The Department of Women is doing excellent work in serving suppers every two weeks in the church vestry.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is active under the direction of Brother Ralph Candage.

The Saints here have much for which to be thankful, and the Lord is blessing his work in this part of the vineyard.

Persia, Iowa

October 9.—Brother Joseph Lane, our district president, was with us last sacrament Sunday and gave the Saints a good, instructive talk. We had preaching in the evening by Brother Lane, and there was a good crowd and excellent attention. Brother Lane was present by special invitation of the Saints.

We were disappointed recently because for two Sundays the speakers we had expected did not arrive. We suppose that rain and bad roads were the cause of their failure to appear.

It is the duty of the ministry to preach the gospel and present the doctrine of Christ as attractively as possible in the spirit of truth and plainness, remembering the injunction of the Savior that we should be one.

Chapple, Ontario

October 5.—The Saints of Rainy River District need help very badly as there are only a few families here and they are from ten to twenty miles apart. However, they are trying to do what they can for the gospel of Christ. Most of them try to get together once a month for the sacrament and to study the Sunday school lesson, when the Spirit of the Lord is enjoyed to a great degree.

Brother McBride of Emo holds the office of priest and is holding meetings at his home every week. He is a faithful worker, not only around here, but also in the Minnesota District, among the few scattered Saints that are within his reach. He needs help, as there should be an elder here for a while to open up the work. There are many honest souls here if the true gospel could only be brought to them.

It is the desire of our hearts to help in spreading the gospel, and we hope the day will come when more will be done. My hope and prayer through Christ is that the gospel will be preached here with the Spirit and power of the Lord and that many will be brought into the fold.

SISTER NELLIE MCPHEE.

Detroit Conference

Conference of Detroit District convened at Flint, Michigan, October 4, at 10 a. m. with associate president M. W. Liston in the chair. The opening session was shrouded in gloom, but after a session of prayer the good Spirit gave promise of a successful ending.

On account of the books of the district failing to appear at the opening session, the district secretary having been detained, the reports on the desk were read, which included reports from the presidency, superintendent of the district Sunday school, Department of Recreation and Expression, and some reports from elders and priests' quorums. The report coming from the Department of Recreation and Expression was exceptionally good, and the conference ordered it to be sent to the Autumn Leaves for publication.

Another joint reunion with the Eastern Michigan District was provided for, and a committee was appointed to serve in connection with the one appointed by Eastern Michigan. Delegates were selected for General Conference.

Election of officers resulted in the selection of Elder M. W. Liston for President, A. E. Grant, secretary; Robert H. Coats for treasurer, who was also recommended to the Presiding Bishopric for Bishop's agent; auditor, W. L. Bennett; superintendent of Recreation and Expression, Carlisle Whitehead; superintendent of Sunday schools, V. D. Schaar; superintendent Department of Women, Sister S. B. Smith; and for musical director, Ruth Wilcox. The retiring officers were given a vote of thanks for their faithful service.

J. R. Grice was the speaker Sunday evening. The Sunday morning prayer service commenced at eight o'clock and ended at a quarter of twelve. An abundant outpouring of the Spirit prevailed throughout. Revelation, prophecy, and two gifts of tongues, with interpretation, were enjoyed.

Near the close of the prayer service hour, Elder G. R. Kuykendall entertained the junior school in the basement of the church. Elder Kuykendall also spoke at the 2.30 preaching service, after which the remaining business of the conference was finished. The district president selected as his counselors, K. H. Green and W. L. Bennett. These appointments were ratified by the conference. William M. Grice was the speaker for the evening hour. At the close of the preaching service a vote of thanks was extended to the Saints of Flint for their hospitality, and the conference adjourned subject to call according to previous resolution, time and place having been left to the district presidency.

Such spiritual experiences as were enjoyed at this conference encourage everyone to continue in the great work of preparation for Zion.

Word comes from Sister Mavis Meredith, secretary of the Midland District in England, that a party of about thirty Saints were arranging to take a trip to London to see the Empire Exhibition. There are about six hundred Saints in that district, who go to make up four branches: Birmingham, Leicester, Clay Cross, and Sutton-in-Ashfield.

Cosmopolis, Washington

October 8.—The work here is progressing nicely. On October 5 Brother and Sister C. E. Jones, district president, of Seattle, organized a branch in the city of Hoquiam to be known as the Gray Harbor Branch. E. E. Fischel was chosen branch president; J. E. Phillips, priest; A. L. Ward, financial secretary; and Sister Blanche Estell, branch clerk.

A large number of Saints and friends attended the organization, and all brought large, well-filled baskets. Dinner was served in the dining department of the K. P. Hall, in which all took an active part and enjoyed themselves immensely.

Brother S. P. Cox, and the orchestra from Centralia, together with about twenty of the Saints from that city, including Sister Jessie Ward, author of The Call at Evening, attended our organization.

There is a splendid opportunity for missionary work here, and we are wondering why all the missionaries stay away and do not visit us. We hope to have some kind of missionary services soon. Six have been baptized recently, and others will doubtless be added before long.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

October 9.—The Saints of Colorado Springs were surprised two weeks ago by a visit from President Elbert A. Smith. All greatly enjoyed hearing him preach.

September 17 marked the breaking of the ground for the new addition to our little church. The basement is now excavated, and the forms are practically all set for the concrete, which will be partly poured Saturday afternoon. Nearly all of our brethren work all week, and then work on the church Saturday afternoon.

We have had good sermons lately from Brother B. E. Brown.

The family of Brother Ebeling is not out of quarantine, and we will be glad to have them out again. They have been undergoing a siege of diphtheria.

We are enjoying a goodly degree of God's Spirit, and we earnestly pray that others may be blessed likewise.

Tulare, California

October 8.—The Department of Recreation and Expression is progressing nicely. A contest was held between the adult and young people's classes to see which class could offer the best program. This caused much interest and enthusiasm. The young people gave their program Sunday, September 28, and the adult class gave their program Sunday, October 5. Both programs were well planned and were enjoyed by all present. The judges have not given their decision as to which class offered the best program. The winners will be served a banquet by the losers.

The children of our Sunday school superintendent, J. A. Damron, are suffering from an eye infection. They are gradually improving.

The Department of Women had a vacation through the summer but expect to revive this fall and begin work again. They will hold a meeting Thursday, October 9, and begin working on fancywork for a bazaar to be held during November.

The sacramental service was well attended, and a good spiritual meeting was enjoyed by those present.

College Day November 9.

Independence

Stone Church

Florence Cisley Chatburn was born July 20, 1868, at Harlan, Iowa. She was the daughter of Thomas W. and Selina Chatburn. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints September 23, 1878, by her father, T. W. Chatburn, at Council Bluffs and was confirmed at the same time. Married to Doctor E. S. McNichols at Kansas City, Missouri, January 7, 1886. To them were born three sons, Leslie of Kansas City, and Roland and Elmer of Independence, all of whom survive. In 1884, with her father's family, she moved to Independence, where she has resided nearly all of her life except the period of about ten years which was spent in Atchison, Kansas.

Among the many services she has rendered to the church may be mentioned the forty years of her association with the choir at the Stone Church and an almost life-long membership in the Sunday school, including the fourteen years as secretary in the Independence Sunday school and her successful period of nine years as leader and teacher of the young people's class, the I. X. L., which is the largest in the school. The class was organized by our sister with about four members and has an enrollment at present of more than one hundred. She also was a devoted member of the Religio Society from the beginning and was teacher of the Nonpariel Class for several years. For fifteen years, in association with her sisters, Mrs. Brackenbury and Mrs. Brocaw, she has contributed to the programs of the many funerals held in the Stone Church. For several years, under the authority of A. N. Hoxie, she was head of the young people's choir movement of the church. She was a member of the Music Club of Independence, of the Laurel Club, and of the Patronesses of the Independence Sanitarium.

During her residence at Atchison, very largely owing to her influence and unceasing activities the branch was revived, and the efforts she inspired in the Sunday school, Religio, and musical services resulted in the securing of the church which is now occupied by the congregation. She also was superintendent of the Department of Women of the general church for several years and traveled extensively in the interests of this work. For years she has been a familiar figure at many of the reunions, rendering valuable assistance in normal work, department programs, and music, in all of which her service was characterized by cheerful and talented endeavor.

Besides her husband, Doctor E. S. McNichols; Mr. and Mrs. Leslie and daughter Margaret of Kansas City; Roland and Mr. and Mrs. Elmer; her aged mother, Mrs. T. W. Chatburn; brothers, Frank J. Chatburn of Bandon, Oregon, Alma Chatburn of Shawnee, Oklahoma, and T. W., jr., of Los Angeles, California; sisters, Mrs. Mayme Hilliard of Fort Myers, Florida, Mrs. Myra Brackenbury and Mrs. Nell Brocaw, and a large number of relatives who mourn her departure, a vast circle of friends share in the loss her demise has brought to church and community and express their deepest sympathy with the bereaved family.

Our sister began to complain of failing health about one year ago. In July she broke down so completely that she had to cease her several public duties, teaching her class in Sunday school the last time in August. She was taken to the Sanitarium two weeks ago, was operated upon, and died Wednesday morning at twelve forty-five, October 15.

The attendance at the First Independence Sunday School on October 19 was 1,375, with seventeen perfect classes. Two new officers were recently elected: Mrs. Lora Strachan was made assistant superintendent of the junior department, and Mrs. R. D. Etzenhouser of the beginner department.

November 9 was approved as Sunday school rally day, but on account of this day being set apart by the general church as College Day, the following week will be thus observed.

At a recent meeting of the executive committee a social gathering was provided for, to be held October 17, the object of the gathering being the promotion of fellowship between the officers of the Sunday school. It was to be a time in which the officers could lay aside their official dignity and become better acquainted under conditions of less hurry and tenseness than they are accustomed to in coming in contact with each other.

October 19 was Institute Inspiration Day, at which time twenty appointments were filled by teams of two. Each of the eight congregations of Zion was visited at least twice, and speeches were made acquainting people with the opportunities available to them in the work of the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences. There are about two hundred and fifty enrolled in the Institute this year. New equipment has been added, which has made it possible to do much better work in the chemistry course. This course is now almost full, but the other courses are unlimited.

The K F I X Radio Orchestra paid a visit Sunday night to the Saints of Grandview, Missouri, where Elder R. D. Weaver is holding a series of meetings. The Grandview Saints were not expecting the orchestra, but the church was packed, and all seemed to thoroughly enjoy the music. It so happened that the branch chorister was ill, and the orchestra took charge of the opening exercises. Several Independence Saints made the trip possible by contributing their cars, and all who went felt glad for the opportunity to render this bit of service.

President F. M. Smith attended the conference of the Southern Wisconsin District Saturday and Sunday, October 18 and 19. He is returning to Independence about October 22.

Mrs. William Ecclestone, who has been visiting her relatives in England since the latter part of July, expects to set sail for Montreal, Canada, October 24, on the S. S. Regina. She will likely reach Independence about November 10.

Brother Linney A. Brown passed away at eleven o'clock last Sunday morning at the East Side Hospital, Kansas City, of typhoid fever. The funeral service was held at the Stone Church at three o'clock Tuesday in charge of Elder Frederick A. Smith. Brother Brown leaves his wife and a five-year-old daughter, besides his father, mother, two sisters, and one brother, all of Independence. He was assistant paymaster of the Kansas City Bolt and Nut Company at Sheffield, and an exemplary Saint.

Owen O. Nunamaker died at his home October 16 following a stroke of paralysis which occurred a few hours before his death. Funeral services were held in the Stone Church October 17 in charge of A. V. Karlstrom. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery. He is survived by his wife, three daughters, two sons, three sisters, two brothers, and three grandchildren. He was in the employ of the Board of Education, at the Columbian School.

Tuesday evening, October 14, occurred the marriage of Miss Erma Owen to Harold E. Goold, son of Elder H. W. Goold, of Mount Washington, Elder G. E. Harrington officiating. An enjoyable time was had.

Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths will be the speaker Sunday morning at the Stone Church. The sermon will not be broadcast.

Second Church

Sunday morning's sermon was by Elder William H. Kelley, and the evening hour was occupied by Elder George Shearer.

No afternoon service was held, and a large delegation of the Saints was in attendance at the funeral of Sister McNichols at the Stone Church.

At Sunday school Elder C. B. Hartshorn made an extensive announcement of the work of the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, and in the evening Kenneth Fligg again presented the work of the Institute.

Several children in the section are sick of scarlet and typhoid fevers, but none in very dangerous condition. The sickness, however, is interfering with the attendance to some extent, at Religio, Sunday school, and all of the services.

Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths, for many years the president of the Quorum of Twelve, came to Independence Monday, Wednesday and Thursday nights he will speak at the Second Church, Delaware and South Avenue, illustrating his lectures with numerous views.

Brother E. H. Davis and Sister Evelyn Dodson were married October 18, at the home of the bride's parents, 917 South Emery, Elder R. J. Lambert officiating.

Liberty Street

President Elbert A. Smith was the speaker Sunday morning on "Our spiritual inheritance," and Bishop B. J. Scott occupied Sunday evening, using for his subject "The six P's." Both sermons were very highly appreciated by the large audiences present.

The Silver Wing Chapter of Temple Builders will repeat their program that was given the night of August 26, November 2, Sunday evening. This is a very fine program, and there should be a large attendance out to support them at this time.

A great deal of interest is being shown in the old-fashioned singing school, which is held every Friday night under the direction of Victor W. Gunsolley. People of all ages are attending, several grandmothers nearly seventy-five being greatly interested in the work presented. Anyone interested in this work is invited to attend.

Wednesday evening, October 15, Brother W. E. Moore and Sister A. G. Honea were married at the church, Pastor J. M. Baker officiating.

Englewood

A big basket dinner and special services were arranged for Englewood Branch last Sunday to arouse interest in the new church they are planning to build. A large crowd was out in the morning to hear Brother Robert Clow, and all enjoyed the basket dinner. In the afternoon a great many attended the funeral of Mrs. Flo McNichols at the Stone Church, but those who did not go enjoyed a social afternoon at the church. Brother John Ely was the evening speaker.

The ladies of the group will meet at the church one day this week to tack a comforter.

East Independence

The Willing Workers Club will have a Halloween social October 28 at the corner of Twelfth Street and Turner. Everyone is invited to attend. The proceeds will go to help build the new church.

Brother A. H. Parsons was the speaker Sunday morning, and Harry Friend occupied in the evening.

Enoch Hill

The speaker Sunday morning was Elder W. J. Brewer, and Elder Ivor Davies spoke in the evening at seven o'clock.

College Day November 9.

Graceland Chats

LAMONI, IOWA, October 18.—What with studies and athletic activities, Graceland is a busy place. Last week Mrs. M. Walker drove out to the college and, seated near the administration building, watched the students hurry to and fro to classes. It was part of the fulfillment of her dream. She had never witnessed such activity before, and her eyes sparkled as she expressed her pleasure and deep satisfaction. Mrs. John Zimmermann, sr., another friend to Graceland, was also a recent visitor.

The faculty luncheon was held at the usual time Monday in the economics room, where the long table was prettily decorated with fall flowers. All enjoyed the excellent work of the cooking class, which was of a superior order.

Tuesday morning chapel period was occupied by Brother Gunsolley, who gave an excellent talk on "Your record."

This week has been ideal for the outdoor games scheduled. Thursday morning the girls' tournament in volley ball and playground ball was held under skies as blue as summer's own. This was an intersociety contest.

A rousing "pep" meeting was held Thursday evening in preparation for the game with Chillicothe on the home field. Then Friday a demonstration of real football was given by Coach Gilbert at the chapel hour. He laid down a code of ethics for those who cheer and those who play that was a sermon, plain and far-reaching. "Don't cheer when the other team loses a ball; cheer when our fellows get one." No one could hear his talk on football without receiving inspiration for the real game of life. His men learn to eat, sleep, play, work, and serve the cause of justice while they learn football. More than one gray-haired person commented on Friday that that was the best thing they had ever heard on football. Clean and honest, a non-tobacco squad—that is Graceland's team. Many saw for the first time the real essence of the game. That talk counted, for those who stood on the side lines kept their place and knew when to support the team intelligently. How much that means in the game of life—intelligent support of your own team. Our coach is one of the busiest academic instructors and is also social supervisor in one of the boys' dormitories. Graceland's team has played four games this season, and their goal line has been crossed only once. They lost two games, and in two games neither side scored. At the beginning of the season, about forty reported for practice. The squad was handicapped because of a few good men who at the last minute found it impossible to register. The team is made up mostly of new men and is improving as the season progresses.

College Day November 9.

Far West Stake

Evidences of new life are to be seen these days in certain new and increased activities in the Far West Stake. There is also a shifting of forces which we hope will have a revivifying effect in some ways.

The two members of the stake presidency, O. Salisbury and Herbert Barto, who are free to do so, move freely throughout the stake among the Saints and the branches.

I do not have details in hand to enable me to write definitely of the work of the two missionaries, O. W. Okerlind and T. W. Curtis, further than to say that some interesting series of meetings have been held recently by them.

At present Edmond J. Gleazer is conducting services at the Maple Grove Church, which is about four miles north of Stewartsville. The Saints are delighted with his ministrations.

During the summer and fall, two-day meetings have been held in about ten of the branches. At these meetings departmental heads conducted exercises for the purpose of making more effective the work of the Sunday school, Religio, Department of Women, Music Department, and the work of the priesthood. Lectures, round tables, essays, preaching, prayer meetings, and the like are the features of these two-day meetings.

On October 10-12 a priesthood conference was held in Cameron, at which President F. M. Smith and E. J. Gleazer were present and officiated. This conference was devoted to different kinds of exercises designed to train the ministry for its work and to answer the problems of church work in general. The conference is a revival of one of the customs of the early church, and if developed according to plan and promise (which in all probability it will be), it will result in a more effective dispatch of church business and an integration and solidification of the working forces of the stake.

Class work in public speaking is being conducted by O. Salisbury. This is his specialty and of course is valuable to those especially who do public work. J. A. Koehler is teaching logic, economics, sociology, and grammar to classes in several of the branches. The subject matter of these studies is chosen with particular reference to the work of the church.

No attempt is being made to develop our Zionite movement pending the adjustment of general church conditions which bear thereupon.

J. A. KOEHLER.

Holden Stake News

Holden

Bishop B. R. McGuire was the speaker at the church Sunday, the 12th, Bishop J. A. Becker assisting. Sisters McGuire, Becker, and Hess came with them. We are pleased to have these visiting Saints with us. Brother F. A. McWethy was the speaker Sunday night.

Sister Pauline Millender was selected choir leader to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Sister Enola Baker last Wednesday evening. A reception committee was appointed to care for visitors at the stake conference, which is to meet here next Saturday and Sunday, October 25 and 26. Conference opens at ten o'clock in the morning with prayer service. The Saints are requested to come to this service in fasting and with prayer in their hearts for the conference.

Marshall

Roy A. Johnson, son of Brother and Sister Marion Johnson, and Miss Enna Roberta Jacobs were married Sunday morning, October 5, by Elder Levi Phelps. Another marriage of interest was that of Brother Walter E. Smith and Sister Beulah A. James, which occurred at the farm home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph James, Saturday night, October 11. Brother Phelps said the words that made this worthy young couple one. A party of young people attended from Marshall.

Brother Harold Thayer has been in very poor health for some time, from too close confinement to business. A business friend has offered to take him in his car all over Saline County. It is hoped this dear brother will find health and cure while viewing the hills and dales of beautiful Saline these beautiful October days.

Sister Lillian Thayer McDonough is letting her light shine by loaning tracts, books, and papers of the church to her friends at her new home in Fayette, Missouri. The Latter Day Saints are not represented there. Should there be any Saints there, they could address Sister McDonough at 311 Corprew Avenue, Fayette, Missouri.

The Department of Women held a social Thursday night, October 9, at the home of Brother and Sister C. A. Ridge.

Buckner

Brother C. F. Scarcliff, stake Sunday school superintendent, was with us Sunday morning and at Sibley in the afternoon. R. B. Cook spoke at night. Interest is good, and we are having some wonderful prayer meetings both at Sibley and Buckner.

Courtney

Brother J. E. Bozarth was the speaker in the morning and Brother C. H. Belkham at night. A pie supper on the 14th netted the sisters about $28.

Lexington

We are still enjoying the Spirit of God in all our meetings. We have been especially blessed of late, and the Spirit has spoken to us in our prayer services. It gave us much encouragement and needed admonition. Brother R. E. Burgess has been with us for the last ten days and has done much for us. He baptized Brother John Curtner and his wife yesterday. They were confirmed by G. M. Shippy and J. E. Johnson. Their three children were also blessed, Brethren Brendel and Burgess officiating. This makes a total of eight baptized for the same locality. The gospel seed was sown there for the first time when Brother E. A. Davis was pastor here five years ago.

Sister Garvia Mayer, who underwent a serious operation at Saint Luke's Hospital, will return home this week. Her mother, Sister Lola Johnson, has been with her through her illness.

We have gained two families, Brother Truman Manlove and family and Sister Verna Neff and daughter Edith Verna, also from Cameron, Missouri. Brother G. M. Shippy preached Sunday morning and Brother Burgess at night.

TO BEGIN WORK ON NEW RADIO SOON

You will find inclosed a check for five dollars. We expect to send more later. . . . We know of people that have never been inside our church, who have listened to programs from K F I X and have had the opportunity to hear Latter Day Saint elders.

Sunday schools, Religios, women's organizations, and various other groups are helping to make the radio drive a success. Sister Jennie Weed Young, in sending a donation from the Phoenix, Arizona, Sunday school writes:

The young people of the Sunday school are planning to install a receiving set and hope to enjoy some of the good things we know will be broadcast for the benefit of the young during the coming year.

The ladies of Zion's Circle Aid Society, at Anamosa, Iowa, sent a contribution with the following letter:

Although none of us have radio sets, we want to help spread the gospel, and truly this is a wonderful way, and it is God's way of reaching the isolated and those of other faiths. We need help here in eastern Iowa. The people are discouraged, yet the women have awakened and something will be done. We pray God's blessing on the radio.

The Sac City Sunday school, at Sac City, Iowa, made the following encouraging report:

We have a small Sunday school here with five heads of families. Our quota was thirty dollars, and we raised forty-three dollars which we turned in to our Bishop's agent. I only wish we were able to pay more. Our school is planning on a radio set, so we will be able to hear the sermons and musical programs from Zion.

If every HERALD reader would send even the small amount of fifty cents toward the new 1000-watt station, the radio drive would soon be over, and before very long the powerful radiocaster would be "sending the sound the world around." Many are in position to contribute small amounts who are unable to give as much as they would like. Small donations are as much appreciated as large ones. Send them in. Address Radio K F I X, Independence, Missouri.

God Made Manifest in Gift of Healing

Over the signature of Sister Hazel Vermilye, of Plano, Illinois, F. M. C., of Plano, recently received a letter which tells of the healing of Sister Vermilye's daughter through administration by the elders of the church. The little girl was diagnosed as suffering from blood poisoning, and the doctors were going to resort to surgery, but the Lord's blessing saved them this necessity and spared the child's life.

The mother's letter to F. M. C. is full of expressions of gratitude, and she asked that the one addressed might pray that her husband realize and recognize the work of God and obey the same.

Later Doctor Vermilye was baptized and is now a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

A Radio Slogan Contest

K F I X needs a good slogan. Two slogans, used in the radio drive, have been suggested: "Every ear shall hear." "Send the sound the earth around."

Many stations are better known by their slogans than by their call letters. Who does not know "The heart of America" or "Where the tall corn grows"?

Our friends at Zion, Illinois, have a splendid slogan: "Where God rules man prospers."

Everyone is invited to enter the slogan contest. Remember that the slogan should be short, "catchy," and easy to announce. The winning slogan, together with the name of the originator, will be published in the church papers, and will be announced during the first program broadcast from the new 1000-watt station.

Send all slogans to Slogan Committee, Radio K F I X, Independence, Missouri.

Radio Flashes

Cincinnati, Ohio.—I tried to get your station through on Sunday evening, October 5, but couldn't get it distinctly. To-night (October 7, K F I X using 268 meters) it was fine.—Miss Irma Burch.

Covington, Kentucky.—Heard your last selection and signing off last night, Tuesday, October 7, about 9.50 p. m. You announced that you were using new wave of 268 meters, instead of 240 as heretofore. This was the first time I have heard your station. While I only happened to hear one number on your program, you came in fine considering weather conditions. You were louder and clearer than either the Fort Worth Star Telegram or Woodmen of the World, Omaha, which, as you know, are good stations. Thought you would be glad to know that you were received favorably at this point.—G. C. Keller.

Melita, Manitoba.—I want to express my appreciation of the program you broadcast last night. We enjoyed it very much.—Ernest Oxley.

Springfield, Illinois.—Your radio concerts are greatly enjoyed every Sunday evening.—Gail Johnson.

Norwood, Ohio.—Your programs are very fine. Your station comes in with surprising volume over local station W S A I (Cincinnati).—B. C. Saur.

Conference Notices

Southeastern Illinois, at Centralia, Illinois, November 1 and 2. The new church is to be dedicated Sunday, November 2. One of the Bishopric and Apostle Edwards are expected to attend. All are invited to be present. Charles H. Wesner, pastor.

The True Philosophy of Church Government

II. THE CHURCH A THEOCRATIC-DEMOCRACY

The government of the church is of a twofold character and may be said to be a theocratic-democracy.—President Joseph Smith, "Saints' Herald," December 25, 1895.

During recent months two statements have appeared in the HERALD, as follows:

There are two ideas of government in the church to-day. One group affirms that the masses are not capable of self-government—that democracy in matters of state is all but a failure and in the church has no legitimate place. Common consent takes the form of assent; and agency, what there is of it, means, follow your leaders.—SAINTS' HERALD, July 9, 1924.

The President's theory of government, while he terms it a theocratic-democracy, under analysis proves to be a theocratic-autocracy. No provision is made for the membership outside of the priesthood participating in governmental affairs except to assent to what is proposed by or through a hierarchy.—"Protest against supreme directional control," SAINTS' HERALD, August 20, 1924, p. 800.

I do not appear to speak for any group of men who hold that democracy has no legitimate place in the church. Quite to the contrary. Nor do I come to speak for any group of men who believe in a theocratic or any other kind of autocracy, or that the sole right of the people is to "assent to that which is proposed by or through a hierarchy." Advocates of such notions may defend them.

The group comprising the majority members of the joint council of April, 1924, (twenty-five in number) subscribed to a document on church government which began with the declaration: "The church, as defined by the late Joseph Smith, is a theocratic-democracy." Their sincerity is to be presumed.

Three Things That Spell Democracy

It is true that we hold that to the church God speaks through a chosen prophet, who is also president of the church. "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," still means a great deal to us and, if I mistake not, to the church generally. Divine direction comes to the church; the people "assent." That is theocracy. The principle therein involved should not be thought of as merely a servile assenting to that which is "proposed by or through a hierarchy."

Yes, we hold to revelation from God through the prophet, and assent by the people. But that is not all. We have always taught these three things. Note them well:

First, the people may accept or reject the message.

Second, they may at any time reject the messenger, the prophet; or they may reject both message and man.

Third, the people in General Conference may at any time themselves initiate legislation. Not "assent" alone, but originate. Furthermore, any member of any local congregation may initiate legislation to be carried up from the local business meeting or the district conference to the General Conference for approval and enactment as law to the church.

Do these three things spell autocracy, or do they spell democracy? Since God made demos they have spelled democracy.

No autocrat ever existed who depended on the vote of the people for office, and on their vote for the support of his measures, and whose people were free legislators.

Divine direction through human instrumentality and also suggestion from leading men and quorums, with "assent" of the people thereto, has been an important part of our belief and practice since the very day of the organization of the church, as we shall see. But "assent" is not the only legislative function of the people.

The Right of the People to Originate Legislation

Lest I be challenged on the statement that we affirm the right of the people to initiate legislation, I will say that during the council meetings President Smith stated clearly that he had always admitted that right. And in the "Open Letter to the Clergy," published by the Presidency, written by myself and approved by President Frederick M. Smith, and now eleven years in circulation, appears the following:

We are democratic in principle, to this extent—that in the general conference legislation may originate with any delegate, whether of the priesthood or the laity, male or female; and that all proposed legislation is freely debated on the floor of the assembly, and is decided by majority vote.

Not only are the three functions mentioned conceded, they are always in exercise by the people.

At each annual conference they decide whether they will or will not accept the President (and all other general church officers).

So often as a revelation comes to them by his hand, or a recommendation with presumption of inspiration, they decide whether they will accept or reject.

And at each conference they originate legislation.

Theocracy Modifies Democracy

The principle of theocracy cannot but greatly modify the principle of democracy. How can it be otherwise when it is the work of the divine to transcend and transform the human? Any effort to make the church purely democratic, to elect our prophet by popular vote, and to guide our own destiny by ballot, will end in disaster.

Nor in this do I forget that there is "diffusive inspiration" among us as a people; there is also in a large way provision for divine direction through well-defined channels, to the general church through the prophet and president (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42; 27: 2; 43: 1, 2); and in some matters to branches and districts through their presiding officers (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14); and for the whole body of the priesthood to act as spiritual leaders and advisers to the people.

Important Though the Voice of the People May Be, the Voice of God Is More Important

This church, as defined by the late Joseph Smith, is a theocratic-democracy—not man-made, but of divine appointment and origin. . . . It is divine government among the people, for the people, and for the glory of God and the achievement of His purposes toward ideal conditions. . . . God directs the church through clearly indicated channels; and His voice is the directing power of the church; but to this the assent of the people must be secured.—Document on Church Government.

I was traditioned under the late President Joseph Smith, who gave full value to the principle of democracy in the church. But under him I was also traditioned to a belief in the very great importance of revelation (theocratic guidance). I have back of me three generations of men and women who dedicated their lives to the doctrine that God is dominant in this church—"God with us."

Therefore, having given due place to the voice of the people, I now affirm that while the voice of the people is a big thing in the church, the voice of God is THE big thing. We shift the emphasis at our peril.

The emphasis is shifted when we are asked to subscribe to such slogans as this: "The voice of the people is the voice of God."

The voice of God does not contradict itself. We, in our conferences, often enough to keep ourselves humble have affirmed one thing one day and the next have reconsidered and denied. The voice of God is not divided, two thirds for and one third against. No, the voice of the people is not the voice of God; though happily it may be in harmony with the voice of God.

The emphasis is shifted if we adopt such slogans as this: "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

That is a splendid slogan for a civil democracy like the United States (to the extent to which it is democratic). For a theocratic-democracy like the church it is utterly inadequate. The earth was cumbered with churches of the people, governed by the people and for the people when God moved to set up His own church and establish HIS government; or, as the document on church government says, "divine government among the people." "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end."—Isaiah 9: 7.

Is It From Heaven or of Men?

It is the old question, "The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?" If we hold to an authoritative religion we must answer, "It is from heaven." If we trace authority back to the congregation (to man, no matter how greatly augmented by numbers), we must answer, "It is of men."

And thus thought Brigham Young, who said:

Who ordained me to be the First President of this church on earth? I answer, it is the voice of the people, and that is sufficient.—Millennial Star, vol. 16, p. 442.

But the Reorganized Church has declared:

The president of the church is primarily appointed by revelation. This appointment is confirmed by the vote of the church properly taken.—General Conference resolution of 1894.

It Is From Heaven

The church has had no greater advocate of democracy than Heman C. Smith. And on the source of authority he said:

While there are general rules for the church to be governed by, yet so far as authority is concerned, the command of God is authority for anything. By virtue of his command authority is bestowed.—True Succession, p. 143.

The position of President Joseph Smith was similar:

Whatever God commands man to do, the command carries with it the authority to do the thing commanded to be done. When the church was instituted some seventy odd years ago, the Melchisedec priesthood was conferred for the last time before the second and final coming of Christ. . . . This priesthood so conferred was endowed with all the rights, privileges, and authority to bring forth the church of Christ, conduct its expansion and watch over its development and welfare until the coming of Christ should bring its work to a triumphant and glorious consummation.—SAINTS' HERALD, May 21, 1902, p. 497.

When President Joseph Smith came to the Presidency in 1860, he said:

I wish to say that I have come here not to be dictated by any men or set of men. I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me.—Church History, vol. 3, p. 247.

He gave full recognition to the voice and conscience of the people, but traced his primal authority to God. That was the faith of our fathers, and it was the law:

Go ye into all the world; preach the gospel to every creature, acting in the authority which I have given you.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 1.

Guard the rights of democracy, to be sure; but let the voice of God still be the big thing in our religion and church polity.

Leaves From Early Church History

I like the statement of the document on church government: "This church is not man-made, but of divine appointment and origin." Note this history:

The rise of the church of Christ in these last days, being one thousand eight hundred and thirty years since the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the flesh, it being regularly organized and established agreeably to the laws of our country, by the will and commandments of God in the fourth month, and on the sixth day of the month which is called April; which commandments were given to Joseph Smith, jr., who was called of God and ordained an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the first elder of this church; and to Oliver Cowdery, who was also called of God an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the second elder of this church, and ordained under his hand: and this according to the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to whom be all glory both now and forever. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1.

Whilst the Book of Mormon was in the hands of the printer, we still continued to bear testimony and give information, as far as we had opportunity; and also made known to our brethren that we had received commandment to organize the church, and accordingly we met together for that purpose, at the house of the above mentioned Mr. Whitmer (being six in number) on Tuesday, the sixth day of April, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and thirty. Having opened the meeting by solemn prayer to our heavenly Father we proceeded (according to previous commandment) to call on our brethren to know whether they accepted us as their teachers in the things of the kingdom of God, and whether they were satisfied that we should proceed and be organized as a church according to said commandment which we had received. To these they consented by a unanimous vote.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 76, 77.

Thus at the very inception of the work God spoke through the Prophet, and the people "consented." It was the divine way, and that method continues to this day. However, when the church was organized and moved out, the right to initiate legislation was recognized and is still exercised.

A Chapter in Later Church History

The foregoing chronicles one of the most important events in the administration of Joseph the Martyr. One of the most important events in the administration of his son was the organization of the Independence and Lamoni Stakes, marking an epoch in the life of the church; the procedure was similar in the two events. The record of the organization of the Independence Stake reads:

The President [Joseph] stated that he was authorized by the joint council [Presidency and Twelve] to present the name of one for the office of president of the stake. It was left with the people to accept or reject. If the nomination was rejected he was authorized to present another. He presented the name of George Hulmes. . . . The nomination was indorsed by a unanimous vote.—General Conference Minutes, 1901, p. 432.

Here Joseph proposed, and the people assented. And he said further that in case they should reject the proposal he reserved the right to make another.

Was that procedure, in which the Twelve of that day (W. H. Kelley, James Caffall, John Lake, Heman Smith, Joseph Luff, Joseph Lambert, G. T. Griffiths, I. N. White, R. C. Evans, J. W. Wight, and Peter Anderson) joined with Joseph Smith, theocratic-autocracy? Did the church think of it as submission to the dictates of a hierarchy?

Evidently not. Does that which was theocratic-democracy in two successive administrations become theocratic-autocracy in the third? Certainly not.

Possibly Not So Far Apart

Possibly we are nearer together than would appear on the surface. The extent to which we might agree as to the lengths to which the leading quorums may go in "proposing" and the people in "assenting" is indicated in the following:

In the strictest sense of the term, the General Conference is not a legislative body, but an organization met for the transaction of routine work or that of a provisional nature which can be largely provided for and facilitated in another way. The General Conference cannot enact laws or devise ordinances on manner of worship, for God alone can do this; but they can pass resolutions and devise means for the promulgation and effectual application of the same.

While the people have and always will have, voice and vote, either direct or by representation, in the general deliberations of the church, there are rights and prerogatives attaching to the quorums of the church which are greater than those of lay delegates; and the time must soon come, if it is not already here, when the quorums shall meet in "solemn conclave," and exercising the franchise given them of God proceed to settle questions of doctrine, rule, and order of the church. And while admitting that these quorums cannot enact over the heads of the people without submitting for their consideration and ratification, God has provided that they meet singly as well as conjointly, and that decisions be rendered, and that said decisions stand.—T. W. Williams, in SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 43, p. 108.

A Brief Recapitulation

In the foregoing article I have set forth clearly the rights of the people.

First, to reject or accept the president and prophet (or any other general church officer).

Second, to reject or accept his policies and that which comes through him either as revelation or suggestion.

Third, to initiate legislation in both general and local conferences, this right belonging to membership as well as priesthood.

Next I set forth the exceedingly important place that God occupies in our theology and polity as being a present leader whose voice and will it should be our delight to hear and do—by whose authority the church came into being and still proclaims her message to the world.

President F. M. Smith Concurs

I cannot speak for all the members of the council, but I imagine that on the question of theocratic-democracy they will take practically the same position that I have taken. If so, they will have to be met where they stand or not at all. It appeals to me as being a safe position and one that will endure. What say you?

I may here add that having written this article as expressive of my own views on theocratic-democracy I then submitted it to President F. M. Smith, who has concurred in it as it stands and has expressed a desire that the church should know that he is in agreement with the positions taken. The next number will deal with the executive or administrative authority of the Presidency.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

1924 Christmas Offering

The year is rapidly drawing to a close—the record of our sacrifices, of our kindly deeds, of our thoughtful interest in the Lord's work, will soon be closed. It is the privilege of every member of the church to enroll in God's great book of achievements. You know the glow of satisfaction that steals over you as your name appears in your local newspaper or in one of our church papers. Imagine, if you can, how much greater will be your joy in the day of final accounts when this record of the faithful is opened and there you find emblazoned in letters of gold under your name, "She hath done what she could."

Now is the time to make your free will offering through the channel of the Christmas offering, and thus hurl the angel's message to the nations of the earth. May the same sweet influence of God's Spirit burn in your bosom as you read this as I feel in my heart as I send forth this appeal to you.

Sincerely yours, JAMES F. KEIR.

An Unprejudiced "Herald"

Before accepting the responsibility of editing the SAINTS' HERALD, the present editor was thoroughly acquainted with the policy which the Board of Publication desired to adopt. The set of five principles adopted by them May 23, was acceptable and to his liking, necessitating no change in his conviction.

We have not heard any criticism of these principles. They likely are acceptable to the great majority of the people of the church. That our attention may be centered upon this set of principles outlining the present editorial policy, we reproduce them:

Whereas the Board of Publication, acting for the church in the direction and management of the publishing interests, sent a questionnaire throughout the church asking for frank criticism of the church publications;

And whereas the consensus of opinion as reflected in over six hundred answers unquestionably indicates a desire on the part of the members that certain definite policies be established in the conduct of the HERALD;

Therefore, be it resolved by the Board of Publication that the following policy should govern in the editing of the HERALD.

First: Insure an open church press.

Second: Accord space in HERALD columns freely to all general officials on equal and impartial terms.

Third: Allow free and frank discussion of any church problem, only attempting to confine arguments to the affirmative and not permitting destructive or altogether negative criticism.

Fourth: Give the news of the church as fully as possible and without bias.

Fifth: Balance the editorial content of the HERALD so that the educational, doctrinal, departmental, and spiritual factors may each be given emphasis. The HERALD should be broad enough to appeal to the membership as a whole, and an earnest effort be made to edit it so that it may minister to the varying groups within the church.

It is necessary that our readers have the managing editor's interpretation of these principles, that the purpose of this writing may be made clear.

First: An "open press" means for the HERALD that the material offered for publication shall not be rejected because of any personal dislikes, either for the writer or for the matter offered; but an offering must possess enough of literary merit to present the author's convictions and desires in a way which may be understood readily. There are productions which it is the duty of an editor to exclude, and we will mention some of them. No unsupported rumor which involves the morality or integrity of individuals or institutions has right to publication because of an open press. Matter involving only a change in method of presentation, while involving repetition, should be excluded in order to broaden the field of discussion. Libelous and slanderous statements and matter of a nature to invite litigation has no right to publication, for the reason that they involve the editor and the publishers in criminal acts.

Second: Any rule which will cause the rejection of proffered material from one general church official must also be applied to the offerings of all other church officials; and a rule which will make it obligatory to publish the offering of an officer will also make it obligatory to publish another officer's production. This second principle also implies that the general officials of the church are entitled to special consideration because of the offices they hold. Honoring the officers for the reason that we respect the office set in the church by its Builder is Latter Day Saint doctrine.

Over the third principle there may exist a strong divergence of opinion, but we are persuaded that the lack of a full and free discussion of mooted questions and real problems of the church may be blamed for the greater part of the loss of confidence which has existed and for the present lack of confidence and resultant ill feeling. There are special fields for some discussions, and the HERALD is not the field for all of them, but when matter becomes a church problem, a free and frank discussion of it in the HERALD is not only legitimate—it is prudent. Destructive and altogether negative criticism should be generally excluded from any forward looking periodical, as is universally conceded.

Several years ago the HERALD was selected as the church newspaper, and its editors were directed to give in its columns what was possible to glean from news sources of the church. The fourth principle restates this policy and adds that the news shall be unbiased. Readers will recognize the great difficulty an editor may encounter in living up to this principle, but no one will question the policy as stated. It is not always possible to determine whether or not news is unbiased; and it is sometimes necessary to exclude what purports to be news because of its evident bias.

The last principle stated by the Board of Publication is probably more the result of a generally expressed wish heard from all quarters than is any of the four preceding, for large classes of Saints in many localities wanted and do want all the factors named included in the editorial menu, and felt that the ration they had been receiving was too narrow. This principle is the one which tests the quality of the staff selected to carry it out, all of whom have accepted their appointments. If they have failed or neglected, the remedy would lie in the hands of the Board of Publication, and should be applied. The principle is sound.

Recently it has come to our ears and eyes in conversation and correspondence that officers are claiming they are having difficulty in getting matter supporting one side of the controversy into the HERALD.

It has been stated that the managing editor blocks the publication of matter which supports the President of the church. This is entirely untrue. No officer has been denied entrance to its columns. There has been no discrimination in favor of either side of the controversy, and there shall not be any favors shown to either side. If we expect the truth to triumph, and we do, in a church directed by the Author of truth, there must be no unfair, unjust, untrue methods used by those who are responsible for the conduct of such controversy. We herewith deny that we have used any such methods, and surely no one can fail to see the danger of such a denial if the facts will not uphold the statement.

It has been hinted that the Board of Publication controls the editor and that for this reason unfairness is practiced. The Board of Publication has not criticized, hampered, or attempted to direct the editor in his work under the principles adopted by it. Wherever the editor has seen matter at great variance with these principles, no matter from what quarter it has been submitted, he has called attention to the fact and asked that the production be made to comply. This action needs no defense.

The matter contained in the pages of the HERALD from June 4 to the current number should be sufficient refutation of any such charge, and for this reason alone, if for no other, the charge will find no abiding place in the minds of HERALD readers. We invite a close inspection.

It is not a friend of the institutions of the church who will make such a charge as this without first canvassing his supposed wrong with the individual who is accused of wronging him. We have had but one such charge, and the nature of the production offered by this party was such as to invite suit in the courts of the land against the editor for criminal acts, which fact we stated to the individual.

Again we proclaim that the HERALD is being conducted according to the principles stated by the Board of Publication so far as the acts of its managing editor have bearing upon it. We have no favorites. Our desire is that all questions may have a fair and competent presentation in their entirety, and that finally the people may render a righteous judgment because they are fully informed.

No man can refuse to read the discussion and then criticize the HERALD, for it would be folly and shame so to do.

Open minds, an open press, and diligence will insure a pure and delightful people. Let us preserve these things.

Further Examination of Northern California Action

BY T. W. WILLIAMS

I wish to congratulate John D. White et al for the article in last week's HERALD entitled "The facts about Northern California District." You have exceeded my expectations. You have been generous. You have clearly and definitely confirmed each and every essential point raised in my editorial of August 20. You have acknowledged that what I said was true. Thanks!

My Affirmation

1. "President Smith was in attendance and presided over the conference."
2. "The first move was to do away with the spring conference and hold two-day meetings in their stead."
3. "A motion was then presented and carried to change the method of electing delegates to the General Conference of 1925 from nominating from the floor to the electing of a nominating committee."
4. "A motion was then made and carried to allow the chairman, F. M. Smith, to appoint the nominating committee."
5. "Motion was then made to indorse the 'church government' document as published in the HERALD July 9, 1924, page 651, and that the delegates elected to represent this district at General Conference stand by this church document article."

Admission by Defendants

1. "President Smith, Brother D. T. Williams of the Twelve (Apostle Roy S. Budd having wired he would not attend), together with the district presidency as associates, were chosen to preside over the conference."
2. "The district presidency recommended the discontinuance of spring conferences and urged the holding of one- and two-day meetings in various branches at different times. During the same session a motion by one of the delegates was made and was seconded by another delegate:
"That we adopt the recommendation of the district presidency and discontinue the holding of spring conferences and in their stead hold one- or two-day meetings at various times among the branches."
3. "During the course of disposing of the conference business, announcement was made that it would be in order to choose delegates to the next General Conference. This was followed by a motion that a committee of three be appointed to prepare and submit later to the conference a list of seventeen names as proposed nominees for delegates to the next General Conference."

4. "Inquiry was made as to how this committee should be named, whereupon both the mover and the seconder of the motion included in their motion that the committee be named by the chair."

5. "During the absence of the committee just named, a motion was offered by Gerald Hawley, a priest, and seconded by Fred Hutchins, a layman:

"That in the event the document on church government, as published in the HERALD of July 9, 1924, page 651, which document had been indorsed by a council consisting of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve in America, and the Order of Bishops, held last April, comes before the next General Conference for consideration, that the delegates elected to represent this district at such conference be hereby instructed and directed to vote for the adoption of said document."

President Smith's Attitude

Now come defendants and affirm that President Smith "as a servant" "did only those things which he was asked by the body to do," and he did not "attempt to influence or participate in any manner in the matters coming before the body." In the light of the statements of our brethren, there was nothing left to be desired so far as President Smith was concerned, and no reason for his attempting to influence the conference, seeing that all things had been prepared beforehand, even to the wording of the resolution, and the printing of the document on supreme directional control. The entire action of the conference was in keeping with President Smith's wishes, if we are disposed to accept the confessions of these men who defend the action of the Northern California district conference.

I do not know of any action that could be more pleasing to President Smith than to have the spring conference out of the way and thus pave the way for the conference over which he was presiding, to give him the power to name a committee of three who would select the names of seventeen delegates which delegates would be instructed and directed to vote at the forthcoming General Conference for President Smith's own resolution.

It is in evidence that President Smith did participate in the deliberations of the conference. He attended and presided over the conference. He was presiding when the conference, acting on the recommendation of the district president, abolished spring conferences, and this without any previous notice being given to members of the district. As chairman, he appointed a committee of three "to prepare and submit" a "list of seventeen names as proposed delegates to the next General Conference." He was present and presiding when the conference indorsed the document on supreme directional control. He was present and presiding when these delegates were "instructed and directed" to vote for the adoption of said document. He affirmed that "the conference had acted within its rights." In the light of the foregoing it is begging the question to minimize President Smith's responsibility by urging that he "did only those things which he was asked by the body to do."

Wholesome Advice

President Smith in a signed article to which was attached all the names of the Advisory Council who indorsed the document on church government advised:

"That since it seems the matters in controversy are to be brought before General Conference, it will be well for the Saints and delegates to study further the law and weigh matters presented for their consideration, reserving final judgment until the conference meets to hear the cause."

Every fair-minded man or woman will instantly agree that this advice was timely and wholesome. It followed after and was in agreement with the positions set forth in the open letter.

Why seek to divert the attention of the reader from the essential point raised by charging us with "criticizing the President of the church for his having presided or assisted in presiding at the Northern California district conference"? Why charge that we "cast reflection on the delegates for asking the President to preside"? No such intimation was made in my previous article. We criticize President Smith for commending the work of the district conference which in every particular violated the advice given by himself and others. We criticized him because he commended the district conference which instructed and directed delegates nine months before the General Conference and so far as they were concerned precluded both reason and revelation in the final determination of the question. Whatever facts come to them could not change their vote. Their hands are tied. They are not free to act. The die is cast.

An Unwise and Questionable Procedure

The action of the conference in placing in the hands of the President the right to name the nominating committee was an unusual and questionable procedure. The President by accepting the assignment indorsed the action. When the resolution affirming the document on church government was acted upon, and the delegates were instructed, President Smith again gave his support by refraining from objecting. We criticize President Smith because he advised one thing to the general membership and at another time commended a local conference when those who were in control of the conference were in agreement with his policy.

Let me observe that the Northern California district conference was in the hands of avowed supporters of the document on church government. Oakland, the chief branch of the district, under the direction of J. D. White and J. B. Carmichael had already instructed its delegates, numbering fifty-two, "that in the event any matter comes before the district conference relating to the administration of the church, that its delegates be instructed and directed to support such policy or policies sponsored by the First Presidency"—a "me too"—"sight unseen" action. Each procedure of the conference suggests prearrangement. Things do not happen. Cogs do not grow on wheels.

I challenge the assertion that common consent was in operation at the Northern California district conference. The mere fact that things were put through without apparent opposition is not proof. One of the greatest evidences of the lack of common consent is where matters of special moment go through in a frictionless manner. Free and full discussion is the best evidence of common consent. And this did not take place at the Irvington conference!

Criticism is made because of my statement: "Before general discussion had taken place the previous question was moved and carried and the matter went to vote and was carried." And yet in the very next paragraph it is admitted: "No real argument against the indorsement of the document on church government" was offered, and "The only real substantial speech in favor of the issue was made by Brother B. Franklin Parks, of San Francisco, a brother who holds no grade of the priesthood." Again our position is fully maintained.

It certainly is an unwise and questionable procedure for the delegates at a district conference to give to the President the right to name a committee of three to select delegates who will represent the district at the General Conference. The action cannot be successfully defended. What chance would a nomination from the floor have in an assembly where the President of the entire church names the committee on nomination and this committee comes in with a unanimous vote naming the entire delegation? The nomination of seventeen delegates is not a herculean task. The work could have been done in a short while and in the regular manner.

Herring Across the Trail

It will not do to drag a red herring across the trail by referring to the action of the San Jose Branch. A common rule of law is that accusers must come into court with clean hands. The insinuation that "apostles who were not officially assigned to this territory" advised or were party to any action which would in any sense tie the hands of any branch or district delegate is entirely beside the facts. I knew nothing of the San Jose action. I never heard of it until I read it in the recent HERALD. Thinking people will not be misled by this attempt to make individuals who believe in the "Open Letter" responsible for the action of a conference which puts over the document on supreme directional control.

Effort is made to make it appear that the doing away of the spring conference was separate and apart from the other action. We note that the request for doing away with the spring conference came from J. D. White, district president, who now takes shelter behind Apostles Budd and Williams, justifying the act by reference to a purported conversation between these three brethren prior to the February conference. Is it not significant that two apostles who are supposed to leave the care of districts and branches to local officers would so soon after their advent into a new missionary field, and before they were fully acquainted with the needs of the district, concern themselves with abolishing spring conferences? Why, if this matter was so important, did not these three brethren make recommendation to the February conference and thus give notice to the entire district that the matter would come up at the succeeding conference? It is clearly admitted that the suggestion for the doing away with the spring conference did not come from the people. Thanks.

Supreme Directional Control Not Common Consent

A studied effort is made throughout the lengthy communication of defendants to prove that "supreme directional control" was not in operation in Northern California but rather that "common consent" prevailed. Our brethren thus argue that supreme directional control is different from common consent. This has been our contention right along. It is now admitted.

Who criticized the "President of the church for his having presided or assisted in presiding at the Northern California district conference"? Who "cast reflection on delegates"? No such criticism is found in my article. I criticized only that the procedure of the conference was in contravention of the general practices of the church. Tell me, friends, where in all the teachings and practices of common consent the chairman is supposed to name the committee of nomination and when delegates are thus named that they are to be instructed and directed to vote for the President's own resolution.

We have not charged that the "Saints of the Northern California District lack the courage to express themselves," but the testimony of defendants shows that the district officials were committed to a certain course: that the district president's own branch had tied the hands of its delegates; that a nominating committee was appointed by the chair who were finally elected and instructed and directed to support the document on supreme directional control. And now these same people try to place responsibility for all this irregular action on the San Jose Branch because they voted for the "open letter"! Would they have us believe that because a handful of people at San Jose lost their heads and voted, as they say, for the "open letter" that therefore the entire membership of the district was in consternation and, under excitement, put over this resolution on supreme directional control? We are magnanimous, brethren, and will cheerfully forgive each and all if you will undo what you have done.

It is admitted that there were members present who did not support supreme directional control. Did any of these have a look-in as delegates to the General Conference? Well, hardly. We criticize the action of the Northern California District in appointing a full delegation unreservedly committed to support supreme directional control, when the defenders of this action admit that at least one branch was opposed. We happen to know that there were other branches opposed, and several branch presidents who do not support the action of the conference.

Saints of Northern California Not Unanimous

I happen to know that many of the priesthood and members of the Northern California District are opposed to supreme directional control. I know that the action of the conference does not represent the sentiment of many of the members. I know that the Saints of Northern California do not lack the courage to express themselves.

Defendants would have us believe that the resolution binding the delegates came from a "priest" and a "layman." The suggestion is that the action was not premeditated and that the officials of the conference were not associated with the action. Piffle! What about the resolution of the Oakland Branch? Who anticipated the action and provided printed copies of the document for immediate circulation after the resolution was introduced? Give us credit for having ordinary intelligence.

The district president, J. D. White, had gone among the branches making a bitter attack on the members of the Quorum of the Twelve who supported the "open letter," the General Bishopric, and the Board of Publication, sometime before the reunion. One need not draw upon his imagination to know his purpose.

Referring to the personnel of the committee on nomination, I am informed that each and every one is in favor of supreme directional control. It is but natural that they would nominate a delegation favoring same. Why, if as the defendants admit, part of the district was for the "open letter," not one delegate was elected and allowed his freedom to vote as he pleased. Is it common consent when a solid delegation is elected to represent one side of the question only? The common elements of Christianity and the elemental principles of common consent suggest that a delegation be elected which will fairly represent the sentiments of the district, and this suggests proportionate representation.

The members of the district who were opposed to supreme directional control had a right to representation on the delegation. Under the rule adopted in Northern California this was impossible, and F. M. Smith, D. T. Williams, and the district presidency lent their influence to this one-sided procedure.

Delegation Not Fully Representative

There is not the slightest hint in my editorial that the membership of the Northern California District are "incompetent and unqualified" nor that they "possess no agency or right of determination." I assert, and our friends have admitted, that a delegation instructed and directed to vote for supreme directional control does not rightly represent the membership of the district. It may, and possibly does, represent the attitude of the majority of the members, but there was a minority which had a right to representation. Christian fair-play would have suggested the recognition of this right. It was denied by the majority of the members of the conference.

Again do these my brethren read into my language things not intended. I said, "It was desirable to take the vote while the President was on the ground." I repeat it. Will my critics affirm that it was not desirable to do so? If so, why then did you do it?

I question the action of doing away with the spring conferences without due notice to the Saints. My critics raise the question as to the action of the San Jose Branch. I knew nothing of this action. Then why project it into the discussion? The purpose is obvious. Whatever San Jose Branch did or did not do in no way justifies the action of the conference.

The action of the majority members of the Northern California District implies unwillingness to hear both sides of the question and to refuse to consider the claims of one side regardless of its merits. At the same time it advertises their lack of confidence in the ability of the delegation to properly and successfully defend itself in the crucial test of the General Conference. It questions the integrity of its delegates unless bound by conference limitation. No self-respecting member, as I view it, should admit the implication against his honor and intelligence by accepting appointment on such a delegation selected and bound in this manner.

Superior Powers Claimed

This action of the majority members of the conference suggests that the wisdom, judgment, and loyalty of the whole church is to them consciously inferior and therefore under suspicion. It suggests that all others except themselves are untrustworthy, and they alone are better able to determine what the whole body needs and should have. It, at once, divorces the district conference as an integral part of the entire church and says in substance: We care not what light or reason may come to the General Conference, God may even speak, but we have made up our minds. Research and analysis may show a better course, but we have decided the issue. We know what we want, and our minds cannot be changed. We know that this action does not represent all of the members of the district, but we are in the majority and we are going to put it through, and lest even some of the delegates we elect may change their minds we will bind them with a cast iron resolution to vote as we now direct them. And our brethren call this common consent!

Such an action is as uncomplimentary to the side they seek to support as it is insulting to the side they seek to defeat. It proclaims that both sides are incompetent and one side is not honest. It assumes that the wisdom of a district conference is superior to that of a General Conference and proclaims that the delegates to the General Conference are incapable of understanding and weighing evidence and rendering honest judgment. It presumes that the delegates must be precluded from exercising reason or receiving revelation and therefore instructs and directs them.

And finally, the action of the Northern California district conference proclaims and advertises to the world that they are better qualified, with only a partial and one-sided view of the proposition, to reach rightful judgment than the delegates to the General Conference who would be under the necessity of listening to both sides and should be amenable to the influence of the divine Spirit which God may and is expected to bestow upon the General Conference if the delegates appear before him with open minds. Delegates thus bound can only come before God with an idol in their hearts. The Bible indicates what the answer may be.

Questions Right of Delegates to Be Seated

I personally question the right of seating a delegation thus handicapped in a deliberative assembly such as the General Conference is supposed to be. Delegates are members of the General Conference; they not only represent the district from which they come but, in a larger way, represent the entire membership. The interest of the entire church is in their keeping, and this interest is paramount. Delegates whose hands are tied by local rules whereby they cannot freely and fully exercise their mentality, and under a rule of limitation can vote only one way, should not be seated in the assembly.

The church is not divided into districts. Districts are not formed to provide for the general affairs of the church. Districts and branches are organized to look after local affairs which pertain to their respective needs. When delegates are selected, they should be selected not so much to represent parties and interest or purposes but rather because they are qualified to consider and act upon the affairs and in the interests of the entire church.

Saints of the Northern California District, we appeal to you to reconsider this action which is so ill advised, unjust, and misrepresentative of the reason and integrity of the Northern California District.

A rather amusing item appears in an issue of the Boston Globe concerning racial prejudices. There is a group which avows that the white race, especially the yellow-haired, blue-eyed part of it, the Nordic, is superior to all others. One of the most significant is said to be the fact that some races do not like the odor of others and thereby prove their superiority. In reply the story is told of a Chinese student in a Boston university who was invited to a ball and attended but soon withdrew. When asked the reason why, he said he simply could not stand the smell of so many white people.

The point is that racial superiority cannot be based on color, custom, or creed alone, as there may be as much justice on one side as on the other.

It is not without significance that Jesus declared the brotherhood of man and that Paul urged that he had made all one race of people, especially when we realize that they were speaking to, or as representing, the exclusive Hebrew race.

Is It a Change? and What Does It Mean?

BY B. L. MCKIM

Upon several occasions the writer has heard different ones expressing themselves regarding the document on church government, which was presented by President Smith to the advisory council last spring, and published in the SAINTS' HERALD of June 18, 1924, saying that it was not introducing anything new; it was not a change from the good old paths; it only contemplates following in the ways of the church from its beginning.

But can this be true in the light of the document itself? If there is not a contemplated change in church procedure and church government in the minds of those who introduced the document, then what was the purpose of introducing it? Surely it wasn't just to cause contention and debate! To follow in the good old paths, the way the church has gone from its beginning, as has been referred to by some, displays no need of any document being introduced; and those who introduced it, if they did not contemplate changing the government of the church by introducing the document, should at once withdraw it, seeing it has caused a tremendous furore in the church. Many are excited, believing that it contemplates changing the government of the church, and that the changes are of a serious nature.

If the church has followed along the same line for many years and there is no reason to believe that it will change, then there is no need of such a document as the one presented on church government, unless it is intended by those who have introduced it to change from the way of the past. Let those then who are advocating that the document does not contemplate a change in church government stop deceiving themselves, for to take such position does not give those who introduced the document credit for exercising good judgment.

Seeing there can be no other logical position to take, than that the purpose of introducing the document on church government was to change the government of the church from the good old paths in which it has walked for many years, let us examine the document itself to see what is the contemplated change.

We are told, "The government of the church is by divine authority through priesthood."

This immediately suggests that the government of the church in the past has not been by the priesthood; but if the document becomes law the priesthood will govern in the future. In other words, it suggests that the interpretation which has been placed upon the law by the church in the past is wrong, and they are now going to make it right.

This resolves itself into the question, When has the church been inspired? It has ever been the position that the church has been guided by inspiration since its beginning in its fundamentals, and the inspiration of the church in the past was that the government of the church was by membership and not by priesthood; but the document, now presented by the President, says that is wrong. Can it be the church has been laboring under a delusion all these years? The question to decide is, Is the inspiration manifested in the late document of a higher order, and does it come with more divine power, and is there greater light shown in it than in the inspiration manifested by the church in the past? If so, it should be accepted and put into practice; but if not, it should be rejected. God cannot be held responsible for both positions; he doesn't cross himself that way. Which position reflects his wisdom?

If the government of the church is by priesthood, there can be no place in its government by those not holding the priesthood, and we are not certain but what this government will be only by the presiding priesthood.

The quotations cited in the document on this point are not applicable, for they are only referring to the administration of the law and not the government of the church as a whole. All admit the officers of any organization administer the law governing that organization. No one has said God did not give "some, apostles; and some, prophets," etc., etc., to be the ministers of the law of the church. No one is disputing that God took elders and made them "overseers" in the administration of the law. No one has said it is not the duty of the priesthood to administer the law in the church; but to make the quotations cited applicable, it will have to be proved that some are wanting those not holding the priesthood to be administrators of the law, which none claim.

The government of the church is more than the administration of its laws; it includes the legislative and judicial branches, as well as the administrative. But if the government of the church is by priesthood, it must mean the whole government; then, pray tell, where does the democracy of the church come in? How can it be called a "theocratic-democracy" without any democracy?

We are told, however, in that same paragraph, the priesthood will allow the membership to consent to their suggestions; that is their democracy, the "common consent indicated in the law." But that is not the democracy Webster defines. He says: "Government by the people collectively; political or social equality."

How has it worked out in the past, when the government of the church was by priesthood and the membership had only the right to say yes or no? History reveals the fact that it is not many years before those who dare vote no to the suggestions of the priesthood, are first looked upon with suspicion, then they are soon considered apostates, and excommunication promptly follows. This has ever been the tendency and ever will be. It cannot be otherwise, for the priesthood in suggesting measures to the membership must believe such measures to be right, else why present them; then how could they look upon one who might vote no upon several occasions to measures introduced as other than rebellious. It is highly imperative that along with a government by the priesthood there must be "effective discipline"; or, expressed otherwise, "authority to be effective must be respected." To allow one to ignore the suggestions of the priesthood would invite disaster.

Under such system, the church government being by priesthood, the people will have no choice in the selecting of any officer, from the auxiliaries up. The priesthood will say who shall be your branch president, priest, teacher, and deacon. They will say who all your officers shall be in both district and branch.

In fact, the membership will not have any right to initiate legislation of any description; the priesthood will determine all policies, programs, incur debt, etc., and the people must say yes and pay the bills. What is the difference between this system and "taxation without representation"?

Another question arises at this juncture; that is, What part, or who of the priesthood are going to do all this work? Will all the priesthood of the branch be called together, if it be work pertaining to the branch? or all the priesthood of the district if it be district work? or all the priesthood of the church in general if the business pertains to the whole church? Precedents of the past show that such will not be the case, but all this will be done by the presiding priesthood.

It is only fair to take the city of Independence (Zion) as the example of what is intended to be when the government of the church is through priesthood, since it is under the immediate control of the First Presidency. It has been the rule for some time for the Presidency to submit the names of those whom they wish to preside over the different congregations in "Zion." But in doing this have they called together the priesthood of Zion? In this work do they ask the priesthood to meet together and talk matters over with them, and get the opinion of the priesthood as to who would be the best one for this and that place? All must say no.

A very important step was undertaken in January, 1923, in the line of legislation, which if passed would have had far-reaching effects, and which will become law if the General Conference passes the document which says that the government of the church is through priesthood, as all branches, districts, stakes, etc., will come under the general law. It was as follows:

1. The heads of the general departments of the church and the pastor in Zion in consultation with the First Presidency shall nominate the heads of departments in Zion, subject to ratification by the conference in Zion.

If the government of the church is to be "through priesthood," the whole priesthood, then why wasn't the priesthood of Zion called together before such an important move as this was made, that they might assist in the government?

Did the resolution provide for the work to be done from year to year, that it was to be done through the priesthood as a whole? No; it only provided for those who are presiding.

In several of the stakes and districts the government of the church is by priesthood, and do we find that the presidents of the stakes and districts call the priesthood of their fields together and consult them respecting who shall be appointed for the different places? This is what is done in the Kansas City Stake:

That the stake presidency appoint the superintendent of the Sunday school for the stake subject to the approval of the head of the department of Sunday school and the stake conference; also the field worker for the stake for the Religio, subject to the approval of the head of the department and the stake conference.

Taking this in connection with their right to nominate the pastors over the local congregations, is there any provision made for the priesthood to assist in this work of nominating? No; it only provides for the stake presidency to be the government. Then, in the light of what is occurring, if precedent is continued, "government of the church" "through priesthood" only means government through the presiding priesthood, the presiding priesthood being the Presidency, the stake and district presidents whom they appoint, and the pastors of local congregations, the branch presidents whom the stake or district officers appoint.

If the "government of the church is by divine authority through priesthood," then branch business meetings and district or stake conferences can be for one purpose only; that is, consent or assent to what the priesthood suggests. To say that matters of business could originate with the congregation, or that they could initiate legislation, would be a contradiction of terms; for if the government is by priesthood, then it cannot be by membership. We are further told that, "This view of the organization of the church . . . holds General Conference as the instrument of the expression of the will of the people."

The introducing of the words, this view of the organization, suggests at once a different organization than what has been in the past; a different order of things. The work of the General Conference will be entirely different.

The above can have but one meaning in the light of what is stated in the document since it claims the government of the church being through priesthood, and the "common consent indicated in the law" is in the membership assenting to the suggestings of the presiding priesthood—that the "expression of the will of the people" is limited to their saying yes or no to such suggestings; that is all there can be to General Conference. No provision is made to execute the will of the people, for there is no opportunity for the membership to express their will other than saying yes or no to what the priesthood presents. To place any other interpretation on the above would make the document contradict itself.

We have every reason to believe that the priesthood referred to, upon which the government of the church rests, does not consist of all those holding the Melchisedec priesthood, or even all the general church officers, but more to councils of relatively few members of the priesthood.

This position is sustained in a large measure by referring to the document under consideration. Here is a document that contemplates making material changes in the church government, but how many of the general church officers were asked to sit in when the document was considered and launched? Only a part of the Twelve; none of the seventy, high priests, or elders. It is too late to say that the changes contemplated were not to become effective until General Conference action be had, in the light of facts now revealed. Such a position was never hinted until after the "open letter" came out, forcing the issue into the open. In fact, if it were not intended to put into effect the principles advocated in the document on church government which was passed by the advisory council until after General Conference action was had, why did the President say to Bishop McGuire: "Before this council closes I want you to tell this body whether you are going to abide by the decisions of this group of men"? Nothing indicated in this that they were to wait until General Conference acted. It was a case of immediate action. And if it were intended the document was not to become effective until General Conference had acted, then why was it stated, in referring to the document under consideration, in the HERALD for July 9, 1924, that:

The chief executives of the church, the First Presidency, should not be discredited in seeking to exercise functions in accordance with the above principles in harmony with the law as laid down in the standard books of the church, but should be supported by the faith and confidence of the Saints.

This doesn't ask for the Saints to support the Presidency in exercising functions in accordance with the principles set forth in the document on church government after conference has acted, but to support them now, before conference, in the exercise of such functions.

Taking this action, with other actions too numerous to mention, that have taken place in the last few years, there can be but one conclusion drawn regarding what is meant by the government of the church through priesthood: that is, the priesthood who will be the government are those who are invited into council by the Presidency from time to time, and from such councils the church will be governed. There is nothing indicating that the councils need be composed of the same officers in each case, but with supreme directional control resting in the Presidency they call these councils and they are composed of whom they desire; thus in the nature of things such councils can only be considered advisory to the Presidency. This resolves itself into the fact that supreme directional control resting in the Presidency, and the government of the church being through priesthood, it is nothing more or less than government of the Presidency. Or, in other words, the Presidency is the whole government of the church.

This brings to mind an article written by the late Joseph Smith which seems applicable in this case. He wrote:

Who is the church? One of our good brethren as we know of, once stated that when he asked that question in the streets of Salt Lake City the answer was, "President Brigham Young." Suppose that this same brother was to ask the same question concerning the Reorganization, in the streets of Lamoni, Boston, or Little Sioux; would he be answered, "President Joseph Smith is the church"? Would not he be told, "No man is the church. The Reorganization consists of a body of free men, each standing before God as an integral portion of a spiritual whole."—SAINTS' HERALD, February 26, 1885.

If the government of the church is through priesthood, with supreme directional control resting in the Presidency, our only answer to the question, Who is the church? would be, The First Presidency is the church.

To introduce a private letter, as some writers have done, does not alter the situation; the document on church government says what it means and means what it says. If those who have introduced the document do not mean what it implies, which the private letter seems to indicate, why don't they withdraw the document at once, and stop all this discussion? Or if it doesn't convey what they want to express on church government, surely the way is open for them to withdraw it and write one that does express their views, which will not need private letters to interpret. But if the document expresses what they want to become law, then there is no need of private letters being written to interpret it. The church is asked to pass upon the document itself and not upon what private letters say. Surely it would be a mischievous law which does not possess clarity of expression, or is capable of such widely divergent interpretation.

Some Educational Problems Involved in the Establishment of Zion.—No. 4

BY A. MAX CARMICHAEL

This Response Encourages Secrecy

Our remarks have been carrying the implication that such a person tends to be tacit about his varying personalities to each social environment. He does not let each group that he associates with know about his standard of morality in other groups. He even tends to keep it secret from each group about his association with the other groups. It seems to him to be the easiest course in order to be able to follow the authority of each group, and to please them. In fact, if each group knew his standard in every other group and thus knew how far his standards changed with the group that he was in, his whole game would be spoiled, and he would be apt to receive the disapproval of all groups. If one group knew he was associating with the other group, it would know that his morals must inevitably be quite different in that group from what they are in it. Hence comes his tendency to keep entirely quiet about his association in the other group. Thus the boy will keep it secret from his mother as long as he can that he smokes while among the fellows, or that he talks about sex affairs, or tells obscene stories. Johnnie, who is a "bad" boy at Sunday school, does not tell his mother or his day-school teacher about it. The young man keeps all his "wild oats" escapades entirely unknown to his more respectable associates.

Or Moral Laziness

Whenever, of course, he can't keep it secret, various motives enter in to determine his course. It will be the course of least resistance generally. If habit is strong he will follow his habitual course. If one set of associations is more pleasing to him than the others, and he prefers their society and approval to the others, he will adopt the course of morality dictated by this set. Of course there is open to him the second general course, of which we spoke, but did not delineate, leaving it to a later article. But it would be unusual for anyone to take this course, when he has gone so far as to form different personalities with different groups, and to keep such different sets of moral personalities hid from the other groups respectively.

Likewise when the boy finds that the thing one group wants him to do and another group wants him not to do, and he must make his choice, which when taken will be known to all, he, if he adopts the course we are now describing, that of least resistance, that of attempting to be normal, will adopt that course that will bring him the approval of the group which he most likes, or which brings him the least dissatisfaction. For instance, when mother does not want him to play football, and all his fellow schoolmates want him to play, he will adopt that course that will please that group which he finds the more satisfaction in pleasing. Some mothers will say that it is always the high school group, and indeed it generally is. All parents find that as their children grow, and their social horizon widens, mother's approval is less and less prized in opposition to the approval of the newer companions. Even the approval of the chum is worth more than mother's approval. Of course if mother should add to her disapproval of the act which the chum or playmates approve a punishment or other means of producing dissatisfaction if he does the act she disapproves, she may be successful in stopping the disapproved act. This is because the dissatisfaction of the punishment is greater than the disapproval of the group of playmates. The boy simply pits one set of his dissatisfactions against the other and chooses the one which brings the least dissatisfactions.

Mother generally finds that her punishment has to be pretty strenuous to overcome the greater satisfaction which the boy gets from following the playmates, and she generally gives up. The boy follows the crowd rather than his mother. In other words, his morality becomes that of the larger crowd. His standard becomes that of the crowd. The crowd morality becomes the dominant morality. Many a pastor-prophet has found out the same fact about his congregation. He may try ever so hard to call them up out of the sins of the world; but they will drop into a morality that finds its approval in the masses. In other words, adults as well as children tend to revert to the average level of morality. If a pastor finds that a young man of his congregation falls into playing baseball on Sunday because all of his fellow associates do, he knows that the motives operating on this young man to fall into the standard morality of the average, of the mass, are the same motives that get the adult men of his parish to pay small wages to the women of their employ, to work the children under their employment as long hours, and as hard, and with as small wages as they can; that determine the style of dress for the women of his congregation, that determine the amount of time they spend on "tea" or whist or gossip as against the amount of time spent on rearing children or learning how to rear children.

His Response as Affecting the Bible

For the child who sees the difference delineated above between modern standards of ethics and the standard of Jehovah as exhibited in the Old Testament, this course of response means that he will at least take an attitude of indifference to the Bible, if not further an open hostility to its values. He is apt to take the attitude that since we cannot rely upon the ethics of an Abraham, or of a David, or of a Solomon, or of an Elisha, who seem to have the co-operation and assistance of Jehovah in the perpetration of their deeds which if enacted to-day would be an insult to human society, he cannot rely at all on the Bible, and his sarcastic remark is apt to be, "Who believes the Bible nowadays, anyway?" He is apt to close his mind to the wonderful value of its high spots, such as was especially exhibited by Joseph, Jeremiah, Amos, Isaiah, or Jesus. The obstinacy of orthodoxy in holding to the inerrancy of the scripture in contrast with the growing scientific point of view of our public schools has been the large cause of this present indifference to the Bible. For such as are indifferent or hostile, we have a task of burying an old Bible that a new one might be found. However, the place of the Bible and the other two standard books in an educational program that will prepare our people for a Zion will come in later for a full discussion, as this relationship is vital, nevertheless difficult, but withal interesting. We are simply describing here what the child does in response to his perception of the discrepancies. In the meantime let our readers be thinking about the problem that is surely upon us in this regard.

To the writer's mind, a part of the so-called tolerance that is supposed to exist between Catholic and Protestant to-day is an apathetic, disinterested, and unthinking tolerance, which can be discarded at any moment that anybody succeeds in fanning a submerged flame. Instead of its being a development of an intelligent tolerance built up upon a clear recognition of the difference of the philosophies of the two religions, and a willingness to work out these differences in a spirit of love, it is apathetic indifference which has come about as a reaction against the centuries of warfare between the two camps. Recent events which indicate a renewal of religious intolerance seem to show that our supposed tolerance has not been intelligent but apathetic.

One Possible Response When Authorities Do Not Do as They Say

This brings us to a special consideration of the effect upon the moral life of the child when he discovers that the authorities do not themselves live up to the standards which they have been telling him he should do, when he discovers that we preach one thing and do another. We speak now with reference to the first of the two courses he may take, the one we are describing in this article. In other words, he may take this discrepancy as a matter of course, and henceforth expect mother to argue for principles of action which she does not herself expect to live up to; father to argue for telling the whole truth when he doesn't expect himself to tell the whole truth in his business transactions; the preacher to say we should live in love with one another when he doesn't expect his congregation to do so, as a matter of life's expediency. He soon learns to take all this as a matter of course and not to be disturbed by it, or the least concerned over it.

Does the following represent many boys ten years old:

Of course, mother and dad are all right, and brother and sister. You mustn't say anything against them, especially mother. I'll stick by all of them, of course. . . . Of course mother and dad want me to be good, and they think I'm better than I really am. But it's easy for them to be good, and some day, when I'm grown up, I'll be like them. . . . What they tell you in Sunday school is all right, too, only . . . well, when I'm as old as my teacher, maybe I'll be like her. . . . Of course, I don't have to be as good as ministers. . . . As for school, of course what the teacher and the books say is so; leastways it was so for Washington and Lincoln, and Thomas Edison. But she doesn't play marbles, or football, and she doesn't belong to the gang that meets in our barn. I s'pose she and Washington wouldn't fib or swipe things, and they wouldn't say "gosh," and they wouldn't throw stones at Curly Jim's gang, but then, well, some day I s'pose I won't myself. . . . But, O boy! wouldn't I like to be Babe Ruth! . . . And if I had a million dollars I'd buy two automobiles, and an aeroplane, and a dirigible. . . . Yes, of course, I ought to get my lessons, but gee! all the boys'll be at the swimming hole, and I mustn't miss it. . . . Am I a good little boy! Naw, but I'm a good sport, and I don't snitch, and . . . and . . . I'll stand by ma and dad.—Quoted from Coe: Law and Freedom in the School.

Does this not represent the beginning of that all too common adolescent who becomes contemptuous of ideals, and says they are to be preached but not to be lived? Is this not the beginning of that adolescent, who says, "Oh, I'll serve God and the church some day, but just now, well, I want to have a good time." "I guess I will dance now, just as mother and the pastor did when they were young." "Oh, they think they are so good," he says to himself contemptuously about some active church members. We adults have it. How often are we hearing it, "When you fellows show us what this stewardship affair can do, or when you show us that this stewardship will work, why, then, we will come in and help you." Here in the adult we have a recognition of ideals, but an acknowledgment that they hold no moral authority for him, that his moral authority is not his ideals, but temporary expediency. Some few adolescents and adults become so contemptuous of ideals as to have a severe reaction against them, and go to the extreme of finding their ideals in the opposite direction. Of course, many of them use merely as an excuse the supposed crookedness of the so-called "good church members," but on the other hand, it is true that many of us "good church members" do live so far below the ideals that we proclaim, that youth really does almost have a right to consider us hypocritical. Many a parent has had difficulty in holding up certain ideals before the boy in face of utter disregard of those ideals by supposed "good church members." It is of such church members as these that it may be said, "It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." The Apostle Paul put it well when he said in Romans 14: 15, American Standard Edition, "For if because of meat thy brother is grieved, thou walkest no longer in love. Destroy not with thy meat him for whom Christ died." For many a boy has used the living below the ideals of Christ by a high church member as an excuse for his going down to the dregs of sin.

But the majority of boys and girls do not become so contemptuous of ideals as to go to the other extreme because of such contempt. A great many of them are indifferent to ideals, live their life on a lower plane happily without any regard to the moral authority of the ideals of Christ or of the church or society in general. Perhaps the larger part of society is in this position. They regard ideals as something necessary to be preached, but not expected to be lived up to.

Many a business man realizes that he ought to love his competitor, but excuses himself that business is business, and that if he started to live by the golden rule, he would soon be run out of business. Probably many Americans felt during the disclosure of the alleged corruption in the recent government transactions over oil lands, "Well, we might have expected that our big men are crooked." Many an

I. W. W. admits to himself that the ideal is to give a day's service for his wage, but he argues that his employer has plenty, and if he commits sabotage it will give more work to some one else. Many a preacher probably admits in his heart that his congregations are entitled to be told all the facts, as is a jury, and to be told the opinions that other thinking people have drawn from such facts that differ from his and that of his church; but then, he argues, it is apt to disturb their faith, and anyway, the other fellow's opinion is really wrong, and "I know it is, or the church has prescribed that it is, and that is enough for them." Many a man argues that the general run of men are immoral sexually, so why shouldn't he be. A single standard is of course a good thing to talk about, but then, no one expects a man to keep clean. It gives the preachers something to do, he laughingly says. "Oh, I know that I ought to give my wages of certain days for the benefit of the church, when the Bishop calls for it," says one nonchalant Latter Day Saint, "but then, that's the business of the Bishop to try to raise money, and I want to take in an entertainment in town, which I couldn't do if I gave the church the money." "Oh, I know the church is trying to get a Zion established, when they call for inventories, but then, let the rest tell how much they are worth before I do." Could we not multiply example upon example of people admitting the supremacy of the ideal, but refusing to permit it to have any moral authority for them?

We have here illustrated one of the characteristic responses which youth and adults can give to the differences they see in moral standards in human society. Though many of us will disagree as to the methods that we have illustrated in the preceding articles, no doubt the greater proportion of us can agree that this method, this response described in this article is not what we want; that we ought to use our resources to counteract this method of passing on to youth his moral standards. Since it seems inevitable that youth will discover these differences in moral and spiritual standards which exist, we will have to rely upon either the first or second response to this recognition. This will then make us interested in the second possible response to see if it holds out to us any more hope of being able to reconstruct a society that is now too largely morally apathetic. We will discuss this second response, which will be our fourth method of impressing youth with his moral standards, in the next article.

"Life presents itself to us as something to be attained, something to struggle against, and in that struggle our will is born."—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

NEWS AND LETTERS

Making Progress Even Under Persecution

(Translation of a letter from John Smolney, of Germany, addressed to Brother and Sister Paul J. Brose, Kansas City, Kansas.)

GROSS WARTENBERG, July 7.—Greetings from Germany, from all the Saints, and from me to all the Saints in Zion. I hope you received my last letter. I went home to Klein Räschen and was glad to find your letter containing $18. I thanked God for it, for we were in need of it to help pay for the seats in the church. I gave $15 towards the seats and kept $3 for missionary expenses. The Saints at Räschen send thanks and wonder at your great love towards us, looking to the future when we will all be together.

Now something of the mission work in Wartenberg. We are now thirty-nine since Easter. We had a fast day and a day of great blessing. Three would be on their knees at the same time. I simply cannot describe to you the blessings the Lord is pouring out on the new Saints. Their friends were convinced by the outpouring of the Spirit, so a number will soon be baptized.

Missionary Green was here with me, and we held meetings for two weeks, baptizing thirteen. He is visiting other branches now, and we are in hopes the apostles will soon be here. I am very happy to have Brother Green back, and we both wish we could always work together. But other branches need him too, and are anxious to have him.

I will tell you an experience we had at the last baptism, but do not worry; only praise God that we are permitted to suffer. Brother Green and I and many Saints went to the water to baptize eight. We were dressed ready to baptize when ten men, like beasts, came after me and asked, "Where is that Smolney, the leader that's making the world crazy and is teaching another Bible?" I stepped forward, and they all yelled, "Knock him down!" I lifted my right hand to heaven and started talking to them in much power, and they became quieter. I proved to them that we teach the same Bible and then said: "We will go on with the baptism now." The leader then rose again, with the club he had, and beat the waters and said if we went ahead blood would be flowing. Brother Green then stepped to the front and asked why they came and what we had done to them. That only made it worse. I prayed to God not to permit them to lay hands on us and stepped to the front and told the people to dress, that we would not baptize. So we left, hearing such words as: "We'll kill you yet," or "We'll shoot you."

We found another place and baptized the eight people that same day. Pray for us, dear Saints, that God may break the power of darkness and open the eyes of many to the knowledge of the truth. I am willing to die for the teachings of Jesus, but not now, for the work is only started, and I want to help break the power of darkness and bring many souls to Christ. I do not get discouraged but find hope in the words of the apostles. They suffered, and also the Prophet Joseph.

I will close with best regards to all the Saints. If you care to help more, it shall be spent for the German Mission.

Your brother, JOHN SMOLNEY.

[The money spoken of in this letter was contributed by one Sunday school class at Grandview Church. They take a collection separate from their regular Sunday school offering and Christmas offering.]

College Day November 9.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

October 13.—The Department of Women held a very successful business and social meeting, Thursday, September 18, with about sixty-two present. A program consisting of the following numbers was given: Violin solo, Marie Salisbury; piano duet, Lavenia Allen and Mrs. Alexander; address, "Women as home builders and their influence in the world," by Apostle T. W. Williams.

The meetings in the tent by the Riverside Mission closed last night, October 12. A large crowd attended the service, which was preceded by a very enjoyable concert by the Underwood orchestra. There have been about twenty-five baptisms as a result of the six weeks' series of meetings by Brothers Williams and Putnam, but the real spiritual good that has been done the members will perhaps never be fully realized. We are very sorry to see the meetings close.

On Monday evening, October 6, the Girls' Chorus of the Central Branch presented to a large audience in the tent, the operetta, "The American girl." There is some very exceptional talent among this group of young girls, and it is pleasing to note the desire to use it in the service of the church. The several parts of the operetta were rendered very acceptably, as were also the choruses. The chorus is under the direction of Sisters Helen Anderson and Ruth Timm.

Council Bluffs is again unfortunate in losing two of its old-time members. Brother and Sister J. B. Koupal are leaving soon for Independence, Missouri, where they have purchased a photograph studio and will engage in that business. Tuesday evening, October 7, after the service in the tent, about fifty of the members of the branch went to their home for a farewell "sing" and presented them with a useful gift as a token of their regard for them. Brother George Beatty made the presentation speech. We are very sorry to have them go and shall miss them in the meetings of the branch.

The following clipping from the editorial page of the Council Bluffs Nonpareil will no doubt be of interest to many Saints, because Mayor Harding is an elder in the Council Bluffs Branch: "The first seven months of Mayor Harding's administration have been seven months of unusual accomplishment. It is doubtful if the city ever before made as much progress in municipal improvement in a similar period. When the year's record is completed, it will be found, if the pace is continued, that it will be the banner year in Council Bluffs' history."

Michigan Saints in Special Meeting

FLINT, MICHIGAN, October 10.—The coming of the fall season finds Flint Branch in better condition for the cold weather than ever before. The First Church has been newly decorated by Brother John Bliesath of Detroit. The old paper that has adorned the walls for so many years was scraped off, and with three coats of paint a fine-looking interior was presentable for conference visitors October 4 and 5. The work on the new church in the north end of the city is progressing in a commendable way and will soon be under cover, so the Saints there will have a suitable place in which to meet.

All is in readiness for the fourth annual campaign of the young people. The speaker to start in Flint is Apostle J. A. Gillen. He will deliver four sermons and move to Detroit, while Bishop Fred B. Blair will come to Flint for four sermons. Following him will come Apostle F. Henry Edwards to close the campaign, which will terminate in the State convention October 25 and 26 at the new high school auditorium.

The young people are busy making plans and making final arrangements for what promises to be the biggest event of their history.

While the young people are very busy in this good work the services of an ever-ready helper will be missed this year, as the companion of Brother Rollie Provost has been called to the other side. She was always ready to assist in any good work that might fall to her hand to do, and her passing has made a gap that will be hard to fill. Aside from her husband she leaves an infant daughter that will never know its mother's love.

While we mourn the loss of our young sister, we cannot help but pause to mention the passing of our aged sister, Mary Martha Walters, at the ripe old age of eighty-eight. She had been a member of the church for thirty-three years, and during that time she never lost an opportunity to do something in the interest of the work. Most of her family are in the church, and her grandchildren who have grown up and are married have brought their companions into the work, and some of them are occupying the responsibility of the priesthood. Thus passes a long and useful life.

The election of the branch president at the regular bi-monthly business meeting resulted in the sustaining of Elder Arthur H. DuRose. He will have two months in which to select his associates, who will be presented in the form of nominations at the regular annual branch meeting the first Monday in December. The new officers will take office the first of the New Year. The work of Brother DuRose has been very constructive during his presidency, which will open for the fourth year in January. He has been the president of the branch under the amalgamation of the three Flint branches, and his administration has been very successful.

With the closing of the reunions in the State the membership has settled down to the work of the season. The Department of Women is very busy in plans for the annual bazaar. The Department of Recreation and Expression is planning its work in dramatics and looking for the development of latent talents along that line. The Sunday school is planning winter entertainments and special programs. In a general way the outlook for the winter is very bright, and there are great hopes for the successful termination of the plans as a whole.

The recent visits of Apostle F. Henry Edwards and Sister W. L. Christy, who stopped over Sunday evening, August 24, while en route from Midland, Michigan, reunion to Madison, Wisconsin, were greatly appreciated.

Good Prospects in Oklahoma Field

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH,
Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: The work is surely onward here in this field. We sold the Ripley church to Brother Berry for $100 and aim to build for the Iowa Indians soon, near Robert Roubideaux's, where you and I called one day. They are delighted.

My meeting here in El Reno has been disturbed some, having had to move five times. Now we have a tent and are doing just fine. Fourteen have been baptized lately, making fifty-six in all, and the interest is better than ever. I will run at least two weeks more; have run four weeks to date.

We only need to organize our work and stay with an interest to build our work everywhere we go, or nearly so. I never enjoyed such light and power in convincing people of the angel's message. Happy in God's work and praying to see stewardships established and Zion built up.

Your brother, HUBERT CASE.
EL RENO, OKLAHOMA, October 17.

Kansas City Stake Items

Central

The monthly meetings for men and women were held at three o'clock the afternoon of October 1. The men were addressed by Stake President J. A. Tanner on pulpit and visiting manners and the performance of local work. He deplored the fact that the local work was not regarded as being imperative as against the missionary arm of the work, which was thought to be of greatest import. Also he said that the standing ministry were thought by many to be nonessential, which is not in harmony with the provisions of God in placing them in the church.

The women were addressed by Doctor William Warren on first aid, which was a good effort on a timely subject.

The morning speaker was Elder Joseph Luff, who was in his usual good speaking mood, his pithy and pointed remarks holding his audience as good listeners throughout.

At seven o'clock Elder Charles D. Jellings of the Grandview church was the speaker.

Sister Ina B. McNemar McCarrison passed from this life October 14. Funeral services were held from the church, with sermon by J. A. Tanner. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery. She leaves husband and infant child.

Grandview

Another of our young workers ventured on the sea of matrimony when Sister Anna Mae Ball was married to Brother Simon Parker Gress on the evening of September 28. The ceremony was performed at the church, Elder C. D. Jellings officiating. Sister Ball is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Ball, of Warrensburg, Missouri, and is a former student of Graceland College. The young couple immediately started housekeeping at 1215½ Central Avenue, Kansas City, Kansas.

Bennington

Sunday, October 12, was home-coming day at this very busy church. Morning prayer service was very spiritual, and Sunday school at half past nine had an increased attendance. Roll was called at eleven o'clock by Elder James E. Cleveland, to which responses were made by several, including Brethren George Harrington, former president of Independence Stake; B. J. Scott, at that time counselor to stake bishop; and David F. Winn, long time elder in Kansas City. All of them were at the organization of the branch about twenty years ago. Also Elder R. L. Bishop, a former pastor, now pastor at Mount Washington, spoke. All their remarks were reminiscent of past experiences and were very interesting.

