Bishop McGuire presented the following for membership on the Board of Publication: Bishop B. R. McGuire, Bishop

F. B. Blair, Arthur E. McKim, Bishop M. H. Siegfried, and T. J. Watkins. The conference sustained the board as named.

Then were sustained the—Children's Home Trustees.
Graceland College Board.
Graphic Arts Bureau.
Sanitarium Trustees.
Order of Enoch.

The question of the departments came up for consideration and President F. M. Smith made the following statement:

"I felt a great relief when Brother Floyd McDowell came into the Presidency to take this departmental work off my hands, and I do believe that you all have confidence enough in Brother McDowell and his administration of these departments to realize that he is going to do the very best thing it is possible to do. I do not think it is wise to make any changes just at present. It may be necessary in the future. We don't know, but if Brother Floyd has any statement to make in regard to the departments we would like to hear from him."

Statement of President F. M. McDowell

President F. M. McDowell made the following statement:

"Personally, I am glad to see the day dawning when we are taking much more interest in our departments as a church, and as far as I am concerned I am going to express myself as absolutely willing that all matters concerning the departments be brought to you for approval as far as such is possible and consistent with an efficient administration.

"I have no desire to conceal or keep from you in any way the administrative plans of these departments. I desire above all things that we shall be united and working towards the same goal, which goal, as I conceive it, is Christlike character.

"It shall be my policy, if I may be said to have a policy, to work to remove anything from our departments either in method, content, or administration that does not work toward the bringing of men and women, boys and girls to a fullness of the measure of the stature of Christ. I am going to ask your cooperation, assistance, and criticism to the end that we may eliminate anything that does not function in bringing us to this worthy end.

"We have confidence in the men and women who are assigned to work in these departments. I have enjoyed working with them and feel sure that they are in the process of working out a plan that is going to mean wonderful things to this church. They are consecrated to the life of childhood. They are striving to work out such a program of religious education as shall result in the development of a group of men and women who are ready and willing to live together in peace and harmony. The supervision of the work of caring for our young is one of the most sacred trusts that can be given any men in the church. We shall desire to know frequently that you are sustaining us in this most important work."

The following departments were then sustained by the conference:

The Sunday School Department.
Department of Women.
Department of Recreation and Expression.
Publicity Department.

The list of appointments was then read, which appears herewith.

General Conference closed with the following prayer by President Elbert A. Smith:

Closing Prayer of Conference by President Elbert A. Smith

"O God, now we pray thee to let thy servants go in peace. We thank thee for the all-prevailing Spirit of grace that doth so forgive our follies, our quarrels, our shortcomings, our every weakness, and we pray that that Spirit of grace may never depart from us; that as we receive it so bounteously from thee, we may pass it on to others, and under the mantle of our charity they may find our forgiveness, even though they may not ask it.

"Bless these missionaries who go into many fields, and in hours of loneliness may they feel that they have one friend in thee, the Son of God. Be with those who are pastors to feed thy sheep. May they be wise and careful, we pray, in their stewardship. Bless those whose duty it is to disperse the funds of the church. Guide them wisely, that they may always do the things that shall please thee. Be with those who preside, O Lord; forget us not, we pray. Take these, thy people, and lead them this coming year until we meet again, we pray, in Jesus' name. Amen."

Salvation is the theme of sermons preached at the sixty-ninth General Conference. Each day a sermon was delivered at 11 a. m. upon some subject of this theme. These were published in the Conference Daily and are now being used in the HERALD.

"What Must the World Do to Be Saved?"

"What must the world do to be saved?" was the question John Blackmore was to answer on Thursday, October 4, at eleven o'clock. He took for his texts: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me," and "Where there is no vision, the people perish."

The world is a complexity of complex groups, said Brother Blackmore, and each of the complex groups is made up of intricate groupings with different interests and standards. These complexities are continually changing. The world is not what it was a hundred years ago; ten years hence it will be different from what it is to-day. The same trees may exist, but even they will be changed; and humanity will have found new ways to express itself. All this complexity, all this changing is baffling. It is taxing the great minds who to-day are trying to solve the problem.

Brother Blackmore defined the term "saved" as a deliverance from spiritual death, or as a state of being in harmony with God. The world to be saved must be in harmony with God's will.

Basis of Trouble

Behind the world's differences are international jealousies, distrusting, and rivalries. These three evils are the basis of all the national troubles. They are a dangerous combination, yet they have always existed. If the world is any worse to-day because of them, it is because the evils are backed up with greater intellectual power than has ever existed.

Back of the national life of America, England, and all other nations is the group jealousy, distrust, and rivalry. In these units is the further complication of individual jealousy, distrust, and rivalry. The cause of these rival units is the different interests and standards, first of the nation, then of the groups, and lastly of the individuals. These causes, he said, like the evils, have always existed. A few hundred years back different standards were found among the lords and peasants of England. At an earlier date they were seen in Rome under the names of patricians and peasants.

Reasons for Differences

He named three reasons for these differences: environment, ignorance, and heredity. A country surrounded by water has not the same problems to meet as the people in the desert. Difference in educational developments raise and lower the standards of groups. Many are born into levels of life from which they cannot escape. Even in free America it is the exceptional child who, born in the slums, rises above it.

So the great social problem is, after all, a community problem. Every approach to the problem comes up through the channels of the community. And the communities are made up of individuals.

"Back to Christ," has been a trite saying the last few years. "The world for Christ" means every individual for Christ, beginning with yourself first. To teach this to the world, it must begin first with the child, then the home, then the adult; but by all means stress the child first. To save the next generation the children of to-day must be instructed in social consciousness. Social consciousness must take the place of individualism. Nations must be taught to live, not on the basis of narrow nationalism, but the world as a brotherhood of men and God as their Father.

Favors World Brotherhood

This teaching should be in the educational institutions of the world. Under present conditions America studies history from an American viewpoint; England and France each from their own viewpoint. The National Educational Association, which met in San Francisco last July, favored that world brotherhood be placed in the textbooks of the schools in every nation. Ministers alone cannot bring the message to the world. It must be heard in the universities, colleges, grade schools, churches, Sunday schools, homes, and playgrounds, all the world coordinating in the one great activity.

"Ignorance of good is evil," Brother Blackmore said, "and the source of all other evils." It is impossible to legislate good; the world must educate it. Christianity is the love of God in the heart of the individual; and social forms, which would redeem the world, must be based on individual reformation.

"What Must the Saint Do to Be Saved?"

The speaker who had been chosen to discourse on the sixth theme of the series of gospel sermons was Elder Arthur E. Stoft, president of First Philadelphia Branch last year. He spoke Friday morning, October 5, at the eleven o'clock hour on the theme: "What must the Saint do to be saved?"

The first thing to which he called attention was the definition of the term "saved." This he interpreted to mean eternal life or celestial glory, that is, meaning eternal life starting right now, not waiting necessarily for the hereafter.

He said the question called for some very plain and definite statements, and he would attempt to answer it in just two words, "Go forward."

Condition of Church

Elder Stoft likened the condition of the church at the present time to the children of Israel when they made their exodus from Egypt and reached the borders of the Red Sea, where they were confronted by the sea, and behind them Pharaoh's great army. At this time the command came from God, through Moses, the leader, to "Go forward." He said that while there was no Red Sea before us, there was a sea just as deadly, and might prove just as disastrous—the sea of division, of distrust, and of disloyalty. The principle involved in the stewardship idea, he said, was our rod of safety.

One of the ways in which he said we could "go forward," is by paying our tithing. Tithing, he said, was not a gift; it was only our honest debt, and all honest people pay their debts. It was one of the essential things we could do as individuals, and it was one thing we must do if we would be saved. It was one of the ways which would help to eliminate selfishness.

Another thing we as individuals can do, is to give, give our offerings to our local branches and elsewhere when needed, and the consecration of our lives and our talents and our possessions to the work of God.

We must be loyal to the covenant we have made with God. This covenant, the speaker stated, was the most sacred of all covenants possible for man to make. Other covenants he makes are between man and man, but the covenant of baptism is made between man and his God.

Faith was another requisite mentioned, and we must not only have faith in God, but it is also necessary that we have faith in our fellow men. Our salvation, in a degree, he said, depends upon each other. Faith in God will enable us to have faith in our fellow men.

Salvation of the Soul

If we join this church that we might be saved, the speaker said, we would be making a mistake. We do not join this church to save ourselves. We join this church in order that we may work out our soul's salvation. This church only brings us an opportunity to work. And work is necessary, and as a natural consequence because of our work we are saved.

He spoke of the everyday duties of local priests, of elders, of Sunday-school teachers, and the necessity of their performing these duties as an essential part of the labor to be done, suggesting practical things which might be done by individuals in their branches, in which they could be "workers together with God." We need volunteers, he said, willing workers to perform these things.

Questions Asked

Near the conclusion of his effort Elder Stoft asked a few personal, pertinent questions of his audience:

"Has God ever helped you?"

"Has he ever extended his mercy toward you?"

"Have you ever received blessings that you were not worthy of?"

"Has he ever asked you to do something that was out of harmony with reason?"

"Has he ever extorted from you things that were too hard to do?"

"Has he been slow to hear and answer your prayers?"

"Has he ever forgotten you?"

Offers Practical Suggestion

If he has been slow to answer your prayers, the fault has been yours, the speaker stated. God has been good to us. Can we not see that he has, and can we not feel individually to bless our privilege and our duty to be good to him?

He enumerated again some of the things necessary for us to do—to pay our tithing, to offer ourselves as a living sacrifice before God, to have faith in God and in the ultimate triumph of his work, to hold fast to the rod of iron, to move on and occupy as we should occupy, and ultimately we should be saved in the kingdom of God.

Orchestra Gives Concert

The Auditorium Orchestra presented their conference program in a concert given in the tabernacle tent Wednesday evening, October 10, at 8 o'clock.

The concert was attended by a large audience, although the huge tent was not filled to capacity. The musical numbers were interesting and greatly appreciated by many present. The selections were well chosen, lending versatility to the music played, while the orchestral numbers were interspersed with solo work which gave the program diversity.

Opening the concert with an overture, "The bridal rose," by C. La Vellee, the orchestra pleased the audience by its splendid work at the outset. This was followed by the famous march and chorus from "Tannhäuser," by R. Wagner. This rendition thrilled the music lovers present as it always does when produced with telling effect, as it was at this time. A third number, "Pomp and circumstance," by Edward Elgar, was then played.

Mr. Gomer Watson followed with a violin solo, "Last rose of summer," by Vieuxtemps, this plaintive melody singing itself into the hearts of the listeners.

A bassoon solo, "Serenade comique," by Koenigsberger, was played by Mr. Clarence Erickson. This number was well rendered, Mr. Erickson being an accomplished player. The audience evidenced great pleasure over this selection.

The feature number of the evening was a cornet duet, "Ida and Dottie polka," by F. H. Losey. Mr. Walter A. Davis and Mr. Glenn W. Sinclair were the duetists, accompanied by Mrs. Pauline Etzenhouser.

The two closing numbers were by the orchestra, a sacred overture, "Abide with me," by George D. Barnard, and the "Unfinished symphony," by F. Schubert.

The orchestral work was good, and the numbers were well received by the audience.

Courtesy was extended General Chorister Albert N. Hoxie, as guest conductor. Mr. R. T. Cooper was conductor; Mr. Gomer Watson, concert master; Mrs. Pauline Etzenhouser, pianist; and Mr. George Miller, assistant pianist.

Mr. Hoxie expressed his delight at the progress being made by the orchestra. He believes it is truly an institution of Zion and that it is doing a splendid piece of work.

The concert began at 8.00 o'clock, the usual 7.30 song service being omitted.

Nurses Give Entertainment

The nurses of the training school, Independence Sanitarium, gave a program at the Stone Church, Saturday night, October 13.

It was an interesting bit of work and exceptionally entertaining. The papers and tableaux were good and the play was well presented.

A great work is being done by these nurses at the Sanitarium and anything extra in the way of entertainments given takes much work and overtime. Especially are their efforts appreciated. Miss Gertrude Copeland, in charge of the nurses, is to be commended for her part in the success of the entertainment. Her able conduct of the training school was carried over to the program which was delightful and much appreciated.

The numbers on the program were as follows: Hymn; paper, Jane Delano; tableau, Jane Delano; paper, "The lady of the lamp"; tableau, "The lady of the lamp"; paper, "Red Cross nursing"; tableau, "Red Cross nursing"; solo, Mrs. S. A. Burgess; paper, "Public health nursing"; tableau, "Public health nursing"; solo, Miss Brewster; play, senior nurses.

EDITORIAL

Education Week

The President of the United States has issued a proclamation, setting aside the week of November 18 as American Education Week. Its purpose is to encourage thought along educational lines.

Just as Fire Week aims to lessen the danger of fire because people are thinking about avoiding fires, and Clean-up Week starts people to thinking about civic pride, so Education Week should cause people to think seriously about education, its opportunities, and at the same time stimulate an interest in its pursuit.

Quoting from the proclamation, it runs in part:

From its earliest beginnings, America has been devoted to the cause of education. This country was founded on the ideal of ministering to the individual. It was realized that this must be done by the institutions of religion and government. In order that there might be a properly educated clergy and well trained civil magistrates, one of the first thoughts of the early settlers was to provide for a college of liberal culture, while for the general diffusion of knowledge primary schools were established. This course was taken as the necessary requirement of enlightened society. . . .

We have observed the evidence of a broadening vision of the whole educational system. This has included a recognition that education must not end with the period of school attendance, but must be given every encouragement thereafter. To this end the night schools of the cities, the moonlight schools of the southern Appalachian countries, the extension work of the colleges and universities, the provision for teaching technical, agricultural, and mechanical arts, have marked out the path to a broader and more widely diffused national culture. To insure the permanence and continuing improvement of such an educational policy there must be the fullest public realization of its absolute necessity. Every American citizen is entitled to a liberal education. Without this there is no guarantee for the permanence of free institutions, no hope for perpetuating self-government. Despotism finds its chief support in ignorance. Knowledge and freedom go hand in hand.

In order that the people of the Nation may think on these things it is desirable that there should be an annual observance of Educational Week.

Now, therefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States, do hereby proclaim the week beginning on the eighteenth of November, next, as National Educational Week, and urge its observance throughout the country. I recommend that the state and local authorities cooperate with the civic and religious bodies to secure its most general and helpful observance, for the purpose of more liberally supporting and more effectively improving the educational facilities of our country.

Especially is our church interested in this movement. As a religious body we have always stood for education and for better means for bringing it to the people. We continue to urge upon our members the necessity for knowledge and its application to the solving of our problems.

With a social program far in advance of the rest of the world, with a spiritual insight deeper than our neighbors, we are confronted with the task of reaching the goal. As a means to rapid progress, intensive education on the part of all becomes imperative.

Branches should seize the opportunity of Education Week to have special programs, sermons, and lectures with the idea of stimulating interest in the educational program of the church as well as the Nation.

It is fitting that our church cooperate with similar bodies in observing the proclamation of the President of the United States.

A Formula for Good

Our attention has been called to an article in the North American Review under head of "The five dimensions," by Dudley H. Wiggins. In a quaint but interesting style it sets forth a philosophy that is sound in principle and strikingly similar to our own. An excerpt appears as follows:

Now the Bible, though containing other things, be principally the book of the knowledge of Good and Evil. Now Good and Evil be terms most broad, for Good means primarily moral righteousness; secondarily wisdom; and thirdly practicality. And Evil, likewise, meaneth moral unrighteousness, then folly, and finally impracticality. But there be such perfect coordination between righteousness, wisdom, and practicality that they well-nigh amount to the selfsame thing, for nothing may be morally righteous that be either unwise or impractical. But there be no such coordination between moral evil and its lesser phases of folly and impracticality, for one may do foolish and impractical things merely because he be ignorant, and he may have the utmost of good intentions; therefore if a contemplated action doth not yield itself to coordination, one should at least be suspicious that it be evil, for it be most certain that a thing to be truly good must be the conjunction of moral righteousness, wisdom, and practicality, and it be a way of conjunctivities that they only conjunct at certain times and places; therefore the knowledge of Good and Evil be the knowledge of real Time and Space.

The formula for good may be taken as moral righteousness plus wisdom plus practicality. This means that only in conjunction with one another can good result. An act must partake of all three qualities to be good; lacking one it is on the negative side.

On the other hand evil has no formula, for all acts, which do not coordinate with the scheme of life to complete the formula for good, lead to the reverse.

When daily actions are tested with the good formula, they appear in a different light. Whatever does not contribute to the result of good may be looked upon with suspicion, as the article says, as evil.

It would probably be appalling to many if a true test were made of one's daily doings for a week and classified in two columns: One headed good, the other headed evil, or to lessen the conscience strain, shall we say, doubtful?

But with Isaiah may we acclaim, "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil."

Work is a God-given heritage, the importance of which is indicated by the edict that the idler shall have no place in Zion. Work is our passport to Zion—intelligent, purposeful, consecrated work.

Work without an ideal will have no place in Zion, and that ideal must be socialized—it must not be selfish in its tendency.

F. M. S.

In a letter to President Smith a brother writes: "I was pleased indeed to read of the investment of stewards at Cameron, and wish I could have been present at the ceremony. Certainly the church is moving forward, and you are certainly entitled to the loyal support of the members in the work which you are doing. It makes my heart rejoice, as I have been looking forward for years to a movement of this kind, and again I congratulate you upon the work that you are accomplishing in this direction."

Blue Pencil Notes

Sometimes we dream by night. Sometimes we dream by day. A day dream published by us in Blue Pencil Notes, SAINTS' HERALD, April 25, 1923, had at least a partial fulfillment at the close of the late conference. You who were in attendance at the closing session please reread the dream in the light of what you saw. In part the dream ran as follows:

"The wielder of the Blue Pencil had a dream in the daytime. He fancied that the Angel of Clear Vision moved among the Saints with the magic wand that dissipates notes and beams. The Angel

Death of Francis M. Sheehy

Brother Frank Sheehy is dead. Thousands of his friends, for he was known and loved throughout the church, will be saddened to know that General Conference and the assemblies of the Saints will know his presence no more. But his passing out was as promised in the Scriptures, and he went to sleep as peacefully as a child.

Brother Sheehy had been failing for some three years. His cheerful, jocular way had not changed, but his body had gradually been weakening. This last summer he went back to his old home for a final visit and spent several weeks among the friends in the East to whom he had ministered for so many years. He came back to his home in Independence just before conference time and was present almost every afternoon at the business sessions.

On Saturday, the closing day of conference, he was present but was unable to stay the session out. He was taken home and by that evening had developed pneumonia, and it was thought wise to take him to the Sanitarium. His condition remained much the same until Wednesday, but about 10 o'clock that evening, October 17, he went to sleep and failed to waken again.

Surviving Brother Sheehy are his wife, Sister Emily B. Sheehy; a daughter, Sister C. O. Leeka, of Independence; and a son, Randall D. Sheehy, of Kansas City.

The funeral was held in the beautiful Sheehy home in Independence, and a wealth of flowers paid visible tribute to the esteem in which he was held. The house was crowded with friends, and the service was beautifully impressive. Bishop B. R. McGuire offered the prayer, and Doctor Joseph Luff preached the sermon. Sister I. A. Smith sang a solo, "Leave it with Him," and a quartet sang, "Beautiful home."

The active pallbearers were Doctor A. L. Murphy, H. E. Cudworth, Thomas Crick, William Erickson, A. H. Knowlton, and B. L. McKim. Honorary pallbearers were John W. Rushton, Paul M. Hanson, J. F. Curtis, T. W. Williams, F. A. Smith, E. E. Corthell, C. E. Guinand, and Ralph W. Farrell.

Interment was in the Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri.

The death of Francis M. Sheehy on the night of October 17 at the Independence Sanitarium marked the close of a life full of service to the church and humanity. He was born the first of June, 1851, at Norwich, Connecticut, but did not become associated with the church until January 29, 1871. His father and mother were from Catholic families. He was given a good general education and continued as a careful student all his life.

Ordinations

Shortly after his baptism he returned from Santa Cruz, California, to Providence, Rhode Island, where with characteristic zeal he assisted to strengthen a small branch struggling for existence. He was ordained a deacon in December, 1872, then the following April, 1873, a teacher; in May, 1874, a priest; April 16, 1876, an elder. In 1873 he attended the General Conference and with John Gilbert reported on the work in New England.

FRANCIS M. SHEEHY

In 1883 he was appointed on a mission to New England and labored there and in the Maritime Provinces by conference appointment continuously until 1898. He also served for many years as president of the Massachusetts District (now the Southern New England District). In the past forty years he has attended every General Conference with the exception of two. In 1886 he was ordained a seventy and in 1897 was chosen and ordained one of the presidents of seventy.

He was much interested in the departments of the church and made the motion in General Conference April, 1890, to organize a Sunday school department.

Up to that time the work had been carried on in General Conference. The purpose of this organization was not to take the Sunday school from the church, but rather to secure a better organization of that work so that it might give better support to the work of the church. He was appointed by the conference one of the committee of five to secure this better organization of Sunday school work.

Interested in Young People

Also in 1892 and 1893 he was instrumental in the organization of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society. The request was first presented to the conference and referred back to the young people with power to act. Elder Sheehy presided over the first convention and proposed the name as representing at once its literary and also its religious character, and its greater purpose, to prepare the young people of the church as builders of Zion. The social and recreational work was also strongly emphasized in its organization and early work.

Returning to New England he established the first young people's societies under the supervision of the General Zion's Religio-Literary Society in that field. In fact, he always felt a keen interest in the young people and in the work of both of these departments.

In 1887, and again in 1889, he acted as assistant secretary at General Conference. In 1898 he was appointed to California, but in 1900 was again returned to the East to New York and Pennsylvania. In that year Elder Sheehy was selected and ordained as a high priest, then in 1901 sent to preside in Chicago. But on April 16, 1902, he was called and ordained an apostle, in which office he continued for eighteen years. He frequently commented on the fact that he was probably the only man in the church who had held in turn each office of the Aaronic and Melchisedec priesthoods to that of apostle.

Work As an Apostle

As an apostle he was associated first with Ulysses W. Greene in charge of the northeast section of the United States from Ohio to the Maritime Provinces, from Virginia to Canada. He continued in that field until 1907 when he was associated with F. A. Smith in charge of the Pacific slope. Later he was associated with John W. Rushton in the same field, and in 1912 was continued alone. In 1915 he was appointed to Kansas, Missouri, and Central and Southern Illinois. His work since has been principally in the central section, though it has included several trips to visit his friends in Southern New England.

While in charge of the Pacific slope he accompanied President Joseph Smith to the dedication of the church in Honolulu on October 13, 1907. Then early in 1910 he opened up the work in Mexico, calling to his assistance William S. Pender, Charles J. Cady, and William H. Mannering. This work continued until conditions in Mexico made missionary work impracticable for the time.

He was interested in all departments of church work, and by request presided over the first session of the Daughters of Zion and assisted in its organization. He was much interested in the later development of the Department of Women, and in calling its work to the attention of his brethren in the missionary department of the church.

He was one of the first to take a deep interest in American archæology and was a member of the archæological committee from the date of its first appointment April 11, 1894. When the committee was disorganized in 1917 he still continued for a few years in charge of that work. He read more than a hundred works on American archæology, prepared the Book of Mormon maps, and was always ready to give the best results of his research to the church. He was for several years one of a committee to prepare articles for encyclopedias and school histories and met with much success in correcting such errors.

Representative at Washington

At the time of the Reed Smoot investigation he spent parts of three winters in Washington looking after the interests of the church. He was a close friend of Senator Burroughs and also of Senator Dollinger and had a seat reserved for him at all sittings of the committee.

In 1915 as representative of his quorum he made the formal motion placing Frederick M. Smith in nomination for president of the church. He was not content to make a simple motion but spent some time in research setting forth the reasons and principles governing.

During his ministerial work he held many debates from 1880 on, and many of them with agnostics and infidels. As he himself said in 1910, when thus standing in the defense of Christ he had never known lack.

Nor was his work and interest limited to the church. He was a wide reader and careful student, a deep thinker, deliberate in his delivery, and of a logical turn of mind. He was deeply concerned in the cause of temperance, and at the death of Francis Willard prepared the resolution which was presented to General Conference on that sad event. While he had very positive characteristics and opinions, his uniform courtesy and kindness prevented any offense.

For several years prior to his release from the Quorum of Twelve in 1920, his health was failing, but the splendid work of some fifty years of active ministry stands as a perpetual memorial.

Nemo's Noddings

It often has been observed that an idle officer is frequently a severe critic of those who are at work. It is probably a result of a conscience smarting under a sense of duty, and a "defense" is built up by finding fault with what is being done.

If you find yourself disposed to find fault with what others are doing, it is well to introspect to discover from whence the inclination arises, and to analyze your own activity.

A fair appreciation of your own activities in an effort at self-analysis may make you very charitable towards other workers.

Neglect of duty is frequently followed by mischief. The inclination of idle hands is in that direction.

Jealousy of the success of other men's successful endeavor is an effective tool in Satan's hands.

Attempts to work in an office for which one is unfitted is an open door to disorder and confusion. It is well, therefore, to know one's own limitations.

A man who knows accurately his own limitations is an educated man. For one end or aim of education is to know one's limitations.

Experience is a severe educator, and when we have by observation and learning failed to comprehend our limitations we are in for some sad experience.

Zion as an ultimate social ideal made practical will be the result of evolution. We have no reason to believe it will in its perfection spring into sudden existence like Minerva, full panoplied from the brain of Jove.

Social and economic evolution into Zionie conditions denies the philosophy of "Whatever is, is right." On the basis of what is of value in present institutions we must build better ones.

To appropriate what is good in present conditions we must first be able to appreciate them; and to mold them into better ones demands a clear conception of the goal, the desideratum.

Some people's idea of loyalty is closely akin to self-interests. In a dining car recently a husband and wife were overheard discussing some governmental activities as recounted in the morning paper, and the wife finally remarked: "Well, I'm strong for this government as long as it is looking out for me."

CONFERENCE NEWS

Salvation is the theme of sermons preached at the sixtieth General Conference. Each day a sermon was delivered at 11 a. m. upon some subject of this theme. These were published in the Conference Daily and are now being used in the HERALD.

"What Shall We Do for Financial Salvation?"

"What shall we do for financial salvation?" was the subject of the eleven o'clock sermon Saturday, October 6. John Zimmermann, jr., of Philadelphia, was the speaker.

He took for his text the nineteenth verse of Mark 3, wherein the Master said that the house divided against itself cannot stand. The financial salvation of any business institution, he said, depends upon its credit standing, and a business house divided against itself has no credit standing. The first thing credit appraisers look for is solidarity of its constituency. If that constituency is "E Puribus Unum" then everything is all right, but if it is not then the whole becomes "Ne Plus Ultra."

"Salvation is a process, not a mere act," said Brother Zimmermann. Obedience to the elementary principles of the gospel are not sufficient to bring one up to that higher standard of life which makes one a candidate for Zion and ultimately a citizen of Christ's kingdom. This growth continues in our individual and social life so long as growth of any kind is possible. In our social salvation this growth means the practical application of the teachings of Jesus Christ in our everyday lives, even in those things which pertain to our financial affairs.

Money Alone Cannot Build Zion

The possession of wealth carries with it the possession of power, but there are certain things which money can do and which it cannot. Wealth if properly acquired and manipulated has tremendous potentialities. Money alone cannot build Zion, yet it will play an important part. It can be made to assist in building churches, schools, colleges, industrial establishments, homes, parks, and playgrounds. It will take money to build the temple. Every project we undertake will require money.

In order, said Brother Zimmermann, properly to comprehend the subject of financial salvation, it is first necessary that we lay down certain fundamental principles. He names these principles as personality, brotherhood, and service.

God, he said, values the human soul above everything else, and the purpose of our existence is the growth and development of the soul. The Master asked the question "What does it profit a man to gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" The soul of man is one of the things which money should not be able to buy.

Personality can fulfill its mission only in a social setting. Its value can only be realized in fellowship, in universal brotherhood. Brotherhood expresses itself in service such as feeding of the hungry, visiting the sick, clothing the naked, and visiting the prison.

Wealth which is held with reference to power and advantages which accrue to the owner rather than to social usefulness violates a spiritual principle.

Money is unquestionably a means to an end; as an end in itself it is reactionary and will finally bring nothing but dissatisfaction, spiritual disintegration, and death.

Wealth Needed

Our church must acquire money, lots of it, if this gospel is to be preached to all the world. Our elders may travel without purse or scrip, but there are the families to support, the printing house to maintain, education to be provided for, and preparation of trained workers to be considered. There are some of our numbers who seem to have special talents along industrial and manufacturing lines, others are bankers, still others are farmers. These men will eventually become leaders in their lines when group stewardships are established.

Brother Zimmermann quoted one Saints' Herald contributor as saying that production for profit must be abolished. Any manufactured article, says Brother Zimmermann, represents not only the raw material and labor that has been expended upon it, but represents to some extent a created value due to the new uses to which it may be put and which did not exist before. It is our privilege to make profit; the trouble arises when the profit is not properly used.

In the parable of the talents as found in Matthew 25, God clearly indicates that he expects us to bring forth increase. This can apply to financial talent as well as to any other talent. Tithing, consecration, freewill offerings, and stewardships play an important part in financial salvation.

We were all greatly thrilled with the news of certain brethren who recently entered into a stewardship agreement, Brother Zimmermann stated. It is hoped that these local movements along the line of individual and group stewardship are only forerunners of the general movement in the church.

Threefold Function of Church

In relation to financial matters the church performs a threefold function. It becomes the teacher of the principles of conduct; it is the voice of moral judgment; it is the herald of a new order. It can succeed in this only according to the readiness of its members to follow its leadership. We need not turn our eyes to a future state of Zionic conditions which exist in imagination. We must begin now.

There is one rule which in our business house has always held good and will always hold good: "Don't load a leaky ship." The ship of Zion seems to have some leaks. It will be necessary to put her in dry dock to be overhauled and made tight before she can sail again. When this is done, I believe we will move forward in a solid phalanx as a people. But first we must bury the hatchet.

Some one has said that this church cannot be saved on sentiment. It will be saved on sentiment. That sentiment is the love of God. When we have that sentiment in our hearts we can go forward. "My father," said Brother Zimmermann, "bade me bring this message to you, 'Stop your scrapping and get to work!'" Unity is what will bring about our financial salvation.

"What Shall We Do to Save the Church?"

At three o'clock on Sunday afternoon, October 7, President Elbert A. Smith addressed an audience that filled the great tabernacle to its capacity.

"What shall we do to save the church?" was the theme of the discourse which he presented at this time, beginning it with the reading of a portion of scripture from the 4th chapter of Ephesians, Inspired Version:

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we, in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

The speaker stated at the beginning that while he considered conference discussion important, and legislation valuable, when wisely taken, he did not believe these played the major role in the salvation of the church or the world. The things which will save this church, he said, will be three hundred and sixty-five days annually (including the two weeks of conference) of Christian living, of determined effort to learn how to live together, how to work together, and of determined effort to grow into the likeness of Jesus Christ.

Church Bought at Great Price

The church means a great deal to us, he declared. The church was bought with a great price—"the church of God which he has purchased with his own blood." And not only did Jesus give his blood for the church; but many of his disciples in the early days gave up their lives for the sake of the church. They purchased it with their own blood. And our fathers in this later dispensation also purchased the church with their blood. They were shot to death; they were cut down and hacked to pieces with corn knives, and buried in the well of Hawn's Mill; they were murdered at Carthage; they were driven and scattered. And so we can see that with a great price they purchased the church—even with their own blood.

The speaker said he felt that the church meant just as much to us to-day as it did to our fathers, and said that if by laying down his life unity and peace and forward progress of the church could be secured, he would be willing and glad to do it. He knew, too, that many others felt just as he did and would be glad to do it.

But we cannot do it that way, he said. We cannot save the church by lying down in death. We can save it only by standing up and living for it, and doing whatever God wants us to do. We may be willing to die for it, but Jesus commanded us to live for it.

Church Must Function to Live

Can the church be lost? he asked. The church is to save others. Can the church be lost? The purpose of the church is to save men, and if it lapses into the condition where it cannot save men, it will itself be lost, not being worthy of salvation, even as salt that has lost its power to save. How, then, shall we save the church? Any institution is saved so long as it functions as it is intended to function; but the institution or organization that ceases to function the way it is intended to function soon dies.

Illustrative of this thought, the speaker called the attention of his audience to the fact that when the heart ceases to beat, the lungs to breathe, the brain to think, the body dies. Likewise when the church ceases to fulfill the functions that it was intended to fulfill, we may conclude that it will die.

"How Can We Save the Religious Life of the Child?"

A. Max Carmichael, general Sunday school superintendent, continued the series on "Salvation," Monday morning, October 8, at 11 o'clock, by speaking on the subject, "How can we save the religious life of the child?"

This he said was a most timely question. The youth has problems to meet which we did not have. As the world brings to him richer experiences than we had, it also brings greater problems. The question of recreation looms up before him and is apt to assume an undue proportion of his time. But recreation is but one phase; he hears various sides of great moral questions discussed, he is given a greater knowledge of the sex question. There is an inclination with some to keep him ignorant, but to keep the youth ignorant is to keep him from thinking, and that is not what we want.

The problem of the morning discourse, said Brother Carmichael, was to talk on growing life, and he based many of his remarks on the address of yesterday morning. He recalled the fact that the mother must direct the child's infant days with autocratic government, and also of the necessity of her gradually relinquishing to his own self-government. He emphasized again the necessity of building up within the child correct knowledges and attitudes.

The time of thinking and doing should come simultaneously. This he said is the problem which confronts the sermon preached to a mixed congregation of children, youth, and adults. None of these three groups are doing or thinking along the same line.

We have a tendency too, he said, to start at the wrong end of our teaching. We should start with the life of the child to-day. The whole of his life should be interpreted religiously, not just the hour when he is at Sunday school. There is an inclination with some to look upon religion as a Bible story told to a child. Every act of the child should be his religion.

Re-Interpret Experiences

The child in school meets many new experiences, which need a re-interpretation to him religiously. He paused here to draw an illustration of the girl in high school whose textbooks assumed evolution. He gave this as one of the many phases of experiences which need to be interpreted again for the child. An illustration drawn at this point was that even the simple act of the child such as helping mother shell peas could be a religious act by explaining to the child his helpfulness to mother, helping prepare the food for father, and the father of the household in turn expressing in his prayer thankfulness that the child was helpful. Thus by everyday acts can the child understand true religion.

No child wants to confess his problems to a Sunday-school teacher at 9.30 on Sunday morning that the teacher may have something to talk about. Yet the Sunday-school teacher should have the child's confidence and so should the mothers. Some mothers have failed in the confidences of their children because they have not kept abreast with the changes so that they can appreciate the child's viewpoint. Some other mothers have forgotten their youth.

In order for the parents, the teachers, the priests to know the problems of the children or those with whom they labor there must first be confidence between them. Confidence begets confidence. The parents, teachers, leaders should take the first steps in confidences.

The next point is working, or playing together, participating together in a point of common interest. The five-year-old child should not be assigned a task to herself; it is the togetherness with mother, where they are confidential, that produces the tie.

The religious teacher or the parent should participate first in that which the child wants to do, then lead the child on into more worth-while activities.

Grow Into Salvation

People cannot be talked into salvation; they grow into it. It is our purpose to find the ways to assist and direct this growth. We have various ways of doing it. We talk to the child, sermonize, give experiences of our own, use biographies of others who met the like problem, and use Biblical illustrations.

We should find our stories to fit the present moral problem of the child. Create the stories if you have none in mind that fit. Christ created his stories from incidents direct in the lives of his listeners. He did not recall old Bible stories to overcome their failing morals. The quarterly, he said in this connection, is not an end. It is a means to an end. They are written primarily for the teacher who has nothing else to talk about.

"What Must We Do to Save the Women?"

Miss Blanche Edwards of Heathfield Road, Handworth, Birmingham, England, first assistant superintendent of Sunday school and leader of the young women's organizations of the church, spoke Thursday morning, October 11, on the subject, "What must our women do to be saved?"

She took for her text a part of the poem "Endymion," by John Keats,

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever:
Its loveliness increases."

The beauty of the flowers, the sky, and beautiful pictures prove it to us. One would suppose then the reverse would be true and an ugly thing would be a grief forever, its ugliness increasing. With wrongdoing it is not always true, for one becomes so accustomed to it that sin loses its dreadfulness and ceases to shock to such an extent that our delicate sense of right and wrong is in danger of getting very much blunted.

Women to be saved? Even though we are church members there are many ugly things from which we hope to be protected; around us on every hand are temptations and evil from which we pray to be spared.

Keeping Up Appearances

It has been said that women are more artificial than men, that they will put up a stronger fight to keep up appearances. The statement is a very debatable one. Men and women are both capable of being tempted to pose as being better than they are.

It is laudable to show the best there is in us, but we should not ape positions we are not capable of filling, or dress beyond our income, or infer that our social standing is better than it is. Dress and speech are trivial things to mention, yet in them can lie the root of insincerity. To be insincere in little things, leads on to be insincere in all things.

There is an old saying, "There are tricks in every trade." Women, as homekeepers, have a trade or profession. They can allow insincerity to creep into their work, and can cheapen it by trying to cover up imperfections and hide weaknesses.

In the community of her home in England, Miss Edwards said that Wedgewood china is produced. Nothing ever enters into it that would lessen the sincerity of its perfection. Josiah Wedgewood had an artistic soul that was unsatisfied with an ugly article. He found a process by which the clay could be made thin, painted, varnished, and glazed. Then daily he turned out hundreds of these articles. He insisted that each piece which bore his name should be as perfect as he could create it. It is said that he sometimes raised his cane and smashed faulty pieces to atoms.

C. H. Fiske says, "Fraudulent workmanship cheats two people: Both the person paying good money for poor work, and the workman who is undermining his own character by his bad workmanship." From insincerity in every form—speech, friendship, work, worship—may we have the courage to deliver ourselves.

"Never until I read that passage," said Miss Edwards, "had I thought to offer my day's work to the Carpenter of Nazareth. Since then in offering the day's work for Christ's scrutiny, I sometimes recognize that he sees flaws; on other days, it is a joy to look up and hear him say, 'Well done.' That is the great reward that we can claim when our work is sincere to the core."

The Search for Happiness

Again she quoted from Fiske: "The world says, 'Happy are the proud and the rich. Happy are the ambitious pushers. Happy are the voluptuous pleasure seekers. Happy are the quarrelsome who fight for their honor.'" On every hand ambitious pushers are willing to sacrifice home, friends, all for the sake of a name. By their actions we discover their motto, "Happy are the proud and rich." Contrast the statement of Jesus, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

The world is rushing after applause, and does not find the way to happiness. That thing which it thinks would bring happiness proves but an empty bubble. We should pray that we may be saved from our temptations in whatever form they may assail us.

Closely associated with insincerity are unworthy ideals. These are often not worth a quarter of the time spent upon them. Unworthy ambitions attract in an adroit way. They say to the business man, "I will make you a magnate; you shall control great industries." To the capable woman it says, "You shall be the power behind great concerns; your mind shall control great undertakings; your voice shall sway great multitudes; to you shall be given the satisfaction of hearing men constantly sing your praises; your name shall be on men's tongues." Unworthy ambition cunningly offers itself in whatever form we desire to excel. It shows but one side of itself and we follow until we realize that we have drifted too far.

Nations have been facing terrible crises in every line. Men and women know not what to do. The late war shook the morals of the world from center to circumference. Beliefs were put to test and found wanting. Men's lives were sacrificed by the thousands and human life came to be regarded as cheap. From this cheapening of life, the unrest, the unsubstantial creeds, it became easy to slip into wickedness, and for morality to ebb low. From these conditions we have not yet recovered. But the war was not entirely responsible, it only gave a greater emphasis to that which already existed.

Human nature has sunk to deplorable depths. Sacred vows and wrecked lives are treated with light-heartedness. We women are living in the world and cannot escape these things. Directly or indirectly they touch us.

The Tyranny of Housework

Many legitimate means of recreation are barred to us because they have become contaminated with evil. We should be able to enjoy wholesome dramas, moving pictures, and novels. Since these things indiscriminately indulged in are not safe for adults, what about our young? We must do our utmost to save ourselves and others from contamination. We endeavor to draw into our own homes for security. A degree of spirituality can be so obtained, even as in years ago the monasteries supplied it.

When we do this however there is a danger that we become absorbed in the material side of life and neglect the spiritual. Woman's life is so crowded that there is a danger of her being tyrannized over by her housework. Christ has said: "Man cannot live by bread alone." We must be able to hear the whisper of God's heart from any direction. Let us call our housework, home work, for some one has said that home work is a privilege not a drudgery.

"I did not realize," said Miss Edwards, "what home could mean, until I left mine five thousand miles away. I have been happy at Graceland, it is to me a wonderful experience, but it is not home. When I return home, I think I shall be able to find a greater joy than ever in home work."

The mother sometimes thinks her work narrow and restricted. There is no work greater or more noble. To mothers is given the opportunity of opening the minds and souls of little children, flooding their beings with God's light. To do this she must have knowledge, skill, consecration. It is impossible to say how far her training of them will reach. All her own hopes and dreams grow and develop in the children; in them is realized the things she longed for and couldn't accomplish. In the Biblical story of Hannah, the giving of her son was only a part fulfillment of her prayer. The big fulfillment was in his life as a prayerful judge over Israel.

Influence of Parental Stalwartness

Sister Edwards said her own parents had been in the church over forty years. They had been seriously handicapped to do for the church what they desired to do, so they did the next best thing, gave their children the training to do what they had hoped to do. "Activity in the church," said Sister Edwards, "is not a bed of roses. There have been times when I have determined to throw church work aside, but the memory of my parent's uphill fight for forty years makes it impossible for me to turn them down."

Latter Day Saints should be the happiest people in the world, with a vision of God's purpose and an opportunity to fulfill that purpose. In the busy rush of the day, we forget that we are called to be workers with God. By the channel of prayer we can come in close contact with God and link our puny strength to his might. We can take to him both our joys and sorrows.

Jesus went out on the hillside alone to talk to his Father, to renew his vision, to partake of his strength. He has bequeathed us this example. The close communion with God is infinitely worth while.

We should also study God's word from the three books, we should read other good books, we should know current events. Of course we have far too little time, but to be a wise judge in the home, how can you correctly do so without a knowledge of the world in which you live? You must adjust yourselves to the present day.

An essential result which must accompany communion and study is active service to humanity. We can realize the value Jesus put upon unselfish kindness in his command to feed the hungry and clothe the naked. If we neglect to translate our life into service, we are under great condemnation. Our service must be accompanied with love, for though we speak with the tongues of angels and have not charity, it will be as naught.

The Great Teacher said to the self-sufficient Pharisee, "Blessed are the meek." In latter days, God repeats that we must be humble and full of love. Only the humble have time to help others. The proud put too much value on their hours except in great affairs.

There is much to be saved from, much to be saved to. It will take a whole life intelligently planned, lived in close communion with God, and flowing out in service to our fellows in order that we may be saved from evil to the glory of God, and at last merit a place in his kingdom.

There are two kinds of people in this world, the "I'll-try-anything-once" kind of people and the "never-took-a-chance" people. But we are also privileged to announce that there are a few more who use a little brains on one hand and a little spinal cord on the other.

Speaks on Promotion of Religious Life

The address in the tabernacle at 9.30 a. m. Sunday, October 7, was by A. Max Carmichael, general Sunday school superintendent, on the subject of the promotion of religious life.

The task of the ministry, he said, is the promotion of religious life in the people. By this we mean to inculcate within them the essentials of Christianity such as brotherly love, kindness, prayer. For this same reason the family exists and the Sunday-school teacher has her place.

That we, as a people, may have a full self-realization in Zion, we need a larger emphasis upon our social scheme; we need a change of emphasis in our sermons and class discussions; we need to increase our effort that the democracy of God may find place on earth. Parents, pastors, Sunday school workers should be putting every ounce of energy upon teaching the democracy of God on earth.

We are, more or less, tied to the morals of the people about us. Only by a great effort will we be able to bring ourselves above our neighbors. Even granted one generation has succeeded in rising above, the next generation will have a tendency to drift back to the average of those who surround them.

Purpose of Gathering

The gathering is intended to give us an opportunity to raise ourselves above the average. The gathering is not going to solve the problem, for isolating ourselves is apt to give us an intolerant attitude. Intolerant, thought Brother Carmichael, was one of the main reasons why the people were driven from Jackson County before. As Latter Day Saints, he said, we must get in contact with our neighbors; we must have a world-wide religion. Either extreme, gathering or diffusion, is dangerous to our goal. It is only by continuous vigilance that we shall be able to lift ourselves to a higher plane. Yet we must have this vigilance, we must do the rising, for the world asks of us, "What have you that we have not?"

A glance at our present methods of religious promotion will be beneficial to us. The ideal method would, of course, be one student to one tutor. This is a costly method, so we early learned to economize with one teacher to a group of students. There are many variations of this grouping from the family with the most personal touch to scout groups, Sunday schools, churches, etc.

With these we use the rhetorical method under which we list sermons, stories, dramatizations, pictures, prayer, songs, and statuary. We use also the ritual methods, the blessing of little children, the administration to the sick, baptism, ordinations, sacrament, prayer service, and many others. The danger of these ritual forms is that they become stereotyped and formal, thus losing their stimulating power, and we come to think of the method as being an end in itself rather than the means to an end.

Expression of Talents

In God's democracy, every individual will give the fullest expression of his talents, consistent with the rights of others, and he will do this of his own free will. God will not be there to issue edicts. We will of our own accord observe to do the right thing, then will we have common consent and see eye to eye.

The child's first actions come from instinct, and his actions are soon accompanied by thought. Religion comes by action. We can increase our religion by thinking about the act, asking ourselves if that was the best act we could have performed in that place. The most intense religious moments have been when people are thinking. Christ was intensely religious because he dared to stand out and look at the Pharisees and criticize their methods. Martin Luther had the courage to look at the supposed religious acts of his time. Joseph Smith was brave enough to assist in bringing forth the Book of Mormon which struck at infant damnation and other teachings of the religious world of his day.

In our Sunday schools we do not start with the act and teach the child to think. We start with the story and try to make an application to life. Sometimes the application drawn is a thing the child never experienced; or, if he has the story, is six months away from the act.

A Perfect Society

Our goal is to so guide the child that when he has reached the adult life, he can live in harmony with perfect society. The child should be brought to this point gradually. First the mother deals with him, using autocratic government. He soon learns that a cry gets him what he wants.

There comes a time when we cease autocratic government. His adulthood must be governed from within, not from without. Men in jail are there because they could not of themselves make the moral choice. Our job is to build in the child a power which will help him choose rightly. We would not give the child of five years old the power to choose for himself between a dish of strawberries and a dish of strychnine. In such a case you use autocratic methods. Yet the same child at fifteen years of age should be able to make his choice between the church and the brothel house. He must be able to walk past it and never look that way.

The theory is easy to talk about; the practice is harder. Within the child must first be built up knowledge, which is essential in the right choice. It is truth that makes us free. And after knowledge, must come correct attitudes.

If you hold over the child always your right to dictate, he never will be able to do without you. If you succeed in getting him to make his own choice, it must be begun with simple things in which he first exercises his right of choice. If, however, when you have tried him out and he fails in the simple things to make the correct choice, about the third time he chooses wrong it is necessary to back down and begin again with autocratic methods until you have built up within him the knowledge and attitudes he should acquire. On the other hand, there is a type of parents which says to the child, "Do as you please, only keep out of my way." The better parent builds up the knowledge and attitudes of the child.

The pastor or Sunday-school teacher should seek to carry out these same principles with their respective groups. They try to educate the people so they can make the correct choice.

Ritualism in the Church

Ritualism was instituted in the church to promote religion. The sacrament, baptism, blessing of children, and administration for the sick are not an end in themselves, but a means to an end. In the administration of the sick, five per cent of the blessing received is physical, the other ninety-five per cent is spiritual. The blessing of little children is the best time in the world to get hold of the young parents to promote their religion. "I used to feel," said Brother Carmichael, "away with ritualism. I see now that ritualism has its place."

So taking these things as an end instead of a means to an end, we establish rules, and attempt to live by rules instead of principle.

To the very young child we say, "Don't put paper on the floor." To the older person we say, "Keep clean." It would do no good to talk cleanliness to the child until he has the knowledge of how to keep clean.

Religion is expressed in acts. The man who can debate in a conference discussion and guard his tongue has learned a religious principle which is of more value to him than the ability to conquer a city.

Recently a visit to a certain community caused the pastor to apologize because the congregation was so small. He had sent his congregation to another church to hear what a lecturer had to say about the Book of Mormon. That pastor did right. Our people will be saved through their own thinking. So will our youth. We must let them learn the other side that they may be converted of their own brains even as the convert we make among the outsiders.

Pageant "Revelation" Presented

Revelation passed before the eyes of four thousand spectators Saturday night, October 6, at 8 o'clock in the tabernacle tent, on the Campus.

Under the auspices of the "White Masque," formerly known as the Independence Dramatic Club, a beautiful pageant entitled, "Revelation," written by Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Burgess, was presented in all the gorgeousness of costumes and lights. The theme as set forth in the synopsis of the pageant appearing on the programs, was revelation in history, from the time of Adam to the present day, when Joseph Smith received the restored gospel from the hands of an angel. The synopsis states that world-wide tradition, age-old lore, and the Holy Scriptures of the Christian faith all continually and consistently present the story of a God who has spoken in every age to those who were willing to hear his voice. Particularly in the ancient traditions and sacred records of India, Egypt, Chaldea, Babylon, Persia, and ancient America is found the confirmation of this story of a primeval revelation from God to man at a time when man talked the language of God and of the angels. From this first great revelation came all the religions of the world. The Bible is replete with passages which proclaim a pristine revelation of the gospel of Christ.

Purpose of Pageant

The purpose of the pageant was to vivify in the hearts of the people this truth of the revelation of God to every age. From the beginning down to the present time God has spoken to man and directed him on his way.

This theme represents the rock upon which this church is built, revelation.

In the first scene Adam and Eve are seen gathering stubble outside the gates of the Garden of Eden. Having transgressed the law, they must work by the sweat of the brow, henceforth shut out from the garden by these gates guarded by a fiery sword. The beautiful setting was impressive, with the fiery sword, electrically represented, swinging back and forth before the gates. The part of Adam was taken by Kenneth Fligg, and Eve by Vera Adams.

During the scene, the voice of God spoke to Adam. A shaft of light fell upon the characters while the Voice, spoken by George Anway from behind the curtains, said, "I am God."

Scene two showed a meadow near the city of Zion. An angel appeared to Enoch and showed him in vision the sufferings of the world, led by the Devil. Across the back of the stage passed the misery of the world depicted by characters in pantomime, while Enoch watch the vision. Ronald Carmichael characterized Enoch and Pearl Gardner the angel.

An inclosed garden in Chaldea was the setting for scene three. Abraham was seen addressing a crowd of men, trying to teach them the way. One by one the crowd left, bowing at the feet of an idol as they went out. Abraham was left alone, when the power of God rested upon him. The divine light, falling upon the idol, caused it to rock, and too much for the thing of stone, it fell to the ground and was broken to pieces. Mr. F. A. Russell represented Abraham.

Near Mount Sinai, in an open space, scene four opened upon the daughters of Israel in a song and phantasy. Thunderings from the mount caused the people to shrink with fear until Moses appeared and calmed the crowd. James L. Gray played the part of Moses, John A. Gardner that of Aaron, and Marcine Smith the part of Miriam.

Best Scene Presented

In scene five the pageant reached its biggest and best presentation. The council chamber of Ahaz, King of Judah, was arrayed with colorful costumes, with many fantastically garbed couriers, dusky maidens about the foot of the throne and the guards of the king. Isaiah appeared and told the king to fear not, that Judah and her armies would be protected from the enemy. Isaiah, characterized by Kenneth Fligg, also prophesied at this time the coming of Christ. Other leading characters in this scene were Doctor Frank Criley as Ahaz; Theodore Ellidge, captain; Kenneth Morford, messenger; Francis Faunce, as Isaiah's son; and Cedric Siegfried as the page.

At the end of the scene a chorus off stage sang the "Hallelujah chorus," closing the effect with great impressiveness.

The annunciation in scene six was a quietly beautiful affair. The angel, taken by Alice Burgess, told Mary, played by Nina Smith, that Mary would be the mother of Christ.

Scene seven was a Roman road near the city of Damascus where an ancient well occupied the center of the stage. People came and went, women carrying jugs and baskets, wealthy Hebrews who threw coins to the street beggars, all were there. Saul, accompanied by his priests, appeared on the scene and were heard berating the teachings of Jesus. Saul was struck blind by a light from heaven and fell to the ground while the voice of God spoke to him.

The part of Saul was taken by C. B. Hartshorn, priests by Jack Gardner and E. C. Hamilton, the Hebrew by Clarke Buckley.

The Climax

The final and eighth scene was the chamber of Joseph Smith. Young Joseph entered with his mother to whom he related a spiritual experience. After his mother left the room a vision appeared, and the Angel Moroni spoke to Joseph, telling him of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Following Moroni's address to Joseph, he stepped forward, and facing the audience, plead with the people, repeating the admonition:

"Oh, my people, saith the Spirit,
Hear the word of God to-day;
Be not slothful, but obedient;
'Tis the world's momentous day!
Unto honor I have called you—
Honor great as angels know;
Heed ye, then, a Father's counsel,
And by deeds your purpose show."

The second verse was taken up in song behind the scenes, sung by George Anway.

The epilogue, written by Mrs. Viola Short in verse, was given by George Anway, closing the pageant.

The part of Joseph Smith was carried by Wallace Smith, grandson of the first prophet of the church. Lucy, the mother of Joseph, was taken by Mrs. Bertha Burgess, while Moroni was characterized by Maurice Filson.

The congregation arose and sang, "We thank thee, O God,

CONFERENCE REPORTS

DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS

To the First Presidency and General Conference; Greeting: The following is the brief summary of gains, losses, etc., drawn from reports received during the year 1922:

Net enrollment December 31, 1921	95,496
Gains:
Baptisms	3,640
Unreported baptisms and "restored" ..	735
Total gain	4,375
Losses:
Death	1,338
Expelled	91
"Unknown"	2,859
Correction	218
Total loss	4,506
Net loss	131
Net enrollment December 31, 1922	95,365

During the first half of the year 1923, 1,402 baptisms have been reported. For the same period in the year 1922 we received 1,490, in 1921, 2,503, and in 1920, 1,806. Our total loss for the period, January 1, 1923, to June 30, 1923, is 2,274, revealing a net loss for the first six months of 1923, of 872, and showing a net enrollment June 30, 1923, 94,592.

Our priesthood record December 31, 1922, which includes 483 ordinations entered during the year, is viz: Melchisedec, 2,101; Aaronic, 3,878; total, 5,979, divided, viz: Apostles, 11; bishops, 27; elders, 1,680; evangelists, 25; high priests, 205; seventies, 153; priests, 1,778; teachers, 1,075; deacons, 1,025. During the first six months of 1923 various ordinations were reported, making the priesthood record on June 30, 1923, to show a net gain of 61, a total of 6,040. With a net enrollment of 94,592 we discover that we have one ordained person for each fifteen members.

On December 31, 1922, we had enrolled with 672 branches in United States and Canada, 78,540. On June 30, 1923, enrolled with 679 branches, 78,931.

NONRESIDENT

In the past great numbers have been lost to the church because of being located far from branches. Names of these for a prophet," assisted by the entire cast ensemble upon the stage.

President Frederick M. Smith, grandson of Joseph the Martyr, and God's prophet on earth to-day pronounced the benediction.

Divine Theme

The finale brought revelation down to the present day, even to the minute of closing. The wonderful vision of the pageant, the divineness of the theme, and the splendid execution by the cast and directors, gave to the great audience a novelty in production and a deepness of spirit heretofore never attempted on such a scale.

Great credit is due the producers of the pageant. Mrs. Zella Harder was manager; Gladys Newton, director; Nina Smith, assistant director; costumes and properties executed by Louise Newton; music director, Paul N. Craig; lights, Vance Eastwood; carpenter, Francis Holm; business manager, John Gardner.

The musical scores were arranged by Mr. Craig, lending the proper atmosphere to each scene and its time. The chant given by the daughters of Israel in scene four was written by Mr. Craig.

Antiques used in the performance were from the curiosity shop in Kansas City and kindly loaned for the pageant.

The work of the extras in mobs and others in mass scenes was splendid. Without this fine support the pageant could never have been presented.

persons were carried on branch records but no contact was had with the branch. As a result of urging the various branches to locate those enrolled upon their local records we have carried to the "unknown" account a total of 7,481 names up to December 31, 1922. On June 30, 1923, this number had reached 9,141 with many of the branches yet to report. In an attempt to avoid some of this loss we have for some time been enrolling the names of Saints remote from branches as "Nonresident" of the district in which they are located. Such persons are thereby placed under the direct supervision of the district officers. If the latter utilize the opportunity offered we are confident that loss from that source will be diminished very materially. Some districts have over three hundred, several over two hundred, and many over one hundred nonresident enrollments. On June 30, 1923, there was a total of 6,677 enrolled as above provided, in United States and Canada exclusive of the stakes; and about 650 outside of any organized field.

Through the splendid efforts of Brother J. W. Foster, London, England, who serves the branches in that field as this department serves the branches in United States and Canada, and those who have assisted him, we believe the records of the British Mission to be in a splendid condition. For December 31, 1922, he reports a total of 1,298 known members. Adjustments in the general record are made from monthly reports submitted by Brother Foster. Likewise, Brother E. B. Hull is doing splendid work in maintaining the record in Hawaii. On December 31, 1922, our enrollment with that mission was 408.

We are disappointed because of being unable to advise the conference of the numerical strength of the church in the Australasian and Society Islands Missions. We have received no reports from either of those fields for 1922.

We are pleased to report that a splendid spirit of cooperation is manifested by ministers and others who are expected to forward data for record. Greater care may still be exhibited in preparation of reports. All names should be printed, using the simplest style of capital letters. For many years this office has been urging branch and district to use care in selection of secretaries. There is yet room for improvement.

It might interest some to know that from the reports for 1922 showing the former church connection of the person baptized we learn that the churches from which we receive the largest numbers are in the following order: Methodists, Baptists, Christians, Catholics, Presbyterians, Mormons, Episcopalians, United Brethren, Congregational, Salvation Army, Evangelical, etc. Also that we find a total of fifty-five trades or professions represented by those baptized.

Net enrollment August 31, 1923, 95,267.

Respectfully submitted,

PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT

President F. M. Smith; Dear Brother: I am pleased to report for the Publicity Department that the work has gone forward very satisfactorily and the publicity organization among the branches is gradually extending and developing in efficiency.

Our ideal is to have a local publicity agent in each branch of the church, and on these agents rests the responsibility of seeing that the branch activities are properly advertised; that the church is accurately represented in all published statements and that every opportunity for favorable publicity is developed and used.

In addition to these advertising duties the local agents are the business representatives of the Herald Publishing House and are expected to be on the alert to obtain new and renewal subscriptions and to promote the sale of church books and other church literature.

We are now seeking to employ the local publicity agents as regular staff correspondents to the church papers and have regular scheduled reporting dates for many of them. Our ideal is to ultimately have a publicity organization coextensive with branch organization and that all publicity work shall be handled in a regular manner through this department.

In addition to directing the work of my department I have handled the publicity on the Campus activities and given much time to executive work there. On your recommendation I have also assumed the duties of managing editor of the various church publications, and have given considerable attention to the getting out of new tracts and propaganda literature. All free tracts are distributed through the Publicity Department and our budget covers all of this expense.

I am asking for $3,000 additional this year to extend translation work. This last year we have put the "Busy Man's" series into two foreign languages, Spanish and Norwegian. It costs about $2,000 to translate and publish five thousand each of this series of tracts into one foreign language and the Herald is willing to bear half the expense, so for $3,000 we can translate and publish the "Busy Man's" series in three languages and have a stock of sixty thousand tracts to distribute. If this program were followed consistently for several years, adding three languages a year, we would soon be able to present our message to every nation in its own tongue and would be prepared to give our missionaries effective backing no matter where they might be sent. We use the "Busy Man's" series for this work because each number is concise, exceptionally well written, and interesting. The series complete gives a comprehensive view of our faith and history and is a most successful introduction for our missionaries.

Nearly everyone nowadays sees the advantage of church advertising and the branches are cooperating very nicely. It is a work that will have to develop, of course, and new workers will have to be trained in this particular field, but some splendid helpers are coming to the front and the opportunities of constructive publicity are manifold.

Very sincerely, ARTHUR E. MCKIM.

The church is contingently liable as indorser of consecration contracts, notes receivable, and investments amounting to approximately $100,000.

The balance sheet as of June 30, 1923, and the income and expenditure statement for the year ended on this date are subject to such adjustments as the general church auditor may find necessary.

OPERATING TREND

The operating deficit for the year ended June 30 was $8,930.35 as compared with $109,354.02 the previous year. The improved operating trend was due to the fact that the past year's Christmas offering of over $70,000 was used as operating funds and the total operating expenses were curtailed to the extent of $88,000 over the previous year. Had we not been permitted to use the Christmas offering for operating purposes, nor carried out a policy of retrenchment wherever possible, our operating deficit for the year just ended would have exceeded $160,000.

From the following figures the reader will get some idea as to the trend of total operating income and expenses. To make the figures comparable we have omitted the Christmas Offering receipts as income for the year ended June 30, 1923.

Year ended	Total Income	Percent. of Decrease Over Prev. Year	Total Expend.	Percent. of Decrease Over Prev. Year.
June 30, 1920.....	$694,697.23		$600,340.91
June 30, 1921.....	603,418.22	13%	712,772.24	Inc. 19%
June 30, 1922.....	480,904.92	20	593,475.48	Dec. 17%
June 30, 1923.....	421,227.54	14	501,003.06	18%

Upon analyzing these figures, it will be noticed that for the year ended June 30, 1920 the income exceeded the expenditures approximately $94,000, whereas during the following years the expenditures exceeded the income as shown in detail in the comparative statement on pages 24, 25. Had it been possible for us to reduce the expenditures approximately 30 per cent during the years 1922 and 1923 we would have operated within our income, excluding Christmas offering.

An analysis of our receipts for the past year shows that 59.2 per cent of every dollar received was tithing; 14.4 per cent, Christmas offering; 13.5 per cent, freewill offering and oblation; 6.9 per cent, real estate income; and 6 per cent, other income. The chart illustrates how the dollar was received.

It should not be overlooked that the bulk of our revenue is tithes and offerings and the amount of tithing paid is largely determined by the annual increase in membership wealth, which to a certain extent is controlled by general business conditions.

A detailed analysis of receipts from tithes, offerings, and consecration, by districts, shows that the agricultural communities were perhaps most affected during the past year by business conditions. In comparing the receipts of the twelve principal agricultural districts we find that during the year ended June 30, 1923 the receipts were approximately $17,000 less than the previous year. During the year 1921-22 the receipts for these districts aggregated $61,600 as compared with $44,600 for the year 1922-23.

Total Expenditures for year: $501,003.06

Family allowance, $207,934.97; elders' expense, $101,354.49; aid, $35,759.92; foreign missions, $5,138.29; consecration contracts, $6,193.21; administration expense, $49,246.70; general and miscellaneous expense, $10,343.52; interest and exchange, $15,265.64; real estate, $30,346.28; church institutions, $39,420.04.

A similar comparison made of the twelve principal industrial communities reveals a very slight difference in the receipts. For the year 1921-22 the receipts totaled $75,400; whereas, during 1922-23 the receipts amounted to $74,300—a decrease during the past year of only $1,100.

There has been a marked decline in tithes and offerings, exclusive of Christmas offering, during the past three years. The receipts from this source in round numbers were as follows:

Year ended June 30, 1920	$581,000
Year ended June 30, 1921	509,000
Year ended June 30, 1922	397,000
Year ended June 30, 1923	357,000

The principal items of expense, namely, family allowances, elders' expense, aid, and institutional expense for the past four years, are tabulated below.

Year ended June 30, 1920	$418,000
Year ended June 30, 1921	500,000
Year ended June 30, 1922	436,000
Year ended June 30, 1923	384,000

Judging from the tithes and offerings received during the first two months of this fiscal year, providing there is not marked improvement in business conditions, the total for the year may not exceed $300,000 or a little over 50 per cent of the amount received during the year ended June 30, 1920 from this source. This will bring the income from tithes and offerings for 1923-24 on a level with the year 1916-17.

Since our receipts are largely determined by the same factors that measure business prosperity, general business conditions should furnish us a fair index as to further undertakings and commitments involving expenditures of funds. Should the time arise in our experience when it becomes necessary for the church to seek financial aid from outside sources, proof that our financial policies have been consistent with generally accepted business methods would in all probability resolve a disposition to decline a loan, into one favorable to its acceptance.

Upon analyzing our expenditures for the past year we find cent for aid; 9.8 per cent for administrative expense—church offices, stakes and districts; 7.9 per cent for church institutions; 6.1 per cent for real estate; 3.1 per cent for interest and exchange; and 4.3 per cent, for other miscellaneous expense. The chart above shows how the dollar was spent.

In our report to conference last year we emphasized the fact that retrenchment was necessary. From all indications our total income for the current year will be less than it was for the year just ended, which means that our retrenchment policy must be continued; and while the best interests of the church should be conserved, maintaining our missionary force, even at the expense of some less productive activities, our budget expenditures ought to be consistent with the anticipated income.

AUDITORIUM

The total pledges to the auditorium fund amount to over $840,000. Of this sum over $420,000 has been paid. The auditorium fund and the income earned through investment of this fund consisted of the following, on June 30, 1923:

Cash on hand	$ 2,326.59
Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps	114,511.60
Certificates of deposit	1,800.00
Investments	183,903.16
Loans to general fund	154,102.30
Auditorium expense	2,295.07

Total$458,938.72

HOMES FOR THE AGED

During the year forty-five applications for admission to the homes for aged have been received and investigated. Twenty of these were accepted. Two of the applicants have not yet arrived. Acting in accordance with the policy adopted by last conference, the homes have been operated with the utmost frugality consistent with the health and comfort of the inmates, and the protection of our property. While the requests this year were 30 per cent less than last, yet the applications far exceeded our capacity to serve, and necessitated a close investigation upon our part to determine those who were most needy and worthy of this care, and to see that they got the preference. Thus we have been able to care for urgent demands at all times.

There were seventy-four inmates in the three homes at the beginning of the year. Eighteen were received during the year, while seven left and twelve died, leaving the present number at seventy-three. The number of inmate-days for the year is 26,456 and the per capita cost 70 cents, which includes a charge for depreciation on buildings and equipment. This means that the total cost of maintenance per person per year is $255, or about $21 per month.

Sister Alice P. Dancer is Matron at the Saints' Home; Elizabeth Williams at Liberty Home; and Edith Carr at Holden Home, where they have done a very laudable service for the church. Our heartfelt appreciation for their patient, faithful, and devoted labors in the interests of these homes and the members thereof, is hereby acknowledged and expressed.

We also acknowledge with gratefulness the splendid co-operation of all those who have labored in this arm of the Lord's work. Should further detailed information be desired respecting any phase of the work of the Bishopric, we will be pleased to furnish the same upon request.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

CHURCH AUDITOR

To the Presidency and General Conference; Greetings: I have continued the work of this office during the current year to the best of my ability and have given all the time possible to the attention of the accounts of the various church departments and organizations.

Since our last report we have made examinations on 22 organizations and departments in the interest of the church, submitting 34 reports thereon. In addition to actual reports made we have secured statements from a number of other organizations in which the church is or has been interested financially, and prepared therefrom such data as would be of interest to the executives of the church.

In several instances we have kept in constant touch with the preparation of financial records throughout the year, in order to secure records that would be of value to the organizations referred to.

It has been our experience that the service of an auditing department is of value to the church, and the work in our opinion should be continued and extended regardless of the personality of the one in direct charge. We have found laxity in the collection of accounts in a number of organizations and we think this department can be of service to the church in general if permitted to require proper attention be given this feature.

In a general way the financial records of the church and its associate organizations are satisfactory to your auditor; there are of course some instances where we hope to see better records and methods used, but this will no doubt be accomplished in due time.

At the time of preparation of this report our work had covered final examination of accounts of all organizations and departments excepting the Far West Stake and the office of the Presiding Bishopric, on these we expect to render report to your body during the course of its sessions.

Respectfully,
ALBERT H. KNOWLTON,
General Church Auditor.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 22, 1923.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT OF AUDITOR

Frederick M. Smith: The present management of the Saints' and Liberty Homes at Lamoni, Iowa, and the Home for the Aged, is assumed by the Presiding Bishopric, and the accounts of those institutions are merged with those of that office.

I think the present method of organization and management of the Independence Sanitarium or the Children's Home could be applied to the homes to good advantage, and would recommend that it be done.

For your information I would say that both the Sanitarium and the Children's Home are under the corporate form of organization. The Sanitarium is managed by an ex officio board and the Children's Home by a board selected in the past by various organizations and approved by the General Conference.

Respectfully,
ALBERT H. KNOWLTON,
General Church Auditor.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 21, 1923.

THE GRAPHIC ARTS BUREAU

To the First Presidency: The activities of the bureau are in a limited way, largely devoted to supplying the demand in the church for lantern slides dealing with travel, art, science, and in defense of the church.

To be of service to the elders in the field and congregations throughout the church is the leading objective of the bureau. It is trying to meet a demand no other organization in the church attempts to supply.

There is an ever-increasing demand in the church for slides of the character referred to. To meet this demand, there should be a much larger supply on hand, and the central supply depot located at Independence, should be supplemented by eastern and western depots.

It is not always practicable for an elder to carry around a heavy outfit, but if he has the ability to use slides in his work, they should be available.

There is an ever-increasing field for the use of the lantern. Many of the sectarian Sunday schools no longer use the hymn book but the songs are thrown on the screen.

As a church we have a special use for the lantern in illustrating our unusually interesting history, and in defending the Inspired Translation, the Book of Mormon, etc.

As soon as the finances of the church permit, the bureau should be properly equipped, as there is a growing demand for it. When we once have the proper stock of slides on hand the bureau will be largely self-supporting.

To Elder Albert H. Knowlton belongs the credit of building up the bureau to its present equipment. He has had to do a lot of discouraging pioneer work to get it properly started. He will report the condition of the bureau.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE GRAPHIC ARTS BUREAU AS REFERRED TO IN THE ABOVE REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE BUREAU

We have at the present time upwards of one hundred sets of slides in course of completion and in use. This number we hope to increase during the year.

The demand for slides for church missionary and auxiliary use has been greater than the bureau could meet with the

LETTERS AND NEWS

Cleveland Has Home-Coming

CLEVELAND, OHIO, October 18.—A successful all-day rally was enjoyed by the Cleveland Saints recently. Illustrated folders were mailed by the publicity department to members who have moved not more than fifty miles away. The folder set forth the program for the day.

The pastor or father of the home branch spoke in the morning giving a stirring exhortation about how the eagle at the opportune time stirs up its nest, that the little eaglets may be induced to try out their own wings, and how the wise parent, having induced them in their own initiative, watches their effort to assert themselves, aids and helps them back to safety, and then tries again and again.

Following the sermon was a branch social service. Early reminiscences of the work in Cleveland was started by Elder Joseph Biggs. Those who followed were in the home branch when the present building was obtained, telling how Brothers O. B. Thomas, Miller, Webbe, Warnick, Smith, Gillespie, Hayne, and others were instrumental in obtaining the building, how the branch home has been improved, redecorated, new seats provided, frosted glass windows, electric light fixtures, etc. Brother Haynes said the last time he was present the place was dull and there was a broken window with a newspaper stuck in it while now everything looks so cheerful he was glad he had come. "Home, beautiful home," was sung and announcement was made that the next service would be in the basement and that there was plenty to eat for everyone.

The kitchen was supervised by the Department of Women with Oricles waiting tables.

The Department of Education had for its subject "The relation of the school to the church." Brother Joseph Biggs was the speaker, giving a history of Sunday schools in general. He said that our school is now the Department of Education.

The Department of Women held forth in the afternoon with limited means at its command, but we have tried to make the greatest use of the completed sets we have.

Our plan is to provide a depository where slides may be had by any who are in a position to use them to advantage. We think the present custom of providing a few missionaries with one or two sets of slides charging the cost to the expense of the individual, is not productive of the best results for the money expended. Why not have the funds thus expended placed in the hands of the bureau and make the slides available to all?

We have received from the general church during the past year $39.91. With this amount we have purchased one lantern for missionary use. Slides added to sets during the year have been supplied from the funds of friends and by gift direct.

We have request for the establishment of slide depositories in the British and Australian Missions, and in our opinion any funds expended in this manner would be well spent.

In order that this feature of the church work might receive proper attention during the coming year we would recommend that the bureau be permitted to use not less than $500 of general church funds.

The bureau has undertaken as its special work for the coming year the establishment of a photographic department with the church publishing offices for the benefit of the Herald, Ensign, etc. This work will be in connection with and supplemental to the publishing department. This work will in no way supplant the work of the department along the slide and lecture work.

The bureau maintains membership with photographic societies and associations in America and Great Britain.

Respectfully,

ALBERT H. KNOWLTON, Secretary.

Sister Foster in the chair as mother of Home Day. They made a step forward by conducting their own meeting. Heretofore they have put some man in charge of opening the meeting. They announced that Elder John Campbell, the pastor, would speak for them.

Sister Haynes conducted a round table talk, this being the only opportunity for questions through the day. She said that children need home instruction, that a child has a mind that needs direction, that many children ask their parents questions and instead of proper instruction the parents give them a nickel to get rid of them. Suggestion was given that the woman bring first aid to the children. It was also suggested that supervisors of the kitchen study the Word of Wisdom and raise up a generation pleasing to the Lord.

The Department of Recreation and Expression had part next in the program with Brother Campbell in the chair. Brother R. Miller spoke on the work of this department. He told of what he considered an ideal Religio and told what it used to be in this city. Brother Gintz was the next speaker.

There was music or entertainment at all services and a good time prevailed. Some said they were glad to see the "old faces." There was a juvenile choir in addition to the other choir, and Sister Haynes sang a beautiful solo. The Boy and Girl Departments will be represented some other time.

Ogden Plans Winter Activities

OGDEN, UTAH, October 18.—Activities in the Ogden Branch have been almost at a standstill, due to the absence from Ogden of Branch President A. W. Bogue who has been attending General Conference and visiting with relatives in and around Zion. Elder G. P. Levitt, whom we expect to return soon has also been missed.

On Wednesday evening, October 10, the wedding of Rhoda Blakeman and Otho Sevy took place in the little chapel in the presence of many friends and relatives. The church was very prettily decorated with flowers and plants. A bower of flowers was made under which the bridal party stood while the ceremony was performed. Elder Roy F. Hewes performed the ceremony.

The Department of Recreation and Expression has entered upon its winter program of study and indoor recreation and has in view for the coming winter months many enjoyable evenings.

Kansas City Stake News

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, October 2.—The preconference meetings held at Central, Grandview, and Malvern by Apostles Gleazer, Ellis, and McConley were most interesting and resulted in spiritual uplift to the church members and a better understanding on the part of our friends who are not members. The three brethren are nearly strangers to most of the people of the stake, having spoken but few times at any of the churches. However, they waived formalities and entered upon the task imposed, at once winning a place in the hearts of their hearers. Each speaker enjoyed good liberty, so the effort proved to be beneficial to all who participated.

The attendance was representative but not so good as had been hoped for, probably on account of the fall festivities held in the city which will cover a period of about thirty days. The meetings were planned to prepare the minds of the people for a keener perception of the duty each one owed to the welfare of the General Conference. The series closed September 30.

The speaker at Central at 11 a. m. on September 30 was Apostle J. A. Gillen, and at the same hour at Grandview Patriarch Ammon White held forth.

Stake Missionary Amos T. Higdon closed a week's series of meetings at the northeast mission, Sunday, September 23. A splendid interest was aroused, and he probably will continue there after General Conference adjourns.

Sunday meetings at the various churches are being held during conference, though they are not so well attended, as many attend the conference meetings.

The usual priesthood and department meetings were canceled Sunday, September 23, on account of other activities.

Sister Caroline White and family, of the Malvern church, are spending the winter at Los Angeles, California.

"Intensive Preparation" Is Theme for Winter

PLYMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS, October 3.—The activities in the Plymouth Branch are in full swing and are as follows: Services on Sunday are held in a hall in the center of the town and prayer meeting on Thursday evening at the home of a brother. All are attended regularly by a good percentage of the membership.

On Tuesday evening the senior members meet, the first hour being devoted to study of the current Religio Quarterlies under the auspices of the Department of Recreation and Expression, followed by meetings of the priesthood and Department of Women or a social hour with the young people. At present the Department of Women are studying first aid under the capable direction of Sister Doris Giovanetti, R. N.

Wednesday evening the young people meet together, the first hour being spent in studies supplementing the Sunday school lessons, followed by a social hour. Once each month the young people meet with the others, Tuesday instead of Wednesday, and enjoy the social hour together. October 2 a meeting of this character was held, toasting marshmallows and outdoor games being the special features.

The aim, as expressed by Pastor Benjamin W. Leland, is "intensive preparation." A busy and successful winter is anticipated.

W. A. Sinclair, M. D., president of the Southern New England District, was the speaker Sunday morning, September 30. His sermon was unusually instructive and helpful.

Westerly Branch Changes Program

WESTERLY, RHODE ISLAND, October 2.—Several changes in the program here have been made since the last report.

Elder H. B. Johnson, of Providence, visits Westerly every Saturday afternoon, and has opened a mission in a home at Potter Hill, a small village four miles north of Westerly. A good interest is shown here, and results are looked for in due time.

Brother Johnson spends the entire day Sunday in Westerly now, thus giving the Saints the privilege of Sunday morning meetings, Sunday school following, and preaching at 7 p. m. The Saints are supporting the change in program loyally. The attendance has been over fifty per cent of the entire membership, with prospects of increasing.

Wednesday evenings have been set apart for Book of Mormon study, in which the Saints are showing a keen interest, with over half of the membership present.

Brother John R. Corrick, of Saint Louis, Michigan, writes that the Saints at Alma held a one-day meeting on September 16, with about ninety in attendance. Quite a number of non-members met with them, and a profitable time was enjoyed by all.

Young People's Rally to Be Held

SAINT THOMAS, ONTARIO, October 4.—Special services were held September 8 and 9, and Saints from the whole London District were present. On Saturday at 8 p. m. Elder H. A. Koehler was the speaker.

On Sunday at 9 a. m. the Saints met for prayer service, followed by preaching at 11 a. m., 2.30 p. m., and 7 p. m., each one instructive to all.

At 2 p. m. a special meeting for all young people of the district was held and arrangements made for a young people's rally to be held in London after General Conference. Saint Thomas young people are busily engaged preparing to assist in the line of sports.

Now that holidays are a thing of the past, except for pleasant memories, the Department of Women is busier than ever. It was decided to meet on Thursday afternoons at the church for sewing and Thursday evenings at the homes for educational work. It was thought by meeting in the homes, the men and young people could meet and study with them if they so desired.

The branch is in good condition, and all services are well attended.

President Visits Haverhill Branch

HAVERRILL, MASSACHUSETTS, September 26.—The Haverhill Branch, which consists of fifty members, has a full priesthood that is doing its full share of work. There are two elders, three priests, one teacher, and deacon.

The Sunday school and Department of Women are both in fine shape and doing excellent work among the members.

A goodly number of the membership were enabled to attend the reunion at Onset, and all who attended received much good. Brother Elbert A. Smith stopped over on his way to the reunion in Maine, and though his visit was short, it was much enjoyed.

We are glad to have back with us Brother W. F. Frost, who has been away during the summer. Also Sister Ella Thayer, local chorister, who was obliged to take an extended vacation for her health, has now returned.

Windsor Choir to Give Cantata

WINDSOR, ONTARIO, October 6.—The Windsor choir is enjoying a very busy fall and winter season. They rendered the program at the Recreation and Expression meeting on September 21, and are now preparing for the anniversary services to be held in Windsor on November 18 and 19. For the Christmas week they intend to give Petric's cantata, "Eternal light," and hope to surpass their success of last Easter. With this end in view their leader, Sister Edith A. Moore, is holding special practices at the homes of members on Tuesday evenings in addition to the regular Thursday night rehearsal. At the Tuesday evening gatherings, each hostess in turn serves refreshments, and the social hour is an enjoyable feature. Elder H. A. Koehler has kindly offered his assistance as a soloist for the cantata. The choir is composed of thirty-five voices, has several talented soloists, and a ladies' and men's quartet.

The Sunday school is quite a live wire. Elder Gordon Brown and J. A. W. Kettlewell, supervisors, are continually preparing some surprise in the way of programs. On Sunday, September 23, they had a group of young brothers in the teen age take charge. "Balancing the Christmas ledger" is to be the Christmas program which is now in the hands of the committee for preparation.

The departments are all working under the supervision of the pastor, Elder Leslie Brown, according to form four as printed in the SAINTS' HERALD of November 8, 1922.

Elder David Johnstone, of Kimball, Ontario, was a recent visitor at this branch. Although he is eighty-two years of age he assisted at prayer meeting September 19 and admonished the Saints to live the gospel. Brother Johnstone's testimony was firm and devoted.

At the morning service on October 6 the sacrament was served to a good attendance.

Brother J. A. W. Kettlewell is representing the Windsor Branch at the General Conference.

Kewanee Young People Attend Graceland

BUFFALO PRAIRIE, ILLINOIS, October 3.—Five young people from the Kewanee District have entered Graceland College this fall, one young man, Herbert Ziegenhorn, being from the Buffalo Prairie Branch. We believe this is the largest delegation this district has ever had for Graceland. We are proud of all of these young people and believe the year will be profitably spent. Though their presence will be greatly missed here, it is hoped that our loss will prove to be their gain.

Sister Beula Ziegenhorn left on September 3 for Fisher, Arkansas, in company with her brother and family. She will spend the school year with her brother and attend school at that place.

Oakland Sunday School Receives Flag

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA, September 26.—The Sunday School Department has been greatly built up the last year under the direction of Miss Helen Ingham, superintendent. She gives a great deal of the credit to the teachers, as she has a fine corps of teachers who are kept busy.

Almost every Sunday morning there is a short program of music or recitation by the little folks, and they like it.

About three weeks ago, through the efforts of Sister Parker, a beautiful American flag was presented to the Sunday school. John B. Wyman of the G. A. R. made the presentation speech which was followed by talks by several of the veterans. It was a beautiful service.

All these added features help to boost the Sunday school and create a live interest in it.

The Young People's Department held a surprise party Friday evening, September 19, in honor of the eighty-seventh birthday of Brother Ferris. Brother Ferris reads the finest print without the aid of glasses, and as proof of his very active mind he preached the Sunday evening sermon on September 21.

The church building here, which was remodeled about three years ago, is slated for more repairs. More room is needed, although extensive improvements were made at that time.

Series of Five Weeks' Meetings Closes

CRESTON, IOWA, October 3.—Sunday, September 23, closed a five weeks' series of meetings in Creston in charge of Elders Ward L. Christy and Gomer R. Wells. These men won the respect and confidence of a large number of people in the community, thereby getting the gospel before outsiders in a most successful way. Many of the outsiders manifested a willingness to help all they could.

Conditions were favorable for continuing the meetings, but the approach of General Conference made it inadvisable at this time. However, it is expected that other efforts will be made in the future as many are interested and investigating the work.

Brother Christy, in his characteristic "peppy" way, kept the meetings well advertised by means of signboards on the grounds where the tent was pitched and one on one of the main business corners in town.

Sister Lena Wells, who was present during the first of the series, was a great help with the music and endeared herself to all.

The last Friday night of the meetings, Brother Christy accepted an invitation to address the Parent-Teacher Association of the Irving School.

The closing Sunday the Saints brought basket dinners and spent the day in their regular meeting place in the I. O. O. F. Hall, just leaving in time for the men to catch the 10 o'clock train.

Publicity Agent Distributes Tracts

ALLIANCE, OHIO, October 4.—The publicity agent for the Alliance Branch, Sister Leafey M. Gordon, has set aside one afternoon of every week, or more if possible, to go out with tracts, putting them into every home in her neighborhood. In this way she hopes to remove misunderstanding regarding our faith, and perhaps to reach some honest souls. She is using the tracts, "The Church of Jesus Christ," also "Is water baptism essential to salvation?" The work has proved pleasant and profitable, though it was with fear and trembling that she started out.

On Sunday, September 16, the orchestra of the church at Barberton, Ohio, met with the Alliance Saints. This is the second time these people have visited here, and it is hoped that many more visits will be possible. Elder L. G. Hammond, pastor of the Akron church, and family; also Brother Sherman and family, of Akron, accompanied the Barberton Saints, making a goodly delegation. Elder Sherman spoke in the morning on "A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways."

After the morning service all went to a small park where a basket dinner was enjoyed, following which Brother Hammond gave an excellent sermon from the band stand. The proprietor of the park showed every courtesy, giving us the use of the park for the day and stopping all amusements during the services.

Department Work at Modesto Progresses

MODESTO, CALIFORNIA, September 25.—The Modesto Branch is small, consisting of about fifty members, including children and nonresident members. The building is suitable for the needs of the branch, as it was built about two years ago. The only young lady in the branch went to Graceland. The Lord surely was with her in getting ready, for everything turned out just right.

Sunday school is held in the basement of the church with Sister Anna Howe in charge of the primaries. The Department of Women is working on a bazaar to be held early in December. Also the Department of Recreation and Expression is progressing nicely under the leadership of Earl Phelps. The teacher training class will begin its fall study in about two weeks, although the fact that the members are so scattered is a handicap to the success of such an undertaking. Some live as far as six miles in the country.

The prayer meetings are of the best.

This is a growing town of about 15,000 population and ripe for missionary activities.

Branch Organized at Springwater

SPRINGWATER, SASKATCHEWAN, September 19.—The Daisy Hill Branch was organized here on August 3, with twenty-two members.

Apostle John W. Rushton and Elder James Pycok were in charge of the organizing.

The following were ordained: Robert Day, elder; Robert Ferguson, priest; Albert Lockyer, teacher; John Kingswell, deacon.

Brother J. J. Cornish has been instrumental in getting together the work started at this place. The future of the branch is promising, and all are encouraged over what has already been accomplished.

BELLA THOMSON.

Church at Philadelphia Redecorated

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, October 2.—Upon entering the First Philadelphia church, one cannot help noticing the spick and span walls and the general atmosphere of cleanliness, the result of recent redecoration. The Saints here have always been found to be extremely liberal whenever called upon for funds, and in this instance they were especially quick to act.

The choir has been reorganized and placed under the direction of Brother John Zimmermann, jr., and the outlook is encouraging. Musical topics are to be discussed and papers read occasionally. On September 29, the choir hired a large motor boat, and at 2 o'clock in the afternoon about thirty-five people went up the Delaware River as far as Burlington, New Jersey, stopping on the way at Pleasant Hill for a swim, and arriving home at 9 o'clock in the evening. Although it may seem late in the season for a water trip, the weather conditions were ideal in every way, though the chorister, who is attending General Conference, was missed.

The Department of Women resumed activities on the evening of September 12, and the program for the ensuing winter was laid out.

College Day was observed on September 23 with Bishop C. E. Irwin and Brother William Hartley occupying in the forenoon and Elder A. E. Stoft in the evening. Purse strings were opened up with excellent results, and the audiences of the day felt like packing up and heading for Graceland without delay.

Brother Irwin and family arrived on September 16. He expects to attend the University of Pennsylvania for the winter. Brother Irwin will take charge of the church work at the Second Philadelphia Branch while he is here.

Elder F. G. Pitt and wife passed through Philadelphia en route to Kirtland on September 19, and told many interesting experiences about their residence at Kirtland.

Young Married Women's Club Organized

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA, October 10.—The Department of Women of the Oakland branch has organized a young married women's club. The club meets every Wednesday afternoon and works in conjunction with the department. At present preparation is being made for the annual bazaar. A regular course of study is also to be taken up.

The choir has added to its numbers and is steadily improving. Several soloists are now at the disposal of the chorister, making the work of the choir still more efficient. Choir practice is held every Sunday following the morning meeting. This is necessary because the Saints are scattered over three cities and it is difficult to hold practice during the week.

The Department of Recreation and Expression has outlined a fine winter's program. The new superintendent, Mr. Dale Aldrich, is attacking the task with vim, and the outlook is promising.

The spiritual side of the branch has not been neglected. Testimony meetings have brought to light many blessings through the past year. Outstanding among these is the recent healing of a sister who was said to have cancer. The physicians refused to operate because the case had gone too far. Faith, prayer, and administration brought absolute cure within a few hours. Another sister who has been near death's door for months is once more attending meetings. She is near seventy years of age and bears a strong testimony to the wonderful blessings of the gospel.

Weather Prevents Services at Persia

PERSIA, IOWA, October 10.—No services were held on September 16, as it rained the whole day, so the Saints were left to worship in their homes.

On September 23 an especially good meeting was enjoyed when Elder John Jones, of Logan, and Elder Joseph Lane, of Pisgah, district president, visited the branch. The Saints felt strengthened and encouraged.

Sacrament service was held on October 7 with Branch President Frederick Hansen and Elder Sidney Pitt in charge. The members seemed to realize the importance of the meeting and expressed their willingness to continue in the Master's work, affirming their hopes in singing, praying, and testifying of the great things God has done for them.

Sunday school is doing fairly well under the leadership of Brother W. J. Chambers.

Meetings Held at Hibbard, Indiana

HIBBARD, INDIANA, October 8.—The Hibbard Branch had the pleasure of a visit from Brother S. W. L. Scott of Coldwater, Michigan. Beginning Sunday, September 23, he held meetings for three evenings, after which he held services in the Gleaner's Hall at Burr Oak about two miles distant.

These services consisted of a series of lectures such as "Americanism," "The Apostasy," "The Restoration," "Reconstruction," and "Does the grave end all?"

Burr Oak is quite a town of lodges, and it seemed there was something doing nearly every night, so attendance at our services was not what we had hoped for, but the last night, Sunday, September 30, the hall was well filled. After the services a member of the Gleaner lodge expressed himself as having listened to the best sermon he had ever heard.

We trust that the seed sown in Burr Oak will yet bring forth an abundant harvest.

CARRIE M. REED.

East Saint Louis Plans Publicity Day

EAST SAINT LOUIS, ILLINOIS, October 9.—The publicity agent in this branch is making an effort to get the HERALD in every home. In general, the Saints are becoming more interested in the church publications. They are contemplating having a publicity day later in the season.

Principally through the efforts of the Department of Women, the interior of the church has been visibly improved with green velvet hangings for the rostrum and runners of green carpeting for the floor. Also the branch helped to buy a good paper for the wall. Further improvements on the immediate surroundings of the church will be made in the spring.

Brother Prosper Carl has announced a musical for Sunday evening, October 21. This young brother has done good work.

The gift of youthful hearts and voices and their willingness to serve is surely acceptable.

Elder Henry Brunkhorst, branch president, returned from conference Saturday, October 6, confident that things were moving forward. He was impressed with the attendance and with the work of Brother Hoxie in leading the congregational singing.

Recreation and Expression Department Holds Debate

WATERLOO, IOWA, October 10.—The Department of Recreation and Expression organized a class in public speaking recently. A debate was held in this department recently on the proposition, Resolved that an organized class is of more benefit to the church work than an unorganized class. Both sides spoke well, but the affirmative won the decision. Debates are to be held occasionally on points of doctrine and policies for advancement.

Independence

The missionary field has sent its representation to the Independence Sanitarium, for at this time there are no less than five missionaries there for treatment. They are: C. E. Jones, of Seattle, Washington; F. T. Mussell, of Des Moines, Iowa; Thomas Newton, Independence, Missouri, whose field was recently in Virginia; R. D. Weaver, Cameron, Missouri; D. J. Williams, Burlington, Iowa.

The wives of three missionaries are also patients at the Sanitarium. They are: Mrs. Alma Booker, Mobile, Alabama; Mrs. W. P. Bootman, Deer Lodge, Montana; and Mrs. Blanche Finken, Michigan.

One of the long-time residents of Independence, who is a member of the church, celebrated his seventy-sixth birthday on September 24. Brother H. H. Robinson has lived in this city since 1833. He was born at Elwell, Bradford County, Pennsylvania.

He is also a Civil War veteran, having enlisted in Company H, Fifty-Seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the fall of 1863, under the command of General W. S. Hancock. He was wounded in the Battle of the Wilderness, and upon recovery was assigned to duty in the Washington camp guard.

Brother Robinson was one of the special guards over the body of President Lincoln after the assassination, while it lay in state at the Capitol. He was mustered out in Washington following the review of the Union forces.

Sister Elmer A. Rowe died at the Independence Sanitarium on October 18, following eight weeks of illness with bronchial pneumonia. Sister Rowe was born in Independence and educated in this city. She was married five months ago to Elmer A. Rowe. Surviving her besides her husband, are her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Enoch Cox, and a sister, Mrs. Earl D. Roberts also of Independence. Mrs. Rowe was twenty-four years of age at her death. Burial was in the Mound Grove Cemetery.

The death of Sister Nancy Williams occurred Wednesday, October 17, at the home of her son, Mansel T. Williams, in this city. Sister Williams, formerly of Brady, Montana, came to Independence in June, and since then has been declining in health. She is survived by her husband, Mortimer B. Williams; two daughters, Nettie B. Williams and Nellie E. Williams, all of Brady, Montana; and by a son, Mansel T. Williams, of Independence; four granddaughters, all of Independence; a brother, William B. Root, Oakland, California; and a niece, Mrs. E. G. Hampton, of Omaha, Nebraska.

Sister Williams was seventy-nine years old when she died. She was born in Vernon, Vermont. Burial was in the Mound Grove Cemetery.

Holden Stake News

HOLDEN STAKE, October 20.—Though quite a number of Warrensburg Saints have moved to other places, they still have a good attendance at Sunday school. Several of the college students attend our services there. Sister Raschke and family have moved to Warrensburg from Butler. The Raschke family are all young people. Also Brother Leroy Colbert, of Chetek, Wisconsin, who is visiting his sister, has preached some very fine sermons. Brother Frank Ball attended the special meetings for the priesthood at Independence. Warrensburg is a good school town where educational facilities are continually increasing.

Elder William Anderson of California, visited in Holden this week. He addressed the Saints at the Home Tuesday night and at the church Wednesday evening.

Chinese Branch Organized at Honolulu

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 9.—Word comes to us from Brother G. J. Waller that the Honolulu Chinese Branch has recently been organized under the direction of Apostle M. A. McConley and Elders Prescott Foo and G. J. Waller.

Though there is not as yet a large number of members, it is the belief of Brother Waller that there is good material among those we do have, and the prospects are good for progress to be made in the near future. This is the first branch, according to Brother Waller, to be organized among the Chinese members, and they seem very much elated and encouraged over it.

Social Worker Lectures at Vinal Haven

VINAL HAVEN, MAINE, October 15.—Sister Grace M. Walker, social worker and teacher, visited the Vinal Haven Branch and held a series of meetings September 20 to 25. Her subjects were interesting and educational, especially to the mothers. The attendance was good at each service, and the Saints were blessed in the effort. Sister Walker was one of several baptized at the Brooksville, Maine, reunion.

The Department of Recreation and Expression has been wide awake of late. Interesting games of volley ball were played on October 5 and 12. These games seem to be quite an attraction for outsiders, and many who had not been to regular services came and had a good time with the Saints. Brother Ralph Candage, president of this department, has great things planned for the future in cooperation with the Mothers' Club.

Brother Jesse Barton, superintendent of the Sunday school, is doing his best to build up interest in that work. There is now an average attendance of about thirty.

Branch President Archie Beggs has been doing the preaching every Sunday night and Priest Floyd E. Young occupies on Sunday afternoon. There has been a good spirit present and the Saints have been giving their hearty support to the meetings.

Sperry Saints Building New Church

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA, September 29.—The Saints at Sperry are at present engaged in building their new church, and they are hoping to have it completed soon if all goes well.

BEEBE.—George W. Beebe was born in Indiana, September 11, 1840. Married Abigail Puckett, April 1, 1866. Baptized May 26, 1878. Ordained elder soon after baptism. of Clear Vision soliloquized, 'I perceive that blindness in part hath happened unto Israel.' . . .

"Next, the Angel of Clear Vision touched the eyes of all sincere men with the magic wand that dissipates motes and beams, and scales fell from their eyes. With great surprise they for the first time saw their fellows in true character. And these said two things that seemed to be as logical as they were singular and refreshing. First each one said: How changed the brethren look! How greatly they are improved! I see that they are very fine and lovable, even though they have differed from me in opinion. True, they still have defects of temper and judgment, and some traits that sadly need amending; but now I see that the same is true of me also. And seeing their very evident desire to do right, why should I speak evil of them or quarrel with them? If they can bear with my defects until I can remedy them, shall not I also cheerfully bear with them until they grow in grace and knowledge of the truth unto the likeness of Christ? And secondly, after the Angel of Clear Vision had touched the eyes of all sincere men, with the magic wand that dissipates motes and beams, each one said: It is singular, but now I see certain things as in the white light of God. Why, for example, should we quarrel or bicker one with another? What place has quarreling and bickering in religion, since love is the vital principle of religion? Where there is no love, there is no religion; and where there is love there is no quarreling. There may be a defense of principle and a difference in judgment, but it will be with an even temper and in such spirit as should always clothe men who are gentlemen after the Order of the Son of the Carpenter.

"So then a hush came over the assembly under the big tabernacle and the gavel fell and the presiding officer said, 'The General Conference is now in session.' And a strong breeze passed through the tabernacle over the people, and it was as though a great fresh wind from off the ocean of God's love had blown the mists away. So from that hour the business went on in tranquillity. Men defended their belief with great firmness, but not with pugnacity . . . and no man bemeaned or contemned or insulted any other man; for all saw that religion must begin at headquarters, and that only a congregation in which Christ dwells in fact can send out missionaries to preach Christ to distant peoples. So the Angel of Clear Vision with the magic wand that dissipates motes and beams returned to the Great White Throne to report progress and ask for more time. Brethren, do you believe in dreams?"

True, this dream was not fulfilled at the opening of conference in the big tabernacle; but rather in the Stone Church and at the very close, shortly before the gavel fell and the presiding officer said: "I now declare the conference adjourned."

Hundreds will bear witness that suddenly and unexpectedly an influence like a presence settled down over the assembly, and without any man's guidance debate took on the tone and spirit of a prayer and testimony meeting—so much so that presently a motion for the previous question was interrupted by a call for singing.

The weapons and armor of forensic combat were quietly laid aside. Features that had been stony-hard with determination softened and seemed to be illuminated by an inner light of exaltation. Tears wet many cheeks. Men of different quorums who had looked narrowly at one another saw with quite different vision. The conference glimpsed the devotion, the courage, the sacrifice of the missionaries who make the supreme sacrifice to leave fireside and home circle, and the fighting spirit that they verily need to fling them against opposition and odds in the world. They saw also the problems of the pastoral forces, who must feed the sheep and educate them and organize them along Zion's lines. But why describe that meeting and its spirit since no one not present and partaking can ever understand an occasion of great spiritual endowment and refreshing from the Lord? But by it we were melted and warmed to the point where we could officially "sustain" all quorums and resolve within our hearts that our "support" shall be more than cold and formal.

One veteran general church officer was heard to say: "I have attended conference for many years. I did not think that anything could happen to surprise me. But this conference was unlike anything that I ever saw." Another said: "I have seen broken bones knit under my hands. I have seen fever depart. I have witnessed and enjoyed the spiritual gifts in power. But that was the most wonderful exhibition of divine power that I ever witnessed."

A high priest testified: "When that spiritual power began to come down upon the closing business session I began to pray that I might be able to forgive certain of the brethren whose attitude had offended me during the conference. But as the spiritual power deepened it came to me suddenly that I had nothing to forgive. They had differed from me. But I had differed from them as much as they from me. And then I began to pray that God would help me to be worthy always of a place with such a fine and fearless set of men."

Was not the Angel of Clear Vision with us? Think you not that he returned to the Great White Throne to report progress and ask for more time? Brethren, do you believe in dreams? I do, if they are good dreams. Then we can conscientiously work to help them come true.

There seems to be no good reason why next conference should not begin where this one left off. To the end that it may, let us put in eighteen months of constructive and affirmative work. If we fight valiantly for our convictions at conference time, let us work graciously and unitedly during the between conference periods. And may all find their work happy and profitable.

Stewards All

Unmistakable, clear, and authoritative, has come the call to every member of the church to come into the new society of stewards for God.

Many times has the warning been sent, continually have the people been urged to prepare, always they have awaited a personal call from the heads of the church.

The order has come, the representatives of the people in General Conference assembled have made that call decisive by a unanimous acceptance. "Stewards all" is the slogan of the people for the coming year.

Provision has been made for every member in the church by acceptance of the following resolution:

That

- (a) All men are of necessity stewards.
- (b) The law of stewardships applies individually to each and every member of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9; 70: 3; 101: 2; 118: 4.

That the Order of Bishops believes it to be the duty of every member of the church to acknowledge his stewardship by complying with the law as given in the Scriptures:

- (a) Filing his inventory.
- (b) Paying his tithes.
- (c) Paying his surplus.
- (d) Making his offerings.
- (e) And thereafter giving an account of his stewardship annually as required by the law of God.

Furthermore, those desiring to form communities or organizations on the temporal plan of God are encouraged to do so, and provision has also been made for such organization:

In accordance with the foregoing, the members of the church "who are willing and desirous" (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1) under the general supervision of the officers ordained of God for this purpose, may establish such organizations as are contemplated in the law whenever and wherever circumstances warrant this procedure.

It was also resolved that every member so live during the next year that at the end of that time there would be a surplus. This is the big and wonderful thing that will make possible the material building of Zion.

A small yet consistent surplus will provide in tithing a revenue great enough for the needs of the church as it expands.

No member would hesitate to enlarge his interest in his own business, yet in the greatest of all businesses, that of the establishment of the kingdom of God here on earth, there is hesitancy to take stock.

The old adage holds good: "You get out of a thing only as much as you put into it." Materially this is so; spiritually it is even more true.

God's yoke is not heavy, the burden is light. A simple observance of divine law is all that is asked, and that is but an investment. There are no liabilities in God's business except those of sin, and those belong to another business not of God.

The church has what it has looked for and demanded, a call from the official leaders in the church, a repetition of the commandment God had already given.

In the simplest of terms the order has been issued. It is a challenge to the religion of every member. The members of this church are ready for the demands which reach even to the least, and far exceed the possibilities of the greatest. There is no backing out now. The only road open is ahead.

The coming year should be the greatest year in the history of the church financially. Will it be?

Christianity Outside the Church

Millions have broken with the church, generically speaking, because, they say, it has led them away from the truth. There has been born in Germany a Youth Movement, which has for its purpose the development of moral vigor in the young by athletics and self-determination in education, to replace the old militaristic system.

At a convention of the Youth Movement in Dresden, according to the Outlook, the leading speaker said in substance:

The church led us into the war, said it was a holy war, and took the side of the Hohenzollern Government. The church has degraded our ideals, and killed thousands of our best and bravest. We are seeking now our Christianity outside the church.

Here is the same old misunderstanding arising—what is the church? These youthful followers of license believe as do millions of others, that the church is that superstructure which constitutes a building, which has officers, holds meetings, takes up collections, sings, and reads from the prayer book. This is the type of organization which was controlled in Germany by the militaristic government as were the schools. The people were educated in all public places to hate their enemies, those enemies being distinctly understood to be neighboring countries. With such teaching for half a generation, the war was inevitable, and the present reaction to the old institutions is the natural result.

The church was exploited by the government and made to serve its interests. The superstructure, which is all many people see in a church, was made to bear the royal coat of arms and as in ages past the war cry was blasphemy. God was made to bear the burden of the iniquities wrought by the human mind.

But the church has existed since Christ pointed the way to salvation. It exists in the teachings of the Master and is open to all the world. Its organization was discontinued following the apostasy of the early church, to be restored in the latter days. The church has always existed. Only its organization, which of course is a vital part, has been lacking. Many organizations have attempted to keep alive the church, and to a great extent they have done so, but the false doctrines advocated which were the ruin of Germany were not of the church. They were propagated by the would-be organization which unfortunately fell into ambitious hands.

To seek Christianity outside the church, as the Youth Movement claims to do, is impossible, but to seek Christianity without the aid of a corrupted organization may be a wise course to follow.

The Sacredness of Prayer

Prayers are not all sacred as perhaps is often thought. Prayers, like life, may be either good or bad.

Every wish or desire is a prayer. It is a secret longing for something that has not been attained. It may be upon the lowest or highest level, but always it is a prayer. The child wants a doll for Christmas and prays, "Please God, tell Santa Claus to bring me a doll." The child expresses this in a form taught him by his mother. He says it before he goes to bed. But all day long in that little heart is the longing for that doll. The prayer is unconsciously ever present.

Then the child is taught by mother to think not only of himself but of his sister. The prayer is elevated to a higher plane and selfishness is subordinated one step to include sister: "Please God, tell Santa Claus to bring sister and me each a doll for Christmas."

So through life, selfishness should be submerged and the social instinct developed. Every wish, desire, ideal, or prayer, should include the other fellow until the highest level of prayer is reached, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven."

Sometimes God answers an insistent prayer and grants the wish, but the gift works only detriment to the supplicant.

"God answers sharp and sudden on some prayers,
And thrusts the thing we have prayed for in our face,
A gauntlet with a gift in't.

—Browning.

Can we but learn to ask not for ourselves but for the strength to do the will of God, then prayers will be of much avail, for we have learned to want the things that God would have us have.

The Christian Spirit at Conference

As long as men are human beings, there will be controversy, and we have even read of a war in heaven, but it is more pertinent to ask, Can there be a Christian spirit in religious controversies?

Doctor John A. Hutton, quoted in the Christian Century, says that it is always a very terrible thing to have a matter of long debate decided our own way. There is something shameful about a triumph whether it be of the strong over the weak or the weak over the strong. No one will envy the majority on the morrow of their victory if it has been secured at the cost of alienation or overthrow, in a deep and tender region, of even one old friend.

There is nothing unusual in a difference of opinion. This difference will last until everything has reached perfection and there can be no wrong, so we may as well get used to the idea that men will differ and that there will continue to be controversies. But it is possible to maintain the Christian spirit throughout, and especially in religious controversies.

God recognized the tendency of men to differ when he spoke of the ministry, saying:

Their right to free speech, their right to liberty of conscience, does not permit them as individuals to frustrate the commands of the body in conference assembly. They are sent out as ministers to preach the gospel, and their voices if opposed to what may be presented to the conference should be heard in the conferences, and not in the mission fields, to prevent the accomplishment of the object with which the officers of the church have been intrusted. (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 16.)

His work must go on regardless of human weaknesses. His commandments must be obeyed, and these must not be questioned. The action of the church in matters involving only human wisdom should be decided upon the conference floor, and once decided should be abided by until later changed in due order.

Surely there is a true test of religion when men meet with diverging opinions on the conference floor to settle matters of moment. Argument and debate must necessarily follow, but a Christian spirit should be present. Lacking this, the deliberations of the body sink to the level of other worldly conventions, and men are no better than men wish to be nor than circumstance warrants.

When our conferences become throughout the entire session, as the last one was during a short period on the afternoon of the last day, then can we demonstrate the possibility of a Christian spirit in religious controversy. Could all future conferences close as the last one closed, following the priesthood meeting on Sunday afternoon, October 14, then would we be approaching an ideal. Could every member of the church maintain that spirit of unity, desire for work and sacrifice, that some of our ministers will maintain during the coming year, then would contention cease.

May the time come when religious controversies, without the spirit of Christianity being present, are but a memory, an echo from the past, a landmark left behind in the onward march to God.

Two Out of Five in the Church

Doctor Charles F. Aked, once Rockefeller's pastor, in visiting London recently made the statement that spiritually America has progressed no further than England.

Doctor Aked has spoken in nearly every large city in the United States, resided in New York eight years, in San Francisco four years, and during the past four years in Kansas City. He is in a position to observe the conditions in this country and therefore his statements are not to be considered lightly.

Doctor Aked continued, saying:

Do you know any village or any city where two in five of the population are in full communion with the church? No? Then why go on repeating, Forty millions in the church?

The question should be a challenge to our church, for Doctor Aked has lived next door to our church community in Independence for four years. Has he seen nothing that would cause him to hesitate in making such an indictment of religious communities?

We will not attempt to make an answer. Suffice it to stimulate thought on the matter.

If a community in which one half the population belongs to a single church, and the other half divided up between nonchurch members and those of

DEPARTMENTAL

Christmas Offering "100% Schools"

The Bishop's office is sending out to all organized schools a pledge list which reads: "The 1923 Christmas offering goal of our Sunday school is $..... Our aim is $..... higher than last year. We the undersigned members of the Sunday School pledge to do our best to reach the goal we have set, and qualify for the "100 per cent School" honors given by the Presiding Bishopric."

At the bottom of the list this appears:

"After comparing the above list with my record I find that it contains the names of all of our active members, therefore entitling us to display the "100 per cent School" sign.

This material is being sent to you through the branch solicitor. Should you fail to receive it promptly, write directly to the Bishop's office about it. We believe that superintendents will find this a help to them in stimulating the Christmas offering. All schools qualifying will get an attractive display sign indicating your earnestness in this good cause.

many other denominations, cannot claim two out of five in full communion, surely the situation is deplorable. "Full" communion could be taken to mean observance of all church regulations, but we feel certain that Doctor Aked did not intend so strict an interpretation.

The challenge cannot remain unanswered, but it must be answered in deed and not in word. The cunning manipulation of language is ineffective in the face of action. That action must be so positive in its message that misinterpretation is not possible. It must herald to the world the answer to Doctor Aked's challenge and emblazon upon the hearts of a reluctant world the fact that at least one community has two out of five in full communion with the church.

We think that equality means the full self-expression without hurting the other fellow. If everyone worked and played to the extent of his capacity, we would not be worrying about how much somebody else is getting out of life.

"Why was I born?" is the great question of the universe. It is the opinion of some people that a more pertinent query would be, "How did he get that way?"

Nemo's Noddings

Friendship, however envisaged, implies altruism. To seek a friend merely to use him means ultimately to lose him; but to find a friend whom you can help while he is helping you means to establish an enduring friendship.

Beware the man who talks loudly and glibly of "my friend," for such a man is likely to know little of the real value of friendship; for to him "be my friend" means "help me."

The ever ready willingness to help the other fellow, the real basis of friendship is rare, even in the church, though it is the essence of Christianity.

Friendship and loyalty are closely akin, and perhaps the rarest friendship is that towards the fellow "higher up," for envy and jealousy find no refuge in friendship, and relative official positions are likely to arouse both.

Attitude, especially mental attitude, is a prime factor of character, and another factor in character is what we do. How we habitually spend our "spare" time is a true index to our character.

Attitude is also a powerful factor in success. An attitude of certainty towards the job in hand is more than half the task accomplished, while to start the effort with dubiety places a heavy handicap.

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," applies in more directions than in religion. Choice is the first essential step towards success. We must choose our work with regard to our capacity.

We get ready for a big job by finishing well many smaller ones.

Even recreation plays an important part in success. Sustained effort is possible only for short periods. To work to the best possible advantage we must know how to rest. The power to concentrate is accompanied by the power to relax.

Rest is not idleness; it is change. How we seek relaxation is of prime importance in character building. A change of work may even be restful, but it must be pleasurable to be so.

Zion, when fully established, will abolish the working class, for all will become workers. And then recreation becomes a problem of grave importance. What will Zion's play be?

Recreation to be of highest value must be purposive. Better work is the goal for adults, education that for youths.

How a people plays will evidence how they can work. "By their fruits ye shall know them" may be paraphrased, "In their play may be seen their possibilities."

Speaking of loyalty in business concerns, and after comparing "big business" to a steamship bound for the port of success, Elbert Hubbard spoke quite to the point when he said:

"I am inclined to think that no man was ever discharged from a successful concern—he discharges himself. When a man quits his work, say oiling the engine or scrubbing the deck, and leans over the side calling to outsiders, explaining what a bum boat he is aboard of, how bad the food is, and what a fool there is for a captain, he generally loosens his hold until he falls into the yeasty deep. There is no one to blame but himself, yet probably you will have hard work to make him understand this little point.

"When a man is told to do a certain thing and there leaps to his lips, or even to his heart, the formula, 'I wasn't hired to do that,' he is standing upon a greased plank that inclines toward the sea. When the plank is tilted to a proper angle, he goes to Davy Jones's locker, and nobody tilts the plank but the man himself. And the way the plank is tilted is this: the man takes more interest in passing craft and what is going on on land than in doing his work on board ship.

"So I repeat: no man employed by a successful concern was ever discharged. Those who fall overboard get on the greased plank and then give it a tilt to starboard. If you are on a greased plank, you better get off from it, and quickly, too. Loyalty is the thing!"

And on the subject of neutrality he adds: "The only real neutral in this game of life is a dead one. Eternal vigilance is not only the price of liberty, but of every other good thing. A business that is not safeguarded on every side by active, alert, attentive, vigilant men is gone. . . . If enough employees in a business house are neutral the whole concern will eventually come tumbling about their ears."

Mileposts in the Life of Christ

Sermon by Elbert A. Smith at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, during Young People's Meetings, December 17, 1922.

Mileposts—Not Turning Points

In the ordinary life there are turning points. In fact in some lives there are many turning points, or, to get the meaning literally, points of turning—of turning about from a course that has been pursued, from old habits to new habits, from old friends to new friends. It may be that this point of turning marks a turning from that which is bad to that which is good, from that which is dishonorable to that which is admirable; or the point of turning may be the reverse, from that which is good to that which is bad. Some individuals seem to oscillate between the two so they are impelled to confess in prayer meetings that they have "made many crooked paths," as they have turned from one service to the other.

When I come to examine the life of Christ, one thing that impresses me greatly is that I find no point of turning anywhere in his career. His life was a continuous forward going—a constant, logical, symmetrical growth and development. We do not find anywhere such a cataclysmic conversion as often figures in the lives of other individuals. His life itself was a conversion. If he is to be our pattern, I suppose that we would find here a strong argument in favor of the idea a great many have of religious education early in life.

The common concept seems to be that it is necessary, or at least inevitable, that individuals shall fall into sin, sow their wild oats, stray far from God, reach maturity, perhaps go far along in life, and then under a sudden and violent process of repentance and conversion amounting to a cataclysmic change in life, turn from that which is bad to that which is good and take up the service of God. They must wrench themselves away from all the habits they have industriously formed for years, tear themselves loose from the friends with whom they have consorted, and devote themselves to the formation of new habits, new associations, a new life. There are two difficulties encountered in that experience. One is that it requires a very courageous and determined man to pass through it successfully (perhaps seventy-five per cent become "backsliders"); and the second is that even though one be courageous and determined, he is under a tremendous handicap to start life over at thirty, forty, fifty, or sixty years of age.

The concept does not seem to be in harmony with the pattern set up by Christ. It may indeed be true that when a ship is going on a wrong course and towards the rocks it is necessary to turn it about squarely in the midst of the storm in order to save it, even though the process be a very great strain on the ship. But how much better if the ship should from the beginning of its voyage pursue a consistent course towards a predetermined goal and not need to pass through that experience.

Wonderful was the conversion of Alma, son of Alma. He had been wild and wicked. He had fought the church. Suddenly converted by divine power he turned squarely about, and two days later was preaching the gospel, and continued to preach it throughout all the country. But more in keeping with the life of Christ was the experience of Samuel. He was given to God before he was born. When he was weaned a pious mother gave him to the service of her lord. At twelve years of age he heard the voice of Jehovah calling him, and answered, "Speak, Lord, thy servant heareth."

The big fuss was made over the prodigal. Yet if you will read the parable closely you will discover that the real satisfaction of the father was in the son who did not run away to eat husks with hogs. "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine." Those words were worth more than a gold ring and a fatted calf. Certainly there is a chance for the prodigal, and joy at his return. The church should go out after him. But the first care of the church should be to see that he does not become a prodigal, if by any good means it may be prevented.

Teach the Child to Be Religious

I am greatly in sympathy with the idea that some of our men are advocating, men like A. Max Carmichael, and others, who believe that religion should be early taught in the life of the child, and that we should work for a consistent development, and by a proper environment and teaching endeavor to at least minimize the necessity for a violent conversion later on, such as came to Paul, who was thrown into the dust and stricken blind before he would yield. I think there will be plenty of room left for evangelizing among adults, because our efforts will often fail, and moreover the world is wide and full of people who have had no opportunity for religious education in childhood days. But for the church, certainly the idea of saving her own who are born to her should not be less important and fascinating than the idea of reaching out to save adults who have never heard the gospel message.

