church goes behind. But we must do more. We must have an increase.

The surest and safest force is the natural increase, and up to the present, this has not been conserved.

Methods Differ

The methods of the firing line are not those of the recruiting station. The methods of converting the adult must necessarily be different than those of conserving our natural increase. Yet there are those who would tie our hands in our conservation work.

Missionary activities must be different from education in Zion. But God directs us in both lines.

"After conversion, what then, is the task?" asked the speaker. "Let us presume for a moment that we have throughout the world at large a missionary force which stands at the topnotch of efficiency, in which each man has been trained to the last limit—and by training I do not mean (and let us bear in mind this) I do not mean by training that a man has to be crammed in a theological seminary, I do not mean that a man should cram in a college or high school, but I do mean by having been permitted either in the field or outside of the field to have gone through that process of development that will bring about the topnotch of condition so that his uttermost talents will have been developed. Let us say then we have a missionary force which has developed to the topnotch of condition and they are bringing to us converts by the thousands, are we ready to receive them? Our task is only begun when we have brought people into this church, when we have pointed their faces towards Zion.

"The next question will be not only how can I get there and how can I live when I get there, but how can I help others to get there? We cannot drop them there, and furthermore when those converts have been assimilated, when they have been thoroughly taught the doctrine of the church and inducted into the kingdom by being inoculated, if you please, with the principles of the gospel, there still stands before us the task committed to us by Paul when he said, 'Let us go on to perfection.' And it becomes the duty of the church to carry those people unto perfection, and only an organization will do that. And where you have organization that is functioning to the good of the people, where you have an organization that is attempting to carry the people on to such a goal as that, you must have men trusted with power, but divinely so. And because there is power granted in organization and because there is centralization of power by your authority and by your vote, it is distinctly un-Christian to accuse those men of desiring to use that power maliciously."

We must not only be able to recognize the road over which we have come but be able to carry on one stage further. That cannot be carried on by preaching the gospel to the heathen all the time, either. It would be fallacious to put all our efforts in the missionary arm.

Balance of Authority

"It seems to me that there must be a balance of authority," the speaker continued. "There must be a disposition to recognize that we need experts in all lines, and it will not be for one line of experts to say that theirs is the most important thing in the church. Let me tell you something: I expect to see that as we develop more and more these lines of experts, experts in missionary work, experts in child development, experts in industry, experts in farming, and all that, it will become more and more difficult for the organization to control those various experts so that there shall be a steady forward movement in the church; but somewhere, somehow, there must lie in this organization, if Zion is to be redeemed, that power representing the authority of God as well as of the people that shall hold these various departments in perfect working order. Call that what you please, I care not, but it must be done if Zion is going to be saved. It is but to say in another form that unless we upon whom the responsibility of the care and nurture of the church has been laid by divine mandate can keep pace with the processes of proselytizing, then it means that there will be brought into our midst those accretions and additions which will not be perfectly assimilated."

Go through the records of our church and see our branches now that are torn apart because assimilation of converts has not been done, urged President Smith. Somebody must do that work. The specialist on the frontier must be satisfied to let other experts help.

To the highest degree possible in Zion we must have in operation those forces that safeguard and insure the development of our youth.

The children of each generation must reach a higher state of development than those of the preceding generation if the church is progressing. We must be interested in every activity of youth and adult. We ought not to have to plead for the means to protect Zion and her youth, if this people see the problem as it is. We have to depend upon the priesthood and our teachers and an able corps of men and women. Every man and woman that comes to Zion is a potential teacher and a teacher in fact. Only as workers together with God can Zion be saved. President Smith continued:

"Never from the moment or the hour that I assumed the responsibility of the priesthood in this church, never from the moment that I accepted the responsible position of counselor to the President, and to a far less extent since I assumed the onerous task of leading this people, have I failed to recognize that human wisdom is insignificant and that human knowledge will not suffice, and that no man, I care not who he is, in this church can discharge his responsibility, I care not how small that responsibility is so far as his church office is concerned, unless he recognizes God as his partner in his task; and recognizing that it would simply be preposterous for me to say anything else than that I have striven to merit the association of God's Spirit to help me in that task. And in saying that I do not boast, because I know that every conscientious Latter Day Saint in the world is doing the same thing.

"There has been a little passage of scripture, part of which has been quoted so often within the last few months that it has become almost a slogan of this conference and I wish to repeat that slogan, but I wish to amplify it. We have said that unless we are humble and full of love we cannot do this work; but, brethren, to be humble and full of love is simply to be in a condition, not to do anything. And a second part of that quotation has in almost every instance been left out, 'having faith, and hope, and charity.' For what is being humble and full of love unless it is vitalized by faith, faith that looks to God as the partner in and as the director of our activities, who shows us the goal and who gives us the spirit that illuminates it; who shows us our task and gives us the courage and strength to accomplish it? And what is faith unless it also have its handmaiden 'hope'? hope that steps in where knowledge leaves off and helps to see beyond the veil that marks the limit of our finite eyes, hope that gives us the assurance of things not seen? And charity, which is the fruitage of the Spirit of God. We cannot be humble and full of love and be saved in Zion, unless we have vitalized that condition by also having faith, hope, and charity."

To be humble and full of love is but a start. With our eyes fixed on God and with the goal in sight, although the whole road may not be known, let us work together, not fight one with another.

Zion is to be redeemed. This people must accomplish it. The foundation is spirituality. For one hundred years that building has been going on. The last one hundred years has been a failure if that foundation is not laid.

Are we now building upon that foundation?

We must become such that the world will say, "Verily Let us not go up against Zion for her armies are terrible in the might of the Lord."

"When I became historian I was also given the same right, and the custom has been universal, when there was a department man or woman who did not hold the priesthood, the courtesy of ex officio rights was granted and rightfully so, that they should have voice and vote on this floor. You have either forgotten or else have deliberately failed to call attention to the fact that only a short time ago the Sunday school, Religio, and the Women's Department became departments—not auxiliaries—and acting strictly in harmony with that well-established custom of extending courtesy, your chairman felt that your well-being was being conserved by giving these people ex officio rights. It is well within your prerogatives to deny it—now—but if you do you will exclude from the floor less than half a dozen people because they are women, and I say Shame! on this conference if they do it."

Apostle J. F. Curtis wished to call attention to the statement of President Smith, which had been previously stated. He said he believed the people knew what his stand was. Now the conference should act.

Previous question on the matter of referring the resolution from the Seventies to the committee on representation was adopted. When the vote was taken, the motion to so refer was lost.

The Issue Discussed at Length

Elder E. E. Long opened the discussion on the main question.

Brother Long said he did not believe in extending ex officio vote for sentiment, but that the decision should be based on the rules as previously adopted by General Conference.

Apostle J. F. Garver arose to ask two questions: of the conference the first day?

2. If they are seated, does a vote at this time unseat them?

The chair was of the opinion these women had been seated, and

Secondly, that this action if it prevails now will unseat them at this conference.

Questions and Answers

The decision of the chair was appealed from by T. W. Williams. His reasons were that when the conference accepted the credentials committee report that it included only the report and that report had no reference to the ex officios. Brother Williams thinks the women should not bear the brunt of the argument. The chairman who previously extended ex officio votes should be the one to bear the responsibility.

The question was raised from the floor, By what authority are ex officios seated? Brother F. A. Russell, a member of the credentials committee, answered that the committee issued ex officio badges to all the ministry and to heads of departments on basis of a letter by the President, approving issuing of ex officio badges to executives.

He added that if any changes were to be made, the conference must do it.

Brethren G. T. Griffiths, A. Max Carmichael, Walter W. Smith, G. E. Harrington, L. G. Holloway, E. D. Bailey, F. A. Russell, and D. Macgregor got into the debate and it was some time before the situation could be untangled enough to permit a vote on the appeal.

Effect of Motion Decided by Vote

The decision of the chair was approved by the vote of the conference.

Church Secretary R. S. Salyards moved the following as a substitute for the motions before the conference:

"Resolved, That heads of departments, that is, the single head of each department in church work be seated as ex officio members of General Conference.

"In case of inability of the heads of departments to be present that they be permitted to designate their first assistant to be seated."

A. Max Carmichael Would Amend Substitute

A. Max Carmichael talked on the substitute. He said he noted that the speakers avoided hitting straight at the point. Specifically it is meant the Department of Women. Later the head of Orioles was mentioned. That meant one specific woman. He is in favor of ex officio rights for every woman who is a departmental head and all under conference appointment.

"Shall Women Be Cut Out?"

It all comes down, he said, to the question, Shall the women be cut out? He said that the future of the church depends upon the mothers. As for petticoat government, he is not agreeable to that either, but when it comes to the future of the church, the mothers must be depended upon. The Department of Women must be recognized. At the close of his talk he made the following amendment to the substitute:

Carmichael Would Extend Ex Officio List

"Resolved, to amend to cut out all after the words in case of and include the statement 'and all assistants, general executive members of these departments and unordained women missionaries.'"

Elder Putnam Fears Disregard of Resolutions

Elder Charles F. Putnam opposed the substitute and amendment. He said women have their place, but not the rights of the Melchisedec priesthood.

He feared the tendency was to disregard General Conference resolutions. Let's abide the law, he said, and let the rules determine who is ex officio.

Long Wants to Stay in Right Paths

Elder E. E. Long also opposed the substitute and the amendment. He said the church had departed from the right way and it must get back. But as the conference may decide, the speaker was willing to abide by the decision.

Sixty Days' Notice Insisted On

Elder J. E. Yates spoke in opposition, stating that the rules could not be changed without sixty days' notice.

The chair was asked to rule on whether or not the substitute was in order on account of no sixty days' notice having been given. The chair did not rule on the question.

Still a Question of Legality

Brother Frank F. Wipper stated that the body was in a quandary. The chair refused to make a ruling, yet it was not in harmony with law. He favored ruling down the substitute because, he said, it is not in harmony with the law. Called attention to the article (No. 614) in General Conference Resolutions:

"That the rules and orders of the Book of Rules may be amended at any General Annual Conference; provided that at least sixty days' notice of the effort to amend in manner and form be previously given in the Saints' Herald, the official organ of the church, before the opening day of such session, the same to be inserted, when adopted at the close of chapter 16, page 111, of Book of Rules and to apply to all parts of the book except the articles of incorporation a rule for the amendment of which is found in the articles themselves."

President F. M. Smith rose to ask the following question: F. M. Smith: "Does the brother hold that what he is reading there in the record of the articles of association has the slightest reference to what is before us now?"

F. F. Wipper: "Yes, sir."

F. M. Smith: "Certainly you are considerably wrong there, because the amendment to the articles of association has absolutely nothing to do with the rules of representation. It is an entirely different matter. It refers to the Articles of Incorporation of the church in the State of Iowa at some time in 1885, if I remember right; and it is quite beside the point to bring it here."

Resolution From Seventy Adopted

Motion to lay the entire matter on the table was lost, 179 for, 274 against.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was lost by a vote of 161 for to 269 against.

The substitute was lost by a vote of 175 for, to 269 against.

The original motion was carried by a vote of 273 for, 143 against.

Resolution Requiring Budget Observance

Brother Robert A. Lloyd of Saint Louis presented the following resolution:

"Whereas, the General Conference of 1914 adopted the following resolution that 'It is the sense of this body that no further debt be incurred by the Board of Trustees of Graceland College for such extensions as gymnasiums, dormitories, etc., until such proposed work of extension shall have first been presented to this body for its approval';

"Therefore, Be it resolved, that the annual expenditures of the several institutions under the fostering care of the church be limited to their respective budget amounts, approved of by the General Conference, and no debts be incurred."

Brother R. A. Lloyd, speaking to this resolution, thought it should be adopted almost unanimously. The conference passed upon the Graceland gymnasium project, to the speaker's satisfaction, but many were dissatisfied. To protect the leaders from excessive criticism, resolutions should be plain, so mistakes cannot be made. The resolution just introduced is designed to clarify the situation, he said. This provides for limiting expenditures to departmental budgets. The resolution would prevent moving out and spending money not provided for, and also protect our officers from criticism afterwards.

Question was asked whether these resolutions provided that the budgets of the various church institutions be brought before the conference each year for approval. The maker of the resolution said he so intended it.

Resolution Adopted With Little Debate

The previous question was moved and by a vote of 270 for, and 96 against was ordered.

The resolution was adopted by vote of the Conference.

Statement of Bishop A. Carmichael

That last resolution gave this body a wrong complex on this matter. We find this Board of Trustees working under that very plan for many years, and if I am not mistaken, have always come within their budget. The past year we were some $4,500 less than our budget that was allowed us. I want to make this explanation, that we have been working under the budget system all along, and have always had a balance left at the end of the year. We never have exceeded our budget. I would just like to say one thing, as chairman of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, if some one would offer me his check for $100,000 I would not be permitted to take it and spend it for the college, under that resolution. I could not spend any more than the budget; but it is too late, now.

Ordination of A. M. Chase as High Priest

The Quorum of High Priests reported favorably upon the question of ordaining Elder A. M. Chase to the office of high priest, which was recommended by the First Presidency.

It was moved to approve of the ordination of Brother Chase.

Elder Chase made the following statement:

"I have not much to say on the question but still want to do my work. If my work lies in that direction, I want to perform it: and for some years past it has seemed to me as though the urge in me has been more especially to minister along that line than in former years. If it is the will of the Master, I want to do my duty."

By vote the conference approved the ordination.

President Elbert A. Smith said that the ordinations of Elder Fulk as one of Presidents of Seventy and Elder Chase to office of high priest would be attended to at the sacrament service Sunday morning.

Final announcements were made and adjournment had at 4.20.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6

Saturday's business session was taken up with a cold, damp atmosphere settling down over Independence. Overcoats were very much in evidence and they were none too warm as this reporter can testify.

There was a large attendance, and all members of the leading quorums were present.

President F. M. McDowell called the meeting to order at 2 p. m.

Apostle D. T. Williams offered the opening prayer.

The minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

Resolution Taken Up

The special order of business as set Thursday was to be considered at this hour and President F. M. McDowell presented the order of the day.

These were the resolutions introduced Thursday:

Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the officers and delegates in General Conference assembled, hereby reaffirm our belief in, and adherence to, the principle of "common consent," as set forth above; and further,

We reaffirm that the right of nomination is inherent in membership in the church, and further

We express disapproval of any centralization of power in the hands of any administrative officer, or officers, whereby the expression of free choice and the deliberate will of the body may be invaded or abridged.

Substitute Offered

The following substitute was offered by Apostles J. A. Gillen and M. A. McConley:

Inasmuch as the question has arisen in the church over the meaning and application of the law of common consent; and

Inasmuch as the Church of Christ is a theocratic democracy, in which the will of God is executed by divinely appointed ministers, with the consent of the members; therefore, be it

Resolved that we, the officers and delegates of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in General Conference assembled, reaffirm our belief in, and our adherence to the principle of common consent as set forth in the Doctrine and Covenants, the Book of Mormon and the Holy Scriptures; and be it further

Resolved, that this conference affirms the right of the presiding officers of the general church, and of stake, district, and branch organizations, to nominate, in filling elective offices under their jurisdiction; and, be it further

Resolved, that this action shall in no way be interpreted as prohibiting concurrent nominations coming from the membership of the church, in the various conferences, and business meetings, general and local.