An important part of the program was lunch provided by the sisters and served in the church parlors.

The Sunday school had a program at two o'clock, which was followed by another by the Religio workers. Then Sister Ida Etzenhouser, representing the Department of Women, gave a lively and interesting blackboard talk.

Lunch was again served in the evening, about one hundred ninety partaking.

At half past six the Walnut Park Orchestra of Independence put on a fine program of musical numbers, which lasted until eight o'clock, when Sister Bernice Griffith, stake chorister, took charge of the song service. After this Elder William I. Fligg, stake missionary, was introduced as speaker for the hour. The house was crowded, and he held the attention and interest of the people.

Bennington is to be complimented on the eager interest, sacrifice, and work by all in making possible their enlarged and beautiful quarters.

Brother Fligg is holding a two weeks' series of meetings there, beginning October 13.

Armourdale

Elder William I. Fligg recently held three weeks of special meetings here, at which there was a good attendance and interest.

The Department of Women gave a chili supper in the parlors of the church October 3, which was enjoyed by all present.

Bishop F. B. Blair recently had the interior of the hall where we meet decorated, which adds very materially to the appearance of the place.

The priesthood are actively looking after the visiting and cottage work. They pray for the success of the latter-day work.

Fourth Church

Brother Ammon White, stake patriarch and missionary, was the speaker both morning and evening, October 19. His kindly counsel and advice were much appreciated.

The Saints here find their newsy mimeographed announcement sheet is much appreciated. This sheet is distributed throughout the neighborhood each week and brings results in the way of increased attendance and increased information for the people.

Sister Elizabeth Johnson is now attending Chicago University, taking up special studies.

Week Day Religious Education

Grandview, Chelsea, Quindaro, Heathwood, Armourdale, and Malvern churches have opened their doors and furnished teachers for the religious education department of the public school system of Kansas City, Kansas. This is the second year for this venture and is considered a success by the promoters. Doctor Carey S. Osborn is president of the city council of religious education. A half day each week is given to this work.

Chelsea

The stake study class at this church has taken up the study of psychology, with M. A. Etzenhouser as the teacher.

Holden Stake News

Knobnoster

Sacramental service October 5 was in charge of the pastor, Frank Goode, and priest, E. E. Petre. A very spiritual meeting was enjoyed. E. E. Petre was the evening speaker. Elder I. M. Ross was the speaker at both services October 12.

Sister Mary Preston and son George have returned after a visit of several weeks with relatives in Nebraska.

Marshall

Elder I. M. Ross and wife were with Marshall Saints Sunday, October 19. They were strengthened by his strong sermon at the eleven o'clock hour, the subject being, "Moving forward." Sister Ross met with the Department of Women in the afternoon. Brother and Sister S. Wright of Nelson worshiped with the Saints here Sunday. Elder Phelps has returned from his trip to Independence.

Holden

Elder C. F. Scarcliff was the speaker at the church Sunday morning, the 19th. Brother Scarcliff is superintendent of the Sunday school work in the stake. While engaged in his business during the week, he spends most of his Sundays among the churches in the stake. Elder W. S. Macrae was the evening speaker. Doctor G. W. Rodger of Sedalia was the speaker at the Home at eleven o'clock. His sermon was enjoyed very much.

The stake high council met in the stake offices Sunday afternoon. All members of the council and stake presidency were present. Matters pertaining to the work of the stake were considered. It was a very profitable meeting.

Late additions to the Home family are Sister Martha Dike, of Soda Springs, Idaho; and Sister M. A. Ritchner, of Mentor, Ohio.

Grandview

The work here is still progressing. During the past month we have been fortunate in having with us Brethren Alvin Knisley, U. W. Greene, Ralph W. Farrell, and H. E. Moler. These brethren all occupied at least once during their stay, and the Saints were strengthened by their splendid discourses. At present we are holding a series of meetings with Brother R. D. Weaver of Michigan as the speaker. A good interest is manifested in the number attending, and the Spirit is present to a marked degree. The Saints are praying that much good will be the result. Sister Helen Rogers is convalescing from an operation at the home of her parents, Brother and Sister L. Danforth. She and Brother Rogers have been located at Wiley, Colorado.

Lamoni Stake Items

LAMONI, IOWA, October 25.—We had two timely sermons last Sunday on present-day issues. President F. M. McDowell spoke on "Keeping the faith," prefacing his sermon with the quotation, "Fools press in where angels fear to tread." He attacked his subject from a negative standpoint, pointing out classes of people whom he regarded as lacking the right kind of faith.

In the evening Bishop A. Carmichael spoke on, "Where are we drifting?" His sermon, as might be expected, was along the line of our progress in the establishment of stewardships. A great drawback, according to Brother Carmichael, is the drawing of too distinct a line between the temporal and spiritual law. All God's laws are spiritual, he said.

A very interesting feature of the services two weeks ago was a talk on political government given by Professor G. N. Briggs before a meeting of the Department of Women Sunday afternoon.

The morning speaker that day was Roy Cheville, who was assigned the subject of the public library, as preceding a drive which was held last week for securing funds to finance this public enterprise. Brother Cheville chose as his subject, "The spirit behind the writing of books," and gave a very educational and inspirational talk on the value of good books and their influence in character building. The drive was very successful, allowing for the proposed changes in the library. It will be moved from Herald Hall to a downtown building, will be kept open more hours, new books will be purchased, others repaired, etc. The management of the library and the efficient librarian, Mrs. Audie Kelley, are delighted over the cooperation received.

Elder Peter Muceus was the evening speaker October 12.

The Thompson Saints west of town are alive with anticipation of worshipping in a real church building. The Greenville church southeast of Lamoni will be moved onto a lot donated by Elder Eli Hayer in the Thompson neighborhood. Work of moving will begin at once, and it is hoped will be completed by cold weather. These Saints have heretofore met in an unoccupied dwelling owned by B. J. Stevenson.

Week series of meetings are being held at a number of surrounding branches. Stake President C. E. Wight is preaching each evening at Oland, and Elder L. G. Holloway at Evergreen. Elder Holloway will be at Shady Grove next week.

Brother and Sister Wilbur Allen lost their three-month-old babe, Charlotte Mae, in a tragic manner October 12. The family was driving to Mount Ayr, the mother holding her babe in her arms, but upon arrival at the home of her brother, Howard Judson, in Mount Ayr, she found the babe had passed away. Blood clot on the brain was ascribed by physicians as the cause of death. She was a normally healthy child, and had shown no signs of being ill.

Graceland Chats

The first number of the regular lecture course drew a full house, for nearly every student was present. These entertainments bring the student body in touch with the progressive traveling instructors of the day. This number was appreciated, the cellist and violinist being especially in favor. Student criticism is interesting, if you are not the object; even then it's not without its stimulating effect.

The Teachers Institute of Decatur County has been in session, and many teachers and students were attending in Leon. Tuesday, the last day of the institute, in looking over the packed auditorium in the high school at Leon we were impressed with the number of familiar faces, for a goodly part of that audience was or had been Graceland students and teachers.

The Wednesday evening prayer meeting was another to prize. The earnestness and sincerity of these students as they participate in this socializing, christianizing, consecrating service makes the hour solemn in its atmosphere and chastening in its effect.

The Lambda Delta held an animated session on Thursday evening, meeting in a classroom in Recitation Hall. This is the first meeting of the year.

Tuesday chapel was occupied with the presentation of college activities and their particular purposes. "The Crescents," by Vida E. Smith; "Societies and forensics," by Forest Roberts; "Athletics," by A. R. Gilbert; "Scholarship," by President McDowell. These were ten- or fifteen-minute speeches, and President Briggs gave a brief summary of the four, driving home salient points with emphasis. The whole matter was treated with consecrated seriousness and deep and effective thought.

Friday chapel was occupied with consideration of the political situation, three students presenting the viewpoint of the three different parties. The hour was pleasantly and profitably spent.

Clean, clear, and comprehensive, these young people crowded into ten or fifteen minutes what many a politician would have spent three times the fifteen in presenting. Those occupying were Bernice Mitchell, Harry Lewis, and Ruth Lewis—Republican, Progressive, and Democratic in order named.

The week has been one of action, and the weather clear, cool, and sunny.

Miss Irene Layton made a flying trip last week end to her home in Nauvoo, returning for her Monday classes. We feel proud of Nauvoo's three students. Old Nauvoo will do her part henceforth.

Brother E. J. Lenox writes from Evansville, Wisconsin, that he and Brother L. O. Wildermuth have recently baptized six more at Harshaw, Wisconsin, making twelve in all. They closed services there last Wednesday, October 8, and went on to Tomahawk, where the sacrament was administered to the Saints of that place as well as those from Harshaw and Antigo. A good spirit was present from the very opening of the service and continued throughout. The spirit of prophecy was enjoyed.

Stone Church

A junior church was organized in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church on Sunday, October 19, with Mrs. Alice Cowan in charge, Kenneth Fligg assisting. This movement was started especially for the young people promoted from the Campus, but other young people are also invited. It is planned to have a program of interest to young people every Sunday morning, which will provide matter of vital importance to them and help them meet their problems. At this meeting instrumental music was furnished by Miss Elizabeth Smith, and Miss Lillian Zimmermann told a beautiful story of the knights of Arthur's time. Brother Fligg also gave a scripture reading.

On October 26 Brother Fred Cleveland, from Kansas City, brought his stereopticon and showed pictures of the life of Christ which were very fine. Mrs. Fred Koehler's class of ten girls, from the Campus, gave two very excellent musical numbers in costume. The first number was a hymn from Zion's Praises, "The Sabbath bell." The girls were dressed in white, and each carried a little bell. They wore the same costumes in the second number, but this time all carried candles, and they sang, "Jesus bids us shine." Both numbers were very good and showed excellent training. The same program was given at the Campus the week before.

On Friday night, October 31, a Halloween party is being given at the Campus under the auspices of a committee of thirty chosen from the various congregations in Zion. An admission of fifty cents will be charged, the proceeds to go to the Campus. There will be three distinct parties: adults on the first floor, young people on the second floor, and children on the third floor. As the building will accommodate only a limited number, tickets should be obtained before that night. They may be secured from any member of the committee of thirty or at Watkins Music Store. Those attending are invited to come masked, but this is not compulsory for admittance.

The people of the radio department are having a get-together meeting in the dining hall Tuesday night, October 30, to plan for the future work of the radio.

President F. M. Smith returned from Wisconsin October 24 and preached Sunday night at Kansas City Central Church to a good audience.

President Elbert A. Smith leaves Wednesday night for California to assist in the ceremony attending the laying of the cornerstone for the new Los Angeles church Sunday.

The speakers at the Stone Church October 26 were Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths in the morning and Elder J. A. Tanner in the evening.

Second Church

On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings Elder Gomer T. Griffiths gave illustrated lectures to audiences which he pleased very much.

Sunday morning Elder D. A. Whiting was the speaker, and Patriarch Frederick A. Smith in the evening. Strong interest is manifested in the work, and the young people are active.

Liberty Street

The people of this congregation enjoyed two very fine sermons Sunday. Elder W. D. Bullard was the morning speaker, and Bishop Mark H. Siegfried occupied in the evening, on the "Fundamentals of life." Brother Bullard's subject was "The consciousness of righteousness." We had two baptisms in the afternoon, and the candidates were confirmed at the evening meeting.

Next Sunday night, November 2, the Temple Builders will repeat their program given in August. This is a history of temple building from the beginning and is exceptionally good. Everyone who can should attend. On Monday night, October 27, the Temple Builders gave a pie social at the home of Sister Ballinger, which was a success in every way. A good crowd was present, and a goodly sum was realized.

The Sons of Zion have started their class in parliamentary law, and quite a number of the older men are taking part in the class work. It is expected that this organization will be the means of doing much good.

Walnut Park

The eight o'clock morning prayer meeting continues in Walnut Park and is considered by the pastor and many others as the most beneficial service of the day. Everyone invited.

The teachers' meeting last Sunday morning was the best attended of any for many months. Plans were begun for a Christmas program, and it is desired to make it especially appropriate for the season—characterized by solemnity and avoiding frivolity and useless show.

Pastor J. A. Dowker's sermon at eleven o'clock was unusually good, showing wherein the standards in Zion are not what they should be and that we must raise them and show a greater contrast between ourselves and the world.

Brother Gomer T. Griffiths spoke to a well-filled house at half past seven, making very plain his lessons on the proper conduct of the lives of Saints.

The ladies of Groups 29 and 29 South have quiltings every Wednesday at the home of Mrs. John Wolfe, having work engaged ahead for some time—all for the benefit of the building fund.

Enoch Hill

On Saturday night, at six o'clock, the young sisters, under the auspices of their organization, the Geka Club, provided a splendid supper and program in the basement of the church. The proceeds went to the local building debt.

The speakers Sunday were Bishop J. A. Becker in the morning and Bishop B. R. McGuire in the evening. Both addressed appreciative audiences.

The following were baptized October 13: Joyce Worth, Helen Burrows, and Lloyd Hill.

East Independence

All meetings are being held regularly with average attendance. A. H. Parsons, pastor, spoke Sunday morning, and Brother Francis Smith spoke in the evening to a full house.

Englewood

One of our local men, Brother George A. Willis, addressed the Saints Sunday morning, and in the evening our pastor, Brother J. E. Warne, talked about the new church, giving the proposed plans. The Saints here hope to be able to build in the spring, as they are greatly in need of a larger and better building.

Spring Branch

On Sunday, October 19, Brother U. W. Greene began a series of meetings which continued through the week. A splendid interest has been manifested throughout. Two fine sermons were delivered on Sunday, the evening sermon being in answer to a question, Can you prove by the Bible this church is the only church of Christ on earth to-day? With the use of charts Brother Greene handled this question in a very convincing manner, continuing it until Monday evening, when he spoke on the Restoration.

The music was a special feature of the meetings, song service being led by Brother Holmes and Brother Burgess, assisted from time to time by other members from the Stone Church. Sister Moorman of Knobnoster was present a number of times and gave us selections on her musical saw.

The church was at all times well filled, its capacity sometimes being overtaxed, which is a good omen. A number of nonmembers were present at each meeting.

First Chicago Branch

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, October 18.—Sunday, September 21, was a day well spent in service. The speakers were Elders J. W. Pettersson and C. A. Edstrom, both of whom have a way of telling the gospel story. Visitors were Sister Manifold, of Spearfish, South Dakota, and Brother and Sister Morrill.

In the afternoon many of our folks attended the union sacramental service at Central Church, where we had the pleasure of seeing many of the Saints from other parts of the district, as well as our Brother and Sister Baldwin, who are to live and labor here among us.

September 28 was young people's day at our branch, and they had charge of all the services for the day. The speakers were Brethren Baldwin and Burt Hayden.

On the afternoon of October 4 our pastor, Brother Bone, baptized two fine young people, Brother and Sister Romer. They were confirmed at the sacramental service October 5, which was a spiritual feast. At this time the Saints were warned by the Spirit, through Brother Bone, to put away our differences and come up higher. Also Brother J. Louis Gauthier was called to the office of elder. We were pleased to have Brother Granville Trowbridge with us at this meeting.

The Sunday school attendance on October 12 was almost one hundred per cent, towards which point we have been working for nearly a month. Brothers Jerome Wildermuth and Richard Baldwin were the speakers of the day.

Our one big annual event, the big New England dinner and entertainment, is over except washing the dishes. It looks as though another time we will have to borrow the church auditorium for the dinner, or have it on the lake front, for the church is getting altogether too small for the crowds that attend. It was an experience that will long be remembered by those so fortunate as to be present.

A quiet wedding was held at the home of Sister Cora P. Miller in Hinsdale October 20, when her daughter Orda was married to William R. Collins, the pastor officiating. Many pretty and useful gifts were received by the happy couple.

Services are increasing in attendance, and we feel that our branch is forging to the front. Many new faces are seen in the meetings, most of them young people. May God bless his work. Visitors are welcome at First Chicago, 4416 Gladys Avenue.

Burlington, Iowa

October 17.—Burlington Branch will have a series of meetings commencing October 19, to continue as long as there is good interest. Patriarch Ammon White will be the speaker, and we hope the attendance will grow larger each night.

The spiritual condition of the branch remains about the same, but one dropping in on October 12 would have thought from all appearances that everyone had lost interest, for attendance was small both morning and evening. The ideal fall weather encouraged many to visit friends and relatives in near-by towns, so what was our loss in attendance was the gain of some other branch.

Apostle D. T. Williams, of Lamoni, Iowa, spent a few days with his brother, E. R. Williams, and family. He was the speaker for both Sunday morning and evening services, which was enjoyed by all present.

Mrs. Marjory Wright Smith of California returned to her home after a three-week visit with her mother, Sister H. N. Snively, who accompanied her as far as Quincy, Illinois, where she will visit for a few weeks.

Sister Clara Smith, mother of President Elbert A. Smith, left for her home in Independence, Missouri, after a month's visit with relatives and friends. This was her first visit to Burlington since they moved away eighteen years ago.

The Burlington Branch has keenly felt the loss of Brother and Sister J. J. Jenkins and family, who have moved to Taylorville, Illinois. Sister Jenkins was a good worker in the Department of Women and was a teacher in the Sunday school and Religio. The family were regular attendants at all services. Brother Jenkins has a wonderful bass voice, and the choir feels their loss greatly.

The Department of Women had a food sale in our business district for the benefit of the social service league of Burlington, and the proceeds amounted to twenty-five dollars, which was very much appreciated by the president of the league.

The department has also had a jelly and canned fruit day for the Children's Home at Lamoni, which amounted to a small barrel full and will be a treat for the little ones.

College Day November 9.

Home-Coming Week and Rally Day at Sioux City

October 15.—The outstanding feature in this branch the past month was the home-coming week and rally day covering the period from September 23 to 28 inclusive. The cantata, "Rally to the standard," was given to a large audience by the junior department on the 23d at eight o'clock. At six o'clock the Temple Builders served supper to about one hundred and fifty in honor of the Sunday school and Religio teachers. The intermediate girls had a candy stand. Their Christmas offering aim of twenty dollars was reached and passed as they waited on their "sweet-tooth" customers.

The song service at half past seven the 24th, conducted by the chorister, Brother Arthur Sherman, was a fine setting for the prayer and experience service held an hour later. A number expressed themselves as wishing to rally and be of more service for the cause of Christ. The prayer meeting was in charge of the local presidency, Elders George M. Vandel, C. Streeter, and Ned O. Calhoun.

On Friday evening, the 26th, a rally day pageant was given by about fifty characters. The beautiful scenery, purchased at no small expense, was pleasing to everybody. It was left in place until the week's activities were over. A picture was taken of it, that we might refresh our memories occasionally.

A joint program of the Sioux City and Anthon Sunday schools was rendered Sunday morning, September 28. Over two hundred were in attendance. Saints from three States were present, and some came one hundred miles. Souvenirs, in the form of rally-day pins and small lapel pennants, were given to everybody to remember the event. At the Religio hour a short drama was given by the junior and intermediate girls and one by the junior and primary boys. The girls gave a party, and the boys added links to their chain of boys. The week's events closed with a sermon from Elder Charles B.

Woodstock, superintendent of the Mondamin, Iowa, schools, and a member of the Little Sioux district presidency. His remarks were kindly given and filled us with a desire to "rally" to support the banner of the King in our everyday life.

Elder Amos Lamson, of Walthill, Nebraska, has moved his family to this vicinity. Sister Myrtle Bates has gone to Kansas City, where she is matron of a Girls' Home. On October 3, a son, first child, was born to Brother and Sister Arthur Sherman. They have named him Gordon Arthur. Our branch has gone on record as desirous of complying with the request for funds for the big 1000-watt radio. Our quota is between fifty-five and sixty dollars. The following Saints have been added to our growing list: Mrs. Mark Brady, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Horr, James Horr, Mrs. Ruth Huff, Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Jones, Albert and Lawrence Jones, Ruth Sevy, Marie Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Streeter. Brother Walter Gernhart and Miss Ethel Bartels were united in marriage at the church, September 24. They were attended by the bride's brother, Clyde, and Miss Alice Keck. After a brief visit near Lamoni they have returned to their farm home near Merville.

Young People Organize Club

DENVER, COLORADO, October 19.—Denver, Colorado, is known the world over as the "mile-high" city, because the city is about a mile above sea level. That's some altitude, but the city of Denver has nothing on the young people of the Denver Branch when it comes to high places. The spirit of saintly sociability and missionary service rose to immeasurable heights the last Tuesday night in September, when sixty young people of the Denver Branch met together and organized themselves into a social and service body to be known as the Mizpah Club.

A week later a constitution was framed and accepted. Officers were elected and plans for a dramatic section were provided, with instructions to put on a high class play as quickly as possible. Everything went off in grand style, and the entire branch is being permeated with the spirit of doing. The news of the Mizpah Club has traveled fast. We are meeting once each week socially, and several outsiders have already joined the club. Plans are being perfected whereby the club can be of very definite service to the city missionary, Elder Frank B. Almond, the man responsible for starting this wonderful movement. It is hoped that these plans will be so arranged as to enlist the cooperation of every member of the branch—priesthood and lay member.

The young people of the Denver Branch believe that the hour for active service has struck. By the grace of God we will no longer let the flag of King Immanuel, in these parts, drabble in the dust of inactivity and passive indifference; but instead we shall try to rise up in the power and might of Christ Jesus and go before as torchbearers of the advancing saintly host of the army of the Lord, and the vanguard of the coming Zionite civilization.

The officers elected were: James Norton, president; Raymond Buckley, vice president; Lillian Noblitt, secretary; Herschel Green, treasurer; Elmer K. Patterson, corresponding secretary. These officers will be sustained throughout the remainder of 1924.

Keep your eye on the Mizpah Club and the Denver Branch.

College Day November 9.

Radio Flashes

Sharon, Pennsylvania.—We heard your wonderful program furnished by the Y. K. T. Class on Tuesday evening, October 21. We are members of the church and have tried with success many times for station K F I X. Station K F N F (266 meters) is very powerful which makes it hard to get K F I X (268 meters).—Mr. and Mrs. George Jones.

Clarksburg, West Virginia.—I had the pleasure of listening to your bishop (Bishop James F. Keir) making his address last evening but I only got part of it, and if it is possible and the bishop has this address in booklet form I would appreciate very much to have it. I feel sure that any boy or girl who heard it will get a broader vision of the essential things that are necessary to acquire success. I have a 3-tube set with loudspeaker and the address came in very plain, but I was late tuning in, so did not get the entire address. I would appreciate advance notice of your programs that I may have the pleasure of tuning in to your entire program.—W. V. Matheny.

Estevan, Saskatchewan, Canada.—I am pleased to be able to let you know that I heard your station this evening, very clear and with good volume. I did not tune in until the concluding number, "One fleeting hour," which was very much appreciated, it being a great favorite with my wife.—S. F. Leech.

Louisville, Kentucky.—Your programs the last two times have been greatly enjoyed. Your station is difficult to receive but your programs are fine.—Edward Sutt.

Bowling Green, Ohio.—It gave me great pleasure last night when K F I X came in, and I heard the talk on good roads and "Project 5" (Independence Chamber of Commerce Fifth Annual Banquet). Having as a member of my family the engineer who designed and built certain sections of the famous Dixie Highway and other state roads in this vicinity, the talk was of peculiar interest to us.—J. J. Gulliers.

Ottawa, Illinois.—We have had our radio set about one month, but last Thursday evening (October 9) was the first we could pick you up. Brother Elbert Smith's sermon Sunday evening was fine, and we had several members listening. We have no branch here, and it is twenty miles to the nearest, so we expect to be present with you this winter.—Archie A. Williams.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Just to let you know that you are still coming in fine up here, and although your change of wave length makes it difficult I can hear you through local stations.—Leslie Young.

Reading, Pennsylvania.—Heard your program on October 14, about 10.45 p. m. The music and speech were very loud and distinct and were heard very clearly by a roomful of people. I am using a super-heterodyne receiver with three stages of power amplification, on loop antenna.—Richard Essick.

Maryville, Tennessee.—I congratulate you on the broadcasting of your church services. Volume loud and distinct. Announcer just grand.—George H. McJunkins.

North Little Rock, Arkansas.—Fine program to-night (October 14). Wonderful talent.—J. A. Weas. (The third card in two weeks from Mr. Weas.)

Fairchance, Pennsylvania.—In our nightly "swing around the circle" your station was our most enjoyable stop. I always enjoy your concerts. Accept my thanks.—Charles P. Glenn.

Middletown, Ohio.—Dear Saints: I tuned in with station K F I X to-night. It is one of the stations I have longed to hear. I enjoyed the program which seemed short to me. Now that I have the wave, will tune in regularly, as I watch the HERALD closely for programs. I am the solicitor for this branch, and I am pushing the fund for a larger broadcasting station so the gospel may go to every people.—Claude D. Barker.

The True Philosophy of Church Government

III. ADMINISTRATIVE AUTHORITY OF THE PRESIDENCY

During my whole life I have probably not spent two hours all told in pulpit or press discussing the rights and authority of the First Presidency. I have always been content to say, Come work with us!

The right to exercise authority does not of itself appeal to me. It is more a burden of responsibility than a pleasure to be sought after. The Lord spoke significantly when he said that the "burden" of the care of the church rested on the Presidency. (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 2.)

But since the matter is discussed, and apparently must be discussed, I may say some words on the authority of the Presidency. An apostle may say to a seventy, Come work with me; nevertheless, in the field, if the matter be forced to an issue, there is no question as to which one has "directional control."

"Recognized Grades of Official Prerogative and Responsibility"

Though as man to man we may be equal in honor and favor with God, there are official positions in the church carrying, some lesser, some greater, responsibility and authority. To affirm that there are no superior and no subordinate officers, in no way alters that well-recognized fact.

The entire section 104 of the Doctrine and Covenants is devoted to delineating the relative standing of different grades and orders of the priesthood: The Melchisedec or greater, the Aaronic or lesser, and the offices in each "in their order."

Section 122: 9 says: "The quorums in respect to authority are designed to take precedence in office . . ."

The foregoing refers to general church officers, while section 17 details the authority and rights of local officers. An elder has authority which a priest does not have, and so on.

There are degrees of authority and of responsibility.

The burden of responsibility of the whole church rests on the President and his counselors (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 2), while the responsibility of a district or branch rests on the district or branch officers respectively (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14).

The articles of incorporation of the church, thought out, formulated, and adopted during the days of our fathers, explicitly set forth this gradation: "The church government consists: 1. Of a first presidency, consisting of a president and two counselors. 2. A quorum of twelve," and so on through the entire list, to "quorums of deacons."

I think the foregoing fairly establishes the declaration of the joint council that there are "recognized grades of official prerogative and responsibility."

Where there are recognized grades of prerogative and responsibility, the top must be reached somewhere. I speak now of officials on earth. All concede Christ to be the great head of "the church triumphant" and the "church militant." The argument has not yet gone over into heaven. They had their argument long ago and settled it by a two thirds majority.

"Supreme Directional Control"

In organic expression and functioning there must be recognized grades of official prerogative and responsibility, with supreme directional control resting in the presidency as the chief and first quorum of the church.—Document on Church Government, April, 1924.

First, every officer is respected in his place in the above statement; the Presidency first, it is true, even as they were named in the organic law of the church.

The declaration on "supreme directional control" I can accept when given a reasonable interpretation. I could not accept it if given the extreme interpretations that some of its opponents have applied.

Some have called it "supreme dictatorial control." I never dictated to anyone in the church in my life. No one ever dictated to me. The President never told me to do anything. He has been chary even of suggestions. Even when I was a missionary, his instructions to me came always couched in the form of request or suggestion. I could not advocate "dictatorial control."

One said to me, "Supreme means over all. That puts the Presidency over General Conference." I said, "Does it put them over God?" He replied, "Surely so. If a thing is supreme, nothing can be higher." But how about the Supreme Court of Missouri? Is it above the Congress of the United States? Is it above the Supreme Court of the United States? No; it is supreme in its sphere.

Supreme or First in Administrative Affairs

The sphere in which the famous declaration on "directional control" applies is the administrative. At no point does it challenge General Conference. General Conference is legislative.

Every practical institution has an executive or administrative head. Power of direction must be focused. Two or more heads belong to monsters, freaks of the zoo, or dragons of Revelation. The church in Revelation had one head, crowned with twelve stars. (Revelation 12:1.) Her opponent that sought to destroy her and failed had seven heads. (Revelation 13:1.) Too many heads.

It is written in logic that the church should have one executive head. It is also written in law. The church militant (sometimes too militant) has in its living, human organization, one human head. God calls him "the head of the church," so I need not fear rebuke if I use that term. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104:42; 27:2.)

I use the term "head" fully aware that he who would be greatest of all must serve all. How can the head serve all better than to direct, within the bounds of the law of the body?

I cannot think of the church having several heads, or even two heads, one to direct the temporal leg of the church, the other to direct the spiritual leg, and pray God they may not split the body.

When General Conference has approved a policy or an enterprise, several executives among the leading quorums may direct the carrying out of the policy or enterprise. Among several one must be chiefly responsible to direct and control—to give "directional control." I am not in sympathy with any tendency to equip the ship of Zion with individual steering wheels.

Within the Metes and Bounds of the Law

This directional control must be within the limits of the constitutional law. It must accord, first, with the revelations already approved by the people; second, with the legislative enactments of the people. It is not a wild, free handling of power by one man. If one man attempt such use of power he may be disciplined, by censure or removal from office: "effective discipline" applies to all. But do not attempt to trim principles to fit personalities that you may not approve.

That supreme directional control referred to executive matters was quite fully set forth by President Smith before the council meeting, and it is further stated in the following letter:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 26, 1924.

BISHOP M. H. SIEGFRIED,

Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: I trust the delay in answering your recent letter in which you ask for an interpretation of "supreme directional control," which in the opinion of the recent joint council is vested in the Presidency, has not caused you any inconvenience. As you know, I have had many matters to which my attention has of necessity been given.

In the church, as in all organizations where a form of efficient government is needed, there seems to have been provision made in the law for the fine balance had when the three divisions into legislative, judicial, and executive departments are recognized and maintained. For efficiency of administration to be had supreme directional control must lodge somewhere. Our law clearly places this with the Presidency, as the joint council has expressed. And this directional control is for the purpose of carrying out the policies which have been determined by prophetic instruction with legislative approval and legislative enactments in harmony with constitutional law and divine command. It is of course not presumed or assumed that supreme directional control shall be exerted outside the purposes of the church as determined by the law and the objective of endeavor. That is to say, the directional control shall be in harmony with law and General Conference enactment based on the constitutional law, but in the executive line shall be supreme.

I trust this gives you such answer as will satisfy the purpose of your inquiry. If not, let me know and I shall be glad to "try again."

Fraternally yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

A Further Statement

In line with the above is the following statement made to a priesthood meeting at the General Conference of 1917:

So long as they remain in office, the supreme rights of the executive arm of the church lie in the Presidency. But do not forget to draw the line between the legislative and the administrative or executive arm of the church.—Frederick M. Smith, in SAINTS' HERALD, April 25, 1917.

A Line Between the Legislative and Executive

General Conference is the chief legislative body of the church. It enacts legislation or approves law coming through revelation. It approves policies and proposed church enterprises. But it does not ordinarily stay in session or enter the executive field to issue orders to men in carrying out these undertakings.

To illustrate: Having provided for missions and having missionary quorums and overseers, conference does not continue in session to issue orders governing the movements of Hubert Case, W. A. Smith, and all the other missionaries during the season.

Conference respects her executives and leaves the issuing of such instructions to them.

Or if conference were to approve the opening of a new mission on an efficient basis, it would not enter the executive field and continue in session issuing orders covering the various details of the work. It might fall to a number of executives, to order the purchase of lands, the erection of a mission headquarters building, the sailing of missionaries, the establishing of a mission press, etc. Where several executives are involved, some one must be chiefly responsible.

In the executive field, in carrying out the policies and enterprises of the church the Presidency is first, or supreme. But they, like all the officers of the church, must work in harmony with the revelations already approved by the conference and with General Conference legislation.

With this reasonable interpretation in view, let us see if the document on directional control is in harmony with the law and the faith of our fathers.

To the Law

First to the law:

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 2, April, 1894.

And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42.

Do the foregoing items of law refer only to presiding in councils? and at other times in a vague and nebulous way filling specifications as "president"? Or do they also involve powers of directional control? Note:

And this shall be your business and mission in all your lives to preside in council and set in order ALL the affairs of this church and kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

Here is power on occasion to "set in order," not part, but all of the affairs of the church; no department exempted.

The Faith of Our Fathers

In 1894 a council of Presidency, Twelve, and Quorum of High Priests considered this matter. They reported to conference. Their report was signed by President Joseph Smith, Apostle Heman C. Smith, and High Priest Henry A. Stebbins. The conference adopted it. Note the salient points in the following extracts:

7. That the Presidency is the leading quorum in the church. That the duty of presiding over the church devolves on that quorum. That it is the prerogative of the President to preside over the whole church, to bear the responsibility of the care and oversight of the work of the church, in all its different departments, and through the constituted officers of the church in their various callings, according to the laws, rules, and regulations in force and recognized by the church. . . .

12. That the Presidency are the counselors of the Twelve and exercise the right of presidency by direction and counsel to that quorum. . . .

14. That the Twelve are the second quorum in authority and importance in the general work of the church; and is the leading missionary body of laborers, under the direction and counsel of the Presidency, whose duty it is to preach the gospel, win souls to Christ, administer in the rites of the gospel, carry the gospel to this and every other nation, take charge of and direct other missionaries; and to do any work within their calling, which the necessities of the work and general welfare of the church may demand.—General Conference Resolution No. 386.

According to our fathers, then, the Presidency bore the responsibility of the care, oversight, direction of the whole church in "all its different departments." Even the Twelve, named as "second," were subject to the "direction" of the Presidency.

Joseph and Heman on the True Philosophy

Two years later President Joseph Smith and Historian Heman C. Smith wrote and published the following:

It appears from this revelation that the primary right of presiding over the church, and of regulating and setting in order all the affairs of the same, is resident in the First Presidency; and that the true philosophy of the organization is, that if others should be appointed to those duties, these rights and prerogatives inhere in them in a secondary sense, to be exercised under the direction and counsel of the First Presidency.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 281.

An Agreement in Leading Quorums in 1917

So recently as 1917 we were able to agree on this matter rather unanimously in a joint council meeting of the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, including also the Presiding Patriarch.

Note the following from Joint Council Minutes for May 1, 1917, Record 4, page 71; at this meeting there being present: F. M. Smith, of the Presidency; J. W. Rushton, U. W. Greene, F. M. Sheehy, Peter Anderson, W. M. Aylor, J. F. Curtis, J. A. Gillen, of the Twelve; B. R. McGuire, J. F. Keir, of the Presiding Bishopric; and F. A. Smith, Presiding Patriarch.

Inasmuch as the Presidency is responsible for the direction of the affairs of the whole church, it is obviously proper that all the departments of the church ministry should work in harmony with and under supervision of the presiding authority of the whole.

In the above it was agreed that the Presidency has "direction" (directional control) and "supervision" of the affairs of the whole church and all its departments. The law has not changed since 1917. Principles of government do not change. Should those who reaffirm in 1924 be marked as bringing in new and dangerous doctrine?

Is There an Exception?

Now an exception is sought to be made, and it is argued that the statement that the burden of the church rests on the Presidency should not mean the burden of the whole church, but only a part, the spiritual side of it; that they should not be burdened with the "temporal" matters of the church.

It is true that Joseph the Martyr was told that in "temporal labors" he should not "have strength." (Doctrine and Covenants 23.) But the revelation self-evidently referred to his labor for his own support, not to his calling in the Presidency. He was to "sow and secure" his fields and then leave them. (Verse 2.) The churches at Coleville, Fayette, and Seneca were to support him, so that he could do his work in the church. (Verse 2.) He was not to engage in farming or merchandise. That is what, and all, it meant. "All are called"—some to labor, some to business, some to the ministry. (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.) Joseph Smith was called to the ministry, not to labor on a farm.

As a matter of fact he handled some of the biggest financial undertakings of the church during his administration and was trustee in trust for the church at the time of his death.

In 1861 when "Young Joseph" had just recently come to the Presidency, the revelation of that year provided that the Twelve should be associated with the Bishop in executing the law of tithing. (Doctrine and Covenants 114.) The revelation of 1894, section 122, absolved the Twelve and explained the reason for the temporary arrangement: i. e., at that time (1861) the President "had not yet approved himself unto the scattered flock." That at least indicated very strongly that when he had approved himself he would have a voice in "temporal" matters. And it was in 1894 that Joseph set his pen to the declaration that he was president over the "whole" church "in all its departments," which declaration conference approved. It was two years later that he asserted the right to regulate and set in order all the affairs of the same, and added that if any others should similarly work it would be in a secondary sense and under the direction of himself and his counselors.

Bishop Subject to Direction by Spiritual Authorities

I am not interested in the details of the Bishop's work, excepting as necessity might make it advisable. I am aware that it is provided that the temporalities of the church are under the "charge and care of the bishopric." (Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.) But the articles of incorporation of the church then in force provided that this charge and care should not be without direction. They specified: "Said bishops having temporal jurisdiction subject to the general direction of the church, and higher church authorities."

It is fair to ask, Who are those "higher church authorities"? And is their power of "direction" real?

The Right to Act in Emergency

I cannot believe that the Bishop is an independent executive, subject only to General Conference. The following illustration is pertinent:

Suppose the Presiding Bishopric should become disorganized by death during the year. Or suppose that at some future time (not in the life of the present incumbents) all its members should become disaffected and leave the church, as did Bishop Evans. What executive quorum would have the right and the duty to step in, and in the interest of the church continue the operations of the office, directly, or under men temporarily appointed? There is no question that primarily the duty would rest on the Presidency, working no doubt in council with other leading quorums. The duty and right is there. The spiritual authorities are not and cannot be absolved from responsibility in "temporalities." Nor does the law intend that they should be.

Has the Bishopric Supreme Directional Control of Finances?

We should be able to discuss this matter without reference to the personality of the present Presiding Bishopric or First Presidency. Bishops and presidents come and go. Principles do not change. So I must not be understood as reflecting in any way upon the integrity or good faith of the Bishops in this article when discussing principles; I respect all members of the Presiding Bishopric.

It is argued that the Presiding Bishopric are independent executives subject only to General Conference. Merely the right of the Presidency and Twelve to "counsel" them has been admitted. This of course argues the right to reject counsel, which means "supreme directional control" in temporalities" by the Bishopric in every sense in which that term has been applied to the work of the Presidency.

That would include executive control by the Bishopric of all local and general church properties, of the moneys which support missions and missionaries as well as general church officers and institutions, of the publishing houses and press of the church. The spiritual authorities can hardly do a stroke of constructive work, pastoral or missionary, or Zionie, without physical and material ("temporal") implements. Not a wheel can turn without finances. So this immediate "supreme directional control in temporalities" might mean an indirect but very real control of spiritual enterprises.

For this is true, with the church as with individuals, spiritual agencies function through material mediums. The power that controls the material medium can direct, modify, or suppress the spiritual functions.

It may be argued that this is no more dangerous than to lodge similar power in the hands of the Presidency. But the church, having considered and approved her enterprises, must trust to some one in their execution. This will always mean a centralization of administrative power. And the power of direction we have been discussing logically rests with the spiritual authorities of the church, with the President of the high priesthood at their head, rather than with the "temporal authorities" with the president of the Aaronic priesthood at their head. And this view is not diminished when we reflect that under the law a priest who is a lineal descendant of Aaron may preside as bishop without counselors.

The Lord Recognizes No Dividing Line

For the reasons just stated I do not think that an arbitrary line between the "temporal" and spiritual departments of church work is practical; and it is not scriptural, since the Lord is at pains to reject such division; he says: "All things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which is temporal." (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9.)

That being true, general supervision of all church affairs rests logically with the spiritual authorities of the church, at whose head is the presidency of the high priesthood: "The Melchisedec priesthood holds the right of presidency, and has power and authority over all the offices of the church, in all ages of the world, to administer in spiritual things." —Doctrine and Covenants 104: 3.

Order of Bishops Agrees With Presidency

The Order of Bishops met with the joint council of April last, and the great majority of them supported the position of the Presidency, if we may judge by their vote. So this is not merely the judgment of one man or three men, among the "spiritual authorities."

These men, possibly equally with the Presiding Bishopric, have a right to be heard on this matter. In the vision of 1902 Joseph said that he saw the Presiding Bishopric with "the attendant bishops upon either side." Section 109 places the care of "temporalities" under the whole body of bishops:

"Men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head."

Articles of Incorporation

Articles of incorporation of the church were first adopted by the conference of 1872. The church was reincorporated in 1891. Joseph was President of the church on both occasions. In the last instance he was chairman of the committee appointed to draft articles.

In both instances the articles said concerning the financial department: "7th. Bishops, consisting of a Presiding Bishop and counselors and associate or local bishops—said bishops having temporal jurisdiction subject to the general direction of the church, and higher church authorities."

So during your life and mine and during forty-two years of Joseph's presidency, no arbitrary divisions between the "temporal" and spiritual was recognized, and it was written in the books that while the bishops had "temporal jurisdiction" it was under "direction" of the spiritual authorities. It is too late now to call that a new doctrine.

No Irresponsible Uses of Church Money

I do not support the document on church government under the interpretation which I have set forth with any idea that it shall give the President, or the Presidency as a quorum, right to appropriate church funds to private uses or to arbitrarily command the expenditure of church money.

I am in sympathy with the statement made by the President before the council when the article was under discussion: That neither he nor the Bishop should have the individual right to either invest or expend church money without authorization. He held that regular current expenses should be authorized by General Conference. (The annual budget.) Extraordinary expenses and investments occurring during the year should be authorized by some competent council. This accords with section 114; that the finances of the church may not be used as a "weapon in the hands of one man for the oppression of others, or for the purpose of self-aggrandizement; be he whomsoever he may be," the President, the Bishop, or any other man.

General Remarks

This power of direction need not be exercised in a coercive manner. Wherever possible, common understanding should be reached by consultation. The Presidency should seek counsel freely from other men and quorums to aid in reaching a wise decision; but in executive matters they bear the responsibility finally to reach the decision.

Where differences of opinion occur, to create another board of review or council having final decision would be to create a higher quorum than the Lord has seen fit to create—one before the first—and has no basis in law in administrative matters. (I do not speak now of any matters that may under the law come before the three leading quorums for legislation, wherein a quorum vote might place the decision with two of the three quorums. I speak of regular administrative matters of the conference period.)

Heads of departments should be allowed initiative and freedom of action. The Presidency need not be burdened with a mass of details. But the quorum that has the right to direct in every department must have power to decide when it should inquire into details and direct, else the power to direct has no meaning in fact.

I have written the foregoing as I see it, with equal good will towards those who may differ and those who may agree with me. I trust that presently we may reach a better understanding and a fuller fellowship.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

November Last Month of Radio Drive

December 1 has been set as the date when the drive for funds to build the 1000-watt church broadcasting station and to increase the power of the Graceland College station will cease. No radio drive advertising or publicity will appear after November. Everyone who has not already helped towards the building of the new station should therefore send in their donations without delay. Contributions received after December 1 will of course not be refused, for it is appreciated that some may be unable to help before that time. But it is hoped that everyone who can possibly do so will do his part during the next few weeks.

The outlook for "going over the top" is quite encouraging. About four fifths of the goal is on hand, and the radio committee feels that many people will be able to contribute during November who were unable to do so before. Quite a number have sent in their second donations towards the new station, and one brother has contributed the third time. Many have promised to "help some more" before the close of the drive.

Those who have been waiting to see that the new station would actually be built and have stood by until construction actually begins will not have much longer to wait. Contracts for the erection of the new steel towers will doubtless be let by the time this issue of the HERALD is in the mail. Plans for the new studio will shortly be completed by the church architect who is working in conjunction with those in charge of the radio.

But before all the new apparatus can be ordered the necessary funds should be on hand. Everyone should help to minimize further delay by completing the radio fund. Mail your contribution to Radio K F I X, Independence, Missouri.

Bureau of Mines Prepares Educational Films

Along many lines of education, films for the use of community centers and of educational institutions are now available. These are used extensively throughout the country and are bearing fruit in the shape of an informed public.

A series of educational motion picture films, which depict in a most striking manner the processes employed in the mining, preparation, and utilization of the various mineral materials, is available for distribution in Missouri, by the Extension Division of the University of Missouri, Columbia. These films, produced by the Department of the Interior, through the Bureau of Mines, in cooperation with the larger industrial concerns, tell the story of the workings of the Nation's tremendous mineral industries in a much more vivid and colorful manner than is possible through the medium of any printed page. Another series of films preaches the doctrine of "safety first," by showing safe and unsafe methods in mining and metallurgical practice.

Nearly a hundred educational films have been prepared in the past few years by the Bureau of Mines in cooperation with industrial concerns. The demand for these films for showing by educational institutions, churches, civic bodies, and other organizations has become so great that the original plan of centralized distribution from the Pittsburgh Experiment Station of the Bureau of Mines has become inadequate. A selected list of the best of these films is now made available at distributing centers located in the different States. The films relate to coal, petroleum, sulphur, iron, asbestos, zinc, marble, copper, natural gas, and other minerals. A series of films depicts most interestingly such industrial processes as the manufacture of oxygen, the making of fire-clay refractories, manufacture of automobiles, the methods of compressing air, the quarrying of limestone, etc. Other films illustrate dangerous and safe practices in mining, efficiency in the combustion of coal, the utilization of water power, and the operation of a gasoline motor.

Full details as to the procedure necessary to obtain these industrial and educational motion picture films, as well as a wealth of material from other sources besides the Bureau of Mines, may be obtained by addressing the Extension Division, University of Missouri, Columbia, Missouri.

Did God Say It?

BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS

In the HERALD for October 22, 1924, on page 1017, there appears an extract from the essays of Henry Preserved Smith in Biblical interpretation, which relates an experience had by Bishop Colenso while translating the Old Testament into the language of the Zulus of South Africa.

It appears that the bishop was assisted by an intelligent Zulu native, "one with the docility of a child but with the reasoning of a man of mature age." In the work of translation they came to Exodus 21: 20, 21, where they read in the law of God this instruction: "If a man smite his servant [slave], or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand; he shall be surely punished. Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished: for he is his money."

The essayist tells us "the Zulu, who knew the lot of the black man when in the power of a white master, was quick to feel the injustice of such a law and asked whether it was true that God had given such a law by direct revelation."

The writer of the article in which this extract occurs comments on this incident and the question of the Zulu as follows: "Thus even does the savage catch an irreconcilability of our teachings and even our present-day standards with what we claim to be God's word."

But, in the language of our caption, "Did God say it?" Did God give that unjust law the poor Zulu was so quick to feel? Does there exist an irreconcilability between the standards of justice and what the Latter Day Saints claim to be God's word?

Reading from that faulty version Bishop Colenso and the Zulu were using, one might answer in the affirmative, but the Inspired Version gives us the law as it emanated in its purity from God by direct revelation, and this is what it says:

"If a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand; he shall be put to death. Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, and recover, he shall not be put to death, for he is his servant."

The poor Zulu, Bishop Colenso, and Henry Preserved Smith are justified in questioning the revelation of God in the form in which it came to them. Latter Day Saints should greatly appreciate their opportunity to defend the revelation in the purer form in which it has come to us.

"The foundation of our faith standeth sure." A right understanding of the divine word will not necessitate our challenging the ethics of it.

Shall We Have Peace?

BY WILFRID D. TORDOFF

Throughout the church at large there is an uneasiness manifested by reason of the controversy now being carried through the columns of the SAINTS' HERALD.

I have seen this uneasiness grow among the members to such proportions that some have been heard to say they will stop the payment of their tithes until the trouble is settled.

Many of the Saints do not seem to realize that by withholding their tithes they are causing innocent, staunch, faithful, loyal, sacrificing members of this group of people to suffer. I refer more especially at this time to the wife and children of the general church appointee. And who sacrifices more?

Can it be possible that the most loyal people to their God and church that I ever met will stop their tithing, cause innocent women and children to suffer, the fathers and husbands of whom have given their lives to the service of the church and their fellow men, just because, comparatively speaking, a few are disagreed as to church government? I trust that such will not be the case, but that the members of the church will rally to the Bishop's aid and fulfill the statement that I have heard so many of them express, even that they would lay down their lives for this work if necessary. God is not asking for this now; simply asking that we use our common sense and retain the principles upon which this work has been builded. Men may fall, but God will continue, and his work will prevail.

I am as satisfied that there is to be a separation of the wheat and tares as I am that very soon this gospel will be preached by thousands and accepted by tens of thousands.

In Doctrine and Covenants 84: 2, 4, we may read:

But, behold, in the last days, even now, while the Lord is beginning to bring forth the word, and the blade is springing up and is yet tender, behold, verily I say unto you, The angels are crying unto the Lord day and night, who are ready and waiting to be sent forth to reap down the fields; but the Lord said unto them, Pluck not up the tares while the blade is yet tender (for verily your faith is weak), lest you destroy the wheat also; therefore let the wheat and the tares grow together until the harvest is fully ripe; then ye shall first gather out the wheat from among the tares, and after the gathering of the wheat, behold, and lo, the tares are bound in bundles, and the field remaineth to be burned. Therefore, blessed are ye, if ye continue in my goodness, a light unto the Gentiles, and through this priesthood, a savor unto my people Israel. The Lord hath said it. Amen.

The above paragraphs are self-explanatory, and yet who would say that they are not specific, and significant of the condition that we find ourselves in to-day?

The fields are indeed white and ready to harvest. Shall our vision be obscured to such an extent that the very intent of the organization of this church be lost? Shall we allow controversy or anything else to come between God and ourselves to such an extent that our minds will become clouded?

Before the article of Elder Gomer T. Griffiths appeared through the columns of the HERALD, I expressed myself to another missionary in the very words that Brother Griffiths used, when he advised that the general church appointees meet just as long as perhaps it would be necessary for them to do, sometime before conference to try to settle the question that is now before the church.

It can be done! We have preached about a God that is. Why not make a demonstration of our teaching? And after the ministry have settled the controversy through the intervention of God, presenting to the conference delegates assembled a united front—which certainly can be done by the help of God—the Bishop's burdens would be made lighter; the President could go forward feeling he was part of a great organization, every part of which would rally to his call by reason of a greater confidence manifested by minister and laity alike. With this confidence restored, the coffers of the church would be replenished.

We have been prone to lay the charges at the feet of perhaps a few of our leading men. Would we as units in this great organization be justified in not doing our part that the church might go on, even though all that is said of them be true? which things are certainly not true.

It is sure that we must have peace. How can it be obtained? And James, in the third chapter, from the eighth verse to the eighteenth, perhaps gives sufficient advice to help us over the rough places:

But the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, which are made after the similitude of God. Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? Can the fig tree, my brethren, bear olive berries? either a vine, figs? so can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh. Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. But if ye have bitter envyings and strife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not against the truth. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work.

And in the fourth chapter, James admonishes the people who are striving against each other, and surely we might well apply this to our lives to-day, in the following language:

Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the Devil, and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up. Speak not evil one of the other, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. There is one lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy: who art thou that judgest another?

Let the ministry submit themselves before God for light, some time previous to General Conference, in fasting and prayer, day after day; President, apostles, seventies, and indeed all the ministry, and who would say that God would not honor such procedure?

May God help us to trust him fully in order that he can fully demonstrate his love towards us. The result would be confidence restored, the depleted ranks of the missionary force restored, and the ultimate triumph of the restored gospel assured.

Aftermath of the Advisory Council

BY T. W. WILLIAMS

[EDITOR'S NOTE: The article of the six referred to in the first paragraph by Brother Williams was by mistake printed in the column devoted to "Original Articles." For this reason we are also placing "Aftermath of the Advisory Council" in the same department.]

Six members of the now historical Advisory Council have stated "The case from another standpoint." They attach unmerited criticism because "two other apostles express views." They charge Brethren Curtis and Hanson with unwitting misrepresentation. They utterly fail to make their case. Another writer has recently furnished "A review of the joint council."

The issues raised by our two brethren across the sea are:

- (a) First Presidency, members of the Quorum of Twelve, and a part of the bishops meeting together between conferences.
- (b) Seeking to change an important governmental practice of the church.
- (c) Introducing into the church and promulgating the doctrine of supreme directional control on the part of the Presidency over the finances of the church.
- (d) Demanding of the Presiding Bishop that he comply therewith.

Status and Function of the Advisory Council

Nowhere in the organic law nor in the enactments of General Conference do we find provision for a council composed of Presidency, Twelve, and Order of Bishops, having the power to deal with both spiritual and temporal affairs of the church. Any such council is beyond the pale of the law. The Standing High Council could not by vote legalize it. The President of the church has no right to constitute a council not provided for in the law. He is not justified in ignoring councils already constituted by God.

It is affirmed and argued that there is no law providing for any permanent standing organization known as a joint council or as "the joint council." Let us examine this statement.

Divine Provision for Joint Council

In the revelation given April 15, 1894, Doctrine and Covenants 122, we find the following:

The twelve should remain at Lamoni and continue in council with the presidency and the bishop, and his counselors if practicable, a sufficient time after the adjournment of conference to counsel together and agree on the things of the law and the general affairs of the church, so that when the traveling council shall separate for their several fields, there may be no longer reason for distrust, suspicion, or dissension. And if these officers will so counsel together in the spirit of moderation and mutual forbearance and concession, my law will be more perfectly understood by them and a unity of sentiment and purpose will be reached by them. It is the will of your Lord and your God that this should be done. It should have been done before, but the adversary hath hindered, desiring to prevent the success of my work in the earth.

The Lord here provides for this joint council. He calls it a council. He says it should have been called before. He lays the charge on the Adversary for preventing its convocation. I am wondering who is responsible for its not being called into action now!

This joint council met as per divine command. There were present Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair of the Presidency, nine members of the Quorum of Twelve, and the General Bishopric. The decisions of this council covered a wide range, embracing spiritual and temporal activities, and interpretation of the law, and a clear setting forth of the duties of the apostles. The entire matter was presented to the General Conference and indorsed. From that time, and particularly since F. M. Smith has been President of the church, up to the year 1922 this joint council has been convened by the Presidency. All kinds of administrative matters have come before it for disposition. Neither member of the Presidency ever raised any question as to the right or jurisdiction of this council until 1922, when the members of the Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishop took a definite stand against some of the actions taken by President Smith.

Efforts Made to Discredit Joint Council

And now comes a member of the Presidency questioning the legal standing of such a council altogether. All I wish to say as to this is: If there is no provision for such a council, then there has been a tremendous amount of illegal work done by those constituting this council, and the members of the Presidency have been parties to this procedure. In each and every instance when we have met, we were called together by the Presidency. It is rather late in the day to seek to discredit the joint council. The Lord has recognized the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric. The church has recognized it. It has functioned for years.

We emphasize that this advisory council has no standing in the laws of the church. It possesses no power of administration or legislation. It cannot bind either its members or the general body. Its convocation was without warrant and its proceedings irregular. It was the source of disruption and involved needless expense. The history of apostasy in all ages registers the assumption of powers and prerogatives by illegal and irregular councils. Resistance to the work and purpose of all such councils constitutes loyalty to God and to his church.

It is true the council was "opened with the communion service, the President serving the emblems." But in view of the attack which the President precipitated on the Bishop, it would have been more in keeping with the Christian ethics to have settled our differences first and afterwards partaken of the Lord's supper.

Personnel of the Council

It is argued that the adding of the Order of Bishops strengthened the council. Wherein? Under President Smith's direction the council essayed an interpretation of law and procedure. This is not the work of the Order of Bishops. It was inevitable that confusion must ensue. We cannot further the work of God only in God's way. The calling of this irregular council represents man's wisdom. We do not question either the ability or honor of the members of this council. The council was irregular.

It is affirmed that it was clearly stated and understood that "the functions of the council were advisory only." This admission was not made until minority members had protested any attempt at legislation. I, personally, objected and stated that if it was the intention to make the council action in any sense legislative or binding, I would withdraw and seek redress elsewhere. President Smith's reply was: "You can call the council advisory or legislative or anything you please." Only after repeated protests was it conceded by the chair that the council possessed no legislative power or administrative authority.

Some of us sat in the council not because we recognized its legality. We were simply functioning in our office, and which we are enjoined in the law always to do and thus to protect the interests of the church. We surrendered nothing and in no sense did we sanction the proceedings. As far as we were able we opposed each objectionable feature of the doctrine on church government and refused to vote either for or against, believing that the council had no jurisdiction.

Statement of Facts

Members of the council know:

That from the very opening of the advisory council President Smith precipitated an attack on the Presiding Bishopric. He charged the Bishop with ignoring and seeking to supersede the Presidency. He reflected on the loyalty, ability, and administration of the Presiding Bishop. He intimated that the time had come to determine who was the head of the church; that there could not be two heads and he had called this body of men together as a representative cross section of the priesthood to determine this issue.

That President Smith stated in substance: "I am willing to abide by the decision of this council and, if it is against me, I hope I will have the manhood to get out of the way." Also, "I am willing to abide by the decision of this council, and if I am not, I know what I can do, and I think every other member of this council should feel the same way."

That President Smith, immediately on the approval of the document on church government, said in substance:

"Brother McGuire, I am going to say something to you and I will carefully weigh my words. Before this council closes, I want you to tell this body of men whether you are going to abide by the decision of this group of men. If you are not, I want to know it so I can take some official action."

This statement has not been denied. The President has passed it up by stating, "It is difficult to recall the exact words." He will recall that Bishop McGuire made a demand for the transcript of the record, and failing, asked that a stenographer be allowed to be present, which was denied. The point of divergence is on these words, "I may take some official action." But the President concedes the verity of this when he volunteers, "I had in mind several official actions."

The Bishop's Resignation Sought

No one has contended that at the time that the President made this demand on Bishop McGuire, he then or thereafter during the session of the council intended to ask for his resignation. The junior member of the Bishopric had forestalled this by a clear-cut statement. But President Smith does not say that if the Bishop had offered his resignation or, if the council had used its influence to impel a resignation, that this would have been displeasing to him.

This demand on Bishop McGuire was ominous and significant. By no sort of reasoning can its import be modified. This demand was made on the Bishop. Every man in the council ought to have known the full significance of the language used. President Smith makes attack on work of General Bishopric; states that conditions cannot continue; submits his position on supreme directional control intended to apply to the relation of Presidency and Bishopric; secures indorsement by majority vote of council; then makes demand on the Bishop that he acquiesce. It was a well-thought-out plan to bring the Bishop into line.

President Smith was determined to have the advisory council decide this question of church government, involving, as it does, a declaration that "government is by divine authority through priesthood . . . among the people"; "supreme directional control resting in the Presidency"; "effective administration . . . maintained only by effective discipline." He sought to have the council members agree to be bound by the council decision. It was his purpose to put supreme directional control into immediate operation providing the council had agreed thereto.

Why Introduce the Document?

Any other explanation will make the introduction of the document a farce. Why present at this inopportune time if it was to be immediately pigeon-holed until the General Conference? In what way would this document or its passage affect the tithing receipts if it was not published and no one was bound by it? No one knowing the historical facts can possibly hold that this document was introduced for discussion only. The President pledged himself to be governed by the council action. He asked all members of the council to do likewise. Is it not fair to conclude that it was his intention to proceed under the terms of the document? As evidence that it was so intended we quote from the communication published by majority members: "The chief executives of the church, the First Presidency, should not be discredited in seeking to exercise functions in accordance with the above principles."

The statement that "The council was not called to give direction, neither did it undertake to do so, nor was it directed to do so at any time" does not meet the issue. The council was called upon to declare itself on supreme directional control. The action of the council did attempt to validate the right of President Smith to give directions to others. The action of the council if not controverted would have removed administrative direction of the General Conference and lodged final direction in all church activities in the Presidency. President Smith so affirms in the following statement: "General Conference being legislative, should not presume to direct any man or official." He knew full well the import of the council action.

We do not charge that council sought to "supercede General Conference or pass any law binding upon the church without General Conference sanction." We do affirm that it was intended to have the council agree to the document on church government. President Smith knows, and every member of the council knows, and every individual member of the church who considers the situation must know, that, if the Presiding Bishopric and all the members of the Quorum of Twelve present had agreed to abide the decision of the advisory council, it would have immediately put into operation the doctrine of supreme directional control, so far as these individuals were concerned, and this without any conference action. This was exactly what was sought.

Who Raised the Question?

It is stated that at the first session of the advisory council "it developed that among the things contributing to the financial embarrassment was the difference of opinion between the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric as to the relation of these officers one to the other." But, pray, who raised this question of differences? Who forced consideration? Who was it that, from the very beginning of the council, insisted that these differences be given first and primary consideration? Was it the Bishop? Well, hardly. Every member of the council knows that the Bishop sought, in every legitimate way, to have the discussion follow the lines suggested in the call for council, together with his recommendations which comprehended retrenchment, means and methods of increasing receipts as well as the modification of department budgets. The discussion did not "drift." It was definitely directed. "Unanimity of purpose and feeling" cannot be developed by coercion or duress.

The insistence of President Smith that the council decide the question of official prerogative, forced consideration. It is not correct that "the council by vote asked the President of the church to formulate in a documentary statement his opinion covering the entire matter of government of the church." The council did ask both Presidency and Bishopric for a definite program and recommendation calculated to meet the financial situation. Both responded. A committee was appointed to compare documents and report. Acting upon a suggestion of one brother on the floor, the President later brought in this document on church government.

My brethren state that it is "our understanding" that the "article on church government would be submitted to the next General Conference for consideration." What was to be the status in the interim? The majority members have affirmed that the President has the right to proceed at once under the interpretation of the law as found in this document. The majority members of the council concurred with the Presidency. If the minority members had not brought this matter to the attention of the whole church we would now be operating under its provision without regard to any conference action. If the matter was to be held in abeyance until the General Conference would speak, why did the majority sign the communication affirming the right of the Presidency to immediately proceed? If there was no intention to put supreme directional control and effective discipline into immediate operation, why raise the issue until General Conference?

Status of the Document

We are forced to the conclusion that all those voting for the document on church government believe that the President has supreme directional control without General Conference action. The President so believes. To claim that General Conference must speak is to admit that the organic law makes no such provision and, if this right already inures in the office, why submit to General Conference? If this right inures, why has not the Presidency been exercising it all the while? If the Presidency possessed it hitherto, at what time was it lost, and if it has not been lost, why all this hubbub? The statement that the Presidency was to do this "in harmony with the law as laid down in the standard books of the church" contradicts the claim that it was the intention to await General Conference action and is at the same time gratuitous, for this is the whole point of controversy.

The brethren state: "We understand that the position of President of the church is as follows." Has it come to the point that when the President desires to say certain things to the church, he delegates others to represent him? I refuse to accept the claims of these brethren to act as counsel without credentials. President Smith is "neither deaf nor dumb." He can speak for himself. Any attempt on the part of others to assume the role of shock troops will be ineffective. President Smith has not indicated to the Lord nor to the church that he needs an Aaron to speak for him.

General Conference Supreme

It is conceded that General Conference is the highest legislative body in the church, but it is urged that "General Conference is not executive." May we inquire: If General Conference enacts a measure which the Presidency considers unconstitutional, has the Presidency the right to refuse to execute? The statement of President Smith in amplification of the doctrine of supreme directional control very carefully reserves to the Presidency the right to determine the constitutionality of General Conference actions. Under such an interpretation the Presidency would possess the power now held by the United States Supreme Court, to declare any legislative act by the body unconstitutional. This we deny.

It is affirmed that President Smith stated, "I do not claim to dispense the funds of the church. My contention is not that in this matter I am supreme. It is that the Bishop is not supreme." Reference to the record shows this position not well taken. We make the following excerpts:

Question by Bishop: "Will your directional control be interpreted to grant to the Presidency the right to contract debts without the consultation and approval of Presiding Bishopric?"

Answer by President Smith: "'Right to contract debts by Presidency.' Should occasion demand, yes. Under ordinary conditions the usual action would run."

President Smith does claim the right to dispense the funds of the church "should occasion demand" without any consultation with the Bishop. He does not grant this right to any other. Would this not make him supreme? The statement, "My contention is not that in this matter I am supreme, it is that the Bishop is not supreme," is distinctly unfortunate, for the entire contention is that the President is supreme in all departments.

President Smith Belligerent

Such reasoning by our brethren makes President Smith look ridiculous. They say that President Smith does not claim supreme directional control in spending money, but he does claim supreme directional control over all the activities of the church. The one thing in which he now emphasizes his supremacy is in temporalities.

The statement that President Smith expressed the hope that "the spirit exercising the man might come to exercise the official" when speaking of Bishop McGuire has little weight in the light of his attitude. President Smith from the very beginning of the council was belligerent. He made repeated attacks on the work of the Bishopric. The entire effort of President Smith and the active members of the council on his side was to whip the Bishop into submission. Bishop McGuire, on the other hand, never once lost himself nor departed from that calm, quiet attitude for which he is noted and known throughout the church. He comported himself with fortitude and becoming dignity to such an extent that some mistook calm and poise for weakness and submission. And while it is conceded that "the President deplored the decision reached by the Bishop" he could not do other than commend "the spirit in which the Bishop spoke." The Bishop's reply circumvented the purpose of President Smith to put supreme directional control into operation now.

It is conceded the council decided to pass up the question of retrenchment. The council gave no attention to the request for reducing departmental budgets or increasing receipts. How anyone expected by introducing a document defining priesthood duties, before a council which did not have jurisdiction and wherein there was basic difference of opinion, and thereby secure "unanimity of purpose and feeling," and that "revenue would be increased" remains a mystery. And some of our brethren who expected thus to solve our financial problems, immediately the document and open letter were in print prophesied that within a few months we would see a complete collapse of our finances! They were wrong in both instances.

Does not the entire setting of the advisory council suggest that it was proposed to have the council affirm supreme directional control and then to bring pressure to bear upon the Bishop either to accept the council action, eliminate himself, or be eliminated? At no time have we suggested that the council "issued any order even intimating the driving anyone from office." It was not necessary.

Publication of Documents

Insinuation was made that some trust was violated in the publication of documents coming before the advisory council. President Smith was the one who gave publicity to several of the most important documents at a priesthood meeting in Independence, Missouri. A committee was appointed to supervise publication of council proceedings. If, as stated, it was the committee decision "not to refer in any way to the articles on church government passed by the council," why did President Smith give publicity thereto? And was he justified when he himself contended that they should not be made public?

There was no vote in council prohibiting publication of documents. The Bishop called attention to Conference Resolutions which discouraged the publication of disbursements to worthy poor. This has not been violated so far as we know. I felt perfectly justified to supply some of the brethren with copies of the document and letters which had been before the council. Immediately after these had been mailed, President Smith wrote me as follows:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 18, 1924.

ELDER T. W. WILLIAMS,
317 West Avenue 38,
Los Angeles, California.

Dear Brother: On yesterday I learned that some documents which were placed in the hands of individual members of the recent Joint Council for information purposes and for the basis of discussion have been copied and circulated by individuals in the Bishop's office. On asking the Bishop and Vernon Reese about this to-day, it was admitted, and Brother Reese stated it was by your authorization.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

I should be pleased to know by what right you assumed to direct in matters of this kind, especially when it was understood that these documents should not even be loaned for reading outside, to say nothing about being distributed; and furthermore, I desire to know why this breach of ordinary courtesy and what you expect to gain by it.

Very sincerely yours,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.
By F. M. SMITH.

To which I made the following reply:

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, June 23, 1924.

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH,

Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: Replying to your communication of June 18 will state: I assume full responsibility for furnishing to fellow ministers copy of some of the documents which were presented, discussed, and acted upon at the late advisory council.

I am not guilty of any "breach of ordinary courtesy." These papers ceased to be the property of any one man after they came before the council. They were not the property of the council either for they dealt with matters which concerned the entire church. The ministry and membership have a perfect right to them. I, for one, intend to do all that I can to enable the church as a whole to know their content and character. For all too long the people generally have been kept in ignorance of what is really going on in some quarters of the church. It is time that the facts be made known.

I have the utmost contempt for anything which savors of star chamber methods. I am opposed to doing things under cover. I believe in acting out in the open where all men can see and know. The time has come when we should run up the blinds and let the sunlight in. We must open the doors and drag the sick things into the open air. We need to clean house. Again, I am not ashamed for the whole world to know what goes out over my signature.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

903 North Hyperion Avenue.

The open letter was entirely independent of the council action. Not until President Smith on June 1 publicly stated that "the fight is on" and "it will undoubtedly be a fight to the finish" was it decided to publish the open letter. To make the statement that the "entire matter had been crowded by neither the council nor the committee" is not all the truth. It is clear that attempt was made to commit this body of men to a program without the church at large knowing what was being done, else why this attempt at secrecy? If the thing was right, why seek to cover up? Why blame men for telling the truth? God works in the open. He is not afraid for all the world to know what he is doing all the time. Illegal councils held behind closed doors, and seeking in an irregular manner to change church procedure, will never bring unity to the church, nor will it solve our problems.

The Fly in the Ointment

The statements that "the council adjourned under an excellent spirit" and that "during the closing sessions a fine spirit grew" is only half true. It is quite apparent that those who had put over this document on church government were jubilant and confident.

"The fly in the ointment" was the refusal of Bishop McGuire to bend to the decree of the council. Some of us had tried to find some basis of agreement and this in a spirit of good will. But we talked against the document. We recognized that an attempt was being made to change the entire church polity and to place in the discard the order which had been instituted by the Almighty and indorsed by his people: The attempt to do this in an irregular manner between conferences, and by the action of a picked council, the complexion of which was never in doubt, compelled our resistance.

It is without warrant to conclude that because the minority manifested good will and fellowship they were in agreement with the action of the council. This was never intimated nor conceded. Majority members evidently thought the council action would solve our problems and that supreme directional control is a panacea. Results show how shortsighted this view is.

The responsibility for the entire complex aftermath must rest with the majority members of the advisory council, including President Smith. If President Smith had been content to refer the financial problem to the proper council we might have accomplished something worth while and then gone before the church with a financial program which would have met with immediate response and cooperation on the part of the people. A wise "general executive" will not project a radical departure from well-defined principles, thereby producing division and unrest among the board of directors and stockholders, at a time when business is bad and there exists an acute financial situation.

We may rightly ask: Did the Presidency possess supreme directional control before the convening of the council? If so, then the action of the council means nothing. If not, this council could not confer this power. If the Presidency already possessed this power, why precipitate this discussion and controversy? Nowhere in the long and eventful career and ministry of the late Joseph Smith can we find one word or act which even suggests that he sought to be supreme in any department of church work. Was he so shortsighted, so lacking in vision, that he could preside over the church for fifty years and not sense his responsibility? It is unthinkable.

What Answer Will President Smith Make?

One must go elsewhere than to the organic law of the church or General Conference enactments to find justification for the doctrine of church government among the people and supreme directional control in the hands of the Presidency. A number of years ago, President Frederick M. Smith pointed out the danger in such procedure and practice in the following well-chosen words, in an article published in the Salt Lake Tribune July 28, 1905, and addressed to the people of Utah. He said:

Contrary to the revelations they [the chief men of the Utah Church] disobey the laws; they have broken their covenant with the country; they engage in temporal affairs in behalf of themselves and the church; they take tithes for purposes not appointed; the bishop is not the custodian of the tithes; they make no accounting to the church; the law of common consent has been nullified; and the coordinate jurisdiction of the leading quorums has been distorted until one officer stands alone in his supreme power.

If the leaders will not repent, shall the people remain with them in apostasy?

In the light of what is now taking place in our church, and the proposed program contemplated in the document on church government, I wonder what would be the reply of President Smith if the leaders of the Utah Church should come back with the following statement:

President Smith, we charge that you and other leading men of the Reorganized Church "engage in temporal affairs in behalf of themselves." We affirm that you and other leading men of the Reorganization do not make accounting of moneys received by you to the church. We charge that the law of common consent has been invaded under your direction and that your definition of priesthood and the right of the Presidency is exactly in keeping with our position; and under your program "the Bishop is not the custodian of the tithes"; and "the coordinate jurisdiction of the leading quorums is distorted until one officer stands alone in his supreme power." If our leading men are in apostasy, what about yourselves?

If the open letter came to these brethren with a very great shock, it shows that they have much to learn as to church polity and the attitude of men who have given a lifetime of ministry to preserve the divine order. We have, in this way, removed the matter from behind closed doors into the open. General Conference must settle this question. It would be well-nigh impossible to assemble a group of the Melchisedec priesthood to pass upon the matter, and why call the priesthood together and allow them to decide whether they are the government of the church? The Standing High Council has no jurisdiction whatever in a matter of this kind.

A Summary of Facts

President Smith called a council of his own determination. The fact that the Standing High Council was behind him does not alter things. He called the council. The record of each member of the advisory council was before President Smith as an open book. He could, with commensurate certainty, anticipate the action of this body. He projects his program. He secures a majority vote of the council. He cautions secrecy. He then tries to whip the Bishop into line. He assails the integrity of those who have warned the church of what is taking place. If such

NEWS AND LETTERS

Independence Sanitarium Among the Approved Hospitals of United States and Canada

(This report was released through the press October 20, 1924, by the American College of Surgeons.)

The annual official announcement of approved hospitals in the United States and Canada was made this morning at the Hospital Conference of the Clinical Congress of the American College of Surgeons, New York, by Franklin H. Martin, M. D., director general.

The official list of hospitals meeting the minimum requirements of the American College of Surgeons presents the results of the seventh survey of hospitals of one hundred beds and over, the third survey of hospitals of fifty to one hundred beds, and the preliminary survey of hospitals of thirty-five to fifty beds, making a total of 2,366 hospitals surveyed, of which 1,416 or 59 per cent meet the requirements.

The director general in presenting the report said in part; "The program of the American College of Surgeons is definite; its requirements are reasonable; its methods of presentation are acceptable. The personal visits and the impartial manner in making the report appeals to the hospital as an unprejudiced effort to arrive at facts. The movement is now its own propagandist, for it has proven its worth. The requirements are universally acceptable, for they aim at focusing the hospitals' attention directly on the care of the patient. This surely means much to the 12,000,000 patients passing procedure is in keeping with the record of the Reorganization then I do not read aright. I cannot bring myself to believe that the ministry and membership of this church will legalize such procedure.

This controversy transcends personality. The issues are clearly drawn. They are fundamental and organic. We are at the parting of the ways. We must either decide to continue on in the old tried and true way which has proved safe and sound during our past history, or, we can renounce the past, turn down our general law and practice, discard both compass and chart, and under the assumption that we have a Leader other than Christ and whose direction and counsel should be followed "as though Deity himself were speaking," place the entire destiny of the church in the hands of one man, confident in the thought that "the prophet can do no wrong," that "a command is a command," and "where he leads I will follow."

This should not be a fight against men, but a discussion on principle and procedure. It should not be our purpose to eliminate anyone.

May God interpose his power and Spirit to show us the true way, and may each and all have the courage to renounce that which may be found to be out of keeping with the law of God.

through the hospitals of the United States and Canada annually.

This report is based on the findings of a detailed survey made through personal investigation, carried on by representatives from the college trained and qualified to do the work. A corps of such representatives cover the United States and Canada annually and "find the facts" about each of these hospitals as to their organization, supervision, facilities, procedures, and particularly as to how they control and check up the work of the institution.

"This movement," said Doctor M. T. MacEachern, director of hospital activities, American College of Surgeons, "aims directly at the elimination of deficiencies in hospital services to the patient and the establishing of closer supervision and check-up on the work of the institution. It has been rapid in its acceptance and accomplishment, because of the whole-hearted cooperation of the hospital people and public generally, of the United States and Canada."

The total number of hospitals surveyed in Missouri was 54, of which 36, or 66.7 per cent met the requirements. The list of approved hospitals follows.

The asterisk indicates that certain hospitals have accepted the requirements which result in the best scientific care of the patient, but are not, for lack of time or other acceptable reasons, carrying them out to the fullest extent.

Successful Meeting at Indian Mission

SAULT SAINTE MARIE, MICHIGAN, October 16.—The series of meetings held at the Indian mission near the Michigan Soo by Elder R. D. Davis, assisted by Elders Ernest N. Burt and Harvey Van Dusen, is the latest news. Elder Hector McKinnon of East Jordan and Elder S. M. Boomer of Wells were also present, besides three carloads of Saints from Gladstone and Wells. They motored all night to reach the mission for the first meeting. One car got on the wrong road enough times to make about seventy miles out of the way, and nine punctures delayed them somewhat. Then, when they were only seven miles from the mission, the left hind wheel dropped off, but no one was hurt. Through it all, Brother Boomer, who rode in that car, was cheerful; also his daughter and Sister Bina Davis. Brother Boomer is an example of patience and cheerfulness.

About six months ago Brother Boomer fell under a street car, and one of the wheels ran over his left foot, with the result that his foot had to be amputated above the ankle. Through it all he is the same cheerful person.

The meetings were of a high spiritual order, and every sermon was seasoned with the Holy Spirit. Everyone heartily took part in the games at a marshmallow roast Saturday evening, in which Elder McKinnon in his masterly way took the lead.

Many of the Canadian Soo Saints took part in the Sunday meetings. Our joy was at its height when six candidates were led out in the water of Saint Mary's for baptism. The candidates were Soo people, five of whom were young people, one a married woman, the wife of our deacon, Wesley Bradey. Elder Van Dusen conducted the baptisms. This means six more real Saints in the Lock City Branch. Two of the young people baptized are Brother James and Sister Marion Bottrell, who have not missed a Sunday school meeting in five years when they could possibly attend.

Elder E. N. Burt, district missionary, is now conducting a series of meetings here in the Soo. Good crowds attend every night, and much interest is manifested. We are nearing the end of a summer which has been well seasoned with good times in church work, and all are quite enthused over the promising outlook. We are trying to keep step with the church in its advanced movement.

Our pastor, Brother Van Dusen, is a radio fan and is trying to encourage the Saints to contribute to the success of this department of church work.

Minot, North Dakota

October 20.—For some time past we have not seen anything relating to the church work in this State. We have recently been appointed to do missionary work in the State, and are living at our old home in Minot. I would be glad to hear from those who desire to hold series of meetings during the winter. My address is 128 Tenth Avenue Northwest.

We have held a few meetings at Minot on Sundays, and now that the busy farming season is drawing to a close, we hope to see renewed interest in all departments. The work has suffered here in many ways, but those who have been struggling for the past seven years under great disadvantage are entitled to commendation. There are now younger and better qualified men, and we rejoice in the splendid work being done in the way of preparation at Graceland College.

We desire to make new openings where possible, but Brother Leitch, 1350 First Avenue South, Fargo, should be consulted in branch matters.

The death of Brother W. D. Thompson, one of the charter members of the first branch organized in the State, occurred in the Independence Sanitarium October 8. Brother Thompson was a firm and strong-willed man, standing fearlessly in defense of what he believed to be right, careful and painstaking in business matters. He was a staunch Methodist in his youth, but upon hearing the restored gospel from the lips of the early missionaries in the neighborhood of Clifford—William Sparling, Swen Swenson, and I. N. Roberts—he at once espoused the cause with his characteristic vigor and determination and remained true to the cause to the end. May the Lord bless and comfort the ones left behind.

May we all labor in the spirit of peace and good will. So shall our efforts be blessed of the Lord and much good be done.

WILLIAM SPARLING.

San Antonio, Texas

October 13.—The San Antonio Saints were favored this week by a visit from Brother D. S. Palmer who preached Friday evening for us and twice on Sunday. There was a large crowd at the Sunday evening service, the best we have had in some time. The sermons were uplifting and inspiring, causing us to feel the importance of living consistent lives. Before coming here Brother Palmer had just closed a series of meetings at Pearsall, where he was fortunate in obtaining the Christian church for services. They were of the Progressive wing and had a nice piano in their church, which was at the disposal of the Saints. When the meetings closed the minister kindly asked Brother Palmer to come again and preach for them. The attendance was good, and one very refined and well-to-do Methodist lady seemed much interested.

We are very fortunate in having in our midst Brother and Sister R. E. Miller, who have recently located here. Brother Miller is an elder and will be a great help in the branch. He is called on quite frequently by the pastor to preach for us, and his efforts are greatly appreciated. His wife is a good singer, thus making a great asset to our choir.

Brother W. H. Mannering, assisted by Mrs. Evva Richardson, Miss Mary Barber, and Gifford Edwards, is broadcasting a program over the W C A R radio to-night. We hope all who have radio sets will hear them.

On September 27 the Saints here were saddened by the death of Brother Joseph Smith's youngest boy, Elbert, aged nineteen months. The little fellow was playing in the yard, and as a cool breeze blew up, his mother went out to bring him in. She found him with a rattlesnake in his lap. He had been playing with it, and it had bitten him five times. The mother only found two places, on his hand, and corded his arm. She failed to find three other places farther up on the arm. The doctor worked with him all night, and they had him administered to, but he only lived thirty-six hours. Funeral services were held in the Methodist church at the Oak Island Cemetery. Sermon was by Brother T. J. Jett, junior, assisted by W. H. Mannering. The family have the sympathy of all the Saints here in their bereavement.

Several families of Saints have left San Antonio: Sister Lizzie Graham, who has moved to Corpus, Texas; and Sister Winnie Cowley and Brother and Sister Norman Barber, who have located at Brownsville, Texas. We miss them from the branch but wish them health and prosperity in their new home.

Minneapolis, Minnesota

October 15.—The Minneapolis Branch will soon have a completed building in which to hold services. It is now being stuccoed and plastered, and arrangements are being made to install the heating plant. Thus the Saints will be able to meet together this winter in comfort and convenience.

The young people's prayer meetings every Sunday morning are very good, and the interest is steady. The young people have also been active along social lines, having had two or three parties the last month. Last Thursday night a harvest festival was held in the basement of the church, and everyone came dressed as if they were "down on the farm." The week before, the Temple Builders entertained the other young people at the home of Sister Daisy Freeman, who is unable to get out to most of the gatherings on account of her affliction, and therefore enjoyed the meeting with the young people.

The Department of Women put on a play for the benefit of the building fund last month, and in the free-will offering taken they collected over forty-five dollars.

Some special meetings have been held on Sunday evenings at Milaca, Minnesota, about seventy miles north of Minneapolis. Brother Kress was the speaker, and a lively interest was shown.

Bishop Hunt has been traveling throughout the State and will speak in Minneapolis next Sunday. President F. M. Smith is also expected to be here in the early part of November.

Saint Marys, Ohio

October 18.—We wish to speak a few words for the good work of our Religio under the guidance of Brother Virgil Telljohann. Meetings are held on Friday night, at which time half an hour is devoted to the study of the Book of Mormon, and the rest of the time is devoted to recreational work, which is in the hands of a committee of three appointed the previous Friday night. As a new committee is appointed every night this work does not get monotonous.

There are a number of talented young people, as well as older ones, here, who are taking an active part, and each evening we can see an improvement over the last.

Our last program consisted of some very good musical numbers, recitations, readings, a dialogue, and a song composed by Sister Georgianna Morris to the tune of Yankee Doodle. The song was sung by the ladies.

Fall River, Massachusetts

October 10.—Now that the vacation season is ended the attendance at services is better. No services were held the Sunday preceding Labor Day, as a number of families went to Onset for the holiday. Several will go for Columbus Day.

Bishop A. B. Phillips was the speaker all day September 28, and the Saints were glad to greet him and listen to his fine sermons. He was pastor at Fall River for two years about ten years ago. Other speakers have been Pastor James W. Heap, Elder John Rogerson, and Deacon Alma M. Coombs.

The sacramental service in October was largely attended. The pastor especially enjoyed the wonderful spirit of the meeting. The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennis was blessed at this time by Brother Rogerson. The mother was formerly Sister Ruth Brindley. The child was given the name of Milton Wilbur.

The Department of Women is busy again preparing for their big Christmas sale. At a recent business meeting the Saints voted to reshingle the church, and doubtless the women will donate generously for this purpose. They have filled the coal bin of the church.

The Temple Builders are meeting again and studying cooking. Sister Margaret Henderson is the new president. A Halloween party is planned, to which the boys are invited.

The Saints here raised a little over their quota for the radio fund.

Brother Moses Sheehy met with a painful accident to his hand while at his work. Blood poisoning set in, and the Saints were fearful of the results, but it has healed nicely. He assisted at the September sacramental service with his arm in a sling, but he did what he could. He and the pastor continue to take the sacrament to the sick.

Mapleton, Kansas

October 20.—Our little branch is progressing nicely. District conference convened October 3, 4, and 5, and a very enjoyable and profitable time was had as everything went off so harmoniously.

The young people of the district rendered a very nice program on Friday evening, October 3. There seems to be a greater interest manifested among them than ever before, and they seem to see the need of studying the Book of Mormon. They met October 7 and organized a Religio with Wayne Jennings as president; Leotis Quick, vice president; and Lester Graham, secretary. We hope and pray it will be a success this time, but owing to the scattered condition of the Saints and many living on farms it has been very discouraging.

We expect to begin a series of meetings November 2 and are praying that Brother Gillen or Brother Gleazer or some one will be sent to assist Brother Lee Quick in the effort. The Methodists have been holding meetings the past two weeks, and a number have been led to give heed to their persuasions. It seems that those who will read for themselves cannot help but see that they come far from preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. May the honest ones be led to see the true gospel of Jesus Christ!

Brother Leotis Quick was ordained to the office of priest recently by Elders John Graham and J. E. Hughes.

College Day November 9.

Columbus Day Picnic at The Pines

HAVERHILL, MASSACHUSETTS, October 17.—Columbus Day the Haverhill Sunday school held a picnic at The Pines. This is an ideal place about three miles from the city on the Merrimac River, made famous by John Greenleaf Whittier.

Races and various kinds of sports were engaged in by all and were much enjoyed. There were bag races, running races, a stair-climbing contest, a baseball and volley ball, also trying to hit a bag of pop corn while blindfolded.

A basket lunch was enjoyed at noon under the pine trees. The committee on arrangements consisted of the superintendent, Andrew Wengel, Mrs. Fillmore Steele, Mrs. B. Otis Randall, and Mrs. Andrew Wengel.

Good Meetings in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, October 13.—Sunday evening services were started again on October 6 with an illustrated lantern service on the life of Christ. The pictures were fine and were much appreciated. The lecture was given by Guy P. Levitt of Ogden, Elder R. E. Davey operating the lantern.

The same Sunday afternoon two of our Sunday school scholars were baptized, which is encouraging.

October 12 we had another illustrated lecture featuring Mesa Verde, showing the ruins of the caves of the cliff dwellers. Brother Davey ably explained the pictures in their relation to the Book of Mormon.

We pray that the work of the Lord may prosper in this and other places.

Lucasville, Ohio

October 15.—The Saints here have become indifferent of late and only a few come to prayer meeting on Wednesday night.

Our branch priest, Brother Ervan Pyles, is home from Saint Louis where he has been working in the steel mill.

The church at this place has voted out the plays of the Department of Recreation and Expression, as we thought them a nuisance and a damage to God's work. God's house is a house of peace, not confusion. The Religio study work will be carried on every Friday night, and we hope to have good success in the work.

Sister Ida Crabtree, the daughter of Luther Crabtree, who had typhoid fever, is well again.

We pray that God will bless us by calling more laborers in this part of his vineyard, and we feel sure he will, as there are young men here who are live wires.

New Philadelphia Branch

We are pleased to say that Elder William Patterson, of Australia, has been conducting a series of sermons at our branch for a few weeks, and he has certainly done a lot of good. Brother Patterson feels that he has not accomplished very much, but he will never realize the good he has done among the Saints. We had a fairly good attendance during the meetings and had some outsiders that enjoyed his sermons very much. The chart that he uses makes a double impression, and I believe much good will result from his efforts.

At the present time Brother Patterson is conducting a series of lectures at the Uhrichville Branch, where we have a few Saints. There are some people investigating the work, and Brother Patterson remarked that last Saturday a very fine young Methodist minister visited him and was very anxious to find out more about the work. They spent a pleasant afternoon. Brother Patterson was much interested in this young minister, and we hope the time will come that he may occupy in this church, as his service will be of greater importance. We often wonder how it is possible for anyone not to accept this latter-day work when he sees that the work fulfills all prophecies.

The officers are all working very nicely in this branch, and no doubt there will be others added in the very near future. The waters were troubled a few weeks ago when a young boy was baptized into the kingdom. No doubt he will make a good Latter Day Saint.

We hope we will have more time and it will not be so long until we write the next few lines for your good paper. We are doing all we can to spread the angel's message and hope the time will come when we can warn all of our neighbors.

Good Record of Baptisms

CENTRALIA, WASHINGTON, October 18.—Our greatest activity here during the summer months rested in the ministry. The sermons delivered have been of quite a spiritual nature, helpful, and well directed to the Saints.

Baptisms have been in evidence also. Twelve people were baptized before the August reunion, and eight followed shortly afterward. Ten of these were children. Those responsible for both the sermons and performing the baptismal rites are Elders O. L. Oppelt, W. A. Boren, S. P. Cox, Carl Crum, and A. C. Martin. This number of baptisms is a record breaker for our church, being the greatest number for any one year since the organization of the branch, which was February 5, 1911.

A greater number of Saints attended the district reunion than at any time before, except when it was held at our home town. Several interested nonmembers were also among our delegation, one, Brother Elmer Brown, being baptized soon after returning home. The reunion seemed to be a most successful one. The sermons were full of good, wholesome truths, with inspiring stepping-stones for those striving for the "narrow way."

Many of the prayer services were very spiritual, and manifestations were given in directing the work, as well as admonitions to individuals.

Our principal instructors, Apostle Roy S. Budd, Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths, and Sister Blanche Edwards, proved themselves most worthy and were surely much appreciated for the inspiration and efficiency by which they portrayed to the large assemblies those principles and guideposts of true worth. We sincerely hope to meet all three again in the near future.

Elder Barraclough, high priest, stepped into the church one Sunday evening and delivered a pointed and interesting sermon to the Saints. Later Elder N. T. Chapman of Southern California occupied the morning in a pleasant and well-directed way, which was well received by members and friends.

Our branch was especially fortunate in securing Elder A. C. Martin, of Silverton, Oregon, for a three weeks' series of missionary sermons directly after reunion.

The Department of Women has discontinued the public dinners at the Community House. They served one dinner last month in the church basement and have another planned for October 23.

The Sunday school seems to be holding its own quite well. The Religio entertainment committee gave a program and social three weeks ago and have something started for Halloween.

The February conference is dated for Centralia, which means some preparation on our part.

We hope we have omitted none who have labored here, as we appreciate all efforts in our vicinity and do heartily wish all Godspeed in the Master's service.

