THE POET AND THE BUSINESS MAN IN PROPHETIC ROLES

It seems strange that a poet, with prophetic vision, should have foretold the material greatness of our age; while a hard-headed business man, with prophetic insight, should point out its inherent spiritual weakness. The roles are reversed to that which we might expect. The poet is supposed to see the spiritual; the business man the material.

We can hardly deny that by times, great poet though he was, Tennyson was more prophet than poet. Note for instance his poem "Mechanophilus." He has a notation at the head of this poem, "Written in the time of the first railways." Yet far beyond the crude steam-propelled engine of that day he looked to soaring airplanes. Here are five verses from that poem:

Dash back that ocean with a pier,
Strow yonder mountain flat,
A railway there, a tunnel here,
Mix me this Zone with that!

Bring me my horse—my horse? my wings
That I may soar the sky,
For Thought into the outward springs,
I find her with the eye.

Far as the Future vaults her skies,
From this my vantage ground,
To those still-working energies
I spy nor term nor bound.

As we surpass our fathers' skill,
Our sons will shame our own;
A thousand things are hidden still
And not a hundred known.

And had some prophet spoken true
Of all we shall achieve,
The wonders were so wildly new
That no man would believe.

Certainly not less remarkable are these lines from Locksley Hall:

"For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see, Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;
Saw the heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;
Heard the heavens filled with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue."

Truly the wonders achieved since Tennyson's day are so "wildly new" that few men would then have believed them possible, even had some prophet "spoken true." We who see them can scarcely believe, much less understand—streets filled with roaring autos; sky animate with soaring planes; air vibrant with impersonal voices, like disembodied spirits, singing, lecturing, preaching by radio to unseen audiences; wealth piled high beyond the dreams of Emperors.

Yet with all these achievements of science, all these triumphs of invention, all this wonder of material production, the world is torn with a strange unrest. Shorter hours, more income, better food, richer clothing, sanitation, recreation, education, these do not bring satisfaction even to those who have them, hence cannot be expected to bring satisfaction to those who have them not, but hope to achieve them presently.

The material structure has no adequate basis of spiritual development. Morality, integrity, virtue, faith, religion, these have too small a place in modern life. Cunning, greed, graft, violence, lust, these are all too prevalent: "The vermin that shall undermine senate and citadel, school and shrine," to quote Markham.

Here enters the business man with prophetic vision. Roger W. Babson, statistician and business expert, rising from the ranks of business men and respected by them, in no uncertain terms points out the spiritual poverty of the world (for though his message is addressed to his own land it has in its larger aspects world application), and declares that unless there is a return to the fundamentals of true character building the modern material structure must fall in ruins for lack of a supporting foundation. Hear him:

"Some two thousand years ago the greatest teacher who ever walked the earth advised the people of Judea not to build their houses on the sand. What he had in mind was that they were looking too much to the structure above ground, and too little to the spiritual forces which must be the foundation of any structure which is to stand. Following the war we enjoyed the greatest prosperity this country has ever witnessed;—the greatest activity, the greatest bank clearings, the greatest foreign trade, the greatest railroad gross earnings, the highest commodity prices.

"We then constructed a ten-story building on a foundation meant for only a two- or three-story building. Hence the problem confronting us business men is to strengthen the foundation or else see the structure fall. I am especially glad of the opportunity to write for business men. There are two reasons: first, because I feel that the business men are largely responsible for having this ten-story structure on a foundation made for one of only two or three stories; secondly, because I believe such men alone have the vision, the imagination and the ability to strengthen the foundation and prevent the structure from falling.

"The fact is, we have become crazy over material things. We are looking only at the structure above ground. We are trying to get more smoke from the chimney. We are looking at space instead of service, at profits instead of volume. With our eyes focused on the structure above ground, we have lost sight of those human resources, thrift, imagination, integrity, vision, and faith which make the structure possible. I feel that only by the business men can this foundation be strengthened before the inevitable fall comes. . . . The great problem to-day is to develop the human soul. . . . We have gone daffy over things like steam, electricity, water power, buildings, railroads and ships, and we have forgotten the human soul upon which all these things depend and from which all of these things originate."—Fundamentals of Prosperity.

Observance of May 6 in Interests of Young People

To Stake, District, and Branch Presidents; Greeting: It has been decided to set aside Sunday, May 6, as a special day to be observed in the interest of the young people of the church. In so far as this does not interfere with plans which you have previously made, we respectfully urge that as far as within your jurisdiction the services be arranged with this theme in mind.

Should this Sunday be your regular sacrament Sunday, we suggest that a special effort be made to get the young people to participate in the sacrament service. There could be perhaps as well a special sermon for the young people on that day, or a program prepared by the young people themselves.

In order that we may have throughout the church a unity of purpose, we suggest further that the theme for prayer, testimony, and discussion on that day be somewhat along the following lines: "What can the church do for its young people? What can the young people do for the church? Has the effort of our branch been a success in this respect? What shall be our plan for the coming year to meet these needs?"

Finally, in view of the coming Young People's Convention at which representatives will be present from throughout the church, we suggest that special prayer be offered for the success of the convention and that a special effort be made to interest the young people of your branch to attend. Many districts and branches are helping with the expenses of young people to this convention. Why not you?

Respectfully submitted,
F. M. McDOWELL,
For the First Presidency.

We are often asking, "How shall we know that we are truly sanctified?" Here you have an invariable sign from the mouth of Jesus Christ himself: "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."—Richard Baxter.

Isolated Saints Need Church Periodicals

There are hundreds of scattered members who rarely see a minister but who can keep in touch with the great principles of the church, as well as can those who reside in the largest branches, for they procure not only the three books of the church but the tracts and books of sermons and other books that are written and studied.

There is a profound reason for the gathering of ourselves together frequently for communion and association, but separation from our brethren need not and should not mean separation from God and the inspiration of his Holy Spirit.

Paul, when he was converted, went into the wilderness for some years to commune with God and doubtless also to study. That is, he gained wisdom as we are directed in this time to do by study and by the prayer of faith (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36). Then he went forth in mighty power to carry this gospel of the kingdom to all the nations around him. As far as his strength and ability permitted he became indeed the apostle to the Gentiles.

To keep in touch with the current events and thought of the church we have the periodicals of the church. If our minds run to gossip we may miss the gossip of the large branch, but we will find in our periodicals the deep spiritual river of the faith of the church. No home of the Saints, and certainly no home of a Saint who is isolated or apart from the association with others in a large branch, should be without the books and periodicals of the church.

Interesting Facts About the Book of Mormon

Weekly reports of lectures delivered by Elder A. B. Phillips in Holden, Missouri, have been appearing in the Holden Progress, together with reference to attacks made upon the church by a minister of the Christian Church in that place.

Under date of March 22 the Progress announces his lecture on "Remarkable facts that prove the Book of Mormon a true record" and states: "He is a gentleman as well as a scholar, and handles his subjects in a calm, dispassionate and logical manner. He is one of the best educated men whom Holden has had the privilege of hearing in many years. On archaeological matters he is an authority. He traces his lineage back to that sturdy New England stock, from which sprang Wendell Phillips who, it will be remembered, was not afraid to stand by his convictions regardless of consequences."

At this lecture on the 23d, Elder Phillips presented stereoptican views of the ruins uncovered in Yucatan, "structures of such magnitude and architecture that no doubt can exist that a civilized people lived on this continent centuries ago." The account in the Progress for March 29 continues:

Two of the slides were of especial interest, because Elder Phillips explained that he did not wish to be accused of concealing anything. One was the title page of the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon, containing the words "Joseph Smith, Author and Proprietor," out of which Doctor Briney sought to make so much capital in his first attack. The second was a reproduction of the instructions issued by the copyright division of the U. S. Patent Office. The words "author and proprietor" were required under the regulations of the division. The second page of this edition of the Book of Mormon contained the certificate of the copyright which named Joseph Smith as "author and proprietor." This wording of the certificate is almost identical with that on the second page of "The Sacred Writings of the Apostles and Evangelists," of which Alexander Campbell was "author and proprietor." Scattered through the preface of this Bible is reference to the "authors." These "authors" referred to John the Baptist as "John the Immerser." This no doubt was an improvement of the text. As a sample of the "accuracy" of the phraseology of this Campbell "Bible," this is cited: "And she brought forth a masculine son." That, we presume is acceptable to the party attacking the Book of Mormon who avers that the writer of the book could not pass an examination in the grade school.

Elder Krahl read a communication from Judge Ewing Cockrell which stated that an affidavit has no standing in a court of law, and is therefore valueless. This was read in anticipation of the attack announced by the minister of the Christian church on Sunday night, the 25th. On that occasion, the minister did read a bunch of affidavits to the effect that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, etc. When the minister of a small town church sets himself against the decisions of the United States courts and the findings of the United States Senate, the matter becomes ludicrous in the extreme, that is, if such crudity can really be called ludicrous.

How Sorry Are You?

In the epistle of James a good deal is said about those who are hearers of the word only. There are many who listen, then go hence and do as they please. They are not doers of the word of God.

In a recent number of the Herald of Holiness this theme is discussed. A minister tells of a man who expressed his extreme sorrow for some people who were rendered homeless by a great catastrophe. It affected him so much he said he would have to quit reading such news. This man supposed that his feelings were from a deeply sympathetic nature, but when his attention was called to the fact that a collection had been taken to relieve the distress the man was surprised as he had not thought of contributing anything. In fact, his was only an emotional nature in which he might even have enjoyed considering the suffering of others. But he certainly did not sympathize. He certainly did not suffer with them. Such a man is called a weeper instead of being a worker.

Then again he discussed talkers and helpers. A young man who had worked all summer and expected to go to school was prevented by the fact that his sister had taken sick so that he did not have the means, for his time was required for the family. His immediate neighbors were not in a condition to loan him the money. The young lady of the family of which the story was told expressed extreme sorrow, for if he remained out of school he would not graduate with his class and it was even probable that he would never be able to return. She kept talking of it all evening. She felt so sorry for him and she knew what it must mean to him. When she had left the room her mother spoke of her deeply sympathetic nature and the way in which she took other people's troubles to heart.

But the next morning she was talking about it to her cousin and she asked him, "Do not you feel sorry for him?"

He replied, "Yes, I do, but the trouble with me has been to find out just how sorry I am. I lay awake last night trying to find out and I believe I did it before I fell asleep."

"Why, what do you mean?"

"Well, after thinking it over I felt sorry for David a hundred dollars' worth, which is exactly the amount I have saved toward my motorcycle. Now you have said a good deal about being sorry. But getting right down to facts, how sorry are you after all?"

"Why, I haven't any money, if that's what you mean."

"Yes, but I heard uncle say he would allow you fifty dollars for a new suit and hat."

"But surely you do not think I am under any obligations to wear an old suit just to let David have that money, do you?"

"No, I do not, but I do know that you would be glad to do it if you were really as sorry for your college mate as you say you are."

This was a new thought to her. She remembered how often she had stated her sorrow for other people, how often she had talked about it, how often people had referred to her as being so sympathetic, but she could not remember when her sorrow had ever cost her anything. But she realized also that it does cost if we are going to help, so with a quick smile she looked up to her cousin and said, "I am sorry fifty dollars' worth even if it does mean wearing my old suit."

Soon this question is going to be brought more vividly than ever before to the church. Hearing the word of God is not enough. Preaching unselfishness is not enough. Every man's word must soon be tried not by what he has said but how he has lived, what he has done, what he has really denied himself and given up. Sympathy means after all to suffer with. If we suffer with our brother we shall love him as ourselves. We will then quite readily treat him as we would like to be treated. We will not only say but we will do what lies within our reasonable power to help to make the world a better place for Him and all others. S. A. B.

The Waste of the Liquor Traffic

Lord Leverhulme has said that if England would adopt prohibition it would thereby save enough in five years to pay its indebtedness to the United States. The enormous waste of money is only one side of the loss, for drink likewise makes an even greater loss in efficiency without regard to the moral issue involved.

Much has been said concerning the moral issue, the injury to the wives and children. But the whole problem can also be discussed and met on economic grounds.

Thus the Premier of Brampton, Canada, states that at the annual meeting of the United Kingdom Alliance there was much criticism of the $470,000,000 drink bill. The government claims that it got $200,000,000 out of the drinking part of the community but ignores how much the government spent in undoing the evil caused by drink to the nation. It may seriously be questioned if any government in the world gets a net revenue out of the drink traffic. (The experience of the United States would indicate the contrary. The increase of savings bank deposits, the increase of property and the increase of trade would intimate that the drink bill is an economic loss.)

Drink is further pointed out as the great contributory cause for unemployment, for this money is spent by a poor country, not for superfluities but at the expense of necessities. What Great Britain spends in eight days for liquor would keep its hospitals going for a year. Rear Admiral Harry Stileman said that if he had only one half the money spent in one day on drink he could feed, clothe, educate, and place out in life all the 7,200 children in the Benardo Homes and have a balance left over.

Mr. Phillip Snowden at this meeting suggested that they were spending two and a half times as much on drink as upon armaments, and the result was at least two and a half times more destructive. There are many nonproducers, but worse than this there are the producers in drink who are destroying wealth. The temperance movement is therefore the greatest antiwaste crusade. S. A. B.

The Christmas Offering

The Blue Stepping Stones for 1923 was issued for Easter Sunday and shows a total from the various Sunday schools of $65,168.60. At first glance this is $16,000 more than for the previous year but is in part accounted for by $4,000 or $5,000 omitted last year so that the real increase may not be more than $6,000 to $8,000.

The banner school was that of Santa Rosa, California, which averaged $8 per member, totaling $120 from fifteen members. The second is in the extreme East, Dixville, Maine, where twenty-two gave $162.24, an average of over $7.37.

The rank as to the amount given without regard to the average contribution puts the Mount Zion Sunday School, at the Stone Church in Independence with an enrollment of 1,600, first. This is the largest Sunday school and hence is in a class by itself with a contribution of $3,596.50.

It may surprise some to note that Los Angeles, California, is second, with $1,491.23; Lamoni, Iowa, third, with $1,027. The Sunday School at the temple in Kirtland, Ohio, comes next with $873.36 and San Francisco fifth with $840.40. There are eleven other Sunday schools that gave over $350, one more being in California, two in Independence, and the sixth in general rank being the Central Kansas City Sunday school with over $600.

It is possible that, as one member remarked to us, a large majority of the members of the priesthood who are apparently opposed to education are so because of lack of comprehension of what education means. What is education? One can define it as the combined fruitage of experience, observation, meditation, study, and even prayer, which makes for an intelligent response to the stimuli of environment. From this definition we might say that the more abundant life is enjoyed by the rightly educated man. "I am come," says Jesus, "that ye might have life and have it more abundantly."—Priesthood Journal.

As Christ Loved the Church

By S. A. Burgess

So should be the love in the family, with respect and cooperation.

An anonymous letter was received by the First Presidency asking some questions which may be of general interest to our readers. The letter follows:

There is much misunderstanding between husbands and wives of to-day, just what their duty is to each other. These scriptures seem plain enough, but all do not seem to understand them alike, so I am asking you to give us your interpretation on these passages: 1 Corinthians 7: 13-16; 14: 34-38; Ephesians 5: 22-33; Colossians 3: 18, 19; 1 Timothy 2: 9-15; 1 Peter 3: 1-8.

And please make it as plain as you can what "reverence" means, and also all of that in Ephesians. And I would like to ask a few questions in regard to the 7th chapter of 1 Corinthians. If a Christian girl marries an unbeliever, knowing his habits, and he wants her to go to dances, card parties, and other places we hold as not the place for Christians, should she go as her duty to him?

Then if two marry, both unbelievers, and the wife goes with her husband to such places till she becomes converted and then refuses, is there any difference between the duty of the first and the second?

And in regard to the 14th verse, what about the children if neither parent becomes a believer? I want to know what is the duty of both the husband and the wife. So many just point out the duty of one and leave out one so much.

This subject concerns itself primarily with extracts from Paul's writings in which he is thought to have placed woman in subjection to man.

Divorce of Nonbelievers

It is worth while to note that 1 Corinthians 7: 12 states clearly that Paul is speaking, not the Lord. The 13th to 16th verses should be read in the light of this important statement. Its reasonableness then will appeal to any candid reader. A brother or sister is married; the companion is not a member of the church. He or she is not justified therefore in getting a divorce. If, however, the other one leaves, no doubt in accordance with the law of the land, let him depart. In such a case to-day where the divorce was secured by a nonmember on grounds that involved no moral taint, we certainly would consider the spouse who was a member of the church free.

For example, we have had such cases as a man going to another State, establishing residence, securing divorce on the grounds of desertion, and marrying again. It is quite true, as the 14th verse points out, that divorce causes confusion in the family. There is a sanctity in the marriage relationship. It is for the good of the children, a blessing to the children, that the parents abide in peace together, the unbelieving husband sanctified by the wife, the unbelieving wife sanctified by the husband. If neither are members of the church the children are not to blame, for that which they cannot help; even though they suffer from the abuse of their parents.

In the Early Church

As to 1 Corinthians 14: 24-38, the whole context should be considered. We know that various women were in fact approved by Paul and evidently assisted in various ways in the work of the church. The position of deaconess (Roman 16: 1) has come down from that time and is still recognized in some churches to-day. Even these very scriptures (1 Corinthians 7) encouraged the work and devotion of the sisters. But Paul expresses the opinion that women should not be the rulers of the church.

As Christ Loved the Church

Ephesians 5: 22-33 might well be discussed at greater length as it places upon the husband the responsibility of loving his wife as Christ loved the church. Lest this be too ideal for some Paul three times repeats that the husband should love his wife as he loves himself and his own body. The ideal, of course, is the love of Christ that sacrificed himself for the one beloved, namely, his church. He preferred not himself.

But as a minimum there is placed this equality: clothe her as well as he clothes himself, share with her the best of all that he has. If he secures tools for his work, the best to be procured, in like manner procure for her the best that is possible. If he loves his wife as himself, he will treat her as he would want to be treated, and as well as he treats himself. This implies that he should leave father and mother and make his part one with her. He should not allow his family to come between them, nor should she on her part, as she should "honor and reverence her husband."

The word reverence might seem rather strong in the face of our present custom, yet we note that it is given in several different versions. The oriental attitude of course was quite different. She should respect him as the head of the house. An early meaning of the word, according to the definition is "Honor or respect because of relationship." Or for the verb, "to show respect to; to treat with respect" or "to regard with respect and affection mingled with fear." But if the husband loves his wife as Christ loved the church or as he loves himself there would be no grounds for fear. She should respect him. He should live so as to deserve respect.

Mutual Rights

Elsewhere (1 Corinthians 7: 4, Inspired Version) Paul makes the plain statement that the wife has not power over her own body, but the husband; and that the husband hath not power over his own body, but the wife. There are several of these passages which place the woman on equality with man, including that in which he states, "There is neither male nor female in the Lord." (Galatians 3: 28.) It is also stated they are the sons and daughters of God (2 Corinthians 6: 18) and heirs together (1 Peter 3: 8).

A careful reading will lead us to the conclusion that Paul held ideals well in advance of his time. He taught in this as in other matters that the customs of the place should be observed, but his own writings very strongly tend to show the interrelation and interdependence of the two and placed them on an equality, as each have claim on the other.

Colossians 18: 19 briefly repeats that which is stated in the Ephesian letter.

1 Timothy 2: 9-15 has to do with how women should dress—not in vain or costly apparel, that the women should not attempt to teach or usurp authority, and gave as a reason that Adam was formed first, then Eve, and that Adam was not deceived.

1 Peter 3: 1-8 again directs that the wife should be in submission and not to adorn herself with vain things. The husband also is directed to give honor unto his wife as being heirs together of the grace of life and that they be of one mind having compassion one for the other.

These apostles, and Paul particularly, do not appear as misogynists. Paul teaches rather greater honor and respect to woman. He was writing as an apostle and gave good advice to those dwelling in his time. (Note 1 Corinthians 7: 1, 2 in Inspired Version.)

The relation between husband and wife is not an easy one to define. There are many times when it would seem well if the husband were more honored and respected than often is the case to-day. But that is conditioned upon his wisdom and not solely on the grounds that he is a man. In many cases to-day the wife directs the family affairs most of the time, especially in those matters which interest her. But when two are working together, there comes but little question as to which shall be the chief, and there is then a social spirit in the family, a working together, so that the good and wishes of each one are considered and the counsel of the husband and father is given due respect as well as the experience of the wife and mother.

Ninety Years Ago

It may be interesting to note that Doctrine and Covenants 111: 4 directs that it is not right to baptize a woman contrary to the will of her husband, nor is it right to influence children to embrace any religious faith without the consent of the parents. The responsibility is placed upon those who forbid. A consideration of the social conditions of the time show the wisdom of this provision, though it would also follow that it is not right to persuade a wife to leave her husband, or children to leave the parents for the sake of joining the church. Nor would it be right to persuade a husband to leave his wife or his children solely for the sake of joining the church. Social conditions must be considered in weighing such problems as those of domestic relation, and regard must also be added to the existing law of the land.

The Apostle Paul, in fact, in his writings to the church shows a great advance over the existing popular opinion, still an observance of law. We note this in the case of the slave Onesimus, whom Paul counseled to return to his master, but at the same time counseled the master that he should treat him as a brother in the church, and deal lightly with him.

As to the position taken by the church, it is interesting to note that Emma Smith was not only appointed as the elect lady (Doctrine and Covenants 24) but was also to be ordained and was to teach. Doctrine and Covenants 17: 12 also approves other organizations for good in the church. There was such an organization in Nauvoo in the early forties. There have been several such organizations for many years in the Reorganized Church prior to their combination in the Department of Women. In all of these, woman's interest in the community as well as in her home has been recognized.

There have been a number of articles at different times in the HERALD including women as teachers (volume 32, page 348, May 30, 1885). This editorial points out the great importance of right teaching in the home, that this teaching is done almost entirely by the mother. If mothers can be trusted to do this teaching they can be trusted to teach the children of others, though this editorial takes the position that it is not as a preacher in the church. Other phases of this question have been discussed at various times—in the HERALD, volume 66, page 267, and volume 67, pages 593 and 1165.

Social Conditions in the East

With regard to social conditions in the East, reference may be made to existing conditions even to-day in some portions of Asia. Women who appear in public were then looked at with a certain lack of esteem, even though they associated with men of high rank. There was a significance about such public appearance which made it the height of wisdom for Paul to counsel that the women of the early church should not attempt to teach in public assembly. There are portions of the East to-day in which the women who appear in public, who entertain, even though they are more educated, perhaps, than their sisters, are still looked upon as being to a certain extent social outcasts.

This idea that woman's place is the home alone, and the more ignorant she is the more virtuous, is one that has come down to comparatively recent times. "Be good, sweet maid; let she who will be clever." This is only to reemphasize the fact that the objection is basically social.

Marrying a Nonbeliever

Answering the further particular question, If a Christian girl marries an unbeliever, knowing his habits, what must she do? In common sense if a girl marries such a man who dances, goes to card parties and the like, she must expect that she will have to give and take with him. She could hardly expect him to quit at once after marriage. That is one very good reason why she should stop and think before she enters such a relationship by marrying the person who will want to take her where she feels she ought not to go. The church does not take the position that an individual is ever obligated to do wrong or to do that which is against conscience, but the sin in this case is in entering into such a marriage, knowing the habits of the other person, and knowing that if peace is to endure in the family that it will require mutual concession. But the church cannot say and does not say that it is your duty to go to places where you think it is wrong. Nor does it morally justify any wrongdoing on her part.

Where after the marriage the wife has been converted and not the husband, she will naturally try to convert him to the better way. A spirit of fairness will doubtless cause him to respect her feelings. She has committed no such moral wrong as has the girl who knows better, yet marries a man of the caliber indicated. She would evidently try like Paul to be all right things to all people in the hopes of winning even one, her husband, to the faith which is in Christ Jesus. It is their joint problem.

Summary

In no case would we say a wife is bound to obey her husband in wrongdoing. Whatever may have been the social conditions two thousand years ago, that is not the present social station. But the happiness of the family depends on love, reason, wisdom, and forbearance. An honest desire to do right will often if not usually win respect.

Let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband.

Climatic Condition of Palestine

By A. H. Parsons

I presume that the Quaker will be permitted to have something to say on this all-important question, before it is entirely forgotten.

Though it may seem sacrilegious to some for me to attempt to write upon this subject, I feel it is due my own conscience to deliver my review of this whole matter as presented in the last year. Comparing texts and examining the possibility of those whom I quote knowing what they were speaking of, I find that so far as I am concerned the following facts set forth, with all due respect to those who may differ.

When two differ, at least one is wrong, but who is it? It is natural for us to think that we are right and the other fellow is wrong. On this subject I have found as a student that writers differ and color their historical accounts to a great extent according to their views of the origin or truthfulness of the Holy Bible, and this leaves the student stranded, unless he has the capacity for digging into the past for himself. However, it would not make the Scriptures untrue if the former and latter rains never were restored after a period of dearth.

A Warning

To old Israel Jehovah said, "Then I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase." It is evident that there was a time when God warned his people and predicated his promises upon their observation of his law, as herein stated. "If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them." (Leviticus 26:3.) Notice, this promise is predicated upon that word do.

Neither say they in their heart, Let us now fear the Lord our God, that giveth rain, both the former and the latter, in his season: he reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest. Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withholden good things from you.—Jeremiah 5: 24, 25.

If transgressing of God's law by Israel caused the withholding of the former and latter rains in days of old, could not the Almighty do the same thing again? If not, why not?

Be glad then, [why?] for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month. [When should this take place?] And it shall come to pass afterward, [after what?] The return of the former and latter rain in its season] that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions. And also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my spirit.—Joel 2: 23, 28, 29.

If these last-named conditions are being enjoyed by the people of God in part now it must be evident to every thinker that the former promises touching the former and latter rain being poured out moderately has come, as they were to precede the last statement. What think ye? Remember Jehovah told Israel if she failed to keep his commandments he would withhold the rain. If they had kept his commandments the Roman army under Titus would not have been permitted to enter Jerusalem, and scatter the people into every clime and among every nation. But alas! They failed and the prophecy of Moses had its liberal fulfillment, "that they should eat their own flesh."

There Are Two Classes of Writers

There are two classes of writers upon this subject. One class which is the most numerous, believes in the literal fulfillment of the predictions quoted above: the other class mystifies and throws dust in the air, and sees no relation between what has happened and the Bible prophecies. Professor Ellsworth Huntington, in his work, Palestine and Its Transformation, has this to say:

For ages the people of Palestine have been forced to live under climatic conditions which have continually kept them in a state of anxiety. In the past, however, this seems to have been less true than now. Through some agency whose nature is still in doubt, a great change has come over the country. As to the reality of this change there can be no question. In all parts of Palestine unnumbered ruins show that once the population was more dense than now.—Page 39. [This work was published in 1911.]

In most parts of that forsaken land life is impossible except for nomads who depend on camels and sheep, and wander from place to place. The failure of the scanty rains of winter prevents the growth of grass for the animals; and perforce the Arabs must move elsewhere.—Ibid., page 37.

The Galilee of Christ's day must have been a paradise compared with that of to-day.—Ibid., page 179.

Let me here record a statement by this same author relative to the difference of opinion of men concerning the climatic condition of Palestine of the past.

Those who believe in climatic changes of Palestine are, Reclus, Fraas, Hull, Fischer, and Livingstone. Those who oppose are, Ankel, Conder, Helderscheid, and Wilson, all able thinkers. On the whole, the weight of authority, so far as numbers are concerned, lies with those who believe in changes.—Ibid., pp. 249, 250.

In Palestine, if the "former" and "latter" rains at either end of the rainy season do not come at the expected time or are not sufficiently heavy, the crops fail more or less completely.—Ibid., p. 260.

In the days of Christ other parts of the country were equally prosperous. We have seen how ruins of thrifty towns extended far to the south of Beersheba in what is now a desert.—Ibid., p. 281.

The change in the physical conditions of Syria is illustrated by the rivers, as well as by architecture and agriculture. Syria abounds in dry stream beds, large and small. . . . Yet in the days of the Romans it was deemed necessary to build bridges to span these dry streams. . . . More conclusive than bridges over dry ground are the spring houses where no springs exist. Professor Butler mentions these.—Ibid., p. 288-9.

Professor J. Leslie Porter, M. A., who visited those regions forty years ago, says:

On emerging from Bashan and the olive groves of Gaza, the desert was before us—bare, white, and monotonous, without a solitary tree, or the shadow of a great rock, or a single patch of verdure. As we rode on we had overhead the bright sky and blazing sun; and beneath, the flinty soil, reflecting burning rays that scorched the weeds and stunted camel-thorn, and made them crackle like charred sticks under our horses' feet.—Giant Cities of Bashan, p. 210. Quoted from a letter of Apostle Paul M. Hanson, from Jerusalem, Palestine, February 27, 1906, SAINTS' HERALD, April 4.

Eighteen centuries of war, ruin and neglect, have passed over it. Its valleys have been cropped for ages without the least attempt at fertilization. Its terraced walls have been allowed to crumble, and its soil has washed down its ravines, leaving the hillsides rocky and sterile. Its trees have been cut down and never replaced. Its fields have been desolate. Its structures pillaged and all its improvements ruthlessly destroyed. A land of ruin without man or beast. Everywhere, on plain or mountain, in rock desert, or on beetling cliff, the spoiler's hand has rested.—McClintock's and Strong's Encyclopedia, Article "Palestine."

The beauty and fertility of the Holy Land, so much celebrated in ancient times both by sacred and profane writers, are scarcely discernible in its present desolate and neglected condition. The culture of its finest plains has long ceased. Its springs are buried beneath heaps of rubbish.—Edinburgh Encyclopedia, David Brewster, Edition of 1830, vol. 16, p. 274, Article "Palestine."

And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briars and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.—Isaiah 5: 6. [Is it true that Jehovah withdrew the rain for a reason from Palestine as herein stated? If he did not, why not? Listen again]:

I will give you the rain of your land in his season, the first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil. And I will send grass in thy fields for thy cattle, that thou mayest eat and be full.—Deuteronomy 11: 14, 15.

Therefore the showers have been withholden, and there hath been no latter rain; and thou hadst a whore's forehead, thou refusedst to be ashamed.—Jeremiah 3: 3.

This no doubt refers to a former time when they were in apostasy, and God rebuked them for their sins; if true then, why not in latter times?

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord; his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth.—Hosea 6: 3.

If continued revelation was enjoyed by Israel from the days of the destruction of Jerusalem, to the present time; then we might conclude that the former and latter rains never varied from their former application to furnish moisture for the land of Palestine. If the position of the Reformers and Joseph Smith are correct, there was a time when God did not speak to man so far as an organized people of his own is concerned.

George Adam Smith, D. D. says:

Two remarkable passages in the prophets give us instances of this general principle [God controlling climatic conditions]. Through Amos, Jehovah reminds his people of recent drought, famine, mildew and blasting, pestilence and earthquake, and reproaches them that after each of these they did not return to him: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith Jehovah.—Historical Geography of the Holy Land, p. 75. Published 1894.

I know not whether you are aware of the fact, but it is one that is fully authenticated, that the latter rain returned last year to Mount Zion, a rain, that had been withheld, so far as our information goes, ever since the dispersion of the people; and he who has brought back the latter rain in its season, will also give the former rain in its season; and these returning showers of earthly blessings are the harbingers of returning showers of spiritual benedictions from on high.—Reverend Hugh Stowel, Scottish Presbyterian Magazine, 1853. [Italics mine.]

It may be said that this man was not in the Holy Land, and hence did not know the facts. If the reading of the article would not convince you that he was and spoke of what he knew to be true, it would be useless for any writer to speak and say that it was "fully authenticated." Yet with the majority of writers standing for a cessation of rains, as they once came to that goodly land, as a curse and the restoration of rains, should settle the controversy.

"It is a fact that the rain and dew are restored, to the astonishment of the natives."—Louis Van Buren, sr., November 14, A. D. 1867. This man spent the winter in Palestine, and speaks of what he knows.

"It is a fact that the rain and dew are restored; recently, in 1853, the former and the latter rain were restored, to the astonishment of the natives."—Herzog's Encyclopedia, Article "Palestine."

This encyclopedia was published by men who were supposed to be competent and capable of comprehending truth from error, and is recognized as a help to students in their research for facts, as they were and are.

It is to be regretted that we cannot furnish the record of the rainfall prior to 1861 which would be so helpful in getting at the facts. But since that date the records indicate an increase and the returning of that Holy Land to its former fertility. Although this act of Providence may not be recognized by the world as the beginning of the fulfillment of the Psalm, "our land shall yield her increase," it is an evidence that God has set his hand the second time for the gathering in of all things unto himself.

Let Us Go On to Perfection

By J. D. Stead

Work is needed, not simply belief. Knowledge and wisdom are also required but we have the privilege of the help of God through his Spirit.

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

We conclude from reading the above and that which precedes it that the writer understood that it was possible for one to make a start for perfection in obeying the "principles of the doctrine of Christ," and by stopping at that would never reach what they started after. Also we conclude that the writer understood that the one who obeys the "principles of the doctrine of Christ" and stops there, and fails "to go on to perfection," is in serious danger of going the opposite way, down to destruction.

The Master, the perfect teacher, informs us that there are two ways in which man may enter. One way leads to life, back to the place from which man fell. Man who follows his Leader, Christ, through the "gate," "door," "baptisms," water and Spirit, into the "narrow way" and continues to follow him all the way, which includes a belief in his teachings and strict obedience thereto, will as a result become more perfect all the way and finally our Leader will present such a one to our heavenly Father "without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; holy and without blemish," perfect.

The number who enter the "straight gate," and "narrow way," and continue therein will be "few." Unfortunately those who go the downward road are on their way to destruction. They for some reason have not entered the "straight gate," "door," "baptisms," or if they did enter the "narrow way" they failed to continue in the way of perfection and fell by the wayside. The number who are going the "broad way," we are told, are many.

Perfection can be attained by man only through obedience to a perfect law, and a perfect law can only come from a perfect source. Since man, all men, are more or less imperfect, a perfect law given for the perfection of man must come from a higher source than man. For this very good reason the Psalmist, David, could say truthfully, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul."

God who is perfect and a friend to creation must give them laws which like himself must be perfect and unchangeable and such as not only can be heard and obeyed by all; but at the same time there must be a perfect order of administration, or confusion will rise which is contrary to the works of a wise being.

God Hath Set in the Church

God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.—1 Corinthians 12: 28.

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.—Ephesians 4: 11-13.

So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs. He saith unto him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my sheep. He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? and he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep.—John 21: 15-17.

Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.—Acts 20: 28.

And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration. Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them and said, It is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables. Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word.—Acts 6: 1-4.

And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able.—1 Corinthians 3: 1, 2.

Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing. For when for the time ye ought to be teachers ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not strong meat. For everyone that useth milk is unskillful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe.—Hebrews 5: 11-13.

A Law to Observe

If the transgression of law is sin, there is not anything more sure than that God has given man, all men, a law to observe, and is holding them accountable for the way they receive and obey it. If man, from the beginning, had never transgressed law there would never have been sin, and man would have remained as he was made. This being true, man's imperfections are a result of his transgressing law, hence his being made perfect and kept perfect comes through his obedience to law. In order for one to render obedience to law and never transgress, he must necessarily be made acquainted with it and converted to it.

All men have transgressed law, some more, some less; therefore, before a man can be made perfect he must be converted, changed, cease transgressing the law. He must be "born again," regenerated, before he can be restored to the place from which he fell.

The Scriptures quoted in the above reveals to us something of God's order given through Jesus Christ for converting and perfecting the sinner, the transgressor—the most perfect system and order for teaching God's law. Man, given a perfect law, and teachers called of God qualified by his Spirit to teach and execute the law, has his chance when he has the privilege of hearing, to accept and obey the gospel of Christ, the power of God to save.

All men's needs are not the same; all men's capacity for comprehending the gospel when it is taught to them are not equal, therefore God called and set some apostles in the church, some prophets, some seventies, some bishops, some evangelists, some elders, priests, teachers, deacons, for the perfecting of the saints. We can see by this arrangement that God has made provision in the choosing of his ministry, in his church to meet the needs of all his children, their physical as well as their spiritual needs, the learned and the unlearned, the wise and the simple, the rich and the poor. They were not all apostles, but some were teachers, some deacons, etc., each one of these several ministers having his part to perform in feeding and caring for the sheep and lambs, the babes, and those who have made more or less growth toward the perfect man. Man is a compound being, physical and spiritual, two men in one, an outer and an inner man. Both the outer and the inner man must be properly cared for, for the whole man to grow and develop as it should.

Both men and women are to take part in serving humanity, judging from the past and present history of the race of man. Woman's special duty is to serve in the home. A great responsibility rests upon the women in their work of caring for the home, in keeping it sanitary, making choice of the proper kind of food and properly preparing it that a well-balanced meal may be served so that each one can be served with food suited to age. Thus health, growth and development may continue until each one is full grown.

All that may be said in regard to knowledge and wisdom in the care and treatment of the physical man may be just as truthfully said about the spiritual man. The spirit in man should be kept clean and pure and in a good spiritual atmosphere and as free from sickness and disease as the physical man. Both the physical and spiritual man are neglected by most of us.

The grown-ups many times become careless and indifferent in the treatment they give themselves, to say nothing about the kind of treatment they give others. They do not always make proper use of the knowledge and wisdom that they possess to keep themselves clean and healthy, hence their growth is stunted. And those whose special duty it is to look after and care for the babies and growing children are so far derelict or recreant in their duty that many are allowed to sicken and die before they reach manhood or womanhood. What a deplorable condition this world is in! Woman's first duty is to her husband and children in their home. Many of them are neglecting this duty enjoined upon them, and their homes will be wrecked. What may be said in regard to woman's neglect in the home duties can be as truthfully said of the men whose special duties are to care for the children of the house of God. They are letting entirely too many sicken and die for the want of proper care; they have not been properly fed and nourished; they are discouraged; they are weak and need strength.

The Privilege of Church Membership

If the house of God, his church, has been perfectly organized and a perfect law given to be observed by its members and men have been given talents and called of the Lord and set apart and ordained to minister in the church for the perfecting of the saints; I repeat if that be true, to my way of thinking everyone who has a sincere desire to live a righteous life and sometime reach a state of perfection may count himself fortunate that he has the privilege of becoming one of the household of God. Confusion has risen out of the many churches of to-day who are inviting everyone to unite with them and be saved. If the means that God has to offer to the human family does not save them, the fault does not lie with the heavenly Father nor with his laws. His purpose is to qualify man, if man will let him, that he may be a fit instrument under the direction of the Master to do his part of the work properly. To all God offers the most perfect means that could be devised for the purpose for which they were given, the perfection of the saints, the family of God.

If the system given is the most perfect that could be given, why do not all those who unite with the church of God reach perfection? The reason does not lie in the fact that God's judgment is at fault in the kind of organization he has provided and the law given for their government. The reason evidently lies in the fact that man is imperfect to begin with and man is used in the plan that God has given for the perfection of man. Man is dependent upon an independent being, one who is perfect. Different men are called and set in the several offices in the church, each one to do a specific work in the whole of the work of perfecting the Saints. The failure on the part of humanity, not divinity, lies in two directions; a man may start out with pure motives in real earnest, and after accepting and obeying the first principles of the doctrines of Christ stop short, go no farther, and it may be that he will go back on all that he has received and go down and out altogether.

Some may do more than that, continue longer, keep a part of the law and reject other parts of it; they have never been converted to the whole law. Those who have not been converted to the whole law, consequently, never obeyed it. It may be that the fault does not so much rest in the learner as in the teacher; in a great many instances the one the Lord has called has failed to qualify, hence an imperfect teacher who is derelict in duty.

The Lord will call no man that he will not qualify to do the work he is called to do if the man will do as the Lord wants him to do. There are so many imperfections in both the minister and those administered to that quick work in perfecting the race could hardly be expected. However, the fault does not lie in the fact that God's organization and law are not perfect for the purpose for which they are given; the great drawback lies in the kind of material he has to work with.

God's Way Is Perfect

Perfecting the Saints is God's work and can be done only in God's own way. God can perfect no man that does not want to become perfect and accept his way of doing it. He made known his plan for saving the race through Jesus Christ when he presented it to men in the gospel.

Christ came to do his Father's will. He gave him a commandment what he should speak to the people and Christ told the people that no one would be compelled to do the will of our heavenly Father. Man could accept and obey and be saved or he could reject it, refuse to do the will of our heavenly Father, and thereby be condemned.

It is the will of our heavenly Father expressed through Jesus Christ in his gospel that some men would be chosen to be used in the plan that God would use in saving the race of men. God, his Son, and the Holy Spirit would work through humanity in regenerating each one who would permit them to come into his life.

There is no work that man does that can be truthfully called the work of God except such work that he may do under the instruction of the Master.

There is nothing binding upon God that man does except that which God authorizes man to do. Therefore man may be used as an instrument in the hands of our Savior in doing God's work in God's way, and it would not be God's work if done in some other way. The reason why God's work does not progress any faster in the redemption of the race is that God has incorporated in his plan that he is using to perfect imperfect man, the service of men and women and holds them responsible to him for the talents he has intrusted to them and the use they make of their talents.

It Must Be by the Plan of God

It is evident in many cases with both men and women that they have not used their talents as they should have done under the Master's care and direction. Both have been derelict or recreant in their duty. God's work has been neglected. Too often man attempts to do the work that God intrusts to him in his own way. No having proceeded to do the work in God's way it will not be acceptable to the One who called and sent him to labor, and the work he was sent to do is never done.

No man was ever called of God and ordained to any office in either the Aaronic or Melchisedec priesthood that God would not qualify by an endowment of the Holy Spirit to function aright in the office to which he was called and ordained if the one so called would follow the directions of the Master and try to do the work he was called to do in the Lord's way. Every man who attempts to do his work in some other way will make a failure.

It is the opinion of the writer that there are men in the church of Christ and out of it that are saying and doing a lot of things in the name of the Lord that the Lord never authorized them to say or do. Neither has he directed them in doing them. At the same time they are trusting that the Lord will approve of all they do after they had departed from the Lord's way and hope to receive reward for work done in their own wisdom and many times, I fear, to gratify their own selfish ends.

Read what Archbishop of York said in an address to the Church Congress at Sheffield. He said in part:

Men are entitled to expect that if what the gospel claims to be true, it would make good its claims, not only in the lives of individuals who may have exceptional spiritual gifts, but in the corporate life and power of this society which exists to proclaim it.

Do they find what they are entitled to expect? Here we come to the heart of the present problem of religion. Men want a true religion as never before—that is its hope. They do not find it in the church—that is its trouble. To put the matter bluntly: religion attracts; the church repels. Let us face the facts honestly. That it is a fact can no longer be doubted by those who know what is passing through the minds of the men and women, especially the younger men and women, who eagerly desire a spiritual religion and yet stand apart from the church?

To these the church is not a witness to the truth of its gospel, but it is in its divisions, its dullness, its unreality, an obstacle, a stone of stumbling, an offense. If, therefore, the church is to preach the eternal gospel to this generation, not in word only, but in power, it must evangelize itself. It must present a new reality of living experience as its warrant to all men of the truth of its great assertion: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved."

The Archbishop of York confesses that the church is not a witness to the truth of its gospel and closes his remarks by stating what "its gospel" has been, namely: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." The testimony of this church, the church, all churches whose gospel is a mere belief in the Lord Jesus Christ will save them is a denial of the truthfulness of the gospel that they have been preaching. What more does he say the church was a witness of, that the gospel that they have been preaching was not true? "In its divisions, its dullness, its unrealities, an obstacle, a stone of stumbling, an offense."

Evangelization Needed

The archbishop states further: "If, therefore, the church is to preach the eternal gospel to this generation, not in word only, but in power, it must evangelize itself." If I understand the archbishop correctly, he is convinced that the gospel that the church, all churches which have been preaching a mere belief in Jesus Christ would save them, had been preaching that which was not true, and that every church that has been preaching that kind of a gospel needs to have the eternal gospel preached first to the church "that they might be regenerated and given evidence in their lives that there was a reality in the religion of Jesus Christ which religion was an actual experience men could and would have who obey the teachings of Jesus Christ—the eternal gospel."

The archbishop says, "Men want a true religion as never before—that is its hope. They do not find it in the church—that is its trouble. To put the matter bluntly: Religion attracts; the church repels. Let us face the facts honestly."

This archbishop virtually tells us that he is honestly confessing facts as he knows them, and that any others who know the facts cannot deny what he

Zionism and Changes in Palestine

[I believe the following items published in The American Hebrew, March 9, 1923 at New York City, will be of special interest to Latter Day Saints. The paper gives a full-sized picture of Doctor Chaim Weizmann, president of the World Zionist Congress who arrived in New York City March 3, and he is glad to inform the Jewish community what has been done in Palestine and to replenish the coffers of the Keren Hayesod.—C. J. HUNT.]

"I would first like to say I am glad to come to America, particularly after the great help which this country gave our cause at the time the mandate had to be ratified," said Doctor Chaim Weizmann, president of the World Zionist organization, upon his arrival in New York last Saturday. "The resolution passed by the American Senate and Congress showed the great sympathy of this Republic for our cause.

"I am just coming from Palestine. I have been there not quite six weeks and had opportunity to see progress made in the last two years.

"In the last two years there have entered Palestine about 30,000 new immigrants, which for such a small country is a considerable achievement.

"We have plowed great stretches of land, have built new roads, planted 1,000,000 trees, set up factories, extended our network of schools and formed the nucleus of the Jewish University. Professor Einstein delivered the first lecture about two weeks ago. The university will be in Jerusalem. We have completed the great Technical School at Haifa.

says in truth. The confession made by this good archbishop was not necessary to convince our people what he says is true. We have been preaching what this man has discovered and recently confessed for almost one hundred years. If we are the church of Jesus Christ, and if we have been preaching from the pulpit the eternal gospel to this generation, are we witnessing in our lives the truth of the gospel we have been preaching? If the gospel that we have been preaching these many years has not perfected those who profess to believe it, the fault does not lie in the fact that it is a gospel of belief only as we are informed by the good archbishop who says "the church has failed because it had been preaching a gospel of belief," which he says "is not true." The truth lies in the fact that they, like the members of other churches, have believed and have not obeyed.

Let Us Go On to Perfection

"Let us go on to perfection," means more than a mere belief. It means more than believing and obeying the first or fundamental principles of the gospel. It means to obey the full gospel, or in other words, "the law of the Lord," which is perfect.

"I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Our relations with the Arabs I think are improving. There is a marked tendency to cooperation between the two sections of the community. Palestine is being disturbed at present by factors operating against a general settling down of the Near East.

"I have come to this country to inform the Jewish community what has been done and what it is possible to do in the future, and to seek their support.

"Our regular Zionist budget in Palestine is between 500,000 pounds ($2,500,000) and 600,000 pounds ($3,000,000) a year. The British Government spends 1,000,000 pounds ($5,000,000) for administration. All around Jewish organizations are spending more than the British Government expends on Palestine administration. The British garrison in Palestine is costing nearly 2,250,000 pounds ($11,000,000) but next year will be reduced to 1,250,000 pounds ($6,500,000). My personal opinion is that this is a sign that the British could withdraw their garrison very soon. There is no doubt that the British are doing their level best to build the Jewish homeland."

The American Hebrew of March 2, publishes the following: "The largest number of Jewish immigrants that have arrived in any one day in the history of Palestine landed in Jaffa on Sunday, February 11. The group consisted of 520 men, women and children, among whom are 200 young men and women pioneers, Chaluzim and Chaluzoth."

"Tractor training courses for Jewish farmers have been opened in Odessa by the Joint Distribution Committee."

The following interesting item is from the Kansas City (Missouri) Times March 14, 1923.

Jerusalem as League Seat?

Head of World Zionist Movement Favors Such a Move

NEW YORK, March 13.—A suggestion that Jerusalem be chosen as the seat of the League of Nations was voiced by Doctor Chaim Weizmann, president of the World Zionist organization at a luncheon given in his honor to-day by a group of editors and publishers.

"The Jewish national home there is built on no political basis," he said. "We are not going to Palestine to dominate anyone, but to build it up and take our place according to our merit. We are a little league of nations in peace and harmony. When peace is born, I hope that Jerusalem may become the seat of the League of Nations."

What of China

Under the title, "The twenty-seventh chapter of the book of Acts" the Central Christian Advocate calls attention to some splendid work being done by the Chinese. Despite the falling off of centenary funds and that the appropriations were reduced 25 per cent, the Methodist Episcopal Church in China has secured its full quota of its centenary gold. This has been accomplished despite the disorganization of government. The report for this last fifteen years of donation shows an increase of over 264 per cent in members, 147 per cent in hearers, 683 per cent in Sunday school scholars, and 401 per cent for pastoral support, while church buildings have increased fiftyfold or 5,000 per cent.

They further state that the sacrificial giving of the Chinese was so great that if the members in America contributed in like manner in a single month the entire five year centenary fund would be paid.

We have given this very brief consideration to emphasize anew our missionary responsibility. The work will never be done on a "hit-and-miss" plan but will be when the church feels a full consecration and a full desire to do all things possible to send this gospel of the kingdom to the nations of the earth.

Again we may well consider the direction given some twenty-two years ago in the revelation of 1901, section 125, in the Doctrine and Covenants. It is the duty of the church to provide tracts in the Scandinavian, German, Chinese, Japanese, and Portugese languages and others as the missions may require. The field of China is to us yet an unexplored and little understood field. In view of the reports that we note from other churches and the great increase in the number of Christians it appears altogether probable that if that field can be approached in the right way the results will well repay our most earnest and devoted effort. Yet that is only one field out of many. S. A. B.

Right Education Versus Crime

The papers frequently publish items concerning atrocities and crime in different parts of the world. It is well that America has shown her willingness to help those in need. But every once in a while we have it brought home to us to ask that vital question, What of America?

Along the main highways of America, and of Europe as well, there is but little variety to be found. One great city is much like another in its general aspect. But back in the remote points, even a few miles from a main highway there is often found ignorance that breeds crime.

We are not one of those who are pessimistic. We believe psychologically as Paul says, Think on those things that are lovely, those things that are pure, but as citizens we cannot ignore the fact of our social shortcomings, especially when this social shortcoming is the result of ignorance.

Just recently we read an account in one of the most enlightened States in the Union of conditions existing back a little way off the main highway. It is a city of great schools but it has not yet given sufficient energy to its educational work to reach all of those who need. The result is not only poverty through ignorance but also crime.

Crime after all is eventually the result of ignorance. The Master, when on the cross in the midst of his agony was able to look down and say, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." And it is true indeed that no one would commit a wrong if he could fully appreciate with what certainty his wrongful act reacted upon himself, if he could realize that when he sins he himself becomes the greatest sufferer.

Then there are the wrongs that are not crimes but the mistakes made simply through ignorance. A minister met a doctor and asked concerning a certain child. The answer was, "She will die. Then you will probably get up and preach 'The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away,' when the Lord had nothing at all to do with it. It was simply dirt and ignorance. If a mother gave a child rough on rats the child would die in spite of her good intentions and even her faith in her own rightness."

The percentage of infant deaths in America has been decreased but the rate is still much higher than it should be. It is one of the offices confronting the minister to have to speak over the silent form of a little child when he knows that it was the good intentions but ignorance of the parents which is responsible for the sad event.

Education as an abstraction, as a hanging of letters after our name, as a mere matter of book learning, is without profit. But if to our good intentions is added an understanding heart, a knowledge of the things of God as set forth in nature, then indeed does our service become a blessing, not only to avoid wrong doing but also to avoid the losses which come directly through ignorance. S. A. B.

Why Do Not the Churches Progress?

It appears to be conceded by many writers that the Protestant churches of to-day are not progressing, and various attempts are made to explain their failure.

The Archbishop of York, in a recent sermon at Sheffield, England, declared that the church repels many people. As a result fewer will attend the services, and great campaigns are no more.

He calls attention to the fact that we have no great religious writers such as Dean Farrar with his Life of Christ, and no preacher like Spurgeon whose sermons sold by the tens of thousands while he was alive, no great artists painting such pictures as Hunt's "Light of the world," and even our hymns depend upon the efforts of men long since dead, such as Isaac Watts, Cardinal Newman, and Wesley. Most of our great oratorios belong to the past generation. Is the English people indifferent to religion? Has its heart changed in thirty years? Or is it groping for something the church cannot supply?

This raises the question which has been submitted to distinguished men of England who have replied, suggesting the reason why. Thus H. G. Wells suggests that what the archbishop says of the English churches is true of other churches. There is increased moral impotence not only in Britain, but throughout the world there has been a decline of religious feeling and aspiration, for the world is anxious and has a desire for peace of mind and courage such as only deep, pure conviction can supply. More people are asking to-day, according to Mr. Wells, What must I do to be saved? and asking it with a new intensity. But the answer is confused and unsatisfying.

He continues that it is an age of cold and abundant light. People know more than ever before in history. They know more of the origin of creeds and of symbols and of possibilities. But when they want a living answer they are repelled by mysterious chance and incomprehensible ceremonies. The trouble is that the early Christian church soon became hopelessly involved in superstition and ceremonies of great antiquity and took a poor theology in part from the philosophy of Alexandria. To-day intellectual integrity demands a recognition of the primary moral obligation.

Religion, he continues, is a larger thing than Christianity. (We would suggest that it is greater than the church, but a return to Christianity would give us the needed solution.) In this Mr. Wells agrees when he says that the church should follow Jesus of Nazareth, scrap its theology, and taking neither scrip nor purse set out to find the lost kingdom of God. The teachings of Jesus, he concludes, are the great force in the world without regard to the organizations that have taken upon them his name.

The Bishop of Lincoln agrees with Mr. Wells and his archbishop. He finds the chief cause, if not the sole cause, in the unexampled mastery of modern man over the lower world of nature. Man has reached a mechanical and intellectual domination, but his spirit has suffered. Man has learned many of the secrets of nature so has been filled with a new sense of his own adequacy. Science seemed to be capable of giving him all he desired.

But the Christian religion is preeminently a religion of redemption, while modern man has been content to express himself: "Every day in every way we are getting better and better." The appeal, then, of the church has found him inattentive. But the war and its aftermath has shaken the shallow optimism, for man can never enter into his inheritance merely by a mastery of external conditions. He must first learn to master himself. There is, therefore, hope that soon the Christian appeal and message will meet with a more patient hearing than at any recent time.

All of this and much that might be said is in recognition of a breaking down of old sanctions and the spirit of unrest in the world, yet along with it the souls of men are crying for the man of God; they are hungering and thirsting to hear "Thus saith the Lord." They long for that which will give them assurance, which will help them to meet the problems of their present life and prepare them for that future the hope of which is implanted so deeply in the hearts of men.

Mothers' Employment and Infant Mortality

An interesting field study in Baltimore, based on the births in one year which includes information as to mothers' employment, nationality, economic status, type of infant feeding and other details, shows that the mother's employment does affect the number of infants stillborn or who die during the first year. The employment of mothers during pregnancy was associated with remarkably high stillbirth rate, a high rate of premature births, a high mortality rate the first month of life, and a high mortality from causes peculiar to early infancy. The stillbirth rate where the mother was gainfully employed during the year preceding was over twice as high as the rate where the mothers were not so employed, as 6.7 per cent occurred in the first instance, compared with 3 per cent where the mothers were not employed.

The mortality rate during the first month in life was 77.3 per thousand where the mothers were employed away from home, which is nearly twice the rate, 39.9 per cent, where the mothers were not so employed. The mortality rate from causes peculiar to early infancy were 57 per thousand where the mothers were employed away from home, against 32.2 per cent where the mothers were not so employed.

It was found that this employment away from home was particularly unsatisfactory in the last month or two prior to the birth of the child.

Also the employment of the mother too soon after the birth of the child is a factor in the infant mortality rate. It was found that where the mother is employed away from home the mortality rate is one and one half times the rate where the mothers are not so employed. In determining this figure, allowance has been made for nationality and income groups.

Breast feeding is a principal element denied where the mother works away from home, as a much larger proportion of such infants were artificially fed. That artificial feeding has serious consequences is apparent from the fact that the mortality among artificially fed babies is between three and four times that among breast fed.

The low earnings of the father bear a large if not a principal responsibility for the employment of the mothers. When the fathers' earnings were less than $450, nearly 30 per cent of the mothers were gainfully employed during pregnancy, while only 1.2 per cent of the mothers were so employed when the fathers' earnings were $1,250 or over.

Also after birth where the fathers' earnings were less than $450, 22.1 per cent of the mothers were gainfully employed away from home during the infant's first year as compared with .6 per cent of the mothers where the fathers' earnings were $1,250 a year or over.

This shows that the employment of the mother in the low income groups is evidently a factor in the high infant mortality which characterizes such families. This Baltimore study was based on a larger group than the previous study and permits a closer analysis of the single factor of the employment of the mothers. The importance of this factor is demonstrated, since even within the same income group the mortality rate is higher where the mothers are employed outside of the home.

Methodist Stewardship

The Methodist Episcopal Church is closely approaching its temporary goal of one million Christian stewards and is already announcing as the only rational objective steward economics in Methodism.

These stewards are tithing stewards who give a tenth of their increase and have also organized for mutual helpfulness and encouragement and for the promotion of instruction in stewardships and practice among the members of that church. The plan has now come to be known as the storehouse plan or the storehouse movement and is already spreading in this form to a large number of its churches.

They are experiencing some difficulty since no plan has been provided by the general conference which meets only every four years. Hence the principal attention has been given to promoting general stewardship instruction. A great diversity of views prevails among them as to the extent and character of organization. Some believe that a full program should be carried out as set forth in the storehouse plan. Others are persuaded this method would be less effective than the development of stewardship character and administration. Others prefer to confine their activities to the promotion of stewardship interests. In attempting to unite these two interests in one they have now organized a Christian Stewardship Guild. It is left flexible so as to include those of diverse opinion, also so as to be adapted to large or small churches. The two main groups are those who would confine their activities to teaching, testimony, and mutual helpfulness, and those who desire to organize for full administration of their tithes and offerings. The possibilities therefore range from the simplest form of union to the most ample application of the storehouse plan, leaving each group free to determine its own plan. The guild is noteworthy, according to the Central Christian Advocate, for its extreme simplicity, as a small group in the smallest country church can organize, for only four officers are needed. Provision is made, however, for regular and frequent meeting of its members monthly and quarterly to carry out its program of inspiration, social enjoyment, mutual helpfulness, reading, study, and testimony, and in considering plans for the extension of stewardship principles. Where the storehouse feature is included, this regular meeting also gives opportunity to carry out their financial plans.

We give the above as showing what one church is doing. We are not fully informed as to how far they have carried out their storehouse plan. The principal stress has heretofore been laid upon an attitude of stewardship on the part of all toward their possessions and a paying of the tithing as a debt to the Lord and his church.

Such efforts by others ought not to discourage us but rather make us feel the more our grave responsibility. There has been some question of our giving space to reporting what others are doing but we will gain nothing by closing our ears and eyes to the facts of what is going on in the world and of the great movements being taken for social reconstruction. The knowledge of what others are doing should rather incite us to the greater effort to fulfill our high calling as a church and as individuals.

Three Years of Prohibition

The Outlook sent a reporter to interview Roy A. Haines, the Federal Prohibition Commissioner, as to the actual results achieved by three years of prohibition. The commissioner admitted that prohibition is not as yet absolutely prohibitive, nor is any other crime, but that continual progress is being made and each year the enforcement is becoming more effective. All of the States but two are supporting the prohibition movement through state laws enacted for that purpose and most of the work done is through the state officers. The real friends of the law are that great body of intelligent, quiet, patriotic Americans who are responsible for it.

On the question of bootlegging the consumption of strong liquors averaged 133,000,000 gallons before prohibition. In 1920 with a faulty system and a new organization, the total withdrawal of bonded liquor amounted to only 12,500,000 gallons, but this was reduced for the calendar year of 1922 to a little over 1,800,000 and that was released for medicinal purposes. There is moonshining but he does not consider that it is materially increasing and the stuff so manufactured and sold is dangerous.

Where enforcement has been most difficult, such as in New York City, arrests for drunkenness have decreased two thirds. The same is true of cases in the courts. The decrease in the number of criminals is over four fifths. Another result is that despite the increase of population the death rate in 1921 in New York City was 23 per cent below that of 1915. In New Jersey the arrests for drunkenness have decreased a little over one fourth and deaths from alcoholism have decreased 29 per cent. Coming to the Middle West arrests for drunkenness in the largest cities in Missouri have decreased 73 per cent.

As close a check has been made on the breweries and a sweeping reduction is shown.

The clamor against prohibition, he answered, principally originates in Europe. America is overwhelmingly in favor not only of the enforcement of the law but also for prohibition in and of itself. But the propagandists of Europe see the loss of the American market and also the handwriting on their own walls. Knowing this they are doing everything possible to discredit. They have said so much that the head of the prohibition movement in Europe came to the United States to investigate. He stood on the corner in New York City for hours but did not see a single drunken man. He repeated it the next night on another corner with the same result. He went to Philadelphia and to Baltimore, but after spending many hours he only saw one man in Baltimore who was half drunk.

Commissioner Haines made two valuable suggestions. The men who purchase liquor should be punished if anything more severely than should the bootlegger because in many cases he belongs to a responsible element of society and his rendering sanction to the violation of the law is therefore more serious as he sins against knowledge.

Also the responsibility of a citizen who sees a prohibition law being broken is no different than if he saw some other law of robbery or the like being violated. It is his duty to notify the police.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Our Hope of Zion

Some months ago I heard our worthy president make use of the following words: "The hope of the church rests with our young people." To this I fully agreed, but since that time I have been wondering if the underlying truth of his statement was fully grasped by many, who with me heard him make the statement. To-day I read a brief article in which the achievements of those who have gone before us were commended, which in its place is quite proper, but as I read it I again wondered if it were not possible that many might read it and entirely lose the aim and purpose of the writer. May it not be that many reading such will conclude that if we reach the place that was reached by those worthy veterans we are doing well, and thereby defeat the very purpose of Zion? The more I reflected upon this the more I realized that this danger lurked very near. Hence this article.

Our work is a progressive work. We must do better than our sires have done, and our children must do better than we are doing, or Zion will never be redeemed. It therefore becomes the bounden duty of everyone who has taken up the work of the church to see to it that the rising generation is prepared to go ahead of the present one. For I believe that everyone can readily see that if our children do not do more than we have done, and accomplish what we have not accomplished, Zion will still be in the future when their hairs are silvered with age. It is therefore obvious that the hope of the church must rest with the young people, and that this hope can only be realized when they have become equal to the task before them. We should therefore do our utmost to bring them to the place where they may reach the fullest development and be fitted for the fullest service to humanity. Social service coupled with true righteousness and absolute sincerity are the combined forces that will redeem Zion.

It is not enough then that I shall do as well as my progenitors have done; I must do better if I am to accomplish what they failed to accomplish. It is not enough that my children shall do as well as I have done; they too must do better, and it is my imperative duty to see to it that they shall do better by giving them the benefit of my experience and training. I must use every legitimate means within my reach for their development and training for fitness in service. I must enable them to profit by my mistakes as well as by my successes. I must do my best to enable them to be trained in lines that I have been deficient in, that they may succeed where I have failed. They must have a clearer vision, and a deeper insight into the Zion problems and the laws by which they must operate than I have had. They must know that which is yet unknown to me; they must be fully qualified where I have lacked qualification; they must be fully equipped to take up the work where I lay it down and carry it on to victory, for if they do no more than I have done, Zion will yet be in the future when their work is ended. But if we have them trained to begin where we have finished they will carry it on triumphantly toward its consummation.

People have said to me, "If I could go to the regions round about and only make a living I would be satisfied. I don't expect to do anything great." What does that kind of philosophy spell for us? Did you never reason it out in your mind? It spells DEFEAT in big capital letters. Zion can never become a reality with a philosophy of that kind fixed in the minds and the lives of the people constituting the church. Besides making a living I must produce a man in whom the Spirit of Christ is found. Besides developing a life that reveals the Christ character, I must contribute something for the social weal—I must advance the interests of the group. I must help others to become able to help themselves as well as becoming helpers. They too must contribute something for the good of the group. It is not enough that I make a living; I must help others to live. Socially, economically, ethically, intellectually, and spiritually I must be a source of strength and inspiration to the group. To be satisfied with small attainments is to fail; success requires the best there is in me.

No man will put the best into his work so long as his interests are divided. He must unify his forces if he would master the more difficult tasks. Likewise, a people whose interests are divided can never redeem Zion. So long as the selfish tendencies of man counterbalance his altruistic motives, just that long will Zion be a speculation. But when once the united interests of the group are centered in altruistic service, and concentrated on the aims and ideals of Zion, then and not until then will our hope of Zion be realized. We have hope that the young of the church will achieve this noble and worthy end if we do all in our power to give them the clearer vision which will enable them to develop the proper dynamic. This is evidently the meaning of the Nephite prophet when he said: "The laborers in Zion must labor for Zion, for if they labor for money they will perish." That is to say that no selfish motive can redeem Zion. It requires brotherly love, it requires service for the good of the group. It requires consecration, loyalty, to accomplish this task.

Permit me here to apply the philosophy of Christ which he so beautifully expresses in his parable of the "pearl of great price." He who finds it must sell all he has that he might purchase the field in which it is found. Zion is the field in which the "pearl of great price" is to be found. If we would have the more abundant life we must subordinate all else to the cause of Zion. So long as we have a "gold wedge" or a "Babylonish garment" hid away in our lives, just that long will we be lacking the enjoyment of the much-talked-of Zion. In other words, so long as the church permits Zion to be of secondary consideration, and selfish interests to claim first place, just that long will we fail to realize Zion. But when we are ready to make Zion of first importance and put the best there is in us into it and work with all our might we will hasten its redemption.

Having agreed with our worthy president that the hope of the church rests with our young people does not in the least relieve me of responsibility. It does not provide for us an excuse to do nothing. To the contrary, it is a challenge to us to do our very best that this hope might be fully realized. We must not only approach the desired end so early as it is possible for us to do, but we must double our diligence in providing for the training of the youth of the church for better service than we have been able to render. We should see to it that they are as far along in understanding and ability when they begin the work as we are when we are required to lay it down. If we will do this Zion is assured; otherwise it will still be in the distance.

Realizing then that the hope of the church rests with the young people we are under the greater and more urgent necessity of doing all that can be done by us for their advancement. We should spare no effort and we should spare no legitimate means for this noble work.

We might well be reminded that David provided much of the material for the temple, but it remained for Solomon to build it. So in like manner let us provide all we can, using every means within our reach, the meanwhile training the youth of the church to use the material we furnish them. Thus they with greater skill, because they have been better trained, and with greater power because they possess more of the Spirit of God, may be able to build up and establish Zion.

Much might be said in this matter, but I wish only to aid the thinker to think along lines that have claimed my thought, and to contemplate some of the problems that must be solved if we are to accomplish the tasks set for us. May our vision be clarified and our purpose strengthened is my earnest desire.

Respectfully,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

The Adams Colony in Palestine

I note where a writer in the SAINTS' HERALD does not speak favorably or kindly of the George G. Adams colony to Palestine. Now I think he had better come over and investigate and then give his opinion. Perhaps he would then be more charitable.

The Adams American Colony was a success for a beginning in a great and good cause. It was the beginning of colonization and the beginning of the restoration of Palestine. Had he gone through a quarter of what I have he would sense how I feel not to have it appreciated by our own at least.

Adams said it had been revealed to him that he should gather a people together to go to Palestine and start colonization and that the time had come for the Jews to begin to return and that they would follow the example. So they did and now there is more than a colony for every year since we came.

Soon after arriving he called the colonists to meet out near the Tabitha Fountain where he told them again how he had been called to bring them over but now felt his work was done and that they should go on and do what they could toward colonization and the restoration of Palestine.

Fifteen or twenty years afterwards I read in a paper where it said a strange coincidence had arisen. Manuscripts had been found in three different nations, in three different languages, and by professors or great men, and they had all three unknown to each other predicted the beginning of the restoration of Palestine to commence in 1866. Now that was the year we came over, so it struck mother and me very forcibly. It is down in Jewish history as the beginning of colonization or the first colony. I know Adams fell to a great extent but still believe God used him and at that time was leading him.

There are still ten houses or buildings standing of the original American wood brought over on the Nellie Chapin.

I think Latter Day Saints should be proud to think a little band of Saints went through such difficulties to start a work over here which is no disgrace to our names. Believe an old sister in the faith who has suffered much in this cause and waited years and years for the true faith to start up again over here which I lived to see, and although not flourishing I would be as indignant to have one of our own run it down.

May God bless his work both here and there and all over the world is my desire.

MARY J. FLOYD.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, Box 290.

Elder James Pycock writes that he is using the radio service in Canada. He delivered his first sermon by this method on November 19, 1922, from the government station at Winnipeg. He believes that this is the first time that the radio was used by our people in Canada and in fact the first time in the British Empire. This shows that Canada is not behind, but that the Saints there are alive to the opportunities thus offered.

Pastors Needed

We have received a number of comments on the recent editorial paragraphs and articles on the need of pastors. Here-with we give extract from a weekly letter from W. D. Tor-doff, now laboring in the Isle of Pines:

"I was reading from the HERALD to-day, the article by President E. A. Smith with regard to the need for pastors. I can fully indorse that article. For instance, in Canada I was at different times president of three branches. At the first place, I worked up a splendid congregation, left that place to better my conditions and went to another city. I was soon elected president there, and very soon I had the local priesthood at work, and in my short pastorate there, in connection with the priesthood, we had a very nice little branch, and a fine church to worship in. The last branch was small, yet in the few months I was there interest began to pick up and soon we had good meetings. The reason I relate this is because of the fact that since I left there only about four years ago, all these branches are dead. A lot of hard work it seems was for nothing. If we are to succeed again in those places, it means a large expense on the church, and if a good local man could have been placed in charge, supported by the church, I feel that I would not need to write regarding these conditions. The trouble has been, at least in my estimation, that men have been chosen for district presidents who had not time to look after the interests of the people."

Elder Cornelius M. Clifford in a recent weekly letter speaks in highly commendatory terms of the work of Elder David Pycock as president of the Toronto District. He says: "I truly wish that the other districts of Ontario could have a man under appointment doing district work. I think it is a move in the right direction."

Brotherly Love

Christ told his disciples to love one another. He did not mean the brethren any more than the sisters. What he said to one was meant for all.

It is recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 11:4: "No one can assist in this work, except he be humble and full of love." He does not mean worldly love, or the love of desire or appetite, but he means the pure love of God, for in the next line it reads, "having faith, hope and charity." Do you show that you have charity or brotherly love for your brother or sister when you speak evil about them, when you are continually finding fault with them, or peddling some imaginary evil about them to your brothers and sisters? But Sister Slander and Brother Jealousy are always trying to imagine some evil, and very anxious and willing to peddle it around. When Brother Jealousy and Sister Slander get together they are sure to beget corruption. Their tongues are always wagging; they make rivers out of rivulets, and mountains out of molehills.

We read in James 3:5, "The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Is a man humble when he boasteth? Is his heart full of brotherly love, when he casts an evil eye upon some of his brethren? No, but it is full of evil imaginings." Again we quote the fifth verse: "The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth." And in the sixth verse we read, "The tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell."

In the seventh and eighth verses it says, "Beasts and serpents of every kind have been tamed of mankind, but the tongue can no man tame. It is an unruly member, full of deadly poison." The tenth verse continues, "Out of the mouth proceedeth blessings and cursings. My brethren, these things ought not to be so." If you were humble and full of love would you be forever trying to find fault with your brother and sister? No, you would give them a helping hand; and if you saw them doing something wrong, help them to overcome it, then it is that you show them that your heart is full of love."

Do you remember what the Savior said to the priests when they were about to stone the woman to death for the crime she had committed? He said, He that is without sin, cast the first stone. Did anyone cast stones at her? No, they all sneaked away; the woman went free.

The Psalmist said, "I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue. I will keep my mouth with a bridle." How many of us heed the advice of the Psalmist? How many keep a bridle on their mouth? I have known several branches that were nearly broken up because Brother Jealousy and Sister Slander got their heads together and started Mother Gossip and all the little Gossips wagging their heads and tongues.

We read in Proverbs 10:18, "He that hideth hatred with lying lips . . . is a fool." In Proverbs 17:8, "The words of a talebearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts of the soul." We also read in Ecclesiastes 10:11, "Surely the serpent will bite without enchantment: and the babbler is no better." And Christ, in talking to his disciples, in Matthew 5:22, said, "Except your righteousness shall exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall not in any case enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Seven Reasons Why I Am Going to the Young People's Convention

Reason Number Six: I Need Spiritual Strength.

For years I have heard it emphasized that one must have a great amount of spiritual strength if he is to succeed in his church work. In my younger days I did not appreciate the meaning of this, but in the last few years I have been trying to help out in some small way and find that I am in constant need of spiritual guidance, without which my own efforts fall flat. I find also for some reason that the social life of to-day is such that one cannot withstand the temptations and solve the problems of life successfully unless he have the continual presence of God's Holy Spirit to lead and guide him into all truth.

I am informed that at the Young People's Convention there will be a young people's prayer service each morning. Although many of the other things on the program I am sure will be excellent, the one thing that caused me to decide to go was the prayer service. I am looking forward to these hours with the young people with a sincere prayer upon my lips that I shall receive an extra supply of spiritual food to aid me in meeting the problems of life. Of course, this will mean that all of us journey to Lamoni with this prayer in our hearts, each expecting to give as well as to receive. I am sure the rest of the young people will not disappoint me.

biting or slandering them is a modern Pharisee, and a hypocrite; if you cannot speak well of your fellows better not say anything at all. In Galatians 6:2, the command is, "Bear ye one another's burdens." Are we fulfilling this command when we are tattling or backbiting our brethren and sisters?

In Ephesians 4:29-32, it reads thus, "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good, to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. Let all bitterness and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

Also in Ephesians 3:8-10, "But now put off all these, anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communications out of your mouth. Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and put on the new man, which is Christ Jesus." In Doctrine and Covenants 76:7 we find this, "Liars, and sorcerers, and whomsoever loves and makes a lie, shall suffer the wrath of God on earth, and the vengeance of eternal fire, and be cast into hell." Is not a backbiter and slanderer a liar? Webster's definition of backbite is to speak evil of one, slander, a false accusation, and malicious report. Now Saints and friends, I hope there are none of you that these lines will apply to; but if there are, I hope you will reform now. "Cease to do evil and learn to do well."

Two Missionary Children Die on Same Day

I am writing to acquaint you with the very sad news of the passing away of the two little boys of Brother and Sister Keith Rogers. Melville Danforth, twenty-eight months old, died at two o'clock Saturday afternoon, March 31. Gordon Keith, sixteen months old, died at eleven o'clock the same evening. It seemed to be a complication of pneumonia and influenza. Everything was done that could possibly be done for them, but it seemed God wished them to go to him.

Keith and Helen have taken the blow with wonderful courage. They are both determined to continue on with the work, and their example is an inspiration to any missionary who is thus placed in the position of making a sacrifice for the work such as they have made.

Both Sister Almond and myself came down to help them, and I am staying a few days in Wiley to preach in the Saints' church here.

Topeka Saints Go Visiting

The president of our branch, Elder Ira G. Whipple, has for some time been employed as chief engineer at the Security Benefit Home, located on a beautiful hill five miles out of Topeka.

As a result of the pleasant friendship that exists between Elder Whipple and the superintendent, G. E. Groomer, Brother Whipple was invited to preach for them. Announcement was made of the service and an invitation extended to the choir and all the Saints who could attend. The time was set for three o'clock in the afternoon of March 4.

The majority of the Saints attended, including the choir to assist in the singing. Two special solos by J. G. Juergens and a violin solo by Roy Whipple added much to the interest of the service. Elder Whipple took for his theme, "The life of Christ," and was assisted by J. G. Juergens and G. E. Groomer.

Upon arriving, each visitor was invited to register, and an opportunity to be shown through the building was extended to all. Our thanks to these worthy people for their kind hospitality. In love's glad endeavor we realized that an avenue of service was open to us on this day to give cheer to those in this home by the things we did.

A new feature in our branch is the early Sunday morning prayer service of our young people in charge of Brother W. L. Chapman, formerly of Independence, Missouri. Brother Chapman is doing a good work among our young people.

The brethren occupying the pulpit recently are A. A. Goffe, Ira G. Whipple, Harley Hyde, and W. L. Chapman.

Enthusiasm

What we want is more enthusiasm in this latter-day work. We should know what our aim is, then work for it, pray for it, and sacrifice for it. "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

If our aim is to hasten the day when Jesus shall come to rule as King of kings, then the gospel must be preached and Zion established. For this is the day of his preparation.

Napoleon was called "a one hundred thousand man" by his enemies because they feared the effect of his enthusiasm on the battlefield more than an extra hundred thousand men.

Sometimes things look discouraging, but that is the time to keep on keeping on. What pulled Lincoln through the Civil War was that in the darkest hour he would lean back, draw a deep breath, and remark, "This will too pass." Some people are such pessimists they die before they get a task started.

Several thousand years ago Cheops built a pyramid in Egypt. He kept a hundred thousand men at work twenty years building his tomb. What a doleful time he must have had thinking of dying.

What we want is people alive with enthusiasm, who are not afraid to work. This is our work as well as God's work. If we expect to have part in the great millennium, let us work and pray as Brother Albert N. Hoxie sings:

"Pray, men, pray! pray each day
That his coming we do not delay."

God is working; why shouldn't we?

MRS. E. G. MAXWELL.

Graceland Ranks High

The following is taken verbatim from the Lamoni Chronicle for March 29:

Professor Koos of the department of education in the Minnesota University has spent the greater part of the past year in the study of junior colleges, in all parts of the United States. In reviewing his research at the recent meeting of the North-Central Association of colleges in Chicago he ranked Graceland College as one of the three highest in the country in scholarship, attitude of the students, and general worth-while attributes.

Considering the scope of the investigation and the qualifications of the judge, this is certainly a mark of distinction worth while, and one which should stir the younger generations with a determination to further their education at Graceland.

From Jerusalem

In the year 1922 I was introduced to a minister of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Elder Harry Passman. Since then I attended nearly all his meetings. And now I find that it is God's real church, because its teachings are in accordance with the Holy Bible, and now I desire to be baptized.

Since I started to attend these meetings, I learned many good things of the Bible which I knew not. And I find that the Spirit of the everlasting God is controlling it.

I can tell God's love towards the world, as it is written, for God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son for it, that he that believeth in him might not perish but might have eternal life.

What a great mercy of our God to the sinners. If also the sinners believe in our Savior Jesus Christ they will also be saved. How merciful is our God. He knows that it is very difficult to overcome this world's temptations without the shedding of the blood of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Battle Creek, Michigan

The Word of Wisdom and Pastors

As pastor of the Battle Creek church I have many times felt impressed that unless our people heed more closely the Word of Wisdom we shall as elders be called many more times to their sick bed than we otherwise would be.

In my pastorate a large majority drink coffee, tea, and eat meat freely and a number of the men use tobacco. I trust I am not unwisely radical on this revelation to the church. I realize it was not given by way of command, but rather as wise suggestion for the salvation, temporally, of God's people; nevertheless it is a revelation as much as any revelation given to the church and should be heeded if nothing more, out of respect and honor to our heavenly Father, regarding his wisdom for our own good.

I have from time to time used my influence both in private and public to encourage the Saints to heed each and every word given, and by example and precept have done what I felt was wise to raise them above the things that do and would continue to make them subject to the contagious diseases that are so freely passing over the land from time to time and taking so many so suddenly from life.

I have felt the need of making a better preparation to fortify the Saints against this distress which I feel sure we could largely escape, in its severe form at least, if we would but realize the Lord's kindness expressed in this Word of Wisdom.

I might add that as pastor here we have found it possible to open the work at Marshall, Michigan, about twelve miles from Battle Creek, and have procured the Marshall Library for Sundays and now have five very fine people ready for the waters, having baptized one already, and a good prospect to raise a branch in the near future, for a deep interest is shown and the efforts of the one family of Saints living there are very fruitful.

I cannot express fully in words my deep appreciation for the articles lately written on the subject of pastoral work or the need of pastors. Many of us noticed the one written by H. O. Smith in the HERALD of February 28, 1923; and the late one by Brother F. Henry Edwards of the Twelve. Brother Elbert A. Smith also wrote some of late. Until the church awakens to this fact and sees to it that every branch, small or large, has a pastor giving all his time and working faithfully and long hours to save what we have already brought into the fold; taking care of the sick and dying, (spiritually speaking) and building up the Saints in general in the church, making their influence felt in their surroundings, until then we shall never be developing Zionward. I feel it so strongly and sure. May God hasten that day.

I am here in a city of 48,000 people, the mother of food manufacturing cities, and am required to make every cent I have, and do what little I can to help the work. Saints are dying, starving, and are sick and undeveloped, and yet as pastor I cannot give them what little service I am capable of rendering. It burdens me so to realize the situation. Many calls and opportunities are before me to build which I trust we might be able to take care of in a partially profitable way at least, but my hands are tied and I cannot do more. Since I have bills to pay I must spend my time in acquiring means to meet them. Were it not that I have been under conference appointment for a few years I might not have seen this so clearly, but I see it and cannot rest until I do all in my power to help us to arise to our privileges. I shall ever work to that end, until my vision is either realized or my ideas are reformed. My health broke while in the field and I was released. I am much stronger now, yet not fully recovered. Brother Arthur Gillen of the Twelve is my cousin and he knows of my condition.

In gospel bonds,

ROY M. YOUNG.

Self-Questioning

(Sent by C. B. Hartshorn.)

There may be paths that I can tread in safety
Unharm'd by dangers close on every hand;
Yet weaker ones, embolden'd by my going,
May fail and falter where I firmly stand.

I must not merely ask if I myself, uninjured,
This place of careless mirth may enter in,
But "What of its effects on lives less guarded?"
And, "Will it cause some weaker one to sin?"

Grand Opening

Graceland Broadcasting Station

K F F V

Graceland College is pleased to announce that her broadcasting equipment is now installed and that the official opening will occur Saturday, April 21, between the hours of 7.30 and 9 p. m.

All members of the church, and especially Graceland College students and other friends, are requested to "listen in" between the hours of 7.30 and 9 on the above date.

A program of music and addresses will be given, which it is believed will be of interest to all who take the time to "tune in" for K F F V at that hour. The wave length is 360 meters.

If those who expect to listen in will drop a card or letter to the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, at once, arrangements will be made to broadcast information which will be of interest. It is desired that all should know all others who are listening to the same program. It will be like a large family all assembled together. If you will send in your name and address it will be of very great interest to all your friends to know you are hearing the same music and the same addresses they are hearing. Will you please drop the president a line to let us know you will "tune in"?

Remember the date, April 21, 7.30 to 9 p. m.

Independence

The speakers at the Sunday services were: At the Stone Church, J. A. Gillen at 11 a. m., F. M. McDowell at 8 p. m.; Englewood, Elder Rannie in the morning and H. L. Barto in the evening; at Liberty Street, Elder E. A. Curtis in the morning and J. E. Vanderwood in the evening. At the South Side the choir rendered an Easter cantata in the evening, "The First Easter." Elder W. W. Smith delivered the radio sermon at 6 p. m.

President F. M. Smith returned to his office the last of the week.

President F. M. McDowell came to Independence on Friday and remained over until Tuesday, meeting with the First Presidency in the work of their office and getting matters in shape for the Young People's Convention. At the Sunday school at the Stone Church he addressed the various classes of young people concerning the convention in June, and after speaking Sunday evening remained for the business session Monday evening.

Apostle John F. Garver was in Independence Wednesday in connection with his editorial and official work. He returned home, however, as he had an appointment at Tabor, Iowa, over Saturday and Sunday for a two-day meeting.

A. Max Carmichael was in Independence from Saturday to Monday evening. Sunday morning he met with the Enoch Hill Sunday school and in the afternoon took part in the problems meeting.

The problems meeting Sunday afternoon consisted of an address by F. M. McDowell on "What is religious education?" and one by A. Max Carmichael, superintendent of that department, on "Methods of religious education." Both were well received.

The Temple Builders at the South Side announced a supper for Tuesday evening, the 10th, to be followed by an entertainment.

The young people at the Stone Church again announced addresses by Church Historian W. W. Smith on Sunday the 15th and 22d, then a trip, leaving at 7 a. m. Sunday morning, the 29th, for Far West, where points of historical interest will be visited and services held. Transportation is to be arranged by those going as best suits the convenience of each. All ages are welcome both to the lectures and to make the trip.

Elder Alvin Knisley returned to Independence about the first to secure his missionary steamer car and family before proceeding to his summer work in his mission field.

President E. A. Smith reports that his mother is at home and slowly gaining but that Sister Cochran, his mother-in-law, shows no material change.

Mrs. Ruth Lyman Smith slipped and fell on the floor of their home in Kansas City, and in some way broke her ankle Saturday, which necessitated her being taken to the Sanitarium where the bone was promptly set. Monday satisfactory progress was reported.

F. Henry Edwards was in Nebraska over Sunday doing church work. He is expected back this week.

A. E. McKim returned early in the week from a business trip in time to attend the meeting of the Board of Publication on Thursday.

Bishop B. R. McGuire and James F. Keir went to Lamoni Friday on church business.

The Temple Builders of Group No. 1 in Independence, with Mrs. George DeTray as leader, have recently made two trips to Northeast Mission, in Kansas City, where Elder Amos T. Higdon was holding special services. They each time gave a much-appreciated half-hour program preceding the sermon.

At the business meeting of the quarterly conference of Zion held at the Stone Church Monday evening the time was given principally to a discussion of a modification of Form Four as published in the Independence items of the HERALD for January 17 and April 4. A substitute was offered as follows:

"Departmental Elections and Business

"Resolved, That the Saints in Zion in conference assembly shall, at the annual meeting in January, elect the heads of departments of Zion. The right of nomination lies primarily with the body because of membership and not with any individual or part of the body by virtue of office, but we hereby extend to the heads of the general departments of the church and the pastor in Zion, in consultation with the First Presidency, the privilege of also submitting, by their joint action, nominations for these offices.

"Local departments in Zion shall continue to hold meetings to elect local departmental officers and to act upon questions of local departmental concern. Rules and regulations for the conduct of such meetings shall be determined by the local departments as has been their privilege heretofore."

The principal objection made to the substitute was to the words "the right of nomination lies primarily with the body because of membership." Adjournment was taken at a late hour to next Monday evening, April 16, 8 p. m., when this same matter will be the special order of business, after which other business of the conference will be taken up and transacted.

The names of Howard W. Harder and George W. Eastwood were presented for ordination to office of elder and recommendation concurred in.

Kansas City Stake News

The speaker at Central on the 11th of February was Church Historian W. W. Smith at 7.45 which was an able effort to an appreciative audience.

Owing to the severe cold snap on the 18th the monthly priesthood meeting and meeting of the Women's Department were canceled.

The young people's services will be under way when this news letter is published. They are to be held April 8 to 15, inclusive. A neat four-page folder is circulated among the churches, the front cover bearing the picture of the speaker, Brother Cyril E. Wight, together with announcement and date. On the second page is a short dissertation by President Elbert A. Smith on "The salt of the earth." The third page sets forth the program with subjects indicated for each evening, while the last page contains in script a short message from President F. M. Smith of encouragement and blessing. This is all on good paper, good press work, making it a very attractive piece of advertising.

Two weeks of special meetings were held at the Northeast Mission, closing the 11th of February, in charge of our stake missionary, at which there was a fine attendance throughout, many hearing our work for the first time. A carefully-planned advertising campaign was carried out. Good help with the music was also a factor and the use of the two-way chart helped make the story plain.

The Oriole Girls and Temple Builders, recently organized, assisted in ministering to the wants of the sick and other shut-ins.

On the 25th Brother Higdon commenced another series which will close Friday, March 6. Vital results have not yet been reported.

Armourdale inducted four into the kingdom Sunday, the 1st. They contemplate special meetings commencing probably April 16 at that church.

Argentine began meetings the 25th, the first week engaging a different speaker for each evening. Those responding were W. D. Bullard, A. R. White, Ammon White, W. L. Gates, L. E. Hills, and for the second week Evangelist Ammon White will hold forth till the 6th. A fairly good attendance is reported. Arthur B. Phillips was the speaker on the evening of March 18. The audience though small was favored by an eloquent discourse.

At Bennington a congregation of live, hustling young Saints have as a pastor Elder R. L. Bishop, a young man recently ordained, holding the pastorate since the first of the year. He has become sufficiently acquainted with them to make the coordinating plan a reality. He has had able help in dispensing the word in the persons of E. D. Moore, J. A. Tanner, Walter W. Smith, and Apostle F. Henry Edwards, the latter making a very earnest appeal to the young to render service and prepare more efficiently for the work that shall rest upon them in preparing for the redemption of Zion. President F. M. Smith surprised and pleased the congregation by being in attendance. Sister Mary McKnight, eighty-eight years of age, was recently baptized. The Mount Washington orchestra found it convenient to furnish a musical program recently which was a drawing card, the room being filled.

Stewartsville, Missouri

The sunshine seems very welcome again after the cold and stormy period. There has been a great amount of sickness in our community of late.

Sister John Jensen passed away Monday the 12 inst. Funeral the 14th in Saints' church. Services in charge of Brother John Davis, sermon by Brother John Sheehy of Cameron, Missouri.

Deane McCord spent Saturday with home folk on his return to Columbia to resume his school work in the university. He is a member of the Missouri University Military Band which gave a concert in Convention Hall, Kansas City, on the evening of the 9th.

A little girl was born March 16 to Brother and Sister Bert Ivie.

Some days have passed since the meeting closed which was held in February by Brother James A. Gillen, but it is in no wise forgotten. The correspondent has been having an attack of influenza, or it would have been reported sooner. The brother's logical reasoning, together with his pleasing personality and optimistic views of church problems, his encouraging outlook for us as a branch make his visits to us a joy and comfort. The only regrets we had were that he could not stay longer or come oftener. We need more men in the church like Brother Gillen.

A number from this branch attended the stake conference at Saint Joseph, Missouri, last Saturday and Sunday. All report a very good conference.

The work here is moving along nicely, harmony and good will prevailing.

ANNA McCORD.

March 19, 1923.

When Jesus was a lad he asked, "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" And yet there are many in the church to-day after years of membership in the church, who are still debating and still undecided whether they will be about the business of Zion or still go on serving self. Are you one of the undecided ones?

MANVILLE, WYOMING.

Editors Herald: About the middle of January I left Independence by train for my field, leaving the family and steamer there until my return on the 31st of this month when we expect, as soon thereafter as possible, to all three pull west and enter my field.

The openings in this field for openings and ministerial attention are now such that it is utterly impossible for one to think of taking care of them all. For the past few weeks I have been visiting scattered members throughout the State, taking in some places never visited by a missionary before. I have encountered ice, snow, and blizzards, but withal have had a good time, enjoyed myself in single-hand campaigning for a change, and what is still better, I have a number of names for baptism as soon as with our car we can get to them in warmer weather.

About a hundred-mile ride with sleds and lumber wagons in visiting a group of our people about forty miles back from rail, and nearly every step of that distance covered on the walk, was somewhat tedious, I admit, after the comforts and so much experience with a high-power car, but I felt blessed in the effort, and while I feared it was a misdevotion of my time which might be applied more tellingly in more convenient circumstances, the very realization of the energy and uplift which came to those in isolation reacted as a blessing to me. It made me think of old Canada days.

At present I am preaching nightly in the Methodist church in this town of deserted houses. There was a big boom here a number of years ago and they built way beyond the capacity of conditions to maintain. Many lost their all. Fine bungalows are available, also other types, for but a fraction of their cost. It is on the North Western Railway and surrounded by what is accounted a good farming region. Some large structures stand unfinished. My attendance has been fair and representative; the outcome we await. One thing we want is repentance on the part of the candidates, if any, and that in the true sense of the term. Let them come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits.

Next winter we expect not to return to Zion. We like it there and everywhere else, but we can do more here and serve a greater purpose abroad. Patients often come to themselves just before they die, and that may be true of the Gentiles whose fullness has nearly come. The night cometh when no man can work and it falls to our lot to make hay while the sun shines.

Much apathy toward religion exists on every hand. Uncle Sam is growing increasingly secular, say what you please. No fight, no opposition, scarcely any dissentient words here anent my drastic and stanch presentation. Fair numbers, elite people, courteous, good manners and good attention, but when it comes to decide between the god of revelry, voluptuousness, parties, dances, games, gambling, etc., and the God of heaven, what decision will they render? The lawfulness of radios, automobiles, airplanes, is sure, but in them God is not to be forgotten.

This rainless State is wet with booze. Bootleg-moonshiners are everywhere, and the surrounding country here I am told on good authority is alive with stills—still alive with booze. Skeptics, secularists, are trying to find out a substitute for Adam, for the Bible account of creation. When they find a fossil, of course it was put there millions of years ago.

Our three standard books are too plain upon the subject to admit of our denying our descent from two common parents. And the chronology is too easily traceable to admit of it exceeding very far the six thousand years. But suppose we were to allow it to be twice six thousand, it would come nearly as short of satisfying modern skeptics.

Despite any discovery, any demonstration, we are committed to the fact of Adam and Eve just as much as we are to that of Seth, Abel, Cain, Noah, and many others. In view of what we have in our three standard books on the subject, we cannot grant, we cannot yield, to the statement of David Swing some years ago, who said in reference to the account of creation, "I regard it as a poem."

We might be prone to grant the fossilization of, possibly, both our vegetable and animal creation millions of years ago, but not that of man. And I trust that our people will not, in their educational marches and conquests, tamper with the landmarks which the hand of God has laid and certified to by the pens and lips of inspiration on both continents in ancient and modern times. It takes no more wind to deny the virgin birth than to deny our account of creation. Adam being the "first flesh," was not evolved from a lower form.

Most sincerely yours,

ALVIN KNISLEY.

Efficient organization demands highly centralized control, and abuse of such power is a potential danger; but in benevolent control lies potential blessings. And why spend time and energy in guarding against possible abuse of power instead of helping and supporting the benevolent control?

Children's Day Programs

Begin now to complete arrangements for observance of Children's Day. We offer this year three specially written cantatas for our own people. All of them were tried out last year, but only one, "Zion redeemed," was published in time to be used. The others were improved and developed so one may be assured of their practicability for a school of any size.

ZION REDEEMED

By Mollie Davis

This cantata is distinctly Latter Day Saint in theme, has various interesting drills, songs, and mass situations. It is comparatively short, and easily presented. The costuming to represent the nations can be done with little expense, and the effect is good.

Price, 10 cents each, 75 cents a dozen.

LANGUAGE OF THE FLOWERS

By Madge Craig Siegfried

Requires 25 or more children and is one of the most beautiful affairs one can imagine. The costuming, to represent flowers, is one of the most effective features. The music is nearly all new, and the drills a riot of color. This one was presented in Lamoni last year and with excellent results.

Price, 15 cents each, $1.20 a dozen.

ZION BUILDERS WE WOULD BE

By Edward D. Moore

Adaptable to small schools or large ones. The theme is carried throughout and includes demonstrations as well as drills. The characters include chorus of children of all grades, several beginners, primaries, juniors, intermediates, Orioles, Temple Builders, and Boy Scouts.

There is a new building song, with words by Frank A. Russell.

Price 10 cents each, 75 cents per dozen.

(Excerpt from letter of C. Edward Miller, April 3, 1923:)

I believe you have the "amen" of the most solid and spiritual men in the ministry with you in your Blue Pencil notes of March 21 on education. I think it will have the effect of steadying some of the young men and also heartening some of us older ones. We have a specialty, and that is to preach the gospel. We can do the job as no other people on the earth have the authority to do it. That gospel must be preached by the power of God and nothing else can take the place of inspiration. There is always danger of us placing too much confidence in our own ability and not enough in the power of God. If we can only avoid extremes, what a splendid ministry will be developed! A spiritual, enlightened, well-informed set of men preaching the restored gospel is what this sick old world needs. Your notes surely made that clear and they rang true to the ideals which the Lord gave us.

Young People Organize in Saint Louis

Sunday, March 11, a group of about twenty girls and boys met at the Saint Louis church building and organized a young people's Sunday school class.

Previous to this organization the girls organized the Temple Builders and the boys a boys' organization. These two organizations combined are making up practically the new class. The officers elected are as follows: President, Alexander Klein; vice president, Ruth Thomas; secretary, Helen Archibald; and treasurer, Gordon Shaw. Robert A. Lloyd was elected to act as our teacher.

With great optimism we are looking into the future, hoping to be crowned with success. The church needs strong young people. The young, of course, have to be taken into consideration. We will stand the test if we should be called on. We are preparing for better citizenship here and in heaven. Loyalty to our leaders and service to humanity shall be our motto.

Asking all Saints to pray for us, we will remember them in our prayers.

A. K.

Ottumwa, Iowa

We thought it may be of interest to tell of the series of services which were held at this place from February 3 to 15 at which date the speaker was called away, owing to death and sickness. It had been about five months since we had had any change from the routine of branch meetings. We therefore thought we would accept the offer of some services of a special.

Once this was decided we wrote Elder C. J. Smith, missionary supervisor of this district, who was only too pleased to come. Insertions were made in the local paper and letters written to some who would be specially interested. Topics were "Stewardships," "Christian realities," the "Principles," etc. The earnestness with which these topics were presented, and the grasp the speaker had of his subjects made them very clear and interesting and the brother enjoyed fine liberty. Brother Smith is a man of pep, one who puts his all into his sermons. I wish to especially mention the two wonderful sermons on stewardships.

There were no resulting baptisms but there has been no excuse for the people of this community for not hearing the gospel. The great need here is a new church which would add much to the success of the work and would afford a much better opportunity to the speakers.

The services were fairly well attended as the weather was bad and so many of the Saints had the influenza but we were wonderfully blessed through the administrations. Two the doctors gave up to die but they are well now. The cooperation of the Saints was appreciated by the speaker and the brother expressed his appreciation before leaving.

The Saints there are of the opinion that the church has in Elder C. J. Smith an earnest, conscientious, serious worker, loyal to the banner, and that he has great prospects for valuable service.

Having moved out into the routine of branch work we do so with renewed vigor and hope.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
F. C. BEVAN, Publicity Agent.

We have a letter from Sister William W. Dennis of 711 Fifth Street East, Ashland, Wisconsin, in which she says that if any elder is to speak by radio and will let her know so that she can listen in, she will send him postage and gather an audience which he would not otherwise get.

A broadcasting station is being established at Graceland this week. Let us hear what you want them to broadcast. The time is coming when we shall have a number of these stations, and we want each to be distinctive and yet representative.

If you ever listen in on a sermon from some other radio station, try to analyze the principles of its construction and tell us what you think of it. We shall be interested in your frank comments.

WACO, TEXAS. I am receiving your radio concerts very loud and clear and have enjoyed them very much.—Roy Jacobs, Jr.

SPARTA, TENNESSEE. On Sunday, March 23, I heard the Mormon sermon from W P E. It was fine and came in on one tube only. Please send me your program.—Frank D. Sutton.

LEXINGTON, NEBRASKA. Your sermon for Sunday night came in fine and certainly enjoyed it very much. Let the good work go on. Seldom fails that we do not tune in your programs in Kansas City.—W. W. Brown.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI. I am a believer in the practical utility and effectuality of the radio as a means of reaching many people with our message—thousands who will never hear it in any other way. And for this reason I wish we had a broadcasting station the equal of any in all this region. I hope to see this a reality. The sermons broadcasted from W P E so far, I think have been of the right kind—clear, plain, conservative, and yet unequivocal—just the kind that will make the intelligent "listeners in" take notice and consider.—H. E. Moler.

EDGERTON, MISSOURI. I receive your broadcasting nicely over the crystal or vacuum tube. I am certainly glad to see Kansas City get another broadcasting station.—Charles Turney, Jr.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI. Last evening I had the pleasure of hearing your address as it was broadcasted from your station. I assure you I enjoyed it very much, and could hear distinctly every word throughout your sermon.

Blue Pencil Notes

It sometimes happens that when a man is quite ready and willing to pour oil on the troubled waters he finds some other man standing by equally ready and willing to touch a match to it.

Zealous missionary: "I hope to die in the harness with my hand to the plow."

Absent-minded pastor: "We will all remain seated while we sing, 'Stand up, stand up for Jesus!'"

F. A. R.: "Now sing it, 'Will your anchor hold'? Don't sing it, 'Will your rancor hold'? We know your rancor will hold; but how about your anchor?"

Holding the priesthood is not very profitable if all one does is to "hold" the priesthood.

The last touch of the bizarre as well as the tragic connected with the return of King Tutankhamen came with the death of the discoverer and despoiler of his tomb, Lord Carnarvon. Egyptians believe that the pharaohs pronounced a curse on any man who should disturb their carefully planned repose. Carnarvon is said to have died as the result of the bite of a poisonous insect that is popularly supposed to have issued from the tomb or its vicinity. Egyptians are very sure that this was in fulfillment of the curse. The story is spread over the pages of the daily newspapers in England, Europe, and America, accompanied by a great deal of speculation as to the possible significance of the strange affair—it being related also how other disasters have pursued the Carnarvon family since the opening of the tomb, such as the sudden and strange illness of Lady Carnarvon en route by airplane to her husband's bedside.

Sir Conan Doyle is reported to have added the bizarre to the tragic by affirming that the ancient Egyptian kings and priests had a profound knowledge of the occult and probably set "elementals" to guard the tombs of the pharaohs. An "elemental," be it known, is something lower than a human spirit, not having a soul. "Elementals" may be the raw material from which humans are made; if so the "elemental" that would stick around a tomb three thousand years to get a chance to bite some one on the cheek will make a choice specimen of humanity, quite like some now extant. Or "elementals" may be the watchdogs of the spirit world, content to guard the master's property three thousand years after he has abandoned it.

On the face of it, then, the death of Lord Carnarvon would seem to be a case of murder. But probably Tutankhamen is as safe from punishment as the average American murderer of to-day. It is a question for lawyers. Probably he would have three lines of defense. First, he acted in self-defense. Carnarvon was clearly guilty of "breaking and entering," also of pilfering. Tutankhamen's "elemental" was within the law in resisting. Secondly, if necessary, Tutankhamen could no doubt establish an alibi. Thirdly, to be quite safe, he has departed to a country with which Great Britain has no extradition treaty.

The unfortunate witches of Salem were not so wise. They cast the evil eye on people of their own time and locality, so were ducked or burned. They were too near-sighted. Like Tutankhamen they should have allowed themselves time, at least seventy-five years, in which to make a get-away, like bandits who warn their victims to refrain from calling the police for ten minutes after their departure. If some living Egyptian could be connected with the working out of this curse, even as an accessory in setting the "elemental" insect upon Lord Carnarvon something might be done about it; but apparently the real assassins got away long, long ago, and an "elemental," though in a sense responsible as an agent, has no standing in court. We do not even know whether the insect was killed.

If this had been the tomb of a common Egyptian laborer, nothing would have happened. In fact the common people of Tutankhamen's day left no tombs; and to-day have no bodies in existence to disturb, and at best probably had no "elementals" at their disposal, being but common people. It would seem then that caste continues after death. Hamlet was quite wrong in his conclusion that

Imperious Caesar, dead and turned to clay,
Might stop a hole to keep the wind away.

Apparently a king is not to be lightly regarded even in death? And if one can retain "elementals" to guard his tomb, no doubt he can keep a considerable pack of them in the spirit world to nip the heels of other spirits who do not his bidding. The thought hath possibilities. Democracy may not be safe for humanity even over there.

Seriously, now, these are not high-hatted residents of ye olde Salem, neither Cotton Mather, who to-day speculate about spells and curses and spirits and "elementals"; they are very modern up-to-the-minute people of the twentieth century. We hope they will for the time being cease to uphold to ridicule Latter Day Saints of the early day as superstitious and ignorant. Our forebears should have waited till this day to have aired their little superstitions, thus escaping remark. It grieves one that his grandfather should have gotten into ill repute by observing the crack in the new-baked loaf or omens in the sky. He should have left that for men of to-day who can talk of curses, and spells, and "elementals," and still move in the best society. Then, to be even accused of digging for treasure, was damning; now a lord may dig for a mummy, get bitten by an insect and die, and another lord may say it was done by the "elementals," and the public is quite taken with the notion.

Far West Stewardships

In another column will be found an article by Bishop J. A. Koehler on "Stewardships in Far West Stake," which cannot but be of interest to all the Saints who are alert in any degree to the progress being made towards the accomplishment of our social ideals. I have long been of the opinion that general agreement on the detailed mechanics of stewardships and their operations will come only when experience in this direction shall have been ripened by practical developments, and that to wait for such general agreement on details before we start to establish stewardship would be to defeat the purpose of the church.

There are yet many members of the church (the statement might include officers) who are thinking in terms of self-interests and to these the practical applications of the doctrine of stewardships are clouded, and the difficulties seem insurmountable because magnified by obscurity of vision. But of this we may be sure, stewardships as a social objective of the church will not in perfection be worked out until a start has been made. And so far at least, other than the partially-established stewardships of the ministry, the number has been small. The fundamental principles of stewardships seem clear, and once the favorable attitude has been developed and the Saints willing to enter into the social conditions God intends we should, it ought to be easy for us to work out the details by experience, in the fear and admonition of the Lord.

I am pleased that Far West Stake is making a start. May God add his blessings. Bishop Koehler is to be congratulated on the progress so far made, and it is to be sincerely and devoutly hoped that the Saints of that stake will give him hearty, moral, and material support in the movement.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

The passage in Doctrine and Covenants which approves other organizations for good in the church is section 117:12. There is therefore an error in the SAINTS' HERALD for April 11, second column, page 341 in the article, "As Christ loved the church."

Considerable comment is being made over the fact that the Sahara Desert has been crossed by automobile. The facts appear to be that caterpillar trucks were used, and that not more than a fourth of the Sahara is really sand or desert in that sense. Much of it is rock land with water under the surface. Where this water comes to the surface there is an oasis. There seems an indication from this partial survey that much of this supposed desert could be made productive.

What Can Be Done When We Will

The story is told in a recent issue of the Christian Standard of Charles G. Finney. He had been trained for a lawyer but was preaching in Rochester, New York. As he preached, up in the front seat of the gallery sat the chief justice of the court of appeals. After a short time the judge turned to the man with him and said:

"If that man were a lawyer and pleading a case, and if he would back up his statement with evidence like that, I would be compelled to give him the verdict."

Finney preached on. The chief justice said: "He seems to be an honest man. I claim no man has a right to be an honest man unless he is in the right."

Finney preached on. The chief justice jumped to his feet, took his coat and hat and wormed his way along the aisle down to the platform. He pulled the tail of Finney's coat.

He said: "If you will call for sinners to take the front seat, I will lead the way."

Finney stopped preaching, and said: "I am informed by the chief justice that if I will make a call for penitents, he will lead the way. I make that call."

He did, and nearly every lawyer in Rochester marched down the aisle, and inside of twelve months one hundred thousand people in that section of the country were swept into the kingdom of God, all by that influence.—Exchange.

That shows what one man can do. To convert people to the gospel of Jesus Christ and fully convert them so that they become sturdy oaks and not simply the result of the efforts of one man. To convert them so that it is a change of life, not simply an expression of a desire to do right and follow in the footsteps of Jesus may take a longer time, yet we are confronted with the plain fact that in the early church from 1830 to 1844 there were probably close to 200,000 people baptized.

This convinces us that when the church presents a united front, when we come on bended knees in all humility desiring the direction of the Spirit of God to do his will, that the church will yet move out in mighty power and baptize thousands in a day. The world is hungering and thirsting for the word of God. The opportunity is before us in increasing measure. We do not want to place our ideals too low, but have faith in God and in his work.

The message of God is a logical one, which if presented in court must receive the decision. The world needs the teachings of Jesus Christ and also the blessings which accompany his Holy Spirit.

A few years ago some were astonished at the call for 20,000 new converts before General Conference, but with an endowed priesthood moving forth in regular service, with the whole energy of each and every man, woman, and child moving to the common end, 20,000 should prove too small an estimate.

Have faith in God. To the man who puts his trust in the arm of flesh such things will seem impossible.

But to the man whose faith is in God, nothing that his heavenly Father directs is too great to attempt and to accomplish.

Divorce Problem

It is one of the interesting signs of the times to note the anxiety felt concerning our diverse divorce laws. For the whole United States the average is one divorce for less than eight marriages. Many States have a ratio of one divorce to less than two marriages.

In the past those unhappily mated could go from one State to another and secure a divorce without regard to the law of the domicile. But in 1916 the supreme court of the United States limited this deplorable condition. The status of the marriage is determined by the matrimonial domicile. But the result is that one may be unmarried in one State, married to one woman in another, and a bigamist in a third State. There is a need of uniformity. This was clearly seen as early as 1909. A convention was held and uniform divorce laws were drawn up, yet only three States out of the forty-eight have accepted, so only three States have "uniform" divorce laws, if one can pardon the humor in such a suggestion, according to the Outlook.

But the basic difficulty after all is with the marriage laws which permit of the marriage of those young in years. Ministers of God have been known actually to accompany parties from one State to another in order to perform a marriage ceremony of those who are under age. Mr. Ross says that in nineteen States there is no prohibition of the marriage of feeble-minded, and even where that prohibition does exist as a rule the feeble-minded person can swear that he or she is not feeble-minded and that settles it. Thirteen thousand girls of fifteen years of age are married women. The legal age for girls in some States is twelve years, while seventeen States have no minority age limit.

We have presented this matter before, but we hope to arouse at least our readers to a keen realization of the situation and of their responsibility as citizens.

S. A. B.

It is significant to note how comparatively rarely a divorce follows several years of married life and the birth of more than one child. Yet the great tragedy of divorce is the children. Judge Alexander Brough, the presiding magistrate of the probate court in the city of New York has stated that more than half of our criminals come from the children of divorced families, because they have lacked that essential need of childhood, a proper home with right parental supervision and discipline.

Christian Scientists Do Not Oppose Sheppard-Towner Act

During the recent Congress an act was passed authorizing certain medical investigation, the money to be expended by the States, the United States Government cooperating with the Health Department. This is called the Sheppard-Towner Act.

There have been some accounts in the papers of the Christian Scientists, in certain instances at least, opposing the adoption by the state of the provisions of this act. But we are just in receipt of a letter from the Committee of Publications for Missouri of the Christian Scientists in which they advise us that they offered their amendments to the Sheppard-Towner Act when it was before Congress, and that these amendments were accepted, so that the bill is now entirely satisfactory to them. They declare that these newspaper items are without real foundation so far as they and their representatives are concerned.

They are opposed, however, to compulsory medication and the invasion of the home for compulsory examination, but state they do not otherwise oppose medical or child welfare legislation. S. A. B.

Buy Your Books Through the Herald Office

*We need an improved people for the work

Our primary purpose is not a selling argument. The Herald Publishing House belongs to the church. It belongs to you whether you buy books and subscribe for the church papers or not. It is organized for the purpose of helping the missionary and pastoral arms of the church, for the purpose of service to the church.

This service is extended to the procuring of all good books and is not confined to those published by the Herald Publishing House. Those who are in charge have been and still are endeavoring to make the publishing house not only self-sustaining but to show a profit. But this is for the benefit of the church as a whole, for all of its members, since to that extent it relieves the burden of the general church treasury.

But if we are to build up Zion we must have an informed people, a people who are grounded in the Word of God, a people who not only buy the books of the church but who read them. It is not a question of how many books are bought; it is not a question of how much is contributed to the publishing house in this way, but how many books have you made your own? The appreciation of the literature of the church depends upon a broad reading.

We should by all means study carefully the three books. Unless we do so we cannot understand the plans presented for the establishment of stewardships and the building up of Zion. We cannot understand the work being attempted by the church. But to really appreciate the efforts now being made and which will be made in the future, we must also know what is being done in the world. We must be in touch, as time and our purse will permit, with the literature of the day on religious education, on the problems of religion, in the field of social service and in the field of economics, to mention a few topics among many.

It is not necessary that every family buy all of these books. Every family should have the three books of the church for personal and family reference and frequent study. But there are many other good books which can be bought by the branch or group of a few families. They may be bought by one and loaned to others.

It is not the mere possession of the books which proves beneficial. It is not the number of Bibles we have on our shelves or the fine quality of our Bibles, but how careful is our reading, how much do we understand, and how much are we ready to put into practice in our daily life?

We may feel that we have not the time, but there are few of us who do not waste much time over reading which is not beneficial, over frivolous novels (we do not say that all novels are frivolous or useless), or over books or magazine stories which are negative if they are not actually pernicious. The time spent in gossip would be much better employed in study and in reading that which will bless us. There is a joy in such reading when once the taste has developed, which far exceeds the ordinary moving picture, newspaper, or magazine article.

If our desire is happiness, it can be found here in the highest degree. If our desire is service, we are thus prepared for better service, and we are serving humanity in employing our time in developing our talents for future use. Good books well read are indeed a treasure house. S. A. B.

"In organized society to-day the 'wheels' of each of us are turned, for better or for worse, by our mainspring desire to enjoy the feeling of our worth as a person among other persons—that individual feeling requiring always for its fullest satisfaction the surest possible substantiation at the hands of some particular group whose approval happens, at the moment, to appear especially pertinent and desirable."—From "Mainsprings of men," in Scribner's Magazine for February, 1923, p. 233.

Stewardships in Far West Stake

By J. A. Koehler

The plan being used for organization in that stake.

This explanation of the accompanying graph, with the articles of association that follow, is intended to enable the Saints throughout the church to envisage the work of establishing stewardships that is being undertaken in the Far West Stake.

On the presumption that Latter Day Saints believe the revelations given to this church and that they are sufficiently well informed to perceive that this Zionie undertaking is grounded in the principles of Christianity as set forth in the doctrines of this church, we do not attempt in this article to argue its scriptural justification. Our chief concern is to explain the practical workings of this Christian endeavor.

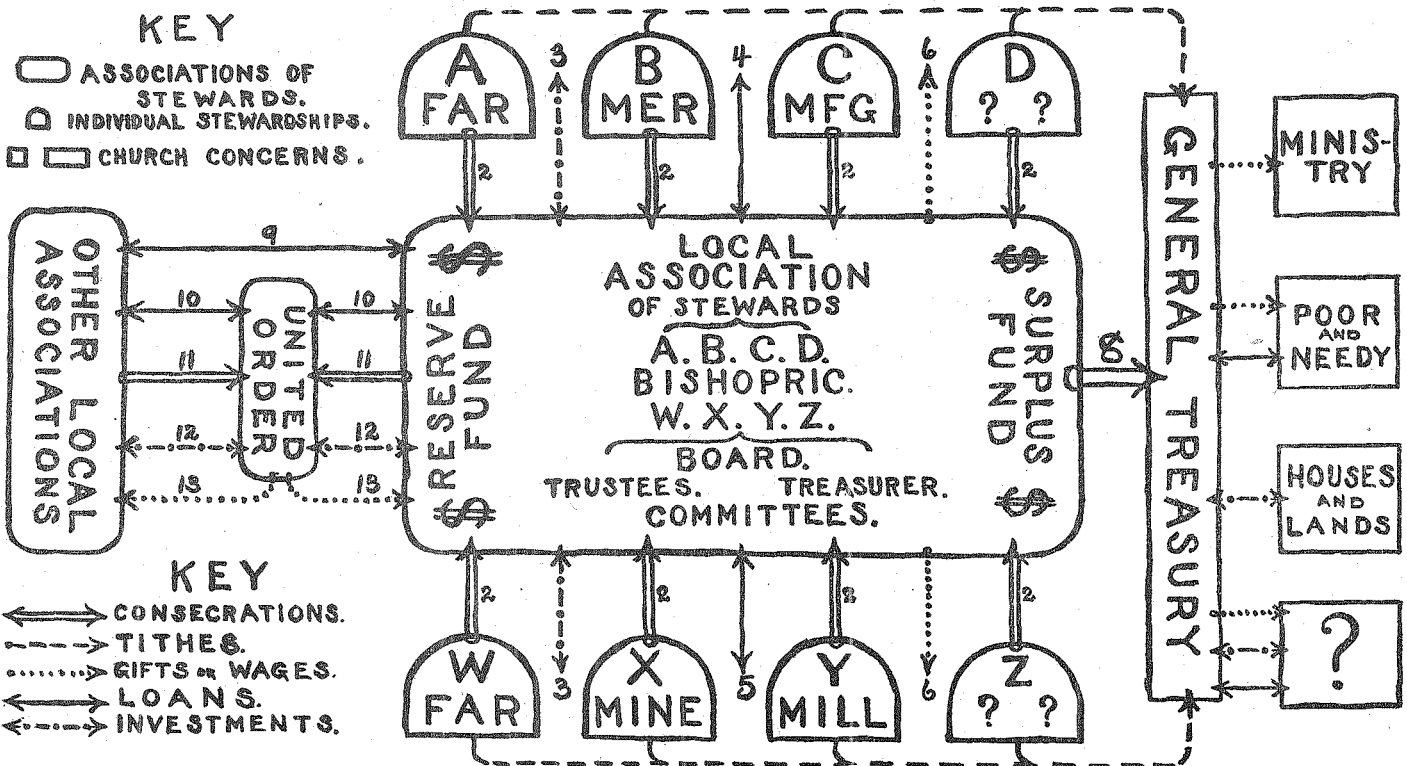

A Moral Undertaking

First, a few general observations may be in order. Let it be understood at the outset that this is a moral undertaking. It is not mercenary; its stipulations are not grounded in considerations of financial gain, but in considerations of human values—in the effects of this mode of life upon the worthwhileness of the individual. Nevertheless the moral adjustments contemplated cannot fail to yield as a natural reward an abundant supply of the material things upon which human well-being depends. "Seek ye first to establish the righteousness of the kingdom, and all these things shall be added unto you." We believe in the promises of God.

This effort is not inspired by a spirit of either individual or of group selfishness. While it is designed to promote and protect the welfare of our own group, and of its individual members in particular, it is also universal in its adaptability; and it is sincerely hoped that the work will be undertaken in the spirit of "good will" toward all mankind. "God so loved the world," not this or that particular group of men in the world, but the whole world; and even though Zion may originate with Latter Day Saints, it should never be forgotten that the people of God are to be the "light of the world," "the salt of the earth," and that it is God's purpose to make his children workers with him in blessing all mankind. These blessings will be broadcasted by the power of the example of God's people, "that others, seeing your good works, may glorify your father which is in heaven."

We do not say that what we are now endeavoring to do is the perfection of the ideal toward which we are moving, but it is at least an approach. Perhaps it is as much of a departure from established habits of thought and action and as big a step toward our goal as should be attempted at one time, at least under present conditions.

Now while at the outset membership in the associations may be limited, it is contemplated that ultimately practically every producer in the Christian brotherhood will be in some way connected up with these organizations. No jealousies or ill will should arise from acts of administration to which present necessities determine us.

As the graph and articles of association are contemplated, it will become evident that these organizations are not for the purpose of managing the particular business concerns of the individual stewards. As the movement develops the group will come to have greater control over concerns upon the disposition and management of which its welfare depends. There will also be a closer group supervision; but group management of individual business concerns is not contemplated. Where an enterprise is of a magnitude or a complexity which demands the managerial skill of several men, the men jointly will be charged with the responsibility for its success. Group projects may increase and expand with the development of the stewardship regime.

Membership in the associations does not take away property right and title. But in such cases as are referred to in the preceding paragraph the manner of holding title will be settled according to the nature of the case and as the necessity for such action arises. Consecrated properties, of course, pass into the possession of the group, and (if a transfer of real estate for example) involve the execution of a deed or the passing of title.

Turn now to the articles of association and read them; then in the light of their stipulations we will study the graph.

Three Classes of Concerns

Three classes of concerns are indicated: (1) Associations of stewards, (2) individual stewardships, and (3) distinctively church concerns. (See the upper key and study the graph.) The lines represent different kinds of financial transactions (see lower key) and at once indicate relationships existing between the (1) individual steward and the church, (2) the individual steward and the local association, (3) the several local associations, (4) the local associations and the United Order, and (5) the associations and the general church.

The central figure indicates the composition and constitution of any local association. It will be seen that the associations are composed of those in the several localities who unite with the Bishopric for the purpose of fulfilling the law of God looking to developing a society grounded in Christian principles. The individual members are indicated by the letters A, B, C, D, and W, X, Y, Z.

Under the terms of association the individual members (A, B, C, D, and later W, X, Y, Z) and the bishopric constitute (1) a board of stewards (commonly called a board of directors), (2) a board of trustees, (3) a treasurer, and (4) such committees as the circumstances of the undertaking may call for. The several organs of the body (or local association) possess severally the powers delegated to them in the articles of association or in by-laws which may be adopted in keeping with the terms of the compact.

At the extreme left is a figure designated "Other local associations." All that is indicated in the central figure of the graph (which is a detailed diagram of any local association) and all that is said concerning this particular detailed association is true also of each and every other "local association" indicated at the extreme left. Obviously there is neither a necessity nor is there space for drawing each and every local in detail.

Facts concerning the general church officers who have to do with the administration of the funds of the "general treasury" of the church (see graph) are neither indicated in the graph nor discussed in this article except in a very limited way and then only as may be necessary to complete certain statements of fact concerning the workings of these stewardship associations.

The composition and constitution of the "United Order" (see graph) are not indicated or discussed. I have no matured judgment to offer on this particular question. Doubtless the First Presidency will set forth the facts concerning the United Order in due time.

Surplus to Common Treasury

Trace out on the graph the relations and facts as they are set forth. A, B, C, and D are individual members of the church. At the same time each is engaged in some business activity. "A" may be a farmer, "B" a merchant, "C" a manufacturer, and "D" a physician or garage man, or whatnot. There may be any number of any one or more of these classes of men each of whom desires to comply with the stewardship law. These, with the bishopric having local jurisdiction, form an association for stewardship purposes. The formal rites of stewardship appointment are observed and certificates of stewardship issued. Thereafter, and in compliance with the law of God, and after having supplied the needs and just wants of themselves and their dependents from the earnings of their businesses, A, B, C, and D, each pays his tithes into the general treasury (see line No. 1). After having tithed their earnings, A, B, C, and D each, according to agreement, places the surplus earnings of his business in the "common treasury" or treasury of the association (see lines No. 2). The funds in the treasury of each local association which arise from the consecrations of surplus by the individual members, or which are derived in other ways, are the common property of the association, that is, of the stewards (A, B, C, and D) jointly, but not severally. That is to say, that no member of the association has any claim upon the common properties except as a member and only while a member. When one ceases to be a member he loses all right and title whatever in the properties of the association. Thus any possible attempt to disrupt the movement by designing or disgruntled stewards is forestalled. Note particularly, however, that the rights of private properties of those who are expelled or who withdraw from the association are not altered by loss of membership.

For business reasons (which should be apparent) and because of the limited resources of the members in the beginning of these organizations, it is agreed that fifty per cent of the moneys derived from the earnings of individual stewardships shall be set aside as a "reserve fund" for the purposes and as specified in article eight. That is to say that for the present the capital of the association shall not fall below fifty per cent of the consecrations of the stewards; it may be more, but until the rule is changed, it may not be less. Any portion or all of the remaining fifty per cent (which is called the "surplus fund"—see chart) may be used for the benevolent purposes specified in article one. This means that the surplus fund may or may not be appropriated by the "voice and common consent of the order" for purposes which may cause it to disappear (i. e., be used up entirely) so far as the local association as such is concerned. This surplus may flow into the "general treasury," as indicated by line No. 8, or it may flow into the "united order," as indicated by line No. 11. But in any case, the passing on of the surplus is by the voice of the members to whom it belongs until set aside for other than association purposes. After that, of course, it becomes the property of the general church, e. g., or of the "united order," e. g., and is managed or used up by these in accordance with the rules governing. (See e. g. lines 10, 12, and 13.)

Funds Used First for Order and Members

In the beginning, and until other needs are more pressing than local association needs, any portion of the surplus fund may be made to do the service of capital; worthy men who need opportunities will be given opportunity by the employment of part of either or both the reserve fund and the surplus fund. For example: Land may be purchased by the association and sold or leased to W, X, Y, and Z on equitable terms which make it possible for them to become established industrially as well as to acquire homes. Of course W, X, Y, and Z will be required to come under the same rules as A, B, C, and D, that is they would pay their tithings into the general treasury (see line No. 1) and place their surplus earnings in the common treasury. The percentage of the contributions to the common treasury that should be applied on the purchase price of the properties to which titles are to pass to W, X, Y, and Z will be determined in each individual case and obviously will depend upon the circumstances of the individual cases. However, since the purpose of the organization is to do good, to fulfill the moral law, to "bear one another's burdens"—since human values are the ends to be sought and not private profits or advantages, the terms of the agreement between W, X, Y, and Z, and the trustees (who act for the association) are wholly equitable, not extortionate. Profits are out of the reckoning altogether. Interest will be required only as might be necessary to give the contract legal standing or as the association might be required to pay interest on money borrowed for the purpose of carrying on such benevolent work.

Good will and mutual aid are the essence of pure religion. The members of the association, individually or collectively or both, will devise and employ such methods of cooperation as in their judgment are calculated to promote efficiency and group solidarity and to help the weak to become strong. These methods may be modified as the work expands or becomes more complex, and they will embrace increasing numbers as sectional interest become unified. There are many ways in which men may cooperate. It is not necessary to describe them nor to argue their worth.

Some may be less skillful in management. In this case it will be the duty of others to train them in the science and art of business management. W, X, Y, and Z may have a bad year now and then, or they may become ill, or other misfortune may overtake them, making it impossible to meet the obligations which the purchase of a home or of a business under world conditions might impose. Ordinarily such circumstances might entail disastrous consequences. In this case such influences and aid will be thrown around them by the association as will turn an otherwise unsuccessful venture into a success. Special committees will be appointed to meet individual needs as they arise.

Order May Acquire Industries

From time to time, in order to complete the industrial organization and to derive the advantages arising from such added enterprises, the association may provide for the acquisition and development of mines or mills or other factories of this or that sort. In such case X, Y, and Z will be added to the association in one way or another to strengthen the organization and to increase its resources and therefore its power to do good. Of course X, Y, Z also will come under the same rules and in the enjoyment of the same rights as A, B, C, D.

Some concerns may be profitably expanded or a need for financial help from the association may arise, in which case (see lines 4 and 5) common funds may be employed to promote or protect the business interests of its members. As indicated by lines 4 and 5, in case of a loan, the money will be returned to the common treasury as agreed upon; or should a permanent investment be made, the interests of the association will be secured by some customary legal procedure governing (see lines No. 3).

General group needs will arise from time to time. Each local association doubtless can be relied upon to make such appropriations as it is able to make and as wisdom may direct for such purposes. This money will flow into the general treasury or treasury of the united order as the case may be (see lines 8 and 11), to be administered in accordance with the laws of the church or of the united order governing. The moneys thus appropriated would flow out of the general treasury in turn to supply the needs of the poor and needy, to purchase land and build houses of worship, or whatnot. With the development of these associations the temporal problems of the general church officers will become more general, and the problems of the local officers more local. Or, to put the matter in another form, each community being organized to manage its concerns, each community will therefore care for its poor and provide the means for local church buildings and whatnot. This will be done through the general church officers in charge of such work.

When an order or association is effected, it is easy to see that it becomes a matter of no special concern whether under the accidents of exchange the profits from social industry (and all modern industry is social) are gathered in by A or B or C, or whether by W or X or Y or Z, since the surplus that is gathered in flows into the common treasury to become the common property of the whole brotherhood. (See lines No. 2.)

It will be necessary to establish some sort of community of interests in surplus goods as between the associations, in the Far West Stake for example, and the associations in the other stakes (Independence, Kansas City, Lamoni, and Holden—these being the present existing stakes), and particularly if one group is chiefly agricultural, for example, and another chiefly mercantile. This is contemplated in Christian doctrine. Should any community refuse to enter into relationships under which the inequalities arising from the accidents of exchange would be somewhat wiped out, other communities might find it necessary, in order to secure justice, to complete their own organization by occupying distant territory and promoting concerns which because of their peculiar form or particular location, make them distinctly profit-yielding concerns. To overcome sectional rivalries or class jealousies and to establish common interests in the surplus accumulations arising from intersectional activities or relations, a "united order" becomes almost a necessity. Through the action of the "united order," the details of which we do not give, group surpluses are utilized to serve the interests of the several communities or sections either by directly assisting locals (see lines 10, 12, and 13) or by the promotion of concerns which serve all sections at the same time and in the same way.

Intergroup Relations

The intergroup relations are indicated by lines Nos. 9 to 13. Mutually helpful relations should be developed between the different communities. Loans should be made back and forth according to needs and ability, so that the weak parts might be strengthened. Lines No. 11 serve to indicate a flow of community surpluses into the treasury of the united order, to be managed for the good of all the communities considered as a whole.

The consecration of the surplus, whether by the individual steward in the local association or by the local association or by the community, is the equalizer—the chief thing that makes equality among men a possibility.

Now, at the same time that A, B, C, and D and W, X, Y, and Z are engaged separately in some individual business enterprises, they are jointly or collectively engaged in the management of a social business enterprise. That is to say that it is the business of these stewardship associations to manage the surplus or common property for the benevolent purposes set forth in article one (which should be read in this connection). This relationship or this form of society serves to create a social consciousness, while at the same time it gives the best opportunity for individual initiative and affords the best incentive for individual enterprise. The individual steward has his own particular business to manage from stewardship motives and under stewardship agreements; and he is, therefore, becoming all the while more and more involved in a social business enterprise of which he is a vital part and in which he has ever-increasing interests.

In some cases, "Z" for example, the association may retain a controlling interest in the individual business enterprise. It may be that in some cases all property rights will be reserved. This will no doubt be the status where the business is of such a nature, or is so situated, or is of such magnitude that the welfare of the group is more directly involved in the management of the business or the disposition of the properties. Such cases will multiply as the gathering hastens and the organization becomes more extensive or complex. The farther removed men are from the sources of supply, the greater the necessity for protecting individual and group interests by contracts or other means.

Each steward will give an accounting of his stewardship directly to the trustees as is agreed upon in each individual case. Budgets also will be filed annually. The information secured in this way will enable the group to take action to protect any and all parties. Budgets and accounts will enable the group to ascertain the ways in which its energies should be directed. And through these means also the worthiness of any individual steward to special considerations may be fairly judged.

The bishopric having local jurisdiction are ex officio trustees and members of the board of stewards. This is in accord with the most advanced ideas of public administration as well as with the law of God. The just and effective administration of the affairs of society depends upon the choice of men of integrity whose special study and preparation qualify them for such duties. The popular methods of selecting representatives of government have not and are not likely to secure effective and just public administration. The continual changing of men in office from year to year as is now done is socially abortive and conduces to wastefulness, wirepulling, intrigue, dishonesty, and graft.

Stewardships are a Christian undertaking. "Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ." The administration of the public or group or common concerns of this undertaking is therefore obviously a function of the priesthood. Under the rules according to which men are selected for office in the priesthood and hold such office, harmony and stability of government are more likely to be realized than under any other known rule. Moreover, the development of intersectional interests among the men of the church affords an added reason why those having charge of the general problems of the church should represent the men of the church in their industrial undertakings.

It should be observed that while the bishopric are custodians of the common properties they are subject to the "voice and common consent of the order" in their work of administration.

Why All Classes in One Body

Among the reasons for embracing different classes of businesses in one organization, we have the following:

First, Industry is social in its nature. Any effective adjustment of the affairs of industry must take into account the interdependent relations existing between the parts. Each part must be adjusted to the action of all the others considered separately and as a whole.

Second. Some industries are peculiarly profit gathering and others are under a severe handicap. Industry is social; its products are social products. "We are laborers together." Union of interests serves to break down class feelings and to develop a wide sympathy, and to effect an equitable distribution.

Third. The concentration of wealth in the hands of certain classes or communities is avoided.

Fourth. The association does not manage any particular enterprise; it manages only the surplus derived from separate business enterprises; and therefore it does not need to be composed of men of an exclusive class. But since the surplus arises from the efforts of all joined together, all should come to have a common interest in the surplus and together, through their agents, to have the management of the same.

Fifth. "In the multitude of counsel there is wisdom." This form of organization makes available and focuses at a given point the best talent gathered from a wide area and a wide experience. Similar reasons justify the union of many local associations in one. Each local association is constituted as follows:

- (1) A board of stewards (or directors).
- (2) A board of trustees.
- (3) A treasurer.
- (4) Committees as required.

The office of secretary is a function within the board of stewards.

Many incidental questions will arise. The answer in each case is determined by "the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom":

(1) Mutual helpfulness—the common welfare, not private accumulations of surplus goods, the motive of activity.

(2) "Every man seeking the interests of his neighbor."

Full, free, and equal opportunity to all.

(3) Every man a producer, "From each according to his ability."

(4) Equitable distribution. "To every man according to needs," conditioned of course in individual faithfulness, and capacity to use or enjoy.

(5) Consecration of surplus.

(6) Group ownership and control of surplus goods.

(7) Social equality.

Far West Stake is our particular field. It is a field rich in possibilities. We shall be glad to hear from others who have long yearned for Zion, and whose hearts are tuned to the harmony of her righteousness, and who wish to unite their labors with ours in the great work of building up the righteousness of the kingdom of God.

The fund created by such earnings, profits, or increases shall become the common property of the whole association. It is further agreed that fifty per cent of the aforesaid fund shall be held primarily as a reserve fund to refinance or to assist the credit of stewards whose capital, from disaster or financial depression, may become impaired, or for the purpose of expansion, and as the trustees may deem necessary or proper. Our protest is not simply against the violation of the Prohibition Act and the Eighteenth Amendment. The protest is deeper than in the violation of this law. The basis for law violation is laid for the younger generation and the amount of crime is thereby increased through the breaking down of proper respect for law administration. As an example the New York Times relates the confession of two alleged moonshiners who pointed out the location of two murdered deputy sheriffs. Another news item adds three more murders to the list. These are direct results of efforts to avoid law enforcement.

A Jewish Homeland Is Bound to Come

NEW YORK, March 29.—Lord Robert Cecil, who recently arrived here from London, has given a statement to the Jewish press, which will appear in the New Palestine, organ of the Zionist Organization of America in its issue to-morrow. The statement says:

"The British Government and the responsible, right-thinking people of England are for the establishment of the Jewish national homeland in Palestine. Great Britain will never withdraw from her promises."

Lord Cecil is also quoted as saying: "I believe that when the history of the war comes to be impartially written, the two greatest results will be the establishment of the national Jewish home and the creation of the league of nations. The two are not really disconnected. They represent the two great ideas for which we fought and by which we conquered—the ideas of nationalism and internationalism."

"It is most absurd to say that Zionism is dying," Lord Cecil declared. "Zionism is synonymous with Judaism and the Jewish people have had sufficient experience to know that the opposition of its enemies serves only to strengthen it."

When asked what influence the attacks on Zionism had on British public opinion, his answer was:

"No influence whatever. Great Britain does not listen to the enemies of the Jewish people and of Zionism. Great Britain is a friend of the Jews and a friend needs no explanation, and enemy explanations are of no avail. The Jews, like all other people, must expect opposition. Has not Great Britain enemies; has not America enemies; why worry? The Jews who have lived for 2,000 years in strange lands must expect that some one will attack them. But they should be proud of the fact that they have good friends who will always be with them."

Harnessing the Jordan

One of the principal projects ahead in the development of Palestine is the construction of irrigation works. Because of centuries of neglect and the denudation of its forests much of the country has become dry, desert-like waste. But the soil of many such areas is rich, and if an adequate supply of water could be turned upon them, the country might once more deserve the description "flowing with milk and honey." The land within the great rift of the Jordan valley can be most easily supplied with water, and it is there, no doubt, that the first extensive irrigation projects will be carried out. The water of the Jordan, on its way to the Dead Sea has a descent of more than 600 feet in the 75 miles separating the Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea. It is believed to be practicable to develop a considerable amount of power by harnessing the Jordan at several points. Some of the more ambitious proposals even look to the creation of an industrial Palestine with the Jordan power, while others would make use of it for municipal purposes and irrigation work.

The Fairview News, published at Fairview, Montana, under date of March 29, 1923, contains a very interesting article written by Elder Eli Bronson, accompanied by a two-column cut of Brother Bronson. It sets forth quite clearly the status and aims of the church to the extent possible in an article of that length.

Demand That the Government Use Your Money to Find a Substitute for War

Senator Borah, in a speech before the Senate on December 18, said:

"We shall expend this year, Mr. President, for war purposes $2,650,000,000; for agriculture, $24,876,000; for the public health, $15,877,000; for promotion of education, $10,151,000; for labor interests, $4,718,000; to study the causes of and the remedy for war, not one cent."—Christian Work, March 24, 1923.

Concerning College Work

Great thinkers, free students, and religion give the true bases of education.

The following extract from an address by Chancellor Fred-eric A. Hall, of Washington University, should prove of interest to our readers. His address though a brief one covers a rather broad scope and gives a basis of thought in several different directions concerning college work. For example, he refers to the splendid buildings erected which have been referred to as the most beautiful group in America because they were erected as a unit and followed one architectural ideal. But he adds:

"More enduring than the buildings beaten with the storms of centuries are the great names associated with English and European universities. To-day, after sixteen hundred years, with every physical vestige of the structures lost, there still glows the fame of illustrious leaders in the history of education during the first centuries of the Christian Era."

He continues that the university is for free and open investigation. Every man may search for truth and express the truth as found without hindrance.

"The economist may proclaim his theories of tariff and of taxation. The scholar in any field is a free man. The only restraint is the consciousness of every thoughtful man that his position carries with it a certain responsibility to the general public. Then, too, here one finds no shackles upon his religious views. The founders of this institution wisely decreed that no sectarian teaching should ever mar the breadth of its foundation, but that in religion it should be as broad as human belief. Catholic or Protestant, Hebrew or Gentile here finds a welcome—a place where his religion is respected and may be cherished without interference.

"On the other hand, it would be a sad day for this or any other institution of learning when it becomes indifferent to the claims of religion. I trust that increasingly the spiritual interests of students may be protected and directed.

"In my judgment, matured with many years of observation, there is no anchor more steadfast in holding one to a sane course in life than the recognition of his relation to the Supreme Ruler of the universe.

"I trust that you as students will not allow new presentation of truth to interfere with the essentials of the religion in which you have been trained. Have faith to believe that eventually the truth will reveal, not destroy, solid foundations. I repeat that here are nurtured and cultivated religion, world-wide in scope, and a disposition to know and reverence truth in every field of human endeavor."

He then calls attention to a factor that is all too often ignored, that splendid men of ability are secured for the faculty and that they are there through the generosity of others for the benefit of the young people who attend. Their services, the building and equipment as well are practically a free gift; for without the generosity of others, both in the present and in the past, without the sacrifice of these men, very few young people could ever meet the expense of securing an education.

As to the value of an education he calls attention to Who's Who in America for 1922. Seventy-two per cent of those there listed attended college; over fifty-nine are college graduates.

Practical Cooperation

Factory turned over to workers with good results.

The practical example of cooperation is shown in the case of Henry A. Dix, of New York. When he began business twenty-seven years ago he felt that the worker got but little outside of his wages and he felt that that system was wrong. He felt, according to his son, that those who give their lives to build up a business for another man should have some share beyond that of mere wages in the concern which they helped to create. From time to time he has tried to make changes which would recognize the human element in the success of the business concern. He shortened the working day and ran the plant on the five-day week. He inaugurated a system of dividend profits so that the employees would share.

It was three years ago that he put his four plants on a five-day week schedule, leaving the daily hours unchanged, and found that the workers were in better condition and that production increased on this schedule. His business is one of manufacturing dresses and nurses' uniforms with a turnover of $1,000,000 a year. No change was made in the wage of week workers nor was the piece rate altered, so that the wages of the piece workers either remained the same or were increased with the increase of production. The factories are closed down for two weeks each summer and employees receive vacation with pay while the plants are renovated and put in order. No overtime is ever worked. There is no unemployment. Even during the business depression the plants were kept running.

Now he has transferred the whole business to the workers, has incorporated it as a new company known as Henry A. Dix & Sons Corporation, but neither he nor his sons own any of the stock or will receive any of the profits. The material assets are $300,000 and the working capital in cash $250,000. For this the workers have paid nothing directly but have given their notes. From the net earnings of the business 20 per cent is to go to surplus; 20 per cent to apply on paying for the stock until it is paid up. Mr. Dix has accepted an honorary advisory relationship so that the new owners may have the advantage of his long experience in the business, but this gives him no control of the conduct of the business or of the disposal of the earnings.

Illiterates of the United States

Of the eleven most enlightened nations of the world, the United States has the largest percentage of illiterates.

"Germany and Denmark have but two illiterates in a thousand; Switzerland has five; Netherlands six; Finland nine; Norway and Sweden ten each; Scotland sixteen; England and Wales eighteen; France forty-nine; the United States sixty.

"The Legion is unsparing in its characterization of these conditions. It offers such statements as these:

"There not being any people in Norway who cannot read and write but those suffering from certain mental or physical defects."

"And this: 'The only German illiterates are mentally defective people or idiots.'

"And this inquiry, 'Should the richest nation in the world lag behind other enlightened nations in stamping out illiteracy?'"—Bridgeport (Connecticut) Times.

Excessive Use of Drugs

Some doctors do not use opium derivatives.

It will doubtless prove a surprise to our readers to learn that more opium is used in the United States per capita than in any other nation in the world. China is supposed to be the homeland of the opium users, yet 17 times as much is used in the United States per capita as in China.

According to Doctor Alexander Lambert in the Journal of the American Medical Association, the United States uses from 12 to 72 times as much per capita as any other white country. The average age of the drug addicts is remarkably low. In New York City it was found to be just above twenty-three years. This means that new users start at a very early age.

It is doubtless the wealth of the country that makes this possible. Many times the normal quantity of opium is produced and is then smuggled into this country and sold. Therefore there is need of international agreement.

Some estimate that the legitimate medicinal use is perhaps 7,000 pounds of opium and its derivatives per year but many eminent physicians and surgeons maintain that we do not need any at all.

Thus Doctor John Dill Robertson in a letter to Current Opinion states that for ten years he has used no opium nor opium derivatives in any operation, that during the past four years he has not used it in the treatment of the 1,000 patients in the Municipal Tuberculosis Sanitarium of Chicago, nor with the 40,000 patients in the dispensary. He adds:

"It has required much more work to get along without opium, but the extra work has been well worth while. During the last four years there has been an improvement in the condition of patients, and a drop in the death rate at the institution that I can attribute to nothing except the discontinuance of the use of opium. . . . I believe the opium poppy should be rooted out of British India and all other places where it is now grown, and that all the seed in existence should be destroyed."

Many medical men finding it so much easier to operate with the use of opium will be reluctant to agree with the above opinion, but even if they be left out of consideration, even if in medicinal use of opium and its derivatives including morphine, its use be continued, there is a wide difference between the 7,000 pounds for medicinal use and the 3,000,000 pounds actually produced and consumed.

This is one of the last acts of the late Congress, to pass a resolution directing the State Department to approach the other nations of the world to negotiate treaties concerning the drug traffic, and this resolution has been signed by President Harding.

We do not think that there is among our readers a single addict, but there may be needed preventative measures. Many drug addicts have been made from the too free use of opium derivatives to deaden pain so that the habit in time becomes established. It is interesting to note that some reputable physicians at least are of the opinion that morphine and other derivatives of opium can be entirely eliminated with benefit to the patient and a lowering of the death rate.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Cleanliness in the Church

There is much in your worthy columns of great interest, and the HERALD is a welcome visitor in my home, but there is a subject I would love to see written on that I have no remembrance of seeing one word about. Tithing and stewardships are explained and the need of that system is urged upon the people, which I very much agree with, and I can see no other solution to the world's troubles than that, but I wish some one would write an article once in a while on church cleanliness.

I am grieved to go among the Saints and notice so many of our churches so badly in need of soap and water and brooms and scrubbing brushes. I visited a good-sized branch not long ago where the quarterly conference was being held, and after the Women's Department was through with their meeting the janitor came and began brushing the floors for conference. Also the whole building from front door to the upstairs where meals were served was so deplorably dirty I thought it was no wonder that some remarked they would not care to bring their friends to such a place. I heard one sister who has visited all over the church say it was noticeable in our church buildings in so many places that there was such a ground-in dirty, dingy aspect she positively refused to take her friends to some of them, and one that she mentioned was in a very prominent city and a very large branch.

Now Saints, this "pair of shoes" is only intended for those they fit, but let me say to those they do fit, Put them on and wear them to clean in, and take some change out of the branch treasury and purchase some soap, brushes, and other necessities and get busy. The bishop will be better helped by clean churches where people will delight to come than by having those puny pennies left in the treasury even if he did get some of it for gospel work.

Cleanliness is next to godliness but do we go to sleep after reading it? I hope I have exploded a "bomb" and I shall patiently await the report.

Yours for a cleaner church,

A COLABORER.

Three Widows Each Give a Dollar a Week

Since reading an article written by a Brother Munro some time ago in which he gave us a plan whereby, if complied with, the church would be put on a splendid financial basis if 20,000 of our members would pledge themselves to give one dollar each week for one year, I and a few others were very desirous to be of that number. Three of us (all widows earning a living) decided we would make the effort and started the first week in January. Since then a few more have joined us, each one believing it to be a splendid plan and wanting to help do our bit. And right here I wish to say that all the dollars I felt I could spare to the Lord's storehouse never seemed to be missed. It has always left me with plenty. I am a widow past the half-way mark. I do not yet own my home but have quite a large installment to meet each month besides other obligations, but I plan to meet my one dollar per week to the Bishop just the same as I plan to pay or meet any other bills and obligations, and so far have had no great difficulty.

Now as the brother states, if one fifth of the membership of the church will rally to the needs and make this one offering we are sure it will make everyone in the church feel so good when the Bishop's report comes out next year that the number will be doubled another year.

Our leaders cannot in the sight of a just God be held responsible for work not done when the lay members deliberately tie their hands for want of means to go ahead and sit back and say as some do, "Well, I am not going to pay money that I work hard for into the treasury to be foolishly used," or as some will say, "squandered," for we are sure our leaders know there is harsh judgment hurled at them whether it is due them or not. "Somebody said thus and so." Saints, are we keeping ourselves clear from harsh judgment by One who knows every minute of our lives? Should we not then close our ears to idle rumor and say within our hearts, "I will do all I can to help bring about better conditions in this wicked world, and instead of trying to pick the mote from my brother's eye, I will remove first the beam from my own eye and try to vision man in his human and fallible state"? We know there has been only one Christ Jesus who doeth all things well, and instead of dragging others down, let us come back to them with kindness, love, charity, and of our substance and try to help bear one another's burdens.

A SISTER.

A Tribute to a Father

As springtime approaches, filling the air with the scent of sweet flowers and the song of the birds, my mind wanders back in fond memory to my father who passed from this life on April 24, 1921. Montraville O. Matthews dwelt in his country home in the northern part of Maryland.

This memorable day, I remember, found my father making preparations to attend the Sunday school session and the services that followed. Having no church building within fifty-seven miles of his home, the services were conducted in a brother's house. The Sunday school service was held at 9.30 a. m., having an intermission of fifteen minutes before the 11 o'clock service.

On account of father's old age and failing health he was not able to officiate in his office as priest as actively as he desired, and being the only one who held the priesthood among that little circle of Saints, the duty rested on him. During the intermission between services he asked the little group of Saints which they desired to have, a prayer service or a round table meeting. His nephew, Stewart Matthews, spoke up and said, "Talk to us this morning, uncle. I could listen to you all day." My father smiled back a recognition of the compliment and drew from his pocket a Compendium of Faith and Doctrine, his Bible, and the Saints' Hymnal. Having been troubled with a weak heart the last few years of his life, he was very careful not to exert himself beyond his strength. He took the three books and started to rise to his feet when he felt a shortness of breath which he had experienced many times before and sat down again saying, "Wait a minute." He bowed his head with his hands over his face as if in prayer and remained in that position. It seemed only a minute. Some reaction of the heart caused him to throw himself back. Those who were watching, ran to his side and laid him gently down and in less than five minutes he drew his last breath. Calm and peaceful, and with no struggle, his soul went forth to meet its God. Reverently the three books were taken from his hands. The words of admonition were never uttered. God in his infinite mercy and love said it was enough and called him forth to a rest of peace and happiness. In his seventy-sixth year he laid his armor down, having given his life's service to the cause of Christ.

In his early twenties father was ordained to the Aaronic priesthood and was the means of converting many into the fold of Christ. He reared to manhood and womanhood twelve children and saw them all baptized into the kingdom of God. My mother also was converted to the faith through my father's teaching. She went to her reward six years ago.

Many missionaries have been entertained under my father's roof. Among those I can recall are A. H. Parsons and H. E. Moler.

In a little green cemetery in the country town father was laid to rest beside my mother, while his twelve children with sons-in-law and daughters-in-law stood with bowed heads in reverence to one who had served them all his days, even when they could not care for themselves.

I thank God for the memory of my parents. I realize their influence for good has been an anchor of protection to my soul, and while we miss them sadly we know that they "rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

Ever praying for the cause of Christ,

MRS. IRA W. HUMES.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.

Elder D. T. Williams writes that Richard Bullard was ordained to the office of evangelist on the 21st of March at the Enfield Branch, London, England. There was a very fine spirit felt throughout the service, both prior to and continuing in the ordination.

Seven Reasons Why I Am Going to the Young People's Convention

Reason Number Seven: I Need the Church and the Church Needs Me.

After all, my reasons for attending the convention are summed up in the feeling that I need the church and the church needs me.

I need the church to direct my religious life, in fact, to give a purpose to my life as a whole. I realize that if I am to serve in any respect it must be through some institution. The church I believe to be organized after the pattern of Christ, and its purpose, as I understand it, is to serve. If I am to serve successfully it must be in connection with others. The church furnishes this common ground. I want to attend the convention so that with the other young people I can be awakened to the significance and message of the church to-day.

The church needs me because without individuals an institution can do nothing. The church needs me because I am one of the young who must take over the burden from those who have carried it for years. If we as young people do not take this burden when the older ones are compelled to lay it down, the church will fail. In a word, I am going to attend the convention to receive only that I may better give. I am convinced that without the church I shall not succeed, and without me and hundreds of others like me the church will fail. What a fine opportunity to blend these two interests into one. Please don't let anything keep you from meeting me at Lamoni in June.

Trying to Advance

Trying to advance along any line seems to meet with great hindrances. The greatest of all who have ever lived on this earth, Jesus Christ, when he was here suffered persecution even unto death on the cross because he wanted to help man to a higher plane in life. One's soul must be valued at a great price for there is going on daily a battle for its possession, a fight between right and wrong. God wants the people to be spiritual and intellectual and he is willing to help them with his Spirit, while on the other hand Satan desires that we do not advance, save only in things that will injure others and prove detrimental to the soul's salvation. We cannot serve these two masters. We must decide which one we shall serve. We cannot be neutral. Christ commanded us in these words: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." We will not become perfect in an instant of time but it is a steady growth. As Paul says, "Let us go on to perfection."

Peter also confirmed the former statement that we are to add to our faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, to knowledge temperance, to temperance patience, to patience godliness, to godliness brotherly kindness, and charity to all—even our enemies if we have such. If we love God we will keep his commandments and if we keep his commandments we will become perfect. It is not impossible to become perfect, but some people say it is. Yet we have faith enough in Christ to know that he would not command us to do something that would be impossible for us to do. The trouble lies with us. We fail to comply with the teachings of this glorious gospel.

May we as members never say there is nothing to do in this work. Let us judge our lives by the standard and then ask ourselves the question, Is there anything for me to do? and Is there still room for advancement? and Am I going to do it? After we make this investigation we will all find room for improvement. Then let us as a people say as with one voice, "I will do my best." Then this work will advance with more rapidity and we will get nearer to that Zionian plan to become the pure in heart.

GUELPH, ONTARIO.

J. R. HOCKADAY.

Bon, Norway

(Excerpts from letter of Elder E. Y. Hunker.)

The past month has been a busy one for me, for I was in a new location, endeavoring to organize the work there and at the same time I was locating a future home for my wife and me here. Now that we are here and settled in a couple of rooms I have completed a system of work which I hope will put life into the branch here, as well as draw outsiders to our meetings and arouse an interest in our work. It is a system which means every night in the week spent away from home, but nevertheless I hope the results will justify the work.

The young people here have been sadly neglected by our people, which, no doubt, accounts for the fact that we have no young in the work. They have been attracted by the liveliness of the "Salvation Army." Because our people have never done anything to attract them they would not come to our services.

After studying the situation and giving due meditation and prayer, I realized that something must be done to interest them. I have organized two guitar classes for them, one for the very young and one for the more grown-ups. This has already aroused an interest, and some of those who are taking guitar have started coming to our preaching services. In addition to this, I am beginning an English class to-night for each Monday night; then there will be choir practice on each Friday night. Tuesday and Thursday nights are for the two guitar classes; Wednesday night for prayer service. Saturday night is employed every two weeks for a bazaar for the grown-ups. The proceeds go toward paying for the church building here. The young folks have been denied the privilege of attending, so I shall organize a similar meeting for them on the Saturday nights between, the proceeds to go toward the buying of a piano, which we most certainly need. Then on Sunday evenings we have preaching services. I aim to organize a Sunday school, too, after I have won the confidence of the young and have had enough personal contact with them through the other meetings to break the ice of embarrassment.

In all of this work I have tried to approach the matter from a psychological viewpoint, as Brother Floyd McDowell would say. I have adopted the different classes because I can reach and interest different people with each, and I hope to draw them all together so that they may have the opportunity of learning the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

On Sunday evening, the 18th of February, we had a very fine, uplifting, and spiritual prayer service. Preaching services had been announced, but as another denomination was putting on a big feast in their church, there were only our few Saints present, seven in all. I had been strongly impressed in the afternoon that there should be prayer service instead of preaching. Arriving at the church and finding only Saints there, I felt more strongly impressed than before, so after saying a few words, I requested that we have a prayer meeting. Assent was readily given, and the Spirit of God was with us in power, to the edification and unifying of the Saints. For the first time since coming to Norway I had liberty in praying, even to the extent that it was as if in my native tongue, and I was made to realize that if we live humbly and close to God, his Spirit can loosen our tongues so that we can speak to foreign peoples.

In preaching I have generally enjoyed a goodly degree of the Holy Spirit, though at times I have found it hard to keep from wandering into the English language, especially when I wanted to express some thought that came on the spur of the moment. I feel that God is indeed blessing me in the study of the language and in the foreign accent. Many people here think I am a Norwegian, though from a different locality with a different dialect.

I realize I am weak and but human and need the moral, spiritual, and material support of the people of God; but it is my desire to give my best to the promulgation of the gospel in this foreign land.

Germany

(Excerpts from letter of P. Muceus on his visit to Germany.)

Your letter was received while in Aalborg, and upon your suggestion I went to Germany to look over the mission and to learn to understand the situation as it existed there.

I have found more interest among the Saints in Germany than I have seen in any other field I ever have visited. Through the interpretation of Brother Carl F. Greene I spoke at all the places to the Saints and received the very best of attention and was also wonderfully blessed in my efforts. All seemed to be pleased with my short addresses to them and for the greeting from the church in America. The Saints are feeling well in the work, and seemed to take a deeper and more serious and earnest interest in the work than the average member in America.

Gomer T. Griffiths Urges Missionary Work for All

He also writes of old-time friends in the work.

I thought that perhaps a few lines would be of interest to my friends. I am still in the land of the living and intensely interested in the Lord's work as ever, as there is nothing in this world to compare with it. It is the grandest, best, and biggest thing known to man, or in other words, it is the "pearl of great price." While there are many things to discourage us in the great warfare, everyone of us must be willing to go through Gethsemane and endure the crucial test. The saying of the Savior on the mount, "Blessed is he that endureth to the end," should ever ring in our ears, and the admonition of Paul that "To him that worketh is the reward" should ever be kept in mind. Therefore there is no time for the Saints of God to sit in idleness with folded hands when there is so much to do. Millions are wandering in darkness, many of whom are honestly seeking for light but are denied the joy of the gospel in its fullness because of negligence and lack of effort to reach them with the true plan of salvation.

As a people, we throw the responsibility upon a few missionaries of getting the gospel before the world, contenting ourselves with the thought that we have done our full duty when we have paid our tithing, attended the services, etc., losing sight of the fact that the Lord has said that he that is warned should warn his neighbor.

I desire to point out some of the methods by which we may all become missionaries. There are so many of our people who take the church papers—the HERALD, Ensign, etc.—those splendid periodicals which contain such wonderful sermons, fine articles, and beautiful testimonies of the divinity of the work and the evidences of God's power operating among us, who after reading and feeding upon the good food contained therein many times use these valuable papers to start the fire with, allow their children to tear them up, and put them to other uses or abuses, while their neighbors who know almost nothing of the restored gospel might well be enjoying the good things contained therein and perhaps be led to the knowledge of the truth and be brought into the fold of the Good Shepherd if the Saints would only take the trouble to hand these precious jewels to their neighbors and friends. Moreover, they could be dropped in the seats of automobiles or handed to the passer-by with a prayer on our lips that God would bless the effort thus made. Why can we not manifest the zeal that is displayed by those of the sectarian world in this regard when we have the same opportunity as they to get our literature before the world?

The ministry and laity of the church could distribute millions of tracts annually if they would but manifest the zeal that characterizes many of the sectarian churches. The missionaries and others when traveling could leave them in railroad stations, on trains, in street cars, etc., and in many other ways reach the honest in heart with literature that would win many precious souls to Christ and his gospel. The address of the pastor, missionary, or publishing house should always be on such matter, so that if further information or literature were desired it could be had. There are very many people in the church to-day who were converted to the restored gospel through reading our literature alone without ever having heard a sermon preached, and this is evidence of the value of the methods herein referred to. I might say that the Utah Mormons are on the job when it comes to distributing literature, for their representatives, both men and women, go from house to house and are willing to endure slurs and insults to get their counterfeit before the people. What are we doing who have the genuine article?

In a recent HERALD there was a notice of the demise of J. R. Gibbs. I was acquainted with this brother for thirty-one years. He certainly was a noble character and in the years gone by was very active and by reason of his consistent life he was beloved not only by the Saints but by the people of the world as well. He kept an open door and a warm welcome for the servants of the Lord, and the ministry always felt at home with him and his family. Most of the ministry who shared his hospitality have crossed the great divide and gone to their eternal rest. He possessed poetic ability and composed a number of hymns, some of which have been published in the HERALD. On his deathbed he composed a few lines for me which I appreciate very highly, in which he expressed his deep affection for the writer. He was so weak at the time that he had to have his daughter write the words as he gave them, but he insisted on writing his signature himself. A royal friend and faithful servant of God has passed on to his reward. Peace be to his ashes.

I wish to call attention to the death of Sister Amelia Davis of Llanelly, South Wales. It does not seem the proper thing to let her name go down without notice. Sister Davis had kept a home for the missionaries for about forty years or more. It would have been very hard for the missionaries had it not been for this good woman who shared her hospitality with them. Notwithstanding she was poor in this world's goods and had to work hard for her living, she never turned the servants away from her door so long as she had a loaf of bread that she could divide with them, and this she did ungrudgingly. Surely such a true and worthy Saint would not be denied entrance into the paradise of God and will be greatly missed by those who remain upon this mundane sphere, especially the ministry of God.

A few weeks since we were called upon to officiate, in company with Brother John Martin, at the funeral of our young and beloved sister Merle Baker, formerly Merle Serig, daughter of L. A. Serig, pastor of the church in Wheeling. The traveling ministry will remember her smiling face and pleasing personality. It was a delight to her to prepare meals for them and minister to their wants in various ways, and while she was not given to many words she demonstrated her love for the work and God's people by loving deeds of kindness and generous hospitality. She was suddenly stricken with pleuro-pneumonia and died within a few days, leaving a husband and young baby, her father, mother, and a number of brothers and sisters to mourn their loss. How true is the saying that "In the midst of life we are in the midst of death," as she was only twenty-five years of age when called upon to yield to the summons of the grim reaper, which proves that the young must be prepared as well as the old for the great event that must come to all of us sooner or later.

Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith and Apostle J. F. Curtis have been with us in three or four of the districts the last few weeks and their efforts to build up and encourage the Saints have been greatly appreciated by all. They have preached some very interesting and edifying sermons. Our people love to hear spiritual men talk to them as it stimulates them to hold to the gospel rod more tenaciously. Brother McGuire was present at the Lock No. 4 conference and church dedication and delivered the dedicational sermon which was greatly enjoyed by all present. Brother McGuire wields a wonderful influence with the Saints by his kindly disposition and unsophisticated manner. It is pleasing to note that the Saints have implicit confidence in him and his integrity.