Apostle McConley Supports Substitute

Apostle M. A. McConley took the floor in defense of the resolution. He stated that we were all here because we were greatly interested in the affairs of this conference. He came from a foreign mission, open-minded, and with love in his heart, stated the speaker. He believes the law of common consent should be upheld. Because a former resolution clouded the situation, the new resolution attempts to clear up the matter.

Brother McConley reiterated his belief in the divinity of this gospel. The officers of this church are important in their capacity. Nothing should be done which would interfere with the function of them.

God has always helped the speaker, Brother McConley testified, in his efforts whenever help was sought. God will still help if we give him a chance.

Because a member of the Melchisedec priesthood may be a branch president, his advice or right of nomination should not be abridged, neither does his nomination detract from the inherent right of the people to nominate.

This clears up the matter, the speaker believed, and that this substitute resolution should be supported by the conference.

Apostle J. Frank Curtis Defends the Original Resolution

Apostle J. Frank Curtis arose to defend the original resolution. He said he hoped the matter would be settled now, that the condition of affairs demanded it.

The speaker believed the tendency in the past has been to depart from the three standard books on the matter of common consent.

In support of his statement he read the following document which the First Presidency submitted last winter to the conference in Zion:

The Proposed Legislation for Zion

"To the Conference in Zion; Greeting: In the judgment of the Presidency the time has come for a more definite coordination of the departments in Zion, and a more uniform method of procedure in selecting officers. Most of the locals in Zion have adopted what is known as Form Four, with certain necessary modifications. The way would seem clear then for action by the conference, and we suggest the adoption of the following rules of procedure:

"(1) The heads of the general departments of the church and the pastor in Zion in consultation with the First Presidency shall nominate the heads of departments in Zion, subject to ratification by the conference in Zion.

"(2) The four department heads in Zion shall then in consultation with the pastor in Zion select the heads of the departments in the various congregations, the pastor in each congregation to be duly consulted. These selections shall be presented to the conference for approval.

"(3) In each local congregation the four local heads of departments together with the pastor shall appoint all subordinate officers and teachers."

Substitute Proposed at Independence

He then read the following which was offered as a substitute at the conference in Zion.

"Resolved, That the Saints in Zion in conference assembly shall, at the annual meeting in January, elect the heads of departments of Zion. The right of nomination lies primarily with the body because of membership, and not with any individual or part of the body by virtue of office, but we hereby extend the heads of the general departments of the church and pastor in Zion, in consultation with the First Presidency, the privilege of also submitting, by their joint action, nominations for these offices.

"Local departments in Zion shall continue to hold meetings to elect local department officers, and to act upon questions of local department concern. Rules and regulations for the conduct of such meetings shall be determined by the local departments, as has been their privilege heretofore."

He challenged anyone to say that this substitute prevented the presiding officers from functioning in their rightful place.

Rights Abrogated

Brother Curtis said that in connection with the above citation, the President of the church said that if the nomination by the Presidency and stake president were not accepted by the people, that the nomination would be referred to the Presidency and the stake president again. The people would not be consulted, said the speaker.

If the proposition had passed the local conference, the Presidency would appoint the head of the departments of the stakes and they in turn would nominate local officers. The people would not have had any say in the matter.

An amendment to the substitute was later offered at the conference in Zion and supported by the presidency:

Amendment Offered in Zion

"Resolved to amend the substitute by striking out all after the word 'Resolved' and inserting the following:

"The heads of the general departments of the church and the pastor in Zion in consultation with the First Presidency shall nominate the heads of the departments in Zion, subject to the ratification by the conference in Zion.

"The department heads in Zion shall then after consultation with the pastor in Zion and the First Presidency and after due consultation with the pastor of each congregation involved, nominate the heads of departments in the various congregations, subject to ratification by the conference."

Here the Presidency attempted to take exclusive right of nomination, the speaker asserted. The people must be protected. The rights of common consent must prevail, he said.

After careful consideration by the local conference in Zion the speaker said he was glad to note the substitute was adopted. Both motions supported by the Presidency were defeated.

Resolutions Indicate Views of Administration

Why were these resolutions introduced by the Presidency? asked Brother Curtis. It was not alone in Zion that the attempt was made to obtain control of the nominations, but in the Kansas City Stake the same authority was sought. Brother Curtis read the following from the Herald for December 6, 1922.

Kansas City Stake Recommendation

"Therefore, we the Stake Presidency, recommend that our procedure in the Kansas City Stake will be as follows: That the stake presidency appoint the superintendent of Sunday school for the stake, subject to the approval of the head of the department of Sunday school and the stake conference; also the field worker for the stake for the Religio, subject to the approval of the head of the department and stake conference; also the organizer of the Department of Women in the stake subject to the approval of the head of the department and stake conference. Also the chorister of the stake subject to the approval of the head of the Department of Music and stake conference. With the stake presidency, these appointments will constitute a coordinating committee in the stake.

"We also recommend that the pastors of the various churches nominate the superintendent of the school, Religio, and the representative of the Department of Women and the chorister, subject to the approval of the stake coordinating committee and the stake conference, and in turn these local appointees will form a coordinating committee in each of the churches for the conducting of the local work, and they will appoint all the associate officers of the departments, subject to the approval of the stake coordinating committee."

Not a New Tendency

Here is no opportunity for common consent. The effort to abridge the rights of common consent was attempted in Zion and in Kansas City, Brother Curtis said.

In 1892 an effort was made once before to deprive the people of their right. The speaker called attention to the event by referring to SAINTS' HERALD, as cited in the preambles to the resolution printed yesterday.

He also cited two sections in Doctrine and Covenants, section 25, par. 1, and sec. 27: 4.

"1. Behold, I say unto you, that you shall let your time be devoted to the studying of the scriptures, and to preaching, and to confirming the church at Colesville; and to performing your labors on the land, such as is required, until after you shall go to the west, to hold the next conference; and then it shall be made known what you shall do. And all things shall be done by common consent in the church, by much prayer and faith; for all things you shall receive by faith. Amen."

"4. Thou shalt not leave this place until after the conference, and my servant Joseph shall be appointed to preside over the conference by the voice of it, and what he saith to thee thou shalt tell. And again, thou shalt take thy brother Hiram Page between him and thee alone, and tell him that those things which he hath written from that stone are not of me, and Satan deceived him; for, behold, these things have not been appointed unto him; neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church contrary to the church covenants, for all things must be done in order and by common consent in the church, by the prayer of faith."

Here he called attention to Book of Mormon, Mosiah 13: 35, 36.

"Now it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right;

"Therefore this shall ye observe, and make it your law to do your business by the voice of the people."—Mosiah 13: 35, 36.

The responsibility of this church should not rest upon the shoulders of any man or group of men, but upon the people. The people will be held responsible for their actions.

He then read an editorial entitled:

"Nominations to office," by late President Joseph Smith, HERALD of July 16, 1892, pages 454, 455.

Parts of this editorial were quoted in the preamble to the resolution introduced Thursday by Brother Curtis.

People Must Have and Use Rights

If the people refused to accept the nomination of the Presidency, (as might be the case) then the people would be without an officer. They could not elect their own officers, said the speaker.

The three standard books of the church do not allow for such actions as have been attempted recently, said Brother Curtis. He appealed for the conference to support the resolution that was first introduced. In former years many went contrary to the laws of the church, and the result was disastrous.

Views of Joseph Smith

Missionaries in charge and district presidents should have no exclusive right to nominate according to the late Joseph Smith, said the speaker. The people have been given the right of nomination, and it must be protected.

Calling attention to an editorial in SAINTS' HERALD, 1873, p. 650, (quoted from in the preambles to the resolution published yesterday) written by Joseph Smith, he stated that the responsibility rested with the people and not upon one man.

The resolution as offered is in harmony with the laws of this church, stated Brother Curtis. This resolution will correct recent attempts to abridge the right of the people, if it passes.

The church has always stood for the right of the people to nominate; why then should a change be made now? After ninety years of taking care of themselves, have the people now become incapable of choice and decision? The speaker believes the people are just as capable as ever. He desires returning to the "old paths."

Joseph Smith, the Seer's Views

Reading from testimonies in the Temple Lot suit, the speaker said that Joseph the Seer never attempted to take the rights of the people away. The Utah Church did, after leaving in 1844.

From another editorial in the SAINTS' HERALD (Dec. 25, 1895, page 821, verse 42) which was probably written by Joseph Smith, the speaker read that personal influence might lead astray the majority, but the law provides for protecting the minority. Truth will prevail.

Another editorial, (SAINTS' HERALD, volume 42, page 179) by the late Joseph Smith, stated that when an act of the President is disapproved by the people, they should veto the act. And if he persists in going against the will of the people, he should resign and allow the people to elect another.

Plea for "Faith of Our Fathers"

W. W. Blair in the Temple Lot Suit, page 144, stated that the people of Utah are deprived of the right of nomination but that in the Reorganized Church it is different. And, the speaker added, this should be the action to-day. Sustain the original motion, and be true to the "faith of our fathers."

Apostle D. T. Williams Supports Substitute

Apostle D. T. Williams got the floor though it was a close decision as some dozen others were clamoring for recognition at the same moment. He said:

Some things are nice and some are not quite so nice but that is the way with General Conferences. We must have the bitter in order to enjoy the sweet.

Brother D. T. Williams believes in the right of common consent as much as anyone, he affirmed.

Much has been said about nominations. They have followed a custom for years and probably never will be changed.

Rights of Priesthood Ought to Be Respected

Have the priesthood any more authority than the people? Take away the priesthood and the membership can never save the world. Now the Government of the United States rests upon the right of common consent, yet the President has the right of nomination. The people elect a representative and that representative is given certain rights, among them the right of nomination.

The President of the church should be able to use his divine authority in nomination.

Presidents of Seventy Nominate

The other day the Seven Presidents of Seventy presented a name in nomination and the conference accepted. Did the people question this right of nomination? Yet the right of common consent prevailed.

The substitute resolution protects the rights of common consent, and does not cloud the issue.

Help Wanted

Wanted: Man and wife, who have no children, to live with elderly widow, who has an eighty-acre farm with good house, stock, and improvements in northern Missouri. For some one who has no capital and who desires to get a start in farming this would seem to be a favorable opportunity. Anyone interested write to Mrs. M. F. Mitchell, Saline, Missouri. Benjamin R. McGuire.

Where Is C. E. Rebert?

Should this come to the notice of C. E. Rebert, whose last known address was Saint Louis, Missouri, he is requested to immediately get in communication with Floyd Rockwell, 1725 Dakota Street, Dayton, Ohio.

One-Day Meeting

At Huron Center Branch, five and one half miles east, three miles north, and three fourths mile east of Kinde, Michigan, October 21. Vera Richards, secretary.

Institute in Southern New England

At Brockton, Massachusetts, October 27 and 28, an institute session of Southern New England. First session at 2.30 p. m. No reports required. Susan E. Sinclair, secretary.

Conference Notices

Gallands Grove, at Cherokee, Iowa, November 2 to 4. E. R. Butterworth, president.

Kewanee, at Rock Island, Illinois, October 27 and 28. There will be given a musical in charge of the district chorister, Friday evening previous, at 8 p. m. Important matters will be considered at this conference, such as change of representation. Ralph W. Farrell, president.

K F I X

Broadcasted from the new studio of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Independence, Missouri. Wave length, two hundred and forty meters.

A rather unusual program was broadcasted Sunday evening at six o'clock from Radio Station K F I X in that those participating were conference visitors whose homes are in widely scattered parts of the United States and Canada. The program consisted of a vocal solo by B. H. Doty, of Traverse City, Michigan, both words and music written by himself; vocal solo by David Dowker, recently of Los Angeles, now of Des Moines, Iowa; an Indian song in the Indian language by Elder Jonathan Koshiway, native Otoe Indian, of Oklahoma; soprano solo by Mrs. Nell Atkinson Kelley, of Omaha, Nebraska; baritone solo by H. Arthur Koehler, of Ontario, Canada; soprano and contralto duet by Miss Helen Bootman and Mrs. C. E. Wight, of Lamoni, Iowa; and a contralto solo by Mrs. Cordelia McCormick, of Denver, Colorado. The sermon was by Apostle J. F. Curtis, with Patriarch John F. Martin offering the prayer.

Next Sunday's program will also be made up of numbers by conference visitors. Among other numbers will be one or more whistling numbers by Brother William Paterson, of Australia, who is very successful in imitating birds of his native country. Brethren H. Arthur Koehler and John F. Sheehy have promised to sing one of their famous duets, and J. Gerritt Juergens, of Topeka, Kansas, will sing. Other numbers have not yet been arranged.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri. Obituary notices of less than 100 words printed free; a charge of 50 cents for each 100 additional words or fraction, will be made. Marriage notices, $1 per 100 words. Notices for publication in the Miscellaneous department must be in hands of editors not later than Tuesday morning preceding date of issue. Branch news should be in on Monday if possible.

Not Headed for Autocracy

It has been the opinion of many that the church is headed for autocracy because the president of a branch is given the right to nominate. He is only exercising the right that any eight-year-old member possesses. All the substitute provides for is to extend an equal courtesy to officers.

Degrees of Centralization

We talk about centralization of power. It is a matter of degree. There is centralization of power in every officer to some degree. The only question, for the conference to decide, is to what degree shall there be centralization. Without it there could be no government.

So long as we have the right to refuse to sustain the President of the church, we have the right of common consent.

Recognize Our Theocracy

The speaker would not vote to put autocratic power in the hands of the President of the church, because no man is good enough for such a privilege.

But if we are going to have a democracy we must also not forget that God has provided for a theocracy.

At this point President F. M. McDowell asked Brother Williams to yield that adjournment might be taken promptly at 4 p. m. Apostle Williams yielded the floor and will be heard again Monday. Song, "This God is the God we adore" was sung and dismissal prayer by J. A. Tanner.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 8

The second week of conference opened in the business session Monday afternoon with a very large assembly gathered in the tabernacle tent and everyone intensely interested in the questions under discussion.

Yesterday was a memorable day with a very large attendance at all services. There seems an earnest desire on the part of each official and delegate to settle the problems before the church and to settle them once and for all, if that were possible. But for the Sunday all unite in worship and devotion in a quiet spirit.

The various quorums meet each morning and the discussions held in the quorum meetings tend to clear the atmosphere and crystallize opinion so that a decision can be gotten earlier on the conference floor.

On Monday the weather had cleared up and the day was beautiful. The sides of the tent had been taken off and the warm October sun made for cheerfulness again even though the intense earnestness of the debate indicated deep concern in the hearts of many.

All members of the leading quorums were present.