Elders' Quorums of Owen Sound and Toronto Districts Meet

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, October 21.—Sunday, October 12, the fifth meeting of group two of the Owen Sound and Toronto districts' elders' quorums gathered at Owen Sound, the meeting being in charge of J. A. Morrison, president of the group.

The topic for discussion was, "The priest and his duties." This was efficiently looked after by Elder Benson Belrose. The following is an outline of his discourse:

The origin of the office, its importance, and how it functioned in the law of Moses. Duties and occupation in the latter-day church as outlined in Doctrine and Covenants 17. The following questions were presented for discussion: If the priest's special duty is to visit the home of each member, should he be able to advise in the following problems: health, literature, amusement, companionship, personal appearance and conduct, finance, etc? Considerable discussion ensued, and we believe a great deal of food for thought was brought out.

At the conclusion of the discussion, the election of officers for the coming year took place, which resulted as follows: Sidney Smith, of Port Elgin, Ontario, president; R. J. Wilcox, of Owen Sound, Ontario, secretary.

The attendance was not as large as was anticipated, but it is hoped that the interest of those who have been called into the priesthood will increase.

Our association with Sister Blanche Edwards is being looked forward to with great interest, as we expect to have her with us for our institute. We are sure a profitable time will be enjoyed.

Elder J. L. Mortimore, who for many years labored in the mission fields of Canada but is now resident in Owen Sound, is in very poor health, and at this time he is very feeble. Earnest prayers are requested for him.

Joppa, Illinois

October 26.—The branch here is getting along very nicely considering the size of the families who are trying to keep the Lord's work moving. There are only eight families here, but we are planning to build a church if the Lord wills. If any of the Saints wish to help with a dollar or more the money could be sent to Myrtle A. Ferguson, Box 55, Joppa, Illinois, and it would be greatly appreciated. We are hardly able to build a church without assistance.

We have a membership of fifty, but only seven families attend regularly, so this appeal is to members of the branch as well as to Saints generally.

We believe much good can be done here, and we ask an interest in your prayers for the blessing of God that we may succeed.

MYRTLE A. FERGUSON.

Santa Ana, California

We are proud of our little branch's contribution to the radio fund. The branch raised $10 by collection and individual offering; the Sunday school voted $10, and the Religio added another $10, making a total of $30. We are very glad to help, even though we shall not be within range of the new broadcasting station.

On September 28 we renewed our Sunday evening meetings with special services. Brother W. A. Teagarden, district Religio superintendent, came from Lomita and gave the Religio a fine stereopticon lecture on the Nauvoo Temple, which we are sure was enjoyed and appreciated by all. Sister Alta Carter could not continue as Religio superintendent so Brother David Carmichael was elected to succeed her, with Sister Marguerite Parks as assistant.

Our smiling and cordial Brother Chapman preached the evening sermon. He taught us the value of servants with a single talent. Even the garbage man and street sweeper are to be appreciated. Brother Chapman is always welcomed by the Santa Ana Saints.

Our loved and honored Brother G. T. Griffiths gave us one of his spiritual sermons on the evening of October 2. Brother Chapman is taking him on the rounds of the district.

On October 10 Brother David Carmichael proved the wisdom of the Religio's choice of superintendent by giving a steak bake at Orange County Park. Of course others helped. Thirty-six attended, and after the bake we all took part in the games of schooldays, such as "pull away," "dare base," "drop the handkerchief," etc. It does us all good to be just children occasionally. Brother Carmichael continues to take hold of the Religio work in an energetic and confidence-building way that is very encouraging. Eighteen attended the last session; and yet some one had said the Religio was dead.

LEONARD S. RHODES.

Wonderful Vision Leads to Conversion

BOISE, IDAHO, October 21.—The Boise Branch has changed its place of meeting from the G. A. R. Hall to the K. of P. Hall at 204½ North Seventh Street. The new place of meeting has better facilities for church services, is much neater, and has double the seating capacity of the old meeting place.

Four more who have been seeking the truth have been baptized recently. One dear sister, seventy-five years of age, was a member of the Methodist Church. Another young sister came from the Episcopal Church, one from the Christian Church, and her husband who was not a member of any church. This young brother asked the Lord one night for light upon a certain subject, and in answer to his prayer he received a wonderful vision of the millennium which finally led to the conversion of his companion and himself. He was made to understand that he was to have a part in helping to bring about a Utopian condition which we understand to be Zion in its perfection, and that there was a church in the east that taught the things which he saw in the vision. He had never heard of the millennium or of Zion until he related his vision to a member of this branch, who explained the meaning of it to him.

Our branch raised its quota of $25 for the radio fund and has started a fund for the purpose of installing a receiving set for the use of the branch in listening to the services broadcast from the new station at Independence.

College Day November 9.

New Church Home Purchased

DULUTH, MINNESOTA, October 21.—Duluth Branch has purchased a chapel at the corner of Sixtieth Avenue West and Bristol Street, which will be their home after the first of November. Sunday services are as follows: Young people's prayer service at nine; Sunday school at a quarter of ten; preaching at eleven except sacrament Sunday; and preaching at eight. Sacramental service is held at eleven o'clock the first Sunday of each month. Religio is held at half past six.

We would like to have the names of Saints and relatives living either in Duluth or adjoining cities in order that we may help them to a church or home and in that way build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness here in this part of his vineyard. Saints traveling this way are always welcome to meet with this branch. Communications should be addressed to W. C. Stanty, 403 Seventy-seventh Avenue West, or if in the city call Calumet 1427-W.

Nine Baptized at Special Meetings

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA, October 26.—October 19 Brother William Bath, of Independence, Missouri, closed a series of meetings which had lasted eighteen nights. The meetings were held in the church in this city.

Brother Bath was greatly blessed in presenting the message and held the attention of the audience. Nine were added by baptism.

Some may be interested to know that the question concerning the use of the name of the church in connection with the eating house conducted by the Saints at the fair was settled at a special business meeting of the branch September 17. The meeting was called by Branch President F. E. Dillon after he had received advice from Brother Fred M. Smith, of the First Presidency, to use his best judgment. The vote stood forty-four for keeping the name of the church out of business, and nineteen on the other side.

College Day November 9.

San Francisco, California

October 23.—We had a very fine sermon September 27 by Elder E. B. Hull, missionary. He manages to drop in on us occasionally and give us a good talk.

One young girl was baptized here by Elder Virgil Etzenhouser October 5. She was confirmed by George S. Lincoln and Brother Etzenhouser. At eleven o'clock we had a good sacrament, prayer, and testimony meeting, at which there was a fine gathering of Saints. Quite a number of visitors were present, including Brother L. B. Shippy and family. The time was pleasantly and profitably spent. Brother Etzenhouser was the evening speaker.

Regular business meeting was held October 8, and it was discovered that our membership is now 224, less than half of whom are giving active service. A meeting was held October 7 to discuss what could be done in a missionary way to bring our cause before the people, as all are anxious to have an extra effort made in that direction and are ready to help. We expect to see something done soon. Also a priesthood meeting was held on the 13th.

October 17 a dinner was given by the committee to help raise funds for our assembly hall, now under construction. The dinner was a success, but we have not yet learned how much was cleared.

All is going well with us, and we are active and earnest.

Stone Church

A banquet for those who have assisted in the radio work of K F I X was given Thursday night in the dining hall of the Stone Church. It is planned to make this an annual event. The hall was tastefully decorated, a large tissue chandelier in the center of the room being the key piece. Drop cords from the ceiling carried lights concealed in large roses of dainty tints, and these, with numerous candles on the tables, furnished the light.

President F. M. Smith acted as toastmaster and introduced the various speakers. Bishop James F. Keir spoke of the radio as an economical missionary, a missionary of good will. Elder Hubert Case, missionary to Oklahoma, told of his experiences in meeting people who had heard K F I X, and said that the quality of the programs broadcast are a large determining factor in the value of the publicity gained. Continuing on the same line, Apostle F. Henry Edwards emphasized the thought that the vindication of the radio is found in the worthwhileness of the material broadcast. He spoke of the future of the radio, particularly as it may apply to foreign missionary service.

Between speeches radio was the chief topic of conversation, and everyone tried to tell his neighbor why his set was the best. Also many interesting experiences were told of trying to tune in distant stations.

There were no charges for tickets to the banquet, but a collection was taken to help bear the expense incurred, and about $75 was raised in this way.

At half past nine the regular program was broadcast from the dining hall, consisting of music by the radio orchestra, assisted by a ladies' quartet and Brother Joseph Anway, reader, and Brother George Anway, tenor.

President Smith gave the closing speech in which he emphasized the necessity for consecration to the work with a continual endeavor to do better. He especially mentioned those who had contributed of their time and experience that the mechanical equipment of K F I X might be as efficient as it is. In closing he spoke of the new 1000-watt station, which will be in operation in the near future, emphasizing the enlarged opportunity and the consequently greater responsibility that will come with its erection.

The Campus building was the scene of great merriment Halloween night, where many of the Saints of Zion gathered to celebrate. People of all ages attended in costume and regular attire, and entertainment was provided for all. The adults occupied the first floor, the young people the second, and the children the third. Doughnuts, apples, and cider were served in abundance. An original ghost story by Mrs. Alice McBride was read by Miss Alice Chappelow. The decorations were elaborate and gave the best of Halloween effects. Panel posters decorated the walls, pendants dangled everywhere, witch dens and shaded nooks were provided, and all were presided over by competent directors.

A very interesting and educational course of Book of Mormon lectures is being given by Brother L. E. Hills each Sunday evening during the Religio hour. These lectures are given under the auspices of the S. R. S. Class, pupils of high school age, of which Brother D. O. Cato is the teacher. Brother Hills has a wealth of material and is an interesting speaker. Seats are reserved for visitors. The average attendance to date is one hundred and ten.

Elder C. Ed. Miller has been called to Independence from his field in Toronto to temporarily take charge of the work of Brother R. V. Hopkins. He will take up his work this week. Brother Hopkins is very slowly improving, and it will be some time yet before he can assume the responsibilities of his office again.

Kenneth I. Fligg, son of Elder William Fligg, of Independence, was elected president of the senior class of the Kansas City School of Law. He was chosen by a large majority at the annual election November 1.

Bishop Keir has gone to Centralia, Illinois, where he attended a church dedication Sunday.

Apostle J. A. Gillen is coming back to Independence after several weeks in Michigan, Canada, and Ohio.

Apostles Paul M. Hanson and J. F. Curtis are at present in England.

Saints are sad to learn of the illness of Apostle John W. Rushton in Independence. He was taken sick a little over a week ago with a high fever. He was soon up and around, but suffered a relapse. He is now improving, and it is believed he will soon be up and around again.

The regular monthly meeting of the Department of Women will be held in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church Friday, November 7, at half past two. A number of speakers and a varied program will be presented that will be of interest to all the women of Independence. At four o'clock the same afternoon the W. C. T. U. of the church will hold a business meeting.

Sacramental services were held at all the churches in Zion in the morning. Elder David J. Kennedy of Kansas City was the evening speaker at the Stone Church.

Second Church

The young people of Second Church are engaged in preparing a program for young people's rally day, November 16, when they expect to begin with the eight o'clock prayer meeting and conduct or direct every meeting of the day.

Their object is to stimulate interest and activity in the performance of church work, and they will be seconded in their efforts by those of mature years, including parents.

Attendance at communion service Sunday morning was not as large as usual. Sunday evening's service was enjoyed very much by those present, Elder Hubert Case being the speaker.

The general health of the people is improved considerably, those who have been sick being mostly convalescent.

Liberty Street

An unusually large crowd turned out Sunday night, November 2, to hear the Temple Builder program, which was very fine. These Temple Builders have only been organized eight months, and besides many other activities they have earned and paid out $100.97, nearly all of which has gone into the church treasury, and they still have quite a little sum to their credit besides working material on hand.

Sacramental service was held in the morning with an average attendance.

Enoch Hill

President Frederick M. Smith partook of the sacrament with the Saints of this locality last Sunday. They were indeed pleased to have him with them. He also occupied the pulpit at seven o'clock in the evening, and his sermon on Zion and some of its component parts was well received by an audience which taxed the capacity of the building to the utmost.

East Independence

The Halloween social Friday night was quite a success considering the weather and the fact that it was held in the open.

Brother Bath has returned to Independence and occupied Sunday night. Brother Bath is assistant pastor of this branch.

The sacramental service in the morning was well attended. The Saints have been asked to give, if possible, one day a week to help finish the new church. If all who can will do this it will not be long before this much needed building will be completed ready for services.

Englewood

There was a good attendance at the sacramental service in the morning, and there was also a fair audience out to hear Brother Lyman W. Fike preach in the evening.

The women meet every week on Wednesday at the church to prepare for a bazaar to be held sometime in the future.

Holden Stake

The twenty-eighth conference of the Holden Stake was held at Holden October 25, 26. Attendance at the opening prayer service at ten o'clock Saturday morning was the largest in the history of the stake. A splendid spirit was present at this service, and it was a season of encouragement and uplift.

Prayer service closed at twenty minutes of twelve, and by motion the stake president was chosen to preside over the conference. At the afternoon session provision was made for the ordination of Finis Beebe of Lexington to the office of priest; and C. L. House of Houstonia, president of the elders' quorum. The brethren were ordained at the afternoon service Sunday.

The providing of budgets for the departmental work for the coming year was referred to the stake bishopric and high council with power to act. By unanimous vote the stake presidency, bishopric, high council, historian, and departmental heads were sustained for another year.

Bishop A. Carmichael of Lamoni arrived Saturday morning and delivered two very excellent addresses on stewardship. President Elbert A. Smith preached a very fine sermon at eleven o'clock Sunday, which was listened to by a large audience of Saints from the various groups of the stake.

Sister Lola A. Johnson of Lexington, head of the department of music, never disappoints the conference. The music was ready and was appropriate for all the occasions.

Elder D. R. Carmichael of Atherton, recently placed in charge of the Department of Recreation and Expression, was on the job. Sister I. M. Ross, of the Department of Women, and C. F. Scarcliff, superintendent of the Sunday school, report interest and activity in their departments.

The report of the stake recorder showed thirty-eight baptisms since June 1. Operation of the Square Deal Dining Hall at the state fair added a substantial sum to the stake building and loan fund.

Bishop A. B. Phillips was the speaker Sunday night. Conference adjourned to meet at Lexington on the call of the stake presidency.

College Day November 9.

Terlton, Oklahoma

October 23.—The Saints here are still trying to let their light shine and are hoping and praying for better times. Brother Christenson passed through town three weeks ago on his way to hold a series of meetings and promised to be with us soon to hold meetings here. All are anxious for his coming, as there are several people here who are interested and have expressed themselves as anxious to hear some preaching.

One of our brothers has a nice radio which he has been using at church, but we have been disappointed since K F I X changed her wave length, as we cannot get any service. It comes in with Chicago. I hope when the new station is complete the wave length will change for the better.

All the Saints here are rejoicing to see Sister Florence Walts in her usual corner at Sunday school and hope her health will continue to improve. The Sunday school is doing nicely, but we would like to see more of our members attend regularly.

Chico, California

October 21.—A successful rally day was held October 12, with Elder G. H. Wixom in attendance. The day began with Sunday school at ten o'clock, and after spending thirty minutes in the study of the lesson a good program was given.

The morning sermon was by Brother Wixom, after which the large and appreciative crowd did justice to a basket dinner spread in the basement of the church.

Brother Wixom preached again in the evening, and services were held every evening during the week following, excepting Saturday. The series closed with two rousing spiritual sermons on the 19th.

Saints are encouraged, and a number of new friends were made, as quite an interest was manifested.

However, during the week the Saints were made sad by the death of Terry Yorks, son of Elder W. H. Yorks. The funeral was held from the church Friday afternoon, with sermon by Brother Wixom.

A Triumphant Meeting; Eighteen Baptized

EL RENO, OKLAHOMA, October 28.—Sunday evening closed our series of tent meetings that had lasted over five weeks, resulting in the baptism of eighteen besides the spiritual uplift of the Saints. There were visitors from Oklahoma City, thirty miles east, and Calumet, fifteen miles west of here.

Every Sunday at noon community dinner was served by the united efforts of the sisters. The chicken pen was invaded several times to the gratification of Brothers Case and Simmons, besides others who appreciate the kind they raise in Oklahoma.

Brother Case did about all the preaching, but Brother Simmons gave us a few of his fiery sermons, and Brother Bailey, district president, preached the last Sunday afternoon.

The closing day was especially good, and at the closing service the tent was full of quiet listeners during Brother Case's sermon. Confirmation of the three baptized followed the sermon. A good spirit prevailed during all the services, and the result will be good to the cause.

Monday night Brother Case preached at Piedmont, a town twenty miles north and east, in the neighborhood of Brothers H. K. Rowland and H. V. Piatt, prominent farmers of influence. A Methodist revival meeting had just closed the night before in the same building. The attendance was good. Brother Case had preached in that town and country fifteen years ago, and lived for a time in the town.

Now that special services have closed we begin the special work of feeding the flock, and in this work we have splendid help in our companion of many years. We also will have the cooperation of the many good Saints who have a deep interest in the work.

Among those lately baptized we already discover good material for future workers, and others are preparing for official work. In parting with one of those newly baptized, Brother A. M. Gibson, after our trip to Piedmont, he said, "I'll see you Wednesday night." That sounded good. This would be a good watchword for the Saints, "I'll see you Wednesday night."

The weather has been ideal during the services, which has been appreciated.

We are saddened to lose from our branch one of our faithful workers, Brother G. C. Lewis, teacher of the branch and superintendent of the Sunday school. He goes to Ponca City, Oklahoma, and we shall miss his genial and earnest companionship.

J. M. TERRY.

Weston, Iowa

October 27.—The Saints of Boomer Branch have recently had their church building painted, and it is now shining in a pure white coat. A little later on they are planning to have it reshingled and perhaps papered. They are planning to have a wood-chopping day soon to get wood up for use in the church this winter.

The ladies' aid is meeting regularly every two weeks to sew on a quilt for a bazaar which will be held at some future date.

Many of the Saints attended reunion at Glenwood as well as the meetings in Council Bluffs by T. W. Williams and C. F. Putnam. Different speakers have expounded the Scriptures to the Saints here, and as all men are not alike it is very interesting to listen to them and get the different interpretations. However, all seem to center on "Zion must be redeemed."

Our attendance has been cut somewhat short lately, as several young girls are away attending high school or are working in Council Bluffs. Here we have the same condition that exists in many other branches, worldly pleasures will draw some away to the joy of the hour which cannot endure.

College Day November 9.

Oakland, California

October 22.—Oakland Branch is showing much activity. At present we are undergoing the stress of organizing and making successful a new mission. Our first concern is to revive the spirits of the members who have drifted, after which the actual work of converting new members will begin. This work is directly under the supervision of Elder Virgil Etzenhouser, and we are glad to say that the move is becoming more and more promising every day.

To facilitate the work of advertising the various events, the branch has purchased a mimeograph machine. This machine was used last reunion to print a daily paper, about three hundred copies of which were distributed among the town people and campers. The paper averaged six pages every day. Needless to say, it made a very favorable impression upon the people, who could see a concrete example of the possibilities of a duplicating machine in church work. We are now arranging a stencil with which to print a program of a musical to be given for the benefit of the Christmas offering.

The Religio, in an effort to reach more people and give them the things most beneficial to them, has organized classes in radio, mathematics, English, history, home decorating, millinery, Mormon problems, and the Book of Mormon quarterly. There is also story telling from the Bible for the children by Sister Carmichael. Announcements were mimeographed and sent to church members, and the attendance jumped in one night from thirty to seventy-three. Brother Fred Hutchins, the instigator of this move, deserves much credit for his progressiveness, as the scheme seems to be a decided improvement. It give responsibility to a greater number of people and touches the lives of the Saints on more points. Also we should not forget the teachers who are giving their time and the result of years of experience in making Latter Day Saints better prepared to meet the world in its own element.

Both the branch and the mission are enjoying good attendance, and we cannot help but believe that the Lord is with us in our endeavors to press on to perfection.

Kansas City Week-Day Schools of Religion

I spent a very pleasant day one Wednesday a few weeks ago with Brother Ray Lloyd in visiting the week-day religious schools of Kansas City, Kansas, of our church. I met Brother Lloyd early Wednesday morning, and we visited four out of the five schools. We arrived at the Quindaro Branch a few minutes after nine and found there a class of eight-nine- and ten-year-olds, twelve in number, with Sister D. E. Roberts acting as their teacher and with Sister Charles Scrivener acting as the superintendent of the school. Their plan was as follows: The public schools permitted those of the third and fourth grades who wished, to be released from the public schools and go to the church school from 9 until 10.30 a. m.; those of the first and second grades from 10.45 to 11.30 a. m.; those of the fifth and sixth grades from 1.15 to 2.30 p. m.; and those in the seventh and eighth grades from 2.45 on. Sister Scrivener told me they had sixty-seven enrolled in the four periods, which was twenty-four more than they had last year. One very interesting fact was that only one third of the children were from our own families.

We next went to the Grandview School and found there Sister C. D. Jellings acting as superintendent and Sister Jesse Tucker acting as the teacher of the first and second grades. She had in her class twenty-two little boys and girls, six and seven years of age, or thereabouts. It was a wonderful sight and a wonderful opportunity. Their total enrollment, they told me, was up toward the fifty mark throughout the entire day. This school I understood holds only the three first periods. I inquired about the number of non-Latter Day Saint children and found that half of them were from families of other faiths, and indeed there were a few members of the Catholic Church. This item was of especial interest to the writer. The folks told us they had had a little difficulty the year before with reference to order and discipline and had been somewhat discouraged on account of it, but nevertheless they did not give up, and started with full courage this year. They have every reason to feel proud of their start.

We visited with Brother Ray Lloyd and Brother C. D. Jellings during the noon hour and had some conversation over the question of week-day schools, their significance, meaning, and future.

At 1.15 we were on hand at the Armourdale School, where we found Sister A. V. Powell as the superintendent and Sister Audrey Sanders acting as the teacher of the fifth and sixth grade children, a class of about six or eight. They told me their total enrollment throughout the day, they having only three periods like the Grandview School, was thirty-three. They, like all thinking people, had been wondering just what good they were accomplishing, and so should it always be. We should always be willing to critically examine our efforts, or any new move, to see what it is worth, but, of course, by no means ought we to judge the worth of a movement by the difficulties only, unless in difficulties we measure the amount of good we are doing. This does not always hold, however. These people have every reason to stay with their task.

We next went to the Malvern Hill School where we found two very large classes from the seventh grade, a class of about fifty boys and a class of about forty girls. I found out that all the boys and girls in this one class from a near-by public school, were coming to our church, and that the public-school teacher, being entirely free from work at that time, came over with the class. These two classes were being handled by Sister Ray Lloyd and Sister Tysa Lueking. Sister Grabske was acting as superintendent of this school. We stayed long enough to see two large classes of the eighth grade come after three o'clock, a class of boys and a class of girls. Sister Grabske had the class of girls and Brother Fligg, missionary for the stake, handled the class of boys. The greater part of all of these were from other than Latter Day Saint families.

These folks have their problems, of course. The movement is now in its second year, and many of the difficulties which will be erased in time are still dominant. Other difficulties we shall expect to be quite permanent, inherent in the system itself. The biggest problem seems to be that of securing teachers who can give their time for the work. The next largest task is that of discipline and order. The child has a different teacher than his day-school teacher. He is out of the environment of his public school surroundings and is very apt to take the occasion as a chance for a good time and freedom from the restraint of his regular teacher and his public school environment. This makes the discipline work harder upon the week-day religious teacher than upon the regular public-school teacher herself. Then there is the question of getting the children there on time, although this is, of course, a minor matter.

There is another important problem which I discovered right away, and it happened to be suggested to me by chance. In the first school we visited, I happened to overhear the teacher say "our church." She immediately caught herself and said "your church." This led me to ask the superintendent what percentage of the children were of other than Latter Day Saint families. I had supposed that they were all from Latter Day Saint families, and it never occurred to me that there would be a large number of outside families. You may know that I was surprised when I learned that only one third of this school was from Latter Day Saint families. I commented upon my surprise to the superintendent and asked her if they ever had any trouble from the parents of these children objecting to the way in which we taught them. Her response was that there had been some question, and as an illustration of it the superintendent referred to the manner in which baptism had been taught the preceding year. This is an important question, indeed. We are perfectly aware that the plasticity of the child gives us an unusual opportunity to fasten upon him our beliefs, and this, too, even though our beliefs are contrary to those of his parents. The question is as to whether our own presumption that we have the truth justifies us in dogmatically telling them so when we know that their parents do not think so. The question comes, Shall we tell the children that their parents disagree with us and thus encourage them to discriminate? Shall we urge them to find out for themselves? If we urge them to discriminate, what then shall be our attitude towards our own children? Does our own presumption of having the truth justify us in not encouraging our own children to discriminate? If we must respect the personality of the parents of the non-Latter Day Saint children by suggesting that these children should discriminate, what constitutes respect for the personality of our own children?

Of course this problem is partly answered by the assumed ethics of the situation, that these schools are more or less for the moral side of religious education, rather than the doctrinal.

Another interesting sidelight brought to the surface in my thinking was the future possibilities of such a movement as this week-day religious school. One of the public-school teachers present commented to me that she felt the movement would never be a success until it was held right in the public school building itself with the public-school teacher. With our zeal for biblical instruction and moral instruction, shall we assent to the change of the place of the meeting from the church to the public schools to overcome certain inherent difficulties, that is the difficulties of discipline and efficiency of teaching? Can biblical instruction be divorced from matters pertaining to the issues between different denominational views of the Bible or between the conservative and liberal construction of the Bible? Could we ever reconcile ourselves to any one type of biblical instruction for public school teaching? It doesn't look very probable at present. The difference in the denominational views of the Bible is a small matter alongside of the differences between the conservative and liberal points of view toward it. I am not so sure but what our ecclesiastical friends who favor parochial schools would not be glad to see these week-day schools taken over into the public school itself. Then we would have Protestant schools conducting religious education, and this would give them large grounds for asking for a division of the public taxes between all schools, public and parochial.

It is to be hoped that this movement will increase the efficiency of our Sunday school, will give us a chance to put over better discipline in Sunday school; better instruction and longer hours. If it has the opposite effect upon the Sunday school, its effectiveness is to be questioned, for the writer cannot help but feel that it is up to the churches to use Sunday. It is their day to infuse the children with the religious attitude, and so far Sunday has not been used as it could be. One of the big arguments for the week-day movement is that it gets certain children in who do not otherwise attend Sunday school. This is true. Another argument is that it surrounds the project of religious education with the atmosphere of the public school. This is not so true as the first argument. Public school children easily take advantage of a substitute teacher in having a good time, and they can just as easily take advantage of a week-day religious teacher. But the argument is good in so far as the principals of the public school take cognizance of the bad disciplinary cases in this week-day school and public pressure is brought to bear upon such children. This cannot be done in the Sunday school; consequently there is something to this argument.

The movement is here; it is a great opportunity; the children do not have the religious education that they should. It is up to the church to take advantage of the movement, and even to push it; and the Saints in Kansas City, Kansas, are to be congratulated. They must be encouraged to stay eternally at it, candidly criticizing themselves, candidly admitting the problems, but courageously and energetically going ahead to overcome them. We pray that the Lord shall be with them in their efforts.

IV. GOVERNMENT THROUGH PRIESTHOOD

The government is by divine authority through priesthood.—Document on Church Government, Joint Council, April, 1924.

This has been arraigned as a new doctrine. But perhaps that is due to a failure to recognize old friends.

No matter to what source we look for authority in church government, whether to God or the people, or both, we are bound to admit that it is exercised "through priesthood." In branch, district, stake, and general church the officers are of the priesthood. Is it not true, then, that government is "through priesthood"?

What Said Our Fathers on This Matter?

Note how our fathers expressed their theory of church government:

The Church Government consists:

1. Of a First Presidency, consisting of a president and two counselors.
2. A Quorum of Twelve (a traveling high council).
3. A Standing High Council of the church; and at each stake a similar subordinate standing high council, consisting of twelve chosen for that purpose.
4. A High Priests' Quorum.
5. One or more Quorums of Seventy, not exceeding seven.
6. Quorums of Elders.
7. Bishops, consisting of a Presiding Bishop and associate or local bishops—said bishops having temporal jurisdiction subject to the general direction of the church, and higher church authorities.
8. Quorums of Priests.
9. Quorums of Teachers.
10. Quorums of Deacons.—Articles of Incorporation of Church, adopted in 1872 and in 1891; see Old Rules of Order and Debate, Article 1, p. 116.

Our fathers fifty years ago were more radical than we are; they said that church government consists of priesthood. The joint council said it is through priesthood—the difference is in verbiage, the latter being the better.

Consistent With a "Theocratic Democracy"

Democracy may involve only "government of the people, by the people, and for the people." But both Joseph the Martyr and Joseph his son declared the church to be a theocratic democracy (or theo-democracy), and the term has received very general acceptance.

It is not to be presumed that they did so without thought as to the meaning of the word theocracy: "Government of a state by the immediate direction or administration of God; hence, government . . . by priests representing the Deity."—Webster.

Such government would be through priesthood. In a theocratic democracy, as in the church, it would be modified by recognition of the voice of the people.

Respect for Authority

James M. Beck, Solicitor General of the United States, says that without respect for authority neither democracy nor any other form of government is workable. And he adds: "The revolt against authority is a world-wide phenomenon."

That which is governed by law is preserved by law. (Doctrine and Covenants 85:8.) In the church, if we do not retain respect for the authority of God which operates through his chosen priesthood under theocracy, we will not long have respect for the voice of the people under the democratic phase of our church government.

If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they cannot expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction.—Doctrine and Covenants 125:14.

The Idea as Old as Adam

The idea of government through priesthood is as old as Adam:

The Melchisedec priesthood holds the right of presidency, and has power and authority over all the offices in the church. . . . This order was instituted in the days of Adam, and came down by lineage.—Doctrine and Covenants 104.

Government of Christ Through Priesthood

Christ himself holds office as a great high priest. (See Hebrews 7:21.)

"Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end."—Isaiah 9:7.

He in turn in his church directs his authority through the priesthood:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry.—Ephesians 4:11.

Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.—Acts 20:28.

President Joseph Smith wrote of the restoration of the priesthood in the latter days:

This priesthood so conferred was endowed with all the rights, privileges, and authority to bring forth the church of Christ, conduct its expansion and watch over its development and welfare until the coming of Christ should bring its work to a triumphant and glorious consummation—SAINTS' HERALD, May 21, 1902.

The Membership Not Excluded

But it does not follow that "no provision is made for the membership outside of the priesthood participating in governmental affairs."

These officials through whom the church government functions are subjected at the beginning in their call and ordination to the voice of the people. In the offices in which they preside as executives, they are periodically dependent upon the franchise of the people. They must administer their work in harmony with revelation approved by the people and legislation adopted by the people. And under their presidency the people may and do initiate legislation.

V. EFFECTIVE DISCIPLINE

To carry into effect the purposes of the church, effective administration is imperative, and organic solidarity is maintained only by effective discipline, which is in consonance with the beneficent purposes of the church, but yet strongly enough administered to prevent the purposes of the organization being frustrated by individual caprice and rebellion. Authority to be effective must be respected.—Document on Church Government, Joint Council, April, 1924.

Certainly we desire "effective administration." Clearly when God conferred authority he desired it to be "respected." And it would seem equally clear that discipline is required.

But discipline may take two forms. We usually think first of punitive discipline.

Punitive and Corrective Discipline

The house of God is a house of order. Hardly a Sunday school superintendent who has not been obliged to correct or remove some teacher. Most pastors have been obliged to silence some member of the priesthood or proceed against some member for violation of law. Scarcely a deacon who has not had to rebuke or remove disorderly persons.

Scarcely an apostle living or dead who has not been obliged to discipline individuals. Our files contain hundreds of letters from such men, reporting cases where they have set branches in order or called individual members of the ministry to account.

Some cases have been of church-wide interest. Not so many years ago the President, the Presiding Bishop, one member of the Twelve, and a high priest, were obliged to proceed to one of our large branches and discipline a bishop who had turned against the gospel. The discipline involved barring him from the pulpit that he had occupied, silencing him as a minister, and final expulsion from the church after judicial action. It was drastic action, but necessary to preserve "organic solidarity." They were well within their rights in thus protecting the church. The church will not surrender such means of protection.

Educational Discipline

But there is another form of discipline, happily more frequently employed. This form was set forth and discussed before the council meeting.

A Sunday school superintendent who organizes and instructs a working force of teachers and officers is disciplining them. So is a pastor or district president who instructs the priesthood in their duties and organizes them for their work.

This is the finest form of discipline, and most effective; and is quite within the meaning of the document. And with such discipline the punitive form may often be avoided; but alas, not in every instance.

The church through her officers must retain power not only to instruct, but if necessary to restrain and punish. If one exceed his authority in administering discipline he may be disciplined. The Presidency themselves may be censured or removed from office at the discretion of the people.

In foregoing editorials I have set forth the following points:

A Brief Resume

I. The church is a theocratic-democracy.

1. Under the democratic phase of church government the people may (a) sustain or reject general church officers, including the President and Prophet; (b) accept or reject revelation, suggestion, or proposed policies; (c) initiate legislation in local and general assemblies.

2. Under the theocratic phase of our government (a) divine direction is paramount. (b) Priesthood and church alike trace authority back to God in a primary sense; this authority in its exercise, however, must have the consent of the people. (c) God directs the church through his chosen prophet; and locally in some matters through local officers. (d) The whole body of the priesthood has authority to advise, direct, and set in order, in their various offices in harmony with the law; as Joseph said, they have authority to bring the church forth, conduct its growth, and watch over its development until Christ comes.

II. The church government is through priesthood.

1. Both God and the people operate through the priesthood in general and local church government.

2. This has been the rule, (a) under Christ (himself a high priest) who worked through his priesthood; (b) in the latter-day dispensation; (c) and goes back to Adam.

III. In executive administration the First Presidency is first.

1. Again and again it is set forth (a) in the revelations and (b) in our legislation that the Presidency has the primary right to preside over and direct all the affairs of the church.

2. In this executive work they may work (a) in concert with many other executives and (b) in council with other quorums, but are themselves the chief executive quorum.

3. In this work they are to conform to (a) the constitutional law and (b) conference enactment. (c) Within these lines they are supreme in executive matters. If they violate their trust they may be disciplined by reprimand or dismissal.

In Conclusion

I have endeavored to prepare the foregoing editorials in humility and kindness, in the spirit of the Master. Having written them, I spent a period of prayer in the seclusion of the forest and returned to recast them; and later, coming from a splendid communion service at the Stone Church in Zion, and under that Spirit, I again rewrote them, to eliminate personalities and all that might offend or wound. If at any point I have failed in this I crave forgiveness.

That we may presently come to a period of unity and peace, of revival and fellowship, is the deep longing of my soul. I wish to end my ministry during such a period. May you and I live to see and enjoy that experience.

Yours in gospel bonds,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Thanksgiving at the Sanitarium

The Sanitarium committee is working hard to make the coming Thanksgiving season one which the Saints will observe by placing a gift in their hands for use in prosecuting the Sanitarium's work of service to the church and to humanity.

We reproduce below some of the literature being placed in the hands of the branches, and if HERALD readers desire to make gifts and are not in touch with local organizations or officers who will transmit the same, they may reach the Sanitarium by addressing Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

The Independence Sanitarium Greet the Saints and Friends in Our Thanksgiving Service

Your church Sanitarium has cared for a constantly increasing number of the sick from Independence and distant parts of the world. The maternity department is helping many who need its services. The free out-patient department for children is finding out the needy and giving them hospital care.

The Sanitarium is grateful to the Saints who have donated approximately five thousand dollars toward the ten thousand asked for a year ago. New sanitary floors have been laid throughout the building. The walls have been painted. Much new modern hospital equipment has been installed, all this representing great value for this small outlay of money.

The present economic demand among all people requires a reduction in prices for hospital maternity service. The completion of our maternity ward will give us ample room to care for these patients at this reduced rate, which will be but half of the single room prices and will be within the reach of everybody.

A small Thanksgiving gift from each and every one toward the accomplishment of our ten thousand dollar goal of last year will make this splendid aim a reality.

THE SANITARIUM COMMITTEE,

MRS. A. L. YINGLING.

DOCTOR G. L. HARRINGTON.

DOCTOR J. R. GREEN.

GERTRUDE E. COPELAND, R. N., Superintendent.

Apostle Williams at Woodbine, Iowa

There comes to our desk a copy of the Woodbine local paper, The Woodbine Twiner, which contains extended notice of the work of Brother T. W. Williams in the church building of the Latter Day Saints. We quote one paragraph from this notice:

On Sunday evening Apostle Williams resumed missionary effort at the Latter Day Saint church. He is a broad-minded, earnest, efficient speaker, whose work has been very extensive, having traveled over the greater part of Europe, the British Isles, Palestine, Canada, and the homeland, bearing to the nations the message of love.

In the "High school notes" we find that Brother Williams lectured before the schools at chapel hour, taking the students on a trip with him to southern Europe and making it very interesting to them. His surprise at finding Jerusalem to be a dirty, unsanitary town impressed the reporter, and his advice to travel and widen their perspective of the world, so that they would not think this the only country and themselves the only people, is made prominent. We quote a few words at the close of this write-up of Brother Williams's visit to the schools:

He demonstrated how travel shows a person his own limitations and, as one might say, brings him down to earth with a realization that he doesn't know it all.

Defending a Gospel Principle

BY A. H. CHRISTENSEN

Much ado about directional control; and why so much alarm in the face of the following assurance of the Master?

Therefore let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands: be still and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.

The principle of directional control, like electricity, does hold possibilities for evil; but they who through ignorance of its properties, or in malice trifle with it in either case, usually are themselves the sufferers. But notwithstanding every natural power that has been harnessed by man has yielded him immeasurable blessings and holds the powers of curses and death, we are not willing to abandon them entirely. But they are willing to do as much who advocate the banishment of the principle of supreme directional control, and they add that they desire to keep the effort upon the plane of principles and not personalities.

I hold in my hand a document labeled "Program for missionary work," and in this document are set forth and numbered seven articles which are rules for missionaries to observe in the accomplishment of their work. This paper was thrust into my hand by an apostle, and I was in no doubt whatever that I was expected to be controlled by it. But I did not care, for I was then as now in favor of the principle: it is the only possible way. Our obedience is becoming when we thus fulfill righteousness, and we thus help to maintain order in the kingdom of God. The paper referred to above is signed by the Quorum of Twelve, May 3, 1922.

Not long ago I received a letter from the Twelve directing me to go to a certain place and take charge of the erection of a church building. I obeyed. We all get orders from time to time directing us to go here or there and do certain pieces of work. Missionaries are not even permitted to leave the bounds of their districts without first obtaining permission from their directing officers, the Twelve.

In the Society Isles Mission, there is to be found a book of rules formulated by Apostle T. W. Smith, in the years that he served there, and that small book contains thou shalt and *thou shalt not*s not contained in any books under which we labor here. For instance, one rule forbids that elders administer to the sick without wearing coats. How is that for control? But if you only knew that the custom of administering the sacred ordinances with only the scant wearing apparel common to the tropics had been the vogue, you would be able to see the cause of the order as well as the necessity for acceptance of the principle of directional control.

When Apostles Rushton and Hanson visited the islands a few years ago, we missionaries there discussed with them policies for the missionary work, and they outlined a policy and committed the same to writing, as well as rendered a number of "decisions," all of which missionaries there then and now are in honor bound to accept unless having made an appeal and obtained a contrary decision from a higher authority. May I also say in reference to the book of T. W. Smith mentioned above, which book I used to call "The islanders' Law of Moses," that the author records the fact within the book that no one may change those laws except he shall have the authority of an apostle.

These all acted well within the realm of their authority, and their control was supreme in their realm; and this was right. They exercised their right in precisely the same spirit that the president of the church, Alma, exercised his in Nephite times, as we learn from the following:

And now Alma was their high priest, he being the founder of their church. And it came to pass that none received authority to preach or to teach, except it were by him from God. Therefore he consecrated all their priests and all their teachers, and none were consecrated except they were just men.—Mosiah 11: 17-19.

I have italicized the pronouns that reveal that a prerogative now enjoyed by the district conference was at that time retained by the president of the church for reasons best known to him, no doubt; the record does not fully inform us.

Furthermore—

The seventy when traveling by the voice of the church, or sent by the twelve to minister the word where the twelve cannot go, are in the powers of their ministration apostles—those sent—and in meetings where no organization exists should preside, if no member of the twelve or presidency be present. . . . and in cases of conflict, or extremity, their decisions should be listened to and regarded, subject to the appeal and adjudication provided for in the law.—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3, 4.

So the seventy occasionally finds himself with the whole armor on and exercising supreme directional control even though it be but for a brief season. And do not the district president and the priest and teacher and deacon find occasions when they justly may use their God-given authority to bind and loose and direct in righteousness? We have no objection to make to the idea of appealing instances of maladministration of supreme directional control to the people, but it is to the annihilating of the principle righteously discharged that we object. This is an important distinction.

Let the Church Decide What?

Let the conference decide only such things as should properly come before it; not every local issue. Some evidently would refer to the conference all issues of a certain magnitude and refer to other officers all events of less magnitude. But this is not the proper basis of classification. You will note that the "open letter" assumes this position, which is in error. We are of the opinion, rather, that it is a matter of kind and not of size that should determine its reference to the people. The courts of the church, for instance, are so arranged as to be able to take care of the greatest or the least offense according to the standing of the court. We have never considered the conference as a court of appeal.

The present aggression seems to propose that the General Conference demand that the Presidency only surrender its prerogative of directional control, while permitting the principle to remain with all other officers of the church. This seems to be inconsistent and out of harmony with the spirit of the Golden Rule. All who vote to take away the principle of official direction and control should watch their step, for the idea will spread like smallpox, and you will soon hear from other quorums that yearn to be more free and independent of the authority just above them. Are you ready for the experiment?

Laman's Cry

It may not have occurred to many that we are passing through a little bit of history that was enacted right here on this same land about B. C. 500. Precisely the same wedge is dividing the church that successfully split it then, and so successful was it that finally the complete annihilation of the people of God was accomplished by it.

Laman raised the cry of "control" in the following words:

... and he [Nephi] tells us these things, and he worketh many things by his cunning arts, that he may deceive our eyes, thinking, perhaps, that he may lead us away into some strange wilderness; and after he has led us away, he has thought to make himself a king and ruler over us, that he may do with us according to his will and pleasure.—1 Nephi 5: 50, 51.

They claimed that their rights had been invaded in that their younger brother was to be their ruler or leader, which bears a striking resemblance to the case of the murmuring brethren of Joseph who was sold into Egypt. And in both cases the elder brethren claimed the honor of leadership, being the first-born, etc. And we are familiar with the record of the next thousand years' struggle and overthrow of the Nephite church over this old grudge.

But may I ask, Who was first to introduce bondage and inequality and to destroy liberty? Was it they who committed the power of directional control to their leaders? No, it was they themselves who took such pains to guard against their brothers' doing it. It was the Lamanites who kept the Limhites captive and laid a heavy tax upon them by which they themselves lived in ease. It was the Lamanites who in almost every case were ready to inaugurate oppression.

Now I am ready to say this to all comers: You cite one government of the people in which the caucus or the parliament or the delegates of the people became the administrative, directing, controlling head of the society, and I will match it with one in which the administrative, directing, and controlling powers were intrusted to officials. And I will show that in the majority of cases the rule which I have indorsed has resulted in more peace, tranquillity, justice, and progress, while attended with less bondage and usurpation of rights than the other plan can show. And we will begin with the first rays of the sun as they kissed the sundial of Eden, and we will bring the research up to date. Who picks up the challenge?

Know the Law

BY BISHOP ISRAEL A. SMITH

In the following article the writer has two objects in view: The first is to disclose some of the history of the present controversy, and the second is to induce the Saints to study the theory of our church government and to know the law.

The foregoing is the opening statement in my article published in the HERALD of August 6, 1924.

Since that date various articles have been presented to HERALD readers in which have been raised some questions of law involved in the "supreme directional control" resolution passed by the advisory council of April last. Two of them only have raised questions of fact in regard to the circumstances of the council proceedings. To the questions thus created I will address myself before attempting to discuss matters of law.

Was Conference Sanction Intended?

It seems to be generally conceded that the council of last April was not a legislative body and could not make a valid change in the law or procedure of the church. This is expressly admitted by President Elbert A. Smith in HERALD of October 22 and six members of the Quorum of Twelve in their article in HERALD of August 27, as follows:

The council at no time endeavored to supersede General Conference or pass any law binding upon the church without General Conference sanction. Nor could it have done so, since it sat as an advisory council, so stated and recognized from the first day.—October 22.

The council did not seek arbitrarily and on its own authority or in any way to change the governmental practice of the church. It only expressed an opinion, etc.—August 27.

Notwithstanding these admissions as to the entire want of legislative authority, we believe there was an intention on the part of many of the council, including the members of the First Presidency, to put the resolution into immediate effect. We base that belief upon the following facts:

First, the statement of the chairman of the council, in answer to a specific question, as to the nature of the resolution on church government (just passed or adopted) said, "Well, you may call it whatever you choose—advisory, legislative, or administrative."

Second, the demand made at the same time upon Bishop McGuire that he state whether he was going to abide by the decisions of this group of men.

Third, the publication of a document entitled, "Concerning church government," in HERALD of July 9 over the signatures of the members of the First Presidency, these same six members of the Quorum of Twelve, and others, in which the "supreme directional control resolution" was introduced and this statement immediately followed:

The chief executives of the church, the First Presidency, should not be discredited in seeking to exercise functions in accordance with the above principles in harmony with the law as laid down in the standard books of the church, but should be supported by the faith and confidence of the Saints.

We feel that all three of these circumstances are quite conclusive, and the last has an additional significance in that it failed to include General Conference enactments or resolutions with "the standard books of the church," since the position many of us hold against supreme directional control is also supported in a number of General Conference actions wherein the church has sought to interpret the law as contained in the Doctrine and Covenants. It is an impossible thing to exercise functions in accordance with the principles set out in the supreme directional control resolution in harmony with the law as laid down in the standard books of the church if we accept General Conference Resolutions as a correct interpretation of the meaning and application of the law.

But in the light of the facts enumerated as the basis of our belief that it was intended that the rule should become effective forthwith, and in view of the statements of the brethren of the Twelve and President E. A. Smith, can it be doubted that the Presiding Bishopric and all others who have opposed it as a valid rule of procedure were expected either to indorse it as law or acquiesce in its operation until General Conference would convene? Do the members of the church believe that I should remain silent in fearful acquiescence to unlawful procedure, as I consider the action, for the sake of an apparent harmony? I cannot so understand my duty in the premises.

Was Resignation Desired?

The second issue raised goes to the matter of an alleged attempt to force the Presiding Bishop to resign from his office. I felt that it had been admitted or confessed. Now it is apparently denied. A letter from the President is presented as a denial of the charge, but I feel that there must be some misunderstanding in regard to the question. The writer did not premise his allegation of a desire or an attempt to force a resignation upon the words quoted by President E. A. Smith and referred to in the letter introduced in HERALD of October 22, 1924.

The President may not have had in mind a resignation at the time he used the words constituting the demand that Bishop McGuire state to the council whether he was "going to abide by the decisions of this group of men." We have not so charged at any time. We are convinced that when those words were used, any idea of a resignation had been dispelled, because the writer had practically stated to the council on behalf of the Presiding Bishopric that such a thought was not to be considered.

But earlier in the council, in fact at the very first business session, the chairman (quoting again from my former article)

... used language similar to the following: "If I am right I want this council to say so; if I am wrong and this council says so, I have the decency and the manhood to get out, to resign," and the other things from which, in connection with the words quoted, we could conclude nothing else but that if Bishop McGuire was wrong and the council said so, if he, Bishop McGuire, was decent and had manhood, he would get out, resign!

Since writing the foregoing I was told by members of the council that the words I did not attempt to quote were as follows: "And every man in this council ought to feel the same way about it."

Now, the only clash alleged in the speech of the chairman had been between himself and the Presiding Bishop, and hence the inference was unavoidable—in fact, it was deducible that if Bishop McGuire was found to be wrong by the council, he ought to resign. I am quite sure that other members of the council drew from these circumstances the same conclusion the writer did. I am sure that all would like to have the President's explanation of what he had in mind. I believe the church is entitled to it.

Why did the President project the idea of a resignation if the advisory council did not sustain him in his claim for supreme powers in the administration of church finances?

Why did he urge that any other officer whose position in the controversy was not sustained by this advisory council should have the manhood to resign?

Will the bar of public opinion indorse this use of the high powers and prestige of the office of president to force through innovations between conferences increasing the powers of his office contrary to the enactments of General Conference and the unbroken procedure of the Reorganization?

President Urges Council to Decide

Another circumstance, which is of importance in considering the actions of the council, is that the introductory words of the chairman at the first business session indicated that he expected the council to deal with questions or matters of jurisdiction in controversy between the Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric, which shows that the resolution on supreme control had its genesis prior to the general discussion of church law in the council, which is now being urged as an explanation of or justification for the introduction and consideration of that resolution. This refutes the claim that the document on supreme directional control was the outgrowth of a request coming from the council.

I have not set out the foregoing in the spirit of quarrel, contention, or of quibbling, nor to question the integrity of the chairman. I question the propriety of any attempt to secure the resignation of general officers between General Conferences. While I used the word coercion, I hope it was not accepted in any obnoxious sense.

Now to the consideration of some matters of law:

Preside in Council and Set in Order

And this shall be your [the Presidency's] mission in all of your lives to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of the church and kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

In the editorial entitled "The true philosophy of church government," an effort is made to interpret this passage to justify the new doctrine of "supreme directional control" which makes the Presidency "supreme" over all the quorums, councils, departments, and officials in the administration of all church matters.

Those who are conscientiously impelled to oppose "supreme directional control" do not question the mission of the Presidency to "preside in council and set in order all the affairs of the church." As presiding officers the burden of the care of the church is laid upon them, which care they are to share with others according to the revelations of the Lord and the enactments of General Conference. They have an important and necessary work to perform, and should be honored and sustained in the legitimate pursuit of their calling. So should all other officers and members.

In setting in order the affairs of the church, lawful procedure must be followed, or the disorder will be increased. Let us note the contrast.

The Real Point at Issue

The Doctrine and Covenants says the Presidency's mission is "to preside in council and set in order." "Supreme Directional Control" affirms the Presidency's right to set in order regardless of councils.

Section 104:11 unmistakably gives the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy equal powers of decision in regard to matters in the church under their administration. President Elbert A. Smith said in HERALD of October 22, 1924, page 1010, that "these three in certain matters are accounted equal." In the HERALD of August 9, 1905, one of the charges of apostasy brought against the Utah Church's officials by President F. M. Smith is, "The coordinate jurisdiction of the leading quorums has been distorted until one officer stands alone in his supreme power."

Questions

How can one who says that the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy "in certain matters are accounted equal," consistently contend for "supreme directional control" which will make the Presidency supreme over the Twelve and Seventy in all matters under their administration?

Again, it is pertinent to ask, How can one who in 1905 condemned as an act of apostasy the Utah Church action in making the Presidency supreme over the other leading quorums, now father the "supreme directional control" resolution which will make the Presidency of the Reorganization supreme over quorums heretofore exercising certain concurrent jurisdiction?

Interpretation of Doctrine and Covenants

The divinely given rule of interpretation of any passage in the Doctrine and Covenants is that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action . . . taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.

Supporters of supreme directional control apparently would have us consider such passages as Doctrine and Covenants 87:5 (previously quoted) as standing complete and supreme by themselves, thereby permitting the interpretation that the Presidency has "the supreme rights of the executive arm of the church."

Upon this assumption from a part of the law standing by itself, there follows as a matter of course the further interpretation by the President:

I may have said, for I hold, that General Conference being legislative, should not presume to issue orders to any man or officer. Such "orders" should issue only through the administrative line. (F. M. Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, August 20, 1924.)

The reason for this bold claim is obvious. "Supreme directional control" means that the Presidency shall be "supreme" over all quorums, departments, and officials. If General Conference shall continue to issue binding instructions to such quorums, departments, and officials, as has been done thus far in the history of the church, then the Presidency will not be "supreme" in controlling all the work of such officers.

"True Philosophy" Under the Microscope

President E. A. Smith, in his attempt to prove that supreme directional control is in harmony with the standard books and the teachings of our fathers, quotes from Church History, volume 1, page 281. In this quotation he claims that the late President Joseph Smith, and the late Church Historian Heman C. Smith, have defined the "true philosophy" of the church government. We are quite willing to adopt the statement of the church historian in its particular application but cannot admit the general application which the brother gives to it.

A careful reading of the entire paragraph from which the writer quoted a single sentence might convey a different impression to the searcher, as it has to me. "The true philosophy of the organization is, that if others should be appointed to those duties, these rights and prerogatives inhere in them in a secondary sense, to be exercised under the direction and counsel of the First Presidency." Following this language the historians proceed to discuss its meaning and make their particular application to presidency over branches or "churches." This "true philosophy" is predicated on an if. We do well to notice carefully this if clause. "If others should be appointed to those duties." Certainly, if the Presidency appoint others to perform their work, those others thus appointed are agents for or representatives of the Presidency. The principal never abdicates in favor of the agent; otherwise the agent becomes the principal.

Larger Appointing Power Is Sought

More and more is the policy of appointing being extended in the church. Once you understand the philosophy back of it, you readily comprehend the purpose of its extension. Appointing power is the handmaiden of centralization of control. At the General Conference of 1917 the camel, which for sake of brevity we call "Coordination," got its nose under the tent. During the year of 1923 its whole body was squeezed in. On its anterior hump was labeled Form Five—the crowning feature and full fruition of this "false philosophy" in the evolutionary process from its ancestor, "Coordination." Perhaps many people thought the adoption of the resolution on common consent in October, 1923, killed the animal. I fear it was only chloroformed and tenderly borne away. Recent appointments assure us that we are correct in this surmise.

For the time being, however, perhaps we can agree on the proposition that general church officers, chosen by the body and many times pointed out by revelation from God, are hardly to be considered as appointees of the President in the strict sense of the term. And it further follows that only when they are delegated by the Presidency to perform "those duties" which primarily belong to the Presidency, "to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom," or as the revelation further states, "set in order the churches," would this "directional control set forth in the two utterances" apply. I hesitate to say that the author of this editorial has made a tactical blunder in introducing these two witnesses in support of the doctrine of "supreme directional control"; but surely it is a travesty upon their literary and oratorical contributions to the church to undertake to establish Joseph Smith and Heman C. Smith as witnesses favoring "supreme directional control." Now that they have been put upon the stand, we claim the right to cross-examine. That these "inveterate champions of the people's rights" who dedicated the best fruits of their lives to unmask centralization of control in Utah, should now be called back to support it in the church for which they gave their very lives upon the altar of service, seems to us like a rare paradox. Let these witnesses now speak in their own defense.

Historian Heman C. Smith

Now if there is one thing that I have admired more than another, in the philosophy of the revelations of the last days, it is this, that when you examine the law that governs the church, as found in the revelations of God to us, there can be found no body of men, associated with the general body, in which is the balance of power. I find no quorum, for instance, when I come to apply the law to them, which can have more power in its decision than some other quorum. I read that one quorum has the same power as another, and their decision has the same weight. And so on around until I undertake to put my finger where the balance of power rests, and I cannot find it. There is no such place. And then when you go through all the quorums, they seem to be so well balanced, and in such equilibrium, as far as their rights and powers are concerned; then I go to the body and find all those quorums, and the several officers thereof, are to be sustained by the body, so that they cannot act independently of it. And I ask the question that was asked by the disciples here upon this occasion, Who is the greatest? And I am unable to decide it by the law.—Heman C. Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, June 24, 1903.

President Joseph Smith

The Reorganized Church has not set a seer, prophet, or revelator as of supreme importance and rule in and over the church to the belittling or exclusion of the Twelve, Seventy, or any other of the officers which the government of the church makes necessary. No such thought or disposition has ever been manifested in the governmental affairs of the church. No effort has been made to place one man, or one quorum in the supremacy, one over the other in any absoluteness of rule. And each officer, and each quorum of officers has always regarded the law of the Lord to be the rule to be observed, and has always been ready to answer to the church, the people, for the proper performance of duties performed by them in pursuance of the authority derived from the people as the body of Christ, the church.—Leading editorial, SAINTS' HERALD, September 28, 1898, pages 615 and 616, Joseph Smith, Editor.

In a careful reading of the hundred or more volumes of literature published by the church during the lifetime of these esteemed witnesses, we cannot find a single instance where they have crossed themselves in contradiction of the above clear and impregnable testimony refuting unequivocally one-man power or supreme directional control in the church. Enough is sufficient.

Primary Rights Not the Same as Supreme Control Rights

The passage quoted from church history affirms "that the primary right of presiding over the church and of regulating and setting in order all the affairs of the same is resident with the First Presidency. "This primary right is gladly conceded in harmony with the statement in the Doctrine and Covenants upon which it is based and, so far as I know, has never been questioned. However, there is a vast difference between a "primary right" and supreme control. To make more clear our reasoning on this point, let us cite Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10:

In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern.

This clearly establishes the primary right of interpreting and applying the temporal law with the bishopric. It is absurd then to claim that these primary rights are one and the same thing as "supreme" rights. The bishopric may, under certain conditions, be called in question by the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, but even this council is not supreme. An appeal may be taken from their decision to the General Assembly or to General Conference. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.)

In a similar way it follows that the exercise of the primary rights of the Presidency may be called in question by the joint regulating powers of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, and yet we find that even here supreme power is not exercised because appeal may also be had to the General Assembly or General Conference, as per Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

Thus it will be seen upon analysis that the true philosophy of church government as expressed in the Church History by President Joseph Smith and Historian Heman C. Smith harmonizes with the principles set forth in the "open letter" and opposes the principle of supreme directional control now claimed by the Presidency.

In our next installment we deal with trusteeship, our theocracy, and kindred subjects. A resume of the points covered in this article will conclude this contribution.

Under matters of fact we have shown:

1. It was not originally intended that "supreme directional control" should await General Conference indorsement before being put into effect.
2. That the council was urged to judge between the policies of the President and the Bishop. The one found in the wrong should get out.

Under matters of law we have shown:

1. The law and witnesses introduced to justify "supreme directional control" fail to do so when further examined.
2. The law and procedure of the church provide for administration through councils. The proposed system (supreme directional control) makes councils nonessential in church administration.
3. The late Joseph Smith testified by words and deeds, "No effort has been made to place one man, or one quorum in the supremacy, one over the other in any absoluteness of rule."
4. The testimony of the late Historian Heman C. Smith cannot be refuted by anything he said or did: "I find no quorum, for instance, when I come to apply the law to them, which can have more power in its decisions than some other quorum."

NEWS AND LETTERS

W. D. Tordoff Closes Meetings at Alva and Freedom With Sixteen Baptisms

During the months of September and October two series of meetings have been held, at Alva and Freedom, Oklahoma.

At the city of Alva, which is the home of the Northwestern State Normal College, it was thought advisable to hold tent meetings. There were less than ten members in Alva when the meetings began, this being detrimental to the meetings by reason of the large expense incidental to tent meetings, but the few Saints who reside there were determined that the meetings should take place, hence the writing of this letter.

We had small congregations at first, which gradually grew until the tent was comfortably seated, and many nights many people were forced to stay in their cars within hearing distance. We had baptismal service every Sunday afternoon, baptisms beginning on the first Sunday, at which service four were baptized. Interest continued, with four baptisms on the second Sunday, and again four more were inducted into the kingdom upon the third Sunday.

Each Sunday at this series of meetings at Alva a basket dinner was held at Hatfield Park, at which place also the baptisms occurred. Saints came from far and near to these all-day Sunday services, the hospitality of these western people being made manifest by the abundance of food provided for the visitors. Elder A. M. Chase dropped in for a few days, and his four or five sermons were enjoyed by all.

Leslie Campbell was ordained to the office of priest. He is well qualified to take charge of the work at Alva. Brother Campbell is manager of the Swift Produce Company and is an earnest worker. Two or three prayer meetings were held on different afternoons at the home of a nonmember who was sick.

As the meetings went on and the congregations increased, the difficulties of finance were forgotten, the writer was helped sufficiently to be able to return to Independence, the expenses of the meetings were paid, and a nice balance left

5. The policy of the administration in extending its appointing power is designed to make supreme directional control more effectual.

6. Appointed officers are agents of the one appointing, hence the development of such a system tends to one-man power or government by the President "through priesthood."

7. Primary rights granted the Presidency or other quorums do not mean "supreme rights."

8. The primary rights given in the law to the Bishopric, with provision for appeal therefrom to the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, would be abrogated under "supreme directional control" and would lodge in the Presidency.

9. If the Presidency is made "supreme" in administration, then the equal powers of decision, granted in the law to the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, would be nullified.

over to help the Saints get started in a place of their own to worship in. They have now secured a building to have meetings in and, with the help of the near-by branches, should be successful in laying a foundation for future work.

My next meetings were at Freedom, Oklahoma. There is an organized branch at this place in charge of Elder M. S. Moreland. Twenty-one sermons were preached. As a result of these meetings four were baptized. A steady congregation attended, coming to the church night after night, and at the conclusion of the series the church was too small for the people who came. Chairs were carried in from a near-by house, and the young people sat on the platform and in the aisles. There are some splendid people in this country, loyal to the faith regardless of the mistakes of men, while unfortunately there are some who do let the present condition of the church worry them to the extent that they have stopped their tithing. Usually the ones who do this are continually crying for the missionary to come to their branch, but how the missionary can go anywhere if the people do not help his family is a mystery to me. Of this kind there are very few in this Western District of Oklahoma. Nearly all seem determined to carry on, regardless of the many who deem it their duty to sow seeds of distrust among them. May God help his people to see that all the energy they have shall be used in affirming the great truths of the gospel.

With such leaders as the Dyke brothers, the Western District of Oklahoma is well favored.

In gospel bonds,

WILFRID D. TORDOFF.

Nauvoo, Illinois

October 29.—The sacramental service the first of the month opened with a wonderful outpouring of God's Spirit. Emma Burton spoke in tongues, and the interpretation was given through Brother Berve. Words of encouragement were given to those who were downhearted because of certain conditions that had arisen, and they were assured that all would be well. Brother Berve also spoke in prophecy to several individually, and Floyd Henderson, our fifteen-year-old brother, was called to the office of deacon. He was also told of the great work the future holds in store for him in the church, and that the Lord had given him a righteous home, where he might be trained for that work. This was especially encouraging to Floyd and to Brother Henderson, who took him from the Children's Home in Lamoni a short time ago. Although Brother Henderson has two children of his own, he has taken not only Floyd but his sister Hyla, and is doing all in his power to make them useful to the church.

We are glad to welcome L. H. Lewis and family of Kirtland. They have purchased a home close to the church and will be a splendid addition to our little branch. Sister Lewis's mother, Tamzie Newcombe, makes her home with them. She is a sister of Emma Burton and Ida Layton. These three sisters are all that are left of the Davison family of eleven, and they say it seems like a dream that they are permitted to meet again in old Nauvoo. Tamzie, the oldest, is eighty-four; Ida was the baby of the family, and Emma came half way between. Tamzie has spent the greater part of her life in the East, while Emma has lived in the West and Ida in the central part of the country. Emma traveled all the way from California to Nova Scotia in the year 1881, to carry the gospel to her family, and all but three accepted it. It has always meant a great deal to them, and they have tried to do all in their power to assist in carrying on the great work. Tamzie reared a family of nine, all but two being active members in the church. She also took into her home her sister Sophia's boy, A. L. Sanford, who was left an orphan at five years of age, and raised him to manhood.

Brother Berve announced as the topic of his sermon one Sunday evening, "The man with a handicap." Some supposed he meant a man with a physical handicap, but Brother Berve very clearly portrayed how each man has a handicap, such as selfishness, dishonesty, jealousy, etc., that is hindering his progress, and each should ask himself, "What is my handicap?" and seek to overcome it.

A great deal of interest is being aroused in the Religio programs, as each family is called upon in turn to provide an evening's program. In this way many hidden talents have been discovered.

Patriarch Ammon White, who has been holding special services in Burlington, thought he would like to run down to Nauvoo and visit old friends. When the Saints heard he was coming, a special meeting was called for Saturday evening, that they might listen to one of his inspirational sermons. They prevailed upon him to stay and speak again Sunday morning. He ordained Floyd Henderson to the office of deacon. Bishop Fry, who was passing through Burlington on his way to Kirtland, also visited Nauvoo the same day and preached in the evening.

MABEL A. SANFORD.

Joplin Branch Has Eminent Visitors

Feeling that the Joplin Branch has in a measure failed in showing her appreciation for the blessing that has been hers in the last nine months, I beg the privilege of space in our paper to endeavor to tell of at least some of our blessings.

At the beginning of 1924 we found ourselves at a rather low ebb spiritually and consequently to quite an extent disinterested. There had been partial arrangements made to have a few sermons by Apostle J. A. Gillen, so about the 16th of January he came, on Wednesday, and held services up to and including Sunday night, January 27. Most of the time the weather was very severe for this part of the country. We had one of our icy spells that we sometimes have here, but notwithstanding all that, those who were interested came. If there was enough interest in them to come once, they could scarcely stay away. It is needless to say that the instruction given more directly to the Saints was of a high order, and was truly in keeping with the position in which Brother Gillen occupies.

If the Saints were not benefited, it certainly was not the fault of either Brother Gillen or the Lord, for we feel that Brother Gillen gave us the best he had, and the Lord supplemented anything he lacked.

Our next pleasant experience was in the visit of Patriarch Frederick A. Smith. He was at the district reunion at Joplin in 1923, but owing to his work elsewhere was unable at that time to give all who desired their blessings, so he made arrangements with Brother Charles Wilson, who assists him in his work here, to return on June 1, 1924, to give those blessings. He also said he would preach for us if we desired. May I say just here that so far as I know the Joplin Branch has always been glad to receive and welcome our men of the missionary force, and I trust we may always retain that spirit. While my work took me away, having to leave Sunday evening and not getting back until Saturday night thus only hearing him the following Sunday morning, yet I can say from reports to me that his instruction was wonderful.

Next we had with us Bishop Charles Fry, who was president of our district for several years just prior to his appointment to England. While he was here for but one night and we were not able to advertise his coming, those who did hear him appreciated the opportunity of renewing their acquaintance and hearing his very interesting experiences while in that land across the sea.

On July 20, we were honored by a visit from our beloved and worthy Elbert A. Smith, of the First Presidency. While his stay was short it was sincerely enjoyed by a very creditable and appreciative audience. He gave us some excellent and timely instruction at the eleven o'clock service, presided over our afternoon prayer service, which was also well attended, and preached at Webb City, Missouri, at night. We were pleased to have with us for the day many of the Webb City Saints, they having dismissed their eleven o'clock services to hear President Smith. Also we were thankful for the privilege of hearing him at Webb City at night, dismissing our evening meeting for that purpose.

September 19 we had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Bishop C. J. Hunt, who preached for us Friday night, Sunday at eleven o'clock, and also at the night service. A round table meeting was held at half past two. Our visit with him was very pleasant, and his instruction was timely and appreciated.

Last, but may I say not least, was a short but profitable visit from Apostle E. J. Gleazer, who came Saturday morning, September 27, preached to a small congregation of some thirty-five that night, to about two hundred twenty-five Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, and to about one hundred fifty-five at the evening service. This was a district meeting, and people came from most of the branches of the district. We feel truly that Brother Gleazer won his way into the hearts of his hearers because of his messages and counsel, having the true ring of the gospel of Christ.

These are some of the privileges and blessings for which we may look back over the past nine months and feel to thank and "praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Since September 28 especially there seems to be a great awakening of the Saints, or some of them at least, and all seem to be very much encouraged. In looking back over this year methinks I can see why we have been favored with the presence of these men of wide and varied experiences. We were in great need of special favors, and truly we have received. This only brings with it added responsibility. The Master has said "Freely ye have received, freely give." So now comes our part, that of giving to others the good things that have been ours to enjoy.

With a desire to so do, we subscribe ourselves,

S. G. CARROW,
President of Joplin Branch.

Clitherall, Minnesota

October 28.—The Union Branch enjoyed the last Sunday of the month for several reasons. The day was a reminder of a perfect summer day; roads were excellent and a good sized crowd of Saints and friends was present both forenoon and afternoon to hear Brother W. E. Shakespeare and attend prayer service. Brother Shakespeare's sermon was very timely and much appreciated. At the afternoon prayer service he urged the Saints to uphold the officers of the church, local as well as general; not only the officers, but the laity also, and those who dwell in Zion.

At the noon intermission three children were baptized. They were confirmed at the afternoon prayer meeting.

Brother Shakespeare returned to Deer Creek, where he expects to put up a radio for the Tuckers. From there he plans to go to Frazee, one of the first branches organized in the district but which has recently been disorganized, due to scattered membership.

Shellbrook, Saskatchewan

October 21.—Owing to the press of farm work during the short season of this north country, church work has lagged, necessitating a change in some of the services. However, with the near approach of winter and relief from the heavy pressure of work, plans are being made to resume the usual number of services and renew activities along all lines.

Since last writing our branch has been visited by Missionary E. E. Long, accompanied by Brother Leavitt from Saskatoon. Brother Long occupied at eleven o'clock and again at half past seven. Both sermons were enjoyed, especially the evening one, in which he related some of his experiences in missionary work and certain evidences and testimonies which had been given him to strengthen him in the work. He admonished the Saints to move on with the gospel work and not be discouraged, to study the books and be guided by them. We feel sure his talk did much good.

Brother Leavitt preached at three o'clock in the afternoon, and his sermon contained much good advice and counsel.

A basket dinner was served, to which all present seemed to do justice.

The second Sunday in September two children were baptized, Pastor Roy Bowman officiating.

Members of the Department of Women are busily engaged in carrying out plans for their early winter social and bazaar to be given the third or fourth week in November. A program will be given, after which a plate supper will be served. Proceeds are to be used in making the church building warm enough to hold services in all winter instead of meeting at the homes of the Saints, which has hitherto been the custom.

Hold Their First Harvest Festival

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, October 28.—Since finishing our new basement this summer we have had many a good meeting in it.

On Sunday, October 26, we had a harvest festival meeting which everyone seemed to enjoy. The meeting was the first of its kind in this branch, being arranged under the direction of Sisters Katherine Schmitt and Mary Hanner. The rest of the sisters helped out by giving fruit and vegetables, which were sold Monday for the benefit of the church lawn.

The speakers for the occasion were Elders J. W. Metcalf, W. H. Burwell, W. M. Hanner, and Brethren J. B. Welsh and W. E. Krentzer.

The Saints hope to make this branch one of the best in the church, one of which neither God nor the church will be ashamed.

W. E. KRENTZER.

Tawas City, Michigan

October 24.—We are pleased to note that since our last report we have visited and been visited until interest in church work seems to have taken new life.

On September 28 two carloads of Saints from this branch drove thirty-five miles to spend the day with the Saints of Greenbush Branch. Three preaching services were held which, with a basket dinner in the church, put in the time, and all considered it a day well spent.

Brother and Sister M. A. Somerfield and Brother and Sister G. A. Pringle attended the district conference at Beaverton October 4 and 5 and report a most excellent conference.

Thursday, October 15, was housecleaning day at our church, and a number of the sisters, with the deacon to superintend, cleaned and swept the church; then new runners were placed in the aisles which, with a new rug, were furnished by the intermediate class of the Sunday school. Autumn leaves and flowers decorated the church in preparation for our one-day service to be held the Sunday following.

A goodly number of local and visiting Saints enjoyed a spiritual feast at the one-day meeting October 19. Prayer service was held at half past eight, Sunday school at ten, preaching at quarter after eleven, two, quarter after three, and half past seven. Basket dinner was served in the church. Visitors were present from Port Huron, Saginaw, Gladwin, Bentley, Prescott, Whittemore, Greenbush, and Oscoda. It was decided to hold another all-day service Thanksgiving.

Brother and Sister J. W. McKnight returned October 1 to their home in Flint after two weeks' stay in our midst. Sister E. L. Pringle has gone to Flint to attend the state convention to be held there this week.

Fort Collins, Colorado

October 20.—The branch was made glad October 5 when Brother Frank Almond came and gave a splendid sermon in the evening. He was accompanied from Denver by his wife and Sisters Laura Kohankie and Blanch Lewis. The Denver city missionary was welcome indeed, as the Saints feel somewhat alone since the branch president, Brother G. F. Bullard, took his estimable family and departed for Zion. Those who are left are endeavoring to keep the banner floating. Brother Glen Broliar, the associate pastor, is doing splendid work. He is also superintendent of the Sunday school.

The attendance at the midweek prayer service is increasing, and a splendid spirit is manifested. Those attending feel the meetings are a source of spiritual strength and that those who do not attend are missing an opportunity.

A few weeks ago a piano was rented and placed in the chapel with the understanding that it could be bought and the rent paid be applied on the purchase price. Before the first month was gone, the branch decided to buy the piano and an effort was made to raise a first payment and take pledges to meet the monthly payments. When the time came to fix up the deal, there had been nearly half enough raised to pay the whole bill, besides the pledges for the monthly payments. The Saints feel the piano makes a good start towards furnishing the church they hope to have some day, and in the meantime they may enjoy the use of it. Special music is rendered nearly every Sunday.

Last Sunday the Cottage Chapel was beautifully decorated with autumn foliage and flowers as the theme of the Religio program was "Autumn." The appearance of the chapel was only in keeping with the whole autumn season this year. The weather is wonderful, and the foliage in the canyons is beautiful. One riding in the country sees a magnificent panorama—the small lakes dotting the landscape, with their coloring of heaven's blue, each surrounded by trees of gorgeous hues, here and there a cherry orchard with rows and rows of stately trees, and the homey appearance of many sets of farm buildings, all enter into the beauty of a most wonderful scene, and off across miles of this splendid scenery arise the majestic old mountains. It is truly a most wonderful setting, and one of the visitors making her first trip to Fort Collins said, "What beauty, what grandeur! and to think I had always thought of Fort Collins as being out on the plains!" However, not many of the Saints are lured away from the services even by the grandeur of the mountains here.

Other visitors than those named are: Brother R. E. Porter, of Geneva, Nebraska, and Brother Bruno of Denver who occupied the morning and evening hours September 21,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Brother Bruno's family, and Sister Nellie Grubb, of Kearney, Nebraska.

Next Sunday evening the reading of the local Religio magazine will fill the program hour.

Several young Saints have lately moved to Fort Collins. We gladly welcome all to our services.

Kingston, Missouri

October 30.—The church work here is going along at about the same old pace, except that the local elders are getting out and preaching in various places, which we hope will result in much good being done to all concerned.

Last Sunday Brother Bullard of Independence preached here, and the Oakdale Saints were visitors. A basket dinner was served, which was very much enjoyed. Prayer service was held in the afternoon.

Brother A. McPeck and his daughter Mildred and Brother C. J. Craven were not permitted to attend these services, as Brother McPeck had an appointment at the Wakenda Branch, and Brother Craven accompanied him. On their arrival there it was learned that arrangements had been made to hold the meeting at Russelville, as Brother Barto was holding meetings there, so Brother McPeck preached in the morning, and Brother Barto occupied in the evening. There was a good attendance, nearly all nonmembers who gave splendid attention.

We hope to see the work prosper all over the world, that the righteous purposes of the Lord may be carried to completion.

Cherokee, Iowa

October 25.—The branch here is still striving to let their light shine before the world, and interest in all branch work is on the increase.

The Sunday school has a contest for new members and increased attendance on at present, and already we notice an improvement in attendance. The school has been divided into two parts, one side Red and the other Green. Brother Vernon Spence is captain of the Greens, and Albert Haynes is the leader of the Reds. The contest will last three months, and the losing side will banquet the winners. Each new member and the attendance of old members count one point for the side responsible for the person being present.

A very profitable priesthood meeting was held Sunday afternoon, October 12. The Spirit was manifest to us, and we were greatly blessed. It was decided at this time to hold some special meetings with the local priesthood to do the preaching. These meetings will be preceded by cottage prayer meetings every night for a week or two, and we expect a spiritual uplift from the services. The members of the priesthood are busy calling on all members of the branch who can be reached, and those who cannot be called on will receive personal letters in the interest of the work.

Sunday morning, September 28, two were baptized by Elder Crippen. One was a young married sister, Sister Vernon Spence, who is an accomplished pianist and will be of great assistance in the musical work of the branch. The other candidate was Lauverne Crippen, a member of the Sunday school.

The Department of Recreation and Expression gave a fine musical and literary entertainment the evening of October 12, which was enjoyed by a large crowd.

A large number of our Saints are planning to attend district conference at Mallard, Iowa, October 7, 8, and 9, where they expect to enjoy a wonderful meeting.

Sister J. T. Spence was surprised Monday evening, October 20, when about twenty of the Saints were invited to the home of Brother and Sister Vernon Spence to remind her it was her birthday. The evening was spent in conversation and singing, after which a bountiful luncheon was served by the hostess. The guests were unanimous in wishing Sister Spence many more birthdays.

Sister Lillie Shore was the victim of a surprise when the Department of Women took their lunch and spent a social afternoon with her on October 7.

At last we have heard radio K F I X, and the program Thursday evening, October 23, was very much enjoyed by us. We received the program over a Radiola 3A set, and it came in very clear on 286 meters.

J. T. Spence and family, and Julia Miller were visitors at Sioux City Branch Sunday, October 19.

Brother and Sister Will Townley and family of Moorhead, and Sister Mildred Quirin and family, were present at the morning services October 19.

Denver, Colorado

LITTLETON, COLORADO, October 27.—October 18 and 19 was rally day for the Denver Branch, and a fine time was had. The church was crowded Sunday, the 19th. Outside speakers were Elders G. T. Griffiths and B. E. Brown. Brother Griffiths gave stereopticon views of Palestine Saturday night and preached the Sunday morning sermon. Sunday afternoon there was a large prayer service, and everyone enjoyed it.

The young people of the branch have formed a young people's club and have named it the Mizpah Club. They propose to lend a helping hand in the missionary work.

Elder Frank B. Almond began a series of sermons Sunday evening, October 26, to continue most of the winter. The sermons announced are on subjects of interest, and we think that with the assistance of the Mizpah Club they will bring results.

Brother E. F. Shupe has been confined to the house for two weeks with a severe attack of bronchitis, but he is improving at present. Our young brother, Everett Shupe, is attending Colorado University at Boulder, and Brother Leo Shupe is leaving this week for Trinidad to assist his brother Homer in the credit and collection business.

Sister Budd and husband have returned to Denver after an absence of several years. They have bought a home and will remain.

Bevier, Missouri

October 28.—W. T. Hicklin, branch deacon, has joined the throng leaving Bevier the past few months for other places. Brother Hicklin will be located near Des Moines, Iowa. Sister Ellen Tanner has accepted a position on the force of the Farm and Fireside magazine published at Des Moines and has gone to that city.

District Missionaries E. F. Robertson and J. W. A. Bailey have visited here the past month, Brother Robertson occupying and dispensing the word on several occasions.

The Northeastern Missouri district conference will convene here November 1 and 2. In addition to the delegates and visiting Saints, Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Elders E. F. Robertson and J. W. A. Bailey will be in attendance.

Sister Mary Elizabeth Pearson and Mr Waldo Hughes went to Moberly October 16, where they were quietly married. They were married ten days before their friends were aware of the fact. May peace and joy attend their way.

A son was born on October 28 to Brother and Sister Miles Edmunds.

In President Coolidge's acceptance speech he stated that what the country needs most of all at this time is a "common sense" administration. If just a little more common sense were used in church administration the perplexing conditions that confront us at this time would vanish. In the final analysis a common sense interpretation of the laws on church government would stop all contention. We are in far greater need of spiritual leadership than of D. D.'s, Ph. B.'s, Ph. D.'s, or supreme directional control.

J. L. WILLIAMS.

Faithful Saint Passes

SPEARFISH, SOUTH DAKOTA, October 24.—Once again we were called upon to sacrifice another member of our little flock in the person of our beloved sister, Florence McClung Jackson. She was formerly a Seventh-Day Adventist, but from the first word of the latter-day message she recognized its truth and in the face of bitter opposition on the part of her husband obeyed the gospel under the hands of Brother C. W. Prettyman. This was about four years ago.

Persecution in the home continued to the extent that privilege of regular attendance was denied her, but her faith never wavered, and her last testimony was that she knew the work to be true.

Relenting on the part of her husband came during the latter days of her sickness, and administration was asked for twice, but the last time the end had come before Brother Cohrt arrived.

Sybil, eighteen, and the eldest of five living children, will have the burden of the care of the family. She has stated her intention of obeying the gospel soon "to start her work right." She is a noble soul, as was her mother, and there is no fear among her friends but what her work will be "right."

Regular services are maintained as usual, with very little outside interest. There seems to be a current of unrest among some of the people, something which cannot be defined but which tends to kindle a spark of hope in the breasts of the Saints that it may terminate in a search for that which we have to present, "The pearl of great price."

We have about completed our study reading of the Book of Mormon and expect to close evening services at the church soon for the winter season. This is done to conserve fuel. Cottage prayer service will be held instead.

It will be a joyful day in Spearfish, and also in every other branch, when the "scrap" at headquarters is settled. It has been a deterrent factor in the work long enough, and certainly the Spirit of the Master has not entered into it. Progress and the blessings of God cannot be hoped for until a greater degree of his Spirit is manifested among his people.

Rich Hill, Missouri

October 27.—On October 19 Sister C. C. Martin, of the Department of Women, Sister Helen Hawley, field worker for the Religio and assistant superintendent of the Sunday school, were here and made some very good talks, which were much appreciated.

Brother Ralph Murdock, branch president, spent a few days in Hickory County, where he baptized two young men and one young lady.

Brother W. E. Haden of Independence stopped on his way home from the Veve Branch, where he has been laboring with good results.

Lock Four, Pennsylvania

LOCK FOUR, PENNSYLVANIA, October 28.—It has been quite a long time since the Lock Four, Pennsylvania, Branch news has appeared in the SAINTS' HERALD, but it is never too late to send in good news of church work.

Bounteous nature once again has yielded the fruits of harvest, and again are we blessed with prosperity and plenty. Whenever I pass the glistening, harvested fields fast becoming tinged with gorgeous autumn beauty, I am impressed with the lesson of life the harvest teaches, and I think to myself, What will my harvest be? It seems to me, too, that this is a mighty pertinent query for each one of us to make, and the train of thought naturally leads one along to the things that shall determine what each one of us shall garner from his life's endeavors.

The farmer who sat on the porch or huddled about the stove expecting a beneficent Providence to till the ground, drop the seed, and cultivate for him would have little use for harvesting machinery, because for him there would be no harvest; and it is tragic but true that for far too many of us there will be no harvest because we have failed miserably to exert the right kind of effort. How we should pity the man or woman who has grasped at life and missed! And yet in the majority of cases, impartial and unbiased judgment must conclude that the fault was theirs.

So this has been the success of the good brother who sowed the good seed of the gospel of Jesus Christ in this part of the field. It was sown in good ground here in Lock Four many years ago, and it started to grow, and the few good Saints from year to year were like the good farmer—they kept cultivating and purifying the ground with the true principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and through all were faith and good works. God was pleased, and he permitted the Saints here to organize into a branch, from which the work of his gospel has reached out to many souls of this locality and has given them light. Our branch is prospering in many of its departments.

The Saints of this branch can never forget how wonderfully the Lord has blessed each and every one of them in the past spring and summer. But I say that some of our failures of life are apt to be very cynical when reminded that we, all of us, are the only masters of our fate, and they will immediately come to bat with a thousand and one excuses and reasons why this almost inflexible measure does not apply to them. But, friends, it is a rare exception, indeed, to whom it does not apply.

There is, it is true, the element of natural forces to be reckoned with in agriculture, and there are many determining factors in deciding what our harvest of life shall be, but just as the man who toils the most in the fields is far more likely to reap the best harvest, so it is true that those who put the most conscientious effort into work of the true Church of Jesus Christ and his gospel shall reap the harvest of the most and highest rewards.

The young people's convention of the Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, District will be held here at Lock Four Branch November 15 and 16, and the Dramatic Club of Lock Four Department of Recreation and Expression will render a play on Saturday evening, November 15, in behalf of the young people's convention. The name of the play is "The temple." The scene of the play is the dedication of the Kirtland Temple. The characters in the play will be Charles Ziba Peterson, a nephew of one of the first missionaries of the church; Paul Wight, son of Lemoi [Lyman?] Wight, a leader in Kirtland when the church was first established there; Lyman E. Johnson, jr., a son of another old-time resident and leader;

Addison Carter, a son of a family which had resided there from before the Revolutionary War, and who lived in that territory, and whose father was in the church and was one of the leaders of the church.

The week beginning the 9th of November, there will be preaching every night by Brother W. C. Neville, of Canton, Ohio; John Martin, of Kirtland, Ohio; and Brother Patterson, a missionary from Australia. We are expecting large attendance during the entire week.

A welcome invitation is extended to every Latter Day Saint, far and near, to come and help make this young people's convention the most successful and spiritual meeting ever held in the Pittsburgh District. This being the first young people's convention held in this district, every Saint of this branch is looking forward with great faith that the Lord will send the Holy Spirit, endowing us with many blessings.

JAMES C. ANSELL.

Member of English Bishopric Dies

The church in England has recently lost one of its most capable and willing supporters, through the rather sudden death of Elder John W. Taylor, of Manchester, England.

Brother Taylor joined the church March 31, 1897, at Salford, Lancashire, England, his native town. He was then a young man just past his thirtieth birthday, and he immediately became active in the local branch of the church. Before many months had passed he was called to the Aaronic priesthood, and thenceforth was always available for service in line with the various responsibilities which were heaped on him by the branch, the district, and the mission.

The missionary work of Elder F. G. Pitt when in the British Isles has since become notable by reason of the part he played in the selecting of young men for work, which so many of them subsequently accomplished with signal success. Brother Taylor was one of these young men. He was ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood by Brother Pitt in 1899.

Starting life with a meager education, Brother Taylor studied hard during his spare time and before long came to be recognized as an engineer of more than ordinary ability. His experience as instructor in engineering in the Manchester Technical Schools won him an understanding of the principles of teaching which he was not slow to utilize in his work with the Saints.

When Bishop Roderick May went to England in 1911, Brother Taylor was chosen as one of his counselors and was ordained high priest and bishop's counselor at the Mission Conference of that year. He now gave his undivided attention to the financial work of the mission, and during the difficult years of the war rendered particularly valuable service. Bishop May resigned in 1921 to return to the United States; he was succeeded by Bishop Fry, who immediately chose Brother Taylor as his counselor. When the time came for him to return to the United States the financial interests of the church in the British Isles were left in the hands of Brother Taylor and the other counselor, Elder J. W. Foster, and in this work Brother Taylor continued active until the time of his death from septic poisoning, September 19, 1924.

In the passing of this man of God, his wife, son, and three daughters, have lost a husband and father of unusual kindness and understanding; his associates are bereft of the counsel of a man of wisdom and integrity; and the church in England is poorer by the measure of a man whose worth the whole body of the Saints had come to appreciate.

New York and Philadelphia

The following is an account of the district conference held at Bloomsburg, taken from The Morning Press, October 27:

The semi-annual conference of the Philadelphia and New York District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was held Saturday in the church at the corner of Market and Eighth Streets and was attended by eighty-six out-of-town delegates from several adjoining States.

The session was marked by the ordination of Clark Pealer of the Bloomsburg church into the priesthood.

At the session on Saturday there was a discussion of social problems affecting the church, and action was taken to improve the camping grounds of seventy acres at Deer Park, near Philadelphia. Ways and means of keeping the young people in the church also came in for considerable discussion, and the addition of a swimming pool to the church is soon to be undertaken.

The annual session of the conference will be held in Philadelphia in February. The presiding officer at the session was the vice president, Richard Hawkins of Scranton.

At eight o'clock yesterday morning there was a priests' meeting, with Sunday school at 8.15 o'clock. The Lord's supper was administered at the sacramental service at 10.30 o'clock, with Richard Hawkins in charge, assisted by Elders A. E. Stone and Arthur E. Stoff.

A meeting of the Department of Women was held at two o'clock yesterday afternoon, presided over by Mrs. John Zimmermann of Philadelphia, and the general activities of the church were discussed.

At three o'clock there was a preaching service in charge of W. H. Lewis of Bloomsburg at which the speaker was Arthur E. Stoff of Philadelphia, on the subject "Church government." It was at this service that Mr. Pealer was ordained to the priesthood.

In his sermon Mr. Stoff emphasized the organization of the church, which has no connection with the Utah Church, and has its headquarters in Independence, Missouri.

The church government, as outlined in the address, consists of a first presidency, consisting of a president and two counselors; a quorum of twelve (a traveling high council); a standing high council of the church; and at each similar stake a subordinate high council, consisting of twelve chosen for that purpose; a high priests' quorum; one or more quorums of seventy, not exceeding seven; quorums of elders; bishops, consisting of a presiding bishop and associate or local bishops, these having temporal jurisdiction subject to the general direction of the church, and higher church authorities; quorums of priests, quorums of teachers, quorums of deacons. During the service a duet, "Come, Holy Spirit," was sung by Thomas Jones and Mrs. Robert Clugston.

Last evening a song service was held at seven o'clock with a solo by Thomas Jones, a selection by the orchestra, group singing, a short address on "Relationship of music to religious life." At 7.30 o'clock the preaching service was held, in charge of Richard Hawkins, the speaker being A. E. Stone, of Kirtland, Ohio.

The delegates were cared for by friends of the congregation in Bloomsburg, and a vote of thanks was tendered them for this assistance.

Our correspondent from Petrolia, Ontario, writes under date of October 27: "Our branch is small, and we have no church building, so meetings are held in a private house. We are looking forward to having a church and hope then to see the work progress."

Lamoni Stake Items

Familiar faces of a number of returned missionaries are seen among us this week, they having come home to vote. Among them are E. E. Long, C. E. Harpe, G. R. Wells, W. D. Tordoff. Others voted by absent voter's ballot.