We are confident that the Lord's work will be triumphant in the end, and although men and devils may seek to impede its progress, let us remember that God is at the helm and he will pilot the good old ship of Zion safe into the harbor by and by. Therefore let us stick to the ship.

Support Zion, Not Secret Orders

[The accompanying "manifestation" was sent by Brother Richard Bullard, now laboring in England. In transmitting it he said that as he was engaged in matinal prayers, pleading with the Lord in behalf of his people, he found himself speaking by the Spirit in prophecy. He arose and wrote what clearly developed as a message. We present it to our readers as Brother Bullard wrote it, without comment, letting our readers judge as to the import of the message.—EDITORS HERALD.]

Hearken, my people, unto that which I will speak unto you, for I will not hold my peace, for my Spirit has been grieved because of the willful disobedience of those who have departed from the ways of the Lord.

To those who have paid their vows and taken solemn oaths at shrines where I have no place and that which I have no delight in, even that which is known as Masonic Order, also that of more recent organization known as the Klans, neither of which has or can have part in the work I have committed to you, my people, but will prove to be a serious detriment to my work and the ultimate loss of those who engage their time and allegiance thereto.

Is the history of the past nothing to my people? saith the Lord. Have I not declared that the ruin and downfall of my people Israel was brought about through their departure from my ways and the joining of their interests and loyalty to shrines of heathenism which I forbade? Was not my beautiful temple destroyed because of this, and the wealth, sacrifice, and labor of my people brought to naught, and my holy name dishonored, and the place which I had honored with my presence defiled, so that the destroyer to whom my people had paid tribute made ashes and ruin of the place which my soul had delighted in; but because of its defilement I could no longer permit it to remain.

Are the desolations recorded of Jerusalem, Kirtland, and Nauvoo no warning to my people? Will my people continue to rob me of that which is needed for the building of my Zion and prepare a shelter and place of refuge for my faithful people in the day when these secret organizations, to which some of my people have sworn allegiance, shall rise in their anger and vengeance and bring bloodshed and desolation upon the world, such as has never been known, and from which my people shall hardly escape?

Think you I can walk in crooked paths or give consent to that which I have repeatedly declared against? My course is eternal without change, and the provisions I have made for my people sufficient to meet every righteous claim made upon it.

Heed the counsel of my servants, the Presidency, to unite your forces in righteousness in preparation for the building of my Zion, which can only be accomplished as you become pure in heart, that I can work with you, and the day of Zion's glory shall dawn upon you, and my strength shall be granted you for the work you are called to do.

Hasten! Hasten! Again I say hasten to establish equality through my law of stewardships. Uphold the hands of those whom I have placed to direct in this matter; work together in love and unity; bear with each other when weakness manifests itself; and be kind hearted; for when love is not the ruling power among you, your work is vain.

Prove me, O my people, by sacrifice, and my residence shall be with you, and my Spirit shall direct, and I will raise up men who will become strong in my hand for this work; for Zion's redemption is near. Work with me according to my law, and victory shall attend you.

Tempt not your Lord by further delay. Come out of Babylon as I have commanded, lest my hand in severity be felt and mourning and sorrow fill your hearts and homes.

Heed, unite, work in love and sacrifice, and your joy shall be full, saith the Spirit.

An Inspiring Conference at Des Moines

The annual conference of the Des Moines District was held at Des Moines from February 9 to 12. There was a small but enthusiastic delegation of members present at the opening prayer service, all responding to the kindling influence of the Spirit, making it a one hundred per cent service in point of those taking part in its activities.

District President Henry Castings, who was sick with a cold, was administered to at the conclusion of the service, he receiving a great blessing.

Most of the time during the day was occupied in institute work, which included a problems meeting, lectures, and talks.

The usual Friday night program was in charge of the Department of Women, and the Temple Builders, Orioles, boys, and women gave a splendid entertainment.

Sister Lenor Christy assisted in the institute work, her work being of a highly educational character.

President F. M. McDowell lectured to the priesthood, assisted in presiding, had charge of a young people's prayer meeting, and preached two inspiring sermons during the conference.

Brother L. G. Holloway delivered a powerful sermon Saturday night in which he called attention to the sacrifices made by the ministry and members for the work. Every heart was touched when he mentioned the parting scenes at the home of Brother D. T. Williams when he left for his difficult mission across the sea.

The business of the conference was transacted in one meeting for all departments, including the sustaining of all officers in the district presidency, and heads of departments.

Brother Castings and his associates are laboring hard for the success of the work in the district, and together with the missionary force and local help have succeeded in opening and maintaining eighteen missions in the various parts of the district.

Special services have been conducted at Dunreath, Runnells, Vandalia, Perry, Boone, Rhodes, Sandyville, Dumont, Hastie, Winterset, Webster City, and Levy during the past eight months.

Des Moines District represents, in the main, a band of Saints who are loyal, faithful to duty, and consecrated to the work of the Lord. There are a number of young men in the priesthood who are making good in every way and are of great assistance to the older men. C. E. McDONALD.

Mr. James R. Houghton writes to the Presidency that his work at Harvard for an advanced degree in music is going along very nicely. About April 1 he was appointed to the position of baritone soloist of the Harvard Glee Club so he will sing in Symphony Hall, Boston, April 5, and on April 14 with the Harvard Glee Club in Carnegie Hall, New York. From there they proceed to Philadelphia, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland, Canton, and then return to Cleveland for the sixth evening of the week April 16-21.

Work Opening Up in Saint Paul

This is to let all the Saints know that missionary work is beginning to open up in Saint Paul, Minnesota. The nearest branch is on the other side of Minneapolis, at Queen and Fifth Avenues North. Elder William Sparling is our pastor, while Elder C. A. Kress as assistant pastor is in charge of the mission work. They are conducting cottage meetings in Minneapolis two or three times a week, and Brother Kress comes over to Saint Paul on Sunday nights to hold meetings in the home of Sister Freeman. We have just organized a Sunday school there which meets just before preaching services at present, at 6.45 p. m. Her home is at 587 East Lawson Street.

We would like to know if the Saints have friends or relatives living in Saint Paul who would perhaps be interested in the gospel, and with whom we can make an opening. If there are any such, will the Saints please write to Brother C. A. Kress, 2219 Fifth Avenue North, Minneapolis, or to Brother Carroll Olson, 1923 Grand Avenue, Saint Paul, Minnesota.

Yours in the faith,

CARROLL OLSON.

David Pycock at Lowbanks, Ontario

This being my first letter to the HERALD it gives me much pleasure to report to the Saints that Lowbanks has still a few Saints alive and trying to build up the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard while others here are not so much alive.

We had the pleasure of a visit by our district president, Brother David Pycock, for two weeks, who by the Spirit of the Lord gave a wonderful outline of the gospel plan as taught by the Apostle Paul which strengthened the Saints and caused others not of the faith to make an investigation.

Our Sunday school is progressing very nicely. We have good attendance of about fifty per cent nonmembers.

We also had Brother Pycock to organize us in the Religion work of which we hope and pray that we may have God's Spirit to lead and direct. That we all may keep ourselves in such a condition that the Spirit might dwell within us is my prayer.

Yours in gospel bonds,

E. U. BEAMSLEY.

A District Reunion

Sawyer, Idaho, on June 15 to 25. Say, folks, we want to remind you of the seventh annual reunion of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for the Spokane District. This reunion is to be held on the same grounds that our First Spokane District Reunion was held in the year of 1916.

Now don't say you can't afford to go—you mean you can't afford to miss it; and you will say so too when we get through telling you what we, everyone, are doing, and have done for the coming reunion. First, the time and place was decided upon on the business floor of the last reunion, as follows: To be held at Sawyer, Idaho, from June 15 to 25, 1923, inclusive. From that date the reunion work has been under progress, and here are a few of the things done to date: The grounds have been partly fitted up; abundance of light arranged for; twenty sacks of potatoes and lots of milk and new garden vegetables have been pledged, including access to one acre of ever-bearing strawberries. A nice fat beef, and two if we need them, have been pledged by a couple of real live-wire brethren. A large ice house, well filled with A-1 ice is at our disposal; between 650 and 700 quarts of home-canned goods in glass jars have been put up for the reunion, this including all kinds of berries, pickles, vegetables, and fruits of all kinds, a sack of sugar, all of the beans we want to use and a number of other articles of value to the interest of all. All are welcome—that is to mean that a man with a family of any number who has only a dollar to give is just as welcome as a person alone who might have $50 to give to the support of the reunion. Give what you can spare and use what you need. We all eat at one big eating tent this year—this will save the sisters and mothers a lot of work.

Several speakers will be there, and a large number of Saints are planning on attending the full time, even some are coming from Montana and the coast. Two railroads and a good highway pass by the grounds. For further information write to

CHARLES C. CRABB,

Secretary-Treasurer Reunion Committee.

Children's Day Programs

Begin now to complete arrangements for observance of Children's Day. We offer this year three specially written cantatas for our own people. All of them were tried out last year, but only one, "Zion redeemed," was published in time to be used. The others were improved and developed so one may be assured of their practicability for a school of any size.

ZION REDEEMED

By Mollie Davis

This cantata is distinctly Latter Day Saint in theme, has various interesting drills, songs, and mass situations. It is comparatively short, and easily presented. The costuming to represent the nations can be done with little expense, and the effect is good.

Price, 10 cents each, 75 cents a dozen.

LANGUAGE OF THE FLOWERS

By Madge Craig Siegfried

Requires 25 or more children and is one of the most beautiful affairs one can imagine. The costuming, to represent flowers, is one of the most effective features. The music is nearly all new, and the drills most colorful. This one was presented in Lamoni last year and with excellent results. It is highly recommended for the good lesson it teaches.

Price, 15 cents each, $1.20 a dozen.

ZION BUILDERS WE WOULD BE

By Edward D. Moore

Adaptable to small schools or large ones. The theme is carried throughout and includes demonstrations as well as drills. The characters include chorus of children of all grades, several beginners, primaries, juniors, intermediates, Orioles, Temple Builders, and Boy Scouts.

There is a new building song, with words by Frank A. Russell.

Price 10 cents each, 75 cents per dozen.

Independence

The speakers Sunday were: At the Stone Church, Pastor R. V. Hopkins in the morning and Walter W. Smith at night. Walter W. Smith was the spokesman in the lower auditorium to the young people at 11 a. m. At Liberty Street the 11 o'clock hour was given over to a junior service, while in the evening Doctor Harrington delivered the sermon. Bishop Ellis Short spoke in the morning at Walnut Park and Pastor J. A. Dowker occupied in the evening. At Englewood Elder J. E. Warne spoke in the morning and Lyman Fike at night; at Second Independence Elder U. W. Greene both morning and evening; and at Enoch Hill Patriarch Ammon White spoke in the morning.

Sister Ruth Lyman Smith is steadily improving and was able to be taken to her home at the close of the week.

Elder F. M. Sheehy who was for many years an active member of the Quorum of Twelve is seriously ill at his home.

Miss Elizabeth Logsdon, of Kirtland, Ohio, who has been in training at the Sanitarium and would have graduated May 29 of this year, died of tubercular meningitis after an illness of two weeks. Services were held at the Stone Church Monday, April 16, at 2 p. m. The members of her class acted as pallbearers. After the services here the body was taken to Kirtland for burial.

Elder F. H. Edwards, secretary of the Quorum of Twelve, is still in Nebraska.

Elder Walter W. Smith, church historian, expects to go to Saint Louis Thursday to work in the Jefferson Memorial Library. He will also speak for the Saints in that place next Sunday.

The Independence Dramatic Club who have been making a special study of one-act plays this past winter showed the result of their study in a presentation of last Saturday evening which was of a remarkably high class and the three plays were also very much above the ordinary. Miss Gladys Newton, director of dramatics in Zion, is president of the club. The proceeds are to go for the benefit of the General Conference pageant.

The musical director for Zion, Harold C. Burgess, has been busy all the past week in the young people's meetings in Kansas City Stake, where Elder C. E. Wight, president of the Lamoni Stake, was the speaker. On account of his enforced absence, Orville James conducted the choir practice Thursday evening and the music at both the morning and evening services at the Stone Church Sunday.

The special class in better parenthood met as usual at 3 p. m. with Walter W. Smith in charge. They have been meeting for the last two months and will continue to do so until the summer vacation.

At the quarterly conference of Zion the statistician reported net enrollment for Independence as 4,545.

Bishops McGuire and Keir and I. A. Smith returned to Independence the early part of last week, the former two from Lamoni, the latter from work in the East.

At the adjourned session of the April conference in Zion Monday night an amendment was offered to the substitute to strike out all after the word "Resolved," and to add the original motion modified substantially by eliminating the third paragraph and extending the second to read, "Officers of the departments" instead of "heads of departments."

The time from 8 to 10 p. m. was taken with three speeches. At 10 p. m. adjournment was taken until next Monday evening, April 23, at 8 p. m.

It is interesting to note the high character of the discussion at this conference. There is very little of personality and much of careful discussion of principle. If nothing else is accomplished, these sessions are certainly proving educational and that to the largest class that has ever assembled in Zion and probably with the greatest interest. From 8 to 10 p. m. both evenings the time was given to a discussion of the principles involved by those who had made careful preparation for that purpose. If these sessions are continued a few weeks longer they should prove decidedly beneficial and informative to all. A few would like to cut short the discussion but there seems practically no disposition on the part of the officers or of the body to be hasty in so doing, nor to curtail the length of the speeches.

First Chicago Branch

No, First Chicago has not gone out of business. We have been too busy to write, that's all. Events are happening so fast we do not have any time to waste. Brother Paul M. Hanson visited us recently, and all who heard him and had an opportunity to visit with him were greatly benefited spiritually. Come again, Brother Hanson.

Brother E. A. Curtis, our missionary supervisor, gave us a series of meetings which were greatly appreciated. They had a special message for our people as well as the nonmembers. Two splendid young men were baptized who promise to be valiant workers in the future. We are looking forward to another visit by Brother Curtis.

A fine Easter program was rendered by the Sunday school Easter Sunday, the church being very prettily decorated. In the evening the choir rendered "Redemption's song," by Frederick B. Holton. This surely was enjoyed by all present. The choir is doing splendid work under the able direction of Mrs. Ruby I. Newman, who is our director of music. We have had very good sermons of late by the local brethren, who are all working together for the good of all. Altogether we have much to be thankful for, and invite all traveling and visiting members to meet with us as occasion may permit. Our branch is located at 4416 Gladys Avenue.

CORRESPONDENT.

Bisbee, Arizona

Easter Sunday was our banner day for attendance so far this year. A very interesting Easter program was rendered in the evening to a full house. One very impressive feature of the program was a tableau near the close, taken from an outline in one of the late Stepping Stones.

The pastor has been kept quite busy of late administering to the sick, there being considerable sickness in the homes of the Saints.

The branch has been considerably benefited by the presence of Brother M. D. Agent from Los Angeles who has come to sojourn among us. We appreciate his assistance very much.

The visiting officers have been doing some very good work of late, which shows itself in the increased spirituality and unity among the membership. The officers are kindly received in most of the homes and their efforts are appreciated. All branches need more of this house to house visiting upon the part of the local priesthood. It is the Lord's way, and the Lord's way is best.

From Fremont District

The main event in this last week was our two-day meeting at Tabor, which was a very enjoyable affair. I think it was the best one of our series so far, and Brother Garver will know something of what I mean when I say that. Brother Putnam was with us and gave us two illustrated lectures which were enjoyed by all, but more than that—much more—was the contributing effect of the Holy Spirit which seemed to be with us all through the services. The attendance was the best, also, of any of meetings we have yet had.

The week before this meeting, Sister Chase and I sent letters or cards to all the scattered members whose names had been given to us, and several whom we had never met before were with us. The preaching was done by Elders A. Allen, B. S. Lambkin, Charles F. Putnam, and A. M. Chase.

The need for pastors is one, no, our greatest need. Pastors who will be leaders, and who will endeavor to develop the local men. Unless our work does develop these men, it is not better than that of our co-religionists who pay others to do their thinking and work along these lines, or so it seems to me. Unless Zion is manifest as the spontaneous manifestation of the condition of the inner man of the Saints, it does not seem to me that any form or system of administration will ever succeed in bringing them to that happy condition.

Ever laboring and praying for this consummation.

Sincerely, A. M. CHASE.

Cameron, Missouri

John F. Sheehy writes parsonage is paid for. Now for new church.

Sunday, April 3, was banner day for Cameron. Early morning prayer meeting found twenty-five young people engaging in prayer and testimony. Sunday school followed with a record attendance. At the sacrament service every seat was filled and five priests were called upon to pass the bread and wine. I visited and administered to the sick and administered the sacrament in the afternoon. Met with the elders at three o'clock and organized groups, dividing the branch into seven groups with an elder, priest, and deacon appointed to each group. Last year we had four. Men holding the priesthood have moved in and we have a fine group of men representing the church here. I am proud of them. Religio at 6.45 and sacred concert at eight o'clock. The choir present the cantata, "The living Christ." We have some wonderful talent in Cameron. I had just one hour to myself Sunday and during that time ate dinner.

The church was filled Sunday night. Over four hundred jammed inside. Many were turned away.

To-night we are to hold a rally service. We owe $700 on the parsonage. We want to raise that before we tackle a building or remodel the old one. We expect to raise the $700 to-night. We will. All are ready to work, for all see the great need of enlarging and it must be done at once.

(Later—April 4, 1923.) Last night we held our rally. I just want you to know that it was a success. We expected to raise it. I wrote you about the rally yesterday. I wrote that we would. Now I am glad to write this morning and say, "We did." It is done.

In January we bought the parsonage for $3,000. Last night we had a balance of $700. We raised $711.

We now feel more confident of getting busy on the real job and building a new church, or at least remodel the old one. I asked for a show of hands of all that were ready to "go ahead" with me on the big job and they were all ready.

Human Progress: "Nature seems to have discovered many ages ago that the way to make any race of animals or men strong and hardy was not to shield them from their enemies, but to give them power of resistance against their enemies."
—G. T. W. Patrick.

Artland Branch

Canadian Saints like plain language.

While renewing my Ensign for the coming year I thought perhaps a few lines from the Artland Branch would not seem amiss, as it is so seldom we see a communication from these parts. I cannot brag or boast of any great strides we are making toward the perfect one, but believe we are gaining. It seems to be in harmony with many of the other branches. Some have on the armor and are on the march while others lag behind. What a consolation it would be to see all doing their best. It seems to me that the church is making wonderful progress in many ways and I rejoice in the thought. But we also know it has taken effort. What wonders we could do if we would all pull together.

In my younger days if I could have had the privilege of education as many are having to-day it would have been my greatest ambition, as long as it was in harmony with the gospel. But many times I fear that our periodicals are spoiled by education or by the extremely large words that are used to express the sentiments needed. The majority of our people have very poor education. So many of the words sound like a foreign language to them. They would have to keep the dictionary ever before them to understand what they were reading about. These are some of the remarks I have heard along this line. One brother, a teacher in Sunday school class, said, "I do not take the interest in reading the HERALD I did a few years ago, for some of the pieces are beyond me." Another brother said, "There are three writers whose articles I seldom read because I can't understand them." I might mention others.

The Savior's teaching can be understood by all and if the ambition in writing is to edify and build up, the more simple and plain we can write the better or more good we can do. My ambition is to see the work roll on till it fills the whole earth.

Yours in the faith,

SENLAC, SASKATCHEWAN.

Bishop's Agent for Eastern Montana

To the Saints of Eastern Montana District: Having received the resignation of Brother J. W. Vail as Bishop's agent of your district, we have appointed Brother M. E. We solicit through Brother Wilcox an expression of your continued financial support of the Lord's work. All are called to assist according to the gifts of God unto them. May we each be faithful to the opportunities and responsibilities confronting us.

Observance of May 6 in Interests of Young People

To Stake, District, and Branch Presidents: Greeting: It has been decided to set aside Sunday, May 6, as a special day to be observed in the interest of the young people of the church. In so far as this does not interfere with plans which you have previously made, we respectfully urge that as far as within your jurisdiction the services be arranged with this theme in mind.

Should this Sunday be your regular sacrament Sunday, we suggest that a special effort be made to get the young people to participate in the sacrament service. There could be perhaps as well a special sermon for the young people on that day, or a program prepared by the young people themselves.

In order that we may have throughout the church a unity of purpose, we suggest further that the theme for prayer, testimony, and discussion on that day be somewhat along the following lines: "What can the church do for its young people? What can the young people do for the church? Has the effort of our branch been a success in this respect? What shall be our plan for the coming year to meet these needs?"

Finally, in view of the coming Young People's Convention at which representatives will be present from throughout the church, we suggest that special prayer be offered for the success of the convention and that a special effort be made to interest the young people of your branch to attend. Many districts and branches are helping with the expenses of young people to this convention. Why not you?

Respectfully submitted,

F. M. MCDOWELL,
For the First Presidency.

- Soprano solo: "One sweetly solemn thought," by R. S. Ambrose. Miss Marcine Smith.

One of our friends inquired, "Why should we have a radio broadcasting station?" As it happened one of the radio bugs was there, too, and before long the friend was more than satisfied. Has it ever occurred to you how many who would not think of entering a Latter Day Saint church will listen to one of our radio programs? Or have you considered what type of people listen in on regularly broadcasted religious programs, and how many of this type we reach? And again, have you ever thought what the radio world thinks of the church which was first in the Middle West to realize the possibilities of radio?

Of course there are many more reasons, but these may help you to see that we are making a request worthy of your attention when we ask for your comments and suggestions.

Blue Pencil Notes

The man who thinks that he can rationalize all things having to do with God and revelation may have a laudable ambition. At least it is a free country and a very free age. But such a man has a hopeless task. It is so vast as to be out of proportion even to his conceit. Speaking on this subject the irrepressible Reverend Sam Jones used to say, rather crudely: "A man can bite an apple; but he can't bite a pumpkin."

I would not give much for a God who could be quite well understood and explained—rationalized—by any man that I ever met or heard of. Such a God would be much too limited to administer the universe successfully; and I have a very great and I trust permanent interest in the universe. I would not give much for revelation if it were confined entirely to well-known and easily rationalized processes, like sending a night letter by Western Union—which may not be a very good illustration since we do not entirely understand the vital principle of the carrying agent employed in sending a telegram, much less a revelation from an Infinite God to a finite people.

It is perfectly proper to desire to analyze, understand, explain. It is proper to seek the reason for things, the significance of doctrines and laws, the motive back of commandments, the divine purpose concerning the future, even the nature of God and revelation; but we must do so with some understanding of our own limitations, the size of the task, and the extent to which we are likely to be able to succeed.

The vaulting ambition of man's intellect leads it to be impatient of a God who defies comprehension. But ponder the magnitude of the task. Snowden says: "One omnipotent, eternal God is an infinite mystery, but it is a mystery that swallows up and digests and explains all other mysteries. The mystery of our existence and all the mysteries of finite existence are swallowed up in the one ultimate and irrevocable mystery of God, and at last we rest on an explanation that cannot be explained."—The Personality of God.

We are approaching the infinite mystery. We push our investigation into things, their origin and nature, back and back until at last we come face to face with the fact that, as Kelvin concluded, "God has reserved a place for his own appearing at the beginning of all life." Created things presuppose a Creator. Then some impertinent person inquires, "Who made God?" But as Professor Larkin, Director of Lowe Observatory, says: "The question who created the Creator is totally without meaning within all limits of human mentation as it now functions. The word Creator is the set limit to the boundary of human thought."—Within the Mind Maze, p. 380. As Snowden says, "There must be an end to mystery somewhere." God is the infinite mystery that swallows up all other mysteries, an explanation that cannot be explained. Yet people try to explain him and all his ways, and where they cannot explain they reject. A man who could not administer the civic affairs of Paris or London is atheistic because he cannot comprehend the God who administers the affairs of the Universe; the Universe, of which Larkin writes: "Whether the universe is finite or infinite may never be known. . . . If finite, then it is now known to be so large that men's minds are unable to think of the vast dimensions." A man who could not design the Union Station in Kansas City is atheistic because he cannot understand the Great Architect who pillared the Pleiades.

Knowledge of God comes by intuition—and by means which man is not yet able to rationalize. Religion brings its comforts and its assurances by means which none can analyze. Lodge says, "The ways of science are not the only ways of discovering truth." Quoting Snowden again: "Our belief in God and in his personality is much older than our reasoning and proofs in connection therewith. We do not prove the existence of God and then believe in him, but we first believe in him and then construct arguments to confirm our belief. Destroy all our intellectual arguments for God and we would believe in him still."

No man knows how he assimilates bread and meat, oranges, carrots, batter cakes, and transforms them into nerve cells that feel, muscles that propel him about, optic nerves that see, brain cells that think. When that riddle is solved we may with more optimism attempt to delineate all phases of spiritual nutrition. At present "there are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamed of in your philosophy."

No man sits down to starve because he cannot explain how grass became beefsteak, or black loam and water and sunshine became grape juice, or how these in turn may build in him nerves to perceive sensation, brain cells to ponder the sensation, muscles to execute the orders of the will—or more wonderful still, a heart to stand still in fear or leap to love. So no one need sit by, in the church or out of it, agnostic, waiting a full rationalization of God and his methods of giving revelation; but approaching the throne of grace may ask for and receive with grateful adoration that which God gives, growing thereby spiritually with Paul or Jesus in ways most glorious, yet often as inexplicable as they are wonderful. Let us call faith to the aid of reason; revelation to the aid of observation and discovery. The effort to measure God with the yardstick of human reason fails. The yardstick could only measure a three-foot God.

The spiritual message of a business man.

If the Christian religion is all that it claims to be it should have offered to men fundamental principles of conduct in all fields of growth and endeavor, including business. We believe that it has done so. Why then the often accepted pronouncement that business cannot be successfully carried on along Christian lines? Because, as the Lord said, "The light shineth in darkness, but the darkness comprehendeth it not."

The message of Christianity has not been comprehended or appreciated by business men in general. But once in a while there arises a prophet in the business world as well as in the spiritual world who clearly sees that as a matter of fact business cannot be permanently or successfully carried on excepting by observing the fundamental rules of life promulgated by the Christian religion. When one arises who speaks clearly and at the same time wins the respect and the attention of the business world his pronouncements are worth listening to.

As many of our readers know, Roger W. Babson is president of Babson Statistical Organization. He is more generally read and listened to than most other writers and lecturers on business matters. With considerable interest, therefore, the average reader should turn to his book, Fundamentals of Prosperity, to discover the particular things considered by this man as fundamental to real prosperity. It ought to be good for the souls of business men and workingmen as well to read his book. And it is refreshing to us to find that his conclusions are exactly in accord with the position taken by the Christian religion, which finds the basis of prosperity in character.

Integrity

The first fundamental he catalogues is that of integrity. Long ago in commenting on the Bishop's annual report so eagerly scanned by the Saints to discover what may be the assets, the liabilities, and the annual expenses of the church, together possibly with a curiosity to see which elder's family has spent the most money, we remarked that the greatest asset of the church never appeared in the Bishop's report or on his books excepting indirectly. The greatest asset of the church is found in the manhood and womanhood of her members. So Babson concludes that prosperity depends upon security, as of course does all constructive enterprise, and that security does not repose in steel doors and burglar-proof vaults, but must in the last analysis always be found in the integrity of individuals.

To illustrate his point he tells about visiting one of the largest banks in Chicago. The banker showed him his new safety deposit vaults, guarded with heavy steel doors and up-to-the-minute electrical devices and mechanical contrivances calculated to protect depositors. While they were inspecting the vault a depositor came in and rented a box and placed in it his securities in the form of stocks, bonds, and mortgages representing his fortune. The clerk in charge of the vault took a key from the rack and gave it to the man who had rented the box. The man put the box in one of the compartments, locked the door and put the key in his pocket and went away happy, trusting in the enormous steel doors of the vault. It did not occur to him how easily the shabbily-dressed, underpaid, stoop-shouldered clerk could have made a duplicate of that key before giving it to him and in a moment's time have rifled his strong box of his fortune and left him penniless. The point was that the safety of the depositor was reposed in the integrity of the clerks and officials of the bank rather than in the steel doors.

The author goes farther to remark that the average man who purchases securities in bonds or stocks does not even take the trouble to see whether or no they are properly signed and countersigned, and even should he do so, he has no way to determine whether or not the signature is genuine. He depends upon the integrity of the men with whom he deals. There is no value in deeds, mortgages, etc., as such. The value rests first in the integrity of the lawyers, clerks, and stenographers who draw up the papers; secondly, in the integrity of the officers who sign the documents; thirdly, in the integrity of the courts and judges which would enable us to enforce our claims; and finally in the integrity of the community which would determine whether or not the orders of the court would be executed. So Babson concludes, "Our whole civilization rests upon the assumption that people are honest. With this confidence shaken the structure falls. . . . The cornerstone of prosperity is the stone of integrity." And he adds, "While fifty-one per cent of the people have their eyes on the goal of integrity our investments are secure; but with fifty-one per cent of them headed in the wrong direction our investments are valueless."

With him we can agree that integrity is fundamental to prosperity in business, in spiritual realms, in all human development and soul culture.

Faith

We are very happy to note that the next fundamental catalogued by Mr. Babson is that of faith. Where people have no faith there is no enterprise. Nothing is ventured, nothing undertaken. He agrees with the biblical writer who said, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." And he adds, "Statistics teach that where there is no vision, civilization never gets started."

The tangible things which we prize so highly, Babson assures us, such as buildings, railroads, steamships, factories, power plants, telephones, airplanes, etc., are but the result of faith and vision. He says, "Faith and vision do not come from the wealth of a nation. It's the faith and vision which produce the wealth. . . . So I say, the second great fundamental of prosperity is faith." There must be faith in oneself, faith in the powers of nature, faith in humanity, faith in truth and in sound principles. But Babson goes far beyond that to say, "It is one thing to talk about plans or policies, but a plan or policy without a religious motive is like a watch without a spring or a body without the breath of life. The trouble, to-day, is that we are trying to hatch chickens from sterile eggs. . . . I have referred to the fact that the security of our investments is absolutely dependent upon the faith, the righteousness, and the religion of other people."

Industry

The third fundamental of prosperity, according to Babson, is industry, in other words, hard work. He agrees with the Book of Covenants doctrine that the idler should not eat the bread of the laborer, and is very sure that a community of idlers will soon have no bread to eat. He recounts his experiences, studying the early training and ancestry of seventy-five of the greatest business men in America—manufacturers, merchants, railroad builders, and the like. In this group five per cent were sons of bankers, ten per cent were sons of manufacturers, fifteen per cent were sons of merchants, while over thirty per cent were sons of poor preachers and farmers. Ministers' sons were quite out of proportion to any other group in the number. Babson's conclusion was that from a pious parentage they had acquired the fundamentals previously mentioned, integrity, faith, vision, and with these they had learned to work because of necessity due to the family's meager income.

Industry rather than genius is necessary to success in business, and responsibility for the great inventions and improvements that have been given to society, "A man may be honest and wonder why he does not get ahead; a man may have vision and still remain only a dreamer; but when integrity and vision are combined with hard work, the man prospers. It is the same with classes and nations. Integrity is a dry seed until put in the ground of faith and allowed to grow. But faith with work is prosperity."

Babson notes that most of the able men in our great industries came from the country districts. The reason, he thinks, is because the country boy is trained to work. Statistics, he declares, indicate that very seldom does a child brought up in a city apartment house amount to much, while the children of well-to-do people are seriously handicapped. He adds, "The great educator of the previous generation was not the public school, but rather the woodbox. Those of us parents who have not a woodbox for our children to keep filled, or chores for them to do, are unfortunate." He ends his third chapter with this statement: "I especially desire to emphasize this point because of the position of certain religious enthusiasts who think only of the lilies of the field and forget the parable of the talents. It is a fact that the third fundamental of prosperity is industry."

Cooperation

The fourth fundamental is cooperation. The author comments on the fact that in any ordinary room there will be found a great variety of articles coming from almost every State in the Union and some from foreign nations. While to take even one article in common use, a pair of shoes, we would be astonished if we attempted to trace the leather through its journeys and its manipulations by many hands until finally it emerges upon the sales counter, a pair of shoes of leather, with certain cotton materials added in the form of shoelacings and lining, and metals in nails and eyelets. Not only have many different localities contributed to produce the shoe, but many industries and a very great number of people. Thus at every turn we see the fruits of cooperation and realize our dependence upon other men. "Civilization is ultimately dependent on the ability of men to cooperate." "The willingness to share with others—the desire to share with others is the great contribution which Christianity has given to the world."

Thus Babson would introduce into the business world certain indispensable spiritual factors. He holds that our business house has been built upon the sand. An immense structure has been erected on a foundation utterly inadequate to support it. It is a splendid and imposing and fabulously rich material superstructure; but underlying it there are not found those spiritual and moral qualities of life and character to make an adequate foundation to support the superstructure. It is a wonderful superstructure built upon the sand. A foundation must be put under it, and his message to the business world is, "To your integrity add faith, to faith industry, and to industry cooperation." Peter's exhortation to add to our faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, and so on is differently worded; but both cover the same fundamentals and lead to the same conclusion.

If we are to trust this astute observer, Christ did not fail to give to the business men fundamentals upon which to build and by which to govern life. But business men have quite too generally failed to appreciate that which is given. Babson's call to this generation is frankly one of repentance.

Young People's Day

The attention of the young people is again called to the announcement which appeared on the first editorial page, April 11, signed by F. M. McDowell for the First Presidency. This announcement has been repeated in the Miscellany department last week and again in this issue.

Since the day appointed is May 6 this will be the last general announcement in the HERALD. If you have not already made your arrangements it is not yet too late to set aside Sunday, May 6, as a special day for the young people of the church. Let a special effort be made to have the young people participate in the sacrament and other services of the day and let the coming young people's convention be made a special matter of prayer.

Many districts are making plans to help their young people to attend. There are certain to be hundreds in Lamoni on those early days in June. The program so far as is now determined was published in last week's issue in the editorial pages. If you have not read it carefully turn to it now, and read and reread and then proceed to make your arrangements personally or through your branch or district to be present.

We note from Autumn Leaves that California is expecting to send twenty-five. There are a number coming from beyond the seas as well as delegations from the various parts of Canada. From Iowa and Missouri hundreds are expected. But it is not the numbers alone that will make a successful meeting, but the spirit of devotion and consecration that each one brings with him and that is developed in that environment.

Therefore again is the call sent forth for May 6 to be set aside as a special day of prayer for all of the young people of the church. S. A. B.

The Work Among the Orientals

We have had several items lately showing the way in which Christianity has spread among the Chinese in recent years, also as showing the devotion of the Chinese converts. As long ago as the time of the Tae Ping Revolution this disposition was indicated, but the last decade has shown a remarkable increase in the number of professing Christians in China.

In our own experience we have had some splendid examples both of Japanese and of Chinese among the students at Graceland College. One of these, Brother Prescott A. Foo, has now entered the mission field in Hawaii and is devoting his time and energy to work among the orientals in that land. But to consider rightly the work in our church in that land we must refer to the time about thirty years ago, in 1890, when G. J. Waller and Elder Hawes began the work in Honolulu. Brother Waller labored energetically and successfully to build up the Honolulu Branch. He was also busy in his secular work, but still so great was his energy and enthusiasm that about 1902 he started work among the Chinese.

About this time a revelation was given directing that tracts be printed in the Chinese and Japanese among others. Elder Waller translated a tract into Chinese. The matter was written up in the church papers, and in the General Conference of 1906 the Sunday school and Zion's Religio-Literary Society each appropriated the sum of $500. The purpose was to establish a mission, erect a building among the Chinese, and to have a missionary regularly stationed there. A promising young Chinaman had recently been baptized. In fact there are a number of excellent members in the Honolulu Branch to-day who are of oriental descent. But the church did not find itself in a position at that time to undertake this mission, so it could not be pushed.

ifornia in 1916. He also had the work well started among the Japanese and Hawaiians. Incidentally, he was soon put to work in California and became president of the San Francisco Branch and has labored in other places as his business has taken him to others of the islands of the Pacific.

After his departure from Honolulu the work among the orientals was permitted to lapse, and it was not again undertaken energetically until quite recently, though others of the missionaries were quite interested in this part of the work, and Brother and Sister McConley were particularly interested in the oriental people. But it seems that the regular missionary work among them was discontinued for six years and therefore the work lapsed. However, there are good members of the church both in Honolulu and Hilo of the oriental races and also on the island of Maui.

It is interesting to note that in addition to those who are still in the islands, among those whom Brother Waller interested is a young Japanese brother working acceptably in a bank in Kansas City, a young Japanese sister who is a stenographer with a prominent shipping house in the same place, a young Japanese brother who has good prospects with a firm of Honolulu architects, a young Japanese boy doing good work as superintendent of the Hilo Sunday school, a young Japanese acting as secretary of the Japanese Sunday school.

Among the Chinese is a sister who is a school-teacher in Honolulu, another who is a public-school teacher on the island of Maui, both of whom are good members of the church; a young Chinese boy who is secretary of one of the Chinese Sunday schools; and an elder who is active in the Honolulu Branch, and who has a niece who acts as secretary of the Sunday school, and another niece who is principal of a school on the island of Maui and who is also a Sunday school worker and solicitor for the Bishop's agent. The last three or four above mentioned are only part oriental, but are splendid workers and they are to be named among those whom Brother Waller has interested.

Naturally the effects of such a work cannot be measured alone by the number of converts as there are many, possibly hundreds, who became well acquainted with Brother Waller and the church through his Sunday school work, but who were not baptized because of the discontinuance of the work.

Work among the orientals is not easy, but Elder Waller has expressed the opinion that if the work had been continued during the past six or seven years we would have some strong branches both of the Chinese and Japanese at the present time. Elder Foo and his wife and Brother and Sister Henry

Inouye are now working very energetically, and as a result there are now several Chinese Sunday schools organized. Brother Waller is, we understand, again taking a great and active interest in this work, though not able to devote his full time to it, leaving that with the brethren and sisters named above.

Elder Gomer Reeves is also helping with this work. Elder and Sister E. B. Hull have their time very fully taken with the work of the Honolulu Branch, and so are able to give comparatively little time to the orientals. While the missionaries sent by the church have performed a wonderful service, the hundreds of good members in that branch are largely a result of the persistent effort and energy of Elder Waller.

It is true that but a comparatively small start has yet been made in the work among the orientals, but it should prove of interest to our readers to know at first hand something of what is being done. This is by no means a discussion of the work in the Hawaiian Mission as a whole. There are many energetic workers in that field among whom is Brother Carl Hoffman, to whom reference has already been made, who organized a Sunday school near the barracks of the military camp. He acted on his own initiative and after it was started reported it to the proper officers. He is himself a private, but gained permission to start this commendable work.

But the work among the orientals is again being pushed and we trust will be energetically upheld by the church—to their blessing with a knowledge of the truth and the blessing of the church.

Preach Good Reading

We have suggested that the minister should preach good books at the family fireside and the reading of the church periodicals. But this is not his whole privilege. He should also, occasionally at least, present properly from the pulpit the value of good reading, in fact the necessity of utilizing this method of quick information, if we are to inform ourselves and be prepared to move forward as we should.

Good reading does not mean alone the purchase of books. There are good public libraries in most of the cities to-day. There are good state libraries in most of the States to-day. From such a source we can secure as a rule good novels and a few other good textbooks. Then we can from the public library and from adequate means of exchange among ourselves secure other good books.

But no home should be without the three books or the periodicals of the church.

Stone Church at Plano, Illinois

Memorial sermon by Elder F. M. Cooper at the fifty-fourth anniversary of its dedication; delivered November 15, 1922.

The venerable Stone Church of Plano has its history in common with other like structures erected to the worship of God. At a conference held in the year 1866 a committee was appointed to arrange for the building of a house of worship in the village of Plano.

Since the year of 1861 the Latter Day Saints had worshiped in buildings not their own. One of cherished memory was the old academy where both religious and secular education was dispensed for the good of the community. This old community building was a waymark in the progressive march of Plano's moral and intellectual development. It suffered the fate that comes to all material things, yet its record for good stands out as a cherished fact in our local history.

Chapel Built

During the winter of 1867 and 1868 the building committee were busy getting the material together for the erection of a suitable chapel in which to worship. Be it remembered that the church membership here at that time were few in number and comparatively poor. Their faith and zeal were equal to the task. They purchased the greater part of the stone at the quarry near Batavia, Illinois, and hauled it the approximate distance of twenty-five miles during the cold winter days. Frostbitten ears and toes became a part of the program to which these pioneer toilers were subjected.

There are but few here now who were acquainted with those men who labored for the good of other generations more than they did for their own. Personally I remember some of them. Their names are household words to some of us to-day. For the activities of their lives stood identified with Christian virtue and they moved upon that exalted plane of existence, above the type of humanity whose ambitions are based upon selfishness and whose potentialities are lost in the absurdities and abuse of material life.

Among the noble men who wrought so unselfishly in the construction of the "Old Stone Church" were Samuel Reynolds, George Schiedecker, Silas Rogers, Robert Heavener, Daniel Rogers, and Byron Lamphere. They have all joined the great majority on the other side of life except the last named. The man who supervised the building of this chapel was Brother John Earnshaw. This good brother also assisted in laying the corner stone of the chapel at Independence, Missouri, April 6, 1868.

And Dedicated

Fifty-four years ago to-day this church was dedicated to the service of God. To us this means a place for an open Bible and an unfettered pulpit. In these principles we recognize the right of all men to adjust their conscience to that which, in their best judgment, is true and divine. On this basis all men are equal in the enjoyment of their God-given rights, and in the finality all men must answer to their Maker as to how they exercised those rights in this world. For virtue brings a reward in the increased value of life itself while vice cheapens and lessens the value of life to its possessor. These are the fundamentals that determine the human status in relation to destiny. The law of compensation is present in every life, for "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

We would be happy to tell you what the dedicatory program was as carried out here fifty-four years ago to-day. We do not know at this time who sang, or prayed, or who it was that delivered the address on that auspicious occasion. Alas! a missing link is gone from the historic chain that modifies the beauty and significance of this service.

Some Who Were There

But we do know some of the active men of the church who were here in that day. Elders Isaac Sheen, Mark H. Forscutt, William W. Blair, and Joseph Smith, with others, were prominent in the activities of church life in Plano during the year of 1868 and its associate years.

Isaac Sheen

Elder Sheen was editor of the first paper published by the church which we represent on this occasion. It was entitled the TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD. Brother Sheen was editor of this little church paper for a number of years and was considered quite an able writer and controversialist of the higher type. His aim seemed to be to both give and to receive, in comparative discussion, whatever of light and truth this method of study might disclose. As a boy I studied his debates with interest and avidity, and to this day can trace some of my deepest convictions to the argumentative and logical deductions of Elder Isaac Sheen.

Mark H. Forscutt

Elder Mark H. Forscutt was another outstanding church figure in those days. He was as great, if not the greatest, pulpit orator that ever occupied this stand. He possessed the erudition, the keen intellect, the artistic vision, the logic, the sympathy and passion that goes to make a great speaker. There have been but few his equal in the history of the church. With it all he was a poet of no mean ability. We are still singing his hymns, and other generations will sing them when we too are gone.

With his wonderful and well-developed gifts let us not forget Brother Forscutt's ability as a composer of church music. In every department of church life in which Elder Forscutt was an actor he shines a fixed star in the firmament of our church history. In every phase of his artistic life this noble man was a real contributor to the moral and spiritual treasury of the Christian religion. At this distant day we are happy to think of him as that broad-minded man whose vision of life covered the ground of universal human need and hope, the complete expression of which is found in the beautiful words of Alfred Tennyson:

O yet we trust that somehow good
Will be the final goal of ill,
To pangs of nature, sins of will,
Defects of doubt, and taints of blood;

Behold, we know not anything;
I can but trust that good shall fall
At last—far off—at last, to all
And every winter change to spring.

William W. Blair

Among the men of that day we recognize Elder William W. Blair—under God—as one of the builders and fathers of the church. He was a strong as well as a good man. He left his impress upon every vital function of the church. There is not a basic principle in the constitutional law of the church upon which he did not speak with power and authority. He was a master builder. He was not a compromiser, but a builder out of the gold and silver and precious stones of gospel truth. His mind was radiant with the light of God because he lived and moved in touch with those eternal forces which crystallize and reduce to concrete reality the experiences of spiritual life. His, perhaps, is the highest achievement that can be attained by Christian experience as it is the triumph of the spiritual over the material, the awakening of the soul into the new and everlasting life the finality of which is found in the perfections of Jesus Christ.

Brother Blair lived in a moral and spiritual atmosphere which is not the product of earth but of heaven. In that sublime realm he was one of the stalwarts of the church. His moral courage was equal to every task and to the performance of every duty. The keynote to his life was, "Is it right?" and when his conscience answered in the affirmative he was found in the breach, battling for those eternal principles of gospel truth which stand forever associated with the highest and best interests of the human race. When it came to principle, all men were alike to him, for he reasoned that it is through the educational process of divine truth as found in gospel principles that mankind is enabled to reach the highest state of being. He was fixed in the fact that freedom from superstition, from moral and social evil, is contingent upon believing, accepting, and living in the individual life the principles of the Christian religion. These principles, enthroned in human motive, affection, and activity, are the things that alone constitute the true Christian.

In the tests that prove what men are Elder Blair was shown to be honest in business, moral in deportment, spiritual in social activity, and strong and decided in those things that make for a better world and a higher order of society. Throughout his entire ministerial life I never heard his personal integrity questioned. Those who dealt with him from every angle of contact and knew him best are the ones who fully appreciate his worth. Like the true soldier of Christ he died with his armor on. On the train homeward bound from the General Conference he was called to the "Saints' Rest" in the better life. Elder Blair was a typical Latter Day Saint and though dead he speaks to us in the noble and exalted life he lived and in the lasting impress he made upon the literature and history of the church.

Joseph Smith

The last one in that galaxy of noble men of whom I will speak at this time was Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith, who—under God—was the human instrument in founding the church.

I knew Joseph Smith better by contact than I did any of the good men of whom I have spoken. I still have in my possession over half a hundred letters that Brother Smith wrote me in my missionary days. As a correspondent he was without a peer in my experience; and what he was to me in that regard I believe he was to every contemporary missionary in the field. In our religious curriculum we hold it to be a self-evident fact that no man in this life can become inerrant either in his personal or official capacity, hence we must have fixed standards of gospel truth to determine the correctness of what is said or done.

We hold that a divine principle represents more divine authority than would a world full of teachers who teach contrary to the truth. With this concept we hold the law of common consent as the basis of Christian democracy and the bulwark of religious liberty.

It happened sometimes, under my observation, that when a number of controversialists appealed to the President for advice and his advice and counsel did not agree with their divergent views—which it was impossible for it to do—they would make him the storm center of attack; I with the rest. It was in these things that I first discovered the goodness and greatness of the man. Attack him as you would, his love and kindness to you were just the same. One might even challenge his personal integrity, yet to that individual he was personally the same good brother and friend. He represented the stalwart oak that stood unmoved by the storm of fevered passion, while the small trees and those of heavy tops and shallow roots were falling around him.

In Joseph Smith I saw the strong man blended with meekness, patience, kindness, and love. Resentment seemed to have no place in his being. He forgave, as he hoped to be forgiven, did good for evil, and lived by the golden rule with an exactness in a human life that was marvelous. His attitude toward all men was one of unswerving kindness, love, and friendship. The three things that dominated the life of Brother Joseph—as we called him—are represented in the three graces, faith, hope, love; but in that beautiful life the greatest of these was love.

I knew him as a man, as a preacher, as a counselor, and interpreter of the laws and usages of the church, and I knew something of his social side of life. I saw him presiding over the highest tribunal of the church—the court of last appeal—but in the finality of his every act, attitude, or decision, as a man and a Christian he ever stood four-square. The very spirit and genius of that good man impelled you to love him. His justice and fairness impelled you to have confidence in him. His was a judicial mind enriched by the study of law and Christian attainment. His sense of justice was profound and deep, modified, perhaps, by mercy and love.

If Joseph Smith erred in his administrative life it could only have been on the side of mercy. His beautiful life in its social, moral, and spiritual aspects, was, in its prime features, the product of the religion of Jesus Christ. In his broad sympathies, in his justice, love, and mercy; in his humility and unassuming nobility of character; in the purity of his home life, and in the loyalty of his citizenship; in his fidelity to the trust the church imposed in him—these are the things that demonstrate the power and utility of the gospel in teaching men to know, and to live the right life in this world.

For fifteen years Joseph Smith was an honored citizen of Plano. There is no place where one could have greater freedom in extolling the virtues of that good man than Plano, for, while here, he stood not only for law and order, but for every civic virtue that has place in Christian civilization. Brother

Smith was absolutely free from ostentation and pride and was the great commoner among all. He had a very remarkable memory for faces and voices and names.

His indeed was a beautiful home life. After death had terminated his life on earth, his devoted wife said that the sound of his cane on the floor had been music to her. It will be hard to surpass this beautiful tribute in the domestic circle of life.

Such Men Inspired Us

As we contemplate the lives and characters of good men and women who shine out as bright stars in the firmament of human existence, and whose influence still lives in the forces that make for good to-day, does it not help us in our struggle and aspiration to come up higher in our endeavor? When we think of the rights of man, in terms of civil and religious liberty, our minds revert to a Chatham, or a Burke, who fought the battle of democracy across the sea and whose triumph in the British Parliament made final Washington's victory at Yorktown.

Do not such reflections fire us anew for love of liberty, the rights of man, and for the ideals of a New Day that means a better world in which to live? In the finale, when Jesus said to Peter, "Put up thy sword," does it not disclose the spirit and genius of the Divine Man of Nazareth? The one Supreme Mind whose vision covers the entire scope of human need and human possibility, possesses the power to supply that need in every life and give the attainment of that possibility to every soul.

The victories of Jesus Christ are those of love and good will to men. This world is bathed in tears because of man's inhumanity to man, but in the final eschatology our Savior will wipe those tears away, and the nations of earth will transform the arts of war into the arts of peace—will learn war no more—for the conquering love of Jesus Christ in the souls of men must win humanity to God and heaven.

A rough estimate has been made of the population of the world, ascribing to Europe 400,000,000; to Asia, 910,000,000; to Africa, 180,000,000; to North America, 120,000,000; South America, 38,000,000; Oceania, 8,000,000. Religiously there are estimated as Roman Catholics 272,860,000; Orthodox Catholics, 120,000,000; Protestants, 171,650,000, a total of 564,510,000, professed Christian; Jews, 12,000,000; Mohammedans, 221,825,000; Buddhists, 138,000,000; Hindus, 210,825,000; Confucianists and Taoists, 300,830,000; Shintoists, 25,000,000; Animists, 158,270,000; unclassified, 15,280,000. This gives a total of non-Christians of one billion. The estimate is probably made by population rather than by enrolled church membership.

Spiritual Development and Free Will

By S. A. Burgess

No man can be compelled to do right. We must work out our salvation; for there is no easy, thoughtless road to the truth.

In the years that are past young people on many occasions have raised the question, Why do we not have an exact formulary or statement of right and wrong? It would be so convenient to know just what we can do and what we can't do and not have to worry about it.

This feeling comes from the quite natural one of mental inertia, that we do not want to think more than we have to. The children of Israel, when they fell away from the gospel plan, were given a set law of what they could eat and what they could drink and what they could do on the Sabbath day, and then the men in power added the smallest detail of these laws, prescribing just what could be done under varying conditions.

A very little thought, however, will show that if we are told just what we shall do and what we cannot do, that we become practically automatons. There is no intellectual or spiritual development. It is for this reason that the Apostle Paul emphasized so many times that we are not under the law but are under grace. We must decide for ourselves. We cannot do right by simply doing right acts without thought, for righteousness is something more than an overt act. Righteousness is of the soul and comes from within. There is more real development in having a right intention and trying to do that which is right, even if we do not perfectly succeed, than there is in performing formal acts which are designated to be right, without thought or effort on our part, even if those acts be socially better.

We are here upon a probation; we are here for the purpose of development. It does seem so easy to leaders at different times to work a reform by laying down set laws for developing the people to do that which is designated as right. Yet we learn that before the world was (Genesis 3, Inspired Version), that Lucifer offered to save mankind and promised not one soul should be lost. That looks at first like efficiency. But because he would have taken away the free agency of man, he was cast down and became the Devil, even Satan.

It may seem easier to some if we were told just how much we should eat and drink, just how much we should go to church, just how many times we should pray and just what attitude we should take; just how much we should contribute to the poor, so that we could go through it in a mechanical way and be at peace.

But such is not the plan of God, since he would have us to become his sons and daughters, knowing that which is right for ourselves, because we have proven it, and then choosing that which is right. A mechanical preparation does not fit us for new conditions. A mechanical preparation does not fit us for the kingdom of God and its new environment; while the development of character through testing and proving, through the yearning of the heart and the seeking for that which is holy and through striving after that which is best, does give us such an understanding of the good as is applicable to any new problem which may confront us.

It becomes thus easy to understand what the Master meant when he said that it is not that which goes into a man that corrupts, but that which proceeds from the heart. Periodically for over twenty years we have heard the question raised with regard to certain particular foods or drinks, as "Do not whisky and tobacco corrupt a man?" We know for a certainty that the vile stuff that is sometimes put in our bodies does corrupt our bodies.

But the basic thought, the principle that the Master was teaching, was that it is out of our hearts, out of our desires, out of our will, that we do either good or evil. That which we eat or drink, or how many times we bathe, these outward acts are all but of passing importance and do not help us to become really better. But that which proceeds from the heart, our intentions, our desires, our hopes, our wants, are a measure of the man. Of course this measure, that which proceeds from the heart, the desire for corrupt things that do in the outward act corrupt the body. And in the wrong desire the soul is already corrupted. The immorality, therefore, is in the wrong desire and the wrong attitude.

As a passing instance of this attitude on the part of students we may note the instance on the part of some that the only way for the redemption of Zion is that all property must be owned by the group. Of course this means in the end control by a few individuals and it has always proven so in the past. It does seem to simplify the problem tremendously after we make a race of children who would consider anything that they have and own belongs to the "tribe" or group. This has been tried out and proven out among barbarous and semibarbarous people many times. Of course this would require real conversion on the part of those adults who first turned over their property, but after that a man becomes only a legal trustee. He can be compelled to do that which is considered to be right; he has no choice.

But others urge that the use of private property in itself is not an evil, that for a man to possess

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Rumor and Confidence

"The Reign of Rumor"—that describes the situation which I have found throughout the mines and factories of America—and, for that matter, of western Europe as well. Of that reign the cause—also the result, is the worker's unbelievable ignorance of his employer's plans and purposes, his aims and his ideals. That unbelievable ignorance is unequalled by anything I know—except the employer's amazing ignorance of the plans and purposes, the aims and ideals of his employees."

The above is taken from Mainsprings of Men, by Whiting Williams. Mr. Williams has spent several years investigating factory conditions, and in doing so has worked in different factories and foundries so as to gain a first-hand knowledge of actual conditions.

In this fourth article on "Fear and faith" as published in Scribner's Magazine, he emphasizes the great value of the worker being taken into the confidence of his employer, and the employer also knowing the ideals and hopes of the workers. Back of most trouble lies the intense desire, deep growing and universal, for demonstrated worth as a man, and especially for demonstrated worth as a workman. A man wants certainty of employment. He wants an opportunity to do the work for which he is prepared.

But to-day another difficulty confronts us in addition to the reign of rumor. That trouble is that we try to live our way into our thinking. We think as we live and from the standpoint of the manner in which we earn our living rather than thinking independently and let our thinking direct our living. Hence there follows a greater sympathy between men physical and mental talents and use them for the public good means a conversion. For a man or woman to have to consider earnestly that with which the Lord has blessed them, their receipts and expenditures, and then consider not only tithing but surplus, how much can be spared for the common good, such a person goes through a spiritual experience which is developing. It requires continually the process of conversion and of devotion to the great cause, and it will doubtless in time also bring with it as great a condemnation as that which confronted Ananias and Sapphira, if they promise and do not fulfill. For he who knows that which is right and does it not shall truly be beaten with many stripes.

But if one is compelled to give and has no right of choice, there is no growth. Where one is compelled to do right, there is very little if any consideration of duty or sense of responsibility or interest in principles or results.

This would appear to be basic in the philosophy of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We are not under the law. There can be no exact law given to do this or do that. There must be the conversion from selfishness to unselfishness, from wrong desires to desiring that which is morally good for all.

employed in the same line of work, even though not associated and divided by many miles, than there is between neighbors.

The coal miner has a greater sympathy for men in similar work in Africa or Europe than he does for the ordinary reader living in the same county. Hence there is a tendency that even the reign of rumor may be displaced by a class conflict, unless we can find common experiences and common emotions to act as a bond to unite men on more than on level of education, intelligence, and training.

A partial step is found in that men do sympathize more closely in the same industry than they do in others. Thus there is more sympathy by railroad executives and understanding of the interests of the employees, and a closer sympathy of the laboring man, even though on a strike, with the railroad executive, than either or both feel for the right demands of the general public. It is something gained that within industry there should be developing this sympathy between the executive and the working man, between the man who labors with his brain principally and the man who labors principally with his hands. But this sympathy should be extended farther in social consciousness, and lead to a better understanding of the public and with the public.

But as yet we are largely under the reign of rumor, and this is a natural result of the habit of trying to draft men's cooperation through fear of punishment instead of securing it by the promise of satisfaction. Too many depend upon compulsion rather than on leadership.

"The normal worker under normal conditions wants a larger share of the satisfactions of doing his job much more than he wants a larger share of the satisfactions of managing the enterprise which furnishes the job.

"In other words, he wants not less work but more work—not a larger share of management—as a full regular enjoyment both of the economic and of the accompanying spiritual rewards of work."

But when a man is driven, his self-respect causes him to take a keen delight in making a needlessly grouchy foreman think he is working, when he knows that he is not. It then follows that the foreman must think the men are working in order to save his own face as foreman; while the men feel they have to know the opposite in order to save their own. "For there is not one amongst us but will direct—and should direct—all the energies of our being against the threat of him who assumes that the only way he can secure the energies of our hands and heads is to do his utmost to displace us from the captaincy of our souls."

These articles of Mr. Williams show a deep insight into the moving spirits of men, their desires and hopes, which influence them not only in the factory or foundry, but also in the shop, at the desk, and probably even in professional life. They are the mainsprings of men, not simply the result of trained ability.

Prices Again Rising

The return of higher prices to some indicates prosperity. Very few seem able to see clearly what wages and income really mean in terms of purchasing power. Money wages are not the real wages. Mere prices standing alone are not an indication of either good or hard times.

It is interesting to note, however, that Irwin Fisher's price index on the wholesale prices of 200 separate commodities show the following rise and fall:

With 1913 taken as 100, the high prices of May, 1920, would be valued at 247, or the dollar have a purchasing power of 40.5 cents.

January, 1922, was the lowest prices since the war, 138, the dollar having a purchasing value of 72½ cents. For each of the three weeks January 20 to February 9, the average index has been 158 or a purchase power of 63.2 cents.

The Missouri Association

An organization of the business forces of the state to unity of action for the state.

There is justification for the belief that a new era has dawned for Missouri. The organization of The Missouri Association is a significant achievement. It means more than appears upon its face. For, back of the organization itself lies the feeling which inspired it, the feeling that the time has come to inaugurate a movement for the expression of statehood, and for coordinated action for the advancement of the State. It is a product of the development of State pride, a State patriotism, which is something more than an emotion, which is, on the contrary, a call and an urge to labor for the promotion of Missouri's progress. But an urge, however strong, is ineffective unless specific direction is given to it, unless machinery is created for its application to concrete accomplishment, unless the forces of achievement are brought together for collective action toward the consummation of common purposes.

The aim of The Missouri Association, as stated in its constitution, is "to coordinate the business forces of the State in one organization in order to secure prompt unity and harmony of action in the proper consideration of questions especially pertaining to the material interests of the State at large." The term "business forces" is to be construed broadly. It contemplates more than a union of chambers of commerce, though that is a part of its plan. It is to take in agricultural bodies, bankers' associations, and other societies organized for the promotion of material interests, besides individuals, corporations, and partnerships that may be disposed to join in the movement for State progress, and, incorporated with it, and to aid in the accomplishment of its purposes, is the Missouri Press Association, out of which the idea came and which is to be credited with the establishment of the organization.

The creation of this body gives to Missouri an instrument it has never had before. For the first time it is now possible to bring all local and regional economic organizations of the State together for the collective consideration of the general welfare of Missouri, to decide what is best to be done for the promotion of that welfare, and to take the steps necessary to that end. For the first time it is now possible to form a definite program of action, supported by all the diverse interests that will enter into the organization, for the stimulation of a broader and deeper concern among the people of the State in the progress of Missouri, in its material and social enrichment, and in its reputation as one of the leaders among the commonwealths of America. For the first time it is now possible to devise a plan and obtain the means for bringing the attention of the country and the world to the resources and the manifold attractions of Missouri as a region in which to live and labor.

All this and more, the Missouri Association contemplates, and provides within itself the means of accomplishment. How it is to operate, in what directions it is to begin to exercise its energies, remain to be determined. The fact of interest and importance at the moment is that the organization, the agency of accomplishment, has been created. A start has been made and Missouri, we have no doubt, will gladly rally around the standard that President Hull and his associates have raised.—Globe-Democrat,

Negro Health Week

It is becoming more and more apparent that no man can live to himself. Those who dwell in palaces in the wealthy part of the city can neither afford to ignore conditions in the country nor still less conditions in the city slums. Though epidemics may have far the larger part their start in the dirt and disorder of the slums, once started, they take the children of rich and poor alike.

It is for this reason that great interest should be taken in the Negro health week which was concluded the first week in April. Monday was set aside for hygiene; Tuesday to swat the fly and destroy the breeding places of flies and mosquitoes and the danger from rats. Wednesday was tuberculosis day, the signs of tuberculosis, how the disease is spread, and that early treatment can effect a complete cure. Thursday was children's health day; Friday sanitation day, and Saturday general clean-up day, while the first day of all, Easter Sunday, was given over to health sermons and lectures.

In connection with this campaign, literature was distributed particularly with regard to tuberculosis which carries off a great many among the colored people and which lays the basis for spreading the contagion to the white race. Health rules were given concerning ventilation, bathing, and personal cleanliness at all times. To keep well, the following rules were submitted:

- "1. Ventilate every room you occupy.
- "2. Wear loose, porous clothing suited to season, weather, and occupation.
- "3. If you are an indoor worker, be sure to get recreation outdoors.
- "4. Sleep in fresh air always; in the open if you can.
- "5. Hold a handkerchief before your mouth and nose when you cough or sneeze and insist that others do so, too.
- "6. Always wash your hands before eating.
- "7. Do not overeat. This applies especially to meats and eggs.
- "8. Eat some hard and some bulky foods; some fruits.
- "9. Eat slowly—chew thoroughly.
- "10. Drink sufficient water daily.
- "11. Evacuate thoroughly, regularly.
- "12. Stand, sit, and walk erect.
- "13. Do not allow poisons and infections to enter the body.
- "14. Keep the teeth, gums, and tongue clean.
- "15. Work, play, rest, and sleep in moderation.
- "16. Keep serene. Worry is the foe of health. Cultivate the companionship of your fellow men.
- "17. Avoid self-drugging. Beware the plausible humbug of the patent-medicine faker.
- "18. Have your doctor examine you carefully once a year. Also consult your dentist at regular intervals."

The symptoms for tuberculosis are of interest to all, especially since if discovered early by a proper medical examination it may be cured.

Suspicious Symptoms

"Continued weariness, loss of weight or energy without apparent cause; very suspicious if there be slight cough."

"Hoarseness or huskiness of voice, if at all persistent and not otherwise explained."

"Cough or expectoration, even if only a little in the morning, if continued over two months."

"Frequent attacks of 'bronchitis,' 'grip,' or fever."

"A temperature below 98 degrees in the mornings and above 99 degrees in the afternoons, persisting from day to day, with rapid pulse, is very significant of tuberculosis."

"Blood spitting is caused by tuberculosis nine times in ten."

"Pleurisy, or stabbing pains in the chest, is caused by tuberculosis about seven times in ten.

"Night sweats or low blood pressure as observed by a physician, very suspicious.

"The tubercle bacillus in the sputum is a positive sign of tuberculosis, but the diagnosis should be made long before the bacillus can be found."

Eight-Hour Day Most Efficient

According to a report recently published by the Federated Engineering Society, there are about 300,000 wage earners still working on the two-shift system or 12-hour day. Half of these are in the iron and steel employ. The Engineering Society took this question up and appointed a committee to investigate it, starting their work in 1920, and have now published the results of their investigation. They find the eight-hour day makes for greater efficiency. Many of the copper foundries went on the three-shift system twenty to thirty years ago and practically the last of them in 1919. The output, it was stated, was increased 166 per cent per man and the total increase in production was 29 per cent per man in 1921 as compared to 1913. Approved equipment accounts for part but the engineers state it was primarily because of the change to the eight-hour shift. The oil refineries, flour mills, rubber plants, cement plants, paper, glass, sugar, chemical, and other continuous process industries have gone over to the three shifts of eight hours each and have found it profitable to do so.

It has also made for a better feeling and has greatly decreased the work of the grievance committee, and in many cases this committee has almost ceased to function. The human factor must be considered. It has been found that men gravitate, not to the twelve-hour mills where they can work for longer hours, but to the eight-hour mills where they are willing to take decreased remuneration if that is necessary in order to make the change. But in many cases there has been no accompanying decrease of the individual wage but there has been an increase in the efficiency of the factory or foundry.

Another factor is that it improves the human output as the men then acquire gardens, buy their own homes, and become better citizens. The evidence is conclusive that the leisure is used to advantage. It decreased the labor turn over. Industry as a rule is finding the twelve-hour day to be a poor producer. Shorter hours mean better homes, better fathers, better childhood, better morals, better citizenship, and an increase in culture. This does not mean a flight from work. It means diversity of operations as the hours are put in to advantage at the home and in the home garden. It does not mean that working hours should be decreased indefinitely. It does mean that humanity and reasonable hours are found better in economics as well as in social development. It means a saving of civilization worth many times any possible cost.

This report is now published, The Twelve-Hour Shift in Industry, 302 pages, $3.50.—Christian Century.

Purity of Heart: "The purified heart implies a quickened personality, an awakened intelligence, a resolute will, a ceaseless purifying of our affections and ambitions, laying aside weights which hamper, and besetting sins. It means the whole man roused to spiritual passion, dowered with the hate of what God hates, and the scorn of what God scorns, the love of what God loves. This is to cling to God with our strength, as the branch clings, in living union with the tree."—Divine.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

Edited by G. Leonard Harrington, M. D., Church Physician

"Precancerous" Conditions

(From pamphlet, What We Know About Cancer, pages 20, 21, 22, 23.)

One factor which during the last ten years has proved to be of great importance in the origin of cancer is the element of chronic irritation. As the various theories of the parasitic origin of cancer have been disproved, the element of chronic irritation has been found to become an increasingly important factor in the incidence of cancer in one region after another. This fact has made it possible to give prophylactic treatment for the purpose of preventing the occurrence of cancer, a procedure which is exactly as rational as the prophylactic use of antitoxins in many of the infectious diseases, and in fact is perhaps a more effective life-saving measure. This prophylactic treatment consists of the removal by a minor operation, often under local anesthesia, of lesions such as keratoses, moles, fissures, chronic ulcerations, and indurations, and the benign tumors, which so often precede the development of cancer itself. This prophylaxis further demands the avoidance of sources of chronic irritation, such as, for instance, the removal of an ill-fitting tooth plate which causes irritation of the gum, or the repair, at as early a date as possible, of the deeper lacerations of the cervix which occur at childbirth.

The more important lesions which may be regarded as of precancerous significance may be summarized as follows:

1. Pigmented moles have long been recognized to be the starting point of that most fatal form of malignant disease, the so-called melanotic sarcoma. Not all moles, of course, undergo that transformation, but all must be held to contain that inherent possibility of development, and on the slightest sign of increase in size, irritation, or induration, they should be widely removed by radical operation. Pigmented moles on the hands and feet are especially liable to repeated trauma, and thus to malignant change.

2. The senile keratoses, or scaling patches of heaped up squamous epithelium, so common on the face and exposed parts of the body of those of advancing years, are among the most common starting points for cancer of the skin.

3. Chronic ulcers and fissures of the skin due to old burns and scars, the effects of Roentgen rays and radium, tuberculosis of the skin, and old syphilitic lesions often cause cancer. To this category belongs the "Kangri" cancer of Kashmir (squamous cell carcinoma of the abdominal wall), occurring at the site of chronic ulceration due to burning from the Kangri basket, or hot stove, carried against the abdominal skin within the clothing of the natives.

4. Gallstones are accompanied by chronic irritation of the gall bladder, and in a certain percentage of cases carcinoma of the gall bladder occurs.

5. A certain proportion of ulcers of the stomach are known to become the site of cancer of that organ, and a history which can be interpreted as evidence of previous ulcer is obtainable in certain cases of gastric cancer.

6. Erosions and lacerations of the cervix of the uterus, the almost inevitable result of childbirth, are the most common factors predisposing to cancer of the cervix. While it is customary for the physician to repair immediately the more serious lacerations of the cervix, less extensive lesions can be detected only at a later period after involution has occurred. The routine examination of all women for cervical lesions three months after labor has been advocated, that these lesions may be immediately repaired, and the predisposition to cancer avoided. It is advisable that all women who have borne children, as they approach the menopause, should have a vaginal examination and an inspection of the cervix at reasonable intervals until the menopause is well established, and the normal atrophic changes have taken place. Deep lacerations should be repaired, and superficial lesions, if resistant to local treatment, are sufficient indication for amputation of the cervix. The hyperplastic endometritis which accompanies fibromyoma of the uterus is also believed to be one of the most important predisposing causes of cancer of the fundus.

7. Cystitis of one form or another often precedes cancer of the bladder, and the irritation of Bilharzia parasites or of specific chemical irritants, such as anilin, are recognized as producing changes in the bladder mucosa which may go on to carcinoma.

8. Carcinoma of the buccal mucous membranes—the lip, tongue, cheek and jaw—have long been associated with one or another source of chronic irritation. In this country the most common source of chronic irritation of the buccal mucous membranes is the use of tobacco. It is significant, also, that in other countries, as the Orient, cancer of the buccal mucous membranes appears to arise most directly as the consequence of the chewing of other irritants, such as the buyo leaf of the betel nut. Syphilis is also a recognized predisposing factor to cancer of the mouth, and the chronic hyperplastic condition of the buccal mucous membrane—leukoplakia—has repeatedly been observed to progress into carcinoma while under treatment. The irritation of ill-fitting tooth plates, or the chronic irritation of pyorrhea alveolaris occasionally can be recognized as forerunners of cancer of the alveolar processes.

9. Kraurosis and leukoplakia of the vulva are forms of superficial lesions, benign in origin, which exhibit a definite tendency to subsequent malignant change. Suitable treatment and close and continued observation to detect the early signs of the development of cancer must not be neglected, in order that radical operative treatment may be instituted during the early stages when the disease can thus be cured.

10. Involution changes of a physiologic nature appear to predispose to cancer in certain organs, notably the female breast, and the male prostate. In the breast the involution phenomena which give rise to the condition commonly known as chronic cystic mastitis show an incidence of carcinoma estimated at from 10 to 25 per cent, while in the prostate chronic prostatitis and hypertrophy precede the symptoms of carcinoma in a notable proportion of all cases.

11. Many tumors which are essentially benign in character have been shown to be capable of malignant transformation, especially in the later years of life. These include papillomas, adenomas of the thyroid and of the intestines, villous tumors of the bladder, papillary and cystic tumors of the ovary and of the breast, polyps of the uterus or the rectum, and, in fact, all tumors in which the epithelial elements are in preponderance.

In all of the foregoing conditions the possibility, if not the probability, of cancerous transformation has been shown to be a serious element in prognosis. There can be no question that the cure or the removal of all such lesions is a vital indication. Removal of the predisposing causes of cancer, and the early recognition of cancer, when it is present, are the two measures which give promise at the present time of yielding the greatest results in reducing the mortality of the disease.

What Everyone Should Know About Cancer

(Prepared by a Special Committee of the American Society for the Control of Cancer.)

(From A Handbook for the Lay Reader)

Why has there been so much talk about cancer of late years? There are several reasons. The disease is very frequent, causing one death out of every ten after the age of forty, and moreover, it is apparently steadily increasing throughout the world. Familiar to the earliest physicians, it has persisted through the ages of medical progress; but while an immense fund of knowledge has been accumulated there is much still to be learned. Only too often the utmost skill of modern medical science fails to save the patient and people have therefore come to dread it as a hopeless and incurable affliction. Fortunately the facts warrant a more hopeful view, and a systematic effort is now being made to tell people generally what is known about cancer and particularly to describe the warning signs so that this insidious disease may be more frequently discovered and successfully treated in the early stages while a cure is still possible.

In the two years and a half that the United States was engaged in the great war about 80,000 soldiers were killed or died of disease. During the same time cancer caused the death of 180,000 people in this country. While these soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice did not die in vain, a large proportion of the deaths from cancer represents a needless waste of human life.

The Frequency and the Increase of Cancer

Cancer is indeed one of the most important causes of death. In the continental United States the annual mortality from all forms of the disease is estimated at about 90,000. It is probable that if all these deaths were correctly ascertained and certified, the total would reach 100,000 for the year 1920. The mortality rate for cancer is somewhat below 85 per 100,000 per annum. As a group of diseases, cancer ranks with pneumonia, tuberculosis, and kidney disease as one of the five or six causes of death which stand second only to heart disease in the Census Bureau's annual report for 1917.

The mortality from cancer is apparently on the increase throughout all civilized countries. In the United States the annual increase in the cancer death rate is approximately 2½ per cent. It is almost exclusively a disease of adult life, for of the total number of deaths from cancer at all ages, about 95 per cent occur after the age of 35 is reached.

Cancer appears in a variety of forms, affecting practically every organ or part of the body. The most important forms for both sexes is cancer of the stomach, which including the liver, accounts for about 35,000 deaths per annum. The number of deaths from cancer of the female generative organs is about 13,000 per annum; from cancer of the female breast about 8,500 (a very high frequency, for it occurs in only half the population); from cancer of the mouth and tongue about 3,500, from cancer of the peritoneum, intestines, and rectum combined about 12,000, from cancer of the skin about 3,500, and from cancer of other organs or parts about 14,500.

Cancer is especially frequent among adult women. Of all deaths over the age of 40 one in thirteen among men is due to this disease, but among women over this age one out of every eight is fatally attacked. Between the ages of 35 and 45 three times as many women as men die of cancer; between 45 and 55 twice as many. This excessive mortality among women is apparently due to cancer of the breast and the special organs of generation. Yet these forms of the disease like others are usually curable by competent treatment in the early stages.

Excluding cancer of the breast and of the female generative organs the relative frequency of all other forms of cancer combined is about the same in the two sexes. The civilized and particularly the white races are more liable to cancer than native races, such as the North American Indians or the orientals. Cancer of the uterus, however, is apparently more common among Negro women in this country than among white women. Cancer of the breast and cancer of the ovary are more frequent among the unmarried than among the married; in contrast, cancer of the uterus is more common among married than among single women.

The Need for Educating the Public

But, quite aside from statistics, the disease occurs so frequently that there is hardly a person who has not known of its occurrence among his or her immediate relatives or friends. Another reason for interest in the subject of cancer is that after the disease reaches a certain state it is incurable and invariably fatal. It is important to remember, however, that if it is discovered in an earlier stage, the cancer can be removed with a very great probability of a permanent cure. This fact does not seem to be generally recognized, and it is for this reason that physicians, health officers, and others who are interested in public health and welfare work are so anxious to show that much more than is being accomplished at present can be done to cure cancer in its early stages. Even though scientific knowledge of the origin of cancer is still in many points imperfect, the practical knowledge of how to arrest its onset and save the patient in individual cases is already in many respects satisfactory. Some physicians believe that possibly three quarters of the deaths from cancer and all the attendant suffering could be prevented if all members of the medical and nursing professions as well as the public were adequately instructed in what they each ought to know about this disease.

The campaign of education in regard to tuberculosis which has been conducted for the last twenty years in America has resulted in a very great diminution in the number of deaths from the disease, largely because people have been taught not to delay in consulting a physician. It is perfectly possible to produce the same results in cancer, if all patients suffering from the disease could be taken to a physician and could have the cancer removed while still in an early stage. Practically without exception cancer is at first a local disease; that is, it begins in a little spot all by itself and for a long time may have no effect on the rest of the body. This means that in theory it would always be easily curable if the first spot could be recognized and removed in time. In practice it is difficult and in some cases impossible for even the physician to recognize it soon enough. The second practical difficulty is to get the patient to consult a physician immediately after he or she recognizes that something is wrong. If all cases that came to treatment were early cases a great many more patients would be cured. The problem, then, is to get the case into the hands of a competent medical adviser while it is still in the early and curable stage, or even more fortunately, while the patient exhibits merely those conditions which are now widely recognized as predisposing factors in the causation of cancer. No matter how great his skill or how modern his knowledge the physician cannot help a patient who does not come to him. People must therefore be taught to recognize the disease when it begins and to realize that early surgical removal, or the application of other modern remedies which are sometimes useful in competent hands, is the only hope of cure but that the chance for cure is very great if the patient is wise enough to act promptly.

Unfortunately, statistics prove that the average cancer patient after discovering something wrong, waits weeks, months, even a year or more before obtaining medical advice or treatment. Why is this? Probably one reason is that the patients do not realize that cancer starts from such trifling beginnings, or if they do have a suspicion that they may have cancer, they ignore or conceal it either through fatalistic despair or false and fatal modesty. The old-fashioned idea that cancer is a "blood disease" still exerts a wide and baleful influence and must be overcome by spreading the modern knowledge that practically all forms of malignant growths are at first confined strictly to the locality in which they originate. The thought that cancer may be hereditary also makes one infected with this disease desire to conceal it, but heredity has not been proved to be an important factor in the development of the common types of cancer.

Above all causes of delay is the unfortunate absence of pain in the beginning. Usually there is no pain to force attention while there is still time enough to apply the remedy, and by the time the symptoms are so marked as to alarm the victim it may be too late, for the invading cancer will probably have obtained a foothold from which it cannot easily be dislodged. If indeed the early symptoms of cancer caused half as much trouble as a toothache, many more lives would be saved because the patient would be driven to consult a physician in time. The fact that people generally are not familiar with the symptoms of cancer, other than pain, makes it difficult to increase the number of cures, for unless prepared to recognize the signs that mark the beginning of cancer people are helplessly open to its ravages. A little knowledge in this case is not dangerous; it is essential. It is the purpose of this handbook to give the essential facts that should be familiar to everyone.

How Cancer Begins

Cancer is a very curious disease which is due to the running wild of certain parts of the body tissue; for example, a few cells in the breast or in the liver or in some other organ grow beyond the natural limit and invade the surrounding tissues, then we have a cancer. This cancer often does not give any notice of its presence until a long time after the trouble has begun, because the cells composing it are the same, or nearly the same, as the cells from which they started, and therefore the body does not recognize the fact that a cancer is growing until it becomes of considerable size. The origin of cancer has been aptly compared to the situation in a family seated at a dinner table when a supposed relative arrives and is given a place—the newcomer eating all the food and finally the family itself. This is just what a cancer does. It starts very quietly, is very small at first, but gradually grows and destroys the very tissues that feed it, until ultimately it kills its host by the destruction of some important part of the body. But in such a case, the cells of the body itself are the parasites, there being no external parasite, so far as we know, introduced from the outside to cause the cancer.

"Intellectual egotism may be as grave a sin as physical selfishness."—H. G. Wells.

Fellowship: "Fellowship is an active comradeship between personalities, men or women or both, who unite with one another in a common worship, or battle for a common quest, or play their game for the honor of a team, or pool their separate thoughts in constructing and carrying into effect a single plan, or who simply share the needs and desires of a common humanity."

LETTERS AND NEWS

Lees Summit, Missouri, Getting Ready for Work

Bishop R. May in a letter to the First Presidency.

It is now three weeks since I last reported the conditions and progress at Lees Summit, therefore I will now report for the past three weeks.

From the present outlook everything looks good. The membership seems to be quite jovial over the present conditions and hopeful for the future. There was a very spiritual meeting following the sacrament Sunday, April 1. I occupied in the evening. There were about one hundred and thirty present. This was the first evening service for our people at Lees Summit in many months except when the stake conferences were held there. There were quite a number of outsiders present. Owing to the decorating of the auditorium we will have no further evening services until Sunday the 22d. At that date we hope to commence a series of meetings to last a week or more. We expect to start with a grand rally, which will really be the beginning of regular and full Sunday services and midweek meetings as well as all auxiliaries.

As perhaps you know there is a pipe organ in the recently acquired church, and according to Brother Goullee who learned the art in London the organ is in good condition. But there is no one here who can play it; at least they will not venture it. Brother Goullee has played on it several times at the morning services. The choir loft as used by the other people only seated ten singers. I am rearranging the platform so that it will seat about forty singers. The former congregation sold the seats with the building, but took the pulpit and the rostrum chairs. We are having a new and finely finished pulpit made. It will be ready for the opening Sunday after next.

The main floor is seated with first-class semicircle benches sufficient for two hundred persons, but with the choir loft and platform, independent of the rostrum, chairs could be placed in different places on the floor to accommodate in all about three hundred.

I have in mind that when we make this new start the people of Lees Summit and surrounding country will know we are there.

College Professor Fairly Presents Our Church

Elder John Blackmore writes from Pittsburg, Kansas, to First Presidency.

It is with pleasure that I forward the weekly letter to your office. The branch in this city seems to be in a very good condition. We have had good attendance at the meetings of late. Yesterday we had a special day's program, it being the nearest Sunday to the 6th of April. I preached last evening on the subject of the restoration of the gospel. I was pleased with the attendance all day.

I wish to speak of an incident at the college here that occurred last week in the American history class. [Brother Blackmore, pastor of the branch, is a student in that college.] The professor while lecturing made a clear distinction between the Reorganized Church and the people of Utah. He mentioned that he was well acquainted with many of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints, and that they were not connected with the Mormons of Utah, though they believed in the Book of Mormon. He had read a portion of that book and it was not the bad book that most people considered it, and that the people with their headquarters at Independence were not the Mormons that McMaster's History represents. I suppose that the professor spoke of the distinction for fully a quarter of an hour. I was naturally pleased. As this was given before a class of eighty college students, most of whom would be teachers in the future, I think that it is impossible to estimate the value of it.

Of course he knew who I was, for we are fairly good friends, walking home often together of an evening, so that may have influenced his discussion of the subject. I am sure in my own mind that it influenced the amount of time that he gave to it. If all college professors would do the same I am sure that great future results would be in our favor. This may be worth a little space in the HERALD as showing that even the colleges do sometimes speak in our favor. I believe most of the students of the class know who I am and what I represent, so that a personal touch was added to the statements of the professor.

We were pleased with a visit from our district president, Brother Harrington. He stayed over one Sunday with us, and his sermon was enjoyed very much.

In Re the Subject of Education

The following letter sets forth the reaction of one of the ministry to a recent article on education. It suggests the thought that possibly the apparent division on that subject may be the result of mutual misunderstanding. Those who stand for education may not always have made it perfectly clear that they also recognize the imperative need of "spirituality" as they must do, or why stay with the church at all; while those who contend for "spirituality" have failed to make it clear that they believe in education, as they must if they believe in the acquisition of knowledge in any degree at all by either study or observation or experience. As a result, we are constrained to believe, quite needless misunderstanding and fruitless argument has resulted. The letter referred to follows:

"PRESIDENT ELBERT A. SMITH,
"Independence, Missouri.

"Dear Brother: I am writing to let you know how deeply your article on 'Education,' under the heading of 'Blue Pencil Notes,' in the last number of the HERALD (March 21) has impressed me. What you set forth requisitions all the powers of body, mind, and spirit for the advancement of the kingdom of God, but in such a way that one feels that in responding one will have the favor of Heaven attending. There is no feeling that the truth contained in revelation is to be displaced by rudimentary learnings of men. Such a position as you set forth will find expression in Zion's highest development.

"The uneasiness that has been in the church for a number of years respecting education has not, I think, been caused by a belief on the part of anyone in ignorance, or because of opposition to learning. I know of no one in the church really opposed to education. As I view it, there has not been a proper estimate placed upon the sacrifices and labors of those who have toiled through the heat of the day; of many who have performed their work under most difficult circumstances, which has created a feeling that the earlier men of the church, nearly all up to the present, were being regarded as without vision, and that now apparently without appreciation of the foundation laid, the glory of Zion is to be made to shine out of the church by a study of subjects which are very important in their place but nevertheless secondary as active spiritual forces. Scripture Text Calendar for 1924

So many of our patrons were delighted with the Scripture Text Calendars offered last year that we are not only offering the same proposition with a better price this season but able to make the announcement now so plans can be made early to sell them to friends and neighbors who only need to be shown the calendars in order to buy them.

The size of the calendar is 9¼ by 16 inches, and the art work done by a new process which gives a most beautiful effect.

THE ORIGINAL COVER DESIGN

We call attention to the originality of the cover design of the Scripture Text Calendar for 1924. This theme so famous in the annals of art, so oft repeated in the works of the Great Masters, is yet ever new, and here appears framed in a unique border design of harmony and proportion, with the central theme, the Madonna and Child, itself standing out in attractive colors.

A CALENDAR, AND MORE

Not only is the Scripture Text Calendar a complete calendar, clearly indicating all the dates in 1924, but it is a devotional aid, giving a Scripture verse for each day of the year, and the Sunday School lessons for each Sunday, while the Golden Text of the lesson is given on each Saturday for the Sunday directly following. (These lesson texts are not for our own lessons, so may be disregarded.)

A MINIATURE ART GALLERY

Besides these devotional features, this calendar contains twelve reproductions of the works of some of the world's greatest artists. All of these pictures represent what is best and most refined in the realm of religious art.

THE PAINTINGS AND THE PAINTERS

The names of the artists presented with the pictures speak for themselves concerning the high quality of these masterpieces.

- January—Christ with Mary and Martha—Hofmann.
- February—Master, Is It I?—Schmitz.
- March—He Is Risen—Deschwanden.
- April—Christ Weeping Over Jerusalem—Limont.
- May—Jesus and the Woman at the Well—Hofmann.
- June—The Widow's Mite—Hugo Mieth.
- July—Daniel's Answer to the King—Riviere.
- August—And They Followed Him—Wehle.
- September—Christ Blessing Little Children—Schmid.
- October—Golgotha—Mathauser.
- November—Christ's Entry Into Jerusalem—Plockhorst.
- December—The Star of Bethlehem—Blake.

THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE PICTURES

WORLD TIME TABLE

The Scripture Text Art Calendar also contains a standard time table of the world, by means of which it is easy to tell the exact time in various parts of the world at any given hour. Do you want to know what time it is in Paris, or, Calcutta, or some point in China when it is noon in Washington, New York, Boston or Montreal? The Standard time table will show you. You will soon learn to consult this Scripture Text Art Calendar so often that it becomes indispensable.

EVERY HOME SHOULD HAVE ONE

The Scripture Text Calendar has been prepared with such care and contains such a fund of Scriptural information that it is more than a convenience—it is a real necessity in every home. The influence it has on the young in teaching great truths and inculcating the right view of life should appeal to every parent to have one in the home. It teaches morality and good citizenship and the lessons thus learned will follow through life.

SPECIAL OFFER TO CHURCHES—AT REDUCED PRICES

As both a very praiseworthy and highly profitable means of raising church money, the Scripture Text Calendar cannot be excelled. Hundreds and thousands of churches and Sunday schools, Young Men's Christian Associations, and other religious societies, the land over, have made it contribute generously to their treasury, and at the same time have enriched spiritually both church and community. It blesses both those who buy and those who sell. Twelve members can easily sell 250; twenty-five members should quickly sell 500. Order now all you can use.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

"The calling of the New Testament twelve fully supports your thought of the ministry giving chief attention to the things peculiarly belonging to their ministerial offices. In order to build up and carry on the church, these men were called from the common ranks, who understood the real problems of the people, talking with them over their tables, living their lives, having a point of contact with them—such men by the teachings and spirit of Christ becoming useful and distinguished in the church. It is a matter of everything proceeding in its order.

The world has ever been pretty well filled up with theories, philosophies, and learning—our work as I see it is to give to the world the benefits of a divinely bestowed priesthood which is intimately and indissolubly associated with revealed truth and the powers of heaven. Human existence is such that most people are in great need of sympathy and cheer and uplifting forces, such as a knowledge of God and the possession of the Holy Spirit alone can give.

"In my opinion, the ones who will best succeed in advancing the educational interests of the church will not be those from whom one never hears a recital of a wonderful spiritual personal experience, nor an inspiring unfolding of the prophecies relating to the present age, nor a cheering expounding of the resurrection, nor a positive portrayal of the divinity of Christ, but those who move forward in accordance with your article.

"I have written more than I at first intended, but again I feel to make known a feeling of security inspired by your writing."

Sister Burton Urges Subjects for Prayer Meeting

A sister writes me thus, "Why do you not write something for the papers? Do you not know that there are hundreds waiting for a word of encouragement?" My answer is that I do not feel to have anything to offer that would be as good as what we get each week and the space in our periodicals is so limited it should be left to the best writers. I often feel like giving a gladsome comment on things I read but remember that the time of the "staff" as well as the space in the papers are both too precious for chit-chat, and so desist.

But I will mention one sermon that I read a week or more ago that was to my mind unusually good. "Preparedness" was the theme, and Cornelius Clifford was the speaker. It pointed out an even path through life that would avoid contention. Perhaps it was my frame of mind that caused me to drink in the sermon in the manner that I did, for I then said in my heart, "I hope the Lord has a thousand elders in the church of just such sentiment as he, and who will preach in like manner and would bring the Saints back to the position that we used to hold when the Spirit of God was poured out upon the worshipers in far greater degree than at the present time." I now feel encouraged that this time will come—am sure it will if we as Saints speak only of the beautiful, the good, and the true. See the good in others and the bad in ourselves only.

Last night our branch prayer meeting was real good. The Spirit of the Lord was with us, not in any unusual manifestations, but in diffusing the influence of love and harmony.

Our branch president gives out a subject either on the Wednesday night, or the Sunday following for the Saints to study out, and speak of. It is a good idea as it holds all in the same line of thought. Last night the subject was co-operation.

Another feature of encouragement in our prayer meeting is promptness. The Saints are learning the benefit of prompt action, that it kills a meeting to wait. I learned that lesson in the islands where one has to be prompt or not be heard at all. If there comes a waiting time in the meeting of sufficient length for one to breath twice the meeting is dismissed even if it be before anyone has spoken. It more often occurs that one or two will be standing waiting for turn to speak, and I verily believe that it was on account of their unvarying promptness that caused us to always have spiritual meetings. Try it, Saints, everywhere and see if it does not work wonders in that direction. Do not wait till you get to the meeting before deciding whether you will say anything or not. Go with the intention of saying something and with a prayer in your heart that the Lord will give you something edifying provided you have not already a thought in mind.

E. B. BURTON.

Wales

Sister Richard Baldwin writes from Llanelly, Wales, of interesting work in music and with Temple Builders.

I am acting in several offices in the branch, but have assistants to whom I am giving just as much of the responsibility as I can shift upon them in order that they may become efficient.

I am organist and chorister of the branch. Every Sunday night we have a song service, for which Sister Laura Mason learns one new hymn, and so each week the Saints add one more to their collection of hymns. As they do not read music, this seems to be as fast as we can safely go, but I feel they do extremely well. I have tried to make this feature interesting, and each new hymn we have learned has been prefixed with history, story, or anecdote regarding that hymn. For instance, the first one we learned was Number One in Zion's Praises, and I read to them the revelation from which this hymn was taken, and told them the reason it had to be given. They have been wonderfully interested in these stories.

Each fortnight we have a chapter of Temple Builders meeting at the church. They are studying story-telling, learning to make their own clothes, and learning how to play. We divide our two and one half hours' time into three periods, forty-five minutes for the story-telling lesson, forty-five minutes for sewing, and one hour for games. The game period may seem too long, but I have found that these girls did not know what play was, had never had any in their lives, and I have pitied them, and have desired to teach them how to play, and we have just glorious times together.

I think I have told you all that I have done during the month except some things that cannot be reported, such as a great many visits to our Saints, making custards and dainties for our sick, and inviting the Saints to our home to dinner. We try to give one day each week to playing host and hostess.

Walthill, Nebraska

Our conference was a good one at Walthill. Brother Edwards was there. His humility, kindness, and splendid advice was well received by all, in and out of the church. His sermons were so out of the ordinary that it was a real relief as well as a treat to all present.

So far I haven't baptized any this year, owing to so much sickness in my family and the fact that I got into my field so late. I hope to do so, however, before long. I baptized 105 the last stretch between conferences, and I believe I had their faces turned Zionward.

The Purpose of Various Organizations in Zion

On April 17 the general superintendent of the Department of Women called a meeting of representatives of various clubs and organizations in Independence for the purpose of a better understanding of the objectives of the different organizations. Each president or director present represented the various activities reported in part as follows:

The Laurel Club

Mrs. Joseph Sturges, president of the Laurel Club, states that it is largely a financial club which raises money in different ways, as by dues of $1 a year, social members paying $3 per year; socials, entertainments, etc. They are getting ready for a bazaar to be held the latter part of the year. They have just spent $225 for dishes for the diet kitchen at the Sanitarium, furnishing equipment for 60 trays. At present they are interested in the "Clean up" movement in Independence and appointed four committees, giving each a certain location or piece of church property, for the beautifying of which they are responsible. They are going to give a prize for the group making the greatest improvement. A survey has been made of the property as it now is, and after Clean Up Week another survey will be made to determine the winner of the prize. The club is interested in helping any good move it can.

Social Service Bureau

M. A. Etzenhouser, in charge of the Social Service Bureau in Independence reported its aim is to help every individual in Zion: (a) Physically. People should have better housing, better conditions in the home. Their work is in conjunction with the Public Health Department in charge of Miss Barnett. (b) Mentally. Many are not working or doing that for which they are best fitted. This bureau aims to help them find the field for which they are best adapted, or place them where their capacity permits. (c) Morally. They try to look after the interests of the young, to help those who morally fail, that they might make adjustments with their fellow men and God. In other words, they are dealing with maladjustment's.

Nursery

Mrs. Jessie Morant, house mother of the nursery, says they aid in caring for children whose parents, if they have any, are unable to care for them properly, either because they find it necessary to work and be away during the day, or where there may have been a loss of father or mother in the home. Children are given the environment of a real family and made to feel they are individuals in the community. They become more interested in their personal appearance, in school work, as their grades in school are much better, showing that such care is proving to be a great benefit to them.

Patroness Society

Mrs. E. L. Kelley, president of the Patroness Society, stated that was organized to help the Sanitarium in every way possible. They are still devoting their best interests to that end. They particularly help to supply bed linens and other supplies needed by the workers at the Sanitarium. They are trying to get one worker in every group. This arrangement is to be made through Mrs. Anna Murphy, superintendent of the Department of Women in Zion.

Hospital Day and Baby Week

Miss Gertrude Copeland, superintendent of the Sanitarium, said that at this time they are especially interested in Hospital Day and Baby Week. Baby Week is to be held May 7 to 11—Monday to Friday. Examination will be made of children under preschool age. Hours from 10 to 12 and 2 to 4. These examinations will be free. Follow-up work will be done by Miss Barnett of the Public Health Department.

Hospital Day for Sanitarium

Mrs. A. L. Yingling, member of the executive of the Department of Women, also representative of that department on the General Sanitarium Committee, said they are especially interested in activities for the benefit of the Sanitarium, trying to interest all in the church in the Sanitarium, trying to supply the needs of the Sanitarium. At present Independence is the only place that has not raised its quota of the ten-thousand-dollar Sanitarium Improvement Fund, hence a Tag Day is to be held May 12. We have one free bed but should have more in the maternity department of the Sanitarium. Last year twenty-seven took advantage of this Free Bed Fund so at present the fund is almost depleted. They would like to have the personal interest of all in the Sanitarium.

Dramatic Club

Mrs. S. A. Burgess, who represented the Dramatic Club as their literary critic, says their ideals are high. Their aim is to raise the standard of dramatics in the community and church, to help to find proper dramatic expression, furnish recreation and programs. They are putting their greatest efforts on the conference pageant which is to be originally written by church members, the theme to be based on church history. There are forty members in the Senior Club and forty in the Junior Club. The club will be glad to help anyone along this line.

Seminar

Mrs. S. A. Burgess also represented the Seminar, a group of graduates, people who have had four years of college work or its equivalent, who meet and report the results of their special study and who continue their research work and report. Its purpose is that each one may be informed on the research and special studying done by each other, its special aim being a better understanding of the problems of Zion and of cooperation to that end.

Music Club

Mrs. Vera Thomason, president of the Music Club of Independence, reported their aim to be to stimulate interest in and help others acquire proper knowledge of music. They will furnish free music lessons where needed. Scholarships are given.

Pen and Ink Club

Mrs. Eva Short, president of the Pen and Ink Club, stated their purpose to be the encouraging of writing by our own people. They are putting out papers written by our church people. In other words, they secure articles for our church papers so we will not have to copy from outside papers. They are putting out a great many stories and expect to write plays and work in conjunction with the Dramatic Club.

Young Mothers' Club

Mrs. F. H. Esgar, president of the Young Mothers' Club, said this club was organized mainly to provide recreation and relaxation for young mothers. They have done much sewing for the Children's Home, but at present are interested in providing for the Baby Room at the Sanitarium, making such things as baby clothing and little bed linens for the newcomers. They donated two baby beds.

Independence Institute

Mrs. W. W. Smith, registrar of the Institute of Arts and Sciences and director of the Kindergarten Department, says the institute was founded especially for those who wish to study but must work. It has a devoted corps of workers, some specialists in their line. Teachers show their love for souls and give that which they can. At present they have better courses to offer than when first organized. She told of the new building to be occupied by the institute.

Kindergarten

Mrs. Smith continued that the kindergarten work progresses rather slowly in Independence but they hope some day to have kindergartens in all our local churches. To accomplish this they purpose first to establish such a department in all our churches here and thus interest the community so they will demand kindergartens in the public schools.

Parent-Teacher Association

Mrs. R. D. Etzenhouser, president of the Parent-Teacher Association of the Columbian School, (represented by Mrs. Morant at the meeting) implores all to unite our sympathies with the Parent-Teacher Association in the Columbian School that the standard of the school might be raised in every way.

Public Health Nurse

Miss Barnett, public health nurse, is interested in the health of everybody in Independence, particularly the children. She wants to help the community to have more sanitary homes and is interested in bedside care in the home. Upon call, she will visit such homes where there is illness. At present this department is interested in infant welfare work. Miss Barnett also told of the clinic to be held Baby Week. Examinations will be followed up where future care is needed. Especially this summer they want to help the children who enter school or kindergarten this coming fall that they may be more physically fit.

Pastor in Zion

R. V. Hopkins, pastor in Zion, is very much interested in the purposes of the different organizations and urged that the people be better posted on their workings and thus avoid so much misunderstanding. He desires that the organizations work together, keep together, and pray together. Otherwise we can never accomplish the work the Lord wants done in Zion. The time to get together and keep together, he advised, is when we are starting.

Mrs. Glines presented a blackboard outline showing the plan of organization for work among the women in Zion. This plan is so complete that any organization may get in touch with every woman in Zion quickly and easily through the superintendent in Zion, Mrs. Anna Murphy.

All members of the general executive and all members of the Zion executive were invited to be present.

MRS. C. B. HARTSHORN, Secretary.

Through the South

Perhaps a few lines from Florida would interest some of your readers.

I left home the first week in January, coming to Pensacola assisting my brother and J. Charles May in getting a series of meetings started in the courthouse.

After helping bill the town and in other advertising schemes and assisting a little with the singing in the first few services I fired one shot with light artillery and left the "siege guns" to continue the fight.

After three or four weeks of meetings six were baptized and a number of others no doubt will be in the future. From all reports there was some "mighty" good material brought into the church.

From Pensacola I went to Funiak Springs where a few struggling Saints remain faithful to the cause, and I hope to baptize some there as I go back through there on my way home.

The next stop was at Perry, Florida, where Brother and Sister J. A. Vickery and son, Master Hale, reside and operate a sawmill. I can say unreservedly that they are of the faithful few, true as steel, though they have lived for years isolated from church privileges and the companionship of Saints. We did not hold any services at Perry as we thought the time was not opportune, but hope to open up the work there later.

I then went to Palmetto, Florida, fifty miles south of Tampa. There I found another noble and true family, that of Brother F. H. Hillstone. Sister Hillstone's mother, Sister Brollier, lives with them and no doubt deserves some of the credit for the faithfulness of the rest. The Brolliers are known extensively in the church. They are all right, too. We held meetings in the home of Brother Hillstone for about four weeks, baptized four and are hopeful of more in the future. Our fight there was long and stubborn as there were much prejudice and opposition. I am glad to say, however, there will always be a home in that community for our ministers even among the outsiders.

I visited with Brother Bobby Brollier a few days in Saint Petersburg. Bobby is surely a live wire. He is tenor singer with the Scotch Highland Band—and one of its greatest assets. In fact, I think he is the strongest drawing factor in the band.

Tampa was the next place at which I stopped. While I did not do much public preaching there I think it was the busiest time I ever spent. There are several fine Saints in Tampa. Four fine people were baptized by Brother Morley and others are investigating.

I made a short stop at Alturas where Brother Thomas Leytham from Iowa lives. We held two meetings in the schoolhouse which were well attended.

I came to Saint Cloud from Alturas for some meetings, after which I will go to Jacksonville.

The work in Florida is advancing if we can hold all the ground gained.

Hopefully,

N. L. BOOKER.

About Indian Books

In the issue of the HERALD of April 4, there was printed a letter from me to the Presidency giving the names of a list of books that contain much information of value that may be used in the restoration of the Lamanites.

I am now prompted to request the Saints everywhere, especially those living in cities, to go through the bookstores, both new and second hand, and printeries, and if you find any of these books or other books containing information of value, that you write Walter W. Smith, Box 255, Independence, Missouri, who is general church librarian, and he will tell you whether the book is needed or not and then you can put your hand in your pocket and buy that book and send it to the church library so that we can get it to read. We are out here on the reservations and cannot get at the libraries, neither have the money to buy them, so if you will put the material in our hands we will do our best with it, and perhaps we shall discover something of great importance and do a great work.

Your brother,

A. H. CHRISTENSEN.

Warrington, England

With your kind permission, I would like to relate the following experience in our work at Warrington, England.

On March 4, 1923, a brother here named William Munton Rowe was confirmed into the church of Jesus Christ. He was formerly a member of the local Salvation Army and a prominent bandsman; in fact, every member of his family, father, mother, sisters, and brothers are highly associated with the Army, some of them holding the rank of captain, lieutenant, etc.

He is the only one that has broken away from this organization, and despite the fact that many attempts were made to reclaim his services for the army, he finally decided to unite with the Saints, and consequently has become the black sheep of the family.

He passed through the painful experience of losing his father by death, and stood firm to his covenant amidst the many trials of being the only Latter Day Saint who was immediately concerned, with the great army funeral accorded his father who had been a member for about thirty-eight years.

Then came the great trial of his youngest child, Gordon, being stricken with pneumonia, and lying at the point of death. The brother being young in the faith and not knowing of the many blessings offered to the Saints through the word of God, I instructed him regarding the healing of the sick, and his faith was very strong about it. He at once asked that his child might be blessed and also anointed, so we at once attended to it with no apparent result, for the following day Doctor Grant, of Warrington, sent for the father, who was at work, and told him he had exhausted his talents and could do no more for the child; that they might expect its death any moment as its heart was completely done.

You dear fathers and mothers can imagine the feelings of this poor father and mother, and in their extremity I again asked them if they had faith in God and would once again appeal to him through the ordinance for the sick. They said yes, so I at once went for another elder who, being young in the eldership, looked at me with dismay and questioned the wisdom of the procedure, seeing that the child was beyond human aid. I said, brother, we can but do our part and leave the result in the hands of God. We went and anointed the child, and prayed for God to be merciful to this poor mother and father, and inasmuch as our brother had promised to serve him, would he manifest his fatherly love and save his child, so that the relatives would not say it was the judgment of God upon him for deserting the army, for this was indeed the spirit that was manifested towards this brother. We left them with the impression of the Spirit upon us that God would bless the administration.

The next day the doctor was astounded and began to take a remarkable interest in the case. The medical chart which is used in these cases when a local nurse is sent to attend to them, showed that for three days the child's temperature rose and fell with regularity between 97 and 103 or thereabouts, but on the morning following the anointing it was at something like normal, 98, and so continued until the child was out of danger, although the pulse and respiration remained abnormal. The doctor's testimony was to the effect that, I perceive that you people are religious and have done your part, and I have done my part. There is, then, left only that God shall do his part. Continue on and relax no effort in nursing, and although I am satisfied that the child should die, yet I have a feeling that it will live.

The child lives, and is now playing about as babies do at fifteen months old and eating its normal food. God be praised for this great testimony to his power; and I feel, as the presiding elder of this branch, that this dear brother will keep on growing in the faith of the Lord and become a great power in the hands of God for the building up of the church here. He is known to Apostle Gillen, whom I introduced to the man before he became a brother in the church. He has also associated with the Saints at Chatham in Canada, and Apostle Gillen chatted with him about the Chatham Saints. The brother has great talent in musical work, and is a valuable asset to me along these lines.

We belong to one of the big branches of the Manchester District, England, where the church in this far-away mission has the largest representation, and I have worked for Christ for twenty years in this part, and with the help of a few devoted men and women of God we have succeeded beyond our expectations in raising up for Christ a valuable branch of the church along with all its departments in active condition, and we are striving to release the responsibility of mission effort here by saving the young to the church so that others in need of mission help may be fed. We have three acres of ground for the youth of the branch to have recreation amidst conditions conducive to spiritual growth, and we are also building up a band of musicians for outdoor mission work. We own our church building and it is free from debt, so that if ever a branch had ideal conditions, then this branch in far-away England has succeeded in obtaining them.

I am blessed with the best men as associate ministers any president could desire, so that I am free to push forward in leadership and give service to the district as one of the counselors to the district president. To say my joy is unbounded is to praise God in a very small way indeed, but to cooperate with him and assist to work and build with him is a privilege that many of us miss by aiming at objects beyond our reach. We have succeeded here because we tackled problems that lay at our door every day, and God has indeed blessed the work.

We have just come away from conference and had the pleasure of meeting Apostle D. T. Williams. I say he is fine, and makes a mark on the hearts of young people that they won't rub out very soon. God will surely bless his work and prosper his mission.

Fraternally yours,

April 5, 1923.

WILLIAM HENRY CHANDLER.

Pawnee City, Nebraska

Am pleased to say while renewing my subscription that it seems to me the HERALD is getting better. Especially do we appreciate the counsel of our President as he more often expresses himself through our paper. It seems that we get nearer to him and he to us. I have just read his sermon on the essentiality of loyalty and wish we might all read it every week until we are grounded in what loyalty to our God and his kingdom or Zion means. We must be loyal to all the principles, to Christ, and the leaders. He has appointed them; one and all should be ready to give all we have to the building of Zion. As it is, one waits for another, seeming to want some one else to start it. Then if it seems all right and we have had our fill of worldly affairs we may join in. Unless we are willing to be led, our leader cannot lead.

My prayer is that we may humble ourselves so the Spirit may direct us in all things.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. J. L. MYERS.

Publicity Work in Salt Lake City

(Report of Local Publicity Agent.)

We have three local papers in Salt Lake City including the Deseret News, which is the official Mormon publication, and each of them publishes announcements of our services weekly, free of charge.

We have a brother who prints three hundred copies of our church announcements each week, and our workers take a definite territory and distribute weekly. By this means we hope to bring people to our services. We have a sign on our lawn in front of the chapel whereon one brother prints weekly the time of service and the preacher's name and subject. I asked a stranger one day how it was that he came in, and he frankly said he was going to the Baptist Church, but saw our sign and came in. All this is a new venture with us. We hope God will bless us with results for his glory.

Our resident minister, Elder V. B. Etzenhouser, is an energetic elder and desires and helps to push the work along. Brother Roscoe Davey is an energetic and painstaking missionary and labors hard to bring souls to Christ. We study church history Friday nights and have a Sunday school well attended. Our superintendent does his best for the work, and in Sister Hart we have an energetic chorister.

Yours truly, GEORGE CUMMINS.

Beautiful Pageant at Macon, Missouri

Easter Sunday at the Latter Day Saints' church was a glorious day.

One of the most spiritual meetings was that of the young people's prayer meeting at eight o'clock in the morning. The Lord tells us when we assemble in his name he will be there and that to bless.

Sunday school at 9.45 with a good attendance and sacramental service at eleven o'clock, with one of the largest congregations since the organization of this denomination in Macon.

The evening program was something unusual and presented to a packed audience. There was considerable sentiment in the opening song by the congregation: "Tell me the story of Jesus." A short talk was made by Brother W. B. Richards, inspiring and impressive. The little folks did exceedingly well.

A pageant, entitled "Easter dawn," presented by the Temple Builders was one of the most beautiful productions ever presented in Macon. It was played around a picture in the garden of Gethsemane, composed of ferns, palms, potted plants, roses, sweet peas, and rocks, placed here and there to give the most effective setting to a natural scene. There was Joseph's tomb, banked with blooming flowers, plants, and cedar branches.

Each character was well characterized. There were angels appearing from different parts of the church and disappearing in a similar manner.

Sister Eva Welch, as Joanna, rendered the solo, "Oh, to be more like Jesus." There is so much sentiment in this song and if every Latter Day Saint would strive to be more like Jesus what rich blessings would be theirs to enjoy and many would be added to the church daily.

Mr. Fred Miller, taking part of Peter, sang, "There is no love to me like the love of Jesus." If we could only realize love paid the ransom for us and we had the love in our hearts for our fellow men that Jesus had for us we would gladly lay down our lives for the gospel.

of ages" before the cross, as the quartet sang behind the scenes, which was most beautifully rendered and left a deep impression upon the audience.

"Easter dawn" is certainly a spiritual pageant. Sister Elsie M. Barraclough is to be congratulated upon writing such a wonderful play, and the Spirit certainly must have rested upon her when writing as it did upon each character when taking part. As the crowd was gathering and being seated the girls could be seen kneeling here and there behind the scenes in humble attitude to their heavenly Father for his divine guidance. God hears and answers our prayers when we humble ourselves unto him in faith, believing; for this pageant was a wonderful success and brought people to the church that could not have been reached through any other source.

The Spirit of God like a fire is burning; the latter-day glory begins to come forth. God's promises are sure and the prayers of the few faithful Saints in Macon and elsewhere are being answered.

Pray for the onward progress of the work and that we may preach this gospel in our everyday lives, that the world may know of a surety that it is the true work of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Elder John Harp Passes

For seventeen years an elder, John Harp has labored as a missionary of the church in the Southern States of Louisiana, Alabama, Florida, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Texas. Especially has his service been devoted to the work of the church in Texas. He liked the South, and his genial disposition won for him many friends. His wife writes that he possessed the gift of healing and many were healed under his hands, also that he never lost an opportunity to tell the gospel story and was always willing and ready to defend the cause when an attack was made upon it.

On April 1 of this year, after a lingering illness of seven weeks, he passed peacefully away at Lamoni in his seventy-fifth year of life. To his first marriage of 1869 there were born nine children, seven of whom survive. He moved with his family from Kentucky to Lamoni, Iowa, in 1880, where he made his home for over thirty years. A few years after the death of his first wife he was married a second time and went to live in Pearsall, Texas, but returned to Lamoni in August, 1921. He was spoken to by prophecy through Brother Ammon White who told him that his missionary work was finished and that his work was accepted by the Lord and that the angels were rejoicing that he would soon be called home. He was nursed through his last illness by his children, his son-in-law, Moroni Shippey, and his wife. His last admonition to them was, "Be faithful children." Throughout his illness he was never heard to complain, but bore his suffering with patience to the end. A favorite hymn of his was "The saints shall wear robes as the lilies," which was sung at the funeral service.

Since our last letter to you from Washington, District of Columbia, there have been several new members added to our Sunday school, which makes us feel very much encouraged.

Among the new ones are Brother and Sister Madison from Independence. Mr. Sloan is often a visitor and we are very happy to have him. We are all becoming very much interested in the Indians and their fight for justice.

The work that Brother and Sister Madison have been able to do for them since coming will have far-reaching effects. Friendships have been made which will mean much to the church when it is ready to send missionaries among them.

There have been a great many Indians in Washington recently and the church could do no more effective missionary work anywhere than by having some one here to meet them and to assist them in the fight they are making. The Indians will win their fight in time because fair-minded people everywhere are becoming aroused to the injustices they are being forced to suffer. But when they win their fight they will not be indebted to us as a church for any assistance.

We of the church who believe in the Book of Mormon see a great future before this people in the building of Zion. And if we are permitted to help them then, we must prove ourselves worthy by our help to this people in their time of need. This thought is conveyed to us by the book of Nephi, chapters 9 and 10.

Independence

The fourth session of the conference in Zion adjourned Monday evening, the 22d, after over two hours of discussion, without coming to a vote on the three propositions before it. The attendance continues large, the main auditorium full and the gallery well lined with interested people.

The weather was threatening but it seemed to make no difference with the earnest Saints who feel that there is much at issue in the resolutions before them. The discussion seems about equally divided and is conducted in good order and feeling. There were five speakers at the last meeting and three at the previous session. No attempt was made to force the vote. Next session will be on evening of April 30.

The three resolutions are as follows, presented in the order given as a main question, a substitute, and an amendment to the substitute.

The original or main question, submitted over the signature of President Frederick M. Smith at the January conference and deferred for action till the April conference, is:

"To the Conference in Zion; Greeting:

"In the judgment of the Presidency the time has come for a more definite coordination of the departments in Zion and a more uniform method of procedure in selecting officers. Most of the locals in Zion have adopted what is known as Form Four, with certain necessary modifications. The way would seem clear then for action by the conference, and we suggest the adoption of the following rules of procedure:

"(1) The heads of the general departments of the church and the pastor in Zion in consultation with the First Presidency shall nominate the heads of departments in Zion, subject to ratification by the conference in Zion.

"(2) The four department heads in Zion shall then in consultation with the pastor in Zion select the heads of the departments in the various congregations, the pastor in each congregation to be duly consulted. These selections shall be presented to the conference for approval.

"(3) In each local congregation the four local heads of departments together with the pastor shall appoint all subordinate officers and teachers."

The substitute offered to take the place of the above is as follows:

"Departmental Elections and Business

"Resolved, That the Saints in Zion in conference assembly shall, at the annual meeting in January, elect the heads of departments of Zion. The right of nomination lies primarily with the body because of membership, and not with any individual or part of the body by virtue of office, but we hereby extend to the heads of the general departments of the church and the pastor in Zion, in consultation with the First Presidency, the privilege of also submitting, by their joint action, nominations for these offices.

"Local departments in Zion shall continue to hold meetings to elect local departmental officers, and to act upon questions of local departmental concern. Rules and regulations for the conduct of such meetings shall be determined by the local departments, as has been their privilege heretofore."

An amendment offered to the substitute, moved and supported by the Presidency, is as follows:

"Resolved to amend the substitute by striking out all after the word 'resolved,' and inserting the following:

"The heads of the general departments of the church and the pastor in Zion in consultation with the First Presidency shall nominate the heads of departments in Zion, subject to ratification by the conference in Zion. The department heads in Zion shall then after consultation with the pastor in Zion and the First Presidency, and after due consultation with the pastor of each congregation involved, nominate the heads of departments in the various congregations, subject to ratification by the conference."

The following from Walnut Park were indorsed for ordination: Gland A. Smith, elder; Harold Carpenter, Bernard Hurshman, and Guy Reynolds, deacons.

Elder A. E. McKim, manager of the Publicity Department, entered the Sanitarium Monday to prepare for an operation. He plans to look after necessary work from there.

Brother G. N. Briggs, President of Graceland College, was in Independence the first of the week looking after the college interests with the Presiding Bishop and others.

Elder John F. Garver was in Independence from Wednesday to Friday in connection with his work as editor of the Ensign as well as one of the Quorum of Twelve.

Bishop J. A. Koehler, of Far West Stake, came to Independence on church business Wednesday of last week.

On Tuesday afternoon there was held an important meeting in the council rooms of the general church headquarters. This meeting was called by Mrs. Dora L. Glines, head of the Department of Women of the church, and consisted of representatives of the various clubs and associations in Independence. A very enthusiastic and informative meeting was held of which there is a report elsewhere in this issue.

At the meeting of the young people in the Department of Recreation and Expression at the Stone Church Friday evening, L. E. Hills was the principal speaker. They are studying the Book of Mormon and asked him to explain his ideas of Book of Mormon archaeology. Later he will give further lectures.

Next Sunday at all the churches in Zion there will be sermons concerning the acquisition and use of the Swope property for a center for young people's activities as well as for school purposes. On the following Tuesday evening at the Stone Church there will be a meeting to discuss ways and means concerning the same proposition.

The Sunday services at the various churches in Zion included sermons by the following: Stone Church, A. B. Phillips and H. O. Smith; Second Independence, James F. Keir and M. H. Siegfried; Walnut Park, Joseph Luff and Edward Rannie; Liberty Street, J. A. Becker and F. A. Smith; Enoch Hill, J. V. Roberts and J. F. Curtis; radio sermon by R. V. Hopkins.

If weather permits, the party planning to visit Far West next Sunday morning, will leave the Stone Church by auto at 7 a. m., hold services under leadership of Walter W. Smith at Far West, have a basket dinner, visit the historic spots, and return amply early in the evening. If weather and roads are not good, the trip will be postponed two weeks. A goodly number are planning to attend.

There is much interest in the young people's convention and the home-coming at Lamoni. A number are planning definitely to attend, including six from one Sunday school class at Liberty Street. These girls will attend with their teacher as chaperon, Miss Estella Wight.

The funeral of Sister W. H. Mannerling, who has been ill at the Sanitarium for over a year and who died recently, was held at the Stone Church Sunday.

San Francisco, California

All is going nicely with this branch. We are making a little headway of late. Seven persons have recently been baptized here and more are interested. Strangers and visitors are always at our meetings and many hear the gospel for the first time. Our attendance is good and the services are spiritual. Last Sunday, among others, we had three sailor boys in our congregation. One was A. Dutton from Independence, another J. B. Hess from Winthrop, Arkansas.

We have just passed through a grand treat of two weeks' lectures by Apostle T. W. Williams. We hired a hall in Native Sons Building in a down town busy district, and with extensive advertising drew a good crowd averaging about 250 at each lecture. Many strangers attended every night. We are all much pleased with the results and hope to feel the benefit at our church services.

We had a priesthood meeting Monday evening, at which Brother Williams presided. It was a very enjoyable meeting and we received much needed instruction. Elder Savage, our missionary supervisor, was with us. He is traveling among the branches in the district.

The committee reported that at our lectures the collections taken up and contributions paid all the expenses and left us $125 besides. This we have set apart to be used in a similar manner later on when Brother Williams promises to return and renew the effort. We are all feeling jubilant over the affair. May the truth prevail. GEORGE S. LINCOLN.

J. W. A. Bailey in Marshall, Missouri

Elder J. W. A. Bailey has been holding a series of meetings here for four weeks, closing April 15.

He is truly a forceful speaker, putting his whole soul into his sermon, showing that he is sincere, also presenting his subjects in a clear, logical manner, always holding the ideals of Christ before his audience.

His talks along national lines are a wonderful proof of the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, proving that it is the true American history.

There have been far more people attending these meetings than any other missionary services held in our church at Marshall. Those of good social standing, also business men, as well as those of the common walks of life. We consider the twelve that he baptized a good addition to our church.

LEVI PHELPS.

Sarnia, Ontario, Branch

As church historian for the Sarnia Branch, I take this opportunity to say a word in connection with the progress of the work of the "Saints" in this community.

We have had two very successful series of meetings here during the last six months, in which a great deal of interest was shown. Elder J. R. Grice, of Saint Clair, Michigan, was with us for a period covering five weeks. His sermons were

MISCELLANEOUS

Observance of May 6 in Interests of Young People

To Stake, District, and Branch Presidents; Greeting: It has been decided to set aside Sunday, May 6, as a special day to be observed in the interest of the young people of the church. In so far as this does not interfere with plans which you have previously made, we respectfully urge that as far as within your jurisdiction the services be arranged with this theme in mind.

Should this Sunday be your regular sacrament Sunday, we suggest that a special effort be made to get the young people to participate in the sacrament service. There could be perhaps as well a special sermon for the young people on that day, or a program prepared by the young people themselves.

In order that we may have throughout the church a unity of purpose, we suggest further that the theme for prayer, testimony, and discussion on that day be somewhat along the following lines: "What can the church do for its young people? What can the young people do for the church? Has the effort of our branch been a success in this respect? What shall be our plan for the coming year to meet these needs?"

Finally, in view of the coming Young People's Convention at which representatives will be present from throughout the church, we suggest that special prayer be offered for the success of the convention and that a special effort be made to interest the young people of your branch to attend. Many districts and branches are helping with the expenses of young people to this convention. Why not you?

Respectfully submitted,

F. M. MCDOWELL,

For the First Presidency.

Bishop Fry addressed a priesthood meeting at 4 o'clock on the subject, "Church polity." Sermons were had from John A. Judd and Daniel Williams. On Monday evening a social was held in Enfield. The attendance was not up to the mark expected, considering the number present the night before. However, a very interesting program was greatly enjoyed.

Blue Pencil Notes

The Wielder of the Blue Pencil had a dream in the daytime. He fancied that the Angel of Clear Vision moved among the Saints with the magic wand that dissipates motes and beams. The Angel of Clear Vision soliloquized, "I perceive that blindness in part hath happened unto Israel." Then he touched the eyes of all insincere men and dissimulators and scales fell from their eyes. With great surprise and consternation these men saw themselves for the first time in character.

So they all exclaimed: How foolish we have been! What place has hypocrisy in religion? All that religion has to offer comes from God; and God gives nothing to hypocrites. And most of them repented forthwith and amended their ways; while those who did not repent left the church and went into politics, where they were scarcely noticed.

Next, the Angel of Clear Vision touched the eyes of all sincere men with the magic wand that dissipates motes and beams, and scales fell from their eyes. With great surprise they for the first time saw their fellows in true character. And these said two things that seemed to me as logical as they were singular and refreshing. First each one said: How changed the brethren look! How greatly they are improved! I see that they are very fine and lovable, even though they have differed from me in opinion. True, they still have defects of temper and judgment, and some traits that sadly need amending; but now I see that the same is true of me also. And seeing their very evident desire to do right, why should I speak evil of them or quarrel with them? If they can bear with my defects until I can remedy them, shall not I also cheerfully bear with them until they grow in grace and knowledge of the truth unto the likeness of Christ?

And secondly, after the Angel of Clear Vision had touched the eyes of all sincere men, with the magic wand that dissipates motes and beams, each one said: It is singular, but now I see certain things as in the white light of God. Why, for example, should we quarrel or bicker one with another? What place has quarreling and bickering in religion, since love is the vital principle of religion? Where there is no love, there is no religion; and where there is love there is no quarreling. There may be a defense of principle and a difference in judgment, but it will be with an even temper and in such spirit as should always clothe men who are gentlemen after the Order of the Son of the Carpenter.

So then a hush came over the assembly under the big tabernacle and the gavel fell and the presiding officer said, The General Conference is now in session. And a strong breeze passed through the tabernacle over the people, and it was as though a great fresh wind from off the ocean of God's love had blown the mists away. So from that hour the business went on in tranquillity. Men defended their belief with great firmness, but not with pugnacity or that mulish tenacity sometimes mistaken for manliness; and no man bemeaned or contemned or insulted any other man; for all saw that religion must begin at headquarters, and that only a congregation in which Christ dwells in fact can send out missionaries to preach Christ to distant peoples.

So the Angel of Clear Vision with the magic wand that dissipates motes and beams returned to the Great White Throne to report progress and ask for more time. Brethren, do you believe in dreams?

The Inch Worm

(Written for the Pen and Ink Club.)

The man who from Earth's lowly sod
Presumes that he can measure God,
With naught but Reason's measuring rod,

Is like a worm upon some knoll,
Whose arching back has set its goal
To measure Earth from pole to pole—

Not recking of the season's change,
The deep morass, the desert strange,
The heaven-abutting mountain range,

Or the chill-hearted glacial heap,
Or moon-led tides' uncharted sweep,
Or ancient terror of the deep.

Poor worm! The next fool thing, I wot,
Will be for him, from his low spot,
To teach all worms that Earth is not.

Alone

By R. E. Hubricht

Alone we must travel life's journey
Though we march on abreast with the throng.
No other can feel our heart's anguish,
Nor its joys, as we journey along.
In each soul an ego is planted,
Each sees a vision its own.
Alone we must stand in life's conflict;
We begin it and end it alone.

Though millions are treading life's pathways
As trodden by millions before,
And after us millions may follow,
And after them yet millions more,
Alone each heart beats in its bosom,
Each soul lives a life all its own,
For fullness of joy and of sorrow
Can be known to that one soul alone.

Though millions are living and dying
While the long moments endlessly flow,
Unto each there is given a portion
Which no other mortal can know.
Alone each soul finds in Gethsemane
Tears, sweat, and blood all its own.
Like the sweat drops of blood from the Master
When he prayed in the garden—alone.

National Hospital Day

Remember the Sanitarium, which is our own institution.

May 12 has been set aside as National Hospital Day, and in a thousand cities throughout the land the people will be asked to consider the services that the hospitals render, and hundreds of thousands of dollars will be contributed that the great ministry of healing may be carried on.

No doubt in your city there will be a "hospital tag day," and we would not for a moment suggest that you should refrain from helping this good work in your own community. However, we would call your attention to our own church hospital or Sanitarium, and suggest that you remember it too at this time. Experience has shown that we must depend on each other in carrying out the program of the church, for little help is proffered from outside. The Lord has especially enjoined us to minister in this field, and the Saints have responded nobly to the task.

Many need the care that only the Sanitarium affords, and oftentimes these are without means. Our charity must be broad, and the rich and poor receive alike. This is possible only to the extent of the means supplied, and this is your opportunity. If you are not solicited at home, or if you are, please remember the Independence Sanitarium; and your remittances by mail, addressed Independence, Missouri, will be most happily received and carefully used.

Much has been said, much is being said, about education, and strange as it may appear, there seem to be some of the church members and even officers who fail to see the advantages likely to come to our ministers from a systematic course of study. It is therefore gratifying to us when those now at work write us of the strength and benefit which have come as a result of the course in religious education at Graceland College. Here we present an extract from a letter written by a young man to one of the instructors in the religious education course:

"I am trying to work out a social interpretation of the first principles. I have worked out an outline for the first three, faith, repentance, and baptism, but am bothered with the fourth, laying on of hands. I have outlined the first three from the point that back of them is a dynamic principle of life, or of progressive life. I had reached the point in my religious experience that I could not be satisfied with just an authoritative acceptance of the principles. I felt I must get back of the Bible and find if possible, 'what good are they?' I have come to the conclusion that God has instituted the ordinances and sacraments for our good. They are just the thing for our development. He does not demand obedience for obedience' sake but our spiritual progress is the objective. I thought for a time that you fellows at Graceland had ruined me because of some of the ideas you gave me, but I find that it has meant my development. If I hadn't come up against some of those ideas, I should have become fossilized."

We are pleased to see this expression.

Ministers Should Advise What to Read

It is time that a drive was being made for better reading by all of us, but the frequent plea is made, lack of means. That represents one advantage of a budget. It would show us how much money is spent by most of us on that which does not profit.

There are few who do not expend enough on moving pictures, on lighter forms of entertainment, to easily subscribe for the SAINTS' HERALD or to purchase a good copy of one of the books of the church. But our primary purpose is not simply to sell these books; the great purpose is to encourage the reading of that which will bring happiness to-day and will prove a lasting joy, and which will also fit us for better service both here and hereafter.

The preacher should be primarily a man of books. Books and study, biographies and history, are in large part the tools of his work. It is probably for this reason that more sons of ministers are found in the list in Who's Who in America? than is the case with the sons and daughters of any other profession. The ordinary minister does not have much money, but he does have books. That is quite a logical reason why the minister should be our adviser, and help us in the choosing of our books.

Of course he will begin with the Book of books, the Bible, but if given the opportunity he will by no means stop there. He attempts to spread through his sermon a portion of what he has gleaned, but when he presents the printed word he multiplies his power for good.

An Economic Aspect of Prohibition

Years ago the railroad officials recognized that to safeguard the lives of their passengers they must protect their employees against the liquor traffic, hence engineers and others were forbidden on penalty of dismissal to partake of intoxicating liquors. On the part of these men there was some opposition on the grounds of personal liberty but the rule was enforced and had practically the unanimous support of the public as well as of most of the men concerned because it was recognized that safety for themselves and safety for the public was involved. Thousands of lives had been lost in railroad accidents because of drink.

Later on, some employers of labor saw that accidents to workmen could be lessened by forbidding their employees to drink. Personal liberty, so called, would not permit these men to run their machines while under the influence of alcohol, thus endangering their own lives and the lives of their fellow men. In some plants accidents have been decreased 75 per cent under prohibition, yet despite this fact men of supposed reputable position and ethics prefer their gratification to the welfare of humanity and unite with the worst interests in the country to fight prohibition. This accounts for the bitterness of the attack on behalf of the law. It may well be suggested, as is in a booklet shown by the Manufacturers' Record, that civilization can only be founded by the yielding somewhat of personal liberty for the benefit of society or the community. The man who wants full personal liberty must go to the desert or to some remote point where no other human being is found, for contact with others demands a mutual concession.

It is perhaps not surprising that President Stone of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers should go so far as to suggest that the death-dealing qualities of the liquor now being consumed by the smart set may after all prove an advantage. The theory evidently is that they are parasites and breakers of the law. However hard may be the consequences to themselves, if they persist their departure may become a blessing to the country at large.

An Appeal to the Scandinavian Saints

Sandhedens Banner is published by the church in the Norwegian language for the benefit of our Scandinavian Saints and especially the Scandinavian Mission. Its publication is a source of considerable expense to the publishing house as the subscription list is so small that it costs considerably more to publish than is received.

Elder Peter Muceus is the editor of this paper and suggests that there are many Scandinavian Saints in America who are not taking the Banner and most of them are well to do and could well afford to do so and that also they would be pleased to make some contribution for the expense of the paper in order that it might be sent to the Saints in Norway and used for missionary work there.

Elder Muceus has published this statement in the Banner several times but it has not reached all of the Scandinavian Saints, hence we are making this appeal on behalf of the Banner and the work in Norway to our Scandinavian Saints in America, that they will support the paper first with their subscription, and those who are able to do so will contribute through donation so as to permit a wider distribution and make it possible to continue its publication.

Those who are already subscribing can also help by paying up past due subscriptions and also those who are able to do so contribute to its support.

Britain's Third Workless Winter

Great Britain is just finishing a third workless winter with more than one million men out of employment. This includes not only the laboring men but also clerks and other brain workers. Little by little the household goods have to be sold to provide the bare necessities of life. There are men who have always paid their way and cannot think of indebtedness.

Some bitterness is expressed with regard to conditions in the rural district and in Germany because of the activity of industry there as compared with the unemployment in England. This represents nearly 14 per cent of workers totally unemployed and to it must be added about 8 per cent to express in terms of total unemployment, those who are partially employed. This would mean that the whole labor force of the country is suffering a loss of more than 20 per cent.

This unemployment is caused in part at least by the fact that nearly three fourths of the gain in male population in 1911-1921 had entered into the metal trades and that nearly all of this increase is represented by unemployment. This accounts for nearly half of the men unemployed. But to it must be added the women, boys, and girls whose service is need for family support.

More on the Need of Pastoral Work

The matter of the local work of the church is rightly receiving a great deal of thought at present. Whereas the church has but a few hundred missionaries it possesses several thousand local members of the priesthood. What a tremendous work indeed would be accomplished if every man felt his personal responsibility and magnified his office, not only assisting as he can in his home branch and at the regular services, but visiting those who are not so conveniently reached, the scattered Saints, and even going out to do some missionary work for the church, warning his neighbor near at hand as well as a few miles away.

We are just in receipt of a letter from one of our scattered Saints who is trying devotedly to live the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ and bring up the family in righteousness and through sacrifice to support the institutions of the church.

Regarding what I would like to see done in our branch and in this district, and of course I am apt to think of other outlying districts as this one, is first, the priesthood needs laboring with and instructing, not by a missionary but a pastor, or I might say patriarch, not in a spirit of faultfinding but love and encouragement. They are good men, but they are not doing their duty as I see it.

I would hate to see more baptized there until the Saints themselves are awakened. There are plenty there to have Sunday school and other meetings. I believe Brother Fred M. Smith hears from his missionaries every week. Now if some one, perhaps Brother Fred A. Smith, required a report from the membership of meetings attended, sacraments, prayer meetings, etc., not of numbers, but names, about once a month, not less than every three months, then they would know just the condition of every member; and those inactive, either members or officers, could be visited by a traveling pastor. The branch presidents could report to the district and the district to the one in charge of that work. That might look like a big job but no bigger than the one Brother Fred M. Smith has on hand. This traveling pastor should be supported by the church, not only living expenses but traveling expenses, and he should visit all scattered Saints, administer the sacrament to them if advisable, feed and encourage them, and if the situation was favorable, arrange for a real missionary effort.

When Brother Ammon White visited our branch some years ago, he put life into the majority of the Saints that beat strong for about two years. Now had he or some one of like ability been able to visit them even every six months there is no telling the heights they might have attained. Then we could think of missionary work. Then they would be willing to sacrifice that finances could be provided. It is hard to touch the purse when the heart is not sufficiently in the work.

I believe our district president is self-sustaining. He was for a while. If we must economize let us not economize and starve those that we already have.

I want to be a helper and when I see a careless or inactive Saint I always feel I must try that much harder that the work might not suffer.

This letter again emphasizes the need of active work on the part of our local men in visiting and instructing of the Saints. It is, of course, the design of the church to keep in as accurate touch as this writer suggests with the spiritual condition of the membership, but experience has shown that it is difficult to secure a written reply to an ordinary letter. It is not easy to secure reports from members of the priesthood, so it would probably be found difficult to secure such reports as are here suggested, though efforts have been made in that direction.

The method therefore appointed has been through the visitation of the officers whose duty it is to visit each family, pray with them, learn their difficulties and spiritual condition, and so help each family and each individual, and eventually the whole church to draw nearer to our Elder Brother, Jesus Christ.

The church is anxious to extend what help it can through its missionary force and through its pastoral force. It is probably true that there is need for such sermons as this writer suggests, especially on the part of evangelical ministers, those who can visit from home to home. It is also true the missionary can use each home as the headquarters for a new missionary effort.

It may be noted in the HERALD of March 7 that one of our high priests, George E. Harrington, is trying to do this very thing, visiting from home to home and looking up those who are scattered or located away from the branch with which they are affiliated. The church and its general officers are more than anxious to help those in need. Its means, however, are limited considering the wonderful opportunities which confront us. The general officers can only move forward as means are placed in their hands.

But it is well that scattered members do all in their power not to backslide. They should keep in touch with the church through a study of the books of the church, the work of the department of religious education, and the church periodicals both weekly and monthly.

The members should themselves take part in the warning of their neighbors. If they are thus interested and at work, they will have but little time to forget our splendid privileges. Then it is the part both of the district officers and of the local officers of the branch to make an effort to visit them from time to time.

We are well aware of the pleasure of meeting Sunday after Sunday with the Saints, but might it not be well for some of those who have accepted the ministry of Christ to use any convenient means of locomotion in striving to visit some of the scattered ones, and to hold services even though it be with one or two families on the Lord's Day? Such an effort may well become the means not only of strengthening the children of God, but also as a missionary effort to warn those of the neighborhood.

Right Marriage Is Best Cure for Divorce

To-day marriage is too lightly treated.

Perennially the question of divorce is raised and this question is naturally brought into the foreground in view of the extensive discussion to-day in many different periodicals of the increase of divorce in the United States, the comparison by States and causes, and the fact that the United States has a larger percentage of divorces than any other white nation in the world and probably only Japan challenges the United States in the pro rata number.

One item printed recently, figuring seven children to every ten divorces, showed that in the last few decades 5,000,000 had been affected by the nearly 2,000,000 divorces.

It may be questioned if this percentage of seven children to ten divorces is not too low, but after all it brings home to us the fundamental cause of divorce, and that is the extreme carelessness with which marriage is many times entered into. The difficulty is not with regard to divorce; the difficulty is in the social attitude toward marriage. This is shown by the fact that so very large a percentage, if not a decided majority, of divorce cases concern those young in years and those who have been married but a short time.

When practicing at the bar we were repeatedly struck with this fact. Entering the court room on default day we were many times amazed, until we became accustomed to it, to see the large number of quite young girls who were presented. But it seemed that in almost every case it was the young girls who were securing the divorces, while the coarse-featured older women were there as a rule as witnesses and not as principals.

To reduce the divorce rate there can be no better remedy than greater care in the carrying out of the laws on marriage. It would seem at times that these laws have been made extremely easy in the hope that by placing them low enough it would make illegitimacy almost impossible. But if that were the end, it has not been achieved, nor is the question of illegitimacy solved by the mere matter of forcing the parties to go through a ceremony which in their case has but little meaning and practically no sanctity.

Fatherhood and motherhood is the most wonderful privilege in the world, creators with God of the habitation for a human soul. Then the care of that soul and body in the family. It is indeed one of the great privileges of life, the association that is possible in right marriage relationship of parent and children—thus trusteeship for God.

If a man indeed chooses as a companion one whom he loves as Christ loved the church, more than his own life, more than his own comfort, so that he feels it a pleasure to sacrifice and deny himself for the loved one, and measures the success of his life in the happiness he can bring, he is certainly laying the basis for a successful family on which alone can be built a successful church and state. And if the girl or woman selects as her companion one whom she can truly reverence, respect, and honor, one who is indeed only another self, one with whom she will consider it a pleasure to labor—not simply for her personality, but for the personality and fullness of living of the family—she is indeed ready then to sacrifice if need be, to find in life a joy not possible when this which should be sacred is treated as frivolous. Such worthy relationship, entered into in the right spirit, and the right purposes laying the basis for the family, such marriage stands in but little danger of the perils of the divorce court.

It is for that reason that the church should give its first and principal stress to the right instruction of its young people in the ideals of life and also in the practical affairs of life, so that each is prepared to do his and her duty to each other and to the family as it grows.

Therein is the great duty of the church, to teach righteousness. The evils of divorce are only a secondary consideration. The church's attitude on the sanctity of marriage is far more important than any position that she can possibly take on divorce. For Zion and the brotherhood of man can never be better expressed than in a group of happy homes.

After years of dreary days and silent nights, members of the leper colony of Porto Rico on Cabras Island can now listen to the voices of the outer world. A radio receiving set recently was installed there, and thirty-six new radio fans daily are enchanted with the marvels of science. The radio set was made possible by an anonymous gift of $100 which came from New York, to which were added local contributions.

The Departments

By A. Max Carmichael

The work of the departments seems to be unusually in the limelight at the present time. This is most likely due to the action of the late general Sunday school convention and to the somewhat fragmentary promotion of the forms of organization for the departments by the general officers. This promotion was due largely to the insistence of local workers that some statement be made, upon which a working basis of organization might be had. It has been thought well to review and discuss the work of the departments at this point in their development.

A Little of History

It would be well for us first to get a historical slant upon the present situation of the work of the departments. We want to insist that historically the departments did not arise to create certain forms of organization which might be considered fundamental, unchangeable, and constitutional. The departments did not arise to satisfy somebody's demand for an organization outside of and helpful to the church. In general the departments arose each in its turn to answer the need of using for the first time or stressing with larger emphasis certain methods of teaching or promoting religious development which had not been heretofore used or properly emphasized. It was found, too, that certain parts of our church membership were not being given proper attention.

The Sunday school work arose first. It arose largely in answer to the demands of the growing feeling that religion could best be promoted among children by the instruction of those of different ages and capacities in separate classes and apart from adults. The more progressive element felt that the children were being neglected. Something had to be done they felt. In order to get this done, the more progressive element felt it was necessary to adopt some form of organization outside of the church which would carry on this method or form of religious instruction. They naturally would assume the traditional form of Sunday school organization which they found in other churches. No one of those men who had part in the formation of our early Sunday schools living to-day would assert that the main thing they were trying to do was to establish a form of organization or an association, the organization of which they considered fundamental, unchangeable, and constitutional. The thing we wanted, they would say, is that the children should receive religious instruction that was adapted to their ages and capacity.

Pastors in their sermons were failing to see that they could not adapt the sermon to the children and adults at the same time, that the same sermon was unadapted to the promotion of religious growth equally in the minds of children and adults. Our pastors, like the pastors of all other churches, were failing in this regard. Like other churches we had to establish schools of religion for children. It is true that oftentimes a pastor was unsympathetic, refused to come at ten o'clock when the Sunday school started, and waited to make his appearance at eleven o'clock, his own time for promoting religious instruction.

Adults Attend

It is interesting to note that the method used by the Sunday school became so effective and so interesting that adults attended the Sunday schools in such frequent numbers as to demand that adult classes be started. Thus we find coming to prominence in the literature of the Sunday schools of all the prominent churches the adult class movement. Adults began to find that the topic matter that could be discussed in such classes could be peculiarly fitted to their needs as adults in the Christian welfare. Another interesting thing is that Sunday school superintendents began to interest pastors in the Sunday school movement by having them teach the adult class. Thus we are having worked up in the various churches of Protestant Christianity men's Bible classes taught by the pastor of the church. We hail the day of the larger and larger attendance of adults at Sunday schools. It is bound to increase.

The method of adapting religious instruction to the ages, capacities, and needs of people is bound to prove more effective than the attempt to promote religious development with all ages of people present at the same time all the time. But, alas, it was not true that adults always attended Sunday school. The young man of twenty can readily remember the day when mother got him ready for Sunday school and she and father trailed along afterwards at eleven o'clock, and it is true even yet to-day that men in our leading quorums never put their heads inside of a Sunday school. We expect we could commence at the top and count quite a number who seldom if ever attend.

We are promising our Sunday school workers a better day. Even members of the priesthood are going to find that the instruction during the Sunday school hour can well be adapted to their needs as members of the priesthood. No doubt in the very near future pastors will find that the Sunday school offers an opportunity for class instruction of priests for their duties as visiting officers. If not held during the Sunday school hour, it will be held at other times, thus using and usurping the various methods and forms of religious instruction which the Sunday school arose to meet. Of course, we must admit that historically the church under Joseph the Seer's day did have class instructions for the quorums and oh, how glad we are to admit it! May such grow by leaps and bounds.

For the Entire Church

As the adults have been taking considerable interest in Sunday school and as the sprinkling of adults at Sunday schools has increased, we have begun to feel to-day that the Sunday school is a movement of the entire church. As a consequence the youngster growing up to-day feels that the Sunday school is as much for father and mother as it is for him. Visiting priests have begun to urge the fathers and mothers of their districts or groups to go to Sunday school. But the eleven o'clock hour on Sunday is still largely an adult meeting. The songs, prayers, and sermons are largely given with adults in mind.

That this is a fact is more largely recognized by our mothers, we feel, than it is for our pastors. As proof of this, we would say that we are being asked constantly by mothers in our travels whether the children should be forced to stay at the eleven o'clock hour after being in the Sunday school. Mothers are recognizing that it is much easier to keep them in Sunday school than it is to keep them there during the eleven o'clock hour. Many pastors are frankly admitting that the eleven o'clock service is largely for adults, and such pastors are beginning to promote junior meetings at the eleven o'clock hour in separate parts of the church building. How glad we should be for this! And shall we have to organize a separate department or association helpful to the church to promote this junior meeting? Not so, if pastors will see the need, we feel.

We feel that we are in a position to-day to use that method of promoting religious instruction without necessarily creating a new department. That shows progress. But there are certain factors in the situation which might make it best that the church pastor permit the Sunday school department to promote the junior meetings, and that one factor is that we might still be permitted to use the teaching ability of women. The church might feel itself obligated to refuse women the privilege of giving sermonets to the children. We do not feel that it would; but it might. The Sunday school would not. This is a problem, of course, for the future to solve.

Yet, would it be wise to attempt to promote the religious growth of children in every instance by separating them from adults? We should say by no means should they always be separated from adults. Such would be a dangerous practice. To put children of the same age by themselves in large numbers with only one or two adults around lacks some of the elements of a natural environment. God put children in families of say four children of different ages with two adults to control. Thus, the Sunday school method has its limitations.

We by all means must have general meetings in which folks of all ages attend. Only by this means can children gain an appreciation of the adult point of view. Children would need to listen to the religious comments of adults, especially their prayers. It is an essential factor in their religious growth, but the thing that religious promoters should remember in meetings of this kind is that the children are present, in body at least, and that we should attempt to make them present in mental attention by having the adult conversation and prayer within the understanding of the children, and that the children should be encouraged to participate along with the adult, and that the adult should show an appreciation of that participation no matter how childish it might be.

Especially in the sacramental service do we feel that the children and adults should be together. Only rarely, if at all, would we advise sacramental service for the children apart from the adults. It might be all right once in a while to have young people have a separate sacramental service, but quite frequently should children and adults be together in all kinds of service, prayer, singing, preaching, etc.

The Religio Arose

As the Sunday school restricted its content of instruction to the Bible quite largely, there began to grow a feeling of the need for instruction in the Book of Mormon, especially for the young people who begin at this age to take an interest in its claims. We find here in Lamoni that the young people in the college have a much larger interest in the Book of Mormon than do our juniors, for instance. Too, along about the same time the church people began to feel the need for some especial meetings for the young people in the way of entertainments, programs, etc. There is no doubt that it is the task of the church to answer both of these needs. Consequently, the Zion's Religio-Literary Society arose. In organization it copied its older brother, the Sunday school. We would stress here again that the Religio arose not to satisfy somebody's demand for a certain form of organization which might be considered fundamental, unchangeable, and constitutional, but to fill some definite lack in our former system of religious development, to-wit, class instruction in the Book of Mormon and the supervision of the entertainment of the young under church auspices. To-day the administration of the Department of Recreation and Expression, the successor of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, is stressing the need for the supervising of the social and recreational life of the young of the church under church auspices.

Boy Scouts

The use of the Boy Scout movement and the rise of the Oriole and Temple Builder movements, came about not as a means of fostering the Boy Scout movement as such or as a means of giving some women the opportunity to show how good organizers they could be in getting up such movements as the Oriole and Temple Builder movements, not as a means of creating or fostering an artificial organization towards which we may indoctrinate the loyalty of the early and middle adolescents; these rather came about as an attempt to give some help to local leaders who were interested in supervising the social, recreational, and instructional life of the early and middle adolescents under church auspices.

It was beginning to be recognized that the promotion of religious development was something over and beyond mere knowledges of the Bible and Book of Mormon. It was being recognized that if we were to promote the religious growth of the early and middle adolescents, we must interpret their entire legitimate life in terms of purposeful religion.

President F. M. McDowell himself who was the greatest factor in the adoption of the use of the Boy Scout movement holds no brief for the Boy Scout's movement itself, we venture to say. He wanted the boys of the church supervised and helped in their recreational and expressional life as well as in the life of biblical knowledges. He knew that local leaders would demand some help in this regard. He knew that local leaders would demand some direction. After looking over various things being done for our boys by our Christian brethren, he doubtless thought that the Boy Scout movement would offer the largest help to local leaders in their endeavors to help growing boys.

Oriole Girls and Temple Builders

The same can be said of the Oriole and Temple Builder movements. Have you noticed that we refer to the Oriole and Temple Builders as movements, not as organizations? They signify a movement in religious development; they are an expression of a means of promoting religious growth. We are not after loyalty to the Boy Scout movement as such; we are after loyalty to Christian ideals and practices. In fact, we do not care whether a pastor uses the Boy Scout movement or Oriole movement so long as he is fulfilling all of the needs in the religious development of the young, so long as he is doing in his own local what we feel the Boy Scout and Oriole movements give organized expression to. It is the process, not the organization, we are fostering.

Department of Women

The Department of Women arose not only to secure a participation by the women in Christian functions of a manual or remedial nature, but also to secure their joint participation in the study of their own particular problems as women and mothers. This department has never lost sight of this purpose. It has probably changed its form of organization more often in less time than any of the others, but that has not been worrying those who are attempting to make the organization a means and have always seen clearly the end or purpose of the movement itself.

Department of Music

The Department of Music arose in order to stimulate a larger use of the art of singing in promoting religion, and also to secure a better use. The Department of Health arose because it was felt that matters of promoting health among church membership was not receiving the attention it should as a religious duty. Medical science has developed so many facts during the last few years, appertaining to the preservation of health, that as children of God we have not kept the pace with that which is our duty to do. We have failed thereby to preserve our health as well as we might otherwise have and thus have failed to that extent to promote the kingdom of God on earth.

The general departmental heads are all united in the feeling that they hold no brief for their own organizations as such. They administer an organization merely as a means to put across certain forms or methods of religious development. Loyalties to the organizations as such, they hope are passing things. Every one of them is quite ready and willing that the church in its own organic form should administer these functions which the departments are now administering. They are hoping, praying, and preaching for that day, and yet they are all aware that that day has not yet come and that it would be very unwise to insist upon it now.

Recognized of the Lord

The departments have not been without their recognition of the Lord. The efforts of the Daughters of Zion to promote an orphanage was given specific recognition by the Lord and the church in conference assembled in 1906. (Doctrine and Covenants 127: 3.) About ten or fifteen years ago at Coldwater, Michigan, Brother J. W. Wight speaking by the Spirit through the gift of tongues and the interpretation thereof said that the Sunday school and Religio were helps and governments to the church recognized by the Lord.

In 1873 the Lord speaking to the Saints through the Prophet Joseph Smith, said, "Behold if my servants and my handmaidens of the different organizations for good among my people, shall continue in righteousness, they shall be blessed, even as they bless others of the household of faith." (Doctrine and Covenants 117: 12.) Although the history surrounding the giving of this revelation is not fully accessible to us, we believe it was said specifically with reference to the attempts to establish Sunday schools as well as ladies' aid societies, mite societies, singing clubs, and young people's societies throughout the various branches of the church that were beginning to be made at that time.

The office of Sunday school superintendent has not been mentioned in the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants, neither has the office of friendly visitor, nor Boy Scout leader, nor director of religious education nor branch chorister nor the committee on archæology. All the holders of these offices must admit that the office they hold was started by the church or departments in legislative assemblies.

But none of them are worrying about this as they know that the thing they are doing is a part of the organic purpose of the church, an obligation which the church is constitutionally bound to perform. We are commanded over and over again to teach. (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5; 43: 4; 85: 21.) Teaching involves purpose, content, and methods. The things which Sunday school superintendents, Boy Scout leaders, and branch choristers are performing are but parts of the teaching process, those parts of the teaching process which pastors in the past have not recognized.

It is possible that our methods and forms of teaching can become so stereotyped and traditional that we think that the only forms and methods of teaching possible are those which we have been practicing. This would incline us to feel that the command to teach would include only those forms and methods of teaching which we have been practicing and to believe further that any emphasis laid upon the different method of teaching lies outside of the command. We begin too soon to confound the traditional form of expressing our teaching process with the sum total processes of teaching.

While the particular offices which Sunday-school teachers hold is not mentioned in the Doctrine and Covenants, they can feel that that which they are doing is specifically commanded. In fact, they might all admit that the particular office they are holding would be unnecessary if the church would recognize its full duties. The form of organization which the departments might take is very minor compared with the processes of promoting religious development which they are fostering.

Closer to the Church as the Head

About the only development in forms of organization that the departments desire is an elimination of organization. Let the church take up these processes of promoting religious development as fast as it will. It cannot be done yet. Too many obstacles stand in the way. This elimination of departmental organization can only come about very slowly. It can only come about as the church itself takes up the full expression of these processes in its administration. None of the general heads of departments stand ready to give up their departmental organization, but one of their outstanding duties, they feel, is to persuade the church to take full advantage of every means of promoting religion.

They are very, very happy in the feeling that many of our pastors are more and more recognizing the value of the work of the departments and are recognizing that the departments are fulfilling some of the legitimate functions of the pastors. We might parenthetically say here that we are using the term pastor to apply to all the local priesthood. The local priesthood are everywhere gladly assuming the supervision of the work of the departments. May this increase by leap and bound! Some day they may take over the functions of the departments minus the intervening organization of the departments. Let it speedily come.

Yet we would not have it come so fast that we would lose much that we have already gained. There is a very grave danger that this may be true. The departmental heads feel that it is their duty to protect their own organization in so far as that organization is necessary to protect the processes of promoting religious development that, up to date, they have been efficiently using. We would encourage local pastors to remember that the departments have arisen outside of the church largely because the church itself has not used the processes of religious promotion which certain progressive people felt were necessary. They can hardly blame the departmental workers of being somewhat jealous of these processes. The departmental heads certainly could be chided for being jealous of any form of organization, but it would at least be wise for them to be jealous of the processes of promoting religious development which their departments are designed to foster.

Frankly, one of the most serious obstacles to the departments going back fully into the hands of the church at the present time is that we fear there would be an elimination of women as teachers. To some the use of women as teachers of religion, especially in the way of conducting classes or giving sermonets to children, is unconstitutional and, therefore, not to be done. The author, of course, does not agree with the conclusion; neither does he agree with the premise that women cannot constitutionally be teachers of religion. If the Lord has not specifically said that women can teach, it may be explained by John 16: 12: "I have yet many things to say unto you but ye cannot bear them now," or by Doctrine and Covenants 51: 8: "Behold, ye are little children and ye cannot bear all things now; ye must grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth." Might we not some day be in a state of mind that we would be able to receive such from the Lord?

But the Lord has already given us a precedent in the matter of ordaining women. From Doctrine and Covenants 24: 2 we quote: "And thou [Emma Smith] shalt be ordained under his [Joseph Smith's] hand to expound the scriptures and exhort the church according as it shall be given thee by the spirit." We feel that this is constitutional precedent enough to have women teach within the Sunday school. It goes even farther than the departments are doing to-day. It gives women the right to be ordained. While she is not to be ordained to any specific office, she is to be ordained for the privilege of performing the ordinary function of the priestly office, that of teaching.

Organization of Departments

Let us discuss the organization of the departments. The statement concerning the organization of the departments as made in the HERALD of November 8, 1922, and reprinted in leaflet form to be sent out to departmental workers was most largely an attempt to state the various forms of local departmental organization as they now are. In our examination of local and district departmental organizations we have found quite a variety of forms of organization.

We have seen in the changes of the past three or four years an attempt to follow the spirit and principle of coordination. Naturally as coordination was a principle rather than a rule and as no definite form of organization to be put into practice was being promulgated, the forms of organization instituted in locals to express this principle varied quite materially. This is quite natural, not at all to be feared nor discountenanced, provided the spirit and principle of coordination were being put into practice without jeopardizing the fundamental principle of common consent.

The whole question is not a matter of what form of organization to adopt but rather how much cooperation in promoting the religious growth of one's community, branch, or district we can secure among the membership. We wish to urge that we are not stressing forms of organization; we are stressing the spirit of cooperation and the need for it among our workers in promoting all phases of religious development. We want the departments to be cooperative movements with the church. There is always some overlapping of functions and, therefore, we need very much the spirit of harmony among workers to eliminate any friction which might be due to jealousy over overlapping functions.

What do we mean by the spirit of cooperation between the departments and church? In any given community or district we should want a complete program of religious development promoted. The religious interpretation of no one phase of human activity should be left out.

To amplify this further would involve a statement of the full curriculum to be used in promoting religion. Suffice it to say here that we feel that in many branches and districts several phases of human activity are not given religious interpretation by pastors, family visitor, Sunday-school teachers, and others. In the second place, this cooperation would mean the fullest expression of each individual in promoting the religious development of himself and others. In the third place, it means the working together harmoniously of people of different abilities in specialized functions.

It can readily be seen that this cooperation cannot be put across by any loose form of organization in which people do not feel themselves responsible to one another.

Hindrances to Cooperation

In many branches and districts there are conditions which do not permit of the largest expression of cooperation. One of these conditions is the unwillingness of church membership to cooperate. Various reasons may be assigned for their unwillingness; one, we feel, is a misunderstanding of what the departmental heads are trying to do.

Secondly, we feel that they fail to appreciate the larger phase of religious promotion; speaking figuratively they fail to see the town for the houses; they see only a woman's class or a Sunday school or a branch prayer meeting. Consequently, they are jealous of their own activities and functions. The Sunday school superintendent becomes immediately jealous of his own school. He does not want to stand responsible to anyone else. A branch finance deacon is jealous of his own rights and does not want to stand responsible to the branch president or to work cooperatively with the branch librarian in buying books, for instance. Too, people are jealous of each other's abilities. This probably is the greatest source of jealousy in the church. It takes a mighty big man to prefer his brethren.

In the third place, there is a fear of the centralized administration which is necessary to give full account of the reciprocal responsibilities of one member or department to another, needed to put over the principle of cooperation as expressed above. We hear the most about this point, but we do not feel that it is the most fundamental obstacle to the fuller spirit of cooperation. Our second point expressed immediately above, we feel to be the greatest. It is evidenced by the great amount of quarreling we find in some branches.

In the fourth place there is in some communities a misunderstanding of the contribution of the departments. This can be said particularly of the Boy Scout work, the work of the Department of Women, and of the dramatic expression as advocated by the Department of Recreation and Expression. Obviously it would not be fair to the Department of Women or to the Department of Recreation and Expression to permit those members of the church who have no sympathy for these departments to vote on their business. As a reason for the unwillingness of the membership of the church to cooperate, this fourth reason stands out with the least volume, we believe.

There is another reason why in some communities we cannot have as large an expression of cooperation as in others. This is because there are many people outside of the church interested in our departmental movement. Often many outsiders are members of our various departments. For instance, there are many local Sunday schools who have quite a large membership of outsiders, and in a few of these the outsiders are prominent workers. In some of our own Boy Scout troops and even our Oriole groups, there is quite a sprinkling of non-Latter Day Saint members. Obviously not as large a spirit or form of cooperation can be manifested in such communities between the departments and church. These outside members should be permitted in this case to vote in the departmental business, and hence it would not be wise to have the business of these departments done in the main business meeting of the church itself. This, we feel, is a legitimate obstacle to fuller cooperation. We should be glad that the outsiders are there, and they should be made welcome.

Too, in those communities where there is a frequent change of the personnel of the branch presidency, not as large a degree of cooperation can be had. A high degree of cooperation can only be administered by a continuous personnel. Also, where there is a frequent change in the population or membership of the branch, a large degree of cooperation is impossible. No one knows what will be the attitude of the incoming members; hence, it would be unwise to organize under a system demanding too close cooperation for the present.

Of course, where a local organization of a department exists in a community where there is no other form of church or departmental organization, there can be no form of cooperation expressed in that community.

The Great Need Is Cooperative Spirit

Restating ourselves, we have said that the large question in departmental work is the cooperative spirit among the workers. We have also stated reasons why as great a spirit of cooperation cannot be had in some branches or districts as in others. It is consequently up to the general administrators of the departments to be able to advise and suggest various forms of departmental organization suitable to the various degrees of cooperation that are being manifested in our local churches and districts.

As we have found in looking over the various communities of the church, organizations which already give expression to various degrees of cooperation, we have in our article in the HERALD of November 8, 1922, attempted to give concrete expression of various cross-sections of these local departmental organizations already existing in the order that they permit of a larger manifestation of cooperation. Besides stating cross-sections of the forms already existing, we have also attempted to state a form which would give an even fuller spirit of cooperation an opportunity to manifest itself. This received a cursory description under the subtitle of Form Five in the HERALD of November 8, 1922. As yet, we have not felt it wise to advocate the adoption of this form of organization by any local.

oped in a branch or district overnight. It is naturally a slow process. Human growth of any sort comes about much more slowly than a revolutionist would desire. We are urging departmental workers to develop the spirit of cooperation and an appreciation of the work of the departments and to speak of changes in forms of organization only when these changes are necessary to give manifestation of the spirit of cooperation which the workers have promoted.

As we said before, the work of the departments is not that of promoting an organization but rather that of using certain special methods of promoting religious growth. Teacher training meetings are much more important than meetings to explain forms of organization. Meetings to learn how to teach religion are much more important than meetings discussing whether the Sunday school librarian shall be nominated on the floor of the business meeting or appointed by the superintendent.