You may wonder why I mention this in preaching a sermon to young people. I will tell you. When you are playing a game of checkers or chess you must look ahead of your adversary several moves or you will lose the game; and in the great game of chess that the church is playing with the Devil for the souls of men, if we do not look ahead several jumps we are going to lose. I mean by that we must look ahead several generations.

It is a fact that quite a number of you who are still numbered with the young people in these services have already established homes, and those homes are tuneful with the prattle of little children, and, must I say it, sometimes discordant with other notes when things do not go right. There are others who are still enjoying the felicity of single blessedness; but, young man, time moves swiftly and, before you realize it, the day will come when you will be the very dignified head of a household. That is, you will think you are the head of the house, and perhaps that lovely girl who may be sitting so demurely by your side to-night when that day comes will be just shrewd enough to let you think so. It won't hurt her and it will make you happy.

The church wants you to be ready to give to the generations to come that which the generations past may have failed to give to you, so that there may be developed, more nearly in harmony with the pattern Christ set in his life, a continuous, uninterrupted growth in righteousness from the cradle to the grave, that the ideal set forth in one scriptural passage may be more nearly approximated, that children shall be born and "grow up without sin unto salvation."

I say we do not find points of turning in the life of Christ. We do, however, find those monumental experiences, those great times of crises that shine forth above all other experiences and mark the progress of his development. To-night we may examine some of them.

The Childhood of Christ

We have first, of course, the beautiful story of his birth. He was born in a stable, not, as one writer says, in one of the clean and beautiful parlor stables we see on Christmas night at entertainments, but in a filthy Jewish stable where perhaps the only clean thing was the hay upon which he lay. And this writer says that it was not improper that he should thus have been born in a stable, since man has made of the whole world a rather vile stable.

We do not often see him during the development of his childhood. At eight days of age he was brought to the priest and was christened, and the name of Jesus was placed upon him. Some thirty-three days later his mother brought him to the temple with a pair of turtle doves as her offering. Evidently being too poor to bring the lamb prescribed in the law, she brought the turtle doves that the poor were permitted to bring instead. And the righteous Simeon took the child in his arms and blessed him. We have also a picture of the flight into Egypt. In all these scenes Jesus was passive.

The Incident in the Temple

The first time we see him as a reasoning being old enough to make decisions, is at twelve years of age in the temple in the scene that is brought before us in our scripture reading. (Luke 2: 41-52, Inspired Translation.) His parents had come up to Jerusalem, as was the custom of the Jews annually to attend the Passover, and they may have remained during the week. They then started home, but Jesus stayed behind and was not missed the first day because they thought he was somewhere in the caravan; but when his people did miss him, they hastened back to the city. After three days they found him in the temple talking with the doctors of the law. Mary, much like other mothers, found her anxiety tinged with vexation as soon as the danger seemed past, and in terms of reproof said to Jesus, "Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us?" He returned this wonderful answer, "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

That seems a remarkable answer for a boy of twelve to make, but there are some things we must consider in that connection, bearing in mind always the divine guidance that was his. In that climate and among that people, children matured earlier in life than they do with us. According to Farrar a boy at twelve years of age was expected to learn a trade; he was considered old enough to marry, and became known as a "son of the law." Jesus no doubt began to feel stirring within him the uprising of nascent manhood, though he was but twelve years of age; and he began to look forward to his life's work.

Laying aside all of these considerations, you must know that almost any boy, even very young in life, is quite likely to begin to look forward to the things of manhood. You who have not forgotten your own boyhood can confirm that by your recollections. A boy may be one minute a boy, engrossed with his toys and his companions, and the next minute a man—that is, he has cast forward into the future and is thinking about the work that he will do when he is a man. Perhaps the next moment he is a boy again. You may see a boy ten or twelve years old sitting in abstract meditation, dreamy, with a far-off, almost angelic look in his eyes. No man knows what that boy is thinking about. You perhaps cannot even imagine what he is thinking about. True, he may be merely speculating as to where mother hid the custard pie; he may be contemplating entertainment for his big sister's company; or he may be thinking about the work he is going to do twenty years from now.

The boy is trifling idly with a stick and piece of string,
But you can't tell what he's dreaming all the while.
His boyish fancy soars upon a strong and fearless wing,
And you can't tell what he's dreaming all the while.

He whistles tunelessly and shrill and swings upon the gate,
But you can't tell what he's dreaming as he swings.
His thinking's culmination may decide a nation's fate,
For we can't tell what he's dreaming while he swings.

He may lay the dream away until some unborn, crucial year;
He may hide it till the dawning of another era's here;
But 'tis living, strength'ning, growing, and its fruitage must appear—
No, we know not what he's dreaming as he swings.

—Gilliland.

And if you cannot tell what the boy is thinking about, neither can you tell what he is potentially. He may be a potential Roosevelt charging up San Juan hill; he may be a future Abraham Lincoln, signing another emancipation proclamation; he may be a Gladstone, towering in the House of Parliament; or he may be a John the Baptist, crying in the wilderness. Or, alas, he may be a Judas Iscariot, selling his Lord for thirty pieces of silver.

My neighbor two doors west of me, Brother Higdon, a missionary, has a little boy. One day I heard the little fellow conducting a religious service in the back yard. The children had sung a song and prayed and the sermon was over—and I do not know but what the song was just as sweet to the angels, and the prayer just as good, and perhaps the sermon better than we have here to-night—then I heard the little boy pipe up, "Is there anybody else here who wants to be baptized?" That boy was a man out in the missionary field twenty years from now.

I have a theory that Jesus had an experience such as I have mentioned, stirred as he no doubt was by his visit to the holy city; fired by his view of the great temple. On that day and on that occasion he was a man and took his place in his Father's house among the representatives of his people's religion; and so replied to his mother's inquiry, "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" But the next day he was a boy again. The record says that he returned home and was obedient to his parents in all things. I do not think now, either, as I used to think, that he was there to heckle and confound the doctors of the law by an arrogant display of superior wisdom that he had received from on high, as I have sometimes seen our elders seek to confound other ministers in conversation, and as I have seen other ministers seek to confound our elders; I believe he was there in the house of his Father in a reverent attitude, respectful and courteous to the aged senior representatives of the established church, and that he was there because there had sprung up in his heart a profound interest in the things of religion and he desired to exchange ideas.

Another thing that may perhaps account for the rather remarkable answer that he gave was that he had made twelve years of preparation for that answer. He came from a very religious people. Religion meant more than politics and business to them, and that is saying a great deal when you are speaking about Jews. He came from a good family. Joseph was a good man. You can tell that when you read how he treated Mary under the circumstances confronting him. And Mary is the traditional type of pious womanhood. Jesus had breathed the atmosphere of religious life from the cradle. And so he was prepared at twelve years of age to make an answer of that kind.

Impressions in Early Life

It is the impressions we receive very early in life that remain with us. If they are good impressions they are a help all our lives—if wrong they are a hindrance. All the time when I went to school as a boy I sat at a desk facing south. I studied geography, and of course all the maps were laid out with the top to the North, so I acquired a picture of the geography of the world, and particularly of America, that was upside down and wrong side to. It was indelibly fixed in my mind, so that to this day Canada is always thought of as lying to the south; the Atlantic Ocean to the west, the Pacific Ocean to the east, and Mexico to the north. Every time I want to get a correct mental picture I have to reverse. How happy is the man who learns right morals from the cradle! How unfortunate is the one who grew up in an atmosphere of perverted ideals, false philosophy, and corrupt notions that have made their impressions in his early childhood so that all through his manhood whenever he comes face to face with a religious or moral question he has got to wrench himself about, figuratively speaking, in order to get the right idea in place of the wrong one!

Some people fail to realize how soon children can be reached and perceive questions of duty and the importance of a promise given. I have heard people scoff at the Book of Covenants doctrine that children should be taught so that they may make a religious covenant and be baptized at eight years of age. But I know that they can make a promise and recognize its sanctity long before that time. When I was about three years of age, one day I was disporting myself on the walk with a stick in my mouth. My aged and pious grandmother wanted to know what I was doing. I told her I was smoking. She then and there read me a lecture on the use of tobacco and extracted from me a promise that I would never, never use it as long as I lived. She gave me a toy watch to bind the covenant. I have the watch yet. And I kept the promise, too. Although as a boy I had to buy tobacco hundreds of times for my Grandfather Hartshorn, the promise given always came to mind and I never tasted tobacco in any form. I know that if a boy three or four years old can make a promise and keep it that a boy eight years of age ought to be able to enter into covenant relationship with God and keep the covenant made. In fact, children may do better than we who are older. They covenant in the simplicity of their childish hearts—we make promises with our fingers crossed. I am no authority on psychology, but I believe that our students of psychology will bear me out in the statement that the Book of Covenants is absolutely right in the position taken on that point.

Such was the kind of atmosphere Jesus Christ grew up in. He was in preparation during all the years of childhood, so that when he reached twelve years of age, a turning point in the life of the Jewish boy, he was ready to make an answer.

The Import of Jesus' Answer

Several things shine forth from that answer. One is that he had made a definite choice. No matter what others might do, he must be about his Father's business. Young people, here is our pattern. He did not propose to serve the world, or himself, or pleasure; he proposed to be about his Father's business. He made that decision at twelve years of age. He regarded life as something serious. He said, "I must be about my Father's business." Life for him was not to be a picnic, something to be gone through easily; it was to be a serious under-taking, a business, something to be thought about and prayed over, deliberately planned, and lived according to the plan. The trouble in the world to-day is that many people are living without any plan or serious philosophy of life.

The next thought is that Jesus was engaged in making a preparation. The statement is made that he returned home and was subject to his parents, and yet he had said, "I must be about my Father's business." What was his business for the next eighteen years? What business did God have for Jesus at twelve years of age? What business for him at fifteen years of age? What business at eighteen years of age? What business does God have for you at twelve? At fifteen? At eighteen? The Father's business for Jesus during those years was one of preparation, a getting ready so that when his ministry opened he would be prepared for it. And the record says that he grew in body and in mind, and in grace and favor with God and man. That was his business at that period of life.

Some young people have a contempt for public opinion. They do not seem to care what people think about them. But it is worth while to have a good reputation in the community. Jesus not only grew in favor with God—he also grew in favor with man. Men spoke well of him. They observed him. They saw that his conduct was admirable. It is worth while for a young man or young woman to have a reputation for industry and honesty and sobriety. The time will come when that sort of reputation will be worth more to them than inherited capital without those qualifications. The opportunities for service and for promotion in this community and in this church in a few years will go to the young men and women who to-day are establishing reputations for honesty, integrity, industry, and studious application. If Jesus is to be your pattern, remember that in the time of his boyhood he grew in body and in mind and in favor with God and with his fellow men.

On the Banks of the Jordan

After that event in the temple I do not recall that we get another glimpse of him at all for many years. We see him next on the banks of the Jordan ready for his baptism, another milepost in his life, another memorable occasion; not a turning point, but a point in his forward going. Certainly if anyone desires the final, unanswerable argument in favor of baptism he has it here. Jesus, our Lord and Master, our leader and our commander, went down into the water and was baptized, and when he came up out of the water God said, "This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye him." That is the unanswerable argument—Jesus accepting baptism and God saying, "I am well pleased."

The Temptation

Immediately thereafter there came another milestone in his life, the period of his great temptation. Immediately when he went into the wilderness and fasted and prayed and got ready for his work during a period of forty days and forty nights, the adversary was there at the first opportunity and endeavored to turn him aside from his duties. He said to Jesus, "If indeed you be the son of God, command these stones that they shall be made bread." That, of course, is a symbolical occurrence. Satan wanted to appeal to the sensual side of Christ. And it is perhaps typical of the material philosophy that prevails in the world where men and women so often strive to be satisfied with material things—food, clothing, houses, riches, physical pleasures. Jesus was hungry. Certainly bread appealed to him. But he made answer: "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." He still held the things of the spirit higher than the things of the body, and spiritual demands were still higher than physical demands, even though he was confronted by this temptation. Later on he said, "Is not the life more than meat?" Food is essential but not the all important thing. If we eat to live and then merely live that we may eat again we are in a vicious and meaningless circle. Life must have an objective. Religion, i. e., living by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God, puts meaning into life and into the use of bread and meat and all material things.

Almost immediately, apparently, or a little later at least, he was on a mountain and Satan pointed out to him the kingdoms of this world and said to him, "If you will bow down and worship me, all these things shall be yours." Some people have a theory that Christ knew that his people were looking for a deliverer who would free them by force of arms, a man who would rise up and marshal them and overthrow the Roman yoke and set them free and make them the ruling power in the world, and that Jesus was tempted at that time to go thus about his mission of liberating his people. He saw the chance that might come to him. The people were ready for revolution. I do not know whether that be true or not. Certainly it is apparent from history that from time to time men have been tempted with the thought that they might obtain universal dominion. Evidently the Kaiser Wilhelm had some such thought. Napoleon had such an ambition. Tiberius was at that moment ruler of practically the whole world. It may be that it was suggested to Christ that he could pursue such a course; but immediately it must have entered into his mind that to do so he must turn from his legitimate service of God, so his answer was, "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart, and him only shalt thou serve."

It is not likely that many men are tempted with the thought that they may get universal dominion. Perhaps most of us do not need any such temptation—we go for a much smaller price. But no doubt it is true that at some time there comes into the minds of most men and women the thought that there is an opportunity to win something of value by questionable methods, by turning from the calling that God has given and entering into another service that is not consistent with the worship of God.

Whenever you, young people, see an opportunity to make wealth by methods consistent with the service of God I hope you will do it, because the Book of Mormon says it is perfectly proper to desire to make great wealth with the object to feed the hungry and clothe the naked and build up the kingdom; but whenever you see an opportunity to get gain, great or small, by methods that are not consistent with the worship of God and his service, take Jesus as your pattern and give this answer, "Thou shalt worship the Lord, thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

I am glad to know that when Jesus had met all these temptations and resisted them and put them away, the statement is made that the Devil left him and that the angels came and ministered unto him. That will be the experience of those who make Christ their pattern. Luke has a significant statement: "And when the Devil had ended all the temptation, he departed, and Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit unto Galilee." Any young man who makes Christ his pattern and resists all these temptations and puts them away is bound to go out in the power of the Spirit of God; but if he yields to one or all of them he cannot help feeling that spiritually he is unfortified, and he will not have spiritual power.

In the Garden of Gethsemane

So we might pass from milestone to milestone in the history of our Lord. We see him next in the Garden of Gethsemane. Years have passed. Now comes the culmination. They have eaten the pass-over; they have sung their hymns; they have gone into the garden; his friends are asleep, and face to face in the hard hours of night he comes to the dark hours of his trial, racked in body and soul until the record says he sweat great drops of blood. He was very human then. Certainly he knew what his duty was, because he had told his disciples that he must go up to Jerusalem and be slain. He knew what was before him, and yet he tried to avoid it. He prayed, "Father, if it be possible, permit this cup to pass from me," just as you and I would pray. But he came clean and free and finished the prayer, "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done." Christ is our pattern.

On the Cross

Finally, last of all, we see him hanging on the cross. It was not yet too late for him to spoil his mission work by some last weakness. He had taught the divine doctrine of love and forgiveness: Love your enemies; pray for those that curse you; love those who spitefully use you; forgive not seven times, but seventy times seven. (Saints, get you a tally board and chalk and keep tally. When you have forgiven seventy times seven, then begin to talk about reprisals, call for an elders' court, seek redress.) Now he has come to the test. Nails are through his hands and feet. He has been scourged, and worse than the physical torment, he has been spit upon and humiliated in soul; he has been sold by a friend; and yet we hear these words, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

I heard a brother say that as he grew older he reached the conclusion that most men who do injury to others do it from lack of knowledge under misapprehension. That seemed to be the attitude of Jesus; he preferred to believe that. There may be some who maliciously do harm and destroy, but the great mass of men do harm because they know not otherwise. These difficulties in the church, these quarrels between families—very often they spring up through misunderstanding; and if one or both parties could only have the courage to say, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do," how much trouble we might avoid. Those who have Christ as their pattern can make that their plan in their lives, and when they are despitefully used and have been injured, have the grace to say, "Perhaps they know not what they do. Father, forgive them."

Finally, last of all, yielding up his spirit, he said, "It is finished." The one who at twelve years of age said, "I must be about my Father's business," now has come to the end of the road, and can say, "It is finished!" Some lives seem not to be finished. They just dwindle out, or they come to some mishap, and there is not a well-rounded out completion of the work begun in boyhood and carried on through manhood. Those who are older (and those who are younger, too) should prayer for grace divine that when the last summons shall come, with Christ as their pattern, they may look back over the past and with a clear conscience say, "It is finished. My work is done. I can conscientiously say that I have completed it honorably according to the design. I can with a free heart commend my soul to God."

Throughout the world aviation is rapidly progressing. Russia has voted 300 new planes, the program calling for 5,000,000 airplanes. Germany is also rapidly developing her airplane service. France, in the first eleven months of 1922, built 3,300 and left orders for 1,200 additional machines. The program for 1923 calls for 2,200 machines with one hundred per cent reserves. They are operating air lines to Africa, London, Brussels, Tunis, Constantinople, and other points. Some fourteen distinct air lines operated in 1922, carrying over 14,000 passengers, over 1,000,000 pounds of parcels, and 90,000 pounds of mail. They plan to link all their years.

Great Britain has 3,000,000 officers, 26,500,000 air men, with 33 squadrons throughout the empire. Even the smaller countries of the world are also developing this arm of commercial service.

CONFERENCE REPORTS

BOARD OF PUBLICATION

To the Presidency and General Conference; Greetings: At the first meeting of the Board of Publication this year the following officers were elected: President of the board, Bishop B. R. McGuire; vice president, Bishop Albert Carmichael; secretary, Arthur E. McKim; treasurer and general manager, Granville S. Trowbridge.

The following resolution was adopted regarding the editors: "Resolved, that whereas the Saints' Herald is the official organ of the church, that the First Presidency be elected as editors of the Herald to serve until the next annual meeting of this board and that they constitute a board of editors to nominate the editors of the other church publications, subject to ratification by this board."

Following the recommendations of the board of editors on April 12, Alfred E. White was elected to the editorial staff of the Herald and Edward D. Moore was released from the Herald staff. At a meeting of the Board of Publication on September 14, on recommendation of the board of editors, S. A. Burgess was released from the Herald staff and made editor of the Journal of History. Walter W. Smith was released from the editorship of the Journal of History to take up educational work. Arthur E. McKim was elected as managing editor of the various church publications.

On recommendation of the First Presidency, the Priesthood Journal was merged with the Herald and separate publication of it was suspended with the March issue.

Following is the detailed report of the treasurer and business manager, G. S. Trowbridge, to the Board of Publication:

"During the past year the price of paper and other supplies has increased over those prevailing at the close of the previous year and particularly during the last few months has there been an upward tendency in the paper market. We believe, however, that the peak has been reached although we do not look for a very marked break in prices in the immediate future.

"The cost of labor in the printing industry generally during the last year has shown an inclination upward but in the main it has continued about the same as at the close of the last fiscal year. In our plant the payroll has been reduced slightly over ten per cent, mostly by reduction in force, although some of the employees who have left us have been replaced by lower priced help.

"In addition to the ordinary minor changes and improvements, we have during the last twelve months renewed the roof of our building; installed a new Cross automatic feeder on our Dexter folder; installed new spiral gears on our largest printing press; rebuilt our book sewing machine, also our wire stitcher, thus greatly increasing the efficiency of all of these machines. We strive at all times to keep our equipment at the highest point of efficiency, and the plant to-day is in first-class running order.

"For comparative purposes we show below the total sales of books and merchandise; periodical, and commercial printing for the last three fiscal years, ending with June 30 of each year as indicated:

Books and merchandise	$55,845	$25,947	$34,787
Periodicals	35,562	30,742	32,135
Commercial printing	26,871	30,577	26,038

Current Year's Sales Compared With

Decrease	$21,058	Increase $8,840
Decrease	3,427	Increase 1,393
Decrease	733	Decrease 4,539

"From the above it is evident that our greatest need still is quantity. If we could double the amount of books sold, subscriptions, and commercial printing, we could show a very nice profit to be applied toward a reduction in the prices of our goods. We are glad to say there has been a slight increase in the subscription lists to the papers and in the sale of books and merchandise, but the figures shown below will indicate what the results of a material increase would be.

Cost of 1,000 copies, based on present subscription lists:

Saints' Herald	$ 54.25
Autumn Leaves	125.70

Cost of additional 1,000 copies if our subscription lists were doubled

Saints' Herald	$22.40
Autumn Leaves	41.15

"The same principle would apply in connection with the printing of our books. We submit below our yearly balance sheet which you will note has been audited and is certified to by the general auditor of the church.

"This report shows a net operating loss for the year of $1,839.01, but from the assets you will note have been deducted the following amounts as reserves:

For depreciation for the year	$7,498.97
For uncollectible notes and accounts	1,716.90

"We feel that these reserves are high, perhaps higher than need be, but they are made so that in future years, when new machinery need be purchased to replace the present machines, or if any of the notes or accounts now credited as assets should prove worthless, these reserve accounts would take care of such items without causing an undue burden upon the operations of that particular year. At the same time, these reserves which are taken out of the earnings of this year should not be overlooked in considering the result of the present year's operations as it is the setting aside of these amounts which causes a net operating loss for the year.

"We are constantly adding to the catalogue of our goods such articles as we find are being largely used by the church membership and which are not foreign to our line of business, such as typewriters, adding machines, and other office supplies, with the idea in view that the profits from the handling of these articles will assist in taking care of our necessary overhead and thus reduce the cost of production of our own goods."

Yours very sincerely,
 BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
 President Board of Publication.

CHURCH OF CHRIST

To the Presidency and General Conference: I beg leave to report on behalf of the Committee of the Church of Christ, that friendship and fellowship between the brethren of the Church of Christ and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints have continued as heretofore. No joint sessions of the committee have been held since last conference. We trust that harmony and fraternal relations may continue.

Respectfully, on behalf of the Committee,
WALTER W. SMITH, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 15, 1923.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The Science of Charity

Since sociology has been elevated to the ranks of a science, doling out of soup and bread as a sole function of charity has ceased to be, says the Literary Digest.

After charity had supplied the needs of a family for a day or so and the charity basket was empty, the same old trouble came back again and hunger gnawed as usual upon the stomachs of the family.

What is needed in the charity line is not only to relieve immediate wants but to place the needy family or persons upon a self supporting basis.

An interesting feature of one of the sociological courses as taught in a certain girls' college in the East, is what is known as "Junior Month." The New York Charity Organization Society, through the support of an anonymous member, pays the expenses of the girls of the junior class qualifying in social work for a four weeks' trip to New York to study social conditions.

This four weeks' program under the direction of Miss Clare Tousley covers the main fields of social work.

"These include such branches as family social work, medical social service, industrial personnel work, parole and probation, child welfare, immigration, delinquency and others. The students visit Ellis Island, Bedford Reformatory, the Children's Court, and other institutions of similar character as a follow-up on particular lectures. Two generations ago, comments the New York Evening Post, it would have been the desire of these young women to ladle out soup at a bread-line, or to establish an orphan asylum to remedy the conditions they had observed. One generation ago they would have wished to help the anti-tuberculosis movement or to enter a statistical bureau for the determination of a living wage for workers. To-day, however, the desire of these college girls is 'to give the individual the right outlook on life,' and 'to fit him into the place where he can do the best work and be happiest and most useful.' It is the cry of opportunity—opportunity for families to supply their own soup, to bring up their own children, to keep their health, to be worth a saving wage. It is suggested that the idea might be good for others as well as juniors."

Movies in Education

Moving pictures as teachers need thorough scientific investigation, declares Doctor Raymond Dodge of the National Research Council, in an article reviewed by the Literary Digest.

The educational value is recognized, and as such needs the result of an investigation. For, Doctor Dodge notes, the eye becomes fatigued after watching a picture and all precautions should be taken to eliminate this. The investigation should include fatigue tests of the eyes after ordinary school work and after seeing movie films of various lengths, as well as examinations to determine the accuracy and amount learned from the picture screen in comparison with results from the best oral instruction.

"Doctor Dodge explains that the human eye in viewing the movies is commonly subjected to three sources of fatigue. There is, first, a pursuit motion of the eye as a whole in which it follows the moving objects on the screen. This is the most fatiguing type of eye-movement. In addition, there are likely to be gross changes in illumination in the occasional use of moving pictures in schools, due to the turning on and off of lights. Such illumination changes, if they are numerous, are fatiguing to the muscles of the iris. They force the pupil of the eye to expand and contract to adapt itself to the alternate changes. Finally, nonprofessional projection is apt to be blurred. The slightest blur in the picture may produce very fatiguing activity of the ciliary muscles that control the curvature of the lens. Blurred retinal images are the stimulus for refocusing the eye. When the object itself is blurred the eye can never correct it. But it keeps trying. This is one of the main reasons why projection pictures, both still and moving, tend to produce eyestrain. While all of these movements induce eye fatigue, he said, the human eyes in normal condition can stand a good deal.

"'Before moving pictures are conceded any important educational role,' said Doctor Dodge, 'we need to know just how this fatigue compares with that experienced by the eyes in ordinary school work, and just what length and quality of film is best for the eyes, and how often it is advisable to have movie lessons. All three kinds of fatigue of the eyes can be measured.'"

Are Schools Undemocratic?

Charles M. Schwab attacks the educational system in a pointed and forceful statement reviewed in the Literary Digest:

"The system of education in America to-day is undemocratic. It tends to mold the young manhood of the country into a set type. That type is peculiar to a certain environment of books, of music, of art. It is a type which cannot comprehend the dynamics of the workingman's situation; which fails to recognize the importance of the workingman; which even overlooks the distinct entity of the workingman in the molding of a nation.

"The educational system is, in this sense, narrowing. It creates an undeniable atmosphere that men become rooted in. Once set in this atmosphere, it is impossible to make them comprehend any problems save those of their immediate surroundings and personal thoughts. That is why we seldom find a college man who is a fit executive for thousands of steel workers.

"American colleges need to broaden their outlook. They need to mold men that can see across distances—not into themselves. They need to cover more territory, and this territory needs to engulf the average citizen. For what good is education unless it makes for racial progress, unless it produces a class of men that can bear the burdens of the nation rather than live their own selfish lives?"

New View of Drug Habit

That the drug habit is not a vice but a disease is the attitude taken by Clyde L. Eddy, vice president of the American Pharmaceutical Association. In an article in the Literary Digest, it is stated that there are now a million drug addicts in the United States and that most of them became so innocently.

The use of opium and other drugs results in a poisoning which does not show itself appreciably until the drug is taken away, then its effects are so severe that the person often dies. Dope fiends do not indulge for pleasure but to save themselves from torture.

Not more than half of our physicians realize the use of drugs is a disease, thinks Mr. Eddy. They still believe it is a vice, as is still largely taught in schools of medicine. He continues:

"Addiction to the use of opium and the drugs obtained from it—morphine, heroin and codeine principally—is not a wicked habit that may be controlled at will. Opiate addiction is a disease, and a very terrible one, from which upward of a million persons in the United States are suffering at the present time.

Difference in Drugs.

"That there is a difference between addiction to cocaine and addiction to the opiates should be clearly understood at the outset. Every jailer of long experience knows, for instance, that the cocaine addict can safely be locked in a cell, deprived suddenly and completely of his drug of addiction and left to 'kick it out' as best he can. The deprivation will cause him to suffer almost unbearable mental torture, but that is all. Nothing but beneficial effects need result from the treatment.

"But in treating the person addicted to the use of morphin or the other opiates, other curative measures must be resorted to. When suddenly deprived of his drug, the opium addict becomes at first restless, worried and depressed. Then his hands tremble uncontrollably and, as time passes, his eyes water, he sneezes, snuffles and yawns prodigiously. He coughs and chokes and suffers excruciating pains in his feet and legs. He becomes so weak presently that he cannot stand. He falls on the floor and writhes in convulsions. He doubles up with abdominal pain. His face becomes pinched and drawn. Perspiration rolls from his tortured body. He may die suddenly in complete collapse. Suicide sometimes terminates the unendurable agony.

"Perhaps the most remarkable thing about the whole process of narcotic drug addiction is the fact that all of the withdrawal signs are almost instantly and completely relieved by the administration of any one of the opiate drugs, and by no other drug or chemical known to medical science.

"The relief afforded by the opiates is so prompt, certain and complete that a person suffering withdrawal agonies will go to almost any length to obtain the required drugs. And, because his diseased condition has not been fully understood, because he has been compelled to lie and steal to obtain sufficient quantities of the drugs without which his life is unendurable, the addict has been variously branded as weak-willed, untruthful, shifty and altogether unreliable and lacking in moral sense.

Habit Formation

"Contrary to popular belief, the average European or American, as opposed to the Asiatic, derives almost no pleasurable sensation from the use of opium or its derivatives. Why, then, have a million persons in the United States become addicted to their use? Most persons become addicted as the result of having opiates administered to them by family physicians. A patient suffering from the after-effects of an operation is given morphine over a period of a few weeks or months, and addiction results. Hundreds of addicts can trace their addiction directly to unfortunate efforts to relieve themselves of headaches or nervousness by the use of nostrums. Not a few veterans of the recent war are confirmed opiate addicts as the result of having morphine administered to them while recovering from wounds.

"The Treasury Department is authority for the statement that 'anyone repeatedly taking a narcotic drug over a period of thirty days, in the case of a very susceptible individual for ten days, is in grave danger of becoming an addict.'"

The solution of the problem lies in education, thinks Mr. Eddy. He would begin with the doctors and the medical schools and then the public. They must be taught that the opium habit is not a vice but a disease. To stop illicit distribution of drugs suddenly would only add to the suffering of thousands of innocent addicts who are forced by our laws to depend upon smugglers and peddlers for their narcotic supply. The drug habit must be treated as a disease, not as a vice.

Anti-Mormon Party Revived

The so-called American party, a political organization which functioned in Utah years ago, has been revived, according to a news item in the Ogden Standard-Examiner. Its purpose is "to prevent religious interference in politics and to prevent the union of church and state."

The "Committee of 125" called a mass meeting recently in Salt Lake City for the purpose of reorganization. A ticket for the forthcoming election has been selected. The "Committee of 125" came into existence a short time ago to oppose the legislation designed to prohibit the sale of cigarets in Utah.

H. C. Allen, Salt Lake attorney, declared that a new "Liberty" was born upon the occasion of the revival of the American party. The platform advanced, consists of the following items:

The Platform

"We insist upon the strict compliance with the following provisions of the constitution of the state of Utah:

"'There shall be no union of church and state, nor shall any church dominate the state or interfere with its functions.' (Article 1, Section 4.)

"The wise principle announced in this provision of our constitution is born of centuries of experience. Its observance will bring us peace and a deserved prosperity—its violation means continued strife and ultimate disaster.

"We charge that the violation of this provision of our constitution is a breach of faith with the United States of America and denies to a large portion of the citizens of this state rights innate in every American. In a material way our state has been hampered in its normal growth and our city denied that progress which it deserves and which otherwise could come to it. Men and women who ought most to interest themselves in civic affairs have shunned their civic duties because of the fact eligibility to political service has not been based upon fitness, but upon ability to control influences which should be extraneous to and divorced from politics.

"While other western cities have shown unusual growth, ours has lagged because those resident here have not been permitted to enjoy that full measure of citizenship which belongs of right to every American.

"We charge that our entire civic structure, including the different municipal organizations and our public schools, is being dominated and controlled by leaders of the Mormon church.

"Realizing that it is vital to the growth and prosperity of our city that the burdens of taxation be reduced to the lowest possible minimum, consistent with efficient business administration, we pledge our candidates to bring about such reduction.

"With a full realization of the fiduciary position of public servants, we strongly advocate and pledge our candidates to the installation of an approved budget system, to the end that the administration of the finances of the city be put upon a business basis."

Grievances Set Forth

At the mass meeting protests were made and grievances set forth against the Latter Day Saint officials who are charged with controlling politics in Utah. Mr. Allen as

LETTERS AND NEWS

Portland Saints Remodel Church

PORTLAND, OREGON, October 3.—The church building at Portland looks at least one hundred per cent better with a new roof, fresh paint, and newly calcimined interior.

At the business session of the branch held on October 2, little business came before the house except the usual reports of officers and committees, among which was that of the building committee which has had charge of the work of repairing and refinishing the church building. This committee has been continued to complete the work of refinishing floors and woodwork and grading and seeding the church lot.

The Department of Women donated $35 to the building fund.

New London Branch Recently Organized

NEW LONDON, CONNECTICUT, October 15.—Twenty-three miles west of New London is the town of Lyme, and it was here that a child was born, about 1776, who was destined to be the mother of a great prophet. Several apostles of the church were also born in Connecticut so this State is really the cradle of the church.

Abbie E. Merritt, of Noank, was one of the first to accept the gospel in this vicinity. Through her instrumentality Brothers Frank Sheehy and George Gates came to this State thirty-one years ago, in December, 1891, and held services at a quiet place known as Quakertown. Thomas G. Whipple, A. B. Phillips, and Palmer G. Whipple attended these services. At first Thomas Whipple honestly opposed the work, but upon further investigation became deeply interested, as did also the other two men.

A few months later, Brother George W. Robley came to their home, and not knowing the extent of their interest in the gospel, became somewhat discouraged and wondered if it was wisdom to stay any longer with them. After praying about the matter it was revealed to him that A. B. Phillips would speaker said, "As school children we all learned how our grandparents left Europe because of religious oppression. However, we of Utah find the government controlled, not by the people, but by one man who rules because of his ecclesiastical power." A recital of political conditions brought forth the statement: "I do not know how this impressed you, but having recently come to Utah 'from the United States of America' I felt the humiliation of it."

Mr. Macmillan, another speaker, attacked the church leaders saying,

"I have no quarrel with the Mormon religion or those who worship as Mormons. If a Methodist thinks it a sin to dance and play cards, or a Baptist believes in immersion, even though the water is cold, that is all right with me. We have no quarrel with a religion, but we have a quarrel with those heads of the Mormon church who claim the right to mix religion with the politics of the state."

In closing the speaker said that a former church president received a revelation from God to abolish polygamy; that the present head recently received a revelation regarding the dress of church members and that now it is high time for the president to receive a revelation from the Almighty to cease dabbling in politics.

obey the gospel and also preach it. A short time after this experience the three men were baptized, and later Lillian and Fenella Whipple were baptized.

For years these pioneers fought the good fight with but an occasional opportunity to hear a minister of the gospel. Thomas G. Whipple and his family moved to Providence, Rhode Island, and though they remained only a short time, they received spiritual strength.

An effort was made in Norwich, in Center Groton, by Ralph Farrell and A. B. Phillips where they were promised the use of the chapel. One service was held and the following night, upon their arrival at the chapel, they found the door barred against them.

Brother Phillips was promised the use of a chapel in New London and went there to hold services, but the first night the door was locked and the key withheld. Since, this building has been used for an ice cream manufacturing plant. Brother Phillips was invited to speak in a well-established mission in this city, but was not permitted to continue, although the attendance decidedly increased.

In the fall of 1920 Brother E. J. Gleazer took charge of the missionary work in New London and Groton, holding services for some time continuously at David Tourtellot's home. After a few months the work was continued by Herman Chelline, and later H. B. Johnson took charge, holding services at Groton and New London alternately. As a result the New London Branch was organized on August 26, 1923, at the home of Charles Alves.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer, assisted by W. A. Sinclair, H. B. Johnson, and E. L. Traver, organized the branch. Charles Alves was ordained to the office of deacon and Alma Whipple to the office of priest. The New London Branch has a membership of thirty-nine people.

Bell to Be Installed in Church

LUCASVILLE, OHIO, October 9.—Preparations are on foot to have the church building equipped with a bell in the building. A bookcase will also probably be installed, which will make it much more convenient.

The Sunday school and Bible class here is one of the best in this district, with an average attendance of seventy-five. Many who are not of the faith seem very much delighted in the spiritual progress enjoyed.

A very spiritual meeting was enjoyed Sunday, October 7, when Brother Clarence Current, of McDermott, was present and spoke in exhortation. People not of the faith were much impressed with the service.

Church Properly Represented in Directory

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, October 19.—The representative of the City Directory under the R. L. Polk Company, of Sioux City, Iowa, has been very kind in seeking information that will give the church a proper representation in the forthcoming issue. This is something that has never been obtained before.

The advanced study class of religious research began their regular work in the study of authorship, chronology, and contents of the books of the Bible under the instruction of J. F. Mintun, Thursday, October 18.

The Department of Women and Temple Builders hold regular meetings. Interest is active in both these organizations.

So far as we can learn, all those attending conference have returned. All are pleased with the results of conference, more especially because of the excellent spirit prevailing on the last day. It is hoped that a forward movement will follow.

Several are passing through quite severe trials. Many of the Saints suffered loss because of the storm and flood following previous losses, which has left some without furniture or clothes.

Elder Daniel Macgregor made a short visit in Council Bluffs on his way home.

Marshall Supports Revival Service

MARSHALL, MISSOURI, October 17.—Evangelist Torry closed a series of union revival meetings here Sunday night, October 14, after four weeks of continuous meetings. Many good Christian truths were brought out, and a general revival was effected in all classes, so some good was done.

A goodly number of our people attended the General Conference at Independence.

Recently ordained Priest Ralph M. Ridge, preached his maiden sermon on September 30.

Temple Builders Entertain Older Chatham Saints

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, October 8.—On Tuesday evening, October 2, the Temple Builders entertained the old members of the branch. A supper was served in the basement of the church which was followed by a program. A pleasing part of the evening's activities was the presentation to Sister Fannie Hoyles of a beautifully bound booklet in the Temple Builder colors containing a picture of all the Temple Builders. Sister Hoyles is the oldest member of the branch and is over eighty years of age. The Temple Builders are very active in the branch. Their supervisor is Sister A. R. Hewitt and Miss Cora Cudney is monitor.

The Sunday school officers are preparing a fine program to celebrate Thanksgiving which is to be given during the Sunday school hour on November 11. The Sunday school has tried this year to celebrate all the main holidays of the year.

Preparations are also being made for the annual anniversary services which fall on the nearest Sunday to October 25. They will probably be held this year on October 28, and possibly the services will be followed by an anniversary supper on the Monday following.

Detroit District Holds Quarterly Young People's Convention

PONTIAC, MICHIGAN, October 11.—The young people's convention of the Detroit District convened Saturday, September 29, at 7.30 p. m., in Pontiac with District Director Carlisle Whitehead in charge. The assembly consisted of young people from Windsor, Ontario; Detroit, Flint, Orion, Port Huron, Pontiac, and Grand Rapids, Michigan.

A short program was furnished by Highland Park and Detroit locals which was followed by games under the supervision of Brother Floyd Moore, of Detroit. These were played with interest on the recreational grounds of the Pontiac Branch. The grounds were neatly supplied with Edison specials so that we indeed walked and played in the light. After the games a wiener and marshmallow roast was much enjoyed by all, especially those who had gone without their supper in order to give service. The entertainment of the evening and a hearty community sing which closed the evening's program, were also enjoyed.

Early Sunday morning, September 30, a number of young people from Lansing motored to Pontiac to participate in the Sunday services.

The theme for Sunday was Zion. Sunday school was held at 9 a. m. which was followed by a prayer service at 10 with Elders Robert Coats, Jesse Shelly, of Detroit, and Elder Paul Belleisle of Grand Rapids in charge. The people, through the gifts of the Spirit, were admonished to be more diligent in service. Surely those present will long remember the spiritual feast there enjoyed. The service closed at 12.35 p. m.

Following dinner, preaching service was held at 2.30 with Alma Grant, of Detroit, as the speaker, who used as his text "Choose your port and lay your course."

An expression meeting was held at 4 p. m. with Elders Kenneth Green, M. W. Liston, and Carlisle Whitehead in charge. The import of this meeting was to present to the assembly the aims and purpose of the Young People's Organization which are 100 per cent tithepayers, and 100 per cent department workers, or in other words, 100 per cent Latter Day Saints whatever the cost may be. Elder Green presented his subject in a very interesting and convincing talk which we hope sank deeply into the hearts of all.

At 7.30 preaching was by Elder Charles Mottashed on "Zion, the hope of the young man." Elder Mottashed's sermon pointed out clearly the present and future need of trained men and women in various vocations for the establishment of Zion.

A district young people's convention is held every three months, and a great deal of interest is being manifest in the meetings.

CARLISLE WHITEHEAD.

Boys' Band Started at Fort Madison

FORT MADISON, IOWA, October 10.—The work in this branch is moving along nicely although it has been greatly handicapped by the railroad strike of last year which made it necessary for a number of the members to move to other places. However the Saints are rejoicing to have with them again Brother Walter E. Sanford who is acting as Boy Scout leader. He has started a boys' band.

The Sunday school is progressing nicely under Superintendent Cecil Davis. Also the Department of Recreation and Expression is doing well.

Fort Madison Saints have a church building of which they can be proud. It has a fine basement where prayer meeting is held. The boys also meet here to read and have band practice.

The local priesthood has been doing much to keep the Saints together. Some of the brethren go to Rock Creek, Nauvoo, and Montrose occasionally to help them out.

The Ladies' Aid has been doing good work in helping to pay for the new church. They hold bake sales once a month besides having bazaars, rummage sales, etc.

Brother Richard Herrick was seriously injured recently while braking on the railroad. It is hoped that he may recover soon, though no word has yet been received from him.

Sacrament and social service on Sunday, October 7, was a spiritual feast. Admonition was given to two of the young men to prepare for active work in the priesthood. It is good to see the young people preparing and consecrating their lives for service.

One-Day Meeting at Port Hope

PORT HOPE, MICHIGAN, October 4.—The Huron Center Branch held a one-day meeting Sunday, October 21. The branch is located several miles from Kinde, Michigan.

Years ago it was a large and flourishing branch, but the work has since died out. So to-day efforts are being made to revive it.

Opposition has been met with in the locality, but it is hoped this may be overcome, and that eventually the branch will be built up to what it was many years ago.

Department of Women Raises Funds for Church Improvements

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, October 10.—The young people of Detroit are awakening to a sense of their responsibilities and their voices are being heard more often in the assemblies of the Saints. On September 29 and 30 a convention of the young people was held at Pontiac. A goodly number of Detroit young folks were in attendance and returned home with a greater desire for service.

On September 27 the Department of Women of Pontiac gave a supper in the Central church building of Detroit. The Detroit Saints turned out in large numbers, and $130 was realized for the benefit of the Pontiac Saints.

Plans have been made to remodel the East Side church building. A basement will be put under the present structure, thus making more room for Sunday school work. The Department of Women is raising funds for the improvements.

On October 7, Elder V. D. Schaar, of Orion, Michigan, district superintendent of the Sunday school, visited the East Side church. His talks on "Zion, the pure in heart," were wonderful, and proved encouraging to all who heard.

Radio Party Enjoys Program Given by Omaha Saints

PISGAH, IOWA, October 10.—The radio program broadcasted from Omaha at 9 o'clock Sunday evening, September 9, was enjoyed by about eighty Saints and friends at the home of Brother and Sister C. S. Van Eaton who have a very fine radio set.

Elder Charles Hield, of Moorhead, Iowa, delivered the evening address on September 23, and again visited us on October 7. Elder C. B. Woodstock preached both morning and evening on October 14.

The Temple Builders met with their new leader, Sister George Meggers, on Tuesday evening, October 9, and made plans for future meetings. This organization has been active in the past under the direction of Sister C. S. Van Eaton.

Branch President Joseph Lane attended the General Conference at Independence, Missouri.

The recent rainy weather has given place to some bright warm days. To date there has been very little frost and the farmers say the corn is now safe.

Special Events Celebrated by Omaha Saints

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, October 16.—A record attendance at the new church was made on the evening of September 21, when services in commemoration of the angel's visit to Joseph Smith were held. It was impressive to reflect that precisely one hundred years had passed away since that memorable night, and the relation of the story by one who had, a few months ago, trod the same ground, stood in the identical grove, wandered through the country home, and offered up a silent prayer on the sacred hill, brought the sights and scenes vividly before the attentive audience. Sister Anderson related the incidents of her recent visit to Palmyra, the old home place of her grandfather, and the Hill Cumorah. She read from that grandfather's own writings, a description of the experiences of the night of September 21, 1823, and those of the day following.

Following Sister Anderson's address, Brother Carl Self described the plates of the Book of Mormon, and gave a brief history of their origin, nature, and final return to the custody of the angelic messenger. He told of the dissensions of the ancient inhabitants of America, the final extermination of the Nephites, and the experiences of the lonely custodian of the sacred Record.

Brother P. R. Burton, who spent two and a half years in Nauvoo, described the closing scenes of the life of the Prophet and his brother, and the tragedy at Carthage. He bore an impressive testimony to the esteem in which Emma Smith was held by the older citizens of Nauvoo. His brief address was full of feeling, and carried earnest conviction of deep sincerity and loyalty towards the principles of the gospel restored a hundred years ago.

The audience seemed to enjoy thoroughly singing the hymns, "When earth in bondage long had lain," and "Book of Mormon, hid for ages."

Brother Carl Self, who is one of Omaha's well-known attorneys, gave a splendid address on "Is the Constitution of the United States obsolete?" on the morning of Sunday, September 23. He stressed the inspirational origin of the Constitution, pointed out the fundamental principles which mark it as a document unique in the world's history, and called attention to what he considers a growing menace to the people's interest, as sight of those fundamentals are becoming dimmer in this materialistic age. Brother Jay Leeka, who was recently admitted to the bar of Nebraska, presided at the meeting, and the congregation sang patriotic songs with fervor and appreciation of their meanings. Old Glory held a prominent place in the setting of the pulpit, and a sister sang, "I'm a pilgrim, and I'm a stranger," peculiarly fitting to the thought that all earthly homes, even national ones, are but temporary to the pilgrims who are striving for an eternal, heavenly one. This was in observance of the national "Constitution Week."

Sunday evening, October 14, District President T. J. Elliott, presented very successfully the church's idea of stewardships, using as a basis for his sermon, the matter recently given out by the president of the church. He made it clear that no one who has taken the name of Christ, by baptism into his church, is exempt from consecrating to God every power, talent, and property with which he is blessed.

Welcome Meeting Held at Runnells

RUNNELS, IOWA, September 9.—One day during the first week of September the branch president was impressed to hold a "Welcome" service for the teachers of the Runnells consolidated schools; that they might gain a knowledge of our work and not confuse us with the Utah Mormons.

After consultation with Brother Castings, arrangements were made for such a meeting, Brother C. E. Wight being chosen for the speaker. The time was set for the evening of September 9.

Brother Will Evans and orchestra of Des Moines gave a splendid entertainment. The local choir rendered an anthem beautifully. Brother J. M. Park, president of the school board made a short address of welcome and Brother Wight was introduced as the speaker for the occasion. His address was clear-cut and forceful. His explanation of the doctrine and belief of the church was plain and to the point. The difference between the two organizations was made very plain.

Three of the laws that were introduced in 1830; which were "new" were shown to be, tithing, stewardships, and the conservation of energy. The superintendent of schools and coach expressed themselves as having learned much from the address, as well as some of the teachers. Brother and Sister Wight drove overland, both being welcomed heartily by the Saints. Brother Wight spoke to the Saints in the morning from the text, "For why will ye die, O house of Israel?"

We feel that good will result for the church from this day's service.

C. E. McDONALD.

Old Member Enjoys Church Paper

THUNDER HAWK, SOUTH DAKOTA, October 4.—As I am renewing my subscription for the HERALD I want to tell the Saints how I appreciate hearing from them through the HERALD. We who are isolated enjoy reading about the reunions so much, and it brings joy and courage to go on and try to be faithful and set a good example before all we associate with.

Two months from this date I have been with the church for fifty-one years. I have had a great many experiences, yet it seems I am only a babe in the gospel.

We are looking forward to a visit from Brother J. E. Wildermuth who will preach for us for a short time. We hope much good may be done besides encouraging the few Saints here.

ELLEN HARR.

Boomer Branch Saints Widely Scattered

WESTON, IOWA, October 15.—Though the Saints of the Boomer Branch are widely scattered, there are always a few who come to church, though seldom is the church filled.

During the past month a good sacrament service was held with District President J. A. Hansen in charge. One Sunday the old warrior for God, Elder J. Carlisle, spoke to us. Of young men who have spoken, Brother Floyd Graybill should be mentioned. He is not alone growing bigger in a physical way, but he is also developing spiritually as well.

There are fifty-four names recorded on the Sunday school record, but the average attendance is about thirty.

The last meeting of the ladies' aid was postponed on account of rain. The same night it rained seven inches and many bridges were washed out. This has made it impossible for some of the members to attend church.

Salt Lake Branch Has Lectures

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, October 12.—Elder Roscoe Davey, the branch president, is giving a series of Sunday evening lectures on various interesting subjects.

On September 14 the Department of Recreation and Expression commenced its winter session with the election of officers. Elder Roscoe Davey gave some very helpful talks at this meeting.

On Sunday, September 16 Elders R. W. Fulk and Guy Levitt were the speakers and some good advice was given the Saints, such as to avoid making excuses for not attending the house of the Lord.

Brother and Sister J. Eggen entertained the Saints at their home on September 19, and a pleasant evening was spent.

Priesthood meeting is held once a month under the direction of the branch president.

Salt Lake City has had its thousands of visitors the past month owing to the Mormon conference and the State Fair.

Proceeds From Play Help Expand Library

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK, October 22.—Fine work is being done by the young people's organizations, the Temple Builders, Orioles, and Erodelphians, a sport organization. The Oriole Girls, under the leadership of Sister Marie Landes, have been working quietly but industriously for the Christmas offering. Also the Orioles and Brother Lloyd Goulding's Sunday school class are expecting to give a Halloween masquerade box social October 30, the proceeds to go to the Christmas offering.

Early in the year the Department of Recreation and Expression gave the play "The pleasures of the world," later repeating it in Howard Hall under the auspices of the Woodmen of the World. The proceeds were divided equally. The money raised from this play was used to purchase books for a library which was presented to the branch.

The Department of Recreation and Expression, with Brother Victor Joy as superintendent, has three classes organized: one in Doctrine and Covenants, one in Book of Mormon, and one in Church History. Plans are under way for another class. A special rally is planned for the first of November.

The young people's prayer meeting has evidently come to stay. The first one was held in May, 1921. They have averaged at least one meeting a month. When the weather is favorable they meet quite frequently and take an early hike into the country, returning in time for Sunday school. They are always accompanied by an elder and either the monitor of the Orioles or the superintendent of the girls' department.

Elder George Landes is cherishing the idea of an orchestra. Though he has had a good many difficulties so far, he is confident that the project will succeed.

Sister Anna Landes is doing good work with the choir.

Brother Alfred Fletcher, of the Toronto Branch, is visiting here, contemplating a move to this place. He would be a welcome addition to the branch.

Spokane Makes Special Effort to Increase Attendance at Meetings

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, October 18.—Elder Daniel Macgregor visited the branch for a week preceding his departure for General Conference. Although his stay was short, much good was accomplished. Reports are that while he held meetings in Idaho, especially at Clarks Fork, the pool rooms and card rooms were closed during services.

District President Oscar Case has been making special effort to reach the scattered members. The priesthood of the Spokane Branch has been responding well, which shows a good degree of interest. In these efforts the membership is encouraged and the youth of the church are kept within the fold. Attendance at meetings is being increased.

Work is being done on plans for the winter activities of the Department of Recreation and Expression.

The testimony of the faithful in Spokane District is "that the gospel is true."

Vacancies in District Made by Transfer

LITTLETON, COLORADO, October 22.—While rainy weather prevailed at the General Conference, Colorado had a light snow fall. The weather since then, however, has been fine.

Sunday, October 14, Pastor E. J. Williams spoke at the church to an attentive congregation on "Save the child and you save the nation." He emphasized that the preaching of the gospel to the child is the only way to bring about a higher and better civilization. Calling attention to the amount of religious instruction a child is given, he said a child receives thirty minutes of religious education in the Sunday school a week. Nine out of ten receive no instruction in the home during the week preparatory to the thirty minutes on Sunday. With only twenty-six hours of religious instruction in the year by the church there must be given more in the home or the government and civilization is in danger.

On Sunday, October 21, preaching at both services was by Elder Frank B. Almond.

Elder G. H. Wixom, who has been district president, will leave soon for California to take up work in his new field. One of his counselors, Elder C. H. Rich, is going to Maine, so only one of the presidency remains, Elder E. J. Williams. It is hoped the work of the district will soon be taken care of by filling the vacancies caused by the transfer. The work of the officers now leaving has been greatly appreciated by members in the district.

All visiting members to General Conference have returned, and plans are under way for another season of work.

Holden Stake News

HOLDEN STAKE, October 25.—Apostle James A. Gillen was the speaker at the church at Holden Sunday, the 21st, occupying at 11 a. m. and 2.15 p. m. His message was very highly appreciated and encouraging. Brother Gillen also spoke to the Holden Home family at 1.30 p. m.

Bishop James F. Keir, Brother Benson, of Idaho, and Brother and Sister F. M. Cooper and granddaughter, Sister Wright, drove down from Independence and visited with the Holden Home family Monday.

Elder I. M. Ross was with the Sedalia Saints Sunday, the 21st. The Sedalia Saints are expecting to begin the erection of their church building in a few weeks. Elder W. S. Macrae joined Brother Ross on Monday in arranging matters pertaining to the dining hall at the fair grounds.

Bishop C. J. Hunt preached at Leeton Saturday evening at the home of Brother Baker and at the Post Oak church on Sunday. The Post Oak Saints regret very much the departure of Brother and Sister Earl Raveill. They move to about two miles northwest of Raytown and will attend services in Kansas City. Brother and Sister Raveill have been actively connected with church work there.

The attendance was good at all services at Lexington Sunday, the 21st. Elder G. W. Talley, who has been pastor for the past year, delivered his farewell sermon. He and family are moving to Ohio to care for Sister Talley's aged parents. Brother Talley had much to do with the building up of the work there and the organization which was in 1911. He moved to Lexington in 1907. He and Sister Talley will be greatly missed by the Lexington Saints, as they were both consecrated workers. Brother James A. Brendel is pastor until the election in December. The Saints are looking forward with keen anticipation to the coming stake conference, which convenes there Friday, November 9, at 7.30 p. m., and continues over Sunday.

The funeral of Sister Anna Niebrook was held in Saints' church at Grandview October 4. Her death occurred at the Independence Sanitarium October 1. She leaves husband, Brother John Niebrook, three small children, and numerous relatives and friends. This was the first funeral service held in the new chapel. The pastor and wife, Brother and Sister C. V. Hopkins, and Brother and Sister Chipley attended a reception, October 5, given by the Methodist people honoring their new pastor, Reverend Farstone and wife. Brother Hopkins was called upon to give a talk welcoming Reverend Farstone to our community. The junior choir are making rapid progress under the supervision of Sister Margaret Cairnes. The choir is composed of children between the ages of ten and fifteen. They have taken up the study of anthems and expect to render the first one next Sunday, October 28, during the Sunday school hour. Brother Keith Rogers preached both morning and evening, October 21, the sermons being very interesting and instructive. At twelve o'clock baptismal services were held in the font in the basement, at which time three candidates entered the waters. Confirmation services were held in the evening. On October 14, Elder and Sister A. M. Chase and daughter, Sister S. A. Burgess, visited Grandview during the evening service. Brother Chase preached, and Sister Burgess sang a beautiful solo.

Bishop Charles Fry and Sister Fry, of Independence, visited with Pastor Frank Goode and wife at Knobnoster Sunday, the 21st. Brother Fry preached in the morning and evening. He made his home with Brother Goode for a number of years while living at Tabor, Iowa.

Elder Thomas Leitch, of North Dakota, delivered the sermon on Sunday evening, the 21st, at Warrensburg. Brother Leitch accompanied Brother Kennicutt, who is visiting his family who have located here on account of the splendid school advantages. Brother Kennicutt spends the greater part of his time in North Dakota where he has business interests. The Saints surprised Sister Raschke and family Tuesday night, the 23d, by calling on her in a body to welcome them to Warrensburg. The Department of Women met Thursday afternoon the 25th, at Sister States's to arrange for their rummage sale. Elder J. E. Bozarth was chosen pastor at Warrensburg at a business meeting Wednesday evening the 24th to fill out the unexpired time of Brother G. Scott Daniel who has been appointed to Burlington, Iowa.

Lamoni Stake Items

LAMONI, IOWA, October 27.—The work here seems to have taken a new impetus since conference, and the majority of people are very hopeful for a bright and eventful year.

Attendance at church services has materially increased this fall. Last Sunday evening seats on the main floor of the auditorium were at a premium. The increase at the morning session may be attributed partly to the change in Sunday school. The seniors are permitted this year to attend the regular service instead of having a special sermon hour at the same time. This is found to be much more satisfactory.

Two especially fine sermons were delivered at the Brick Church Sunday, October 21. Stake President C. E. Wight spoke on the subject, "Love," which, while as old as the world itself, was presented in such a pleasing, forceful manner, and with an application so timely that it proved to be not in the least stale or disinteresting. Apostle D. T. Williams took for his text in the evening, "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." The application to present-day problems in the church and the proof of the assertion as witnessed by the outpouring of God's Spirit at the close of the late conference, welding the people together with one ideal, were the lines on which he developed the subject.

The Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society is proving one of the most successful undertakings ever launched in Lamoni. It has close to one hundred members who, under the efficient direction of Miss Mabel Carlile, are doing splendid work. They furnish music at church services and expect to furnish a concert as a special number of the Lyceum Course. They also expect to give the "Elijah" in the spring. The music at the morning service is especially appreciated since there was no morning choir service last year on account of the young people attending the special service in connection with the Sunday school at the schoolhouse.

The Graceland College football team met its first defeat October 15, when they met Simpson College at Indianola. Simpson has a team of very high calibre, and Graceland was simply outclassed. They played Tabor College at Tabor on October 26, winning by a score of 40 to 0. Tabor plays a return game here Thanksgiving Day, the closing game of the season.

The Department of Women is divided into two groups this year, the East Group and the West Group. The East Group are studying "Successful family life on a moderate income," the study work being in charge of their leader, Mrs. Oliver Hayer. The West Group is studying "Stewardship," with Bishop A. Carmichael as teacher. Mrs. F. M. McDowell is the leader of this group.

President F. M. McDowell thinks he is about the most abused man in Lamoni. Having been away from his family most of the summer and fall, he returned from conference to find a diphtheria quarantine barring entrance to his home. His little daughter Marian Louise was the victim of a light case. He hopes to join them again in a few days.

Independence

Rally day was held for the Sunday school, Sunday, October 28, at the Stone Church. About seven hundred rally buttons were given out to the boys and girls, announcing the occasion.

Each member of the Sunday school was urged to invite parents and friends for the 11 o'clock service. The regular preaching services were withdrawn, and special exercises were held.

The purpose of the rally day was to put before the parents the kind of work being done by the Sunday school and to urge the cooperation of each mother and father.

The 11 o'clock program consisted of four short addresses on conditions and ideals. The speakers were O. C. White, superintendent junior department; S. A. Thiel, assistant superintendent; Mrs. W. W. Smith, superintendent of beginner department; and C. B. Hartshorn, general superintendent.

The junior department was seated on the platform, and a miniature Sunday school was held. It opened with prayer and song as is usually done. Two numbers were sung under the direction of Mrs. Bertha Burgess. Miss Juanita Resch sang a solo.

It was announced that report cards were to go into effect, whereby parents would be informed of the progress being made by their children at Sunday school. Three types of certificates of promotion will be awarded, the gold star, blue star, and plain. These denote the amount of effort put forth and progress made by the child.

A school of music, which is to function as part of the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, has just been organized.

Its studios are on the second floor of the Harrington Building at Lexington and Spring Streets. They will consist of studios, classrooms, and a small auditorium for recitals.

The instructors of the school and subjects they will teach are: Pauline Becker Etzenhouser, piano, musical history, and appreciation; Arthur H. Mills, piano, harmony, and counterpoint; Eugene Christy, singing; Paul N. Craig, singing; Jeanette Kelley Craig, piano; Zella Harder, piano and kindergarten music.

The Independence Music Club will give the opening exercises in the studio by having its session there on November 6. The building was to be ready for occupation on November 1.

A get-together party for the officers, teachers, and pupils of the intermediate department of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Sunday school was held in the dining hall of the Stone Church at 7.30 p. m., Tuesday, October 23. A short time ago more than fifty juniors were promoted to the intermediate department, and several new teachers have been added. The reception was planned that these new members might become better acquainted with each other and also with those who have been in the department for a longer period. Refreshments were served and a jolly good time had.

By telegram to the Bishop's office, the death of O. E. Sade, formerly a missionary, is made known.

The Patronesses of the Independence Sanitarium held their first meeting since the summer vacation at 2.30 o'clock Friday afternoon, October 26, at the home of Mrs. Benjamin R. McGuire. Plans were laid for the winter activities.

Vacancies Filled in Providence Branch

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, October 17.—The loyalty in the priesthood is reflected in the members, as is evidenced in the increase in attendance at all services. On September 30 the speaker at the morning hour was Pastor E. M. Brown, whose subject was "Wanted, big men." The evening hour was occupied by Elder F. W. Roberts whose theme was "Spirit in man."

Quarterly business meeting was held Thursday evening, October 4. Officers were elected to fill vacancies in the several departments as follows: Department of Recreation and Expression, Brother Paul H. Haynes; Department of Women, Sister Edith E. Yerrington; Department of Young Men, Brother J. Duncan Suttill; Department of Young Women, Sister Eva Toombs.

On Sunday, October 7, the priesthood met in the lower auditorium for special prayer service one half hour before communion service. The speaker at the evening service was Patriarch J. D. Suttill, who spoke on the calling and duties of a patriarch. Brother Suttill is well known in the church, and his wise counsel is sought by all.

October 14 was observed as rally day for church and school. The speaker for the morning hour was Pastor E. M. Brown, who took for his subject, "Rally your ideal." Brother Brown's talk was very inspiring to the young people. A special program followed the lesson period of the Sunday school. The evening sermon was by Elder F. W. Roberts. Brother Roberts took for his text Song of Solomon 5: 16, from which he preached an inspiring sermon on "the graces of Christ."

Meetings Soon to Be Held at Mapleton

MAPLETON, KANSAS, October 23.—The work at this place was first started by Elder Lee Quick and family. By their faithfulness they had converted some of their neighbors and were holding Sunday school and other services in a country schoolhouse located near Brother Quick's farm. Other Saints began to move in until it was necessary to find a more convenient place in which to hold services. A building was rented and fitted up, and Apostle I. N. White came and organized a branch on July 16, 1911, with thirty-four members. The branch has continued to grow until at present it numbers over a hundred.

The sisters in early days organized a women's society known as the Willing Workers which began to work to earn money to build a church. After the work had begun the brethren came to their aid, and all worked together with the result that a nice little church was built. A new room is now being added so as to meet the demands of a larger branch.

The Saints are scattered throughout the country on farms. Because of their scattered condition it is impossible to get them together oftener than once a week, so no meetings are held during the week except on special occasions.

The members of the branch usually work together in all social gatherings and programs, and they are always well received by those not of our faith.

The expenses of the branch are met by each member giving the deacon what he feels he can give. Then if funds fall short the sisters' organization comes to the rescue and furnishes what is needed.

Elders Lee Quick and W. E. Haden expect to begin a series of meetings soon, and it is hoped that much good may be accomplished.

Visiting Missionaries Contribute to Services

PUEBLO, COLORADO, October 2.—On October 7 the Pueblo Branch was visited by Brothers Hubert Yates and McIndoo, of Phoenix, Arizona, who took a very active part in the day's services. They gave two very amusing monologues during the program period of the Department of Recreation and Expression and sang a duet during the preaching service, "I need Thee every hour."

Brother Yates, who is the son of Brother James E. Yates, and a young minister of the gospel, talked Sunday evening. He gave some fine points to those who want to be "The winners."

Brother Reuben Ard, a member of the branch who is working out of town at present, has been very ill with rheumatism at a hospital in Salida, Colorado. Through the faith and prayers of the Saints he is recovering. He and his family are missed from branch circles.

The Department of Women is announcing the sale of Scripture Text Calendars, a bazaar and serve-self supper, as the work to be done before Christmas. The department is working hard for a church building which will be owned by the branch.

The Saints enjoy the Spirit of God in their gatherings and are happy even though many have hard trials.

Special Meetings Held at Sacramento

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, October 18.—Sunday evening, October 14, brought to a close a week's special meetings here, with Elder E. B. Hull as the interesting speaker, who with Sister Hull has recently returned from two years in Honolulu. The attendance averaged forty-five, including over ten visitors each evening. Brother Ralph Ensley and family drove by automobile, a sixty-mile round trip, for each service. Mrs. Ensley and her young brother were baptized on Sunday evening.

District President J. D. White, accompanied by Brother and Sister Hull, visited here on Sunday, the 7th, arriving in time for sacrament service. Each bore an encouraging testimony.

Sister Hull met with the Department of Women at the regular meeting on Thursday afternoon, the 11th, giving an interesting talk on her work with the sisters in Hawaii.

The Sunday school and Department of Recreation and Expression, with Elder W. H. Dawson superintendent of each, are having good attendance. The latter meets at 6.30 p. m. Sundays, with twenty minutes each devoted to opening, lesson, and an interesting program, which is followed promptly at 7.30 by a speaker previously appointed. A sermonet is given on gospel themes. The meeting closes at 8 o'clock. This has proven successful here, for all remain for the complete combined meeting.

First Chicago Launching Christmas Drive

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, October 22.—Coming events cast their shadows before. First Chicago Branch was agreeably surprised to learn of the magnificent missionary force that is assigned to the district. All are with President F. M. McDowell in his slogan, "Go forward," and the desire of this branch is to make the coming conference year the banner year of the church's existence.

The Sunday school is putting on a special drive for Christmas offering through the able efforts of Superintendent J. W. Pettersson. The school intends to go "over the top."

The Department of Recreation and Expression is anticipating a big night on Halloween. Visitors on this night must be careful, or the goblins will get them. This promises to be the big event of the month.

There have been most excellent sermons from the following local men lately: J. W. Pettersson, C. A. Edstrom, Clyde Bullard, F. E. Bone, L. V. Butterworth, and John Tenos. Brother O. A. McDowell, vice president of the district, was a visitor on October 14. He gave a good talk on "The standard of living."

Brother Zimmermann and family made a short stop over on their way home from conference.

The union sacrament service held at First Chicago Branch on October 21 was refreshing. The theme carried through from the morning sermon by Elder F. F. Wipper, was from 1 Corinthians 12:13. It seems natural to have Brother and Sister Wipper here again.

Visiting Saints are invited to meet with First Chicago Branch at 4416 Gladys Avenue.

Photographs of Church Workers

We are glad to offer through cooperation of the Graphic Arts Bureau the following new pictures which will meet a popular demand. They are clear and large, suitable for framing, or may be used as they come, most of them artistically mounted on the usual photographic mats.

The 1923 General Conference is one of the large panoramic scenes required to include so large a gathering. The size given is outside measurements of the mounting.

Change in Bishop's Agent for North Dakota

On account of the change of field of Brother Jerome E. Wildermuth, who for a number of years has been acting as Bishop's agent, we hereby appoint Doctor C. F. Young, La Moure, North Dakota.

We feel that as a district you are to be congratulated in having one so eminently qualified for this service, and we feel confident that the Saints of North Dakota will give to Doctor Young that same loyal support that they have to Brother Wildermuth.

The slogan for this year will be "Double the tithing in every branch." It can be done. The work which the General Conference has put upon the shoulders of the Bishopric for the next eighteen months makes necessary the doubling of the tithing in order to insure the accomplishment of this work.

We trust that God's richest blessings may be upon the membership of the church and that in their business affairs and their daily toil there may be evidence of divine favor.

We acknowledge with gratefulness the splendid cooperation and labors of Brother Wildermuth. Few men have served in the interest of this department with a greater degree of satisfaction to the Presiding Bishop.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Appointment of District Presidents

In view of appointments by the late conference making certain changes necessary, the Presidency has received resignations from the following district presidents and hereby appoints successors to fill the unexpired terms of office, subject, of course, to the approval of the district conferences concerned:

- Nauvoo District, Amos Berve appointed vice D. J. Williams, resigned.
- Eastern Colorado District, Bruce E. Brown appointed vice George H. Wixom, resigned.
- Kewanee District, E. R. Davis appointed vice R. W. Farrell, resigned.
- Western Colorado District, J. Arthur Davis appointed vice W. B. Farley, resigned.
- Gallands Grove District, F. T. Mussell appointed vice E. R. Butterworth, resigned.
- Southern Nebraska District, G. R. Wells appointed vice H. A. Higgins, resigned.
- Northeastern Missouri District, E. F. Robertson appointed vice B. S. Tanner, resigned.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Blue Pencil Notes

The church has little to fear from external opposition or persecution. Blows from without but drive us closer together. The most that our opponents can do is to make it more difficult for us to reach the ears and hearts of others with our message, and perhaps to rid us of unstable members who are little gain to others and even less loss to us.

Internal disagreements are possibly more dangerous. Against them the late President Joseph Smith often warned us. They seemed to be his chief anxiety as he looked into the future. He said: "I do not wish to lie down in death . . . with the consciousness upon me that when I pass off there will arise contending hosts and divided bands through the body, and scatter it."—Address to Conference, 1909.

But even against this danger the church has often enough demonstrated her ability to meet the situation, and reach a conclusion to which the majority can give the sanction of their vote and their conscience and to which the minority can cheerfully subscribe under the rule of common consent. Our faith is increased in the power of our people, with the help of God, to find their way through to safe conclusions on any question that is likely to arise and vex us.

Those who have feared early dissolution because of differences of opinion strenuously defended should let the conclusion above stated assuage their grief and fear; while those of our enemies who might welcome such an event, if they look forward annually to our General Conference hoping to come with smiles and flowers to attend the last sad rites, must by now feel that the crepe, too early ordered, had best be reserved for their own fond hopes.

There are three great factors to be considered in connection with our work: God, the truth, humanity. The truth affords a common ground on which humanity may meet God. We cannot meet him on other ground; he cannot meet us on other ground.

Two of these factors are stable and unchangeable. God does not change. He may adapt his message to conditions. The law of Moses was a schoolmaster to a primitive people leading them to a higher law. The Lord himself changed not. Their vision of him changed.

The truth does not change. When Peter said, "Thou art the Christ," he stated a truth in religion that is still true and will always be true. When Galileo saw the swinging candelabra in the cathedral and said, "The earth moves," he perceived a scientific truth that is still true.

Our trouble begins with the third factor, the unstable factor, humanity. Here religion has its great work, to change, to develop. We have difficulty to adjust ourselves to the truth. Our perception is blurred and mixed with error. We do the thing and say the thing we think right. Possibly the bystander sees it to be wrong—later we make the same discovery. Also we have difficulty to adjust ourselves to others. We are not always willing to meet them at the point demanded by truth, or we do not perceive just where that point lies.

On the other hand others are unable or unwilling to adjust themselves to us and our ways and thoughts. They, too, see truth in part. So with a people including men and women in all stages of development, from the convert of yesterday's baptizing to the aged patriarch wise in experience and well rounded out in character, there is abundant opportunity for friction.

So likewise there is always abundant opportunity for mistakes in every line of church work, missionary, financial, judicial, executive. We may as well expect a certain percentage of error and with equanimity charge it to humanity's "profit and loss account." One man observing the work of a certain missionary said, "If they keep that man in the field, I will pay no more tithing." When that missionary was dropped from the list some time later, another said, "If they drop a man like that I will pay no more tithing." One said, "If they build an auditorium, I am through." Another said, "I am through until they do build the auditorium." And so on. The greatest mistake of all is made by the man who quits because another makes a mistake, or that which is thought to be a mistake. With a group of very human beings, mistakes are bound to occur in any line of endeavor. The thing to do is to keep the percentage of wrong moves as low as possible, try to avoid repeating errors, and go on. The road to perfection is traveled by imperfect beings. Others do not need it. Why quarrel with our company?

Patience is needed. And it may help us to reflect that often people are not so far apart as they think. A veteran of many years, speaking to the late conference, recounted one of the controversies that occurred years ago. He said, "And we were not so far apart after all—not nearly so far apart as we thought." Then he was a contestant—but now with the lapse of time clearer vision comes, and he says, "We were not nearly so far apart as we thought."

Yes, patience is needed. We need it—and if we need it, we therefore owe it to others. John Doe sat at his desk musing on the needs of the work and particularly on his own errors and shortcomings. Suddenly he fancied that an unseen hand placed a bill upon the desk before him. It read, "John Doe, debtor to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to twenty-five years of patience. Please pay in kind, with interest, to your brethren."

For twenty-five years the church had borne with John Doe. God had been patient with him. The bill was due—it is always due. He was to pay in kind, with interest, to his fellow men—those about him—the men and women with whom he worked. Every day God lays such a bill before each one of us. It mounts as the years go by. The only safe way is to "pay as we go."

Appointments of the Twelve by First Presidency

In making assignment of fields to the members of the Quorum of Twelve, the Presidency has had in view the provisions of the law for workers to be sent two and two, and that the primary work of the Twelve is missionary. We know better supervision of missionary work can be had where local work and troubles are not obtruded.

It is understood, however, that where emergencies are encountered in local conditions demanding prompt action, the members of the Twelve are supposed to act according to their judgment and the exigencies of the case and report promptly to the Presidency. In other cases where it seems necessary for the Twelve to take cognizance of local conditions, they are to report to the Presidency for advice and instruction.

It is hoped that a better working understanding between local and missionary workers will be developed.

The assignments of the Twelve are as follows: Myron A. McConley and Clyde F. Ellis, Australasia, Territory of Hawaii, South Sea Islands; J. F. Garver and E. J. Gleazer, Mississippi Valley States, Dakotas, Colorado, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Oklahoma; J. A. Gillen and F. Henry Edwards, headquarters and regions round about; J. F. Curtis and Paul M. Hanson, British Isles, Europe, and Palestine; John W. Rushton and T. W. Williams, Southern States, Florida, Georgia, Carolinas, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, Texas, and Arkansas; R. S. Budd and D. T. Williams, Pacific Slope States and Alberta.

It is understood that these assignments are subject to such changes as conditions and wisdom indicate.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Let us keep the mind clear and bright, fill it with wholesome thoughts of life, and be kindly in our feelings towards others.—Charles Brodie Patterson.

Cures That Cure

"Why should not human nature have its delusions when they add to the happiness of men?" asks Doctor James J. Walsh, author of a new book, Cures, in which he discusses the history of medical charlatanry. And Current Opinion adds its comment on this curious work by reviewing it under the title, "Famous 'Cures' that have failed."

All of this points to the heart of the discussion: What constitutes a cure?

The word cure meant originally "care," but during the evolution of its meaning it has now come to mean a course of treatment whereby a person is restored to health. Doctor Walsh interprets the physician's function in the original sense of the word (care), while he ascribes to "healers" and "quacks" the second meaning of the word.

It would seem, then, that a physician can only care for the patient, and claims to do no more. We are satisfied with this claim. But is there no other hope held out to suffering humanity? Must recourse be made to "quacks" and so-called "healers" that we may be cured?

The book recites many of the various methods used in past times for curing ailments. Some of these are familiar to our readers who have passed through just such experiences. In early times curious things were given by the mouth, such as moss scraped from the skull of a culprit hanged in chains, or the roots of plants plucked in a graveyard in the dark of the moon. Magnets have cured people, as well as many electrical devices which produced not an ion of electricity. Electricity supposedly passed from one person to another, is another common form of cure. More recently cheap whisky, properly diluted, flavored and colored, but not labeled whisky, has been the family household article in thousands of homes. Such names as tonic bitters, neurilla, nervina, herb tonic, or mother's medicine, are suggestive of some of the bottles we have often seen and perhaps used.

All of these and numerous others have had their effect in curing people. It shows that almost anything will cure a patient (when really nothing is the matter with him). With these "medicines" Doctor Walsh also classes the cures accomplished by healers. Among these he mentions the Irish healer, Valentine Greatrakes, who claimed to cure tuberculosis of the glands of the neck by the laying on of hands; Doctor Elisha Perkins, of Norwich, Connecticut, who stroked patients with a pair of short rods known as "tractors"; Andrew Jackson Davis, "the Seer of Poughkeepsie," who practiced magnetism; and Phineas Parkhurst Quimby, of Portland, Maine, who believed in changing the mental attitude of the ailing. Among this class of healers is classed Mary Baker Eddy.

Doctor Walsh is convinced that these cures have failed. They have accomplished things where the mental state of the patient had much to do with the condition of the patient, but he asserts that serious organic diseases cannot be cured by them.

His book points out the absurdity of placing faith in "quack" cures, and tells what can be expected from the physician. So much so good!

Now we come in and thank the Almighty for his gospel and his promises and the blessings enjoyed by his people who keep his commandments. Where physicians fail, the Lord holds forth hope.

And whoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and not by the hand of an enemy. And the elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for, and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die, they shall die unto me, and if they live, they shall live unto me.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12.

And again it shall come to pass that he that has faith in me to be healed, and is not appointed unto death, shall be healed; he who has faith to see shall see; he who has faith to hear shall hear, the lame who have faith to leap shall leap.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 13.

Here is the divine law. The Lord himself will cure the ills of humanity if humanity but has the faith to be healed. We are not lacking evidence of the trueness of this promise, for time and time again have we witnessed its fulfillment.

"Cures that cure" could well be made the subject of a book, and the wealth of material is limitless, for such are the promises of God.

Bible in Modern English

A version of the New Testament in everyday language has just been announced. It is by Professor Edgar J. Goodspeed, of the University of Chicago, a Greek scholar of high reputation. He has taught New Testament Greek at the university for twenty-five years and is accorded the distinction of knowing probably more about the Greek papyri than any other living being.

In opposition to a recent statement by a newspaper writer that the New Testament was put into jazz form, listen to the explanation of Doctor Goodspeed himself.

"My translation is not intended as an attack upon traditional versions of the New Testament, nor is it an effort to 'write down' the New Testament into vulgar English, as some have hastily inferred. By the English of America, I mean the English of Abraham Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson. Such English seems to me as worthy a vehicle for the New Testament as any English that was ever written. My constant effort has been to make the meaning of the New Testament clear. I feel that while it has a beauty to be enjoyed, it has an even more important meaning to be understood, and this I have done my utmost to express. I have undertaken to determine what each writer of the New Testament meant to say and then I have tried to express this in the simplest and most vigorous modern English."

Doctor Goodspeed has put in place of the verse arrangement, to which we are accustomed in the King James Version, modern paragraphing, punctuation and quotation marks. All the "thees" and "thous" have disappeared. Money weights have been translated into modern terms, as have other obsolete terms.

Most noticeable, at least to Latter Day Saints, is the change appearing in the Lord's prayer. Doctor Goodspeed's version is strangely similar to the one appearing in the Inspired Version, and differs decidedly from the one in the King James translation. The prayer appears as follows in its three forms:

King James Translation

Our Father which art in heaven,
Hallowed be Thy name.
Thy kingdom come,
Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.
Give us this day our daily bread.
And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.
And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil:
For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

Inspired Version

Our Father who art in heaven,
Hallowed be thy name.
Thy kingdom come.
Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven.
Give us this day, our daily bread.
And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us.
And suffer us not to be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil.
For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever, Amen.

Doctor Goodspeed's Version

Our Father in heaven,
Your name be reverend!
Your kingdom come!
Your will be done on earth as it is done in heaven!
Give us to-day bread for the day,
And forgive us our debts, as we have forgiven our debtors.
And do not subject us to temptation,
But save us from the evil one.

Doctor Goodspeed has seen the obvious error in asking God not to lead us into temptation, but he has overlooked, as would be expected, the broader term, trespass, in place of debt. The Goodspeed version of the Lord's prayer is, however, an improvement over the one in the King James Translation.

Doctor Goodspeed's work is an interesting attempt to place the Bible before the people in simple yet classical modern English. In this he has succeeded. But, as one writer suggests, it detracts somewhat from the quaint dignity of the present King James Version."

Four similar attempts to modernize the Bible have been made during the last quarter century. They are, as is stated in Current Opinion, the Twentieth-Century New Testament, the Weymouth, the Moffat, and the New Riverside Testament, by William G. Ballentine.

We look with interest upon the publication of this fifth modern English version. If it accomplished nothing else, it at least arouses an interest in the Bible again and may bring to many people who are "bored" by the biblical style, a knowledge of the teachings set forth in that classic of classics.

Home Building

Starting with this issue of the HERALD is a series of articles on home building, written by some of the leading writers of the church. These writers are representative of the phase of the subject upon which each has written, many of them being experts in their field.

Home building is a subject that is not only of great reading interest, but it is a subject that is being lived day by day by every member of this church. An orderly home is one of the aims for a Zion condition and for which we should be ever striving.

This series of articles was designed to invite study on this important subject and so written as to be interesting even to the casual reader. But we feel sure that casual reading of the church papers is not to be recommended, therefore we commend your special attention to this splendid course of lecture-articles.

Much interest has already been aroused over this feature in the HERALD, and classes of women have been formed in Zion and elsewhere for special study. To meet such a demand, a textbook has been suggested and an outline course of study presented. This makes it possible for class work or fireside discussion to be systematically followed.

No better pastime can be spent of an evening than for father, mother, and children to spend half an hour in reading and discussing home building. No father is too busy to ignore his home, for, after all, what is life? No mother is too tired each evening to reflect upon her day's work and say, "Could I have done it better?" No child is too small to be helped by at least some points raised in the study.

We are highly indebted to the splendid writers who have so generously contributed to this course. We furthermore take pleasure in presenting the first article appearing in another column in this issue on home building.

Additions to Conference Reports

It will be remembered that the Presidency, because of certain conditions existing in the last General Conference, submitted no report. Various matters were, however, brought to the conference from the Presidency in the course of the conference. Among other things omitted because of our failure to put in report was the report of the Transportation Bureau which we usually include in our annual report. Under date of October 10 the manager of the Transportation Bureau has submitted to the Presidency a report which will be of interest to the Saints at large, and to which we therefore give space in another column.

We also give space in another column to a report from the Order of Bishops which was dated October 17 and was handed to the Presidency for insertion in the Conference Minutes. Not feeling we could put in the minutes what was not officially presented to the conference, we give it space in the HERALD.

Golden Rule Sunday

Special efforts are being put forth by the Near East Relief in a drive for more funds to feed the 50,000 orphans under its care.

By way of a world-wide appeal, December 2 has been set aside as Golden Rule Sunday for observance by Christians in all parts of the world. On this date, all persons who are disposed to make a practical demonstration of the accepted theory of "Do unto others as you would be done by," are given an opportunity by accepting the following plan:

The menu for dinner on Sunday, December 2, shall be selected from the menu which is served the orphans every day in the year, and the difference in the cost of this meal and the cost of the usual Sunday dinner shall be contributed to the Near East Relief for support of orphans.

(Food list for seven days at Beirut Orphanages to assist housewives in preparing menus for Golden Rule Sunday):

Breakfasts

All bread (10 to 25% corngrits) desired.
 Tea four times a week.
 Tea with condensed milk once.
 Soup twice.

Dinners

Rice Pilaff once.
 Pilaff bulgour once.
 Potato with meat once.
 String beans with meat once.
 Peas with meat once.
 White beans with olive oil once.
 Lentils and bulgour once.
 All bread (10 to 25% corngrits) desired.

Suppers

Olives once.
 Helva once.
 Rice with condensed milk once.
 Cheese with bread.
 Tomatoes with bread twice.
 Helva, olives, and cucumbers once.
 All bread (10 to 25% corngrits) desired.

Sunday has been chosen because it is a day when a larger number of the family partakes of the same meal, and because a more elaborate dinner is usually served on Sunday than other days. This will aid in swelling the amount of contribution. It will also bring to the attention of more people the desperate needs of the little orphans because of the contrast shown by the menu.

If rightly observed, the sacrifice made at this one meal should be of spiritual value to people all over the world. The fact that millions of others are doing the same thing and making the same sacrifice will lend dignity and solemnity to the occasion.

The Near East Relief workers feel that they are not asking too much when but one meal during the year is set aside for limiting the menu and contributing the difference in cost to the work they are carrying on.

They ask, Would not our lives be richer spiritually, our churches stronger, and our nation a greater force for international righteousness if we lived as we profess the Golden Rule?

President Coolidge has made the following statement regarding the Golden Rule Sunday:

It is with a good deal of satisfaction that I commend your proposal to observe an International Golden Rule Dinner Sunday, on the second of December, 1923. I feel sure that this suggestion will meet with very widespread approval and will bring more closely to mind the charitable requirements of those who are prosperous to those who are in adversity. It suggests not only a practical method for help, but the highest expression of sympathy, by sharing for a time the privations of others.

Cordially yours,

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

In accordance with the General Conference Resolution at the last conference to support the cause of the Near East Relief, observance of Golden Rule Sunday would not be inappropriate to our stand as a church. It is a request which can be observed, not as a church, but as individual Christians.

Help Me, Dear Lord

Help me, dear Lord, in all the things I do,
 That they be just and honorable and true,
 In all the things I speak and think, I pray,
 That they be beautiful and pure this day.

Help me, dear Lord, my every step attend;
 Keep thou my feet to-day, to-morrow, till the end.
 And if the path be thorny that I tread
 Give me for strength this day my daily bread.

Help me, dear Lord, watch o'er my life, I pray,
 That I may keep forever in the narrow way;
 And if the precious things of life thou dost bestow
 My prayer is that I may not selfish grow.

Help me, dear Lord, to say, "Thy will be done,"
 When love and peace and happiness seem gone.
 Help me to bear thy chastening rod and yet
 Pray while I pay, for sin, its dreary debt.

Help me, dear Lord, that I may worthy be
 Of some good gift to use for love of thee,
 Keep thou my lips unstained from sin and shame
 Keep thou my soul unwarp'd by pride or fame.

Help me, dear Lord, humility to learn
 That in my heart the love of truth may burn
 And keep me free from all the evil things
 That do prevent the hope thy Spirit brings.

Help me, dear Lord, thy temple pure to be
 I'm not mine own, for I belong to thee,
 And keep my members sacred as thine own
 Until my soul from man to God has grown.

Help me, dear Lord, to be a friend to all
 Who seeking truth and wisdom on thee call.
 Teach me to aid the sick, the maimed, the poor,
 And do the works which thou didst here before.

Help me, dear Lord, that I may courage gain
 To speak to all the proud, the great, the vain,
 That truth may all the worldly-wise confound,
 For kings may list to wisdom from the ground.

Help me, dear Lord, oh, give me strength and then Help me to guard thy kingdom among men
 The church to which thou gavest thy life and love
 Until thou comest to claim it from above.

Help me, dear Lord, to keep my garments clean
 And free from all the blood of sinful men
 To so perform my duty day by day
 That they may be all white at judgment day.

Help me, dear Lord, to keep in duty's path
 That I may turn the evil from his wrath.
 Help me to bear my cross as pleaseth thee
 And give me strength when in Gethsemane.

Why Religion At All?

Sermon by Elbert A. Smith at Young People's Convention, Lamoni, Iowa, June 8, 1923.

I feel very happy to-day. It is a very true saying, I think, that a dying organization cannot hold its young people. It may hold the old people who in their youth, while it was yet alive, fell in love with it, but young people are not putting their splendid youth and energy into a dying organization. I am happy because we have here one more very visible evidence that this is a living church and that the angel's message is still carried forward by a going concern. I feel like singing the old Methodist hymn, "We'll roll the old chariot along, and we'll hang on behind."

I am asked the question, Why religion at all? Since my paternal grandfather was a Vermont Yankee and my maternal grandfather a New Hampshire Yankee, I might answer that question by asking others: Why eat? Why breathe? Why drink? Why fall in love? You answer me that we eat and breathe and drink in order to live, and so great a physician as Doctor Cabot of Boston, a man of international repute, a physician who has studied not only the body but the soul of man, has written a book entitled, What Men Live By, and religion is one of the things he enumerates. He names four things: work, play, love, and worship.

Why eat? We do not study out reasons for eating and then eat; we eat first, instinctively, when we are hungry, three or four or five times a day. Some-time later when we study physiology we find excellent reasons for eating.

Hungering for God

So there has been a hungering and thirsting after righteousness and seeking after God that has been called instinctive in the human race. Those people who most earnestly have hungered and sought after God have been the greatest people. Roger Babson, who was quoted this morning, says that when he was in South America the president of the Argentine Republic said to him, "Why is it that South America, with all her splendid natural resources never has been so great as North America?" And Babson, being a guest, said, "What do you think is the reason?" "I think," said the president, "the reason is because South America was settled by Spaniards who came seeking gold, while North America was settled by the Puritans who came seeking God."

Why fall in love? We don't study out reasons for falling in love. We fall in love and afterwards analyze the reasons. We like it so well we want everybody else to fall in love. From the day when Adam awoke from his deep slumber and found that the rib that had nestled next to his heart had become a beautiful woman nestling in his arms, until now, every man who falls in love thinks he has only waked up to life. And he is quite right. Young men, wake up. Pardon me. I see all are awake.

Similarly Doctor Snowden tells us that humanity does not study out reasons for being religious or for believing, but believes instinctively and afterwards studies out reasons. So Lodge tells us that religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity, away down below reason. Religion goes deeper than intellect. It goes into the emotions—into the innermost parts of the human soul; but it is associated with reason and is justified by reason. Isn't this a singular thing that among all the multiform creatures there is not one living creature except man that has any perception of the supernatural or any desire to seek after God? Certainly not, others do not have sufficient intellect. Is faith, then, something associated with intellect? Take the reverse then, man, the only thinking, reasoning creature on earth—the human race in all its subdivisions, tribes, and peoples instinctively believes and reaches out after the divine. Reason and faith go hand in hand and supplement each other. That may be why the proverb states, "The fool has said in his heart, there is no God." We study out reasons for believing after we believe, and it is perfectly proper for us, believing, to seek the rational basis for our belief, because all great fundamental instincts do have their justification in reason.

Four Reasons for Religion

Why religion at all? I will give you four reasons for religion, as I understand them. First, religion puts meaning into the universe and into human life which otherwise would be a senseless riddle. Second, having put meaning into the universe and into life, it reveals a basis for a sane and wholesome and happy philosophy of life and an incentive to the living out of that kind of a philosophy. Third, having put meaning into the universe and into life and having furnished a basis for a philosophy of life, it devotes itself to the task of redeeming and developing the individual human soul, or perhaps I might say of saving the individual human soul by development, for the only salvation that I know anything about is the kind that a man grows into. Fourth, having put meaning into life and into the universe, having furnished a basis for a philosophy of life, having addressed itself to the task of developing the individual, it next devotes itself to the task of developing and saving the collective soul or human society.

There you have my four reasons for religion. I am referring now to the religion of Jesus Christ.

Putting Meaning Into Existence

Returning to the first of these reasons and analyzing it briefly: Religion puts meaning into the universe and into the human life. The human race quite literally finds itself here. We find ourselves here, and we are as confused as a man who has fallen through a skylight and lost his memory at the same time. When we are able to sit up and think, we realize that we do not know where we came from, where we are going, or why we are here. By and by some one taps us on the shoulder and says, "You are here briefly; you don't come from anywhere; you are not going anywhere; and the thing for you to do is to have a good time while you are here." Some say that is the only philosophy you can have without religion.

But presently religion taps us on the shoulder and says, "You have a heavenly Father. You have an elderly Brother in the great past from whence you came. You have an immortal soul. You will live forever. While you are here I wish to teach you certain simple words. The first of these is duty. When you have learned to spell duty, I will ask you to pronounce it, and when you have learned that word I wish you to learn another word of four letters, love. When you have learned love, you can then forget all about duty, because as soon as you have learned love, duty will take care of itself."

Philosophy has wrestled with the question of existence for thousands of years and never has found an answer. Science has wrestled with the problem for a shorter period and has addressed to it all the intelligence and the resources and the courage and devotion that humanity is capable of. Far be it from me to join in any foolish or carping criticism of the great achievements of science, the benefits bestowed upon humanity, the wonderful things in the starry heavens revealed to us by the telescope, the marvelous worlds revealed by the microscope, the great fundamental lessons that science has taught us. These things I do not decry, but for all that it is a fact that science has turned little light on the problem of existence and never yet has answered any one of these three questions: whence? why? where? Concerning the origin and purpose and destiny of man it is silent.

The fact that anything whatever—even a stone—exists, raises unanswerable questions of whence and why. . . . The nature of life and, consequently, death is unknown.—Lodge, in The Substance of Faith, p. 10.

Let us admit, as scientific men, that of real origin, even of the simplest thing we know nothing; not even of a pebble.—Lodge, in Science and Immortality, p. 26.

Science throws little light on the question of origin, destiny, and purpose, but religion comes to our aid, bringing the voice of one who knows the answer to that riddle, and while many things are not revealed, many things are revealed that help us to attack the problem. We see first the work of the creation of man under the hands of God. God is introduced as a Creator. Next, we see man's development towards a certain goal and stature, in the likeness of Christ. God appears as guide, friend, Father.

A Basis for a Philosophy of Life

Having put meaning into life and into the universe, religion reveals a basis for a philosophy—a sane and happy and wholesome philosophy of life. Religion does this, chiefly, I think, through its three great fundamental principles: the personality of God, the immortality of the human soul, and the free agency of man.

The first, the personality of God, brings to our attention a personal Creator, with whom we, as individuals, may hold communion and form relationship, one to whom we can look up, with Jesus Christ, though in the utmost humility and bowed down with a sense of our littleness, and say, "Our Father who art in heaven."

And the second of these, the great doctrine of the immortality of the human soul, assures us time, not only to perfect our communion with the Creator and establish our relationship, but also to develop those great resources and aspirations within us which mean absolutely nothing if we have but a short while to exist.

The third principle is the free agency of man, and it assures every man sometime, somewhere, opportunity and the right to purposefully and intelligently choose between that which is right and that which is wrong and become the Baptism of his own destiny.

These three furnish a basis for a philosophy of life, and without them there can be none that is worth the name. Take away religion, and what have you left? Nothing but materialism. Everything then is conceived as having come by chance—the world and mankind is a "cosmic accident." Man just happened—a very "interesting accident," but just an accident, a mechanical contrivance, coming into existence at birth, passing out forever at death. And if with the individual, so with the human race, sometime, somewhere coming to an end, the world to be left a sepulcher. What sort of philosophy of life can you build on that? You can build none worthy of man, and a natural reaction to materialism is the blackest and deepest despair of pessimism.

I will read you three extracts to-night from different writers who were materialistic and had not the faith in religion that furnishes a basis for a philosophy of life.

Despair of the Materialist

Huxley wrote: "It flashes across me at all sorts of times with a sort of horror that in 1900 I shall probably know no more of what is going on than I did in 1800. I would sooner be in hell."

Darwin said: "It is an intolerable thought that man and all other sentient beings are doomed to complete annihilation after such long-continued, slow progress."

The third of these declarations is made in the language of the man of the street and is the most striking of them all. There came to Kansas City this past winter Clarence Darrow, a man of international fame as a criminal lawyer. He held a debate there with Doctor Durant in the Academy of Science Building on the question: "Is life worth living?" Darrow said it was not. These are the words that he uttered, the most sad and hopeless confession that has escaped the lips of man in this generation: "Can a man be happy in a madhouse? That is what the world is. I take life as it comes, because it is a senseless, fool thing that must be lived out, because I have too much sense to do such a messy thing as put a bullet through my brain." That was all that remained for him in the creed of materialism. You will find that strain of pessimism running through all the school of materialism in all ages. It may be stated in more cultured terms—the results are the same.

Can you build a sane philosophy of life on that? You cannot. The only escape materialism offers humanity is to make the most of the brief moment of consciousness and to go out and get the most of pleasure out of life. In other words, eat, drink, and be merry under the impression that to-morrow we shall die forever—the old philosophy of Epicureanism at its worst.

I think that even some of the materialists have perceived very clearly that without these three great principles of religion, the personality of God, immortality of the soul, and free agency, there cannot be conceived any adequate philosophy of morality or anything upon which the individual and society can build. No more striking confession was ever made, perhaps, than that made by Haeckel in his lecture delivered before the University of Berlin in 1905. He named these three principles and said that science has demonstrated that they are all false, and must be relegated from the realm of truth. But then he went on to make this most remarkable proposal: "As imaginative creations, they retain a certain value in the world of poetry. Here they will . . . still have a high ethical and social value in the education of the young and in the organization of society."

A more striking confession of the impotency and poverty of materialism could scarcely be imagined. Having no ideals of its own, it must still have recourse to truths that it would fain destroy in order to find spiritual values for young people in particular and society in general. Haeckel would deny the truth of those three great doctrines and at the same time seek to retain their spiritual values. Why? Because he well knew that without them no admirable society could be developed, and that individually, young people in particular, in process of character development, would have no incentive to, or reason for, moral growth.

But these doctrines are either true or false; they are not mere poetry. Truth alone saves. These are true and great doctrines. They furnish a sound basis for a sane and wholesome philosophy of life and growth.

In the face of the black pessimism that Darrow voiced, comes the sublime declaration of the angel, "Fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, who is Christ the Lord." That is my text. That is one reason for religion. It puts meaning into the universe. It gives us a basis for a philosophy of life, of morality, of righteousness, of constructive living, individually and socially.

The Development of the Individual

Next, religion addresses itself to the task of redeeming and developing the individual soul. In past ages in many countries the individual did not amount to much. Kings and priests were sacred, but to be a man of itself did not amount to anything. The individual was lost in the mass, but Jesus Christ in his religion primarily addressed himself to the individual soul, "You must be born again." He begins his work right there; he brings to light and to our attention the dignity and value of the individual soul.

Let me remind you of only two of Christ's parables—the parable of the lost sheep, for instance. There was a shepherd who had one hundred sheep. Ninety-nine were safe, but one sheep was lost, and the shepherd could not rest until he had found it. There was also a woman who had ten pieces of silver. Nine of them were safe, but one—not two, not three, not six—one of them was lost, and she could not rest until she had called in the neighbors and lighted the candle and searched and found it; and so Jesus would have us understand that if there had been but one man in the world lost and all the rest safe, he would have to come and live and die in order to save that one. He addressed himself to the development of the individual human soul.

As an introduction I tried to remind you this morning that religion is a matter of growth and development. Jesus said to the individual, "You must be born again," and from there begins your religious growth. God said in the first chapter of Genesis, "Let us make man," or as the Inspired Version has it, "I, God, said unto mine only begotten Son, who was with me from the beginning, Let us make man." And the complement of that is found in the Ephesian letter, "Unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." That is the work of religion. It addresses itself to the development of the human soul.

The Development of the Collective Soul

In the fourth place religion undertakes the development of the collective soul or society. Man is naturally social or, as is sometimes said, gregarious. The statement is made in the Bible, "It is not good for man to be alone." That truth was written in nature first, later in the Bible. The most severe penalty is solitary confinement. The soul of man hungers and thirsts after social contact, and the old conception of religion, which was that to be religious one must retire and be a hermit and live in seclusion in the desert or the monastery or on the mountain and spend his time in prayer and meditation and fasting, was all wrong. That was thought to be a surrender to God. It was not. It was a surrender to the Devil. It was a surrender in this thing, that it was a retreat from life and the demands of life. It was a confession that they did not believe that religion was equal to the task of entering into all the affairs of life and meeting every one of them. They did not believe that it was strong enough to enter into business between two men and into the relationship between two brothers and between husband and wife; that the only thing it was good for was for the man who lived alone. It was a surrender and a retreat from the battlefield of life.

I am sure that our idea of the gathering does not contemplate any such surrender. It means a gathering out of the world of a people to live together in an organized society, a community, a people who carry religion into all the affairs of life. If religion is not equal to the strain of all the demands of life, it is not worth our while. Paul seemed to think that it was not quite equal to the strain of marriage. He said one had better not get married. He did make one concession, however; he said it was better to be married than to burn.

We believe that religion should be carried into all the affairs of life, into the home, that it should function between a man and his wife. I do not care to hear the testimony of the man or woman when religion does not function in their home. It should function between father and son, between mother and daughter, between brother and sister, between you and your neighbor, between you and the man you are doing business with. Religion addresses itself to the problem first of building up and saving the individual and afterwards the redemption of society or the group.

Justification of Religion

Religion, then, is justified on these four points: that it puts meaning into that which Haeckel termed "the riddle of the universe," which he said came by chance and had neither design nor purpose in it. It puts meaning into the universe and into the individual human life. It furnishes a basis for and an incentive to a sane and happy philosophy of life: "I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." It addresses itself to the redemption and development of the individual human soul. It addresses itself to the development of the collective soul or society.

And in this work of development I am reminded of a group of statuary by David Edstrom, called "Man Triumphant." It has four pieces in it representing that which the artist terms the four steps which man takes into life. First, "Thou must"; second, "I must"; third, "I desire"; and fourth, "I am." Did you ever when you were small have father or mother stand over you with a stick and say to you, "You must tell the truth about this thing?" And out of compulsion and fear of external force you told the truth when you wanted to lie. But a little later on in the course of your development, did there not come a time when something within you rose up and said, "I must tell the truth." You wanted to lie, but something in you would not let you. And a little later perhaps there came a time when you abhorred deceit and you came to love the truth. Then you could say, "I desire to tell the truth." Happily there will come a time when you can stand up and say, "I am the truth."

A primitive people may be driven by force of circumstances. They must exert themselves because of cold or hunger or because of arbitrary law. A little later something rises up within them which is superior to the external force and says, I must. And a little later there is a perception of truth and duty and desire and they say, I desire. But finally when truth and beauty become part of us and righteousness is habitual, when to do the right thing is grounded and drilled by discipline into every cell of

The Meaning of Parenthood

By Walter W. Smith

Perhaps no problem confronts the church, or the whole of society for that matter, with more serious consequence than the neglect of parental care over the childhood of our day. This evil has arisen very largely out of the changed conditions under which the American people now live. Time was when the father and mother could gather the children about the fireplace and spend the evening in converse calculated to make the children feel that father and mother were very wise and quite considerate. Family worship was then a simple thing. After the evening conversation and news review of local or general character, and time for rest came, father or the brain and fiber of bone and muscle, then men can say, I am. And in the day when the people themselves become the incarnation and expression of duty and truth, they will be Godlike to the extent that they can say, I am. May religion function in our lives and do all that we wish it to do for us, is my prayer.

But with our changed way of living, when families of more than three members usually are compelled to arise at various times to meet the industrial pressure of society, and return to the home at uncertain hours, gathering about the hearthstone, figuratively or literally, is not an easy matter. Because of the spread of news by the newspaper, the multiplied diversity of interests where in one family are found sometimes as many as four or five different lines of endeavor, the home solidarity is not easily preserved.

When America arose to first place among the great nations of the world in politics, in science and industry, the home was the chief seat of activity. It was the center of industry. It was the point from which education, culture, and religion radiated. If we are to preserve our place as a nation, if we are to fulfill our mission as a church, we must preserve the home. It has been well said, and we might adopt it as a slogan: "The home is the foundation of Zion, and the child the chief asset." Of course we are all agreed that the child is the chief asset, not only of the home but of society. All progress is made in childhood. If we could but save one generation and leave it equipped properly in knowledge, in attitudes, and habits, we should indeed regenerate the world and bring in the millennium.

Scope of the Work

The scope of work here undertaken, viz, training for better parenthood, is indeed very large. Miss Read has stated it so concisely in the Mothercraft Manual that I can do no better than quote her words: "Mothercraft is the skillful, practical doing of all that is involved in the nourishing and training of children, in a sympathetic, happy, religious spirit." It is, and must ever continue to be, the mother's job to care for the young child, and nurture and bring him up. However, in this connection it must not be forgotten that there are two parents, and it is very important that the father have a sympathetic and understanding attitude. Many of the difficulties that confront the mother of small children could be instantly removed by the proper attitude on the part of the father and chief provider.

God has endowed parents with certain instincts. These instincts are the result of the past experiences of the race. They simply determine what general activities are given pressure. It is very painful to any mother to be separated from her child. It brings excruciating torture to the father to see the child unprovided for, to see it without shelter, food, and protection. These instincts, however, are not sufficient. They must be supplemented, in an intelligent being like man, with fundamental knowledge regarding the activities involved in the nurture and development of the child. This is the problem of mothercraft and parent teaching.

Importance of the Child

We have already mentioned the importance of the child. We ought to say further that just as clay when soft and plastic is easily molded and made into the diverse forms of useful articles which when dried or baked become infinitely more difficult of changing—and certainly the general use to which the article was intended to be put is well determined before it is burned in the kiln—so is the child. The long period of infancy and the plasticity of childhood mean precisely the same. This is the period in which the child may easily and freely be molded and fashioned into the kind of implement of which society will surely be in need. This is not to say that when a man or woman is thirty or forty years old they may not improve their lives, but it is to say that it is very difficult to change the general trend of life without breaking or ruining the life after one is mature in thought and habit. This means, of course, that whatever great change and definite equipment we have in mind or believe ought to be done must be done in the childhood of the generation.

Opportunity of the Parents

Much of this work has been left to the school because parents have been unequipped for the task. I think it is a well-known fact that the school is an enlargement of one of the natural family duties. It is the operation of a family activity which can better be done in the school with specialized help than in the home under our present system and situation. But the child is six years old before he enters the school, and even if we include in the school the kindergarten which is not yet common among us, the child would be four or five years old before he came under the influence of specially equipped teachers. These first three or four years are the most important period of childhood from the standpoint of direction in life equipment and attitudes. Do you know that a child at three years of age has well-formed habits of life, reacts to his environment already in quite a definite fashion, has a working knowledge of one or more languages (among us in English-speaking communities, one; in some borderlands or in mixed families where two languages are spoken, he may know two quite well), and all this before the child has gone out of the home? You can see, therefore, the grave importance of parent-teaching, for in most instances by four or five years the child is quite fixed in his attitudes and habits of life. The regard he has for the rights of others, the regard he has for the truth, the regard he has for decency, the regard he has for the things that are beautiful as compared with things that are ugly, and so on, most of the sentiments and attitudes towards life are well-established before the child goes out of the home; and even then when the child does go out to kindergarten for a half day or to school for a half day or a whole session, he is still under the care of the parents more than half his waking time and all his other time. So that even if the school were perfect and the change in living conditions as fixed as they are, even after school life begins, the influence of the home would far outweigh the school.

Preparation and Responsibility of Parenthood

It is an accepted fact that those who would teach school must make preparation. They are going to teach English, mathematics, physiology, history, and what not. For this they are required to pass examinations on the matter they are going to teach as well as pass certain tests on morals and citizenship. All this preparation to care for the child less than half his waking time, while the parent, up until the child is four or five years of age, cares for him all the time and after this period more than half his waking time, and all this without consideration of preparation. It would seem that the church and society in general would demand that some consideration be given to the most important function performed by man. If the ideals of the church, or society in general, are to persist, it must be by the equipment, preparation, and training of the young to enter into, take part in, and eventually become the church and society itself.

Better-Parent Teaching

This leads to the problem before us, the problem of better-parent teaching. By this we mean the equipment from any and all sources which may in any way qualify the mother and father of the young child to mold and shape and fix his destiny so as to leave a better generation than the one now occupying. It means in fact the definite equipment of those who are now parents for the nurture and shaping of these young plastic creatures for the activities that will certainly fall upon them. This better-parent teaching means more than this. It means that young men and women who are the prospective fathers and mothers of the next generation should be acquainted with the grave responsibility, as well as the joy and happiness of parenthood. It means that we ought to take into consideration the most vital function of society and intelligently prepare for the same instead of trusting to blind instinct to raise generation after generation of human beings on the basis of animal selection. This is putting it very bluntly, but it is meeting a very great need in a very plain and frank manner. If men are to rise towards God as the result of there being resident within them the power of reason and spiritual guidance, they must make better equipment for parenthood than do the animals.

Brighter Prospect

The Mothercraft Manual is a brief and concise statement of the various problems that confront us in childhood. It deals with the home, the family, the child—its care, physical, mental, and spiritual. It deals with the problem of what a mother should do in caring for her child in all these ways. It takes up in a plain and straightforward manner, the question of marriage, of parenthood, of the care and nurture of the infant. It opens the way to a further and deeper discussion to those who care to go further and makes plain to those who will carefully study this text the vital importance of the child. Certainly if we discover the importance of the child, since it is the business of the parent imposed by nature to care for the child, parenthood becomes very much enhanced. It is not an accidental act thrust upon us unknowingly, but a part of God's divine institution for peopling the earth with a better race with enlarged opportunities and with brighter prospects of a realization of our hopes.

Outline of Course of Study

(Questions have been selected from manuals, Mothercraft, by Etta Hunt, 10 cents, and Mothercraft for Girls, by Alice Mae Burgess, 15 cents. Both manuals may be obtained at the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, if desired.)

CHAPTER I

Mothercraft; Its Meaning, Scope, and Spirit

1. What is the thought expressed in the quotations at the beginning of the chapter?
2. Define mothercraft.
3. Many in the past have claimed that mothering is an instinct. How would you disprove this statement?
4. Why is there a need for qualified motherhood and fatherhood?
5. Compare the training in mothercraft with that in other vocations.
6. What does mothercraft require? What is meant by each of these terms?
7. What are some of the things a father should know?
8. Would you talk with the boy and girl about parenthood and homes of their own? Why?
9. Give the statistics on the following: percentage of women in America who are married and have care of children; number of children under six years of age that are under the care of women; number between ages of five and fifteen.
10. What is the new ideal in education?

A recent article is entitled "Music, 'Youngest of the Arts,' is going to the dogs."

Since jazz has become so popular we wonder who are the dogs?

CONFERENCE REPORTS

REPORTS OF QUORUM OF TWELVE

D. T. WILLIAMS

To the Presidency: Having been appointed to the British Isles Mission at the close of last General Conference, I left home on December 26 for my field of labor. Taking boat from New York January 2, I landed in Southampton the 10th of the same month.

I entered upon my activities without any previous experience in this character of work, and for a time I progressed slowly and cautiously. As the time passed, however, and I became more certain of my standing and more fully acquainted with my task, I attained to a greater surety of mind and positiveness of action.

My experiences in this mission—some pleasant and some otherwise—I feel have given me a more wholesome vision of the tremendous task that lies before us as a church as well as a clear insight into the dire need of the race for the social program that we as a church possess at least in theory. May God hasten the day when the theory shall have been materialized.

I find that our people, being partakers of the common lot of the common people, are affected in the ordinary course of events as are their neighbors. The present status of the masses of Great Britain from the standpoint of industrial conditions is not favorable. This has its reflex action in our church work in more ways than one.

At the present there are about 2,000,000 unemployed in Great Britain; 1,700,000 of these are receiving government dole. This is affecting directly from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 people who under ordinary conditions are dependent upon these workless workers. Indirectly millions of others are affected. In fact, the whole nation feels the weight of this terrible burden. The people of this great nation are to be congratulated upon the fortitude with which they undertake the vast post-war tasks that have come to them.

There are many hindrances to missionary work in the mission. That which hinders more directly, however, is the deeply ingrained prejudice. Periodically campaigns are put on against what the propagators are pleased to call "Mormonism," which in the popular minds means any who call themselves Latter Day Saints. Every medium of publicity is used in spreading this propaganda—newspapers, magazines, books, platform, pulpit, and screen. This has been so successfully carried on that to-day to advertise our services is to invite the public to stay away rather than to attend. Such are the results that newspaper notices, door-to-door advertising, and tract distribution seem to be altogether without favorable results—money, time, and effort spent in vain.

The only avenue through which we seem to be able to affect this wall of adamant is personal work with friends and relatives. This of itself I need not say is a slow way to travel, but being the only course left open, we must learn to follow it with the greatest degree of efficiency if we are to accomplish anything in the way of proselytizing in the mission.

To do any real missionary work, then, in this land, I am of the opinion that we must train our people in the art of approaching their neighbors, friends, and relatives to the end of inducing them to their church services. This is a great undertaking in itself, one which will require talent, time, and effort to accomplish. Such a training, I am sure, would be a very wholesome experience for our people in any part of the world, but under the conditions existing in Great Britain it becomes an essential to our progress.

I digress just here to call your attention to my position set forth on domestic missionary work in the paper which was distributed to the members of the Quorum of Twelve and a copy of which I handed to you just previous to my taking journey to Europe. I have not changed my opinions in this regard; rather I am more fully convinced that such a program is an absolute necessity to our progress. I trust that before the coming conference shall have become history that something will be done looking toward accomplishment in this direction.

If missionary work is to be prosecuted with a greater degree of success in the British Isles, I am convinced that we must make more use of our British brethren in the effort. The British missionary having the same national sympathies and ideals as the people whom we would be seeking to serve, would have a greater power of approach than a foreigner.

My association with the Saints and ministry of the British Isles, has been very congenial. They are indeed a hospitable people; I was made to feel very welcome in their homes. I pray that conditions may be so effected as to make the gospel of more power in the nation.

MYRON A. MCCONLEY

To the First Presidency: During the conference year, it has been my privilege to assist in advancing the cause in Australia and New Zealand. And while I cannot report any phenomenal developments, yet there has been a healthy growth. The spirit of the Master is working among the people in those lands, even as elsewhere.

In packing my trunks to return to America, my diary for the latter part of 1922 has been mislaid so I cannot give total statistics of my personal labors, except during the period from January 1 to August 20, which are as follows:

Sermons preached	85
In charge	28
Assisted	7
Other services	56
Total services	176
Baptisms	5
Ordained	4
Administered to sick	26
Pastoral visits	40
Conferences presided over	3

As Australia is about the same size as the United States, and New Zealand is 1,200 miles from it, vast distances have been covered in traveling, which though expensive and tiresome, seemed unavoidable. Since October 1, 1922, I have traveled about 100 miles by stage, 2,400 miles steerage by water and over 6,000 miles by rail, not including the return trip to America.

Following is a brief survey of the work in the various fields:

Queensland

Thus far the work has only been introduced into the southern part of this vast state. Elder A. J. Corbett, acting as district president and pastor of the Brisbane Branch has cooperated with Elder E. A. H. Peisker, the missionary supervisor, in advancing the cause. And while the results are not all that we wish for, yet progress has been made.

Originally there were three branches, but for some time the Wondai Branch has acted as a group, with only irregular services being held.

Queensland has been undergoing a severe drought which has tended toward a further scattering of our forces, so that now the Inverlaw Branch is but a shadow of its former self by reason of removals. But the pastor, Elder A. L. Loving, a school-teacher, has stuck to his task, and drives eight miles back and forth each Sunday to care for the few Saints still remaining.

The Brisbane Branch is doing much better, and an addition is being made to their church, which will just about double its capacity.

There are many Saints scattered in different parts of this state, whose homes we trust may prove a nucleus from which growth may be effected.

New South Wales

This state still retains the lead in numbers and has two live districts. The Northern District has 6 branches with a membership of about 500, and is presided over by Elder George H. Parker, a school-teacher. The Southern District has 7 branches with a membership of 725 and is presided over by Elder George Stewart, a bootmaker.

In addition to his duties as editor of the Gospel Standard Elder W. J. Haworth has acted as missionary supervisor for the state. Either of these is a man's work, and the brother is overtaxed in trying to care for both.

Bishop George Lewis has visited almost every branch in New South Wales, as well as those in Queensland and New Zealand. Recently finances in Australia have fallen behind, but it is hoped they will soon recover.

Evangelist Gresty, accompanied by his noble wife, has done good work among the branches. Elder James W. Davis has labored successfully in the Newcastle District and also in the southern part of the northern district. In addition to his ministerial work, he has painted most of the churches in his field.

Elder W. J. Vaughan has labored in the Newcastle District since returning from West Australia, and has recently purchased a motorcycle in order more effectively to carry on his work.

Elder A. V. Robinson has his family comfortably located in the mission cottage at Argents Hill, and in company with Elder S. W. Ballard has been assigned about three hundred miles of the north coast. The Argents Hill Branch has provided them a buggy and team of ponies and we expect good returns from their labors.

The new branch at Bowraville has recently purchased a site for a building, and we hope they may have a home for worship in the near future.

Branch organization is near at hand in several places and the work is onward in New South Wales.

Victoria

This state has only one district with 6 branches and 1 organized group, numbering about 400. Elder A. C. Barmore has acted as district president and pastor of the principal branch in Melbourne, while Elder E. H. Davies has supervised the missionary work. The brethren have cooperated in their labors with good results.