The Patronesses of Graceland, perhaps, benefited more than anyone else from election day in Lamoni. They were a busy group of women on that day and many days previous. A big chicken dinner and supper were served in the basement of the coliseum, one hundred and seventy-five being served at the noon hour alone. They also held a big bazaar from which they sold one hundred and fifty aprons and a number of fancy articles. In the evening a cast picked from among the young business and professional people of the town and their wives presented the comedy drama, "Brown's in town," to a crowded house. The play was a big success in every way. It was directed by Mrs. C. E. Wight. The Patronesses realized as a result of their combined efforts $325 net proceeds. This will enable them to complete their $500 pledge to the gymnasium fund and have a nice balance in the treasury.

The wonderful fall weather we have had this year, and which still continues, has been very conducive to success in series of meetings which are annually held at the rural branches around here. Brother L. G. Holloway just concluded a week's series at Shady Grove, reporting splendid crowds and interest, in fact to the extent that he would like to have continued longer had he not been billed elsewhere. An all-day meeting at Blythedale to-day starts a series of services at that place with Brother Holloway as speaker.

Elder W. E. Prall was in Pershing last week, where he preached each evening, the meetings lasting over two Sundays with good interest. Sister Prall surprised her husband by slipping up to Pershing for the week end at the request of the Saints there.

A splendid crowd attended the sacramental service last Sunday. Nothing unusual characterized the meeting. Brother Roy Cheville has been addressing the priesthood at their monthly meetings on the history of the Bible. The series was continued last Sunday. The evening concert by the Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society was unusually fine. It consisted of a solo by Miss Doris Gieselman, of the Graceland faculty, a violin number by Sister Emma Snead, an anthem by the oratorio society, and a quartet number by Miss Gieselman, Sister Mabel Carlile, Evan Fry, and George Gates. Brother C. E. Wight preached in the evening on "Do we need Jesus?"

Radio fans are anxiously waiting for the broadcasting to begin at Graceland with their improved equipment. It was expected to be ready last Sunday, but a storm caused delay.

The boys of the intermediate department of the Sunday school enjoyed a picnic to the north woods under the supervision of their superintendent, Roy Cheville, and Brother Fred Condit, Thursday. Their pastor, C. E. Wight, was an invited guest. There were twenty-six of the boys who enjoyed supper around a bonfire.

The class of young ladies taught by Tess Morgan enjoyed a Halloween party at the home of Miss Doris Braby. These social events serve to keep alive the spirit of cooperation outside of regular Sunday school hours.

The Saints here are rejoicing over the election of Brother Oscar Anderson to the state legislature. He was elected representative from Decatur County on the Republican ticket.

The Children's Home reports eight children for adoption. Homes among the Saints are desired for these children.

Seven of the number are boys ranging in age from four to seventeen years. The one girl is twelve years old. Those who can give home comfort and church and school advantages to these homeless children should correspond with the secretary, Mrs. Clara B. Stebbins, Lamoni, Iowa.

Holden Stake News

Holden

The women have sewed carpet rags and had rugs woven. They have netted a nice little sum, which has been used to help on church expenses in different ways. Sister Adah Spohrer is a faithful leader.

Atherton

Brother Ralph W. Farrell was with us a couple of weeks ago and gave a splendid sermon. Brother J. S. Roth preached last Sunday, and it was indeed a spiritual feast. He is an old soldier of the cross, being eighty-three years of age. His mind was clear and his voice as in his youth.

Sister Sarah Rodgers Chapman finished her demonstrations in home nursing, but the women will continue the study, using a textbook recommended by Sister Chapman. We certainly appreciate the work of our sister, who so willingly gave her services.

Quite a large representation from Atherton was at the stake conference held at Holden.

Brother J. J. Boswell occupied last evening. The Saints were glad to have him with us, as he resided among us from the beginning of the work at Atherton until last summer, when he moved to Iowa.

The Dorcas Circle gave a social last week and netted a neat sum of money which will be added to the building fund.

Kansas City Stake ItemsCentral*

At the stake conference to be held next Sunday, President Frederick M. Smith will be the speaker at the eleven o'clock service, and Stake Missionary W. I. Fligg will occupy at a quarter of eight.

Fourth Church

Recent speakers have been Brothers R. S. Salyards, E. T. Atwell, W. L. Gates, James Bunt, F. S. Anderson, and Patriarch Ammon White, the latter giving several patriarchal blessings.

A healthful condition prevails at this church, which is manifested in activity in the work and play and worship, all of which is entered into with zest. They are trying to outrank their record of last year, in which they were second in the stake in Sanitarium contributions. Sister Eltzroth is the untiring leader in this laudable undertaking.

A group of married Saints are organized to promote interesting and educational entertainment for all. Their first number was by Postmaster William E. Morton on "The post office as a public servant." They work under the name of "Servo Club."

Armourdale

The Oriole Girls, with Sister Sanders as leader, are doing some very commendable work, quite an active interest being shown by them in all lines of their work. Elder John Gross, pastor, was speaker at the eleven o'clock service the nineteenth, which was spiritual and timely. A box supper was given October 23 by the young men's class and the Department of Women at the home of Brother and Sister Powell, at which a good social time was had.

Elder Roy E. Brown was a recent speaker.

The Religio attendance is increasing, forty being present at the last meeting.

The four lots next to our meeting place have been leased for two years to be fixed up for an athletic ground for the community and a place for social gatherings.

Malvern Hill

Sunday, November 9, was celebrated as Graceland College Day, and a great deal of interest in that institution was aroused. In the morning the program was given by Brothers George and Joseph Anway, while in the evening four other Graceland students presented a very fine program.

The Saints here are justly proud of their new church which has recently been completed. The building is small, but is artistically and conveniently planned.

IndependenceStone Church*

The First Independence Sunday school will hold its rally day services on Sunday, November 16. The children in the beginner, primary, and junior departments were provided with special invitations for their parents and friends on last Sunday, and the plan is to have them accompany their boys and girls to Sunday school next Sunday and become better acquainted with the work being done in these three departments. In the main auditorium the rally day services will be continued through from half past nine in the morning until twelve o'clock. Short addresses on the following topics are being provided: "Our Sunday school in action," "Living epistles," "Lesson and teaching aims," "Sunday school financing," "The big opportunity of our school," "Sunday school extension work," which, together with special numbers by the orchestra, promises a pleasant and profitable time to those who rally to the Sunday school call next Sunday.

The regular monthly meeting of the Department of Women was held at the Stone Church November 7. An interesting program was given consisting of two solos sung by Mrs. H. C. Burgess; a talk by Mrs. L. W. Ballenger on "The activities of the young people at Liberty Street Church"; a talk by Miss Lillian Zimmermann, dean of the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, on "Organization of girls"; a talk on the cradle roll by a member, followed by a talk on "Supervised play for children," by Mrs. Charles Cox, supervisor of the kindergarten department. Mrs. R. D. Etzenhouser, president of the Parent-Teacher Council, told the needs of Independence schools and urged those present to attend their Parent-Teacher Association meetings.

This meeting was followed by a session of the Frances Willard Chapter of the W. C. T. U., at which Mrs. Herbert Barto was made chairman of the anti-narcotic committee and Mrs. Anne Friend Roberts was put in charge of the relief work.

Brother and Sister Fred Hanson, father and mother of Apostle Paul M. Hanson, celebrated their golden wedding November 6. All their children were present except Paul, who is now in London. Many useful presents were received, as well as beautiful yellow chrysanthemums. Forty-five old friends were in to spend the evening.

The framework for the new radio studio is now under construction at the Stone Church, and it will not be long before the new station will be ready to operate.

President Frederick M. Smith, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Ellis Short, sr., and Ellis Short, jr., drove to Webb City, Missouri, to attend conference there Saturday and Sunday. They returned Monday.

Mrs. William Ecclestone has now returned from England where she spent nearly four months visiting relatives and friends. She reports rather unfavorable conditions there.

Second Church

The young people met at eight o'clock in prayer meeting and had several visitors, among them being Brother and Sister Cowan, who gave them encouraging words and instruction.

At the eleven o'clock service Honorable J. Allen Prewitt made a short talk on Safety, being delegated to our church by the Independence Chamber of Commerce. We were glad to make his acquaintance. The principal speaker at this service was Sister Fannie Pender, former missionary to the Isle of Pines, who was warmly received, and many requests were made for her return. Her address was full of information and good spirit.

Bishop J. A. Becker was the evening speaker along financial lines, receiving a strong welcome and an invitation to return and help in the priesthood meeting next Sunday.

Young people's rally day begins at eight o'clock next Sunday morning, with a prayer and testimony meeting. Special work will occupy the Sunday school hour, and at eleven o'clock Bishop James F. Keir will speak on the "Tragedy of choice." Sunday evening President Frederick M. Smith will address the young people, and all are looking forward to this service. Full programs are provided for each service, and we expect a real rally of the young people.

Walnut Park

The speakers Sunday at Walnut Park were J. A. Becker in the morning and R. J. Lambert in the evening—both speaking on financial matters of importance to the congregation.

The ladies of Group 28, Mrs. Laura Mosier, leader, deserve mention because of their diligence in behalf of the building fund. Every Thursday they meet to quilt and have work engaged for weeks ahead. One day twelve women at one of these meetings knotted sixteen comforts.

Missionary Birch Whiting and family, from Saskatchewan, have located for the winter near the church in Walnut Park.

Members of Brother W. H. Gard's class of young people have been asked to take charge of the Sunday school sessions for the month of November. While the experience is doing them good, their help is likewise encouraging to every other worker.

The Walnut Park choir having been invited to sing at the Stone Church Sunday evening, a double quartet from the Stone Church came to sing at Walnut Park, and their numbers were thoroughly appreciated.

Liberty Street

The ladies of the groups attending Liberty Street Church are planning to serve an old-fashioned New England Thanksgiving dinner at Liberty Hall across the street from the church Thanksgiving Day, to be assisted by the Temple Builders and the Sons of Zion. Tickets will be sold for fifty cents each, and it is hoped that these people will receive the hearty support of all who can attend.

Elder Joseph Luff was the speaker Sunday morning, giving one of his characteristically good sermons. In the evening Bishop James F. Keir gave a very fine sermon on "The enduring thing."

Englewood

The time of meeting for the Religio has been changed from Friday night to Sunday evening at a quarter of six.

The women of this group are to have an all-day meeting on Wednesday of this week to prepare for their bazaar which will be held soon.

Brother John Davis gave a very interesting sermon Sunday morning, and A. M. Chase, missionary, spoke in the evening.

East Independence

The Saints enjoyed a visit from Bishop B. R. McGuire Sunday morning, and his sermon was very much appreciated. Brother John W. Rushton, who accompanied him, made a few appreciated remarks after the sermon. Brother William Bath was the evening speaker. There were quite a number of visitors from Independence in the evening.

Brother C. Ed. Miller, who is in the pastor's office at Independence during the illness of Brother R. V. Hopkins, will address the priesthood at the church at eight o'clock Tuesday evening.

A business session will be held next Sunday morning after church to decide whether or not to fix the church so as to hold meetings in it this winter. The Saints are very much crowded for room, so are anxious to get into larger quarters.

Enoch Hill

The speakers at Enoch Hill Sunday were Brother D. T. Chapman in the morning and Apostle F. Henry Edwards in the evening.

Holden Home to Celebrate Anniversary of Opening

On November 20 the Holden Home celebrates its seventh anniversary, and Sister Edith Carr, matron, extends an invitation on behalf of the members of the Home to their friends to be present and enjoy the day with them. Dinner will be served at noon, and a bazaar will be held in the afternoon, at which time the fancywork, rugs, and other products of the home members will be displayed for sale. A program will be given in the evening in the home auditorium.

It will be appreciated if those planning to attend will drop a card to the matron, so she will know about how many to provide for.

Davidson, Oklahoma

October 29.—The Saints here are very busy gathering their cotton, working day and night to get it picked and ginned, so only a few attended the midweek prayer meeting. Those who do meet, however, are always blessed with good spiritual meetings.

There is still good interest in the Sunday school and the other departments, but we do not have preaching very often.

The Saints are praying and looking forward to the time when they can have regular preaching services.

Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania

October 31.—The New York and Philadelphia district conference was held here October 25 and 26. The branch had quite a lot of work in preparation, for the church had been painted and a floor was put in the basement. Also a new sidewalk was put in, and many other necessary things were done that cost money and our own labor. The Department of Women contributed nobly towards the expenses.

The conference had its delegation from Brooklyn, New York, Philadelphia, Connecticut, Scranton, and Archibald. About eighty-five visitors were cared for. Also several people in the local who are interested attended.

The press accorded us a column for reporting the conference.

While the visitors were far too many for so small a branch, we have standing invitations to accommodate the Saints at any future time free of charge. We feel grateful as a branch and are encouraged as to future prospects of the Lord's work.

A splendid spirit prevailed throughout the entire session. Brothers Stoft and Stone were the preachers of the conference.

Western Montana District Reunion

The majority of Saints enjoy a reunion. Even those who have the privileges of a branch take pleasure in attending reunion services. But to the Saints who hear a sermon once a year, and whose daily associates are aliens to the latter-day work, what measure can be placed on the amount of social enjoyment and spiritual benefit that is derived from attending a ten-day reunion.

The Western Montana reunion was held at Race Track, a little station a few miles east of Deer Lodge.

The grounds are ideal for camping, and the owner of the place, although not a member of the church, is friendly to the Saints and would not accept pay for the use of the land.

The burden of preparing for the reunion fell upon the members of the Deer Lodge and Race Track Branches, for the Saints are so widely scattered that few live near enough to be of much help in the preparation for the camping.

The length of the reunion was ten days, beginning August 15. The first day, however, was devoted to getting the people settled.

The following morning the first service was a prayer meeting in charge of Elder G. W. Thorburn, missionary in charge. There was marked evidence of the presence of the divine Spirit. And this was the beginning of the spiritual feast that was spread for the Saints who hungered and thirsted for righteousness. Our good Brother Thorburn has been preaching to the Montana Saints for over ten years, and his sermons were better than ever. The other speakers were Sister Blanche Edwards and Apostle D. T. Williams. Their addresses and sermons were greatly appreciated. And who can tell how much good was done? The Saints gathered in from the valleys and over the mountains. One brother and family came in their Ford a distance of two hundred and sixty miles. There were four baptisms.

Besides the spiritual feature of the reunion, there was also the social side, and the older people renewed their youth when they gathered with the young folk around the blazing bonfires to tell stories, sing songs, roast wieners, and eat taffy.

At the close of the reunion it was voted to have another like gathering at the same place next year.

Attention, Montana Saints who were not present: You don't know what you missed. Make your plans to come next year.

Press Committee.

All Departments Working

FARGO, NORTH DAKOTA, October 28.—The Saints here have donated towards redecorating and cleaning up the church, and the work is now in progress, so it is hoped that ere long our bungalow chapel will put on a neat appearance that will make all feel like cleaning up their lives and renewing their covenants to correspond with the place of worship, making it a more inviting place for outsiders as well as Saints.

The Saints regret very much to learn that Sister Ferne Shackow, our Religio superintendent, is to leave this week for Independence. The time of meeting for this organization has been changed from Friday to Sunday evening at a quarter of seven, to be followed by song practice. We feel that it is quite necessary to take up this work again, as not much chorus work was done during the summer months. We sometimes find ourselves not keeping pace with the music, and the Spirit of singing is much more enjoyed when correct time is kept.

The social committee of the Religio is planning for a Halloween party, the smaller children to be entertained at the home of Brother John Rotzien from four to six, while the young folks and adults will enjoy an outdoor party and wiener roast at the home of Sister Dora Delhi in the evening.

The Saints here are sad over the loss of Brother W. D. Thompson, who died recently at the Independence Sanitarium of cancer of the stomach. The remains were brought back to Clifford, North Dakota, where funeral services were held by Elder William Sparling of Minot. A faithful brother has gone to rest.

Elder J. W. Peterson passed through here on his way home from Canada. Saints regret that he could not stay and give us a few sermons.

The Department of Women meets every two weeks at the sisters' homes and enjoys studying together.

Sunday school is held every Sunday morning at ten o'clock, and we hope to keep up all the departments and forge ahead, in faith believing, "He who endures to the end shall be saved."

Fairview, Montana

October 21.—Bad weather has prevented meeting here for several Sundays, but last Sunday was fair, so services were held, some coming thirty-five miles by automobile.

The speaker of the hour was a visitor from Andes, Brother Stanley Fout, recently ordained to the priesthood. This is his second sermon, and it was enjoyed by all.

The Christian Church is about to hold some meetings in the building occupied by the branch. The several attempts of other denominations in this building have aroused very little interest so far.

Meetings at Maple Grove Great Success

STEWARTSVILLE, MISSOURI, October 27.—Three weeks ago a series of meetings was advertised to be held at Maple Grove Church, four miles north of Stewartville, with Apostle E. J. Gleazer as the speaker.

The first meeting was held Sunday evening, October 12, as previously advertised, and Brother Gleazer was greeted by a full house. The meetings continued each evening for two weeks, when Brother Gleazer was compelled to leave us because of engagements at Saint Louis. However, the meetings did not close until the following Sunday evening, as we were able to secure the services of Elder John F. Sheehy of Cameron. Brother Sheehy is a forceful speaker, and his message was happily received. The sermons throughout the series were an inspiration to all, nonmembers as well as members.

On October 21 Brother Gleazer directed his talk to the young people, and many came from towns near by, including Cameron, Stewartville, and Pleasant Grove. Standing room was at a premium. The speaker urged the necessity for full consecration, and the young people unanimously arose to their feet as an expression of willingness to consecrate their all to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God, that righteousness may be established. At the close of this meeting, as an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, Brother Gleazer pronounced a blessing upon all. The Spirit of the Master was present.

The last Friday evening four names were given for baptism, and arrangements were made for the baptismal service to be held Sunday afternoon at a large pond located near the church, Elder Sheehy officiating. Those baptized were formerly affiliated with the Baptist Church. Confirmation was held at a quarter of seven in the evening preceding the services. Thus closed another successful series of meetings.

Brother Gleazer came to us almost a stranger, having met only a few at reunion in August, but his conduct as a servant of Christ and the character of his sermons made us feel that indeed a man of God was with us. May the blessings of our heavenly Father attend him in his ministry is our prayer.

Glasgow, Montana

October 28.—Glasgow has been favored by a visit from our only missionary to the State of Montana, Elder George W. Thorburn, of Deer Lodge, Montana. He came on Tuesday, October 7, addressing the pupils and teachers of the high school on the 10th. He spoke several times to the Saints and friends who came to hear, and his sermons were delivered with earnestness and were filled with good counsel.

Elder Thorburn was to go to the country near Vandalia, where Elder James C. Page baptized five in August, but one of the worst storms in the history of this country struck Sunday morning, the 11th, making the roads impassable for some time. Telegraph and telephone poles were down for many miles around.

A very pleasant social feature occurred Saturday evening, October 10, when at the home of Brother and Sister James C. Page the Oriole Circle entertained the officers of the branch, Sunday school, and Religio.

Sister Irene Page, wife of the branch president, was taken suddenly ill October 16 and had to be taken to the hospital. On the 27th she underwent a serious operation, and is still in a critical condition.

Nimrod Davis, a full-blood Indian, elder in the Mormon Church and president of their mission on the Fort Peck Reservation, attended all the services October 26, asked many questions, and ordered a Doctrine and Covenants.

The Sunday school has had an increased attendance, with fifty-six present on the 26th and almost that many the week before. The Religio has held only one session in October, the hall in which it meets being used for political purposes.

Elder Elmer D. Chase, superintendent of the Sunday school, has just returned home after an absence of two months. In his absence the school was ably conducted by Joseph Sandidge, assistant superintendent.

District conference is to be held at Andes, Montana, November 8 and 9. Some from here are planning to go.

Moorhead, Iowa

October 29. During the last month the following speakers have occupied our pulpit: District President Joseph Lane; A. J. Moore, of Bozeman, Montana, who occupied for a number of evenings; also the locals according to their turn.

The Jordan pulpit was occupied three times on October 19 by Elder R. A. Ballantyne, of Lamoni, Iowa; also several evenings during the time he was visiting among friends and relatives in this and Soldier vicinities. The Saints would have been pleased if he could have prolonged his visit and occupied at the local church, over which he presided for several years. It is gratifying to the Saints to realize that the brother whom they learned to love is still energetically engaged in the Lord's work. Brother Ballantyne was accompanied by his wife and son Don, whom all were pleased to meet again.

Elder C. B. Woodstock and family of Mondamin motored to Moorhead Sunday afternoon, October 26, after attending services at Little Sioux. They were guests at the home of Brother and Sister C. R. Hield. Brother Hield was the speaker the evening of October 28 at the schoolhouse north of Little Sioux, at which place Brother Joseph Lane is conducting a series of meetings.

Elder Mark Jensen occupied the Pisgah pulpit on Sunday morning, October 19, and at Jordan Church the evening of October 26.

This community was greatly shocked on Monday afternoon to learn of the death of Brother Rasmus Mortensen who had been ill for only a few days and whose condition was not considered serious until a few hours before his death. Brother Mortensen was one of the many who united with the church a few years ago during a series of meetings held here by Daniel Macgregor. He has proved himself to be one of the faithful ones and will be greatly missed. He leaves a devoted wife and four children, all grown except one son. The funeral will be held October 31, at which time his son Leo is expected to arrive from the West.

Brother A. J. Moore, of Bozeman, Montana, who arrived last week to renew acquaintances with the Wilson families whom he met in the West many years ago, has been busy preaching and doing fireside visiting among the Saints. His many experiences and kindly counsel and advice have proved of much worth to the Saints, and his visit has been enjoyed by all.

The Department of Women will serve meals election day.

EDITORIAL

No Union of Church and State; Church Not in Politics

Late in September we received from two different sources the following extract. One was from the Iowa Courier, printed at Des Moines. The other from the Michigan Courier. The two items were exactly alike and under the same date, and differed only in the title assigned. This clipping without the heading is as follows:

GAUTIER, MISS., Aug. 18.—The reorganized church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are holding their annual reunion of the Mobile district in this city.

While this church disclaims unity with the Mormon church of Utah, it nevertheless acknowledges the same founder and therefore its faith rests upon the tablet of new law, alleged to have been delivered by the angel Mormoni to Joseph Smith in a Biblical supplement, so to speak.

While Klansmen accord to each man the constitutional right to worship God as he sees fit, they nevertheless stand unalterably opposed to the union of church and state under any name and any creed, and they may well view with concern the spread of another politico-religious institution alien to American ideals.

Political Mormonism is now in control of three states and is reaching out to the four corners of this continent.

At a recent election in Salt Lake City the contending factions were the Mormons and the American party. The slogan of the latter was "Separation of Church and State." A Mormon bishop was elected mayor over his opponents by a majority of 5018 votes and the two commissioners referred to as "church candidates" were Mormons.

Mormonism is builded upon the enslavement of women and autocracy of its clergy and the sword for its enemies.

The heading in one instance was, "United Church and State upheld by Mormon sect"; and in the other, "Mormons raise Roman issue in Gautier, Mississippi, emulate hierarchy's example by bringing out 'Church candidates.'"

Every member of our church knows that this assertion is not correct; that there is no such dominance or union of church and state. The following statement has therefore been sent from the Historical Department to both of these publications:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 28, 1924.

To the Editor of the Iowa Courier,
Des Moines, Iowa.

Dear Sir: There has recently come to our hands a copy of the Iowa Courier for August 22, including an item from Gautier, Mississippi, dated August 18, with reference to a reunion held by members of our church at that place. Since we on the same day received the identical item from another Courier published in the East, this item evidently has been broadcast to your organizations.

The correspondent who sent the clipping from your paper assures us that he believes you are entirely willing to be fair and will gladly publish a correction. We hope you may also be instrumental in having the item corrected in other papers of your organization in which the original item has appeared.

It is quite true that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints accepts Joseph Smith as a good man and a prophet of God and believes that he translated the Book of Mormon by inspiration. It is quite true that we not only claim but can readily prove that there is no connection whatever between this church and the church of Utah. We have no defense to make as to the interference in Utah in political affairs, but desire to point out clearly if briefly that the original church from 1830 to 1844 neither taught nor practiced such church domination in political affairs.

Second, that the Reorganized Church has never at any time, directly or indirectly, officially or in any other way, by its officers or anyone else, attempted any direction in politics of its church membership.

As to the position of the original church, I refer you to Doctrine and Covenants 58:5, "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keeps the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land." The law of the land you will agree provides clearly independence of church and state.

Then, Doctrine and Covenants 95:2, dated August, 1833, states that the constitutional law of the land is justifiable and should be upheld. Further, that honest men and wise men should be sought for diligently. Good men and wise men we should observe to uphold. This is a correct principle and is broad and general, as it states that individually we should endeavor to find honest and wise men, and that is the duty of all men.

Doctrine and Covenants 98:10 states: "... Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose."

In August, 1835, a general assembly was held to consider the adoption of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. While in session there was adopted a declaration on government and laws in general. The statement repeats what is set forth above and states clearly the position of the church. This whole document, Doctrine and Covenants 112, will repay careful reading. Paragraph 9 in particular is of present interest;

"We do not believe it just to mingle religious influence with civil government, whereby one religious society is fostered and another proscribed in its spiritual privileges, and the individual rights of its members, as citizens, denied."

In fact there is nothing in the Book of Mormon, Book of Doctrine and Covenants, or any other book of the original church so far as we know, that in any way would justify a mixture of church and state.

As to the practice of the church, 1830-44, the clearest statement we have been able to find was by Governor Ford when he stated in his History of Illinois that Joseph Smith said in 1843 that he would not if he could influence any voter in giving his vote; that he considered it a mean business for anyone to attempt to dictate to a people whom they should support in election.

Reorganized Church

Not to take too much of your time, will say that the practice of the Reorganized Church from 1852 on has been one universally of individual independence. In this connection the following statement of Senator Burrows and also of Senator Dubois are of interest:

"The death of Joseph Smith in 1844, however, carried dismay and demoralization throughout the entire membership of the Mormon Church, scattering its adherents in divers directions and for the time being seemed to presage the complete overthrow and dissolution of the organization. Recovering, however, from the shock, the scattered bands soon reappeared in various parts of the country and promulgated their doctrines with increased zeal, and set to work to reassemble and reorganize their scattered forces, resulting finally in the formation of what is now known and recognized as the 'Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,' with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, and presided over by Joseph Smith, a son of the prophet. The courts have repeatedly declared this organization to be the legitimate successor to the original Mormon Church, and its adherents, numbering some 50,000 peaceable, patriotic, and law-abiding citizens scattered throughout the United States in small church societies, conforming to the law of their country wherever they may be and adhering to the faith of the founder of their creed, repudiating and denouncing the doctrine of polygamy and its attendant crimes, without temple, endowment house, or secret order, worship in the open like other church organizations, unquestioned and unmolested."—Speech of Honorable Julius C. Burrows, of Michigan, in the Senate of the United States, Tuesday, December 11, 1906, page 5.

"It is only fair, I think, for me to say—and I am glad the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. Burrows) treated upon it the other day—that there is a branch of the Mormons, called the 'Josephites' who ought to be separated clearly in the minds of all Senators from the Brighamite Mormons. The Josephites claim that they are the custodians of the church as it was founded. They claim that Brigham Young has interjected doctrines into the church which the Mormons did not accept in the beginning. At any rate, however that may be, the Josephite Mormons, with their headquarters at Lamoni, in the State of Iowa, and wherever they are, no matter in what part of the country, are among the best of our citizens in all respects. They do not believe in polygamy; they never practiced polygamy. They discounted it. They do not believe in church dictation in political affairs. They are the same as other church organizations, and to their religion no one has any objection. I am glad to call the attention of the Senators to it, so that in the future we may not confuse the Josephite with the Brighamite Mormons."—Speech of Honorable Fred T. Dubois, of Idaho, in

Joseph Smith, the President of the Reorganized Church from 1860 to his death in 1914, was also editor of the SAINTS' HERALD from 1865 to 1914. For brevity's sake we offer only the following brief extract:

"... it has never been made to appear that an effort has been tried by the present leading men in the Reorganization to dictate to members of the church in political affairs, in either politics, or religion . . .

"It will be seen that we have not written in the interest of any party, but upon a principle of fair and manly treatment of a principle of man toward his brother man. The HERALD is not a political paper, nor its editors politicians. We, however, urge all voters to examine the field and obey the injunction, 'Seek to put good men in office'; using the best judgment of which each may be in possession as to the men, and the policies to be pursued to secure the greatest good to all; and avoid thinking or charging that your brother or your neighbor as honest and as conscientious as you, who thinks and votes differently from you, does so because of partyism, or party domination."—SAINTS' HERALD, September 1, 1888.

The editorial columns frequently quoted with approval criticism against attempt at church control in politics in Utah. Then W. W. Blair, first counselor to President Joseph Smith, was editor of the Saints' Advocate. In the issue for July, 1885, he discussed the difference between the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the Church of Utah. The 11th paragraph, stating the position of the Reorganized Church, is:

"11. That church and state should be kept separate and distinct, as is provided for under our inspired national Constitution. (John 18: 36; Doctrine and Covenants Revelation August, 1831, section 58, latter part of paragraph 5; also article on 'Governments and laws in General,' Section 112; paragraphs 9, 10, 11.)"—Vol. 8, p. 589.

Lamoni, Iowa, was built up by members of this church and a large majority are either members of the church or friendly to it; that is, members of families which belong. Nonchurch members are elected to the local offices probably in greater proportion than their numbers would ordinarily justify.

In Independence, Missouri, the church members are in the minority as they form only about 25 to 30 per cent of the inhabitants. Still, they would form a strong political group if they voted as a unit, but this they do not do. They divide into the two principal political groups, Republican and Democrat, and a few on other tickets. The election of city officers this spring would be a fair example. On the Republican ticket about half of those nominated were members of this church. The Democratic ticket did not have more than one, if memory serves me right. A third party, however, was formed, nominating the retired chief of police, who is a member of our church, for the office of mayor. This drew heavily from the Republican vote, both church and nonchurch members voting for him, with the result that the Democratic ticket elected all of its nominees. You can readily appreciate that if church control were attempted such a condition could not arise.

Frankly, we have been associated with many excellent people, members of the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, and other churches, and there is no more tendency of our people to vote in a unit than there is of these other churches, so far as we are aware. There is only one instance we can recall when it was stated our people voted as a unit in Independence. This was before the Volstead Act, when we voted with the Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and other church members practically as a unit against having saloons in Independence. Our interest in politics is individual and not official.

Since these items have apparently been broadcast, it is very likely that they have been printed in other parts of the country, especially in the South. If so, we would be glad to have our readers call the editors' attention to this reply.

This is only part of what might be said on the subject, for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has never attempted to dictate in politics, and its record is distinctly opposed to any union of church and state. Its position is even stronger, for it affirms that the legally elected and appointed government officials should be upheld; that a religious body has the right to discipline its members only with regard to membership in the church.

All civil suits and most emphatically all actions in any case criminal are triable only before the administration of the law of the land. But no religious society has any authority to try men on rights of life or property or put in jeopardy life or limb or attempt to administer the law of the land. The law of the land and magistrates of the land should be upheld.

We may add that the founders of the church came from New England; not only the family of Joseph Smith, but many others can trace their ancestry back to the early seventeenth century when their forefathers landed on the New England coast. They were brought up with a love for the American Government and are truly one hundred per cent American.

Since writing the above a copy of the Michigan Kourier has come to hand in which the above item is corrected. It will be noted that the correction was made locally and is not the result of letter written from the historian's office.

We naturally appreciate their promptness in making this correction as soon as the information reached them. The account from the Michigan Kourier is as follows:

Utah Mormons Not Latter Day Saints

Re-organized Church Is Real Follower of Joseph Smith
Not Brighamites.

(Special to The Kourier.)

Gautier, Miss., Oct. 20.—Recently there appeared in the Kourier under a Gautier date line, an article in which it was made to appear that the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" is the same as the Mormon Church of Utah or Brighamites.

The article which appeared under the caption, "Mormons Raise Roman issue in Gautier, Miss.," was unfair to the Reorganized Church. Many members of that church in Mississippi are also members of the Klan and are at a loss to understand how such an impression got abroad.

Your correspondent has interviewed many members of the Re-Organized church in Mississippi, some of whom are members of the Klan and some are not, and from these interviews gathers that there is nothing that smacks of a politico-religious trend in the Re-organized Church; for the most part he finds that their principles are in harmony with the best Protestant traditions. One of the ministers of the Reorganized Church in an interview said:

"The Congressional records will show the Utah Mormons to be the apostate of the original faith and that the Reorganized Church is the true successor. I am an ordained minister of the Reorganized church and a member of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan; the Klan has many members here whose names appear on the roster of our church. The Reorganized church is not, never was, nor will it ever be a politico-religious institution. The Mormons or Brighamites of Utah are, their founder being Brigham Young and not Joseph Smith, the original founder.

Missionary Work in Western Iowa

I came into Western Iowa the latter part of August to attend the Glenwood reunion, having been assigned to this work by the general reunion committee. We had a joyous time—not one incident to mar our peace. We were just a body of Saints and friends met together to worship God, to revive old associations, and to spend ten days in social intercourse and fellowship.

And who could not do his best at preaching under such circumstances! The preaching was of a high order. I recall with keen pleasure even now the sermons by my brethren, Martin and Chase and Putnam and Hansen and Kelley and Fry. I was assigned to care for the night sessions. My heart was glad, for this gave me opportunity to preach the old Jerusalem gospel to the nonmembers who assembled nightly to hear our message. The universal acclaim was that this, indeed, had been a glorious reunion.

At the close of this meeting I was approached by the district president of the Pottawattamie District, the branch president and counselors of the Council Bluffs Branch, as well as the missionary supervisor of the two districts, and urged to remain and assist in an intensive missionary campaign which was to be put on in Council Bluffs. Under the circumstances I could not well refuse.

I consented, thinking that these services would last a week or ten days. What was my surprise to find that in less than a week we were not able to care for the people, though we had a tent forty by sixty feet compactly seated. On the second Sunday we were under the necessity of holding an overflow meeting in the mission church near by. We continued week after week until we had run five Sundays, and closed the series with one of the largest crowds on the last night. The tent on this evening was literally packed thirty minutes before meeting was to begin, and we were under the necessity of turning many away.

What a joy comes to one's heart to see the people so anxious and eager to hear the gospel story. For we were determined that throughout the series we would preach nothing but "repentance to this generation." And God was with us to the strengthening of the Saints and the conversion of the honest in heart. Some thirty were baptized in Council Bluffs, and the work was built up, the Saints encouraged, and united.

I wish to express my sincere appreciation of the whole-hearted support given by district and branch authorities and to Brother Putnam, the missionary supervisor, who so generously gave way and insisted that I do practically all of the preaching, although he managed and conducted the meetings with skill. This experience clearly demonstrates that almost anything is possible when the Saints are united and working as one man to extend the kingdom of God in the earth.

The brethren to a man gave themselves to help. The Sunday night meetings in missions and Central Church were discontinued, and we were supported in our work by the Council Bluffs choir, which rendered excellent music for a half hour before each service. A number of artists, both from Omaha and Council Bluffs, although not members of the church, volunteered assistance. I certainly thank God for the privilege to work with these dear people. It was an opportunity which will never be forgotten. We were blessed in song and story.

And just as we closed these meetings I received an urgent request from Brother Lane, the district president of the Little Sioux District, and Brother Fred Fry, branch president at Woodbine, Iowa, to come to those points and hold some meetings. I came for a short series, thinking that possibly a week-end would suffice. Have been here four weeks, holding meetings nightly and two and three times on Sunday. I am told that they never have had such an interest before in the history of the work in Woodbine. Saints who were cold and indifferent have been revived, and we have baptized, so far, five precious souls, four of whom are the first of their immediate family to unite with the church. One of these was a prominent elder in the Christian Church.

The Saints and friends are clamorous for the meetings to continue, but I cannot remain indefinitely, so have concluded to close this week. I have had a ten-week vacation, so to speak. Have preached some ninety sermons and have been instrumental, with my associates, in inducting thirty-five souls into the kingdom of Christ. And to me one of the most precious things is that I have been renewed in spirit and cheered in mind and heartened in soul and body. There is nothing in all this world more satisfying and renewing than to be able to tell the gospel story.

There is no place I know of in all the world more inviting for the preaching of the gospel than in Western Iowa. There is little, if any, prejudice. Our people have established themselves throughout the land. Their lives have done more than aught else to remove the antipathy to our religion. The people are ready for an affirmative gospel. And this is what we gave them throughout.

It was in this country where, in my early ministry, I was remarkably and wonderfully blessed. It was here that I met the Reverend Charles W. Savage and where God closed his mouth so he could not speak. Here I met Davis H. Bays, one-time member of the church, and as a result the work was built up at Mondamin. Two other experiences were the debate with Braden at Fontanelle and the one at Tabor with Blalock. It is soul-satisfying after some twenty-seven years to return and be welcomed with open arms and loving hearts—many of whom I blessed as children, or baptized, or officiated in the ceremony which made two as one.

Recompense comes to one for all sacrifice made or service rendered in the glad hand and the moist eye and trembling lip when men and women come and tell you how, in the years that are past, you have been instrumental in bringing them into fellowship with Jesus Christ. There are some things which time, nor change, nor circumstance, can ever take away from one, and those are the joys which are without alloy, in knowing that through your weak efforts souls have come into communion with our Father in heaven.

Thank God for the gospel. Thank God for this latter-day work. Thank God for sending the angel again to earth with the everlasting gospel to preach to all the peoples of the earth. May we each one be true to our trust, and may God help us so that in no way shall we sully our record or bring discredit on the Cause, which is dearer to all of us than our very lives. May his Spirit guide and bless and direct during all these dark and cloudy days and lead us safely through into the clear field of intensive endeavor and the unity of which we dream and for which we daily pray.

Eighty Years of Age November 17

BISHOP EDMUND L. KELLEY

The friends and former working companions of Bishop Edmund L. Kelley have been anticipating a celebration of his eightieth birthday for some weeks, thinking to remind him that they have been and are full of appreciation for his example of devotion and hopeful activity through all the years of the past, and for his interest and kind words of encouragement at the present hour.

He was born November 17, 1844, and spent his childhood and early manhood in strenuous preparation for the years of his activity, and because of his faith in God, his strong physique and virile mind, and the careful preparation he had made, he became a polished shaft in the hands of God.

Under his direction as Presiding Bishop, Graceland College, the Saints' Home, and Liberty Home at Lamoni, Iowa, were constructed, and with their working organizations he had much to do.

Later he removed to Independence and began active work for the development of the City of Zion, and not until long after he had passed his seventieth year did the Lord say it was enough and release him from the burden of the office of Presiding Bishop of the church.

Monday evening a number of his former working companions, among them being the chief men of the church at Independence, went to the home of Brother and Sister Kelley to celebrate with them, taking tokens of esteem, and plenty of cheer. Among the most effective means of cheering these good people were a number of letters received from former presidents and faculty members of Graceland College, all of whom had worked with the Bishop in conducting this institution of learning. The company enjoyed the privilege of reading these missives, and they remain to brighten the days of this worthy man.

The church remembers the office work, the devotion, the skill, but we believe above and beyond all, the hopeful spirit of this man whom God chose to act as one of the leaders of the church through many years of conflict and stress during the reconstruction. The HERALD wishes him well.

A Book of Interest to Latter Day Saints

The Burton Publishing Company is advertising a handsome 12 mo. of about three hundred pages, described as a character sketch of the prophet, Frederick Madison Smith. The author is Ruth Lyman Smith, and the work is said to be in narrative form, giving particular attention to the years of childhood, youth, and young manhood, and the impelling forces which have determined the course of his life.

Sister Smith tells us that the book was recently advertised with other books to the 9,000 school-teachers assembled in Convention Hall, Kansas City, Missouri, at their state meeting.

We note there are eleven chapters, and these are the titles: "At Sister Marietta's party"; "State University of Iowa"; "The Class of 1898"; "Our engagement"; "The wedding"; "A cross country idyl"; "The fourth generation"; "Last years in Lamoni"; "Another sheepskin"; "Our ecclesiastical cousins" (the Utah people); "The man at home"; "Ph. D."; "Publicity" (incidents surrounding the death of his father, Joseph Smith); "Ordination"; "His message."

The volume is bound in gold stamped cloth, and may be purchased of book dealers, or will be mailed postpaid from the Burton Publishing Company, 3629 Central, Kansas City, Missouri, for $1.50 a copy.

Progress On New Radio Station

NEW TOWERS AND RADIO BUILDING READY FOR USE BEFORE CHRISTMAS—1000-WATT BROADCASTER UNDER CONSTRUCTION

Forty Tons of Reinforced Concrete Foundations for One Tower

A giant radio tower will shortly replace the old structure, the lower part of which is visible in the photograph at the left. The old tower, erected in 1915, has served its purpose well. Some comparisons of the two towers may help to give an idea of the substantial construction of the new one.

The base of the old tower is sixteen feet square; that of the new one is twenty-eight feet square. There is four times as much concrete in one of the foundations or footings for the new tower as in all footings of the old structure. Two-inch angle material is used in the lower posts of the old tower while that of the new has dimensions three times as great.

As soon as the concrete foundations have properly cured, the steel experts will begin erection of the 150-foot tower. In the meantime the tower on the church will have been completed. The contract for erection of the towers calls for completion of the job about December first—incidentally, the closing date of the radio drive.

Two-Story Structure Specially Designed for Radio Use

By the time this article is published it is expected that the new radio building will have been completed, except for interior trim, painting, etc. The location of the building, between the Stone Church and Dining Hall, is such as to permit the shortest possible lead-in from the new T-type Antenna.

On the second floor will be located the new studio, reception room, equipment, and operating room, and power supply (battery) room. The walls, floors, and ceilings are of special sound-proof construction. Between the sheathing and studding of the operating room, metal sheeting has been secured to shield the room from electrical effects.

The Radio Studio will have a number of new constructional features which will put it ahead of many of the foremost studios of the country.

NOVEMBER LAST MONTH OF RADIO DRIVE—YOUR HELP NEEDED

Let's Finish This Job Right

The radio committee reports a splendid response to the request for funds to build the new 1000-watt radiocaster. Many branches have "gone over the top." But not quite enough money has been received to complete the new installation. Recent Government regulations compel us to qualify for a Class One (formerly Class B) broadcasting license if we use more than 500 watts. This means that our station must comply with all the stringent requirements for a Class One License.

Help Make Effective This Slogan: "Every Ear Shall Hear"—By Radio

Contribute Generously—Do It Now

Every church member should gladly contribute towards the completion of this splendidly designed broadcasting station. Those who have withheld their contributions until they could actually see that a 1000-watt station would be built need not wait longer to give their assistance. Think of it—The new towers and building are nearly completed! What is required now is money to finish the 1000-watt broadcasting equipment. Give your donation to your branch solicitor or mail it to Radio K F I X, Independence, Missouri. Do it now!!

The General Conference Auditorium

BY BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, PRESIDING BISHOP

Recently we received a letter from a brother in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, asking the following questions concerning the General Conference Auditorium:

1. What amount has been raised to date?
2. Has the money, raised through public voluntary contribution for a specific purpose, been used for any other purpose by being loaned, invested, or used to defray expenses not in harmony with the lawful specified intent?
3. If so, quote your legal authority for such action, giving complete reference to the Missouri Code of Corporation Law, and also enactment of the assembled general church conference granting such authority and date of passage.
4. At what date is it contemplated to start the erection of this auditorium, and if no date has been set, can you estimate a date which in your personal opinion will permit of a start being made on this program?
5. If no date can be estimated, give a reason therefor and cause of delay.

We believe the Saints will appreciate a full account of this project from its inception; so, besides giving the following categorical replies to the questions propounded, we present detailed information:

1. The amount of money asked for was $500,000; the amount subscribed $878,000; actually received in various forms $481,137.92.
2. Following there is a statement of this account as of October 1, in detail. Part of the amount has been loaned to the general church, part has been invested, part is held in cash, certificates of deposit, and Government bonds. The loans and investments are lawful and regular.
3. There is no statute in Missouri designating the kind of securities in which trustees should invest, but the courts of the State recognize the general principle of law which is quoted hereinafter. Our action is in accord with General Conference Resolutions also quoted.
4. We cannot give the date when work on the building will begin, as necessary preliminaries on which the committee is already engaged must be completed.
5. We are proceeding with the project as rapidly as is consistent with safety.

Before 1920 the matter of providing an assembly building had received some consideration. However, during General Conference, 1920, this matter crystallized as follows:

It was moved and seconded "that this General Conference place itself on record as approving the proposition and measure suggested by the First Presidency in reference to a General Conference building" (Minutes, page 3019). "The interest of the audience was such that it was decided immediately to take subscriptions for erection of the new conference building. There was a spirited response and the sum of $38,000, approximately, was subscribed before adjournment of the session." (Page 3019.)

Afterwards this proposition was submitted to the entire church. This the Bishopric did through a special campaign of two weeks in October, 1920, in which the whole machinery of the church was brought into operation: $500,000 was asked for; $878,000 was subscribed in pledges, part of which was paid in cash.

Business Depression

It has not yet been forgotten that the financial and business depression resulting from the World War, which began the latter part of the year 1919, reached a crisis about November 1, 1920. The splendid effort of the Saints to raise the auditorium fund was thus interrupted. The following quotations will show the situation in the United States and that the rest of civilization was in a much worse plight. As many of our members belong to the farming community, the following quotation from the Kansas City Star will be of particular interest:

	October 1, 1920	December 1, 1920
Fed steers .....	$17.50	$14.25
Hogs—good to choice .....	15.60	10.00
March wheat .....	2.06½	1.46¾
May corn .....	.88%	.61¼
May oats .....	.60	.44½

The following headlines in the Star of October 1, 1920, also show the trend:

Price decline keeps on, wholesalers have joined procession. Sugar drop hits dealers hard. Values have shrunk 250,000,000 dollars.

It was estimated by Mr. Hoover that there were four million men out of employment in the United States when President Harding took his oath of office in March, 1921.

Up to January 31, 1921, we had collected only $199,143.70. With this situation confronting us, and knowing that the funds subscribed would be slow in reaching us, and with decline in building prices looked for, it was a question whether it was wise at that time to begin construction.

As late as May 2, 1922, Babson was advising his clients:

Later the time must come when lower prices will be necessary to coax out more contracts . . . certainly the time has not come to build or to buy houses for investment purposes.

In our Bulletin No. 30 to bishops and agents, May 29, 1923, we quoted from Babson's bulletin of May 22, 1923: "If you are planning to build and can wait a year, you will probably save money. If you can wait three to five years you will save a good deal."

Order of Bishops Recommend Postponement

No General Conference was convened in 1921; however, in May of that year the Order of Bishops met at Independence to consider the financial aspect of the church program. While they realized that a delay in our building program would bring disappointment, yet they felt justified in making the following recommendation:

Resolved, that the Order of Bishops recommend that the building of the auditorium be postponed for the present, for the following reasons:

- First. General business depression.
- Second. Existing deficit in budget 1920-21.
- Third. Prospective deficit for the following year.
- Fourth. Prospective reduction in prices of material and labor.

Because some felt we should proceed and in order to ascertain the feelings of the church so far as possible, the Presiding Bishop sent a letter to a number of the leading men. In this letter we asked for an expression of their views as to proceeding with the construction of the auditorium and requested also that they would tell how the people in their territory felt about this. The following are typical of the replies we received:

1. The author of statement quoted in your letter was certainly a man of unbounded optimism, one of the kind, no doubt, who would expect to find eggs in a cuckoo clock. Personally I am satisfied that the action of the Bishopric in postponing the erection of the auditorium was sane, safe, and well advised.

2. Ever since my return from Independence at our quorum meeting, I have taken particular pains to address the audiences through the district and apprise them of the conditions that have prevailed, telling them why it was deemed advisable to postpone building the auditorium. In almost every instance your judgment in the matter was sustained.

3. The drop in all materials that would of necessity have to go into the building, together with the high cost of labor, has justified our action then.

4. We have tried to keep in touch with the sentiment of the people on the auditorium question, and while we admit there is a chance for a difference of opinion, we think that to make an effort to collect the auditorium pledges at this time would seriously impair the receipts in tithes and offerings.

5. Whatever mention has been made has been in commendation of the good judgment exhibited by waiting until building material had declined to a more favorable price and labor conditions become more settled.

6. The auditorium should not be built now owing to financial stress of the times.

These comments, with many others, were made by the brethren in January and February, 1922. The following tabulation of building costs taken from Babson's Bulletin of May, 1922, supports the views of the brethren:

BUILDING COSTS
	March, 1924	Base 100
Residential material index	Industrial building material		Average building wage
1914, March ....100		100	100
1917, March ....136		168	116
1918, March ....172		198	132
1919, March ....208		206	154
1920, March ....297		271	201

1922 General Conference Approves Delay

In General Conference of October, 1922, the following recommendation was adopted:

Whereas, during the past twenty-seven months, there has been a deficit in operating expenses of the church of $269,-327.52, we recommend that the building of the auditorium be postponed until after next General Conference.

By this action, let it be borne in mind by the Saints, not only was the action of the general church officers confirmed; but also the responsibility was assumed for further delay till after October, 1923.

Feeling confident that the conference of 1922 would desire to take some definite action looking towards the erection of the auditorium, we addressed the following letter to the First Presidency:

FIRST PRESIDENCY, May 29, 1922.
Office.

Brethren: Supplementing our conversation with you and Brother Harry Smith in regard to the auditorium, it occurs to us that the architect should proceed at once with the plans.

We are of the opinion that something definite should be said to the coming fall conference as to when we expect operations to begin on the auditorium. The Saints will expect this.

The time intervening between now and spring, if that should be set as the time to begin building, is none too much for the preparation of the plans and the securing of estimates.

Yours very truly,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Committee of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric

At the General Conference of October, 1923, the following action was adopted at the suggestion of the Order of Bishops:

The Order of Bishops is unanimously agreed that the time has come for the erection of an auditorium large enough to care for our needs. We, therefore, recommend that this conference authorize the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Order of Bishops, to each select two of their quorum to act in conjunction with the church architect, to select the site and have plans and specifications prepared, the cost to be kept well within the limits of the available funds subscribed for the purpose.

We further recommend that the Presiding Bishopric be authorized to immediately proceed with the erection of said building in accordance with the plans and specifications as approved by said committee, with a view to having the building ready for the use of next General Conference.

This committee has been organized, the writer being a member of it. Several meetings have been held and some necessary preliminary work done, including the selection of a site—tentatively—and the architect authorized to prepare plans, etc.

The Fund

It will be remembered we originally asked for $500,000, and $878,000 was subscribed; but we have not yet received the first amount. From time to time the church has been informed through the HERALD and in reports to General Conference of the status of this fund.

On October 1, 1924, there had been paid in

On subscriptions .....	$439,578.90
Interest earned cash .....	15,433.60
Interest charged to general fund .....	26,125.42

$481,137.92

This amount is held in the following form:

Cash in banks .....	$ 28,836.96
Certificates of deposit .....	35,000.00
Liberty Bonds and stamps .....	45,303.30
Other investments .....	165,420.72
Loaned to general fund .....	200,836.92
Deferred expenses .....	5,740.02

During the period of business depression to which we have already referred, although the net worth of the church was increasing each year, due to the fact that so much of the contributions were being set up for a special undertaking, we were at the same time not receiving sufficient in tithes to take care of the fixed operating expenses of the church. We were in the same position as a man who during the year would pay $500 on a home and run in debt $100 for groceries. His net worth would be greater, as would also his debt in his operating account.

With this situation confronting us, it was a question whether we should go on the outside and borrow money at 6, 7, and 8 per cent while the cash in banks and Government bonds in the auditorium fund was earning only 4, 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ , and 4 $\frac{3}{4}$  per cent. By loaning this special fund to the general fund during this period a saving of over \$15,000 has been effected in interest alone, to say nothing of the saving in upkeep expense on the building at a time when the church could ill afford to have this added burden.

Joint Council Approves Loans to General Funds

The policy of loaning the special funds to the general funds was submitted to the Joint Council of Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric. The following action was taken on May 13, 1922, and published in the HERALD of June 14, 1922:

That in the opinion of the Joint Council the policy of the Presiding Bishop in investing special fund monies temporarily in general church assets during the present financial stringency be approved.

And, further, it is the opinion of the Joint Council that such policy be continued as long as the need may exist because of the financial pressure.

If there were any objections to this policy, we have no recollection of any being registered at that time by any member of the council, nor do the minutes show any.

A report of the status of this fund was presented to and received by the General Conference of 1923 and appears in the Conference Minutes, page 3355. Since that date a statement giving the detail and character of the investments was submitted to the April, 1924, meeting of Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Order of Bishops.

Lawful Procedure

Touching the investment of this fund by the Presiding Bishop as trustee and the lawfulness of such investment, we submit, first, that under the law and practice of the church it is the duty of the Bishop to do so. This right and duty is declared in the following from the church General Conference Resolution 238, paragraph 7:

Discretionary power to receive and disburse church funds, and dispose of church property for the uses of the church, according to the laws of the church, and subject to inquiry by the Twelve and the church, must rest in the Bishopric only, as, by law, the Bishopric only are legal custodians of such properties; but the Twelve may and should exercise such supervisory jurisdiction, according to previous arrangement and agreement with the Bishopric, as will prevent unnecessary delay and injury to the work of the ministry, and will facilitate the proper expenditure of funds in the church treasury for the purpose of carrying on the preaching of the word, in which is included the support of the families of traveling ministers in the field; the publication and distribution of such books and tracts as may be deemed expedient, for which no other provision is made; the erection of houses of worship; purchase of lands, together with the care and uses of them in missions assigned by conferences.

Second, in the State of Missouri there is no statute designating the class of securities in which trustees are required to invest trust funds, but the courts recognize and apply the following general principles:

The general rule is well settled that where trust money cannot be applied either immediately or within a short time to the purpose of the trust, it is the duty of the trustee to make the fund productive to the cestuis que trustent by the investment of it in some proper security. In the investment of trust funds, the trustee must exercise sound discretion as well as good faith and honest judgment. But he is not an insurer; neither is he required to be infallible in his judgment, or to possess the power to anticipate events not generally looked for. The true rule which should govern his conduct is that he is bound to employ such prudence and such diligence in the care and management of the estate or property as men of ordinary prudence, discretion, and intelligence employ in their own like affairs.—Vol. 39, Cyclopedia of Law, under the caption, "Duties of a Trustee."

The only question therefore is, Would a man of prudence, discretion, and intelligence consider it safe to loan this fund to the church? If the membership consider that it is not safe, how can they in good conscience expect the Bishopric to invite members and nonmembers to loan money to the church? Again, had this fund been kept intact in cash and bonds, and had we gone on the outside and

Democracy As Is

BY INEZ KINNEY

After the somewhat turbulent outbursts from the opposing elements in this church, would it be in order to hear from a new member—one who has always lived on the fringe of things churchwise? Since the contention seems to center about the subject of democracy in the church, it may be well first to consider democracy as is in this United States of America, where "freedom, equality, justice, and humility" is a condition of fact vouched for by every school child within its borders. This may have a bearing on the subject under discussion at this time.

A government of the people, by the people, and for the people—fine in conception, fine in principle, though the people have ever had little enough to say or to do about it. The old town hall meeting in New England came as near being democratic as any known institution, American or otherwise. Even they became too cumbersome and have largely gone borrowed from others, they would have had to be paid at some time, and if the church is now ready to pay back the money which might have been borrowed, then the replenishing of the auditorium fund becomes automatic, but this is not the only source from whence this can be made possible.

This entire matter has been handled, so far as the Presiding Bishop is concerned, in such a way as to conserve the best interests of the work as a whole.

We are glad to say that progress is being made, and we believe that the church will be able to carry forward the project as originally contemplated.

We have no hesitancy in saying that the course that has been pursued with respect to the use of the auditorium fund was practical, economical, lawful, and will in the largest measure contribute both to the general welfare of the church and the particular object had in mind when General Conference approved to move towards the building of a General Conference Auditorium.

Criticisms, it will be admitted, are always easy, but remembering the responsibility of acting in the emergencies of the greatest crisis the world has known, we feel sure that the Saints will appreciate the efforts made conscientiously and lawfully to conserve the interests of the church in the best possible way.

the way of other early institutions, including the guild system of production, where practically everything used in the home was manufactured there.

Consider the election of a President. At the great national conventions the delegates properly elected by the people (witness the log-rolling at the precincts) nominate the presidential candidates. We shall omit a discussion of the preferential primary where, in various States, the people express a preference for President.

But do the delegates at the national convention nominate a presidential candidate? The fact is, that important business is accomplished in a hotel room by a handful of men aided by much tobacco and strong drink.

Following the happy nomination, it occasionally happens that the President has been elected, but not by a majority of the popular votes. The mere fact that the presidential electors are chosen from various sized districts and that some States are largely of one party faith while others are more evenly divided between the two major parties works as a damper on our boasted rule-of-majority democracy.

At the general or presidential election, where equal suffrage is enjoyed, all the people surely go out to the polls and vote! Less than fifty per cent of the voters take advantage of this great privilege. It seems the more candidates the people have a voice in electing, the greater degree of democracy, so the ballot contains a vast number of names, making it so long that no normal person can hope to learn the qualifications of all. In consequence, the voter loses interest and courage and does not vote at all. "What's the use? I don't know what kind of person the candidate is, so I won't vote." So much democracy defeats its own ends. That is why government-reform agencies are urging the use of the short ballot, with only policy-making offices elective, administrative offices to be appointive.

But the people elect the Representatives and Senators to Congress. Yes, by districts, one member from one district, and while a large number has expressed a choice, another large number has had no choice at all. The one-member-from-one-district system brings about this state of affairs. Proportional representation is advocated to correct this damage to democracy.

In case of a minority group (or groups) strong enough to turn the scales for or against a candidate, the rule of the minority is felt. The labor vote, the soldier vote, the foreign vote, or the Ku Klux Klan, etc., are examples of minority as against majority rule. The so-called agricultural or farm labor bloc in the last Congress is a concrete example of government by minority. It is safe to say that the greatest need in Federal Government to-day is adequate leadership, unhampered by an insurgent minority.

Surely when Congress is in session and working, law-making is done by a majority voice of the members! Not at all. The laws are made by committees in committee rooms. No matter how urgent the need for the proposed law or how beautifully it has been drafted, if the committee decides to kill it, it is killed—that is all. But, of course, when an important law has finally been passed and goes to the supreme court for interpretation, it is declared constitutional or not by majority rule. The decision of one judge may declare a law unconstitutional after a Congress or a State has given it great apparent approval. Four judges may be of one opinion and four of another, and the one wabbling judge may make the decision.

But examples multiply, and this is not intended to be a tirade against this United States Government, merely a statement of fact concerning democracy as is. Possessing an ancestry dating back to the very beginning of things in America, its institutions are precious even though reason acknowledges the fact that time brings change and problems that must be solved according to the conditions of that particular time.

"Eternal vigilance is not merely the price of liberty in the first place; it is part of the fixed cost of maintaining liberty forevermore."—Hart.

Let me repeat that Government experts are more and more advocating restricting the voice of the people in the elective offices. "Let there be a responsible head and hold him answerable" is the social and political judgment to-day. Democratic Italy submitted cheerfully to a powerful leadership and has not gone to the bow-wows. Spain, strangled by corrupt politics, gladly hailed a leader it hoped would prove wise and good. Poor socialistic, communistic Russia was never so bossed, and seems to be making some headway.

There comes a time in the life of organizations, religious, social, or political, when a strong authoritative leadership is its greatest hope and greatest need; when minorities having neither the knowledge nor the vision are a dragging, hampering influence; when a great program needs only a great leader to put it into operation.

This church has come to such a time. It, however, has such a leader, set apart and ordained by God himself. Yet an insurgent minority is impeding the progress of this work. Over and over, voices chant the refrain: "Back to the good old times. Back to the faith of our fathers."

Whatever may have been the needs and conditions of the past; whatever they may be in the future, the need now is for an unhampered, whole-heartedly supported leadership. History, life, nature, common sense, teach that progress brings change, that times and conditions demand their own special treatment. Why harp about the past when the present has brought problems foreign to the past? As well try to harmonize the philosophy of Aristotle with that of George Washington in the Revolutionary War crisis. Why manufacture high-sounding phrases such as "supreme directional control" to camouflage a simple meaning—leadership? Why fall to petty, personal bickerings when the world waits for the operation of the greatest social reform in history?

Let the church membership, the quorums of high priests, seventies, etc., get behind that leadership (the Presidency), and nothing shall stop the onward march.

The First Presidency in the Days of Peter

BY J. A. FERRIS

But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed.—Galatians 2: 11.

Here was a situation where Peter, of the First Presidency, in advocating a policy which was causing a division in the church, was sharply rebuked by one of the twelve, the Apostle Paul.

And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; inasmuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation. But when I saw that they walked not uprightly according to the truth of the gospel, I said unto Peter before them all.—Galatians 2: 13, 14.

Then the Apostle Paul proceeded to reason with them, giving them abundant reasons why Peter's policy should be radically changed; why it was wrong and very harmful.

The situation must have been a heartbreaking one for Paul. Here was a man at the head of the church, one of the main pillars, one who had been singled out by Jesus Christ personally to take the lead in handing out the bread of life not only to the church, but to the world—Peter, of the First Presidency, handing out stones instead of bread. On account of Peter's high office, anything that he said or did carried great weight, and even though a certain policy of his at this time, the policy Paul objected to, was obviously obnoxious and erroneous, evidently many of the saints blindly followed Peter, refusing to reason, allowing the great prestige of Peter's high office, and Peter's actions, to sweep them off their feet. The situation was fraught with much danger, possibly a divided church.

In rebuking President Peter, the Apostle Paul was striking for God, for Jesus Christ, and for the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Here was one of the First Presidency not only failing to walk "uprightly according to the truth of the gospel," but causing other officials and members of the church to walk also in darkness. Jesus Christ had promised his followers that they need not walk in darkness. Peter was walking in darkness, and the sad part of it all was that some of the saints were following him.

But what of Barnabas; what was the matter with him? He was an apostle, the same as Paul. He was responsible, not to Peter of the First Presidency, but to God Almighty for his stewardship. He was a servant of God, not a servant of Peter. What was the trouble with him? Why did he forsake the "truth of the gospel" and advocate a man's policy? Why did he do it?

Ah! the great champion for Jesus Christ, the Apostle Paul, "before them all," gallantly and fearlessly withstood President Peter "to the face, because he was to be blamed." Did Paul for a moment think of any personal advantage he might gain by siding in with Peter? No; a thousand times no. He was not being paid by Peter; he was not employed by Peter; Peter's policies were nothing to him. But the policies of Jesus Christ were all to Paul. And so Paul asked Peter and the rest of the opposition a question: "Is therefore Christ the minister of sin? God forbid."

If Jesus Christ should not be a minister of sin, neither should any of his followers, and Peter stood convicted of the things Paul charged him with. Paul made God and Jesus Christ first; yes, Paul was right, God first.

The strange part of this drama, and near tragedy, was that the Apostle Barnabas, looking on as was Paul, could not see anything wrong when it was so very apparent to Paul. President Peter in dealing with some of the saints was acting in a manner that was foreign to the gospel of Jesus Christ, yet Barnabas could not see it and joined hands with Peter in this wrong.

Paul's eye was "single to the glory of God," but not so with Barnabas; not at this particular time. Had his eye been single to the glory of God he would have been full of light, the same as Paul. But alas, he followed Peter, of the First Presidency, instead of following Jesus Christ, who should have been his leader, and his only leader. And together with Peter on this occasion he was walking in darkness.

Let us learn a lesson from this experience. With us it should be: God, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. The gospel of Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. No change.

Facts About the Bible.—No. 9

BY A. B. PHILLIPS

A knowledge of the classification, distribution, and language features of the nations mentioned in the Bible is of material assistance to the student who would clearly understand the reason for certain activities which the book portrays and the significance of the characteristics and expressions of the peoples represented. Three divisions of mankind are represented since the flood at least, which are distinct in physical traits, language, mental qualities, and habits. These are the Semitic, Aryan, and Turanian, supposed to have descended from the three sons of Noah. From these have arisen combinations of other types, until it is now impossible to trace most of them with certainty.

The name Semites is derived from Shem, one of the sons of Noah. Their descendants are traced in two divisions, one of which includes the Hebrews, Phœnicians, Syrians, Moabites, Ammonites, Canaanites, Aramæans, and the Babylonians. The other is represented by the Abyssinians, Sabeans, and certain Arabians. The speech of the Israelites contains only dialectal differences from the Syrian and the Babylonian, and the Moabite stone is easily read by Hebrew scholars.

Blood relationship between nations cannot always be determined with any certainty, but language, tradition, habits, color, religion, local names, and geographical position help to establish such relationship at times. The ancient inhabitants of western Asia were at one time mostly of one race, which was akin to the Hebrew. Before the Hebrew conquest there were eight principal nations west of the Jordan, including the Canaanites, Hittites, Gergashites, Amorites, Hivites, Jebusites, Perizzites, and Philistines.

The Philistines are more frequently mentioned in the Bible, but to the ethnologist the Hittites are of particular interest. They are said to have been the descendants of Heth, whose name is found on Egyptian and Assyrian monuments. Hittite monuments are scattered over a wide area, including Asia Minor, Phrygia, Cappadocia, and Syria, and in some of the Hittite writings Assyrian influence is said to appear.

Significance of Language and Writing

In the Bible we are informed that prior to the dispersion from Babel, "the whole earth was of the same language and of the same speech." The Inspired Version (Genesis 6:6) states that the language of Adam was pure and undefiled, but with the scattering of tribes and clans it was natural that different forms of expression should arise, and that the more industrious and enterprising nations should in time forge ahead of others in accuracy, flexibility, and other desirable facilities of speech. The ancient classified languages are sometimes divided into thirteen genetic families, though the changes that have developed do not admit of certainty concerning which may have been of most importance in prehistoric times.

The Semitic languages include principally those of the Semitic divisions as named. To the Bible student more interest is found in the Assyrian or Babylonian, Hebrew, Phœnician, and Aramaic, because important inscriptions in these languages have been found which relate to the biblical record. Of the Hamitic languages the Egyptian is of chief interest to readers of the Bible, as a great many inscriptions in this language have been discovered and deciphered, some of which concern times covered by the scriptural writings.

An essential of civilization is, has always been, oral and legible facility of expression. The alphabet was an invention of incalculable importance, the results of which can hardly be estimated to-day. Some hold that it was based upon symbols originally used among the Egyptians. Ideographic forms were employed by the ancient Egyptians, Babylonians, Hittites, Mexicans, and other peoples, successive stages of which are sometimes traceable. Sacred and other ancient records were written on stone tables, gold, brass, lead, silver, tile, bricks, wood, and clay tablets. More flexible substances were also used, as papyrus, parchment, vellum, linen, silk, and cotton. Inscriptions or other writings have been discovered on all the substances here mentioned.

Many remarkable affinities of language may be traced by the student who desires to ascertain language relationships, some of which are of remarkable interest in connection with Bible study (see Helps to Bible Study, pp. 284-302). A long list of biblical names has been discovered in the inscriptions, including those of prominent kings. Incidents and events of various kinds have also been verified by archaeological research in recent years, and bear out the integrity and accuracy of the Bible record in regard to some matters concerning which doubts had arisen. The study of these languages mentioned is therefore of absorbing interest and lasting profit.

Our dead are greater and more truly alive than we are! When we forget them, it is our whole future that we lose sight of; and when we fail in respect to them, it is our own immortal soul that we are trampling under our own feet?—Maeterlink.

NEWS AND LETTERS

From Seattle to Denver

October 21, 1924.—My last communication was written in Seattle, Washington. I delivered a number of sermons there on my return from the Portland reunion, and was greeted with good audiences, notwithstanding it was during the week time. The officers and Saints manifested deep interest in the church work.

I was sorry that I was unable to meet with the president of the district, Brother C. E. Jones, and wife, they being away on a preaching tour, somewhere in the district. I was of course interested in both as I was their father in the gospel. Brother Jones proved to be a very capable presiding officer over the reunion, and in connection with others, made it a great success. His good wife also was active in looking after the duties of superintendent of the Sunday school work. They make a fine working team in the church, looking after the interests of the gospel with an eye single to the glory of God.

Leaving Seattle I went down to California, and on my way there delivered a number of sermons in the Portland church. Full house every night; splendid interest. Here, as in all the other places, officers and Saints supported my weak efforts in a splendid manner. It was with some degree of reluctance that I took my departure from the Northwest country, as I certainly enjoyed my sojourn among our people there, and I truly appreciated their great kindnesses displayed in my behalf. We certainly have some very capable ministers there that the church can be proud of.

I spent a number of days at San Francisco, but most of the time with my relatives, some of whom I had not seen for twenty-four years. None of them seemed interested in the gospel, as they belong to other societies. Yet they treated the writer with every degree of consideration. Preached one sermon Sunday morning in the city, and in Oakland on Monday night. The work seemed to be progressing in both places. I had the pleasure of meeting John D. White, president of the district, and Brother Saxe, president of the San Francisco Branch, and John Carmichael, president of the Oakland Branch. These officials, with Apostle Dan Williams and the city missionary, Brother Virgil Etzenhouser, greeted me warmly, and we enjoyed our associations.

Santa Barbara was my next stop. Here I was cordially received and entertained by more of my relatives. From there I went to Los Angeles. I was met at the station by my nephew, Doctor Hodges, who while not yet a member of the church is very much interested in the gospel. The possibility is that some day he will unite with us. His companion is a member. I met two great-nieces there; one is a member of the church but the other is not.

I occupied in the rostrum a number of times, enjoying splendid liberty, an evidence to me that the Lord is interested in his work there in the city. Brother Walter W. Smith is pastor, and he gave me a good welcome. The new church edifice is going up rapidly. This is going to be one of the finest-equipped buildings in the whole church, and will be a credit to the work. If there is a branch in the church that needs a building like this it is Los Angeles, of more than a million population, a Mecca to people of affluence and prestige from all parts of the world. We earnestly trust that every member of the branch will put forth his best efforts to see that this building is completed and dedicated to the Lord.

In company with the president of the district, N. T. Chapman, we visited Long Beach, San Diego, Santa Ana, Ontario, and certainly experienced a glorious time. Brother Chapman is a good companion to travel with, greatly beloved by the people over whom he presides. I had the pleasure of meeting with many people in this district whom I had met in other parts of the world many years ago. One sister came to me and told me that I had baptized her forty-eight years ago, and she is still strong in the faith. Forty-eight years of fruitage is very cheering, and makes one feel that one's work is not altogether in vain. A number of brethren came to me and said that I had ordained them—so many years ago that I could not remember without first consulting the record. It makes one feel that the time is far spent when grandmothers come up and say that he nursed them when they were little children. A person feels that he is not quite so young as he used to be. Thank God I am still in the great battle for right, and by the grace of my heavenly Father I expect to continue in the warfare for some time yet.

California is a great country for climate, its fruit and flowers being a sight to behold. However, every country has its advantages and disadvantages, and California has still a lot of waste land and desert. Los Angeles has automobiles by the thousands, and its death rate from them is the highest in the United States. One certainly has to step lively, or the "angels" will carry him across the Great Divide.

I left California on the evening of Tuesday, the seventh, for Utah and Idaho. Landed in Salt Lake City the next evening, and not being able to locate our church, I consulted the telephone directory, but was unable to locate any of the Saints, not even the pastor of the church, and was under the necessity of going to a hotel for the night. I ascertained later that the telephone number of the church was in the name of the pastor who left there two or three years ago. We suggest that the branch there make a change so that visitors coming through can find where they are. I tramped around for three or four hours in that part of the city where the church is supposed to be located, but nobody knew anything about them.

I left for Malad City the next day at noon, where I had the pleasure of preaching and lecturing five times to large audiences, with intense interest. Brother Richards, the pastor, wields a wonderful influence in the community and is known all around as a man of God. He has placed the church in a favorable light with the Utah people, and his noble wife is as highly respected as is he. The work there is in safe hands.

In this place I met a cousin of mine whom I had never seen before, who by the way is a Utah Mormon and a wealthy one. One of his sons has joined us, and it looks as if more of the family will be with us in the near future. I enjoyed my visit with the Saints here and wished them Godspeed.

The next stop was Rock Springs, Wyoming, where I visited my nephew, David G. Thomas, and his family. He is a well-known lawyer in that part of the country. Here I was also permitted to meet another cousin whom I had never seen before, who also is a Utah Mormon. This cousin is losing confidence in the church of the West, and there are hopes of her coming our way some day. And perhaps her family, too.

I arrived in this city, Denver, Thursday, the sixteenth, and was met at the station by the city missionary, Brother Frank Almond, and am domiciled at the home of the pastor, Brother E. J. Williams. Last Saturday Denver's annual rally began, at which I was scheduled to lecture and preach. Big crowds greeted me, and I enjoyed good liberty in presenting the gospel message.

The Denver Branch is alert to its opportunities. It has a good pastor in Brother Williams, and he and the city missionary are working hand in hand to build up the work here. If the members and the priesthood will get behind them and assist them, they will be able to do a work here that will bring honor to the cause of Christ.

After a good spiritual feast in the prayer meeting this afternoon, I am leaving Denver to-night for Independence. And by the time this letter is in print, I shall be back among the Saints in the center place. I regret leaving the West, with its splendid hospitality and kindness to me; but I rejoice that it has been my privilege to go from branch to branch in this part of the country, and realize that the work of the church is moving onward. Controversy and heated discussion may be the order of the day at headquarters, yet among the great body of the Saints in the West I find a loyalty to the gospel and a determination to hold fast to the principles of truth in Christ Jesus.

May God bless them and strengthen them for the work that is yet before us. May they ever hold firmly to the iron rod that leads to the tree of life in the paradise of God.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

Splendid Social Conditions Depicted

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, November 3.—The month of October has been an active one in the Chatham Branch. The weather has been the most delightful in years.

Priesthood meeting was held Monday evening, October 6, which was well attended and much enjoyed. On Tuesday the priesthood were asked by the branch president to assemble again, as word had been received that Apostle J. A. Gillen was to be in the city. Brother Gillen met with the priesthood and gave a splendid talk on "Priesthood and what it means." After the talk a general round table discussion was held.

On Wednesday evening Brother Gillen addressed the Saints in general, using for his text, "I would see Jesus." Brother Gillen is always welcome in this branch, as he is recognized as a true servant of God.

Our anniversary services were held on October 25, and the weather was so fine that a large crowd was able to be present. Prayer service was held at nine o'clock in the morning, followed by Sunday school at eleven. Elder B. H. Doty, district missionary, preached at three in the afternoon, and at seven Bishop J. C. Dent was the speaker. Both sermons were much enjoyed. The Chatham choir gave special music at all the services.

The anniversary chicken supper was served Monday evening in the basement of the church, and a neat sum was realized for the branch treasury. A fine social time was enjoyed. A program was given at eight o'clock, at which Brother B. H. Doty and John R. Grice assisted with several pleasing solos.

Friday, October 31, being Halloween, the Department of Recreation and Expression held a Halloween masquerade party. A goodly number had good make-ups, and a most pleasant evening was spent.

Elder John R. Grice, of Saint Clair, Michigan, was with us for our Sunday evening preaching service November 2 and gave us a splendid sermon. Just prior to the preaching a baptism was performed by Brother Grice, Miss Edna Tompkins, a splendid young lady of our city, being the candidate.

November 9 is to be Armistice and Thanksgiving Day at all our services, and an enjoyable day is anticipated.

Webb City, Oklahoma

November 3.—Roy and Mabel Slover, son and daughter of Brother and Sister Arthur Slover, are recovering from a siege of sickness. The doctor said their trouble was typhoid fever.

Many of the Saints who attended the reunion at Washunga the past summer will remember Mr. Grossman, father-in-law of Sister Grace Adair Grossman. He departed this life October 25, near Shidler, Oklahoma, of a carbuncle on his neck. Brother Arthur Slover preached the sermon and was assisted by Brother Edward Workman. After the funeral the remains were taken to Quay, Oklahoma, for interment.

The usual sacramental services were held November 2. Three babies were blessed. Several visitors were present, among them Brother Fred Swain and wife, of Arkansas City, Kansas; Sister Carrie Bailey Adair and daughter Georgia, of Yale, Oklahoma; and the family of Brother A. H. Christensen. Among other things which gladdened the hearts of the Saints especially was Brother Christensen's account of the services he held recently near Drumright, Oklahoma. We have a very pleasant recollection of those people when the Saints of Yale in times past met there to hear the gospel from Brothers Case, Slover, and others. We rejoice that the seed sown is now bearing fruitage.

We understand that Brother Earl D. Bailey is soon to be among us to hold services for a short time, and hope our next report may verify this statement.

Visiting the Saints in Texas

CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS, October 31.—The past week I visited several interesting places in the Rio Grande Valley, first stopping over at Lyford, Texas, to solemnize the marriage of Sister Nettie Archer of that place, and Brother Havard Doggett, of El Reno, Oklahoma. Sister Nettie has friends in her neighborhood that gave her party a wedding dinner and an evening serenade. I preached two times while in the neighborhood, receiving compliments from nonmembers on the doctrine set forth. One stranger, Mr. Duddlesten, remarked that I had only commenced preaching when he recognized that he had heard me before over the radio. He said the program of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints came in from San Antonio very distinctly and promised to give our radio programs special attention hereafter. This point is three hundred miles southeast of San Antonio, so I suppose our programs are heard by thousands of people in Texas.

I accompanied the wedding party to Fort Brownsville last Tuesday and enjoyed a pleasant visit with Sister Mildred Holder's family. Her husband is erecting, under contract, a large bank there many stories high. It was only across the river from Mexico, but as I have been over there often before, we confined our entertainment to the United States.

Resuming our journey, we again passed the lively town of San Bonito and lodged over night at Hazlenzen, a modern junction of several thousand inhabitants. The day following we motored westward, passing through several beautiful valley towns. We had a pleasant visit and a nice dinner with the Barrett family of McAllen, formerly of Lamoni, Iowa, and continually in the gospel faith. In the afternoon we returned to Lyford by way of the handsome little town of Edinberg and lodged again at the home of the "newlyweds."

The valley of the Rio Grande abounds in garden products and citrus fruits of the choicest quality, making it entertaining to the traveler and expensive for the purchaser of land

The next morning I departed by train, leaving Brother Doggett inspecting his fruit-laden orange grove and looking up church tracts for his new neighbors. I am to-day visiting scattered members at the Bay of Corpus Christi. I will take a drive to-morrow with Brother James Jonson and Sister Lizzy Graum's family. Mr. Graum declares that he wants the Ensign, so that he may enter into the study of our doctrines.

I expect to return to San Antonio next Monday.

W. H. MANNERING.

Ottumwa, Iowa

November 1.—The gospel flag here is still floating over some earnest workers who find joy and pleasure in the liberty it represents to them.

The Department of Women has led the way in social activities this month. This department is under the supervision of Sister L. McMickle, assisted by Sisters Richards, M. R. Lerries, M. Epperly, L. Hughes, M. LaPoint, M. Lewies, C. Collins, Green, and Meadows. They also had the assistance of some of the brothers, and succeeded in bringing to a close a wonderful month of activity for the department.

We are happy to say that Brother D. T. Williams, Sr., has returned to his work after ten months' illness. He is in his seventy-sixth year, and God is truly mindful of the aged of his flock. He has a light job now on the railroad crossing.

Brother Glen McMickle gave his class two wiener roasts, which the boys greatly enjoyed.

Our pastor says he has enjoyed good liberty in preaching the word of late.

The men of the branch have donated ten dollars towards the radio fund, and more is expected.

The Saints here were sorry to learn of the sickness of Elder E. B. Morgan, who is at present in Independence. Sister D. T. Williams here is ill and has suffered much.

Our communion service November 2 was of a very high order and was enjoyed by a good crowd.

Campaign by the Young People

RONTAC, MICHIGAN, November 7.—The young people here opened a campaign October 12, which continued for twelve nights. The first four nights Bishop Fred B. Blair, of Kansas City, Missouri, occupied. Brother Blair was followed by Apostle F. Henry Edwards for four nights, and after that Apostle J. A. Gillen preached four more nights.

Brother Blair spoke on the following four subjects: "What is your life?" "Doing business for God," "God's income tax," and "Christ, the great conservator." Many wonderful thoughts were presented, and some have said that never before have they understood God's plan for tithing as they do now. We sincerely trust good results will follow.

Apostle Edwards took for his subjects: "Adventuring with God," "Bonds of unity," "The unfolding purpose," and "Converting the world." He spoke with sincerity of purpose and truly presented many beautiful thoughts. As we looked upon him, young in years, with so fixed a standard in life, we wondered why the world should refuse to be converted and why the bonds of unity were not more perfect, with life's purpose so completely unfolded by our young brother. We thought surely anyone would enjoy an adventure with God.

Friday evening, after one of Apostle Edwards's sermons, the Saints went to Sylvan Lake and played games and enjoyed a wiener and steak roast.

Apostle J. A. Gillen, although the last speaker, was greeted with the same welcome the first two speakers received. Saints did not weary of coming but proved loyal to the last meeting. Brother Gillen's subjects were: "We would see Jesus; or, What shall we do with Jesus who is called Christ?" "Are not the rivers of Damascus better than the waters of Israel?" He spoke with much power, and it seemed that he was truly endowed with the Spirit of God, for as he spoke his soul reflected God's power to use man in his great purpose of salvation. We trust that the seed sown will bring much fruitage to the Master. Pontiac is endeavoring to keep the faces of the Saints Zionward, and bring human inclinations into subjection to God's ways.

Four Baptized in Holland

ROTTERDAM, HOLLAND, October 22.—A few lines about Holland, the land of many canals, may interest some of the readers of the HERALD.

I can say the work is going forward. We have a nice little hall to meet in, and the attendance is growing gradually.

The Brighamites are fighting us all they can. I had the pleasure of baptizing four last week, one of the candidates being my own sister. More will come into the fold soon.

The harvest is great, and the laborers are few. I am the only missionary in this country. I hope and pray that all the Saints will realize the necessity of doing their duty in every respect, so that the kingdom of God may be built up and his name be glorified.

With best wishes to all the Saints,
PARADYSLAAN 62 A.

JOHN EGGEN.

Sunday School Convention, Wigan, England

WIGAN, ENGLAND, October 23.—On October 18 and 19 we had Sunday school convention here and were glad to have with us Brother J. F. Curtis and Brother and Sister Judd. Brother Judd is superintendent.

All the schools were represented, and we had a large number of Saints and friends from all the branches.

Business meeting was held in the Church of Christ, which was kindly loaned us by our Christian friends of that church.

Sunday services were held in the Totale Abstant Hall. There were about two hundred in attendance. Brother Curtis preached in the morning and Brother Judd in the evening, and their sermons were much appreciated by all who heard them. A good prayer and testimony meeting was held in the afternoon, in which a goodly degree of the Spirit was felt.

The sisters rendered good service in the kitchen, and the waiters were always ready to do anything they were called upon to do.

WILLIAM SPARGO.

Cosmopolis, Michigan

November 7.—The work here is still progressing. Eight months ago it was hard to get a dozen people out for services, but now the average attendance is forty for Sunday school and sometimes as many as sixty.

A prominent lady of Cosmopolis was baptized November 2, and others have expressed a desire to unite with the church.

A remarkable case of healing was experienced in the case of Sister Sams of Hoquiam, who, under the hands of elders, has been much improved from a bad case of rheumatism.

We have had a number of remarkable prayer meetings in which the good Spirit dominated, and several prophecies were given predicting the rapid increase of the work here.

Can You Help This Sister?

If there are Saints living at or near Polk, Pennsylvania, will they please write to me, Mrs. George W. Reynolds, 19 Short Street, Patterson Heights, Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania? I have an invalid boy going to the home at Polk about November 19, and I wish to learn of some Saint near there to whose home I could take him at times for the ordinances of the gospel, as his life has been spared, his development made possible, because of the laying on of the hands of the elders and the use of consecrated oil.

When he was four years old he was terribly afflicted and had been all his life, not even being able to creep as well as a one-year-old baby. I was then baptized, he was blessed, administered to, and I gave him consecrated oil regularly. He improved at once, soon began to walk, and I had great hopes he would become a normal child, but one night I neglected to put him to bed because of company being in my home, and he fell from a third-story window to the flagstones, lighting on his skull and fracturing it. He had concussion of the brain, hemorrhages, and there seemed no hope for his recovery, but I fervently prayed God to forgive me for my neglect, and to spare my child's life, at least for the present, as I could not endure thinking of his death for this cause. My prayer was answered; God did spare him; and the day I took him home the nurse and the doctors told me they would not have believed I could take him alive.

It was considerable time before he was really well again, and it was not possible for me to have him administered to then, but we moved to Pennsylvania, stopped with a family of Saints, and there I had opportunity for administration again, and he at once began to improve, and is still improving. But I am getting weaker; he is able to learn, and I am to send him to this home and school at Polk. I know my boy could not have developed as he has unless God had helped us, and I greatly desire an opportunity to have him administered to occasionally. I would appreciate any help you can offer.

My husband was cured of hernia upon his baptism into the church at the hands of Elder Sheehy. The week before he had been compelled to come home and go to his bed because of it, but he has never been bothered by it since the baptism. This was four years ago.

I am told that the Polk Home is north of Oil City and that Franklin is the largest city near, but perhaps some of the Saints can tell me what I want to know about it, and can help me.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. GEORGE W. REYNOLDS.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

November 8.—Winter is again upon us, and the different departments of this branch have planned a very busy time for the coming season. The regular Sunday evening services are again being held, and the Department of Recreation and Expression is also meeting after summer vacations. This department has a very busy season before it, and in connection with its regular meetings a Halloween party was held at the new home of Brother and Sister L. F. P. Curry. All present had a very enjoyable time.

Interest in the Sunday school has increased very noticeably, and we did not realize how near we were to the holiday season until our superintendent, T. A. Dershimier, asked for volunteers for the Christmas entertainment.

The preaching and communion services have been especially full of inspiration and education, and those who have been among us will testify that the Lord has given us many blessings, for which we thank him.

The young (and you are just as young as you feel) are looking forward to the young people's convention to be held at Lock 4, Pennsylvania, November 15 and 16. We expect to have with us Brothers John Martin and William Patterson, and a real good time, both spiritual and educational, is expected by all. Remember that none are old in the sight of the Lord.

Among the Nations as a Minister for Christ

The church moving forward, with the young, middle-aged, and aged in united step, righteously unfurling the banner of Christ over an ever-widening territory, is the task to which the people of God are bidden to devote their energies.

In my early years the Lord manifested himself to me, so that, respecting his existence, the verity of his promises, and the divinity of his work as portrayed in the standard books of the church, I have unwavering confidence.

Some of the most excellent of my blessings from him were received in my youth, a few of such a character that, though decades have passed, when I near the scenes where they were experienced I feel that I am approaching holy ground.

It has not been my privilege to meet at any time with the young people in their convention; but having cast my lot with the church when I was about fifteen years of age, being ordained when I was eighteen, and then entering the active ministry of the church almost immediately afterward, rapture fills my heart with every dispatch revealing an enlistment of the younger forces in the army of the Lord.

To have to do with the building up of the kingdom of God and establishing Zion, is and has been the only ambition of my life. With gladness I entered upon my work, feeling that the Reorganization would finally triumph. I still rest my faith in the old foundation, for its builder was God.

Called in due time to be an apostle of Jesus Christ, not by the will of man, but by revelation through the Spirit, my desire since in an increased sense has been to magnify my calling and perform my work in such a way that I may feel that divine favor has not been forfeited. To strive lawfully means to be crowned in the by and by.

My lot has been cast in distant and, in some instances, seldom-frequented parts of the earth. If in the wisdom of God my days shall be further prolonged, now they are what they are through an extension many years ago of the hand of God in recovering me from what would otherwise have been a fatal illness, I hope that what has come to me in church experience may be unobstructedly and usefully consecrated to the church. To this work I was called, and to the interests of truth I wish my life ever to be dedicated.

The fields of the world are white and ready to harvest. Brother, sister, young man, young woman, what of the sickle? Let consecration to the work of the Lord abroad and at home be fully resolved upon. We are living in the world's most wondrous age. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few." The equipment should be as complete as possible for the harvest field.

My recent visit to Scandinavia gave to me a pleasing impression of the people of the three countries. Never have I seen better-appearing fields of waving grain, or lands more completely covered with various shades of green than in Scandinavia.

Only very hard work by the farmers brings a living from the soil. The season for reaping the small grain is late, this year the last of September. In the northern part of Sweden and Norway, often hay is seen on several wires, one above the other, strung to poles, for curing. Unthought-of patience among American farmers is a commonplace in the lands of the north. Little of anything goes to waste.

The summers are cool and delightful.

The missionaries served very acceptably as my interpreters. They are doing well in their labors under all the circumstances existing.

On my return I stayed a short time in Germany. Many demoralizing forces have been let loose there, chiefly since the war. Wages are extremely low, there are many hours of labor, a woeful lack of housing facilities, and women and children nearly everywhere can be seen in the fields doing hard work. After observing the German people, I thought it would be useless to try to plug up Vesuvius, and it would be a great task to keep down and unexpressed the inherent powers of the German people.

It was a real pleasure to visit the branch in Hanover, which is but one of other good ones. About seventy-five were present at a Bible study on a Wednesday evening. Brother Greene served as interpreter for me.

In Denmark I was privileged to see a promising young man baptized in the North Sea. In the lands of the north, in regions of the south, and in various parts of the tropics, my eyes have beheld many inducted into the true church. Surely my blessings have been many, and often my heart has overflowed in silent gratitude.

I hope that ere long laborers from various nations may have the company of the church in America; then return to their own lands and people, and under God's exalting power become able, courageous, and true servants of the church.

In Holland the growth of the church continues; last Monday night four more adults were baptized.

Elder Curtis and I are now back in England. It is a great relief to be again among English-speaking people. Frequent changes among different tongues, where little is understood and an interpreter is required, is peculiarly trying and wearing on one. It has been very interesting to hear Brother Curtis talk German.

In the death of Elder J. W. Taylor, a counselor to Bishop Charles Fry, this mission has lost one of its noblest and truest men. We are thankful for the many able and devoted men who remain.

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him . . . that bringeth good tidings of good, . . . that say unto Zion, Behold, thy God reigneth!" Mountains, as used, symbolizes the nations. To be among the nations as an ambassador of Christ is a most distinguished honor.

Now and again, sometimes frequently, in the congregations of the Saints, and in assemblies where all do not know God, feelings swell up from the heart because of the nearness of divine power, causing the soul in the spirit to cry out, Hosannah to God in the highest!