President F. M. McDowell called the meeting to order at 2 p. m. and prayer was offered by Elder Orman Salisbury. Minutes of previous session were read and approved.

Apostle D. T. Williams Resumes Argument for Substitute

At the conclusion of Saturday's business session Apostle D. T. Williams had the floor and adjournment was taken with the understanding that he should have the floor again Monday. The general question under discussion is that of "common consent," its definition and scope in our church work.

The original resolution were brought in by Apostle J. F. Curtis. A substitute was offered by Apostle M. A. McConley Saturday afternoon, and these are now being discussed.

Chairman McDowell Likes Spirit of Debate

The chairman at the outset said:

"From all sides there comes an expression of appreciation of the attitudes of the speakers on Saturday. I speak the sentiments of the entire audience when I say that we fully appreciate the manner in which these men presented their arguments and sincerely trust that this spirit may continue throughout our discussion. If it does we will have no fear but that the right will triumph."

A Decision Needed Now

Apostle D. T. Williams believes that when the decision is finally had it will be for the good of the church. All have a common starting ground, for all believe in "common consent." There is only a difference in agreeing on the method through which common consent can be made manifest.

Brother Williams believes that the people should rule but thinks they can rule through their representative as well as in the mass.

While the late revered President Joseph Smith had been quoted and the quotations used by a previous speaker to argue against the substitute, Brother Williams read the same editorials to indorse the position set forth in the substitute.

We are not asking that any one man or set of men have the sole right to nominate, he said. Simply asking that the officers of the church have the right to nominate concurrently with the people. Brother Williams believes there are some rights inherent in the priesthood and he says the substitute seeks only to preserve these rights.

Some Rights to Nominate Inherent in Priesthood

The rights to nominate to priesthood are inherent in priesthood, and if you take that away, the priesthood itself will soon be destroyed.

He quoted Doctrine and Covenants 122: 8 as follows:

"If they will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized districts, or conferences, to the standing ministry, under the presidency of the church; observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, and also evangelical ministers, then will those officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored; the differences between the quorums be healed, confidence be restored and good will and peace come to the people as a cherishing fountain."

Apostle Williams said there are other nomination rights than those inherent in membership. He said that if you claim that all nomination rights are inherent in the membership the above quoted section means not what it states.

Seventies Nominate

He called attention to the fact that the seventy nominate to certain positions and that it only takes the vote of the people to make the election complete and legal.

The original resolution does not cover all the ground, he insists. It does not make the matter clear enough. If priesthood does not have some inherent rights of nomination, then priesthood has no meaning.

Pure Democracy Impossible

He said that the principle of delegated authority is the basis of our government. That a pure democracy where every man has his full say is impossible, owing to our numbers. Necessity forces a system of representation, and when the right is given another to act in one's stead, then common consent is had in the acts of the representative.

Brother Williams said that when the Kansas City Stake voted to allow their presiding officers to do the nominating that it was given with their common consent. He could see no autocracy in that. He cited the system in our government where a representative speaks for a million people. Why not cry at that as being autocracy questioned Brother Williams.

He introduced the following editorial from the pen of Joseph Smith which appeared in the Herald of December 25, 1895:

"The government of the church is of a twofold character, and may be said to be a theocratic democracy. [That's just what the substitute says it is.] Power of direction and decision originates and rests with God primarily. [He didn't put it there with the people.] Any commandment or rule given of God must be obeyed. [We all recognize that, my brethren; recognize it well.] In all the business matters the church is left to the control of the majority, the voice of the majority being obtained by any method that may be agreed upon or obtained among the church or churches. The common consent is supposed to be in the expressed will of the majority when so obtained. All may not be present when the question is upon which common consent is desired, but all having an opportunity to be made acquainted with the subject matter upon which such consent is desired or agreed in the consent of the majority of those present when the expression is taken."

I want to get to the last paragraph. We pass two paragraphs:

"There may be serious faults in the method of securing common consent." [Joseph Smith himself says that as far as the method was concerned there may have been serious faults in it then.]

"And the way suggested in paragraph three might secure a greater oneness. We have seen it suggested in specific cases but never as a rule before; and it is possibly worthy of thought. In the meantime we shall be under the necessity to accept the situation and do the best we can to assimilate the various elements there are in the body until the degree of unity desired is effected. This will come in time, but it is likely there will for a long while be 'many men of many minds.'"

He warned that when the cry of democracy is raised, to remember that in the governmental democracy there is also the principle of representation.

Summing up Brother William's thought that the substitute recognized both the theocracy and democracy of our faith while the original resolution recognized only the democracy and shut God out.

(To be continued next week.)

South Sea Island Club Organized

The South Sea Island Club was organized Friday night, October 5, by seventeen charter members. These consisted of three native South Sea Islanders, and the remaining number were returned missionaries.

The purpose of the club is to assist the Island mission and returned missionaries. The native language will also be kept alive in Zion.

Another meeting will be held sometime during the present week.

CONFERENCE NEWS

SIXTY-NINTH CONFERENCE CLOSSES IN WONDERFUL GOOD FELLOWSHIP

Men Are Going to Their Fields With Hopeful Hearts and New Vision of Service

Priesthood Prayer Meeting, Sunday, October 14

The pentecostal spirit which descended upon the closing business meeting of the conference continued with the priesthood prayer meeting Sunday afternoon. True, it was not accompanied by an outpouring of the gifts. It was a spirit of unity, of reconciliation and power. The lower auditorium of the Stone Church was filled to capacity with members of the priesthood, general and local. President Frederick M. Smith offered the opening prayer, the way having been well prepared by spiritual congregational singing led by Brother Albert N. Hoxie. The humility and childlike faith and simple dignity of the prayer touched the hearts of the priesthood and many of them were in tears.

Statement of President Elbert A. Smith

A season of prayer followed in which many petitions were offered and thanksgiving expressed. President Elbert A. Smith then led the period of testimony saying: "Yesterday morning was low tide with me and I presume also with many of you. The tide of spiritual power was away out and I was empty. In my weakness I said to some of the brethren that if conditions were to go on as they seemed to stand, it did not seem to me that I could continue. I thought about my two boys, the older of them now in Kansas University, president of the L. D. S. Association of boys and girls at that place, going to school there with Brother William Fligg's son, Walter W. Smith's son, and a group of others who are endeavoring to prepare themselves for the work of life. I recalled how when these two boys were very small I went into the upper court of the Temple in Kirtland and gave them to God; but in my weakness yesterday I said that if we must continue to quarrel during the year and have a titanic struggle in each conference, what courage could I have to advise and direct them toward church work? But before night I asked God to forgive me. If they can stand upon the Mount of Transfiguration where I have stood, it will be worth their pain to go through Gethsemane. The change in attitude of soul which came over the priesthood during yesterday's closing business session was the most wonderful that I have ever seen. The angel of clear vision seemed to touch our eyes and clear them for the time being at least from that astigmatism which caused us to see our brethren in a distorted attitude and see back of their every movement a crooked purpose. We see each other better now. The spirit of love is beginning to prevail, and I think we are ready for a year of united and constructive work. The tide has come in again, and to-day I feel that there is nothing that I have that God cannot have if he wishes it, and I feel that if you continue under the spirit that was with you yesterday afternoon, and the President of the church continues under the spirit that was with him, and above all if I can continue under the spirit that I am under, I am willing if necessary to go with you to the gates of hell."

Statement of President F. M. McDowell

During the meetings many splendid testimonies were borne, among them the following by Brother F. M. McDowell:

"My soul is not so large as that of Brother Elbert's and consequently cannot reach the height or the depth. I do feel, however, that it has reached both of these extremities during the conference, sometimes almost within an hour. Needless to say the conference has been a severe strain for me. I came to it exhausted as a result of the work incident to the Young People's Convention, which was followed by a series of eight reunions. Added to this, four weeks of conference work found me in many respects illy prepared for the unusual strain of yesterday. I am glad that it is over, however, and can see brighter days ahead.

"At the outset of conference, I suggested that it be a praying conference. As far as I am concerned, I wish to say that I never have prayed harder in my life. I believe my prayers have been answered. God has helped me in presiding, and he has helped you to help me in this work. This I know by the love which you have shown me during the sessions of the conference.

"Many times in my life I have come to the parting of the ways. On each of these occasions, however, one path was opened for me and others blocked. Each time I have moved forward in the open path, and each time I received God's blessing for this faith. There is now a path open before me, and it is the path marked 'Forward.' I am going to take this path and feel certain of the results. I love you men from the bottom of my heart and wish to work with you. If at any time you feel that I am not carrying my share of the load, I hope you will be frank enough to tell me. I believe I am willing to do anything that I ask any of you to do or to go where I ask you to go. I know something of the price of such consecration, since I have been away from my family for nearly six months now with the exception of a very few days. I sincerely ask your faith and prayers in my behalf. I desire above all other things to play the game with you. May God help us to this end."

Statement of President F. M. Smbith

It is unfortunate that other testimonies were not recorded and preserved for our readers. At the close President Frederick M. Smith made this statement:

"On completing the course at Graceland College I offered my services to the church and was appointed. On going to the Bishop's agent for funds to go to the field I learned the treasury was empty, and from other men under appointment I learned that family allowances were months behind. So I determined I would not put another family on the list, and I went into eastern Ohio and went to work for the Central District Printing and Telegraph Company. In the year I worked for them I found opportunity for advancement, and would have had chance to enter the engineering department of the company, which would have been to my tastes; but I resigned to accept position on the faculty of Graceland College, where I worked for a year, then accepted a position on the HERALD. From the time I accepted the position on the college faculty I have felt I was working for the church, and it has always been my concern to qualify for better service.

"I am conscious of my limitations; and sensing the great responsibilities of the position I occupy, I wonder why I have been chosen for the task.

"As president of the high priesthood I feel the responsibility of directing the entire priesthood of the church, but that is outweighed by the great desire I feel to be of some service or assistance to every man holding the priesthood. Most men feel a bit ashamed of manifestations of tenderness, and it may be that this has at times unconsciously caused me to build a barrier not understood by you men. I do feel a tender regard for the men of the priesthood, and if between now and the time when I am called on to pass to others my present official responsibilities I can be of some service to every man in the priesthood and help to make the burdens lighter, or help him in some small way to prepare for greater service, I shall feel I have done a great work. I desire to be of such service, and want your prayers that I may be."

President Elbert A. Smith closed the service with this prayer:

"O Lord, as we approach thy throne of grace our hearts are filled with two great desires. First, we have the desire to offer thee all the praise and thanksgiving that our souls are capable of expressing. We thank thee for the power of thy great love manifested. We thank thee for this almost incredible thing that we who thought ourselves estranged suddenly find ourselves to be friends, with Jesus in our midst. Our other great desire now is to move out and glorify thy name and build up thy cause. Help us, Lord, to do this thing. Thy blessing now we call down upon this thy priesthood. Thy blessing we invoke to be upon them. Bless them, Lord, in their fields and in their homes. Fill their hands with blessings for other people. Fill also their hearts and their lives. Let us go now in peace, we pray, and cement the bonds of brotherhood that they may never again be riven asunder. Be with us this year and with us when we shall meet again, in Jesus' name. Amen."

After the close of the meeting the men remained for a long time shaking hands, making up differences, pledging each other to mutual support and to constructive and affirmative work during the coming year. The men of the mission field yet remaining in Independence then separated for their various fields, most of them with happy hearts, while the local priesthood prepared themselves to take up the duties of another year's work in Zion.

Doings of the Conference in Brief

The sixty-ninth General Conference of the church opened Monday, October 1, and closed Saturday, October 13, shortly after 6 p. m.

Lengthy speeches and debate of the first week shortened as time went on.

The desire of most members of the conference to close on time hastened business consideration the last few days.

The opening and closing days of conference were accompanied by rainy weather, but the intervening days were fair and comfortable.

Preaching services were of a high order, and the prayer services were a joy to all.

The athletic and social sides of the conference were not ignored. Special events, receptions and dinners, marked the schedule on many days.

Opening business session dealt with adoption of General Conference reports.

President F. M. Smith was unable to attend second session on account of illness. The time at the meeting was taken up with a number of short speeches.

The committee on the "Memorial to the Martyrs" was discontinued and referred to the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric.

Vacancies in the Children's Home Board were filled by adopting recommendations from the Order of Bishops and the Department of Women.

Trustees of Graceland College were reelected.

The report on the Graceland gymnasium was approved.

Resolutions on Common Consent were debated for days, and as finally amended and adopted provided that nomination rights are inherent in the people and also that nominations may be presented concurrently by the presiding officers.

A resolution to abolish forms one to five was laid on the table.

A limit of twenty minutes was placed upon speeches, Wednesday, October 10.

Time limit set for introduction of new business placed at Thursday, October 11, at 2 p. m.

A resolution favoring advertising in the church publications was referred to the Board of Publication.

Respect for Sabbath observance was reaffirmed.

Church institutions were limited in their expenditures to their budgets. Later this matter was referred to the Order of Bishops.

General Conference resolutions 1916-1923 will be published in supplement to the present book of resolutions.

Ex officio vote was denied all not holding the priesthood during the present conference. It was then decided to refer the matter to the committee on representation, recommending favorable action in extending ex officio rights to unordained missionaries, department heads, and vice heads.

Resolutions were adopted approving the work of the Near East Relief.

Upon recommendation of the Order of Bishops, an auditorium was ordered built, and to be ready for next General Conference.

The auditorium plans are in the hands of a committee composed of two members each from the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Order of Bishops acting in conjunction with the Church Architect.

President F. M. Smith made the statement that a speech delivered by him some time ago on "Loyalty" was ill-timed and that another time should have been chosen for delivering it.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson introduced a resolution asking the President to retract the sermon referred to. The resolution was tabled.

Two elders were ordered ordained to the Quorum of Seventy.

Opening of next General Conference will be April 6, 1925.

Four new high priests were named and ordination ordered.

Needs of the Graphic Arts Department were referred to the budget committee.

Resolutions on songs were referred to the Department of Music.

Missionary appointments must be approved by the conference, but appointments may be made during the interim of conferences.

Members of Twelve, Bishopric, and stake presidents were barred by resolution from membership on High Council.

All speeches on "common consent" will be published in the Conference Minutes, and a copy will be sent each subscriber to the HERALD.

The budget report from the Order of Bishops was adopted.

The appropriation committee was enlarged to include two members of the First Presidency and two members of the Quorum of Twelve.

A resolution on stewardships was unanimously adopted. Every member of the church is called upon to enter upon the stewardship basis.

The Bishop requested that everyone so arrange the coming year's budget that a surplus will be left.

Releases from the Seventy were concurred in.

All officers and leading quorums sustained.

Elder S. A. Burgess was made historian to replace Elder W. W. Smith, who was released for educational work.

General church appointments were approved.

Conference receipts were $2,242.65 and expenses about $3,000, of which $1,200 were for new materials which will be used again.