At present the work in the city of Melbourne is undergoing a realignment due to the shifting of our scene of operations. The Richmond church is up for sale, and two new churches are contemplated in two of the growing suburbs on sites that have already been purchased. New life and vigor in the work is already manifest.

Hastings Branch, the mother branch of the district, has been quiescent for several years, but under younger officers is taking on new life and moving forward.

Though present conditions are far from ideal, the future prospects of the work are good.

Elder C. A. Butterworth is unable to do much ministerial work on account of his health. He continues to live at Geelong and labor as his health will permit.

South Australia

Our work has not yet been introduced outside of Adelaide, the capital of this state. The membership of the Adelaide Branch is about 125 and under the care of Elder H. I. Velt, it is making considerable progress. During the past year, in addition to a considerable sum of tithing, they paid one hundred pounds on their church debt. We have some good members living in various parts of the state, and with additional missionary help, good results are certain.

West Australia

This state is so far distant from the rest of the mission that it has suffered from isolation. The only branch is in Perth, the capital, with a neat little church and a membership of 63, which is ably presided over by Elder Aub Robinson.

The nearest branch is Adelaide, 1,686 miles away, and to attend mission conference, one must go to Sydney, 3,000 miles away. Only intermittent labor has been given this part of the mission and no general officer of the church had visited it previous to my going there last May, during a period of seven years.

There was formerly a branch at Kalgoorlie in the gold fields, 300 miles from Perth. But as the mines have played out, removals have taken place until only a few members remain there. I sent Elder George Millard there in 1922 to try to rebuild the work, and he conducted a mission Sunday school there for several months with indifferent success.

I also sent Elder W. J. Vaughan to Perth in 1922 to make that point his headquarters and try to extend the work. But he had to return to New South Wales about Christmas time. Elder Millard then proceeded to Perth, where he labored until my visit there, diligently seeking to advance the cause. On account of conditions he has resumed secular labor, so now we have no conference appointee in that part of the mission. A splendid field awaits our development in the agricultural districts of the state.

New Zealand

There are two branches in New Zealand, one at Auckland on the North Island and one at Dunedin on the South Island, eight hundred miles away. The latter branch is the older, but has almost been depleted by removals. On account of the few left to bear the expense, the public meeting place was given up, and for some time meetings have been held in private homes. Elder Hall, the branch president, has continued faithfully at his task, and in March, 1923, Elder J. R. Taylor was transferred from the Newcastle District and sent to Dunedin where he has been zealously engaged in missionary work. Arrangements are being made for a public hall and an effort will be made to revive the work there.

At Auckland, we had been paying high rent for inadequate mission quarters for five years. Last October, with the concurrence of the Presiding Bishopric, a loan of ten hundred fifty pounds for ten years at five per cent was effected from a brother in New South Wales. Bishop Lewis and I went to Auckland, purchased a building site and erected a mission headquarters building, which provides ample living quarters for two missionaries' families and also provides a meeting place for the branch. Elders Jones, Loving, Robinson, and the writer acted as workmen on the building. Elder Murdoch did the plumbing, and a good building was thus secured at a minimum expense. This has had a beneficial effect upon the Auckland Branch, which continues under the direction of Elder J. H. Jones, who also acts as mission supervisor for New Zealand.

Two tracts have been translated and printed in the Maori language and arrangements for the purchase of a traveling outfit for Elder A. L. Loving have been completed. The brother has secured a stereopticon lantern, and with this added equipment we are hoping for advancement in the Maori work.

Brother Harold Thompson went to Auckland at his own expense last March and expects to spend a few months with Elder Loving in the Maori work next summer (September to December).

The Departments

Sister Barmore has done much, as head of the Women's Department of the mission to advance the cause, visiting extensively in New South Wales and New Zealand.

Sister James W. Davis, as mission Sunday school superintendent, has stimulated the work and increased its efficiency, though her personal labors have been confined to New South Wales. Since January 1, she has also edited the departmental page of the Gospel Standard.

Sister M. A. McConley has traveled extensively and sought to increase interest in the Department of Recreation and Expression as well as acting as a field worker for the Women's Department.

I greatly appreciate the faithful labors performed by the local workers, as well as the conference appointees, and in severing my connection with the mission, I do so with regrets. It has been a pleasure for me to be associated with them in the work.

Opportunity is knocking at our door and crying for more workers. Praying that the day may soon come when they may go forth with a greater endowment of power than is now enjoyed, and for the early realization of our Zionistic ideals.

HILO, HAWAII, August 20, 1923.

J. A. GILLEN

First Presidency; Dear Brethren: As a report of my labors for the year I submit the following:

Besides the lectures delivered to the class in religious education at Graceland, I held a short series of meetings in Saint Louis. I cannot say that this meeting was specially of the missionary type as I felt disposed to direct my efforts more particularly to the Saints.

Have labored since conference in western Iowa, particularly Council Bluffs; also held a series of meetings in South Omaha as well as preaching in Omaha at Easter time.

Just before Christmas I spent two weeks in the Far West Stake, holding meetings in Saint Joseph, First Branch; South Saint Joseph; the third branch, and also at the mission which was under the immediate direction of Brother Coventry Archibald. Following this I went to Stewartsville and some near-by places. I attended the conference at Joplin, Spring River District.

Soon after the holidays at the request of the officers of the Stewartsville Branch I returned to that branch where I conducted a series of meetings and was ably supported by not only the officers but a splendid response was given by the membership, particularly the young people. I should like to give Stewartsville a return engagement some time in the future. Following this meeting I delivered a series of lectures or sermons to the young people in Des Moines; am glad to know that Brother D. E. Dowker is in Des Moines, as there is some splendid talent there.

Next of importance was the Young People's Convention at Lamoni; at this place I was supported in the missionary phase of the work by T. W. Williams and J. F. Garver. Of this I will say but little, as it is known throughout the church what a wonderful time was had; a great gathering with a splendid spirit.

It was now time to enter into the work of reunions as assigned me. I began at Fargo, stopping en route for a day or so at Minneapolis, where I was greeted with a full house every meeting; was loath to leave because of the opportunities for labor. I remained throughout the reunion at Fargo, following which I spent a few days near Burlington, North Dakota. While there I was the guest of Brother and Sister M. D. Graham. From here I passed to Spokane where I found the Saints wrapped in gloom occasioned by the tragic death of the daughter of our Brother Oscar Case, who met her death by drowning in the Columbia River. At their request I remained longer than I had planned, as it was desired that I preach the sermon.

The following reunions were attended in the order named: Portland; Irvington, in Northern California District; Hermosa Beach, in Southern California; and Eastern Colorado, at Colorado Springs.

I have preached about one hundred sixty sermons, baptized six, responded to the usual calls for administration, blessing children, etc.

In conclusion will say that I have enjoyed the reunions because of the splendid spirit prevailing in practically all of these meetings, and the desire on the part of the people to do right and to respond to the particular duties coming to them.

May the Lord bless the church and her Zion.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 10, 1923.

E. J. GLEAZER

First Presidency; Dear Brethren: During the year I have endeavored to keep in close touch with your office, so a lengthy report at this time will not be necessary.

I returned from conference to complete my semester's work at Harvard. During the months of November, December, and January my labors were confined largely to the Southern New England District. I did what I could to direct the missionary work in the Eastern Mission by correspondence. During this period I attempted to enthrone the local forces for missionary work. We could not improve our organization in the Southern New England District because the local forces were carrying both the missionary and local burden. We continued to operate our four missions, two of which have since been organized into branches.

Early in February I went to Eastern Maine because of the urgent calls for assistance. We had planned to conduct several series of meetings and organize the local forces wherever possible for missionary activities. We held several services in Jonesport and then the severe weather forced us to postpone further activities in Maine during the winter.

Returning from Maine I journeyed to the New York and Philadelphia District where I visited every branch. In four branches I conducted a week's meetings. In the other branches I would occupy for several evenings. I found the local work at low ebb and I did what I could to revive the interest. Little was accomplished along missionary lines because of scarcity of qualified material. It was very apparent that the local work was suffering for leaders and under the conditions I could do little organizing for missionary work. I did succeed in securing the services of Elder Mottashed for missionary supervisor. However, it was only a few weeks later that he was transferred to Detroit.

Early in May I returned to Maine. This time I succeeded in visiting every branch and mission now active. I conducted a series of meetings in practically every branch and had nice crowds and fair interest. Maine needs help, and I am satisfied that if we can send them assistance many will be baptized. It is easy to get a hearing in Maine. We have more openings than we can fill. For the present we can expect little assistance from the local brethren. They cannot fill the openings. Possibly in time we can educate a force of local missionaries in Maine, but at present there are none.

Western Maine must have a missionary supervisor; also, a district president. Elder Newman Wilson has requested to be released from the field because of illness. Western Maine offers a wonderful opportunity for missionary work but we must have a man to direct this department. I suggested in a former letter that if we can send a man to take over the work of the district that he should make his headquarters in Stonington and direct the local work there.

Southern New England District needs a missionary supervisor. Besides it is wisdom that a pastor be sent to Providence to care for that branch.

New York and Philadelphia District should not be neglected. They cannot get along very well without a missionary supervisor. There is plenty of material to be organized there if we can send them a man. I would also recommend that if possible a man be sent either to preside in the district or to care for the work in Brooklyn so that Elder Squire might find it possible to devote more time to the needs of the district.

Attached is a statistical report for the conference year.

I pray that God's blessing may be upon our efforts and that the coming year may be more successful.

WEST SOMERVILLE, MASSACHUSETTS, September 5, 1923.

T. W. WILLIAMS

Following the conference of 1922 I returned to the Pacific Coast in harmony with instructions of the Presidency. I busied myself in making survey of the various local churches, securing data as to available ministerial material which could be enlisted for an intensive local missionary effort.

Several times I was called to Northern California. While in San Francisco, officials and members of the branch united in requesting me to come to their city and hold a special missionary series of meetings. They were quite anxious to advertise our work and to interest nonmembers.

I conferred with the district president. He concurred and urged me to respond to San Francisco's call. I did so. I held several meetings with the local priesthood. The branch appointed a committee to supervise the organization of the publicity campaign. We secured the Native Sons Hall in the heart of the city. We extensively advertised the meetings. We enlisted the services of every available member of the church. The church membership in San Francisco, Oakland, and other places stood loyally by our effort. According to the unanimous verdict of branch officials and members good was accomplished.

On the advice of the Presidency I went east in June to assist in arousing interest in the Young People's Convention. I visited all of the central stakes, preaching in the principal places. I remained for the convention, filling my appointments on the program.

I returned to the coast. I had been away from home almost continuously for five years. Most of this time was spent in foreign lands. My personal affairs demanded attention. I have not been idle, however, but have given attention to my church work as well.

I was asked by the local committee to assume the presidency of the reunion committee and later selected to preside over the Southern California reunion. I tried to do what I could to make the reunion a success. I have been holding a series of meetings in the eastern part of the city since the reunion with varying results. Have visited San Diego twice and assisted the membership in that city to secure a desirable church home.

I have absolute faith in the truth of this latter-day work. I believe that we should do all in our power to retain and uphold the faith of our fathers. I believe the church can do no greater thing than to emphasize those features of church activity which underly our success as a divine institution.

P. M. HANSON

First Presidency; Dear Brethren: The following is submitted in response to your request of August 8:

During the year I have labored chiefly in Illinois and Michigan. A comparison of the present missionary status of these two States with what was accomplished some years ago presents anything but an encouraging picture. I hope that the joy of service of former years may return.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, September 3, 1923.

ROY S. BUDD

To the First Presidency: Since November 1, 1922, I have labored as an apostle under the direction of the First Presidency. My labor has taken me into five different States; however the greater part of my time has been spent in the State of Oklahoma.

I have enjoyed my work very much, though handicapped to some extent because of a failure to thoroughly understand the task before me since the entire field of labor was new. I have spent most of the time in actual missionary efforts with some of the other brethren. Some of my efforts have been purely experimental, hence I have not met with the results obtained from following a tried and true program. Regardless of the fact that a number of my schemes proved fruitless the experience was encouraging, and by the trial and error method I feel myself on a firmer foundation.

During the ten months I have preached two hundred and fifteen sermons and have baptized seventeen persons. When possible I have avoided baptisms, and have found it is encouraging to local men as well as seventies to give them the privilege of doing the baptizing. The people in most places are hungering for something. It is our job to prove to them that we have that something.

In general I have found the Saints very optimistic and anxious to go forward. Zion seems to be the watchword in most places. Wherever I have found the Saints cold and indifferent I have also found a cold, indifferent priesthood. Leadership is what the Saints, and in fact the people at large, are seeking and must find if they reach Zionie conditions.

If those whom I have administered to have been strengthened and their faith and vision increased as I have been strengthened and my faith and vision increased, I feel my efforts have not been in vain.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 29, 1923.

J. F. CURTIS

President F. M. Smith; Dear Brother: As requested by you, I am sending my report for the year ending September 1.

I have labored some in Missouri but most of my work has been performed in the field assigned me, Ohio, Kentucky, and Indiana. I did not get into Kentucky, but by request of the reunion committee, I was present at the Chatham, London, and Toronto reunions in Canada. Besides these I was also at the Port Huron, Michigan, and Kirtland, Ohio, reunions.

In addition to other church work, I have organized the local priesthood for missionary work wherever possible, and have tried to encourage the Saints and especially the priesthood to more active work.

I have preached 212 times, and have assisted and attended many other services. Baptized six persons, confirmed 11, ordained three elders and one priest. Organized two branches, one at Saint Marys, Ohio, the other at Lakewood, Ohio.

I have been blessed of the Master in my labors, and hope to continue faithful unto the end.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 28, 1923.

JOHN F. GARVER

The First Presidency; Brethren of the Presidency: I undertake with appreciation my annual report. I wish I might make it all it ought to be, and no more. This shall be my endeavor.

I Catch a New Vision

The circumstances under which I was required to take up work in the Quorum of Twelve at the last conference were as you know, rather unfortunate. With these things fresh in mind, it was some weeks before I could strike anything like a stride. Receding with time, the things I mention gradually gave place for the new work before me, which has taken on more in the way of definiteness, with a magnitude I had not thought possible. And with the feel of the new work, there has come a vision and a spirit of readiness for the fray which gives promise of a qualification, shall I find the time for the study I feel it necessary to do, and may I remain humble and fill my heart with love.

I shall not enumerate experiences, contenting myself with saying I have, especially the past ninety days, enjoyed a divine leading, a breadth of understanding, and a heavenly communion quite beyond my fondest hopes. Indeed, knowing in the light of certain past experiences something of the feel of the endowment, I am privileged to say, I have at times rested in my work under what I understand to be that great illumination and quickener, which shall in the days of our full preparation and devotion open the windows of heaven for the pouring out of the things we cannot of ourselves attain, that God's work shall not have lack from one infinity.

Supervising in Iowa

You will recall that I was assigned the task of organizing the Iowa local forces for missionary work in connection with the missionaries assigned to this field. After a rather definite understanding with President Smith, which confirmed me in the previous conviction we should undertake this work so far as practicable through the supervising seventy, I took it up along these lines.

Charles F. Putnam was supervising in Little Sioux, Pottawattamie, Gallands Grove, and Fremont. By appointment I met him personally in all four districts, and in each instance presented him as supervisor, the man on the field, urging the men to rally in a cooperative effort for the bearing of the witness which must be ours if the gospel is to be effectually declared to all men. The work has been quickened in Fremont, Pottawattamie, and Little Sioux, though I shall have to say not to the extent it ought to be.

J. R. Lentell, supervising in Lamoni Stake and Des Moines District, I met with the men in each territory, leaving him to carry the work forward with their cooperation. Neither in these districts has the cause been advanced in this regard as we must do if we are to discharge our full obligations.

There is no supervision in Nauvoo. I visited this district, urged upon the men the need of a quickening, and asked C. J. Smith to represent me in the day-to-day effort to get the local men out. He has done what he could willingly, and with some little success.

In Eastern Iowa we have neither supervisor nor missionary. I was to have been in this field in June, but certain interests held me at Independence at the time of their conference at Waterloo, so I was required to send Bishop Carmichael to help in the conference. This was my only endeavor for Eastern Iowa.

The endeavor to work through the supervisor is slower, but I feel in the end will be better since it will develop these men who take to it for a fuller work in this connection.

I have visited in Iowa, Moorhead, Pisgah, Thurman, Shenandoah, Council Bluffs, Sioux City, Dow City, Des Moines three times, Burlington, Woodbine, and Mondamin, and have helped with the work at Lamoni and in surrounding branches. Have attended conferences in Lamoni Stake three times, in Little Sioux twice, and once each in Pottawattamie, Gallands Grove, and Nauvoo.

I Have Been Busy

In my work I have made ten visits to Independence, which has kept me in frequent personal touch with the First Presidency, which I have appreciated very much, and which has been a help to me in my work; and in addition I have been many times in consultation with F. M. McDowell of the First Presidency which I feel has been mutually beneficial.

Since March 10, I have made four trips to Wisconsin, once for the Northern District reunion in July, once for the Southern District reunion in August, twice to represent the church in difficulties in the Northern District. In connection with these visits, I dedicated the church at Madison, March 11, visited the Evansville Branch of the Southern District, and each of the four branches of the Northern District, preaching in each branch, and conducting a series of special meetings at Chetek in March, in company with R. V. Hopkins, who was a very great help in the matter of difficulties above mentioned, and which have been reported to your office. While in the North in May, I visited the Minneapolis Branch, and visited again there in July.

I have preached seventy-eight sermons since the conference, and delivered two series of lectures before the class in religious education at Graceland College, one on the atonement, and one on missionary work. Have attended and assisted in reunions at Lamoni, Iowa, and Galva, Illinois, besides the Wisconsin reunions already referred to.

In all, I have spent in the ten months, November to August inclusive, one hundred sixty actual days in the field, and this in addition to the work done in Lamoni Stake, which has been considerable. I have had, too, quite a heavy correspondence growing out of my apostleship, and have given it careful attention. When it is remembered that on top of this, and the other work I have mentioned, I have looked after the Ensign, you will discern I have not been idle.

The Ensign

Speaking of the Ensign, I may say I have enjoyed it very much. I feel the need, however, of giving it a little closer attention, if I am to be continued, and I hope I may be for a time at least. If continued, I should do some reading and observation to acquaint me with methods of missionary work in other bodies, and of successful methods in our own ranks. This might entail a bit of travel, but I feel it would be justified both in connection with my Ensign work, and in my other missionary work for the church. I have spoken with President Smith of these matters, and have his concurrence in plans only tentatively drawn.

Our First Work

If I might be indulged in a few further suggestions, I would say, my observations among the people, my intelligence, and my heart, all as I believe quickened by the Spirit of God, lead me to say my conviction is our first work as a church at this time is to push to a realization our economic program. Let the call to our people in this thing be continued. Let those who will be established in temporal stewardships. Let organizations multiply. Let us make ready for the gathering. Let us call our people in where it is deemed wise and for the best interest of the work. Let us have faith. Let us make bold. Let us dare and do. It is the hastening time. Let us not fail God nor man. We then must quicken our step in the matter of our Zion program.

Second in importance I would say is the further qualification of our forces, one and all, membership as well as ministry, for the multitudinous and complex obligations our new social order will impose upon us, and our ministry to the world demand. Let our educational program then go on apace, and may God lead us along right lines, as I am sure he will, to our full unfoldment for his great cause among men.

I have put these two first, our Zion program and our educational work, when some might expect me from my appointment to put first the missionary work of the church; for the pushing of our missionary work I name last. To be more exact, the missionary work I seem to name last, for I know beyond a doubt that this is the quickest way to develop a sure and effectual missionary policy—to organize our forces and develop them, not for missionary work, not for local work, not for the new social order, but for all these together, in the midst of which we shall have not only the qualifications for missionary work, but the vision and the disposition and the ability and the means and the demonstration in a people themselves redeemed and working for a mighty corporate witness as well as declaration that will move the world to God as no preaching alone can do.

Oh! may God help us to wisdom, and to zeal, and to efficiency, that his mighty truth may roll forth everywhere to the honest of earth who so sorely need it, and who will accept it gladly, once we are qualified to present it, and ready to assimilate them in that new social order, in the which all shall be for each of them, even as it shall be in their hearts when they come to us to each of them for all of us.

LAMONI, IOWA, September 6, 1923.

F. HENRY EDWARDS

The First Presidency; Dear Brethren: During the conference year 1922-23 I have acted as secretary of the Quorum of Twelve, and as "Office Man." In addition to the attention I have been able to give to the needs of the general missionary force because of my location at the Center Place I have responded to every request made of me by your quorum for work in various centers, attending conferences, reporting on conditions, etc. During the past six weeks I have visited six of the reunions to which I was appointed; Alabama, Florida, Lamoni, Pottawattamie, and Fremont, Gallands Grove, and Little Sioux, and Nauvoo, and have rendered such assistance as was within my power.

At your request I have acted as a member of the committee on the selection of religious education students, had partial direction of the programs broadcasted from the radio station now owned and operated by the church in Independence, have given some attention to our work in the various colleges and universities of the country, and have participated in the work of the reunion committee. Whenever called upon I have conferred with your quorum and other members of the Twelve regarding the general work of the church. During the past few months I have contributed regularly to the Ensign, and infrequently to the Herald.

In my work I have been blessed of the Lord, and have been grateful for this and for the assistance and counsel of my brethren. I am optimistic regarding the future, anxious to work where I can be of the greatest service, and willing to go wherever the quorum having jurisdiction is directed to send me.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 1, 1923.

JOHN W. RUSHTON

To the First Presidency; Greetings: Responsive to your request for report of the year's labor contained in your note of the 8th instant, I hasten to supply the particulars.

Owing to not having available the portions of my diary containing the details and statistics, I can only present a summary.

Included in the report is my program extending through the schedule I have prepared until September 11.

Herewith I submit report of my official labors during the conference year ending September 30, 1923.

At the close of the conference of 1922 it was suggested by a member of the First Presidency that I labor in the Eastern States, beginning with the new year and in the interim between conference and the new year do what I could in the Southern California District. Agreeably to this instruction I labored in California, which included a series of special services in Long Beach. However, without any reasons being given, the appointment to the Eastern States was canceled; and I was requested to labor in Eastern Colorado District.

From the district conference held at Fort Collins towards the end of February until the end of May my time was spent in that part of the field preaching and seeking to organize the work in harmony with the accepted policy. Surveys and reports were made out both of branches and the district being forwarded to the office of the Presidency.

At the completion of this work I was instructed to proceed to the Canadian northwest to make survey and report to the office of the Presidency. As soon as arrangements could be made, I responded and worked in that field from about the middle of July, beginning with the conference at Shellbrook in North Saskatchewan until the beginning of September. During that time I visited the districts and most of the branches in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, and that portion of Washington in the United States which belonged to the Seattle and British Columbia District. Surveys and reports being made out in due course and forwarded to the Presidency's office.

Not having my diary containing statistics at hand, I regret that these cannot be supplied. However, I have perhaps preached as much as usual, likely more frequently owing to the peculiar itineraries and need of concentration involved. I always have responded to requests for the ritualistic needs common to the church ministry. In all my efforts I acknowledge the blessing of God without which human wisdom must ever be inadequate.

Owing to the urgency of the work in the Canadian Northwest as expressed by the Presidency, and the conflicting therewith of the program of reunions which a committee had made out for me, I was obliged to make a choice which meant the cancelling of all reunion appointments. To have attempted to meet the reunions would have involved considerable expense for traveling and would have made it impossible to have reached the points in the Canadian field so much needing attention. The tremendous distances to be covered and the scattered condition of the work in this undeveloped country makes a demand upon the time and energy leaving no opportunity for other engagements.

I regret that as a result of my labors and intimate association with people among whom I have labored that I cannot give an encouraging report. Besides the restlessness and indifference to religion characterizing the present at the present time, justifying the anxiety of all Christian people, I find that in our own church the urgent need for spiritual revival is very evident. The need for spiritual culture, the securing of faith upon intellectual and ethical foundations, the immediate appreciation of the gospel as the revelation of divine righteousness allied with the power of God to save, and the interpretation of the spiritual ideals of Christianity in terms of industrial, economic, and social life are paramount.

In the fervent hope that God will make "bare his arm" in this day of crisis and enrich the church with all grace in Christ Jesus.

TRANSPORTATION DEPARTMENT

October 10, 1923.

President F. M. Smith; Dear Brother: I beg to submit brief report of the activities of the Transportation Department for the conference year ending September 15, 1923:

We have assisted in planning many trips for the members as well as the ministry and other church workers, in many cases assisting by the securing of tickets for their accommodation, frequently being able to save them considerable money by choosing the most feasible route.

In addition to examining all applications for clergy permits, I have been successful in securing for the ministry a considerable number of free passes over the railroads where it was possible to secure such courtesy.

In order to be prepared to save the church as much money as possible on steamship transportation for the ministers going abroad and to assist the members in getting favorable accommodations for like journeys, I have secured the agency for the following steamship lines:

Atlantic Ocean

Cunard Steamship Company.

Scandinavian American Line.

Holland-America Line.

Canadian Pacific Steamship Co.

International Mercantile Marine, including the White Star Line, Red Star Line, and several others.

United States Lines (Shipping Board).

Munson Steamship Lines New York to South America.

Pacific Ocean

Canadian Pacific Steamship Co.

Los Angeles Steamship Co.

Matson Navigation Company.

Union Steamship Company (Brokerage arrangement only).

Pacific Mail Steamship Company (Missionaries only).

I would suggest that much more assistance might be rendered both the ministry and the membership if they would consult more freely with this department when they are contemplating any extended trip either via railway or steamship. Frequently reduced rates are available, and the commission allowed us on steamship tickets would result in quite a saving to the church. Where the missionaries are traveling and where the membership are using the steamship lines, the commission allowed would result in carrying the office expenses of the Transportation Department.

We have handled a number of freight matters for members securing some adjustments in freight rates which seemed to have been out of line and believe that more could be accomplished in this line if the members who feel that the freight rates for handling their products which they may have to ship are not in line would get in touch with us. This, we do not believe, should be developed, however, into a claim adjustment bureau.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE,

Transportation Manager.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 10, 1923.

ORDER OF BISHOPS

To the First Presidency; Brethren: The following report is submitted for insertion in the Conference Minutes:

The Order of Bishops have held twelve sessions, beginning October 1 and ending October 15. Nineteen bishops have been in attendance and five bishops' counselors.

Following the action of conference in providing for a committee to select the site and have plans and specifications prepared for the erection of the auditorium, the Order met and selected B. R. McGuire and J. A. Becker as its representatives on the committee.

Other matters of importance to the conference passed upon by the Order have been reported for consideration and action and are included in the conference minutes.

Sincerely yours, ORDER OF BISHOPS,

Per VERNON A. REESE, Secretary.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Switzerland Missionary Expresses Faith in Future Work

Letter received at church headquarters from Elmer C. Ohlert, missionary to Switzerland.

In Luzern I have rented a hall, and if all goes well we will hold a two days' meeting there. Most of the members from Basel are going; also some friends. We hope to have a time of rejoicing spiritually. The Saints in two places in Switzerland have never before come together for special meetings, and this ought to be a thing for the betterment of the church. We all look forward to it. When we are definitely in the hall in that place, I shall so divide my time that that place will also be well taken care of. Brother Hirsbrunner, a priest who lives in Zurich, will then help me in Luzern. I shall so arrange it that he will be there to preach when I cannot go.

It is too bad that another missionary is not sent here. I have been wishing that you would send another young, unmarried man here to help me out. Two of us could, I believe, do a good work. It isn't exactly wise for one missionary to be alone in a field like this. The work is too strenuous. Sometimes the problems are quite heavy. No! I don't back down and avoid the responsibility I have accepted. I like to know that I am serving and doing my bit. And the blessings are wonderful. It is work that is eternal. But two could do much more efficient work than one. Another Graceland graduate would surely be a fine fit here. They seem to have a good attitude. Here are some reasons as I see them:

Urges Missionary Help

First, the harvest is so dead ripe that if we don't gather it quite soon there is going to be a terrible waste of human souls upon our shoulders as a church. I fear the outcome sometimes, as I live among such times as there are over here. In America people cannot grasp or imagine what a chaos there is over here. But I have an ever-increasing faith in the church. It is God's church. The power of God is ours if we will only take it. I shall say a little more about that later.

Second, the task is too big for me alone here. There come up problems which I ought not to be called upon to solve alone. It is too much of a strain. My work has been nothing but a continual stream of joy since I have taken it over, and I love it. I wouldn't want to do anything else. I have never been so happy before in my life as I am in the work here, but I know it is too much for me alone. It is too much for anyone alone. The Saints are indeed my friends, and I have not been one mite homesick since my arrival. I am grateful. The needs of the work here are too much for one person.

Third, the mission here is too expensive for one person. Everything is expensive here, and financially it is not right to have only one man here. Two men could more than double the missionary and church efforts at a very little more expense. The biggest item of expense is for hall rent and things of that nature. We ought to be able to use those things to their limit. When I go to Luzern, the work in Basel suffers, etc. You see my point, I'm sure. When you get this letter I suppose General Conference will be over. I hope that the Spirit was there in full measure and that the difficulties of the kingdom have passed the crisis and are looking forward. We here in Switzerland have made the conference a part of our prayers for the last two months. We have been there in spirit. I hope that things will justify your sending help, not for my sake, but for God's sake. We will both be pleased (God and I).

Speaks German Language

My German is coming along quite nicely now—much better than I had expected. People do not want to believe me when I tell them I have been here only eight and a half months. God has indeed blessed me. I believe that a young person can take over a language more readily than one older, and that is why I think that a young man ought to be sent. He ought to be single. The police do not bother a single man, but they are pretty particular about the married couples they let in. It is expensive business to be chased about Switzerland when one is married, or unmarried, as Brother Halb would testify. I have had no trouble with the police. I have heard of some who did though.

We have had some evidences of the Spirit in the way of healing here. A member had a disease which the doctors said was incurable. He was administered to about two weeks ago. The next day he said there was an improvement. Today he told me that the ailment is entirely gone. One of our sisters has always had a headache. She was continually bothered with it and suffered with it. She was administered to, and from that time on has had no headache at all. One sister wrenched her wrist out of joint several months back, and it would not go back right. She worked with her husband every day repairing shoes, which is his trade. Sometimes when I would visit them she would have tears in her eyes. She would say that she felt that she must help with the work but that her wrist pained her so much she could hardly do the work. She was administered to and was immediately healed. One day a child of one of the members was sick and had a very high fever, and she called me to administer. Almost immediately the child was well and playing. The next day the child's sister was taken down with the same thing, and also had a very high fever. Her eyes were dull and her cheeks pale. Immediately after the administration the color came back to the cheeks and the eyes were bright again and she was smiling. When the child became sick she asked for brother to come. She is only four or five years old. I wish older people could always have faith like a child. It is indeed gratifying to be able to administer to the needs of these people.

Saints Visit Mission

In August, Sister O. L. James and daughter, Pauline, and Gladys Newton, of Independence, paid me a visit, while they were going through Switzerland. I surely appreciated it. When a Saint goes traveling he should, by all means, look the missionaries up. It means everything to us to be visited by home folks. The visit of these three sisters added very much to my spiritual strength and made me want to work harder and made me feel better in every way. We missionaries on the foreign fields, and especially we who are all alone, surely need encouragement at times. This visit has been a very happy page in my book of remembrances. I turn to it often for strength. The sisters didn't have my address and had to hunt me up. The two girls, after they had found the hall, found that my address was Hauptpostfach 11340. They went down town; then tried to convince a policeman in French that I lived in a lock box in the main post office, which Hauptpostfach 11340 means. Finally they found me, and we spent a happy afternoon and evening together. In the evening we had a sort of party. I called all the Saints together, and our visitors entertained us with singing, at which they are very adept. The Saints were strengthened and given a wider vision of the work. These three sisters will never realize what good they have done until the day when we shall know as we are known. May God bless them. When, the next morning, the train pulled out for France I waved after them until it turned a corner and could no longer be seen and then, for once, I just let the tears stream. They were not sad ones. They were glad ones. My strength had been renewed and replenished.

I hope that the conference has been one of blessings and that I, here in my corner, can fulfill my duty in an ever-increasingly efficient and righteous manner. The banner of Christ brings everything good.

Spearfish Branch Larger than Formerly Stated

SPEARFISH, SOUTH DAKOTA, October 26.—In a recent letter to the HERALD the statement was made that there were only seven members in the Spearfish Branch. The statement should have been that there were seven families living in the city who state preference for the Latter Day Saint Church. There are thirty-nine members in the branch. Since that time the number has been augmented by another family moving in, that of Brother F. E. Fetch. Sister Fetch will be remembered by some as Ella Graham, formerly of Lamoni. Brother Fetch is engaged in the mercantile business in this city.

Brother C. W. Prettyman came on to Spearfish for a week, where he preached on the evening of October 7. He left on the 9th for Shadron, Nebraska, where he expected to hold a series of meetings.

Petrolia Makes Plans to Tract Town

PETROLIA, ONTARIO, October 23.—There are only fifteen members in this branch, but regular meetings are held as follows: Sunday school, prayer service, and preaching every Sunday, while the Department of Recreation and Expression meets every Friday night. The branch does not have a church building, so it is hard to get outsiders to attend the meetings.

Petrolia is a town of four thousand. Some few tracts have been handed out, but plans are now being made to tract the town. Also cards have been printed with the pastor's name, address, and the name of the church he represents on one side, and on the reverse side a brief statement of what we believe.

It is expected that a missionary will be here in the near future to hold meetings. A suitable hall is available for the meetings, so the prospects are bright for a larger number of Saints before long.

Group Meetings Held in Small Branch

LOCK NO. 4, PENNSYLVANIA, October 25.—The priesthood is well represented in this branch, as in a membership of about one hundred sixty-five members there are three elders, four priests, one deacon, and one teacher. About two thirds of the members are young people.

Of the departments, Sunday school is well attended, and the Department of Recreation and Expression is fairly well attended. The Department of Women is doing well and has a live interest in the work. There is also a Temple Builder circle. Two groups hold weekly cottage prayer meetings, besides the service at the church.

Lock No. 4 is located on the banks of the beautiful Monongahela River, one of the most beautiful valleys of the United States, about thirty-five miles from Pittsburgh.

Echoes From Zion

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 25.—It was a feast to my soul, when attending the Stewartville reunion for two days this summer, to meet with dear friends of the past. Over thirty years ago we moved from Stewartville and left behind many dear friends. It was pleasing to see how the reunion had grown since its beginning under the care of Brother T. W. Chatburn and myself, amply aided by a few others. The grounds are ideal, and the appointments are next to perfect.

We recently visited Elder J. C. Foss and found him quite feeble in body, but as strong in the gospel faith as ever. He was looking for the happy time when he would meet some or all of the five hundred eighty-six souls he had baptized into the kingdom.

Sister Templeton, one of our Seattle flock, visited friends in our city. She had taken a long visit in the East and took in part of the conference.

The echoes from General Conference are assuring that the good work received a wonderful impetus onward. The missionaries go out with added spiritual strength. "I am going out to preach the work to victory," is quoted from the testimony of one of our strong missionaries.

We visited Brother C. E. Jones, our successor in Seattle, in the Sanitarium, where he has undergone an operation. We found him doing well and hopeful of a speedy recovery. We talked of the good Saints in Seattle.

There are six regular services at the Stone Church each Sunday: Prayer service is held at 8 a. m. for both old and young, though they meet separately. Sunday school is at 9.30, preaching at 11, general prayer service at 2.30, and preaching at night. The music is most excellent. There are six other places where regular services are held. Zion prospers.

J. M. TERRY.

Tract Fund Maintained by Moorhead Branch

MOORHEAD, IOWA, October 23.—The Moorhead Branch consists of some three hundred members, but quite a number live at a distance and cannot attend regularly. It is the only branch in Monona County and is located near the southern line of that county. Regular services are held every Sunday—Sunday school at 10 a. m., preaching at 11, Department of Recreation and Expression and preaching services in the evening. Prayer services are held every Thursday evening. All meetings are usually well attended, and as a rule good interest is manifested.

About half the time allotted to the Department of Recreation and Expression is devoted to a study of the quarterly and the Book of Mormon. The rest of the time is used for a program which is in charge of different families as assigned by the program committee.

The branch maintains a tract fund which supplies the publicity department with the necessary means for its work. This department has installed literature racks in several depots and other public places in the county. Subagents are appointed to have charge of these racks, and they make report of the tracts and other publications distributed. This is a good way to spread the gospel and open the way for missionary work.

Moorhead Branch has been favored with quite a number of missionary visits during the past year. Elders P. T. Anderson, Charles Putnam, and Daniel Macgregor, and J. F. McDowell of Magnolia, who formerly did much missionary work among us, all rendered good service to the branch.

College Day was not observed by any special program, but a collection was taken.

Pleasantview Sunday School Struggles to Grow

TRYON, NEBRASKA, October 20.—The Pleasantview Sunday school is a struggling little institution, being made up of only a few families. Four families live only a short distance from the meeting place, three live a greater distance but have cars, and one drives a team. One family goes seven miles to the meetings.

In spite of the difficulties under which Sunday school is held, a splendid effort is being made to keep alive the interest in this phase of the work.

Recently one family was away in another part of the State, the organist was sick, and only one family could attend, so Sunday school was discontinued for two weeks. Things are now moving along nicely again, and it is hoped the little department can be kept alive and working during the winter months.

Missionary Returns From Germany

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, November 1.—Arriving in Independence on October 26, Elder Carl F. Greene returned from his mission field in Germany after being gone three years to the day.

Brother Greene declared he did not arrange this unique occurrence, but that it "just happened." He left for his mission on October 26, 1920, and returned October 26, 1923.

During his three years in Germany, one hundred thirty-two were converted to the gospel, Brother Greene baptizing sixty-three personally.

Nine branches have been established in Germany, the two largest being at Hanover and Great Röschen. Hanover has the largest membership, numbering one hundred twenty-seven.

In Great Röschen the Saints own their own building. It is a neat, one-story affair, with ample room inside for their meetings. Hanover is less fortunate. Meetings are held here in the high school for teachers, which is obtained at a very high rental fee.

The Hanover Branch is well organized, having a ladies' aid, and young people's group. These were organized by Brother Greene on the same day. The ladies' aid assists the mission in many ways. The young people's group is endeavoring to build themselves up spiritually and also help the church in its temporal affairs.

When asked concerning the financial condition of the German Saints, Brother Greene stated that they are hard pressed, but that it is only a reflection of the conditions in Germany as a whole. They desire to come to Zion but cannot get together enough money to come. However, they do not want for necessities while living there. To show this, Brother Greene called attention to the fact that these Saints are observing the temporal law of the church in paying tithing.

Impressions of Conference Given

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, November 1.—Sister E. B. Burton writes of her impressions of conference. She was happy for the privilege of attending, and came away with an even greater feeling of pleasure.

She commends the spirit in which President Elbert Smith addressed the body, stating that he wished he could gather all around his table and partake of a common social feeling. She believes that the Lord is pressing his army forward and that under his leadership the church will go on.

Sister Burton was pleased with the Campus, where the big tent was pitched. Had the weather been good, the meetings would have been even more enjoyable.

The greeting of old friends is a pleasant memory for the coming year. Sister Burton probably expresses the sentiments of many other conference visitors.

Pontiac Increases Building Fund

PONTIAC, MICHIGAN, October 29.—On September 17 the Department of Women gave a dinner at the First Detroit Church, the proceeds to go to the building fund. These, above expenses, amounted to $130. Another dinner was given on October 20 in the church basement, and another $20 was realized.

The Saints expect to hold a rally day program on November 4 to commemorate Armistice Day. Elder Mottashed of Detroit will be the speaker on that day. There will also be a baptism at that time.

Sunday, October 28, was a memorial day in the branch. In a two-hour prayer service the Spirit of God rested like a mantle over all, and words of comfort and direction were given. Little Brother Neil McCloud, who has been in the hospital for several weeks, was again able to attend the services. Brother and Sister George Skinner attended as visitors.

Work is progressing nicely in Pontiac. More new members are moving in, and more vigor is expressed by the Saints in service. All apparently have their eyes turned toward the goal, the building of Zion. The branch officers are: Elder James H. Mead, president, with Elders J. M. Riley and C. Whitehead as counselors; Sister Myrtle Berndt, secretary; Brother Otto Berndt, treasurer and deacon. Also there is a priest, Brother Robert Kenyon; two teachers, Brothers E. Schell and George McCloud; and leader of the Department of Women, Sister Anna McCloud.

The women of the branch have organized a women's prayer circle which meets at 7.30 on Wednesday evening. The object at present is to remember a sister who is very badly afflicted and cannot endure the strain much longer.

Group Meetings Now Held in San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, October 28.—The Saints in this city are trying to make a better record for gospel work. Every Wednesday evening the five groups meet in as many parts of the city to study gospel themes, church principles, discuss religious teachings, and learn how to tell what is believed more efficiently. Regular round-table talks are held, and seasons of prayer and testimony are arranged for at some of the meetings. The attendance is not very large as yet, but it is hoped to get neighbors interested and thus add to the numbers.

On Sunday all meet at the church where regular services are held—Sunday school, Recreation and Expression, and preaching. The attendance at church is good, and the meetings are spiritual and instructive. The Saints generally are united and hopeful, with little or no discord.

On October 21 Brother and Sister Ball, and Brother and Sister George Daley from Sacramento, visited the branch. Brother Daley is president of the branch at Sacramento. Also Brother Fletcher, from Boise, Idaho, was a recent visitor.

The Sunday school gave a Halloween party on the 27th in a down-town hall. Games were played, refreshments served, an auction was held, and masked rompers made the time hilarious. Thirty-four dollars was raised for the Christmas offering.

Taylorville Branch Departments Raise Money for Improvements

TAYLORVILLE, ILLINOIS, October 31.—It has been only a year since the church here was remodeled and a basement put in, but through the faithfulness of the Saints this is now all paid for. The next move is to install a furnace and connect with the sewer. The Department of Recreation and Expression is to have a box supper on November 12 to raise money for these improvements on the church.

On Tuesday, October 30, the Department of Recreation and Expression had a Halloween party. Halloween games, such as biting apples, apple races, cracker-eating contest, going through the morgue, and some fortune telling, were played. Prizes were given to the best dressed, and also to the most comically dressed, persons. Apples and homemade candy were served.

Brother Van Hoosier, who has charge of the Department of Recreation and Expression, gives a short lecture on church history every Tuesday night.

The Department of Women, in charge of Sister Beth Williams, must be given much credit for the financial assistance it gave in putting the water and gas in this summer. It also paid much of the church debt. Now it is planning for a big Christmas bazaar.

The Sunday school, under the direction of Brothers Phillips and Ettinger, is progressing rapidly. At present it is having a contest to see what class can get the largest percentage for studying lessons at home.

A few weeks ago all the Sunday schools of the city had an attendance campaign. This Sunday school gave $2 to the person bringing the most new pupils.

Some time ago the choir gave a cantata which was so greatly appreciated that it is preparing another.

Those who attended conference from Taylorville report a splendid time.

Montana Saints in Church Publicity Campaign

GLASGOW, MONTANA, October 28.—In the way of general publicity in this branch a card has been printed to hand out. The following appears on one side: "Services every Sunday at 2 p. m. and 7.30 p. m. This church extols every virtue, condemns every vice. It teaches the whole doctrine of Christ—Faith, Repentance, Baptism, Laying on of Hands, Resurrection of the Dead, and Eternal Judgment. Has in it all the officers that God set in his church—apostles, prophets, evangelists, etc. Believes in and enjoys to-day the spiritual manifestations promised God's children—healing, visions, miracles, etc."

On the reverse side appears an invitation to "come and hear the restored gospel preached," and an invitation to ask any questions they wish. Sufficient space is left for the questions to be written on the card.

The district conference will meet with the Glasgow Branch on November 17 and 18. A set of slides from the church Graphic Arts Bureau, "The Story of the Book of Mormon," will be shown on Friday, November 16. An effort is being made to have some member of the Twelve or a general church officer present.

Three regular Sunday school attendants, Earl and Myrtle

Rogers and George Wilcox, were baptized Saturday, October 6, by Priest Joseph L. Sandidge.

The Department of Recreation and Expression was given a real treat on October 19, when Charles R. McCalley, a traveling entertainer, gave the full program in readings, violin numbers, and impersonations.

The young people's prayer meetings, started a short time ago, continue with growing interest. They have changed the hour of meeting from 8 to 9 a. m. Sunday morning.

The branch has lost its president, Joseph L. Sandidge, who left on October 23 for Whitefish, Montana, to work. The members of the branch will greatly miss him, as he has been faithful to his work.

Points visited by the ministry outside of Glasgow during October are Nashua, on the 7th and 14th; and Baylor, on the 7th and 21st. On the latter date Brother James C. Page organized a Union Sunday School. Brother Page also visited Gallipin union church, fifteen miles southeast of Glasgow on October 14.

Sister Caroline Sandidge, who was one of the first Saints to live in Glasgow, and who has recently been living at Hill-yard, Washington, is making the branch a short visit.

Visiting Missionary Holds Extra Services

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN, October 30.—The branch at Milwaukee meets in a hired hall at the corner of Sixth Avenue and Mineral Street.

Elder J. O. Dutton visited the branch October 21 to 28, holding several preaching services and attending the Wednesday night prayer meeting and the branch business meeting.

Elder N. E. Hield was also an over Sunday visitor, looking after the interests of the Department of Recreation and Expression.

The Department of Women has been organized with Sister Vanderhoof as superintendent. The branch was made glad at the prospect of Brother and Sister W. L. Christy locating in this city.

Elder F. V. Dreyer, 341 Scott Street, is president of the branch. Brother Floyd Krishner, was ordained a priest at the annual business meeting.

Saints Help Support Union Sunday School

PINE RIVER, MINNESOTA, October 26.—In the early spring a union Sunday school was organized at White Fish School-house, about six miles from Pine River, and Brother Freeman preached there when conditions were such that he could go. Brother Case being the only one with a car, there were times when the appointment could not be filled, though the interest was all that could be desired. Brother C. B. Freeman was thrown out of employment in August and had to seek work elsewhere, so Brother Case has had the sole responsibility of the union Sunday school work. Splendid courtesy has been extended him when he could attend, and one woman expressed her desire for baptism. This friend is distributing our literature among her relatives and friends, and hopes to bring others into the church.

Those interested at White Fish often drive to Pine River to attend services. There are also others at this place who are interested in the gospel. At least they are willing to hear the message and search the scriptures.

It is encouraging to see people willing to hear the gospel here, as worshipers in the church are very few. Many efforts have been made to arouse new interest in their work, but they do not seem to be able to reach their people. The Saints, by their faithfulness to their work, are winning the respect of many. This is a good field for missionary work, and the hope is that a missionary effort can be made here. Brother Kippe's letter from Germany arouses hope that the time is not far distant when such as these can come to a land where they may find peace and comfort.

MRS. C. B. FREEMAN.

Goal Set for Christmas Offering

TERLTON, OKLAHOMA, October 31.—Sunday, October 21, Elder W. E. Shakespeare, of Stillwater, preached his farewell sermons in the morning at 11 a. m., and in the evening at 7.30, as he is appointed to labor elsewhere. The Saints are sorry to have him leave the district.

Brother F. H. McKibban and family, of this branch, left October 29 for their new home near Columbia, Missouri. Their presence will also be greatly missed.

Though the Saints are few in number, they have set their goal for Christmas offering at $75, and it is hoped that this will be a 100 per cent branch.

Fireside Visits Arouse Interest in Special Meeting

MULBERRY, KANSAS, October 25.—Now that vacations and General Conference are things of the past, except for pleasant memories, the Mulberry Branch is preparing for the winter activities.

All are looking forward to a meeting to be held by Elder Amos T. Higdon. As a result of fireside visits, quite a number are interested.

There is a fine group of Saints at Liberal, Missouri, that has membership in the Mulberry Branch. The work was opened up there two years ago by the efforts of Elder William Bath, who was followed by Elder Lee Quick. Twenty-two were baptized. These Saints are being cared for by Elder Charles A. Dooley, branch president, and Brother Claud Odell, who was ordained a priest in July.

In the way of publicity, the publicity agent is distributing papers and tracts, and is running a weekly notice in the home paper.

Branch of Four Families Carries on Work

HUTCHINSON, KANSAS, October 29.—Though the branch at Hutchinson has been a thriving one, many of the members have moved to other places to work. There are only four families at present in the branch, in charge of Brother E. E. Mettlin. Services are held at the home of Sister Margaret Peters, where one room is set apart for the church. Here they have the piano, benches, and a pulpit.

In spite of their small numbers, the Saints are not discouraged but look forward to the time when they will have more members.

MARGARET PETERS.

Department of Women Active at Sherrill

SHERRILL, NEW YORK, October 30.—The Sherrill Saints regret very much that Elder George W. Robley is to leave for a colder clime, the northeast. He has labored several years in this district and endeared himself to the Saints here.

Brother and Sister Glenn L. Davison moved from Sherrill to Syracuse on October 20. Sister Ada was soloist, branch clerk, organist, and secretary of the Department of Women; and Brother Glenn was a teacher in the branch, a Sunday-school teacher, and chorister. It is impossible for those in larger branches to estimate the loss to this branch.

A lecture on "The American in reality," by Miss Elsie Elms, was given at the church on October 2, which was enjoyed by a fair-sized audience. A collection was taken to defray her expenses.

On October 24 a chicken dinner was served at the home of Sister Agnes Comfort, under the auspices of the Department of Women. Mr. Comfort furnished the fowl at a low price, and his good wife must have donated a great deal to the dinner, as the tickets were limited to about fifty, and $25 was turned over to the building fund. Several of the sisters helped faithfully to make it a success.

The church lot has been filled in from excavations for the new Episcopal Church, but has not yet been properly seeded down. The church faces what is to be a boulevard when completed. This is a corner lot which was donated by the Oneida Community, Ltd., for whom the men in this branch work.

Old-Age Contest Won by Church Member

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN, October 18.—Brother William Stocks, age one hundred and two years, of Armada, Michigan, won the old-age contest carried on in six counties by the Port Huron Times-Herald.

Curiously, his closest opponent was also a member of the church, being Brother Abram Birtch, but fifty-three days the junior of the winner.

A gold-headed ebony cane was given as a prize to the winner.

Brother Stocks was born May 23, 1821, in England. When he was fifteen years of age his family brought him to Port Stanley, Michigan, where he lived for several years, later moving to Metamora. He became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church about forty years ago, and a few years later joined the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church. Since then he has been actively engaged in the ministry until a few years ago.

He now lives with his daughter-in-law, Mrs. William Stocks, jr., and her daughter, Mary, in Armada.

Brother Stocks is a triumph of right living. He claims his temporal reward from walking the straight and narrow path and following the dictates of God.

Brother Abram Birtch, the nearest contestant, was born in Caledonia, Canada, July 15, 1821. He came to Michigan in 1844 and made his home near Lexington. He now lives with his son, Edwin, two miles north of Lexington.

For years Brother Birtch was a Methodist, but the records show his baptism into the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church on July 4, 1915.

"Early to bed and early to rise," is the reason for his long life, says Brother Birtch. He never formed bad habits, and, like his winning brother, followed the straight and narrow path. He eats fruit and vegetables and little meat, and still has the use of his own teeth.

Despite his defeat in the contest, Brother Birtch claims he is still the oldest young man in the six counties.

Farmington Saints to Renew Services

FARMINGTON, KENTUCKY, October 23.—The Saints of this branch are so few that no meetings are being held at present. Brother T. C. Kelley is expected soon to arrive to hold meetings. He has had charge of this mission for so many years it is like expecting some of the home folks back. It is hoped that when Brother Kelley arrives new interest will be awakened in the work.

Holden Stake News

HOLDEN STAKE, November 3.—The Lees Summit church reports the meeting Sunday evening the 28th as the banner meeting for some time. Elder J. Charles May, son of the pastor, Brother Roderick May, was the speaker. The sermon was well received. Brother Charles had with him his wife and Brother Pataha, a young lad from the South Sea Islands, who accompanied Apostle Clyde F. Ellis on his return. Our young brother and Brother and Sister May sang some songs in the Tahitian language.

The Marshall Saints recently had visits from the stake president and bishop. According to the action of conference, Brothers Ralph and Will Ridge were ordained to the office of priest and deacon respectively by Elders Levi Phelps and D. J. Krahl. Brother Ralph Ridge officiated in his first baptism Sunday the 28th. A Sister Dickerson, who had been attending the mission conducted by Brother Phelps, was the one baptized. This makes a total of four baptized lately.

Elder W. S. Macrae of the stake presidency was busy on church work in Sedalia Sunday and Monday, October 28 and 29. Recently Brother Glauf W. Rodger was ordained to the office of elder, by D. J. Krahl and W. S. Macrae. Brother Rodger is a son of Brother J. B. Rodger of Independence and a grandson of Brother Glauf Rodger at one time one of the foremost missionaries of the church.

The Lexington Saints were cheered by a visit from Bishop Hunt Sunday, the 28th. Much good was received from his sermons. The church gave a Halloween party Wednesday night. The work of Brother Brendel as pastor, in keeping the young people in the church, is greatly appreciated.

Elder R. B. Cook, pastor at Buckner, reports regular services at Buckner and Sibley each Sunday. He has been assisted of late by Elder Charles Green of Independence and J. J. Teeter of East Independence. Sister Gladys Teeter, assistant stake chorister, held special meetings Sunday the 28th at Sibley and Buckner. Joseph Higgins and family of Independence have located here. Brother Higgins is a priest and Sister Higgins has ability in the musical line. Their work as active Saints was appreciated when they lived at Warrensburg.

Independence

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, November 6.—Mrs. Dora Glines, general superintendent of the Department of Women, will spend the month of November in Michigan, where she will attend the Detroit district conference and visit the various locals in the district. Mrs. Glines will represent the Sunday school, Department of Recreation and Expression, and the Department of Women.

Saturday night saw the opening of the winter athletic season for the church teams. Each week for the next five weeks will probably see games of volley ball and basket ball between matched teams.

Last year more than two hundred people of Independence attended the sports. This year additional equipment has allowed for improvement in the gymnasium. The dining hall behind the Stone Church has been turned into a gymnasium and well equipped to care for the winter activities. The season will start November 13, when a picked team from the L. D. S. Athletic Association will meet one from the Kansas City Sunday School Basket Ball League in the Central High School Gymnasium, Kansas City. In the meantime, Coach Frank Curtis is putting the boys through stiff practice to get them in shape for the opening game.

The Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences is well under way with class work. Every day and night of the week sees crowds of students going and coming from classes on the Campus.

Equipment has been received for the beginning of a gymnasium on the Campus. The apparatus will be set up in available rooms in the building until other arrangements are made. Classes are now being formed for gymnasium work. A club of young men is also being organized for the purpose of fostering athletics on the Campus and placing teams in the various season's contests.

A junior athletic association has been launched among boys from ten to fifteen years of age. It consists of support from all the churches in Zion with privileges to use the Stone Church gymnasium certain times during the week.

The initial meeting was held Monday, October 29, when officers were elected. At least fifty members will be taken into the junior division of the L. D. S. Athletic Association.

The Laurel Club entertained with a Halloween costume party at the Institute. A fine time was reported.

The Seminar, an organization of men and women in Independence holding degrees, met for the first time since last summer, Friday night, November 2, at the home of Walter W. Smith. The schedule for the winter was announced.

Kansas City Stake News

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, October 3.—The speakers at Central on October 21 were Apostle Paul M. Hanson at 11 o'clock and Bishop F. B. Blair at 7.45.

On October 28, Pastor J. A. Tanner spoke both morning and evening. His effort was strictly pastoral, speaking to a well-filled house, many of the younger ones occupying the front seats by request. He admonished the young men of the priesthood to become efficient as workers in the Lord's vineyard, and not to seek excuse for carelessness in themselves. The admonition was given, he told the people, because he felt impressed to deliver such a message.

Brother W. I. Fligg, stake missionary, is holding a series of meetings at the Malvern Hill church. They began October 21 and will continue for some time.

Apostles J. Arthur Gillen and Myron A. McConley and former stake president G. E. Harrington spoke recently at appointments in the stake.

Autumn Leaves for November

One of the notable features of the Thanksgiving number of Autumn Leaves is the first of a series of stories by a writer whose characters and situations are most realistic. She writes under the name of "Kitty Karson," so she may devote her skill to those phases deserving treatment without any personal embarrassment. The story about "Paul Prescott and the prodigal son," is the first of a series, and will be followed each month by others equally good.

A popular article is one on Alaska by C. H. Rawlins, one of our members who is there searching, as are many others, for the ever-present but elusive gold.

"The 1923 General Conference," is the title of a review of the recent annual gathering of the Saints, being a convenient editorial summary of some of the important items of business.

"The title of the cross," by Mabel K. Smith; "The little white fiends," "How to develop the memory," by T. W. Williams, are some of the leading articles. The poets have an interesting collection of verse. The departments furnish much of value and inspiration.

Autumn Leaves is a magazine of inspiration which informs as well as enthuses. It is a monthly, at $1.75 a year.

Change of Bishop's Agent in Southern Nebraska

On account of Brother H. A. Higgins being appointed to the missionary field, it is necessary for us to appoint his successor. We take pleasure in announcing to the Saints of the district the appointment of Sister Blanche I. Andrews, 1105 L Street, College View, Nebraska. Sister Andrews is a capable woman and well known to the Saints of the district. We feel confident that her effort to double tithes and offerings of the district this year will receive the united support of the membership. It is surprising what we can do when we all help. The amount of tithing paid per capita in your district during 1922-1923 was $1.59. This ought easily to reach $8 or $10 per member. Other districts are going far beyond this, and this should encourage the Nebraska Saints to put forth their best effort.

Brother Higgins has been a faithful and efficient Bishop's agent and we feel confident that these same traits of service will carry over into his missionary work.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

Guy P. Levitt, 1501 Washington Avenue, Ogden, Utah.

Conference Notices

Kansas City Stake, at Central Branch, November 18 and 19, for quarterly conference. Conference will begin with the preaching service on Sunday at 11 a. m.; followed by social service at 2.30 p. m.; also young people's service at the same hour; priesthood meeting at 4.15, conducted by the stake bishopric; Department of Women meeting at the same hour; song service one half hour before the preaching service at 7.45. Business session will be on Monday night at 7.45. There is much business of importance to come before the conference, and a good attendance is requested. J. A. Tanner, president.

Pastoral Notices

To the Saints of Eastern Oklahoma; Greetings: I have been appointed again as missionary to your district for the coming conference year. The success of the work depends upon all of us. I am here to do my part. Will you help me? I shall be very glad to hear from anyone where meetings are desired. Let us make this the banner year for the Eastern Oklahoma District. Don't wait until next year some time to make an appointment for the missionary to come to your community, but let me hear from you right away, so I can make arrangements to take care of the needs of all. My field address for the year will be, Box 716, Poteau, Oklahoma.

Your brother for service, H. E. WINEGAR.

To the Saints of Southern Indiana; Greetings: Having been appointed to labor as missionary in your district, I am ready to give you my best service. Not being acquainted in your district, I would be pleased to hear from any branch president or isolated Saints who may desire meetings. May I hear from you soon?

SAINT MARYS, OHIO.

O. J. HAWN.

Requests for Prayers

A. J. Crandall, of Los Angeles, California, also his daughter Mrs. Jones, request the prayers of the Saints in behalf of their health.

Our Departed Ones

LONGDON.—Mary Longdon, wife of George Longdon, was born in England in 1846. Came to America about forty years ago, and settled near Oskaloosa, Iowa. Baptized about thirty-five years ago. Went to Mishawaka, Indiana, to live with her daughter about two years ago. Died at the home of her daughter, Anna Hall, August 14, 1923. Her husband preceded her about ten months. Funeral sermon by Elder Keafer.

DENTON.—Effie Joeania Newberry was born near Griswold, Iowa, August 29, 1883. Married Stephen A. Denton, October 15, 1902. Baptized September 15, 1910. Died at Saint Joseph, Missouri, October 4, 1923. Funeral from the Saints' church at Kingston, Missouri, in charge of Charles Wood. Sermon by A. E. McCord. Leaves husband, seven children, two brothers, and five sisters.

SCAFE.—Charles Scafe was born May 31, 1853, at Burns, Wisconsin. On November 27, 1875, he married Florence Hicks, who died January 31, 1895. On July 21, 1898, he married Gertrude La Rock. The greater part of his life was spent in Burns. The family moved to Montana in 1913, but returned to settle near Black River Falls in 1919. The greater part of his family was baptized about thirteen years ago. While Mr. Scafe never formally united with the church until July 13, 1923, his home has always been open for the benefit of the work and he is entitled to much credit for the success of the gospel in that part of the country at that time. Died at Black River Falls, Wisconsin, September 25, 1923. Funeral from the Saints' church near Black River Falls. Interment in the Burns Cemetery near Bangor. Sermon by B. C. Flint. Leaves wife, eleven children, twenty-eight grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, and two brothers.

WILLIAMS.—John Thomas Williams was born in Glamorganshire, Wales, November 10, 1850. Came to United States at the age of twenty. Located in Topeka, Kansas, in 1910. Married Sarah Ann Green, December 27, 1883. Baptized May 27, 1920. Died in Topeka, October 9, 1923. Leaves wife and one daughter, Mrs. Emma Happe. One son died in infancy. Sermon by A. P. Crooker, assisted by W. L. Chapman. Services from Penwell's Undertaking Parlors. Interment at Netawaka, Kansas, under the auspices of the Odd Fellows.

GROSSMAN.—Hugh J. Grossman, husband of Sister Grace Adair Grossman, died at Claremore, Oklahoma, August 20, 1923. He was married about three years ago. Had never united with the church but was a regular attendant of church, Religio, and Sunday school, and gave liberally of his means for the use of the church. His home was at Denoya. Sermon by W. E. Shakespeare. Interment at Quay Cemetery, near Yale, Oklahoma, under the auspices of the Odd Fellows. Leaves wife and one son who is twenty-seven months old.

GLICK.—Dennis Sylvester Glick was born October 15, 1882, at Jackson Center, Ohio. Baptized more than twenty-seven years ago. Died at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, October 16, 1923. Leaves wife, mother, two sisters, and two brothers. Funeral sermon by W. E. Reynolds. Interment in Blakey Cemetery.

Membership at Battle Lake Depleted

BATTLE LAKE, MINNESOTA, October 31.—The already small Union Branch has been still further depleted the past week. Sister Nettie Tucker, organist, left on October 22 for Independence, Missouri, where she expects to spend the winter. Her father and mother, Brother and Sister Abner Tucker, have gone to Deer Creek, about twenty miles distant, to live with their son during the winter.

Brother J. W. Peak and family also left by auto the 27th of October for Independence where Brother Peak's parents live.

The absence of these Saints from services will be very noticeable, as they were all active members of the Sunday school services.

Department of Women Represented at Celebration

MODESTO, CALIFORNIA, October 30.—A few changes have been made in this branch the past month. Brother R. D. Burch and family, consisting of his wife and son, have returned from Santa Ana, California, where they have been for the past six months. On their way by auto they had a very bad accident when their machine was completely wrecked in a collision. A passer-by at the time said, "The Lord surely was in this wreck or some one would have been killed."

The Department of Recreation and Expression expects to hold a candy pull at the church on Friday, November 2.

The Department of Women is to have a concession on Armistice Day, as Modesto is to have a two-day celebration on Sunday and Monday, October 11 and 12. Homemade pie and cake will be served with hot lunches and coffee.

The summer and fall weather has been ideal. The bean harvest is about over and most of the farmers are ready for rain.

Money Raised in Short Time for Piano

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA, October 30.—Since the meetings held here in September by Elders J. E. Vanderwood and H. E. Winegar, the Saints have taken a new hold on the work.

The Sunday school has taken new life. The ladies recognizing the need of a piano for the church, have gone to work. A sock social was held Tuesday, October 23, which was quite a success, the collection being $60. They served lunch Saturday, October 27, and cleared $27, and the business men have given $75, so quite a fund is now started toward buying the piano.

All the Saints are thankful for the good spirit that prevailed following the meetings.

Expresses Faith in Progress of Gospel

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, November 1.—Sister Ellen Adair writes that she is spending the winter at Clara, Texas, ten miles from Burkburnett, at the home of her son.

She misses the association of the Saints, especially after having stayed for some time at Washunda, where Brother A. H. Christensen has gathered about him into one fold whites and Lamanites. The spirit of unity was greatly enjoyed and all rejoiced together.

Sister Ellen was happy at the outcome of the conference, and was pleased to follow the happenings in the Conference Daily Herald.

She testifies to the truthfulness of the gospel and, although discouraged at times, feels that nothing can stop its progress.

Conservation Work

Patriarch Frederick A. Smith has been assigned the task of looking after the scattered members to the extent of his time and ability. While engaged in that work, he has corresponded with many Saints who were without the ministrations of district and branch officials. In the past the church has made very strenuous efforts to make converts. The missionaries have made great sacrifices and worked hard that they might bring people into the church; that is as it should be. Too often, however, after converts have been made they have been allowed to languish without proper attention; while in many instances they have moved to points where it is difficult to minister to their needs. The work done by Patriarch F. A. Smith and others in reaching such isolated Saints is a commendable one and brings occasional returns which encourage and warm their hearts. The following letter received from one of Brother Smith's correspondents indicates the trend of these responses:

F. A. SMITH,

Dear Sir:

I have to hand your second letter, dated September 29.

I received your first letter, but I considered it as more of a circular letter than an individual appeal to draw closer to my Maker, so, therefore, I put it on my shelf and straightway forgot it. Your second letter woke me up. I didn't think that you would give so much attention to only one little member of the many thousand who belong to the church.

I have not read my Bible as often as I used to when there was a branch near at hand, but I have given much time to pondering and thinking of the church and life hereafter. The more I think, the more apparent becomes the fact that I belong to the right church, a very unworthy member indeed. But, God granting, I will be worthy some day.

Realizing that faith without works is dead, I have tried in my feeble way to stay on the stormy sea of life in an open boat, and I am by no means discouraged with my small degree of success.

I must once again thank you for the interest that you have taken in me. It encourages one so much to think that those in charge down there do not let even one unworthy member of the church stray far from the fold.

Oblations and the Sacrament

In another column (Departmental) will be found an article from Bishop McGuire which we suggest be carefully read by branch and district presidents. It concerns itself with the question of oblations at sacrament services and the care of the poor.

It is to be hoped that the present conference year will show a marked increase in the total amount of oblations put into the general treasury from this source. At the table of grace, when our covenant is renewed and our souls strengthened by communion with Christ, we should be ready to generously give for the purposes indicated in the law.

Let branch presidents give heed to this matter and make efforts towards establishing the general custom of having generous oblations collected at sacrament services.

Behavior and Misbehavior

We say that a child misbehaves when it does something contrary to its instructions, but that is about the end of the thought on the matter. The question is, Do any of us really know what misbehavior is in the broad and all-inclusive sense? Is it more than a violation of instructions or actions contrary to the standards of society?

Before determining what constitutes misbehavior it is certainly necessary to know what behavior is. To describe behavior by summing up the acts which are attributed to it, would be an endless task, therefore we must find some general definition.

In the broadest sense, behavior is the adjustment of an organism to a situation. More specifically applied to the human race, behavior is the adjustment of the individual to his environment or every situation in which he finds himself. The adjustment means that the individual must learn to meet any given problem or situation in the best way of which he is capable. The result of his adjustment must eventually lead to life. Whatever preserves life is good. Whatever destroys life is bad.

When the child touches the hot stove he is burned. If he learns to keep his hands off the stove he is "behaving himself." If he again touches the stove he is "misbehaving." His adjustment must be for the best to preserve life, otherwise he will be eventually destroyed. Harmony must exist in all situations where the individual finds himself in order that he may live. Failure to successfully meet these situations will destroy the individual.

When the parent tells the child not to cross the street and the child does so, he is misbehaving, not because he has disobeyed instructions, but fundamentally because he might get run over if he does so. The parent instructs because the child has no other means for learning except at a great expense, perhaps at the cost of life. The parent who instructs the child without grounds, the parent who orders a child around to satisfy a whim, is the one who is misbehaving, not the child who disobeys the order.

How can a child learn to respect the counsel of a parent if the counsel is wrong? The child will learn as he grows older whether the parent is wise and truthful or not. If the parent's advice is not to be depended upon and the child learns by experience to do otherwise, that is not misbehaving.

Woe to the careless parent who advises wrongly and without grounds!

When parents understand the basis for correction, then only can rearing of children improve. After we know what it is to behave, then we can have some sort of an idea what it means to misbehave. The traditional idea that misbehavior is disobedience must be replaced by the more fundamental fact that misbehavior is the failure to do good, the failure to adjust oneself successfully to daily problems.

Patriarch John Shields writes from London, Canada, under date of October 31. He recounts visiting various branches and makes this statement in the course of his report:

"At Guelph and Fergus when I mentioned that portion of endowment had at close of conference and in the priesthood prayer meeting, even careless ones were moved to tears, and the expression was manifest to love God more and serve him better."

One of our branch correspondents writes to the HERALD:

"We have no 'lost and found department' on our record, but if some one can find a way by which we can restore the interest of some members, they will receive their reward; likewise the members who have lost interest will receive their reward also."

The HERALD has often thought of starting a "lost and found" column, but until some of the losses are found we must wait until a later date.

Changes in Radio Programs

The church Radio Station K F I X, at Independence, will broadcast programs in the future at 11 o'clock Sunday mornings, consisting of the preaching service at the Stone Church, at 7.30 Sunday evening which will be the music from the Stone Church, followed by a short sermon from the radio studio.

On Tuesday night at 9 o'clock there will be a musical program, followed by two ten-minute addresses on educational subjects, the speakers and subjects to be supplied by the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences.

The Department of Health will occupy the programs on Thursday nights at 9 o'clock. At present Doctor Leonard Harrington, head of the Department of Health, will be the speaker.

Announcement of the programs on the new schedule will be made in the HERALD as soon as programs can be arranged. This week programs will be broadcasted as announced, but the programs cannot at this time be published.

Further comment will be made in this column in the future. Watch the Radio Flashes column for your radio news.

Commission on Negro Migration

The migration of the Negro population from the South continues without abatement, notes the Christian Century in an editorial. The total number may reach two hundred thousand during the year.

A labor shortage is the result in the South, while the housing problem and other difficult situations are forced upon the North. The President has been asked to create a commission of leading Negroes to urge their fellows to remain in the South. The editorial points out that it would be more scientific, and we may add more fair, if the commission were instructed to study the condition of the Negroes and advise accordingly, whether to move or not. To be told to "stay at home" because it inconveniences others is not a "square deal."

The proposition requires scientific investigation, and a wise decision can be reached only after a careful study of existing conditions.

Why are the Negroes leaving the South? What has the North to offer in comparison with the South? Can the cause or causes which brought about this unsettled condition be located? If so, then perhaps a remedy can be found.

Help me, dear Lord, that when the sun goes down
I may be worthy to receive my crown.
Help me to make the last great sacrifice
Be worthy then to dwell in paradise.

BOOK REVIEWS

Any book reviewed in this column may be purchased from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, at the price listed, postpaid.

Noted Author Writes Unique Book

The Woman of Knockaloe, by Sir Hall Caine

In his latest book, The Woman of Knockaloe, Sir Hall Caine gives to the world the culmination of his changing views regarding world peace. As is known, Sir Hall Caine was a pacifist preceding the World War, but whatever may be said of this stand up to the time England entered the war cannot hold good during the war activities, for this pacifist turned his attention to the support of his country in the great conflict.

Upon the signing of the Armistice, Sir Hall Caine published an article which expressed the author's belief that wars were settled for all time, and peace had come into its own. Since that time, however, he has lived to see the falseness of these conclusions.

The pacifist and war propagandist has since seen deeper into the values of life. His views now expressed ring more true to the facts. His philosophy is more sound.

The Woman of Knockaloe, Mona, a dairy maid on the Isle of Man and staunch patriot, is caught in the tide of the circumstances of the war and is carried away by its force. She sends her brother to fight for his country, herself standing for all that could be expected of a patriot. She hates the Germans. Her father, brought up on the family Bible, disapproves of her attitude toward the enemy because the Bible teaches love. The brother is killed, which affects the mind of the old man. He now lies on a bed of affliction and calls upon God to curse and destroy the enemy. Scriptural reading did not bring love into his heart, and here the churches come in for a rap.

On the contrary, Mona falls in love with a German civilian prisoner, and her love for him, although she fights against it, turns to love for humanity. She and her lover see the futility and evil of war.

Mona is rejected by her own people because she loves a German. Her lover, Oscar, cannot get work in England because he is an alien enemy (although his sympathy is with England). Oscar's mother would rather see him dead than married to an English woman. Rejected, the lovers seek oblivion in death.

The appeal is for love in the hearts of mankind as the only solution for the world troubles. Satisfaction is not given in the book, however, for Mona and Oscar fail to grasp the full meaning of love. Theirs is a selfish love, which leads them to attempt to throw off the responsibility of life by seeking death.

Sir Hall Caine seems to express a hopelessness that is scarcely cheering. He has discovered the trouble with the world and hits upon a solution, but he fails to point out the means. Mona and Oscar saw the absurdity of conditions in the world, yet they, who might have helped change those conditions by living, had not the insight to do so. Was the author himself floundering in the maze of problems he found existing at the end of the book? Or was the story just a dream, as he himself suggests?

The Woman of Knockaloe is an interesting story. Written in the present tense, it has a direct, straightforward manner which compels attention. It is unique. Price $1.85.

Religious Perplexities

Religious Perplexities, by Doctor L. P. Jacks

Debate concerning religion is age old. This is also true concerning the relation of religion and science. This arises from the fact that infinite and eternal things evidently cannot be proved within finite terms. But this does not mean that it cannot be sustained beyond reasonable doubts. The system of measurement must be commensurate.

We cannot measure Betelguese with a carpenter's rule, but that has not prevented man by trigonometry from determining its enormous size, which is now estimated to be approximately 200,000,000 miles or more in diameter. To measure the distance of the stars, a new unit of measure is taken, the light year (nearly 5 trillion, 800 billion miles). So when it comes to the determination of the things of the spirit, the existence of God, our system of measurement must be adequate.

This subject is a perennial one, and the discussion by Doctor L. P. Jacks, under the title of "Religious perplexities," which is published by the George H. Doran Company this year, is highly praised in the religious press. The book retails for $1 net and can be secured through the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Doctor Jacks has been for over twenty years the editor of Hibbert's Journal and principal of Manchester College, Oxford. He states that our religious perplexities spring from the very root of life—why are we here at all? Philosophy has attempted to answer this question without entire success. It may argue the necessity of the One to differentiate as the many, but why should you and I be part of the many? He urges that a decision cannot be reached by applying the ordinary rules of logic. Faith is not something to be attached to reason nor something which drives reason out. Faith is nothing ing less than reason courageous, reason raised to its highest power. Faith means that the heroic in man has triumphed over the cowardly.

The difficulty with most defenses of religion is that they claim to address themselves to reason, but do so on a low stage of its development, to the reason of the timid and to the unheroic side of our nature, which would save our own skin, and appeal to self-interest instead of raising reason to the full-grown stature of religion. The trouble is that they would bring religion down to a level of a reason that is only learning its alphabet.

To the same class belong those more modern who would accommodate religion to the supposed demands of physical science, or equate the kingdom of heaven with social reform, or harmonize God with democracy, or with whatever else may be the popular obsession of the moment. All make concessions to the unconverted reason of carnal man, thereby sacrificing the higher logic of the spirit.

Doctor Jacks' appeal is entirely to the higher logic and reason of the head with the heart, to the spiritual nature of man, not to the reason that holds fast to the dust. His book is written in three sections. It is a small book of but ninety-two pages, so is easily read.

In the second section he emphasizes the will to disbelieve. We have heard much of the will to believe, but he emphasizes the safety of the will to disbelieve, and yet its injury if given free rein through leading to cowardice. Faith leads to better things. The will to disbelieve holds to safety. Both are needed in right proportion.

The will to disbelieve is always most active where the controversial interest reigns supreme; least active where men, in a spirit of mutual loyalty, are engaged together in the positive attempt to achieve a better-than-what-is. . . . But whenever a human interest, great or small, is detached from the roots in reality and turned into a subject for the war of minds, every assertion made by the one side is a challenge to the other to assert the contrary. The will to disbelieve is then in its glory, and finds there are no lengths to which it cannot go. The more it is hammered, the greater its vigor, the greater its ingenuity in hitting back. Meanwhile both sides are drifting further away from realities and the primary interest in dispute succumbing to the secondary interests of mere controversy.

When the truths of religion are too much defended, they are cheapened. Like the love for a man or a woman or the loyalty of our dearest friends, they resent being made mere topics for discussion. Faith owes less to its official defenders than they have been wont to claim, and religion has suffered as much from its defending friends as from its open enemies. Since religion is founded in reality, we have no need to be overanxious about its defense, since reality in the long run will take care of itself.

The final solution is offered in the life of Jesus who lived the brotherhood of man rather than taught it, who lived a life of unselfishness rather than talking about it. The kingdom of heaven must transfigure by the law of love. The religion of Jesus is noteworthy with its absence of all of the pompous concept of the arbitrary ruler, ideas which show such speaking signs of originating under the lawyer's wigs.

Religion does not decrease our perplexities, but it does bring us to live in a world worth while for heroes by showing us how to meet our perplexities. It presents the active life of heroic accomplishment. It may be with the solution of our present perplexities new ones will arise, but the heroism of religion, the innate spiritual growth, will be ample to meet each and every new perplexity, for our perplexities are never greater than the religious man or woman can adequately meet. The difficulties are not those of the schoolroom, but as in the past they are the severe trials of life, death, and separation.

Religion brings all perplexities to a focus. It raises our natures to a higher level still by liberating faith, courage, and love. It reveals the world as a place for heroes and gives us our part in life which puts our souls on metal.

It shows the cross we have to bear, but also the Christ who bears it and awakes the victorious person within us all. It does not reconcile religion with our notions of a good time, accommodate itself to our desires. Religion meets us on the plane of our strongest moments and gives us power and courage and inspiration rather than satisfaction and explanation. True religion is therefore optimistic.

The telephone company finds it worth while to encourage clear speaking by advertising. "Everybody appreciates the person who speaks distinctly and pleasantly, neither too fast nor too slow, with a clear enunciation of each word."

Gelett Burgess in "Have you an Educated Heart?" says, "Why, merely to speak distinctly is a great kindness, I consider. You never have to ask, 'What did you say?' of the Educated Heart."

It is within the power of each one of us to lessen the needless irritation caused in this already complicated world by lip laziness. All we need to do is to show as much courtesy in the way we use our lips as we expect others to show us with their ears.

DEPARTMENTAL

Oblations at Sacramental Services

By Benjamin R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop

The Bishop's office is in receipt of a letter from a branch president which contains this request: "I am writing you to obtain your consent, if possible, to keep the oblation money of this branch and care for its poor." To which he adds the suggestion that he is "sure the oblation money given on sacrament days would be increased several times over if we could use it for the poor of our branch."

This raises a question of church-wide interest, and one on which we need to exercise care lest in deciding our course of procedure, we be found out of harmony with the law of God and the orders of the General Conference.

Resolution on Oblations

On April 10, 1917, the following resolution, which had been indorsed by the Joint Council, was adopted by the conference:

That it is the opinion of the Order of Bishops that every branch should comply with the law by receiving oblation at sacrament services, as found in section 59:2; and that the amount so received should be placed with the bishopric in harmony with section 42:8.

That this resolution is not being universally complied with is evident from the fact that some solicitors are reporting "no receipts" month after month. Surely there would be a few cents gathered from the oblation at the sacramental services to be forwarded to the bishop's agent every month even though there were no tithes or offerings. Therefore, it seems that every solicitor should have something to report, at least once a month.

In some branches the doctrine had been taught that the oblation was for a poor fund to take care of the needy in that community. In other branches according to their teachings and customs the oblation was used for current expenses.

The action of the conference as quoted above decided two points. First: that the oblation is an essential part of the sacramental service; and second, that the funds so obtained are to be dispensed by the bishopric.

Caring for Poor

It might be well in this connection to endeavor to clear up any misconception which might have been placed upon the revelations to the effect that the entire responsibility of caring for the poor among us devolves upon the Presiding Bishop and his agents. That this is a part of their work we do not deny; but one of the primary functions of the Bishopric is to secure the necessary funds so that the missionaries may be sent to their fields of labor, and their families supported while they are thus occupied.

Over sixty thousand dollars of the four hundred ninety-two thousand dollars received during the last fiscal year was spent directly in caring for the poor. But this amount paid to care for the poor and needy from the general church funds by no means represents the total amount spent for this purpose by the church. Many branches throughout the church and many individual members in these branches are doubtless spending sums each year which would make a total far in excess of this sixty thousand dollars. This is being done, not for the reason, as some would have it believed, that the general church is failing to do her duty, but because the Lord has definitely pointed out the individual and branch responsibility along this line. A few citations in support of this thought might be helpful.

If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged: that it may relieve them that are widows indeed.—1 Timothy 5:16.

Therefore when thou doest thine alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth; that thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward thee openly.—Matthew 6:2-4.

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?—James 2:15, 16.

These citations give substance to the expression of Paul that herein is given the proof of our love. He says (2 Corinthians 8:24): "Wherefore show ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love, and of our boasting on your behalf."

True Discipleship

Turning to the Book of Mormon, we find King Benjamin exhorting the people by the Holy Ghost in harmony with the foregoing in the principles of true discipleship. We are there told that we are under condemnation if we withhold of our substance that which is requisite to relieve the needy. The only condition upon which we can refuse to give and remain guiltless is that "ye say in your hearts that I give not because I have not: but if I had, I would give."

He concludes his exhortation on this point in the following language: "I would that ye should impart of your substance to the poor, every man according to that which he hath, such as feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, and administering to their relief, both spiritually and temporally, according to their wants; and see that all these things are done in wisdom and order; for it is not requisite that a man should run faster than he has strength." (See Mosiah 2: 35-45.)

The branch organization provided a more efficient method for meeting the community needs along these lines than individual effort, and to prevent that condition existing where some of the poor receive more than their share at the expense of others equally as needy. However, as is set forth in most of that which I have quoted, there is a personal responsibility for which each of us must give account, even though the branch machinery should fail.

Duty of Officers Outlined

"That all these things are done in wisdom and order" indicates that except in emergency cases where immediate relief is needed the usual course would be to work through the representative of this department in cooperation with the branch or stake officers. This may safeguard your benevolences and also make possible more effective remedial agencies.

We trust that no one will be deceived in the thought that the inefficiency of a branch official will be an acceptable plea in justification of their neglect of the needy in the day of final accounting, for as we are admonished in Galatians 6: 10: "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith."

Surely this convincingly establishes the fact that the oblations and the tithing coming into the general church treasury is not designed to bear the entire burden of caring for the poor in the church.

While our chief concern should be to minister to those of the household of faith, yet, as followers of our blessed Lord, our compassion should be extended to all mankind. We concur in the exhortation expressed by the Apostle Paul (Hebrews 13: 1, 2): "Let brotherly love continue. Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." Let us increase our oblation offering.

Recently some one paid $750 for the kaiser's memos, and the suggestion is made that if a genuine autobiography of William Shakespeare were found it could be sold for millions, yet Shakespeare is dead and the kaiser not feeling very well, according to Thomas L. Masson in the Christian Century. But God is alive. Shakespeare if alive could hardly add greatly to that which he has already written to make it more valuable to us, but God is a living personality, the source of all inspiration, and the author of the Bible.

Home Building

PART II

[In this second article of the series on home building, Mr. Etzenhouser, a specialist in sociology, gives us the benefit of his views on the subject of "Establishing a home." The article is extremely interesting and throws much light on an intimate subject. It is well worth reading separately or in connection with class work or family discussion, as outlined in the course of study following each article.]

Establishing a Home

By Merrill A. Etzenhouser

In the minds of most people the term home carries with it the idea of a house, and it is perhaps well that it is so, for most people are able to think only in concrete terms rather than abstract ideas. Therefore the kind of a house in which people live is an important factor in developing their concept of a home. A "home," however, is more than brick and mortar. A real home is the place where harmonious relationships exist between every member of the family—harmonious because each individual has a definite place, and the rights of each are recognized. This harmony should exist from the viewpoint of morals, spiritually and intellectuality.

The Marriage Institution

Marriage in primitive times was a social custom in which homes were established in the interests of the group, and frequently the young man and young woman had no part in choosing each other. The modern idea is just the reverse, and the contracting parties are the only ones concerned. Marriage therefore becomes an individual matter or a matter of private concern. This individualistic attitude towards marriage is largely responsible for our enormous increase in divorces during the twentieth century. It is thought to be no one's business except the contracting parties', and if they do not agree, they assume the right to disagree. Thus the home is disrupted and frequently the child is the chief sufferer.

Love Is Basis for Marriage

This frequent separation is due largely to a lack of sufficient acquaintanceship before marriage. A contract which is to be entered into "until death do us part" should only be consummated after a long period of observation and investigation upon the part of both contracting parties. The basis for the establishing of a home should of course be love, but in many instances passing infatuation is mistaken for genuine love and because it is only infatuation, it soon ceases to be of sufficient cohesive force to keep the man and woman together. Love is a relative term and is abstract, but there are some underlying elements which should be present if love exists.

Perhaps the chief of these elements would be respect. No person can long love another for whom he has no respect.

Confidence must be ever present if love is to grow. Fidelity must be manifest as a chief characteristic. Integrity and loyalty to each other must abide unquestionably.

Biological Fitness

Perhaps the next matter of importance is biological fitness. What kind of heredity is in the germ plasm of the young man and the young woman to be passed on to their children? What are the conditions of health of the parents, the aunts, and uncles? What is the mental history of the forebears and close relatives on both sides? Are the young man and young woman free from venereal disease? Are there any insane or criminals among them? The children of the marriage will be the biological products that both lines of heredity supply. And any of the strong points or weak points in both branches may be manifested in the offspring. Every child has a right to a good physical and mental inheritance, and this can only be secured by being assured that these qualities are inherent in the parentage. Many abnormalities manifested in the child which are charged to sickness or accident by the parents should more properly be charged to the heredity.

Economic Fitness

Another matter of importance is economic fitness. Is the young man capable of earning a living? Is he also capable of spending wisely? Is the young woman trained in household management, from which we get the term economics? Is she capable of getting one dollar's worth of value for every dollar expended? There is an old saying that a woman can throw out more from the back door with a teaspoon than a man can bring in the front door with a scoop shovel. This may be an exaggerated statement, yet in many instances of poverty, the cause is not lack of earning capacity, but a lack of spending ability.

Emancipation Necessary

Many children are so tied to their mother's apron strings that they are never able entirely to sever that bond, and hence are never able to establish a new and independent home. This is frequently true of the young man. He is ill at ease if not under his mother's roof every night. However, for biological reasons, this is more frequently true of the young woman. Many homes are ruined because the young woman cannot emancipate herself from her mother, and not only live in bondage herself, but keeps the whole family in bondage to her parents. This is frequently manifested in the establishment of a family when they do not attempt to establish a home of their own, but prefer to remain with the parents. This almost always leads to trouble, as it is only occasionally that we find both husband and wife in bondage to the same set of parents. The "in-law" rebels, and serious trouble ensues. No young man or young woman should seriously consider marriage unless they feel that they can cut loose entirely from the old moorings and launch out and establish a new and independent home—dependent from their parents.

Ideals and Aspirations

To succeed in family life, the greatest possible number of elements should be held in common by husband and wife. Their hopes and ambitions should be alike; their ideals should be similar. They should aspire to the same goal. It is chiefly for this reason that different races are discouraged in marrying. Their ideals and aspirations are so different that they cannot work together to a common end, and harmony cannot prevail. This is also true with reference to the same religion. Other things being equal, a Methodist should marry a Methodist, and a Latter Day Saint should marry a Latter Day Saint. That is likely the basis for the statement in the Doctrine and Covenants that where possible one should marry one already in the church. Frequently this does not prove an objection, but occasionally we find a difference of religion the basis for family difficulties which may even become so aggravated that separation and divorce follow. It would seem that the young man and young woman should have common hopes, ideals, religion, and race, and as many common past experiences as may be possible. Usually a young man and young woman who are both raised either in the city or the country will succeed better than where their past experiences have been entirely different. This would apply to economic and social conditions as well. A poor man is not likely to be happy long with a wealthy young woman; but even less happy is a wealthy young woman reared in luxury who has to adapt herself to a more menial and less prosperous home.

Marriage Is a Sacrament

These qualifications can only be discovered by long acquaintanceship; therefore, a reasonable period of courtship should precede marriage. Marriage should be a sacrament, and the admonition in the Doctrine and Covenants that the ceremony should be performed before the congregation of the church should be adhered to. For this contract which is calculated to last for life should have thrown around it all the safeguards that would make for permanence. A public avowal is more binding than a private agreement. It is becoming quite the custom now for young men and young women to present themselves to the justice of the peace, and in the presence of only one or two, the ritual is performed. And frequently these witnesses are entire strangers and hence their witnessing is not effective on the contracting parties.

Marriage Is Individualistic and Socialistic

Trial marriages have been advocated in the past, and while they have never received public sanction, we do virtually have them in practice, as is evidenced by the fact that of late it is no uncommon thing to hear of a man or woman having four or five companions, all of whom are living. We believe that it would not be wise to revert to the primitive ideal that marriage is purely social in its aspect; but we do believe that the present individualistic attitude, unless altered, will eventually lead to the dissolution of the family. When the marriage is consummated, there are only two individuals involved, but in the course of a short period of time, there are others who are involved by becoming members of that family, and if separation ensues, and remarriage takes place upon the part of the father and the mother, we frequently have as many as four sets of children involved in the readjustments.

Home is Foundation of Zion

The foundation of Zion is the home, and the chief asset is the child. Marriage is the ordinance by which the home is established, therefore marriage becomes of chief importance in establishing the home. Right marriages make right homes; right homes make right children; right children make right civilization, or Zion.

Sociologically a childless home is a failure. The chief function of the family is reproduction, and the chief stabilizer of the home is the child. The child is the one and only fixed thing in the home, and it is around the interests and development of the child that the activities of the home are centered. From the birth of the child, the normal parents begin thinking of ways and means for its development and for its education, far-seeing parents planning as far as sending the child through the university. This makes for economic cooperation and accumulation.

The moral needs of the child are considered from its very infancy, and the parents conduct themselves in a way that will furnish a suitable example for the child. This makes for moral development on the part of the entire family. In the same way, the religious needs of the child are considered, and this affects also the religious life of the entire family.

The intelligence of the child is manifested at a very early date and the normal father and mother will qualify themselves to meet the demands of increasing mental capacity of the child. The matter of discipline, even, becomes interactive. In order that the discipline of the child may be effective, the parents bring themselves into harmony with their own instructions, thus the child in an indirect way disciplines the parents.

Home Greatest Influence

The family is not only a biological institution for reproduction, it is much more than that. It is a social institution for education and training. It is life's chiefest school. Up to the age of twenty-one, the child spends seventy per cent of his time in the home, therefore seven tenths of the concepts of the adult may be attributed to the home from which he came.

Perhaps the first thing of importance that the child learns in the home is obedience, and if obedience is not learned in the home, it will be learned at the expense of the state. For in our highly socialized life, obedience becomes imperative, and is demanded by the state. Obedience is a habit and should be cultivated early.

The recognition of authority also is acquired in the home, and the child who does not learn to recognize authority from the mother and the father in the home will likely run counter to the authority of law, and a recognition of this authority will be forced upon him by the state. For sooner or later recognition of authority must be manifested else the individual is a criminal all during his life.

Loyalty is one of the chief attributes of a well-organized home and there is no betrayal of family secrets or confidences by a loyal member of the family. He guards the secrets of the family as he would guard the secrets of his own life. He upholds the family. Also he would uphold the church at a later age and the state, and if properly trained, will be found defending the nation in times of need.

Service is learned very early in a well-directed home, and the child, seeing the parents continually serving, becomes imbibed with the same spirit, and is found rendering little services to other members of the family. This service is freely given in the case of the child, and the only pay required is an appreciation. Service that is learned in the home will be carried over to the church and the state, and the individual thus acquiring it will be found serving his fellow men in whatever sphere he may be found.

Altruism is fostered in the life of the individual from the very beginning when he reaches forth and takes for himself. He may be taught to appropriate everything in sight, or he may be taught to have regard for others. Selfishness according to the physical laws of nature is perhaps the normal reaction, but altruism may be so implanted by the parents that selfishness is largely eliminated. Altruism in the home becomes one of the chief requirements, and if the future home of the individual is to be happy, then it is important that the child should learn altruism in the home in which he is reared.

Religious Ideals

Religion is usually inherited, or acquired very early. There are a few converts to religion, but usually people remain attached to the faith of their fathers, or the religion that is taught in the home. A Catholic official has said: "Give me a child until he is eight years old, and he will never leave the church." This is not true in all cases, but is usually so. One of the chief responsibilities of the home, then, is to indoctrinate thoroughly and well the religious ideals. If the home is the foundation of Zion, and the child is the chief asset, then the chief concern in realizing our social ideals should be the establishment of the right kind of homes, which will produce the right kind of children, and the right kind of children, with the help of God, will establish Zion.

Michaelangelo

A lecture by Frederick M. Smith before the Kansas City Fine Arts Institute, January 25, 1923.

To me before I visited Italy, particularly Florence and Rome, Michaelangelo existed as a name in history, but since that visit his name conjures up visions of a man of deep passions, tremendous powers, astonishing versatility, transcending genius, and an idealism which sought and successfully found expression in marble, in buildings, in pigment, and in literature. And yet our joy in his success as artist is dimmed by memory of the disappointments to which he was doomed by events of fate and the designs of envious rivals for papal attention and favor. In other words, Michaelangelo as a shadowy form in history has for me been changed by that visit into the memory of a man who has left the indelible impress of his artistic genius upon sculpture, architecture, and painting; the transformation being wrought by seeing four of his creations—the "Dome," "Moses," "David," and "The holy family."

The use of the word memory which I have made here might be questioned, yet when one has stood near those great masterpieces and has experienced the emotions which are aroused by the genius of their creation, one can hardly escape the impression that he has been in the presence of the man who formed them.

As a layman it would be unwise for me to attempt a talk on the art of Michaelangelo, but as a layman profoundly impressed by his masterpieces and the history of his stormy life, there may be a lesson worthy of the hour.

His Birth

Born of good family in 1475, his birth brought him into existence at a period which witnessed the decay of Italian moral, political, and artistic life; yet amidst such untoward influences and surroundings unfavorable to the development of ideals, he stands out a figure so commanding, so towering, that he has been likened to "a mighty rock left by the ebbing tide in the debacle of society of his time," the greatest figure of the renaissance, mournful but superb in his isolation.

Doubtless gentle of soul and kindly of heart he was yet controlled by passions so strong and independence so pronounced, so fearless in criticism and denunciation of what jarred in his great soul or displeased his fancy, so void of the graciousness and tact which rather than genius or ability usually measures popularity, he walked among men honored for his ideals, respected for his genius, but not loved. His devotion was to his art, and this very singleness of devotion made him appear cold.

The stormy character of his personality early brought him conflict and threw him upon his own resources. At sixteen he quarreled with the master who was teaching him art and left his employ, falling back on his own resources. He soon attracted the attention of Leonardo de Medici, and was by that great patron of art taken into the family at the palace, where surrounded by scholars versed in Greek art, sculpture, architecture, and the things which made Rome great, he passed through an experience which left an indelible stamp upon his subsequent life.

Influences on His Life

However high Lorenzo the Magnificent may have kept the intellectual standard of the life at the palace, the moral tone was low, and fortunately for Michaelangelo not long after his entrance into the home of Lorenzo, Savonarola began his powerful preaching at San Marco and later from the Duomo; for among the thousands who flocked to hear the pious and eloquent reformer, Michaelangelo was doubtless frequently numbered. There was much in the soul and character of the great preacher to which the passionate Michaelangelo responded, and the appeal of the monk for righteousness and adherence to principle found lasting lodgment in the heart of the great artist. And Savonarola's stand for high morals corrected and balanced the pagan learning at the home of Lorenzo. The intimate contact with these two great but opposite characters left Michaelangelo's life a conflict between gratitude towards the one and devotion to the idealism of the other in standing for public and private purity to which the great soul of the artist so intensely responded. His life was stormy.

On the death of Lorenzo, Michaelangelo fled to Bologna where he quietly worked at his art, but returned to Florence five years later. It was just following his return to Florence that he produced his great "David." The story of the misshapen block of marble falling to the young sculptor and his great genius seeing in it a masterpiece, is well known.

Called by the Pope

In 1505 he was called to Rome by Pope Julius II, called Julius the Great, the great potentate with whose life that of Michaelangelo was so intimately connected from that time. This call of Pope Julius for the artist to come to Rome and devote his talents to the church was the beginning of the career of the artist and at the same time the beginning of his sorrows. He was commissioned to build the great mausoleum to commemorate the reign of Julius. It was gigantic, and made a tremendous appeal to the artist as an outlet for his genius. Cartoons of the tomb by Michaelangelo show it was to have contained forty-nine figures, twelve of which were heroic in size. The commission was important not alone because it gave Michaelangelo opportunity to display his skill as sculptor, but Bramante was assigned the task of enlarging Saint Peter's to contain the mausoleum.

Michaelangelo's joy at being assigned the task must have been great, as evidenced by the energy with which he began the work. But of the forty-nine figures included in the original plan only seven were begun, only two completed, "The bound slave," and "Moses," the former now in Paris, the latter in Rome.

"The bound slave" has always been somewhat of an enigma, and even the name it now goes by is uncertain in its application. Does it depict something in Michaelangelo's life, something closely connected with the commission to build the chapel? Would the completed set have shown another figure, the companion piece to the one now in the Louvre, which would show art genius freed? We do know that all his life the great sculptor suffered from the jealousy and manipulations of rivals and those whose smallness of soul even when at times coupled with brilliant genius would not permit Michaelangelo to work at his chosen field of art unhampered and untrammelled. Even while working on the figure for the great tomb, the work of his rivals and those envious of the pope's favor, so great was the pressure from these sources that he fled to Florence, and returned to Rome only on the importuning of his friends and even the government of Florence to avoid serious trouble. In 1508 he returned to Rome and was assigned the task of painting the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel, and for four years he labored prodigiously in producing this glorious work. The story of these four years is interesting, revealing not alone his versatility in art, but his resourcefulness as engineer, practical worker, and circumventor of jealous rivals.

"Last Judgment"

In 1533 by Paul III he was given the commission for the "last judgment" in the Sistine Chapel, and in 1534 he was made chief architect, painter, and sculptor of the holy see.

On my visit to Rome one of the very first places visited was Saint Peter's, and while first impressions there are likely to prove somewhat of a disappointment, one is awed by its gigantic proportions; yet its beauty and grandeur grow on one, and our first visit was followed by others. And were I to visit Rome again, one of the first trips would be to Saint Peter's, the largest church in existence. Like many other large structures, especially churches, it does not as it stands to-day represent the materialization of the plan or ideas of any one person, for Bramante's plan was changed by his successors; but of one thing you may be sure, anyone who visits the great basilica will scarcely fail to be impressed with its crowning glory, the Dome. And so even though there is much to see in Rome, we would come back from the Capitolina, the Palatina, to see the Dome.

"Moses"

But before speaking further of the Dome of Saint Peter's, let me tell of a visit to another Saint Peter's—San Pietro in Vincoli to see "Moses," and before that marble my surrender to Michaelangelo was complete. A layman to whom sculpture was a strange subject except in a general way, yet in the presence of that cold marble vivified by the genius of the great chisel, I stood awed! Why? I could not then tell. Only after introspection could I tell. An innate consciousness perhaps that I stood before the world's masterpiece; but more probably because without knowing how or why, the idea which drove Michaelangelo's chisel was so successfully and completely presented that I stood awed before that marvelous presentation of great personal dynamic and power ready to explode into activity. What would he do? The very essence of art, is it not? How was it done? Let artists tell you. Few if any figures of sculpture have been more carefully or completely criticized, and we have been told how rule-of-thumb dimensions have been distorted, and disregard to anatomical exactitude shown, yet every detail is perfect in its execution. The one great fact stands out; the idea of tremendous personal force is never missed by the observer, and even the most casual are affected.

Work Impressive

Critically analyzed the marble shows change of proportions, e. g., the small head, the large eyes, but the change was made by the artist to present the great central idea of the work; and no observer fails to be impressed.

Does "Moses" represent Michaelangelo's idea of the personality of Julius II? It may be so; but the frequency with which Biblical characters were chosen as objects of his chisel rather inclines one to the opinion that the Moses Saint Peter in chains depicts the Moses of the Exodus as the artist saw him. Great personal force may have been a characteristic of Julius; it certainly was of Moses. In any event, we can quite agree with one who said, "There is in all the world no statue, no work of art like the Moses."

It may be safely said, as asserted by some, that in the figures of Michaelangelo idealism never fails; and yet you will see statements that "David" represents nothing more than a perfect specimen of sculpture with careful and wonderful regard of an anatomical exactitude—a statue executed simply to show mastery of sculpture.

I can scarcely believe that. For when in Florence, I stood before that gigantic figure, and looked upon it from every angle, I again felt swayed by emotions. Was it only the consciousness of being in the presence of a masterpiece? Or was it the associated memory of the story of its creation—the crooked marble block rejected by other than noted sculptors falling to the lot of Michaelangelo who saw in it David awaiting the attack of Goliath. The secret of Michaelangelo's power to depict ideas in marble was his skillful deviation from the normal, most wonderfully exemplified in Moses; yet to represent a perfect athlete in the attitude of awaiting an attack, scarcely needs such deviation. And unless an exception is made of "David," the figures from Michaelangelo's chisel do not lay emphasis upon the figures as such but suggest something more: a mood, a great sorrow, a deep passion, etc. Does "David" reveal anything more than a boy throwing a stone? Was it completed merely as a test of the sculptor's skill?

"David"

It was in Florence that I saw "David," among a number of marbles of Michaelangelo finished and unfinished: it was also in Florence that I saw "The holy family," a painting by Michaelangelo much criticized by artists as: a sculpture in the flat; but it impresses upon the beholder the ideas of the painter, and its fine detail and grouping shows the hand of a master. I sat long before it, caught by its spell.

Let us return to the Dome; for one in Rome finds a strong inclination to revisit this masterpiece of architecture. Saint Peter's was designed by Bramante, a skillful architect of pure yet subtle style; and had his genius been permitted to guide its construction to completion it would doubtless have stood to-day "the most beautiful classic edifice in the world." But faults of scale and exaggeration were committed by others and the great plan spoiled by lesser men who succeeded him. From the wreck of Bramante's plan Michaelangelo attempted to raise a worthy monument; and while he could not eliminate entirely the coarse vulgarity Saint Peter's now shows, yet he succeeded in modifying them in some degree, and on the great building he placed its crowning glory, the great Dome. Not from the front is its full majesty seen, for there it is partially hidden; but envisaged from the rear where it can be well seen, it rises a graceful yet massive and titanic monument to the genius of Michaelangelo both as a designer and builder. Its beauty fixes the attention and fires the imagination. From a distance, whether seen from the Alban Hills, the slopes of Tivoli, or the Palitina, the great crowning glory of Saint Peters seems to float majestically across the reaches of the background, withdrawn and remote, like the soul of him who raided it.

Tomb of Michaelangelo

The storm-wracked body of the intrepid artist lies in a tomb in the church at Florence which becomes a mecca for all lovers of this isolated genius, and now as on the day of his interment his grave is visited by pauper, prelate, and prince to do homage to his greatness.

And with not a little emotion did I contemplate the stone bust surmounting the tomb—the work of a friend. Behind the calm face of that image are concealed the passions, the stormy devotion to ideals, but in the marbles, complete and partly finished scattered through Rome, Florence, and even as far as Paris are reflected the ideals his vigorous arm and skillful chisel so successfully passed on to contemporaries and succeeding generations; while in the galleries of Europe and on the marvelous ceiling and walls of the peerless Sistine Chapel are the beautiful pigment presentation of his soul's conceptions.

Oh, how we need a Michaelangelo to-day, in art, in literature, in politics, in religion. To-day literature is a lost art, for writers produce for food and raiment not from the impulses of deep thinking, and conceal their paucity of ideas beneath modernity of style. Artists daub for money and popularity, and bewilder with wildness of style. Even preachers preach for hire, to amuse, not to disseminate deep religious motives and stir to righteous living and action. We work at our jobs, not indulge our professions. The rich subsidize our artists, who paint to sell, and publishers pander to the purse. What has not been commercialized? And whither are we going?

Michaelangelo has deeply affected my own life. I value the fearless devotion to ideals which forbade him working for any other purpose and which lifted him above the ordinary. It was kin to a Lincoln refusing to accept a case except in the interests of justice, an Emerson wielding a pen unattracted by emoluments, a Garibaldi serving his people unspurred by salary, a Savonarola denouncing licentiousness and sin though his denunciations led to the pyre.

We need a purification of art and literature, a cleansing of politics, a restoration of religion as a social dynamic and motivation. We need social justice promoted by men and women consecrated to the service of humanity. We need Michaelangelos in other realms than art.

Two Years Among the Omahas

By P. R. Burton

We have finished our two years among these strange people and we thought you would like to know of our work and how we have been able to teach them the gospel. The Omahas are a people with whom it is very hard to get acquainted, for their past experience has taught them to be careful how they make friends. At first our work was very slow, and many times we were very much discouraged, but we felt that God had sent us to do this work so we had faith to continue, and in time we were rewarded for that faith.

Preaching to the Indian

Preaching among the Indians is different from preaching to the white people. At first we went among them and administered to their sick and buried their dead. Sometimes we went and helped them dig the grave, then we would go back to the home and often sit on the ground for two hours or longer while they were preparing the feast. We could not talk the language or even understand it, so you see we were often lonesome even with many people around. After the feast we would preach the funeral sermon and then drive to the grave and finish the services. We did this for several months before we had altogether gained the confidence of these people. But in time the example we tried to live before them bore fruit and then it was easy to reach them.

Indian Is Religious

The Omaha Indian is naturally religious, for in the old customs he was taught that there was only one way, that there was only one God. He was taught that God had a Son and that some day he would come to the earth and raise the dead and dwell here on the earth with the Indian people. They believed that water was holy and that water was a sacrament. And even to-day they always pass the water around to everyone before they eat, believing that the water cleanses them and makes them pure and fit in the sight of God to take food. Our first work was to find the points of contact, and was where experiences of childhood among the Indians came in very handy.

Conduct of Meetings

Perhaps you would be interested in knowing just how we conduct an Indian meeting. The meeting is announced a few days ahead, and on the date we go to the house in time for supper. Many of the friends and neighbors will be there also, but every one is welcome to eat at an Indian's table. After supper we get the lantern ready and show a few pictures on the life of Christ. The Indians are very fond of religious pictures. We talk about the pictures and explain all we know about them. Then we call on one of the Indians to offer the opening prayer, and strange to say they are all willing to do this small service. Then we ask the interpreter to stand up and explain in the Indian language what we say in English. Charts are usually used, and of these the Indians are very fond of the Curtis two-way chart. This is hung across one end of the room. Then we may preach on any subject that is in harmony with the chart. Perhaps we will talk an hour, after which the Indians will talk to one another and ask questions. Then they may request another sermon on some other subject. These meetings often last till midnight and sometimes much later. (Some of our long-winded preachers would get all the preaching they wanted at an Indian meeting.) Everyone sits cross-legged on the floor as there is no furniture in the room, this having been moved out to make room for the visitors. At the close of a meeting of this kind I have written down as high as twenty-five names for baptism. We have held many meetings of this kind on the reservation.

Teach by Parables

Indians teach their young by using parables. Following is an example of a story sometimes told the young men. One time a strange bird was seen in the woods near the village, and the men of the tribe said, "That must be a good bird, for he is very beautiful and very proud." But the next day a hunter was going through the woods and he saw the strange bird sitting on a limb with an owl. When the hunter returned to the village he called the men of the tribe together and said, "That strange bird is a foolish, silly, and a bad bird."

"How do you know?" asked the tribesmen.

The hunter answered and said, "This morning I saw him sitting on a limb with an owl, and we all know that an owl is foolish and silly by day and very bad by night."

So, young men, no matter how handsome and proud you are, if you don't want to be classed with an owl, don't sit on the same limb.

This is a sample of the stories told by the Indians to their young folks. This might be good advice for some of our white boys.

Many Indians Baptized

The Lord has been good to us in our work here and has blessed us in many ways. We have baptized 389 people in the past two years, and two thirds of them have been Indians. It causes us to rejoice to think that these good, honest people have been brought to the knowledge of the gospel and know who their forefathers were and that they had this same gospel also. An Indian brother said to me one day, "I am glad you came here and brought this gospel to us, for now we know who we are. No church could tell us till you came, and we are glad."

Another one said, "At first we were afraid, for we thought your church was like all the rest and had no place for us Indians, but now we are glad that we have a church of our own like the one our fathers had a long time ago."

One Sunday I baptized twenty-seven at the Black-bird Lodge and after the confirmation there were fifteen or eighteen children to bless. The elders were blessing these children and we thought we were through, when out of the crowd walked two little boys about three and four years of age, sons of Jefferson Knows the Country. They knelt down in front of Brothers Elliott and Case for their blessing. It was a very beautiful sight, and there were few dry eyes, for it seemed to melt the hearts of everyone there. Out of doors with a canopy of God's heavens for a roof, the sons and daughters of Laman were coming into their own. It was a day of rejoicing. Hundreds of them have been brought into the church, but the work is only started, for these people must be taught the temporal law. They must have their stewardships and take their part in the redemption of Zion. Strange to say, they are working that way very fast.

Our part in the work has been finished for a while and we are to labor among the whites for the next year. Brother and Sister Creel have been sent to labor among them and teach them the temporal things in the gospel. I am sure they will be a success and that the Indians will come to love them as they have us.

Gifts Acceptable

Many of the good Saints have sent clothing to the mission for the poor and needy. We want to thank each one and we take this method of letting you know that the clothing was received and that the Indians were very thankful to get it. Much of this work fell on Sister Burton, as her work was chiefly among the women. At first it was quite hard to get them to talk and take a part in the social welfare and Women's Department.

We are very proud of the Indian Saints, and we white Saints could learn many good things from them. They are very quiet in church and have great respect for their places of worship. I wish every Saint in the church could attend one Indian service, and if such were the case one would have more respect for the Indian as a man and a member of the church.

The Indians have their part in the redemption of Zion, and it is a very important one, too. They must be converted and taught the fullness of the gospel or we have not done our part as a church. They are very anxious to learn, and I only wish we had more missionaries to send among them. God wants them to come into their own, and he has commissioned us with the duty of fulfilling the promise he made to Lehi. This can only be done by each member paying his tithing and putting more money into the hands of the Bishop so that more missionaries can be sent out. Saints, this is our privilege, and if we do it God will surely bless us. I hope I will never hear a Saint say, "I wish we had more missionaries in the field," and at the same time be owing God a tenth of all he possesses. Some way it does not ring true. I am glad to see the Saints taking a greater interest in the temporal law of the church and I feel sure that many will pay the Lord his part this year.

Large Indian Membership

We have over three hundred members among the Omahas; three elders, one priest, two teachers, and one deacon. These members are in three branches, Winnebago, Walthill, and Decatur. Decatur has far the most members. We have an Indian mission on the reservation between Macy and Decatur, so the members are all well taken care of. President F. M. Smith, Apostles Roy Budd and John F. Garver paid us a visit just after General Conference. Brother Garver and I visited a peyote meeting in the morning very early and had breakfast with them. This was his first experience in a tepee. He made a splendid talk that was well received by the Indians.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The Future of Chemistry

"The man who put into words some of the things he believes chemistry will do, would seem a fit subject for an insane asylum," said Mr. Irenée du Pont, president of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, in an interview recently.

Nevertheless, according to the Literary Digest, Mr. du Pont proceeded to enumerate some of these possibilities. Among other things, he mentioned synthetic food, artificial wool, the conquest of disease, the abolition of sleep, storage of solar heat, heatless light, cheap fuel, and greatly prolonged mental and physical vigor.

Now any one of these things would add immeasurably to the store of human knowledge and conserve energy that is now being wasted. But greatest among these (it seems to us common people, especially at this time) is the promise of cheap fuel. Mr. du Pont, however, disagrees with us on this point, for in answer to the question, What is the greatest thing chemistry could do for humanity as a whole? he answered, "There is no 'greatest' thing, for the reason that there are a number of great things which chemistry can and will do which are not comparable."

Speaking of lengthening the life of the human race which may be made possible he continued:

"Thus, a study of the ductless glands will likely lead to the identification of some 'reagent' which, properly supplied to the human system, will maintain the vigor of youth far beyond three-score-years-and-ten. This does not refer only to sexual vigor, but to the power—more important to maintain—which enables a young man to work longer hours and withstand fatigue which cannot be withstood by men who have reached their mental prime of life.

"I think it is likely that material will be found which, taken into the human system, will accomplish the results of eight hours' sleep. This will change the active existence of a man from sixteen hours a day to twenty-four hours a day and, incidentally, make extraordinary changes in our everyday life.

"Antidotes or methods of suppression will be found for every disease. We have already gone so far in this direction that no one can question the matter of complete dominance over disease at some day in the future.

"A balanced ration will be evolved, possibly largely synthetic, which will eliminate all digestive disturbances, and at the same time make our minds and bodies more efficient to an extent almost beyond belief. At that time humanity will look back on the eating of promiscuous viands in very much the way that we look back on the drunken debauches of the Middle Ages.

When asked if cheaper fuel were possible, Mr. du Pont said:

"Probably not. That result probably will be obtained by the physicist rather than the chemist, although chemistry will be involved. We shall have to obtain our supply of heat from the sun when all the oil and coal are burned. It is only a matter of finding a vehicle which will absorb the heat from sunlight and carry it to the point of consumption. If that vehicle is a cheap storage battery which will be charged by means of a device for converting radiant energy from the sun into electric current, you can classify it as an electrical apparatus, but likely the actual vehicle, like a storage battery, will depend on chemical action."

I shall not tell you more, as he may want to write this up for the Ensign. Brother Smith preached a wonderful sermon for the Saints at Walthill at eleven o'clock.

We will soon be among the people of our new mission and hope to do the Master's work wherever we go.

There goes our fond hopes for a warm and cheap winter, but perhaps the production of cold light will help some in the middle of July. Mr. du Pont was more than hopeful on this point, for he stated:

"Chemistry can already produce cold light, but not cheaply. If that is the solution of the lighting problem, it certainly can be done."

The interview with this leading scientific man pointed to many of the remarkable discoveries which may come in the near future. How near depends greatly upon the demands, but certainly in light of the recent remarkable inventions and discoveries, nothing seems impossible to us. At least, we have learned to place faith far ahead of our early expectations. God's world is most wonderful!

The Zionist Movement

The only way to be a Zionist "is to be in Zion" declared Israel Zangwill, noted Jewish scholar and author, in a recent address to the American Jewish Congress. He scored the British Government and the Zionist leaders for their policies in regard to Palestine. Under present conditions, he declared, when land in Palestine must be bought by the square yard against rising prices, the Jews cannot and will not return to Zion.

Mr. Zangwill thinks little can be done under the League of Nations, which he characterizes as the "League of Damna-tions," since its members are pledged to maintain existing territories without regard to racial differences and national expansions.

He goes on to say, as quoted in the Literary Digest, that:

"In the last analysis the British coercion in Palestine must take the form of bombs and poison gas and must be used to protect Jewish immigration against the Arabs, and equally against Jewish immigration to protect England from an Arab outbreak in a Pan-Arabic region. Zionism can therefore only rely upon as much of England's might as suits the policy of England, and since the Zionist leaders are ready to accept any conditions, however humiliating and however impracticable, and since Britain is represented by a too tactful Jewish governor, it is clear that only a minimum of might will be at the disposal of the Jewish national home, and that mainly in the British interest. That interest is now nakedly proclaimed by a shoal of writers and statesmen as the erection of a barrier state for the defense of the Suez Canal."

Mr. Zangwill believes the Jews are still far from their national home and sees no remedy as long as the present Zionist leaders maintain their policy of perpetual concession.