At Present Each Community Is a New Problem

To some, as departmental heads, we may have appeared to be urging a progress toward forms of organization, permitting larger cooperation, and to others we may have appeared as holding back. This is quite natural. Our advice must change for each community as the factors affecting the form of organization possible differ in each community. Leaders of local and district departments must weigh carefully their own situation. In some places we have advised not adopting more cooperative forms of organization; in others we have advised it, but we have always advocated the stimulation of a larger spirit of cooperation. The form will come when the spirit comes.

The very fact that we have had to advise differently in different places is the keynote to the reason why we have asked that changes be not made without obtaining the advice and consent of the administrative officer who has the larger field under his oversight. There is quite a tendency in the church to feel that changes in organizations of themselves denote progress. In other words, if the local officers can get a change of organization from that where the Sunday school workers nominate all their officers in their own business meeting to that where all these officers are nominated in the branch business meeting by the branch president, they feel that they have brought about progress. It may be that they have and it may be that they have not.

They have not if they have outrun the real understanding and desires of the people, and have not eliminated or taken account of the obstacles which stand in the way. It is true that the changing of the form itself may promote the real spirit of progress, but this is true only when the new form of organization but slightly outruns the present feelings and attitude of the membership. The form itself could be held out as an incentive or stimulus to progress in thinking of which the people are capable. Again, very often local workers who are organization-minded are apt to not see the illegitimate or legitimate obstacles which stand in the way of the change.

These can be brought to their attention by the district administrative officers who have the larger view in mind and can look at the local situation without local prejudices. This is but another attempt to give concrete expression to the spirit of essential responsibility and proper cooperation which we are hoping will come more and more. It is also a concrete expression of the centralization of administration which we feel necessary to give the best expression to this larger cooperation.

Intelligent Supervision Is Essential Factor

In the article in the HERALD of November 8, 1922, something is said regarding the right of nominating departmental workers. In fact, it may appear that this is one of the chief factors entering in to make the difference in the forms of organization. The difference in the forms of organization may appear to be but differences in powers of nomination. Here again is stated the letter of the difference, rather than the spirit of the difference. Perhaps it may be a mistake to speak of giving any branch or district president the right to nominate, until we are assured that he is thoroughly imbued with his task of supervising the work of these departments.

Supervising does not mean his assigning the departments to some specialist and then letting that specialist do as he pleases without having any responsibility to the branch or district president. This means that the branch or district president must know something about the departmental work and should have had some experience in it. If with this he has quite a bit of sympathy and appreciation for the work of the departments we then can begin to ask him to supervise. For him to be able to supervise, the officers of the department must be responsible to him. This responsibility comes by virtue of their being a part of his staff, by virtue of his having the initiative in putting them on the task.

We shall have to admit that too often branch and district superintendents are assuming the power to nominate without actively supervising. That is a mistake. The giving of the right to nominate is but a means of giving expression to the responsibility to supervise. This in turn is permitting the centralization of the supervision of our work.

Why should we want a more centralized supervision of our work? Is a centralization of supervision necessary to obtain the larger cooperative effort which in turn is necessary to promote the largest amount of religious development? We believe that it is. If you will recall what we said was meant by cooperation between the departments and church, you will feel with us, we believe, that this cooperation cannot be brought about with several people or departments acting in any community independently of one another and without any responsibility to the other.

In any given community how can we secure a complete program of religious development, if there isn't some one who stands at the head whose business it is to look over the entire field and see whether every phase of religious development is being promoted? Are we sure that the leader of the prayer meetings, the leader of the Sunday school, the leader of supervised play each acting in his place, independently of the other, will feel the responsibility of looking over the entire field to see if any phase of religious development is being left? We can readily answer in the negative. Again, are we sure that in a given community where the departments are acting independently of one another that every member of the community is being given the fullest opportunity to express himself religiously?

I have seen the departments and the church in a given community, acting independently of one another overload some one man and fail absolutely to use others. Especially do they fail to use people where their special talents permit them to be the most worth while.

If there stands some person or body of persons whose specific duty it is to look over the entire field, study all the needs of the people, and study all of the workers to find out where they can best work, and then attempt to fulfill all of these needs and to make an equitable distribution of the available workers, we certainly can expect better results. This person or body of persons set apart must have supervision over all. All the workers must in some way stand responsible to this main supervisor.

Real Common Consent Needed

We cannot yet have this kind of cooperation in its entirety in the church. It is far from being the common consent of the people. We do not expect it to be the common consent of the people for some time. In some of our branches this kind of cooperation cannot receive the consent of the majority, let alone the common consent. True, only the consent of the majority is necessary to put such cooperation into existence on paper by resolutions, etc., but we shall never make the progress necessary in these hastening times until all are willing.

Even though we have tried to build up for minorities certain ethical attitudes and practices of subservience to the consent of the majority, the minority can never work whole-heartedly with the majority. We who see the need of this kind of cooperation and are willing to work under it with an intelligent common social will, must never be satisfied until this form of cooperation receives the intelligent and free-will sanction of all. We must work for the common consent.

This can only be done by the educative process. It cannot be done by any attempted ecclesiastical coercion. All must be educated to see the need of using these strong cooperative measures. All must be educated so that seeing the need, they will willingly unite their efforts under one head, working for one purpose, that one purpose the intelligent and free-will social purpose of all, each person in his place contributing to that purpose.

We are sure that when the great bulk of the people see the need for unified supervision, when they see the obstacles which are illegitimate, they shall then enter into this unified supervision and remove the obstacles with no feeling of coercion, but as their own free act.

What a grand day it will be when we can do that! Our wills will not be opposites but parallels, merging into one grand common will. Yes, we must work toward common consent, not from it.

Did you ever stop to think that as long as we have majorities and minorities, we do not have common consent? We vote in order to determine what the consent of the majority is. We know on the start that we do not have common consent. We can have common consent in only two ways: of those ignorant, and of those intelligent. Only the latter is to be thought of.

The question then naturally arises how we can hope to have the common consent of the intelligent when the field of action is so wide and varied about which intelligence is necessary in order to make decisions that we cannot hope to have all the members so intelligent upon all things as to agree always upon a common course. That is a large expectation indeed, and is very far off. We shall for a long time have to have majorities and minorities. Nevertheless we must work toward the goal. The task shows how necessary is a full program for the development and education of all of us.

The Immediate Step Is Each One to His Own Work

But what is our immediate step to approach it? First we must imbue everyone with the zeal to do his own task the best possible. Oh, that we could get every branch visiting officer to say that he would with the help of God be the best visiting officer possible, who to prove his own earnestness would make a thorough study of the art of visiting, who would read all the books possible which would help him to increase the religious lives of those whom he visits, who would study very carefully the needs of every family, and every person in the family that he visits, who would visit a family or a member of a family any time in order to accomplish his task. Such a priest would be so busy that he would not be worrying much about the deacon getting his work done. He would be so interested in his own task that he would say to the deacon, "You go at your task, and I will go at mine, and we will make an accounting to some common person in whom we can place our trust, the president of the stake, or, in financial matters, the bishop of the stake."

Oh, that we could have bankers and farmers within the church who would promise to bank and farm the world into Christianity, who would say to the other members of the church, "I am going to be the best banker, and the best farmer possible. I shall learn all I can about my task; I shall study it in every detail possible. Every time I loan money or plant my seed, I shall have Jesus in mind, I shall feel that I am doing it for him, and I want to do it the best possible." If such were the facts the banker would say to the farmer, "I do not know just when is the best time to plant; you decide that." The farmer would say to the banker, "You know the best time to call in loans; I cannot help you decide that. We are both working for the same end. We shall both of us make an accounting of our work to the Bishopric."

Such two men would be quite willing to trust each other. They would also not worry about who was put in as Sunday school librarian. In their desire to do their own job well, they would be quite willing to say to the local pastor on full time, "You make the best pastor you can. Be on the job all the time. You take time to look around to see who would make the best Sunday school librarian, and you go right ahead to get that person on the job. Don't stop to ask me what I think, as I don't know much about it. I am trying to do my own task well. Just as long as you, Mr. Pastor, account to the same person or officer as I do, whom we both are willing to trust, we can do better by working hard at our own jobs, each an expert or specialist in his own line, and yet each coming under common supervision, so that each does not overrun the other, and each can be sure that the other is not a shirker." Together they shall say whether they will continue to trust their common supervisor.

A Work for All

When our people once get the right idea of the great message of our church, they will feel that it is just as much concern to God, his work, and the church, as to whether Mr. Latter Day Saint Cashier of a savings bank makes a proper loan or liquidation, as it is as to whether Mr. Priest makes the proper visit to a family. When they get this view of our work, they will not be worried so much about this nominating and appointing business. If any of our pastors are really anxious for the privilege of nominating, they will feel that they must be an expert at that job, just as much as Mr. Latter Day Saint farmer must be an expert in planting seed. Neither the pastor will be overly exercised about advising Mr. Farmer, nor will Mr. Farmer be much exercised about scrutinizing all Mr. Pastor does.

Thus each in his place will be contributing to the common purpose, and as each brings his expert knowledge to the common school, the school of the prophets, if you please, we will thereby develop a common will. God grant that the day may come quicker than we yet think. I pray for it much.

In that day shall we feel like cringing before our chief priest, as our common supervisor, or shall we each be glad that we have a common supervisor, in whom we have commonly placed our trust by our vote, who we expect shall look after us all to see that each does not play unfair to the other. A common purpose, a common supervision will be demanded. It shall be our only safeguard against each expert taking advantage of the trust that is placed in him by the others.

True, common consent under such conditions has a new thing to watch, the expert. Perhaps the greatest danger to democracy to-day is the expert, the expert that would force his will upon others rather than educate others to his views. It is often the easier course for the expert health physician in a city to force his desired course of action upon others. He must be subjected, of course, to some common supervision. A banker may feel himself an expert, and may wish to compel the farmers of his community to come to his terms, but we must have common supervision, which supervision in turn is subject in the last event to the will of majority.

Ideals of Social Cooperation

What a great responsibility for the majority! Can it afford to decide on matters involving expert knowledge, without itself having a great deal of knowledge? If each in that case looks into the question at issue with open mind, unprejudiced, knowing that expert knowledge is necessary to properly solve it, we shall have no fear, but if each member of the majority decides without study, the majority's decision will take us backward. If each member has thus given his best study to the proposition that must now be decided by common voice, what need he fear that he may disagree temporarily with another?

It will generally be the case that the majority will defer to the decision of the expert. The majority will do so as long as the expert keeps their confidence, and the expert will keep their confidence so long as he gives no signs of becoming an autocrat, or of attempting to impose his ideas upon the majority.

—What are the signs of an autocrat? First, an autocrat attempts to keep us all ignorant. He says, "Do not read the Bible!" "Do not go to school!" Then, if he cannot keep us from going to school and learning a little about his task as an expert, he organizes his forces so as to keep us out of his "union," or gets us into a school of his own make where things are taught us "so." Who of us are guilty? May God keep us from such!

We are sure that the common supervision of our stake presidencies, high councils, and bishoprics with an appeal to general headquarters, whom we have the privilege of supporting or rejecting at intervals will keep us from the ravages of the autocratic expert. But may we all be experts in our line. We then shall be quite willing to trust the other, to let the farmer farm, the banker bank, the Sunday-school teacher teach, and not try to vote as to when the farmer shall plant, nor to whom the banker shall loan money, nor what story the Sunday-school teacher shall use in teaching loyalty.

Initiative? Who says that in that day we shall lack interest and initiative because we do not vote on who shall be Sunday school librarian? Our interest now is often too largely fear of the other fellow and failure to put our all into our own task. We shall indeed lack interest in the one thing, but it shall be greatly enhanced in our own task. In fact, common consent cannot come unless we begin first to show the greatest of interest in making our own contribution to the common cause the greatest possible.

It has always been more difficult for a man to keep than to get; for, in the one case, fortune aids, but in the other, sense is required. Therefore, we often see a person deficient in cleverness rise to wealth; and then, for the want of sense, roll head over heels to the bottom.—Basil.

Forms One to Five

By James E. Yates

The writer believes these present a danger to our progress.

Very much is being published by those who favor the so-called coordinating system as is being considered under the plan set forth as forms One, Two, Three, Four, and Five. Little or nothing has been published on the other side of the question. But there are two sides to every question, and the negative is not always the wrong side.

The writer therefore asks for just a little space in the HERALD to set forth a few of the reasons for believing that the negative position in this case is the right one; and he craves the kindly indulgence of those who believe that this new arrangement with all of its challenging innovations is an improvement over the old.

Reasons for Believing That the New Order Cannot Be as Helpful as Its Promoters Wish

In the first place it had not and has not the wholehearted support of the people in a fair understanding of common consent. When the general Sunday school and Religio conventions were abolished last October and their chief officers made practically appointive rather than elective, the news of such action came with startling surprise to the majority everywhere. It almost made them catch their breath in astonishment. There was probably no intent to do the business that would abolish the old system and set up the new order—to do it in a corner—but in the circumstances of its development it almost amounts to that. It is certain that there was no general understanding upon the part of the people sending delegates to those October conventions that they were to abolish all such conventions from now on and supplement such a new and complicated order as the church had never heard of before.

Secondly, there can be no question but that the new order, if generally adopted, will be of the most vital and far-reaching effect upon the entire church. It goes without saying that the promoters of the new order believe that the results will be for improvement but that is the point that is seriously subject to question.

No one will question but that the outstanding feature of the new order, in each stage of its development, is making for a stronger and stronger centralization of control. Its promoters believe such centralization of control and commanding supervision of all of the activities of the people to be very desirable. We believe such centralization of over-emphasized managerial functions tends to deaden initiative, to neutralize active interest in church work, and at last to be a contributing element to spiritual ossification.

Note that these forms (1 to 5) gradually put the selection of persons for each and every office in church or auxiliary activities into the hands of one or a few persons. True, the people may "approve," but the spirit of the system that condescends to permit them to approve, and that would frown upon a voter who would dare to disapprove as being an obstructionist, savors too much of the mere mechanical in every such business meeting, to be in reality a wholesome expression of common consent.

Leads to Appointment Instead of Election

Then, too, it should be noted that one feature aimed at in the development of said "forms," and so stated, is that if the people can be trained to permit, the various officers may be appointed outright, each by the ones higher up. This is not a question as to whether the men thus choosing and appointing subordinate officers may or may not be good and wise men. It is to be taken for granted that they are. But the question is as to whether the system (viewed from the standpoint of promoting the best spiritual growth) is a wholesome one or not. We believe decidedly not. Any element that tends to cause the servant of the Lord to forget that he is also the servant of the Lord's people, rather than their commander and general official manager, is not to be encouraged.

Men will feel and show a certain deference to the man or to the people by whom they are appointed or selected for office, and toward the influence that possesses the greatest power to displace them and appoint or choose another in their stead. If that power be centered in one man, or in a small group under the centralization of control system, it is so very easy for men to fall into the error of walking upon the will and wishes of the people with hob-nailed boots, and of exercising lordship rather than the spirit of one who serves.

The argument is made that spiritual leaders should select all subordinate officers in order to secure men who are in sympathy with said leader's policies. But that sort of a leadership that proposes to drive its own will, rather than to be of the spirit that says to the people: "I stand to serve the Lord and you, what is your wish?"—"I desire but to know whom of those eligible for office you choose and they shall be my choice also," that course creates a loyalty to its leaders that no power can break. The former course dispels loyalty. Forms One to Five do not make for nor strengthen the spirit of loyalty.

A Burden to the Pastor

Again: These forms introduce the innovation of burdening a pastor with looking after and promoting strange and questionable clubs and societies as a very intricate part of his official ministerial duties; societies and clubs and orders that are entirely unknown to the gospel of Christ or to the church as revealed in the three standard books. It will not do to argue that because these various societies and organizations may be capable of doing some good that we should therefore burden ourselves by making them an official part of our church work. But that is precisely what this new order will do.

No one should object if some groups of the church members want to put in their time and energy promoting Boy Scoutism, Oriole hiking, etc., if they feel that they are thus doing some good. There may be a great deal of good in all of them, and in a thousand and one more of similar intent. But the fact that there is some good in such activities does not justify the mixing of these things up with the official work of the church, until the rising generation will soon not know the difference between the authority for Boy Scoutism and that of baptism for the remission of sins.

The new order if approved according to forms set forth will positively lead many (especially among the young) to believe that these various unauthentic organizations are a part of the plan of salvation revealed from heaven. Some are already believing it. Absurd? Who thinks so? Time will prove these statements true. Close observation of conditions now will prove the truth of my affirmation.

Furthermore: The Lord has set the priests, teachers, and deacons in the church to be the cabinet officers and subadministrators of the branch president or pastor. Forms 4 and 5 do, without scriptural authority, without any revelation from the Lord so to do, and absolutely without precedent in sacred history, place the responsibility of ministerial duties upon the sisters, by making them cabinet officers or subadministrators of the branches with the pastor and by placing upon them the responsibility of attending priesthood meetings and participating in various spiritual duties along with those who are ordained to such services.

An Innovation

These aforesaid forms as explained by promoters provide for the women's so-called "friendly visitor" making her official visits in conjunction with the ministerial visits of the priest and of the pastor. All of this procedure introduces an element of innovation and experimentalism that may look very harmless upon the face of it. But really dangerous alterations of many gospel principles in past ages have at the first been equally as unobtrusive. Thinkers upon both sides of this issue must admit that grave dangers are lurking about us.

The heart and kernel of the issue that is raised in the presentation of these forms is that a flint spark has been struck that ignites a forum fire which must involve the entire church. And it must burn till it either clarifies the atmosphere, or else, if smothered, consumes with appalling destruction. The issue cannot be evaded. It must be squarely met. In simple words, here is the question: Is centralization of control, which can mean nothing else than strong central, individual, or small group power, a power that can control arbitrarily if it chooses, and that could repress fair expression—is that the safe and desirable thing needed in the church and for the various side organizations?

If so, then let us have it, and we can now do so without much effort. If not, then let us frankly say not, and say it too with all brotherliness and kindly regard to those who are zealous in believing that spiritual leadership should possess power almost equal to a military command.

Catholicism and Utah Mormonism furnish studies in a development of that kind of power. It has built a strong church machine in each case, but has driven out the Holy Spirit long ago. Cardinals are appointed from Rome to minister over congregations in America. The people have nothing to say in the matter. They have even forgotten that there was ever such a thing in the church as common consent. With their people the laity have only two functions left to them in the church. One is to go to the church and pray and the other to go to the priest and pay. Their priests also have two functions. One is to rule the mass and the other to collect for saying "mass." These facts cannot be gainsaid. Those conditions did not come about in a day. They are the product of many innovations and of a gradual departure from the "old paths."

The few matters touched in this short article cannot nearly exhaust our reasons for believing that the new order under discussion is not what the church needs at this time. But that we may not intrude too far upon the HERALD'S space with our negative views, may we add one thought and close.

The Coordination We Need

Brethren: Is not the kind of coordination that the church needs at this hour, that unity of purpose and fellow feeling that grows out of diversity of activities unhampered by any supervision except that which stands to safeguard the limits and boun-

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Historic Periods of Our Law

In an excellent article in the American Bar Association Journal the development of the law has been discussed from the historic point of view, the writer, Hugh E. Willis dividing the development of Anglo-American law into five periods: 1, the period of archaic law; 2, the strict law; 3, equity or natural law; 4, the maturity of the law; 5, the socialization of law.

The archaic or primitive period, he states, succeeded the period of no law in early English history. Its object was to secure the peace. Prior to this period, every man had been a law unto himself. Vengeance and self-help had been the order of the day.

The first step toward peace was to regulate vengeance by substituting composition for revenge. The avenger was bought off. Thus in the Hebrew law the like period was characterized by cities of refuge and provision for buying off the avenger. The period did not contribute very much to the law but laid the basis for development, yet so far as social classes and the larger units of nations are concerned the laws of England and of the United States, and in fact of the whole world, are still in their archaic or primitive period.

Strict law which followed substituted formal processes or remedies instead of regulating primitive self-help. The people thought that protection against tyranny laid in formality. It was a period of technicalities and an effort by set forms to attain security. This period is largely outgrown in substantive law, but in the field of adjective law in the United States the law is to a large extent in this period of formality, technicality, or strict law; and in substantive law much of it still holds over in the law of real property and consideration in contract.

The period of equity or natural law which followed in England in the 16th, through the 17th, and into the 18th century, went to the other extreme. There became such a revulsion against strict law that a system of courts which had almost no formal rule arose. Their end was justice. They attempted to identify law and morals, to emphasize duties rather than remedies. It is a reform period in that it remedied the most glaring difficulties of the period of strict laws.

Then the pendulum swung backwards again toward stricter law about the middle of the 18th century and through the 19th century in the period called the maturity of the law. The end of the law then became to secure equality of oppor-daries of the constitutional law of the gospel of Jesus Christ?

The writer affirms that it is. He also believes that anything more or less than this straight-jackets men, puts the appearance of harsh rulership over the people, builds up a strong ecclesiastical machine that clanks as it runs, and ultimately drives the tender, loving Spirit of Christ out of such an organization forever.

None of us want such a condition. Let us therefore go slow with every unauthentic innovation—seeking always for the "old paths" that we may walk therein, and find rest to our souls.

tunity and security of acquisition. Security again became an end in and of itself but equity was not eliminated. Rights were emphasized rather than the correlative duties. Property in contract became the all-important consideration. "Individualism and freedom of contract were the universal 'cure-alls.' The law would probably have taken this development if there had been no other outside factors contributing to this result, but the development was undoubtedly accelerated and given momentum by the philosophies and economic theories of the day. This was the period of the 'natural rights of man,' of 'laissez faire,' the 'law of competition,' the 'law of supply and demand,' and of 'individualism.' Our bills of rights, the Declaration of Independence, and other immortal documents were written in this period, and that of course accounts for the philosophy and economic theories embodied in them, although this fact is sometimes forgotten."

The result was an overemphasis of legal rights and an unconscious dissatisfaction therefore arose leading on to the fifth period, the socialization of our law, which belongs to the 20th century and which is exemplified in Germany by von Jhering, in France by Leon Duguit, in the United States by Roscoe Pound. The overemphasis of rights in the previous period caused the question to arise of why individuals had rights. The answer was because such was the social interest. As the result other social interests than those which had been emphasized in the 19th century came to the fore. Individuals had rights and duties only because in this way the social interests could be secured and remedies were given as a means of enforcement of such rights and duties. The social interest is the fundamental thing. Unless rights, duties, and remedies further the social interest there is no sufficient reason for their existence. Social interests not only determine their existence but also their rank or importance, as the highest social interest should predominate.

"The end of the law has now become the satisfaction of as many human wants as possible; to make legal justice social justice; to give fair play between groups as well as between individuals. This has given us what has been called sociological jurisprudence." The law is in a process of change. Society has taken interest in the dependent members of the social household. Taxation is no longer based on the principles of equality but on the principle of ability to pay. That is, the tax return is no longer made the same per dollar but is pro rated in the income tax and in inheritance taxes so as to increase more rapidly with the higher incomes or inheritances. For this reason freedom of contract is being limited. Workmen liability laws, mothers' laws, and others in the interest of the social welfare are coming to the front. For the like reason zoning laws are being upheld that the law of the state protect not only the lives and property but also the health of the people, and furthermore that æsthetic consideration is of sufficient importance to make property rights subordinate thereto.

Square Blocks

"I think Square Blocks is the best the church has put out for many years and should be in the hands of all the membership. It should be loaned to such as will read it. It is full of meat that nourishes the soul, and will be of great help to the ministry."—Richard Bullard.

Square Blocks and other sermons and articles, by President Elbert A. Smith, is a book of over 500 pages and typical of the writings of Brother Elbert. Rich in thought, beautiful in style, and original in expression.

Health Work Is Practical Christianity

In the Orient especially it is essential to missionary work, according to the following extract from the Independence Examiner, March 14, 1923.

Doctor Claude Marshall Lee, a great-great-grandson of John Marshall, the famous Chief Justice of the United States, and a grand-nephew of General Robert E. Lee, military master mind of the Southern Confederacy, is serving as a medical missionary at Wusih, in the interior of China. The fact became known a few days ago when Doctor Lee arrived in New York on a leave of absence. While China is the home of ancestral worship, Doctor Lee has not acquired the habit in his sixteen years' residence among the Celestials.

"Naturally I am immensely proud of my forebears," said Doctor Lee, "but my chief pride just now is in Saint Andrews Episcopal Hospital at Wusih, which I have come back to the States to boost. In these days the greatest help America can offer the Far East is in a medical way. It is Christianity of the most practical kind, and good international policy as well, to relieve the sufferings of the millions in China and give them the benefit of the best the medical science of the West affords. Institutions like Saint Andrews and others of its kind do more to cement firm friendship between Occident and Orient than anything else I know of."

Saint Andrews Hospital, which lies midway between Shanghai and Nanking, is the sole agency for modern hospital treatment in a territory with a population aggregating ten millions. Within its limitations it is perfectly equipped with a main hospital building, an operating room, a dispensary, a training school for nurses, and a home for the staff. With a capacity of sixty beds, a total of about ten thousand cases are handled annually; but the demands upon it are out of all proportion to its ability to serve.

Why Church Schools Are Opposed

The vote last fall in Oregon excluding church schools from the State has revived the question of the relation of the state to the child and the rights of the parents. There have been some extreme views expressed such as the suggestion that it is an attack upon Americanism and may result in the state prohibiting children going to Sunday school or attending any church to receive religious instruction. In America and in Great Britain religious freedom is guaranteed and is rather counted upon though it seems curious to some to see the Catholic Church making this demand in view of the fact of their own exclusion of others from the courts where they are in control.

Thus in the Christian Work the editor, Fredrick Lynch, emphasizes three distinct points. He makes it clear that he is not at all in sympathy with such restrictions on teaching, that parents should be free to have their children educated as they choose, to send to a parochial school or to other private schools. He expresses a sincere dislike for such limiting legislation but at the same time states clearly and very frankly that there is a cause for the prejudice toward the Roman Catholic Church in its attitude and may even give rise to such movements as those of rabid anti-Catholicism.

These reasons are first of all that the Roman Catholic Church has persisted in trying to secure a share of the public money for parochial schools. The Methodist Church, the Congregational and other Protestant Churches have their own schools, but no Protestant church has tried legally, directly or indirectly, to secure a share of the state funds. Naturally there is objection to the efforts made at various times in various places, including efforts made at Washington, to secure appropriations for Roman Catholic Indian Schools, schools which are religiously distinctive in their nature. If a Protestant church would make a similar demand it would meet with similar opposition. That is one of the first causes of bitterness as un-American procedure.

Secondarily, a cause of objection on the part of Protestants has been the consistent attempt of Roman Catholicism to exclude the Bible and all religious instruction from the public schools. They refer to our public school system as godless yet do everything possible to prevent any religious instruction or even the reading of the Bible. Thus Bishop Garland is quoted:

"For one, I believe that the Roman Catholic Church is quite right in proclaiming that there must be a religious foundation for all education, but the time has come when, to be consistent, the leaders of that church must act on the principle it proclaims and give its public support to an effort that will insure some moral and religious training in the public schools. No great church, our own, the Roman Catholic, or any other, can afford to stand on the principle of the necessity of a religious basis for education and then by its influence and its vote deprive others of the same privileges and rights.

"That is one of the underlying causes of protest against present conditions, and I hope the day is not far distant when members of every church shall agree on some general principles that will insure moral and religious training in our public schools that will not be denominational in character."

In the third place he suggests that they should disarm much of their suspicion if they would frankly cooperate with the Protestants in all sorts of religious, social, and international movements where no question of doctrine is in any way involved. This is more of a Protestant nation at present than Roman Catholic. Great problems face the Nation. The Protestants have been trying to solve these problems and would welcome the cooperation of the Roman Catholic brethren but so far it has been found impossible to secure even the slightest cooperation.

A recent incident was the World Alliance at Copenhagen to confer on what could be done to foster good will among the nations. Every community accepted but the Roman Catholics, yet it would have meant much to Europe if they had acquiesced.

There are many of these moral and social problems which belong to the nation as a whole and are not concerned with theology, with church organization, with doctrine or with succession, yet the average Roman Catholic priest knows no Protestant clergyman among his friends. The difficulty in fact results from mutual ignorance and antagonism which acquaintance would probably dissipate.

In the Colorado Springs Gazette for March 26 there appear nearly two columns on the history of the church under the heading, "Reorganized Saints object to ancient polygamy slur." The subheading follows: "Mormon tenets of Adam-God worship, blood atonement, eternal progression. Excesses on church, says Reverend Calvin Rich; tells of early trials." Then follows a brief sketch of the church beginning with its establishment in 1830. The continuity of revelation is pivotal in its doctrine. The organization of the church and the anticipated present social work of the church are stressed. Finally the division when Brigham Young took the faction to Utah and the fact that the courts have held the Utah Mormon Church to be apostate and the Reorganized Church to be in lawful succession is presented. The article closes with a statement of the financial system and the aims of the church in expressing its religious ideals in terms of human life.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

What Everyone Should Know About Cancer

Cancer Not a Germ Disease

Considering that cancer is such a formidable disease, it is satisfying to know that certain fears about it are unnecessary. In the first place it is quite unlike disease due to germs, of which so much has been learned in the last thirty years, for no germ which is capable of causing cancer in human beings or in animals has been found.

Cancer Not Contagious

Cancer is, therefore, not contagious, and there is no danger in treating or in dressing a case. Ordinary cleanliness, however, requires that the soiled dressing or the discharges from a patient suffering from cancer shall be carefully collected and disinfected and the dressings burned—not because there is any danger of becoming infected with cancer, but because the discharges and dressings contain germs such as those which cause boils, erysipelas, and other skin inflammations.

As cancer is not contagious there is no reason to believe the stories so often told of "cancer houses" "cancer villages," or "cancer belts." The occurrence year after year of a large number of cases of cancer in a single house can usually be shown to be due to the fact that the house has been occupied by old people; since cancer is a disease of old age there will naturally be more cases of the disease in such a house than in one which has been occupied by younger people. Thus also, "cancer villages" will usually be found to be small country villages from which most of the young people have gone to the large neighboring manufacturing towns in order to obtain work, so that only the older people have been left.

As these old people are very much more likely to develop cancer, there is an apparent increase in the number of cases in the village. This has been shown to be true in some of the New England States, especially Vermont and New Hampshire. Hence, these two States have the highest cancer rate of any in the country, while the Western States, which are largely populated by younger persons, have a very low cancer rate. While, therefore, the general percentage of cancer in these New England States is increased, it will be found on examining the statistics that there is no increase in the number of cases which have occurred at the age say of 60, over the number which would usually occur at the same age in the general population of the whole country elsewhere.

In a word, the possibility of transferring cancer from one person to another by direct contact should be practically disregarded. In all the thousands of recorded operations for cancer there is no report of a case acquired from a patient by any surgeon or nurse. Cruel neglect of some patients has been known to occur because of groundless fear of "catching" the disease. This is doubly unfortunate since cancer in the incurable stages calls for the most patient and devoted care of the sufferer.

Cancer Not Hereditary

Cancer is not hereditary although much has been said and written about experiments with certain strains of white mice which showed that by inbreeding the occurrence of cancer in these animals was much increased. While there is no question that this is a fact, yet the increase can be obtained only in certain strains of white mice, not in all varieties, and has never been observed in white rats, guinea pigs, rabbits, dogs, or other animals in which cancer occurs. The breeding conditions of the strains of mice above mentioned, about which so much has been printed in the newspapers, are so different from those which occur in the human race that no comparison is possible. Among the mice kept under observation, every parent either had cancer or came from a cancerous ancestor, and this is manifestly impossible in the human race. Therefore, there is no reason to worry because one member of a family has suffered from the disease. It does not at all follow that any other member of the family will have it. It has been shown, in fact, that according to the laws of chance if a certain number of cases of cancer are to be expected in a community, one family will naturally have two or three cases while other families will have none—and this is due purely to coincidence. In a family the members of which tend to be very long-lived, more cases of cancer will occur than in one in which the members die young; this is not because cancer is hereditary, but because it is predominantly a disease of middle and later life.

Even those students of heredity who hold the strongest views on the subject do not believe that cancer itself is inherited, but merely that a liability to the disease is passed on. While everyone should know the symptoms of this disease, people who have had much cancer in their families should take particular pains to inform themselves carefully about the disease and its prevention.

It is reassuring also to remember that life insurance companies pay no attention to a history of "cancer in the family" in determining whether or not a person is a good risk. Indeed, exceptionally careful studies of life insurance records have shown that there is no ground for apprehension even if both parents died of cancer.

Not All Forms of Cancer Are Increasing in Frequency

Even the statistics showing the increase of cancer must be considered in the light of all the facts and should not be seized upon as an occasion for extravagant and alarming statements. While the improvement in conditions of living has prolonged life ten years on an average, during the last century, this added length of life apparently increased the number of cases of cancer, since there are more people who reach the cancer age than formerly. This gives more cases of cancer in the population as a whole, though the relative proportion per age group may not be increased. Statistics show that there has been but little increase, for example, in cases of cancer of the skin, while the occurrence of cancer of the internal organs has apparently become much more frequent. This latter observation may be due in part to the fact that internal cancer is now more easily diagnosed, owing to the use of chemical tests and of the X-ray which frequently reveal unsuspected cancer from which the patient might otherwise have died before the disease was discovered, and in part, also, to the frequency of operations which reveal cancers of which we could not otherwise be certain.

The inaccuracy of our present-day school histories is well known to most careful students. As a result, the Christian Work quotes Harold Peat, urging that we should have a history written, setting forth the facts internationally and correctly instead of always emphasizing in every nation how we licked the other side. It is a little amusing to those who are able to do so to compare the two histories as taught to the children of two nations once at war, as each history glorifies its own side and depreciates the other. If the truth concerning war were once known we would realize its lack of glory, romance, and heroism and would learn to regard it as it really deserves and as it really is.

Two Thoughtful Letters by M. H. Forscutt

Elder D. J. Krahl passes the following letter and article to us for the HERALD, believing the sentiments worthy of wide reading.

It is difficult for one person to judge concerning the operations of the mind of another, and by no means an easy question for me to determine the actual mental and moral status of another person with such nice precision as shall justify a decision on my part that that person shall, under this condition, speak, and under that condition, keep silence.

I know that some teach that it is the duty of each to speak on every occasion in public fellowship meetings; but while I would not antagonize their teachings, I would meekly suggest that either our numbers in those meetings must be limited, and the time to be employed be adjusted accurately to the limit, or the length of each speech be such that their aggregate shall not exceed the time allowed for such meetings, otherwise that duty will be a difficult one. E. g., from 6 to 7.30 on Sunday; opening and closing service 15 minutes and sacrament 15 minutes deducted leaves but 60 minutes for, at least, that number of persons. If therefore not a second be lost, nor a stanza sung, nor an administration of any kind be had for the sick, or for confirmations, or for blessing of children, you will readily perceive the difficulty there, and that is the longest meeting.

As to whether you or I should speak in an especial fellowship meeting, my opinion is—and you are welcome to its expression here—that no other person unless possessed of our experience, having our judgment, and occupying our platform, can determine for us, unless it may perchance be that the presiding officer of the meeting, at the time, shall have the Spirit (and in such degree) that "searcheth the hearts, trieth the reins and revealeth the things of God," and that Spirit manifest His presence and operation upon us to that officer in charge. You are, I hope, sufficiently acquainted with me to understand that my general rules of deciding questions of this sort for myself, and for others when and where I have the right to do so, are but two in number; and they are both resolvable into one word "love." First, Am I prompted to speak by my love for God, whom I would thus publicly and gratefully acknowledge? If so, I should speak. Or, second, Am I prompted to speak by a consciousness of duty because I feel within me the Spirit moving on my spirit and that urges me to rise, or to kneel—or, because I have an experience to relate that I think will strengthen and encourage others? If so, I should speak.

One of the best, probably the best, because most comprehensive and clear, as a definition of duty and privilege, and one that will suitably apply to the government of self, and the uses of prayer and testimony in fellowship meetings, is that given by Paul in 1 Corinthians 14th chapter, and for sacrament meetings in the 12th chapter of the same epistle. One thought further: one may have nothing definite to impart, but may need that special light or strength or courage be imparted to him; it is then his right and his blessed privilege to ask the support he needs, and request the prayers of God's people.

Yours very truly,

MARK H. FORSCUTT.

Adaptability

Spiritually. In spiritual things either perceiving alike already, both or each moving in the same lines of thought, dwelling on the same plane of spiritual experience, or the one must be spiritually the other's superior and be so recognized, or this adaptability is certainly lacking.

Morally. The moral law, moral obligations, the perception and conception of what is morality, of what is moral excellence, must be understood by both alike, in the main, or else, as before, one must be and be recognized as the superior, or there is not moral adaptability.

Socially. Full agreement in reference to the social compact, as to privileges and prohibitions of neighbors, and of neighborly interference. Views in reference to the family connections of each, as to whether and when and how far they may interfere with, give counsel to, or be sought unto for counsel, in regard to the social relations, or one and his or her family must be first honored, or there will not long be social harmony, a lack of adaptation.

Domestically. Rights of husband and wife, government and education of children, nature and degree of corrections to be given, if needed, by whom to be given, handling of finances, home life, what it involves, the home itself—there must either be general agreement on, or one fully submit willingly to the other in, or there is not adaptability.

Personally. Involves all the foregoing, besides fatherhood and motherhood, and the delicate relations leading thereto. Size, dimensions, virility or sterility of both enter in here. Thousands are divorced, millions unhappy because physically, personally (I ought to be plain, but dare not be further than to say that) sexually they are married who are not adapted to each other and non-adaptability here is the cause of much crime and many ruined homes by reason of crime where crime was a result of nonadaptation, rather than of criminal intentions.

Young People's Meetings at Flint, Michigan

Since our young people's campaign of last year we have been looking forward to a similar series of meetings for 1923. In January we appointed an arrangement committee. They were fortunate in obtaining the services of Elder C. Edward Miller, now pastor in Toronto, Ontario.

We held union prayer services, and committees were appointed to attend the prayer meetings at the three churches during the two weeks previous to the beginning of the meetings to keep before the Saints the coming campaign and the necessity of their support. These efforts resulted in the spirit of unity which the Lord recognized, saying that if we continued therein our efforts would have his blessings—our meetings would be a success.

Our campaign began Sunday, March 11, with a good union prayer service, in charge of Brother Miller and two of the local young men. The first week our faith was strengthened by doctrinal sermons. The second Sunday night Brother Miller gave an illustrated lecture on the Bible. During the remaining evenings of that week we went with him on his missionary trips to Hawaii, South Sea Islands, and Australia. The third week was illustrated lectures on the Book of Mormon which made us appreciate the book more than we had ever before.

Besides the slides for his lectures Brother Miller has a number of song slides which we used for community singing. The last evening he lectured on "The American Indian—his past history, his future prospects." At the close we sang the Indian song which begins, "Oh, stop and tell me, Red Man," and a young Indian lady, Sister Denman, who has just moved to Flint, sang two songs for us in her native tongue.

We were deeply impressed by the humility and sincerity of our speaker. His sermons and lectures and our personal talks with him instructed us and gave us a determination to find our places in the gospel, and wherever those places are to fill them efficiently. The young people of Flint shall always think of him as a "Father in Israel."

Apostle Paul M. Hanson was with us during the last of the campaign, and talked to us at the union sacrament service on Easter Sunday. The thought he left indelibly impressed on our minds was that we should not seek to do extraordinary things but seek to do ordinary things extraordinarily well.

All the meetings were well attended, and though they were in charge of the young people, the older people assisted in every possible way. We were made to realize more fully that unity brings success in this work.

We pray that this spirit of unity may continue to exist among us and throughout the church.

The Sacrifice that Workers Make

[Not infrequently we learn, sometimes quite casually, of instances of quiet, sacrificing devotion to the work of the church which causes us to the more patiently and uncomplainingly struggle on under our own burdens, for it is heartening to know that the cause has the royal devotion of the many who, while the malcontents are voicing their complaints, are quietly and steadily carrying the burden of helping on the work. Recently a district president added a "remark" to his report, as follows:—F. M. S.]

"I have not been to — for a year or more. Have tried to finance my own way in going over the district, and many times have walked 24 or 25 miles and sometimes through mud and water to get there. My last trip to — cost me about $30 and received by donations about $6. Maybe I am not worth more. I work three or four days a week and have a family of three besides self to look after. I am trying to hold down the jobs of district president, district superintendent of Sunday school, and president of two branches. I am not discouraged in the least; am even optimistic—most of the time. My losses, my misfortunes, and trials I count as all gain, and in casting up accounts feel I have lost nothing by the sacrifices. To care for one of my church jobs I walk twelve to fourteen miles twice a week after the day's labor. Please do not get the idea I am complaining, far from it, for I have much to thank God for. My sympathy goes out to you for the great responsibility resting upon you and my prayer is that God will continue to give you strength to bear your burdens and trials with fortitude and complacency."

Bishop Zimmermann Visits Jerusalem

Bishop John Zimmermann, wife, and daughter Lillian, of Philadelphia, visited Jerusalem, from the 14th till the 20th of March. We were agreeably surprised when Bishop Zimmermann and wife rapped at our door on the afternoon of the 15th. O my! but it's good to meet a Latter Day Saint from home. The bishop preached for us on Sunday afternoon of the 18th, his theme being "Love." He explained that it was the basic principle of the Christian religion. "If we are permeated with love we will be drawn to Christ," said the bishop with all the sincerity of his soul. The discourse was well received. Sister Lillian Zimmermann contracted the Palestine fever, and as a result was confined to her bed during their six days' stay in Jerusalem.

Sister Passman and I certainly felt homesick after the bishop and family departed; in fact, we experienced the most severe attack since leaving the United States. I trust we shall be able to shake it off soon.

HARRY PASSMAN.

Some More Good News

Those planning to attend the young people's convention at Lamoni will be glad to know that arrangements have been made to offer a scoutmasters' training course throughout the convention. The class will meet each day, and each man enrolled will be expected to complete the course as outlined in the ten days. Scoutmaster A. E. Bullard, of Lamoni, will have charge of this course. If you are interested in leading the boys of your branch you can't afford to miss it.

F. M. MCDOWELL.

Central Chicago

On March 18 Elder John Petterson, of the First Chicago Church, preached an interesting sermon to the children, the subject being, "The bread of life." Several loaves of bread were on display, all looking very much alike, but on being cut some contained such things as a ball, deck of cards, etc. These represented the frivolities of life that are of no real value. One contained the Bible, the bread of life representing the real spiritual food that helps us in this world and hereafter.

It was certainly an impressive service to all present and many thoughts were indelibly impressed on the minds of the children. The service was interspersed with appropriate songs by the children. This was a new departure among us here but we feel it was profitable.

On March 25, H. P. W. Keir preached a practical and instructive sermon, using as a text Matthew 11:28-30. He showed very clearly that there is no spiritual rest without meekness and humility and that there are set laws that govern and control in nature and that as surely as these laws are broken we suffer, so in the spiritual realm there are similar laws and that breaking them brings similar results, that in God's plan there is nothing left to chance but that happiness, faith, peace, are all results of our attitude toward these laws—not by accident.

April 1 being Easter and sacrament service, a short Easter program was given during the Sunday school hour followed by the sacrament service. At 7.30 the choir rendered a splendid cantata.

On April 8, Patriarch F. G. Pitt preached to us for perhaps the last time for the present as we understand he and his wife are to go to Kirtland to labor in the near future. On this date also Central Chicago Choir gave their Easter cantata at the First Chicago Branch at 11 a. m. and in the evening the First Chicago gave their cantata at our church. Everybody enjoyed this interchange of choirs and also the sociability this entailed.

A meeting of district officers was held here April 13 and 14 to discuss plans for the furtherance of the work in this district for the coming year. Many good thoughts were brought and discussed.

On April 15, A. Max Carmichael, general superintendent of the Sunday School, was with us and as usual stirred up much thought and enthusiasm with his practical suggestions for interesting and helping Sunday school pupils. Oliver McDowell was with us at this time also. At the eleven o'clock service Lonzo Jones, of Graceland College, preached an impressive sermon on the need of our living near to God.

It does indeed seem as though we have had a feast of good things recently which encourages us to strive more diligently and earnestly to serve our Master.

Saint Louis, Missouri

The Saints in Saint Louis are rejoicing in the visit of Church Historian W. W. Smith and wife, who came on the 19th. Friday evening, at the Department of Recreation and Expression, Elder Smith gave the principal address, and he and his wife had the principal parts in the reception that followed. They also assisted in the reorganization of this department with the following classes.

1. An adult department, studying the Voice of Warning.
 2. A church history group.
 3. A young people's group studying the Book of Mormon.
 4. A radio group.
 5. Temple Builders etiquette class.
 6. Oriole Girls.
 7. Boy Scout.
 8. Class in dramatic art. This is a new venture, but with the energy and enthusiasm of youth should prove successful.
- The Sunday sermons both morning and evening were by Elder W. W. Smith who spoke on "Revelation, the comparative value of intuition and reason," in the morning.

There are several organized classes in the Saint Louis Sunday school, as that place is practically the home and starting place of this movement in the church. These classes hold meetings about once a week outside the Sunday school hour, study the coming lessons, discuss subjects of interest.

Last Sunday afternoon the adult women's class met at the church at 3.30, served supper and remained to the evening service. This is a large class of long standing composed largely of the grandmothers. Many of its members started in early girlhood in this Sunday school and have over fifty years of Sunday school experience, yet are ready for every new and good project.

District conference will meet in Saint Louis Sunday, April 28 and 29, with A. Max Carmichael as the principal speaker.

Independence

On Tuesday night, the 24th, the closing concert of the Independence Music Club was given at the Junior High School. This concert was by the artist members of the organization, and was greatly to the credit of those participating. The club is composed largely of members of the church, and it gives opportunity for the development of musical talent which might otherwise lie dormant. Meetings are held monthly, and each active member is expected to take some part in at least one program during the year. In addition to the regular monthly meetings of the club, a series of high grade concerts, to which the general public is invited, is given each year. Several nationally known musicians appeared on this year's concerts. Those participating in this last artist-member concert who are more or less widely known to the readers of the HERALD, are Vera Morgan Thomason, president of the club, Laura Kelley Green, Mildred Redfield Connely, Pauline Etzenhouser, Bertha Burgess, Alice Burgess, Marcine Smith, Lillian Green, Zella Harder, and Florence Koehler.

Because of recent rains, the roads to Far West were in such bad condition up to last Sunday that the trip which had been planned by several of the young people's classes to that historic spot had to be postponed. The date has been set now for the trip to be made on Sunday, May 13. It is hoped that Saints from other places who can will drive over and meet the Independence young folks there at that time.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson returned last week from an extended trip through Illinois and Michigan in the interests of missionary work.

cluded sermons by the following: Stone Church, President F. M. Smith and Apostle Paul M. Hanson; Second Independence, President F. M. McDowell and J. M. Baker; Walnut Park, James F. Keir and Miss Elsie Barnett of the Sanitarium; Liberty Street, Bishop B. R. McGuire and President F. M. McDowell; Enoch Hill, M. H. Siegfried; Englewood, J. A. Becker; Spring Branch, Omer Cato; radio sermon by President F. M. McDowell. At all of the churches the morning sermon was on the theme, "The development of a community center for the athletic, social, and educational development of the young people of Independence."

President Floyd M. McDowell spent a few days recently in Independence, in meetings with the Presidency and Bishopric. As usual, he was kept busy while here. He preached three times on Sunday, and of course boosted the coming Young People's Convention. He returned to Lamoni Monday morning.

Bishop Israel A. Smith made a short trip into Nebraska last week on church business. He returned Saturday.

Apostles Gillen, Curtis, and Edwards spent the week-end in Lamoni, where they visited the class in Religious Education at Graceland.

President G. N. Briggs, of Graceland College, recently spent a few days in Independence.

Bishop A. V. Karlstrom, who lately returned from a mission to the Society Islands, and who has been in the Sanitarium for treatment since his return, is making satisfactory gains.

A mass meeting of the Saints of Independence is to be held in the Stone Church Tuesday, May 1, for the purpose of organizing to raise the funds necessary to complete the purchase of the Swope property, negotiations for which have been carried on for some time. Since this is a matter which has been widely discussed, it is expected that there will be a large attendance at the meeting.

Elder S. A. Burgess was in Saint Louis, Missouri, several days last week.

Elder F. M. Sheehy, who was reported through these columns some two weeks ago as being critically ill, is greatly improved. He is now able to get out and visit with his friends, and is much better than he has been for some time.

The entire third floor of the Sanitarium is now being devoted to mothers and their newborn babies, there being nine there at the present time. Brother and Sister J. Peck have a baby girl, born on the 21st; Brother and Sister C. W. Schofield have a baby girl, born the 23d; and Brother and Sister June A. Short have a baby boy, born the 25th. These are all of Independence.

Monday morning, April 30, Sister Asa S. Cochran, who had been failing in health for several months following an attack of influenza, quietly passed away at the age of seventy-eight years. For some time she had been living with her daughter, Sister Elbert A. Smith, at whose home a short funeral service was held Monday afternoon. The family then went to Lamoni where the public services will be held at the Brick Church Wednesday at 3.30 p. m. with sermon by Bishop Albert Carmichael. Sister Cochran has long been active in the work of the church. Her husband, Elder Asa S. Cochran was for many years a missionary and later served as a member of the Standing High Council.

The people of Independence are being most earnestly reminded this week of the needs of the Sanitarium. For some months a drive has been going on throughout the church in an effort to raise a fund of $10,000 for greatly needed improvements and repairs. The Sanitarium has now been in active service for fourteen years and the floors particularly have shown the wear and must be replaced. Then the rooms need repainting, doors are being widened, and a laundry is urgently needed. Beginning Wednesday morning the Sanitarium Patronesses will systematically visit every church home in Independence and every member will be urged to give an average of at least twenty-five cents. It is a big task to make all of these calls, but they feel assured that the Saints of Independence, who have ready access to the institution for emergency or special treatment, will not lag behind the Saints abroad in their liberality.

Brother Bernard Hurshman, of Walnut Park, while playing baseball last Saturday in a collision with another player broke his jaw. He was taken to the Sanitarium for emergency treatment.

On Tuesday night, April 24, a mass meeting of the two quorums of elders in Independence was held in the Stone Church, for the purpose of setting apart men chosen for some of the presiding offices in these quorums. The meeting was in charge of Elder R. V. Hopkins, pastor, assisted by Presidents Frederick M. and Elbert A. Smith, and Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith. President F. M. Smith talked at some length regarding the purpose of quorum organization and the work of the quorum and its officers. Those set apart by laying on of hands for quorum offices were: E. A. Thomas, counselor to A. K. Dillee, president of the First Quorum of Elders of Independence; E. D. Moore, president of the Second Quorum, and E. E. Willard and W. L. Wehrli, his counselors. A. L. Sanford continues as counselor to A. K. Dillee.

The Temple Lot is being considerably improved this spring. The west end was recently plowed and leveled and the west and north sides are now being sodded. It is gratifying to see the civic pride manifested in this move. We need more of that same spirit to make our city what it should be.

At the latest session of the continued business meeting of the conference in Zion a motion was made to commit the whole proposition before the conference to a committee consisting of the Presidency, the pastor in Zion, and the pastors of the various churches in Zion to work out a basis of departmental representation. This motion was lost. Discussion of the matters before the conference, which have been previously fully reported in these columns, was resumed. Adjournment was had at 10.15 p. m. until next Monday evening at eight o'clock.

Visit the Sanitarium

The week of May 7-11 will be full of activity at the Sanitarium. This will be hospital and baby week throughout the country, and our own institution wants to interest a wide group of our people and the town people as well in the health of the children and our church hospital.

The four days, May 7, 8, 9, and 10, will be especially devoted to babies, and the Sanitarium has made arrangements with the physicians of Independence to examine all children under six years of age free of charge. Mothers are urged to bring their babies for examination at that time. To facilitate the work, those living in the first ward are asked to come Monday, second ward Tuesday, Third ward Wednesday, and the fourth ward Thursday. The hours for examination will be from 10 a. m. till noon, and from 2 till 4 p. m. each day.

Thursday afternoon will be Independence Day. The Patronesses will act as a reception committee and the Laurel Club will serve refreshments in the dining room at the Sanitarium. At 2.30 p. m. there will be a program of music and speaking. The speakers will be Mayor Capelle, Ex-Mayor Ott, the Reverend J. E. Wolfe, and Bishop B. R. McGuire. Friday afternoon's program will be in charge of the Young Mother's Club. At 2.30 p. m. there will be a lecture by Doctor Shore, a baby specialist from Kansas City. The Reverend Lawrence Proctor will be a speaker on this same program. All the people of Independence are invited to these programs.

Blue Pencil Notes

Fair Singer: I am only singing to kill time.
 Unfair Cynic: Yes, yes, but why mutilate the dead?

This philosophy of giving the other fellow "what's coming to him" is responsible for a great deal of our trouble. If God gave us all what might justly be coming to us we would be in — more trouble than we are in now.

"I would like to feel now and for future time, so long as I may be permitted to live, that when I shall finally depart hence, I shall leave a band of men and women associated together in a cause that we have held to be so sacred and for which so many have sacrificed so much, who will not allow internal dissensions to spoil the wonderful work that has been done since the angel brought the gospel message to earth."—President Joseph Smith at conference of 1909.

The preacher who rides a hobby is somewhat like a runaway auto on a down grade—those who are not going in the same direction at the same rate of speed are likely to experience a great deal of annoyance, if not real trouble.

"Three may keep a secret if two of them are dead."—Poor Richard.

"Love and Death once ceased their strife
 At the Tavern of Man's Life.
 Called for wine, and threw—alas!
 Each his quiver on the grass.
 When the bout was o'er they found
 Mingled arrows strewed the ground.
 Hastily they gathered then
 Each the loves and lives of men.
 Ah, the fateful dawn deceived!
 Mingled arrows each one sheaved:
 Death's dread armory was stored
 With the shafts he most abhorred:
 Love's light quiver groaned beneath
 Venom-headed darts of Death.
 Thus it was they wrought our woe
 At the Tavern long ago.
 Tell me, do our masters know,
 Loosing blindly as they fly,
 Old men love while young men die?"

—Kipling.

We still retain some of the crude cruelties of barbarism; but we have refined them and made them more terrible. Centuries ago when a poor unfortunate offended the emperor he was very quickly and expeditiously taken out and knocked on the head or perhaps knocked loose from his head, and his sufferings were soon over. The matter was quickly and sometimes very neatly attended to. Now, however, we sentence a man and give him time to think about it. What a terrible thing for a man to know that he is to be hanged and that the precise month, day, and hour have been determined and that there are perhaps several months intervening. One type of man, it is true, may sleep soundly, even the last night before his execution, and arise in the morning to eat a hearty breakfast of fried chicken, strawberry shortcake, and other delicacies, and go to the scaffold with a smile. Such a creature was never intended for the scaffold. He was intended for the slaughter house. A real man, a human being, endowed with the wonderful yet terrible gift of imagination, does not die on the scaffold once, he dies a thousand times. Every hour, every moment is an execution.

We may still have need to read Victor Hugo's, The Last Days of a Condemned Man. This remarkable booklet begins:

"Condemned to death!

"These five weeks have I dwelt with this idea: always alone with it, always frozen by its presence; always bent under its weight.

"Formerly (for it seems to me rather years than weeks since I was free) I was a being like any other; every day, every hour, every minute had its idea. My mind, youthful and rich, was full of fancies, which it developed successively, without order or aim, but weaving inexhaustible arabesques on the poor and coarse web of life. Sometimes it was of youthful beauties, sometimes of unbounded possessions—then of battles gained—next of theaters full of sound and light—and then again the young beauties and shadowy walks at night beneath spreading chestnut trees. There was a perpetual revel in my imagination: I might think on what I chose—I was free.

"But now—I am a captive!—bodily in irons in a dungeon, and mentally imprisoned in one idea—one horrible, one hideous, one unconquerable idea! I have only one thought—one conviction—one certitude:

"Condemned to death!

"Whatever I do, that frightful thought is always here, like a specter, beside me—solitary and jealous, banishing all else, haunting me for ever, and shaking me with its two icy hands whenever I wish to turn my head away or to close my eyes. It glides into all forms in which my mind seeks to shun it; mixes itself like a horrible chant, with all the words which are addressed to me; presses against me even to the odious gratings of my prison. It haunts me while awake—spies on my convulsive slumber—and reappears, a vivid incubus, in my dreams!"

Thus the tortures of this man work day by day, one moment hoping for pardon, the next realizing the inevitability of the guillotine, until his diary ends just a few moments before the fatal hour, with this entry:

"Who knows but that I shall escape from it? That I shall be saved? If my pardon—It is impossible that they will not pardon me! Hark! I hear some one coming upstairs!"

The footsteps were those of the executioner. The hour had come; but it was merciful by comparison with the many hours that had preceded it.

Nonresident Members

*Their case rests with the district officers.
But how can they best be reached?*

Some time ago the Presidency wrote to all district presidents, calling their attention to the large number of names now carried on what is called the "Nonresident list" in nearly all districts, suggesting the great necessity of reaching such members who are not resident in any branch in the district, that they may be ministered to through personal visits or by correspondence. Some interesting letters have been received in reply to this letter. We quote below extracts from some of them:

From Elder E. A. Davis, president of the Eastern Iowa District:

The district president corresponds with and visits these members as far as time permits; one counselor to the president visits, and the other corresponds with or writes letters to these members at regular intervals. By this plan we hope to reach all of these members. In addition to the above, some of the local priesthood have volunteered service in visiting this class. Opportunity for missionary work is thus presented, but no missionaries are available except local ministry.

From Elder E. K. Evans, president of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District:

The local priesthood in one branch help considerably in this line of work. To a limited extent I have tried to get others to do some such work, but there are few capable of presenting the work properly in a new place. Quite a number of them could do very well to simply visit and talk with these nonresident people, but there is an inclination to think if they go they must preach.

I have contemplated the idea of interesting a volunteer army of letter writers to whom I could assign certain nonresident members to whom they could write at regular intervals. To sort these out right, the age of each such member should be had so that a person of similar age might be selected to write them. I have not, however, very much hope in the constancy of many who might thus volunteer. If this fails, I may get a font of typewriter type and set up a circular letter occasionally, which I could print in the office and mail to them—but I do not think much of circular letters. They lack the personal touch. The personal visit to them is outside the question in this district, which covers so much territory.

From Elder J. O. Dutton, president of the Southern Wisconsin District:

I make it my special business to visit these scattered members, and I am glad to report that many times we find them alive in the work. Where they have the church papers and read them they are sometimes ahead of the members in branches where they have so much doing that they do not get much time to read. I assure you my heart has many times been made glad to visit some of the isolated ones and find them so much alive in the work.

Independence Campaign for Much Needed Community Center

On the back page of this HERALD we are reprinting a circular gotten out by the committee that is now conducting a campaign to raise $25,000 toward the purchase of a twenty-acre property to be used as a community center in Independence. The effort on the part of the Independence Saints to raise such a considerable sum is of much more than local importance. The property will be an asset of the general church; it will likely grow and be available as a going institution for the benefit of those coming to Independence years hence as well as to those now here; and certainly it is an important part of our program of developing an environment in Independence that will approach the ideal of Zion.

The initial gift of $30,000 for this property was made by Bishop Zimmermann and family of Philadelphia, and the Independence Saints are most appreciative of this generosity. They have thoroughly organized their forces, and this week every church family in Independence will be visited and urged to contribute to the needed fund. Other friends throughout the church have offered to help, and we have no doubt of the campaign's success, knowing as we do our people's willingness to assist in building up Zion.

If you feel the urge of helping, too, Bishop J. A. Becker, Independence, Missouri, is treasurer.

Mothers' Day

There are two Sundays of importance at the very opening of May. The first Sunday, May 6, is set apart for the young people of our church while the second Sunday, May 13, is set apart throughout the Nation as Mothers' Day.

We may honor her by wearing a flower in her memory; but we may honor her much more by doing something for her, letting her hear from us, seeing that she has flowers, doing something for her particular comfort and pleasure.

One of the things we may use has already been advertised in the HERALD. A small booklet neatly bound and dedicated to mother has been prepared at the Herald Publishing House and is now ready for distribution. Blank spaces are left for our personal dedication to our own particular mother and on the opposite page for her photograph.

Our mothers have done so much for us that we never can fully repay the debt. She went down first into the valley of the shadow of death in order that we might walk upon the earth. And then she has continued to cherish us close to her heart. As one little girl expressed it, "We should love her because she first loved us." She not only loves us back but she loved us before we knew how to appreciate or love her.

She has spent many weary nights with us when we were ill or otherwise restless. She has made our day her day and has made her pleasure secondary to our safe keeping and happiness during the days of our weakness when we needed her most. She has seen that we were fed and clothed and sheltered.

But more than that, she has been our first teacher and has established our habits and attitudes long before any public-school teacher has had access to our lives. She has laid the basis of our character even before we entered the beginner grade at Sunday school and has continued that teaching in our later years.

It is because of her that many of us are to-day members of the church of Jesus Christ and sons and daughters of God. It is because of her teaching and the ideals of her life and the ideals set by her companion, our father, that have held us safe in the hour of temptation. Not content with the care of our bodies, she has done much to give us our moral and spiritual concepts and to establish our habits of life.

And she has loved us whether we have fallen as a babe or have failed in adolescence. Even when we have succeeded and exalted ourselves in our pride, she has still loved us.

Much has been said of the mother love for the wayward son and daughter, but much more might be said of the mother's love for the son and daughter who do not know they have failed and yet have failed in their self-conceit and failure to appreciate the value of the solid virtues and love of mother.

If the past year has shown our failure, if during the past year we have felt we were better or finer than our parents, now is the time for repentance. Now is the time for a meager expression of the great love we should have for her, to match her love for us.

After all, it is in the love of good mothers that we are brought by our next step next to the love of God and are best able to understand what the love of God means.

The Status in the Departments

A very few of our readers have been disturbed by the action taken at the recent Sunday school and Religio Convention, even though the matters had been discussed previously in the HERALD and had been specifically announced by T. W. Williams, both in the Autumn Leaves and in the HERALD and also by A. Max Carmichael for the Sunday school in both of these periodicals. The subject was also discussed editorially. (Autumn Leaves, August and September, 1922; SAINTS' HERALD, August 2, 9, 30; 1923, pp. 717, 747, 824; daily HERALD and weekly, October 4 and 11.)

Shortly after the conference was over, A. Max Carmichael as superintendent of the Department of Religious Education gave a review of the different forms our organizations have already taken, and also suggested what he considered a more ideal form. But he did not suggest or recommend this form Number Five for immediate adoption any place. The forms there published were not a statement of the action of the convention. The action taken by the general convention did not directly affect the local Sunday schools or other local organizations.

The principal question is not one of form at all, but it is the problem of lesson content and methods. Teacher training, the value and even the necessity of trained teachers, the necessity of trained officers, the training of the teachers and officers, but above all else the content of our teaching and the actual application of teaching methods to a right presentation, the reaching of the class members, is far more important than is any outward form.

There is an opportunity for us to consider a closer working together, a closer cooperation in the work of the church. To do this thoroughly will take men of broad vision. It will take, in fact, a converted people.

But we must remember that the forms will not save us; nor will pedagogy alone save us, though right teaching is more important than either buildings or form of organization. The present value of the forms is to set before us an ideal, and that ideal is cooperation.

The Right to Strike and Injunction

The objection of the labor union to the use of the injunction is not as clearly understood as it should be. Every time there is a strike it is made to appear that it is in some way in and of itself illegal. It is quite true that society will soon have to protect itself and is endeavoring now to do so, as far as it affects public and quasi-public corporations, since the suffering of society at large is too great to permit of the industry being discontinued. But if this is to be done, there must be adequate provision for the producers, the men who do the work, who carry on these industries.

Labor has insisted upon the right to strike as a matter of self-protection. Much can be said which has not been said in defense of that view. The third party, however, the public or society, has been too long ignored by both sides.

But when there is a strike we have too often the spectacle of a sweeping injunction so wide that it should defeat its own purpose, as being at times so manifestly unfair. A recent instance arose during the strike last year when an injunction was issued so sweeping as to prohibit all possible acts and to leave no freedom of movement.

But when it comes to the enjoining of criminal acts, many people would think there could be no possible objection. There is no objection to the preventing of criminal acts and to the right administration of the law, but the law provides the method of dealing with criminal acts, namely, a trial in the criminal courts including the right of trial by jury. When criminal acts are prohibited or enjoined, it is at once a reflection, as though they were the purpose of the labor union. But in the second place it attempts to substitute the arbitrary ruling of a judge for a trial of the facts by jury.

For example the American Federation of Labor has issued a statement that in Milwaukee in 1906 some 250 members were arrested at various times charged with misdemeanors or more serious crimes, but not a single conviction was secured.

On the other hand, those who have followed the situation closely know that strike breakers and armed guards frequently do violate the law and create a disturbance to justify their continuance in service. It is stated in this case that 37 of these strike breakers were convicted and served sentences of from six months to seven years.

But later in the strike a further injunction was issued, and under its provision six or seven of the strikers were punished or imprisoned for contempt of court. It is suggested that if the two hundred and fifty had been tried in like arbitrary manner they would also have been found, most of them, guilty of contempt and sentenced to be fined or serve terms of imprisonment.

The above sets forth in part labor's objection to the injunction. But it does not solve the whole question, because to do that there would be required a public opinion, which will convict strikers when guilty. There is coming to be a somewhat settled opinion that the courts, or some courts, are inclined to lean to the side of the employers, but on the other hand the employers and many public men question if a jury trial will convict, even in the face of clear proof.

The objection of the laboring men against injunctions seems to be primarily well taken. But if society is to uphold this objection they will have to express a greater willingness to convict of criminal acts when the evidence justifies.

The Bible in Public Schools

We are informed that Bible reading is obligatory in six States, Alabama, Georgia, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Tennessee. In Pennsylvania at least ten verses shall be read without comment each and every school day. Six other States specifically permit Bible reading in their schools, and court decisions in six States are favorable to Bible reading.

In only three States have the courts definitely ruled against the practice. In six States, mostly in the mountain region, Bible reading is not in fact practiced in accordance with the recognized construction of the school law. In the remaining twenty States no action has been taken either to permit or exclude the Bible from the schools, according to Religious Education, the journal of the Religious Education Association.

Comment upon Bible reading is forbidden; still many beautiful stories and lessons might be presented from the Scriptures in nearly all of the States without infringing upon the rights of any citizen.

The Anti-Saloon League of New York reports that the continued attack made upon its superintendent, William H. Anderson, and upon the league itself is reacting strongly in favor of dry enforcement. That is one of the reactions that is not adequately considered by those who favor the return of the saloon or at least the immediate weakening of prohibition laws.

Immortality

Radio sermon delivered by President Elbert A. Smith at Independence, Missouri, Sunday, April 15, 1923.

The Psalmist declares:

What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him? Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet.—Psalms 8: 4-6.

While Shakespeare makes Hamlet to say:

What a piece of work is a man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god!"

Is this wondrous creature wholly material? Or is he also spiritual? Is he, as some teach, a mere "cosmic accident," interesting, but only an accident, without rational cause or purpose and of brief existence? Does he spring from nothing and at death pass to eternal oblivion?

Three Great Ideas of Christianity

There are three great ideas underlying the Christian religion: First, that of a personal God; second, the immortality of the soul; third, free agency, or freedom of the will.

The first presents a rational and loving creator and administrator of the universe; a person with whom man can establish relationships and maintain communion. The second assures time to develop these relationships and grow in this communion; also to develop those soul aspirations and remarkable endowments mentioned by the Psalmist and by the Bard of Avon. The third assures every man a chance sometime, somewhere, to make a considered and free choice between good and evil—to be the "captain of his own soul"—it is involved in every call to repentance and in every effort to learn and obey truth.

Materialism negates these doctrines, all and severally; but all three are essential to the Christian religion and equally vital and essential to any hopeful or wholesome outlook upon life. Some weeks ago I spoke to you on the subject of a personal God; to-day I wish to take up the second of the three doctrines named, that of "Immortality." I will use for my text words from Second Timothy one and ten: "Our Savior, Jesus Christ, who hath brought life and immortality to light."

Let us consider these two questions: What significance has immortality for man, individually and socially? How did Jesus bring it to light?

What Significance Has Immortality for Man?

Most things are perceived by contrast. The evergreen upon the mountain side stands forth vividly against the snow. The leaf is outlined by the shadow. So the image of truth is seen most clearly against the dark shadows of error—which is darkness or absence of light.

The absence of belief in immortality leaves only the creed of materialism, with annihilation at death. Such a creed leads inevitably to pessimism and despair. That fact was brought most vividly to the attention of the people of Kansas City recently in the debate between Clarence Darrow and Doctor Durant in the Academy of Sciences. Clarence Darrow, noted criminal lawyer, has seen the seamy side of life; and not believing in immortality, life for him has no compensations. During that debate he declared:

Can a person be happy in a madhouse? That is what life is. I take life as it comes, because it is a senseless, fool thing, that must be lived out because I have sense enough to not do such a messy thing as to put a bullet through my head.—Kansas City Star, March 18, 1923.

This is a bald, bold statement of the pessimistic viewpoint of a common man who does not believe in immortality. Philosophic and scientific schools of materialism express themselves in more cultured terms; but theirs is the same viewpoint, that of pessimism and despair. Hæckel, who believed the universe and all to be nothing but a mechanical contrivance coming by accident and having no design, and man himself altogether material, declared that, viewed in the light of eternity, man is "of no more consequence than the fly of a summer day." A fly cannot have responsibility; it is not worth while for a fly to have any philosophy of life or to attempt to observe any moral law. That, however, I will touch upon later.

Huxley wrote:

It flashes over me at all sorts of times with a sort of horror that in 1900 I shall probably know no more of what is going on than I did in 1800. I would sooner be in hell.

The creed of materialism, with annihilation at death has the worst hell of all for the thoughtful man. No wonder Huxley's soul revolted against it. It offers no hope for the individual; it offers no hope for the race. It is true that some have attempted to escape this logical conclusion by adopting an altruistic tone, and have said, "True, we perish forever, but the race continues, and as it goes on accumulates the good of all ages."

This brief and delusive comfort is due to that which Fosdick terms a "short look" ahead, and is dissipated by a "long look" into the future. For it is certain and inevitable that at some time the earth will have become old and burned out, the race will have run its course, and the last man will go to his grave in a world of graves; and if man is mortal, that is the end of the show. If after all the terrific struggle, pain, suffering, and sacrifice of the race, that is to be the end, then like Judas Iscariot, it had been better for us all had we never been born. No wonder that one philosopher, thus believing, wrote:

Considering the immense and protracted sorrows of mankind, it would have been better if the earth had remained like the moon, a mass of slag, idle and without a tenant.

Darwin himself rebelled against such a conclusion, and said:

It is an intolerable thought that man and all other sentient beings are doomed to complete annihilation after such long-continued, slow progress.

The Road That Greece Traveled

For the common man who has lost belief in immortality Darrow stated the pessimistic viewpoint admirably. The natural revulsion from pessimism is to epicureanism. I mean by that, it is inevitable that men will seek relief and respite in sense indulgence, under some form of the philosophy, "Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die." No other philosophy or system of ethics can spring from materialism.

Such was the history of Greece. Hyslop in his work, Science and the Future Life, says:

When skepticism and culture arose, they drove away the gods and the belief in immortality. . . . They gave themselves up to the delirium of terrestrial pleasure, . . . and ended in the debaucheries of epicureanism.—Page 342.

Exactly similar will be the reaction of the masses to-day, if they lose belief in the hereafter. And who can blame them? If in all eternity man has but a moment of conscious life, he had best make the most of sensation in that brief moment. If he shall choose to seek it in drunkenness, or gluttony, or licentiousness, who shall judge him, or even forbid him, because if there are no moral or spiritual values in the universe, one life is as good as another, and each man his own judge.

The Unintentional Confession of a Great Materialist

Hæckel, before referred to, the great apostle of materialism, in his Berlin lectures of 1905 declared that the "three central dogmas of metaphysics, which so many educated people still regard as the most precious treasures of their spiritual life—the belief in a personal God, the immortality of the soul, and the liberty of the will had been discredited by modern research and were no longer to be regarded as true." But then he went on to make this remarkable confession:

As imaginative creations, they retain a certain value in the world of poetry. Here they will . . . still have a high ethical and social value in the education of the young and in the organization of society.

A more striking confession of the impotency and poverty of materialism could scarcely be imagined. Having no ideals of its own, it must still have recourse to truths that it would fain destroy in order to find spiritual values for young people in particular and society in general. Hæckel would deny the truth of those three doctrines and at the same time seek to retain their spiritual values. Why? Because he well knew that without them no admirable society could be developed, and that individually, young people in particular, in process of character development, would have no incentive to or reason for moral growth.

But these doctrines are either true or false; they are no mere poetry. Truth alone saves. These are true and great doctrines.

Immortality Interprets Love, Justice, and Service

Turning now to the image of truth emphasized by the dark shadows we have seen: the doctrine of immortality puts meaning into the universe. It gives the individual as well as the race something to live for and strive for. Let us see:

Love is the greatest emotion in human experience. It is godlike. The doctrine of immortality assures us that love may endure beyond the tomb. Atheism rises in final rebellion against its own creed at the grave of loved ones. Thus Ingersoll, at his brother's funeral, declared that in the hour of death hope sees a shining star, and listening love can catch the rustle of a wing. The loves that we have cherished in life, that have moved us so deeply, that have taken hold so powerfully upon every fiber of our beings, may continue beyond the grave.

Justice is the most noble theme the mind may dwell upon. The doctrine of immortality assures us that in eternity the inequalities and wrongs of this brief life will be righted. Justice in itself is no theme for a soulless clod to think upon; it is a theme for immortals. Man in the very act of thinking on it proclaims his immortality.

Service is the most splendid activity to enlist heart, mind, and body. The doctrine of immortality assures us a perpetuity of service worth every effort and sacrifice in preparation.

These three, love, justice, service, can only be considered in the light of immortality. Immortality alone gives them meaning.

In What Sense Did Jesus Bring Immortality to Light?

In what sense did Jesus bring life and immortality to light? First, we will say, by his influence throughout the ages. The belief in immortality is ancient and almost universal. John Fiske says:

From the earliest and most rudimentary stages . . . the conception of death was not that of an event which puts an end to human individuality, but an event which human individuality survives.—Life Everlasting, p. 36.

Such a belief, almost universal among primitive people, is not inconsistent with the most profound scientific and philosophic thought; witness for instance the defense of the doctrine by James, Lodge, Kelvin, Balfour, and others, or to go farther back in history, the position taken by the great Socrates. Socrates, waiting in his death cell for the moment to come when he should drink the poison hemlock, discussed this question with his associates, and when some of them used the simile of the harp and contended that when the harp is broken the music ceases, he replied to their argument, that man is neither harp nor music, but is the player, and when the harp is broken the player will find another instrument of expression. Plato credits Socrates with the declaration: "Beyond all question the soul is immortal and imperishable and will exist in another world."

But how is all this connected with the thought that Jesus brought life and immortality to light? In this way: Religion has always led up to the doctrine of immortality; and Christ has influenced religion in all ages. The people that I have the pleasure to represent do not believe that the mission of Christ began at his birth or ended at his death. In the first chapter of Genesis it is written, "God said, let us make man in our image." To whom was he speaking when he said, "Let us make man?" Who heard that sublime proposal? Who was to cooperate with God in making man? This question has vexed theologians, but the so-called Inspired Version of the Bible given to the world by Joseph Smith renders the text thus, "And I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning, Let us make man in our image."

Christ has been in partnership with God from the beginning in the work of making man. The gospel was preached to Adam; Christ was with the Israelites crossing the Red Sea, the statement being made:

Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; . . . and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ.—1 Corinthians 10: 1-4.

His Spirit the Witness in All Ages

Jean Paul Richter says:

He being the holiest among the mighty, and the mightiest among the holy, has lifted with his pierced hands empires off their hinges, has turned the stream of centuries out of its channel, and still governs the ages.

He does all this by force of ideas. Wherever you find a great, universal, persistent ideal that is good and true, there you see the influence of Christ. He "lighteneth every man that cometh into the world." In all ages his Spirit has been a most persistent witness to the soul of man that it is immortal.

Secondly, he brought immortality to light through the gospel. If you will read the first two verses of the sixth chapter of Hebrews you will find an enumeration of the six fundamental principles of the gospel of Christ. And one of them is the resurrection of the dead. Christ linked immortality to life through the gospel. He taught man to evaluate his own soul in the light of eternity and to act in the light of eternity. "For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Thirdly, he brought immortality to light at his open sepulcher when he rose from the dead. Here was one who returned from the dead to demonstrate his power over death: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore."

Lastly, he brought immortality to light through his life, and perhaps in that way more vividly than in any other. "He lived like an immortal man." Others discourse about immortal life—he lived it. He lived always in the view of eternity; and he lived always with eternity in view.

The Good Tidings of Great Joy to All People

Briefly to recapitulate, the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is essential to a wholesome and sane outlook upon life and to the orderly and moral development of the individual and society. Jesus brought immortality to light by the pervasive revelation of his spirit in all ages, by specific revelations contained in his written word, by his own life, and by his resurrection from the dead.

He saves us from the hopeless despair and pessimism voiced by Darrow, that makes the world a "madhouse" and life a "senseless, fool thing" that must be lived out. His message brings joy into life, and by comparison we can better appreciate the message of the angel at the time of the first advent:

Fear not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people; for unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord.—Luke 2: 10, 11.

"Always to think the worst, marks the meanest spirit and the basest soul."

What Is There in Religion?

Sermon delivered by Elder Charles R. Hield at the Minneapolis, Minnesota, church, November 19, 1922.

One day Lord Balfour of England, who had left the cares of his political office to go out into the open country to play golf, drove his golf ball into a bunker. Thinking then to have some fun with his little Irish caddy, he asked him for his advice in the selection of the proper club with which to drive the ball out of the bunker. The caddy advised him to use his "lofter." Lord Balfour took the advice of the boy and was able to raise the ball out of its bad position and land it safely upon the "green." Mr. Balfour then turned to the lad and said: "My boy, you certainly are a bright caddy, for were it not for your advice I no doubt would have used another club and not have been so successful in the 'drive.'" The boy looked up at him and replied: "Sh-ure mee Lourd, tuwood be a wounderful combination, a maan with yer skill and mee brains."

So I think it often is in modern life; we often think that our method of living is superior to those around us. The religious man is particularly prone to take this attitude in regard to his own individual religion. I do not wish to be dogmatic this morning, however, but shall merely try to bring to you some of the beauty, some of the happiness, some of the comfort, that I see in the religion of Jesus Christ.

This picture which I will try to paint for you at this time, some might say is the result of a vision, others that it is a dream, but I prefer to believe that it is merely the result of my own past experience, my readings, my imagination, with what spiritual interpretation God may have blessed me with. If I were then to give you a text for this morning's address, I would quote the following from the second verse of the fourth chapter of Micah: "Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the house of the Lord."

This particular mountain which I have in mind is a very famous mountain. It is talked about all over the world, yet few see its beauty. It is like classical music, grand opera, and the great masterpieces of literature, painting, and sculpture—one has to live with it, has to feel its emotions, and perhaps know its history in order to appreciate its true worth. It is a matter of education.

People make long trips to see this massive structure. They have heard tell of its beauty, of its power to stir the human soul, of its control over the hearts and minds of those living in its environment. Great sacrifices are made to make this trip, and some even give up their all in order to see this great peak of which they have heard so much.

Sometimes the Clouds Hide It

Yet alike with the music and the paintings, many are very much disappointed. Some come to the mountain when the clouds hang low over the valley, like the ceiling of a room. Everything seems dark, damp, and gloomy. The great mountain with its brilliant summit is hidden from view, and these people go away saying: "There is no mountain. We have been deceived by the narrations of its beauty. We could see no peak. We were not thrilled by its majesty." They go away and hold this opinion all their lives.

Others come when the clouds have lifted slightly, but yet they hang quite low, so that only the bottom half of the mountain is visible. They too do not remain long generally. They go away and say: "Yes, the mountain is there, but we could see nothing beautiful about it. It appeared to us a mass of gloomy rock. It is not worth living with."

Yet two days later, if you have the patience, or perhaps a week, the clouds lift, and you see the entire mountain in all its beauty and glory. You can see the big dark pines, the stretch of green grass, the patch of rocks, and then the dazzling brilliancy of its summit, as the white purity of its snow glitters in the sunshine. At first you look at it from curiosity, because you have heard so much about this great experience. Then as you see it from a distance you have a desire to see it from different viewpoints, and as you become familiar with its phases of charm, you sense that same feeling of attraction which has made the people of Switzerland love their mountains, which makes them desire to be free to live with their mountain unrestrained by complex governmental systems. Finally we find great joy in just sitting and looking at the mountain, which can be done for hours, all the time enjoying some new attraction.

Or Conceal the Summit

Another day as we look upon our mountain, we notice that the clouds are all gone from the valley, but there remains a small wreath or scarf of white clouds wrapped around the shoulders of the mountain. Those who do not know the outlines of the great peak are unable to distinguish the whiteness of the summit from that of the cloud. They will watch for long periods expecting the summit to float away, under their delusion that it is a shifting summer fancy. Yet those who have had the experience, who have become acquainted with the summit on other days, are able plainly to make out the top; they can imagine the outline of the sides as it goes through the scarf of vapor; they know that it really is the firm, snow-covered rock of the summit and not a fleeting cloud.

In like manner is the church of God a matter of education. It is something that we hear much about, yet it is much like music and painting; it has to be studied to be appreciated. In religion also people go long distances to find the beauty and the comfort which they have heard tell of but have not experienced themselves.

Some however, come to the church of God, or to the mountain, on a cold, damp, and foggy time. The gloom and the clouds hang so low that they cannot see the mountain; they do not know that there is a God, and they go away disappointed; and for the rest of their lives they believe, themselves, and tell others that there is no mountain—no God.

Others come when the clouds have lifted some, but they see only the cold and massive forms of the base. They also go away; they know there is a God, but they see no beauty in his service; they do not obtain that thrill of joy that holds them to the service of God. They find their thrills through other channels.

Then there is the third group who have been patient; they have weathered the cloudy periods; they have had faith that ultimately they might obtain the view of the glory of God, and they have been rewarded by seeing the summit of his greatness on the days when the clouds have lifted. They see his glory; they study his outlines and his laws. As they become familiar with his form, they are able to see through the scarf of clouds that may hang around the shoulders, and know of a surety that it is the gospel of Christ that stands up so firm and solid at the summit, and that it is not merely a fleeting fancy. They know that it will not go away.

What of Religion?

To all comes the question sometime in life: "What is there in religion?" To some this question comes when they are overwhelmed in sorrow; to others when they are discouraged or are out of employment; to another when he is contemplating the beauties of nature, the trees, the flowers, the sky, the wind, or the rain. Another may have the question come to him through the life of a friend, perhaps in the life of a crippled playmate, or in the tender and sacrificing love of a mother; while to still another, the question comes in the lonely hours of the night.

If I could make you see my mountain as I see it, I believe you could answer the question easily. I wish that I could paint for you so that you could see that great peak as the sun gradually set in the west, that you could see it stand out in all its beauty and grandeur in the mellow pink as the darkness settled over the valley. As you stand in the dusk and the growing darkness, and see the extreme beauty of that higher light, you would be filled with awe and reverence. You would have an experience you would never deny and never forget. Or in the morning I wish that you might see from the darkened valley the great streaks of white light as they come slowly into view in the east, see the snow on the summit light up and glisten as the first rays of the sun strike it, see the whole surrounding earth gradually change from darkness to light as the glory of the mountain increases.

The Glory of the Full Vision

How symbolical of the gospel of Zion! We can picture in our thoughts the beauty of the gospel as it was here on earth. Then we can see the beauty of the gospel slowly fade as the night came on. But there has come another day; the sun again shines upon the mountain in these latter days, and its rays of brightness and purity reflect upon all the surrounding area. It changes all our environment to a happy, wholesome place, filled with that mellow light that causes all to be beautiful, causes all nature to give you a thrill of joy as you contemplate it.

Yet that is not all there is in the gospel of Christ. Everywhere you see signs of the mountain. Even on the cloudiest days you know that the mountain is there. As you look up you realize that it is this great massive bulwark that is causing the clouds to stop there instead of sailing on, blown by every wind that blows. You see the green fields that are watered by these same clouds—the growing grain, the fruit, and the rich pastures that nourish their cattle and oxen. You notice the women washing their clothes in the sparkling water as it comes down from that great and brilliant summit; you hear the hum of the great factories that utilize the force of those same waters to turn the wheels of their mills, and to turn their dynamos in the manufacture of electricity to light their homes and to run their railroads. You enjoy the refreshing and life-giving qualities that come from drinking its pure waters; you can picture the small streams as they unite to form a great river upon which great ocean liners are borne, bringing the people of the valley in contact with all the world.

So it is in the gospel of Jesus Christ. We are made to realize that these streams of God's mercy and love are those that give us our daily food, our plentiful harvest, and our sparkling water. We recognize that in these waters we may cleanse ourselves; we may put on clean garments. We notice that our wheels of industry are fed from this the greatest of all resources; that by complying with the laws of the mountain (the laws of God) we are able to harness the streams of His mercy in such a manner that we can have light in our lives, and in our homes, even when the darkest night may fall upon us. We find that as the currents run deeper by the joining of many lives, that we are able by its very volume to carry the message of our mountain to other lands; for the mountain is for all.

As We Climb

As we live with the mountain, we become dominated with a desire for activity, a desire to climb the mountain. The question then comes: "How can we climb this great peak and enjoy the beauty from its summit?"

There are three things that we must observe:

First. We must know that the mountain exists. We must have seen the vision from the valley; must have received that great emotion which the mountain is sure to bring to all who live with it.

Second. We must live with it. Too many come and find merely the cold, dark day—a day when they could not see the mountain, and they go away discouraged. We must have faith to live the gospel until we have mastered the principles. With the mountain we must harden out some of our flabby muscles and wills by climbing some of the lower peaks first, for the trip cannot be made to the top the first day or week. We must realize that the clouds are often to enrich our surroundings; we must breathe the air, drink the water, cleanse ourselves in its purity, and eat of the fruits of the mountain.

Third. We must not make the trip alone. To do so would be disastrous, would cause much wandering, would cause one to go off the path and perhaps be lost, or even perish in the attempt. Always take some one with you who has made the trip before, some one who knows the way, some one you know is honest, pure, strong, who can bear you up in your weaknesses, who can encourage you when you feel the effort too much.

The True Guide

This I believe to be the great mission work of Jesus Christ. We must beware of false guides, for there are many of them who might lead us into the wrong paths, to paths that lead only to a deeper abyss. Jesus Christ is the only true guide. He stands as such by our side, pointing out to us the beauties of the mountain, telling us of the requirements, how we must have faith in him and the mountain, how a life that has not repented of its sins cannot reach the top, how we must be cleansed in the water by baptism by immersion, how we must have hands laid upon us for the confirming of the Holy Ghost, that we might have strength to make the trip, in order that we might be comforted in our times of discouragement; then he tells us of the reward we will have at the end of the course, of the eternal judgment that will be made at the summit when we have reached it.

Surely he is the guide that we want. He ever stands ready to help us, showing us by his strength of character, mind, and body that he will help us when we falter, that he will find us nourishment when we become weak. He has been to the summit and knows the glories at its top.

I love to read the Bible for the purpose of studying the lives of the different characters there, trying to find men who show by their lives that they have taken this trip with Christ. I have always thought if I could find such a man, he too should radiate the beauty of my mountain in his life, even under the darkest gloom. Such a man and such a picture I believe I can find in the fourth chapter of Philipians in the life of Paul.

Paul in a Roman Prison

We see him as he sits in his dungeon in Rome, imprisoned for being a Christian, not long before he was to be lead outside the city of Rome to be beheaded. You can picture him as he remained in those rude discomforts, writing a letter of cheer to the church at Philippi—writing although securely fastened by a coupling chain to a Roman soldier.

To appreciate the situation of Paul at this time, we must notice the period. It was in the time of the reign of the Cæsars, and it was the most dreadful of the Cæsars—Nero. It was in an age when the Christians were suffering one of their greatest persecutions. Nero took a fiendish delight in committing crime. He murdered his mother, killed his two wives, poisoned his rival, Britannicus, and had his old tutor, Seneca, bled to death. The Christians were forced to live in catacombs, or underground tunnels and rooms beneath the city, in order to escape possible death at the hands of the tyrant. Those who were taken alive were often painted with pitch and turned into living yet burning torches to illuminate Nero's garden parties. Or they were taken to the arena to be offered to starved lions in the presence of a frenzied mob of pleasure-mad people.

We can then better appreciate Paul's position as he spent day after day in that dungeon of the Mamertine prison. How galling, how maddening it must have been to be thus shut up, chained and bound by an enforced companionship to a Roman soldier—a man corrupt, cruel, foul, angry, and no doubt cursing the very fate that had withdrawn him from his pleasures, from his scenes of wild excitement, his lust and wine, cursing Paul by all his pagan gods, and finding in the sufferings of his helpless stranger a hideous sport.

You can see Paul, however—how the beauty of the mountain is still in his mind, and he is able to overcome all these things. You can see his little cold, damp room, with a little straw in one corner for a bed. You can see him as he sits before a rude bench writing to the saints at Philippi. The chain rattles as he moves his hand wearily over the page, the gloom of the prison making it difficult for him to see. He was preaching in that prison to a greater congregation than could ever be gathered in the market place or on Mars Hill. He was preaching to all ages; for take away the books of Saint Paul from the Bible, and how great would be our loss. So he shows us the good that may radiate from a life that has seen the vision of God.

But the Vision Is Still Clear

You can notice the soldier as he sits contemplating his prisoner with great curiosity. He marvels at Paul's cheerfulness, for to him this man seems to have found the secret of happiness. The soldier bends over to see what this is that Paul can be writing, and reads with wonder these words, which are recorded in the fourth chapter of Philippians, starting with the 11th verse:

Not that I speak in respect of want; for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound: everywhere and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.

How I wish that we all could see the glory of the mountain of God as Paul must have seen it!

His cheerfulness in the dungeon attracts others of the servants of Cæsar's household, and they come to him, and listen to his story of the gospel. I can picture them coming in to him with his scanty evening lunch, and stopping to hear him tell them about the saints at Philippi to whom he is writing. He probably tells them of Lydia, the first convert to Christianity in Europe; of the girl possessed with the spirit of divination; of the tumult that was caused when Paul commanded the evil spirits to come out of her, and of how he was cast into prison by the angry magistrates.

Then as Paul tells them how the prison walls fell down, he would burst forth into song again, singing that song which he sang then, which brings back to him the remembrance that God is watching over his servants. As he finishes, I can see that little band of slaves from the house of Cæsar standing with eyes full of tears, look into the face of Paul and say to him: "Give our love to the brothers and sisters at Philippi. Tell them that we have been hearing of them, and that we have joined with you in prayer and praise on their behalf." And so Paul again takes up his pen, after he had closed his letter, after he had said "Amen," and adds another verse to this message: "The brethren which are with me greet you, all the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Cæsar's household"—the 21st and 22d verses of that same chapter.

Surely, brethren, as we read these messages, as we contemplate these great truths, the assurance comes to us that there really is something in religion. We think sometimes that we have a hard time to maintain our religion in the face of the conditions of the world, of the persecution of others on account of our desire to live so that we may see the beauty at the summit of the mountain.

So I hope that I have been able to portray to you the beauty of the gospel of Jesus Christ as I see it; that I have also been able to show you the working of this same gospel in the life of a man. I trust that you may resolve with renewed determination to be active, to be continually strengthening your muscles for greater service. Let us not forget either that Christ is the true guide. He has been to the summit. Let him take you there.

My Mother's Prayer

By J. T. Curtis

I never can forget the day
I heard my mother kindly say,
"You're leaving now my tender care,
Remember, child, your mother's prayer."

Refrain:

Whene'er I think of her so dear
I feel her angel spirit near;
A voice comes floating on the air,
Reminding me of mother's prayer.

I never can forget the voice
That always made my heart rejoice;
Though I have wandered God knows where,
Still I remember mother's prayer.

Though years have gone, I can't forget
Her angel face—I see it yet;
I see her by the old armchair,
My mother bowed in humble prayer.

I never can forget the hour
I felt the Savior's cleansing power;
My sins and guilt he canceled there,
In answer to my mother's prayer.

Ah, praise the Lord for gospel grace,
We'll meet in heaven face to face,
That home in the millennium share,
In answer to my mother's prayer.

PASTORAL

The Successful Pastor---No. 2

By C. Ed. Miller

Objective—to build Christlike character.

Means—activity, perseverance, serenity.

Possibly very few persons will challenge the claims made by the author of Seven Laws of Teaching, that successfully to teach, these seven laws must be observed.

A successful pastor must observe certain laws; he must be possessed of certain attributes to measure up to his position; he cannot get along without them. They must be possessed by leaders in government, business, or religion.

Every movement, worthy of the name, must have an objective. The church has a major objective—to win souls unto Christ that they may come under his influence and build Christlike characters. But we must have minor objectives to reach our major objective. A wise pastor will aim to keep his flock busy doing something commendable. A branch must have activity; and desirable, attainable objectives will lead to activity—if—here is where the successful pastor steps in. He must necessarily lead and direct. What attributes must he be endowed with by nature or assiduously cultivate?

Notice the qualities possessed by Joseph the Martyr, revealed in the letter written to the Saints in Nauvoo while pursued by enemies, recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 109:2-4. "As for the perils which I am called to pass through, they seem but a small thing to me, as the envy and wrath of man have been my common lot all the days of my life . . . it all has become a second nature to me. And I feel like Paul to glory in tribulation." Here are three outstanding qualifications possessed by the man chosen of the Lord to establish the kingdom of heaven in these latter days—perseverance, discouragement-proof, serenity.

What impression does Grant give you when he said: "We shall fight it out along these lines if it takes all summer"? He is going to persevere if it takes all summer; he is not a bit discouraged with past failures; he was camped before Richmond doing nothing (apparently), and that was what called forth the above remark. It was the answer to his mob of critics in high and low places. They were excited; he was serene; and serenity won!

That is a splendid attribute to possess to-day amid the restless, fussy, often senseless "running to and fro" of our modern, hectic life.

The Sphinx doesn't seem to have made much progress, except in decay. Yet it has called out this eloquent tribute: "This immense statue, cut out of the native rock . . . this huge mutilated figure has an astonishing effect; it seems like an eternal specter. The stone phantom seems attentive; one would say that it sees and hears. Its great ear seems to collect the sounds of the past; its eyes, directed to the east, gaze as it were into the future. In this figure, half statue, half mountain, we see a wonderful majesty, a great serenity, and even a sort of sweetness of expression."

When was Christ ever anything else but serene, even in the most trying circumstances? A great storm had come. The disciples were excited and afraid; the Master was asleep; they awakened him; his serenity smoothed out the mountain high waves and they became calm. Of course, that is what serenity is for!

Who ever heard of a great leader lacking in perseverance? No quitter ever made a successful pastor.

Returning last year from the reunion in a Ford truck, the pipe connecting the exhaust with the muffler slipped off. We didn't need to sound our horn, everybody a block ahead knew we were coming! I have had a greater appreciation of a silent, purring car ever since. A Hyatt roller-bearing pastor, capable of taking thrusts from any angle and still working smoothly, persistently, is what I consider splendid qualifications for a leader of God's people.

Our Loveliest

By James E. Yates

In a stern old world where men grow hard,
Where calloused souls increase,
How sweet the touch of a tender word
With love, and truth, and peace.

In a stern old world where foolish hearts
Lead folks to hide the best,
And smother passion's loveliest
Beneath a covered breast;

How wonderful the happy words,
(And yet how really rare)
That rend apart false coverings
To lay our choice loves bare.

In a stern old world where foolish hearts
Add to folly oft and again,
May we bare our passions loveliest
And pour it out for men.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Great Canadian Women

There are many discussions and making of lists of the ten greatest books or the ten or twelve greatest men and women, and votes taken to determine such arbitrary classifications. Still it is of interest to note that in a recent list prepared by the Border Cities Star, of Windsor, Ontario, is brought out the fact surprising to some readers that among the twelve greatest women of Canada are to be named Mary Pickford; Madam Albani, prima donna; Nellie McClung, a novelist and writer for the women's movement; Agnes Laut, journalist and author; and Margaret Anglin, actress. Included in many of the lists was the name of Miss Agnes McPhail, Canada's only woman member of Parliament at Ottawa, according to the Star and the Literary Digest. Miss McPhail is again referred to in the Literary Digest as an eminent Canadian woman who submitted a list of types instead of individuals. Miss McPhail, as we have previously stated, is a niece of Sister Margaret Macgregor, and herself a member of the church.

America and the World Liquor Problem

A review of a recent work on the international outlook and its relation to prohibition enforcement in the United States.

There has recently come to our desk a book published by the American Issue Press, and written by Ernest H. Cherrington, on the subject of the world movement against alcoholism. The book is a small one and takes up the fact that this is the new age on international cooperation. Prior to 1600, government was largely absolutism. From then to 1775, wars, treaties, and international conventions were mostly concerned with royal families under autocratic forms. But during the latter part popular government was seen as a tendency. There followed a period of individualism and nationalism, but now we are entering upon what should be the age of international cooperation, as the nations of the world are so closely interrelated.

As to the liquor traffic, Lloyd George is well quoted to the effect that England was face to face with three great enemies during the war: Germany, Austria, and drink, but the greatest of these enemies was drink.

Next is taken up the evolution of prohibition in America very briefly, and the enforcement of the constitutional amendment which, after all, is an international problem, as it involves international boundaries and the high seas. The international aspects must be considered, as the United States Government cannot extend its authority beyond its boundary, and its boundaries are too extensive to be effectively and continuously patrolled. The liquor interests are bringing a pressure to bear on small countries like Iceland, Norway, and Finland, such economic pressure being brought to bear by such countries as France, Spain, Portugal, and Italy. That raises the question, How far is it the concern of the United States Government, as it is international in scope? The Government has upheld small nations in their adoption of the fundamentals of the American Constitution. Why should they not in like manner support small nations with respect to new articles in that great charter?

The liquor question as well as the drug problem is the result of international or world organization. We are confronted with a world liquor traffic. To meet it requires an international prohibition organization. The purpose of this world liquor traffic is to prevent the spread of prohibition through the world and also to secure the repeal or nullification of prohibition in the United States. To carry on such a merciless campaign, a million francs were appropriated last fall. Before prohibition was adopted, the opposition was principally from the state and national organizations, but today the opposition to the prohibition amendment is the result of a world-wide association of pro-liquor forces.

In the sixth chapter the direct question, Is world temperance activity not undue interference with the domestic affairs of other countries? is asked, and the assertion is made that it is not. The United States Government entered Central America to stamp out yellow fever, yet the liquor traffic is doing more damage than is yellow fever. The Christian churches of America are active in foreign missionary efforts throughout the Orient, Africa, and South America. To criticize the sending of prohibition workers would be as reasonable as to object to the sending of foreign Christian missionaries, for there exists a need that the truth about prohibition be sent to the other countries of the world.

Then comes the economic phases of the problem. In early days, labor might continue to work while under the influence of liquor, and muddle through with the simple tools of a shovel and a wheelbarrow. But to-day no man with muddled brains should attempt to operate one of the great electric unloading machines, nor even if he is an habitual user of alcohol. The work of to-day, the finely adjusted and great machinery of the day, requires a clear and active brain. This is true in coal mining, with the use of electric mining machines, in the manufacturing of iron and steel as well as in common labor. It enters practically every field of industry to-day.

With all of the productive devices of to-day adopted for safety, practically all phases of manufacturing in the United States will testify that none have proven so effective as the prohibition of beverage liquor traffic. The driving of an old-time mule and wagon was possible by a man who habitually used liquor, but such is not the case with the great automobile trucks of to-day. Such cannot be trusted to drivers who use drink.

A reason for prohibition in America, especially, is because of the highly organized character of industry, also the great use of automobiles; and statistics show that with one sixteenth of the earth the United States has about 10,000,000 automobiles against 2,000,000 for the rest of the world. Yet the very reasons for requiring prohibition for America will require a like provision for other civilized nations, especially if they are to compete.

Finally, now is the psychological time to strike. The adjustment following the World War is now taking place, reorganization and reconstruction through all the nations of the earth. The world liquor traffic is making a decided effort to establish itself, to become a factor in government revenue, disregarding the tremendous individual or personal loss far exceeding the amount of the tax. This pushing of the sale of liquor is even occurring in the Orient, where for long centuries total abstinence has been the practice. Steps should be taken to prevent their securing a like foothold there. Therefore, now is the time. What the nations of the world need now is knowledge and the practical demonstration that will help them to stand upon their own feet and solve their own problems. This is much more necessary than charity of food, clothing, and money. To help them, they should have the benefit of the experience of America with these struggles. Temperance reform from the first has been missionary in character, and altruistic; that is, to help the other man.

This presents especially America's opportunity to help the world to a firm foundation, and that which will help more than anything else is the exclusion or prohibition of the sale of such injurious drugs as alcoholic beverages.

Child Labor in the United States

The United States Government has completed recently a survey on child labor under sixteen years of age. It would appear that over one million children 10 to 15 years of age are engaged in gainful occupation, 60 per cent of these being engaged in agriculture, the second largest number in manufacturing and mechanical industries. Of children 10 to 13 years of age, 378,000 are gainfully employed, 87 per cent of them in agriculture, 8 per cent in trade or professional service.

The largest percentage of children work in the southeastern States, in Mississippi, Alabama, and South Carolina, 24 to 26 per cent; Georgia 21 per cent. On the Pacific Coast the average is 3 per cent. On the other hand, if agriculture be eliminated the proportion is much larger for the northeastern and Atlantic States and slightly larger for the eastern North Central States, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin.

The number as reported would seem at first glance to indicate a decrease from 1910, but this is principally because the 1910 census was taken in April and the 1920 census the first of January, at which time a much smaller number of children were engaged in agriculture. Still there would seem to be a decrease in most nonagricultural pursuits, the result of State laws and the effect indirectly no doubt of the two Federal child labor laws.

There is an increase in clerical occupations amounting to perhaps 1 per cent, as this was 7.6 per cent in 1920. During this decade Federal regulation was in effect for the first time. The first law was enacted September 1, 1916, and became effective one year later, but this law was declared unconstitutional June 3, 1918. A second law passed February, 1919, was declared unconstitutional May 15, 1922, but was in effect at the time of the 1920 census.

The number of States fixing a maximum working day of 8 hours for children under 16 had increased from 7 to 28. The minimum ages were strengthened in about half the States, either by raising the age or increasing the number of prohibited occupations. At the same time the compulsory education laws were generally raised, so that fewer children could leave school to go to work. There is quite a general decrease in the number of children between 14 and 16 engaged in mining industries. The same is true for the same ages in manufacturing and mechanical pursuits, as only one State shows an increase.

Two States, Ohio and Montana, place 16 as a minimum age for children in factories and stores. A majority of the States have placed it at 14 years of age.

As to educational standards, 11 States require the eighth grade or common school course as a minimum. These States are scattered from Washington and Oregon to New York and Vermont. Twenty States require physical examination of all children going to work. Three States place a minimum of 18 years for boys to go to work in the mines. Eighteen States require no physical examination.

The 8-hour day appears to be in effect in over 30 States. Only in Missouri and Georgia is there no regulation, while 48 hours a week for children under 16 in factories and stores appears to be the usual provision in the majority of the States. One State, Virginia, places 44 hours as the maxi-imum number of hours. Night work is prohibited in over half the States in factories and stores, but 5 States have no prohibition.

On the other hand, very few States have any specific provision with regard to street trade laws as applying to boys. Only 7 States require a permit or badge, but the majority do not. Compulsory school attendance to 18 is in effect in 6 States, while 16 years appears to represent the average condition, or a little over half the States and area of the United States and more than half the population.

Compulsory part time school attendance laws requiring both attendance and establishment of part time schools making them compulsory are in effect in 18 States, while on the other hand 22 States have no compulsory provision.

The above synopsis gives a cross section of the present status and shows that much work yet remains to be done.

Statistics of the Utah Church

Expenditures: Stake and ward purposes, returned from tithes to stakes and wards for maintenance and operation, $928,859; expended for maintenance and operation of church school, $771,490; for construction, maintenance, and operation of temples, $168,371; for charities, $273,657; for missions, $613,461; total, $2,757,838; special charities, fast offering, relief society, etc., $597,295.

In the matter of church growth the record showed 19,703 children blessed and entered on the church records in the stakes and missions, 14,449 children baptized, and 6,376 converts baptized. There are 87 stakes, 863 wards, 24 independent branches, and 773 branches in the missions.

The social statistics showed a birth rate of 36 per 1,000, a marriage rate of 14 per 1,000, and a death rate of 8.3 per 1,000. There are 155,606 persons in the church who are married, and of this number 243 were divorced in 1922.

Mission Work

The missionary statistics show 1,775 persons on foreign missions, 2,252 home missionaries, a total of 4,327. There were distributed 286,702 copies of the Book of Mormon and other church books, 6,601,132 gospel tracts, while 153,437 gospel meetings were held in the stakes and missions.

There were 43,207 persons recommended to the temples during the year and 768,546 ordinances performed in the temples for the living and dead.—Salt Lake Tribune.

Kansas City, Kansas, has the largest municipally owned electric plant in the United States and supplies current to homes at an average of 4¼ cents per kilowatt, showing a profit of more than $80,000 over all cost of operation, wages, depreciation, bonds, and sinking funds.

The Anti-Saloon League of Missouri about the first of April elected Reverend H. S. Post as superintendent in the place of Doctor W. C. Shupp who recently resigned. Doctor Post, who has been assistant superintendent in Illinois, is a member of the Congregational ministry.

A week-day school of religion is now well established in Salina, Kansas. Out of a possible 2,417 there are 2,167 pupils who come one day each week from the public schools for religious instruction. The plan has been tried in three other States in that vicinity as well as other points in Kansas. It makes the Bible a textbook in religion, religion of the heart, since the service is not confined to a formal, brief reading.

What Everyone Should Know About Cancer

Predisposed Conditions

When we state that we do not know the cause of cancer, we mean that we do not yet know just what causes a small cell or group of cells to change their nature and take on the extraordinary power of growth which is the fundamental characteristic of this disease. But nevertheless a great deal is known about the circumstances concerning these new growths, when and where they take place and what conditions seem to favor the process. In other words, even though we do not know the cause of cancer, we do know a great deal about how it occurs and what is apt to precede it. For instance, cancer frequently begins in moles or pigmented warts which are irritated by the clothes or are made to bleed and are kept sore by repeated injury of any sort. Such pigmented warts and moles are perfectly harmless at first, and become dangerous only after they have been irritated in some way for a long time, especially if the person is of the cancer age; that is, above 45. It is wise, therefore, to have such moles or warts removed if located so that they are liable to be rubbed or injured. It has also been found that cancer frequently develops in the scar of an old burn, or in places where there is a chronic ulcer, as on the lip, tongue, or leg, and care should be taken to see that such ulcers are healed as quickly as possible. Ulcers on the tongue and cheek frequently result from a scratch from a poor filling or from the sharp point of a decayed tooth. A dentist should be consulted if such an ulcer does not heal within a few days, in order that the filling may receive proper attention or the point of the tooth be filed off. Smokers should be particularly careful about any sore on the lip or tongue. Such sores are commonly found in persons who use a pipe in such a way that the tongue or lips are chronically irritated by the hot stem, or who hold cigars in such a manner that the hot smoke continually strikes one spot. For this reason cancer of the lip and tongue is very common in men and is almost never seen in women.

All these irritants which have been mentioned do not themselves directly cause cancer; they give cancer a chance to begin. If a man past middle life does not smoke heavily, cares for his teeth, and keeps his mouth clean, he is very much less likely to have cancer than one who does not follow the simple laws of mouth hygiene. Syphilis also predisposes to cancer of the mouth.

Internal cancer in an early stage is very difficult to determine, because tumors, when they first start, cannot be discovered except by accident. For instance, ulcer of the stomach is sometimes a starting point for cancer, since the ulcer may possibly turn into cancer if not cured by proper medical or surgical treatment. So, too, cancer of the lower bowel is frequently preceded by chronic inflammation. Therefore persons who think they have chronic dysentery, ulceration of the bowel, or bleeding piles, should consult a physician to have these ailments properly diagnosed, and thus make sure they are not due to beginning cancer.

Any woman who notices a lump in the breast should at once consult a physician. It is very much better to be told that the lump is harmless and need not be removed than to wait too long, only to find that it has already developed into a cancer.

Early cancers of the womb give evidence of their presence by persistent bleeding, continuing between the periods. The form of cancer of the womb frequently starts in lacerations, following the birth of a child. Such tears should be carefully attended to by the physician at the time when they can be most easily remedied; that is, shortly after delivery.

Fibroid tumors of the womb very rarely turn into cancer but should be under the observation of a competent physician.

Symptoms of Cancer

Unfortunately the very smallest cancers give no symptoms unless they are on the skin or lip or tongue or elsewhere on the surface of the body, in which situations the earliest diagnoses can be made. Cancers the size of a pea or but little larger are often diagnosed and removed by a surgeon with an assured favorable result, if the operation has been properly done. In the stomach and internal organs, however, the cancer does not give rise to symptoms until it is quite large, and it is important, therefore, for anyone who has any disturbance of the stomach or intestines, loss of weight, or anemia, to go at once to a surgeon, because by modern chemical methods and by the use of the X ray, a diagnosis can often be made long before the cancer can be felt or seen.

One of the last symptoms of cancer is pain, which is caused by the growth pressing on the nerves as it spreads out through the tissues. When a cancer gives a great deal of pain, it is usually beyond operation. Bleeding is a common result of cancer of the intestines and of cancer of the womb, and is one of the most important symptoms.

Everyone should know, however, that when a lump appears anywhere on the body, a physician should be seen immediately. The lump may prove to be an abscess or a benign growth, for the early symptoms of cancer are not very different from the symptoms caused by harmless tumors. On the other hand, a mere lump may prove to be a cancer, and then, if it has been discovered early enough, it can be cured. Unfortunately, cancer attacks not only those who are in feeble health, but also, and with equal frequency, those who are strong and healthy and have never suffered from any other disease. For this reason it is especially important that healthy people should consult a physician if any sudden change in their well-being takes place, and particularly if there is any digestive disturbance or disorder of the bowels, for the stomach and intestines are frequent sites of cancer.

There are many kinds of cancer, and each kind acts differently and spreads in its own way through the body. Certain forms which arise in glands, such as the breast, are called carcinoma, and these spread slowly to places where there are small nodules of tissues, called lymph nodes, in which the cancer cells collect, forming these secondary lumps or metastasis, as the physician terms them. The true carcinoma does not often get into the blood vessels, and therefore it remains localized for a very considerable time, so that the surgeon has an opportunity to remove it if the diagnosis is made early.

Another kind of cancer, called by physicians sarcoma, frequently spreads to the blood vessels and consequently is much more difficult to cure, because this spreading takes place very early in the course of the disease, and the cells are swept all over the body, starting new little tumors where they are deposited.

While cancer grows through the very tissues which surround it, it does not have roots, as the advertising "cancer specialists" state. What are called roots are more frequently blood vessels leading from the cancer, or bits of fibrous tissue; thus when a charlatan assures a patient that he takes a cancer out "by the roots," he talks nonsense.

Some cancers grow very slowly. Certain cancers may remain for ten or twenty years without spreading to any extent and without forming secondary growths elsewhere. Others grow very rapidly and are fatal within a few months. Many cancers remain localized for some time before they really start to spread out in the tissues, and if discovered and cut out during the local stage, the patient can be cured. In the following pages some of the principal forms of cancer are considered in fuller detail.

Cancer of the Breast

It is estimated that there are upward of 8,000 deaths in the United States yearly from cancer of the breast, the majority of which are needless and preventable.

This form of cancer more often attacks women over thirty-five, though now and then it is seen in younger women. It is distinctly curable when it is removed early. The chief symptom in the beginning is a lump or thickening anywhere in the breast or a thin discharge from the nipple and dimpling of the skin over the tumor.

No woman who has a lump in her breast, regardless of how small it may be, should fail to go at once to a competent surgeon or physician. It matters not where this lump may be, for cancer may start in any part of the breast or in the nipple itself. A woman should further seek prompt advice on the first appearance of a discharge from the nipple, for, if she waits for the late symptoms—pain, loss of strength and weight, drawing in of the nipple, and increase in size of the lump—the possibility of a successful operation is practically nil.

The early removal of such part of the breast as the surgeon may decide to be wise, is the only safe and curative procedure. A favorable result in these early cases is likely to be a permanent one; delay usually proves fatal. Not all lumps in a woman's breast are cancerous, but only competent surgeons are able to decide on this point. The woman herself never knows. Cancer of the breast is not painful in its early stages, but the early stage is the curative period. A small lump which is not cancerous may change into cancer. Therefore every lump, no matter how small, should be removed. If this were always done a large percentage of cases could be permanently cured.

Here is a typical story of successful treatment, so familiar to the physician but so often concealed from friends and from the public:

A woman discovered a lump near the nipple of her left breast. It was not sore; it was freely movable and no larger than a pea. This woman went at once to a competent surgeon who immediately performed a suitable operation. The microscope showed the lump to be a beginning cancer. There was no cancer tissue to be found elsewhere, and the growth had not at that time gone beyond the little lump itself. This was fifteen years ago, and the woman has remained cured and in all human probability will stay so.

Contrast this story with the following:

A woman consulted a physician for some trouble in the breast. Examination showed a widespread cancer too far advanced to offer any hope of cure. On inquiry the woman admitted that she had noticed a little lump in the breast two years before. Asked why she did not show it to her physician at that time she replied, "I was afraid it might be a cancer."

Early operations are without danger to life.

Delay results in death. Early recognition and early operation often result in permanent cure.

Cancer of the Uterus

In women, the uterus or womb is, next to the stomach, the most frequent site of the disease. In many ways it is the most dreaded form of this disease, for it attacks almost exclusively wives and mothers, at the most useful period of their lives. We are thus doubly impressed with the importance of controlling this type. A further special interest in cancer of the uterus is due to the mental and physical suffering that is attendant upon cancer in this organ on account of its proximity to the bladder and bowel. It also gives rise to the most distressing and offensive discharges. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that the present educational movement for the early recognition of cancer began among those whose lot it was to treat cancer of the womb.

Uterine cancer occurs with greater frequency among women who have had children, so that it is probably true that the injuries and inflammation following childbirth are a causative factor in the disease, but we should not exaggerate this point. The fear of cancer should never keep anyone from motherhood. The evidence we have at present justifies us in recommending that women who have deep tears or pronounced irritation about the neck of the uterus should have these conditions corrected and should be kept under observation during the years between thirty-five and fifty.

The first symptom of cancer of the womb is, in the vast majority of cases, an irregular blood-tinged watery discharge. No pain is present, nor can any lumps be felt at this time. Of course it can be readily understood that this is a symptom that may also be due to many harmless conditions, especially if it occurs before menstruation has ceased. In women who have passed the period of life usually termed the "menopause" or "change of life," such a blood-tinged discharge is more often due to a beginning cancer. Every woman, however, over thirty-five years of age should consult a physician if there appears an irregular bloody discharge such as described. It is particularly important to have such an examination made if the bleeding follows upon taking a douche or after intercourse. Somewhat later the discharge becomes odorous. A rather free odorous discharge, even in the absence of blood, deserves a careful investigation. When, in addition to this, the patient has pain radiating down the legs it is almost always an indication that the cancer has advanced far. Do not wait for pain.

To make a positive diagnosis of cancer of the uterus an internal examination by the physician is necessary. It is the only means of ascertaining the truth. The woman who puts off or shuns such an examination because of a false sense of modesty is taking the most serious risk. Much has already been done to overcome these foolish prejudices, but they are still an important element in preventing the early recognition of this disease.

As in most other forms of cancer the best treatment is the early surgical removal of the organ in which the cancer is located, together with as much surrounding tissue as seems advisable. This is a serious operation and should be done only by those who have made a careful study of the subject and who have the facilities for giving treatment in the proper dosage.

Patients with uterine cancer can be divided into three groups:

1. Those who come at the very beginning of their trouble.
2. Those who delay three or four months before attending to this matter.
3. Those who put off treatment until they experience pain or have a bad discharge for almost a year.

The number of women in the first group can in many cases be permanently cured. Even those in this group who have a return of the disease are usually given several more years of life free from pain or discomfort. In the second group the percentage of women cured is much smaller. In the third group, there are practically no cures and but little temporary relief from suffering and discharge. It largely depends upon the woman herself into which of these three groups her case will fall. If she is on her guard against suspicious symptoms and will not hesitate to undergo one or even several examinations in order that no important matter may be overlooked, then and only then can she have reasonable certainty of cure if afflicted with this disease.

Cancer originating in the skin is called epithelioma. Unlike cancers in general, the majority of these cases occur in men—about one half being located on the face. They most often develop after the age of forty, but may occur much earlier. Like all cancers, epithelioma begins so insidiously that its victim generally finds it impossible to say when he first noticed the little lump or scaling patch that is later found to be cancer. Unfortunately, cancer of the skin is entirely painless, and on this account the patient usually pays no attention to it until it becomes a more or less unsightly object.

Most skin cancers start as small, round, or flat-topped, slightly raised spots, which may increase in size very slowly. Sooner or later, sometimes after several years, there will be a scab covering the little growth or part of it. This scab is usually pulled off by a towel or finger nail, or in some other accidental way which will cause bleeding; then a new scab will form on the sore, which perhaps has meanwhile grown somewhat larger. The new scab may again be knocked or pulled off, and so on, the tumor all the while slowly spreading. Sometimes it heals up entirely at one side while advancing at another. If the growth is located near the eyes, it may damage the lids so as ultimately to affect the sight; if located near the nose—and both these regions are very common locations for epithelioma—the damage done may lead to great deformity, even though the patient later goes to the most skillful physician.

Sometimes the cancer shows a tendency to wild or exuberant growth from the start and forms a raised, reddish, cauliflowerlike tumor, which anyone at all concerned about his appearance will very soon call to a physician's attention. While most cancers of the skin spread very slowly, this is not always the case, for sometimes the spread is very rapid, and these rapidly growing neoplasms are particularly dangerous on account of their tendency to spread to the internal organs. Most epitheliomas remain purely skin troubles, but at least the possibility of a spread to internal organs is always present and is the principal reason for not neglecting them, even if the local damage and the disfigurement are not sufficient.

Little as we know of the causes of cancer in general, one factor stands out prominently in the production of epitheliomas, for in a large proportion of cases we find that there has been some long-continued source of irritation acting on a particular portion of the skin. This irritation may be due to the frequent injury of a mole by means of a razor in shaving, or by pressure from a corset, or it may be the result of constant picking at a little harmless, scaling, or crusted spot on the skin. The treatment of moles by "beauty doctors," or by the use of electricity or caustics—methods which do not assure the complete removal of the deeper parts of the mole—are responsible for some epitheliomas, because

A Sad Condition in Jerusalem

A fight between the Roman Catholics and the Copts in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher at Jerusalem.

The Church of the Holy Sepulcher in Jerusalem is looked upon as the Holy of Holies by many religious creeds, and many religious people have walked hundreds of miles to focus their eyes upon the Tomb of Christ, to kneel before it, and kiss this piece of gray marble that pretends to cover the spot where our Savior was once buried. Oh, what reverence is manifest when these people appear at the threshold of the building, kiss the marble pillars over and over again, while tears of joy run down their sunburned cheeks. This deep reverence is only exhibited by laity; while priest and Levite pass the splendid portals of this unique building uninspired by its historical past.

On Palm Sunday the Copts, who are a Christian sect from the valley of the Nile, held mass in their chapel behind the Tomb of Christ. Many Coptic visitors were present from Cairo, and they were doing their best to make the service an ideal one. They were in the midst of the service when the Roman Catholics entered the Holy Sepulcher and decided to hold a mass in front of the Tomb of Christ. It was necessary to move the benches from the far end of the building and pass in front of the Copts who were in the attitude of reverential worship. This disturbed the Copts, and their priests made an attack on the Roman priests, and a miniature war started. Each side summoned reserves, and these were directed to enter the battle at once. Clubs, fists, and feet were used with skill, which resulted in injuring many. One of the guides, called a Kawas, received several blows in the stomach and is expected to die. The church was crowded, and the women, seized with fright, shrieked as they ran for their lives. Children cried, men cursed and swore, while the priests joined them in hurling base epithets at their enemies. The patriarchs on both sides assumed the roll of captains, and their voices were heard above the clamor of the crowd as they urged their people to "Give it to them," "Break their the traces of the original mole left behind are subject to constant irritation from the pull of the scar produced by the treatment. A pigmented mole should be left in peace as long as it shows no sign of growth, or it should be cut out with a knife. The resulting clear scar is usually less disfiguring than the mole and of course the possibility of the malignant development of the mole is forever removed.

In treatment the one guide should be thoroughness of removal. Any method which is capable of removing or destroying the tumor at once may be used. Cutting it out with a knife or a cautery blade does this effectively, and in most cases is the best method, but when the epithelioma is located near the eyelids or near the tip of the nose, the deformity that would be produced by a safe cutting operation may be so great that other methods of treatment should be considered. In such cases many surgeons prefer to use radium or the X ray, or to employ the methods of scraping and cauterization. These all give excellent results in the hands of experts. The cure of epithelioma of the skin is simple and certain if the case is placed in the hands of a good physician before the growth has spread beyond control.

bones," "Kill the dogs," etc. The police were summoned, and through their efforts chaos was changed to order. The Copts were compelled to leave the Church of the Holy Sepulcher and finish the mass in one of the adjacent chapels.

A Word From Gloucester, England

It is some time since you had any word from Gloucester. We hope therefore to be allowed a small space.

We look forward each week to receiving the HERALD, as we derive so much encouragement in perusing its pages. We are particularly interested in any developments that take place which mark progress in the establishment of Zion, for the condition prevalent in this country causes us to look forward to the days when we shall realize in practice what we know, perhaps, in theory. To-day also it is a pleasing fact that special attention is being paid to the training of our young people which may give them a greater hold on the church.

What an asset, too, we have in Graceland. How much we should like to see many more of our boys and girls from the British Isles attend there. Some we know who have had that privilege, and now to-day are occupying positions of great responsibility in the church.

We regret that the work here has not made progress of late, and I believe in many branches in the British Isles circumstances have been such that it has been difficult to keep the work going. We wonder sometimes if ever a revival will come. We have had visiting here recently Apostle D. T. Williams and Bishop R. Bullard. The latter first came here last fall when he stayed a month. Our indefatigable brother aroused us and won our hearts, and although he is getting on in years is still active and giving good service.

We were glad to meet one of the new men of the Twelve in Brother Williams, but his stay was all too short. How we hope to see him again. We are at present without a meeting room, having had to vacate ours recently, so we are holding meetings in the homes of the Saints. It may be we shall have some difficulty in securing another place suitable. However we hope to continue in the good work.

Yours fraternally, A. T. TRAPP.

An Appreciation From Australia

[A few extracts from a personal letter from Robert Lamberth to one of the editors. Brother Lamberth is the editor of the Bowraville Guardian in New South Wales, Australia. He met John W. Rushton and Paul M. Hanson, when they were in that land.]

Knowing the pleasure one feels at any expression of appreciation for the journal he edits, I cannot resist the impulse to write to you and let you know how much I appreciate your fine papers. Practically ever since I joined the church, with a short intermission, I have received the SAINTS' HERALD and Autumn Leaves, and I can assure you that there was never a paper came to our home that is so zealously read and its contents devoured as the HERALD.

Until three years ago we were dairying, and as soon as the HERALD came I managed to get through it the same night. Somehow I could not leave it till it was read through, and later I would reread the articles that appealed most to me and digest them. Now I am a little more busy with my own writing and have not so much leisure for reading, but even yet I read as much as possible of the work of the church. Oh, how my heart goes out to it! I wish I had the time to write on similar lines.

When I read Brother Rushton's articles, I think of the man and wish it had been my lot to have traveled with him on a mission tour. When Paul Hanson's name is on the printed page I feel I would like his kindly influence once again overshadowing our home. Thus the HERALD and other church papers bring back the memories one loves.

I cannot help here mentioning the feeling I had before I joined the church in Australia, which Sister Schenck mentions in "Social graces" about the little chapel by the roadside, how possibly the outsiders thought the Saints were a little narrow because they clung so close together. I thought that once. Since joining I have wished the Saints were more narrow, if it meant clinging closer together, grasping each other's hands tighter, and showing a bolder face to the world. We do cling together, but we have yet a lot to learn of the Master's lesson, "Love one another, as I have loved you."

Now, dear editors, go ahead, knowing that your paper gives encouragement to many, knowing that your pages are scanned eagerly for the good things of life therein contained. I pray that you may long be spared to dress up the good news in a helpful, convenient form. You are the men who are helping the good work and possibly do not see the result of your labors. I write to tell you to be of good cheer; the results are world wide and are appreciated by your humble brother. God speed you in your work.

Winning Laurels at Harvard

The Dubuque Times tells of the success of Brother James Houghton in eastern university:

"Mr. James R. Houghton, son of Mr. and Mrs. James W. Houghton, of East Central Park Avenue, Davenport, has been chosen the baritone soloist for the Glee Club of Harvard University. Mr. Houghton is spending his first year at Harvard and soon after enrolling was chosen to be a member of the chorus. Soon after, he was made a member of the college quartet, and his appointment as a soloist comes as an additional honor.

"Mr. Houghton is on a tour with the Glee Club at present, and last Thursday appeared on the same program with Frieda Hempel, the famous prima donna, and the Boston Symphony orchestra. The tour will include New York, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland, and Canton, Ohio. Mr. Houghton will receive the congratulations of many friends. He has appeared before many tri-city audiences. At present, he is studying voice in Boston, prior to which he has been a pupil of Mrs. Amalia Schmidt-Gobble, of Davenport."

Many Indians Ready for Baptism

Elder Hubert Case writes most hopefully of great results among the Indians:

"I had a vision some three months ago standing at the corner of the most beautiful field of corn, just ripe, a golden yellow. I was ready to begin work gathering the corn. I was at the southeast corner of the said field, when I decided to go to work. I saw teams, many of them, bring corn to me. They came from the northwest. I was overjoyed to see them coming, but couldn't understand why they brought it to me. Well, I have been here at the southeast corner of the reservation. Last Sunday the teams started, and now they are coming from the northwest bringing full families for baptism. I baptized four families the last three days, and there are as many as fifteen more who said they would come Sunday next for baptism. I saw Brother Burton, and he and I are to put the thing over the next two weeks and see if we can baptize at least one hundred. He was in a meeting at Walthill but will close it to-night for the big Indian meeting I have slated for to-morrow night. He came to see me to-day again, and we are to pull together for a few weeks at least."

Saint Louis, Missouri

At the Saint Louis district conference, April 28, 29, A. Max Carmichael, superintendent of the Department of Religious Education, was the principal speaker. He was one of the speakers on the program Saturday afternoon, delivered an address on "Prayer" Saturday evening, and spoke on "The young people, their hopes, opportunities, service, and life work" Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. As it was necessary for him to return to Lamoni, he left shortly after noon.

H. C. Burgess, general manager of the Music Department and in charge of the music in Zion, was also present and addressed the Sunday school on "Music and church work."

From 1 p. m. to 2.30 there were held separate meetings of the priesthood and of the Department of Women. This priesthood meeting was a joint one in charge of Elder George F. Barraclough, president of the district. He paid particular attention to the need for the reorganization of the various quorums of the priesthood, all of which have been inactive in recent years.

Among others in attendance at the conference were Jesse W. Paxton of the seventy, and S. A. Burgess, of the Herald Office staff, the latter being the speaker in the evening, emphasizing the necessity of unity in the church.

Preceding the evening sermon, an hour was devoted to an excellent musical program under the direction of E. C. Bell.

The conference adjourned to meet at Landsdown the last Saturday and Sunday of July.

Owen Sound, Ontario

It is some two years since I wrote a letter to you. I enjoy reading the letters, as it gives us an idea how the work is going on in the various parts of the world. It is peculiar, too, how all the branches all over the land seem to have the same problems to solve and the same difficulties to overcome.

Our church here in Owen Sound has been favored recently by a visit from Elder G. C. Tomlinson, of Saint Marys, Ontario, one of our beloved district missionaries. Truly he has brought blessings to all our homes by his kindly visits and counsel. He left for his home a few days ago very much afflicted. We can with truth say that he has worn himself out in ministering to others. He has left a bright spot in our lives. May God bless him is our prayer.

We are in our new church now. The basement is not yet finished but, being short of funds, we have decided to continue with the use of the upper part for worship until we can see our way clear to finish the basement. God has made good his promises to us here in connection with the building of our church. We could mention many of them. There is one yet to be fulfilled and that is, that "Many souls are to be gathered into the fold and kingdom of God in this place." We all believe that this opportunity is now at our door, and we are just ready for a revival of the latter-day message in the hearts and lives of the people of this community.

May God bless us in our efforts to spread this angel message and also to live it every day.

R. J. WILCOX.

Independence

Last Tuesday night, May 1, there was held in the Stone Church a mass meeting of the Saints of Independence for the purpose of considering the proposition of purchasing the Swope property of twenty acres, lying in the center of Independence, to be used as a community center for our young people and a home for the Independence Institute. The meeting was well attended and a number of the officials of the church spoke to the proposition. Those who spoke were B. R. McGuire, J. F. Keir, M. H. Siegfried, J. A. Becker, Paul M. Hanson, Frederick M. Smith. All were in favor of the proposed purchase. A motion was made and unanimously carried that the Saints favor the purchase of the property. An organization committee of thirty was named and voted upon. Following the singing of the campaign song, which was written by Alden Russell, benediction was pronounced by Bishop J. A. Becker.

Campaign Song

(Tune: "Somebody's Waiting for Me.")

"This community is needing something new.

We are here to start that thing and push it through.

We will lift; we will boost, though we are few;

Show the people what with teamwork we can do."

The organization committee selected on Tuesday night met the following night and organized. Walter W. Smith was selected as chairman, and John A. Gardner was named general for the campaign. There were selected by the committee eleven colonels and a large number of captains who will direct the work of securing subscriptions to the fund which is being raised. On Sunday afternoon last the committee and the complete campaign organization met in the basement of the Stone Church to plan for the campaign which is to start Thursday evening, May 10, with a big mass meeting and rally of the Saints at the Stone Church. It is hoped that the entire amount to be raised, $25,000, will be pledged during the following seven days. Payments on pledges will be accepted now, or on the first of each of the four following months. Elder R. V. Hopkins, pastor in Zion, has been appointed colonel to take care of solicitations for subscriptions from Saints outside of Independence who may wish to help in the purchase. It is believed there are many Saints throughout the church who may want to help in this project, inasmuch as the property is to be used for the benefit of all who live in or near Independence.

On May 16 there will convene in the Nation's Capitol the annual meeting of The National Conference of Social Workers. This conference is of prime importance to students of social conditions and factors, and President Frederick M. Smith, Bishop B. R. McGuire, and Brother and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser expect to attend. The church should benefit greatly from having its leading officers and welfare workers in attendance at this important conference.

Sister Emily Detray Inouye, who with her husband has spent the past year in Hawaii, has recently returned to Independence for a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George DeTray. Brother and Sister Inouye have been enthusiastic and energetic church workers among the orientals of Honolulu, especially in the present Japanese and Chinese missions.

Elder Roy Budd, of the Quorum of Twelve, is spending a few days in Independence with his family, from whom he has been absent for some months on his mission to the Oklahoma Indians.

Elder A. Max Carmichael spent the week end in Independence. He was the speaker at the problems meeting at the Stone Church on Sunday afternoon, the subject being: "Religious teaching of the child."

President F. M. Smith spent last Saturday and Sunday in Omaha and Council Bluffs, returning home Monday morning. On Sunday he spoke to the Saints in both places.

Elder James A. Gillen left last week for work in Cameron, Missouri, and in the southern part of Iowa. He is very optimistic over the possibilities for missionary work in every field he has visited since conference, and feels that there are great opportunities ahead of our missionaries successfully to prosecute the work.

Sister Ruth L. Smith, who a month ago had the misfortune to fall and break one of her ankles, is now with the aid of crutches able to get around some.

Elder T. W. Williams, who has been laboring in California since last conference, arrived in Independence Sunday afternoon. On Monday he left for Lamoni to deliver a series of lectures before the class in religious education, after which he will return here to work in the interests of the Department of Recreation and Expression until time to go to Lamoni for the Young People's Convention.

Last Saturday the intermediate class of the nurses' training school at the Sanitarium gave the graduating class of nurses a party and general good time, entertaining them in Swope Park. Several friends donated cars for the purpose, and the jolly crowd enjoyed breakfast and dinner under the trees in the big out of doors. A good time is reported.

Saturday afternoon, under the auspices of the Religio locals of Independence, there was held open house at the old Swope mansion. Free sandwiches were served, and many of our people enjoyed an outing and an opportunity to inspect the property. It is estimated that nearly two thousand Saints went through the building.

Services in the Independence churches Sunday were as follows: Sacrament service in each at 11 o'clock. Stone Church, problems meeting at 2.30, lecture by Elder A. Max Carmichael; preaching at night by Elder F. Henry Edwards. Second church, Elder J. F. Curtis. Enoch Hill, Young Ladies' Program. Liberty, Elder F. A. Russell. Walnut Park, Elder J. A. Dowker.

This week at the Sanitarium is Baby Week. The doctors of Independence have given their services gratis and are examining all children of the city under the age of six years. On Monday the Sanitarium was crowded to the limit with those desiring to have their children examined. This is a golden opportunity for those having small children to ascertain whether or not they are in good physical condition, and thus be better able to direct their future activities. It is a movement in the right direction.

The funeral of Sister Elnor Orine McClain, daughter of Brother and Sister William McClain, formerly of Paris, Tennessee, was held from the Stone Church Monday afternoon. The sermon was by Elder T. C. Kelley.

At the Monday night session of the continued business meeting of the conference in Zion discussion of the matter which had been under consideration for four Monday nights previously was resumed. At the close of this meeting an unsuccessful effort was made to adjourn until the next regular conference date, the first Monday night in July. Adjournment was taken until next Monday evening, the 14th.

President Elbert A. Smith and wife, who were called to Lamoni to attend the funeral of Sister Asa Cochran, Sister Smith's mother, returned to Independence Friday evening.

Sister Eunice Winn Smith, wife of Church Historian W. W. Smith, and director of the kindergarten in Independence, was operated on for appendicitis at the Sanitarium on Tuesday morning. At the last report, Sister Smith was doing well.

Kansas City Stake News

The stake through its young people's association has achieved success in the short series of meetings held April 8 to 15 for which Cyril E. Wight, president of the Lamoni Stake, was the speaker. Packed houses on both Sunday nights and splendid audiences each night between were there to listen. Brother Wight so vigorously and pleasantly set forth the message that with one accord they all said, "Delighted," when the last word was spoken. Nearly all filed by shaking hands with him and dealing out "God bless you," "You have made my duty plain to me," "Come again," "I'm coming to Lamoni in June," etc.

The following subjects were handled in the order named and disposed of with ability and conviction: "In the beginning," "Creative power," "The unfoldment," "Man—the image of his Creator," "The heart of our message," "A new earth," "A living faith."

It seemed to the writer that a title for his entire effort could be summed up in the word Power—a power in Omnipotence, a power in man, and when discovered by man it amounted to an endowment calculated to bring him nearer to God. His reference to the great Mississippi River as illustrating wasted energy as for the time of its existence, its power had not been utilized. It represented untold horsepower wasted. A few years ago a dam was built across the stream at Keokuk by which the wasted energy was harnessed and the blessing of distribution of power to thousands of people was had.

Brother Harold C. Burgess of Zion was musical director for the meetings and was, as Brother Tanner expressed it, a dynamic in expressing the music for the occasion and aided materially in keeping the audience cheerful by witticisms, often pointed, but calculated to bring out the best in musical effort by the congregation, which was rewarded by a beautiful response. A leaflet with a dozen suitable songs was used, some composed by our own church people. Brother Burgess came to us tired and worn out by heavy work at his place of employment, but testified that at the close he was much rested and refreshed.

Brother Wight was also weary on account of recent arduous work in other fields, but also went away stronger and in better condition than when he came.

The finances were furnished by offering and sufficient more was raised for the present need. While the effort was by and for the young people, older ones were not prevented from attending, several with gray locks coming who felt young hearted, no doubt.

Two prayer meetings were held, the time of each being filled with heartfelt prayer and testimony. One young married woman not a member, but who attended several of the meetings, testified that in her previous appeals to her heavenly Father the heavens seemed as brass, but that her experience now was, that audience had been gained with Him who dwells on high and that through the meetings understanding had come with consequent desire to be one of God's children indeed. The latter was voiced by several.

The work of the ushers is to be complimented. Just before the benediction, President Jellings, on behalf of the "Society of Young People," presented to Brother Wight a traveling bag and to Brother Burgess a fountain pen, each in turn making speeches of acceptance, which were with thankfulness for the splendid spirit actuating the gift.

At 2.30 the Department of Women was favored by the presence of General Organizer Dora Glines. Her theme was on adjustment to the circumstances in which we are placed. She said life was what we make it. Our attitude towards life determines what our life will be. Minds trained for frivolous and useless things will have no better reward. The church cannot rise above the level of the homes. Our trouble is parents do not do the things they ask their children to do. The women are organized for better services. The co-ordinating plan was also taken up by Sister Glines, answering questions concerning form Four. The priesthood dismissed their service and attended in a body the meeting of the women.

Brother T. W. Curtis was a recent speaker at the North-east Mission, preaching the last sermon of a series by Brother Higdon.

Council Bluffs and Vicinity

A two-day meeting was held at Carson Branch last Saturday and Sunday. On account of bad roads some were belated, and others could not get there, but nevertheless there was a good meeting.

The memorial service for Sister Hazel Marie Fay, which was to have been held in March, but on account of storms had to be postponed, was held on the 8th inst. This sister died with diphtheria, and no public service could be held at the time of the burial. Several of the teachers from the school the sister was attending attended and heard an excellent gospel sermon preached by Elder G. J. Harding.

Elder J. F. Mintun was called to Saunders County, Nebraska, on April 2 to baptize a lady who was seriously ill with cancer of the stomach, and while there her family, husband, and four children were baptized, and the youngest boy was blessed. On the 10th inst. he was again called to the same place to preach the funeral sermon of the sister who had been baptized, she dying happy to think she had been baptized, the family sharing in her joy in that regard while sorrowing at her departure. The secret of this baptizing comes from the instruction of one lone sister, the mother of the one who died. After burying the sister, there was held a sacrament service for those who had previously been baptized, one of whom, though baptized in early boyhood, a brother of the one buried, had never received the sacrament, and the mother had not been permitted to for many years. The funeral was held in the Baptist church in the neighborhood, the opening prayer being offered by the pastor of that church by request, and the music was furnished by the choir of that church. The church was crowded beyond its limits with neighbors and relatives.

Elder G. J. Harding held a week's series of services at the West End Mission last week, but it being a very bad time not as great interest was shown as otherwise would have been. On Sunday evening there was a crowded house, and some who had not heard before were deeply interested, and promised to return the coming Sunday. It has been decided to be best to hold services each Sunday night at the same place by the same elder. He is using a large chart to illustrate his sermons, and this has secured quite an interest.

Brother P. T. Anderson has been prevented from doing missionary work for several weeks on account of getting his teeth fixed, the fixing of which has caused him much pain and inconvenience otherwise. He expects to be out at his work soon, the Lord willing.

Last Sunday occurred the marriage of Sister Beulah G. Harrington to Mr. Harvel H. Jackson. Mr. Jackson is a grandson of Elder Alfred Jackson, of Dow City, Iowa, and Sister Harrington is a near relative of the Harrington family who have done such service in the church in Fremont and Mills Counties in the past. The young people will make their home in Council Bluffs.

Elder T. A. Hougas was present at the Wednesday evening prayer service last week. He is expecting to spend the coming summer in the West on account of his health. His wife is now in the West and he is on his way.

The pastor, Elder O. Salisbury, has been absent from the city on account of business most of the time for the last two weeks. He preached last Sunday night.

We are expecting the presence of President F. M. Smith in the city the first of next month, and to receive of his ministrations.

Successful Meetings in San Francisco

Following is part of a letter addressed to the Presidency by Elder John A. Saxe, pastor of the branch at San Francisco.

The San Francisco Branch has just closed a very successful series of fifteen lectures delivered by Brother T. W. Williams. The lectures were a source of splendid instruction, both spiritually and educationally to Saints and their friends. The amount of good these lectures have done in unifying and drawing them closer together is inestimable. While on the other hand prejudice has been removed and a better understanding of our church ideals has been widely disseminated.

Our position among the churches of San Francisco is better understood and more highly appreciated by many as attested by the attendance which increased to the last meeting. The attendance at the last lecture was nearly three hundred, and that is an unusually large audience for a San Francisco lecture hall, especially on religious topics.

Brother Williams came here from Los Angeles on March 12. We immediately began an intensive campaign of advertising and publicity. Brother Williams supervised this work. We had printed five thousand cards which were distributed and mailed to practically every part of the city. Two hundred special letters to Saints were mailed to every known family of Saints in San Francisco. Many of these letters were sent by members to friends and acquaintances. One hundred one quarter size window cards were displayed in store windows and other suitable public places. We inserted large advertisements in all the leading daily newspapers and were given publicity in news items of these papers besides synopses of five hundred words of the Sunday evening lectures.

This campaign is the first real intensive effort we have ever attempted in San Francisco and the results are so gratifying in every way that we are much encouraged. We expect to have another series of lectures as soon as Brother Williams can spare the time.

We began our effort here practically unknown to the six hundred thousand inhabitants of San Francisco. A good hall, centrally located, was procured. The collections taken each evening defrayed all expense, including advertising, hall rent, and incidentals.

Californians, and especially San Francisco people, are not generally a church-going people, consequently we are very much gratified with the results and extremely proud of our speaker, Brother Williams.

This series of meetings has demonstrated clearly that such meetings can be successfully held if the proper effort is put forth in advertising.

All departments in the San Francisco Branch are functioning in their proper work. The priesthood are working harmoniously and manifest a desire to be more useful in the respective offices.

We are hoping to inaugurate cottage or group meetings in the different districts of the city.

San Antonio, Texas

While renewing my subscription to the HERALD, I would like to say a good word for San Antonio. I seldom see anything from here, but it is not because we are asleep. We have a little band of Saints, and there seems to be a wonderful spirit of unity and love between all.

I think we have made good progress in the last year. Our president, Brother T. J. Jett, jr., is a fine man, deserving much praise. He and his wife give so much time to the work, and are always ready and willing to go when called or needed. Like most of us they have a family to care for. In the meantime, they make everyone feel that in them he can find a personal friend.

We are trying to build up our little branch here and get more centrally located so that we can care for the different departments and our young people.

In the last few months we have lost several members whose passing away has left us sad but with a renewed determination to take up the work where they left off and carry on as they did.

Those who have passed on that we have learned to love are Elder W. H. Davenport, Sister Johnson, Sister Droomgroll, Elder John Harp, and Sister Mannering who before her death left us for the Sanitarium.

We mourn but not without hope.

With a prayer for the church the world over, I am,

Your sister in Christ, HATTIE MINEAR.

KEARNEY, NEBRASKA.

Editors Herald: On April 8 we organized a Sunday school with thirty-three charter members. Elder W. E. Grubb was chosen superintendent. Elder Barraclough helped us to organize and he expects to be with us much of the time. We are meeting at the home of Brother William F. Godfrey on 1604 Avenue H, at 10 a. m.

* We are taking this means of letting the missionaries and Saints know where we are. We would be glad to have them stop at any time if they are going through Kearney. Brother Grubb has an auto paint shop over the White Eagle Filling Station on Twenty-First Street, Avenue A.

Yours in gospel bonds,

BLUEBELL GODFREY.

Radio Comments

In arranging the program for Sunday next, Brother George Anway has kept in mind the fact that that day will be known throughout the United States as Mothers' Day. The address will also be suited to the occasion. It is quite probable that a number of mothers and children who are unable to be together will nevertheless listen to the same program as it is broadcasted from W P E.

K F F V of Graceland now broadcasts at 1 o'clock every Sunday, and we understand that those in charge at Lamoni intend to use the best talent available so that it will be worth your time to tune in.

One of our crippled sisters listened in last Sunday as she lay in bed. Of course there are many others who are doing the same thing, but the actual realization of her joy in thus hearing the message once more brought added appreciation of the power of radio.

The second of the broadcasting stations under the control of the church is now in operation at Graceland. Listen in for K F F V between one and two o'clock every Sunday afternoon and you will probably recognize some of the speakers. Last Sunday Elder Cyril E. Wight of the Lamoni stake presidency gave the address.

The extended broadcasting outfit will be installed at Independence within the next few weeks.

One of our correspondents suggests that we use some of the hymns which are intimately associated with the latter-day work, as the musical basis of our radio programs. That is a good idea. Let us know your favorites, and then listen in for them.

FANNING, KANSAS. We have been enjoying the Sunday evening services broadcast by your station, and can say with emphasis, Let the good work go on, as I believe we as an organization can reach more people in a week than the missionary force can in a year. The service is coming through so much clearer and stronger. P. S. We expect to have these services at our church here commencing Sunday.—R. L. Tilden.

CORNING, KANSAS. Got your program last night, commencing at 6 p. m. Came in fine. Wife and myself surely enjoyed the sermon and the music. Heard you sign off until next Sunday at 6 p. m. at which time the undersigned will be listening in.—J. W. Andrews.

SAINT PAUL, MINNESOTA. I heard your station this evening (April 8) very clearly and with fair signal strength.—William McIlvaine, Jr.

BELTON, MISSOURI. I enjoyed the talk by Elder Smith, the church historian, the violin solos, and song solos.—Frank L. McGuffin.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI. I picked up your call letters Sunday the 15th inst.—J. D. Bilyen.

SOMESET, KANSAS. I listened to your concert last evening broadcast from the L. D. S. Church. I will say it was complete in every way. The sermon was great. I have never heard one more complete on any subject. The subject the minister chose was completely defined.—E. C. Bowman.

MOBILE.—At Mobile, Alabama, March 2, 1923. Prayer meeting at 10 a. m. Business session opened at 2 p. m. with Alma Booker, district president, in the chair. District presidency was chosen to preside with power to choose assistants. The organizations were completed with all necessary officers. Statistical reports from Mobile, Bay Minette, and Escatawpa Branches showing a membership of three hundred and thirty-five were read. District secretary's statistical report showed an enrollment of one hundred eighty-five isolated members not resident in branches. Vancleave Branch failed to report. Reports were read from presidents of Mobile, Escatawpa, and Bay Minette. Other reports were had from district president, chorister, superintendent of Sunday School Department, Departments of Women at Mobile and Escatawpa, and Bishop's agent. While all reports showed that the departments were active, there appears to be a very great need of leaders to carry on both local and district work. Bishop's agent's report showed receipts of $249.39. Treasurer's report showed: balance on hand at last report, $20.85; collected, $8; paid out, $25.93; balance 2.92. On recommendation of officers a budget of $40 to cover expenses of all departments for next quarter was adopted. The conference voted to hold a reunion sometime during the summer. Reunion committee elected: Alma Booker, Frances C. Booker, N. L. Booker, D. W. Sherman, and H. M. Aebli. Motion prevailed that each branch president take a collection for reunion expenses as soon as the announcement of time and place of reunion is made. Motion prevailed that district president appoint two-day meetings in the branches at such times as he deems wise. Communication from T. W. Williams regarding Department of Recreation and Expression was read. Following officers were elected: Alma Booker, district president; W. L. Booker and Oscar Tillman, counselors; Edna J. Cochran, secretary; Mrs. Frances C. Booker, Sunday school superintendent; Mrs. Anna Hamilton, assistant; Mrs. Isabel Booker, superintendent of Department of Recreation and Expression. Conference adjourned to meet at Escatawpa, Mississippi, June 22, 1923, at 10 a. m. An entertainment consisting of music, readings, and stereopticon views was rendered on Friday evening. Preaching during the conference was by W. L. and Alma Booker.

MIDLAND.—At Birmingham, England, in the Saints' chapel, Priestly Road, Sparkbrook, March 31 and April 1. There was little business to transact, one of the chief items being the appointment of delegates for General Conference. F. Henry Edwards, Frank Holmes, and Blanche Edwards were appointed. The usual Sunday services were held, and altogether a very enjoyable and profitable time was spent. We were very pleased to have Bishop Fry with us during conference. H. Voas Meredith, secretary.

SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND DISTRICT.—Semiannual conference convened in Providence, Rhode Island, April 28 and 29, with a splendid showing from each branch. The Sunday school and Department of Women were represented in the person of Lucie Sears. George Sinclair responded for the Department of Recreation and Expression, James Houghton for the Department of Music, and William Sinclair, M. D., for the Health Department. The speakers for the Sunday services included Bishop M. C. Fisher, of Boston; Apostle Edmund Gleazer, of Boston; and Missionary Arthur Koehler, of London, Ontario, Canada. The election of officers resulted in the selection of Doctor William Sinclair, president; Elder Edward Travers, first vice president; Elder Peter Whalley, second vice president; Mrs. William Sinclair, secretary; and Bishop Fisher, treasurer. Ratification was made of Edward Fox for district Sunday school superintendent, and Miss Lucie Sears for the Department of Women. Form 4 of the coordinating plan was adopted. Delegates for General Conference were selected. Interesting features of the gathering were the different renditions from Gounod and Haydn by the choir members under the able leadership of James Houghton, baritone soloist of the Harvard Glee Club. The oratorio Gallia by Gounod was splendidly rendered by the Attleboro choir. Organists Mr. Earl Bradshaw and Edward Joy occupied at the organ. Arthur Koehler, Frank Dobbins, press committee.

The Central Christian Advocate in noting the expense of enforcing the 18th amendment, some nine and a quarter million dollars, calls attention to the fact that fines and forfeitures during the past year have netted over eight million, and the form of property seized is six million, a total of over fourteen million dollars. In other words, dry enforcement is paying its own way, though certainly the law should be carried out regardless of relative expense.

As a result of the independence movement of 1919 in Korea several Korean Christians were arrested, among them a Mr. Kim who was co-pastor of a church in Seoul, according to the Central Christian Advocate. During his three years' confinement he gained opportunity to preach to the prisoners and as a result converted sixty. But in seven months since his release he reports 213 new believers.

Independence Needs This for a Community Center

In enumerating the virtues of our city—its banks and its stores, its wealth and its aristocracy—we are forced to stop short just before we get to the question, "What are we doing for our young folks?" Most any city the size of ours has a public park, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., athletic fields, play grounds, wading pools, and other community efforts, to provide wholesome recreation for the boys and girls, but we, subject to all the danger of a big city at our door, have done but very little. The time has come to wake up and do something. The way is now opened by a very generous gift, and at a large mass meeting May 1st the Independence Saints voted unanimously to purchase the Swope property and campaign immediately for the funds.

$30,000 Given by Zimmermann Family

Bishop Zimmermann and family, of Philadelphia, have offered $30,000 toward the purchase of the Swope property, and a contract has been made for that place. The purchase price is $50,000, which means that we have $20,000 to raise, or, with $5,000 for repairs, $25,000 total. The property, which consists of approximately 20 acres, beautifully wooded and located in the center of town, also includes the Swope Mansion which originally cost $100,000 to build and is still a stanch building. It has three floors and full stone basement, there being 16 large rooms and an auditorium that will seat 250 people.

A Real Community Center

The property is ideal for adaptation to our needs and will be used:

1st: As headquarters for all our young people's activities: Dramatics, music, games, reading rooms, dinners, parties, Boy Scouts, etc.

2d: For all forms of athletics: Gym, track, tennis, football, basket ball, volley ball, golf, etc.

3d: As a public park: Picnics, reunions, concerts, supervised play, etc., and,

4th: For the home of the Independence Institute with day and evening classes.

How We Can Raise the Money

Twenty-five thousand dollars is a lot of money to raise, but there are many of us, and if we will all pull together and each do his share, we will succeed. You will be visited the coming week by one of the teams, and we would like you to consider these points in making your pledge: This center is for all; it will benefit young and old now and for years to come; it will be held by the church, administered by the members, and fills a dozen urgent needs. You can pay your pledges $\frac{1}{4}$ June 1st, $\frac{1}{4}$ July 1st, $\frac{1}{4}$ August 1st, and $\frac{1}{4}$ September 1st, so plan to give as liberally as you can, taking the four months to make it up if need be.

Running the New Institution

This property will be an asset to the whole church as well as to the community, but the details of management will be left to a board elected by members of the association. We are going to start with a clear property, and small annual dues from a large number of members will care for the running expenses. All play will be supervised, and it is planned to have a manager resident there at all times. The Wallace N. Robinson gift of approximately ten thousand dollars will be available for a new gymnasium on the property, and all young people's activities will be equally fostered, and from year to year the facilities will be enlarged. This will be a great forward step. Let's go!

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE NEED:

- a social center
- a gymnasium
- an athletic field
- outdoor pageants
- vocational classes
- a place to play
- concerts

EDITORIAL

The Priesthood Journal

The March issue of the Priesthood Journal carries its valedictory, as that will be the last number published. It also carries the announcement that refund checks will be sent to cover unexpired subscriptions.

Several years ago Elder George E. Harrington as president of the Independence Stake started a little priesthood journal under the title of Unity. It was extended and turned over six years ago to the general church officers with President Frederick M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire as editors. The name was changed to One. Then the style changed, and for the past year it has gone under the later name of The Priesthood Journal. As President F. M. Smith is now taking a closer supervision of the SAINTS' HERALD, the Presidency are using this official organ as their medium of communication, and it is hoped by weekly publication instead of monthly that the ends desired by the Priesthood Journal will be better achieved.

In closing his valedictory in the Priesthood Journal, President Frederick M. Smith writes:

We appreciate the support of the readers of the Journal, and would greatly regret the necessity of this valedictory did we not feel that through the HERALD columns we would still be reaching the readers of the Journal. The priesthood members should be regular and careful readers of the HERALD. So in bidding good-by to the readers of the Journal we hope to greet them weekly through the HERALD.

The Thrifty Man Pays Tithing

The Postal Savings Society has issued a booklet on thrift in which they would not approve of the old saying, "Work as hard as you can and never spend a cent," for they recognize that one may defeat his efforts by spending too little as well as by spending too much.

They recognize three types: the tightwad who saves sixty cents out of every dollar of income; the spendthrift who saves nothing; and the thrifty man who saves twenty cents.

But giving also has its place in the program for "there is that withholdeth more than is meet and it tendeth to poverty." (Proverbs 17.) The tightwad spends one cent each for education and recreation and giving. The spendthrift spends forty cents for recreation and one cent for education and giving.

But the thrifty man for each dollar of income spends ten cents for education, ten cents for recreation, and ten cents for giving. This, it will be noted, is the normal tithe, ten cents on the dollar for giving.

The question naturally arises, Can a man of moderate means be acting thriftily if he gives away ten per cent of his income. Government savings experts, according to an item in the Christian Century say that he can. They say he is thriftier than if he gave only one per cent.

Again this is of interest in connection with the tithing plan of the church and is also of interest in regard to education as well as recreation. Even those who are moderately well-to-do have all of these factors to consider. According to the above estimate the thrifty man will save twenty per cent and provide for his necessities of food, shelter, and clothing from the remaining fifty per cent of his income.

Journal of History for April, 1923

A very interesting number including General Conference, biography of Sister W. W. Blair, a review of economic equality, and other items of general interest.

A resume of the General Conference of 1922 takes up nearly a third of the current April issue of the Journal of History, namely, the first forty pages. This includes individual photographs of the men called to apostolic authority, with a sketch of the life of each one. It also includes a panorama picture of attendants at General Conference including the leading officials of the church.

The second article, "The memoirs of Sister Elizabeth Blair," by her daughter, is full of interesting details, not only for those older in years but for the young as well. It pictures the sacrifice and devotion of the early days of the Reorganization yet the steadfast purpose and reliant faith in God. It contains many touching incidents of the personal and family life of interest to the church.

As a part of his study, one of our young men, M. A. Etzenhouser, has made a careful study of experiments in economic equality of which he gives a brief resume of some thirty pages. He begins his discussion with Israel under the Mosaic Law, continues it with the Essenes and the early Christian community, the effect on these of establishing the monastic system. Plato's Republic, More's Utopia, and Campanilla's City of the Sun are briefly referred to as an introduction to the modern socialistic community of Cabot, Saint Simon, Baboeuf, Charles Fourier, and their successors in their various communistic ventures. Growing out of Fourierism there were a number of different organizations or phalansteries established in America, the most remarkable of which was Brook Farm in New England.

Robert Owen, the Harmony Society, the Separatists of Zoar, the Shakers, the Oneida Community, the Amana Society, are each briefly discussed, and the results summarized. The distinguishing feature is that as a result of the study, the writer concludes that the one element making for success is the religious foundation. We strongly commend this article to all of our students in the church.

The last twenty-two pages continue the autobiography of John J. Cornish, give extracts on the Nauvoo exodus, the first school in Jackson County, and land settled by the Latter Day Saints in Jackson County in 1831-1833, a large part of which lands were within the present city limits of Kansas City.

In writing the history of the past, the local historians are greatly hindered by the meagerness of the items reported—a list of officers elected, who offered prayer, the number of people baptized, but often the action adopted by the conference or what was done was omitted from the minutes. But whatever may be our difficulties in the past, this does not excuse our failure to note and record historical facts of general interest occurring to-day. That this should be done, and explaining just what items he wants, is the subject of a brief editorial by the general church historian, W. W. Smith.

As a result, there is not a page but what is filled with matter of general interest. S. A. B.

If at first you don't succeed, try, try again.

The greatest success consists not in never failing, but in rising every time we fall.

Yet consider that in trial and error, or trial and accidental success, something more than try, try again is needed in thought.

Young People's Convention

In a little over two weeks the old Graceland students will be assembling for the Home-Coming. In fact some have already left home.

Particular attention is called to the notice in the Miscellany department of the HERALD last week and again this week asking those coming to the Young People's Convention to come prepared to camp if they can, but at least to bring some bedding. This will almost certainly be the largest gathering of young people in the history of the church, and may be the largest gathering in one place the church has yet held. The work will no doubt center around Graceland College, where accommodations are naturally limited. Those who come prepared to camp will be able to remain near the center of interest, though many hundreds will be cared for in town.

In the early days of the Reorganization it was by no means uncommon for the Saints gathering to conference to sleep on the kitchen floor or on the hay in the barn loft. In our own memory, long beds have been made on the floor of two or more rooms to accommodate visitors. Certainly the young people are not possessed of less zeal to-day. Reports are favorable for a large attendance both from far and near. All who can are planning to go from Independence.

The Graceland Home-Coming includes not only graduates, but all who have had any share in the past history of Graceland, whether as students, members of the faculty, members of the Board of Trustees, as superintendents, or in any other capacity.

It is the present intention of the HERALD editors to report the Graceland Home-Coming, June 3 to 6, and the Young People's Convention, June 7 to 17, quite fully for the benefit of our readers and especially those young people who are not able to attend.

S. A. B.

To forestall college atheism, Doctor William P. Merrill suggests in the Christian Advocate that the remedy is in better religious teaching in the church. At present many young people enter college as Christians and graduate as either atheists or agnostics. The difficulty as he sees it is the rabid adherence on the part of the church to traditions utterly incompatible with the scientific spirit and methods of present-day instruction. He insists that the fault does not lie entirely with the college even if in the departments of philosophy and natural science there are men and women openly scornful of the church and the reality of religion but that it rests in part with the religious training of young people in the church.

What Is It All About?

"And God said, Let us make man."—Genesis 1: 26.

"Unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."—Ephesians 4: 13.

"Yet I doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs."—Tennyson.

There is an old song of more than usual inanity which says, "We're here, because we're here, because we're here." Whenever I hear that song it always seems to me that the next time it goes around I shall hear why we are here. But not so.

As a matter of fact, we find ourselves here. Literally we discover that we are here, some little time after others have known it quite well; just so soon in fact as we are able to distinguish between self and not self. In fact, the whole race finds itself here, and is as confused as a man who has fallen through a skylight and lost his memory at the same time. We recall nothing that preceded the plunge, and some one must give us each a name.

Looking out upon the panorama of life about us, we see kaleidoscopic manifestations of life in such varied multiform shapes that about all they seem to have in common is life—and what that is no one can say. We see the procession of being: the mystery of birth; youth and growth with romance and love; middle age with toil and care; old age; and at last, to further complex the riddle, the apparent finale, the last grim act of death.

With the aid of the telescope we look further afield into space and discover other wonderful worlds that dwarf our own, magnificent as it seems, to apparent insignificance. Like diamond dust the sky is studded with twinkling lights that prove to be suns, planets, stars, all moving on serenely in fixed orbits: "The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun giveth her light by day, and the moon her light by night; and the stars also give their light, as they roll upon their wings, in their glory, in the midst of the power of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.