Business Minutes

and

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 9

The question of Common Consent was up for discussion all of Monday and Tuesday.

Apostle T. W. Williams spoke at length in defense of the original resolutions and was answered by President Elbert A. Smith and Apostle J. F. Garver.

These speeches as well as the speeches of Apostle J. F. Curtis, in favor of the original motion, and Apostles D. T. Williams and M. A. McConley, in support of the substitute, will be published in detail in the 1923 Conference Minutes and a copy of the Minutes will be sent to each Herald subscriber, hence we are not taking any space for them here.

Extended summaries of the same speeches appeared in the Daily Herald, many copies of these having been sent to subscribers all over the world. Unfortunately the demand has absorbed all the copies published.

Late Tuesday afternoon, both sides having stated in the debate that they were willing to indorse the idea of common consent, provided that both democracy and theocracy be recognized in their respective and admitted fields, an amendment was brought in and the conference by previous question ordered the vote.

The entire record now reads as follows, leaving out the preambles to the original motion and substitute:

The Three Propositions

The original resolution:

"Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the officers and delegates in General Conference assembled, hereby reaffirm our belief in, and adherence to, the principle of 'common consent,' as set forth above; and further,

"We reaffirm that the right of nomination is inherent in membership in the church, and further

"We express disapproval of any centralization of power in the hands of any administrative officer, or officers, whereby the expression of free choice and the deliberate will of the body may be invaded or abridged."

The Substitute

The substitute reads:

"Resolved that we, the officers and delegates of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in General Conference assembled, reaffirm our belief in, and our adherence to the principle of common consent as set forth in the Doctrine and Covenants, the Book of Mormon, and the Holy Scriptures; and be it further

"Resolved, that this conference affirms the right of the presiding officers of the general church, and of stake, district, and branch organizations, to nominate, in filling elective offices under their jurisdiction; and, be it further

"Resolved, that this action shall in no way be interpreted as prohibiting concurrent nominations coming from the membership of the church, in the various conferences, and business meetings, general and local."

The Amendment

The amendment reads:

"We desire to move an amendment to the substitute by striking out all after 'further' at the end of the third paragraph and adding:

"Resolved, that this conference affirms the right of the membership to nominate in filling all elective offices in church, stake, district, and branch organizations in the various conferences and business meetings, general and local; and be it further

"Resolved, that this action shall in no way be interpreted as denying the right of presiding officers to present to the appropriate conferences or business meetings concurrent nominations for the filling of such elective offices."

The amendment carried by an overwhelming vote.

The substitute as amended carried.

This Is the Resolution as Adopted

"Resolved that we, the officers and delegates of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in General Conference assembled, reaffirm our belief in, and our adherence to the principle of common consent as set forth in the Doctrine and Covenants, the Book of Mormon, and the Holy Scriptures; and be it further

"Resolved, that this conference affirms the right of the membership to nominate in filling all elective offices in church, stake, district, and branch organizations in the various conferences and business meetings, general and local; and be it further

"Resolved, that this action shall in no way be interpreted as denying the right of presiding officers to present to the appropriate conferences or business meetings concurrent nominations for the filling of such elective offices."

New Motion Quickly Tabled

Apostle John W. Rushton made the following motion:

"Resolved that this General Conference expresses disapproval of the centralization of power by any administrative officer or officers and maintains the right of full expression of the will of the people."

Motion to lay this on the table was made and by vote carried.

Resolution on Forms Tabled

The following resolution was offered by Elder James E. Yates:

"Whereas, certain departmental procedure known as forms one to five which were introduced throughout the church during the conference year have proven to be a very disturbing matter in many sections of the church, and a fruitful source of trouble and misunderstanding and even disunion in places, and

"Whereas, an effort has been made to install these various and now very notorious forms throughout the church without presentation to the conference to get the consent of the conference, and

"Whereas, these forms are not only radical innovations, but certain provisions dangerous to the best interests of the church, as well as positive invasions of the law of common consent, and

"Whereas, said forms, with their multiplicity of manager heads, subordinate heads, and supervisors, are arranged in such a manner as to prevent the people from making choice in nominating persons for offices in the church and in all departmental work, and

"Whereas, we believe that such a system as these forms introduce is not compatible with the true gospel liberty nor conducive to the promotion of the best spiritual fellowship, and

"Whereas, said forms, both in the manner of their presentation and in their content are out of agreement with the law, therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the whole of said system be by this conference abolished, and that all general superintendents of recognized church departments shall be selected by the people in General Conference assembly without restrictions as to who may nominate."

Moved to lay on the table. Motion prevailed with no debate on the resolution.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10

The Wednesday morning business session opened in a calm after the stormy sessions of the last few days. The table for the first time since Thursday was clear and the conference was ready to take up new business.

All members of the leading quorums were present, and President Elbert A. Smith was in the chair.

The opening prayer was by Elder G. E. Harrington.

Minutes of Tuesday were read and approved.

The chair recognized Elder J. R. Lambert who had asked to speak to a question of personal privilege.

J. R. Lambert Expresses Views

Brother Lambert said he had desired to speak before, but had had no opportunity in view of the circumstances. He expressed appreciation of the opportunity offered him by the Presidency to speak.

He desired to explain why he had changed his attitude on the Decatur District resolutions. He had been quoted during the conference debates of the past few days, on his attitude toward the action in the Decatur District. He accepted entire responsibility for his change in attitude. He said that the mistake made at the time of the action by the Decatur District, was that the membership was deprived of right of nominations, although the motive was to better existing conditions.

We must draw a distinction between the principle and the exercise of that principle. So a principle may be right yet it may be abused in practice.

Our constitution is divine and when the Lord did not specify in the matter of nominations, it should be left with the people. The speaker believes that officers have the right to nominate to priesthood authority and also to advise the people—but the people must not be deprived of their right to nominate.

After the conclusion of Brother Lambert's talk, President Elbert A. Smith said:

Statement by Elbert A. Smith

"The speech of Brother Lambert reminds us that in years past we have had our troubles, but it shows that wise men change. They may modify, and if we all are willing to modify we may sometimes get together. As I said Sunday in my sermon, I believe in God; I believe in this people; I believe in the truth, and in the power of the Spirit to guide into truth; and if we are patient, we sometime will work out of our troubles and to a common understanding."

Chair stated there were several resolutions that had been handed in, and if there were no objections he would present them. That there were some petitions for change of boundaries in certain districts.

Committee on District Boundaries

The following motion was made and seconded:

"Moved that we take up these matters [of boundary petitions] and that the church secretary and the statistician constitute a committee to report back to this conference."

"Moved to add name of O. W. Newton to this committee."

On Limiting Speeches

An incidental motion was made that during the remainder of the conference the speeches be limited to twenty minutes.

A motion was made to lay on the table. By a vote of 120 for to 273 against the conference decided not to lay the question on the table.

Moved to amend by striking out twenty minutes and inserting thirty minutes. Previous question was moved and voted.

Amendment lost by vote of 175 for and 242 against.

Motion to limit to twenty minutes carried by a large majority.

Motion to refer question of boundaries to a committee was carried.

Time Limit on New Business

Moved that the time limit for introduction of new business be 2 o'clock, Wednesday, October 10.

Moved to amend by changing the time to Friday, October 12, at 2 p. m.

Moved as a substitute that the time limit of new business be set at Thursday, October 11, at 2 p. m.

The substitute carried and the time limit will therefore be Thursday, at 2 p. m.

The following resolution was read:

Committee on Conference Resolutions Reports

"To the General Conference: The committee appointed by the General Conference of 1922 to complete the compilation of General Conference Resolutions to date, recommend that the purpose of the published compilation of Conference Resolutions shall be guidance in conference and branch legislation and administration, and that therefore:

General Conference Resolutions having relation to local or temporary conditions shall be eliminated.

"Resolutions having become obsolete through the passage of time, changed practice, or fresh legislation shall be eliminated.

"Reaffirmations of resolutions shall be cited with each such resolution.

"The definition of district boundaries shall no longer be part of the General Conference Resolutions, but shall be issued as an appendix thereto.

"Articles of incorporation and association, rules of representation, etc., shall be inserted as appendices.

"The committee requests their release and the appointment of a further committee having in view the compilation of the resolutions in harmony with these recommendations.

"In order to bring the present book up to date on the old basis the resolutions cited on the attached sheets should be included.

"Respectfully submitted,

"F. M. MCDOWELL,

"R. S. SALYARDS,

"E. E. LONG,

"F. HENRY EDWARDS,

"WALTER W. SMITH,

"Committee."

The report was received and spread upon the minutes subject to action.

Moved to adopt the report, including the recommendations.

[The changes are the resolutions which have been adopted since 1915 by the General Conferences, and compiled by the church secretary, R. S. Salyards.]

Elder F. F. Wipper objected to placing discretionary power in the hands of the committee.

Apostle J. F. Garver said he was willing to accept anything that the committee, as named, could agree upon.

Elder Walter W. Smith spoke to the question.

Secretary Salyards made a statement that he thought the report of the committee in its final form should be brought before the conference before action is had.

Elder E. E. Long called attention to obsolete rules now in our conference resolutions and thought it should be revised. Previous question was called.

Report of Committee Adopted

The motion to accept report and recommendations was carried.

Moved that the committee consisting of Floyd M. McDowell, R. S. Salyards, E. E. Long, F. Henry Edwards, Walter W. Smith, be reelected.

The motion prevailed.

A. Carmichael Reelected

The following was read as coming from the Order of Bishops:

"October 4, 1923.

"With reference to the nominations to fill vacancies in the Children's Home Board which was referred back to the Order of Bishops by the conference, the Order hereby submits the name of Bishop Albert Carmichael to succeed himself for a term of three years.

"It is understood that the Women's Department will submit to the conference nominations to fill the vacancies created by the expiration of the three-year term of Martha Young and by the resignation of Doctor G. Leonard Harrington whose term expires in 1924.

"ORDER OF BISHOPS,

"Per VERNON A. REESE, Secretary."

By vote the conference approved of the appointment of Bishop A. Carmichael as a member of the board.

Board for Children's Home

The Department of Women reported as follows:

"October 4, 1923.

"The Department of Women nominates Martha A. Young to succeed herself as the new member of the Board of Trustees of the Children's Home.

"The Department of Women nominates Mrs. Ida Pearson Etzenhouser as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Children's Home. This nomination being necessitated by the resignation of Doctor G. Leonard Harrington, last year's nomination by the Department of Women.

"DORA GLINES, Superintendent."

The recommendations coming from the Department of Women were adopted, and Miss Martha A. Young and Mrs. Ida Pearson Etzenhouser were elected to the board of the Children's Home.

The following resolution was read:

Resolution to Permit Advertising

"Resolved that inasmuch as the church printing plant does commercial printing and that the costs of printing of the publications and the materials entering into, are gradually increasing in price making it necessary to raise the subscription from time to time to meet said costs.

"Be it resolved, further, that the Board of Publication be and is hereby instructed by this conference to accept legitimate advertising for the periodicals published by the church and to further employ an advertising manager, or employ an advertising representative to represent said publications and that said employee be instructed not to accept questionable advertising, such to be held from publication until sufficient proof is supplied to prove otherwise.

"And be it further resolved, that as the earnings from this source warrant a reduction in subscription price, that said reduction be made.

(Signed by B. H. Doty and John R. Lentell.)

It was moved and seconded.

Moved to refer to Board of Publication for action and report.

Moved to amend by referring to Board of Publication for final action.

Elder B. H. Doty spoke against referring.

Elder John R. Lentell spoke against referring.

Bishop J. A. Koehler, formerly manager of the Herald Publishing House, was in favor of referring to the Board with power to act. He called attention to the fact that by accepting paid advertising there would have to be a reclassification of postal rates and that they would be much higher rates.

Referred to Board of Publication

Substitute to refer to Board of Publication with power to act, carried.

Interesting Dialogue

President F. M. Smith asked the following question:

"I would like to ask a question right here. On our conference resolutions, or among them, is one positively forbidding the Board of Publication to accept advertisements of an objectionable character—mining stocks and a few things of that kind. Suppose the Board chose to admit advertisements, is somebody going to rise and say they are defying General Conference?"

Elbert A. Smith: "Whom are you asking?"

F. M. Smith: "You're the man."

Elbert A. Smith: "Then I'd say, yes; they will."

The following resolution was read:

Resolution on Sabbath Observance

"Whereas, in the law of God we are admonished to keep the Sabbath (or Lord's) Day holy.

"And whereas, there is a disposition to game playing, doing of unnecessary work, the selling of unnecessary refreshments, and indiscriminate playing of music on the Lord's Day,

"Therefore be it resolved that we as a General Conference of the church express our disapproval of such conduct, regarding it as giving an unfavorable reflection of Christian life."

(Signed by G. E. Harrington and S. G. Clark.)

It was properly moved and seconded.

Reasons for the Resolution

Elder G. E. Harrington read the definition of the term holy in support of his motion. He believes the definition should be applied to the activities on the Lord's Day. He also read from the Doctrine and Covenants to support his motion. The Lord's Day is a day of rest and worship. The whole day is consecrated and the commandment should be observed.

The people should also keep themselves unspotted from the world, said Brother Harrington.

Necessary work is allowable, said the speaker, but what is necessary is left to each one's judgment.

Do we have to have pop on Sunday? Do we have to eat ice cream on Sunday? These questions were asked because the speaker objected to the sale of refreshments during services. He said there was a disposition to take advantage of the commandment which allowed necessary work to be performed.

The people should keep Sunday holy and teach their children accordingly. Brother Harrington urged a greater observance of the commandment, and objected to playing games on Sunday. The disposition to gratify our human tastes should be stopped. The resolution should be adopted.

Substitute Is Offered and Adopted

The following substitute was read and moved:

"Moved that inasmuch as the modern tendency seems to be toward the desecration of the purpose for which Sunday has been set apart in the traditions, laws, and customs of Christian civilization;

"Therefore, be it resolved, that conference affirms its respect for the Lord's Day, and looks with disapproval upon any movement or activity which under church patronage may tend to lessen the respect for the sacredness of this divine institution."

The previous question was moved, and the substitute carried almost unanimously.

Adjournment was taken at 11.45.

The afternoon session was called at 2 p. m. with President Elbert A. Smith in the chair. Prayer by Elder R. S. Sal-yards.

The minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

Propose to Build Auditorium

At the afternoon's business session the Order of Bishops brought the following recommendations before the Conference. This was ordered put on the calendar as the special order of business for 2 p. m. to-morrow, Thursday.

Auditorium Resolution

A reading was called for which was as follows:

"October 10, 1923.

"The Order of Bishops is unanimously agreed that the time has come for the erection of an auditorium large enough to care for our needs. We therefore recommend that

"This conference authorize the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Order of Bishops, to each select one of their quorum to act in conjunction with the church architect, to select the site and have plans and specifications prepared, the cost to be kept well within the limits of the available funds subscribed for the purpose.