In opposition to the view taken by this prominent Jewish man, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise stated in an address on the following day that the Zionist's hopes for a common home were nearer to-day than ever. He goes on to say:

"No one claims that the present leadership of the movement has been without error. But no one may deny that it has wrought immortal service to the Jewish people in winning from the British Government not only the Balfour Declaration as a charter, but that security of Jewish life and development in Palestine as a Jewish homeland which comes with the British mandate from the League of Nations, and from our mistakable faith and dependence in the honor and good will of the British people.

"Far from giving up Palestine, we are resolved to go forward more vigorously and unitedly than ever before. The Jewish people will be just to the Arabs, by the side of whom the Jewish builders of Palestine are to live in understanding and amity."

Bibliography on Juvenile Court Movement

The rapid growth of the juvenile court movement both here and abroad is indicated in the scope of the bibliography which has been compiled on the subject by the United States Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau.

Under the title "List of References on Juvenile Courts and Probation in the United States, and Selected List of Foreign References" the bureau report, which will be issued in the near future, covers thoroughly this whole field. The bibliography is divided into the following classifications: general (chiefly books and monographs); periodical literature; publications of the Children's Bureau; publications of State Departments and commissions and other official reports; conference proceedings; published annual reports of courts hearing children's cases.

References from foreign sources include publications of 15 countries—Argentina, Australia, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Norway, Russia, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland.

Nearly all the important references are annotated with brief descriptive comments indicating the salient points of the book or article mentioned.

The bibliography was prepared under the direction of Emmo O. Lundberg, Director of the Social Service Division of the Children's Bureau.

Confusion in Art Circles

Art circles of the world have been greatly disturbed by the recent publication of a book by Professor J. C. Van Dyke, on a study of Rembrandt and His School. In this book Professor Van Dyke says that only forty-nine out of eight hundred paintings attributed to Rembrandt, are genuine without doubt, according to the Literary Digest.

The New York Times summarizes the book by saying:

"There is not a Rembrandt in any American public gallery on Professor Van Dyke's list of genuine paintings. European galleries receive almost like treatment. He declares that in the Louvre there are only four true Rembrandts out of the twenty-three credited to him; in the Hermitage Gallery, Petrograd, there are but two out of forty-three; in the National Gallery, London, there are four out of twenty-one, and in the Kaiser Frederick Museum, Berlin, there are three out of twenty-six, with a shade of doubt about these three. These assertions are backed up by profuse illustrations with references to 1,000 or more illustrations in other books."

Doctor Van Dyke has spent forty years in the study of pictures, and holds the professorship of art and archaeology for Rutgers. He has made a special study of Rembrandts for many years, and in issuing this book he repudiates any desire for sensation, only wishing to establish history.

Doctor Van Dyke says that such authorities as Doctor Bode, Doctor Bredius, and others have been discovering new Rembrandts quite often (that were painted by Rembrandt's pupils). Of the twenty-six Rembrandts in the Kaiser Frederick Museum, Berlin, declared so by Doctor Bode, only three are Rembrandts, says Doctor Van Dyke, and even these

Dover Saints Hold Monthly Socials

DOVER, OHIO, November 2.—The New Philadelphia Branch, under the direction of Pastor William Goudy, is conducting a series of monthly socials to secure new seats for the church. This branch is only a little over a hundred miles from Kirtland. There are four elders in the branch who are working harmoniously for the good of the work.

The Sunday school superintendent, Brother J. Carlisle, is doing good work in his department. The attendance for preaching and social services is not so large, but many blessings have been received, and the gifts are often manifest.

The Saints of this branch are trying to live the word of wisdom as far as they know how. They feel that they will be blessed in the effort.

The Saints here are trying to do their part to support the church officials in carrying on the gospel work.

Venango Holds All-Day Meeting

VENANGO, NEBRASKA, October 28.—An all-day meeting was held at Champion, Nebraska, on Sunday, October 21, in charge of Elder Ward A. Hougas, of Venango, Nebraska. A good crowd filled the house till standing room was at a premium. Over half of those attending were nonmembers, mostly United Brethren.

Elder T. A. Hougas, of Des Moines, Iowa, preached a very uplifting sermon in the morning.

Following the basket dinner, a short sacrament service was held, followed by a sermon by Elder Ward A. Hougas, in which he presented the latter-day message in contrast to the beliefs of the world at large.

Both members and nonmembers were very enthusiastic when mention was made of another all-day meeting to be held at a later date. Much good was done, and the message and position of the church were much better understood as a result.

Sunday School Holds Special Day Every Month

MOUNDVILLE, WEST VIRGINIA, November 1.—This day marks the fourth anniversary of the Moundville, West Virginia, Branch, which was organized by Brother G. T. Griffiths, with an elder, teacher, and a deacon as the officers. The three are doubtful. They were by pupils such as Eeckhout, Bol, Koninck, Horst, and others.

The so-called Rembrandts in other European galleries are just as badly confused, charges Doctor Van Dyke.

The Metropolitan Museum in New York has not a single genuine out of the fifteen accredited to Rembrandt. Many private collections came in for criticism but must be handled carefully. Doctor Van Dyke declares that many of these pictures are fine works of art even though they are not Rembrandt's.

On both sides of the controversy come the supporters to the cause, for or against. Some declare Doctor Van Dyke is highly mistaken, while others agree with his stand.

The question which has been opened threatens to occupy the center of the art stage for some time to come. The controversy has just begun.

official number has increased to two elders, three priests, four teachers, and two deacons.

These officers meet on the second and fourth Thursday evening of the month to study the Doctrine and Covenants and Church History. Seventy-five per cent are active in this work.

The Sunday school is doing well. It has a special day once a month, using the 11 o'clock hour. The children are required to write essays on the lesson, and these are read on the special days. A young people's choir is being developed by the chorister, Anna L. Schoenian. She also has charge of the orchestra and the church choir, and with this talent was able to reproduce the play, "The Reverend Dayton up to date." This play was staged at Gren Easton, West Virginia, on October 13. Plans are being made to give it here also.

Pastor W. A. Schoenian, who is also the district superintendent of the Sunday school, went to East Liverpool, Ohio, where he organized a Sunday school with fifteen members on October 14.

Brother Thomas Mills will go to preach at Belmont, Ohio, on November 4.

Activities Going Strong at First Philadelphia Branch

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, October 31.—It is generally conceded that the prayer meetings of a branch register its spiritual condition. Since last summer, there has been a steady increase in attendance and interest at the First Philadelphia Branch. The highest point reached so far was on October 18 when there were about 70 present.

A very interesting priesthood meeting was held in the afternoon of October 28 at which the work for the coming year was outlined. The burden of the meeting was that members of the priesthood are shepherds of the flock indeed, and each should be interested in the welfare of departments as well as church activities.

In the evening, the pastor, Elder A. E. Stoff preached, taking as his subject, "Putting on Christ." He endeavored to change the order and concept that a great many Latter Day Saints have of church. One joins the church not to be saved, but to help save. All services of the church are but a means to an end, the end being the formation of Christlike character. An individual believes in Christ only to the extent he "puts on Christ," or that he lives up to the teachings of Christ. He referred to the 6th chapter of John, beginning with the 48th verse, where it reads: "I am that bread of life." Jesus here asks his disciples to eat his flesh and drink his blood, which if they did not do, they would have no life in them.

Next Sunday the group meetings will be resumed, with sermonets for juniors and intermediates separated from the regular preaching service, but conducted at the same period. These last year were very successful.

So much has been said about the various forms of branch control, perhaps it might be interesting to some to know that the First Philadelphia Branch adopted Form 4 last year, and so far has found it a big improvement over the old way—witness increased interest and progress in every department.

Sympathy is being extended to Sister Lydia Santmeyer upon the death of her daughter Catherine, six months old.

Recent arrivals in Philadelphia are:

Elder Thomas J. Picton of Wales, England. His wife and family are expected from across the water in a short time.

Brother Valentine and family of Brooklyn, New York, are also here now, and intend making this their future home.

Brethren Joy and Myron Fisher of Boston stopped here on their way from General Conference with a message of good cheer.

The friends of William B. Hartley will be glad to know that he is the proud and happy father of a bouncing baby girl. Arrived October 28.

Halloween activities are in full swing: On Friday evening the Boy Scouts, coming 32 strong, held sway in the basement of the church, and under the leadership of Brother Robert Campbell, their new leader, and Brother Ogden Bacon, his assistant, such a good time was had as only Boy Scouts can appreciate. On Saturday evening the Temple Builders presented "The rivals" in a very acceptable way, and much credit is due them, as it is an unusually heavy play to produce, requiring much costuming.

The spirit of the closing General Conference is reflected in the hearts of the Saints here, and it is believed that this coming year will show progress in a marked degree.

Victoria District Conference Held

RICHMOND, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, October 2.—The annual conference of the Victoria District has just closed. The meetings were held in the Saints' Church in Richmond, September 29 and 30. The conference began with a business meeting at 2.15 Saturday afternoon, the 29th. Much business was transacted, including the confirmation of five ordinations recommended from the Richmond Branch. The following branch officers were also sustained: Elder A. C. Barmore, president, and Elders William Jones and S. Harvey, as counselors; Brother C. D. Davies, secretary. Delegates were elected to both the mission and General Conference.

A splendid prayer meeting was held at 9.30 Sunday morning, which was followed by an able sermon at 11 a. m. by Elder C. A. Butterworth.

At 1 p. m. a priesthood meeting was held in the church, while at the same hour the Department of Women met in the anteroom. At this meeting Sister C. A. Butterworth was nominated as the head of that department for the state of Victoria. This nomination was confirmed by the conference.

A communion service was held at 2.30 p. m., and at 7 p. m. Elder Davies, the group supervisor for the state, preached a most excellent sermon.

Before each of the night services a community song service was held for half an hour. The choir also rendered splendid service throughout the conference. Elder Walton deserves the credit for the musical success of the conference.

The conference as a whole was encouraging, and marked a forward step in the work of the district. In every respect it passed off smoothly and pleasantly, and ended with everyone in good spirits. There was a good average representation present from the various branches of the district.

The night following the conference a concert was held in the Richmond Odd Fellows Hall to aid in raising funds for a new church building. From this concert more than $100 was collected, from which the expenses will have to be deducted. The night was stormy, so no doubt many were kept away, but the concert was of a very high quality.

Midland District Reunion Over

EDGBASTON, BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND, October 15.—The Midland District reunion was held on October 13 and 14 at Leicester, England. On the evening of the 14th some special business was attended to, the chief item being the appointment of Brother Howard Meredith as district superintendent of the Department of Recreation and Expression.

The priesthood was addressed at 9 a. m. Sunday by the district president. This was followed by a very fine talk by Sister Baldwin on "Women's work," in which she emphasized the need of women and girls to study story-telling. She gave some good examples of fairy stories, funny stories, etc., with good morals.

Brother Sorden gave a very interesting lecture on "Habit," at 11 a. m., telling us how it is our best friend or our worst enemy.

At 2 p. m. Sister G. P. Edwards gave a splendid address on the "Possibilities of expression work," giving seven different methods and examples of this work. This meeting was followed by a fellowship service in which the Spirit of God was present in great power. In the early part of this meeting Brother Charles Cousins, jr., was ordained to the office of priest.

At the evening service Brother Baldwin was the speaker on the theme, "God expects every man and woman to do their duty to the end." This brought the meetings to a close, and everyone went home feeling it was indeed good to wait upon the Lord.

Tulsa Saints Renovate Building

TULSA, OKLAHOMA, November 8.—The Saints in Tulsa are doing nicely, generally speaking. The church is being overhauled and will be cleaned up and repaired. It will be ready to occupy about November 15.

The Sunday school and Department of Recreation and Expression are both progressing.

Omaha Saints Prepare for Annual Bazaar Held in County Courthouse

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, November 5.—The Sunday of October 14 provided Omaha Saints with the opportunity of hearing High Priest Arthur E. Stoft, once a member of this branch, but now of Philadelphia. His message was clear-cut and forceful, calling to a higher plane of thought and living. The other sermon of that day was delivered by Elder Henry A. Merchant, whose wise and gentle counsel is always well received by our congregations.

Each Wednesday for a month past the sisters of the Department of Women have been meeting for all-day sewing. The first of these meetings was held at the home of Sister Gertrude Kirkpatrick, but the later ones have been held at the church, where the sisters have thoroughly enjoyed getting their lunch together. A wonderful bond of unity and affection is created by these close contacts, and there are great spiritual values to an annual bazaar besides those of a monetary character. And, indeed, are not fried chicken and pumpkin pie with whipped cream atop, values in themselves worth considering?

Bazaar to Be Held

The assignment of space and dates for the holding of the church bazaars of the city was made last Thursday, the sisters representing this branch drawing the dates of December 5 and 6. This is much earlier than usual, but the sisters aim to be ready. Forty-two churches are to participate in this bazaar, which will be held, as usual, in the county courthouse, extending from December 1 to the holidays.

District President T. J. Elliott occupied the pulpit morning and evening, Sunday, October 21, giving a perspective of the events and actions of the late General Conference. His tone was hopeful, giving many reasons for renewed courage and faith in the work and achievements of the church. On Sunday, the 28th, High Priest Roland W. Scott preached in the morning, drawing a lesson from the writing on the wall which appeared before Belshazzar. He urged the Saints to consider their spiritual standing before God, and to make greater efforts towards perfection of their lives, that they may not be found wanting when weighed in the balances.

Brother Fay Rollett, nephew and private secretary of Brother Walter W. Head, president of Omaha National Bank and recently elected president of the National Bankers' Association, gave an address the evening of October 28. Brother Rollett is a very earnest young man, and active in the work of the church in South Omaha. His plea was for a closer walk with God, a more devoted living up to the principles of the restored gospel, and a cheerful, unselfish loyalty given to those upon whom rests the responsibility of guiding the church to Zion conditions. Brother Rollett and Brother Head are respectively grandnephew and nephew of Brother Joseph Lambert, well-known to the church at large.

Socials Given

A Halloween party given by the Department of Recreation and Expression, another for a group of younger Sunday school class members, and a social conducted by Sister Wallace's class of girls, have helped to give life to the branch during the past fortnight. The girls last mentioned served pumpkin pie free, but charged for homemade candy, and made a neat little sum for their Christmas offering. The young people's organization of the branch meets each Sunday afternoon at 6.30. Usually a talk by some older member of the branch precedes hot cocoa, wafers, and sandwiches served by the girls. Sister Audentia Anderson, Brother Carl Self, and Brother Duane Anderson are among those who have recently addressed this interesting group, the latter (on the 28th) giving a description of Graceland, its courses of study, its athletic, literary, and social activities, its plan of student self-help, and many other phases of the life of the church college. There are several young people in the branch with eyes turned towards Graceland, and it is to be hoped their desires in that direction will materialize most happily. Brother Duane Anderson graduated from the junior college at Graceland last June, and is now a student in the Nebraska University at Lincoln. He is a member of the University Men's Glee Club, an organization of forty young men, a selected number of whom will make some concert tours during the school year.

Dedication Services

Apostle J. A. Gillen preached a dedicatory sermon at the South Side church at 2.30 on the afternoon of November 4. The little building was filled with an attentive audience. Special music was rendered by a choir, under the direction of Brother Fay Rollett. Brother Gillen emphasized the thought that within the branch organization which will meet in the little church for worship, was provided the environment wherein individual development is made possible.

In his evening sermon that night, given to the Omaha Branch, he continued the theme, shifting the emphasis to the thought that such development is possible through constant efforts to live in harmony with the divine pattern, obtaining the mind that was in Christ, and expressing it outwardly in acts of love and faith, as He did.

Brother Gillen will preach here three nights more this week, and has said that he may be here for a more protracted series a little later.

On Sunday morning, November 4, the rite of baptism was administered by High Priest T. J. Elliott, to Mr. and Mrs.

William Wellman, the latter the daughter of Sister Mary Mickey, a long-time Latter Day Saint. Confirmation followed immediately, Branch President B. M. Anderson assisting Brother Elliott. It was a pleasure to the Saints of the Omaha Branch to welcome these estimable young people to membership and to extend to them the hand of church fellowship.

Lamoni Items

LAMONI, IOWA, November 7.—Lamoni has been experiencing ideal weather for several weeks. A half inch of snow which fell on October 29 and melted the next day frightened the Saints a trifle, but outside of that the days have been warm and bright with slight frost at night.

The Graceland Lyceum course for the season consists of five imported numbers which will be supplemented by several home talent numbers. Two of these numbers have appeared, the Cleveland Symphony Quintette, and John Rotto, make-up artist, both of which were very good.

On Sunday, October 28, a union meeting was held at the Latter Day Saint church, the speaker being Miss Emily M. Porter, of Winterset, Iowa, representing the World Purity Association. She gave a splendid talk, using as her subject the boy or girl who is on his way down. She enumerated as the four causes of the increasing crime among the young as the automobile, the moving picture, the dance, and woman's dress. These are outstanding causes, she said, but the foundation is laid in the home where the little tot is allowed to be a tyrant, through lack of parental control, learning nothing of self-control, so that when he meets the real obstacles of life he is wholly unprepared for them. Miss Porter talked later to the boys and girls of high school and college. She has had a wide experience with the boy and girl who is on his way down, in public homes, reformatories, and behind prison bars; has made a deep study of the why of the question, and has a message worth while.

On November 4, two especially fine meetings were held—communion service in the morning and preaching at night by Elder Hubert Case, of Independence, who based his discourse on the parable of the talents, talking along the line of service and the call for everyone to work.

Brother Charles F. Church, presiding deacon, called a work bee for last Monday which was responded to by fifteen men, some with teams, and the day was spent in grading and cleaning the church park, repairing walks, etc. Brother Church and his ready helpers have done a splendid work the past few years in beautifying the church premises.

Sister A. M. Carmichael and two daughters left this week to join her husband in New York City for the school year. Brother Carmichael is a student at Columbia University this winter.

A special program is being prepared for next Sunday, November 11, in commemoration of Armistice Day.

Elder Visits Branch Which He Helped to Start

GROTON, CONNECTICUT, November 6.—On Sunday, November 4, Brother George Gates, of Providence, Rhode Island, stopped at the New London Branch on his homeward journey from Pennsylvania, where he gave a farewell address at the sacrament service. Brother Gates read from the Doctrine and Covenants concerning tithing, following with encouraging words of instruction. He emphasized the adoption of stewardships and was enthusiastic in his comments on that subject. The closing remarks were words of comfort and brotherly love, and his talk was received with interest and pleasure.

Brother Gates was instrumental in bringing the gospel to Connecticut about thirty-two years ago. He worked here with the late Brother Francis Sheehy, heralding the good tidings, which were received as the "glad message" by a few.

The Saints are loath to have Brother Gates leave New England, but all wish him peace and happiness in his new residing place.

BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA, November 1.—The original manuscript of the Book of Mormon was in this city for several months for the purpose of being photographically reproduced. Brother E. H. Tordoff, master binder, was intrusted with the valuable document because of his wide reputation as a binder of old and precious books.

Brother Tordoff has just returned from Independence, Missouri, where he delivered at church headquarters the original manuscript which had been photographed at his bindery in Berkeley. The document is not bound, so was carried in a container of oxidized tin, lined with asbestos, made for the purpose. To add to the security a small vial of a chemical used for extinguishing fire was placed in the container also. The document is kept in a secure vault in Independence at church headquarters.

Brother Tordoff is the inventor of the process of photo-facsimile-reproduction. The discovery was made about a year ago. This process is one of direct photography, no plates or printing being used. By the use of a very delicate mechanism, the sheets of paper are split, after which the photograph is made on each half, and they are then pasted together. Otherwise it is only possible to print on one side of a sheet.

The chief advantage of this process is its adaptability for copying old and rare volumes, or in replacing torn or lost pages from rare volumes, providing a corresponding volume is obtainable, in order that a photograph may be made of the missing pages. Brother Tordoff has made exact duplicates of a number of rare books, the duplicates resembling the original work so nearly that only an expert can tell them apart. When the photographing of a manuscript or book is completed, the pages are put through a coloring process which gives them the faded, yellow appearance of age characteristic of the original.

The Book of Mormon manuscript which was photographed by Brother Tordoff is one of the two originals, and now the only one remaining. It is described in an article appearing in the Berkeley Daily Gazette as follows:

"This remarkable manuscript was examined by a representative of the Gazette just before it was taken east. Although it was yellow with age, being now ninety-five years old, it had the appearance of being well preserved. The torn, worn, and otherwise damaged leaves had all been patched and renovated by the skill of a master hand. The marks of repairing were scarcely discernible.

"The manuscript had all the earmarks of originality. The scribes, not knowing how much paper would be needed, had to make several purchases of foolscap paper, thirteen by eight and a half inches. This is evident by the differences in quality and exactness of size. Foolscap paper was in common use in those days for all legal and manuscript work. There are four hundred sixty-four pages of closely written matter occupying the full sheet, and leaving no margin whatever. Four different scribes took part at different times in the writing of the manuscript. This is clearly evident in the handwritings. They were Emma Smith, wife of Joseph Smith, Martin Harris, Christian Whitmer, and Oliver Cowdery, said Tordoff. According to these scribes they wrote in English as Smith translated from the golden plates which he had obtained.

"A statement by authorities of the Reorganized Church says these plates were obtained in New York State by Smith on September 21, 1827. The spot where they had been buried centuries before had been pointed out to Smith in a vision, it is said. On them was engraved, it is asserted, the record of the so-called pre-Columbian-American civilization, in the Hebrew language written with reformed Egyptian characters, the translation of which was completed early in June, 1829. Oliver Cowdery wrote the greater part as Smith dictated to him. When the translation was completed, a second copy was written by Cowdery. One copy was retained by Smith, while the other was placed in the hands of the printer. The Book of Mormon was first printed in the office of the Wayne Sentinel, at Palmyra, New York, by E. B. Grandin. When the printing was completed, Smith retained one copy of the manuscript and gave the other to Cowdery. In 1841, when the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House was laid, Joseph Smith deposited his copy in a receptacle which was placed in the cornerstone. Subsequently the stone was broken and the manuscript deteriorated. When removed, it was found to have been water soaked and to have become hardly legible. Oliver Cowdery kept his copy until his death in 1850 at Richmond, Missouri, when he turned it over to his brother-in-law, David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the authenticity of the book. At David Whitmer's death it passed to the custody of his grandson, George Sweisch, who transferred the same to the Reorganized Church. It is now in the official custody of Frederick M. Smith, of Independence, Missouri, a grandson of the original Joseph Smith."

Prosperous Season for Departments Anticipated

WINDSOR, ONTARIO, November 5.—The Department of Recreation and Expression is enjoying a very active and prosperous season, having met with and assisted other branches on social evenings and outings, such as a strawberry social, a guessing contest from Bible history, a mock trial, and a number of debates on present-day problems that confront the people. The most recent subject discussed was the amalgamation of the border cities including Ford City, Ojibway, Windsor, Walkerville, and Sandwich.

The married people's class is studying the Book of Mormon. Some of the young people are taking up the normal lessons which they find both interesting and educational. The smaller children study the junior quarterly.

On Friday, November 2, a Halloween party was held in the basement of the church. Masks, grab bags, fortune telling, booths, lunch, and games of various kinds filled the evening with enjoyment for all. The admission and things sold at this social were payable in pennies only.

A progressive winter and an increased attendance is anticipated.

Elder Cornelius Clifford was in Windsor over the week-end and was the speaker on the evening of November 3.

Sister Mary Conner, who is training for a nurse at Hotel Dieu Hospital, Windsor, gave a very interesting talk at the meeting of the Department of Women on November 1.

Brother Harry Crouchman has gone on his annual trip to the north woods. If successful, he expects to bring the usual venison for the venison supper to be held on Monday, November 19, following the anniversary services on the 18th.

Anniversary of Chatham Branch Organization Celebrated

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, November 5.—The twentieth anniversary of the building of the Chatham church was celebrated in the church on October 28. A number of Saints were present from surrounding towns and an enjoyable day was spent. Prayer service was held at 9 a. m. in charge of the district presidency, Bishop J. C. Dent, of Bothwell, and Elder Daniel Macgregor. Sunday school was held at 11 a. m., at the close of which a short program was given. At 2.30 and 7 p. m. Elder Daniel Macgregor was the speaker, and both sermons were much enjoyed.

On Monday evening, the 29th, the annual anniversary supper was held in the basement of the church. The supper was in charge of a class of young married women, and was a huge success from every angle. Over two hundred seventy-five were served and $75 was cleared for the branch. Mr. George W. Sulman gave an address on his tour of Egypt. Mr. Sulman is a prominent citizen of Chatham, an ex-member of Parliament, and has reaped great fame as a traveler and lecturer. His talk was exceptionally well given and thoroughly enjoyed.

Friday evening, November 2, an interesting debate was held at the meeting of the Department of Recreation and Expression on, "Resolved, that the world is getting better." It was well argued from both sides, and while the judges went against their own views, they gave their decision in favor of the affirmative.

The members of the branch are anxiously looking forward to the combined Thanksgiving and Armistice Day celebration to be held in the church on November 11 at the Sunday school hour.

Saints Feel Loss of Pastor but Work Goes On

BISBEE, ARIZONA, November 3.—No doubt most of those acquainted with this branch know that Elder E. R. Davis, late pastor of the branch, left with his family the latter part of August for Lamoni, Iowa, where the three older children are now attending Graceland. Brother Davis and family had been in this branch for over four years, so they are greatly missed, but the work seems to be progressing nicely.

The brethren of the Aaronic priesthood are taking care of the preaching and, judging from the attendance, their efforts are appreciated. There is little time left for missionary work after the day's work is done, so this part of the work naturally must suffer until another missionary is sent to this field. This field affords an unusual opportunity for general missionary efforts, as many people are continually coming and going. This is a substantial copper-mining district, but a large part of the population averages only a few months' residence. The copper market has fluctuated a great deal the past few years. In times of high wages many come in, then leave in periods of depression. A reduction of practically fifty cents a day in wages became effective on November 1, which has resulted in some leaving the district. In order to keep up the average membership, it will be necessary for missionary work to be done to bring in new material to replace those who may leave from time to time.

The Department of Women took advantage of the Halloween festivities to combine pleasure with profit by holding a masked Halloween party Friday evening, October 26. The costumes were many and varied, and the characters assumed well acted, affording much merriment. Prizes were awarded for the best represented character, the best dressed, and the most comical. The unmasked were fined ten cents, and refreshments were sold. A number of nonmembers were present, and all enjoyed the games together.

At a business meeting of the Sunday school department Monday evening, October 29, a committee was elected, and necessary arrangements made for the Christmas program, the exact date to be announced later.

Harvest Thanksgiving Services Held

NORTH TORONTO, ONTARIO, November 5.—Harvest Thanksgiving services were held on Sunday, October 21. Elder James Pycok and Bishop A. F. McLean were present. Elder James A. Wilson, pastor of the branch, was the speaker in the morning and Elder C. Hattie was chairman.

Elder David Pycok, district president, was here on November 4, preaching both morning and evening. Much strength was gained by his admonition.

The Department of Recreation and Expression, of Humber Bay, visited North Toronto on Tuesday, October 30, in return for a visit given them on October 16. A good impromptu program was rendered by both locals.

MATTY and Other Stories

Our newest book is especially for the younger boys of the age where books mean so much and are often hard to get.

It is composed of separate stories, each complete in itself, yet all strong with the same spirit of wholesome action and good moral tone.

In reading this book your boy will become a better boy, because the ideals of fair play are presented in the lives of characters he will appreciate.

Fine illustrations, attractive cover, a winner in every way.

Count on "Matty" for one of your gifts for boys this year—and all the girls and most of the adults in the household will read it as well as the lads.

Independence

President Frederick M. Smith will attend the installation ceremonies for President Stratton D. Brooks at the Missouri University, November 16. He will represent Clark University, of Worcester, Massachusetts, from which he received his doctor's degree.

Laura Frederickson, sister of Sister Robert Kemp, of Independence, who has been visiting in this city since conference time, died at the home of her sister Monday morning, November 12. Services were held from the Kemp home Monday evening, Patriarch Ammon White making the remarks. She was taken back to her home in Carson, Iowa, for burial. She was seventy-six years old and for many years was a faithful and tireless worker in the Wheeler's Grove Branch, Iowa. Two brothers and a sister survive her.

The L. D. S. Band, of thirty-two pieces, assisted the large band of some five hundred pieces which rendered the music at the Kansas City Bible Class at the closing services in Convention Hall, Sunday, November 11. Many people from Independence attended the Bible Class and helped to swell the numbers to over fifty-one thousand.

Reginald Smith, youngest son of the late President Joseph Smith, and Ronald Smith, son of President Elbert A. Smith, both of Independence, are playing on the varsity football team at Kansas University. It is not only an honor for the town to place two players on the team of a large university, but it is interesting to know both are members of the church, the sons of church leaders.

The girls of Zion have been organized into a girls' division of the L. D. S. Athletic Association. They will play regular games throughout the winter. The Stone Church gymnasium will be used for their matches.

Mrs. E. L. Kelley was given a birthday party last Friday afternoon. Her daughters, Mrs. John R. Green and Mrs. Paul N. Craig, planned it as a surprise for her.

The Stone Church is making a drive to reestablish Zion's Religio-Literary Society on Friday evenings. They expect to concentrate their class study on the Book of Mormon, though other studies will be permitted. Nearly three hundred were in attendance last Friday evening and more are planning to join.

Changes Made in Duluth Branch Officers

DULUTH, MINNESOTA, November 9.—Elder G. W. Day, district president, visited the Duluth Branch recently, at which time several changes were made. After a service held on October 28, a meeting was held to elect a new branch president, as Elder Samuel Sloan had found it necessary to resign. He is at present living at Two Harbors, Minnesota, which made it hard for him to do the work necessary in connection with his work as branch president. Elder C. B. Freeman, of Pine River, Minnesota, was elected to succeed Brother Sloan. Sister Freeman and children intend to make their home in Duluth in the future.

Two young people of the branch were married recently, Brother Arthur Johnson and Ruth Barber, with Brother W. C. Staury officiating. The wedding ceremony was followed by a wedding feast prepared by the bride's parents.

The Department of Women is going forward with a very good attendance. A number of outsiders have attended the meetings in the past.

The Duluth Saints are sorry to lose Brother and Sister H. Sylvester, who have gone to make their home in Lansing, Michigan. Their presence will be a gain to the Lansing Branch, where there is a wide-awake group of Saints.

Radio Flashes

MARION, OHIO, October 24.—Your programs are being received here and enjoyed very much.—Ray Weston.

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS, October 23.—I wish to report to you that your station came in loud and clear on the loud speaker on October 21.—Gene Ullemeyer.

HAMLIN, KANSAS, October 28.—Am listening to the program at K F I X. The male quartet singing "Some day, somewhere," was fine; the prayer following was very clear; the piano was also very clear.—J. A. Brockhoff.

IRON MOUNTAIN, MICHIGAN, October 24.—Enjoy your music and church choir immensely.—Richard James.

ANDERSON, INDIANA, October 29.—Received your radio station Sunday evening October 28. Came in clear and loud on loud speaker.—Paul Madigan.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, November 14.—Picked up your station first time Sunday, November 4, at 6.30. Considerable atmospheric disturbances prevailed, but program came in good and well modulated.—A. P. Petri.

MATAMORAS, PIKE COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA, October 21.—Wish to extend congratulations on program rendered. Came through strong.—J. B. Taynton.

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE, October 29.—Just to let you know that your Sunday evening broadcasting came in very clearly and loudly.—Jacob Scharff.

IRONTON, WISCONSIN, October 29.—We listened to your concert and services last evening, and they came in fine.—W. D. Hudson.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN, October 29.—Tuned in to your station last Sunday, October 28, and Sunday before. Enjoyed the services very much. Program came in clear and quite loud, especially the violin pieces.—Lester King.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK, October 29.—I wish to extend my compliments for the excellence of the program broadcasted which was received in a very satisfactory manner.—G. W. Heath.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—Enjoyed thoroughly your church services at 6.30 p. m. Sunday, September 30.—E. Cook.

LONDON, ONTARIO, October 4.—I wish to express my great pleasure at hearing the sacred oratorio "Saint Paul" broadcasted by K F I X on October 3. The beautiful singing came in quite loud and very clear.—Thomas Sampson.

UNION CITY, TENNESSEE, October 8.—Your program for October 7 was very plain. Many thanks for your entertainment.—P. G. Browder.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS, October 13.—I hear your programs quite frequently and enjoy them very much. You come in fine.—William Parker.

ROCKSPRINGS, TEXAS, October 8.—Your radio service was received last night loud and clear. Thanks.—Rocksprings Garage.

BLUEJACKET, OKLAHOMA, October 9.—Received your schedule Sunday night and came in fine.—P. W. Grubb.

GLENWOOD CITY, WISCONSIN, September 30.—Your program broadcasted Sunday night, September 30, came great over large Magnavox loud speaker, with two stages of amplification and detector. We enjoyed your program very much, especially your speech on "Americanism."—H. L. Beck, Manager Orpheum Theatre Circuit.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, October 4.—After the Kansas City Star signed off yesterday evening, the writer tuned in to your broadcast of the Oratorio "Saint Paul," by Mendelssohn. To say that Mrs. Benton and myself enjoyed this oratorio would really be putting it mildly. It came through wonderfully well. Each word was clear and distinct. The modulation was as good or better than any we have heard recently, with the possible exception of Buffalo. We believe if more broadcasting of this high class were made, radio would be more popular than it is. It seems as though local broadcasting stations cannot get their ideas above jazz. It is with pleasure that we thank you for your splendid broadcasting of yesterday evening, and sincerely hope there will be more of these oratorios soon.—C. H. Benton.

CLEBURNE, TEXAS, October 15.—On Sunday, October 14, I heard your program and appreciated it very much. I especially enjoyed the talk made by the speaker from the South Sea Islands, also the songs, "The old, old path," and "My God, how wonderful thou art." Your station came in clear and strong.—Rupert Saylor.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, October 3.—Am certainly enjoying your program to-night.—Harry Greer.

RATON, NEW MEXICO, October 18.—Picked up your program last Sunday evening. Heard sermon and all up to time you signed off.—C. H. Corey.

HAXTUN, COLORADO, October 21.—Heard your program very good to-night. Thought Reverend Lewis's sermon very good. It all came in as clear as a bell.—W. L. Eggleston.

STAPLETON, NEBRASKA, October 30.—My husband, daughter, and myself listened in to your sermon last Sunday evening. It came in clear and loud, so we could hear every word of prayer and sermon. I surely enjoyed it, as I had not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon since a year ago last July, for I do not live near a branch. A solo was being sung when I caught your station. I was more than glad, as I had tried the Sunday before and could not find it. I hope to be a regular listener.—Blanch E. Cline.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, November 8.—W. Mannering writes that the Saints in San Antonio broadcasted their first concert and sermon on November 5, at 8.45 p. m. Thereafter they will furnish the program every other Monday night at 8.30, commencing November 19. The Alamo Radio Station is being used.

K F I X

Broadcasting station of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Independence, Missouri. Wave length, two hundred and forty meters.

The services at the Stone Church will be broadcasted Sunday, November 18, at 11 a. m. Apostle Paul M. Hanson will be the speaker. At 7.30 the regular music program at the Stone Church will also be broadcasted, followed by the sermon to be delivered by Bishop James F. Keir.

Last Tuesday night, November 13, the new broadcasting schedule began with Walter W. Smith as the speaker at 9 p. m. This program was supplied by the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences. Mr. Smith is dean of the faculty. His subject was "Responsibility imposed by education." The program for Thursday evening will also be supplied by the Institute.

Pastoral Notices

To the Officers, Saints, and Friends of the Holden Stake; Greetings: Having been appointed to labor in your stake, I take this means of apprising you of my desire to cooperate with you in our labors in missionary work.

I have not yet fully recovered from my long and serious illness and the effects of a recent operation, so it will be some little time ere I am physically capacitated for service, but as soon as possible I will be glad to come and do all in my power to build up the work of the Lord.

In the meantime I would be pleased to hear from anyone who knows of a place where an opening can be made, or from the pastors of any of the branches who desire my services. Please feel free to write me and advise me in any way. I shall greatly appreciate your kindness.

Never in my experience was my faith in God and his work more firm, or my hope more bright, than at the present time, and I enter the field with the determination to do all I can to make this a very successful year. Will you help me? May I hear from you?

Yours in bonds,
CAMERON, MISSOURI, Box 35. RICHARD D. WEAVER.

To the Saints of Southern Wisconsin; Greetings: Having again the pleasure of taking up the work of the district as your servant, I feel impressed to say that we should bend our every energy to advance the cause of the restored gospel of Christ. The day and hour of the world's history demand our best. I am sure that all who attended the late General Conference went home feeling that better days were ahead of the church. While we were made to realize that we were lacking in many ways, yet when the Spirit of God came "of a sudden" nothing seemed impossible. So may God help us all, that we shall not love the world nor what it can offer, but may we love to come out of the world and work as children of God, that Zion may prosper and grow, not only in the land of Zion and the stakes, but may we as children of the kingdom, out in this district, draw very near to God and each other in our work.

Since the General Conference I have felt a goodly degree of the assistance of the good Spirit in my preaching and work. Realizing I am human and that we all are, may we strive to assist each other all we can. Should I find fault in any of you, I will try to tell you and no one else. Will you all kindly feel free to tell me of my faults as you see them? Then we shall be able to assist each other.

As presidents of branches and members of branches, if you have any matters that are troubling you, I shall be glad to assist you in any way that I can. We want to keep in harmony with the word of the Lord in Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7: "In matters of personal importance and conduct arising in branches or districts, the authorities of those branches and districts should be authorized and permitted to settle

Conference Minutes

KEWANEE.—At Rock Island, Illinois, October 27 and 28. Conference was held at the Saints' church, corner of Eighteenth Avenue and Tenth Street, and was presided over by R. W. Farrell, George Sackfield, and Charles L. Holmes. Eight sessions were held. The attendance was not so good as usual. Reports showed: Kewanee, 136; Rock Island, 111; Dakhinda, 100; Moline-East Moline, 69; Joy, 83; Matherville, 48; Buffalo Prairie, 52; Peoria, 57; Millersburg, 57; Savanna, 29; nonresident, 78; making a total of $20. Six of the ten branches showed an increase in numbers since June. Bishop's agent's report: receipts, $716.11; disbursed in the district, $52; balance paid to Bishop McGuire, $664.11. Treasurer received, including reunion expenses, $742.89; paid out $616.66; balance, $126.23. Also there was $10.50 of the missionary fund. Minutes of the business session held at Galva reunion showed that the district presidency and treasurer were continued as the reunion committee, and instructed to select the place and decide on the date of holding the reunion next year. They were to work out a system of feeding the people while there. Reunion voted to create a fund to take care of the expense incurred in holding a reunion. The report of the Sunday school secretary showed twelve schools in the district, fifty-one teachers, an enrollment of 519, and an average attendance of sixty-three per cent. The following resolutions were adopted: To return to the delegate system of representation in district conferences; to reaffirm rules already on record; to create a missionary fund by requesting the branches to take up a collection on the last Sunday of each month for missionary purposes only and to pray for the missionary work at that time; to take collection at the same time to defray the district expenses, both collections to be sent to district treasurer; that each branch create a missionary department as well as a special fund for this department; to put on at least one missionary effort each year; the head of the missionary department is to work in harmony with the branch and district presidents, getting in touch with the missionary supervisor or apostle in charge as to the time of meetings and arranging for speakers. Action relative to electing auditors was rescinded, and hereafter they will be appointed each conference. As per action of the June conference held at Savanna, Illinois, the officers of the district are as follows: E. R. Davis, president; Mary E. Gillin, secretary; Edward Jones, treasurer; Harland Cady, superintendent of Department of Sunday school; Elbert Holmes, Sunday school secretary; Leonard Stiegel, superintendent of Department of Recreation and Expression; Eva Bean, superintendent of Department of Women; Edward Jones, Bishop's agent; Mary E. Gillin, historian; and Leah Denton, chorister. E. R. Davis chose B. F. Sartwell and Edward Jones as his counselors. These officers are to hold till next June. Place of holding next conference left to the district presidency; time, the second Sunday in June. Harland Cady was ordained to the office of elder. The matter of ordaining Frank Hendricks to the same office was left to the district presidency. Friday evening, a musical program was given by the Rock Island Saints and others. Saturday evening was spent in hearing from the delegates that attended the late conference. It was a good conference, and Kewanee District manifests still a desire to keep fast hold of the "rod of iron" and keep pace in the onward progress of the great latter-day work. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, 115 Clarke Avenue, Peoria, Illinois.

Blue Pencil Notes

Too many preachers speak for religion twenty minutes, against it twenty minutes, and close with five minutes of judicial summing up at the end. Their hearers are left all at sea. A pint of acid, a pint of alkali, with a teaspoonful of whipped cream on top give no reaction worth while.

The living flame of conviction, the consuming knowledge of a great truth to declare is the only good reason for preaching at all. "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." Such conviction of truth led our fathers to sing, "We as the living witnesses declare the truth to you."

The man who has a joint debate with himself in the pulpit, the result a draw, is shadow boxing, and if expert might find a place in vaudeville; but he should not be in the pulpit.

This joke has been going the rounds in America: "Do you know how to make an Englishman happy in his old age?" "No." "Tell him plenty of funny stories while he is young."

The trouble with too many Americans is that they save nothing for old age. Everything is a joke—love, marriage, virtue, industry, sobriety, these are puritanical antiques, jokes fit to convulse the dullest. But the trouble is that the fun is all over long before old age comes to lay a premonitory hand on the arm of the laughing fool who thinks life nothing but a joke.

Again David Lloyd George has spoken in the prophetic tone of one of the old scripture prophets who recked not whether they were major or minor but who saw things as they were and as they were like to be. At Scranton, during his recent trip through America, he said:

The English-speaking peoples of this earth can save civilization from doom. Do you think I am using violent words? If you do, go to Europe and see conditions, the fear of some impending terror. And if the blow falls, it will be such a war as humanity never has conceived.

Press dispatches report that in Rome a lamp that "will burn forever" has been lighted in memory of the war dead. But forever is a long time. Many things may happen in forever. After Armageddon men may not care to remember the scrimmage of the twentieth century.

The World War was waged to make the world "safe for democracy, yet the New York Times comments on the fact that now, after the lapse of five years since the armistice was signed, nine nations of Europe are ruled by dictators. These are: Germany, Bavaria, Russia, Turkey, Hungary, Greece,

Italy, Bulgaria, and Spain, "representing," we are told, "two hundred and fifty million people, or more than one half of Europe's population."

Doctor Steinmetz was an electrical genius of world fame. He could have commanded almost any yearly salary that he might have cared to ask for. Yet it seems that he was only desirous to give the world the service of his genius and content himself to live strictly on the basis of his "needs and just wants." That was a practical "stewardship" though without ceremony or covenant, yet very real and vital. The matter is thus set forth by the Kansas City Star:

The truth has been illustrated once again in the case of Charles P. Steinmetz, electrical genius, who died a few days ago. There had been talk, the news dispatches explain, about Doctor Steinmetz as one of the highest salaried men in the country and the best paid electrical engineer in the world. Yet it develops that Doctor Steinmetz had no salary at all. That, at his own request, he merely drew from time to time what money his actual needs called for and the amounts he wished to contribute to certain charities. Steinmetz had said that he did not care to be bothered about money or to think of himself as working for a big salary. He wanted to put his work first and give it all his thought.

Since the days of old John Brown of Osawatimie, Kansas has been a yeast pot of ideas and ideals. John Brown had faith in an ideal, and because he had that faith, though his body died at Harper's Ferry for his spiritual convictions, in a short time hundreds of thousands of armed men were marching and singing, "John Brown's body lies a-moldering in the grave, but his soul goes marching on." One of the ideas that Kansas fostered long before the adoption of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution was that of prohibition. Kansas had the courage of her convictions and more than any other State made prohibition work. As a result a survey carried on by the board of temperance and morals of the Methodist Church reveals the following facts:

Last Federal census shows its people live longer than those of any other State.

War department records show it furnished the most healthy men in the selective draft.

It has more home owners per capita than any other State. It is one of the five States with the lowest percentage of illiteracy.

It ranks among the States having the lowest percentage of business failures in the hard times of 1921.

The 1920 census showed thirty-three county jails and thirty-four city jails did not have a single prisoner in them.

"If Judge Gary is right, and the world can't find anything better than Christianity, it might be a good idea to try it."—San Diego Tribune.

There doesn't seem to be a rush for first whack at it. Somebody has uncontested opportunity to demonstrate how it works. Who is holding us back?

The New York World prints a list of some of the foodstuffs required by the Leviathan for one voyage. The wholesale cost given out by the shipping board is $97,152 for one voyage.

It is hard to believe that one boat load of people could eat so much.

What Did the Lord Say to Do First?

Elsewhere in this issue appears a warning over the signature of the Presiding Bishop. We wish to call particular attention to it and advise all Saints to read it carefully.

The Lord said, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness." With that admonition always before us it is strange that we so often put other things first.

Some give strength, time, money, prestige, themselves to various secret orders, even in the face of the Lord's admonition and the teachings and warnings of the Book of Mormon, not to mention General Conference resolutions on the subject. With many such the church sooner or later takes second place—whereas all the time it should have first claim on all that they have and are, and not be compelled to receive a divided allegiance.

Others divert their means to one or another enterprise that can but end in loss to themselves and the church. The warning given through the late President Joseph Smith to avoid the spirit of speculation was timely. It was not heeded by many. Thousands of dollars were lost by farmers who invested in farm lands for purely speculative purposes, straining their credit, borrowing far beyond their margin of safety, in the hope of a great rise in values that would make them well-to-do. In the crash of 1920 they lost heavily—some of them were bankrupted. Money that could have gone to the Lord's treasury as surplus, tithing, or offering, that would have kept the church free from debt and the full missionary force in the field, besides putting over every enterprise incident to our building program, was lost—in some instances worse than lost. Warnings issued by local and general officials both spiritual and temporal were unheeded, with the results set forth.

Other thousands, no one knows how many, were invested in mining or oil or other stocks which are now worth less than the German mark—which is not worth the paper on which it is printed. These stocks are worth less than nothing because they stand in many instances for a loss of faith in humanity also given in God. Men and women induced to purchase because of the prestige (spiritual prestige) of those selling, lost not only their money, they lost their faith as well. The Bishop intimates that some of this stock has found its way to his treasury as offering or "consecration." How much better had the Saints paid their surplus to him in good hard cash rather than to have put it into these ventures of doubtful issue. The Saints should be more wise in these matters. The ministry in particular should be monitors and exemplars to them and not become entangled in these speculative ventures. Zion must be redeemed by good hard labor, sound investments, upbuilding and construction, both material and spiritual. Zion's fate must not at any time hang upon the toss of the dice, the turn of a faro wheel, the fluctuations of the stock market.

The Bishop's advice is calculated first to protect the church, second to protect you. You should not jeopardize your own finances, for in so doing you jeopardize your living, the welfare of your children, perhaps your own old age. Some pitiful stories have come to us from elderly people who have lost their earnings and savings that were intended to protect them in old age. They come to us for advice too late.

The church too should be protected. If men have resources which they can put up at a venture in the hope of great profits, they no doubt have a surplus in which the Lord is interested. The late conference indorsed and put on paper by unanimous vote an individual stewardship program by which any man may put all that he has to consecrated service, to service as truly holy as that rendered by the missionary—and all that he has that can be spared may find its way into channels of immediate service to God and humanity through tithing, surplus, and offering. Shall we make this service first? The Lord said to seek first to build up his kingdom. Shall we respond?

E. A. S.

The World War, says Mr. Bryan in effect, caused a lowering of morals, but they are returning now to the high standard which has made America the greatest nation on the face of the globe. America will soon be looked up to again, as a God-fearing and a God-serving race.

Sanitarium Gift Day

Thanksgiving Day has been set aside as the time when all members or friends of the church may contribute to the needs of the Independence Sanitarium. For several years past opportunity has been extended the church membership to help in the cause for which the Sanitarium has been built. Cash donations are always acceptable, but there are urgent needs which can be supplied in other ways. It is for these things that the appeal goes out.

Only once a year is the call sent for help in these matters, so response should be general throughout the church.

The following are the most urgent needs of the Sanitarium at the present time:

- Sheets, 72 by 100 inches, 2-inch hem at top and bottom.
- Draw sheets, 45 by 72 inches, 1-inch hem at top and bottom.
- Pillow slips, 45 by 36 or 42 by 36 inches. However, all sizes can be used.
- Spreads, 72 by 90 inches. Dimity only.
- Blankets, 2 yards wide, light color, single or double, woolen or cotton.
- Quilts, 60 by 90 inches, light colors preferred.
- Hand towels, any size, blue border.
- Roller towels, 2½ yards long.
- Operating room towels, 18 by 34 and 18 by 12 inches, white huck preferred.
- Turkish towels.
- Wash cloths, size 12 by 12 inches.
- Dresser scarfs, 18 by 38 inches; other lengths can be used.
- Stand covers, 18 by 36 inches.
- Bedside table covers, 24 by 24 or 22 by 36 inches.
- Vegetables and fruits of all kinds, either fresh or canned.
- Flower vases.
- Drinking glasses.
- Old linen.

Aside from these, it is also urgent at this time that housewives and other friends contribute a jar of jelly or canned fruit to the Sanitarium. Last year this was started and a generous response was made. This year it should be even more so. One or two jars of fruit or jelly mean but little to each family, yet the aggregate amount to the Sanitarium supplies the needs for the year.

The request which is being made should be met with in a cheerful way, all responding happily to the splendid cause. It is a day of thanksgiving for all.

The River Moroni

In a late edition of the Atlas, published by the Rand-McNally Company, South American rivers are shown which bear names strikingly similar to the Book of Mormon word Moroni. Having almost the same phonetic sound as this word, one river is called "Maroni." It flows in a northerly direction into the Atlantic Ocean. The other river is known as "Morona." It rises in Ecuador and flows into Peru.

The great man Moroni, as recorded in the Book of Mormon, was known to all the nations of ancient America, both north and south. A river was called after him, and this is also mentioned in the record which has come down to us from this early people.

Surely it is more than a coincident that two rivers to-day bear practically the same name as one recorded in the Book of Mormon, named after a great character of that history! Scarcely could Joseph Smith have known of such rivers existing when they have only recently been contained in maps of South America. The names are significant of the fact that from ages past, down through many generations, has come a remnant of a language of a forgotten people. Descendants of an ancient race still carry with them traces of another age, little knowing whence their language came. Moroni lives to-day in the voice of the people, virtually because a great man is not forgotten in the social heritage of his descendants and because God has spoken again to reveal the mystery of his ways.

What Shall We Do to Save the Church?

Sermon by Elbert A. Smith during General Conference, Sunday afternoon, October 7, 1923.

PART I

What does the church mean to us? I trust that it means a great deal. The church was bought at a great price: "The church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." Not only did Jesus give his blood for the church, but many of his disciples in the early days were crucified. They were killed for the church. They, too, purchased it with their own blood. And our fathers, in this latter dispensation, also purchased the church with their blood. They were shot to death. They were cut down and hacked to pieces with corn knives and buried in a well at Haun's Mill. They were murdered at Carthage. And so we can say that with a great price they purchased the church, even with their own blood. And I am sure it means much to us to-day.

I believe myself that if thus I could secure the unity, the peace, and the forward progress of this church, I would gladly lie down in my grave; and I know that many others feel as I do, but we cannot do it in that way. We cannot save the church by lying down to die for it. We can only save it by standing up and living for it, and doing whatever God wants us to do.

Yes, the church means a great deal to us; more, perhaps, than we realize in moments of carelessness when we say we would die for it, but are not content to live for it.

Can the church be lost? Why, the church is to save others. Can it be lost? Salt is a saving element, and yet Jesus says if it loses its power to save it is henceforth no more good, but must be thrown out and trodden under foot of man.

The province of the church is to save men, and if it lapses into a condition where it cannot save men, then it is lost. How, then, shall we save the church? Any institution is saved so long as it functions as it was intended to function; but the institution or the organism that ceases to function as it was intended dies. When the heart ceases to beat, the lungs to breathe, and the brain to think, the body dies; and if the church ceases to fulfill the functions it was intended to fulfill we may conclude the church also will die.

Missionary Work First

What are the functions of the church? What is its work? First of all, I will say its work is missionary. I do not perhaps mean that is the most important. I will not say whether it is or not, but it is first in point of time. We cannot do anything until we win somebody to the banner of Christ. Jesus himself knew that, and his first work was missionary. He stood up alone, without one convert. In the third chapter of Matthew we have a picture of the beginning of his work, which was missionary. It says that he went through all Galilee preaching in every synagogue the gospel of the kingdom, and saying, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

His first work was missionary, and as he went preaching through Galilee, he saw Peter and Andrew and he said, "Come and follow me," and they followed him. They were his first converts—the first fruits of his mission; and next he saw James and John, and he said, "Come and follow me," and they followed him. Thus he began to accumulate to himself a body of believers.

So, to us, comes the commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." The church must continue to carry on that work. We must have young men willing and able to go out and preach the gospel, and to the end that they may go, we must have a body of tithepayers, a body of men earning money, so that these men can go; a body of men just as devoted as missionaries, who will not say, I have seen a dollar misspent and will never pay another dollar tithing; but, like the missionaries and their wives, who say, "I know many mistakes have been made, but woe is me if I preach not the gospel," they will say, "Woe is me if I pay not my tithing so that the gospel may be preached."

There were many backsliders in the days of Paul, many who would not preach, many who were slothful and foolish; but Paul did not say, I will not go because they do not go, rather he said, Woe is me if I preach not the gospel; and I say unto you men of business intrusted with the affairs of life, Woe unto you if you pay not your tithing and your consecrations, that these men may go and preach the gospel.

Then Comes Pastoral Work

Secondly, the work of the church is pastoral; perhaps not second in importance, but second in the steps of progression. Having accumulated a body of believers, Jesus started them on the road of Christian development. He said to his disciples, "Feed my sheep! Feed my lambs!" He was just as much interested in that as he was in missionary work, because it were idle for him to baptize people and win them to his cause, and then permit them to fall away and die because they were not fed and hence were not developed. To-day we have great need of pastors who are wise, consecrated, loving men, shepherds who will give their lives for the flock; men who think more of the sheep than they do of themselves; who are willing to go wherever they can, in pastoral work, in the homes where there are sick, tempted, or sad, and encourage them, to bind up their wounds and pour the oil of gladness into their spirits; men who are competent to organize their people and set them to work, so that one will not do one man's work, but get fifty men to work under his direction and in cooperation with him. And these men ought to be supported loyally by the people, and not be thrown down because of some little trivialities or personalities that may not appeal to some.

Finally, Zion

And the third great work of the church is Zionie; to take these converts, these sheep, these people, and weld them into a society—some people speak to-day about the social order—I do not care what men call it—call it the brotherhood of man, the fellowship of the church of God on earth and in heaven—call it that, if you will, but a society living together and working together and loving together in harmony with the gospel law, and all growing into the stature of Jesus Christ.

These three things stand out. I will not say that one is more important than the others. The church, to be saved, must maintain its missionary spirit. If it be saved, it must maintain its pastoral work. To be saved it must move on in its Zionie work.

A good brother said to me not long ago, If Brother so-and-so would go among the people, preaching the

Speculation

By Benjamin R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop

Roger W. Babson, the well-known financial adviser and statistician, in a letter to his clientele, makes the following statement in referring to the present as "The dangerous age" because of the careless way in which many people invest their money:

BE WARY OF NEW PROMOTIONS. These invariably meet with unforeseen contingencies. Remember that 95 per cent of new companies end in failure. Recognize that bonds issued wholly on property "to be constructed" are not tangibly secured. Funds for new enterprises should be supplied chiefly by those who can afford to back up their commitment with new money, if necessary. Limit your risk by taking seasoned issues.

There is good advice in the above for the membership of the church. Saints have squandered and lost thousands upon thousands of hard-earned dollars that should have gone into savings, or into sound investments, or into the Lord's treasury as tithing, offerings, or surplus, as hundreds of shares of stock received by the Presiding Bishop's office as "consecration" will attest.

From time to time the general church officers have cautioned the Saints against investments in various get-rich-quick concerns. In 1906 the Lord advised the church against the "spirit of speculation" (Doctrine and Covenants 127: 7), which admonition was timely in view of the wave of speculation that later swept the country. The following year General Conference Resolution No. 594½ was adopted:

That we disapprove of our ministry giving their attention to speculative mining or other ventures or their promotion; and that we advise all persons who may decide to invest in any enterprises of this kind to do so only after such investigation as shall be fully satisfactory to themselves as to the safety of their venture, the same as in other business enterprises, and not upon their confidence in the ministerial position of those who seek to interest them therein.

We wish especially to call attention to that class of enterprises in which you are urged to buy on the strength of dreams, visions, or other spiritual manifestations which others have had. Such methods capitalize the faith of the Saints, and in the event of disaster it is not money alone that is lost. Faith in God and in fellow church members may also be jeopardized. The basis of such operations is wrong.

If you invest, let it be after thorough investigation, so that you have some assurance from a sound business viewpoint. And even then invest only such moneys as you are willing to lose with equanimity and without undue hurt. Do not buy blindly on the strength of some one's dreams or visions. Do not

What Must We Do to Save Zion

Sermon by President F. M. Smith during
General Conference, October 7, 1923.

At the end of a day which has been full and I trust which has been profitable to us as a people, I know that this audience must have been filled to satiety, and it is indeed a pleasure to me to recognize that you are willing to be afflicted for another half hour at least. I do have a message to deliver to-night. It is not long. I shall not attempt to follow it into all its ramifications nor attempt to support it by argument and not even by scriptural quotations, for I take it for granted that those sitting before me are sufficiently versed in the rules of logic or sufficiently adroit in forensic efforts and are well enough posted on scripture to do all that for me.

Originally the subject which was given to me read, "What must Zion do to be saved?" and by some inadvertance, perhaps not inadvertance, it has been changed by those who had charge of the program into, "What must we do to save Zion?" And I fear that a little of the perturbed atmosphere of the conference has gotten into the hearts of the editors of the program, and they have been fearful perhaps that Zion was in danger of not being saved. But God has said that Zion must be. God has said that Zion shall put on her beautiful garments, and from out Zion shall shine the glory of God; and if the glory of God is intelligence it means that eventually there shall be developed a people who shall be called Zion, who reflect the highest degree of intelligence in the entire earth, and when I say that I have said what is an epitomization of the goal of this church—the highest developed people intellectually, the highest developed people spiritually, and the best developed people physically in the world, for no other people will be that, qualified to meet the Savior when he returns to earth in his quest for faith, which is the very foundation and dynamic of his religion.

buy either because you are told that this or that elder may have bought.

From conversations with, and letters received from, Saints throughout the church, in which they have told their financial experiences, we feel to offer the foregoing advice, believing that the exercise of caution along the lines suggested will save the membership many bitter disappointments and enable them to fulfill in a greater measure their righteous desires to serve God and their fellow men.

What Zion Is

What, then, is Zion? Zion, of course, in its objective form is a land and is a land which is characterized as a place where the people of God can find safety, to which they can gather from out of the entire length and breadth of the land, from over all this disturbed old world and free themselves from the conditions which are distressing, free themselves from conditions which are dangerous, and find peace and safety and happiness here.

It is a people also, a people who are characterized as the pure in heart, and when I have said that it is a people who are characterized by a high degree of intellectuality and a high degree of spirituality, coupled with a perfect condition of physical development, I have said it is a people who have reached the acme of culture, and that, too, is the goal of this people if I understand the spirit and genius of this work, and I think I do.

Furthermore, Zion is a condition—a condition which shall constitute a perfect society—a condition in which the inter-relation of man to man, of group to group, shall be according to the highest social order, a social order which shall be recognized of God. And when I have qualified it thus, I have distinguished it from all other peoples of the world who are attempting to stand for social reform. Let me repeat what I have said on many occasions: no social reform will ever succeed which leaves out God, and we as a people must at once emphasize the social aspect of our religion, but forget not God. And if Zion is thus understood by us, what means it to be saved? What have we to do to remove from us or from our minds or from our hearts that fear or suspicion that perhaps Zion shall not be saved?

Zion Must Be Free

For Zion to be saved it means that as a land it shall be freed from all unfavorable forces. I care not whether those forces originate from the flaws of nature which for the time being are misdirected, which things of course to be rectified must be placed in the hands of God, and on him must we depend therefor, or whether these unfavorable forces arise from man's imagination or whether they arise from man's mistakes, it is all the same. Zion must be saved from those unfavorable forces, and those unfavorable forces making against the establishment of Zion are not by any means confined to extraneous forces. And this people, if they are to be factors in freeing Zion from the danger of not being saved or established must be ready to listen to the voice of warning when that warning calls attention to the fact that there are forces within our midst making for disintegration and certainly heading from the establishment of Zion.

As a people it seems that we must be made free from all imperfections, and here I have but to call your attention once more to the triune development of man which must be carried on simultaneously and yet parallel, if you please, if we are to reach our highest form of development. And we must be able to say that we not only see the imperfections that exist among us as a people, but we must recognize the forces that are necessary to be liberated and put into operation in order to remove those imperfections. And those who may not be aware so keenly as others of the imperfections that exist should be slow to deny us the operation of those forces that will rectify them.

As a society to be saved, or for Zion to be saved, it means that it must be freed from all maladjustments, and when we look around to-day upon the maladjustments throughout the entire world and from which we are every hour and every minute suffering in some form or another of our economic existence, and when we recognize that we are constantly surrounded by individuals who are miserable or depressed, who are forlorn, who are almost ready to deny the existence of God because of these things, then we should, though we may be temporarily depressed, be lifted up because God has called attention to these things, has pointed the way to rectify them, and has called upon us as upon no other people in the world to be instruments in correcting these maladjustments. And shall we because of our internecine troubles refuse to move forward and carry on the work of removing the maladjustments of society to a place where Zion shall be free?

Zion, the Product of Religion

Zion thus described, as I have tried to define to you to-night and to indicate what it means to be made free, will be the product of religion made dynamic. Too long has it been considered to be the function of the church to develop a static religion. Too long has it been considered the task of the church to get the heart right and there leave it. What good is it to get the kingdom of God in the heart unless there issues from the individual as well as from the group of which he is a part something that will make the kingdom of God a dynamic, living force in society? This means, if it means anything, that if Zion is to be saved we must first of all have an infusion of spirituality, and by spirituality I mean that state of society, that state of the individual that will recognize God in everything. Not only that will see God in the stars and in the planets and in the great systems of the universe, not only that will see God in the rocks of the earth, but that will see God looking out of the eyes of every man and every woman whom we meet. For on such a foundation only can Zion be established and her building be erected so that she shall be free and be saved. For unless there be a spiritual foundation, then it stands to reason that the great, fine superstructure cannot be spiritual. It is our task not alone to lay the foundation of spirituality, but it is our task to see that as the building rises from the ground and from the foundation towards the capstone that every layer and every story shall become more and more refined as a spiritual building of architecture that shall challenge the approbation, we cannot say admiration, of God. This means then, if you have caught my meaning, that I consider that to attempt to build Zion on anything else than a moral and an emotional basis is to consider the task idly and ill-advisedly. For religion must be the dynamic of this people all the time, and always we must have our eyes fixed on God and his work.

Conservation of Missionary Work

If Zion is thus envisaged by you or you have got the glimpse of the goal as I see it, it means that Zion will be the cumulative product of the missionary work of the church in the past, and I hope that you will catch the significance of that. I hope that there will come to you the grandeur of the thought that the product of our missionary work in the past, if we had not disseminated our forces would be cumulative, and to-day we would have been enjoying a larger result and a larger fruitage than we are. For every man and every woman who is in Zion to-day, every man or every woman who will come to Zion to-morrow, and the whole aggregation of the inhabitants of Zion in the next decade will be either the direct convert or the child of a convert, or the child of a child of a convert, and that is what I mean when I say the cumulative effect of the missionary work of the church in the past.

It seems to me that it ought to take only a casual glance for us to recognize there are two sources through which the church loses its members—death and disaffection. And it also follows as a corollary that unless we have those forces at work that bring from the two available sources those which shall take the places of the dying or the apostates, we cannot grow as a people, and those two sources of recruiting are conversion and our own natural increase. And if our natural increase equals the amount of our conversions and if we lost our natural increase, brethren, what have we gained? And to-day we are confronted by a terrific challenge, a challenge that every church confronts, and that is that the young of the members of the church, the natural increase, which ought to be the surest and the safest from which our membership is kept up to normal, has not been conserved.

The methods on the firing line are not the methods of the recruiting station. The methods and activity of the man in the trench are not the methods and activity of the man of the commissary department. Let me for a moment pause in a plea that if I shall attempt to use a metaphor borrowed from military service that you will not do me the injustice of trying to carry that analogy too far, for metaphors and analogies are only used because unfortunately in our progress toward intellectual perfection we have not yet developed to the point where we can think without images. Hence we must objectify at times to illustrate, and metaphors and analogies are only for the purposes of the moment. And we do each other marked injustice when we attempt to carry them to an extreme. In attempting to bring to you this metaphor I am simply trying to illustrate what I mean, and that is this, that the method of converting the adults from outside our forces must necessarily be different than our methods of conserving our natural increase. And we should not be foolish enough to attempt to convert the people, say for instance of the next state, by the same methods that we are using to teach our eight-year-old people in Sunday school. And yet there are those in our midst who would tie our hands, those of us upon whom rests the task of taking care of our natural increase.

How Methods Differ

Let me put it in another form: The methods of doing missionary work in the United States, in Germany, in France, in Italy, in Palestine, in Australia, in New Zealand, or in the South Sea Islands, or wherever our missionary work is carried on, must of necessity differ from our method of educating in Zion. And yet as a church we are under direct command of God to be alert in both lines of activity. After conversion, what then is the task? Let us presume for a moment that we have throughout the world at large a missionary force which stands at the top notch of efficiency, in which each man has been trained to the last limit. And by training I do not mean (and let us bear in mind this) I do not mean by training that a man has to be crammed in a theological seminary, I do not mean that a man should cram in a college or high school, but I do mean by having been permitted either in the field or outside of the field to have gone through that process of development that will bring about the top notch of condition so that his utmost talents will have been developed. Let us say then we have a missionary force which has been developed to the top notch of condition, and they are bringing to us converts by the thousands. Are we ready to receive them? Our task is only begun when we have brought people into this church, when we have pointed their faces towards Zion. The next question will be not only how can I get there and how can I live when I get there, but how can I help others to get there? We cannot drop them there. And furthermore, when those converts have been assimilated, when they have been thoroughly taught the doctrine of the church and inducted into the kingdom by being inoculated, if you please, with the principles of the gospel, there still stands before us the task committed to us by Paul when he said, "Let us go on to perfection." And it becomes the duty of the church to carry those people unto perfection, and only an organization will do that. And where you have organization that is functioning to the good of the people, where you have an organization that is attempting to carry the people on to such a goal as that, you must have men trusted with power, but benignly so. And because there is power granted in organization and because there is centralization of power by your authority and by your vote, it is distinctly unchristian to accuse those men of desiring to use that power maliciously.

Going On to Perfection

Not only must the process of assimilation therefore be carried on if Zion is to be saved, but if this people is to make progress it stands as an inevitable result that each generation of its children must be in advance of the generation preceding, else we are not going on to perfection. Hence we must be able not only to recognize the road over which we have come, we must be able to recognize not only the processes which have caused our children in this generation to reach a certain standard, but we must be able to build on those forces, free the additional forces, and loosen those powers that will take the children of that generation and carry them on one step further in the development towards Zion, and that cannot be done by preaching the gospel to the heathen all the time, either.

If I have succeeded so far in making myself clear to you, it means in other words that for this church to attempt to put all its resources into missionary work alone would be fallacious, to put it mildly. There must be a disposition to recognize that we need experts in all lines, and it will not be for one line of experts to say that theirs is the most important thing in the church. Let me tell you something: I expect to see that as we develop more and more these lines of experts, experts in missionary work, experts in child development, experts in industry, experts in farming, and all that, it will become more and more difficult for the organization to control those various experts so that there shall be a steady forward movement in the church; but somewhere, somehow, there must lie in this organization, if Zion is to be redeemed, that power of representing the authority of God as well as of the people that shall hold these various departments in perfect working order. Call that what you please, I care not, but it must be done if Zion is going to be saved. It is but to say in another form that unless we upon whom the responsibility of the care and nurture of the church has been laid by divine mandate can keep pace with the processes of proselytizing, then it means that there will be brought into our midst those accretions and additions which will not be perfectly assimilated. And if you desire to see what I mean, go with me to the records of our church. Sit beside me at the executive desk and see the number of branches that are in trouble because there has not been an assimilation of converts. See the trouble which arises in all parts of the church from even the most trivial of instances when branches are torn asunder and are hopelessly divided, simply because there are people in the church that have never yet been thoroughly converted to Latter Day Saintism.

Cooperation of Experts

I know I am speaking plainly and I am speaking earnestly, but I am simply laying before you the task of this church if Zion is to be saved, and somebody will have to do that work. The specialist on the frontier must be willing to let other specialists work. I can conceive how the coyotes and lizards romp on the open spaces of the deserts of Arizona, but it still remains true that the children of Zion must find opportunity to give vent to their God-given instinct for play in Zion, not in Arizona.

In order for us to save Zion we must be organized in every line of development to the highest form of spirituality. Let me repeat it, among our youth there must be put into operation and maintained those forces of spirituality to the highest degree possible in Zion, and from there let the forces emanate and radiate throughout the church. Let me repeat it again, we must have in Zion those forces that shall safeguard the religious and spiritual development of our youth, for there lies our greatest possibility. And when I say that I do not for a moment disparage the excellence of the adults of the church. I do not disparage for a moment the qualities of the latest acquisition to the church, but it remains, let me repeat, an inevitable and indisputable truth, that if a people are progressing it means that the children of each succeeding generation are reaching a higher form of development than the children of the preceding generation; hence our business of higher development lies with our children and it must not be neglected.

Development of Spirituality

This highest possible form of spirituality must be developed by our adults after they are brought into the church, and we must somehow, somewhere not only loosen but we must control those forces so that they shall be working in the proper direction. Whether we be youth or whether we be adult, every person knows to-day that we have but to step a few short yards from our doorstep until we have entered those morasses of infidelity which are threatening the safety of our youth, our home, our community, and even our State; and hence we cannot ignore them and there is no line of activity indulged in by youth or adults that we as a church, if we are to save Zion, must not be interested in and attempt to control the forces that make for good and to control as well the forces that make for evil and eventually eliminate them from our midst. And I have not attempted to-night to indicate specifically what those forces are, but it seems to me that with half an eye and with even only one third of your intelligence you can see the problem so clearly that there ought to be no need of us pleading for the means and the support to protect Zion and her youth.

All Are Teachers

And so I have placed before you perhaps briefly, but I trust sufficiently methodical so that you will know at least I believe it, the task of the priesthood, and of the teachers. I was about to leave it there, but I felt I would get in trouble if I did not put in those few words "and teachers," for I have been tempted to add it will take a versatile, flexible, and able corps of men and women. It means anyway that our forces and those who are engaged in teaching, in preaching, and exhorting, and that is summing up the duties of the priesthood, but not alone are the priesthood to be engaged in teaching, for let me tell you this, if Zion is to be saved, every inhabitant of Zion must become a teacher—a teacher of the children, a teacher of each other, for education is nothing more nor less than learning together, and when you are learning together you are either acting one as the teacher and one as the pupil or you are mutually and reciprocally both teacher and pupil. Let me repeat, every man and woman, and, I may say every child, that comes to Zion is a potential teacher and a teacher in fact, for all of us can learn important lessons from children. Only as workers together with God can Zion be saved.

Human Wisdom Not Sufficient

I have been accused of trying to leave God out of Zion. Never for a moment, my fellow Latter Day Saints, never from the moment or the hour that I assumed the responsibility of the priesthood in this church, never from the moment that I accepted the responsible position of counselor to the President, and to a far less extent since I assumed the onerous task of leading this people, have I failed to recognize that human wisdom is insignificant and that human knowledge will not suffice, and that no man, I care not who he is, in this church can discharge his responsibility, I care not how small that responsibility is so far as his church office is concerned, unless he recognizes God as his partner in his task; and, recognizing that, it would simply be preposterous for me to say anything else than that I have striven to merit the association of God's Spirit to help me in that task. And in saying that I do not boast, because I know that every conscientious Latter Day Saint in the world is doing the same thing.

Text Has Become Slogan

There has been a little passage of scripture, part of which has been quoted so often within the last few months that it has become almost a slogan of this conference, and I wish to repeat that slogan, but I wish to amplify it. We have said that unless we are humble and full of love we cannot do this work; but, brethren, to be humble and full of love is simply to be in a condition to do something. And the second part of that quotation has in almost every instance been left out, "having faith, and hope, and charity." For what is being humble and full of love unless it is being vitalized by faith, faith that looks to God as the partner in and as the director of our activities, who shows us the goal and who gives us the spirit that illuminates it; who shows us our task and gives us the courage and strength to accomplish it? And what is faith unless it also have its handmaiden "hope," hope that steps in where knowledge leaves off and helps to see beyond the veil, that marks the limit of our finite eyes; hope that gives us the assurance of things not seen, the evidence of those things that still lie beyond? And charity, which is the fruitage of the Spirit of God. We cannot be humble and full of love and be saved in Zion, unless we have vitalized that condition by also having faith, hope, and charity, which are the fruitage of God's Spirit. To say that we are humble and full of love and are yet trying to accomplish something would be to say that the quiet waters of the river of Niagara above the falls are equal in dynamic energy to the water that is going through the turbines of the electrical machines along the shore, and the analogy can be carried out to illustrate exactly what I mean.

Faith, Hope, and Charity

Let us be humble and full of love, but before God when we get in that condition let us manifest that we have faith, hope, and charity, by accomplishing the work of God. Faith, hope, and charity is the dynamic that will convert the kinetics of humility and love into actual service. To be humble and full of love is only to make a start, to be in the condition in which the Spirit of God can use us as instruments in the hands of God to enable us to accomplish the purposes for which we were sent here. With our eyes fixed on God and with the goal of the church shining before us in all its clearness, that it so clearly marks the road in a general direction, though at times we may be left in doubt as to the short cuts, the corners, the dips in the road, and the hollows as well as the plains, yet it seems to me with our eyes on God we can unite in the determination to save Zion by working together, not by fighting with one another, if the highest form of spirituality on earth is the only thing that we, as a people, will be satisfied with.

Zion Will Be Redeemed

Let me repeat: Zion is to be redeemed. It is the task of this people to accomplish it. We must lay the foundation of spirituality. For one hundred years the church has been at work at that. Who can say that the foundation has not been laid? It seems to me it would mean that there has been an egregious failure of the men of the church in the past if we cannot now say the foundations of Zion are in place. And being in place, my fellow Latter Day Saints, is it not to say to us that we are standing idly by when we should be actively at work, when we are not building on the foundation our fathers laid?

The building of Zion, it seems to me, attracts us with all its beauty. And upon the foundations which have been handed us by our fathers, can we not proceed to lay brick after brick, stone after stone until Zion shall be erected and the people gathered together? A people who because of their endowment—intellectual, educational, industrial, social—will be outstanding, and who will attract the eyes of the world so that they will be able to say, "Verily, let us not go up against Zion, for her armies are terrible in the might of the Lord."

A Parting Tribute

(Funeral sermon of Orine McClain, preached at Stone Church at Independence, Missouri, May 7, 1923, by T. C. Kelley.)

We have met this afternoon to pay a tribute of respect or esteem to our young sister Elnor Orine McClain who passed away at near the noon hour yesterday. She was born near Palmersville, Tennessee, September 3, 1906, being at the time of her death, sixteen years, eight months, and three days old. A devoted father and mother, three brothers, two sisters, and other relatives are left behind for a time; while one sister had preceded her to the land of rest.

Sometimes we say a last tribute of respect. But the offering we make to-day to the memory of this sainted girl, is not the last she will receive. There will be many others. There are a number who will sadly miss and fondly remember her; and from their hearts will come, either mentally or outspoken, such needs of praise as the good are generally wont to receive from those who know and love them. Two hearts especially will not forget.

Like a lovely garden planted to beautiful ever-greens, which retain their beauty in winter, as in summer, so will the father love and mother love of these two hearts continually bring verdant offerings to her memory.

I have read some verses from chapter 1 in the book of Job, and call your special attention to a part of verse 21 in this chapter and to verses 53 and 54 in the 15th chapter of 1 Corinthians, which taken together read thus:

The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

For this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruption shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory.

The Mystery of Death

It is hard to understand some things about life and death; why life must end and death must come. It is very hard to understand why one so young and fair, and with such promise of doing good in this world as our young sister was should have to pass through death's dark portals, while many with little or no promise of usefulness, and no bright prospects for happy days before them should be left to plod along life's weary course.

But if we can grasp the full meaning of Paul's declaration, "This corruption must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality," it will aid us in understanding why one so undefiled and of such tender years must die. The idea seems to be the immortal and incorruptible state for which we long and for which we hope, at least so far as the body is concerned, cannot be attained except by passing through death and the resurrection, or by translation as Enoch and Elijah, and this in my judgment would be as death and resurrection in one. Be that as it may, this mortal must put on immortality, else we cannot enter into the celestial kingdom and enjoy all its blessings and joys; for, said the apostle, "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." (1 Corinthians 15:50.)

In some way, then, corruption must be removed from our bodies, else it would not be possible to have inheritance in the kingdom of God and enjoy its celestial glories. But through the processes and powers of death and resurrection the Lord designs to "change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." (Phillipians 3:21.)

This young sister, in order to have part in this fashioning process, must, like all others, pass through the dark portals of death and come up again from this dark abode in that glorious day when "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," in the likeness of Christ.

Another thing that may help us to understand why the young are stricken by the cruel hand of death is this: The end of this life is not the end of existence for human beings. In that realm where the spirits of the just await the day of resurrection, there is, I have no doubt, active, intelligent ministrations and service to be done. The Lord has need of the young who are capable, pure, and undefiled, to perform this service; not to the exclusion of, but jointly with, those of riper age.

Viewing it in this way, I think it is easier to accept Job's philosophy when broken heartedly he cried: "The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

I do not think Job blessed the Lord because his children were taken but because the Lord had taken them. By the Lord it was appointed that all should be "made alive" again, in the proper order in the resurrection at the last day. All this Job understood, as these words from chapter 19 of his book will show:

For I know that my Redeemer liveth and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me.

Can we not see that in the midst of his sorrows over the loss of his loved ones, Job had reasons to bless the name of the Lord because he had taken his children and would bring them back again in the great day when death shall lose its sting, and be "swallowed up in victory"?

So to-day, it seems hard indeed that death should enter this home and take this dear one therefrom right at the time when life was abloom with hope and aspiration, and when the gateway to larger fields of usefulness was standing open inviting her to enter.

Opportunity for Service Beyond

But if we could see behind the veil and know just how much greater are her opportunities for doing good and rendering service to God in that home where the spirits of the good dwell happily, where her suffering has ceased, and her joys increased and intensified, then would we find it easier to appreciate the fact that "the Lord hath taken away." If we could realize that her passing through the valley and shadow of death is only a step in the unfoldment of the Lord's plan to eliminate the corruptible from her body, that incorruption and immortality might be put on through the resurrection by the power of God, it would help to lighten the sorrow we feel when loved ones pass away, especially when we are assured that their lives have been marked by purity, chastity, uprightness, and faith in Jesus; for in the Bible we have this promise:

For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.—1 Thessalonians 4:14.

And again:

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.—Revelation 14:13.

So we see the Lord takes them away: he will bring them again, and for this hope we can say, "Blessed be the name of the Lord," even though we are in the very presence of death.

David seems to have been imbued with the same idea. Hear him:

I shall behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness.—Psalms 17:15.

Job and David speak one language. They seem to be of one mind. The theme points to the resurrection of the dead. One of them declares: Though my reins be consumed within me—though skin worms may destroy this body—yet in my flesh, I shall see God. Mine eyes shall behold him.

The other says: "I shall behold thy face when I awake in thy likeness."

Both are to see God; both are to behold his face; both are to be satisfied. The Lord gave; the Lord takes away in order that his children of all time might enjoy the same blessed privilege. So at all time they can say, "Blessed be the name of the Lord."

"To Die Is Gain"

To most people, and especially the young, life is sweet, and full of promise and good cheer, but, for all this, we would not like to live always under conditions we have to meet later on in life. Sorrow and trouble together with bitterness and pain betimes, are the common lot of humanity. And, sad as we are when our loved ones are taken by death, I am sure it would be worse if we were compelled to live on forever under these conditions where we are beset with sickness, pain, and a thousand troubles which spoil to an extent, the joys and pleasures of life. Sister Orine suffered much. The pains which have racked her body for weeks were excruciating indeed. Many others have suffered and still suffer as did she. Besides many undergo mental suffering which is more distressing still. If this should go on eternally I am sure we would find it more intolerable than death.

It is, to use Paul's language, better "to depart and be with Christ which is far better" . . . "to die is gain." (Philippians 1: 21-23.) Better, as Alma says, for the spirit to be taken home to God who gave it life, and be "received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest, a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all their care and sorrow."

This sounds much like the revelation of Saint John: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord . . . that they may rest."

To secure this rest, and behold the Lord's face in righteousness, this dear one must pass through the throes of death, being planted in the likeness of Christ's death that she might be also in the likeness of his resurrection.

I know not why she had to be taken now, just blossoming as she was into a state of maidenhood replete with promise of higher perfection, and possessed as she was with a desire to live and do her part in pushing the work of the church to completion. It is strange that such sad things take place. I cannot understand it.

But God is far wiser than we; and I have thought that there may be need of workers in the Lord's vineyard on the other side as well as here, and those who are qualified for service there are "taken away" because the Lord has better opportunities for them to develop than they could ever have here. This may help us to understand why sometimes the gifted and talented die young while many who are, so far as we can see, of little or no benefit in the world, not even to themselves, live on for years.

The All-Inclusive Plan

So a wise and merciful Father has taken her unto himself. His purpose we may not fully know, but of one thing we may rest assured, to her the change means gain, not loss. To her it was gain to die, as well as for Saint Paul. So, then, death is not all bad. It is a part of the all-inclusive plan for the elimination of the old corruptible, mortal part of man, and putting on incorruption, and immortality when our vile body is changed and fashioned like unto his glorious body, and we become like him, and awake in his likeness and be satisfied.

Some one, I am not sure just who it was (Mrs. Sigourney, I believe), wrote a very pathetic poem entitled, "The dying boy." It has some very beautiful thoughts and, paraphrased to suit the conditions, the thoughts may well be adapted to this occasion. It starts out by saying:

It must be sweet, in childhood to give back
The spirit to its Maker, ere the heart
Has grown familiar with the path of sin,
And sown to gather up its bitter fruits.
I knew a boy whose infant feet had trod
Upon the blossoms of some seven springs,
And when the eighth came round and called him out
To revel in its light, he turned away
And sought his chamber to lie down and die.

After giving the dying message of the boy to his father, mother, brother, and sister the poem closes in this way:

Morning spread over earth her rosy wings,
And that meek sufferer, cold and ivory pale,
Lay on his couch asleep. The gentle air
Came through the open window, freighted with
The savory odors of the early spring,
He breathed it not; the laugh of passers-by Jarred like a discord in some mournful tune,
But wakened not his slumber. He was dead.

To this one who here lies wrapped in the cold embrace of death there had come not eight only but sixteen springs, each giving verdant foliage to the trees, and to woodland and meadow, pretty blossoms. Upon these blossoms of these sixteen seasons her feet had trod, and though not all the while "infant feet" we are quite sure they had but very little, if any, familiarity with the paths of sin, nor had she sown to gather up its bitter fruits. On the other hand her sowing had been what Paul would call "to the Spirit," and such he says "shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." (Galatians 6: 8.)

Morning will continue to spread o'er earth her rosy wings as when she was alive, but however resplendent the morning scenes may appear to us, her eyes will behold them no more while time as we now reckon it shall last. But I am sure that in that realm where her free spirit abides and tranquilly awaits the day of resurrection her raptured vision will feast on scenes far more gorgeous and delightful than is possible to behold in this life. So again we see that, for those whose feet are unfamiliar with the paths of sin, "to die is gain."

The Paradise of God

The gentle air freighted with the perfume of blossoms of springtime and summer will pass over her grave by day and by night, but will be unbreathed by her. The flowers that bedeck hills and dales, and brighten and beautify woodlands and meadows, will be seen by her eyes no more on earth. But in the place whence she has gone to dwell with the spirits of just men and just women made perfect, are flowers more beautiful and brilliant, of more delicate tints, and of much richer and sweeter fragrance than this world can produce under present conditions. Whatever loss she sustains by having her privilege to see the flowers of earth and smell their fragrance cut off by early death, will be more than made up in her opportunities to behold the scenes of elysian beauty in the paradise of God.

The laugh of passers-by will "jar like a discord in some wonderful tune," but it will affect those who remain and will not disturb or detract from her pleasure as she listens to the tuneful music of the choirs above, where harmony of sight and sound prevails and discords are unknown.

No wonder the apostle of love was constrained to write: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." No wonder Alma in describing the abode of the righteous between death and the resurrection calls it a state of happiness, a state of peace, where they shall rest. "To die is gain"—always provided one "dies in the Lord," as this girl did.

There are those who disbelieve the doctrine of the resurrection. They say it is an impossibility. They cannot understand how the body that has returned to dust by long years continuance in the grave, or reduced to ashes by fire, or otherwise reduced to its original elements, can possibly be raised again and reanimated. I remember when I was a young man I read an argument made by a minister of one of the popular churches in debate with one of ours, something like this:

Men fall into the sea and are drowned and their bodies are eaten by fishes. These fishes are afterwards caught and eaten by other men, and so it would be impossible to preserve the identity of each body and; hence, there could be no resurrection from the grave.

For an atheist to make such an argument might not seem strange or inconsistent, but for a man who poses as a minister for God to make it is very strange and very inconsistent. It is a challenge to the power of God.

Every tree in the forest or orchard, every green leaf, every blade of grass growing on sward or meadow, and in fact every living thing is a witness to the existence of a power which is able to raise the dead.

Miracle of the Resurrection

The mystery surrounding the existence of our bodies here is as unexplainable as the miracle of the resurrection. We say our bodies grow. Surely they do, but how? By the laws of nature, says one. But how by the laws of nature?

The chemist teaches that a human body is composed of a number of chemical elements. Carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen may be mentioned as among these well-known elements; and there are others. How did the laws of nature collect these elements in just the right proportion, and shape them into just the right form to make a human body, and then crown their work by putting into this body a mysterious something called life, and endow it with the power of intelligent thought and speech? Who can answer? Whoever can should have little difficulty in explaining the mode of operation by which the dead shall be raised in the Lord's due time.

Maybe, too, he can tell how the same laws of nature could take from the same surroundings, different elements, or else the same elements in different proportions, and make besides the flesh of men, "another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds." (1 Corinthians 15:39.)

God whom we worship is as able to preserve and gather the elements into which our bodies will dissolve even the identical particles that are peculiarly and individually our own, and restore them in fashion and form like unto the glorious body of Christ, in the resurrection period, as he has been and still is able to gather the gaseous elements from nature's great reservoir and fashion our mortal bodies into their present form. I believe when you think of it you will agree with me that it would be no more miraculous, nor any more mysterious or impossible.

Our bodies will be neither more nor less disorganized when death and complete dissolution have taken place than they were before they were framed. He who made the carbon, hydrogen, nitrogen, oxygen, phosphate, lime, etc., and of these materials formed man in the first place, can preserve the same elements and reform them into a glorious body, incorruptible, immortal, and over which death will have no more power.

There is, then, no grounds for rejecting the belief in the resurrection of the dead. The evidences of the existence of a power sufficiently great to raise the dead are very strong and quite unimpeachable; besides they are almost if not quite unlimited in numbers.

Every heavenly body moving untiringly in the orbit ordained for it, and from which it does not vary in time or movement, is witness of a power great enough to perform the miracle of resurrection. And I repeat, every blade of grass, every stalk of corn, and every fruitful tree that grows, every human being, in which there is intelligence and life bears faithful and true witness that he who made the promise that "The dead—all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and shall come forth," is abundantly able to fulfill it. (John 5:25-28.)

The Sympathy of Jesus

It would be idle, it would be futile, for me to tell these parents not to weep over their loss. They cannot help it. Why should they not express their sorrow. Jesus wept at sight of the misery and anguish of the two sisters of Lazarus when their brother had died. Somewhere I read that Jesus often wept. So he wept over the death of his friend. It seems that one who is normal cannot help it. I believe Jesus sympathizes with us to-day the same as with his friends of Bethany in the far-away past. And of this I am glad. I think we all should be.

So I say again, it is vain for me to tell these who are sorely bereft not to weep, but I will exhort them to remember the words of Saint Paul to the Thessalonians. (1 Thessalonians 4: 13.)

"But I would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them who are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others who have no hope."

It must be awful for those who mourn without hope. For such, it seems to me, the sting of death would be terrible. For those aching hearts here to-day there is the balm of hope—the comfort of believing that the resurrection day will bring a happy reunion with the loved one to whom death and the grave lays claim to-day.

To that claim we must yield now, but we do so in the confident belief that from the sleep of death there will be glad waking for her and all who have slept in Christ, and that sometime we shall be permitted to stand with prophet and apostle and join with them in the exultant cry: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" This is our hope.

Let us so live that when we are called to pass through the valley and shadow of death we will then fear no evil; and that when our time comes to lie down in the narrow cell of death, we go, not as the poor, untutored slave to the unrequited labor of an overburdening task, but let us go, under the sustaining and soothing influence of an unfaltering trust in God, like one who with conscience free, when the shades of night have fallen and the labors of the day are all done, "wraps the draperies of his couch about him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

At a recent meeting of the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America, Theodore Roosevelt, jr., gave a little glimpse of the great Theodore Roosevelt's training to his children. "When we were all little," he said, "it was before the days of scouting, but we had the principles that underly it in our family life. My father was our scoutmaster. He took us on "hikes" with him. We used to have point to point walks where we'd swim ponds, climb bluffs, get over, under, or through anything that lay in our way." Continuing, he told how Theodore Roosevelt would take the children camping, where they would spend the night on the end of some point jutting out into the sound and sleep soundly to the rustle of waves on the beach. Strict discipline was always kept, and woe to a selfish, whiny boy.

Home Building

PART III

[Mrs. Smith, who is the author of this third article on home building, talks about the temporal and eternal things in life. Sometimes the very purpose of the home is lost sight of or never even sensed by the founders of a family. They live in a house; they never make a home. How many fathers know anything about the problems of their home aside from the monthly bills? How many find perfect cooperation on the part of the wife? How many give intelligent support to the wife in her home work? Misunderstanding is what leads to unsuccessful homes, and this is due to a lack of knowledge. Read what Mrs. Smith has to say about overeating, living outside the income, and the mother who is too busy to be a mother.]

Finding Time for the Temporal and Eternal Things of Life

By Mabel K. Smith

Miss Read says in the last part of Chapter 3 in her book on Mothercraft that the things which are seen are temporal and the things which are not seen are eternal. All those facts which appear as material matters are for the purpose of caring for the eternal things. There are certain sentiments or attitudes which are eternal, that our children should be taught, such as God-consciousness, truth, decency, etc. If a mother be a true mother there must be time to bring about these attitudes and sentiments. But that mother must also be able to save time, energy, material, and money. This ability to save time and energy, depends first of all upon the size of the family budget, and every home, every true home, should be fixed on a firm financial basis.

Where the Money Goes

A mistake is made when so many young men and girls who have made money are unable to adjust themselves to the expenditures of the home. After marriage the income goes before they know it. They complain and say they cannot make ends meet. If asked how they have been spending their money they will say so much for gas, electricity, fuel, etc. But they know very little about the other expenditures. One young mother will say, "I never learned to sew." She buys ready-made clothes or hires her sewing done. Another will say, "I don't like to cook very well." She buys much of her food ready-cooked at the delicatessen or in cans. Some are physically unable to do the cooking, so hire it done.

Where does the money go? A diagnosis of these cases would reveal many loopholes where money slips away unnoticed.

Fixing the Family Budget

Fix the family budget. Every mother should know where the money goes. Many a good man is spoiled by a woman's working, but on the other hand there are cases where the man does everything in his power to make the income cover the expenses, yet the wife spends without thought or system.

There is a book written by Mary S. Rose, The Family Budget, which gives the various divisions of expenditures in the home. Miss Read in Mothercraft also lists the divisions. The Family Budget Book published by the church has been compiled purposely to meet the needs of the members, especially those who are limited to a minimum income. No difficulty will be encountered in looking for material on the family budget.

Division of Expenditures

A certain percentage of the income should go for food, a certain percentage for clothing, a certain percentage for health, a certain percentage for general development, etc. One month alone cannot determine these percentages. A suit may be purchased one month, but this will last for several months. It may be necessary to renew subscriptions to several magazines during one month. An opportunity to save by buying linens or certain staple articles of food in a wholesale way may present itself. A serious illness or contagious disease may run the health percentage up for one month or two. The average must be taken for a number of months, perhaps a year, to arrive at a fairly accurate judgment of just what percentage of the income should be set aside for certain expenses.

However, even in practicing economy, one must exercise common sense. There was an instance of a home in the slums where everything in groceries was bought with the little money they had, and there being no other place in the house to store it, they put it in the bath-tub. This was not economy in the end, for it defeated the cause of health.

Domestic Engineers

A mother says, "I am having trouble in getting my finances to come out even in the end." If there were domestic engineers who could be called in for consultation, this mother could be aided. She could be taught how to keep a budget and after that, a glance on the part of the engineer would reveal the mistakes. This expert could point out to that mother where the leaks are and how to stop them.

But much trouble is encountered by the few experts we do have when they attempt to aid mothers in setting their homes in order. If it is suggested that the mother take a course of study in home management, for instance, the mother immediately says that her time is entirely occupied doing other things. This woman is merely housekeeping. But if she is concerned with life around her, then she is keeping a home.

A child's welfare is the most important phase of home life. Other things can be left undone, but the child's education must not be slighted. The mother who spends all her time on housework has no time for her children. The great theory in home building can be expressed in a few words, "Look after the children's lives and welfare rather than do every little thing that one may think has to be done."

Organization of Work

All conveniences for labor saving would not be worth anything if we did not ask: What can we eliminate and what must we do? How can time be saved in sweeping, cleaning, and dusting? Analyze the whole situation before starting to work, divide up the time, then go to work. Have a schedule.

Many mothers cannot get through. This is because too much time is wasted. There is loss of motion because the work has not been organized. When a good schedule is worked out and followed, in a short time housework will run smoothly and there will be time for the more important phases of home building. Learn the value of motion.

When talking about building a home one woman said, "Build me a big kitchen." She knew nothing about the value of motion. Now all experts are agreed that what is wanted is a small kitchen so that waste motion is eliminated. A certain girl who wrapped up shoes in a factory learned to eliminate one arm movement. This increased her speed so greatly that her salary was also increased. That is what the elimination of one waste motion amounted to. Why not increase our time and energy in the home by eliminating not only one, but a dozen useless movements? It can be done.

How wonderful would it be if we could have a number of experts, domestic engineers, available who could go into kitchens, plan the equipment and arrange the kitchen so that all unnecessary steps would be stopped! This would be a big step in the prevention of illness that results from overwork. An ideal, model kitchen would be a great aid to home builders if they could but see such a kitchen already in operation before they planned their own. One domestic expert says, "Do not let an architect plan your kitchen."

Puttering Over Work

Don't putter over your work. Give everything a time limit—cooking, dishwashing, cleaning, laundry.

Cooking should have a minimum of one hour and twenty minutes and a maximum of three hours and thirty minutes. Some women would look with horror upon those figures. They say, "Why, I spend all my time in the kitchen." Others say, "I have to cook three square meals a day." Such an amount of eating would impair the health of anyone. No one needs to be fed like that, and it takes extra time. Bulletins on all these home subjects may be obtained free of charge from the Department of Labor at Washington, District of Columbia. One on Meal Planning is by Essie M. Heyle, of the University of Missouri. A knowledge of this bulletin would have obviated the occasion for a statement recently overheard by the writer: "I had roast meat, macaroni and cheese, and beans for dinner." Think of it! Three meat dishes all in one meal! Such a meal overloads the stomach. One meat dish would have been plenty, together with potatoes as the starchy food, and one watery vegetable, as cabbage, carrots, spinach, or tomatoes. A salad may take the place of a watery vegetable. A little dessert will finish the meal nicely. Would it take forever to prepare that? Have simple foods, cook them in a limited time, and do not overdo it.

When it comes to dishwashing, Miss Read says: "Do not dry the dishes." Have a dish tray in which to drain the dishes. Pour the boiling water over them and set aside to dry. This also gives the dishes a better luster.

How about ironing everything? There is not a flat thing that needs to be ironed—sheets, towels, and underwear—which usually get ironed. Most scientists say it is more sanitary not to iron them. Ironing closes up the little pores which allow the air to pass through. Make use of all the electrical conveniences which you can procure. They are life-lengtheners.

Do not get overtired. We cannot work well nor think normally when we are physically exhausted. Do not neglect to have some rest periods in your schedule. At these times, if only for five minutes, relax completely.

And for your encouragement, when schedules at times seem hard to follow and budgets unruly, remember that domestic science is the application of everything in art, literature, and science to our daily life. Let that thought lift us out of the drudgery of work and give to all that we do a spiritual significance.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Jews Restoring Wealth of Palestine

Mr. Lloyd George, writing in the London Daily Telegraph on Palestine's future, says that the Jews alone can redeem Palestine from the wilderness and restore its ancient glory.

"In that trust there is no injustice to any other race. The Arabs have neither the means, the energy, nor the ambition to discharge this duty. The British Empire has too many burdens on its shoulders to carry this experiment through successfully. The Jewish race, with its genius, its resourcefulness, its tenacity, and not least, its wealth, can alone perform this essential task."

From 1917 on, when the Jews began to resettle Palestine, the country has progressed slowly but steadily. The land available was not of the best, for the Arabs were already there. Even the purchase of land from the Arab had to be done quietly and inconspicuously to avoid arousing the fears and anger of this people. Often the Jews were driven to settle on barren sand dunes and malarial swamps.

The best idea of what has been done by the Jews in Palestine may be had in the words of Mrs. Fawcett, the famous woman leader. She visited Palestine in 1921 and again in 1922. She says:

"So far from the colonies and the colonists draining the country of its resources, they have created resources which were previously nonexistent; they have planted and skillfully cultivated desert sands and converted them into fruitful vineyards and orange and lemon orchards; in other parts they have created valuable agricultural land out of what were previously dismal swamps, producing nothing but malaria and other diseases. The colonists have not shrunk from the tremendous work and the heavy sacrifices required. Many of the early arrivals laid down their lives over their work; the survivors went on bravely, draining the swamps, planting eucalyptus trees by the hundred thousand, so that at length the swamp became a fruitful garden, and the desert once more blossomed like the rose."

The Jewish farmer produces heavier and richer crops than his Arab neighbor. He has introduced into the country more scientific methods than the crude ones of the Arab. But, says Mr. Lloyd George:

"It will be long ere Canaan becomes once more a land flowing with milk and honey. The effects of the neglect and misrule of centuries cannot be effaced by the issue of a declaration. The cutting down of the trees has left the soil unprotected against the heavy rains, and the rocks which were once green with vineyards and olive groves have been swept bare. The terraces which ages of patient industry built up have been destroyed by a few generations of Turkish stupidity. They cannot be restored in a single generation. Great irrigation works must be constructed if settlement is to proceed on a satisfactory scale."

Dedicate New Mormon Temple

The new Mormon temple at Cardston, Alberta, costing over one million dollars and taking fifteen years to build, was dedicated recently.

The style of architecture resembles the temples of the Aztecs, whose ruins are found in Central and South America. Hardly a curve is found in its lines, the massive pile of granite having the effect of straight pillars and square cornices. It is built in three terraces and lacks the tower which characterizes the temple at Utah.

A description of the temple and its uses appears in the Great Falls Tribune as follows:

"As we enter the outer court—which by design resembles the 'Court of the Gentiles' in Solomon's temple at Jerusalem—a sense of symmetry in white marble first impresses the eye. This resolves itself into marble walls and mosaic floor, with flower beds and fountains. From the terrace above, the mountains of the great divide are plainly seen, Old Chief, across the line in Montana, with his square roof-shaped crest 8,500 feet in the air, leading the array. Both the court and the terrace will still be open to the public after the rest of the temple is closed by its dedication.

"Entering the temple, we first find the offices of those whose duty it is to look into the credentials of those who seek to enter, and to perform the rituals for which the temple is intended. After removing shoes, they wait in the assembly room, until permission is given to proceed, when the men and women, separately, each to go to their dressing rooms, bathe, be anointed with oil, and don his or her temple robes, all of white.

"The assembly room itself deserves more than a passing glance. The woodwork is of oak, wondrously polished and waxed, but without varnish as is all of the woodwork of the temple. This leaves the wood a beautiful gray with a hint of brown which harmonizes wonderfully with the silver gray of the walls. A fresco of almost life-sized figures adorns the upper half of the walls, representing Christ breaking bread with the American Indians—for the Mormons believe that during the time between the crucifixion and the resurrection, Christ came to America, and spoke to the Indians. The assembly room will seat about 150 people, and no room in this vast building is planned to seat more.

"The Baptistry

"Just above the assembly room is the baptistry, where a huge font, its lines all grace and curves, contrasting yet fitting into the straight lines elsewhere, is held by the heads and shoulders of 12 oxen. Twelve columns, elaborately decorated, emphasizes that prophetic number, commemorating not only the 12 tribes of Israel, but the 12 apostles as well. The oxen are not symbolical, denoting simply strength. The room and the galleries above it are ornate with decorations and elaborate with gold.

"When people are contemplating matrimony, or wishing to do any of their services for the dead, a certain education is especially planned for them. A group is taken through the temple. After passing the assembly room, they are seated in the creation room, and an appropriate lecture given them.

"The history of creation is told, much as it is pictured on the walls. Here the artist has given his conception of the seven days, 'Let there be light'; and 'The earth was without form and void,' and so on until it was ready to be the habitation of man.

"The first picture of the series is truly praiseworthy. A beam of light from out of the darkness seems to spread as you watch it until it blots out the darkness round about.

"The Garden Room

"From this the candidates are taken into a room all softly blended in colors. Silvery birdseye maple was imported from South America for this room. Here all is peace and harmony. Graceful swans float upon limpid waters; rabbits wander through the labyrinths of forest unafraid.

"The tree of the knowledge of good and evil hangs its seductive fruit just at our hand, and so luscious does it appear that all other daughters of Eve—yes, and sons, too—may perhaps long for an opportunity to follow the example of their first mother.

"Next comes the world room. Here the bright birdseye maple is replaced by dark mahogany—dark, but wondrously beautiful. But here upon the walls, sin and suffering and death have crept in. A poor little new-born lamb stands cold and desolate, with not even sufficient heart to be afraid; while a wolf, knowing that his prey cannot escape, is slowly creeping up to claim his victim. A deer with no enemy in sight, yet shows the restless watchfulness that bespeak constant affright. A boa constrictor is approaching a water fowl, who with her mate was seeking the shelter of the tropical trees, not knowing that they hide this enemy from view.

"Behind all this, the artist has painted the mountains, plainly seen from the terrace: Old Chief and Yellow Mountain, and also Waterton falls.

"Through a heavy black curtain—symbol of death—we next enter the celestial room. This typifies heaven. Wondrous cherry was selected for the woodwork, while the squared vault at the top lets in the glory of God's own sunshine. No paintings are on the walls, but all is to resemble joy and peace and rest.

"From this opens three small altar rooms. In the central one of these, marriages for the living are consummated, and in another, those for the dead. Wonderful Circassian walnut, with a polish of satin, and inlaid with many rare and beautiful woods, forms the finish of these rooms."

The erection of the new temple completes the eighth of the Mormon temples, says the article. The first was at Kirtland in 1836 and the second at Nauvoo in 1846. However, it is known that these were the property of the original church before the apostasy, and the one at Kirtland, which is the only one now standing, belongs to the Reorganized Church. The other Mormon temples are Saint George, Utah, 1877; Manti, Utah, 1887; Logan, Utah, 1887; Salt Lake City, 1893; Hawaiian Islands, 1920; Cardston, Alberta, 1923.

Stewardships in Baptist Church South

Church finances are improving in the Baptist churches of the South, judging from the results being obtained from a five-year financial drive, as $44,003,005.70 on the seventy-five million-dollar campaign has already been raised. The drive ends in 1924.

Doctor O. E. Bryan is in charge of the campaign as stewardship and budget director. He is working through the various State offices and the agencies of the district associations, seeking to bring the Baptist churches of the South to

Departments Active in Topeka

TOPEKA, KANSAS, November 6.—There was a good attendance at sacrament service on October 7, although many members were at General Conference. The Spirit of the Lord was present, as manifest in the love shown for one another.

In the Department of Music some special numbers have been given by Ira G. Whipple and his son and daughter. Also a quartet, composed of the members of the Whipple and A. P. Crooker families, gave interesting numbers. The members of this quartet played together when they were "little tots," and now they are singing together in church work.

The Department of Women is meeting each week to study normal lessons.

A. P. Crooker, W. L. Chapman, Ira G. Whipple, B. F. Deller, and A. A. Goffe of the priesthood have occupied the pulpit the last few weeks. A. P. Crooker and W. L. Chapman have delivered special sermons for nonmembers who are attending services each Sunday evening.

Brother and Sister Silas Robertson, of Flint, Michigan, General Conference visitors, stopped off and rendered some valuable assistance in prayer service one evening. They were guests at the A. P. Crooker home.

The home of B. F. Deller was the scene of a successful masquerade on October 29, given by the Department of Recreation and Expression. Many were re-created, not in their own image but in the false mask of others, and, true to type from the beginning, the one in the mask of Satan was the best concealed of all. Sister Deller reported several articles of expression in the way of masks, handkerchiefs, clothing, apple cores, etc. Sister Jennie Griffin proved a very interesting gypsy fortune teller.

James Baillie, of Scranton, Kansas, was present at sacrament service on November 4 and delivered an excellent sermon in the evening. His theme was "The true vine." In the the adoption of a yearly budget for both their local work and the general missionary and benevolent interests of the denomination. The aim is to enlist every member of every church in weekly and monthly contributions to religious causes.

The increased income has made possible large advances in every department of work. During the campaign period it is announced that there has been a gain in the homeland of 57 district associations, 881 active ministers, 3,068 local churches, 3,287 Sunday schools with 459,223 pupils, 8,688 Baptist Young People's unions with 233,917 members, and 7,094 Woman's Missionary Union organizations.

Further increases in work of the departments is given in the Paris, Tennessee, Post:

"Among the many gains on foreign mission fields are included 34,344 baptisms, 386 churches, 1,800 mission stations, 39 houses of worship, 53,666 members, 687 Sunday schools with 31,292 pupils, the sending out of 275 new American missionaries, the appointment of 2,029 native workers, entry into six new foreign countries and the larger equipment for all forms of work on sixteen fields.

"Workers of the Home Mission Board have baptized 173,602 persons during the campaign period, have received 277,968 persons into the membership of the churches, enlisted 11,772 young persons in definite forms of Christian service, built or improved 1,872 church houses, organized 935 churches and 2,898 Sunday schools."

morning service the Spirit was present in prophecy and admonition, not only pointing out work of some, but place as well.

One thing that has given Topeka Branch publicity is the entrance of the church basket ball team into the Basket Ball League, composed of teams from Sunday schools of the various churches throughout the city.

In harmony with the spirit that everyone must be on the firing line in order to bring about the redemption of Zion, A. A. Goffe delivered in substance the following right after the close of General Conference: Man was placed in the Garden of Eden to dress and keep it productive. His life depended upon its productiveness. But the right kind of seed must be sown. It must be seed that will keep life. This is the kind of seed that the Lord planted in the Garden of Eden. But how about the planting since that time? Truth is the seed that all must have if we are to be co-laborers with God in his garden. We must know what is God's will in the matter. We must understand what we are going to plant. We old fellows will have to wake up. Have we put out for God's will part of our way—the way that seemeth right, which is death? The most glorious opportunities of life are before the young.

Southern New England District Holds Conference

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS, November 5.—Sunday, October 21, Elder Earl Bradshaw, pastor of the Attleboro Branch, preached. He is a young man who has studied to show himself approved, and he is much liked by the Saints.

The Department of Recreation and Expression held a Halloween social which was a great success. Strangers who were there are showing an interest in our church work.

The conference of the Southern New England District was held in Brockton on the 27th and 28th of October. There was a talk by George Sinclair on "Recreation and expression." James Houghton spoke on "Junior choir work," and J. Duncan Suttill on "What can the young do for the church?" Ella Thayer spoke on "A praying and singing branch." A paper by Margaret Roberts was read on "The training of children." Also an excellent talk by Lucie Sears on the same subject was given. All meetings were of a high order. We were able to get good publicity in both of our dailies.

After the conference Bishop Richard Bullard stayed with the Brockton Saints and held a number of services, which were very much appreciated. He spoke on the necessity for unity and of the greatness of the work, and spoke in glowing terms of the president of the church.

Thursday evening, November 1, he met with the priesthood and spoke on the benefits of a program in ministerial work.

Pledges for Frugality Started

TORONTO, ONTARIO, November 5.—Since Pastor C. Ed. Miller has returned from General Conference he is trying to persuade everyone to take the "Bishop Keir Pledge" and cut out all unnecessary expenses and extravagances and contribute more to the Lord's work. He introduced last Sunday at the junior services the children's tithing cards, which provide for the receiving of tithing from a penny up.

Some time ago the branch voted unanimously to build a new church, but a questionnaire sent out seems to show that there has been a change in sentiment, and some are in favor of putting on a city-wide proselyting campaign as a better investment.

Many of the members of this branch spent the last Sunday in October with the Humber Bay Branch in their beautiful harvest home celebration. In front of the altar, clear across the church, was banked a fine assortment of the "fruit of the ground," arranged with considerable skill. The vegetables were all raised by the members and on Monday evening were sold and the proceeds turned over to the Bishop as a branch offering. That offering is surely accepted of the Lord.

Halloween is celebrated in rather a strenuous fashion in this city. The kiddies visit homes and candy shops and peremptorily demand: "Shell out!" And the people do, everything from pennies to onions!

The law of compensation seems to be operating in our favor. There has been a regular exodus of young men from the branch, a number going to the States, but we have gained several fine young men from other places.

Lectures on Mormonism

EVANSVILLE, WISCONSIN, November 6.—A great interest has been aroused in Evansville, Wisconsin, over a lecture on "Mormonism," by Mrs. Shepard and an answer delivered by Elder B. C. Flint.

Mrs. Shepard spoke in the Baptist church to a large audience, "proving to her own satisfaction at least," says the Evansville Review, "that Mormonism, as she stated it is practiced in Utah, was a moral and national menace."

Elder B. C. Flint spoke in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon, answering in an affirmative way the charges made by Mrs. Shepard. The Magee Opera House was well filled on Sunday, November 4, at 3.30 p. m., to hear the defense lecture.

Elder Flint, who for twenty-eight years has been a member of the Reorganized Church, and for twelve years a missionary, in a letter to the Publicity Department said in part:

"This lecture was the best 'scoop' I have had in Wisconsin in all my missionary experience. The day was rainy and bad, but for all that the big opera house was nicely filled, and the congregation remained intensely interested till the end, and I consumed a good hour and a half with the lecture. There was very little negation in the entire affair. I made an affirmative defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon, using the various angles of both subjects, merely referring to Mrs. Shepard's inconsistencies in establishing a premise.

"The picture show in the opera house threw a slide announcement on the screen each evening during the week, and the management were so interested and pleased with my lecture that they have suggested the propriety of putting on another lecture before the interest dies out, so I am making arrangements for another lecture on the Book of Mormon for November 18.

"The ministers of the other churches kindly cooperated with me in announcing my lecture last Sunday, and some of them were present and expressed themselves as highly pleased with what they heard. This was indeed a surprise, as heretofore they have been exceedingly hostile, but our residence here for so many years has made us friends of the entire town, and it would be an unpopular thing for any man to try to speak evil of us. This was what made it so easy to capitalize the excitement following Mrs. Shepard's lecture. Reverend O. W. Smith, pastor of the Congregational Church, the largest church in town, is entitled to especial mention. Mrs. Flint visited him in his home (he introduced Mrs. Shepard), and he gave her every opportunity to explain our work. He and Mrs. Smith said they were glad for the information she was able to give them and said they would not only announce our lecture at their morning service, but they would urge their people to attend. This they did, and were present themselves, so it looks as if the time is ripe to do some good work here. It is the first time we have been able to accomplish anything of this kind here, the spirit of indifference having been too strong to overcome."

Reunion Enjoyed by English Saints

LEICESTER, ENGLAND, October 23.—The Midland district reunion was held here on October 13 and 14, and there was a large gathering of Saints from all parts of the district, Birmingham, Clay Cross, and Sutton-in-Ashfield being well represented. Owing to the large number present it was necessary to procure extra chairs, which were obtained at small cost. Dinner and tea were provided at a moderate charge.

The meeting commenced with a short business session with District President Charles Cousins in charge.

Sunday, October 14, opened with an address to the priesthood by Brother Cousins, followed by an address by Sister Baldwin, wife of Patriarch Richard Baldwin. The morning sessions closed with a lecture by Elder Daniel Sorden which was much enjoyed by all.

In the afternoon Sister Gertrude Edwards gave a very excellent address on religious education, illustrated by work done by the little ones. Sister Edwards has the gift of training the young and takes a lively interest in that work. The remainder of the afternoon was given over to prayer and testimony meeting in charge of Brother Baldwin. All present felt the inspiration of the Spirit, and many encouraging testimonies were given.

Brother Baldwin preached in the evening on the theme of devotion and sacrifice, bringing before the Saints scenes of the suffering and devotion of the Saints of the early church.

At the close of the day the Saints prepared to depart, fully satisfied that the time was well spent.

Brother and Sister Sorden remained over for a short time to take part in local activities. The Department of Recreation and Expression, which meets on Monday night, gave them a hearty welcome and greatly enjoyed their presence.

Tuesday and Wednesday evenings were given over to Brother Sorden for preaching, and much food for thought was given, the Saints fully appreciating the subjects advanced. There is always a warm place for the missionaries in the hearts of the Leicester Saints.

Effort Being Made to Purchase New Church

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN, November 9.—The Department of Recreation and Expression gave a Halloween social in the L. D. S. Hall, Saturday evening, October 27. Cornstalks, pumpkins, jack-o-lanterns, and draperies of various kinds were used in decorating the hall after the seats had been removed for the occasion. Quite a number of the young people from different branches were present. Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was also one of the guests. A lunch was served, and a very enjoyable time was had by all. Elder Paul N. Belleisle is superintendent of this department.

Large attendance is being had at the little hall which seats approximately a hundred and fifty people. The branch membership is about two hundred and fifty. An effort has been made to raise money either to build a church or buy one already built, so as to take care of the crowds that have been attending for a long time. So far there has not been a great deal of success; however, the Saints do not intend to give up, and are hoping to be successful before long.

An all-day meeting was held in the hall on Sunday, October 28. Young people's prayer service was held at 8 a. m., general prayer service at 9.30, and Sunday school at 11.30. Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was present. Lunch was served at 1 p. m., followed by preaching at 2 by Brother Ellis. Brother Ellis also preached at 7 in the evening. A spiritual time was enjoyed by all.

The Department of Women is doing good work in raising money for the building fund by serving suppers or holding bake sales. They seem pretty good at reaching the pocket-book via the stomach.

Pastor E. K. Evans has for a long time been undergoing a great mental strain as the result of the illness of his companion, who suffered a nervous breakdown many months ago and has not yet recovered. The prayers of the Saints are solicited in her behalf.

Kewanee District Conference Over

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS, November 7.—Several special actions were adopted at the district conference at Rock Island, Illinois, on October 27 and 28. Each branch of the district is to create a missionary department, whose purpose is to put on at least one missionary effort each year. The head of this department is expected to work in harmony with the branch and district presidents, and to get in touch with the missionary supervisor or apostle in charge to arrange for the time and speakers. To promote this work, a special collection is to be taken in each branch on the last Sunday of the month. At the same time a collection will be taken to defray district expenses. The conference also decided to return to the delegate system of representation in their district conferences.

Harland Cady was ordained elder, and the matter of ordaining Frank Hendricks to the same office was left to the district presidency, with power to act.

On Friday evening a musical program was given by the Rock Island Saints and others. Saturday evening was spent in hearing from the delegates who attended the late General Conference. There was an expression of hope and faith in the church as well as in God.