Soon, if we are thoughtful, we begin to ask, What does it mean? Is there a purpose? Why are we here? Have we a duty while here? If so, what is it? Is our brief span of life the sum total of conscious existence?

What becomes of an intelligence which has left this earth? Whence comes the nascent intelligence which arrives? What is the meaning of our human personality and individuality? Did we spring into existence a few years ago? Do we cease to exist a few years hence?—Science and Immortality, by Lodge, pp. 36, 37.

Balfour says, "Creation, freedom, will—these doubtless are great things; but we cannot lastingly admire them unless we know their drift."—The Hibbert Journal, October, 1911.

What is the drift? Is it something worth while, or to quote again from Balfour, is the history of the human race to be but "a brief and discreditable episode on one of the minor planets"?

Philosophy Considers the Problem

Philosophy has wrestled with these questions for ages. Many theories have been propounded, physical, spiritual, monistic, dualistic, etc., and some that defy classification even as they defy comprehension by sane men. Most well-thought-out systems of philosophy lead to some system of ethics, some rules of life, depending largely upon their theory of existence. A philosophy that holds that man came from a void into consciousness and at death lapses back into eternal nothingness can hardly do better than to advise him to get the most out of sensation while he is yet conscious, and each man must judge for himself as to what will give him most sensuous pleasure in the shortest time; while a philosophy that holds to the principle that the universe is meaning-full and orderly and man immortal and in some way related to the scheme of things, can but conclude that man should deport himself in a dutiful way that he may fit into the order of society and things in general. So we have had Stoics and Epicureans with variations. In fact, philosophy is a babel of voices, from out of which speak some strong and noble ones, well worthy of our attention. Yet after all is said and done, about all that philosophy tells us is that we are here because we are here, because we are here.

Science Attacks the Problem

Science has come to the task with her microscopes and telescopes, her retorts and crucibles, and her methods of observation, demonstration, and verification. She has labored on the problem with all the intelligence, courage, and devotion that mankind can bring to any cause. Some indeed may have given up the problem as insoluble, a riddle without an answer; as Hæckel, who concluded that in the universe there is no purpose and no objective: "The development of the universe is a monistic mechanical process, in which we discover no aim or purpose whatever—all is the result of chance."—The Riddle of the Universe.

Others, however, have still assailed the problem and some very wonderful facts have been discovered in many lines of investigation and research, and some truly great conclusions reached; as for instance, the conclusion that law is universal, the same everywhere, and eternal, that it always did operate and always will operate harmoniously and as at present.

These conclusions are stated by Lodge in a single sentence: "We must realize that the whole is a single, undeviating, law-saturated cosmos."—Science and Immortality, p. 58.

These conclusions of science are remarkable, indicating as they do that the universe is a whole, not scattered and unrelated fragments, and that it is orderly and purposeful; raising a presumption in our minds that back of it is a purpose and so One who purposes—back of the eternal and universal law, an eternal and universal Lawgiver—back of the clearly perceived administration of the universe, an Administrator. And still, for all this, science as yet can do little more than tell us that "we're here because we're here, because we're here." It has never answered questions of origin, purpose, or destiny—whence? where? why?

The fact that anything whatever—even a stone—exists, raises unanswerable questions of whence and why. . . . The nature of life and, consequently, death is unknown.—Lodge, in The Substance of Faith, p. 10.

Let us admit, as scientific men, that of real origin, even of the simplest thing we know nothing; not even of a pebble.—Lodge, in Science and Immortality, p. 26.

All things, all enigmas, all mysteries, shrink and subside in presence of ourselves—our personalities. These sentences: "He willed to go," "I made up my mind to do," "I determined to have," cannot be analyzed. There is no clew to solution, no vulnerable point open to any attack of science. . . . The nature of personality is unknown.—Within the Mind Maze, p. 353, by Edgar Lucien Larkin, Director Lowe Observatory.

Religion Puts Meaning Into the Universe

Religion alone puts final meaning into it all, since it invokes the aid of revelation. From behind the veil speaks the voice of one who knows the answer to the riddle. Though Hæckel, like a child with a sectional puzzle, who throws it at his feet in a jumbled heap and says, "The pieces can never be put together because it has no design," revelation assures us that there is a design and a designer.

Religion presents God first in the act of creation. "Let us make man." (Genesis 1: 26.) Second it presents him in the act of divine direction of human growth and development, man not made but in process of making: "Unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." (Ephesians 4: 13.)

It presents then for our consideration, a beginning, a forward movement, an objective. Man himself is the goal of nature, the climax of creation: "Made a little lower than the angels and crowned with glory and honor." For man himself the goal is the fullest development possible of his potential powers under the divine plan. After all that we have said about philosophy, it is only fair to add that Aristotle was not far from the religious ideal when he said: "Man is the microcosm and final goal of nature"; and added, "The highest goal for man is self-realization."

Whenever a man, even one man, stands up on earth, the only erect, upward-looking creature, thinking, feeling, willing, you can, with religion as your interpreter, begin to understand the purposes of creation. When one such man begins to develop his potential powers, purposefully, along divinely prescribed lines, in love, justice, service, you begin to see the actual working out of the purposes of creation in individual development. And when further, two or more such men dwell and work together you have the nucleus of a social development intended from the beginning. To such an end the universe moves. Religion is the most powerful factor working toward that end.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Language a Bar to Good Will

Difference of language often, unfortunately, proves a bar to social as well as to international good will. The reaction is so made that those who do not talk as we do have something the matter with them.

This is one reason why peace has obtained between the United States and Canada for more than a hundred years and why the federation of States has proven acceptable. On the other hand, in Europe, as is pointed out in the National Geographic Magazine, language very nearly provides a battle line.

There are not only the great general divisions between the English and other Teutonic tongues, the French, Spanish, and other Romance languages, the Russian and Maygar, but in fact there is a change in language such as to prevent understanding in many cases every few miles. The largest area in western Europe of one language is Germany, yet this is smaller than our single State of Texas.

Two hundred miles is a short distance to travel in these days; yet from any capital of Europe, with the exception of Rome, in a circle of two hundred miles radius you will find at least four different languages. This forms a very restricted boundary for the scientist or the business man. There are forty odd different languages in Europe and more variations of speech than one would dream of. Yet it is true that four fifths of the population speak languages that belong to the three groups above suggested, the Germanic, the Romanic, and the Slavic. But these differ within themselves too much for ordinary understanding.

This is one of the grave difficulties interfering with the peace of Europe, drawing as it does a quite arbitrary and yet radical boundary.

Parents, What of Your Children?

By Ralph S. Hall

Looking back through former generations, we find that child nature was crammed and the basis of psychology neglected. Now, the pendulum threatens to swing too far the other way; age and experience are pushed aside; youth, impetuous and eager, seizes the reigns, and there is a danger of parents being considered the necessary evil, tolerated by their offspring, but left hopelessly behind in the race of ever-increasing knowledge and new lines of thought and new methods of education.

Parents, how are you going to influence these fast-opening minds, some of which already know more than you do, and are being trained into ways of self-reliance, and new modes of thought not dreamed of in your childhood's days?

Moralizing on the virtues of a past generation is useless. Severity will but widen the breach between you and your child. What are you going to do?

Their Destiny Is in Your Hands

In your hands, for better or for worse, is the destiny of that girl or boy of yours. From its cradle, you can bend and influence that growing mind, that soul that is beating its wings for greater liberty. How? Simply by loving sympathy, wise help, kindly interest, and companionship in your child's daily life. What if you are tired or busy, or don't know as much arithmetic as Tom, or as much domestic science as Mary? Once a day, after tea, gather your flock together and listen to the story of their success or failure; judge quietly between teacher and child, look at work done, and to be done, and let your children feel that mother and father are proud of them. Mother's glad smile and kiss, father's "Well done, boy," and kindly grip, will forge a chain of love that will influence them through all time.

School-teachers in thousands are going beyond their specified duties in attempts to compensate for neglected parental duty and absence of parental influence. But I say, no one but you can fill your place; and you, not the teacher, will have to answer for the failure of your child's life.

As another factor in your child's spiritual growth, watch with solicitude the companionships formed at school.

Your child's friend as a stranger will give you a key to your child's character. Girls especially are rather apt to form sudden friendships, which are easier dealt with when incipient than later on. But in any case don't arouse resentment and opposition by premature and ill-advised peremptory orders, but be tactful. Get to know your child's friend; and express approval or the contrary quietly and sympathetically, giving your reasons.

Apart from school life, encourage your children to take up a hobby; painting, music, carpentry, gardening, toy-making, scrapbooks, stamp-collecting, pressing flowers, wireless telegraphy, boat-building, doll dressing, etc., anything to fill idle hours, but be sure to show your interest in its progress.

There are two institutions of modern times which are exerting a tremendous influence on child life—the ever-widening stream of literature, good, bad, and indifferent, and the picture theater and its excitement and sensationalism. It is useless to inveigh against them; they have come to stay; and like all institutions, whether natural or artificial, they are potent for good or evil, according as they are used by you.

The Early Years Are Plastic

It is generally recognized that in spite of all dogma as to original sin, and in spite of scientific dissertations on hereditary taint, the average child comes from the hand of God innocent and plastic, ready to be molded by its natural guardians, in those most important five years, from cradle to school, when inherited bias can be counterbalanced by wise and loving care.

"As the twig is bent, so will the tree grow." Children in general, even those who have been neglected, have a quick eye for the beautiful and good; and the human soul, made in the image of God, turns to the evil only when good is withheld.

See, therefore, that your children have books worth reading; real adventures and life, rather than fiction of the penny dreadful type. As for moving pictures, go with your children; do not send them alone. Let them see your disapproval of anything that is equivocal and not in good taste.

Should this seem to sermonize, will you who have "done all these things from your youth up," forgive me, for the sake of those who have not?

If you cannot do it in one way, do it in another. Get it done.

The leader should never demand unnecessary exertion or sacrifice of his men; but he must have the strength of character to do his own duties thoroughly, to set the right example, and to require his subordinates to live up to the same principles.

Be very slow to condemn minor mistakes made in an effort at initiative. Commend the intention and show where better methods might have been used.

Problems of the City Church and the Pastor

By J. A. Tanner, President of Kansas City Stake

During the past few years I have heard a number of comments and criticisms upon the city church and the city pastor, some of the comments being quite favorable while others took the nature of biting criticism.

A number of people outside the city seem to entertain the idea that a city church is made up of aristocracy and that its constituents are very proud and haughty and that its pastor partakes of that spirit and becomes one of them and finally is well grounded in the aristocracy. It is said that "distance lends enchantment to the scene," and it seems that the farther distant members are from the city the more enchanting the scene becomes to them.

Connected with these criticisms there have been several comments in the church papers and from private letters which state that visiting members attending the church in the city have never been recognized or spoken to and that they have gone out of the services very much disappointed and somewhat disgusted with their brothers and sisters of the city.

Several other criticisms are that the pastor in the city has a fine time, is always at home, gets the best that there is, is dined by his flock, and receives every attention that is necessary for his comfort and welfare and social entertainment, and because of this he is always obligated to his people.

Having been a missionary in the field for a number of years, also a district and branch president, in a local way, and president of the quorum of high priests, a quorum of men who, by virtue of their calling, are pastors, and being interested in them and their pastoral work, I feel that in a degree at least I am competent to offer a few suggestions upon the caption of this article.

There is not anyone who will ever know what all of the problems of the city church are, nor what the daily anxiety of the true city pastor is, until he has had years of experience in caring for this kind of work. I fully appreciate that from the standpoint of a missionary, coming into the city, going to some nicely cared-for home, going to a nicely kept-up church, made comfortable in every way, that the life of the city pastor looks fine, and I find no fault when they envy the city pastor and wish they could trade places with him. Probably years of experience would change this envy into a longing desire, based upon charity, to go back to the field of gospel missionary work again.

The main thing to be considered by the city pastor is the resident members. These may be classified as those who are well-to-do, the comfortably situated, the common, everyday worker, the worthy poor, the unworthy poor, and, finally, the parasite. To handle a condition of this kind and care for the membership and the work, get results, and be successful require—

First, the pastor should be a splendid student of human nature, so that he can very clearly and with correctness read people, keenly vision their individualities, discern their temperaments, read their personalities, observe closely their mannerisms, their tastes, and their dislikes, and

Second, that he should be able to take all of these features with their concomitants, ranging from the well-to-do down to the parasite, and so blend them through a process of utilization to make them one in Christ and get a unity of purpose, a unity of action in their growth to the stature of Christ.

Well to Do

Personally, I do not think that it is an easy task, and more than one person has been considered a failure as a city pastor, and probably myself with them, because of inability to meet the task. Let us consider a problem or two in this connection: With a church where some members are well-to-do, there is not anything that you may undertake from building a church to repairing it, or even beautifying it upon the outside and making its physical appearance attractive, but that a number of people will say what I have often noticed in a cartoon that used to run in the papers some years ago, "Let George do it." Not only is this true in the giving of means to do the work, but if they are called upon to supply help by coming to do the work, thus cutting down expenses, they say, "Let George pay for the help"; and so far as many of them are concerned George does. Upon the other hand, the well-to-do who have a keen vision of life, from a commercial standpoint, and who appreciate what it means to reach their condition in life, step by step, say as a matter of discipline and of good to the individual, "They should be educated to help out in any work for the good of the cause of Christ."

Comfortably Situated

Then there are the comfortably situated, who stand between the well-to-do and the common people, and who frequently feel that their obligations are heavy because others are failing to do their part and, as a rule, are contending that there should be an equalization of donation and help to the work by designating per capita what each one's share is, ac-ording to his ability to pay. If this idea should be found to be correct, one can easily see what a task the pastor has to carry it into effect and to get results.

Everyday People

Then there are the common everyday people who, working for a wage, feel that those better situated in life indulge in many things that they themselves cannot; that their standards of living are much different and that they do not stint themselves in anything that they may feel they want in life, and, consequently they should carry the burden of the work and that the common people should help only as they feel disposed, and with what in their judgment would be right. Another problem, you see, that makes the pastor's task a very difficult one.

Worthy Poor

Then we take the worthy poor. We find here a class of people who, as a rule, have big hearts and are very generous and ambitious, and frequently are helping in the work beyond their means. Many times this class of people, because of their love for the work and their pride, permit destitute circumstances to cause them to suffer, and they will suffer for some time and never make their wants known. However, in a stake like Kansas City the pastor's burden is relieved so far as supplying these people is concerned, because of having a stake bishopric who is anxious to locate worthy people and see that they are cared for. But this does not relieve the anxiety and the care of the pastor, who must labor and work for the comfort and spiritual welfare of this class of people.

Unworthy Poor

Then we have the unworthy poor, a class of people, who, as a rule, are poor largely because of their mental attitude and their failure to qualify themselves to secure a lucrative position or that kind of work which is continuous. By virtue of their receiving a small wage and living from hand to mouth and having no credit, they are thrown upon the one resource of begging. Their mental attitude seems to be that the world owes them a living and it should pay it. But those who are members of the church lose sight of that slogan and seem to think that the church owes them a living, and, hence, they seek to collect.

Amongst this class of people you find a few who are honest. Some are tricky, dishonest, given to lying, misrepresentation, putting up alibis, and they always have a hard-luck story that would melt a heart of stone. In a way, many of these people are abnormal, are not properly balanced, have many hallucinations about themselves, feeling that they are always mistreated and are being dealt with unkindly. They see visions; have dreams; and always an interpretation indicating that they are mistreated and pointing out the ones who are their enemies and those who mistreat them.

This class, of course, the financial arm do not feel obligated to help. But they are members of the church just the same, and the pastor's burden is increased in trying to care for them and to bring about better conditions in their lives, and encourage them to look higher than their present condition and try to develop an ambition by which they may be able to vision these higher ideals.

In this connection we might add that because of the philosophy of our church, which advocates a gathering of her people, that many of this class of people gather to Independence through some means or other, and, when no longer cared for, naturally gravitate to Kansas City. Here they, as well as the worthy poor, are forced to seek for labor that takes them into places where the environment is very uncongenial. They are forced to seek cheap living places, hence get into rooming houses and other places where their environment is very bad, and take their boys and girls into an environment which is not conducive to their moral and spiritual development. So it is but a short time until a number of them go to the bad, and the city pastor finds himself obligated to go before judges of criminal courts, detective agencies, presidents of banks, and other institutions in trying to save the boy and girl, and sometimes to get a parole for them, when they are sentenced to the penitentiary. It may look easy, but one who has not had the experience of appearing before the character of people that we have just mentioned, would find it a most embarrassing proposition, and would not have any more show of accomplishing his purpose than a person who could not swim would have crossing the Missouri River.

The great problem in a stake like this is to know what to do for this class of people to change their environment and place them where they can be handled to better advantage. This people, instead of being able to modify their own environments and make it contribute to their good, find themselves in a condition in which they intensify the environment and help to make it contribute to their sorrow and chagrin rather than to their peace and happiness.

We might suggest that a number of this class of people are frequently brought into the church because of the kind of preaching they hear about the ideals of the church in its doctrine of consecration, stewardships, and caring for the poor. These things look very bright to them, and they readily accept of such teaching and come into the church, many times before they are converted properly to the gospel and its requisites.

Amusements and Recreation

Another problem, in connection with the others, is the different sentiments and tastes touching theaters, picture shows, other places of amusements, recreation, etc. Some think there is no harm in patronizing what might be called a good drama or a good picture show. Others think this is absolutely wrong and that they should not receive any patronage from church members. Still others think it is proper to go to these places without any discrimination being made as to the grade or character of the show, its location, or its presentation, while others feel that it is all right to go to these places if you have the powers of good discrimination and discipline so that you can say "yes" or "no" as the circumstances may demand. Some think that any kind of amusement or recreation is good for the individual, while others classify and think that there are very few that can be chosen, in a city like this, that will contribute to uplift.

To add to this problem we find, occasionally, ministers, passing through from their fields, when preaching say that it is all right to indulge in these things under proper conditions and chaperonage. Others preach against them and say it is absolutely wrong to go to any of these places even though with the proper chaperon. With this condition and the glowing attraction through advertisement of all of these various features of amusement, one can readily see the difficult task a pastor has in caring for one class of his members, known as the young people.

In connection with this, we have all the various opinions of the different classes of people with their likes and dislikes expressed upon the frills and fads of the times, and one can hear a public discussion or a curtain lecture or a piece of quiet advice upon this subject almost any time. Young people take advantage of the diversity of opinion and, hence, we find a variety of standards among them as to what is right and wrong in dress, in mannerisms, and in their social indulgences.

We are not trying to point out to the reader how we deal with and handle all of these problems, for if we did our story would be too long and, probably, would not find publication, but we are just trying to show you a few of the difficult tasks and problems that the city church with its pastor must solve, if it does its work and carries out its purpose in that which has been intrusted to it by its Author.

Visiting Members

Other problems that confront the pastor, outside of the resident members, are the caring for and looking after visiting members. This would be an easy task if all visitors would make themselves known when coming into the city or when attending church service. Many do not do this. They come in about like some newspaper reporter would, or other public person who wishes to make a survey and observation touching the conducting of the service and cares but little whether he is known or not. In fact, they try to keep from being known, and sometimes before the benediction is offered, and other times as soon as the "Amen" is said, slip quietly out of the door and say nothing to anyone. But later they offer a criticism to some one about the aristocratic church they were in, and that it was a refrigerator; that they were chilled with the attitude of the people; that the members did not make themselves known or try to receive visitors or make them feel welcome or at home. This picture is no fancy, but it is an absolute fact among many facts of the same character. I have known members, whom I have met in other places, come into the congregation after the service had started, probably unknown to anyone else, and slip out before the close of the service, and afterwards upon their return to their own locality they found fault publicly and privately with the cool treatment they had received.

On the other hand, we have visiting members who, when attending the church, the first thing they do is to introduce themselves to the pastor, which is the proper thing to do, and if he is a wide-awake pastor and considerate of visiting members he very quickly turns them over to the other good mixers in his congregation, so they may receive proper attention and introduction and get acquainted with their brothers and sisters.

It might be suggested at this juncture that, because of the many impositions practiced upon city members and churches by unworthy members passing through the city, it would be a good plan for any visitors coming to church in the city to carry with them some form of identification, so they may receive proper and courteous treatment.

As a rule, many city churches have a standing committee whose duty it is to watch out for strangers coming into the house and to approach them immediately and take care of them. Frequently there are some ushers who are excellent in their work and who readily detect a stranger, secure his name, find out if he is a member of the church, and report it at once to the pastor. One can easily see that if a person comes in as a stranger, gets back under the balcony in the very rear seat or hangs around the vestibule, making no effort to approach anyone and keeping himself distant all the time, trying to evade recognition, that it is more than likely he will meet with coolness, especially in churches where they are not fully prepared to look after and handle visiting members.

In connection with this class of people you find a number who move from other districts and locate in the city and may be there for months before their identity as members is known, and probably would not be known then were it not for the fact that some serious sickness or trouble has overtaken them and they need the services of a pastor. In this way the pastor of the church and of groups have located and found many members of the church who were cool and indifferent, but later warmed up to the work again and are now doing good service.

Feeding the Flock

Another great task of the pastor is to feed the flock. The Apostle Peter said:

The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

It will be seen by this instruction that the chief duty of the pastor is to feed the flock. To do this it is necessary that the shepherd knows the flock from the finest sheep in it to the scrawniest, underfed runt. This means that he must know the value of the food, its nutriment, and the powers of digestion and assimilation of each one, so that he may not be feeding the sincere milk of the word to those of excellent development and the heavy meat to those who are but babes in the kingdom. To do this properly, he must be very careful of his selection of matter used in his sermons, the presentation of the matter, and its arrangement. He must know how to reach the well-to-do, the comfortably situated, the common people, the poor, and all concerned with his pungent statements, with his logic, with his illustrations and word pictures; and, in fact, he should be an adept at times in drawing word pictures, for no argument reaches the people more effectually than the word picture.

He must know what kind of lectures to deliver and when to deliver them. He must be very careful in his selection of addresses and talks to various departments of his church, to the auxiliary societies and others, because in all his sermons, lectures, addresses, and talks there should be food for thought that can be assimilated and that will contribute to the gradual growth and development of the member. His sermons, lectures, etc., should all be of a constructive character. Any pastor who presents destructive matter, who leaves his people in a quandary so that suspicion arises in their minds, and that suspicion is intensified by the secrecy of the pastor or his failure to explain further, injures his own efforts and makes his task far more difficult. Many times he goes down as a blundering failure.

Not only is this true so far as he, himself, is concerned, but it is true with reference to those whom he may select to occupy in the pulpit. When a pastor outlines his policy and carefully gets it before the people so that they understand quite clearly what the method of procedure will be for the year, it is very embarrassing to him at times to find some one, whom he has called upon to preach, upsetting his plans and retarding his work because of the antagonistic sermons that they have preached.

There is not anything that so quickly upsets the balance of the people as for a pastor to work them up to a high tension, constructively, and then to have some recognized representative of the church present that which is destructive, under the misleading intimations that he is moved upon by inspiration from on high in that which he is doing. People very quickly ask why the difference, and, if it is a work of inspiration, why should there be such a diversity of opinion and method of operation?

This is true also with reference to anyone making a lecture or an address or a talk before any of the departments of his church work. Many times the pastor desires to be courteous to and considerate of representatives of the church passing through his territory, so he seeks to have them preach or lecture for his people. They do not understand conditions, do not know of the problems the pastor is trying to solve; and many times, unwittingly to themselves, interfere very materially with the work that is being done. No doubt they would not do so could they understand the situation.

Again, in feeding the flock it is necessary that the pastor be a good judge of books, magazines, papers, and various other periodicals, so that he can recommend to different members reading matter that will be helpful to them, and at the same time will assist him in reaching his goal in the development of his constituents. More especially is this true in a city where there are large libraries, all kinds of bookstores, and especially secondhand bookstores. It is very easy for the unsophisticated to drop into many of these places and get hold of the wrong book or magazine or other reading matter, which would do more harm in one week than the pastor could do good in a year.

Pastor Must Be All Things to All Men

One can easily see, in the light of the suggestions in this article, that it is very necessary that a pastor must not only be cosmopolitan in his make-up and study and vision, but metropolitan as well, and that all of this outside matter used in feeding the flock must be woven and blended into the warp and woof of the philosophy of Jesus Christ, so as to be of the greatest benefit to his disciples, so they may get the fullest benefit of truth, especially when the Spirit is working in its office work of "guiding into all truth."

Another problem for the pastor is the religious training and education in the department known as Sunday school. This work is one that largely calls for volunteers. One cannot draft superintendents, teachers, and other workers, but must receive them as they will. In doing this we find very frequently teachers who know but little about the polity and policy of their church and who are not familiar even with the doctrine and philosophy, and whose interpretation, to say the least, is very faulty. This is not only true of the teacher but, many times, of the officers of the school as well. The conscientious pastor who fully appreciates that the Sunday school is a part of his work and should be a contributing factor towards its success, is many times worried to know how to meet this problem and to better the condition, for in the charity of his soul he knows that the officers and teachers are doing the best they can, according to their limited understanding and learning.

We might give you many more problems, but will forbear and leave the matter with the reader by repeating a former suggestion in this article, that we are not trying to tell you how we solve these problems or how we handle them to get the best results, as it would make our article too long, but, in conclusion, we leave the matter to you to consider for yourself how you would handle them, if you were sent to the city and were made the pastor of a city church.

In all candor and frankness, in our experience a city church is not an aristocracy nor a church made up of proud and haughty people; nor do the well-to-do people in any sense whatever try to inject any aristocracy into the church, but we find them, as well as all other good members, very willing to help and assist the pastor in any good, worthy undertaking that he may launch; however, such undertaking must appear to them as plausible and probable and one that will give results, and this is not only natural, but sound and reasonable.

The city church as we find it is a cantonment in which all of the forces and various grades of members of the body of Christ are assembled and organized for the purpose of carrying out God's work of converting men and women to Christ and also of building up men and women in Christ. He or she who cannot vision the church and her problems

Some Practical Aspects of Factory Management

In his third article on the factories, Professor H. A. Overstreet states that management has come to realize three things. First, you cannot get good work out of an over-driven worker; second, workmen tend to gravitate from the poor factory to those that are more wisely human; third, there is a noticeably high cost of low wages. This latter is rather remarkable, but has been repeatedly verified, that cheap men are dear. Every little trick to take a little from the wage fund is followed by more than a corresponding loss. It is for this reason that some managers have erroneously thought that there was an additional human instinct of incurable laziness.

Professor Overstreet, however, takes the position that men are happier when they work, that the instinct of workmanship is dominant, and cites the case of a number of college men, which he reinforces by observations of other workmen. The workman who damns work and shirks it is the one who is given more than he can carry. This does not mean that he would not be most willing if he was given a job equal to his strength and ability and was sure that the work would hold out.

Pride in workmanship is a great incentive, even in subordinate positions. Even when it is necessary that wages be reduced, the matter can be approached in a way to still maintain the esprit de corp and support of the workers.

Seeborn Rountree, a British employer, says they have adopted by agreement with the workers, a scheme by which controversies are referred to a board equally representative of the employers and workers. As a consequence, though employing 7,000 workers and dealing with nineteen unions, they have not had a strike in eighty-five years. This is the result of a policy of looking ahead in a spirit of generous conciliation with the workers.

In another case the drawing up of the wage scale was left to the workmen's committee, and to the employers' surprise they went at it more systematically than the managers had ever done. They first examined the wage scale in the entire industry, went over the whole situation, and made a report. This report was adopted by the company without a single modification.

But to be successful there must be a genuine democratic council. It is because of the lack of that democracy that many laboring men are still inclined to look askance at such councils.

Professor Overstreet relates a case where the manager's report on their own plant was a glowing one, but he learned later that there was no real independence or democracy; because the management called in the leading men, one by one, and laid whatever they wanted to before them, instead of allowing open and democratic consideration.

Finally Professor Overstreet emphasizes in his article in the Christian Work, from which these extracts are taken, that the manager is a worker as much as the man who works at the machine; that the real difficulty and vital problem of industry is the control by investing nonworkers. Anything that will help to close the gap between the management and men, hastens the day when intelligent consideration can be given to this strange situation of control by those whose chief interest is financial rather than industrial.

We present this summarized review to keep our readers in touch with what is being done and thought in the industrial world of to-day. It does not follow that every idea presented has received approval. It does mean that it is worth thinking about and when considered will throw light upon our own particular problem.

The Importance and Value of Proper Bible Study

To-day is the day of consistent reproaches that the word of God is so little read. Yet careful students recognize our literature is founded on a knowledge of the Bible. There is a need to convince, however, the ordinary young person of the importance and value of Bible study not only from the literary point of view but also from the religious point of view and, having secured this conviction, how to proceed properly to study the Bible, for we should study the book itself rather than some quarterly or review.

One of the best methods is to make a practice of daily reading to find out what it teaches, and it is then time to pray over that which has been read. It contains some wonderful passages which will well repay a memorizing.

All of this and more too is set forth in a book on the Importance and Value of Bible Study, by R. A. Torrey, which sells for $1.25 net. He continues, however, with some excellent suggestions on how to interpret the Bible.

In order to interpret the Bible rightly we must first of all get right with God so as to have his Spirit to direct our study. We must then go to work with the determination to find what God actually did direct—not what we would wish to have him teach.

Having made this personal preparation we should get as accurate a text as possible to learn as nearly as we can what the men originally inspired actually wrote. It is significant that any doctrine of vital importance is not affected by the variations in the versions.

Then strive to find the literal meaning of the texts. Too often an attempt to escape the truth is made by treating the language as figurative when it is a plain, clear statement. Those who approach it humbly desiring to learn the truth will be taught of God.

To accurately interpret, it is necessary to consider the Bible usage of the word, the usage of the particular author, the context, the reference passages in the light of related or parallel passages, and obscure passages in the light of those which are plain.

Any passage of the Bible should also be considered in the light of the condition under which it was given. How was it read by those to whom it was first addressed? It is also well to consider that which the right opposes and weigh in the light of that personal inclination.

But after all the Holy Spirit is the best guide.

There then follows the several great promises of the Lord to those who study his word. S. A. B.

Conditions in Bible Land

Situation better than a year ago. Near East Relief has saved many thousands.

For a century Greece has been free from the Turks' rule, and for a generation the land of Mount Ararat has been a part of Russia. As a result of the World War, Mesopotamia, Egypt, and the Arabian desert (Hedjez) have become nominally independent. Syria is a French mandatory; Palestine, a British mandatory. Other territory in Asia Minor held by the French, Greeks, or Italians has been returned to the Turks, so that the present Turkish state, as is pointed out in the Christian Work, extends from Syria and Mesopotamia to the Black Sea, and from Persia to Adrianople, in Thrace. But a more important change is the passing of the old Ottoman Empire with its political functions of the Sultan, as the Turkish state is now ruled by a Grand National Assembly sitting at Angora, so that the Kalif is no longer the supreme ruler of Turkey.

A million Christians in Bible lands have suffered martyrdom since the opening of the World War, but another million are alive because of the American help through the Near East Relief.

To-day a hundred thousand orphans are residing in American institutions in Bible lands. Also in the very spot in Jerusalem where Jesus said, "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones shall perish," the Near East is caring for several hundred children.

The situation is more favorable to-day than a year ago, as many of the orphans are now on free soil where they can enjoy life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and be properly educated so as to become useful citizens of the world. The money invested is now proving a sound one, as children will no longer be saved to provide material for future massacres, while the condition is also improving in Armenia.

The one particular dark spot is the refugee situation in Greece where among a million refugees there are many thousands of orphans needing instruction at once. According to the Christian Work, as yet little has been done in Greece by the Near East Relief because first attention has been given to the great problem of sheltering the tens of thousands removed by the Americans to safety following their expulsion by the Turks. "I Believe in Churches"

A woman of keen mind, rather wide experience in various forms of religious organization, and a minimum of ecclesiastical prejudices, recently said that one permanent article in her personal confession of faith was this: "I believe in churches." A much wiser utterance than the one which we used to hear rather more frequently a decade or two ago than now: "I believe in Christianity but not in churchianity." We were never able to get a reliable definition of that barbarous word, churchianity. It is a word that conveys no real meaning but only a set of implications and an innuendo. It hints at all manner of ecclesiastical abuses—of which there are always plenty—and that mistaken loyalty which makes the church an end in itself rather than a means. But devotion to Christianity and loyalty to churches have always gone hand in hand. As well might one say, I believe in education but not in schools; I believe in law but not in courts; I believe in healing but not in hospitals. However great may be the perils of institutionalism—and they are great, in every field of idealistic activity—still greater are the dangers of non-institutionalism. If the carpenter makes of his hammer and saw the objects of his adoration, withdraws them from use and enshrines them, woe betide his carpentering. But if he throws them away he also ceases to be a carpenter. Institutions are instruments and tools. Churches, with all their faults, are the best instruments we have for carrying on the work of religion. Not all religion is in churches. Happily, the influence reaches out beyond the institutions. But in general, the churches still bear the burden and do the work of carrying on Christianity, and the burden of proof is strangely against the man who says that he believes in Christianity but will not support the church by membership, means, or influence. "I believe in churches."—Christian Century, April 12, 1923.

Women in Church Offices

The Baptist, Congregational, Disciples, Protestant Methodists, and the United Brethren are among religious bodies which have admitted women to orders, according to the Central Christian Advocate. This publication, in its issue of April 18, continues:

"We are entirely confident that the admission of women to orders in the Methodist Episcopal Church is only a question of time. This is certain because only the prelatical and priestly conception of the ministry can stand in its way. The increasing democracy of the times is certain to take its stand with scholarship as well as with Christian freedom as against our inherited subservience to a conception of the ministry which, whilst we disclaim any such taint, does find its starting point in a priest-conception of the ministry."

But they add that if a vote were taken to-day it would probably be negative. This statement is made in connection with a meeting of a commission of the general conference, which was to meet during the last week in April to consider this question of admission of women. In the Methodist Episcopal Church, the southwestern Kansas conference voted in favor of the proposition with the qualification that women should not thereby become members of the annual conference. The New York conference voted against it.

Attention is again called to the existence of women deacons in the ancient church (Romans 16:1); also the earliest of noncanonical writings speak of this order in the early church.

The church to which we belong has distinctly a priestly conception of the ministry, together with a highly organized grade of priestly responsibility. On the other hand, we note that women do speak frequently from the pulpit in connection with the work of the Department of Women, the Health Department, and Social Service. Again a number of women, because of their general responsibility in connection with this work, have been included as ex-officios of the General Conference. S. A. B.

Two Books of Pulpit Stories

The minister as well as other public speakers often feels a sincere desire to find an apt story to illustrate the particular point he wishes to drive home.

To meet this need there has been published Stories and Poems for Public Addresses, by A. B. Webber, for $1.50 net. This includes several good stories on the Bible, Bible school, the Christian, Christ, Christmas, church, communion, the cross, death, Easter, and other such religious themes. The

Cancer of the Lip

Cancer of the lip occurs frequently in men and occasionally in women. It most always appears on the lower lip in both men and women; indeed cancer of the upper lip may be considered exceedingly rare, unless it be a direct extension from a far-advanced lower lip growth.

This type of cancer may develop at any time after the age of thirty, but it more frequently develops after forty. It appears in many instances at a point which is subjected to continual irritation, such as from a rough or hot pipe stem or from hot cigar smoke or more often from a broken or decayed tooth. It is now known, however, that many nonsmokers may develop this type of cancer, and of course many who smoke for years never develop it at all.

Cancer of the lower lip usually begins as a small painless surface sore, much like the familiar cold sore, but often accompanied by even less discomfort. A tiny crack or scaly patch on the lip soon covers itself with a thin crust which in a few days falls off, but in the case of cancer instead of leaving behind a new thin, smooth mucous membrane, the small crack still remains. It does not discharge or bleed, and another crust forms, which in turn separates or may be pushed off by the tongue, still leaving a small, raw, uncovered spot behind. Up to this point, the process has taken perhaps a month, and from this time on the cycle is repeated over and over again, except that gradually the raw spot becomes larger, the edges a little firmer, and a trace of blood appears—a condition much like what is commonly called "proud flesh." If still allowed to continue untreated, the ulcer becomes large, may extend down below the red lip margin, and may start secondary growth as shown by a small lump or node under the chin, below and behind the cancer. At this stage it has become far more dangerous than when it was simply a local superficial sore.

The best treatment is a complete removal of all diseased structures by a competent surgeon. Advice should be sought by any adult who has an open sore of any sort upon the lip which does not readily disappear. Such a sore is not necessarily a cancer—nevertheless it should always be the subject of a thorough investigation.

Cancer of the Tongue

This type of the disease, a little less frequent than cancer of the lip, is like it in commencing as a crack or a raw spot, book is evidently primarily for the minister—much more so than for the secular public speaker—even though over forty pages are given over to humorous stories out of a total of 215 pages. The stories are of a high grade and should prove acceptable to many speakers.

Another book of the same general character is Apt Illustrations for Public Addresses, by the same author. These stories are for the minister as well as for public addresses on other occasions. These stories include humorous, pathetic, dramatic, homely incidents. Some of the subjects treated are: the Bible, Christ, the church, conversion, death, Easter, faith, forgiveness, honesty, judgment, love, mother, prayer, preaching, prohibition, sacrifice, service, thanksgiving, and quite a number of miscellaneous stories. This book also sells for $1.50.

but in this case on the smooth edge of the tongue. It is usually considered to be a "canker" spot and most frequently is situated at a point in contact with a broken or decayed and sharp-edged tooth. Pain, except in very slight degree, is usually absent. The small spot does not heal and slowly grows both deeper and larger. Its edges are a little, but not very much, harder than the rest of the tongue.

This is the favorable time for complete removal by a competent surgeon, for the operation can be more thoroughly done, is less extensive in its scope, and is much more likely to remove the entire tumor. An operation at a late stage can never be as successful as that undertaken promptly, while the process is still local and limited.

In the course of a few months, a small pea-shaped gland may be found under the chin, or at the angle of the jaw, but it is often absent, or at least very difficult to feel, especially if the chin is held up and the muscles contracted during the examination. Gradually a slight odor and an increase of saliva is noted as the ulcer enlarges. This ulcer may be situated anywhere on the tongue, but is most often located laterally on the forward half, and as the growth continues some of the free motion of the tongue is lost.

Advice should be sought long before this late stage has arrived, for cancer of the tongue is an extremely serious form of the disease.

Cancer of the Cheek

This type of the disease, here considered as of the inner surface of the cheek, in a vast majority of cases means a late stage of lip or tongue cancer.

Even when there is no sore on tongue or lip a small raw painless sore may sometimes appear on the inner side of the cheek, usually in contact with a bad tooth. It may often be situated in the depression between the cheek and the gums. It is essentially similar to tongue cancer in its progress, and advice concerning it should be sought at a correspondingly early date; that is, as soon as observed.

So far as known, chronic irritation is the only constant factor that appears in these three cancers, though syphilis seems to increase the susceptibility, and in this situation, as elsewhere, constant irritation seems rather to diminish local resistance to, than be the actual cause of, the cancer.

Cancer of the Nose and Throat

Malignant disease may occur in great variety in the nose, in the cavities communicating with the nose, and in the upper pharynx. It is always a serious condition and may develop at any period of life. Its causes are unknown, and its first symptoms may be obscure. The earliest symptoms are, as a rule, swelling, which may interfere with the passage of air through the affected side of the nose, increased discharge from that side, local pain and neuralgia, headache, loss of appetite and of weight. Of course, these symptoms may appear only one at a time or very gradually, so as to suggest to the patient no more than inflammation, but it is a great mistake to wait before consulting a physician or surgeon until a permanent swelling of the nose or cheek indicates the probability of a tumor. Occasionally a relatively slow-growing tumor in persons from twelve to twenty years of age may cause permanent deformity to the growing bones of the nose and palate. Frequent bleeding from the nose or mouth with changes in voice, should suggest such a possibility, without waiting for the later symptom of difficulty of swallowing. Transillumination and X ray are of help in diagnosis and should be used in all chronic nasopharyngeal disturbances.

The treatment of nasal tumors depends on the location, character, and extent of the growth. Many harmless tumors are permanently removed by a simple operation; sometimes malignant growths are cured. Other forms of treatment, such as electro-cautery, electrolysis, and radium are occasionally used with beneficial results in advanced cases or in elderly patients upon whom an exhausting operation would hardly be advisable. As a rule, the tumors of this region grow with great rapidity so that early recognition is imperative. Where a suspicion of such trouble arises, the case should at once have the benefit of the best expert advice.

Cancer of the Larynx

The relative frequency of laryngeal cancer is unknown. About one in seven of the growths of the larynx are malignant. It is rare in youth; about 40 per cent of cases occur between the ages of 50 and 60; and 84 per cent between 40 and 70. Over 80 per cent occur in men.

The causes are uncertain; possible local irritation arising from various conditions may excite it. The influence of tobacco is questionable; where this disease is present, however, the use of tobacco must be discontinued.

The earliest symptoms are a change in the voice, difficulty in speaking, a sense of discomfort in the throat, and sometimes a slight cough. Pain may be present or not. If present, it is sharp and shooting in character, and felt in the larynx. Loss of voice follows, with difficulty and pain in swallowing, and copious expectoration of fetid material. As the surrounding muscles and glands are invaded there is swelling of the neck.

If recognized very early, while the disease is confined to a small area within the interior of the larynx, successful operation is possible, but only at the hands of an experienced, skilled surgeon, especially trained for this particular work. Proper local treatment will save considerable suffering and possibly somewhat prolong life.

Cancer of the Tonsil

Primary cancer of the tonsil is an infrequent disease. This gland may be attacked either by sarcoma or carcinoma. Both forms begin in one tonsil only; therefore persistent symptoms confined to one tonsil should always arouse suspicion. Sarcoma of this structure may develop at any age but is most common between 15 and 30. The early symptoms are congestion of the tonsil and near-by mucous membrane, soon followed by enlargement of that gland. Pain, when present at all, is usually dull, though there is often a sense of fullness in the throat, a thick voice, and difficulty in swallowing. The glands of the neck are slow to enlarge. Simple subacute tonsillitis, syphilis, and most other forms of tonsillar congestion and enlargement usually respond to medical treatment; sarcoma does not. The growth is smooth, dark red, bleeds easily, and often ulcerates early. In the later stages the disease makes extensive advancement in all directions, involving the important structures of the neck, and making the outlook hopeless. Whatever prospect of successful treatment there may be lies in the early removal of the tumor or efficient X-ray or radium treatment.

Carcinoma of the tonsil is more frequent than sarcoma, and occurs like most forms of cancer, in middle and advanced life. The earliest symptoms, often very obscure, are pain in the region of the tonsil, congestion, swelling, and discharge from the tonsillar crypts. The surface is nodular and not inclined to bleed. Later there is increasing pain, radiating to the ear and aggravated by the act of swallowing. There is fullness in the throat, and a thick voice. The progress is usually rapid. Ulceration occurs late, but the glands are involved early. Anæmia follows with a swelling of the larynx to such an extent that it may be necessary to admit air to the lungs by inserting a tube into the trachea.

Carcinoma of the tonsil has been successfully treated by radical surgical removal. Half-way measures are worse than useless. At the best the results of treatment are usually only palliative. Of course, the smaller and less active the growth, and the earlier it is recognized, the better the outlook. Radium and X-ray treatment may prolong life but almost never cure.

Cancer of the Stomach

The stomach is the seat of this disease in nearly a quarter of all the fatal cases of cancer. This proportion is indicated by the figures of the Census Bureau for 1917 for the Registration Area of the United States. This form of the disease is certainly not diminishing, but the death rate should be cut down by early diagnosis and operative treatment. The census report further shows that deaths from cancer of the stomach are in the proportion of 19.3 per 100,000 population. It is a little more common in men than in women and occurs with increasing frequency with advancing years. Its onset is insidious, but nearly always there are warnings which, if heeded, would save many a life at the period of its greatest usefulness.

The stomach is a muscular contracting bag lined with mucous membrane. When it contains food, it is in continual motion. If the food consists of hard lumps instead of soft, well-masticated material, there is bruising of the lining of the stomach, and this bruising is most frequent at the outlet where the muscular walls of the organ are in more violent motion. As a matter of fact, most cancers of the stomach occur near the outlet.

A stomach previously rendered sensitive by irritating substances has, in the very nature of things, a lowered resistance. Examples of such substances are alcohol, highly seasoned food, and tobacco. The excessive use of these agents may be accompanied by retardation of the digestion and by the secretion of too much acid. It is therefore thought that any condition which predisposes to ulcer of the stomach may be a forerunner of cancer.

The symptoms of ulcer and those of cancer are often similar. There is distress after eating, at times amounting to actual pain. A change in the desire for certain foods, such as a distaste for meat, is not uncommon. Belching, nausea, and vomiting occur later. In the case of ulcer, the vomiting of blood is more common than in cancer, but this sign is not rare in the later stages of cancer. The general health suffers; there is loss of weight and sallowness of the complexion. There is no visible lump or one which can be felt from the outside, even by a skillful physician, until the disease is far advanced.

When the growth is at the outlet of the stomach, the symptoms of distress, pain, and vomiting show themselves earlier than when the disease is remote from the outlet. Cancer of the upper end or inlet of the stomach is accompanied by difficulty in swallowing solid food.

The outlook for cure in cancer of the stomach depends entirely upon the possibility of the complete removal of the growth. Unfortunately most of the cases in which operation is undertaken are so far advanced by the time the physician sees the patient that only a palliation is possible. Since cancers in this region often follow ulcers it is self-evident that ulcers of the stomach should be recognized and cured before there is a cancerous degeneration. The various methods of modern diagnosis, including the X ray, will usually establish the existence of a condition of the stomach requiring operation.

Complete and careful physical examination is imperative in all cases of indigestion beginning after the age of forty, and periodic examinations of all healthy adults should be encouraged.

Cancer of the Intestines

This form of the disease is practically limited to the large bowel, and one cancer occurs in this locality to every eight in the stomach. Two thirds of the cancers of the large intestine are situated in its lower portion, called the rectum. The greater part of those situated in the large intestine proper are in a portion of the bowel just above the rectum (on the left side), called the sigmoid. Intestinal cancer occurs in about the same frequency in both sexes, and differs from other forms of cancer in that it is found occasionally in young children.

There seems to be no local conditions which can be blamed for having any particular effect in the development of this type of the disease, though a small proportion of cases of cancer of the sigmoid develop on the site of a peculiar inflammatory condition—diverticulitis.

The symptoms differ somewhat according to whether the disease originates in the large intestine proper or in the rectum. In the large intestine proper, the disease, for the most part, tends to spread circularly around the gut, producing constriction. The most consistent early symptom ordinarily noticed by the patient, therefore, is increasing constipation. It is regrettable that this symptom does not more often lead to a proper early investigation, many middle-aged or elderly persons apparently believing that an increasing constipation is natural with advancing years. The excessive use of cathartics may for a time combat this tendency, but if the individual takes notice, he will find, usually, that action of the bowels under these conditions produces pain at a certain and constant point. X-ray diagnosis may reveal a narrowing of the gut even in an early stage.

In this particular form of cancer, passage of blood is an inconstant symptom, many people passing little or none excepting in the later stages. Abnormal passage of slime or mucous is also infrequent.

This type of cancer does not tend to attain very large size, leading to recognition of a tumor or lump, until the later stages. The condition is insidious; and until actual obstruction of the intestine exists, the patient, unless unusually alert, may not realize that anything is the matter with him. Failure of general health, loss of flesh, alteration of color or jaundice are very late manifestations, and may only become evident after the disease has existed for some time, even two or three years.

It must be said that this is an extremely difficult form of cancer to diagnose because of the lack or late appearance of the symptoms. Careful periodic medical examination after the age of forty would result in the discovery of many of these tumors which now go unrecognized.

Cancer of the Rectum

Signs here are somewhat more definite and more pronounced. Usually this kind of cancer starts from one side of the bowel instead of encircling it, and the manifestations of obstruction are usually delayed until late in the disease. Pain occurs more constantly than in the form just described, but is also a variable quantity; and an extensive growth sometimes exists without giving rise to very much pain until the later or hopeless stages.

On the other hand, the passage of some blood and abnormal matter, like slime or mucous, occurs quite frequently. The movements may have an unusually offensive odor. As in the large intestine proper, the disease is usually of slow growth and the patient's general health may be maintained for a long time.

Neither of these conditions is difficult of diagnosis. The errors are made from lack of careful recognition of the possible importance of appropriate examinations by an expert, particularly X-ray pictures of the large intestine proper, and a thorough examination of the rectum both by touch and inspection, if necessary with the aid of an electrically lighted instrument.

Bleeding from the bowels is a symptom which never should be neglected. While the most frequent form comes from the presence of hemorrhoids, the fact that it does come from this source and not from some other condition must be satisfactorily demonstrated. Moreover, not infrequently the two conditions—cancer and hemorrhoids—coexist. Most of the failures in the recognition of cancer of the rectum have come from this confusion with the symptoms or presence of hemorrhoids.

Treatment is surgical if the disease is in the early stage. Some portions of the large intestines lend themselves particularly well to the performance of a very satisfactory, safe, and efficient radical operation. Radium and X rays only prolong life and do not give permanent cures.

The early surgical treatment of cancer of the large intestine is often successful. Cancer of the rectum has, on the whole, greater technical difficulties. The outlook for advanced and delayed cases is particularly bad.

Cancer of the Bladder

Cancer of the bladder is fairly frequent, occurring in about 1 out of 200 malignant tumors; which means that in this country four or five hundred people die every year from cancer of this organ. The disease is five times as frequent in men as it is in women, and rarely occurs before the age of forty, while the greatest number of cases are seen in patients from fifty to seventy years of age. It is one of the most difficult forms of cancer to diagnose and treat, because such cancers may grow to a considerable size before they give any symptoms. Pain, which is not infrequent in these types, occurs only at a late stage, and then sometimes only as a feeling of bearing down or while straining to pass urine. It is rare that a tumor is so large that it can be felt through the abdominal wall. It is of the utmost importance, therefore, that the cardinal symptom of cancer of the bladder should be generally known. This symptom is blood in the urine, which appears without warning or apparent cause. When it is noticed a physician should be immediately consulted; yet many cases of bladder carcinoma are allowed to run on for a long time, simply because the patient thinks that a little blood in the urine is a matter of no significance since there is no pain or stoppage of urine. In the late stages the bladder will always become severely inflamed, and foul-smelling urine will be passed with difficulty and pain. This means that the tumor has spread to the neck and walls of the bladder, and cure is then difficult or impossible. While blood in the urine is not necessarily a symptom of cancer, for it may be caused by a stone in the bladder or even by nonmalignant tumors of the bladder or by certain diseases of the kidney—still, these facts can be ascertained only by a surgeon. The blood may be very slight and only occasional in the early stages of the nonmalignant tumors (or even in the dangerous kinds); but in three fourths of the cases these tumors ultimately turn into a malignant form and then are extremely difficult to cure by surgery. It must be remembered, therefore, that when a bladder tumor gives much pain or can be felt in the abdomen it is usually hopeless. The patient should consult a surgeon the first moment that blood is seen, since the tumors grow slowly, as a rule, and do not spread in the body until they have been present for a long time.

A certain cure can be effected only by removal of the tumor from the bladder. X ray and radium are of more value in delaying the growth and in relieving pain than they are in affording permanent relief. The electric cautery in the form of a high-frequency current is also of little value in the treatment of cancer of the bladder, though it is very beneficial in the relatively harmless papillary outgrowths which occur not infrequently in this organ. The three things to be remembered, therefore, are that the appearance of a reddish coloring matter in the urine is a danger signal whether or not it is accompanied by pain or stoppage of the urine, that a surgeon should be immediately consulted, and that the only way in which he can make a positive diagnosis is by inserting an examining instrument into the bladder so as to look in and see just what is present. If a physician cannot do this he can only guess at the cause of the trouble.

Cancer of the Kidney

The only symptoms of cancer of the kidney are a lump in the abdomen and blood in the urine. A shadow may be seen on X-ray examination. Pain in the back is rare unless the tumor is large. The only cure is operation as early as possible. Fortunately, such cancers are rare.

Conclusions

From what has been presented, it will be noted that the conclusion of many of the leading statisticians of this country is that cancer is slowly increasing in the United States and that it has become one of the most important causes of death in people forty-five years of age or over.

The public in general is ignorant of the symptoms of cancer and not aware of the necessity for early treatment if good results are to be obtained. Because of this lack of knowledge, relatively few patients go to a physician in time for satisfactory treatment.

The purpose of this handbook is to inform the public that the important factor in the successful treatment of cancer is its early recognition, which cannot be accomplished unless those who have tumors consult a competent physician on the discovery of the first symptoms.

As cancer is neither a germ disease nor contagious, but springs from some abnormal growth of cells in the body, it cannot be handled by such public health measures as have so greatly diminished typhoid fever and tuberculosis.

As, therefore, physicians cannot by any means control the incidence of cancer, their efforts are turned to the direct cure of the disease or of any slight trouble or irritation such as may lead to cancer.

The opinion of the most able physicians and surgeons of the country at the present time is that medicines taken internally are not effective as cures for cancer. Neither pastes nor other nonoperative methods widely advertised by quack doctors (some of whom unfortunately are physicians) can cure cancer. The favorable results, reported in the newspapers and in the advertising material and testimonials of these charlatans, are obtained with ulcerating growths which are not cancerous. There is no question that a cancer can be destroyed by a caustic, but much of the normal tissue about the cancer is also eaten away, and the caustic is less easy to control in its action and much less certain than the removal of the whole tumor by the knife. Cancer cannot be cured by osteopathy or Christian Science.

Radium has been much used of late in the treatment of cancers of the skin, and has been found to be of great value in certain types, even when small quantities are employed.

Other cancers are very difficult to cure by radium, even when used in large quantity. When the tumor has grown into the bone or cartilage, or has spread by previous ineffectual treatment by caustics, or when the growth is complicated by syphilis or by tuberculosis, the results by this method are unsatisfactory. Cancers of the tongue, lip, and mouth, and especially those of the womb, have been treated with varying success, but it is still the general opinion of those who work with radium that for the present at least all cases of dangerous or malignant tumors which can be successfully removed by operation should be so treated, radium being reserved for such tumors as are beyond the reach of surgery. Deep-seated cancer, such as those of the breast, lung, stomach, abdomen, intestinal tract, bladder, and elsewhere, are usually beyond the effective reach of radium, but often much improvement can be obtained by carefully adjusted applications. The proper use of radium requires a large experience and great skill if serious burns are to be avoided, and as a rule large quantities must be employed, so that not every physician has a sufficient amount with which to treat cancer. On the other hand, X rays have much the same effect on cancer that radium has. Suitable apparatus is not very expensive, so that if radium is not available X rays may very properly be used in treating those types of cancer which are favorably influenced by radium. Whether X rays are just as effective as are large quantities of radium in the general treatment of cancer has not yet been decided. It is not possible to use them as effectively in some cases of internal cancer, because while radium can be inserted into the bowel or into the uterus, it is very difficult to get a sufficient quantity of the X rays to penetrate the body to these organs. In superficial cancers, however, when radium is not available, the X ray should be used, and its use soon after incomplete or palliative operation often temporarily checks the growth and greatly prolongs the life and comfort of the patient. In places where radium is not available, the X ray is, therefore, the best substitute.

Everyone should remember, therefore, that cancer begins as a very small growth, and if it could be removed a short time after it appears would always be curable. As the symptoms are obscure and not always characteristic, it is necessary to consult a good physician at the earliest possible moment and not to delay or to apply home remedies in the hope that the trouble is of no importance. This should be borne in mind by every person over forty.

Cancer kills one in ten of the people of the United States after that age. The leading physicians of the country believe that the best results at present are obtained by cutting the tumor out as soon as it appears and not waiting for it to grow, as it always does, and affect other parts of the body so that its removal is made much more difficult or dangerous.

According to the Outlook telephone conversations from coast to coast are continuously in progress both day and night despite the fact that three through trunk lines link the Atlantic and Pacific. It sometimes takes forty minutes to make a connection. Especially are the lines busy at night as the rate is about half from 8.30 to midnight and about a quarter from midnight to 4.30 a. m. so that about half of the conversations take place at night. An interesting feature is that these lines can also be used for telegraph without interfering with telephone service and provides a private telephone line which is always much in demand by certain business houses. The number of telephones in active operation in the United States approximates 15,000,000.

Stewardships and the Order of Enoch

Recently the SAINTS' HERALD was a little late reaching my home, and I was unusually anxious to get it. Finally it came, and my heart was made to rejoice to read of the stewardship plan as presented in the HERALD by the bishop of the Far West Stake and its indorsement by the President of the church. Truly we must not as a church wait till the working details of stewardships are all worked out before they are established.

"He that waiteth for a commandment in all things is a slothful and not a wise servant."

The Lord says, "The power to do good is in us." He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not to him it is sin.

I, for one, am ready for stewardships. True, I haven't very much money, but I have a little, and I think a little money invested in stewardships and the Order of Enoch will accomplish more good in the redemption of Zion than thousands spent in a haphazard way. As a church we must not simply have our religion in the abstract but in a concrete form, that we may truly be the light of the world, not only spiritually but socially. As a church let us show our faith in God and our confidence in his divinely appointed leaders by doing the things written and not merely by saying, "Lord, Lord." Truly we, in establishing the stewardship plan, may make some mistakes, but should we fail to make the effort our mistakes would be much greater. Shall we go forward and succeed, or remain where we are and fail?

Elder Clifford Arouses Great Interest

It was with regret that we, on Monday last, were obliged to bid farewell to our beloved brother, C. M. Clifford, who has been with us for the past month. Although this was his first visit to our community, he has made many friends, and has instilled within the Saints here a greater love for and appreciation of this great work. We wish Brother Clifford might return to this field in the near future. The field is so large and there is so much work to be done, that our hearts yearn to see God's servants come to our assistance.

Not at any time in our experience in the work have we felt such a pressing need for men, men of God, men who are capable of presenting this message in a logical manner, such as our brother has done. This is the method of appeal that seems to reach the honest-hearted and thoughtful Canadian, and we have rejoiced many times that our message is so rational and our premise so sound. Although our efforts have not been crowned with any immediate tangible results, numbers have started to investigate, and friends have been made for the gospel, not mentioning the amount of miasmatic fog of ignorance and misunderstanding that has been cleared away.

Prior to our brother's arrival, we thoroughly advertised his meetings and secured a theater for five Sundays in the principal business section of the town. We began on April 1 in that place, and then during the week in Saints' Hall, until the middle of the month, when, the weather permitting, we went out on the street corner and preached to hundreds every night. It was gratifying to see many return night after night to hear our message. A number of questions were asked, and there were also requests for literature. Their wants were successfully met in these respects, although our supply of pamphlets was rather limited.

We feel assured that the Lord's promise to us in this place will be fulfilled, that if we continued steadfast and lived the gospel, the wheat would be discerned and would be gathered into the fold, and this has stimulated us to keep, as it were, the ground prepared for the missionary by scrupulously performing our duties.

May the Saints pray for us that we may ever keep before us this vision of Zion and our right to citizenship therein.

This is our prayer:

May unity and peace reside
Within our midst, O Lord.
In hearts and lives let love abide.
Oh, may we hear thy word.

Yours in gospel bonds, O. L. WEAVER, D. D. S.

A Trip to Far West from Independence

As an outgrowth of the young people's meetings held weekly at the Stone Church in Independence, an auto trip was taken on Sunday, May 13, to the old historic spot where Far West once flourished in the thirties.

The trip was preceded by lectures by Walter W. Smith on the history and geography of the region.

One postponement had been made because of threatening weather, but finally the trip was made with good weather and roads.

Approximately forty-five cars reached the place, some delayed because of car trouble and some because they for various reasons lost out in the long drive of seventy-one miles by the most direct route through Kansas City, Liberty, Lathrop, and Kearney.

It was interesting to see so large a number of cars in one long string, journeying back over the same route taken by the Saints in their trip to Caldwell County when driven out of Clay County in 1836, the "Cannon Ball Trail." Muslim car signs with the words "Far West," had been provided for twenty-eight cars, on the idea that this would be more than enough, but these soon were all taken and flags provided for others, and still many others had no markings at all.

A check-up was made at Liberty and thirty-five cars counted there. A considerable number had gotten behind and taken the roads leading farther east and some had gone to the west, and some had engine and tire troubles. But the main contingent of the party arrived shortly after eleven and a service was held with Frederick A. Smith as speaker. The Saints have a nice little church at Far West, and under the leadership of Elder Giles P. Koger hold regular services. Their congregation was supplemented by visitors from Cameron, Kingston, and other points in that territory.

Dinner was served on the lawn for most of the local people and many private parties had their meals here and there about the grounds. Visits were made to the old temple lot, where the corner stones still show where they were laid in the excavation made for the temple. It is a beautiful location, probably the highest in the county, and as one looks in all directions he is inspired with the possibilities of the region and its surrounding territory.

At two o'clock, with some still arriving, (Brother R. T. Cooper, who had broken a spring, arrived after three) another service was held, this time on the lawn, with F. A. Smith as speaker, E. D. Moore in charge as organizer of the expedition, and prayer by Elder E. F. Robertson, missionary in Far West Stake. Song service in charge of Elder J. S. Andes. It was an impressive occasion and caused the people to think seriously over the problems the church had confronted in those days and is still confronting. Elder J. W. Peterson offered the benediction.

The drive home was made in several sections, and though with distractions for a few whose autos misbehaved or whose gasoline tanks went dry with no supply near, almost all came in with much satisfaction over the trip in general and the impressions gained.

Some of the Cameron and Far West people are considering a return visit, which we hope will materialize.

News From Philadelphia

For months I have been trying to find time to write. Several months ago Brother Stoff, our new pastor in Philadelphia, asked me to keep you posted regarding affairs here, and when I accepted the position of correspondent I fully intended writing every week.

Brother Stoff arrived, and his first sermon we shall never forget. Right from the shoulder. He said it was "just a talk to stimulate thought." Some of us are thinking yet about that "talk." He spoke of the menace of present evils of the world creeping into the church and of keeping oneself unspotted from the vices of the world. I make a practice of keeping notes on every sermon I hear, and my notes bear out the fact that Brother Stoff's "talks" so far have been excellent, stimulating, convincing; and for just "talks," as he calls them, they have been equal to the best sermons I have heard from the Philadelphia pulpit in the years I have been here—eight in all. But Brother Stoff is not alone in the preaching at Philadelphia. Brother Mottashed, Brother Milligan, Brother John Zimmermann, and others take active part in the preaching.

Our priesthood is as active now as it ever has been, to my knowledge. We meet every two weeks, and our meetings are usually two hours or more in length, and we are loath to go when they are over.

We have incorporated a men's meeting, which convenes once a month to discuss branch topics and anything else of interest. Its purpose is to get all the men together. Refreshments usually precede the meeting, and the men of Philadelphia have found there are plenty of "good fellows" right in our branch whom they never knew thoroughly before.

Boy Scout meetings here have gone "over the top." They excel any previously held here; our troop is being noticed, and facts concerning it are being published in the Philadelphia Scout paper.

I know little of the women's organizations and Orioles excepting that they, too, are very active. The Young Married Women's Club meets regularly each Friday evening, and the Orioles on Monday.

Brother Edmund J. Gleazer has been preaching for us all last week, and his sermons are of the highest caliber. I wish time and space would permit me to give you the outlines of the sermons I heard. Brother Gleazer spoke to the Saints particularly, and there wasn't a Saint who heard him who by the end of the week wasn't proud he had accepted the gospel and more determined to do his share in the great gospel work and the establishment of Zion. Everyone was particularly glad to have Brother Gleazer in our midst once more.

Starting Easter Monday, a holiday, he had rather larger audiences. The size of the audiences increased as times went on as did the interest until Sunday evening when there was hardly a seat to spare in the house. Then even though Brother Gleazer preached a long sermon, everyone was intensely interested, and we feel we all wished he could have continued both that sermon and many more. I know I did.

I am now teaching school at Swarthmore Preparatory School in Swarthmore, Pennsylvania. I have been teaching and coaching athletics for a year or more and have been going to Camp Pennsylvania and acting as head of the Junior Camp there on Lake Champlain, New York, during summer vacations. The Presidency has released me from missionary service to continue my schooling, and I have been taking work in spare time at the University of Pennsylvania, where I am now in my junior year. I get a chance to do some preaching in Philadelphia and Brooklyn occasionally.

I would appreciate correspondence from any of my old friends among the many Saints I met while in the Middle West.

Toronto has many beautiful parks, and the people surely know how to use them—winter and summer. In winter the park employees fence in sections which they flood with water; then the hockey games are in evidence. Other places are also flooded for skaters, light poles being placed where needed, so there is skating day and night. Girls and boys tramp over the parks with snowshoes, ride down the hills in bobsleds and toboggans, and jump around like jack rabbits, on skis.

In summer, picnics, tennis, cricket, and baseball send thousands out daily into the open air. The parks in this town are not for ornamental purposes alone; they are for use.

The Religio athletic committee had visions of approaching spring. The result—a banquet. It was a one hundred per cent affair. The spirit of youth even seized some of the "has beens." Brother M. Crowley was the presiding genius, while Sister B. Hewitt and able assistants got up one of the prettiest and most successful banquets, in the opinion of many, ever held in the church. The Religio has had a splendid attendance this winter. John Hughes, superintendent, adopted the policy of making the lesson feature the principal drawing card. The attendance is evidence his policy was a wise one. Church history, present revelation, and the Book of Mormon are the subjects under consideration.

The attendance at the sacrament service has been splendid. The Sunday school, with B. Hewitt at its head, has gone over the two hundred mark. The other departments are in competent hands and are doing well. There is considerable interest among the young people in the coming young people's convention at Lamoni. The big question is: Who is going to be chosen to go? One of the brethren is planning on taking an automobile load with him.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

From Arkansas City, Kansas

A new church and work is gradually progressing.

It has been some time since we have written, but we can assure you that we have not been asleep by any means.

Brother C. E. Harpe has been here of late and preached some very fine sermons, and brought in three more precious souls to help us. Two of them are very young but all the better to put their shoulders to the wheel and help, if properly taught after their baptism. Two more have said they also were going to be baptized in a week or so.

Brother Harpe has gone out to Hardtner to preach and is doing good out there too, and baptizing some. We earnestly hope that the Lord will bless his efforts for good wherever he may go.

We were also favored with a sermon from Brother Benjamin R. McGuire a short time ago; would have been glad to have him stay and preach for us some more, but he had to leave before church was over. Come again, Brother McGuire, and we hope to be able to have a larger crowd out to hear you, for we had a fine sermon.

We are getting a few, but they seem to come so slowly it makes us feel rather discouraged some of the time; then after a while one or two will step forward in obedience to His commands and we feel somewhat encouraged for a while. We would feel so much better if some of the men would think more seriously of the matter and would step forth in obedience to the commands. Let me suggest that we hold them up before the Lord in prayer that they may come, for they can surely be a help to the work if they only would come.

We have a beautiful little church now, and anyone coming to Winfield can easily find it, for it is near the South Winfield Santa Fe depot. We are so thankful, for after looking forward for nine years we have a church at last. Brothers A. C. Martin, J. R. Davis, and others will remember how we used to rent ground and put up the tent and have preaching.

We expect to hold a reunion about the 17th of August, which I believe will be a big help to us. I hope it will be attended by all who can come, for we believe that we have a good place for it, and will try to have things ready for a good reunion.

We had quite a nice Easter program for the Sunday school arranged by Sister Farmer who so faithfully trained the children, and we are promised another for Mothers' Day.

Our president, Brother George W. Vickery, has been away for some time and left the care of the branch to the other officers who have been faithful to their duty; we also had some good sermons by Brother Hughes.

Anyone coming to visit our meetings can come to Charles T. Pooler, 525 North Fifth Street, Arkansas City, Kansas; or George W. Vickery, 914 North Third Street, Arkansas City, Kansas; or Earl Farmer, Winfield, Kansas. The church location is 1315 Stewart Street, one half block east and one half block north of the South Winfield Santa Fe depot.

Holden Stake Items

Elders Greene and Phillips Do Good Work.

Brother U. W. Greene has been delivering lectures and sermons in the stake, occupying at Grandview, Lexington, and Lees Summit. Grandview reports the attendance at his lecture on Easter Sunday the largest of any service ever held in their church. The Saints are pleased that Brother Greene has improved in health to the extent that he can take up his work again.

Elder Arthur B. Phillips has been visiting Holden the past few weeks, speaking on Friday evenings in reply to an attack made upon the church by Elder Briney, an aged minister and the pastor of the Disciple Church. Elder Briney delivered his lectures Sunday evenings from his pulpit, Brother Phillips replying on the following Friday evenings. Sisters Ticy Moler and Ethel Macrae took down the speeches of Elder Briney in shorthand, and submitted them to Elder Phillips. At his closing lecture Elder Briney made a challenge for discussion, and Brother Phillips presented a counter challenge. These were both published in the local paper.

The Saints are highly pleased with the results. Brother Phillips's gentlemanly and scholarly bearing made an attractive contrast to the attitude of his opponent, who manifested a spirit of unfairness, maliciousness, or ignorance. His main effort seemed to be to stir up a prejudice and misinform the people. Mr. C. L. Hobart's [editor of the Holden Progress] publicity work in connection with this affair did much for justice and fairness. All of his work was voluntary and without solicitation. Many of Elder Briney's own congregation attended every lecture of Brother Phillips, and expressed themselves as greatly pleased. The Saints were not the aggressors, but have met the attack and are continuing to live their religion daily, "gaining favor in the eyes of the people." Three who had attended the lectures were baptized by Brother Krahl the Sunday following Brother Phillips's last lecture.

The East Independence Saints are considering the erection of a new church edifice. They have decided on a site, appointed a local committee who have taken up the question with the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and stake authorities.

Lees Summit Saints have done some very commendable repairing and improving of the interior of their church. Bishop May, the pastor at Lees Summit, in connection with the stake bishop, has had direct oversight of the work.

Brother J. W. A. Bailey has held a series of meetings this year at Holden and Marshall. Good audiences greeted him nightly. Twelve were baptized at Marshall. He was announced to begin services at Nelson on Sunday, May 6.

Brethren R. E. Burgess and J. F. Petre have been holding services at Lexington and vicinity. Five were baptized.

The Holden Home for the aged has recently laid new oak floors in their halls and dining room, the Home family turning over the proceeds of their bazaar to apply on the cost of the same.

CORRESPONDENT.

Seattle, Washington

All departments doing good work.

We were thinking of our many friends, and wishing that we could send each a personal letter, but as that is impossible we thought we would write to your very valuable paper, as we feel sure they all read it.

We are very comfortably settled at 4806 Aurora Avenue, and are well cared for by the Saints of this place. It is indeed a pleasure to have such noble, earnest people to labor among, for they inspire us with greater zeal and courage to press onward in this the most glorious work man ever engaged in.

The meetings are all well attended and good interest is taken; especially would we mention the young people's prayer meetings held at 8.30 a. m. Sundays. Our young people are very active in these meetings. The Lord is blessing them, and they are qualifying for greater service in the different departments.

The church school is growing under the leadership of Brother Wilford W. Powers. There are two classes in teacher training, one Sunday evening in the Department of Expression and Recreation, the other one on Tuesday evening at the home of Brother Lasater, Sister Ida E. Jones being the teacher for both classes. Twenty-one are enrolled and are almost ready for examination.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is doing a splendid work, having two sessions a week, one session Sunday evening where different subjects are taught; a short program is given also. Friday evening is spent in the study of dramatic expression and public speaking, until nine o'clock; then those who wish, go to the lower auditorium and play games for an hour. Brother R. P. Mulvane is the very excellent instructor of these dramatic classes. Brother Charles Powers, the superintendent, is untiring in his efforts to make this department meet the needs of the young people.

The Department of Women, with Sister D. S. McDole as superintendent, has been very busy; they have had built in the side of the lower auditorium, a splendid kitchen, where they can now serve a conference with ease and comfort, which they did do in February.

The Temple Builder girls are planning a social for the Department of Recreation and Expression for May 11. They are planning many other things for the future. Sister Ida E. Jones is their leader.

Easter was certainly a very spiritual day with us; the Holy Spirit being manifested at both the young people's prayer meeting and at the sacrament meeting, where words of admonition and promise were given. The same holy influence was felt throughout the day, especially in the evening when the Sunday school and choir gave a cantata, "The glory of the cross." Many hearts were touched by the beautiful rendition. The choir did splendid work, their sweet voices blending together so harmoniously it seemed that heavenly voices commingled with them. Also the speaking parts were given with such feeling that we almost fancied we were present at the greatest tragedy and the greatest triumph the world has ever known.

The choir is doing good work, both for church services and for Sunday school. The Sunday school choir meets Thursday evenings where they are taking up the fundamentals of music, with Sister Lansing as their director and Sister Oliver doing splendid work at the piano; there is also orchestra practice Thursday evenings, Brother Sylvester, late of Canada, being their leader. The church choir meets for practice on Sunday immediately after the morning meetings, about one p. m. Sister Florence Love is their very able leader, Sister Oliver again at the piano.

We organized a branch at Everett last month. Brethren Stearns and Brundage were chosen as presiding officers, assisted by others of the priesthood. They have a very nice church building of their own situated on Franklin and Twenty-fifth Streets. We can see a very bright future for them, and may God add his blessing to every noble effort upon their part to send out the glad tidings of great joy.

Sunday the fifteenth, Brother Henry L. Livingston, of Portland, Oregon, was the morning speaker, giving us a very able and timely sermon on the "Signs of the times," which we feel sure was seed sown upon good ground. Brother Livingston is always a very welcome visitor, for we have spent many very happy hours laboring with him in Portland, our former field of labor.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

C. E. JONES.

North Toronto

They hope soon to build a church.

I am writing to acquaint you with some of the activities of the Saints of North Toronto Branch.

We have a branch of about eighty-four members, including about twenty nonresident members and twenty-five children. We own a small church, but as it is in a dilapidated condition, we decided some time ago to build a new one.

We were very fortunate in securing the site for our new church, purchasing a lot in one of the finest sections of North Toronto, and situated directly opposite the North Toronto Collegiate Institute. We have paid about half the money due on this lot, and hope in the near future to be able to erect an edifice worthy of the cause.

We have held several concerts, box socials, and motor trips, and have raised a considerable amount of money for the building fund by them, as well as promoting a more sociable feeling among the Saints.

The choir has also supported in every way. They recently staged a splendid cantata entitled, "David, the shepherd boy," which was performed on two evenings in our own branch and once at Humber Bay. The majority of our audiences at all performances was composed of strangers. We feel fully repaid for our efforts when we realize the splendid advertisement this cantata has been, and the favorable way it has been commented upon by the whole neighborhood.

Our Sunday School and Religio Departments are also busy.

Besides their regular meetings, they have organized special meetings, at which lantern slide pictures are shown and stories told every Saturday evening for the benefit of the children. These meetings are well attended and enjoyed by the children of the neighborhood. We hope to increase the membership of the Sunday school and Religio through them.

The Department of Women and the Temple Builders are also active and are ready and willing at all times to give us their fullest support in every endeavor to promote the gospel.

We desire to see this latter-day glory move forward, and will try at all times to do our utmost for its progress.

MARGARET C. RUSSELL, Secretary.

Independence

The campaign drive for $25,000 to complete the purchase of the Swope property for use as a community center, playgrounds, etc., is on in earnest. At the big mass meeting in the Stone Church on Thursday evening, the 10th, about $13,000 was raised by pledges among the Independence people. In the front of the church was a large chart marked off in 550 squares to represent the number of $100 pledges necessary to raise the total amount. Three hundred of these squares around the border of the chart were checked off to represent the $30,000 donated by Bishop Zimmermann and family. There were 250 squares left blank in the center of the chart. As a subscription was made, the number of squares represented by the amount subscribed were marked off. Near the close of the session, subscriptions for less than $25 were accepted, and a multitude of these poured in, checking off about 20 more squares. President F. M. Smith and Chairman Walter W. Smith presided at the meeting. Preceding the mass meeting, the workers and committee members met in the basement and received instructions for the carrying on of the week's work of soliciting throughout Independence. At the same time a parade of about sixty automobiles, headed by our band in a large truck, drove through the principal streets of Independence. Banners bearing legends were tied on many of the cars, one truck containing about twenty-five little children displaying a poster on which were the words, "We need a place to play. Buy the Swope property."

Next Friday evening all Religio meetings for Independence have been dismissed and the Saints will hold a basket picnic on the new property, beginning at about four o'clock. This will be at the close of the drive for money with which to pay for the grounds, and should be in the nature of a congratulation meeting. At seven o'clock there will be a concert by the band, which will be followed at eight o'clock by the final report on the drive. There will be community singing and band pieces. All the Saints in Independence and surrounding country are welcome.

Sister Walter W. Smith, who was operated on for appendicitis at the Sanitarium last week, is reported as doing as well as could be expected. The operation was of a serious nature, but the patient is doing well.

President Frederick M. Smith left here on Friday, the 11th, for the East. He attended a two-day meeting of the Saints in Columbus, Ohio, on Saturday and Sunday, and then went on to Washington, District of Columbia, where he will attend the meetings of the National Conference of Social Workers.

Mrs. Dora Glines, superintendent of the Department of Women, spent the week end in Joplin, Missouri, attending the conference of the Spring River District.

The trip of the young people of Independence and surrounding territory to Far West was held Sunday as scheduled. A detailed write-up of the occasion will be found in another column.

Last week was Hospital Week throughout the country, and our Sanitarium participated in the effort to direct the attention of people toward these places of help in time of trouble. About three hundred children were examined free during the week, the doctors of Independence giving their time for this work. Thursday and Friday were visiting days, and our people availed themselves of the opportunity to hear Bishop McGuire, Doctor Wolfe, the Christian minister in Independence, and Doctor Shore, a baby specialist, at these meetings. Saturday was Tag Day, and Sanitarium workers were busy all day "tagging" those who ventured on to the streets of Independence. About $720 was collected by the nurses and assistants throughout the day. During the week many visitors were shown through the Sanitarium.

Bishop James F. Keir was taken ill with a heavy cold about the middle of last week and he is still confined to his home.

Professor C. E. Irwin, of Graceland College, spent last Thursday with friends in Independence. He came down for a conference with President F. M. Smith on the agricultural situation within the church and a discussion of the stewardship problem in connection therewith.

Work on the grounds and building on the new purchase, the Swope place, began in earnest last Monday morning. Workmen were employed in cutting the grass, rolling the grounds, trimming the dead wood out of the trees, replastering and painting the interior of the building, etc. It is hoped that by Friday night, when the big mass meeting is to be held on the grounds, things will be in shipshape condition.

Mrs. Mina Madison, wife of our Indian brother, William Madison, and for years active in the general departmental work of the church, spent a few days recently in Independence. She was on her way to Minnesota to visit her son, Dwight, who last winter left his home unannounced and whose whereabouts was unknown until a short time ago. Brother and Sister Madison now reside in Washington, District of Columbia, where they went to work for the Indian cause.

At the continued business meeting of the conference in Zion Monday night the amendment to the substitute was voted down and the substitute adopted, thus ending what was perhaps the longest discussion of any subject ever before the Saints of Independence. In all, six whole evenings were occupied in the discussion of this question. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, a good-sized crowd attended the meeting and talks were made up to the time of taking the vote.

In all of the churches in Independence Sunday the morning service was given over to Mothers' Day exercises. The evening preaching services were as follows: Stone Church, R. V. Hopkins; Liberty Street, Frank A. Russell; Second church, T. C. Kelley; Walnut Park, Frederick A. Smith; Englewood, J. P. Warren. Radio sermon by Walter W. Smith.

Mrs. D. B. Elledge, of Independence, entered the Sanitarium last week for an operation. She is doing well.

Radio Comments

News comes to hand repeatedly of local organizations using the radio in order to bring the messages of the general church representatives to the Saints and friends who would not otherwise hear from them. This is very encouraging, but it should supplement rather than supplant the efforts of the local officers upon whom the burden of the work has been placed.

Acknowledgment of Receipt of "Ensigns"

To the Saints and Friends of the Cause: I am grateful to the friends of the church for their hearty response to my call for Ensigns. Several thousand copies were received from different States, including Maine, California, Texas. Nonmembers of the church sent me copies and wrote me letters expressing the fact that they had become interested in the faith through reading the Ensign. The expense on some bundles was no small matter; one from New Hampshire being ninety cents. Each Ensign, when clean, is worth five cents in tract value; but the eternal good cannot be computed in gold. We begin our work of distribution this week, having stamped on the margin of each copy the address of our churches in the Tri-Cities.

I have found some wide-awake Saints in this part of God's moral vineyard, and with me they are interested in the advancement of the cause of Christ.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

"I don't want to lie down in death, come it soon or late, with the consciousness upon me that when I pass off there will arise contending hosts and divided bands through the body, and scatter it—not an apostasy as the term is used by me and those associated with me, but because of internal dissension from human ambition or an effort to control in their personal views, those by whom they are surrounded."—From address by President Joseph Smith at the General Conference of 1909.

Sex relations have been the subject of almost endless experimentation in the name of religion. There has been polygamy, free love, sacrifice of virtue at the altars of the gods, promiscuous love feasts, whatnot. Nothing was too vile in this line to claim the sanction of Holy Writ and the favor of God; even as Shakespeare makes King Richard III to soliloquize:

And thus I clothe my naked villainy
 With old, odd ends stolen out of Holy Writ:
 And seem a saint when most I play the devil.

The world has conducted similar experiments, run to similar excesses, but without claiming the sanction of deity. Worldly men took what they wanted in ways that seemed good to them. If they philosophized at all, it was to think that the desire, being apparently normal and within their natures, must be good and necessary—the modern philosophy of "Bohemianism." But they did not attempt to sanctify the act in the name of religion.

On the other hand, truly religious peoples, disgusted by the parade of vice before heathen and pagan altars, nauseated thereby, in revolt went to another extreme. Celibacy of priests and nuns, and religious cults teaching celibacy were the result. That which is perfectly normal and natural and holy became to them abhorrent. Paul seemed to partake somewhat of that spirit and taught that to be single was perhaps more holy than to marry. His utmost concession was that to marry is better than "to burn." Not a very great concession, all will admit. But others carried the revolt to much greater extremes.

On that point Hall has an interesting paragraph: "Slavery handed over to the absolute power of the master women and boys, and an idle and luxurious life stimulated the powerful passions which grow on what they feed, and produce all the strange enormities of unnatural vice. Against this all ethical religious life, whether Neoplatonic or Stoic, whether embodied in the Mithras cult or the priesthood of the Serapium, began to protest even before Judaism and Christianity raised their voices. And as in all such cases there arose as the form of the protest a sexual fanaticism. It even went so far as to brand the sexual desire as per se evil, and to treat marriage as a concession to the flesh and bar to the highest holiness."—History of Ethics within Organized Christianity, by Hall, p. 235.

The church which we represent has a perfectly clean and sane as well as religious philosophy of sex relations, as set forth by revelation contained in our constitutional law. First, the fanatical delusions of asceticism are avoided and rebuked: "And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man."—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

Second, the other extreme of polygamy and concubinage is avoided and forbidden: "Wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh."—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3. "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women."—Book of Mormon.

Thirdly, the ideal marriage relationship, monogamy, is to be based on love only and maintained with fidelity: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

We should be very proud of the position taken by the church from the very start and maintained without deviation. It furnishes a safe and sane basis for the home and family, and thus in turn for the state and civilization. ELBERT A. SMITH.

Your Town

If you want to live in the kind of a town
 That's the kind of a town you'd like,
 You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
 And start on a long, long hike.
 You'll find elsewhere what you left behind
 For there's nothing that's really new—
 It's a knock at yourself when you knock your town;
 It isn't your town, it's you.

Real towns are not made by men afraid
 Lest somebody else gets ahead:
 Where everyone works and nobody shirks
 You can raise a town from the dead.
 And if you make your personal stake
 Your neighbor can make one, too;
 Your town will be what you want it to be;
 It isn't your town, it's you.

Program of Young People's Convention

Elsewhere in this issue there appears the final program for the Young People's Convention. This is taken from the official notebook, so is the complete general program. The notebook will also contain valuable information and instruction for those who attend. It will have a synopsis of the work in each of the sections or classes. It will also have many blank pages for the taking of notes.

This advanced publication of the general program will give our readers a better idea of the scope of the undertaking, and inform the young people for what they should come prepared. S. A. B.

Graceland Home-Coming

As the time for the Graceland Home-Coming approaches, it would not be amiss to consider briefly what it means. Twenty-eight years ago next September Graceland College opened her doors to her first class. The college building was not ready, so the classes met in the France Block in Lamoni. Twenty-five years ago this June the first class, that of 1898, graduated, completing the four-year course for the degree of bachelor of arts.

During January, 1896, the transfer was made to the college building, the one building serving all purposes, including dormitory for a time. But with the passage of time, the dates have been set forth many times, Marietta Hall, named for Sister Marietta Walker, who was for many years editor of Zion's Hope, who started and edited the Autumn Leaves, and who gave land for the college, was built by the students themselves for a dormitory. To this later was added Patroness Hall; then the forty acre farm to the east was purchased, the heating plant erected. Finally, overshadowing all others, the new building as the first unit of a new Graceland was erected. So much for the material equipment.

With the passage of time Graceland has added machinery and apparatus for the carrying on of work in her various departments and has preferred to do well the work of a junior college, and has somewhat rapidly and strongly built up and made of first importance that work.

One of the advantages of the Young People's Convention is this opportunity to come into contact with Graceland and gain as much of her spirit as possible in two weeks, the spirit of preparation for devoted service. It is well as we begin a new era that those who have been concerned with the work of the past, and with some of the trying times of the years gone by, should meet and rejoice with the young people who are now about to enter her doors within the next few years and those who are now attending. Regarding Rates for the Convention

There has been considerable inquiry in regard to the possibility of securing special railroad rates for the Young People's Convention. Those in charge of the convention have had this need in mind for several months, but after a thorough investigation it was found that it would be necessary to guarantee at least two hundred and fifty ticket purchases.

At present we are assured of far more than that number who will attend the convention, but a very large percentage of these expect to come by auto. After consulting with the Transportation Manager, G. S. Trowbridge, it was thought unwise to make application for such concessions unless we were reasonably sure that we would be in a position to fulfill the guarantee.

We have been urging continuously that those intending to come notify us. A large number have complied with this request, but as above stated, such a large number are coming by auto even from such distant points as Long Beach, California, and Toronto, Ontario, that we have not been able to ascertain whether we would be justified in approaching the railroad companies for special rates.

We would suggest that all those planning to come inquire diligently of their ticket offices in regard to the excursion rates, inasmuch as there are summer tourist rates in effect from Pacific coast points and Atlantic coast points, and perhaps from other places which would be advantageous even though they might not apply specifically to Lamoni.

Father and Mother

There is needed better parenthood.

Rightfully a great deal of credit is given to our mothers, and Mothers' Day is quite widely if not now generally observed in America. One or two have written in a protest that it should be Parents' Day, that father also should be recognized. As it happens, there is a Fathers' Day in October, but very few could state what day it is. It is significant how little impression it has made as compared with Mothers' Day. Even mothers have objected very strongly, as does one whom Herman Hagedorn reports:

Oh! It gets me so angry! Always this talk of the mother of the soldier, this endless sentimentalizing about the mother saying good-by to her brave soldier boy, the mother dreaming of him. Wherever I turn, it is this mother-and-son relationship that is emphasized, in songs, in stories, in pictures. If a boy is brave and true, we are told it is because he remembers his mother's sacred admonitions. No one seems to think that the father may have something to do with the building of a boy's manhood vastly more important than anything a mother can accomplish by precept or example. . . . We have been sentimentalizing about the mother-and-son relationship long enough. It is the relationship of father and son that men should think and dream and talk and sing about.

In the letter department appears another protest, not against mothers but for parents.

It really presents a serious question in connection with any discussion of the weakening of authority to-day. We may still join in that grand song, "Faith of our fathers living still," but at the same time the tendency is rather to discredit fatherhood. "Bringing up father" in the papers all over the country makes him out very much of a fool and may have its significance in connection with Freudian analysis.

The subject is discussed with much interest in an article in the Christian Century pointing out again the tendency to discredit large families, the social attitude therefore inherently against the family. Poetically motherhood is exalted, yet this discrediting of the father reacts on the authority of the mother.

The writer has the most profound appreciation for motherhood and for his own mother. He remembers with deep thanksgiving the ideals of life implanted by her, her teachings in morals and of the church, her example and tender care. But that does not blind him to the fact of the splendid example and quiet teachings of his father.

Probably because of the ideals of that home we still strongly contend that we need rather more teaching of parenthood and parentcraft than the exclusive emphasis on motherhood and mothercraft, important and vital as is her interest, her concern, and her care. For the development of the group it is necessary that father should be more than "pop" or "dad," simply a cash register, or the one who provides the material comforts.

It was with this fact in mind that a father of considerable business importance at a recent Christmas decided to make his son a new gift. He was wealthy enough to have provided him with a racing car or something of equal monetary value, but instead he put in his stocking a note: "I do hereby give to my son one half hour each day and a half day each week." The boy may not appreciate it now, but that gift of his father is of a value far exceeding anything his purse could have provided.

There is a need for an assumption of the responsibility and the assertion of the authority of fatherhood.

John Smith Passes to His Reward

At his home at Lamoni, Iowa, on Sunday, April 22, Elder John Smith passed away in his eightieth year. He was born in England where his mother died when he was three months old. At eight years of age he went to work in the cotton mills. His father died when he was eleven leaving him to make his own way. When he was eighteen years of age he came to Fall River, Massachusetts, where he continued to work in the mills, but he made his adopted country his own, so enlisted in the United States navy in July, 1863, receiving honorable discharge. He was therefore a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and served also as an officer of the local post. For years his home in Lamoni was the gathering place for the flower tributes on Memorial Day.

After leaving the cotton mills he engaged in a co-operative concern in New England and later went into business for himself.

He was in active church work from his childhood, first as an Episcopalian in England, then as a Baptist, later in the Congregational Church and Sunday school. Upon his first marriage in July, 1865, he came in contact with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and was baptized a member in December, 1865. The following January he was ordained a priest; then in February, 1866, an elder; a seventy in April, 1886; then in April, 1900, a high priest. He was the first president of the branch at New Bedford, Massachusetts, and labored long in that district, both locally and as a missionary.

When the Lamoni Stake was organized April 20, 1901, he was nominated by the Presidency and sustained by the body as president of that stake, in which office he continued for over fifteen years.

Finally, on June 18, 1916, he was ordained a patriarch.

He also served the church as business manager of the Herald Publishing House, as a member of the Board of Publication, as treasurer for several years of the General Sunday School Association, as a member of their revising committee, and as one of the committee in charge of the home for the aged in Lamoni. He also served as a member of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College. His church labors have been manifold and intensive.

John M. Cockerton, Member High Council,
Passed to Reward

His many friends, and the church itself, as well as his family, were greatly shocked to learn of the death of Elder J. M. Cockerton, on Wednesday, May 16. The details are given in the Independence letter and in the obituary items in this issue of the HERALD.

His ministerial service had continued over thirty-two years, first in sixteen years in California and then in Independence where he developed a church in the northern part of the city, was instrumental in securing the present Liberty Street building and in building up the church there. His work, first at the Courtney Mission, then at the Liberty Street Mission, and finally at the Liberty Street church continued to the first of this year.

He was a member of the Independence Stake high council from April, 1916, until the stake was disorganized. Then on February 15, 1922, when the General High Council of the church was reorganized he was ordained a member of that body and served in that capacity until his death.

Doctor Chaim Weizmann, world Zionist leader, in his address in Omaha, recently stated that Palestine is being rapidly rebuilt with three new railroad lines constructed and 1,400 new houses the past year. He stated that 1,000 persons are entering that land each month. As a Zionist he believes that Palestine will save the Jews, that those who are going there are 85 per cent of them high school graduates but are doing manual labor, breaking streets and building roads and houses. Palestine is as fruitful as California, with many miles of roads, and will be a credit to all who assist in its rebuilding. Already schools and a university are being established, while he believes the land can be made to accommodate from 2,500,000 to 3,000,000.

What Is It All About?

"And God said, Let us make man."—Genesis 1: 26.
"Unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."—Ephesians 4: 13.
"Yet I doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs."—Tennyson.

II. Creation and "Directivity"

We have assumed the existence of a creative and directive power. As one has said, unless it takes more intelligence to appreciate the universe than it did to design it, supreme intelligence directed the act of Creation. Continued direction also is evident. A rosebush and a tomato vine grow side by side. One selects the elements that form a tomato; the other the elements that form, color, and perfume a rose. To imitate them on canvas takes intelligence. Their selection and use of different elements from the same soil indicates intelligence. Unless a tomato vine is smarter than it looks, back of the process is a directing force. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 3 may give a clew to this.)

The idea of creation and "directivity" is not unscientific. In his speech before the Christian Association of University College, London, in 1902, Lord Kelvin said:

Science positively affirms creative power. It is not in dead matter that we live and move and have our being, but in the creating and directive power which science compels us to accept as an article of belief. We cannot escape from that conclusion when we study the physics of living and dead matter all around.—Christian Apologetics, page 24.

Darwin himself went so far as to say:

There is a grandeur in this view of life, with its several powers, having been originally breathed by the Creator into a few forms or into one.—The Descent of Man.

Edgar Lucien Larkin, Director of Lowe Observatory, has a book, Within the Mind's Maze, through which runs the idea, first of creation, second of "directivity." All material things, he argues, are the physical projection of "mind forms" first conceived by the Great Mind. He goes on to affirm:

I do not hesitate to write this: There is not a great scientist now living not aware of the existence of Mind in the sidereal Universe—a Dominating Mind.

On the subject of directivity Larkin quotes H. E. Armstrong, one of the leading chemists of the world, one-time vice president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, in a speech at Winnipeg in 1909:

We are bound, therefore, to assume that a large proportion of the changes which occur in living organisms—which constitute vital metabolism—are directed changes. . . . The general impression produced by facts such as have been referred to is that directive influences are the paramount influences at work in building up living tissues.

On this subject Lodge writes:

Let us take this question of guidance. We must see it in action now or never. Do we see it now? Orthodox theology vaguely assumes it; orthodox science sees it not at all. What is the truth? Is the blindness of science subjective or objective? Is the vision absent because there is nothing to see or because we have shut our eyes, and have declined to contemplate a region of dim and misty fact? . . . Does anyone think that the skill of the beaver, the instinct of the bee, the genius of a man, arose by chance, and that its presence is accounted for by handing down and by survival? What struggle for existence will explain the advent of Beethoven? What pitiful necessity for earning a living as a dramatist will educe for us Shakespeare? These things are beyond science of the orthodox type; then let it be silent and deny nothing in the Universe till it has at least made an honest effort to comprehend the whole.—Science and Immortality, pages 35, 36.

So might an observer, inspecting some great and perfect factory, with machines constantly weaving patterns, some beautiful, some ugly, conclude, or permit himself to dream at least, after some hours' watching, during which everything proceeded without a hitch, driven as it were by inexorable fate, that everything went off itself, controlled by cold, dreary necessity. And if his scrutiny could be continued for weeks or years, and it still presented the same aspect, his dream would begin to seem to be true: the perfection of mechanism would weary the spectator: his human weakness would long for something to go wrong, so that some one from an upper office might step down and set it right again. Humanity is accustomed to such interventions and breaks in a ceaseless sequence, and, when no such breaks and interventions occur, may conclude hastily that the scheme is self-originating, self-sustained, that it works to no ultimate and foreseen destiny.—Science and Immortality, pages 25, 26.

That which some few scientists glimpse, religion clearly affirms: First, creation by intelligence; second, continued direction or "directivity" in life. These fundamental conclusions lift the black fog of pessimism which engulfs whole schools of atheistic thinkers who can see no design or goal or purpose in existence.

Creation and direction presume a goal. The act of creation is suggested by the text, "And God said, Let us make man." Continued direction and goal alike are suggested by the complement of that text: "Unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Direction is suggested in the statement, "My Spirit shall guide you into all truth." Also, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." The extent of direction, in the declaration that he is "the light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world." Jesus in his life and character indicated the goal for the individual and in his teachings indicated the goal for society.

The hard, cruel, bitter experiences of life, the apparent ruthless methods of the universe have appalled some. Not until we get behind the scenes and grasp some of the ultimate purposes of things, and take a long look ahead by way of revelation to the final triumph and culmination of all things in redeemed men and women grown to full stature in righteousness do we find solace. Thomas Carlyle said that his feet never found solid ground until he was able to believe that God and not a fiend had made the world. Browning found peace when he could say, "So the All-Great were the All-Loving too."

Keenly conscious of the apparent tragedy and failure of Creation, Tennyson wrote that which he imagined the old earth to say:

I am losing the light of my Youth
And the Vision that led me of old,
And I clash with an iron Truth,
When I make for an Age of gold;
And I would that my race were run,
For teeming with liars, and madmen, and knaves,
And wearied of Autocrats, Anarchs, and Slaves,
And darken'd with doubts of a Faith that saves,
And crimson with battles, and hollow with graves,
To the wail of my winds, and the moan of my waves
I whirl, and I follow the Sun.

But by faith and a long look ahead he was able to reply to the lament:

Moaning your losses, O Earth,
Heart-weary and overdone!
But all's well that ends well,
Whirl, and follow the Sun!

He is racing from heaven to heaven
And less will be lost than won,
For all's well that ends well,
Whirl, and follow the Sun!

The Reign of the Meek upon earth,
O weary one, has it begun?
But all's well that ends well,
Whirl, and follow the Sun!

For moans will have grown sphere-music
Or ever your race be run!
And all's well that ends well,
Whirl, and follow the Sun!

Man can endure all things providing he hopes all things. Atheism breeds black pessimism in both cultured and ignorant, from which the mad whirl of pleasure seeking gives but brief relief. The religion of Jesus Christ brings hope because it shows us how in the forge of time and the fires of trial man is being shaped. And after the individual man, perhaps far in the future, we see a redeemed society. It may be far in the future, who knows, but it is a goal. It gives something to live and work for. All that is good in us rises up to shout, let us begin now and at least approximate that ideal. Let us lend ourselves more readily to divine direction that the goal may be more speedily attained.

The Wisdom of the World

By James E. Yates

*The world knows not the divinity of Jesus.
To be truly learned is to know God.*

Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty.

The above scripture from 1 Corinthians, first, second, and third chapters, needs no apology to-day. From the standpoint of ordinary spiritual common sense, and from the viewpoint of the plainest meanings of the revealed word of God, the world's so-called "liberal education" is not a success.

In consideration of recent public statements by such a scholarly clergyman as Doctor Percy Stickney Grant, of New York, it would seem that our Brother O. L. Weaver puts the simple truth rather mildly when he says in SAINTS' HERALD for September 20, 1922: "It is needless to deny that the results of our 'liberal education' are disappointing."

Doctor Percy S. Grant is the rector of the Episcopal Church of the Ascension in New York who recently made such a stir in ecclesiastical circles by his preaching that Jesus did not possess the power of God, and that he in no sense was God. Also, Doctor Grant affirms that the resurrection was spiritual, and not physical, and in the face of that bold specimen of infidelity the learned doctor still holds his pulpit in the church of the "Ascension"! Think of that!

Moreover, he declares in his reply to his Bishop W. T. Manning's heresy charge: "This is taught publicly by great numbers of clergymen in the Anglican Communion, including not a few bishops, and probably a majority of her most illustrious scholars." How is that for an indictment of the wisdom of the world? And here, too, it is a scholar who in denying the resurrection and the deity of Jesus Christ, brings this terrible indictment against this brand of world renowned scholarship!

Further, Doctor Grant goes on to say: "When your son comes back from college, and you say to him, 'Come to church this morning,' do you want him to reply, 'Father, no; do not ask me to listen to such bunk as that?'" So the doctor's idea seems to be that when his son comes home from his study of the world's great theories of "science" and refers to the literal resurrection as "bunk" he will say to that son, "Come on to church, son, for we have quit preaching that bunk of the physical resurrection now, for we have found out by the study of science that it can't be done." Thus the doctors would save their sons to the church!

But if this is not plain infidelity disguised under an imitation of knowledge acquired beneath the domes of so-called "liberal education," what is it? It is the wisdom of the world undertaking to promote the Christian religion, but succeeding only in promoting infidelity in its worst and most dangerous forms.

Note this statement of Doctor Grant carefully:

Very few clergymen to-day who have been educated in the large universities—by which I mean places where science as well as the classics and mathematics are taught—accept the idea that Jesus had the power of God. He doubtless did miracles, as they were regarded in his day, but, as M. Coue points out, many of them were acts of autosuggestion and would fall under well-known categories clearly and well classified by psychologists to-day. Science understands them. They are not miracles.

Is not this remarkable that science can understand how Lazarus was raised from the dead after he had been dead four days, and yet that this same science will deny the literal resurrection of Jesus Christ? It is an awful charge to say that very few of the clergymen receiving their education in the larger institutions of learning accept the idea that Jesus Christ was divine; but this doctor is in a position to know, and he so states it. But he does not state this as an accusation, but rather as an evidence that the wisdom of the worldly learned is superior to that of the unlearned who are so simple minded as to believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that the resurrection is literally true. With such teachings as these enjoying the prestige that attaches to the terms scholarship and learning and the more liberal education, is it any wonder that God has warned the nations against the foolishness of the wisdom and boasted learning of this world?

Are any safe from this octopus of infidelity who, while flattering themselves that they are seeking their learning by faith, continue to accept philosophies of the world and "science so called" merely because said philosophies have been dignified by the names of the worldly wise? Is it not clear that many of those whom the world regards as the greater lights in the matter of worldly learning, and who are denying with an ever-increasing boldness the very heart and fundamentals of the Christian religion, are also claiming to proceed by faith? They preach and profess some kind of a religious faith in the same breath that they deny the divinity of Christ.

Of course we all concede, that to be learned is good if heed is given to the word and counsel of God.

But to be dabbling along in the uncertain shoals of the wisdom of this world, one in order to be safe against an occasional slip into deep water will need more for his protection than an inflated life-belt filled with the shifting sand of the foolish philosophies of men labeled "faith" on the outside.

To give true faith the right of way and the choicest place in our souls is to become learned. But to be unduly strained in trying to measure up to the wisdom and learning of the world is to be prodigal with our days and with our energies, while the garner of our lives is being filled with more or less of the husks and the chaff; and in the oncoming years our souls will be famished for the want of the wheat kernels which through true faith constitute the bread of life.

Wherefore I have called upon the weak things of the world, those who are unlearned and despised, to thresh the nations by the power of my spirit; and their arm shall be my arm, and I will be their shield and their buckler, and I will gird up their loins, and they shall fight manfully for me; and their enemies shall be under their feet, and I will let fall the sword in their behalf; and by the fire of mine indignation will I preserve them.—Doctrine and Covenants 34: 4.

The work of God must ever proceed in the power of his might, and not by the learning of men. For far, far too often when men are learned they think they are wise, and their very self-sufficiency is the bar that prevents them from enjoying the light and power of God.

To be learned is good, but God will proceed with his own work even though he should need to call his servants from among the "unlearned and the despised" as he has spoken.

The sending of men to jail or the penitentiary is proving more effective than fining for the administration of prohibition laws. Now comes the case before Judge Geiger, of Milwaukee, who proceeded to Gary, Indiana, to hear evidence of the liquor conspiracy. As a result the mayor of that city was sentenced to one and a half years in the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, and to pay a fine of $2,000. The former county sheriff, former city judge, and a former prosecuting attorney, were sentenced to a year and a day in prison and fined $1,000 each. The trial, according to newspaper reports, showed open sale of liquor, the payment of funds to the officials responsible for the enforcement of the law, and revels in which these officers joined.

PASTORAL

Pastoral Problems

By Thomas S. Williams

The Lord has admonished his people in all ages of the world, "Be ye one." We are all agreed that that message need not be modified or changed to-day, and that if the church is to take her rightful place, she must be united. She cannot unite a divided world with division and misunderstanding within the church itself. Peace and cooperation must reign before she can take her rightful place among the institutions of earth.

Unity is necessary to the development of the church. It brings a sense of power and security, a moral and physical support, by which its membership will be able to move into action without hesitation, thus being able to meet present needs and also look to and plan for the future.

The work of unifying the body of Christ rests in a large measure upon the pastoral arm of the church. The missionary, too, has a great responsibility here which may be met by anticipating in his work some of the problems the pastor must meet.

As a church or group, we have no clearly defined common purpose. That is, as a group we do not have the proper attitude toward the problems before the church. We do not have one objective or common purpose. True, we have to some degree been preaching this, but we have failed to put it over. In the lines which are to follow, we are taking the position that our objective, or common purpose, should be Zion.

The kingdom of heaven is like a net cast into the sea which brings forth all manner of fish. People of every Christian denomination make up our membership, bringing with them their varying degrees and shades of religious belief influenced by their early training and environment. True they have to a large degree reconstructed their ideas, but a man not only absorbs his environment—he contributes to it as well. The state of mind of each person is in some degree affected by the mental process of all those about him. By what method shall this mixed group work together in unity and cooperation? What shall be done that all may have a common objective? A common objective or group attitude is the greatest essential to unity and cooperation.

Unity Through Alike-ness

McDougall, in his Group Mind, says:

We may go back to a very fundamental principle of instinctive life, namely that, in gregarious animals, the satisfaction of the gregarious impulse is greater or more complete the more nearly alike are the individuals congregated together. This seems to be true of animals, but it is true in a higher degree of man; and, in proportion as his mind becomes more specialized and refined, the more exacting he is in this respect.—Page 97.

This sets forth the idea that our problem will not be solved in the development and education of a few of our people. The objective of our educational program must be one that will comprehend the whole group.

Not every group is capable of enjoying collective mental life, for the individuals must be capable of being interested in the same objects, and of being affected in a similar way by them. There must be a certain degree of similarity of mental constitution among the individuals, a certain mental homogeneity of the group.—Page 33.

Thus he sets forth some of the conditions essential to collective mental life and action. How shall this be accomplished by the church? We answer by an extensive educational program which shall begin with the new member as soon as he is baptized. Indeed, it shall begin with the missionary effort. A social interpretation of the gospel would be a wonderful setting for our educational program. We must have a systematic and scientific method of instilling within our new converts a proper concept of the spirit and principles for which this church stands.

The starting point may be an inspirational history of the development and organization of the church. McDougall outlines the ties necessary to the group spirit as follows:

The possession of a common tradition, a memory of sufferings endured and victories won in common, expressed in song and legend, in the names of great personalities that seem to embody in themselves the character and ideals of the group and the names of the sacred places wherein the group memory is enshrined.

Our Ideals

Then an outline of what we are trying to accomplish should lay particular stress upon the ideals of our organization, in our Zionie program. Everyone must be made to feel that he is a part of this movement. Interest and enthusiasm may be aroused by a series of pictures of the general officers, a few words about their activities and responsibilities. He may be brought into personal touch with general and district officers through a form letter. He should be asked to specialize in some department for which he may be talented. With this should go a general understanding of the functions and relationship of other departments to the department in which he may be specializing. This will tend to impress upon each member that he is a very valuable factor in the church and will overcome carelessness and indifference, a reaction which seems to come to many soon after conversion.

Much may be done by way of personal visits, letters, etc. Every point of contact should be taken advantage of in gaining and retaining new members. This is a feature of our work which should be developed. Lack of this has been the cause of many of our converts losing their fervor and enthusiasm, their first love. Keeping people in the church and keeping them busy (which is the only way to keep them in) is the greatest problem of church work.

We repeat that we lack a common objective, a well-defined common purpose. The focus of our attention has been to a great measure directed towards God's part of the program of salvation. Man's duty has been in the margin or fringe of consciousness. We have been concerned with theological and prophetic interpretations of scripture, overlooking the weighty matters of the plan of salvation. This has diverted the attention of men from the affairs of to-day, the problems of everyday life, and the objective of the latter-day message. If I have a proper understanding of the message of Jesus, it was not a message of the past, nor did he say much of the future life. His was a message of to-day, now. Work while the day lasts, for the night cometh when no man can work. Time spent in theological speculations and trying to harmonize prophetic scripture with our ideas is to my mind good time spent in vain.

The time is too short, the task too great, for our time to be spent in this manner.

Group Salvation Needed

Zion, the pure in heart, is our objective. If we put it over, we must revolutionize our method of presenting the gospel. If the gospel is a social message, then we must present it from that point of view, its utility and value in present-day life. We do not advocate tearing ourselves from an authoritative or Biblical presentation of the gospel principles, but if our gospel has no place of value in the life of the individual no amount of scripture can make it so. Since ours is a peculiar message, none like it upon the face of the earth, let us try to put it over. Let our time, our studies, our preaching and teaching be spent in leading men toward the real essence of the message of the Savior of men—the plan by which men shall be able to live together in peace. This, then, should be the common objective of each member of the church.

The idea of an individual salvation has been a source of much trouble. This idea finds expression in an attitude of indifference toward the welfare of the group. We find this in the attitude of many of our people toward tithing, Zion, and our missionary program. Here, too, our attention must be shifted.

The collective salvation, Zion, must take its rightful place at the center of consciousness; the individual salvation must occupy a place in the margin of consciousness. We do not mean that the idea of individual salvation should be removed from the field of consciousness (although it could be relegated to the subconscious) any more than the Capernican idea of the solar system removed the earth from his plan of the solar universe, but the idea of the center of the system was shifted from the earth to the sun. We have set out for the salvation of the world. Let this, then, be the objective of every member of the church of God.

Doctor Pratt in the Yale Review, April, 1923, says:

Indeed, no very lovely flower of morality ever grew out of fear of hell fire or desire for heavenly reward. The religious and truly Christian sanction of the finer morality has always been and is to-day the desire to be a worker together with God in some great world purpose.

Trained Teachers and Leaders

To put over an extensive educational program whose objective is unity of purpose, we must have trained teachers and leaders. A man who has a distorted view of his responsibility can do more harm in a month than can be repaired in years. Much of our branch troubles may have been avoided had we trained leaders. We would not think of placing untrained men in the responsibility of directing our church Sanitarium, yet we take men of no training and place them in charge of the souls of men. Perhaps if one of these asks us for advice, we give him the counsel, "You must be humble and full of love." To a man of experience that statement means much, but to a young man just beginning his ministry that advice is an ambiguous term. Our young men should have the opportunity for training so that they would know how to express their humility and love. The ignorant mother who feeds her child some indigestible food which makes it sick loves her child, no doubt, but she does not know how to give intelligent expression of her love.

Unless men chosen as leaders have in some degree the superior qualities required by their exalted position, the organization of which we have been so proud will be of little value. The more perfect the organization, the more trained must be its officers directing its growth and development.

Graceland College has a wonderful opportunity and responsibility in this line. It is physically impossible for all to attend Graceland, but she could supply men and women to visit branches and districts. Reunions and district conferences should be made an educational feature of church work. Each district should have trained men and women to visit the branches and organize and train classes for leadership.

The ministry should have an opportunity to meet the leading men of the church. I have in mind a man whose future course in the work was changed through a visit to General Conference.

Democratic Leadership

A true leader will not suppress the energies of his people, but will guide and direct these forces. To do this he must become acquainted with the forces and energies he is to lead. Must be a leader and not an autocratic boss; not to control others, but to show them the way of self-control. We quote from Hart's Community Organization:

The future of civilization may well be questioned. The determination is largely one of leadership. If the community secure deliberative leaders, whose very instincts are democratic and administrative, leaders whom no temptation of power may turn from the democratic ideal, the future of the community is securely democratic. But if these fail, civilization may have to lay its foundations in some new community soil, in some new and future age. . . . The destiny of the community is in the keeping of the community.—Page 216.

McDougall, speaking of the purposive group, says:

Its citizens are trained to understand the representative principle; to yield to the opinion of the majority on the choice of means, without ceasing loyally to cooperate towards the common end; to abide by group decision; to influence group decision in debate and in turn be influenced by it; to differ without enmity; to keep the common end in view in spite of the inevitable working of private and personal motives. . . . To respect the organization through which alone the group raises itself above the level of the crowd.—Page 127.

In both of the above quotations we only need to substitute the word church for community and group, and these statements will come home to us. To my mind this is the pastoral problem—"to get the individual to cultivate this attitude toward the group." When we have accomplished this Zion will be a reality.

The group which regulates struggle among its own members so as to secure the largest measure of success, will be the group which survives.—Carver, in Religion Worth Having.

The American Federation of Labor states that its over all cost is only 12 cents a year per organized worker while other organizations of employees averaged from $1.20 to $6.00 a year per worker employed. This 12 cents a member, however, brings them in over $400,000 a year.

The Christian Work advertises a movement of Bible healing in the Presbyterian Church. It seems to be an organized effort. They claim many serious diseases have been thus healed. This is but one of the signs of the times.

The Successful Pastor--No. 3

By C. Edward Miller

For the sake of brevity, this paper is written in short, jerky sentences.

The priesthood of a branch either make or break it frequently. As there are at times incompetents, overambitious, touchy men to deal with, a few experiences may be profitable.

Presiding Bug

A deacon had the presiding bug. Wanted all the other members of the staff who held higher authority to go outside of the branch and build up the work and leave him in charge. He would be a square peg in a round hole in almost any position. Such men are problems. How deal with them? Repeatedly give them some problems to solve; their solutions will generally be absurd; show them up, and if they have any intelligence at all they will see they are not fitted for the coveted position.

One of the commissioners sent over to the Philippines to investigate their ability for self-government questioned one of the leaders. This fellow, chafing under civilization, said if he wanted to build a house in the middle of the street he would do it. The commissioner asked him what he would do if some other fellow wanted to build a house in the same place in the street. He replied that he "would get him." "But suppose he gets you first." The commissioner then showed where that would lead to and then said, "Yet you think you could run things. Why, we want to keep you from getting killed and a lot more like you."

A Contentious Priest

How we handled the contentious priest. This brother generally tried to make the first, last, and a number of speeches in between, at every business meeting. The rest of the priesthood agreed to let him have his way at the next meeting, letting motions go without any discussion. As the meeting was near its close, the brother, having done all the talking, got up, addressing chair in an irritated voice, "Mr. Chairman, are we a lot of Quakers here to-night? Can't we have a little discussion on these matters?"

A Sensitive Priest

The "sensitive" priest. I offended him. Everybody knew about it before I did. Wrote him a letter of apology. Was rejected as not being worded properly. Wrote him another, more carefully worded. Rejection No. 2. Wrote a nice letter, stating if he would write out the kind of an apology he thought I should make would sign and return it. He apologized for not accepting the first note.

A friend rushed to Lincoln. "Do you know what Stanton is saying all over Washington? He says you are a born fool!"

"Did Stanton say that?"

"Yes."

"Well, Stanton generally knows what he is talking about."

There is generally more than one way of meeting a situation. Use plenty of good lubricating oil, when possible. Will save the machinery.

The "sensitive" branch. Was placed over a certain branch. At least half a dozen of the brethren told me the priesthood and members there were very easily offended and I must be very careful how I handled them. I was. Here is how: In the introductory sermon large crowd out. I said, "I want to be of service to you. That is what I am here for. I have been told the members and even the priesthood are very easily offended and that I must be very careful what I say and how I say it. Let us understand each other right from the beginning.

"A lady went to Moody one time," I told them, "saying: 'Mr. Moody, I exaggerate terribly when I tell anything. How can I overcome it?' 'Call it plain lying and treat it accordingly.'

"Call 'sensitiveness' baby business, and treat it accordingly. I am afraid, brothers and sisters, my predecessors have greatly wronged you. They have treated you as if you were a lot of children and have so catered to you that you are like a lot of babies, easily offended. Now I would rather treat you as if you were full-grown men and women; but if you want me to treat you like children, if you want me to be as careful with you as I would with babies, I am willing to try. Do you want to be treated like little children?" Unanimous shaking of the head, "NO!" "Or shall I deal with you as if you were full-grown men and women?" Vigorous nodding of head, "YES." When any of them would sulk the rest would say, "Baby business." I had two or three cases of hard feeling in that branch in three years.

Educate the priesthood to be offense proof. What "tons" of trouble would we averted if the priesthood got out of the baby class and would grow up.

Try to accurately measure your men. Don't expect one hundredfold fruit from a thirtyfold tree. Encourage your men and flock. A scolding pastor is a nuisance. It is still true you can't catch flies with vinegar. The smaller your man the bigger you will have to act, so there will be kind of a reasonable average struck.

In a society where all enjoy the fruits of achievement by anyone there is no room for jealousy.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Spiritual Basis of Success

[The following from Babson's report is of sufficient interest to warrant a reprinting. Material prosperity is not the sole or greatest criterion, but the spiritual basis is the foundation not only of spiritual development, but also of mental and physical development, and of economic prosperity and success.

It is well that we should again remind ourselves that the colleges are the outgrowth of the church and in most cases were founded by a religious organization.—EDITORS.]

To Clients Who Are College Graduates

For some years this organization has been emphasizing the importance of the spiritual factor in business. This has not been done in the interests of any church or sect. Moreover, it has at times been awkward and embarrassing to take a stand on such a question. It is only human nature that, after taking such a stand, we should be seriously scrutinized and criticized. Thus not only do we get no thanks, but we have subjected ourselves to a great deal of unnecessary criticism. On the other hand, we could not have been honest with clients without frankly telling what statistics clearly demonstrate to be the fact.

The Spiritual Is the Greatest Factor of Growth

If statistics have taught us any one thing during the past twenty years, it is that the spiritual factor is the greatest factor in the growth of communities and nations. It is well enough to talk about land, labor, and capital. They all have their uses and functions, but of themselves they are helpless in bringing about prosperity. Land, labor, and capital existed long before there was even civilization. Many great nations, such as Babylon, Persia, Egypt, Greece, Rome, and even Spain, have possessed land, labor, and capital in abundance, but fell for want of this far more important quality—the spiritual factor.

I'm looking out my window at the highway where a man is at work with a pick. The highway is the land; the man is the labor; and the pick is the capital. This is a perfect illustration of land, labor, and capital; but it also illustrates that such a combination can be used either to destroy or to construct—to break up the road, or to repair the road. The man can use the pick to make the ruts and holes deeper, or to fill them up. It all depends upon the purpose, the motive, and the desire of the man. Purpose, motive, and desire are spiritual factors and are all important. Land, labor, and capital, and even education, are mere tools which can be used either for good or for evil. Two men graduate from the same law school and get the same degree—one uses his education to uphold the law, and the other uses his education to help men evade the law. Two chemists graduate from the same technical school in the same class—one uses his training to make foods pure; and the other uses the same training to adulterate foods.

There Is Too Much Materialism To-day

However, the purpose of this letter is not to prove our proposition. You know that this position is absolutely right. Rather, the purpose of this letter is to urge you to use your influence in having our young people at school and college taught the truth of the situation. There is altogether too much materialism in our schools and colleges. The public documents and the private reports of many professors are harmful. The talks which many professors give, sneeringly referring to the spiritual forces of life, are very harmful. This materialistic trend is distinctly dangerous, and every college graduate should use his influence to stop it and check it. Those of you who are actively interested in alumni associations should at once bring this question to the front. Members of boards of trustees have a wonderful opportunity to do something effective in this connection. When asked to contribute to a college, find out what the college is teaching as to the fundamentals of business.

Conditions are getting so bad that they must be checked. It would be far better for the country if some colleges were closed up altogether than to have them continue to teach the materialistic economic doctrines that they are teaching to-day. Failing to teach the importance of the great spiritual forces is not only doing the country much harm, but is giving the students an idea which is absolutely wrong, economically and statistically. The great need of the hour is more sane religion. Education, unless guided by a religious purpose, is a very dangerous possession. Giving wrong economic teaching to the average man is like giving a gun to a maniac.

The Church Founded Our Colleges

One thing more, do these colleges realize by whom and for whom most of them were founded? If you will study the history of the college from which you graduated, you probably will find that it was originally founded by a group of God-fearing, praying men. If you will turn to the original charter of your institution, you will probably find that it was founded to strengthen the youths in the fundamentals of righteousness. Ah! How far some of these institutions have fallen from the high ideals for which they were originally founded. Hence my appeal to you college men to use your influence to get the colleges back again on the track and have them again teach what they were originally founded to teach—namely, the true fundamentals of prosperity.

A New Dynasty of Prophets

New prophets are standing on the threshold of events, and their voices will soon be heard proclaiming not new causes of dispute but reasons for unity, not dogmatic Christianity but the religion of Christ. In short, as a forerunner of the new dynasty tells us, the sacerdotalist is giving way to the preacher, the formalist to the prophet, and not, we are assured, any too soon. Writing in The Modern Churchman (Oxford), the Reverend R. Meiklejohn, an English clergyman of the Liberal school, remarks that the multitudes have now no authoritative leader. The great mass of the accredited teachers of religion is infected with doctrinism, and, he warns us, where there is no vision the people perish. It is, therefore, in the revival of the prophetic office, in reestablishing a pulpit of vision, that the salvation of the church is to be found. It is by diligent study and persuasive preaching, rather than by sumptuous services and sensuous music that the clergy of the church must regain their hold upon the world. "The ministry of the Word must come into its own, or the church as a human institution will cease to exist."

Liberalism, we are told, is preparing the new prophets. Emerging at length from the peaceful seclusion of the study, it "is massing its ranks and is going forth into the battle and the shouting and the dust. It is beginning to blaze the trail for mankind to follow into the kingdom of God." The new prophetic school will be strongly institutional, we are told; but it will always think of the institution in which the Spirit of Christ is embodied, and by which it is expressed, as the kingdom rather than as the church. "It will set its face like flint against those who imagine they are serving the God of all mankind by perpetuating old and out-worn prejudices, or by fomenting narrow and bigoted fanaticism." Moreover, the prophets of the new school will possess the mystical quality, as did the prophets of the old time, teaching their disciples "a mature and not a primitive, a mystical and not a magical, religion." They will proclaim God, as Dean W. R. Inge, of Saint Paul's, put it, "not as an object, but as an atmosphere."

"And finally, the preaching of the new prophetic school will be effective, not only because it will proclaim that moral unity for which Christendom longs, not only because it will satisfy, simply and directly, the desire of the human heart for God, but because it will offer to the inquiring mind a rational presentation of the fundamental truths of religion. It is the common assertion of the opponents of Liberal Christianity that its methods are merely destructive; that, in a skeptical spirit, it remorselessly seeks to destroy the idea of the Christian Church, to mutilate beyond recognition the Christian Bible, and to evacuate of all doctrinal significance the Christian creeds. The assertion is simply untrue. Every Liberal Churchman knows that the work to which he is pledged is constructive; that he seeks to enlarge the idea of the Christian Church, to rediscover the essentially spiritual teaching of the Christian Bible, and to reinterpret Christian dogma in a manner which shall confirm rather than weaken belief. It is the traditional Church, hardened and fossilized; it is the unexamined and unexplained Bible, invested with an impossible, fictitious sanctity; it is the stereotyped Creed, placed under an irrational, priestly tabu, that repels the thoughtful mind of the present age. The new preaching will derive no small part of its power from a frank and courageous recognition of these facts. Only when the broken ruins of collapsed beliefs are removed can the work of reconstruction be begun.

"Already is appearing, surely and unmistakably, the dawn of a better day. Like the prodigal, wretchedly poor, desperately unhappy, disgusted with past follies, sickened with the futilities of a present aimless existence, humanity is coming to itself. In a little while the new prophetic line will arise to lead it back to God."—Literary Digest.

Physical Education for Youth

From seven to sixteen years is stated by Doctor George L. Meylan, of Columbia University, to be the golden age for acquiring skill in athletic sports, with eighteen as the age of peak ability. The capacity for learning how to play diminishes rapidly after that, so that if the boy or girl does not get the opportunity during this golden period he is losing the opportunity of a lifetime, for it will never return.

He continues that it is only those who can play with some degree of skill who take the real interest in recreation and so receive the greatest amount of good from it. It is only in exceptional cases that a person after reaching full growth can get out of the duffer class, no matter how hard he may try.

Seven years, he states, is none too early for swimming, running, jumping, tennis, hiking, baseball, wrestling, and other sports of speed and strength. An all-round development in this early period fixes one for life.

On the other hand, trials of endurance should be postponed until after eighteen years of age but the development through proper sports should precede that period. A boy of seven or eight years can learn to swim in three lessons. From nine to twelve requires six to seven lessons; thirteen to sixteen, twelve lessons; while college freshmen usually require more than twenty lessons. In this connection we may note in the South Sea Islands babies are out in the water in the first few months and so acquire a natural aptitude to all water sports.

A long list could be published of those who have excelled at an early age in the various sports, like Arnold Jones and Helen Wills in lawn tennis, as both of them are near the top, the former as a sophomore in Yale and the latter at the early age of sixteen. Those who follow our national games know that even the greatest players are considered old before they have reached their thirtieth year, and this despite continual practice in that sport.

This is one of the predominant reasons why so much stress is placed upon the necessity of recreational development for the young people to give the physical basis for the mental and spiritual growth, and stamina for the later years.

The Need of Christianity

Doctor Frank Riale in an address at Duluth on the "Need of the Christian College" recently quoted Ogden Armour's remark that "the choice before us is Christ or chaos. I tell you we are sitting on a Bolshevik volcano, and as I have selected the men to be around me at this time, I have found that almost all of the men that I chose because I could rely on them were Christians, and sixty-five per cent of them were graduates of the small Christian colleges that you are talking about." After the address a railroad president of Duluth told Doctor Riale that he wished he would come down to the office the next morning. When Doctor Riale went the railroad executive said: "What Ogden Armour said is mild compared to what a judge said. A little while ago at a meeting with seventeen railroad presidents around the table he said: 'Before we get down to business I want to say something.' Of course, they sat up to hear. 'You may smile at what I am going to say, but the world is in a h— of a way. I don't go to church much. I usually play golf Sunday mornings, but I tell you the only solution is the Christian church and the Christian interpretation of life and education.'"—Christian Work, April 14, 1923.

The Village as Seen From the Church

There has been a great deal of writing lately concerning typical life in the towns and villages of America. Most of these stories have concerned themselves with the sordid aspects, with a collection of the disagreeable or stupid details, in a fair part at least.

It is refreshing, therefore, to pick up such a book as Church Street, by Jean Carter Cochran, and read concerning village life six or seven miles from the nearest railroad as seen through the eyes of the children in the church manse. This book presents the underlying beauty of life in such common terms as will help us better to love our own children and will cause us to think, Why, that is like my father and mother, my grandfather or grandmother, my pastor, or other of the people with whom we are surrounded. In other words, it helps us to see the beauty of the life of others immediately around us.

As to the minister, he is quite idealized through childish eyes and through the hearts of those who love him. Nor is it any wonder, when we appreciate his spirit of sacrifice, as is shown in the following poem written by him while on his death bed, and but a short time before he was called away:

"Still Let Me Serve"

"I am often very weary,
And both flesh and spirit fail;
The way seems sometimes dreary,
And with joy the end I'll hail.
But let me serve!

"The idlers are so many;
The workers are so few—
In some fields are not any Who yet can dare or do;
Oh, let me serve!

"What offering can I tender
For what Thou gavest me?
What service can I render
That's worthy, Lord, of thee?
But let me serve!

"And when thy hand has raised me
Unto thy heavenly throne,
I'll say when I have praised thee
For the 'Well done' and crown,
'Still let me serve!'"

America Predominantly Christian

The opportunity before the church was never better than to-day, according to the Literary Digest. The increase in membership last year was over 1,200,000 and about 50 per cent greater than the average for the preceding five years, bringing the membership up to a total of about 47,500,000 of professing members.

The five largest religious bodies are: first, the Methodists with 23,253,854; second, Baptists, with 22,869,098; third, the Catholic, 18,104,004; fourth, the Lutheran with a little over 7,000,000; and fifth, the Presbyterian, with a little over 6,700,000. This gives a total constituency of over 78,000,000 Protestants; 18,000,000 Catholics; 1,500,000 Jews; and 604,082 Latter Day Saints of all groups. The religious constituency including all baptized persons, all adherents, and all who in the supreme test of life or death turn to a particular communion is placed at 98,878,367. These figures would make the country decidedly religious and also predominantly Christian.

These figures are taken from the compilation of Doctor E. O. Watson, statistician of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

According to these figures the membership gain averaged about two and a half per cent and the constituency represents about 94 per cent of the population of America.

New Industry at Graceland

Those who are well acquainted with the work at Graceland College know that the industrial department is an important portion of the function of the school. The purpose of this department is to enable young people to earn at least a portion of their school expenses. Work is by no means considered discreditable at Graceland, as there are few indeed who do not do some remunerative labor at some period of their attendance.

The efforts of the school to provide suitable industry have been numerous. A prominent and continued factor has been the farm work to supply produce for the college hotel. At times different features of farm work have been given special attention. Provisions have been made in different years for extension work from the State College of Agriculture, at Ames.

When C. B. Woodstock was on the faculty, a manual training department was established and many useful articles manufactured and sold.

The laundry in Lamoni had its start in the Graceland College laundry, and now a new industry is being started, namely, a rug factory, according to the account in the Lamoni Chronicle for April 26. A small amount of machinery has been installed, and A. E. Bullard has taken charge of the work with two young men who have learned the trade sufficiently to weave a good-looking and serviceable rug. The rugs are at present made of mock yarn in one size only, 24 by 48, but with five colors. When established it is hoped that work will be furnished for a dozen students and serviceable rugs placed upon the market of various designs and sizes.

Woman Suffrage

Seventy-five years ago when the movement for woman suffrage was started, in every State in the Union as well as practically throughout the world, women were denied the right of an education, the right to earn a living, or claim their wages, to enter a profession, to own property or make a contract. They had no right to the children they bore, as these children could be willed to others.

The passage of the seventy-five years shows practically all of these discriminations removed in most of the States of the United States. An enormous amount of work has been done in writing the history of woman suffrage which is now completed to 1920 in six volumes. History shows the persistence of the effort and the energy and service of many put into this movement in order to achieve its final success in the Nineteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

Infant Mortality in Gary, Indiana

A survey by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor has confirmed previous observations that economic and civic factors such as low income, poor houses, sanitation, and lack of public welfare, affect the rate of infant mortality.

Portions of that city were inadequately provided for. Where the better houses are located, the death rate was 90.6 per 1,000 births. In the poorer house and foreign district, it was 141.2. Where the chief breadwinner earns at least $1,850, the infant death rate was 89.4; $1,050 to $1,850 the rate was 127.1; and below $1,050 it rose to 137.8. Infant welfare stations, prenatal clinics, and public health nurses, should within a few years decrease this mortality rate, which was unusually high the year of the survey. Most of the sickness was gastric and intestinal diseases, which would be largely reduced by breast feeding and improved milk supply and sanitation.

By letter to President Smith from Sister McMullen, Vancouver, British Columbia, it is learned that Sister Ella Stevenson, late of England, passed away after a long illness. She had been in the general hospital for a long time, a patient sufferer from severe stomach trouble. The letter says she remained strong in the faith to the last, and died peacefully.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Still More on the Macgregor-Glendenning Debate

A protest from Mr. L. B. Rockwell and a review of the situation.

This letter may seem rather tardy, offered as it is in reply to the extended criticism of my report of the Glendenning-Macgregor debate. As I am not a subscriber to the SAINTS' HERALD the copy containing the criticisms reached me from some friend at a tardy date. In view of the fact that I did not write for the HERALD (I offer no objection to my report appearing there) or in reply to any opponent's report, I claim the right to a privilege to examine said criticisms.

I shall confine myself as briefly as possible to the reviews of Elders Thompson and R. B. Stevens. Both Elders Thompson and Stevens attempt to show that I manufactured the report that one of the town officials was approached and asked to stop the debate and that I initiated the story that the debate was to be broken up. The report of the debate being forced to a close was reported on Wednesday to a very few so far as I know, but this I did not know until Thursday afternoon. During the day Thursday the report was in almost common circulation. Who started the report? Certainly the Adventists did not, as they were anxious to have the debate carried to a finish and regretted that the articles did not call for ten or twelve nights. And no one regretted this more than Elder Glendenning. In two letters received from him before the debate he said, "Why is the debate so short? Cannot you have it go on for two weeks?"

Living in Alley's Bay, a part of Jonesport, is Mr. Eben Walter Alley, a man whose word ranks as high as any citizen of Jonesport. He has repeatedly said to me that Captain O. W. Look told him that he was asked to close the debate, or through him to have the town officials do so, he being one of said officials. That he refused and said that the town officials had no authority to close the debate while good order prevailed. That the party making the request was one of the Latter Day people. The chairman, Mr. E. F. Farnsworth, must have known that there was a move on foot to break up the debate, for he said to me that there were twenty people in the hall the night the debate closed, who came there prepared to break up the debate and start a riot. That he had twenty-five reputable citizens of Jonesport stationed throughout the hall watching and listening and reporting to him just what was going on. I said, "One thing is certain, Mr. Farnsworth, there was not an Adventist in that number." He replied, "No, I do not believe there was." "Then who were the guilty ones?" was my reply. No answer.

If it is a question of veracity I will say that if the statements of Thompson are no more reliable than his written statements to me, they are self-condemned. He not only misrepresents the facts but admits that he stated what was not true in his reports of the debate. If this is disputed, as it will be, I will allow any two of the Latter Day members to come to my home and read Elder Thompson's two letters and the two I wrote on the same matter, with the settled understanding that the four letters shall be published in the SAINTS' HERALD. Copies may be made while the letters are being examined. Previous appointment must be made as I shall also have two present. I am willing to be governed by facts. If friend Stevens had confined himself to facts, his letter would have been very short instead of two pages. It is so seldom that Stevens gets any praise that he may be borne with for blowing his own horn so liberally. I was not ignorant that "the church was officially named and organized." Neither am I ignorant of the fact that it is the "Church of Jesus Christ" only in name.

He adds, "Mr. Rockwell says Welcome's History and Johnson's History of Adventism are a discredit and a misrepresentation." This is false, as any reader of my report will see. I said that Macgregor's representations were false. Mr. Miller did not organize the Adventist Church and was dead nine years before the church effected an organization. Mr. Miller did start the proclamation of the Second Advent and many of those accepting his message on that coming event later formulated themselves into an organization. In the meantime, however, they had adopted the doctrinal views of the unconscious state of the dead and destruction of the wicked, or in a sentence, conditional immortality, which doctrines Miller never believed. However, Mr. Macgregor was given uninterrupted attention while he tried to show from Miller what Adventists believed. Glendenning replied to it as was his right. In like manner Glendenning used Smith to ascertain just what the L. D. S. believed as they claim that Smith's doctrine is their doctrine, hence to prove Smith out of harmony with the Bible was to prove the L. D. S. out of harmony with the Bible. The very thing the proposition made it incumbent upon him to do.

If Mr. Macgregor did not leave the proposition in using Miller in trying to show what the Adventists believed, why was it called leaving the proposition when Glendenning used Smith in the same way? The only reason was that the L. D. S. had decided not to hear it. Mr. Glendenning has held about twelve debates with the L. D. S. debaters, and on each occasion his opponent has made the same objection but has always been ruled out of order, and on several occasions men of education, experience, and ability, including lawyers, have presided. The same would have been done on this occasion had the debate been presided over by one of this kind. Mr. Farnsworth was a strong Latter Day sympathizer and has since joined that church. I do not know that anyone denies that Joseph Smith started and organized the church now called the Reorganized Church of L. D. S. They resort to every sort of effort to show that Smith was a prophet, etc., and hold him up as a "restorer of the true gospel," but at once when the historic facts of his creed and life are presented they become enraged, and object. No wonder you L. D. S. object, for it is because of these facts that so many have left your church and are steadily leaving it, from bishop to elder, priest, and layman.

May I add a word about the selection of Mr. Farnsworth for chairman? When his name was presented to me by Mr. Thompson, it was after there had been several names considered and they each declined. Mr. Thompson assured me, as I did not know the man, that he was not a member of any church and unbiassed in religious views. That his wife was a member of the Adventist Church. All of which, so far as I have been able to learn, was not true. However, on Saturday before the debate, having learned that he was a strong supporter of the L. D. S., I raised some objections to his serving and gave the reasons. Thompson repeated his assurances and I said that I would consent pending the arrival of our moderator but reserved the right to effect a change in the chairman of the debate if desired. At the time of the breaking up of the debate I would have demanded this but knowing the temper of the L. D. S. who were present it would have been turned down.

I wish to examine the other points Mr. Stevens makes prominent. He says, "Again Glendenning took the floor, and began talking as before, upon the character of Joseph Smith, slandrously of course (the proposition called for an examination of the church on points of organization, doctrine, and practice)." It is not true that Glendenning talked slanderously on the character of Joseph Smith. Will Mr. Stevens please look up the meaning of the word slanderous? He was quoting from sworn testimony of Smith's friends concerning what Smith believed and practiced. Every fair-minded person present will say that Mr. Glendenning did not use one word that was "slanderous." If to deal with the organization is not on "point of organization," pray tell us what to call it. If the L. D. S. Church is a "reorganized" church, did not Mr. Glendenning have a right to go to the organization of that church to meet the proposition? Only those who fear the facts say no. When Stevens says, "Things have already gone too far," it would have been a complete expression of facts if he had added, for the L. D. S. No one at the debate regretted the closing of it as much as did Mr. Glendenning. Stevens says, "Dollars to doughnuts, Glendenning will never again pick Macgregor!" In answer to this I am authorized by Mr. Glendenning to say that he herewith challenges Mr. Smith, the prophet and head of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to meet him in debate on the following resolutions, in Jonesport, Maine, between the middle of May and the last of June, and if Mr. Smith declines or says that he cannot accept this challenge then the challenge goes to Mr. Macgregor for the same time and place. The debate to continue for twelve nights, giving three nights on each of the resolutions.

1. Resolved, That the organization, doctrine, and practice of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the Bible as taught in the King James Version.

2. Resolved, That the organization, doctrine, and practice of the Adventist Christian Church is in harmony with the Bible, as taught in the King James Version.

3. Resolved, That Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God and divinely inspired to restore the true gospel.

4. Resolved, That the Book of Mormon is a true record, a divinely inspired book and should be respected and believed in by all.

Quoting again from Stevens: "Honesty demands that the public be informed that this contest was not of the Latter Day seeking." Neither Mr. Stevens, Thompson, or any other can deny that that debate proposition was set in motion by Mr. Thompson challenging Miss Slipp, pastor of the Reformed Baptist Church, of Jonesport, to debate or provide an opponent to debate on the lines contained in my resolutions, except Adventist appeared where he said Baptist, with the addition of Mr. Macgregor's proposal that the Book of Mormon be added to my resolutions, which Glendenning accepted. When Miss Slipp informed him that she had a man to meet the proposals, but not of her denomination, he declined to take on her chosen opponent. As the L. D. S. had in the past repeatedly challenged the Adventists in this place it was apparent that (supported by lively rumor) another was on the way. No doubt that the "boastful debaters" were taken by surprise to receive my challenge and at once put up the calamity cry of "not our seeking," "will make hard feelings," "we never seek a debate but never back down." It is true, however, that after challenging one of our men, John M. Kelley, they positively refused to go on with the debate. I say that the debate was wholly of their choosing. No more common talk was heard in Beals in the past than that no one would debate with the L. D. S. Not a few of the L. D. S. said while the debate was pending, "If we are beaten we won't admit it." "Dollars to doughnuts" the L. D. S. have not agitated a debate since May, 1922, in Jonesport.

Regarding the personality of appearance of the two debaters which Stevens enlarges on. As this was not in the resolutions it needs little or no attention. "Coal, not diamonds, go by the ton." Quality, not quantity counts, as it did in this case.

If Mr. Thompson had reported that one of their members left his church after the debate and joined the Adventist Church it would have helped to make his misleading report more correct. And if Mr. Stevens had said also what is a fact, that one man said, "Never shall another Mormon cross my threshold"; and several others saying that they had "gone into the L. D. S. church for the last time; and yet others as saying that their children had gone to a L. D. S. church for the last time. And also that for many years the L. D. S. had made a practice of visiting our Adventist homes, as well as the Baptist homes, and persistently denouncing the teachings of these sects, saying that to continue therein they could never be saved and that they must be baptized by their elder and join their church or be lost, etc. This is undenied by anyone in Jonesport. And I have seen and read letters written by the L. D. S. elder aiding this proselyting campaign. Does Stevens call this religious toleration? Is this "getting along very well together"? Of course all goes well as long as the L. D. S. can have a free hand in tearing down other denominations and deceiving people into joining theirs. But if a halt is called, then abuse is poured on the head of the objector.

This letter is written in justice to the writer and to the facts. Yours seeking the triumph of truth,

L. B. ROCKWELL.

A Brief Review of the Situation

We are publishing without hesitancy the above letter, even though we published the original letter by Mr. Rockwell at the time that we published the reply. We are thus giving Mr. Rockwell another chance to state his position and to answer that which has already appeared.

We do not intend to make a detailed reply. There seems no reason why this matter should be further agitated. Our Hope, the periodical in which Mr. Rockwell's letter originally appeared, have written that they were publishing his reply but would not publish anything further. They published both of Mr. Rockwell's letters in full and published a portion of Mr. Stevens's letter. We are publishing both of Mr. Rockwell's letters in full and have published Mr. Stevens's letter in full together with the statement from the town fathers.

Read "Herald" of September Thirteen

It would be well for our readers to refer again to the original statements in the HERALD of September 13, 1922, as that statement rather fully answers this present letter. We have there the statement, in very nearly affidavit form, by Captain O. W. Look that he was not approached either directly or indirectly by anyone on behalf of the Latter Day Saints to stop the debate. We have now a further statement from Captain Look denying that he made the statement alleged in the letter above and reaffirming his signed statement already published. He speaks very highly of Mr. Eben Walter Alley, but denies he made any such statement to him or to anyone else. Against that we are offered hearsay two or three times removed.

Mr. Rockwell continues to insinuate that the Latter Day Saints were attempting to dodge the issue and were involved in trying to break off the debate, but he offers not one particle of evidence to sustain such an idea, and seems to make no attempt to secure evidence further than to report a statement which is little better than a rumor, if it is that.

H. A. Koehler and Mr. Kelley

Stating very briefly the conditions. When H. A. Koehler was in Jonesport it appears that he challenged a Mr. Kelley to debate. When arrangements were being made for the debate the town fathers intervened and objected. Brother Koehler declined to call off the debate, but expressed his willingness to act with the officials and to agree with whatever they could arrange with Mr. Kelley. Pursuant to this, Mr. French, one of the selectmen publicly stated these facts, giving the people to understand that Elder Koehler had not backed down in any manner or degree. The debate was called off at the instigation of the town officials.

Miss Slipp Lectures and Mr. Rockwell Intervenes

More recently a Miss Slipp was delivering lectures in that vicinity. She was approached, and the difference between the two churches pointed out. She continued, however, to confuse the two in a way that finally caused the suggestion of a debate. When she assented, she was approached several times to name a man or secure a man of her own denomination; but this she did not do. The objection on this score is that of necessity. If there is to be any fairness in a debate the propositions should be equal and equal time given both affirmatively and on the defense to each. She could not expect some one who was not a member of her own church to defend the proposition that her church was the New Testament church.

Into this situation it appears that Mr. Rockwell stepped, and, according to a printed letter published about the time, he states clearly that he had been steadily forcing this question to the fore, and that he was responsible for the developments and that in order to give Mr. Glendenning the position in the debate he desired he, Rockwell, issued the challenge. It appears from this that he was the one instrumental in agitating the debate.

Elder Thompson assures us that no responsible persons were agitating the debate, for while we do not shrink from the issue or dodge it, we are not a contentious people, nor out seeking a scrap.

The Issue With Elder Thompson

We have before us the letter and general correspondence through the courtesy of Elder Thompson. From this it appears that his alleged misstatement was: "Elder Macgregor used their own historic works purchased at their own publishing house." The point that Elder Thompson was making was simply as to the authenticity of the books, that they were purchased from their own publishing house. Rockwell tried to make it appear that Elder Thompson had said that Elder Macgregor had purchased these books in person while it appears that Elder Macgregor had purchased some books and borrowed others, but that all of the books came from their own publishing house. Mr. Rockwell, however, insists that Elder Thompson misrepresented because Elder Macgregor did not purchase all the books that he used in that debate from their publishing house.

Again, Mr. Rockwell stated in Our Hope, "Mr. Macgregor presented some misrepresentations of history in trying to discredit our organization." On this Elder Thompson has made the comment, "The histories used by Elder Macgregor were their own historic publications written by Adventist authorities and published by their own publishing house.

They were Welcome's History and Johnson's History of Adventism. Mr. Rockwell says they are misrepresentations and a discredit to his organization." The reader should be able to judge this issue for himself. We shall not attempt to discuss in detail and answer further.

Mr. Farnsworth states that it was his wife's sister who was a member of the Adventist Church, while his wife was favorable thereto. He was county sheriff and widely known and respected as a man of integrity. If Mr. Rockwell learned he was unsatisfactory before the debate, it was then his place to make his objections known; not wait till long after the debate. The fact that Mr. Farnsworth became interested through the debate and through his further investigation was later baptized is no reflection upon his fairness and impartiality.

Propositions for Debate

It is so well recognized as scarcely to need statement, that if fair propositions are submitted for debate, each party will affirm an equal amount and will be upon the defense an equal portion of the time. Elder Macgregor has been appointed to British Columbia. Elder Thompson is now at Lamoni, Iowa. Neither of them is inclined to avoid the issue. Elder Macgregor stated frankly he was ready to discuss any of these questions at any length desired both before the debate, during the debate, and since. So far as the renewal in Jonesport, Maine, is concerned, our church was not in the first place in the position of seeking controversy and is not now. If the community desires such a discussion it will doubtless be arranged for, but we are advised from several sources that the town fathers are opposed to such an attempt.

No Loss to This Church

When we say the community, we do not mean the members of our church. We mean the public at large and the town officials. We are quite well satisfied with the result of the debate, especially when we appreciate that forty have been baptized, that the largest Sunday school ever held in Jonesport has been held since the debate. If there has been any permanent loss to our church we have been unable to learn of it. One former member of Mr. Rockwell's church was baptized a short time before the debate. After the debate she again affiliated with the Adventists for a time. This is probably what Mr. Rockwell refers to. But she has now returned to us stronger than ever. In fact she had not withdrawn formally from this the Church of Jesus Christ.

There is much more that can be said, but we refrain from further discussion with this closing suggestion that we should gather from Mr. Rockwell's letter there is a radical difference in the kind of testimony offered. On one hand the teachings of Mr. Miller as the founder of the Adventists were presented. Mr. Miller had died before this particular branch was organized, but this was introduced merely to show the authoritative teachings of the original church as put forth by their own publishing house. On the other hand an attempt was made simply to attack the character of Joseph Smith and that not by the use of any original or authoritative writings. The character of Joseph Smith was not at issue. His teachings and the principles he presents which were accepted by the original church would have been as much in point as presenting the principles and teachings of Mr. Miller. An attack upon his character was no more involved in the propositions for debate than would have been a similar attack upon the character and reputation of Mr. Miller or any other associate of that church.

We do not attempt a detailed reply because it is not necessary. The letter of Mr. Stevens, the statement of the town officials, and letter of Elder Orval Thompson, published September 13, 1922, have already fully answered.

Echoes From Zion

In the Stone Church in Zion there are held each Sabbath prayer services at eight o'clock in the morning and at 2.30 p. m. At these services are frequently read requests for prayer in behalf of the sick. It is rather pathetic to listen to some of these appeals which indicate a large degree of faith in the prayers of the children of Zion. A good sister in Prescott, Iowa, in a letter asking for prayers says, "I have lots of faith in prayer. I know the good Lord will not leave me as long as I do his will." Such faith will bring the blessing.

By invitation, we visited the Fourth Kansas City Branch and enjoyed a splendid Sunday school and preaching service. Brother Oliver Worden is pastor in charge, whose parents and grandparents we knew well in Stewartville, Missouri. We found in Oliver Worden a concentration of the many good qualities of his forebears. They are singing, "Give us room that we may dwell," as their church house is too small. We met there some whom we knew as children in Saint Joseph, Missouri, children such as Nellie Niedorf; Don D. Taylor; Sister Fifer, now Worden, the efficient wife of Oliver.

A mass meeting was recently held in the Stone Church participated in by Presidency, apostles, bishops, pastors, deacons, evangelists, sisters, and membership, which was largely attended and in which there was not a dissenting voice or vote. All were of one heart and one mind. The result will be the redemption of near twenty acres in the heart of the city of Independence. Who dare say Zion will not be redeemed?

My missionary companion and I are finally located in our own home from which we hope to radiate in service to help on in the building up of the restored gospel. This is our only desire and the intent of our lives, ready for service in the Master's cause.

We are pleased with favorable reports from our old fields, California and Seattle, and British Columbia Districts. We often think of our past associates in the distant West where we spent twenty years in gospel work and formed many precious acquaintances. The Lord bless them all.

Young People's Meetings at Flint, Michigan

The Flint, Michigan, correspondent, writing in a recent HERALD, could not very well mention some things, in the eternal fitness of things, regarding the young people's meetings recently held there. In justice to the young people, what the correspondent omitted I should supply.

The meetings were held in the neat brick building of the First Church, which seats about three hundred. Many times during the services it was uncomfortably crowded. The young people were given entire charge by the president of the branch, and the way they handled the audiences, arranged the programs, met visitors, and conducted the meetings as a whole showed considerable executive ability. There seemed to be complete harmony between the older members of the priesthood and the younger men. I failed to see any evidences of jealousy on the part of the older men. Personally, I was delighted to see the large number of consecrated young men and women engaged in the Lord's work there.

There was a wealth of musical talent available, from inside and outside of the church. The community singing was certainly full of life and spirit.

At the close of the services, the president of the branch handed me a package and an envelope. It will be easy to guess what the fat envelope contained. The package given me was meant in a good spirit, but I don't know whether it was the proper thing or not. So many people who have seen its contents have broken the command, "Thou shalt not covet." The package contained a beautiful, latest style walrus Boston bag.

I considered it a great privilege to be associated with the young people of Flint for the three weeks, and with the other members of the three churches in the city. May the Lord's blessing be with his Saints there.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

Bisbee, Arizona

May 6 was a record breaker in attendance at most of the services. About forty persons witnessed the baptism of five candidates in the afternoon. Four were members of the Sunday school, two boys and two girls, ranging from eight years to fifteen. The fifth was a married lady who is a graduate nurse, and has considerable vocal talent. We rejoice to have these additions to the membership of the branch. A very good spirit was present at the confirmation in the evening as well as at the sacrament service at 11 a. m.

The attendance, interest, and activity among the membership have been on the increase for several weeks, and we feel sure it will continue to increase if all will do their duty. We feel sure that the Lord has been waiting for several years to pour out a blessing upon this branch as soon as the membership reaches the spiritual condition to entitle them to such blessing. The good work will go on, many will be called to repentance, and Zion redeemed in due time, if the people who are called to be Saints will live saintly lives.

Haverhill, Massachusetts

Just a few lines to you from this part of the Lord's vineyard. We do not get into your columns very often, so I am taking this opportunity to tell you some of the good times that we are having here.

We have had some very spiritual meetings of late. The Lord has blessed us to a marked degree with his Spirit. We have enjoyed a number of prophecies, and one of the sisters had the privilege of seeing an angel standing just behind Apostle E. J. Gleazer on the platform when he was here to visit us recently. We have seen the Lord's hand over his people this winter in a number of instances. Some he has been pleased to heal instantly, others after the trial of our faith.

We have had three ordinations here recently, Brothers Stilianus Popopoulous and F. E. Hatch to the office of priest, and Brother A. Wengel a teacher.

Ever hoping and praying for the success of the work everywhere,

FRANK E. HATCH.

Ellis Short, jr., and his father, Bishop Ellis Short, conducted meetings at Ottawa, Kansas, on Sunday, May 13. They report most excellent services and a good gathering of the Saints, some coming from twelve to twenty-five miles. They meet again on Sunday, May 27.

Regarding Mothers' Day

As it is nearing the time of year that we celebrate Mothers' Day, it has again brought to mind some thoughts I have had before on this subject.

We understand that Mothers' Day was first suggested by Miss Anna Jarvis, and if I remember correctly she had considerable trouble in launching the idea. But now it has grown to be recognized the world over.

Now we believe there are many good things we as a church can copy from the world. We also know that we have the fullness of the gospel, and to whom much is given much is required. Might we not enlarge upon Mothers' Day and give the love, honor, and respect where we believe it was intended. The Lord said, "And they twain shall be one flesh. Honor thy father and thy mother." Also "Children, obey your parents." Almost always where we find any information along this line the father and mother are combined, which tends to bring that unity for which we are all striving.

I feel much like the little boy who said:

"I love my mother, 'course I do,
But then I love my daddy, too;
And though I haven't much to say
I wish they'd call this Parents' Day."

Self-Help at Graceland College

President George N. Briggs has been in Saint Louis as well as elsewhere investigating self-help in connection with various institutions of learning and gathering some valuable data. He found one locality in the population of 500 and a college of 475 students. This was made possible through the self-help department. This has always been a special feature of the work at Graceland, and it has been one of the great problems how to extend this possibility of service to the students by permitting them to earn their living while studying. At one time good results were achieved by permitting students to work for their board in town. The present plan for next year appears to be to send the students out for a certain number of hours for general housework, office work, carpentry, stenography, clerking, gardening, etc. The schedule next year will be arranged to make it possible for a student to spend a half day in the schoolroom and then work three hours a day, which at twenty cents an hour, and twenty to twenty-five hours a week, allowing for more work time on Saturday, will make it possible to earn their full board and room. On this plan definite hours of employment will be assigned.

To this end a stirring letter has been sent out by Professor J. A. Gunsolley to each home in Lamoni.

Born in 1829

It has been many years since I have written to you. I have often thought I would like to but thought there were others who could do better, but now I feel a duty to write though friends have promised to do this for me.

Nearly a year ago, my mother, Jane Manning, passed away at the age of ninety-three years. She was born January 14, 1829, about the time of the coming forth of this latter-day work. She felt in later years that it was a great privilege to have entered the world at that time. At the time of her death she had been a member of the church for some forty-five years and was a good, faithful Saint, loved by all who knew her. We grew old together and have had many grand and glorious testimonies of this latter-day work, and with a surety we know it is true.

I had asked our heavenly Father many times that when mother's time came to go he would not let her suffer but that she might fall asleep like a child in its mother's arms. As I sat on the bed with her loved form held close in my arms I realized how completely my prayer had been answered, for she fell asleep peacefully and without a struggle.

How I thank God for such a mother as she has always been to me. May God bless all of his Saints and be with them in their hour of sorrow as he has been with me in mine.

Spokane District Reunion

June 15 to 25, 1923, at Sawyer, Idaho. So many letters of inquiry have been received that it becomes necessary to write a second letter to the Saints of the Northwest. From the best calculations we think that there will be two hundred present, and we are hoping that there will be more than twice that number. It is going to be a wonderful time indeed. Take the Great Northern Railway to Laclede, Idaho, or the Spokane International to Sawyer. We prefer the latter, and if you are in a car, follow the pavement through the Spokane valley to the old Allen race tracks, and follow the finger sign boards from there on. But if you are coming from Sandpoint cross the long bridge and follow the road to Duffort, where the signs will direct you. Bring or ship your tents early if you have one or can get any. If you do not have one be sure and place your order not later than June 1, to lease one for the ten days.

Tell all the Saints you know of, as well as your neighbors and friends; bring them all and receive your share of a great blessing at this reunion, and help lay the plans for the reunion of next year. We are going to live our Zion laws, so come and join in with the many others and prepare to go to Zion, for the reunion will help you so much that you cannot afford to miss it.

Secretary-Treasurer Reunion Committee.

Dwight Madison Found

Dwight Madison, the son of William Madison and wife, who disappeared some few months ago from their home in Washington, District of Columbia, has been located near the ancestral home in Minnesota. We are sure that there are many friends, especially those who became acquainted with Sister Madison in her reunion work as one of the executives of the Department of Women, who will receive this news with pleasure.

The Trial of the Witnesses to the Resurrection of Jesus

Some years ago the Herald Publishing House published an excellent tract of thirty-two pages devoted to an examination of the witnesses to the resurrection of Jesus. This tract took the form of a legal argument before a court between two lawyers, who were examining the record and basing their argument on the evidence submitted. This tract was written by the Right Reverend Thomas Sherlock, Bishop of London, about 1729, and for this reason has not been reprinted, nor is it listed in the Herald Office catalogue. To put these tracts, of which a few hundred remain, where they will do the most good we will send them out at the rate of seven for five cents to cover the bare cost of mailing.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI. G. S. TROWBRIDGE, Manager.

Independence

Services in the Independence churches Sunday were as follows: Stone Church, preaching by Elders T. W. Williams and Alma White; Liberty Street, E. T. Atwell and Ward L. Christy; Enoch Hill, W. D. Bullard and E. A. Curtis; Walnut Park, George Jennings and C. K. Green. The radio sermon was by Apostle T. W. Williams.

Bishop James F. Keir, who was reported last week as ill, is rapidly recovering and is again at his desk.

Sister Blanche Edwards of Birmingham, England, recently arrived in this country. She was met in Chicago by her brother, Apostle F. Henry Edwards. Sister Edwards will visit in Independence and Kansas City for a few days, and then will attend the Young People's Convention at Lamoni.

Brother W. A. Bushnell, for many years an active worker in the young people's affairs in Independence, is seriously ill at the East Side Hospital, Kansas City.

Elder T. W. Williams has returned to Independence from his trip to Lamoni. He will remain here until time to attend the convention there in June.

At the big mass meeting Friday night on the new Swope property purchase, a total of $19,000 in pledges was reported. Elder Walter W. Smith, in charge of the meeting, called on T. W. Williams, James F. Keir, B. R. McGuire, and Elbert A. Smith for short talks. He then announced that he was going to try to raise the amount necessary to enable the drive to "go over the top." He did a very satisfactory job of auctioneering, and succeeded in getting the people present to pledge about $2,000 more. There is still $3,000 to be pledged, and it is hoped that by the time the workers all report and the pledges are all accounted for the grand total of $25,000 from Independence will have been reached.

This meeting on the new grounds was the first one of an official nature. It is conservatively estimated that three thousand people attended this mass meeting. The Latter Day Saint band was out in force and gave a splendid concert for an hour preceding the talks. Basket lunches were taken to the grounds by many of the Saints and the afternoon was pleasantly spent in the shade of the magnificent elms which add so much to the beauty of the place. In the evening the house was lighted up with the new fixtures, and many an enthusiastic group wended its way from the basement to the third floor, admiring the woodwork, fireplace mantels, etc., and talking over the uses to which such a building could be put. The Orioles of one group served lunch and refreshments in a stand, the proceeds of which were to be used to pay their pledge to the purchase fund.

An important step in providing for adequate supervision of the grounds and the building and the laying out of the work to be accomplished to fit the place for such purposes as are necessary was taken when the mass meeting voted as one to make the Committee of Thirty the controlling body until such time as things were well organized and on a smoothly running basis. This will place the control of the building in the hands of a popularly elected committee.

Elder John M. Cockerton, a well-known resident of Independence and vicinity, and an active churchman, died at his farm house on the Blue Ridge Boulevard Wednesday afternoon, May 16, after an illness of only a few days. His death was due to arsenic of lead poisoning and pneumonia. He had been spraying his orchard for some days, and on Thursday preceding his death had complained of not feeling well. From then on he steadily grew worse until the end.

Brother Cockerton came to Independence from Oakland, California, fifteen years ago and bought a farm about two miles east of town on the Courtney road, where he lived until two years ago, when the farm was sold. A larger farm on the Blue Ridge road was later purchased, and the family was living there at the time of his death.

Elder Cockerton has always been an active worker in the church. Shortly after coming here he opened and conducted a mission at Courtney, Missouri, a few miles north of Independence, which was later transferred to the little old building on North Liberty Street here, and organized into a branch over which he presided. He was instrumental in building up the work in the north part of the city until the group outgrew the building and the present excellent church home was secured, where he acted as pastor until about the first of the present year. In 1916 he was ordained a high priest and chosen a member of the Independence Stake High Council, in which capacity he served until the dissolution of the Council in 1920 at the time the Independence Stake became Zion. At the reorganization of the Standing High Council of the church in February, 1922, he was selected as one of the twelve councilors, in which position he occupied until his death.

Burial was from the North Liberty Street church Sunday afternoon. It was perhaps the largest funeral held in Independence in many years. The service was in charge of Elder J. M. Terry, assisted by Elder Walter W. Smith. Members of the High Council acted as pallbearers, and high priests attended en masse and were seated on the rostrum. The nurses' alumni also attended in a body. The floral offerings were especially beautiful and profuse, and in a small way indicated the esteem in which Brother Cockerton was held.