"We further recommend that the Presiding Bishopric be authorized to immediately proceed with the erection of said building in accordance with the plans and specifications as approved by said committee, with the view to having the building ready for the use of the next General Conference.

"We further recommend that any part of the auditorium fund now or hereafter collected, not expended for the construction of said auditorium be held in reserve and invested in convertible, interest-bearing securities, the earnings from which shall be used for the operation, upkeep, improvement, or enlargement of said building.

"ORDER OF BISHOPS,

"Per VERNON A. REESE, Secretary."

Action on Auditorium Deferred

Moved to approve the report.

Elder Lee Quick moved to defer action on the question of the auditorium until Thursday at 2 p. m.

Elder Frank F. Wipper objected to hasty action on so important a matter as this. He urged to defer.

Elder C. Ed. Miller did not see any reason why we should delay action in deciding to go ahead. He felt confident that the committee named would do the wise and practical thing, and he favored passing the original motion at that time.

Elder Daniel Macgregor spoke in favor of deferring action on the motion. He said the proposition concerns a matter that has given the church a great deal of unrest. The Quorum of Seventy has not been considered in the proposition and the brother objected. When matters of importance have been considered, they have overlooked the Seventy although the Seventy occupy a position equal to the other quorums in legislative authority.

Seventy Speaks for Itself

Brother Macgregor said that the Seventies were the most independent body of thinkers in the church.

The Seventy should be considered in such propositions. The best friends are left out when the Seventy are left out, he said, because that body is in best position to carry the proposition to the people.

He plead that the Quorum of Seventy be included on important committees so that the quorum could be informed.

Elder C. F. Putnam favored deferring.

Elder John Zimmermann, jr., favored deferring.

Bishop E. L. Kelley moved the previous question, which was ordered.

By a vote of 245 for, to 168 against, the conference agreed to defer action until to-morrow.

Financing Graceland College

The following document was presented regarding the financing of Graceland College:

"In view of the passage of a resolution on last Friday, October 5, calling upon the church institutions to submit their annual budgets to the General Conference for action, and in view of the fact that Graceland College Board of Trustees had no opportunity to present the peculiar situation obtaining in the matter of administration of the finances of other departments which can adjust their affairs to the conference year beginning either in April or October while the College year must begin in September irrespective of the conference year, the following facts are herewith submitted.

"For many years while the General Conference met in April, the budget was submitted to the General Conference for action. When the change was made to October for the convening of the General Conference, it was, of course, impossible to wait until October for the submission of the College budget as plans for the new College year must be made in the spring preceding the closing of the college year. In view of this situation, after consultation with the General Church Officers, the College budget was submitted in 1922 to the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric.

"As there was no meeting of this Joint Council in the spring of 1923, the college budget for that year was submitted to the Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and Standing High Council for action.

"The above statement presents our problem and is most respectfully submitted to the General Conference for solution."

"A. CARMICHAEL, Chairman Board of Trustees.

"J. F. GARVER, Secretary."

Moved to refer the matter to the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric with power to act.

Bishop B. R. McGuire moved to defer action on the college board's report until after the time of holding next General Conference be fixed.

Previous question called for and was ordered.
Motion to defer carried.

Publish Resolutions

The following motion was brought before the conference by Secretary R. S. Salyards and adopted without debate:

"Moved that the present committee on General Conference Resolutions be authorized to add to the compilation of conference resolutions 1916-1922 those adopted by this conference and that the Board of Publication be requested to publish resolutions adopted from 1916-1923 as a supplement to the present Book of Resolutions."

Moved to Abolish Forms

The following was read and properly moved and seconded regarding Forms 1 to 5:

"INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 10, 1923.

"Whereas controversy has arisen over the propriety and working of 'Forms' one to five (1 to 5) as set forth in the Saints' Herald of November 8, 1922, Be it resolved, that we, as a General Conference, declare ourselves uncommitted to the measure."

(Signed by R. W. Weaver and O. W. Okerlind.)

Reasons for Abolishing the "Forms"

Brother Yates, the mover, said he believed the conference should consider the forms mentioned, because they had caused so much trouble during the past year. These forms, he said, had never been acted upon by the conference and such action should be taken.

The membership received circulars from headquarters and, led to believe these had been properly considered, acted thereupon.

He challenged anyone in the conference to say that the forms were not driven through without seeking approval of the people.

In our church papers was published an article on these forms, in the Herald for November 8, 1922. Immediately, he said, action began to be had on the forms here, there, and everywhere.

President Floyd M. McDowell made the following statement:

Statement of President McDowell

"I have very little to say about the matter.

"In the first place steps have already been taken, I am informed, to correct the outline for forms, if they need correcting, as per your resolution of yesterday. These changes will be made.

"I am also authorized to say further that the heads of the departments have been continuously advising against any rapid acceptance of higher forms of organization.

"Furthermore, it is possible when we are given time to go over the matter, that the reorganization will be carried on to even a greater extent. Every effort shall be made to make departmental work comply with the resolution as passed yesterday. If it conflicts in any sense, the organization of the departments must change accordingly, because we interpret the resolution of yesterday as applying to departmental administration, general, district, and local."

Macgregor Voices Opposition

Brother Daniel Macgregor disapproved of certain articles regarding forms 1 to 5 being published in the church papers because the membership often accepts them without further question, thinking them officially adopted.

The general body should first act on such matters. Brother Macgregor was pleased to know that changes were to be made in the forms.

Wipper Asks Who Did It

Brother F. F. Wipper asked, Who gave the departments the right to dissolve the constitutions under which they were working? He recalled no such authorization. Headquarters, however, did certain things without approval of conference, Brother Wipper asserted, and he favored the resolution to prohibit Forms 1 to 5.

Williams Answers as to Origin

Brother T. W. Williams arose to answer the question asked. The departments were in a process of transition and were not departments up to a short time ago. In 1920 Brother Williams became president of Zion's Religio-Literary Society. At that time the society was dissolved and it moved out on a new road. Field workers were appointed, but they had no executive power. Brother Williams nominated these.

When Brother Williams returned from England he found that efforts were being made to change the societies into departments. In this effort Brother Williams signed the document accomplishing such a thing. He stated that he has since changed his mind regarding certain actions he took, but that the first move was in good faith to better existing conditions. Brother Williams had recently requested that his name be taken from that document. Now, he stated, that these departments should come under the wing of the church.

However, these forms should not again be sent out until the conference passes upon them.

Resolution Tabled

Moved that the motion lie on the table.

The conference by a vote of 236 for, to 157 against, ordered the motion laid on the table.

The following resolution was read by the secretary and moved and seconded:

Department Heads Considered for Ex Officio Rights

"Resolved, that this conference looks with favor upon the inclusion in the list of ex officio members of the conference assembly the following:

"Heads of departments and vice or assistant heads together with all unordained missionaries; and further

"That the committee on representation be and hereby is instructed to give this favorable consideration."

(Signed by John W. Rushton and J. A. Koehler.)

Apostle John W. Rushton spoke in favor of the resolution. Previous question was ordered.

The resolution carried, referring the matter to the committee on representation.

Aaronic Order Considered

Brother Gomer T. Griffiths moved that the matter of the Aaronic Priesthood being given ex officio rights, be referred to the same committee.

Brother T. W. Williams asked for the reading of the minutes of 1922 regarding giving the Aaronic Priesthood ex officio vote.

A committee of three was appointed at the 1922 conference (one from the Presidency, one from the Twelve, and one from the Bishopric) to consider the proposition and report to the conference of 1923.

This committee should bring in its report, said Brother Williams.

Elders G. E. Harrington, Edward Rannie, R. S. Salyards, and E. C. Harrington spoke on the question.

Sister Ruth L. Smith related the history of the Department of Women, referring to the time the department was taken into the conference. She stated that the department was pleased to have been associated with the conference and that it desired no more representation than the conference wished to extend to it.

Aaronic Priesthood Not Given Ex Officio Rights

Previous question was ordered.

By a vote of 150 for, to 159 against the motion to refer Aaronic Order to committee for consideration was lost, the Conference decided not to refer the matter of giving the Aaronic Priesthood ex officio rights to the committee on representation.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11

At the opening of the business session to-day the conference paused for twenty minutes to listen to Doctor Alonzo E. Wilson, who represents the Near East Relief. He gave a stirring appeal for help for the hundreds of thousands of children in Bible lands, who because they are Christians have for centuries been victims of the brutal Turk.

Resolutions Adopted on Near East Relief

At the close of his address the following resolution was presented:

"Be it resolved:

"1. That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in General Conference session renew its approval of the work of the Near East Relief.

"2. That we ask our pastors and other officials to arrange for an adequate annual presentation of Near East Relief in the churches, Sunday schools, and other church organizations, preferably in connection with community campaigns.

"3. That we assure our Government officials that America supports them in the efforts that have been made to adjust international relationships, and will support them in whatever future steps may be necessary to protect Christian minorities and bring abiding justice and peace among nations.

"4. That we urge continued intercession on these matters."

By motion and vote the resolution was adopted unanimously.

F. M. McDowell Presiding

President Floyd M. McDowell presided over the session and all members of the leading quorums were present.

Opening prayer by Elder G. T. Griffiths.

Minutes of Wednesday read and approved.

The special order of the hour was the resolution coming from the Order of Bishops regarding the building of the auditorium.

Apostle J. F. Curtis moved as an amendment:

"That instead of a committee of one being appointed from the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, that we insert the word two from each in conjunction with the architect."

Apostle Curtis Defends Larger Committee

Brother Curtis defended his motion, saying the larger committee allowed for more counsel on the matter.

Elder Daniel Macgregor moved as a substitute that the matter be deferred for one year.

Moved by Bishop Ellis Short that the motion to defer lie upon the table.

At this point a quarter hour of parliamentary tangling and untangling was indulged in by the assembly. After the storm was over, Elder Daniel Macgregor had the floor.

Macgregor Asks Deferment

Brother Macgregor said he was not adverse to the building of an auditorium. He supported it when the fund was raised and was here to support it again. But he believed the matter should be postponed because the church is not in position to build, so he said.

It was thought $500,000 would do, but about $800,000 was subscribed. The past year however the bishop had to borrow from that fund to meet operating expenses. In order to meet the demands of the coming year, about $400,000 is needed. If the auditorium be built will not the obligation on the church be too great. One hundred thousand dollars available will necessitate raising $300,000 to build, if the original building program is undertaken. This with the other expenses of the church will necessitate calling upon the people to raise nearly $800,000 for the coming year.

Brother Macgregor questioned the wisdom of building at this time. The result would be that missionaries would be dropped as was done before.

The missionary program however means that more men must be sent out. It is a question of the auditorium or the missionary arm. Are you ready to withdraw these missionaries in order to build an auditorium? asked the speaker

We want an auditorium but it should not be built now. Our opportunity came and went. Now we must consider other matters.

Prices are too high now, claimed Brother Macgregor. We should wait until they come down. The tent will do for conference next year, and in the meantime we will have had in the field a strong missionary force.

The first, last and biggest thing in the church is the missionary arm. It should be maintained.

Canadians Said to Want Auditorium

Elder H. Arthur Koehler said he could speak for the Canadian Saints, and that they were for the auditorium.

The auditorium is in demand, said the speaker, and we are in a position to build now.

Auditorium Expense Within Means

At this point it was explained from the floor that the Bishop's report provided for building the auditorium out of the means available, and did not necessarily mean all of the amount collected. No justification for idea that $500,000 was to be spent on the building—might not be over $100,000 if as much.

E. C. Harrington and F. F. Wipper spoke for deferring action and O. Salisbury was in favor of building at once.

Brother Orman Salisbury spoke to the question, saying the bishops always acted slowly and deliberately and without haste, and he had confidence in them.

He called attention to the fact that last year over 61 per cent of the entire receipts was spent for missionary purposes and only 7.4 per cent as General Administrative expense. He said he knew of no other business that had so small a per cent of overhead.

It is time to support the men God has called to the place of handling the finances of this church. Their ability should be recognized. The report from this body should be accepted.

Decide to Build Auditorium

The substitute as amended carried which means that a committee of two each from the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, together with the Church Architect are authorized to construct an auditorium this year.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 12

An all-night rain preceded the Friday business session, and at 9.30 a. m. when President Elbert A. Smith called the meeting to order water was falling in a steady downpour.

The tent was dripping in a dozen places, and the high priests and bishops who have been seated previously on the platform were compelled to seek places on the main floor. The air was chilly, and overcoats were much in evidence. The attendance had been decreasing for several days, and the tent was not more than half filled.

The chorister, as an evidence of his faith, had the assembly sing "The sun is shining somewhere," and "Yes, we trust the day is breaking."

Opening prayer was by Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire.

Minutes of Thursday's session were read and approved.

President Elbert A. Smith Makes Statement

President Frederick M. Smith asked the privilege of addressing the conference on a question of personal privilege.

Introducing President Frederick M. Smith, President Elbert A. Smith spoke as follows:

"Frederick M. Smith wants to rise to a question of personal privilege. He comes to make a statement that will present a common ground on which we may meet. I do not know the content of his statement, but I hope when he has made it, you also will come a way to find common ground with him. We are all tired of trouble, and if we are courageous in warfare, let us be generous toward each other as well. Since this may develop discussion I will ask Brother Tanner to take the chair until this matter is closed."

Statement of President F. M. Smith

President Frederick M. Smith's statement:

"I have not very much to say. I trust what is said will be to the point.

"Since a certain sermon of mine was delivered last December, which was subsequently issued in the Herald, there has been a great deal of comment, pro and con, in regard to this, and in the light of various remarks, which I believe do violence to the intent to the one delivering the sermon, I wish to make the following statement:

"In issuing the warning in the sermon on 'Loyalty' I did not make a blanket charge against those who fought with the opposition, for I then believed and I now believe, that most persons voted conscientiously, though on an issue which had been clouded. Speaking in many places in general terms, my motives have been impugned and intentions distorted by those persons who have sought to give such terms personal application.

"My references to the last General Conference were not to the specific issues and contentions there deliberated upon and indulged in, but to the leadership which was attempting to assert its dominancy.

"My friends have advised freely with me, concerning the sermon, and the consensus of opinion among them seems to be that the time chosen for issuing the warning was ill-advised, and because of the appeal made with the association of contention and subsequent developments, I concede that another time should have been chosen."

Moved by Elder W. D. Bullard that that part in the Herald referred to, be read.

A motion was made and carried that the motion lie on the table.

Resolution by Apostle Hanson

Apostle Paul M. Hanson stated that he was pleased that President Smith had changed his attitude on the question, at least to some extent.

To secure the floor, Apostle Hanson moved the following:

Resolution Regarding Statements of President

"Whereas, President Frederick M. Smith, in a public address delivered in the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, December 3, 1922, and published in the Saints' Herald, January 10, 1923, under the title of 'The essentiality of loyalty in the development of Zion,' calls in question the honor and integrity of officers and delegates of the 'last General Conference,' as follows:

"And the warning that must be raised to this people is that they must be constantly on their guard against those opportunities seized by Satanic power to still further procrastinate the time when we shall establish Zion.