The Rock Island Saints took care of the visitors in their splendid way. They made no charges for meals, which were served in the church basement. Opportunity was given to help pay the expenses by placing a box where the visitors could put in their free-will offering. The visitors were so generous in this that the entertainment was made less of a burden.

While the attendance was not so good as usual, it was a good conference, and Kewanee District desires still to keep fast hold of the "rod of iron" and to keep pace in the onward progress of the great latter-day work.

Sister Expresses Sentiments of Conference

PEORIA, ILLINOIS, November 13.—What a splendid gathering that was which sat under cover of the big tent over on the beautiful Campus in Independence the first two weeks of this October, 1923! How fortunate those permitted to be there and join that wonderful chorus in singing the songs of Zion, lovely Zion, under the leadership of "Hoxie"! Just one Hoxie in all that throng, but oh, how much he helped out, when three thousand voices joined in praising God from whom all blessings flow. Ah, that chorus singing ought to have inspired any heart with more fervent praise for God and more forbearing love to man. "Pray, men, pray" still echoes in my heart. I wish we might all pray more diligently.

Gathered from the East and the West, the North and the South, from Canada to Mexico, and from the isles of the sea, it was surely a representative body of people. And those hours spent on the Campus and under the big tent must have been of untold value in helping us not only to blend our voices in one harmonious pæan of praise, but to obtain a clearer understanding of the work that lies before us and of how we may establish Zion with all that we have longed for so long.

Yes, a big factor was the singing. There were also the visits on the Campus, or in the big tent, or on that lovely shaded street that led there. Those visits were pleasant, and wonderfully productive of a better understanding. For differ though we may in some ways, yet there is a tie that binds, and it is very pleasant and edifying to meet and know each other better, "when the mists have cleared away." And if in the heat of debate, we forget for a little season, it is not for long. For we are one in hope and doctrine and charity.

It is coming—the glad day when we will understand better, and, of course, will do better. Vital questions were discussed at the business sessions. Important matters were considered. Grave, serious men and women, very many with books at hand, listened intently to the arguments, weighed the evidence more or less carefully, and then rendered decision by their vote. And thus the matter was settled for the present. The days slipped away till the last session came, when the "Angel of Clear Vision" came for a fleeting visit, at least. So we separated, going back to the fields assigned to labor, or the homes and branches where our lot is cast, and the big tent will know many of us no more. But only God can judge of the influence, the forces for good that were set in operation at the conference of 1923. May he bless his Saints with an abiding visit of the Angel of Clear Vision so that the world may know, because of the love manifest among these claiming to be his people.

Lord, send an angel with vision clear
And bid him be with thy church this year,
That Saints may see and learn again
That love still dwells in the hearts of men.

MARY E. GILLIN.

Saints Hold District Conference

JOY, ILLINOIS, November 7.—Quite a number of the Buffalo Prairie Branch motored to Rock Island on October 27 and 28 to attend the Kewanee district conference. Retiring president, R. W. Farrell, presided. Conference appointees, Brothers E. R. Davis and E. A. Curtis, were in attendance and ministered to the needs of the Saints. The reports given by the several delegates of the late General Conference on Saturday evening were appreciated.

Conference chose High Priest E. R. Davis for district president, and Brother Edward Jones, of Kewanee, and Brother Burt Sartwell, of Savanna, were selected as counselors.

On November 11 the Buffalo Prairie Branch expects to participate in a one-day meeting to be held with the Millersburg Branch as a closing to the night meetings that have been held there by Brothers E. A. Curtis and E. R. Davis.

Elder Charles L. Holmes and Worth Holmes attended preaching services in Joy on last Sunday and Tuesday nights.

Mrs. Anna Ziegenhorn and family attended the Eastern Iowa conference at Muscatine, Iowa, November 4. Rain hindered the attendance of some who wished to go by auto.

Women Enter Into Friendly Debate

SAINT THOMAS, ONTARIO, November 7.—On Friday, November 2, the Department of Women held a social evening in the church, the main feature being a friendly debate: Resolved, That we build a new church and change the location. Bishop J. E. Burger, Brother Ernest Burger, and Mrs. A. E. Mann affirmed, and Elder L. O. Pearson, Miss A. Bertha McGilivray, and Mrs. William Stevens denied. It was previously announced that this was just a friendly debate and that no action would necessarily be taken. Many excellent points were brought out on both sides. In fact, they were so good that the judges were unable to come to a definite decision. They declared it a tie and asked the audience to decide. Their decision was no better, as they also declared it a tie. Before and after the debate a musical program was given, after which the ladies served a light lunch.

A number of the young people of the branch attended the young people's rally in London on November 3. The Saint Thomas girls met the London girls in a game of basket ball which resulted in a score of 4 to 3 in favor of London. Saturday afternoon and Sunday at 11 a. m. and at 3 p. m. programs were put on by the young people, and in the evening Elder H. A. Koehler preached on "The youth as an asset to the church." At 9 a. m. prayer and sacrament service was held, at the close of which Brother Russell Atkins, of Stratford, was ordained to the office of priest.

Brother Bailiff William Bailey died on November 5. Funeral services were from the church.

Sunday School Has Attendance Contest

PORTLAND, OREGON, November 7.—A larger crowd than usual attended the sacrament service on Sunday, November 4, in charge of Branch President W. H. Barker and Elders P. G. Hager and John Hanson. A spirit of peace pervaded the service, and many expressed themselves as glad to be present. The testimonies were mostly short and to the point, and little time was lost by one waiting for another.

The attendance at Sunday school on November 4 showed a decided increase over previous Sundays. The "banner class" contest which has been going on for some time is having its effect. Brother Claude O. Young, Christmas offering superintendent, gave a talk on the school's aim for the 1923 offering, suggesting ways and means, and also asking for suggestions to help swell the offering. One suggestion was that each wage earner contribute half a day's wages. Another was to have a real good, old-time social of some kind. Brother Young called attention to the fact that we can all become missionaries by contributing as liberally as possible to the 1923 Christmas offering.

Items From Peoria Branch

PEORIA, ILLINOIS, November 16.—The Peoria Branch is fortunate in being situated in one of the most important cities in one of the richest States in the United States. But it is very unfortunate in that it has always seemed to be a difficult matter to keep the active, growing Saints here. As soon as the members are able to help and arrive at a fairly thriving condition, they have developed a longing to move to Zion, and so they depart.

The Saints are greatly handicapped in this city of beautiful churches, by having to meet in a poor locality and in a very poor building. They are apparently not able to do better.

Regular Sunday services are maintained, consisting of preaching, Sunday school, Religio. Some good Saints have gone on from here and some good Saints still remain; and since the work is divine, it is hoped that the work may sometime be placed upon the footing where it rightly belongs, considering the size of the city.

Tulare Branch Outgrows Church Building

TULARE, CALIFORNIA, November 14.—The Tulare Branch is large, consisting of about two hundred members. The building is not suitable for the needs of the branch, but the Saints have decided to get along with it a while longer on account of financial conditions.

The Sunday school is progressing nicely under the leadership of Superintendent James A. Damron. Also the Department of Recreation and Expression is being well attended with Miss Iva Powell, superintendent. The latter meets at 7 p. m. Sundays, with thirty minutes devoted to opening and lesson which is followed by an interesting program. The Department of Women is working on a bazaar to be held the early part of December.

Sacrament services well attended Sunday, November 11, with a large degree of the Lord's Spirit present.

Distinguished Speakers Visit Des Moines

DES MOINES, IOWA, November 15.—In the years that have come and gone in the history of the Des Moines Branch the Saints have been privileged to have with them many of the splendid speakers of the church, but none have found a warmer place in the hearts of the people than Brother J. F. Martin of Kirtland, Ohio. Brother Martin was here by invitation as the speaker for the annual home-coming day. He was a stranger to nearly all, but after staying and holding services for a week he left many warm friends. He radiated such a humble, Christlike spirit that he was an inspiration and incentive to better living to all. Many have expressed themselves as wanting to take a more active part in church work. Although no special advertising was done, each night the auditorium was well filled.

The home-coming has come to mean much to the members in their church life, not only in the city but in the district as well. The weather was delightful, the roads good, and many motored in from surrounding towns. Brother Martin was the speaker both morning and evening, and somehow he had a way all his own of telling the gospel story just a little different than they were used to hearing it, which made it very impressive.

Brother F. M. McDowell came in unexpectedly during the evening service, and his many friends were glad to hear a word of greeting from him before the service closed.

During the Religio hour Mr. Harvey Ingham, editor of one of our leading newspapers, lectured on world problems. Mrs. Ingham, who accompanied him, commented on the large number of young people we had in attendance and wondered what was our method of holding them. She thought it spoke well of a church that had such a grip on its younger life when so many churches of to-day attract only the adults.

The new pastor, Elder D. E. Dowker, and family, though they have been with us but a short time, are already making their influence felt. Brother Dowker's kindly smile and friendly hand are winning his way into the homes of the people and are a valuable asset to him in his work. Sister Dowker is entering wholeheartedly into the life of the branch and in every way assists in the work of her husband.

Under the capable supervision of Religio President Stephen Robinson, a young attorney, a young man's club has been organized. The age limit has been set at eight hundred, so most of the men of the church are eligible for membership and are availing themselves of it. It consists of four departments, forensic, music, dramatic, and athletic, and so makes an appeal to those of various ages and different tastes.

Increased activities are being seen and felt in all departments of church work and it is the earnest hope of all that this shall continue and that much good may be done here.

Lamoni Items

LAMONI, IOWA, November 16.—The fifth annual course of community pictures in Lamoni started Friday, November 9, with "The light of the world," a wonderful screen production depicting the history of the world from Adam to the present day, especially emphasizing the failure of mankind to live up to the divine idea of creation, that they should live in peace and love, and the catastrophes which followed such disobedience in different ages. The community picture idea is growing in popularity each year, and the programs are much in advance of the first year in every way, owing to the increased financial support of the people. The committee is now permitted to select the very best of screen productions, and a very high class course is advertised for this winter. The Graceland chapel is crowded at two shows Friday night and one for children Saturday afternoon.

National Educational Week, November 18-24, is to be celebrated in Lamoni as Public Library Week. The observance will start with an address by F. M. McDowell on the subject, "Education, a community task," at the Brick Church Sunday evening. Two story hours for children have been provided under Miss Ruth Fisher for Tuesday and Thursday at 4 p. m. Friday and Saturday are designed especially to aid the library financially. A special moving picture will be shown both days, and Saturday will be tag day for the same cause. Lamoni's public library is less than three years old and has undergone all the hardships incident to the launching of any new enterprise, but it already wields a very powerful influence in the community and there are few families which it does not reach. The librarian, Mrs. Audie Kelley, is at present undergoing treatment at the Sanitarium, her place being filled by her sister, Mrs. V. C. Bailey.

The Saints were favored by two especially fine sermons last Sunday by Apostles M. A. McConley and Clyde F. Ellis. The former was in the nature of an Armistice Day address, and the necessity of a union of the people of the world by love was a theme running through both discourses.

Saturday, November 10, was a big day in Lamoni. The Legion boys, with a team picked from the local post and the business men, met Graceland College in a game of football for Armistice Day honors. Considering the fact that the Legion team had had very little practice they played a good game, but they were not equal to the Graceland team and the score stood 20 to 6. The Ladies' Booster Club held a chicken dinner and bazaar and the Legion also screened a special picture, "The Old Homestead," for Legion benefit. The Booster Club is recognized as one of the greatest aids to civic improvement in the town.

The Graceland Extemporaneous Speaking Contest was one of the main events of the week at the college. Six students out of fifty-one originally entered appeared in the finals. Two subjects proved especially popular, each being chosen by two of the speakers. James Thomas and Walter Daykin talked on intercollegiate athletics and their modern tendencies, William Ely opposed Philippine independence, and Mrs. Cecil Graham defended it, while Evan Fry discussed the political prospects for the 1924 presidential campaign, and Frank Holmes reviewed the German situation. The awards were as follows: Walter Daykin first, William Ely second, and Evan Fry third. The most points, and therefore the pennant, were won by the Niketes Society.

The candidates for membership to the College Players also held their try outs in the way of short plays coached by members of the society. The following were admitted to membership: Rollin White, Doris Nelson, Roy Cheville, Leland Omans, Harvey Carr, Marie Gray, Audrey Traver, Marion Congdon, Albert Brackenbury, Blanche Edwards, George Krahl, Philip Lewis, Job Negeim, Nellie Curtis, Dorothy Emmerman, William Ely, Clark Woodford, George Gales, and Glen Briggs.

Graceland met Jackson University of Chillicothe, Missouri, in a game of football here to-day and won an easy victory of 30 to 0. The Graceland record for the season stands three games won, two lost, and two tied, with only one more game on the schedule, which is with Tabor College on Thanksgiving.

Holden Stake News

HOLDEN STAKE, November 19.—The conference of Holden Stake convened at Lexington, Missouri, Friday, November 9, at 7.30 p. m. Elder W. S. Macrae of the stake presidency was in charge of the service. The sermon was by the president of the stake. He used the 13th chapter of John as a basis, emphasizing service, humility, and love. At eight o'clock Saturday morning the conference met in prayer. Elders I. M. Ross, of the stake bishopric, and C. V. Hopkins, pastor of the Grandview church, were in charge. The spirit of the meeting was of a high order and was a splendid preparation for the work of the day. Following, Stake Chorister Lola A. Johnson, of Lexington, conducted a short song service. At 10 a. m. the conference met for business, the stake presidency presiding. All of the ministry were seated on the rostrum. Bishop C. J. Hunt offered prayer. Sister Blanche Christiansen, the stake secretary, acted as secretary, Sister Ticy Moler assisting. The chorister chose Sister Gwendolen Johnson of Lexington, pianist; Sister Roscoe Moorman of Sedalia, assistant, and Sister Margaret Cairns of Grandview as assistant chorister. Reports were received from the stake officers and quorums. The presidency and bishopric reported as the committee chosen to operate the Square Deal Dining Hall at the State Fair at Sedalia. Total receipts were $4,916; expended, $3,666; balance for 1923, $1,250. In addition to this $719.46 was paid for equipment which would make a profit of $1,969.46, making a total in the dining hall fund of $2,504.09. Ten churches were represented in the working force. Cameron, Missouri, outside the stake, was represented by seven helpers. A vote of thanks was extended to those who had so cheerfully assisted and also to Brethren W. S. Macrae and I. M. Ross who took the active management of the work for the committee.

The conference, upon recommendation of the stake presidency and approval of the high council, ordered the ordination of the following: James Brendel, Lexington, elder; Floyd N. Danielson, Holden, teacher; Thomas J. Bradbury, jr., Holden, deacon.

The Lexington Saints had arranged for serving the noon and evening meals in a dining hall they had equipped, which proved to be very successful so far as the visitors were concerned. Conference adjourned for dinner at 12.30. At 2.30 the conference reconvened. An auditing committee was chosen: Guy F. Scarcliff, one year; Orrie Weir, two years; Floyd N. Danielson, three years. The stake presidency, high council, bishopric, superintendents of departments, secretary, recorder, and historian were sustained. The chorister presented the names of Gladys Teeter and Roscoe Moorman as her assistants, which were approved.

It was voted to hold a reunion in 1924 and place the matter in the hands of the stake presidency and bishopric. A vote of approval was taken on the action of the stake presidency, bishopric and high council in giving the Sedalia church $360 (10 per cent of the total cost) and loaning $1,200 out of the stake building and loan fund according to plans previously adopted by the stake. The presidency and bishopric were continued as the dining hall committee. The conference divided at four o'clock, the ministry occupying in the lower auditorium and the women remaining in the upper. Brothers Hunt, McWethy, and Krahl made short talks to the ministry, and Sisters Ross and Hunt spoke to the women.

At 7.30 the stake department of music rendered a program of a high order which was greatly appreciated. Besides the musical numbers, addresses were given by Sister Lola A. Johnson, stake music director, Gwendolen Johnson on, "What I consider my duty as piano leader in the stake," and Roscoe Moorman, assistant director. The stake presidency and superintendent of departments nominated Sister C. L. House of Houstonia, as stake home department worker, and she was so chosen. Adjourned to meet at 8 a. m. Sunday, for prayer.

The stake presidency had charge of the prayer service which was of great spiritual power and uplift. The Saints were baptized with the Spirit. The manifestations thereof were in evidence in prophecy and by the "still small voice." It was a most auspicious meeting for the beginning of the Sabbath.

The Sunday school met at 9.45, Stake Superintendent C. F. Searcliff and local superintendent J. A. Brendel had charge.

Apostle F. H. Edwards was the speaker at eleven o'clock. His subject was, "Ten reasons why I am a Latter Day Saint." The Spirit bore witness of the divinity of the message. At this service James A. Brendel was ordained an elder by Brethren Edwards and Krahl, and Frank Ball, president of the second quorum of deacons, by Brethren Hunt and Ross. Calvin Brendel was confirmed by Brethren Searcliff and Brendel.

In the afternoon at two o'clock Doctor G. L. Harrington was the speaker, and held the attention of his audience for an hour and fifteen minutes. Brother Harrington suggested closing his sermon at the usual time but the audience unanimously requested him to continue. The Saints were grateful to Doctor Harrington for his visit and words of instruction and admonition.

The conference closed with this session. A vote of thanks was extended to the Lexington Saints for their hospitality. Adjourned to meet at Lees Summit, Missouri, at the call of the stake presidency. Benediction by Apostle Edwards.

Independence

The "Womanless Wedding" which was given by members of group 20 at the Stone Church dining hall last Tuesday night, November 13, will be repeated on Thursday night, November 22. It will be possible to seat three hundred persons, the proceeds going toward the maintaining of the children's kindergarten schools in Independence.

At the first performance the bride, Harry Murphy, was given away for the sum of $10 by D. J. Krahl. The colored mammy, Will Bartholomew, jr., got in her say for she "raised that 'ere gal." The prima donna, Paul Craig, sang "My hosiery," and a quartet consisting of Messrs. Anway, White, Craig, and Hartshorn followed with a touching melody. Prima donna C. B. Hartshorn then sang a parody on "O promise me," by J. D. Rodger.

Doctor Charles Keown, the groom's father, appeared with his entire family of nine children and his plump wife, S. O.

Smith. James F. Keir performed the ceremony. The jilted suitor, Harold Morgan, created a scene when legal objections were invited, but was soon quieted by his dear grandmother, J. M. Terry. Elvin Luff appeared as the proud groom. Among the less prominent but important characters of the wedding were the flower girls, Clarke Buckley and Dave Lewis; the bride's mother, Earl Honaker; the flapper, Francis Faunce; maid of honor, Tom Wilson; poor country relation, Fred Fender; the twins, Arthur Mills, jr., and Stewart Tandberg; dowager aunt, John E. Davis; heralds, Wendell Luff and Merrill Etzenhouser; bridesmaids, John Luff, Alma Chapman, Tom Faunce, and Alma Thomas. About $75 was cleared for the kindergarten fund.

The ladies of the South Side groups gave a chicken dinner for the benefit of the kindergarten on November 15. Between three and four hundred were fed.

Maxine Keir, daughter of Bishop J. F. Keir, is ill with diphtheria, but she is now improving.

Services in Zion Sunday, November 18, were: Stone Church, preaching at 11 a. m. by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, musical program at 7.30 p. m., and sermon at 8 by Elder Walter W. Smith; Walnut Park, preaching at 11 a. m. by Elder J. A. Dowker, at 7 p. m. by Elder W. H. Kelley; Liberty Street, preaching at 11 a. m. by Elder M. A. Etzenhouser, at 7.30 p. m. by Bishop B. R. McGuire; Enoch Hill, preaching at 11 a. m. by Elder C. B. Hartshorn, at 7 p. m. by Elder R. V. Hopkins.

Apostles Paul M. Hanson and J. F. Curtis will sail for their European mission December 1, on the steamship Samaria. Apostle Hanson delivered his farewell sermon, Sunday, November 18, at the Stone Church.

Four hundred tickets were sold for the father and son banquet given Tuesday night, November 20, in the dining hall of the Stone Church. A price of fifty cents a plate was charged. The Laurel Club served the dinner at 6.45 o'clock. The priesthood sponsored the dinner. Each member was entitled to invite his son or a friend. President E. A. Smith was toastmaster, and speakers were F. A. Smith, R. V. Hopkins, Walter W. Smith, Bishop James F. Keir, and President F. M. Smith. Musical program was in charge of F. A. Russell.

Several deaths have occurred recently. Earl Henson, of this city, who was in Arizona for his health, died Sunday evening, November 11. The body was sent to this city for burial. Surviving are his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Henson, and a sister, Mrs. Hazel May Temple. Mr. Henson was in the Aero Service in Tampa, Florida, during the war. He was twenty-seven years of age when he died. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

John W. Dumbauld, eighty-five years of age and a resident of this city for many years, died at the Independence Sanitarium Friday morning, November 16. Surviving him are his wife, Mrs. Phoebe Dumbauld, and two daughters, Mrs. Maggie Berg and Mrs. Frances White, the latter of Berkeley, California. Burial was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Mrs. Harriet C. Martin, sixty-two years old, died Wednesday morning, November 14. She is survived by her husband, Albert E. Martin; three daughters, Mrs. Mina L. Burrows and Miss Olive L. Martin, of Independence, and Mrs. Grace L. Stringler, London, Ontario; three sons, Harry A. Martin, Los Angeles, George W. Martin, Herschel, Saskatchewan, Canada, and James E. Martin, city. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The Independence Music Club met Wednesday, November 13, at the Harrington Studio Building, at 2.30 p. m. Arthur Mills, guest of the club, played. In the business session arrangements were made for the Welsh Male Chorus, which will sing here December 3 under auspices of the club.

Conference Minutes

GALLANDS GROVE.—At Cherokee, Iowa, November 2 to 4. A good spirit prevailed throughout. Quite a number were in attendance, especially on Sunday. Sermons by W. A. Smith, C. E. Butterworth, George Juergens, and E. R. Butterworth. Emery Salisbury was chosen chorister to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of J. D. Talcott from the district. Bessie Pearsall was chosen as secretary to fill the place of Lena Talcott. The Auburn Orchestra assisted along musical lines. Bessie Pearsall, secretary, Dow City, Iowa.

EASTERN MAINE.—At Jonesport, October 27 and 28. H. A. Chelline, district president, assisted by O. L. Thompson, presided. L. W. Hinkley acted as secretary pro tem. Herbert J. Rogers was chosen chorister with power to select his assistant. The following officers were elected: H. A. Chelline, president; W. E. Rogers and David E. Joy, counselors; Eliza M. Walker, secretary; Charles F. Cummings, treasurer; and L. W. Hinkley, Sunday school superintendent. The preaching during the conference was by O. L. Thompson. Two collections were taken Sunday for the district expenses and placed in the hands of the treasurer. The president was empowered to draw from this fund for his traveling expenses and work in the district. All money orders drawn from the treasury are to be signed by the president, secretary, and treasurer. The time and place of the next conference were left with the district officers. It was decided to unite with Western Maine to hold the next reunion, the time and place to be determined by the reunion committee. Peace and unity prevailed throughout the session, and a spiritual time was enjoyed by all. Eliza M. Walker, secretary.

principles of the gospel, and saying, I believe in the angel's message to Joseph Smith, our hearts would warm up to him, and we would know that he was in the faith. That is very good. We ought all to preach those things, but I said to him, If this brother should come to your branch saying, I believe in the commandment given ninety years ago: organize this people, and appoint every man his stewardship, would you think he was in the faith? The reaction was not so clear, yet that's a part of the plan.

That Which You Have, Hold Fast

These three things we must do, and in our Zion development bring into all our lives the gospel of Jesus Christ. But, listen! This question was, What shall we do to save the church; not what shall the Presidency do, what shall the Twelve do, what shall the Seventy do, but what shall we do? What shall you do? What shall we all together do? And in leading up to my answer, I would say that we must first maintain all the equipment that we have in the church as a spiritual inheritance with which to do this work, and secondly, having maintained that equipment, see to it that it becomes not a dead form, a formal, lifeless thing, but a thing that is filled with life, and that is doing the work that it was intended to do. What do I mean by that? First of all comes to my mind the commandment of Jesus Christ, "That which you already have hold fast until I come." All that I have given you as a church hold fast, as being very precious, until I come.

What Is Our Equipment

What has he given us to work with? First of all, he gave us an organization. You cannot accomplish any work involving two or more people unless you have some form of organization. Ten people lost at sea in an open boat must organize to the extent that they must have a leader. Some form of organization is needed, if you are going to do nothing more than scatter handbills; and in the work of winning converts to Christ and building them up like Christ, an organization is clearly needed. Those people who do not believe in church organization are neither in harmony with God, nature, or logic.

God gave us an organization, as we well know, including apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and many other officers. He gave us a form of doctrine. "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." "Our gospel came not unto us in word only, but with power and with the Holy Ghost, and with much assurance." He gave us certain divine ceremonies, like the ordinance of baptism, and the Lord's supper; and I will not exclude either the marriage covenant, which pledges a man and a woman that they shall keep themselves from all others and for each other while life shall last—a thing that this world needs to-day. He gave us certain gifts and blessings, which I need not enumerate in your hearing, which are very dear unto us; and he gave us one more thing. Tarry ye at Jerusalem, he says, until ye be endued with power from on high.

When God made man, there he lay, perfect in his physical organization, with his body beautiful in symmetry beyond all created beings. There he lay, prone, inactive, unconscious, until God breathed into him the breath of life, then man sprang up a living soul. So Jesus organized his church. He gave it his doctrine, his laws, his blessing, his program, his message, but he said, Wait at Jerusalem. There lay the church, prone, powerless, until his spirit came from on high, and the church stood up a living soul. If that Spirit ever leaves this church, it is lost; but we can all testify that we still feel it with us, as we did this morning, as we do every time we humble ourselves and come before the throne of grace with love towards our brothers and devotion towards our God. God is not far off. He is ready to meet us.

Our Equipment Must Be Put to Work

We must maintain our inheritance. We have no wish to alter our organization. We must not cease to preach our distinctive doctrines. Let us retain our gifts and blessings. And may we receive the endowment from on high. But having all these things, holding them fast until Christ comes, we must see that they do their work; and first of all, we must see that they do their work in us.

We are too eager to watch our brother and see that the gospel does its work in him; and if it does not do its work in him, instantly, then we feel aggrieved. We are sure there is something wrong. But let us turn our vision upon ourselves. The first step is, "Save yourselves from this untoward generation," and then you can help save your brother. "Work out your own salvation in fear and trembling."

We are taught by our Lord and Master to pray for the kingdom to come, his will to be done on earth as it is in heaven, and any man who gets himself into the condition where he is willing to see to it that God's will shall be done on earth by him, as it is done in heaven, is answering that prayer then and there to that extent. And he is doing all that he can to save the church. I don't know anything that can save the church more than righteous living. If God Almighty would spare Sodom because there were ten righteous men in it, don't you think that with a hundred thousand righteous men he will not only spare us, but use us?

(To be concluded.)

Thanksgiving Day

Thanksgiving Day appears on the calendar about the same time every year when the turkeys gobble and small boys have daydreams about gorging themselves to the point of "busting" and fond parents cautiously look in the medicine chest "just to be sure."

How different the times now from those when the Pilgrim Fathers walked the wintry way to the little cabin church where in sedateness they knelt and thanked God in their simple way for the blessings of the year!

To-day luxurious motor cars whizz along the slick avenues, on by the magnificent churches, and knees are not calloused from frequent thanksgiving as were those of the early Pilgrims. The wild turkeys shot down for food by the fathers of this country are now fattened on corn and appear on the table all cooked and seasoned, and milady has but to eat. What an effort to eat!

But there are others who "have been keeping that young rooster" for Thanksgiving, and on Wednesday night when dad comes home he wields the ax, and the feathers fly. Next morning the children are routed out of bed by the savory odors drifting in from the kitchen, and hastily dressing they rush in just in time to see mother bending over a big brown, shiny thing with two huge drumsticks sticking up, as she professionally pours rich, dark liquid over the breast of what once was the boss of the barnyard. The Lord has prospered this happy family not with worldly wealth but with something of a more lasting nature, intangible, spiritual, divine; it is love.

Leave your lavish living for a moment and come with us to a less beautiful quarter of any big city. Narrow streets and narrower alleys cross each other, forming the checkerboard of this section of the city, a section with an equally checkered career. A stench, as of long-collected filth, greets the nostrils as we wend our way through the dimly-lighted streets and pass mysterious-looking brick buildings with small entrances, and with ragged curtains hanging lopsided from the second-story windows. Here is where the shady characters of the underworld gather to seek safety amidst the polyglot population of the poor district. But here also are huddled together in one or two rooms whole families of honest people too far down in the social scale of life to acquire better surroundings, too poor physically or mentally to lift themselves out of the mire of diverse circumstances—yet with souls as you or I, with doubts and fears, loves and joys, and feelings of longing and satisfaction. But to them Thanksgiving Day is only one of the other three hundred sixty-four monotonous days of the year, when hunger will be just as acute and the turkey just as far up town.

Perhaps turkey has become the real objective of Thanksgiving instead of serving as a symbol of the good times for which we are giving thanks. Perhaps the temporal has overshadowed the spiritual since the days of the Pilgrims. Perhaps the institution has become the end in itself. But these are only malsuggestions which we can brush aside. No, Thanksgiving is still a day for giving thanks. The President of the United States has said so. So have many other people. And in the homes of thousands of good people, the people who form the backbone of this Nation, will be found the Spirit of God, treasured, sought, and fed. Among these will be the homes of thousands of Latter Day Saints, meeting together in family reunion to rejoice at the goodness of divine blessings.

The turkey will be there, in many homes, as a symbol that just needs are satisfied, and in others there will be the same spirit of love and thanksgiving, but there will be no turkey.

It is needless to appeal to the generosity of Saints, for they are generous; it is needless to appeal to their love, for they love. So we rejoice together over a day of love and generosity, which is so, because we make it so.

A Proclamation

By the President of the United States of America:

The American people, from their earliest days, have observed the wise custom of acknowledging each year the bounty with which Divine Providence has favored them. In the beginning this acknowledgment was a voluntary return of thanks by the community for the fruitfulness of the harvest. Though our mode of life has greatly changed, this custom has always survived. It has made Thanksgiving Day not only one of the oldest, but one of the most characteristic observances of our country. On that day, in home and church, in family and in public gatherings, the whole Nation has for generations paid the tribute due from grateful hearts for blessings bestowed.

To center our thought in this way upon the favor which we have been shown has been altogether wise and desirable. It has given opportunity justly to balance the good and evil which we have experienced. In that we have never failed to find reasons for being grateful to God for a generous preponderance of the good. Even in the least propitious times, a broad contemplation of our whole position has never failed to disclose overwhelming reasons for thankfulness. Thus viewing our situation, we have found warrant for a more hopeful and confident attitude toward the future.

It this current year, we now approach the time which has been accepted by custom as most fitting for the calm survey of our estate and the return of thanks. We shall the more keenly realize our good fortune, if we will, in deep sincerity, give to it due thought and more especially if we will compare it with that of any other community in the world.

The year has brought to our people two tragic experiences which have deeply affected them. One was the death of our beloved President Harding, which has been mourned wherever there is a realization of the worth of high ideals, noble purpose and unselfish service, carried even to the end of supreme sacrifice. His loss recalled the nation to a less capitious and more charitable attitude. It sobered the whole thought of the country. A little later came the unparalleled disaster to the friendly people of Japan. This called forth from the people of the United States a demonstration of deep and humane feeling. It was wrought into the substance of good works. It created new evidence of our international friendship which is a guarantee of world peace. It replenished the charitable impulse of the country.

By experiences such as these, men and nations are tested and refined. We have been blessed with much of material prosperity. We shall be better able to appreciate it if we remember the privations others have suffered, and we shall be the more worthy of it if we use it for their relief. We will do well, then, to render thanks for the good that has come to us and show by our actions that we have become stronger, wiser, and truer by the chastenings which have been imposed upon us. We will thus prepare ourselves for the part we must have in the world which forever needs the full measure of service. We have been a most favored people. We ought to be a most generous people. We have been a most blessed people. We ought to be a most thankful people.

Wherefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States, do hereby fix and designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, as Thanksgiving Day and recommend its general observance throughout the land. It is urged that the people gather in their homes and their usual places of worship, give expression to their gratitude for the benefits and blessings that a gracious Providence has bestowed upon them, and seek the guidance of Almighty God that they may deserve a continuance of his favor.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the United States.

Done at the city of Washington the 5th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-eighth. CALVIN COOLIDGE.

What Shall We Do to Save the Church?

Sermon by Elbert A. Smith during General Conference, Sunday afternoon, October 7, 1923.

PART II

Save yourself and thus help save the church. See that the gospel works out in you. Let me see that it works out in me. But what is salvation? Simply getting into heaven and out of hell? Is that our idea of salvation? Simply staying out of hell and getting into heaven, as a man would get under an umbrella out of the rain? Any sort of a man could get under an umbrella out of the rain. It wouldn't matter what kind of a man he was. But no one can get into heaven until he grows into it; at least, not into the celestial glory, until he grows into the perfect stature of manhood in Christ Jesus. The only way I know about to get into glory, then, is to grow into it.

Grow Towards Heaven

We cannot be saved by any formula. People of old used to try to seek some formula by which they could change base metals into gold. They never found it. You cannot find any formula or baptism ceremony that will save us only as it may help us work out that growth, until we come to the stature of manhood in Christ Jesus. Neither baptism, nor the Lord's supper, nor any formula or ceremony ever devised, will ever save a man who does not respond to the divine living and grow up unto Christ. These things help, and that is all they do, and that is what I mean when I say that having held these things fast, we should set them to work and see that they do the thing they were intended to do.

I am afraid that we have too many people who think they will be saved because they have joined a church that has apostles and prophets in it. They have been converted to the organization, and not to the thing that the organization was intended to do.

I am afraid there are too many who think they will be saved merely because they believe in faith, repentance, and baptism. Well, they may be as bad off as the colored man who died and when he was being buried, his pastor, looking into the grave, said, "Rastus Johnson, we hopes you is gone where we 'spects you ain't."

I say, I know of only one way to get into heaven, and reach salvation, and that is to grow into it. "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth." What a rich opportunity to develop spiritually. Grow in grace. Grow in the knowledge of the truth. Or, as the apostle here in the scriptural reading puts it, "Speaking the truth in love, grow up unto him in all things, who is the head, even Christ Jesus."

A Divine Trio

I want to dwell on that divine trio: truth and love and growth. That's the road to salvation. Speaking the truth. "You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Truth is fundamental in any kind of freedom. Physicians are coming today to recognize that before they can cure a man by drugs or in any other way, they must get him to face the truth concerning himself and his condition, and what brought him there, and what will get him out of there; and so we were all happy to hear Doctor Harrington tell us that one of the fundamental principles in his practice is that the truth shall make you free. His patients are taught to perceive the truth, and take it as their guide to find their way back to normal health; particularly where their trouble may be spiritual or mental.

Speaking the truth. But notice; speaking the truth in love. It isn't necessary to tell the truth all the time. That is, if you tell anything, tell the truth; but you don't need to go about all the time telling the truth to people. I know some things about some people that I don't need to tell to everyone who will listen. Let me tell it where it will do good; to the church officers, if necessary, or let me go to the ones involved and tell them in such a way that it will help them and not crowd them down.

Of course there are times when we must speak the truth plainly, but ah, how often when impelled to speak the truth, we do not speak it in love at all. We fling it at people. Speaking the truth in love! I tell you, brothers and sisters, I have heard altogether too many accusations. I want you to be careful when you invoke the spirit of religious intolerance, because you are conjuring up the spirit of old that erected the stake and the crucifix—tearing down the mercy seat—shutting the door of the temple.

Speaking the truth is love. Ah, nine tenths of our troubles will disappear if we speak the truth to each other in love. "Speaking the truth in love, let us grow up unto him in all things who is the head, even Jesus Christ." There you have your three steps, three great principles of truth and love and growth.

The Final Proof

I think you have the correct idea also that growth is the one great distinctive feature that proves this gospel to be true. There are many comparisons that we can make to the gospel life. Some of them are quite inadequate. I think Paul's figure of putting on the helmet and breastplate inadequate. It is good so far as it goes, but it leaves one thinking that religion is something that is put on; while religion is something that grows from within and develops outward, making man bigger as it grows within him. Jesus, in his parables, did much better. In many of them he introduces the principle of life and growth. The kingdom of heaven is like leaven put in three measures of meal, that presently leavens the whole lump. There you have life and growth. It is like a blade of corn, first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. There you have life and growth. The kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard seed, and so on. And Alma says, if you will only experiment on his words, if you can not have faith, at least have a desire to believe, and let the word of God find place in your life and try it out. By and by you will see the day when you can say, I know the gospel is true because it begins to enlarge my soul. I am a bigger man, a better man, than before; then you can say, I know the gospel is true.

Jesus said, These signs shall follow them that believe; but I pass that by to something more convincing to me. He also said, If any man will do the will of the Father, he shall know of the doctrine. I pass that by to something more convincing to me and come to the statement of Alma, that if any man will give this gospel place in his soul, by and by he can say, "I know it is true because it begins to enlarge my soul."

I know the gospel is true because every time I have tried it out it has made me a bigger and better man, and because I see it doing that work in hundreds of men and women, despite our innumerable faults and failings. That's the final test of the gospel, that it helps men to grow into the stature of the fullness of Christ. But of course we must not be satisfied to save ourselves. That is the primary step; but we must immediately turn our attention to the salvation of others, that we may help others grow.

There used to be a mistaken idea in the world that the religious hermit was the ideal religious character; that you could only live the gospel of Christ when you went away and buried yourself in the forests or desert or in some cell. It was thought that was a complete surrender to God; but as I have said before, that was not a surrender to God at all. It was a surrender to the Devil, in the sense that it was a retreat from the battlefield of life. It was a confession that men did not believe that the gospel of Christ was equal to the strain of everyday living with other people. If the gospel of Jesus Christ isn't equal to the strain of living between husband and wife in the home, between father and son, brother and sister, between neighbors on the same street, men in business, it isn't worth any man's time to go and hide himself in the desert or in a monastery cell.

All to Work Together

There is a great truth in the statement in the Book of Covenants, that all are called to labor together, ministers and men of business, and that idea opens up an avenue by which all our strength and resources can be devoted to this great cause. We sometimes sing the verse that Brother Luff composed, "Unto honor I have called you, honor great as angels know." I have wondered if that could be true when I have reflected upon the honor that is bestowed upon the bright angels in heaven; when I think of the glory that crowned Lucifer, the son of the morning, whose brilliance dazzled the eyes, and who was so popular that when he fell one third of the hosts of heaven said, We will follow him rather than God; and when I think of the glory and honor given to the angel Gabriel who will blow the trumpet that will cause the dead to rise up and friends to clasp hands of friends—and yet we sing, "Unto honor I have called you, honor great as angels know." We find that honor only in working out, as colaborers with Jesus Christ, the problems of life in the home, as fathers and mothers, husband and wife, children, as neighbors, making the gospel live in flesh and blood—a thing as great as angels have opportunity to do. Are we willing to do that? Are we willing to interpret in terms of flesh and blood the gospel of Jesus Christ, and do it now and here, and at this conference, beginning with to-morrow afternoon's business session?

Serve, Even as a Crutch

Yes, we don't want to think alone of our own salvation; sometimes we find our salvation by saving others. Sam Jones used to tell a very fine little story about two men who presented themselves at the pearly gates. Naturally they wanted to get in, but they were turned aside and told to go away, and with downcast heads and sad hearts they went away from the heavenly home; but as they journeyed along they met a poor cripple coming toward the gates. So they said, "Here, we will help you," and one got under one arm and the other under the other, and thus they took him right up to the gates. Peter opened the gates and said to this poor cripple, "Come right in—and bring your crutches with you." The point is this: while these men were thinking about themselves alone and about getting into heaven, they didn't get in. They only got there when they forgot themselves and were eager to help somebody else.

Sometimes I am troubled, discouraged, but then again down deep in my soul I am serene, because I have faith in God. I believe in God. I believe in my brothers. I believe in the truth. And I think these will prevail. If we can only have the spirit of tolerance and take time, we will feel our way eventually to unity, under the direction of the Holy Spirit.

Sometimes we are not tolerant enough. It is true, I presume, that some of our younger men with their heads a yeast-pot of ideas, impatient of tradition, just coming into the power and vigor of intellectual manhood, may look with a degree of contempt upon our older men, and may think them "fossilized," but they must remember that every generation, out of the riches of its experiences, hands down to the next generation a vast deal of truth. On the other hand, some of the older men, perhaps, having through many years affected other customs of thought, having cast them into a certain mold, look with suspicion and fear upon our young men. They must remember that every generation casts its thought in its own mold, and when that generation is past, the mold is broken and buried in the graveyard under the tombstones. But if the new generation casts its thought in its own mold of truth, what do we care? Jesus has said, "My Spirit shall guide you into all truth." Can we not trust the Spirit of God to take these young men, even though they may be casting about here and there for truth in ways that we do not approve, and lead them to the truth? I believe it will, and my life is dedicated to finding common ground in Christian fellowship upon which we may stand and find peace and cease our internal war. To that end I dedicate my life to-day. How many here will dedicate their lives with me? May God bless you.

Blue Pencil Notes

If you must knock, be like Opportunity.

The trouble with some sermons is they spend too much time on detours.

Some men find a wife very convenient—as a "catch all" for blame.

A certain "down East" brother observing Saints arriving late to the services, as some do quite often, always murmurs, "Here comes the terrestrial glory."

A brother in charge of a meeting during the Onset reunion called for a "silent collection," meaning a collection of bills. Whereupon a wag in the audience wrapped a ten-cent piece in tissue paper and dropped it in the plate—but the precaution was needless, as a dime makes very little noise these days.

During a recent reunion in the East a retired sea captain testified that during his life as sailor, before joining the church, he had sailed with nearly all nationalities in his crew. Among them in all that time was only one Latter Day Saint. During a terrific storm his boat was being driven on-shore. They were so close in shore that they could hear the waves strike the rocks with a noise like the report of cannon. But they could see nothing on account of the spray. All seemed lost. There was nothing more they could do. But he found this Latter Day Saint on his knees in prayer. "Get up," he said to the kneeling man; "it is too late to pray." But the man continued to pray, and in a few minutes the wind veered squarely about and blew from offshore until they were twenty miles out, and safe, having plenty of sea room in which to tack. Then the wind shifted back to the old quarter. A coincidence? Yes, there are many coincidences in the lives of praying men.

Thirteen men went from Attleboro, Massachusetts, to the World War. While they were gone, the Saints of Attleboro held a prayer meeting and petitioned the Lord that all these men might return. A prophecy was delivered to the effect that all would return. Peter Whalley was one of the thirteen—the first to go, the last to come back. He served on many fronts, in Greece, in the Balkans, in Belgium. He was in many battles and at last was taken to the hospital, gassed and wounded, and the physicians said that he could not possibly recover. But the promise sustained his soul though he was discharged—a physical wreck. It was not until 1920 that he reached Attleboro. He became pastor of the branch in that place, and almost miraculously returned to good health. But now comes a pleasant little sequel. In Attleboro was a little boy who every night had prayed for Brother Whalley's safe return. Upon the return of the object of his petitions, this little boy said to his mother, "Mamma, Peter is home. Now I am going to pray for what I want." He had craved a bicycle all that time, but did not pray for it until Peter was safe home. Shall we grown people first pray for what our brother needs, and afterward for what we want?

The Reverend Paul Henry Packard, of Des Moines, is authority for the statement that the following catechism is studied each Sunday by thousands of children in atheistic schools in America:

What is God?

God is a word used to designate an imaginary being whom church people have themselves devised.

How did man originate?

Just as did all the animals of the field; by evolution from a lower kind.

Has man any mortal soul such as Christianity teaches?

Man has no soul; it is only an imagination.

Is it true that God has ever been revealed?

As there is no God, he could never be revealed.

What is heaven?

Heaven is an imaginary place which the churches have devised as a charm to entice believers.

Who is Jesus Christ?

There is no God, and there can therefore be no Son of God. Will Christ return on the judgment day?

There is no judgment day; that is all a fable, so preachers can scare the people and hold them in their grasp. Man has no soul, neither had Christ a soul; all these things have been invented by the churches.

Do we owe a duty to God?

There is no God, and therefore we owe him no duty.

What is our duty when we have learned there is no God?

We should teach this knowledge to all whom we meet.

Is Christianity desirable?

Christianity is not desirable, because it makes of us spiritual cripples.

What is our duty when we have learned that Christianity is not desirable?

It becomes our duty to help eradicate Christianity from the United States.

The strange thing about such teaching is that it should accuse Christianity of producing "spiritual cripples." How can those who think that men are wholly mortal, entirely material, quite without spirits, prate about "spiritual" cripples? How could a creature devoid of a soul be a "spiritual" cripple? Spiritual qualities and states presume a spiritual nature. Material bodies can have no spiritual qualities. They can be neither spiritual giants nor yet spiritual cripples—neither moral nor immoral—more than rocks or cabbages.

Again, the last paragraph quoted has some twaddle about duty. How can a creature without a soul have any relationship whatever to duty? Devoid of soul, man becomes purely material. He begins at birth; he ends at death. He is only an aggregation of material particles in some mysterious, accidental way assembled, without rational cause, without purposeful destiny. Iron, water, phosphates, these cannot relate themselves to truth or right or duty. These can have no responsibility. Even though in their present correlation they may be momentarily endowed with thought (incomprehensible and ludicrous assumption), they can have no moral obligations, assuming that they came by chance, are not responsible to any higher agency, and soon go back to their former estate to mingle with the mold of vegetables and the atoms of disintegrated rocks. They are, then, no more accountable at any time than the atoms of crumbled granite or the paste of the rotten cucumber.

Children thus taught will very soon perceive all this. Their reaction will be against all law and order, against morality and duty. Their self-appointed teachers give them some piffle about duty and spiritual qualities the while they destroy belief in the only principles upon which duty and spiritual values can rest. This catechism may be a crude and raw statement of the materialistic philosophy, yet it gives all that atheism has to offer; its most eloquent and cultured apostle has never given anything better.

Our Church Courts

By R. T. Cooper

Are they equitable, or are they fashioned after the criminal law?

Criminal Law

As a basis of the investigation I will quote a few definitions and fundamental principles from Kelley's Criminal Law, third edition: "A crime is an act done with criminal intent, to the injury of the public or in violation of law. When a wrongful act is injurious to the public, that is, affects injuriously the public peace, the public health or public morals, it is clearly criminal. . . ." (Page 1.)

"In a civil case the injured party may dismiss his suit at pleasure and may appeal from an unfavorable judgment, and each person injured can maintain his separate action, but a criminal prosecution may only be instituted or discontinued by the state, through its proper officers" and "there is no appeal from a verdict of acquittal." (Page 2.)

Crime Must Be a Violation of an Existing Law

The term, "ex post facto law" as prominently employed in our Constitution has reference to criminal law only, i. e.:

What is meant by this expression is, that the legislature shall not pass any law after an act has been done which shall have relation thereto and punish that which was innocent when done, or to add to the punishment of that which was criminal, or to increase the malignity of a crime, or to alter the rules of evidence so as to make conviction more easy.—Page 3.

Penal Statutes Are to Be Strictly Construed.

What constitutes a crime? The act and the intent.
The Act:

There must be some act of omission or commission. An intent to commit a crime is not indictable; and although the intent is, in general, of the very essence of a crime, some overt act is the only sufficient evidence of the criminal intent.—Page 6.

The act must be done with a criminal intent. The intent is generally inferred from the commission of the act, "for a sane man ordinarily intends the usual and natural consequences of his acts." (Page 7.)

Intent:

The intent is a mere invisible resolve of the human mind and ordinarily must be gathered from the acts and conduct of the party charged with the commission of the act itself, but there must be some proof of facts upon which to hang the inference of specific intent, further than the mere proof of the act itself, and the acts proved must fairly indicate the intent inferred.—Page 11.

"The intent follows the bullet" is a trite saying that illustrates one phase of the question of intention of the party, and means that a man is held responsible for the effects that follow his act. If one recklessly shoots a gun in the direction of a crowd of people he is almost certain to hit some one, and if the victim is killed the person shooting off the gun is held to have intended to kill, even though the person is an entire stranger to him. If the victim is only slightly wounded, the offense might be manslaughter, assault with a deadly weapon, or simply disturbing the peace, if no one was hurt.

Crimes, Felonies, or Misdemeanors

"Criminal offenses are treason, felonies or misdemeanors." (Page 12.) Treason is the offense of trying to overthrow the government of the state to which the offender owes allegiance, or of betraying the state into the hands of foreign power, while the Constitution of the United States provides: "Treason against the United States shall consist in levying war against them or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort."

Treason. Treason is punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary.

Felony. Felony is any offense which may be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary or by death.

Misdemeanors. Misdemeanors are offenses lower than felonies and are punishable by a fine only, or by imprisonment in the county jail, or both. (Page 12.)

Punishment—its object:

"All laws, whether civil or criminal, would be utterly worthless if no means were provided for their enforcement, by compelling obedience to their commands." The right to punish individuals for the commission of crimes rests upon the foundation of "public necessity."

The true object of punishment is to prevent crime.

Strictly, it has nothing to do with vengeance or compensation, nor, except indirectly, the reformation of the offender. The reformation and purification of society is the result of compelling obedience to the laws; but if the reformation and restoration of the offender to society were of the essential purposes of punishment, the death penalty and imprisonment for life could not be inflicted; nor ought a man to be punished who ignorantly commits an offense, yet the rule is almost inflexible that ignorance of the law affords no excuse for crime.—Page 14.

In comparison with the church laws there are a few points of similarity, while the great majority and weight of the law is a contrast. As enunciated by the Master: "And that servant which knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes, but he that knew not and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. . . ." (Luke 12: 47, 48.)

In Missouri and the States generally all felonies must be defined or declared by statute and the punishment therefor prescribed by statute. (Revised Statutes, Mo. 1919, sec. 7049.) In this particular we seem to have a parallel, in the case of sinning against the law touching morality and marriage, in Doctrine and Covenants, 42:7, where, in the first place, "He that violates this law shall deny the faith and shall not have the spirit, and if he repents not, he shall be cast out." In case of a second offense, i. e., after having once been forgiven, "if he doeth it again he shall not be forgiven, but shall be cast out." Here the penalty is mandatory and must be enforced as prescribed the same as a statutory penalty fixed by the state legislature.

With one other possible exception, I believe this is the only penalty positively fixed by our church law, while in state criminal law, maximum and minimum penalties and punishments are affixed to an elaborate list of offenses. Attention is also called to the punishment inflicted by state law, while under church law no punishment is contemplated and severing the offender's membership in the body is the maximum, leaving the punishment of such individuals to the laws of the land, as per Doctrine and Covenants 42:22: "If he or she shall lie, steal, or rob, etc., he or she shall be delivered up to the laws of the land." Also section 42, paragraph 21: "And it shall come to pass if any persons among you shall kill, they shall be delivered up and dealt with according to the laws of the land, for remember that he hath no forgiveness; and it shall be proven according to the laws of the land."

One other important feature which seems to distinguish our law from the criminal law is the right of appeal. In a criminal prosecution there is no appeal from a verdict of acquittal (Supra, p. 2, par. 2, K. CL. L), while in civil cases (not under the criminal law) either party has the right of appeal, and seeing, as has been shown, criminal law is limited to treason, felony, or misdemeanor, punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary and county jail, or fines, or both, as prescribed by statute; while the church does not even contemplate action under any of these heads, but is devoted to, first: reformation of the individual, and this being found impossible, then severance of the offender's membership for the preservation of the standard of the church, according to the church procedure, paragraph 1:

Precedent to any action in the church courts there must be full and consistent labor performed as required in the church laws and rules governing, and no action can properly be maintained against a member where due and diligent labor has not first been performed on the part of those whose duty it is under the law to do this work . . . otherwise the basis of the action is the performance of kindly, diligent, and brotherly labor, for the purpose of, in good faith, reclaiming the member.

The church does not attempt to compel obedience to her laws; adherence is entirely voluntary. Penal statutes are strictly construed (K. C. L. 4) while church law, save in the two instances noted, is lenient and to be liberally construed. Simply a persistent effort to withdraw from the church may be sufficient to justify severing the membership without even the formality of a charge of criminality or even of apostasy.

Also in our church courts the right of appeal is accorded and should be maintained to either party. It therefore seems that whether or not our church courts are equitable, it is clear they are not based on the exercise of criminal law and procedure.

Equity

Equity, in its common aspect, means, according to Webster, equality of rights; natural justice or right; the giving, or desiring to give, to each man his due, according to the natural law. In its legal acceptation, however, it has a meaning better understood by its history than by any specific definition.

As a law, it had its origin in England in the early days of "common law" as a refuge from the harshness and unyielding application of the "common law" under which litigants often suffered injustice and hardship, to escape which, the unfortunate parties would appeal to the king in person, or to the chancellor, "the keeper of the king's conscience," for redress of their injury.

Under the procedure of the common law one would not go into court unless his grievance came under some one of the prescribed forms that were in use. (Quotations from Bisham's Principles of Equity, ninth edition): "No common law writ, for example, existed by which a defective instrument could be reformed, a fraudulent conveyance set aside, a mistake or accident effectually relieved against, or a beneficial interest in property be enforced as against the holder of a legal title." (Page 9.) "A judgment at law was either simply for the plaintiff or simply for the defendant. There could be no qualifications or modifications of the judgment." (Page 10.) As already stated, no action could be brought in a court of "king's bench" or court of "common pleas" without having a certain prescribed set form of action, rigid in its nature, and unless the trouble fit one of those forms it could not be heard in the court. Hence the demands of justice compelled the parties to appeal to the king's secretary, "the keeper of his conscience," called the chancellor, who had the right to invent and issue new forms of writs to fit the case. The chancellor, moreover, was generally an ecclesiastic, and to the church men in those days the learning of the civil law, to which the common law is so much indebted, was principally confined.

"The general ground for equitable relief was then, as it professes to be now, either the failure of the common law courts to recognize a right of their inability to enforce it." Among the most frequent instances in which this general doctrine of equitable relief was applied were those in which petitions were addressed to the chancellor in cases of assault and trespass and a variety of outrages which were cognizable at common law, but for which the petitioner was unable to obtain redress owing to the position of powerful connections of his adversary." (Page 12.) In this way the laws administered through the chancellor gradually increased until 1873, culminating in the passage of what was called the "Supreme Court Judicature Act of 1873," and its amendments, whereby the judicial system of England has been recast, and the distinction between courts of equity and courts of law abolished. By that act it was, in substance, provided that, after the second day of November, 1874, the administration of justice in all courts should be regulated by the principles of equity.

By this act it was provided that the court of chancery, the court of queen's bench, the court of common pleas, the court of exchequer, the high court of admiralty, the court of probate, the court for divorce and matrimonial causes, and the London court of bankruptcy should be united and consolidated and should constitute one supreme court of judicature, to consist of two divisions under the name of "Her Majesty's High Court of Justice," and "Her Majesty's Court of Appeal"—"And that the court of appeal was to consist of five ex officio judges and so many ordinary judges (not exceeding nine at any one time) as might from time to time be appointed. The ex officio judges were declared to be the "lord chancellor, the lord chief justice of England, the master of the rolls, the lord chief justice of the common pleas, and the lord chief baron of the exchequer." The act further provided that if the plaintiff claims any equitable estate, or right of relief upon any equitable ground or equitable relief upon a legal right, the said courts and every judge thereof should give the same relief as ought to have been given by the court of chancery before the passing of the act; and that if a defendant claims any equitable estate or right, or relief upon any equitable ground, or alleges any equitable ground of defense, the said courts and every judge thereof should give the same effect to every estate, right or ground of relief so claimed and to every equitable defense so alleged, as the court of chancery ought to have given in proceedings before that court before the passing of the act. "In 1876 it was provided that appeal would lie from the court of appeal to the House of Lords." "It will be observed that, by the provisions of these acts, the principles of justice, as administered in the court of chancery, were made to pervade the whole mass of English jurisprudence, and that in fact by the rules growing out of those principles all questions of justice in England are hereafter to be determined."

It is plain from the above sketch of the rise of the court of chancery, that the term "equity" as descriptive of an important body of English law, has an essentially technical signification, and that its precise and definite meaning when so used is clearly distinguishable from that which it bears in its ordinary acceptation. Thus equity may be in one sense synonymous with natural right and justice; but neither courts of chancery nor courts of law profess to afford relief in all cases in which redress would be prescribed by rules of charity, generosity, or benevolence, or by the dictates of a nice sense of honor, and yet the rules of benevolence and the principles of honor are included within the scope of the terms "right" and "justice" and may therefore fall within the meaning of the term "equity." (Pages 21, 22, 23.)

On the other hand courts of common law recognize "equity" in a certain sense, thus, when the equity of a statute is spoken of, or a certain case is said to be within that "equity" or the like, the meaning intended to be conveyed is simply that a sound and fair interpretation of the law must be given . . . an interpretation based not upon its letter alone, but upon its spirit and true sense.—Page 23.

The difference in the operation of the principles of equity as compared with the application of law may be better understood by an illustration: One takes out a policy of fire insurance on his home at 1977 South Main Street, on which he pays the premium for three or five years in advance. Two or three years later the house burned down and an examination of the policy shows a mistake was made by the scrivener so that it reads No. 1917 South Main. The insurance company refusing to pay, an action at law is filed. One of the fundamental rules of law is that oral evidence may not be received to change or contradict the terms of a written instrument, therefore the lawsuit fails because the house at No. 1917, which is covered by the policy, has not burned. The only remedy was a suit in equity to reform the contract so that it would read No. 1977, the house for which he paid the premium and which was destroyed by fire; then a new action at law would be instituted to collect the insurance on the reformed policy, but under the new system, by which "the administration of justice in all courts should be regulated by the principles of equity," a suit to reform the contract and then collect the proceeds may be blended in one suit in equity on the grounds of mistake.

The legal definition of equity therefore is: "Equity is that system of justice which was administered by the high court of chancery in England in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction." (Page 1.)

Equity in the United States

The Federal courts have equity powers within the scope of the jurisdiction conferred upon them by the Constitution.

The equity jurisdiction of the Federal courts is derived from the Federal Constitution and statutes, and is like unto that of the high court of chancery in England, and the time of the adoption of the Judiciary Act 1789, it is not subject to limitations or restraints by state legislation giving jurisdiction to state courts over similar matters—Page 24; 215 U. S. 43.

Equity in the Judicial Power of the Federal Government

By the Constitution of the United States it is provided that the judicial power of the Federal Government shall extend to all cases at law or in equity arising under the constitution and the laws of the United States and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority. (Page 24.)

Not only are the principles and practice of the high court of chancery recognized in the administration of equity in the Federal Courts, but the administration of chancery doctrines under chancery forms is uniform throughout the Union.

"After the separation of the American Colonies from the British Crown the Constitutions of many of the States provided for the establishment of courts of chancery, after the model of the high court of chancery in England."

In other States there were no separate courts of chancery, and the powers conferred on the common law courts were exceedingly limited. Changes were, however, made from time to time in most of the States.

In 1840 the state convention which revised the constitution of New York abolished the courts of chancery and conferred upon the supreme court a general jurisdiction in law and equity, while in Pennsylvania enlarged equity powers were conferred upon the courts, in obedience to the report of the committee to revise the civil code made in 1835. (Pages 25, 26.)

The example of New York, in abolishing the distinction between legal and equitable forms of action, and substituting a general form of civil action in their place has been followed by many of the western States of the Union, and even the State of South Carolina, so justly celebrated for the learning and ability of its chancellors, has given its adherence to the new system and has adopted a code whereby courts of equity are abolished and all civil injuries are redressed under one form of action. (Page 26.) Our own State of Missouri was next to New York, being the second State to adopt this single form of action.

It is pleasant to note that Doctrine and Covenants 99, establishing the highest legal and judicial tribunal in the church (which is also preponderantly equitable) was promulgated and adopted by the church about one year before even the committee on revision reported to Pennsylvania, and about six years before the adoption of the new system in New York.

Procedure. In an action at law the right of trial by jury is preserved by constitutional provision, while equity trials are to be noted for the absence of a jury, the original practice being strictly adhered to, in that a case in equity is heard and decided by the judge acting as chancellor. True, he has the right to call to his assistance a jury in determining some question of fact if he desires to do so, but the decree of the court of equity is always by the chancellor.

In our church court system, cases are heard and decided by a court of three (or two) elders, of whom one is selected to act as chairman.

The bishops' court is similarly organized, and the Presiding Bishop's court, consisting of the Presiding Bishop and his two counselors, who sit as the court and render their decisions without jury construction. Of course it is provided in the law that in certain cases he may call to his assistance a council of twelve high priests, but even that would be more in the nature of the chancellor seeking the aid of a jury to determine a question of fact, as already mentioned, than to act as a jury.

While in the case of the Standing Presiding High Council the comparison with equity jurisdiction is still more marked.

The President of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged in his administration by the voice of the church; and it is according to the dignity of his office that he should preside over the high council of the church.

Whenever a high council of the church is regularly organized according to the foregoing pattern, it shall be the duty of the twelve councilors to cast lots by numbers, and thereby ascertain who of the twelve shall speak first, commencing with number one, and so on in succession to number twelve.

The accused in all cases has a right to one half the council to prevent injustice or insult. Those councilors who draw the even numbers, 2, 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, are the individuals who stand up in behalf of the accused and prevent insult or injustice, while the councilors who drew the odd numbers 1, 3, 5, 7, 9, 11, stand up in behalf of the church. And the councilors who are appointed to speak before the council are to present the case, after the evidence is examined, in its true light, before the council, and every man is to speak according to equity and justice. In all cases the accuser and the accused shall have the privilege of speaking for themselves before the council.

After the evidences are heard, the councilors, accuser and accused have spoken, the President shall give a decision, according to the understanding which he shall have of the case, and call upon the twelve councilors to sanction the same by their vote. (Section 99: 6-9.)

A brief mention of the forms of procedure developed under this new system for securing justice might be profitable here, in lieu of the elaborate methods under the old common law system. Four rules now suffice to bring a matter squarely to issue, for, be it understood that no matter how complicated a case at first may appear, it ultimately resolves itself to one or more clearly defined questions affirmed by one party and denied by the other. These points are called "the issue," and while our church courts do not need any such extensive or closely-drawn rules, yet the process adopted should be sufficient that by the time a case might be called for hearing there would be a well marked "issue," and each party would understand exactly what that issue is.

The Petition. (Section 1220, Revised Statutes of Missouri, 1919.)

The first pleading on the part of the plaintiff is the petition, which shall contain: First, the title of the cause, specifying the term, the name of the court and county in which the action is brought, and the names of the parties to the action, plaintiffs and defendants; second, a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting a cause of action, without unnecessary repetition; third, a demand of the relief to which the plaintiff may suppose himself entitled.

The Answer. (Section 1232):

The answer of the defendant shall contain, First, a general or specific denial of each material allegation of the petition controverted by the defendant, or any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief; provided, that it shall be competent for the defendant to unite a general and specific denial in the same answer; second, a statement of any new matter constituting a defense or counterclaim, in ordinary and concise language, without repetition.

Reply and Demurrer to Answer. (Section 1235):

The plaintiff may demur to one or more defenses set up in the answer, stating in his demurrer the grounds thereof; and where the answer contains new matter, the plaintiff shall reply to such new matter within such time as the court by rule or otherwise shall require, denying generally or specifically the allegations controverted by him, or any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief, and he may allege in ordinary and concise language and without repetition, any new matter not inconsistent with the petition, constituting a defense to the new matter in the answer. To this reply the defendant may demur within three days after the same has been filed, which shall have brought the entire matter to an issue before the court, and each party is enabled to know just what is claimed and what must be substantiated or defended; the parallel between our laws and the procedure in England is made still more complete by section 1153.

One Form Only. (Section 1153):

There shall be in this State but one form of action for the enforcement or protection of private rights, and redress or prevention of private wrong, which shall be denominated a civil action; and the party thereto complaining shall be known as the plaintiff, and the adverse party as the defendant. This statute has been constructed by the Missouri Supreme Court of Missouri to mean: Forms of Action Abolished. There is but one form of action for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress or prevention of private wrongs.—116 No. 558, 22 S. W. 813.

Jurisdiction of Courts of Law and Equity Blended

The fundamental distinction between courts of law and equity have not been abolished, and while all causes are tried in one court, the presiding judge is clothed with law and equity jurisdiction. (176 Mo., 310-75 S. W. 914.)

If the pleadings present issues of equitable cognizance then it becomes a proceeding in equity. (205 S. W. 217.)

It has been said, "The definition of equity is rather suggested than precise, (B. P. E., p. 1) and invites inquiry rather than answers it."

Equity is said to be "supplemental to the law." Equity obtains "when the law, by reason of its universality, cannot effect a complete and adequate remedy. Its nature and application may be still further apprehended by the maxims in equity. A maxim is the embodiment of a general truth in the shape of a familiar adage.

1. No right without a remedy. (56.)
2. Equity follows the law. (65.)
3. Vigilantibus non dormientibus aequitas subvenit. (To the vigilant and not to the sleepy will the law lend its aid.) (66.)
4. Between equal equities the law will prevail. (69.)
5. Equality is equity. (70.)
6. He who comes into equity must do so with clean hands. (70.)
7. He who seeks equity must do equity. (73.)
8. Equity looks upon that as done which ought to be done. (75.)
9. Between equal equities priority of time will prevail. (76.)
10. Equity imputes an intention to fulfill an obligation. (77.)
11. Equity acts in personam. (78.)
12. Equity acts specifically. (81.)

Comparison with the church doctrine and principles seems to show a tendency toward legal equity to a remarkable extent. There is "no justice without law." "Mercy cannot rob justice; not one whit." (Alma 19: 107, Book of Mormon.)

Justice is defined to be "a constant and perpetual disposition to render to each man his due, the conformity of our actions and our will to the law." (Bouvier's Law Dictionary.)

Justice and judgment is the penalty which is affixed unto my law.—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 1.

Justice claimeth its own.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 10.

Founding a Family

By Mrs. Ida Etzenhouser

Because your grandmother answered "yes" to a question that was asked her by your grandfather many years ago, you are here. The fact that you enjoy good physical health and are of normal intelligence is because your grandfather used good judgment in the choosing of his mate. It is a fact worth remembering that, "Every living organism owes its existence to its heredity relation to its ancestors." There is that within its germ plasm which determines whether a living thing shall be bird, fish, or what not.

It does not seem strange to most of us that man is Execute judgment and justice for us according to law and redress us of our wrongs.—Doctrine and Covenants 102:7.

Peace, justice and truth is the habitation of your throne.
(Doctrine and Covenants 36:6.)

Thus should the courts of the church function until Isaiah's prophecy is fulfilled.

And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse and a branch shall grow out of his roots. And the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, and the Spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears, but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. (Isaiah 11:1-4.)

man, and bird is bird, but it is just as wonderful as that there are racial traits in man. We might look through a strong microscope and hardly distinguish the chromosomes which are supposed to contain the determining factors in the germ plasm, yet they do exist. When the child is born we readily determine his race, and early in his life we are apt to exclaim that we see resemblances to this or the other member of his family. We say that man is man, yet there are the Anglo-Saxons, the Italians, the Mongolians, and the Negroes, but still they are all men.

Inheritance of Racial Characteristics

We are fond of quoting, "God has made of one flesh all the nations of the earth." From that quotation we sometimes deduce that intermarriage of races is proper, as man had a common origin. Another quotation that seems pleasing to our ears is that "all men were born equal." We will admit that it is quite probable that man had a common origin, yet their environment has left its mark so that now after myriads of years we have the different races, whose distinct racial tendencies have left their impressions on the germ plasm of man. In spite of this common origin of man, we know that racial characteristics are transmitted, and it is utterly impossible at this stage of human development for a child of full Negro parentage to possess the racial tendencies of the Anglo-Saxon. Through the ages the germ plasm of man has been receiving its impression and has been modified by thousands of years of climatic conditions. Man's nervous system has developed to cope with the changing conditions in which man has found himself, so that the man of to-day is only in a modified sense the same as he was when he first was introduced into the world.

The race, that through the myriads of years has lived in a tropical climate, where all a man had to do was to reach forth his hand and obtain that which he needed to sustain life, has not reached the stage of development of the more northern races that have struggled through the ages for food and shelter. Necessity has been a stern master that has driven certain groups of primitive man to devise ways and means to obtain that which others in warmer climates were able to obtain without effort. The reward of this struggle has been rich in racial development and has left its mark upon man's germ plasm, so that the children of these more civilized races now inherit the capacity for still greater attainments. Society is the richer because of these early struggles of man.

Inheritance of Family Traits

Just as there are racial traits, so there are family traits, distinctive features of body and mind that are transmitted in the germ plasm. We all know of families that enjoy a marked musical ability, others that have artistic tendencies, and others that have become famous along mechanical lines. We of course have to acknowledge that environment had much to do with the shaping of their life's work. Yet man in a marked way has the power to select his environment, and does so when he has a strong urge within. This urge may be called his inherited tendencies along a given line.

The question may be asked, "What has all of this to do with the founding of a family?" In my opinion it should have great weight. The germ plasm is the immortal part of the physical body. Man should consider his germ plasm as a most sacred trust that should be passed on by him to his children. It should be modified only in such a way that it will give his children even greater advantages than he himself has enjoyed. Every marriage that takes place means that a certain modification of the race is taking place, by the bringing together of two different streams of germ plasm. Every boy and girl should be taught to realize the significance of this truth and to understand the part which they themselves have to play in the future of society. Before marriage they should be taught their responsibility to their unborn children, and they should be inhibited from rushing into alliances on a wave of emotion that will bring them nothing but unhappiness and curse their children.

The Problem of Mixed Races

As a social worker I have been made to realize as never before the social problem which arises from the mixing of such races as have but little in common. To illustrate, I wish to speak of a family with which I worked while living in a distant city. The woman was very fair with blue eyes and a complexion pink and white. In early youth she had lived in a mining camp where the employees were mostly foreigners of a low social grade. The highest paid employee was the cook who was a Chinese. The girl was employed in the kitchen of the camp, and the constant association with the cook soon wore away whatever prejudice she might have once held toward the Chinese. Unknown to her parents the cook began to make engagements with the girl, and as he had more money to spend than other young men and was very courteous it was not long until racial barriers were broken down and they became engaged. As the society of the mining camp was somewhat nondescript, it caused but little comment when the two were seen together occasionally. No one talked to the girl about the matter, and she was in her early teens when judgment is immature. The couple was married and their troubles began.

The girl's early training had been such that she considered marriage to be eternal, and under no consideration should the marriage covenant be dissolved. Another point in her early training was that the function of every woman was to become a mother. So children were born to them. Economic conditions drove them from the little mining camp to establish their home in a large city. The woman was an exceptionally good housekeeper and was devoted to her family. The children inherited a strong resemblance to the father and had straight coarse hair, very dark skin and oblique eyes. The woman, being ambitious for her children, selected a desirable neighborhood for their new home and paid the rent in advance. All was well until the husband came home, then at once the neighbors entered complaint with the landlord, as they absolutely refused to have a Chinaman for a neighbor. The family was forced to move. The same tragedy was enacted again and again. The family was driven from a good neighborhood to one less good, and down the scale until they were forced to take up their abode in a part of town where only the Negroes and Chinese lived.

The tragedy was not even finished then. The children were big enough to go to school when I came in contact with the family, and an even greater social tragedy was being enacted in their lives. The mother with high Anglo-Saxon ideals had made her home as cultural as possible. In spite of her surroundings, which were almost beyond description, her home was ideal. She gathered her children around her and told them stories, and taught them Anglo-Saxon ideals. But when they went out from the home into school life the cold shoulder was turned to them. The white children refused to share their seats with them, and in spite of their good training and ideals which they had inherited from their Anglo-Saxon mother, they were forced down the social scale to seek companionship among the Negroes and those of their father's race. I saw the oldest son's face light up with an inward fire of indignation and exclaim he hated the Chinese, and disliked his father.

When Will the Tragedy Cease?

I held several conferences with this family's physician who was very socially minded, trying to devise some way to help those children to make their social adjustment. The mother was extremely unhappy, the father was discontented. The children, hardly old enough yet to sense their heritage, were already showing marked signs of discontent. All this was because a foolish girl on a wave of emotion without giving a thought to her unborn children allowed herself to follow blind impulse instead of considering the most vital of all questions, the founding of her family. I heard this mother exclaim with all the pathos of the damned: "If only some one had stopped me, had told me what I was doing to my children when I became engaged to my husband." We do not know the sequel of this story, for there will be as many sequels as there will be born children and grandchildren. When will the tragedy cease? Not as long as one of their mixed blood remains on the earth. The modification of that mother's germ plasm has taken place and has become immortal inasmuch as it now carries the dominant characteristics of the darker-skinned race, which will show itself as long as a descendant of that union exists on the earth.

I have told the story to drive a truth home. There are many other stories just as pathetic with which I have become familiar, where other races were involved, but this one I hope will be sufficient to make you sense the responsibility which is yours in the founding of a family. We all are familiar with the history of the Juke family and its long list of criminals and paupers. Perhaps we are less familiar with the story of the descendants of Jonathan Edwards who was born in 1703, and which shows a more hopeful aspect of eugenics. "In 1900 a survey of the descendants of this family was made and 1,394 descendants identified. Among those identified were 295 college graduates, 13 presidents of our greatest colleges, many principals of important educational institutions, sixty physicians, many of them eminent, one hundred clergymen, missionaries or theological professors, seventy-five officers in the army or navy, sixty prominent authors, one hundred and thirty-five books of merit written and published, eighteen periodicals of importance edited, over one hundred lawyers, thirty judges. Eighty men have held public office, one a vice president of United States, three United States senators, several governors, members of Congress, framers of constitutions, mayors of cities, ministers to foreign courts, one president of Pacific Mail Steamship Company, fifteen bank presidents, and many managers of insurance companies and industrial institutions. Not one of his descendants has ever been known to be convicted of crime." That is the kind of a contribution we would like every Latter Day Saint to make to society.

The Science of Heredity and Eugenics

Every boy and girl should know something about the science of heredity and eugenics. They should understand what traits are dominant in man and what are recessive. They should understand that a dominant characteristic always expresses itself when present, while the recessive character, though present, cannot express itself when the dominant is present. Of minor importance is the fact that dark eyes are dominant over blue, dark skin over fair, curly hair over straight, etc. Of much more importance are such characteristics as pertain to the nervous system. We should be thankful that normality is dominant over subnormality. In God's wisdom he wills that man should be normal in his intelligence and so be able to cope with his environment and make an equitable adjustment. However the unstable nervous system is dominant over the stable nervous system. Instability brings many evils in its wake, such as insanity, chorea, alcoholism, drug habit, etc. You do not inherit insanity, but you do inherit an unstable nervous system that is not able to make its adjustments to unfavorable conditions. This being the case any unusual stress to which one more stable might readily make his adjustment throws the one with an unstable nervous system out of balance. It is the business of those founding a family to know something of the heritage of their prospective companions, so as to understand their limitations. Under no circumstances should two people of decidedly unstable inheritance be allowed to marry. Again we do not inherit alcoholism, but we do inherit a nervous system that craves stimulants and often resorts to alcohol or drugs. Proper training and corrective environmental measures may, at least partially, correct these weaknesses. "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure," so it is wiser to control the known laws and prevent misery. "We should check the birth rate of the unfit and should improve the race by furthering the productiveness of the fit."

Who Is Unfit?

Great care should be taken before stating that anyone is "unfit." There are many other causes for subnormality besides the inherited deficient nervous system, among which we will name, hard births, which sometimes causes the skull to press on the brain and prevents the proper functioning of that important organ, syphilis which in an advanced state destroys brain cells, excessively high and prolonged fevers which sometimes burn out nerve cells and cause subnormality. These things are not inherited. But here it is necessary to define the word inherited, as meaning anything that has become part of the germ plasm. These tendencies are not correctable but are passed on from parents to their children. The word congenital should be used when we refer to that which is contracted in the uterus of the mother. To explain, we do not inherit syphilis, but it often is congenital. In other words the germ plasm does not carry that possibility, but the blood of the parent is so infected that the embryo becomes diseased and the child is born with congenital syphilis. To make the parents clean is to correct the condition, while in anything that is inherited no amount of treatment will effect the germ plasm.

It is the defective germ plasm which should be avoided when we consider the establishing of our family. As civilization increases, so society becomes more complex, and it becomes more difficult for those of mediocre intelligence to make a contribution to the group.

Ideals in Founding a Family

In teaching Zionie ideals it is hoped our young people will be taught their obligation, recognizing the fact that God has made them the guardians of the future of our race, for within their bodies they carry that which is the immortal part of our physical bodies. That carries with it all that has come to the race through the thousands of years of struggle against environmental odds. Our inheritance is rich with possibilities. May the youth of the church sense their responsibilities, for to them has been intrusted in great measure all of our hopes and ideals for the future. May God give them wisdom to choose wisely in the "founding of the family."

Outline of Course of Study

(The outline follows the chapters in the textbook. Questions are selected from manuals, Mothercraft, by Etta Hunt, 10 cents, and Mothercraft for Girls, by Alice Mae Burgess, 15 cents, and other questions are based upon the articles. The question manuals and any reference books as listed may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

CHAPTER IV

Founding a Family

1. Distinguish between hereditary and congenital traits.
2. What are some of the things that affect the germ cells, and how are these carried to the cell?
3. Some individuals should never become parents. Why?
4. What is eugenics? Discuss the benefit to the race of positive and negative eugenics.
5. What is your responsibility to unborn children?
6. What are the women of our church doing to-day to prepare for the child of the future?
7. What are the spiritual qualifications for parenthood?
8. What can parents do to give children the right attitude towards future parenthood?
9. How is such a training a safeguard through the years of adolescence?
10. If young people are taught and trained to build for future generations, what will be their ideals in love and marriage?

That the forces against prohibition are closely organized is shown by the fact that the HERALD editors have been solicited to join the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment. When the position of the HERALD and of the church as well on this subject is recognized, the fact that we have been approached at all is significant of the desperate straits to which the antiprohibition forces are coming and their efforts to get all possible enlisted against the law.

DEPARTMENTAL

Support of the Missionaries

By Benjamin R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop

The church at the General Conference which adjourned on the 13th day of October sustained the general officers and conference appointees. Their families must be supported, and their expenses be paid. They depend upon you, and you will not betray their confidence.

One day prior to the convening of General Conference the Quorum of Twelve, then in session, asked the Presiding Bishop his opinion as to the financial condition of the church, and if they would be warranted in appointing any new missionaries. In reply to these questions, he, among other things, said that the officers and missionaries in the past had contributed more than they had received; otherwise the church would not at present be able to write its net worth in seven figures, to say nothing of the spiritual benefits enjoyed by its members. He believes what was true of the officers and missionaries of the past is equally true of the eldership of to-day. Those present and enjoying the spirit of love and devotion to the cause experienced on the closing day of the conference of 1923 share this opinion.

No one should underestimate the task before us, nor as we sing "think at ease to sit down." As officers and members we have solemnly covenanted to perform the work of our respective stewardships. With faith in God and each other, the church moves forward.

In fulfilling the task assigned me, I wish to invite the attention of the Saints to the resolution adopted by General Conference:

Stewardships

Whereas, the law of God teaches that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; therefore:

(a) All men are of necessity stewards.

(b) That the law of stewardships applies individually to each and every member of the church.

Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9; 70: 3; 101: 2; 118: 4.

Therefore be it resolved:

That the Order of Bishops believe it to be the duty of every member of the church to acknowledge his stewardship by complying with the law as given in the scriptures:

(a) Filing his inventory.

(b) Paying his tithe.

(c) Paying his surplus.

(d) Making his offerings.

(e) And thereafter giving an account of his stewardship annually as required by the law of God.

In accordance with the foregoing, the members of the church, "who are willing and desirous," Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1, under the general supervision of the officers ordained of God for this purpose, may establish such organizations as are contemplated in the law whenever and wherever circumstances warrant this procedure.

In order to accomplish these purposes, we deem it the duty of each individual to endeavor so far as is consistent with wholesome standards of living to establish a plane of living that will make possible an annual increase.

A prompt and united compliance with the spirit and letter of this resolution will cause some of our seeming financial difficulties to disappear, and develop a condition of mind and heart that will permit our heavenly Father to recognize our faith by bestowing a spiritual blessing.

My earnest plea to the Saints is, and my prayer to God shall be, that each recognize that the success of the church depends upon everyone doing his full part. I am confident that, understanding their duty with regard to the temporal law, the Saints will say with the Apostle James, "I'll show you my faith by my works," and ample means will be in hand to forward the cause we love.

Have you paid your tithing? Then make an offering and encourage another to do likewise. Have you a surplus? Then consecrate your surplus. You are not in a position to pay all? Then pay what you can. In any event, pay something and pay now. Now is the accepted time. Now is the day of salvation. Why delay? While you wait, another waits for you. While you delay, another soul is denied the gospel message which has given new meaning to your life and enriched your soul.

God knows your every need. He always has and ever will bless his children. May we, one and all, trust him and do his will.

Have you been blessed in paying your tithing and contributing your offerings? Then write and tell us about it. Why not tell the Lord by inclosing a thank-offering with your letter?

In a later article we will cover a number of questions on stewardships that will be of interest to the Saints.

Sanitarium Gift Day

Thanksgiving Day for the Independence Sanitarium means that its urgent needs be supplied immediately. Last week the HERALD called attention to this request by way of an editorial. A list of things required at this time appears again this week and the request is being repeated.

All those desiring to assist in the good cause and do something by way of special effort at Thanksgiving, send any of the articles listed to the Independence Sanitarium.

Sheets, 72 by 100 inches, 2-inch hem at top and bottom.

Draw sheets, 45 by 72 inches, 1-inch hem at top and bottom.

Pillow slips, 45 by 36 or 42 by 36 inches. However, all sizes can be used.

Spreads, 72 by 90 inches. Dimity only.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Minneapolis Pastor Transferred to Another Field

SAINT PAUL, MINNESOTA, November 15.—The Minneapolis Branch is losing the services of its pastor, Elder William Sparling, who has been appointed to labor in the Eastern Oklahoma District. At the last business meeting, where his resignation was acted upon and accepted, the branch elected Elder C. A. Kress to fill out the unexpired term until the first of the year. This was with the approval of the district president, Elder George Day, who has been with us for almost a week, and also by the unanimous vote of the congregation.

Before his departure the branch held a farewell party in honor of Brother Sparling. There was a large and representative attendance, and many spoke their regret at seeing him go, while also expressing their gratitude for the work which he has done in Minneapolis, and wishing him equal success in his new field. Elder Sparling has been pastor of the Minneapolis Branch for almost four years, and during that time has been instrumental in leading the work in this city to a more unified and spiritual condition than was enjoyed before.

Elder William Shakespeare, the new missionary appointee for Minnesota and North Dakota, who comes from the same part of the country to which Brother Sparling is going, was here last week. He gave several good sermons to the Saints, which were much appreciated.

In the sacrament service on November 4, the Saints in Minneapolis were much blessed by an exhortation giving them encouragement and counsel how to proceed in solving some of their problems.

The baptism of an adult was one of the features which began last Sunday, the 11th. This was also rally day for the Sunday school and Religio jointly, and the many meetings of the day were well attended. In the morning Elder Kress lectured on the aims of these important departments in church work. A number of Saints then had their dinner in the basement of the church, enjoying a good, social time together. In the afternoon, a song service, program, and round table discussion gave much help to all. In the evening, the Religio offered an Armistice Day program, which was much enjoyed. Elder George Day preached the evening sermon.

The Minneapolis Branch has made an important step in buying property in the south part of the city for the new church. The location is well served by street car lines from Saint Paul as well as from the downtown part of Minneapolis,

Blankets, 2 yards wide, light color, single or double, woolen or cotton.

Quilts, 60 by 90 inches, light colors preferred.

Hand towels, any size, blue border.

Roller towels, 2½ yards long.

Operating room towels, 18 by 34 and 18 by 12 inches, white huck preferred.

Turkish towels.

Wash cloths, size 12 by 12 inches.

Dresser scarfs, 18 by 38 inches; other lengths can be used.

Stand covers, 18 by 36 inches.

Bedside table covers, 24 by 24 or 22 by 36 inches.

Vegetables and fruits of all kinds, either fresh or canned.

Flower vases.

Drinking glasses.

Old linen.

being only one block from each of two important lines. It was decided to get the lots paid for, before going on with building, and the plans seem to be to go ahead with this next summer if conditions are favorable.

Cottage meetings are being held two or three nights a week now, and the interest which they are arousing speaks well for the future of the work in Minneapolis. The Saints are also catching the missionary spirit to an increasing degree.

Six members of the Minneapolis Branch were in attendance at General Conference, these being Elders Sparling and C. A. Kress, Brethren Wesley Elvin and Carroll Olson, and Sisters Sparling and Wildey. They have come back full of enthusiasm for the work.

Manteno Saints Visit Deselm Branch

MANTENO, ILLINOIS, November 12.—A good spirit was present at the sacrament service held Sunday, November 11, which had been postponed from November 4 on account of inclement weather.

Sunday afternoon five carloads of Saints motored to Sherburnville, Illinois, and held services in the hall. Elder Philemon Pement was speaker. The attendance was good and the interest encouraging. This is a new opening for Deselm Branch. Elder Earl D. Rogers preached there on September 23.

Brother and Sister Philemon Pement, of Chicago, were week-end guests at the home of their son, Paul, and family. Brother and Sister J. H. McGuire, of Hammond, Indiana, were also Deselm visitors Saturday and Sunday, November 10 and 11.

Council Bluffs Has Home-Coming Day

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, November 15.—November 11 was Home-coming Day in the Council Bluffs Branch, with appropriate services and an appropriate speaker, Apostle Paul M. Hanson, who preached three excellent sermons. Brother Hanson's home was in and near Council Bluffs and his religious teaching was received here.

The junior orchestra gave a musical entertainment on October 21. This orchestra consists of seven violinists, a clarinet, two cornets, and a trombone. They are showing marked improvement under the direction of Brother Leslie Epperson.

The Temple Builders, under Sister Nellie Hall, are studying the Young People's History, and are quite enthused with the good they are receiving.

The Department of Women met at the residence of Mrs. George Beaty in their monthly social and business session. This department expects to give a bazaar and chicken dinner at Eagle's Hall December 15.

On November 7, 8, and 9 Apostle J. A. Gillen preached at the church and gave much inspiring instruction. On the 8th he also preached the funeral sermon of Brother A. C. Riley, whose death occurred suddenly Sunday evening, November 4.

The president of the Department of Recreation and Expression has set the goal of increased attendance at two hundred, and the classes are working to that end. Each class has been assigned its percentage of increase.

The Bright Star Class of the Department of Recreation and Expression had a hard-time social at the home of Brother H. M. Keons on Tuesday, November 13, at which time four new members were added. An excellent social time was enjoyed.

Brother Deal and wife, of Woodbine, visited Council Bluffs on October 28, on their way to Cameron, Missouri, where they are hoping to locate.

General Church Officers Visit in Detroit

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, November 13.—On November 12, President Elbert A. Smith was a welcome visitor in Detroit and a large crowd turned out to hear his message which was one that touched the hearts of many, a message which interpreted human nature as it is and gave to many a thought of what could be done by proper supervision of recreation. Other notable leaders of the church were present at this meeting: General Church Chorister Albert N. Hoxie, Bishop Israel A. Smith, and Sister Dora Glines. Sister Glines is to speak at a mass meeting of the Saints on Wednesday, November 14.

A series of lectures, illustrated by stereopticon views, is being given by Elder Charles Mottashed every Tuesday evening during the month, the subjects being on important countries throughout the world. These lectures are very interesting.

A spirit of activity is prevalent in the branch. On November 8 a supper was given for the benefit of the east side church building fund, which netted $45. The supper was served by the sisters of the central church groups.

A girls' basket ball team has been organized under the leadership of Sister Harriet McDowell and is now in training.

Welfare Association Organized at Duluth

DULUTH, MINNESOTA, November 13.—The priesthood of Duluth, Minnesota, met Sunday afternoon to organize themselves into a community welfare association, that they might be able to benefit in a temporal way while teaching and demonstrating the gospel in the lives of the Saints. Elder C. B. Freeman was elected president, with Brother W. C. Stanty as secretary and P. G. Snuckle as treasurer. These brethren desire the prayers of the Saints that they may go forward to the goal of a perfect man in a perfect society.

Northern Wisconsin District Conference Held

TOMAHAWK, WISCONSIN, November 11.—The Northern Wisconsin district conference convened November 2, 3, and 4 with the Wyeville Branch. Prayer service was held on Friday morning, at which a good spirit prevailed. As not many were in attendance the business meeting was postponed until Saturday. On Friday evening Brother Horace Scafe, of Black River Falls, spoke on "Paul's experiences." A good interest was manifest.

Prayer service was held again on Saturday at 9 a. m. in charge of Elder L. O. Wildermuth, the new missionary supervisor for the district, and Elder A. Johnson, of Chetek. The spirit of this meeting led all to realize that we are only instruments in the hands of God and that without his help we accomplish nothing.

Following the prayer service, conference business meeting was the order of the day, which went off very smoothly under the direction of President E. J. Lenox who was unanimously sustained for the coming year. His associates are I. H. Bowen, of Black River Falls, and J. H. Howe, of Antigo. Mary Mair, of Chetek, was sustained as district secretary, and Horace Scafe was elected treasurer and Bishop's agent. George Clark, of Tomahawk, was elected as superintendent of Recreation and Expression. Sister Mary Mair was chosen to succeed Sister Colbert in the Department of Women. Publicity agent is Sister Laura Clark, of Tomahawk.

The sermon Saturday evening by Elder L. O. Wildermuth set forth the gospel in the days when Christ was on earth.

Sacrament service was held on Sunday morning which was followed by preaching services that were very educational and uplifting for both members and nonmembers. Many thanks are due the Adventist people and a Mrs. Vondevier for their congenial service. A vote of thanks was tendered the Wyeville Saints who so ably cared for visitors. Letters of appreciation and respect were also sent from the body to Sister Leda Colbert and Brother Leonard Houghton for their labors in times past.

The next conference will be held at the Chetek reunion in June.

Spring River District Conference Over

PITTSBURG, KANSAS, November 12.—The semi-annual district conference of the Spring River District was held at Arma, Kansas, November 9, 10, and 11. Fine weather permitted large crowds to attend, which necessitated the securing of the local high school for the larger Sunday meetings, as the church was not large enough to accommodate all the people. Splendid services were held during the whole conference and some very interesting programs were conducted by the local Saints and the Department of Women. The attending Saints seemed to enjoy the association of each other in a social way. One interesting social function was the hike and wiener roast the young people of the branch put on for the visiting young folks.

Each evening for half an hour a community sing was held which seemed to meet a demand for expression from all of the Saints, judging from the hearty singing that was indulged in. "Consecration" was a favorite.

The business conducted was of importance, as the organization for future conferences will be earlier, enabling all participants to give of the very best. The thoughts delivered in the sermons and testimonies were of a high type, and if the Saints carried back to their homes the spirit of the conference the Spring River District will have profited much.

The few Saints of Arma entertained the visiting Saints royally. Good food was well served and enjoyed by all. It is the common belief that the social aspect of our conferences has a much higher value than is usually attributed to it by some. Fraternity is developed around the common table where social talk is indulged in.

The next conference is to be held at Pittsburg, Kansas, May 9, 10, 11, 1924.

Head of Church School Returns

WATERLOO, IOWA, November 13.—Sister Ivy Fisher, Sunday school superintendent, recently returned from a three months' vacation in Oregon and California, and has again taken her place at the head of the church school work.

Branch President A. J. Fisher and several other members attended the district conference at Muscatine, Iowa, the first of the month.

Brother Burt Purinton was called to the office of priest some time ago and was ordained at the district conference.

Halloween Party Enjoyed by Saints

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, November 12.—Elders R. M. Fulk and Guy P. Levitt have returned from conference and have taken up their respective work in the Utah District.

On Friday, November 9, Brother Fulk gave the adult members of the Department of Recreation and Expression a useful talk on his impression of the late conference.

The local priesthood held a meeting in the parsonage at which time Brother Fulk presented some aspects of the Bureau of Information which it is hoped will be started in the new year which will be a means of greater publicity for the work.

The Department of Recreation and Expression holds weekly meetings. The classes, after the lesson study, join in parliamentary exercises and young and old participate in the "daily dozen." A Halloween party was held in the parsonage on November 2 and a very enjoyable evening was spent. Pumpkin pie and cider were served.

Sunday, October 21, was set apart for the children. Elder Anderson, who was on his way to take up his duties in California, spoke to the children in the morning and preached in the evening. He also addressed the local priesthood on the same day.

Stewardships Interest Pisgah Saints

PISGAH, IOWA, November 13.—The attendance of the Pisgah Branch at regular services seems to be dropping below the average of late. This may be due to the fact that farmers are making strenuous efforts to get their corn picked before snow falls.

Two of the Latter Day Saint members of the Pisgah school faculty attended the Graceland gathering at the Y. M. C. A. while at the State Association Meeting in Des Moines.

Several of the members of this branch are planning to go on the stewardship basis in the near future. We are expecting to get a better insight into the matter in a short time.

Early Efforts of Saints Recalled

PERSIA, IOWA, November 14.—On November 11 Elder W. R. Adams, of Logan, preached, presenting the stewardship plan for consideration. He said that the conference of 1920 voted to establish stewardships and that President F. M. Smith has said that we should enter upon the work without delay.

The Saints of this branch are trying to keep the gospel standard moving on as regularly as possible. The work received its start here in the introduction of the work in 1830, when the members rode to church in a lumber wagon with two oxen for a team, and thought they were lucky to have a schoolhouse in the country in which to hold services.

Holden Stake News

HOLDEN STAKE, November 26.—The Saints of Lees Summit are much pleased that they are privileged to hear so many of our missionaries and church workers. In the past month the speakers have been Brother F. J. Lewis, Brother Hubert Case, Patriarchs F. A. Smith, and U. W. Greene. The pastor, Bishop R. May, occupied the morning hour November 18. His sermon was as a warning and instruction to the young people. The Religio is increasing in attendance, and the Sunday school is already preparing for the Christmas program. The choir has been reorganized and is practicing every Friday night. Saturday, November 17, about fifty Saints surprised Brother Calvin DePuy, it being his birthday.

Lexington seems to realize fully the great need of consecrated work. Never before was a conference so much enjoyed by everyone. The Spirit was present throughout the time. The saddest moments were when our visitors were seen starting for home. Wednesday night after conference, Lexington had one of the best prayer services it has ever known. The Department of Women is doing a good work at present. At the last meeting $110 was turned into the building fund.

The Saints at Grandview held a Halloween party in the church basement. A short program was given, games played, and refreshments served. Young and old joined in a general good time. Brother and Sister C. V. Hopkins, Sister Chipley, Sister Cairnes, and children attended the stake conference at Lexington. They report a spiritual and profitable conference. Elder H. E. Moler, of Holden, preached at Grandview Sunday, the 11th. Brother Moler is president of the Clinton District. He is a busy man, looking after his ministerial work and attending to his business also. The time of the convening of the Grandview Sunday school has been changed to 9.30. The Department of Recreation and Expression meets now on Sunday evening instead of Friday on account of the various school activities which are held Friday evening.

The Saints at Sedalia, Missouri, are erecting a long-needed house of worship. They have been meeting in various places as circumstances would permit. Sedalia is an ideal place for a workingman to live. The large railroad shops, textile, packing, poultry and produce companies, present opportunity for laborers, both skilled and unskilled, in many lines of endeavor. Sedalia is eighty-five miles east of Independence. A number of Saints have located there recently, and Sedalians hope that more will come and labor in fields both temporal and spiritual.

The program of the Religio at Holden on last Sunday evening was given by the Priscilla Club, an organization of the young married women. The Holden Home observed its anniversary on Tuesday, the 20th. This marked the sixth year of service for this institution as a home for the aged Saints. The Home Saints received the visitors in the afternoon, who were served refreshments consisting of doughnuts and coffee, or cocoa. Articles made by them were offered for sale. Elder H. W. Pomeroy, the oldest of the family, passed his ninety-third birthday on the 21st. Brother Pomeroy is one of the few living Saints who were present at the time the late President Joseph Smith took his place as President of the Reorganization April 6, 1860. Brother Pomeroy became the oldest in the home family at the death of Sister Anna Christensen last August. Sister Christensen was over ninety-six at her death. She was the mother of Charles Christensen, of Holden, and Sister Fred Hanson, of Independence, and grandmother of Apostle Paul M. Hanson. Speakers Sunday, November 18, were Elders F. A. McWethy and D. J. Krahl in the morning, Elder John Lovell at the Home, and Elder D. J. Krahl in the evening at the church. Elders Scarcliff and Ross and Sister Ross did departmental work in Warrensburg.

Word comes from Elder R. D. Weaver that he has sufficiently recovered to take up his missionary work in the stake. Those desiring services will please communicate with Brother Weaver at Cameron, Missouri, or with the stake presidency at Holden, Missouri.

Sister Edith Carr, matron of the Holden Home, has received two large sacks of prunes from California. There was nothing accompanying, indicating from whom they came. Will the donor kindly notify her, so she may give proper credit and acknowledgment?

Home Department Opens for Winter

TRYON, NEBRASKA, November 21.—The Sunday school here has closed and the members are joining the home department for the winter months. The pleasant expressions and earnest desires of some to do all they can to make this department what it should be is a great help to the superintendent and visitors. While no other meetings are in sight this department will be busy. They need the prayers of all that they may get much good from the studies and be better fitted for more efficient work.

Independence

The Quorum of Twelve is well started on its work for the coming year. Paul M. Hanson left Independence November 26 for his mission abroad. J. F. Curtis followed him, leaving the city next day, also for Europe. They will sail December 1. Roy S. Budd is preparing to leave for his field in the West, as is also D. T. Williams, who has been getting acquainted with his family again, after such a long time in the misison field away from them. Myron A. McConley left Independence November 25 for his field in Australia and the islands of the Pacific. He and his wife will stop at Denver for a family reunion. They will sail December 5. Clyde F. Ellis sails December 21 for his mission, also in the islands of the Pacific. T. W. Williams and John W. Rushton have recently attended a Rally Day at Santa Ana, California. They are both, at present, in Los Angeles. F. Henry Edwards returned to Independence, November 26, from Detroit and the East. James A. Gillen has been in Webb City, Missouri, where he has been holding meetings. John F. Garver has just returned from Michigan and Southern Wisconsin. E. J. Gleazer is in the East where he has been for some time since conference.

B. C. Harder has taken the place of Chester Constance, who has resigned as superintendent of the intermediate department of the Stone Church Sunday school. Mrs. Harder will assist him.

In connection with the music department of the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, the second story of the new Harrington Building has been fitted out for music studios. Besides the various studios, room is provided for recitals which will be given from time to time. The faculty of the department of music consists of Pauline Becker Etzenhouser, piano, history of music, and musical appreciation; Arthur H. Mills, piano, harmony, and counterpoint; Eugene Christy, singing; Paul N. Craig, singing; Jeanette Kelley Craig, piano; and Zella Blasdell Harder, piano and kindergarten music.

On Saturday night, November 24, the Boy Scouts of Independence held a get-together on the Campus. Each scout was urged to bring his dad with him. Games were played and a good time had. Refreshments were also served. The main purpose of the meeting was to promote the organization of new troops in this community.

The team representing the L. D. S. Athletic Association, and composed of players from all Independence L. D. S. churches, recently defeated the Golden Wedding team from the Kansas City Sunday School League, 38 to 33, in a fast game of basket ball. The Wesley Methodist Episcopal Church team defeated the Independence boys 36 to 31 in another game.

Soccer, a new game for this section of the country, is being started. Practice on the Campus recently with a team from the Kansas City Association resulted in a victory for the invading team, 4 to 3. Another soccer game is scheduled for Thanksgiving Day afternoon.

An informal reception was held by Mr. and Mrs. William McKim at their home Friday afternoon, November 23, in celebration of their fiftieth wedding anniversary. At night a dinner for the family was given. Twenty-one were present. All the immediate family are living except the oldest son, William LeRoy McKim, who was killed in action August 16, 1917, Lens, France. The children present were Mrs. S. C. Hagen, Mrs. Bernice Younie, Burton L. McKim and Arthur E. McKim, all of Independence; and Mrs. Fred Henry Monk of Fountain, Colorado. Mr. Hagen, Mr. Monk, Mrs. B. L. McKim, and Mrs. Arthur E. McKim were also present. Eight grandchildren and two great grandchildren were at the dinner. Mr. and Mrs. McKim are from Iowa, their parents having been pioneers in opening up that country. They were married in 1873 and lived in Iowa until 1906, when they came to Independence, living here since that time.

A mass meeting of all the people in Independence interested in a gymnasium was called Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the Stone Church. President F. M. Smith was chairman.

The plan under way is to raise $2,000 immediately to match W. N. Robinson's offer to give dollar for dollar. Two thousand dollars will also be raised by certain Independence business men, making a total of $6,000.

Twenty team leaders were elected to raise the $2,000 among the young people between the ages of 15 and 30. Work has begun on the drive.

The Independence woman who left a fur in the Herald office about two weeks ago may have same by calling for it.

Father and Son Banquet

There have been many happy occasions celebrated in the Dining Hall of the Stone Church in Independence, and many times it has been crowded to the doors at parties and dinners and receptions, but never has it been the scene of a pleasanter gathering than that of Tuesday night when 360 men and boys met around the tables there in the first Annual Latter Day Saint Father and Son Banquet of Independence.

Everything had been planned weeks ahead by a committee of three, Vernon A. Reese, Henry Stahl, and Heman Davis, and long before the night of the dinner every ticket had been bought. At first it was thought that only 250 could be served, but to meet the demand, one hundred additional places were made. When the absolute limit of space had been reached, there were many who could not be taken care of. The invitations were sent only to members of the local priesthood but they were asked to bring either a father, a son, a brother, or a friend and a wide group was represented.

The men met at 6.30 p. m. in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church and there were so many present that it looked like a regular church assembly. Promptly at 6.45 the line formed and marched double file into the Dining Hall, and the five tables, each sixty feet long, were soon surrounded, and not a place left over. Before they were seated Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire offered thanks and from his voice and the thoughts expressed it was evident that more than the usual thanks were in his heart.

The Laurel Club, aided and abetted by Bishop Becker, who always helps carry a heavy part of the load when things are done around the Stone Church, served the dinner in the usual successful manner. Even the chocolate was good, and as one of the boys said, "They had pie a la mode with ice cream." Either the creamed chicken, the ice cream, the spirit of the occasion or some other factor or all of them together, wrought a happy influence over the assemblage, and long before the plates were cleared the banquet had marked itself an event of great importance in our community life. The phonograph played bravely away but soon the voices of the diners themselves could be restrained no longer, and beginning with the song, "Blest be the tie that binds," all the list of favorites were sung enthusiastically, even though several helpings of pie had made such brethren as R. V. Hopkins, Arthur Mills, and S. A. Burgess a little short of breath.

President Elbert A. Smith who was toastmaster of the occasion, and "master" expresses it exactly, for he seems always to know just what and when to say to make people feel happy and at ease, finally got the men calmed down enough to pose for the picture shown here, and then the formal program of the evening began.

FIRST ANNUAL L. D. S. FATHER AND SON BANQUET AT INDEPENDENCE. THREE HUNDRED AND SIXTY WERE PRESENT.

Paul N. Craig had charge of the group singing and later Frank Criley took a hand; both leaders having real success as their chorus responded to a man—or boy.

Benjamin George McGuire, son of Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire and youngest one present at the Father and Son Banquet.

Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith, with three of his own sons at his side, spoke on the relation of fathers and sons in the church, and made interesting references to his father, the late Alexander H. Smith. His talk was well received and following it, Pastor R. V. Hopkins spoke away from the subject assigned him and his audience eagerly followed him in a recital of his early experiences as a boy when he thought he would run away from home and go down into Missouri to pick strawberries. He finally came to Missouri, but it was years later and to accomplish a far different mission. His narrative, though simply told, and of events that have been in the experience of most all boys, was followed intently by everyone present and he had his audience with him first to last.

Brother Glen Fairbanks next sang a much appreciated solo and following him Brother Walter W. Smith spoke briefly on the question of lineage and the effect of heredity on the lives of the children of church leaders. President Elbert A. had a happy thought in finding out some facts about the assemblage itself. First he asked all those who had fathers holding the priesthood to stand, and fully one hundred and fifty arose. Next those whose grandfathers held the priesthood, and about seventy-five stood up. Twenty signified that they had about great grandfathers who held the priesthood and five boys, Lynn Smith, Elbert A.'s son, Donald Smith, a son of Israel A., Craig Siegfried, and Jack Gardner arose to the call for those having had great-great-grandfathers in the ministry.

Brother I. N. White claimed the honor of being the oldest man present, but his eighty-three years were closely contested by Brother Samuel Siegfried at eighty-two, and Bishop E. L. Kelley in his eightieth year. Perhaps the youngest one present was Benjamin George McGuire who is the pride of his father, Bishop B. R. McGuire. He was born in 1915 and has the distinguishing red hair of his distinguished father, the bishop. From the remarks of the toastmaster it would seem that "Bennie" is also as liberal as his father for he gave up his pie to Benjamin, sr., without a struggle. (The Bishop prevailed on us to say, in his behalf, that it was a fair exchange as his ice cream was transferred to the son.)

Three men were proud in being able to stand up with four sons each. They were Brother George Inman, George A. Gould, and David Reese. Three generations were represented by Samuel, Mark H., and Craig Siegfried; I. N., O. C., and Edmund D. White; and E. L., W. B., and Wendell Kelley.

The concluding speech of the evening was by President F. M. Smith who in his short address came very close to the hearts of his brethren and drew them to him by the simple, earnest expression of his feelings. His subject had been assigned as "Where are our successors?" and President Smith said it seemed strange that he, who had no son of his own, should speak to that subject. However, he said he felt that all present were in a sense his sons, and he joyed with every father present in pride of the fine, manly group of young men and boys who were there to represent the church in its future work.

President Smith said he labored that the coming generation might be qualified by their environment and training to go ahead and make a nearer approach to the Zionie goal than their fathers had been able to do. He plead for help in making sure the progress of the oncoming generation by providing means of education and training. That Zion may have raised up to her defense a multitude of young people, eager of heart and trained of mind to carry on the great work.

At the conclusion of the program many were loath to leave and already the men are saying, "Why not give a mother and daughter banquet?" No one knows what kind of a stew the men could cook, but a lot of them are willing to try on such an occasion as this. It's hard to vision Elbert A. in a cook's cap and Bishop McGuire juggling a tray, but they say they're willing. If the fellowship of mothers and daughters were to be anything equal to the spirit of the men and boys, as awakened and expressed at this banquet, surely a great good were lost by not arranging for it—let the eats be the worst, and a wonder to see!

Pittsburg Branch in Publicity Work

PITTSBURG, KANSAS, October 28.—The branch at this place has enrolled two hundred twelve members. It is a town of about 220,000.

The publicity agent of the branch has made recent efforts to place church tracts in the four railroad depots of the city, but so far has been unable to obtain permission from the railroads. The two daily newspapers, however, have been friendly toward the publicity efforts, allotting space in the papers for a weekly report of church activities.

A Visit to the Detroit District Conference

It was my good fortune to attend the Detroit district conference held at Flint, Michigan, November 10 and 11. I was met at the depot in Flint by Elder Matthew W. Liston. He informed me that he had a great surprise in store and inquired solicitously if I had seen the morning papers. Immediately, naturally, there began a process of speculation. Could it be that some rich relative had died and left a fortune? A hasty review of the family roster dispelled all fears on that score. Andrew Carnegie declared it a disgrace to die rich. Our family has a spotless record. Could it be that the mayor was to meet us, or perhaps the city band? No, it was much better than that. Hoxie was in town, and we were to have breakfast with him. The last I had seen of Hoxie he was pouring the oil of song on the troubled waters of General Conference.

The Saturday business meetings of the conference passed off in an orderly and pleasant manner under the able direction of the district presidency, Elders Kenneth H. Green, Matthew W. Liston, and Brother Fred T. Harder—Brother Green occupying the chair. All business was done with dispatch and in an admirable and Saintly manner, quite without friction. The evening was very profitably occupied by Sister Dora Glines with her helpers of the Women's Department.

Sunday was a busy day. They do not observe union hours in Flint during district conference. The services began at eight in the morning and ended at nine o'clock in the evening, with dinner and supper served in the basement of the church free to all in attendance. The church proved quite inadequate to house the congregation, but fortunately the city board of education had kindly loaned the use of the assembly room in a large brick school-house just across the street from the church, so that during most of the day there were two congregations carrying on different activities.

About two hundred young people assembled in the school auditorium for prayer service at eight o'clock Sunday morning. This we considered a wonderfully fine showing for an eight o'clock Sunday prayer meeting, and certainly it was a soul-reviving, spiritual feast. During the course of the service the young people all stood to join in this pledge, "I promise to serve God and the church, and to live a clean and useful life." They remained standing while Brother Hoxie led in the Consecration song, and afterward a prayer of blessing was asked upon their pledge. Without doubt many of the young people at that meeting will look back to it as a monument in their lives. At the same hour the older people met in the church for prayer and enjoyed a very spiritual meeting. Prayer meeting was succeeded in the church by Sunday school services until noon, while in the school building there was a priesthood and ordination meeting, at which time we had the opportunity to address a very large gathering of the priesthood.

Hastening from the assembly room of the school-house to the near-by church we were in time for the closing exercises of the Sunday school, and standing in line with Brother Hoxie and Sister Glines, had the pleasure to shake hands with each member of the school as they filed past the altar to deposit their Sunday offering. We felt ourselves looking into the eyes of the future church. They were honest eyes. We do not greatly fear for the future. We trust the children and young people of the church, with the guidance of the Holy Spirit, to find their way to the truth. They will make mistakes—but probably no more than we older ones have made—shall I say, are making?

The afternoon and evening were devoted to community singing under the leadership of Brethren Hoxie and Liston, to choir and orchestral numbers well rendered by the musical forces of the district, and to sermons, upon which the writer was given a monopoly. If the degree of the Spirit poured out at those meetings is a portent for the year to come, it will be a very happy year; and if the character of this district conference, the enthusiasm, the joy, the consecration, the spiritual power are typical of the conferences being held throughout the church, there can be no question that the church will go forward. The people of that district went from that conference prepared to work.

We greatly enjoyed the hospitality of the Flint people. Flint has a hard name, but a very soft heart, and her generous treatment of the visiting Saints was greatly appreciated. The writer was domiciled at the home of Elder Matthew Liston. Brother Liston was formerly in the mission field and hopes again to return when finances and other matters involved are propitious. In the meantime he is not idle. Besides his secular employment he has a finger in many of the municipal affairs of the city, is a member of the district presidency, also a branch worker, having place on the branch building committee. He is trying to break himself of the habit of sleep, but old habits are hard to break and he is still forced to quit work and go to bed a few hours each night. Flint has three congregations meeting in three church buildings; but all under one branch organization with one central administration, Brother Du Rose president. The plan seems to be working excellently. They are one people, instead of three or more (as is too often the case where our forces are divided in large cities). An amusing incident occurred recently. A wealthy man died, leaving a bequest of one hundred dollars to each church in Flint. Brother Liston waited upon the probate judge and said, "What troubles us is whether we are entitled to three hundred dollars or only to one hundred. We want only that which is right." The judge replied, "You have but one organization?" "Yes." "But you have three church buildings?" "Correct." "And you have three pastors?" "Yes." "Well, only one more question: Could you use three hundred dollars?" Guess the answer. Those who cannot guess should hire some competent guide to take them in when the clouds begin to gather.

On Monday afternoon, in company with Brother Hoxie, and Elders John R. Grice and Matthew W. Liston, we drove from Flint to Detroit, a distance of about sixty miles, in Brother Grice's Ford. Brother Grice is an excellent driver, and being a missionary, has studied economy. He saves a great deal of wear on tires by using only two at a time on curves. In addition to the passengers, the little Ford was well laden with suitcases and other baggage and seemed to bulge with importance as though on some great errand. We had a very pleasant trip indeed. Brethren Grice and Liston bear quite a striking resemblance one to the other and are often mistaken one for the other. However, a good sister meeting Brother Liston said, "I am glad that at last I have you two men straightened out so I can always tell you apart. You are looking fine, Brother Grice." Brother Hoxie and I were less easily confused—he carried a violin. While I seemed to be associated in some way with the Blue Pencil. Brother Hoxie is giving out a great deal of good advice to those studying music, so I might say a few words to those who have inquired as to the kind of Blue Pencil used in Blue Pencil Notes. Really, it does not matter particularly what make of blue pencil you use. Only it should not be too hard; and it should not be too soft. It should be well sharpened—but not too sharp. It should be well balanced. Above all it should be true blue, but not too blue. The rest is easy. As to Brother Hoxie's violin, it is an educated and traveled instrument. It has picked up the murmur of the waves along Cape Cod, a little of the thunder of Niagara Falls, the whisper of the winds over Hill Cumorah, the melody of the songs that the Saints sing in Zion, and now a little fire from Flint. In Hoxie's hands it would charm the birds out of the trees and make them ashamed to sing after they had returned to their perch. But like all musicians, this wonderful instrument is very temperamental and will not play thus for anyone but Hoxie. In my hands it might well charm only the crows and blue-jays.

We reached Detroit slightly before the hour for evening service, and after dining with Brother and Sister Bishop Blair at the home of Brother and Sister Stephen Smith, we repaired to the First Church in Detroit. Here we found the chapel crowded nearly to its capacity. We were joined in this service by Bishop I. A. Smith, who had been in Port Huron on some church business, also by Sister Dora Glines, who has been visiting various branches in Michigan. Again at this evening hour in the city of Detroit we felt to rejoice under the warming, enlightening, ennobling power of the Holy Spirit, which enabled us to declare the word of God to the good Saints at that place. The hospitality and cordial friendliness of the Detroit Saints will not soon be forgotten.

Detroit, too, has a consolidated membership and working force. There were formerly five branches, if we remember correctly. Now there is but the one branch—one people with one organization and one purpose. There are different meeting places and each congregation has its own pastor and working force, but all under one administration, Elder G. R. Kuykendall being the president. Thus the power of our people at that place can be directed in a concerted manner toward any desired goal. Competition and working at cross purposes is largely eliminated. The plan seems to be working well. If any should desire to correspond concerning methods used in church cooperation mentioned above, we shall be glad to put them in touch with the authorities at Flint, Detroit, Council Bluffs, and other points where similar plans may be in operation.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Love of Contest

During a recent festival held in Kansas City, Missouri, a rodeo, or sort of Wild West show was one of the features of the celebration. Nearly twenty thousand dollars was expended upon the production of this show, while the gate receipts fell several thousands short of covering expenses. This does not necessarily indicate that the public has become less interested in rodeos, because the attendance was necessarily large as it was. However, there is a hopeful element to be gleaned from the report of the financial failure of this feature.

The humane societies for the protection of animal life are interested in the possible decline of the interest in rodeos, but their vigorous action in combatting these shows has not lessened.

The American Humane Association at an international conference held in New York, October 22 to 27, adopted a resolution taking a stand against rodeos and calling upon local humane societies to continue their efforts to stop the cruelties which accompany such performances.

The resolution followed a discussion of the treatment accorded animals in these Wild West shows. It is not unusual for steers to be dehorned, legs and necks broken, and bodies otherwise mutilated in the gentle art of steer-roping and bulldogging stunts, according to the information revealed. In literature on the subject the humane society says:

Cruelly to torture, maul about, and maim terrified animals for the delectation of a morbid crowd is about the last word in a degrading spectacle. To class as heroes the men who indulge a desire for notoriety in such acts is to cheapen true heroism while it encourages disregard for human life. Our debt to animals and our obligation to the youth of the Nation forbid such wholesale and unnecessary abuse of these creatures below us in the name of amusement.

There is a reason behind everything if it can only be found. There is certainly some reason for the demand the public makes upon rodeos. It will be found that all classes of society are deeply interested in forms of contest involving skill and chance, especially where the danger or risk is great. Everybody, or nearly so, will stop to watch a street fight, and the same people would witness a bull fight if the opportunity afforded or sense of respectability allowed. Our sympathetic natures, which are developed socially, might recoil from witnessing a contest where mere physical harm was the object, but this is soon lost in the absorbing fascination of the struggle, especially where skill is involved.