Surviving him are his widow, Sister Jennie Cockerton, a son, George Cockerton, of Oakland, California, and two daughters, Mrs. Mable Driver, of Benecia, California, and Miss Ina Cockerton of Independence the last named being the first graduate of the Independence Sanitarium Training School for Nurses and a United States Army nurse during the war.

Thus passes from our midst one who, while his work was quietly and unostentatiously performed, had yet the power of making and holding friends for himself and the cause he so deeply loved and so unselfishly promoted.

President F. M. McDowell was at Lawrence, Kansas, meeting with the young people of the Kansas University, on Sunday, May 13, then came to Independence the following day in connection with the Young People's Convention and its program. He was also in Independence on Monday, the 21st, in connection with the same work.

At the business meeting of the conference in Zion on May 14 his name was proposed as a member of the board for the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, and he was so chosen.

President Elbert A. Smith was in Saint Louis Sunday meeting with the Saints and preaching for them morning and evening.

Sister A. L. Yingling was also in Saint Louis in connection with the work of the Department of Women and the Sanitarium.

A surprise was given to Brother John Tucker, Wednesday evening, May 9, by the members of the Quindaro Group, Kansas City, Kansas. He has been their pastor for about seven years and left for Europe May 12 to visit friends and relatives in his native land. After a splendid spiritual prayer service, the congregation sang, "Blest be the tie that binds," a few original numbers were given, and as a token of appreciation for his services he was presented, through Brother E. N. Palmer, with a beautiful traveling bag. He expects to be gone about two months.

Saint Louis, Missouri

We have been favored with visits of unusual importance in the recent past few weeks.

On Friday, May 11, President F. M. Smith spent a few hours with the men's class of our Sunday school and all were glad to meet President Smith.

On Friday, May 18, Sister Yingling met with our young people at Religio and in a very interesting talk kept the attention of even the children on her subject of mothers' and recreational work.

On Saturday Sister Yingling visited Lansdowne Branch and gave much advice and encouragement to the sisters at that place. Sunday afternoon Sister Crabtree took Sister Yingling to the monthly class meeting of the Daughters of Good Cheer. This is one of the most alive classes in our school and a large attendance greeted our visiting sister at the home of Sister Blanch Cook, where she again addressed the ladies on problems of study, unity, and home government. So many good thoughts were expressed we wish the address had been taken down for printing.

"Best last"—among so much that is good we were treated to two fine sermons on Sunday, the 20th, by President Elbert A. Smith, in the morning on the uniformity in the Christ life, which were convincing in every phase. But the ending was particularly impressive, showing the love and forgiveness He had preached was part of his own life, and so beautifully exemplified in the agony of the cross when His God character was revealed in the words, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

The evening sermon was a fitting close for the morning effort, showing the need of religion. Nothing else, science, art, pleasures, gives the reason, or any adequate reason, for man's existence on the earth. Many were edified and encouraged by the sermons and so expressed themselves and also by the gentle, humble, and Christlike personality of the speaker.

Lamoni Items

From the Lamoni Chronicle we learn that the old Herald Office building has been turned over entirely to Graceland College for use in connection with its work. A number of business men were planning to convert it into a modern hotel, but any such use will be secondary to the needs of the college.

The radio at Lamoni is now well established with sermon on May 6 by Elder Lonzo Jones, solo by Mrs. Raymond McElroy, and a quartet.

Sister Marietta Walker is rightly termed the "Mother of Graceland" for she not only strongly favored and supported the idea of a college but she made the initial donation of land on part of which the college building stands. On this account the Lamoni Chronicle states that Sister Vida E. Smith spoke at chapel on the 7th concerning the "Mother of Graceland," after whom Marietta Hall, the first dormitory, was named. This is now coming to be an annual observance at the college.

Mrs. Dora L. Glines, superintendent of the Department of Women, was in Lamoni the first week in May lecturing to the class in religious education. The second week Apostle T. W. Williams, superintendent of the Department of Recreation and Expression, was the speaker.

Miss Zilpha Monroe, superintendent and matron of the Children's Home, is spending a couple of weeks in Chicago visiting the various institutions in the interest of her work.

Cameron, Missouri

Planning a new church. Apostles Budd and Gillen visit.

It has been some time since we have contributed any news from Cameron, not because things have not been happening but because time has not been taken to send in the items.

Our new pastor, Elder John F. Sheehy, and family, are permanently located here, having moved from Fall River, Massachusetts. We are glad to have them locate here and appreciate having the opportunity of working with a man of Brother Sheehy's type and feel that the work under his supervision will continue to develop and move forward.

All departments of the church work are organized and endeavoring to function in their proper place. This makes the church quite a busy place, being occupied nearly every evening in the week.

We as a branch are confronted with the problem of building a new church as we have outgrown our present home and find that regardless of which way we turn, the necessity for a large and modern church building looms up. The branch is endeavoring to meet the situation and has been working on plans which will be completed in the near future. The indications are that when all is in proper shape the Saints as well as many outside the church will be prepared to go ahead and complete the building program.

On May 6 the people of Cameron were very agreeably surprised to have with them again Apostle Roy S. Budd who previous to being called to the Quorum of Twelve had been in charge of the work in Cameron. His presence with us on this occasion happened to be the fifth anniversary of his appearance in Cameron and the sermon he preached that evening was the four hundredth one to be delivered by him from that pulpit. Regardless of the number of sermons preached here by him the congregation still remain hungry for more. The sacrament service at eleven o'clock was well attended and the Saints were strengthened by the character of the meeting, it being spiritual and uplifting.

On the 7th of May Apostle James A. Gillen made us a visit and preached one of his very impressive sermons which was appreciated by all. This was Brother Gillen's first sermon in Cameron, but we hope he will come again soon. He was greatly interested in our building program and advised us to consider well the future and not only build to take care of present needs but plan something adequate for the future of the work in Cameron.

G. SCOTT DANIEL.

Herbert S. Salisbury, a grandson of Catherine E. Salisbury, who was a sister of Joseph Smith the Martyr, was elected early in May as commander of the Sons of Veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, at their annual encampment held at Sedalia, Missouri, according to an item in the Saint Joseph News-Press which follows. Brother Salisbury was assistant church historian for one year and has been much interested in the historical and biographical work of the church. For the past few years he has resided in Saint Joseph, Missouri, where he is engaged in his professional work as civil engineer.

"The staff of H. S. Salisbury, 1402 Locust Street, commander of the Sons of Veterans of the G. A. R., comprises Fred J. Wenz, of Saint Joseph, division color bearer; Fred E. Ernst of Saint Joseph, councillor; L. L. Roberts of Kansas City, chaplain, and William Schumacher of Saint Louis, patriotic instructor. Salisbury was elected commander at the annual encampment, held this week at Sedalia, Missouri.

She felt it a great privilege to be allowed to enter life at that time. Baptized at Peoria, Illinois, September 25, 1877, and was a member of the church forty-five years, having had many grand and glorious testimonies of this latter-day work. Died June 18, 1922. Leaves a son and a daughter, Willis Boulby and Eva Harding. Also leaves three great-grandchildren and three great-great-grandchildren.

Blue Pencil Notes

To be easily hurt is a misfortune—to be easily angered is a grave defect, possibly a sin.

It is easy to love our brother when he thinks as we think and does as we think he should do. The test comes when we differ. But it may help us to remember that though he may be wrong this time, our own batting average on truth is not yet so high as it might be.

"I advise you not to be harsh. The day is coming when there must be a better unity of effort and a more kindly spirit exhibited in our preaching. Our success will be better if we show men the better side without compromising the teachings we are holding. We will break down the barriers more rapidly than we will if we insist upon our superiority and keep them at a distance."—From an address by President Joseph Smith at the conference of 1897.

Joseph Smith wrote: "Some days after I had this vision I happened to be in company with one of the Methodist preachers who was very active in the before-mentioned religious excitement, and conversing with him on the subject of religion I took occasion to give him an account of the vision which I had had. I was greatly surprised at his behavior; he treated my communication not only lightly, but with great contempt, saying it was all of the Devil; that there were no such things as visions or revelations in these days."

That conversation was the beginning of a controversy that has raged to this day. But take particular notice that it grew out of an affirmative declaration on the part of Joseph Smith, and not out of an attack on the Methodist Church. Joseph Smith was telling his experiences and beliefs and thus incidentally drew the fire of opposition.

Since then we have often been attacked. And it must be admitted we have learned how to strike back. And too often we do not wait for an attack. We make the attack. That is a mistaken procedure. We are sent out to preach the gospel. Our message should be affirmative. If attacked we may defend ourselves in a gentlemanly and Christian way and call on our enemies to produce their strong reasons. And sometimes under those circumstances our defense very properly becomes an offensive, as in most conflicts, and we may "carry the war into Egypt." But to make our preaching in any community negative from the start—to attack Methodists, Baptists, Disciples, Catholics, whatnot, is a wrong policy and may result disastrously.

As an example, one of our men, a kind and wise man who has traveled in various lands and preached the gospel for years, whose name is well known to the Saints, sends this report of results observed by him in one community within the past month:

"During the first week at —, I discovered a peculiar condition existing. Nonmembers were conspicuous by their absence. After careful inquiry I learned that at some time in the past special meetings had been held there and the Catholics, Methodists, and Baptists were attacked, with the result that many became prejudiced and would not attend the meetings. I also learned that several had withdrawn their patronage from Latter Day Saint business men, involving a loss of hundreds of dollars in trade. This is an unfortunate condition and ought never to exist. Preaching our faith affirmatively will win souls much faster than by seeking to tear down the faith of others. I found Brother —, the pastor, an excellent man, deeply interested in the work and the welfare of those under his charge."

When we attack the religious belief of a prospective convert and ruthlessly demolish his spiritual structure, sweeping away the things that he has trusted, things that have kept his faith alive and furnished him a basis for moral development, before we have led him to perceive something higher and better we may never get beyond the stage of destruction. We may leave him feeling like the woman at the empty sepulcher: "They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid him."

If we do succeed in leading him on and into the church he may come in attaching too much importance to polemic combat—born in strife he may come out of the water, like the colored convert, declaring, "Now I am ready to dispute." Disputation to him was religion. The belligerent attitude was the Christian attitude. You can imagine the griefs of a church composed of such converts.

But more often pursuing such a course we do not get beyond the early stage of giving great and lasting offense that drives the man we would save from our meetings and perhaps makes him a lasting enemy, one whose ears and heart alike are forever closed to our appeal. Where then rests the blame? Dare we shake off the dust from our feet against him, or against a whole village thus offended?

There is another consideration mentioned by the brother previously quoted. The preacher moves on—the local Saints remain and must live with their neighbors. In this case our local Saints who were in business lost congenial and valuable customers. That was a minor matter perhaps. They would be willing to lose customers for Christ's sake, if his cause were advanced. They were not willing to lose them needlessly. What was more important they lost friends. Neighbors were turned against them—neighbors who by long, kind, and patient labor might have been won to the church. The peace of the neighborhood was disrupted. True it is that affirmative preaching of the gospel may disrupt peace, as Christ said, even dividing households. That cannot be avoided; the other can be avoided to a very large extent by toleration, charity, and courtesy in our attitude toward the religious convictions and connections of other men and women.

Graceland College and the Church

However highly we may esteem education, it is after all but a means to an end and that is preparation for better service. Highly as we esteem Graceland College, our test must still be, How much does Graceland help or has she helped the church?

She has provided in a most materialistic age, a place for the instruction of the children of the church, a home place where they may meet some of the great problems of life, away, it is true, from association with parents and the immediate home ties, but in a new home, still in association with those who are brethren and sisters in the common church. There are intellectual problems of adjustment between morals, religion, science, and philosophy. A school is here offered where under the leadership of men of the church this adjustment may be profitably made.

Two of the First Presidency took as much of their college work as possible at Graceland. Both have gone on and taken post graduate courses and have secured advanced degrees in the leading universities of the country.

In the Quorum of Twelve some four or five have also been students in this school of the church and have received of her benefits, while others have been brought under her influence through association.

Of the Presiding Bishopric, one member is a former student. Of the presidents of stakes one has been a close student there, and at least one other has been strongly influenced by the spirit of the institution. Even though the pastor in Zion was not a student technically but served rather as one of the faculty still no one was associated with our college as many years as he was without gaining much.

If we take up the list of seventies and of high priests, of missionaries and presiding officers, the list would indeed be a long one. Yet it cannot be said that any abnormal tendency has been shown to choose young men because of their attendance there. The disposition and consecration of those who have gone there have so emphasized themselves in their lives that added responsibility for the service of the church has naturally followed.

But the service of Graceland has not ended there. Her spirit has gone forth to the ends of the earth with her students and graduates. The influence of the lessons learned there has been felt in many a convention, conference, and institute.

We do not want to let the exuberance of youth nor the wrong attitude shown by some who have been privileged to attend there blind us to the fact of the steadfast service rendered by those who have faithfully upheld her standards.

Finally, the writer most sincerely hopes that this effort of preparation on the part of the young people may not prove in vain, but that the time may soon be at hand when every young man and young woman in the church may be privileged to serve to his or her fullest capacity in this work of the kingdom of God.

Plates Found Near Palmyra, New York

The editors have received a great many copies of an Associated Press dispatch sent out all over the country under the date of April 25, and printed, apparently, from coast to coast, to the effect that three evangelists holding meetings in a little church in Palmyra, New York, claimed to have found on the previous day some plates on what they called "Mormon Hill." These plates, they asserted, repudiated the teachings of Joseph Smith. They were to be exhibited the following evening and their translation given. They were said to be a forerunner of a celebration to be held by the Utah Mormon Church at Palmyra next fall. Several of the young elders of that church, it was stated, would make a walking pilgrimage to that shrine.

From these various accounts it is quite curious to note that these plates were found as a forerunner of a celebration to be held in the fall. Second, that the plates, as one or two state, were in modern Greek. Third, that upon sight they "repudiated many of the doctrines of Mormonism and disprove its message, that the translation is to be given on the following evening. Evidently these men were able to read the plates at sight. The mere statement would tend to arouse suspicion in the mind of any impartial reader.

To the readers of the HERALD we would add that the matter is being investigated to learn what measure of authenticity it may have, but in the meantime there has just come to our hands a single clipping from the Denver Express giving a picture of these plates. The cuts in this newspaper show just two small plates, one about an inch by four inches, the other about one and three quarters inches by four and a quarter inches. Yet it is stated that the plates are actually only slightly larger than these two cuts. The smaller plate contains just ten modern Greek letters, most of the letters being similar if not identical with English letters of to-day. The English letters would be meta voelte. If it were read in Greek, the fifth letter would probably be g instead of v.

The other plate contains two lines, seven characters in one line and approximately seventeen in the second line. The cut is vague so that the exact number and style and character of the letters cannot be accurately determined.

This latter clipping states that investigators are seeking to learn the age of the plates as they are inscribed in modern Greek. This fact of modern Greek would lead the careful student at once to suspect their antiquity and authenticity, also the fact that two very small tablets of some nature undetermined, with Greek characters, were found near Palmyra is neither proof nor disproof with regard to the plates of the Book of Mormon, the characters of which are not modern Greek. Learn to Live and Serve

The closing of the school year brings immediately to the front the question of the next step, especially to the students finishing their high school work, and for that reason we present Graceland College as the next step in preparation. It is presented first from an educational point of view; secondly, in the midst of the severe discussion on education now being conducted through-out the country for its high standing of spiritual inspiration.

In connection with one of the largest universities of the country the objection has recently appeared in print that the students go there to learn, not how to live, but how to make a living; that they learn not how to serve, but how to get; that vocation and the materialistic aspects are made the fundamentals of education.

Now it is certainly important that everyone should know how to make a living. It is important for society and the church that we make the most of the material improvements of the age. But it is even more important that we establish high moral ideals and spiritual concepts and that we set before ourselves and before our young people the high ideal of service to humanity, and brotherhood.

Whatever it may be in other colleges, Graceland has preeminently striven to care for the young people who enter her doors, and bring them into contact with the leaders of the church and with its spiritual ideals through association with the spiritual body of Saints at Lamoni, Iowa. S. A. B.

War Ages Men

The effect of the World War will doubtless be felt for many years to come. One noticeable result is the aging of the young men who went through it. They had the experience of a lifetime in a short time. But at the same time, those who remained at home older in years have also aged, and many have become out of contact with the life of to-day, according to The Outlook.

The pessimism, the gloominess of the world today, is probably the fatigue of spiritual old age. As a result, Cyril Falls, in an article, "A new generation in Britain," in the Atlantic Monthly for February states that both in Great Britain and in America there exists this condition of spiritual dearth on the part of the elders, discrediting and destroying the ideals of life by their pessimism. It has effected the novels of the day. In other departments there exists likewise a literary pessimism. This has laid the basis for the assertion that "international finance made the war, that our leaders were thick-headed, and that we were simply a bunch of sheep to slaughter by the politicians and profiteers."

No matter how young one may be in years he is decrepit in soul when guilty of such continued pessimism.

The Great Restoration

We are publishing this week an article in German under the title, "Die Grosse Wiederherstellung." As an international church we like to include an occasional good article in some other language than English.

We are, however, immediately following the above article printing a translation in English, "The Great Restoration." This English article is already printed as one of the Busy Man's Tracts on a good quality of paper, convenient for vest pocket use. It retails for 7 for 10c, 50 for 55c; 100 for $1.

We intend to publish a small number of this article as a German pamphlet in the same style as the Angel Message Tracts for use in that mission. If the demand warrants we will print a few additional copies which will be sold, ten for 25 cents; 100 for $2.

III. The Dignity and Value of the Individual Soul

In ancient times among many peoples the individual man seemed to be considered of little value. He had no rights that must be respected or that were embodied in any sort of Magna Charta. He was a grain of sand on the seashore, a mote in the sunbeam, a bubble on the waves, soon gone and presumably forever. Only kings or priests counted.

With the Greeks the state was all in all—the individual not important; especially were women and children held in a sort of contempt. Children were welcomed, but why? Because if boys they might grow to be statesmen, and almost surely would grow to be soldiers, thus serving the state. If girls—well, a daughter was nothing to be proud of, but naturally if no girls grew to womanhood soon there would be no boys, hence no men, hence no statesmen or warriors, hence no state. But if a child were sick or crippled or blemished it was "exposed," i. e., given to the mercy of the elements to perish of cold or heat or hunger, or was strangled. Such an one would hardly grow to be a soldier, or if a girl live to bear strong children. There was no welcome to the individual child such as we observe now when science, surgery, medication, education, all that money and love can command are enlisted to serve the sick and crippled child; because it is felt that the child as an individual and immortal soul has a right to its chance in life. Indeed if there is an unfortunate child in the home to-day as a rule the love of the whole family toward that one seems to be doubled.

Women were tolerated because they could bear children and also perform certain necessary menial tasks about the home. They were hardly considered as individuals, certainly not as comrades or partners. One philosopher cynically remarked, "Woman is a necessary evil and fortunate is the man who gets her in a mild form."

The Egyptians preserved the bodies of their kings in great state. But common people were thrown naked into shallow graves. Cats were sacred, and one cemetery of eighteen thousand sacred cats that were laid away in state has been discovered. But to be a man meant nothing of itself in ancient Egypt.

Christ and the Individual

The philosophy of Jesus Christ brings to light the dignity and importance of the individual human soul; because, as Paul says, Jesus "brought life and immortality to light." (Second Timothy 1:10.) Man is not a shred of tissue fiercely and quickly consumed in the fires of time and gone forever. Jesus brought immortality to light in evaluating man; he is an immortal being and moreover is capable of development as yet by no means appreciated by the masses of men. Everything in the church and in its religion should serve that development toward a certain standard or goal.

In the Light of Immortality

This pronouncement that Jesus brought immortality to light is of the most profound significance. The splendid injunction to add to our faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and so on, has no meaning and is not worth reading, much less following as advice unless it be considered in the light of immortality. The "collector of virtues" must work for eternity or not at all. Any philosophy of morality and soul-culture worth consideration must be developed in connection with a belief in immortality. Bruce Barton quotes Doctor Harry Fosdick, one of the most illuminating modern writers on the question of immortality, as relating an incident from life that reveals the reaction of the ordinary man to this question:

"I will give you two examples right out of this city," Doctor Fosdick continued. "A young man sat in the chair where you are sitting now. He was going through one of the hardest struggles that any man of his age could possibly face. By a compromise he could win a very large material reward; the cost was merely a little violence to his conscience. He gripped the arms of the chair; the look in his eyes was almost terrible in its earnestness.

"If I could be sure of immortality, absolutely sure, this thing would be simple," he exclaimed.

"What did he mean? Simply this: that if his character was really a thing of eternal significance then it was worth the fight, no matter what the cost. But once let him have the suspicion that his life is merely a piece of tissue paper, destined to be crumpled up and tossed away—well, why sew diamonds of virtue onto tissue paper?"—American Magazine, March, 1923.

When immortality is lost sight of, man is left with no better outlook than that voiced by Clarence Darrow in his debate with Doctor Durant, before the Academy of Science in Kansas City, on the subject, "Is life worth living?" He is quoted as saying: "Can a person be happy in a madhouse? That is what life is . . . I take life as it comes, because it is a senseless, fool thing, that must be lived out because I have sense enough not to do such a messy thing as put a bullet through my head."—Kansas City Star, March 18, 1923.

Seeking the "One" Lost

The importance that Christ attached to the individual soul is clearly shown in many of his parables, as for instance the parable of the lost sheep. Ninety and nine of the sheep were safe in the fold. Only one was missing. One was lost in the wilderness—not ten, or five, or three, but one. And the shepherd left all the others and went to seek and find the one. Even so, we are told, our Father in heaven is not willing that one human soul should be lost. The parable of the ten pieces of silver teaches precisely the same lesson. One piece of silver was lost—one. The woman lighted a candle and searched for it until she found it, and then rejoiced. The parable of the Prodigal Son teaches a similar lesson.

Even a cup of cold water given to one thirsty disciple is not to be forgotten. Sparrows sold for a farthing are noted by the Lord; but a man is of more value than many sparrows.

We can but conclude that had there been but one man on earth and in need, Christ would have come and lived and died to save him. He looked always to the individual as the all important unit from which the kingdom of heaven or the society of brothers was to be builded. If the individual is not worth everything neither is the mass; for it is an aggregation of individuals. The work of Christ begins with the redemption of the individual (you must be born again) and progresses through his growth and development to perfect manhood, and from such proposes to construct the redeemed society of the new heaven and the new earth.

The Individual in Modern Thought

The Christian idea of the importance of the individual colors all our modern thought and to a much less degree our modern conduct. In democracy it is seen declaring the rights of the common man—any man—every man; franchise, the right to vote, based finally on manhood and womanhood, and not on either birth or ownership of property. In medicine it is seen in the disinclination of modern medical practice to permit life to go out of any human being so long as it can be maintained a moment longer, no matter how distressing the malady may be. There are many men and women in the world, strong and healthy, but this one sick man on whom we now work, he is a human being, a living soul; for him we will fight until all hope is gone; oxygen, pulmometer, strychnine, are summoned to his aid. Recently twins were born to a certain woman. One of them seemed dead; the doctor said it was dead. To some people twins would seem a superfluity. Not to the ethics of modern surgery. The physician inserted a needle through the chest of this little waif into its heart and injected adrenalin. At the same time a pulmometer inflated the little lungs, the heart recommenced its work, the dead child lived. What a bother over one baby—and that a twin!

The importance of the individual is recognized in law. Every man is presumed to be entitled to certain rights by virtue of his manhood. He may not even be a citizen of the land where he resides. Of old the stranger in a strange land had no rights—he could not protect himself, but now it is recognized that he has certain rights anywhere on earth. True all this is not always carried out in practice, but it is recognized in theory and often in practice. To quote from a very wonderful and justly celebrated document: "We hold these truths to be self-evident: That all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights—that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

In the Business World

Even in business, much too prone to measure everything by the dollar, men are beginning to realize the importance of souls. Roger W. Babson, a sort of John the Baptist to the business world, a man crying in the wilderness and attempting to point out a straight path, says:

Two captains of industry were standing, one day, on the bridge at Niagara looking at the great falls. One man turned to the other and said: "Behold the greatest source of undeveloped power in America."

"No. The greatest source of undeveloped power in America is the soul of man," the other replied.

I was talking with a large manufacturer the other day, and he told me that he was supporting scholarship in four universities to enable young men to study the raw materials which he is using in his plant. I asked him if he was supporting any scholarships to study the human element in his plant, and he said "No." Yet when asked for definite figures, it appeared that eighty per cent of every dollar which he spends goes for labor, and only twenty per cent goes for materials. He is endowing four scholarships to study the twenty per cent and is not doing a thing to study the eighty per cent! Statistics show that the greatest undeveloped resources in America are not our mines or our forests or our streams, but rather the human souls of the men and women who work for us. . . .

The great problem to-day is to develop the human soul. . . . We have gone daffy over things like steam, electricity, water power, buildings, railroads, and ships, and we have forgotten the human soul upon which all of these things depend and from which all of these things originate.—Fundamentals of Prosperity.

In Light of Modern Science

It is true that for a time modern science seemed to depreciate the importance of man, in this way, that it revealed to us a universe infinitely greater and more complex than we had imagined, and man appeared to shrink by comparison into insignificance.

Will my spark of being wholly vanish in your deeps and heights?

Must my day be dark by reason, O ye heavens, of your boundless nights,

Rush of suns, and roll of systems, and your fiery clash of meteorites?—Tennyson.

Haeckel well expressed this revulsion of feeling of some who looked too long through the telescope at the dazzling procession of worlds. He said: "Our own human nature . . . sinks to the level of a placental mammal, which has no more value for the Universe at large than the ant, the fly of a summer's day . . . or the smallest bacillus . . . the true proportions of which we soon perceive when we set it on the background of infinite space and eternal time."

—The Riddle of the Universe, p. 87.

But the reaction was not justified. Personality is a bigger thing than the biggest planet yet seen—bigger than any that will ever be seen. The mind that thinks about space is bigger than space, greater than time. Here we may well quote Snowden, and while reading from him bear in mind the beautiful statement in Doctrine and Covenants: "The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun gives his light by day, and the moon her light by night; and the stars also give their light, as they roll upon their wings, in their glory, in the midst of the power of God . . . Behold all these are kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.

The selection from Doctor James H. Snowden, to which we have referred is as follows:

The former conceptions of the expanse of the heavens, great as they were, have been enormously extended by the revelations of our modern instruments. The microscope, telescope, and spectroscope are three magic machines which are in effect immense eyes that enable us to peer into the world of matter in both directions, the microscope opening up vistas into the infinitesimally small, the telescope into the unspeakably distant and great, and the spectroscope, more marvelous still, reports the chemical composition, motion, direction, and speed of distant stars and nebulae. These enormous eyes have disclosed a universe which is an inconceivably vast whirling snow of stars of such sizes, distances, and speeds as bewilder and appall us. There are huge solar monsters, such as Sirius and Rigel, which in size and splendor literally throw our sun into the shade. Mighty Canopus, as far as known the largest star in the heavens, next to Sirius in brightness and twelve times as distant, is more than two and a half millions of times larger than our sun, so that the sun could be dropped into one of its spots or yawning chasms as a pebble is dropped into a well. The light year, which is the distance traveled in a year by a ray of light moving at the rate of 186,000 miles a second, is the yardstick with which the astronomer measures the distances of the heavenly bodies, and some stars are thousands of such light years away. There are also star clusters and spiral nebulae which are thought to be universes outside of our galaxy, and these are conceived to be hundreds of thousands of light years distant. The first effect of such conceptions of the heavens is to dwarf our earth into a mere mote floating in this vast sea of splendor and then still farther to dwarf man into this "fretful midget," the human race itself being a mere "trouble of ants in the gleam of a million million suns." And the second effect is to seem to overtop God and crowd him out and crush him under the immeasurable weight of this blazing mass of suns. Can the personality of God stand up under this intolerable burden?

The case, however, is not so alarming as it seems, for the first appearance of things is often deceptive, and the difficulty rapidly dissolves under reflection. On any theory of philosophy matter cannot overtop and crush mind, whatever its mass and might. Man himself thinks the universe, and thereby rises above it and puts it under his feet. However vast he discovers it to be, it is his own mind that perceives and reconstructs its star-fretted dome; he sets it all up in his own brain, and thereby subordinates it to himself. The greatest star is still at the little end of the telescope, the star that is looking, not the star that is being looked at.—The Personality of God, pp. 78, 80.

Personality Supreme

Seated upon a summit of the Sierra Madre Mountains, an astronomer, Edgar Lucian Larkin, director of Lowe Observatory, wrote an "Apotheosis to mind" in which he said:

Humans are personalities. That fact is more magnificent than the Pleiades, the Omega cluster, or the Cavern, fifty trillion miles deep in the huge nebulae in Orion. All things, all enigmas, all mysteries, shrink and subside in presence of ourselves—our personalities.—Within the Mind Maze, p. 352.

Mind, even the human mind, is far more wonderful than the entire universe of matter. The mere fact that Mind is able to discover all these wonders in the sidereal structure, amid infinities, among congeries of suns and nebulae is itself more remarkable than all else combined.—Ibid. p. 475.

Man puts all things under his feet. He walks out through space and treads among the shining stars. Under the dome of his cranium he sets up the vault of heaven.

"What Is It All About?"

What is it all about? It is all about that star at the small end of the telescope. In the Christian philosophy all things are revealed as ministering to the development and final glorification of that star. For it all other stars spin. To it God speaks. Humboldt declared, "The finest fruit earth holds up to its Maker is a man."

Christ taught the value of the individual soul in his parable of the lost piece of silver and the lost sheep. He taught the importance of man and the subsidiary value of ordinances, doctrines, and holy days, in fact of all things that serve, in his cryptic but exceedingly enlightening declaration: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." Finally, most clearly he taught it in the prayer formulated for all Christian men to pray: "Our Father which art in heaven." The doctrine of the Fatherhood of God puts any man and every man in a new light.

The Word of God Standeth Sure

Though higher critics, evolutionists, and atheists attack it, the Bible stands firm as truth revealed. Truth may be learned by study or revealed by faith.

(Sermon by R. V. Hopkins, on the Stone Church lawn, Independence, Missouri, August 6, 1922.)

I hold in my hand the sacred record of Israel, the covenant people of the Lord. Every civilized nation, Christian and pagan, has had its sacred history. The Mohammedans had their Koran; the Persians their Zendavesta; India its Rig Veda and the prophecies of Buddha and Brahma. The Book of Mormon is the sacred record of the ancient Americans, while their descendants, the Aztecs, the Toltecs, and the Incas had their traditions more or less distorted, handed down after the division into tribes after the days of the final disintegration of ancient American civilization, as it is recorded in the Book of Mormon. Indeed practically every Indian tribe upon the American Continent, although it may not have had a written record, has its sacred traditions regarding its origin.

There are three agencies which have sought to discredit the Bible as an inspired record. There are the attacks of higher criticism, in which it has been "wounded in the house of its friends" by modern divines who bring forth the claim that the Bible is only a traditionary record and no more inspired than the legends and folk tales of the ancient Babylonians, Assyrians, Greeks, Romans, or Norsemen. This class of critics would also lead us to believe that many portions of the Scriptures are to be considered figuratively, and rarely if ever receive a literal interpretation. When pressed closely they usually confess to a belief in evolution.

Another class of critics are the disciples of Darwin and Huxley, who teach that all life evolved from a lower to a higher stage, from the amœba, the one-celled animal, to man. They discredit the Bible account of the creation, that the earth was made in seven days of twenty-four hours each, also the creation of man after the likeness of his present physical form.

A third class belongs to the infidel and agnostic group, not necessarily evolutionists, who strive to pick flaws in the internal composition of the Scriptures, pointing to apparent contradictions and alleged discrepancies therein.

Higher Criticism

Let us consider these criticisms in the order named.

The higher critics make common cause with the infidel and say, "All races have their sacred literature and their sacred traditions. We find traditions of the flood, not only in the record of the Jews, but also in the traditions of the Babylonians, which antedate the biblical account of the flood." They cite us to the fact that we have traditions of the flood even before the Bible records it, also that it is spread among all nations, however widely scattered upon the face of the earth, even among the Toltecs and the Aztecs and in many of the tribes of the American Indians. The Aztecs and Mayas of Mexico even before Columbus discovered America, and before that region was conquered by Cortez in 1521, had traditions of the flood that could not have been caused by contact with the Catholic fathers, because these traditions were handed down among them before the time of the discovery of America and were a source of no little bewilderment to the Catholic fathers when they came to America to convert the Indians. Indeed they found the natives worshiping in a manner so like the Christian religion that they ascribed it to satanic forces counterfeiting the true religion, and the market place in Mexico City blazed with the ancient records of this people for days. Had we those records to-day we might have a key to the writing upon the ancient ruins of the temples of Copan and Palenque.

Our friends of this class argue that such traditions, existing among all these nations, are simply an evidence of the fact that the Bible account is no more inspired than the traditions of the Aztecs, Toltecs, or the Babylonians. To such we make this answer. The traditions of all nations have some kernel of truth from which they originated, and so far from being an evidence that there is no inspiration in this holy record, it points to the fact that in the beginning sometime, somewhere, although it may have been lost except as the mouth of inspiration may utter it, there was a true germ from which the tradition sprang. Indeed science itself comes to our rescue with the statement that upon the earth's surface at one time there occurred and there is still evidence of a great flood.

Evolution

As to evolution, personally, I prefer to believe in the sacred record. In the course of nature we find everything going its eternal round. Nothing is lost, nothing is destroyed. If I burn a piece of coal or wood, which originally sprang from vegetable life, I may change its form, but those gases and salts which are released would under the same condition of light, moisture, and heat, which were extant at the period of their composition, be turned back to the very same form from which they sprang. Science divides all matter into elements, which cannot be separated into parts, as oxygen, hydrogen, gold, silver, potassium, lead, zinc, etc. So when coal, for instance, is burned, ash or various combinations of the element of potassium is left, and that which passes off in the form of smoke is another element, carbon and its combines. The gas which is given off, carbonic acid gas or CO₂ as it is called, which is deadly poisonous to mankind, feeds the plants and makes it possible for the tree to grow and develop and the flowers to bloom and shed their fragrance over the earth; so those elements go back into nature, and under proper conditions and under the same environment as that in which they previously existed, they would go down to Mother Earth again and produce coal. So I say that we find the processes of nature are one eternal round, one eternal revelation. The evolutionist may tell us that, in the human embryo, there exists in the process of prenatal development all those recapitulatory stages through which the human race went in its processes of evolution; still I am constrained to believe there may be granted variation only in the species itself, as Burbank has demonstrated in the Shasta daisy and in taking the small, bitter wild crab apple and producing the sweet and luscious apple of to-day. That there is transformation from one species to another is questionable.

While I was in the Carnegie Museum, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, I saw there the skeletons of five different kinds of horses, the skeleton of the prehistoric horse not bigger than a dog, and ranging up to the modern species of horse. This merely represented to me development within the species due to different environments. I saw there the skeleton of an animal lizardlike in shape nearly fifty feet long, which must have weighed tons when it lived upon the earth. It had a small brain cavity, not larger than my two fists.

We know, of course, that there is a metamorphic condition in the transformation of the caterpillar to the butterfly. We know that the tadpole finally becomes a frog. The mule is, as far as I know, the only product of the crossing of species, but the line stops there. Whether we are believers in the Bible account of creation or in evolution, we must rest somewhere. We must have faith at some point. We are here upon the earth in a little vale between two eternities. We know very little about what has gone before, and perhaps we know less about that which is coming after, and it is only through the processes of inspiration that we have any insight whatever into eternity. Whether we take one horn of the dilemma or the other, there comes a point where we must exercise faith.

The Origin of Life

In the first place we must accept the idea that God lives, unless we have had the divine knowledge given by the Holy Ghost whereby we may know and not merely think that God lives, whereby we may know and not simply think that Jesus is the Son of God, we must work by faith, for "to some it is given to know that Jesus is the Christ and to others it is given to believe on their testimony." So faith in some principle is absolutely necessary.

If we chose to believe the other idea, that of the evolution of the species going upward from the amoeba, the single-celled animal to man the "paragon of animals," as Shakespeare calls him, we come to a stone wall, i. e., What is the source of life in the amoeba? Science mounts the walls by conjecture. Two lifeless particles of matter came together and by chemical affinity produced life. This merely is supposition, and it takes as much faith to believe in that supposition as it does to believe that God lives and that he reigns; and as I stand here under the canopy of these heavens to-night, as I look out at that beautiful moon surrounded with its most beautiful corona of light, I say that it takes more credulity to believe that the blending of those most beautiful colors took place by chance than it does to believe that there is a divine intelligence embodied in personal form which operates in all those things.

View the processes of nature and you need go no farther. Everything that has life sings the praises of its eternal maker, the whispering of the leaves, the caroling of song birds, the voices of the creatures of nature, all the heavens sing and all the earth sings of the glory of God, and everything in which there is life bears evidence of a divine intelligence which has been implanted by the hand of an all-wise and all-powerful supreme Creator.

We are looking up into the heavens to-night and can behold the stars which the inspired record says God set in the firmament of heaven. The astronomer tells us that there are stars so very, very far away that if their light which travels at the rate of 186,000 miles a second had begun to travel at that great rate of speed towards earth before the day that Columbus discovered America in 1492, it would not yet have reached the earth. Think of it. It is inconceivable to the mind of man, and God has told us in his sacred record that this little earth upon which we live is only one of the great creations of his hand. God is without beginning or end. He is the Alpha and the Omega, that is to say the beginning and the end for with him there is no such thing as time.

I was approached by an infidel a few years ago while teaching school. He said, "You believe that God is all-powerful, do you not? You are a Christian." "Yes, sir," I replied. "Well," he answered, "if God is all-powerful, he can do anything, can't he?" I said, "Yes, anything that is possible."

I didn't know where he was leading me, so I didn't want to get into a trap. I wasn't going to say that God could make something out of nothing. But he said, "If God is all-powerful, will you tell me how he could create a two-year-old colt in two minutes?"

Well, I answered him in this way: God is without beginning and without end. With him there is no such thing as time. Time is only measured to man, consequently it would be just as easy in the mind of God to create a two-year-old colt in two minutes as it would to cause him to grow until he was two years old. However, that is not the way God works, not the way nature works. God works by and through the agencies of man and by and through the agencies of nature.

Which Is Credulity

I say again that it takes more credulity to believe in chance than it does to believe in a divine creator or in a divine intelligence. And when I think that yonder moon revolves around the earth and the earth revolves around the sun and that the sun, according to science, with its whole solar system is moving in a great unknown path about some great common center, together with other solar systems, and when I ponder upon the fact that if there were the variation of a single scintilla of a second, we would be thrown into darkness and chaos, and when I reflect that these solar bodies, in their times and seasons and in their years and in their centuries, respond to definite laws, I am forced to the conclusion that there is a divine intelligence which operates behind that law. Principles are eternal and laws are eternal and coeval with the divine personality of God himself, and God, whose love is without beginning and without end, who is the same now and forever, has simply taken those things which always existed as principles and wrought them to his divine touch; and like a great master mind he has conceived that form in which the birds, the trees, and the animals, and all the creatures of this earth might best be suited to live in the environment in which they are placed.

Do I believe that there was divine conception in the creating of the horse with four legs or the man with two legs or the centipede with a hundred legs? I certainly do, and in the mind of God he could see that these creatures could best serve their purposes and the purposes of man upon the earth by being created in that form. Indeed, if we look into the pages of geology, although many of our modern educators read into its pages the teachings of evolution, we cannot but be brought closer to God in many ways because of the fact that we see there the hand of a divine intelligence revealed in preparing this earth for the occupancy of mankind.

For instance, from limestone there was formed by force of heat, and by pressure our beautiful marble, and limestone itself is but the sedimentary deposit of millions of trillions of microscopic forms of life which developed in the seas which covered the whole land before the earth came up from the deep, and depositing them, produced that which makes it possible for us to have our beautiful buildings of to-day. Chalk was originally of animal formation, or the shells of animals which at one time existed and lived in the sea. So science comes to our rescue in many of these things where the veil seems to hang dark; and it is unfortunate indeed that there should be this seeming misunderstanding between science and religion.

Scientific Truth Is Divine

Where science discovers truths, it is God's law, and it is just as true as if the divine lips of some prophet, moved upon directly by the inspiration of God, had uttered that same truth. Suppose none of us knew how to count, to-night, and the Lord of heaven should speak to me as I am standing here, and would say, "Tell this people by the voice of inspiration that two times two is four." If you accepted revelation and had confidence in me you would believe me. Suppose that the information had not come by revelation, but had come by investigation. Suppose that it had taken us thousands of years to discover that two times two is four. Would it be any less true? Certainly not.

This illustration leads to this thought, i. e., that where science discovers truth it is but uncovering a principle which already existed. When Edison reached out into the realms of unknown space, as it were, and harnessed that power by which we are able to see to-night in this arena, he did not create, but simply discovered some principle already existing. Neither do I believe that God himself created that principle, for "intelligence or the light of truth was not created, neither indeed can be."

Agnostic Criticisms

Now let us consider the third and last criticism, that of the agnostic who discredits the Bible because of alleged contradictions. It is true that in this record we may find some statements which seemingly contradict; for instance in the second chapter of Ephesians we find it stated that we are to be saved by grace, not by works, lest any man should boast. This instruction came from the mouth of Apostle Paul in his letter to the Ephesians. But in the book of James, we find it recorded in the second chapter,

"Faith without works is dead." Now then, the light of truth, the spirit of intelligence or the Holy Ghost will not lead two men, if they are both inspired, to say things which are contradictory, and if this record is true, we must go upon the supposition in faith that the fault is with us, and not with inspiration; and all of these passages, every one of them, if examined in the same light of the spirit of inspiration which attended Paul and James will clear up, and if we get one of these spiritual rays, as it were, or intellectual rays which come from God, it will lead us to the same intelligence and truth.

I stood one time, during a very dense fog, on a railroad track and noticed a light through the fog. I heard no noise, but by and by, after several minutes, a great train came by, and I discovered that it was the light from the locomotive that I had seen. So the source of all divine intelligence or the light by which we see, the light of the sun, is the same light which enlighteneth our understanding, according to the Doctrine and Covenants. And if we get into the proper condition of humility and faith before God, these things will unfold before us and we will understand them. The passage, "By grave are we saved," refers simply to salvation from original sin, and thus we are made recipients of God's grace or favor by reason of the fact that Christ died for us, and the works referred to are the works of the law of Moses, while James when he speaks referring to works means that there is something else to do besides having faith in God and that we must manifest by our works our faith in God.

The world now is in a peculiar period of transition. It is harking back to the condition which was upon the earth when the power of inspiration was taken from it, and that great inspirational civilization which had grown up under the domination of the early patriarchs who walked and talked with God, became lost. We are told plainly in the scriptures that in the last days the world will be in the same condition as it was in the days of Noah.

The Bible Stands Sure

The Bible contains a record of the words of God to the children of Israel, the stick of Judah. It has withstood the ravages of time. It has outlived the pantheistic philosophies of Egypt, Greece, and Rome. It has withstood in more modern times the attacks of evolution and the more recent affronts of the newer philosophies of the higher criticism propagated by many present-day divines. Through the ages it has waded through seas of blood which were occasioned by perhaps the more insidious attack of the fanatics of that time, until the light began to break forth and there stood up under the inspiration of the Almighty God, I believe, those great reformers, Luther, John Wesley, Calvin, Knox, Savonarola, and many others.

Beholding a glimmering of light in the darkness, those most worthy ancestors of ours rescued this sacred book from the Catholic altar to which it had been chained for years, broke through the age of darkness and skepticism, and gave us here and there a ray of light. I sincerely believe that they worked under the inspiration of God and that the world in its darkened condition at that time would not have been able to receive the fullness of the everlasting gospel, just as Israel in its darkened condition was not able to receive the fullness of the gospel in Moses' day. So the world, emerging from that benighted state during the Dark Ages, would not have been able to receive that marvelous light which has come forth in the restoration of the everlasting gospel. Consequently the work of the early reformers, in the hand of God, has been a medium by which the minds of men might gradually come to a knowledge of their condition before God; and shall we say to-night that Luther, when in his humility he climbed the steps upon his knees and heard a voice saying, "The just shall live by faith"—spoke not the truth?

I read in the Scriptures that we are to accept every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Jesus himself is on record on the Mount of Temptation, when Lucifer appeared before him after he had fasted for forty days and tempted him, saying, "If thou be the son of God, command this stone to be made into bread," as saying "Thou shalt not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Now the principles of the gospel are these: faith in God, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, eternal judgment.

Every Principle of the Gospel Is Necessary

But there are very few places in this sacred book where in one passage of the scripture we find all of these principles enumerated. For instance in the second chapter of Acts, I believe, Peter in speaking to those men whose hearts were pricking them, said, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you." He said nothing about faith in that particular verse. Paul and Silas, when speaking to the jailer and his family when he asked them what they should do to be saved, said to him, "Believe on the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house." He said nothing about repentance, or baptism, but simply mentioned faith.

Now, are we to say that because repentance is not mentioned in that particular verse that it is not one of the principles of the doctrine of Jesus Christ? Are we to say because Peter does not mention faith or

The Bible and Archaeology

A question that has come up periodically is, What do the recent researches in archaeology prove with regard to the record of the Bible?

Our knowledge of archaeology of Bible lands is a matter almost entirely of the last one hundred years, for it was in 1882 that Champollion published his translation of the Rosetta Stone. This was a beginning in the Near East. The methods used have been applied with success in deciphering other records where a similar key was not possessed and remarkable results have been reported by such men as Rawlinson in Babylon, Petri in Egypt, and many others.

The latest work dealing directly with the subject is Archæology and the Bible, by Doctor George A. Barton, one-time director of the American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem and professor of biblical literature and Semitic languages in Bryn Mawr College. This book has been revised in June, 1920 and consists of three parts: first, a review of the history of Egypt, Babylonia, Assyria, the Hittites, Palestine, the researches into their past history, the monuments which are now possessed, when discovered and their significance. What are the proper dates of the different dynasties and on what this assumption of probability rests.

This first part continues with a particular discussion of Palestine's archaeological history, the cities of Palestine, roads, agriculture, pottery, utensils, temples and high places, the tombs, and the city of Jerusalem. Also a small amount of space is devoted to the other cities mentioned in the New Testament and to Athens and Corinth as the churches of Asia.

The second part is then taken with a translation of ancient documents which confirm or illustrate the Bible and editorial comment on the significance of each of these documents. It is divided into some twenty-seven chapters concerned with epics of creation, the Babylonian Sabbath, patriarchs, the belief as one of the conditions in that particular verse that those particular tenets do not adhere to the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ? The same might be said of the principle of the laying on of hands. The key is this: "Thou shalt not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Consequently we are not justified in laying our foundation upon one particular tenet or principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the exclusion of all others. But if we are to believe and obey those things which we claim are written by inspiration, we must necessarily believe and accept all.

So in conclusion let me say: this book has withstood the ravages of time. I present it to you tonight as worthy of the solemn contemplation of any man, and I do not care how far he may have gone in the realms of investigation of modern science, he cannot get along without it. It is God's book and it will uphold God and his principles throughout all ages, and will finally triumph.

flood, Abraham, others of the patriarchs, and the patriarchal age, Moses and the Exodus, the Pentateuch and the court of Hammurapi, documents of Israelite judges, the book of Kings, the Babylonian exile, the time of Nehemiah.

There are other sections also discussed and taken up in a critical way. The principal emphasis is placed on the Babylonian documents, and special interest is taken in some recent discoveries of documents or monuments.

The third part of the book is taken with fourteen plates including 303 figures and four maps of the city of Jerusalem in different periods. It furnishes in a comparatively small space a convenient resume for the student.

It is a scholarly work, and by critical analysis shows the great superiority of the Bible record over that of Babylon. In this field it meets and answers the criticism of the past. New discoveries rather strengthen the claims of careful Bible students.

An Iconoclast Turns to Christ

Giovanni Papini for some years won a certain fame or notoriety because of his connection with everything radical and subversive. One of his books (Memorie d' Iddio) published in 1911 has been termed "the last word in blasphemy." Other books have attacked literary reputations and conditions in an emphatic way.

But through it all he was unable to find peace of mind or soul, until he came to crave a crumb of certitude, to find something of which he could be sure or feel sure. As he himself expressed it, "We have tried the experiment of fierceness, and blood answered blood. We have tried the experiment of lust; and lust has left in the mouth the odor of corruption and a fierce fever. We have forced the body into the most refined and perverse pleasures and found ourselves worn out and heavy-hearted, lying upon filth. We have tried the experiment of intellectualism, and at the end things have remained the same, eternally the same. We have tried the experiment of art and our feebleness has brought the strongest to despair. We have tried the experiment of wealth and have found ourselves poorer. In no thing has our soul found quiet."

The Great War found him in such a mood, "utterly disgusted with life and humanity, and unable to see any hope for better things unless, somehow, the hearts of men could be changed." Watching the peasants in their tasks he was asked to read of an evening to them the New Testament stories, and rediscovered the Bible and found peace in the realization of the Christ.

As a result he has written a life of Christ which is being quite widely read and discussed and favorably considered in the religious press.

"Jesus is the greatest overturner, the supreme maker of paradoxes, radical and without fear. This is his greatness, his eternal freshness and youth, the secret of the turning sooner or later of every great heart toward his gospel."

American Railway Nearly One Hundred Years Old

The past century has been a remarkable one and one of great significance in the history of the church. It is well again to remind ourselves that on April 23 the Delaware and Hudson Company celebrated the hundredth anniversary of its charter by the legislature of New York. This represents the first centenary of American railway history as the history of this company opens the entire development of modern transportation agencies and with it practically the introduction of coal in America as an industrial and house fuel.

This company was first a canal company to bring Pennsylvania's coal to New York City. To get over a large hill they ordered from England four locomotives one of which was first put in service under its own steam on August 8, 1829.

Yet despite the experiences of a hundred years the increase in the anthracite coal market from 365 tons to about 90,000,000 tons, and also a corresponding increase in the power of the locomotives, the locomotive of to-day is at its best only 20 per cent efficient in its use of coal fuel, and with slightly better results with gas and oil. There therefore remains a very great field for improvement.

Is Property First?

The Supreme Court of the United States has recently rendered an opinion that is causing a great deal of adverse comment in legal, social, and religious periodicals. The church periodicals are taking it up on the grounds of their social interest.

The District of Columbia passed a minimum wage law for women. The case was appealed to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, where the law was sustained. When this was done one judge was absent and a substitute judge had been appointed to make up the court. A rehearing was refused by this court, but when the absent judge returned he was persuaded to join in a ruling to permit a rehearing, and upon the rehearing two of the judges held the law unconstitutional.

It was in this connection in holding the law to be unconstitutional that Justice Van Orsdel on the court of appeals, is quoted as saying, "It should be remembered that of the three fundamental principles which underlie government and for which government exists—the principle of life, liberty and property—that chief of these is property."

This case was then taken in the Supreme Court of the United States. Justice Brandeis did not sit, because his daughter is secretary of the minimum wage board, but it is well known from his previous decisions that he was favorable to upholding the constitutionality of the act. Chief Justice Taft wrote the minority opinion in which two others concurred. A majority of the court, however, five judges, concurred in the opinion of Justice Sutherland, making again a very important ruling by a five to four decision.

Some able articles have been written with much reason in favor of this power of the Supreme Court, which has been exercised since the days of John Marshall to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional. Voluminous extracts have been made in the discussion in the legal journals to show that the policy of the court is to declare an act unconstitutional only when it is clearly so, and that all doubt should be resolved in favor of the constitutionality of any enactment of Congress or state legislature. Yet Chief Justice Taft in his opinion is quoted as saying, "It is not the function of this court to hold Congressional acts invalid simply because they are passed to carry out economic views which the court believes to be unwise or unsound." This confirms the previous decisions of the court, but would seem to carry an inference that he challenged the decision of the majority in this instance.

There have been several decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upholding such laws. Such laws are in effect in some seventeen States of the Union. The decision of the majority was based on a New York case of 1905, but Justice Taft contended that this case was overruled by later decisions in 1908 and 1917.

The majority decision was based on the Nineteenth Amendment as putting women on the same legal plane as men. To this Justice Taft replied that the Nineteenth Amendment did not change the physical strength or limitations of women.

The original decision in the court of appeals was based on the principle that laws limiting the freedom of individuals to labor or to contract their labor in ways deleterious to health and morals are to be upheld on the ground, that such liberty does not mean immunity from reasonable regulations and prohibitions imposed in the interest of the community. Further, "The asserted right of the employer to be served by anyone who is willing to work for him, at any age the worker is willing to accept, must be subordinated to the right of the public to see that those women who are obliged to work for a living shall not be obliged to work for less than a living."

The real issue is between the new social type of legislation and the whole individualistic ideal. It is a contest between the old ideals of the law and the more modern social concept of law. It is not the law itself that is or should be called in question. The issue is between two distinct concepts of law, as it is between two distinct concepts of society.

Eight Degrees of Charity

(From Maimonides)

The Jewish savant, Moses Ben Maimon, known as "the second Moses," was a Talmudist, philosopher, astronomer and physician. He was born March 30, 1135, at Cordova, and died December 13, 1204, at Cairo.

There are eight degrees or steps in the duty of charity. The first and lowest degree is to give, but with reluctance or regret. This is the gift of the hand, but not of the heart.

The second is to give cheerfully, but not proportionately to the distress of the sufferer.

The third is to give cheerfully, and proportionately, but not until solicited.

The fourth is to give cheerfully, proportionately, and even unsolicited; but to put it in the poor man's hand, thereby exciting in him the painful emotion of shame.

The fifth is to give charity in such a way that the distressed may receive the bounty, and know their benefactor, without their being known to him. Such was the conduct of some of our ancestors, who used to tie up money in the corners of their cloaks, so that the poor might take it unperceived.

The sixth, which rises still higher, is to know the objects of our bounty, but remain unknown to them. Such was the conduct of those of our ancestors who used to convey their charitable gifts into poor people's dwellings, taking care that their own persons and names should remain unknown.

The seventh is still more meritorious, namely, to bestow charity in such a way that the benefactor may not know the relieved persons, nor they the name of their benefactors, as was done by our charitable forefathers during the existence of the temple. For there was in that holy building a place called the Chamber of the Silent, wherein the good deposited secretly whatever their generous hearts suggested, and from which the poor were maintained with equal secrecy.

Lastly the eighth and the most meritorious of all, is to anticipate charity by preventing poverty; namely, to assist the reduced fellow man, either by a considerable gift, or a loan of money, or by teaching him a trade, or by putting him in the way of business, so that he may earn an honest livelihood, and not be forced to the dreadful alternative of holding out his hand for charity. . . . This is the highest step and the summit of charity's golden ladder.—American Hebrew.

The International Relations of the United States

The National Economic League has taken a referendum of its national council on the question of international relations. This national council is composed of some 3,000 individuals who are eminent in their professions or callings. It is not therefore fully representative of mass sentiment. It is the opinion from rather conservative sources and from 1,500 persons who are of sufficient eminence to be selected as representatives of their various communities and therefore represents the opinion of widely scattered leaders of modern thought.

The summary of their opinion is set forth in the Christian Science Monitor. It is interesting to note that the heaviest vote is in favor of a permanent court of international justice and the second heaviest vote is in favor of an economic conference. The questions and votes are as follows:

Education in Central Europe

According to The Outlook central Europe is going in for education to the limit of its resources. It is an important question what these new small states will do with freedom and democracy. Central Europe is undertaking the education of students from Russia. There is a hungering for education, and on this is founded the University of Kovno. There are therefore no traditions that it is bad form to study. Czechoslovakia in Lithuania is starting new colleges, the students in many instances building their own dormitories on the basis that any student contributing 800 hours of labor would be entitled to a room. These places are naturally the seats of development for political and economic philosophy which are going to dominate the future of Europe. They are centers of investigation of the new projects of their government in democratic freedom and will determine their future growth. This, according to The Outlook, offers America a splendid opportunity. Doctor Rosalie S. Morton thought she would provide for twenty students to come to America, some conditions being that they must learn English within one year, must remain in America for four years, must be between sixteen and twenty-four years of age, must not have very old or infirm parents, and must provide health certificates. She published her announcement and thought she might have a hundred applicants but before two o'clock there were from 1,500 to 2,000. She had intended to select twenty but stretched matters and finally took sixty.

Air Mail

Soon will cross continent of America in twenty-eight hours.

The United States Government has for some time been sending air mail short distances by daylight but is now planning to put through an ocean-to-ocean eight-hour service, 3,000 miles, from New York to San Francisco. Arrangements will be made to light the night section with beacons that at least will form a guide across the plains. Starting in July or August, the plan is to leave New York City just before noon, reach Chicago that evening, then reach Cheyenne, Wyoming, by morning. It is this section that will be marked by beacons as a guide, San Francisco being reached before sundown. The plan, according to the New York Tribune and Literary Digest has been considered for over a year.

For five years air mail service has been in operation, first the Washington-New York route, then the Chicago-New York route, and two and a half years ago trans-continental service was undertaken and these New York to Washington, Chicago to Saint Louis, and Chicago to Minneapolis were discontinued. The trans-continental service has not been through service which it is now planned to establish.

New Budget Books Ready

We are selling many of the new budget books. If you have not started one, why not now? Any month is a good one to begin.

One of the big improvements in this edition is that the items are so classified that one can easily determine the amount of tithing due. For instance, there are items that may be deducted from one's income and items which should not be deducted. Then there are classifications upon which each person must decide for himself whether or not these are necessary living expenses.

A copy of the annual tithing blank is printed in the book, with excellent suggestions on how to keep the record. The book is divided into twelve monthly divisions and may be used for any twelve months desired. The price is low. Young people should be encouraged to keep their own accounts, as it will be an excellent aid in establishing correct attitude toward one's possessions.

De Grosse Wiederherstellung

Texte: "So will ich auch mit diesem Volk wunderbarlich umgehen, auf's wunderbarliche und seltsamste."—Jesaia 29:14.

"Dies ist die Lehre, welche die Wissenschaft die Theologie lehrt—die Handlung der Gottheit zu beobachten, wenn einmal dann immer; nicht nur in der Vergangenheit, oder in der Zukunft, sondern gleichfalls in der Gegenwart. Wenn seine Handlung in der Gegenwart nicht sichtbar ist, dann wird sie nie sein und war sie nie sichtbar."—Sir Oliver Lodge, in Science and Immortality.

Diese Kirche glaubt an gegenwärtige Offenbarung. Es ist nicht genug die Offenbarung Gottes einzig und allein in der Vergangenheit oder in der Zukunft zu beobachten. Beobachte sie in der Gegenwart.

Jesus kam und organisierte eine Kirche. Er sagte: "Und auf diesen Felsen will ich bauen meine Gemeinde und die Pforten der Hölle sollen sie nicht überwältigen." Matthäi 16:18.

In einem Satze gab er bekannt, dass er eine Kirche organisieren würde, und machte die Andeutung, dass die Hölle mit aller Macht versuchen würde diese Kirche zu vernichten aber am Ende fehlschlagen würde.

Der Grosse Glaubensabfall

Den Tode des Herrn folgte ein grosser Glaubensabfall. Der Beginn des Glaubensabfalles kam während des Lebens der Apostelen und machte Fortschritte bis zur Vollendung während des Mittelalters (Der dunklen Zeiten).

Dieser Glaubensabfall war bei den Propheten deutlich vorhergesagt. Paul sagte, dass er drei Jahre, Tag und Nacht, mit Tränen in den Augen die Kirche warnte. (Lese Apostelgeschichte 20:28-31.) Auch nachfolgende Texte können studiert werden: 2. Thessalonischer 2:3-7; 2. Timotheum 3:1-5; 4:3, 4; Galater 1:6-10; 2. Petri 2:1-3; Amos 8:11, 12; Jesaia 60:2.

Sowohl geistliche als auch weltliche Geschichte verzeichnen diesen finsternen Glaubensabfall. Das Licht der Literatur, Kunst, und Religion wurde verlöscht. Die Welt dunstete von dieser Verdorbenheit. Die Kirche bekam gerade so verdorben als die Welt, sogar Ablässe wurden für verübte Sünden verkauft.

Alle Protestanten müssen diesen Glaubensabfall anerkennen—sonst wäre ja keine Entschuldigung für die Existenz der protestantischen Kirchen vorhanden.

Die Mitteln Zur Erholung

Welches Mittel sollte versucht werden, um eine Erholung aus diesen Verhältnissen zu erzielen? Die Pforten der Hölle konnten nicht herrschen, trotzdem sie eine Zeitlang siegreich zu sein schienen.

Zwei verschiedene Mitteln schlugen sich selbst vor: Reformation oder Restauration. Für diejenigen, die an gegenwärtige Offenbarung nicht glaubten, konnte nur ein einziger Ausweg gefunden werden, nämlich Reformation. Wir glauben an gegenwärtige Offenbarung und folglichen an eine Restauration (Wiederherstellung).

Wenn ein Mann eine liebliche Braut heimgeführt hätte und in ein fremdes Land ginge wenn während seiner Abwesenheit sein Weib von ihrem Wohnorte vertrieben würde und ein herabgekommener Wüstling ihren Platz besetzte—wenn die Zeit für seinen Rückkehr käme, welchen Weg würde er wählen, Reformation oder Weiderherstellung?

Johannes sagte, (Offenbarungen 12) dass er ein herrliches Weib sah mit der Herrlichkeit der sonne bekleidet. Sie stellte die Kirche, die Braut, des Lammes Weib dar. Ein Ungeheuer kämpfte gegen sie und sie entfloh in die Wüste, wo ein Platz für sie vorbereitet war. Die Kirche wurde weggenommen. Ihr Platz wurde bei einem liderlichem Weibe besetzt, mit Scharlich und Rosinfarbe bekleidet (Offenbarung 17) und mit Gold übergoldet und hatte einen goldenen Becher in der Hand, voll Gräuelsund Unsauberkeit. Eine andere Kirche nahm Platz an Stelle der Kirche Jesu Christi.

Wollte Jesu diese Kirche reformieren und sie zu seiner Braut machen? Oder glaubt er wie wir an eine Weiderherstellung? Unzweifelhaft an das letztere.

Die Reformation

Ohne Zweifel unter den Reformatoren da waren manche tapfere und grosse Männer. Aber sie machten keine Ansprüche auf einer Wiederherstellung der Kirche. Trotzdem schein es, als ob sie in einigen Fällen für eine Wiederherstellung der Kirche zu sprechen schienen.

John Wesley sagte, "Ich begreife, dass der Glaubensabfall der Antichristen alles soweit verdorben hat, dass sene Erholung aus diesem Glaubensabfall erst kommen wird, wenn Christus neue Aposteln aussenden wird, mit dem Auftrage neue Kirchen zu bilden."

Alexander Campbell sagte, "Mache nicht . . . die praktischen Ergebnisse aller Glaubensbekenntnisse, Reformationen und Verberungen und die Hoffnungen und Sehnsüchte der Gesellschaft. . . Garantie der Schlussfolgerung, dass eine neue Offenbarung oder irgend eine neue Entwicklung der Offenbarungen Gottes zu geschehen habe, ehe die Hoffnungen und Erwartungen aller treuen Christen verwirklicht werden können, oder Christentum alle Nationen der Welt erlöst und verbessert? Wir wollen das alte Evangelium zurück, bei der alten Ordnung der Dinge bestätigt."—Christian System.

Die Wiederherstellung

Walter Rauschenbush spricht über die Propheten der alten Tage: "Sie gingen mit einem lebendigem Gotte zur Schule, welcher in seiner Welt arbeitete und nicht mit einem Gotte, welcher lange Zeit zurück gehandelt hatte und alles in einem Buche niederschrieb."

Solch ein Prophet erschien in der Neuzeit. Man nannte ihn "den Prophet des neunzehnten Jahrhunderts."

Eine grosse Erweckung aller führender Religionssekten wurde im gegenwärtigen westlichen Teile des Staates New York gehalten. Diese Erweckung, glücklich begonnen, endete in einem schandevollen Streite über die verschiedenen Glaubensrichtungen. Der junge Prophet-zu-sein wurde "bekehrt," wie man es nennt, und war über den Anblick der inneren Finsternis und Zwietracht sehr beunruhigt. Er sagte darüber folgendes:

"Als ich unter den grössten Schwierigkeiten, verursacht durch den Streit der verschiedenen Religionsparteien, arbeitete, las ich eines Tages die Epistel Jacobi, erstes Capitel, fünften Vers, welcher lautete: 'So aber Jemand unter Euch Weisheit mangelt, der bitte Gott, der da gibt einfältiglich Jedermann und rückt es Niemand auf; so wird ihm gegeben werden.'

"Niemals kam ein Vers der Bibel mit mehr Kraft zu dem Herzen eines Mannes als dieser Vers in jener Zeit zu mir kam. . . . Nach einiger Zeit kam ich zur Überzeugung, dass nur zwei Wege vorhanden sind, um aus diesem Zweifel herauszukommen. Einer führte mich zu nichts; ich musste in der Finsternis und Verwirrung verharren, der andere aber, der Weg den Jacobi gebot, nämlich 'Gott zu bitten.' Nach einer Weile fasste ich den Entschluss, Gott zu bitten, die

Schlussfolgerung ziehend, dass, wenn Gott einfältiglich, dem den mangelt, Weisheit gibt und es Niemanden aufrückt, auch ich es wagen mag.

“Nachdem ich mich am einen Platz, welchen ich mir schon früher auserwählt hatte begab, mich vorsichtig in der Runde umblickend niemanden gewahrte, sank ich auf meine Knieen und begann vor Gott alle meine Wünsche und Sehnsüchte darzulengen.

Der Grundton

Dies war der Grundton der Botschaft: “HÖRE IHN.” Es ist auch heute der Grundton unserer Botschaft. “Was spricht Jesus? HÖRE IHN.”

Zu seiner Überraschung, wurde dem jungen Propheten, damals erst fünfzehn Jahre alt, gesagt, dass alle Glaubensbekenntnisse der damaligen Zeit falsch seien und er keiner Kirche beitreten soll. Gott begann sich für die Wiederherstellung seiner Kirche zu regen.

Drei Jahre später (1823) sah er eine andere Erscheinung, welche er zum Teile als folgend beschrieb:

“Als ich mich in der Tat der Anrufung Gottes befand, entdeckte ich ein Licht in meinem Zimmer erscheinen, welches unauhörlich zunahm, bis das Zimmer lichter als am Mittag schien. Unmittelbar erschien eine Person an meiner Bettseite, in der Luft stehend, da seine Füße den Boden nicht berührten.

jehmals sah; noch glaube ich, dass irgend ein erdliches Ding in solch ausserordentlicher Weisheit und Prächtigkeit erscheinen kann. Seine Hände waren unbedeckt, auch seine Arme ein bischen über den Handgelenken. So waren auch seine Füße unbedeckt und seine Beine ein bischen über den Knöcheln. Sein Haupt und Nacken waren auch unbedeckt. Auch konnte ich wahrnehmen, dass er keine andere Bekleidung anhatte als sein Oberkleid, denn es war offen und ich konnte seine Brust sehen.

“Nicht nur sein Oberkleid war von solch auserlesener Weisheit, sondern die ganze Person war über jede herrliche Beschreibung und sein Gesicht wahrlich wie der Blitz. Das Zimmer war aussergewöhnlich hell, aber nicht so hell wie unmittelbar rings umher seiner Person.

Die Kirche Organisiert

Viele Dinge wurden ihm gesagt im Bezug auf die grosse kommende Wiederherstellung der Kirche. Später wurde das Recht, Gott durch die Priesterschaft zu vertreten, durch Offenbarungen von Engeln widerhergestellt.

Und am sechsten Tage des Monats April, 1830, wurde die Kirche wieder organisiert. Dies geschah bei einem Befehl dirket vom Himmel. Diese ist die einzige Kirche in der modernen Geschichte so organisiert.

Die Propheten weissagten solch eine Wiederherstellung. Jesaia sagt, dass nachfolgend der “grossen Finsternis” des Glaubensabfalles der Herr sich wieder erheben wird und, dass seine Herrlichkeit wieder über den Menschen scheinen wird. (Jesaia 60: 2.) Ein “wunderbares Werk und ein Wunder” muss in den letzten Tagen geschehen. (Jesaia 29.) Ein Engel sollte kommen um das ewige Evangelium, in den Tagen des Gottesgerichtes, zu allen Geschlechtern und Völkern zurückzubringen (Offenbarungen 14: 6, 7).

Leser, der Name des Propheten war Joseph Smith. Verschmähe nicht seinen Namen und sein Testament wegen deines Vorurteils. Hast du seinen Namen verleumdet gehört? Der Engel sagte ihm, dass man seinen Namen, in aller Welt zu Gutem und Bösem brauchen würde. Erwinnere, dass die Mehrzahl der wirklichen Propheten verleumdet und getötet wurden. Jesus machte Bemerkungen über diese Tatsache. (Lucä 11: 47-49.) Gerade was man erwarten möchte, wenn er in der Tat ein wirklicher Prophet wäre, geschah mit Joseph Smith.

Sei als es mag, wir bitten dich an das Werk zu glauben “um des Werkes willen.” Wir geben dir eine wiederhergestellte Kirche—eine Kirche, welche die original christliche Lehre darbietet—eine Kirche mit all den original Beamten, einschliesslich Aposteln, Propheten, Älteste, Evangelisten, Bischöfe, Pastoren und Lehrern, organisiert—eine Kirche, welche die alten Gaben und Segnungen besitzt, solche als Weisheit, Wissen, Heilung und Prophezeiungen—eine Kirche, welche die alte Religion in die Gegenwart zurückbrachte—eine Kirche, welche die Offenbarung Gottes auch in der Gegenwart beobachtet und nicht nur in der Vergangenheit—eine Kirche, welche an die Vaterschaft Gottes und an die Brüderschaft der Menschen, in einem unverfälschten, lebensfähigen und praktischen Wege glaubt.

The Great Restoration

Texts: "I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder."—Isaiah 29:14.

"This is the lesson science has to teach theology—to look for the action of the Deity, if at all, then always; not in the past alone, nor only in the future, but equally in the present. If his action is not visible now, it never will be, and never has been visible."—Sir Oliver Lodge, in Science and Immortality.

This church believes in present-day revelation. It is not enough to look for the manifestation of God in the past or in the future alone. Look for it now.

Jesus came and organized a church. He said: "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matthew 16:18.

In one sentence he announced that he would organize a church, and intimated that all the powers of hell would attempt to destroy it, but in the end should fail.

The Great Apostasy

Following the death of the Master there ensued a great apostasy. It began during the lives of the apostles and progressed to completion during the "Dark Ages."

This apostasy was clearly foretold by the prophets. Paul said that for three years, with tears, night and day, he warned the church. (See Acts 20:28-31. Other texts may be studied, as follows: 2 Thessalonians 2:3-7; 2 Timothy 3:1-5; 4:3, 4; Galatians 1:6-10; 2 Peter 2:1-3; Amos 8:11, 12; Isaiah 60:2.

Both secular and ecclesiastical histories record this dark apostasy. The light of literature, art, and religion went out. The world reeked with corruption. The church became as bad as the world, even selling indulgences to commit sin.

This apostasy must be admitted by all Protestants—otherwise there is no excuse for the existence of Protestant churches.

The Way of Recovery

What was the way of recovery from this condition? The gates of hell were not to prevail, though they seemed to do so for a time.

Two ways suggest themselves: Reformation or Restoration. For those who did not believe in continued revelation the only course was reformation. We believe in continued revelation and in restoration.

If a man had married a lovely bride and had gone to a far country and during his absence his wife had been driven away and her place taken by a degraded wanton—when the time came to return, which would he choose, reformation or restoration?

John says (Revelation 12) that he saw a beautiful woman, clothed in the glory of the sun. She represented the church, the Bride, the Lamb's wife. A monster made war against her so that she fled away to a place prepared for her. The church was taken away. He saw her place taken by a dissolute woman (Revelation 17) sitting upon a scarlet-colored beast, herself decked in gaudy colors, having a cup in her hand filled with abominations. Another church had taken the place of Christ's church.

Would Jesus want this church reformed to be his bride? Or does he, too, stand for restoration? Undoubtedly the latter.

The Reformation

There can be no question that the reformers were, many of them, brave and noble men. But they did not claim to restore the church. And they seemed to look for something in the way of a great restoration.

John Wesley said that the time of "latter-day glory" would come when God would "arise to maintain his own cause, and set up his own kingdom."

Roger Williams said: "I conceive that the apostasy of anti-Christ has so far corrupted all that there can be no recovery out of that apostasy till Christ shall send forth new apostles to plant churches anew."

Alexander Campbell said: "Do not . . . the practical result of all creeds, reformations, and improvements and the expectations and longings of society—warrant the conclusion that some new revelation, or some new development of the revelation of God must be made, before the hopes and expectations of all true Christians can be realized, or Christianity save and reform the nations of this world? We want the old gospel back, and sustained by the ancient order of things."—Christian System.

The Restoration

Walter Rauschenbusch says of the prophets of old: "They went to school with a living God who was then at work in his world, and not with a God who had acted long ago and put it down in a book."

Another such a prophet arose in modern times. He has been called "The Prophet of the Nineteenth Century."

A great revival service in which the leading denominations cooperated had been held in what is now western New York. This revival, happily begun, ended in a shameful quarrel over the division of converts. The young prophet-to-be had been "converted," as the term is, and was greatly distressed over this glimpse of internal darkness and dissension. He says:

"While I was laboring under the extreme difficulties caused by the contests of these parties of religionists, I was one day reading the Epistle of James, first chapter and fifth verse, which reads: 'If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.'

"Never did any passage of scripture come with more power to the heart of man than this did at this time to mine. . . . At length I came to the conclusion that I must either remain in darkness and confusion, or else I must do as James directs; that is, ask of God. I at length came to the determination to 'ask of God,' concluding that if he gave wisdom to them that lacked wisdom and would give liberally, and not upbraid, I might venture.

"So in accordance with this my determination, to ask of God, I retired to the woods to make the attempt. It was on the morning of a beautiful clear day, early in the spring of eighteen hundred and twenty. It was the first time in my life that I had made, such an attempt, for amidst all my anxieties I had never as yet made the attempt to pray vocally.

"After I had retired into the place where I had previously designed to go, having looked around me and finding myself alone, I kneeled down and began to offer up the desires of my heart to God.

"I had scarcely done so when immediately I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue so that I could not speak. Thick darkness gathered around me, and it seemed to me for a time as if I were doomed to sudden destruction.

"But exerting all my powers to call upon God to deliver me out of the power of this enemy which had seized upon me, and at the very moment when I was ready to sink into despair and abandon myself to destruction, (not to an imaginary ruin, but to the power of some actual being from the unseen world who had such a marvelous power as I had never felt in my being,) just at this moment of great alarm, I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun; which descended gradually until it fell upon me.

"It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me I saw two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, (pointing to the other,) "This is my beloved Son, hear him."

The Keynote

That was the keynote of the message: "Hear him." It is the keynote of our message to-day: "What does Jesus say? Hear him."

To his surprise the young prophet, then only fifteen years old, was told that the creeds of the day were wrong, and that he should join none of the churches. God was moving to restore his church.

Three years later he received another vision, described in part as follows:

"When on the evening of the above-mentioned twenty-first of September, [1823] after I had retired to my bed for the night, I betook myself to prayer and supplication to almighty God for forgiveness of all my sins and follies, and also for a manifestation to me, that I might know of my state and standing before him; for I had full confidence in obtaining a divine manifestation as I had previously had one.

"While I was thus in the act of calling upon God I discovered a light appearing in the room, which continued to increase until the room was lighter than at noonday, when immediately a personage appeared at my bedside standing in the air, for his feet did not touch the floor.

"He had on a loose robe of most exquisite whiteness. It was a whiteness beyond anything earthly I had ever seen; nor do I believe that any earthly thing could be made to appear so exceedingly white and brilliant; his hands were naked, and his arms also a little above the wrist. So also were his feet naked, as were his legs a little above the ankles. His head and neck were also bare. I could discover that he had no other clothing on but this robe, as it was open so that I could see into his bosom.

"Not only was his robe exceedingly white, but his whole person was glorious beyond description, and his countenance truly like lightning. The room was exceedingly light, but not so very bright as immediately around his person.

"When I first looked upon him I was afraid, but the fear soon left me. He called me by name, and said unto me that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and that his name was Moroni. That God had a work for me to do, and that my name should be had for good and evil, among all nations, kindreds, and tongues; or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people."

The Church Organized

Many things were told him regarding the coming forth of the great work of restoration. Subsequently the right to represent God in the ministry (priesthood) was restored by angelic ministration.

And on the sixth day of April, 1830, the church was organized by direct commandment from heaven, the only church in modern history so organized.

The prophets had predicted such a restoration. Isaiah had said that following the "gross darkness" of apostasy the Lord would arise and shine upon the people (Isaiah 60:2). A "marvelous work and a wonder" was to be done in the

Some Needs of the Church

An active district president writes the First Presidency as follows:

In my study and close observation of the conditions and needs of our people I am forced to but one conclusion, and that is: Our people are suffering and dying for the want of spiritual food. They are longing to have the gospel of our Lord talked in the home, the scriptures read and discussed, and then have the Lord's servants come and pray and talk about the church in a constructive way and relate spiritual experiences, etc. These things are basic to our people; and unless recognized by pastors and their associates, and missionaries as well, we dare predict, because it is already taking place, that there will be a falling away from the church, because it lacks in the spiritual attraction it once had.

More than this, there are a few organizations in this world that are stressing the necessity of a return to Bible Christianity in this: That part of the time should be given to the reading and study of God's word by young and old alike, and, as a result, they are finding greater spiritual life and are attracting people from other churches, and even from the Church of Jesus Christ. I loathe to speak as I do in this regard, but I cannot disregard what my eyes have seen and my ears heard from those who were once active in this work. When I can see a greater culture and more spiritual life in people (and young people) than what we can see in our own, we are compelled to sit up and endeavor to ascertain the reason for this.

The complexity of the industrial and social world has without doubt complicated to some extent the working machinery of the church. But in no way can I see where or why there should be a lessening of the spiritual power in the church, unless we have been moving away from something that is fundamental. For it is an accepted fact, both in the scientific world and in the revelations of God, that all things are governed by law; and therefore what was once, can be again if the same law is applied.

With the help of God I do not intend to be a "Don'ter" in this world, neither do I wish to appear in this role in the latter days (Isaiah 29). An angel was to come, bringing back the everlasting gospel to all people in the day of God's judgment (Revelation 14:6, 7).

Reader, the prophet's name was Joseph Smith. Do not reject his testimony because of prejudice. Have you heard his name slandered? The angel told him it should be had for good and evil in all the world. Remember, most true prophets have been slandered and killed. Jesus commented on that fact. (Luke 11:47-49.) The very thing happened to Joseph Smith that you might expect to happen if he were indeed a true prophet.

Be that as it may, we ask you to believe the work "for the work's sake." We present to you a restored church. A church teaching all the original Christian doctrines. A church organized with all the original officers, including apostles, prophets, elders, evangelists, bishops, pastors, teachers. A church enjoying all the ancient gifts and blessings: such as wisdom, knowledge, healing and prophecy. A church that has returned religion to the present tense and looks for the revelation of God now and not in the past alone. A church that believes in the Fatherhood of God and in the brotherhood of man in a real, vital, practical way. A church that is trying to build Zion to-day.

church, but I do think that the play feature of our work has been either exaggerated or is being misunderstood in some places; and again so much has been said about the work of the young and the importance of their mission in the church that it has worked harm and discouragement to older people in the church—people who have brought the church to where she is to-day—and, as well, an overdose of this kind of medicine to the young gives them the wrong vision of their function in the church. When a branch is so conducted in its services that the young are isolated from the old in the weekly prayer meetings, it is bound to show its effects in both the young and the old; and that showing is in spiritual loss. Please do not understand me as saying that there should not be any young people's prayer meetings; I do say, however, and that based upon observation, that it should be deemed necessary that both the young and the old should be brought together at least twice during the month for the purpose of drawing inspiration and love from each other and to teach both classes that they are essential to each other in this work.

It would be a strange-appearing and a strange-acting church if it were made up of either class alone; and anyone who has not the same feeling towards both elements lacks in vision and the love of God. I believe that the prayers of an old sister who has been lying on her bed for years are more vital and energizing to the church of God, if her life is thoroughly consecrated and had been previous to her incapacitation, than the elder or apostle who lacks in genuine consecration to God and man, and yet is able to meet with the Saints in their various services and activities.

In conclusion, along the lines we have written permit me to say that I am not seeking to take up your valuable time with any daydream that has appeared to me; neither do I wish to unload a lot of complaints on your desk, for I have none to make; but I must tell what I know to those who trust me, and who should know of some of the problems confronting the church in this part of the field.

Personally, I never felt better in the work than I do now. ever have I felt a greater desire to go forward than now; neither has the need been so apparent as right now. We seem to be right on the crest of the wave, with the possibility of reacting into the trough of the sea or riding on to victory through the means God has given us.

A number of encouraging things have appeared to us of late, and likewise we heard others speak of the same thing. One is the improvement in the HERALD. It was good before, but within the past few months it seems to be getting better, Bigger and Brighter, "going on to perfection" I suppose.

Just recently a young married couple said to me that they could hardly wait for the HERALD to come, it seemed to be filled with so many good things. Another thing that is being spoken of, and that in a very commendable way, is that they are so glad to see something from President F. M. Smith almost every week. I feel that the personal touch from the leading men of the church means much to the rank and file, though it can be had only through the church papers.

One other. Recently I wrote two acquaintances and Saints who are attending Graceland, asking them a series of questions which bore directly upon certain fundamentals in this church. We did not insist on their answering the questions, but left it to their judgment. I am not going to tell you all that was said in their reply to me; but the ground was covered, the uncertain was made clear, and the question which has been burning in the mind of many: "Is the college to be the governing body of the church or a department of utility for the whole church?" was satisfactorily answered.

Adjustment to the spiritual facts of life in the church and elsewhere seems to be the thing we all need, more of the vision of Christ and less of the vision of men.

Many Changes in College Faculty

There will be missing from the Graceland faculty next year several faces whose smiles have greeted students old and new for a number of years past and in their places will be mostly those who a few years ago left the halls of Graceland as students to complete their education that they might return more fully equipped to render service to the college and the church. In some cases new faces will greet them.

If there is one thing above another of which Graceland can boast it is the faithfulness of her instructors. In point of length of service we doubt if there is another college in the State which can equal her record. Their work is characterized by a loyalty and devotion which holds them through storm as well as sunshine.

Professor G. N. Briggs will start on his eighth year next September as president of Graceland. All who have kept pace with the growth of the institution know of the rapid strides the college has made in the ranks of the educational world under his administration.

Professor J. A. Gunsolley has held the position of principal of the commercial school ever since the college was started, and will return in the fall to begin his twenty-eighth year. Professor Gunsolley has weathered many a storm both figurative and literal for the welfare of Graceland. He stood by the struggling institution when few visioned aught but failure, and has been a mighty power in helping to guide her ship to safe moorings. For a number of years he has occupied also the position of treasurer and business manager.

Mrs. Belle Royce is another one who deserves much credit for long service in Graceland. She came to the college in 1910 and with the exception of one year when she was away on leave of absence she has successfully taught in the English department ever since. She will return in September to take up her work for the fourteenth year.

Among those who will not return to Graceland next year are Miss Belle Patterson, Paul N. Craig, Miss June Whiting, C. E. Irwin, G. A. Platz, R. E. Mortimore, Mrs. Willamena Johnson. The absence of Irwin and Platz will be only temporary in order to better equip themselves for their work. They will likely return in 1924. Irwin will work toward a doctor of philosophy degree—just where he has not fully decided—majoring in general economics; and Platz in Ames, majoring in botany. All have been splendid workers in their lines and all will be greatly missed. Miss Patterson is completing her sixth year and Miss Whiting her fourth year. They will be students at Northwestern University, working toward M. A. degrees next year. Professor Mortimore will be in Iowa City, also working toward his master's degree. Mr. Craig will pursue his voice teaching in Independence, Missouri. We understand Mrs. Johnson has not decided just what she will do next year.

Graceland is fortunate in one thing and that is that she is not going to entirely lose the services of Professor F. M. McDowell which was feared when he accepted last fall the more arduous duties of counselor to the President of the church. Professor McDowell will still continue to spend some time in the classroom and will teach educational sociology.

Other members of the present faculty who will return are H. H. Gold, director of the teacher training department; A. R. Gilbert, shorthand and typewriting; Miss Lulu Porter, home economics; Miss Hazel Putnam, history; Miss Elizabeth Trachsel, English; Miss Vivian McElroy, languages; Miss Mabel Carlile, public school music and art; J. Max Carmichael, religious education; Oren Hartchen agriculture. The departments of piano and voice have not yet been supplied.

Many of those returning will spend the summer studying in universities toward a higher degree. Lonzo Jones, A. R. Gilbert, and Vivian McElroy, at Iowa; Hazel Putnam at Iowa or Minnesota; H. H. Gold and Elizabeth Trachsel at Chicago; Mabel Carlile at Iowa or Northwestern.

Miss McElroy has engaged a room in the French house at Iowa City. This is a dormitory where only the French language is spoken. The demand has been so great that the university is providing a second one of its kind.

Marietta Walker Honored

A service of appreciation dedicated to Mrs. Marietta Walker occupied a chapel period at Graceland last week. Coming to a more full appreciation of what Mrs. Walker's efforts had meant to the young people of the church through a most interesting talk on her life at a previous chapel hour by Mrs. Vida E. Smith, resolutions were drawn up, according to Mrs. Walker the title of "Mother of Graceland." These resolutions were read at the special service by Mrs. Smith, after which President Briggs made a few appropriate remarks regarding her life and what every Graceland owes to her. The vote of acceptance brought every student to his feet, and while standing Apostle T. W. Williams offered a very touching prayer.

The resolution which was presented to Mrs. Walker on Mothers' Day by President Briggs, follows:

"TO MARIETTA WALKER, FRIEND AND BENEFACTOR:

"Remembering you on this Mothers' Day, the young people of the church accord to you the title, 'Mother of Graceland.'

"Many of us have never been privileged to know you personally, but from the day when mother sang us to sleep with her lullaby song until the present your work and worth have been enshrined in our hearts.

"Graceland was your dream for the young—a place to prepare for life—a dream now true.

"We herewith consecrate our lives and purposes to carry on this heritage which you have so richly bequeathed to us.

"Moving on to further heights, may we never forget your devotion, heroic purpose, and constant enthusiasm.

"Whatever service we may be able to render in any field we will gladly dedicate as a monument to your memory.

"May the God who has been with you all through your life continue to care for and comfort you.

"THE FACULTY AND STUDENT BODY OF GRACELAND."

Graceland Home-Coming

The program for the Graceland Commencement and Home-Coming is published elsewhere in the HERALD this week.

There are several important changes. Instead of one graduate recital, June 1, there are three, as Dorothy Briggs gives a graduate recital in piano assisted by Emma Snead, violinist, on May 29. Then Ruth Grenawalt follows on May 31; and on June 1 Joseph Anway gives a recital in public speaking, assisted by George Anway, tenor.

The two musical recitals, the Lamoni Chronicle announces, will be broadcasted by radio station K F F V at Graceland College.

The baccalaureate sermon is definitely announced for Sunday evening, June 3, at the Brick Church in Lamoni, with President Frederick M. Smith as the speaker. President Smith is himself a graduate of Graceland College, as he spent three years there, after one year at the State University of Iowa, so received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Graceland College. Broken Wrist Minor Trifle

The following, taken from the Rocky Mountain News, of Denver, Colorado, for May 19, will interest the many friends of Heman Hale Smith.

"A broken wrist is a minor trifle in the life of the governor's secretary. At six o'clock Thursday evening Hale Smith, secretary to Governor Swift, was driving to Agate to deliver a commencement address at the high school there when the steering gear on the wheel gave way and the car tipped over, striking Smith's wrist. The accident occurred about three miles from Deer Trail. Smith phoned to Agate, and a car came to take him into town where he delivered the address, coming back to Deer Trail yesterday morning where his car had been repaired.

"He drove the car to Denver, arriving about two o'clock in the afternoon. He went to the governor's office to see if there was anything there demanding his attention, and finding nothing, he consulted a physician for the first time. Doctors pronounced the injury a compound fracture of the wrist and set it. Smith will be at work this morning."

Ella Stevenson Laid to Rest

Sister Ella Stevenson was laid to rest Wednesday, April 18, in a beautiful lot of our city burial park. The funeral was lovely, with many in attendance. The funeral expense was all met by the Vancouver and New Westminster Saints and everything was real nice. Many flowers rested on her casket in memory of the good our sister has given to all of us. Her faith in the latter-day gospel was inspiring, and while we have known her since last September, she has been a terrible sufferer, but always brave and cheerful. She did so want to live!

The Saints were noble and kind to her and everything that could be done for her was surely done. Her sister, Sister Lillian Stevenson, who came out to America with Ella, is still in Vancouver.

MRS. EMILY MCMULLEN.

Kirtland Zion Builders

Zion, the home designed by God for the pure in heart! With what love and longing we look forward to that place and condition where love and peace reign supreme! But this is not a matter to dream about, for wisely God has placed the responsibility of building such a home with his people, urging that they make preparation by complying with every law of the celestial kingdom.

Realizing the need and opportunity for service in this great work, the young people have formed themselves into an organization known as the "Zion Builders," seeking to so mold their lives after the pattern given by Christ that they may be numbered among those "pure in heart."

But no man can live unto himself alone, so it is not enough that they seek to purify themselves only, for the world is full of honest-hearted souls that would rejoice with the fullness of the gospel brought to them. Knowing this and desiring to have a part in spreading this gospel of the kingdom in all the world, the young people are directing their efforts largely along a missionary line.

Much good has been accomplished in many places by the services conducted by these young Zion Builders, serving to create a spirit of unity and love very pleasing to the Master.

The most recent effort of the young along this line was a series of meetings held in the Kirtland Temple, beginning May 6, 1923, and continuing every night until May 20. The faithful group of young people in charge of these services formed themselves into six teams, going from house to house, extending a personal invitation to each, and leaving a handbill with the list of subjects to be presented. The entire financial responsibility of this work as well as the ushering, advertising, and social affairs, was all shouldered by the young. The services of the branch chorister were secured, and special music was provided for each evening.

The speaker chosen for these meetings was Brother John Martin, a very capable young evangelist, who has a wonderful influence for good among the young and is much loved by all.

The subjects were well chosen and prepared, the first week being given to the six principles of the gospel, faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, etc., Mothers' Day being turned over for "A tribute to mother." The second week dealt with the Apostasy, Restoration, Book of Mormon, mission of the church, etc. The Spirit was present to a large degree each evening, and the word delivered with power and much assurance.

Although the meetings came just at a time when Brother Martin was obliged to spend the days in getting settled in his new home, he carried the Spirit of God with him continually, and every evening found him at the post of duty, never weary of well doing.

Fifteen minutes each evening was devoted to prayer for the success of the meetings, followed by a fifteen-minute song service before the preaching of the word.

Toward the end of this series of meetings a social was given in appreciation of the willing and efficient service rendered by Brother Martin and others.

A good interest was manifested throughout by the Kirtland Saints and several not yet of the fold, although the weather conditions were unfavorable most of the time.

All were caused to rejoice in the glorious gospel, and many new and precious truths learned. These things served to create a spirit of unity and love gained only by the whole-hearted service of God, and instilled within the heart of each a strong desire to press on and be found faithful.

Good Interest in Grand Cayman Island

In a letter to the First Presidency and Twelve, Elder J. Charles May writes:

One week ago last Saturday Elder W. D. Tordoff and family left this island for the Isle of Pines. Under the circumstances I considered it wise for me to remain here for a season, as the demand for missionary work in this island is great.

The meetings are progressing nicely, and much interest has been shown up to the time of Brother Tordoff's departure and since. Just a few days ago we had a beautiful baptism in the early morning, and others will likely be baptized soon.

The new opening at Boddentown, where ten were baptized recently, is progressing nicely. The Sunday school organized a little over two weeks ago is doing fine. We must find some other place to house them. There were sixty-two out to Sunday school last Sunday, and the people of the village are getting somewhat impatient for another missionary effort, which will be made as soon as I can possibly reach them.

I will likely remain here until the first part of June. Though this island is not very large, with but about five thousand inhabitants, the people are hungering for the true gospel, and the field seems white and ready for the harvest. The call also "comes ringing o'er the restless wave" from other near-by islands, "Send the light," and the invitation impresses us as being an urgent call indeed.

We are sorry to say farewell to Brother Tordoff and family, but we trust that they will be abundantly blessed in their journey over land and sea to the land of Zion.

Sperry, Oklahoma

We as Latter Day Saints at this place are still keeping the good work moving along. Four more were added to the church last Sunday, the 13th, and I think there are more that will soon come into the work.

There were a hundred and nineteen at our Sunday school the last meeting. The young are progressing nicely and seem to be happy when at work for the good cause. We intend to try for the best, with the help of the Lord, for we are happy when we work together with the selfsame good will.

Asking the prayers of the Saints,

BELLE KENDALL.

Independence

Preaching services in the several churches Sunday were as follows: Stone Church, baccalaureate sermon for graduating classes of Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Nurses' Training School of the Sanitarium, by T. W. Williams. The evening sermon was by John W. Rushton. Second Independence, R. J. Lambert and E. A. Curtis; Liberty, J. W. Shower and J. M. Terry; Englewood, John A. Dowker; Enoch Hill, J. W. A. Bailey; Walnut Park, J. E. Warne. Radio sermon by Arthur B. Phillips.

Elder Roy V. Hopkins, pastor in Zion, recently returned from Dahinda, Illinois, where he was called to baptize a young man whom he had been instrumental in converting to the beauties of the restored gospel. He reports that he had a wonderful experience, and that the brother is now planning on attending the convention at Lamoni.

On Wednesday, May 30, Memorial Day, there will be held on the new grounds a picnic for the whole of Independence. There are to be athletic games for all, supervised play in charge of experienced kindergartners for the children, and in the evening a band concert, interspersed with community singing, and speaking by Elders T. W. Williams and Walter W. Smith.

Next Sunday afternoon, June 3, on the new campus there will be held the first of a series of Sunday outdoor meetings at that place. The regular problems meeting at the Stone Church will be postponed for the occasion. The band will give a sacred concert, and there will be speaking by several of the leading men of the church. Elder Albert N. Hoxie, general church chorister, will be present and conduct community singing. An enjoyable time is anticipated.

Bishop A. V. Karlstrom, who since his return to America from the Society Islands has made his home here, left Saturday for a short visit among his relatives and friends at Joplin, Missouri. In the past few weeks he has been devoting considerable time to the Indian work in Nebraska. We are pleased to report that his health is steadily improving.

Brother and Sister Wilfred D. Tordoff, who for some years have labored as missionaries on the Isle of Pines, arrived in Independence last week. They are on their way to attend the Young People's Convention at Lamoni.

President Frederick M. Smith returned home Monday morning from a short trip in the East. While away he visited Washington, District of Columbia, where he attended the annual convention of the National Conference of Social Workers, and also Philadelphia, New York, and Boston.

The campaign headquarters, in the general office building, is a very busy place these days. The committee is endeavoring to close up all business in connection with the Swope drive, and is hard at work tabulating pledges, receipts, etc. They will not be in position to make any further report as to the total amount of pledges until the latter part of the week. Meantime the work of preserving the house and fixing up the grounds continues. A general plan or scheme for the whole place is being worked out, and no permanent changes or improvements will be made until this is completed. However, the property is already being used for social gatherings and picnics, thus fulfilling to the people of Independence our pledge that it would be used for community benefit.

Elder John W. Rushton is in the city for a few days, securing data for his work in the northwestern Canada districts, where he will labor until about the middle of September. He preached at the Stone Church Sunday evening.

Elder S. A. Burgess left last Friday for a trip to Saint Louis, where he will be detained on matters of business until the opening of the Young People's Convention in Lamoni, which he will attend. He was accompanied by his family.

On Tuesday evening, the 29th, there will be held in the Stone Church the graduating exercises for the Independence Institute and the Sanitarium, at which President Frederick M. Smith will be the speaker. There are sixteen graduates from the two institutions this year.

Graduates of the nurses' training school will be Irma Marie Ault, Ollie May Booker, Bessie Mary Curtis, Rebecca Catherine Stephens, and Helen Alma Weeks. Elizabeth Mary Logsdon, who died recently, was to have been graduated with this class.

Graduates of the Institute of Arts and Sciences are: Normal kindergarten-primary training department, Isabel Bartholomew, Marjorie Bartholomew, Sarah Beulah Butler, Eva Winn Cox, Dona Clark Haden, Hazel Josephine Koehler, Juanita Haden, and Mae Whiting; normal course in Mothercraft, Anne Friend Roberts; high school, Jane Shipman Simons, and Fay Lauretta Simpson.

Council Bluffs, and Vicinity

Many enjoyed the presence of President F. M. Smith in the city, and the message that he delivered. The settlement of our social problems will be certainly enjoyed when it is accomplished. Several view this subject and the speaker's views relative to it differently since hearing him. About 750 heard him in the forenoon, and about 900 at the evening service.

On the afternoon of the same day that Brother Smith was in the city, the funeral service was held for Sister Katherine Cook, a lifetime member of the church, and a continuous resident of this vicinity. The sermon was preached by Elder O. Salisbury, the service being in charge of Elder J. F. Mintun. She was one of those whose religion was evidenced in the home, being a "home keeper," and one whose life evidenced her faith.

Last Saturday and Sunday, May 12 and 13, there was held a two days' meeting at Crescent, and Saturday afternoon was used as a special conference to accept the resignation of the district president, O. Salisbury, and to fill the vacancy by electing Elder John A. Hanson, he selecting the counselors of his predecessor as his counselors for the remaining part of the conference year.

On Monday the 14th inst. the resignation of the branch president, O. Salisbury, was accepted, and Elder H. H. Hand was elected to fill the vacancy. Brother George Beaty was chosen as one of his associates in the branch presidency.

Brother O. Salisbury has concluded to sever his relationship with the Pennsylvania Oil Co., and move to Saint Joseph, Missouri, and with others of his brethren organize and conduct an oil business there. Brother Milo Burnett and family are expecting to move to Saint Joseph, Missouri, the first of June. These families will be missed from the services of the church. We are informed that the Pennsylvania Oil Co., has selected Brother C. A. Skinner, to take the place of Brother Salisbury as sales manager.

On the account of diphtheria in the home of Brother P. T. Anderson he has been under quarantine for several weeks. He is looking forward to the near future when he can be free to wait upon his missionary calling.

The monthly business meeting of the Women's Department was held at Sister H. M. Kerns's last Thursday, the 17th, at which time about forty sisters and their neighbors were present. An encouraging meeting was held. The home hygiene class will be continued at the Central Church each

Monday evening by Mrs. Robinson. Miss Charlotte Dryden gave a talk at the meeting of yesterday. The home nursing classes will be continued on Thursday at the Central and West End mission churches,

At the West End Mission Sister Ward is conducting choir rehearsals for the junior members, and Sister Vinnie Hatch for the seniors.

Sister M. Belleville, who has been quite sick for several months, has so far recovered that she has gone to Little Sioux for an extended visit, hoping thus to regain her strength.

Brother Leslie S. Wight worshiped with us last Sunday, and by request gave the Mothers' Day sermon, and it was very good. Just two years ago his father, Elder J. W. Wight, gave the Mothers' Day sermon in the same pulpit.

Mrs. Hattie Harl, one of the school board members here, gave a talk at the Religio on the evening of the 13th, in which she emphasized the tendency toward that which was not elevating to the child. She says too many of the teachers in the higher grades are leading toward that which is not of the most value to society.

Brother Lloyd Graybill has been elected to the position of district Religio president in the place vacated by Brother Milo Burnett, who soon leaves the district.

The Tappa Wingo Circle of the Temple Builders will give a play at the West End Mission next Tuesday evening.

News From Topeka Kansas

The sacrament service of May 6 was well attended, including visiting Saints from Ottawa and Richmond, Kansas. Our aged sister, Mrs. Margarette Chew, formerly of Atchison, Kansas, was present and encouraged the Saints with words of inspiration by the Spirit. Though she is growing feeble, she is strong in the faith. A missionary sermon was delivered in the evening by the pastor, Elder Ira G. Whipple.

May 13 was Mothers' Day and was observed with appropriate services morning and evening. The program sent out by the general church was carried out as far as time and talent would permit. The Sunday school presented the two oldest sisters in the branch with a token of remembrance, "Mother-Heart Mine." An improvised pageant, "From youth to old age," was given in the evening by the Religio.

Thus with a spirit of reverence and regard we paid homage to those brave and noble-hearted leaders who led our inexperienced souls through childhood's blest and happy strife.

On May 20, Walter L. Chapman occupied at the 11 o'clock hour, taking for his theme, "Why are we called Latter Day Saints?" In the evening Elder A. P. Crooker spoke upon the subject of "The spiritual race." Some nonmembers were present and manifested an interest.

MRS. H. C. PITSENBARGER, Correspondent.

Northern Wisconsin District

We are glad to report that Brother E. J. Lenox, who was released from the missionary force last year on account of low finance in the church, was reinstated May 1, and takes up the work of district president of the Northern Wisconsin District.

Brother Lenox enters the district with full faith and confidence of the people, having proven to them his efficiency before being released.

Apostle J. F. Garver, who had prior to this time been in this district in the interest of the work, joined Brother Lenox at Chetek.

Brother Lenox having been recommended by the First Presidency, with the concurrence of the Saints of Chetek Branch, was elected branch president, and expects to move his family here at his earliest convenience. Brother Garver officiated in the installation of Brother Lenox, which occurred on May 14.

On the morning of May 15 a tour was started to visit various branches in the district in the interest of reunion and district work; the party went by car with George Clark at the wheel, and consisted of Apostle J. F. Garver, E. J. Lenox, district president; George E. Clark, superintendent of Recreation and Expression; Sister Leroy Colbert, superintendent of Department of Women; and Mrs. Laura Clark, publicity agent.

Their efforts were met with a ready response and the outlook for the future is very encouraging.

Brother Garver apprehended if the Saints were compact they would reach a point of contact.

The party reached Wyeville on Thursday afternoon. Brother Garver preached to the Saints that evening and left on the early train Friday morning for Minneapolis, Minnesota, thence homeward bound.

The good-bys were a little brightened by the anticipation of his return to district reunion, which will convene from June 29 to July 8.

Friday evening Brother Lenox preached at Wyeville and the following day the remaining parties returned to Chetek to take up their usual responsibilities.

Simcoe Ontario

It is now some few weeks since we wrote our last letter to the HERALD, and although we are but a branch of a few months old, we have experienced some wonderful times and blessings.

Since the last time we wrote you we have been visited by Bishop John Burger and were greatly encouraged by his kindly advice and spiritual ministrations. Now last Sunday at the afternoon service we had a most wonderful manifestation of the Lord's revelation to his beloved children. Elder John Shields was with us—his second visit to this branch within a month—and the Lord, through his beloved servant with the gift of tongues, spoke to each and every one present, some individually and then to the whole family present. He told us how pleased he was with the progress made, that he had recognized our endeavors put forward to do His will and spread the gospel. What a wonderful blessing from the Almighty. So we see how the Lord remembers those who try to do his will. What we felt most sorry for was that there were not more of the members present.

But the Lord does not herald his intentions. He expects us as his children to do our duty and to be at the appointed place.

It was a most wonderful time. The Spirit of the Lord was with us in force. It was so nice to think the Lord was pleased, and pleasing to us to think that Brother Desby from Selkirk will be with us to-morrow, the Lord willing. We are looking forward to the time when we shall swell our fold with a few more lambs who are ready to be baptized as soon as weather permits. We request the prayers of the Saints that we might be strengthened and encouraged, that we might grow and our sick and afflicted might be healed.

In gospel bonds,
CHARLES TURNER, Publicity Agent.

San Francisco, California

Many of our young brothers in the navy make it a point to attend our services while they are stationed here. They are always welcome and come quite often. The last one to attend was Brother Keefer from Oklahoma. We are glad they remember the church duties.

On April 19 the Women's Club held their meeting. They invited the branch members to be present as they were going to have their first lesson on "preaching" and public speaking. It was a very interesting and profitable meeting. They adjourned at an early hour to the residence of our pastor, John A. Saxe, for refreshments, as they stated, but in fact it was a surprise party to Bishop C. A. Parkin and wife, the occasion being their golden wedding.

For fifty years "Charlie and Lizzie" have been traveling the path of life together, and with all the ups and downs they are still chums.

We all had a very enjoyable evening. A suitable memento was presented, and speeches all around made the time pass pleasantly. It also happened to be the birthday of Sister Saxe and she came in for congratulations and a suitable present. The "eats" were fine, and everybody went home happy.

All goes nicely in the branch—good meetings, good preaching, good singing, good attendance; and a good spirit always present.

GEORGE S. LINCOLN.

Nauvoo, Illinois

On Sunday, April 29, a few families of Saints drove about five miles up the river to the home of our aged brother, James Gifford, where we spent a pleasant two hours in social converse and in prayer and testimony. The Spirit of the Master was there in a marked degree. Brother Gifford, though in his ninety-fifth year and feeble in body is strong in the faith. His mind is clear, especially in regard to events transpiring in his younger days, and it is interesting to hear him tell of his associations with young Joseph and others of the church.

During the meeting Brother Berve, under the impress of the Spirit, spoke words of approval and comfort to Brother Gifford who so much enjoys having the Saints visit him. The priesthood was quite well represented at our little meeting. There were of the high priests, Brothers George P. Lambert, Amos Berve, and J. W. Layton, and Brother C. J. Smith of the missionary force. Also Brother August Lee, priest, and Clyde Fusselman, deacon, were there.

We all felt that the afternoon had been well spent and went to our homes feeling stronger in the work from having met in the home of our faithful brother.

Western Montana Reunion

We want the readers of the HERALD, especially the Saints of Montana, to know that the Western Montana District reunion will be held at Race Track, Montana on the Tewey Ranch (the same grounds we have used the last four years) from August 17 to 27.

We hope no one will fail to take advantage of this splendid opportunity to meet the Saints from the various parts of the State, and enjoy a spiritual feast together. Our reunions in the past have always been wonderfully blessed with the presence of God's Spirit, and there is no reason why this should not be the best we have ever had. Aside from our district missionaries we hope to have with us some of the general church officers.

The committee has arranged to rent tents to those who cannot furnish their own, for about four dollars for the ten days. Those desiring to rent tents will please notify Alfred Peterson, Race Track, Montana, not later than August 7. We kindly request that those intending to camp on the grounds furnish their own bedding. Straw for bedticks will be furnished.

Meals will be furnished at the dining tent at a very reasonable rate. Those desiring to do their own cooking may obtain provisions at the supply tent on the grounds. Community cookstoves will be available for all campers.

Watch the HERALD for further announcements.

The seven principal bibles of the world, in addition to the Christian Scriptures, are the Koran of the Mohammedans, the Eddas of the Scandinavians, the Tripitikes of the Buddhists, the Five Kings of the Chinese (so called from "king," a word meaning web of cloth or warp that keeps the threads in place), the three Vedas of the Hindus, and the Zend-Avesta of the Persians which contains the sayings of Zoroaster."—The Pathfinder for May 19, 1923.

Radio Comments

The Anway brothers are responsible for much of the radio success which has been ours. Paul is the only licensed operator in Independence, and has to be on the spot all the time or there could be no broadcasting. George is in charge of the musical programs, and frequently helps out in emergencies as well as taking his regular place with our other musical helpers.

Some correspondents have told us of interference which has rendered it impossible to get the programs. One of the best solutions is to see the near-by owners of regenerative sets, and induce them not to tune their outfits while W P E is coming in.

It is extremely difficult to arrange with representative speakers to be at the radio station just when we can use them, so we expect to have some of the messages from our brethren written up by them and read by a good radio reader. We will let you know when you are hearing the man, and when his contribution is being read.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Zula Robinson, of Joplin, Missouri, writes asking the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her husband, George H. Robinson, who has been in the State Hospital for Epileptics at Parsons, Kansas, for over two years. She writes that she had arranged for Elder Daniel Gray, of Parsons, to administer to him on the last Sunday of May, the 27th. We regret that this notice will be too late for the Saints to join in prayer on his behalf at that time. But the prayers of the faithful avail much, and Sister Robinson's faith is in the Lord for she says, "We know no one can heal him only our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ."

Conference Minutes

NORTHERN DISTRICT, BRITISH ISLES MISSION.—The annual conference was held on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, March 31 and April 1 and 2, 1923. The business sessions were held in the church of the Southeast Manchester Branch, on Saturday, March 31, and Monday, April 2. The ordinary routine business was gotten through in a very creditable manner, but some of the more debatable propositions brought out the forensic ability of members of the conference and created some awkward situations during the sessions, but all passed off with ultimate good feeling and fellowship among all concerned. The election of officers resulted in the reelection of all who held office the previous conference year. One important item of business was the adoption of the following rule: "No member of the church in this district shall be ordained to the priesthood, or appointed, or elected to any office in the district, who is addicted to intoxicating drink in any form, or who uses tobacco. 'Men of God, who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies, and in your clothing, let your garments be of a sober character, and free from an excess of ornamentation. Avoid the use of tobacco, and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.'—Doctrine and Covenants 119:3." The Sunday services were held in the Rusholme Public Hall, Dickenson Road, Rusholme, Manchester. Young people's prayer service 10.30 a. m., Elder D. B. Sorden and Priest E. Britton in charge. Preaching service 10.30 a. m., Elders E. Maloney and J. W. Green in charge. Elder D. B. Sorden gave an inspiring address upon "Individual development," based upon the teachings of Jesus in the parable of the "True vine." Before the preacher occupied Sister Alice Schofield, of the Northeast Manchester Branch, rendered a beautiful solo with pathos and spiritual feeling. Testimony and song service, 2.30 p. m., Elders G. W. Leggott and W. H. Chandler in charge. Quite a number of testimonies were borne and verses of well-known sacred songs were sung, which developed the meeting into a feast of fat things. Confirmation and ordination service at six p. m., the district president in charge. Four converts from Bradford, Yorkshire, who were baptized after the morning service, were confirmed. Elder Abel Hall, missionary, was ordained a seventy, and Brother G. Russell, of Hull, Yorkshire, was ordained an elder. Officiating ministry: Apostle D. T. Williams, Patriarch R. Baldwin, High Priests W. R. Armstrong and G. W. Leggott, Seventy Abel Hall and Elder Herbert Harper. Preaching service 6.30 p. m., the district presidency in charge. Speaker, Apostle D. T. Williams. The speaker took for his subject, "The wonderful days of history," dealing with the brotherhood of man, based upon the scripture, "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend." The sermon was full of good points and apt illustrations, being educational, instructive, and encouraging. This was Brother Williams's first appearance as a preacher among the Saints of the Northern District, and the impression made was certainly one that will prove indelible in the minds of many who were privileged to listen to him. Before and after the sermon, musical items, entitled, "God be merciful," and, "Come unto me all ye that labor," were beautifully rendered by our brothers and sisters of the Preston family, of the Stockport Branch. Refreshments were provided at a small charge, between the services, so as to permit those who desired to be present at all the meetings. The conference was a success from start to close. Harold Barrington, district secretary.

"The college life and that which the youth gets in college is the best entrance society has yet found for its youth into a larger and finer culture and into a loyal and patriotic citizenship. Perhaps this is true because of the fact that, notwithstanding the trivialities of the college life of to-day, and notwithstanding the subordination of matters of great moment to those which are spectacular, it still remains a fact that in college as nowhere else the youth finds himself in contact with an idealism which lifts him out of the commonplace and turns him toward a service of society of which he would otherwise never be capable. We cannot have too many men or too many women in our citizenship who are instinct with this idealism. There cannot be too many students in college so long as they get a taste of this spirit and an aspiration for this service."—Henry S. Pritchett, in Scribner's Magazine for May, 1923, page 559.

Graceland Home-Coming

As this paper goes to press, Lamoni is being filled to the brim and running over with young people who have gathered from far and near to visit again the scenes that grew dear to them in college days. Every preparation has been made to insure a happy time for this home-coming, and the weather seems in league with the committee, for the sky is clear and the roads are in perfect form for the hundreds who have come or are planning to come by auto.

A large tabernacle tent has been erected on the campus and the larger gatherings will be held there.

President Frederick M. Smith delivered the baccalaureate sermon at Lamoni Sunday evening for the graduating class of Graceland College, the subject of his sermon being "The educational problem of the church."

"The educational goal of the church," said President Smith, "is universal higher education, or higher education for all. But this must be a different kind of higher education than is obtainable to-day. At present each individual is forced through practically the same mold. This order must be changed. Training should be fitted to the needs and capacities of each individual, and each should be trained to the limit of his capacity in the line in which he is best qualified. The great objective of the church must be kept clearly in sight and the activities of those learning must be made holy by religion and devotion to ideals, and each individual should be taught that life, body, muscles, brain, wealth, land, pen, or machine must be made to glorify God and bring his kingdom by being devoted to the service of man with no other thought of reward than the consciousness of having loved God by thus serving man. It is useless for a body that names the name of Christ to think of any other educational activity than that which is based on religion. We can never reach our goal until we realize that all our educational activities should be made dynamic by religion and the idea that we are working for God and Christ."

President Smith was the first person to graduate from Graceland and, was the only graduate in the class of 1898. There are 62 graduates this year.

At noon on Monday the Lambda Delta Sigma, our own church school society, gave a banquet to seventy-five members, and twenty-one new members were initiated.

At 8 p. m. Monday the Graceland Glee Club and the College Players gave an operetta, complimentary to the visitors. During the day classes were organized, and a busy, interesting two weeks are in prospect.

Next week's HERALD will carry detailed reports of the Home-Coming and Convention and will try to convey some of the spirit of this fellowship so that those who cannot go to Lamoni may yet know that the church has a host of young people whose eyes are turned toward Zion, and whose vision and purpose and talent insure great things ahead.

Two Young Men Ordained to Responsible Positions

The High Council of the church met at Independence, Thursday, May 31, and approved a recommendation of the First Presidency providing for the ordination of Charles E. Irwin and Alonzo Jones to the office of high priest and the ordination of C. E. Irwin to the office of bishop. At the sacrament service in Lamoni, Sunday morning, these men were ordained high priests by Apostles Garver and Edwards, and Brother Irwin was ordained bishop by President Frederick M. Smith. Both of the men ordained are well known to the church and both at present are on the faculty of Graceland College.

Faith

We are publishing in this issue of the HERALD an article in German on "Glaube" and also the same article in English, "Faith." A small number of this article in German will be published in tract form for use in that nation. A few extra copies may be run off for use in this country if there is sufficient demand. These extra copies will be sold at the rate of 10 for 25 cents; 100 for $2.

The article on "Faith" is already printed as one of the Busy Man's Tracts in a convenient vest pocket form, on heavy paper, and retails 8 for 10 cents; 50 for 45 cents; 100 for 85 cents. S. A. B.

The Class of 1898

In the early days Graceland offered a four-year college course. The first graduate of our school was Frederick M. Smith. There has been a little humor in this fact for, as he announced lately, he graduated at the foot of his class in Graceland, which is true. He also graduated at the head of the class and in the middle, so when he attends the Graceland Home-Coming, we can truly say that the whole class of 1898, though large, attended in a body.

President Smith was not only a student and the first graduate. He also served on the faculty as professor of mathematics. Then for several years he was a member and chairman of the board of trustees. On the fifteenth anniversary of his graduation he started the class donations by donating to the college a sundial, which stands in the northeast corner of the campus.

He was no doubt instrumental in the founding of Graceland College. His father certainly was one of the prime movers and a member of the first board of trustees and the board of directors. President Smith since withdrawing from the college board of trustees has continued to assist and direct the destiny of the school in his larger capacity as president of the church.

He has therefore served Graceland in every possible capacity—as a student, as a professor, on the board of trustees, and as the head of the institution or church responsible for the founding and continuation of Graceland College.

The Campus a Sign of Hope

The sum of the actual contributions in money to the fund for the purchase of the Swope property in Independence does not stand for the greatest accomplishment attained by the successful issue of the drive; for above the value in dollars and cents stands the evidence that it indicates an awakened social consciousness among the Saints locally and generally. In a business way the property was not needed; socially it is of prime importance to the community and the church. Only the consciousness of this fact on the part of the Saints has guaranteed the success in raising the funds.

To me the accomplishment of this undertaking has been strongly heartening. To see as a result a social center for the youths, particularly a recreation field for all who need it, and a home for a worthy institution striving for higher ideals and social betterment standing in the very center of the city of Zion, quickens the hope that as other and even greater achievements are needed the Saints with a still higher and more pervasive social consciousness will rise to the occasion and make them possible. To make Zion the beautiful a reality demands first a keen and soul-deep social consciousness, a Christian social consciousness that glimpses the intimate relation of our brother's welfare to our own, and success in such moves as has secured for us the Campus in Independence prepares for heavier undertakings still before us.

Committee on Retrenchment

It will be remembered by those interested that at last General Conference a committee on retrenchment was selected, one from the Presidency, one from the Twelve, and one from the Bishopric. The person selected was in each case the chief of the quorum. The committee was called together sometime the fore part of May, and canvassed the situation.

As was pointed out in these columns some time the fore part of the calendar year the trend of finances after the conference was towards better conditions, so markedly so that a large deficit for the fiscal year up to November 1, 1922, was overcome and by the close of January a surplus had accumulated, even in the operating fund. At the time the committee met the reports from the financial department showed a slight deficit again; but analysis of the trend justified the committee, the members thought, in prognosticating for the close of the fiscal year a near balance of income and expenditures. Hence the committee after canvassing the fields of the various departments of work did not feel disposed to indicate specific curtailment in any department.

However, because of the probable closeness of expenditures to income for the year it is deemed wise to urge all departments to watch their expenditures carefully, keeping them well within the limits of necessity; for it will have a wholesome effect if we can close the fiscal year with a surplus rather than a deficit. The Presidency therefore urges all departments to exercise careful judgment in efforts to keep the expenses well under the budget if possible. We are pleased to note that analysis of the budget accounts of the various departments shows that with very few exceptions this is so far the case, and we congratulate the departments on the showing.

We cannot but feel that despite the drawbacks and obstacles, the general trend of the work is onward and upward. Our goal lies clearly before us, and is so eminently well worth working for that we can well bend every effort towards developing the team work necessary to reach it.

What Is It All About?

"And God said, Let us make man."—Genesis 1:26.

"Unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."—Ephesians 4:13.

"Yet I doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs."—Tennyson.

IV. The Development of the Collective Soul

We have observed the great interest that Christ took in the regeneration and development of the individual human soul. This was preliminary to the building of the kingdom. From such regenerated individuals he proposed to build the social structure of the church. Indeed individual and collective regeneration go hand in hand.

It is impossible for the individual to develop religiously without social contact. Religion proposes to establish right relationship between a man and his God and between a man and his fellow men. The brotherhood of man is intimately associated with the fatherhood of God. The two were embodied in the two great commandments, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Matthew 22:37-39.)

Seclusion Not Religious

From time to time in the past efforts have been made to develop religiously in seclusion. For a long time man's ideal of religious life seemed to be that of the religious hermit or anchorite—one who had retired to the seclusion of the desert, mountain, forest, or monastery to live a solitary life of prayer and meditation. Such a life was considered to be a surrender to God. It was not. It was a surrender to the Devil. It was a surrender to the Devil in this sense, that it was a retreat from the battlefield of life. It was a retreat from the active affairs and relationship of life in which religion must function if it ever functions at all. Religion must function in the relationships of the family, of business, of the home, the community. The religious hermit retreated from these domains, admitting that he did not believe that religion could meet these problems. He retired from the field and left Satan to occupy. He surrendered not to God, but to the opposing power.

Man Is Social by Nature

Man is naturally social and gregarious. If religion cannot help him in the proper development of that natural tendency, it cannot help him at all. The life of the religious hermit was an abnormal one, and, if we are to judge things by their fruits, it was not religious but rather irreligious. Doctor Hall has a very interesting paragraph in which he quotes from ancient Catholic records an analysis of the effect of religious seclusion upon the anchorite. It is a very keen, psychological analysis of the state of the human soul in its very natural revolt against an abnormal life lived under the mistaken pretensions of religious seclusion. The citation is as follows:

It is pathetic in the extreme to read the careful and most interesting psychological analysis of the mental states produced by the unnatural life of the monk. "The sixth struggle is what the Greeks call—which we may render weariness and anxiety of heart. It is like melancholia, and is particularly severe with the hermit and a constant and dangerous foe of the solitary, attacking the monk at the sixth hour, as does a fever with its burning heat the sick man, at regular intervals . . . and when it seizes some miserable one, he conceives a horror of the place, and utter disgust of his cell; of his brethren also with him or near him it begets disdain and contempt, as negligent and unspiritual." The whole description is saddening in the extreme. The unnatural strain producing all manner of mental disorders, and giving rise to visions, dreams, and fantastic modes of life which were then variously interpreted as either the visitation of angels or the attacks of demons.—History of Ethics Within Organized Christianity, p. 248.

Ideals of the Gathering

The gathering as embodied in our latter-day philosophy does not contemplate any such surrender or withdrawal from the affairs of life. It may be a withdrawal from the world in the sense set forth in the book of Doctrine and Covenants that we are to be "in the world but not of the world," or as set forth by James in his definition of religion wherein he says that we are to keep ourselves "unspotted from the vices of the world" but at the same time to minister to the needs of the world—to the sick, the poor, the widow, the fatherless. The gathering contemplates a body of people who have withdrawn from the evils of the world or put those evils out of their lives, but who take into the active affairs of life, in all its phases, religion as an affirmative rather than a negative element. Such a people will carry on all the affairs of business and enter into the normal, wholesome, and holy relationships of life—marriage, the rearing of children, mingling of neighbors and brothers and sisters, and community enterprises, and demonstrate that it is possible to live a life of holiness and at the same time a life of activity and of real constructive work. Religion enters into all such relationships, making better husbands, better wives, better sons and daughters, better fathers and mothers, better neighbors. This is a broad, rich ideal of expression never dreamed of by the man who attempted to flee from the world and bury himself in a cave or a monastery, or the woman who sought the seclusion of a nunnery to brood in a cell and spend her life in meditation and prayer. Religion is not to repress or destroy fundamental human tendencies; but is to direct, control, and develop them.

Life cannot be lived excepting as it is lived in relationship with others. As Paul said, "No man liveth unto himself alone." Even the monk and the hermit were dependent upon contributions coming from others, or at least upon some form of sustenance, ordinarily provided, directly or indirectly, by those who had not withdrawn from the social order.

Objective of Religion

We revert again to the statement found in Ephesians 4 of the purposes of church organization. There we are told that Christ gave gifts to men; that he perfected a form of church organization, all for an express purpose: "For the perfecting of the Saints," till individually they reach the stature of "a perfect man in the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ"; till collectively they "all come in the unity of the faith," and "speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."

Individual perfection is reached when a man develops all the powers for good that are resident in him to their highest possible point in the likeness of Christ. That may mean one thing for one man and another for another man; for both it means perfected manhood after the Christian pattern. Collective perfection is reached in a community of souls wherein the principles of righteousness are fully active. Truth, love, and growth are set forth as active principles on the road to perfection. In a single word, justice will underlie the activities of such a community. Truth is fundamental in Christ's philosophy of development. "You shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." But truth is not merely written or spoken, it must be lived. And one has wisely said, "Justice is truth in action." Justice or truth in action will bring ultimate equality in opportunity, as well as in the enjoyment of material things on the basis of "every man according to his needs and just wants"; or according to the motto long carried by a prominent American publication: "From every man according to his ability; to every man according to his need."

We have then as the answer to our inquiry, "What is it all about?" the conclusion that all things in creation and certainly all things in religion lead up to the redemption and soul development of the individual man and after him to the redemption and development of the common soul, i. e., the establishment of the kingdom of God in righteousness. It may possibly be that man must take his first steps in faith in obedience to God's behests. During the first four or five years of a child's life the parent must teach him unquestioning obedience. Reasons for commandments cannot be assigned because they cannot be understood. But obedience must be had to preserve the life of the child and lay the foundation for future growth. So it may be with the race and even with the individual. "To fear God and keep his commandments is the first duty of man." Rational obedience comes later.

"I Am"

David Edstrom, the sculptor, in his group, "Man Triumphant," has four figures which he described like this: "They represent four steps by which man walks into light. They are: 'Thou must'; 'I must'; 'I desire'; 'I am.'"

First by force of external pressure, necessity, elemental compulsions of cold, heat, starvation, man is compelled to act. He must. Or in a primitive state, the divine edict is imperative. The Mosaic economy said, "Thou shalt. Thou shalt not." Later there comes an inner prompting. Compulsion is from within. Duty is perceived; something says, "I must." The man drives himself. Later he sees and loves the beauty of right acts and says, "Now I desire." But finally, and last of all, truth and goodness become part of his own soul, and he says, "I am." So God declared to Moses, "I am hath sent thee."

Alma was entirely right when he made the supreme test of the gospel its power to enlarge the human soul. Greater than signs and miracles is the evidence to that man who having tested the gospel can say with Alma: "It beginneth to enlarge my soul."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

May Forget to Come Back

Kenneth Fligg in a short speech made at one of the meetings held in the interests of the drive made in a few words a cogent argument in favor of a recreational center in Independence. He said that our young people who go to Kansas City and other places seeking recreation not available in Independence may some time forget to come back. That idea grips one with fear when you contemplate it—fear that because we fail to do our part some one may lose the influence of the church; and it is well to keep this in mind as we move on towards the accomplishment of greater things. The welfare of the other fellow must constantly be in our thought, and to be thoroughly Christian we must be willing to spend and be spent in efforts to reach Zion's goal.

Reading--How and What

A lecture by Elder R. J. Farthing, at Toronto District Institute Session, Humber Bay, Ontario, January 26, 1923.

In a recent issue of the SAINTS' HERALD, Thomas S. Williams, president of Southwestern Kansas District, states that the greatest thing he learned at Graceland College was how to study. Previously much time was lost because he did not know what and how. The words "what" and "how" were italicized.

To-night I am going to deal with two phases of the general subject of reading. First I shall speak of what to read, and following that I shall discuss how to read—newspapers, books, poems, and the Scriptures.

Reading is (1) matter to be read; (2) study of books; (3) the act of one who reads. To read is (1) to interpret; (2) to go over characters or words and utter aloud, or recite to oneself inaudibly; (3) to comprehend; (4) to discover or learn by observation.

What shall we read? We might attempt to read people's characters by the expressions of their faces or the shapes of their heads. We might read stones, for Shakespeare tells us that there are "sermons in stones," though in this respect perhaps most of us would be limited to the reading of inscriptions on tombstones. We might read the stars, as did the astrologers of ancient times. Or we might learn a great deal from nature, for a poet tells us that "she speaks a various language."

But to-night we are going to limit our discussion to the interpretation and comprehension of human language portrayed in visual symbols.

Hundreds of human languages have been reduced to writing. There are Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and Sanscrit; German, Russian, Spanish, and Turkish, and many others, each of which has an extensive literature, the treasures of which are sealed to most Canadians, who have access only to that which is printed in French or English.

Last week while I was studying a Latin lesson a little three-year-old boy started to talk to me. I said to him: "Can you say: 'Romanus pugnat'?" His answer was, "That's silly!" That is how it appealed to him because he did not understand it.

A few nights ago I was teaching a class in French. When I told them that the French for "we have, you have, they have" is "nous avons, vous avez, ils ont," one the girls said: "That sounds silly!" That was because she had not yet become familiar with the sounds and meanings of those words.

Paul said to the Corinthians: "If I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he shall be a barbarian unto me."

Even when we read English containing words that we do not understand or thoughts that are beyond our comprehension, it may seem silly to us, ridiculous, a pack of nonsense. And that may be the fault of the reader rather than of the writer.

There is a class of people so self-satisfied that they ridicule the ignorance of all whose knowledge is more limited than their own, and at the same time they discourage those who seek to drink more deeply from the fountains of truth. That is, they despise both the ignorant and the learned—only their own mediocrity is satisfactory. Their own minds having become stationary and their intellects petrified, in their narrowness of vision they cannot understand why others should still thirst for fresh truth, nor can they be convinced that there are unexplored avenues of knowledge leading to waiting fields of useful service.

Such would regard as an imbecile one who did not know a circle from a square, nor a triangle from a straight line; yet they would regard as equally foolish the student who would go on in this science of geometry till he learned that:

"If two similar polygons have the sides of one respectively parallel to the corresponding sides of the other, the straight lines joining corresponding vertices are concurrent."

"If you haven't studied synthetic geometry, you may have difficulty in forming a mental picture of that—or perhaps you don't believe it!"

These same self-satisfied people would regard with high disdain the man who did not know that twice five is ten; but he might incur their equal disfavor by adding to his mathematical knowledge till he had learned (and could use it) that:

"The probability that, among several equally likely events, a given event will happen is the ratio of the number of favorable cases to the whole number of possible cases."

That knowledge might restrain a young man from becoming a gambler.

There are those who would lament the ignorance of the young man (or would they agree with him?) who said: "This here book larnin' ain't never done nobody no good." And yet they would discourage our young men from going on in their study of English till they knew better than to speak of "three alternatives"; until they knew when and how to use loose and periodic sentences; and until they learned at what times and for what purposes they should use short, simple, and forceful words and when their public utterances would be more effective couched in dithyrambic sesquipedalian verbiage.

Shall we draw a line and say, Thus far shalt thou go and no farther? The revelations of God do not restrict us in our search for truth. "The Spirit will guide you into all truth." "Seek learning even by study and also by faith."

To make this advancement it is necessary to proceed step by step from the field of the known into the undiscovered territories of the unknown. For instance, you cannot learn long division until after you have mastered addition, subtraction, and multiplication. Did you ever wonder why the principles of arithmetic are always taught in the same order—addition first, then subtraction, multiplication, and division? No other order is possible.

A mistake is often made in trying to read matter that is too advanced at the time, that should wait till after simpler works containing the fundamental principles of the subject have been studied. I have heard some who had little schooling and a rather meager acquaintance with the subject of psychology yet had sufficient presumption and considered themselves competent to adversely criticize a thesis on a difficult phase of advanced psychology. An unlearned man would be quickest to say: "That book is silly."

Verily, there is nothing like ignorance to give self-confidence—or conceit. Likewise there is nothing like an extensive exploration of the limitless field of knowledge to make one humble. "Truth abideth and hath no end; and if it be in you it shall abound."

Again I ask, What shall we read? And the answer comes from the revelations to the church:

Seek ye out of the best book words of wisdom.

Study all good books.

Obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man.

Teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God that is expedient for you to understand, of things both in heaven and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land.

Why do you read? There are two principal reasons: First, to be entertained. Second, to learn.

Much newspaper and storybook reading, besides entertainment, give merely practice in recognizing words, little of it being retained in memory. This class of reading is useful for rest and recreation after a period of hard study. However, it is difficult to draw the line between reading and study, or between entertainment and the acquirement of knowledge.

In your newspaper reading do not depend on the headlines—they are likely to be misleading. If your time is limited, read the first paragraph of the news articles you are interested in. If properly written, this first paragraph should be a summary of the article and should answer these five questions: When? Where? How? Who? Why?

In the reading of books other than fiction it is well to make a preliminary survey of the matter to be read and pass judgment as to the degree of importance of the various items and lay special stress on the permanent fixing in memory of those items that are vital and fundamental.

In committing to memory it is advisable to read aloud and rapidly rather than silently and slowly.

Mentally review each paragraph as soon as you have read it. Nothing is learned without review and time for meditation.

Memorize definitions, formulas, dates, and outlines, and if necessary invent some artificial scheme for learning and recalling them.

Stop reading at natural breaks—and leave a cue for its quick resumption. It is not necessary to dog-ear the leaves—remember the number of the page.

Three physical conditions necessary to effective reading are quietness, light, and proper temperature.

A quiet place should be chosen, free from interruptions and distracting conversation. The reading should be uppermost in the stream of consciousness. I have heard of men locking themselves in a vault when they had problems to solve requiring hard thinking.

Light should come predominantly from above and from a point to the front of and to the left of the reader. Don't let an artificial light hang in the immediate range of your eyes unless you wear an eyeshade or there is a suitable shade on the lamp. There should be no glare or reflection from the page to the eyes. Light must never shine directly into the eyes.

The temperature should be 65 to 68 degrees and the air should be moist to prevent discomfort. Indoor air often exceeds in dryness that of the Desert of Sahara. Though it may not be as dry as this lecture.

So much for the reading of newspapers and prose works. I now want to speak of poetry. To many of us poetry may seem a jargon of random words and meaningless phrases that can be repeated in sing-song fashion and having rhyming words at the ends of the lines. We may be like the man in the story:

A certain poet sent a volume of his latest poetry to a friend. The next time they met the friend said to the poet: "I admire your verses very much, particularly the first poem in the book. Let me recite it to you to prove how I have enthused over it sufficiently to learn it by heart":

When I give you toy balloons
There is no other
Fire out of amethyst
Green beetles on Fifth Avenue
Skies that bend
A soft mist hides the sea—

"Stop!" yelled the poet. "That's not a poem—you have been reciting the table of contents!"

To understand and appreciate the music of poetry it is helpful to study the mechanics of poetry-making, that is, how the words and syllables are arranged to produce the various musical effects.

Here is a stanza in which every second syllable is accented, that is, it is composed of iambic measures:

I hold it truth with him who sings
To one clear harp in divers tones
That men may rise on stepping-stones
Of their dead selves to higher things.

I will now recite a stanza in which every third syllable is accented, the anapestic measure:

As we gaze at the past we regret that dear Ted
Didn't harness the trusts that have fattened and fed
On the sweat and the blood and the lives of the men
Who now cry out in anguish, Don't trust him again!

Poetry should be read in harmony with its meaning. For examples I will give two stanzas, one of which requires to be read slowly and meditatively, the other quickly and actively. The first is from Tennyson:

Break, break, break,
On thy cold gray stones, O sea,
And I would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me. . . .
The stately ships go on
To their haven under the hill.
But O for the touch of a vanished hand
And the sound of a voice that is still.

Here is the other (I do not recall the author):

The wind one morning
Awoke from sleep,
Saying, "Now for a frolic,
Now for a leap;
Now for a madcap
Galloping race;
I'll make a commotion
In every place."

However, majesty of expression and beauty of thought are more valuable and essential features of poetry than are rhythm and rhyme. An example of a majestic song without rhyme or regular accent is found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. It starts like this:

The Lord hath brought again Zion;
The Lord hath redeemed his people Israel,
According to the election of grace
Which was brought to pass by the faith
And covenant of their fathers.

It would be a very grave omission if I were to conclude this lecture on "How and what to read" without saying something about the Holy Scriptures.

Our epitome of faith contains these words: "The Bible is the foundation of our faith."

Professor Flinders Petrie in the Yale Review recently discussed the Koran of the Mohammedans, ranking it below other sacred books in its "lack of system, its wandering, its casual changes of subject, and its sameness of ideas."

He rates the sacred books of India far higher for "vigor of thought, continuity, and development of character in its persons," and for "moral beauty and delicate perception."

He places the sacred books of China still higher in matters of thought and logic, though lacking in personality.

But, says he, "The Jew has transcended them all in the Bible, whether in simple magnificence of narrative, vigor of composition, the moral earnestness of the prophets, or the spiritual vision of the apostles."

If we regard the Bible merely as literature, it transcends all other books. As history, it sheds light on the dim, distant, and alternating periods of human doubt and faith, on the periods of dark despair and glorious achievement. It conveys the assurance of truth to the heart. The Bible inspires with hope the human soul. In its magnificent outlook it depicts eloquently the great day of redemption, yet never indulges the shallow and deceitful philosophy that since

God's in his heaven—
All's right with the world.

The Bible, however, assures us that the kingdom of our Father in heaven will come and his will be done on earth.

No wonder that a former vice president of the United States has said: "If I were to have my way, I would take the torch out of the hand of the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor, and in its stead place an open Bible."

On March 30, 1922, Japan passed a prohibition law which declares that no person under the age of twenty-one shall purchase or procure any kind of alcoholic beverage for his or her own use. Parents and guardians are held responsible for the violation of the law and the dealer's property is subject to confiscation if he sells to a minor knowing his infancy.

Priesthood

A paper read at the district priesthood meeting of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, by Elder E. K. Evans, president of the district, and by resolution the meeting asked for publication in SAINTS' HERALD and Glad Tidings.

The word priest, according to Webster's Collegiate Dictionary, is derived from the Latin word presbyter. The meanings given are: "1. One set apart or authorized to perform religious or sacred functions. 2. A person ordained to the ministerial, pastoral, or sacerdotal office; a presbyter."

The suffix hood means state, condition, quality, or character of being; as, for instance, knighthood means state of being a knight, falsehood means quality or condition of being false.

And so priesthood means the state or character of being a priest.

The same dictionary also says its secondary meaning is priests collectively. And so we refer to this gathering as a priesthood meeting; that is, those having the state or character of priests assembled, or collected together.

It may help us to understand priesthood by explaining the word priestcraft. This is also a compound word. The last half of it, craft, means strength, skill, art, cunning. It may refer to those engaged in any trade collectively. It may mean skillful in cunning and deception. But as a suffix to the word priest it refers to priestly policy—usually derogatory.

According to this, what we in meetings of this nature plan becomes our policy. It is our craft, or our priestcraft, whether it be good or ill. So often has the policy of priestly authority been deceptive that when the word priestcraft is used it is thought of in that way. For that reason we may very easily be misunderstood if we speak of our priestcraft, whereas all we might mean is our priestly policy without reference to whether it is good or bad.

The Encyclopedia Britannica says that the word priest is a contracted form of the word presbyter. It says that "in the English Bible the presbyters of the New Testament are called elders, not priests." It then tells of the development of the word, its Latin, Greek, and Hebrew equivalents, and explains that "they all denote a minister whose stated business was to perform, on behalf of the community, certain public ritual acts, particularly sacrifices, directed Godward. Such ministers or priests existed in all the great religions of ancient civilization. . . . Priestly acts—that is, acts done by one and accepted by the gods on behalf of many—are common to all antique religions . . . so that the priest ultimately becomes a mediator and the vehicle of all divine grace.

First Mention

The first mention of priesthood in the Bible is recorded in Genesis 6: 7, Inspired Translation. It is not immediately after the fall of our father Adam and mother Eve. It seems that some years passed before the gospel was preached. However, the offering of sacrifices had been established, but apparently not as part of the gospel. Satan had appeared unto Cain and had said he (Satan) was also a son of God. He made Cain the head of a great secret organization, and through it wickedness and murder were rampant upon earth.

In the midst of this the gospel was given to Adam. Many years must have elapsed between the fall of man and the establishing of the gospel, because there were multitudes of people upon the earth at the time. In fact, it was one hundred and thirty years after Seth was born. It is, therefore, safe to say that it was not less than one hundred and fifty years.

It is recorded that it was "declared by holy angels, sent forth from the presence of God; and by his own voice, and by the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Genesis 5: 44, 45.)

The first verse of chapter six says: "And Adam hearkened unto the voice of God, and called upon his sons to repent."

Seth was born to Adam "instead of Abel whom Cain slew, and God revealed himself unto Seth." (Verses 2 and 3.) Although it is not stated that there was any priesthood given to Adam, Abel, or Seth, the language does convey the thought that there was something special in connection with these men, and it must have been priesthood, for it says in chapter 6, verse 7, "Now this same priesthood which was in the beginning, shall be in the end of the world also." In this way the Inspired Version very abruptly introduces the idea of priesthood, and that in connection with the gospel as it was first preached, and delivers a prophecy that the same priesthood shall be in the end of the world.

If we are living in the time of the end, and if this is the gospel, then per se this priesthood which we hold is that priesthood.

It is interesting and highly instructive to read of Enoch, another man of God who held priesthood. The power manifested by him was marvelous.

When Abraham returned from the slaughter of the kings who had captured his nephew, the other kings came out to greet him. Among these kings was Melchisedec, king of Salem, the ancient name of Jerusalem, "he being a priest of the most high God," as is stated in Genesis 14: 17. Verses 27 and 28 say of Melchisedec: "And thus, having been approved of God, he was ordained an high priest after the order of the covenant which God made with Enoch, it being after the order of the Son of God."

Note that word covenant. We have something more to say about that later on.

Aspirants to Priesthood

In the days of Moses, as in our day, and no doubt as in every age when priesthood was upon earth, there were aspirants to the priesthood. Fortunately, perhaps, for such aspirants, the Lord has not always dealt with them as summarily as he did in the case of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. It is at least interesting to note, however, how similarly the aspirants of to-day and those of Moses' day acted. In addition to these three, there were "certain of the children of Israel," and they were not persons of small importance either. "There were two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown." And what did they do? Simply the usual thing. The Book says "they gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron," and what did they accuse them of? Again, the usual thing: "Ye take too much upon you." In writing this I am not making a thrust at any who saw fit to oppose the two men at the head of the church to-day—the present-day Moses and Aaron.

I am thinking of the fact that in perhaps half of the branches of the church there is a Korah, a Dathan, and an Abiram, with "certain of the children of Israel" and some who at least think they are "famous in the congregation," who rise up and say to the branch president and other officials, "Ye take too much upon you." And this to the great hindrance of the full exercise of that man's priesthood in behalf of the people. This may sound strange, but I wish to say that I have never yet known a man holding priesthood in the church to exercise more priestly authority than belonged to him; but I have known men holding priesthood who dragged in affairs that did not belong to the priesthood and tried to put them in operation by their priestly authority, thus prostituting their authority to their own injury and the injury of the people whom they should minister unto. Such misuse of priestly authority may be willful or it may be born of ignorance. In either case it will invite opposition, and there will be some who will rise up and truthfully say, "Ye take too much upon you." And their wish that they may "go down quick into the pit," as did the accusers of Moses and Aaron, will not be gratified.

This requires that all holding priesthood should study to show themselves approved. If you study you will know what you should do as a priest in either order. Then with resolution you should not be intimidated by any Korah, Dathan, or Abiram, and you will not dare to let selfishness and vainglory lead you to misuse your priestly authority.

In latter-day revelation I find the word priesthood in Doctrine and Covenants 83. There we are told that Moses had the holy priesthood, that he got it from Jethro. From Jethro it is traced back to Esaias who "received it under the hands of God." This Esaias blessed Abraham, but "Abraham received the priesthood from Melchisedec." It is here also said that Melchisedec received it through his fathers back to Noah, from Noah to Enoch, and on back to Abel, who "received the priesthood by the commandments of God, by the hand of his father Adam . . . which priesthood continueth in the church of God in all generations, and is without beginning of days or end of years." That is, this priesthood, or priestly authority, comes from Christ. It is, therefore, after the order of the Son of God, and is as eternal as he is. He had no beginning of days nor shall he have end of years. He did not get it from any earthly father or mother.

It should be noticed that this latter-day revelation says that Abel had priesthood, though the Inspired Translation says nothing of it till the days of Seth. There is in this, however, only an apparent or seeming contradiction—not a real one, for the Inspired Translation mentions the fact that sacrifices were offered. Sacrifices were never offered without priesthood.

Duties of High Priesthood

Doctrine and Covenants 83:3 says: "And this greater priesthood administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God."

How many of us think only of this great priesthood as giving authority to baptize, lay on hands, and preside over branches? Can we comprehend the fact that we hold "the key to the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God"? It may be that with little knowledge ourselves we can lay hands on for confirmation, that men may receive the Holy Ghost, which will give them the knowledge of God. But the man is in a sad plight who, having been given the priesthood, simply manifests these outward expressions of it, and fails by deep devotion, humble prayer, and constant study to open the door with the key he holds to these mysteries and this knowledge, that he may use it himself and give it to his fellow men.

To be able to "flay alive" or "mop the floor" with some one with whom he has been exultantly crossing theological swords is a very, very weak conception of the purposes of this priesthood. It may be right to win the argument and convince some one that baptism and laying on of hands are principles of the gospel, but when you have administered those ordinances, can you unlock the great storehouses of knowledge that these converts may grow in knowledge? If not, you are far below your position as a man holding priesthood?

Doctrine and Covenants 83:4 says that Moses held the higher priesthood and sought with it diligently to sanctify Israel, but they would not, so he took Moses and the holy priesthood away, and the lesser priesthood continued till John. With the restoration of the gospel by John and Jesus, there was returned to earth the higher priesthood to minister in the affairs of the kingdom of God upon earth.

What is said in the first four paragraphs of section 83 may be said to apply more directly to the president of the high priesthood, but our comments apply directly to all the orders and divisions in that priesthood down to the bishop and elders, which the fifth verse says "are necessary appendages belonging unto the higher priesthood."

The sixth verse should be read in its entirety. I quote it in part:

The sons of Moses and of Aaron shall be filled with the glory of the Lord upon Mount Zion in the Lord's house, whose sons ye are . . . for whoso is faithful unto the obtaining of these two priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying of their callings are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies; they become the sons of Moses and of Aaron, and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom and elect of God.

Notice that. You who receive the Melchisedec priesthood become the sons of Moses, but notice with it that all is contingent upon magnifying your calling. Then it says those who receive you (that would be in the proper exercise of your priestly authority) receive Christ, and thus they receive God and his kingdom. Christ adds: "This is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the priesthood. Therefore all those who receive the priesthood receive the oath and covenant of my Father, which he cannot break, neither can it be moved." This must mean that God on his part will never take it from you, and that you can lay it down only with terrible consequences to yourself, is apparent from the next thought in the same verse. Listen to it:

But whoso breaketh the covenant, after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come.

Breaking this covenant may mean deliberately giving up—renouncing—the priesthood we hold and refusing to act in our calling. The possibility that merely neglecting to act—failing to function—is also breaking the covenant, is serious enough to demand our earnest personal consideration.

We well know that there are two priesthoods in the church, but outside of the fact that a priest can baptize and a teacher or deacon cannot, that an elder can lay on hands and that the lesser priesthood cannot, what do we know? I am afraid we comprehend the work of each division of the priesthood too meagerly.

The Melchisedec priesthood holds the right of presidency, and has power and authority over all the offices in the church, in all ages of the world, to administer in spiritual things.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:3.

Resistance Is Weakness

There are lay members and members of the lesser priesthood who think it is a sign of strength to resist that authority, whereas, in fact, it is a sign of weakness—mental and spiritual. In saying this, however, I am not overlooking the other side of this condition. The seventh paragraph says: "The high priest and elder are to administer in spiritual things, agreeably to the covenants and commandments of the church." That is the point. Too often the presiding priesthood attempts to administer and tries to exercise power over all the offices in the church (I am now thinking of branch) contrary, or over and above, his rights according "to the covenants and commandments of the church."

This calls for resistance on the part of those affected, and the resistance is so often applied in a wrong way that confusion, contention, and consequently spiritual darkness ensue.

The only way to overcome this is for every man to learn his duty and stand in his own calling. How can we function "according to the covenants and commandments of the church" if we do not study the books of the church?

While there are only two priesthoods, there are different kinds of work in each of them. In the Aaronic priesthood there are the offices of deacon, teacher, and priest. In the Melchisedec priesthood there are elders and high priests. Among the high priests there are the orders of bishops and evangelists. Each of these orders and divisions has a head, or president—and each one requires an ordination.

A man must be ordained to any of the divisions of the Aaronic priesthood to occupy there. If he is selected to stand at the head of any of these divisions, he must again be ordained. The presiding bishop is the head of all the lesser priesthood, so that his ordination as presiding bishop is also his ordination as head of the lesser priesthood.

Ordinations to Various Offices

In the Melchisedec priesthood a man may be ordained an elder, and again be ordained the president of an elders' quorum, or he may be ordained a high priest or a seventy, and again be ordained president of the high priests or of a quorum of seventy. He may be ordained an evangelical minister, or a patriarch to preside over the evangelical ministers. He may be ordained a bishop or an apostle, and again to the presidency of the apostolic quorum. He may be ordained a counselor to the president of the church. Still higher than any of these, he may be ordained president of all the Melchisedec priesthood, which carries with it the presidency of the church. God, the head over all, reveals to the church who he would have for the president on earth. In other words, God nominates him. But the church ordains him. The church cannot make him a prophet, seer, and revelator, but it can accept him as such. God grants these gifts unto him as the church may need. God cooperates with the church, the church recognizes God's selection. He recognizes and blesses the church through that source.

And just so the church president nominates stake and district presidents. Stake and district presidents are elected by stakes and districts. The district president nominates the branch presidents and the branches elect them. The branch president nominates the heads of the departments, and the branch elects them. In this way there is a chain. It begins with God and continues down through the First Presidency, the district president, the branch president, the department heads. Any of these may not be as perfect as desirable, but nevertheless he is the one selected according to the best method, and God will do all he can with the channel through which he is to work.

Spiritual Manifestations

And now I want to call your attention to Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14:

Branches and districts are to be conducted according to the rules given in the law as directed in a former revelation. They shall take the things which have been given unto them as my law to the church to be my law to govern my church. And these affairs are not to be conducted by manifestations of the Spirit unless these directions and manifestations come through the regularly authorized officers of branch or district.

I wish all to note that. No branch or district is to be governed or directed by spirit manifestations except such as come through district or branch officers. I call special attention to the words governed and directed. This does not forbid spiritual gifts being manifested by others than branch or district presidents. It forbids only a certain kind of gifts being manifested by others—that is, gifts that govern or direct. Gifts that exhort to good works or faithfulness may come through any person, and so may gifts that foretell future events. God will not inspire a man or woman to break this commandment. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word there is no light in them."

I am aware that some who speak in gifts say they do not know what they are going to say till they hear themselves say it. I am not prepared to dispute this, but I am prepared to deny that what they do say is of God if they in the gift direct the branch or the district, for God says they should not do it.

And now notice the conclusion of this same paragraph:

If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they cannot expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction.

When officers are properly set in the branch or district by the people and by God, both the people and God should respect the selection. God says he will if the people will, but if the people will not they cannot expect him to bless and direct them through these officers. The people may complain that these officers do not have gifts, but they themselves may be the cause.

No member of either priesthood should encourage or even countenance the harsh criticisms that are often indulged in by factions in a branch. They have neither the authority to, nor privilege of, passing upon such matters as give direction.

I am not overlooking the fact that branch presidents and district presidents do go wrong, but I am opposed to either priest or lay member passing out judgment against him. There are church courts and church officials who can take care of all such matters much better and according to the law.

Missionary Work

While I leave the missionary work of the priesthood to our missionaries to deal with, there is just one thought along that line I wish to present. As we are here to consider a plan for more intensive missionary work, I call your attention to the last clause of Doctrine and Covenants 83: 19:

If any man among you be strong in the Spirit, let him take with him he that is weak, that he may be edified in all meekness, that he may become strong also. [And the 20th paragraph]: Therefore, take with you those who are ordained unto the lesser priesthood, and send them before you to make appointments, and to prepare the way, and to fill appointments that you yourselves are not able to fill. Behold, this is the way that mine apostles, in ancient days, built up my church unto me.

It seems to me that it would be a great help if two of our young priests who have no family responsibilities would volunteer to labor with, and go ahead of, our two missionaries, making appointments and preparing the way for them.

That we may all honor the priesthood that has been placed upon us by the laying on of hands, by a sincere, devoted, unselfish service in the greatest work ever undertaken on the face of the earth, is my prayer.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Education in America

In discussing the subject "Are our universities overpopulated" in Scribner's, Doctor Henry S. Pritchett, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, briefly reviews the situation in America and points out that we have no real universities. That which we have in America is undergraduate departments or colleges, and attached to them undergraduate schools. We have no universities whose sole purpose is postgraduate work and specialization and research. This condition was probably acquired in the early history of education in America as we could not afford to establish both colleges and sufficient universities. Johns Hopkins, nearly fifty years ago, started with a distinctive university program and laid the foundation for postgraduate or university work in America. But this college soon departed from its original concept and established a college itself, so that to-day, apart from the medical school, it has but few of the characteristics of a university.

Clark University was established by Doctor G. Stanley Hall as distinctively a university, but at Mr. Clark's instance a college was also organized though under independent administration. But when Doctor Hall retired some three years ago the college and university were united, and the present effort is to put it on the same basis as other American institutions, building up the undergraduate department, athletics, and the popular elements which appeal.

Columbia University, however, is somewhat of an exception as it has relatively a small undergraduate college and is principally engaged in graduate work and professional schools. This accounts in part for its poor showing in athletics heretofore.

The University of Chicago has also built up a strong graduate department and made it independent of the undergraduate school or college.

Doctor Pritchett was himself a professor for several years in Washington University in Saint Louis, though his interest at that time was greatly marked in university or research work rather than teaching. But he emphasizes very strongly to-day how absolutely necessary it is that the primary work of the college should be teaching. Doctor Pritchett later became the head of a technical school in the East in which he continued until he undertook his present work with the Carnegie Foundation.

He insists that from the present association both the college and university suffer. The college suffers from the fact that the most able men prefer the work in the university and set an ideal of research work which rather discredits the primary teaching of the college. On the other hand the college takes the center of interest with its athletic and popular features and so does not provide the best atmosphere for research work.

To-day in America in the mixed institutions the college as a rule predominates, and subtends a larger circle of activity than the graduate and professional schools in law, medicine, engineering, teaching, and in some instances theology, and to a graduate school of research. But the graduate schools, apart from the professional schools, have suffered since they are attended by a large body who are not primarily scholars or investigators but whose primary purpose is to secure the degree of doctor of philosophy because of the present fashion of American schools, desiring to have such a degree held by the members of their faculties. They become therefore degree hunters as a preliminary to securing positions as teachers.

The disadvantage is that the present arrangement too greatly lengthens the time required. The preparatory schools are made too much a matter of serving of years of time. Then, if to four years of undergraduate work there must be added the special work of the professional schools the student has reached too high an age before entering his profession. In Germany a youth finishes his gymnasium at twenty, and enters his university fully two years earlier, and as well if not better trained technically, so he comes into his profession younger in years and with a resiliency that is lost by too long a period in school.

As to the question of crowding our colleges, Doctor Pritchett thinks that mere numbers have been made too large an element, and hence the state schools and universities have established too low entrance requirements so that thousands are compelled to serve a full year without profit to society or themselves before elimination. The freshman year thus becomes a year of testing and eliminating the unfit instead of being a year of training. He takes direct issue with the theme that every young man and young woman should go to college but urges that we should rather frankly advise each one how best to fit himself or herself for service in life. The great army now pressing toward college does not represent a genuine thirst and passion for intellectual attainment and study.

Briefly, the remedy he suggests is fair and reasonable standards of admission intelligently administered to eliminate at the start.

Second, athletic activities should be minimized so that they no longer figure as the principal aspect but serve the real purpose of a means to an end.

Third, there should be a more intelligent effort to direct students unfit for college to some other vocation of usefulness and happiness.

Fourth, more adequate facilities in proportion to population may eventually have to be provided, and especially providing independent universities and professional schools.

The Story in Religious Education

Its Value for All

The value of the story in religious education is coming to be appreciated more and more. Children, young and old, enjoy a good story. In fact, an appropriate story appeals to practically everyone. The story is not so much fiction when properly used as it is a true presentation of moral principle and deserves a prominent place in all education.

The story cannot be omitted in the teaching of very small children. Tales of heroism appeal strongly to the beginning of adolescence. Proper biology always has its place in later years, but there is no age too young or too old for the right kind of a story. It is therefore of interest to note a new book, Bible Stories Retold for the Young, by Alexander R. Gordon, 159 pages, which retails for $1.25. This is the first volume of a series which is being prepared by him and consists of forty-two stories from the book of Genesis. The stories are retold in simple, attractive language, colored in part by the author's attitude. Good teaching points are brought out and emphasized in every story. The details of the stories follow closely the Bible but are not confined exclusively to the interpretation usually given to these Bible incidents. They are retold in a form to attract the attention of young children to the Book of books and are far more readable and attractive than are the usual Bible stories for children.

Dramatic Expression

The small child loves dramatic expression and reacts even to the Sunday school lesson or the ideas of a sermon. Still the dramatic instinct probably reaches its strongest expression in adolescence—in the age of the young people.

To meet this need, Mary M. Russell has written a small book which retails for $1 net, Dramatized Stories for Young People. She presents thirteen Bible stories in drama form. All of them are short, as the average is less than six pages, and the longest is only eleven small pages in length. It presents a short drama in a very easy style with the stories taken almost equally from the Old and New Testaments, though the book includes three seasonal dramas: "Easter morning," "A Thanksgiving service," and "The first Christmas."

The titles are not always those ordinarily used. For example, the story of Moses is dramatized as "A mother's faith"; the story of the good Samaritan as "A neighbor and his work."

Story-Telling

Then Margaret W. Egglestone has published a book of 181 pages, The Use of the Story in Religious Education, which she considers in rather a broad way, for she does not confine herself to the Bible stories but treats the Bible stories as only incidental along with other stories of a moral or religious tone. She presents her subject matter in a particularly attractive manner, such as to win the approval of Doctor W. S. Athearn for its simplicity of statement without sacrificing scientific accuracy.

It is a book for Sunday-school teachers, recreational leaders, scoutmasters, mothers, and others. It gives a list of books on story-telling methods, points out the essentials of a story and how best to tell a story. It includes myths and legends, Bible stories and fables, stories for young children, and adolescent stories.

The purpose of the story-telling is made above all else to create a desire to serve, but this is only one of the three reasons given for the story which is founded first of all on the actual happenings in the life of the child or story-teller and which is enlarged to include such fiction as fairy stories, allegories, fables, and myths. The book discusses the kind of story we shall tell and recognizes the Bible stories as among the greatest in all literature. It points out the attitude of the children to the story and therefore how to prepare and how to present. In a small space it presents valuable matter for those who are not already familiar with this theme.

East Saint Louis an Archaeological Reservoir

For some time Professor Warren K. Moorehead, of Philips Academy, has been engaged in research work on the mounds near East Saint Louis which he now declares are to be one of the great architectural reservoirs of America.

Those old in years well remember when there were many mounds to be found within the present city limits of the city of Saint Louis. That city, in fact, bore for a long time the nickname of "The Mound City," but these mounds have all long since been graded away and destroyed, and the site where they once stood has been given over to factories and houses and other buildings of to-day.

East Saint Louis has not developed in like measure, hence there still remains the great Cahokia Group scattered over an area of about three square miles.

On this the Daily Science Service Bulletin of Washington says:

"The University of Illinois and also a large number of prominent men throughout Illinois and the adjoining States, are very much alive to the importance of having an experienced archæologist like Professor Moorehead carefully explore and study these great mounds," Mr. Myer said. "There is now a bill before the Illinois legislature to appropriate sufficient money to purchase the site of this ancient city and to set it aside as a State park for the pleasure and education of our people forever. They feel that to allow these great mounds to be destroyed would be almost a crime against future generations.

"There are eighty mounds in this great Cahokia Group, scattered over an area of about two thousand acres, but the extreme limits of this old city are still unknown. The largest of these mounds, known as the Cahokia Mound, is by far the largest ever raised by prehistoric races within the boundaries of what is now the United States. This mound is about 998 feet long, 710 feet wide, and rises above the surrounding country to a height of over 90 feet.

"These vast earthworks probably at one time contained on their summits temples and chiefs' houses and other important structures.

"No accurate estimate can as yet be made as to the date when these mounds were erected or the number of people required to build them. Some of the smaller mounds in this group may possibly be burial mounds, as modern Indians have been known to raise mounds over the bodies of some of their powerful chiefs or over large numbers of their less important dead.

"Several years will be required to complete the exploration of these ruins. Although they have been known to white men for over two hundred years, there has been little intensive exploration of them until the University of Illinois expedition under Professor Moorehead began work in 1921. It is hoped that this expedition, which is now in the field, will unearth sufficient evidence to enable them to determine what ancient Indian tribe erected these great mounds and lived in this large city.

"The builders of these mounds were not a separate race, but were our ancient American Indians. These mounds have been called the Cahokia Group because the Cahokias, a small tribe of a few hundred Indians, were found living in the vicinity when the first white explorers came into the region. These Cahokia Indians did not live upon these mounds. They did not and could not have built the ancient city. The Cahokias stated they found these great ruins of a vanished tribe lying silent and deserted when they first came into the region. No one could tell them who built them, or when or why the vast population perished or departed."

Twelve-Hour Day Uneconomic and Wrong

Judge Gary is quoted as stating that a year ago the number of men working twelve hours a day had been reduced in eighteen months from 32 per cent to 14 per cent. He claims, however, that it is not possible to eliminate the long shift entirely and that part of the opposition is from the men themselves who wish to work longer hours. The previous year he had defended the twelve-hour day, claiming that from an economic viewpoint there is much to be said in its favor.