But there is a practical side to it all. Peter sensed it when he opened his heart and mind to Jesus as follows: "Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" Jesus, who had left his home, spoke reluctant good-bys to loved ones, and was engaged in active missionary work, answered: "Verily, I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life. But many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be first."

Peter was cheered—he knew the Master understood his heart throbbings; then came rejoicing because of the all-embracing promise, which he felt was just, but generously worded.

Profound in significance are Isaiah's words, in which is prophesied a thing that shall take place in the last days in connection with God's "marvelous work and a wonder": "Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?"

Saints, in the islands of the sea, on broad continents, or wherever you may be, the calling of God to his service is one that should bring joy; therefore, heed the words of Christ: "When these things begin to come to pass [men's hearts failing them for fear; distress of nations with perplexity; iniquity abounding, causing the love of man to wax cold, etc.] then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

Latter Day Saints Hold Successful Conference —Local Latter Day Saints Not "Mormons"

Taken from the report of the local newspaper by our correspondent.

The Southeastern Illinois District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints held their quarterly conference with the local church last Saturday. Officers for the district were elected for the coming year. Elder R. H. Henson of Mount Vernon was elected to succeed himself as presiding elder; the local pastor, Charles H. Wesner, becoming his assistant. Practically all officers were elected without opposition, the same fine spirit of harmony being present in the election that characterized the entire session.

Following a well-received program given by the local church Friday evening, the conference proper began at 8.30 a. m. Saturday with a prayer service which gave way at 10 a. m. for the first business session of the day. Adjournment came at noon, the next session beginning at 2 p. m.

The East Saint Louis Orchestra, having arrived during the day, rendered some fine selections for the preaching service Saturday night, the preacher being Apostle F. Henry Edwards, who endeared himself to all during his brief stay. Apostle Edwards also delivered the dedicatory sermon Sunday morning at eleven o'clock. During the sermon, which was preached to a packed house, he declared that while we were met to dedicate a place to worship God, we could not dedicate a building apart from its people—that both must be dedicated or consecrated to God's service.

Following the sermon, Bishop James F. Keir received the deed and keys from the local pastor and in turn gave the keys to Alfred Ferry after an impressive speech. The dedicatory prayer followed, by Bishop Keir. District President R. H. Henson dismissed the service. Missionary Henry Sparling was in charge of the entire program. Bishop Keir gave a fine sermon on "Enduring things," at 2.30 p. m.

In Saturday's issue of the Sentinel a common error was made in confusing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints with "Mormons." The word Mormon is a nickname applied to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which is centrally located at Salt Lake City, Utah. A brief history is possibly necessary to make clear the difference between these two distinct religious organizations.

The original church was organized in 1830 and became disorganized in 1844 upon the death of Joseph Smith, their presiding officer, parts of the church following one man and other parts other men. The larger group followed Brigham Young to Utah, where in 1852, eight years after the death of Smith, polygamy was first introduced by Young. No trace of polygamy was found as a church teaching before 1852, but on the contrary, records show where some men who committed this terrible crime were banished from the church for their sin. It is this crime of polygamy, as well as other heinous practices introduced by Brigham Young, which make the term Mormon obnoxious to a law-abiding Christian people.

However, many members of the church followed no leader, and in 1852 they began to reorganize. On April 6, 1860, the organization was perfected with Joseph Smith, son of the Martyr Joseph Smith, as their presiding officer. In order to distinguish themselves from the church in Utah and at the same time preserve their identification with the original church, they placed the name Reorganized before the original name. Twice have the high courts of the United States declared this Reorganized Church to be the lawful successor to the original church and freed them from the crimes of "Mormonism." Once the courts of Canada have done likewise. No decision of any court in any land has been given differently. A good history of this people is found at our public library in the latest addition of the Encyclopedia Britannica under the heading, "Latter Day Saints."

Charles H. Wesner, the local pastor, is a graduate of Centralia Township High School, and is well known by many Centralians, having resided here for the last seventeen years.

Graceland Chats

The formal opening of the Graceland radio season occurred Friday night in the Saints' Church, in compliment to Bishop E. L. Kelley of Independence, Missouri. The service was dedicated to the anniversary of Brother Kelley's eightieth birthday, and although he was not present in Lamoni, he and Sister Kelley listened in at the church radio station at Independence and heard the speech and song, and memory provided the old-time setting in the Lamoni Brick Church where he was for so many years a worshiper. Elder C. E. Wight, president of Lamoni Stake, offered the opening prayer. Music was furnished by the A Capella Chorus under the direction of Miss Mabel Carlile, and the full orchestra directed by J. H. Anthony. The official announcer was Elder J. A. Gunsolley. The address of the evening was given by President F. M. Smith. Letters from former Presidents, Pence, Salisbury, and Stewart, also from Mrs. M. Walker and President Elbert A. Smith were read by President G. N. Briggs. Benediction was by Elder C. E. Wight. Old friends and students filled the auditorium and into the gallery, while the college faculty was seated in the choir loft. The very important part performed by Bishop Kelley for Graceland College was inspiring and constant from the very inception of the movement, and the support of his unflinching faith and unwearying zeal call for gratitude and praise for the institution. It was pleasant to look upon this scene and feel satisfaction that an opportunity had been met and loving appreciation extended to him at this time. Opportune and significant is this last minute means (the radio) of celebrating the birth of one progressive and loyal through vicissitude and prosperity to Graceland.

The year's first intersociety contest in forensics was held in the college chapel last Saturday night. In the preliminaries, held a few days previously, forty-two contestants tried out, out of which number six were chosen. At half past one in the afternoon the subjects were drawn and the speeches prepared for the evening appearance. This was the Academy contest, and the honors were won by the Niketes, William Collins taking first place, the Victorians coming second with A. E. Bullard, and the Alpha Pis third with Glen Hardy.

November 9, College Day, was a typical Iowa autumn day. It will be interesting to know that the different branches in Lamoni Stake were supplied with speakers, singers, and players from Graceland, the president himself driving his car to Hiteman and later to Chariton to make addresses at each place. With him was the A Capella Chorus, and that insures music of the best order. President F. M. McDowell and Dean Lonzo Jones were on the same Sunday engaged in other places for Graceland's favor and further usefulness. Both returned for school duty last week.

President F. M. McDowell and wife, Miss Ruth Fisher, of Graceland faculty, and Mr. N. R. Carmichael, business manager, drove to Shenandoah, Iowa, to attend the rally day exercises there, Brother McDowell and Sister Fisher having part in the program.

Splendid Meetings at Oak Dale

HAMILTON, MISSOURI, November 12.—The Saints of Oak Dale Branch, which is located four miles south of Hamilton, have been enjoying some very fine meetings.

The first to come were Brothers Richard Bullard and Will Bullard, both of Independence. Brother Will Bullard was quite sick while here and was not able to attend all our meetings. Brother Richard preached most of the week, and on Sunday the Saints from Kingston and Breckenridge came and brought well-filled baskets, so we had a basket dinner, after which one of the best prayer services in years was enjoyed. The gift of prophecy was exercised through Brother Richard Bullard, to the comfort and edification of the Saints.

The next week Brother Bullard preached at Kingston, and the Saints at Oak Dale returned the compliment, and another profitable day was enjoyed.

Brother Gomer T. Griffiths stopped over on his way home and gave us a splendid sermon. We enjoy having these splendid spiritual men visit us and hope they will come again.

Brothers J. W. Curtis and Oscar Okerlind, who have been preaching at Cowgill, have been favoring us on Sunday with some splendid sermons. The work seems on the upward move, and the Saints are much encouraged. COLEMAN SNIDER.

Kirtland Auditorium

The committee again wish to make this appeal to the Saints of the Kirtland Reunion Association, for there is need of all giving concern to the indebtedness on the auditorium. We also invite all the members of the church to consider a donation to this building, for Kirtland will soon be the scene of activities which will be under the supervision of the general church. More equipment will be needed. The building up of Kirtland is one of the problems of the church.

We invite those who have not yet redeemed their pledge to do so at their earliest convenience and solicit offerings from those who have not pledged themselves. We also invite pledges for this cause. Since January 12, 1924, the indebtedness has been reduced $1,500, leaving $9,000 now standing against the building.

Make all payments to James E. Bishop, 226 Edgar Avenue, Steubenville, Ohio. He will promptly receipt for the same, and the amount and name of the giver will be recorded. His whole work is subject to audit and report to the association, and all are welcomed to see the books at any time they wish. Outside of the law of tithes and offerings, this cause is as worthy and needful as any project before the church, for the reason that Kirtland and its development is definitely tied up with the development of the church, and most of us are expecting to see an expansion of effort in Kirtland that will require much equipment for the work to be accomplished there.

Stone Church

The First Independence Sunday School announced last Sunday that next Sunday is to be observed in the Sunday School as Thank Offering Day. Each member of the school was invited to bring an offering of fruit or vegetables to Sunday school as a donation to the Sanitarium. The plea was made for everyone to bring something, even a potato or an apple, so that as large a participation as possible may be had in the project.

Each Easter the Sunday school has been accepting an offering for the Sanitarium in the form of eggs, and this custom, which has prevailed for several years past, has increased in interest and the quality of eggs received each year. It is hoped to make the Thanksgiving Day Offering an annual movement in the Sunday school.

Tuesday afternoon Sister Blanche Edwards, of Graceland College, general head of the Department of Women, spoke at the church, which was much appreciated by all who attended.

On Thursday evening, November 27, the Stone Church Choir will give a special Thanksgiving concert at the church. This concert will be very fine, and there should be a large attendance.

Under the auspices of the Independence Music Club, Philip Gordon will give a recital on the Ampico Player Piano at eight o'clock Friday night at the Stone Church. He will be accompanied by a singer. A silver collection will be taken for the benefit of the scholarship fund.

The senior class of the Kansas City Law School chose its debating team on November 13, the result being the selection of three Latter Day Saint boys. They are Arthur B. Taylor, Virgil Julian, and Kenneth Fligg.

Mr. C. J. Yarrington, of Albany, Missouri, a brother of Bishop A. J. Yarrington, of Lamoni, Iowa, and Mrs. A. V. Closson, of Independence, were married Sunday, November 16, at the home of Bishop James F. Keir. They will make their home at Albany, Missouri, where Mr. Yarrington is engaged in the meat business.

Second Church

Young people's rally day proved to be a successful movement at the Second Church, each service being tense with interest.

At eight o'clock in the morning more than one hundred and fifty congregated in the opening service, one of prayer and testimony. Much good was received by the young people, and a few of the more aged were pleased and comforted.

The special musical program at Sunday school was followed by a fifteen-minute address by the assistant superintendent, Heman H. Davies, and the attendance and attention gave evidence of the virtue of the advance work done by the young people.

At eleven o'clock Bishop James F. Keir was the speaker, having been chosen by the young to address them. He chose for his theme, "The tragedy of choice," and worked out of this a most wholesome and practical hour's instruction to the young people, holding a strong interest.

At fifteen minutes of two Charles and Alice Williams were baptized, and at the regular prayer service at half past two they were confirmed.

The priesthood of section two met at six o'clock, having with them by invitation Bishop J. A. Becker and Pastor C. Ed. Miller, who is active in his work, looking up and filling vacancies, urging, exhorting, and pleading for more work from every member of the priesthood.

Before half past seven the auditorium and balcony were packed with those who wished to hear President Frederick M. Smith in his address to the young. They engaged in a beautiful song service, being led by Elder Harold C. Burgess, and were in excellent condition for the special singing, and the sermon, for which the speaker used the text, "Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready, and God will send thee flax." It was an exhortation and argument for preparation which would appeal to any consecrated and ambitious young person, and it brought wistful expressions and sighs from many of more advanced years who are not now able to make the needed preparation. This service brought to a successful close the rally which the young people planned and largely carried out.

Liberty Street

The women attending Liberty Street Church are planning to serve a big Thanksgiving dinner at Liberty Hall, across from Liberty Street Church, Thanksgiving Day. Fifty cents will be charged for all but children under seven years of age, who may have dinner for twenty-five cents. Tables will be provided for family parties upon request. The tables will be nicely decorated, and the food will be served home style. The Liberty Street Orchestra, assisted by a number from the Unity Orchestra of Kansas City, will provide music, and a general good time will be provided, where people may come and visit. Every cent made from this dinner is to be applied on the church debt, so these sisters deserve the cooperation of all. Any donations towards the dinner, either in produce or money, will be gratefully received. Everyone come out and enjoy themselves Thanksgiving Day and help these sisters in a worthy cause.

Sunday morning Elder H. O. Smith gave his sermon, "Christian graces," and in the evening Elder J. V. Roberts talked on "Zion as controlled by the divine plan."

Enoch Hill

Brother Kenneth A. Morford occupied the pulpit Sunday morning very creditably, and in the evening at seven Bishop Israel A. Smith renewed acquaintances with this congregation, some considerable time having elapsed since his last visit. The Saints in this locality were glad to welcome him.

Enoch Hill's Thanksgiving effort this year will consist of a real live discourse in the evening at eight o'clock on "The spirit of Thanksgiving," by the pastor, Elder W. J. Brewer. Sometimes the real meaning of this commemoration is overlooked, and the activities take some other form.

Special notice is hereby given to all our friends who visit with us from time to time at our Sunday evening service that we commence this service at seven o'clock, just a little earlier than the other Independence churches.

East Independence

Last Sunday morning at a special business meeting after the eleven o'clock service it was decided to put a roof on the basement of the new church so it may be used for services this winter. This does not mean, however, that work will be stopped till spring, for the Saints expect to finish it as fast as possible.

The Saints enjoyed a visit and a good sermon from Bishop J. A. Becker Sunday morning. Elder J. J. Teeter preached in the evening.

Walnut Park

The speakers at Walnut Park Sunday were J. A. Dowker and H. O. Smith.

Group 29 will serve an old-fashioned oyster supper from six to eight o'clock in the church basement on the evening of November 24. A program will follow the supper. Everyone is invited to come and help on the building fund. Tickets thirty-five and twenty-five cents.

Good Results Follow Special Effort

COUER D' ALENE, IDAHO.—The Sunday school recently held a very interesting contest to gain recruits for the school. Two captains were chosen, and the entire Sunday school was equally divided. At the end of four weeks the side bringing in the least number of new members was to banquet the winning side. Many new members were brought in, and a very enjoyable time was had at the banquet, seventy being present. The defeated side proved themselves royal entertainers. Badges of purple and gold were used to distinguish sides, and these colors were also used in the decorations.

Our missionary, hearing of the interest that was being aroused, came to visit us and held forth for two weeks following the contest, telling the gospel story in his usual forceful way. It really seemed that he spoke with better liberty and that his sermons were more powerful than ever before.

The Saints decided to make a strong effort to get people to come out to hear the gospel message, so those who had cars would go after those who desired to attend and had no way of going.

Our branch president, Elder L. E. Holmes, could be with us only one week during the meetings, but he rendered good service that week.

As a result of the meetings and the contest, two have been baptized, and three more are to be baptized next Sunday. All are adults, three of them heads of families. There are several others interested and thinking seriously of joining us, so we feel that much good was accomplished.

MRS. L. E. HOLMES.

Groton, Connecticut

November 6.—Friday evening, October 10, a sale of fancy-work and miscellaneous articles was held at the home of Captain E. F. Griffin of Groton. The sale was given by the building committee for the benefit of the church fund. Saints and nonmembers were present, and the efforts of the evening proved a success. The sale was composed largely of contributions therefor, and a big profit was realized.

The evening of October 14 a farewell surprise party was given in honor of Brother John E. Blastow and family and Captain Griffin, at their home. They have recently gone to the Bahama Islands for the winter. The Saints miss them very much and are looking forward to their return.

At a recent prayer meeting, Deacon Charles Alves related a miraculous experience where he was spared from serious injury and almost certain loss of life.

Quite a few of the Saints attended the conference at Providence, Rhode Island. Douglas Alves took part in a dramatized Bible story which was presented at the conference.

At the last sacramental service the testimonies were unusually helpful, and a beautiful spirit was manifest.

The Holden Home anniversary celebration has been postponed one day, so will be held November 21 instead of November 20.

Brockton, Massachusetts

November 5.—The business meeting of the Sunday School and Department of Recreation and Expression was held recently and the following officers were elected for the coming year: Donald Crowell, Sunday school superintendent; Merrill Harlow, assistant superintendent; Harold Garfield, secretary; Alice Crowell, treasurer; Margaret Roberts, primary superintendent; Donald Crowell, president of the Department of Recreation and Expression; Elmer Dobbins, secretary and treasurer.

It has been deemed necessary, as an aid in dealing with the problems of to-day, to take up in the Sunday school the study of Social Problems, by F. M. McDowell. This step was carefully considered and is greatly approved.

A Halloween party was held at the home of Sister Sylvia Megathlin. The house was tastefully decorated with the traditional cats, witches, and jack-o'-lanterns, and all guests were greeted by ghosts at the door of a darkened house. They were promptly conducted along a creepy, scary, ghost walk, after which games were enjoyed and refreshments in the form of ice cream and cake were served.

The Good Cheer Club is again meeting and has proved by each successive year the wisdom of its becoming a permanent organization in the history of the branch. Their aims are highly commended.

A cake sale was held at one of the local stores by the Earnest Workers Sewing Circle.

Machias, Maine

November 4.—Services are still being continued at Little Kennebec Branch. Sunday school is held every Sunday morning, and Elder George C. Manchester, local elder, occupies the pulpit every Sunday evening, with fairly good attendance at all times.

The Saints of this branch are planning to give an ice cream social Thursday evening of this week, and all are hoping it will be a success.

Some of the Saints from here motored to Stonington, Maine, recently to attend the conference of the district held there. All report a very pleasant time. There are many nice Saints in that district.

Pensacola, Florida

November 7.—“Something to do for the Master each day” seems to be sung in the hearts of our diligent workers in this branch, for hardly have they ceased serving at one thing before they are hoping and praying for brighter prospects to open up, that they may always be of service to their Master. It has been our privilege to go out and help others, too. Brother Rudd was requested to go over to the new church at Flomaton, Alabama, and preach for them, so he took as many of our number as his car would accommodate, to help boost their work. Dinner was served on the church grounds. Many not of our faith were there, and from all news we have heard since a very favorable impression was made.

Sister Mearl Morgan, daughter of Brother and Sister Frank Morgan, was married at her home on October 12 to Mr. C. D. Blue, Brother Rudd officiating. After the ceremony, cake and punch were served. It was indeed a beautiful wedding, one we will not soon forget, for Mearl was one of our church girls, loved by all. Although Mr. Blue is not of our faith, he is a deserving young man, and we feel that later these two will be working together in the one faith.

The night of October 14 was the seventh wedding anniversary of Brother and Sister McBride, so a few of the Saints gave them a surprise party, bringing refreshments with them. All spent a very enjoyable evening.

A tacky party was given at the home of Sister McBride recently. As each guest entered, he was given a tapeline to measure around the waist, and for each inch he measured he was charged a penny, which money was turned over to the building fund. Refreshments were served, and all expressed themselves as having enjoyed one of the best tacky parties they had ever attended. Prizes were given to the tackiest man, woman, and child, and the judges certainly had a task in awarding the prizes, finally having to toss a coin to determine. The result of this affair was the addition of $16.50 to the building fund.

Brother T. C. Kelley was with us for several days and gave us some very interesting sermons. He promised to return again as soon as possible.

We are studying the Book of Mormon at Religio, and all are very much interested. We are glad to have such an able teacher as Brother Rudd to help us understand the working of our Father among those ancient people.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

November 7.—The Saints here are still busy. Work on the church addition is progressing as well and as fast as can be expected, as the brethren all have to work to support their families during the week and can give only Saturday afternoons to help. The addition is 24 by 25, making the church, when completed, 24 by 54. It will have a brick front with stucco sides and full basement.

The Sunday school chorister, Sister Sallie Conway, is to be commended for the way she is interesting the young in music. An orchestra has been organized, consisting of a saxophone, violin, horn, cello, and piano, and they have given some very fine music to the school. Also the branch chorister, Sister B. E. Brown, has organized a junior choir which is making wonderful progress.

Our desire is to see the work progress here, and all are working to that end, both physically and with liberal contributions. May God continue to bless his people, that all may work in harmony for the good of the whole is the wish of Colorado Springs Branch.

Bradner, Ohio

November 6.—At this time we are looking forward to the coming of Elder Jacob Halb, who is to hold a series of meetings at the local church soon. He was with us early in October and gave several very interesting sermons.

The Department of Women expects to install a library in the local church in the near future, and plans are being made to have a story hour at the church each Sunday afternoon this winter for the little folks.

Our young people were entertained Halloween at the spacious country home of Sister Hazel Graber. A parcel post sale was conducted, and the proceeds were used by the girls for their Christmas offering. Miss Graber's guests enjoyed a wiener roast and other eatables such as only country homes can provide. About fifty were present. The little folks and their parents were entertained the same night by Brother and Sister Will Smith. They roasted wieners and marshmallows and had plenty of pumpkin pie, and a good time.

Elder Everett Ulrich, who is doing missionary work with much success in Illinois, came home on Wednesday, October 29, for a visit with his family. He delivered a fine sermon in the local church November 2, using "Heaven" as his theme.

A parliamentary drill was held at the church Saturday, November 1, with Elder Fred Cadow as the leader. It was both humorous and instructive.

Much interest is being taken in the Department of Recreation and Expression, since a series of contests has been started. The losing side must put on an extra program. Such an entertainment was given Friday evening, October 17. The entire program was fine, with the Harmony Band (?) conducted by Herbert Ulrich as the outstanding feature.

Radio Flashes

Oklahoma City.—Just got through listening to your Tuesday evening program. Heard most of Brother Keir's address; then Elgin interfered, and by the time we were able to tune in again you were giving the closing quartet—No. 142 in Hymnal. How beautiful those words sounded to our ears. Then the signing off—"This is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at Independence, Missouri, A. B. C. announcing." There was so much static in the air the latter part of the program that we had difficulty in hearing, but we certainly enjoyed the program, as this was the first time we have ever been able to get K F I X. How nice it will be when you get the big station installed, so that your programs can be picked up without so much interruption from larger stations. Yours for the radio.—Mrs. R. M. Maloney.

West Jackson, Mississippi.—Have been hearing you quite often, but the program came in clearer Sunday night (October 26) than ever before. When the song number was announced, I reached my Hymnal. I could distinctly understand every word. The service was a pleasure and inspiration.—Mrs. A. C. Solomon.

Middletown, Ohio.—Just a line to let you know that we were listening in last night to the sermon delivered by Brother Tanner of Kansas City. Program came in fine. I wonder how many of us have been given only one talent and have hidden it until the Lord comes. I wish to thank you for these programs which we hear every week. May God bless the radio in the church.—Claude D. Barker.

Weatherford, Texas.—Sermon to-night came in fine. Compliments. Listening to your station is like hearing from home, as I once lived in Missouri. Also, since I came to Texas, lived with a Mr. Akers, who was reared at Independence.—R. T. Wiggs.

Montgomery, Alabama.—Am pleased to say that wife and I enjoyed the sermon by Brother Tanner Sunday night. Came in wonderfully clear and loud. Sometimes we would have to lift the receivers from our ears, he was so loud. And that beautiful closing song, No. 230, Hymnal! It was so sweet we were obliged to join in. I find it a little hard to separate K F I X from some station in Chicago, and some band music, but it was clear of all static and other interference when I did get tuned in. This letter will be followed by some donation on the new 1000-watt station, as radio is one of the most wonderful things in the world, and indispensable to the spreading of the gospel.—Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Jernigan.

A Trip Afield

It is probably true that general church officers and missionaries do not often enough take the trouble to report to the Saints the interesting and valuable experiences that they have in field or branch work. They are too busy doing the thing to write about it. However, having recently concluded a very enjoyable trip afield I have thought to share with HERALD readers to some degree in the experience.

Having been invited to participate in the official laying of the corner stone of the new church edifice that the Los Angeles Saints are erecting, I made that occasion the peg on which to hang a pastoral visit to various branches, as well as families and old-time friends in California, particularly in the Southern District.

The corner stone laying occurred Sunday afternoon, November 2. The service was preceded by a communion and ordination service held in the hall where the congregation is meeting temporarily. Besides the local brethren, there were present and on the program at the laying of the corner stone, Apostle R. S. Budd, District President N. T. Chapman, and H. W. Savage of the Seventies. Apostle John W. Rushton was on the program for a speech, but was detained in Independence by illness.

The laying of a corner stone formerly came early in the erection of the building. In this instance the frame work of the edifice was up and inclosed, nearly ready for the stucco. So the placing of the corner stone in position was more ceremonial than practical in its significance.

Among some peoples in olden times it was the custom to place some living thing under the corner stone, so that in a mystical sense life might be imparted to the building. A painting by a Russian artist represents a group of men dragging a lovely peasant girl to be cast into the pit beneath the huge stone—her life thus crushed out, to quicken and sanctify the building. Back of the corner stone in Los Angeles was placed, not a living creature, but the words of life as contained in the three books. The church in a figurative sense resting on this sure foundation, and the words of life springing up in the life of the worshiping congregation there assembling from week to week, we may hope that indeed the building will be quickened and made alive in a very fine and saving sense.

The building when completed will be one of the most modern and best-equipped church buildings in the possession of our people—in fact, it will be second to none. The building committee and trustees, under the leadership of the pastor, Elder Walter W. Smith, are pushing the matter forward rapidly and hope to have the church ready for opening by the New Year and the debt within a very short time reduced to a point where it can be easily carried. No doubt they will report cost and other items in due time.

I was privileged to speak to the Los Angeles Saints again that evening. They seemed in excellent spirits and quite united in moving forward with their building and other branch projects. If they remain of that spirit it seems assured that a period of expansion, progression, and service is before them. In past years such men as J. C. Clapp, D. S. Mills, Heman C. Smith, and later Gomer T. Griffiths, T. W. Williams, F. M. Sheehy, John W. Rushton, and David Dowker have given their services in one way or another to the branch. The last named about a year ago closed a long pastorate there, and his name is often in honorable mention among the Los Angeles Saints as one who labored untiringly for their good and particularly for the church building project begun during his pastorate. In the interim since his removal, Doctor Teel and Brother Rushton served short terms in pastoral capacity, and the Saints commend the work of both. With Brother Walter W. Smith now installed as pastor and the working forces of the branch united behind him, we may hope to see the planting of past years watered and cultivated to a rich harvest.

My home while in the city was with Brother and Sister Willard E. Badham. Brother Badham has for several years past been a member of the state legislature, and at the recent election had no competitor on any ticket, so was reelected without opposition, which speaks well for the esteem in which he is held in the State.

The Monday following the laying of the corner stone, with Brother Walter W. Smith I made a trip to Sunlands Valley to visit with and administer to an old-time friend, Sylvester Garner, who for some time past has been ill.

Tuesday everyone was engrossed in the national election, and I, not being allowed to vote in California, slipped away to visit Hermosa Beach where, with the family, I was domiciled at one time. The pelicans, sea gulls, and sea hawks were busy at their fishing, caring nothing apparently about politics or church problems. The breakers on the long beach sang their unending, unvarying song: they seemed to speak of an immutable God whose work goes forward in spite of human misunderstanding and waywardness. A day alone with God on the beach or in the mountains or the forest is good for the soul of man.

Wednesday, Brother N. T. Chapman drove me to Long Beach, where he is pastor. I had promised to preach that evening, and Brother Chapman had taken advantage of me and announced me for two evenings. So on the principle that if thy friend compel thee to go one mile with him, go twain, I spoke both evenings, and was profited thereby, since the Thursday night service was preceded by a dinner and social gathering in the lower room of the church. The spirit of fellowship was with us in the social gathering and the spirit of liberty and light in the preaching service. The Saints at Long Beach have remodeled their building and now have a very convenient and attractive church, and are in a fair way to liquidate the indebtedness at an early date.

Brother Chapman is held in high esteem throughout the district and particularly so in his home branch. Many also inquired lovingly regarding our aged Brother and Sister Garrett, who were stationed in Long Beach until failing health required them to be released; and inquiry was also made regarding Brother R. T. Cooper, one of the founders of the work in Long Beach. At this place I sojourned at the home of Brother and Sister Wilfred Burton. Brother Burton is a grandson of Joseph and Emma Burton and their home cherishes the gospel fire as becomes the representatives of such a heritage.

Following the meetings at Long Beach I visited Santa Ana, stopping at the home of David and Phyllis Carmichael—not the least important member of this family being David, jr.

The Santa Ana Saints have an attractive church building with parsonage adjoining. Brother Leonard Rhodes is pastor. Though suffering a serious handicap of ill health, this young brother has won the confidence and esteem of the Saints at Santa Ana and his work is spoken of by them in high terms. I was privileged to speak for them at this place Friday evening, in the stead of the regular Religio service, and enjoyed a good degree of the Spirit, together with close attention of the congregation.

Sunday following saw me again in Los Angeles for the morning service. Brother Chapman says that California has two sorts of weather: good, and unusual. The weather that day was unusual, though perhaps from the standpoint of the ranchers and fruit growers it was good, since a heavy rain broke a long drouth. Despite the rain there was a good attendance.

In the afternoon I took train to San Bernardino, my former home town—the church to which I first came twenty-four years ago as an inexperienced missionary. Then life was before me with its possibilities and its opportunities. Now, no matter how much may remain before me, that much is definitely behind me and so substracted from the whole. I do not regret any service rendered to the church or any so-called sacrifice—I only regret that the service has not been greater and more intelligently given. And whatever may remain, whether it be years or months or only days, I should like to do the greatest amount of good and the least possible harm to the cause that we all love. And this tour afield has again confirmed me in the belief that the greatest joy is in preaching the gospel of Christ and in the fellowship and communion of the Saints.

You may value the friendship of youth and of age,
And select for your comrades the noble and sage;
But the friends that most cheer me on life's rugged road
Are the friends of my Master, the children of God.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Graceland College Broadcasting Again

The church broadcasting station K F F V, at Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, has resumed operation with improved equipment. New microphone and amplifier apparatus has increased the efficiency of K F F V and will make the quality of reception equal to that of K F I X and other modern installations. The improvements also include a new microphone line to the Brick Church, so that services and special programs can be broadcast from that place as well as from the college. Over 6,000 feet of twisted pair telephone wire was strung on poles belonging to the Lamoni Electric Company. Thus by the courtesy of officials of the electric company the church radio department has a dependable private telephone line for broadcasting purposes.

A new schedule has been arranged by the college authorities, as follows: Sundays, 11 a. m., except on the first Sunday of each month—8 p. m. Mondays and Thursdays, 7.30 p. m. On Sundays the broadcasting will be from the Brick Church. The Monday and Thursday evening programs, consisting of music and educational talks, will be broadcast from the college.

The new wave length of K F F V is 280 meters. Those in charge of the broadcasting at Graceland will be glad to hear from HERALD readers who listen for K F F V's programs.

Joseph Smith as Trustee-in-Trust

SOME UNHAPPY ITEMS OF HISTORY THAT HAVE A BEARING ON PRESENT PROBLEMS

The dean of the HERALD Staff, than whom there is no finer writer in the church, recently published an exhaustive series of articles in the HERALD under the title, "The true philosophy of church government," setting forth the Presidency's claim to supreme directional control of all of the affairs—temporal and spiritual—of the church.

The writer stated his position as follows: "I cannot believe that the Bishop is an independent executive, subject only to General Conference," and then proceeded to argue that the Bishop in all matters is under the supreme directional control of the Presidency.

Unusual Precedent Cited

While not directly asserting that the President should be trustee-in-trust for the church as well as supreme director, a precedent is cited that could mean nothing else. Speaking of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, the article asserts:

As a matter of fact he handled some of the biggest financial undertakings of the church during his administration and was trustee-in-trust for the church at the time of his death.

We wonder if it is intended to carry the doctrine of supreme directional control along to such a conclusion as is reached in the above quoted paragraph.

Two Sides to Picture

We would that the history of early church finances under the Prophet's management had been as successful and as untroubled as the statement quoted would imply. Unfortunately, history reveals quite another story, and with it is associated some of the darkest tragedies of the past.

The Kirtland Bank

"The biggest financial undertakings of the church" are not described in the article, but perhaps have reference to the Kirtland Bank, which was one of the most ambitious business undertakings of the early church. The Kirtland Safety Society Anti-Banking Company was organized with Sidney Rigdon as president and Joseph Smith as treasurer. They proposed a capital stock of four million dollars, which one can readily see contemplated a business of considerable magnitude. This was in January, 1837. At that time Joseph Smith wrote in the Messenger and Advocate as follows:

It is wisdom, and according to the mind of the Holy Spirit, that you should call at Kirtland, and receive counsel and instruction upon those principles that are necessary to further the great work of the Lord, and to establish the children of the kingdom, according to the oracles of God, as they are had among us; and further, we invite the brethren from abroad, to call on us, and take stock in our "Safety Society"; and we would remind them also of the sayings of Isaiah, contained in the 60th chapter, and more particularly the 9th and 17th verses, which are as follows,—“Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, and to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold (not their bank notes) with them, unto the name of the Lord thy God, and to the Holy one of Israel, because he hath glorified thee. For brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood, brass; and for stones, iron. I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness.”

Spirit of Speculation at Kirtland

The next mention we have of the Kirtland Anti-Banking Company is in Joseph's Journal where he says:

At this time the spirit of speculation in lands and property of all kinds, which was so prevalent throughout the whole nation, was taking deep root in the church. As the fruits of this spirit, evil surmisings, fault-finding, disunion, dissension, and apostasy followed, in quick succession, and it seemed as though all the powers of earth and hell were combining their influence in an especial manner to overthrow the church at once, and make a final end. Other banking institutions refused the "Kirtland Safety Society's" notes. The enemy abroad, and apostates in our midst, united in their schemes, flour and provisions were turned towards other markets, and many became disaffected towards me, as though I were the sole cause of those very evils I was most strenuously striving against, and which were actually brought upon us by the brethren not giving heed to my counsel.

Bank Notes Repudiated

This was four months after the organization of the bank. In the August number of the Advocate he published the following notice regarding the bank:

I am disposed to say a word, relative to the bills of the "Kirtland Safety Society Bank." I hereby warn them to beware of speculators, renegades, and gamblers, who are duping the unwary and unsuspecting, by palming upon them those bills, which are of no worth here. I discountenance and disapprove of any and all such practices. I know them to be detrimental to the best interests of society, as well as to the principles of religion.

And the following January the final scene in connection with the bank is described by him in the following words:

A new year dawned upon the church in Kirtland in all bitterness of the spirit of apostate mobocracy; which continued to rage and grow hotter and hotter, until Elder Rigdon and myself were obliged to flee from its deadly influence, as did the apostles and prophets of old, and as Jesus said, "When they persecute you in one city, flee to another." And on the evening of the 12th of January about ten o'clock, we left Kirtland, on horseback, to escape mob violence, which was about to burst upon us under the color of legal process to cover their hellish designs, and save themselves from the just judgment of the law.

Not Joseph's Calling

Certainly the experience of the Prophet in handling "some of the biggest financial undertakings of the church," if it had reference to the Kirtland Safety Society Anti-Banking Company proved true the admonition given to the President, "And in temporal labors thou shalt not have strength, for this is not thy calling."—Doctrine and Covenants 23: 4.

Bankruptcy

As to the first Joseph Smith assuming the office of trustee-in-trust for the church at Nauvoo in 1841, that is what history records. What the reason was for his stepping into the place of Bishop George Miller who had been ordained Bishop of the church just six days prior to Joseph's assumption of financial control and trusteeship, the record fails to disclose. History does show, however, that within one year after he became trustee-in-trust for the church he was in the bankruptcy courts; and his son, our late President Joseph Smith, in writing of the matter in the HERALD, October 1, 1877, says:

From the constitution of the church, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, we conclude that whatever moneys, goods, chattels, or lands the church might own, they should be held by the Bishopric, as the officers of the church properly to be the custodians of the temporalities of the church. One thing is quite certain, out of the trusteeship of Joseph Smith, while he was president of the church, grew great trouble for his heirs and assignees in the shape of legal disabilities and defective titles to land, which gave rise to grave doubts as to the integrity of the trustee, or the wisdom of such trusteeship. . . . That the revenues of the church should have ever been at the control of one man was a grave mistake. No such unlimited and irresponsible agent of the church is known to the law; nor should such a precedent ever have been established. . . .

Precedents are made to follow only when they result in good. That person would be dull and that people would be stupid, who with the facts of experience plainly before them would repeat the experiment that proved disastrous. The early founders of the Reorganization with the tragic history of Nauvoo indelibly impressed upon their lives built anew for us on a foundation that has proved stable and secure. The late Joseph Smith set a wise and reasonable course for the church to follow. Can it be possible that the church will abandon its heritage and again seek a destiny that ended so tragically at Nauvoo?

Church Being Built in Thurston County, Nebraska

On the Indian Reservation in Thurston County, Nebraska, near the town of Macy, at the southeast corner of the forty-acre tract owned by the church and operated under the supervision of Elder B. F. Creel and Sister Creel as an experimental and demonstration farm among the Indians, there is being erected a beautiful little church with tile and stucco exterior, designed by Brother W. T. Wellman, of 3848 Cass Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

The foundation is now seasoning for the superstructure, and up to the present a very large percentage of the work has been done by the Indian people.

In the near future we expect to publish in Autumn Leaves the story of the past year's work among the Indians of this section of country, and an illustration of this beautiful little country church. If, as at present contemplated, this church is built at once by the sacrificing effort of the Saints and their friends, there likely will be a story of advancement of the cause of the church among the Lamanites in Nebraska. May success crown the effort.

Elder Creel had in his possession while in Independence, a beautiful water color picture of the contemplated church, and the universal comment was that this was an example of dignified beauty in architecture. Brother Creel lately received from a retired business man of Macy, a contribution of twenty-five dollars, accompanied by the following letter, which is typical of the feeling towards the project which we found to exist in that section of country:

MACY, NEBRASKA.

Dear Mr. Creel: In accordance with my statement to you this morning, I am sending you herewith my check for $25, to be used in connection with your church building plans on this reservation.

I wish to say to you that I have become very much interested in the work you are doing for the Omahas, and that while I am not a member of your organization, I am convinced that you are proceeding along the proper lines and that you are doing great good. I regret that I am not in a position to make this check for a much more substantial amount, as I feel it's a good investment. With my best wishes for your success with the Omahas.

Holden Home Seventh Anniversary

About forty guests sat down with the Holden Home family last Friday noon at their seventh anniversary dinner. Most of the guests came by auto from Independence.

At 2.30 in the afternoon all gathered in the auditorium where an extemporaneous program of songs and short talks was greatly enjoyed. Mrs. Edith Carr, the matron, made the opening talk, formally welcoming the visitors from far and near. She spoke of the disappointment of some past years, when after months of planning and all the immediate work of preparation only a few came to celebrate with them. She bespoke appreciation in behalf of the old folks for the splendid interest manifested by the attendance on this occasion.

Brother E. L. Kelley was next called upon by Brother C. B. Hartshorn, who was presiding, and responded very acceptably and feelingly. His talk was faith-inspiring, encouraging to greater diligence in our gospel service.

Mrs. Robert Self, who was the first matron of Holden Home, told some very interesting incidents in connection with the work of moving from Bonheim Home in Independence to Holden seven years before. She deplored the very thought of an institution. Her great desire was to make of it a real home, with the genuine home spirit for our aged. The majority of those who had come with her from Bonheim had passed on to their reward, she said, but strange as it may seem, the oldest ones among the Home family are still with us. She told of one old sister whose life they had despaired of in those first days in Holden, expecting she would be called to her heavenly home most every night. Although she is now blind and deaf, having no means of communication with her environment, yet as she held her hand to-day she returned her caress in a way that bespoke appreciation and love.

Bishop J. A. Becker told of Kirtland Home from which several of Holden's members came. Brother and Sister Becker were in charge at the founding of Kirtland Home, and he told some interesting features of the pioneer work incident to its founding. Bishop James F. Keir, of the Presiding Bishopric, paid a very high tribute to the character and work of Bishop Kelley. His fidelity under great burdens and the grace with which he had passed out of the active ranks were the speaker's inspiration. He held them up as worthy of emulation. The last speaker was Elder Robert M. Self. He told of the difficulty of getting adequate help during the war period in 1917 while moving and settling in Holden Home. Love of the task had made possible what would otherwise have been an unbearable burden.

At 7.45 in the evening an entertainment was held in the Home Auditorium before a delighted audience of about one hundred and fifty, many of whom were nonmembers of the church, residents of Holden. With the exception of a short talk by Brother D. J. Krahl and a vocal solo by Cora Young of Holden the entire program was given by Independence people.

Little Wilma Clow gave two readings. Mrs. Minnie Warnock rendered three character readings and two whistling numbers, while the K F I X trio furnished the instrumental numbers. This trio consists of Miss Emma Meggars, pianist; Stewart Tandberg, cellist; and Orrin Fry, jr., violinist. The audience was enthusiastic in their praise of the entire program.

The bazaar, in charge of Sister Mary Lamson, was a splendid success. Seventy-five dollars was added to the Holden Home Porch Fund through this effort. The old folks are making determined and zealous efforts to raise funds to put a large fireproof porch across the back between the two wings of the building. This will permit the more infirm ones and those who are confined to wheel chairs to get out daily into the fresh air and sunshine. The fund has attained about three fifths of its goal at this time.

Apostle Curtis Recovering From Pneumonia

Apostle J. Frank Curtis is at Llanelly, Wales, according to information received Monday by Brother T. W. Williams from Brother Paul M. Hanson. He had been suffering from an attack of pneumonia for ten days at the time the letter was written, and was then on the way to recovery, and hopeful to be moving around again in the near future.

Rapid Progress on Radio Station

The new 1000-watt broadcasting station is being rushed to completion very rapidly. The large steel towers which are to carry the aerial are looming up, and may be seen for miles. Some are discussing the probable effect on the church building, and some who have not thoroughly investigated the construction have expressed fear that the weight and height of the one located on the southwest corner of the building might be an injury. But this corner was originally constructed to carry a much heavier superstructure in the form of a stone and metal spire, which has left a very safe foundation for the tower now erected.

This is the last week of the drive for funds with which to build the new station, and the committee says there are many yet to be heard from. Promptness in sending your contribution will insure an early and satisfactory completion of the work. Send yours right now, that "Every ear may hear."

Marrow in the Bone

BY RALPH W. FARRELL

Our grandfathers did not pay much attention to teeth and noses and ears and hair and all the other "elements" which go to make up the human body—because, for one reason, they did not need to do so. However, it is not so with us, much as we desire it to be otherwise. We are children (and in the sense of this article's theme, victims) of a different age than the one in which our forbears (how I hate that word) lived.

Ours is the age of the white delusion—the white flour, white rice, white potato, white sugar, white blood, and, alas, white coffin. We can't successfully deny it. The fact is too obvious. And why does not somebody lift up the warning voice, loud and long, till every son of us knows the truth?

Well, the earth is waking up. And as one evidence, I submit a clipping taken from the morning paper:

"Unless the American people eat more whole-grain breads, more vegetables cooked to retain the lime salts, more whole milk and natural sweets, the next two or three generations will be a nation of weaklings, so far as bone and teeth are concerned," Doctor C. B. Fowlkes, of Birmingham, Alabama, asserted in an address to-day at the American Dental Association Convention.

"In the matter of diet, the dental profession has an opportunity for doing a real service in outlining a diet that furnishes the necessary lime salts to build tooth and bone structure during the prenatal and preschool period, as well as during childhood to the 18th year," Doctor C. B. Fowlkes said.

"One has only to look about him to see that the American people are not eating the right kind of breads, rice, and sweets, to say nothing of properly proportioned vegetable diet," the speaker declared. He stated that it is possible for any individual to reduce decay in his own mouth seventy-five per cent by proper home prophylaxis, and that proper mouth hygiene would reduce the percentage of contagious diseases in children, such as mumps, measles, scarlet fever, etc.—Globe Democrat, November 14, 1924.

Doctor Howard Griggs, in one of his glorious lectures, tells the story of Alfred McCann. Mr. McCann conceived the idea of syndicating some articles on health through eating. The papers took up with the scheme, and a score began publishing vital matter from the pen of this honest man. All went well for a season, and Mr. McCann saw his bank account increasing very satisfactorily. One day he sent in an article on the danger from eating too much denatured flour—white flour, devitalized flour, "dead flour," flour without the life-giving mineral salts. And the matter was printed and sent out to the world. What happened? The big eastern milling companies, who furnished the newspapers with expensive advertising matter, visited the publishers and warned them to print no more such "stuff." McCann was sent for and "advised." But McCann was a man—a real fellow. He would live in a hovel, see the dreams of his life crumble, stand alone in the social storm, give up the prospect of making money, but he would not surrender his manhood—and he did not. But the other portion came to him, and he surrendered his comfortable home for a little place in the suburb of the big city and kept on thundering against the men who were commercializing the blood and nerves and life itself of men, women, and children of America. Two papers stood with McCann, be it said to their lasting glory. But he did not need papers. He published books. And the man who wants to "harbor out life's tapers to the end" should get McCann's books and study them.

The argument used against McCann's position on properly ground whole wheat flour, was this: "It will cost us too much to produce whole wheat flour. The people want white flour. Our mills are not prepared to grind whole wheat flour." And we foolish people who eat with our eyes rather than our digestive organs have gone on suffering and making others suffer. Possibly the dentists and doctors of medicine rejoice. I do not know. I do not believe they do, for they, too, find their teeth melting away, their hair falling out, their children suffering just as other children suffer. And the death rate among one class of men is about the same as among another class, in this country. Wrong food combinations are not to be blamed for every ill of life, but a large part of the blame must rest right there.

I do not care much about the negative side of this question, but it makes mighty interesting reading. I know there are doctors who do not agree with me on this question of white flour, but I have the vast majority on my side, touching the principle of the thing.

So for a word on the affirmative.

Beware of "white" foodstuff. Purchase the unpolished rice. Wash and bake and eat potatoes "skins and all." (I refer to the average adult, not to the invalid and small child. The age-old question whether we should eat the skins of some fruits has not been solved. Chemists and doctors are yet working for the answer.) Keep searching until you discover properly ground whole wheat flour. If you want to be well, you will avoid white sugar. Brown is better. And for sweets, what will surpass honey? Use nature for a guide. White foods have been denatured. The delicious brown sugar, which has been called "congealed sunlight," has been taken and bleached. Rice has been polished, flour whitened, etc., all to please the foolish eye of man and add profit to the manufacturer. And it was really careless of me to overlook white salt. That stuff, too, is being called before the bar of justice. Whether the verdict that much of our goiter is caused by denatured salt is true or not, Michigan has passed a law that the iodine must not be extracted from salt. Would it not be safe, at least, to buy our salt from Michigan. Better still, let the grocery man (no charge for this suggestion) furnish it to us.

Now, what is the moral? Simply to issue warning to our grocer that we are done with his white poisons—that about the only thing on his list that is bleached that we will eat in the future is celery. And that is really done by nature's work. Tell him we want pure food, or he can go out of business or trade with the ignorant; for we shall know the truth and be free men and women and children henceforth. Let the public be educated. Let a degree of health creep back to us, for we have driven it from our door. It has been a thoughtless deed, but we have bitterly paid for it.

More apples, less "preserves." More fresh, life-giving foods; no stale, embalmed stuff that makes even the dog sick. More wisdom. More of the "Word of Wisdom." More life while we live. Here's to the "Word of Wisdom Club!"

Know the Law

BY BISHOP ISRAEL A. SMITH

SUPREME DIRECTIONAL CONTROL MEANS PRESIDENT WILL BE TRUSTEE-IN-TRUST

It had been my intention in this article to deal with the rights, duties, and obligations of trustees as defined and set out particularly in the "law of the land" and also present some considerations in regard to the question of supreme directional control and its application to theocratic-democracy; but since I have enlarged somewhat upon the questions involved in trusteeships, it will be necessary to leave the other question for later presentation.

A Dual Relationship

The person who functions as presiding bishop of this church may be said to occupy in a dual capacity. In one he has duties in which he acts as trustee of the properties and moneys of the church, and as such is surrounded, governed, and controlled by rights, duties, and obligations created by the civil law, in conformity with provisions adopted by the church lawfully affecting his trusteeship.

There is another relationship in which he operates under the rules and regulations of the church with which the law of the land is not immediately concerned.

In some things he is called upon to function in a broader sense than custodian of funds. As bishop, upon being counseled in regard to what sum a member should pay as tithing under the law of the church, he advises thus and so; but when he receives payment of the tithe, he acts as a trustee under the law of the land endowed with all the rights, authority, and disabilities of any trustee. The only difference between his rights, duties, obligations, and limitations and those of any other trustee are discoverable upon an examination of the documents, articles, instruments, or regulations which constitute as a whole the terms of the express trust under which he is acting.

It may not appear at first that there is anything to be gained by making the distinction, but as trustees of the property of the church, the presiding bishopric are differently situated than other church officers and are at once placed within the purview of all the law of the land relating to trusts, and there are reasons, and strong reasons, too, why the church has adopted the practice and procedure that has obtained during the entire history of the Reorganized Church and why General Conference has written into the rules of the church some of the resolutions found in the books.

I have the profoundest respect for the wisdom of those men who under God for so many years fashioned and shaped the destinies of this church. They have wrought safely and consistently in their effort to keep the church off the same treacherous rocks which made shipwreck of the church at Nauvoo.

Bishop's Duties Specifically Outlined

I make the statement without fear of successful contradiction that no officer in the church is so much circumscribed and hedged about as is the presiding bishop. His work is specifically set out and determined, and it is easier to know when his work is in disorder than the work of any other church official. And while he has a large discretion in many matters, an appeal is properly provided, so that an abuse of his discretion can be remedied as to individuals, and should he overstep his rights and his work be thrown into disorder to the injury of the church, a very effective remedy exists in favor of the body. That he as trustee, functioning in many ways in regard to the trust property, should have discretion, as provided in conference resolution, is in strict conformity to the law of the land, so that conference has only written into the law of the church what was inescapable and unavoidable.

Trustee Safeguards Should Not Be Broken Down

The revelations point out quite specifically that in case of personal transgression the bishop is amenable to the High Council of the church. Again, we have a precedent which carries the weight of law, that in case of disagreement between an individual and the bishop over a consecration, it should be referred to the High Council for adjudication. Should the case be one of maladministration however, where the "rights of the people are put in jeopardy," the remedy to the group or body itself lies in an appeal to the "joint council . . . of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy" as quorums having concurrent jurisdiction in administrative matters. (See Doctrine and Covenants 122: 10; 126: 10.)

It was with this viewpoint in mind, doubtless, that President Joseph Smith wrote in the HERALD of May 29, 1901:

The Book of Covenants provides that the church should hold its properties through its Bishopric, and not through the Presidency as trustee. This makes the Bishop the trustee of the church properties. To hold property in other ways is not in accord with the church rule; . . . the law provides for ways of dealing with the Bishopric, but does not so provide for trustees other than the Bishopric.

There was a greater element of danger to the general church in the way of putting its properties into the control of the President, than in the Bishopric rule. The control of the finances of the church added to the spiritual control would be an element of mischief to the general body, if the President was an ambitious and unscrupulous man, as the rules applying to the care of the finances under the Bishopric would not apply to him, and he would be in a way an irresponsible agent.

Bear in mind that this was the President of the church speaking. The question arises, What motive could have actuated him in thus defending the rights of the bishopric, as opposed to financial control by the presidency, other than that right might prevail, the law be upheld, the Lawgiver honored, and the church be saved from mischief and harm?

It cannot be found in the law anywhere that these same or any other adequate measures of redress governing administration by the bishopric would remain with the individual or group should the change be made giving the President the supreme control over finances which he is now seeking. The church will do well to take cognizance of this fact.

Make President Trustee?

It is believed by some that in spite of these warnings by our former President and the plain inhibitions of the law, which I have and will hereafter show, an attempt is likely to be made to transfer the trusteeship of church properties from the bishopric to the presidency. One very good reason for this belief is that "supreme directional control" by the presidency over the bishopric cannot work unless the president be given trustee power. Also the pronouncement has gone forth:

If Zion is to be redeemed, if Zion is to be established, it is going to take a strongly organized, strongly centralized government. . . . You determine what are the laws he [the President] executes, even if he becomes absolute in his power as administrator of the law.—F. M. Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, March 3, 1920.

It is evident to all that "supreme" and "absolute" powers in the administration of all affairs of the church, spiritually and temporally, cannot be exercised by the presidency if the bishopric continues to act as trustee over the properties of the church and discharges the obligations vested in such trusteeship by the laws of God and the laws of the land.

Bishop Cannot Frustrate Will of Body

It is absurd to attempt the argument advanced by some during the present controversy over "supreme directional control" that the presiding bishop could become a dictator, could establish himself in supremacy, or could frustrate the will of the body or nullify the purposes of the organization. I say it is absurd to make such claims for the reason that he could do none of the things mentioned without a violation of the terms of the express trust under which he must operate. A violation of any of the provisions of the law relating to his work would constitute disorder and the remedy is simple and plainly set out in the law; and if the violation were sufficiently gross, every district or circuit court in the land could be properly appealed to for any remedy that would be necessary in the premises.

Such arguments and fears, therefore, are premised upon disorder and illegality and have no proper place in our consideration, unless it is thought that the work of the Presiding Bishopric is already in disorder and some of the things feared have happened. If any disorder can be sustained by proper evidence, it is high time that some one take the legal steps necessary to set in order the affairs of their office. The fact that this has not been attempted should put a stop to such arguments, and loose charges of wrongful management should be avoided.

What Constitutes the Terms of the Trust?

The express trust which determines the work of the presiding bishopric as bishops and as trustees of the property of the church is found in various provisions of the Doctrine and Covenants, articles of incorporation, General Conference resolutions, including annual budget appropriations, etc. All of these could be resorted to in establishing his authority or the abuse of the same. In addition to these we have some things that probably would be given the force of law, such as practice and procedure uniformly followed for many years.

Who Are and Who May Be Our Trustees?

The articles of incorporation of the church, which present our form of organization have the following provision:

7th—Bishops, consisting of a Presiding Bishop, and associate or local Bishops—said Bishops having temporal jurisdiction subject to the general direction of the Church, and higher Church authorities.

It is interesting to note the particular and limited construction placed upon the general terms of the foregoing in the recent series of articles entitled, "True philosophy of church government." A splendid opportunity is offered for analysis in another contribution.

However, it should be borne in mind that the above quotation does not deal with the functioning of the bishops as legal trustees of the properties and moneys of the church, under the law of the land, because this is specifically provided for in other sections of the Articles of Incorporation, as follows:

Article 2.—The Presiding Bishop and his Counselors shall be the Trustees of the church, and perform all the duties contemplated by Chapter Two of Title Nine of the Code of Iowa, a majority of whom may perform any act under said law, or contemplated by this Organization.

This article designates who shall be trustees. Their term and other provisions relating to the trustees are set out in Article 7, as follows:

The term of office of said Trustees shall be as follows, viz: of the Trustee, who is the Presiding Bishop of the Church, during his good behavior, and while he remains such Presiding Bishop. Of the other Trustees, who are the counselors of said Presiding Bishop, during their good behavior—not extending beyond the term of office of said Presiding Bishop as such Trustee, . . . it being understood that no person can be Trustee of said corporation except the Presiding Bishop of said Church and his Counselors. Said Trustees or either of them, may be removed by said Church for cause, the same as any other Church officer.

It is then apparent that officers other than the Presiding Bishop and his counselors cannot function as trustees of the church. Is this provision in harmony with the Doctrine and Covenants? Let us see:

The work to be done belongs to those who are by command of God made the custodians of the properties of the church [the Bishop—see Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9, 10; 51: 1, 4.—I. A. S.]; and these by their appointment are empowered to prosecute the work of caring for and using such properties as are confided to their care to accomplish the end designed. The bishop and his counselors, together with the other bishops of the church, and such other officers as the bishop may call together, with whom he may confer in council, are authorized to devise the methods of procedure; and they will be guided by the spirit of wisdom and revelation to do the work intrusted to their care.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 2, 3.

The Spirit saith further: The attention of the church is called to the consideration of the revelation, given in answer to earnest supplication, with regard to temporal things. The word has been already given in agreement with revelations long since delivered to the church, that the temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations.—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

Others Cannot Exercise Trustee's Authority

As the presiding bishop and his counselors are the only officers of the church who can qualify as trustees of the organization, the question logically follows, Can others control them in their work as trustees, or can their rights of discretion and authority as trustees be delegated to others?

Pomeroy in his work on Equity says:

Section 1068 (3d ed.) 2. The Duty not to Delegate his Authority.—The office of a trustee is one of personal confidence, and cannot be delegated. A trustee, therefore, unless expressly authorized by the instrument of trust, cannot delegate, or transfer, or intrust, in whole or in part, his powers of discretion and management to any associate, subordinate, or assistant who takes his place and assumes his responsibility. If he does so, he remains liable to the beneficiary, and is chargeable for all acts and omissions of his delegate, and with all losses, whether occasioned by the latter's fraud, neglect, want of good faith, or other cause. This rule does not prohibit a trustee from employing agents. He may act through agents in his administrative operations: whenever such a mode of dealing is in accordance with the ordinary course of business.

Much could be presented in regard to the rights, powers, and duties of trustees, but we believe sufficient is shown to prove our point, that nobody but the trustee can legally function in controlling trust funds or property. He cannot lawfully be subordinated, nor can he escape responsibility by delegating his powers to others.

Trustee Troubles at Nauvoo and in Utah

The original church did not, so far as I am informed, attempt to operate as a corporation; but history records the fact that during its occupation at Nauvoo, Joseph Smith the Seer was appointed sole trustee-in-trust for the church. The late President Joseph Smith made a number of references to this fact. Among them we find the following:

For some time Joseph Smith served the church as trustee in trust. In this character he held considerable of the church property. At his death Elder Joseph Coolidge was made administrator, and we suppose that under his administration the property of the church held by Joseph Smith as trustee was put into the possession of the church, or trustees for the church. We think Messrs. Babbitt, Heywood, and Fulmer were made such trustees.

Subsequently, that portion of the church that went west appointed President Brigham Young trustee in trust, and he served in this way a number of years. At his death it was found that the trusts he held for the church as trustee were not referred to in his will; but the church obtained possession of such property by action of the executors of the estate of President Young, under the just debts clause found in the will. This is as we understood the affair as it was made public.

The Book of Covenants provides that the church should hold its properties through its Bishopric, and not through the Presidency as trustee. This makes the Bishop the trustee of the church properties. To hold property in other ways is not in accord with the church rule; . . .—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, May 29, 1901.

Another instance is that which was shown in the presentation of the President of the Utah Mormon Church being the principal authority in a great number of temporal enterprises, seeming to have individual direction thereof by which he commands the temporal interests of the people of his church, and is carrying out those enterprises in a commercial spirit such as anyone can see if he choose to open his eyes. This he is doing ostensibly upon the hypothesis that he is the Trustee in Trust for the church over which he presides and by virtue of this in direct control temporally as well as spiritually.

The brethren ought to have a sufficiently good knowledge of the organic character of the church to understand that the temporalities of the church are by the direction of revelation centered in the Bishopric, and not in the Presidency, nor the Twelve nor the High Council. The revelation does not create the President or Presidency as Trustees in Trust.—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, March 7, 1906, pp. 222, 223.

Basis of Adjustment Is Comprehensive

When rules of procedure were sought in 1877 and 1878 and a proper basis was worked out through joint council between the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, the Illinois charter was already operative—it had been for some five or six years. The man who is credited with having formulated the "basis of adjustment," the late President of the church, if not admitted to the practice of law, was at least a student of law, and without question knew that the presiding bishopric, in doing the various things in connection with the property of the church described in the document, must themselves exercise discretionary rights or powers. Others could not do so without violation of civil law, and others could not dictate or "control" without violation of law and making the trustees personally liable for loss if any should be suffered through such dictation or control. He knew that the presiding bishopric could not in good faith be asked to assume the great responsibilities of their office and in addition thereto jeopardize their own fortunes by allowing others to function in their place.

Let us observe the language again:

The Bishopric are the legal custodians of all the temporalities of the church, upon whom devolves the duty of gathering, safely keeping, and disbursing the moneys and properties of the church, in keeping with the law, and agreeably to the rules mutually agreed to by the Twelve and the Bishopric.

In the receiving and disbursing of church funds, all persons who may be intrusted therewith are in fact, or ex officio, agents for the Bishopric, and should account to the Bishopric; and in disbursing general church funds should do so by the direction of the Bishop, or in accordance with an agreement and understanding with the Bishopric previously had; specific, in regard to objects before determined upon; general, in regard to objects incidental to the prosecution of missionary labor, for which, in the nature of things, no specific directions can be given.

The Bishopric being created by and responsible to the church for the proper administration of their duty, should not, in justice, be made finally responsible to the Twelve, in any other sense than all other church officers are responsible to the same quorum; that is, by proper charge and adjudication before the general church officers, or by decision of General Conference.

Discretionary power to receive and disburse church funds, and dispose of church property for the uses of the church, according to the laws of the church, and subject to inquiry by the Twelve and the church, must rest in the Bishopric only, as, by law, the Bishopric only are legal custodians of such properties: . . .—General Conference Resolution No. 238.

I call special attention to the words: "as, by law, the Bishopric only are legal custodians of the properties of the church." We stand squarely on the proposition that the civil law in regard to trustees was well known to the men who framed the basis of adjustment, now General Conference Resolution No. 238, and the articles of incorporation.

Presidency's Trusteeship Illegal and Disastrous

It might be well for us to call attention to some of the fruits of the practice of the Utah Mormon Church to make their president the sole trustee of the funds and property of the church. We quote from an editorial of the late President Joseph Smith in HERALD of October 1, 1877:

From the constitution of the church, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, we conclude that whatever moneys, goods, chattels, or lands the church might own, they should be held by the Bishopric, as the officers of the church properly to be the custodians of the temporalities of the church. One thing is quite certain, out of the trusteeship of Joseph Smith, while he was president of the church, grew great trouble for his heirs and assignees in the shape of legal disabilities and defective titles to land, which gave rise to grave doubts as to the integrity of the trustee, or the wisdom of such trusteeship. If the heirs and successors of President Young shall be more successful, and not become involved in trouble arising from this cause, it will be a strange thing. The trustees left at Nauvoo to finish up the settlement of affairs there, were not an exception to the rule.

That the revenues of the church should have ever been at the control of one man was a grave mistake. No such unlimited and irresponsible agent of the church is known to the law; no provision for such an unguarded trust is found in the law; nor should such a precedent ever have been established. That it was possible, history has proven; but that it has been "profitable to the people" of Utah, or the church at large, notwithstanding President Young's boast, we think will not be confirmed by a thorough examination.

Out of the monetary affairs of the church, full one half of all the distrust and want of confidence has grown; and it has been the abuse of monetary trusts from first to last that has been the bane that has poisoned the springs of unity and peace. Not much else could have been expected where so flagrant an infringement of the law recognized as having been given of God was persisted in. This the church at Nauvoo and at Utah should have known. It will now be seen whether the trust so long reposed, where the interests were so important and so irresponsibly placed have been betrayed. If they have been, our neighbors are worthy of all condemnation in this particular if they do not amend.

Also from Church History, volume 4, page 279:

About this time the church in Utah was having some trouble over property bequeathed by President Brigham Young in his will. This resulted in some litigation, in the course of which the executors of the will, George Q. Cannon, Albert Carrington, and Brigham Young, jr., were confined in the penitentiary of Utah on the order of Judge Boreman, for contempt of court. The supreme court of Utah reversed this order, and the prisoners were released after being confined from August 4 till the 28th, 1879. The contention seemed to be brought about by the executors turning over certain properties to the church which by the will were bequeathed to the heirs. Some of the heirs sued the executors and President John Taylor as trustee-in-trust for the church for possession of the property. The court sustained the contention of the heirs and ordered the property conveyed to them, which the defendants did not do, and for which they were adjudged guilty of contempt. John Taylor gave bonds, and the executors went to prison, as before related. On October 4, the case was compromised and settled by the church paying the heirs seventy-five thousand dollars and retaining the property in question.

The writer is quite convinced from the foregoing and what he has learned from other sources that there were grave doubts of the propriety of making the president of the high priesthood the trustee of the church. I have no doubt that the provision that nobody but the presiding bishop and his counselors could be trustees, as quoted from the Iowa corporation charter, and as also found in identical language in the Illinois charter, was written into our organic law as an organization as a safeguard against any future attempt to repeat the experiment of Nauvoo and Utah. The practice is still followed in Utah, but it has been denounced as an apostasy by eminent authority, and I do not believe the members of the Reorganized Church will ever adopt such a plan for caring for its properties.

The late President Joseph Smith, knowing the law of God and the law of the land, and with some of the unhappy history of Nauvoo and Utah before him, set out his interpretation and the practice that obtained during his long and successful administration as follows:

The Presidency has not at any time assumed to claim control of the finances of the church, or attempted to direct as to the expenditures of the means gathered into the public treasury. Nor has the Presidency ever claimed or exercised the right to receive and hold the properties of the church as trustees.

The Presidency has always understood that the church finances, and the custody and care of the properties of the church, were by the direction of the revelations of God assigned as duties to the Bishopric, officers pointed out and chosen by the spirit of wisdom and revelation; who were responsible to the church for the rightful and righteous discharge of the duties imposed upon them.—SAINTS' HERALD, May 13, 1903.

In the foregoing article we have shown:

1. That the duties of the presiding bishopric are governed by both the law of the church and the law of the land.
2. As trustees of the church moneys and properties they are specifically controlled by the law of the land.
3. General Conference Resolution No. 238 states the civil law as governing trusts, and recognizes that the bishop must function in harmony with the laws of the land.
4. The interests of each individual member and also the body as a whole are amply protected and preserved by the laws which regulate and control the bishopric.
5. These same safeguards are not provided when any other officer of the church is made trustee-in-trust.
6. The discretionary powers of the bishopric do not permit them to frustrate the will of the body.
7. Our articles of incorporation will not allow any others than the bishop and his counselors to act as trustees for the church.
8. Supreme directional control over a trustee is illegal and the trustee is personally liable for all delegation of powers.
9. All attempts to place both spiritual and temporal control in the hands of one man have resulted in mischief and confusion.
10. The Reorganization should adhere to the divine plan wherein the interests of all are safeguarded, and reject such innovations as "Supreme Directional Control."

Rural education is progressing. All the State teachers' associations now have special sections devoted to the discussion of problems directly concerned with the improvement of country schools. Even Rhode Island, the most urban of all the States, has a large and enthusiastic village and rural section in its State association. At a meeting held recently several hundred members of that section showed vital interest in school consolidation, transportation, and other problems usually associated with States which have a large rural population.

The Presuppositions of a "Democrat"

BY BISHOP C. E. IRWIN

There is perhaps no word in the English language which has such a wide range of signification as the word democracy. It is used to designate forms of governmental organization, political theories, philosophical tenets, religious methodology, educational reforms, and social-mindedness; and in its name rebellion, dogmatism, orthodoxy, radicalism, and violence are justified.

It is not our purpose to explain the reasons for the frequent usage of the term. Indeed, that would be a task so formidable that it would be almost forbidding. We are, however, merely calling attention to the fact of this frequency and pointing out the danger involved when any usage is employed carelessly.

Bishop Carmichael, in giving timely advice to the writer, once said: "Young man, if you define your terms, debate will cease." Of course, this is not true absolutely, but as a tendency it is a most apt observation, and it was this tendency that he had particularly in mind. No one should draw the inference that the writer is advocating an editorial policy for the HERALD which would countenance the suppression of the views of anyone. The inference should rather be drawn that as a matter of fact, if due care is used in defining terms, the inevitable result will be a decrease in the volume of controversy.

We might, of course, have considered any number of other terms, but the term democracy has been in such popular favor during recent months that it does not seem that apologies need be offered for the choice made. Without attempting to standardize a definition for democracy, we are merely trying to list several of the possible connotations which may be deduced. It is hoped that readers and hearers may thus avoid confusion, by insisting that terms shall be defined before conclusion are drawn.

Democracy and Equality

One of the most common usages of the term is one which associates it with the idea of equality. Examples might be cited illustrating such extremes as a state of absolute social equality, where all property is held in common and where there is absolute freedom of thought and action. Such a nonrestrictive social state would perhaps harmonize with the prevailing notion of what constitutes anarchy. On the other hand, equality may imply a social state in which only a few rights and privileges are enjoyed equally by all, but in which the sphere of action of the individual is limited in the interests of the group. This latter condition comes about through the voluntary surrender of rights by the individual in order that the welfare of the group may be augmented.

Democracy, as we see it in operation, may insure a degree of equality; but it certainly does so, if at all, only in a very restricted sense. Everyone knows that he can do as he pleases only when he pleases to do what most people think is right, proper, or conventional.

Economic Democracy

In recent times there has been a decided shift of interest to this aspect of democracy. In early colonial times, when there was an abundance of free land and a great abundance of natural resources, it seldom occurred to the pioneer that in the course of one hundred years conditions would be so radically altered as to present such persistent problems as are now confronting us. It rarely occurred to him to raise then the question, "Does a man have a right to work?" Of course if he wanted to work there were none to say nay, for there was always the wilderness just beyond the frontier, waiting to be brought under man's control. But now, with our complex interdependencies, this problem is a most serious one. On the basis of ethical considerations, most of us are prepared to answer unhesitatingly that man does have the right to work. Yet during the last several years there have been at all times a million or more men who could not find a job. Even now, as these words are being penned, there are thousands of men and women standing in line asking that they may have the privilege of earning an honest living, and they are being denied. In spite of the progress of democracy, the right to work uninterruptedly has become a mere fiction. The so-called inalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are empty expressions, and the rights themselves, if indeed they are rights, exist only in theory and can in no sense be enforced. The so-called right to work becomes a right only when the majority agree to respect it as such. We have apparently not yet arrived at that stage of development of group consciousness, either in the church or out of it.

Democracy and Sovietism

At least in one instance as an attempt to guarantee an economic sufficiency to the working man, as a protest against the system of Private Property, there has been set up machinery which it was hoped would produce desired results—namely, the creation of an aristocracy of the proletariat. Here we have a type of democracy (popular control) which is not universal in its scope, but whose benefits are restricted to only a segment of the body politic. This is the anomaly of democracy, originally intended as a safeguard against class legislation, being perverted so as to promote the interests of one class at the expense of all other classes.

Democracy and Nationalization

In attempting to remedy some of the economic ills of modern society, Great Britain has recently tried another interesting experiment. True, its practical application was no doubt hastened by the exigencies of war time, but students of English politics and economics have been conscious of the drift in this direction during the past ten years, and more. The avowed purpose of this move was to increase the sum total of human well-being by diverting surplus profits accumulated in government-operated industries into such public works as could be used and enjoyed by all alike. This attempt, curiously enough, was made under a governmental regime which has been traditionally monarchial in sentiment. The same movement, however, has been bitterly contested in this country, where democracy is said to have been most successful. Some Englishmen of note, having these nationalistic schemes in mind, have said that England is the most democratic country in the world, and some Americans who would like to see government ownership in operation here, believe that this is true. This conviction, however, was probably not based upon a reading of American history written by American authors. One finds no more virulent individualism anywhere than among American historians.

After all, it depends largely upon the measuring device employed in taking measurements rather than upon absolute or rigidly undeviating standards.

Democratized Culture

Under our American democracy we have allowed commercialism to crowd out, to a large degree, the love for things beautiful. Our lack of reverence for Old World architecture and art causes the European to look upon us in pity, because of what appears to him to be our ignorance. There are those who, in diagnosing the situation, claim that the greater the degree of democracy, the less the appreciation of art, music, and literature. It is perhaps not fair to arrange cause and effect in such an arbitrary manner, but it does present a question to which serious-minded people are giving much thought.

Just now we are hearing a great deal about democracy in education and democratized religion. If we imply that education and religion have been Americanized, after the manner of political theories, then, judged by Old World standards again, we would be considered as having become intellectual and religious perverts. Indeed, when one considers the types of amusements which make up the recreational diet of the pleasure-seeking public, the tuneless jazz music, the voluptuous art and prosaic and monotonous architecture, one is not disposed to be too vociferous in his denial of the charges made by our critics.

Democracy and Freedom of Thought

It is an open question whether the existence of a democracy, so-called, guarantees freedom of thought, much less freedom of expression. So efficacious is the weapon of social pressure, that when it has been applied in the past it has almost always produced prohibitory results. Under the enthusiasm of prospective military achievement, the voice of the conscientious objector was silenced, perhaps even more rigorously here in the United States than in Europe. Roger Williams suffered persecution with his confreres in defending a common cause. But almost before the blush of victory had faded, Roger found himself banished. His plea for tolerance fell upon unsympathetic ears. Very often in modern religious history has the case of Roger Williams been duplicated. The persecuted becomes persecutor.

Democracy in Government

This brief discussion of democracy in government is justified because of the frequent analogies which have been drawn in recent discussion in the HERALD. It seems that many of these discussions have implied governmental routine and devices which rarely exist except in theory. For instance, the implication that actual government in the United States is directly controlled by the masses is a theory no longer credited even by second-rate political theorists. Only soap-box orators play upon this feature, to aid them in governing votes. It was never once intended by the framers of the Constitution that the Government of the United States should be a democracy, interpreted as direct control by the masses. Instead, it was their intention that the government should be representative in form, the control by the masses thus being exercised only indirectly. Originally the only check against a continued maladministration was a refusal to reelect. If a change were to be effected, therefore, it was necessary to change the personnel or the policy at the time of election. Only comparatively recently has the principle of the recall been applied in government, and that only in certain parts of the country and under special circumstances.

After all is said, it is generally recognized that the discretionary or implied powers of the elected representatives are much more important than the specific powers delegated to them. Whatever may be the justification for this method of governmental administration, it is certain that the increasing demand for specialization is one factor which should not be overlooked. We are suffering to-day in the United States, not because we have too much leadership, but rather because we have a dearth of superior leadership. There is little likelihood that there will, in the future, be a curtailment of the powers of our political executive; instead, it is probable that there will be a tendency to enlarge those discretionary powers, not forgetting to provide the necessary safeguards, through adequate checks, against the abuse of them.

What Does "Democracy" Mean?

It ought to be clear that democracy or any other term carries the connotation which the speaker or writer wishes it to carry, only when he uses due care in defining it, so as to serve the specific purpose which he has in his mind. If he chooses to allow it to remain undefined, then the reader may, and does, construe it as the context warrants, or as his own presuppositions dictate. It ought also to be clear that readers have a wide range of choices which they may make. Both writers and readers will be influential in reducing the volume of controversy when, and if, they make sure that terms are clearly defined before conclusions are formed.

What Are You Reading?

BY MRS. A. MCKENZIE

The Lord as far back as 1832 placed his approval on knowledge when he said, "Seek learning even by study." (Doctrine and Covenants 85:36.) How many of the Saints are readers of the HERALD and are keeping in touch with the discussion by the different writers, pro and con, which is at present engaging the attention of the entire church? "The glory of God is intelligence" (Doctrine and Covenants 90:6), and our duty to God is to gain all the knowledge possible. The Lord has not restricted his people to the three standard books of the church, but he says, "Study and learn and become acquainted with all good books."

We are passing through a school of experience, not always pleasant, but we learn by the mistakes we make.

"History repeats itself" is an old adage, but one which can be used to advantage. We can read the history of the church in the past and profit by the mistakes that were made by others and so avoid them. The Lord has told us to "obtain a knowledge of history" (Doctrine and Covenants 90:12), therefore it is our duty to God to read and gain knowledge that we may be able to judge intelligently of what is being said.

When the Lord said, "Study all good books," he did not intend that his people should spend precious time reading trash, but he meant just what he said—good books. Many of the Saints have their tables covered with dailies and magazines full of impossible stories, but you look in vain for church papers or books, and the excuse they offer is, "We cannot afford them." At the same time their thoughts are on the vapid nonsense which is contained in the cheaper grade of magazines.

This matter of reading is an important one; so much so that as early as 1832 the Lord commanded his people to establish a "house of learning." (Doctrine and Covenants 85:36.) In 1831 W. W. Phelps was instructed to assist Oliver Cowdery in selecting and writing books for schools in this church, that little children also "might receive instruction before me as is pleasing unto me." (Doctrine and Covenants 55:2.) The matter that is placed before the children is of grave importance, as their minds are easily impressed and can be easily swayed for either good or evil, and for this reason the Sunday newspapers should have no place in a Saint's home. What is called the "funny" page is just purely idiotic; it requires a far stretch of imagination to call those monstrosities "funny," yet they are eagerly looked for each Sunday morning, and the little ones are being thus educated. It is in vain we build schools and universities with our means while at the same time we are teaching irreverence and disobedience. In 2 Timothy 3:2, "disobedience to parents" is mentioned as a sign of the end. Irreverence is one of the prevailing sins of the day, and in many cases has been traced to the Sunday newspaper with its colored monstrosities.

The influence of one bad book cannot be estimated and will never be known until the books are opened and judgment is passed. A wave of infidelity is passing over the land and is having its influence with some. I had my attention called lately to a newspaper which denounces religion and calls it a sham, and the editor calls himself a "smasher of shams." It goes to show how careful we should be of what we read. The biographies of good men should be given to children. Place before them high ideals and feed their minds with noble things.

Omaha, Nebraska

November 11, 1924.—Since our last letter, our branch has been favored by visits from a number of our leading ministers, for which we are truly grateful. On October 12 Apostle J. W. Rushton preached for us both morning and evening, and left with us his customary message of good cheer, faith, and encouragement. "Reverence, the foundation of morality," was the theme of one of his sermons, weaving it about that exhibition of contempt for the Christ which was manifested when his accusers said, "This fellow——" In the evening he explained the necessity for and the operation of religion in the life of the individual, which proved instructive and inspirational for his hearers. A quartet and a duet added to the beauty of the morning service, and the young people's choir gave the evening anthem. While here, Brother Rushton had the pleasure of blessing his grandniece, the little daughter of Brother and Sister Norman Issott.

On the evening of October 19, Brother Hale W. Smith, formerly missionary in the church forces, but at present superintendent of public schools in Little Sioux, Iowa, was our speaker. He chose for his subject, "Christ, the philanthropist," and very clearly analyzed the quality of the service Christ rendered to those in need about him. Comparing that service with the advanced methods of social service to-day, Brother Smith traced the similarity of principles and methods. When spiritual encouragement was a man's need, that was what he received instead of material aid. When he needed bread, he was not offered a stone.

"Faith" was the subject of our pastor's sermon on the morning of October 26, and "Sabbath keeping" the theme of his evening's discourse. In both of these was plainly traced our duty as Saints, as well as some of the dangers and pitfalls to be avoided. Brother Whalley attempts to make his sermons fit the needs of his people as he feels them, and he spares not himself in his ministry unto them.

The first Sunday of November, sacramental service occupied the morning hour, and the pulpit in the evening was filled by Apostle John F. Garver—surely a treat for Omaha Saints, since it is his first visit to us. Brother Garver has the faculty of making his hearers feel a definite sense of unity with him; an understanding sort of contact, decidedly favorable to a sympathetic reception of his message. Plans are being laid to have this good brother return soon to give us a series of sermons.

And, to round out the pleasing story, last Sunday Brother U. W. Greene was our speaker, also a first appearance before an Omaha audience. "Why halt ye between two opinions?" was his theme, with a strong plea for Saints to become something more than lukewarm in their championship of the restored gospel. It is easy for Brother Greene to capture the hearts of his hearers. He gives lavishly from his unusually rich store of mental treasure, and his wide travels and varied experiences as a missionary among strange scenes and peoples make him an exceptionally attractive speaker. We hope he, too, may come to us again soon. That evening Brother Whalley preached on "Graceland College," to round out a day marked with contributions to that worthy institution. The Sunday school devoted their morning collections, $11.87, to this good cause, and $24.70 was added by collections later in the day. Graceland College has an ardent supporter in Brother Whalley, who received its benefits throughout last year.

The young people of the branch have organized under the name of "La-Da-Sa Choral Society," for purposes of "personal development, social activity, and musical service to the Omaha Branch." Brother Lee Borders is president, and Sister Audentia Anderson, director. They meet at six o'clock each Sunday evening, and after an hour of rehearsal have a social time, the program varying each week. "Eats" one evening, with the girls as hostesses; a fortune-telling witch, and Halloween games, with cider and doughnuts furnished by the boys, marked the Halloween week; a spelling match (with Brother Borders coming out victor), followed by a polling of votes for United States President and Vice President, and governor of Nebraska, furnished entertainment for the Sunday preceding our national election. Each evening since their organization the society has furnished the evening anthem, and are to give some special musical programs during the winter. There are about fifty enrolled, and lively times are enjoyed.

The Department of Women gave a luncheon at the home of Sister Lillian Tabor on October 23. This brought them over $10. Almost that much was realized from their serving the "meat" course for the progressive dinner, which was enjoyed by thirty-two young people on Saturday evening, October 25. They are meeting weekly to work on things for the bazaar, which will be held early in December as usual.

Sister Rose Adams, our Sunday school superintendent, was hostess for the "fruit cocktail" course of the progressive dinner referred to above. She had her rooms very beautifully decorated with Halloween colors and symbols. From there the young people went to the home of Brother Carl Self, about as far northwest as they could go, where Sister Self served the "soup" course. Ghosts, fortunes concealed in nuts, etc., furnished side entertainment. Thence to the church, where chicken pie, biscuit, vegetables, etc., delighted the guests. The new matting for the church had come, and the sisters, assisted enthusiastically by the good pastor, had managed to get it down, and the church all prettily decorated, candle-lighted, pumpkin faces, and all. Sister Anderson was hostess for the salad course, and "the bunch" wound up at the home of Brother and Sister Fredrick for ice cream, cake, music, and games. This affair was planned by the boys, and financed by them.

In return for the attention, the Temple Builders gave a Halloween party at the church for the whole branch on the evening of Friday, October 31. Ghosts met the guests at the front door, and chanted a weird refrain about going to the back door. Conducted thither by other ghosts, we were compelled to enter a dark passageway, walking on bed springs, greeted by spooky figures who dangled wet gloves about our faces, or shook hands only to dip our hands into slimy concoctions. Had to pick our way through the kitchen which had been converted into a graveyard—tomb stones, mounds, and grass barring our progress. Pumpkin faces and shaded lights gave the church a pleasant glow, and the good program and lively games which followed proved the Temple Builders royal entertainers, not to mention the pumpkin pie, doughnuts, and apples which were served later. These are the bright places in our social contacts which serve to bring us into close sympathy and great unity, and are to be recognized and encouraged as a distinct factor in branch life and progress.

Among the visitors of late have been Sister E. L. Phillips, from Griswold, Iowa; Sister Mollie Vogler and daughter, Vivian, from Magnolia, Iowa; Sister Etta Brownrig and Sister P. R. Burton, of Walthill; Brother and Sister Charles Spanswick and mother, Sister Ahlstrand, from Council Bluffs; Sister Mary Godfrey, of Kearney; Brother S. S. Clarke, from Tabor; Glen Gamet, from Ralston; Chester Whitehead, of Logan; Sister Grace Miller, of Council Bluffs; and Brother O. P. Brown and son, also from our sister city. Some of these are to remain, and will become, we hope, active members of our branch.

Sister Eben Wilcox, formerly of Shenandoah but recently of Kansas City, is in the city, recovering from a painful operation. She is at the Sanford Hotel, where interested friends may address her. Brother Bert, son of Brother and Sister Roy Bryant, was operated on for an acute attack of appendicitis on the 22d. This young lad is one of great promise in our branch, and we were glad to see him with us last Sunday, though somewhat weak and thin. Sister Genevieve, the young daughter of Brother and Sister A. A. Thiehoff, through a fall October 17, suffered a concussion of the brain and a subsequent congestion, which threatened to take her from us. Thanks to God, through the wonderful ordinance of administration she is being restored, the blood clot on the brain is being absorbed gradually, and the Saints receiving a new cause for rejoicing.

On yesterday morning Brother T. J. Edmunds suffered an accident at his work at the Union Pacific shops, which resulted in his being very severely burned. It was thought his injuries would prove fatal, but reports this morning are favorable, for after administration yesterday a decided turn for the better was noticed. He will need the prayers of the faithful.

Brother Whalley administered the last rites over the body of Thomas McGift, who died on October 4 at the home of his brother, Chris McGift. He was born in Galesburg, Illinois, in 1850, and leaves two sisters besides his brother.

Two of our brethren have recently been distinctly honored in the professional circles of this city. Brother Henry A. Merchant was elected president of the Omaha Dental Association, and Brother W. E. Stoff was elected vice president of the Dental Alumni of Creighton University. Both of these brothers are among the leaders in their profession, and it is a pleasure to see their achievements receive this honorable recognition.

Thayer, the three-week-old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Mullen, of Wesley, Iowa, and grandson of our Brother M. N. Perkins, was blessed October 19. This young man is a grandnephew of Sister Mina Perkins Kearney, well known to the church as a writer.

Congratulations are in order for our pastor, upon his most recent acquisition: a Ford coupe. Brother Whalley is learning to "tame the brute." Hasn't climbed any trees or telephone poles so far, but we understand he won't yet trust his Molly to the capricious vehicle. If anyone can make use of a "chariot that runs like lightning," it will be our zealous pastor, for he is indefatigable in his visits among the members. We all unite in wishing for him and his missionary wagon a successful career in this city.

Tryon, Nebraska

November 19.—The home department in Pleasantview Branch has been inactive for two quarters back, but the Saints are making good promises for better reports. Only one other meeting has been held, in which it was decided to move the church house as soon as possible to a better and more convenient place. There are only a few Saints here, and they are scattered.

Young of Lansing Are Working

LANSING, MICHIGAN, November 13.—The Saints in this part of God's vineyard are striving earnestly and diligently to do their part towards the redemption of Zion. We have a membership of about two hundred, and others are joining us as they become acquainted with the gospel.

The young of this branch are working hard, not only to educate themselves, but also to help in the church work, and every evening finds them diligently occupied along these lines. We were quite disappointed at having to discontinue our young people's Sunday morning prayer meetings, as we feel that the prayer meetings are the main pillars of the church's spirituality and cannot be indulged in too often.

We have Brother and Sister Bert Cooper and their baby boy of Detroit with us. Brother Cooper is recuperating from a broken leg. He is greatly improved and can get to church by using crutches. We are hoping they will stay in Lansing, as they are church workers and are greatly needed. Our branch president, Brother F. F. Wipper, is handicapped considerably, owing to the fact that he is laboring in the missionary field and is obliged to be away a great deal of the time. We are trying to lend him our cooperation, for we realize that in unity there is strength.

Impressions of Toronto, Canada

The city has about 600,000 inhabitants. It is located on beautiful Lake Ontario. Unlike many lake and ocean cities, Toronto's "front door" is beautiful, as the result of expert planning. The average lake city is cluttered up with disreputable looking buildings and piers.

For several miles the Harbor Board has pumped in many thousands of cubic yards of sand from the lake, and on this is built beautiful "Sunny Side," a fairy city, a super Atlantic City and Coney Island.

The Master of men has said that a city set on a hill cannot be hid. The same is true of a city set on a lake illuminated with millions of electric lights.

The minimum rate of electricity in Independence is seven cents per kilowatt hour. In Toronto it is one cent! So the city at night is a blaze of glory. The Hydro Electric Company is municipally owned, and obtains its power from Niagara Falls. Toronto is possibly one of the best and most uniformly illuminated cities in the whole world.

A large part of the business section is archaic, but the thousands of new homes erected in the rapidly expanding city are the last thing in stone and brick and are a delight to the eye.

The Toronto Saints

The church building seats six hundred persons. The defection of the late R. C. Evans some years ago caused about one half of the membership to leave the church. During this dark and cloudy day the church sent T. W. Williams to Toronto. Possibly no other man in the whole church could have handled the situation in as masterly a manner as did Brother Williams. His memory will ever remain green in the minds of his host of friends there for the service he performed in that crisis.

Oftentimes a noisy, aggressive minority bloc may cause erroneous impressions to be made on the mind.

Some have obtained a wrong impression of the Toronto Branch.

I arrived in Toronto July 14, 1922, and acted as their pastor until November 3, 1924, when I resigned to take up church work in Independence at the call of the Presidency.
www.LatterDayTruth.org

From this intimate acquaintance with the branch I ought to know of whom I am writing.

As a whole, the Toronto Saints are a lovable, happy, prosperous, virile, normal, loyal band of real Saints.

The young people of the Toronto Branch are among the finest. Some of the university boys are going to make their mark.

Among the younger people who have had university and special training are a social worker, one taking home economics, a doctor, and several doctors in process of incubation, a dentist, a civil engineer, many school-teachers, several trained nurses, a lawyer, several cutters of fine glassware, and a deep-sea diver! Has any other branch the latter two trades?

The little Toronto Branch on the north and the Humber Bay Branch on the west are also blessed with talented and consecrated Saints of God.

In leaving Toronto I wish to offer this little tribute to the Queen City of old Ontario and to my Canadian brethren and sisters.

British Isles Annual Sunday School Convention

MONTON ECCLES, MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, October 25.—The annual Sunday school convention of the British Isles Mission was held at Wigan, Lancashire, England, October 18 and 19, and a most enjoyable and profitable time was experienced.

The business sessions were held in the Church of Christ, Albert Street, Newton, beginning Saturday evening at half past six, with Superintendent J. A. Judd in the chair. After a few remarks by Brother Judd, Apostle J. F. Curtis was called upon to address us for a short time. His remarks were upon his travels in Palestine and other countries with Apostle Hanson, the principles of the gospel of Christ, and of the Sunday school and its importance. He said that teaching is done in two ways: by preaching and by example, but to be effective both must be in harmony. He also said the Sunday school is needed and that we should do the business that would advance the Sunday school work to its best.

After a few opening remarks by Brother Judd, the minutes of the previous convention were read and accepted, which was followed by the passing of a resolution making Apostle J. F. Curtis an associate in the superintendency. Reports of the superintendent, assistant superintendent, secretary, and treasurer, were read and accepted. It was further decided to divide the British Isles Mission Sunday school into four districts, with a general supervisor over the entire mission, to be nominated by Apostles Curtis and Hanson. Brother J. A. Judd was chosen upon the recommendation of these two apostles. The Sunday school secretary was sustained as the secretary of the reunion, and Elder J. W. Foster was chosen treasurer. After announcement of the Sunday sessions the meeting adjourned.

The Sunday meetings were held in the Total Abstinence Hall, Greenough Street, Wigan. The opening meeting was at eleven o'clock with Apostle Curtis in charge. After a beautiful solo by Sister Olive Heywood, Elder J. A. Judd preached on "Enter ye in at the straight gate," a powerful call to service.