This gratification at watching a struggle may be traced to the primitive instincts of man when the struggle for food and rivalry for mates played so prominent a part in the lives of men. Civilization seems to have placed but a crust upon our emotions, for they break through at the most unexpected times and manifest themselves in the most unusual ways.

Bull fighting, dog and cock fighting, rodeos, and prize fights are but things contrived to afford an opportunity to gratify the interest in conflict. The spectator has, by suggestion, emotional reactions analogous to those of the combatant, but without personal danger.

Here lies the reason for the conflicts that we tolerate and even support. But the reason scarcely justifies our actions in this day and age of civilization. Conflict and the love of it can be provided for in many ways without evidences of barbarism which are apparent in such things as rodeos and bull fights.

A Bright Prospectus

Pastoral letters which have been appearing in the HERALD have a decided tone of encouragement this year. As the missionaries and other General Conference appointees are reaching their fields, they express satisfaction at the bright prospect of a successful year. The field is ripe for the harvest, they believe, and undaunted in spirit they are throwing themselves heart and soul into the work.

One brother upon entering this field has addressed his district coworkers as follows:

I am sure that all who attended the late General Conference went home feeling that better days were ahead of the church. While we were made to realize that we were lacking in many ways, yet when the Spirit of God came "of a sudden" nothing seemed impossible. So may God help us all, that we shall not love the world nor what it can offer, but may we love to come out of the world and work as children of God, that Zion may prosper and grow, not only in the land of Zion and the stakes, but may we as children of the kingdom, out in this district, draw very near to God and each other in our work.

Another missionary says in a determined manner:

Never in my experience was my faith in God and his work more firm, or my hope more bright, than at the present time, and I enter the field with the determination to do all I can to make this a very successful year.

With faith and desire to work, as has been expressed by these brothers, how can there be anything but a great year for the church in the missionary field? The same spirit of confidence in success and joy in service is permeating many throughout the entire church. From many quarters there comes the sound of renewed life and hope. Saints are awakening to a sense of responsibility in the affairs of the church. They are taking hold of the cart wheel and lending their strength to the united effort to push it on to victory. This has found expression in several slogans taken up by the members of the various districts:

Radio Flashes

GLENMORA, LOUISIANA.—Pick you up every night that you are in the air. Your music is fine. Keep it up.—L. T. E.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.—Enjoyed concert, also lecture of Elder Ellis of South Sea Islands, which was very interesting. Thanking you.—H. W. H.

WILMINGTON, DELAWARE.—I received your station on the 27th at 10.55 (Eastern time). The number by George Anway entitled, "Mother Machree," was very fine. I also listened to part of the talk on the South Sea Islands by Clyde Ellis. Please verify.—D. A. E.

HAWKINSVILLE, GEORGIA.—Enjoyed your program last night very much. Your signals were loud and clear on loud speaker.—H. L. N.

KOKOMO, INDIANA.—We heard your program last evening and the talk on the South Sea Islands was excellent. The musical numbers came in perfectly and were very much enjoyed by all of us. Could hear them in every room in the house.—C. N.

SAINT OLAF, IOWA.—Your program came through clearly last night November 27th. Just recently we have been able to pick you up and from now on will listen regularly for you. I am an isolated member of the church and am personally acquainted with some of your artists, so I surely enjoy your programs. I wish to congratulate through you those who took part last night, especially Mrs. Israel Smith, who will remember me.—A. S. W.

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS.—Your programs are enjoyed very much here in Rock Island, and we wish to compliment you on your type of program and also on the clarity and volume of your signals.—B. R.

PORT COLBORNE, ONTARIO.—Just been listening to your Sunday evening services from K F I X. The parson talked about the relation of the church to society, business, etc., and also for money, especially ten per cent of your increase. Well, I hope the church makes a better job of the world the next two thousand years, than it has the past two thousand.

"A praying year; double our Christmas offering; and double our tithing."

Again the slogan takes form, repeating the sentiments in the one above:

"Every man a steward, and a doubling of the tithes and offerings of the district this year."

As the pastoral letters come in, more slogans are being added to those already mentioned, and more expressions of consecration to God's work are placed beside the others.

Can the membership in general but catch the spirit evidenced in the sayings of the ministry, great will be the harvest of the field during the coming year.

I heard your station several times before and it comes in good.—H. J. M.

COGSWELL, NORTH DAKOTA.—Your program received just splendid on a one tube set. Enjoy your programs very much and think they can't be beat. Please send your broadcasting schedule.—C. J. W.

CANON CITY, COLORADO.—Hear you just fine, nights you are on the air, especially your Sunday night programs of sermons. Sure is fine, thank you very much. Would appreciate a program of your sending hours.—F. S. J.

RAVENWOOD, MISSOURI.—Your program came in very plain Sunday evening over the loud speaker and we enjoyed it very much. The sermon was very much enjoyed. One of the young boys of our branch said he could listen all night to a sermon like that. Tell Emma Snead I certainly enjoyed her violin music. I could just see her as she looked when she played for the broadcasting programs at Grace-land last year. Five families of the Saints have radio sets at this place, and you can rest assured that we are all eager for your programs. Many of them here wanted me to tell you that they would like to hear more of our old church songs sung by a quartet. Last Sunday was the first program we had heard, our outfit just having been installed. Anxiously awaiting your next programs.—Miss F. G.

WAUKEGAN, ILLINOIS.—I picked up your station to-night, clear and strong. Would like your schedule. I once lived in Independence and would like to hear your programs.—E. B. S.

LAKE PLACID, NEW YORK.—The reception from your station last night was very loud and clear. We enjoyed your music and singing numbers and hope you will be able to have more of this very fine violin music.—H. R. T.

WHITINSVILLE, MASSACHUSETTS.—Your radio program of last night received very clearly.—D. L. O.

THURMAN, IOWA.—Received your signals very plain and enjoyed the L. D. S. Band concert, as well as the good sermon by Doctor Walter W. Smith.—W. L.

PICKER, OKLAHOMA.—You came in extra strong and clear. Many thanks for the program. Mrs. French was wonderful! We shall wait and watch for your programs from now on.—C. E. H.

What Shall We Tithe?

By Benjamin R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop

During the year a brother bought $5 worth of books and spent $15 for Christmas presents. Should these be tithed? Suppose this question is answered correctly and satisfactorily, will that help this brother to decide for himself whether insurance or hygienic supplies should or should not be tithed? However, if we can once comprehend the principle upon which the whole law rests, it at once becomes the criterion for solving and simplifying all other questions which may arise.

As a step towards reaching common ground the Family Budget Book which is being sold by the Herald Publishing House has been arranged into three classifications. Expenditures under class one (1) are for items which represent an increase in one's net worth, or at least are not part of one's necessary living expenses and "should not be deducted from income in determining the tithable increase." Class two (2) are for such items as in most instances would be a part of one's necessary living expenses and hence "may be deducted from income." Class three (3) covers items which are between these two. No one can dogmatically say that these are in every instance or are not to be tithed, hence "each individual must decide for himself whether or not these are necessary living expenses." As listed in the Budget Book these items appear in the chart above.

It should be remembered that the church is like a net cast into the sea which gathers of every kind. Some observe only the letter of the law and are quick to project their methods and manner of observing its details upon every other member. This is very likely to produce strife and confusion. Christ did not see fit to condescend to minute particulars in setting forth the gospel laws. The office work of the Holy Ghost is to teach us the mysteries of the kingdom and show us things to come.

It must be apparent to all that no yardstick can be laid down to determine the answer to all tithing questions with a mathematical precision. Man's first duty, according to the record, was to exercise the right of choice. It is typical of the gospel that man should decide for himself, should exercise his own discretion and free agency in all of its aspects. In the liberty of the gospel we have been emancipated from the "Thou shalt" and "Thou shalt not" of the old law.

A sister wrote to us recently asking if she should list under "necessary living expenses" in her Annual Tithing Report, carfare to and from work, and stationery and postage for business correspondence. We answered in the affirmative. Yet we can see where some carfare would not come under this classification. The same may be true of the other items when not modified. But as here modified these are obviously a proper deduction from one's income and as a consequence would decrease the tithable increase accordingly. Let us therefore remember that the "letter killeth but the spirit giveth life."

Christmas Presents

By James F. Keir

At this season of the year it is quite natural that our minds should be directed toward this subject. From the days of our childhood we have looked forward to the holiday season as a time when we could in a material way demonstrate our love for our friends by giving. We should not underestimate the value of giving, for it is a divine attribute. "God so loved that he gave." It has the tendency to curb selfishness and to establish more tender and affectionate relations between man and man. We should not give in the hope that another will give to us, for to do so in this spirit robs the giving of the value it would otherwise return to us. What we give should not be worthless or shoddy but should be of that character that would be useful to and appreciated by the recipient. Millions of dollars are spent annually in cheap toys which give but momentary pleasure to a child and to-morrow are tossed aside because the child has tired of or broken them.

With the needs of the Lord's work looming up before us, with the cry from every district to send us more missionaries ringing in our ears, with the consciousness that the church has had to borrow thousands of dollars during the last three years that will have to be paid back, and with the realization that the power to accomplish big things lies in your hands, I come to you at this time with an appeal that this year in your giving you take into consideration the needs of the Lord Jesus Christ and his church.

Suppose you call your family together, every one of them, and talk over the question which we are here discussing and then determine what your Christmas program of giving will be.

The church is expecting that by next General Conference an auditorium will be built. The money to do this has been placed in the hands of the Presiding Bishop, but during the financial distress of the past three years it was necessary, and with the concurrence of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, the cash in special funds was transferred to general funds and certain securities which we had in general funds, such as mortgages, etc., instead of the cash, were transferred to special funds. The time has now come for the Saints to place in the general funds through the channel of tithes, surplus, and free will offering or loans a sufficient amount to make possible the retransfer of the cash to the fund to which it belongs.

The ability of the church to raise this amount this year in addition to the regular tithes will be more readily appreciated when we remind you that we have a membership of about 100,000. If only one tenth of them would put forth just a little extra effort this year and contribute as a free will offering $50 each it would amount to $450,000, or if 20,000 contributed one half as much it would mean half a million dollars. God can accomplish big things with only a few fully consecrated men and women—remember the triumph of Gideon.

Now, dear Saints, remember that the Presiding Bishopric has no magic way of raising this money. It can only come from you either as a gift or as loan and knowing that thousands of dollars will be spent at the holiday season we have come to you and made this straightforward appeal, with a prayer on our lips that God will move upon you to sense the situation as we do and to put it in your heart to be one of the many who shall make possible the raising of this fund. It can be done. God has blessed our efforts heretofore and we have faith to believe that he will not fail us now. You can be one of Gideon's favored band.

Plan your Christmas giving now and remember the needs of the Lord's work.

(Excerpt from letter of Elder H. A. Koehler, to the Quorum of Twelve, Stratford, Ontario, October 30, 1923.)

I believe the harmony engendered into the atmosphere during the concluding services of General Conference will do much in laying down a working basis for the coming year.

Elder W. C. Neville writes: "I was very much pleased as to how the conference turned out, that is, with the wonderful outpouring of God's Holy Spirit, and feel that I should enter into my work with more zeal and a greater confidence in the men of the church. Surely the Lord loves his church."

Indians Object to Use of Tobacco

By S. A. Burgess

Tobacco was introduced in Europe after the discovery of America. It was doubtless first used by the American Indian. It is therefore of interest to note the statement, "No Indian minister, or elder, or member of the Presbyterian church among the Northwest Indians ever touches tobacco."

When a meeting of the presbytery was held in one of the Indian churches in that section, it was related that the missionary said to the Indians, "It is customary when the presbytery meets with the church to invite the visiting elders to distribute the elements of the communion."

To this an Indian elder replied, "Missionary, the communion is a holy thing. We cannot endure to have it touched by unholy hands. Some of the white elders use tobacco, and we are not willing to take the risk of having men who use tobacco assist at the communion."

On the other hand, A. M. Young, in the Tobacco Record, reports that a woman erected a large building in the South for aged and poor Baptist ministers, but after the home was opened very few applied. An investigation was made and many needy ministers interviewed. The reply was that:

It was learned that these ministers would not accept, much as they needed the protection of this foundation, because they would not give up their smoking. After careful consideration the lady withdrew this rule, and the home was immediately filled.

The above is quoted from Liahona, November 6, 1923. Since ministers of other churches so freely use tobacco, it is of interest to note the position taken by our own church. The Word of Wisdom, Doctrine and Covenants 86 states, clearly that tobacco is good for bruises and sick cattle only.

And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill.—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1.

Again in 1887 the ministry were admonished:

Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drinks in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3.

But the church had already passed several resolutions from time to time on this subject, and has since, under the direction of the above command, passed three more.

General Conference resolution adopted September 13, 1878:

No. 217. That this body declares that the use of tobacco is expensive, injurious, and filthy, and that it should be discouraged by the ministry.

General Conference resolution adopted April 13, 1881:

No. 235. That this conference discourage the use of tobacco, and of strong drinks, as a beverage, by the church, and especially by the ministry.

General Conference resolution adopted April 11, 1888:

No. 329. Whereas, The Lord has spoken against the use of tobacco and strong drink on different occasions; and whereas, In all our appointments we ought to show respect unto said counsel. Therefore, resolved, that henceforth we recommend no man for General Conference appointment whom we know to be addicted to either of the above evils, and that this decision take effect one year from date.

General Conference resolution adopted April 13, 1892:

No. 362. Whereas, The Quorum of the Twelve deem it wisdom to appoint none as church missionaries who do not honor the Lord in "avoiding the use of tobacco," etc., as enjoined in the revelation of April, 1887, and

Whereas, branch, and especially district presidents, are important church servants, therefore be it

Resolved, That we do respectfully call the attention of all Saints to the propriety of observing the example of the Twelve in appointing such officers, especially where others equally competent are available who do thus honor the Lord.

General Conference resolution adopted April 16, 1898:

No. 463. Whereas, The Lord has spoken against the use of tobacco and strong drink on different occasions; and whereas, In all our appointments we ought to show respect unto said counsel. Therefore, resolved, That henceforth we recommend no man for General Conference appointment whom we know to be addicted to either of the above evils, and that this decision take effect one year from date.

We are safe, therefore, in saying that if such a home were erected for retired missionaries of our church, no one would be rejected, and no one would refuse to apply for the reasons above stated.

(Excerpt from letter by Elder Guy P. Levitt, to the Quorum of Twelve, Ogden, Utah, October 30, 1923.)

Well, I arrived here on Friday, remaining here for Sunday. I occupied in the morning and took for my theme the General Conference and I enjoyed telling them of the splendid conference that we had; and when I was telling of the splendid experience that we enjoyed the last Saturday afternoon and Sunday, I again felt that same Spirit that endowed those assemblies, and being touched with that power I saw it come into the souls of those who were in the audience, and they rejoiced as we had rejoiced in Independence. It was a splendid experience for me and also for the Saints here. I was pleased, for there was a good attendance in the morning service.

EDUCATIONAL

PART V

[We present in this chapter on Home Building an article by Doctor G. Leonard Harrington, head of the Health Department of the church. It is an unusual opportunity for parents throughout the entire church to be able to benefit from the wise counsel of so noted a physician, mental specialist, and hygienist. Doctor Harrington's discussion of child growth and development is illuminating and educational. It is far-reaching in its scope, yet so plainly stated that it is clear in every detail, and above all interesting. —EDITORS.]

Child Growth, Development, and Behavior

By Doctor G. Leonard Harrington

In speaking of the growth and development of the child the first thing we must bear in mind is the fact that there is no chance in this matter. This is what we call determinism, that is, the thing is determined by what precedes it. We have some very striking examples in nature of this principle of determinism, which go to show or to prove that things do not just happen in a sort of hokus-pokus way.

Proof of Determinism

While on a recent trip I saw some very striking things that support this view of nature. Some of the trees at a certain place were bent almost at right angles. The stem or trunk of the tree reached a height of three or four feet and then turned almost at right angles. That turning was determined by the trade winds which had blown in that direction so often that the tree took on that peculiar form.

Another interesting thing in this connection is that nature seems to be so arranged that she makes such external changes as are necessary to produce as little conflict between the thing and its environment as possible. In other words, the tree bends to spill the wind. If it should stand upright, it would have to use a great deal of resistance to overcome the pressure of the wind. So it bends. The same principle is found true in the case of sheep. In the winter time they have good, thick coats for the purpose of diminishing the change of the heat between the body and the environment.

Another very striking illustration of determinism is that which is seen in certain water animals. There is a water animal which has in its tail a certain number of lobes and on those lobes there are developed a certain number of hairs. In another part of the sea we find another animal shaped somewhat like this one, but having a different number of lobes composing the tail and a different number of hairs. Scientists thought for a long time that those were two distinct species. They later found, however, that if they would take the one which was found in one part of the ocean and put it in that part of the ocean where the others were found, a change would gradually take place from one form into the other. The first one was in a salt solution of approximately four to eight per cent, while the other was found in a salt solution of approximately twenty-five per cent. The difference in the form of those water animals was determined by the percentage of salt in the water in which they were found.

Cause and Effect in Child Training

The big point we want to bring out at this time is that things do not happen by chance. What the child is, is not the result of some unknown something that cannot be explained, but what it is to-day is positively determined by the factors that have entered into its life previously. When we realize that determinism plays a role in child development, we will recognize the tremendous responsibility we have in seeing that all the factors that are brought into the environment of the child shall be the best possible. If we think it is a matter of chance, then there is no need to study: if we think it is a matter of come and go as it will, then there is no reason on earth for us to be concerned about the matter. But when we recognize and see that there is a principle of cause and effect in the training of the child, we must recognize that we have a tremendous responsibility.

The physician recognizes this truth and always wants to know something about the past life of the patient and also his family history. He goes over the history of the patient in detail. Why? Because he believes that the factors in the family life, the factors in the life of the individual who is now sick, play a role in determining the present conditions, perhaps not making the actual present disease which may be the result of some invasion of bacteria, but whether the patient reacts well or otherwise from the invasion of bacteria may be determined by his family history and what diseases he has had previously.

It requires approximately twenty-five years for a human to develop into a mature individual. When the child is within the mother's body it develops very rapidly—in fact, it requires only a few weeks for the child to take on its form. The greater part of the time it is within the mother's body it is acquiring size: it is growing.

Growth of the Nervous System

The thing that is slowest in developing within the individual is the nervous system. Now, there is an extremely interesting and very important point in this connection. If the nervous system is slow in forming, that means we have a longer time to train the mind in the form it is eventually going to assume. The nervous system, therefore, is in a sense more or less plastic. It is not fixed. It is not solid. It is in a sense changeable.

In working with nervous cases in the army, it was found that some sixty to eighty per cent of the men who suffered from all sorts of shell shock manifestations were curable if they were treated within a few days after they developed the symptoms. These men so cured could again be returned to the trenches. Their disorders were in a fluid state, therefore correctable. On the other hand, those men who by chance were not sent to neurological hospitals at once, but were sent to base hospitals, sometimes being without proper treatment for months, were much more difficult to change into good soldiers, when they did finally come to the nerve hospitals. The nervous disorder of the one class was in a fluid state and thus changeable; the other was in a more fixed state, and so it was more difficult to change the conditions.

In the early part of the life of the child, the child acts or reacts in a sense instinctively. He acts reflexly. By way of illustration, when you put your finger in your eye, you immediately close your eyelid. That is a reflex. A stimulation and response. The child in his first year, and some think for the first three or four years, practically acts by reflex. That does not mean that he does not have other factors coming into his life, but the first year he acts on an instinctive basis. If we are grown, we do not react that way. You know and I know that the child, when he wants anything, wants it badly, and if the mother does not give it to him, he keeps on insisting that he have what he wants. Let us say the child sees something on the table that he desires. The mother is out of the room for a minute or two. She is going to have a dinner party and has prepared the table very nicely with her hand-painted china, her cut glass, her silver. The baby sees something on the table that he wants. What does he do? He pulls a chair up to the table, crawls up onto it and across the table until he gets what he wants. When we do that in our adult life without consideration of all the factors in the case, we are childish. All higher animals have two brains. When the bear is hibernating it is using only its lower brain. It is using that part of its nervous system which has to do with respiration and circulation. It is not aware of what is going on around it. It does not know whether hunters are approaching or whether it is snowing outside, etc. It is absolutely unaware of its environment. That is, the part of the brain which has to do with environment is not working. The old brain is the one which is functioning at that time. When a child is born it is practically altogether controlled by the old brain which has to do with digestion, assimilation, circulation, and metabolism. However, it has the new brain, but it has not yet received information from the environment, therefore in a sense it is useless. We know that finally there develops in the brain of the child, tracks or pathways from the new brain into the old brain and from the old brain into the new brain: but Doctor Burnham says the environment practically completely determines what kind of pathways are going to develop between that new brain and that old brain. In this we see determinism again. What the child is, then, so far as its new brain is concerned, is largely determined by what the environment gives him.

The Instinctive and Social Selves

This theory hitches up very nicely with the thought that we have two selves, the instinctive self and the social self. In the nervous system, the ideal self, is that which relates us to our environment and has to do with the new brain. So we have determinism within the two brains. We are in a sense two personalities. The instinctive, animal, childish personality, which is built around the old brain, and the new, higher, better, ideal self, or social self, which is built around the new brain, and this last is largely as our environment has made it. The other is old and fixed and the environment does not change it. It only tends to control it.

The Golden Period of Development

Some men say that the first ten years in the life of the child is the golden period to get in good work to develop this new brain, to make it what you think it ought to be. After a person has reached twenty-five years of age he does not change very much and it is pretty hard to give him new ideas. After that age our nervous systems become more fixed; they are more stable; they are less flexible; they are less plastic, and it is harder to change them. It is hard to make new paths through them. That shows what a tremendous job we have before us to see that we get our good work in before that time. The children certainly form the real nucleus about which work of a worth-while character can be done, because they are flexible. It is purely physiological. It is a time when we know something can be done with the child. An important thing to be borne in mind is this, that the child is not simply a small edition of the adult. That is one of the hardest things for an adult to understand. The child is not a small adult and it cannot be held responsible for adult behavior. When we stop to think, we know that is true. We do not chastize a child because it does certain things in the first few years of its life. However, we try to influence the child so that it tends to control its behavior rather than giving it free play.

Animals develop very quickly. Almost within a year they reach their maturity, some long before that, and some a little after that, but they are largely controlled in their behavior by how their environment stimulates them. As an illustration, let me recite an incident concerning my cat. I saw a mouse in the chicken house one day. It ran under the can in which we have our chicken feed. I tried to get that cat to come up there and get ready to catch that mouse, as I knew he was under the can. But I couldn't get him to do it. He didn't have reason and couldn't know that the mouse was there. However, just as soon as I pulled that can off the mouse and it started to run, the cat saw it and like a flash he caught the mouse. That is about the best a cat can do. It acts instinctively. It does not reason. The child after a while develops into a personality that can understand and can get up to the can with a stick to strike the mouse, without seeing the mouse at all. It is an intellectual self that is capable of understanding what the cat cannot understand. The child takes a long time to grow to maturity; the cat develops rather quickly.

The Responsibility of Parents

Since it does take a great deal of time for the individual to mature it means that is really our opportunity. Our opportunity is that the child is flexible. It is also not only an opportunity, but we must feel that it is a responsibility as well. We know that is true in life. All of us know that money is considered power. It is one of the greatest powers we have. Yet it is only a symbol of power. It does not mean anything of itself, but the thing that it stands for is power. We know, too, that while it gives us opportunities, it puts on us tremendous responsibilities. With money we can go upward, or we can go downward. Similarly, whatever talents we may have are opportunities to us, but at the same time they are responsibilities.

We must bear in mind that we do not have things happen by chance. We may not be able to see the relationship between cause and effect, but there is such relationship. We must as parents recognize that what the child becomes is determined by what has gone on before, not only in the family, but in the race.

Heredity

There are two things that enter into the problem of child growth and development. One is heredity and the other is environment. Heredity furnishes us power. Whatever power we believe that the child has is that which has been given to him by heredity. It is the dynamic, the driving force, the interest, the power that the child has. We know that some instinctively are weak, and we know that others have a tremendous instinctive drive. There is some power within us, there is some tremendous driving force that is trying to force us on and on. Unfortunately, and maybe fortunately, there is also something that is dragging us back. We all would like to get out and make something of ourselves, but it is easier to stay at home rather than push out into the frontier and acquire something that is out there. The going ahead power and the dragging back power are working in all of us.

Environment

Environment furnishes the stimulus. In the case of the cat, he had the power and the capacity to catch the mouse, but he would not have caught it as he did without the stimulus in the form of the mouse. Not only does the environment furnish the stimulus, or the stimulating factor, but it furnishes the material. We are born with energy within us, but it certainly would not last long if we were not given the opportunity of taking from the environment certain elements which have been lost in the changes in our bodies. So the environment furnishes us the stimulus and the material.

Growth and Development

We have two other things to contend with in our subject. One is growth and the other is development. Growth means acquiring size. It is a vegetative process. It is the getting from our food certain chemicals for the purpose of building up our tissues. It is the thing which the bear does when he is hibernating.

Development is more than that. You may say that growth has to do with the lengthening of the structure, while development has to do with its functioning, with its working. We all know that is true. We may have arms that are capable of lifting certain weights. If we do not use those arms to lift weights, we lose the power to lift as much as we otherwise could. On the other hand, if we exercise ourselves we finally can lift more than we could when we started. That is development.

Development is an extremely interesting subject. Why are we developing? So that we may fit ourselves into our environment. It seems to me that is the end of life—to acquire the capacity to adjust ourselves to the environment in which we live. Now, adjustment is dependent upon an interaction or correlation or building up of all parts of our bodies. For instance, the United States is divided up into States. Each State has a right within itself, but each State does not have the right to take up some controversy with a foreign government. That is done by the Government at Washington. It represents all of the States. The nervous system has the function of bringing together all of our "states" (the different parts of our body) so that the whole can act on the environment in which it finds itself.

Letting Nature Do Its Work

How do we bring about this wonderful bringing together of all these forces in our bodies? What are the forces that tend to bring all of these organs of our bodies into one working order so that we finally build a complete building? If we had, let us say all of the organs of the body except one, we would not be able to adjust ourselves to our environment as well as if we had all of the parts of our body working together, interrelated so that the work of the body would be complete in its attempt to adjust itself. One of the things that brings about this integration or building up or weaving together of the various parts of the body is chemical elements. They help us to adjust ourselves to our work. We have the reflex, which helps us to react to our environment.

We do a great many things reflexly. We run our automobiles with our backbones. We can discuss something and run our automobile at the same time, hardly giving the machine a conscious thought. We push our feet in and move them around, and turn the wheel when necessary in a purely reflex way. What a wonderful thing that is! If we had to think about everything we did we would not have time left with which to do the things that are worth while—we would be eternally consumed with taking care of certain mechanical things. We do not have to breathe from an intellectual standpoint. I mean that we do not have to say to the lungs, "Now take a breath; now exhale," and so on in order to breathe. We do not have to tell our hearts to contract and expand. We do not have to tell our stomachs to give off gastric juices. We do not have to tell our salivary glands to secrete saliva. We do not have to do any of those things. They are pure reflexes. Yet, a good many people are sick because they will not let nature take care of itself. As a result of that they get the thing in a great big muddle and do not know what to do about it. You run up a pair of stairs and, if thinking about something else, have no difficulty. But you run upstairs and think about what you are doing and the first thing you know you will be stumbling. There is absolutely no question that a great many people are sick because they are paying too much attention to the thing. Nature will take care of itself if you keep your hands off it.

Nature, through these reflexes, does a wonderful lot of work for us.

The Symbol

Another thing that plays a role in bringing all of these forces under one heading is what we call the idol or the symbol. Before the war all of us were engaged in this, that, and the other thing, and were in a sense disinterested as to our neighbor, but as soon as they threw the flag into the air, what happened? All of our differences disappeared and we pooled our interests in trying to save our country. All of the latent energies we had were poured out to do the thing that had to be done in saving our country. The flag was the symbol of our country. It did a great work, a great function, in firing our patriotism, in bringing the people together.

The Social Custom

Another thing that has to do with this building up and interrelating of the various parts of our bodies is the social custom. We may individually want to do a certain thing, but we do not do that thing because we care about the esteem of our fellows. Social customs then is another factor that tends to bring our bodily parts into such a relationship that they finally make a complete whole. That is what we are after if we are to adjust ourselves.

Professor James says that if a man could realize that what he finally becomes is the result of the habits he has formed he would give greater attention to his habits. We believe that our habits are nothing but patterns. When we do a certain thing a number of times we produce a pattern for the doing of that thing in our nervous system. The particular point is that we must develop the proper kind of habits within our children. One of the greatest mental men in America said: "We want to train our children so that they under no circumstances will do anything that is not right, that if they do they will pay the price; then they will not attempt any shortcut move to get the thing they want." That is a mental man, who has had considerable experience with the shipwrecks of life. He sees the necessity of what we may call true religion in our lives. That is habit. If you have the habit of sidetracking issues, decisions, you are going to have trouble and difficulty later on. You should meet your problems as you come to them. Our business, then, is to make our children have such patterns that they will be able to meet problems successfully.

If we try to bring about development before growth is had, we do harm. For instance, if you try to make a child walk before its bones and muscles have developed to the stage where walking should be done you harm the child. You must await the growth before you can begin development. If we push our children too rapidly we are doing them harm and injustice—we are doing them injury.

Rate of Progress

A thing that is very important in this connection is this: How are you going to know when the child has reached that level of growth that can associate itself with a certain development? The child will manifest those stages of growth that indicate that it can have a certain development. Most of us are not willing to listen to the signal that is given. We are asked where the baby came from, for instance. We do not answer. We are afraid to. We do not have the proper information to give it. The child has shown by its curiosity in that subject that it can understand an answer. It has grown to the level where it can understand the answer. Give an intelligent, quiet, simple answer to that question when it comes. We know that a child has reached a certain stage of development when it starts to walk. It is interested in the thing. That is an invitation to us to help it to develop walking. The child, I say, throws out signs and signals which indicate that it has reached the various levels of its growth, and when you see those signals you know that you have an invitation to start to do something from your side.

The Project Method

Doctor Kilpatrick of New York has developed the project method of teaching. It used to be the idea to cram every child through a certain form, but Doctor Kilpatrick has called the attention of teachers to the fact that you get nowhere by that means. The parents of Charles Darwin tried unsuccessfully to make him a doctor, a preacher, and then a lawyer; but he got on board the Beagle and sailed all over the Pacific Ocean and collected all kinds of specimens. He loved that work. It seemed to satisfy him. When he got back to England he began to classify his specimens, and he made a great contribution to the biological world. He couldn't be made into a doctor, a lawyer, or a preacher, but when he had a chance to express his innate individuality and desires, then he developed something that was really worth while.

You ask the child what he likes to work with. He will say that he thinks he likes a certain thing. He works with it for a time, and then he finds that he doesn't care so much about it. He does that several times, and then after awhile he finds something that he does like to do and when he finds that something he throws his whole soul into it. When he does that, there will be results. The Bible tells us that Jesus asked the question, "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" Jesus believed in the law of cause and effect. Not only are educators finding the project method is important for getting out of the child what is in him, but they are finding that the same principle applies to the children who are making trouble in school.

Doctor Richards in Baltimore went to the various schools and asked for the troublesome pupils. She visited their homes. In some cases she found that the bad boy wanted a machine shop in which to work and play, but that the parents thought it was a waste of time and money. She finally persuaded some of those parents to let the boys have what they wanted in the home, within certain limits, of course. And she found that those boys, strange as it may seem, became good students in school. Doctor Bailey of New York recites the case of a boy who was a very hard boy to keep in school. The teachers finally found something which interested him, and then they could hardly drive him home from school. That is practical education. That is taking the natural tendencies of the individual and permitting them to blossom and grow into something that is worth while.

The Ages of Childhood

The ages of the child are of three kinds. One is the chronological age. Another is the age so-called physiological. At a certain time the child develops a certain size of bone and muscle. Then we have a psychological age which has to do with the ability of the individual to understand the things of his environment. Some people, when they are chronologically thirty years of age, are psychologically but six years of age. A case once called to my attention was of a woman who came to the hospital; after having had two or three children, she was found to be six years old psychologically. Society was expecting of her the behavior of a normal thirty-year-old individual.

Do not hurry the child, but do not let him sit. Do not force him beyond his capacity, but do not let him sit down and not try to get some place. In other words, do not try to whip up this natural creative energy; do not push it too far, for if you do you will soon find that he cannot eat, cannot sleep, for he is nervous. That is absolutely bad. When your children have a tendency to overdo that way, put a check on them. On the other hand, when there is a tendency to drag back, give them a little stimulus. Do not whip them, of course, but give them something they like, that is worth while.

The Control of Children

The first thing we talked about was determinism. Things are determined by their environment. The second thing is that we have to do with the question of heredity, the things we are born with. On the other hand, we have to do with those things that society gives us. The thing we are born with is the biological self. It is the power. The thing we acquire from the environment is the social self. It is the engineer. An engine of a certain capacity has the power to carry a train up a certain grade, and when it gets the load up to the top it is evident that it had the power to do it. The power is resident within the engine. Now, whether the engine will draw the load up to the top or pitch it into the ditch depends upon the engineer. If that engineer cannot distinguish between the colors green and red, he will go to destruction. If he had understood that that was a red light at the switch, he would have put the brakes on and stopped the steam going into the cylinders. Heredity gives us the power; our environment, that is our church, our school, etc., make the engineer, and the train is controlled largely by what the individual gets from his environment. That is our responsibility. We can give the child what we will in a sense, and he will tend to be what we have given him. That is our particular job, to give him what is worth while, and certainly it is our responsibility to see that he gets what is worth while.

The big thing with the child is to direct him, not to try to inhibit him. We have to put on the brakes a bit, but not nearly as much as we used to think we had to do it. It used to be thought that if a fellow were interested in a certain subject it would be best for him not to take up that subject, purely as a matter of discipline, on the basis that if you took up something that you did not like and gave up that which you liked you would be developing patience and discipline. Let us get busy after the thing we love. Do not inhibit the child. Let him go, within limits, of course.

The work of Doctor Kilpatrick supports that idea of permitting the thing to come out. Doctor Richards in her work with the abnormal child found it was best to let the energy of the child have a normal outlet. Doctor Grenberg in his book on Sex Education in High Schools says this, that mental health is harmonious impulse, unified purpose. That means that we have this strong power within us so ruled and related to the engineer that is driving the engine that the two come out successfully. Our business, then, is to bring those two factors under one heading, to spend the united energy on a good cause.

Substitution and Sublimation

We each have a certain amount of will power. We ought to have some tendency within us to get some place. But it is to be controlled. If it is not, we will develop a "Gott mit uns" complex. That does not pay. But a certain amount of it is necessary. Doctor Woodworth gave out this idea, Substitution and Sublimation. When the driving energy is terrific, substitute, get busy and use the energy up in another way. The thing that all of us have to do is to make sublime this power within us. I have a patient right now who did something once upon a time in his life; he was a worker. But he has retrograded to the place where he now sits alone in a room. He is afraid to go out. He will not leave his room, because he is afraid that something is about to happen to him. One explanation I have is this: that man at one time was using up his energies in good work, but since he cut off all his relations, his energy is turned inside. When that gets inside it begins to make some changes physically. We think there is something wrong. The thing this man has got to do is to get an impelling interest in life. He has got to let his energies flow out of himself towards this thing in which he is interested, and he will get well.

That is sublimation; that is making sublime the normal energies within us, placing them on a high level of activity that brings results. That, then, is our business, to use the power God has given us through heredity to lift up to a higher plane or level. Without that we die. It may be a death of perversion, where the thing that should have been expressed on a high level has taken us to a low level.

Emancipation of Self

It takes twenty-five years for an individual human to develop to maturity, to become complete, with all the capacities grown and developed so that the person is in the best possible shape to meet his environment. It takes a cat a few weeks. What is going to happen in that twenty-five years? The tendency is for us to become dependent upon our environment. We become dependent upon the mother and father because they are always furnishing us something, and we begin to feel the need of that thing coming from them. It is difficult to emancipate ourselves from our home and stand upon our own feet. Emancipation is one of the first laws of mental health—get upon your own feet. It means that you think for yourself, you decide your own problems. You have emancipated yourself from your family. You would be surprised to know how many people have not emancipated themselves. You would be surprised to know how many people have been shipwrecked because they have not done this.

Physical Care of the Child

I went into a doctor's office the other day and saw a man sitting there breathing audibly. He was breathing that way because he had to. Why did he have so much difficulty in breathing? Because he had heart disease. Why did he have heart disease? Because very likely when he was a child he had rheumatism; because probably he had diseased teeth or sinuses or weakness of the heart through heredity. The physical care of the child, then, is to see that we keep our various parts healthy.

The Health Department has made one or two starts that have, for different reasons, been failures; but we are going to start again to attempt to do something and we believe it is going to work this time. We are going to have a visiting nurse in connection with the Sanitarium. This nurse has the right concept of the thing, and she is imbued with the idea of service. What she wants to do is to go into the homes and help all of us get some basic ideas of health and hygiene.

Another patient we see in the doctor's office is one who coughs all the time. He cannot help himself now. He has tuberculosis of the lungs. That is the reason why he is doing that thing. Doctor Keown told me that he had six or seven cases of tubercular meningitis, and he had found on investigation that those patients as children a few months old had been in homes where there was an adult who had tuberculosis. When I was studying medicine in Vienna, the doctor in showing us specimens of tubercle bacilli, made the statement that the patients acquired these bacilli in the first few days of their lives. These germs lodge in the lower part of the lungs where they lie dormant until the child has reached the adolescent age, when they became active. That is his theory. I asked him if it was spread any other way. He answered that it might be; he did not know; but he did know that it was spread in that way. Doctor Keown comes along with his experience here as a physician and says he has seen that thing absolutely carried out, by babies being kept in homes where tuberculosis patients are living.

Let us take some of the diseases of the digestive system. The statement is made that the stomach is the mouthpiece of the digestive system. When you have appendicitis and it is chronic, the whole business is concentrated around the stomach. When you have gall bladder diseases, sometimes you will not have the symptoms there at all. The stomach symptoms are only secondary to the disease. What about appendicitis, gallstones, etc.? Doctor Mayo says that hot drinks cause the trouble. Not tea and coffee. They are unnecessary stimulants and we do not need them at all. Don't think you can take water or milk or something like that and take it hot and not have bad results. They will produce trouble in the stomach that is the forerunner of cancer of the stomach. That is what the Mayo brothers say. Some men doubt the statement. I heard a series of talks down at Saint Louis at the meeting of a medical association, and in one of them Doctor Charles Mayo said that it doesn't make much difference whether you treat the patient medically or surgically; that the great big thing is to see that they have removed from their bodies the diseased areas.

If you have a child with adenoids he does not breathe through his nose properly and his nose does not develop as it should, then these cavities are not aerated as they should be. As a result disease collects in those parts and leads to some other consequences. When you have diseased adenoids, it tends to diseased tonsils. It is better to have the adenoids removed first, and then take the tonsils later, though that is not always true. The same thing applies to the teeth. You sometimes have diseased teeth and are not aware of it. It takes an X-ray picture to bring the fact to your notice. You may have no pain there at all, but still there may be disease.

Watch and see that your child breathes through its nose. Be sure that the child's teeth are properly taken care of. All we are asking is that you give decent, sane attention to these normal functions of their bodies.

CHAPTER V

Growth and Development

1. How long is required to bring the individual to maturity?
2. How is the child different from the adult?
3. Explain the difference between "growth" and "development." Why is it harmful to try to hurry a child in learning to walk? What parts and muscles develop first? Should a young child be urged to sew or to practice on the piano? Why?
4. Distinguish between chronological age, physiological age, and psychological age.
5. Give the most striking characteristics of each of the following stages:
 - (a) Infancy, (b) early childhood, (c) later childhood, (d) youth, (e) adolescence.
6. Discuss the rate of progress a normal child should make in language development.
7. What is meant by "determinism"? How does this prove our responsibility as parents?
8. What ages may be called the golden period of development?
9. What does Doctor Harrington mean by "letting nature do its work"?
10. What is the importance of emancipation of self?

An observing cynic declares that the smart set never got that way by listening to each other.

With less than 350 missionary workers and more than 5,000 members of the priesthood who are not in missionary work, it would seem that branch work or local work and that of religious education should be done without trouble, and that the greater part of our energy is being spent, and should be spent in this case by these local men, in caring for the flock. Certainly one can hardly say that the amount spent on missionary service or the number of missionaries is relatively or absolutely too large.

LETTERS AND NEWS

First Chicago Needs More Room

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, November 23.—Sacrament Sunday was a day well spent in the service of the Master. Bishop James F. Keir was a visitor for the day. Many inspiring testimonies were given, expressing a desire to move onward and upward. Brother John Lawrenson was the evening speaker, his theme being, "Have faith in God."

Armistice Day was one long to be remembered. Elder J. W. Petterson gave the children one of his forceful illustrated sermons, which was appreciated by a full house.

At 11 o'clock all stood at attention, facing the east, while Brother McCaig offered prayer for the continued peace of our Nation. Old Glory was in evidence both inside and outside the church.

In the evening all were made glad by a visit from Brother and Sister Ward L. Christy, and Brother Christy gave one of his forceful sermons, the theme being "Do your best." The anthem by the choir was "Rejoice, ye, with Jerusalem."

Harold McCaig, son of Priest H. T. McCaig, was baptized by the pastor.

The annual Halloween party was held at the church parlors, and a new problem arises at First Chicago. We must enlarge our church or build an auditorium. The ghosts and fairies were in evidence to such a degree that the rooms were crowded. The enjoyable evening was finished with apples, doughnuts, pop corn, and cider. Sister Ola Kelsey and little Clarence Newman were prize winners for the best costumes.

Many of our sick are finding relief through the channel outlined in the word of God.

Brother Philemon Pement paid us a visit on the 18th, preaching at the evening hour. Also District Sunday School Superintendent J. J. Oliver visited the school at the morning session. Brother Oliver always brings a word of cheer.

The Department of Women gave an apron and baked goods sale on November 22 which was a decided success. Everyone seems to have had his appetite satisfied with cake and candy, for the present at least. The ladies are always doing something worth while.

The Northeastern Illinois district conference will meet with the First Chicago Branch on December 7, 8, and 9. All visiting Saints are invited to meet at 4416 Gladys Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Series of Lectures Begun

VINAL HAVEN, MAINE, November 14.—Elder Harvey Minton spoke to a large gathering on Sunday night, November 11. This was the first of a series of lectures which are to continue until November 16.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is still growing and developing. On Friday evening, November 9, a game of volley ball was played. Elder Minton took part, in spite of the fact that it was the first day he had spent with the branch. The Vinal Haven Branch wants to become well trained in volley ball in the hopes of having a team prepared to meet opponents at the Brooksville, Maine, reunion during the summer of 1924. In this department of the church, refreshments are usually served every other Friday night, and the Saints and outside people enjoy themselves very much.

The Saints of Vinal Haven rejoice that a missionary has been sent to this locality, and many outsiders seem to be glad to cooperate with the Saints in behalf of the work. The members feel the responsibility with them and desire to cooperate with the new missionary to win souls for Christ.

Louisville Saints Prepare to Purchase New Church Site

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, November 12.—The Saints of this branch sold their old church building during the summer, and since that time have been holding group meetings until another location can be decided upon.

It was being planned to purchase a Methodist church building in Beechmont, since the owners were preparing to move to other quarters. However, after waiting for a decision from them for several months, it has been learned that they do not wish to sell, as they will use the old building for a gymnasium.

At the present time, the priesthood of this branch are re-considering the matter of a new location. The membership is anxiously waiting the outcome of the recent deliberation upon the church site, as a meeting place is badly needed.

Loss in Branch Membership Felt.

ORCHARDVILLE, ILLINOIS, November 17.—The Department of Women holds its regular meetings every Thursday afternoon with Mrs. I. A. Roberts, who is the leader, in charge.

Brother L. F. Edmunds, of Bellair, preached on October 28, and Brother Claud Brown on November 4, while Brother Jeff Henson occupied on November 11.

Quite a number of the Saints seem to have the moving fever. Elmer Kurtz and family have moved to Fairfield, and Rena Burroughs and family have gone to Mount Vernon. This is a great loss to the choir as well as the Sunday school.

Pastor William Clements attends faithfully to his work, although it is necessary for him to ride five miles each Sunday to preach. He deserves the support of the members at all times, especially when there are not special occasions held, as when visiting missionaries are present.

New Colorado Springs Pastor

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLORADO, November 17.—The former pastor, Elder C. H. Rich, has been appointed to Western Maine, Stonington objective. He expects to leave about November 16, but his family will remain in the city for the winter. The new pastor and wife, Elder and Mrs. Bruce E. Brown, arrived October 23, stayed a few days with Brother and Sister Holm, and are now located at 323 North Institute. Brother Brown is also president of the Eastern Colorado District, succeeding Brother G. H. Wixom who has been appointed to Northern California District.

On the evening of October 27, Elder Oral E. Sade passed away at Saint Joseph's Hospital, Denver, after four years of intense pain and suffering. He leaves a widow, Sister Laura Sade, and three daughters, Marguerite, Ina, and Doris, all of Colorado Springs. Brother Sade was a seventy, well known, especially in Illinois where he brought a great many people into the church by preaching on the streets, in school-houses, and homes—anywhere he had opportunity to present the message. His family has lost a kind, devoted father, the church a faithful, able, valiant minister of the gospel.

Sunday School Class No. 2 had a Halloween party at the home of Thelma Conway. Brother and Sister Brown were with us to keep the witches and goblins from overrunning that part of the city, and a very good time was enjoyed by all.

Sunday, October 28, Brother Brown preached two sermons, which were well received by the Saints. Apostle J. F. Curtis was to preach in the evening, but took seriously ill that afternoon with acute indigestion. His little daughter has been here for some months for her health, and Brother Curtis had come from Independence to take her home. However, he was not able to travel until the following Thursday. He was able to attend the Wednesday night prayer meeting and gave a strong testimony.

A spiritual sacrament meeting was enjoyed on November 4, and in the evening Brother Rich preached his farewell sermon.

At a special business meeting on November 14 it was voted to have a special series of young people's meetings soon.

On November 10 Brother Rich baptized Miss Thelma Conway, daughter of Doctor and Mrs. E. E. Conway. Thelma's mother is a sister of Mrs. Joseph Mather, formerly of Independence, Missouri. Following her baptism, Sister Thelma was married on November 14 to Mr. Ronald Gardner of this city, Brother Rich officiating.

Dennis Port Branch Progressing Nicely

DENNIS PORT, MASSACHUSETTS, November 17.—The work is progressing nicely in Dennis Port where the gospel has been kept alive for many years by the efforts of Elder Lewis who has labored here alone. However, two young men have recently been ordained, Harry Kelly an elder, and Ethan Beorse a priest, who are assuming their responsibilities with preparation and progress.

Attendance is good. Sunday school is an important feature of the branch and is large in numbers. We look forward to the time when by adding to our building we will be able to care for the greater numbers that will come.

The members of the Dennis Port Branch extend a cordial invitation to all traveling in our vicinity to come and pay us a visit.

MARGARET TUBMAN.

Pie Social Is Decided Success

CHEBOYGAN, MICHIGAN, November 14.—Elder W. H. Sheffer and family, of Sandusky, Michigan, have moved to Cheboygan for the winter. Sister Beulah Hilla's family have also moved to town. Three more have been added to our number, Muriel Sheffer, Mildred Lalone, and Alvena Hilla. But to counteract this gain, Brother and Sister Emerson and family are now living near Gaylord, and they are greatly missed.

Among visitors, we have had with us Sister Beech, of Levering; Elder E. N. Burt and wife, of Onaway; Brothers Stanley and Walter Horton, of Caseville.

The Department of Women gave a pie social on October 30, which was a success both socially and financially.

MRS. GEORGE S. WILSON.

Rally Day to Be Held Soon

WESTON, IOWA, November 18.—The Saints at Boomer had the pleasure of listening to Elder Hans Anderson on October 28. Among other things he related how he felt on a visit to the Nebraska State Prison at Lincoln. This experience brought tears to more than one in the congregation.

In another meeting Nels Johnson told about his trip to General Conference. It was almost as if we were there and taking part in it.

Brother J. J. Harding spoke on November 18, using as his text Doctrine and Covenants 102.

The ladies' aid met at the home of Sister Frank Handlan a short time ago.

Some of our members are helping to organize a Sunday school in Neola, Iowa.

A rally day is to be held in the near future for the Hazel Dell and Boomer Branches.

Marshall Saints Attend Stake Conference

MARSHALL, MISSOURI, November 21.—A party of the Marshall Saints drove to Lexington on Sunday, November 11, to attend the last session of the Holden stake conference. They felt well repaid for the long drive by the lecture given by Doctor G. Leonard Harrington on sociology and psychology. They had much to think about and discuss as they motored homeward over the rolling prairies in the late afternoon. One thing for which they felt especially thankful was that God had picked this wonderful land for the land of Zion.

Brother C. H. Wehrli and family have taken up their abode in Marshall. Brother Wehrli preached a very interesting and instructive sermon Sunday morning, November 18, with Elder Levi Phelps delivering the evening discourse.

A happy party of young people met at the home of Sister Adah Spohrer on Halloween evening, where a fine time was enjoyed by all. Also a birthday party was held on November 6 at the home of Sister D. B. Narron in honor of her daughter Miss Virginia.

The young people are at present enjoying games of volley ball. They meet two or three times a week under the direction of Brother William Bitchel or some one he appoints to take his place.

Brother Asa Ward, of Independence, spent Sunday with his old-time friend, Pastor H. G. Thayer and family.

Series of Meetings Held at Cleveland

CLEVELAND, OHIO, November 20.—Elder William Patterson is now here and is holding a series of meetings. This was short notice for the publicity agent, as he had only two days from the first intimation to the branch that the meetings were to be held. However, printed matter was made ready for distribution, and a large twenty-foot sign was put up across the building announcing "Elder Patterson, an Australian native, will preach the restored gospel every evening." A large crowd, mostly Saints, attended the first evening.

Brother and Sister Dudley were her from Michigan on account of Harry Dudley, their eldest son having been shot while on police duty in this city. Brother Dudley expressed his thankfulness that his son had been raised up, and stated that this was the fifth time that members of his family have been saved by the power of God through administration. The Dudleys used to be members of the Cleveland Branch.

Ladies' Aid Renovates Church Building

BLACK RIVER FALLS, WISCONSIN, November 18.—The Saints at Black River Falls have a nice little church about five miles north of town where they have Sunday school every Sunday at 10.30 and preaching after Sunday school by the local priesthood. Elder I. H. Bowen is elder and pastor of the branch.

The ladies' aid has been meeting every two weeks on Friday afternoon in the basement of the church, nonmembers attending quite often. The women got busy and varnished the woodwork, seats, and furniture, and hired a man to paint the ceiling and kalsomine the walls, so the interior of the church looks very nice.

Five children have recently been added to the branch by baptism.

Quite a number of the Black River Falls Saints attended the Northern Wisconsin district conference held at Wyeville on November 23 and 24.

Brother and Sister Roy Scafe and children, from near Bangor, worshiped with us on November 11.

Providence Bids Farewell to Faithful Worker

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, November 21.—Thursday evening, November 15, the Saints met in the lower auditorium of the church to bid farewell to Elder George H. A. Gates, who goes to Philadelphia to become associated with the Artloom Rugs Mills.

The church was prettily decorated with the season's foliage and potted plants, through the efforts of Brother Daniel F. Joy and wife. An interesting program was given, including a musical trio—Miss Beatrice Gates, piano, Mr. Joseph I. Gates, violin, Miss Hazel Gates Garlick, cello; selected reading, Daniel F. Joy, jr.; original poem dedicated to Brother Gates, Mrs. Laura F. Brown; soprano solo, Miss Marion Calvert; baritone solo, Mr. John Jackson, words of which were composed by Miss Evelyn Robley to the tune, "When you're gone, I won't forget."

When You're Gone, We Won't Forget

When you're gone we won't forget you,
And we'll miss you when you go;
We recall with joy your life work
That you started long ago.
Now your face is turned to Zion,
May you reach your goal at last;
Far from us you'll soon be going;
When you're gone we won't forget.

When you're gone we won't forget you,
When from us you're far away;
Every night we will remember,
When we bend the knee to pray.
And perchance you may be thinking
Of dear friends in Providence;
Though you leave us heavy hearted,
When you're gone we won't forget.

Original Verses to George H. A. Gates

Dear Brother Gates, we have met here to-night,
All with one purpose in view,
To wish you good luck with all of our might,
And hope for your best success, too.

We want you to know that we'll miss you;
Often you'll come to our mind;
Always you've served us faithful and true;
Kind deeds you're leaving behind.

We'll miss you here on Wednesday night,
We'll think of you Sundays, too.
Apart, yet together we'll pray for right,
We'll remember to pray for you, too.

You've counseled the young, strengthened the old,
Administered always in love;
So in our hearts you'll always hold
Feelings akin to above.

Strangers may greet you where you will go,
But soon you'll find they'll be friends,
For Love is your motto, this we know,
You've proven it here at all ends.

So dear Brother Gates, once again we say,
Providence will miss you much;
But "Phillie" is not so far away;
With us just keep in touch.

Remember in spirit we're always near,
With Zion our mutual trend,
And to follow the love unknown to fear,
With you we'll go on to the end.

Brother Gates was presented with a large birthday cake having thirty-eight candles, representing thirty-eight years of faithful service for Christ in the Providence Branch. He was also presented with a large walrus traveling bag, a gift of the Saints in remembrance of his loving-kindness to all. The presentation was made by Elder J. D. Suttill, to which Brother Gates responded with great feeling.

Refreshments were served at the close of the musical program, and during this period we had the pleasure of "listening in." Brother Joy had installed his Freed-Eisemann receiving set and loud speaker in the church for the evening, and we enjoyed another musical program broadcasted from Boston, Massachusetts.

Monday evening, October 29, the young people of the branch journeyed to the farm of Elder Fred W. Roberts by motor to enjoy Halloween festivities. The order was to go in costume. Many and varied were the costumes which ran riot in color. Both indoor and outdoor games were played, after which refreshments were served, the party returning to town about midnight.

The branch was visited by Elder Richard Bullard Sunday, November 4. Brother Bullard offered the opening remarks at the communion service in the morning and preached at the evening hour. Brother Bullard is always a welcome visitor in the East, and his talk on "Loyalty to the church" was very inspiring.

Sunday, November 11, Apostle Edmund J. Gleazer visited the branch, occupying the evening hour. Brother Gleazer made it very clear that "there is no excuse for anyone to be inactive in this church," and that "if we were looking for advancement and truth, we must study and read the books of the church" and "we must be found watching, and waiting, and working."

Apostle Rushton Is Made Pastor of Los Angeles Branch

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, November 12.—Activities in the Los Angeles Branch slowed down a little during the conference period, due to the absence of heads of departments, missionaries, and pastor.

The finance and building committee has resumed meetings after having not met for some little time. Nearly everybody is now conforming to the new slogan of the branch, which has been placed on a banner and stretched across the church directly over the pulpit, reading "A new church worthy of the Los Angeles Branch."

Pastor S. N. Gray, elected to succeed Elder David Dowker who has been transferred to Des Moines, has resigned because of leaving this city. Apostle John W. Rushton, who expects to be detained in the city until the next regular business meeting the first of the year, was elected pastor. He immediately called a meeting of the "force" and gave some valuable instructions.

A splendid feeling of harmony prevails among the brethren of the priesthood, heads of departments, committees, and working units, and the outlook is bright for a forward movement in the branch.

The reunion grounds committee recently met on the district grounds at Hermosa Beach and made plans for needed improvements in keeping with what the city of Hermosa and surrounding real estate companies are doing in the way of grading down sand dunes, opening up streets, laying sidewalks and pavement, and putting in water, gas, and street lights. By next reunion it is expected that many changes will have been made. The committee is considering the advisability of permanent gas and electricity in every tent, tent house and cottage on the grounds, also improved sewerage and sanitation.

Sister Fannie McGhan, who has been ill for several months, is again in the hospital. Saints are requested to remember her.

Several visitors have been here recently, among whom are Brother and Sister W. F. Wamsley, of Kansas City. Sister Wamsley rendered a beautiful selection in keeping with Armistice Day exercises. Apostle T. W. Williams gave an impressive discourse on the same occasion.

Lincoln Saints Will Miss Coworker

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA, November 12, 1923.—We were much pleased to have with us on Sunday, November 11 our esteemed Brother H. A. Higgins, who has been one in our district for many years, and one we are always glad to listen to. He gave us two very good talks, and much good counsel, but we regret that he is so soon to leave our part of the country, possibly never to return again. We wish him all the good that can be bestowed upon mortal man, and know that those to whom he shall go will appreciate his work as we have done. Now we are called upon to wait until our new man comes. While he may not be with us all the time there will be some comfort in the fact that we will have some one we can call on when necessary.

We are but few, but we have a heart for the gospel. In the afternoon a party of the Saints from Omaha drove down to see our new capitol building and other places of interest, returning in the evening. We are not able at this time to say what the future may bring to us, but we hope to be able to hold fast until our work is finished; then be it good or bad, may we be ready to accept whatever there may be in store for us in the time to come.

Our Women's Department has started its fall and winter work, as usual meeting every two weeks for such work as shall come to their hands. LEON SNOW.

Superintendent Carmichael Studying at Columbia

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, November 18.—Elder Max Carmichael, now studying at Columbia University, has won the appreciation of the Brooklyn Saints for the interesting sermons delivered by him from their pulpit since his coming to New York. His subject for last Sunday was "Stewardship," regarding which he presented an interpretation somewhat novel to his audience yet so sensibly practical in the analysis of its operation that all could understand and heartily approve.

Graceland College has enrolled a teacher training class here, which is now in its second year of activity. Due to the fact that the class was gathering from a territory embracing approximately forty square miles, it was decided to divide its membership geographically. As a result much time and traveling is saved in reaching the place of meeting which rotates each week from home to home of the class members, in turn.

The hostess of the evening serves the prescribed refreshments following the class work. An absorbing interest is sustained under the competent leadership of Sister Katherine Nichols who has charge of the Richmond Hill section of the class.

Brooklyn has reasons to be proud of its organization under the Department of Women, who on frequent occasions have been deputized to supervise and execute important commissions for the branch. Sister Annie Box is their president, which means much to the success of their undertakings. They hold regular meetings for the study of subjects selected from one of the "Three Books."

Improvements Made on Church Building

SAINT CLAIR, MICHIGAN, November 19.—The work is going steadily forward in Saint Clair, and some of the Saints are anxious to know more about stewardships, so they may enter more actively into the work. Elder J. R. Grice, on his return from General Conference, gave some very good sermons that were helpful to the Saints.

Elder Daniel Macgregor paid us a visit on November 11 and preached a wonderful sermon on the signs of the times, so by the preaching of these good sermons, all are impressed to go forward and press toward the final goal of the church.

A new basement is being put under the church which, when completed, will be very commodious. It is to contain a large baptismal font, a kitchen, a rest room, and a Sunday-school room. The Department of Women is donating the greater share of the finances by giving suppers and serving in other ways.

Apostle Tells of Work in Islands

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 22.—Perhaps the readers of the HERALD would appreciate hearing from Elder Paia a Metuaaro, the native elder who accompanied the undersigned to the General Conference in 1920. Many of you met him personally at conference, and others as he visited you in your branch on his tour from Independence to Hill Cumorah and back to Independence by way of Michigan and intervening points. Were he able to write our language, he would no doubt write to you through the columns of the HERALD.

Upon returning to the islands in July, 1920, Elder Paia commenced missionary work at once and continued in active work, building up branches, traveling from island to island until July, 1922, when he returned to his home island because of family conditions. He remained for some time in his native island working, also moving out to surrounding islands during the year, including Apataki and Niau, where he did a splendid work, a work that in no way could have been done by a foreign missionary. During the fore part of the present year he again moved out and visited the islands of Kaukura and Arutua, returning again to the island of Kaukura where our mission conference was held in April. I wish all could have been with me at our last conference and heard and seen him in action in the work of the conference. He stood by us nobly in all our quorum and conference work, and we want to assure you that his experience in America has done him much good. He is now able to help us, knowing as he does some of the conditions in the church here, our ideals, and standards. Just before we left the islands for America a few weeks ago he again left home, this time for the island of Hikueru where hundreds are diving for the "mother of pearl," and while he is diving there he is also taking charge of the work. By the first of the year he will again leave for a few months. It must not be forgotten that our native missionaries are self-sustaining most of the time.

While our native brethren have not the same conception of things we may have, we want to assure you that they are very valuable adjuncts to our work among their own people. They understand their own race and can handle them better than we could alone.

We assure you that Elder Paia is one of the noblest members and the most capable elder this church has in the islands of the sea. We trust he will be given strength to continue on as nobly as he has in the past, and especially so now, as there is no foreign missionary in the islands' mission.

CLYDE F. ELLIS.

Lamoni Items

LAMONI, IOWA, November 30.—A Thanksgiving service was held in the church at 10 a. m. yesterday, President F. M. McDowell being the speaker. It was a most excellent discourse, not of the old type, but dealing more particularly with the subject of one's attitude toward life and the expression of it. "Are we willing to receive our heritage?" he asked. We can only receive it and pass it on to posterity through a life of preparation and service. Gratitude to those who have sacrificed so much for us can only be shown through service by continuing the good work which they began. Music at this service was rendered by a mixed octette.

On Thanksgiving afternoon Graceland played a game of football with Tabor College in the blinding snowstorm. Tabor is no match for Graceland in any way, Graceland having won both games with her this season. The score in yesterday's game was 67 to 6. The college closes its season with a record of four games won, two tied, and two lost.

Stake Conference

The Lamoni stake conference was held at Chariton last week and is reported by those in attendance as a most excellent meeting. A great degree of spirituality and unity was manifest in the meetings and in the cooperation of the local Saints in caring for visitors. The sisters are especially to be commended for the efficient way in which they handled the entertainment features. Meals, except breakfast, were served in the basement of the church, and the families of the local membership, as well as the visitors, were served there. This permitted of a greater degree of sociability, and through the thoroughly organized effort the work of feeding the large group was done quickly and well, so all were enabled to attend the services.

The following program was carried out at the conference: Thursday. Organization, 7.30 p. m.; preaching, "Christianity and the social revolution," D. T. Williams 7.45.

Friday. Social service, 9; institute work in charge of H. H. Gold, stake Sunday school superintendent, 10.30; talk by Miss Blanche Edwards, 2.30; preaching, "The need of the hour," W. E. Prall, 7.30.

Saturday. Social service, 9; business at 10.30; talk by Blanche Edwards, 2.30; preaching, Bishop A. Carmichael, 7.30.

Sunday. Sunday school, 9.30; communion service, 10.45; priesthood meeting, 2.30; musical concert, 7.30; preaching, "Stewardships," C. E. Wight.

A Christmas program is being planned for Sunday evening, December 22. Details have not been worked out, but a suitable pageant and community singing of Christmas carols will be two features.

Thanksgiving Pageant

A splendid program was rendered by the juniors and intermediates at the eleven o'clock hour of their Sunday school last Sunday. A pageant portraying the events leading up to the first Thanksgiving was an impressive feature. This work was in charge of Sisters Ethel Brooner and Iola Hicks. A number by the junior choir in charge of Sister C. E. Wight, a duet by Helen Anthony and Grace Lane. The children were assisted by Mrs. Verna Brackenbury in a reading and Mrs. Lena Graham in story-telling.

Graceland College profited materially recently by a switch built for them by the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railroad near the college. This enables them to haul coal, building material, etc., over a level road and but a short distance. This avoids the long pull up college hill which is necessitated when freight is hauled from the depot.

Our exceptionally fine fall weather was broken Thanksgiving Day by a heavy snow. Up to that time bushes were budding and pansies and violets blooming as in spring. The snow did not last long, and the temperature did not fall very low.

Thanksgiving and Armistice Day Observed

EAST CHATHAM, ONTARIO, November 23.—The Chatham Branch has been full of activities of late, especially during the past month. On Armistice Day, November 11, the Sunday school held a combined Thanksgiving and Armistice Day service. The attendance was good, and the service was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. The service consisted of talks, solos, and readings, all appropriate to the occasion, and during the service a two-minute silence was observed on behalf of those who "lay in Flanders' Fields."

The Sunday school is at present working on plans for the Christmas tree and Christmas concert.

The Temple Builders are presenting a comedy in three acts in the church on Tuesday evening, December 4, which is being looked forward to with much anticipation.

The regular priesthood meeting of the branch was held on Monday, November 12, and a profitable evening was enjoyed, Brother Byron Doty, our new missionary in the district, was present and addressed them on priesthood matters.

The semiannual business meeting will be held Monday, December 3, at which time the new officers will be elected.

Money Raised for Christmas Entertainment

SAGINAW, MICHIGAN, November 22.—A social evening under the auspices of the Department of Recreation and Expression for the purpose of raising funds for the Christmas entertainment was held at the home of Brother and Sister A. Stone on November 8. All reported a good time, and $26 was raised for the fund.

The Wednesday evening prayer services are now being held in the homes, with the exception of the last Wednesday in the month when a union prayer meeting is held in the church. Our first prayer meeting held in the home was on November 21 when a goodly number attended and the gifts of the gospel were manifested.

General Officers Visit Detroit Saints

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, November 18.—The district conference at Flint on November 10 and 11 took a great number from services here, but each member was well repaid for the effort to meet with others of the district and enjoy the spiritual feasts so bountifully spread. The influences cast abroad from those services have indeed been brought home and are having their good effect.

Monday, November 12, the Saints of Detroit were favored in hearing President Elbert A. Smith deliver an interesting sermon, while the congregational singing was taken care of by Brother A. N. Hoxie in the unique manner peculiar to him.

Sister Dora Glines, in the interests of the departments, was well received in her lectures, open to all, November 14, and was especially enjoyable at the program following the luncheon participated in on Thursday at 1.30 p. m., given by the Department of Women of the city in her honor. She presented many truths in her interesting way which can result only in good.

A treat was afforded the people on November 14 by having with us Apostle F. Henry Edwards. He occupied both morning and evening.

The past two weeks have brought the several churches of the city together on several occasions by the visits of those from headquarters, and we welcome their return at any time.

Results of Mulberry Meetings Good

MULBERRY, KANSAS, November 26.—Brother Amos T. Higdon has just closed a successful series of meetings at this place. There was good interest and large crowds each evening. Four were baptized and many more are near the kingdom. The Saints here certainly appreciated Brother Higdon's visit, and were made to rejoice over the work here.

The district conference held at Arma, Kansas, was fine throughout. Two fine young men were ordained to the office of priest. On Saturday evening the Department of Women rendered an interesting and instructive program.

We feel encouraged to enter into the work and feel that much good will be accomplished. We are still keeping up the fireside visits.

Gift Subscriptions to the Church Papers

Let Us Send a Card to Your Friends

To all who request it, we will send an appropriate gift card to friends to whom you wish to send a new yearly subscription to Saints' Herald, Autumn Leaves, or Zion's Ensign as a Christmas present.

These cards will be of high quality, appropriate to the Christmas season, and will be mailed to reach the persons addressed just before Christmas.

Last year this offer was taken advantage of by many persons, and we are sure to the satisfaction of all who received such appropriate gifts.

Order at any time, and the cards will be held till later.

Programs Featured at Saint Joseph

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI, November 27.—As the people of the Saint Joseph First Branch were gathering for Sunday school on November 25 they were greeted at the door by beautiful strains of instrumental music, and upon entering discovered that the school once more rejoices in the possession of an orchestra, an organization they have greatly missed for some time and which is welcomed most enthusiastically.

There is a contest on in the Sunday school between the men and women to see which can obtain the largest number in attendance. This contest will continue the balance of the year. A penalty is attached to the loss of the game, though we are not able to say at present just what that penalty will be. The ranks are filling up noticeably of late.

The Sunday school observed Father and Son Day on November 18, and the men and boys put on a fine program that was very much enjoyed by all. On the second Sunday in December the women and girls will try to equal, if not outshine, them.

Two splendid sermons were delivered on the 18th. In the morning Bishop J. A. Koehler spoke on "Prophets and promises of God," and in the evening Brother O. Salisbury delivered a strong and convincing sermon on "Science and God." Both were delivered to good audiences. On the 24th Elder Milo Burnett was the speaker and the evening was given over to the choir which gave a delightful program for a couple of hours. The Saints of this branch are very proud of their choir, as they believe it is unrivaled in point of good music by any like organization in the city. Sister D. E. Scott, as chorister, labors faithfully and well in her calling. One feature of the evening's chorus was a selection by the girls' chorus under the direction of Sister Letha Burnett.

The Department of Recreation and Expression will give an oyster supper at the church on Thanksgiving evening. A collection will be taken to defray expenses.

The social service division of the Department of Women is preparing an entertainment to be presented Thursday evening, December 13, in the basement of the church.

Sister Carrie L. Best, of Seneca, Kansas, has been visiting numerous friends in this city for two weeks.

EDITH COCHRAN.

Opera House to Be Used for Lectures

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, November 20.—On November 18, W. H. Powell spoke on the subject, "As a man soweth so also shall he reap." R. T. Smith was the evening speaker, and there was good attendance at each service.

Oscar Case, the district president, and Elder Eli Bronson, missionary supervisor of the Spokane District, have secured the opera house at Sandpoint, Idaho, for the purpose of a series of lectures beginning November 19. This is the first time for a long period that a building has been secured for such services.

It is to be regretted by the members of this branch that Brother Carl Crum was taken from the Spokane District and sent to Montana. Brother Carl is one of our young wide-awake missionaries and undoubtedly does good work.

The Department of Recreation and Expression, with Sister Chloe Shaw at the head of the program committee, has been putting on some real live programs. They divided the men and women into groups and are having a contest for the purpose of stimulating rapid thinking. At the close of the argument, the losing side is supposed to entertain the winners.

Kansas City Stake News

Our 30th conference was held the 18th and 19th of November. All of the sessions from the Sunday school at 9.30 until the close of the business session on Monday evening were marked by the presence of God's Spirit. The weather was all that could be desired for November. Good-sized audiences attended. The speaker at 11 o'clock was President Elbert A. Smith, who chose as a basis for his remarks the 8th verse of the 119th section of Doctrine and Covenants. "All are called according to the gifts of God to them." His sermon was replete with kindly suggestions for better citizenship in the church of God, making it plain that the obligations of membership must be complied with. He said we are all laborers together with God. Some one must take the pains to feed the flock, but God gives the increase. All men are stewards, and surely each member should acknowledge his stewardship. Brother Smith's effort was well received and will make a lasting impression upon those who heard him. At the same hour a service was held in the interest of the children, in the church parlors. At 1.30 p. m. the elders' quorum meeting was held. At 2.30 p. m. the prayer meetings for young people and for the older ones were held simultaneously in adjoining auditoriums. The gift of prophecy was manifest in both meetings, as also one tongue and its interpretation. The trend of all utterances was very uplifting.

At 4.30 p. m. the regular priesthood meeting of the stake was held, addressed by the stake bishop on the matter of inventories, tithes, consecration, offerings, etc., which proved very interesting and educational. At the same hour Sister Ida M. Etzenhouser addressed the women on the responsibilities of mothers in the church along the right lines of study, in the main auditorium. The evening service was preceded by congregational singing conducted by Bernice Griffith, stake chorister. At 7.45 p. m. the speaker was our new stake missionary, Elder William I. Fligg. He used as a text Paul's admonition to Timothy, "Neglect not the gift that is within you." Brother Fligg's first effort in our midst was ably presented. Sister Elbert A. Smith and Edgar Harrington from Zion were visitors with us.

The business meeting held Monday at 7.45 p. m. was a refreshing service, as there was an absence of any disagreeable behavior either in presentation of matter for discussion or in discussing the various measures brought before the conference. The stake presidency's report was cheerful in tenor as they found conditions in the stake quite satisfactory. A recommendation from them presenting the names of Roy E. Browne and R. L. Bishop for ordination to office of high priest and stake counselor was ratified. Stake Bishop Blair reported cash on hand July 1 $556.82. Received since, $12,904.53. Expenditures were $11,159.01, leaving a balance September 30 of $2,302.44. This was confirmed by the auditor who is now A. H. Knowlton, general church auditor.

A recommendation from the stake high council that Henry Davis be ordained to the office of priest and Ira G. Clutter of elder was ordered. The appointments of church pastors were as follows: Mount Washington, R. L. Bishop; Bennington Heights, H. W. Goad; Northeast, C. A. Seibe; Second Kansas City, L. F. Ferguson; Malvern Hill, W. O. Hands; Argentine, Walter L. Gates; Armourdale, J. W. Gross; Grandview, C. D. Jellings and R. E. Browne; Chelsea Park, J. A. Harrington and A. W. Sears; Quindaro, John Tucker; Heathwood, A. W. Eskridge; Fourth Kansas City, J. O. Worden. J. Ray Lloyd was appointed superintendent of stake Sunday school and Religio. Sister Fern Lloyd was appointed supervisor of the Department of Women; W. S. Brown, recorder, secretary, historian, and reporter. Recorder reported a gain by letter of 91 and by baptism 58 and loss by transfer 40, and death, 10; net membership, 2,957; 11 marriages, 3 ordinations, 185 holding the priesthood. Reports were received from the elders, priests, teachers and deacons quorums, department of religious education, and Recreation and Expression. From the report of the Department of Women we glean this interesting item. There is at present an average attendance of 175 in 11 locals. Classes studying the following subjects: Bible research, normal training, sociology, child study, and current events. Classes are held at the local church rather than at Central Church as formerly.

From the reports of the stake president and superintendent of department of religious education and Recreation and Expression the Sunday schools have made splendid advancement during the past year. The Religio has been in the transition period and it has been sort of a nip-and-tuck game with some of the locals to keep alive. The day religious school, instituted by the school board of Kansas City, Kansas, holds out for us better prospects than we may now be able to vision or anticipate. When we think of our churches having an enrollment of as high as fifty-three pupils it is very gratifying.

The matter of finances in the stake which pertains to the moneys from the various departments which provides that all moneys thus collected shall pass through the stake bishop's hands which was adopted for trial at last conference, was permanently adopted. The various stake officers were sustained by vote. A resolution regulating the nomination of pastors providing that their nomination shall be placed before each group prior to the sitting of the stake conference so that if objection by the group may be had to any nomination it could be stated before the sitting of the conference, was denied by a substitute that the presidency work out a plan by next quarterly conference in harmony with the resolution passed by General Conference, to present to the body at our next conference.

Independence

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 3.—The Laurel Club will give a bazaar and cafeteria supper in the Dining Hall, Tuesday, December 11. Come in for lunch and spend the afternoon buying Christmas presents. Be served with ice cream, cake, pie a-la-mode, candy, and cocoa. Have the family meet you there for supper and so help the Laurels buy the new carpet for the aisles and rostrum of the Stone Church.

Special Thanksgiving services were held at the Stone Church at 10.30, Thursday morning with J. M. Terry as speaker. This was a union service of the Saint congregations in Independence.

The news of the Kueffer accident saddened many hearts in Independence Thanksgiving Day. Their automobile was struck on the railroad crossing of the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe Railway at Richter, Kansas, by a fast passenger train running from California to Kansas City. In the car were Brother and Sister Frederick W. Kueffer, Byron, their sixteen-year-old son, and Mr. Kueffer's aged mother. Mr. Kueffer and his mother were killed and their son died shortly after reaching the hospital. This leaves only Sister Kueffer of the family. She, too, was badly injured and every one is glad to hear that she is improving. The family left Independence at three o'clock Wednesday afternoon, planning to spend Thanksgiving with relatives near Richter. The accident occurred about seven o'clock that evening when they were but a few miles from their destination. Brother and Sister Kueffer moved to Independence about three years ago from Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. They attended at the Stone Church and Byron was a Scout member of one of the troops here. Funeral services were held at Alexandria, Kansas.

Services were in charge of C. I. Carpenter, sermon by Walter W. Smith.

Miss Hazel Koehler, daughter of Brother and Sister Fred Koehler also met with a car accident. She and Ray Moler were on their way to spend Thanksgiving in Holden, Missouri, Thursday morning, when their car, owing to the thin coating of snow on the roads, skidded. So did another car and the two collided. Miss Koehler's right hand was badly lacerated and Mr. Moler suffered cuts on the face so that some stitches were necessitated.

The Nonpariel Class gave the program at Religio Friday evening. There was a piano and organ duet by Robert Miller and Sister Tom Wilson; a reading by Sister Forties; and an octette composed of class members.

The Rhondda Welsh Singers met a large crowd at the Stone Church on Monday evening. The lights were off for about one half hour before the concert began and the program had to begin in the dark. However, light came immediately and the program was well rendered and thoroughly enjoyed. This program was put on under the auspices of the Independence Music Club. There are sixteen of the Rhondda Singers and their program consisted of solos, duets, trios, quartets, and choruses. The program was first arranged to be given at the Junior High School auditorium, but was changed because more seating capacity was necessary and also because the pipe organ was needed. After the concert a reception was held for the singers at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Watkins.

Apostle M. A. McConley and family will sail for Honolulu, December 6.

On Saturday evening the Latter Day Saint selected team met the One Hundred and Tenth Engineers of Kansas City in basket ball, at the Stone Church gymnasium. The Latter Day Saint boys won the game 66 to 14.

About 150 young people attended the mass meeting at the Stone Church last Sunday afternoon at four o'clock in the interest of a gymnasium fund. Three hundred and ninety dollars were pledged for immediate payment. A committee of twenty team captains were selected to canvass for the fund. Wallace N. Robinson has deposited $2,000 on condition that the young people of this place raise that amount. Local business men have offered an additional $2,000 on the same conditions. The team captains are organized with Rolland Flanders as manager and Francis Holm as secretary. The proposed gymnasium will cost between $15,000 and $20,000.

Officer and teacher conference of the Stone Church will be held December 11 at the Stone Church. The annual election of officers will also take place at that time.

Bishops J. F. Keir and I. A. Smith have been in Michigan for a few days. Bishop Keir returned to-day.

Apostle J. A. Gillen is holding special meetings in Omaha, Nebraska.

Mary Bishop died at the Independence Sanitarium December 1. She was born in 1849 and lived in Chicago most of her life. She came into the church in 1906, moved to the Holden Home in 1916. The funeral was from Carson's Undertaking Parlors, December 5. Burial in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer and wife have moved to Independence where they will make their home.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis will leave the city the latter part of the week, working his way west. He sails for the South Sea Islands, December 21.

President F. M. Smith was in Omaha over Sunday where he preached a radio sermon. The Saints of that city had charge of a radio program there on Sunday evening.

Mrs. Howard Harder and Mrs. S. A. Burgess were hostesses on November 13 at Mrs. Harder's home, 609 West Farmer Street, to the Mothers' Club. The next meeting will be the second Tuesday in December.

John A. Gardner had the misfortune to break his wrist Monday morning while cranking a Ford at the Herald Publishing House where he works.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards spent Thanksgiving in Lamoni with his sister, Miss Blanche Edwards. He will return to-night.

President Frederick M. Smith will speak at 11 o'clock, Sunday, December 9, at Walnut Park church.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer will speak at the Stone Church, 11 a. m., Sunday, December 9 and Apostle F. Henry Edwards will be the speaker at night.

Apostles Sail for Europe

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, November 30.—As Brother Paul M. Hanson and I are all ready to go on board the Samarina of the Cunard Line to-morrow noon I will take this opportunity to say good-by to the Saints of the United States and Canada. I have traveled twenty-four years in America, a missionary for the church, and have met many Saints and friends, which has made my work very pleasant indeed. It will be a new experience for me to be on a foreign mission but we hope to meet the Saints of the British Isles, Europe, and Palestine, and help to forward the work of Christ in those fields. We hope to return again in time for the April conference of 1925.

Mail sent to 19 Amhurst Park, Stamford Hill, London North 16, England, will reach us. Brother Hanson joins with me in saying farewell to Saints and friends till we meet again.

In gospel bonds,

J. F. CURTIS.

Last Winter Meeting of Union Branch Held

CLITHERALL, MINNESOTA, November 28.—The Union Branch spent an enjoyable day on November 4. The weather was warm and pleasant, feeling more like a moderate summer day than an autumn one. Another nice feature was the presence of George W. Day, of Bemidji, the district president, who arrived in Clitherall the day before. Others also came from a distance: the two Horne families, Nels Pierson and family, of Almora, the Kellers from Wadena, the Tuckers from Deer Creek, and Sister Bundy from Duluth.

Sister Bundy's visit was a complete surprise, as she left the branch late in the summer to live with her daughter, Sister Lottie Zuelsdorf, in Duluth. She spent several days with the Saints here before leaving to visit other relatives, after which she would return to her home.

A business meeting was held at the noon hour, November 4, at which Lester Whiting was unanimously reelected branch president; Abner Tucker and his son Frank were sustained as priests; Frank Tucker was elected treasurer; Alta Kimber, secretary; Sister Ross Whiting, chorister; and Sister Saffel, janitor.

Brother Day preached from the text, "Gather my saints together." The afternoon prayer service was strongly characterized by the spirit of peace and brotherly love and was thoroughly enjoyed.

Owing to the absence from home of the branch president the two following Sundays and to the scattered condition of the membership no services have been held since. So this may be the last gathering at the old historic spot of Clitherall until the roads open up in the spring.

A three-inch snowfall occurred on November 22, the first of the season, and on the last week of the month winter weather began in earnest.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Conference Notices

North Dakota, at Fargo, December 29 and 30. Thomas Leitch, president.

With Lock Four, Pennsylvania, Branch, December 15 and 16, the quarterly ministerial conference. First meeting will be Saturday at 7.30 p. m. Meetings all day Sunday. Our experiences at these conferences in the past should serve as an incentive for us to attend. All meetings will be open to everyone. J. A. Jaques, president, 1424 Alton Street, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Appointments of District Choristers

To Whom Concerned: This is official notification of the appointment, with the approval of the First Presidency, of the following as choristers of the respective districts noted:

H. A. Sprague, 805 East North Street, Bellingham, Washington, chorister for the Seattle and British Columbia District.

Mrs. Cora B. Hart, 1416 Harrison Street, Davenport, Iowa, chorister for the Eastern Iowa District.

Thomas B. Seaton, 5 Ross Street, Toronto, Ontario, chorister for the Toronto, Ontario, District.

H. E. Moler, 700 East Fourth Street, Holden, Missouri, chorister for the Clinton, Missouri, District.

Birdie Clarke, 809 Eighth Street, Sacramento, California, chorister for the Northern California District.

For these we urge the loyal and earnest support of all the musical forces of these districts.

ALBERT N. HOXIE, General Director.
ARTHUR H. MILLS, Secretary.

A Sick Brother in Helena, Montana

Brother Gilbert Rime is sick at a Government hospital in Helena, Montana. He is away from all relatives and friends and Sister Bundy, of Kempton, North Dakota, writes that he would appreciate seeing any elders or Saints who are living near and could call upon him.

Bishop's Agent Notices

To the Saints of the Spokane District; Greeting: Zion is the pure in heart. It is something more than a city. It is something more than a locality. Unless one is worthy, there is little to be gained in gathering to the city of God. "It shall not be a land of Zion unto you."—Doctrine and Covenants 106: 2.

Our faith must be in our heavenly Father and in his word; it requires also confidence in our brethren. Without these, Zion is not possible. In faith the people must first be prepared before Zion or a place of refuge is possible for the people of God.

It would seem that the time was very near at hand when the oppressed of the earth will seek refuge in Zion, and these questions are indeed vital throughout the church. Shall the Master's work be hindered to-day by our indifference, or shall we go forward earnestly to the work and problems resting upon us, seeking divine wisdom and direction?

We have to remember that all things should be prepared before us. It may be that the time is approaching when haste will be necessary, but we ought to avoid that if possible, and make all reasonable preparation, pay our tithing, and offerings, help to build up Zion, and render account of our stewardship as required by the law of God.

Counsel with those on whom rests the burden, especially the Bishopric, before making a move. Thus Zion may become beautiful and the people be given cause to rejoice.

Church Called Upon to Adopt the Stewardship Basis

The General Conference of October 13, 1923, was unanimous in accepting document from Presidency, Bishopric, and Twelve regarding stewardships. The entire membership was called upon to go on the stewardship basis by, first, filing inventory; second, paying tithing; third, paying surplus;

We are waiting to record your name. Now is a good time to cooperate.

Pastoral Notices

To the Western Colorado District; Greetings: Having been appointed to act as district president for the coming year over your district, I write you. I am new to the field and know nothing of the conditions. As I am wishing to arrange to take up my work, will some of those who are acquainted please write me at once? If there is a conference soon, inform me, as well as sending proper notice to the church papers. Hoping the good Spirit of the Master will help us in building up the church and district,
J. ARTHUR DAVIS.
MIAMI, OKLAHOMA, 324 B Street South West.

To the Officers and Saints of Southern Nebraska District; Greetings: You have read of the General Conference assignment of the writer to labor in your district; also, the published notice of the First Presidency of appointment to fill the unexpired term of district president, made necessary by resignation of Brother Higgins who was appointed to another field.

On account of unavoidable delay in making urgent repairs at home to make the family safe and comfortable for winter, I find it impossible to get into my field before the first week in December, after which I hope to serve continually until next General Conference.

Branches or scattered members wishing missionary meetings should address Elder E. E. Long, at Lamoni, Iowa. At his request, I expect to assist in such services as far as my own special work will permit. We should first create a fund for such special efforts and lay plans for proper publicity before sending for the missionary.

We had a praying conference and you have heard of the good results following. Let us all decide to have a praying year—not that we haven't been praying, but that our devotions will be oftener, more earnest, and more effective because faith and works will be in evidence. No true-blue Latter Day Saint can pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth," and then do nothing to help bring it about. God will not answer this prayer without our cooperation.

It would be right in line with this to double our Christmas offering and our tithing. The offering this year by General Conference vote goes to push the missionary work. It is the business of the church to warn the world. If you cannot go, send your dollars—or rather, the Lord's dollars. And do it with the feeling that your Christmas offering is consecrated to that great purpose.

It may mean less spent for purely selfish purposes, but that isn't hard when the heart is in the right place; "repression of unnecessary wants" becomes a reality.

Why not make that our program: A praying year; double our Christmas offering; and double our tithing. Do that and don't worry—all other things will be added, if necessary.

Please note that Sister Blanche I. Andrews, 1105 L Street, College View, Nebraska, is now your Bishop's agent. The amount of tithing per capita paid in your district during 1922-23 was $1.59. Are you satisfied with this record? Surely, if we doubled this it would not be missed by anybody.

Until I find suitable headquarters in the district, you may address me at Lamoni, Iowa. I shall be glad to be kept in touch with your every plan and effort towards the accomplishment of the work which the Lord says is committed to all.

GOMER R. WELLS, District President.

To the Saints of the Kewanee District; Greetings: Having been appointed president of the Kewanee District, I take this means of advising you of my plans.

I have been in the district since October 26, and since the district conference at Rock Island, in company with Brother E. A. Curtis (district missionary), have been making a tour of the district, intending to reach as many of the branches as possible before the holidays, by spending three or four days in a place.

After the holidays we would like to spend a longer time at each place, and will be ready for special series of meetings wherever such is desired. Will the branch presidents and scattered members please advise us as to the possibility of openings, and the most suitable time for us to come. We will no doubt be ready for a series of meetings soon after the holidays. My intention shall be to teach stewardship wherever the opportunity affords, and I stand ready at all times to assist any and all Saints to an understanding of this important doctrine. Get inventory and tithing report blanks from your branch solicitor, your district bishop's agent, or the Presiding Bishop, and be ready to start in right the first of the year.

Will branch presidents please note resolutions passed at the late district conference, as set forth in the conference minutes in SAINTS' HERALD of November 14, and strive to work to that end. I would also draw the attention of all to the article in SAINTS' HERALD for November 14 by Benjamin R. McGuire, on oblations at sacramental services.

Let our slogan be, Every man a steward, and a doubling of the tithes and offerings of the district this year. We are here to serve. Let us help you. Scattered members, let us know of your needs and whereabouts.

Let us cultivate the spirit of each for all and all for each, and thus move forward to Zion's redemption.

Mail addressed to 210 North Maple Avenue, Lamoni, Iowa; Savanna, Illinois, care of Bert Sartwell; or 926 North Vine Street, Kewanee, Illinois, will reach me.

Come, let us reason together, and go on unto perfection.

Your servant for Christ, E. R. DAVIS.

To the Saints of Central Nebraska; Greetings: Having been appointed to labor in your district, and this being a new field to me, I take this means of asking the cooperation of all the Saints and friends in the district. I am desirous of hearing from all as to the needs of missionary work in your locality. I shall try to assist you all I can to build up the work in this part of God's vineyard. I will greatly need your help that I may do all that is possible for me to do. My present address is Box 131, Meadow Grove, Nebraska. George Jenkins.

To the Officers, Saints, and Friends of the Southern California District; Greetings: Having been appointed to labor in your district for the conference term, I take this means to get in touch with all who desire to cooperate with us in getting the gospel before the people.

The work lying before us is very great. The district is large, and we are desirous of hearing from Saints or friends who would like to have meeting in their locality. Being unfamiliar with the district it will be of much help if we can hear from you.

Brother H. W. Savage will be associated with me in the work, and we will travel together as much as possible. We wish to cooperate with district and branch officers in holding services in your localities whenever desired. If there are any local elders or priests who would like to devote some time to missionary effort, if they will communicate with us we will be glad to use them as opportunity permits.

Let us go to with our might. Write me now; do not wait.

Yours in bonds, WILLIAM F. ANDERSON.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, 502 South Garnsey Street.

Conference Minutes

FREMONT.—At Tabor, Iowa, November 10 and 11. Conference convened at 10 a. m. with A. M. Chase, the district president, in charge. T. A. Hougas was selected secretary pro tem, with R. J. Dunsdon as assistant. Ministerial reports were read from A. M. Chase, B. S. Lambkin, T. A. Hougas, H. N. Pierce, N. L. Mortimore, C. M. Roberts, J. W. Dunagan, John Eitleman, C. W. Forney, Roy J. Dunsdon, and S. S. Clark. Branch reports showed: Hamburg, 22; Thurman, 80; Shenandoah, 100; and Tabor, 66. It was decided to hold a reunion in Fremont District in 1924, and committee of five, T. A. Hougas, Mark Leeka, N. L. Mortimore, Roy J. Dunsdon, and B. S. Lambkin, was chosen. The service at 2 p. m., Saturday, was in charge of A. M. Chase. Minutes of last conference were approved. Election of officers resulted in: A. M. Chase, president; T. A. Hougas, associate; C. W. Forney, secretary-treasurer; Sister A. M. Chase, Sunday school superintendent; Maggie Watkins, assistant superintendent; Gladys Barber, secretary; Sister T. A. Hougas, superintendent of Department of Recreation and Expression, with power to choose secretary; Mamie Miller, chorister, with A. M. Chase as assistant; Sister A. M. Chase, superintendent of Department of Women; and Estella Roberts, superintendent of Health Department. A. M. Chase, Mark Leeka, and T. A. Hougas were chosen on the annual budget committee. They reported at the evening service, allowing the missionary fund, $120; Sunday school Department, Department of Recreation and Expression, and Department of Women, $15 each. On Friday evening A. M. Chase gave an illustrated lecture on "Evidences of the truthfulness of the Bible." Sunday's program: Prayer and social services at 8.30 a. m.; Sunday school at 9.45; preaching at 11; priesthood meeting at 3 p. m. also a meeting of the Department of Women at that hour; a session of the Department of Recreation and Expression at 6.30; song service at 7.30; preaching at 8. Sermons were had from Charles Putnam, R. E. Pratt, and A. M. Chase. Place of next conference is at Glenwood, Iowa, time left to the presidency.

The Need for Social Reform and the Way to Effect It

Radio sermon of President Frederick M. Smith from the Independence Studio, December 9, 1923.

When the great World War with all its horrors suddenly broke upon the world, it was looked upon by some as a breakdown of civilization and a reversion to a more primitive condition, and some there were who feared that the progress toward a more primitive form would be augmented rather than checked. And the question naturally arose, Is the reversion only temporary or is it permanent? And such question becomes of great importance in a social way, not only to the people of this country but to the peoples of the entire world; for to-day, so far as the after-effects of the war are concerned, there is scarcely a country or a race on the face of the globe which is not directly or indirectly affected by the results of the war. Let us hope at the same time that the good results, if good there has been from the great war, may soon come into view and be greatly augmented by the determination of the people.

Since the close of the war, conditions have arisen and continued which have given rise to the inclination in many quarters to take a rather careful inventory of the moral situation. The results of the inventory, it must be confessed, are not at all flattering. Out of it has grown the conviction that a spiritual renaissance is due, a reawakening of the forces which make for higher intellectuality and higher culture and higher spirituality. But the question arises, Will it arrive, and when will that renaissance come? Will it come spontaneously or must there be a conscious social effort? Must there needs be developed what Doctor Ward, the eminent sociologist, terms a social telesis which will be conscious of the forces existing to-day which make for the conditions of to-morrow, and being conscious of these forces there shall be developed a distinct effort to control and direct them so that there shall be brought about as the result of the operation of these forces the conditions of to-morrow we desire.

All reform of whatever character must be preceded by a careful analysis of conditions, and social reform is no exception to this rule. What, then, are some of the signs pointing clearly to needed reform of social conditions to-day, for we are firmly convinced that there is no general condition likely to exist but what will be made apparent and clear by the signs which the conditions themselves point to if we can properly read the signs as they are displayed.

Signs of the Times

In attempting to analyze them and briefly set out some of the signs which point to a need for social reform to-day, I shall first point to the decrease in moral integrity, and it seems to me that this decrease is apparent in several directions and in several places. Among them we might state that it is apparent in business where confidence is weakening to the point of affecting credit, for we know that in industry to-day business is transacted very largely by credit, in fact business is to-day very largely based on the question of credit, and credit has its foundation in confidence. And yet everyone knows that confidence has had a marked decrease because of conditions that exist to-day. It is also apparent, it seems to me, in the prostitution of public trust and office, the funds of which have been diverted or used for the promotion of self-serving ends rather than for the discharge of duty to the public and response to the demands of the office in a large and social way. It is apparent in the squandering of public funds and in the grafting on public credit which are carried on to such a large and frequent extent that news of the same in our daily papers has become almost commonplace.

But most threatening of all, so far as our social conditions are concerned and that which should awaken the citizens of this country and the entire world to the seriousness of conditions which exist, indicating the danger which confronts us, is the weakened position of the home due to the generally lowered moral tone. This has resulted perhaps from those forces which have affected the marriage bond, but be that as it may we do know that there is a weakening of the marriage bond, that marriages are resulting in far too many instances in a dissolution, and there has followed as an inevitable result a lowering of the value of home life to children and the effect has been tremendous in many quarters. Our own juvenile courts are crowded with the result of the misfits which have come from homes that have been already seriously affected by this condition that we have spoken of.

As a by-question to the subject to-night it might be well right here to inject a question which we shall not attempt to elucidate, but we cannot refrain from asking, How will the emancipation of woman which is now going on, which has received an impetus and a forward movement which cannot be stopped, affect this factor, that of the weakening home? Will the home become more stable as the result of the larger freedom and activity of women or will it become less so? I leave it to my listeners to answer.

What Do Conditions Mean?

Let us ask, to get back to the subject, what is the meaning of all this? What is likely to happen if the social conditions are not improved? What is the meaning of all this? let me repeat. The answer to any social question is not simple, as a rule, and the question of a complete solution to the problem requires an equation into which enters variable factors with large coefficients. But always in the attempted answer to social questions there are some outstanding factors, and in this particular case it seems to me that there is an answer which can be given because of the prominence of the factor entering into this particular equation.

The answer to me seems to be the decay of religion as a social dynamic and the lessening influence of the church as a social factor, a factor in everyday affairs. It seems to me, too, that we cannot hold the church itself blameless for the conditions as they exist, because it as an institution has withdrawn or permitted itself to be driven from everyday affairs to an extent which has threatened its position as a social power and a power for good. It has been driven from everyday affairs to occupy or to specialize in Sunday doings exclusively, and it must be further admitted that even as a Sunday factor it is occupying to a lessening degree the position that it should.

Can this charge that we have brought be cited as a failure of Christianity as some are prone to charge? Can it be that Christianity after the trial of some nineteen centuries must be marked as a failing social factor? In attempting to answer this we say, If Christianity has had a fair trial, and if there has been a sincere effort to make application of it as a social factor, then we must admit it has failed. But if in later times Christianity has become but a lip service and has become formal rather than whole-souled and spiritual, then we may say, No. And from my observation of the conditions generally, politically, socially, and industrially, and in my attempt to evaluate Christianity as the factor in modern civilization, I am strongly inclined to a negative answer, for the following reasons: First, the fundamental law or principle or the first great commandment has been given by the author of Christianity as love of God, but he has added to this as being an ever-present and essential factor the love of neighbor. And this fundamental law or commandment or principle has had no general application, and especially in business is rare and generally absent. And this, it might be said, is largely a day of so-called "business." "Business" has been emphasized, "business" has been pushed to the fore until "business" would even run the church. Business or industry has been made the basis for modern society, for modern civilization, for modern national life; and perhaps rightly so, if by that it is understood that production of wealth, or the creation of goods, or the conserving of common weal should be expected from every person. But modern business or industry as at present organized is based largely, if not entirely, on the plea to self-serving interests, and "business" has saturated society and is even invading the church; and when church men have yielded to its insidious approaches the church has lost its prestige and influence as a moral factor. And who will presume to deny that to-day the spirit of so-called "business" has not entered church circles and who will attempt to deny that church men and church leaders have yielded to its influence, and who will deny further that the church as a social institution has suffered as a consequence?

Basis of Christianity Is Love

As the industrial and social dynamic has more and more become self-serving interest, self-love, self-aggrandizing, it has become less and less Christian, for the very basis, the very foundation of Christianity is love—love of God and love of neighbor.

What then is the remedy? If we are correct in assigning as the cause of our present condition and our present social decay the lack of Christianity, obviously then the answer must be to introduce Christianity into our society, or, let me say, to Christianize our society by saturating it with the principle and the true spirit of the Christian religion. To do so thoroughly, first, we must find what is fundamental in our society to-day, or what is the foundation on which our social structure is built, and then, having found it, make it Christian in character. It

The Spirit of Giving

Do that Christmas shopping early, not only to avoid the rush but to have time to do a little thinking with it. Millions of dollars are spent every year on useless, vain, and foolish Christmas presents, simply because money and not thought bought them.

To some people Christmas is a burden because it means giving a lot of presents to a lot of people who may give presents to them. Anything is a burden where there is no love. Work is a burden unless you love it; even living is tiresome unless there is love in it. So, giving is a burden unless love goes with it. The Lord loves a cheerful giver, but that does not say much for the one who gives but gives grudgingly. But why give at Christmas at all?

Giving has a twofold effect. The one receiving is supposed to be made happy because his material wealth has been increased. The giver is also made happy, for it is a joy to him to make his brother happy. Which is the greater happiness? The happiness which is based upon the material or the happiness that is spiritual? The one is temporary; the other is lasting. The spiritual, then, is the happiness to be desired. We give, that we may make ourselves happy. Is that not selfish? What if it is! The sum total of happiness in the world is the end to be desired, and happiness added to ourselves which does not injure others but rather makes others happy also is desirable.

But the happiness that apparently comes from giving does not come from that at all. Giving is merely the manifestation of something deeper, which is love. It is not possible to love without manifesting that love in action. Love cannot bring happiness until it is made to act. God so loved the world that he gave his only Son. If we so love a brother, giving at Christmas is but one way of expressing that love. Giving without love does not bring happiness. It is hypocritical.

To the one who receives, the material gain is pleasing, but pleasure is not happiness. The real happiness comes from the knowledge that the giver loves as well as gives. The gift is but a medium through which love operates. That medium may as well be a smile or a kind word. But if it is a gift, the gift itself should also carry with it pleasure, momentary as it may be. A gift, to be pleasurable, must satisfy some want. If you do not want it, there can be no pleasure. So gifts should satisfy wants or needs, which are the same thing. But do the millions of dollars spent on Christmas presents represent that amount of needs satisfied? How can they, when last-minute shopping shows there is no thought put upon the purchase? What will I buy her for Christmas? Why, something she wants or needs.

Giving symbolizes the love of God in the hearts of men. We give at Christmas because the greatest gift of God to man was his Son. Christmas commemorates this occasion. We preserve its memory by reproducing in ourselves the emotion called love, and this is done by giving.

Valuable Lessons Reprinted

In response to an increasing demand coming from various quarters of the church, the Department of Recreation and Expression is reprinting a series of lessons on the Book of Mormon. These lessons were prepared by Louise Palfrey Sheldon and were printed in the Senior Religio Quarterly during the years 1908, 1909, and 1910. The present reprint will begin with Nephite history.

This series of lessons may be used as a substitute for the regular quarterly if desired. They may be used in Sunday school as well as Religio or for individual study. Orders for the first series of twelve lessons should be sent to the Herald Publishing House at once, so that the lessons may be received in time for study during the first quarter of 1924. These quarterlies may be secured at ten cents each.

As there will be only twelve lessons in each number of the reprint, there will be left to the discretion of each local the use of the thirteenth lesson period. We suggest that this period be devoted to review, social or recreational programs, or a parliamentary drill as determined by each local.

The continuation of this policy of reprinting this series of lessons will be in part contingent upon the response which we receive in the way of orders from our church people. We trust therefore that our readers will call this matter to the attention of others who may be interested with a view to encouraging study along this most important line.

It should be understood that this reprint does not take the place of the regular Senior Religio Quarterly, which will be printed as usual. The lessons for the first six months in the regular quarterly will deal with the history of the development of the stewardship idea in our church. This is one of the most valuable series of lessons ever prepared, and we trust that they will be of interest to our church people.

F. M. McDOWELL, for the Departments.

Help me, dear Lord, to be indeed thy friend
To guard thy treasures to the very end,
To watch by day, by night thy vigil keep—
To feed thy lambs and also feed thy sheep.

What Next?

Sermon by President Floyd M. McDowell, at the close of the Young People's Convention at Lamoni, Iowa, June 17, 1923.

I am going to run the risk of disappointing you in asking you to listen to just a brotherly talk particularly to those who are going to different parts of this country to smaller branches inspired with the wonderful vision that has come to you during the convention. That is the only thing I can think of doing, just talk it over with you a little, and strive, if we may, to answer the question, What next?

A little incident from the life of Christ comes to my mind just now. You will find it in the second chapter of Luke:

And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him. Now his parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the pass-over. And when he was twelve years old, they went up to Jerusalem after the custom of the feast. And when they had fulfilled the days, as they returned, the child Jesus tarried behind in Jerusalem; and Joseph and his mother knew not of it. But they, supposing him to have been in the company, went a day's journey; and they sought him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance. And when they found him not, they turned back again to Jerusalem, seeking him. And it came to pass, that after three days they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions. And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers. And when they saw him, they were amazed: and his mother said unto him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing. And he said unto them, How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?—Luke 2: 40-50.

It seems to me that I might answer the question, What next? by saying, Know ye not from this hour that you must be about your Father's business? I think it was Brother Elbert the other day who interpreted our Father's business very nicely in the statement, "Let us make man in our own image."

The Call of the Master

The call then to-night at the close of this convention is, "Let us go about our Father's business from this hour forth." The task before us is one of making men in the image of God. The goal as has been outlined before us is perfect manhood and a perfect society. As was so nicely said this morning, "It is perfect men and women in a perfect social order with perfect social relationships, beautiful lives, beautiful homes, beautiful communities."

It seems to me we may, then, answer the question,

What next? in this way, that we accept the challenge and go out from this convention willing to say that from this hour forth, as far as we are concerned individually, we shall be about our Father's business. We shall be found from this hour forth in the task of making better men and women. We shall be found in the task of building a better society, a perfect society, a beautiful society. We shall be found in the task of making the world about us a better place in which to live. We shall be found in the task, if you please, of building Zion with all our heart, might, mind, and strength. We shall be found enlisted as brothers of Christ indeed, not calling upon him in vain, but saying that we shall from this time be indeed partners with God and with Christ in building this better world that is to be.

What next? The acceptance of the call of the Master. We have before us the chance to do that which the world has never yet done, and that is to put Christianity to a serious test. Yes, I mean it. We live two thousand years after the time of Christ, and never yet has Christianity been put to a serious test. Never yet have we developed a group of men and women who are willing to take Christ at his word and enlist with him in a task of making the more abundant life possible for mankind.

The Convention

It was at least a small vision of this task that encouraged us in calling this convention of young people, because it seemed to us that there must be indeed a welding of the interests of the young people and the interests of this church if this church was to function as God intended it should function in bringing about the goal that has been pictured for us so many times during this convention. I say it seemed to us that in some way we must amalgamate the interests of the young people and the interests of the church as an organization if we were ever to realize a kingdom of God on earth, a Zion in which men should live together in peace and harmony with their fellows.

It might be of interest to review some of the purposes of this convention as we suggested them in the call to you. We said we wanted to cement the interests of these two, the young people and the organization. We said to the young people, the church needs you. It needs your youthful vigor to carry out its mighty program. It needs your idealism lest it become a mere machine. It needs your vision lest it cease to grow. It needs your criticism lest it become self-satisfied. Without youthful people an institution tends to become unprogressive, mechanical, and content with the deeds of the past. Youth demands growth, progress, accomplishment. It looks towards the future more than the past. Our church must have your allegiance. Will you give it willingly and whole-heartedly?

The Value of Youth

In every age of history this fact has been demonstrated that we would make our great institutions mechanical and juiceless, and meaningless and formal. It seems to me that the great God of heaven must have designed youth, knowing the characteristics of human nature to make everything mechanical. In youth we find the tendency to criticize, we find the tendency to idealize, we find the tendency to vision the future, we find the tendency to demand results, we find the tendency to demand growth. A growing institution needs each generation a fresh supply of youthful vigor and youthful idealism.

Without youth there is no to-morrow. Without youth there can be no to-morrow; there can be no progress; there can be no advancement. Without youth we tend to die. We will die. The only way that the achievement of the past can be passed down to the future is through youth. Youth means the ability to receive this social heritage. It also means the ability to pass on that social heritage to others.

As a church there has been a tendency, it seems to me, for us to rest on our oars. Already the mighty church in Utah is living in the past. In a few short years those people will be worshipers of the past only. They have turned their eyes backward. There is a tendency in our church it seems to me to think that we are the church of Christ because of the deeds of the past, to think that we are the church of Christ because of its doctrine, because of its ceremonies. The only way that we can escape from such a danger is to inculcate into our veins a great supply of the blood of youth. The only way we shall be saved from mechanicalism, from machinery, from creeds, from formalism is that we shall have the critical, vigorous spirit of youth with each succeeding generation. As was suggested this morning, our hope as a church to increase our numbers also depends upon us saving each succeeding generation to the church. To do otherwise, to depend upon the conversions altogether, is to play a losing game, is to try to drain the lake with the inlet still open. We are playing a losing game save as an institution we keep our youth in ever-increasing numbers. This, then, should be the goal of this institution, that we must make an effort to find our youth and get them to understand the gospel, to tie them to the church, to get them interested in the church, and to see that from this hour forth they are willing to give their all that the mighty program of this church shall be successful.

Why We Need the Church

On the other hand we said to the youth, You need the church. You need the wonderful ideals of a new social order which this church furnishes, a program which in my opinion we are a long way yet from visioning in its fullest ideals. I am confident that many of the things that do now exist in our church would not exist did the young and old together once get a little clearer vision of the social goal before us. I think our young people should go home feeling that nowhere, in no organization in any land, in no institution is there offered to them such a program as this church offers.

The ideals that have been pictured to you are the ideals of Christ. They are the ideals that men have been groping for in all ages of mankind. They are the ideals that find expression from the lips and pens of the best writers of to-day. All of them are groping for these ideals, and to-night, my young people, this church holds those ideals out to you and says you can have them for the asking. As young people you need the organization of the church as a means of realizing on the ideals. That organization that Christ left for us, that plan whereby men might be brought to a more abundant life, that is the plan, the organization, the institution, which this church needs to-day as a means of realizing those ideals.

You must have some means of harnessing your youthful vigor, making sure that it will be used for the betterment of humanity. The church can furnish you the opportunity to harness your vigor, your talent, your power. Here is the chance. Here is the organization that will take the best you can bring to it in wealth, in power, in talent, in ability. It says to you, my dear young people, there is no need of your discounting your ability, your ambition, your talent. It says, "Bring the best you have to offer. Bring all the vigor and power and training and talent and might and muscle. Bring it all, and here is your chance to put it to constructive work in the interests of humanity.

Youth needs the guidance of the church in its slippery paths, because not only does youth mean opportunity; it means danger. The long period of infancy means that mankind has a chance that he can rise to heights equal to the Son of man himself, or he can fall to depths lower than the beasts of the field. But youth means that you can, if you will, hang yourself with your own rope. But if you will make the proper use of that youth, it will make you stand a full man in Christ Jesus. The church is an agency that offers not only direction to your energies but guidance, so that in the slippery paths of youth you shall be able to meet the problems as you confront them. You shall be able to pass through the woods of doubt and uncertainty and question.

You shall be able to go in and out and find pasture. And in and through it all, you will find an organization which shall protect and guide and lead you so that all of that new-found energy shall find expression in something worth while. You need to be pointed to something with a more abundant life as its goal. You need opportunity for cooperative service, and the church offers you that opportunity in its Zionitic program. Youth unguided, unharnessed, may destroy itself and the social order. The church insures stability and at the same time offers you a chance to express yourself and your personality in a cooperative, progressive way. The worth-while achievements of the world's history have come as the result of definite purposes and ideals. The call of to-day is that the Christian youth catch the vision of the Master of men and the ideal thereof to the end that righteousness shall triumph over sin and that this world shall be a better place in which to live.

Such was the call and such was the sincere feeling upon our part that some way the salvation of our church depended upon getting a fresh supply of our youth and that the salvation of our youth depended upon getting a new vision of what this church meant to them and to the world.

We stand now at the close of the convention. Whether we have accomplished any of these aims may be for you to say. Perhaps you have already said it in your heart.

If the leaders of our church who have been here, if the older ones of our church who have been here with us, have caught the real significance of youth, have been inspired by this youthful vigor, have now a greater determination than ever before to go on, do now feel more fully than before that the church will triumph, we will have gained a part of what we have in mind. If you young people have sensed the meaning and mission of this church as you never have before, you have at least imbibed the vision we had before this convention started.

Two Dangers

I want to pause here long enough to suggest two things in the way of brotherly advice. It seems to me there are at least two outstanding dangers before us in this movement of the young people of the church that gives every evidence of being started at this convention. I want to warn the young people. I want to sound this very serious note of warning. In the first place I ask you not to forget the work of those who have gone before. Do not allow yourself for one moment to interpret this movement as casting any reflection upon those who have given their all that we may enjoy what we enjoy now. Far be it from me to cast any such reflection when I think that out there on the sunny slopes of California tonight my mother and father are resting, resting because they must rest after forty years of sacrifice and devotion to this church. Far be it from me to say one word against that sacrifice.

I wish I could speak to old and young alike to-night. It seems to me that the thing we are trying to do is to pay the highest tribute to the older people that we could possibly pay to them. That is, we are trying to carry on their work. We are picking up the oars that they must lay down and are trying to say this boat shall not drift back down the stream, but shall go on and on. I do not know how you feel about your fathers and mothers, but I am conscious of the fact that my mother and my father are praying for me at this hour. It seems to me that the most I could do to pay them back for the years of sacrifice and devotion they have given to the church is to bring to them the consciousness that I am trying to carry on the work they have been doing. I cannot believe that that mother would prefer to have me come to her home to-night and leave a check for a thousand dollars. I cannot believe that it would compare for a moment with the satisfaction she finds in her heart to-night in knowing what I am trying to do. I cannot believe that you older ones want us younger people to pin wreaths on your tombs and forget the things you taught. I cannot believe but what you, in your serious moments, want us to do what we are trying to do. The young people's movement must be considered in the light of paying the highest tribute that we can pay to those that have labored before us. Young people, do not be caught for one moment casting reflections upon those who are older than you.

The second danger that I want to give a word of warning about, and I want you young people to get it, is this: Do not get the idea that the young people's movement is an attempt to get the church to be an entertaining society for you, or that all the machinery of the church is to be put into operation just to furnish you a good time. For every one thing that the young people's movement is going to give to you young people, there are nine things that you will have to give. I warn you, that you cannot kill this in any better way than to leave this convention imbued with the idea that from this hour forth all you have to do is to receive and be entertained.

What Next?

What next? I know many of you still are hungering for an answer to that question. I know many of you have been enthused as you never have been enthused before with this convention, and you feel right now as if you could do anything to accomplish the results that have been pictured before you, and yet perhaps you find it in your heart to say, "Nothing very definite has been given us to do yet. No very definite program has been given us. Shall we go home without some definite suggestions or something that we can do?" That is a serious question. Throughout the church there are many who are saying, Why don't they do something? Why don't they give us a program? Why don't they redeem Zion? Always waiting for the other fellow! I wonder if I could suggest in these last few moments to-night a few things that you young people can do. I shall be very much surprised, in fact I would be delighted, if after I have said all these things you young people could rise up in a body and say, "We have done all these." If that is true, I believe I would have to turn to President Smith and Bishop McGuire and say, These young people have done all they can do until we prepare a program for them.

I have here a few definite things that it seems to me you can do when you leave this convention. First, it seems to me you can become really converted. You can, if you have not already, come to the place where you can say you are "sold" to the gospel plan. You can cease to do evil and learn to do well. You can take a right-about-face in your philosophy of life.

The other day when President Smith asked how many were ready to go on a stewardship basis, only about half raised their hands. I am wondering, after all, when it comes to the real test how many of us are really converted to the gospel plan, including the Zionian plan? I say there is something here that we may do. Let us ask ourselves, Am I really converted?

You can make every effort to find the talent that God has loaned you. Perhaps you do not like this definite thing. Perhaps you wanted me to tell you some easy task. I am saying you are not ready to come to the presiding officers of this church and say, "Why don't you do something?" as long as this remains undone. I am asking you to do all in your power with the talents with which God has endowed you.

Again you are not ready to come to us and condemn us if you have not trained that talent or are not now making every effort to train the talent that God has given you. As we said the other day, to be untrained is to be unchristian; to be untrained is always to be the seed and not the flower, the acorn and not the oak, the promise instead of an actuality. I say again that you can go home and make every effort to train yourself to the utmost, go to the top in your chosen profession. As I understand it, the church says to you, Go to the top in your field. Be second to none in your profession. Train your talent to the utmost. There is the call. Is that something definite for you to do?

All over this land of ours there are hundreds of young people, hundreds of them in our church, who are not in educational institutions. I made a statement the other day, and I repeat it to-night: Show me a normal young man or young woman, normal in body and mind, and I will show you a young man or young woman who can land in a college town and go through that college, even if when they land there they do not have a penny in their pockets. The fact that our institution does not have five times the number that it has now is evidence to me of the fact that a great number of our young people still have to be awakened to the call of God to them to train the talent that God has loaned them. I haven't time to-night to attack the serious problems we have before us—the surveys that must be made, the institutions, hospitals, sanitariums, and schools that must be builded, if not by you then by a generation who are willing to answer the call of God and train themselves to build those buildings and institutions and to solve those problems.

Could I send you young people away thinking of an actual Zion of brick and mortar, of schools and factories and homes, then I could send you away saying that you must find your talent. It is fine to dream of an ethereal Zion up there with jeweled gates where we will all play harps, but that is not going to help us very much when we need soil surveys here. We need men and women with brawn and brain power and consecration to solve these problems.

You can put that talent to work at a task of creative workmanship, if not in this church then in your community. How many of our young people have been inclined to do this? How many have said, Now I have trained my talent; if the church does not come right out and get me immediately I am going to quit. When you have trained your talent in a given field, it may be that the majority of the church have not come to appreciate the importance of that field. It is going to be a part of your duty to help convert the church to the need of that field and part of your work to work your way into our social order. So you have got to work with us in getting the church to a place where it will need your talents, and then if the church is not ready for this it certainly is not your fault. But it is a part of your duty to help get the church ready for the sort of thing you can give. You can get yourself to a place where you can say, "Lord, here am I; use me."

Some expressed in the testimony meeting that they were not ready. All right; it is a part of your task to help them see the right. You can be working at this task wherever you are. You can do it first by living in close touch with God; secondly, by doing something for your community and branch in a creative, serviceable way. You must get yourself in close touch with the divine, because no matter how much you train, no matter how many degrees you have had tacked to your name, you cannot help us build Zion save it shall be that you keep in close touch with God.