But the Associated Engineers, after a careful investigation of industry, state that there is little defense for the twelve-hour working day from an economic standpoint and less from a humanitarian standpoint. Their survey was of all industry—not simply of the steel industry. But it included a thorough investigation of steel mills working the three-shift system, showing that it is entirely practicable to make the change.

In addition, a bulletin from the labor office of the League of Nations, according to the Christian Century, shows that all the western world outside of America is making steel on the three-shift or eight-hour system.

The above should be a sufficient summary from the economic standpoint. From the social and humanitarian point of view, the interchurch report protested against the abuse through the twelve-hour day. It is the duty of the church to protect and defend the home. The twelve-hour day in industry gives neither the home nor the individual a chance.

It is indeed significant that despite the slurs cast at this report no answer has been made to interchurch committee findings in regard to the twelve-hour day, the seven-day week, the long shift, the spy system, the suppression of the freedom of speech at assemblies, and the evils that follow when there is no means of direct conference with the employees.

This matter is indeed one of interest to all churches, concerned as the church is with the religious, the moral, and family life of the race. It is a social duty of the church, while the associated engineers would seem to leave no technical or economic excuses for the long shift, according to reviews made in the Christian Century.

Doctor Harry E. Fosdick on Divinity of Jesus

Since reference has been made in the HERALD to Doctor Fosdick's sermon in the First Presbyterian Church of New York, it seems only fair to add that twenty-three ministers of the Presbytery of Philadelphia protested against the action of their Presbytery. They explained that his sermon was not a statement of his views but that he gave the extreme position on both sides and that the argument was that "we must still strive to keep them within the fellowship of Christ, loyal to him and devoted to his work until the fuller truth comes to light." He also had stated with regard to his belief:

"I believe in the deity of our Lord. I conceive that belief to be the very center of the gospel. He is the place where I find God and where God finds me, and when I think of the mystery of his person, no language seems so adequate as the opening words of the fourth gospel, 'In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.' You may be sure that if ever I should come to doubt our Lord's deity, which I could not do without uprooting my whole Christian experience and thought, I should at once leave the evangelical pulpit as under the circumstances I ought to do. . . . Jesus Christ to me is in himself the Divine Love taking on himself the sins of the world that he might save us."

He also spoke of the Bible in the following words:

"The Bible exercises over my thinking, and by God's grace, somewhat over my life, a paramount authority. . . . The Bible is to me the Book of God."

The number of deaths from automobile accidents continues to increase, a total of 14,000 for last year. This is an increase of 1,600 over the previous year and is an increase also relative to the population. This does not show necessarily an increase of careless driving because the number of automobiles has increased five fold since 1915 where the number of fatalities have a little more than doubled. Still the grave fact remains that accidents are increasing at the rate of 1,000 a year and that some forty people are killed every day and some of them in a way to involve criminal liabilities.

Text: "Habt Glauben an Gott."—Marci 11: 22.

Was Ist Deine Geistige Stellungnahme?

Ein sehr alter und weiser Prediger mit Namen Alma teilte einst seinen Zuhörern mit, dass, wenn sie nichts mehr haben als das "Verlangen zu Glauben," sie sich dieses Verlangen selbst ermutigen sollen bis sich der Glaube einstellt, und mit dem Glauben kommt Wissen. Hast du das "Verlangen zu Glauben"?

Ein sehr moderner Philosoph mit Namen Williams James schrieb ein Buch betitelt, "Der Wille zu Glauben." Er disputiert, dass es vollkommen logisch ist den "Willen zu Glauben" zu haben.

Glaube bietet alles. Zweifel bietet garnichts und im Gegenteil entzieht er dir das Wenige, was du besitzt. Er ist die schleichende Lähmung aller deiner Hoffnungen und Tatkraft.

Glaube Dynamik in Allen Menschlichen Einrichtungen Und Unternehmungen

Das Heim ist eine Einheit der Zivilisation, dennoch stützt sich das Heim und der Ehestand an Glauben. Wenn ein Mann einer Frau mit seinem Namen, seiner Ehre und den Seelen seiner Kinder Vertrauen schenkt, dann sollte er sicherlich Gott, welcher diese Frau machte, Vertrauen schenken.

Alle demokratischen Regierungen sind an Glauben fundiert. Jedes Geschäft und finanzielle System, jeder Kredit wurden an Glauben gebildet. Wenn du Vertrauen zu den Versprechungen eines Mannes auf einem Stück Papier hast, weshalb nicht auf Gott vertrauen, dessen Versprechungen in aller Ewigkeit sicher sind?

Menschen pflanzen bei Glauben in der Hoffnung einst ernten zu können. Menschen bauen bei Glauben in der Hoffnung einst besetzen zu können. Menschen forschen bei Glauben in der Hoffnung einst entdecken zu können.

Ein Allgemeiner Menschlicher Instinkt

Jedes Volk besitzt irgend eine Form von Religion. Das religiöse Gefühl ist und war immer allgemein. Jedes Götzenbild, wenn auch roh, spricht ein Ideal aus. Es gibt Zeugnis für die unendliche Suche nach Gott. Glaube ist natürlich. Atheismus ist eine erkünstelte Kultur.

Glaube An Gott Ist Die Basis Aller Wissenschaft

Jede Wissenschaft stützt sich erstens an Glauben an einer Stetigkeit der Gesetze; zweitens, an Glauben an die Allgemeinheit der Gesetze. Es ist unmöglich weiter als niedergeschriebene Geschichte zurückzugehen, jedoch glauben wir, dass das Gesetz immer in Kraft stand und immer sein wird. Lodge hat eine herrliche Vorlesung betitelt "Die Stetigkeit." Von diesem Grundstoffe bildete er seinen Glauben an die Unsterblichkeit der menschlichen Seele.

Wir sind zu dieser Erde gekettet, welche im Vergleich mit einigen himmlischen Körpern so klein ist. Wenn ein Mann nach dem am weitesten sichtbaren Stern mit der Geschwindigkeit des schnellsten Eilzuges reisen könnte, würde er alt und tot sein, bevor der Zug eben nur die Halle verlässt und seine Beine würden zu Staube werden, bevor der Schaffner um das Reisebillet käme. Jetzt nehmen wir an, dass das Gesetz die höchste Macht in diesem Sterne ist und, dass in allen anderen Sternen weiter entfernt als dieser das Gesetz die höchste Macht ist. Wir glauben daher, dass das Gesetz allgemein ist.

Bei Glauben prüft Astronomie die Sterne. Bei Glauben liest Geologie die vorgeschichtliche Vergangenheit der Erde. Bei Glauben mischt Chemie ihre Zusammensetzungen.

Wissenschaft errichtete ihr Gebäude mit Glauben an die Stetigkeit und Allgemeinheit der Gesetze. Religion errichtete ihren Tempel mit Glauben an den grossen Gesetzgeber, an einen selbst-bestehenden, allgemeinen und unwechselbaren Gott. "Denn ich bin der Herr, der nicht lüget."—Maleachi 3: 6.

Testamente Von Gelehrten

Man hatte die Ansicht, dass die Wissenschaft im Gegensatz zur Religion stand. Dies ist unwahr. Zwischen der wahren Wissenschaft und der wahren Religion besteht kein Gegensatz.

Sir Oliver Lodge sagte, "Religion hat ihre Wurzeln tief in der Wirklichkeit der Dinge."

Lord Kelvin sagte, "Wissenschaft bestätigt ausdrücklich schaffende Kraft."

Professor Larkin, vom Lowe Observatorium sagte, dass der kein lebender Gelehrte ist, der nicht der Tatsache von dem Dasein eines herrschenden Geistes im Weltall gewahr ist.

Glaube Führt Sein Eigenes Empfehlungsschreiben

Zweifel ist negativ und zerstörend. Glaube ist possetiv und aufbauend. Weshalb nicht den Bildenden beitreten? Vereinige dich mit denjenigen, die glauben, bestätigen und bilden. Christentum ist erzeugend.

Atheismus führt zum Chaos. Emma Goldman's Glaube begann, "Ich glaube an keinen Gott." Logischerweise folgte folgendes: "Ich glaube an keinen Gott. Ich glaube an keine Regierung. Ich glaube an keine Ehe. Ich glaube an keinen Eigentumsbesitz."

Die Gesunde Grundlage Des Glaubens

Leichtgläubigkeit hat ihre Wurzeln in der Unwissenheit. Jeder Töricht kann leichtgläubig sein.

Glaube hat seine Wurzeln in der Beobachtung und Offenbarung. Er benötigt den scharfsinnigsten Verstand, die grössten Herzen und das reinste Leben. Glaube studiert das Sichtbare und vom Sichtbaren zieht er seine Entschlüsse zum Unsichtbarem. (Roman 1: 20.) Mit seinen Füssen auf dem Sichtbaren gestützt reicht der Glaube in das Unsichtbare und entdeckt die Wahrheit.

Das Weltall bestätigt das Vorhandensein eines Schöpfers. Ein Studium auf der Welt leitet uns zu dem Glauben an sein Vorhandensein. Offenbarung zeigt seine moralische Natur und seinen Willen den Menschen betreffend. Beide, Studium und Offenbarung sind notwendig.

Glaube Durch Die Offenbarungen Gottes Gelehrt

Jesus, welchem die ganze christliche Welt huldigt, gab uns das erste Postulat seines Glaubens. "Habt Glauben an Gott."—Marci 11: 22.

Der ganze Körper der niedergeschriebenen Offenbarungen Gottes appelliert an Glauben, weil er des Mannes geistiges Bedürfnis nährt. Er bringt Hoffnung wenn anderweit keine Hoffnung vorhanden ist.

Schliesslich, jedoch, ist der grosse Charakter de Jesu Christi die grösste Offenbarung. Er ist das "Wort (Offenbarung) das zum Fleische wurde." (Johannis 1: 12.) Die Schönheit, das Wunder und die Wichtigkeit dieser Offenbarung wächst, jenachdem deine geistige Betrachtung ist. Die

Macht und Stärke der Natur offenbaren dir einen Gott, gekennzeichnet durch seine Macht und Oberherrschaft. Aber Jesus brachte die Offenbarung eines persönlichen Gottes der Liebe und Barmherzigkeit, "voll von Gnade und Wahrheit."

Der Kampf Zwischen Glaube Und Zweifel

Es besteht ein unendlicher Kampf zwischen Glaube und Zweifel. Kein denkender Mensch kann es verhindern daran Teil zu nehmen. "Da gibt es kein Entlassen aus diesem Kampfe."

Du kannst diesem Kampfe nicht entfliehen, aber du hast deine Wahl. Du magst an der Seite des Glaubens gegen den Zweifel kämpfen, oder du magst an der Seite des Zweifels gegen den Glauben kämpfen. Du magst mit Zweifel in dem Schatten und in der Finsternis stehen und gegen die Erleuchtung Gottes kämpfen, welche von Zeit zu Zeit in dein Herz einzieht, oder du magst in dem Lichte des Glaubens stehen und gegen den Zweifel und die Hoffnungslosigkeit kämpfen, welche dich angreift. Weshalb nicht unter Emanuels Fahne kämpfen?

Der Nachfolger Jesu Christi hat nichts zu verlieren sondern alles zu gewinnen. Der Atheis hat nichts zu gewinnen sondern alles zu verlieren.

Die Kirche ruft dich an Glauben zu haben und einem persönlichen Gott zu dienen, einem allweltlichen, allmächtigen und allwissenden Gott, welcher gestern, heute und ewiglich derselbe ist. Er ist willig die Menschen zu segnen, zu heilen und seinen Willen den Menschen auch heute, gerade als in der Vergangenheit zu offenbaren, wenn sie Glauben haben. In ihm ist kein Wankelmut noch der Schatten einer Wechslung sichtbar. In Zeiten der Not ist er ein immer williger Helfer.

Akzeptiere daher den ersten Grundstein des Evangeliums Jesu Christi und habe Glauben an Gott.

Faith

Text.—"Have faith in God."—Mark 11: 22.

What Is Your Mental Attitude?

A very ancient and wise preacher named Alma told his hearers that if they could do no more than "desire to believe," they should encourage that desire until faith came, and after faith, knowledge. Do you "desire to believe"?

A very modern philosopher named William James has a book entitled, The Will to Believe. He argues that it is perfectly logical to have the will to believe.

Faith offers all. Doubt offers nothing, and will take away that which you have. It is the creeping paralysis of all hope and all initiative.

Faith Dynamic in All Human Institutions and Activities

The home is the unit of civilization, yet marriage and the home are based on faith. If a man can trust a woman with his name, his honor, and the souls of his children, he ought to trust the God who made the woman.

All democratic governments are based on faith. All business and financial systems and credits are based on faith. If you trust the promise of men on a slip of paper, why not trust God, whose promises stand sure forever?

By faith men plant, believing that they will reap. By faith men build, believing that they will occupy. By faith men explore, hoping to discover.

A Universal Human Instinct

All races have some form of religion. The religious sentiment is universal, and has always been so. Every idol, however crude, expresses an ideal. It testifies to the never-ending search for God. Faith is natural. Atheism is an artificial culture.

Faith in Law the Basis of All Science

All sciences are based, first on faith in continuity of law; second, on faith in universality of law. We cannot go back beyond recorded history, yet we believe that law has always been in force and will always continue. Lodge has a splendid lecture entitled, "Continuity." On that principle he bases his belief in the immortality of the human soul.

We are chained to this old earth, which is small compared to some of the heavenly bodies. If a man could journey toward the most distant visible star with the speed of the fastest express train, he would be old and dead long before he got out of the switch yard; and his bones would be turned to dust before the conductor came to take up his ticket. Yet we assume that law reigns suprême in that distant star and in other stars beyond it, as far as it is from this earth. We believe, in other words, that law is universal.

By faith astronomy weighs the stars. By faith geology reads earth's prehistoric records. By faith chemistry mixes her compounds.

Science rears her edifice on faith in continuous and universal law. Religion rears her temple on faith in the great Lawgiver, a self-existent, universal, never-changing God. "I am the Lord, I change not."—Malachi 3: 6.

The Testimony of Scientists

It has been assumed that science is in conflict with religion. This is not true. There is no conflict between true science and true religion.

Sir Oliver Lodge says, "Religion has its roots deep in the reality of things."

Lord Kelvin says, "Science positively affirms creative power."

Professor Larkin, of Lowe Observatory, says that there is not a great scientist living who is not aware of the existence of a dominant mind in the universe.

Faith Carries Her Own Credentials

Doubt is negative and destructive. Faith is constructive and affirmative. Why not join the builders? Ally yourself with those who believe and affirm and create. Christianity is creative.

Atheism leads only to chaos. Emma Goldman's creed began, "I believe in no God." It ran on very logically: "I believe in no God. I believe in no government. I believe in no marriage. I believe in no property."

The Sound Basis of Faith

Credulity has its root in ignorance. Any half-wit can be credulous.

Faith has its root in observation and revelation. It calls for the keenest minds, the biggest hearts, and the cleanest lives. Faith studies the known, and reasons from the known to the unknown. (Romans 1: 20.) With its feet upon the known and the real it reaches into the unknown and discovers truth.

The universe argues the existence of a creator. A study of the universe leads to a belief in his existence. Revelation shows his moral nature and his will concerning man. Both study and revelation are necessary.

Faith Taught by the Revelations of God

Jesus, to whom the whole Christian world renders homage, gave as the first postulate of his creed, "Have faith in God." (Mark 11: 22.)

The whole body of the written revelations of God's word appeals to faith because it meets man's spiritual need. It brings him hope when otherwise there would be no hope.

Finally, however, there is the great character of Jesus Christ which is the supreme revelation. He is the "word

[the revelation] that became flesh." (John 1: 12.) The beauty, the wonder, and the importance of that revelation will grow upon you as you contemplate it. The forces and powers of nature reveal to you a God of power and of dominion. But Jesus came revealing to you a personal God of love and of mercy, "full of grace and truth."

The War Between Faith and Doubt

There is a never-ending war between faith and doubt. No thinking man can avoid taking part in it at some time. "There is no discharge in that war."

You cannot escape that war, but you may have your choice. You may fight against doubt and on the side of faith, or you may fight against faith and on the side of doubt. You may stand in the shadow and in the darkness with doubt, and fight against the appeal of God that comes into your heart from time to time. Or you may stand in the light with faith and fight against the powers of doubt and despair that assail you. Why not fight under Immanuel's flag?

The follower of Jesus Christ has everything to gain and nothing to lose. The atheist has all to lose and nothing to gain.

This church calls you to have faith, and to serve a personal God, a universal, all powerful, all wise God, who is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. He is willing to bless man, to heal man, and to reveal his will to man to-day just as he did in all past ages when man had faith. In him there is no variableness, neither shadow of changing. He is an ever present help in every time of need.

Accept, then, the first great fundamental principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and have faith in God.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Kansas University Young People

They are well organized and keep alive their church interest.

It may be of interest to some of the readers of the HERALD to know of the activities of the group of church students of the University of Kansas during the past year. Arrangements were made to use a room of the University Y. M. C. A. building for a nominal charge, on Sunday mornings, and at other times when desired. Sacrament service was held each month, and Sunday morning meetings were held at other times except when holidays or vacations interfered. Speakers for these meetings were secured from Independence and from the university faculty. During the past year Walter W. Smith, Frederick A. Smith, Arthur B. Phillips, F. Henry Edwards, Elbert A. Smith, and Floyd M. McDowell came over from Independence to speak to our group, and Professor Blackmar of the Department of Sociology and Professor H. H. Lane of the Department of Zoology, both men from the university, talked to the group. In addition, we attempted to provide for our instruction in church matters by having different students in the group take charge of other meetings. On May 13 we were very happy to have Brother Floyd M. McDowell serve us with the sacrament and talk to us at an afternoon meeting in addition to the regular morning service. Two car loads of people motored from Independence to spend the day with us, which increased the pleasure of the meetings to us.

The group of church students consists of Reginald Smith, Ronald Smith, Fred Smith, Wayne Smith, Edward Thompson, Alvin Luff, Wayne Luff, August Kramer, Lester Etzenhouser, and R. O. Flanders, all from Independence; Morgan Ryan, Pittsburg, Kansas; Jesse Roth, Aileen Danielson, and Muriel Danielson, from Lamoni, Iowa; Charles Grabske and family, and the family of W. H. MacLaren, from Lawrence. Naomi MacLaren and Ian MacLaren are enrolled in the university. There are twenty-one in the group. We have tried to reach all the church members who are in the university or in Lawrence.

The group has an active chapter of Lambda Delta Sigma, the church university society, which was organized here in the spring of 1922. There are at present twelve members in the society. Officers for the coming year are, Ronald Smith, president; Reginald Smith, vice president; Wayne Smith, secretary-treasurer.

Of our group of students, there will be four who graduate June 4. They are; Alvin Luff, mechanical engineering; Jesse Roth, physics; Fred Smith, sophomore in the medical school who receives an A. B. degree in the college of liberal arts; and R. O. Flanders, petroleum geology.

The group has tried to keep in touch with church affairs in addition to the university work, and though great improvements will be made, they have started to keep alive church activities and ideals while away at school. In view of this effort the organization is making, and since speakers from Independence are always glad to come out to Lawrence, the University of Kansas with its high scholastic standing should attract church students. In addition to the influence of the group activities in church affairs, the home of Mrs. W. H. MacLaren has been open to us for social affairs, and her interest in the church young people has been very helpful.

Another View on the Palestine Situation

[Elder H. Arthur Koehler, who labored in Palestine several years ago, before the Great War, and thus became acquainted with conditions, has sent for publication in the HERALD a resume of the opinion held by Mr. Walter Littlefield, a prominent Canadian, on the British mandate for Palestine and on some causes of existing conditions.—EDITORS.]

Ever since the Crusaders warred on the Turks and Arabs during the tenth and eleventh centuries, there has been a well-organized plan to retain some of the holy places in Palestine captured by the Christian warriors, and either by fair or foul means to obtain the rest that they failed to hold. Colony after colony, church after church, nation after nation, have strained every nerve to wrench from the controlling interests the places made sacred by holy men, and hold them exclusively for Christian interests, and that too in defiance of prophecy that alludes very particularly to the ones to whom the land was promised.

Against the Jews

The most ardent of all these classes is the Roman Catholic Church backed up by organizations where men have vowed to shoulder any responsibility of either retaining or accumulating more of the so-called "holy places." Their onslaught on the Jew in European countries is well known, and evidence of their hatred of the Jew in Palestine is apparent to those who reside there. A Jew cannot enter even to visit a Catholic church or convent. He is railed at, mocked, and cursed at every turn of events. The enmity that exists against the Jew by this organization is no less than what is evidenced on every hand against the Greek Orthodox Church. Previous to the war, Turkish troops were quartered at the Church of the Holy Sepulcher to keep the factions from each other's throats. I saw several tilts between them while visiting the place, and also in the Church of the Nativity at Bethlehem. Their fanatical enthusiasm to acquire the holy places is carrying them as far into rash acts as it did during the Crusader period. This spirit is clearly portrayed in "The crusader song" by Ciro Pinsuti:

On steep Mount Carmel's height we stand,
And gaze far o'er the Holy Land;
Our mail-clad warriors throng beneath,
'Gainst Moslem foe fore-arm'd to death;
Jerusalem! Jerusalem!
We lift our eyes to where thy sacred towers arise;
While brazen trumpets martial sound,
Proclaims the vow that swells around.
"Save the Holy Sepulcher! Amen!
"Save! Save! The Holy Sepulcher!
"Save! Save! The Holy Sepulcher!

Tho' bleaching bones bestrew the shore,
Where Christian men have marched before;
We'll smite in death the heathen brood,
And plant the cross in Moslem blood!
Jerusalem! Jerusalem! thou city blest!
Thy temple is our place of rest!
And as we scale, the heav'ns shall echo to our cry,
"Save the Holy Sepulcher," etc.

During the last two years, the objections made by the Vatican against privileges accorded Jewish immigrants have suddenly become of serious international concern and debate. Considering the source of the objections raised to the British Government, and the vehemence and persistency of its expression, certain phases of its development are interesting to our people at this time.

During the consideration of the Versailles Treaty, the Vatican particularly opposed Articles 4 to 6 and 14, providing respectively for the facilitating of Jewish immigration by the Palestinian Administration, for the recognition of the Zionist organization as the Jewish agency, and the establishing of a special commission for the regulation of claims relating to different religions of the Holy Land.

On June 21 the British House of Lords, by a vote of 60 to 29, practically indorsed the papal objections in spite of the eloquent contradiction made by Earl Balfour as acting foreign minister. In the House of Commons, S. Joynson-Hicks raised the question in a similar manner by a resolution for the postponement of acceptance of the mandate by the League of Nations until modifications be made in it. Secret influences no doubt were at work, and vast insidious propaganda was flying at the heels of court officials of all the nations affected by the treaty.

The first papal utterance was an allocution addressed to the Consistory of March 10, 1919, while the terms were being arranged in the Paris peace conference. In consideration of the Armenian and Syrian national question, he declared: "It would be for us and for all Christians a bitter grief if unbelievers in Palestine were put in a superior or more privileged position, still more so if the august monuments of the Christian religion were assigned to those who were not Christians." This was significant enough, but there followed this statement one which shows undeniably a reason for such a prediction. "We know, furthermore, that non-Catholic foreigners endowed with ample means are taking advantage of the unspeakable misery and ruin produced by the war to disseminate their own doctrines. It is unbearable that so many souls, losing the Catholic faith, should go to perdition in the very place where our Lord Jesus Christ won for them eternal salvation."

Protests British Mandate

A year later France resumed diplomatic relations with the Vatican; and Italy, during the Nitti administration, formed a Modus Vivendi with it, which permitted a Vatican envoy the courtesies of an Italian warship on his tour of observation in the Levant. It is not astonishing therefore that both France and Italy should have registered disapproval of the mandate when it came up for ratification in the council of the League of Nations at Genoa. Meantime, Pius XI had succeeded Benedict as Pope. He remonstrated against the mandate to both the League of Nations and the conference at Genoa. The text of the latter remonstrance has so far not become known. The former was published in the New York Times of June 17, according to a version made public in the Morning Post in London.

According to Walter Littlefield, a writer of note in Canada, "It is perfectly obvious that the Earl of Balfour had in mind the Pope's objections when on May 17 he made an exposition before the council at Genoa of the functions of the league. Lord Balfour defended his country from the aspersions cast on it as mandatory. He felt surprised that anyone should question the good faith of the British Empire in the light of its centuries of experience with various subject races, creeds, and culture in executing the Palestine mandate in justice to all concerned." He added, "We are a Protestant country, but I boldly say that I do not believe that in any country—Protestant or Catholic—has the Catholic religion received fairer or more generous treatment than it has within the British Isles. Now, is it credible that when you have, by the fortune of war, taken away from the Mohammedan country and put under a Christian mandatory places which have sacred associations for large bodies of Christian believers, is it credible (I ask) that these should suffer by the transfer? And remember whatever is done in Palestine, now, or in the future, is done in the light of day."

Against Zionism

At this time this same force manifested itself in the activities in Lebanon and Syria by the Vatican representatives, who with the Mohammedans vowed to keep out the Jew even at the expense of the massacring of the Jewish populace who were then residents of the land. This resulted in many being assassinated, until finally the British Government took stern reprisals to stop the flow of blood. One of the Vatican representative agents in Palestine is Monseigneur Barlassia, patriarch of Jerusalem. In an address delivered in the Holy City, he attacked Zionism by declaring that "the interests of the Catholic Church were identical with the Arab population. In regard to the delegation of Arabs in London sent to protest against the mandate, he affirmed that all the native population was with it, and added, "The very stones are crying for vengeance. The Catholic world must fight against the profanation of the Holy Land by the Zionists." I wonder what they mean by "the profanation of the Holy Land by the Zionists." Certainly they are forgetting the record of the Catholic Crusaders in that land against the very people they are allied with at the present time to prevent the Jew from acquiring land. Have they become so imbued with their determinations as not to recognize the "profanation" of the "holy places" by their own representatives who fight pitched battles with the Greek orthodox priests over the Cradle of Nativity and the tomb of our Savior? Are they less aware of the profanity administered by their priests in each holy sanctuary by wearing crowns bedecked with diamonds and other precious stones and robes of fancy gold braid, costing thousands of dollars, while thousands reek in filth and poverty who at the very threshold of the holy sanctuaries are crying for bread? Can they rail at the "profanations" of the Jews, who merely are acquiring property promised to them by our God through legitimate means, when they are taking every possible means to exterminate the Jews by illegitimate means?

Mr. Littlefield declares that "beneath the surface of the Vatican's remonstrances there repose certain historical facts which it is well to recall, particularly as history now seems to be repeating itself. One of the principal causes of the Crimean War of 1854-56, was the dispute between the Roman Catholic Church and the Greek Orthodox Church of Russia as to which should guard and control the sacred Christian places in the Holy Land. The Turk, who as usual tried to play off one side against the other, finally yielded to Russia until called to account by France, then officially a Catholic nation. Turkey, then backed up by France, England, and Sardinia defied Russia, and the Crimean War ensued. By the Treaty of Paris, March, 1856, the integrity of the Ottoman Empire threatened by Russia was recognized by the powers and France was re-established as the guardian of Catholics in the Levant. In regard to the Holy Places, a compromise was effected."

Neither then nor now do either Jews or Arabs care how these religious disputes are settled. This is not on either side through any lack of respect for the symbols of Christian faith, but because both desire a settled regime which shall give the country its greatest chance to prosper. Why, then, does not the Vatican accept as a rational solution the British Mandate over Palestine which guarantees exactly what the Catholic Church so earnestly craves, save that a political and not an ecclesiastical state is to have charge?

The British Palestine Committee Explains

In explaining the situation, the British Palestine Committee in a statement issued on May 27, would show that the old rivalry between the Latin and the Greek Church still influences the policy of the Vatican. The statement reads in part:

"One regrets to have to speak quite plainly about the policy of the Vatican or of some of its representatives toward Zionism. When the fullest allowance has been made for the religious and even the sentimental motives of Roman Catholic policy, one cannot explain what has happened except with the aid of two other motives which has nothing whatever to do with religion and to which purely political standards of criticisms may properly be applied. And in justice to all concerned it is well that these motives should be explained.

"The first of these motives seems to be the desire on the part of the Catholic Church to steal a march on its old rival, the Greek Church. When their old controversies were at their height, the Greek Church had the backing of Russia. But the present Russian Government takes no interest in these matters, and therefore now is adjudged to be a most favorable opportunity to dispose once and for all of the Greek claims. This may or may not be sound ecclesiastical statecraft, but it has nothing whatever to do with religion, and one can sympathize with it or not, exactly as one pleases. Zionists do not sympathize with it, because they want an agreement between the two churches and not the defeat of one.

"But little harm would have been done by these ambitions if they had not adopted means to satisfy them which fall outside the proper activities of a church. The Vatican would be justified in protesting against any disabilities to which the Catholic faith is subjected in Palestine, but when it brings ridiculous charges without a title of evidence to support them against a mandatory power, which in modern times has done so much for religious liberty, it is obviously under the influence of some emotion or prejudice which destroys its sense of evidence. The motive may be simply as suggested, a desire to dispose finally of Greek claims, or, as we suggested last week, it may come from a rooted objection to the British mandate in Palestine because England is a Protestant country. But whatever the explanation may be, fair-minded people will be on their guard against the great injury that is threatened.

"The British Government, which is primarily attacked, will no doubt know how to deal with these strange alliances between Arabs and Catholics, and the only effect of charges so reckless and combinations so unnatural will be to strengthen its determination to carry out its policy. The British public is still imperfectly educated on the issues in Palestine, but if anything could turn its post-war indifference to foreign affairs into active keenness for the ideals of the British Government in Palestine, it is the spectacle of this unnatural alliance between Catholics and Moslems against the Government of this country.

"The British are of all the most tolerant where religious convictions are concerned. But there is one condition of this tolerance, namely, that the church should not place itself in opposition to the secular power, or ally itself with those who preach what in the present state of Palestine is hardly distinguishable from civil rebellion. Of the proper activities of the church in Palestine, Zionists are respectful, but if the church oversteps its lawful limits, it will find that the principle of præmunire is quite as strong in Palestine as it was in England."

The fact that France and Italy have so far withheld their approval of the mandate may be taken as fear lest, should the administration of the mandate prove successful, their own interests in the Levant may be jeopardized. The United States has approved of the mandate, but the opposition to it in the British Parliament, already voiced in the House of the Lords, reveals that its present terms are seriously questioned by British legislators. Meanwhile the Vatican in Palestine is accused of "stirring up the Devil's caldron of religious fanaticism," while it claims to be merely carrying out its ancient policy in regard to the Holy Land, the Christians there, and the sacred places.

It is well to note that such places as the Mount of Olives, Mount Moriah, Mount Zion, and other places are being encroached upon by the Catholics who are using the Arabs to assist them in preventing the Jews from acquiring a firmer hold upon Palestine. We should feel doubly glad that either a Catholic nation or Greek Orthodox one does not have the mandate over that land. Not only for the protection of Israel, but that the "non-Catholic" shall be protected in "disseminating their own doctrines" and be saved from the eternal Holy War that would be waged by them if such were the case.

News from Holland

Extract from letter written to President F. M. Smith.

I believe we can truthfully say that our labors to this day have been blessed. Seventeen have been baptized thus far and others are near. We are still holding meetings at Brother and Sister Gravens'. They have a large room, holding about fifty but if we could afford to rent a hall I believe we could get more people out. A few days ago we went to listen to a preacher who was lecturing against Mormonism. He accused Joseph Smith of being the author of polygamy. The Utah elders were also present, and they got the floor after the man was through, but of course they did not try to clear the fair name of the Prophet Joseph. When we obtained the floor we told the audience who the author really was of that infamous document, after which the lecturer arose and took back all his accusations against the Prophet Joseph about polygamy and put the blame on Brigham Young where it really belonged, he said. The Utah people and their elders surely did receive a severe rebuke. They left the house in shame, some of them leaving before the meeting was over. We visited this preacher afterwards at his home and were received kindly. We hope these incidents will bring good results for the cause.

Last Monday evening we had the honor of meeting the president of the Holland and Belgium mission of the Mormon Church and his counselors in discussion at the home of one of their members at Rotterdam. At the close the lady of the house arose and said the Spirit of the Lord testified to her that we were speaking the truth and that the Utah elders were deceivers. She said, "Why did you not tell me about your abominations in the beginning? Then I would never have joined your church." The mission president and his men hung their heads in shame. Surely truth is mighty. There is much work to do if we only had more missionaries in this field.

Now, Brother Smith, I will close. May the Lord bless you in your labors, for that which you so strongly stand for is surely needed. The poor and the oppressed of the world are longing for that ideal condition, a message or gospel that does not come in word only.

Hoping you will remember us in your prayers and also to the Saints and that this may find you in good health, we subscribe ourselves,

Your brothers in Christ,

Institute and Sanitarium Hold Commencement

Commencement for the graduating classes of the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Independence Sanitarium was held at the Stone Church, May 29, 1923, at eight o'clock.

President Frederick M. Smith delivered the commencement address and awarded the diplomas. The exercises were simple and beautiful, consisting of invocation by President Elbert A. Smith, vocal solo by L. Eugene Christy, commencement address by President Frederick M. Smith, piano solo by Laura Kelley Greene, assisted on second piano by Pauline Becker Etzenhouser, followed by presentation of classes and awarding of diplomas. The doxology was sung and benediction pronounced by Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire.

Daniel Macgregor in the Northwest

Things are going gloriously here in Clarks Fork, a little town in the northern regions of Idaho surrounded by towering mountains capped with wintry snows. Majestic rivers rolling hard by in torrential tides add beauty and sublimity to the scene, while a noble populace far from the maddening scenes of earth's ignoble strife, quaint and questioning in their manner, present a real study in originality and independence.

Some months ago when it was announced that my mission would take in Washington, British Columbia, and Northern Idaho, our good sister, the "schoolmarm" Mrs. Alice McGeorge, wrote me inviting me to her town.

Baptizes Eighteen

After lamentable delays, occasioned by the illness of mother whose spirit, as teachable as a child, and as invincible as the granite of her ancestral home, finally, painlessly passed to her long home. It was in January I landed at Centralia, Washington, where after several weeks of labor we were rewarded with the pleasure of baptizing eighteen, a number being heads of families. We found there a congenial band of Saints which counts it no sacrifice to serve the interests of humanity. In particular would I mention the Department of Women which every week prepares public dinners for two of the city clubs, netting a handsome profit of nearly fifty dollars per week. The proceeds go towards church work.

This branch is presided over by Orval Oppelt, a young man to whom, with others, we are indebted for splendid and untiring assistance in the late campaign.

Elder Norris Headding who did splendid work in Utah as a missionary several years ago, resides in this branch, and from all appearances bids fair to become a celebrity in the inventive world, judging by the remarkable contrivances he has brought to light. He will have a thing of interest to offer our stereopticon "bugs" in the not distant future.

Goes to Clarks Fork

My stay in this branch was shortened owing to a pressing call from Clarks Fork. Sister McGeorge was closing her term, and going to Oklahoma, hence the urgency of getting into the town before her departure.

Upon arrival I found our meetings well advertised through tracts and cards previously sent out, and everything set to open up in the Methodist Church.

Our first night brought out an audience half filling the structure. This to the citizens was phenomenal, as the Methodists could get no crowd although they had no competition from other bodies, theirs being the only congregation in the place. On the second evening the church was full and it has remained thus ever since, some evenings overflowing. People who never attended church before are coming out and it is the one topic of conversation. On the street, and in the stores you will find them arguing religion. During my meeting hours the pool hall and the movie close up. Indeed I can safely say I was never tendered such courtesy before.

Sister McGeorge was the only Saint in town, but her clean, consistent life, reinforced by the spirit of help has endeared her to all, hence the ease with which we "got next" to the townspeople.

We have been here but nineteen days, occupying in the church when not used by the Methodists. Up to date fifteen have been baptized, all adults and representing ten families. Many are on the brink of decision with whom we are continuing our efforts.

Master Binder Makes Memorial Book

A memorial book for the American soldiers buried on French soil, recently presented by the people of California to the French Government, was made by J. B. Tordoff, member of the Oakland Branch of the church. "The leaves of the book are of heavy parchment with a dark blue leather binding upon which is inlaid in gold and colored leather a design of California poppies and fleur-de-lis. The book has been made by J. B. Tordoff, of Berkeley, a master binder," according to the Berkeley Gazette.

Work Progresses in Florida

Elder N. C. Enge, of Jacksonville, Florida, writes that he has been busy discharging his duty as he sees it. He has been permitted to attend the sessions of the ministerial alliance and reports some very interesting experiences in connection with their meetings. Mrs. Lulu Loveland Sheppard recently visited Jacksonville to deliver addresses against the Mormons, and Brother Enge was instrumental in getting the ministers of the various churches to request Mrs. Sheppard to differentiate between the Reorganized Church and the Utah faction, which she did. In the women's meeting in the Presbyterian Church a nonmember friend, Mrs. A. A. Fox, arose at the close of the service and asked Mrs. Sheppard to explain the difference between the two Latter Day Saint churches. She did this to the enlightenment of all. This friend, Mrs. Fox, has helped Brother Enge many times as difficulties arose while opening up the work in their city. Brother Enge is leaving Jacksonville soon for Everett, Washington.

First Chicago Branch

We can now understand the spirit that overshadowed Carrie Jacob Bond when she wrote "The end of a perfect day." She must have been in attendance at the First Chicago picnic, at our reunion grounds Decoration Day. Everything was fine, the speakers, debaters, the races, the eats, the lemonade, and everything. First Chicago will have another picnic July 4.

The branch is progressing very nicely. The Department of Music is planning on another one of its famous musical nights. Sister Ruby Newman is accomplishing wonders with the talent entrusted to her care. Brother F. Henry Edwards and his sister spent an evening with us, which was enjoyed by all.

Our past president and charter member Brother S. C. Good and wife paid us a visit recently on their trip through to California. All were glad to see Brother and Sister Good and renew old acquaintances.

Mothers' Day was observed at our branch with the usual tribute to mothers. We are proud of the good Christian mothers of the land; may God bless them. Recent visitors were Brother and Sister McGuire of Hammond, Indiana, Sister Entrican from Florida. Brother McAndrews from Canada, Brother and Sister Kelsey from Texas, and girls, Brother and Sister Walker and family from Saint Louis. Josephine Smith is now here with her father's family. We hope to hear from Josephine in the choir.

The local brethren have been occupying as usual in the various services. All departments are functioning in their order. We are endeavoring to make our union sacrament service a district affair. The next service will be held at Central Chicago Branch June 17, 3 p. m. All members of the district and visiting members are urged to attend these services. The union sacrament service occurs every three months. All are planning on attending the district conference.

Independence

Sunday was a very busy and a very happy day in Independence. Attendance at Sunday school was large at each of our seven churches and the sacrament was administered to congregations that filled the various buildings. The service at the Stone Church, in charge of President Elbert A. Smith was particularly impressive and spiritual.

At three o'clock Sunday afternoon practically all of the Saints in Independence met on the newly-acquired Campus and Brother Albert N. Hoxie, of Philadelphia, conducted a big community sing. A band stand had been erected on one of the magnificent slopes of the place where great forest trees cast their shade and the grass is an inviting carpet, and the people gathered here in hundreds of family groups.

The L. D. S. Band under the direction of Brother Roy Turner, played a number of interesting selections, chiefly hymns, scored for band instruments and then band and congregation were turned over to the leadership of Brother Hoxie who is a master at getting people to sing and who has not forgotten the art he developed at Philadelphia during the war when he got the entire navy yard and city singing for victory. A very happy hour was spent singing the familiar hymns of our church and even the sun which sought out every open space could not wilt the enthusiasm.

The opening prayer by Elder Richard J. Lambert was in the nature of a dedication of the coming outdoor services and was uplifting and spiritual. Two splendid addresses were also given, one by President Elbert A. Smith on the subject of Social aspects of religion and the other by Elder John A. Dowker on the subject of fellowship. If this first Sunday service on the Campus is an augury, then many wonderful experiences are ahead for this place and community.

At 7.30 Sunday evening the Stone Church was packed for another program under the direction of Brother Hoxie, and this time he had the support of the orchestra and choir. It was a repetition of the happy experience of the afternoon, and Elder Walter W. Smith in a short address voiced the appreciation of all for the gift of music and community participating in singing.

If all go to Lamoni who intend to, our city will be a lonesome place the next few days. Many are going by train to attend the Young People's Convention and dozens of cars are being driven through. It's almost as though a General Conference were in session there. The exodus is not confined to young people alone and plenty of chaperones will be available for the interesting stunts that are announced for the conventions.

Apostles T. W. Williams and John W. Rushton were in Independence last week. Brother Williams went from here up to the Far West Stake and Brother Rushton left Saturday for Chicago, where he was to preach over Sunday and was then going on to New York City, where he will meet his sister Mrs. Issott who is coming to America for a few months' visit.

Decoration Day was appropriately observed by the Independence Saints. Mound Grove Cemetery, which is becoming a populous city, is now beautiful in its foliage and flowers. At 10 a. m. Wednesday a service was held there near the tomb of our revered Brother Joseph. Music was furnished by the L. D. S. Band and a vocal quartet. Prayer was offered by Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire and short addresses were made by Brethren T. W. Williams and Walter W. Smith.

The rest of the day was given over to a community picnic on the Campus and fully four thousand people were on the grounds. Band concerts were given afternoon and evening and chorus and solo vocal numbers were interspersed. Brother Frank A. Russell directed a community sing at 7 p. m. At 8 p. m. a prayer was offered by Brother John W. Rushton and short addresses were made by Brethren Frederick M. Smith, T. W. Williams, and Walter W. Smith. Athletic events, picnicking, and the sheer joy of a perfect May day on the wonderful new grounds made up the rest of an ideal holiday. The picnic was under the direction of two organized classes, the I. X. L. and the Nonpariel, together with the L. D. S. Band, and the refreshment stands were run by the members, all profit going to the purchase fund.

An important business change took place June 1 when the three retail stores of the Independence Storehouse were sold to Brother John D. Lewis. Brother Lewis who came here from Cleveland two years ago, has been buyer for the Storehouse during that time and has a wide and favorable acquaintance among the Saints. Brother Frank Holsworth has purchased the meat department at the main store and will continue in charge of it. The feed and fuel department remains under the ownership and direction of the Storehouse.

An L. D. S. Sunday school baseball league has been formed in Independence and matched games will be played each Saturday afternoon at the Campus. The four teams of the league are the I. X. L. and Bar-Gar classes, the Walnut Park and Herald Office. The first game was played last Saturday.

On Friday evening about one hundred and sixty officers and teachers of the Mount Zion Sunday school, with a few other friends, met in the dining hall of the Stone Church for a farewell reception to Superintendent A. L. Sanford and wife and Miss Louise Giesch. Brother Sanford has been superintendent of the Stone Church Sunday school and schools in Zion for the last several years, and his wife has been a teacher in the beginner department. Brother Sanford has also had charge of the junior services at the eleven o'clock hour with his wife as an able assistant. They leave for Nauvoo, Illinois where they will make their home and where Brother Sanford will enter the monument business. Sister Giesch has been secretary of the Sunday school for a number of years, has been a devoted choir member and active in many departments of church work in Independence. She will be married June 5 to Brother Edward Fox of Providence and will leave immediately for the East where they will make their home. The evening was very pleasantly spent in a social way with singing, speeches, and toasts. Mementos of appreciation on behalf of the Sunday school, were presented by Brother Elbert A. Smith, to Brother Sanford, a gold watch chain; to Sister Sanford, a Zion's Praises; and to Sister Giesch, a fountain pen.

Become a Trained Nurse

Sanitarium Training Classes Are Now Open

Each year the Independence Sanitarium graduates a class of nurses who with their three years' thorough training, and with diplomas from the State, go out and make enviable reputations in their chosen field of service. The Sanitarium conducts a special training school for nurses and affords opportunity to the young women of the church to learn the nursing profession under very favorable circumstances and in our church environment. Diplomas from the Sanitarium are authorized by the State and are fully recognized throughout the country.

Entrance Requirements

The Training School for Nurses was organized in 1909 and is conducted in connection with the Independence Sanitarium. The purpose is to give theoretical, practical, and systematic training to young women who desire to learn the art of conserving health and nursing the sick.

The course in nursing covers a period of three full years. The first three months constitute a preliminary term of probation. If the candidate completes the probationary term satisfactorily she will be enrolled as a student nurse. All candidates for admission to the training school must be between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five years, and must include with their applications a physician's certificate of good health, and dentist's certificate that teeth are in good condition; also a letter from two responsible people, testifying to the moral character and general fitness for nursing.

The scholastic requirements for entrance to the Training School for Nurses is at least three years of high school, with twelve accepted units of credit.

To Make Application

Application should be made in person to the director of the training school, or where this is impossible, a written application should be filed long enough before entering that proper arrangements may be made. Any who contemplate entering this work would do well to apply at once and start training now, as the class is open and good opportunities for starting are available at the Sanitarium at this time.

The students are required to be on hospital duty eight hours daily. The school reserves the right to ask the student to meet emergencies. Nine weeks of vacation are allowed the student during the three years, at such time as the director can arrange.

Expenses Partly Paid

The school provides maintenance and tuition for the entire term of three years. An allowance of seven dollars per month is given after the probationary term is completed. Student nurses must provide their own uniforms and textbooks such as the school shall adopt, and meet their own personal expenses, which depend largely upon the habits and taste of the student. All student nurses when ill are cared for gratuitously by the Sanitarium and the medical staff, but time lost through illness or for any other reason must be made up.

The practical experience in medical, surgical, and obstetrical work is gained in the various departments of the Independence Sanitarium. In addition each nurse is given a period of service in the drug room, laboratory, X-ray room, and diet kitchen and is given training as senior, night nurse, public health, operating room, and head nurse.

WEEKS.—Emma Frances Love was born January 14, 1863, at Athens, Ohio. At eleven years of age she moved with her parents to Iowa. Baptized September 10, 1882. Married Charles A. Weeks, February 8, 1883. Died May 3, 1923, at her home in Ames after an illness of eight years. Interment at Rhodes, Iowa. Leaves husband, Charles A. Weeks, and four daughters, Mrs. E. W. Blumenschein, Mrs. G. S. Leise, Helen, and Mae. Leaves also four brothers and four sisters. Two children preceded her.

MANNERING.—Viola Damitz Mannering was born July 14, 1880, at Wheatland, Missouri. Baptized in February, 1899. Married W. H. Mannering January 9, 1901. Usually lived in her husband's appointed mission field which has included the States of Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, Texas, Arizona, and the United States of Mexico. By textbook study and without the aid of a teacher she learned to converse in the Spanish language and accompanied the first foreign missionary party, consisting of herself, husband, and W. S. Pender and wife, to Mexico. At the end of one year's service ill health and the Mexican revolution made their departure imperative. In towns along the international border, she frequently sang on the streets, in both Spanish and English, during missionary services. She made frequent house-to-house visits, leaving gospel tracts with urgent invitations to church meetings, surprising and sometimes convincing her religious opponents. Died at Independence, Missouri, April 19, 1923.

Blue Pencil Notes

Age is incredible. It surprises us at every turn. We never become accustomed to its changes. We refuse to reckon with them. Perhaps that is because of our inherent belief in immortality. Feeling immortal we neglect or refuse to recognize the import of passing years.

Children known by us years ago and not since seen continue in our mental vision as children—never a day older. Meeting them suddenly we are astounded to find them grown men and women, possibly married and carrying on the responsible work of life. Painfully we retouch the mental picture that had not kept pace with time.

In a much more intimate way we fail to perceive the changes in ourselves, until shockingly reminded of them in some way. They steal upon us so gradually that we do not notice them. When some friend who has not seen us for years, in his surprise loudly proclaims our gray hairs and wrinkles we wince a little and perhaps hunt up some old photograph, that we may make comparisons. The photograph looks to us like that of a stranger. We think withal that it looks remarkably green, and no doubt it does; and equally without doubt it was a very good likeness in its day. Perhaps it does look callow and awkward—but there was youth there—something now gone.

Socrates four hundred years before Christ had his jest at the expense of those who endeavored to fool the years. Plato in the Republic records him as mentioning "the enthusiastic old men who in spite of wrinkles and ugliness continue to frequent the gymnasium." So to-day we may see a certain type of old man in sport clothes still chasing butterflies on the great white way; and a certain type of aged lady with very short skirts and very red cheeks, provoking the girls to mirth—a needless task at best. Such refusal to make normal adjustment is pathetic.

If we are disposed to be morbid we may rebel. Indeed almost any soul at times must be moved to cry out to the years to "stand back and not press so relentlessly on." So Poe wrote:

I stand amid the roar
Of a surf-tormented shore,
And I hold within my hand
Grains of the golden sand—
How few! yet how they creep
Through my fingers to the deep
While I weep—while I weep!
O God! can I not grasp
Them with a tighter clasp?
O God! can I not save
One from the pitiless wave?

It is idle to rebel. The moments, the days, the years slip through our fingers into eternity and are gone. A wise man may well conclude to meet the inevitable with fortitude, using the day while it lasts; as Christ said, to "work while the days lasts," and make such resolute preparation as he may for the diminishing years. So Emerson in his poem "Terminus" embodies the resolution to "obey the voice at eve obeyed at prime":

It is time to be old,
To take in sail;
The god of bounds,
Who set to seas a shore,
Came to me in his fatal rounds,
And said; "No more!
No farther shoot
Thy broad ambitious branches, and they root.
Fancy departs; no more invent;
Contract thy firmament
To compass of a tent,
There's not enough for this and that,
Make thy option which of two;
Economize the failing river,
Not the less revere the Giver. . . ."
I trim myself to the storm of time,
I man the rudder, reef the sail,
Obey the voice at eve obeyed at prime.

With equal resolution Browning wrote:

Grow old along with me! The best is yet to be.
The last of life, for which the first was made:
Our times are in his hand Who said, A whole I planned;
Youth shows but half: trust God:
See all, nor be afraid.

"The best is yet to be"—who knows—perhaps the worst is yet to be. But it is good philosophy to trust the voice at eve obeyed at prime. The late President Joseph Smith often expressed a desire to "grow old gracefully." He worked at that problem for a number of years, even after his eyes had gone blind so that he could no longer read the terms of the problem on the blackboard of life. But he got the answer.

Not long ago a comparatively young man, perhaps not more than thirty-five years old, said to me: "I want to grow old gracefully, and not become sour and bitter and pessimistic and lose faith and confidence and charity and be for nothing and against everything."

I said to him, "You are young to talk about growing old gracefully. You have a long time to think about that." He replied: "I have a theory that to grow old gracefully one must prepare while young. It won't do to wait until one is sixty or seventy years old to get ready."

Perhaps he was right. The never-faltering charity that still will forgive and love our fellow man needs a lifetime of cultivation that it may shine forth like the evening star when the shadows of old age draw round us. The unflinching faith in God that will bear all ills and pains and disappointments and sad disillusionment of time must be cherished and strengthened through a long span of life and not be a shallow-rooted growth of late summer. To accept the inevitable with fortitude and courage and good grace is a task for which men may well prepare early. So there may be a lesson for the young as well as for the old in these paragraphs.

Care of the Poor

Recently the questions were put by the editor to several of our men, "How far does the responsibility of the church reach in caring for the poor?" "Does paying tithing insure support to the payer?" In this issue of the HERALD in another column we give a reply to these questions, as presented by Bishop A. Carmichael. We commend this thoughtful article to the careful reading of all who are interested in the subject.

The care of the poor is a problem which society has always present, and the church being vitally interested in social conditions cannot escape the responsibility of solving that problem. With us the question of "aid" has assumed large proportions; but "aid" in the form of a money-dole does not solve the problem, but on the contrary in many instances makes it more difficult by creating more dependency.

This church must face squarely the task of meeting the issue of caring for its poor, its dependent ones. Of course the greatest desideration is to eliminate dependency. But how?

The problem links up closely in its solution with the task of establishing the members of the church on the basis of stewardship; for that great social movement will automatically solve the problem of dependency and will eliminate destitution. Every person a contributor to the common weal and all conserving common interests.

Conference and Preconference Program

The Presidency is planning a program for conference and preconference services which will be announced in detail later; possibly, however, some preliminary announcements will be of interest to the Saints.

It is expected that there will be a preconference series of preaching services in our seven churches in Independence and three of the Kansas City churches. These various preaching services will be conducted by members of the Twelve and will be missionary in nature, the subjects running through the week beginning Sunday evening, September 23, to be the six principles of the gospel. The following is the line-up of speakers:

Stone Church	Elder J. W. Rushton.
Walnut Park	Elder T. W. Williams.
Enoch Hill	Elder Roy S. Budd.
Englewood	Elder J. A. Gillen.
Liberty Street	Elder D. T. Williams.
Second Church	Elder P. M. Hanson.
Spring Branch	Elder J. F. Curtis.
Kansas City Central	Elder E. J. Gleazer.
Grand View	Elder C. F. Ellis.
Malvern Hill	Elder M. A. McConley.

During this week also there will be mass meetings of the priesthood for prayer services and lectures daily. Also certain special historical services to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the angel's visit of 1823.

It is intended that the evening preaching services in the tabernacle during the conference shall carry forward the missionary spirit of the preconference meetings, the general theme being, "What must I do to be saved?"

This program is as yet subject to change, and a more detailed announcement will be made later.

Our Band and Orchestra

I have often expressed in public my appreciation of the choir at Independence and of the general choir movement, but I do not remember having spoken of the band and orchestra. It has always been pleasing to note the progress of these two musical organizations, and I cannot but hope that they will grow in numbers and excellence and thus become strong nuclei around which the band and orchestra interests of the church may be built up.

From experience in band and orchestra covering a number of years, I know somewhat of the difficulty of keeping such organizations together and at work continuously, and hence I can appreciate the persistence of these organizations.

It is doubtful if any other band and orchestra has a finer objective or a stronger bond of union among their members than these two; for Zion the beautiful beckons them on. To work and practice now for the time when greater developments of Zion will give them finer outlets for musical expression should be a thought to keep each member at work with a zeal and spirit unknown to any other band or orchestra.

May our band and our orchestra and their hard-working leaders prosper and grow! F. M. S.

V. The Significance of Religion; the Making of Doctrine, Ceremony, Sacrament, and Organization

We have seen the importance that Jesus attached to the individual human soul. With it he begins his work of regenerating the race: to each man in the person of Nicodemus he says, "Ye must be born again." He taught the importance of the individual human soul in his parable of the one lost piece of silver and the one lost sheep. The woman left all and searched for the one coin; the shepherd left all and went to seek the one sheep; so he would have us to understand he came to seek the lost, to seek for and if necessary die for one man, and if for the one so for all.

Religion to Help Man Grow

It follows naturally that to Jesus religion had significance as it ministered to man's needs and helped him to grow; as it ministered in the case of each man to his own personal human needs, or through him to the needs of other men. Any form of religion that does not so minister has no real meaning or worth. And in the light of all these observations I evaluate all doctrine, all ceremony, all church organization and membership, all profession and activity.

Doctor Thomas Cuming Hall in his History of Ethics Within Organized Christianity relates how in the early Roman Catholic Church, in the monasteries a monk at the behest of his superior officers would water a dead stick planted in the monastery yard day after day for years. (See History of Ethics Within Organized Christianity, page 247.) Numberless other arduous and senseless tasks of similar nature were performed regularly. The devotion to "duty" thus displayed was supposed to be highly religious. As a matter of fact, when the world was full of men, women, and children, sick, sinful, suffering, needing Christian help, to spend precious days and human strength watering a dead stick in a monastery yard was distinctly irreligious. The task issued in no service to humanity; it did not help the individual to grow along desirable lines and it helped no one else through him.

James had the right idea of religion, one that cannot be improved upon if we but read between his lines and get his idea:

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the vices of the world.—James 1: 27, Inspired Translation.

Not such service the benignant Father

Requireth at his earthly children's hands:

Not the poor offering of vain rites, but rather

The simple duty man from man demands.

For he whom Jesus loved hath truly spoken:

The holier worship which he deigns to bless

Restores the lost, and binds the spirit broken, —And feeds the widow and the fatherless.

—Whittier.

Vicarious Service

About the only way we can serve God is to serve our fellows. We serve Jesus vicariously; we visit him in prison, clothe him when naked, feed him when hungry, by way of his needy fellow servants: "Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these, you have done it unto me." Service of this sort can only come from a regenerated life. Hence it all comes back to the idea of a redeemed individual.

Many pagan, heathen, and primitive forms of religion seem from our viewpoint to have given little attention to the moral and spiritual condition of their adherents. The main idea seemed to be to placate the particular god or gods to whom devotion was given. These gods were to be kept in a favorable attitude by means of sacrifice, ceremony, and ritual. The devotee might be vile, mean, cruel, yet he could enjoy his religious experiences and approach his altar apparently satisfying all the demands of his religion by ceremonial and sacrificial means.

Indeed it seems to us at times that the religious exercise itself made him immoral, as for instance in the worship of Moloch, fathers and mothers cast their innocent children alive into the fiery furnace to win the pleasure of the god. The goddess Venus at one time in the development of her religion demanded that every woman at some time in her life must come to the temple and offer her virtue as a sacrifice to the first man who would give her a piece of silver to throw into the treasury of the temple. The mothers of India cast their babies into the sacred Ganges River. The conquering despot returned red with blood from the slaughter of helpless peoples to make oblations at his altar and an offering to his priest, and all was well:

Feet red from warfields trod the church aisles holy,
With trembling reverence: and the oppressor there,

Kneeling before his priest, abased and lowly,
Crushed human hearts beneath his knee of prayer.
—Whittier.

The Kernel of Religion

Sacrifice, ceremony, rite—these were religion. To an extent these ideals found expression in Judaism. But the major prophets in times of illumination saw clear to the kernel of religion even in that day. For them sacrifice had its place and its meaning, as did ceremony and rite, but these only served a purpose. Religion as they perceived it must issue in human conduct, in justice, mercy, judgment, righteousness:

Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my firstborn for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?—Micah 6: 7, 8.

I will hide mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear; your hands are full of blood. Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.—Isaiah 1: 15-17.

The true religion of Jesus Christ demands individual righteousness. The vital and essential thing is that a man shall be righteous—that is, that he shall be right with God and with his fellow man. Church membership, ceremony, sacrifice, ordinance, doctrine, worship, these are subsidiary things that help him to become righteous and to maintain his standing in that state, and to express himself religiously. They help him to grow, "his soul to expand," as Alma expresses it. For that is the function of religion, to develop the human soul.

But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory.—2 Corinthians 3: 18.

This view of religion that gives it this practical applied trend, that makes it a function of the whole life, that connects it all seven days of the week with individual and social conduct, that makes it an integral part of personality and character—this vastly fruitful and dynamic concept of religion carries with it the inevitable corollary that religion is a matter of growth and development, an inseparable part of a growing and expanding life experience, no more to be attained in a day than any other aspect of nature.—Betts in The New Program of Religious Education, p. 39.

No Retreat from Life

The monastic idea of religion was to bury oneself apart from the world, away from one's fellows, to avoid contamination. It did not solve or attempt to solve the problems of life; it fled from them. It did not help husbands to live with wives or sons with fathers or brothers with brothers; it fled these relations, thus admitting inability to cope with the situations arising out of them. That was not James's idea. Men were to keep themselves unspotted from the vices of the world, true; but at the same time they were to go out and minister to the needs of humanity as Christ did. Religion would help a man to be a better husband; it would not lead him to renounce marriage as the monk did. It would help a man to be a better son to his father; it would not lead him to deny that father and burn unread a loving letter from a good mother, as monks did lest they be detracted from their prayers. Religion would lead brother to help brother rather than to refuse the simplest act of assistance in time of need as certain monks did on the ground that they were "dead to the world." Saint Francis had a much better idea of religion when he left the rich estate of his father and gave his life to the service of the poor and needy. (It is only fair to say that the old monastic idea of personal seclusion, which in turn grew out of the idea of the religious hermit, broke of its own weight; and in time the monasteries became more social and the monks gave their time to tasks calculated to help humanity as judged by their views of human needs.)

Our religion must justify itself at every point by service in the development of the individual soul and after that the collective soul. And I believe that it does that very thing. The primary doctrines of the church: faith, repentance, baptism in water, baptism of the Holy Ghost, the resurrection, the eternal judgment, each in its turn and in its way helps the development of the one who walks that path. (Hebrews 6.) "Let us go on to perfection." The purpose of the doctrine is to help men go on to perfection. So, too, when properly analyzed, the ordinances and sacraments and sacred days are found to have their real significance as helps to an end, and that end the development of man. When considered as all important in and of themselves they lose all values. To quote Jesus again: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath."—Mark 2: 27. The Jews considered the Sabbath superior to human needs, and rebuked Jesus because his disciples plucked and ate corn on the Sabbath. Jesus considered that the Sabbath was made for man, i. e., to help him in his spiritual development. That concept ran through all his belief regarding religion in all its functions and forms.

Meaning of Church Membership

Church membership must not be looked upon as an end in itself, a sort of eternal life insurance paid up and the policy deposited in the strong box of heaven. Church membership through the fellowship of kindred souls and communion with the Holy Spirit helps one to grow toward the Christian standard of manhood or womanhood set forth in the law. If one does not consciously and persistently avail himself of that help to grow in grace and knowledge of the truth, membership has nothing for him. The payment of tithing must not be regarded as fire insurance, even though it is written, "He that is tithed shall not be burned." The payment of tithes enables the individual to cooperate with God and his fellows in certain good works collectively pursued, such as preaching the gospel, caring for the poor and aged and for orphaned children and many other ways; at the same time it performs a work of grace in the heart of the tithepayer. The communion of the Lord's supper is not either a magical or mechanical work of transformation changing the communicant into Christ's likeness by reason of potent powers in the bit of bread and the sup of wine. But the whole beautiful service with its historic meaning and spiritual content powerfully helps one to "remember Christ," to envisage him, to recall his example and teaching, profoundly to resolve to become more and more like him. Thus if we take the trouble to think and analyze we will find that the whole vital body of religious belief and observance, sacrament, doctrine, membership, spiritual gifts and blessings, and even church organization, yield their full and rich meaning only as we consider them as aids in the development of the human soul. That thought is splendidly set forth in the following scripture:

Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.) And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ.—Ephesians 4: 8-15.

Purpose of Church Organization

Here we learn that Christ gave gifts to men. He perfected a certain form of church organization. He set up church machinery, including apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors. What was the purpose of the gifts? What was the purpose of the organization? Listen: for the "perfecting of the Saints"; to lead each and every individual human soul that would follow him to the predestined goal, perfect manhood in "the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." All these are to help us grow—"grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."

Alma makes the final test of religion its power to enlarge the soul. Beyond all signs or miracles as evidence of the truthfulness of the gospel is the fact that it causes "my soul to expand." By that I know.

There is only one way to get salvation, and that is to grow into it. We have here then the meaning of religion and the purposes of God. All cluster about the culture, the growth, the development of the individual human soul, and after that the collective soul: "Till we all come in the unity of the faith."

These considerations put meaning into life. They put meaning into the universe. And the sublime road toward the goal is thus set forth: "Speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things." Love, truth, growth, those three wonderful principles coordinated spell salvation; and all creation has struggled and toiled toward the time when men should come to appreciate and apply them. To quote Paul, rather freely: "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain until now . . . waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God." (Romans 8: 19-22.) ELBERT A. SMITH.

The Morning Classes at the Convention

The three morning classes have some excellent subject matters for consideration—Bible appreciation, religious education, and the social principles of the gospel. These subjects indicate the serious spirit of the convention. They are of a decidedly religious tone, and fill a great present need. They are conducted by men who have made a special study in each of these several departments.

President McDowell, who handles the social principles of the gospel, has reviewed a great volume of literature in Christian sociology, and is preparing to present the results of his research.

A. Max Carmichael, Superintendent of the Department of the Sunday School, is thereby the head of the Department of Religious Education. He has made a careful review of existing scholarly discussions of the needs of religious education, content, the special methods of religious pedagogy, as well as having first been engounded in general teaching methods and child psychology. He is much interested in extending his study of child psychology in its relation to the religious development of the child. Since he was appointed general superintendent he has reviewed some hundred volumes or more in this special field.

C. E. Wight conducted the class in religious education in Graceland for two years and was instrumental in getting it will started and established. He has labored for several years as a counselor in the Lamoni Stake presidency, and is now president of that stake. As a son of John W. Wight he was raised in an atmosphere to give him a natural appreciation of the value of the Bible. S. A. B.

News of Home-Coming and Young People's Convention

Graceland Home-Coming a Big Success

The attendance at Graceland's first Home-Coming which was held in Lamoni from Sunday, June 3, to Wednesday, the 6th, was far beyond the most optimistic expectations of the committee, and the spirit of good fellowship was a joy to behold. It is estimated that at least 300 former Graceland students were there; and practically all of this year's students remained to help celebrate the happy occasion.

The people of Lamoni are keeping open house with the whole-hearted hospitality which is reminiscent of General Conference days there, and all plans are to the end that every one may have the best possible time. The Lamoni Chronicle, owned and edited by Brother Wallace H. Blair, has done a splendid piece of work reporting and boosting the Home-Coming and Convention, and in addition to its regular editions, got out a special Graceland Souvenir Number. The HERALD is indebted to the Chronicle for much of its news of this week's events at Lamoni, and is glad to make acknowledgment.

Baccalaureate Service

This is the twenty-fifth class that Graceland has graduated and the class numbers sixty-two members. The baccalaureate service was held at the Brick Church Sunday evening in charge of the college president, George N. Briggs. President F. M. McDowell offered prayer. This was followed by a beautiful duet by Misses Aliene Brackenburg and Mabel Carlile. A solo was delightfully rendered by George E. Anway of Independence, and following it a very pleasing number by the choir.

The sermon was by President Frederick M. Smith who spoke most effectively on the subject, "The educational problem of the church." This sermon will be published in full in an early number of the HERALD. Miss Lena Wells sang a solo at the conclusion of the sermon which was well received, and which concluded a very interesting and impressive program.

Lambda Delta Sigma Banquet

Ninety-two members of the Lambda Delta Sigma society sat down in the dining tent on the college campus Monday noon and partook of a four-course banquet prepared and served by Mr. Wayne Wolfe and assistants from the freshman class.

Professor G. A. Platz acted as toastmaster and introduced Walter Daykin for a welcome to new members. This was responded to by William Ely in behalf of those who had been chosen to join the organization. Later President F. M. Smith gave a short talk.

There were twenty-four new members initiated, mostly chosen from the upper twenty-five per cent in scholarship of the regular college class and religious education class.

Monday, Get Acquainted Day

Monday afternoon was given over to a few hours of getting acquainted on the campus, and hundreds of loyal Graceland students, those of this year and years past, met and formed or renewed acquaintances. College ties mean much, and those formed under the influence of our own church, as at Graceland, seem to endure through the years with unusual fidelity.

The Operetta

The Graceland Glee Club under the direction of Miss Mabel Carlile presented "Bulbul," a comic opera, on Monday evening in the large tent. The presentation was a success in every way. William Patterson as the king, and Florence Thompson as Lady Ida, his attendant, deserve special mention, and Aliene Brackenburg as Princess Bulbul and Paul Craig as Prince Caspian delighted the audience with much beautiful solo and duet work. The jesters who attended the king, James Dempsey and Harve Elefson, added to the humor, and three large chorus groups made a beautiful setting for the entire play. The fantasias also added greatly to the beauty of the chorus work.

The College Orchestra was very effective in accompaniments and preludes.

Everything worked smoothly and the harmony of the chorus work especially reflected credit on the director Miss Carlile and Mrs. Johnson who had charge of the fantasias.

The director was further aided by Miss Whiting, dramatic coach, and Mr. Anthony, orchestra director.

The Annual Parade

Twenty classes were represented in the parade of Tuesday, which was no doubt the most colorful, and one of the most interesting features of the Graceland Home-Coming. Considering the shortness of the time allowed for preparation and the limited number of representatives in most of the classes, the procession had an unusually professional appearance, and was a real demonstration of a Graceland spirit that lasts.

"International Graceland," the float entered by the class of 1922, was a universal favorite, and was the judges' choice for first place in the contest, on the basis of having a good idea, carefully and beautifully worked out. The car was draped in white, and at the center of the platform, surmounted on a tall standard, was a big cardboard replica of the old Graceland building, from which floated white streamers that were held by the representatives of the various countries of which the class of '22 was composed.

The class of 1923 was awarded second place and the class of 1907 third place. '23 entered a most gorgeously dressed float of maroon and white; and the "old-timers" a clever illustration of the motto, "Zion Needs Clean Homes." The latter car with its lace curtains, snowy flowers and white-capped matrons polishing the last shining window attracted much comment, which was usually followed by a laugh as the spectators caught sight of the huge can of Sunbeam Cleaner which adorned the spare tire.

Success is sweet, but there is nothing so popular with a crowd as a game showing in the presence of defeat which accounts for the honorable mention accorded the float of the class of 1919. The committee in charge of preparations overslept, and when the line formed back of the college at one o'clock, the class of '19 was unrepresented. Accordingly one of the class borrowed a horse, collected a handful of vari-colored streamers for his saddle horn, hastily lettered a placard, and the two of this class wore the good animal to a state of exhaustion trying to keep up with the automobiles.

Many worthy mottoes were displayed among the flowers and bunting decorations of the nineteen floats that formed the procession—"Impossible Is Un-American," "Without Vision Men Perish," "Graceland for All, and All for Graceland," and an occasional more flippant assertion, such as that of the second class to be graduated, 1899, "The first twenty-five years are the hardest."

The classes represented in the parades were 1898, '99, '03, '04, '05-'06, '07, '09-'10-'13, '11, '14, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, Religious Education, and 1923. ALICE MYRMIDA SMITH.

Class Social

The class picnic at the reunion grounds Tuesday evening was the big social event of the home-coming. Close to two hundred students ate supper in the woods. Classes separated in groups for the picnic supper, after which they all gathered in one large circle and each class gave a stunt representative of its work in some way. Much amusement was caused and the general mingling of alumni members was thoroughly enjoyed.

Athletics

Athletic contests of various kinds were held on the grounds near the college each day, but the finals were not played until Wednesday forenoon when the alumni-faculty defeated the college students by a total of 56 to 51. Tuesday morning was devoted to tennis and volley ball tournaments, both of which, as well as the ball game, were won by the alumni-faculty.

Graceland is fortunate in possessing a beautiful athletic field, a natural lay of land which, when improved, will offer numerous advantages to the college students. At present the field is practically unequipped, but use is nevertheless made of it, and in spite of these handicaps the events of June 5 were interesting and successful from the point of view of the crowds that looked on.

Final Chapel

Final chapel was held in the big tent which is used for all meetings on the campus, on the morning of June 6, at 10 o'clock, opening with song and prayer.

President G. N. Briggs introduced Professor J. A. Gunsolley, who made a speech of welcome to the home-coming students. It was a pleasurable occasion to have present three former presidents of Graceland College: H. S. Salisbury, J. A. Gunsolley, and S. A. Burgess.

Vida E. Smith, dean of women, introduced the Crescent Club girls and welcomed the new members into the society.

The two cups, one for forensics and the other, the President's cup for scholarship and athletics, were presented to the winning society for the year. There are four literary societies represented in Graceland which include the entire student body. They are: the Niketes, Victorians, Alpha Pi Sigma, and the Kappa Deltas. These societies compete in scholarship, athletics, and forensics. The highest number of points was made this year by the Niketes Society, both in forensics and scholarship-athletics, thereby entitling them to possession of the two cups for the ensuing year.

The graduating class of 1923 presented a gift to the college, consisting of tables and chairs for the college library.

Announcements were made concerning the high quality of scholarship made by students at Graceland this year and encouragement given for future efforts along that line.

Benediction closed the farewell chapel for the class of 1923.

Graceland Commencement

The twenty-fifth annual commencement for Graceland College was held at the Brick Church in Lamoni, June 6, at 8 p. m., graduating the class of 1923.

Invocation was pronounced by Apostle T. W. Williams, which was followed with a musical number of the College Glee Club.

The distinguished speaker, Doctor Frank W. Blackmar, of Kansas University, made the commencement address on "Justifiable individualism." Doctor Blackmar, an authority on social science and holder of the first chair of sociology in any university, struck the keynote of his speech when he urged the members of the graduating class to go out into the world preserving that individualism which makes for leadership, but applying to it the test of social service. Touching upon the purpose of life, Doctor Blackmar said it can only be explained when we add to the theory of biology the theory of religion or love. There is no longer room in the world for the extreme individualist, neither should we cling to socialism or communism as the solution of the problem, for the individual must be preserved for progress. Doctor Blackmar appealed for a "Justifiable individualism."

The Graceland string quartet rendered a musical selection, following which the President conferred degrees, diplomas, and certificates.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon President Frederick M. Smith by the Board of Trustees, while President G. N. Briggs of Graceland College received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

The President announced those of the graduating class receiving honors and the winning of the two scholarships by Lora Gamet and Ethel Williamson. A closing number was given by the College Glee Club. Benediction was pronounced by Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

The Class of Twenty Years Ago

Of the class of 1903 six members were present for the Home-Coming, namely, Mrs. Pauline Anthony Gold, J. H. Jones, Mrs. Lena Church Prall, and W. E. Hayer of Lamoni; Mrs. Nelle Atkinson Kelley of Omaha, and M. T. Jamison of Independence, Missouri.

The enrollment of former students of Graceland College in a special register shows 122 in attendance. This includes several residents of Lamoni, but not all.

As part of the Class Day of the Home-Coming on Wednesday, June 5, Willamena Johnson and her class of girls presented some striking calisthenics and drill movements. They also presented some dignified and graceful movements at the Saturday night program in the College Chapel.

Thursday evening, June 7, as the first evening program of the convention, the young people of Lamoni entertained the visitors in a reception in the basement of the Brick Church. This gave an early opportunity for all to get acquainted.

Home-Coming Reveals Graceland Spirit

For twenty-seven years Graceland College has gone quietly about its task of preparing the youth of the church for useful service among the influences of religious and moral restraint. At this twenty-fifth commencement time and this, its first formal home-coming, the church has had an opportunity to see what Graceland has done and what it has become.

Perhaps the two most significant events of the week were the announcement on commencement night of the reinstatement of the third and fourth college years in the curriculum of Graceland, and the initial steps taken at the class reunions Tuesday evening toward a permanent alumni association. This means that in the future the college hopes to be able to do more and more for its students; and also that those who have been students are willing to put themselves in a position to do more for Graceland. One of the best tests of success and at the same time one of the best forms of insurance of future success a college can have is an active alumni.

The commencement exercises this year were particularly impressive. The sacrament of Sunday morning, while not directly a part of the college program, was administered to a congregation of college people, and the two ordinations of the morning were of men who have contributed much to Graceland in the past years. The ordination of Lonzo Jones to the high priesthood, and of Charles E. Irwin as a high priest and a bishop will be of interest to all who knew them as classmates or professors.

President Frederick M. Smith delivered the baccalaureate sermon on Sunday evening, and Doctor Frank Blackmar, of the University of Kansas, the commencement address on Wednesday night, June 6. Doctor Blackmar is a veteran sociologist, and is noted for being the founder of the first department of sociology to be included in any university in this country. His address, "Justifiable individualism," was in thorough accord with the ideals of the church for the young people, and was well received.

Sixty-eight diplomas were granted at the commencement, from the five departments of the college, and two honorary degrees. In honor of the reestablishment of the four-year college, President Frederick M. Smith was granted the degree of doctor of divinity, and President George N. Briggs the degree of doctor of laws. There were thirty-four graduates from the junior college, twenty-four of whom are eligible for state teacher's certificates and three for state public school music certificates. Fifteen students were graduated from the academy, ten from the one-year course in religious education, six from the commercial department and three from the studio of music.

The intervening days of the home-coming were filled with recitals and receptions, athletics and picnics, an operetta and a parade. There were two interesting social phases of the reunion; the meetings of the "oldtimers" when they got together to discuss old times and to plan out their share in the festivities, and the meeting of the former students with the Graceland of to-day—the interest of those who studied out on the hill in the old days in the advancement of the school and the increased advantages which it offers to the students of to-day.

If the home-coming was in the nature of a revelation to the church of what Graceland is doing for its young people, surely the situation was reversed at the opening sessions of the Young People's Convention which began Thursday morning, June 7. They were an indication of what it is possible for the young people to do for the church. The spirituality which the young people brought to the prayer services, the intelligent interest with which they took up the class work and lectures, and the enthusiasm of the round tables and recreational expression demonstrations should constitute an answer to one of the most vital questions which the church has to ask to-day, "Are we holding our young people?"

ALICE MYRMIDA SMITH.

Young People's Convention Now in Session

The Young People's Convention was formally opened Thursday, June 7, at 10 a. m. in the big tent, attended by a large crowd, including 500 officially registered delegates.

Albert N. Hoxie, of Philadelphia, led the meeting in several songs, stirring up enthusiasm for this memorable occasion. This was followed in opening prayer by Apostle John F. Garver.

Introductory remarks were made by President Floyd M. McDowell who expressed his deep gratitude at the splendid response to the convention, the first of its kind ever held in the church.

A symposium followed, the first speaker being C. E. Wight, president of the Lamoni Stake, who welcomed the delegates to the church at Lamoni.

Oscar Anderson, ex-mayor of Lamoni, spoke in behalf of Mayor Blair, extending the town's invitation to the convention.

President G. N. Briggs of Graceland then turned over the keys of the college to the convention and expressed his pleasure in so doing.

A vocal solo was rendered by Job Negeim, a young brother from Jerusalem, who is attending the college.

President Frederick M. Smith then introduced the speaker of the day, Doctor Frank W. Blackmar, of Kansas University, whom President Smith presented as "The Dean of American Sociologists."

Doctor Blackmar urged the young people to put aside creeds and dogmas, to accept the simple truths as taught by Jesus, and to prepare for finishing the work He started here upon earth. "If you are normal you will never grow old," said Doctor Blackmar in making an appeal for clean, wholesome recreation and play. He believes in municipally organized play and recreation and that we should not commercialize them. Home, he emphasized, is the center of life, and this we should cherish and preserve.

Following the address, Professor J. A. Gunsolley was presented with a token of appreciation by his many friends, for his faithful service at Graceland College.

The splendid and inspiring meeting closed with song and benediction.

The Daily Program

The daily round of events begins each morning at 6 when setting-up exercises are in order. At 7.30 there is a prayer service in the tabernacle tent, and at 8.45 a. m. there is class work which is divided into three courses: Course 1—"Bible appreciation," by C. E. Wight; Course 2—"Religious education," by A. Max Carmichael; and Course 3—"Social principles of the gospel," by F. M. McDowell, all three classes going at once.

At 10 a. m. there is a lecture and symposium for all at the big tent, and at 1.30 p. m. round tables at the same place. At 3 p. m. the afternoon is given over to recreational leadership, and at 8 p. m. a special program is given.

Special Days

In addition to the regular schedule each day is designated to emphasize a special feature of the work through the lecture and symposium at 10 a. m. especially, and in part through the evening program, and possibly the round table at 1.30 p. m.

Thus the first Friday was designated as Religious Life Day, and the theme continued in the evening sermon, "Why religion at all?" Then Saturday and Sunday were designated as Missionary days, the lecture, round table, sermon, prayer service, and Sunday evening program being dominated by that theme.

Monday was Health Day; Tuesday was Music Day; and Wednesday is Economic Day.

Then Thursday, June 14, will be Religious Education Day; Friday will be Recreation Day, and the final Saturday and Sunday will be Zion Builder's Days.

The above indicates the themes stressed and to be stressed throughout the convention.

Opening Prayer Meeting

Each weekday morning at 7.30, and each Sunday afternoon of the Young People's Convention a prayer meeting is provided for. At the first one Friday morning, June 8, the big tent loaned by the Little Sioux District for an assembly tent was filled. The service was in charge of R. V. Hopkins, pastor in Zion, and Elbert A. Smith, F. M. McDowell and C. E. Wight. A spirit of earnest devotion was manifested and many strong testimonies were given, especially by young people who received their inspiration at Graceland College.

President Elbert A. Smith spoke commending the effort of the young Saints and giving promise of great blessings as we strive for it.

There is being shown an earnest desire to prepare for service, especially by the many former and present students of Graceland on the grounds.

Attendance Large and Enthusiastic

It seems unbelievable now, but when the convention idea was first suggested, it was thought that the plan would be a success if even fifty visitors came and got the advantage of the classes and fellowship of such an occasion. Since that time the plans have had to be revised and enlarged again and again. The attendance has many times over surpassed the most optimistic estimates. By Saturday noon 631 had been enrolled.

Every one who attends the organized classes, lectures, and entertainments of the convention has been asked to enroll. The registration fee is $1. This is thought to be the fairest method of distributing the expense of the convention, as well as assuring that the convention will be self-supporting. Each one enrolled receives a 98-page notebook containing the complete program, and is also given the official badge of the convention entitling him to admission to all programs. The town people are supporting the convention loyally. Many of them have enrolled even though not able to attend.

Care of the Poor

By A. Carmichael

*Should the church care for the poor? How?
Does paying tithing obligate the church to care for the payer if he becomes dependent?*

Before answering these questions, let us inquire, What do we mean by the term "poor"? Evidently it stands for anyone who is in need—the needy. A man's poverty is measured by the amount he is short of supplying his needs. One is rich commensurate with the amount he has more than he needs. Needs being a relative term, the amount necessary to supply amply cannot be definitely fixed. A normal person or family is self-supporting; if not, they are abnormal. The ideal to be attained is normalcy in all life, individual and collective. This ideal is to become an accomplished fact through the dynamic of service and never by compulsion, either of the individual or group.

The obligation of the church to its members is not measured by what they now possess or by what they have paid to the group. We lay down the fundamental as the only basis on which any legitimate demand may be made of the church by the individual or by a group. The idea that because an individual has paid his tithing that this constitutes a legal obligation on the part of the church to furnish the individual when in need is erroneous. Let us briefly note just what the individual does when he complies with the financial law of the church and why he does so.

First comes the tithe (tenth) of the increase. This is paid to the group (the church) because it is not the individual's but rightly belongs to God. It is paid to the church with a deed and covenant that cannot be broken. It is paid as any other honorable debt must be paid and never constitutes any legal claim against the one to whom it is paid.

Second. The surplus is the next amount to be paid by the individual to the church and includes all the individual has above his needs and just wants. This surplus is also God's. It does not belong to the individual but rightly belongs to the church. It is paid to the church with a deed and covenant which cannot be broken. It is paid as any other honorable debt should be paid and does not constitute a legal claim against the one to whom paid. Note that both the tithe and the surplus is paid and not given. We do not give our debts to our creditor—we pay them.

Third. Now for the first time we are in a position to give something to the group, or the church. We are now on a vastly higher plane. The tithe and the surplus are debts and as such are paid. The offering is a real sacrifice for it comes out of our "needs and just wants," and is given to the group. But how given? With the thought that we shall expect it back again? Never! "Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man of you bring an offering unto the Lord . . . he shall offer it of his own voluntary will." (Leviticus 1:2, 3.) It is a free gift; more than that, for with the gift goes the giver. It goes to the church as a gift with a covenant that cannot be broken. It does not give the donor any legal claim on the group. The only claim that the individual has is as stated above—his "needs" is the law. It has been said that "necessity knows no law." In better form the same idea is expressed that "the necessity is the law." Briefly, we follow this basic principle through the divine history, remembering as we do so

The Unchangeability of God

For I am the Lord, I change not.—Malachi 3:6.
With whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.—James 1:17.
Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.—Hebrews 13:8.

The Law of the "Equivalent"

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread.—Genesis 3:18.

The wicked borroweth and payeth not again.—Psalms 37:21.

For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat . . . for we hear that there be some . . . working not at all. . . . Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work and eat their own bread.—2 Thessalonians 3:10-12.

Thou shalt not be idle, for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:12.

Our Portion

And will give me bread to eat and raiment to put on. . . . and of all thou hast given me I will give thee a tenth.—Jacob.

Thou shalt . . . surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth.—Moses.

Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content.—Paul.

Every man according to his wants and needs inasmuch as his wants are just.—Joseph Smith.

The providing for every man's need and just want, no more, no less, is the divine golden warp threading its way through the entire jurisprudence, and on, through and around which the infinite law of finance is woven—the true law of equality, God's provision for equal opportunity.

From the beginning the "needs" of the human race has occupied the Lord's thoughts.

The poor and the needy are the objects of the Lord's thoughts.—Psalms 40:17. (He will continue to keep this class always in remembrance.)

When the Lord shall have dominion from sea to sea, the poor and the needy shall be his special care.—Psalms 72: 8-13.

He who does not heed the cry of the "needs" of his fellow man needs to repent.

He who seeks to oppose the needy from his rights are numbered among the wicked.—Psalms 37: 14.

This responsibility is placed upon mankind, for we are commanded to "judge righteously and plead the cause of the poor and needy." (Proverbs 31: 9.) The Lord stands pledged to maintain the rights of the poor. (Psalms 140: 12.) The Lord of hosts has promised that "the needy shall not always be forgotten; the expectation of the poor shall not perish forever." (Psalms 9: 18.)

The Hebrews were taught prophetically through their leader, Moses, "if there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in this land . . . thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brethren. But thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in the which he wanteth." The wise man voiced the same idea when he exclaimed, "Give me neither riches nor poverty." Even in the administering in the sacred edifice—God's house—only that which was needed was to be portioned.

It is significant that the Master of men when teaching his disciples said, "The Father knoweth what things ye have need." He was concerned about their needs only. Who will say that the all-wise Father did not in his plan to men include the laws the obedience to which would amply provide for these same needs? Jesus emphasized his belief by his life. He took only what he had need. (Matthew 21: 3.) He taught that a man's need was more sacred than the Sabbath. (Mark 2: 25.) Even in his unbounded love for humanity the Christ limited his blessings to those who "needed" them. (Luke 9: 11.) In his role as a purchaser, he limited his buying to the actual "needs." (John 13: 22.) Under the divine afflatus the Pentecost Saints "gave every man as he had need." (Acts 2: 45; 4: 35.)

Paul's panacea was: "Let him labor, working with his hands for the things that are good, that he may have to give to him that needeth." (Ephesians 4: 28.) His "needs" was the reward of the righteous. (Philippians 4: 19.) Even the amount of instruction a person should get is measured by his "needs" for the same. (Hebrews 5: 12.) It set the bounds for God's gift to man for his salvation. (Hebrews 7: 11.) The rescuing of the needy is the Lord's salvation, for "The deliverance of the poor and the needy is the Lord's salvation." (Psalms 35: 10.) It marks the boundaries of the love we have for our fellow man. (1 John 3: 17.) It will continue through the ages as the standard of God's bestowals. (Revelation 21: 23.) It is the touchstone of divinity that obliterates all aristocracy. In its domain "class consciousness" is unthinkable. It answers affirmatively and positively the cry of our race, "Am I my brother's keeper?" The obedience to the "law of the need," safeguards both the poor and the rich.

Basing our assertions on (a) the bulwark of God's unchangeability, (b) the eternal principle of God as reflected in the law of economics, that of giving an equivalent for what one gets, and (c) that the portion of every man has been allotted to him by divine enumeration, this portion being his "needs and just wants," we may with assurance enter into a discussion of the proper creation and distribution of wealth.

Under the Mosaic economy, the schoolmaster, the Lord made ample provision for man's "needs." We may feel assured that if man's "needs" were carefully provided under the "lesser law," the gospel in its fullness would not do less. Note the solicitude of God for the poor—the needy. At the end of every seven years every creditor was to release his debtor if he was poor—needy. Not only was he to be released, but "thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his needs in that which he wanteth. . . . Thou shalt furnish him liberally." Here the law of the needy was limited to the "poor brother" only, for of the foreigners it is said "of a foreigner thou mayest exact it again; that which is thine with thy brother thine hands shall release." The reason for this law is obvious. If Israel had thrown open her "storehouses" and "treasury" to everybody, bankruptcy would have inevitably ensued. Israel had no way of determining who was the needy or poor among the stranger or foreigner.

The releasing from debts and at the same time furnishing the released debtor a fresh start economically was confined to one class, the poor or needy, for "that which is thine with thy brother thine hand shalt release, save when there shall be no poor [needy] among you." Here the same and necessary law required to develop character is taught. Every man physically and mentally able should pay for what he gets. Any other program would stultify mankind. Inequality of the crassest kind would ensue, for the "greatest inequality is the treatment of unequals as equals."

The needs of the poor man were, and are, the law for release from debt; aye more! the law that provides for his proper sustenance, his board and raiment, whether he can pay for it or not. The Pauline expression briefly puts it thus: "Having food and raiment, therewith let us be content." The wise man caught the ideal when he exclaimed, "Give me neither riches nor poverty." The latter-day prophet saw it clearly when he inspirationally penned the words, "amply supplied" and "according to a man's needs and just wants." Let the employer and the employed, the capitalist and the laborer, each make their needs and just wants their only desire for self. Let this desire be only a means unto an end—an altruistic end—and all trouble will vanish into nothingness. Such legislation as "remedial laws," "coercive measures," "child labor laws," etc., will never disgrace our statute books.

Correlated with the law of need stands out in bold relief the law of compensation, the giving of an equivalent, "the earning our bread by the sweat of our face." The two run parallel through the whole fabric of God's economics. They never clash. The one is the "complément of the other." Both are absolutely essential to evolve out of man what was involved in man—the image of God. Who wants something for nothing if he has the strength physically and mentally to pay for what he gets? Watch well him who does; with him something is wrong. He is an abnormal person. No normal man asks alms.

Character is never developed in this manner. The man who is really worth aiding is the man who asks for a fighting chance. The law of Jehovah has from the earliest dawn of history thundered against the idler. "The idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer nor wear his garments." He who can supply his own needs is by all the laws of God bound so to do. If he is so unfortunate, through physical or mental defects, as to be unqualified to "earn his bread by the sweat of his face," then his needs, if worthy, cry out and God's law (Deuteronomy 15th chapter) becomes his protection. Here is the expounding of the act couched in the language of the apostle, "Let the strong bear the burden of the weak"—the royal law, the law of supplying the "needs and just wants."

Let us again notice briefly the elements necessary to entitle any needy person or group to relief.

- (a) The person or group must be worthy.
- (b) They must be in need.
- (c) The group (church) supplying only when it has the means so to do.

This means that the only obligation incurred by the church is a moral one, unless, of course, a special legal obligation is made between the parties.

Sources From Which Aid May Come

The aid of the needy may come from the following sources:

- (1) The relatives.
- (2) The church.
- (3) Charitable organizations.
- (4) Civil authorities.

The ideal condition to be attained is a brotherhood so knit together by a common faith that the needs of every worthy member shall be supplied.

First, by his own efforts.

Second, by his near relatives.

Third, by the church, through its charitable organizations and the bishopric.

Fourth, by charitable organizations.

Fifth, by civil authorities.

The line of demarcation between the second and the third is not clearly drawn—nor can it be so. The Master intimates that the ties that bind those of like faith are stronger than the ties of blood. Under the Mosaic economy relatives were required to give aid to their needy blood relations. The gospel of Christ is no doubt on a higher social plane.

Modern writers recognize the fact that a common religion provides a tie of comradeship closely approaching the tie of blood relationship. Society today places the primary obligation of aid upon the near relatives, then comes the church.

Under certain existing circumstances it is the part of wisdom that we cooperate in our relief work with charitable organizations. Those helping organized groups may be in a better position properly to aid than we are. We see no good reason to prevent any of our worthy poor from securing aid from such organizations. Affiliation with them oftentimes enables us more wisely to function in this kind of work.

Securing aid from the civil authorities is looked upon by some as too humiliating. Why so? We all pay our taxes, a part of which goes for this very purpose. Why is it humiliating to accept means provided from the taxes paid? We believe that it is not only right, but that it is our duty to use this means as much as possible, thereby enabling us to use our group funds for other necessary work.

Legally, then, the group (the church) has no obligation to give back anything that has been paid to it by anyone, unless so specifically stated; but morally it has, and this moral responsibility so to do is of far greater force than the legal responsibility. Morally the church is under the responsibility to see that every worthy member or group of members is supplied according to needs and just wants.

The subjects in this course have been selected with care and have been so arranged as to furnish an adequate training for every teacher, regardless of the department in which he may be teaching. Description of Courses

Section I deals with the child both from a physiological and psychological standpoint. Every teacher should know his pupils.

Section II takes up the technique of instruction, touching upon reasons for teaching, and how to teach. These two sections are especially applicable to teachers of the lower grades.

Section III is a comprehensive study of the Bible and is a valuable course for others than teachers.

Section IV is a comprehensive study of the Book of Mormon and likewise is valuable for others than teachers.

Section V is a history of the origin, purpose, and development of the Sunday school. This is especially helpful to officers.

While to each of these sections is assigned a definite period of time, those finding it convenient may finish in less time or may use more time when necessary. However, it is believed that best results will be obtained by following the time schedule.

Any teacher desiring to enroll can find the subjects of his choice under one or more of the above sections. We strongly urge that every teacher take the entire course from first to last in the order given.

How to Enroll

I. Class Enrollment.

The superintendents of the local Sunday schools are to be held responsible for the training of their teachers. In Sunday schools of not more than twelve teachers, the teachers can be organized into one class, with the superintendent, one of their number or some one chosen by them, to act as their teacher or leader. The teacher may study with the class, but should be one of executive ability, and one who knows how to interest the others and who will see to it that every teacher stays with the course till its completion.

Sunday schools having from twelve to twenty teachers should organize two classes. From twenty to thirty teachers should organize in three classes. From thirty to forty teachers in four classes, and so on. Best results will be obtained with not more than ten or twelve in a class. These classes should meet at some definite time, of necessity other than at the Sunday school hour.

The superintendent should also have classes in training who are not regular teachers, but who will be ready and prepared to take classes as the need arises. These latter classes may meet at the regular Sunday school hour.

The teacher of the class should write to the Religious Normal Training Department, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for enrollment blanks. When these blanks are properly filled out they should then be mailed to the College, together with the required fee. These students will be under the direct instruction of the College. In no case will a student be enrolled without complying with these instructions.

Securing Supplies

Each student should own or have ready access to each of the books listed as "texts," and to at least one of the books listed as "supplementary reading," for each section in which he enrolls. We urge that no student allow the expense of books to prevent his owning one. He will feel repaid many times over, for having secured them. The books can be secured from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri. One need buy supplies only for a section at a time, thus distributing the expense over a period of about two years. Leave orders at the Convention bookstand.

How to Study

Lesson leaflets will be furnished to teachers of enrolled students, giving ample direction how to proceed with the lessons and when to take examinations.

Examination Papers

The teacher of the class should give the examinations at the time indicated on the lesson leaflets, using questions to be furnished by the college. He should collect all papers and mail them to the college for grading, inclosing postage for returning them if the student wants them returned.

Grading

Papers will be graded solely upon their merits in presenting the facts contained in the lessons covered. Diction, spelling, and penmanship will detract from the grade only in so far as they obscure the thought of the student. The regular college system of grading will be employed:

A means that the subject has been grasped, thought about, made one's own so that it can be given out with the stamp of individual insight upon it.

B signifies good conscientious work above the average. It means that the subject has been grasped but without a high degree of original research or insight, as indicated by grade A.

C signifies good conscientious work of average grade. It indicates a fair degree of original thought and research.

D means passing.

E means failure.

Graduation

Upon successful completion of each of the sections a certificate of completion will be granted to the student. When all five sections are completed a diploma of graduation will be granted. These will be stamped with the seal of the college and signed by the president of the college and by the director of the Religious Normal Training Department.

Enrollment Fee

An enrollment fee of 25 cents per section will be charged, to cover the expense of enrolling and of inscribing the student's name on the certificates of completion. This fee is paid at the time of enrollment. No student will be considered enrolled unless this fee accompanies the enrollment blank.

BOOKS FOR CHURCH SCHOOL WORKERS

Besides the books recommended by the Religious Normal Training Department as found on the immediate preceding pages of the notebook, we would like to recommend the following books for supplementary reading. These books may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House. Inquire at the book stand, Library, Room 102.

Books for Your Library

After a Sunday school has provided itself with the books of the regular Normal Training Course of Graceland College, we recommend the following:

The Best Five

Betts: How to Teach Religion.
Munkres: Primary Methods in the Church School.

The Second Best Five

Hartshorn: Childhood and Character.
Coe: A Social Theory of Religious Education.
Weigle: Talks to Sunday School Teachers.
Cope: The School in the Modern Church.
Esenwein and Stockard: Children's Stories and How to Tell Them.

Hartshorn: Childhood and Character. A thorough study of the religious characteristics and capacities of the various stages of childhood.

Cope: The Parent and the Child. This book is about two years old, but discusses the various problems of fear and anger, etc., very adequately.

Gruenberg: Outlines of Child Study. This is a 1923 book. Its value is in that it has some of the material phases of Child Study and has been brought up by modern scientific developments, such as the discussion of the spiritual child, mental hygiene, etc.

The Teacher

Betts: How to Teach Religion. The best all-around book on aims, methods, and material in teaching religion.

Weigle: Talks to Sunday School Teachers. A very splendid, easy book on pedagogy involved in teaching.

Cope: The School in the Modern Church. The most recent book in the discussion of the use of the Sunday school, the young people's societies, and various other organizations as the Boy Scout meeting in a single church community. One of the best books for pastors who are attempting to supervise all of the departments.

Betts: The Curriculum of Religious Education. This is a pamphlet discussing in very terse terms the question of the curriculum.

Crossland: The Junior Church in Action. An excellent book for Sunday school superintendents and pastors who are starting junior churches at the 11 o'clock hour.

Evans: The Sunday School Building and Its Equipment. A book that every church ought to have when it thinks of building a new church or buying equipment for a church school.

Brown: The Superintendent. Every superintendent should have this book in his library.

Pictures

We have on exhibition the pictures to be used in connection with the Primary and Beginner quarterlies for July-August-September quarter. The pictures which we secured from the W. A. Wilde Bible Company are pasted into the notebook, and the lesson in connection with which each picture is used is noted on the sheet on which the picture is pasted. The Wilde pictures are 6 by 8 inches in size and cost 1½ cents each. It is advised that one picture be bought for each teacher of the Primary Department of your Sunday school. We also have the pictures from the George P. Brown in two sizes, the 5½ by 8 which cost 1¼ cents each, and the 3 by 3¼ which cost one half cent each. These are also pasted in notebooks with the lesson denoted for each picture.

One would not want to buy the large size of both the Wilde and the Brown. You would want to pick the most suitable picture for each lesson and to supplement one list by the other with such picture as the other does not have. This is explained more particularly in the front of the July-August-September Primary quarterly.

Instead of buying all of our Beginner pictures from the one company, we have bought from the various companies, a full set of pictures both large and small size. Both are pasted in the order of their lessons with the lesson denoted. You can tell from which company the picture was bought by looking at the picture itself.

We also have on exhibition some larger pictures, most of them 10 by 12, one 5½ by 8, which we feel would be particularly suitable for general use in the various departments, and either these or the same pictures in larger sizes could be used for hanging on the wall in Sunday school. Those of the pictures particularly suitable for the Beginner and Primary are:

The Sistine Madonna.
Christ Blessing the Children.
Infant Samuel.
Arrival of the Shepherds.
Kiss Me.
Feeding Her Birds.
Two Mothers and Their Families

Those particularly suitable for the Junior Department are:

Christ and the Doctors.
Sir Galahad.
The Last Supper.

For the Intermediate and Senior:

Christ in Gethsemane.
Christ Before Pilate.
Christ and the Rich Young Man.
Feeding Her Birds.

The pictures here on display were secured from the Perry Pictures Company, Malden, Massachusetts. These same pictures could be secured in larger sizes from the same company and most of them can be secured elsewhere in larger sizes for framing.

Much of your reunion activity for beginner, primary, and juniors could be carried on through the use of pictures. Series of pictures could be bought for the reunion and used during the reunion. The list of pictures suitable for each age will be found on pages 122 and 123 in a book by Beard entitled Pictures in Religious Education. A copy of this book for perusal can be secured at the college library.

We have on display a large framed picture of Christ and the Doctors.

We also have on display the eight sets of large pictures put out by the Methodist Book Concern to be used in connection with the International series of graded lessons for beginners. We have on hand copies of the Presbyterian edition of the International Sunday School graded lessons for beginners. These pictures are suitable to be used with these quarterlies. It would pay any Sunday school to buy these to have on hand regularly at Sunday school. It would be preferable, however, to buy the large size pictures from the regular picture companies.

Pictures suitable for use in Sunday schools can be obtained from the Perry Pictures Company, Malden, Massachusetts; the W. A. Wilde Bible Company, 120 Boylston Street, Boston, Massachusetts; and the George P. Brown Company, 38 Lovett Street, Beverly, Massachusetts. The George P. Brown Company sell two sizes suitable for Sunday schools, the size 3 by 3¼ suitable for giving out to each one of the children, and size 5½ by 8 suitable for each teacher to have one. They also have pictures in a larger size, about 9 by 12. The W. A. Wilde Bible pictures are of one size only, 6 by 8. The Perry Pictures Company sells pictures, small size about 3 by 3¼ suitable to give out to children, size 5½ by 8, and 10 by 12 suitable for use by teachers. This latter company also sells pictures suitable for wall use.

Other information regarding the source of pictures may be secured by writing to the Department of Sunday School, Lamoni, Iowa, if the catalogues of the above companies do not give you all the information you want.

The Herald Publishing House does not care to carry orders for pictures, since to do so entails loss to them. Get in the habit of getting in touch with the picture companies. Secure their catalogues.

Maps

Every Sunday school should have at least three large wall maps for use in studying the Bible: First a map of Palestine during the Life of Christ; second, the Kingdoms of Judea and Israel in the days of its supremacy; and, a map of the Journeys of Paul. Other large maps might include the land of Asia and Mesopotamia during the days of Abraham, and a map of the Exodus.

Of the first three mentioned cheap ones can be bought from the David C. Cook Publishing Company, Elgin, Illinois. More expensive maps are the W. & A. K. Johnston's Scriptural Maps, 44 by 52, which can be obtained from almost any school supply house.

The David C. Cook maps will cost $1.75 each and the Johnston's maps will cost $5.50 each.

No doubt the Herald Publishing House would handle any order for large maps.

The large maps that are on display in the Sunday school room, or which are to be found in the church school room belong to the local Sunday school.

The large relief map of Palestine to be found on exhibit cost the local Sunday school $25.

We have on exhibit a raised map of Bible lands. These can be bought from the David C. Cook Publishing Company for three cents. We also have on exhibit some outline maps for student use. These may be bought for one cent each from the David C. Cook Publishing Company. It is possible to mimeograph these maps.

For the study of our own church history, large maps of the State of Missouri and the United States should be had. These can be secured from any school supply house or doubtless through the Herald Publishing House.

College Educated Farmer's Income Largest of All

An investigation of the income of five hundred fifty-four farmers in one county of Missouri, made by the Missouri School of Agriculture, showed that the educated farmer's income was 71.4 per cent larger than that of the untrained farmer. A survey of the incomes of six hundred thirty-five farmers in seven counties of Kansas, made by the Kansas State Agricultural College, showed that the trained farmer has a greater income by nearly $1,000 a year than those of farmers with a common school education.

The United States Department of Agriculture reports a survey of three representative areas in Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa. It is shown that tenant farmers with a college education receive an average labor income of $463 more a year than the man with a high school education and $979 more a year than the man with only a common school education.

Cornell University reports that men having more than a high school education receive $225 more a year than farmers with a high school education and $529 a year more than farmers with a common school education. They also report that 5 per cent of the farmers with a district school educa-

States Represented at the Convention

Arizona, California, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, England, Isle of Pines, Ontario, Saskatchewan.

The above shows a total of 25 States, 2 provinces of Canada, and 2 foreign countries represented by attendants at the Young People's Convention.

Committee on Reception

Visitors and delegates to the convention are being met at the station by a reception committee which provides for conveyance to places of lodging and which books those who have not already made arrangements for a place to stay. Strangers arriving from various parts of the country are being well cared for, all arrangements for handling the crowd being efficiently provided. Hugo H. Gold is in charge of registration.

For the main lectures and programs the committee has provided a large tent, having a capacity of 1,200. This has been loaned without charge by the Little Sioux District. In addition to this all of the class rooms, together with the chapel and library of the college are open for use. On Sundays the local church and high school are used that all may be provided for without difficulty.

Arrangements were made to accommodate a large number of the visitors at the college dormitories, and at the Herald Hall. In addition to this a number of the Lamoni people offered every available room in their homes. Some of those tion had labor incomes of more than $1,000, and that 20 per cent of the farmers with a high school education had labor incomes of more than $1,000. Thirty per cent of the farmers with more than high school education had labor incomes of more than $1,000. A high school education is worth as much to the farmer as $6,000 worth of 5 per cent bonds. A college education is worth twice as much.—Saint Louis Post Dispatch, Sunday Magazine, May 27, 1923.

coming by auto are camping. For these excellent camping privileges have been provided.

C. W. Wolfe has successfully conducted the commissary department at Graceland the past three years and has thus earned the privilege for himself and wife of attending college. That he has worked hard is shown by the fact that he has not only bought the supplies and managed this department, but has also carried on his school work with sufficient skill as to be classed in the upper twenty-five per cent in class grades. He now has two large tents south of the college and serves from 180 to 190 at once on the cafeteria plan. Charles J. Smith, now a missionary but formerly a Graceland student, will assist him.

Every effort has been made to keep the prices at a minimum and yet serve wholesome food. Many of the visitors are being entertained at private homes.

Organization of Recreation

A course on recreational leadership is being organized for attendance during the convention. At a meeting in the big tent at 3 p. m., June 7, plans were outlined for this course and for the athletic and play program.

Floyd M. McDowell announced the course which is to begin immediately and which is open to all registered delegates. Practical demonstrations for the class work are arranged in form of model games, supervised by experts and played by those skilled in each game. After the demonstration the members of the class are divided into groups and individually instructed along the same lines.

Professor A. R. Gilbert of the physical education department who is in charge of the recreational program, spoke on the subject and offered Graceland's athletic equipment for the use of the convention.

Setting-up exercises were announced for men and women at 6 o'clock every morning.

Following the meeting, groups and teams were organized for immediate action and the recreational program was under way five minutes later, the boys playing baseball and tennis, the girls volley-ball, being organized into five teams.

This program has started off with a snap, and bids fair to be a highly successful enterprise, both educationally and from the point of view of training for leadership and recreationally for all those enjoying sports.

Convention Songs

We Love Our Little College

(Adapted from the song "I have a little cottage" by Geoffrey O'Hara)

Words by Myrtle Grapes, Student Nurse

We love our little college, on a friendly little hill.
 We love you, dear old Graceland, with your spirit of good will.
 We love our little college, as it stands nearby a wood.
 We love you, oh, so dearly, and we'll tell you why we should.

Because our dear old Graceland is a beacon on a hill;
 Because our little college is a guidepost if you will.
 Because the dear old college as it rests upon the sod
 Is another of the builders, that keeps building men for God.

We love you dear old Graceland, as you stand near by a wood;
 We love you oh so dearly and we'll tell you why we should:
 Because our dear old college, as it rests upon the sod,
 Is another of the builders that keeps building men for God.

(Repeat last line.)

The Song of the Pilgrim

(Adapted from the "Pilgrim's chorus" from "Tannhauser.")

Oh, Zion, now, we with rapture behold thee,
And greet the hills that so sweetly enfold thee,
Our pilgrim souls, to thy walls draw near
To serve our God forevermore.
Hallelujah, hallelujah.

To serve our God,—to serve our God forevermore.

The Bells of Lamoni

(Adapted from the song, "The bells of Saint Mary's.")

The Bells of Lamoni, ah! hear, they are calling
The young Saints, the true Saints, that come from afar,
And so my beloved, with hearts overflowing,
Lamoni bells ring out a call for you and me.

Reception at Brick Church

A reception by the church for the young people at the convention was held on the opening night, June 7, at 8 p. m. at the Brick Church.

Opening of the reception was a song service led by Albert N. Hoxie, who stirred the audience into life and vigor by his selection and leading of songs. Everybody entered heartily into the popular songs of the occasion and sang until the little building fairly shook upon its foundation.

Wilbur E. Prall made the speech of welcome to the delegates, making them feel at home in Lamoni.

Speaking on the ideals of the young people John A. Gardner outlined briefly the high standards which the young are striving to attain.

A reading by Frances Van Fleet was thoroughly appreciated by all. This was followed by a violin solo by Emma Snead, who rendered beautifully the selection.

The audience was then divided up into four sections, each of which repaired to another room under a leader, and devised stunts to be put on by each section later in the evening.

The audience was again seated, except for the chosen actors and the stunts began. They proved very entertaining, the fun being chiefly at the expense of those acting.

Refreshments were served and the splendid welcome came to a close.

Community Singing

Community singing in the tent is held at 7.30, led by Albert N. Hoxie. How great the response to music! The tent is filled with eager young people heartily enjoying the occasion and singing with all the vigor possessed by youth. Under this inspiring leader, the tent resounds with song and the young people are drawn closer together by the bonds of harmony. Music truly hath charms!

Religious Life Day

Prayer service was held for the opening of the convention June 8, at 7.30 a. m. The big tent was filled, the morning beautiful and the spirit excellent. Some stirring testimonies, enjoyable singing and the spirit of prophecy was evidenced that morning in one of the most spiritual and beautiful meetings in the experience of the church. God is certainly with the convention and is recognizing the splendid efforts being made on the part of the young people to prepare for the building of Zion. Truly the comradeship and love existing among those gathered for the convention is a demonstration that Zion is being redeemed and that but a short time remains before the great spirit manifested here will permeate the entire membership of the church, leaving differences to one side in our strides toward perfection.

Round Table Discussion

"How many dance?" was the startling question put by T. W. Williams to the young people gathered in the big tent at 1.30 p. m. to discuss the question of recreation and expression in the church, this being the first meeting of the series of round table discussions in which problems are to be discussed and answers given where possible.

Brother Williams in his splendid and daring way faced the situation squarely and threw it out to the people to discuss.

An effort is being made to form some definite attitudes toward recreation and expression that we as a people may have but one program throughout the church and upon that all be agreed.

The advantages and disadvantages of all kinds of recreation were taken up and freely discussed. Our hope is that before this convention adjourns for another year, we may offer to those who cannot be here but who are watching with eagerness our movements here, some sort of program for general observance among our young people in recreation and expression.

Sermon: "Why Religion At All?"

President Elbert A. Smith addressed the convention in the big tent June 8, at 8 p. m. on "Why religion at all?"

President Smith answered his question in four subdivisions. First, religion puts meaning into the universe; second, it furnishes the basis for a philosophy of life; third, it redeems the individual human soul by development; and fourth, it develops and saves the collective soul.

By this splendid analysis of the problem, President Elbert presented a clearly cut thesis which was comprehensive yet simply and beautifully told.

This, as well as other sermons and lectures given at the convention, will be published in the HERALD so that the full context may be enjoyed by those who were not privileged to be at the convention.

Missionary Day, June 9

Prayer service was held at 7.30 a. m. The Spirit was present in abundance, and although the day began in a heavy rain, large numbers were present, thereby assuring the success of the convention. Young people who will arise for 7.30 prayer meeting and brave the storm to be present, surely have the spirit of earnestness in them. This wonderful manifestation of faith and desire for spiritual life is a revelation for the church as a whole. Such indomitable will to learn of God and move forward in the faith will redeem Zion should all forces of Satan strive to intercede. God is with the convention and our anticipation for something bigger and better cannot fail to be realized.

Class work continued as usual at 8 o'clock, there being over a hundred students in each of the courses offered and more entering every day.

At 10 o'clock the symposium was again held in the big tent, the topic being "Missionary aims and problems." Speakers were J. A. Gillen, J. F. Garver, and F. Henry Edwards. The speakers were as one in saying that we as a church have not yet demonstrated to the world that we are the true church of God. Nevertheless confidence was also expressed that out of this convention would grow that united organization of young people that would consecrate itself to the redemption of Zion. A show of hands indicated the almost unanimous response on the part of the young people in approving of the expression made by the speakers.

At 1.30 p. m. the round table discussions were continued, where missionary problems were discussed. The rest of the day was devoted to a continuation of the class, and recreational work started the first day.

The weather continued rainy all day, making it disagreeable to hold meetings in the big tent so the college buildings were utilized for meetings.

"The taming of the shrew" was presented by the College Players in two performances, the first at 5.15 and the second at 8 p. m. in the college auditorium. Music was furnished by the Graceland string quartet. Joseph Anway as Petruchio and Frances Van Fleet as Katherine were splendid in their leads. The rest of the cast lent able support, and the play proved to be a great success. This production is the fifth to be given by the College Players this year, under the direction of Miss June Whiting.

Missionary, Day, June 10

Sunday morning services were held in town, the weather still being rainy and the roads bad. Sunday school was conducted in the high school and preaching service at the Brick Church, John F. Garver being the speaker.

A social service meeting was held at 2.30 p. m., the theme being "Preparation."

The local Religio met at 6.30 with class study and a good program. Special music began at 7.45, followed by the foreign missionary program in charge of F. Henry Edwards.

The convention offers the first occasion in the history of the church when the young people from all over the world can gather and discuss their problems.

The spirit of cooperation at this gathering is one of the greatest things ever witnessed by this people. When all is over and the delegates go back to their respective homes they will carry with them a new vision of life, a more comprehensive view of the work and some definite methods for the organization of the young in their branches with faces toward Zion.

Graceland a Senior College

At the commencement exercises announcement was made that Graceland will now offer a four-year college course. The catalogue for 1922-23 gives the further information that the college is divided into a junior college which prepares for the senior college or for professional schools and the senior college of the third and fourth year's work.

In 1914 the junior college was definitely established. At that time the collegiate department had but few students, and only three ready to graduate from junior college. It was expected that working definitely to do well the work of a junior college that Graceland would soon justify herself, and gain proper recognition.

That hope and expectation has been fulfilled by the steady growth of that department, until this year 117 names are listed and 34 graduated from the college with degree of A. A.

The junior college now offers the preliminary work necessary before taking up professional studies in a regular college of medicine, law, commerce, dentistry or engineering. It also prepares for the third grade state teacher's certificate, besides laying the foundation of the regular liberal arts course. Naturally the studies are differentiated in these different courses, so as to fit the student to pursue his chosen line of study and work.

Now the senior college proposes a regular liberal arts course requiring 120 semester hours out of 390 semester hours offered. The candidate for the degree of bachelor of arts does not take quite a third of the courses now offered. The senior college also prepares those who specialize in education and fulfill the requirements for a first grade state teacher's certificate.

Convention Notes

A sign reads, "Believe all things—even evolution."

However, "The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going." (Proverbs 14: 15.)

"Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." (1 Thessalonians 5: 21.)

Before we believe or hold fast all things, let us prove or test first.

A professor at Princeton is quoted as saying that science does not want to come to religion to be put to bed every Saturday night.

No, nor does religion want to come to science to be put to bed every night.

It is not enough of religion that it cleanses. True religion teaches us to keep clean in the first place. Zion is the pure in heart.

Morality is needed for right living, but religion is more than morality.

Do good to others and for others, seek to draw near to God, live unselfishly for family, for church, and for community, then incidentally through right living you grow and live more fully, physically, mentally, and spiritually, and are more fit to live with yourself.

Sister Marietta Walker, though rarely able to get out to public occasions, was out and reviewed the parade on Tuesday.

The round table each day at 1.30 p. m. is being held in the big tent. One subject is taken up each day for the benefit of all.

In forensics Winifred Weinheimer was announced at chapel as holding the highest individual rank with thirty-four points. But close after her were Frank Holmes and Mabel Mussell with thirty-three points each, and Paul Fischel and Walter Daykin with thirty points each. The Niketes as a group earned 267 points for the cup, followed by the Alpha Pi Sigma society with 254 points.

A humorous note was struck when the Niketes were announced as winners of the forensic cup. John F. Garver jumped up and asked, "Who's all right?" "The Niketes." "Who says so?" The usual and expected answer is, "We all say so," but some one called out promptly, "The Niketes."

Professor Woodstock said he taught physiology for years but until he had pupils bring their tooth brushes to school, live in fresh air, etc., no practical results were obtained. Religion is life, doing.

In making a cake, McDowell said, baking powder has to be put in early. If not the cake won't rise. Religion is the same. Men must have it early in life if it makes them religious.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Graceland Confers Honorary Degrees

As a part of the commencement exercises Graceland College this year conferred two honorary degrees, for the first time in her history. This was done largely in honor of the establishment of a four-year college course. It may also have been considered as part of the first general home-coming, and in commemoration of the first graduating class of twenty-five years ago.

The first of these honorary degrees was conferred on Frederick M. Smith, who constituted that first class of 1898, when he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts (B. A.). Later he received the degree of Master of Arts (M. A.) from Kansas University, taking much of his work under Doctor Frank W. Blackmar, who delivered the commencement address this year. Then in 1916 he received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Ph. D.) from Clark University. Now Graceland College confers on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity (D. D.).

The other recipient of an honorary degree was George N. Briggs, who already held the degrees of B. A. and B. D. and who has taken postgraduate work at different times in the University of Chicago, his previous collegiate work being taken at Iowa State Teachers' College, the State University of Iowa, and Drake University. He has had many years experience in school work as superintendent of schools in Lamoni, Iowa, 1897-1901, then as Division Superintendent of schools in the Philippine Islands, 1901-1909, Superintendent of the Philippine Normal School, 1909-1910; Special representative of the Philippine Bureau of Education and of the United States Bureau of Education, until he became president of Graceland College in 1915. He has therefore served Graceland College and the church very acceptably in that position for eight years. He now receives the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws (LL. D.). This is the usual honorary degree of American universities, and is frequently bestowed for distinguished service.

The selection of the candidates as well as the honorary degree conferred on each was by virtue of action taken by the Board of Trustees of the college.

Letter From Apostle Gillen to Sister M. Walker

[The following letter written by Apostle James A. Gillen, as will be readily observed, is addressed to Mrs. M. Walker. Sister Walker prized this letter so highly and appreciated its advice and counsel so much that in conversation with one of the editors of the HERALD she expressed a desire to see it in print, feeling that it might also comfort and strengthen others and help them sometime in the day of trial. We have therefore secured from Brother Gillen permission to reprint this letter.—HERALD EDITORS.]

FEBRUARY, 27, 1923.

MRS. M. WALKER,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sister Walker: No doubt you have long since reached the conclusion that I have forgotten the promise I made to you during my recent visit to your home. As a matter of fact, I have not forgotten, but unfortunately my last day in Lamoni I fell a victim to an aggravated case of influenza. The following morning I took the train for Independence, reaching home under high temperature. This continued practically during the rest of the week.

Inasmuch as I had been advertised to deliver a missionary effort at Stewartsville, I felt it my duty to protect this appointment, still suffering more or less from influenza.

The statement I made to you in your home was about as follows; the incident referred to occurring about the time of Brother R. C. Evans's withdrawal from the church. President Smith was in El Paso, Texas, Brother Elbert in the West recuperating, during which time Brother Fred M. asked me to remain in the office, handling the situation as best I could until his return. At this particular time letters were coming in from various parts of the United States, relative to the course the church had pursued with Brother Evans.

Because of this added correspondence, at which I worked night and day, I reached a point where I was discouraged, and wondered where it would all end. Feeling the burden of responsibility, I bowed my head upon the desk in front of me and offered a silent prayer to the Lord about as follows: "O Lord, how long will these things continue within the church? Will the time ever come when we will be free from the disturbing elements so apparent in the church?" No word was said to me, but the following thoughts were burned into my very being, which can be conveyed in these words: "My son, if you knew and realized the time in which you live, and were fully aware of the subtle and insidious influences at work, having for their purpose not only the overthrow of individuals within the church, but the church itself, you would know that the end is not yet. Some occupying high places within the church will grow cold; others fail; and still others fall away."

Furthermore, those who were not fully identified with the spirit of the Master and those who were not humble and full of love would be standing on dangerous ground. On the other hand, feel assured that those who in humility and meekness would go forward without hesitation and unreservedly identify themselves with the spirit of the Master, with no other thought than to bring about God's eternal purposes on earth, no power in earth or in hell can take them out of his hand.

I was given further to understand that, through faithfulness to the church through its membership, the time was not far distant when the Saints would be permitted to taste of fruit hitherto unknown, which was just out of their reach.

This, Sister Walker, is in substance what I said to you in your home. I want to assure you that, as far as I am personally concerned, there never was a time in the history of the church when there was greater necessity for believing that Jesus is the Christ. It seems that even the Christian world is denying the resurrection of Christ, as given to us in the New Testament scripture.

Furthermore, from what I have experienced within the last year or two, I am quite sure that there is need for a practical demonstration of the power of Christ, as demanded of us by the world.

I go forward full of hope and with the assurance that while there may be difficulty ahead of us, the church will finally triumph.

Wishing you happiness and comfort in the cause which you have espoused and which you love, I am

Very sincerely,

JAMES A. GILLEN.

Sister Lucy Ketcham of Monmouth, Iowa, writes: "I could hardly get along without the church papers as they contain all the sermons I hear. I love to read in them the many testimonies of others. The papers surely are a lot of help to one who is isolated from church privileges. I am glad that I can say that this is God's true church. Although I have had many trials, my heavenly Father has been near me."

Missionary Sawley Still at Work

Elder F. L. Sawley, Marion, Illinois, writes: "As a result of having been an active missionary for over twenty-five years, and having labored in several States and districts, I have made many friends for myself and the church. The last three years, I have been superannuated, honorably released from active missionary labors, yet during these years I have found no stopping place in this grand work. So, as far as my strength would allow, I have been just as busy as ever. I am now recovering rapidly from an affliction of the past three months, and will soon be ready to do my mite in the work as pastor in Marion and Superintendent of Recreation and Expression in the Southeastern Illinois District. More and more as the years come and go, I love the gospel and all pertaining to it by many signal blessings to me. Hence by the Spirit of the work, I try to render service to our heavenly Father and to the people, serving in and out of the church, which brings joy and great satisfaction even though I am not as strong in body as I would wish to be."

C. A. Butterworth in Ill Health

[The following items written by Apostle M. A. McConley concerning the present health of Brother C. A. Butterworth, formerly a member of the Quorum of Twelve, may be of interest to the many friends of Brother Butterworth in various parts of the world.—EDITORS.]

I visited Brother Butterworth at his home at Geelong on March 28 and found him quite poorly. On Monday, March 26, he went out to the fowl yard about bedtime to gather some eggs and had a bad spell with his heart and fell in the yard. About a half hour later Sister Butterworth went out and found him and finally got him revived so he could walk back to the house. He was just pulling around again on Wednesday when I arrived.

By the end of the week he was feeling better and attended the reunion at Melbourne. On Saturday of the reunion his wife's niece died and he conducted the funeral service, in which I assisted him, on Monday, April 2. He went home completely exhausted, and that evening his wife's brother died, (Brother James Craig, a brother of Bishop A. W. Craig) but he was unable to attend the service when we buried him on Wednesday.

We all know that Brother Butterworth has been in a very indifferent state of health for many years, but he is much worse than formerly and any ministerial work seems to arouse his nervous system to the extent that sleep is almost impossible. When he can do some work in the open air, as he did recently in assisting his son to build a house, he is quite well.

Pottawattamie District Banquet

On Saturday evening May 5 about two hundred twenty-five young people of Pottawattamie District and Omaha assembled at a banquet, in the Eagles' Hall, in Council Bluffs.

President Frederick M. Smith who was the speaker explained very clearly that one must have "Preparedness" and a "consecrated life" if he would be of service.

We are sure that both young and old have grasped a larger vision of the work, and a better understanding of President Smith on account of his visit with us.

Brother O. Salisbury was toastmaster of the occasion, and short talks on "The young people's convention" and "our ideal" were given by Howard Timm and Roy Henderson, respectively.

The Women's Department took charge of preparing and servicing the three-course luncheon which everyone was in excellent spirit to enjoy after a few numbers by the branch orchestra and some singing.

We offer this article at this late date because we want you to know that much good may be done by a gathering of this kind, as has been the case with this one.

H. H. HAND.

Bisbee, Arizona

We are pleased to announce that Sister Daisy B. Short and Sister D. L. Evans left for Lamoni June 3, to attend the Young People's Convention at that place. They were delayed one week owing to Sister Short being sick, and it was thought for a time that they would not get to attend the convention. We are glad that they have been able to go, as we believe it will do them a great deal of good, and also bring considerable good to those of us who cannot go, upon their return.

The Bisbee Branch is arranging for a Fourth of July picnic for all members of the branch, Sunday school, and Religion who wish to go. We also hear remarks about a two-day meeting some time before the last of August, at which time we expect to lose four of our young people who are about to be swallowed up by Graceland College.

The pastor takes an auto load of Saints to Douglas every Tuesday night, where he conducts a very interesting Bible class. He also takes a load to Warren on Thursday nights, where a Bible class is maintained.

A special effort is to be made to sell our old church property, and invest the money in a suitable building lot.

E. R. DAVIS.

BISBEE, ARIZONA, June 7, 1923.

Kirtland Temple Meetings

The young people's meetings in the Temple are now history, and I want to say that I never enjoyed a series of meetings more than this one. It was my first attempt at preaching a series primarily for young people, conducted by young people, and the work was indeed a pleasure.

It was really inspiring to see how the young people took hold from the beginning and stuck loyally to their task until the very close. They had their forces well organized. A number of teams were formed who canvassed the territory for miles around extending a personal invitation as well as placing printed announcements in the various homes. The branch chorister was secured for the meetings, and a splendid orchestra was on hand every evening. Who could not preach under such conditions? Notwithstanding I was kept busy through the day endeavoring to get settled in our new place of residence and was physically tired out by evening, when the old Temple bell would ring, calling us to vesper service, it seemed to stir up memories of the sacrifice and toil of the early Saints who built the sacred "House of the Lord" and made one forget his own weariness, and with energy and strength that surprised me I went at my task each evening and was abundantly blessed in preaching the word.

The subjects dealt with the fundamentals of our belief, as it was requested that I preach on the doctrine of the church, and the young people brought pencil and pad and took down the quotations, made notes on the sermons, and manifested such an interest generally that it was a pleasure to preach to them.

Sincerely your brother,

JOHN F. MARTIN.

Independence

Everything in Independence would have seemed rather quiet this last week with so many enjoying the Home-Coming and Young People's Convention in Lamoni, if it had not been for two weddings, in which the Independence people were very much interested.

The marriage of Sister Louise Giesch of Independence and Brother Edward A. Fox of Rhode Island, occurred at the Stone Church Tuesday evening with Elder Walter W. Smith officiating. A reception was held at the home of the bride's mother immediately after the ceremony. Brother and Sister Fox will be at home in Providence after June 18.

The other wedding was that of Sister Oneda Elliott of this city to Brother Russell Archibald formerly of Saint Louis, but now also a resident of Independence. Elder J. A. Gillen performed the ceremony at the Stone Church on Wednesday evening. A reception was held after the wedding at the home of the bride's parents on South Chrysler Street. Brother and Sister Archibald expect to locate on North Union Street of this city.

People have been coming and going from the convention at Lamoni all week, some by train and some in cars across country. President Frederick M. Smith attended Graceland's Commencement and Home-Coming, preaching the baccalaureate sermon Sunday evening, staying to see the convention well started out. He returned home Thursday morning and will return the latter part of this week for the close of the convention.

Brother Elbert A. Smith addressed the convention twice on Friday and returned to his home and duties in Independence on Saturday. Bishop J. F. Keir left Monday for Lamoni where he expects to speak to the young people during the week. Among our workers whom we have missed on account of the convention are: R. V. Hopkins, Brother and Sister J. A. Gardner, Brother and Sister Henry Stahl, Sister Harold C. Burgess, Brother and Sister George E. Anway, Brother and Sister John Feldhahn, Marcine Smith, and Estella Wight. Some who planned to go have been delayed by the stormy weather and impassable roads.

The Sanitarium reports a son born to Brother and Sister Richard and Dorothy Case Maloney on Friday. The new baby is a grandson of Brother Hubert Case.

Brother and Sister E. A. Curtis are now the proud parents of five fine boys, the fifth son being born Monday morning at their home on North Willis.

Preaching services for Independence Sunday were as follows: Stone Church, E. A. Curtis in the morning and Hubert Case in the evening; Second Independence Church observed Children's Day; Liberty Street Church, J. W. Peterson was the morning speaker and H. O. Smith, the evening speaker; Enoch Hill, F. A. Smith in the morning and C. B. Hartshorn in the evening.

Kansas City Stake News

Our stake conference held the 20th and 21st of May, 1923, was remarkably active, peaceful, and spiritual. There were ten services held: Sunday school, three preaching, two social, one of the Department of Women, one priesthood, elders quorum, and one business session, at all of which there was a representative attendance.

The speaker at 11 o'clock was Elder Arthur B. Phillips. His theme was taken from Matthew 28, "All power is given to me in heaven and on earth, go ye therefore and teach all nations."

Also at the 11 o'clock hour a regular quarterly juvenile service was held in the church parlors, the speaker being

Patriarch Ammon White. The elders quorum met at 1.30 p. m. At 2.30 the young people gathered in the north room and were addressed by Apostle T. W. Williams with reference to the home-coming at Lamoni. About twenty-five hands were raised when they were asked as to who intended to go. At the same hour in the main auditorium was held the regular prayer and testimony meeting, the special gifts being manifested in tongues and prophecy.

At 4.15 p. m. the ministry were addressed by stake missionary Amos T. Higdon who endeavored to rally support and help from the local men in his missionary efforts.

At the same hour the Department of Women was addressed by Stake President Joseph A. Tanner. This was the first time he had been called upon to address them. He gave a very instructive talk, advising along practical lines. It was said by several to be the best women's service they had attended.

At 7.30 a song service was held in charge of stake chorister, Bernice Griffith. At 7.45, Bishop James F. Keir addressed the congregation on some phases of the work of the general bishopric, using as a text Joshua 3:5, "Sanctify yourselves, for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you."

A business session was held at 8 p. m. May 21. Associate pastors were: Grandview, R. E. Browne; Chelsea, A. W. Sears; Second Kansas City, F. A. Evans. Brother D. J. Kennedy was called to the office of deacon and ordination ordered. The local auditing committee was discontinued and the general Bishop asked to furnish an audit of stake finances.

The Bishop's report showed balance on hand last report	$ 3,775.08

Received since	10,451.04
Total	$14,226.12
Expenditures for the quarter	13,896.88
Balance on hand	$ 329.24

A resolution that the stake take steps to purchase a church for the Armourdale Saints was referred to the Presidency and Bishopric with authority to act.

Elder R. V. Hopkins, pastor in Zion, was the speaker the first Sunday in May at Malvern Hill. They expect Apostle J. A. Gillen to be the speaker Sunday, June 3.

Stake Missionary Amos T. Higdon has held six weeks' special meetings in Armourdale and as a result five were baptized and ten have asked for baptism. He also has held two weeks' meetings at Bennington at which the attendance for the most part was very good.

The ministers of the various churches of Kansas City, Kansas, held a meeting the evening of the 14th of May in the interest of religious education. Prior to this some of our local pastors took advantage of an offer made by the ministerial alliance of Kansas City, Kansas, and became members of that body. Our pastors, with the pastors of other churches, met at the before-mentioned meeting at which a plan was adopted, the gist of which is as follows: One day each week shall be set aside each week in the interest of religious education, affording the pupils of the ward schools the benefits of classes arranged for what is termed evangelical religious study. Any church, regardless of denomination that is equipped with teachers and room made comfortable in proximity to school building may apply. Teachers must pass an examination before the superintendent of schools as to their fitness to teach. The following officers were elected: president, the local Baptist minister; a vice president, secretary, treasurer, a board of four men to look after this new departure in education. If properly handled, good will surely come from the venture.

Blue Pencil Notes

The deepest wounds are those a man receives in the house of his friends, and they leave the worst scars.

Elder Elijah Banta of honorable memory was troubled with an impediment to his speech—but his wit was quite without impediment. One day he was walking the streets of Sandwich, Illinois, when he observed some men constructing a house. Stopping to greet them he inquired affably, "Wh-wh-wh-what are you bub-bub-bub-building?" The foreman replied gruffly, "We're building a home for stuttering men and skunks." Still affable, Elder Banta replied instantly, "F-F-F-Fine! We'll be c-c-c-company for each other."

Occasionally peculiarly addressed letters come to the church officials. Perhaps the most pleasing of these was addressed, "To the Recognized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Elder Passman sends us one which came to him addressed: "Dear Sir Mr. Harry Elder Passman, Shepherd and Pastor of Israel and Missionary of Mormon Society of the Holy Jewish Mission of the Messiah Jeshua of Nazareth of Letter Day Saints in Jerusalem (Service Reorganized)."

Among the depressing daily news items of divorces, hold-ups, murders, and scandals from time to time appear brief mention of very wholesome and splendid examples of heroism and service—as for instance the report that certain prominent Chinese officials had volunteered to surrender to the bandits on condition that they would release the foreign prisoners held as hostages. Such an offer from "heathen Chinese" on behalf of foreign Christians certainly revealed great nobility of purpose, a determination at personal cost, perhaps of life, to save the foreigners or to relieve the Chinese Government of danger of foreign interposition or both. It might be difficult to find Christians in this country who would give themselves up to bondage, perhaps death, to save visiting Chinese—but on condition no doubt it could be done. The hero and the martyr still persist.

Some weeks ago a mass meeting was held in the Stone Church in Independence for the purpose of considering the purchase of the Swope property for a church community center and raising pledges of money for that purpose. By the whim of the malevolent forces that get things mixed, the news in traveling to Kansas City by telephone distorted the "mass meeting" into a "dance meeting." And it appeared in cold type in the morning edition of the Star that a dance had been held in the Stone Church. A very natural wave of indignation swept over Independence and adjacent cities where Saints live in numbers. Many protests were lodged with the editors of the Star and in two subsequent editions corrections were made, the last one being given a prominent place on the front page, also the editor wrote a personal apology which was read before the Stone Church congregation of a Sunday. That would seem to settle the matter, but it is learned that in at least one branch far distant some of our own members believed the first report and are still repeating it. Evidently the one error traveled faster and farther than the three corrections, which reminds us of the old maxim that "a lie will travel around the earth while the truth is getting her boots on." Also it points a moral: Be slow to believe evil of your own people.

Possibly the Phillipians were troubled by letters from Jerusalem, or by sundry reports, we know not; in any event that was very wholesome advice given by the Apostle Paul: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise think on these things."

Truth, justice, beauty, praise, good reports concerning our brethren, virtue, these things are excellent food for thought; error, injustice, ugliness, evil reports, these should not engage our minds habitually—we should give them only enough attention to clear them from the path that Truth and Justice and Love may walk safely therein.

We are happy to report that possibly the most impressive, lovely, and spiritual communion service ever held in Independence was enjoyed by the Saints at the Stone Church on the first Sunday of the present month. For the time being, at least, all clouds and misunderstanding and differences faded away, and peace and love prevailed. A spirit that cannot be described with words baptized the congregation. One lengthy and beautiful tongue was given, followed by the interpretation. Rebuke was mingled with good counsel and encouragement; but all felt that even the rebuke of the Lord was precious to their souls. Members of the priesthood, including seventies, high priests, and others, opened their souls to the congregation and testified of the wonderful power of God that had been with them in their work during the year. One seventy reported one hundred and six baptisms, and attributed his power and success to the fact that he had continued in prayer more than during any previous year. Another reported one hundred and twenty-nine baptisms during the past few weeks, administered by himself and his traveling companion, in fulfillment of a dream showing people flocking to the water's edge. Somewhat similar meetings at our other Independence congregations at the same hour were reported. The experience will not soon be forgotten. It did more to make the Saints "one" than could have been done by weeks of argument. When Jesus stands up in our congregations we forget our differences. We are ashamed to remember them. The other services of the day, the afternoon community singing at the new church park, or campus, as some are now calling it, together with the splendid musical feast at the Stone Church in the evening, all under the direction of Brother Hoxie, conspired to make an almost perfect day of worship and fellowship. Though not all is well in Zion, it is pleasant at betimes to think on those things that are lovely and of good report and worthy of praise.

The Social Principles of the Gospel

The intensive teachings of Jesus in the light of sociology is a most modern development. In fact the critical study of sociology belongs to the present generation. But in the past quarter of a century much has been written in this field of the social aspects of the teachings of Jesus, the need of a social reconstruction of religion.

The social attitude is not entirely new. The losing of self-interest in the group belongs to every barbaric tribe. But the modern movement is how first to develop the individual to his highest capacity of physical and intellectual power, the unfolding of his spiritual nature to the fullest appreciation of the divine in nature, in himself, and the worship of the eternal God, then that the individual should serve in that place for which he is best fitted and in which he is happiest, serving for the good of all.

It is but a short time since the theory of individualism made its force felt in all modern thought, in the social and economic discussion, in the factory and place of business, in the halls of legislation, in the governor's chamber, and in the pulpit, in the schools, and in the newspapers. The whole emphasis was being placed on individual expression. Occasionally the unselfish use of opportunity was stressed in the pulpit and press, but more usually the argument was made that in living fully and getting all that he could, man was thereby helping society to the greatest possible extent and doing sufficient good for others.

This individualistic attitude made itself felt in every department of life. It influenced the courts of law as well as the lawmakers. Its force was felt in the home as well as in the church.

To-day the tendency is strongly the other way. The recognition of the social right as being preeminent is coming to be felt by at least the leading thinkers in legislature and by the leading members of the bar. Its influence is felt in many a court room. This tendency has by no means become universal or even general, but the principal thinkers are coming to be those who are socially minded, who strive to reorganize industry on a social basis, to have the law construed in the interests of the social good. It is not surprising that this same influence should make itself felt in the church, so that the principal stress of to-day is on service, and the greatest sermons of to-day are concerned with the individual religious duty to the group, the social duties of the church, and the social teachings of Jesus.

A careful study of the four Gospels will again establish Jesus of Nazareth as the greatest teacher of the world. In his teachings he recognizes the responsibility of the individual. He preached an individual salvation and individual development and individual righteousness, but this salvation, this righteousness, was social. The individual who was saved in the kingdom of God loved his brother as himself. He sought not his own good but to do good to all mankind, even though it be especially to those of the household of faith. This emphasizes not only duty to the group but society as a whole.

It is true that some writers of to-day go to the other extreme and will say and quote to the effect that all that Jesus said of eschatology and the life to come could be printed on one single page of the Bible. Such a statement is obviously an error. Jesus was not a socialist alone. He was not inclined to consider only the social aspect. His love extended to the whole world and to the individuals thereof. Under his teaching a selfish individualism is not possible, but social ends were gained through individual development and salvation. His teachings indeed point to the fullest life as an individual and as a member of the group, and society as a whole.

Graduates of Graceland College

A note from Professor J. A. Gunsolley at Graceland College informs us that since the list was published the name of Elmer C. Prall has been added to the list of graduates from the Collegiate Department and Byron O. Yarrington as a graduate from the academy. This omission was simply an oversight as they were both fully entitled to graduate with this class.

General Officers at Convention

The general officers attending the convention have included all three of the First Presidency, Frederick M. Smith, Elbert A. Smith, and F. M. McDowell, with the last in continual charge. Of the Quorum of the Twelve, James A. Gillen, president; F. Henry Edwards, secretary; Thomas W. Williams and John F. Garver have been present. Benjamin R. McGuire and James F. Keir of the Presiding Bishopric; Richard S. Salyards, general secretary; and Joseph A. Tanner, Roy V. Hopkins, and John F. Garver of the General Standing High Council were also in attendance.

Of the department heads the following were to be met by the young people and all others attending: Department of Health, G. Leonard Harrington; Department of Education, George N. Briggs; Department of Music, Albert N. Hoxie; Department of Sunday School, A. Max Carmichael; Department of Recreation and Expression, Thomas W. Williams, and Miss Hazel B. Dexter, secretary.

All the Lamoni Stake officers and the presidents of the stakes and the pastor of Zion are also present.

Admonition to Young

Elbert A. Smith to the young people at the convention at Lamoni, Friday morning, 7.30 prayer meeting, June 8, 1923. Reported by H. W. Harder.

From the secret places where I dwell I have observed your coming together, saith the Lord. Yea, I prepared the way before you; and at this your first prayer service it has pleased me to send upon you the blessings of my Spirit like the gentle dews of heaven. I know that some of you have been wayward and forgetful of duty at times, but that shall be remembered against you no more if from this hour you consecrate yourselves to me in righteousness.

My young men are like trees for my forest. My young women are like flowers for my garden. I am ready and eager to nurture and cultivate, that my forest may become mighty and strong and my flowers very beautiful and pure before me. Have I not made covenant with your fathers and mothers in years gone by? Here and at Nauvoo and Kirtland and Palmyra and at many times and in many places I made covenant with them and they with me. And I call you to witness this day that when your fathers were true and faithful to the covenant made they became wise and mighty men—and they were good men. And your mothers when they kept their covenant were virtuous and lovely women. And so shall it be with you, young men and young women, if you make your covenant with me and keep it.

But you must resist and put away the temptations of the world. Remember it is written that when my Son had resisted all the temptations of the Devil and put them behind him he returned into Galilee clothed with the power of the Holy Ghost. So shall you if you put away all evil go to the world clothed with the power of the Holy Ghost; and you may be to the church a healing influence to help heal the breach, in charity and humility and love, and do your part to bring light and peace to my people.

Behold I have a charge to give unto you, that you shall go from this place telling the gospel story; but I have a charge for you that is much more serious and important: and my charge is that you shall go forth and live the gospel story. Then may it be said of you as it was of my Son, that the word became flesh and dwelt among men, full of grace and truth.

Volunteers for Missionary Service

At the missionary meeting Saturday morning Elder T. W. Williams called for the missionaries present to stand. There were seven in the tent in addition to the four members of the Quorum of Twelve on the stand, J. A. Gillen, T. W. Williams, F. H. Edwards, and J. F. Garver. He then asked for unordained young men who have felt they would sometime go as missionaries. Ten young men stood. Then he called for girls who are willing to do missionary work—about twenty stood up quickly and then quickly sat down.

This naturally caused applause and comment. Still it is hardly a fair comparison of the interest of the young men. In the first place young men holding some office in the priesthood were not included. Second a young man would naturally be diffident in putting himself forward for what would mean call to the priesthood, especially with the strong emphasis made from time to time against ambition. A girl in missionary work receives no office. With her it is pure service and unselfishness. In the third place many young men are diffident in asking a girl to assume the trying place of a missionary's wife, feeling that hers is the greater burden. A man who will willingly endure all things for the sake of the church of Christ will hesitate to impose that greater sacrifice as he believes on the woman he loves. But a girl may rightly accept such responsibilities for herself.

Finally, when we speak of sacrifice it is well to remember that the work after all means to make sacred, to consecrate in a basic sense. No matter what our manner of life we must deny ourselves; there are inhibitions and prohibitions in every path. Therefore, it befalls each one to weigh and consider and choose his way or her way with care. By this path of service we consecrate and make holy our life in a way not possible when we pursue the opposite course and deny our best instincts for service.

Attendance at the Convention

The Young People's Convention was certainly a great success. It is the first time so many young people have gathered for so long a period of serious work.

The preliminary enrollment before June 7 was 343. The enrollment that day brought the enrollment to 481. President F. M. Smith, who had been in Lamoni for the Home-Coming, remained for the opening exercises, then left for Independence, returning, however on the 15th for the close. President Elbert A. Smith was among those who came Thursday, the 7th, but returned to Independence Saturday.

A number of young people intended to leave Sunday after a week at the Home-Coming and Convention, others planned to go by auto Monday or Tuesday, but the rain prevented and they stayed till the week's end. Apostle J. A. Gillen left Monday, the 11th, by train.

But despite rain or any other cause, the enrollment steadily increased every day, partly through Lamoni enrollments, but principally through new visitors, so that by Tuesday evening the 12th, the total of 746 enrollment had been reached, and by Thursday it had reached 766 and by the close about 800. The newcomers more than balance those who have had to leave.

Those who come from a distance naturally remain. There are seven from California and more from other distant points than have yet been listed; some sixty-five at least. But naturally the greatest number come from within five hundred miles. For example, some eighty registered from Independence, Missouri.

As has been noteworthy in most of the gatherings of the young people, the enthusiasm and dominance of youth is apparent, as is also the persistence of the youth of forty, fifty, sixty, and a few of seventy years of age. But those who are between fifteen and thirty-five apparently are in the majority.

Religious Education

In last issue of the HERALD we are publishing the extensive outlines prepared by A. Max Carmichael for his class work in religious education at the Young People's Convention. This outline is so thorough going and gives so broad a review of the literature that of course only the extent of the problem and something of the means for its solution can be presented in the eight class hours. We are therefore taking this opportunity to present his outline in full for the benefit of our readers and for future reference.

In religious education we should have a knowledge of psychology in general, both child and adult, also of the principles of education, the methods of pedagogy.

In addition to this we should have a knowledge of both of the above subjects as applied to the particular field of religious education, How does the child naturally develop religiously? How does the child react at different ages to certain concepts? In what order are certain habits and attitudes formed? Psychologists insist that habits precede attitudes. Is this universally true, or is it true that as faith proceeds to knowledge and knowledge lays the basis for faith so habit and attitude are inter-related in their development?

There is a great need for trained teachers. If we are to present a suitable course of lessons and have them properly presented it must be because we have a consecrated corps of teachers. And if they are truly consecrated and devoted they will study to show themselves approved. They will inform themselves on the methods of religious education and on the natural religious psychology of the child.

But this, though essential, is by no means all. The success of the editor of Sunday school literature, the success of the teacher, the success of the officer, depends upon their knowledge of the subject matter of their teaching. They must know the great stories of the past. They must especially know the book of books, the Bible, its stories and their significance.

Pedagogy alone will not save. The inspiration of the Spirit of God is needed and also a knowledge of the word of God, that knowledge which is gained by prayerful, personal taking of thought by reading the book itself.

In religious education a wonderful field is open before us. The ideas formed in those early years will last through life. We are laying the basis on which the life of the child will be founded. It is important that that basis be laid thoroughly and well. It is not a little thing to be taken up by anyone who is willing to come to the church for an hour or so on Sunday. It deserves and should have a great body of teachers who feel keenly the responsibility and spirit of their task. It is not the officer, but it is the teacher who gains the immediate contact with the life of the child and so is offered this great privilege of working with God.

Four thousand dollars was raised by the young people for the Graceland gymnasium and assembly hall among those in attendance at the convention.

News of Young People's Convention

The Daily Routine

Those on the College hill once at least had a setting up exercise in the early morning—about 6.30 a. m. Then follows a general assembly for prayer service at 7.30 a. m. This meeting is always well attended both by those on the hill and young people from town. A total of 464 were counted in chapel Tuesday morning, but the following mornings in the assembly tent permitted a much larger attendance. There is manifest a deep spiritual note of earnestness. No time goes to waste; rather is it a case of two or three rising at once and having to be called on in turn by Elder R. V. Hopkins, who is in charge of these meetings. The gifts of the Spirit are manifest frequently, and as many of the young people speak as time and those older in years permit.

Refreshed by this service at 8.45 the assembly divides into four classes, meeting in various rooms of the new College Building. 1. "Bible appreciation"—C. E. Wight; 2. "Religious education," A. Max Carmichael. 3. "Social principles of the gospel," Floyd M. McDowell; "Economics of Zion," C. E. Irwin. All of these classrooms are crowded. One would like to attend them all, but that is not possible.

After this serious class work comes the lecture and symposium in the big assembly tent at 10 a. m. The subject is different each day, as given in the program published in the HERALD of May 23. These lectures are also currently discussed and summarized elsewhere in this and the preceding HERALD. At the same hour the model Sunday school is held in the new building.

Then the long line is joined leading to the cafeteria tent for dinner at noon. This meal is scarcely completed before the round table hour, 1.30 p. m., has arrived. Again a variety of subjects are under discussion, a different subject each day. Part of the time the subject of the morning is continued, but as often the subject is different. During the wet weather a second round table was provided part of the time at the same hour to accommodate the crowd, which is too large for any place except the assembly tent or Brick Church. The subject of the round table is not known in advance but is announced each day, so this hour gives opportunity to meet emergencies, as the effort on behalf of the gymnasium and assembly hall on Wednesday.

But every day at the same hour the scoutmasters training school is in session.

At 3 p. m. all are free for recreational leadership. This is a social hour or two, when the assembly divides into small groups for games and contests and many return to take care of necessary work. It is the only time free from definite program.

Finally in the evening the whole assembly meets for the second time to close the day, with a sermon or recreation in music or otherwise. And a full day is closed.

Sunday, June 10, Missionary Day

Sunday School

Sunday, June 10, opened dark and threatening. The rains of the previous day left heavy mud on all the streets and crossings. But despite these handicaps the attendance at all services was exceptionally good, the auditorium at the Brick Church being filled for every service.

At 9.30 a. m. the Sunday school was held as usual but with enlarged classes. The young people gathered at the high school building and used the auditorium for an assembly room and the various classrooms for classes. This is quite in accord with the best methods of religious pedagogy, which advises that buildings be erected with such separate classrooms. Each class can thus be taught without the distractions of neighboring classes.

As a rule the young people then remain there for the eleven o'clock hour, the educational methods for the instruction and development of the religious life of adolescents being followed. But on this Sunday, in deference to the program of the convention, they adjourned shortly before eleven and proceeded to the Brick Church to hear Elder J. F. Garver.

In the meantime at the Brick Church the children and adults were also meeting in Sunday school session. There are two separate rooms on the lower floor used for the smallest children, and the lower auditorium during the study period is divided by curtains into a number of classrooms. The curtains remove the distractions of sight, if not those of hearing, and assist the attention of these classes. Formerly the gallery in the upper auditorium was likewise divided by curtains into six or eight separate compartments. The adult classes met in the upper auditorium. The Sunday school was therefore divided into three general sections, with separate assembly rooms, all under the general superintendency of A. Max Carmichael.

At eleven a. m. a junior meeting for the children was held in the lower auditorium. That has long been an established feature in Lamoni.

"Send Me"

"Here am I, send me," was the title of the sermon preached Sunday morning in the Brick Church by John F. Garver. He read from Isaiah 6 and referred to Isaiah as a man of learning, a man of culture, a man of practical affairs, an associate of noblemen, an adviser of kings, a man of God, and the Lord's prophet, called and chosen to declare the ways of heaven for Judah and for men everywhere, forecasting the man of Galilee—the "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," of whose kingdom there can be no end.

For this great work Isaiah had need of a further cleansing and a fuller preparation. Hence there is opened to him a wonderful vision. He saw God "high and lifted up." In contrast, he saw himself low and mean, and needy. Indeed he was "undone." Humbled and penitent, he prostrated himself before God, was cleansed, and finally chosen, and sent forth to declare the words of God for the good of his fellow men. So, urged the speaker, are we called to carry forward the message divine, for the salvation of the world—a salvation from all evil, and every consequence thereof, in a work of uplift for earth's children from despair to deliverance, hereafter and here, politically and socially as well as spiritually, for a society giving to every man and every woman a chance to develop to the full in order to serve to the uttermost, until Zion shall have been redeemed and the whole world warned.

As Isaiah had need, so have we need to discover God, "high and lifted up"—so must we come to know his lofty purpose, and the way of its achievement. Discovering then in the light of this greatness our human limitations, it is ours to humble ourselves before God for a further cleansing and a fuller preparation, that under God we may go forth with the glorious gospel message to a perishing world, for whom Christ died as well as for us. Recognizing, then, the voice of God in the agonized cry of his creatures, let us each be first in purity, first in preparation, and first in willingness, that we may be first in response to the call for service, first to answer in deeds as well as in words, "Here am I, send me."

Preparation

At 2.30 Sunday afternoon, June 10, at the Brick Church a social service was held. Many touching testimonies were given and exhortations made on the theme of preparation. Two spoke in prophecy, one in tongues and interpretation. A beautiful spirit prevailed.

The usual Religio service was held at 6.30 p. m. in the Brick Church, but with greatly increased class and general attendance. In Lamoni much work is done in the various sections of Religious Education so that it correlates with the Sunday school, and naturally with the work of the convention.

Missionary Program

At 7.40 p. m. the choir filed up and took seats on the rostrum. The next half hour was taken with singing the special songs of the occasion as printed in the HERALD last week. A. N. Hoxie put much enthusiasm into his work and as a result secured the desired response.

At the opening of the evening missionary program, the four members of the Twelve present took seats on the stand, and called for the missionaries present to come forward and take seats on the rostrum in the north choir seats. Some twelve or thirteen came forward, including O. L. Thompson, W. L. Christy, J. T. Smith, Keith Rogers, L. G. Holloway, J. D. Stead, W. E. Winegar, W. D. Tordoff, William Patterson, and Alexander Klein.

After prayer by John F. Garver, the choir sang an anthem and Paul N. Craig sang a solo, accompanied by a string instrument and with the choir humming. F. Henry Edwards, who was in charge, then announced as the first missionary speaker Alexander Klein who spoke of conditions in his homeland, Austria, and missionary work, for some twenty minutes.

Then after singing "I'll go where you want me to go," William Patterson spoke for twenty-four minutes very earnestly on work in his homeland of Australia, after which James R. Houghton sang a solo very impressively.

Finally W. D. Tordoff spoke with great earnestness and energy for seventeen minutes and was followed by Job Negeim with a solo, and by Mrs. Nelle Atkinson Kelley in a solo accompanied by Miss Emma Snead on the violin.

Monday, June 11, Health Day

Prayer service was held at 7.30 in the College auditorium, since the rain continued and drove the crowd inside. However the weather did not dampen the spirits of the numerous young folks who attended. A splendid meeting was had, there being many fine testimonies and talks.

At 8.45 class work was taken up in the three courses on "Bible appreciation," "Religious education," and "Social principles of the gospel."

Physical and Mental Health

At the morning symposium the preliminaries were left out so as to leave the full time to Doctor G. L. Harrington's lecture and round table. He urged that mental and physical health must be carried together for they are one spirit and body. We want to put the real, the true oil in our lamps and be ready through insight for the fundamental truths of life.

The mind is the total of our past experiences. Our nervous system enables us to adjust ourselves. We have the two brains, the old animal brain, and the new brain of the social self. The new is empty at birth and presents a serious problem. Don't suppress a child's activity, that is dangerous.

A digression emphasized the serious and dangerous character of children's diseases, and the great care that should be taken to avoid, and to make sure the cure, when the disease is incurred.

Our attitude towards our children causes a feeling of inferiority. The dominating father exercises a strong influence, as with Thomas Jefferson and his state rights; and the lack of such parental control may react as strongly as with Alexander Hamilton and his ideas of centralized government. Either extreme is bad.

Meetings like this provide a valuable outlet for surplus energy on a good plane. We overemphasize duty to the group, for we cannot give to the group until we get something ourselves.

The internal secretions and their importance were also discussed. The importance also of adolescence and the need of a stabilizing influence as Graceland can and does give to a certain extent were also stressed.

We must realize our limitations. More people are mentally sick than are in our colleges as a result of a disregard of this fact. "Go slow, without haste and with rest," is a German motto. Live one day at a time.

Of all medicine prevention is the greatest. The real man is one who enables people to prevent diseases, mental and physical. Others are only patching. The best of all is found in the message of Jesus Christ. Cast out fear. Know. Understand things. Get adjusted. Purge out the facts. Fear and aggression are equally bad.

In answer to questions Doctor Harrington discussed many interesting topics. The young people were earnest and asked vital questions.

The primary work of the missionary is to build souls and minds and bodies. Foreign medical missionaries do well because they have something to give the natives.

The two transactions of selling merchandise and transferring our best knowledge to our fellows are essentially different.

The ability of a child to ask questions is a measure of ability to understand. Let children see life—the hatching chicken, for example. A child lives at home for many years—dependent. It is essential that he be broken—youth must be made to get out and hustle.

Drafts are necessary to remove effete air. Hygiene requires rest, sleep, food, relaxation. Fifteen minutes after dinner is good.

Pray continually. We get in trouble because we leave Jesus out.

"Come unto me, ye who are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." If we do not—we do abnormal things.

The Place of Drama in Department of Recreation and Expression

The place of drama in the Department of Recreation and Expression was discussed at the round table conducted by T. W. Williams at 1.30 June 11.

The work of the Graceland College Players under Miss June Whiting and of the Independence Dramatic Club under Miss Gladys Newton was sketched by Mr. Williams's introductory speech. Miss Whiting then spoke on the problems of a director and referred to the accomplishments of the College Players. Several papers written by members of Miss Whiting's classes in dramatics on various phases of the drama were read.

Miss Newton then made a talk on practical problems of church dramatics. She outlined the organization of the Dramatic Clubs in Independence consisting of a central club, The White Masque, and the Junior Dramatic Club. The White Masque includes those most talented in expression, and aims to train people for direction in church dramatic work. The Junior Club is a feeder for the central organization and includes all the younger aspirants to expression work.

Beyond this immediate purpose are the broader aims, that of encouraging dramatic expression on the part of the members and to create appreciation on the part of the public for better drama.

Round table discussion brought out points of advantage and disadvantage for church dramatics and suggestions for material adaptable to small club production.

The scoutmasters course and recreational leadership were conducted indoors and in spite of difficulties were well attended.

Journalism

At 1.30 Miss Alice Smith conducted the round table discussion on "Journalism" in the auditorium. A good attendance stimulated interest and many interesting questions and answers.

Miss Smith encouraged the young people in the church to prepare themselves for work along journalistic lines, as the field is a large one and the church needs great. Interest was manifested in ways for obtaining publicity by local branches. Papers are often glad to publish well-written accounts of the Sunday's sermon, and feature stories are always in demand. Points in the church's doctrine which are unique would be of general interest if only written correctly.

Miss Smith suggested clubs to foster better writing and the attending of classes in journalism. For Graceland College she expressed the hope that a course in journalism would soon be installed and that a paper be published by the class which could be circulated throughout the near-by towns as some universities are at present doing.

"Why I Am a Latter Day Saint"

The hike to the South Woods, which was scheduled for seven o'clock and the remainder of the evening was withdrawn on account of the rain, and a sermon by W. D. Tordoff at the Brick Church was substituted in its place. At 7.30 the community singing began, under the direction of James Houghton and lasted until eight o'clock, when services for the evening began.

Elder Tordoff spoke to a crowded house on "Why I am a Latter Day Saint," relating incidents from his life before and after entering the church. As a boy Brother Tordoff was impetuous, and thought his parents failed to understand him. He was christened in the Church of England, but at thirteen years of age joined with the Methodists. "I was considering an influential member of that church yet I did everything that was not good." Upon hearing the gospel from J. J. Cornish, Brother Tordoff was baptized and since that time has had a complete change of life.

In his missionary service on the Isle of Pines and on the Grand Cayman Islands Brother Tordoff tells of the tremendous opposition he aroused in spreading the gospel, but how he was aided in accomplishing the purpose of God.

This young missionary is a fiery speaker and drives home his arguments. He believes that we must understand the social doctrine of this church as well as the fundamentals of faith, repentance, baptism, etc., before becoming members of this organization. It is more important to live the gospel of Christ than to believe only upon the fundamentals. He declared that we are now receiving a portion of God's holy endowment and that this Young People's Convention is being abundantly blessed.

Tuesday, June 12, Music Day

At 7.30 prayer service was held in the College auditorium, there being 460 present and many who could not gain entrance into the crowded doors. After several days of gloomy and rainy weather, a beautiful day of sunshine greeted the early risers and prompted many to attend who otherwise could not have been present. Like all the previous meetings of its kind held so far at the convention, the spirit was one of harmony. These meetings are truly inspiring and uplifting to the many young people who attended.

At 8.45 the usual class work was continued, the enrollment in classes still being large and attendance regular.

"The place of music in the church" was the subject of the lecture and symposium conducted by A. N. Hoxie at the morning session of Music Day.

Brother Hoxie gave an inspiring talk, stressing particularly the importance of the band and orchestra movement in our church. He expressed the desire that we can surround our leaders whom we all love, and sing songs of Zion that will cheer their hearts and heal their wounds. He mentioned several people in our church who have consecrated their lives to the Department of Music, who would be worthy examples for the young people of to-day.

Sister Mabel Carlile, of Graceland, next touched upon the crying need of more appropriate material for the beginner and primary departments. Primary songs should first contain a thought that they can understand, and music good enough to form a basis for musical education.

Brother J. H. Anthony, of Graceland, an authority on orchestra and band direction, mentioned the great need of leaders in this movement. Although the public schools are now taking up this work, there are still many obstacles to be met in this branch of music.

Brother Paul N. Craig said that song has the power to unite us and bring about harmony. "How wonderful will be our singing when our voices are freed by training so that the Spirit will have a better instrument through which to work." He says "as a church we have not heeded the call to cultivate the gift of song. Music gives an avenue of approach to people whom you would not otherwise touch."