The afternoon service was in charge of Elder Judd, at which time a solo by Sister Alice Stead, "I am the way, the truth, the light," was much enjoyed. Apostle J. F. Curtis then exhorted the Saints to get into the spirit of prayer and praise, after which the meeting was given over to fellowship, in which many testimonies and prayers were offered, many young people taking part in testifying to the glories of the latter-day gospel. A prophecy testifying of God's love and blessing was given through Elder Judd.

The evening service at half past six was in charge of Brother Judd. After a beautiful duet by Sister Taylor and Brother Fawcett, "The sinner and the song," Apostle J. F. Curtis gave a very fine address that was full of object lessons. The meeting was brought to a close with prayer by Elder J. A. Judd.

Altogether a most profitable and enjoyable time was had in which God's Holy Spirit was present in power.

WILLIAM HEYWOOD, Secretary.

Alexander, Kansas

November 16.—We had a two-day meeting here the first and second of November with good attendance. We greatly appreciate these two-day meetings and hope they may continue. A short program was given Saturday evening, followed by a sermonet by Brother Nutt.

Last Tuesday, November 11, one of our families moved to Independence. They were Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Thompson. The Sunday school work is going to miss them very much, as every member counts here.

The religious week-day school is still being held, and the children are very much interested.

The Department of Women has changed the day of meeting to Saturday afternoon so that the school girls may attend.

Brother Sorden Describes a Missionary Trip

THE MOUNTS OF LEBANON, October 9.—On October 8 I arose at a quarter of two in the morning in order to eat a little before my train left for Haifa. We live a mile or so from the station, and as the road is very rough, and as it was dark, I had to start some time before the train was due to leave—at three thirty-five. As Jerusalem is in the mountains, the train does considerable winding around in getting down to the plain, as we near the seacoast. There were a few clouds in the west, and several minutes before I could see the sun, it flashed between some mountain tops and hit the clouds in the west, giving them beautiful colors. I thought I was starting my trip under favorable conditions. Then the sun came up above the mountains of Judea with a brilliance natural and common to this land. The night air is now quite chilly, and for the first time of the season I was wearing my overcoat.

Soon after the sun was up we were in the edge of the mountains, and here thousands of goats and sheep were to be seen in herds of one to three hundred each. Even before sunrise I caught sight of men with their camels and donkeys on the skyline, going to market with their grapes, figs, wheat, tobacco, or olives. When our train stopped at a tiny station for a minute or two, the faint tinkle of a small bell, which every camel wears, could often be heard. By seven o'clock we were on the plain, and at quite frequent intervals we stopped at some Jewish colony. The remnant of this people is surely gathering to the land of its fathers. From France, Spain, Germany, England, Poland, Russia, America, Morocco, and the Balkans they come—perhaps from other parts as well—but I have seen them from these places. They are coming daily, and the rate at which others come here depends upon the facility for their absorption or for having work found for them when they come. Here, as everywhere, agriculture is the basic industry.

By half past seven I had reached Lud, ancient Lydda. Here was Peter when Tabitha died, and as his fame had gone abroad, he was sent for from Joppa. He raised the good woman from the dead, by the power of God which was in him. Some day I hope we will be able to do many wonderful things, too, by the power of God which will be in us. I know we receive many blessings now, but certainly we do not manifest the power shown anciently. We never can when contention is rife among us. But this cannot last forever—soon I look for peace. And this I know: God has not forsaken us; he is just waiting on us.

At Lud the trains from Jerusalem, Cairo, and Haifa all meet, so the platform is quite lively with passengers going up and down on the earth. To see some Moslems kneeling on the platforms on a mat which they carry with them, doing their prayers, is an interesting sight to the westerner. We waited here only a few minutes after changing trains, before we started for Haifa. I was in a compartment with a British air officer (one meets them in all parts of the world) who was being transferred from Egypt to Amman, the British air base in Transjordan, so I had plenty of conversation with him, made the more interesting because of my stay in England.

From Lud to Haifa is about two hours by train, all the way on the plain and over half the way in sight of the Mediterranean Sea. Scattered throughout this plain are Jewish colonies, mostly settled since the war. The date palm and banana and orange trees make a pleasant picturesqueness after the rather barren hills and rocks of Jerusalem.

I reached Haifa about ten o'clock, and in twenty minutes I had found a car and started to Sidon. There are no trains between Haifa and the north, so one must go by car. In the rear were five passengers, while I occupied a seat with the driver. He spoke very little English but did his best to make me understand what were the two or three places of interest we passed. It takes about four hours to go by car from Haifa to Sidon, and one is not out of sight of the sea five minutes in all that time. Indeed, part of the time we travel on the sands so near the sea that the waves reach our car wheels. Once or twice a light spray of salt water blew into our faces. But the road is quite safe, and our driver was a very good one.

The struggle for life, ever present with all living things, could be seen often along the way by the squirming and wiggling of small fish nearly a foot in length, which a receding wave left a few feet from the ordinary water line. But the next wave nearly always came far enough, and in time, to save the struggling creatures. However, a time or two some bird also struggling for life or the means of sustaining it, would be keen sighted and swift acting enough to secure a good meal.

On the border between Palestine and Syria we passed through the British and French police offices. England and France have the mandate from the League of Nations over Palestine and Syria respectively. Soon after leaving them we pass within half a mile of the city of Tyre, much more famous anciently than now. It is out on a narrow peninsula, and an old ruin left from long ago is plainly seen from the road. In an hour, still traveling close beside the sea, we came to Sidon, a city which has also lost most of her former glory. Here, before alighting from the car, I caught sight of Brother George Njeim, who was waiting for me. The car, with its other five passengers, went on to Beirut, a city which is monthly assuming more and more commercial importance.

The near-sighted and seclusive policy of the Turks is losing for them the importance of Constantinople as a trade center. The loss to Constantinople is a gain for Beirut, which will soon be the leading port for the Near East, at the present rate of growth.

Brother Njeim took me to see two or three places of interest in Sidon, including the American college there, before we took another car for his village high up in the mountains of Lebanon. All day I had traveled near sea level, and while I had come many miles north, I noticed but little difference in the temperature, although of course the breeze from the sea was always fresh and cool. But we had not been gone from Sidon more than twenty minutes, climbing all the time, until I could notice the air getting much cooler, and I put on my overcoat again. I had not needed it since eight that morning.

We continued our journey onward and upward for about an hour, the road, of course, turning often in order that it be not too steep up the mountains, and at each turn a new view would be presented. The mountains of Lebanon are literally covered with rocks, but real mountain scenery is quite new to me and I was delighted.

Our village, Roum Djezzine, is just on top of one of the mountains, not quite so high as some, but much higher than others. As we neared our destination, we could see clouds, some over the higher mountains and some hurrying over and across a valley below us to some place beyond. This was all wonderful to me.

At the home of Brother Njeim we made our salutations. The very point of the mountain on which I am is only a few yards from the house. I saw by the number and kind of clouds in the western sky that a beautiful sunset was awaiting us. It was only a few minutes until the moon would be the chief object in the sky, so I hurried to the point of the mountain. A beautiful sunset is a particular delight of mine, and this was one of the best. From this mountain the sea is plainly visible, with Tyre to be seen in the distance, and somewhat nearer, Sidon. I have often tried but have never been able to describe a sunset and make it sound worthy of the thing it is. But suffice it to say that a light haze, coming from the sea, seemed to add to the beauty of the varied colors and lights made by the sun on the clouds. Swiftly the sun seemed to travel as it neared the horizon, and then the water of the sea put out the great ball of fire as it descended into the Mediterranean. I thought of the statement of some wise man when he said, "The plain for bread and the mountains for vision." In the light of the afterglow, the coastline could be seen for miles. I was made to feel that this had been a great day for me.

But the day was not ended. Supper over, seven or eight men came to the house. Only one of them spoke English, and he is a member of our church. The others were interested in our work. I came here knowing that Brother Njeim and Brother Nicholas and Brother Njeeb had three or four people ready for baptism. We started talking gospel, and for three hours kept it up. At ten o'clock one of the young men said that he wanted to be baptized but that he was leaving town early the next morning. We concluded that right then was the time to baptize him, so in ten minutes we had changed our clothes and were on our way.

We soon arrived at the spring high up in the valley in the mountains, where Brother Hanson baptized two a few months ago. I made a short talk, offered prayer, all of which was able interpreted by Brother Njeim, then another soul entered the kingdom through the door of Christ's own church. After a considerable climb back up the mountain, we reached the house where the confirmation was attended to. Our journey to the Blue Spring, the baptism there, and the return trip were made in the light of the then nearly full moon. All during the evening a peaceful and comforting influence was felt by all. As the confirmation was concluded, we looked at our watches, and it was just after eleven. I surely felt that indeed I had spent a busy, an interesting, and withal a very profitable day.

The next day, in the language of olden time, the young member "took ship for Alexandria," happy in his newly found Savior.

Successful Work and Baptisms

DULUTH, MINNESOTA, November 5.—We are still striving in our weak way to spread the everlasting gospel to mankind. Two more good people were baptized in September, Elder W. E. Shakespeare officiating. Brother Shakespeare again gave us at this time two of his plain sermons.

Bishop C. J. Hunt came up from Glen, Minnesota, leaving the bedside of his sister to meet with us in the services of October 5. After sacramental service he preached to us, bringing a clearer vision of God's working in his wonderful work that is going on all around us. He preached again in the evening but left immediately to return to his sister. May he come again.

District President George W. Day was also present on October 5 and, with Bishop Hunt and Pastor C. B. Freeman, presided at the sacramental service. The Spirit of God was manifested in love and peace. People from out of the city in attendance were Sister Carlson, Sister Lula Dathe and husband, and Sister Bertha Eckley and husband, of Barnum, Minnesota; Brother and Sister Jay Walters, with their two daughters, of Carlton, Minnesota; Brother and Sister Samuel Sloan, Sister C. J. Hastings, and Brother Grant Byce of Two Harbors; and Sister Lake of Lower Michigan. We hope all will come again and bring others to worship with us.

On October 12 the waters of Saint Louis Bay, the harbor of Lake Superior, were again troubled when the husband of Marie A. White was baptized by Pastor C. B. Freeman, making an unbroken family. When his wife was baptized, he was left alone without the church, and when he defended the move his wife had made his former friends began to persecute him. We feel this family will be a great help to the branch.

The same day W. C. Stauty spoke at the morning service and C. B. Freeman in the evening.

The Department of Women is planning to hold a bazaar the last part of November to help with the building fund. Anyone having any articles to donate to the cause might mail them to Mollie Feathers, 125 Thirty-second Avenue West, and they will be greatly appreciated.

We have now purchased a church building on the corner of Sixtieth Avenue West and Bristol Street and would appreciate it if the Saints living in Superior, Wisconsin, and adjoining towns would let us know of any relatives or friends living near here that we may be able to reach with the gospel and help to a church and a home. God's hand has been with us in purchasing the church, and with the financial help of the Saints we will be able to meet all obligations that come to us. With unity and love we hope to be able to build up the kingdom of God in this part of his moral vineyard.

The priesthood motored to Two Harbors October 19 and held a priesthood meeting with other members of the priesthood living there. Many subjects were discussed. W. C.

Stauty was the morning speaker, and P. G. Schnuckle occupied in the evening at the home of J. E. Hastings.

Sister Harriet Brown, formerly of the Utah Church, was baptized October 26, fulfilling in part the wish of her husband who expressed on his deathbed the hope that his family would see the light of the true gospel and enter in.

November 2 was a day long expected by the Saints of Duluth. At this time they gathered in their new home and chapel. It was a bright, cool day, and the hearts of the Saints were glad. The sacramental service was in charge of W. E. Shakespeare, missionary supervisor, District President G. W. Day, and Pastor C. B. Freeman. The service opened with the song "Admonition," and after prayer by Brother Shakespeare all joined in singing "Consecration." The Spirit of God was in our midst; there were many testimonies of God's goodness, and all were admonished through the pastor to strive for unity. May we all indeed strive for unity, that the gifts of the gospel may be with all of God's people.

Brother Day spoke in the afternoon, giving a very inspiring sermon. In the evening we again heard from Brother Shakespeare.

We feel that the work is on the verge of a forward movement here if unity can be enjoyed by God's covenant people.

Conference at Plano

The winter conference of the Northeastern Illinois District now becomes sacred history. Held in the little city of Plano, Illinois, once the center of many stirring scenes, in the temple of stone made possible through the sacrifices of a people gone before, our God was there.

From the opening session on Friday afternoon in the interests of the Department of Women to the "Fare ye well" on Sunday evening, a sweet spirit made its abode with us.

The attendance on Friday evening strained the capacity of the "Old Stone Church," erected in 1868. A splendid program was rendered, at which time branch after branch throughout the district was represented by their contribution to the evening's enjoyment. The Sunday school district and local superintendents, together with the local superintendent of the Department of Recreation and Expression, had wisely arranged to draw on talent from various parts, not only giving opportunity, but drawing out a larger attendance.

Both the morning and afternoon business sessions of Saturday were marked with a presence of the spirit of love and unity. Elder J. L. Cooper, district president, presided over the forenoon session and called to the chair during the afternoon, Apostle J. F. Garver, who presided over that session in his inimitable manner. During this meeting election of officers took place, resulting in sustaining the present officers for the most part. Delegates were also chosen for the coming General Conference, the following being named: J. L. Cooper, F. M. Cooper, O. A. McDowell, Sister F. M. Cooper, W. A. McDowell, C. D. Carter, J. E. Wildermuth, L. O. Wildermuth, J. F. Garver, Sister C. D. Carter, Oscar Johnson.

A resolution prevailed providing for the June conference being held in conjunction with the reunion which shall take place from June 11 to 21, inclusive. This will be two months earlier than the district has been accustomed to holding the reunion, and remains an experiment.

Brother Garver was the speaker on Saturday evening following a stirring song service by the congregation and a choir which suddenly developed to amazing proportions, and at the gathering of the priesthood on Sunday morning he again brought a message of great strength and force to his hearers. "Brethren, you are charged with a great responsibility. Take heed unto yourselves, first of all, to feed the flock. No journey should be too long, no task too great, no night too dark. Say to yourself, Don't I know what Christ has done for me; don't I know what Christ expects of me? The important part of our ministry is not the date we were ordained, but is, Are we feeding the flock?"

Patriarch W. A. McDowell was the speaker at the service following the Sunday school, and he stressed the importance of heeding the counsel of those God had placed in the church as "ministers unto the people"; of "setting our house in order," with all that implied, and taking up the report of our district president, Brother J. L. Cooper, touching the conditions existing in the branches throughout the district relative to the children being absent from the majority of our church services, Brother McDowell called attention to the results which we now experience because counsel was not heeded in the past; until we have come face to face to-day with evidences of a deplorable lack of interest in the church upon the part of our children.

The sacramental service in the afternoon was marked by a very large attendance and the degree to which God poured out his Spirit upon the assembly. Speaking in words of comfort and assurance, that he had witnessed with pleasure our endeavors to approach him and come up higher, he poured out upon the assembly his kindly counsel and instructions, especially stressing the necessity for a continuity of application to his laws, warning against an attitude of refraining from paying our tithes, and promising rich and bountiful blessings in the future.

Brother Garver's very inspiring message in the evening on "Love," followed by "There's no love like his love to me," feelingly sung by all, was a fitting close of what many felt to have been one of the most wonderfully inspiring, strengthening, and withal the most profitable conference we have ever held in the district. During the day a band of some forty young people carried a message of cheer and comfort in songs and in prayer into the life of our bedfast Sister Bronson and our venerable warrior and missionary of the past, Elder C. H. Burr, and his companion.

Missionaries attending in addition to Brother Garver were Lester Wildermuth and Elder Lenox of Northern Wisconsin and J. E. Wildermuth of our district. Much disappointment was felt in the inability of Brother Richard Baldwin and wife to attend.

The weather, the splendid hospitality of the Plano Saints, the spirit possessed by every attendant, all contributed to our great blessings. May God be praised for these.

O. A. MCDOWELL, Secretary.

Unique Method of Presenting the Gospel

BARBERTON, OHIO, November 15.—I am just starting out on a new method to try to get our work before a class of people which never attend our church services. I am intending to visit the homes of these people as a book agent.

I made my first attempt last Tuesday evening when I visited our coal dealer. I introduced the Book of Mormon, telling them it was a history of the American Indians. They at once became interested, and I had an hour and a half of interesting talk with them. I read from the book concerning polygamy; of their hope in Christ; how the Gentiles would say, "A Bible, a Bible, we need no more Bible"; showed them how it was another witness for Christ and that he was no respecter of persons; how these people looked forward to the coming of Christ the same as did the people on the Eastern Continent. The result of my visit was that I took an order for the Book of Mormon and sold them tickets for the musicale and supper given by the Orioles last Friday evening at the church under the direction of their monitor, Sister Mildred Roberts. The supper was well patronized, and the musicale was good. Most of the musical numbers were given by a class of young girls to whom Sister Roberts is giving music lessons.

We have a nice lot of young people in this branch whom we hope to see become more interested in the church work in the near future. We have a nice Sunday school of little children and young people. Sunday school is held at half past nine and is presided over by Brother Crispin. We also have a good Religio presided over by Brother Clifford Romig. Religio meets at six in the evening. We have been studying the Book of Mormon without the quarterlies this summer, and there has been good interest. We have also had a Doctrine and Covenants class in the Sunday school this summer, by which many have become acquainted with the law governing the church and the necessity of God revealing his will and mind to the people in this day and age as well as in the past.

Preaching and social services are held alternately on Sundays at a quarter of eleven, and preaching each Sunday evening at half past seven. The traveling ministry are cordially invited to give us a call at any time it is convenient. All are welcome.

J. C. MCCONNAUGHY,
135 Elmwood Avenue. Branch President.

New Church Edifice Reflects Credit

The following write-up of the opening of the new church at Grand Valley, Ontario, is taken from the Star and Vidette:

Ideal weather conditions on Sunday tended in no small way to the wonderful success in the opening services of the new church erected this summer by the Latter Day Saints. The event drew members of the church from all over this section of Ontario, there being about three hundred visitors.

The building is a very attractive and completely fitted edifice, and is a distinct credit to those associated with the preparation of plans and construction. Situated on the old planing mill property, it shows to good advantage right at the foot of King Street. In style of architecture it much resembles Knox Church. Red tapestry brick, laid in white mortar, with cement trimmings gives it a thoroughly modern appearance. The auditorium is seated with circular seats from the Globe Manufacturing Company, finished in antique, harmonizing with the general woodwork, and very pleasantly contrasting with the gray finish of the walls and the softness of the ceiling color. Access to the auditorium is direct from the front entrance, and by a rear stair from the basement, which can be entered either from the front or rear. The choir and pulpit platform extends slightly into the auditorium, is of ample size and well provided with light. Leaded glass of soft mellow colors lends to the attractiveness of the building in which the electric lighting system is most efficient. The basement is full size, has cement floor, ceiling of varnished pine, and in one corner is the heating system and a range. At the south end are two dressing rooms, and beneath the side entrance a toilet. Immediately in front of these rooms is the fount, the water for which is obtained by a pump placed in one of the dressing rooms and piped to the river.

By nine o'clock the church was filled to overflowing, two hours being devoted to prayer and testimony and earnest devotion.

At eleven o'clock Bishop McLean, of Toronto, discoursed on the "Life of Christ," drawing many beautiful lessons applicable to us. Mrs. Needham sang several solos during the day that stirred the hearts of her hearers.

At two o'clock the church was officially opened. The crowd was so large that an overflow meeting was held in the basement, many not being able to gain admittance. Elder Frederick Gregory was the speaker on this occasion, discoursing on the "Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man." Pastor J. H. Taylor traced the history of the congregation, and Evangelist John Shields offered a prayer consecrating the church to the service of God.

Again at seven o'clock the church was filled to overflowing. Elder David Pycoc, president of the Toronto District, was the speaker, basing his remarks around the words of Christ, "I will build my church."

The ladies of the congregation provided refreshments in the basement for all visitors, and to those who desired to dine with them.

Thus ended a great day for the opening of a new church. May it stand for all that is good and helpful for humanity.

Spokane, Washington

The Spokane Branch is anxious to report the experiences of the past month, for it has brought to us a number of good things that will serve to pave the way over many a rough place.

Our young people's convention has passed into history, as far as time is concerned, yet there is that good spirit that prevailed during our meetings, which hesitates to depart, and our desire is that it will continue with us.

We had the good fortune of having President F. M. Smith with us during our convention, and the people came from far and near to hear the leader of the church and the message he brought. I say message, for it was the real hope of every true Saint. Brother Smith answered a few questions that were asked, but Zion was the paramount issue, and we gave Brother Smith supreme and direct control. The troubled water was forgotten, and he unfolded to us the vision of the possibilities that lay just ahead of us. Wonderful and magnificent in construction, mighty and overpowering in its far-reaching possibilities, I wonder as I try to visualize Zion, Have we believed when we have read, "Therefore behold I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder"?

If supreme and direct control will bring into existence the wonderful condition pictured to us by our leader, then Spokane Branch and a big share of this district say, "Let him have it." I wonder if during the days of Enoch, while he was fitting and preparing a people, did he have like conditions to battle with? If so, Brother Smith can take consolation in the fact that Enoch won out.

We do not want to give all the glory to one. There were others who helped to make the convention a success. Apostle R. S. Budd, A. C. Martin, and Elder Jones, of Seattle, Washington, all did their share, and we were very glad to have them with us.

At the close of our convention there was one of the largest gatherings of the priesthood ever had in Spokane, and we thought it our duty, or an opportune time, to express our confidence in Brother Smith, so the following resolution was passed: "That we assure President Smith of our full love, faith, and confidence, thus pledging to him our support so long as we can continue to feel as we now do, relative to his sincerity of purpose and his loyalty to God and man."

The Religio has purchased a motion picture machine and is showing educational pictures. We are looking forward to an active winter in this department.

Brother Eli Bronson reports some baptisms at Couer D'Alene, Idaho. Brother Jot Bronson, a well-known missionary in this district a few years ago, brushed the dust off his Sunday clothes and came out and gave us a good talk last Sunday night. Come again, Brother Jot.

We are still holding our own at Clark's Fork, Idaho. Several families of Saints have moved away, but we have a nice gathering of people, about two thirds nonmembers. Some have requested baptism on our next trip. Nonmembers are bringing their children to be blessed and are helping to pay our expenses. We are sure the work is onward.

W. W. Wood.

Good Interest in Missionary Work

CLEARWATER, NEBRASKA, November 7.—Have just completed a series of meetings in Valentine, Nebraska. Four were baptized after a four weeks' effort. I left the Saints rejoicing in the Lord. We have some fine people there striving to do God's will. I gave a lecture on "The World War in prophecy," with a good crowd out to hear. The lecture was given in a large storeroom. We believe much good was accomplished.

From Valentine I came to Clearwater. There is good interest here, and three have handed in their names for baptism, which will take place Sunday at two o'clock, in the Elkhorn River.

I am greatly encouraged to press on to the goal. We will never fail if we do God's will. There is no time to sit idly by. God will take care of his work if we each do our part as well as he does his. It is when we turn our faces from the mirror that we fail to see our own faults and failures. Let us pray oftener for God's guidance and direction in the part of the work he has allotted for us to do. I find pleasure in trying to learn my duty and do it, and I shall be satisfied if I can do the work allotted to me as God would have me do it.

The Lord has greatly blessed me in preaching the word. Great comfort comes to me in preaching this grand gospel, and I love to be at the post of duty. You that feel discouraged learn your duty and do it. Try this for six months and tell the Saints the results of such living. What a grand testimony you will have to bear to the Saints and the world!

As ever your humble servant,

GEORGE JENKINS.

Valentine, Nebraska

November 5.—It has been such a long time since anything has been sent in about the work here, that I would like to tell the people that though we are quiet we can work.

Brother George Jenkins has just completed a four-week series of meetings here, and although the place of meeting was not in a good location, it was considered quite a success. He baptized four, all women. One was an old lady, about seventy, then her daughter, and another middle-aged lady and her daughter were the others. There were three children blessed also. Two of those baptized have been very bitter until these meetings were held, which were the first they ever attended. This is quite an addition to our small and struggling group.

We are still holding Sunday school, and two weeks ago we enjoyed a visit from Brother and Sister Oehung, of Neligh, Nebraska.

The Utah people are not dead by any means. They have had two elders here for a year, and there are only two members. They baptized three, but one joined the Methodists in two weeks. However, if they can keep two thirds of all they claim to get, they won't quit for lack of members.

We would appreciate any help we can get here, as we have no one who holds the priesthood. The only time we hear the gospel is when some elder happens to think of us and pays us a visit. Until Brother Jenkins came it had been five months since we had even seen an elder.

We hope and pray that the work here may prosper, as there are quite a few just outside the door who would enter if we had an elder all the time. We need the prayers of the Saints for the work here, and we will remember the up-building of the work in other places. We have been wonderfully blessed and will still press on.

IRMA VROMAN.

Logan Is Very Much Alive

LOGAN, IOWA, November 14.—We are glad to report that the work here is moving along very well.

We have had some splendid sacramental meetings in which God has given encouragement, and it has brought comfort and assurance to many of the Saints, so we feel encouraged to press on.

We have had six baptisms during the past six months, one a fine young man who has a talent that will in time be of value and service to the church. The Sunday school is doing a good work, and we have a splendid attendance at most all meetings in this department. One hundred forty-nine has been our best record so far. Brother Roy E. Adams is our superintendent, and with Sister Esther Kennedy as assistant they are working hard to make our school one hundred per cent.

The Religio under the management of Brother Gerald Gunsolley is doing very well. We are enjoying some good programs after each lesson hour.

The Department of Women is working hard and doing good work. We expect some time to make some improvements in our building, and these women have now close to five hundred dollars on hand to assist in this program. They have done splendid work in other ways as well; will soon have a Thanksgiving box ready for the Sanitarium, filled with many good things. The women served lunch election day and cleared over sixty dollars. They are true and loyal workers in our branch, and we thank God for such a fine group of faithful Saints.

Our musical department is giving splendid assistance in our branch services. Brother H. L. Peyton is director and is now working on special numbers for the holiday season. We have a splendid little choir of about twenty-five voices, and there is talent among them second to none. We are not boasting, but are happy we have this talent with us, for truly a splendid song service is an inspiration and often buoys up the drooping spirits of a tired and weary preacher, when entering the stand to tell the gospel story. You will hear more from our singers later. We must not forget to tell you we have a splendid junior choir which is coming to the front. We also have in the process of development an orchestra which will some day gladden the hearts of the people with its good music.

We have not had a series of meetings in our branch for nearly two years, and I think it speaks well for our branch, that it maintains the good spiritual condition it is in and the splendid fellowship that exists with its membership. We hope to arrange this winter for a series of meetings and through the effort made, we hope others will be brought into the fold to enjoy the good things of the kingdom, and that it will be a spiritual feast for the Saints as well.

We have lost some of our young people (not to the world, mind you), but they have gone out, some to fields of service in teaching school, one to Graceland, and don't you know, one of our talented young ladies took unto herself a man, to journey life's pathway together; this all happened during the young people's convention.

Young people better look out for the next convention! We are happy in the thought that those who have gone out from us are making good, and especially in the church work. May God bless all and keep them so we may some day have the blessed privilege of meeting again.

We have gained a few loyal members by their moving to our little city, and we welcome all who come. We look forward with pleasure in the near future to having Brother Lloyd Harding and his wife with us. Brother Harding was elected as our county attorney, by a splendid majority; in fact, we had two others of our number who were elected on the county ticket: Brother W. R. Adams, for county auditor; and Brother W. L. Yeaman, as county coroner. These are all Republicans.

We more than raised our quota for the radio, and are now making plans to help out College Day. All in all, we feel grateful for the privileges that are ours, and we hope that as we develop under the blessings of a heavenly Father, we may use our talents, to the furthering of God's wondrous work.

Tulare, California

November 12.—On Friday evening, October 10, Sister Mary Snively, our new Temple Builder leader, entertained a number of the girls at her home. Many games were played around the camp fire, and a wiener bake was enjoyed.

A series of meetings was begun Sunday, October 12, by Elder E. B. Hull, missionary, and was to continue throughout the week, but on account of the very bad cold which he contracted he was compelled to close the meetings on Thursday evening, which the Saints regretted very much because Elder Hull is a very interesting speaker. Several nonmembers came out to hear him. The sermons were uplifting and inspiring, causing us to feel the importance of living consistent lives.

The Department of Recreation and Expression gave quite a successful program College Day, November 9. Two Graceland songs were sung by the school, a number of poems were read, and interesting talks were given by Brother and Sister Durward Harper. A contribution of about twenty dollars was received from the different departments for the scholarship fund.

A Publicity Agent's Activity

SHERIDAN, WYOMING, November 3.—I desire to tell the readers of the HERALD something of what I have done as publicity agent.

I came here in December and wrote Brother A. E. McKim for about eight hundred Angel Message Tracts. When they arrived I began distributing them. My method was first to get a little printing outfit, with which I printed on every paper and tract for distribution: "PLEASE RETURN WHEN CALLED FOR." Then I took the first chapters and a large notebook and began a thorough canvass of the town. At each home I explained the nature and purpose of the tract and then gave them one. They could return it when called for or pay five cents for it. They were also to pay for it if it was lost. At first there was no provision for those lost, but I found that many were maliciously burned or thrown away, so tried the new method of having the lost ones paid for.

I kept the number of every house visited, and tried to keep track of people when they moved, and noted in my notebook whether the tracts were received or rejected.

With eight hundred tracts and two hundred papers to start with, my list shows four thousand tracts and two hundred papers distributed, with three hundred tracts and fifty papers on hand. I did nearly all this work between May 1 and June 1. I have to labor in the summer for wages to carry me through the winter, but I am now back at church work and am planning to preach and distribute tracts at near-by towns and country schoolhouses. If any members have more HERALDS, Ensigns, Sunday school papers, quarterlies, or Autumn Leaves to give away, I would appreciate receiving a dozen or so; then I will write for more if I need them. A few years ago in a letter to the ENSIGN I asked for papers and many responded, some sending a hundred or more and others just a few. I believe this plan is better. I am out of Autumn Leaves and Sunday school papers, and many young people and children are calling for them.

Do not waste your papers. Isolated Saints should keep their friends supplied with tracts and church papers.

I would like to hear from any members in northern Wyoming, especially where preaching might accomplish good.

JOHN H. WINCHESTER.

Senlac, Saskatchewan

ARTLAND, SASKATCHEWAN, November 13.—The ladies of the branch held a bazaar on the evening of November 6, which was a success deserved by the energetic and whole-hearted effort of the committee in charge. Besides a sale of aprons and fancy articles, there followed a sale of sandwiches, cakes, pies, cookies, and ice cream. The result exceeded their highest expectations, $75.80 being realized, which was turned over to the Christmas offering. Incidentally everyone had a good time. Members from other branches were present, working together for Him.

District President William J. Cornish started out two weeks ago to make a tour of the branches and visit the isolated members. He will be away about two months, leaving the branch in the care of E. Leslie Mogg, A. J. Cornish, George Atkinson, Joseph and Thomas Bates, and Howard Allison.

Elder J. J. Cornish has been called to the Southern Saskatchewan District to hold a three-day meeting; also to Vanscoy to conduct a Thanksgiving service. He writes that he is preaching every night, having good attention even though his sermons were two hours long.

Elder John Tomlinson is selling his farm, and we hear he will soon move to Ontario because of his wife's health.

Preparations for Christmas program and tree are already under way. Sister Grace Huggett has charge of the drilling of the school children, whom she teaches in day school. Rudolph Cornish has charge of the decorating committee, and Sister Bessie Cornish has dialogues under consideration. Elder E. Leslie Mogg and Thomas Bates have charge of the music and songs.

The men of the branch recently went down to the old hall to do some work that would make it warmer for the evening meetings this winter. Now some one is hinting that the ladies go there and make it cleaner. So may it be.

Modesto, California

October 29.—During the past two months the Saints have been enjoying splendid meetings, and the Spirit has been with us to a remarkable degree. There has been one baptism, a young man who is designed to do a work for God.

The Saints here are planning for a harvest festival on November 9 and are looking forward to a feast of good things. The program will begin at a quarter of ten. After a short review a program will be given, followed by preaching at eleven. Dinner will be served at half past twelve, and preaching services will be held at half past two and a quarter of eight. The Department of Recreation and Expression will meet as usual at a quarter of seven, so we have a full day planned. It is expected that Apostle D. T. Williams will be present.

The Department of Women have been working hard to get their bazaar ready. The sale will be held October 31 and November 1. They have spared no pains or work to make it a success and deserve the support of all.

The Saints have enjoyed some splendid sermons of late by our visiting brothers, A. E. Frazier, priest, and Elder Roy Snively of Stockton.

The junior choir is doing fine work and is improving each week. We hope to have other voices added soon.

The intermediate class in the Department of Recreation and Expression furnished the program for one Sunday evening, which was well rendered. There are thirteen in the class, and they are led by Elder I. A. Phelps. After the opening song, each recited a verse from a poem by Elder Joseph Luff, then gave the names of the books of the Book of Mormon in concert, all of which showed study and planning. The teacher gave each of them an Eversharp pencil, and the children were more than pleased.

Flint, Michigan

November 18.—The young people's campaign of the city of Flint in conjunction with the Detroit and Pontiac Branches, was brought to a successful close Friday, October 24. Apostle F. Henry Edwards, following in line with Apostle J. A. Gillen, and Bishop Fred B. Blair, presented the closing sermons of the campaign in Flint. The young people's campaign is an annual event in Flint, and while it was put on in the fall of the year this time, there is a very bright outlook for the work of this department during the winter.

The work on the new church is progressing, and at this writing the entire building about inclosed. There are prospects of our being in the building by Thanksgiving, or shortly after. The local brethren are busy every night, and their work stands as a monument of their zeal and sacrifice. Very little work has been paid for, the most of that being for work that required licensed men to do.

Recently our branch president, Elder A. H. DuRose, was asked to substitute for one of the local pastors in teaching his Sunday school class. The pastor, Reverend Clark W. Cummings, of the Central Christian Church, was out of town, and from reports Brother DuRose did a good job. Brother DuRose also attended one of the missionary meetings that were held at the Saint Michael's Catholic church. While there he met the priest of the parish, Monsignor Patrick R. Dunnigan. After a visit together, Monsignor Dunnigan stated to Brother DuRose, "It is a good thing to meet the pastors of other churches, for we find them human, and discover there is a club in their hands to throw at us."

The recent visit of Sister Blanche Edwards to Flint was greatly appreciated. She made a short call while passing through Flint on her way to London, Ontario, which was all too short, and the people are looking forward to her return and assistance along the line of her work. The local Department of Women are very busy completing the work for the annual bazaar to be held next month.

Walthill, Nebraska

November 17.—As my mail has been so uncertain, I take this means of sending greetings to my friends. Letters addressed to Emerson, Nebraska, will reach me.

During the long illness and death of my wife's father, B. L. Burnett, we have been at his home in Walthill caring for him. He had been in the church but a few years, but was a faithful Saint, obeying the laws in every way. How thankful we were, as we watched the long nights through, to have the house full of Saints helping in every way they could. God was good to us and strengthened us in that way for some of the hard trips we later made to sick and dying people, sometimes having to walk miles across the reservation through snowdrifts where horses could not go.

No matter how far my work has been, I have been able to get to Walthill on Sundays, where I have preached once nearly every Sunday the past three or four months. In this way I have been able to help the men in charge here.

Not long ago I baptized two, and yesterday I assisted in the baptism and confirmation of two more adults, so you see we are still increasing here.

We recently enjoyed a fine two-day meeting and were blessed with the manifestation of God's Holy Spirit in the gifts of prophecy, tongues, and interpretation of tongues at the sacramental service. Many were here from all over the district.

When I came to Walthill Saturday night I found the Department of Women serving supper down town, all working together and enjoying the work. Such work as this brings them closer together, and as the business men patronized them they netted a nice sum for their treasury.

CLAUDE E. CARTER.

Eldorado Springs, Missouri

November 19.—Coal Hill Branch enjoyed a visit last Saturday from two of our district departmental workers, Sisters Martin and Hawley, of Fort Scott, Kansas. Sister Martin represented the Department of Women and Sister Hawley the Department of Recreation and Expression. Both gave some helpful thoughts which we hope will be of profit.

Our missionary, Brother W. E. Haden, visited our branch from last Wednesday night until Monday night. The few sermons we heard were very helpful and encouraging.

Philip L. Ross, aged sixty-nine years, passed from this life November 17 at the home of his daughter, near Oyer, Missouri. He has been a member of our branch ever since his baptism in 1910. Funeral services were held in the Baptist church at Oyer, with W. E. Haden as the speaker. Brother Ross attended the reunion at Eldorado Springs, and though sick then, he enjoyed the meetings and was cheered and comforted. He always loved to be in prayer meeting.

Several of the Saints from Veve Branch drove over Sunday night to hear Brother Haden.

Our Sunday school superintendent has organized a normal class with Sister Lois Adams as teacher.

The ladies of the branch served lunch at a public sale recently and cleared $20.35. We are planning to have some gas lights for the church.

Cleveland, Ohio

November 12.—The Cleveland Branch is improving steadily, and the interest from the outside is beginning to take hold in a small way, for which we are very thankful. In every way possible the majority of the members are giving their unstinted support and every available moment to the advancement of the work. This, to say the least, is most gratifying, because where the Saints are united for one common purpose the results sought for will be attained.

We organized a choir the first of the year, and the support and results have been wonderful. The choir has added greatly to our services, performing works of the old masters and also of our own times. We are preparing to give some of the choruses and solos from Handel's Messiah this Christmas.

Our Sunday school and Religio are in a healthy condition, with live teachers in every department, and the influence in these two departments is felt in the branch to a great extent. The branch during this year has improved spiritually, and our one aim here is to live as all latter Saints should live to receive the rich blessings of our heavenly Father. Our one aim is to be of assistance to the church in every way possible, so that God's plan may be carried out successfully here on earth.

The district priesthood conference held in our city November 8 and 9 proved to be a great success, and all seemed to benefit by it. It being the first Kirtland District ever held, left a lasting impression on us all. Those present from outside the district were Gomer T. Griffiths, Bishop Charles Fry, who is now located at Kirtland, and Lemuel Curry of Pittsburgh.

The Cleveland Saints extend a welcome to all who visit our city, and we assure you that you all have our earnest prayers at all times and ask that you do not forget us.

Rhodes, Iowa

November 10.—On October 18, by previous arrangement, a goodly number of the Rhodes Saints met with the little group of Montour Saints for services and a picnic. This meeting had been put off from time to time for various reasons, but on Saturday, the 18th, the weather being ideal, three cars laden with people and good things to eat, started for Montour, a distance of about thirty miles, arriving in good time for eleven o'clock services. They were met with a hearty welcome from whole-hearted Saints and their friends.

This little group of Saints belongs to the Rhodes Branch, but they can only meet with the branch occasionally. They kept up a little Sunday school for a time but found it impracticable, the Saints being so scattered.

The Saints met at a schoolhouse about one and one half miles from Montour. The view from the schoolhouse is quite picturesque, as it stands on a hillside near the woods overlooking a wide strip of meadowland, through which runs the Iowa River. Brother E. G. Beye spoke to the Saints at eleven o'clock on "Charity, or love," giving some very wholesome advice and instruction.

At noon the sisters spread snowy linen upon the schoolhouse lawn and proceeded to unpack the well-laden baskets. Between thirty-five and forty partook of the sumptuous dinner, after which all who cared to—both old and young—engaged in playing volley ball. Towards evening good-bys were said, and all departed for their homes feeling refreshed both in body and in spirit.

District President Henry Castings has planned a series of home-comings to be held in the various branches of the district, the first of which was held November 2 at Pershing, southeast of Des Moines. Eight were in attendance from this branch, and all reported a good time. The brethren have secured Patriarch Ammon White to conduct these meetings and to hold a week's services following the home-coming.

Rhodes Branch hopes to have a better time for their meeting than they had at their home-coming last year just before Christmas. Everyone was busy preparing for Christmas, the worst time of year for a special effort. Patriarch John Martin was with us at that time and preached some wonderful sermons, but all were too full of thoughts of the holiday festivities to care to go to church. It is only natural for the Saints who so seldom have a speaker outside of their own district, and not often outside of their own branch, to want their neighbors to have a chance to hear when they have, and no doubt all the branches feel the same way. They do not want their meeting to come Christmas week.

A few of the Saints are meeting on Friday evening to study the three books. The meetings are interesting and profitable.

Halloween night, after the lesson, the young people put on a little Halloween program in which all joined, both old and young. The rooms were decorated with black cats, witches, grinning pumpkins, and yellow crepe paper.

Last month the Temple Builders, nine in number, enjoyed a picnic with their teacher, Mrs. V. G. Lents, in the woods. They are studying Mothercraft Manual by Mary L. Read, and meet twice a month. At the last meeting of the women they voted to send a box of canned fruit and vegetables to the Children's Home for Christmas.

Those occupying the pulpit during the past months are C. M. Richeson, E. G. Beye, and V. G. Lents.

San Antonio, Texas

November 11.—A Halloween party was given October 31 at the home of our pastor, Brother T. J. Jett, jr., under the auspices of the Religio. The house was artistically decorated for the occasion, and the lights were shaded, giving a weird appearance which caused one to expect spooks to bob up unceremoniously. And sure enough, when the guests stepped up to the porch, they were met by a spook who shook hands with them, causing some of the ladies to scream when they came in contact with the icy grip. The crowd then joined hands and were led by a spook through the dark shadows of the house and up the stairs to the hall, where each one took his turn at having his fortune told. While the fortunes were being told ghost stories were enjoyed by those waiting for their fortunes. Another feature of the program was an airplane ride, and the last act was a race between the two high schools; the defeated side had to furnish a program for the Religio the second Friday in November. Main High lost out, so will have to furnish the program. After the race all were ready for refreshments, which consisted of molasses cake and pop. Everyone enjoyed the evening.

Last Friday night we were favored with an Armistice Day talk by Brother Miller, who gave a historical sketch of the different wars and the part each nation played in them, giving the events leading up to the signing of the Armistice.

The first Sunday quite a large crowd was present at the sacramental service. Some drove fifty miles to attend. A good spirit was present, and all seemed to enjoy the meeting. In the evening Brother Miller gave an interesting discourse, using for a subject, "The scattering and the gathering."

Brother W. H. Mannering was the speaker October 9 in the morning on "Work out your soul's salvation with fear and trembling." Pastor T. J. Jett, jr., occupied at the evening service.

The San Antonio Saints are looking forward to a visit from Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire in the near future, who has promised to come and help us solve the problem of remodeling our church building. The Saints are eager to see the work started.

We now have in our midst Brother and Sister Robertson and daughter, formerly of Oklahoma; also Brother R. E. Miller's mother and brother, who will probably spend the winter here. We gladly welcome any Saints who come to San Antonio.

San Jose, California

November 12.—On September 23 the Saints of San Jose Branch were made to rejoice, especially the parents, when two more of our young Sunday school children were baptized and confirmed. The baptismal service was in charge of the pastor, B. R. Gilbert, a teacher in the branch preaching the sermon, and R. E. Cowden, priest, doing the baptizing. Brother Cowden himself was baptized into this branch when he was nine years old. He now has a family of his own, and he is a very zealous worker in the church. The children baptized were Bettie Mitchell and Richard Holmes, born within the confines of the branch and raised in the Sunday school. They were confirmed by Elders C. J. Cady and C. W. Hawkins.

On October 26 Elder Samuel Wood, president of the Fresno Branch, made us a visit and occupied the pulpit at the eleven o'clock service, giving us a very forceful sermon.

Our pastor was called on November 30 to officiate at the funeral of Brother William Carmichael. Brother William was a brother of Bishop Albert Carmichael. The funeral was from the parlors of Hocking and Williams, funeral directors, in San Jose. Interment in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Again on October 19 the pastor was called fifty miles to administer to Sister Vira Lawn, wife of Brother John Lawn, who is in a very critical condition. She is being remembered by the Saints throughout the district.

Elder J. D. White, president of the district, dropped in on us without warning November 9 and gave us one of his forceful sermons, which, if heeded, may stop some of us from spending our time on Sundays doctoring up our automobiles or doing other physical work instead of going to church as the Lord has commanded.

Apostle D. T. Williams is billed to be with us here on the evening of the 16th to begin a series of meetings, to continue through the week and over next Sunday. We are anticipating a profitable time at these meetings, especially for the young people. Even those of us who are in our second childhood expect to enjoy it.

Orting, Washington

November 14.—Perhaps a few words regarding the progress of the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard would be of interest.

We moved here about three years ago from Coeur D' Alene, Idaho, and knew of no other Saints nearer than Seattle, excepting one family living at Puyallup. After much writing and inquiry we heard that a few families of Saints were holding Sunday school at Tacoma in a private house. We went to the address given us and found the family had moved the week before. We then went to the neighborhood where they were supposed to have moved, and at last located them.

We continued to meet in Tacoma, about twenty-five miles from here, until recently. Although we greatly enjoyed our meetings, it seemed as though we were making no progress in getting the work before nonmembers. In the meantime we found there were several families of Saints in Puyallup, and early in the spring I was called there to preach a funeral sermon, this being the first time, as far as anyone around here knows, that a Latter Day Saint service of any kind was ever held in that town. Since then the way has opened up, and we have rented a building and are holding services every Sunday and prayer meeting Thursday night.

Since beginning to hold services here, I have had the pleasure of baptizing one young married woman, and I think her companion will soon ask for baptism.

We are now preparing to hold a series of meetings, through which we hope to reach the honest in heart. We have Brother N. C. Enge with us at present, who will conduct the meetings.

We ever pray for the success of the church.

LESTER W. BRONSON.

Sedalia Singers Surprise Their Leader

SEDALIA, MISSOURI, November 19.—This branch is very much alive, even if we are seldom heard from. We have several new families now and hold regular services Sunday, Wednesday, and Friday nights.

Several little parties have been enjoyed of late by the church people, a surprise party at the Ferguson home, one at Graham's, and November 18 a birthday surprise for Brother Roscoe Moorman. He was given a pleasant surprise in the church basement following choir practice. Brother Moorman is trying hard to improve our music and train voices for the four different parts. On this particular evening all became fidgety and finally told him they would have to go home. He seemed quite put out to think that we took no more interest than we did and so little appreciated his efforts, but he finally dismissed at nine o'clock. However, when he learned the reason for the seeming lack of interest, his feelings were soothed and all were forgiven.

C. Ed Miller Leaves Toronto

TORONTO, ONTARIO, November 12.—Halloween was observed in the usual fashion with a masquerade party and a gathering to bid farewell to Brother C. Ed. Miller who has made a good many friends in and out of the church since coming to Toronto. This affair brought out one of the largest crowds since the brother came to our city.

After the grand march and the awarding of prizes for the best costume, an illuminated address was read to our pastor, who was leaving us for new fields of labor in Zion. He also was presented with a purse of over one hundred dollars.

In the temperance campaign our branch lined up with the other churches and rendered service that was appreciated. This has not been our policy up to the present, but it was a mistake, as every branch should not only take part in work of this kind but should lead in place of following some one else. True, we have to preach the gospel with all its principles, but to make it plain that we are trying to make this world a better place in which to live, we should leave it better than we found it. By wiping out liquor we surely are doing that.

When a standing executive was to be elected to be ready for any attempt of the wets to upset the O. T. A., the ministers with whom Brother Miller had labored in the temperance work insisted that our church be represented on that committee. Sister Mary Wilson is on this committee representing our church. Brother Miller was largely responsible for this, as he put our people in a new light with the nonmembers.

The O. T. A. carried in the province but lost in almost every large city. This can be accounted for by the foreign element, as they voted wet almost to a man.

We are sorry to lose our pastor, because we learned better to appreciate his sincerity the longer we knew him, and we will miss his wonderful selection of slides. It is really a pity to see such an array of evidence on the Book of Mormon locked up in a trunk. He should be traveling all the time with his slides in place of being a pastor in any branch. We wish him Godspeed in his new field of labor.

Galesburg, Illinois

November 21.—The Galesburg Saints are still interested in the work and are striving bravely to hold up the banner.

Our little chapel has just been lathed and plastered, and we are holding services upstairs now. We have a nice furnace installed, which insures our comfort during the coming winter months. Neither the woodwork nor the floors are completed, but we are hoping to have them in the near future. During the floods last June our piano and theater seats were ruined by the water flooding the church basement, where we had been holding meetings.

The ladies' aid has worked hard, taking in $20 on a bake sale and $50 on a bazaar held last Saturday, November 15. They have voted to purchase a good second-hand piano from Brother Lermond Holmes, which will be installed for our Sunday services.

Brother E. R. Davis, district president, will be with us a few days next week, and Brother E. A. Curtis will hold a two-week series of meetings the first part of December.

Our district Sunday school superintendent, Elder Harland Cady, was with us a few Sundays ago, and we appreciated his visit very much. Our Sunday school is doing nicely, but we would be glad to see more of our members attend regularly.

Our branch president is very faithful to his duties, even though he has to drive twelve miles to Galesburg. We are hoping that some day he will have cement roads to travel over.

Lamoni Stake

November 22.—It will be of general interest to HERALD readers to know that in a recent beautifying campaign held by the Lamoni Community Club, two of the church institutions won prizes. The campaign was started last April and lasted all summer, with its object the encouraging of more beautiful gardens, lawns, and general surroundings of homes. The town was divided into four districts, two prizes being awarded in each, one to the most beautifully kept place, and one to the home or institution showing the most improvement during the season. Prizes in the first class were won by the Children's Home and the College in their respective districts.

Miss Mabel Carlile was in Chariton last week organizing a combined choir embracing singers from the four branches of Lucas, Hiteman, Centerville, and Chariton. There were fifty charter members. Miss Carlile expects to meet with the combined chorus about once every three weeks, giving them such instruction as will enable them to work during the interval between the meetings under their individual branch choir leaders in furnishing better music for their branch services. They also expect to prepare a concert to be given in the spring by the joint choir in all four branches. Miss Carlile as stake chorister is putting a zeal and interest into the musical forces which will result in a great improvement along those lines. Her work with the Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society has put Lamoni on the map as a musical center of the State.

The Chariton papers were loud in their praise of the work done by the A Cappella Chorus, which is a group of singers chosen from the Oratorio Society, who gave a concert in that place on College Day.

College Day was celebrated in the Lamoni Branch a week later than elsewhere, on account of our musical talent being dispatched to other branches throughout the state to help in programs October 9. Two programs were presented last Sunday. At the 11 o'clock hour, the time was occupied by speeches from those in a position to know the worth of the college from various angles. Miss Mary Curtis of Independence, former student, now a member of the public school faculty of Lamoni, spoke on what the college means to the student. Mayor G. W. Blair discussed the same subject from the angle of a citizen of the town, and told of the especial advantage of having Graceland located in Lamoni. President G. N. Briggs talked more particularly about the standing of Graceland internationally with reference to other schools of its kind. A musical number by the Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society, and a quartet number by the Wells Brothers, Edward, Reese, and Melvin, and Evan Fry were splendid additions to the program.

At the evening hour a pageant was presented by Graceland students. The theme running through the pageant is that told by her slogan, "The school with a personal touch," and was beautifully illustrative of the spirit of Graceland which is the drawing card among the young of the church all over the globe. Dressed in navy and old gold, Miss Florence Jurgens represented Graceland. To her came students from twenty-six States and nine foreign countries, now enrolled at Graceland, many of them in native costume, each with a description of his own land and a story of why he came to Graceland. Those gifted in song chanted their praise in this way. As a fitting climax all raised the Graceland colors and joined in the college song. The pageant was arranged by Sister Vida E. Smith and was very effective. She received almost universal hearty cooperation from the students in her undertaking, which shows the existent loyalty among the student body. The College Day collection in Lamoni was very gratifying.

The reporter from the Andover, Missouri, Branch states that an unusual interest is being experienced in the meetings this winter. Their church is often filled to capacity at preaching services and also at Religio. The membership is small, but the interest is spreading to those not of the fold.

Brethren F. M. McDowell and G. A. Platz threw open their homes Friday evening to their large Sunday school classes of young men and women. A group met at each place and vied with each other to see who could enjoy the evening most, then about ten o'clock the groups exchanged places. Similar entertainment was furnished at each place, refreshments being served by the wives of the hosts. The verdict is quite universal that each teacher excelled in his ability to lead in an evening of pleasure.

Elder L. G. Holloway has just closed a series of meetings at Blythedale. The interest was not what was hoped for, but fairly good crowds attended. There is considerable prejudice there, the Saints are few, but considering their numbers they are doing well, having almost completed paying for a $900 church purchased three years ago.

President McDowell preached by invitation in the Congregational church at Shenandoah November 9 when he was in that city in the interests of College Day, addressing the Saints in the morning. The Shenandoah paper spoke well of his talk on "Dare we be Christian?"

Apostle John F. Garver left to-day for Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he will hold a series of meetings.

Independence

Stone Church

A very interesting assembly was held in the dining hall Tuesday night, at which time sixty men interested in scouting work held a business meeting and dinner, R. G. Davis, the new scout executive of the local district, being the guest of honor. Mr. Davis, accompanied by Mr. George E. Green, executive of the Kansas City Council, came to Independence expecting to find possibly a dozen men in a business conference and were surprised to find so many. The attendance indicated the rapid growth that has been made in this work during the past few months in this region. The meeting was presided over by F. P. Tandy, commissioner of the Jackson County district, and talks were made by Mr. Tandy; J. Allen Prewitt, president of the district council; Mr. George Green; N. D. Jackson, chairman of the camp committee; Mark Siegfried, chairman of the finance committee; Doctor Tuttle, of Blue Springs, and others. After the speeches Mr. Goodrum, of the Kansas City Scout Office, a specialist in games and entertaining features, took charge of the meeting and conducted several interesting games. Dinner was served following the meeting.

The choir expects to give a Thanksgiving concert Thursday night, November 27, to which everyone is invited. A very fine program has been arranged, consisting of choir numbers, pipe organ and piano duets, solos, a vocal duet, and a reading. A silver collection will be taken to help pay for choir music.

President Elbert A. Smith returned Friday from California, where he had gone to assist in the corner-stone laying of the new Los Angeles church. He was the speaker at the church Sunday morning. President F. M. Smith and Apostle E. J. Gleazer were in Saint Louis over Sunday.

The thank offering from the Stone Church Sunday school amounted to thirteen bushels of fruits and vegetables. The beginner and primary departments furnished two bushels each, the junior department at the Institute Building three bushels, and the intermediate, senior, and adult departments the remaining six bushels, which are to be given to the Sanitarium on or before Thanksgiving Day. In each of these departments the offerings were dedicated with thanksgiving prayers, and in all it was made a very impressive service of thanksgiving.

The Independence Dramatic Club held a French Apache party last Friday evening on the third floor of the Institute Building. The windows and most of the furniture were draped with burlap to represent a poor French gathering place, and refreshments were served on bare tables, the guests having to hold their sandwiches in their hands. The program consisted of French songs by Miss Marcine Smith and Mrs. Lucille Robinson Wright; a one-act comedy by Kenneth Fligg, Morris Filson, and Dick Julian; a violin number by Miss Lillian Green; and popular numbers by a three-piece orchestra. Everyone reported a good time. The Dramatic Club expects to begin work immediately on a three-act play, to be given before they begin on conference work.

Liberty Street

Sunday morning Brother Frank Hill spoke on "Have faith in God," while in the evening Elder C. Ed. Miller delivered a very timely sermon on "Is there not a cause." He prefaced his sermon with a short talk on the difference in the behavior of congregations in the United States and those in Canada. He says they do not compare favorably, for here the congregations are given to whispering and laughter, while in Canada the people show reverence and respect for the house of God.

The Saints and their friends are again urged to remember the Thanksgiving dinner the sisters of Liberty Street are planning to serve to help pay off the debt on their church. They will appreciate the patronage of all who can help.

Sunday morning a member of Brother V. W. Gunsolley's orchestra at the Unity School of Christianity visited the Liberty Street Church and gave them some much appreciated music on the marimba and the xylophone. He played two numbers at Sunday school, and also played for church in the morning and Religio in the evening. He, with five others from the same orchestra, will assist the Liberty Street orchestra at the Liberty Hall Thursday.

Walnut Park

The four groups of district three will unite in a Thanksgiving prayer service in the church basement Wednesday evening, November 26, at eight o'clock.

The speakers Sunday were J. A. Dowker and M. H. Siegfried.

Second Church

The young people's prayer meeting was an exceptionally earnest and intellectual hour of enjoyment, and the attendance was very good.

Sunday school officers announce that Monday evening, December 1, a business meeting will be held and officers for 1925 will be considered at that time.

The Religio has announced its meeting for the selection of officers for next year, and expect a full attendance Friday evening, November 28.

The pastor, R. J. Lambert, spoke at eleven o'clock. The choir was in evidence and the space allotted them was almost filled. Brother Earl Audet is helping during the absence of Sister Amelia Good, who is confined at home caring for her children, one of whom has scarlet fever.

Brother and Sister Walker, of Wichita, Kansas, were visitors Sunday afternoon, and Sister Walker's voice was heard in testimony.

Apostle T. W. Williams was the evening speaker, and despite the inclement weather the house was packed with hearers, who partook of the spirit of his discourse from the text, "Ye are workers together with God."

Attendants at all the services last week numbered considerably more than seventeen hundred, being about three and one half times the membership.

Saturday evening a very pretty wedding occurred at the church, almost two hundred people witnessing it. Elder Isaac M. Smith was the officiating clergyman, and Sister Jonnie McPherson and Brother Edgar Raveill were the bride and groom. Such dignified yet unostentatious weddings as was this make us favor most strongly the church wedding. Surely a beautiful and impressive atmosphere surrounded this one.

East Independence

No definite plans have yet been made for Thanksgiving services because of the absence of our pastor the past few weeks.

The speakers Sunday were D. E. Tucker and J. J. Teeter.

Enoch Hill

The speakers Sunday were Elder Joseph Luff at eleven o'clock and D. O. Cato at seven in the evening.

The time of the Thanksgiving service next Thursday evening has been changed from eight o'clock to seven o'clock.

Santa Ana, California

Sister Laura Burton, district Sunday school superintendent, visited and encouraged our Sunday school recently. Sister Burton, like a good general, is promoting the army of peace, the slogan of which is, "Every Latter Day Saint a member of the Sunday school."

On Sunday, October 26, the Saints here were pleased to make the acquaintance of Apostle Roy S. Budd. Brother Budd remained long enough to preach six spiritual and faith-arousing sermons; the last one especially will be long and well remembered by the young people, to whom it was addressed.

On Friday, Halloween evening, the Religio gave a Halloween party at Brother and Sister Mitchell's ranch three miles west of town. It was crowded with innocent fun and merry-making. Events like these greatly promote fellowship and good will so desirable among the members.

President Elbert A. Smith preached a delightful and spiritual sermon, "The fruits of the Spirit," to us on Friday evening, November 7. He was the guest of Brother and Sister David Carmichael. Brother Smith was in California to assist in laying the corner stone of the new Los Angeles church. Many Santa Ana Saints, with others from all over the district, attended the ceremonies and rejoiced with Los Angeles in the progress of their new church home.

Shall not the church pray for a revelation of peace?

Holden Stake Items

Holden

Bishop C. J. Hunt was the speaker morning and evening at the church and at the home in the afternoon. The Saints were greatly pleased to have a visit from him. The years of service which he has rendered in the stake have been greatly appreciated. He has many friends here.

Sister Priscilla Young was an attentive listener at the morning meeting. This was her 93d birthday. She united with the church in 1839 or 1840. Her father, Pierce Hawley, was a minister, joining the church shortly after its organization. Sister Young is still quite active, and her mind is clear and alert to the questions of the day.

The Holden Home for the aged will celebrate the anniversary of its opening seven years ago on November 21. A program will be rendered in the evening.

D. R. Carmichael, superintendent of the Department of Recreation and Expression, is announced for next Sunday. He will speak at 11 o'clock and hold a round table in the afternoon.

Lees Summit

Lees Summit was pleased to have Brother J. W. A. Bailey with them Sunday, November 9. He gave two splendid sermons. They were enjoyed by everyone present. He was with the young people in their prayer meeting on Sunday afternoon.

The choir is busy practicing every Tuesday night so they can give an anthem each Sunday. The junior choir gave a selection Sunday evening, after which Brother C. DePuy spoke to us.

Marshall

Elder C. L. House, of Houstonia, Missouri, gave splendid discourses morning and night of Sunday, November 9. Brother House always brings a breeze of good cheer.

Sister D. W. Palmer of Independence was in Marshall a few days the past week on business and visiting friends. She gave an encouraging testimony at prayer meeting.

W. H. Haig and wife, of Independence were at church Sunday, November 16.

W. A. Ridge was the speaker in the morning, and Pastor Phelps at night, November 16.

Sedalia

Elder R. E. Burgess stopped off on his way to Lexington and occupied at the 11 o'clock service, and all enjoyed hearing him. Elder R. E. Bozarth occupied in the evening. A splendid spirit prevailed in all services of the day, and the Saints feel encouraged with the unity and interest which is manifested.

Our Sunday school is growing continually, and there is also a good interest in the Religio.

A splendid social affair was held Tuesday evening, November 11, when sixty members and friends surprised Brother and Sister W. H. Graham and family. Games were indulged in by young and old, after which refreshments were served.

Several such gatherings are in view the coming months.

Fairview, Montana

November 11.—So many of the Fairview Branch wished to attend the district conference at Andes that no services were held November 9. Two families of the little flock are quarantined.

Conference was well attended considering the distances to be traveled, and the meetings were quite spiritual. District officers present were Elder George W. Thorburn, missionary in charge, the two counselors, Bishop's agent, and district secretary.

A statistical report of Fairview Branch showed a membership of twenty-four, an increase of two since last report.

Ackworth, Iowa

November 21.—The members of Sandyville Branch enjoyed their home-coming, which was held here last Sunday, and it was indeed a home-coming. Spiritual blessings were enjoyed by each one present. Saints attended from Rhodes, Des Moines, Runnells, Dunreath, Pershing, Knoxville, and scattered Saints from all over the branch here were there to enjoy the feast of good things from the Master's table.

We were somewhat disappointed when Brother Castings announced that Brother Ammon White could not be with us on account of sickness in his family, but we have learned in our religious experience to change the letter "d" in disappointment and substitute "H," calling it His appointment. Doctor Hull, from Des Moines, was the speaker both morning and evening, and he broke unto us the bread of life in his most humble and efficient way, feeding our hungry souls so fast that we were unable to assimilate it all at once, so had food for thought for several days following.

The prayer meeting in the afternoon was an inspiration to all present, several expressing their need and a deep desire to reconsecrate their lives for service. One sister with her four little ones drove one horse to an open buggy several miles in the cold to attend the home-coming. She said in her testimony the home-coming she attended at Sandyville in 1923 had been a help to her during the whole year, and as she had not been privileged to attend Latter Day Saint services since the home-coming in 1923, she made a special effort to attend this one. Another sister in her testimony said, "It is just a foretaste of the last great home-coming."

When I see so many falling away from the true principles of Christ I am made to wonder who will be among the faithful. I realize it will mean more from now on to stand by the church and its pure principles than ever before, because Satan knows his time is limited and is going to work hard in his cunning way to lead us away from the Redeemer who is so anxiously waiting to redeem Zion.

Next Sunday, November 23, the home-coming will be held at Dunreath, and the following Sunday at Runnells.

Graceland Chats

One of the cleanest, finest, upstanding football teams in all creation is the one at Graceland—and this includes the Reserves. On the first team are a few boys that have played their last game with Graceland. This fact added more than just a touch of sadness to the preparation and the game, as well as the rejoicing that followed. No school could look on that group of boys and not feel a rush of honest pride, and when a victory of 20 to 0 crowned the game, everyone was glad, excepting Iowa-Wesleyan, and they were fine fellows, too. Coach Gilbert beamed in his sincere Gilbertonian way, and Captain Curtis was deservedly and evidently proud. Several old-time students made the trip from various points to see this game by their old team. The Reserves won their game on Thursday and are proud to leave their record as it stands.

Leland Omans, last year graduate, is teaching in Redding, Iowa, and often runs over for week-end visits. Saturday he brought his debating team with him and superintended their research work in Graceland library. There were six in the group—four boys and two girls, and we are sure Leland felt a sense of justifiable pride in entertaining his charges in the halls of his alma mater.

Bernard Hurshman, a student, was quite badly burned when a steam pipe in the engine room burst. Happily he had rare presence of mind and saved himself what might have been lamentable injury. Miss Olds, the college nurse, gave commendable first aid and Bernard is able to be about again, to the pleasure of everyone.

Much attention is being given to preparation for inter-society debates. Sometimes the entering of these forensics becomes a hardship to students already burdened with a heavy schedule—loyalty to society has loaded many a student with extra hours. It's the spirit of the place.

On Monday evening Graceland broadcasted her first regular program from the chapel. This was the musical number, and on Thursday evening the program was in the nature of college activities. College songs accompanied by Ukelele Club and Miss Hazel Shank at piano, and then followed college yells. The alma mater and "line songs" for the football team, with a short talk on "High lights on Graceland history." Dean of Herald Hall, Roy Cheville, had charge of the program, and in his characteristically genial way (and nifty white outfit) made the whole affair informal and interesting. Monday night listen in for our orchestra and other musical program. On Thursday listen for the sound of your own fireside voices now heard in Graceland; see if you recognize the girl or boy in whom you are most interested, and tell us about it. Hear them say, "Hello, folks!"

At Friday chapel Miss Blanche Edwards presented Browning's Pippa Passes. Her reading was accompanied with delightful personal touches that made the little article more than usually sweet.

Saturday night, regular Athenian night, all the societies met in chapel and participated in a program of plays and music, Mrs. A. E. Bullard giving a Thanksgiving reading between plays.

Historian S. A. Burgess was a visitor during the week and his visit was much appreciated by his old friends.

MISCELLANEOUS

Notice of Appointment

Appointment is hereby made of Brother William S. Methner, of Coleman, Michigan, as Bishop's agent of Central Michigan District. Brother Methner not only comes to us well recommended by those who know him, but his business training and experience in banking circles, we feel, will abundantly qualify him from a business standpoint for the task which is now assigned to him. We solicit for Brother Methner the confidence and loyal support of all the Saints. There is nothing which tests our fidelity to the Lord's work more than our willingness to support it in a financial way, for as has been stated in the Scriptures, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." May God's people learn to prize this pearl of great price. We wish to express our appreciation of the long and faithful services of Brother George W. Burt.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

Burt, who resigned after years of faithful service; G. C. Tomlinson, Sunday school superintendent; Otto Bartlette, Religio president; Mrs. G. W. Burt, head of Department of Women. Prayer service held Sunday morning in charge of G. W. Burt, followed by Sunday school in charge of district officers. Speakers of conference were G. C. Tomlinson, M. A. Sommerfield and S. T. Pendleton. After rising vote of thanks to Beaverton Saints for their care of the visitors conference adjourned to meet again at call of president. Gladys Umphrey, secretary.

LITTLE SIOUX.—At Woodbine, Iowa, October 10, 11, and 12, in charge of district presidency: J. W. Lane, C. B. Woodstock, and W. R. Adams. Statistical reports showed membership of 1,883. Bishop's agent reported receipt of $1,685.22 for four months ending October 1. Statements as to spiritual condition of branches encouraging. Decided to hold quarterly conferences and give special attention to ministerial and educational features, election of officers and selection of General Conference delegates to occur at conference just preceding General Conference, which does not preclude transacting necessary business at each conference. Ray Miller of Logan and Oscar Deal of Woodbine ordained teachers; and George Young of Woodbine priest. Apostles T. W. Williams and J. F. Garver were present, and the Saints were edified by the two sermons each which they were permitted to hear. Next conference to convene at Missouri Valley, Iowa. Attendance throughout was good, the condition of the roads and ideal weather making it possible for many to attend, especially Sunday. Ada S. Putnam, district secretary.

GALLANDS GROVE.—At Mallard, Iowa, November 8 and 9, in charge of F. T. Mussell, district president. Resignation of Bessie Pearsall as secretary accepted, and a vote of thanks was accorded her for faithful service. W. W. Reeder of Cherokee chosen to fill the office. Delegates to General Conference chosen at this time. It was decided to withdraw from the joint reunion with Little Sioux District, arrangements for next reunion being left to a committee. Cherokee extended invitation for June conference, and arrangements were left to district presidency. Priesthood reports show an increased amount of work done and greater interest being manifested by the membership. President F. M. McDowell and Apostle J. F. Garver were present, and each presented two very inspiring sermons. Missionaries W. A. Smith and F. T. Mussell and a goodly number of the priesthood from the district also attended. One baby was blessed Sunday morning, and one elder and one priest were ordained. The gifts of prophecy and tongues were given, and a good spirit was present at all services. Over one hundred Saints attended from fourteen towns in the district, and the Mallard Saints were taxed to the uttermost to take care of them, but they responded nobly and were voted the heartfelt thanks of the visitors. W. W. Reeder, district secretary.

California comes down from the romance and glamor of the Spanish regime, through the era of the Missions and Padres, through the wild adventure of the gold rush of forty-nine, and into the modern and no less thrilling era of radio, automobile, and airplane.

She is cosmopolitan at every point: in climate ranging from the Sahara of Death Valley, through the equable beach temperatures, to the extremes of the high Sierras; in buildings, from the bungalow to the skyscraper; in products, about all that man can imagine from the Bible pomegranate and fig to modern corn and hogs, and including her walnuts, raisins, cotton, wool, oil, and what not; in population, all colors and creeds, from proud old Castilian families with the crucifix still reverently adored, to newly awakened Japanese, clinging to the religions of the Far East, with a foothold and a handhold on American soil, and with keen, attentive eyes studying the next move on the chessboard of nations.

California does not greatly care to talk about anything in which she does not excel; and she has always many themes left for her discourses. Usually laughing with sunshine and birds and flowers, and decked with orange blossoms as for a perpetual marriage feast, even so at times she can be as dolorous as any of her more prosaic sisters of the East in their March moods. Such was her mood on Sunday, November 9, as I took the train from Los Angeles to San Bernardino. Rain beat incessantly against the car window. Automobiles were hub deep in water at street intersections. The mountains had retreated into obscurity. The orange groves, like nuns, had foresworn their nuptial blossoms and taken to the veil.

It was dark and still raining as I made my way from my lodging in the home of Brother and Sister Marion Aldridge (old-time friends in more than one period of sickness as well as health) to the chapel at the corner of Fifth and G Streets.

I recalled the many who had contributed to the work in this place, for San Bernardino is one of our oldest branches. Most of the best-known general church officers under the administration of the late President Joseph Smith have preached there. And such local men as David L. Harris, William Gibson, Alonzo Jones, and others, have rendered valiant service. When first I entered that chapel, twenty-four years ago, as a total stranger, the first man to greet me was Nels Paulson. I did not reveal my identity at once, and at the close of the Sunday school service when Brother Paulson handed me a copy of Zion's Hope, I found some of our first principle tracts included. He was on the watch tower. This attempt at conversion was a standing joke between us whenever we met to the day of his death. He has gone to a well-earned reward. If I shall be so fortunate as to get into Paradise when my work is ended, I shall expect him to meet me at the gates with a religious tract—provided such friendly jests are permitted in Paradise. Perhaps, even at that, a friendly hand and some printed instructions in one-syllable words will be useful to freshmen in the university of heaven.

Many of the old-time Saints of San Bernardino who were so very kind and helpful to me in the beginning of my ministry when I had very little to offer, have passed on to the upper classes or are scattered or disabled by age or sickness. Time works sad changes, and there is only one story that does not grow old and lose its zest and wander off into inanities—and that is the gospel story.

"Change and decay in all about I see;

Oh, thou who changest not, abide with me."

San Bernardino still has a good congregation of fine Saints, with a considerable number of bright young people coming forward, but for a long time has had a lack of local priesthood. At present Brother James Yates, of the missionary force, is acting as pastor. Despite the rain and the darkness, I found him at the church with a much larger congregation awaiting me than I had expected, considering the night—and among them, of course, "Uncle Jimmie Miller," who, if humble and willing service to others is to be our yardstick, is perhaps as tall as any.

With Brother Yates to offer the prayer and a small but efficient choir to lead the singing, I was soon at work behind the old familiar pulpit upon an old familiar gospel theme. The service was very pleasant to me—the cheer and fellowship and brightness within the church, in contrast to the night without, seeming to emphasize the Master's statement that in the world we shall have tribulation, but in him we shall have peace.

Some years ago, when Elder George Wixom was pastor of the church and at the same time mayor of the city, he desired to make some changes within the church building, such as shifting the pulpit from one end of the church to the other, reversing the seats, etc. So he took a detail of prisoners from the city jail, men who were glad, no doubt, for the change, and went to the church with them, and they assisted him to make the changes. One of them straightened from his work, and, surveying the surroundings, remarked, "Some change—from jail to church!" Those who have in any sense been prisoners should appreciate the freedom of the gospel.

In San Bernardino some years ago I met a very intelligent and cultured young man who had traveled in many lands. After we had talked religion for some time, he said, "Mr. Smith, the trouble with me is that I know what I should do, but I cannot do it; and I know what I should not do, but I cannot keep from doing it."

I replied, "What! You, a young man, in the prime of life, an athlete, six feet tall, cultured and educated, and yet cannot do that which you know to be right and cannot resist that which you know to be wrong? You are not free!"

Nor was he. True, he lived in the land of the free and the home of the brave. Thousands had died to set him free. The Army and Navy existed to protect him in his rights; the Starry Banner floated over him—yet he was a slave. Ethics and morals and philosophy will not save such men, of whom there are many, for they already know what is right and wrong. It is of no use to tell them that which they know. Only God can stoop down to break the chains of habit that hold them bound and set them free to do the things they know to be right and inwardly admire. He does it through his Son. And his Son works through the gospel. I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation. If the Son of Man shall set any man free he shall be free indeed.

A part of Monday was spent with Brother Yates in his missionary car (manufactured for him by the well-known Henry Ford), making pastoral calls. But time did not permit a visit to all of the Saints.

My next appointment was at Ontario, with the Saints of Ontario, Cucamonga, and adjacent territory. Brother N. T. Chapman picked me up in Los Angeles, and with Brother Roy S. Budd added to our number, we drove to Ontario. California had returned to her habitual high spirits. The mountains had come from their hiding; the orange orchards were again at the altar; the weather again delightful, i. e., usual, ordinary, "Californian," according to all good real estate agents.

The welcome at Ontario was also usual, i. e., warm and friendly, and the congregation attentive. We spent the night with Brother and Sister Frank Van Fleet, he being pastor of the church at that place. They are, in a sense, of pioneer stock, certainly of pioneer type. Starting in their early married life with bare hands, they, by hard labor, have won two hundred acres of good California soil, and in the meantime have given to the community eleven sons and daughters. Their home is embowered in orange trees, almost at the foot of Cucamonga Mountain (the Indian for "Sun-behind-the-mountain"), and their barns are crammed with raisins, as Iowa barns are with oats and corn.

After considerable converse with these people on gospel themes, with some diversions in jest and friendly banter, we three again returned to Los Angeles via the foothill drive, visiting the home of Brother Peter Kauffman at Montebello. Peter has a fine orchard of oranges, with some persimmons and avocado pears—and among them some late Valencia oranges, sweet and fine—that is, he had such oranges prior to our visit. But all these are as nothing in Peter's sight as compared to his wife and recently arrived baby. Having known Brother Kauffman for 10, these many years, we could enjoy his happiness and his oranges, knowing that he deserved the one and that we were welcome to the other. This ended my tour of the Southern California District.

December "Autumn Leaves"

There is placed on our desk a beautiful magazine well known to the church, and this particular number, the Christmas number, is unusually attractive, from cover to cover.

Four full pages are strictly Christmas subjects, and Elder Joseph Luff treats of "Jesus" in his unexcelled contemplative style. The editor, Sister Christiana Salyards, writes of the night before Christmas in such a way as to give much information and correct some wrong impressions gained by many of us from the reading of careless writers.

The Christmas number of Autumn Leaves should be on the reading table of every family of Saints.

Graceland's Tribute to Bishop E. L. Kelley

On November 14, 1924, Graceland College rendered and broadcast a program in commemoration of the eightieth birthday of Edmund L. Kelley, formerly Presiding Bishop of the church, for a long time connected closely with the building, administration, and development of this educational institution.

In this column we are reproducing the address delivered by President Frederick M. Smith on that occasion, and a few of the letters received by Brother Kelley as reminders of his strenuously active days for Graceland.

Address of President Smith

Let me repeat what Brother Gunsolley has so graciously said, that my official relations with Bishop E. L. Kelley have been rather intimate. I not only have known him long and well as a man but have been actively and intimately associated with him in official relations. He was president of the Board of Publication when I was a proof reader starting in at the munificent salary of $2.50 a week. Later on I was his whole office force, bookkeeper, stenographer, and general utility man. Later, as one of the college professors I served while he was member of the Board of College Trustees, and later as an assistant or associate editor of the HERALD I served in that capacity when he was president of the Board of Publication, and later on as I began to serve as editor in chief of the HERALD, he was president of the Board of Publication.

In my early church work as a member of the Lamoni stake bishopric I was intimately associated with him in an official way in the financial arm of the church. Beside all this I have been his associate on boards of various kinds, the College Board, the Board of Sanitarium Trustees, Trustees of the Order of Enoch, and some others that I do not now recall. Later, as counselor to President Joseph Smith, my relations with Bishop Kelley were even more intimate because of the large amount of details which I took off my father's shoulders. Later, on becoming President of the church, this relationship was even more intimate. I can, therefore, to-night feel with some degree of assurance that I can speak accurately and from an intimate personal knowledge of the character of the man whose birthday anniversary we celebrate, and I can say that it is with genuine pleasure that I hope that he is, in his Independence home to-night, still able to listen to this program, for I am glad that he is still with us.

I know him to be a man of unquestioned integrity, a man of Christian gentleness and fortitude, with one of the most unquenchable faiths it has been my experience to come in contact with. I know him to be possessed of a deep loyalty to the cause we all love and which we are trying to promote, and hence I am glad to assist in this commemoration.

Every people standing for special ideals, or which has a philosophy which it is trying to present to the world, is a people who look forward, and their eyes are never in the rear or never toward the past except as they shall attempt to get an evaluation of past experiences as a guide to possible future contingencies. Will the generation of to-morrow cling to and advance the ideals for which we stand? is a question which arises with every people who are thus progressive; and it is an inevitable and a natural conclusion that in attempting to answer this question there is resort made to one of the surest ways of insuring that this will be true, and that is to depend upon the processes of education. The organization of which we are component parts to-night has been distinctly from the first an educational institution, and that educational work has been carried on largely from the pulpit. I cannot conceive of the pulpit being anything else than an institution which is largely if not chiefly educational in its character and in its work. Education of course is expedited in schools, but is not by any means confined to them. Hence it follows as an inevitable result that a people who look to education to cause the future generation to appreciate their ideals of thought and philosophy shall establish schools and colleges for the promotion of the ideals for which they stand. Sooner or later all peoples with a definite program will have a system of education adapted to their needs.

For the institution or establishment of Graceland a certain or definite but somewhat small group of men was chiefly responsible. This group largely, if not exclusively, was connected with an organization with religious and philosophical ideals which are peculiar to it. I refer, of course, to the institution which is known by the laws of the land as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This small group of men was gathered up from among the leaders of this religious thought and philosophy. And among these stood Edmund L. Kelley, whose eightieth birthday anniversary we commemorate to-night. It is not likely that the founders of Graceland had in view the dogmatic inculcation of the principles and teachings of the religion of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, but rather the promotion of the spirit of the organization and of their religion. It is an indefinable something that we sometimes speak of as esprit de corps which marks every aggregation of people, and it becomes distinctive of that people ever after. It may change as the temperaments of the people change; it will change surely as their ideals change.

So far as the establishment of Graceland College is concerned from an educational way, it was founded by a group of men with strong religious inclinations, yet the educational attitude was extremely liberal, as has been evidenced by the inscription on the corner stone, but more substantially evidenced by the methods of educating students. It has always been recognized that attitude is of prime importance, and attitude as an end result of the work of an educational institution is determined as much (if not more) by its general atmosphere than by its classroom work. Every school has its "spirit" and out of its traditions grow this spirit; or rather I should say, out of this spirit in its manifestation grows the wealth of traditions that sooner or later must attach to every institution.

In the theological ideals that were held by the men who founded Graceland College, there was the same characteristic liberality that was manifested in their attitude towards education, and this liberality is determined by a marked tendency towards literalism in scriptural interpretation, and this liberality has always been apparent in the literature as well as the sermons which have been preached by the men who stand for this religion. This, with the freedom from creedmaking, has developed a wide range of belief which has permitted a wide latitude in personal opinion in theology, with the happy result that heresy hunting is rare. This permits progress in thought, a modification of interpretation with adaptation to thought concept and expression, not for one moment losing sight of the fact that religion is based upon eternal principles which do not change, but recognizing also the fact that its eternal verities, have constantly new application as conditions change.

But some of the objectives of the church are so definite as to require common understandings and common methods of operation and might even take a strongly centralized form of institutional government. Many of these objectives are incidental to and group themselves around an outstanding belief that religion is socially purposeful and that a perfect manifestation or demonstration of the Latter Day Saint religion will issue in perfect and harmonious social and industrial relations and conditions as a prime essential to higher spirituality. Let us not forget that spirituality has always been and must always be a prime motivation of ecclesiastical functioning. I think it is generally recognized, at least I am here to assert, that social consciousness is necessary to a comprehension of the very objectives for which this church stands in a social way and which I have tried to outline. Leaders in this line of thought must be developed in order that eventually there shall be engendered a social consciousness without which we cannot accomplish the social objectives of the church. The social consciousness which must be developed is not alone an awareness that one exists and moves and works among others, and that one's deeds, thoughts, and work all have definite bearings and effect upon the lives and welfare of others, but the pari passu development of the feeling of obligation to function to the maximum limit of capabilities in promoting the common welfare and augmenting the fund of common good. This social consciousness and sense of moral responsibility is in my opinion not aroused or maintained by an appeal to reason alone but springs from forces lying deep in the springs of emotion. Hence the demand for a large religious content in the thought which will promote this ideal social condition. Every man working, and thinking, and being, always with the interests of the group in mind and in heart, demands not only a soul-stirring consciousness of brother, but a deep and reverent consciousness of God. It is deep religious feeling crystallizing into fine social betterment.

In my opinion this consciousness of the social ideals and objective of the church in the minds of those instrumental in founding Graceland bulked larger as a determining factor than any other one. It may not have been consciously so, or it may have been, but those men were innately aware that a social consciousness of the higher type demanded to develop the order of society to be striven for, is not developed overnight, but must be the result of attitude inbred by lineage and association and by intuition plus the renaissance springing from close and powerful contact with the Divine.

The social ideal demands not alone social consciousness, but the exercise of talent. This means, if it means anything, that talent in each individual case, in the group at large, in the whole society must be discovered, and once discovered must be developed. In each individual case this must be true. In all cases there must be created the desire for these results. This requires willingness to be taught and have talent developed, and this willingness must be apparent; and it must be accompanied by something more, a willingness to work. For if our social ideas are to be crystallized, our goal achieved, it means that we will form one society at least in which there is no leisure class, but leisure will have become communized; all will be permitted to share it proportionately. This all requires a realignment of educational machinery for this educational process or our educational equipment or educational machinery must function first in discovering the talents that each are particularly supplied with, from the exercise of which they shall be able to contribute to the welfare of society. Furthermore, this educational machinery must be equipped for the development of such talent when it has been uncovered.

It ought not to be necessary for me to say that the student will not choose nor the parent choose, but that society will choose the line of education that each individual must follow. And here I know that I am confronted with the danger of having our social philosophy confused with communism where the society will arbitrarily force the individual into that particular line of endeavor which it particularly desires. Too long have we depended upon chance and haphazard methods in the developing of future citizens. The compulsion will not be by force, it will not be by fear, but it will be from a sense of moral responsibility and public opinion. The method of accident must give place to social telestis in our educational system.

The fruits of the foresight of the group of men who were instrumental in institutionalizing Graceland College have already appeared. I am touching a little bit upon a personal element when I say that in contemplating some of the conditions which have arisen in the church running parallel with conditions in the world at large, there have been moments when I have been greatly depressed because of the outlook which those conditions hold with regard to the final success of the work itself; and one of the places to which I go to renew my hope, to renew my faith, is a contemplation of the work of Graceland College. The Graceland spirit has furnished some of the most active workers to-day in the field and has developed a consecration which holds promise as in no other direction that eventually we shall be able to accomplish the establishment of our social ideals. The Graceland spirit is easily carried over into the Latter Day Saint spirit, the esprit de corps of the entire organization. But the work and the sphere of Graceland's activity must yet be greatly enlarged. As yet we have not permitted that institution to enter upon the work that it should, and would it be beside the question to-night, or beside the spirit of the occasion, for me to express the hope which has been ever present in my heart, that eventually Graceland College shall develop not only into a standard college but eventually become a university, the university of the church; and looking still farther beyond the time when it shall become the university of the church I can also see how it shall establish branches in various parts of the country as our work might demand for further inculcation of the Graceland spirit. This means that I have expressed in other words the hope that Graceland is and will become more pronouncedly the nucleus of a new system of education which will function first with our own people and later spread until it shall function in the education of still other people—an education with a social objective always in view.

I shall therefore leave this message with young as well as old to-night; let the young who have found their way through Graceland College and have gotten a start in this new social life that we hope to see eventually permeate and saturate the entire membership of the church, go out into the world and study all the methods that are developed so far as education is concerned, carrying still with them the spirit of the institution where they have gotten their start, and then coming back to us with a new vision, make a readaptation of that which they have learned until out of their efforts shall grow a new spirit and system of education that shall have primarily the objective in view of closeness to God and to an active brotherhood of mankind that shall result in better conditions in the earth. Let us honor the men who stood shoulder to shoulder with Bishop Kelley who have been able to start on its journey of usefulness the institution of which we all are proud; but let us honor them also not only on their recurring birthday anniversaries, but let us give them the larger honor of carrying on the work which they have begun, recognizing the completeness of their work but carrying on to greater usefulness not only in the history of the church but eventually in the general field of education.

May God grant that this will be our determination and our happy lot is my prayer.—Reported by Ruth Ortleb.

President George N. Briggs sent a letter to six former presidents and eminent friends of Graceland College, asking them to mail letters of appreciation to Brother Kelley, thus participating in the celebration. From these letters we are extracting interesting paragraphs, as follows:

Joseph T. Pence, a Former President

I received your letter of the 6th instant and was highly gratified to know that Graceland College contemplates having a celebration in honor of Bishop Kelley. Graceland College is honored in having an opportunity to express its appreciation for Bishop Kelley and lay claim to him as one of the pioneers of its establishment. The pioneer occupies a pedestal, in my estimation, in almost any line of endeavor. I am sorry that the pioneer is passing and must necessarily pass, because there is little opportunity now for pioneering. Those who crossed the plains in the early days into the great West and Northwest were those who were not content with the narrow horizon that the East afforded, and with their characteristic hardihood left the more dependent and less ambitious to continue their existence near their household penates.

I am witnessing now the passing of the last of these early pioneers that blazed the trail, explored and settled the West. Bishop E. L. Kelley was a pioneer, and he rose to the heights to which pioneers usually arise, and is a worthy member of that fast passing generation of men.

It is easy for others to enjoy the fruits of the accomplishment of those who paved the way. The pioneer necessarily draws upon his imagination, he must pierce the future, and Bishop Kelley saw the beautiful stone and brick structures now on the Graceland campus long before they had actual existence; others did not see them, but his vision, originality, ambition, and energy brought this institution into existence, and his gratification in the accomplishment of his purpose cannot but be greater than that of those who simply find them a living reality and now enjoy them.

He never lost faith in his original purpose, and during my association with the institution was the guiding star in its progress and development. It gives me pleasure more than I can express to be able to participate in a small way in showing Bishop Kelley that those who are interested in the college at its very inception have not forgotten the singleness of purpose with which he worked, and to say that the institution of which he was and is the main corner stone, continues to exercise and widen its horizon in the interests of good citizenship.

H. S. Salisbury, a Former President

During the time of my presidency of Graceland, Bishop Kelley was still one of the strong cedars that supported the roof over Graceland. With the feeling that I am a fellow craftsman, only, in comparison to his work as the builder of Graceland, I hereby take great pleasure in saluting him as a master builder of our college, and I commend him to the Supreme Grand Architect on high for the pleasant reward which surely awaits him on the completion of his good, true, and square work here below.

Rolland M. Stewart, a Long-Time President

Without extending this letter long, which my present reflection and my high regard for Bishop Kelley prompt me to do, I wish to say that during the days of the reopening of the college following the vote to close her doors in the spring of 1904, it was my pleasure to have the association of Graceland's strongest supporters. I have never regretted that I was invited to the staff of the college during those reopening days, nor that I had the opportunity to be Graceland's president for a term of years.

Among these supporters of the college, sacrificing at every turn for the principle of which Graceland was the embodiment, was Bishop Kelley. His position was central in the establishment of special educational opportunities for the young people of the church he loved so well. Whether from the standpoint of the principle involved in giving educational opportunities to the young people of the church, or to provide a satisfactory way of financing the institution against odds, or to stimulate young people to aspire to serve their church better by improving the tools of thought, Bishop Kelley was always concerned and successful.

I have admired his great human sympathy as expressed in what he had to say and write; his executive ability in assuring his coworkers of the outcome of their constructive work and in laying out sound business plans for meeting the accumulated debt and the larger plans; his personal sacrifice in giving so freely of his time, energy, and money to the educational interests of the church when he could so readily have turned to more remunerative fields.

My own impression, with all due credit for all who "put their shoulders to the wheel," is that the satisfactory outcome of Graceland's educational record since 1904 would have been quite impossible without the generous, far-seeing, and constructive work of Bishop Kelley, who in 1904 when I went to the college held a strategic position with reference to Graceland's future and the educational interest of the church. He recognized fully a principle which I have always espoused, namely, that any organization, church, court, or any constituted group with a special purpose to serve in the world, must provide means for the training of its own leaders. Bishop Kelley saw that principle, I think, and served his church well, as far as I knew him in connection with Graceland, in establishing it in the hearts of Graceland supporters.