You can comply with the financial law as it has been outlined in your hearing. I am told that a number of young people understand this law as they never have before, and I say, Thank God. To my way of thinking there is absolutely not one single reason so far as the church organization is concerned or the interpretation of our financial law is concerned why anyone within the sound of my voice to-night need fail longer in going on the stewardship basis as an individual. Bishop Carmichael and others outlined it clearly for us. First, a conversion to our spiritual ideals; secondly, filing an inventory; thirdly, paying tithing; fourthly, paying surplus; fifthly, making offerings—and thereafter giving an account of stewardship annually. I say without fear of successful contradiction, there is no reason why anyone need longer delay entering upon the stewardship plan. The law is perfectly clear and, if I understand it correctly, you don't need to live in Zion to go on that basis.

Is there something that you can do when you go from this convention? To go on the stewardship basis means to do nothing but what you have been expecting your missionaries to do for ninety years. You can let your light shine as an example, the embodiment of the gospel of Christ. You can tell your neighbor of the gospel. You can be loyal in your home, in your branch, in your community, and of all the things the church needs, it needs that sort of thing now.

You can work for community uplift in your community. You can put your religion into daily practice by uplifting the men around you. You can vote the way you believe and help clean up that town and community. You can become champions of the better things in life—champions of life, a great brotherhood of man, a life which makes it possible for men to live together through the hardships and pleasures, storms and sunshine. You can become champions of faith—a faith which means a willingness to take some risk for a cause.

A Challenge to the Church

Young people, yours is the chance to put Christianity to a serious trial. Will you accept the challenge? Heretofore Christianity has been shoved off into the corner. Never has it been given a serious trial. Yours is the task, using as the machinery Christ's own organization, using as the goal Christ's own vision to us to-day. Yours is the task of converting this world to Christianity. Yours is the task of doing that new thing, that different thing from what the world is doing to-day, putting Christianity to a serious trial.

Is there anything we can do when we go home? Suppose we could come back next fall one hundred per cent strong and say, as did the rich man of old, "All these things have I done." What a wonderful church we would have! What a wonderful organization!

What next? Move forward. Unity and loyalty represent the best things in life. Living together, sharing with each other in the problems of life, working together as Christian brothers. What next? Comply with our financial law as it is now clearly taught us. What next? Train our talent to the utmost and give it unreservedly. The call of America, the call of the world, to say nothing about the call of the church, is for a new type of philosophy for young men and young women. What next? Let us form a partnership with God and Christ and enlist this fellowship in the task of making this world a better place in which to live, in bringing about perfect manhood and womanhood, perfect homes, perfect schools, perfect society, and finally Zion, the kingdom of God on earth.

Let us catch the spirit of the poem:

Meseems it renders God great joy
To see hands strive as his creatively.
If it be true that he for us hath need,
Then are we the sons of God indeed.

That is the goal. Shall we not from this hour go forth with this challenge? If we can catch a part of this vision we shall have been paid for our efforts in coming to this convention.

May I express in closing my sincere appreciation for the cooperation and help, for the spirit which you have borne in the discouragements and inconveniences of the convention, for the beautiful lives which you have unfolded before me in the prayer services and classrooms? I think a great deal of flowers and admire them greatly, but never was there anything more beautiful than young men and young women under the influence of the Spirit of God. I have seen your lives unfold, and each unfolding has paid me one hundred times over for any effort I have made for this convention. My life has been enlarged and made happy by the beautiful lives I have met here. I shall go on trying, knowing that all over this broad land young men and young women are holding out their hands to me, saying, Come, let us go together.

Criticism of Educational Methods

By S. A. Burgess

The criticism of educational methods and of our school system is one of the interesting developments of recent years. In England since 1914, the whole school system has been brought into question and a reformation attempted. Recently there has been a decline of interest and effort because of financial stringency and because of a failure on the part of many to appreciate that no other money is so well spent as that which prepares us the better to live and to serve, and that this is true, no matter upon what ideal we build our life. If our ideal is that of service, then it is, indeed, essential to our best service; if our ideal is selfishness, what can I get out of it for myself, it has been amply demonstrated that an adequate education increases a man's earning ability far beyond the cost and loss of time and money. There is scarcely an investment that the state can make or that society can make that pays equally good dividends.

Changes in Schools

In this country, the schools are undergoing a critical analysis from the kindergarten up. It is much easier, however, to criticize than it is to offer a solution; it is much easier to offer a solution than it is to carry it into effect and make of it a substantial contribution to our social development.

In the kindergarten, we are coming to see more clearly, as we follow the fundamental principles of studying the child, that the geometrical forms previously utilized are not ideal instruments of instruction, for the concepts of children of young years follow rather the complexities of life, and the simple geometric forms are ideas later attained. In fact, a critical examination proves this to be true in most of our life, that simple forms are later developed and are gained by methods of mature thought rather than from observation of life. The kindergarten aim is to secure play material and work material which will really assist the processes of development in the child.

Then this play method should be extended further into the school work and not be confined to the kindergarten alone. This is a profound study upon which it seems, at times, we have only entered the threshold, the study of the child and his development to manhood, and the appreciation of the principles leading to the process of real unfolding in education.

The difficulties of holding back a child to a common level and making of school work a service of years has been felt in times past in the public schools. But the simple device of jumping grades which leaves considerable gaps in the education of the child raises another difficulty, which cannot be met in an ideal way, unless to each child there be given an individual instructor. It is met to-day in part by special schools or classes for backward pupils. This difficulty has not yet been amply met in the high school work, for, with few exceptions, attendance at a four-year high school is required and that four years be devoted to the course.

Views of Educators

It is interesting to note how much of the criticism of underlying educational concepts is advanced by educators themselves. It is probable that most of that which is being written to-day has originated within educational circles, in a sincere desire to secure better results for childhood and society as a whole and to make the school work more effective.

In World's Work there appeared a very interesting article by William McAndrew, "The belated revolution in the public schools." He states that in business, success depends upon continued progress and the presentation of seasonable goods. The purpose of business is clearly the making of profits and getting and keeping the good will of customers. But what is the real purpose of the public school business? There are outward forms, as, having a thousand children stand and pledge allegiance to the Republic and then within twenty-four hours 193 panes of glass broken by boys who attack their own school-house, the property of that Republic.

It is, indeed, a difficult problem to prevent school methods from becoming mechanized so that revolt continues without regard to results. The result is that the teacher falls in a groove, and the revolution in 1776 is somewhat late in meeting the public schools.

The men who founded the Republic said that the schools were "to supply men to serve the public" (Franklin); "to enlighten public opinion" (Washington); "to give the knowledge useful in the practice of the moral duties of a man and citizen" (Adams); "to prepare a people who mean to be their own governors" (Madison); but the effort made by Horace Mann and others to revolutionize the schools to correspond to the revolution of the Prussian national system, was a clear-cut statement and answer, which sought the unfolding of every power of the soul. It was, in fact, a return to Plato, the harmonious development of all the faculties.

Purposeless Education

Within the past twenty years, educators have repeatedly called attention to the fact that the American schools are drifting without purpose. A questionnaire showed only a small number that had a real educational ideal, and yet even for them it probably was true that education was able to define its aims in one direction but carried on, at the same time, old forms leading in another direction.

The American school system has not been American. The revolution proclaimed equally the surrender of caste and individual distinction and substituted union, community, and general welfare, but the imported educational systems were conducted for inequality and personal distinction for the better born. A scholar was a gentleman, not a citizen; learning gave superiority. The revolution abolished titles, and the ermine, the star, and the garter. Education has put its affection on titles: A. B., LL. D., "professor"; it loves robes, hoods with scarlet, millinery, and tassels. Those high priests made broad their phylacteries, loved the chief seats, and to be called Rabbi, Master.

They fed the selfish instinct, "Study that you may excel others," "Knowledge is power," "Ad astra per aspera," "Excelsior," "Fax mentis, incendium gloriae."

But we may diverge a little and raise the question whether these motives are all selfish. Are they not rather the declaration of the attitude of youth? An effort is being made to make our schools more responsive to present-day needs.

Of late, current events have been introduced in history classes with the result there is a method of magazine study being introduced. But again methods have ossified the original purpose. If we are not careful, magazine study will become an object, not a means. What we want is Americanism and a recognition and meeting of the problems of to-day.

The Purpose of Education

Much more might be stated by way of review, and the emphasis placed upon the past in school work, yet this study of the past is all of value, if rightly digested and utilized for an understanding, as it should be, of present-day problems. The purpose of education, as G. Stanley Hall has stated, should not be simply the solution of abstract problems nor the making of a gentleman, but should be humanism, the betterment of the world in the interest of humanity. There is a need that more time be given to immediate civic questions, to the form of our government, to knowledge of Americanism, and to a further realization of our common citizenship and the principles of human justice, the common welfare and liberty.

The above is all of interest, leading, as it does, to an effort for better conditions. If the schools are to be alive, it means that they must be open for examination and self-examination, in order that methods and means may be better determined and carried out.

EDUCATIONAL

Home Building

Part VI

[No article appears in this issue on chapter 6 of the textbook, Mothercraft Manual, but selected questions on the chapter do appear. It is suggested that classes or individuals studying the course on home building follow the textbook and Outline of Course of Study as usual. The article herewith is by Mrs. Cheeseman, of the Kansas State Teachers College. She gives a brief review of the progress made in the subjects of home education, mentioning leaders in the field. It is interesting and informative.—EDITORS.]

If the series of articles on home building is to be studied in class or by the individual in systematic study, a textbook is recommended, Mothercraft Manual, by Mary L. Read, Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, price $2.10 postpaid. Other references may be cited at the end of each chapter of the outline, which follows each article.

Education for the Home

By Emma Irene Cheeseman

History informs us that Greek boys and girls received training in the art of domestic life. The medieval convents maintained an excellence in house-keeping. The Renaissance, which ushered into the world new life, new ideals, also helped Comenius and Luther to give the new society books relating to household activities.

The books of Comenius, with the writings of others, are especially treasured for the discussions they furnished school students. All such knowledge was zealously guarded by philanthropists in the eighteenth century in Germany. It was nurtured by the charity schools of England as well as by the monitorial systems of Lancaster and Bell. Even as early as 1668 Indian girls were instructed in sewing and cooking by the Quebec nuns. The Colonial girls were trained in needlecraft much in the same way that girls were trained in England.

Early Educators

Little over a hundred years ago Mrs. Emma Hart Willard, famous for her private school, plead for a State grant for girls' education at the New York Legislature, and in outlining the new curriculum she included a course in "domestic instruction." Then came Miss Catherine Beecher, who developed Mrs. Willard's subject of domestic economy.

Miss Beecher's splendid activity in educational work, social activities, hygienic and health reforms, textbook authorship, and attention to home problems has given us much from which to become enthused toward greater accomplishments, for she was the founder of the American Woman's Educational Association for founding schools to give higher education to women. These schools were to give courses in domestic economy.

Contemporaneous with Miss Beecher's work, Benjamin Thompson was devoting his time to scientific problems of the household, especially along lines of fuel kitchen ranges, fireplaces, and utensils. Along with many other pioneer experimentations he paid much attention to lighting and ventilation, as did Mr. Youmans, a chemist, who combined physics, biology, and chemistry and related it with the household. His Household Science was used for a textbook in the schools for a long time.

Mrs. Ellen H. Richards, the first woman student in the institute of technology, became later a famous sanitary chemist. The last thirty years of her life she devoted to the science of food, clothing, and shelter. Her many books are intensely interesting; some of them are: The Chemistry of Cooking, Food Materials and Their Adulterations, The Cost of Shelter, The Cost of Food, The Cost of Cleanliness, and The Art of Right Living. We may well remember this remarkable woman as the founder of the Home Economics movement. She, with Mr. and Mrs. Dewey, founded the Lake Placid Conference on Home Economics. Mrs. Richards remained its chairman for years and later held the honorable position of first president of the American Home Economics Association. She also played a leading part in many social problems relating to the household, such as the English Kitchen, and Rumford Kitchen, conveniences for teaching dietetics at the Chicago exposition; also the Household Aid Company, an experiment in furnishing trained service on hourly call to the home. Besides these many interesting features of her career, she was ever a ready lecturer and consultant on institutional management, health, and sanitary problems.

Field of Human Nutrition

The field of human nutrition held attraction for many zealous investigators. Caleb Quicknor's thesis on "The influence of diet, dress, and amusement, on health," is worthy of mention. Professor Atwater, a chemist and recognized authority on nutrition, became director of Experiment Stations in the United States Department of Agriculture, and to him we owe much for the encouragement he gave in scientific instruction in nutrition in colleges and universities.

Leading women of the seventies lectured before women's clubs in cities and towns, later establishing cooking schools that helped to cast their influences for deeper research work for the home.

Then in the eighties we note with pleasure the introduction into the public school system of home economics subjects through the manual training movement. This not only resulted in new methods for all classes, but, as well, new subject matter for all schools. But the academic colleges hesitated long before yielding to the urgent demand for applied science instruction. However, if the movement for the higher education of women is not to prove in vain, it cannot afford to stop with providing only academic instruction, but must offer specialized professional courses adapted for woman's unique fields of service.

Vocational Education

Retrospecting, we now realize how the public mind has been educated until to-day the woman's demands are being more fully met in the vocational courses offered in nearly all colleges and universities, besides the extension work done by these institutions and the available fund of popular literature and timely periodicals devoted to home problems. We recognize the social program itself compels a knowledge of economics and pecuniary welfare. The very nature of society calls for an education related to the home. We would not be willing to trust a bookkeeper, a stenographer, a school-teacher, a nurse, or a doctor who had received education by chance here and there.

The child furnishes intellectual and moral life of the home. The home is the center of life's activities. The breaking down of the family bond can be overcome only by strengthening that bond. We would feel sad indeed if our household arts concerned themselves only with sewing, house care, and cooking.

Significance of Home Life

The home is vitally concerned with individual and social prosperity. The economic pressure is bearing heavily upon us. The free lands are gone; the reaping of wealth from the soil is over. Efficiency in production, and thrift in the household are the new standards. We need to produce, but more than ever before we need to consume wisely. Hence the woman who spends needs a thorough education.

The home life of everyone is weighted with significance. The return to society of the moral purposes, the altruistic and cooperative spirit of wholesome home influences, can hardly be estimated. Communities are starving for development of such ethical qualities and will continue to starve as modern life grows more complex; and while education for the home cannot create these qualities, yet it can enhance, refine, and increase their worth, making them more sure. Education for the home will promote thrift, protect health, and professionalize the vocation of housekeeping, just as much as vocational training increases wealth in commerce, industry, and agriculture. All educational centers are welcoming this educational movement for the home, the oldest and most sacred of institutions.

CHAPTER VI

Preparing for the Baby

1. What should be the physical and mental condition of the mother during the period prior to the time of a child's birth?
2. Why should she be under a physician's care?
3. Discuss clothing and diet of the expectant mother.
4. What attention should be given to bathing, exercise, and what precautions taken?
5. What has science proved about superstitious notions of marking the child?
6. What factors should be kept in mind when making the baby's clothes?
7. How should the nursery be equipped? What can be left out and what is absolutely essential?
8. Give the proper characteristics of an approved baby carriage. Describe a proper "baby pen." Could you make or contrive the latter? Explain.
9. What conditions should prevail in the nursery?
10. List eight general classes of harmful nursery equipment.

The biggest thing in business which we are coming more and more to appreciate is the sense of the dignity of constructive influence, the developing force that our business may radiate. Mere service which seemingly is interpreted largely as promptness, courtesy, suavity, is nothing compared to that service which is the natural result of the higher and broader view.

Those who succeed most largely and carry their burdens and their years most easily, are those who look upon their lives, their talents and their business as a trust, with which they are charged to make their contribution to the generation in which they live.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Gallands Grove Conference Held

CHEROKEE, IOWA, November 26.—The Gallands Grove district conference was held in the church on November 2, 3, and 4 with fine weather prevailing.

Friday a fine program was rendered by the Sunday school and Religio departments at 7.30 p. m.

Saturday sessions were business and preaching sessions, with good interest shown.

At the Sunday morning social service, one was baptized.

The sermons preached during the conference were by Patriarch C. E. Butterworth and Elders E. R. Butterworth, George Juergens, and W. A. Smith. The Auburn Sunday school orchestra was present and rendered some very fine music. Other special features were vocal duets and cornet solos.

Elder W. A. Smith has been the speaker for meetings that have been conducted in the church every evening since conference. The interest and attendance have been good. No baptisms have resulted to date, but some may occur later.

Elder Smith was surprised, November 11, when he was presented with a fine new fountain pen and some money by Elder A. R. Crippen in behalf of the Saints. Brother Smith was also surprised when he arrived at the home of Elder Crippen on Thursday evening, November 22, to find the house filled with Saints and friends who had gathered for a social time. The evening was spent in singing and visiting. A fine supper was served by the sisters and Elder Crippen, in behalf of the Saints, presented him a purse.

Elder J. L. Parker, of Des Moines, was a visitor on November 1 and delivered a fine sermon to an attentive audience.

The Sunday school will not have a Christmas tree this year but will have a white Christmas for the benefit of the Christmas offering. Thanksgiving will be observed with prayer service in the morning and a big dinner for all to be served in the church.

Special Meetings at Moorhead

MOORHEAD, IOWA, November 27.—Elder J. F. McDowell, of Magnolia, is at present holding meetings here. So far his discourses have been directly to the Saints and of a high spiritual character. He bears a strong testimony that God will accomplish the work that he has set his hand to perform and that the Saints can still rely upon all that he has spoken, whether or not it is in harmony with the views of modern philosophies. Brother McDowell will deliver a Thanksgiving address on Thursday evening, November 29.

The work is moving along nicely, and the general desire of the church is to do all they can for the work.

The Christian Church of our town just closed a three weeks' revival meeting, but our attendance and interest was not diminished. The Saints seem to feel that there is nothing better for them to be found in other places.

At the beginning of the year the Sunday school set a Christmas offering aim of $400. This goal has almost been reached, and on November 18 we organized for a special drive in which we hope to go over the top. The suggestion offered by Brother Charles Hield, superintendent of the public schools, was accepted, which is that the school be divided into two parts, each side to be represented by an airship taking a trip to Zion. Each Sunday the school will march and deposit their donations in a box for their side and when enough is deposited to pay the fare from one location to another the ship will move as far as the fare is paid. The excitement will be to see which side reaches the destination first. Brother Hield and Sister Ella Jennings have been appointed the captains of the two sides, and each is determined to pilot his ship as fast as possible.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is considering the course of study to be taken up for the next year, preparatory to ordering supplies.

Davidson Branch Purchases Piano

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA, November 24.—The Davidson Branch has about fifty resident members and most of them are workers.

On November 18 a Recreation and Expression class was organized. The Sunday school is moving along nicely, but a presiding officer is needed so preaching services can be held regularly.

The members of the branch recently bought a piano, which is appreciated by all.

Parkersburg Progresses Since Organized in 1917

PARKERSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA, November 20.—The Saints of this branch are still pushing forward and striving to come upward. There has been fairly good interest in the work the past summer and this fall. The attendance has been only fair, except for the faithful few who can always be depended upon to do their part. They are present at all the services and gatherings and are the ones who are keeping the good work going.

Much has happened since HERALD readers last heard from this place. Two of the members attended the Kirtland reunion and brought back a very good report of it. This branch was well represented at the district conference at Clarksburg, West Virginia, August 24 to 26. Members from the branch hold several district offices so took an active part. The conference was of a peaceful and spiritual nature, which was gratifying to all. Old members said it was in all respects the best conference ever held in this district. Brother G. T. Griffiths, Brother James McConnaughy, Brother Thomas Newton who is district president, and Frank Shinn, now in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, the former district president, were there. Brother O. J. Tary, president of the Wheeling District, attended for the last part of the conference. Four young men were ordained elders, one of them being Harry Smith, a priest of this branch.

Some of the members attended the Wheeling district conference at Glenn Easton, West Virginia, September 1 and 2. It was with the Nauvoo Branch out in the country and is said to be one of the oldest branches in the Reorganized Church. Brother Griffiths was there and told of some of his early experiences at that place.

The members were glad to have Brother and Sister Beall move back in August. Brother Beall was branch president and Sister Beall was leader of the Department of Women when they lived here before. His many years of experience makes him a valuable man in the work. Some of the members gave him a surprise birthday party, November 1, in honor of his seventy-first birthday. As it was near Halloween, they went in Halloween costumes, and Brother Beall had difficulty in guessing who was present.

This branch is soon to purchase a lot for a church site. Meetings have been held in a hall in the north part of the town, which could be rented Sundays for $2 a month. The hall has been used ever since the work was opened up here by Brother Newton in 1917. In the past six years much good has been accomplished. At times conditions would look discouraging, but they always passed and left the members with a desire to press on. It is hoped the future will be even brighter and more successful than the past.

All departments are busy and doing well. The Department of Women is sewing and studying under the leadership of Sister Luella Smith. The Sunday school, with Sister Mabel Smith as superintendent, is holding its own. There is no Department of Recreation and Expression here at present, but it is hoped there will be soon. The priesthood are trying to do their duty and have been doing some visiting and preaching. There are two elders, one teacher, and one deacon in this branch now. Study classes are studying all three standard books of the church.

Traveling Saints will be welcomed if they stop at this place for a visit.

Temple Builders Make Garments for Sanitarium

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK, October 28.—Along with the study of Mothercraft, the Temple Builders, with their monitor, Sister Myrtle Landes, have recently finished thirty-three infant nighties for the Sanitarium, also some dresser scarfs and a quilt. At present they are industriously sewing for a needy family here. They take turns in caring for the small children on Sunday evenings so that the mothers may be able to attend and enjoy the services. Sister Anna Landes kindly loans her home for the purpose, it being near the church.

The Department of Women, under the leadership of Sister Warner, assisted by Sister Doll, are working hard to make a success of the bazaar and supper to be given December 12. The attendance is good, and everyone is working, which of course means success for any organization.

Elder James Pycok has been here for about four weeks and has held a series of meetings. His many splendid sermons have been much appreciated. It is about five years since Brother Pycok had been here, and it is like welcoming an old friend. Brother "Danny" Macgregor made a short call recently, but preached on the Canadian side. Many from here went over to hear him.

Christmas activities are in full swing. The Sunday school, with Elder George Landes as superintendent and Sister Emma Sharp as chorister, is busy with rehearsals for a graded cantata to be given in connection with the Christmas tree. It is entitled, "Christmas for all." The choirs are also busy with Christmas music. The senior choir will render the cantata, "The Prince of Peace," by E. L. Ashford.

Department of Women Has Concession

MODESTO, CALIFORNIA, November 26.—At the sacramental service last month, a most excellent meeting was enjoyed, in which the Saints were admonished to be more faithful.

The candy pull, given by the Department of Recreation and Expression, was a success and much enjoyed by all present.

The Department of Women held a concession on Armistice Day, which netted about $30. It was much below expectations, but they are thankful to have done that well.

Elder W. C. Griffin, who has been working for some time at Fowler in a raisin-packing house met with a serious accident. He was caught in a belt and thrown into an auger which would have ground him to pieces had not another workman seen him fall and quickly shut off the power. He is in a very serious condition but will recover.

Elder William Dawson, of Sacramento, one of the district presidency, preached a fine sermon here yesterday.

The Department of Women planned a social, which was given at the home of Brother and Sister R. D. Burch last Wednesday evening, November 20. Sister Burch has not had opportunity to can fruit this summer, so each took her a jar or more of fruit. A good program was arranged, and an enjoyable time had.

A pleasant Thanksgiving is expected, for the fall is ideal—no wind, no fog, some frost, but very little rain so far.

"Earned Dollar" Feature at Entertainment

SHERRILL, NEW YORK, November 27.—The church font, built by Brethren Joseph Luff and James E. Bishop four years ago, was used for the first time this fall when F. Carl Mesle, jr., was baptized. The other baptisms have taken place in the creek in the ravine here.

A social was held at the home of the pastor recently by the Department of Recreation and Expression, under the direction of Sister Zetta Montgomery. The Department of Women had arranged the idea that each one who could was to earn a dollar to be turned in as branch maintenance. A part of the social's entertainment consisted in the stories of how these dollars were earned.

It does not exactly come under the "earned dollar" stories, but it may be mentioned along with church finances that Sherrill has a good friend in Brother James Beggle, formerly of Niagara Falls, now of Ticonderoga, who sent a fine contribution this fall. There are also members of this branch in Malone who do not forget, at certain seasons, that Sherrill has needs which should have financial attention.

Elder G. W. Robley, as mentioned in the last letter, is to leave here for the Northwest. A purse was presented to him as another part of the social evening's program. The Syracuse Branch is said to have honored him similarly before he left there.

Brother Charles S. Lombard, a member of the Sherrill Branch lives in Utica and promises to be down soon to services. He was baptized in Missouri in September.

At the last meeting of the Department of Women it was decided to take up the study of the Book of Mormon for a time. Sister Victoria Lewis will be the teacher. They also planned to hold a Christmas sale on December 8. Christmas program preparations are under way.

Brother Arthur Allen, district president, is soon expected in Sherrill.

Branch Displays Great Interest in Activities

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS, November 27.—The Latter Day Saint Dramatic Club which was organized in October has a play in progress, entitled, "Pleasures of the world." The twelve players in the cast are very promising in their rapid advancement and look forward to each rehearsal with greater interest.

A costume party was held November 23, the first of its kind. It proved very successful and will long be remembered. All responded with costumes equal to the occasion.

The future outlook is bright, and a Christmas program is under way which will not only take in the children, but also some of the young people and a few of the older members of the branch.

The ladies' sewing circle had a sale of cakes and fancy-work in one of the local stores. They met with splendid success in every way, and it seems that the church debt will be well cared for. Their work is well worth commendation.

Everyone came out to a harvest supper given by the men's class on November 16, the object being the Christmas offering.

President of Twelve Speaks at Omaha

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, November 26.—Apostle James A. Gillen, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings of the first week of November, addressing the Saints on various phases of personal duty, answering the question, "What wouldst thou have me to do?" While suffering with a severe cold and quite patently a candidate for a sick bed, he managed to get his message across with clear-cut conviction. His call to the higher life, closely patterned after the Christ Jesus, his logical delineation of the gospel plan and its adaptability to life and everyday experiences left a definite impression for encouragement and uplift. It is with gratification the Saints hear the good news that Brother Gillen will return at an early date for a more protracted series of meetings.

The Mothers' Class of Sunday school, assisted by others, gave a dinner and entertainment in the church on the evening of November 8. One hundred twenty people partook of the dinner, others coming later for the entertainment which was under the direction of Sister Nelle Atkinson Kelley. Both features proved very successful and the mothers netted $60. Part of this will make up their Christmas offering pledge; the balance will be applied to the building fund.

Armistice Day Program

Superintendent Rose Adams had a fine program arranged for Armistice Sunday. The national colors were in evidence and the pulpit draped with crepe paper depicting soldier life. Brother Norman Issott, nephew of Apostle John Rushton and a veteran of the World War, gave an interesting talk on what the Armistice meant to the world in general and to the soldiers in particular. Brother Issott, being a native of England, fought in the war under the British flag. A reading, "Behold your flag," and a solo, "Somewhere in France," helped to impress the lessons of the day.

Elder Will E. Stoff occupied the pulpit at eleven o'clock that day, portraying the welcoming spirit of the Master when he pleads, "Come unto me, all ye who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." One good thought was that an invitation to spiritual life given by Christ usually carried with it a provisional clause throwing the initiative upon the one invited. "Come." The blessing follows after the coming. "If any man will open unto Me, I will come in—etc." "Seek ye first the kingdom of God . . . and these things, etc." Sister Kelley's solo, "Come unto me," from "The Messiah" fitted well into the service.

High Priest Carl Self preached Sunday evening, November 11, upon the topic, "The God of the ancient Americans." It had been duly announced in the papers and drew quite a number of nonmembers to the service. Brother Self's intimate acquaintance with the Book of Mormon, his interest in archæology, and his constant studies to extend his knowledge concerning these things provided a source from which he drew many profitable conclusions, chief among them being that the God worshiped by the various ancient peoples of this continent was a Being of love, kindness, power, and benevolence, and one worthy the worship and adoration of all races.

Benefit Dinner

A benefit dinner, given by the sisters of the West Side Mission, on Saturday evening, November 17, netted them $25. The occasion brought members from both branches together in a pleasant social spirit and was thereby doubly profitable.

Father and Son Week was observed by the Omaha Branch on Sunday, November 18. Banners carrying the legends, "The boys of this school for the Boy of Galilee" and "The men of our school for the Man of Galilee," were displayed back of the stand and provided food for profitable thought. Doctor W. E. Stoff gave the special talk at the Sunday school hour, and Doctor Henry A. Merchant at the preaching hour. Both these young fathers stressed the necessity for a close comradeship between parents and children. Children often teach parents as much as parents teach children, for the parents in trying to train, unconsciously strive to live up to the ideals they hold before their children. A young brother sang the solo, "Just for to-day," in which the pleading for divine guidance and desire for purity of life and thought brought involuntary tears to the eyes of many.

Thanksgiving Service

Thanksgiving was celebrated at Sunday school, November 25, by a program given by the primary department under the direction of Sister Louise Leeka. All wore Pilgrim hats which they had made in their "busy hour." Autumn leaves, and pumpkins filled with flowers made a happy setting for the ten youngsters who took special part, among whom were two great-great-grandchildren of Joseph Smith the Martyr—Richard Salyards, grandson of the general church secretary, R. S. Salyards, and Jane Audentia Frederick, granddaughter of Sister Audentia Smith Anderson. It is encouraging to see the posterity of the early Saints doing their "bit" to make the church work successful, even the efforts of these small ones of the fifth generation of those who have tried to serve God.

T. J. Elliott, district president, preached both sermons of November 25, his theme in the morning being, "Giving thanks," and in the evening, "If winter comes." This latter was a review of Hutchinson's book of that name with a deductive of philosophic truths as presented herein, harmonizing with those of our accepted church doctrines. Special music for the day was in charge of Sister Nelle Kelley and was made up of a quartet and duet numbers from our official branch "quartet" consisting of Sisters Kelley and Fleming and Brethren Scott and Greenway. Special thank-offerings for the day were unusually generous and the attendance above average.

The Pulpit Installed

The new pulpit has been installed. It is plain, of fumed oak, and harmonizes nicely with the general tone of wood-work in the new church. Flowers for the stand have been faithfully supplied throughout the summer by Sisters Schaffer and Kinney, and have added much to the beauty of the environment.

Several new additions to the numbers of this branch have been made in the coming of Brother and Sister Claus Roenfeldt and their daughter Lillian from Winnebago; Sister Winnie Kerr from Cherokee, Iowa; and Brother and Sister Earl Lasley from Decatur, Nebraska; Brother and Sister P. Peterson from Hazel Dell, Iowa; and Brother A. Neilson and family, the former lately baptized by Brother P. Anderson at Council Bluffs. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Parks of Spokane, Washington, have taken up their abode in this city and add their pleasing and helpful personalities to the group. Mr. Parks is the younger brother of Sister Rosa Parks Pitt, so well known throughout church circles. He is helping the young people prepare their Christmas playlet.

Mr. John Fryxell, husband of Sister Doris Fryxell, met with an accident which crushed several of the bones in his foot. He is home from the hospital now, but his foot is still in casts and probably will be for some weeks.

Gene, the young son of Brother Rob Grenawalt, has been dangerously ill with bronchial pneumonia but was mercifully spared. It was a joy to welcome the lad back to Sunday school on November 25. Sister Gertrude Kirkpatrick's return on that day, also, was another cause for thankfulness. Illness of herself, husband, and little daughter has caused her absence for four weeks, an absence very noticeable because of her faithful services as Sunday school chorister and orchestra director.

Sister W. P. Bootman, wife of one of our well-known missionaries, has been visiting her sister in this city and has worshiped with the Saints on the Sabbaths.

Sister Nettie Williams, late of Montana, but now one of the very large public school-teaching force of this city, is confined to her bed at the home of her cousin, Mrs. E. G. Hampton. She is improving however and hopes to be again at her post of duty soon. She is a daughter of Brother M. B. Williams, of Independence.

The young people's organization has had a "hike," a talk on "Various courts of the United States," by Attorney Carl T. Self, and an election of officers for the ensuing year, since the last report from this branch. At the election recently, Sister Mary Murphy was chosen president, succeeding Brother Howard Elliott.

Toronto District Purchases New Reunion Ground

The Toronto District has purchased new reunion grounds on the Humber River, near Woodbridge, Ontario, which will be owned by the church. The reunion grounds at Low Banks, which have been used for a number of years proved unsatisfactory. The new reunion grounds will be deeded over to the general church.

One of the most delightful and entertaining social events in the history of the Toronto Branch was the Thanksgiving supper and concert given by the Department of Women on the evening of November 12. The supper which was bountiful and daintily served, and savored of the true Thanksgiving spirit, was followed by an evening which will long be remembered by lovers of music and the drama. Some material assistance was given to the program by the ladies of the Humber Bay Branch. The proceeds will be applied on the district budget.

In Canada, Thanksgiving Day is now celebrated on the anniversary of the signing of the Armistice.

Holland Saints Testify to Truthfulness of Gospel

SCHIEDAM, HOLLAND, September 9.—I am very glad to bear my testimony and tell you about my family. I rejoice in the gospel brought to us by Elders Veenstra and Postma. We feel this is the work of God and that those elders are his servants; therefore we feel sorry that they are leaving us. I believe that I write in the spirit of all our members here in Holland. We hope they will soon be with us again, because they have become dear to us.

We hope to go on in this gospel, and if everything should be taken from us no one can take our testimony. We pray our heavenly Father that he may give us strength that we shall never deny that which we have received. It is grand to know that on February 13 of this year we made our covenant with God at the watery grave. We hope to be true and keep his commandments, that we, with his children, may be gathered in Zion, that we, with them, may work for the second coming of Christ.

All my thoughts at this moment are at General Conference. I see the large congregation of Saints gathered and rejoicing in the service of Him who is our Creator. We pray that God's Spirit may rest in abundance upon you all at the conference and that our beloved missionaries may enjoy part thereof, that when they shall return here they may have been strengthened in this work.

Greetings to all the Saints from their brothers and sisters in Holland.

A. RIJL.

Sunday School Recognized by Council of Religious Education

MOUNDSVILLE, WEST VIRGINIA, November 27.—The Moundsville, West Virginia, branch is fortunate in having a live Department of Women, with Sister Callie Castilow as its president. Sister Castilow has had some experience in business, which qualification she has used in the department for the last two years. The sisters make garments of various kinds, which they sell at a nice profit. They also have a standing contract with the Fostoria Glass Company to clean their sample room three or four times a year, for which they receive twenty-five dollars each time. They are planning to hold a bazaar on December 1. The monthly meetings are devoted to the study of the Mothercraft Manual.

The branch is mourning the loss of a faithful and consistent member, Sister Estella Noon, who died November 10.

On November 24, one of the most faithful and beloved sisters of the Wheeling, West Virginia, Branch, Sister L. A. Serig, also died.

The Morning Star Sunday School was fortunate in having a representative at the Washington District Council of Religious Education, which held its annual convention November 10, at Glendale, West Virginia. This school is recognized as one of the schools of the Washington District Council, and hereafter will have its place in the conference.

The Wheeling, West Virginia, District, has been without a missionary for quite a long time, but prospects are that Elder Thomas L. Clark, appointed by the recent General Conference to labor in this district, will take up his work about the middle of December, or the first of January, 1924.

Isolated Saints Enjoy Sermons by Radio

WAGNER, SOUTH DAKOTA, November 11.—We heard Brother W. W. Smith's sermon on "Peace" to-night. We have just obtained our radio, and to-night is the first time we have been able to get the station K F I X. We didn't catch all the announcements. Will you please send one of those booklets with the programs which begin December 1? I wish you could have seen our little congregation of six Saints who are starving for spiritual food. We were all huddled up in a little group eager to catch every word. We don't know who offered prayer, but it surely brought peace to our hungry souls. We hope in the future to be able to catch everything that is broadcasted from that station.

How wonderful is the radio, and how blessed to be able to enjoy the preaching of the blessed gospel of Christ, though so far from it! I am earnestly trying and praying to so live that the light of that blessed gospel may radiate out to other dear souls through my righteous living. Pray for us poor Saints here in Dakota that we may be faithful until the coming of our dear Redeemer and Master.

We are holding Sunday school here in our house, and the Lord blesses us, too. We have one Indian sister and her two little boys. Brother P. R. Burton baptized her the fourth of July.

MRS. W. L. COFFMAN.

German Brother Thankful for Assistance

BERLIN, GERMANY, October 24.—To the true and living church of our Lord and Master, I herewith express my thanks for the assistance and support because of unemployment. In spite of the fact that want is ever becoming greater in Germany we rejoice as children of God that the time of his coming is ever drawing nearer. The dear Father does not forsake his own and always finds ways and means to deliver them out of distress,

If the need still grows greater, so shall we with God's help not desert the narrow way from which we have wandered until now, and we shall live true to his commandments. I thank my dear Savior that he has received me as a lost son again into his paternal home, and I know that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the true and only church. Again I express my sincerest thanks.

FRANZ JESERICK.

Philadelphia Branches Unite

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, November 29.—Interest in church activities in Philadelphia continues to gain momentum under the consecrated and boundless energy of the pastor, Elder A. E. Stoff.

For several months past a number of Italians, prominent leaders of the Pentecostal Church here (among them the pastor of the church), in their search for truth have been investigating the restored gospel. On the eighteenth of November one was baptized, and others have expressed themselves as being ready for baptism.

The Second Philadelphia Branch has been sold to a Polish Denomination formerly located on Allegheny Avenue. The transfer of the Second Branch members back to the First Branch was an occasion of rejoicing for all.

Brother A. Max Carmichael, general Sunday school superintendent, came over to Philadelphia from New York Sunday, November 18, occupying in the pulpit both morning and evening, giving his hearers much to think about.

Brother Carmichael referred to the Red Cross as standing for "fatherhood" over the entire earth; Jesus in his ministry, gave stress to people, persons, and personalities which epitomizes the same spirit.

He compared conditions here with those in Europe, showing how thankful we should be to live here where we can worship God, rather than among the Communists (or atheists) of Russia, and other religiously demoralized countries whose lack of true religion is the cause of their condition. In the early days, people and personalities were nothing. Now we find religion for us is the right to grow, and the church should aim to produce personalities—in fact, religion is responsible for personalities. The part that parents play in this development was dwelt upon at length in a convincing manner.

Referring to an individual's emotional reaction—one extreme always bringing the opposite—Brother Carmichael believed the Catholic child does not get the same emotional extremes because of the child's personal (and frequent) contact with the priest through the confessional, the advice and counsel received therein being highly beneficial to the child.

His plea is to get away from treating people as a herd, and go after them as individuals. Preachers are inclined to sermonize too much. "Jesus left the fold and went out after the lost sheep—the ninety-nine could take care of themselves for a while; and so if a Sunday-school teacher turns his class over to a substitute and spends the session looking up absentees (providing he can do so at no other time), he is functioning in one of the most important features of a teacher's work. How many hours did Jesus spend in the synagogue as compared with the time spent with persons?"

Sister S. M. Hudson, 623 West Benton Street, Eldorado, Kansas, writes: "We have a few Saints, a Sunday school, and preaching each Sunday afternoon. I would like to correspond with any isolated Saints who think of moving to Eldorado."

Thousands Hear President Smith Speak From Omaha

[Sunday night, December 2, President Frederick M. Smith delivered the radio sermon at Omaha, broadcast by station W A O W, the Woodmen of the World. This was the third time President Smith had been invited to speak from this station and each time the Omaha Saints have prepared a very fine musical program to accompany his message.

From the flood of letters coming in, it would seem that President Smith and those assisting, made a very favorable impression on the "listeners in." All over Omaha there were loud speakers at Community Centers, where thousands heard the sermon, and no one can estimate the number listening over their own sets. A few letters from our own people and others will be of interest.]

Selden, Kansas.—In the HERALD of last week I noticed announcement of the Sunday night program at Omaha, so I announced it one or two evenings from the platform and as a result there was quite a crowd of very interested listeners gathered at the garage next door to the theater to hear it. I closed in time so that my crowd could hear also. It was fine and I feel that good was done here as a result. Brother Smith, do you know that that is the kind of sermons that real live men want to hear? It's a fact, men have been fed on milk-and-water sermons till they are about starved to hear some real facts that have to do with the affairs of to-day. Men want to know the cure for the evils that they must face in a business way from day to day, right here in Selden; that's what men want to know, and if the religion of Christ won't do this it is of no interest to them. Strange, just a few minutes before, the same crowd listened to one of those "milk-and-water" sermons by a mealy-mouthed "divine" from Dallas, Texas. The contrast was so great that it made a bully background for what you had to say. Couldn't have had the stage set any better for your sermon.—P. R. Burton.

Rhodes, Iowa.—Last evening after service here, I had the pleasure of hearing President Smith's sermon over the radio. Brother Beye has a good outfit in his home and a number of the Saints gathered to hear the program. It came in fine. President Smith's sermon was a splendid effort and I felt proud to know that we have such a man with such a vision at the head of the church.—J. F. Martin.

Petrolia, Ontario.—I cannot refrain from writing to you and telling you that I heard your voice last night as you lectured at W A O W, Omaha, Nebraska, on stewardships.

After my meeting was over I went to a family of Saints that have a radio and listened in. We didn't get Omaha until you were partly through your lecture, but immediately I heard your voice, I recognized it. Part of it was very plain, but because of air conditions, at times we lost it. Even though I didn't get it all, as I listened to you the Spirit of God came upon me as I thought of those who were listening to such an important message.

I also heard Sister Kelley sing, and others, but not so plainly. Also heard the baritone solo, "The Palms." Surely this modern miracle is going to bless mankind through many ways. While I remain here I will try to get in touch with the program being broadcasted from our station.

B. H. DOTY.

Nebraska City, Nebraska.—I preached here last night at eight o'clock after which the congregation remained and listened in on you. Brother F. H. Higgins installed his receiver in the church for the purpose and all had a treat.

We heard you clearly and distinctly. You seemed to be standing before us.

I spoke on the subject, "What's the matter with the world?" and I noted several smiles when your subject was announced. Needless to say, I was more than pleased to have my feeble efforts confirmed by your masterly address. I had not seen your program, so knew nothing of your intentions.

This same thing happened once before. It was at Lamoni in 1915, at the reunion. I had spoken twice on the subject of consecration and "stirred up the people" somewhat by what appeared to them to be an extreme position. But you came along at the last moment, without knowing what I had done, and confirmed all I said and more. On things fundamental we are not far apart.

Praises Work of Sanitarium

From a Letter to the First Presidency

BURLINGTON, IOWA, November 23.—Will you pardon my indulgence of a few words in expressing my appreciation of our wonderful institution, the Sanitarium? True, it is not large, if material measurement is considered, but the spirit accompanying those who work for the good of humanity within its walls is beautiful indeed. No doubt you have had many letters commending its work, but perhaps another one expressing appreciation will do no harm. I wish to admit first that while I have had confidence in the word of the Lord in regard to building the Sanitarium and have always upheld its work, I have not appreciated its work as I should. One need not go far to find service if reward is in prospect, but the spirit that accompanies both doctors and nurses in the work exceeds anything that I have seen. The splendid work of Doctors Harrington, John R. and Stanley Green, and Criley contributed to the welfare of the writer, and that of Doctor Stanley Green to Sister Williams's benefit. I am glad to say that there comes a great degree of pleasure when I think of them as brethren indeed.

In respect to the fine band of nurses, will say that while I was there four weeks there was no deviation in their spirit to serve that we could see. It seemed to us that if there was one thing need more than another, it was time, for they seemed to be always busy. May our heavenly Father continue to bless those who so faithfully and unselfishly contribute to its success.

D. J. WILLIAMS.

Nauvoo to Erect Pavilion

FORT MADISON, IOWA, November 14.—Sunday was the closing day of the Nauvoo district conference. The services of each day were spiritual, and seemingly there was a special endowment of the Spirit at the two priesthood meetings. Each one of the priesthood seemed to have renewed courage and desire to enter into greater responsibility. Brother Amos Berve, the new district president, will have the support of the local priesthood of each branch when it comes to an organized effort, as expressed by those present at the meetings. Almost every branch was represented by some of the priesthood.

On Saturday night, November 10, the Fort Madison orchestra rendered what was considered a very fine program. Sunday being Armistice Day, the program was on the patriotic order. Brother James McIntyre, the leader, put on two of his illustrated readings, with music to correspond, which always are well received.

The special speakers were Elder S. Daniel, Elder Clifford, the newly appointed missionary, and Apostle D. T. Williams. Brother Williams was visiting his brother in Burlington and gave us the happy opportunity of hearing his voice and seeing his smiling face once more.

There were more than two hundred visitors at this conference. The weather was ideal and the roads good.

It was decided at this conference to erect a large pavilion at Nauvoo for the next reunion.

Brother Clifford is occupying each night this week and is having good audiences. He seems to be well liked by all.

It is expected that Brother Berve will return some time later to organize the district priesthood for local missionary work.

The Saints of this district will surely miss the God-given counsel and advice of Brother D. J. Williams who is soon to leave us, but we thank God for the noble new men that are coming into the district.

The spirit of unity prevails among the Saints here, and the outlook is bright for the winter months.

Noted Lawyer Speaks at De Kalb

DE KALB, ILLINOIS, November 20.—Clarence Darrow, noted criminal lawyer, of Chicago, and perhaps the foremost in the State, addressed a large audience Sunday, November 18, at the Saints' church in this city. He urged his listeners to show more charity and kindness to each other, emphasizing that the Christian people had failed to properly visualize the teachings of Jesus Christ. This, he said, accounted for the large amount of crime, wars, and other trouble in the world to-day.

Mr. Darrow was brought to De Kalb through the intimate friendship of Brother John L. Cooper. Although extremely busy on a big case at the time and not in very good health, Mr. Darrow consented to speak at the church in De Kalb. Many people availed themselves of the opportunity to hear the noted man.

A. G. Kennedy, De Kalb attorney, introduced the speaker of the afternoon, and from the time he uttered the first words of his talk, his audience was intent on getting every bit of information possible.

Mr. Darrow mentioned criminal conditions in Chicago only in an incidental way. He stressed scientific study of crime, showing how it is affected by heredity and environment. After years of study, Mr. Darrow is able to classify a crime as soon as he hears of it, and in this way he is fitted for further investigation, an ability that has made him a noted criminologist and criminal lawyer.

His talk was short but of extreme interest. The church was well filled with many business and professional men of the city as well as the usual membership. It was Mr. Darrow's first appearance in DeKalb, and those hearing him hope he will return and lecture again.

Lambda Delta Sigma Meets at University

IOWA CITY, IOWA, November 19.—Lambda Delta Sigma, church honorary society, originating at Graceland College, is active also at other colleges and universities. A recent announcement in the daily calendar of the University of Iowa newspaper stated that a Sunday morning meeting of the chapter would be held in one of the university buildings. Lonzo Jones, formerly a professor of Graceland, was instrumental in obtaining use of the university building for meetings.

This young band of Latter Day Saints studying at that university is making headway by this organization, at the same time worshiping as their fathers worshiped. It is not customary that university buildings be used for denominational purposes, but a society for the furtherance of education can well be allowed and encouraged to meet.

Honolulu Organizes Japanese Branch

From a Letter to the First Presidency

HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII, November 19.—In the past, as you know, we have not been able to hold the Japanese that we have baptized as we would like to have done, owing to our inability to give them proper care and attention. I deemed it advisable, therefore, without further delay, to have a Japanese branch organized for the benefit and care of the few members that we have, and the organization was effected yesterday with the assistance of Brother Foo, so we now have the Honolulu Japanese Branch of the church, the first branch, I believe, to be organized among the Japanese people.

We have about eighteen Japanese members on our records, but we are not in touch with all of them. I trust that now the branch is organized we shall be able to interest and hold a number of the few members we have who are now attending services, and also to extend our work to others. Some who are attending our Sunday school meetings are very much interested, and I would not be surprised to see several baptized in the near future.

Pontiac Celebrates Thanksgiving

PONTIAC, MICHIGAN, December 5.—Thanksgiving Day was a memorable one for the Pontiac Saints. At 10 a. m. all met for prayer service, and in the evening from 5 to 7.30 a Thanksgiving dinner was served by the Department of Women which netted $50 clear to the department. An appropriate and appealing program was given at 8 p. m.

District President Kenneth Green and Elder R. Coats, of Detroit, were with us on Sunday, December 2. Both were present for prayer service, but Brother Coats was unable to stay for afternoon service owing to the serious illness of his wife. Elder Green remained and a service was held at 3 p. m. on the subject of tithing. Inventory blanks were given to the Saints, and it is hoped to have this branch one hundred per cent tithepayers within the coming year.

The annual business meeting was held Monday evening to elect officers for the year, and the following officers were chosen: Elder James Mead, president; Sister Myrtle Berndt, secretary; George Horton, Sunday school superintendent; Harry Davis, Department of Recreation and Expression superintendent; Muriel Davis, Department of Music; and Anna McCloud, superintendent of Department of Women.

Preparations for the Christmas program have begun.

Join Community Christmas Program

BRADNER, OHIO, December 3.—Opposition to the work in this place is gradually being broken down, as evidenced by the fact that the people here have been planning to have a community Christmas program and have invited the Saints to assist in the work. We are hoping to so live that people will understand more about the gospel and thus be led to hear it.

Elder Yoder, of Toledo, Ohio, has just finished a series of meetings here. He preached some very interesting sermons, and although no one was baptized, time will tell what good was accomplished.

Independence

The president of the church and three apostles were speakers at Independence Sunday, December 9. President Frederick M. Smith addressed a large audience at Walnut Park Church at 11 o'clock and spoke over the radio at 7.30 p. m. at the church broadcasting station.

The morning service at the Stone Church was broadcasted at 11 o'clock, Apostle E. J. Gleazer being the speaker. In the evening at 7.30 Apostle F. Henry Edwards spoke at the Stone Church. Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was the speaker at Enoch Hill at 7.30 p. m.

The Laurel Club held a bazaar and served a cafeteria luncheon December 11, in the dining hall of the Stone Church. The bazaar held all day and through the evening. Luncheon was at 11.30 and refreshments were served continually. Proceeds will go toward providing carpets for the church. A very successful day was reported. Definite announcement of the proceeds will be made later.

An all-day Christmas program will be in charge of the Stone Church Sunday school December 23. Following the Sunday school services a program will begin at 11 o'clock in the upper auditorium. It will consist of a Christmas talk by President Elbert A. Smith, a short story by one of the story-tellers, musical numbers by the junior chorus and a number of children. Sunday evening will be devoted to another program consisting of drills, readings, music, and a pageant. Christmas trees will lend the Christmas spirit to the occasion. The program will begin at 7.30 p. m.

Bishop Israel A. Smith returned to Independence Sunday, December 9, after being gone for over a week on a trip in the East.

Mrs. T. W. Williams, wife of Apostle T. W. Williams, is recovering from a serious automobile accident encountered several weeks ago. Apostle Williams went home from Independence following the accident.

The Department of Recreation and Expression of the Stone Church has again changed the meeting night. It will now meet at 6 o'clock Sunday evening for study of the Book of Mormon. A reprint of the Quarterly of 1909 will be used. At present no program will be given, owing to the shortness of the study hour.

Mrs. E. L. Kelley has been in the Sanitarium for the past week, having been threatened with pneumonia. She is now recovering, however, and has been removed to her home.

President Floyd M. McDowell came down to Independence Monday morning to sit with the auditorium committee, and remained over Tuesday evening to speak on the radio.

Mrs. Mary Jane Lingo died at the home of her adopted daughter, Mrs. B. C. Loar, Thursday night, December 6. She had been failing in health for a number of years but her death was hastened by a fall, about five weeks ago, in which she broke her hip. She was at the Sanitarium for four weeks following the accident, but was taken home to Mrs. Loar a little over a week ago, it being thought she was better.

Mrs. Lingo was born in New Philadelphia, Indiana, February 3, 1846. She has been a member of the church since January 20, 1895. For the past twenty-five years she has lived with Mrs. Loar in this city. Having no children of her own, she reared Mrs. Loar from a small child.

Funeral services were from the Stone Church, Sunday afternoon, December 9. Sermon by Walter W. Smith. Burial in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Dorothy Margaret Arber, 14 years of age, died December 5, at the Sanitarium following an operation for appendicitis. Her tragic death was similar to that of her father, Joseph Arber, three years ago, also operated upon for appendicitis. Joseph Arber was for twenty-one years in the mission field, as a member of the quorum of seventy.

Miss Arber underwent the operation on December 1, and died the following Wednesday. She is survived by her mother, Mrs. Grace Arber, and three brothers, Alexander, Archie, and Edgar.

Funeral services was held Saturday afternoon, December 8, in charge of Elder R. V. Hopkins and Bishop J. A. Becker. Bishop B. R. McGuire preached the funeral sermon. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Wife of Gomer T. Griffiths Dies

Mrs. Harriett Griffiths, lovingly known by a host of friends as "Hattie Griffiths," wife of Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths, passed away at her home in Columbus, Ohio, Sunday night, December 9.

Sister Griffiths had not been known merely as the wife of an apostle, but had done a work of her own and made a name for herself in the church. Up to the time of her sickness, which began some eight or ten years ago, she was active in all church work in the various branches where she lived in the eastern part of the United States. Having been a successful school-teacher prior to her marriage, she was well fitted for her work as a Sunday school and Religio leader. Her name is also well remembered to those who labored in the Department of Women when it was known as the Daughters of Zion.

When the Sunday schools were graded into their present form and new editors were needed, she was chosen as first editor of the beginner quarterly. This was about 1912, and for two years she continued this work, when failing health forced her to drop from such activities.

Perhaps she was best known to the Saints of Willoughby and Kirtland, where she lived for so many years. Here she looked after her family, and was busy with local and district church work while her husband labored in the mission field. One of her very dear friends, at this time, was Sister E. L. Kelley, whose husband was also away from home on church duties. These missionary wives ministered to each other in times of sickness, comforted each other in distress, and labored side by side in active work.

Sister Griffiths' maiden name was Harriett Robbins. She was born June 5, 1858, and united with the church March 16, 1879, sometime after her marriage to Brother Griffiths. She was the mother of five children. Her daughters, Lulu, Harriett, and Catherine, are living; two sons, Frank and Gomer, have preceded her.

Bishop J. A. Becker, a close friend of the family, left Independence on Monday to preach the funeral sermon. The services will be held at Kirtland, Ohio, on Thursday afternoon.

Never at any time was Sister Griffiths willing to have her husband called from his field no matter what the cost meant to herself. Brother Griffiths was an apostle for more than fifty years and has been in the ministry since 1872. He was ordained a patriarch at the last General Conference. He was on a mission to the Islands at the beginning of this last sickness of Sister Griffiths'. And though she was seriously ill, she had no thought of asking him to return. It was only because the doctor earnestly advised it, that her children called him home.

Though the history of such a life is short when written, her years of service were many and full of love and self-sacrificing devotion. She wielded an influence for good both in and out of the church. The grief of "Uncle Gomer" and his daughters will be shared by all the family of Saints. Sister Griffiths was a true mother in Israel and her death will be mourned by all who knew her.

may be that changes will appear necessary, and if, for the time being, it is necessary to temporarily support the superstructure in order that the foundation may be correctly built, it must be done. I think that no one will gainsay me when I say that the foundation of society, as it is organized to-day, is, as we expressed it before, industry. And then, if we admit that industry is the basis of our present order, our task becomes that of Christianizing industry. And now I hear some of my listeners say, What a task!

Is it possible to Christianize industry? I say, Yes, when Christians live their religion, when it becomes to them an everyday affair, rather than a Sunday affair, when their religion is socialized and carried into the group life rather than kept as a matter of mere ceremony; when religion becomes the basis for a social philosophy carried out in actual activities rather than a matter of theology and scholastic discussion.

The plea made to the individual to-day, in order to arouse activity, is surplus for self. Thus we can say the social dynamic of to-day is the desire to secure surplus, that is, to acquire a competency for self. This is evident if we cite figures and we shall not attempt to cite many except to say that in this the greatest nation on the face of the earth to-day it is generally conceded that more than ninety-five per cent of the wealth is owned by less than five per cent of the people. Will anyone attempt to say that this is an equitable distribution of the results of industry? However, industry must yield more than that which keeps alive those who are devoting themselves to industry. It must not only keep them alive, but in a state of efficiency. And thus for surplus, which means ease or comfort, to be appropriated by a small number is creating a condition of society which, if rightly interpreted, spells danger. If, then, we recognize that the appeal to initiative or individual activity lies in the accumulation of the surplus, the answer to our problem is clear, namely, to socialize the surplus. And to socialize the surplus will cure most social ills to-day.

How can this be done is therefore a question which becomes of prime importance. My answer to that is that it can be accomplished only by religion. Every attempt to more equitably distribute surplus, which is the very object of social organization, it seems to me, which should be the very purpose of industry, has resulted in failure when religion has been left out. Analyze the social reforms as you will, and you will find, as I have said, that every attempt which has been followed by failure has had an absence of religion. And those partially successful efforts are those in which religion has been a large if not a dominant factor. But so far such efforts have been applied to too few.

Religion Defined

It might be necessary here in order that we shall avoid misunderstanding to briefly define what we mean by religion. By religion I do not mean adherence to ceremony, I do not mean ritual, but I would define religion as being a conscious attitude of an individual toward God, and I would socialize it by saying it must be determined by our attitude toward our brother. Hence, my answer that the solution to this present social difficulty is religion. It will require a religion which points to God as the great Father, for this connotes brotherhood. Thus the first task of the church is to inculcate such a conception of the Christian philosophy as will create the true social consciousness, a real deep-seated and active concept that men are our brothers and that in true service to our brother, our neighbor, lies the avenue through which we approach to God and by which we show our love for him.

This vision of what the Christian religion is shuts out the view that men are opponents in a fierce struggle for life or the necessities of life or even the luxuries of life, for Christianity rightly envisaged points out that our own weal, our own comfort, our own welfare, are inextricably mixed up with those of our neighbors. Individual competition, group competition make even civilized life unnecessarily and even cruelly hard. Individual and group devotion to the interests of humanity will change our social life into beneficent cooperation. But this will require a deep and emotional appreciation of religion. It will be brought about by a general recognition of the necessity for consecration, and by consecration I mean by devoting everything to the service of God. For if my interpretation as I have attempted to give briefly to-night of the Christian religion is correct, then the whole object and purpose of life is devotion to the service of God and manifestation of it by service to our brothers. Consecration, therefore, I repeat, is required, and by that I mean devoting to sacred purposes. I do not mean, however, by that to make everything exclusively church or devoted to ceremonial activities, but in the broader sense by recognizing the brotherhood of man. I believe that our whole life can and should be made a service of God.

Stewardships the Solution

This leads me more specifically to the question of how to effect this social reform. I believe the solution lies in the doctrine of stewardships, as I believe it was presented by Jesus himself. The doctrine that every man becomes an agent for God in handling, in disbursing, in improving, but not in squandering that which has been given to him to enjoy. By the doctrine of stewardships I mean more than that which is presented by some churchmen to-day as meaning a devoting of one tenth of our increase to service of the church. That does not discharge the responsibility of a steward, for when we give to God a tenth of our increase we are giving that which is, as I believe, an obligation, and therefore we are not discharging what remains that is a duty. By stewardships I mean that all shall be devoted and consecrated to the service of God as is manifested by our service to our fellow man. I mean more than that, we are answerable to God for how we dispose of and how we use the property and talents that have been given to us by the Master. I mean still further that we are answerable not alone to God but answerable to the group or to society as well. And this I believe is fundamentally Christian. Once thus envisaged it is clear that every person will become a contributor to the common weal to the maximum of his capacity, consecrating his surplus to the group. Thus and thus only will surplus become socialized. I know of course that immediately there arises in the minds of many of my listeners the question, What shall be the return to the individual as compensation? And this question is perfectly natural to those who look upon activity as being for the accumulation of the result to self. Compensation under the order of society which I would thus gladly see instituted is according to the needs of the individual and according to his just wants, all of which shall be supplied as a part of the return for the activities of the individual and his needs to be determined by conditions as they exist. This whole doctrine can be crystallized in the following words: "From every man will be expected according to his capacity, and to every man will be given according to his needs as based upon his condition."

Life Is in Serving

A society based on self-serving interests is not real life. The Christian life, the great life, begins only when we begin to live for others, which can be expressed in another way—when we learn to love neighbor as self. "I am come," said the Savior, "that ye might have life and have it more abundantly." And it is the common testimony of all those who have attempted to give their service to others that never have they experienced joy in living until they became conscious of the fact that their activity, their efforts, their work have resulted in making life easier and better and broader for others. In other words they have become conscious of God through service to their neighbor and their fellow man. To develop this more abundant life is or should be the task of the church, and to reach this goal should be its big purpose and objective.

But how is the church to bring this about? It seems to me that the answer lies in this, that it is a process of education. I might even say it is a process of religious education. I will go further and say that all education should be religious in that it is calculated to help the individual to determine his attitude toward God as reflected by his attitude toward his fellow man. Education should be conducted by society with this dual purpose in view, first to inculcate the general ideal of service, to impress upon the student from the various ways of imbibing learning until he is through with life, for then only does education cease, that his prime object in life is to find God by feeling after him through the naturally endowed way and manifest that love of God by service to those in need. This idea of education should permeate and saturate all educational activities, and let it be said to our shame that this factor is far too conspicuous by its absence in the educational activities of to-day. But of this, society seems to be coming more and more conscious.

Purpose of Education

The other purpose of education, then, should be for society to discover and develop the dominating talents and capacities of each individual who is expected to gradually become a contributor to its welfare. And then when these capacities, when these talents have been discovered by the process of education, there still remains the great social task of giving opportunity to express these in a natural way so that there shall be the maximum of contribution made from each individual in the way for which he is best suited.

For such social reform as I have tried thus briefly to outline, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints stands and works. To develop and spread such a comprehension of the gospel of Jesus Christ is our constant endeavor, for so we believe it to be the "power of God unto salvation." To this end are the activities of our various institutions directed. And in such endeavor we feel we can consistently invite all to join us.

May the Spirit of God be consciously working with the souls of my listeners, urging them to feel after God anew, with a broader and better conception of what the gospel of Jesus Christ is—the power of God unto salvation. For this salvation should begin here and now, and the more abundant life found here—not postponed to the great Beyond.

May God add his blessings.

Radio Flashes

Highland, New Jersey.—I would like to inform you that I heard your station last night with volume enough to be heard distinctly for more than forty feet from the loud speaker. The tale of the South Sea Islands given by the missionary was extremely interesting. One does not realize that men of the South Sea Islands must go to such a great depth to get shell for an ordinary pearl button. I must say that this was one of the finest addresses I have heard in a long time.—Paul J. Adair.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Thanks for your concert as of November 27, also the gentleman that spoke on the coral islands.—O. M. Stamper.

Independence, Missouri.—We have a crystal set, and being a "shut-in," while my wife is enjoying the services at the Stone Church, I enjoy them at home. Last Sunday I sat in an easy chair and heard the choir singing, the announcements and the sermon, all very fine—better than sometimes when at church, because I had no hats or other things of a distracting nature to attract my attention. We hear all the programs and regular services, unless we get absorbed in reading a book and forget to listen.—E. Rannie.

Steamship Sidney M. Hauptman.—Just happened to tune you in for about thirty seconds before you signed off. Your signals came in fairly strong here at sea 150 miles south of New York.—R. Chilcote.

Leeton, Missouri.—We heard your eleven o'clock program Sunday, December 2, also the program given in the evening. We think they were among the best that have been broadcasted. We certainly enjoyed the sermons by Brother Ellis and Brother Smith, and the music was good. The male quartet that sang, "Wandering child, come home," a few weeks ago, was excellent.—Jessie Phillips.

Saint Joseph, Missouri.—Received your Sunday morning chapel service. It was very loud and clear and we enjoyed it very much. It was the first time that we had received your signals, and you will be sure that next Sunday I will be receiving your Sunday morning service through the loud speaker. Many thanks. I send my compliments to all who help make K F I X a success.—J. H. Pitney.

Police Station, Albuquerque, New Mexico.—Church services came in fine. We enjoyed them very much. Thank you.

Dayton, Ohio.—Picked up your station a few weeks ago. A very good sermon but did not get the speaker's name. It was very much enjoyed and would appreciate hearing something about your station, when services are broadcasted, speaker's names of those hearing you. T. G. Grimmoed, Frederick Evansville, Indiana.—Glad to have had the privilege of listening in to your church services on Sunday evening, November 25. As we use a loud speaker, will sign all the names of those hearing you. T. G. Grimmoed; Frederick Grimmoed, W. A. Mauck, Mrs. W. A. Mauck.—Helen Grimmoed.

Plainfield, New Jersey.—Just a line to let you know I heard your services last night, December 2, at about 10 o'clock Eastern Standard time. After the services you announced your schedule for the coming week. Please verify this report if possible. The signals came in very clear and loud and I

There are many would-be John the Baptists trying to straighten the paths of the Lord who get their text reversed, to read: "He must decrease, but I must increase."

Men and women naturally revere the minister who brings the gospel to their knowledge. Yet in such lives a wholesome growth demands that Jesus should ever increase, while the minister who converted them, by comparison, must decrease.

If a minister remains a giant to his followers and Jesus a pygmy, something is terribly wrong with the minister.

"Hartford, Connecticut, November 27.—The fastest time in the history of amateur radio was made early to-day when a message sent by Boyd Phelps, of this city, to Captain Donald B. MacMillan's schooner Bowdoin, now frozen in off Greenland, was relayed by way of Catalina Island to the vessel and an answer received here five minutes and sixteen seconds later. The distance covered was 22,300 miles, it being twenty-five hundred miles from Hartford to Catalina Island and then 8,650 miles to the spot near Etah, Greenland, where the Bowdoin is."—Press report.

Modern science daily performs the apparently miraculous. One writing from the above-mentioned schooner, "frozen in" in the Arctic Circle, commented on the astonishment of the Eskimos when they listened to a radio concert broadcasted by the Kansas City Star. He remarked, "They cannot understand how it is done—but neither can we."

Modern science seems greatly to enlarge the powers and capabilities of the human soul. There should come a corresponding sense of dignity and responsibility.

This message that left Connecticut and crossed the continent, through the great Mississippi valley, over the towering Rocky Mountains, across the arid western deserts, through the fragrant orange groves of California, up the Pacific coast, past Alaska, to the marooned party in arctic ice, what was it? What the answer that sped silently back over the same route, all in the time that one might take to ask a question of the man at his elbow and receive his leisurely answer?

Science gives men the airplane. No longer is he chained to earth with the worm and the tortoise. He is given wings and flies across continents and seas—among the stars with the angels. His soul should be stirred to go on errands and bear tidings worthy of flight across continents and among the stars.

Science gives man the radio. He no longer shouts across the street. He need not depend upon the pony express or the slow-moving mail train. No more need he signal from hilltop to hilltop. Instead he talks from continent to continent and around the world. Time and space are negligible. This thought should fire man with the desire to speak messages worthy to be heard around the world.

Our people did well to seize this new and amazing vehicle as a conveyer of the gospel. Some credit is due the sagacity that saw ahead and prepared the instruments. Not so many years ago some of us (possibly including the writer) observing the little "sending station" back of the old Stone Church, founded and assiduously promoted by the President of the church, were inclined to smile, or possibly frown, and speak of it as "another hobby"; but to-day it bids fair to become one of our greatest missionary and publicity vehicles. And it may become one of our greatest means of intercommunication between branches and stakes.

Our programs have been heard plainly on the Atlantic coast, even some distance at sea. One man writes from New Jersey that he distinctly heard Apostle Clyde F. Ellis preach; even at a distance of forty feet from the amplifier. The Country Gentleman quotes a western man who confessed a great prejudice against our people, inherited from the early days in Missouri, who now says that having listened to us by radio he finds that we preach the old Jerusalem gospel.

Business men have told us that our radio programs have done more in Independence in a few months to break down prejudice and create a better public feeling toward our message than anything that has been done in years past.

Here is a challenge to our preachers to sound the message most worthy to be heard around the world, and to voice it in a manner worthy of its dignity. Here is a challenge to our musicians to "give wings of song to words of truth" in a way to mellow the hearts of the unseen auditors and prepare their souls for the word of God that comes so silently and mysteriously from the void to search them out at their own firesides.

Here, too, is a challenge to large missions and districts to build and equip central sending stations which can minister to any group or congregation that cares to install a receiving set and loud speaker in church or hall and invite people in to hear the gospel, or reach any private home where there is one who cares to "listen in." The isolated member need no longer to be isolated. The stranger far beyond the gates can now be reached.

It seems that thus by unanticipated and unguessed methods Providence makes possible the "hastening time." Had the early Saints been told that some day their elders would preach in Independence and be heard from coast to coast they would have been astounded. Only their great faith could have credited such a promise. Have we now the vision and the courage to utilize fully the splendid opportunities that were so far beyond their grasp?

Christmas Day

The revolution of the earth automatically attends to the primary division of time. Two suns properly posted might have given perpetual day—which no doubt would have greatly pleased man, the spoiled darling of the universe, at least until burglary and safe-blowing became one of the leading industries. But the Lord saw fit to give man the sun to light him by day, and the pale crescent of the moon with the lesser tapers of the stars to light him by night. The moon and stars serve the purpose of romance—and man finds their mellow beauty very satisfactory, especially when "she" is with him. This lighting arrangement is said to have furnished the basis for a discussion between two ancient wiseacres, as to which is most important to man, the sun or the moon. The sun man was about to carry the day, until the moon man bethought him of an unanswerable argument, to wit, that the moon shines by night when her rays are greatly needed, while the sun shines when it is broad daylight and he would never be missed. The subject of contention was quite as important as in many other controversies, and the argument as conclusive.

Nature also further divides time into seasons, at least in most climes—some less favored lands have perpetual summer and never know the joy of returning spring, the beauty and bounty of autumn, the tingling slap in the face of winter winds. Man designates more artificial divisions of time; and finding it so precious, and for him so very limited, even divides the day into hours, minutes, and as the last evidence of his regard for its golden worth, into tiny seconds. It is true that many men are of a different mind and diligently try to kill time. Always, thus far, when Time tires of such a strange duel he thrusts home, and the poor fool who thought he was killing time finds himself killed. Presumably it will continue thus.

One day is naturally much like another. They may be classified as cold or hot, rainy or snowy, cloudy, long, short, etc. But some days acquire tremendous significance because of human interest. They stand out from all other days preeminent in one or many lives. There is one's birthday, quite important to him and his family. There is the day of betrothal—the day when heaven's strong box was cracked and all the jewels of eternity fell into two hearts. There is the marriage day; the day the home was purchased; the day the firstborn came. Then there are national days. Canada has her Dominion Day; the United States has her Fourth of July; France her anniversary of the Fall of the Bastille. Many national days have to do in some way with the dawn of liberty.

But probably the day that has most significance for by far the greatest number of people the wide earth around is Christmas Day. That day has become a world festival and has to do with liberty and life. Having one great primary significance, it has in process of time acquired numerous secondary connotations that are of deepest importance to the human heart.

First of all, quite generally, it is a day of homecoming; of family reunions. On that day husband and wife plan to be together, even though the husband's work takes him abroad at other times. On that day children and grandchildren flock joyfully home to the ancestral hearth. For weeks human hearts beat high and warm in anticipation. For weeks afterward there lingers a pleasant memory—or this memory may linger for years.

Since all this touches the home and the family, and tends to strengthen the cords of family life and to buttress the foundations of home life—a very important matter to-day—since it comes so close to the heart of humanity in a very fundamental way, it is all very wholesome and praiseworthy and may be made very holy.

Surely the Lord looks with pleasure upon such gatherings of the home circle; such joy in the very things in which he intended men and women and children to have joy, must be pleasing to him. The love thus revived and strengthened between husband and wife, parents and children, brothers and sisters, is of utmost value to both church and state and to society in general. The "natural affections" sustain the health and dignity of the human soul. The generation that is "without natural affections" is indeed sick and near to death. As the greatest of all annual seasons of family reunion, Christmas has a very great significance.

Christmas Day has also become associated with giving. The wise men came bringing gifts to the infant Jesus. God himself "so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son." The custom of giving may carry forward that thought. Freed from extravagance and that excess which makes it burdensome and foolish, the custom is very fine indeed.

The first gift that the writer remembers ever purchasing for anyone was "for mother"—a silver thimble. The joy of selection, the important mystery of the safe hiding place, the great secret, the pleasure of giving, will never be forgotten. Who now grown to maturity does not remember the happiness of those first early lessons in giving? On the other hand who does not remember those Christmas eves of long ago, when, sent early to bed, he lay in the dark in moon-eyed wakefulness, listening to the rustle of wrapping papers, the whispered comments from the rooms below. The sad poverty of children who miss such an experience can never be atoned for by any sort of affluence in adult life. The riches of even poor children who have father and mother to plan some simple surprise in the form of gifts on Christmas Day can hardly be overestimated—certainly their riches are not taxable and cannot be assessed since they are of a nature that their value is incalculable.

Surely these family conspiracies, these soul-expanding secrets, these carefully planned surprises, this love wrapped up in soft tissue paper, tied with bright ribbons, and labeled, "Don't Open Till Christmas," can stir nothing less than divine pleasure. It is good to have a day of giving.

Christmas Day has become associated with the utterances of good wishes, generally wishes for happiness to others, the accepted form being: "Merry Christmas." This, too, no doubt commemorates the good wishes expressed at the birth of Jesus. Thousands of great men have been born into the world, whose advent portended terror and sorrow. Scores of philosophies have been heralded whose very nature and essence was pessimism. But when Jesus came with his philosophy, the angel said: "Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." While the chorus ran: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

So Christmas Day, the day of giving, the day of family reunions, is also the day of good wishes, of expressions of joy, of peace, of good will. No one can estimate the value of such a day in human experience.

It will be seen that the secondary significances of the day all cluster around the great primary significance, the thing that makes it the greatest day in all calendars—the day when Christ came into the world. He is the one being in whom the race finds hope. His is the only name that all powerfully suggests hope, salvation, peace. In a period of time when human schemes seem all awry, when there is confusion and strife everywhere, when men's hearts fail them for fear, when nations seem to tremble on the brink of chaos, it is good that there is one day when all may pause and with chastened hearts remember the one source of hope and salvation. Good and fine and holy as are the various uses of the day we must not forget its primary and all-important significance as the birthday of our Lord.

The Topical Prayer Service

At conventions, conferences, and reunions recently, the topical prayer service has had an ever-growing popularity. Some of its advantages are that it begins to eliminate stereotyped phrases and sameness of testimony, it takes away the sleepy atmosphere of many of our meetings, for he who talks upon the assigned subject must be alert to that which has preceded him, and it suggests a line of thought that prompts more to speak than otherwise would.

The customary procedure of the topical prayer service begins with a prepared leader who knows full well the hymns in the songbook which will apply to the chosen subject. In his opening remarks, the leader is very particular that he himself adheres to the theme. If the one in charge begins with straying remarks, little can be expected of the congregation.

If the leader is habitually a long-drawn-out speaker, the topical prayer meeting helps to shorten his customary sermon. He begins to advise in what various lines the subject can expand, instead of repeating his well-known exhortation on duty.

The opening prayers should include the subject to be discussed. It is possible then, when testimonies begin, that the topic shall move from one side of the congregation to another like a volley ball, now to a speaker in front, caught next perhaps by some one at the back of the room, now to this side, now to that, each testimony hinging upon another until it becomes a game, a story, the entire service fitting together harmoniously, and spirituality mounting to its peak.

Never once should the subject be allowed to go down. If there is any tendency to do so, the leader must tactfully, skillfully guide the meeting; a little sentence or two from the leader after a wandering testimony can often make it so applicable that the congregation fails to detect the slight loss. Besides, it is the leader's duty to be on the alert, to help the timid ones say what they meant to say in application. Just a little practice of wise guiding and the weaker ones will in time learn to make their own applications.

It does not require a group of superior intelligent people to participate in the topical prayer service, nor college trained students either. Even children can delight in it. The children who are used to it vote for it in preference to the open service, because it makes an impression upon them, and they can remember what has been said for many days afterwards. A series of prayer services with young people upon the subject, "Our gardens," took the following trend: The first topic was "The preparation of the garden," followed by such themes as, "Our tools," "The planting time," "The cultivation," "Weeding," "The completed garden," "Marketing."

In comparing life to gardens, some of the most beautiful thoughts were brought out, and many of them by mere children. There was the stirring, the mulching, the fertilizing during the period of preparation. The tool of prayer was easily determined to be the best and most needed for each person. The question of what to plant—flowers or vegetables—brought out the thought that the most valuable garden contains both the beautiful things which delight the eye and the useful things which prolong life. So God's work needs our talent of music, song, and art; yet it needs equally the labor of our hands and hearts. Our daily tasks are as important as the so-called church work of music, songs, and sermons.

At the hour when the perfected garden was discussed, it was learned that many are so busy building walls to hide the weeds that even the flowers are neglected, and that other gardens are hidden by fences of thorns or barbs, while the best garden was open to all with its winding walks, a plot of sunshine here, and cool and shady rest places there. In its perfection the Master comes to walk and talk with us.

Then lastly came the marketing, when it was decided not to pluck the smallest flowers and meanest vegetables to share with others, but to give the best wholeheartedly to the Master's service.

Note some typical testimonies of young people from the age of eight to twelve talking upon a given subject. Notice their brevity and simplicity, yet the depth of meaning they express even to older ones:

From a ten-year-old girl, "I have been like the little heart's ease (pansy) in the garden. I have been trying to hide away. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may scatter what little good I can."

From a younger child, "I think I've been building a wall about my garden. I don't want it to go any farther. I'm going to try to do better now and show people what nice things I can grow in my garden."

From another child, "I am going to cultivate my garden and try to take down all the barbs and thorns."

Here is one very characteristic of a boy, from a lad about twelve years old, "I think what my garden needs is pep. I think I need to plant some peppers. I am going to try to be more enthusiastic in church work and not get lazy."

Is there a need for dry prayer meetings with so many live things to talk about? He who is content with a set testimony is making no progress spiritually. Wake up! Listen to your leader. When in his opening remarks he starts a theme, help him keep the ball in the air.

The gift you gave your friend last Christmas was well appreciated. Don't take the same gift back and present it to him this year. The testimony you gave ten years ago is still acceptable to the Lord, but he will be more pleased to hear a new one.

It has very forcibly come to our attention that the majority of the church membership take none of the church papers, and hence are not in very close touch with the church outside the branch of which they are members. During the receiving of Christmas subscriptions, one branch consisting of over fifty families (not persons but families) was noted to subscribe for three HERALDS, two Ensigns, and one Autumn Leaves. We sincerely hope this is not even a poor index to the spirituality, or may we even say the vitality, of that branch.

The Herald Publishing House offers a club subscription for $4.25, which brings to your door the three church papers for one year. What better Christmas present can you give your family?

The Standard of Christianity

Sermon by Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, November 25, 1923.

We have selected for a lesson reading this morning the entire 8th chapter of 1 Corinthians:

Now as touching things offered unto idols, we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth. And if any man think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. But if any man love God, the same is known of him. As concerning therefore the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one. For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many,) but to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him. Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge: for some with conscience of the idol unto this hour eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conscience being weak is defiled. But meat commendeth us not to God; for neither, if we eat, are we the better; neither, if we eat not are we the worse. But take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumblingblock to them that are weak. For if any man see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols; and through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died? But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.

In connection with what we have just read, we desire to read a few verses from the 7th chapter of Matthew, commencing with the 21st verse and reading to the conclusion of the 23d:

Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity.

Another version of the Bible says, "Depart from me; ye never knew me."

In connection with these verses I shall read from the book of Romans, the 6th chapter and the 16th to 18th verses inclusive:

Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness? But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.

I do not know what you people expect to hear this morning. I think this is the second time I have ever spoken to you from this stand. I think in our lesson there is ample material for us to consider, ample scripture for us to meditate upon, and I trust we shall be able to bring forth some of that material and to digest and assimilate some of it.

Teachings Misunderstood

From the very beginning of this church in 1830, when it had its organization, we have occupied a very peculiar and unique position in the Christian world. Some of our teachings have been greatly misunderstood and misinterpreted by some; yet while they misinterpreted and misunderstood them, they were, no doubt, conscientious in their belief.

This condition that has existed in the Christian world for so long has changed to a great extent from what it was a few years ago, and as we go out into the world and present the Christian religion, the gospel of Jesus Christ, we are meeting to-day a far different condition. One of the things with which we are confronted as we go out to preach the gospel of Christ is this thought: that if we are conscientious or sincere in our belief, in our Christian worship and attitude, we shall receive through that sincerity and conscientiousness eternal life in its fullness when the time comes for the rewards to be meted out to mankind. That is the thought we have in mind this morning to emphasize particularly. I am sorry to say we are not only confronted with this position as we go out and present the gospel to an unbelieving world, but also the same idea prevails among those who are Christian people, who profess to obey the gospel.

The words of our text are the words of Jesus Christ. He came as the Savior of man. He came and delivered to us the message of life by which and through which we have the privilege of obtaining everlasting life, provided we apply that law to our very souls. He tells us in the words of our text that not every man that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many say, have said, and I presume there are those who always will continue to say, that we have the privilege of determining for ourselves what our conduct in the world shall be, and what the law shall be by which we shall be governed or controlled. And some not only take that position with reference to the law that should control us and prepare us for everlasting life, but go so far as to say that we have the privilege of making our own law or of determining what our own law shall be with reference to our social conduct and our interrelations with one another in the world.

Christ Established the Church

If Christ came to give us a message and a church, to give us that law or right by which we have the privilege of obtaining everlasting life, I think we should accept that law by which our consciences should be controlled. I believe if we are to give unto every man the privilege of determining for himself what his conduct shall be and the laws that he shall obey by which he may obtain life, we would have chaos and trouble and perhaps greater differences of opinion in the Christian world than we have today. The very fact that there are many organizations claiming to teach the pure and unadulterated gospel of Jesus Christ has been one of the main factors in bringing about that condition of infidelity and disbelief in the minds and hearts of men that we now have in the world. But Jesus when he was here emphasized the thought that it was not every man that said unto him, Lord, Lord, that should enter into the kingdom of heaven. He said that many should come and say, "Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name?" yet the Lord will say unto them, "Depart from ye, ye workers of iniquity; ye never knew me."

To show you, my friends, that it is possible for us to educate our consciences to believe something that is wrong may be right, or something that is right may be wrong, let us consider for a moment the meaning of that word conscience, and then from the biblical standpoint see if we can find whether or not the conscience of man is the thing by which he shall determine his conduct in this life and his method of worship and preparation for that life which is to come. We are told that the meaning of the word conscience is this: "Sense or consciousness of the moral goodness or blameworthiness of one's own conduct, intentions, or character, together with a feeling of obligation to do or be that which is recognized as good."

Standard for Conscience Needed

Conscience, then, is a faculty or power by which one is enabled to decide the quality of his own thoughts and acts and that which is good. If we can see that through environment and the forces and influences wrought upon us from day to day in our work in life our conscience is influenced, then the concept of what is good or what is right can very readily and easily be changed. Without a common standard, one that will lead us and direct us and protect us throughout our life from the influence of environment, we will be led into divers ways, and the result will be chaos and trouble to the individual, or to the group, as the case may be. I think it was for that very reason that Jesus Christ, the Savior of men, came and established the plan of salvation, gave unto us a law, and organized his church whereby we have the privilege of working out our own soul salvation and preparing ourselves for an entrance into that more abundant life that he came to give.

We are told by the Apostle Paul in Hebrews 10 and 22, speaking of Christ: "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience and our bodies washed with pure water."

There are two or three things that we wish to emphasize in this verse, and they are these: That we are to draw near with a true heart and full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. Those who have been taught to believe that we have the right as men and women to govern ourselves by our consciences may well read this statement where he speaks with reference to or concerning an evil conscience. It is not only possible for us to have a good conscience, but it is also possible for us to have an evil conscience; and the state or quality of this conscience is determined by the education we give it and the influences that are permitted to be brought to bear upon it.

The thought, however, that I wanted to emphasize in this verse this morning is this: that we should draw close to God with a true heart and with a full assurance of faith, having our consciences void of evil, removing the evil tendencies. Thereby, through a pure heart and through the full assurance of hope and a good conscience, we will be able to approach God and receive what he has in the great fullness of his power to give us.

The Plan of Salvation

In connection with that we read also in Hebrews 9: 14, speaking concerning the time of Israel when they were sacrificing bulls and goats, which were only types and shadows of the great offering Christ was to make when he came unto them, that Paul says: "How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God." The blood of Christ could not have accomplished its purpose, could not have sealed that eternal law, could not have made efficacious that law of salvation, had it not been for that power that stood back of it, for that power that sent him into this world to offer himself a ransom and a sacrifice for man. The very fact that the eternal power of heaven was standing back of Christ, back of his great mission, back of this law, emphasizes to us this morning the fact that there is efficacy in the blood of Christ, and this still is made potential now through the power of God, as Paul says in this verse, through the eternal spirit which accompanied it and made it possible to become the means of saving us from our sin.

But note the statement in the latter part of this verse, wherein it says that he offered himself without spot to God, and yet he said in another place, "I do only those things which my Father hath commanded me." He followed not the dictates of his own mind, but rather subjected himself to the mind of God, the God who sent him, who was his Father and the one who with Christ devised the great plan of salvation. He came and subjected himself to God's law, to God's mind, and gave us this plan of salvation. Christ was so successful in his life that he became a sacrifice without spot, and now he says that through this our conscience should be purged from dead works whereby we may be able to serve the living God.

May I emphasize the thought this morning that although we may be professors of religion or Christianity, it is quite possible that we have not yet purged our consciences from dead works and made ourselves to believe something that is wrong is right and something that is wrong is wrong. Also it is quite possible that we sometimes teach ourselves that very thing, and yet we as a Christian people go out and present to the world that simply to be conscientious in our religious belief, conscientious in our service, is not all that is necessary. We should purify our evil consciences from dead works. May we be able this morning to make a personal, individual examination of our lives to see whether or not there are dead works in them that have been done and are being done from day to day because of having taught our consciences to believe things are right when they are wrong.

Setting Examples for Others

In the lesson I read to you this morning from the 8th chapter of 1 Corinthians you will remember that the Apostle Paul speaks of the class of people who have weak consciences. He says there, speaking of this class of people, that some eat the meat that is offered unto idols, and because of their weak consciences are led to follow in that worship and are defiled, while others who may have stronger consciences than the former ones may eat the meat that is offered unto idols and not be defiled because of their stronger consciences and their ability to withdraw from that condition and think no more of it. And he gives this instruction, that if there be a class of people who have weak consciences, who may think that something they are doing is right and yet they are in the wrong, we who have strong consciences should not partake of those things. We may be able to withdraw from that condition or thing after entering into it or partaking of it once or twice, yet we should refrain from doing that for the sake of the brother or sister who has a weak conscience and who would be defiled through our entering into or partaking of that condition. Paul goes on and says in the latter part of that same chapter, "For if any man see thee which hath knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols?" Those who were eating those things did not have the knowledge of the one true God; they were worshiping idols. But there were others who had this knowledge, as he says in the first part of this chapter, and those who had this knowledge of the one God went and partook of the sacrifices offered unto idols; and by so doing, those who did not have this knowledge were defiled. He further says that through thy knowledge the weak brother shall perish.

We to-day do not engage in that system of worship whereby we offer sacrifices of goats and bulls upon the altar made with hands; nevertheless we are perhaps doing many things that are just as wrong as those things were in that day. And with our knowledge of God, with our knowledge of Christ and his power, that he came and demonstrated in being the Savior of man, with our knowledge of the gospel, through our doing these things we will do those who do not have this knowledge a great injury and lead them to continue in those avenues of conduct that shall cause their destruction as individuals and groups, and through the influences that we have cast over their lives shall finally cause the loss perhaps of their salvation.

The Single Standard of God

There is a good lesson in this for us. I know that the people of God expect more from a minister than they do from a member of the church. I have heard it stated many times that the minister should set a better example and keep himself above reproach; as much as to say that there is more required of him than is required of a member of the church. While it is true I recognize the fact this morning that I, with my brethren, must keep myself above reproach and as spotless as it is possible for me to do, yet I do not think that God has given me a standard that cannot and does not apply to you as well as to me. God has only one standard, and that which he requires of me he requires of you. And if there is anything that I enter into or that I might enter into to-morrow, day after to-morrow, or next week, or any day in the year, that would solicit or merit your criticism, that same thing would merit my criticism if you enter into the thing which you deny me the privilege of doing. God has given us just one standard, and we should not teach our consciences to believe that something that is wrong is right and that something that is right is wrong. Let me emphasize this thought: The statement is made by the Apostle Paul that we as men and women, professing to be followers of Jesus Christ and with the knowledge of this one true God, should not enter into those things that would be the means of defiling the consciences of the brother or sister or friend who is weak and who is looking to us for strength and support and for an example.

Practices Among the Heathens

To more fully illustrate the thought that I have in mind that it is wrong for us to educate our consciences to believe certain things that may not be in accordance with the law that has been given, and that our conscience is not the proper guide but a creature of education, I will mention something concerning the people with whom I have been laboring for several years. Seven years out of the past nine years I have been ministering to a people who are very primitive, only one hundred and twenty-six years removed from idolatry, from cannibalism, from heathenism in its worst form; and all of the evils that can attend such a system of worship I assure you attended and followed them in their religious, national, and social life. These people live upon the islands of the sea many miles from here, isolated from us, isolated from the civilized world. Through the course of years, through the course of generations, they taught themselves to believe that their system of worship was right, that sacrifices were right. They sacrificed their own brothers and sisters, their fathers and mothers, their relatives and friends. They sacrificed them because they believed it was right for them to do so. They did it to appease the anger of their gods. Many are the customs and teachings which were peculiar to that people that were adhered to by them for centuries, for generations, because they believed that the things they were doing were right. And when the Christian religion was taken to them only a few years ago they refused to accept it and opposed it; but through the influence that was brought to bear upon them, through the operation of the power of God and the unceasing teaching of the gospel to them by those who were sent to labor among them, they finally laid aside their idolatrous and cannibalistic practices and accepted the gospel in its purity. I simply refer to this as an illustration of what I have in mind.

To be sincere and conscientious in thinking that we are doing the right things is not always the proper guide. What is the guide? What is that thing by which we are to know how we shall form our lives and direct our conduct in the world? We glean something relative to that from the latter part of our text which reads this way:

Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death or of obedience unto righteousness? But God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you.

The Apostle Paul is speaking of a "form of doctrine." In another translation it is rendered this way, "another system of truth."

The World System of Law

The whole world is governed by law. It is necessary that this system of truth should govern in all things in order that we have system and not chaos in the world. So God has given a law to govern these things.

It is quite the same with reference to our spiritual conduct. Were you to form your own system of worship and follow the dictates of your own conscience; were another to do the same until every man in the world had formed a system of worship by which his conduct was determined, I think you can readily see what condition we would soon be in. The very fact that we are not our own creator, that we were created by some power greater than ourselves, should be evidence enough, I think, that that power who has created us and brought us into existence should determine what our conduct shall be in preparing ourselves for life both here and hereafter. And so it was stated by the apostle in recording the 7th chapter of Matthew and the 28th verse: "It came to pass that when Jesus had ended these sayings the people were astonished at his doctrine, for he taught them as one having authority and not as the scribes." Evidently that is why Jesus said in the text we selected for this morning's thought, "Not every man that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of the Father which is in heaven." This will is that doctrine which Matthew speaks of that Jesus taught and which brought about great astonishment in the minds of men, and although we may do many wonderful things and say, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name?" yet we may come far short of the standard that has been set.

The thing that the Apostle Paul thanked the Lord for was this, that the Saints in Rome had obeyed this form of doctrine from the heart, because of their desire to obey that law. Let me emphasize that: they served God because they wanted to serve him, because of the knowledge they had received.

concerning his law. I think from the statement made by Paul it is quite conclusive that if we serve our consciences and allow those things to become the things we serve, and we obey them, our form of worship cannot and will not be accepted of God. We are told in Samuel that obedience is better than sacrifice, and in our service to God let us try to do those things that will please him and thereby make our obedience such as will merit his approval.

We offer our sacrifices here this morning, our spiritual sacrifices at the altar, the throne of Christ; and in the sacrifices that we offer if they are not seasoned with that spiritual salt which should characterize them, they will not be as beneficial or powerful in the forming and developing of our Christian life or character as they would be were we to season them with that spiritual salt with which they should be characterized. "You have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you."

A Service of the Heart

In conclusion let me emphasize that our service should be the service of the heart. Let us not serve merely because it is custom. I wonder how many there are here to-day who are Latter Day Saints because their fathers or their mothers were. I wonder how many there are here who have come to worship because some of their relatives and friends and family come. While it is commendable that we come to the house of God, yet we should come and develop a service that is from the heart.

Our text this morning says, "Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into heaven." Although we may feed our consciences this or that, we may make ourselves believe that certain things are right or wrong, yet the fact remains that the law that God gave through his Son, the gospel delivered by him, is the only law that will finally give unto us everlasting life in its fullness. While we receive a reward and a portion of that everlasting life through the service of goodness and kindness that we render to our fellow men day by day, that everlasting life in its fullness cannot be received other than through the plan that has been given by God through his Son Jesus. I thank you.

Much has been said and written about reforms but almost nothing about reform. "Reforms" is a certain type of collective behavior which has come into existence under conditions of modern life, and out of this has grown the reformer, a professional. This vocation is revolutionary in its nature. Reform, on the other hand is not revolution. It does not seek to change the standards of society but rather to change conditions in conformity with the standards.

PART VII

[Miss Blanche Edwards, instructor at Graceland College, supervisor of the Young Women's Bureau of the Department of Women, and assistant superintendent of the Department of Religious Education, finds more in the lives of women than mere house-keeping. In this very splendid article, on "What shall our women do to be saved?" which was delivered in an address at the recent General Conference, Miss Edwards says of home building, "What greater task, what holier mission can be assigned to any human being?"

This article does not apply to any particular chapter in the textbook, so those studying the course are advised to read chapter 7 and follow the Outline of Course of Study appearing herewith.—EDITORS.]

What Must Our Women Do to Be Saved?

By Blanche Edwards

ENDYMION

A thing of beauty is a joy forever:
Its loveliness increases; it will never Pass into nothingness; but still will keep
A bower quiet for us, and a sleep
Full of sweet dreams, and health, and quiet breathing;
Therefore, on every morning, are we wreathing
A flowery band to bind us to the earth,
Spite of despondence, of the inhuman dearth
Of noble natures, of the gloomy days,
Of all the unhealthy and o'er-darkened ways,
Made for our searching: yes, in spite of all,
Some shape of beauty moves away the pass
From our dark spirits. Such the sun, the moon,
Trees old, and young, sprouting a shady boon
For simple sheep; and such are daffodils
With the green world they live in; and clear rills
That for themselves a cooling covert make
'Gainst the hot season; the mid forest brake,
Rich with a sprinkling of fair musk-rose blooms:
And such too is the grandeur of the dooms
We have imagined for the mighty dead;
All lovely tales that we have heard or read:
An endless fountain of immortal drink,
Pouring unto us from the heaven's brink.

Nor do we merely feel these essences
 For one short hour; no, even as the trees
 That whisper round a temple become soon
 Dear as the temple's self, so does the moon,
 The passion poesy, glories infinite,
 Haunt us till they become a cheering light
 Unto our souls, and bound to us so fast,
 That, whether there be shine, or bloom o'ercast,
 They always must be with us, or we die.

—John Keats.

A Thing of Beauty

A hundred years ago John Keats wrote this poem that since has grown to mean much to so many men and women. Experience has proved that his statement is true, that a thing of beauty is without doubt a joy forever, and its loveliness certainly increases. One has only to think of the beauty of the flowers, of the perfection of the skies, and to remember the uplift that always comes from the contemplation of good pictures to realize that this young man was indeed a true prophet.

I wonder if the reverse is true, that an ugly thing is a grief forever, its ugliness increasing. Sometimes I am inclined to think it is, but when I think of the worst kind of ugliness, that of sin and wrongdoing, I unfortunately have to think that it is not true for many of us, since by constantly hearing and seeing the results of sin, one's sense of the dreadfulness of it becomes blunted. The knowledge of the existence of sin no longer shocks us, so that it is possible for us to drift on through life without realizing where we are trending. It is possible to be so accustomed to sin that it ceases to distress us as once it did. Therefore this morning it is my aim to call a halt for a short time in order that we may consider our position.

The majority of the people present this morning are church members; as such do we need to be saved? In other words, is there any evil from which we hope to be protected; any contamination from which we pray to be free; any temptation that we ask to be spared; any pitfall that lurks in our path; any danger that besets us. If so, from these we desire to be saved. If you think for a moment, many things will confront us from which most decidedly we long to be saved.

How Insincerity Affects Life

It is said that women are more artificial than men; that they will put up a harder struggle to keep up appearances; that they are more apt to pretend to be better than they are. It seems to me that this is a very debatable ground, a field of discussion that I have no intention of entering this morning. Whatever may be the truth of the case, if indeed it be possible to find the truth of the matter, this much I know, that both men and women are capable of being tempted to pose as being better in many ways than they are. The very laudable desire to show our friends our best side may lead us to affect a position that is beyond our power to fill. Do not misunderstand me and think that I mean you should not pay honor to your friends, to hosts, and guests. When you are visiting, by all means make yourself look as neat and attractive as possible out of respect to one's hostess, but every time let the costume be within your income. At all times let your conversation be exactly true. Avoid the little inferences that would make our social standing higher than it really is. The truth, the whole truth, and the truth in one's heart. One is easily tempted to say, "I am not responsible for what others think, only for what I say." But we are responsible when a half truth gives a false impression and we know it. Does this seem to you trivial that I should mention dress, and speech? To me it is anything but trivial, for the root of it lies in insincerity, and when one allows oneself to become insincere in one point, before long one is insincere in other and more vital points. So that if we allow insincerity to hold sway in thought and in speech, there will assuredly come a time when it will hold sway in our work and our worship. An old proverb says, "There are tricks in every trade." If we give way to insincerity, we are tempted to use these tricks to cheapen our workmanship by cutting corners to practice petty deceptions, to conceal the imperfection in it, and to cover up weak places. We are tempted to turn out shoddy work in place of reliable. Whenever I see a piece of Wedgwood china I receive another lesson in the value of sincerity. Josiah Wedgwood has a particular attraction for me since his life work was done quite close to my home. He was a potter, and his artistic soul refused to be satisfied with the clumsy and often ugly articles turned out from the potteries every day. After many experiments he succeeded in discovering a process by which china could be painted, glazed, and beautified. In time he became a master of men, and turned out many scores of his beautiful articles.

Yet it is not for this contribution to the world's progress that we honor him but for the fact that every article bearing his name was absolutely genuine, and as perfect as human skill and ingenuity could make it. More than once when he visited his work rooms, has he destroyed vases showing a slight flaw, so that one could guarantee the perfection of each article bearing his name. Absolute sincerity was his motto. It is for this that his name is honored among us.

Building Character

C. W. Fiske says: "Fraudulent workmanship cheats two people, both the person paying good money for poor work, and the workman who is undermining his own character by his bad workmanship. Everyone who cheats, cheats himself most, for it all reacts upon his character. An honest piece of work has real, moral value. As the tiny polyps in the South Seas build their very bodies into the coral reefs, so every workman builds his life into his work, and his workmanship into his character. Our manual labor would take on new meaning for us if we could only imagine the Carpenter of Nazareth serving as our daily inspector. If we should submit to him our finished work every day, seeking his expert scrutiny, and hoping for his official O. K. on what we have done, just what effect would this have on the kind of work we do? It would certainly tend to make us do honest work every hour of the day. It would help to make our whole life sincere, genuine to the core."

From insincerity in every form, speech, friendship, work, worship, may we have courage to deliver ourselves.

Again, quoting from Fiske: "The world says, 'Happy are the proud and the rich. Happy are the ambitious pushers. Happy are the voluptuous pleasure seekers. Happy are the quarrelsome who fight for their honor.'"

What a picture! And yet one sees them on every hand, these "ambitious pushers," willing to sacrifice home and all that it means, the joy, the comforts of the association of friends, willing to suppress God-given instincts and stultify their own development in a relentless determination to "make a name."

We are told that actions speak louder than words. If this is so, there are many hundreds who to-day believe in the worldly wise creed, "Happy are the proud and the rich." It is only necessary to visit West End, London, or Fifth Avenue, New York, or indeed any of the so-called high-class society districts in any city, to read the society column of the average daily newspaper, to find how the rich and proud are exalting themselves, and spending their lives chasing social distinction.

But look what Jesus said, "Blessed are the meek, the gentle, the unassuming, for they shall inherit the earth; happy are the humble, the poor in spirit." Can you imagine a greater contrast? At times I almost think that we are developing among us a class spirit, a west-end group as opposed to the east-end. I hope I am wrong.

The False Ideal of Happiness

From false ideals of happiness may we be delivered. Unworthy ambition entices us in a very adroit fashion. It whispers to the business man, "I will make you a magnate; you shall control great industries." To the capable woman it says, "You shall be the power behind great concerns; your mind shall control great undertakings; your voice shall sway great multitudes; to you shall be given the satisfaction of hearing men constantly sing your praises; your name shall be on all men's tongues."

In its wisdom, unworthy ambition presents to us every time the thing at which we most desire to excel. In its meanness it only shows one side of the question, the personal aggrandizement and together with its fellow worker, False Ideals, lures us on to spending our lives for our own gratification rather than for the benefit of our fellows, so we need to be saved from unworthy ambitions and the call of false ideals.

No one will deny that the nations are facing severe crises, nationally, internationally, industrially, and religiously. It is of the latter that I wish to speak. The late war shook the morals of the world from center to circumference. Many creeds were weighed in the balance and found wanting. With men dying by thousands it is no wonder that human life came to be held very cheaply. When the flimsy beliefs proved unequal to the strain imposed upon them, and so many men and women felt themselves with no anchor for their souls, it was an easy matter to slip into wickedness and let morality sink to its lowest ebb. I would not be foolish enough to say that the war was the only cause. By no means! But the war gave immorality a great impetus, and human nature sank to depths from which it has not yet recovered. It is only necessary to read the average daily newspaper to find record of the most sacred vows lightly broken, most solemn pledges violated, homes wrecked, and lives blighted, often with an unconcern that becomes heartrending to a thoughtful reader.

Problems of Our Church Women

And what has this to do with the women of our church? This—the scandal, crime, divorces, echo and reecho round about us. Whether we wish it or not, we cannot help hearing of them. It is almost impossible for our lives not to be affected by this. Certainly many things that might be legitimate means of recreation, enjoyment, and development are barred to us because they have become tainted by the immorality all too prevalent around us to-day. You will recognize with me the dire need that we should be protected from the contamination of evil.

In our endeavor to keep ourselves free from the stain of this wrongdoing, we have tended to withdraw ourselves further and further within the seclusion of our own homes, and have endeavored to live our lives within its four walls. There should be safety here. It is possible to gain a degree of security and a measure of spiritual development just as in the same sense there was protection and spiritual growth in the monasteries and abbeys of medieval times. But the danger is that we shall become so absorbed in the material things of home life that the soul has less and less chance of developing.

This is particularly true of women. Their lives are so crowded, the daily round is so full, the common tasks so many that there is a danger of our neglecting mental and spiritual growth. There is a danger that the days shall be tyrannized over by the drudgery of housework. In our anxiety to satisfy the material wants of our family we forget the need of mental and spiritual food and exercise. It has been truly said, that it is not bread only that keeps a man alive but the message of God to his soul. I came across a very beautiful phrase the other day which means more to me as I think of it: "Let us call our housework home work, for home work is a privilege, not a drudgery."

Many mothers are tempted to think that their lives are narrow and confined. Too often this is so because we allow it to be. It need not be. "It is difficult to conceive a more complicated task than that given to the mother to open the capacities of mind, body, and spirit so that life may flow in upon his young soul. What greater task, what holier mission can be assigned to any human being! While it is no easy task to be the mother of a noble child, yet God assigns high honors to motherhood, and many of the good things of life pass into insignificance when compared with the wealth of life that comes to the men and women who in purity and devotion preside over their homes.

No one can see what work for God and humanity that child in your home may some day undertake. As one modern writer says, "Your clearness of intellect, your purity of purpose, your integrity of conscience will pass into that boy, or that girl and some of the work for God you dreamed of doing they will do. In other words, you will do it through them. Hannah's faith found its largest fulfillment not in the birth and infancy of her son, but in the purity and strength of the prophet judge and his illustrious career. The answer to Hannah's prayer was the prayerfulness of Samuel."

How glad I am that this is true not once but again and again, with my own people, with many more here. Here we gain some of our reward, a reward so rich, so full that many times from a full heart our mothers whisper, "My cup runneth over." It is possible to go on enumerating many things from which we strive to be saved, from which we pray to be protected, from disease, misfortune, insincerity, dead religion, a form of godliness but denying the power thereof, false ideals, narrow-mindedness, mental stagnation; in short, from all the miseries that inevitably follow wrongdoing or the failure to do right. From all this in the words of the Anglican Church ritual, "Good Lord, deliver us."

The Greatest Privilege

So far I have only spoken negatively, but there is another side to the subject which is far more attractive. We should be the happiest people in the world, for to us is given such a wonderful vision of the will of God and such a unique opportunity of assisting to bring about the fulfillment of his purpose that in spite of disappointments and discouragements, there should be deep within our hearts a constant well-spring of courage and joy.

In the busy rush of the day we are apt to forget that we have been called to be colaborers with Jesus himself. We are apt to forget what a high and holy calling is ours, but I rejoice that there is open to us a means whereby we can come into close touch with our Father and again see the vision of his will. I am glad that in spite of the hurry and scurry of the day, we are able to enjoy the companionship of Jesus, that by prayer we can tell him of our joys and he will rejoice with us, of our perplexities and sorrows and he will give us his peace and his sympathy. When we are tired and worn with the struggle, we can come to him who said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." We are sure of receiving strength and fortitude. Through the channel of prayer we may let the Spirit of God into our lives with a power that nothing else can give. We may link our puny strength with the mighty power of God.

I love to think of him slipping quietly away to a secluded place on the hillside to speak with his Father, to gain strength to enable him to withstand the scorn, the ridicule, the bitter criticisms and persecutions and to realize ever more clearly what God wished him to do. Here he received in large measure the wisdom, the patience, the spiritual insight so necessary for him to accomplish his work, and I am deeply grateful for the beautiful example he has bequeathed us. So to-day I am happy in the thought that if we will we can save ourselves to this close communion with God. We may form a life partnership with him, and by prayer God's untiring patience and unwearied strength can enter our souls and make us men and women of power.

Keeping Abreast of the Times

But I would not limit this partnership to prayer only, but would certainly include a study of God's word and all good books. Times are changing. The easy maxims that satisfied previous generations will not meet our present needs. The principles of the gospel of Jesus have never changed, but it is necessary for Latter Day Saints to keep abreast of the times. We must be constantly rethinking the teachings of Christ and reevaluating them, to make them meet the needs of our present-day society. In order to do this it is vital that making the study of God's work we meditate upon it, and make it a part of our lives.

It is impossible for us to be able intelligently to adjust ourselves to the demands of present-day living without a knowledge of current events. I know that we have so little time in which to become acquainted with much of what is going on in the world, but unless we have some knowledge of present-day happenings we cannot form just opinions or come to correct decisions. Without this twofold knowledge, that of the teachings of Jesus and that of modern needs we cannot hope to make a worthy contribution to church or society. I am glad that it lies within the power of all to save themselves to an ever-present vision of God's will.

Being True to a Trust

Yet this vision and this realization of our needs are not in themselves sufficient. In some way or other the results from our communion with God, the results from the study of his word, and of to-day's needs must flow out in benefit to mankind. On every hand people are watching. Our friends, knowing our possibilities, are looking for every evidence of proving our talents, every fresh proof of our ability. Either they are coming to rely more and more upon our growing usefulness or we are forcing them to realize that we are failing to justify their faith in us. It is no easy task as you know to live up to the hopes of one's friends. Often it is a stiff challenge; they are constantly looking to you to do something; maybe they long to see you overcome some defects in your disposition which are hindering you from attaining your highest development. It may be that they look to you to be a leader among your fellows. Probably God has given you knowledge, power, skill, character, and the vision to become a great leader. Your friends are looking to you to use these gifts.

It may be that you are one of those soothing, comforting, strengthening women, whose presence is a blessing wherever they go. If so, your friends are relying upon your help. Your special field may be in the home; it may be for you to make it possible for the family to enjoy frequent happy hours round the fireplace, the piano, or the library table, that the home may retain the love and loyalty of its growing boys and girls that they will be proud of their home and people and glad to bring their friends there. Is your home a place of wonderful tenderness, love, and patience, a beautiful thing that will live in the hearts of its children forever, that they will never fail to thank God for it and for you as long as they live; is it indeed a bit of heaven? It is difficult, I know, since we are all human with the weaknesses of human beings, but it is possible. It should be particularly possible for Latter Day Saints.

Anyway, wherever your gifts may be, your friends are looking to you in the hope that you will develop them and give to the world the best that is in you. If this is true of friends, how much more true will it be of God? So that our meditation, our study, our communion with God loses a high percentage of its value when we fail to allow it to benefit our fellows. How deeply Jesus felt the importance of unselfish kindness we do not realize until we see him making it a great test of character in his dramatic picture of the judgment. When the king will say to those on his right hand, "Come, my Father's blessed sons, receive your inheritance in the kingdom prepared for you from the world's beginning. For when I was hungry you fed me, when I was thirsty you gave me drink, when I was homeless you took me home, when I was half-naked you clothed me, when I was sick and in prison you came to see me."

To this the good will answer, "When did we ever see you hungry and feed you, or thirsty and give you drink? When did we see you a stranger and take you home? Or half naked and clothe you? Or when did we see you sick and in prison and come to visit you?" Then the king will answer and say, "I tell you very truly, inasmuch as you have done all this kindness to my brothers, even the humblest of them, you have done it to me."

A Life of Service

The same great teacher gave to a proud and haughty sect a startlingly new thought. Sitting quietly on the hillside he taught his disciples that blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. How astonished some of the self-righteous Pharisees must have been and how comforted were the poor, humble, unassuming folks to know that it was not necessary to be an aristocrat in order to inherit eternal life. I am glad that God has again reminded us in these days, that if we desire to have a part in this work, we must be humble and full of love.

Only the humble people seem to have time to help each other. The proud usually place such a high value on their time that they consider it too precious to be spent on anything but the most approved people or schemes, but the humble, counting themselves of naught, give freely of their time, talent, energy, themselves. Of such caliber are hosts of physicians, nurses, teachers, ministers, and vast laity who simply go about doing good.

As for love—well, you know what Paul says about it:

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not charity, I become as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal; and though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains and have not charity, I am nothing; and though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

So spoke a former-day disciple; and a latter-day follower, endeavoring to help us to catch the vision, tells us that "patience, kindness, generosity, humility, courtesy, unselfishness, good temper, guilelessness, sincerity, these make up the supreme gifts, the stature of a perfect man. God is love. Therefore without distinction, without calculation, without procrastination—Love. Lavish it upon the poor where it is very easy, on the rich who often need it most; most of all on our equals where it is very difficult, and for whom, perhaps, we each do least of all. Lose no chance in giving pleasure for that is the ceaseless and anonymous triumph of a truly loving spirit." Have we not cause then to rejoice that we can be saved to a life so full of beauty as the one pictured here?

Salvation

Finally, there is much to be saved from, much to be saved to. It will take our whole life intelligently planned, lived in close communion with God and flowing out in service to our fellows in order that we may be saved from evil to the glory of God, and at last merit a place in his kingdom.

I cannot express it better than by calling your attention to the words of Henry Drummond:

Do not quarrel with your lot in life. Do not complain of its neverceasing cares, its petty environment, the vexations you have to stand, the small and sordid souls you have to live and work with. Above all do not resist temptation, do not be perplexed because it seems to thicken round you more and more and ceases neither for effort, nor for agony, nor prayer. This is your practice, this is the practice which God appoints you and it is having its work in making you patient, humble, generous, unselfish, kind, and courteous. Do not grudge the hand that is molding the still too shapeless image within you. It is growing more beautiful though you see it not, and every touch of temptation may add to its perfection. Therefore keep in the midst of life. Do not isolate yourself, be among men and among things and among troubles and difficulties and obstacles. You remember Goethe's words, "Talent develops itself in solitude; character in the spring of life." Talent develops itself in solitude—the talent of prayer, of meditation of faith, of seeing the unseen. Character grows in the stream of the world's life. That chiefly is where men are to learn love. Love is not a thing of enthusiastic emotion. It is rich, strong, manly, vigorous expression of the whole, round Christian character. The Christlike nature in its fullest development, and the constituents of this great character are only to be built up by constant practice. Contemplate the love of Christ and you will love. . . .

Stand before that mirror, reflect Christ's character and you will be changed into the same image from tenderness to tenderness. There is no other way. You cannot love to order, you can only look at the lovely object and fall in love with it and grow into likeness to it. And so look at this perfect character, this perfect life. Look at the great sacrifice as he lay down himself all through life and upon the cross of Calvary, and you must love him. And loving him you must become like him.

Outline of Course of Study

(The outline follows the chapters in the textbook. Questions are selected from manuals, Mothercraft, by Etta Hunt, 10 cents, and Mothercraft for Girls, by Alice Mae Burgess, 15 cents, and other questions are based upon the articles. The question manuals and any reference books as listed may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.)

CHAPTER VII

Care of the Baby

1. Give eleven fundamental principles of the care of a baby.
2. What suggestions are given with regard to clothing and dress?
3. Give the general rules for proper diapering.
4. Be able to give rules and equipment for bathing a baby.
5. Discuss the essentials of proper feeding for the baby.
6. Describe the four chief types of crying, their causes and proper treatment.
7. What are the chief causes of infant mortality?
8. Name nine defects easily acquired in infancy. Discuss their causes and prevention.
9. What habits should be guarded against? How overcome?
10. Why should the baby be examined often by a physician?

Is the missionary a salesman? A few years ago it was a fad to speak of the preacher as a salesman. A man wanting a job, a college president, a suitor for his lady's hand and heart, a school-teacher and others, were all classed as salesmen. While the psychology of being agreeable and speaking in a winning way applies to all these and others, while the value of consideration before is valuable to all, there is a radical difference between the salesman of goods, wares, and merchandise, and the teacher who imparts of that which he knows for the good of others. A missionary travels, so does a salesman, but so does an ambassador or minister plenipotentiary. A minister for Christ is truly a minister plenipotentiary, with full powers to represent him. He is not trying to bring about a mere barter of goods, but to give without hope of return. In a way they are on the producing end of the church business, if we insist on considering the church after the partial analogy of business (and it is true that business methods could be applied with profit to much of the church's work). Still the church is not primarily a business concern, nor are its field representatives adequately described as salesmen.

LETTERS AND NEWS

Denver Has Interesting Features on Successive Sundays

DENVER, COLORADO, November 25.—Elder John W. Rush-ton was the speaker at the church, October 28, both morning and evening. His subject in the morning was, "The duty of the United States in the European trouble." His argument was that I am my brother's keeper, nationally as well as individually.

The Halloween social at the church, October 31, was an enjoyable event. Prizes were given for best costumes.

The junior choir, under the tutorship of Sister Bennett, is doing fine. The choir is composed of the children from six to twelve years old.

Elder E. J. Williams and wife are visiting in Kansas and Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Brother Orval E. Sade died October 27, at Saint Joseph Hospital following a serious operation. He had undergone several others before. Brother Sade was born in Joy, Illinois, and was forty-six years old. Seven years ago he came to Colorado for his health and established a residence in Colorado Springs. Surviving him are his widow, Laura Sade, and three daughters, Marguerite, Ina, and Doris.

From "The Little Missionary"

Frank B. Almond, Editor

Sunday evening, November 11, before a crowded church, the Sunday school brought to a fitting close the splendid Rally Day which had begun in the morning and lasted until night.

In the morning Elder E. F. Shupe gave an address on the experiences and achievements of the branch since its beginning. It was an inspiring talk to those who are striving to-day to carry out the ideals and purposes of those early organizers.