"I have to go back no further in the history of this church than the first of October, last, to illustrate to you how that can be brought about. I know that in attempting to speak of the last General Conference I am getting on dangerous ground; but that is a matter of indifference to me."

"Further he stated:

"There is no finer and more effective weapon in the hands of Satan than the aspiration of self-appointed leaders. . . ."

"And further:

Parts of Sermon Quoted

"Without entering into personality, without touching on or entering upon that ground, at least to the point of danger, let me indicate to you by some things that happened what was the character of the leadership that would have led this church into apostasy."

"And finally said:

"And where are you, and where is your loyalty? To revolt against properly instituted leaders at the instigation of self-appointed or aspiring leaders is not independence, it is not safety, but it is just the opposite of both. Don't forget that."

General Conference Ruling

"And whereas, such statements are in violation of the law of the church as expressed in General Conference Resolution No. 298, adopted April 10, 1885, viz:

"That where radical differences of opinion occur between leading representatives of the body, the discussion of them should take place in quorum capacity, and not through the columns of the Herald.

"That in our opinion in the acceptance of articles for publication through the Herald, the parties doing the same should exclude all such as make special attack upon the supposed private views and character of the dead, or that impugn motives and question the integrity of the living; there being neither sound argument nor wisdom attained by such methods."

"And whereas, the law of the church provides a proper time and place for the presentation and consideration of all proper objections, such references are not justifiable, even if true; therefore, be it

Retraction Asked

"Resolved, that this conference disapproves of this attack by President Frederick M. Smith, and requests a retraction."

Objection to Consideration of Matter

An objection was made by Bishop J. A. Koehler to leaving the matter, saying that it is required under the laws that the acts of any person shall be tried in the church courts and not before a General Conference.

The chair entertained the objection and said he would leave the matter to the assembly to decide on the objection.

Apostle Hanson's Statement

Apostle Paul M. Hanson made the following statement:

"This matter is not regarded by me as being personal at all. There are a great number of people who are involved in this. If it should be the judgment of the conference that this is in the nature of slander or libel I do not deal with it in that light, but as an administrative act violating one of the General Conference resolutions and also has to do with that which relates to the legislation in the highest deliberative body of the church. I believe that this conference should pass on this matter; but if it is thought in your judgment it should go to the courts of the church, then your judgment of course must be respected.

"This is not considered as a personal matter, let me tell you that, and not one word will come from my lips that will give you any ground for believing that, not one. I believe this General Conference should pass upon the administrative acts of its officers. This is one of them, and I ask that you hear this matter; hear what is to be said, and then exercise your judgment."

Motion That Bishop McGuire Preside

Elder F. F. Wipper made an incidental motion to the effect that Bishop B. R. McGuire preside over this session of the conference.

Elder G. E. Harrington objected to the Bishop presiding, because if it should go to the courts the Bishop would by the law preside over the court and should not be involved at that time. Elder Harrington also called attention to the fact that Elder J. A. Tanner was also a member of the high council and likewise disqualified.

Moved as a substitute that Elder J. A. Tanner preside over the conference during the consideration of the question.

Elder Daniel Macgregor believed that the same objection raised against the Bishop could be lodged against Brother Tanner, because he was president of the high council. The speaker believed the body should select some one to preside who is not a member of either body mentioned.

Apostle J. F. Curtis said it was unfortunate that the condition of affairs exists as it does. Thought that members of the Standing High Council ought to be in a condition to sit and judge fairly and impartially. They should not be involved in the discussion.

Apostle J. F. Garver said that should Brother Tanner preside it would not disqualify him for sitting on the high council. But if it were considered he was disqualified, another could be chosen in his stead.

Brother G. T. Griffiths said that the Bishop had the right to select his own council from members of the high priests, and therefore no mistake is being made now, as these men need not be chosen.

Matter of Who Should Preside Tabled

Moved to table the matter.

Motion carried which left Elder J. A. Tanner in the chair.

Chair ruled that the objection to hearing matter before the conference was not debatable.

A point of order was raised by Apostle T. W. Williams that the ruling was based on the book of Rules of Order and that the conference had never adopted it as authority in matters of conference procedure.

Book of Rules Has Been Adopted

Elder H. O. Smith stated that the present Rules of Order was accepted by the conference when the book was in manuscript form. The report of the committee was placed before the conference, said Elder Smith, with recommendation to adopt and the report was accepted.

Apostle Hanson's Resolution Debated

Vote was called on the appeal from the ruling of the chair regarding consideration of Apostle Hanson's resolution. The conference by a vote of 205 for, to 125 against sustained the decision of the chair and the debate was closed.

At this point President F. M. Smith took the chair, and made the following statement:

President F. M. Smith Takes Chair

"Before proceeding with business on the table let me suggest as your presiding officer that that question of objection to consideration based on our present Book of Rules—that we need not stand against it, because that is a common parliamentary law that will be found in every Book of Rules I have ever read. Any question coming before the body is subject to having put upon it the question of consideration; and the question of consideration denied, it removes that from before the body. It is one of the other ways of getting rid of what the body does not care to deal with. It is found in all parliamentary books.

"I trust now, we have sufficiently cleared the atmosphere, so that for the remaining sessions of the conference we can proceed to business."

Two Elders Recommended for Seventy

The following was read from the presidents of Seventy:

"Independence, Missouri, October 12, 1923.

"To the General Conference: The following names have been selected by the Presidents of Seventy for ordination to the office of Seventy:

"Charles J. Smith, Elmer C. Ohlert.

"Respectfully submitted,

"E. E. LONG, Secretary of Council."

Apostle J. F. Garver spoke in behalf of Brother Ohlert and indorsed his nomination.

Apostle J. F. Curtis also stated that Brother Ohlert was a young man who would do a good work.

Elder Jacob Halb also indorsed the ordination of Brother Ohlert whom he had labored with in Switzerland and Germany.

The conference voted to indorse the ordination of Elder Ohlert.

Charles Smith made the following statement: "It has been presented to me for some few years now and I place myself subject to the will of this body."

The conference by vote indorsed the ordination of Elder Charles Smith.

Auditorium Fund Up Again

Elder Joseph Luff offered the following resolution:

"Whereas a number of persons who subscribed certain amounts toward the building of an auditorium have, for reasons which seem good to them, since concluded that they acted unwisely and that such moneys ought under present conditions to be given to the missionary fund, and inasmuch as they now desire that the amounts thus subscribed by them shall be transferred to the tithes and offerings fund, to their credit.

"Resolved, that such persons be granted the privilege desired and that the Bishop be authorized and requested to make such transfer upon notification from the parties at interest, and that they be thereby released from their former obligation to the auditorium fund, provided said notification be received by him not later than January 1, 1924."

Bishop J. A. Koehler stated that if the resolution passes, it can be easily seen that we will be no further ahead than we were before.

It will mean that instead of paying tithing, in addition to paying auditorium subscription, the subscription money will be used instead of the tithes that otherwise would be paid.

Doctor Luff's Argument

Elder Joseph Luff said that the church has fewer missionaries in the field now than ten years ago. Some people in the church believe the missionary arm of the church should be supported before the lesser project. It would not be right for the money of these people to be used for a project they do not wish to support. This resolution will correct this situation.

Wise men, intelligent men, will not pay in their money to be used where they do not believe it should be used, even through the argument be made that tithing is due from the individual, irrespective of the use that later may be made of it.

Motion Obtained to Lie on Table

Motions made to let motion lie on the table. Carried.

Elder Walter W. Smith made the following statement under a question of personal privilege.

Campus Not Bought With Church Funds

"I haven't much to say, but I do think you ought to know, definitely and purposefully, that no general church funds are to be employed in buying this Swope property. $26,000 was subscribed by the Independence Saints, some $12,000 or $15,000 of which has not yet been paid but will be paid, as I verily believe, because the people are good and honest and worthy. In the meantime the Bishop has carried this matter rather than to have us go out in the world to borrow money under unfavorable circumstances. If you could just be patient for a few days, some of the insinuations to the effect that we are encroaching upon the Bishop's treasury would not be made, and it would be only kindness and courteous not to make such reflections. Please don't go home believing that we mooched on the Bishop's money—or rather money in his hands."

Campus Given to Church

Bishop B. R. McGuire made the following statement:

"I think, in the light of Brother Smith's statement that it is due the body for me to make the further statement that the title to this property has been taken in the name of the Presiding Bishop as trustee, in trust for this church."

Question of Next Conference

Moved and seconded that when this conference adjourn it do so to meet in Independence, September 29, 1924.

Substitute was moved that the date be changed to April 6, 1925.

Elder Rannie, mover of the original, stated that he had proposed September 29, instead of October 1, to get the conference started on Monday rather than in the middle of the week.

Elder Ward L. Christy said that October is the best time of the year for the preaching of the gospel. Our missionaries should not be brought from all over the world at this time to General Conference.

April may not be such a good time of year for weather, but it is the best time for conference business, because it does not interfere with missionary effort.

Apostle M. A. McConley said the school year starts in the fall and the transfer of missionaries' families in the fall interrupts the children in school work.

By holding conference in April, it will give an additional six months for the building of the auditorium.

Apostle J. F. Curtis said he agreed with the last two speakers. The best time of the year would then be given to the missionaries for their work.

Elder R. S. Salyards added to the remarks, saying the auditorium could be built by April, therefore he was in favor of the April conference.

Previous question was called and ordered.

By an overwhelming vote the time of the next conference was set for April 6, 1925.

Four New High Priests

The following recommendations were read from the High Priests Quorum:

"To the First Presidency: We wish to say that the High Priests Quorum have approved for ordination the following named brethren recommended by you:

"J. L. Cooper, Earl D. Bailey, L. F. P. Curry, C. B. Woodstock.

"THE HIGH PRIESTS QUORUM,
"October 12, 1923. "By A. H. KNOWLTON, Secretary."

Elder Cooper made a statement of willingness to accept and the conference by vote indorsed his ordination. His statement follows:

"I might offer this; that I would rather be a street sweeper in the kingdom of God, if that is God's wish, than to be the president of the church. I have this to say again, that if this meets with the approval of this people, I am ready to go ahead and do my best, with your support."

Elder Earl D. Bailey expressed his willingness to serve and was indorsed. His statement follows:

"I have been working as best I could for quite a long time. When some younger than I am now, I would come to conference sometimes and see some of the brethren singing beautifully—and I couldn't. Some could speak eloquently, and I couldn't. I couldn't do anything very well. I prayed and wept about it, and the Lord told me, Are you willing to do the best you can? So I have been trying to do the best I could, and if the people of this conference are so disposed, I will continue to try to do the best I can."

Elder G. T. Griffiths, Bishop B. R. McGuire, Elder C. Ed. Miller, and Elder W. H. Garrett spoke in indorsement of Elder Curry, Brother Curry having returned to his home, and the conference by vote approved.

Elder Joseph W. Lane, President F. M. McDowell, and Elder C. F. Putnam spoke favorably of Elder Woodstock's ordination, he not being present, and the conference by vote approved.

Resolution on Sanitarium Tabled

The following resolution was moved:

"Resolved, that the action of the General Conference of 1920, indorsing the President's recommendation that the articles of Incorporation of the Independence Sanitarium be changed, so that the board of trustees would be ex officio and include the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and the Church Physician, be and is hereby rescinded; and further be it

"Resolved, that the Sanitarium Board of Trustees shall be nominated and elected by the General Conference."

(Signed by E. E. Long and W. C. Neville.)

Motion to let the question lie on the table moved and carried.

Receiving and Disbursing Funds by Church Institutions

The following was moved and seconded:

"Whereas, certain action had before this conference has caused confusion in the minds of some as to the possibility and propriety of making contributions to the various church institutions and

"Whereas; some members of the church, having complied with the law of tithing, being interested in the development and extension of these institutions desire to make contributions to the same;

"Now be it resolved; that no action had by this body shall be construed as preventing the trustees of such church institutions from accepting and expending gifts made to them that are not contingent upon the expenditure of money from general church fund."

(Signed by Albert H. Knowlton.)

A motion to lie on the table was denied.

Apostle J. F. Curtis was opposed to the motion for the reason that each church institution has a budget adopted by General Conference and that we ought not allow a budget and then let the institutions go out and collect extra money. He thought that such solicitation would detract from the funds which would otherwise be going into the general fund.

Elder E. E. Long said he was inclined to favor: it would allow him to get funds for a new car.

President Smith asked him if he considered his car a church institution. Elder Long said he did.

Apostle Curtis Urges Strict Budgeting

Apostle J. F. Curtis moved to amend by providing that the institutions could receive but not expend money except as approved in the budget.

Apostle John W. Rushton said he thought the original motion was an attempt to nullify the previous conference action denying the right of unauthorized expenditures to the church institutions.

The missionary force needs all the support the church can give. But the few who also wish to make donations to institutions they are interested in, may prevent the working of the whole plan. The motion should not be passed.

Apostle J. F. Curtis said it would not be fair to other institutions for one institution to receive special funds. It is the law of the church that all donations should go into the general treasury to be used for all institutions.

The acceptance of funds is all right but the unauthorized expenditure should not be allowed.

Auditor A. H. Knowlton believed our institutions should be in a position to accept and use donations the same as worldly institutions.

Elder C. E. Wight called attention to certain legislation by the conference.

1. The conference accepted the Graceland gymnasium report. Then it passed other legislation.

2. The second was a piece of legislation done without debate. This prevented the acceptance of money by the board of trustees of Graceland, even though from outsiders.

Should Show Confidence in Trustees

The resolution before the house should be passed, but the amendment should not be adopted, because it allows acceptance of money but does not trust a board of trustees with expenditure.

Apostle T. W. Williams read the law in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, 9, 10.

Latter Day Saints do not have the right to pay surplus in any other way than provided by law.

After the first consecration, the residue, if there be any, should be used from the storehouse, by the high council according to law.

Should Observe Financial Law

The Doctrine and Covenants contains a definite financial law, and it should be followed.

The extension of our institutions should be made, but it should be done in the right way, and through proper channels.

Question was asked regarding the special call made throughout the church last year for the Sanitarium. Bishop McGuire said it had been done with the consent of the Presiding Bishopric.

Moved to Refer to Order of Bishops

Moved to refer the entire matter to the Order of Bishops.

Moved as a substitute that the matter be referred to the High Council and the Bishop and his council.

Bishop McGuire

Bishop McGuire made the following statement:

"I wish to call attention to section 122, paragraph 6, in further explanation of section 42, paragraph 10, which to my mind, will convince this conference that it is clearly apparent that the substitute is out of order. [122:6 read.] And now, referring back to section 42, paragraph 10, I wish you to note the fact that so far as the High Council is interested in these matters, they are interested only as it refers to the caring for the poor and needy. [42:10 read.] It is clearly declared that they have to do with the application of these properties only to the extent that the poor and needy are not neglected, and are in no way to render decision in the first instance upon the needs of anyone, only as they may in an advisory way; therefore, their counsel cannot be injected as dictation or so as to prevent an appeal to the High Council upon a point of difference that may arise between any one of the poor and needy and the Presiding Bishopric.