Fred B. Blair, a Trustee for Many Years

I had the pleasure of serving with Bishop Kelley on the Board of Publication of the church for a number of years and also as one of the trustees of Graceland College, and through this association I came to know him quite intimately and, as a result, he won a place in my affection second to few, if any, men of our church.

We have long believed that the Lord raised up men for particular tasks, and our association with Bishop Kelley on the Board of Publication and Board of Trustees of Graceland College at a time when the future of the college hung by a very slender thread, strengthens our belief. If Bishop Kelley ever had any doubts as to the future of the institution or of its planting by divine authority he never intimated it to his associate trustees.

A man of wonderful courage, of sterling integrity and unquestioned devotion to the principles of the Master, he represents a type of man that the students of Graceland College can well follow as a pattern.

Marietta Walker, Benefactor and Patron

I find myself almost dreaming again of those days and years of long ago; days when we labored together so earnestly for the advancement of the work of the church. Prominent in that work, standing out through the years like a fadeless star, I see the work of the establishment of Graceland.

It is a very pleasant thing for me to review those memories, and I am wondering if we will not carry them into the beyond, across the beautiful river to which we are both hastening.

I am sure, Brother Kelley, that you must have great peace and satisfaction in recalling the days of your past labors, and I see by your recent articles that you still have that vigor of mind which enables you to strike from the shoulder for truth and righteousness as you see it.

This is a gift that we should all earnestly desire to possess. I recall with keenest pleasure yet, the eagerness with which your spirit responded to any appeal made to you for youth or age. Your faith was always strong, and your hand did not fail the task set for it by your tireless, energetic spirit.

Elbert A. Smith, a Companion Worker

It affords me pleasure to learn that Graceland College is preparing to honor you as you deserve as one of the men chiefly concerned in founding and maintaining that institution. Together with our late venerated President Joseph Smith and Sister M. Walker, you helped to foster an institution of learning under church control, and probably as much as any other person are responsible for making this vision a reality.

Later, during a dark and cloudy day under serious financial handicap, you by your courage and faith stood in the breach and kept the doors open, so that your personal influence was given always to maintain Graceland. As a result her life has been prolonged and has been brought to more secure footing, and she has been able to minister to the spiritual as well as the intellectual needs of hundreds of our young men and women. These benefits have even come into my own family through my son Ronald who was for two years a student at Graceland. So that my home, and thousands of other homes have been blessed through the college, and the college having been aided through you, the gratitude, much of it, comes back to you personally.

I am happy on this occasion to join with others in this expression of appreciation and honor. Having served the church faithfully as Bishop during many years, some of which were stormy and trying, you are now in your declining years setting an example of good temper, cheerfulness, and steadfastness which all of us may well take note of and emulate.

The Faculty and Student Body

1. That you have always had a heart and mind to work in the cause of our Master with an optimism that was never dimmed by the darkest clouds of storm and adversity.

2. That in establishing his kingdom you have regarded the welfare of the church of paramount importance.

3. That in the work of the church you have regarded the young people as an important factor.

4. That you saw that in order for this factor to be developed to its highest capacity an institution of higher learning controlled by the church was a prime necessity.

5. That you gave to Graceland College, as such institution, your administration as Bishop of the church, and as a citizen and member of the church you have supported the work of the institution both morally and financially.

6. That due largely to your efforts the college has grown in members, and efficiency, and her influence widened until the beneficial results of her work are felt throughout the church for good in all the world.

In consideration of these facts, and the many others characterizing your devoted service which might be mentioned, it is fitting that upon this your eightieth anniversary your friends should express to you their appreciation of you and your work.

Let Us Form Another Good Habit

Recently President Frederick M. Smith spoke to one of the congregations in Zion, and many were well pleased and benefited. The usual procedure prevailed, however, and very few took the time to express their pleasure to President Smith. It is possible that some failed in this because of the conviction that he did not particularly need approval or encouragement, is a man who knows his worth and might not welcome expressions such as are often indulged. This may be partially true, but it has been the observation of the writer that any public man welcomes the candid comment of those who have been hearers. It is hardly safe to draw another conclusion about any man.

In order for a man to do his best work in the pulpit, even in addition to the spirit and power of his calling, he must be assured of the interest and sympathy of his hearers. He may rise above conditions to some extent, and the large and liberal minded man can be more successful in this than the mediocre and inexperienced minister, but the effect of a full appreciation of one's effort at one time is discernible in subsequent attempts of each and all, and this is a mark of sympathetic response in a minister.

To do the thing which will bring forth the best results from our ministers is a responsibility of each adherent, and the habit of expressing appreciation in a few well-chosen words should be formed. Flattery or insincere complimentary remarks are not encouraging to the thoughtful man and should be avoided for his sake and our own. Adverse criticism is not discouraging to the earnest man, if it be mixed with kindness and expressed in phrases that convey our love of the one to whom it is given. Remaining silent and noncommittal is perhaps the most unkind treatment which can be accorded, just as lethargy and lack of interest are harder to meet and overcome than is active opposition.

We have mentioned one instance, and that happens to involve the personality of the most prominent minister of our church. Our attention was directed to this because one of his hearers wrote him the following note:

Dear Brother: Your sermon last night reminded me of a poem I picked up the other day. Perhaps you have not seen it, so I'll copy it:

The Rational Outlook

We know not whence we came,
We know not whither we go,
But the fact stands clear that we are here
In this world of pleasure and woe.

And out of the mist and murk
Another truth shines plain;
It is in our power, each day and hour,
To add to its joy and its pain.

We know that the earth exists,
We know some of the reasons why;
We will find out what it's all about
When we take the time to try.

The trouble, I think, with us all
Is the lack of a high conceit.
If each one thought he was sent to this spot
To make it a bit more sweet,

We would soon gladden the world;
We would easily right the wrong;
If nobody shirked and each one worked
To help the whole along.

Cease wondering why you came;
Stop looking for faults and flaws;
Rise up to-day in your might, and say,
"I am part of the first great cause.

"However full the world,
It has room for an earnest man;
It has need of me, or I would not be—
I am here to strengthen the plan."

But we are not quite so anxious about the effect upon President Smith as we are about the many honest men who have not because of a high office the sympathy and support which flow to him. We are concerned that the man who studies to give the people all there is in him, though he may realize it to be a paltry offering, plus the portion of the Spirit of God which he is able to draw because of his need and his humility, shall be recognized of his brother and sister and encouraged to advance.

The rule laid down by the Master along another line contains the philosophy which may be applied here. He said,

He who seeketh to save his life shall lose it; and he who loseth his life for my sake shall find it. He who receiveth you, receiveth me; and he who receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me. . . . He that receiveth a righteous man, in the name of a righteous man, shall receive a righteous man's reward. And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones, a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, . . . he shall in nowise lose his reward.

We can afford to form the good habit of speaking in terms of kind and honest appreciation to the men who minister unto us the word of God; and we are likewise privileged to voice a protest if the minister speak not according to the word of life. The honest, earnest man of integrity will take no such expression as either flattery or affront, and for our own sakes we can afford to form this good habit.

Buys Equipment for New Radio Station

The manager of the church radio activities, Arthur B. Church, has just returned to Independence from a trip to eastern points, where he purchased most of the necessary apparatus for the new 1000-watt church broadcasting station. Included in the equipment ordered thus far are: Latest type Western Electric 8-A Amplifier; 2400-volts storage battery for plate power supply; filament storage battery; 5000-watt vacuum tubes (to be operated at first on 1000-watt output); power amplifier tubes; and considerable miscellaneous small equipment and parts.

It will be possible to increase the power of the new broadcasting station by merely adding storage batteries to the plate power supply. The power supply room of the new radio building has been built to accommodate a 4000-volt battery which would give a power output of approximately 2,000 watts.

The 5000-watt tubes give their full output on 10,000 volts. They are of the latest water-cooled type. The only broadcasting station using these tubes at the present time is W T A M, the Willard Storage Battery Company, Cleveland, Ohio. The transmitting quality of this station is well known. Several other broadcasting stations are successfully using the same type of tube in lower power installations.

Work on the new station is progressing splendidly. The steel towers are practically completed. The radio building is also nearing completion. Without doubt it will be possible to use the new antenna and studio before Christmas, but it is unlikely that the 1000-watt equipment will be ready to put on the air before January 10.

The radio committee reports that enough money has been received to complete the new station, with the exception of the studio furnishings which should include a very high grade grand piano. It is believed that many branches have not completed their radio reports, and that quite a number of individuals who have been unable to send in their contributions will do so soon. The radio drive was advertised to cease December first, and there will be no further soliciting on the part of the radio committee. However, no contributions will be refused, and any surplus will be turned into the radio fund to later purchase improved equipment and batteries for increased power.

Paying Our Debts

Debts have been accumulating in various parts of the church for several years, and Independence congregations have been no exception. Bishop J. A. Becker has been active in keeping before the people the fact that more money should be raised or less undertakings should be entered into. Many desirable improvements have been postponed, but now and then one seems to be so necessary to the onward progress of the work that it has been executed and debt incurred.

Recently the officers who have kept up the continual warning that the debt has been growing larger have been exerting themselves to bring to pass the cutting down of the same, and Brother Becker has been quoting figures which should be alarming to conservative people.

Of course the building fund shows the largest deficit, and with the purchase of the North Liberty Street Church; the installation of a splendid new heating plant and other improvements at the Stone Church; the building of the Walnut Park Church, which is a credit to any congregation, being one of the most serviceable and beautiful church buildings in the city of Zion; the purchasing of some extra ground and the installation of a toilet system at the Second Church; and the building of a new church at Spring Branch, it is not any wonder that all have not been paid for.

The movement to pay off the debt accumulated here, however, is earnest and is gathering strength as it advances. North Liberty congregation is putting forth a strenuous effort to show real results before the first of the year; Second Church has raised about thirty-five per cent of its debt and intends to wipe out the balance before the New Year opens; Walnut Park is active and is trying hard to lighten the load by raising funds in various ways; other congregations are at work and are making good showings.

It is a good omen that so much is being accomplished at the time of year when there are many demands made upon the financial resources of the people, and if not successful to the point of lifting the entire onerous load, it means that success lies only a short distance in the future.

Let us free ourselves as the people of Zion and the church of the Latter Day Saints, from owing for our church properties or our general or local church activities, and then let us keep ourselves in mind of the fact that we are not required to run further or faster than we are given strength with which to run. We should not because of this slow down to a walk, or stop improvements altogether. Extremes are usually mistakes.

Deacons, Watch for the Comfort and Health of Your Congregation

We were privileged to see a letter sent by a visiting bishop to one of the pastors in Zion. In his communication he said:

As you know, I attended the services last night at the ——. I estimated that there were not less than two hundred and fifty people in the room. Shortly after entering the room I noticed that the only ventilation was two windows on the north side which were down about an inch and a half, and after we had been in the room an hour one of these was closed. I called the attention of three of the deacons to the fact without securing any results. The thermometer, I was told, stood at eighty. To me it seems a crime to crowd that number of people into a building and force them to breathe over and over again the foul air. It is a violation of God's law and quite inconsistent with the efforts of our health department. While the atmosphere outside was possibly hovering around eight or ten degrees above freezing with a slight wind from the west, windows could have been opened on the opposite side of the building so that the air would have been going out and not coming in.

It is a question with me as to what is the best way to get at a problem of this kind and correct it. Good health is such an important factor in life that I feel that we cannot afford to wink at such violations of health rules. I know that you will be interested in the problem and will set in motion the necessary instructions to correct it.

If this were the only church house in Zion where violations of health rules are of frequent occurrence, we should not use space to call attention to it. We visited a very beautiful church building on a Friday evening in late November, and there was no fire. A few days after we were at the same place, and the temperature was more than twenty degrees higher, hovering around the eighty mark.

The comfort of the congregated people, their health, and the creation of an atmosphere where they can exercise untrammelled thought, is in the hands of the caretaker and the attendant deacons. Often the reason for overlooking one or more factors which militate is that no particular person present is selected to see to this line of work. It is possible in most church buildings to so ventilate that none will be inconvenienced, but it takes thought and attention. There are some buildings where it is next to impossible to achieve proper results, and in these the congregations should not be satisfied until an adequate system is installed. It should be impossible to make such comments as are made here, and they be representations of existing conditions.

The Interpreters, and a Seer

BY D. J. WILLIAMS

In the HERALD for September 24, under the title, "The Book of Mormon and the present status," an article appears which refers to a previous article as not representing the book correctly. Yes, what we want is that which properly represents the book which we believe is in harmony with other scriptures.

Referring to Mosiah 5: 79, 80, the article contains a statement which says, "These verses refer to the interpreters by which Ammon told King Limhi Mosiah could translate the twenty-four gold plates. The instrument, not the man, is described." Perhaps this is the basis of much of our misunderstanding, for it leads to other statements which are not in harmony with God's revelations through other prophets. I see no description of the instrument in these verses.

It seems very clear that Ammon and the king were discussing in these words the office work of a seer, not the interpreters. The records being in Zarahemla with Mosiah, and being unable to read the twenty-four gold plates, it is evident that King Limhi knew but little, if any, of the work of a seer. After hearing Ammon tell of Mosiah and the interpreters, it seems that an opinion only was expressed when "the king said, that a seer is greater than a prophet." Ammon apparently endeavors to correct this opinion by more fully explaining what a seer is. Notice:

Ammon said that a seer is a revelator, and a prophet also; and a gift [spiritual qualification] which is greater, can no man have, except he should possess the power of God, which no man can; yet a man may have great power given him from God. But a seer can know of things which have past, and also of things which are to come; and by them [seers] shall all things be revealed, or rather, shall secret things be made manifest, and hidden things shall come to light, and things which are not known shall be made known by them.

To say that the word gift refers to the interpreters, and that there is none greater, is to discount the work of the Holy Spirit, one of the Godhead, and since the instrument is useless without the gift, it would not be reasonable to say that by the interpreters "shall all things be revealed," etc. It is very clear that the gift is described, rather than the instrument, but the following will show that the gift is not useless without the instrument.

What Constitutes a Seer?

Is it true that "a man is not a seer without the instrument"? If so, then we have a peculiar situation confronting us in the experience of Moses and Aaron. To Aaron was assigned the wearing of the breastplate to which the Urim and Thummim were attached, "and they shall be upon Aaron's heart." (Exodus 28: 30.) Having both gift and instrument he would be greater than Moses, for having no instrument, Moses could not be a seer, according to the article previously mentioned. This, of course, is not true, for Joseph in Egypt under the spirit of inspiration prophesied of Moses, calling him a seer. (Genesis 50: 26, 29, Inspired Version.) Read of Moses' wonderful experience as given in Doctrine and Covenants, section 22, at which time he said, "Now mine eyes have beheld God; but not mine natural, but my spiritual eyes . . . his glory was upon me, and I beheld his face, for I was transfigured before him." (Verse 7.) This was evidently while he was still at Midian and some time before he led Israel to the foot of Sinai at which place he delivered to Aaron the Urim and Thummim. It is said there was not a particle of the earth which he did not behold, "discerning it by the Spirit of God" (verse 19), therefore not by the Urim. At Sinai we have two seers together and one of them (Moses) without the instrument, yet history shows him to be greater than Aaron. (See Exodus 4: 15, 16.) After leaving Sinai acknowledged so. (Numbers 12.)

It appears that the Lord provided the Urim and Thummim for the work of the lesser priesthood in the absence of those of the Melchisedec order, for we have little evidence of its use while Moses lived. In harmony with the Lord's instruction, it was not found outside of Aaron's line while the instrument was in Israel, yet we find that prophets were called seers during that time. (1 Samuel 9: 9.) In the 19th verse we have further information that "Samuel answered Saul, and said, I am a seer." Though a seer he was not of Aaron's line (1 Chronicles 6: 22, 28), and Ahiah was wearing the ephod (1 Samuel 14: 3). Those who are acquainted with Samuel's history know that he was greater than the priest, though the Lord answered David through the Urim. (1 Samuel 23: 9, 10.)

Both Moses and Samuel were seers, which fact is in opposition to the idea that "a man is not a seer without the instrument," and, "The instrument and the gift go together, since one is useless without the other."

Seers of the Melchisedec Priesthood

We have no record of a Melchisedec high priest receiving counsel through an instrument, but since the higher may officiate in the lesser offices of the priesthood, he may do so. Let us mention a few men of this order who, without question, were seers. To them the windows of heaven were opened, and they beheld the past, the future, and the secret things of God by the power of his Spirit, not by the interpreters. As previously shown, Moses was a seer, but he received the Melchisedec priesthood under the hands of his father-in-law, Jethro, while in Midian. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 1, 4.) Enoch was also of this priesthood (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5) and was a seer (Genesis 6: 38, I. V.). John was of the twelve (Luke 6: 14), later becoming a revelator to the church; and Mosiah 5: 77 says "a seer is a revelator." Joseph the Martyr evidently returned the instrument with the plates before his ordination, and as late as 1841 the Lord said, "I give unto you my servant Joseph, to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer, and prophet." (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 39.) This statement was preceded by one as early as 1830, saying, "Thou shalt be called a seer." (19: 1.)

It is evident that when the Melchisedec priesthood was on earth, the Lord used one of that order in the direction of his people regardless of the fact that the use of the instrument was possible, as in Moses' case. Though we have shown two instances when two seers were in Israel, we have no evidence in either case of the Aaronic priest receiving spiritual direction through the instrument for the church. We have heard of no objection among the Saints as to others enjoying the prophetic gift otherwise. Then why the statement, "Sometimes there were more than one prophet at a time"? Do we want two or more prophets directing the church? Such a position would open up the way for greater division, and possible disaster, as in the case of Jeremiah and Hananiah. (Jeremiah 28.) To provide against such possibility the Lord gave the following about six months after the church was organized:

Behold, verily, verily I say unto thee, No one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church except my servant Joseph Smith, jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses.—Doctrine and Covenants 27: 2.

This was given as a law unto the church and was confirmed about six months later, at which time the Lord said:

Behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this shall ye know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 1, 2.

Thus we see that the Lord himself provided for only one prophet as seer to the church, and since he has also provided for necessity, let us have faith that even now he will direct in our difficulty.

Let the reader note the difference in the duties and privileges of the two priesthoods, and the reason for placing the Urim and Thummim with the Aaronic order will be readily seen:

The power and authority of the higher, or Melchisedec, priesthood, is to hold the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church; to have the privilege of receiving the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; to have the heavens opened unto them; to commune with the general assembly and church of the Firstborn; and to enjoy the communion and presence of God the Father, and Jesus Christ the Mediator of the new covenant. The power and authority of the lesser, or Aaronic, priesthood is to hold the keys of the ministering of angels, and to administer in outward ordinances—the letter of the gospel—the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, agreeably to the covenants and commandments.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 9, 10.

Whether the ability to be a prophet is attached to the priesthood, or is not, we know that the greatest of seers have held the high priesthood. Since the Lord has said that this priesthood holds the keys to all the spiritual blessings of the church, to have the privilege of receiving the mysteries," which is not the privilege of the Aaronic priesthood, it is evident that he provided the instrument for the lesser order. It is inconsistent, therefore, to say that the ability to be a seer is not attached to the priesthood. The Reorganization is still in harmony with the law as above mentioned therefore, the Lord having appointed a high priest as seer to the church, and the people sustaining him by vote. Have we not confidence in that one as president? If not, where is our faith? It may be questioned as being in the word as given.

Democracy and Church Government

BY BISHOP C. E. IRWIN

The purpose of this article is not to set up a standard terminology to be used in defining the word democracy, but rather to call attention to the fact that the term has various connotations, and that in its popular usage has an almost infinite variety of shades of meaning. Unless one is especially careful, therefore, to define the term, others may construe it in a manner altogether foreign to the intention of the writer or speaker.

In recent months in the columns of the HERALD there have been frequent occasions when contributors have failed to use due care in this regard. Not only is this in itself a grievous blunder, but it has entailed more serious consequences because of the fact that this loose, unguarded usage has been employed presumably to discover the truth about a vital issue in the church.

It has generally been the belief among the membership of the church that the form of government was a theocratic-democracy, or perhaps a democratic-theocracy. None of us have been greatly perturbed about this hyphenated designation, simply because no issue has ever before arisen regarding it. But now that the issue has arisen, we should, in the interest of truth, begin to analyze terms, reserving our decisions until we are sure what implications are intended by those who essay to discuss the problem.

If the government of the church is a system which has incorporated into it both democratic and theocratic principles, then the discussion of either one of these groups of principles to the neglect of the other group, places an emphasis which is in no sense justified by the original assumption, viz, that they are to be considered, for our purposes, inseparable. Not that they are of equal importance, but that each is mutually dependent upon the other.

More than a few of the recent contributions have, however, been open to the criticism that democracy of one sort or another has received more than its full measure of attention. We have read articles in which the issue seems to have been whether we were to have more democracy or less democracy in church government; or as it more often has been stated, "Shall we have democracy or autocracy in the administration of church affairs?" In these arguments the implication is that the theocratic part of our governmental structure has been discarded, our former assumptions abandoned, and we are urged to become at once the ardent devotees of democracy rather than theocratic-democracy.

The writer has no quarrel with this view, though it does certainly force the consideration of two important alternatives. In the first place, one may accept the revised hypothesis, namely, that instead of the church being a theocratic-democracy, it now becomes merely a democracy. Proceeding upon this assumption there remains, then, only to define terms and move ahead. If, however, this revised hypothesis should prove unacceptable, and the choice is to retain the original one instead, then a more careful analysis must be made than has been thought necessary up to the present time.

Let there be no mistake: democracy as it is practiced in the conduct of the political affairs of the Nation or State, particularly the United States, is not compatible with the theocratic-democracy as it has operated in the church. In the Declaration of Independence is clearly enunciated the doctrine that power and authority to govern is derived from the consent of the governed. In other words, in a democracy authority flows up from the masses and is conferred on the leader, to be used by him in a manner agreed upon. But in a theocratic-democracy such as we have had in operation, authority flows down from God, and is administered by agents of his own choosing. The only element of democracy apparent in this form of government, therefore, is the right to reject the divine mandates and to refuse to be governed by them.

There, of course, can be no middle ground, for to reject government by divine mandate in specific instances is to reject it altogether.

Tradition would bid us perpetuate the established customs, but the adoption of this new hypothesis commits one to the abrogation of the old forms of government. We are facing a period fraught with great potential social changes. Let us not allow personal bias to distort our vision.

NOTE.—This is the second of four papers written by Bishop C. E. Irwin, 427 East Twelfth Street, Chester, Pennsylvania. The third will appear in an early issue.—EDITOR.

Servant of Two Masters

BY BROOKS CUMMINS

It is doubtless very becoming that one of my age and rating should hesitate when great questions are to be considered, and restrain oneself with the feeling that "Days should speak," and that a multitude of years should be warrant of wisdom.

But while we acknowledge some measure of a tendency to that attitude, we find excuse for the utterance of a few words from the realization that "great men are not always wise," and that it is not an essential attribute of age always to understand judgment.

A very unusual question that seems to hold possibilities of some mischief has arisen in the form of an ambition to have some one other than the President give a revelation to the church to clarify present conditions.

For two or three years this policy has been advocated by men of some prominence, but reference to the following law authorizing this procedure has appeared only recently:

That my servant Hyrum may take the office of priesthood and patriarch, . . . and from this time forth, I appoint unto him that he may be a prophet, and a seer, and a revelator unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph, that he may act in concert also with my servant Joseph, and that he shall receive counsel from my servant Joseph, who shall show unto him the keys whereby he may ask and receive, and be crowned with the same blessing, and glory, and honor, and priesthood, and gifts of the priesthood, that once were put upon him that was my servant Oliver Cowdery.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 29.

Now if we can find what honor, priesthood, gifts, etc., were put upon Oliver Cowdery, it should reflect the gifts and prerogatives invested in the presiding patriarch by the above commandment.

In section 8 we find Oliver is promised that he will receive a knowledge of ancient records, but in section 9 the gift of translating seems to be taken from him. However he is known to have been exalted to high privileges before the Lord, but at no time was he given power to command him who was at the head.

The exclusive right of the prophet to receive commandments seems strictly guarded in a revelation to Oliver Cowdery, section 27, as follows:

Behold, I say unto thee, Oliver, that it shall be given unto thee that thou shalt be heard by the church in all things whatsoever thou shalt teach them by the Comforter, concerning the revelations and commandments which I have given.

But, behold, verily, verily I say unto thee, no one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church excepting my servant Joseph Smith, jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses; and thou shalt be obedient unto the things which I shall give unto him, even as Aaron, to declare faithfully the commandments and revelations . . . unto the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 27: 1, 2.

The relation of Moses and Aaron are very definitely provided for Joseph and Oliver, but we notice further:

And if thou art led at any time by the Comforter to speak or teach, or at all times by the way of commandment unto the church, thou mayest do it. [Same as any other minister, "notwithstanding what is written"?] But thou shalt not write by way of commandment, but by wisdom; and thou shalt not command him who is at thy head, and at the head of the church, for I have given him the keys of the mysteries and the revelations, which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead.—Doctrine and Covenants 27: 2.

That would seem very definitely to indicate that the president had the exclusive right in the premises, but this theory is strengthened still more in another revelation as follows:

O hearken, ye elders of my church, and give ear to the words which I shall speak unto you: for behold, verily, verily, I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 1.

But suppose the president abide not in the Lord, and that he transgress. Well, in same section provision is made for such emergency as follows:

But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him [by transgression?] he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 2.

The notion that we may receive revelations through some one other than the one appointed, and that through most anyone that is convenient, patriarch, counselor, or whoever, is perhaps the direct outgrowth of another error we have fallen into, with effort, in supposing that the revelation designating the President now occupying carries a hint that he would be unfaithful and suggests his removal.

Perhaps there is no corner of the church where Saints have not been reminded that:

Should my servant Frederick M. Smith prove unstable and unfaithful, another may be chosen according to the law already given.—Doctrine and Covenants 127: 8.

From that as it stands may be gathered the suggestion of his unfaithfulness and the choosing of another, as seems to be the ambition of some, but if the entire paragraph is considered it will be found to bear evidence equally as strong of the transgression of his predecessor. But we are well satisfied that unfaithfulness or transgression was not by this predicted of either.

We offer the entire paragraph, with addition of words in brackets suggestive of its true meaning:

It is now declared that in case of the removal of my servant now presiding over the church by death or transgression, my servant Frederick M. Smith, if he remain faithful and steadfast [up to that time], should be chosen. . . . Should my servant Frederick M. Smith [before that time] prove unstable and unfaithful, another may be chosen, according to the law already given.—Doctrine and Covenants 127: 8.

To me this revelation seems very clearly to indicate that if the present incumbent should prove unstable or unfaithful before the emergency arising from his father's death or transgression, then, in that event, another might be chosen, by his father. But as he remained faithful till his father's death, and was then inducted into office, he is forever afterwards exclusively empowered to designate his successor: "None other shall be appointed to this gift save it be through him."—Doctrine and Covenants 43.

Perhaps it would do at this time to realize that a definite law must be followed in this matter, and that it is not possible for us just to "turn in" and elect a prophet, seer, and revelator to the church.

The reason is that that officer is not the servant of the people merely. He is that, indeed, but before he can be the servant of the people in that office, he is and must be the servant of God. And if we feel we have the right to direct our servants, or in any measure to choose our own, we must recognize that the Almighty has very definitely reserved the right to select his.

Even Jesus did not have the right to select the servants of the Father, and he said, "The thing ye ask is not in my hands to give."

If we are to have the services of a prophet, seer, and revelator, it will be, and can only be, by our consent to accept the service of him whom God selects. And after he has selected such a servant, and he has been ordained, even though he fall thereafter by transgression, still the right is in him, and in him alone, to designate his successor. And all revelations that come to the church from God must come through that servant, and through him alone, till his successor is appointed and qualified.

Of course it is well understood that the highest officer in the church is not immune from the law. If he transgress there is ample provision for his removal, and an additional text may be cited as follows:

And if thine eye which seeth for thee, him [the seer] that is appointed to watch over thee to show thee light, become a transgressor and offend thee, pluck him out.—Mark 9: 46. Inspired Translation.

There is no question but that the prophet may be removed for transgression and offenses, but upon the admission of this rule immediately arises the necessity for some means of ascertaining that an offense has been committed.

It would be dangerous to depose a man for transgression till the offense is determined by a court lawfully constituted, where he may be heard in his defense, a right afforded the grossest criminals.

There remains the question whether political offenses, errors of policy, etc., as well as transgressions of the moral law, are sufficient to the removal of an officer.

I believe there has not been heard the remotest intimation that the moral law has been infringed; it is simply a complaint that the policies of the administration are not right.

Well, perhaps it will not be amiss here to confess that the writer has been as far displeased in this respect as anyone. It has been a matter of the keenest regret to him to see the wisdom of this world exalted above its true merit, to the displacement, as it seems to us, of the good word of God. And we could name other matters that have been distinctly contrary to our own views, and distasteful. But with it all we have wondered if the President is directly and solely responsible for the whole program of the church, or if there may be some of the movements that he merely tolerates.

However this may be, we know one thing, that we have suffered. But we have tried to endure in hope that the present program would change to the degree that men find out its emptiness, and we can think it just possible the President of the church may come to see that some of his present policies have been marked above their true value, and his own rating of them may be changed.

We have been encouraged to hope that he will experience this change of his own views in time, by a dream at about the time he was ordained which we give in brief for what it may be worth, as follows:

The President sat in a congregation, somewhat towards the front, while I sat well towards the rear, and he arose and started down the aisle singing in a manner that, though I felt it a duty to join in and help carry the song, it seemed impossible for me to join my voice to such an effort, but I thought I should join in at the beginning of the next stanza.

Then the scene changed, and we appeared on opposite sides of the church, starting forward through the aisles which were widely separated where we stood, but as we moved forward our courses drew towards each other, till finally we stood together at the Martyr's grave, and witnessed manifestations not pertinent to this discussion.

Of whatever worth this may be to others, it has inclined me ever to hope, and to wait for the time of a better understanding that we think may result from the softening of the views of many, including some of the highest. And with this hope, and the position sustained as we think by the scriptures above, and without minimizing the fine respect we feel for all the other officers of the church, we conclude the President is the one to look to for whatever message the Lord may have, till his successor is found and ordained.

I pray that we may be able to develop a spirit of charity, and of tolerance and love for one another.

The Past and Present of Magnolia Branch

BY A. M. FYRANDO

Historical and Narrative

It may be of information and interest to many to consider some events and history from Magnolia, Iowa. The branch of the church here was organized fifty-five years ago; its church building dedicated fifty years ago. The history of the branch stands prominent in Western Iowa.

In the early years of the Reorganization Joseph and Alexander H. Smith, Heman C. Smith, E. C. Brand, Mark H. Forscutt, Joseph R. and Daniel F. Lambert, Charles Derry, James Caffall, J. W. Wight, and J. C. Crabb were frequent visitors to our little city of three hundred inhabitants and six church denominations. Resident missionaries at various times in Magnolia have been: J. R. Lambert, George Montague, James Caffall, J. F. Mintun, J. F. McDowell, R. C. Chambers, D. R. Chambers, Magnus A. and A. M. Fyrando, E. F. Shupe, C. F. Putnam, and Charles Derry. The branch membership at one time reached three hundred, and of this numbers contributed largely to the foundation of several near-by branches, and in the past two years has yielded up some forty members to Independence, Missouri. The present membership makes the few early members here lonely, as only about thirty are left within reach of the branch.

The past summer depletion and sorrow came to these few when Guy Chatburn met death near Ashland, Nebraska, in an automobile accident on June 14. Though not a member, he came of saintly forebears; and his wife, Carrie, was a member of the branch. Thirty-four years of age, he left parents, widow, and four children of tender age. His funeral service was held in Magnolia chapel, with an attendance of more than five hundred.

Then on June 18 Sister Gladys Foland passed to the beyond at the age of twenty-six years, and again hundreds assembled on June 20 to pay tender tribute to a departed Saint.

On August 3 Sister Inez Brown Stebbins, aged thirty-two, passed on, leaving eight boys and girls, all under sixteen years of age. Hundreds again assembled to show respect. The funeral sermon in each case was by the writer. We had known them all from infancy, and our feelings centered in their acquaintance.

August 31 Magnolia's oldest citizen and long-time friend, in the person of Andrew Johnson, aged ninety-seven years and six months, passed in peace to his eternal home. He united with the church in Sweden in 1857 and with the Reorganized Church at Omaha in 1870; was ordained an elder in 1872. The funeral service occurred at the home October 5, A. M. Fyrando in charge and J. F. McDowell giving a brief memorial address. The writer's father, Magnus A. Fyrando and Brother Johnson were seventy years ago in their youth acquaintances in Sweden, the land of their nativity.

The town of Magnolia has long been noted for its schools and churches, and as the birthplace of Reverend Newell Dwight Hillis. Its schools developed more missionaries (foreign), ministers, physicians, professional and business men than any town in the United States, considering its size. The churches all have lost in membership, due, we believe, to the trend of the times, in which the pleasures of the world hold sway over the desire for religious worship. We hope to have a home-coming early in 1925.

The few here are trying to feel encouraged and to do their humble part. Sister Bessie Laughlin, daughter Aleta and son Harold, of Rhodes, Iowa, are at home here, Aleta being a member of our consoli-

Merlin Congregation Spent a Very Interesting Time on November 9

The members of the Latter Day Saints' Church at Merlin held their anniversary services on Sunday, November 9, representatives of the church being present from various branches of Chatham District. At every meeting during the day the church was filled to capacity, and the services were interesting and instructive.

Elder Arthur Leverton, of Minden, Michigan, with Elder Henry Atkinson of Chatham, an old member of the Merlin Branch, and Elder Stewart Lamont of Chatham presided over prayer service.

Elder Robert Brown, district president, preached at eleven o'clock. Bishop J. C. Dent of Bothwell, preached at three, giving an instructive address on church principles, and Elder B. H. Doty, of Traverse City, Michigan, presiding missionary of Chatham District, gave a very fine sermon at half past seven.

The pastor of the Angelican Church withheld his service in order to enable himself and his congregation to attend our services.

Elder John Dent, president of the Merlin Branch, and the members of his congregation provided meals in the basement of the church to all the visitors. Recently improvements have been made to the basement of this church, and the reports are that the work of the congregation there is prospering greatly.

The Convention of Young People

FLINT, MICHIGAN, November 18.—The convention of the young people of the State of Michigan was brought to a successful close Sunday evening, October 26. The convention was the culmination of a successful campaign fostered by the young people of the Detroit District, in which the three main churches participated. At Detroit the meetings were held in the Central Church, Pontiac, and the First Church at Flint. In both Flint and Detroit the meetings were a union of all the churches of these cities. At Pontiac, the Orion Branch assisted as much as they could, having several miles to drive each evening.

On Saturday the young people of the State gathered at the new high school auditorium and enjoyed a prayer service at nine o'clock. Following this the assembly met in class, dated school faculty, teaching home economics. We are glad for their help.

As we become older and understand better the principles of soul life, we incline more to believe it is "not so much where you are as what you are." Brother J. F. McDowell speaks for us on occasion; also Brother R. D. Chambers, though he generally has outside appointments three Sundays each month.

The first female white child born in Harrison County was an early member of our church. She still lives and labors for the church at Valentine, Nebraska, known to many as Mrs. Julia Vincent Shepard. What memories come, some sad, others joyous, after fifty years in the old home town.

at which the three speakers of the campaign, Apostles F. Henry Edwards and J. A. Gillen, and Bishop Fred B. Blair were the speakers. Each took an interesting topic and gave a forty-five minute lecture. This was continued in the afternoon, after which a round table discussion was held in the auditorium. Bishop Blair was very busy between times, having made Room 13 his headquarters, where the people went to seek counsel and make their inventories.

In the evening a state program was rendered. The various districts throughout the entire State were represented, vocal and musical numbers predominating. The special feature of the program was the appearance of the Industrial Mutual Association Glee Club. This was a group of men of the various factories of the city, under the direction of William Wellington Norton, director of the Flint Community Music Association. They sang a group of four songs, among which was the Dudley Buck arrangement of Annie Laurie. After the fourth song they were called back for an encore, when they responded with "Lead, kindly light," also arranged by Dudley Buck.

Sunday morning at an early hour the Saints began to gather for the prayer meeting which was opened at eight o'clock in charge of Apostles Gillen and Edwards and Bishop Blair. Many had driven from their distant homes, which necessitated an early start, but all were repaid for their sacrifice by the prevalence of the Spirit of God. The prayers and testimonies of these young people came from their hearts, and their desires as expressed meant much in their future work in the church.

At eleven o'clock the Sunday school was held in charge of V. D. Schaar, superintendent of Detroit District, and Henry Hartzler, superintendent of First Flint Sunday school. At the same hour the children were taken to the gymnasium, where seats were provided, and they were taken care of under the direction of Sister William M. Brewster and Elder John R. Grice. During this time the presidents and counselors of the various districts of Michigan were in session, effecting an association which will be instrumental in bringing about a closer cooperation among the workers of the State. Each district was represented, except the Western District. Elder William M. Grice was elected president, and Elder Alma Grant of Detroit, secretary.

At half past two a "sandwich" service was held. The three men who were the guests of the convention each spoke on interesting subjects, which were interspersed with musical numbers. These subjects were prepared, and some very useful information was gleaned. After this service a flash-light picture was taken. Many present gave their orders, and if they have not been received at this time they will be mailed soon. The evening sermon by Apostle Gillen was a fitting close to a successful gathering. His subject, "Cast your net on the other side of the boat," brought to many the realization of their lethargy, and they left with a determination to get in the harness.

The music of the convention was furnished by the mass orchestra of the State. This department is only in its infancy, and more may be expected of it in the future. There are some consecrated workers in this department, and their interest in music will be a blessing to many in days to come.

On Saturday afternoon at the round table the question was asked with reference to another annual convention next year. The voice of the people was to the effect that another convention be held. A committee was asked for, to arrange such a convention, time and place to be decided by them. Brother Carlisle Whitehead of Pontiac, director of the Department of Recreation and Expression of the Detroit District, was chosen chairman, and he chose as his associates on the committee Brother Hector McKinnon of East Jordan, of the Northern Michigan District, and Otto Bartlette of Bentley, of the Central Michigan District. It is hoped next year that more of the churches of the State will prepare for a campaign to precede the convention.

One interesting thing about the convention is that there was no age limit. This convention was fostered by the young people, and all were invited to attend. Every district of Michigan was represented by several members. The older Saints were present and seemed to regain the gladness of their youth. One sister, from Davison, a member of the Flint Branch, Sister Ella Lucas, celebrated her seventy-second birthday by attending this convention. Thus the older members enjoyed the association of the young, and the young were very well pleased to be the hosts of the old. The attendance was over a thousand, and the conduct and decorum of each made a very good impression on the nonmembers who had chanced to meet some of our people. The treasurer of the Board of Education passed the high school after the morning prayer service had been in session for about three quarters of an hour. His comment was, he never saw so many church members get out so early for a prayer meeting. Thus everyone left after an enjoyable time, looking forward to next year to a bigger and better gathering of the youth of the church in Michigan.

Lancaster, Ohio

November 20—Probably most of the Saints read in the pages of the Ensign some time ago that Elder S. E. Dickson was progressing rapidly in the spreading of the gospel message at Lancaster, Ohio.

A branch, known as Lancaster Number 1 was organized November 9, with a membership of thirty-seven. We have some very willing workers at Lancaster. Already one brother has been ordained to the office of priest and one to the office of teacher.

Elder S. E. Dickson was chosen as president of the branch and Brother William Vickroy ordained as priest; also, Brother Charles Wason, teacher.

Interest still seems to be growing.

Any time that officers or members of the church see fit to visit Lancaster they will be most cordially welcomed by Lancaster Branch.

EARLE E. CAMPBELL.

Encouraging Conditions at Attleboro

ATTLEBORO, MASSACHUSETTS, November 7.—Just a line from Attleboro to let you know that we are still in the race for perfection, and going strong. Unity prevails, and everyone is desirous of doing his part to keep the branch in its present spiritual condition.

We have two prayer meetings every Wednesday evening, one for the children at seven o'clock, and one for the adults at a quarter till eight.

We have a young men's club called the "Equality Club," which is taking up the study of the Book of Mormon, with the pastor, Earle R. Bradshaw, as the teacher. There are several young men who belong that are not members of the church. From half past seven to a quarter after eight is the lesson period, the rest of the evening being devoted to sociability and entertainment. This club has not only benefited us as individuals but has reacted for good to the branch.

The young women have organized a chapter of Temple Builders, while the young girls find expression in their club called the "Wetamachic Girls." The young boys are active in a troop of Boy Scouts under the direction of Nathaniel Moore.

If our former pastor, Elder Peter Whalley, sees this letter, he will know that we have not drifted away from the aggressiveness and activity that he drilled into us.

Recently Elder Orville L. Thompson was with us holding a week's meetings. To be privileged to listen to such an able and spiritual man as he, could not help but bring us up to a higher spiritual plane and give us a bigger and broader vision of the work that lies before us. We were reminded of the wonderful days spent at the Onset reunion this summer, when we were so ably supplied with the bread of life by Brother Floyd McDowell.

The attitude of the local newspaper towards us is very good, and we run regular church notices in it every week, advertising the activities of the week as well as the Sunday services. The branch at the present time is in a sound condition temporally and spiritually, and we aim to keep it so by trying to live our lives in harmony with the will of God.

Vinal Haven, Maine

November 2.—Pastor Archie Beggs was present at the sacramental service to-day and is again on duty after an absence of many weeks because of having to be in the hospital with appendicitis. This is a day of thanksgiving and enjoyment for the Saints. There was a wonderful spirit present, and all the Saints in this part of the vineyard express desires of still continuing to work in the service of the Lord.

The Department of Women, under the leadership of Sister Frieda Barton, are doing fine work in having suppers each fortnight and meeting together each week for transacting business and making comforters and fancy articles to sell to help pay the debt on the church building.

The Sunday school is getting along fine under the supervision of Sister Agnes Minton; also the Department of Recreation and Expression under Brother Ralph Candage.

Elder Harvey Minton has been in Vinal Haven the past few days and preached a funeral sermon, besides performing the marriage ceremony for a couple outside the church. The groom is an electrician by trade, and the manager of the Vinal Haven Electric Light and Power Company and his wife were witnesses. It seems that good is being done outside the church by our people in this part of the vineyard, and the Lord is blessing us.

Accidental Death of Sister Elizabeth Smith

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA, November 19.—A very sad accident occurred at front of our church at Seventh and Lottie Streets in Oklahoma City on Wednesday evening, November 12, 1924.

Sister Elizabeth Smith, daughter of Brother J. R. Lewis (deceased), and wife of Brother Joseph M. Smith of 3017 West Thirteenth Street, Oklahoma City, had put in the forenoon of the day in assisting the War Mothers serve lunch, (she being a Star Mother,) and at noon she came to the church and assisted the Department of Women in quilting, and remained until after the regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting. On passing north across Seventh Street she was struck by a seven-passenger automobile driven by Mr. Mann, a florist, which lifted her clear of the ground. In the fall her brain was crushed. An ambulance was called, but before it arrived she was administered to by the brethren. Upon the arrival of the ambulance she was placed in it and rushed to the University Hospital, where she died in a few minutes.

The body was then removed to an undertaking establishment, thence to the home of her son, Gomer Smith. The funeral was held on Monday, November 17, sermon by J. Arthur Gillen, prayer by Brother J. M. Terry, of El Reno, Oklahoma. A quartet of the Apollo Music Club sang, and a solo, "Leave it to Him," was sung by Sister James M. Kelley, of Omaha, Nebraska. The War Mothers Association took part in the ceremonies, one of their number singing a splendid solo, "Mother." The body was then removed to Fairlawn Cemetery, where it was placed in a vault.

Sister Smith would have been fifty years of age in December of this year. Her work in this life came to a close in a very sudden and tragic manner, but so it seemed to have pleased God. She was the mother of seven boys, six of whom are living, all members of the church except the youngest, who is only seven years of age. Her husband was baptized last month by Brother William Bath.

Her mother and two sisters from Los Angeles, California, one sister from Kansas City, and a sister-in-law from Miles City, Montana, were in attendance. F. ED. DILLON.

Kewanee District Conference

The conference of the Kewanee District was held at Moline, Illinois, October 3, 4, and 5.

A departmental institute was held Friday with the district Sunday school superintendent, Harland Cady, in charge, assisted by District President E. R. Davis. Because of the absence of the papers to have been prepared and read at this meeting, a discussion on general Sunday school work was held, and several short talks on teachers' meetings and the Department of Recreation and Expression were enjoyed.

At nine o'clock Saturday morning the prayer meeting was in charge of Apostle John F. Garver, assisted by Elders E. R. Davis and E. A. Curtis. It was a very spiritual service, and the time was well occupied.

At eleven o'clock business meeting was called to order by District President E. R. Davis. He was assisted by his two counselors, Ed Jones of Kewanee and Bert E. Sartwell of Savanna. Brother Garver was given charge of the meeting. As the district secretary, Sister Mary E. Gillin, was ill, our assistant secretary, Sister Winifred Douglas, took the minutes. She was assisted by Brother A. H. McCormack.

Reports were read from the district president and his counselors, secretary, assistant secretary, treasurer, Bishop's agent, district chorister, the Sunday school superintendent, superintendent of the Department of Women, and the ministers. Twenty local men reported their labors, while thirty-one did not. The statistical report was accepted.

At a quarter of three in the afternoon business session was opened in charge of the same brethren. A baby was blessed, after which it was voted that the delegate system be adopted. After the Sunday school secretary's report, the reunion committee reported a balance on hand of $7.40. It was decided to hold the next reunion at Galva, while the next conference will be held at Savanna the second Friday, Saturday, and Sunday in June, 1925.

The following ordinations were voted upon and carried: Ambrose King and Harry Jones, elder; Elbert Holmes, priest.

The young people's convention will be held at Rock Island during the Thanksgiving holidays, Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. Eastern Iowa District is invited to join us.

The eight delegates chosen to General Conference are: Elders E. R. Davis, E. A. Curtis, Charles Holmes, Bert Sartwell, Edward Jones, George Sackfield, Joseph Cole, and Leonard Stiegel. We are sorry that none of our sisters will have a voice in the coming General Conference and trust that other districts will not leave them all to the back seats.

At half past nine Sunday morning the Sunday school was in charge of the district officers, Harland Cady, superintendent-ent, Elbert Holmes, secretary, and Leah Denton, chorister. The church was crowded, and fine lessons were reported.

Sacramental service was held at eleven o'clock, at which time two babies were blessed and three men ordained. A good spirit prevailed. In the afternoon Brother Garver spoke on, "Let us have grace," and in the evening Brother E. A. Curtis occupied.

A program by the Department of Recreation and Expression was greatly appreciated Friday evening. At noon Sunday a picture was taken, which proved to be very good. Meals were served cafeteria style in the basement by the Moline Saints and were very excellent indeed. Everyone attending felt greatly repaid for the effort in being present.

College Day in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, November 11.—College Day was observed last Sunday by a special service in the morning, with addresses by Bishop Charles E. Irwin, formerly a member of the faculty of Graceland College, and Elder William B. Hartley, who took a course of study there.

Sister Willamena Johnson also read a paper appropriate to the occasion. The choir rendered a fine anthem, and Sister Helen Bootman, formerly of Lamoni, sang a solo that was greatly appreciated by the Saints present.

The collections for the day amounted to about $175, which will be forwarded for the benefit of Graceland.

While at times it seems as if Philadelphia was not advancing in the work as much as some might desire, on reflection we are assured that under the able guidance and direction of Pastor Arthur E. Stoff we are surely moving ahead.

The Department of Women, with Sister Zimmermann as supervisor, is taking a very active interest in church affairs, and last Wednesday held a rally at which upwards of one hundred of the sisters attended and passed a very enjoyable evening.

The choir is again becoming quite a feature in the branch, under the leadership of Sister Clara N. Thumm; and in addition to rendering anthems at both morning and evening services on Sunday, gave on October 12 a splendid rendition of the cantata, "Ruth," by Gaul. They are preparing other special work for the Christmas holidays.

Successful Efforts at Woodbine

WOODBINE, IOWA, November 14.—We feel that we have been greatly favored the past few weeks. The Little Sioux district conference was held here on October 11 and 12 with good attendance and profitable time. George and Oscar Deal were ordained to the priesthood and seem very earnest in the new responsibility.

One week prior to conference, and three weeks since, Apostle T. W. Williams has preached the gospel to a full house. People from nearly every church in the town, of which there are five, helped to make up the congregation. Seven were baptized, and a great deal of prejudice has been removed, thus paving the way for a more thorough investigation of the gospel. The Saints received much spiritual food, and a broader vision of the field in which God's people should occupy that their influence may be more effectually felt in the community.

On November 6 the Department of Women held their monthly business and social meeting. Brother Williams gave a very interesting talk on "Woman's influence," not forgetting to emphasize her power in the ballot.

The community was saddened by the fatal accident that took the life of Sister Bernice Holeton on November 3. Late in the afternoon she took a gun and started to a near-by grove, hoping to shoot a squirrel. About thirty minutes later her younger brother, coming home from school, found her lifeless form by the roadside. She was a school-teacher and the only daughter. Our sympathy goes out to those who mourn.

The Passing of Elder J. W. Taylor

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, November 1.—We write for the information of Saints who were formerly resident in the British Isles.

There has recently passed to his rest a minister of Jesus Christ, Elder J. W. Taylor, high priest and bishop's counselor. We first carried the gospel to this modest man about twenty-seven years ago, and he has remained faithful and true. He leaves a widow and four children to mourn their loss. When called away, Brother Taylor was busy with the perfecting of an invention to be used in building construction that probably would have made him a wealthy man. Others will now likely reap the benefit, but not his widow and children. However, we are satisfied that God will remember them.

We can scarcely realize that Brother John has passed away. We had just received his quorum report and hoped to meet him in the usual course. There is now a vacant place in his home and in the church, and there is a void in our hearts. He has left the jangling and the strife, the empty things that men struggle and hurt one another to obtain, for the heavenly calm. He met opposition with calmness, and unkindness with love, which was like oil on the stormy waters of the Atlantic, often saving the bark. He had "Christ in the vessel," so he "smiled at the storm."

Brother Taylor had great ability as a draftsman and an engineer, yet he was modest. His influence was remarkable.

He was laid to rest on September 26 in Weaste Cemetery, which lies near his earthly home. The funeral service was conducted by Elder David Hughes, in the Beresford Road Church. It was largely attended by both members and non-members and was very impressive, witnessing to the high esteem in which the departed servant of the Lord was held.

A memorial service was held October 26 at Beresford Road. In the evening the members of several branches congregated, together with friends. The building was beautifully decorated with flowers by Sister Ada Green. Service was in charge of Elder W. R. Armstrong, and Elder S. F. Mather conducted the singing, assisted by Elder J. W. Green, while Sister A. Green presided at the organ. Opening prayer was offered by Elder G. W. Leggott. The hymns sung and the Lord's prayer were very inspiring. "There is a green hill far away," was sung by the Preston family, and those present will not easily forget the melodious voices.

The lesson of the evening was read by Apostle Paul M. Hanson. This modest missionary of Christ reminds us of another Paul who, although one of the greatest minds of all time, said, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." What modesty! No wonder the saints at Ephesus and other places loved him. There was an inward force palpable to those to whom he ministered. Yet he was brave in the face of howling mobs and death. We long for such to visit us and "feed the flock of Christ which he purchased with his own blood." Just now we think of James W. Gillen, Gomer T. Griffiths, James Caffall, Herman C. Smith, William Newton, Fred G. Pitt, John W. Rush-ton, Roderick May, Richard Baldwin, and U. W. Greene. These humble, faithful men have ministered to our necessities, and the depth of our love and esteem does not pass with the years. It will abide forever. Who can forget our dear Brother Joseph Smith? What a modest, loving soul he was. And last, but not least, come Brother Hanson and Brother Curtis. God bless them and preserve them until they reach dear ones and home again.

We have sung:

"O Zion, when I think of thee
I long for pinion, like a dove;
And mourn to think that I should be
So distant from the land I love," and hoped to realize it here. We have given up the thought of seeing it. Like Israel in captivity, we have "hanged our harps on the willow trees" and look for the Master to come and establish Zion. Do we wish to forget Zion? No. Lest our right hand forget its cunning.

Prior to delivering his sermon, Brother Hanson unveiled a brass tablet which had been fastened to the church wall behind the spot where Brother Taylor preached his last discourse to the Saints. It bears the following inscription:

"In loving memory of Elder John William Taylor (high priest) who dedicated this church 15th of July, 1923, and passed to his rest 22d September, 1924. 'He that loveth Me keepeth My words, and My Father will love him.'"

The address was listened to with close attention. Brother Taylor was born in 1867 and joined our church twenty-seven years ago. He has variously held the offices of priest, elder, and high priest and has acted as counselor to Bishops Roderick May and Charles Fry. Brother Hanson told us with no uncertain sound that Brother Taylor had entered into the paradise of God. He also spoke of the beautiful character and Christlike example. Those present were exhorted to emulate his example so that they also might at last enter into the same rest and live forever with the Lord. All present felt the influence of the Holy Spirit as Brother Paul unfolded the glorious hope held out to all God's faithful children when this earthly life is past. All felt truly blessed by the service of the evening and were encouraged to press forward with renewed hope.

The comfort of the Saints was left in the hands of our genial deacon, Brother Edward Britten, who was ably assisted by our missionary, Brother Harold Dewsnup, and Teacher Francis Smith. Their efforts were untiring and helped to make our service a marked success.

The service closed with the singing of "Sweet peace, the gift of God's love," and the vesper hymn. Elder Hughes offered the closing prayer, and the Saints dispersed to their homes to ponder over the events of the day.

W. R. ARMSTRONG.

Spokane, Washington

November 28.—We are just holding our own in Spokane at present. There is nothing very exciting as we have not had any special services since the young people's convention. We might mention the fact that Elder Eli Bronson has been here for a few Sunday nights and has preached some splendid sermons. He also reports five baptisms at Coeur D' Alene, Idaho.

The Religio is increasing in attendance, and we are having some good programs. We are going to do some hard work to keep up an interest. One of the classes is taking the initiative in putting a basement under the church. We have felt the need of a basement for a long time and hope we may be able to make a finished job this time.

We are looking forward to our coming conference, which will convene in December. It is expected that Apostle Roy S. Budd will be with us at that time.

Kansas City Stake

The stake conference which was held November 16 and 17 was one of the best held in the stake. The Sunday morning sermon was by President Frederick M. Smith, who presented a splendid lesson, using as his text, "No man liveth unto himself alone." The house was packed, many having to stand, and some were glad to be listeners from the various entrances to adjoining rooms.

At the same hour the children had the privilege of attending a special service adapted to their needs, held in the parlors. These services seem to be a good thing for the young folks who cannot fully appreciate the usual sermon.

Priesthood quorum meetings were held at half past one, and at half past two social services were held for both old and young in the north and south rooms of the church. The Spirit of God was present to a marked degree to the comfort of a splendid attendance at both places.

The Department of Women was especially favored at half past four, when Sister Blanche Edwards, superintendent of the department, lectured on "Our heritage." The Heathwood and Quindaro orchestras furnished excellent music for them. At the same hour the ministry occupied their usual quarters and were addressed by Bishop F. B. Blair on the financial condition of the church.

The meeting at a quarter of eight was preceded by a song service, and William I. Fligg dispensed the word to the uplift of those present.

The business session the following Monday night was occupied with passing on appointments, previously nominated by the various churches. Stake President J. A. Tanner was ably assisted in presiding by President F. M. Smith. Reports were made a matter of record of the stake presidency. The stake bishop reported a balance on hand of $3,181.79; received since, $19,716.14; expenditures, $22,585.39; balance now on hand, $312.54. Others reporting were the stake secretary and recorder, stake missionary, elders, priests, teachers, Department of Women, Sunday school, and Religio. On separate motions the stake presidency, stake bishopric, high council, secretary, recorder, historian, and reporter were by motion sustained. The appointment of the following pastors was ratified: Second Kansas City, F. A. Evans; Fourth, J. O. Worden; Bennington, H. W. Goold; Northeast Mission, C. A. Selbe; Mount Washington, R. L. Bishop; Chelsea Park, J. A. Harrington; Quindaro, E. N. Palmer; Heathwood, John Tucker; Grandview, C. D. Jellings; Armourdale, John Gross; Argentine, R. E. Brown; Malvern Hill, Sidney N. Gray. The appointment of the following department heads was ratified: Religious Education and Recreation and Expression, J. Ray Lloyd; Department of Women, Fern Lloyd; Department of Music, Bernice Griffith. Local department heads were also appointed by ratification of nominations previously made.

The following brethren were recommended for ordination, which was concurred in by the conference: D. J. Kennedy, elder; Burdette B. Root, W. K. Williams, and L. E. Babcock, priest; Clarence Penticuff, deacon.

A resolution was passed regulating the election of delegates for next General Conference, who will be chosen next stake conference. The pastors of the various churches were requested to furnish a list of names of those who intend to attend to the stake secretary, who in turn is to furnish the stake conference with a tabulated list, so an intelligent vote may be taken.

A resolution was also taken approving the bishop's taking steps at this time to raise the amount of money apportioned as our share towards the building of a more powerful radio station in Independence.

Good Conference and Fine Conditions

From a Letter to the First Presidency

Our conference was held with the Mallard Branch last week end, and to say it was a good one is only partially telling it—from the opening session on Friday evening when a program was rendered by local talent of all ages from the infant to the aged and saintly grandmother, thus showing that all can be of service and recognized in this great work.

On Saturday morning the service opened with a prayer service which was truly an inspirational one, and at eleven o'clock Brother F. M. McDowell was the speaker. He acquitted himself with credit and to the comfort and joy of those present. In the afternoon a business session was held, when peace and harmony again prevailed.

The holding of a February conference was left for the officers to determine, as were the time and place of same. There was a recommendation from the Dow City Branch for the ordination of two of the brethren for different grades of the priesthood, viz, elder and priest.

Brother J. F. Garver was present and was the speaker on Saturday evening, and he was blessed in his effort to the comfort and strengthening of all. Sunday was truly an enjoyable day. The assembly met at half past eight, in a social and sacramental service, coming with fasting and prayer. At this service the emblems were administered, a babe blessed, and the ordinations before referred to were taken care of and nearly two hours spent in social service, at which time a goodly degree of the Spirit was felt and manifested in the gifts of the gospel, speaking through Brother Garver, commending the efforts put forth for the preparation made to make the gathering a success and commending those who had come as well as those who had made an effort to make this a profitable gathering.

This was Brother McDowell's and Brother Garver's first visit to this part of the district and it was timely and profitable to all assembled, and the counsel given and experiences enjoyed were good. It was conceded by all present that this gathering excelled to a goodly degree those of past years, in the interest manifested, the numbers gathered, and the spirit enjoyed.

Brother W. A. Smith, of the missionary force, was present and feeling well and happy in the work, as justly he should, having just closed a seven-week effort in the old Gallands Grove Branch where he had been permitted to baptize some thirty-two into the fold and had quite a number accompanying him to the conference, which required a drive of one hundred and thirty-five miles. They were present and on time for the opening session, as were quite a number of others, thus giving us joy to know that they had tried to comply with our suggestion that as many as could be present for the opening and remain all through.

The Saints of Mallard are to be commended for the way they showed their generosity in caring for such a large number in such a way that all were at the several different meetings and mostly all on time.

Like all other good times, they come to a close; and all too soon we were made to realize this was history, and we were left alone to again take up the thread of routine work. After stopping over one day to rest a little, we wended our way to Dow City to begin a series of meetings with the branch and try to revive and cheer if we can. We started in last evening with a fair representation out and a goodly influence present.

I omitted mentioning the fact that we had a hundred or more visitors in attendance at our conference, thus clearly manifesting to those present that it won't be long till they will have to sing in reality where they want the conference to be located, "Give us room that we may dwell," etc.

Kind regards to you brethren in the office. I assure you that the cause seems to be onward and the people desirous for its welfare and ultimate triumph.

F. T. MUSSELL, District President.

Nauvoo, Illinois

November 29.—District conference convened at Fort Madison November 15 and 16, at which time unity and peace prevailed, and a wonderful spirit of cooperation was manifested among the priesthood. The speakers were Patriarch F. A. Smith and Elder G. S. Daniel. At one of the priesthood meetings Patriarch Smith addressed the priesthood, giving timely advice that was enjoyed by all. A fine dinner was served in the basement of the church. The next conference will be held in June at Rock Creek, at which time institute work will be taken up, it being decided that one conference a year be devoted to business and one to educational work.

On the evening of November 16, Patriarch F. A. Smith commenced a series of meetings in Nauvoo on the first principles of the gospel. The weather was cold and disagreeable, and the call of religion was not strong enough to induce many nonmembers to leave their warm firesides. The Saints were in attendance at every meeting, and the young people had an opportunity of hearing the first principles set forth in a convincing manner, although it was a disappointment that more nonmembers were no present. At the close of the week, Brother Smith decided to discontinue the services and on Sunday morning directed his sermon to the Saints, giving them an inspiring talk on "Zion, the pure in heart." In the evening he delivered his closing sermon on "The resurrection" to a well-filled house.

During his stay Brother Smith visited some of his relatives, who were old-timers in Nauvoo. Brother Don Carlos Milliken, son of Lucy Smith, sister of the Martyrs, came out Sunday morning. He is a quiet, unassuming man, who has lived an honest, upright life in his community; but being far removed from a branch, he has never taken an active part in church affairs. Brother Smith gave him his patriarchal blessing, which was very comforting to him.

A father and son banquet was held in Burlington, at which time our pastor, Elder Amos Berve, delivered an address to the fathers and sons. A good time was reported by all.

Our Sunday school is still growing, which is very encouraging to the superintendent, Brother Henderson. We now have a membership of fifty-two, several of these being children of nonmembers who send the children to us because they say the children learn more about the Bible in our Sunday school than they did when they went to their own Sunday school.

Thanksgiving eve only eighteen braved the storm to attend prayer meeting, but all responded to the theme, even five-year-old Joseph Henderson, who said he was thankful for his baby sister. The week before the testimonies of all the children mingled with those of the older ones. Out of a membership of forty-two, eighteen are under eighteen years of age, and all take an active part in the affairs of the branch.

The Saints were invited to participate in a union service Thanksgiving Day at the Methodist church, with the Presbyterian minister as speaker. A year ago a similar service was held in the Presbyterian church with Elder Berve as speaker.

Stone Church

Sister Marie E. Salyards, the aged mother of our Brother Richard S. Salyards, passed away at the home of her son Friday morning, November 28. Sister Salyards was born in Fairhaven, Massachusetts, January 1, 1835, and had lived in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Lamoni, Iowa, and Independence. She was of Puritan stock, and one of her ancestors, Thomas Savery, was the first constable of Plymouth Colony and a close associate of Governor Bradford and other of the Pilgrim Fathers. She leaves her son, Richard S. Salyards; two sisters, Mrs. W. H. Odwyer and Mrs. Clara L. French; and three grandchildren, Zaide A. Salyards, of Denver, Colorado; Joseph R. Salyards, of Omaha, Nebraska; and Richard S. Salyards, jr., of Colorado Springs. After prayer at the home, funeral services were held at the Stone Church in charge of Bishop B. R. McGuire, with sermon by Patriarch Frederick A. Smith and prayer by Elder Joseph Luff. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery following a very beautiful prayer by Bishop McGuire.

The concert given by the Stone Church choir Thanksgiving night was exceptionally fine and was enjoyed by a good-sized audience. Music of the best types was presented, and the choir should be justly proud of the very fine rendition they gave of difficult numbers. No little credit is due Brother Paul Craig for the success of the choir. They are very thankful that they have the services of such a splendid conductor as Brother Craig. Other special numbers consisting of a vocal duet by Mrs. I. A. Smith and Miss Marcine Smith, soprano solos by Miss Pauline James, the piano and organ duets by the Miller brothers, and a reading by Joseph Anway, were also very much enjoyed. The work of Brothers Robert and George Miller on the pipe organ and piano is to be very highly commended.

The Messiah Chorus is making splendid progress in their preparation for the rendition of the Oratorio, "Messiah," by Handel, to be given the evening of December 28, in the Stone Church. This chorus is made up of members from all the groups in Zion and Kansas City Stake, totaling a membership of some hundred twenty-five voices. This chorus is also directed by Brother Paul Craig.

A nice surprise was planned by the daughters of Brother and Sister Frederick A. Smith in honor of their fortieth wedding anniversary. They had been married forty years November 16, but because Brother Smith was away from home at that time the celebration was held November 28. Between thirty and forty friends spent a very enjoyable evening with them and wished them many happy returns of the day. Brother Smith says he and Sister Smith saw a gleam of "starlight" and suspected something, but that did not mar their pleasure in the gathering.

The Department of Women of the Stone Church met in special session Tuesday, November 18, at half past two, and a very fine program was enjoyed. The main item of the program was an address by Sister Blanche Edwards on the subject, "The call to the women of the church to-day; a wonderful opportunity and a wonderful responsibility." Faithful tributes were paid to Emma Smith and the women of her day; also to Marietta Walker. Are we worthy successors to such women? God has called each of us to a work that no one else in the world can do for us. Are we answering the call? The address was beautifully supplemented by two solos by Sister R. D. Etzenhouser. After a round table discussion, the service closed with singing "Blessed be the tie that binds," followed by prayer by Sister Alice Cowan. The regular meeting will be held at the Stone Church Friday, December 5, at half past two. Bishop J. A. Becker and Mrs. W. S. Pender, missionary from the Isle of Pines, will speak. Following this meeting will be a business session of the W. C. T. U. All are welcome.

The Laurel Club is planning to hold a bazaar December 9.

President F. M. Smith spent Sunday in Omaha but has now returned to Independence.

Apostle T. W. Williams is in Independence; John W. Rush-ton is in Los Angeles recovering from his recent illness; J. Frank Curtis and Paul M. Hanson are in England, where Brother Curtis is recuperating from a case of bronchial pneumonia in London; E. J. Gleazer is in Sperry, Oklahoma, with Hubert Case; and J. A. Gillen is in Ohio where he will attend a conference at Middletown this week end.

Brother R. C. Russell came to the Independence Sanitarium November 25, suffering from a general breakdown. Since Thanksgiving Day he has been with Brother G. A. Taylor and family, with whom he made his home for many years in Canada. He is improving steadily, and will doubtless be ready for work again soon.

News of a very sad accident recently came from Brother A. M. Baker, missionary, whose home is in Springfield, Missouri. Sister Baker got up early Thanksgiving morning and in some way caught her clothes on fire. She ran to the street screaming, which awakened her husband. He ran to her as soon as possible and wrapped her in a wet quilt to extinguish the fire, but she was too badly burned to recover and died the same day. Brother Baker is left alone with two children.

Second Church

Our eight o'clock Sunday morning prayer service for the young people is recording an attendance of fifty and upwards, and the interest is very good. Six boys under twelve years of age rose Sunday morning and bore their short testimonies.

Sunday school is promising a Christmas entertainment, and Sisters Alice McBride, Vera Redfield, and Laura Weir are in charge of it. The school has over $513 now in the Christmas offering fund.

Elder Delbert A. Whiting was the speaker at eleven o'clock, and he made a strong appeal for sacrifice and real effort to liquidate the debt on church property. Following up his discourse the priesthood of Section 2 met at six o'clock and agreed to canvass the entire section at the earliest possible moment, and to use the next three weeks for a campaign to that end. The Religio, Sunday school, and the priesthood, together with three collections taken, have raised approximately five hundred dollars to date, and this does not include any of the detail canvass, which has not been reported. We hope to reach our goal, but it means we must raise at least $2.50 from each member, and will take work.

Sunday evening Patriarch Frederick A. Smith delivered an elaborate sermon on the subject of true worship, and the house was filled with attentive listeners. The pastor announced that on the evening of December 7 Elder C. Ed. Miller would begin a series of lectures on the Book of Mormon, to be illustrated by lantern slides from his valuable collection. His first lecture will be upon the biblical evidences in favor of the book. December 14 he will lecture again, answering the world's objections to our contention that the Book of Mormon is a divine record. December 21 his subject will be archæological and Indian evidences for the Book of Mormon.

Friday evening the Religio met and chose its officers for the coming year. Brother Rawlings was chosen for superintendent.

ent, Brothers Harold Hatty and Charles Edmunds, assistants; and a full corps of officers was chosen to serve for the year. Considerable interest was apparent.

Monday evening the Sunday school chose Brothers P. A. Sherman and Heman H. Davies as superintendent and assistant; Sister Alice Chappelow as superintendent of the juniors; Sister Grace Nave, superintendent of the primaries. Sister Vivian Carroll was elected secretary; Brother Ross Leverton, treasurer; Brother Frank Redfield, chorister; F. W. Chappelow, member of library board.

Walnut Park

Sunday speakers were B. J. Scott and Edward Rannie.

Group 29 contributed $80.70 to the building fund, as proceeds of their oyster supper held November 24, and Group 28 raised more than $35 for the same purpose at a bake sale held in town on the day preceding Thanksgiving.

Mrs. Alice Cowan, superintendent of Sunday schools in Zion, addressed the early Sunday morning teachers' meeting.

Liberty Street

The Thanksgiving dinner served by the women of the Liberty Street group proved to be a decided success. More than four hundred people were served. Something over $150 was cleared, which is to be applied on the church debt. These sisters are planning to have a bazaar before Christmas and will have useful household articles for sale such as quilts, comforters, towels, aprons, buffet sets, etc. A bake sale will be held at the same time.

The speakers Sunday were J. D. Gault in the morning, on "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof is death," and Bishop I. A. Smith at night on "Stewardships."

Enoch Hill

At seven o'clock Sunday evening Elder C. Ed. Miller paid us a visit in his new capacity as acting pastor in Zion. The speaker in the morning was Elder J. W. Metcalf.

Our Thanksgiving effort was quite a success in many ways. A substantial amount was collected at this time toward the reduction of our building debt.

Englewood

The women of this group will appreciate the patronage of the Saints and friends at their bazaar to be given December 16 in the dining hall at the Stone Church. A chicken dinner will be served in the evening for fifty cents. These sisters are trying to raise money to help build a much needed church in that community.

The Saints enjoyed two very excellent sermons Sunday, Brother Lyman Fike being the speaker in the morning and Brother N. Carmichael in the evening.

East Independence

No Thanksgiving services were held at this church this year, but the Saints had an opportunity to attend elsewhere.

The Willing Workers Club expect to have a booth at the bazaar held by the sisters of Englewood group December 16, the money to be applied on our new church.

Elder D. E. Tucker addressed the Saints Sunday morning, and Elder W. H. Kelley paid us a visit in the evening, giving a very fine sermon.

Quite a number of our people have had attacks of the flu, and Brother Arens was quite sick Sunday morning but is better now.

Radio Flashes

Marine Barracks, Paris Island, South Carolina.—My mother and I enjoyed your program of last evening (October 30), especially the reading, "The love of a man." It was the first occasion on which I have been able to pick up your station, and it provided quite a kick, as it was the 100th station I have picked up on my three-tube set.—Frank L. Tyree, Q. M. Sgt., U. S. S. Marine Corps.

Stratford, Oklahoma.—We picked up your station last night, and it was simply great. You came in loud and clear. Will say that it is the best we have picked up yet.—Mr. and Mrs. O. L. Nease.

Sidney, Manitoba, Canada.—A few lines of appreciation for the church service which was received very distinctly and much enjoyed. Sermon by Elder Lonzo Jones came in very strong on loud speaker. I got this church last winter and always enjoyed it. The sermon last Sunday was very good.—Ed. Willis.

Montague, Montana.—Greetings and thanks for your program last Sunday evening. The sermon by Reverend Tanner of Kansas City was especially enjoyed, since our town has no regular pastor. Our town is in a hole in the old earth and is surrounded by mountains, but your station came in strong. Hope to hear you again.—M. V. Chapin.

Union Furnace, Ohio.—We tuned in to-night (November 9) on our Crosley Trirdyn with loud speaker, and your services came in clear and loud. For some time we have hoped to get you, but as we both hold district offices we are hardly ever at home on Sunday. We are at some branch in the district nearly every Sunday trying to do what we can in God's work. We hope to hear you often now.—Elder and Mrs. Gard H. Kirkendall.

Will those who have lantern slides, stereopticons or parts, lenses, valuable negatives, etc., which we could use, donate such to the department?

Lenses and negatives will be kept in the big, fireproof vault. C. Edward Miller, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

A Trip Afield

(Concluded from last week.)

Leaving Los Angeles, I took train for San Francisco, arriving there Saturday morning, November 15. Soon we were aboard one of the numerous ferries that shuttle back and forth across the bay between San Francisco and Oakland; and a little later, in company with the district president, J. D. White, were on the road to Irvington.

The Northern California district officers had arranged for a rallying of the various branches at the reunion grounds in Irvington. The afternoon was devoted to planting trees, shrubs, and flowers; the day being known as district arbor day.

Districts that have permanent reunion grounds do well to make them so far as possible a community center for the district. In many instances they can be utilized for much more than the annual reunion period. Individual branches, or all of the branches of a given district, may well gather there for picnics and outings or for periodical meetings of religious nature.

At Irvington the tree planting served as a legitimate enterprise to draw the Saints together. The occasion was more or less ceremonial, with speeches preceding the planting. Brother Budd planted a lilac, Brother D. T. Williams a pepper tree, and I a fig tree. Various branches then planted trees or shrubs according to a general design. Having planted, like Paul, we well knew that we must leave Apollos to water; and both must wait upon God to give the increase.

The ceremony appealed to me as being both poetic and practical. I have always admired beautiful trees and have planted and cultivated numbers of them; and with some have been on intimate terms. In my boyhood there was one particularly big and fine maple tree in the planting about my home. Its branches served often as a retreat for play or meditation. Later, when I fell in love, as every young man does who is not unfortunate, I returned to inscribe two sets of initials upon its sturdy trunk.

What young man has not done the same? Trees seem at such times made for such confidences. Still later, returning after many years, with the early dreams happily realized, I found that the old tree had covered the initials over and taken the secret to its heart.

There was another tree of my own planting that grew to such proportions that its branches upheld the playhouse where my children had habitation on sunny days in the good town of Lamon. The lives of men are related to trees; and it is the emblem and figure of prosperity and peace that finally every man shall "sit under his own vine and fig tree." It was a new experience to me to plant a fig tree and to be assured that it might be expected to bear fruit within two years. I hope it may, so that if the Master passes that way he may have occasion to bless rather than to curse.

The man who plants trees and flowers blesses humanity. He may not know who will eat the fruit or admire the flowers. He is planting for the future. And the man who plants trees works with God to produce a living masterpiece. Planting, I was reminded of the soldier poet, Joyce Kilmer, killed in action in France, who left this fine poem, a favorite of mine, as a memorial:

I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree;
A tree whose hungry mouth is pressed
Against the earth's sweet flowing breast;
A tree that looks at God all day
And lifts her leafy arms to pray;
A tree that may in summer wear
A nest of robins in her hair;
Upon whose bosom snow has lain;
Who intimately lives with rain.
Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

It is a fascinating thing to work with life. Burbank spent twenty-five years developing the Shasta Daisy. Some work with flowers; some spend their time and money to develop cows or horses of the highest type and purest pedigree; some fancy cats and dogs. And that reminds me of a story. Years ago when the veteran missionary, T. W. Chatburn, was laboring in California, he met a man whose wife belonged to the church. The man himself was so opposed to the faith that he would not talk religion. He was a fancier of thoroughbred dogs. Brother Chatburn at once became much interested in dogs. The man responded and promised him a puppy. Brother Chatburn came often to see the puppy and became so intimate with the man that soon he was able to tell him the gospel story, and shortly baptized him. Presently the man said, "Brother Chatburn, the puppy is old enough now so that you can take it." Brother Chatburn replied in his characteristically blunt fashion, "Puppy, nothing! I don't want any puppy! You were the puppy that I was after." He had the man always in view. Some love to develop flowers; some to develop horses or birds or dogs; God loves to develop men and women. And knowing that his gospel is the greatest single agent to "enlarge the souls of men," as Alma expresses it, we can enter upon the proclamation of the gospel with zest and conviction—we are working with him in the development of life.

In the evening a banquet was served in the dining hall to something over one hundred. Elder Virgil Etzenhouser acted as toastmaster. The time spent in speeches and social intercourse was very enjoyable.

The next morning, being Sunday, prayer meeting convened with a large attendance. A good spirit was present, and the spirit of prophecy gave utterance to blessing and commandment.

The aged who had grown gray in service were comforted; the young men were referred to "as the trees of my forest," and were admonished to keep themselves strong and clean and fine; the young women of the church, "as the flowers of my garden," were told to keep themselves virtuous and lovely; the middle aged, burdened and sometimes oppressed by the labor of life, were encouraged. The Saints were told to lay aside their differences and take each other by the hand, that the Lord might say to them, as the Master did of old, "My peace I leave with you." All were admonished that when they returned to their several homes they should remember their prayers and devotions, attend church services, and seek to build up the work in their respective branches, and forget not to pay their tithes. They were told that if indeed they would do these things the Lord's peace would be with them in their homes.

At half past ten I was the speaker to a large and attentive audience. Ten of the thirteen branches of the district were represented, and I was told that some drove two hundred miles to be present. The responsibility to meet expectation evidenced by such an attendance is keenly felt; but our Great Helper never deserts us if we do not desert him; and on this occasion my heart was made glad again by the presence of the Spirit of power and light.

At this place I was pleased to meet Sister Stivers, at whose home near Irvington, my father, David H. Smith, sojourned as a missionary to California more than fifty years ago. She gave me one of his drawings that she had treasured all those years: a very fine pencil drawing of two heads, symbolical of joy and sorrow. At her home and in the hills about, he wrote some of the poems found in Hesperis, among them, I believe, the one beginning:

Behold the hills sweep down with round outline
As if their hearts were happy; see the sun
Shed forth broad bands of golden luster fine;
Hear the swift winds go singing as they run;
How glad the atmosphere of this fair day;
All nature silent stands as if to pray.

I think, too, that the splendid rampart of hills back of Irvington and Berkeley inspired a song which he set to music exactly suited to the words and often sang:

O come and let us clamber up the mountain side,
Where the shrill winds wander free;
Where the dancing little streamlets from the cleft rock glide
'Neath the shade of the mountain tree.

Behold the record of the earthquake shock,
In mighty grandeur, in the splintered rock—
How many ages do their seams declare,
How old and gray they are.

View the plains below, see the clouds above,
See the wide-spreading, verdure-covered, undulating field,
Where the cattle rove; see the eagle soar
Through the air, how gracefully he wheels;
While silence like a presence broods mournfully there.

Yet when we reach the summit what a boundless view
To the startled eye expands,
How far away above us floats the heaven's blue,
Where the sun in glory stands.

The tranquil waters of the distant bay
Reflect the sunlight with a golden play,
The silver river through the wilds astray
Pursues a winding way.

Note the countless chains of the mountain range
Sublime, innumerable, measureless, and strange.
Here the cold winds sweep, there the high clouds sleep
In the stillness of the upper deep;
While silence like a presence its hushed watch doth keep.

Following Sunday forenoon services luncheon was served to the Saints, and after considerable visiting among groups and much shaking of hands and many farewells the brethren and sisters returned to their respective homes. By invitation of Brother J. B. Carmichael, pastor of the church in Oakland, I spoke there in the evening. Brother A. J. Saxe, pastor of the San Francisco church, courteously discontinued their services for the evening and advised his people to meet with the Oakland people. So we had a union service with good attendance.

At the Oakland church I was pleased to meet Sister Earlita Inslee, my cousin, a daughter of Heman and Vida Smith. She now has two small daughters of her own, and the elder one, Nelda, occupied the time of my evening discourse composing two poems for my benefit. The sermon seemed not to interfere with her composition in the least; and no doubt she spent the time more profitably than some who sleep in church. So Sister Vida has a granddaughter who may sometime carry forward the literary enterprises of the esteemed author of "The old, old path."

My stay in Oakland was at the home of Brother and Sister John D. White, who spared no pains to make my visit pleasant. Incidentally the Oakland Saints had planned a surprise on Brother White, as Monday was his birthday, so quite unexpectedly I came in on another pleasant social gathering.

Monday was spent with Brother and Sister White and Brother Budd, viewing some of the sights in and about the Bay Cities. Not the least interesting was a visit to two of our great modern universities: the University of California at Berkeley and Stanford University at Palo Alto.

Stanford buildings are a unit, built to plan, in one style, almost in one piece. They are splendid in color, contour, and magnitude. Attendance at Stanford is limited, so that the buildings are not crowded. Indeed her immense courts are quiet, and as the buildings are in mission style, there is something of the dreamy peace of the old missions, enhanced by little groups of art students at various advantageous points, either in the vivid sunlight of the California day or in the purple shadows of the long colonnades, silently at their work with colors. The place suggests leisure—time for the arts and sciences, time for literature, time for reverie.

California University on the other hand has a great diversity of buildings. Back of the campus rise the splendid hills. The stadium is in a vast natural amphitheater. The natural setting is impressive beyond words to describe. Here there is a crowd, a throng, of students. The tide of student life flows strongly up and down the stairs and terraces, through the library, along the streets, from classroom to classroom. Here all is action; the suggestion is of intense preparation for the super-strenuous life.

At our great modern universities the material paraphernalia is on a vast and splendid scale, whether for study or for recreation. The stadium at Berkeley seats seventy-five thousand, and temporary seats for other thousands were in course of erection for the annual gridiron contest with Stanford—which proved to be a tie. It is all on a scale Homeric. It is Epic in proportions. These institutions mark our era and are typical as certain institutions were of Rome and others of Grecian culture. A later age may try vainly to picture and imagine the vivid, dynamic life that I saw at Berkeley and Palo Alto.

To me the human element was most interesting. I doubt not that in our universities are gathered the very pick and cream of the young manhood and womanhood of our present civilization. Tall, strong, handsome young men; lovely, strong-bodied young women. They are clear-eyed, keen-brained, self-poised, self-confident. I wonder if they fully appreciate the opportunities that are theirs. They should far outstrip Abraham Lincoln. But I fear that they will not. However, that is not a fair challenge, since a Lincoln is produced but once in the ages. Mechanical helps cannot make another. Only the dynamics of ideals and devotion can do that, with the good favor of God to give the right man at the right time and to lead his steps aright.

Observing this splendid tide of young life, I could but wish that in some way religion might be given its proper place there. For I am more and more convinced that religion alone can give a sure basis for such a philosophy of life as these young people should have to enlist the fine physical and mental equipment that they bring to life. Our universities should foster faith—not atheism. Peter was right when he made the acquisition of knowledge to follow after the culture of faith and virtue: "To your faith add virtue; and to your virtue knowledge."

I am glad that we have one institution of learning, Graceland College, which, though deficient in equipment and buildings, nevertheless can and does put a steadying hand on the shoulder of youth in the formative period of life; which to its youth says, "First, believe in God. And I will help you to acquire knowledge, even as commanded, by study and also by faith."

Tuesday forenoon Brother Saxe and his son drove me about San Francisco during the limited time at my disposal—to view the wonders of the city and the ocean. And in the afternoon, bidding the brethren good-by, I took the train for home.

During the past year and a half I have visited the Saints in many places, literally from Maine to California. I have found them in most places responsive, ready, and eager to go forward in church work. The noise of many voices may have confused them a bit; but they wish generally to know definitely what the church wants them to do and then to help do it. The eager response to the radio drive is an illustration. The more distant response to the auditorium drive is another illustration. When it is decided what shall be done, they will respond within reason.

And I can add my testimony to that of scores of others, apostles, seventies, high priests, that never before in my life have I felt so much of the presence and power of the Spirit in delivering the constructive gospel message as I have felt in recent months. Being duly thankful therefor, and trusting that the experience presages good things yet to be,

I remain yours in gospel bonds,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Instructing Delegates

Another district has indorsed supreme directional control and has instructed its delegates to General Conference to support the document on church government. It is quite probable that a definite effort will be made to have other districts do likewise. In view of this I offer the following:

We have not questioned, nor do we question, the right of district conference to pass resolutions when necessary, and even to instruct delegates under proper conditions. We have insisted, and do insist, that before a district conference indorses any resolution affecting the entire body, and particularly one with so many far-reaching possibilities as this resolution dealing with supreme directional control, that all the members of the district be apprised of the time, and place, and nature of the action to be taken, and that free and full discussion obtain where those for and against the proposition have ample opportunity to state their case. To instruct delegates where this has not obtained is abortive of democracy and subversive of the real purposes of representative government. We have advised and do advise proponents of the "Open Letter" even when they may be in the majority, to refrain from making any attempt to bind the delegates to any action.

The action of the districts which have indorsed supreme directional control has been taken with no evidence of any protest from the Presidency of the church. If they do disapprove, let us hear from them in no uncertain terms, and at the present, for not all are aware of the ground occupied by them in the past. In the meantime, let us bear in mind that President F. M. Smith at one time advised against this course, as follows:

That since it seems the matters in controversy are to be brought before General Conference, it will be well for the Saints and delegates to study further the law and weigh matters presented for their consideration, reserving final judgment until the conference meets to hear the cause, and most assuredly none will finally reach conclusions from the basis of unanswered reasoning or statements, publicly or privately made.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 71, No. 28, p. 651, July 9, 1924.

And President Elbert A. Smith at one time took a strong and definite position against instructing delegates. He said:

Districts sometimes instruct their delegates to vote in a certain way upon certain subjects that are expected to come before the General Conference. This custom seems to us to be open to adverse criticism. There may be questions of more or less local interest upon which the members of the district are well posted and concerning which they have all the light obtainable, and touching these questions it may be proper for a district to instruct its delegates; but as a rule we believe that it is better for the delegates to be left free to weigh every argument that may be presented at the General Conference and then to cast their delegate vote in the interests of right. Among the many reasons for pursuing such a course we suggest the following:

We believe in divine guidance. At any General Conference a revelation may be given to the church touching important questions; and there is no assurance that its provisions will be in line with the instruction which we may have given our delegation.

At the General Conference a broader discussion obtains than can be hoped for in the district or stake conferences; yet if we instruct our delegation we cut ourselves off from any benefit that might result therefrom. We thus narrow ourselves down to the information and light obtainable in our own district or stake.

It is often the case that only a few of the elders are present at the district conference. Possibly there is one of the number who is possessed of unusual eloquence and power in debate. He is sincere, but he presents only one side of the question and the other side has no proper presentation. We may instruct our delegates and at the General Conference they may discover that there is another side to the question with able representatives who have the facts back of them. In such an event our delegates are bound to vote against their convictions. We have delegated them to represent us, but they cannot properly represent us because they cannot make the change which we would make if we were there to vote in person.

It is poor encouragement to a man who goes before the conference prepared to plead any cause to realize that the delegates before him are pledged to vote in a certain way no matter what argument he may present; he finds his matter judged before it is heard and will form his own opinion of the wisdom of such judgment.

It may be urged that the delegates are sent to represent us, and should vote in harmony with our opinion; but what is our opinion? We cannot tell definitely what our opinion would be in case we did attend and hear both sides of the question properly represented in debate upon the floors of the General Conference. Possibly up to the hour of voting our opinion would be subject to modification by the arguments presented. It would seem then that if we select a man to represent us, we should give him all the rights which we would reserve for ourselves.

Having selected wise and competent men or women as our delegates, we must of necessity trust them to be the voice for us; why not also trust them to see, hear, and decide, unless as before stated the question be of local importance and so well understood in the district that no additional light may be received from the combined intelligence of such a concourse of representative men as is found at the General Conference?—Editorial in SAINTS' HERALD, February 20, 1907.

I believe wholeheartedly in the principle of common consent and, if it were possible, would be glad to have every individual member of this church vote on this question of supreme directional control. Inasmuch, however, as we are working under a representative form of government, it follows that a minority of the membership of any district assembled at a district conference, without previous notification to the membership that a certain action will be taken, and a free and full discussion of the matter obtaining, should not commit the members of the entire district to any proposition affecting general church law and procedure. District conference should not presume to bind the hands and fetter the minds of the delegates who are selected not only to represent the district as a whole, but likewise to conserve the interests of the entire church.

If supreme directional control is meritorious it can win without resorting to hasty and premature decisions. The fact that its proponents are endeavoring to commit district conferences and to bind delegates before General Conference suggests that they are afraid to leave the determination to the body having jurisdiction—the General Conference.

As members and officers we are morally obligated to abide the decision of the majority when such decision is arrived at after unhampered investigation, in keeping with the law, and where free expression has obtained. Decisions by delegates who have been instructed by a minority of their constituents and based on "unanswered reasoning or statements," and who are therefore not amenable to either revelation or reason, will not tend to unify the church.

Sensing the imminent danger to the church in this attempt to put over this document on supreme directional control without due regard for the rights of all, I wish once again to enter my emphatic protest against such procedure. I think it was the late W. W. Blair who aptly said, "Priestly dictation is priestcraft."

T. W. WILLIAMS.

The Christmas Offering

As the season advances toward the closing date, many individuals and schools are harassed by the fact that the goal set by them the first of the year has not been reached. They had expected to make a personal offering of such size as to indicate their love for the Christ and their interest in the promulgation of his gospel, but other things, some of them just mere luxuries, have received attention first, and now it seems difficult, almost impossible, to do as had been purposed.

Next year let us try reversing the order, and see if results will not indicate this to be the better way. Let us lay by the bulk of our offering in the first months of the year, and then we may find joy for many months in the thought of one piece of work accomplished beforehand. Also, December shopping days will be less burdened with cross purposes, and these are what take the joy from Christmas giving.

Authority in Church Government.—No. 1

According to the Scriptures, the church exists because God authorized it, not because man so willed it. The form of its government, also, is of divine origin and determination, though it depends on human cooperation. This cooperation with God is the work of the church, which is under his direction through an authorized ministry acting for and in his name. His purpose is to serve mankind, not at the dictation of man or to gratify human notions, but for the development of the soul, the benefits derived being in proportion to man's obedience to his will.

The divine commission, and not human preference, qualifies God's ministry. This is clearly taught in the statement that Jesus "taught them as one having authority from God, and not as having authority from the scribes." (Matthew 7: 37, Inspired Version.) It is also plainly stated in his words to the apostles: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you," and in the words of John (3: 34): "For he whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God."

The Significance of Priesthood

When sending men with authority to represent him, God distinguished this authority by the term priesthood. To further distinguish the character and scope of priesthood activities, it was classified under two headings or names, the Melchisedec or greater, and the Aaronic or lesser priesthood. It is through priesthood that the authority of God is exercised in his church. (Genesis 6: 5-7, Inspired Version; Doctrine and Covenants 104: 18.) Of the Melchisedec priesthood the Lord states:

And this greater priesthood administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God. Therefore, in the ordinances thereof the power of godliness is manifest; and without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh, etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 3.