"Jim" Houghton was introduced as a musical missionary and gave an interesting talk on church music, illustrating it with songs of the old masters.

The Place of Music in the Church

The round table discussion on music in charge of Albert N. Hoxie was held at 1.30, June 12. A crowded auditorium indicated an exceptional interest in musical problems.

Mr. James Houghton played and sang several old songs, which he explained would be of value to small choirs.

The discussion continued around small branch problems, such as choir and orchestra. The choir in a small branch was said to be of little value without practice. Emphasis should be put on congregational singing when choir practice is not well attended. Combined choirs at reunion are good things to create cooperation and organization. It was also suggested that each branch at the reunion have some service especially set aside for that special choir, thus giving each choir a chance in addition to the combined movement.

The old question of an orchestra without a leader was brought up. Mr. Hoxie suggested that for a few instruments some one might be found among the membership who could develop into a leader. For larger orchestras he said that outside interest was often stimulated and a leader produced. It was decided that a good orchestra was an asset to preaching services but it must be good. Band music should not be used during this type of service. The use of a drum in bands for Sunday school was concluded to be all right if properly controlled. The saxophone also was given a place in orchestras in spite of the opposition generally accorded it, but this too should be well played.

Music adaptable for use among children of Oriole age and little tots was discussed. A pamphlet of songs to be used with small children is now under preparation, while a revision of the Zion's Praises will also soon be ready and will be suitable for Orioles.

A special selection of songs for missionary service was requested with the assurance by Mr. Hoxie that such a set of songs would be compiled with the aid of the missionaries who know the needs.

Should we allow people in the choir who wish to sing but cannot? This question called forth a ripple of laughter and was finally determined by saying that such should not be the case.

Boys in adolescence, when voices are changing, should not be allowed to sing to any great extent. Careful attention should be given them from the age of seventeen to twenty.

The musical problems of the church are of vital interest to all and further discussion would be of advantage. These questions should be taken up at reunions and district conferences.

During the same hour, at 1.30, the Scoutmasters training course was continued. Lectures are given and games of all kinds played.

Concert

A concert by the Lamoni choir and orchestra was given in the Brick Church June 12, at 7.30 p. m., to the convention. This beautiful and skillful rendition was in charge of Mr. Joseph Anthony, orchestra; Miss Mabel Carlile and Mr. Paul Craig, chorus.

The chorus opened with the national anthem and was followed by an orchestra selection. Schubert's Serenade, sung by Misses Aliene Brackenbury and Mabel Carlile, Mrs. C. E. Wight, and Mrs. J. H. Anthony was greatly appreciated by the audience which called for an encore. The chorus then sang, followed by a duet by Miss Aliene Brackenbury, soprano, and Mr. Malcom Barrows, flutist. Miss Pauline Roberts gave a dramatic reading entitled, "No 6, (A one-act play in three scenes.)"

Another chorus selection was most beautifully sung, then Miss Emma Snead played a violin solo. "The wreck of the Julie Plante" was sung by the chorus, the solo parts being taken by Mr. Paul Craig. "The March from Tannhauser" closed the concert for the evening.

Mr. F. M. McDowell expressed the sentiments of the audience when he said he had often heard the Lamoni talent in concert, but never was the presentation as successful as this night.

Wednesday, June 13, Economics

Our Economic Plan

The symposium on "Economic plan" at 10 a. m., June 13, was in charge of John Zimmermann, jr. Bishop C. E. Irwin spoke on the religious motive of this church which is the expression of Christ in the lives of men. He stated that salvation of the soul is not a dim and ethereal thing which lies in the future but it is a process which is now going on. He charged that the leaders of the church must formulate a definite program whereby the people may know what is expected of them and how to accomplish it.

Bishop A. Carmichael next spoke, giving the two fundamental laws of stewardship as first the filing with the Bishop a statement of temporal circumstances, and second, living frugally that tithing and surplus may flow into the treasury.

He advocated that all people go upon the budget system as a means to saving.

Bishop James F. Keir gave a brief review of the church's early attempts at stewardships and more fully explained the operation of that law. Fundamentals of Zion are unity, righteousness, and equality. These are the basis upon which we may put into effect our program. Every man shall receive according to his just wants and needs. Out of his inheritance over which he is steward, shall his living come. In addition he may be steward over other things. One tenth of the yearly increase belongs to God while the surplus may be consecrated to the cause.

We should think more about the creation of wealth, and less about its distribution, that our coffers may be filled, that our people shall have the means for putting into operation the church's economic program.

Questions followed, and the discussion waxed warm over misunderstood points in the stewardship plan.

Gymnasium and Assembly Hall

A special meeting was called for June 13 at 1.30 p. m. in charge of Albert N. Hoxie to raise money for a gymnasium and assembly hall at Graceland.

Opening with a song service, the entire audience was of one accord when the proposition was presented for the new building.

A. N. Hoxie started the plan as conceived for raising the money as follows: First, the Young People's Convention and its friends are to raise $5,000; second, the Alumni of Graceland to raise another $5,000; third, the Commercial Club of Lamoni offered to give $5,000; and finally "interests in the East" under Mr. Hoxie will present $5,000, making a total of $20,000 to be raised. (Later suggestions were made to add swimming pool and raise $30,000. The Commercial Club favored this.)

The building plan represents the first unit of a large three-part building to house the physical educational work of the college. Owing to a recent State law, all colleges must provide physical education, and to meet this requirement, Graceland must have the equipment and plant necessary.

Another feature of the new building is that it will be used as a convention hall for conventions at Graceland in the future, and for other large assemblies. The estimated seating capacity is 1,000 for the first unit to be built. This will be greatly needed for the next year to provide seating capacity for the Young People's Convention, which undoubtedly will be much larger than the one held this year.

Mr. C. S. Van Eaton spoke on behalf of the alumni of Graceland, pledging their support in raising the quota of $5,000 allotted to them. Bishop J. F. Keir spoke in favor of the project, saying that he was for Graceland first, last, and all the time and was willing to do his part.

T. W. Williams expressed his hearty approval by saying we need this gymnasium and that if it is built in the right spirit God will accept it and his church cannot reject it.

President G. N. Briggs announced that Graceland was launching upon a four-year course and that with such a program as is before this college, a gymnasium is absolutely necessary.

Expression for the convention was made by several young people, encouraging the project and pledging support.

Pledge tags were passed out and $3,318 were raised that afternoon in the one meeting. The splendid spirit spread to the town, and that evening the towns people in mass meeting oversubscribed the quota allotted to the Commercial Club and the town of Lamoni.

Graceland will have a gymnasium and many other buildings necessary to make her a college in the front rank of colleges in America if the spirit which is present at this convention spreads to the church. The privilege of helping this great project is open to the church people as a whole. All contributions may be sent to Oscar Anderson, treasurer, Lamoni, Iowa.

Volley Ball Tournament

Eight teams were represented in the volley ball tournament held on the college courts June 13, at 3 p. m.

Those teams entering the contest were: Spring River, Independence, Graceland College, Missionary, Preachers, Wild Cat, Bear Cat, Scouts.

The winning team was the Preachers, who defeated the Graceland College team, giving the College second place.

Economic Zion

"Economic Zion" was the title of the sermon preached at 7.30, June 13, in the big tent by A. Carmichael.

He attacked the problem from its practical rather than theoretical side. All God's work is spiritual, emphasized Bishop Carmichael, and each step in the upbuilding of Zion has its spiritual aspect. The first thing to do is to file your inventory with the Bishop, and then the steward should be blessed by God as his other workers are blessed. The gathering time has come but all must move according to God's law.

Everyone can become a steward where he is and live by the law. When individual stewardships have been complied with then we are ready for group stewardships. There must be something in Zion which we have not elsewhere. Zion should be independent of everything, yet comply with the laws of the land.

Professor Powell has given rules on organizing: first, loyalty to members; second, fit the legal form to business and not business to the legal form; third, always have efficient men to handle it, whatever the business.

He concluded by saying that in the group there should be no class distinction.

Thursday, June 14, Religious Education

Problems in Religious Education

The symposium on Religious Education held at 10 a. m., June 14, in the big tent was in charge of F. M. McDowell who introduced Max Carmichael as the first speaker.

Mr. Carmichael said that religious education was for all people, adults and children. It is a term which means the process of bringing about our Latter Day Saint interpretation of life. So often we think of Sunday school as an institution, when in fact it is a method. We have institutionalized the method and made the Sunday school an end instead of a means. The speaker would like to kill the Sunday school as an institution, because it ceases to function properly as such. What we need is to educate the people of the church to cling no longer blindly to our worn-out institution, but instead to see religious education as a process for religious living.

Children need the religious side of life injected into everything they do, whereas a thin layer spread on for one hour Sunday morning does not accomplish it. Mr. Carmichael recommends a three-hour Sunday school, but under very different methods than at present used. The more the public school does for the child the more the church must reinterpret those things for him. Some places are recognizing this when time is allowed from the day school each day for study of religion.

The Catholics have the greatest argument for the parochial school in that they are successful in teaching their religion.

Mr. Carmichael is ambitious for a reorganization of our religious program in this church and sees ahead possibilities which few realize.

The next speaker bore testimony to the place of education in the church, feeling grateful for the privilege accorded him in helping as a teacher to place the able men now serving as teachers in Graceland among our leaders to-day.

Floyd M. McDowell expressed his hopes that some day we may have Sunday-school teachers who know how to teach religion as well as our day-school teachers know how to teach arithmetic.

He advocates conserving the religion in the child instead of depending upon conversion of the sinner. Do not let the child go wrong, and then send out a missionary to bring him back. Bring him up rightly and the church will always have him.

He suggested that all agencies in the church are working toward the same end. The priest, when he makes a visit, is acting in capacity of a teacher. If he meets some one on the street and speaks with him he has made a visit. Our formal priests' calls are failing in their purpose. We need the right attitude toward our work, and better pedagogical methods.

The meeting was then open for discussion which followed along the lines of the speakers and many helpful suggestions were offered.

Round Table on Dramatic Work in the Church

The round table discussion on Dramatics was continued at 1.30 p. m., June 14.

Max Carmichael in charge opened with a few remarks immediately calling for discussion.

What kind of plays and pictures shall we allow our young people to see? This brought forth a lively discussion which culminated in a statement by Mr. Carmichael to the effect that we should present realism only when it expresses the ideal, and under two other circumstances: first, when the experience has already been had or is about to be expressed; and second, when the atmosphere surrounding the presentation makes the evil abhorrent. We are born neither religious nor anti-religious. There are n religious instincts, to the mind of Mr. Carmichael, therefore our religious attitudes must be built.

Next followed the question of whether the church building should be used for dramatic presentations. The discussion became intense, and ended in an overwhelming decision on the part of the audience by a show of hands, that the church building was a community center and as such should house any expression of the community in dramatics or recreation. When separate building and rooms are available nearby or in the church, use of them should be made and would be probably preferable to the main auditorium, but when these facilities are not offered no hesitation should be had in using the auditorium for wholesome expressional work. The right kind of drama has a place in the church.

The discussion was so absorbing and the time so short that further points will be taken up at another time.

Landmarks of Religion in Europe and in the Near East

Preceding each evening's program at which a lecture or sermon was delivered there was community singing usually led by Albert N. Hoxie. Following this singing on Thursday evening Brother T. W. Williams delivered a lecture copiously illustrated with slides prepared from photographs taken by him during his missionary survey in 1920 and 1921.

He presented pictures of the various monuments of religion, including Stonehenge and other monuments of the Druids, the cathedrals of England and of the Continent. He showed the ruins of the old Greek and Roman religions, as well as the cathedrals of Christianity in those countries. In the Near East the monuments of the different religions of Palestine were thrown on the screen, and the same was true of Egypt, where the pyramids, sphinx, and tombs of the kings were shown.

He did not give illustrations of his tour nor give pictures

Meaning and Value of Religion

Address by Elder C. E. Wight at the Young People's Convention, Lamoni, Iowa, June 8, 1923.

One of the most interesting developments of the present age is that labeled Bolshevism, or Sovietism. Arising out of the crumbled ruins of an aristocratic despotism, this movement is an organized expression of revolt from the tyranny of the past. No past tradition or belief is sacred to its leaders. One of these leaders has recently startled the world by the declaration that religion is but an opiate, lulling its devotees into a false feeling of security.

At the very outset of this discussion, let me drop a word of warning. The society of the future is going to try in the crucible of human experience every doctrine, tenet, belief, and tradition of the past. Woe unto the wood, the hay, and the stubble, for it will surely be consumed. In increasing degree, a world which is rapidly adopting a scientific attitude is going to ask us for a straightforward answer for the hope within us.

It will not do for us to simply raise a horrified protest against those who anathematize all that we hold to be sacred. It is not enough that we place them under an ecclesiastical ban and sit back comfortably, congratulating ourselves that the enemy has been destroyed. If we, as religionists, are to save our beliefs and practices, we must do so by proving their worth to the world.

The challenge of sovietism immediately requires that we ask ourselves as to the need of religion. We but briefly answer the question at this time, in order to avoid trespassing at too great length on the theme of President Smith to be presented this evening. Turning to certain of the thinkers of the present age, we find some helpful opinions. Frederic Harrison in The Creed of a Layman says, "I believe that before all things needful, beyond all else is true religion. This only can give wisdom, happiness, and goodness to man, and a nobler life to mankind. Nothing but this can sustain, guide, and satisfy all lives, control all characters, and unite all men."

If the most ardent wish of all mankind were to be expressed briefly, it would be summed up, undoubtedly, in the words, peace, happiness, joy. Mr. Harrison expresses it as his belief that these can best be obtained through true religion.

Mr. Henry F. Cope, in his book Religious Education in the Family suggests that if family life is to be raised above the plane of mere physical existence, it needs a religious motive. He goes on to assert that the Christian religion "makes family life holy, sacramental, religious in its very motive."

But perchance it may be well for us to pause for a moment to be sure that we have in mind a common meaning of the subject we are discussing. There perhaps exists confusion here. As we use the term religion, some may immediately picture the atonement of our Master. Into the minds of some may come the beautiful pictures that have been painted concerning immortality and eternal life. Others may be thinking in terms of some Bible story, as for instance, the leading of the children of Israel out of Egyptian bondage. In other words, there is often such confusion as to religion, theology, religious history, and tradition, that speaker and hearer may have difficulty in coming to a like appreciation.

It would simplify matters if we were able to define religion. But since it is not an entity but a process, this is impossible. Let me repeat: Religion is not an entity, but a process. There have been many, however, who have attempted a description of this process. A consideration of some of these descriptions may assist us to a better appreciation of what religion is.

Henry Scougall has told us that religion is "the life of God in the soul of man." In other words, that when man permits the life of God to have expression in his life, he is living religiously. A similar thought is given us by Max Muller, who says that religion is "the perception of the infinite in such manifestations as are able to influence the moral character of man." This would mean that if an individual has come to such a knowledge of God that his moral character has been influenced, he may be said to have been affected religiously.

Brother Lonzo Jones has given us an attempted definition that is worthy of our consideration. He says that "religion is the dye which penetrates the fabric of human experience, giving it color, tone, and value." As Brother Jones himself points out, the weakness of this definition lies in the fact that religion is here defined as a thing, whereas we have pointed out that it is a process. If we could think of the color, tone, and value of the dye, rather than the dye itself, we have a better appreciation of his meaning.

It will be noted that all of the descriptions of religion given so far are philosophical in their nature. It is well that we should consider this class, for as a people we have been instructed to study our work both as to theory and as to practice. There is perhaps no practical interpretation of religion that exceeds that of the Apostle James, given to us in the New Testament. He says that "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." This is religion in action and it is in this phase that we are most interested.

We cannot, however, have the fullest appreciation of religion in action until we consider the several phases of religion. Again we are indebted to Brother Jones for an analysis. Religion may be divided into religious impulse, religious organization, and religious living. The inheritance of the race gives to every individual a religious impulse or instinct. In some, it may continue to lie dormant throughout life, but it is conceded quite generally that there is an inborn tendency toward religious expression. When this religious impulse is permitted expression, we have what may be termed religious life or living. When a group of such individuals band themselves together into a societal structure, we have a religious organization.

But of all of these phases, we are most interested in religious living. The religious impulse is of no value if allowed to remain dormant. The religious organization becomes dead when the individual members cease to live on a basis of full and rich religious expression.

If we are to give to the world a real answer as to the meaning and value of religion, we must center our consideration upon the meaning and value of religious living.

We have, to suggest, then, some of the beneficial effects of a religious life. The Prophet Isaiah gives us some help. In speaking to his people he gave them this command: "Wash you, make you clean." A continued reading of this scripture gives us to understand that he was speaking of a spiritual and not a physical cleansing. He further promised that if they should cease to do evil and learn to do well they should become so transformed that though their sins were as scarlet, they should become white as snow.

Turning now to the Prophet Ezekiel, we find him promising that the people shall be cleansed from all of their filthiness and that as a result of the transforming influence of religious living they will be given a new heart and a new spirit in place of the heart of stone.

More striking than either of these declarations is that of Jesus in this declaration to his disciples: "Now are ye clean through the word I have spoken." We must think of his word not as a dead, inanimate thing, but as a living, vital thing. We are told that Jesus was the word made flesh, who came and dwelt among us. Those who permitted to come into their lives the vital religious experience which transformed Jesus into the Son of God, were told that they had become clean through this spoken word.

So much for the promises of cleansing given us in the sacred word.

The Apostle Paul suggests a second effect of religious living. He says: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." Certainly no one who has studied the tempestuous career of this intrepid follower of the Nazarene can deny that he knew whereof he spoke. So powerfully was Paul able to present his testimony that the Roman Governor Felix was caused to tremble and King Agrippa to cry out, "Almost thou persuadedst me to be a Christian." Paul again calls attention to the powerful influence of religious living when he says, in writing to the Philippian saints, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

Without God, we are as a stagnant pool. With him, like the rushing river, being cleansed of impurity and generating power. In recent years a dam has been built across the Mississippi River near Keokuk, Iowa. Tremendous quantities of power heretofore wasted are now being utilized for the benefit of man. The very motion of the river creates power. In like manner, the stirring of the soul of man into religious activity will create untold potential energy.

From the power gathered out of the flowing river, thousands upon thousands of electric lights have been made available. Even as the power of the river may be transformed into light, so also may the power generated through religious living become light.

One of the ancient proverbs tells us that "the path of the just [he whose moral character has been influenced by his perception of the infinite] is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." If we study carefully the life of one who has lived consistently on a religious plane, we can testify to the truthfulness of this proverb. Unfortunately, in all too many cases the light is dimmed because of the inconsistencies of life.

A myriad of unbelievers unite with believers to testify that Jesus is the outstanding example of true religious living on the highest plane. He proclaimed himself as the light of the world and this proclamation has been reechoed from the lips of hosts of those who have striven to follow in his footsteps.

But perchance the most glorious call to opportunity ever given to humankind is that presented in the words, "I give unto you to be the light of the world." This challenge to the best and noblest there is in man has never yet been fully answered and remains before us to-day as a spur to renewed activity.

When the angelic hosts proclaimed to the Judean shepherds the birth of a Savior, they accompanied their proclamation with the song, "Peace on earth, good will toward men." Jesus desired that love might supplant hate in the hearts of men, knowing well that if this were to be accomplished peace would automatically replace war. Was this purpose accomplished? We who stand in the very shadow of the recent great war and look back over the centuries of carnage which have ensued since the time of the Master, are compelled to hang our heads in shame. No, the mission of peace has not been accomplished. Not because there was not in the message of Jesus the possibility of the accomplishment of peace but because the world has failed to receive the message. Even those who have nominally received it have failed to grasp its import, for we have witnessed the terrible spectacle of one follower of the Nazarene practically compelled to raise his hand against his fellow Christian.

Jesus realized that the world was blind to his message for at the time that he gave to his disciples this blessing: "Peace I give unto you; my peace I leave with you," he admonished them that the world did not understand and could not give to them peace. This thought, that only in acceptance of the ideals presented by the Master could peace be obtained, is most touchingly presented in the narrative of Luke. Who can remain unmoved as he sees the Master approaching his beloved city, weeping over its follies and saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes." Blinded by prejudice, by envy and by hatred, the people of the world were unable to see wherein lay their peace and safety.

But though the world may not universally accept the principles of peace, there is given to everyone who makes his life religious the same promise that was given to the disciples, "My peace I leave with you." Never can there come universal peace until that day when the great majority of the people of the world have been converted to the ideals of peace. Yet those whose hope is in the life and mission of the Master shall continue to hope for the accomplishment of even this dim and distant goal and shall press eagerly forward to its realization.

Into the heart of every individual who attempts to adjust his life with that of the infinite, there comes a consciousness of permanence. This may not be, and indeed cannot be, based on a full and complete knowledge of God or of his divine truths. For we see through a glass but darkly and are but vaguely able to see God as he really is. Yet through all of the ebb and flow of human passion, of human growth and development, there comes a steadily increasing sense of stability on the part of him who has chosen to mold his life in the image of his Creator.

The Prophet Malachi tells us that God is an unchangeable being. It is the gradual appreciation of this fact that brings to us this feeling of permanence. Happy is the man who early learns that God does not change. Too often have we taken from this premise a false conclusion. We have stated our premise correctly, then have argued that man should not change. If we but go back through the sacred literature that has come down to us through the ages, we must be struck with the changing concept of God on the part of the people. But through all of this changing concept there is breathed the same feeling of assurance on the part of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people that God is an unchangeable being. As before suggested, it is this realization that makes for permanence.

Jesus suggested the permanence of the law until its mission had been fulfilled when he said, "One jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass until all be fulfilled." Again, he likened the man who should adopt a religious standard to the wise man who has built his house upon a rock, where it should be able to stand permanently, resisting all of the fierce assaults of the elements.

We come now to a phase of our discussion that is perhaps more difficult for the average young person to appreciate. We suggest that religious life gives to us opportunity. Opportunity to make money? Not necessarily, for if this is the only goal the individual will sooner or later awaken to the realization that his existence is a sordid one and that that which seemed to be an opportunity was but a phantom.

Jesus told his disciples that they had before them the opportunity of becoming the salt of the earth. In the revelation of Saint John is expressed this beautiful thought: "I have set before thee an open door." No man can close the door of our opportunity to become the salt of the earth. The Master throughout his life attempted to call attention to the fact that "Life is more than meat and the body than raiment." The opportunity he gave to his disciples was that of pointing other men to the higher way of living.

However, it should not be assumed that rich religious living precludes the possibility of receiving all needful physical bounties. Reverting again to the words of the Master, we find him promising that if his disciples would but seek first the things of the kingdom they would be given all other things needful. It is interesting in this connection to call attention to the life of one of the outstanding business men of our age. We refer to Mr. Arthur Reynolds, president of the Continental and Commercial National Bank of Chicago. Mr. Reynolds says that in all of his career he has never worked primarily with a view to profit. He has always worked to the end that he might be able to render a definite service. But he testifies further that in practically every case where he has done what he conceived to be right, the monetary profit has automatically followed.

To further illustrate, we emphatically state that the story of the development of the Golden Rule Store of Cincinnati, Ohio, stands as a definite refutation of the theory that the Golden Rule is a theoretical ideal to be used on Sunday but to be put in cold storage during the remainder of the week. These men have demonstrated the practicability of the underlying feature of our stewardship ideal. When shall we add our testimony by a group demonstration?

Jesus undoubtedly startled his hearers when he told them that his coming was to the end that they might have a more abundant life. Furthermore, he said, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Undoubtedly they thought they had been living. Yet the Master opened up to them visions of life that they had never yet appreciated. They found that they had been merely existing. Now, because the Master pointed them to the way of true life, they might live even as had he. There is a qualification, however, that should not be overlooked. Jesus told them that they must abide in him. For as the branch could not bear fruit of itself, except it should abide in the vine, neither could they, except they should abide in him.

The possibilities of abundant life hold true to-day just as surely as they did when the Master was among men.

None who have had a rich religious experience will gainsay that religion will do for the individual exactly what we have claimed. It becomes at once a question as to the worthwhileness of the effects presented. This each individual must judge for himself. If cleansing, power, light, peace, permanence, opportunity, and abundant life appeal to us as values worth while, then must religious living appeal to us as worth while.

In this age of materialism, when money and other physical values seem to have all but strangled the higher values of life, it is comforting to find that there are certain far-sighted men who are able to see their way clearly, even though themselves engrossed in the affairs of business.

Mr. Roger Babson is one of these modern business prophets and head of one of the largest statistical organizations of the world. In one of his statistical reports issued to the business houses of the country during the recent period of depression, he said that though business needed many things it needed nothing quite so much as to be actuated by the Spirit of the living God. We quote also from another bulletin: "Religion expresses itself through those fundamentals of prosperity—a desire to be honest, just, kindly, pure, thrifty, industrious, and to render true service. A religious man will worship God and knowingly harm no one; he will do unto others as he would have others treat him. When people become actuated with these desires it is very evident that all the social, industrial, and international problems will quickly solve themselves."

Mr. Clyde Herring, president of the Herring Motor Company of Des Moines, in speaking before the Des Moines Ministerial Association concerning the business man and the church, has this to say: "The need of to-morrow is for a business which makes the church and the Bible the yardstick and measuring cup—which keeps the golden rule in mind in every transaction, and which never forgets for a single instant that only as business walks with God will it survive the times which try men's souls—the times through which we are now passing."

The call of to-day, then, is to a religious life. A life that shall be full of the Spirit of the living God. A life that shall be transformed from the dead physical plane to a rich spiritual plane. A life that having been transformed will be spent in the task of accomplishing this transformation in the lives of others. "O Zion, get thee up into the high mountain."

The Menace of Narcotics

By S. A. Burgess

It is indeed surprising to learn that the statement was made by a representative from India recently in Toronto that the United States uses more opium per person than any other nation in the world. "The annual consumption of opium per person in Italy is one grain; in Germany, two grains; in England, three grains; in France, four grains; in India, twenty-seven grains; in the United States, thirty-six grains." According to a bulletin recently issued by the Narcotic Education Society there has been a considerable increase in the actual consumption of opium since the passing of the Harrison Narcotic Act requiring physicians and druggists to keep an exact record of all such drugs distributed.

As a result physicians are prescribing much less than they did formerly of the derivatives of opium and cocaine.

One thing needed is the proper instruction of our school children in the study of physiology, yet the present school texts on the subject are quite inadequate as usually presented. Opium is the base of the opiates with twenty derivatives, the names ending in ine. Of these morphine is the most commonly used. Codeine is of interest because it is not habit-forming like morphine which is the most dangerous of the group and is ten times as active as opium itself. From morphine there is derived several others, all of which are poisonous. Two are of especial interest, heroin and dionin. The first is the most poisonous of all opiates, being from two to four times as strong as morphine. The second possesses curative powers.

Cocaine is derived from the cocoa leaves but differs from morphine only to the extent of two molecules of water. Still it is quite different in its action since morphine destroys pain in any portion of the body, causes the pupils of the eye to contract, while cocaine dilates the pupil of the eye and locally has a paralyzing effect.

All three of these drugs, morphine, heroin, and cocaine, are habit forming. The habit may be established from ten days' use and is almost invariably established in thirty days.

There are six ways in which the habit becomes started:

First, the taking of patent medicine. It is well to look carefully to the small print of every patent medicine, as the law requires the amount of narcotics to be specifically set forth. Opium in some form is used in cough cures, catarrh, headache powders, and soothing syrups. Laudanum contains one per cent of morphine. Paregoric is somewhat milder and contains one half of one per cent of morphine. A small fraction of a grain of any one of these three is a dose. Paregoric has a decidedly injurious effect on children, injuring their digestion, also tending to establish the habit which is more readily established with young children than with adults.

Second, is the taking of narcotic drugs prescribed by physicians. Formerly the greatest number of involuntary addicts arose from this method, and it has been estimated that this was the cause of fifty per cent of addicts. But whatever may have been the case in the past, to-day only a very small percentage are the result of prescription by a physician. Physicians are finding and using other substitutes not habit-forming, and have greatly decreased the use of the opium derivatives. Still, morphine plays its necessary part in the practice of medicine to-day, but great care is taken against establishing the habit.

Third, is inheritance in a weakened body and family life.

Fourth, through gratifying the craving for alcohol by substituting drugs. Nearly all careful writers say that this latter affects only a small proportion.

Fifth, through idle curiosity.

Sixth, through taking drugs to tide over strenuous physical and mental periods.

To-day curiosity lays the basis for a large part, for since the pure morphine is worth at wholesale around $9 an ounce but is retailed to addicts at the rate of $1 a grain, amounting to several hundred dollars an ounce, peddlers are distributing free samples to children, are taking deliberate methods to increase the number of addicts, giving samples away free to start the habit, for once the habit is formed, a single sale will more than make up for the small loss incurred, especially when we remember that a fraction of a grain is a dose and that a grain at wholesale is worth perhaps 17 cents.

The pamphlet referred to above discusses the symptoms, the treatment, the use of these drugs as medicine, how the dope is administered, the cause of acute suffering, also cocaine addiction as well as opium addiction.

The Harrison Narcotic Act has greatly decreased the legitimate use, but despite the fact the consumption of morphine, heroin, and cocaine has greatly increased in the United States, and this has been for the reason indicated. The tremendous profits have made those criminally interested wealthy in a short time. Necessary protection includes first of all publicity and a knowledge of how dangerous these drugs are, not alone for their poisonous effect but also for their habit-forming effect, for when the habit is established they all have the effect of greatly weakening the moral nature. It lays a basis for crime in that crime is often committed in order to obtain the drug which the perverted nature craves, though it is also clear that the drugs certainly deaden the higher centers and hence destroy not only spirituality but very greatly weaken morality.

After publicity the next essential method is doubtless an international agreement to restrict production. Since China has been closed, a new field is being created in America, and it is probable that the number of addicts runs up into the thousands. Opiates are produced in amounts to 1,500 tons. All that is needed for present medicinal uses throughout the world can be met with 100 tons at the outside. Yet England furnishes money without interest to promote poppy growing in India and is gaining a portion of her revenue from this source. It was because of the attempt to exclude opium from China in part that the Tae Ping Revolution was put down by the English and French.

Second, there should be control of manufacture and of the trade. This must follow after international agreement to curtail production which will meet the opposition of India at least. After production is restricted manufacturers should account for every pound received and every ounce sold.

Third, the redemption of addicts. They should be cured wherever possible and we should help them the same as others who are sick. In the second place they are a bad influence on those with whom they associate, especially young boys and girls just out of their teens. At present the right medical treatment is restricted and makes it difficult for physicians to give in sufficient quantities to effect a cure. If there could be provided a protective method of the distribution it would at least prove the extortion of the peddler and would thus destroy his reason for so breaking the law. Organized Play

Nature and Meaning of Play—Definitions

God's way of preparing the race to live.
 Free self-expression for the pleasure of expression.
 Pursuing your ideal.
 What we do when we are free to do what we will.
 Creative developing activity.
 Spontaneous expression of the untrammelled impulse.
 Enlistment of the entire personality in the pursuit of some common end.
 Doing what we want to do without reference to results.
 Doing a thing for the joy of the process.
 Activities performed not from external compulsion but as an expression of the self for the result of desire.
 An end in itself—doing a thing for the sake of the doing.

Theory of Play

Surplus Energy Theory. (Schiller-Spencer.)
 (a) Play explained physiologically as due to the increase of surplus energy which is not needed to fulfill the ends of existence and tends to act along the lines of imitation of actions important to the welfare of the animal.
 (b) With advanced civilization and the improvement of education man has an increased amount of surplus energy which is not needed in facing the bare, hard necessities of life.
 (c) In the higher forms of life parental care leaves the children free from arduous toil. As a result they have much surplus energy and large opportunity for play which, for the most part, is imitative.

Recapitulation Theory.

Recapitulation of primitive man's experiences.

Resemblance between play life of children and the pursuits and customs of early man.

Play form and expressions the result of heredity.

Recreation Theory.

When mental and physical powers are sufficiently tired, man turns to play to recuperate.

A means of restoring exhausted powers.

A form of relaxation.

Practice Theory.

Instincts appear or ripen before they are required in meeting serious demands of life.

Play is the natural means of preparing the individual for future living.

Emphasis placed upon instincts and development.

Spontaneous Attitude Theory.

Chief characteristics of play not physical but mental.
Pleasurable emotions precipitate the play expressions.

Recreational Leadership

Workers in recreation should ever keep in mind that games and sports and other recreational activities are never to be considered an end in themselves. They exist for the use of man that he may have the power to live an efficient life. Recreation in the church is not a temporary diversion from religion—it is a part of religion itself. Recreational work is church work and its end is to contribute its part toward the attainment of the ideals of the church.

We use a baseball bat to play ball with, and a violin for the production of music—may we be wise enough to use recreation in the light of its legitimate purpose.

A Plea for Young People

The following taken from the Youth's Companion, was published in the SAINTS' HERALD for September 18, 1886, in the Mothers' Home Column. It is interesting to make comparison with to-day and ask ourselves how much we have truly progressed:

The "Hobble-De-Hoy"

A boy of fifteen lately turned to his father as they came out of church together and said abruptly:

"I wonder if clergymen ever think that boys have souls to be saved. There is Sunday school for the little children, and church for the grown-up folks. But there's nothing for the boys."

His father was startled. He was a leader in great religious movements; but his own boy! It never had occurred to him that the church should take specific action to Christianize lads—hobble-de-hoys, who were neither children nor men. He now began to look into church affairs more closely with regard to their influence on Tom. He saw that the machinery of Sunday-school training—tickets, little prizes, teaching the facts in Bible history—was not the influence which the boy needed.

The pastor was a famous pulpit orator and logician; the father listening to him critically, saw that there was not one of the sermons preached in the year which was suited to Tom's capacity. They passed far above his head. The boy, like other boys of his age, could not breathe in the high intellectual or spiritual regions to which the pastor drew his hearers; his knowledge consisted pretty much of baseball rules, Cæsar's doings, and the price of cravats.

Yet he was at the age when the young immature man is forming convictions, when he feels loneliest, peers most eagerly into the mysteries which lie about him, and is seeking a leader for life, to good or evil; when a little help from a wise friend may lift the struggling soul forever up into certain sunlight. The age of hobble-de-hoyism is, in fact, the most critical point of a man's life, both in body, brain, and soul.

Every clergyman who reads the Companion should ask himself what he is doing to give a high, pure, religious faith to the boys of his flock.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 33, p. 581.

Back-to-the-Bible Movement Now Engages World's Attention

Out of war's cataclysm there has grown a revival of interest in religion which is making itself felt in all the four quarters of the globe. The rank and file of all denominations are growing under the stimulus of this movement. In four years' time the World War cost nearly 8,000,000 lives. A gigantic death roll, yet how many people are aware that in a still greater war—the constant battle to make the world safe for Christianity—the Devil's hosts have suffered 75 times that number of casualties? In the past 22 years the banner of the Cross has gained 100,000,000 recruits from the heathen hordes alone! Last year was a red-letter year as far as church growth was concerned. In fact, ever since Mars brought the world's manpower face to face with the specter of death, the "back-to-the-Bible" movement has grown by leaps and bounds until, like a tidal wave, it is now sweeping the civilized nations and the far places. The present unprecedented demand for the Bible is directly traceable to the European holocaust. This demand is not confined to the former warring nations but spreads alike to people and climes far removed from the scenes of bloodshed. In the "peace" areas famine, disease, and misery (due more or less to the war) have brought the Scriptures into popular favor. To this must be coupled the efforts of over 6,000 missionaries in China, Africa, India, Japan, Persia, and other countries. Their work, though at times interfered with by the war, was not entirely checked. Followers of this sacred calling toil on unceasingly no matter what may come. The call for Bibles has far exceeded the supply. Last year more than 30,000,000 volumes were printed and distributed, and the indications are that this year that record will be exceeded. The American Bible Society has placed one order for 3,000,000 copies, to be turned out on rotary presses at the rate of 10,000 an hour, which will be sold in Latin-American and other countries for a sum equivalent to a cent apiece in our money. Despite the pessimists' dire predictions that following the war a great wave of materialism would sweep away all the spiritual victories of that struggle and carry the world into a dark age, there seems to be a new renaissance of the religious spirit. Church workers were highly elated in 1921 when 800,000 new names were entered on their rolls in this country. Yet the record was again broken last year. The Federal Council of Churches reports 1,220,000 new members added to religious bodies as a whole during that time. Most of the organizations scored their greatest growth last year. The present membership of all religious bodies in United States approximates 47,500,000. This means that almost half the people in this country attend church or are connected with some religious organization in one way or another. Last year's increase is about 50 per cent greater than the average for the preceding five years. The total number of congregations is now about 245,000, in charge of 215,000 ministers. According to Doctor E. O. Watson, statistician of the Federal Council of Churches, on each day of last year an average of 3,345 persons joined the church; 42 clergymen were ordained or licensed, and 26 congregations were organized. The fear that promising young men are forsaking the ministry seems to be without foundation. Though 30,000 congregations are reported to be without ministers it must be remembered that many pastors, especially those in rural districts, have charge of two or more congregations. The "circuit rider" is common in the South and West. The church, apparently, is recruiting many college men. The question of inadequate salaries seems to carry little weight alongside the prospect of worthy service and the conviction that, somehow, "the Lord will provide." A new phase of church work is the evident willingness and desire of laymen to help out where possible. Many missions and rural churches are now served by laymen preachers. The farmer is still the backbone of the country's religious life. A recent survey shows that more than half of the 23,000,000 families in the United States own Bibles. Of the 7,000,000 families said to be still without the Good Book there are very few in the rural communities. This helps to bear out the popular idea that country people are more religiously inclined than their city brothers. However, J. A. Hertel, Chicago publisher, believes that the great majority of the 35,000,000 individuals in the United States without Bibles have the benefit of Bible instruction. According to this same authority, more than 660,000,000 Bibles have been printed in 770 different languages since the invention of printing. Figuring the population of the world at 1,500,000,000 and the number of families at 300,000,000, all the Bibles ever printed would give each family more than two copies. On an average, about 8,000,000 Bibles are printed in this country each year, and 35,000,000 throughout the world. The American Bible Society distributes on an average 5,000,000 Bibles annually, and the British Bible Society 10,000,000. The American society prints Bibles for the blind in 12 different systems. Another Bible society has placed a Bible in all the guest rooms of every hotel of any considerable size throughout the country. Bibles go to very remote regions, including the South Sea Islands and the Arctic regions. Sometimes it is quite difficult to translate the work into strange dialects because words used in the original meanings of the Bible have no equivalents in those languages into which it is being translated. The ancient Hebrew authors of the Bible belonged to a pastoral people and references to sheep, lambs, goats, etc., are frequent in their writings. The Eskimos, for instance, do not know what such animals are; they live in a land of almost eternal snow where the native animals are limited to polar bears, reindeer, walrus, and seals. The translators were "stuck" when they came to translate the 29th verse of the first chapter of Saint John which reads: "The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!" It was finally decided that in Eskimo life the nearest thing to correspond to a lamb was a baby seal, so that part of the verse was made to read as follows: "Behold the Baby Seal of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!"

of other places of interest but confined himself to the ruins and standing religious memorials. While he emphasized the importance of the Christian religion, his lecture was a review of existing monuments and ruins of all religions, ancient and modern, in Europe and the Near East.

Friday, June 15, Recreational Expression

Recreation in the Church

Following the usual morning prayer service and class work Elder T. W. Williams delivered the lecture on "Recreation and expression in the church." This lecture was delivered in the college chapel because of rain. The attendance, however, and interest continued high. As the head of the Department of Recreation and Expression he naturally emphasized the importance of the young people in the church, the nature of the work undertaken by this department, and the opportunity which it offers for service. Recreation includes all forms of play. Expression, of course, includes public speaking, dramatics, and music.

Following the lecture a very earnest discussion arose on Sunday recreation in which most of the usual arguments were made, but no clear conclusion reached. Considerable emphasis was placed on the social aspect, that is the effect it might have on our neighbors, or that we should pay attention to the opinion of the day. Reference was also made to Doctrine and Covenants 59. Also the statement was made that those who are most enthusiastic for Sunday recreation are not noted as a rule for spirituality. The subject was detailed pro and con and very little attempt was made to reach fundamental principles. This discussion, however, was continued Saturday afternoon in the round table hour.

Oriole Girls

At 1.30 p. m. the Oriole girls gave a demonstration in the assembly tent. First they played games on the stand, had a camp fire, told stories, and carried out the other details of an outing or picnic.

The second scene was a business meeting of the circle in charge of the girls. Different ones were called upon for reports. A new candidate was presented and examined. Honors were conferred upon different ones of the girls after an examination and with a presentation speech explaining the purpose. Much of this is from the Oriole ritual. They also gave the Oriole call.

The business being completed, an older woman was called upon for a talk on the origin of life. She had some roses and passed them around among the girls, explaining how the roses propagate. She then called a mother and baby from the audience and continued her discussion to the girls. Still later a small child was called on the stand. She continued her presentation of this very important subject. Then after the mother and children were dismissed she passed around samples of baby clothes, noted the soft material, the style of making, and other points of interest. This program lasted over an hour.

Boy Scouts

At 3 p. m. the Lamoni Patrol Number 1 gave a short scout demonstration of roll call, bugle call, signaling with flags, and some athletic stunts. This was of particular interest to some of those who knew the boys years ago. It certainly was decidedly encouraging to notice their manliness and the marked development made by one or two boys inclined to be delinquent some years ago. Their school work and work with the scouts demonstrated that the only trouble was excess energy misdirected, and when this energy was brought under control and directed to good ends the benefits manifested are very great.

The day was very warm, so not as many as usual engaged in the afternoon recreation. But the playgrounds were never neglected during this period except during the actual rainfall.

A Trip Around Lamoni

Friday evening the program called for an excursion to some principal points of interest in Lamoni. Nearly all the weekday meetings were centralized at Graceland College, the Sunday services at the Brick Church, Sunday school for the young people in the high school building, just across from which is Herald Hall, for several years the headquarters of the Herald Publishing House and on the site occupied by the SAINTS' HERALD for its over forty years' stay in Lamoni.

But there were other points of interest to be seen which were off the pathway of the regular sessions of the convention. So Friday evening a few hundred of the visitors went first to call on Mrs. Marietta Walker. Sister Walker was the founder of Zion's Hope, Autumn Leaves, one of those who contributed largely to the foundation of Graceland College, and has in fact been for many years one of the leading leaders of the church. It was she who started the Christmas offering as well as other good movements in the church. Under the leadership of Albert N. Hoxie, a few songs were sung as a serenade, then Sister Walker held a reception assisted by her daughter, Mrs. Fantie E. Davis, her cousins, Mrs. L. L. Resseguie, and Miss Mary Banta and Mrs. Ethel Durburaw.

From there they proceeded to the Children's Home where they again sang songs and the children also sang in return. A. N. Hoxie also made a special effort to entertain the children. Then before starting the crowd had taken up a collection and bought ice cream which was now served to the children and the party of young people, much to the delight of the children.

Next they went to the Saints' Home which is situated in northwest Lamoni. The college is in southeast Lamoni. The old college building and Saints' Home were designed by the same architect and erected about the same time. Sister Walker and the Children's Home are both located in the southwestern portion of the town.

At the Saints' Home they serenaded the old people and then proceeded to Liberty Home on West Main Street on the western limits of the city. This place was for many years the family residence of President Joseph Smith and his family and so is of particular interest to all. Here they again repeated their program of serenading or singing hymns for the old folks.

Word had been received that President F. M. Smith would return from Independence on the evening train for the close of the convention. The party then proceeded to the depot, where they called upon President F. M. Smith for a speech and sang hymns. President Smith expressed his pleasure at the success of the convention. Despite his absence he had kept in close touch with its progress each day and was glad to be back with them. He especially stressed the unity of spirit manifested.

He also expressed his great pleasure at the movement for the erection of a gymnasium at Graceland College and stated that the general church was prepared to sanction and uphold such a move. He called attention to the fact that General Conference had once authorized the general officers to expend from the treasury $10,000 for that purpose. (Conference Minutes of 1920, pp. 3026, 3027.) At the conclusion of his speech, the young people under the leadership of A. N.

Hoxie sang, "God is marshaling his army," and "Blest be the tie that binds."

The crowd then returned to the College Hill with President Smith, and an informal reception was held.

Saturday, June 16, Zion Builders' Day

Saturday, after the usual morning sessions and class work, the 10 a. m. final session of the model Sunday school was held, and at the same hour lecture by President F. M. Smith and symposium in the tent was held.

Zionic Aims

The 10 o'clock symposium for June 16 opened in the big tent with a large crowd gathered to hear President F. M. Smith speak upon Zionic ideals.

The meeting was opened with a few remarks by Mr. Wayne Wolfe, of Graceland College, telling of the rug industry being started at the college. This manufacture of rugs will provide employment for part of the students attending the college and enable them to pay part or all of their expenses. This is in keeping with the program being carried out at Graceland to make it possible for students to earn their own way through school and is a definite step toward economic Zion. Mr. Wolfe told of the many rugs sold during the convention and urged everyone to take a rug home and advertise them, that the industry might expand and be successful upon a large scale. President Smith then spoke, taking up the aims and ideals of Zion, and especially stressing stewardships.

"A beautiful people, with a beautiful social organization, in beautiful homes and villages with a beautiful religion, living beautiful lives is the aim of Zion," he stated. We should preserve the ideals visioned in moments of ecstasy and translate them into action. So often have we reached the sublime in meditation and failed to carry out our dreams.

Zion is a process of development not to be reached in a day, he continued. We should realize that God's most miraculous works are not those accomplished in a single stroke but those attained in the development of nature where his laws work in harmony to produce the desired end.

The work of the past is but a preparation for the work of the future, and we must not hesitate to take the next forward step. It is not possible to know all the details of our onward path, but we can apply the principle which we know to be right and trust in God and the work will progress until Zion is a realization.

The trouble with us in the past has been that we have not given our people enough to do. When we become idle we have time to wrangle over incidentals, and progress is arrested.

President Smith next made an earnest appeal for stewardships. He said he believed the church was ready to meet the offers of stewardships when the people approached the leaders with their consecrations. Our missionaries are on a stewardship basis; why not the rest of the church? Good judgment in determining one's just needs to maintain maximum efficiency is necessary, and the observation of the law will put stewardships into effect.

An appeal for the purchase of more land was made, citing the commands of the Lord in the past. He urged that we wait no longer until prices rise but buy now that we may be able to establish agricultural stewardships.

It is the problem of the church to organize itself economically so that we can accomplish our dreams. If we do this, President Smith believes that we can become the happiest and richest people in the world.

Following President Smith, Bishop A. Carmichael spoke on the subject of surplus. He showed that the individual is absolutely dependent upon God and society for his wealth, and hence owes a part to God and the group.

God wants one tenth of the surplus and the rest belongs to the group. To the individual belongs all that is necessary to keep him in 100 per cent efficiency mentally, physically, morally, and spiritually.

The budget system is the means to frugality which he recommended. If we knew in advance how many aprons would be needed in Zion next year we would have the justification for establishing an industry.

Bishop Charles E. Irwin next spoke, taking up the general aims of Zion, which he defined as a condition under which we may obtain a maximum of human welfare. Salvation is an end and the church organization is the means. Our road is not known step by step but the direction is clearly understood. We must meet in detail as they come but they can be met scientifically and many times anticipated.

Other problems which he touched upon were the purchase of land, and the problem of personnel, both of which are vital in organization, yet about which we have done but little.

S. A. Burgess spoke briefly, stating that we need first of all a prepared people who know what to do and how to do it. Preparation should be made in advance and not after coming to the land of Zion. Secondly, the people must learn to be socially minded, a thing which the world has entirely overlooked, and a condition which does not obtain in the world.

He appealed for cooperative methods and the guidance of God through revelation in the accomplishment of this great work.

A 1 p. m. a final session was held of some of the morning classes. In C. E. Irwin's class a review was made of corporations, trust companies, partnerships, and cooperation.

Problems Meeting

A problems meeting was held at 2 p. m., June 16, to continue discussion of unfinished questions brought up at the round tables during the week. Chief among those discussed were the recreational problems, and especially Sunday recreation.

T. W. Williams, who is the superintendent of the department and who is a recreational leader in the church, advocates a Sunday of worship where the entire activities center about religious things. R. V. Hopkins, pastor in Zion, is of the same opinion, believing we can go too far in Sunday recreation, though he stated that he believed in Sunday recreation, provided it was of a religious nature. For this he suggested the study of religious drama.

Taking another view of the matter was F. M. McDowell who insisted that the sixteen-year-old boy or girl on Saturday was sixteen years old on Sunday. He believes recreation is necessary although to moderation, and that the effect it has upon the community must be considered. He believes that sometimes more damage than good is done where the community attitudes are not considered.

The program called for moving pictures Saturday evening, and considerable labor was expended to have the apparatus in shape in the big tent, but as the films did not arrive the evening was spent in community singing and a social time.

Sunday, June 17, Zion Builders

The clear weather of the week end continued and the day's services opened with Sunday school at 9.30. In the young people's section in the high school building the auditorium was crowded, with every seat occupied and several seats with two to a seat.

The first half hour was spent in singing hymns under the leadership of A. N. Hoxie. Then after prayer by F. Henry Edwards the younger adolescents proceeded to their classrooms. Ordinarily the whole assembly proceeds to classrooms in the high school building, but on account of the large number present they remained in the auditorium and were addressed by F. M. McDowell.

The usual Sunday school for the adults and children was held at the Brick Church at the same hour with J. A. Gunsolley in charge in the upper auditorium. An early adjournment was taken to make room for the 11 o'clock assembly.

Our Aims Are One

This being the Young People's Convention no special services were held at the high school, but all except the children gathered in the upper auditorium to hear President F. M. Smith at 11 a. m.

The opening exercises, principally of music, included an anthem by the choir under the direction of Paul N. Craig and a solo by James R. Houghton. President Smith emphasized that regardless of the department of work in which we labor our aims are one. There is of necessity a diversity of operation and of work.

We must have a people one with God individually and collectively. The task before us is hopeless without faith in God, but we have his promise to hasten his work. There is of necessity a diversity of effort, but we should not therefore allow diversity of purpose to enter in. As a church we must have so highly centralized control that all departments may work together. We must be free from conflicting purposes. We must have faith in our leaders. All must recognize the same goal. It is useless to pray for the return of Christ so long as we fail to justify his return.

First the missionary department must carry on its work with one contemplated effort. We have shrunk the missionary department in the past. We must preach more of God and more of God's plan. The gospel of Christ can help each individual but we must reverse our attitude that the gospel is to save individuals.

We have two sources for perpetuating our membership. First, conversion, and this has been our chief effort in the past. Second, how about saving our own children. We have overlooked this natural increase in the past. We are glad to know that the department of religious education is going to be responsible for children in the future. The object of the missionary work is conversion for the purpose of building the kingdom of God.

Second, the financial department, but why not call this the department of economics, as that is a broader term. The department must work parallel and in harmony with the spiritual department. It must not lose sight of our aims in industrial and agricultural enterprises. The doctrine of stewardships then becomes of prime importance. We must therefore spiritualize our temporal affairs.

Third. In the educational aspect, I hope to see the day that Graceland is the educational seat of the church. Do not fear that we shall ever remove to Independence the activities of Graceland. If the Institute of Arts and Sciences ever becomes a college, it will be after Graceland has become a university. We must have church schools because no other institution in the world has any interest in the building of Zion. We must expand the activities of Graceland and build other educational institutions in the church.

Fourth. Recreation. To some there still exists a horror of play on Sunday. God instituted one day of rest. He said we should do no unnecessary work. He also said to remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy, so do nothing on that day to disparage its sanctity. If the recreational department is carried on with these ideals in mind it will work in harmony with the other departments in redeeming Zion.

Fifth, Physical department or Department of Health.

Ground Breaking at Graceland College

On Sunday afternoon after the prayer service the assembly gathered at the site proposed for the erection of the new gymnasium and assembly hall. Fourteen or fifteen thousand dollars has already been pledged by private individuals for this especial purpose. The goal, however, is twenty to thirty thousand, but that entirely voluntary as there is to be no drive or effort to collect generally through the branches. It is left open because the alumni proposed to raise their share of $5,000 and have made no donation above. The original plan is that persons in the East have offered $5,000. The young people are raising an additional $5,000, the business men of Lamoni a third $5,000, and the alumni of the college a fourth $5,000. The alumni have as yet made no start, as only a few of them were present at the convention compared to the total number who have attended Graceland College.

The plan proposed is to make not only a gymnasium of it but also an assembly hall capable of seating one thousand. Among those promoting the movement for the young people the suggestion has also been made that the plan should be extended to include a swimming pool and our brethren from the East are willing to donate one fourth of any sum necessary. The business men of the town are quite taken with this idea and propose to raise more than their $5,000 so as to make it feasible.

But the start already made is sufficient to insure the building so that formal exercises were held on Sunday afternoon, opening with music by the Lamoni band, followed by "The battle hymn of the Republic," prayer by Bishop B. R. McGuire, then "America the beautiful," by the audience, an address by the mayor, G. W. Blair, and response on behalf of the college by Doctor G. N. Briggs, President of Graceland College, with suitable music the formal breaking of the ground, followed by each of the following turning a spade full of earth, accompanied with a few brief remarks: President F. M. Smith, C. S. Van Eaton, for the alumni, W. A. Hopkins, Mrs. Vida E. Smith, J. A. Gunsolley, and H. S. Salisbury. Many States and foreign countries were then represented by their delegates. Finally came A. N. Hoxie who was responsible for organizing the plan to build the gymnasium, and George N. Briggs, president of the college.

Many more pledges were turned in by those in attendance at the exercises. Dismissed by prayer by President F. M. McDowell.

"What Next?"

The final service of the convention was the sermon by President F. M. McDowell at the Brick Church at 8 o'clock. "What next?" was the topic discussed. From this hour we must be about our Father's business and that is to build a perfect society, Zion. We must accept the call of the Master and put Christianity to a test for it has never been tried in the history of the world.

In summing up the purpose of the convention he said that the church organization needs its young people if it is to perpetuate itself and succeed in its purposes. The convention helped to cement the young people to the organization. Also the vision, ideals, and dreams of youth are necessary if there is to be a to-morrow, for youth means the ability to receive and pass on our social heritage. We have been in danger of considering our machinery the evidence that we are the church of Christ. We have had the tendency to rest upon

An Appeal From Indian Mission

This is the time of the year when we are house cleaning, and in the process of the work we put aside many pieces of clothing or garments that have gone out of style, and we think: "Some day I will get those things out and do something with them!" And next year at about the same time we find them again and look them over and put them back again and again year after year. Of course this does not happen in all homes, but in a good many. And it is about these used clothes I am writing you to-day. Not the ones you use or need, but the ones you have put away in some closet or in the basement.

We are in the Indian missionary work and we find among these people many who are poor and some in need. It is of these I am writing you. Last winter worthy children on this reservation would have been glad to have had some of the clothing and shoes you have stored away in a closet somewhere about the house. Some of these children have no parents and are being cared for by some of the tribe.

So many people want to send tracts and papers of a very old date and this is a very good thing in a way; but old papers and tracts don't warm people's bodies and the tract is soon forgotten. But an old overcoat, or some clothing that will add to their comfort is the thing most needed. Last year a few of the Saints sent used garments and we gave them to the poor and they were very glad to get them. The Indian women are very handy with the needle, and they make these clothes over and use them every one.

I am asking you to assist in this good work. Look these garments over and send what you can to help in the work. Put them in a box and send them by parcel post prepaid and we shall be glad to send them to those who are in need. Sister Julia Case and Sister Burton will find places for everything that you send. Should you send old shoes, have them re-our oars, and in a few generations would be ancestor worshippers as other people have become.

We are yet a long way from visioning our ideals, but the convention, if it has been a success, has helped many to grasp the vision before us. Youth needs the church because nowhere in the world can it find the ideals offered by the church. The church offers youth the opportunity to serve humanity, and can give the guidance necessary to steer youth over the dangers of its pathway.

The young people are paying the highest tribute possible to the ones who have gone before by taking up the oars and starting for the goal upstream. People must not think the church is going out of its way to bribe or win the young people with offerings. It is not a matter of what the young people will receive from the church but that they should give the best that is in them.

"What next?" You can become really converted to the gospel, make every effort to find your talent, and give it full expression. When you find that talent, train it, then put it to work, if not in the church, in the community. Say, "Lord, here am I, send me." Then keep in close touch with God. Refrain no longer from going into the stewardship basis; you don't need to live in Zion to do that. Practice your religion; spread the gospel; be loyal. We need a faith that carries with it a willingness to risk all for a cause.

What next? Move forward in the right, and aid in bringing about the kingdom of God on earth.

paired before sending so they will be all ready for them. Remember we are not in a big city where there are lots of shoe cobblers, but out on an Indian reservation. Address all packages to Mrs. P. R. Burton, Box 62, Walthill, Nebraska. And don't put off till tomorrow what can be done to-day, because if you do, next year will find those clothes in the same old place. We desire to thank all who remembered us with used clothing in our Indian work last year.

Sister Floyd Writes From Jerusalem

It surely is a great blessing to have the church papers. One can sit down any spare time and feel the communion of the Spirit while reading the different articles and to watch the progress is grand.

The new invention of preaching by radio seems most wonderful to me. Of course I can hardly comprehend it, never having seen or heard through it. Surely God is bringing the ends of the earth together that his voice can be heard by all who really seek to find.

Oh, how I do long for the time to come when it will be one Lord, one faith, and one baptism, when all see alike and are of one faith. Of course we cannot expect that until the millennium. However, may God hasten the time.

I picked up the HERALD and was reading. Again the remembrance of the grand meeting at Independence came to me as I read of the different speakers, so many of whom I had the privilege to hear when there. Then again the remembrance came how so many years ago when there were no meetings or church privileges of how mother and I were starving for communion with the Saints now knowing there were so many on the earth.

So one morning I told her I had had a little dream and felt it was spiritual and meant something. She prayed for the meaning while I was telling it, then said, "Mary, God has a people here on the earth and when I am dead and gone you will find out about them and go to be among them where the word of God flows freely, and when enjoying the Spirit of the meetings you will think of me and wish I could have been with you."

How often in the prayer meetings and on communion Sundays her words would come to me and when hearing such fine, deep sermons, for it did truly come to pass, and I am so thankful I was blessed with so many privileges of hearing some of his wonderful messengers. May God bless them all in the good work of saving souls and preparing a people to meet the Lord. I am in my sixty-fourth year, so may not see much more of life, but will ever be grateful for what God has done for me.

I had a letter yesterday from one of the Adams Colony. It seems most of them got in with the true and original church.

Your sister in Christ,

MARY J. FLOYD.

Missionary Success on Grand Cayman Island

I am very busily engaged in the midst of a series of meetings in a new opening between Georgetown and Boddentown.

By invitation of the people of this community to Elder Tordoff and me, I came here to preach three or four introductory sermons, but interest has proven so intense that I decided to continue throughout another week. I am indeed pleased to inform you that the people are taking well to our message and have made it as comfortable for me as possible, one family even moving out of their home to make it possible for me to use the whole house, which is proving a very desirable place for services. The two large rooms in one, seated with benches from a near-by church, are making it possible to seat about seventy. It is estimated that over one hundred have been out every evening since we commenced services here.

I wish that Brother Tordoff, who suffered considerable persecution in the opening up of the work in this island, could have been here last Friday evening and have seen the great interest and splendid attendance. It was supposed to be my last night, but there were so many urgent requests from them to return here after the Sunday meetings at Georgetown and begin again Monday evening that I felt compelled to postpone my Boddentown meetings for another week. The good people here are helping me in every way. God is raising up many friends for the cause here.

Though I am alone in the island, for the present, in the missionary work, yet I have decided to remain here longer than I had planned when Brother Tordoff left us over two weeks ago. I will remain here until about the middle of June, at which time I hope to return to Tampa direct.

I am glad that Elder Tordoff was able to leave here in plenty of time for the young people's services at Lamoni. I wish I was able to be there. May God bless them with a great outpouring of his Spirit.

The Sunday school at Boddentown is progressing nicely and has a larger attendance than our school in Georgetown. Some arrangements must be made to secure a building there, as a private house will not accommodate sixty with their several classes. I am going to arrange for a building, if possible, to hold my two weeks' meetings in there, which I hope to commence next Sunday evening. Many of the people from this district will attend the meetings in Boddentown, it being but three and a half miles distant.

We are hoping that word of the new missionary will soon reach us, as it is absolutely necessary that some one should be here to carry on the work in Georgetown and these two new openings. I am simply remaining here longer than I first intended in order that I might bridge over part of the time between now and the time the new man shall arrive. Under the circumstances this place should not be left long without a missionary. It should not, in fact, be left that way at all.

Sincerely yours,

J. CHARLES MAY.

Beautiful Location of the Maine Reunion

We are having a reunion in Maine this summer. The date is August 12 to 19. The location is Brooksville.

Brooksville is one of the beauty spots of Maine. The reunion grounds are located on the shore of Walker Pond (Lake Winneaugwamauk), a beautiful stretch of water. All the surrounding country is a picturesque scene of field and woodland, hill and dale. The pond affords wonderful opportunities for those who take delight in fishing. There is an abundance of white perch, also a few bass and salmon. We have boats to let and there is fine bathing. If you come and see for yourself, you will never forget the beauty and charm of this quiet spot. There is plenty of room to romp and play in the spacious fields that we have at our disposal.

Only two miles from camp lies the cool Atlantic. From an elevation near the grounds you can command a view that has no equal on the coast of Maine. The whole stretch of Penobscot Bay lies before you and you can count over fifty islands. At night the piercing rays of at least ten lighthouses can be seen.

The air here is cool and bracing. The ocean contributes internal pleasures as well. Do you desire clams, lobsters, and fish? Enough said. We will have plenty of room for visitors. We have rented a cottage close by that can be used to give sleeping quarters to at least fifty persons.

Elders Greene, Gleazer, Thompson, and Wilson will be present, and Sister Lucie Sears is expected to be present. We are hoping that President Elbert A. Smith can find time to pay us a visit along with Bishop Fisher. All the Saints in Southern New England District, please run down to Maine for a few days and pay us a visit.

We are running a dining room where meals will be served at a moderate price. If you are planning to come, let us know when you will arrive so we can have arrangements made for your rooms. Write to the undersigned, Brooksville, Maine.

N. M. WILSON,

Chairman of Committee.

Progress at Wigan, England

On Friday, April 27, we concluded a week's mission, having had special services each night during the week. Apostle D. T. Williams was our speaker and I am glad to report the services were very successful, and the efforts of our brother were like meat in due season.

The Saints here were built up in the faith by the example and preaching of D. T., and we had several friends come out to hear him. There was not one of them who gave us an adverse report.

The able manner in which he placed the gospel before them certainly helped the work along in Wigan. On the Friday evening we had one of the popular preachers of the town present. He seemed to enjoy the meetings and so expressed himself at the close of the service.

The Saints certainly enjoyed a spiritual feast during the whole week and seem more determined than ever to follow the lowly Nazarene. "Consecration," by Brother Albert McCullough was sung with all the zeal we could command, not in words only, for one could sense the feeling of all present as they went right into the Spirit of it and brought out the full meaning of those beautiful words. Oh, how the Saints rejoiced when each evening we would sing the songs of Zion, along with "Consecration," and what an influence was felt in our midst! We certainly felt like one large family, brothers and sisters indeed, strong in the love of God and free from the bickerings of the Devil.

This condition I am sure is our lot if we as Latter Day Saints will free ourselves from the evil influences of the world and put our hearts in order, and get right with God. In this respect I believe we in Wigan are progressing and by the combination of our faith and works we are preaching this gospel in such manner, that God is glorified by the obedience to his law of the honest in heart.

How pleased I was on Thursday, April 19, when I led seven more into the waters of baptism in the public baths. There were five adults and two young people. The Saints came out in large numbers to welcome our brothers and sisters into the fold. We had a splendid service amidst great rejoicings at the goodness of God for granting us his further increase.

Throughout the service I was blessed with a goodly measure of the Spirit, bringing with it in that quiet peaceful manner, the feeling of God's acknowledgments of my labors of the day. Thus we are confirmed more in the faith, day after day.

I was assisted in the water by my faithful colleague, Elder William J. Fawcett, while Elders William and James Spargo attended to the other part of the service. Apostle D. T. Williams came in handy on the following Sunday when he assisted in the confirmation and spoke words befitting the occasion, giving them a good foundation to build upon.

During the past few years God has blessed us abundantly and we have about doubled our number of members. This has been made possible through a united priesthood for which I thank God, that he has granted unto me such assistance. I find when I am surrounded with my aged brethren in the priesthood I have wise counselors, while my younger brethren are sound workers, which leaves me little to do except be the man at the wheel. Again I say I am thankful to have such associates and delighted to preside over a real live branch, wherein I believe is to be found all the elements which tend for further progress, and the splendid desire to be in harmony as coworkers in this the greatest and most marvelous work that has ever come to the children of men.

In conclusion I testify to the goodness of Almighty God towards me and mine for which I am thankful. My heart's desire is that I may remain humble, faithful, and true, and be gathered with the elect. My constant prayer is for the benefit of his people. Your brother in gospel bonds,

ARTHUR SMITH.

Independence

A goodly number of those representing the church offices at the convention have returned to their posts of duty. All report their time profitably spent.

Apostle T. W. Williams passed through Independence Tuesday on his way from Lamoni to Los Angeles, California.

Bishop James F. Keir left Saturday for Chicago where he was to meet with the Saints in that place in a union sacrament service on Sunday. He expects to return about July 10 after attending one or more reunions. He also expects to look after other church business on this trip.

The Sunday evening services are now being held on the church lawn. These meetings are more popular for hot weather and we noted a large crowd was in attendance Sunday evening to hear Elder George E. Harrington, former pastor of Independence. Other appointments for Sunday were as follows: 11 a. m. at the Stone Church, Elder John Zimmermann, jr.; Liberty Street, junior service at 11 a. m., preaching by President Elbert A. Smith in the evening; Enoch Hill, Elder W. J. Brewer at 11 and Children's Day program in the evening; Englewood, Lyman Smith and Lyman Fike; Walnut Park, I. N. White and J. A. Dowker.

Saturday night the second of the community picture shows was held on the church lawn with the usual large crowd in attendance. These pictures are shown every Saturday night through the summer.

Beginning next Friday night, Elder L. E. Hills will begin a series of lectures on the Book of Mormon geography in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church. He will use maps, charts, and slides to illustrate his lecture. These lectures will be held each Friday evening and take the place of the regular class sessions. They begin at 8 p. m.

President Elbert A. Smith, wife and two sons, are leaving this week for a tour of the East. En route they will stop at Saint Louis, Minneapolis, Kirtland, Buffalo, and will stop at other points where there are Saints and friends. They plan on attending the Massachusetts district reunion at Onset, Massachusetts, expecting to be gone for two months.

Walter W. Smith, general church historian, went to the Sanitarium for an operation Monday, June 18. He is doing well and expects to be able to leave the Sanitarium in a week or ten days.

Blue Pencil Notes

Fashion is hardest on those who serve her most faithfully.

It is suggested that in view of the great speed being attained by automobiles and airplanes it may presently take longer to stay where we are than it will to go somewhere.

It is reported that the commissioner of Indian affairs is attempting to regulate dancing among the Indians on the ground that it takes too much time from their homes and business. Is not an attempt on the part of white people to regulate Indian dancing presuming a little too much on the tradition that the Indian has no sense of humor?

Henry J. Allen wrote from Russia commenting on the Christmas demonstrations at which the "young communists" hanged God and Christ and Moses and a few others in effigy. At that time they paraded with banners inscribed: "We, the young communists, blow up God!" At Easter time, however, a reaction had set in and the peasants were flocking back to their churches and religious devotions, and Allen writes: "There is a disquieting feeling among communists that the 'blowing up of God' was not a finished job."

Christ understood human nature perfectly. As John expressed it: "He knew all men, and needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man." (John 2: 24, 25.)

He understands our frailty, our proneness to forget, our faculty for misunderstanding and quarrels. With all this in view he arranged that we should meet often together, that we should be reminded constantly of our fellowship and our covenant.

That most solemn and impressive and intimate of the ceremonies of his church, the communion of the Lord's supper, was designed to remind us of him—to call our minds back to a contemplation of his teachings, his life, his character: "This do in remembrance of me."

When we think on him, malice, envy, hatred, evil thoughts vanish from our minds. The brethren look different to us at the sacrament service than they did at the business meeting. In times of crisis and strain upon the church we do well to think upon him. If we steadfastly contemplate him and grow towards him we shall draw together by converging lines. It cannot be otherwise. It is as certain as mathematics or geometry. Two lines tending toward a given point are bound to come together sometime.

Jesus laid great stress upon oneness, unity, solidarity. In his prayer at the close of the Passover feast when he was making himself ready for his death, this thought burdened his soul, and he prayed: "That they may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

To be one in opinion is of secondary importance. That will come in time—perhaps after a long time, considering the many diverse temperaments among the membership and the vast differences in our past experiences and training and predispositions. To be one in spirit is of primary importance and should obtain now. Where the Spirit of Christ is there is unity of spirit even though opinions still differ. One good communion service will do more to make the Saints one in spirit than can be accomplished by argument in years. Argument has its place in educating the public mind, but it seldom brings together two men who differ radically.

Every man's opinion is like his watch—right. Naturally, a man would have no opinion that he did not think right. If you tell him a few times that his opinion is wrong, a strain is put upon his fellowship, particularly so if you tell him bluntly and without just and requisite courtesy. Here is where the broad toleration of Christian charity enters in if men are to compare views and canvass their different opinions and yet remain one in spirit.

When we think of Jesus, one thing strikes us with great conviction and power: John states it very well: "Now before the feast of the Passover when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of the world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end."

Reread those words: "He loved them unto the end." Remember what he had to bear. One of them under stress denied that he had ever known Jesus. All of them slept peacefully while he agonized in the garden alone. One sold him for thirty pieces of silver. All "followed him afar off." Yet he "loved them unto the end." Are you enough like Christ to love your brethren "to the end" even though they may offend and injure and apparently desert and repudiate you? Are we enough like Christ to obey the very important injunction given by the Lord through the late President Joseph Smith: "Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called; and I will be with you by my spirit and presence of power unto the end."—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 17.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Large universities are not confined exclusively to the present age. In the thirteenth century there were 10,000 students studying Roman law at the University of Bologna alone, and there were twelve universities throughout Italy teaching the same subject. When it is remembered that a university was not confined to one subject we can realize that large universities are not confined to the present day. The University of Paris, the various universities of Italy, and of Spain, were crowded with thousands of students.

Eastern Mission Ministerial Conference

On May 19 and 20, at Attleboro, Massachusetts, the Quorum of Elders of the Eastern Mission held the fourteenth session of a series of ministerial conferences which have been conducted in recent years. These conferences are educational, and no legislation is attempted, and only such parliamentary business as is incidental to the meetings is done.

It was my pleasure to be in attendance at the last of these conferences. I left the Social Workers Conference at Washington to be there, and was repaid for the effort. The sessions were interesting and beneficial, and the Eastern Mission is indebted to the good work of Doctor W. A. Sinclair for these interesting conferences, as it is largely due to Doctor Sinclair's efforts that these conferences have been successful. He has rallied to himself the support of the whole district.

At the afternoon session, Sunday, the 20th, a scheduled prayer service was changed to a preaching service, and I was asked to speak. I enjoyed good liberty and trust good was done.

Success to the ministerial conference.

An Anniversary

June 27 is one of the anniversaries of the church, though it is the date of a double tragedy, first the assassination of Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith; second, the beginning of "the dark and cloudy day."

Joseph Smith was born December 23, 1805, in Sharon, Vermont. He had his first vision near Palmyra, New York, in the spring of 1820. He received his first visit of the angel and a statement concerning his future work on the night of September 21, 1823, and on the 22d he received a view of the plates under the direction of the angel. The year 1923 is therefore a centennial of this great vision, declaring what his work should be and instructing him what he should do.

Each year thereafter he went to the same place on September 22, and viewed the plates and received instruction, though he was not permitted to take them until September 22, 1827. It is of interest to note that this was the first anniversary after his twenty-first birthday, when he became legally a man and responsible.

The church was organized on April 6, 1830, so it was only a little over fourteen years after the organization of the church, and less than twenty-one years after his first vision of the plates that he was assassinated, and before he had reached the age of thirty-nine years.

To-day is therefore an anniversary day of the church, though a sad one, and the year is a centennial date of rejoicing for the restoration of the gospel to earth.

Statistical Work Broadened

In the letter column will be found, this issue, a letter to the editors by Brother F. Henry Edwards, in which he comments upon the work of the Statistical Department, with suggestions how that department can be made of increased value to the church. We commend Brother Edwards's letter to the careful reading of the ministry particularly; for we have long wished to see the scope of our statistical work broadened.

Week-Day Bible School

We have several times the past year called attention in the HERALD to the establishment of week-day Bible schools. It has been clear for some time that the church would soon be called upon to meet this great opportunity. We do not know that this calling of attention has resulted in any active preparation, but surely the notice which appears in another column of the need for trained teachers capable of passing the tests for public-school teachers and also as teachers of religion will arouse us to immediate preparation.

We have no doubt that we have a number of such teachers in the church. Graceland has graduated perhaps a hundred qualified teachers if not more, and a number have received scholastic teaching elsewhere and have had sufficient study to pass an examination, but there are needed competent teachers at once in two cities. It is startling that the general Sunday school superintendent is doubtful that among the many Sunday-school teachers in those two cities one in each city can be found competent.

There is needed at once, first, competent teachers for these two cities as a minimum. If more than one for each city can be found it will be much better, even if some must be invited to move from elsewhere to these places to help.

Second, there is needed a curriculum for week-day Bible school, but third there are needed a great many to prepare for the future demand, for this movement has only started. If we are to hold our own children we must be prepared to meet it city by city, town by town.

Read carefully the announcement by General Superintendent A. M. Carmichael in this issue.

Graceland Souvenir Number

Pursuant to the Graceland Home-Coming, the Lamoni Chronicle prepared a Graceland Souvenir Number. This contains so much interesting material concerning the college that we are taking the liberty of reprinting the greater part and hereby give credit to the Lamoni Chronicle for the splendid work they have done. It is interesting to note the success of some former Graceland graduates, also to read the extract from the Greeting by Professor Gunsolley, "Graceland's place," and additional information with regard to Sister Marietta Walker and her work for the college. Also some expressions from former college people should prove of interest to the readers of the HERALD. This last appears in the letter department.

Graceland College

The Young People's Convention has brought Graceland to the fore in the thoughts of the young. The whole convention centers there, except on Sundays. The big assembly tent is on the campus directly in front of the old college building with all its traditions.

Those who have been there love to talk over their experiences, renew their acquaintance with friends and buildings. The spirit of the school is thus felt by the young people.

The exhibits are all in the college buildings. The classes meet in the usual study rooms; in fact, all gatherings except the large assemblies are held in the schoolrooms and college chapel, and during the wet weather all meetings were of necessity held there.

Hence the young people become acquainted with the environment. But more important, they come in contact with those imbued with the ideals of our school.

All the equipment in buildings and fields of the college are placed at the disposal of the visiting young people, and they are made welcome everywhere.

It is therefore not surprising that the young people responded readily to an appeal to raise funds for a gymnasium and assembly hall for the college, for they had learned to love this college of the church.

The Young People's Convention

The Religious Aspect

Some feared beforehand that the convention would be dominated by a pursuit of pleasure. Those who attended were soon relieved of this anxiety if they had such, for the convention was marked by the devoted interest and earnestness of the young people present and their expressions in the prayer services.

The returning young people have especially stressed the prayer services. A few who were questioned directly as to what appealed to them most in the convention answered without hesitancy, "The prayer meetings."

These meetings which were in charge of Elder R. V. Hopkins, who usually called from three to six to assist him, were marked by the many earnest testimonies and prayers of the young people, and also by the encouragement and admonition given to them through spiritual manifestations. These were not reported but were of such a character as to increase the devotion and interest of the young people.

On Sunday, June 10, two or three spoke in prophecy, and one in tongues and interpreted. But the spiritual gifts were also manifested in many others of the prayer meetings, notably that of the opening on Friday, June 8.

The earnestness of the young people in their singing was also an evidence of their feelings, and in many if not most of the lectures the religious note was not only struck but emphasized.

The Department of Religious Education conducted a model or experimental Sunday school. The morning lectures were also all correlated to the problems of the church and the religious aspect kept to the fore.

Then the services both Sundays were devoted entirely to the religious field and the spiritual evidences were also manifest.

The program provided for a few sermons during the week which were given as appointed, but the program could not secure this devoted interest on the part of the young which was actually manifested. Those who prepared the program strove to do their part to secure these desirable ends.

The Educational Aspect

As much as possible was done in an educational way in the limited time of the convention. Instruction was carried on in four different classes each morning at 8.45. The experimental church school, at ten o'clock was decidedly of intellectual interest to all Sunday school workers as was also the exhibit in the next room.

The lecture and symposium at 10 a. m. with a different topic each day presented a wide variety of interesting themes for the consideration of those attending. It was not possible for anyone to attend all four of the morning classes. It was possible for anyone to attend all of the morning lectures and symposiums, but if this were done attendance on the model church school was excluded.

Then at 1.30 at the general assembly a variety of questions was taken up and discussed in the round table. One or two days, on account of wet weather, two round tables were conducted at the same time in different buildings, and every day in addition to the round table a small class gathered to learn the work of the Boy Scouts.

The Sunday services were of course both educational and religious, and during the week-day evening services four sermons were preached on different days.

It would seem that as much was done as possible for the intellectual man.

The Recreational Aspect

On Friday morning, June 8, those who roomed on the College hill were assembled on the campus for setting-up exercises. The rain, however, prevented this for the immediately succeeding mornings. The instruction at least was given on what setting-up exercises constituted.

Then every afternoon at 3 o'clock the whole assembly adjourned for recreational leadership. There was some discussion, but most of it was by the demonstration method. There were several different grounds for army or indoor baseball, four courts for volley ball, one tennis court, two croquet grounds, and an athletic field. This athletic equipment was used by the children at various times during the day and was quite generally occupied by the young people when the weather permitted. One morning lecture and symposium were devoted to recreation and expression, and part of the time on the second morning was given over to the discussion of the drama. On three or four afternoons at least, time was taken at the round table for the discussion of various aspects of recreation and expression and the problems growing out of this work. This convention offered a splendid opportunity for some of the young people to get acquainted with social games and to become more or less expert therein.

It should not be forgotten that religion itself is recreative, as was pointed out by Doctor Harrington Monday morning, June 11, and certainly community singing is classed among the recreations. In addition special entertainments were presented by the Lamoni young people on three evenings. A trip around Lamoni took a fourth evening while the social spirit and splendid feeling manifested throughout was itself an inspiration and in that sense recreative.

Reference might also be briefly made to the high character of the meals served and the selection offered as this also no doubt had its part, and an important one, in the health and good feeling of the camp. It is much easier to be happy and spiritual on a hot day on proper fruits and vegetables than it is on the sometimes usual food of meat, bread and butter, potatoes and gravy.

In fact, the convention was arranged to care for and supply the whole man or woman among the young people attending so that each factor of human life would cooperate to make of the whole a success.

Graceland a Senior College

The attention of our readers is called to an item on page 571 of the HERALD of June 13 concerning Graceland becoming a four-year college, or in other words, adding the third and fourth college years, the years of the senior college. In that item it was clearly pointed out that Graceland offered more than three times the courses necessary for a full collegiate course. The course may be taken in liberal arts, in English or languages, in education, or a teacher training course which qualifies for a first grade certificate in the State of Iowa.

In addition to this there is offered a three-year course in public school music, collegiate in rank, and also a two-year course in public speaking, this latter in the junior college.

This work of the senior college does not interfere with the basic work of the junior college, which prepares for the different professional courses of medicine, dentistry, engineering, law, or commerce.

The missionary field of the church is a wonderful one, and one we have hardly glimpsed as yet.

Approximately 2,000 were present at the ground breaking exercises Sunday afternoon, 158 cars, 4 teams, and one saddle horse.

News of Young People's Convention

Class Work

At 8.45 each day four classes met for serious study. This work cannot very well be reported in full but its character is indicated by the following summaries:

Social Principles of the Gospel

A Lecture Course by F. M. McDowell

"Zion is not a matter of geography; it is a condition of changed life," said F. M. McDowell in opening the course of lectures on "Social principles of the gospel."

The individual must be regenerated if we are to bring about a new order. He must give up such wrong attitudes as hate, fear, suspicion, selfishness, and enmity, and substitute for them the right attitudes of love, hope, trust, altruism, and cooperation. Hence the problem of building a better world is principally one of developing right attitudes in individuals. "It is the problem of human living together," says Mr. McDowell. "Zion is not so much a problem of geography or machinery or laws as it is a matter of directing human impulses to a better way of living. Of course there must be machinery."

He then showed that the gospel of Christ includes (a) a means of individual regeneration and (b) a plan of social organization. Christ was primarily interested in social life. An analysis of Matthew shows that there is contained therein 101 statements of Christ dealing with social life, only nine dealing with doctrine, and fourteen with the hereafter. This is overwhelming evidence that Christ taught a social gospel.

Even the so-called first principles of the gospel have a vital social significance. Faith must not be considered a dogmatic rule of God. Instead it makes us capable of becoming different, and as such is a social principle. Repentance is not a form but a changed life. It means cease to do evil, prepare to do well. Baptism is to die to sin and arise to righteousness, die to self and arise to service. Laying on of hands symbolizes the putting of self in tune with God. All are fundamental social principles.

The social principles of Jesus, human life, and personality are sacred, as was seen in the blessing of little children, touching the leper and shielding the outcast woman. We must learn to conserve human life in our social order.

Again men belong together and must work out their problems together as shown by the great commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The Lord's prayer is a social prayer and embodies in it the desire for the kingdom of God here on earth. The strong must help the weak, and the hope was expressed that we may always have the chance to do something for others.

We do not want to do away with ambition. It is a God-given quality, but ambition must be satisfied in service to humanity. This is a principle which can and must be observed in all walks of life if we are to attain to perfection.

As with ambition, private property must serve social welfare. God is the owner, and possession of property is only an additional opportunity for service. Brother McDowell cited as the unsocial man the one who brags that he is a self-made man. Little does he realize that God gave him the power and society furnished the materials. His heritage was both social and natural, and to these sources he owes his all. "The self-made man worships his creator too much," said Brother McDowell.

Religion must be socially efficient. Any religion that obscures duty should be condemned as also when it separates men. Worship is not enough. "Be useful or die," emphasizes Brother McDowell.

The conflict with evil is an actual conflict. Evil has a strong appeal to the human instincts and will not surrender without complete defeat. The kingdom of God will have to fight for its advance.

"Social redemption is wrought by vicarious suffering." The cross is a vital social principle, for, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Again, "He that loses his life for my sake shall find it."

The course presented an overview of the social principles of the gospel. Clearly stated in his convincing way, Brother McDowell concluded, "The new social order, Zion, that we are trying to build to-day will come only by the application of these principles to our social life."

Religious Education

Every expression of the child's life should be religious, according to A. Max Carmichael, and upon this basis he laid his course on religious education, which was given during the convention.

Our old methods of dealing with the child in Sunday school and church are no longer good. We must take a cross section of childhood at various ages and determine what the problems of that age are. When these are determined our method must be revised so as to meet those problems in the best possible way.

Our church activities have not taken into consideration the child or youth to an extent great enough to satisfy the demands. Thirty per cent of the church membership is made up of adults. The other seventy per cent is composed of children and young people in adolescence. Are we devoting seventy per cent of our time to the problem of the young? The answer is no. With our formal, traditional way of conducting services we try to persuade ourselves that we are imbuing our children with religion. "Sing, pray, sing, preach, sing, pray," is the program of Sunday, and never an attempt is made to solve the problems of the young.

Religion is a purposeful life and as such is expressed in every action. Teachers must understand the child's problems and from these problems get the material with which to work in the solving of those problems. Religion is a co-operative life which means cooperation of student with student, teacher with student, and each with the group. The teacher must go down to the child and learn what is vital in the life of that child, then with wisdom and training, bring that child up to the ideals of the church. Our Sunday school quarterlies can no longer be depended upon to solve the problem of youth. An acquiring of the knowledge of Bible stories is not the obtaining of religion.

In the prayer life of the child in Sunday school, the prayer should be made in terms of the desires of the child. In the primary department prayers should be no longer than one sentence, but can be had every five minutes if necessary. Expression of what is in the heart of the child is a prayer. Formalism plays no part in children's prayers.

Religion as an everyday expression presupposes a fullness of expression of life daily. The consciousness of God must be brought out in every act, on the football field as well as in the prayer service. We must help the child to reconstruct his concept of God as he grows and his experiences broaden. Under the intelligent guidance of the church we can keep our young people because they understand the ideals for which we are working. Religion is no longer a place in the distant future or a thing to be got on Sunday, but it becomes a process of daily expression.

Our religious educational program must be intensified. Our Sunday school is too short and our methods wrong. Mr. Carmichael believes in a three-hour Sunday school where all the knowledge of science can be brought to aid us in solving our religious program. An evaluation of life is necessary to be brought about in the child's mind, and to do this all must play and work and worship together, every day and on Sunday, in order to understand the fullness of life.

"Religion is every act of life" was his theme.

Naturally he emphasized the great importance of trained teachers. We must have teachers who understand the feelings and the mind of the child, in other words, child psychology; who understand in a general way the methods not only of teaching but particularly of religious teaching. Jesus was the greatest teacher of all ages. His methods were the very purest and finest of pedagogy.

The teacher should also be trained in the subject matter that is to be taught, but above all else should be able to study the individual children of his or her particular class and to act as a real guide or leader to them in the development of their religious life.

Children attend a week-day school for three and more hours a day. There is no reason why they should not attend a school in religious education for a similar period. But the week-day school has long recognized the value of a recreational period, especially in the forenoon, and also in the afternoon if the afternoon session is long. Better studying is done when the children are released for this recess or play period. But in our religious education we can make this period of relaxation and recreation also instructive. In fact, our recreational work with the children should be constructive. It is not sufficient simply to turn them loose to haphazard methods of the recess of the past in which the modest child, the one who most needs the relaxation and social contact, mopes in a corner, and where the energy of the more active children is at times misdirected. Recreation can well be directed so as to make it instructive and constructive as well as more enjoyable and therefore more beneficial.

The limited period of the class would not permit of a complete review. The scope of the work undertaken has already been indicated in the published outlines of this course which gave reference to many good texts on the different problems of the Sunday school officer and teacher.

This course emphasizes greatly the value of training for the teacher and training for the children. If we bring up the child in the way he should go when he is old he will not depart therefrom. If we could save a single generation we would have the whole world won.

Courses on Bible Appreciation

The course on "Aims and purposes of Bible study," by C. E. Wight, began with the hypothesis that God has a definite purpose, and that purpose is gradually unfolding by revelation. This gradual unfoldment is based upon the appreciation of the group and to the extent of the group understanding is the purpose revealed.

The traditional attitude toward the Bible of infallibility grew up as a result of the attitude of infallibility toward the pope. From him this idea was extended to the Bible until it finally surrounded the entire book. This attitude is unique when we consider how the Bible was compiled. Mr. Wight dwelt upon the subject for several lectures, showing how parts of the Bible were gradually accepted, the process covering a long period of time. The compilation consisted in the following steps: first, the writing into unpointed Hebrew, which took about one hundred years; second, the adding of vowel points; third, the gathering together of various writings; fourth, the editing and compiling; fifth, following a test of years, the receiving of the final compilation into the canon of scriptures.

The order of acceptance was, Law and Prophets, or the first set of books, which was accepted about 450 B. C.; the second group to be accepted was the Prophets, about 200 B. C.; and the third, the writings were accepted about 90 A. D.

At every step in the process of formulating the canon, new processes were received with reluctance, many years passing by while the acceptance was being made.

Mr. Wight next took up the authority of the Bible, explaining that authority does not come from the Bible but from the men who received authority from God as recorded in the Bible.

From a literary point of view the Bible contains history, law, drama, poetry, and all phases of literature. It was not written by one man but many, or any one group of men, hence the varied styles. As an example of literature the Bible is perhaps the greatest of the classics.

In conclusion, Mr. Wight showed that the Bible records the gradual unfoldment of God, culminating in the life of Christ.

Economics of Zion

Bishop C. E. Irwin, who is professor of the department of economics at Graceland College, conducted an eight-day course on the economics of Zion. In fact, the final session was held on Saturday afternoon.

On every hand we heard the highest commendation expressed of the work done in this class and the conservative and clear-cut ideals set forth by Bishop Irwin. He showed himself a man of vision in dealing with our economic problem, a man of great and high ideals and yet of constructive and conservative methods. Some idea of the scope of the work undertaken is indicated in the following outline. The class, however, continued through the second outline as far as "Farming, one of the three vocational organizations." Time would not permit a thorough discussion of the budget and the succeeding portions of this outline. (This second outline we hope to publish next week.)

Some Splendid Work

Along with the regular programs in the assembly tent, other features were offered to those interested, a model Sunday school for workers in departments; a Boy Scout course; and play and rest room for small children.

The Model Sunday School

(All was held in one room—a typical small school)

At ten o'clock each day a model Sunday school was arranged for in the New College Building. In fact the rain hindered, so Tuesday, June 12, the second session was held.

We express it conservatively when we say that this is one of the finest features of the convention, and alone would justify it for all Sunday school workers, and those interested in the religious education of children, which should include all parents. Its gravest drawback is that it is held in a single room of the college—an ordinary classroom, so smaller than most of our churches. Seats are arranged in a steep tier along the south end of the room, and are sufficient to seat forty-five, but several hundred should be there to note the methods and their success. The only way this can be accomplished is for different people to attend each day.

The school is a model small Sunday school, as most of our Sunday schools are in that class. It consists of the five graded classes and necessary officers and teachers. Each class has eight or nine pupils as members.

Prayer by Pupil

The school opened with suggestions from several children as to the opening song from Zion's Praises, and a song was thus chosen by one of the children—a junior, Number 166. Then a junior girl, Dorothy Gunsolley, was called on for prayer. This was quietly reported without her knowledge by the secretary who is a shorthand reporter. The prayer follows and is of significance as showing the religious response. There had been no school for three days because of rain.

"Our Father who art in heaven, as we come before thee this morning, we thank thee for the beautiful sunshine, and we thank thee that we can come again to our church school. Help us through the week so that we may be good and come to school. Help this convention so it may be a success. In Jesus' name. Amen."

One Assembly at Opening

The best arrangement is now considered to be different assembly rooms for adults and seniors; intermediate and junior, and primary and beginners, with separate classrooms for each class. The small school cannot do that, so here there was the one assembly at the opening. But the little folks were not fully interested. The opening exercises were very brief. Then screens were set in a matter of a few seconds to make five separate classrooms.

This method proved very effective and the ability of the teachers was demonstrated in the high degree of attention. Because of the smallness of the room three classes were close to the audience, with no screen between them and the audience. In fact the screens, while shutting the classes from each other, did not shut the classes from the audience.

Class Arrangement

Each of the four lower classes was arranged in a circle with the teacher as part of the circle. The senior class seats were arranged in three rows with the teacher standing in front.

The beginners apparently were being taught a new song, first the words and meaning, and then the tune and time. They were fully interested. In fact, the degree of attention of all classes was unusually good. The senior teacher came to talk to the superintendent, who stood leaning on a screen watching two of the classes, but it did not break the attention of the class.

No superintendent, secretary, or other officer felt a need to come and interrupt a class. The superintendent observed, his teachers attended to the business of the class. If they had anything to say to each other, it was said either in person at another time, or in the conference of officers and teachers at another hour.

There was a sand table in the room, but not used in this particular session. There were also blackboards convenient for at least three classes, but also not used.

The primary class was engaged in picture study, but this was the basis of a moral teaching close to their ordinary life. The senior class discussed briefly the value of drama in the Sunday school and its purpose, the instruction of the younger children, but withdrew after a short period for nearly an hour to prepare a short drama for the next day's Sunday school.

Recreation

About 10.45 the junior class withdrew, and shortly after the beginners. The superintendent then wrote on the board so as not to disturb the remaining classes, that the seniors and juniors were working on a general lesson to be given to all. The beginners were going to the library to help straighten it out (Friday they had dusted the rest room). Before going they each one prayed briefly, but understandingly. They prayed they might do their work better than before and be a real help.

Attention was also called to the pictures on the wall—Hoffman's The Boy Jesus, and temporarily hung up were seven small pictures of the life of Christ.

After thirty-five minutes' class work, the primary class moved back and put a table in their room, also the teacher distributed papers and pencil to each.

Shortly before 11 a. m. the primary class bowed in prayer and then went out, followed shortly by the intermediate class. This gave opportunity for a brief recreational recess to the pupils. The superintendent then answered questions from the audience. This of course is not part of the model school. He urged that the church should have place for intense thought activity and place for intense physical activity. Get children into an atmosphere of intense thought activity at beginning of school.

Interest and Attention Are of High Order

About 11.10 the beginners and primary pupils returned and took up kodak pictures of church institutions and of foreign missionaries. Juniors also returned and all the teachers were busy talking. Little baskets are used for collection. Interest is again of high order. But the audience began to grow weary and some went out. There is here a lesson on fatigue. The children had all had some activity and returned refreshed.

The beginners were given cut-out pictures and crayons to color the pictures. Some crayons were broken in two by the teacher so as to distribute favorite colors. We were too far away to note colors, nor did the teacher report what colors were chosen by preference. The children finished this coloring quite well and the pictures were ready to cut out at the next session. This work left the teacher rather free for the first time.

In one class the taking of the record caused the first shifting of interest. This is not an easy point, and usually takes too much time.

The senior class having returned took up the subject of revelation and study.

The primary class were given boxes and paper fasteners and were all kept busy and interested making pasteboard furniture.

A Short Drama by Juniors

About 11.30 the three older classes were called to assembly, and screens moved so as to throw them into one room. A playlet was then given by the juniors on doing good for others, missionary work, and how we can help. The names of foreign missionaries were brought in, also the HERALD and Ensign, and reference to the work of the missionaries and what we (the Juniors) can do. This took about 12 minutes.

For the closing exercises the beginners and primaries moved screens so as to meet in one assembly room, the other three classes in the other room. These two rooms are formed simply with the screens.

The interest was excellent all through with the two younger classes. The play method appears to be a good one to emphasize practical moral lessons, without making the child self-conscious as in telling of his own good deeds.

The Children Close the School

One of the children played the organ for the close. The two assemblies did not appear to interfere with each other. The three older classes closed with a short prayer by one of the children, which is significant because of the playlet just presented:

"Our Father who art in heaven, we thank you for the many blessings you have given us, and though we may not be able to go far away and be missionaries, we can do missionary work at home. Help us to know what we can do to be of service. Amen."

We have set this forth in detail with the hopes of offering some suggestions to Sunday school officers in small schools. The screens appear to prevent distraction of attention. The lessons are adapted to the children and are of practical moral value. Each teacher prepares a report on the class work, what was done and said and by whom, and report in writing to the superintendent.

The close attention shows the great value of experience, trained teachers, who know what they are teaching and why. The avoidance of distraction by the officers is also good. And the separate assembly at the close is an advantage. The pictures on the wall were few, but good. S. A. B.

The Boy Scout Movement

By C. B. Woodstock

In the spirit of "preparation for service" which pervades the convention, twenty men have reported each day in Room 111 for constructive training in the brief Scoutmasters Course. The men have been organized as the Convention Troop of Boy Scouts with A. E. Bullard, of the College, as Scoutmaster. D. Blair Jensen, Charles Scribner, jr., and Chester Carter were chosen assistant scoutmasters, while Malcolm Barrows, Ralph Sniveley and Charles F. Church, jr., were elected leaders respectively of the Fox, Panther, and Eagle patrols. The group has met daily at 1.30 p. m., for class instruction and demonstration. The various features of Scout work have been covered in a way to train leaders and inspire them with the possibilities of real scouting.

On Tuesday Bishop Keir addressed the group and further addresses are planned by President McDowell, of the general Boy Movement and Max Carmichael, general superintendent of religious education in the church. The men were given a clearer vision of Scout Craft and its function in the larger program of the church. From the Scout troop, volley ball, baseball, and dodge ball teams were organized, which trained for participation in the athletic contests of the convention.

Rest Room and Nursery

It was originally planned to have a baby tent. But at the opening of the convention it had not been erected, and the rains and wet weather caused the rest room to be used for both purposes. This room is in the new building and equipped as a reading room, with easy chairs, rockers, settees, couch, tables, chairs, pen, ink and paper.

Oriole Girls are assigned regularly in charge and take pleasure in giving individual attention to each child. It is interesting to watch the close personal attention given to the little children who need it. One small child seemed to be lame, but was never without some one to lift him up and stay by him. He wanted to draw on the blackboard, and was at once placed where he could do so, and some one watched to keep him from falling.

Job Negeim was also there and instructing a small girl how to draw. He showed her first that the length of the nose equals the length of the forehead, also the distance from nose to chin, also from the corner of the eye to the front of the ear. These four are all equal. Using this fact and drawing enough lines horizontally, he drew in the front view of the face, and had her do the same. Then he extended the lines and drew in a side view, using now the measure from the outer corner of the eye to the beginning of ear. He then drew a woman's head freely, with hair piled high. And the little girl did a creditable imitation, drawing each line as he did. In fact all through he drew one line at a time and then waited till she had added the same line and noted the result.

Those who wished to write or read, did so, without interference, for the room was quiet. Children who wished to be more active were taken out by one of those in charge with ball and bat, or other plaything. Every effort was made to see that these little people enjoy the convention as well as those of older years.

Exhibits

As part of the convention, several exhibits were provided in different rooms. All were educational in nature and well repaid careful study.

The Sunday School Exhibit

In the Sunday school room at the Young People's Convention there is an excellent selection of books dealing with religious education, consisting of over one hundred volumes. These books are classified and available for use.

There are also many large Bible pictures, primary roll pictures, maps of the Holy Land, a relief map of Palestine with insert of ancient Jerusalem and another of modern Jerusalem and environs.

There are also nine health charts for children, illustrating the value of deep breathing, bathing, breathing through nose, don't spit on the floor, don't pass eatables around, wash hands before eating, sleep with windows open, clean teeth, and play in the open air. There are thirty-five large pictures illustrating the important truths of child training, with suitable texts.

On the whole it is an exhibit for teachers and thinkers, and includes some samples of fine art as illustrations for the Sunday school lessons.

The Cradle Roll

The display on behalf of the cradle roll in charge of Mrs. H. B. Roberts consists largely of pictorial charts. It includes, however, a layette for baby, kindergarten beads, blocks of various sorts and balls, a model bed for small children, and on one table a few foods not permissible for small children, such as pickles, tea, baked beans, ice cream cones, and peanuts. But these were stated to be but a few of the poorly adapted foods.

The charts were concerned chiefly with health, the danger of flies and mosquitoes, the necessity for drops in the baby's eyes at birth, the causes of death in the first year of life. This latter series of charts shows the deaths by months of the calendar year, by months of the child's life, and the principal causes of death.

The first chart shows that August is the month of greatest danger, with a death rate ten times that of December. In fact the seven months November to May show only slight variations, with December the lowest by a small margin. But the five months, June to October, show four times the deaths as for these seven months of low annual mortality, with August decidedly the highest, with about one fourth of the deaths for the year.

The reason? Flies. And the diseases they spread. Moral: Keep out flies and swat the fly early.

The first month of life is decidedly that of highest mortality. The second month is very much less, with a gradual decline from the second month to the end of the year.

Of causes of death, natal and prenatal causes account for 68,509, as compared with gastro-intestinal diseases 39,327; respiratory diseases, 23,716; epidemic diseases, 13,162; and all other causes 19,146.

Evidently the greatest danger is being born, a danger greater than going to war. Fortunately one suffers this only once in a lifetime. But these deaths are largely preventable. The best doctor nurse available at the time, the best doctor's advice for the months preceding birth will greatly reduce the danger.

Epidemic diseases, which are so greatly feared, have by means of sanitation, hygiene, and preventive measures been greatly reduced, though still more prevalent than they should be. The very fact of modern preventive measures have in part produced some carelessness, but more carelessness comes through ordinary gossip. Even some doctors fail to appreciate the truly dangerous character of these children's epidemic diseases.

So we see posted, "When baby is sick, consult a doctor, not the neighbors." "Never dope with soothing syrups. They are harmful." "Do not let any one kiss a baby on the mouth." (This doubtless includes uncles and aunts, etc., as well as father and mother and careless friends.)

"The best food is mother's milk." This greatly reduces the danger of all diseases, especially those of the gastrointestinal group. (Goat's milk is no doubt fine for a real kid, but not for a child. After mother's milk, the next best known is cow's milk, suitably adapted.) But mother must have proper care, rest, and peace to care for and feed the baby well.

Textbooks, pamphlets, small cradle roll cards were also on display. Two books especially noted were, Mary L. Read's Mothercraft and In the Child's World, by Poulsson, a book of stories for small children. There were also many booklets issued by the United States Children's Bureau and the various State Boards of Health, which can be readily secured by those interested, by writing the Children's Bureau at Washington, and to the local State Board of Health.

Playground and Recreation Association

Mental Health

An exhibit was arranged in the library, of posters prepared by the Playground Association of America. The pictures add much to the lesson to be taught by the text.

Six posters concern mental health and the effect thereon of right food, proper sleep, teaching by parents at the right time and in a proper way of the origin of life, instead of leaving this important theme for silly lies vulgarly expressed.

Six more posters present under mental health:

A child must be active. Continued inhibitions and prohibitions of "No, no, no! Don't touch; keep still. Stop that," are bars hindering the right mental development of the child. If despite right teaching a child is wayward, the doctor should be consulted.

Twitching, stammering, nervous mannerisms, blues, or unsociability in children of proper age are mental danger signals.

Threats, severe punishments, as in dark closets, are bad, for fear and worry undermine mental health.

Choose wholesome books.

Be calm. Nervous parents expect and so make their children nervous.

Faults of the child will fetter the man.

These twelve cards on mental health are very instructive and thought-provoking.

Keystones of Character

Another set of posters represent character in a keystone series of ten pictures. The keystones are need and value of Health, Self-control, Moral Charge, Reliability, Cheerfulness, Duty, Good Workmanship, Team Work, Kindness, and Loyalty.

Next came eight cards:

1. What have you? What lack you? What do you want?
2. Are you drifting to failure or steering to success?
3. What have you to sell in body, mind, character, and work?
4. What are you worth above your neck?
5. How about your girl? Is she A-1? Are you worthy of her?
6. Invest spare time in fun, sports, reading, or study.
7. What you do with your money determines what your money will do for you.
8. Every boy builds his own life.

Recreation

Fifteen cards illustrate the value of play. Play is instinctive; the infant thus develops for life. But different plays according to age are needed: 1-3 years of age needs to develop muscles and senses; 3-6 years of age needs play for imagination, as drawing; 6-11 years of age play for self-confidence (like stilts); 11-16 years of age plays for fair play and loyalty (as ball games).

Parents should play with their children. Play should be organized at home and school—not simply chance mischief. Vigorous play is needed to strengthen heart and lungs and prepare for study.

Play is the best exercise for children. Work alone does not meet the needs. Play in the country offers constant variety. Cooperation in play prepares for citizenship.

Athletics are body builders; play agencies needed for all; public buildings should be used as social and community centers, are the subjects of three posters concerned with the social aspect of recreation. Community music, the picnic, the county fair, and the pageant are set forth as four other aspects of social and community recreation.

Finally five larger placards point out the need of playgrounds for children so that the children may have a safer place to play than the public streets. Some of these are pathetic in pointing out the limitations of poor children, and the social need of play places.

In addition to these cards a long table is covered with pamphlets of great variety dealing with play and social recreation in many phases. All of these are prepared by the same organization and give many valuable suggestions.

The articles winning first place in each of these contests received a blue ribbon, and those winning second place a red ribbon.

The judges for the contest were Mrs. W. L. Christy, formerly of Chicago, now of Lamoni; Mrs. Horner Hopkins, of Lamoni, Iowa; and Mrs. Luella Wight, of Lamoni.

Aside from the contest material a number of useful and suggestive collections were on display in the exhibit room. Mrs. Dora Glines sent a group of very fine posters made by the Independence grade children. From these the visitors received suggestions for clean-up days, health campaigns, or flower planting projects.

Mrs. Lenoir Woodstock, of Mondamin, Iowa, kindly permitted us to display a collection of her basketry work, which was appreciated by all. Several people sent useful articles for the Children's Home which were kept on display during the convention.

As a whole the contest has been a great success. We appreciate the effort the girls and young women of the church have made to render this service to the various institutions of the church. We are sure all convention visitors join us in thanking you for this splendid example of the ideal of service.

Another Milestone in Graceland Has Been Passed

From the program at Ground Breaking for Gymnasium and Assembly Hall.

Graceland has now passed her first quarter century milestone, having celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of her first graduating class at the commencement exercises in June, 1923.

In connection with the commencement season this year Graceland invited her alumni and former students to a general home-coming as preliminary to the Young People's Convention, which followed in a ten-day session. This invitation was accepted by hundreds of Graceland's loyal friends from Maine to California, and one of the finest gatherings in the long career of Graceland has passed into history.

The Young People's Convention followed and brought approximately a thousand enthusiastic young men and women from all quarters of the globe to launch the movement which cannot help but have a very large influence in the work of the redemption of Zion and the development of the plans of the church.

At this twenty-fifth anniversary the Board of Trustees of the college, in compliance with the general demand throughout the church on the part of Graceland's alumni and friends, announced a program of expansion which will more nearly meet the needs of the church than has hitherto been possible. This expansion is in the way of extending Graceland into a four year standard college which will grant the usual B. A. degree to her graduates.

Because of the loyal support of the people of Lamoni, the faculty, the student body, the general church officers, and the church as a whole, Graceland has in recent years developed into a fully standardized and officially accredited junior college of very high grade, and this next step is taken with the full assurance that the same support from all sources which she has had in the past will continue to make possible her extended program.

That this faith has not been misplaced is fully shown by the fact that the friends of the college in attendance at the Young People's Convention, recognizing one of Graceland's most crying needs, launched a movement for the construction of a gymnasium and convention hall, not only to meet the requirements of Graceland during the college year, but to provide a home for the young people of the church who desire to assemble from time to time to make preparation to have their share in the solution of the great problems of the church.

The reception given this movement by the young people themselves, representing more than thirty States of the Union and several foreign countries and the community of Lamoni, which has always had very much at heart the development of the church college, was so enthusiastic that the much needed building is assured, and not only will Graceland have a place for her needs in the development of her program of physical education and an assembly hall where her constantly growing student body can meet, but the young people of the church will have a home for their conventions.

Such loyal and enthusiastic support cannot but be a guarantee of the good that will come from this Young People's Convention. It means that the same enthusiasm for doing things that has characterized this convention will be carried back to the hundreds of branches represented here and untold good will result.

Graceland's Place

[This article and the following four articles, "Graceland's greetings," "Graceland's people in church work," "Mrs. Marietta Walker and Graceland College," and "Graceland song," were all printed in a "Graceland Souvenir Number," by the Lamoni Chronicle, and distributed at the Home-Coming.—EDITORS.]

In the thriving little city of Lamoni, Iowa, is located Graceland College, one of the leading junior colleges of the country. As a junior college Graceland has won an enviable reputation in the Middle West, and after some seven years as a junior institution she is now expanding into a regular four-year or standard senior college, offering full college courses leading to the bachelor's degree. Graceland has had a most remarkable history during her brief life of only a quarter of a century. During that time she has graduated almost a thousand students from her various courses and has enrolled several thousand others who have come under the influence of the "Graceland spirit." This "Graceland spirit" is so marked that no one can come into contact with the institution for any length of time without being influenced by it. A noted educator from a neighboring State recently spent a day at Graceland, and after thoroughly inspecting the institution he closed an interview with the President by saying, "I take it that you have no problem of discipline here." And it is true. Graceland students are a serious minded group, cognizant of their opportunities and desirous of taking advantage of them. Another distinguished educator, sent throughout the United States by one of the large educational foundations for the purpose of investigating the junior colleges of the entire country, said to a group of college presidents in Chicago recently that the thing that impressed him most at Graceland College after having visited some sixty colleges in all sections of the United States, was the serious minded class of students found there and their general attitude towards life.

The Future

Graceland's first graduating class after her organization as a junior college consisted of three. Her present college class will be forty, with another forty graduating from other departments. Thus with a graduating class in 1923 of approximately eighty and students from some twenty-four States and a half dozen foreign countries she is bound to have a very large influence in shaping the destinies of young people and of communities at far distant points.

Like all small denominational colleges Graceland has had her periods of distress. She is to-day a stronger institution because of them. However, she has weathered the storms and her friends and well wishers know that her period of usefulness has just fairly been entered upon. With her expansion into a full-fledged senior college offering various courses planned to meet the needs of ambitious young men and women who are desirous of preparing for lives of usefulness, it is believed she will more nearly approximate the requirements of the church responsible for her existence and will at the same time be of greater usefulness to the State.

All denominational institutions, and Graceland is proud of her church relationships, have a double role to fill, that of meeting the needs of the church and the needs of the state. There is no conflict between these needs but there is merely a difference of where the emphasis is placed. As a Christian institution Graceland has a mission and a place in the state as well as in the church.

Self-Help Plans

For many years the faculty and the Board of Trustees of Graceland have cherished the hope that it might be possible to open the doors of the institution to a much larger number of deserving young people by placing before them the opportunity to earn while they learn. Year after year hundreds have to be turned away for no other reason than that the opportunity to earn an education is not available.

Graceland has always afforded limited opportunities for certain numbers of students to help defray their expenses by outside work for a few hours daily. The demand, however, for such opportunities has increased very greatly in recent years, due to the almost unprecedented desire for educational advantages on the part of the young people of the church.

So insistent have been the appeals that the college authorities have been gathering data from various sources, calculated to throw light on the practicability of undertaking to provide work for a large number of indigent students. This demand must be met and the college will enter next year upon a definite program of expansion of her industrial plans with a view of enabling an ever-increasing number of students to complete a full college course.

Profiting by the experiences of her past years and that of other educational institutions of the country where the self-help plan is a large factor, Graceland will modify her program next year so that all regular students will have one half day for study and class work and one half day for outside employment, thus insuring promptness and dependability of service to those who give employment to college students.

This plan has been followed with marked success in other colleges where the self-help plan is a large factor in the college administration and there is every evidence that it will be received in Graceland with a high degree of enthusiasm by the student body and the friends of the college.

Accrediting and Official Recognition

Graceland is a fully standardized and officially accredited junior college, having been given official recognition by all the accrediting associations having to do with the standardization of junior colleges, viz:

The Intercollegiate Standing Committee of Iowa, which gives us official standing in Iowa; The North Central Association of Colleges, which gives us standing in the territory of some eighteen States embraced within the North Central section of the United States; and The American Association of Junior Colleges, which gives us national recognition.

Graceland is one of the Iowa colleges recognized by the Iowa State Board of Educational Examiners by the granting of State certificates to our graduates. Iowa State certificates are recognized in most of the other States so that it amounts to practically national recognition for our graduates from the courses in education.

The Outlook

The president of the college recently spoke relative to the general outlook, and his statement may well be quoted as our concluding paragraphs:

"The members of the church, the alumni, and ex-students of Graceland can wield an enormous influence through united effort—in fact, they may be well-nigh invulnerable if they cooperate heartily in a well-chosen task. If each contributes his fiber to the strand, a cable may be woven which will prove strong enough to advance the college definitely on the road to achievement.

"Graceland has been advancing rapidly the past few years and there is every reason to believe that the good work will go on indefinitely. It is the institution's aim not to undertake too much but to do well whatever she assumes, believing that the policy of thoroughness and of intensive effort will in the long run spell a progress which would be out of the question if the available funds and energy were scattered over too wide a field. The institution has a very definite field of usefulness and it prefers to do its work so well that it will ultimately deserve a constantly widening field of opportunity. Its policy may be summed up in the old Latin phrase, 'Non multa, sed multum.'"

"It is believed that this policy commends itself to all interested in the institution's welfare as well as that of the church at large, and the college, therefore, hopes to deserve the continued support of its many friends whose cooperation even in a small way will make for big success.

"With the almost unequalled devotion of the members of the faculty, the loyalty of the alumni and ex-students of Graceland, the devoted interest of the great body of the membership of the church, the continued financial and moral support of the citizens of Lomoni, and the church, and the high quality of life which Graceland offers to successive generations of young men and women, the outlook for the future has never seemed brighter. The opportunities before us loom large and with full cooperation of all interests we shall expect to realize to its fullest extent all the promise that lies before us."

Graceland's Greeting

[Extract from pen of J. A. Gunsolley.]

For a number of years prior to 1895, in fact, from the early years of the church, the Saints had been considering what could be done for their young people. Certain individuals here and there had been urging this subject upon the attention of the church, and bringing its consideration into the general conferences. The Sunday school had been organized but it served more particularly the interests of the children. Societies of young people had been organized in various localities but having to do with the religious education of the young. The Religio-Literary Society was organized in 1893, which as the name implies, recognized the idea of doing something in associating religious and secular education.

The need of opportunity for securing higher education by the young people of the church under conditions favorable to their spiritual development became more and more apparent. As legitimate demand, sooner or later, is met by an adequate supply, so in this case, it was finally seen that a college owned and controlled by the church was the only logical solution to the problem. As a consequence, in 1895 Graceland was opened to the young people of the church, and to whomsoever else might care to avail themselves of what she could offer. For twenty-seven years she has annually opened her doors to the young people, and invited them to her halls. This is the twenty-seventh commencement season. A new epoch in our work is being ushered in.

Meetings in Saint Paul

Sunday school and preaching services are held at the home of Sister Daisy Freeman, 587 East Lawson Street, Saint Paul, Minnesota. Sunday school begins at 7 p. m., while preaching services begin at 8 p. m.

Graceland People in Church Work

There is an old adage to the effect that "the proof of the pudding is in the eating." For more than a quarter of a century men and women have consecrated their lives to the cause of Graceland with a sincere belief that their efforts would result in a fruitage which would be qualified to help the church meet the problems of a new day. A quarter of a century is not a very long time as history measures time; neither has Graceland been a very large school as the world measures schools to-day. Notwithstanding all this, however, one is amazed at the extent to which Graceland people are serving the church in its various capacities to-day. It may be of interest to list just a few of these:

In the Presidency there are two: Frederick M. Smith and Floyd M. McDowell.

In the Quorum of Twelve: M. A. McConley, P. N. Hanson, F. H. Edwards, D. T. Williams, and J. F. Garver.

In the Bishopric, I. A. Smith.

In prominent pastoral work: C. E. Wight, R. V. Hopkins, Roy Chevile, Thomas S. Williams, R. S. Salyards, A. E. Stoft.

General Sunday School Superintendent: A. Max Carmichael.

Prominent Women's Department workers: Mrs. F. M. Smith, Mrs. B. M. Anderson, Addie Belle Chappell, Mrs. S. A. Burgess, Helen Silsbee Smith.

We may add to this a long list of missionaries: Carl Crum, John Blackmore, A. C. Martin, H. A. Koehler, G. S. Robley, Dan Sorden, Alma Rannie, C. M. Clifford, J. R. Lentell, J. E. Vanderwood, Keith Rogers, Bruce Brown, Roscoe Davey, Elmer Ohlert, E. Y. Hunker, Peter Muceus, Prescott Foo, Thomas Carr, H. E. Winegar, V. D. Ruch.

Many others have made a name for themselves in their respective fields: Lonzo Jones, in Religious Education; C. E. Irwin, Economic Research; Henry C. Smith, Architecture; Arthur Benc, Medicine; Morris Mortimore, Geology; James Houghton, Music; Paul N. Craig, Music; Marguerite Wickes, Music; Laura Kelley Green, Music; Mrs. James Kelley, jr., Music; A. M. Carmichael, School Supervision; Roy A. Chevile, Religious Education; H. H. Gold, Education; Frank Jones, Law; H. Hale Smith, History and Government; Arthur Church, Radio; Lee Travis, Abnormal Psychology; R. A. Carmichael, Plant Pathology.

Some others have been in the past, and are at present, in office work or State or Nation.

Among these are Louise Wall who recently occupied as stenographer and secretary to the Governor of Tennessee; Heman Hale Smith, present secretary to the Governor of Colorado; Raymond C. Scott who, while abroad in service, was made clerk in the Personnel office of the American Commission in Paris, met to negotiate peace. Here young Scott was made organizer of his department. At the conclusion of the work of this Commission, Raymond C.—our Graceland commercial department graduate—received a very flattering recommendation for efficient and dependable service.

It is with hesitancy that we name these few who have received some recognition from the world, while there are hundreds of equal merit who, for want of space, are unmentioned here.

Many, even most of our students, out in the world are doing as laudable work in as praiseworthy manner as those we have named.

Consider the many missionaries declaring nothing but repentance who, though receiving little honorable mention from the world, are so deporting themselves that they draw down the recognition of heaven. These men are leaders in the great army of defense against any foe that might seek to frustrate the purpose for which this institution was established.

Can we be unmindful of the widow whose pittance, saved through sacrifice, reaches Graceland with a blessing upon faculty and student?

And ever in our work are we dependent upon the thousands of homes whose hearts pour out their supplication in behalf of the institution of the "Lord's right-hand planting."

Who of all these will be greatest in the kingdom of heaven?

Mrs. Marietta Walker and Graceland College

One of the greatest friends of Graceland is Mrs. Marietta Walker of Lamoni. Indeed, Graceland lived in the heart of this noble woman a long time before it finally came forth from dreams and visions, a thing with habitation, concretely standing on her own meadowlands, now College Campus. She was a college woman herself and knew the joy of study organized and directed. She came from a busy atmosphere of research in the arts and sciences and philosophies, into a group where the college man even was rare but where seekers for knowledge were on every hand. She brought to the group her implicit faith in the fellowship of social action. To this faith she added energetic and wise procedure. It was not enough that she herself must do things, she must be associated with others earnestly seeking for the truth. She seemed to emit from her own unflinching spirit a white fire of purpose that was recognized and sought by men and women, youth and maturity, and she gave of it unstintingly just as she gave of earthly possessions to the last possibility. We have said she was a student and loved philosophy and the arts and sciences, but she recognized the practical education needed by women and children and set about to provide. Her first demand was a paper for children. She was conscious of the fact, to make any organization reach its maximum of good, progress must be made by the less fortunate to insure the full development of all. Once the children's paper was established, she turned her clear mind and skilled hands to other fields, a column for mothers in the church periodicals, a boat for missionaries in the southern seas, a magazine for the young, Christmas offering fund, birthday books, Sunday School Association, Religio, The Daughters of Zion (new Department of Women), Children's Home—all bear the marks of her fertile brain. Always in her heart was the dream, the hope, the prayer—a school, a college. Sometimes when friends came to visit her in the farmhouse, she took them for a walk to that rise of ground in her meadow, and said: "Here is where the College is to be," and sometimes she was met by the thought of poverty or failure—and always she maintained her position—"We must have a school." Then one day the meadow became a campus—the red walls of the first building rose under the blue sky of Iowa and her dreams began to come true.

Her donations of land or concrete assistance cannot be forgotten. Far wealthier people have given very much less or not at all, but she gave also a worthier gift, she gave her love, her prayers, her constant intellectual uplift and inspiration. Not alone shall we extol her for giving. She has the splendid spirit that may also receive, and so with becoming dignity and womanly graciousness she takes joy and comfort to her heart every time a boy or girl does honor to Graceland. Her life has been a romance full of dramatic appeal and rich with pathos and beauty. Born in Ohio of parents consecrated to the cause of the Latter Day Saint Church, she spent part of her childhood with the church people on the wide prairies of northern Missouri. Her highly sensitive nature felt subconsciously the bitterness of persecutions and alienating influences. She walked with her own father through the sorrow-stricken city of Nauvoo and remembers looking upon the smiling face of the Prophet and his brother as they lay in Martyred death. She carries the scars of wounds in heart and memory to-day, made as she saw that father's household persecuted to the death. Then in school for many years she applied her mind to close study and graduated from Oxford Female College in Ohio in 1859 and was principal of San Antonio Female College for a number of years, and in the soft warm air of San Antonio met a new demand on her heart when the Confederate cause was her cause. Here she met one of life's tense situations with her keen logic and took up the work of principal in a school that the men might go out and bear arms for the cause. She might not carry a gun, but she could teach. Her first husband, an officer in that army, gave up his life for it, and she, with her little daughter, ran the blockade, coming by Cuba to New York to reach the bedside of her mother. It was here that she came in contact with the Latter Day Saints again—this the Reorganized people—and made close examination of its claims before becoming a member. Then she gave of her splendid womanhood without stint and without remuneration and still gives and sighs that she cannot give more.

How she would seek to divert us from this story of herself to world affairs or anything outside of herself! Only last week she raised a warning finger and shook her head declaring she had done nothing. But the Graceland people think otherwise, so to commemorate her birth month they tell her life story or talk of some of her books and poems. This spring they accorded her the title of Mother of Graceland. This was made the subject for chapel worship, resolutions being read by Mrs. Vida E. Smith, Dean of Women, President G. N. Briggs following with a few well-chosen words in tribute; then the vote was taken and Apostle T. W. Williams offered a prayer of gratitude for this friend, and a petition for strength that Graceland may keep the pledge embodied in the memorial.

Graceland Song

By Vida E. Smith

Oh! Graceland, beloved on thy hill crest to-day
Where the winds have their own happy will,
Thy corner stone lieth full deep and secure,
And thy mission we live to fulfill.

Oh, Graceland, dear land of great vision and wide,
Fair Mater who weareth no crown,
We bring to thee tribute of all we should be,
And our faithfulness be thy renown.

Oh, Graceland, dear Graceland, these hands shall be thine
Nor in weakness shall one be let fall,
And these voices of gladness shall lift for the right,
And these hearts beat for justice for all.

Oh, Graceland, whose portals fling wide for the brave
And whose halls are abode of the true,
Though thy walls they be simple and plain 'neath the sun,
Yet we give for thy Gold and Old Blue.

Oh, Graceland, dear land of sweet virtue and truth,
With the meadow grass brown at thy feet,
And the star of the evening, fair type of thy years,
Where the conquered and conqueror meet.

Oh, Graceland, dear land, we're all coming back
To the sun-burnished days that we knew,
Up the old winding path to thy wide open door,
And we're bringing clean lives, great and true.

Letters from Graceland People

[As part of the Home-Coming a few wrote briefly for the Graceland Jubilee Number.]

"Graceland," Her Relation to Other Lands:

Saints of the world, what does Graceland mean to you? Is she not "our" college where the material is formed to help this church to spread? Graceland is not just a college, she is a spirit, for without that spirit Graceland would be only a name. Yes, Graceland is a spirit as well as a college, and to-day that spirit is beginning to flow from her halls into the lands far over the seas. Germany is receiving of that spirit; it has traveled to England, and some day will also travel across the blue Pacific to the land of Australia, carried by missionaries who have enjoyed her associations.

To-day Graceland is assisting to mold the thought of the church, and the high ideals of the Graceland student cannot be kept in the confines of Lamoni—of America, but must spread to the church in other lands.

Graceland is not a place of brick—she is spirit radiating from her faculty and her students—she is not a library of books. She is human.

JOHN BLACKMORE.

As years pass, Lamoni becomes the more sacred land to me. I love Lamoni not for the sake of a few good people who have done so much to me during my stay, but for the sake of all the faculties, all the boys and girls, all the town people.

During the past ten years I made acquaintance with many people, many places, but found no place like Lamoni. It is not difficult to find a few good people everywhere you go, but we find the majority are not exactly wicked. I think to call them weak rather than wicked. Modern education aiming not for making of a man but with its chief object for creating a better bread earner, produced in many cases cultured fools and refined liars. Modern civilization advanced material comforts to such a degree that people rush madly after them, leaving spiritual affairs sometimes entirely neglected.

PETER CHOSO.

(The Japanese student who through his apt suggestions gave the name "Acacia," to our annual.)

The hours spent during my sojourn at Graceland, whether in study, recreation, meditation, or companionship, have already proved in a glorious way that all worthy effort is of incalculable value. I wish to know more, much more than I do now, but not with any selfish motive, for I desire to cultivate my talents, some of them perhaps even now lying latent, with no other object than this, that fruit may be brought forth in due season to the honor and glory of God.

"I hope that the artist I become will be an artist of life—an artist who can paint his own life and soul in the halls of celestial glory."

BASEL, SWITZERLAND.

ELMER OHLERT.

Graceland College requires no advocate. The freedom of its teachings, the high idealism of its instructors, the splendid opportunities for struggling students to acquire a higher education as easily as can the rich and affluent, the camaraderie of student life through which the spirit of Graceland becomes a vivid reality, the spiritual power bestowed in the quiet hush of the chapel prayer meetings, when the Spirit of God is breathed into the weary soul, and fresh strength is given to meet and overcome the trials incident to the development of youth—these things make Graceland not only a holy memory to its alumni, but a living power for good all the days of their lives.

I am sure that were the wishes of the hundreds of Graceland's old students blended into one, it would be a prayer that the influence from the old "college on the hill" might continue to mold and make the characters of clean, strong youth; that Graceland as an instrument in the hands of God might ever hold the beacon of truth and high ideals of service to the generations that are to come.

"In spite of rocks and tempest's roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee;
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee—are all with thee!"

FRANK B. ALMOND.

It affords me pleasure to know that with the passing of time Graceland College has reached a point in her development where home-comings and class reunions can be expected with more or less regularity. Of course the class of which I am a member can hold reunions with ease and frequency, for that class is always together, but the class of '98 is delighted to have the privilege to meet other has been.

The spring of 1923 will, I feel sure, mark an epoch in the history of Graceland and the church. I am pleased to welcome on the part of the church the advent of the young people to Lamoni, for their Home-Coming and for the Young People's Convention.

May God add his blessings,

Class '98.

F. M. SMITH.

Graceland was a training school for me in the Lord's service. The many noble, true, and wise men and women I met there and in Lamoni made a lasting impression upon me, and their influence has contributed in no small measure to what success I may have attained to in that service.

Sometimes I sit and dream of those days and wish them back and in my mind I see the old trusted faces, and still hear the words of counsel and advice, which memory still breathes hope into my soul when the burdens seem too heavy to bear.

God bless Graceland, and all the young people who shall gather for instruction and spiritual blessing at their Convention. I shall do my best to make their stay happy and profitable both socially and spiritually.

R. V. HOPKINS.

Some eight years ago I turned my back on Graceland with my ambitions high and energy to match. However, eight years of "bumping the bumps" has changed my viewpoint somewhat, also my appreciation of the four years of Graceland life; I say "life" for the influence was equal to if not more than equal to the value of the academic training. In trying to play the triple role of a banker-farmer-preacher I have come to appreciate more and more the habits formed while there. They were basic and come in good play every day, whether behind the cashier's desk, in the field, or in the pulpit.

WARD A. HOUGAS.

To Graceland with its loyal conscientious faculty, I owe the early growth within me of a spirit of service to mankind, and it was there that I was made to realize the importance

The Plates of Brass

Answer to a Missionary's Inquiry

Question: "I desire very much a little assistance, provided you have discovered in the Book of Mormon more authority on a certain question than I have.

"The plates of Laban contained the first five books of Moses (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, I take it), Isaiah, and part of Jeremiah. 1 Nephi 13 indicates that there is not so much in the Bible as in the plates of brass.

"In making a map to use in public showing Nephite territory and the books they had, what other books contained in the Bible other than those I have named, would it be reasonable to say they had?

"Would it be reasonable to suppose they had every book named in the Bible whose marginal date is previous to 600 B. C.?"

Answer: The reference to 1 Nephi 13 is not clear. It may refer to the Utah Edition. From 1 Nephi 1:159-163 the plates of Laban evidently contained "the five books of Moses." "A record of the Jews from the beginning" would doubtless include the historical books. Also they include the prophecies of the holy prophets, from the beginning, even down to the reign of Zedekiah, and part of "Jeremiah." That would include the following: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 1 and 2 Samuel, 1 Kings and probably most of 2 Kings and probably 1 and 2 Chronicles, Isaiah, part of Jeremiah, Joel, Hosea, Amos, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, possibly Habakkuk and Zephaniah.

of spiritual as well as physical and mental development. I am also indebted to this institution for my interpretation of life, and for my vision of its joyousness. I feel that my two years in the atmosphere of our college has at least given me the start that should mean success. In my daily work I am endeavoring to pass along to the young people about me those ideals for which Graceland stands: service, loyalty, and brotherly love.

WILLARD W. HIELD.

Herald Publishing House

In the library there was a second exhibit on one of the long tables, of the publications of the church by the Herald Publishing House. This display was in charge of John A. Gardner who thus combined business with his work in recreation and expression.

This exhibit also included a number of new books by other publishers, taken from those listed in the new catalogue of our publishing house, thus giving some idea of the scope of service of the church institution.

Rug Exhibit

In a room on the second floor of the old college building there was a display of rugs made by the students this spring. Samples of these rugs were also displayed in the dining tent and sold for $1.50 each.

They are of five different colors: blue, with white, yellow, or rose trimmings; rose with white or yellow trimmings; brown with white trimmings; green, and yellow. All are the same size, about 24 by 48 inches, and same price.

It would seem quite probable also that it would include Psalms and Proverbs and the book of Job from what we know of the manner in which the Jews made up their records.

We note in 1 Nephi 3:161-163, 171, 172; 3 Nephi 1:70-73, that the contents of the plates of brass are further discussed. A careful reading would indicate that it is not necessarily that the plates of brass contain so many more books than the Bible does now, but that the plates of brass contain more extensive records, a more complete record of the creation of the world. In other words, the plates of brass give a more complete account of the early events of the world than did the Hebrew manuscripts of that time.

As to the second question, in making a chart it would seem reasonable to suppose that they had all of the books of the Bible which were written before the time of Zedekiah and also that they had part of Jeremiah.

It would seem entirely reasonable to suppose that they had at least the history and the prophecies as those terms were determined by the Jews—all that which is dated before 600 B. C. or 589 B. C.

Fourth, we have generally understood that the reference to the Gentiles was quite clearly to those Gentiles who will have an opportunity of reading the book, not to those Gentiles then living who could not possibly hear this word. It refers undoubtedly both to that which is given in the Book of Mormon and in revelations of God to the people as well as referring to the sealed portion of the book.

Fifth, evidently the plates contained other books of prophecy than those now in the Bible as we note the reference to Zenos, Zenock (3 Nephi 4:70-73) and Neum (1 Nephi 5:240-242).

Work of the Statistical Department

I have been impressed with the thought that if the Saints knew more of the value of the work of the Statistical Department they would be more anxious to cooperate to make this a success. With this thought in mind I am submitting the following suggestions which express the salient features of our statistical work which have been brought to my attention recently but which, of course, do not directly represent the church statistician but I think would meet with his approval.

In modern business the statistician is being called the "Statistical Executive" and this change of name is indicative of the increasing understanding of his importance. One of the prominent business writers has recently stated that there are two conditions necessary if the work of the statistical executive is to be carried forward on productive and scientific lines. The first is that his office shall be one of interpretation and presentation, rather than one charged merely with the duty of compiling primary records. The second requisite condition is that he shall personally present a result to those who must base actions and politics upon them; and he must participate in discussions concerning them. This means that the church statistician should in time become a consultant in missionary and local endeavor, and he would in fact parallel the cost accountant of a business firm.

Let us suggest some of the lines along which valuable information could be compiled.

The ages at which people join the church.

This would be invaluable for our Sunday school workers and would indicate just what percentage of our increase comes from families of Saints, and what percentage comes from the activities among adults, and a further analysis of this would enable the church generally to understand the vital significance of the work among the young. I do not hesitate to say that the difference between the number of children of the Saints baptized in the last ten years and the number who have come of baptismal age within that period is greater than the total number of baptisms made by the missionaries in the same period. For me to say just this does not carry the force that a presentation of the actual figures would do.

Time and place of baptism.

Knowledge of the time at which results are best obtained in various places would enable us to make seasonal campaigns just as is at present done in the business world.

Why could we not know just where we baptized the greatest number of people, making the greatest possible or most nearly complete consecration. The information is to be had if we can but obtain and interpret it. This would be invaluable to the appointing powers who could then have some indication where our depleted forces could be best disposed so as to obtain the greatest results with the least financial or missionary effort.

Churches from which converts come.

If I knew that, generally speaking, a series of sermons in a Catholic community was more productive than one in a Methodist community, where would I prefer to preach? Or, put another way, if we had one missionary to send and applications from a Catholic and a Methodist community, where would you advise us to send the missionary, presuming for the sake of argument the above statement is true?

Occupations.

Let us suppose that we need a presiding elder in a mining community but the church cannot afford, or there is no outstanding need for, the support of a General Conference appointee in this place. Shall we ask Elder Brown to come from Australia and when he gets here find that he is a carpenter, or shall we ask Elder Jones, expert miner, to come from Wales? I am convinced that did we know the occupation of the men of the ministry throughout the church we could quite frequently recommend a transfer which would be beneficial to them financially and would materially increase their power to serve the church. Some day Zion the beautiful has to be built, and industries as yet undreamed of by many of us have to be initiated. Parallel with this development will be the gathering of the Saints from the four quarters of the earth. Who shall gather first? Shall we ask the Saints to come to Zion and then ask them what they can do, or shall we send for the architects and builders to build the houses and factories, and the artisans who will work in those factories and so prepare the way for the other Saints to come with abilities which can be used in less primary occupations?

Nonresidents.

In planning the new openings which we wish to establish during the coming year the greatest asset that we have should be the presence of Saints in the strategic communities. If we know exactly where our scattered Saints are, we can direct our missionary efforts accordingly. The church has not fulfilled its mission when it brings a man into the fold. We still owe him the opportunity of development. This means that as soon as possible he must be included in some branch organization; and since it is frequently favorable in his own locality, why should we not build a branch around him? Yet this can only be done as we are intimately acquainted with the location and general standing of our nonresident Saints.

Charting.

One of the developments of modern business has been the recognition of the fact that while a man will be quickly fogged with a mass of figures, a well-drawn chart will convey to him the tendency concealed in the figures. The time is very near at hand when we can use these charts to inform the people of the church of the progress we are making and the lines along which success and failure lie. Yet to prevent these charts being misleading they must be based on reliable figures.

When the Saints generally know just along which lines progress is being made, this will be one of the potent factors making for our future development. Presentation of figures alone without some interpretation will often be misleading. Let us glance at the figures for the past ten years:

1912		Total membership	68,211
	Baptisms
1913	3,670
1914	2,635
1915	4,907
1916	4,631
1917	3,890
	Total	19,733
	Losses, adjustments, etc.
	Net figure	1,684	18,049
			86,260
1918	5,195
1919	2,988
1920	3,827
1921	5,511
1922	4,640
	Total	21,161
	Losses (N-R)
	etc.	12,056	9,105
			95,365

The baptismal gain of the first five-year period was 19,733. Of the second period, 21,161; and this in spite of the fact that during 1917-22 we confronted obstacles such as the war, afterwar conditions, necessitating the reduction of our missionary force; and coupled with this the transfer to Unknown lists of those lost to the church during the whole of our history. Had this cleaning of the records been postponed our nominal membership at the present time would be far above the one hundred thousand mark.

Why were the years 1918 and 1921 the most productive years? Why, again, did we baptize only two thirds of our 1921 total during the year 1922? These are questions that the recorder can help us to solve. The facts are there. It is for us to discover the reasons so that we can eliminate the deterrent effects and perpetuate those which are advantageous. Analysis may also show that the actual deterrents are not those given popular credence.

Comparison of the final figures for 1921 with those of 1922 will show a net increase of 131. We need not be alarmed at this when we remember that during this year we transferred between two and three thousand names to the Unknown records of the church. We did not lose these. If they are lost at all, they were lost prior to this time. Recognition of the fact that we are not able to locate this number teaches two primary lessons. (1). The vital need for continuing contact with all our members, and (2). The need for information regarding the actual active church membership in order that we may estimate accurately the possibilities and direction of future expansion.

During 1922, we worked with an average of 47 less missionaries than during the previous year. Had these men produced proportionately the same increase as those in the field, we would have baptized 530 more people, and this would have brought our total to 4,170. This gives us some idea of the loss to the church by the release of missionaries, and indicates the need for financial support that they may be returned to the field, and it also indicates the fact that 1922 was not proportionately so bad a year as at first appears.

Not gains alone must be studied. How, when, where, and why do our losses occur? It is more profitable to the church to save a man with the spirit of Latter Day Saintism than to convert a man who has to be educated.

The church then needs accurate records and the interpretation of the figures to be obtained therefrom. The interpretation is the work of the statistician and his collaborators. But this is based upon the supply of information from the ministry generally, and secretaries throughout the branches and districts of the church. With this information we can set intelligent goals toward which our people can be enthused to work. With it we can intelligently direct the gathering and general activities of the Saints. With it the missionaries can be efficiently disposed so that the work of bearing this gospel to all nations shall be facilitated. These and many more things depend on the recognition of the value of the work of this department and the essential cooperation of the Saints and the other departments.

Very sincerely,

F. HENRY EDWARDS.

Department of Women in the Isle of Pines

Since it has been almost exactly three years that we have been in the Isle of Pines, I thought that the readers of the HERALD, especially those connected with the Department of Women, would like to hear something of the work here among the women, members and nonmembers.

In the first place, I was seriously sick when we arrived here and could do but very little in the interests of the Women's Department, but time has proved that God has indeed a work for all to do. After repeated efforts to get the message before the people, conditions looked dark for a while, but every cloud has a silver lining, and friend husband kept right on, so we were able to get a Sunday school started, with the assistance of Brother Fisher and family.

To-day we have three Sunday schools on two islands, organized as fully as possible under the circumstances. With the advent of these schools it was made possible to organize the girls, for very soon our first school brought along girls of all ages. I was elected superintendent of the Department of Women for the mission and felt I could not take upon myself such a responsibility but have done so, and our first women's organization is still in existence on the Isle of Pines. After we had been here about one year, Sister Pender, of Independence, came to take charge of a day school. Up to this time, Sister Fisher was leader of the local department, and under her faithful leadership and the assistance of the department, a substantial amount of cash was raised which was used by the church. Although greatly handicapped, Sister Fisher's work will never be forgotten by those who were associated with her in the work.

Since that time Sister Pender has been in charge locally. She has been teaching the food and body course, and now they are taking up hygiene and home nursing. Her work too will have lasting effect. She is leader of the Temple Builders, while the Oriole girls on both the Isle of Pines and the Grand Cayman Island have had as leaders the writer and Sister T. M. Carr who changed off as occasion demanded. I am not sure whether Sister Carr will go back to Cayman at present or not, but I feel she will do a good work in either place. The girls on both islands have already learned to love her. We now have twenty Oriole girls, and nineteen Temple Builders on both islands, but this is only a beginning, as Elder J. Charles May and Brother Tordoff have just closed a series of meetings, effecting a new opening and baptizing ten, nine of which will make a good Temple Builder circle.

So the work here has only commenced. I hope in the future when looking back upon the pioneer days of this mission we shall see a good work built upon the foundation we have laid. May God bless his work among the girls on these islands. There is a crying need for missionaries' wives here who are fully consecrated to this kind of work.

We are to leave this mission on the 18th of this month, and although glad to once again see our homeland, we shall never forget the kindnesses showered upon us by all the people with whom we have become acquainted.

Echoes From Zion

We were happily surprised recently by the Saints from Seattle who now live here who came in a body and spent a happy evening in social converse, thus dedicating our new home under the spirit of pure love and sociability. This was followed a few evenings later by the Saints of Group Twenty in which our home is situated who came to the number of thirty and made us more than welcome to the group and the neighborhood. Surely such sunbursts of love and kindness are evidences of the presence of the true Zion spirit. Yes, it makes us feel at home.

On June 3 we visited Bennington Heights, a branch in Kansas City where we enjoyed the social spirit of the Saints and the preaching of words of encouragement. A nice band of Saints meet there.

We were pleased to greet two of the Seattle flock en route to the convention at Lamoni, Sister Rose Tabbutt and Charlotte Condit. They enjoyed their short stay in Zion. The latter's real home is in Hagerman, Idaho, where she taught school the past year.

We visited two of the seven churches of Zion yesterday, Englewood in the morning where we found congenial hearts and an earnest spirit of devotion. We met there a Brother McVey whom we knew as a boy. Elder J. E. Warne is pastor at Englewood. A new church is their "shibboleth." We felt well in speaking to them. In the evening we were taken by Brother Peer and wife to the Spring Branch Church where we were greeted by a happy band and enjoyed talking to them about Isaiah's "short bed," Ezekiel's "frail wall," Jeremiah's "broken cistern," and Matthews "old bottles," showing in contrast the "rock foundation" of Isaiah.

Sermons and Lectures at Detroit

A series of illustrated lectures and sermons by Apostle Paul M. Hanson were recently held at the Central Church, Detroit, Michigan. The services extended over a period of two weeks, large crowds attending practically every evening. At no time was the attendance so small as to cause any discouragement. The illustrated lectures were educational and inspiring to those who love the work, and yet through all the lectures the gospel story could be plainly seen and understood by the many visitors who were in attendance.

The depth of meaning which was in the sermons on "Zion," "Divine healing," etc., left their impression on the Detroit Saints, and the writer feels that a wonderful result will some day come from Apostle Hanson's efforts.

A great many visitors were in attendance, according to the report of the tract committee who were kept busy giving out tracts on different subjects, many visitors coming and asking for information on different principles.

Two baseball teams have been organized in Detroit and one in Windsor, Ontario, games having been played between the East and West Side Churches of Detroit and also with Windsor. Aside from the results of the game, many of the brothers and sisters who never knew each other have become acquainted, and I believe a great deal of good will come from having an opportunity to associate with each other. It certainly is a step for progress in the work of God in this portion of God's vineyard.

New Church Building

From Sperry, Oklahoma, comes the word that the branch is expanding and continuing to spread the work. A new church building will be started July 1, while the efforts of the Department of Women and of the young people are untiring, all bent toward the one end.

The Church in South Australia

The work in Adelaide has been forging ahead since we visited here last year. Since July 1, 1922, there have been sixteen added to the fold. All but four of these are adults.

We find Brother and Sister Velt earnest and untiring in their efforts to promote the gospel cause, and they have quite a loyal band of helpers, especially among the young people.

About two years ago the Adelaide Saints bought a fine, capacious building, formerly used as a Catholic hall, and shouldered a great responsibility. However, they are heroically meeting their obligations. During the past year in this little branch of about 125 members, the faithful few paid in £370 (about $1,850). The Department of Women and Temple Builders must have honorable mention, for they worked diligently and raised about £50 (a little less than $250) in their bazaar for the annual payment on the church.

Adelaide is the best place for street preaching I have ever seen. The climate makes it possible to hold services almost the year around. Brother Velt finds great opportunity to spread the glad tidings on Friday evenings to the great shopping crowds that throng the streets on that night. He has prepared some fine charts for the defense of the work which attract the inquisitive and give them a more definite idea of our principles and teachings. A number of strangers were brought to the church by these bills, some of whom have not missed a meeting since. Invitations to homes have also come through these efforts.

I would like also to mention little Leslie Judd, a lad about eleven years of age, who has been to every street meeting since February, a year ago. He assists in holding the charts and with a number of other lads has done good work in tracting for special occasions.

We are enjoying our stay in Adelaide very much and are helping in every way possible to promote the good work. We have found some staunch defenders of the faith here who have stood firm throughout many years of trial and sacrifice.

May the Lord add many more souls to speed his work.

MRS. M. A. MCCONLEY.

Missionary's Work Yields Big Return

Thinking some news from here might not be out of place just now, I write. There are quite a number of Saints here, the fruits of Brother Fred Gregory's earnest labors, he being the pioneer missionary here, and many and great were the sacrifices he made. He traveled on foot through the deep snow, at times with the sides out of his shoes. Few places were open for shelter, and often he had to lay his weary body down to rest in places that were not very inviting. This he endured, day after day without a complaint, for the gospel's sake, and his name is revered here for the example he set and his good, clean life. Others followed him, it is true, who continued the work; but had it not been for the exemplary life of that young man many would still be in darkness who are now rejoicing in the gospel. It surely can be said of him that while many of the old pioneers have passed unto their reward his name still lives, and expressions of respect are heard from many who know him to be an earnest, God-fearing servant of Christ.

Sincerely,

G. C. TOMLINSON, SR.

Lectures Against Mormonism

Lecturing against Mormonism, Mrs. Marion Williams, herself a member of the Utah Church, spoke in the Methodist church building at Anacortes, Washington, recently.

Large crowds attended and heard her denounce the Utah Church and its practices. She accuses the church of practicing polygamy and not following or believing in the Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon, or the Bible. Mrs. Williams carefully distinguished between the Reorganized and the Utah Churches, stating that although Joseph Smith is accredited by the Mormons with the revelation on polygamy, he was never a polygamist, and the so-called revelation was never written by him, it being presented sixteen years after his death.

An attempt by a Baptist preacher to show that there was no difference between the two churches was ably answered by Mrs. Williams. Members of the Reorganized Church did not advance any arguments, as Mrs. Williams evidently knew the facts.

Success in Hawaii

(From letter of J. G. Waller, Honolulu, Hawaii, May 25, 1923):

At our Chinese prayer meeting held on Wednesday last, May 23, three Chinese and one Japanese asked for baptism. They have all been attending our services for some time, and it is very encouraging, especially to Brother Foo and myself, to see that the work done among them is bearing fruit. Brother and Sister Reeves, who left by the Niagara Saturday, May 19, will also be pleased to hear this news.

Greater Socialization Needed

I thought I would write you a few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard for we surely enjoy the many good things that come to us each week through the pages of the HERALD. They are a source of strength and inspiration to us. We rejoice to see the success our ministers are having in the different parts of the world and how the gospel is reaching the honest in heart.

As a little branch we have had our ups and downs and discouraging features to meet, yet the trials cannot be compared with the blessings God has seen fit to bestow upon us. Some time ago the departmental officials of the district met in conference in Chicago to discuss the problems confronting the district. One of the principles discussed and agreed upon was the need for a greater socialization of our people. Our district president, J. L. Cooper, came to our midst and counseled with the branch officers, and it was decided to have a rally day service in our branch. Brother Cooper spent a week visiting Saints and friends, urging them to attend, and many invitation cards were sent out inviting them to be present at the services. We obtained permission to hold our rally service in the public park, but owing to the rain were compelled to withdraw to our home. While we felt somewhat disappointed, Brother Cooper in his opening remarks said that the Lord knew his business, which proved to be true, for as all nature rejoiced, because of the refreshing rain, so we were led to rejoice in the showers of blessings which our heavenly Father poured upon us. The Sunday school met at 10 o'clock, and preaching was at 11.15 by Elder Oliver A. McDowell, of DeKalb, Illinois, the sermon being very instructive and convincing on "Authority." Brother McDowell is surely one of God's noblemen.

At noon we had dinner, as the sisters brought well-filled baskets of good things to eat which were served in cafeteria style. After dinner there was a social hour of visiting and singing and at three o'clock there was preaching by Elder J. L. Cooper, of DeKalb. The subject was "The gospel and its power." Brother Cooper was surely blessed with the Holy Spirit in presenting the word, and all seemed to be convinced that the gospel came not in word only but also in power. Brother Cooper has endeared himself to the hearts of the Saints and friends because of his kind and jovial manner. At the close of the preaching service Fred Vowles was ordained to the office of priest by Elders O. A. McDowell and William Pinkerton. There were about sixty-eight or seventy present at the services. We want to say that there were quite a number of children and babies and they were all very good.

Some of the Saints from Rockford and DeKalb came and spent the day rejoicing with us. Surely we must say that the Spirit of God was with us. We think how many times the Lord has promised to bless and be with us if only we are humble and obedient. We would like to say a word to the missionaries. If any happen to be passing through Belvidere we would be glad to have you stop with us. The services are held at the home of the writer, 424 North Main Street, Belvidere, Illinois. We are ever praying for the onward march of the gospel.

MR. and MRS. WILLIAM PINKERTON.

BELVIDERE, ILLINOIS.

Council Bluffs and Vicinity

A beautiful music recital was given free at the Central Church by Sister B. O. Burton at the graduation of one of her pupils after a four-year course in music.

We are informed that Brother Milo Burnett and family will move to Saint Joseph, Missouri, this week. He is engaged in an oil business that is having its beginning there.

Sister May Skinner who has been ill since before the visit of President F. M. Smith to the city is now improving, and the anxious desire of all the Saints is that she may speedily recover.

The reunion committee of the Pottawattamie and Fremont Districts has decided to hold the reunion of 1923 near Fairmont Park, beginning about the 10th of August.

The prayer meetings are not largely attended, but those who have attended enjoyed a peaceful gathering. The prayer services at the missions in the city are reported to be quite spiritual.

Brother J. F. McDowell, of Magnolia, Iowa, recently underwent an operation in an Omaha hospital for cataract on the eye. He is reported to be recovering nicely. He is suffering with another cataract on the other eye but the specialist gives him hope of ultimate recovery of his sight. He receives great help through administration. Brother McDowell has spent many years in missionary work for the church.

The superintendent of the School for the Deaf near the city gave a very interesting talk to the Religio a week ago Sunday. Last Sunday Brother Lloyd Graybill, the newly-elected superintendent of the district Religio, gave a very profitable talk in regard to the future work contemplated in the district.

He urged cooperation on the part of all, and suggested that the old could not get along without the young nor the young without the counsel of the old. He announced a picnic to be held at the grounds occupied by the reunion on the Fourth of July, all departments in the district to be represented.

The Aid Society of the Department of Women will meet all day this coming Thursday preparing things for the needy.

Several of the Saints from here have returned from the convention at Lamoni. Reports of a good time and profitable services have been received.

Independence

President F. M. Smith spent the week-end in Iowa, where he addressed the Little Sioux District Conference at Magnolia on Saturday night, June 23 and Sunday morning, June 24. In the afternoon he delivered the address at the dedication of the church in Denison, Iowa.

The program for Sunday at the churches was as follows: Stone Church, 11 a. m. Children's Day program; 8 p. m. Children's Day pageant. Second Independence, 11 a. m. preaching by Elder Ray Whiting; 7.30, preaching by Elder Delbert Whiting. Liberty Street Church, 11 a. m. preaching by Elder Glauk Kuykendall; 8 p. m. Children's Day program. Enoch Hill, 11, preaching by Apostle John W. Rush-ton; 7 p. m. preaching by Joseph Luff. Children's Day program by beginners and primaries; 7.45 p. m. Children's Day program by juniors and intermediates.

"The language of the flowers" was the pageant given by the children at the exercises at the Stone Church, Liberty Street Church, and Walnut Park. It was planned by Mrs. Madge Siegfried and musical scores were written by Mrs. Louise Farr, Mrs. Audentia Anderson, and Frank Russell.

Work on the campus is progressing. The building is being rapidly put into shape for use at an early date.

Mr. Albert N. Hoxie has left for the East after intensive work at the Convention and in Independence reorganizing the work in the Department of Music and preparing for the conference musical programs.

Miss Lillian Zimmermann returned to Philadelphia after a short visit in Independence. She will spend the summer on Cape Cod, and is planning to return in the fall to Independence. Miss Zimmermann will be on the faculty of the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences.

Bishop J. A. Becker will leave July 2 for a tour of the Northwest, attending the district reunions of Portland, Oregon; Seattle, Washington; Rupert, Idaho; and Race Track, Montana. He also expects to visit Salt Lake City before returning September 1.

A party in honor of Doctor Charles A. McLean, of Toronto, Ontario, was given by Mr. and Mrs. George A. Gould, Monday evening, June 25, at their home. Their daughter, Miss Faye Gould, will be married to Doctor McLean Saturday night, June 30, at the Stone Church after which the couple will make their home in Toronto.

The Laurel Club will hold a picnic on the Campus, July 4, beginning at 10 a. m. and continuing into the evening. "The fair of the nations" is the theme of the occasion, many booths representing various countries being elaborately decorated. Home cooked food of all kinds and plenty to drink is promised by the club. Prices will be exceptionally reasonable and there will be plenty of food for all. A big crowd is expected to take advantage of the opportunity offered to spend the day and eat lunch on the grounds. Ice water will also be available.

In the afternoon there will be speaking by President Smith and others. Community singing and a band concert is also scheduled for the afternoon.

Baseball games and races will be held with Mr. Chris Hartshorn in charge. Prizes will be offered in some of these athletic contests.

The Laurel Club wishes to extend the invitation to all to come early and spend the day.

New York District Conference

A number of important and progressive measures were adopted at the New York District conference which convened at Buffalo, Saturday, June 2, 1923, extending over Sunday. In addition to these forward steps the published program was carried out to the letter under the very able direction of Doctor P. L. Weegar, district president and his live-wire associates.

Beginning with the priesthood meeting at 1 p. m., the first session on the program to the last item of business Sunday evening complete harmony prevailed, everybody vying with each other in their endeavors to make this conference the most successful in the history of this district. That they realized their desire was made very apparent by the great number of enthusiastic expressions of gratification heard on every side. But the most marked and outstanding feature was the desire universally expressed for greater spiritual development, enabling the Saints to render more consecrated service in the building up of God's kingdom.

At the priesthood meeting a number of the recommendations appearing on the program were discussed in detail, and opinion pretty well crystalized, preparatory for the business session at 2.30 p. m. "Standardization of the priesthood"; "Open homes for missionary instructions"; "Priesthood instruction"; "Intensive study of church books"; "Spiritual home work"; "Contact with isolated Saints"; all of which, "A flying squadron under the supervisor"; "A $300 budget"; boiled down, can be expressed in one very important word—work. None can be exempt from the application of the meaning of this word and enjoy life in the abundant sense. With this activating principle conscientiously and intelligently employed not merely addition but multiplication of talents will be the result, whether beginning with one, two, or five.

Upon the suggestion of the district president, the Presidency of the church recommended a full-time high priest for election to the presidency of the district. Elder Arthur Allen seemed to meet every requirement and was elected president; Elder P. L. Weegar and Elder William Place, first and second vice presidents. Sister Anna Lloyd was elected clerk and chorister; Elder F. C. Mesle was elected treasurer and Bishop's agent; Brother M. E. Whitehead, Sunday school superintendent; Sister M. E. Whitehead, Sunday school secretary; Sister Clara E. Bradt, Superintendent Department of Women, and Brother William Hill, Superintendent of the Department of Recreation and Expression.

The budget for the district was increased from $100, the amount set for last year, to $300, the object being to expend the additional amount in more intensive missionary work. Not a discordant note was expressed in the discussion of any proposition brought before the conference; the Spirit of the Master, which is love, joy, and peace, prevailed throughout, reaching the climax at the prayer, sacrament, and ordination service held from nine until eleven-thirty Sunday morning.

After the sacrament was administered the following brethren were ordained to their respective offices and callings, the call of each having been referred to and approved by a committee of all the elders present, twelve in number: Brother George Landes to the office of elder; Brethren William Owens, A. Foster, and L. Golden to the office of priest; H. Miller to the office of teacher; and William Hannam and I. Clemens to the office of deacon. Upon the completion of these ordinations the Spirit of the Lord spoke in prophecy through Elder Frederick Harper, especially to the priesthood, giving some very timely and wise counsel and admonition, the truthfulness of the communication being indorsed by the presiding officer, the missionary supervisor and others who testified. Many other spiritual testimonies were had, a veritable feast of good things from beginning to end.

At 2 p. m., the ideal Sunday school was demonstrated by Sisters Whitehead and Lambert and Elder Mesle, following which there was a very profitable round-table discussion participated in by Elders Cornelius Clifford, G. W. Robley and J. F. Rudd, the subject being, "Church ideals and how to bring them about." Elder Clifford showed in a very logical and convincing way the deplorable conditions existing in the world and the necessity for a church that would insure spiritual regeneration of the people through real faith and service expressed in a proper and equitable adjustment and interrelationship of social and economic activities. The discussion which followed was to have been in the negative and affirmative, but neither Elders Robley nor Rudd were inclined to offer any negative arguments and their discussion was confined simply to the amplification of some of the splendid points merely suggested by Elder Clifford in his lecture.

In the evening Elder Robley gave one of his characteristic sermons emphasizing the necessity of remembering the new covenant, the Book of Mormon, and urging its daily reading until next district conference, at least, if only for fifteen minutes a day.

While we were enjoying these spiritual feasts we were not being neglected physically, splendid meals being furnished by the Buffalo Saints to the visitors in Kensico Hall near the church, over two hundred being accommodated for the noon and evening meals on Sunday, the Saints foregoing the morning meal as a fast.

The other temporalities were also well provided for, liberal collections having been taken up for the missionaries, and about forty dollars subscribed to the Swope property fund.

J. F. RUDD, Press Committee.

Brother William H. Sheffer writes from Sandusky, Michigan, that he has been holding meetings at Bay Port, for the past week with a fair crowd. He baptized two. Expects to return to Bay Port soon as he thinks others may be ready for baptism.

Graceland College graduated this year twenty-six students who get the State certificate as teachers, and positions paying from $100 to $150 per month. Nearly all have decided to teach this next year and have secured positions. After two years of teaching, they are entitled to a higher grade certificate with corresponding increase in remuneration.

One of the teachers in the model Sunday school received quite a shock at the first session of the school. Superintendent Carmichael gave an excellent talk on prayer, then called on this teacher to offer the closing prayer, "keeping in mind the points we have just been discussing!"

Graceland Broadcasting Suspended

On account of the closing of Graceland College for the summer vacation, and the consequent closing of K F F V, Graceland Broadcasting Station, the church will be unable to continue the Sunday afternoon religious programs during the summer. With the reopening of the college for the fall term, these religious programs will be resumed.

Trained Teachers Needed for Religious Education

Week-Day Religious Instruction

For the last two years the movement for week-day religious instruction has been gaining momentum. In several large cities the public school boards are deciding to permit local churches to have the children of the public schools under their various charges during one or two public school hours for Biblical and other religious instruction. We felt sure that the call would come to our church before we were ready for it. The call has come.

In two cities our pastors have been invited to join this movement. This has happened within the last two months. The school boards of Kansas City, Kansas, and Wichita, Kansas, have joined this movement, and our pastors in these two cities have been invited. Can we participate?

The first question is, do we have the people who can qualify as teachers under the regulations that these school boards will adopt? Undoubtedly the school boards will require that the teachers of these children in religion have public school certificates, the equal in value of those that the teachers must have who teach other branches. In cities the size of these two the requirement ought to be at least two years of college preparation above high school, and then the teacher should be required to have courses in religious education and Biblical literature as a part of that college preparation. This may be a larger requirement than these boards will demand, but it is none too high. It is what we think should be the requirement.

Our only concern now is to find within these cities those of our church who can meet the demands of the school board, and who will offer their services. We must not permit this opportunity to go by, because we do not now qualify. We must qualify. It would seem to the writer that it is up to the entire church, if necessary, to come to the rescue.

We are very happy that Graceland can qualify in training public-school teachers. We call upon every one of the teachers who have been taught by Graceland to feel it his or her duty to take hold of this situation, whenever and wherever it may arise. Such teachers must find places of employment in those cities where the public school boards are permitting these week-day schools of religious instruction, that they may serve the boys and girls of the church.

Our second concern is a matter of curriculum. Almost all the large churches have already through their publishing houses provided courses of study for week-day schools. We have nothing provided. Our teachers in these coming schools will be left without help from the church itself! Must we say that? We dare not. The consecration and means must be provided. It will be provided. For the time being the Department of Religious Education would spend itself in the greater part of its efforts to see that these teachers get the help they need.

A. MAX CARMICHAEL.

Attention Missionaries

We have on hand a small sum of money which has been sent in for the purpose of supplying our church publications to interested nonmembers. No doubt in your missionary work you have become acquainted with people whom you know to be interested in our message, but whom you are unable to fully convert. If you will send us the names of such people and make sure that you are giving us the correct addresses, we will be glad to put as many of them as possible on the free mailing list of the ENSIGN.

This same notice may serve to awaken others to the possibilities for doing missionary work by means of our church publications. If you wish to do a little preaching by means of the ENSIGN, we would be pleased to have you send us your remittance and we will see that likely prospects receive the papers that your money will enable us to send.

Take away these old eyes,
Give back the boyhood-bold eyes,
The all-that-gleams-is-gold eyes,

The never-shed-a-tear eyes,
That served me as a boy!
Give me back the bright eyes,
The every-soul-is-white eyes,
The things-must-come-out-right eyes,
That brought me only joy.

"No—most I love the dim eyes,
The let-him-have-his-whim eyes,
The oft-with-tears-aswim eyes,

I'd rather have the kind eyes,
The helped-out-with-the-mind eyes,
Than any boyhood's blind eyes
That only saw in part?"