"Ex officio and delegates of this conference will therefore decide the matter under consideration as not a proper matter to be referred to the Presiding Bishop and the High Council. It is rather a matter that should be referred to the Bishopric or a joint council of the Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric."

Bishop J. A. Koehler differed with Bishop McGuire, saying the law does not give the Bishop sole right of responsibility in administration of finances.

Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, paragraph 10, has been interpreted wrongly, he said. How can the first and last parts of the paragraph be separated from each other?

The High Council has as much responsibility as the Bishopric in the matter referred to.

The High Council should have concurrent jurisdiction with the Bishopric in these matters.

The Book of Covenants must not be separated.

He cited the last part of paragraph 10 of section 42, to show that there is joint responsibility of quorums.

Bishop Not Independent of Other Quorums

The Bishop is not independent from other quorums in the administration of finances.

Yet it is proposed by some that others than the Bishopric have no right to say how money shall be appropriated. The time has come when we shall trust the quorums with their rights.

The Bishop has the power to administer only in accordance with the provisions of the law which places upon other leading officers the right to apportion (allocate) the funds to meet the needs of the church in promoting its several activities.

Elder E. E. Long called attention to section 126, paragraph 10.

The church cannot expect the blessings it is promised when there are people who confess to marked differences in church management.

Elder R. S. Salyards said that the Bishopric did not claim complete jurisdiction in matters of finance.

Previous question was moved and ordered.

Substitute to refer to the High Council and Bishopric was lost.

Question Referred to Order of Bishops

Motion to refer to Order of Bishops carried.

Boundary Line Report Adopted

Following report was read from the committee on boundary lines:

"We your committee appointed to consider petitions for change of boundary lines beg to submit the following recommendations:

"That the petition of the East Independence group for transfer from the Holden Stake to the City of Zion be granted, the Holden Stake conference offering no objections to the request.

"That the boundary line between the Northwestern Kansas District and the Southwestern Kansas District as agreed upon by these respective districts be approved as follows: The south line of Greeley, Wichita, Scott, Lane, Ness, Rush, Barton, Ellsworth, and Saline Counties form the line between these districts. The eastern line of the Northwestern Kansas District and the Southwestern Kansas District is already defined by General Conference Resolution.

"That the division of the Southern Ohio District as outlined by the Southern Ohio District conference be held in abeyance and the boundary of the district remain as at present. We make this recommendation in view of objections filed with the committee by General Conference appointees laboring in the district.

Respectfully submitted,

"R. S. SALYARDS.

"O. W. NEWTON.

"F. A. RUSSELL."

Departmental Resolution Tabled

The following resolution was moved:

In order to conserve the best interests of the church, and to stabilize departmental work, be it

"Resolved, that hereafter no new department shall be created, nor the functions of any department be interfered with, nor any department discontinued, or disorganized, or reorganized, or the scope of its work be changed without the authorization of General Conference."

(Signed by H. W. Savage and G. R. Wells.)

Elder H. H. Savage, mover of the resolution, spoke in its favor. Said he offered it to conserve church interests, not to antagonize, or as he said arouse the "fightability" of anyone.

Moved and carried that the matter lie upon the table.

Graphic Arts Needs Referred to Budget Committee

Moved that 250 be appropriated for the purpose stated in the report of the Graphic Arts Bureau which reads as follows:

"The demand for slides for church missionary and auxiliary use has been greater than the bureau could meet with the limited means at its command, but we have tried to make the greatest use of the completed sets we have.

"Our plan is to provide a depository where slides may be had by any who are in a position to use them to advantage. We think the present custom of providing a few missionaries with one or two sets of slides, charging the cost of the expense of the individual, is not productive of the best results for the money expended. Why not have the funds thus expendent placed in the hands of the bureau and make the slides available to all?

"We have received from the general church during the past year $39.91. With this amount we have purchased one lantern for missionary use. Slides added to sets during the year have been supplied from the funds of friends and by gift direct.

"In order that this feature of the church work might receive proper attention during the coming year we would recommend that the bureau be permitted to use not less than $500 of general church funds."

Elder C. Ed. Miller spoke convincingly and entertainingly on the question.

Apostle McConley also favored the appropriation, as did Elder Putnam.

Bishop Keir moved to refer to the budget committee. Bishop McGuire said the Graphic Arts Bureau was being considered along with the other departments, and that if the report of the budget committee is not satisfactory, the conference can then take action.

The motion to refer the matter of appropriating $250 to the budget committee for consideration, was carried.

The following was read:

Reading of Appointments Requested

"The following was adopted by the Seventy in joint council this forenoon [October 11]:

"Resolved, that it is the wish of this Quorum of Seventy that all general representatives of the church receiving an appointment shall have such appointments submitted to the General Conference for ratification."

Resolution on Songs to Department of Music

The following was moved:

"Resolved, that we look with favor on a certain percentage of the Saints' Hymnals and Zion's Praises being combined into one book, for the benefit of those who are requesting the same, and request the Board of Publication to issue them at their earliest convenience."

(Signed by G. E. Harrington and J. F. Curtis.)

Moved as a substitute to refer to Department of Music with power to act.

Previous question was moved and carried.

Substitute was carried.

Another Song Resolution Tabled

The following was read:

"Whereas there is a disposition to have a number of adaptable hymns compiled for missionary purposes and believing it to be an advantage in spreading the gospel;

"Therefore, we request that a committee of three be appointed to make such compilation and authorize the Board of Publication to print the same, both music and words."

(Signed by R. E. Burgess and H. E. Moler.)

Motion to lie upon the table prevailed.

Missionary Appointments to Conference

Moved and carried to consider matter coming from the Quorum of Seventy.

Moved and seconded to adopt same which means that hereafter the missionary appointments will be brought before the conference for approval.

Moved to amend, which would make the resolution read as follows:

"Moved to amend that nothing in this resolution shall be construed as prohibiting the appointive powers from making changes or appointments in the interim of conferences."

Question was asked the president of the Twelve if the list of missionaries will be complete in time for action by this conference.

Apostle J. A. Gillen said he thought the list would not be complete in time.

President Elbert A. Smith said that most of the local appointments were ready but not all of them.

Apostle Rushton said that the custom of years past could be followed, and those not appointed at conference time could be appointed later and a supplementary report printed.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson spoke in favor of original motion.

Previous question ordered.

Motion as amended carried.

Appointive and Elective Officers

Following motion was read:

"Resolved, that all offices of the church and its departments, both local and general, except those specified in the Doctrine and Covenants as appointive offices, shall be designated as elective offices."

Elder Pycock spoke in favor of the resolution.

Moved to defer action until next General Conference.

Previous question was ordered.

Motion to defer prevailed.

Resolution on High Council

The following resolutions were read:

"Inasmuch as the decisions of the Standing High Council are of grave concern to the church, and it is fitting and desirable that the members of this council shall be selected in harmony with the law so as to establish the greatest confidence in its functions, guaranteeing justice and equity to all, therefore, be it

"Resolved, that the principle and method providing for the selection of the members composing this Standing High Council, be and hereby are reaffirmed, viz:

"Those who were presented by the high priests for ordination to their number, if approved by the council of the high priests now present, and the conference, may be ordained; and from their number there may be selected by a committee of conference composed of one of the First Presidency, the president of the Twelve, and one other to be chosen by the council of twelve, the president of the high priests and one other to be chosen by that council of their number, a sufficient number to fill the vacancies now existing in the high council, that the high council may be properly organized and prepared to hear matters of grave importance when presented to them. And this committee shall make these selections according to the spirit of wisdom and revelation that shall be given unto them, to provide that such council may be convened at any General Conference when emergency may demand, by reason of their residing at or near to places where conference may be held.—Doctrine and Covenants 120:9; and further, be it

"Resolved, that members of the Quorum of Twelve, Order of Bishops, and Stake Presidencies shall not be eligible to appointment to this Standing High Council; and further be it

"Resolved, that all resolutions conflicting with this be and hereby are rescinded."

(Signed by J. F. Curtis and G. E. Harrington.)

Reasons for Change in High Council Personnel

Moved by Apostle J. F. Curtis, who spoke in favor of the resolution.

Apostle Curtis called attention to the importance of the High Council. He read Doctrine and Covenants 120:9.

Reason for excluding members of Twelve is that they are not eligible for Standing High Council as their mission is that of Traveling High Councilors.

Objects to stake bishops acting on high council for reason that cases may come before them as judges and then later be taken to the High Council on appeal.

Thinks also that stake presidents should be engaged in pastoral work and not concerned with council work.

Moved to defer action for one year.

Apostle T. W. Williams believes this conference should settle the matter. Why put the question off? Will you know any more about it a year from now?

It may have been difficult to find men to fill the places in the standing high council before. But it seems to Brother Williams now, that men of wisdom and experience should be chosen to fill the places on the Standing High Council. This does not call in doubt the character of the men already on that council. Is questioning advisability of men holding double office, as Twelve and High Council, etc. This council is important and men of judicial temperament should take the office.

This conference should consider the matter now, not wait another year.

Elder G. E. Harrington called attention to the Doctrine and Covenants where the Standing High Council was organized. Only high priests can sit on this council. In Doctrine and Covenants 104 two distinctions are made, that of the traveling high council and the Standing High Council.

The standing High Council acts as a judicial body.

Moved that the matter lie upon the table.

Division was called for, and by a vote of 142 for, to 232 against the conference decided to consider the matter further.

The previous question was ordered. Motion to defer until next General Conference was lost.

The original motion prevailed.

Speeches on Common Consent Ordered Published

The following was moved and seconded:

"In order that the Saints throughout the church may have the fullest benefit of important matter presented here during the last several sessions,

"Be it hereby ordered by the conference that the speeches upon the subject of 'common consent' delivered by President Elbert A. Smith, Apostle John F. Garver, and Apostle T. W. Williams, be published in the Saints' Herald at the earliest convenience of the editors."

(Signed by James E. Yates and F. F. Wipper.)

Elder Yates spoke earnestly and at length in favor of the motion to publish the speeches.

Moved that the matter lie upon the table. Motion lost.

Previous question was ordered.

Resolution carried, which means that the speeches will appear in the Herald.

Moved that the speech of Apostle J. F. Curtis also be published.

Motion carried.

Historian Deplores Action to Publish

Elder Walter W. Smith asked to speak to a question of personal privilege, which was as follows:

"I want to say a word now. Most of my life has been spent in the ministry of this church, and most of that ministry has been spent in trying to heal souls. By no means would I, in the slightest way impugn your motives, but I hope, as pastors, before this conference is over, you will reverse this decision. You are carrying words of bitterness and strife to hundreds of souls that know nothing about it. As Historian I will say you are making trouble for us, and I do hope that as pastors you will reconsider this."

Yates Asserts Speeches Worthy of Publication

Elder Yates protested the statement of Elder Walter W. Smith in that the inference carried that the speeches contained words of bitterness. Elder Yates said that chairman of the conference had commented on the high standard of debate had, and that certainly no harm could come from such publication.

Book of Rules Adopted

The following resolution was offered:
 "Moved to reaffirm the approval of the Book of Rules now in use."
 The previous question was ordered.
 The Book of Rules was indorsed.

New Member on Committee of Representation

Moved and carried that Elder R. S. Salyards be added to the committee on representation.
 At 3.45 p. m., the chair announced adjournment until 10 a. m. to-morrow.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13

Owing to the continued rain and cold the business session of the conference was transferred Saturday morning from the tabernacle tent to the Stone Church.

It seemed like old times to see the conference assembled in the place that for many years witnessed the meeting of the quorums and delegates for church business. All were in hopes of getting through the business to-day so as to take final adjournment to-night.

President Frederick M. Smith was in the chair.
 Elder R. S. Salyards offered the opening prayer.
 Minutes of Friday were read, corrected, and approved.
 Elder Daniel Joy moved the following:

"As one voting in the affirmative yesterday on the matter of publishing the speeches, I move this morning to reconsider that action."

A point of order was raised as to the number present being less than were present when the vote on the question was first had. The chair ruled that there appeared to be about the same number present as on yesterday's adjournment, therefore the motion to reconsider was entertained.

All of the Saturday morning business session and half of the afternoon was taken up in debating whether or not to publish the speeches on "Common consent."

Elders Macgregor, Long, and Yates, together with Apostles T. W. Williams, J. F. Curtis, and Doctor Joseph Luff were in favor of publishing the speeches, in the thought that all should know the facts of the question and the basis of decision.

President Elbert A. Smith, Elder Walter W. Smith, and Apostles M. A. McConley and Roy S. Budd opposed publication on the grounds that the question had been settled, and the controversy should not be carried out into the field.

A motion finally obtained that all the speeches of those who took part in the debate on "Common consent" shall be published in the 1923 Minutes of the Conference, and that a copy of the minutes is to be sent to each subscriber of the HERALD.

1924 Budget Submitted

The following was read from the Order of Bishops:

The Order of Bishops, as the appropriation committee of General Conference, submits below estimate of anticipated revenue of the church for the fiscal year 1923-1924 followed by a list of appropriations recommended for the various departments and institutions covering the same period.

Estimated Income

Tithing	$290,000
Offerings and oblations	60,000
Christmas offering	63,000
Other income	27,000
	<hr/>
	$440,000

Appropriations recommended:

District administration expense	$ 1,500
Interest and exchange	15,000
Family allowances	235,000
Elders' expense	85,000
Aid	32,000
Foreign mission expense	3,000
Payments on consecration contracts	6,500
First Presidency's office	7,300
Presiding Bishopric's office	17,500
Quorum of Twelve office	1,250
Publicity Department	8,000
Statistical Department	2,350
Auditor	2,000
Architect	150
Historian	800
Patriarch	250
Music Department	100
Women's Department	2,500
Church Secretary	150
Graphic Arts Bureau	300
Librarian	200
General expense (church departments)	5,750
General church expense	3,250
Independence Stake	4,500
Lamoni Stake	3,000
Kansas City Stake	3,000
Far West Stake	1,000
Holden Stake	2,000
Graceland College	16,000
Religious Education Class	2,500
Children's Home	5,000
Saints' and Liberty Home	10,500
Holden Home	9,000

Health. In view of the information given that the visiting nurse will be self-sustaining financially no allowance is recommended.

Social Service. No appropriation is provided for from general funds but recommend that the expense be allocated to the Independence Bishopric to be paid out of contributions for local purposes.

Sanitarium, $3,000. If at the end of the fiscal year there is a deficit to that amount.

Total appropriations$489,850

It will be noticed that the appropriations recommended exceed the estimated income to the amount of $49,850. To overcome this probable deficit it will require the active cooperation of every department to reduce their expenses at least ten per cent of the amount appropriated and the earnest effort of every officer and member to encourage the payment of tithes and offerings.