The luncheon hour was a real get-together time. The four long tables were jammed for the first serving, and many more had to wait for the second. City Missionary Frank Almond and Pastor E. J. Williams made the after-dinner speeches, the latter giving a plain, clear, and earnest appeal for loyalty to the church and our fellow men.

At three-thirty the Saints went to Washington Park, where the son of Brother R. A. Williams was baptized.

At 7.15 p. m. a splendid program was given by the choir, the young men, the children, and our blind brother, Henry Ralston, and his companion. A smile beamed from every face, and everybody went home feeling that this had indeed been an ending to a "perfect day."

Missionary Meeting

November 18, one of the largest Sunday night audiences that have ever entered the Brick Church on Speer Boulevard, gathered together for a splendid, inspiring missionary service. Long before the hour of opening, the church was well filled with Saints and friends anxious to hear and take part in the service.

The spirit of the grand old gospel was present; the preacher was blessed with power and liberty, the singing was wonderful, and the whole congregation felt the gladness and joy of the meeting.

The anthem was well chosen for the occasion: "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after: That I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life; to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." How wonderful it would be if everyone really had this desire! The church would be too small to hold us all, and we would really have to sing, "Give us room that we may dwell." May such a desire grow speedily in the hearts of every child of God!

The sermon was on "A new vision" by Elder Frank Almond. It was a challenge to those who had embraced the gospel to catch the vision of the glorious purpose of the message of Jesus Christ, to realize more than ever the significance of their membership in the restored church of Jesus Christ, and to unite their every effort toward spreading the glad tidings of great joy.

All in all, the special missionary services, which are to continue every Sunday night until Christmas, started out with splendid promise. If that same spirit shall stay with us until the closing meeting, there is no doubt but that we shall achieve victory and reap the harvest repaying in full every effort.

Bay City Saints in Music Contest

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN, November 26.—The Department of Recreation and Expression held a musical contest recently. The contestants consisted of the women on one side and men on the other. The losing side had to furnish a supper to the other side.

The men put on their program, November 2, and the women occupied on November 9. The following week, November 16, the women were honored with a supper.

Elder O. J. Hawn and family spent a few days in the city recently. The Saints enjoyed the sermons very much.

Earnest Testimony Borne by Young Sister

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 1.—I just cannot keep still any longer. I must write and let you know how I, as one of the many young people in the church, am feeling in regard to the future.

Really, it seems that the vision of the work looms up brighter and bigger each day, and although something is always turning up, seemingly, to discourage me, I am determined not to let these things deter me in my onward progress. Sometimes I have, and then when I looked back later I have thought how very foolish I was not to have placed more confidence in God, that he might help me out when I do my part. Isn't it wonderful to feel that you have some one you can pour out your troubles to and feel confident that all will come out well? But sometimes it is hard to do.

I wonder how many were permitted to attend the last General Conference and enjoy the splendid spirit that was there, especially that last remarkable day. It is something never to be forgotten.

This is a time for Thanksgiving and praise, and we, the people in this church, have the most wonderful thing in the world to be thankful for. I wonder how many of us really appreciate it, especially the young people. I know I do not as much as I should, but I hope to keep on learning to appreciate it more and more each day.

Dear young readers, do you realize that the sooner we begin making preparation for service the greater will be the work we can accomplish? Ever since I can remember I have had a desire to be of service to the church and people, and yet I have been negligent and careless many times and have not made proper use of my time. After all, one has a very short time to make good.

How many of you attended the Young People's Convention? Be sure to make up your mind not to miss next year, for it is wonderful. The convention was one grand feast from first to last. Make up your mind now that you will let nothing interfere with your attending next year. You will never regret it, and it will always be a happy remembrance, as well as a great benefit to you.

I wonder how many of the young people read the HERALD? It has so many good things in it, and we just cannot afford to miss it. And the Autumn Leaves grows more wonderful with every number. The Kitty Karson stories—are they not great?

I would like to hear from any of the young people, and the older ones as well. I can hardly hope to help you in any particular line, but I do like to hear from others, for it always does me good. A selfish motive? I hope not.

Dear friends, let us make the next year the most serviceable of our lives. Let us all start together.

GLADYS TEETER.

Nauvoo Saints Visit Ferris Branch

FERRIS, ILLINOIS, December 3.—The Saints of Rock Creek Branch are few in number, but are trying to build up the work. They were recently made to rejoice over a visit from District Superintendent Sanford and wife, of Nauvoo. Their help and advice and encouraging spirit will not soon be forgotten. The influence of their visit should grow and bear much fruit.

The Saints here are badly scattered, but they are all still in the faith. Brother John Smith, of Fort Madison, preaches once a month. After his sermon on November 25, the priesthood went to Fort Madison to a priesthood meeting with Elder Amos Berve in charge. All enjoyed the counsel and the Spirit that was present.

On Thanksgiving Day the Saints met at the church to give thanks for their many blessings. Elder G. P. Lambert was the speaker in the morning, and Elder Amos Berve spoke in the afternoon. All report a profitable time and a good dinner.

Echoes from Zion

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 3.—We spent a happy evening with the Bennington Heights congregation recently where their church was well filled with anxious listeners. Their number has been increased by two baptisms, Brother and Sister John Steffee, who were confirmed at the service. They are people of mature years, and promise to be of use to the cause. Elder J. L. Bishop is elder in charge and is well supported by his congregation.

We recently met Bishop C. J. Hunt, of Holden Stake, who greeted us with the news of a very spiritual sacramental service in Holden. He stated that the meetings in the stake are of a high order, spiritual and encouraging.

Sunday was rally day at the Spring Branch church. The writer and his companion missionary were invited to attend and assist. The Sunday school was well conducted. It was a nice sight to see the children march. The morning sermon was by the writer to an appreciative audience. The afternoon prayer service was well attended and many spiritual testimonies were heard. More room will soon be the watchword there. Brother W. W. Smith was announced for the evening speaker.

Brother U. W. Greene is again on our streets after a protracted stay "down on the coast of Maine." His health is quite normal.

We are pleased with the reorganization of the good old-time "Zion's Religio-Literary Society." Brother John Lloyd, a business man, is at the head. Classes are formed with the Book of Mormon as the chief textbook. A short literary program follows the lesson study. Quarterlies will again be printed.

My wife and I were privileged to attend the Sunday morning service of the conference of the Kansas City Stake, and listen to a timely sermon by President E. A. Smith on "All are called to labor according to the gift and calling of God unto them." An appreciative audience attended.

A sacrament service with an attendance of twelve hundred was witnessed at the Stone Church on Sunday, December 2. Eighteen priests served the emblems in about thirty minutes. A strong and timely sermon was preached at night on "Cleanse first that which is within the cup." It was applied to nations, to cities, to communities, and to individuals. Brother E. A. Smith was the speaker. The sermon was broadcasted. Listen in ye who are afar off, if you wish to hear some real echoes from Zion.

General Official Speaks at Topeka

TOPEKA, KANSAS, December 4.—Bishop B. R. McGuire, of Independence, Missouri, preached at the local church in Topeka Sunday evening, November 11. His theme was one that has to do with life: Man shall live by the sweat of his face all the days of his life. Life is sweet to most of us. If sweet, dear, and precious, then the more we sweat the sweeter it will be to us; not in the sense of sweat alone, but as we put forth effort we accumulate. Our living must be secured by effort. We cannot pay tithing until we have something to pay tithing on. We cannot have a surplus until we have our living. If we do not pay our tithing, we do not live. Paying tithing is for our development, that we may enjoy the blessings that God may pass upon us. The gospel economy is predicted upon the principle of love as found in the statement of the Savior, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, mind, and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself. If we love anyone, we love the thing they do. This is true with the Almighty. God loved us to the extent that he gave his Son. This principle is involved in the temporal law. You came into the church because some one was interested in you. A missionary goes on a journey because he loves souls. There is joy and satisfaction in seeing a soul go down into the waters of baptism that cannot be found in anything else. There is the joy of knowing that we have been something to some one else, and the individual receives a spiritual reaction, a clearer vision, and greater conception of the work when he is paying his tithing.

Box Social

On November 9 a successful box social was held at the home of W. L. Chapman. The proceeds were used to purchase suits for the basket ball team of the Sunday school which plays in the Basket Ball League of the city.

An illustrated sermon was given by the pastor on November 18. He used the church to represent the young lady in the poem, "The lips that touch wine shall never touch mine." This was given as a reading by Sister Jennie Griffin before the sermon. In the evening A. P. Crooker preached on the subject of Zion. Reading an appropriate scripture lesson, he touched on various phases of it, attracting the attention of nonmembers present.

Elder Robert Monroe delivered an excellent address on the Book of Mormon on the evening of November 25.

Thanksgiving Dinner

On Thanksgiving Day fifty-eight Saints and friends sat down to a sumptuous dinner prepared by the sisters and served in the church under the direction of the Department of Recreation and Expression. Patriarch Ammon White, of Independence, Missouri, was present. After toasts by the heads of the different departments, he presented the pastor's wife, Sister Whipple, with a prize (a Pyrex pie plate) for the best pumpkin pie baked in the contest. After dinner three baskets were gathered up and sent to some in the city in less fortunate circumstances, and thus Thanksgiving cheer was extended beyond our four walls.

Brother White remained over Sunday and preached Thursday, Friday, and Sunday evenings, giving blessings in the meantime. The communication given through him on Sunday morning at the sacrament service was encouraging. He gave an instructive address to the priesthood on their duties and the how, when, and where to present the gospel.

Elder James Bailey, of Scranton, Kansas, was present for all the Sunday services.

Sunday afternoon, November 25, several of the Topeka Saints held services at the Old Folks' Home at Lawrence. W. L. Chapman preached the sermon. This was the second visit to this place.

Some goals set for the various departments are $100 for Christmas offering in the Sunday school, a better choir in the music department, the development of the talents of the young in the Department of Recreation and Expression, a greater knowledge of the scriptures in the Department of Women, and eventually the gathering in of the sheep in Topeka by the whole branch.

Southeastern Illinois Conference Closes

The Southeastern Illinois Conference was held December 1 and 2 at Mount Vernon, Illinois, with district president and missionary supervisor in charge. Only two conferences have been held a year, but a motion carried to have four conferences a year in the future.

Brother William Phillips was called to the office of elder. Surely the wonderful spirit which was enjoyed at the close of General Conference has come this way, for all left for their homes with a greater determination to put forth increased effort to help in the work of the Master's cause and to retain the good Spirit which was enjoyed.

Brother R. H. Henson was elected district president to take the place of Brother L. C. Moore who has served for the past two years.

Eastern Montana District Conference Held

GLASGOW, MONTANA, November 30.—The Eastern Montana district conference was held with the Glasgow Branch November 17 and 18. It was a joy to many of the Saints attending, and its good influence is manifesting itself in the local branch by increased attendance at the services and in increased activity all around. The two State missionaries, Elders George Thorburn and Carl Crum, were present and did the preaching, while the district presidency, James C. Page and Arthur Ritter, presided over the conference.

On Friday evening the Department of Recreation and Expression showed a set of slides from the church's Graphic Arts Bureau, entitled, "The story of the Book of Mormon." There were a goodly number of outsiders present, which made one of the largest congregations to attend the church for some time past. While the slides were in our possession, they were shown at Hinsdale, Vandalia, and Baylor, where large crowds responded to the invitation to attend. Brother Page very ably explained and lectured on the theme.

Saints were present at the conference from Malta, Hinsdale, Wolf Point, Andes, Fairview, Girard, and Vida.

Preparations for Christmas seem to be dominating activities just now.

On Sunday, November 25, Elder Page was called near Hinsdale to unite in marriage a young couple not members of the church. There were eighty-two guests present, including many prominent people of that community.

The home of Brother Eber Wolfe burned recently. It was covered by insurance, and they are busy rebuilding.

Meetings Held in Homes

ALLIANCE, OHIO, December 2.—The Saints at this place have had to give up their meeting place, as the hall they have used for several years has been leased to an automobile concern. However, we hold sacrament service and prayer meetings at the various homes. Rent is so high, and there are so few of the Saints to bear the expense, that we have so far been unable to find a suitable place in which to hold services.

We miss the meetings and hope in the near future we will find a place to fit our needs.

Patriarch Finds Great Response

From a Letter to the First Presidency

RUNNELLS, IOWA, November 19.—Since my last letter I have been enjoying my work greatly. I don't know when I have had a more whole-hearted response than has been given me in this district. The interest and enthusiasm, especially on the part of the young people, has simply overwhelmed me. Never have my heartstrings been so stirred in a series of meetings as they have here. God has graciously blessed your humble servant in a way that I hardly thought possible.

The meetings at Des Moines closed with a miniature pentecost. I shall never forget it. At Boone we enjoyed it again. We had the pleasure of seeing our attendance increase each night, with a splendid crowd in attendance on the closing night. On Thursday afternoon we went to Ames to speak to the Saints there at the college. We have some excellent young people studying there. They are trying to keep their spiritual interests alive by meeting together every Sunday morning for study and worship. Just now they are studying Fosdick's The Meaning of Prayer. The Thursday meeting was arranged that I might have an opportunity to address them, and I enjoyed it thoroughly. Brother Castings, the district president, was with me and has now arranged for some one to go out and preach for them biweekly.

The home-coming here at Runnells yesterday was indeed a spiritual feast. The church was literally packed, a number being present from Des Moines and other places. I will hold forth here until Friday night. Wednesday afternoon I am to address the high school students.

Next Sunday we go to Pershing, where we hope to enjoy the same good Spirit as has been with us in these other places.

I am kept quite busy with preaching every night, giving blessings, visiting, etc., during the day, but although I am thoroughly tired out at the close of the day I rejoice in the peace which comes from well-doing.

I hope to keep in that attitude of heart and mind, that I may continue to enjoy the degree of the Spirit that has been with me thus far, that my labors here may prove a blessing to this people.

JOHN F. MARTIN.

Series of Meetings Held at Groton

GROTON, CONNECTICUT, December 4.—On Wednesday evening, November 7, Elder Orville L. Thompson, active missionary of the Southern New England District, came to the New London Branch where he conducted a series of meetings. This is his first missionary effort in this district, and much good has resulted, not only in the promulgation of spiritual enlightenment to the Saints but also by interesting several nonmember visitors and baptizing three children.

Services were held in New London at Brother Charles Alves, branch deacon, and in Groton at the home of Captain E. F. Griffin, a nonmember whose daughter, Mrs. Pearl Blastow, branch pianist, is a member of the church. A goodly number of members and nonmembers attended the services. The sermons were intensely interesting and instructive, as the subjects were depicted clearly and with completeness. At the last meeting, Friday evening, November 23, a child of nonmember parents was blessed, following with the confirmation of one girl and two boys.

The Saints regretted seeing Brother Thompson go, but they hope to welcome him again in the near future.

Concert Given by Glee Club

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, December 6.—The Glee Club of the branch gave a splendid concert the night of November 16. The program included a comic duet, a male quartet, and a reading, as well as choruses of old favorites, Indian songs, and sacred music. Miss Julia Logan acted as pianist, and Sister Nina Campbell was the director. This concert, given by the young people, is one of the outstanding annual events of the branch. After the performance, the club was given a reception by Sisters E. E. Yates and H. P. W. Keir.

A genuine Rally Day was held here on Sunday, October 28. Old and new members of the branch turned out in large numbers. District President J. L. Cooper preached in the morning, and the president of the West Pullman Branch, Brother E. O. Byrne, occupied the pulpit at night. Spirited music by the choir added to the success of the day.

A joint meeting of the ladies of the three Chicago branches was held at Central Chicago Church a few weeks ago. Sister Dora Glines, head of the Department of Women, spoke on the subject of women's work.

Lois, the daughter of Brother and Sister W. Bell, has safely passed through a very distressing siege of appendicitis, for which an operation was necessary. She is now well on the road to recovery.

Brother and Sister W. L. Christy spent a few days here recently. Brother Christy preached on the morning of November 11. All were glad to see our former missionary and wife with us once again.

The ladies of the church held a bazaar on Saturday, November 24. Articles of all descriptions, from taffy-apples to fancywork, were sold. The proceeds of the sales, which were very satisfactory, will be applied on the building fund for a new church. This bazaar was one step in a campaign for the new place of worship which is desired by every member of the branch.

Our small world was surprised to hear of two sudden marriages among the members of the younger set. On November 15, Alexander Keir, son of Brother and Sister H. P. W. Keir, and Grace Yates, daughter of Brother and Sister E. E. Yates, of Shawnee, Oklahoma, were united in marriage. Two days later Arthur A. Sherman, son of Brother and Sister A. F. Sherman, and Erma Hall, daughter of Brother and Sister

Hall, of Sioux City, Iowa, were married at the home of the bridegroom. A party in honor of the newlyweds was given a few days later by Brother and Sister L. Sherman. All extend their hearty congratulations to the young people, and wish them every success in life.

Brother and Sister John Wahlgren are rejoicing over the birth of a little son.

Regular Services Discontinued

WELLAND, ONTARIO, November 18.—The Saints at this time are only holding Sunday evening services, as our numbers have been greatly decreased and there are not enough of us to hold regular services. One family, that of Brother Percy Baldwin, is quarantined for diphtheria, which leaves only one family active. The Saints are having a hard fight here this winter to get along financially, but are looking for better times in the future.

Akron Has Home-Coming

AKRON, OHIO, December 5.—The home-coming held November 25 was well attended and a successful day was ours to enjoy. Among those in attendance were Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths and Brother Francis Ebeling. The Barberton Branch orchestra and the Akron choir were special features of the day.

The Akron Saints will hold their branch business meeting December 18.

One-Day Meeting Held at Elberta

ELBERTA, MICHIGAN, November 26.—There are only eight or nine Saints in Joyfield Branch, as so many of our number have moved to the city. However, spiritual meetings are enjoyed and all feel repaid for going to church.

A one-day meeting was held July 1. The services of the day were opened with prayer service led by Brother James Davis. The testimonies were good and a very fine spirit was enjoyed. Brothers John Schreur and John Bennett of Free-soil were present and preached splendid sermons. One hundred and fifty attended, and everyone felt repaid for their effort.

Sunday school is held at 10 and prayer service at 11 every Sunday morning.

Stake Bishopric Confident of Successful Year

From a Letter to the First Presidency

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, November 20.—I spent last Sunday in Warrensburg, representing the Department of Recreation and Expression. Mrs. Ross and C. F. Scarcliff went with me, representing the Department of Women and Sunday school, respectively. At the 11 o'clock hour, I was the speaker and of course represented the bishopric of the stake. We had some very good meetings. People seem to be anxious to do their part as fast as they are able to understand what their work is.

I felt a great degree of the Spirit in my efforts at the 11 o'clock service, confirming again the prophecies that have been delivered, though they have been local, that the Lord will bless his servants this conference year if they will strive to represent him properly. It appears to me from all indications that this year is going to be one of progress to the church in many ways. I am convinced that the Lord is withholding his blessings from the ministers of the church only because we have not yet measured up to the standard to which we should come in order that we might be able to receive the outpouring of his Spirit to the degree that he is anxious that we should.

I am striving to qualify myself, that I may be better able to represent the financial department of the church in this stake as counselor to the bishop. I recognize that in order for the church to get into the condition it should be, we must educate the Saints along the line of temporalities, that they may be thoroughly conversant with what the church teaches. I believe our people generally are willing to comply with the law of temporalities when they properly understand it. I might say they are willing to become stewards in fact.

My prayer is that the church may be prospered this year and unity prevail, that when we come together at the next General Conference we may have gained so much ground that we will, in a measure, be satisfied with our accomplishments, and that the Lord can bless us because of the advancement made.

I. M. Ross.

Claims of Reorganization Defended

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, November 29.—The sacrament service on Sunday, November 4, was much enjoyed by all present. District President J. D. White and Bishop Edward Ingham were present. At this meeting Brother F. B. Shippy was ordained an elder under the hands of Elders George S. Lincoln and J. A. Saxe.

Elder Hinman W. Savage preached here twice this month and his remarks were much enjoyed by all.

A social was held on November 9 at the home of Pastor J. A. Saxe. Games and refreshments netted $20 toward the Christmas offering.

The preaching of late has been by Brothers J. A. Saxe, H. B. Simpson, Emery S. Parks, Missionary E. B. Hull, F. B. Shippy, and George S. Lincoln. On invitation from the priesthood of the city branch of the Utah Church, six of our members met a like number from their members to talk over our differences. The first night we offered little argument with them, and were invited to come again, which we did the following Friday evening. Brother Virgil Etzenhouser, recently from Salt Lake City, was with us. This night we asserted our claims. They declared the Spirit of God was not present, and did not invite us to come again. We had a chance to give them something to think about, but they do not want to consider them. Their main effort was to destroy the foundation of the Reorganization, and claimed there were only twenty thousand members of the church at the death of Joseph Smith and that eighteen thousand of that number followed the Twelve to Utah. A Brother and Sister Reynolds, who left us and joined the Utah Church have returned to us and are now rejoicing in the truth and their better understanding of the work.

Praises Privilege of Radio

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 7.—I am a "shut-in" because of physical disability, and only under favorable conditions can I venture from my home for a brief period and so have only been to church once since the late General Conference, but I want to tell you how I have had some pleasure and enjoyment and profit also, with the expenditure of only a few dollars.

It is my good fortune to be the possessor of a crystal radio set and I enjoy the services that are conducted at the Stone Church and also concerts given at Kansas City. Last Sunday night while sitting in my easy rocking-chair I heard the program for a half hour preceding the service, the opening song for the preaching service, the prayer, the announcements, and the sermon by President E. A. Smith. When he told something funny about the women I could hear the audience laugh. The most wonderful experience I have enjoyed was on yesterday when the President of the United States, Calvin Coolidge, delivered his message to the Congress. Shortly before 11.20 a. m. (Central Time) some one in the house of representatives began to make announcements and also to tell how the assembly was seated, and then he said the next person to speak would be the sergeant at arms; this was followed by a few moments of silence and then in a clear, distinct voice, "The President of the United States is here," and then about one minute's silence and the President began his address. For the entire one hour and three minutes I could hear every word as plainly and distinctly as though he were not more than five feet away. I could hear the cheering of the assembly, and if I had not known it before, his accent would have told me he was a Yankee.

To discover a method of sending, first telegrams on wires over the land and under the sea, and second to send telephone messages, and third wireless telegraph messages was a wonderful discovery, but to discover a method by which the human voice can be heard several thousand miles away seems to be the most marvelous of all, and the end is not yet come for discovering wonderful things that will add to the comfort, intelligence, and happiness of mankind. God is behind all these good things that come to bless mankind, and it is only with those who do not appreciate his goodness and love him is he displeased.

EDWARD RANNIE.

Terlton Women Reorganize Department

TERLTON, OKLAHOMA, November 26.—The work is still going on here although the number is small.

The Department of Women met and reorganized on November 21, which resulted in electing Sister Alice McGeorge, superintendent; Sister Mabel Hackleman, assistant superintendent; Sister Ethel Ammermon, secretary; Sister S. G. Carter, superintendent of home department; Sister Anna Hicks, friendly visitor, and Sister Alice Rayless, superintendent of cradle roll.

The teacher training class, with Sister Pearl Greenwood as teacher, is taking the examination on Section Two of The Teacher. The class expects to complete the five sections of the course.

Julia Senft and two little daughters of Yale were visiting Terlton Saints, Sunday, November 18.

Sister Doris Compton, who is attending the A and M. College at Stillwater, will be home for Thanksgiving.

Reports From Little Deer Isle Conference

From a Letter to the First Presidency

STONINGTON, MAINE, November 26.—Arrived at Little Deer Isle Saturday in time for conference. Had a very fine conference, and they elected me as president of the district according to your request.

I find Brother Begg a very fine man. [Brother Begg was formerly district president.] We slept together last night, and this morning he left early and swapped shoes with me by mistake, and therefore to-day I find myself literally in his shoes.

Haven't seen Brother Knowlton, the president of this branch, but feel sure everything will be all right here.

Brother Newman Wilson attended the conference and is so much improved I think he will soon be able to be in the field again. The people in this district surely love him, and he deserves it.

Brother Minton made a good impression on the Saints and will doubtless do a good work here.

Beautiful mild weather here and everything fine.

CALVIN H. RICH.

East Saint Louis Gives to Sanitarium

EAST SAINT LOUIS, ILLINOIS, November 28.—The officers of the branch, presided over by Brother Henry Brunkhorst, are functioning in their various capacities so that things continue to run smoothly. Recent speakers have been: W. F. Carl, Charles Smith, Prosper Carl, E. C. Sellers, W. C. Carl, T. Lewis, A. Millner, G. F. Barraclough, and Clarence Dickens. Brother A. Archibald, of Saint Louis, has also preached recently.

Sister Hayes, secretary of the Department of Women, reports for that department 104 visits, 188 tracts distributed, and relief given the worthy poor. Sister Meloan is president of the local. The department meets every Thursday at 1.30 p. m. Bible readings and discussions are part of the weekly program.

A Sunday school program will be given Sunday night preceding Christmas. Sister Elsie Barraclough is in charge.

The Thanksgiving program was held on the evening of November 27. The rostrum was decorated in keeping with the theme of the week and the program fitted well the occasion. A table was covered with gifts for the Sanitarium. These will be sent to that institution. A good feeling was present, as evidenced by the remark of the president, "We need more of these pleasant social affairs." Pop corn and apples finished off the evening.

Sister Violet Dickens, graduate nurse of the Sanitarium, is a member of the branch and her suggestions were helpful in preparing the gifts for the Sanitarium. She is a member of the city's visiting nurse association.

Holden Stake News

Grandview

On Thanksgiving Day the Saints met at 10 o'clock for prayer service, and at the noon hour enjoyed a sumptuous repast in the church basement. At 8 o'clock the Saints united with the Methodist people in their church building, Brother C. V. Hopkins preaching the Thanksgiving sermon and the two choirs furnishing the music. We are well pleased by the friendly spirit the Methodist people have shown us.

On Sunday, November 2, Brother W. S. Macrae came from Holden and took charge of the election of officers for the coming year. Brother C. V. Hopkins was sustained as pastor, with Brother Charles Martin as Sunday school superintendent; Brother Ben Martin as superintendent of Recreation and Expression; Sister W. T. Chipley, superintendent of Department of Women; Sister Thomas Cairnes, superintendent of Music Department.

On Wednesday evening at our regular prayer service the Saints received the blessing they have long prayed for. God poured out his Spirit in abundance, and hearts were united as never before.

Holden

Elder R. D. Weaver of the stake missionary force spoke at Holden Sunday, December 2, and continued his meetings until the 5th, going from Holden to Marshall, where he is billed to begin services on Sunday, December 9. Brother Weaver spoke at the high school assembly, and his address was very much appreciated by the students.

On Sunday the pastor and heads of departments were sustained for the ensuing year, the only change being in the Sunday School Department. Brother Robert Dillon was chosen in place of Elder C. F. Scarciff, who preferred to give his time to the stake work, as he is stake superintendent.

Lees Summit

Brother Robert May was unanimously sustained as pastor at Lees Summit.

Marshall

A good sacrament service was held at Marshall December 2. A young man who was baptized after Sunday school by Brother Ralph M. Ridge was confirmed by Elder L. Phelps and Pastor H. G. Thayer. Two young ladies were baptized, November 25, by Elder Phelps and confirmed by the pastor and Brother Phelps.

Two young brothers from Independence and Kansas City, R. F. Haupton and R. P. Haupton, visited Marshall Branch December 2.

Apostle Gillen Holds Series of Meetings at Omaha

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, December 12.—Sunday, December 2, was a very full, busy, and happy day. Apostle J. A. Gillen preached the opening sermon of his series here, expounding from his texts the warning of the Savior concerning the slumbering condition of the world and the church in the latter days.

President F. M. Smith Speaks

At 2.30 p. m. the sacrament was administered to the branch, a most encouraging number attending and enjoying the fine meeting. At 7.30 that evening, a congregation which taxed the seating capacity of the building, assembled to hear President Frederick M. Smith. He presented plainly, in his usual direct and forceful manner, the facts of personal duty, reading into that duty, in unmistakable terms, the relation of the individual to those other human units about him. "What does your religion mean to you?" was his ringing challenge, and, warming to his theme, he showed clearly that Christianity can only be expressed in terms of service and love.

Congregation Hears President Over Radio

Brother Roland Scott had installed a powerful receiving radio set in the church building, with a loud speaker attachment, and all were invited to remain and "listen in" to the program to be broadcasted from the W O A W station at nine o'clock. About a hundred and twenty-five took advantage of the invitation, and the result had some very special social values. The music and the words of invocation and sermon came in clearly, and with great naturalness in quality. President Smith's sermon was a masterpiece of its kind, one which gave a direct challenge to the Christian churches of to-day to bring about the much-needed social reforms. The doctrine of stewardships, with its attending ideals of holding and using in trust for another—and that other, a God who expects his gifts to be used for the good of all, and shared in that spirit—was presented as a basis for that reform. "Industry must be Christianized," and "Surplus must be consecrated to social purposes" were dominant thoughts presented by the President. From many sources in the city, since, have come words of commendation for the sermon. None can estimate the extent of the influences for good which were unloosed. Arrangements had been made by which the chapel services of that evening were received at many community centers throughout the city, by which means alone it was estimated nine thousand people would "listen in."

Brother Gillen preached at the South Side that evening, but came over to the church in time to enjoy the radio services. Coming with him were many members of the South Omaha Branch, including our aged Brother James A. Huff.

Meetings Successful

Beginning Monday, December 3, Apostle Gillen has occupied the pulpit each evening, with the exception of Saturday, and twice on Sunday. The attendance has been variable, but always some nonmembers have been present—some distinctly and favorably interested. Laying a foundation in a conception of a God of might and power, whose love is as large as that power, and who, when mankind had, by deliberate transgression separated himself from spiritual correspondence with him, designed a perfect plan by which that correspondence might again be established and man regain the lost spiritual life, and who, in the carrying out of that design, sent his Son to show the way, our brother has, in the series now drawing to a close, built a structure of faith which appeals to his hearers as logical and safe. The series will close Sunday, December 16. The Saints who have attended and given ear to the message of this "man ordained of God," are united in hoping he will come to us again, "sometime, somewhere!"

The members were saddened by news of the death on Sunday, December 2, of Sister Mary Ross, who has been for several weeks at the Saint Joseph Hospital, this city. Carl Self, high priest, had charge of the funeral which took place next day. Sisters Nelle Kelley and Cloe Fleming furnished the music, singing songs which the departed sister had selected prior to her passing.

Women Hold Bazaar

The sisters of the Department of Women held a most successful bazaar in the Douglas County Courthouse, the 5th and 6th of this month. Sales reached well above the two hundred dollar mark, much of which will be net profits for the labor so consistently given by the sisters of the branch. Aside from the monetary gains, a solidarity of purpose and interests has been established, from which much future advantage will be reaped.

Assisting in the musical services of the branch since and including the Sunday of December 2, have been the following: Brethren H. G. Frederick, R. W. Scott, Harry Greenway, and Howard Elliott; Sisters Nelle Kelley, Cloe Fleming, Doris Frederick, Anna Hicks, and Lois Francis. Mrs. H. Ripley a nonmember friend, has also given beautiful solos, and the young choir of eighteen voices has contributed to the value and beauty of this branch of church work.

Visitors at Omaha

Brother and Sister George W. Blair, of Lamoni, Iowa, worshipped with us one morning. They were accompanied by their daughter and son living in this city, Mr. and Mrs. Byron W. Hart. Sunday evening, December 9, Brother David Blair, of Kansas City, and his niece, Mrs. Harry C. Nicholson of Omaha, were with us. Sister W. P. Bootman left Sunday afternoon last, for the home of her son in Salt Lake City, where she will visit during the winter.

Sister Fred L. Mills, of Halfway, Oregon, writes that Brother S. Anderson, of West Wood, California, would be pleased to meet any Saints living in or near that place. He is working on night shift in the shipping department of a lumber company in that town.

Kansas City Stake News

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, December 16.—The study classes of Kansas City Stake almost comprise a college in religious education. They have been conducted for several years, but this year they promise to be better than formerly, judging by the number in attendance, character of lessons, and instructors. The stake is fortunate in securing such a corps of self-sacrificing teachers as Mrs. D. H. Blair, Lydia Wight, Mrs. Fred Gerber, Mrs. Mollie Davis, Mrs. V. L. Dawes, J. A. Tanner, Ida Etzenhouser, Mrs. Oxendale, M. A. Etzenhouser, and Mrs. Charles Sandy. Current events, child study, Bible normal, normal training (first and second part), Bible research, social service, Book of Mormon, and economics are studied. This year the classes meet at the local churches, which seems to work better than when the effort was to bring all those studying to Central. Classes are held at Central, Fourth Kansas City, Bennington, Mount Washington, Northeast Mission, Malvern, Grandview, Chelsea, and Quindaro, with an attendance of about one hundred seventy.

Special Services

Stake Missionary W. I. Fligg closed his special meetings at the Northeast Mission a week ago. A splendid interest was awakened at this place. Four were baptized, the result of the present and former missionary efforts. Others are interested that may come in later. Further missionary efforts are discontinued until after the first of the year.

Brother Fred Cleveland is delivering a series of Sunday night stereopticon lectures at Heathwood with good interest and attendance. He is also running a series for the Department of Recreation and Expression at Central every Friday night.

Holiday Season

The holiday festive season is on in full blast in greater Kansas City. The offerings at the many stores would indicate no lack of anything for the comfort of the inner or outer man. However, there are instances of destitution and lack in many of the bare necessities, which must be taken care of by charitable organizations. The annual mayor's Christmas tree will help quite materially for that day when several thousand baskets will be distributed to the needy. Few if any cases of need exist among our own people.

President J. A. Tanner delivered the sixth of a series of Book of Mormon talks at 7.45 p. m. and Bishop McGuire spoke in the morning at 11 a. m. Sunday, December 16, at Central.

Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker at both morning and evening services at Quindaro. He is arranging for special group services at the Central Church neighborhood soon, and later at other church neighborhoods. He may work with Brother Fligg in these efforts.

Independence

Sunday School

Election of officers for the Stone Church Sunday school held December 11 resulted in the following: C. B. Hartshorn, superintendent; O. C. White, first assistant superintendent; E. D. Moore, second assistant superintendent; Florence Pointer, secretary; Bishop J. A. Becker, treasurer; R. T. Cooper, chorister; George Netter, custodian; Edith Bullard, Christmas offering and tithing secretary; W. B. Paul, adult department superintendent; M. T. Williams, senior department superintendent; B. C. Harder, intermediate department superintendent; Samuel L. Thiel, junior department superintendent; Ruby Williamson, primary department superintendent.

ent; Mrs. W. W. Smith, beginner department superintendent; J. F. Weston, reception committee chairman.

The beginner department will conduct a program Sunday, December 23, at 3 p. m. in the dining hall. About 135 children are enrolled, and there will be an extensive program. Gift boxes of candy will be distributed. All parents of children, and friends are invited.

The Enoch Hill Sunday School elected the following officers at the annual business meeting Tuesday night, December 11: F. J. Lewis, superintendent; R. E. Whitsitt, assistant superintendent; Kenneth Morford, secretary; Mary Brewer, assistant secretary; J. C. Alexander, treasurer; Mrs. D. T. Chapman, superintendent beginner and primary department; Mrs. A. E. Allen, assistant superintendent beginner and primary department; Dick Bullard, chorister; May Chronister and Mrs. Gubser, pianists.

Department of Recreation and Expression

The Enoch Hill church biennial election of officers of the Department of Recreation and Expression was held Friday evening, December 14, at which time the following officers were elected: superintendent, Kenneth Morford; assistant superintendent, Joseph Martin; secretary, Bert Martin; assistant secretary, Dorothy Chrestensen; treasurer, Alfred Waters; chorister, Richard Bullard; pianist, Louise McDonald; program committee, Joseph Martin, Christina Maloney, Mrs. George W. Frick; lookout committee, Dorothy Chrestensen, Laura Rogers, Lulu Whitsitt.

The Department of Recreation and Expression at the Stone Church now holds its meetings on Sunday evening at 6 o'clock. The study is that of the Book of Mormon and the quarterly is the special reprint of the quarterlies of 1908, 1909, and 1910 prepared by Louise Palfrey Sheldon. The reprint begins with the Nephite history.

Financial Department

A. B. Phillips was ordained a bishop at the Stone Church, December 2, President Elbert A. Smith performing the ordination. Brother Phillips has been working for about two years on the committee for revision of the Inspired Version of the Bible. His home is in Somerville, Massachusetts. For many years Brother Phillips has been a missionary. He is one of the seven presidents of the seventy.

Special meetings were held at Lamoni, Iowa, in the Brick Church, beginning Sunday, December 16. Bishop J. F. Keir of Independence was the speaker Sunday morning and evening and Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights. The subject was Stewardships.

Bishop I. A. Smith is at present in Colorado on church business.

Circulars are being sent out by the Bishopric, appealing for the support of the Christmas offering campaign. They consist of "word pictures" with special reference to the work of the missionary department at home and abroad.

Deaths

William Albertus Bushnell, sixty years old, died at his home in this city December 12 following a long illness. He was born May 12, 1863, at Homewood, Kansas, and was a resident of Independence for thirty-five years. Brother Bushnell was an active member of the Stone Church congregation for many years. He was interested in the Boy Scout movement and offered the leading prize at the annual encampment for several years. Until his failure in health thirteen months ago, he was connected with the Kansas City Bolt and Nut Company. He was a director of the Jackson County Bank of Independence and attended a meeting of the directors only a few days before his death.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mary E. Bushnell, and three brothers, Edwin Bushnell of Los Angeles, James Bushnell and Jesse Bushnell, both of Rosedale, Kansas.

Funeral services were from the Stone Church, Sunday, December 16, at 1 p. m. Elder G. E. Harrington preached the sermon. Burial in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Mrs. Minnie Hursh of this city died at the home of her daughter in Kansas City Monday morning, December 17. She was sixty-five years old. Surviving her are her children: Leroy and Lloyd Hursh of Canada; Verney, Raymond, and Clark Hursh of Independence; Mrs. Dora Smith, of Barlow, Oregon; Mrs. Iva Wells of Kalispell, Montana; Mrs. Minnie Whiting of Lawrence, Kansas; and Mrs. Cora Murdock of Kansas City. Funeral services were at the Second L. D. S. Church on December 18. Burial in Mound Grove Cemetery.

General News

A pageant, "The new star," by Mrs. Mark H. Siegfried, will be presented by the junior department of the Independence Dramatic Club at the Stone Church on Christmas Eve, December 24. The pageant is based on the story of the first Christmas among the Nephites. It tells of the rejection of the Prophet Samuel, the conversion of a Nephite family and their young friends, the day and night and day of darkness, and a vision of the birth of Christ. No admission will be charged but a collection will be taken. All are invited.

The Laurel Club, which held a bazaar and dinner in the dining hall of the Stone Church December 11, had an exhibit of things for Christmas at B. C. Harder's store on December 14 and 15. Articles not sold at the bazaar were displayed and sold on Friday and Saturday at the store.

Kenneth Fligg, a well-known young member of the Stone Church congregation, formerly from Canada, has been chosen a member of the debating team of the Kansas City School of Law, where he is at present enrolled. The team will meet other teams in contest following the holiday season.

Sister Abbie Horton, 87 years old, was given a surprise party on her birthday by a group of young friends at the home of Mrs. L. Stillman. Sister Horton graduated last year from the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences. She belongs to the honor society originating at Graceland College, being a member of Epsilon Chapter of the Lambda Delta Sigma.

Bishop Charles Fry, recently returned from the British Isles Mission, was elected pastor of the Enoch Hill church at the business meeting December 13. He will succeed Elder W. D. Bullard who declined to consider reelection because of inability to devote his entire time to the work.

By a score of 26 to 20 the Bar-Gars defeated the Y. K. T.'s in the opening basket ball game of the L. D. S. Athletic Association season. The game was hard and therefore interesting to the spectators.

The second game was between the Bennet Blues and the Walnut Park team, which resulted in a tie. Extra time was, however, allowed, and the Bennet Blues made the necessary goal, bringing the score to 24 to 22.

D. M. Archibald was made treasurer of the association upon the resignation of Francis Holm. Mr. Holm retains the office of secretary.

The L. D. S. selected team will play another game with the Kansas City Association in the Central-Kansas City High School gymnasium on December 18. So far the home team has won two games and lost three, but the strongest competitors have now been met.

Jay Gould has been elected president of the freshman class of the Kansas City School of Law. The class numbers about three hundred men and women, some from the city. Brothers

Read the Church Papers

There is a great deal of personal satisfaction in keeping posted as to the developments in the church. An informed, intelligent, devoted church will be made up of those who in some way keep up with the demands of the hour. Their faith will be founded on a broad, sound foundation of knowledge, and as instruments in the hands of God can accomplish wonders.

The church periodicals reflect the status of the church. They produce the impressions and extend the knowledge that make possible the present-day application of the principles of the gospel.

This is the time of year when many subscriptions are renewed. Be sure that for the coming important year you have one or all of the church papers in your home.

The Saints' Herald

The HERALD is the only church paper which publishes

1. Official notices from the church leaders to the membership.

2. Branch news. A live section of branch news tells you: Where our missionaries are working. What branches they visit. What form of organization a branch is working under. How successful it is. How large the membership of branches is. What the departments are doing. How entertainments, socials, programs, dinners, bazaars are given. Who is building a new church. How the money was raised. What the spiritual status of each branch is. Numerous suggestions for increasing interest, attendance, membership.

3. Editorials by the President of the church and his editorial assistants.

4. A miscellany page where are contained official notices from departments, districts, stakes, branches, personal addresses, obituaries announcing death of membership, and very important, the weekly radio program broadcasted from Zion.

5. A regular course of study with articles written by leading men and women of the church on each subject discussed.

All these and more for $2.25 a year.

Zion's Ensign

The missionary spirit of the church is the dominant note in the Ensign. Excellent sermons on topics that move to action; editorials that literally push one into action, letters which touch the most stolid heart, news items that enlighten and encourage—all in the average, typical issue of the Ensign.

For only a dollar it comes to your home 52 times a year with its message of hope and encouragement. For only 75 cents it will be sent to the home of some nonmember who will read with delight the gospel message that has such a welcome sound to interested souls.

Order the Ensign now as part of your insistent needs for the coming year.

Autumn Leaves

Stories, articles, poems, missionary experiences, information on how to do better work, all in interesting form, illustrated, and easy to read, are found in Autumn Leaves, the monthly for the youth of the church.

Autumn Leaves has its appeal to the youth of the church especially, but is for the whole family. It has an universal appeal and invariably produces good impressions.

Read the series of short stories on "The valley of Zion's heights" and be moved by the delineation of problems such as exist in many of the branches we know—if not at home.

A year of cheer in Autumn Leaves for only $1.75.

Radio Flashes

San Antonio, Texas.—I am sending my appreciation to all who were in the program. At eight o'clock I tuned in on Station K F I X. The sermon was good and I entertained several of my neighbors. They were going to send you a telegram but you all quit too soon. I have a one-tube set and am proud of it so I wrote you a letter.—Roland Oerter.

Dallas, Texas.—I enjoyed your program of this evening very much. It came in clearly and could be heard all over the room, and I don't have a loud speaker either. Being only twelve years of age don't you think I did well to pick you up?—J. F. Nelms.

Kansas City, Missouri.—This is to let you know that I heard your station yesterday. Both the eleven o'clock and six o'clock services. They came in very clear, especially the morning service. What a contrast it is to hear the songs of Zion instead of so much jazz. Radio is the only means I have of enjoying church services as I have been confined to my bed for the past ten weeks. You will please place my name on your mailing list. Thanking you.—S. D. Hastings.

Washington, District of Columbia.—I listened to the latter part of your service last night about 10 p. m. and because of your inquiry about how the low wave length was being received, know you will be interested to learn that the service, prayer, singing, and announcements all came through clear and strong and without interference, notwithstanding that Syracuse was broadcasting a short sermon on 234 meters at the same time. I could turn from one to the other and get either without hearing the other. Then later I tried to get station on 360 meters; there was so much confusion and so many stations that not one was satisfactory, as the Drake Hotel concert submerged all the others. From this I would say your selection of low wave length for distant transmission was wise. My set is a Clapp-Eastham H. H. L. three-tube set and I was using a wave trap to eliminate the strong local station W C A P 469 meters. Thanking you for the pleasure given last night—George A. McHeay.

Decatur, Illinois.—While using my neutrodyne set this evening I was curious to ascertain whether or not I could pick up any shorter wave length than I had so far heard and promptly got your service. At times the reception was quite loud, as loud, in fact, as K S D, but it was not steady, sometimes fading to almost inaudibility but would come back to remarkable loudness and clearness. Your wave length is the shortest I can receive, the settings on my receiver being 0-4-8. I understood you to say your wave length is 240 meters and so it is given in the Radiobox list for November. Your rating is given as 40 watts. Your signals came in very strong for so low a power, through my neutrodyne and loud speaker with one stage A. F. I will try you again some time and report.—Frank Shlandeman.

Conference Notices

Southwestern Kansas, at Wichita, January 4 to 6. Program begins Friday evening. We hope to have President F. M. McDowell with us. We are expecting a good attendance. Thomas S. Williams, president.

Northeastern Kansas, January 12 and 13, at Blue Rapids. All ministerial reports should be in the hands of the district secretary by January 1 for tabulated report. Samuel Twombly, president.

Pastoral Notices

To the Saints of Far West Stake; Greetings: Having been appointed to labor in the Far West Stake for this coming conference year, I take this means to get in touch with all Saints and friends who are interested in the spread of the gospel. I would like to hear from all who know of places where meetings can and should be held. As I am not acquainted with the stake I take this means of getting in touch with you. Write me at Bonner Springs, Kansas.

Gould and Fligg are representing this community well in the Kansas City Law School.

Mrs. William Erickson is at the Independence Sanitarium where she underwent an operation a few days ago. She is recovering nicely. Sister Erickson is a member of the Independence Board of Education.

Apostle J. A. Gillen has returned to this city, having recently closed a series of special meetings in Omaha.

Elder E. A. Curtis was called home from his mission field in Illinois because of the illness of his second son. His son is now recovering from an attack of diphtheria.

Bishop J. A. Becker has also returned, having been at Columbus Ohio, where he preached the funeral sermon of Mrs. G. T. Griffiths.

Services at the Stone Church Sunday, December 16, consisted of preaching at 11 a. m. by Bishop J. A. Koehler and at 7.30 p. m. preaching by Bishop A. B. Phillips.

ple working together with God. All are called according to the gifts of the Lord unto them.

Paul Plants

The first work of the church is missionary. The first work that Jesus did was missionary. He started out without a traveling companion, without a quorum to enroll his name, without a bishop to finance him, without a single convert. No, he had one convert. Every man has one convert before he comes into the world—one who will die for him the day he is born or any day thereafter. Jesus had his mother at home praying for him and "pondering all these things in her heart."

But he started out as a missionary to convert and assemble a body of believers. Seventies, missionaries, you have this honor: Jesus was the first great missionary of the Christian dispensation. Here is the account of his first missionary venture: "From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. . . . And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." —Matthew 4: 17, 23.

As he went he gathered converts. First there were Peter and Andrew, and second James and John. These believed and followed him in response to his call, "Come and follow me."

The first work of the church to-day is missionary, to make converts. Of necessity it must be first. A body of believers must be created and assembled before other work can go forward. The first great commission is, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

The church must have its active missionary force. But missionary work is by no means confined to traveling or even to ordained missionaries. The Sunday-school teacher who plants the word for the first time in the mind of a little child is doing missionary work. So is the man or woman who distributes tracts systematically and intelligently. So is the man who explains the gospel to his neighbor. In fact, under the admonition to go into all the world, we must not look too far afield all the time; part of the world joins our home lot on either side. We are to warn our neighbors.

Apollos Waters

Some one must plant the seed. Afterward it must be watered and cultivated. The first work that Jesus did was missionary. But so soon as he had gathered a few believers, his relations to them changed. He became a pastor. He became a leader to them. He was with them constantly, teaching them, helping them to grow in grace and knowledge of the truth. He became all that the term pastor can possibly mean.

Hard upon the heels of missionary work follows the no less important pastoral work. So soon as we accumulate believers, converts must be organized, held together, led, taught, developed in branches, districts, stakes, finally in Zion.

The work of Apollos is greatly needed to-day. Intelligent and godly men must water Paul's planting. There is a great demand for men who will take the pains to be pastors to the people. I use the term pains advisedly. The faithful pastor will often sacrifice his own comfort of body and mind to minister to the sick, the poor, the sinful, to hold the flock together and protect it against enemies. He will have pains of body, and he will often enough have pains of heart. Misunderstanding and opposition may cut him to the soul. Indifference may be even more trying.

Stake and district and branch presidents, as well as the general officers of the church, have this responsibility. But it is also shared by the visiting officers of the local churches, those who go into homes in the most intimate sort of personal work. Sunday-school teachers, workers among boys and girls in various capacities, many are called to do pastoral work.

Then, too, it is broadly intimated that business men and workingmen are to join forces with the ordained ministry. Tithing, consecration, surplus, these make it possible for the traveling ministry to go out and do their part. Here is an opportunity for any business man or mechanic or farmer to put his work on a new basis and put a new motive into life.

But God Gives the Increase

Paul must plant, Apollos must water, but God gives the increase. We must prosecute the missionary work. We must care for the converts. We must leave the results to the Lord. His quickening grace brings the fruitage. It may be great; it may be small. Who can foretell?

Some one left a little tract in a certain home; Joseph Burton was converted. Some one preached a sermon; Joseph Luff heard it. These carried the work on to unexpected results. The little girl who wrote, "'Tis a glorious thing to be in the light," by correspondence converted two men, both of whom became elders and baptized hundreds. One of them became her husband, Elder O. B. Thomas, nicknamed Open Bible Thomas.

All should go whole-heartedly to the particular work for which their talents qualify them—be it great or small. Do not withhold the planting or yet the watering in fear that there will be no results; that last is not our concern, that is God's business, for "God giveth the increase."

New Year's Resolutions

"The revolution of the earth automatically attends to the primary division of time," notes President Elbert A. Smith in an editorial, and he further states that man "even divides the day into hours, minutes, and as the last evidence of his regard for its golden worth, into tiny seconds." Time is costly, and living comes at a high price. In a comparatively small number of years man must live his life, and its price tag will depend upon how well he has spent his time. Some lives are worth more than others, not because more time has been spent, but because the time has been put to greater advantage. Two men may each live to be eighty years old, yet one life may be worth half a dozen of the other. Time well spent! One made New Year's resolutions and kept them. The other did not.

A New Year's resolution is like a budget in business. It places an estimate upon the coming year's income and expenditures. It contains an inventory of life's net worth, an estimate of progress and expanse for the next year, and has behind it the emotional drive or the business sense, to put it into operation. A good business man makes an adequate budget and lives up to its standard. A man who knows how to live resolves to accomplish certain ends and sets out to do them.

A life budget should take into consideration the three dimensions of life, length, breadth, and depth.

Length of life is the number of years a person is a living, breathing creature. All animals have length of life, but only man can profit by his experiences so as to give breadth and depth.

Breadth of life is the range of a person's activities. A small world is sometimes one's lot. It is said that in Europe there are still many persons who have lived a lifetime in one place, never going beyond the borders of their own little world, living a narrow existence within a few miles of their birth. Travel, study, the newspaper and magazine help to broaden life and give it a wide point of view. Diversified activities break down provincialism and widen the field of experience. This is breadth of life.

But there are people who have lived a long time and who have seen many lands and who have a knowledge of many things, yet are shallow minded. They never get beneath the surface of things; they lack understanding. One who lives deeply is one who has great insight, great understanding. Depth is what makes the scientist or the philosopher. The specialist is one who has gone deeply into a subject.

Living is composed of the three dimensions of life, length, breadth, and depth. All must be cultivated if life is to prove valuable.

Roosevelt lived several lives during his lifetime. He had not reached an old age when he died, yet any one of the several lives he had lived would have been counted a success in the ordinary man. Numerous experiences and constant study gave him a breadth of view seldom reached by many; while his keen insight and marvelous capacity for understanding made him an authority in several fields of human endeavor. Roosevelt never wasted time. His New Year's resolutions were kept as faithfully as a good business man keeps within his budget. There are other men past and living that are examples of real living. These are men who have spent time profitably.

The golden worth of the New Year means precious time to be well spent. New Year's resolutions are not a fad of the moment or a tradition of the past. They are the scientific means for running the business of life, the budgets for the year. A successful business lives up to the standard set by the budget. A successful life means adherence to the plans for the future. New Year's Day is the official time for filing the estimation of the worth of the business of living. It is a day when the books of the old year are closed and the new books are opened. It is the turning over of a new leaf and the starting of a new account. It is a time of rejoicing for a year well spent and for another chance to attain the heights.

The HERALD wishes all of its readers and all the members of the church, at home and abroad, a very happy and successful New Year!

Important Changes in Departmental Administration

The First Presidency wish to announce the release of Apostle T. W. Williams from the Superintendency of the Department of Recreation and Expression. For a number of years Brother Williams has had charge of this department in addition to his responsibilities as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve. Although this doubling of responsibility involved many difficult and arduous tasks, Brother Williams has moved forward cheerfully, earnestly desirous of doing the best he could for both phases of his important assignment. In a recent letter to the First Presidency, however, Brother Williams expresses the opinion that it will not be wise to continue longer this arrangement and to expect him to carry this double burden, hence the release above mentioned.

For the present the work of this department will be handled by the office of the Departments at Grace-land College, Lamoni, Iowa, under the direction of President F. M. McDowell. It is the opinion of the First Presidency that this work is of sufficient importance to demand the entire time of some individual who is qualified for this work, and we believe that such an arrangement should be made as soon as the church feels that it can afford to appoint a man for this task.

The First Presidency wishes to express their sincere appreciation for the years of service of Brother Williams in this department and to assure the church workers that every attempt will be made to further the interests of this department, together with all of the departments as far as their interests are in harmony with the interests of the church as a whole.

Respectfully submitted,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Among Perth's Mormons

"Among Perth's Mormons," or "The sect of Joseph Smith as we know it," forms the theme of an article appearing in the Mirror, Perth, Western Australia, October 13. "Kay-Bee," the writer, makes an interesting story of the invasion of Australia by the Mormons, the article being motivated by the granting of corporation papers to the Mormon Church by the government. He takes a fair-minded attitude toward the sect, pointing out its evils and merits. However, as in most cases where hearsay is the pool from which the writer has drawn his substance, gross misrepresentation of facts is the result.

The article, which occupies three columns of the paper and displays a headline across the top of all three columns, was immediately followed by one of greater proportions, and more convincing argument, written by Elder G. W. Millard of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints, occupying four columns, full length, and displaying a streamer headline, "Are Perth's Mormons polygamists?" The answer to the first newspaper story on Mormonism made due correction of mistakes and gained for the church wide publicity.

In the answer, Brother Millard gave a clear-cut, brief history of the two Latter Day Saint Churches, distinguishing their organizations, doctrines, and practices. By way of introduction he said:

When a man undertakes the role of historian, he should at least have a nodding acquaintance with the matters upon which he sets himself up as an authority, and where he fails, the interests of truth and justice demand that a defense shall be entered and considered for and on behalf of those who otherwise might be caused to suffer.

The defense of the Reorganization was adequately made, all points of misstatement being clearly corrected. Indeed so well was the article written that it called forth the comment from the editor of the Mirror, "The Mirror is pleased to give publicity to Elder Millard's defense. . . . Elder Millard has certainly made a good case for the monogamous branch of Mormonism."

The article brings forcibly to the attention of everyone that there has been going on in Australia for years, conversions to Latter Day Saintism through the Reorganization, yet little was thought of it. Now that the government recognizes the Mormons as a religious denomination, quite a cry is raised. Mormonism evidently still carries with it its horrors.

Appearing on the same page as the article, there is a large advertisement inviting investigation of the Reorganized Church. The publicity gained from the controversy will surely result in the advancement of the work in Australia. The removal of prejudices is a big step forward in any educational or religious movement.

A true religion will be optimistic. It will end in a radiant and joyous vision of the meaning of life. But it will not begin with that, will not give us that for nothing. The radiant and joyous vision will not come to us through listening to arguments, through proving that there is more happiness than misery in the world, through shutting our eyes to the dark side of things and looking only at the bright, through crying, "Peace, peace" when there is no peace, nor by any of the cheap and shallow devices on which mere verbal optimism is made to rest.—Religious Perplexities.

Social Organization

Radio sermon by Bishop J. August Koehler, Independence, Missouri, December 16, 1923.

In his Sermon on the Mount, Jesus deals with one of the most persistent and perplexing problems of human experience, that is, the problem of maintaining a continuous and adequate supply of food and raiment and such other things as are essential to human well-being and comfort. And in connection with this, Jesus made a most interesting promise, which promise was that the necessities of life would be amply supplied if men would devote themselves to the establishment of the righteousness of the kingdom of God. The language used by Jesus was this, "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven and to establish its righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." This promise must be taken to mean one of two things. First, it must mean that God personally will supply mankind with food and raiment on the conditions specified, or else it must be taken to mean that in establishing the righteousness of the kingdom of God in the lives of men the bread-and-butter problem automatically solves itself; and in declaring that the industrial problem which has been the problem of all the ages of the world is to be solved by establishing the righteousness of the kingdom of God, Jesus at once declares that the true philosophy of social and particularly economic life is to be found in the gospel of the kingdom, in which the righteousness of God is revealed.

Economic Problems and Christianity

This Sermon on the Mount says by implication that the problems of economic life are at once the problems of the Christian religion. And if that be true, and surely it is true, and a knowledge of the teachings of Jesus can leave no one in doubt of its truthfulness, then any conception of Christianity that does not comprehend a philosophy of social life, any notion of the gospel of Jesus Christ that does not include rules of conduct to govern men in their industrial activities is crude and inadequate. And if Paul's promise be true, namely, that a perverted gospel is not the gospel of Jesus Christ at all, then we are compelled to conclude that any doctrine which leaves out of its calculations the problems that perplex men in their industrial relations is not Christianity at all. He who gave his Son that men might know the way of life, never intended that any of his children should live in poverty. Far from consigning the objects of his love and care to such a fate, he has declared in the revelations of his will that the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air and that which cometh out of the earth is ordained for the use of man for food and for raiment and that he, man, have in abundance. On another occasion he said, "The fullness of the earth is yours: the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air and that which climbeth upon the trees and walketh upon the earth, whether for food or for raiment or for houses or for barns; yea, all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul. And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man; for unto this end were they made to be used."

The Struggle to Live

Yet, in spite of the lavishness of the great Creator, in spite of the fact that the resources of the earth are inexhaustible, in spite of the fact that great wealth abounds on every hand, there has been a continuous struggle throughout the ages on the part of the masses to maintain even a minimum standard of living. Many there are in the world to-day whose bodies are underfed and underclothed, whose intellects are dwarfed, whose morals are corrupted, whose spirits are crushed by the damning influences of poverty. How can a man who is distracted by the pressure of his bodily needs answer the call of what some fancy to be the Christian church to spend his Sunday hours in saintly devotion? He cannot do it. The bearing that food and raiment have upon human life is so primary, the demands upon his physical nature are so pressing, that men cannot forget their poverty for the sake of observing the formal rites of the Sabbath Day religion.

"Your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things," said Jesus; and we know it, too. It is human nature, and we cannot get away from these needs; but one of the facts of the Christian religion that challenges the admiration of thinking men everywhere is the fact that the doctrines of Christianity are adapted to the nature and being of man. The Christian doctrine does not ask us to attend to secondary matters first, and to postpone questions of prime importance to the consideration of secondary matters. We do not mean secondary in point of value, but in point of time, the time in which they make their demands. "First be reconciled to thy brother and then come and place thy gift upon the altar," is the order of the gospel of the Son of God. First seek judgment; first relieve the oppressed; first help the fatherless; first plead for the widow; first answer the orphan's cry; first feed the hungry; first clothe the naked; then turn your eyes and your feet in the direction of the sanctuary of God and bring your gifts and place them upon the altar. If we do that, he will hear our prayers; and if not, our devotions become a mockery. "He that turneth his ear away from the hearing of the law, that man's prayer is an abomination in the sight of God."

There is a difference between trying to accumulate a private surplus of goods for selfish purposes upon the one hand, and of promoting industry for the sake of satisfying human wants on the other hand. Jesus condemned the mode of social life which serves to amass private fortunes when he said, "After all these things do the Gentiles seek."

The Acquisition of Goods

The acquisition of goods has come to be the motive of industrial enterprise. Originally man pursued industry for the sake of producing, in order that he might consume; but now men have so far lost sight of the true purpose of economic endeavor that they engage in business merely for the sake of what they individually can get out of it in the beginning, and not for the sake of the benefits that may be broadcasted in the end. Business is concerned about self, chiefly; with many, business is concerned about no one else than self. But Christianity, my friends, is concerned about neighbor in the same manner and to the same degree as it is concerned with self.

It is evident that modern industrial life is not an expression of the ideal of the Christian religion. The blame for this shortcoming on the part of the masses is to be placed upon those who mold the opinion of the public. The great majority of the leading economists of all times have thought and talked and reasoned too much about production in terms of factory efficiency and earnings and the like, and too little about production as a means of satisfying human wants. Goods, my friends, such as food, clothing, and the like, are not designed to be objects to be sought after and amassed in surplus amounts in private hands for selfish purposes; but goods are designed to be used to satisfy human wants, to promote human welfare, and to enrich the spiritual lives of all mankind.

This is the real problem of economics. This is the problem with which Christianity concerns itself; and in spite of the prerogative that some social scientists have arrogated to themselves it will some day be common knowledge that Christianity has anticipated science.

Consideration of Economic Problems

Regardless of the benefits that come in the next world from the establishment of the righteousness of the kingdom of God, there are many reasons why society should give ample consideration to the solution of its problems, which Jesus said is to be found in the establishment of the righteousness of the kingdom of God.

First, the morality of man individually and the safety of society demands the abolition of destitution. The havoc wrought in times of strikes, the destruction of life and property in economic conflicts, the increasing crime in times of industrial depression remind us of the demoralizing outcome of the business strife and of individual misfortune. A destitute man has little regard for anything save his own deliverance from destitution. And society can never be safe, and morality cannot be maintained, so long as men must govern their action by considerations of pressing bodily needs.

Second, society is always threatened with disorder and with disruption when a people who have reached a high level of living are sought to be pushed back to a lower level. The integrity of the group is always in jeopardy when the masses receive a comparatively meager wage but have before them for contemplation examples of prodigal waste by those who do but a small share of the world's work. To make society safe, then, we must make the masses content; we must give a larger share of our thought and endeavor to effecting a more general and a more equitable or generous reward for industrial effort.

Righteousness in Industry

But such ends cannot be realized by patchwork or piecemeal repairs, or by Christmas-dinner-basket methods. Industry must be organized as a whole on principles of righteousness, both for the purposes of producing the kinds of things in the amounts needed to satisfy our demands, and also for the purpose of getting those things into the possession of mankind so that they may be used as nature intends that they should be used.

The economic problem, the financial problem in particular of our own group (I mean the Latter Day Saint group), is not to be solved merely by stimulating the membership to the payment of larger sums into the treasury. The solution of our problem does not consist in periodic applications of stimulants to induce greater spirituality. The lash of the whip upon the back of the horse is no substitute for proper food and water and shelter; and the ability of the horse to respond to the lash of the whip with an extra pull must sometime die out unless we give the animal constitutional treatment.

The financial problem of the church is no different in its fundamental aspects from the problem of the world. It does not consist in locating migratory Saints, nor in finding a job for a discharged workman, nor in securing a loan for an individual to tide him over a financial crisis. Neither does it consist in promoting some business device for the sake of increasing the money income. Our problem is a problem of organizing our resources, both our man power and our physical capital, for purposes of rational production and of equitable distribution. Our problem is not to organize private business enterprises, but it is to organize industrial society as a whole.

What Organization Is

And what is organization? Is it a piecemeal affair? Is it merely to bring parts in contact one with another? Is it merely to have each person or organ doing some piece of work? No; that isn't organization. No; we can have all that and still have the organs of the body in conflict one with the other; and no body can maintain its health and its comfort which does not keep its parts in working harmony. The work done by the different parts not only must be harmonious, but the things done by this part and by that part must be of such a nature, must be done in such amounts and at such times and in such a manner that what is done by each one is made to be a blessing by what is done by others. That is organization.

Under the present industrial system, men are poor and distressed because goods that are needed for consumption pile up in warehouses for want of a market. When a factory cannot dispose of its products at a private profit it becomes unwise from the individual standpoint to continue to use the tools of industry, and for that reason factories are closed or run on short hours, and men who would work and who seek an opportunity to work are thrown into partial or total unemployment. If the question of distribution received the consideration that its importance demands, if human satisfactions were the conscious end of industrial enterprise, industrial crises would never occur for the want of an outlet for the surplus products of industry. What we need is a social industrial organization, having in view the broadcasting of its benefits, and until we have such a society we shall not have practical Christianity. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and to establish its righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you" does not mean that the problem of poverty will solve itself without any thought or action on man's part. It does mean that the solution of the problem consists in establishing relations between men in society on the basis of the righteousness of the kingdom of God. Some answers to the question of how to solve our industrial problem, or even the financial problem of the church, are so primitive that one would think the advocates were primitive men who had been recently resurrected and suddenly projected upon the stage of human action. When the food supply ran low in primitive tribes, we are told that they solved the problem by limiting the number of persons who were permitted to live, to the number who could be kept by the available food supply. That idea is as brilliant as some of the modern suggestions of curing poverty by living on a lower plane. Poverty according to these philosophers is to be cured by frugality or in other words by consuming less. The fact that poverty is a shortage of the things needed to satisfy human wants does not seem to bother these philosophers.

Doing the Right Thing

The correct answer to the problem of the natives, I hold, is the correct answer to the problem of the people to-day, and that is to get busy doing the right thing in the right way, and the necessities of life will be available to satisfy every legitimate want. Righteousness for the impoverished hordes of primitive society would have consisted in the pursuit of agriculture instead of hunting and fighting one another. And righteousness to-day consists in abandoning the game of trying to get for others the things we want for ourselves, and in making a group effort, an organized effort to work together in ways that secure to all men individually a full and free opportunity to engage in those forms of enterprise in which they may both provide their own wants and fulfill their duty to society. Righteousness for us consists in every man doing his share of the work that needs to be done in order to produce the goods and service that mankind consumes. Righteousness for us consists in rewarding men in the same ratio for given services rendered and in governing the affairs of society so that the idler will not be permitted to eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborers.

There is no righteousness, my friends, in a custom that maintains the unproductive person in luxury while the overworked peasant is reduced to poverty. There is nothing Christian about that. Righteousness consists in bearing one another's burdens and thus fulfilling the law of Christ.

These are some of the things that the righteousness of God demands of us. That the strong help the weak is the Christian conception of right doing. If these things are done, the weak will be lifted up; they will be delivered from their poverty. Righteousness for us demands some consideration for the less fortunate and for the less capable and even for the less appreciative.

Social Organization Needed

Now the righteousness of the kingdom cannot be established by independent individual action any more than a man can play a game of baseball by himself. Henry Ford with his millions of dollars cannot fulfill the conditions of Christian living by dispensing charities; neither can he solve the problem of poverty. The avoidance of poverty is not possible under an unorganized individualistic effort. The problems of industry are social problems and must be solved by social action. It requires social organization or regulation of production and distribution to solve the problem of industrial or social life. What I mean is this: that the establishment and the maintenance of right relations between the parts of industry is a task that cannot be accomplished except through united and unified action. If the evils arising from the accidents of industry, for example, are overcome at all, it will be through social action. This action would be in the nature of mutual aid. Mutual aid, my friends, is the substance of righteousness of the kingdom of God.

This social effort must be on a broad scale. Large numbers of working classes are unable either as individuals or by sectional or vocational cooperation to make adequate provision against the injurious and degrading necessities of economic life. To organize the farmers as against the merchants will not do. To organize the coal miners as against the operators of the coal mines will not solve our industrial problem. Such methods accomplish little more than to shift the conflict from one field to another, or from the individual to the class to which he belongs. The only kind of a social effort that can solve the problem of industry is an organized social effort on a broad scale which includes all the vital factors of industry and places them in harmonious and reciprocal relations, that dispense justice in spite of the accidents of exchange.

The Program of the Church

This brings us to the concluding thought of this discourse, namely, the program of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. We claim that Almighty God has called this church into being to be the light of the world, to be the salt of the earth. Ours is not a provincial religion. It is a religion of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. It is world-wide in its purposes, and its doctrines are designed to solve the problem of human society which is the problem of how to get men to live together in peace, in harmony, in good will, and in prosperity. Our argument has been that society as a whole, not in a piecemeal manner, must be organized as a unit in order to solve its problems. It ought not to be necessary to argue such a fact to a Latter Day Saint congregation; and yet if we are to judge by the manner in which the question of the organization of our stewards on a broad scale is seemingly purposely avoided because of unbelief or lack of interest or courage, it is necessary to argue even to some Latter Day Saints, so-called, the value of the means divinely instituted for the salvation of mankind.

The provisions of our gospel are not at variance with what our foremost moral philosophers and social economists declare to be the solution to the present world problem. In 1831 in anticipation of the present crisis, the word of God to the church was, "It must needs be that direction be given how to organize this people, for it must needs be they shall organize according to my laws." At the same time the principles of righteousness according to which this people as a whole were to be organized were given. These are questions for separate discussion. Again in 1832 a commandment was given to the same effect in the following language, "The time has come and is now at hand. It must needs be that there be an organization of my people for a permanent and everlasting order." Christianity is a divine social order and contemplates precisely this sort of procedure on the part of Christian disciples. Again, in 1834, we received this communication: "It is wisdom in me, therefore a commandment I give unto you that ye organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship." This is not all that has been given on the subject, but it is sufficient to indicate to every intelligent person that the program of God to this church is a program of social reconstruction. Our contribution to the world's uplift is to be a social endeavor, an example of community life, grounded in right relations as between men and between men and properties. The law given to this church places before it the very definite task of building up a social order that sums up and expresses the righteousness of the kingdom of God in the things that we as a people are called to do.

Demonstration of the Gospel

That is our task. That is what the world wants. That would be "light" to the world. It would be "salt" to the earth. We can talk all we want to about individual stewardships, so-called; we can plan and promote one business device after another in our endeavors to clear the field for action; but as the light of the world and the salt of the earth we must set before the world as a people, not merely as individuals but as a group—I say that in our social life we must give a living demonstration of the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ to save mankind. Conditions have not favored us at all times; it has been necessary to break down old ideals; it has been necessary to carry on a campaign of education in preparation for a forward movement; it has been necessary to spend no small amount of

The Physical Care of Young Children

1. What does every home owe the child?
2. What are the physical sources of power, and what things are necessary to bring these conditions about?
3. Disease may be due to what three conditions?
4. Name the seven steps in securing vitality and discuss each.
5. Discuss clothing under following subdivisions: (a) functions of proper clothing; (b) selection of underwear and night clothes; (c) responsibility of child to care for his own clothes.
6. What attention should be given to the care of the hands, hair, eyes, ears, nose, throat, teeth?
7. What is the value of play in child life?
8. What is meant by "motor training"? How may the child gain proper control and coordination of his muscles? Discuss physical exercise for strengthening the spine and the trunk muscles.
9. Discuss cause of nervousness and steps to prevent or overcome same.
10. Discuss prevalent defects of American school children. How may they be prevented?

LETTERS AND NEWS

Progress Reported in Kansas City Stake

From a Letter to the First Presidency

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.—I thought it would not be amiss to write you a letter touching the work of the Kansas City Stake and inform you that our work, generally speaking, is in excellent condition.

Progress in Stake

The various churches and groups throughout the stake are all actively engaged and some very good results are reported from the various places. There are quite a number of local baptisms which increase our numerical strength to three thousand or more. Some good brethren are being called into various offices in the ministry and are manifesting a splendid desire to work and their activity encourages us to believe that they will be splendid helpers in the cause in the future.

The stake this year has been doing exceedingly well along financial lines, and much activity has been shown in different groups to better physical conditions in repairing, adding to, and improving churches. Our new church at Grandview, Fourteenth and Central, Kansas City, Kansas, is a credit to the stake and our people should feel proud to have such a fine, substantial building, and we need not be ashamed to ask the finest people to meet with us in it. Brother C. D. Jellings of the stake presidency is giving that place his immediate attention as well as assisting throughout the stake.

The ordinations of Roy E. Browne and R. L. Bishop were attended to last Sunday. These names were approved by the stake high council and the stake conference, and the stake high council held an ordination meeting last Sunday afternoon. The council engaged in prayer before attending to the ordinations, all taking part, and a splendid spirit prevailed. Afterwards, R. L. Bishop was ordained a high priest and a stake high councilor by S. S. Sandy, of the stake presidency, and John Schiimmel, of the stake council. Roy E. Browne was ordained by C. D. Jellings, of the stake presidency, and Joseph Harrington, of the stake council. Ira G. Clutter, of Mount Washington, was at this meeting ordained an elder, and Henry Davis, of the Northeast Mission, was ordained to the office of priest. All of these brethren were strongly im-time and energy in resisting the attacks of foes; but surely, my friends, the time has come now when all who have it in their hearts to improve the conditions of human living as well as to work out the salvation of their own souls should unite in one grand social endeavor to establish the affairs of the group in the righteousness of the kingdom of God and to prove to the downhearted, to prove to the weary and the oppressed, to prove to those who have lost hope or become skeptical that Christianity as a life of perfected mutual aid is not an idle dream, but that the gospel of Jesus Christ, which reveals the righteousness of the kingdom of God, is in fact the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. I thank you.

pressed by the attendance of the Spirit and felt perfectly convinced and assured of their calling.

Stake Conference

Our late stake conference, November 18, 19, was indeed a spiritual conference. The morning preaching service by President Elbert A. Smith was attended by a large following and the sermon was exceedingly fine, many of the people still commenting on a number of the splendid points that were made. The afternoon prayer service in connection with prayers and testimonies was blessed with two prophecies and a tongue and interpretation, and the young people's prayer meeting, going on at the same hour, was very spiritual and they also received quite a lengthy prophecy through Brother Ammon White, who with others was in charge of the service. The night preaching service was good. Brother W. I. Fligg preached an excellent sermon, and everybody went home rejoicing, feeling happy in the work, notwithstanding they were tired and weary from a day of splendid activity.

The spiritual feast enjoyed by the Saints has caused new activities in a number of places and good results are accruing from the effort put forth.

The women's work throughout the stake is going nicely, and there are a number of classes of an educational character now in operation and a splendid interest is manifest in most of them.

This will give you a survey in a general way of the work in the stake and we hope it will continue to improve and be a curtain indeed to Zion. To this end you may count upon us working, with a hope that some day absolute harmony will reign throughout Zion and all her stakes.

Carson Branch Loses a Much Loved Member

CARSON, IOWA, December 12.—The Carson Saints lost a much-loved member with the death of Sister Laura Frederickson on November 12. She was visiting her sister, Mrs. Robert Kemp, in Independence, Missouri, at the time of her passing. She was affectionately known as "Aunt Laura," and it has been said of her, "Though seventy-six years of age she was not regarded as 'old'; and in her interest in affairs of the community, and her tendency to see the funny side of things, she ranked well with the younger associates."

Pays Tribute to Departed

At the mid-week prayer services of the Presbyterian church in Carson on the day of the funeral, the pastor of that church paid the following high tribute to her:

"A funeral service may mean much or little to the on-looker. It depends on the prevailing spirit and on the life thus honored. A thoughtful observer could not but be deeply impressed by the spirit pervading the service and so manifest in those assembled for the funeral of Mrs. Laura Frederickson. Too often such occasions are marked by an idle or morbid curiosity, but it is seldom that one sees a more genuine tribute of respect and love than that paid to this good woman. It bore abundant witness to the large place she had won in the hearts of her neighbors. The real meaning of this tribute is found in the life to which it was paid.

"Measured by the standards of so-called achievement and by the aspirations of the social climber, this woman would scarcely be considered. She was entirely unconcerned about these things. Her chief concern in life was to be of use and service to those around her. Her approach was ever marked by a kindly and generous spirit. The only password she required was another person's need. Once she had that password, her approach was immediate, direct, and unselfish.

She offered the kindly service of her life and her friendship to all who needed it, regardless of their financial condition or social status. Truly she was among us as one that served. There was a permanency in her friendship that commanded the unfaltering trust of those who received it. She did not proffer it one day and withdraw it the next. She was utterly loyal to the folks and the causes which enlisted her sympathy and love.

"Her demands upon life were simple to an extreme. She claimed but little for herself. She lived on the mere necessities of life, that she might share her competence with the people and the cause she loved. With the simplicity of her life, her quiet, unassuming manner, her unselfish spirit and the sheer goodness of her heart, she walked straight into the heart of the community, and there will she abide in loving, grateful memory. That she has lived a successful life is best attested by the words which came spontaneously from the lips of all who knew her: 'Surely she was a good woman.' What more can we say than that?"

Contributes to Furnace

The enrollment of this branch is small and so of course each one is sadly missed. During the early fall the Saints of this place began to think about furnace and winter services. Something had to be done about the furnace or close the church for the winter. Everyone was loath to speak because of the fewness of numbers. The subject was finally broached, and "Aunt Laura" had the old furnace looked over and obtained figures for the probable cost of a new one.

The last Sunday she was here she made this proposition to the branch: "If the rest of you will fix the basement and fix it right, I will pay for the furnace."

On the next Wednesday evening, which was her last meeting with us, we met for prayer service, and a business session followed. The question was asked of Sister Frederickson what she personally thought to "fix it right" meant. She gave her answer and closed with this statement, "and you can do it if you will."

Lulu Graybill, Fena Tanner, and Edna Hotze were chosen to act on the furnace committee and began their work that week. They solicited among the Saints and some of the business men in Carson, and also drove to Wheelers Grove, where a few Saints live, to solicit labor. A man from Avoca, Iowa, was secured to raise the church. Every time the band of Saints began to be discouraged with their efforts, the words came strongly to them, "And you can do it if you will."

Mrs. Lulu Graybill is certainly to be commended for her part in this. With all her family responsibilities she never once failed to respond, and showed capabilities it was never dreamed she possessed. The work, too, would never have been done had it not been for the faithful services of Brother Irvin Fenn, who organized the work and was "Johnny on the spot" at all times.

Basement Added

The church is now raised two feet, with a tile basement under the whole building with partitions for furnace and fuel. There is a cement floor, a new chimney, steps, and stucco work on the outside. All of which is just about paid for. The furnace is in complete. Who can say that God will not direct such matters?

One of Sister Frederickson's last acts was to sign two days before her death the order to pay for the furnace. The church was not in shape to hold the funeral service. This was conducted at her home. All of the religious denominations in town were kind enough to offer their churches to the Saints for the funeral.

Sister Fena Tanner's husband was buried the next week after Sister Frederickson.

While the church was being raised, services were held at Brother Rutherford's one Sunday and at Sister Graybill's two Sundays. There were no services one week because of diphtheria in town.

Last Sunday Brother Heide preached here, and two weeks ago Brother Joshua Carlile gave a sermon. Brother Epperson and Brother Mintun, jr., were down for Sunday school services on that Sunday, too. The district priesthood have been good to this branch during the past summer and fall. Brother and Sister T. A. Hougas were with us on December 9.

Not many night services can be held until a better lighting system is installed.

A Christmas tree and program are being planned. Ruth Graybill, Clara Cato, and Zola Fenn have the program in charge. All of the Sunday school officers, with the exception of two, are young people.

Minneapolis Branch Establishes Groups

SAINT PAUL, MINNESOTA, December 12.—Increased activity on the part of the members of the Minneapolis Branch, of the priesthood, and the heads of departments, is characterizing the work in the Twin Cities. The members of the priesthood have organized under the group system, which is almost necessary in a community of this size and where the Saints are scattered over both cities. Elder C. A. Kress as pastor is directing this work and is meeting with a ready response on the part of both the ministry and the other members.

Prayer meetings are now being held in three different parts of the city, and the increasing attendance is proof of the value of this plan. Brother Kress is also conducting a series of missionary meetings in the homes of both members and nonmembers and the results are good.

The Department of Women did wonderfully well in their annual bazaar held on the night of November 22. In spite of the handicap of getting out in the first snowstorm of the season, the Saints supported it nicely, and the returns showed over ninety dollars had been taken in, which is to go for the benefit of the new building fund.

The Sunday School Department under the direction of Sister Johnson is doing very well, in spite of the hardship of crowded quarters. Attendance is increasing regularly, there now being eleven classes organized.

The Department of Recreation and Expression under the leadership of Brother Wesley Elvin is gaining more interest every week. The time of meeting is on Sunday evenings. Previously it met on Friday nights, but this time was not very favorable as the Saints found it difficult to gather together at this time. Brother Elvin is doing very well in getting the others to work with him. The programs are bringing forth some excellent talent among the members, both young and old, and class instruction is being given in our social ideals, the Book of Mormon, and other suitable subjects.

The gathering of the Saints together seems to be taking place in Minneapolis as well as in Zion. Within the last three or four months six families have come to the city, and new faces are appearing every day. The Saints in South Minneapolis are also moving forward by acquiring property and building homes that they can call their own.

If there are any Saints planning upon coming to Minneapolis, either to stay or to visit, they will perhaps be interested to know the location of the church: Queen and Fifth Avenues North. The address of the pastor, Elder C. A. Kress, is 3803, Forty-second Avenue South. Saints and friends are always welcome.

Southeastern Illinois District Conference Enjoyed

CENTRALIA, ILLINOIS, December 10.—A conference of the Southeastern Illinois District was recently held at Mount Vernon, Illinois, and some changes of importance were made. One radical change that was made is in the conference dates. Previously two conferences have been held a year, one the first Sunday in June and the Saturday preceding, the other on similar days in December. The change gives us four conferences annually, to be held in the months of February, May, August, and November, the exact dates being selected by the district president.

A committee consisting of the district president, Sunday school superintendent, and treasurer was given the task of preparing a district budget and suggesting a means of raising the sum provided. The committee is to report the results of its work to the February conference, which will probably be held at Springerton, Illinois. The committee has already met and agreed upon amounts needed by each department and a way to raise the funds.

Mount Vernon Saints are fine conference entertainers. Not only did they give a very excellent program Friday evening, but at various services provided some fine vocal numbers.

The presiding officers left the choice of service to be held on Sunday afternoon to the people and they unanimously chose sacrament and prayer. Assembled in this service, they were abundantly blessed of the Lord.

We look forward to a successful year.

Douglas Saints Visit Bisbee Branch

BISBEE, ARIZONA, December 4.—Elder S. D. Condit, accompanied by Brother June Taylor, who has recently returned from an extended "Ford" trip to Oklahoma, together with Sisters Golding, Spooner, and Taylor, motored up to Bisbee Sunday afternoon, December 2, and visited friends in the Warren District. Brother Condit was called upon to administer to five persons, including one nonmember. The Saints enjoyed an excellent sermon on "Stewardship" by Brother Condit, Brother Taylor being in charge.

While local conditions have been somewhat discouraging at Douglas, Brother Condit reports Sunday school and morning services being held regularly, and thus a nucleus is kept intact.

The friends of Mrs. F. M. Dearborn will be pleased to learn of her return home from the hospital November 24.

On Sunday, November 25, the Bisbee Sunday school voted to raise $75 this year for Christmas offering. Almost $50 is already on hand. The Department of Women is putting on a program early in December, the proceeds to go to the Christmas offering. The branch fully expects to go over the top.

Manteno Active in Christmas Work

MANTENO, ILLINOIS, December 12.—The Deselm Branch has taken on new life since General Conference. The Spirit of God is causing the workers to renew their zeal and enthusiasm so that each department is doing better work.

A marked degree of the Spirit was felt at the sacrament service December 2. The Saints were commended for their humility but admonished to exercise more love one for another.

Preparations for a Christmas entertainment and the collection of Christmas offering occupy special attention at this time.

Sunday School Class Gives Food Sale

SAINT THOMAS, ONTARIO, December 10.—On Saturday, December 8, the girls' intermediate class of the Sunday school held a food sale at the city market. This class of eight girls, together with their teacher, Sister Florence Baird, solicited from the different members of the branch, who willingly responded to the call. The sum of $20.50 was raised, which was immediately turned over to the Christmas offering fund. This is the first attempt of this nature made by the class, and they feel greatly encouraged by the result.

The Busy Bee Class (junior boys) has been selling candy from house to house to help with their Christmas offering. Their teacher, Sister Emily St. John, made the candy for them.

The adult Bible class purpose holding a food sale at the city market on December 15. Their aim likewise is to boost the Christmas offering.

The children are busy being trained for their annual Christmas entertainment to be held on December 20.

On Friday, December 7, Brother Albert Else had the misfortune to fall and fracture his left arm at the elbow and wrist. It is hoped that he may have a speedy recovery.

Large Attendance at Council Bluffs Business Meeting

From a Letter to the First Presidency

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, December 4.—No doubt you will be pleased to know that our annual branch business meeting was held last evening with the largest attendance I have seen at a business meeting in Council Bluffs. Officers were elected and such other business done as comes before such a meeting. A very splendid spirit of peace and unity prevailed, which gives us courage for the task before us the coming year. We have a splendid force of men holding the priesthood, which assures us progress will be made, also many splendid departmental workers as well. H. H. HAND.

Missionary Rejoices in Noble Work

PURYEAR, TENNESSEE, December 3.—The year 1923 is nearly ended, and we are reminded that there are many things that should have been done this year that are yet left undone. We are once more reminded that time passes on regardless of the use we make of it, and that if we are not careful our time will have passed away and we will have failed to perform our part of the work. There is much to be done, and it seems that at best there are few to do that work. We ought therefore to awake to the great necessity of activity and do better than we have done in the days that are past.

We have been intrusted with a very noble work, and it seems that the only consistent thing for us to do is to use all our powers for the forwarding of the truth among men. There is a place for all of us, and I am sure that if we would apply ourselves more fully we would discover joys that we have not known heretofore. I am sure that all who have tried it will agree with me that activity brings to us the deepest and most lasting joy. This at least ought to be evidence to us that if we would increase our joy we must increase our activity. What uses are we going to make of our time and talent this coming year?

Everywhere there is a demand for workers, and everywhere there is work to be done. Who is going to volunteer and then qualify for this service? The satisfaction alone of being qualified for the work before us more than compen-sates us for the efforts we make to gain that qualification; therefore it ought to be a real pleasure for us to train ourselves for the best possible service. I would by all means like to urge that every person who can possibly do so would acquaint himself with The Seven Laws of Teaching and The Making of a Teacher, and use the methods therein taught in the efforts he puts forth among his fellow men. There is much that could be done if we only knew how to do it, and a study of the two books suggested would go a long way in teaching us how to do it.

Hoping to be able to discharge my duty and be a help to those around me, I am striving daily to become more efficient, that I may be able to do better work.

Louisville Branch Purchases Church Site

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, December 11.—The Saints at Louisville are still holding group meetings, but the deacon of the branch has been instructed to purchase a lot 120 feet by 175 feet at the corner of Ashland Avenue and Taylor Boulevard, and all are hopeful that a new church building can be started soon.

Societies and Clubs Work to Swell Christmas Fund

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, December 13.—The Christmas offering has been given much thought here. The Blue Bird Club, under the direction of Sisters Hart and Eggen, has made and sold fancy needlework which has netted them $80 to the present time. They are trying to reach the $100 mark by Christmas. Also Sister George Cummins has made and sold fancy aprons which has netted some $20 or more toward the Christmas offering. The senior scholars of the Bible class put on a concert on December 12 and raised nearly $16 for Christmas offering.

Salt Lake City Saints were favored recently by a visit from Apostle Roy S. Budd who stopped over on his way to California.

Brother Yates also visited Salt Lake City on December 8, and preached two forceful sermons, morning and evening. He also spoke at the Department of Recreation and Expression meeting on Friday, December 6.

During the month the ladies' aid has been reorganized with Sister George Cummins as president and Sister Conyer vice president.

Brother John Eggen leaves early in the New Year on a mission to Holland. All wish him Godspeed.

Mr. John Pearson, superintendent of the Rocky Mountain Division of the Society for the Friendless, visited the branch recently and explained the objects of the society.

Bazaar Proceeds Go to Christmas Offering

BAY PORT, MICHIGAN, December 15.—The Bay Port Branch consists of seventy-three members, among whom are two elders, two priests, and two teachers. They own a neat little church, centrally located in the village and beautifully lighted with electricity. There is also a live, graded Sunday school with cradle roll, and an active Department of Women. The branch also has a small library.

The women recently gave a chicken supper and bazaar, clearing about $200. The young people's senior and intermediate classes conducted a booth, using the proceeds to swell their class Christmas offering.

Regular services consist of Sunday school and prayer service on Sunday morning and preaching in the evening by the local priesthood, choir practice on Thursday evening, and an occasional meeting of Sunday-school teachers and officers. There is a standing program committee that attends to the observation of all special days.

There is usually a good attendance at preaching services, and many nonmembers are interested, from among whom we hope to recruit our ranks in the not-distant future.

Creston Has Fourth Annual Home-Coming

CRESTON, IOWA, December 12.—The Creston Branch held their fourth annual home-coming Sunday, November 18, in the I. O. O. F. Hall, with Elder J. F. Mintun as the speaker of the day. It being such a beautiful day, a car load from Lamoni, including Brothers Yarrington, Carmichael, Gold, and Sister Ida Monroe, drove over, returning home at night. Brother and Sister John Rudkin of Des Moines also spent the day attending services.

Tuesday afternoon, November 27, Brother J. F. Mintun, of Council Bluffs, and Sister Sarah Moore, of Independence, arrived in Creston, and Brother and Sister Hall invited the Creston Saints to their home to witness the marriage ceremony of this fine elderly couple. The ceremony was performed by Brother Hall who eighteen years ago called upon Brother Mintun to perform the same service for him.

Peoria Branch Has Many Visitors

PEORIA, ILLINOIS, December 13.—Peoria Branch has been favored with several visitors lately. Elders E. R. Davis and E. A. Curtis came first and spent a few days in getting acquainted with the Saints and the city. Brother Curtis is missionary and Brother Davis president of the district.

While these brethren were here, Elder James Norris and family of Kewanee, Illinois, came and spent Thanksgiving with us.

At this same time came Brother Eugene Wrigley, formerly of this city, but now of Independence, Missouri. We welcomed all the old friends and brethren.

Sister Elizabeth Cole, who has been in the hospital here for some time on account of an operation on the eye, is now able to return to her home and is improving.

Elder C. E. Willey of Lamoni, Iowa, formerly missionary to this district, has just left here. He has been visiting in the district and spent a week here. He preached a part of the time with increasing interest. Saints here are always glad to welcome Brother Willey.

Missionary Enjoys Good Spirit in Work

From a Letter to the First Presidency

JONESPORT, MAINE, November 15.—I am greatly enjoying my visit and labors among the Saints of my old field of labor and have received a royal welcome from all.

I have preached in several of the branches in Massachusetts and have outstanding invitations from other branches. The Saints of Jonesport sent a wire for me to meet with them here, and I felt you would not object to my spending a week or so with them. Will return to Boston on the 20th and feel I should soon start for Independence unless you decide I should remain and extend my visit and labor to other branches that have urged me to meet with them.

I am feeling well in health again, for which I am very thankful, and am enjoying a goodly measure of the good Spirit in my work. I caught the wave of inspiration which fell upon the assembly the last day of conference and am delighted to know the loving Father bestowed such a benediction upon his children, for I feel there were many prayers offerred for the success of the conference, and it was my daily prayer that God would manifest himself to the helpfulness of his work and the strengthening of the hands of those called to direct his work, and I feel this has been done.

R. BULLARD.

Branch Welcomes Visit of Patriarch

WESTERLY BRANCH, December 5.—The Westerly Branch is fortunate in having Patriarch Richard Bullard with them for a short visit.

Seventeen years ago, Brother Bullard, together with Brother Phillips and Farrell, labored here in Westerly, at which time there were only one or two Saints. It was rather discouraging at that time, as the seed sown seemed to have fallen on stony ground. But Brother Bullard's heart has been made to rejoice at this time, when he returns after a so long an absence, to behold the fruitage of his labors of former years.

He finds that the seed sown has taken root and has grown into an organized branch with twenty-nine members, with whom he met on sacrament Sunday, December 2, at which time the Lord surely did pour out his Spirit upon them with pentecostal shower, long to be remembered by all present.

The evening of December 2 we were privileged to listen to a sermon on "The resurrection," by Brother Bullard, which has strengthened the hope that is within us. Monday evening, December 3, we were again favored; this time Brother Bullard unfolded in all its simplicity, "Agency," which has spurred us on to put forth an extra effort to exercise our agency for righteousness while the opportunity is here.

When the time arrives to bid Brother Bullard Godspeed, which will come all too soon, we all can praise God that he has seen fit to bless us by the presence of this brother whom we have learned to love. So we are going on with new life and a greater desire for service and obedience.

Services Result in Baptisms

MAPLETON, KANSAS, December 9.—Brother W. E. Haden has been holding services here the past three weeks with good crowds and splendid interest. Four have been baptized. It touched the hearts of many to see one gray-haired sister enter the icy waters to arise in newness of life. Also one promising young man bids fair to be of use to the church. Others are interested, and the meetings will continue during the week if fair weather continues.

Eastern Maine District Conference Over

The conference of the Eastern Maine District convened in Jonesport, October 27 and 28, with District President H. A. Chelline presiding and Brother Lewis W. Hinkley secretary pro tem. Business session at 2.30 opened with prayer by Elder Orval L. Thompson, whom all were pleased to have with us at this time. The following officers were elected at this meeting: Elder H. A. Chelline, district president, with Elders W. E. Rogers and David E. Joy as counselors; Eliza M. Walker, secretary; Charles Cummings, treasurer; Lewis Hinkley, district Sunday school superintendent.

The preaching during the conference by Elders Thompson and Chelline was instructive and edifying. Music under the direction of Brother Herbert J. Rogers, chorister, with the assistance of Irving Ray, violinist, and Alton V. Rogers with his clarinet, and a full chorus, was inspiring, and added much to the services. Quartets, duets, and solos added variety to the numbers.

The district was well represented by a large gathering, and members from Massachusetts and from Bangor, Augusta, and Brooksville, Maine, were in attendance.

The Spirit of God was manifest during the entire session, and this conference will long be remembered as being one of the best in the district.

ELIZA M. WALKER.

Joint Priesthood Meeting Held in Detroit

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, December 6.—Sacrament was observed Sunday, December 2, throughout the city, with very good representation of the membership. At 3 p. m. the priesthood of the city met jointly at the first church with fair attendance. Pastor G. R. Kuykendall delivered an interesting and instructive address. These monthly priesthood meetings are of great assistance to the work in the city, as it enthuses the members of the priesthood and gives them a broader view of their work.

Tuesday afternoon the Department of Women met in mass meeting, and business of the department concerning the entire city was transacted. Resolutions adopting the policies outlined by Mrs. Dora Glines on her recent visit were placed on the books to take effect January 1.

The East Side Group is planning a bazaar for December 14 and 15, for which the sisters are laboring strenuously. Proceeds will be applied on the building fund.

The choir of the first church, under the direction of Sister Mina Townsend, are working on a musical program to be given Sunday, December 23. The Sunday school is also providing a Christmas program. Among other features will be a Christmas cantata by about twenty-four juniors in which they are displaying talent along musical and speaking lines. These boys and girls are especially fortunate in having the benefit of instruction and training by Sister Henrietta Davis, who is well qualified for this work.

Series of Meetings to Be Held at Beloit

Extract From Letter to First Presidency

MADISON, WISCONSIN, December 4.—I returned from Iowa County last Thursday, then went to Beloit to assist in getting ready for the conference. The conference passed off in a good spiritual way. Brethren McDowell, Garver, and Christy were present as outside men. Our attendance was one of the best for years. The conference proved a great blessing to the Beloit Branch, and the coming Sunday Brother Christy will begin a series of meetings at Beloit.

Home-Coming Services Have Proved Successful

RUNNELS, IOWA, December 3.—A series of home-coming services was arranged by the branch and district presidency to be held at Perry, Iowa, beginning October 28. These meetings have been both a spiritual and intellectual feast for those who have been permitted to attend, and the Saints are rejoicing in the work, while renewed activity and consecration of purpose is following in the wake of this veritable pentecost of spiritual blessings. God is indeed remembering Zion, and his Spirit "like a fire is burning."

The meeting at Runnels was held on November 18, a clear, warm day. Saints were in attendance from all over the district to hear Patriarch J. F. Martin and to enjoy the spiritual feast which was had at the sacrament service at 2.30 p. m. At this meeting the Saints were told that the Lord recognized the sacrifice and devotion of all. At the close of the day all voted it to be the "end of a perfect day."

Brother Martin remained to hold services for the week, which were well attended despite the fact that one night a home talent play was presented by the Eastern Star organization and a snowstorm hindered on another night. On the last night Brother Martin spoke on "The philosophy of youth," a sermon directly to the young people. We are thankful that Brother Martin has been sent to help us.

Clear Lake Branch Observes Annual Custom

RAY, INDIANA, December 7.—An all-day service was held at the chapel on Thanksgiving Day, as has been the custom at Clear Lake Branch for several years. The attendance was larger this year than ever before, some coming over from Coldwater Branch. A prayer service was held in the morning and a basket dinner was served in the basement at noon. The afternoon program was in charge of the Department of Women. An enjoyable and profitable day was thus spent.

Elder S. W. L. Scott met with us on Sunday, December 2, and preached a very fine sermon both morning and evening. On Monday and Tuesday nights Brother Scott preached to the Saints in Fremont. All appreciated his sermons, and it is hoped he will come again soon.

Elder and Sister Otto H. Storey have returned from Independence where they have been visiting their daughter, Mrs. Frank B. Shirk, and family since General Conference. They report an enjoyable time and a pleasant trip.

Lincoln Branch "Listens In"

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA, December 8.—"A friend in need is a friend indeed." This is what we feel to say of Brother C. H. Porter, as he came to us on November 25 and blessed a little child, and then on December 2 he returned and baptized the little one's mother. We can truly say that Brother Porter is one in the district who is always ready for emergency duties. We are glad to have him so near.

Brother Lyle McFarland recently became suddenly ill and, by the doctor's request, was moved to the sanitarium. He is one of the district's finest young men and comes from the Fairfield Branch. He is well loved by all who know him, and all should remember him in their prayers. He is in good care in the sanitarium, and we are sure that his interests will be looked out for. He has a sister in training at that institution.

We were pleased to "listen in" on the radio concert given by the Omaha Saints December 2. We feel to congratulate the Saints there for the fine entertainment they gave. The only thing we regret was that we could not see President F. M. Smith while he was speaking. We hope to see him at this place some time in the future. Any Saints coming this way are invited to stop.

Saints and Methodists Hold Joint Services

PISGAH, IOWA, December 10.—There was a joint service of the Methodist and Latter Day Saint congregations on the evening of Thanksgiving Day, at which the Methodist pastor, Reverend Harwood, delivered the address. The burden of his thought was thankfulness for our great heritage as citizens of the United States.

On November 30 delegates composed of young people from twenty-two of the twenty-nine Sunday schools in the county met in conference at Logan, Iowa, to organize for better and more far-reaching efforts along lines of Sunday school work. It being nonsectarian, the balloting for officers resulted in the election of Sister Fae Emmerson of Pisgah for president. Several important and interesting topics were discussed, among which was the subject of organized classes. They will hold another conference in the spring.

Elder C. B. Woodstock of Mondamin was the speaker at the morning service, December 9, and Elder Joseph Lane occupied in the evening.

The Department of Women are preparing for their annual bazaar to be held December 14. There will be given a chicken supper in connection with the bazaar.

Elder Joseph Seddon, of Woodbine, was the morning speaker at the church on November 25. He spoke with his old-time vigor and delivered an instructive discourse.

The sermon by President F. M. Smith and the accompanying musical numbers which were broadcasted from Omaha, December 2, were listened to by a large assembly at the church. This was made possible by Charles Van Eaton having temporarily installed a radio at the church so that as many as desired might listen in.

By special invitation from the choir, Elder H. A. Koehler, of London, Ontario, met with the choir November 27, to assist in the preparation of the cantata, which is to be given at Christmas.

After the practice they all sat down to a sumptuous supper. Brother Koehler left for his home in London, Wednesday morning. A profitable time was enjoyed by all present.

The Windsor church is located at the corner of Pierre Avenue and Assumption Streets. Elder Leslie Brown of 1059 Howard Avenue has been the pastor for the past five years, and makes all feel welcome. The old-time ring of the gospel is sounding in this part, in the old united way.

Sister Dora Glines gave a very interesting and educational address to a number of the Saints of Windsor, although her short visit to Windsor was an informal one. She will be welcome again on the next trip, as she is not a stranger to those interested in the welfare of the departmental work, having endeared herself and her mission to each of her hearers.

Bishops J. C. Dent and J. F. Keir were in Windsor, Sunday evening, December 2. Brother Keir spoke on the stewardship plan, making it very clear, and strengthening the Saints in this part that they may give greater financial assistance to the church.

Brother and Sister Robert Parker, also their daughters B. Rebah Bennett and Mary E. Bennett, left December 4 for California to spend the winter. The Saints of the Windsor Branch gave them a pleasant surprise, Monday evening, November 26, and presented Sister Parker with a traveling bag as a token of respect for her untiring efforts. She has been supervisor of the Women's Department for the past five years, and has endeared herself to those with whom she has labored. The evening was spent in games and a buffet lunch was served.

Anniversary Services Held at Windsor, Ontario

WINDSOR, ONTARIO, December 8.—The Windsor Saints held the tenth anniversary services, November 18, which were well attended, a goodly number attending from other branches. District officers present were: President R. T. Brown, Merlin, Ontario; Elder Stewart Lamont, of Chatham, Ontario; Bishop J. C. Dent, of Bothwell, Ontario; Elder Orlow Coburn, of Blenheim, Ontario. Brother Ezra Miffin represented the Department of Recreation and Expression, and Sister Ruth Miffin, Department of Women. Missionaries were H. B. Doty and Elder J. R. Grice.

Elder R. T. Brown spoke at 3 p. m. and Elder H. B. Doty at 7.30 p. m. Elder Doty's sermon was taken down by a representative of the Border Cities Star, and a lengthy report of the sermon and other services appeared in the Monday evening issue of the Star, which goes into 22,000 homes daily.

On Monday evening the members of the Windsor Branch and their friends were privileged to enjoy a splendid supper served by the Department of Women. Brother Harry Crouchman donated, as has been his custom, some very fine venison, which is quite an attraction.

Albert N. Hoxie, H. B. Doty, and J. R. Grice were present and apparently enjoyed the evening meal. A concert consisting of vocal duets, readings, music, and community singing led by Brother Hoxie, was given. Those present but who were not at conference can now realize more clearly how Brother Hoxie and the Saints sang, the last few days of the General Conference.

The Windsor Saints welcome the missionaries and general officers as they call. Some from Windsor enjoyed the services in Detroit recently and heard President Elbert A. Smith's sermons.

Riverton Saints Join Hamburg Branch

HAMBURG, IOWA, December 9.—The Hamburg Church is again occupied. The few Saints still at Riverton, having had no place of meeting for some time, have joined with the Hamburg Branch, and under the leadership of N. L. Mortimore are holding regular meetings again.

The all-day service called by the district president for December 2 was well attended, especially by Saints of these two branches. Also the illustrated lectures given by the president the following week were largely attended by Saints and nonmembers.

A Sunday school was organized December 9 with over thirty members. Sister Mortimore has been chosen as superintendent. Following this, District President A. M. Chase occupied the morning hour with a timely sermon, and Brother N. L. Mortimore was announced as speaker for the evening.

MRS. A. M. CHASE.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Independence, Missouri

Radio Flashes

Jefferson, Wisconsin.—Listened to your musical program this evening, which came in fine. It was also very loud. This is the second time I have heard your station. I hope to be one of your many regular listeners. Thanking you for this program.—Joseph Hemmeter.

Shenandoah, Iowa.—We have been listening in the last two Sundays and have certainly been enjoying them. A week ago last Sunday the music and sermon came in clearly and distinctly, and yesterday at 11 and again at 6 p. m. they came in more clearly and distinctly than ever before. I don't have a loud speaker but could hear the band music any place in the room by hanging the head phones on a chair. We are very anxious to get the L. D. S. programs for we are with you in heart and soul, and if you have a schedule would be pleased to receive one. My father, J. F. Reafield, of this place is also desirous of programs. He also has a receiving set and has been listening in. With every good wishes for the word.—D. H. Reafield.

Bevier, Missouri.—While it is probable that those in charge and the architect are considering the proposition of acoustics with the object in view of being able to broadcast by radio many of the services and programs from the proposed auditorium when completed, we would like to suggest that the membership of the whole church get behind a move to install a broadcasting station at Independence that will send the waves to all parts of the Western Hemisphere. A 1,000-watt station would be able to accomplish this object.—J. L. Williams.

New York City.—In view of the fact that you are listed as a broadcasting station of low power, I thought that you would be interested to hear that last Sunday evening I heard your services very clearly and distinctly. In fact, you could be heard on the loud speaker with fair volume. The announcements were clear and distinct, and while there were three of the local stations of high power on the air at the same time, they did not interfere with you in the least. You came through stronger than W F A B of Syracuse, which was on at the same time and nearly the same wave as you. If I am right in my directions as to your power you are to be congratulated on your volume and clearness. However, I will try to hear you again next Sunday. With best wishes for the success of your station in broadcasting.—Henry Fricke.

Gordo, Alabama.—Heard your program this evening and enjoyed it very much. I would like to have my name put on your mailing list for a regular program. This is my first time to hear any of your programs.—Joil H. Glass.

Cameron, Missouri.—We were listening in last night to the program; also the sermon by Brother Elbert Smith was much enjoyed. We took our hymn book and helped with the last song. We have a Grebe CR9 and loud speaker, and when we can't go to church, we sometimes invite our neighbors in to hear. The programs come in as clear as though we were right in church.—Mr. and Mrs. Frank Stone.

West Point, Nebraska.—Enjoyed Brother Keir's sermon very much. We are located seventy miles northwest of Omaha where Woodmen of the World have a powerful station. On different instruments at different times have tried to catch Independence but have only been successful twice after trying a long time. However, we find them clear and strong when we do catch them. This is a wonderful method of teaching the gospel to all the world and is a strength to the isolated ones.—Maude Pierson.

Grand Rapids, Michigan.—I received your station loud and clear last night and enjoyed your program very much. You come in very loud lately and I have picked you up many times.—Leland Wenzel.

Bishop Becker Tells of Life of Sister Griffiths

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 22.—Arriving at the office on the morning of December 11 there was a telegram awaiting me from Brother Gomer T. Griffiths stating that Sister Griffiths passed away Sunday evening, December 10. I made arrangements and left that evening for the home of Brother Griffiths in Columbus, Ohio, to be present at the funeral services.

I arrived in Columbus Wednesday morning, was met at the depot by Brothers Boyd Williams and Jess Overly with whom I went directly to the home of the bereaved family.

Arrangements were made for a short service to be held in the residence on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. Brother C. W. Clark, president of the First Columbus Branch, was in charge. The home was filled with Saints and neighboring friends.

Thursday morning at 7 o'clock we started on our journey to Kirtland where we arrived at 2 p. m. and held a service in the Temple, Brothers F. J. Ebeling and William Patterson assisting. It was snowing quite hard when we reached Kirtland, preventing many from attending the service. But many of the Saints and friends were present in memory of one who had endeared herself to them during the years she was a neighbor to them.

Brother and Sister Griffiths were married at Sandwich, Illinois, by Apostle T. W. Smith April 19, 1881. Sister Griffiths united with the church two years previous at Boston, Massachusetts. She began teaching school at the age of seventeen and was boarding with an aunt where she had the opportunity of reading the church literature, resulting in her going to Boston to meet with the church where she received the evidence of the work leading to her baptism.

Sister Griffiths was naturally gifted to work among the young people. For three years after her marriage to Brother Griffiths she accompanied him in his missionary work, taking advantage of the opportunities to assist in building up the work which had become her first thought.

In 1884 Brother and Sister Griffiths moved to Kirtland, Ohio, where they made their home until 1907, when they moved to Columbus, Ohio. The Kirtland Branch was very small in that early day and the workers few, but this did not dampen the ardor of Sister Griffiths. Family cares increased, but still she found time to assist in the various departments of church work, making her efforts so effectual that her influence went beyond the bounds of her own church work, resulting in her selection as superintendent of the Lake County Sunday School Association, an interdenominational organization, which position she resigned upon their moving to Columbus.

To be a missionary's wife back in the eighties meant the possession of great faith. Allowances were very small in those days. Elders' expense was not plentiful so that the husband was frequently absent from home for long periods of time, thus throwing the duties of the father upon the already burdened mother.

Sister Griffiths was the mother of eight children, three of whom were born while Brother Griffiths was in distant lands. The firstborn, Gomer, jr., and one daughter died in infancy. In December, 1894, the dreaded disease of scarlet fever entered their home and during that month of January following, the three boys, David W., Frank K., and William Henry were taken. This was a severe trial, but faith in God prevailed.

Twenty-two years ago I first became acquainted with Sister Griffiths while at a district conference and Sunday school convention at Kirtland. She presided over the convention. Sainly encouragement was given to us who were young in the work, and from them on through the years that have followed help has been extended, pointing us to the path of duty, so that to-day a great number of young men and women in the church are saying, "She was a mother to me." We sympathize with the bereft companion and daughters. We feel that their loss is also our loss. But we feel sure if Sister Griffiths were privileged to speak to us from the other shore she would call our attention to the plan of redemption which will make it possible to join our sister and the host of the righteous in the paradise of God.

Independence

Basketball Games

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 22.—The basketball season for the L. D. S. Athletic Association is in full swing. Games are being played regularly and practice continues in earnest. The game between the Independence L. D. S. team and the Southeast Presbyterian team of the Kansas City S. S. League resulted in a score of 27 to 22 in favor of the Presbyterian team. The next K. C. S. S. League game will be on January 3, when the Independence boys will meet the Kansas City L. D. S. team. Basketball games at the Stone Church gymnasium on December 22 will be: IXL and Second Independence; S. S. R. and Y. K. T.

Programs Broadcasted

Radio programs for Sunday, December 23, were: 11 a. m., Christmas program by Stone Church Sunday school; 7.30 p. m., musical program and Christmas sermon by Walter W. Smith.

Christmas Programs

Sunday, December 23, will be a "Christmas" time all around, as will be seen by the line-up of programs to be presented.

Stone Church.—The whole day will be devoted to Christmas programs, and all departments will be represented. The Sunday morning 11 o'clock service will give way for a mixed program from the junior and primary departments. Sunday afternoon the beginners will occupy in the Dining Hall. A pageant of five scenes, woven about the music of the Messiah will be presented on Sunday evening by the older juniors, intermediates, and seniors. This has been arranged by Sister Harold C. Burgess.

On Christmas Eve the junior department of the Independence Dramatic Club will present a Book of Mormon pageant, "The new star." This was written by Sister Madge Craig Siegfried and deals with the first Christmas in the "land shadowed with wings."

South Side.—The choir will give a mixed musical program at 8 o'clock Sunday evening and the Sunday school will occupy the Christmas Eve. The program of Christmas Eve is to be a mixed program and one of the principal numbers will be a play about a Civil War Christmas, which was written by Sister Heman Davies.

Walnut Park.—The various departments of the Sunday school will celebrate Christmas in their own rooms. Then in the evening the choir and orchestra will render the cantata, "The coming of the King." The pageant, "Balancing the Christmas ledger," will be presented on Christmas Eve.

Liberty Street.—The primaries and beginners will take part in a mixed program at 11 o'clock, Sunday morning, and the other departments of the Sunday school will be included in the cantata, "A rose of Bethlehem," on Sunday evening.

Englewood.—"The world's Redeemer" is the name of the Christmas cantata which the Englewood choir will give Sunday evening in connection with the children's program.

Spring Branch.—This Sunday school will celebrate with a mixed program on Christmas Eve in a real, old-fashioned way.

East Independence.—A mixed program by the children on Sunday evening is being prepared by this church.

Christmas and the Quorum of Twelve

J. Arthur Gillen has just returned from a series of meetings in Omaha and will spend Christmas in Independence with home folks.

E. J. Gleazer has just moved to Zion and will be busy finding himself at home in a new place.

Clyde F. Ellis will spend his Christmas on the ocean, having sailed from San Francisco, California, for Tahiti on Friday, December 21. He is accompanied to that region by two new missionaries, Brother and Sister R. J. Farthing.

Roy Budd and D. T. Williams will have to content themselves writing letters to visit with home folks Christmas. They are both in their new fields in California.

John W. Rushton and T. W. Williams are also in California, but being in Los Angeles and at home they can share Christmas with loved ones.

John F. Garver will be at home in Lamoni.

Paul M. Hanson and J. F. Curtis will probably spend Christmas in London, England, about where F. Henry Edwards would enjoy being. As it is the three men are five thousand miles apart and Brother Edwards as far from home as the other two men.

Liberty Street Election

A business meeting of the four groups which attend the Liberty Street Church was held on Thursday evening, December 20. J. M. Baker was nominated for pastor. The following officers were elected for church services: Charles Eaton, chorister; Lewis Resch, custodian of the church building; and Alfred Evans, member of library board. Officers for the Sunday school were: Lewis Resch, superintendent; John Zion, assistant superintendent; Victor Gunsolley, chorister; Velma Resch, pianist; Edna Resch, secretary; Marcella Schenck, superintendent of primary department; Hazel Dexter, assistant; Myrtle Stripling, pianist; Mrs. Knoepker, chorister; W. Ballinger, treasurer; Sister W. Ballinger, member of library board. Sister W. Ballinger was also elected superintendent of Department of Women.

Conference Notices

Arkansas, at Fisher, Arkansas, February 8 to 10, 1924. Election of officers will be had. This will be a delegate conference. All branches are urged to send delegates. Friday will be devoted to departmental work. Ida Emde, secretary.

Northern California, at Sacramento, February 1 to 3. Cecile Hawley, Secretary.

Improvement in Train Service to Independence via the Chicago and Alton Railroad

It will probably be of interest to readers of the HERALD and other members of the church to know that the Chicago and Alton Railroad passenger train which has formerly left Kansas City at 10 a. m., destined for Saint Louis will hereafter leave at 12.15 p. m., stopping at Independence regularly at 12.40 p. m., arriving in Saint Louis at 8.25 p. m. and that the Chicago and Alton westbound train No. 21, leaving Saint Louis at 9.03 a. m. will make a regular stop at Independence at 5.01 p. m.

This compliance with our petition to the Chicago and Alton Railroad for better train service should be appreciated by increased patronage.

G. S. TROWBRIDGE,
Transportation Manager.

Conference Minutes

NAUVOO.—At Fort Madison, Iowa, November 10 and 11. Officers chosen for the ensuing year were: Amos Berve, president; W. H. Gunn and G. S. Daniel, counselors; W. H. Gunn, clerk; A. L. Sanford, Sunday school superintendent; E. R. Williams, Religio superintendent. A permanent Nauvoo district reunion was formed. Resolution was adopted approving of the erection of a pavilion at Nauvoo for reunion purposes. Of the general ministry the following were present: D. T. Williams, C. M. Clifford, Amos Berve, G. Scott Daniel. Preaching by D. T. Williams and C. M. Clifford. All services were blessed with the spirit of peace. Next conference is to be held in Burlington, Iowa, in June, 1924. W. H. Gunn, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—With First Chicago Branch, December 7 to 9. Friday afternoon was devoted to Sunday school and Friday evening a program was rendered by the local Department of Recreation and Expression. At the Saturday business session, at which much more interest was shown than had been evidenced for some time past, the following officers were sustained: J. L. Cooper, president; F. M. Cooper and O. A. McDowell, counselors; J. J. Oliver, superintendent of Sunday schools; J. W. Peterson, field worker for Department of Recreation and Expression; and Sister Mamie Hayer, head of Department of Women. Preaching was had by J. E. Wildermuth, W. A. McDowell, and Apostle Garver. John F. Garver and O. A. McDowell addressed the priesthood Sunday morning. Sacrament services in the afternoon. Next conference will be held on the coordinating plan with the Saints in DeKalb, during June. O. A. McDowell, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

WHITE.—Rachael R. White was born January 23, 1847. Baptized January 13, 1895. Was an active member and a teacher of a senior Sunday school class for a number of years. Died on November 12, 1923.