People tell us that Jesus Christ lived a long time ago, that times have changed, that this is the strenuous age, that his philosophy is not adapted to our age, and that man cannot live by it now. I believe that if Jesus Christ were here to-day he would not change his philosophy in any particular. I think if he should come to Kansas City or New York or London to-day he would preach absolutely the same doctrine and the same plan that he preached when he was here before. I do not think that anything we have to offer in this wonderful age of ours would impress Jesus Christ in the least or disturb his serenity at all.

They say that a real typical Indian never allows himself to reveal a trace of surprise at anything the white man has done. He may be taken from his tepee, his pony herds, his reservation, to New York among the skyscrapers, and look out upon the battleship and airplanes. He does not allow a muscle of his face to show one particle of surprise. There is a racial idiosyncrasy and a racial pride which forbids him to betray surprise at anything the white man has done.

For quite different reasons, if Jesus Christ were here to-day he would not be in the least disturbed or surprised or disconcerted by anything that this world could present for his consideration. The reason is that while we look at externals and are wonderfully impressed, they do not impress him at all. He looks beyond them.

We look at a grand modern skyscraper or one of our palatial hotels and are filled with wonder and admiration. The building may swarm with thieves and harlots, but we do not stop to think about that. We are thinking about the building. When I say thieves I do not mean pickpockets, I mean thieves who steal on such a gigantic scale that their operations are entirely legal. And when I say harlots I do not mean street walkers, but women who are so wealthy and so well-placed socially, that they may indulge in philanderings all their lives and pass through the embraces of a series of men, and yet be respectable. Now, if Jesus Christ were here he would not look at the building, but at the men and women in the building. He would ponder the eternal problem, how to reach and save them.

I do not know why Christ should be impressed by anything we have to offer. We are told that he was with God in the morning of creation and that nothing was made without him. Why should the Being who saw the stars and planets come out of the great garage and go down the heavenly speedway, be impressed when he sees a millionaire ride by in his limousine? We speculate about the automobile—he speculates about the man in the automobile.

Jesus Christ would not need to change his philosophy, because he is the man of the ages. The title that he took to himself, "The Son of Man," is full of significance. Not the son of one race or one age, but the Son of Man, the representative of man in a racial sense. And we are told in the Bible that he is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. He changes not; neither does his plan change. And if God in heaven with divine confidence can say, "I am God, I change not," it is true that man with humility but with equal truth may say, "And I am man, and I change not."

The primal passions and needs of man are the same in all ages; they never change. It is true that men may change in the sense that they are better or worse in one age or in another, but that is because they have either taken these passions and caused them to serve noble purposes or else have permitted them to drag them down. Man is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever so far as his needs, his longings, his aspirations, his temptations, his appetites, and his passions are concerned. I presume there is not a type of man that ever lived in the history of the world but what is on the earth to-day. If Jesus were to walk the streets of Kansas City to-day he would meet Pilate, Herod, blind Bartimeus, John, Judas, Mary Magdalene, and the very twin brother of the Pharisee with whom he dined.

All these he met and knew. He knew human nature. "He knew all men, and needed not that any should testify of man: for he knew what was in man." (John 2: 25.) With this knowledge fully in mind his plan of life and salvation was formulated. It meets the needs of men in every age.

Thrift

In his address at Salt Lake City, President Harding emphasized the importance of thrift in government and the home. He stated that the budget system which they had established in Washington had assisted in greatly reducing the taxes, so that they were less than half as much for this year as they were a few years ago, and that they are pursuing a persistent policy of tax reductions as rapidly as possible, but the interest on the war debt amounts to over $1,000,000,000 a year. Despite this fact, in the past four years more than $4,000,000,000 have been paid off, so that nearly half of the expense of the war has now been met.

On the other hand he points out that the Treasury and the Census Bureau have collected data showing the cost of state and local government, and that these figures are steadily increasing. In 1913 the revenues of the State were $368,000,000; in 1921, $959,000,000, while the expenditures in 1921 reached more than $1,000,000,000 a year. The indebtedness of the States has increased from $423,000,000 to more than $1,000,000,000.

City taxes are also mounting. The data from 227 large cities shows these cities collected $890,000,000 on revenue in 1913. In 1921 they collected $1,567,000,000 while their expenditures were nearly $160,000,000 larger than their collections for 1921. The indebtedness for this group of 227 cities has increased from $2,901,000,000 to $4,334,000,000.

No complete figures have yet been collected for county administration but the indications are that there has been a much larger proportion of increase in the cost of county administration than there has been in the cost of city government.

It must be remembered that the cost of the war fell upon the Federal Government, not upon the States, counties, or cities, except so far as bonuses have increased the indebtedness in the past few years. But it must also be remembered that these figures are for 1921, not 1923, and so do not include bonuses recently voted. The President is quoted as saying:

There is but one way for the community finally to get back on its feet, and that is to go seriously about paying its debts and reducing its expenses. That is what the world must face. The greatest and richest government must face it, and so must the humblest citizen.

If I could urge upon the American people a single rule applicable to every one of them as individuals, and to every political or corporate unit among them, it would be to learn to spend somewhat less than your income all the time. If you have debts, reduce them as rapidly as you can; if you are one of the fortunate few who have no debts, make it a rule to save something every year.

Keep your eye everlastingly on those who administer your governmental units for you; your town, your county, your State, your National Government. Make them understand that you are applying the rule of thrift and savings in your personal affairs, and require them to apply it in their management of your public affairs. If they fail, find other public servants who will succeed. If they succeed, give them such encouragement and inspiration as will be represented by a full measure of hearty appreciation for their efforts.

It would appear entirely reasonable that the frugality and thrift of the Government should also be extended to the church and to the members of the church as citizens of the kingdom of God as well as citizens of the Nation. In 1887 the Lord commanded us to be frugal (Doctrine and Covenants 119:9), and in 1913 the command is even more specific, "Both in private and public expenditures carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repress your unnecessary wants." It is true that that was given primarily to the meeting of the church, but the principle of frugality, the principles of thrift, of the wise investment of our money, still continues as part of the duty of the people of God.

Bible Appreciation

To-day young people are notoriously ignorant of the word of God as set forth in the Holy Scriptures. They read many volumes about religion, other volumes about the teachings of Jesus, both social and individualistic, other volumes about the content of the books of the Bible, but the book itself is but rarely studied as it should be.

Yet even the above is a decided advance over the condition of most people, and especially young people, for the majority do not even read about the book. They are too much interested with the pleasures and pains of everyday life and the pursuit of present pleasure and of present living to consider the significance of religion and of the important place that the Bible holds in religious study.

Those who have read the Bible are the strongest in its praise. Even the Jewish atheist, Heinrich Heine, had nothing but words of praise for this book of books which caused his soul indeed to marvel at its simplicity and beauty.

Recently an Italian who prided himself on his iconoclastic tendency, on his distaste for everything that made pretense of good, found in the hour of stress that iconoclasm and atheism offered no satisfaction to his soul. But the war drove him among the peasants, where, for their sake, he read the life of Jesus as set forth in the Gospels, and reading found peace for his own soul.

Men who have rejected the churches to-day because of faults, real or imaginary, still have found this very book of books contained more than any other book to bring to pass peace of soul, consolation in the hour of trial, and assurance for life both here and hereafter. They have found in it a guide in their individual, personal relations and also a textbook of social power.

Summer Recreation

Churches cannot afford to waste the golden opportunity of summer in directing the activities of youth. The play instinct must be given direction or it will grow, like the unpruned grape, all vine and little fruit, according to the Christian Century.

If the child's hours are not filled with constructive exercise, idleness will provide time for expression of those things which are not desirable in character building. Through recreative play and activity during vacation, the church has the opportunity of guiding the expression of youth, thereby enabling him to form habits of good living.

To offer a school for Bible study alone does not interest or hold the boy or girl who is active by nature. What is needed is games where the social instinct can be satisfied and at the same time when character can be built. The church should take advantage of the summer opportunity to offer recreation to its youth in connection with religious instruction.

To build a church gymnasium and turn the children loose therein is almost as dangerous as allowing them to play in the streets. Undirected play may lead to dissipated forms of activity and be destructive rather than constructive. The church which takes enough interest in its young members to provide a gymnasium or recreation center should be far-sighted enough to provide trained recreational leaders upon whom the responsibility can be placed for directing the play activities of youth into the right channels.

The Missionary Task

The church has a threefold task, the missionary work, and securing adequate volunteers for that work; support adequate to carry on that work; and care for those who profess the name of Christ, including the instruction and holding of the young of the church through religious education. This last should not be treated as an easy task, but should receive the same self-sacrificing, unselfish attention and devotion that we expect from the missionary.

This is after all a form or portion of missionary work, the instruction and conversion of the young, the instruction and development of all the Saints. If the effectiveness of each Saint were doubled the same mechanical result would be achieved as though the membership were doubled without increasing the capacity for service.

Places must be prepared for those newly converted, men and women prepared to care for the flock and carry on the work. But the time is past when we can first seek to prepare a place, for now the task is to continue with greater energy than ever to prepare a place or places, but also to send the work and take the word of God abroad to the converting of the nations.

Perhaps it is a fourfold problem, if not a fivefold: 1. A place prepared, and pastors to care for the converted; 2. educational work to fit for better service; 3. the economic solution for Zion; 4. the missionary work; 5. men to labor and support by pay so that all this work may be carried on. Truly the men of business and of work and the ministry must labor together to carry on this work, and all must be done at once. All of this work calls, when rightly understood, for the spirit and devotion of the missionary.

Jerusalem

Some time ago we wrote Elder Harry Passman asking concerning the location of our new mission headquarters in the Holy Land. Is the building in Jerusalem or near Jerusalem, and if so, how near? We asked a number of questions, and in return Brother Passman wrote the article which appears elsewhere in this HERALD.

But he also very kindly sent a scale map of Jerusalem showing the walled city, the Mount of Olives, the temple area, the location of Floyd House where formerly the church had headquarters, and the location of the present mission headquarters. It will be noted that both of these latter are outside the city walls. In fact the walled portion of the city is small and can be crossed in perhaps twenty minutes. It will be seen that the great new road being built and our mission headquarters are more than a mile from the city walls.

Our thanks are due to Brother Passman for the original drawing, from which a partial tracing was made.

This map is of interest not only in showing relative distances and directions, but it also illustrates clearly how much Jerusalem is built outside the walls, or is a city without walls. There are houses scattered over quite a wide area which is part of that city. This is of interest in connection with the prophecy that Jerusalem should be rebuilt as a city without the walls, yet it dwells in safety for the walls are of little protection against modern artillery.

The Need for Trained Teachers

We have several times the past year called attention in several articles and editorials to the week-day Bible school movement. A notice appeared from the general superintendent last week. It is startling to realize that despite the recognition of this growing need apparently no steps have been taken by way of a preparation of a curriculum heretofore, and it is also startling to realize that with several Sunday schools in one of these cities and many Sunday-school teachers the general superintendent is doubtful if he can find even one who can fulfill the requirements of the school board.

The opportunity is indeed a great one, to help teach religion not only on Sunday but also on week days and during the time ordinarily devoted to week-day school work, the recognition that religious education is a vital part of the school work.

But do we need poorer teachers for our regular work on Sunday than will be accepted by the school board in the various cities? It is certain that the work cannot be adequately done without proper training. At the same time we recognize that there are many teachers who through long training and experience are to-day competent and could pass an examination. But the importance of this work of religious education is even now only partly appreciated anywhere, and the importance of properly trained teachers is something which must be clearly recognized shortly by us for the Sunday school work, to say nothing of these week-day Bible schools under the direction of boards of education.

It is a wonderful opportunity. Can we afford to let it pass us by?

How Long Shall We Wander?

The story of the Israelites on their way to the promised land is one of the great stories of the world. A trip that might have been taken in days consumed forty years, because they were not ready.

So the Christian Work in an editorial points out that to-day we are in like manner wandering along the edge of the promised land, and failing to enter because we have not sufficient character to go forward.

First there is the matter of prohibition. The constitutional amendment, the Volstead Act, then state laws to enforce, and at each stage the cry was made that we were going in at once. But instead we are still wandering in the desert. It is not the laws which are put on the statute books but those that a people will live which mark our civilization and progress. It is only the laws that are enforced which show the national character.

Again we look for a warless world but slaves of tradition refuse to make the necessary change. We are not far away but do not enter in, because of old suspicions and hatred. We have a religion of rituals but not sufficient faith in God. Like ancient Israel we have the name of God and the decalogue but his law is not in our hearts. So we are cowards in the presence of the giants who are determined on preparing for war and practicing its arts.

Again there is the kingdom of the united world, the kingdom of love. Mankind has long been marching but he cannot enter in. We are waiting for a higher type of man; we are afraid of the blustering sons of Arak. So America refuses to enter a family of nations, and without America it cannot go forward. Some despise it because they claim it was Mr. Wilson's idea and therefore democratic. But Chief Justice Taft had the idea many years ago. It is not a partisan question but an American one. Therefore there are needed men of courage. There are Calebs and Joshuas to-day, but there is also a multitude who do not recognize the fundamental religious significance of these questions, for each of them is as much or more a religious question as it is any other. They are all matters of moral and of group consciousness. The mere fact that a few politicians have taken positions on one or more of these questions does not change their fundamental significance. Ancient Israel wandered for forty years. How long shall the modern race wander before we will enter?

The use of the drama in the church school is a recent acceptance of one of the oldest and most vivid ways of teaching—the living presentation of the theme. Why should we not extend this to life and there act out the gospel as taught by Christ?

Considerations in Determining What the Church Should Do to Develop Religion in Its Children

By A. Max Carmichael

What the church shall do to develop religion in its young is a question that is receiving a large amount of emphasis in modern church magazines and literature. The chief reason why it is being unusually emphasized to-day is probably that in the minds of some there is supposed to be a conflict between the evangelical method and the educational method. Most of the members of our church are readily aware that we have not as a church used the evangelical method to the extent that our brethren of other churches have used it. We have depended rather upon the quiet teaching of the Word, a reasoning out of the meaning of the Scriptures and an indoctrination of our beliefs in the early days of the youth. We have not had "decision days" upon which some of the more extreme proponents of the evangelical method have harrassed the mind of the child to a point of great excitement.

We have, however, had the same thing in principle to a considerable degree. It has been used in the development of our religious life, especially by our prayer meetings. Here, however, the growth is slow, normal, and evolutionary, not spasmodic. The word backslider is not a common expression in our church. We have preferred to rely upon a slow growth in the knowledge and grace of our Lord. We have preferred to use those methods which brought about surer and more permanent results.

We are confident that our own Sunday school took an advance step in the early days of its history in the methods which it used. For this we are immensely proud. It shall pay us always as religious educators in the Sunday school and other departments of the church work to scrutinize carefully the developments of modern religious educational science to use that which proves beneficial and to discard that which appears superficial and even harmful.

The Growth of Religion

There is no doubt that a person grows into a broader and deeper religion as he grows from childhood to adulthood. In other words, if a child at ten years of age is as religious as his capacity will permit him to be, we have the greatest assurance that he will be as religious at twenty-five years of age as his capacity will then permit.

A babe born in the world with only reflexes does not become religious overnight. He has not the capacity for it. He becomes religious by being in life itself and interpreting it religiously or as Christ interpreted it. It seems to the author that this is one of the great fundamental considerations in determining what the church shall do to further religion in the lives of its children. Let us have them as religious as possible now, whatever their age.

Religion Is the Interpretation of Life

Religion is not merely talking about Moses, nor even talking about honesty, nor is it always giving alms to the poor. Religion, to the mind of the author, is an interpretation of life acted out, which has as its fundamental philosophy that all of us are of the one family of God. Religion is the striving together cooperatively to be brothers in spirit as well as in flesh. It is not the business, therefore, of the church to talk about Moses only or even to talk about religion only. It is the business of the religious educator to cooperate with his scholars in religion. Teacher and pupil must act together and think together in order that such acts may approach the teacher's ideal. To think religiously is sometimes different from thinking about religion. Once in a while we have felt that at our conferences we were more inclined to think about something we call religion than we were to think religiously. The religious educator must promote life and promote it in accordance with the social philosophy of Jesus.

This means then that our course of study is not primarily a series of stories to be learned, a series of geographical facts or Biblical knowledges, or even a series of virtues to be discussed and prayed about, but rather a series of life's activities.

Curriculum in the Home

The curriculum in the home, therefore, would be to have the child set the table, wash the dishes, do some chores, study his lessons, visit the sick, contribute to the common thinking of the family, listen to the preacher, teach a Sunday school class, play a sufficient length of time to receive from intense activity such recreation as is necessary, and to think over his activities at the end of the day to see if perchance he might not have done them better. The curriculum is rather a series of activities in which the growing child becomes more and more capable.

In determining our curriculum, then, we need to determine the capacity of the child at any particular stage of his development and what activities he is most capable of at that time. We need to know when the growing child will first wash a dish and at what time he should have considerable skill in washing dishes, and at what time in his mental development he may be able to appreciate dish washing as a contribution to the great family project of rearing the home. It follows then that we cannot outline a basic curriculum or course of study for the church school until we have made a thorough study of the abilities and capacities for religious action that the child is capable of at each stage in his development.

Religion Is Social

Another consideration is that religion is essentially social. In order for a person to be religious he must have a human being present with him, and also he must have the consciousness of God's presence as the Father of both. An act of honesty involves two people. An act of service involves at least two people. Life involves a mate, a friend. The normal environment of every child brings him in contact with two adult parents and brothers and sisters of ages varying from his own. Further, his normal environment brings him in contact with children of his own age, sometimes under the supervision of an adult and sometimes not.

It is under these human relationships that a child is given the privilege of acting religiously or irreligious. In order to respond then to this normal situation, our church school curriculum must be so devised as to promote religious activity under this normal environment. Each activity will, therefore, include first the members of the family, and secondly, the members of the community, state, nation, church, or world.

Religion Through Cooperation

Another consideration, and one corollary to the last, is that religious growth is best promoted, and we may perhaps say only promoted, by cooperative methods, by cooperative human activity in which each person is performing a special function. Most of our family life is cooperative, each member, father, mother, child, brother, sister, cooperating each in his way to promote the best interests of the family, each performing some phase of the whole family life or activity.

As it is in the family so it is in community life. We can best grow religiously when each one of us is contributing our part to a common project. That is why we have a church. One can sweep the church building; another can pray; another can preach; another can teach; another can farm; another can bank; together we shall forward King Emmanuel's banner. When we each feel that we are contributing to a common cause, we are on the high road of progress toward the religious ideal. Our children must learn to work cooperatively, else they cannot obtain religious promotion. Hence, the series of activities which go to make up our curriculum must be activities which involve the cooperative effort of children and adults together, not merely children of a single age, but children of different ages.

A Sunday school class must visit the sick, make up a picture book to send to a little boy in the hospital, contribute funds to send preachers to foreign missions, and, in the long run, learn to think together, each contributing to the common social thinking his own thinking. Oh, that we could do that in our conferences rather than assemble each to gain his own point! Oh that we could assemble each to contribute his own knowledge or views to a common cause! That will produce religion. That is religious thinking.

Religion Through Evaluation

Religious growth comes about by a constant interaction between activity and evaluation thereof. One may preach a sermon; then, in order to make his sermon more nearly like that of Christ, he must think back over what he has done, comparing it with his ideal and thus make himself more capable of preaching the sermon better next time.

We teach our first Sunday school class. We study our own method in the light of the methods which other people have used and thus perhaps better our own methods. We are growing religiously. Many mothers take a great deal of pride in having slaved themselves by sewing, washing dishes, washing clothes hour in and hour out for their children, but who have never taken fifteen minutes a day to think over whether they could have washed more easily and with less effort. But the latter is essential to the betterment of her job as a mother, and to her own religious growth as a mother. It is in the thinking over a task that she develops her philosophy with which she tests her actions to see if they come up to all that they should.

As parents we correct a child. When through with the correction, do we think over what we have done and try to discover whether we could have done better? He who would promote his own religious growth must have a common place between his activity with men and his evaluation thereof. Religion is possible only to the man who thinks about his life in terms of a life which he conceives as better than that which he has lived. Religion then is impossible to the man who has no imagination, memory, thinking, or reasoning power. The reverse of this means that even though a man may have these powers latent, he is not religious unless he exercises them.

How true it is that much of our activity as human beings is done without any imagery or memory of past similar actions or without any thinking or reasoning accompanying the act, comparing the act with past acts or with the ideal act. Much of our activity, therefore, is unpurposeful. It is merely the blind expression of an instinct. Many of our activities are similar to the wink of the eyelid. The wink of the eyelid has a biological function. Much of humanity's activity, for instance, smoking, chewing tobacco, drinking liquor, lying, stealing, etc., is not even on the plane of a biological function. It is negative not positive. Religion puts purpose into our activity, that purpose being to attain an ideal, God. How, then, can our activity become purposeful unless we think about it and compare it with our ideal?

Thus we find that the church school in its curriculum or course of study must not only promote cooperative activity but also must promote an evaluation of such activity. This evaluation should be cooperative too. To merely stimulate children to visit the sick is not enough. Children must be led to think why a person is sick. What can we do to rid the world of sickness? When have we a right to call upon God for help? It is not enough to stimulate the children to put money in the Christmas offering basket. They must learn in time to feel that that contribution is a part of a great world project, the christianizing of the world. Their action must be purposeful; it must not be blind.

Why is so much of our activity so unpurposeful? Largely because we have not thought about it in terms of the Divine. It is, therefore, one of the objects of the church to stimulate and greatly enhance the evaluation of life's activities by the membership of the church. Mothers must be taught to think over their tasks, not merely to do them. To wash dishes always in the same way and never think about whether it can be done more expeditiously or in an easier way is not religion. To teach religion in the same old way and not stop to think whether it can be done better is not religion. To farm in every detail just as our fathers have done and never stop to evaluate their processes is not religion. Too much of life is carried on in this way. In fact, this seems to be the chief business of the church to stimulate an evaluation of life's activities. Consequently, not only will the religious educator promote activity, but he will also promote an evaluation of it.

Religious evaluation is accomplished in several different ways. The most commonly used method is the personal discussion going on between the religious educator, the pastor, Sunday-school teacher, Oriole leader, friendly visitor, or the priest and the scholar. Another common method is the lecture or sermon in which the religious educator evaluates for a large group or stimulates the group to evaluate. It is generally the former, but the latter should be used more often. Music, especially congregational singing, is one very valuable method in promoting the evaluation of life's emotional values. Prayer, to the mind of the author, is the most powerful, whether done privately or publicly.

All Life Is Religious

Another consideration is that the whole of life must receive a religious interpretation. It may have seemed strange to you that we should have mentioned washing dishes or banking or planting seed in connection with religious growth. It is strange to you because you have not been considering these acts as a part of your religion. We have spent too much of our time in the church school interpreting the life of Moses religiously, but not the life of present-day Johnny. Moses, so far as we are concerned, never had to answer the question whether he would be found in a dance hall, but Mary does; and very seldom do we hear it told a farmer that his first duty after planting his seed is to attend a farmers' institute rather than to attend a discussion on some phases of ecclesiastical doctrines. But according to our views, that is his first duty. All life, that which makes up the bulk of it, must be interpreted in terms of the divine purpose. We must be taught to farm the world into religion, and we must, therefore, have farm institutes under church supervision in order that this religious interpretation may be promoted. This is a part of the church curriculum. If our argument is true, does not the church come far from fulfilling its entire function? Does it not fail much in answering all the needs of its members? We certainly need an enlargement of our program.

In determining what the church shall do, the pastor, visiting priest, Sunday-school teacher, and other representatives of the church must remember that as a whole parents do not consciously promote the use of these principles which we have here enunciated with respect to the activities of their children. Parents are failing in promoting religious development. The religious process of acting, and thinking about the acting, in terms of the ideal is not brought to a completion by the ordinary parent in supervising his child. Neither does the child himself complete the process. The child himself will play day in and day out without any thought of bettering his play life. Most men will farm year after year and never study to find better methods. We have farmed the same way for generations, and many countries still farm as did their ancestors many generations ago, even though at their very door a more efficient method of farming is being used.

The religious educator must realize that parents do not promote the purposeful activity of their children. Parents do not consciously bring about cooperation in the family life. Cooperation merely happens; they do not foster it. At least parents fail to promote an evaluation by the children of their own activities. The church must supply this lack. This means then that a great part of church curriculum will be that of fostering an evaluation of the life of the child which is not under the supervision of the religious educator. The religious educator will then need to stimulate the child to evaluate that part of his life when the religious educator is not around.

No wonder the Lord set aside one day in seven and commanded people to go to church. The chief function of Sunday, to our notion, is to promote an evaluation of the activity of the six preceding days.

But religious educators are finding it a very difficult task to stimulate an evaluation of that part of one's life which is not done in connection with the religious educator himself. It takes a pastor with a lot of courage to talk in his Sunday morning sermon about the activities of the members of his flock during the week. He is sure to offend Mr. A, when Mr. A knows that Mr. B knows about whom the preacher is talking. The pastor has a delicate task. Many of them have long before this realized it, and yet this is a part of the task of the church. Do we have the courage of our convictions?

This thought brings us back to our first considerations about the church course of study or curriculum. If the pastor himself cooperatively acts with his scholars, they will then more readily permit him to evaluate for them or permit him to stimulate their evaluation of their own activity in which they have cooperated.

Especially does the religious educator find it a delicate task when he attempts to stimulate one generation into an evaluation of a process handed down to him by his forefathers. Our forefathers always rode behind horses. What a fool was he who attempted to ride in a horseless carriage! The world laughed as they laughed at Noah. What a fool is he who attempts to suggest a new method of teaching religion! He must expect to be laughed at. But it is the duty of the church to stimulate an evaluation of processes handed down traditionally no matter how long they have been used. Perhaps we can better them. Such evaluation generally comes forth with much travail but with great results.

Another part of our task as religious educators is to get our scholars or students to see themselves as factors in great world movements, the whole of which they cannot perceive and hardly imagine. How many of our tithepayers really realize what they are helping to do with their tithes? Do they consciously feel that they and our foreign missionary are working together hand in hand?

How many of us have felt ourselves actors in the Lausanne conference recently promoted? How many of us realize that the invasion of the Ruhr is an act in which we are partners? Are we silent actors or intelligent ones? This invasion is affecting our religious life. Are we intelligently handling the situation? Are we even doing anything about it? Is the establishment of a religious college in Rome of any interest to us religiously? Is the establishment of a Soviet government in Russia of any interest to us religiously? Do we see the religious significance of Columbus discovering America? Do we appreciate the religious significance of the moral conditions bringing about the fall of Rome? Do we appreciate the religious significance of astronomy or of nature? All of these are of significance to us religiously. It is the duty of the church to point this out.

What place has the Bible in all this? Likewise, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants? They serve two functions, one to help us set our goal and the other to provide material to be used in evaluation of life as it is now lived. The Bible may not be as helpful in modern situations as the Doctrine and Covenants, being itself a history of early life, not of modern, and yet the principles toward which those Biblical men were working are the same toward which we are working. Its philosophy sets our goal. Also scriptural stories and illustrations are to be used by us as religious educators in strengthening and exercising the imaginations and reasoning of our growing children.

Ideal Cities

By S. A. Burgess

Ideal states under a variety of titles have long held a prominent place in the history of thought. To-day there are many writing concerning a Zion city, for the name of Zion applied to an ideal state has been used by writers both ancient and modern.

Another name that is very frequently used is that of Utopia, the name applied to the ideal city described by Sir Thomas More.

This subject is naturally of great interest to all members of our church. Reference has occasionally been made to the plans of Owen, and cooperation in Great Britain, which grew out of his plan, and also to the garden cities of England, which are a continuation, in part at least, of his work a hundred years ago.

Quite recently we have referred to the article in the Journal of History for April, written by Elder M. A. Etzenhouzer, in which he reviewed many of these social plans. Now there has also come to our desk The History of Utopian Thought, by Doctor Joyce Oramel Hertzler, of the University of Wisconsin. This book is stated to be perhaps the first book published on this important subject, which reviews the perfect social states as outlined for the past 2,500 years or over. It gives a good historical background, discussing first the perfect social states as presented by Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel in the Old Testament and of the kingdom of God as presented by Jeremiah; then the book continues with the "City of God," by Augustine, the Savanarola's "Florentine theocracy."

These are all examined with respect to the existing conditions at the time that these men appeared and wrote, the difference in the nature of the perfect states proposed, the ways and means of effecting the transmission, and the significance which these conceptions have for us to-day. These earlier writings are concerned more with a celestial city and an apocalyptic vision than with an immediate effort to put into effect such ideals.

A chapter is then given to Plato's Republic, which would bear a careful reading. Some of his ideas may prove surprising; but his plan was a reasonably complete one of a select class of rulers, the ablest men, who were prohibited from holding property or receiving any personal benefit, but who were required to devote their services for the benefit of the state.

A review of the early modern Utopias includes that of Sir Thomas More, Francis Bacon's New Atlantis, Campanella's City of the Sun, Harrington's Oceana, and a summary of the significant factors of this group. Practically all of them express eugenic ideals, which were quite common to all teachers of the ideal state.

Of the Utopian socialists there are included, Morely, Babeuf, Saint-Simon, Fourier, Cabet, Blanc, and Owen.

Finally in this historical review the recent social anticipations of such pseudo-Utopians as Bellamy's Looking Backward, Hertska's Freeland, and Wells' Modern Utopia, are considered.

It may surprise some to learn that these are not simply dreams, that in many cases a serious attempt was made to carry them into effect. This is particularly true of several of the Utopian socialists. Owen established a model city at New Harmony, Indiana. Fourier had several societies established, both in Europe and in this country. Cabet is of particular interest because of his settling with his colony at Nauvoo. Theodore Hertzka's work was translated into many languages, and nearly a thousand local societies were organized, a suitable tract of land was secured, and a settlement actually made. In fact, this is true of most of these plans, a serious attempt was made to carry them into effect. We wish that our space permitted a discussion of these various ideals, what has been done and the results, for it should prove of interest and should help us in the consideration of the social problems of to-day. Some of these men were socialists of known standing. Many of them were great leaders in thought in their age, presenting a hope for the future as well as attempting to overcome the evils of their age.

While we are upon this theme it is of interest to note that here in America a practical attempt at stewardships and community interests was for a long time in effect among the American Indians. The Pueblo Indians still own their property by the Pueblo, though individuals are granted a family interest in a particular tract which they farm and use, and which descends to the children in the family but which they are not privileged to sell, as the fee belongs to the Pueblo and is subject to the community control.

This book of Doctor Hertzler referred to above, in its particular field, is not only the latest—it was published in 1923—but is also a remarkably able review on this subject, and evaluation of these various attempts for an ideal city.

 7. The gospel of Christ includes:
 - a. A means of individual regeneration.
 - b. A plan of social organization.
 8. Christ was primarily interested in social life. Matthew contains 101 statements of Christ dealing with social life and only 9 dealing with doctrine, and 14 with the hereafter.
 9. Even the so-called first principles of the gospel have a vital social significance.

 6. Religion must be socially efficient.
 - a. Worship is not enough.
 - b. Any religion that obscures duty should be condemned.
 - c. A religion that separates men should be condemned.
 - b. Be useful or die.
 7. The conflict with evil is an actual conflict.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

God's Financial Plan

Under the above heading there appears in the Herald of Holiness an article based on Leviticus 27:30; Deuteronomy 14:22, to the effect that tithing is the method established of God. Augustine is quoted as saying:

"Tithes ought to be paid from whatever may be your occupation, whether war, merchandise, or some handicraft. Tithes are required as a debt. He who would procure either pardon or reward, let him pay tithes and out of nine parts give alms. God who has given us the whole has thought it meet to ask the tenth from us."

Tithing was practiced by heathen nations, Greeks, Syrians, Hindus, Britons, and others. Only the Christian nations have failed. Grotius is referred to as stating that from the most ancient ages a tenth has been regarded as the portion due God.

Seldon, in his History of Tithing, states the Arabians required every merchant to offer a tenth of his frankincense. The Germans, Saxons, the Buddhists, Mohammedans, are also alluded to as upholding the system of tithing. Then Deuteronomy 14:27-29; Nehemiah 13:7-12; and Genesis 14:20; 28:20-22 are also quoted with final reference to the absurdity of the usual financial system of setting small boxes to catch the pennies to meet the financial needs.

Imagine the President of the United States and the committee of ways and means sending out little jugs and barrels with slots in them, mite boxes, to catch pennies to meet the fiscal needs of the Government of the United States. Or imagine the different States and counties holding fairs, festivals, apron sales, concerts, and ice cream socials, with women asked to cook and sew to get enough money to pay the regular expenses. Such methods would be a reproach and disgrace to any State, and yet this is the method by which many Christians are trying to finance the kingdom of God on earth. We all acknowledge that God has placed on this globe a kingdom called the kingdom of heaven. Is it conceivable that he has brought such an organization into existence and has never thought about financing it, but has thrown it out into the world a waif to be sustained or neglected as men see fit? Immediately I hear a thousand voices say 'No.' May I not hear another thousand? God's financial plan is, always has been, and always will be, the payment of the tithe. The tithe is his and he has commanded the payment of it by the rich and by the poor. He who keeps it for himself robs God and will be correspondingly cursed with a curse. Thus saith the Lord (Malachi 3:7-11)."

We quote this as showing what others are saying and thinking and trying to do on this important subject. It refers to the Mormon Church as a tithing organization though we are not informed as to the accuracy of some of the details set forth. The principle at least is approved.

Are Spirit Pictures a Fake?

In his recent book The Case for Spirit Photography (Doran) Sir Arthur Conan Doyle assures that under certain conditions it is possible to photograph spirits of the other world. So much has been said lately concerning this spiritual phenomenon that brief notice may be taken here of the investigations undertaken by certain Americans.

The New York Evening Telegram publishes results based upon the testimony of two men, one an expert photographer and the other a well-known magician who claim to have proof that "spirit pictures" are a "fake." The Evening Telegram aims to show that Sir Conan Doyle has been greatly deceived by clever fakers.

A review of the investigation and reproductions of the photographs are given in Current Opinion for June, 1923.

Slides Made From Cuts in Copyrighted Books

One of our elders has written, asking concerning the copyright law in the United States. He states that he has no trouble in preparing slides from photographs in copyrighted books for use in the British Dominion, but asks what would be the case in the United States.

Speaking generally, the copyright laws do not differ greatly from the old common law rights of authorship, nor does the law of the United States differ widely from that of Great Britain.

The copyright law of recent years in the United States covers cuts, lithographs, engravings, prints, charts, photographs, and paintings, as well as magazines and books and dramatic and musical compositions. The copyright of a book extends to its contents. A photograph may be separately copyrighted. Speaking in general the copyright of a book copyrights the whole and also the parts. The copyright law does not take the place of the patent system or protect any art or system set forth, nor does it cover theory, speculation, or opinions.

Copyright differs from patent right in that some use of the cuts of a book antecedently made, composed, and copyrighted may be made by a subsequent writer in making and composing a new book upon the same subject, and without regard to whether the first book is wholly original or partly made up of selections.

Of course permission may be secured to make extracts or use any part of the book or article and this may be done without violating or lessening the force of the copyright.

The question of infringement is rather an involved one. There must be a copying in whole or in part. A similarity alone does not make one an infringement of the other. A public reading or recitation, for example, of a copyrighted work is not an infringement of the copyright, though the presentation of a copyrighted play may be.

Fraud is not essential. If a copyright has been in fact violated, good intention is immaterial, though innocence may have a bearing on the question of fair use, especially where the amount taken was small. The amount of the matter appropriated is important but it is not always of material importance. The value of the material taken, the importance of it to the sale of the original work, is often the vital factor in deciding questions of infringement. The question is after all whether a material and substantial part of the prior work has been taken, and to what extent will the use made prejudice the sale, diminish the profit, or supersede the popularity of the original work.

Extractions and quotations are taken as a matter of course for purposes of criticism, comment, or illustration, and considerable license is allowed for such purposes; for such use is usually beneficial rather than injurious. Extracts or quotations for other purposes may be made, but the limit of permissible use is much more narrow than in the case of criticism and comment.

The above is presented, showing in a general way the underlying principles, for the reason that the cases concerning prints and engravings are quite limited in number. A substantial copy of a print or engraving will be sufficient to constitute an infringement, but there can be no infringement unless there has been an adoption of the essential features.

The owner of a copyright in a printed engraving in both England and America is protected against any reproduction without regard to the mode in which the reproduction is effected. Thus a lithographic reproduction of a painting is an infringement. A tableau or living picture does not constitute an infringement, but a photograph of a tableau vivant founded upon a painting may properly be found to be an infringement.

A reasonable consideration shows no basic difference between the law in the United States and in England. The principles governing are the same. The use of a picture from some copyrighted book may depend on whether the picture itself is an original, whether it is of a subject that could not justly be reproduced, and the question may very well turn on the factor that the picture or cut has not been separately copyrighted, that its use with credit would tend to promote the sale of the book and be rather beneficial than the reverse. However, in case of doubt one can usually receive permission for such use either from the publishers or from the author through the publishers. For as already indicated, when credit is given, the effect is beneficial rather than the reverse.

The fact that credit is given would show good intent, but does not entirely prevent the use from being an infringement. On the other hand, we would reemphasize that extracts may be made for purposes of criticism and review and that extracts may be made in other textbooks on the same subject, of course in such cases giving credit. There would seem, therefore, some reason to suppose that the use of the picture or cut as a slide along with other similar slides, the whole work or lecture being original, may as a rule be found to be permissible. That is, where the author of the lecture secures a number of slides from a variety of sources in producing a new composition, namely, his lecture.

If he thus uses a cut, of course he is the one responsible if there is any question of infringement. However, in case of doubt the matter may be readily resolved by asking and securing permission for use. S. A. B.

The Distribution of Wealth

For years the statement has been circulated that 1 per cent of the people own 60 per cent to 90 per cent of the wealth. This statement purports to be based on authority, and through frequent repetition has secured credence, according to the American Bar Association Journal.

More recently W. I. King, basing his conclusion on partial investigation, has declared that 60 per cent of the wealth is in the hands of 2 per cent of the population. But in fact, there never has been any such general and comprehensive survey of the distribution of wealth as would warrant an exact statement. The conclusions above are open to criticism on account of the meager data on which they are based. The probate record and tax records do not afford sufficient basis for the final conclusion on the distribution of wealth.

The probate records are defective because of the custom of depreciating the value of estates, because many small estates, consisting of personal property are divided without probate; because many estates are distributed in whole or in part prior to death; because small estates are quite commonly disposed of by deeds delivered at the death of the owner, and we may add to this list several other reasons. Where a man and his wife own property by estate in the entirety, such property does not go into the probate court. Where the property is community property, it goes to the survivor. Property is also transferred in trust. In fact, we personally have never known of an estate in which the probate records adequately set forth the value of the estate, not because of a depreciation of the items listed, but because of transfers made before death, or the manner in which the property was held. Even in the case of real estate, families have many times held the property for a term of years until cleared by the ordinary statutes of limitations, and have then issued deeds.

The tax records are not reliable, both because of depreciation of value, and because of exemption of large classes of property such as mortgages, government security, and corporation stock, and because of the unequal appraisement of property.

Nevertheless, this Journal of the American Bar Association adds, the income tax, land probate records, tax records, and other sources of information seem to afford, on the whole, a fair basis for the inference that 50 per cent of the total wealth is owned by 2 per cent of the people; at least, that such a statement is somewhere near accurate, though this is only an approximation. But 2 per cent of the people is some two million families. For ordinarily criminals, insane persons, and infants are not expected to own property. Quite commonly the title to property is fixed in the head of the family. There are something more than twenty million heads of families in the United States who might normally be expected to be property owners, so it is less startling to suggest that two million, or 10 per cent, of those who might be expected to hold wealth, hold 50 per cent of the wealth of the country.

Again, there has been much discussion with regard to compound interest permitted to run for a thousand years, but such has never happened, or anywhere near happened in the memory of man. Natural law has prevented any family from retaining wealth for a long period of years, or for more than a few generations. Furthermore, the law of the land has developed several devices to equalize distribution. For example, the income tax, and the inheritance tax, and insurance.

The Crime of War

February 14, 1922, may yet go down in history as one of the greatest importance for the race. On that day Senator Borah introduced a resolution of which Current Opinion quotes the following as the central portion:

"That war between nations should be outlawed as an institution for the settlement of international controversies by making it a public crime under the law of nations, and that every nation should be encouraged by solemn agreement or treaty to bind itself to indict and punish its own international war breeders or instigators and war profiteers. . . ."

It has long been the habit of Christian people to speak of war as criminal, and even so great a military leader as Marshall Foch has declared, "War in itself and for itself is the greatest crime in the world. The world is made for peace and for work in peace time." General Sherman in the Civil War described it more tersely when he said that "war is hell."

In this last statement General Sherman may be approximately correct, but however correct in theory the statement may be it is not in fact true that war is at present criminal. It is wrong; it is sinful; but it is still recognized as a legitimate method of settling national disputes. Much as it may be denounced, war has never been made unlawful or criminal.

It is fortunate that people speak of it as being criminal, for it raises the hope that there may be enough peace-loving people to make it in fact criminal. Piracy on the high seas, though immoral, was for a long period permissible, and governments frankly fitted out privateers. Piracy has, however, been made criminal by agreement of the nations.

The slave trade, as Current Opinion also points out, was always inhuman and barbarous but it is only in recent years that it has been made a crime and so has largely disappeared. Senator Borah therefore continues, "Why should war, the most stupendous wrong, the most searching and destructive curse of mankind, be permitted to wear the crown of legality, the shield of legitimacy?" Even the disarmament program, while it limited the building of certain types of battleships has only intensified preparedness in other bellicose types so that the armament race continues. A large part of the taxes of Europe are still to provide for the immediate national defense and hundreds of millions are spent in the United States for present and future defense, quite aside from the debt incurred by past wars. In fact, in the last three years twelve nations of Europe have resorted to war to settle disputes even though they had on paper accepted the creed of arbitration.

But this resolution of Senator Borah proposes definitely three things: the codification of international law; a world court with much greater powers than are possessed by the present permanent court of international justice; and the declaration by all nations that war is criminal.

The first, the codification of international law, is a difficult, and will doubtless prove a tedious task though it must be attempted and done if civilization is to progress or even if civilization is to hold its own. It will take years to accomplish it but that is no reason why it should not be undertaken.

The second proposal, the widening of powers, will no doubt be a gradual evolution as international law develops. Such widening of powers will be necessary if the court is to function fully.

The third is after all the crucial proposition and may be the one most difficult though not from any intellectual or spiritual or moral point of view. An enlightened public opinion can come to no other conclusion though it may take an enlightened public opinion to force the governments of the old school to entertain the idea and to put it into effect. If the question is put squarely before the nations of the earth it is difficult to see how they can evade the issue, for it is only a declaration of that which is already admitted by most of them in current speech that war is criminal. If so it should be clearly made and declared to be so.

Are Emotions Traceable to Glands?

The origin of the emotions has been the cause of much speculation on the part of psychology in the past but until recently little has been attempted in the way of scientific investigation.

Doctor Joseph S. Hughes, in an address before the biochemical division of the American Chemical Society, made some startling announcements of a demonstration of the theory that emotions are traced to the glands.

He says we do not inherit a sweet or disagreeable disposition but instead we receive certain glands which are capable of secretions causing corresponding reactions in emotions. By injecting chemical substances into these glands we may, he declares, readily change the disposition of any individual.

This is the first evidence we have of experimentation with the emotions which indicate results. How successful or dependable they are is yet doubtful but we may all rest assured that if Doctor Hughes' work bears fruit we may yet acquire those angelic dispositions for which we are so much in need.

The Religious Force of Youth To-day

From the Literary Digest of May 29 the following, credited to Doctor William E. Gardner, secretary of the Department of Religious Education in the Episcopal Church. Doctor Gardner believes that the flapper is religious and that we should direct rather than discredit youth. He suggests that the attitude of youth to-day may after all prove beneficial to the race in its unfettering of the shackles of the past, that there will come a better realization of the truth. Doctor Gardner continues:

"The ways of thinking on the Bible and religion are unfettered, and there are signs that we shall have a rush, like those of the gold-mining days, of youthful intellect toward the most fruitful and least-known field of human thought, the field of religion.

"The genius of religion is that it must be conserved and passed on to the next generation. The genius of youth is that it must adapt that religion to its own needs, if there is to be growth in truth.

"The reinterpretation of religion is much needed to-day. It is no new situation in history. Whenever doctrines or religious customs cannot be interpreted to hold the interest of youth, the end of those doctrines and customs is in sight. If they have no vital truth they become side eddies in the stream of human interest. If they have vital truth, youth finds it and clothes it in new phrases and figures and stories, and makes it an asset in human endeavor. The turning of youth toward the church—the seeking of its message of power for right—is creating a second reformation in religious thinking. There is no Luther nailing questions to the church door. Instead, there is a youth movement in religion. Our boys and girls will cause changes in the church's ideas and teachings more radical than those of the Protestant reformation.

"Youth is searching for the power that Christianity has always had, the power that can be applied every day. More than ever to-day youth detests selfishness, injustice, and war of every kind. The young do not think so much about the wrong and evil in these things as we do; they think they are foolish and unnecessary curses.

"The youth of the world to-day are hunting for truth more than they were twenty years ago, and they are interested in non-material objectives of life because world events compel them to that kind of an interest. Most of the inhabited parts of the world are explored. The adventures of life are no longer in discovering countries. The adventures of the future, youth knows, are in the realm of ideas. Every boy and every girl with ambition knows that success depends more on morals and mind than on muscle.

"Everywhere boys and girls are looking for spiritual power. They may call it by different names, but they seek spiritual power. They will find the power they need in religion where mankind has found it throughout the ages."

Then on the other hand the Portland Oregonian takes direct issue with the above and says that such a position is not conducive either to progress or reform.

"The fact is that the sound thinking of the world has never been the product of youth, aside from an occasional and luminous genius. Old men for council, and young men for war. It would appear self-evident that our youthful theorists, scarcely able as yet to cope with the business of earning their way through the world, are not to be trusted with the rather particular matter of moral revolution. The conventions restrain and irritate them. They assail the conventions as stupid and tyrannical, the product of a primitive state of society. A dozen years from now these same flaming young reformers of to-day, their zeal somewhat abated, will have taken glad refuge in the conventions, as a wanderer welcomes a roof and a fireside. Confident of this, even their severest critics have minimized the peril of their recalcitrant opinions."

For success in the work of society, whether of the church or any other part, or of the whole, it would seem quite probable that the plan already laid down that society consists of both young and old would in the long run prove to be the best possible arrangement. Certainly the vision, the enthusiasm, the zeal of youth is needed for progress. Certainly the wisdom, the experience, and the dreams of the aged are needed for safety. Also there is needed the cooperation and strength of those of middle age to do the work of the present day. While they envision the future, while they dream of the past, on the parents of to-day, those of middle age, rests the responsibility for carrying on the work of to-day.

The Menace of the Sermon

The sermon should teach the word of God and lead the hearers nearer to him.

In a recent article in the Yale Review, Doctor Francis E. Clark insists that the sermon is proving a hindrance rather than a help to the church because so much attention is paid to it that it is approaching sermon idolatry. One of the first questions asked a Protestant church concerning a prospective pastor is, Can he preach? not with regard to his helpfulness or godliness or devotion. So he brings forth his best sermons at first but the people soon tire.

The real purpose, Doctor Clark insists, should be worship, that the church buildings should be erected with such beauty as to inspire a feeling of worship. The building should convey the thought that it is the house of God in its architecture, construction, and interior ornamentation. The hymns and Scripture readings and all portions of the service should be conducive to the sense of worship. The church should not be built for a lecture platform primarily nor the service simply for a setting for the sermon. But the sermon itself should be a portion of the public worship.

Frederick Lynch, in the Christian Work, comments with much approval on Doctor Clark's article, that the sermon should be but one incident of the service even though an outstanding part. But its purpose should be primarily for the worship of God. To-day with our freedom of thought, many books and magazines of religion as well as secular topics, but few will go to church to hear the average Protestant preacher, so he agrees that the church building should be primarily for worship. Whatever type will be conducive to reverence should be followed in the main structure. The windows and furnishings should follow the law of highest beauty rather than convenience for discourse. It should be the house of God rather than the house of the minister.

Again he suggests that the service should be of a common order in which the whole congregation participates. They should not be shaped as a preliminary or as looking toward the sermon. They should deal with the great religious obligations reaching toward God. In too many Protestant churches the minister is more prominent than God. He reads, he prays, he speaks, and in some places does most of the singing. It would be well if the people would do more of their praying and more attention should be given to the music, not as a concert to be listened to by the people, but as a voice of the people raised in praise. The service, in other words, should direct their thought to God and arouse within them the desire for a closer relationship.

His third suggestion is that the Lord's Supper is made too incidental in the average Protestant church. It should be made, not the tag end of the service but a whole service and the most solemn of the month. The trouble is that some Protestants are inclined to act as though the Lord were no more at the Lord's supper than in the restaurant across the road. The church should be made to feel his visible presence even if they do not follow the example of the Scotch minister and place a vacant chair for his presence at the communion table.

Finally the sermon should be made a part of the service of worship and not an individual expression of the preacher's opinion on every topic under the sun. Less stress should be put on the sermon as the discussion of a topic, more stress upon it as instruction in the teaching of the Bible and in the teaching of the word of God and the doctrines of the church. The question then should be, not how striking a sermon can he preach, but how deeply versed is he in the word of God and the teachings of the church. Does he understand music and reverent service? Does he feel himself the shepherd to all of the people? Doctor Lynch suggests as have others that the advertisement of church services may be the most outstanding evidence of decline and that the character of some church advertisements leave very much to be desired.

As to our own church, we always have made the sacrament service one of dignity, a thing apart. We believe as a rule that we do feel the presence of the Lord. We are also striving for more of worship and of congregational singing, but it is a query whether our sermons as a whole are predominantly reverent or if there is not a growing tendency to lecture on scientific themes, to give book reviews, and to discuss kindred topics on which the speaker expresses his opinion.

We think we are safe in saying that most of our ministers to-day feel reverently the responsibility of standing in the sacred desk before the people, to speak on behalf of God, and are earnestly striving to convert themselves and others to better living, and make all feel the presence of God. It should be so. While the church should be strong for religious education it should be first of all for reverent worship of God and to bring to its membership that feeling of personal relationship and of communion. It is not enough that we be convinced that the pastor has this divine touch. The people should be brought to feel their own divine possibilities and duties before God.

United States and World Affairs

The World Peace Foundation, the Church Peace Union, and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ of America have held some forty meetings in the larger cities of the country on behalf of American cooperation with the other nations of the world. One speaker has taken up the general situation, the other has discussed in more detail the League of Nations, the World Court, the Near East situation and the occupation of the Ruhr. They have gone out thus two by two and report, according to the Christian Work, a great deal of interest and enthusiasm which has been rather increased by President Harding's letter urging that the United States should join the World Court.

The object of the campaign is not directly to urge entrance into the League, but to urge the people to consider, taking it for granted that they believe in the United States participation in world affairs.

Penalties for Crime

So much has been written of late from a medical point of view concerning the need for care and treatment of criminals that it is rather of interest to note in the American Bar Association Journal for September, 1921, an article by Marcus A. Kavanaugh, judge of the superior court of Cook County, Illinois.

Judge Kavanaugh refers directly and repeatedly to the idea often set forth that the criminal is mentally deficient and therefore deserves special consideration at the hands of society. With this he takes direct issue and emphasizes the need of protecting society against habitual wrongdoers. The criminals now in jail are costing around $45,000,000 for mere food and keeping, while they cost three times that much to watch, pursue, and convict, and cost about the same larger amount in waste and breakage of property they have needlessly occasioned. This does not take into consideration the misery, terror, and physical suffering caused to innocent people. This indicates a financial cost of somewhere near $450,000,000. Yet, as Judge Wadhams is reported as saying, one third of the inmates of our prisons are repeaters and the more skillful are not caught. It is only the duller who are, as a rule, convicted. A study, therefore, of prisoners alone affords no real clew as to the average intelligence of the criminals.

Judge Kavanaugh has visited many prisons. In preparation for this paper he addressed a questionnaire to the heads of sixty-five of the great prisons of this country. While accurate records are not kept as yet, he reaches the conclusion that the percentage of repeaters is very much larger. The criminals with whom society must seriously contend is not the accidental violator of an ordinance but the predatory outlaw.

To meet the situation it is necessary that fitly measured penalties be assigned and that punishment should follow swiftly after the act. The greatest evil in criminal administration in America to-day is the numerous continuances before trial.

The social student, in making a close study of the criminal, is moved first of all by sympathy for the under dog, forgetting that it is the under dog who started the fight and brought on his own trouble. It is quite true that as a rule the criminal had but little education, because education requires work, and he will not work. Bruce Thompson is quoted as saying that nine tenths of the criminals are above the average in intelligence. Judge Kavanaugh states that this is also his belief. In our sympathy for the under dog we do not want to forget a just sympathy for the peace officer or policeman whose life is in danger many times in the pistol battle at midnight. When a man has repeated a predatory crime it becomes a serious question to society whether he should be given another opportunity. The result of social pressure in recent years is to make the penitentiary more desirable in some ways than boarding school in time off, provision for moving pictures, ball games, operas, etc.

Judge Kavanaugh insists that the criminal is not a mental defective upon the whole, that the first object of all criminal justice is to make the lives, persons, and property of law-abiding persons safe. The first object is not the care of the evildoer or even the reform of the evildoer. Our reformatories are often misnamed, because the hardened criminals are nearly all mixed with the unhardened. He has looked the criminal in the face through twenty-five years on the bench and fifteen years at the bar, and says frankly that the criminal is just the ordinary citizen, you or me, but is lazy, selfish, and cruel. He is not insane and is no mystery. The professional criminal shows no real stigmata except an aversion to work. If you can teach him the value and joy of work he is no longer an outlaw. Heredity, aside from parental example, has practically nothing to do with the matter, and he quotes Doctor Healy as coming to the same conclusion after testing a thousand offenders.

It is not only folly, but should be criminal to call any child a criminal, for any man may become a criminal and even come to look like a criminal. Take the American Bar Association and make them sit together with cropped heads; dress them in prison uniform; don them with four days' growth of beard, or if you prefer, take a convocation of bishops in some church to which we do not ourselves belong, or take the House of Representatives in Washington, or the House of Lords in England and give them the right treatment and you will have a good picture of criminals in the gross.

Crime is more a matter of disposition than of mentality. Some weak-minded men have evil dispositions, but not because they are weak minded. The difference would be that the duller minded will more poorly judge his chances. But the weak intellect is more easily dealt with by penalty. Nor is family environment really as great an influence as is often imagined. Frequently, if not usually, the criminal has an honest father and mother and honest brothers and sisters. He, the cleverest in the family, the pride, the most petted, indulged, and pitied, becomes the most vicious. Of course environment and family play a large part.

It is as well that we should consider this, as well as every other question, from every point of view. A great deal has been written, and some have been published in our columns, concerning the mental deficiency of the criminal. It is well to take into consideration all of the evidence available.

Judge Kavanaugh favors avoiding sending a man or woman to prison if it is practicable to do so. If men or women have a good record and are only guilty of an ordinary offense, not a predatory, and who is truly repentant should be paroled, but this never applies to the unrepentant. The one who, though guilty, fights to the last ditch needs his legacy. Otherwise we have only contempt for the law. Children in real reformatories may have a good chance, but never should a hardened criminal be sent there and be permitted to associate with them. Once a man is sent to prison, that disgrace is forever lost, after a return, upon his action, but we must remember that first of all the responsibility of the law is to protect the lives and persons of the innocent; secondly, to reform the criminal and help him so far as possible.

Music Renews the Hope of Human Derelicts

Bowery Mission in New York recognizes spiritual and therapeutic value of melody.

The Bowery Mission, one of the largest missions on New York's famous Bowery, has for twenty-one years been giving weekly concerts for the benefit of the human derelicts who attend its meetings.

"In our work music plays a great part," said Doctor Hallimond, superintendent of the mission. "The men who come to us are fighting a big fight. To them music is as stimulating as to soldiers on a battlefield. They come to us, many of them, tired, discouraged, disheartened. The concerts cheer them, the music renews their courage; it gives them a great uplift.

"Music liberates the imagination. It makes a man dream dreams and see visions. It renews hope. It is a proved fact that concerts have a spiritual and therapeutic value in our work."

Strangely enough jazz and popular music make no appeal to the thousands of "down and outs" who drift into the Bowery Mission. They prefer to hear the great classics and seem to appreciate and be helped by programs that would appeal to thorough musicians. To a typical Bowery Mission audience, it has been noticed, the subtle strains of the violin and the mellow notes of the piano make a stronger appeal than the voice and words, no matter how beautiful.

"Music is the one thing one can give without being patronizing," Doctor Hallimond explained. "No matter how kindly and tactfully one gives food, clothing, money, or shelter there is always the suggestion of charity in a gift to the unfortunate. Not so with music. It is a gift that can be given to rich and poor alike. Then, too, music is impartial; for it is a direct gift to everyone in a large audience. And for those two reasons, if for no others, it has inestimable value in the work of the mission."

At present Doctor Hallimond has more than 500 famous names on his list of great artists who have given music to the men at the Bowery Mission and with few exceptions those who have been there have asked to be permitted to come again.

In giving of their art the musicians get something valuable themselves. It is inspiring to see and feel the effect of music on the hopeless and discouraged. It is very different to play to the men at the mission than to an audience of critical and blasé concert goers. It is genuinely inspiring, because through music's power the successful and the unfortunate of the world meet understandingly.

Education and National Defense

An encouraging item appears in The Outlook for May 23, 1923 concerning the expenditures for National defense. Secretary Weeks answers an attack which accuses the Government of spending eighty-five per cent if its budget for war and only two per cent for research, education, and development. Mr. Weeks points out that the National Government is not responsible for education, this being left to the States, counties, and municipalities. The interesting thing is that the latest available figures show that more than twice as much was expended for education as for the army and navy. Of the appropriations to the army nearly $43,000,000 goes to improvement of rivers and harbors and more than $4,000,000 to the maintenance of the Panama Canal, all of which indicates that the general statements we often see are misleading when the facts are analyzed.

Kansas Editor Says Bible Furnished Good Copy

After printing a weekly serial from the Bible for three months, Arthur J. Carruth, managing editor of the Topeka Journal, declares that the publication of the Bible has proved to be the greatest success of any feature ever printed by the State Journal. Moreover, it is being read by many subscribers as faithfully as would be the installments of a popular novel, Carruth states.

"The publication of the Bible serially has had a marvelous effect," said Mr. Carruth. "It has shown that the subscribers are sincere in their demand for reading matter of a religious character, and also has shown to the public that the newspapers do not print only the sensational, that they do not attempt to appear primarily to the masses and that they do not neglect church."

As an indication of the interest taken in the publication of the Bible, Mr. Carruth stated he had received inquiries from every State in the Nation, many letters from Canada, and a number of communications from foreign countries. A number of Kansas newspapers have taken up the publication of the Bible since the Journal started it, Mr. Carruth stated. He said that out of about sixty ministers in Topeka he had received communications from all, and that in only two or three cases had they criticized the publication.—Publishers' Review.

President Briggs informs us that the music department of Graceland College was this spring recognized by the State as fully accredited, so diplomas were granted this year for the first time which carry the right of teacher's certificate in public school music. This was the only department which had not been fully accredited, so now every department is up to the standard. In fact the college ranked this spring among the three highest junior colleges in the United States.

Zion Builders

By E. P. Darnell

Hear the call, O youths of Zion,
That is ringing forth to-day;
From the hearts of countless millions
That have missed the narrow way—
See the blood that flows like rivers
From whole nations that are slain—
People wondering if God liveth; if
"Peace on earth" was spoke in vain.

Turn their faces, youths of Zion!
From the scenes of this earth's life,
To the city you are building,
That is free from lust and strife.
Tell them, Zion Builders, tell them
That from God's eternal throne
Angels with the gospel message
Through the midst of heaven have flown

Granting men the gifts and blessings
That they had in days of old,
Ushering in the dispensation
That by prophets was foretold;
When upon his youths and maidens
His Holy Spirit he'd pour out,
Causing them to sense his nearness,
Prophecy and sing and shout.

Zion Builders, heed the message;
God and man both wait on you,
And the work that lies before you
No one else but you can do.
Hasten to the work, ye builders,
Let my gospel be your sword,
Till all nations hear the message
"Peace on earth," thus saith the Lord.

LETTERS AND NEWS

History of the Irvington Branch, 1864-1923

During the early summer of 1864, Elder E. H. Webb, doing missionary work among the scattered Saints living in Alameda County, California, baptized Roswald R. Dana August 4, 1864, also H. G. Whitlock, and November 10, 1864, Mr. D. P. Young was also baptized with several others whose names were not mentioned.

May 14, 1865, Elder R. R. Dana baptized Joel Edmonds and several others whose names are not mentioned. All were living along the Alameda Creek.

Elder E. C. Briggs was sent as missionary in charge, and he organized a branch of 14 members on May 21, 1865. Joel Edmonds was elected president, calling it the Alameda Creek Branch.

At that time Irvington was called Washington Corners, and was church headquarters for the missionaries; and Joseph, Alexander, and David Smith, W. W. Blair, James W. Gillen, Thomas Daily, D. S. Mills, and many others made this their main stopping place.

October, 1865, Elder E. C. Briggs baptized many of the members of the original church of Nauvoo, and among them were Simeon Stivers and wife.

In 1867 steps were taken to build a meeting place, and William Horner, never a member, but very friendly to the church, with Brother Hopkins, donated a half-acre lot.

Earl Marshall and Simeon Stivers were elected trustees, and donations were received from a few of the members and friends; then a church was built, and in 1894 was accidentally destroyed by fire. The lot still belongs to the Irvington Branch and the district has created a cookhouse, dining-room, and elders' house, to be used at reunions.

Elders J. Edmonds, D. P. Young, E. Marshall, D. S. Mills, S. B. Robinson, and others presided over the branch in their turn.

In 1872, 68 members were on the branch record, but many moved to Iowa and other places. Branches were organized, so the membership began to decline.

After 1878 meetings were held irregularly, because of the lack of elders, till Heman C. Smith came and arranged for some one to come each month.

Elder Thomas Daily held a series of meetings in 1890 and baptized a few. Later, Thomas W. Smith preached some, also C. A. Parkin and George S. Lincoln came and preached, and administered to their wants.

June 6, 1900, F. B. Blair advised changing the name to Irvington Branch, as that was the name of the town, and E. S. Chase presided from June 3, 1900, to December 30, 1906.

In 1907, J. A. Saxe was elected president, and T. Cook priest, and on July 18, 1909, Elder J. A. Saxe moved to San Francisco, leaving Priest T. Cook in charge. This office he held till his death, September 30, 1910.

Elder J. A. Anthony and different ones came from month to month, administering the sacrament and feeding the flock, keeping them alive.

November, 1916, J. A. Saxe and E. S. Parks of San Francisco were elected elder and priest, and John Driver of Irvington was elected deacon.

December, 1920, Elder J. A. Saxe asked to be released, and recommended Priest E. S. Parks to preside. The Saints were meeting in the dining room on the lot used by the reunion, and E. S. Parks asked the Saints if they would meet in the Christian Church if they would allow us that privilege, and after consideration and discussion, Sister Horner was elected committee of one to see Doctor Durham, trustee, and report back. Doctor Durham is very friendly to our cause there, and he said we could use it at the eleven o'clock hour each Sunday. Brothers Bert and Charley Cook furnished the Union Sunday School with wood, and this keeps the room warm for the Saints. E. S. Parks is busy with tracts, and visiting from door to door, teaching the people our faith, with the hope of making many friends and members to the cause of Christ.

Factories have been built and new homes erected to house the people coming in to work in these places.

The harvest is ripe and white with promise, but the laborers are few.

The fall conferences and reunions, have been held there regularly since 1891, with few exceptions, at Santa Cruse, San Jose, Sacramento, and Bushrod Park, Oakland.

God has poured out his Spirit in great power at reunions there from time to time, advising the Saints to improve and beautify the grounds and he would bless them.

About 1910 the greatest manifestation of power and light was given about one a. m. Not a star to be seen and a thick heavy black cloud hovered over the trees and one could not see the white school yard fence across the street so thick and black darkness, but on the half-acre lot where the tents and tabernacle were one could see a pin shining ten feet away, and many who were baptized that day said they heard a quartet of angels singing in the trees or above the tents.

Sister J. M. Terry, Sister Grace Hartsough, Kenneth Richmond, and many others were awake and dressed themselves, and went out of their tents and were eyewitnesses of this wonderful display of God's power and light.

Elder J. D. White, our district president, and Bishop Edward Ingham have purchased the Irvington school just across the street from the church property, with its two or three acres of school yard. It has several sheds, five or six flush toilets, several sanitary drinking fountains, and desirable features to make the place worth while.

The spring conference voted that the district presidency and bishopric be given power to make necessary improvements on the property, that it may be used at the fall conference and reunion. Brother White is there this week getting things in order.

The Saints and residents of Irvington are a good and desirable people, and one enjoys being in their midst. There is also a marked degree of the Spirit at the services, which is evidence of their Christian conduct, good behavior, and unity.

In 1921 there were over one hundred tents in the school yard alone; in 1922 there was no reunion held in the district, but we are looking forth to see the largest reunion ever in 1923, July 19 to 29.

All will receive a hearty welcome this year in Irvington. Make a sacrifice and trust God to do what you cannot do, and you will surely receive a blessing. Come all.

Very sincerely yours,

EMERY S. PARKS, Pastor.

Campbell Is Made President

We have recently learned that Macy Campbell has been rightly honored by being made president of the Iowa State Teachers' College. His work there on behalf of the rural schools has been highly praised. He gained his education by his own hard work and self-denial, working a few years, then attending school for a year, and in this manner he has gradually made himself competent to hold any position in the educational field. He is a son of Duncan Campbell, who was for many years one of the seven presidents of seventy.

Work in the Kirtland Temple

This writing finds us in the little village of Kirtland, the first headquarters of the church. We came from our home in Joliet, traveling by automobile, with the intention of going east as far as the Atlantic coast. Being free from missionary appointment, as we had supposed, we decided to head toward the East, holding revival services in different branches en route where our services might be required. But a request coming from the powers that be to care for the temple this summer changed our plans, and we are quite satisfied with the change.

We left home May 9 and drove to Toledo, where we were prevailed upon to stop over and hold a few services. A large audience greeted us the evening of our arrival, and the good Spirit was present. At the close of the meeting I was near the front door, being introduced to strangers and shaking hands with friends, when, in order to make room for some one to pass, and not knowing that the stairs leading to the basement were directly back of me, I stepped backward and went headlong down the flight of stairs, landing in a heap at the bottom. Of course I was hurt, but not as badly as I had reason to expect. After remaining nearly a week in bed I was able to continue the journey, reaching Kirtland on May 17.

We were kindly cared for at the home of Brother and Sister Eben Curry until we secured rooms at the hotel opposite the temple, where we are now nicely located. My wife and I enjoy our work at the temple very much. We have visitors every day through the week, and on Sunday they come in crowds. Last Sunday we had more than two hundred and fifty visitors in the afternoon, really more than we could do justice to in explaining the gospel. A brother came to our assistance, however, taking charge of the upstairs, while Sister Pitt acted as doorkeeper, asking the visitors to register. She explains the distinctive features of the Reorganized Church, that we are not the Mormons, etc., gives out literature, and shows the visitors into the main auditorium where I give a short lecture, and a more lengthy one when time will permit.

First I tell the time the temple was erected, 1833-1836, when the church had its headquarters located here, then the meaning of the four pulpits located on the east and west ends of the room. The four at the east end represent the Aaronic priesthood, seating the presiding bishop and his two counselors, the presiding priest and his counselors, the presiding teacher and the presiding deacon and their counselors. A short explanation is then given as to the duties of these officers.

The west pulpits seat members of the Melchisedec order, the presidents and their counselors. We then explain the use of the veils or curtains let down from the ceiling to divide the quorums when more than one is in session. Attention is then called to the five orders of architecture in the room—the Roman Doric, Corinthian, Egyptian, Colonial, and Gothic, and how all are made to harmonize, suggesting that all believers should be in harmony and not oppose each other.

We then tell them of the years the temple was uncared for, owing to the death of the Prophet, who was killed by a mob in Carthage, Illinois, in 1844, causing a disorder in the church and a departure of a part of the church under the leadership of Brigham Young, and his introduction of polygamy and other doctrines entirely foreign to the original doctrine of the church, thereby bringing disgrace upon the entire body. Then is explained the Reorganization under the leadership of Joseph Smith, eldest son of the Prophet, by those who refused to follow Young, the son taking his father's place as president of the Reorganized Church in 1860.

When the question arose as to the ownership of the property formerly owned by the original church, the courts were appealed to and the findings of the court of common pleas, Lake County, Ohio, of February 23, 1880, decided that the Reorganized Church was in true succession to the original church and identical in faith and practice with the teachings of Joseph Smith the Prophet, therefore was entitled to all its property and legal rights. Following this we took possession of the temple in 1880 and put it in its present state of repairs.

We then tell them the real purpose of the church is to prepare a people for the Lord's return to the earth, whose coming we look for soon, and that God's purpose in restoring the gospel was that Christ might find the same church in organization, in doctrine, and in power as the one he left on earth after his resurrection. We then call attention to the organization having within it apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, etc., then to the doctrine of Christ, as recorded in Hebrews 6. We also call attention to the gifts of the Spirit as recorded in 1 Corinthians 12: 7-10, and assure them that God has not changed, but when we return to the old paths and obey the same law Jesus established we will find God just as near to us and as willing to answer our prayers as he was to answer the prayers of those who lived eighteen hundred or nineteen hundred years ago, and give them the same spiritual blessings as the ancients received. If we have the time, we then tell them how the Lord will save all mankind, but every man in his own order, in some of the many mansions he has prepared for his children, thus proving God to be a God of love, as he would not be if he saved only a few good people and damned all the rest.

It is wonderful how well the people listen and how delighted most of them are with what we tell them. They are very much surprised to learn that we are not the people they thought we were. They thank us over and over again and seem pleased to give us their offering as a token of their appreciation. Some even ask us if an offering would be acceptable.

This temple is doing a work that no other institution in the church could do. We are able to preach to hundreds and even thousands who would not think of coming to our little chapels, and they come from all parts of the world. While they may never join the church, they carry away with them information that is bound to spread and do good in many unknown ways. We enjoy our work more than we are able to tell and only hope the Lord will give us wisdom and strength to make our work a success.

Saint Thomas, Ontario

On the first Sunday in May special services for the young people in the church were held.

Sunday school was as usual but was preceded by an early prayer service. There were about thirty-five present, and all but the very small children participated in the testimony meeting.

Sacrament service was at 11 a. m., and in the afternoon a program by the young people was presented, consisting of music, recitations, and speeches. One young man, Norman Brokenshire, was ordained in the morning and spoke in the afternoon, "getting into the harness" immediately, as he expressed it.

J. L. Burger preached in the evening on "The rich young man." The choir consisted of the young people.

Advantages of Owning a Building in Jerusalem

My previous illustrated article dealt with the experiences had in erecting a building, together with some of the details of construction. This article shows the advantages of owning a building. First we will deal with the financial advantage. To rent the Floyd House at $1,536 a year and pay for the repairs, which represent another good round sum, we could not afford. Sister Floyd told me a short time ago the rental of the Floyd House at the above sum did not much more than pay for the taxes, repairs, insurance, and incidental expenses.

Suppose we subtract the cost of insurance and taxes, which are about $168, then discount the balance 50 per cent. It would leave $684. Add this to the rental price and it totals $2,220 a year.

Our present new building and land represent an investment of $15,000, or $900 at 6 per cent. Add $150 for repairs and you have a total of $1,050 as compared with $2,220. Thus we save $1,170 a year and have a building designed for our needs. Depreciation on this building does not represent over $25 a year. Subtract this sum, and it leaves $1,145. If you rent a house in this city, the cost of repairs falls to the tenant; this is an old established custom, and difficult for an American to understand. After four months of correspondence with his Excellency, Governor of Jerusalem, and considerable determination, we were able to obtain an exemption from taxation for a period of eighteen months, and if the laws effecting churches and schools do not change during this period a further exemption will undoubtedly be granted.

Location

Our mission is located inside the present boundaries of Jerusalem. (See map accompanying.) We are just seven minutes' walk from the Floyd House, our old location, and twenty minutes from Jaffa Gate. We are not isolated. On the other side of the street, houses are numerous. The marks on the map opposite the mission house represent houses. King George Boulevard, twenty meters wide and considered the principal street in Jerusalem, now in construction, is five minutes walk from the mission house. The Old Ain Kerim Road connects us with this boulevard. Touching the front corner of our land is a new twelve-meter road which runs past the new British high school and on to the railroad station.

Central location counts for very little here. Wonderful sermons do not attract the people. Each church is attended by its school pupils, missionaries, teachers, and other employees of the mission. If one of these people discovers more light in another church and desires to unite with it, his allowance is cut off at once: Churches here resemble colonies. We must colonize or we fail. At present our members are a target for sectarian arrows, and persecution. We must own land and buildings to colonize. Eventually we must engage in business so as to give our members an opportunity to earn a living. Our business establishments must be built on our own land. We have a good foundation now: Do not regret a move in the right direction and do not find fault with President Smith for making this move, for Apostle T. W. Williams and the writer are equally responsible; and let me emphasize. If we had not bought land and built, our work would never have amounted to anything in this country. Our land is 83 feet front by 336 feet deep and we have room for expansion. People are not converted here in mass. It is personal contact, fireside talks, doing a kindly act. They are won through love. After we win them we must stick to them. This means colonization.

A Convert on the Outside of the Kingdom

Here is a picture of Leon Levy, a good, clean boy sixteen years of age. He believes our work with all his heart. His mother is a well-educated, honorable woman. She does not object to Leon becoming a member. Sister Passman and I visited her little home, consisting of one room and a small kitchen. We found it immaculate. Mrs. Levy is a member of the Karemite Church (a despised branch of the Jewish Church that does not believe in the Talmud). She said, "We receive this little house from our congregation and if they find out Leon has been baptized we will be put out, so go slow with the boy." Leon is our boy and we love him. We have persuaded him to learn typing. As soon as he can manipulate the machine, he will learn shorthand, then he will be able to earn a living for mother and self. It's a long time to wait when a boy wishes to join the church, but under the present conditions we must be patient.

Water, Air, Light

A good cistern is a valuable asset. Many of them take in sewerage soaked water. We drank much of this. Our present cistern does not; it is clean. Light and fresh air are also valuable assets. We have plenty of both, now, thank God! We taught as many as twenty-eight pupils in a room without a window in it. Now we have plenty of windows. Take off your coat, roll up your sleeves, come to Palestine and help push the work along. There is room for all to work here. One of my good friends in America sold his effects and moved to Zion. I wrote him to come over to Jerusalem and help us. He didn't come. Several men holding the priesthood, a baker, butcher, tailor, good carpenter, and tinner, could come here, earn a living and help in gospel work. Do we hear some saying, "I will go, Send me"?

Reunion Grounds Purchased in Australia

As a supplement to The Gospel Standard, published by the Saints in Rozelle, New South Wales, Australia, an illustrated pamphlet was recently distributed telling of the beauties of the reunion grounds about to be purchased.

Entitled "The call of Tiona reunion grounds," this tract advertizes shares in the grounds and contains a description of the location:

"The mission conference of 1922 authorized the formation of a company to buy 80 acres of land about 12 miles south of Tuncurry, and to develop it as a reunion ground. The place has been called Tiona, which is the Tahitian equivalent for Zion.

"The site is situated at the base of the peninsula of which Cape Hawke is the termination. On the eastern boundary there is a lovely beach, sheltered from southerly weather by Booty Headland. On the west is Wallis Lake. A more delightful spot it would be hard to find in all Australia.

"Ultimately it is proposed to erect cottages and other permanent buildings to accommodate visitors to the grounds, but for the present tents will be used. The charge for accommodation will be very reasonable."

Special reference is made to the reunion movement in America and its success. Reunions tend to improve the spiritual tone of the church. By extending over a week or more they give opportunity not only for spiritual activity and for business absolutely necessary for the reunion, but also for recreation and social intercourse so that those who attend may return home refreshed as a result.

Young people are drawn to the reunion, nor does the spirituality suffer because of the recreational features.

Missionaries Return From Islands

An account of the mission of Bishop A. V. Karlstrom and wife to the South Sea Islands was given in a recent issue of the Joplin Globe. The missionaries have just returned from three and a half years' work in this field and have many interesting stories to relate. In an interview with the press, the following was given:

"There is nothing of the savage instinct in the natives," Mr. Karlstrom said, 'for it has long since died out.

"They have given up their old ways of worshipping idols, in favor of the Christian belief.

"In the island group's capital, Papeete, Tahiti, the city has electric lights, five theaters, an ice plant, and other modern conveniences. It has a population of 5,000.'

"Wear Modern Clothes

"Persons in Papeete and the larger towns largely have discarded the breechcloth for clothing of American styles; the islanders as a whole are more or less civilized—perhaps the average runs about half civilized.'

"Mr. Karlstrom was accompanied on his mission by his wife, and both mastered the language of the island, speaking Tahitian fluently.

"The mission which took Mr. and Mrs. Karlstrom 3,600 miles southwest of San Francisco in the far Pacific was one to help out the financial status of the South Sea islanders. They directed their efforts in bringing them out of the state of bondage, which is much on the plane of the Peons of Mexico. The islands are under the French protectorate, with a French military governor in charge at the capital. The several hundred islands, most of which are only small coral formations, have a population of approximately 15,000 natives.

"Visit All of Islands

"Mr. and Mrs. Karlstrom visited all of the so-called society group of five islands, the Austral group of three, and the Tuamotu group of several hundred. The Tuamotu group is called the lower or dangerous archipelago group, and on some of the islands in the latter visited by them the natives had not seen a white man in seven or eight years.

"We were treated kindly wherever we went,' Mr. Karlstrom said, 'and saw no indication whatsoever of savagery.

"The chief occupations of the islanders are raising coconuts, preparing copra for shipment, and mother-of-pearl shell diving.

"Natives in the lower islands live in small villages. The islands are chiefly small rings of land of coral formation. Only small schooners can reach them.'

"Mr. Karlstrom was compelled to return to America because of ill health caused by exposure while traveling in small boats."

Walter W. Smith, church historian, who has been in the Independence Sanitarium, is recovering rapidly and will return to work in another week.

Independence

All eastern Jackson County has been invited to take part in the Fourth of July picnic on the Campus.

B. M. Houchens, chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, has announced the program for the celebration, starting with a parade which leaves the square at 9.30 Wednesday morning. It will end at the Campus, where the program for the day will follow.

Prizes will be given for the visitor bringing the largest family in one car, for the best decorated car in the parade, and for the best costumed clown under fifteen years of age.

Races will be started at 11 o'clock, including special events for the children and freak races for all.

Additional contests which will be provided are a tug of war, horseshoe pitching, bean bag game, and volley ball, with prizes for the winners of each contest.

The entertainment will include speaking by George H. Combs, jr., assistant prosecuting attorney, President F. M. Smith, and others. A band concert and Scout exhibit will also be given.

There will be baseball games at 10.30, 3, and 5 o'clock.

Dinner will be between 12 and 1 o'clock. Booths have been provided by the Laurel Club, where home-cooked food may be purchased for a small price.

At 9 o'clock in the evening a fireworks display will be put on by a company from Kansas City.

The cooperation of the Chamber of Commerce with the Laurel Club and church committees assures a big crowd and a splendid entertainment for all.

President G. N. Briggs, and Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds A. E. Bullard, of Graceland College, are in Independence for a few days.

Mr. James Houghton of Boston, has come to this city to work in the Department of Music until after General Conference.

Miss Helen Bootman, of Lamoni, is now in Independence where she will be occupied in the office of the Bishopric.

Mr. Max Carmichael, general Sunday school superintendent, passed through Independence on his way to visit several district reunions.

President F. M. McDowell also stopped at Independence for a few days preparatory to a tour of reunions.

Mr. J. A. Gunsolley of Graceland College and his wife spent a few days in this city. They have returned to Lamoni.

Sunday services in Independence were as follows: 11 a. m., sacrament at all the churches; Stone Church, 2.30 p. m. problems meeting, 8 p. m. preaching by Elder F. Henry Edwards; Englewood, preaching at 8 p. m., M. F. Gowell; Liberty Street, Paul M. Hanson at 8 p. m.; Walnut Park, R. V. Hopkins at 7.30.

The Book of Mormon lectures at the Stone Church each Friday evening by Elder L. E. Hills are attracting increasingly large attendance and developing good interest. The series will continue for some weeks, under the auspices of the Department of Recreation and Expression.

Joseph B. Tordoff announces that their Art Book Bindery has been moved to 2051 Central Street, Berkeley, California, and that his father, E. H. Tordoff, will devote his whole time to the restoration of old and rare books and photo-facsimile-reproduction and also fine arts binding.

Mrs. W. Fred Wamsley gave a recital in Kansas City on the evening of June 23. She was born in Independence but moved to Kansas City fifteen years ago. She attends the Central Church and is a member of the choir.

Kansas City Stake

The opening exercises for the new Grandview church were at 3 p. m. Sunday, June 24. Failure to receive the seats had postponed the opening to this date.

The principal addresses were by President J. A. Tanner and Bishop F. B. Blair. President Tanner spoke briefly but to the point, directing his remarks principally to the younger ones of the congregation who have labored so assiduously that the building might become a reality.

The building is of brick veneer construction and will comfortably seat two hundred people in the main auditorium and balcony. Folding chairs have been installed. A nicely arranged but not too large choir loft is across the east end, and just back of that, occupying a higher place, is the pulpit with seat for those in charge. To the rear of this, in a space that is also used for a rear vestibule but open to the auditorium, is the baptismal font. Dressing rooms are arranged to the right and left of the font. A small room is also provided which may be used as the pastor's study. In the east end is a beautiful window, showing the Savior in the garden. All the windows are of stained glass. At the front, to the right and the left of the entrance and in the right and left rear corners of the balcony, are classrooms. The basement is provided with raised platform and pulpit to be used for Sunday school. A heating plant, drinking fountain, wash room, and other sanitary conveniences have been installed.

At the morning service there were three baptized and confirmed at the 6.30 evening prayer service. Also at the morning service there were six children blessed. The Children's Day exercises were held at 11 a. m.

Elder Amos T. Higdon preached the first of a week's series at 7.45. He has held a two weeks' series of meetings at Malvern Hill, closing Friday night, June 22. Weather conditions were not favorable for good attendance.

Armourdale reports several baptisms lately.

Central Chicago

On April 29, H. P. W. Keir preached a very impressive sermon, using as a subject, "The parable of the ten talents," forcibly impressing the fact that each is held accountable for the things that are in the range of his possibilities; that God is satisfied with no less than our best, nor does he expect any more.

At the evening service the speaker was Elder F. Boehm of the First Chicago Branch, who used as his subject, "Have faith in God."

H. P. W. Keir gave a fitting address on Mothers' Day, and the choir rendered appropriate music.

On May 20 we were permitted to have with us Apostle F. Henry Edwards and his sister. He preached at 11 a. m. on, "Our need of men and women who do, as well as talk."

A mass meeting was held on May 21 to consider ways and means of either building a new church or improving the old one.

All services were in charge of the young people May 25, 26, and 27. The program Friday evening consisted of short talks by the young people telling of our missionary activities in foreign countries, interspersed with appropriate missionary songs.

Saturday evening the young people gave a social to the entire branch, which consisted of a short but interesting program and refreshments.

Sunday all services were in charge of the young people. Sunday school at 10 a. m. was followed by a splendid sermon by Roy Cheville. In the afternoon a young people's prayer meeting was held, after which the young people went to the park for a short time and returned for the preaching service at 7.30, Brother Leonard Lea being the speaker. The choir had made special preparation for this day and surely sang with the Spirit.

We feel that these young people's meetings are well worth while for all. It gives the young the actual experience of shouldering responsibilities, and it certainly gladdens the hearts of the older ones to see the next generation fitting and preparing itself for service. It makes us feel as the poet expresses it, "God's in his heaven; all's right with the world."

June 3 Apostle John W. Rushton preached an eloquent sermon on "The problem of the church to-day."

"Zion redeemed," a cantata written by our own people, was rendered to an appreciative audience on Children's Day, June 10. At its conclusion five little cradle roll graduates were presented with diplomas; and five pupils, the entire class of Sister Sadie Chandler, were baptized. It was a beautiful and impressive service.

On June 17 Apostle John W. Rushton preached two inspiring sermons. Especially good was the sermon in which he used as his theme the parable of the vine and branches, expressing as few men could the old, old story, and making distinction between the fruit of the Spirit and that of the flesh in a way none could mistake.

At 3 p. m. a union sacrament service was held, and we were pleased to have with us besides Apostle Rushton and his sister, Bishop James F. Keir and Elder Daniel Macgregor.

Topeka News

On Sunday, May 27, the wife of Brother F. O. Kelley, our assistant Sunday school superintendent, was baptized by the pastor, Ira G. Wipple.

At eleven o'clock Brother Goffe delivered an appropriate discourse on the principles of the gospel. In the evening Elder Whipple gave an interesting address on spiritual gifts.

The Saints were glad to welcome our aged brother, Elder James Baily, of Scranton, Kansas, to our sacrament service June 3, as it was twenty-eight years ago when the brother was ordained the first elder of the Topeka branch.

In the evening Elder Robert Monroe, also of Scranton, Kansas, used for his text, "The discerning of spirits," and in this way showed the difference between the Reorganization and the Utah Church.

A Children's Day program was given at the eleven o'clock hour on June 10 by the Sunday school.

On the morning of June 17 Brother H. Hyde spoke on the subject "perfection," stating, "We cannot hope to reach perfection only by strict adherence to the law of God." His illustrations were fine and showed his calling as a teacher. "Necessity of the priesthood," was discussed by Brother W. L. Chapman in the evening.

MRS. H. C. PITSENBERGER.

Bushnell in Kansas City Hospital

In the HERALD of May 23 the statement appears that Brother Bushnell was taken to a hospital in Kansas City. He has asked us to add that this hospital is upheld by the corporation for which he works. The employees pay in a small sum, one dollar, a month and in return are given hospital care when needed. This includes all expenses for necessary doctors and operations. If one cannot go to the hospital, it may include such attention as appears wise on the part of the doctors of the institution, though they may secure the help of some other physicians when necessary. This is of interest as a cooperative move.

Reunion Notices

Seattle and British Columbia, at Everett, August 3 to 19. This is a change of dates; please notice.

Des Moines, at Runnells, Iowa, August 10 to 19. Beautiful grounds in northwestern part of the town, a delightful place to take your vacation and at the same time receive spiritual food. A number of general missionary force will be present as speakers, besides a number of local workers. We have arranged our program so there will be something for everyone, both old and young, spiritual as well as recreational. Please have orders for tents and equipment in the hands of the secretary by August 5. E. G. Beye, secretary, Rhodes, Iowa.

Kewanee, at Galva, Illinois, August 10 to 20. The committee believes that this gathering will be one of the most spiritual and physically and mentally beneficial reunions yet held. The needs of every member have been considered. Do you need physical recuperation? Can you spend ten days this summer at any place more adapted to your need than at the Kewanee reunion, where God's law of health, as given in section 86, is honored? Do you want to go home from vacation prepared to take up branch service and do something big for God and humanity? Then come to our study periods, 9.45 to 10.45, every morning. The general church has provided us with an apostle to give us counsel along general lines, a bishop to instruct in the big theme of the hour—Christianity translated into terms of service, a patriarch to bless, and a seventy to help round out the complete program. And the district will provide the setting with its "home folks" to offer the glad hand and "sinews of war." It has been arranged for each person able to pay for his tent and meals; the branch presidents and committee will look after other cases according to wisdom, expecting those who have been blessed with health and this world's good to impart to others as God has commanded, that we may have the blessing of his Spirit; for unless we are equal in temporal things we cannot be abundantly blessed with spiritual things. But everything must be done in order and according to God's plan. For further particulars, write to the chairman of the committee, Ralph W. Farrell, Rock Island, Illinois, Y. M. C. A.

New York and Philadelphia, at Deer Park, August 4 to 19. The park has long been famous for its beauty and the Big Spring. The grounds are splendidly adapted and well equipped for these gatherings. Southeastern Illinois, at the Brush Creek Branch, August 24 to September 2. The permanent camp grounds are located six miles south of Xenia, Illinois. We have made special arrangements with two of the brethren to meet all day trains, if they are notified in time. Those coming without notice should call Mark Holman drug store, and he will advise you how to call up our service cars, Delbert Morris or Hasel Caudle, Route 6, Xenia, Illinois. The camp is a nice, shady grove. There will be a dining hall where meals will be served at reasonable prices for those who do not wish to cook for themselves. Straw for bedding and wood for cooking will be furnished free. We have been provided with three good speakers: Elder C. E. Wight, president of Lamoni Stake, Bishop C. Hunt of Far West Stake, and Patriarch Ammon White of Independence, and besides these we have our own missionaries. The Sunday school, Religio, and Department of Women will be in the care of the district workers, Sister Bruce Brown, Elder F. L. Sawley, and Sister Sparling. Those desiring tents write L. D. Burrough, Route 6, Xenia, Illinois, for the prices and size of tents. Those who desire to spend ten days camping will find this a very nice place and we always have a very large crowd. Henry Sparling.

Nemo's Noddings

Sleeping with one eye open is safer than walking with one eye shut. And this applies spiritually as well as when crossing the boulevard.

"Asleep in Jesus" applies to some still unburied, for some sleep their religion instead of living it.

Ecstatic religious experiences are useless unless followed by efforts to make the Christian goals attainable.

The "larger life" of Jesus may be glimpsed in a prayer meeting, but its actual achievement requires a whole lot of work outside.

How frequently the warm faith of meditation is chilled by the cold wind of drab necessity for work.

"I am come that ye might have life" does not mean to doze in a religious rocking-chair seeing colorful pictures in the wall, but indicates rather vigor of coursing blood stimulated by doing the will of God.

Spiritual muscles, like physical ones, atrophy from disuse. What spiritual exercise are you taking?

Paul's metaphor setting out the necessity of co-ordination in the physical body is no "idle dream" as applied to the Christian body—the church. When shall we learn the lesson?

Culture may be defined as that preparation which will give a more comprehensive appreciation of life, which means a larger enjoyment of life.

The larger enjoyment of life means entering upon the large life itself, the "more abundant life" of Jesus.

But to enjoy the more abundant life there must precede it a preparation in culture therefor, which means spirituality.

Spirituality means far more than adherence to ritual or the participation in ceremony. It comprehends high ideals issuing in clean living and social activities.

Social activities of a spiritual character arise only from a clear-cut social consciousness, and to develop such social consciousness is one of the great purposes of the church.

What progress as a church are we making in developing spirituality with a social content?

Engraved invitations to divorce trials are quite the rage in Germany. The cards read, "I have the honor to invite you to attend my divorce before the civil court and to listen in on the failings of my wife" (or husband). The present membership of all religious bodies in the United States is estimated at 47,461,558 persons. During 1922 the religious bodies of the United States gained 1,220,428 over the preceding year. This is approximately 50 per cent greater than the average growth for the preceding five years.

This looks as though it would spoil the fun of some of our calamity howlers.

Stewards Invested at Cameron

According to previous arrangements there were held at Cameron, Missouri, on July 8, the ceremonies of investiture which established in their stewardships six of the brethren of the Far West Stake who had, under the direction of the bishop of the stake, signed articles of agreement approved by the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric who also had approved the recommendation by the stake authorities of the brethren concerned.

The solemnity of the occasion was felt by all present, and the Spirit of God bore witness to the righteousness of the move.

It was with keen pleasure that I entered into the ceremony and administered the covenant, and listened to the prayer of consecration by Bishop McGuire which followed the covenant.

All present seemed to sense the great import of the occasion, and felt that it marked a step of progress in the development of the church which will go down in the annals as an epoch marker. Others have entered into and been on the stewardship basis before, for the ministry are at least partially so, so this occasion cannot be said to be an initial step towards the establishment of stewardships; but it may well be hoped that it marks the beginning of a well-defined movement which will eventually place all members of the church on the basis of stewardships, or all who are willing to become such. And let us fervently pray and hope that the movement so auspiciously begun will gather momentum, so that the work of the church will be hastened and the social goal of the church soon reached. For we have waited long for Zion, and God has long promised to cut his work short in righteousness; but that can come only when the people are ready for it, and surely, after nearly one hundred years have been spent in preparation for the work of redeeming Zion we must be near the day when our spiritual condition and readiness to consecrate our all will justify God in putting into operation the forces of the hastening time.

It is also a matter of keen pleasure to know that two other groups of men of the Far West Stake are in process of agreement and association in a similar way, and it is hoped that the ceremonies may soon take place.

Faith in Stewardships

The brethren at Cameron who have organized themselves into a group of stewards (the articles of agreement appeared in the HERALD for April 18, 1923), like the brethren at Lamoni who have for some time been operating on the stewardship basis, have shown a sincere and live faith in the church and the promises of God. To "walk by faith and not by sight" was declared by Paul to be the lot of the Christian; and this must apply as well in temporal affairs as in spiritual, for to spiritualize all the activities of the church and its members is our task and ultimate goal. So faith must loom large in stewardship undertakings. And why not? Has it not taken faith in God and the church for all church workers to take up their burdens?

If it be true as the words of one of our hymns express, that "while you wait another waits for you," then it ought to follow that when we act in faith others are encouraged to follow. So we may expect that many throughout the church now contemplating moving into the stewardship basis will by the action of the Far West and Lamoni groups be encouraged to promptly follow the dictates of their own consciences which are urging them onward towards Zion conditions. In fact, all who are longing for Zion are heartened by the signs of progress and their prayers will become even more fervent that God will bring again Zion in all its glory and perfection.

Convention Addresses

We are publishing elsewhere in this issue the baccalaureate sermon by President Frederick M. Smith delivered at the June Commencement of Graceland College. This sermon constitutes the first of a series of sermons and lectures delivered during the Young People's Convention at Graceland, which will be published in future issues of the HERALD.

The material furnished by these addresses is of the finest import. We feel that the benefit derived from these inspirational and educational talks by those attending the convention should be extended to the readers of the HERALD.

Mr. Howard Harder has ably reported these features and will furnish the copy for publication. Should there be sufficient demand for this series of articles, we will publish in pamphlet form the entire series, making a valuable addition to any library.

The content of these articles is not only scholarly in presentation but is simply and forcibly stated. The articles include a well-rounded discussion of the social and spiritual problems of the day with special application to the needs of the church. We recommend careful reading of them and feel certain they are of a quality which will attract wide attention and comment. Watch the HERALD columns for the future publication of these addresses.

The United Church of Canada

After twenty years of discussion and attempts at organization, the Methodist, Congregational, and Presbyterian churches of Canada have taken the final action in forming a united church.

Previously the Methodist and Congregational churches have signified their willingness to join the united movement, but a strong minority in the Presbyterian Church has prevented action by that body.

In the recent general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada at Port Arthur, Ontario, the last step necessary to clear the way for the united organization was taken. Fear of a split in the Presbyterian Church had kept that body from consenting to the unification, but now this fear is no longer so apparent, since the vote was nearly four to one for unification.

Former differences in theological opinions have gradually given way to a modern movement of co-operation. The original causes for the rise of the separate denominations have disappeared, so reconciliation is not so difficult as several years ago.

The legal points involved in the unification of the churches have been worked out and a bill for Parliament prepared which will create the new united Church of Canada.

An interesting method of consolidation was used when the names of the various divisions in the church were determined. The local church organizations will be known as the Presbytery, according to the Presbyterian tradition; the larger groups will be known as the Conference, according to Methodist tradition; and the highest court of the church will be known as the Council, distinctive of Congregational tradition.

The entire movement marks a step in the advancement of these churches in recognizing the need for cooperation, especially in small communities where competition heretofore was a serious handicap.

Christians must work together if the world is to become Christian in any sense of the word. Minor differences should recede where agreement on larger points is possible. When these three large churches can put behind them their creeds and dogmas, join hands and move forward with a united purpose, then Christianity is surely beginning to function.

This effort is an attempt to come to an agreement upon the teachings of Christ. A mere external organization will not accomplish the purpose. A consecrated intent on the part of the membership is the only possible way to the goal. Nevertheless the framework of the new church itself marks a beginning in the breaking of worn-out, decayed tradition.

We must recognize the place of tradition in stabilizing civilization but never allow it to prevent progress. Stagnation is the first step toward degeneration, and we cannot afford to degenerate.

The cry of Christendom is onward to bigger and better things. Can we as the church of Christ fail in our mission to take the world by the hand and show the way? We have but two choices—to lead or to follow. Which will it be?

Labor Sunday

A great deal of adverse comment has been made regarding the attitude of labor to the church. An item which appears in General Interest this week issued on behalf of the American Federation of Labor states clearly the desire of labor for closer association with the church. In part this is no doubt caused by the changed attitude of leading officers of the churches in general as the past few years has marked a decided change of attitude and a greatly increasing interest on the part of churchmen in economic reconstruction and in the conditions under which their fellow men have to work.

Certainly however important individual salvation may be and is, the teachings of Jesus were also to lead to better social conditions and it is part of the work of Christian churches to consider every man our brother and to treat him as we would like to be treated. This includes a responsibility and interest in the existing economic situation to the end that in fairness a better basis of work and association may be found.

Labor calls upon the church to give special attention on at least this one Sunday. Our own churches have been giving attention to this question continuously, yet this request officially made on behalf of the workingman indicates a changed attitude on the part of the laborer following a recognition of a changed attitude by the church.

Philanthropy is the business of giving it back to the people you took it from.—Fresno Republican.

Stewardships Installed at Cameron

A ceremony which marks a milestone in the advancement of the great social program of the church, was held at Cameron, July 8, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, at which six brethren of the Far West Stake were invested as stewards. The six brethren are: G. Scott Daniel, S. J. Sloan, Thomas Fiddick, S. H. Simmons, John Stade, and O. A. Erickson. This ceremony, representing a new step in the history of stewardships in the church, was attended by a number of Saints which filled the chapel, about 350 being present, visitors being there from Lamoni and Independence, as well as from all parts of the Far West Stake. President Smith was in charge of the ceremonies, being assisted by Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire and Bishop A. Carmichael.

The meeting opened with song and prayer. J. A. Koehler, bishop of the Far West Stake, then made a few remarks, explaining the form of agreement entered into by the men about to become stewards and the trustees of the stake. He read from the articles of covenant the following passage, which explains the purpose of the agreement:

Article 1. Statement and Object

These Articles of Association and Declaration of Trust are adopted in pursuance of resolutions adopted by the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at its annual meeting held in Lamoni, Iowa, April 6 to 21, A. D. 1909, authorizing further organization by the bishopric of said church of those who may desire to associate themselves for the benevolent purposes herein specified:

(1) To aid and assist the worthy and the poor, directly or through such channels as the order may direct, in obtaining employment and homes;

(2) To help the sick and afflicted and unfortunate in times of need;

(3) To promote temperance, culture, morality, and equality, and provide against all social evils of every sort for the good of the individual and of the community; and

(4) For these purposes to acquire by gift, purchase, devise, or other legal and just methods, suitable real and personal property, to use such wealth for the purposes herein specified, and when desirable to improve and convey the same.

Bishop Koehler explained that the association about to be formed was a beginning of the great movement which it is hoped will ultimately touch the entire church membership.

President Smith next spoke, expressing his delight at seeing this additional step in stewardships being taken. He emphasized that any social reform must be upon a religious basis and that this occasion presented a definite and organized start demonstrating to the world that our theories are practical. Leading students of society in the universities of this country have their eyes upon this church, and are anxiously waiting to see if we can do what we claim to be able to do in the way of social reform.

Going on a stewardship basis, President Smith continued, is nothing new in the experiences of this church, for our ministry has been on that basis for a long time; but unfortunately too many of the men composing the ministry have had to work on a standard of living below that to which they were entitled as stewards.

This meeting initiated a definite manner of procedure in the establishment of stewardships. President Smith is of the opinion that in all cases a public acknowledgment of the willingness of the steward to enter upon this basis should be made. The ceremonies of the day were the result of much consideration upon this thought, and the simple but impressive ceremonies were calculated to impress the importance and deep spirituality of the occasion, representing an acceptance of the laws of God as does the act of baptism already used by the church.

President Smith stated that this group of stewards which was formed constitutes one of the assisting organizations to the church as is indicated in the law. These men, he believes, on taking the covenant, automatically become members of the Order of Enoch.

It is up to us as a people to demonstrate the feasibility of our ideals. This group or association of men, entering the Lord's work as stewards, constitutes a practical example of our ideals. This is a beginning to which we can point and be justly proud.

The President, after stating that the men had been approved for appointment as stewards after due recommendation by local stake authorities and consideration by the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric, then welcomed the men as stewards of God and, with the men standing before the congregation, administered the public affirmation of the covenant which reads as follows:

You have already entered into the covenant of baptism, and of the priesthood, and have indicated your willingness to enter into the covenant of stewardship.

Do you, now standing before this branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and before the general authorities thereof, and in the name of the Master, solemnly affirm and covenant that you are willing whole-heartedly and unreservedly to become stewards according to the doctrine of stewardship in harmony with the laws of the church, observing all the legal rights belonging to that condition; that is, to improve your talents to the maximum of your ability, holding your surplus contributable to the church, after your just wants and your needs according to your circumstances have been provided; that you will continuously seek the interests of your neighbor and in every way in your power to contribute to the welfare of mankind, seeking thus to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness, that all you are, all you have, and all you hope to become and all you hope to have are consecrated to the service of God and his church, that you will ever strive to show your love of God by love of neighbor and service to your fellow man; and all this in accordance with the articles of agreement you have already made?

Then by virtue of the rights and authority vested in me as president of the church by the laws thereof, I declare you stewards of God and the church. May God add his blessings and keep you to fulfill your covenant.

After thus officially declaring them stewards, President Smith called upon Bishop McGuire to offer the prayer of consecration. In addressing an admonition to the stewards before offering the prayer, he said:

To-day we witness men acknowledging their heavenly Father as owner of all they possess. In so doing they recognize the confidence God has reposed in them, and the consequent obligation to so devote their time, talents, and energies in obtaining, using, and disposing of earthly possessions, as shall reflect credit to themselves, blessing to their fellow man, and honor and glory to their heavenly Father.

In this wider sphere of life, or in their undertakings, with a wider, deeper, and clearer concept of life, its opportunities and obligations one may rightfully expect the bestowal of God's Spirit proportionate to the requirements of the undertaking. This, however, in no wise releases the one so blessed from the exercise of the powers so bestowed, or the utilization of the possessions under his control in such manner as shall bring the largest measure of return. One may expect that God shall require an accounting. And to whom much has been given, much will be required. Then let none think that the conduct of his business affairs will now require less thought, less attention, less planning, less hours, or less effort.

The broader and clearer vision of one's relations and duties should give rise to increased joy in service, which should find expression in such application to one's task as shall guarantee an abundant success.

If, however, with a lack of appreciation of what stewardship involves one slackens his efforts after putting his hand to the plow, or turns back in the course he has begun, he may expect to reap a harvest of failure and disappointment. I believe these brethren who here to-day publicly proclaim devotion to the cause in accepting this appointment, sense the responsibility, and take joy in striving to make good, will let their light so shine that others seeing their good works will glorify their heavenly Father in doing likewise. The mighty oak from the acorn grows. We may hope that this humble start may develop a movement of that strength in such proportion as shall accomplish God's purposes by placing the operation of economic affairs in the world upon a plane which will go far toward ameliorating the distressing social conditions of to-day. That this may be so we must ever remember that the letter killeth, but the Spirit maketh alive. Otherwise any material success will be but the greater monument of our failure.

President Smith then announced that similar groups of stewards had been formed at Oakdale and Far West Branches, and that the ceremonies would be administered in due time.

Following the consecration, the congregation sang, "Jesus, I my cross have taken," and were dismissed by the benediction by President Smith.

It was a splendid day for Cameron. Preaching in the morning and evening was by President Smith to full houses.

The articles of association agreed to by the men becoming stewards are in substance as follows:

The purpose is stated in the remarks by J. A. Koehler, appearing above.

The association is composed of members who belong to the church, nomination for stewards being made by the stake bishopric and approved by the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric. Nominees may be elected to membership by a two-thirds vote of the members of the association, and members may be released by a like majority.

The management of the affairs of the association are to be under a board of stewards, which does not exceed twelve in number, chosen by the association from among its members.

By-laws may be made by the board subject to the general agreement. It may also choose its agents and officers.

A board of trustees chosen by the board of stewards will handle the property of the association.

The board of stewards possess legal powers like those of a board of directors of a manufacturing corporation.

The members of the stake bishopric are ex officio stewards and trustees of the association.

The high council of the stake and the Standing High Council of the church are the courts of appeal in all matters of controversy respecting the rights of members of the association.

Just needs and wants are determined and agreed upon between each individual member and the trustees. After having tithed the increases, other surplus is turned over to the association. Fifty per cent of this fund will be a reserve to refinance or assist the credit of stewards whose capital may become impaired, or for the purpose of expansion.

The association has no capital stock and will not be run for the pecuniary profit of individuals.

France is spending to-day over 13,000,000,000 francs a year for alcoholic beverages, the larger part being for wine and second for alcohol. This is compared with 1,200,000,000 for public education; 320,000,000 for hygiene and hospitals, 166,000,000 for agriculture. In the past it is claimed there was but little alcoholic danger as the time was a frugal one, but that time has passed with eleven times as much now spent for liquor as for public education. The cause of prohibition throughout the world is becoming one of live interest. The review of temperance work in France is taken from the Christian Work in an article by the secretary of the French Blue Cross Society. The work is therefore becoming organized in that country.

The Educational Problem of the Church

Baccalaureate sermon by Frederick M. Smith, given at the commencement exercises of Graceland College, at Lamoni, Iowa, June 3, 1923.

In attempting to give the baccalaureate sermon to-night I may depart from the ecclesiastical aspect of such an address and combine what is very properly termed an address with what we are supposed to call a sermon; and in doing so I am not laying aside my ecclesiastical rights and not attempting to appear before you entirely as an educator or one interested in educational activities. But I do wish to present to you to-night a theme which might be termed, "The educational problem of the church," although I cannot do it more than briefly at best. This problem of the church will, in a measure, set the goal of the accomplishment for Graceland College itself, especially so long as Graceland College might in any degree yield to any official influence that I, as president of the church, might exert upon its activities.

Objective of the Church

What is the objective of the church? For, if we are to determine or attempt to discover what is the educational problem of the church, we must, of course, determine first what is the objective of the church, and then discover, if possible, the correlation that might exist between that and the educational organization. I doubt not that there might be some who would expect us to depart from the usual or missionary aspect in defining what is the educational aspect of the church, and such I may surprise when I say that the objective of the church is to spread the gospel of Jesus Christ, but it should be a move with a distinct purpose in view and that purpose in view can be summed up in this expression: To make the world realize and to make our own converts conscious of the fact that the gospel of Jesus Christ is only a means to an end. It is the "power of God unto salvation." And when we say that, we must recognize that the gospel will only bring into our lives those factors and those forces which we must use to work out our own salvation, for the gospel of Jesus Christ is not that which will of its own accord bring about the salvation of the individual. It will put that individual into the attitude of working out his own salvation. And hence, let me repeat that we can objectify the purpose of the church by saying, it is to make us conscious of the fact that the gospel of Jesus Christ will bring into our lives that power that will enable us to work out our own salvation. In other words, then, the object of the church is to loosen within society those forces emanating from the divine sources that will save man, or, to put it in another way, it is for the purpose of bringing unto this world a more abundant life.

To develop spiritually means to develop character, and, of course, everybody recognizes that is one of the great desiderata of life itself, and that is one of the fundamental factors of the church. But we are spending our time uselessly if we say that developing character ends our purposes or our objective. Character should be developed for a purpose. That purpose of developing character or spirituality might be expressed by saying that it is for the purpose of creating an atmosphere in which the establishment of the kingdom of God might be accomplished. We are taught to pray in the prayer that Jesus taught us as one of the very first things that he intended for us to mention when we are approaching the throne of grace. "Thy kingdom come." That expression of three words sums up the purpose of the church. The foundation upon which it is to be brought is the creation of a spirituality that will give it an atmosphere in which it can live after it comes.

The purpose of the church is in addition to this to develop a social order in which the foregoing is possible, that is to say, in which it is possible for spirituality and character to be developed and in which an atmosphere might be created that will permit the kingdom of God to live when it comes. The basis of this social order, the Christian order, as we firmly believe, is stewardships, an order which will permit and encourage the maximum of expression of the best in each for the benefit of all, and in which all will be working for each.

Laborers All

I wonder how many of you have become accustomed to speak of the laboring class. I wonder how many of you students of society have formed a habit by imitation, if you please, of those with whom you have been studying and following and whom you have been hearing lecture of thinking of humanity divided into several different and distinct classes, one of which we term the laboring class and another the leisure class. I want to tell you that if you have reached a conception of what Latter Day Saint stands for, if you have been imbued with the spirit of the gospel that has really converted you into a Latter Day Saint, you will eventually cease to think of a society being tolerated among us in which we will term one class of individuals a laboring class, for it has been clearly indicated to us in our own books that none shall have a right to exist in Zion who is not a laborer. Hence, we will have to learn a new terminology, and that by the way is one of the difficulties we have in comprehending the doctrine of stewardships, in reaching a conception of what our social reform means, because we have been compelled to use a terminology that has been created by those who do not know what the ideal is. We must habituate ourselves to thinking in terms of the division of humanity into varying classes of laborers, for the doctrine of stewardships carries with it the idea that all will be laborers together with God for the building up of his people. The reasons for the existence of a leisure class, if there is any reason for its existence, will be reached so far as the purpose is concerned in another way. Automatically the doctrine of stewardships will bring out the very thing that is conserved by the so-called leisure class.

Misfits Must Be Eliminated

The maximum of service from each for the benefit of all demands the elimination of the misfits which are so plentiful in the present society. I do not mean to say by the elimination of the misfits that we are going to destroy these individuals, but it is up to us to find some way of replacing the present misfits, or those who are misfits, and converting the misfits into fit people who will be able to accomplish their purposes. That is one of the tasks of the church, for if the number of misfits that are so numerous in our present social order to-day could be converted into assets, then the hours that are necessary for those who do labor now to maintain the rest of the population will be decreased. Labor will then become pleasurable, for work is pain in overcoming obstacles and when labor becomes pleasure, it will have been converted into play. That is one of the concomitants of stewardships.

Why do we have misfits to-day in the social world, in the economical world? Why do we have misfits in the educational world? Why is it that you see so frequently men who have learned the profession of teaching who are absolutely unqualified to go into the classroom with the idea of teaching as teaching should be taught. Why, we can go into any avenue or vocation and find the number of misfits increasing to an alarming extent. There are misfits in the teaching profession, in the medical profession, in the preaching profession, in the various vocations; and the reason is because our method of selecting is fundamentally and essentially wrong. We permit selection of vocation, and avocation so far as that is concerned, to be governed by individual caprice rather than to have it governed by some sort of method that will be scientific and socially purposive.

I do not want to go too far into the realm of pedagogy, but this criticism of the present profession so far as teaching is concerned and our general educational system I want to impress; because it is up to us as a people to rectify this. There are misfits because the selection of vocation is left to individual caprice, and it is not methodical; while success as measured to-day is largely a survival of the fittest. That doctrine is just as wrong in educational activity as it is in any other way. We must get away from the laissez faire in educational method exactly as we have in the economic and in the industrial. That means, then, if we are going to rectify that, that the direction taken in the education of each individual must be selected technically and methodically.

Is this people capable of accomplishing it? Have we sufficient ideal? Are we actuated and dominated by the Christian doctrine so that we are ready to carry the Christian ethics into our education? If not, we must be.

Higher Education for All

The accurate fitting of everybody to the task for which he is best fitted demands (and here we are trying to put the problem before the church in an educational way) a universal higher education for each. I know I am going to run counter to some who believe that the higher education should be confined to a few. The president of the college recently quoted Nicholas Murray Butler to the effect that he did not believe it was necessary or possible. I am confident that, in surveying the field and considering the trouble so far as this people is concerned, the task that confronts us is to make higher education possible for every child of the church. It is absolutely essential. Now, I know, of course, that some of you would say, What would happen to us if everybody had a college education? The difficulty is this: Once more we are the victims of a terminology that has been created by people who do not have our ideals, and to-day to too large an extent a college education is thought to qualify a person to get a living without work, and that is a misconception of the very purpose of education; and that is why colleges will too frequently take a man off the farm and educate him as a misfit for something else. I can idealize the question of universal education to such an extent that I believe the time will come when we will find a man happy with a degree who will be working with a spade in the soil if that is where he thinks he can serve humanity best. That is the ideal the church must seek. Here are some qualifications that we must make in defining what higher education is. That does not mean that we will have the same higher education for all individuals, but that higher education must and will be adapted to the needs and the natural endowment and the probable vocation of each individual. With that modification I think you can nod your heads and say, Yes, that is all right.

Not only that, but the higher education must be determined by the educational limit of that individual. There are some individuals who cannot go beyond a certain point in education, and any attempt to put them beyond that would be just like stuffing food down a capon after he has reached the maximum of his weight. And the difficulty has been so far as our present education is concerned that we have tried to take too many individuals along the line of higher education when we have been on the wrong road; and we have not recognized that that individual has reached his limit. We are beginning to discover it to-day since morons have become fashionable. Therefore we classify our individuals as eight-year olds, ten-year olds, twelve-year olds, fourteen-year olds, etc. Hence, we are realizing that a higher education for an eight-year-old capacity of person is an entirely different thing than a higher education for a genius. Yet our educational system must take into consideration the needs of every individual and educate every individual up to the maximum of his power, because only then can we guarantee that that individual will be capable and qualified to function to the maximum of his capacity.

Vocational Guidance in Our Schools

Now, here is another problem that is still before us, because it is not met in our present education. The parallel on the secondary education for the purpose of laying a general foundation must be had with the idea of uncovering the talents and therefore determining the limitations of every individual, and then for developing to the highest possible degree the talents we find, even if it indicates a low grade of mentality.

Now, I am simply giving expression to a truism that has become almost a platitude. The great fault with our educational progress is that we attempt to take every child and force him through a mold; and we have, to an extent, developed a class of people who are remarkably good when we consider the weakness of the system we have been using, for in spite of the depressing fact of trying to force all developing minds through the same mold, there are some who have preserved their powers and become educated in spite of it. Our problem is to see that every individual has a method of his own and that it is adapted to him and to the verification of the talent God has bestowed upon him.

Then our educational system must include first a preparation for stewardships, and stewardships as a basis for the reformation of society in which the will of God will be worked out the same here as it is worked in heaven. All our educational processes must in every individual case be adapted to the individual so that he can discover the talent and then having discovered it develop it for the good of the whole by finding the proper vocation in which that individual can best serve, and according to the manner in which the individual is supposed later on to contribute to the community welfare.

This, then, must be the educational problem of the church—a higher college education for every boy and girl in the church. Is it possible? And that can be irrespective of the social standing of the individual, irrespective of the racial culture of the individual, and irrespective of various other things that cause us to be divided up into classes; and with other qualifications that it shall be so flexible that it shall meet the needs of every individual. I cannot conceive of a reformed society that shall live up to the keynote as set by Jesus Christ in which anything short of that goal shall be reached.

Demands Upon the Church

Now to secure this result so far as the church is concerned it is apparent to us that certain demands shall be made upon us as a church which is attempting to form a social order from which we expect to eliminate the present evils. First, that we create among our young people of the church not only a universal desire for a higher education, but a willingness to work for it, for there is no royal road to this goal. I do not care what the conditions of the child; I do not care what the condition of the family in which the boy or girl is raised; somehow in some way this church must reach out its stimulating influence and touch the soul and the heart of every child in it until he shall become desirous of going to his limit in the acquiring of an education and be willing to discover what his limit is; and then being willing to work and work incessantly for the accomplishment of that purpose.

And this presents the second very logical demand: We must create the social machinery necessary to meet the demands when the youngsters come forward with them. Are we ready?

I am not much of a statistician, but I will venture the guess that out of one hundred thousand people in this church there are at least twenty thousand who should be in school and college. Suppose we have twenty thousand, how many have we in Graceland to-day? How many have we in other schools that for the moment are substituting for Graceland? I simply give you these figures to stimulate you with the greatness of the ideal that is before us. Let me repeat that one of the functions of the ministry of this church is to stimulate education—and that is why I glory in the fact that out of Graceland each year there are going representative young men and women who have been made to appreciate what an education will do for them and who have been taught their limitations and who chafe because the opportunity has not been presented to break the bonds of those limitations and who are bound to go out to the membership of this church and create a demand for the education of our children that will compel us to supply the need. I am glad of it. You will find me backing these persons. I am glad to say that Graceland has produced very few if any knockers. They are all boosters, and I am happy in it. We are, therefore, compelled to create the machinery which is necessary to meet that demand, and that demand will imply the creating of a secondary school, or at least those processes reaching into the secondary education of the church for discovering the special demand and measuring the individual equipment of every child in the church. I am happy to-night that those processes have been begun. We must create a place in which these talents, once having been discovered, can go through a process of development which is natural to them.

As a concomitant of creating this machinery we must create a corps of consecrated men and women to do this work. I mean by that to consecrate their lives to the teaching profession with the ideal of the church always in mind. Consequently we must bring these consecrated, devoted people, and with their interest aroused, these students who are appreciating at least in its ideal form the great objective of the church—we must bring them together, that that corps of consecrated, holy, and devoted men and women who will direct the studies of these who are willing to work for the education necessary may have the opportunity so to teach.

There is the great objective of the church summed up in a word. The creating of the desire on the part of the young people for the higher education and bringing them into contact with that body of consecrated men and women qualified to direct their studies and educational opportunities. That means the opportunity of studying and learning together which spells education. But in this and through this first, last, and all the time there must run always that consciousness throughout every heart and mind of every individual of the objective of the church. This must be kept always clearly in sight. And the activities and this learning together must be made holy, which means consecrated, of course, by religion and devotion to ideals.

It is useless for a body which names the name of Christ to think of anything else as an educational activity than that which is based on religion. I say this because there have been those who have been so short sighted that they have accused me of placing education above religion. Religion should be the dynamic of the church, and we cannot reach our goal until we realize that all our activities should be made dynamic by the religion and the idea that we are working for God and for his Son.

Graceland the Center of Learning

Graceland is the chief center of learning for the church and must be so organized that whosoever will might come. There is, in a practical sort of way, the ideal of Graceland summed up. I do not care where he is, I do not care what is his environment, I do not know what might be his purpose in life, but if anywhere within the membership of this church there is a child who desires a higher education, we should have Graceland so organized that we can say to that child, "Come." And it should not be a question of money but simply a willingness to work for that education.

The college, then, must be so organized eventually that we can take care of the demand that is made upon us even if every child of an educational age shall make the demand. That in a physical way gives us some idea of the task that is before us, Whosoever will, let him come.

Graceland must be so organized that any defects in the secondary education which have been made in the child availing himself of the present system of education throughout the world can be rectified. That means, then, also as a part of the equipment of Graceland College that we must have a secondary educational equipment that will enable them to rectify the errors in other schools, that talent already neglected in those who come to Graceland from other schools shall speedily be discovered, and when found shall be developed. That means the organization of our educational work in Graceland College in a far greater and a wider extent than it is organized to-day and puts before our educators a problem that is tremendous even in its contemplation.

Further, there must be created in the atmosphere of Graceland College something which will develop a devotion to the cause of the church, and Graceland must be a place where that devotion when it already exists shall be augmented and, after it is augmented and developed, shall be capitalized to the good of the church. This means that the life of every member of the faculty as well as every student in the schools shall be consecrated and made holy by being devoted to service.

Let me repeat, It should be the ideal of Graceland to teach that all life, body, muscle, brain, wealth, land, pen, or tools must be made to glorify God, to bring his kingdom by being devoted to the service of man with no other thought of reward than the consciousness of having lived good by thus serving man. This task as the solution of our educational problem can only be approached through a unified, consecrated corps of workers together with God, and that Graceland is developing this corps is my firm belief and great joy.

Budget

1. What is it?

"A financial prophecy." It is the bridge that spans the gap between the theory of frugality and the practice of frugality. It is a statement forecasting approximately for a certain period of time—say a month or a year—the quantity, quality, and cost of the standard of living. (See Outline VI.)

 - Qualitative.
 - Quantitative.
 - Cost.

(See Outline VIII.)

- 1. Initial steps.
 - a. Conference with housekeeper.
 - b. Get clear statement of family resources.
 - c. Then give careful direction as to how to divide the income.

- 8. It trains to correct thinking.
- 9. It trains to accurate expression.
- 10. It enables the group to combine their buying and selling power.
- 11. It provides for a rational and scientific adjustment in wage scales.

OUTLINE VI

The Standard of Living

1. What is it?

The quantities and qualities of

- 1. Food.
- 2. Shelter.
- 3. Clothing, and
- 4. Miscellaneous.
 - a. Commodities, and
 - b. Services.

Which an individual or group of individuals deem necessary to desirable human experiences.

- a. There is no standard of living in an absolute sense. It is local and changeable both as to quality and quantity, and consequently as to cost.
- b. It varies from time to time, both as to individuals and groups within the same race and nation.
- c. It is a progressive thing, of a cumulative character as the individual or group acquires additional tastes and desires.

2. What determines it?

- a. The individual
 - a. Tastes, and
 - b. Desires.
- b. Social and economic forces.
 - a. Family income or wages.
 - b. Price level or the general level of commodities and service prices in terms of which the real income of the family must be measured.
 These two things are the major determinants of the standard of living.

3. Types of standards of living and budget levels.

- a. Pauper-poverty standard.
- b. Minimum of subsistence standard.
- c. Minimum of health and comfort standard.
- d. The standard of health and decency, or the normal standard. (See Outline VII.)

4. A basis for wages or allowance.

- a. Steps to be taken in a scientific readjustment in your wage scale.

1. Determine changes in prices that have taken place in your immediate vicinity, then
 2. Adjust your wage scale so as to provide for the maintenance of the standard of living.
- b. How to adjust your wage scale.
1. Analyze carefully wage conditions.
 2. Give due regard to the current purchasing power of the dollar, or your real wage.

OUTLINE VII

Types of Standard of Living

1. Pauper-Poverty Standard.

Having just enough to be above dependency—living on a level that barely escapes the necessity of asking aid. If aid is not received, then debt must be incurred. This standard does not provide for a mere animal existence of enough food and shelter. It is not a fit standard.

2. The Minimum of Subsistence Standard.

This standard is essentially a mere animal existence. It is impossible to attain the comforts and desirable experiences that should be associated with human beings in progressive society. It is not a fit standard.

3. The Minimum of Health and Comfort Standard.

It provides for the

1. Material things.
 - a. Food.
 - b. Shelter.
 - c. Clothing.
2. Comforts of life.
 - a. Clothing to satisfy self-respect and decency.
 - b. Insurance.
 - Death.
 - Disability.
 - Fire.
 - c. Good education.
 - d. A certain amount of amusement.
 - e. Some expenditures for self-development.

This is not an ideal standard. (See Outline IV.)

4. The Standard of Health and Decency, or the Normal Standard.

This standard comprises a more reasonable degree of comfort, respect, and human development than the standard of health and comfort represents. This is the standard suggested by the United States Bureau of Statistics in the preparation of a quantity budget for the use of the Joint Commission of Congress on the reclassification of salaries. In determining the quantities and in selecting qualities and ascertaining the prices of commodities and services that constitute such a budget, the Bureau kept in mind the minimum of health, decency, and comfort. For a more complete explanation of this standard of living, see Outline VIII, part 3.

OUTLINE VIII

The Quantitative Budget

1. Quantitative budget. What is it?

The quantitative budget is one in which the requisites of

1. Food,
2. Clothing,
3. Shelter, and
4. Miscellaneous

Commodities and services for the maintenance of the desired standard of living are measured and expressed in terms of amounts or quantities, as contrasted with the cost budget which measures and expresses these items in terms of dollars and cents.

2. Quantitative budget most important. Why?

1. Unstable character of price levels, and
2. Attendant variation in cost of living, make it
3. Impossible to formulate a general and permanent budget.

For this reason

4. The quantity budget is of greater value in determining the necessary and desirable readjustment in the wage scale for a wide area.

3. Quantitative budget, minimum requirements as given by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics in 1918-19. This is not an ideal living. It is only to establish a bottom level of health and decency below which a family cannot go without danger of physical and moral deterioration.

1. A sufficiency of food to maintain health, especially the health of children.
2. Housing.
 1. Minimum number of rooms consistent with decency.
 2. Sufficient light.
 3. Sufficient toilet facilities for maintenance of
 1. Health.
 2. Decency.
3. Upkeep.
 1. Kitchen utensils.
 2. Bedding and linen.
 3. Health.
 4. No provision for additional furniture to guarantee comfort.
4. Clothing sufficient for warmth and sufficiently good to be economical but with no further regard for appearance and style than is absolutely required to allow the family members to appear in public and participate in the limited activities of their immediate social group without a slovenliness or loss of self-respect.
5. Provision for miscellaneous expenditures.
 - a. Street car fare to and from work and for shopping and marketing.
 - b. Modest amount of insurance.
 - c. Medical and dental attention.
 - d. Contributions to churches, labor organizations, and beneficial organizations.
 - e. Limited expenditures for amusements.
 - f. Subscriptions for daily paper.

OUTLINE IX

The Ideal Budget or Standard of Living

(This standard does not provide for extraordinary expenditures.)

What is it—the quantity and quality of

- A. Food.
- B. Clothing.
- C. Operating expense.
- D. General development expense.
- E. Health.
- F. Investment.
- G. Special expense.

Which an individual or group of individuals deem necessary to desirable human experiences; i. e., to supply amply every need and just want.

1. This standard of living, like all the other standards, is not absolute.
2. It is a progressive cumulative one. It becomes more nearly perfect just as the additional tastes and desires of the individual or group are acquired in the right direction.
3. It is local and changeable both as to quantity and quality, therefore as to cost.
4. It should be the constant endeavor, as these needs and just wants become cumulative, to make them as common as possible.
5. These needs and just wants are hardly ever exactly alike as to quantity and quality as between two persons. Such factors as health, business, age, abilities, tastes, desires, dependencies, etc., must necessarily be taken into consideration in determining these "needs and just wants" of an individual or group.

A. Foods.

1. Butter.
2. Milk.
3. Cereals.
4. Eggs.

OUTLINE X

The Ideal Budget or Standard of Living Compared With the Standard of Health and Decency

1. Divisions of the Budget.

A. Food. (Health and Decency Level.)

1. Dietary Standards—Calories.

- a. Adult male doing moderately hard muscular work requires 3,000 to 3,200 calories per day. Necessary to purchase 3,500 calories since 10 per cent of food value is lost in cooking.
- b. Adult female requires approximately 90 per cents as much food as does the average adult male.
- c. Children 11 to 14 years, inclusive, require 90 per cent as much food as adult male.
- d. Children 7 to 10 years, inclusive, require 75 per cent as much food as adult male.
- e. Children under 4 years require 15 per cent as much food as adult male.

2. United States Bureau of Labor quantity food budget for standard family of five, (husband, wife, boy 12 years, girl 6 years, and boy 2 years). See Monthly Labor Review, June, 1920, table No. 1, page 3.

3. Necessary expansion to provide ideal budget for food very little, if any.

B. Clothing.

1. Health and Decency Level. Takes into account the physical needs of warmth, cleanliness, and comfort, together with sufficient style as will permit the family members to appear in public and within their necessarily rather narrow social circle, with neatness and self-respect. This standard is intended to provide a fair degree of mental satisfaction which comes as the result of being reasonably well dressed. (See Monthly Labor Review, table No. 2, page 8.)
2. The ideal Standard should provide for such purchases of clothing as will be sufficient not only for health and decency but also for clothing which, while not extreme in style, should nevertheless be artistic and pleasing and of better than average quality. Perhaps an expansion of the Health and Decency budget about 30 to 40 per cent would be adequate.

C. Housing.

1. Number of rooms.

- a. Health and Decency budget, one room per person.
- b. Ideal Standard.
 1. Bedrooms.
 - a. One for parents.

- b. One for two boys.
- c. One for girl.
- d. One guest room.
- e. Sleeping porch.
- 2. Living room.
- 3. Dining room.
- 4. Kitchen.
- 5. Bathroom.
- 2. Size of rooms.
 - A. Health and Decency.
 - 1. Large bedroom, 10 by 12 ft.
 - 2. Small bedroom, 8 by 10 ft.
 - 3. Parlor or living room, 10 by 12 ft.
 - 4. Dining room, 9 by 12 ft.
 - 5. Kitchen, 10 by 12 ft.

This standard of housing should, if possible, be designed by an expert architect, so as to provide for proper light, heat, ventilation, etc. Expert instruction should be had on every topic, as outlined on page nine, under A, B, C, D, E, F, and G.
 - B. Ideal Standard.
 - 1. Bedrooms at least 12 by 12 ft.
 - 2. Living room, 16 by 25 ft.
 - 3. Dining room, 16 by 16 ft.
 - 4. Kitchen, 12 by 14 ft.
- 3. Light and ventilation.
 - a. Health and Decency.
 - 1. At least one window in each room opening to outer air.
 - 2. Window area not less than 12 square feet.
 - 3. Cross ventilation as direct as possible through windows or transoms.
 - b. Ideal Standard.
 - 1. Two windows in bedrooms and kitchen.
 - 2. At least three windows in living room and dining room.
 - 3. One window in bathroom.

Conserve the Marriage Institution Through Education

How to conserve both the values of the individual and the hard-won inheritance of the race, is the problem to-day of which divorce is one phase, notes the Atlantic Monthly.

The cynicism prevalent to-day as regards marriage is tending to break down respect for that ancient institution and with loss of respect comes the instability of the family. Where the world would go without the family as a sacred and solid institution, needs little question. We must, however, take a stand toward divorce and view the facts as they exist to-day.

Homes are wrecked, social life is undermined, and children are sent adrift, because "I was unhappy," just as moral principles are broken in business because "a man must get ahead," points out this article.

Selfishness, which seems to be at the bottom of most broken homes, may be traced to the desire for material gain.

Meanwhile the church, while it does not entirely evade the issue, falls back upon an ancient formula of doubtful exegesis or else spends its entire time debating whether "obey" should be retained in the marriage rite.

With Jesus, marriage was made for man like the Sabbath day, not man for marriage. He set forth his ideal of a new social order in which all the facts of life are holy and all its fellowship happy. For the man who lives in His truth and follows in his way there is no problem of divorce, since the spirit of Christ forgives.

Few marriages "solemnized" in our churches can be said to be Christian. Those entering into marriage in many cases do not even profess to believe in Christ, much less live by his teachings. How then can they be expected to live by the vows the church imposes in its ceremony? Under such conditions mistakes are inevitable and marriage is doomed to failure.

All kinds of people are brought together in marriage, the degenerate, diseased, abnormal, criminal, those of unbalanced minds, and tainted blood. Parenthood resulting from such unions is a social disaster.

"Those whom God has joined, let no man put asunder." But did God have anything to do with these?

Divorce is not an attack on marriage; it is an attempt to protect its sanctity and preserve its permanence, the article continues. The sanctity of marriage lies in a sacred union of hearts which the church may bless and the State make legal but which neither can create nor annul. Where love is there marriage is—where love is not, marriage has ceased to be.

Law must express the will of the living people. The state where the law forbids divorce is an expression of tradition.

Salvation does not lie in law. The only hope is in education.

After all, divorce is the dark end of the problem. The real remedy lies in making marriage a nobler and finer thing than it is considered to-day. The whole conception of the relation of sexes must be lifted to a higher level and interpreted by moral intelligence and spiritual vision in the light of human realities and social values.

Science and Religion

The controversy between science and religion reached a high water mark during the month of May at the Presbyterian General Assembly at Indianapolis. William J. Bryan supported a resolution prohibiting the teaching of evolution in schools and colleges controlled by that denomination, but it was defeated.

At about the same time there appeared a joint statement upon the relations of science and religion, signed by many eminent scientists, religious leaders, and men of affairs. The purpose of the announcement was to correct two erroneous impressions which seemed to be current among certain groups of persons—the first, that religion to-day stands for medieval theology, and second, that science is materialistic and irreligious. The statement follows:

"We, the undersigned, deeply regret that in recent controversies there has been a tendency to present science and religion as irreconcilable and antagonistic domains of thought, for in fact they meet distinct human needs, and in the rounding out of human life they supplement rather than displace or oppose each other.

"The purpose of science is to develop, without prejudice or preconception of any kind, a knowledge of the facts, the laws, and the processes of nature. The even more important task of religion, on the other hand, is to develop the consciences, the ideals, and the aspirations of mankind. Each of these two activities represents a deep and vital function of the soul of man, and both are necessary for the life, the progress, and the happiness of the human race.

"It is a sublime conception of God which is furnished by science, and one wholly consonant with the highest ideals of religion, when it represents him as revealing himself through countless ages in the development of the earth as an abode for man and in the age-long inbreathing of life into its constituent matter, culminating in man with his spiritual nature and all his Godlike powers."

Science and Faith

We have several times called attention to the faith of scientists and to the attitude of the great scientists to religion. There seems to be a perennial dispute between the advocates of science and advocates of religion, but it is usually between those of comparatively little vision, for the great thinkers recognize the unity of all truth.

Robert A. Millikan, in the Christian Century, reviews this theme in an interesting way. He emphasizes the distinctive fields of science and of religion, starting with the time of Augustine:

"There is some question as to the earth or the sky, or the other elements of this world . . . respecting which one who is not a Christian has knowledge derived from most certain reasoning or observation: and it is very disgraceful and mischievous, and of all things to be carefully avoided, that a Christian, speaking of such matters as being according to the Christian scriptures, should be heard by an unbeliever talking such nonsense that the unbeliever, perceiving him to be as wide from the mark as east and west, can hardly restrain himself from laughing."

There is no real conflict between science and religion. If we take the greatest name in British science or in world science for the past 200 years, such men as Newton, Faraday, Maxwell, Kelvin, and Raleigh,

"No more earnest seekers after truth, no intellects of more penetrating vision, can be found anywhere, at any time, than these, and yet every one of them has been a devout and professed follower of religion." Kelvin wrote: "I believe that the more thoroughly science is studied, the further does it take us from anything comparable to atheism. If you think strongly enough you will be forced by science to the belief in God, which is the foundation of all religion." Yet Mr. Millikan states as strong a case can be made for any of the other men mentioned. Louis Pasteur was a deeply religious man. Over his tomb appears the words: "Happy is he who carries a God within him, an ideal of beauty to which he is obedient—an ideal of art, an ideal of science, an ideal of the fatherland, an ideal of the virtues of the gospel."

To these may be added Doctor Charles D. Walcott, president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; Henry Fairfield Osborne; Edwin G. Conklin, and very many others. In fact as one man has stated, you may go through Who's Who in America, and even if you strike out all the clergymen you still would have a list of men and women who are believers in the Bible as the word of God.

Now if we turn to the other side of the picture, Jesus himself said, "You shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." There is not one word in his teaching to introduce the idea that justifies one in arraying himself on the side of those who see antagonism between scientific truth and the deeply spiritual value. His was a religion of love and of duty.

Augustine has already been quoted. John Wesley wrote some striking things concerning science, and would seem to have forecasted the evolutionary theory of Darwin. This only emphasizes the fact that the evolution theory did not start with Darwin but can be traced to antiquity.

Henry Drummond was also a great religious leader, yet perhaps his most inspiring work was to show the contribution of science to religion. But as Mr. Millikan adds, "One might name practically all of the outstanding religious leaders now living and say there is not one in ten of them who did not take his place beside these men of broad vision and deep experience who see in science the twin sister of religion helping the world to better things."

The tasks of science and religion are separate and different. Vital Christianity is not touched or hindered by any scientific truth. All thinking men believe in God. The word atheism is used quite carelessly and unintelligently.

"But it seems to me as obvious as breathing that every man who is sufficiently in his senses to recognize his own inability to comprehend the problem of existence, to understand whence he himself came and whither he is going, must in the very admission of that ignorance and finiteness recognize the existence of a Something, a Power, a Being in whom and because of whom he himself 'lives and moves and has his being.'"

Mr. Millikan continues, Why is it that men who are so self-sacrificing in the hour of danger, will give up their life for a principle or to save other lives? He answers that men and women prefer to die rather than to live in the consciousness of having failed to play their part worthily in the great scheme of things. This is simply because most men believe that there is a great world scheme, that they are a part of it, that their death is going to contribute to its development.

In short, most men believe in God. It is for that reason that they are willing to die for a cause.

Science and the Bible

Speaking of some scientific literature, Thomas L. Masson makes a point which will appeal to many of us in a recent article in the Christian Century. He says:

"Scientists need sympathy and love as much as anybody. Maybe they need it more. After trying to read Doctor Einstein's book, in which he tries to explain something that I have always known, I feel like telling him that it's all right anyway, in spite of what he has written, and that I won't hold it up against him, and that he can say or write anything he pleases and I will still feel the same towards him. No scientist can make me very angry—for I've been reading the Bible too long. And even at the risk of conveying the impression that I know really more about the Bible than I do, I cannot refrain here from quoting what our Lord said when he gave thanks that 'thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes.'"

"When you ask me why it is that so many people don't know about God being the author of the Bible, my reply is that they are spiritual kindergartners. There are hundreds of them among the scientists. And—I almost blush when I say it—there are some of them among the clergy. The fact is that religion is the common possession of men, and Voltaire was right when he said that if there were no God, man would have to invent one.

Reading the Bible for Pleasure

"Great men like Edison, and also a few others who were not so great, fooled me for a long time about the Bible. They did until I got to reading it for myself for pleasure. Actually reading the Bible is a great time saver. It makes so many other books superfluous. It is, however, quite necessary for all of us to understand this spiritual grade idea. The things of the spirit are not discernible by kindergartners, and among these may be the most intellectual of men. Darwin deplored in his old age that he had lost his taste for poetry. It meant nothing to him because for so long he had been engaged in materialistic speculations. Furthermore, it must be remembered that many men through whom great spiritual power is flowing are almost wholly unaware of it. God is no respecter of persons.

"You would perhaps not believe me if I should state that, so far as I can see, all of the scientific and intellectual achievements of to-day, including art and literature, have come out of the Bible. All of these things are only the unconscious effort on the part of man to express, over again, what is in the Bible. Any honest student of history, science, and religion knows that this is true. Consider psychology and psychoanalysis as examples. They express in a somewhat perverted form, and in devious ways, what is already to be found in the Bible. The Bible is, in fact, the fullest, the most complete expression of the total consciousness of man, considered either from the material or the spiritual viewpoint. From the opening chapter of Genesis to the closing chapter of Revelation, it is an epitome of the human consciousness. Now, all along this great line, from 'Let there be light' to 'Blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book,' there is nothing that can be added, because everything has been said. Man, as psychology has so recently told us, is the creature of suggestion. Out of the Bible, we might say subconsciously, have come the impulses for men to create new cults. They would deny this. Yet it is quite true, and according to the very laws of the mind that the psychologists are so proudly exhibiting to us."

Smaller Church Buildings

A certain Jewish paper comments unfavorably on the plans of one of its congregations to build a larger temple which will not be filled more than two or three times a year, and urges that it is wiser to design an auditorium to fit the normal audience with a reasonable allowance for expansion, and put the rest of the money into education. A Christian Work editorial continues:

"To carry the overhead charges on a great building for the benefit of a small audience, except on an occasional festive occasion, while at the same time there is inadequate provision for other needs, the editor characterizes as 'un-Jewish inefficiency.' There are some Christian churches which might give consideration to this matter. A church which has a great auditorium that is never filled after the day of its dedication, except when the high school baccalaureate service is held in it one Sunday night every four or five years—but which has no primary room except in an ill-lighted basement, and no place where the Boy Scouts can meet without disturbing the choir practice or breaking up the women's missionary meeting; and no parlors where the young people can have a party under attractive conditions, is not exhibiting either good Jewish or good Christian efficiency. In general, an auditorium seating five hundred people will house a congregation of a thousand members if the membership list includes the usual proportion of nonresidents and irregulars. But what if every member should decide to come to church some Sunday? How embarrassing it would be! Yes, and if every depositor in a bank should decide to call for his money some day, how embarrassing that would be. But people ordinarily do not all do the same thing at the same time. And if the congregation grew to unexpected proportions, or developed unusual zeal for church attendance, perhaps it would be practical to have more frequent services and let the members choose among them. Protestant churches have on an average nearly three times as many sittings as communicants. Catholic churches have three times as many communicants as sittings.

Honesty Among Beggars

Of the thousands of beggars operating in the large cities of this country it is not a surprise to find that many of them are fakes. John D. Godfrey, of Brooklyn Bureau of Associated Charities, has been on the job for a score of years, investigating the habits, methods, and psychology of beggars and probably knows more about them than anyone else in this country.

According to the Literary Digest, Mr. Godfrey says:

"I have investigated or talked with thousands of mendicants. I have found men and women of extraordinary intelligence and talent. My sympathy and confidence have been given to many of them—mistakenly, I admit. Looking back on it all I have to confess that I have yet to uncover a single deserving case.

"Three years ago my department sent out investigators who carefully followed up eight hundred cases of street begging. Not a single case was genuine. In every instance the mendicant was a professional."

It seems that fakes are the rule and honest beggars the exception.

A Proclamation

Labor Day and Labor Sunday observance throughout America asked by American Federation of Labor Executive Council in inspiring appeal.

Having regard for the need of keeping constantly before the masses of our people the highest ideals of our labor movement and the requirement of our people for the complete fullness of life in all things, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor declares as follows:

The labor movement of America demands for all of our people the full benefit of the life-giving forces of our marvelous civilization through constantly increasing wages and improvement of working conditions and through a reasonable and proper reduction in the hours of work.

The labor movement of America demands for the wage earners and for all who serve usefully in any capacity, a sound and just economic basis for life and freedom in the fullest meaning of those terms.

The labor movement of America has ever had high regard for the development of the ethical and the spiritual in life, realizing the right of all humanity to partake freely of the great satisfaction that comes to enrich life as a result.

The labor movement of our country, recognizing the fact that all freedom and all higher development of life rest upon first providing assurance of the essentials of existence, has first demanded economic justice as a basis for all other things.

But the labor movement has always taught that the material is essential to something higher, and that the inspiration of our movement has its deepest springs in something above and beyond the material.

The labor movement strives for economic improvement with unrelenting zeal and fidelity because economic improvement is the first fundamental requisite; but it holds out to all mankind a flaming torch lighting the way to a greater fullness of life, to complete realization of the finer and nobler aspirations of the mind and soul.

The labor movement fixes as its goal nothing less than the complete richness of life, without limitation of any kind, the attainment of the complete human ideal, in all of its economic, ethical, and spiritual implications.

Through the inspiration of our labor movement, the Sunday preceding Labor Day, which is the first Monday in September each year, has come into general national observance as Labor Sunday. On this day it is fitting to give thought to the aspirations of Labor and to find in what way the soul of Labor may give thought and expression to its longings.

Because of the aims and aspirations here set forth, we hold it fitting that all churches draw close to their altars the soul of Labor on the coming Labor Sunday and that the men and women of labor everywhere make special effort to cooperate with the churches and to secure the cooperation of the churches with them, in order that there may be in the churches everywhere on that day a great unison of expression in behalf of a higher, nobler life for the masses of our people; and in order that there may be everywhere a consecration to the cause of human betterment, particularly in those things that lead to ethical and spiritual growth—in those things that give flower and fruit to the great ideals of our labor movement, the embodiment and the expression of the idealism of our people.

May Labor Sunday each year bring home to the masses of our people the great good that humanity may yet achieve, the lofty heights to which it may climb, the inspiration and the enrichment to be found in the great American labor movement which is the hope of the millions who toil.

We ask also that Labor Day, the great holiday of the toiling masses, dedicated to them and to their cause, be ennobled and enriched by an expression of the same spirit, the same high idealism and purpose, the same uplifting, inspiring search for the fullness of life, and the same determination to achieve triumph over all ills and wrongs through our great movement in its ethical and spiritual aspects, as well as through its purely economic operations.

Teaches School at Eighty-Two

Miss Nellie F. Cornell, at the age of eighty-two, is principal of the Ellwanger and Barry Primary School in Rochester, New York. During the sixty years she has taught, four generations of one family have passed through her classes.

The remarkable thing is that she sympathizes with and understands her youngsters. "The young people I meet to-day," she says, "seem just as promising to me as the young people I knew when I was young. They dress differently and their amusements are different, but it seems to me their impulses average up just about the same."

If more adults had her attitude to-day, the young people would be more easily reached, because a common understanding could be found. It is only through a sympathetic knowledge of the other person that we pull together. When both stand off and criticize, with no effort to get acquainted, then the other half of the world looks wrong.

Our Greatest

Who are the seven greatest Americans? This question is answered by James Harvey Robinson, formerly of Columbia University, in the American Magazine.

He admits the task is almost impossible but presents a list and gives his reasons.

The first he selected was Abraham Lincoln, passing by such men as Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. The second name is Theodore Roosevelt, whom he says lived six or eight lives in the span of one. Jumping to industry, Mr. Robinson chooses John D. Rockefeller as third, and in science Thomas Edison is awarded an uncontested place as fourth on the list. In the field of American literature Mark Twain is placed as fifth; then the problem switches to modern thought. Here he awards sixth place to William James because of his vision in the new psychology; and the last place to John Dewey, of Columbia University, as the foremost of modern philosophers and thinkers.

Blind Girl Recognizes Colors

Can we see with our noses and hear with our fingers?

Current Opinion gives an account of Willetta Huggins, seventeen-year-old blind and deaf girl of Janesville, Wisconsin, who recognizes colors by the sense of smell and people by their personal odors.

By touching the finger tips to the throat of a person speaking, she can understand what is said. Under careful scientific tests she has demonstrated her ability to do many startling things such as to read newspaper headlines by "feeling" the ink and to hear concerts by sensing vibrations. These experiences she describes accurately.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Reunion News

"Going to reunion this year?"

"Why, yes; certainly. We have good reunions in our district."

Quite a common statement among Latter Day Saint people about this season of the year! They greet each other thus instead of with the formal statements concerning the weather.

Next time you ask this question just stop to consider how many reunions the Saints hold during the summer season! Now just how many would you guess, without reading any farther? One would say, "About forty," but it is nearer fifty, forty-nine to be exact.

Up to this date in the HERALD we have published the time and place of forty in the reunion calendar. Several of these are now over and the people in those districts are not asking, "Going to reunion this year?" No, they have reached the next stage and are inquiring, "How did you enjoy reunion this year?"

In thinking of such a large number of reunions, we begin to wonder who the speakers were and how some of the speakers found their way into certain localities. Of course this has to be done with systematic arrangement of some sort or there would be an immense confusion resulting from everyone bidding for the same speaker. So as fast as the appointments are made a reunion schedule is made out in the reunion committee offices, with the names of those under reunion appointment and the places they shall visit. These names are not only missionaries, but also field workers who represent the different departments.

Besides the local talent, here are some of the speakers who will appear at reunions:

News of the Fargo Reunion

Bishop James F. Keir spent his twenty-second wedding anniversary, June 30, at the joint reunion of the Minnesota and North Dakota districts held at Fargo, North Dakota.

Apostle J. A. Gillen left July 2 at the close of the Fargo Reunion for Burlington, North Dakota, where he will spend the Fourth of July at the home of Brother and Sister M. D. Graham. From there he goes west to attend other conferences and reunions.

A wiener and marshmallow roast was enjoyed Friday evening, June 29, by those camping on the reunion grounds.

The choir of the Fargo Branch gave a cantata Sunday afternoon, July 1, which showed conscientious preparation and considerable ability.

The social committee entertained the women on the afternoon of June 29 in the big tent with drawing and guessing contests, and served peaches for refreshments.

A complete account of the reunion will appear in a following issue.

Reunion at Inman, Nebraska

Our reunion was handicapped from several causes. First, the weather was cool and wet for some time before and during the first part of the meeting. This made travel by auto difficult and put the farmers behind with their work. Second, some of the workers were unable to be present. Brother Hubert Case could not come on account of a debate in Oklahoma. Elders E. E. Long and Joshua Carlile, however, were with us and most of the preaching fell to them. We also heard from a number of the local elders. The themes "Consecration," "Zion building," "Living our daily religion and spreading the gospel," all received more or less notice in the sermons and prayer meetings.

Our musical features were sadly crippled for want of performers. What local talent we could get was pretty good and greatly appreciated. Sister Zaida Payne was present for a few sessions and could give excellent help with the piano. Also Sister Beck, of Norfolk, was present on the last Sunday and assisted.

There were two prayer services arranged for the children and young people that were fairly well attended and enjoyed by them. Prayer services for all were held every morning, and while the attendance was not large, there was a calm and peaceful spirit present and many fervent prayers and strong testimonies found expression. Some problems meetings were held and vital topics discussed.

The recreational activity found expression almost entirely in bathing in the Elkhorn River that runs near the camp.

The purpose of the reunion was a combination having in mind spiritual revival, social opportunities, and recreation.

We had no regular dining service previously arranged, the plan being to have the campers come equipped to care for themselves. This was clearly a mistake, for some coming for a short time would have been glad to patronize an eating establishment. To bridge this difficulty one of the sisters enlarged her culinary department and converted her camp into a common stock restaurant where sundry hungry ones contributed to the larder and ate at the table.

There were nine tents on the ground, and these with two cots in the pavilion where the meetings were held, furnished sleeping accommodations to all who stayed on the grounds.

The previous organization of the reunion consisted of the presidency of the district and the heads of the departments in the district. In addition to this committee there was a committee on tents, cots, and grounds. F. S. Gatenby acted as financial agent and sufficient money was collected to meet all expenses, with a balance remaining.

We had visitors from Neligh, Clear Water, Inman, Valentine, Page, Royal, Meadow Grove, Norfolk, Elgin, Foster, and the Sandhills. Brother Long made himself useful by meeting the trains with his car and conducting people to the grounds.

One was baptized and others brought near the kingdom.

Looking Forward to the Nauvoo Reunion

"A visit to historic Nauvoo will obtain for you historic information of lasting value to yourself and work," so wrote Brother Amos Berve when he sent in the reunion notice from his district.

Notice their plan for making a dormitory in the Nauvoo House and think how you can sleep there and dream of the days of the '40's, providing you have previously studied your history.

They plan that the work of the reunion of Nauvoo District shall be inspiring and helpful spiritually, physically, and morally. One of the features given special attention will be a study period. There will be speakers of experience and talent from among the Quorum of Twelve, high priests, and elders. One of the patriarchs will be on the grounds during the reunion. Their field worker, Blanche Edwards, is among the best.

Reunion Chart

At the Far West stake reunion last August a large muslin chart was erected near the main tent. Across the top appeared the names of the days of the week and date for each day of the reunion. Down in the left-hand side vertically appeared the hour of each meeting during the day, first for the main tent, then for the auxiliary tent, and third for the children's tent. At a glance one could determine for any day in the week and hour what was to be expected at the main tent, also what services were being held and at what hour in the auxiliary tent or in the children's tent.

This naturally required preparation beforehand as the program was laid out in advance.

They suggested last year that they may this year tack up cards for each day so as to permit of modification in the program of the day and at the same time show what may be expected for each hour. The objection is that cards are subject to injury by rain.

Reunions at other places have used the blackboard and have showed the evening before the program for the next day. This also is subject to the elements, especially where, as is usually the case, the blackboard or bulletin is placed near the main tent but outside exposed to the elements.

A year ago the stake president and stake bishop stated that they would plan a better program for this year and that it would be in preparation throughout the whole year.

Planning in advance is one of the safest means of securing a good reunion.

Southern New England Reunion

The Southern New England reunion opened Saturday, June 30, to continue in session until the first Sunday in September. The Presidency consists of President Elbert A. Smith, District President W. A. Sinclair, President of the Reunion Committee Edward L. Traver, and Bishop M. C. Fisher.

The boys and girls of the camp are being looked after by Brother McNamara and his wife, of Independence, Missouri, and Lucie H. Sears, of Massachusetts.

Sunday morning sacrament service was well attended and a good spirit ushered into the opening of our services. At 3.30 p. m. Brother Joseph Luff preached, expressing the thought that we conform to God, not God to us. It was intelligently presented and held the interest of all. During the two special weeks of services the Sunday preaching will be at 3.30 instead of in the evening thus allowing everybody to remain for service and drive home before dark.

July Fourth was celebrated on the camp grounds with a large brush fire the night before, followed by picnics and social gatherings during the day.

The campers during the past few weeks silently collected and had workmen put in a very fine fireplace, mantel, and tablet in the cottage of Bishop M. C. Fisher, nicely engraved with appropriate words of appreciation for his untiring efforts to serve and build up the community. The prayer was offered by Daniel F. Joy and the presentation speech by President Elbert A. Smith to which the bishop very feelingly responded.

Brother Joseph Luff has now become a resident of the Eastern reunion community having purchased the cottage of W. A. Sinclair.

In Australia

Apostle M. A. McConley left Melbourne, Australia, for Adelaide about the middle of April, according to the Gospel Standard, after spending a few weeks in energetic work in Melbourne and vicinity. After a short visit at Adelaide he went on to western Australia about May 1. Sister McConley remained at Adelaide helping with the work there.

Temple Builders in Missouri Valley, Iowa

The people of Missouri Valley, Iowa, are enjoying the association of twenty-one Saints from other branches of the district who are there attending summer school, most of them girls of Temple Builder age.

On Thursday evening, June 21, the Temple Builders of that place gave a banquet for their visitors. After a short time spent in getting acquainted, the girls were summoned to the basement of the church where a three-course dinner was served. The members of the Department of Women assisted in the kitchen while the Oriole girls helped in the dining room. The menu and serving were in charge of Sister Grace Keairnes. The decorations were in the Temple Builder colors, blue and white, and the place cards so arranged that each one of the home girls was between two visitors.

After dinner Sister Alice Hussing, leader of the Temple Builders, gave the address of welcome and invited the visitors to all the meetings and festivities during the summer.

On June 25, the Department of Recreation gave a wiener roast for the young people. About sixty were in attendance, all taking part in the races, games, and the roast.

Llanelly Holds Special Meetings

Three Sundays were set aside during the month of May for observance of Young People's Day, Mothers' Day, and the district conference. Special programs featured the occasions and a lively interest was created.

The first of the special meetings was on Young People's Day. Although there are not many young ones in the branch, the entire program was for them and part of the contribution was by them. The sermons in the morning and evening and the program were well attended and all appeared to enjoy the day.

On the second Sunday the branch at Llanelly inaugurated Mothers' Day. This day is not generally observed in the devoting its services to that theme. White carnations were presented the mothers and the day's program dedicated to "Mother."

During the third week members of the branch turned out, men and women, to renovate the church building. The interior was re-tinted and the seats and woodwork were varnished. The exterior was cemented, with doors and window casings painted green. Each member did his part in furnishing material and labor, and the result is gratifying to the little branch. The building is now one to be proud of.

The Wales conference convened on Saturday and visitors seemed delighted at the new appearance of the building. An educational program was the main feature of the conference.

There was one baptism during the conference. Also one was baptized recently at the Llanelly Branch.

Community Vacation School for Girls

A six weeks' course for girls between the ages of six and fourteen is being given this summer at the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences on the Campus.

The summer school aims to be a community affair open to all girls between the ages indicated who reside in Independence. A charge of ten dollars for the six weeks' course is being made.

Bertha Constance and Sarah Butler, graduates of the kindergarten course of the Institute, are teachers in charge.

The vacation school consists of stories, swimming, games, and handwork such as basketry and clay modeling.

There are twenty-six at present enrolled and more are expected. The course began July 2 and will continue for six weeks. This is the first course to be held in the Institute since the purchase of the new grounds in Independence.

The Methodists have recently changed the word tithe so that now it reads "one tenth." This was done, says the Central Christian Advocate, to make clear to the people what was meant by a tithe.

The enrollment pledge of the Methodist Million now reads: "In loving loyalty to my Lord, and as an acknowledgment of his ownership, I covenant to pay one tenth of my income for the purpose of maintaining and extending the kingdom of God."

Harmonica Discovers Musical Talent

A. N. Hoxie originates idea. Harmonica contests to become national.

The harmonica has been adopted as a pedagogical aid in determining and developing musical talent. Albert N. Hoxie, general church chorister, originated the idea and initiated the movement which started in Philadelphia and which is rapidly spreading throughout the United States.

Musical America publishes the following account of the harmonica contest:

Instrumental music, we have been told, had its beginning in a reed flute or in a syrinx which was a set of four or five bits of reed tuned rudely into something like a scale. Browning has pictured Pan sitting among the reeds by the river, blowing a tune. And now the modern equivalent of the ancient syrinx, the mouth organ, or, to give it its more grandiloquent appellation, the "harmonica," has burst forth into popularity, not merely as a street corner diversion for the idle newsboy, but as a potent and accredited factor in music. This may seem a far cry, but it has all happened quite logically and through the far-sightedness of one man who has more than once taken an active part of importance in the country's music. This man is Albert N. Hoxie, jr., of Philadelphia, whose work with great choruses in the war years is a matter of history.

"The idea of using the harmonica came to me originally," said Mr. Hoxie, "through my desire to put at the disposal of every boy some musical instrument by means of which he could express such musical feelings as he possessed. A piano is out of the question in a large number of cases on account of the cost, and even the cheapest violin is beyond the reach of many, besides which both these instruments entail more expense in the matter of lessons, not to speak of arduous hours of practice from which many boys shy away. The harmonica, however, costs little or nothing and the matter of technique, though it does require some work to become proficient, is not a serious one.

"I discussed the subject with Clara Abbott, the supervising director of the Philadelphia Music League, and the idea finding favor, the League purchased 2,500 harmonicas at wholesale and distributed them in community centers, schools, among the Boy Scouts. This was not done from the social welfare standpoint, but from that of spreading the musical idea.

Latent Powers Developed

"Well, it took hold like wildfire! And the curious part of it is that we found a great deal more in it than we had first imagined. For instance, a boy's musical possibilities became evident very soon from the way he went at his mouth organ and from the size and character of the 'répertoire' he acquired. This is more or less obvious, as it depended almost entirely upon the boy's ear. If a boy was fundamentally unmusical, he either lost interest in a short while or did not display any particular proficiency in handling his instrument or enterprise in learning new tunes.

"But the others! You can frame no idea of the avidity with which they went at it and the ingenuity with which they went about acquiring melodies. Some of them kept lists of their répertoire and exhibited real pride in increasing the number of tunes they could play. Of course they began with popular ones like 'Old Black Joe,' 'The Suwanee River' and so forth, but several of them came to me and said they wanted to improve the quality of their 'pieces.'

"Now, you can see what an advantage that is, musically, for it sharpens their ears and makes them attentive to music at all times, particularly to music they have not heard before, as there is a certain rivalry in learning pieces that the other boys don't know.

"Finally, we decided to have a contest, and it proved a considerable undertaking. We began with 2,500 boys. Rehearsals were held in the Y. M. C. A. in classes of 400 each, four nights a week, and we were able by degrees to reduce the number of contestants to fifty-six. We engaged Borrah Minevitch, who is a real virtuoso on the mouth organ, and who has played as soloist with orchestra, to go to playgrounds, community centers, schools, clubs, churches, and among the Boy Scouts to give instruction, and the results that were obtained were amazing.

"The fifty-six each received an invitation from Mayor J. Hampton Moore of Philadelphia to come to his office and play for him. This naturally made a great hit with the boys. Two brothers walked six miles from a suburb to enter the competition and another called me up over the telephone and played to me over the wire in order to see if I thought he was good enough. This lad, Jimmy Tyson, won the first prize. From the fifty-six we selected twenty-four for the finals, which were held in the Broad Street Theater on May 3.

"A tremendous lot of interest was taken in the contest by the newspapers and by the commercial houses. One of these later offered a complete outfit of clothing, 'inside and out,' for the winner, and Harry Jordon, manager of Keith's Theater, offered a week's engagement at $150. Each contestant in the finals was also awarded a fine Hohner harmonica. Then there were gold, silver, and bronze medals, donated by the Music League.

"The first prize was won by James M. Tyson, with Frank Kane a close second. So close was the decision that Gilbert R. Coombs of the Coombs Conservatory of Music offered him a scholarship in any musical study he preferred. He chose the violin, and one of the daily papers donated an instrument for him. The third prize went to Paul Robinson. The judges were Joseph Pasternack, conductor of the Victor Orchestra; Doctor Herbert Tily, conductor of the Strawbridge & Clothier Chorus; Leigh Mitchell Hodges, of the editorial staff of the North American, and Bruce Anderson Carey, of Girard College.