ORDER OF BISHOPS,
 Per V. A. REESE, Secretary.

Moved to adopt.

Moved as an amendment that the Far West Stake have an appropriation of $3,000.

Bishop J. A. Koehler made statement to the effect that he was of the opinion that the amount named in the report ($1,000) was sufficient.

Moved to lay amendment on the table. Motion prevailed.

Bishop Urges Frugality

Bishop B. R. McGuire said the report meant that the church and all its departments must be frugal the coming year. $49,000 more is budgeted than the anticipated revenue, and since this has to be raised or saved, those in charge of collecting and expending the money must be supported by the confidence of the people.

"When we adjourn," said the bishop, "we should say to the membership of the church that we are willing to sustain these men, to sustain their families, that we must preach a gospel of faith and confidence; and if we do not preach the gospel of faith and confidence, we are going to kick the pillars out, and the roof is going to come down upon us, and our wives and children are going to suffer in consequence of there not being sufficient funds in the church treasury."

Let us, if we pass this budget, understand that we are going to stand behind those upon whom rests the responsibility of the collection and payment of this money."

Elder Lee Quick for More Economy

Elder Lee Quick said that it is well known that nearly every nation is bankrupt. The limit of taxation is reached.

If the statistics are reviewed it will be seen that many people in this church are willing to help, but cannot. The Bishop has kept the missionary families until money has been borrowed and reborrowed.

There are three kinds of people in this church. One has the money and won't pay, another kind would pay if they had it, and the third is willing to pay according to their means. The situation is bad.

Business in the world is shaky. Are we going to go on and on until we are bankrupt? This is a day of sacrifice and it must be practiced by departments in the church as well as by its members.

Elder Burton Says Church Is Safe

Elder P. R. Burton said he would not like to have the delegates go home with the idea that this church is bankrupt. This church is safe.

If a fifth the amount of energy expended in debate in this conference were put upon paying tithing, this church will not go on the rocks.

Elder Putnam for Unified Loyalty

Elder C. F. Putnam said this church must go on. We have differences of opinion but the church will go on. Let us have the conference united, he plead. Elder Putnam told of his experiences in the work and made a touching appeal for loyalty to the cause. If that is given, he feels sure that all will be well.

Apostle J. A. Gillen Pleads for Unity

Apostle James A. Gillen said that few men have agonized more than he has the past year. He asked, Have we the spirit that was the Master's? He has no fear for the outcome of the work if we are characterized by Christ's Spirit. Let division rise and death will take the organization. He plead for unity under Christ's leadership.

President Elbert Hopeful

President Elbert A. Smith, laboring under visible emotion, made the following statement, and following Elder Putnam's and Brother Elbert's talks there were many in the audience with moist eyes, and a feeling of spiritual emotion swept over the entire assembly. President Elbert's statement follows:

"During the heat of debate, we see only one side of the opposition. The people here to-day see another side to you Seventies; and we hope you will see another side to the rest of us.

"I was in despair this morning, but I hope God will lead this people on into peace and unity.

"During the past year I have endeavored to make my work entirely constructive and affirmative. That was the reason I didn't want my conference speech to go out in the Herald. It may go out in the minutes; you have ordered it to, but I propose during this year to forget all about conference troubles. I did that last year, and in the pulpit, the press, in private conversation tried to uphold my brethren. No man was undermined by me during the past year; no man will be during the coming year.

"Some one coming here to this conference had a vision, in which he saw, standing in front of this audience, an individual, perfect in form—Christ—and from Him went a power that solved all the problems of this church, and that Power was the spirit of love. May God help us to have that love.

"If during the heat of conference, I have said anything that may have hurt anybody I would wish to be forgiven. I have approached this conference with prayer and with concern and I have tried to stand on principle, and I do not fear but that which is right will prevail."

Elder Jenkins Testifies

Elder George Jenkins said he knew God would straighten out the troubles of the church. If sacrifice is needed, the people can do it. He related the early sacrifices of the church and the great responsibility resting upon the leaders. The Bishop cannot pay out money that does not come in. He needs our support.

Brother Jenkins pledged his defense of the church in the future. He appealed for a spirit of meekness and love as we go from the conference.

If the missionaries go out and sacrifice they will be examples to the people. Let us rejoice in sacrifice.

Apostle Griffiths Strong in the Faith

Apostle G. T. Griffiths said he knew months before he was relieved from duty on the Twelve, what his future was. His evidence was that Zion will be redeemed.

Relating a dream he had, he said the ship was nearly disabled but the good pilot, Christ, brought her through. Part of that dream is being fulfilled. The church is not to go on the rocks. She is above the water.

He warned that we go on and do our duty. If anything will kill this church it is malice and hatred. What we need is love. When this is the condition then Christ can come. If God is with us, all hell cannot prevail against us. This church will not go wrong. This is God's work and Zion will be redeemed.

The Conference Sings

At this point, the speeches having taken on the character of a testimony meeting, Elder Daniel Macgregor suggested that we have a song.

When Chorister Hoxie asked Brother Macgregor what song, he said, "Watch, fight, and pray." This was followed by "Let us all be brothers," and "Pray, men, pray."

Statement of President F. M. Smith

At this moment, President Frederick M. Smith arose to make the following statement:

"Maybe I may be permitted a short word here. I don't expect to take very much of your time.

"Compared to what I would like to have done, what I have been able to do for this church is small.

"Perhaps some of you may realize that even the President of the church has his troubles, and has obstacles to overcome.

It may be little that I can yet do, but with God's help, I am going to try to do it.

"Perhaps that is enough at this time."

Budget Adopted

The report of the Order of Bishops (the budget) was voted upon and unanimously carried.

The following was moved and seconded:

Order of Bishops submit the following recommendation:

"That the appropriation committee of General Conference be enlarged to include two members of the First Presidency and two members of the Quorum of Twelve.

"Inasmuch as there will be no General Conference until April 6, 1925, this conference should make some provision to provide for the approval of the budgets for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1924, and ending June 30, 1925.

"That until further notice the Christmas offering become a part of the general funds for missionary purposes.

"ORDER OF BISHOPS, "Per VERNON A. REESE, Secretary."

The report carried without dissent.

Interconference Budgets to Budget Committee

Moved by Bishop J. F. Keir that the appropriations for 1924 and 1925 be passed upon by the budget committee.

The motion carried.

Resolution on Stewardship

The following on the question of stewardships was read and regularly moved:

"The Order of Bishops submits, for the consideration and action of the conference, the following recommendation as to stewardship procedure which has the indorsement of the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve:

"Stewardships

"Whereas the law of God teaches that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; therefore:

"(a) All men are of necessity stewards

"(b) That the law of stewardships applies individually to each and every member of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9; 70: 3; 101: 2; 118: 4.)

"Therefore, be it resolved:

"That the Order of Bishops believe it to be the duty of every member of the church to acknowledge his stewardship by complying with the law as given in the scriptures:

"(a) Filing his inventory.

"(b) Paying his tithe.

"(c) Paying his surplus.

"(d) Making his offerings.

"(e) And thereafter giving an account of his stewardship annually as required by the law of God.

"In accordance with the foregoing the members of the church 'who are willing and desirous,' (Doctrine and Covenants 128:1) under the general supervision of the officers ordained of God for this purpose, may establish such organizations as are contemplated in the law whenever and wherever circumstances warrant this procedure.

"In order to accomplish these purposes, we deem it the duty of each individual to endeavor so far as it is consistent with wholesome standards of living to establish a plane of living that will make possible an annual increase.

"ORDER OF BISHOPS,

"Per VERNON A. REESE, Secretary."

Elder F. A. Rowe spoke at length favoring the document and stating that he considered it the big thing of the conference.

Elder Yates Sees Forward Step

Elder J. E. Yates stated that the paper just read represents much thought and study. It is a basis of procedure that is safe and sound. All can go forth in support of such a report. It is the culmination of years of work in the church. He appealed for its support.

Report Adopted Unanimously

Previous question was ordered.

The report was adopted unanimously.

The visitors were given a chance to vote on the question, and they also voted unanimously in its favor.

Resolution Asking for Memoirs of Joseph Smith Tabled

The following was moved:

"Resolved, that the Historical Department, the Board of Publication, and such expert help as they may need prepare and publish a biography of the late President Joseph Smith and the work to be done in such a manner to be of special value to the young people, and that it be published at the earliest opportunity consistent with good, careful work."

(Signed by Edward Rannie and H. A. Higgins.)

Elder Rannie, maker of the above motion, said that the lives of our members tell the story of the church, and that perhaps no man better represented the spirit and genius of the work than did the late President Joseph Smith. He thought it would be of great value to have the biography of Joseph Smith available for all.

Bishop M. H. Siegfried moved the following:

"Inasmuch as the Memoirs of this man referred to in this resolution, are in the hands of his sons, and will probably be published at an early date, or at least as soon as advisable. I move that this resolution lie on the table."

Motion to lie on the table prevailed.

Book of Mormon Concordance

The following was moved:

"Resolved, that we reaffirm the resolution of Tuesday, April 10, 1917, as found in the General Conference Minutes of that year, on page 2442, in reference to the publication of the concordance to the Book of Mormon."

(Signed by Edward Rannie and H. A. Higgins.)

Moved to refer to Board of Publication with power to act. Previous question was ordered.

Motion to refer carried.

Moved to take up matter contained in report of Church Physician (Conference reports) but on motion it was lost.

Reports were read from the Mass Quorum of Elders, Second Quorum of Seventy, Third Quorum of Seventy, Meetings of Branch and District Presidents, High Priests Quorum, First Quorum of Seventy.

Releases From Seventy Concurred In

Following was read:

"By concurrent action the Quorum of Twelve, Presidents of Seventy, and Joint Quorums of Seventy wish to recommend the release of the following from responsibility as Seventies. This release, if effected, to be made with full appreciation of the years of service of these brethren, and with no reflection whatever upon their character or moral standing:

"Lyman W. Fike, L. E. Hills, A. J. Layland, Samuel Reiste, F. L. Sawley, S. W. L. Scott, S. K. Sorensen, L. G. Wood, S. D. Condit, J. H. Hansen, G. M. Shippy, C. H. Burr, W. M. Self, J. W. Smith, W. P. Robinson, J. F. Grimes, James M. Smith, John Davis, A. L. Whiteaker, J. M. Stubbart."

Moved and carried to adopt.

Report was heard from the committee on administration.

Question of sustaining the church officials was taken up.

The following were sustained by the conference:

President Frederick M. Smith, his counselors Elbert A. Smith and Floyd M. McDowell.

The Quorum of Twelve.

Just before the vote was taken on sustaining the Quorum of Twelve, Apostle Paul M. Hanson asked the privilege of making the following statement:

Apostle Paul M. Hanson Makes Statement

There may be some who have misunderstood his motive, said Brother Hanson, in the things he had said on the conference floor. He has great confidence in the majority when it acts, however, and was ready to give whole-hearted support to whatever the judgment of the conference may be as expressed by a majority vote.

When the conference decided that it had no jurisdiction in the question of the article published in the Herald of January 10 regarding loyalty, he had acquiesced in the decision and bowed to their judgment. That his part in the matter was based on principle and not on personality; that he did not know if or not he was the one referred to in the article and did not care as to that—the principle was involved that where one is wronged all are injured and that everyone should champion a just cause whether directly affected or not.

As an apostle of Christ Brother Hanson said he did not feel as though he could call on the lesser ministry of the church to observe a rule that the leading officers were free to ignore. If the logical sequence were followed, he said, then every officer down to the president of the smallest branch could make attack from the pulpit and by circular letter on the orthodoxy of others, and just so they left out all names, the thing would get by unchallenged.

Brother Hanson thought it would be difficult to debate with a blanket charge over the 1922 opposition as he felt a charge had been made.

The last year, said Brother Hanson, had been the saddest of his ministry; that unconsciously, perhaps, people held aloof from those on whom suspicion had been cast. He felt that even though the conference were to sustain him that he would be tremendously handicapped until the President withdrew his statement as quoted in the Herald of above date.

He had hoped when the President's statement was made on the question before the conference that it would be of such a nature that he would have the opportunity of taking the President by the hand, that the past could be forever ended. But to his mind the statement made did not offer that ground.

In concluding, Brother Hanson thought General Conference should straighten the matter out even as a branch president under similar circumstances would be called on to act. He asked that his name be voted on separately in the sustaining of the Twelve and that the people in voting should fully understand his views.

Apostle John W. Rushton made the following statement on personal privilege:

Apostle John W. Rushton Makes Statement

Apostle Rushton called attention to the fact that he had been a member of the Twelve for 21 years and had upheld the cause of Christ as represented by our church in all parts of America and Canada and in many lands abroad. That he had served under many conditions but always to the best of his ability, honorably and straightforwardly.

He said he had always tried to observe the Christian ethics and deal with men according to the golden rule.

It had been his misfortune, he said, that as secretary in years past of the Quorum of Twelve, he had had to enter actively into debate over church questions. He had done his best in that capacity but perhaps had been misunderstood, particularly by those higher in authority than himself.

Brother Rushton said he thought the General Conference was a place where opposing views should be freely expressed in an effort to arrive at unity of thought and that no man should be branded for his positions taken on the floor, even though in opposition to the established order.

He thinks if any one man or set of men get too far out of line, they should be dealt with directly and according to law, never a blanket charge made to cover an entire opposition.

Brother Rushton said his all, his life, had been invested in the work and that he did not intend to throw it away. That his labor this year had been carried on under great difficulty owing to the fact that he had been under an imputed charge, but that in all his preaching he had not once raised his voice in self-defense.

He thought the time had come to reach an understanding. That all wanted peace and that the experience of the afternoon when the spirit of conciliation had come over the assembly, made an understanding possible if only some injustices were made right.

Brother Rushton asked that if he were guilty of any offense that he be directly charged and given a chance to defend himself. He said that in these days of crumbling institutions we cannot afford to have suspicion from within but must re-establish confidence in each other.

Confidence is based on personal friendship, said Brother Rushton, and he plead for a return of fellowship, that would stand as a firm foundation in any crisis.

As a conclusion Brother Rushton said he was willing to go on if the conference so desired. That he was willing to give his all for the advancement of the work.

The vote was then taken and the Quorum of Twelve were sustained.

The following were then voted upon and sustained:

- The Seventy.
- The Presiding Bishopric.
- The Order of Bishops.
- The Presiding Patriarch.
- The Order of Evangelists.
- The Standing High Council.
- The Quorum of High Priests.
- The Eldership.
- The Aaronic Priesthood.
- The Church Architect.
- The Church Auditor.
- The Church Chorister.

When it came to the office of Church Historian, President F. M. Smith made the following statement:

"During the year it seemed advisable to accept the resignation of Walter W. Smith as historian and temporarily appoint Brother Samuel A. Burgess. We place his name in nomination."

The historian as named was sustained, as were the following:

- The Church Librarian.
- The Church Physician.
- The Church Secretary and Assistant.
- The Church Statistician.