The keys of the kingdom are of great importance, for they are given to those holding presiding authority, the greatness of which was revealed when it was conferred on Peter by Jesus, who said:

And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven.—Matthew 16: 19.

When through Joseph Smith, jr., the Lord restored his gospel and church, he announced that the keys had been given to Joseph, "which belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood." (Doctrine and Covenants 80: 1.) In 1830 the promise was made that if obedient, Zion should flourish and Israel should be saved, "And by the keys which I have given shall they be led, and no more be confounded at all." (Doctrine and Covenants 34: 6.) The manner in which the people should be led, so as to realize this great promise, was declared by the Lord as follows:

Behold, I say unto you, the redemption of Zion must needs come by power; therefore I will raise up unto my people a man, who shall lead them like as Moses led the children of Israel, for ye are the children of Israel, and of the seed of Abraham; and ye must needs be led out of bondage by power, and with a stretched out arm.—Doctrine and Covenants 100: 3.

The authority of Moses, as the authorized messenger of God and leader of the Hebrews, was not primarily derived from the people; nor was that of Joseph Smith so derived, but was from God. We are told that Moses taught the Israelites in the wilderness, and "sought diligently to sanctify his people that they might behold the face of God; but they hardened their hearts," which so kindled the wrath of God against them that they could not enter his rest:

Therefore he took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued, etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4.

This history proves that the authority of the holy priesthood may be taken from the midst of a people who refuse their support, the common consent which God asks of his people in this respect. So with the law of God, his people are asked to receive and adhere to it, but the manner of its administration is by priesthood authority, the authority of God. The importance of priesthood authority is taught in the revelations given to the church and in the acts of General Conference, its highest collective expression being in the General Assembly, to which alone appeal may be made from any unanimous quorum decision of the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, as a revelation on priesthood, given March, 1835, states:

And in case that any decision of these quorums is made in unrighteousness, it may be brought before a general assembly of the several quorums which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church, otherwise there can be no appeal from their decision.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

As defined by Joseph Smith and Thomas W. Smith in 1876, adopted by the church, and with clarified phrasing readopted in 1904 by General Conference (Resolution 554), it states:

A General Assembly of the authorities of the church is a convocation of the officers in the church, met as quorums, for deliberative purposes. This is the highest and only authoritative body known to the church as an Assembly.

It was by a General Assembly that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants was first adopted and made binding upon the church, and in 1879, 1880, 1887, 1891, and 1894, the authority of a General Assembly was repeatedly recognized by the General Conference. From the beginning the government of the church has been through priesthood, and every church officer, from president to deacon, constituting the authorities in every department fundamental to its existence, must receive ordination to the priesthood as divinely appointed, in order that the authority of their office may be vested in them.

Grades of Priesthood Authority

For general and local convenience the work of the church is arranged in various departments, each with expressly outlined functions. To facilitate church activities, missions, stakes, districts, and branches are provided, and men holding various grades of authority in the priesthood are chosen and authorized to perform specified labors for the church. None of these officers has the right to disregard the advice and direction of a higher church official appointed to supervise his labors. These grades of authority are in accordance with the character and scope of the office held, and are further distinguished by the particular priesthood to which the office inures. Of the leading quorums a revelation declares:

The quorums in respect to authority are designed to take precedence in office as follows: The presidency, the twelve, the seventy in all meetings and gatherings of the membership, where no previous organization has been effected.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9.

After organization has been effected and the proper officers have been installed, they are to be recognized according to the rank of each officer, "the standing ministry in their order," as follows:

In the standing ministry, the presidency, second, the high priests; third, the elders, then priests, teachers, and deacons in their order.—Ibid.

The government of the church, and the rank of its officers, has been set forth in its Articles of Incorporation, as adopted in 1872 under the laws of Illinois, and readopted in 1891 under the laws of Iowa. As a corporate body, its government and administrative work are limited by these Articles, prepared by Joseph Smith and others, which declare:

The church government consists:

First.—Of a First Presidency, consisting of a president and two counselors.

Second.—A Quorum of Twelve, (a traveling high council).

Third.—A "Standing High Council" of the church; and at each stake a similar subordinate standing high council, consisting of twelve chosen for that purpose.

Fourth.—A High Priests' Quorum.

Fifth.—One or more Quorums of Seventy, not exceeding seven.

Sixth.—Quorums of Elders.

Seventh.—Bishops, consisting of a Presiding Bishop, and associate or local bishops—said bishops having temporal jurisdiction subject to the general direction of the church, and higher church authorities.

Eighth.—Quorums of Priests.

Ninth.—Quorums of Teachers.

Tenth.—Quorums of Deacons. (See Church History, vol. 3, pp. 709-713.)

It will be seen that in these Articles the temporal jurisdiction of the bishops is placed in the seventh rank, and is subject to "higher church authorities." The reason for this is clear when it is remembered that the duties of the office belong to the Aaronic priesthood (Doctrine and Covenants 68:2), and may be claimed by the firstborn son of a literal descendant of Aaron. Otherwise the office is to be occupied by a high priest, who may officiate in all the "lesser offices" in the church, provided he is appointed by the Presidency of the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104:32-35.)

Primary Presiding Duty of Bishops

It should also be noted that the Presiding Bishop does not have temporal jurisdiction alone, but this responsibility is shared by all the "associate or local bishops." The term Presiding Bishop may be misunderstood by some in this connection, as it has been loosely applied at times in ways that the revelations of God do not indicate. The presiding rights of the Bishop arise primarily from the fact that the Bishop holds the right of presiding over the Aaronic priesthood. This is clearly stated in a revelation given to the church as early as 1831, as follows:

There remaineth hereafter in the due time of the Lord, other bishops to be set apart unto the church to minister even according to the first; wherefore they shall be high priests who are worthy, and they shall be appointed by the first presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood, except they be literal descendants of Aaron, and if they be literal descendants of Aaron, they have a legal right to the bishopric, if they are the firstborn among the sons of Aaron; for the firstborn holds the right of the presidency over this priesthood, and the keys or authority of the same.—Doctrine and Covenants 68:2.

This presiding right of the bishop, therefore, is held by virtue of office when a high priest is chosen for that work, and while a bishop might also preside over an assembly of bishops when met to consider their temporal work as an executive body, and the Order under a "presiding head" is provided for, his presiding capacity in a fundamental sense would rest upon the fact that these men were acting in an office of the Aaronic priesthood. This principle is clearly declared in the revelation just quoted, and in a later one, as follows:

No man has a legal right to this office, to hold the keys of this priesthood, except he be a literal descendant and the firstborn of Aaron; but as a high priest of the Melchisedec priesthood has authority to officiate in all the lesser offices, he may officiate in the office of bishop when no literal descendant of Aaron can be found; provided he is called and set apart, and ordained unto this power under the hands of the first presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood.—Doctrine and Covenants 68:2; 104:8.

An Appendage to the Greater Priesthood

As may be seen, these revelations already mentioned show very plainly that the temporal work for which the Bishop is responsible is the duty of a lesser office which is an appendage to the greater office of the Melchisedec order, hence is subordinate to the greater authority vested in the presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood, and is dependent upon it; in fact, it is called an "appendage" to it:

Why it is called the lesser priesthood is, because it is an appendage to the greater, or the Melchisedec priesthood, and has power in administering outward ordinances. The bishopric is the presidency of this priesthood, and holds the keys or authority of the same.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:8.

It is consonant with both the divine law and logic that the authority of the lesser is inferior to that of the greater so far as it relates to appointive offices. This is true in the present instance also, for the presiding rights of the one holding the presidency of the Aaronic priesthood are not outside of the rights of the presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood. This will be more fully considered at a later time. It may be well to note, however, that if the presidency of the Aaronic priesthood excluded the right of the presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood from administering in the duties of its office, such an assumption of power would be in defiance of the word of the Lord to the church, which states:

The presidency of the high priesthood, after the order of Melchisedec, have a right to officiate in all the offices in the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:4.

These and other revelations prove indisputably that not only are there grades of authority in the church with respect to all of its offices, but that the lesser is subject to the direction of the greater. This important truth makes very significant the words of John the Baptist to Joseph Smith when the latter was ordained to the Aaronic priesthood, for he stated that he "acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the Melchisedec priesthood." (See Church History, vol. 1, p. 36.)

The Facts as Summarized

It will be readily seen that as outlined in the revelations given to the church, a working harmony should exist in all of its departments, each officer ranking in accordance with a clearly stated line of precedence, the observance of which must result in an effective administration of its affairs when all intelligently cooperate to the desired ends sought under wise leadership. The principles and factors here shown may be summarized in part as follows:

1. The word of the Lord shows that the church belongs to God, and that its government is to be administered by the priesthood which he has authorized, and in accordance with his instructions.
2. That this priesthood is classified under two divisions, of which one is the greater and the other the lesser, the lesser being an appendage to the greater and subject to its authority.
3. That the keys of the kingdom, by which the church is to be led, to prevent being confounded, belong always unto the presidency of the high priesthood.
4. That failure to support the administration and leadership thus divinely provided for works disastrously to the body, of which the Lord has given us examples and warnings.
5. That the General Assembly, which consists of the officers of the church, met as quorums, is the highest authority in the church which may render decisions for its government.
6. That the rank of every officer of the church, including its departments, is pointed out in the law, the presidency being first and taking precedence over all, the other officers ranking in subordinate positions, the lower being subject to the higher according to the jurisdictions concerned.
7. That authority over every office in the church, and the right to administer in all offices of the church, is held by the First Presidency.
8. That the office of bishop is a presiding office belonging to the firstborn of the descendants of Aaron, and is in the Aaronic priesthood, but that the presidency have power to appoint high priests to that office, which entitles them to preside over the Aaronic priesthood and exercise temporal jurisdiction, subject to higher church authorities.

Inasmuch as this church is founded upon the word of God, it behooves us to consider our subject prayerfully, reverently, and with unbiased minds. It is in this spirit that I have sought to present these divine principles as God has revealed them to the church. To publicly charge others with questionable intentions or behavior is an act of disobedience to the law of God, and may mislead some who suppose such accusations cannot be refuted. I do not desire to "garnish the sepulcher" of the dead, or to stone the living, and nothing here stated is of that intent. To promote unity and love requires understanding—but it requires, more than all, that kind spirit which was in Christ.

Equipment Arriving for 1000-Watt Station

Almost daily new parts of apparatus are being received at K F I X for the new powerful church radio-casting station. Vacuum tubes for the new broadcaster have arrived, and it may be of interest to our readers to know that they are the largest tubes manufactured for broadcasting purposes. The word largest is perhaps misleading, because they are of the water-cooled type, and quite small in physical dimensions, but they are very powerful.

The plate voltage batteries—1,200 cells—have been received of Willard Storage Battery Company, Cleveland, Ohio. Some idea of the size of the plate battery may be obtained from the shipping weight—nearly 8,000 pounds. The normal voltage of this battery is 2,400, which will make possible a power output from the tubes of slightly over 1,000 watts. The plate storage battery room has been built to eventually accommodate sufficient batteries to give a power output of over 2,000 watts.

The 150-foot steel towers are now up full height, but at this writing there is yet some work to be done on them. When completed they are to receive another coat of paint. Unfavorable weather conditions have delayed the completion of the towers, but it is believed that the new antenna can be completed before Christmas.

Brother Alfred Curtis, foreman of the builders, has made splendid progress with his work. He and his men are putting finishing touches on the new building, which is nearly ready for the painters.

The generous response to the call for funds to build the new 1000-watt station now practically assures the completion of this work without further delay. Before the end of this month the radio committee which conducted the campaign for funds will doubtless be in position to publish a complete report of the drive.

Some Changes in the Concept of Zion

Progress Through Purposeful Social Action

Back of our modern usage of the term Zion lie countless ages of struggle for and a searching after an ideal state of society. This endless yearning has been and still is a most powerful agent of progress in all the arts of civilization. To him who sees in human history a golden thread of purposeful behavior, the belief in a great super-power is a genuine delight, and serves to anchor one's hopes in the final triumph of order and truth.

Civilizations based upon mere aristocracy of birth, mere privilege, or mere property-holding have come and gone, and as man has toiled on towards the ideal of truth he has sensed the increase in his mental and physical power and the extension of his spiritual vision. Not that this movement from slavery and oppression to organized cooperation has been accomplished without social friction. Indeed, there have been gigantic losses. But on the whole these losses, whether in the form of revolution, riot, or apostasy, have been indicative of progress toward purposeful social action.

Mutually Interacting Influences

It is most interesting to trace in our own organization the influence of changes in the civilization of our day, and to suggest, if we may venture to be so bold, that our beliefs and practices have been positive modifying influences impinging upon a more or less plastic social mind. This latter point we may choose to consider at length at some more opportune time. It is sufficient to mention here, however, that those who have had occasion to go through the literature of social theory and social reform have become fully aware that thinking men and women have known far more about our theories than had at first been suspected.

With reference to the influence of outside social changes and processes upon our policies and beliefs, we ought to find that consideration of them will help us to get a perspective that should be useful in projecting our course for the future.

The Zion Concept of the 30's

In the early days of the organization of the church, Zion implied a state of society which was unique in its exclusiveness. The tendency to withdraw from the world and rear a new Utopia in harmony with the ideals of the faith, was a most powerful appeal to those who looked forward to the transition from sin and worldliness to social purity and righteousness. How brilliant were the hopes of the early Saints as they trekked across the virgin prairies to the land of Missouri, that great fertile area where God's empire was to be carved out as an ensign to the nations of the earth.

This idea of Zion as a great frontier empire, while it was unique, was certainly not original with us. The historical background of Europe is replete with such social experiments. Moreover, from 1820 to 1840 there were repeated attempts to establish ideal communities here in America. Indeed, with the opening up of this great new commonwealth, it was regarded as the most fertile field for the planting of Utopias. Brook Farm, Icaria, New Harmony, and others are examples familiar to most students of social reform.

Watchful Waiting Policy of the Early Reorganization

With the reorganization of the church in the 60's the isolationist idea was not so definitely marked in the deliberative assemblies, nor in the publications of the church. This may be due either to the fact that the leaders of the church were less concerned with this aspect of the gospel program or were determined to be much more cautious and diplomatic in developing the Zion policies than their predecessors had been during the 30's. When the matter was suggested to the late Joseph Smith he almost invariably advised extreme caution, and at times even delay. The policy from 1860 to 1890 may be generally characterized as one of "watchful waiting."

That there was not a diminution in the ardor of the people is one of the remarkable features of this period. With silent petitions ascending from the souls of the people came reserve strength held in leash waiting for a powerful leadership to direct the great offensive; waiting for a dynamic restatement of aims and purposes in terms of modern social experience.

The Zion Concept at the Opening of the Century

At the opening of the new century, therefore, still another concept of Zion begins to take form. Having passed through the dark and cloudy period of the interregnum following the fall of Nauvoo and the exodus to the West, and having experienced the slow, tedious process of gathering up the recalcitrant fragments of the old organization and molding them into a new structure, the pioneers of the Reorganization gave way before the inevitable advance of time, and their places were taken by the younger generation, who, while they had been spared many of the hardships and persecutions so common in the early day, were nevertheless inspired by the courageous defenses of their forbears. The new generation took up the work with a determination to preserve inviolate the principles already established and to forge into being a dynamic social structure which would radiate to the world the divine purposes of God with respect to man in his higher levels of conduct.

But while the memory of pioneer days was fresh in the minds of the new generation, there was also surrounding them a world vastly different from the environment in which the Reorganization developed. Differences began to assert themselves. At first not serious, to be sure, but differences, nevertheless, which became more ominous as time passed.

Original Purposes but Changed Methods

The social transition from one generation to another has always been difficult, because the new looks forward to its golden age which lies in the future, while the old tends to remember its golden age which lies in the past. Not that there were or are real differences in fundamental principles and purposes, but different statements of concepts sometimes make fancied differences seem real and vital. Without doubt there have been real differences in the methods employed in these two epochs. On general principles there should be changes in methods. One would scarcely plow to-day with a wooden moldboard and a pair of oxen, or weave a floor covering after the manner employed by the Navajo Indians. This is not to imply that present-day methods are superior to those in vogue fifty years ago, but it does imply that if this is not the case, those who are responsible for the methods now used in the prosecution of our modern Zion program have certainly not taken advantage of the accumulated experience of their forbears, much less having added to the heritage bequeathed to them.

We have, therefore, confronting us the original purpose of the gospel, namely, the salvation of man, both body and soul. To achieve this purpose it is mandatory that our prevailing forms of social organization shall be recast so as to facilitate a functional expression which will reflect the attributes of the kingdom of God. When, in the minds of some serious-minded people we have failed to give evidence of the efficacy of the gospel in our organized social endeavor, is it likely that they will become enthusiastic when we urge an increase in the number of missionaries for purposes of proselytizing? Why strive for mere increases of our membership until those already "in the fold" have demonstrated the practicability of the principles of the gospel in making the kingdom of God not only a remote possibility, but an imminent probability? How can an honest man find it in his heart to chide his brother who prefers to have a dynamic religion of this type rather than a functionless worship of ritualism?

The Analysis of Costs

Each one of us will do well to analyze carefully and prayerfully our own concept of Zion, and the methods by which it is to be established, for without this searching analysis we shall be unable to make the decisions that we shall soon be called upon to make. There ought to be a more fitting reward than martyrdom for the man whose vision inspires him to urge all men to move toward higher levels of social achievement. But if the results justify the means, then none of us should be unhappy in martyrdom—only regret that the lesson demands such excessive costs.

Educational Problems Involved in Establishing Zion.—No. 5.

BY A. MAX CARMICHAEL

In our last article we described how youth soon begins to find different standards of morality and different expressions of spirituality existing in the world. To adjust himself to these differing standards, we suggested that there were two general courses for him to pursue. We described one of those courses. It was that he may accept these differences as inevitable, and attempt to adjust his own standard of action to them with the least amount of effort possible, living now one code, now another, depending upon which group he is with. These varying codes all take their turn in manipulating him. He is at their mercy. He either becomes apathetic or disgusted.

The Child May Attempt to Revise Existing Standards

The other course is not to take these varying standards as a matter of course, not to do what he is told to do by those under whose influence he is at a given moment, and at the next moment when he is under some one else's influence to do as they say, without any reflection of his own as to what is the standard he should accept, just because he is ignorant of what he should do, or has become habituated to accept upon authority his moral standards and theological beliefs, or wishes to please those with whom he is at a given moment. Inspired by some song, by the hush of some prayer meeting, by the clash of individual wills or of some individual will and social custom, by the intelligent perception of injustice and hate perpetuated by some socially revered custom, youth determines to take some initiative in attacking the varying standards, to think about them, to study them, to gather evidence to help him determine which is the best, to gather this evidence from history and contemporaneous life, to note the effect of each standard upon the group observing it, to learn from each group practicing the various standards their reasons for doing so; to endeavor to understand himself, his innate motives, and their relationship to his physical and social environment and to possible standards, to choose tentatively from among the standards that which he thinks best for himself, to try out such a standard in his own life and to put it into effect, to keep his mind open for fresh evidence which will help him to know whether he should modify his standard, or reject it entirely for another, or intensify his observance of it.

There is no sharp dividing line between the two courses of action with which one may respond to varying standards. Both courses may operate at one and the same time. Youth may attack the difference in standards with a less or greater degree of interest. Even while he does attack the difference, apathy and resignedness may be characteristic of the greater part of his activity. Much of his activity under the second course is diluted by a lot of apathy. Intense interest may be exhibited up to a certain point in the process, and then die out. The illustrations which we shall give will exhibit this mixture of the two courses. With some standards youth may show intense interest in arriving at the best; but with other standards, the same youth may show his indifference. In fact all four methods of the child finding his moral and spiritual life which we have been describing can be operative in the same time and in the same individual, with varying amounts of each method being relied upon with the standards for different aspects of life. Our third method is but an adaptation of methods one and two applied when the child meets varying standards. The fourth method, which we are describing in this article, is therefore set off against the other three, its distinguishing feature being that the child takes the initiative in determining what shall be his standard.

Not only may the child's initiative and attack be diluted with indifference, but also characterized with lack of ability. The child may be ignorant of the technique of attack. He may begin to attempt it long before he knows how; in fact he does. The youth has to learn to use this method. This is the only method of the four we have so far described that youth has to learn to do. The other three come naturally. They amount to mere absorption. But in this method the youth has to take some initiative. He has to make some effort. It is an activity at which he is a novice, and he may or may not become skillful. With some parts of the process as we delineated it above, he may be more skillful than with others. He must learn to evaluate differing standards, and to formulate those for himself. Consequently it is very likely that the decisions that the child or youth makes and tries out in his life are not always what we adults would like; his decisions are not always in accord with the principles of Christianity, nor even with the rules of conventional statutory ethics; let alone in accord with those principles which will help to bring about a reconstructed society, a Zion. Even we adults are not perfect at the process; far from it. Adults do not always make the right decisions. This is evidenced by the existence of varying standards. On the other hand, youth has often been marvelously successful in arriving at right conclusions even when the morality of the masses has been against him. He has at times, indeed, discovered the entirely new standard for which the world has been longing, and needing for a long time. Our spiritual history is full of such. We shall choose our illustrations indiscriminately as to whether we agree with the results of the process or not.

It may be, too, that we shall find this method essentially and inherently inadequate just because it is done by human and finite beings. The very fact that we are finite may prevent us from being perfect in our decision of what is the best standard on all occasions. It may be that our decisions need to be supplemented by supernatural transcendental revelation. This question will come in for a thorough discussion later.

Youth Is Revaluing

Apparently youth at the present time is indulging in the use of this fourth method in absorbing the morals of the race and arriving at his own, more than the immediate previous generation of youth. We say apparently because we are not sure that we have the evidence sufficient to compare the activity of the present generation of youth of the world with previous generations. But it is probably true that in the history of the world there have been waves of larger use of this method of forming morality and spirituality. Some generations of youth have used it more than previous or succeeding generations. The present tendency of youth to attack, inspect, and criticize present standards, formulate new ones, experiment with the new values formed, and bring about a self-reconstruction of themselves and indeed of society is called the Youth Movement.

We will illustrate this method of youth attaining his spirituality copiously in order to get a thorough appreciation of it. As the reader reads each illustration, we ask him to pick out the essential elements of the process, the elements which seem to hinder or promote it. After he has read all the illustrations, let him pick out the elements which seem to be more or less common to all the illustrations, and endeavor to relate them to the organic nature of the process or method.

We Grow Into This Revaluing Process

The child does not suddenly come to use this method towards these differences, any more than he suddenly discovers these differences. It is all a gradual and imperceptible growth. This method of attacking the different values and making a choice among them is indulged in as early as the child notices the different values which he may choose. Even the six-week-old baby begins to form values of his own. After he has lain for a tiring while in a certain position, his very bodily nausea will bring a feeling of dissatisfaction. He wants something. He is of course not conscious that he wants something. But a parent turns him over as a result of his cry. He feels now a satisfaction. This soon becomes a habit, this crying to get a change of position. His own standards, however so simple, are being formed, and he is unconsciously learning to manipulate the standards of his mother to get his own standards experienced.

Or a little later his own faculties for taste discrimination help him to form the value of preferring the jam to the bread on which the jam is spread. He manipulates the situation by licking the jam off the bread and leaving the bread. But here he might find a parent who has a different standard which the parent wishes to impress upon his nature. A struggle ensues. The struggle may be a small item in the experience of the parent, and he, knowing the laws of moral growth, may be easily the victor; but nevertheless, this event has large effect upon the moral growth of the child. He has had experience of wanting, of desiring, or valuing a certain thing, jam, above bread; he has had an experience of manipulating his environment to obtain the satisfaction of the value. This manipulation has involved struggle, it has involved choice, it has involved thinking.

Some one might object that our two illustrations have not been of a moral nature. It is true that the two illustrations are of wants chosen upon the level of instinct, innate bodily tendencies. But they are of moral significance just the same. Of course, they do not involve the moral choices that an adolescent has to make regarding sex practices; but they are moral and are developing in the child the power to form individual values and desires; to choose those he wants, to inspect, criticize, and analyze his wants and the ways to satisfy them. He is getting experience in struggling to obtain his values, attaining them, and habituating them if found satisfactory, and reconstructing them if found unsatisfactory in the end.

But let us take other illustrations: The five-year-old child forms the value of not wanting to take a nap in the afternoon, in opposition to his mother's wishes. He begins to inspect and choose ways of obtaining his value. He tells mother that Mrs. So-and-so does not ask her little girl to take a nap, and he is as big as Mrs. So-and-so's little girl. He promises mother that he won't cry around supper time, and that he will be willing to go to bed earlier, and won't cry when his mother asks him to go to bed earlier. Let us presume for the sake of illustrating our point that the mother consents to the contention. The boy has had an experience of reforming his own conduct; he has had an experience of self-reconstruction. He has had an experience of self-criticism, and even more, of criticizing the standard which his mother set for him; an actual experience of criticizing the standards of the social world about him, the standards of the family. More than reconstructing himself, he has reconstructed the family. But most important of all, he has had an opportunity of discovering for himself and for his family a new standard. This discovery has come about partly by virtue of an innate desire to live, to see life, and not to sleep (every child loves every waking hour, sleep seems a snapping off of life), and partly by experiencing the life of another child who does not take a nap in the afternoon. We want the reader to take notice of the two sources of his discovery. They will come up again and again in our discussion, directly and indirectly. Partly innate desire, and partly his social experiencing, are the causes of his discovery of new standards of conduct.

Let us further suppose that after going to bed early for two or three nights the boy finds that he is missing the fun which he had been having with daddy in the evening. Every evening previous to his decision not to take a nap in the afternoon and to go to bed extra early in the evening, he and dad had been having a play period. He now asks mamma to permit him to stay up to have his play with dad. But mother says that this cannot be done unless he shall take his nap in the afternoon. A choice of satisfactions or values is necessary. Again must he analyze, and criticize these values. Let us presume that he decides in favor of going back to a nap in the afternoon in order to get his play period with daddy. Here we again have a discovery of values and a reformation of conduct. Thus we have repetition of the process. This process will go on all through life, with increasing complexity and in increasing frequency. The process involves the forming of wants and values on the level of instincts and innate human nature, and as a result of increased experience; inspection, analysis, criticism of such wants and values, and of the means of attaining them; the ever formulation of new wants and desires; choosing from among them; purposing and struggling to attain these wants; experiencing in attaining or being defeated; repetition of the process ad infinitum; all in a word, self-reconstruction.

Let us illustrate with the child who when he notices that one parent is really objecting to the punishment that the other parent is inflicting upon him, plays off by argument, pleas, or strategy, one parent's opinion against the other's to his own immediate advantage of escaping the punishment. In other words, he gets the parents disagreeing one with the other, instead of cooperating, and he, instead of cooperating with either, works as an individual, for his own individual interests. He is but copying the parents. As they do not go to the bottom of forming standards of their conduct in a cooperative style, and with a view of thoroughly determining their conduct, so he works individually, and not for a full purpose of formulating standards for the larger and better ends in life. His own end is immediate escape from punishment, not a determination of rational standards of conduct for future life.

Another illustration: When mother suspects Johnnie of smoking when he is out with the fellows, and she presents him with condemnatory evidence, he may attempt to lie about the matter. Here is an endeavor to manipulate mother's faith in him for immediate ends, not the worth-while ends. Or when mother does not want him to play football, and his companions at high school do want him to play, instead of taking all the evidence in hand himself to think out a good conclusion, instead of considering all the consequences of heeding mother, or heeding the wishes of the crowd, he may consider but part of them and make his decision accordingly. The habit of making decisions between standards of conduct, the habit of manipulating these standards in determining what one should do in a dilemma without the child, or youth, or adult, honestly considering all the consequences, is all too often acquired. We are quite prone to get into the habit of considering only part of the evidence, only part of the matter that is relevant to the best decision. As another illustration of this, notice how youth when he finds that churches differ on the propriety of dancing, will in his argument play off one authority against the other, and without taking into consideration all the consequences of dancing, decide that he will dance, since the spiritual authorities cannot agree. His decision is made for the moment only. He may even decide to join the church that permits dancing, or that church which permits dancing may be able the better to retain the loyalty of its young people, and so dominate the morals of the community.

An example from adult life of this inadequate thinking about differences of standards and formulation of standards for oneself is to be found in our own church. Some claim that because there has been some differences between the leading quorums of the church, some church members have decided that they will not take the HERALD, or buy church books, or pay their tithing, or even go to church. Probably this illustration is not very far from an illustration of the first course which we described in the previous article, that of taking the course of least resistance without any thinking. However, these adults have probably done a little rationalizing. Some of my readers may disagree with me in calling this inadequate thinking, and say that it is about the only conclusion to which a church member could come. The case need not be argued, but my readers' disagreement with me will show that this method of attacking differences of standard with some thinking does not always bring all of us to the same conclusions. Consequently each fellow is apt to think that the other fellow did not think adequately. Either one or both are wrong. Hence it serves to illustrate our point here that this method does not bring always the right conclusions, which God, or Christianity, in its ideal would demand.

Let us consider the illustration of the youth who has been having a double standard regarding smoking; not smoking at home, but smoking among the fellows and attempting to keep it secret from his mother. This the reader will remember is an illustration of the youth who has followed the first course with regard to differences in standards of morality, which we described in the previous article. He has taken the course of least resistance, and in accordance with his innate tendency to accept authority and to act so as to bring the commendation of those with whom he is associating. When such a youth begins to turn to the second course, the one being described in this article, his reflections bring him to a feeling of dissatisfaction at his double standard. There is also an innate tendency in a person to be unified in his personality, and the thing that unified a personality is a single standard of values. He feels like taking steps to end this double existence. He will plan then to let the evidence seep in upon mother that he is smoking. He is well aware of the "storm" that will ensue, but he has steeled himself against that, for the sake of unifying his standard of morality. As soon as mother knows about it, the boy feels that his standard is single, at least more so than it was. The boy has attacked the double standard and manipulated it so as to reconstruct his own standard. Some will say the boy is better, and some worse. The writer is inclined to honor the boy for his endeavor to unify himself, even though his unification be around a mistaken value. Of course we might wish his unification had been made around a refusal to smoke entirely; but the double standard involving the error is not any worse if as bad as a single standard involving the error.

Present Revaluing Movements Among Modern Youth

It may be well to consider some illustrations of the so-called Youth Movement of the world. As we said above, the youth of the present generation seems to be attacking standards of action upon his own initiative with unusual avidity. Before noting any of these illustrations, let us fully understand what the Youth Movement is. It is not a well-organized, concerted move. It is the general unrest of youth and his revolt against prevailing standards. Their conclusions are often diametrically opposed to each other, even in the same country. For instance, in Germany the activities and conclusions of the Protestant and Semitic young people are often antagonistic. So we can expect all kinds of conclusions and results. For the present, let us restrict our illustrations to one country only. We will take China.

We will quote from Timothy Tingfang Lew, dean of the Faculty of Theology in Yen Ching University, Peking, in his China To-day, pages 21-39: "First, its [Youth Movement] leaders are working for a thorough reform of the Chinese written language. . . . Second, the movement has been working hard in introducing the literature of foreign nations. . . . Third, the movement has started the systematic research of the Chinese civilization of the past. . . . Canonical writings of ancient sages, writings which have been held in awe and reverence to be memorized and to be revered and not to be criticized or scrutinized, are now being put through the rigid test of higher and lower criticism. . . . Fourth, the movement has encouraged the organization of groups and societies, local and national, to study the various problems in a democratic and open way." He further says, "Third, it has inaugurated a nationwide tendency to progress. The movement has made people acquire a wholesome dissatisfaction with existing conditions. . . . Fifth, and what is most important of all, it is leading people on to search for a new philosophy of life. The movement has again and again brought people back to the fundamental question, 'What is life?' and 'What is the philosophy of life?'" We quote further from Tsang Yi, in his article, "The Chinese students' patriotic movement of 1919," in The Student World, of January, 1922: "The students' movement had its direct cause in the diplomatic failure of China at the Paris Conference to secure the immediate return of Shantung to China by Japan. . . . In order to insist upon the punishment of the three traitors who had been active in selling out China's rights, namely, Tsao Ju Ling, then Minister of Communications, Chang Chung Hsiang, ex-Chinese Minister to Japan, and Lu Chung Yu, then superintendent of the Government Mint, the students' movement was organized early in 1919. . . . They decided to organize on May 4 a united demonstration composed of the students of various colleges and middle schools in Peking. At one o'clock on that day the students of a great many schools met at Tien an Men (the Gate of Heavenly Peace) where they set up white flags bearing the words, 'We demand the abrogation of the twenty-one demands,' 'Return us Kiaochow,' 'I would rather be killed than lose Kiaochow,' etc. They then proceeded to the residence of Tsao Ju Ling, where they found Chang Chung Hsiang. After an altercation, they proceeded to beat Hsiang, while Ling crept over the wall and escaped."

The Chinese Recorder of August, 1923, page 435, tells us that following were some of the recommendations passed at a Students' Summer Conference, July 28, 1923, held at Kiangnan College. "(1) Family democracy should be cherished; children should be consulted with regard to domestic management. (2) Full freedom of choice of life partner should be granted; young men and women should take more initiative with regard to their own marriage, acting with the approval of their parents if possible. (6) The principle of the monogamous family should be embodied in a national law." To anyone who knows China, these resolutions are revolutionary. Timothy Lew further says, "This movement promises the possibility of increasing popular support to Christian work. . . . One can thus within a safe limit prophesy that, if this movement should go on without wavering from its social principle, it will give indirect and even direct support to genuine Christian work. . . . Christian theology may not attract the students, but Christian expressions of social service have furnished a common ground upon which all forces can unite."

The following questions were among those sent in by Chinese students to speakers who were touring certain colleges after the World's Student Christian Federation Conference in Peking:

(1) In what sense do Christians mean that Jesus was the Son of God?

(2) Why should we encourage the spread of any religion when religion contributes so much to the making of confusion in men's hearts?

(3) Since bloody sacrifices, in appeasement of the "Deity" are found to be present in religions generally, and to spring from unworthy human attitudes, why do Christians exploit the death of Christ?

(4) What reason is there for urging students of science to accept religion when many of the greatest scientists of the Western World have found the full satisfaction of life in the work of research?

(5) Origin of superior leaders of men in many ages has been attributed to the union of the Gods with men. Why credit the story of the virgin birth of Jesus?

(6) Do not aesthetics supply all that the finer sensibilities and the emotions of mankind require? What, then, is the use of religion?

(7) Many religions claim to possess holy books specially validated; wherein does Christianity differ from the others in that regard?

(8) We are told that Christianity stands or falls with the truth of the resurrection of Jesus. Why should we believe something so opposed to science?—"China questions Christianity," The Canadian Student, December, 1922.

Whatever may be our view as to the relative merits of these movements, and as to the advisability of youth asking these questions, or discussing them, he is doing it, and that, too, whether we will or not. But this will show that the Chinese youth is going to the bottom of things. We could quote like material from every country of the world, almost. No doubt youth is making mistakes; likewise no doubt he is making for progress.

The Man in the Garden

BY RALPH W. FARRELL

There is one phase of history that has never received sufficient emphasis, for man is selfish and prone to think too much of himself and too little of the other fellow. I refer to that phase, the Man in the Garden of Gethsemane; the man alone with his struggles. Washington was such a character, when he prayed alone at Valley Forge. Lincoln affords another example. But we do not have to go into written history to find instances of men in the garden of sorrow, wrestling in prayer for the good of humanity. This age has them.

We do not see the man out under the silent stars suffering because of the sins of others. We are too busy with our own petty troubles to offer him the glint of pity. The word of encouragement we ought to give is withheld; the burden that ought to be lightened by cooperation and willing service on our part is made heavier by our unjust criticism. And we push him farther out into the storm to suffer alone. It is the tragedy of the centuries! Who, knowing it, can deny the principle of vicarious atonement?

It is true that the three disciples were not expected to go into the garden with Christ (there are times in the life of every man when he must suffer alone), but they were expected to watch with him at a distance. That gentle reproof of the Master of men, "Could you not watch with me one hour?" brings tears to the eyes of the strongest of us. We are all likewise guilty. And it is not Christ alone that you and I neglect—there are other beings suffering in gardens to-day.

It was a rough sort of encouragement that Corbett's manager gave him, when young Corbett was fighting Jackson, "Remember that Jackson is as tired as you are"; but it worked, and Corbett virtually won. Needless to say that the winning was not worth the effort; but this is not the case with countless other "fights." The destiny of nations has depended upon encouragement. Encouragement is the very life of life. Let a man lose his courage and he falls by the way. There is a limit to human endurance. The bravest heart will at last break under its weight of woe and responsibility, if some one does not come to help carry the cross a little while.

So, for the man out there on No Man's Land, with his teeth set and his mind determined to dare and to do, I plead. For the man wrestling alone in the garden, while his disciples sleep, I plead. Give that man your faith and your cheer, that he may be heartened to go on, to climb to the height to point the way for those who are to come.

Is it for worldly honors, for wealth, for fame, that men serve in the church of latter days? Is it from choice that men are called to responsible spiritual positions? Is it even to win the plaudits of members of the church that one accepts the burden of leadership? Who so unwise to answer, Yes? Then what is it all for? To heed the call of duty. To respond to the Voice that calls, "Follow me." To be loyal to the urge of life. That's what!

And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy. Then saith he unto them, "My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death; tarry ye here, and watch with me."

Since Bible study for credit in Virginia high schools was authorized by the Virginia State board of education eight years ago, the enrollment in the course has increased from twenty-seven in the first year to nine hundred thirty-three in 1924.—School Life,

NEWS AND LETTERS

Lucasville, Ohio

November 18.—We are pleased to note that since our last writing on November 2 Brother James E. Bishop, our district president, was with us and delivered a spiritual sermon at ten o'clock to a large audience consisting of both members and nonmembers.

Sacramental service was held in the afternoon, and many testified of the blessings they had received from the Lord. A baby was blessed by Brother Bishop at this service, the child of Brother and Sister Roy Culp.

In the evening at six o'clock Brother B. B. Holland of Iron-ton and Brother Bishop gave good talks on the work of the Department of Recreation and Expression. Then at seven o'clock Brother Bishop delivered another good sermon.

There is at this time a great interest in the Sunday school work, sixty-five being present on November 9. This is a good crowd for a country church.

Interest is also better at the Wednesday night prayer meetings the last two weeks.

Religio is held Friday night, but there is not yet a very good attendance. We are hoping that better interest will be taken and feel that the Saints at this place will awaken to the fact that God will bless them in every effort they put forth for the benefit of his glorious gospel. We have a large branch here, but the Saints are scattered. Many people in the community believe in the gospel, but for some reason have never yet obeyed it.

Brother and Sister J. R. Bealer of this branch have gone to North Baltimore, Ohio, in Wood County, where they will visit friends and relatives. They will probably go from Baltimore to Kenton, Ohio, where they will spend a few days.

The branch has decided to take up the study of the Book of Mormon.

Bevier, Missouri

November 27.—A union Thanksgiving service was held in the Saints' chapel building Thanksgiving morn. The Baptists, Congregationalists, Christians, and Saints met together in peaceful communing to render thanks to God for all the blessings received.

Reverend W. L. Meyers, pastor of the Methodist Church at Macon was the chief speaker, and delivered a very appropriate address for the occasion. Elder Ben S. Tanner had charge of the meeting. A male quartet from the other churches sang several selections, while the congregational singing was selections from the Saints' Hymnal and Zion's Praises.

A collection was taken, to be given as a donation to the local welfare board.

The Northeastern Missouri district conference met at Bevier November 1 and 2. Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Evangelist Richard Bullard of the general missionary force and E. F. Robertson and J. W. A. Bailey of the district were in attendance, with quite a large delegation of Saints from Higbee and Macon, and others from Huntsville, Callao, and Kansas City.

In the business sessions, delegates to the next General Conference were elected. The names of several were recommended for ordination to the priesthood, and the district president was authorized to arrange for the ordinations of those who were not present. Brother Gleazer was the speaker Saturday and Sunday nights and Brother Bullard Sunday morning. All the sermons were good. It was Brethren Gleazer's and Bullard's first visit to Bevier and the district, and they made a very favorable impression. The Sunday afternoon sacramental and prayer and testimony meeting was marked by a strong manifestation of the Spirit in tongues and prophecy.

Just before the service two precious souls were led into the waters of baptism by Elder S. J. Joyce of Macon. They were Mr. and Mrs. James Burchett of Macon. Rees Jones of Macon was ordained to the office of deacon. A good spirit prevailed throughout all the meetings.

Reverend L. B. Coggins, a visiting pastor of the local Christian church, made the boast that he would like to meet some of our ministers in debate on church organization, etc. He was told that his desire along that line could be gratified. He was introduced to Elder J. W. A. Bailey. Papers have been drawn up, and it only remains for Reverend Coggins to show that he is duly authorized to represent his church organization, which he has failed to do at this writing.

Sisters Francis A. Evans and P. J. Raw of the second Kansas City Branch attended conference in Bevier and spent a week visiting among the Saints here, which was their home for many years.

Brother and Sister W. T. Hicklin have returned from Des Moines, where they have been for some time.

Brother Sam Perry is employed on the railroad at Hannibal and comes home to spend Sunday with his family and to get acquainted with his little son, born November 4, and who was named Finis.

Brother and Sister John Pearson have a new daughter who arrived November 1 and was given the name of Grace.

Missionary E. F. Robertson has gone for a brief visit in Nebraska with his parents, who have been in poor health. He expected to spend Thanksgiving with them.

Des Moines District

Runnells, Iowa, November 25.—The annual home-comings for the branches of the district are in full swing at this time. District President Henry Castings preached the first home-coming sermon at Pershing on November 2, and Doctor G. F. Hull was the speaker at Sandyville Branch on the 16th. Brother Ammon White was to have been the speaker at the latter place but was detained at home because of sickness of his wife. Sister White had sufficiently recovered so that he was permitted to attend the services at Dunreath on November 23. His sermons were deeply appreciated by the Saints.

Brother White held services in all the branches of the district two years ago and is therefore an old friend of the membership. We are indeed glad to welcome him and to receive the word of the Lord through his ministrations. Services are being conducted at each place five nights of the week, so the Saints may be revived and renewed in the faith.

A sad accident occurred at Newton about four weeks ago. Fred Terrel was accidentally shot while leaning on the barrel of a rifle that he thought was not loaded. The bullet penetrated the abdomen, lodging in the spine without touching any of the vital organs. Two operations were performed, but the bullet was not extracted. He was then sent to Albia to a specialist, who advised against another operation. The elders were called to administer, and many blessings were bestowed. Fred is the eleven-year-old son of Brother and Sister Clarence Terrel, Sister Terrel being the daughter of John L. Morgan, who was known to many in the church.

This accident was rather upsetting to the Saints of Newton, who are getting the Sunday school organized and are about to get a public meeting place in the parlors of Murdock's Funeral Home. God has seen fit to bless, however, and the faith of both members and friends has been strengthened.

The Saints and ministry of the district are receiving abundantly of the Holy Spirit, and the home-comings create a spirit of fellowship and "followship" that indicates a desire for Zion.

Holden Stake News

Holden

President F. M. Smith stopped off at Holden Monday, November 29, on his return from Saint Louis. He spoke at the church in the evening to a very appreciative audience. An opportunity was granted to all who chose to meet him at the close of the service, and the audience both young and old availed themselves of the privilege. Remarks of commendation were heard as to the sermon he delivered, from nonmembers as well as members, such as "The best sermon I ever heard." "Well, if that is what President Smith stands for, I am with him." "Twas a wonderful sermon, but you folks are too selfish to make the application."

The Saints have looked forward for some time to President Smith's coming, and though Monday was a night when many people were kept away by preengagements, a good audience greeted him. He spent part of Tuesday looking after church interests, inspecting the home for the aged and the other properties owned by the church here. He also visited brethren who are in business here and a few Saints who had not been able to hear him Monday night. One of his visits was with Sister Priscilla Young, now over ninety-three years of age. With clear voice and alertness of mind, she still is able to discuss the issues of the day. She has had the privilege of listening to the three prophets and presidents of the church; Joseph the Martyr, his son Joseph, and grandson Frederick. She has a vivid recollection of the times of the early church and has followed the work of the church closely all of her life. She remarked, "You're growing to look more like your father, Fred, but you act and speak more like your grandfather, the Martyr."

The family at the Holden Home were greatly pleased to have him with them and listen to his address at the breakfast hour. He also conducted the devotional services. Among the home people he visited Elder H. W. Pomeroy, now ninety-four years of age, who was with the church at Amboy when President Smith's father took his place as president. Brother Pomeroy has a very vivid recollection of the time. Brother Smith's visit to Holden will be long remembered. We trust that he may come again soon.

Brethren H. E. Moler, I. M. Ross, A. B. Phillips, D. R. Carmichael, W. S. Macrae, and D. J. Krahl have been the speakers at the church the past three Sundays. Brother Carmichael was here on November 23, coming in the special interest of the Department of Recreation and Expression, of which he is stake superintendent. He spoke at the eleven o'clock hour and conducted a round table in the afternoon.

Marshall

Elder Roy Young and wife, en route from Battle Creek, Michigan, to Independence, stopped at Marshall Sunday, the 30th. Brother Young occupied both morning and evening with edifying discourses.

Speakers on the 23d were Brethren Ralph M. Ridge and Levi Phelps.

The Saints voted to accept of Brother Alvin Knisley's services for a series of meetings soon.

Blue Springs

The Saints at Blue Springs commemorated Thanksgiving on Sunday, November 23, with special services. Sunday school was held at a quarter of ten as usual, followed by a special Thanksgiving prayer service in charge of Elder Alvin Knisley, who recently held a series of meetings here. Following the prayer service, a bounteous repast was served by the ladies of the group, and at half past two a splendid program was rendered in which the children of the Sunday school were the principal entertainers. The attendance was about seventy-five, which sets a new high record for Blue Springs. All seemed to enjoy a splendid feeling of fellowship. Brother Amos E. Allen is in charge of Blue Springs. He lives in Independence and gives his Sundays to the work there. Sunday school is at a quarter of ten in the forenoon and preaching at eleven. The meetings are held in the hall over the bank. Brother Allen occupied Sunday night at the home of Brother Gard, where the Milton Road Saints are holding their services for the winter.

Sedalia

On Sunday, November 23, we were pleased to have with us Brother C. B. Hartshorn of Independence, who occupied at the morning service. Elder C. L. House delivered one of his forceful sermons at the evening service, his topic being, "The mission of Jesus Christ." Many favorable comments were heard.

November 30 Elders R. F. Moorman and A. A. Weaver occupied morning and evening respectively. After dinner five auto loads drove to Houstonia, where Elders R. D. Weaver and C. L. House have opened a series of meetings in a hall, with good prospects. There was almost a full house in the afternoon and a good crowd at night. The Sedalia five-piece orchestra furnished the music. Brother Weaver surely presents the gospel plan in a way that cannot be misunderstood, and should bring results. The Saints have organized now for choir practice, meeting every Tuesday evening at half past seven with a good attendance and interest and some nonmembers enrolled. The orchestra meets for practice on Friday evening before Religio and plays for all services.

Tuesday evening, November 18, a surprise was given in the church basement in honor of our musical director, R. F. Moorman, it being his birthday. The main feature of the entertainment was a mock trial.

We have three new families added to our number since last report. A Brother and Sister King with a married son and a married daughter, each with a family, have moved here from Nebraska. These families have been isolated for several years but are strong in the faith and rejoicing in being able to meet and mingle with the Saints again, and we rejoice in having them with us.

Grandview

The series of meetings held here by Elder R. D. Weaver, closed on November 16. The value of these meetings cannot be estimated. For five consecutive weeks Brother Weaver labored faithfully and enthusiastically, and as a result eight precious souls were conducted into the kingdom. Aside from this, much good has been accomplished in other ways. On Sunday, November 9, an all-day session was held, with a basket dinner served in the basement at noon. Brother E. T. Atwell was the speaker at eleven o'clock, Brother D. J. Krahl at half past two, and at eight o'clock Brother Weaver occu-

ped. Saints from different parts of the stake and Independence were present. Sunday, November 16, another all-day session was held. Brother Weaver occupied during the morning hour, and Sister Hatty from Independence sang beautifully at both morning and evening services. Following the basket dinner, Brother Weaver conducted a baptismal and confirmation service, at the conclusion of which one of the sisters baptized was spoken to in prophecy and told that if she would faithfully prepare herself she would be an instrument in God's hand for accomplishing much good in the departments of the church. Brother Weaver preached his farewell sermon in the evening. A strong bond of love has developed between the Saints of Grandview and Brother Weaver. A beautifully peaceful spirit was present during the meetings. The eight candidates baptized were all from Stanley, Kansas, a distance of eight miles. Five are heads of families.

Our annual Thanksgiving services were held. Prayer and testimony meeting at half past ten, basket dinner at noon, and at half past two a program.

Brother and Sister Gould and family of Independence were with us on this day.

Brother Thomas Cairns and family have moved to Independence. We are indeed sorry to lose them from our group.

Other Points

Brother J. V. Roberts reports the baptism of Brother Ladall W. M. Bittle on November 30, by Brother Clyde Hartman. Brother Bittle lives six miles southwest of Buckner and is seventy-four years of age. Twenty years ago Brother E. C. Briggs sowed the seed by the fireside in this home and left others to water. Having sickness in his home Mr. Bittle called for the elders. Brother Roberts and another elder responded, and the brother received a wonderful blessing. When he became stronger he demanded baptism. Brother Roberts reports there are others there to be baptized soon.

Elder Alvin Knisley has opened up a place between Leeds and Raytown where there are three families living.

Elder R. D. Weaver began a series of meetings at Housatonia on the 30th. This place is located midway between Marshall and Sedalia. He reports good attendance at the opening services. He closed his meetings at Grandview, Missouri, on the 16th, baptizing eight.

Ottumwa, Iowa

The work of the Master here is still alive and is moving along, slowly but surely. The Sunday school members are busy preparing for a Christmas program, which is under the direction of Sister E. Hughes, so we are looking forward to a fine program.

The Department of Women had another cooking sale in a down-town store which was very successful. The ladies were also recently entertained at the home of Sister John Hunt and Sister E. Santee, in which a good time was enjoyed.

Sermons during the month of November were well received. Our Brother D. T. Williams, sr., is again home for a few weeks. We are glad to say that his wife is much better.

At the branch business meeting Monday, December 1, we had our election of officers for 1925, which resulted in the following being chosen: F. C. Bevan, branch president; John Jones, treasurer; Sister Green, financial secretary; Sister L. McMickle, branch clerk; Sister M. Epperly, chorister; Sister L. McMickle, organist.

Independence

Stone Church

The First Independence Sunday School observed Golden Rule Sunday by a special offering which amounted to $42.64, which will be sent to the Near East Relief Committee to help care for destitute children in Armenia and adjacent countries.

The annual election of officers took place Monday night, December 8, which resulted in the selection of C. B. Harts-horn, O. C. White, and E. D. Moore for the general superintendency of the school. Other officers remain about the same.

The Christmas offering to date is $2,016.08. Next Sunday will be observed by the school as Christmas Offering Dollar Day. An effort is being made to reach the $3,000 goal of last year.

The tithing secretary, Mrs. Edith Bullard, reports that her file contains four hundred and fifteen cards of Sunday school members who are paying tithing through this channel. Since the first of the year $154.16 has been received by this department.

An idea of the magnitude of the routine work connected with a large school is contained in the report made by the secretary, Florence M. Pointer, who has put in two hundred hours of work outside the actual Sunday school period this year. This is equivalent to practically one month's work, eight hours a day. Besides this Sister Pointer has the record of being present and on time every Sunday for the past twenty months.

Tuesday evening, December 23, will be observed by a Christmas entertainment, with Christmas tree and treats for the children in the three younger departments. The Non-pareil Class of the Religio is the committee in charge of the entire project.

Apostles J. F. Curtis and Paul M. Hanson are expected to reach Independence Thursday. Sister Curtis received word Monday morning of their safe arrival in Boston, and they are making their way home as soon as possible. They were hastened in their return to this country by the illness of Brother Curtis, who is recovering from an attack of bronchial pneumonia.

Apostle T. W. Williams left Monday night for California.

In mentioning the assisting numbers rendered on the Thanksgiving concert by the Stone Church Choir last week, we omitted the names of the ladies' quartet from Second Church. We regret this oversight, for the work of this quartet has been greatly appreciated on various occasions, and their numbers on the Thanksgiving concert were very fine and added much to the value and interest of the program.

The Book of Mormon lectures conducted by Brother L. E. Hills in the basement of the Stone Church during the Religio hour, which has commanded a growing interest since they began, are to last only two more Sunday evenings. Next Sunday, December 14, the lecture will lead up to an illustrated journey to be taken the following Sunday evening. The S. R. S. Class invites you to attend.

The sacramental service Sunday morning was largely attended, and a very fine spirit was enjoyed. It was pleasing to note the dispatch with which the large congregation was served with the sacrament, and there was time for a goodly number of testimonies.

Sunday evening the Junior College Glee Club from Kansas City, under the direction of Miss Virginia French, gave a very pleasing concert consisting of numbers by a girls' chorus, a boys' chorus, the mixed chorus, and a duet assisted by the chorus. The chorus was accompanied by Miss Marybelle Eubank. A short address by Professor W. A. Lewis, director of the department of sociology, was enjoyed.

Second Church

The sacramental service Sunday morning witnessed the presence of several who had been detained in their homes by sickness, quarantine, and other compelling forces.

Sunday evening was the first of three lectures to be delivered by Pastor C. Ed Miller, at which time he presented and canvassed many of the scriptural evidences which foretell and support the Book of Mormon as a divine record. Brother Miller has collected many valuable evidences, has made lantern slides of scriptural subjects which have weight as evidence, and passages of scripture are made by him to speak their unalterable message of warning. The house was filled with attentive listeners. Next Sunday evening his illuminated lecture will be an answer to the world's objections to the thought that the Book of Mormon is a divine record.

Elder Harold C. Burgess led the singing, and several song slides were used, throwing the words in strong relief upon the screen, which made it easy and impelled all to participate.

At the business meeting Monday night to nominate pastor and caretaker for the ensuing year, R. J. Lambert was nominated for pastor and Charles Martin for caretaker.

Liberty Street

Pastor C. Ed Miller visited the young people's prayer meeting held at eight o'clock Sunday morning. The sacrament service at the eleven o'clock hour was well attended, so many enjoyed the good meeting.

President F. M. Smith addressed a crowded house in the evening, calling attention to the commands of God before 1833 which have not to this day been obeyed. He held the undivided attention of his audience throughout the sermon, and many lingered after the service to express their appreciation of President Smith's message.

Enoch Hill

Sacramental service was held at eleven o'clock. In the evening at seven o'clock Apostle T. W. Williams preached an eloquent sermon on "The great commission," to a crowded house. He was very well received.

At the usual hour next Friday night the Religio will hold its semiannual election of officers. This department, under the leadership of Brother Kenneth A. Morford, is forging ahead, and interesting sessions are being held.

Next Monday night at eight o'clock the Saints of this locality will select the one who is to act as their local pastor for the ensuing year, subject to the ratification of the January conference in Zion.

Our local building debt campaign is still under way and receipts are continuing to come in. A great effort is being made to make the month of December the record month in this regard.

Englewood

According to last week's report a chicken dinner is to be served at the bazaar December 16. However, this dinner will be served cafeteria style instead of charging fifty cents a plate as announced last week. The patronage of the Saints will be appreciated.

There was a good attendance at sacramental service Sunday morning, but in the evening the weather was so bad that only a few were out to hear the excellent sermon by Bishop J. A. Becker.

East Independence

The sacrament service Sunday morning was well attended. Brother Frank Hill was the speaker in the evening.

Saints and friends are invited to visit the bazaar to be held at the dining hall December 16 and do what they can to help us raise money for our new church.

Spring Branch

At the recent election of officers, the following were chosen to have charge of the work the coming year: John Soderstadt, pastor; Alma Tankard, Sunday school superintendent; Frank Boyce, president of the Religio.

At a business meeting of the branch held last week it was voted to raise the budget $500 to build an annex on the church. The Saints were commended by both President Elbert A. Smith and Pastor C. Ed. Miller for the way they do business, for they know what they want and go after it. These brothers were surprised to find such good attendance at a business meeting.

A pie social was held last Friday night, and $4.50 was raised, which is to be used to buy volume one of the Young People's History of the Church for use in the Religio. Under this plan the children who cannot afford to buy books will have the opportunity to study when otherwise they would be handicapped. The Saints have also finished paying for their piano, so feel that they are making progress.

The attendance at the sacrament service Sunday morning was large, and a good meeting was enjoyed. Brother D. Tucker was the speaker in the evening.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

December 1.—Council Bluffs, Iowa, has just closed a series of very successful meetings held by Apostle J. F. Garver. These meetings began Sunday, November 23, and continued for one week, closing on the following Sunday, November 30, with President F. M. Smith as speaker. Brother Garver's splendid sermons were in preparation for the sermons of President Smith on the subject that he is so able to handle, that of Zion. On the Friday night preceding the closing Sunday, Brother Garver spoke especially to young people, of whom there were a large number present, among them a delegation from Omaha, Nebraska, whom we were glad to welcome, as well as others from surrounding towns. His sermon that night was so fired with the Spirit of God that we were made to feel indeed that Brother Garver is a chosen apostle of God. He gave us a greater desire to live up to the opportunities that are ours, and to prepare to make the "church of to-morrow" all that it is possible to make it.

The Thanksgiving service held at half past ten Thursday morning was a very spiritual meeting, in which the Spirit of God was very evident. At this meeting Brother and Sister Roy Murphy, who were baptized before the service, were confirmed, and it gives us much pleasure to welcome these fine people as our brother and sister in God's kingdom.

The meetings on Sunday were so well attended that the church was packed to the limit, and there was hardly standing room for all who wanted to attend the eleven o'clock and the eight o'clock services. President Smith seemed at his best and gave us a wonderful vision of Zion as it should be.

At the Central Church in the afternoon, at three o'clock, the church was again packed to the limit with members of the priesthood from six different districts, two from Nebraska and four from Iowa. Again President Smith took up the subject so dear to his heart, that of Zion, and for an hour, under light and inspiration from above, he held the intense interest and attention of the large group of God's chosen ministry. President Smith tried to bring his talk to a close twice, as he felt that he had kept the members long enough, but they insisted that he go on, so altogether he spoke about one hour and forty-five minutes. During the week's meetings and the closing Sunday's services we have had our vision of Zion and stewardships enlarged. We realize as never before that stewardships do not mean only our money, but our talents, our opportunities, and, in fact, our very lives are a stewardship.

On Monday evening, December 1, the annual branch business meeting was held at Central Church. Apostle Garver and District President J. A. Hanson were associated with the branch presidency in presiding over the meeting. The reading of the reports showed a gratifying degree of advancement for the year and proved that Council Bluffs is moving forward.

The Department of Women especially merits commendation, as they are untiring in their efforts. The reports show that they have been very active in various ways this year. On November 22 they held a bazaar and chicken dinner and supper in Eagle's Hall, which gave them a net sum of $308.16. This is especially good when we consider the fact that two other organizations of the city were serving the same day. This bazaar was under the supervision of Sister Anna Nelson.

The relief and service department, too, has done a very good work, 591 visits being made and 276 garments given to the needy. Thanksgiving baskets were also distributed to those in need.

The young women's department is very active, there being five Temple Builder Circles and two Oriole Circles. These circles meet regularly for either study, social, or gymnasium work.

The educational department reports at present four Book of Mormon classes and one story-telling class. The story-telling class meets at the public library once each week, and is taught by Miss Melvin, of the Red Cross. One of the Book of Mormon classes meets once a week at the homes of the members, some of whom are not members of the church, but they are very much interested in the Book of Mormon. This class is taught by our worthy mayor, Elder G. J. Harding.

Other activities, as well as the three missions, show a gratifying progress this year.

Brother George Beatty, a man to whom we have long looked as an example of humility and loyal devotion to the work, and one who by reason of his long association as counselor to the branch presidents in the past is well fitted for the place, was chosen as the branch president for the coming year, and we have confidence in him that under his administration and that of those he may choose for his counselors, the branch will continue to move forward. Brother H. H. Hand, the retiring president, has been untiring in his efforts for the welfare of the branch and has at times even gone beyond his physical strength in the interests of the people here. We will still look to him for advice and counsel, which we know he will always be ready to give, as his first thought has always been for the good of the work.

We are expecting a large attendance at our district conference, which will start Thursday evening. We are pleased to know that Brother Garver will be with us again then.

Waterloo, Iowa

November 24.—Elder E. A. Davis, district president, and Sister Davis, field worker, were here a few days holding special meetings in the interest of the Sunday school, Religion, and Department of Women. They gave some good suggestions for improving our church work.

The Religion gave a good Thanksgiving entertainment Sunday evening, November 23. The program consisted of music, readings, and recitations. It was much enjoyed by all present, both members and nonmembers. We hope to have the good work repeated quite often this winter.

Radio Flashes

Girard, Kansas.—Dear Saints: I must tell you how I have been enjoying the sermons from K F I X during the past three Sunday evenings; especially enjoyed the sermon by Brother Jones last Sunday night. As we have no branch here, you may be sure I am overjoyed to be able to get you by radio.—Mrs. Eugene Perry.

Parkersburg, West Virginia.—We wish to congratulate you on the broadcasting of your church services. Your station is one we have longed to hear. Station K F N F and other powerful stations of similar wave lengths made it difficult for us to get your station, but now that we have the dial settings we will tune in regularly, as we watch for your programs in the HERALD. We have had our radio about a week, but last evening was the first we could pick you up. The music and the sermon by Elder Lonzo Jones were very loud and distinct. Your announcer was fine. The program was received on a five-tube neutrodyne, and was enjoyed by a roomful of people. The Saints here in Parkersburg are pushing the fund for a larger broadcasting station, so that the gospel may be carried to all peoples.—Mabel Smith.

She had been very faithful and surely had done a mother's part, taking charge of her father's family at his death and by hard work through years of toil kept them together until they were able to care for themselves. She also raised her own son, working with her hands to support herself and son during the years of his schooling. Through all her adversity she kept the faith. Later, making her home with her son, she cared for her three grandchildren who suffered the loss of their mother in 1891, and was instrumental in raising them, being the mother to them all as well as to her own son. She also cared for and raised a niece, so that her life, though one of many sorrows and hardships, has not been an idle one. Hathaway, her son Clarence C., and two grandchildren. Funeral services at Liberty Street Church, Independence, Missouri, November 24, 1924, at three o'clock in the afternoon, J. F. Cleveland in charge; sermon by J. A. Becker. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Leaves his wife and two children, mother, four sisters, and one brother, besides many other relatives and friends. He served in the World War, spending nine months overseas, at which time he was gassed, this being the cause of his final sickness and death. His faith in the gospel was strong. Funeral services from the Cedar Creek Church, near Dalby Springs, Texas, in charge of W. H. Calley. Sermon by H. E. Winegar.

CLINTON.—William Edward Clinton was born August 20, 1869, at Atlanta, Georgia. Married Ella Clift October 16, 1893, at Paris, Texas. Baptized June 11, 1914, by Heman C. Smith. Died at his home in Grannis, Arkansas, November 24, 1924. Leaves his wife, one son, four daughters, three brothers, and five sisters, besides a host of relatives and friends. Funeral at the Saints' church November 26, 1924, with sermon by H. E. Winegar assisted by T. B. Sharp. Interment in Grannis Cemetery.

Apostles Paul M. Hanson and J. Frank Curtis Again at Home

Early Friday morning Apostles Hanson and Curtis arrived in Independence, as was forecasted in the HERALD of last week. Brother Hanson is in good health, while Brother Curtis is recovering from a severe attack of bronchial pneumonia which would not be thrown off, even by such a vigorous constitution as he possesses, while he remained in England.

His medical advisor directed him to leave England for America as soon as he could gather sufficient strength. Complying with the suggestion, these brethren left England even while Brother Curtis was quite seriously affected. The traveling and change of climate have not had any ill effect.

Their addresses in Independence are: Paul M. Hanson, 410 North River Boulevard; J. F. Curtis, 426 South River Boulevard.

Bishop's Annual Report

Accompanying this issue of the HERALD is the report of Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire for the year ending June 30, 1923.

The compiling and publication of this voluminous report involves the use of much valuable time by the Bishop and his office force. There is after that much work and expense in printing and mailing the report, and the people of the church should scan the portions of it which should be of interest to them with care. If they will do this, there can be a fair test as to the value of publishing a detail report of the financial activities of the church and its institutions. Should the church refuse to examine the report carefully, there is a vast waste which should be curtailed.

The habit of trying to understand the official reports of the various officers of the church is desirable. The habit of merely looking at these reports is of questionable value. One course will produce appreciation of the problems and triumphs of the ones making report, while in many cases the other course will produce nothing or distorted understandings of their work.

Authority in Church Government.—No. 2

There is probably no fact concerning the work of the church that is more clearly set forth than that this work should be under the direction of God, for it is his work, and those who occupy as ministers in his church must be divinely authorized before doing so, and must see that their acts are in accordance with the instructions God has given for their guidance. To act out of harmony with the divine laws, or to assume powers God has not authorized, would not bring the divine approval, which is necessary in order that whatsoever is bound on earth "shall be bound in heaven." In order that the work of the church shall prosper and receive the sanction of God, it is necessary each shall labor in his own place, subject to the restrictions God has provided.

As has been noted in a previous issue of the HERALD, the offices of the church are graded in rank, under the presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood. Of this priesthood we are informed:

All other authorities, or offices in the church are appendages to this priesthood. . . . The Melchisedec priesthood holds the right of presidency, and has power and authority over all the offices in the church, in all ages of the world, to administer in spiritual things.

The Work of the Presidency

In every efficient organization administrative work requires a chief executive with sufficient authority to insure its accomplishment. Departments must be coordinated under the general management of some one having power to see that the declared purposes of the organization are conserved, and that no department works contrary to the purposes aimed at as supervised by the officer placed at the head of the organization. Otherwise it is liable to be harassed and disrupted by cross-purposes among its officials and members. In the church of Christ the highest office is that of president, whose duties are in part specified as follows:

The presidency of the high priesthood, after the order of Melchisedec, have a right to officiate in all the offices in the church.

And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 4, 42.

It being one of the chief duties of the president to preside, it may be well to note the meaning of the word according to the following dictionary terms:

Preside: 1. To occupy the place of authority; to direct, control, or regulate proceedings as chief officer. 2. To exercise superintendence, guidance, or control.—Webster's Universal Dictionary, 1910 edition.

These references clearly show that the Presidency represents the chief executive office in the church, and lawfully holds chief directional control in administrative affairs, without which the orders and purposes of the church cannot be assured accomplishment. In order to provide recognized directional authority and prevent conflicts of authority from arising to thwart the divine will, the Lord has placed the Presidency at the head of the church on earth and its departments.

God has not devised an organization that permits a department official to frustrate or subvert any executive function of the Presidency, which would make effective administration impossible, and would in some cases subject the head of the church to the will of department officers. Of the Presidency as executives and teachers, we are informed:

And thou shalt not command him who is at thy head, and at the head of the church, for I have given him the keys of the mysteries and the revelations, which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead.

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time.—Doctrine and Covenants 27: 2; 122: 2.

Clearly, no official or member has the right to impose his own notions concerning church laws, in opposition to the Presidency who are directed to teach the laws which govern the body. Years ago the Lord disapproved of such unauthorized methods, and declared:

My servants have been harsh one with another, and some have not been sufficiently willing to hear those whose duty it is to teach the revelations which my church has already received. Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion among the members.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 1:

He who complains against the teachings of these divinely authorized instructors should do so before the designated officials only, and as the law of the church directs. He should not publicly force upon the church membership his adverse notions, thus causing confusion and disruption in the church.

The President as a Revelator

Another important duty of the president and prophet of the church is to present such revelations as the Lord may give to the church. The assertion was recently made that "the right of revelation does not inhere in the First Presidency, but in every member of the church." But the notion that any member may receive revelations for the church is a grave error, for two revelations, unanimously accepted by the church state:

No one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church, excepting my servant Joseph Smith, jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses.—Doctrine and Covenants 27: 2.

And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 1, 2.

The church of the living God is not of human origin, and must not be subject to the caprice of man. Its ministry are called by divine appointment, its laws are given in a specified manner, and its instruction and guidance are through those divinely authorized to teach and direct. It was by disregarding the laws and procedure established by God that ancient schismatics and heretics in the church produced the apostasy. We must avoid a like course if we would not become victims of a similar error. To not be "sufficiently willing to hear and heed those whose duty it is to teach the revelations," may endanger the unity of the church and cause an apostasy.

When the church was a Kirtland a revelation was given which provided for a place where the Presidency could obtain revelations and otherwise attend to their work as directing heads of the church, as follows:

And let the first lot on the south [of Kirtland temple] be consecrated unto me for the building of an house for the presidency, for the work of the presidency, in obtaining revelations, and for the work of the ministry of the presidency, in all things pertaining to the church and kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 91: 1.

These duties of the Presidency to receive, teach, and interpret the revelations given to the church are affirmed also in the General Conference enactment of 1894, which states:

8. That it is the prerogative of the president to receive revelations from God and give them to the church for the direction and government of the affairs of the church.

9. That the members of the Presidency are leading interpreters and teachers of the laws and revelations of God, and are of right presidents of the General Assemblies of the church.—Resolution 386.

The Presidency Direct All Departments

The rise of the church in 1830 was under commandments given to Joseph Smith, junior, "who was called of God and ordained an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the first elder of this church." From this beginning of the organization Joseph Smith was, until his death, the recognized head of the church, and directed in every department of its work, both spiritual and temporal, including the work of the bishopric. From the first, he was its chief executive as well as its prophet.

The fact that a departmental officer may have charge of a department in the church implies that the Presidency, having charge over "the whole church," must have superior jurisdiction. This has been the only recognized law and procedure, in this respect, since the rise of the church. The principle has also been affirmed at various times by the Joint Council, the Quorum of Twelve, and General Conference, of which the following is an instance:

7. That the Presidency is the leading quorum in the church. That the duty of presiding over the church devolves on that quorum. That it is the prerogative of the president to preside over the whole church, to bear the responsibility of the care and oversight of the work of the church, in all its different departments, and through the constituted officers of the church in their various callings, according to the laws, rules, and regulations in force and recognized by the church.—Resolution 386 (1894.)

Resort has been made to the excuse that it is unsafe to allow the Presidency to direct the management of the temporal department. This fallacy exposes itself in assuming that the head of a department is safer than the head of the entire organization. Also it evidently assumes the further absurdity that one who is not safe, if placed over a department, may properly function as the head of the whole church. In a well-coordinated and conducted organization, neither of these assumptions can be true. Neither is it in accordance with the past judgment of the church or its leading councils, as the following action of the Joint Council of 1917 shows:

Inasmuch as the Presidency is responsible for the direction of the affairs of the whole church, it is obviously proper that all the departments of the church ministry should work in harmony with and under the supervision of the presiding authority of the whole.—Council minutes, Record 4, p. 71.

In view of these plain regulations, can it be rationally supposed that any department, financial or otherwise, has the right to thwart the chief administrative officers of the body in discharging these duties? We do not believe the church will now abandon all these enactments, trample upon the precedents of the past, and discard the laws that have governed these many years, in order to experiment with a proposal that separates the church into two parts and under two heads where supervision and coordination would become ineffectual if not impossible.

Spiritual Work Uses Temporal Means

When properly understood the temporal work of the church is a subordinate factor used for spiritual purposes, and therefore is subject to spiritual control. Being incidentals of spiritual accomplishment, or means to an end, temporalities are themselves spiritualized in the purposes for which they are used, and their administration is governed by spiritual laws. The revelations of God undeniably show that temporalities are to be used for spiritual purposes, are subject to spiritual authority, and that the work of the whole church is spiritual. In 1830 the Lord declared:

Wherefore, verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam your father, whom I created; behold, I gave unto him that he should be an agent unto himself; and I gave unto him commandment, but no temporal commandment gave I unto him; for my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual.—Doctrine and Covenants 28:9.

Spiritual activities are therefore not to be subject to the temporal means by which they are maintained, but the temporal means are to be subordinated to the spiritual activities of the church; and those activities are under the direction and control of the Presidency as the authorized chief executives of the body. The law which governs the temporal division of church work is declared to be spiritual, and must be administered under the direction of the spiritual authorities.

If one in immediate charge of temporalities had the right to withdraw support and thus frustrate any work that he did not approve, such power would give him dominion over spiritual accomplishment, and in administrative affairs would make him supreme. The Presidency could then be temporarily prevented from accomplishing the work commanded by the Lord or approved by the church. What a travesty such a system would be upon divine wisdom! Such an attempt would be entirely in accord with that method which seeks to charge the Presidency with improper designs not yet declared by them, or that still more questionable method which seeks to arouse suspicion against living leaders by attempting to show incompetence or worse on the part of a dead ancestor.

It has been urged that "the church is not a business organization," but this concedes the fact that it is a spiritual organization. Hence it is illogical and a perversion of the law to hold that its temporalities are not subject to its own control through its chief administrative officers, the Presidency, who are specifically declared to be the spiritual head and over its affairs. It is the height of absurdity to say that the law does not permit the trustee of the church to be subject to the direction of the Presidency, while admitting that he is subject to the orders of General Conference, for it was by the orders of General Conference of the church that the Presidency were placed over "all its different departments," as a previous quotation states. To refuse compliance with this order is therefore disobedience to the very body whose authority is admitted.

The recent admission of one writer that the Twelve and Presiding Bishopric at one time held diverse views which resulted in a "clash between these quorums," is hardly a convincing background for his claim that this clash was "conducted by men who knew the law." Moreover, the Presidency as the "leading interpreters and teachers" of the law and the regulators of church affairs might well have been appealed to as a means of avoiding the clash, for to set in order is a function of that office:

And this shall be your business and mission in all your lives to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 87:5 (To the Presidency).

The reasonable conclusion, then, is that the counsel of the Presidency, on whom these responsibilities rest, should be followed in administrative matters not clearly understood or agreed upon, that unnecessary clashes, ill feeling, and hindrance to the work may not result.

The foregoing quotations, as well as others available, overwhelmingly prove that the law makes the Presidency the chief administrative officers, and places them over "all the church," including "all its departments," charging them with the "presidency," the "responsibility," the "care," the "oversight," the "authority," the "supervision," and the "direction," of "all the affairs of this church and kingdom," including "the most important business of the church." To assert that this does not include chief directional control over the temporal department is to imply nudis verbis that language is to be disregarded, or it is meaningless and void. A. B. The Masonic grand lodge of New York has given notice of its withdrawal from the Masonic International Association, with headquarters at Geneva, Switzerland. The irreligion of certain European Masonic jurisdictions and their tendency to "meddle with the league of nations" are given as the reasons for the withdrawal. Investigation of European lodges showed "that the name of God and of the Bible were omitted by some of the jurisdictions in this international association," and the separation followed.—Christian Century.

A Distinctive Religion

A Hope and a Reason

In the early days of the Reorganization, as well as the days of the early church, there were, no doubt, frequent occasions when the members were called upon to make statements setting forth the reasons why they chose to be Latter Day Saints. One such reason assigned was that now, in this dispensation, the gospel had been restored and that with that restoration had been committed again to man, the church, in organization and functioning, a replica of the church which Christ himself set up. To feel the conviction that a small group had been made the custodians of such a precious charge could scarcely fail to fire the people with an enthusiasm as efficacious as it was sacred. A restored gospel was no fiction to these brave pioneers; it was a living, vibrant power, which if utilized would save, and save completely.

Salvation in Time as Well as in Eternity

If there was to be complete salvation, it was expected that the process would begin to be operative in time and continue into eternity. Judging by the behavior of the people, surely they expected the salvation process to begin this side of the grave. The abrogation of social and economic relationships and the great migration westward over the trackless prairies of the interior should be ample evidence of their conviction that God was not afar off. The magnitude of this faith in the divinely appointed plan assumes even greater proportions when we recall that they undertook to establish a form of social organization which was new and untried, and which in the minds of the critics was both radical and foolish. We have yet to demonstrate that their faith was not a mere delusion.

The Faith of the Pioneer Was Distinctive

Nevertheless the fact that the pioneers had such a dominating faith and were able to spread the gospel in the face of such bitter persecution, was the chief characteristic of the early church. This was no mean achievement, and it was respected by thinking people of that time, and is still recited by the historian as an important influence in the annals of the nineteenth century. The chief contribution which the early church made to modern thought was the idea that though the purposes of God had been for a time thwarted by men, yet were they now again revealed, and that his hand was again moving for the salvation of man. The ages of darkness preceding the Restoration had bred a philosophy of despair and pessimism, the aftermath of which is to-day evidenced in the gross selfishness which enshrouds the earth. Man, having but a brief, uncertain life span, fraught with misery and suffering, deduced the philosophy which encouraged him to eat and be merry, since the morrow bringeth only death. The faith of the restored gospel induced, therefore, a spiritual exaltation which was as much the marvel of the century as it was refreshing in its purity.

Such Faith Worthy of Distinctive Works

One does not disparage the accomplishment of these early devotees when one affirms that this faith was never made manifest in the reformed social structure which was the purpose of its recommitment to man. To us, however, this faith comes as a heritage. We have made little or no effort to acquire it. It is the gift of one generation to another. We are charged, however, not only with the responsibility of perpetuating it, but with the task of translating it into such dynamic social changes as will justify our own position and vindicate the challenge of our forbears.

Mere verbal proclamation of principles will no longer suffice. There must be concrete results commensurate with the demands of our age. In no other way can men rightly judge our motives than by observing our behavior. To maintain the claim that the gospel generates a higher type of motive necessitates a type of behavior which will validate such a claim. To achieve only so much as is achieved by the scribes and Pharisees is to openly confess a religion of mediocrity, in which no one is particularly interested because it is so ordinary.

It is not surprising, therefore, that we have experienced the operation of the law of diminishing returns in our preaching. Such people as have come into the church have done so in anticipation of achievements worthy of a superior faith. Other thoughtful persons have remained unconfirmed, pending the issue of anticipated results in the lives of the confirmed. When these expected results have failed to materialize, it has become increasingly difficult to charge the preached word with its old-time power of conviction. To rave about the carnal-mindedness of man as the cause for the decline in the volume of converts is cowardly, and those who employ it merit all of the indignities which may be heaped upon them.

The crux of the whole matter lies in the fact that the principles of the gospel have never yet been applied in any but isolated individual cases. What the world now expects (and justly so) is a corporate evidence of the power of the gospel to save men's bodies as well as their spirits. The preaching of the future must be devoted to an exposition of the methodology of the higher life as well as to the definitive aspects of proselytization. Ready answers to questions of what we expect to do must be supplemented by answers to the question of how and when. Recitative preaching must give place to demonstrative preaching. Then and only then will our religion become distinctive.

Some Educational Problems Involved in the Establishment of Zion.—No. 5

Men of the Past Have Attacked Existing Standards

We will now cite some historical illustrations:

Abraham, living among people who were inclined to sacrifice their first-born son to their God, felt called upon to do the same. Sorrowfully he led his son to the top of Mount Moriah, there to prepare the altar, slay his son, and set the altar afire. Doubtlessly all the way up he pondered upon the reason for such a religious performance. Doubtlessly he was pondering upon who is God and what is God. As he was about to slay the son a great revelation came to him. God did not require the sacrifice of a first-born son. He could substitute a ram instead, a vicarious sacrifice. But this great revelation which came to Abraham was not fully heeded and followed even down to King Manasseh's day, who caused his son to pass through fire, after the manner of contemporaneous religions.

Amos, who saw an Israel which considered itself religious because it was punctiliously offering its burnt offerings, and meat-offerings, and conducting its three great feasts annually, and yet was selling the debtor for a pair of shoes, trampling upon the poor, and taking exactions from him of his wheat, could exclaim by virtue of his refusal to accept the religious standards of his day, and his own endeavors to discover God:

I hate, I despise your feasts, and I will take no delight in your solemn assemblies. Yea, though ye offer me your burnt offerings and meat-offerings, I will not accept them; neither will I regard the peace offerings of your fat beasts. Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs, for I will not hear the melody of thy viols. But let justice roll down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream.

Micah, like Abraham, was studying the contemporaneous religions of his day; yes, even studying the religious practices of Israel; he, like Abraham, refused to consider them correct. Neither could he agree with sacrifices, either of animals or of humans. He exclaimed:

Wherewith shall I come before Jehovah, and bow myself before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt-offerings, with calves a year old? Will Jehovah be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my first-born for my transgressions, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? [His decisive answer was no.] He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?

A Moses, though reared in the luxury of a royal Egyptian court, refused to apathetically abide by the decision of his times that the standard of living for the Hebrews should be beneath that of the Egyptians. His first expression of this injustice was very inadequate to get rid of it. In fact, his first expression of it, the killing of an Egyptian slave master, proved almost deleterious to his purpose. He knew not how to perform the task. But after some quiet years with his God, who was teaching him how, he came home, to erase from Hebrew existence the bondage of a Pharaoh.

But we would quote illustrations from a person who was about thirty years of age. One Sabbath when he went to take a meal at the house of a member of the council who was a Pharisee, they were watching him closely. There was a man in front of him who had dropsy. And Jesus said to the Pharisees and the experts in the law, "Is it right to cure people on the Sabbath or not?" But they made no answer. And he took hold of the man and cured him and sent him away. Then he said to them, "Who among you, if his child or his ox falls into a well, will not pull him out at once on the Sabbath?" and they could make no reply to this. (Luke 14.) Another illustration. They said to him, "John's disciples observe frequent fasts and offer prayers, and so do the disciples of the Pharisees, but your disciples eat and drink." Jesus said to them, "Can you make wedding guests fast while the bridegroom is with them? But other days will come, and when the bridegroom is taken away from them, in those days they will fast." He used also this figure in speaking to them:

No one tears a piece from a new coat and sews it on an old one, or if he does, he will both tear the new one, and the piece from the new one will not match the old one. And nobody puts new wine into old wine-skins, or if he does, the new wine will burst the skins and run out, and the skins will be spoiled. New wine has to be put into fresh skins. No one after drinking old wine wants new, for he says, The old is better.—Luke 5: 33-35.

And there are gathered together unto him the Pharisees, and certain of the scribes, who had come from Jerusalem, and had seen that some of his disciples ate their bread with defiled, that is, unwashed hands, for the Pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash their hands diligently, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders; and when they come from the market place, except they bathe themselves, they eat not; and many other things there are, which they have received to hold, washings of cups, and pots and brazen vessels. And the Pharisees and the scribes ask him, Why walk not thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat their bread with defiled hands? And he said unto them, . . . Ye leave the commandment of God and hold fast the tradition of men. And he said unto them, Full well do ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your traditions. For Moses said, Honor thy father and thy mother; and, He that speaketh evil of father or mother let him die the death; but ye say, If a man shall say to his father or his mother, that wherewith thou mightest have been profited by me is Corban, that is to say, Given to God; ye no longer suffer him to do aught for his father or his mother; making void the work of God by your tradition, which ye have delivered; and many such like things ye do. And he called to him the multitude again, and said unto them, Hear me all of you, and understand; there is nothing from without the man, that going into him can defile him; but the things which proceed out of the man are those that defile the man.—Mark 7: 1-15.

Over and over again did this same man Jesus say, "Ye have heard that it was said, . . . but I say unto you," and each time did he give us a higher moral law to observe. He feared not to question the old order, to modify it, and to put it on a higher level. In his revaluation of the contemporary religious practices, he took his evidence from the old, and was thereby able to appeal to the more vital parts of the Word, as opposed to the tradition of men. More than that he was willing to assert upon his own strength, "Ye have heard that it was said, . . . but I say unto you."

A Martin Luther was told that the church had the right to say what should be considered canonical in the scripture. But he went back to the discussions of the church fathers of the fourth century for his evidence, and further asserted that the Holy Spirit would witness to each individual heart what writings should be considered canonical. All who are acquainted with his history know what courage it took to pronounce this higher moral law, viz, that each individual was entitled to the witness of the Spirit.

A John Wesley dared stand out against the formal, ritualistic religion of his day, and proclaim a gospel of moral observance. That was a bold thing to do. The prophets of all ages have tried to ethicize religion more and more, but the established priests of their day have always proclaimed that religion was more than ethics, more than social relationships, and the more, which they generally have had in mind is the formal rituals, which have become merely a form, and which they wish the people would believe as efficacious to propitiate the gods. Wesley dared to challenge the conformists of the Established Church with all its formalism, both of ritual and of creed and came forward with a religion of ethics.

A Joseph Smith took upon himself the privilege of actually examining the claims of the ecclesiastical organizations of his day in an endeavor to determine what his own procedure should be. And out of the whole experience he was able to proclaim that God still converses with his children. A new light in the darkness was this, all because one young man, a fourteen-year-old, dared to examine the evidence, and determine for himself rather than accept what was told him, or to apathetically accept one or the other creed as his.

We do not feel like stopping giving illustrations of this method of our youth obtaining his moral and spiritual life without giving some illustrations of movements among the youth in general. Again we would remind our reader that we are not necessarily agreeing with youth in his conclusions; but whether we will or not, he is thinking about moral and spiritual standards, and that with an intensity that spells earnestness and progress.

Some Large Revaluating Movements

Just now there is quite a pacifist movement among youth throughout the entire world. It probably is somewhat of a reaction against his offering up his life blood in the recent world tragedy, and coming home to find that his sacrifices have been in vain, that old statesmen do not see the world as a world, but still as warring nations, each seeking its own economic good. He is making his appeal to the life and teachings of the lowly Nazarene. Youth is exclaiming, "Orthodox adult society made such a botch of its work, that it had to call upon youth to save; youth, the best blood of the world, to save it from chaos. This orthodox, formally religious adult society led us into Flanders Field, from which many of us never returned. Even we who have returned find that orthodox adult society is still running the world in the same old way. As we, youth, once saved the world in its catastrophe, we will now save it from its internal enemy, its orthodoxy. While some of us may accuse him of a lack of loyalty to our Government, perhaps it is his critics that are not loyal enough; for anyone who thinks our Government is good enough is not loyal in the best and truest sense. Loyalty should be to what our governments and social relationships should be, and not to what they are. Our loyalty then becomes one and synonymous with our loyalty to God. But whatever his conclusions, the writer has no fear but that human love will have the greater expression in the long run.

Should we step into a Communist meeting, or a Socialist meeting, or a Labor meeting, or most any kind of a so-called progressive meeting, one will find that it is some young "intellectualistic" who is standing up in front proclaiming to the audience that our present governments protect private property at the expense of human lives; that our governments are willing to conscript the poor man's life to protect it; but they are unwilling to conscript the rich man's property; that neither "private property" nor "constitutions" nor anything else are "sacred" unless they serve all of God's children; that unless constitutions protect God's children rather than rich men's property, that unless private property is made to serve the whole of humanity they must be changed, altered until they do; and unless they can be so altered, they must go down in favor of something which is really "sacred"; that is, which can serve God's children, whom God made of one blood, all the nations of the earth.

Youth, especially Protestant youth, is becoming almost intolerant of ecclesiastical differences. He says, "Away with your Methodism, your Presbyterianism, and your formal differences which keep you from actually following the injunction of Jesus to love one another." He is even saying, "Away with your differences over the Person of Jesus, for Jesus did not ask us to worship him, nor to exalt him, but rather to follow him, and practice his teachings." This attitude is especially prevalent in the Dominion of Canada, but is seen elsewhere.

Particularly during the last three decades has youth been concerning himself over the difference in ethical values and culture as found in the Holy Scriptures and as found in existence in civilized society to-day. We gave illustrations of these differences above. Up until three decades ago, youth has had the tendency to be apathetic, or even to throw the Bible away entirely. Our fathers can easily remember the prevalent infidelity of the latter third of the nineteenth century, largely as a result of the seepings of higher criticism into the popular mind, and as a result of an ethicizing of God which got its impetus in the latter half of the latter century. We spoke also of this movement before in these articles. But in the last decades youth has not been content to throw the whole Bible away just because it was impossible to square the ethics of an ancient Israel with modern democracy. He has not been content to lose entirely a Bible which has many high spots of ethical and spiritual utterances, as Amos, Micah, Hosea, Jeremiah, Isaiah, and Jesus, as well as many others. The general movement has been to find the solution for the differences in a hypothesis of social evolution, that humanity has with more or less undulation progressed upward in its morality, and that the Bible records the progressive inspiration of the race toward the one universal ethical God. Some of our Protestant evangelical youth have not been content to rest with the feeling that Jesus represents the Climax towards which the Scriptures are tending as their fathers would like to have them, but have proclaimed an advance since the day of Jesus, and that yet to-day God is continually and progressively revealing himself to mankind, in a Saint Augustine, a Martin Luther, a John Wesley, an Abraham Lincoln. This does not come very far from being similar to the outstanding contribution of Joseph Smith, jr., so far as promoting an understanding of God's relationship to us in these modern days.

But even in our own church, there seems to be a youth movement. In its organized form it has been appearing as young people's conventions, both by the church as a whole and by districts and reunions. Its organized form had its incipency in the activity of certain young people's classes in Independence to carry on some meetings for the young people. From there its organization has spread out to other districts and branches, and has culminated in conventions for the general church. But organized movements generally follow rather than precede a philosophic movement. After a philosophic movement has given an impetus to organization, the organization may then tend to go along and increase by virtue of its own impetus, many adhering to the organization without particularly appreciating or being aware of the philosophic movement which gave the stimulus. Such are the facts in our present youth movement, according to the writer's opinion. But what is the philosophic thought which gave impetus to this organized youth movement? It was a dissatisfaction which some of the older men engendered into the hearts of the young men of late teens and twenties in age during the second decade of this century; a dissatisfaction with the wide difference between our ideal of a social world and the gait at which we were approaching it. Speaking metaphorically, if we were still east of the Jordan, when were we going to cross the Jordan into the promised land? This dissatisfaction was enhanced because the young man saw in the social world around him a cry for a reconstructed social world, and he thought if we had the theoretical remedy, why did we not move out and practice it? These young men have passed on their dissatisfaction to those still younger, by a few years, and now the movement has sprung out into an organized form. It may now be carried along with its own impetus, many taking part merely because of the joy of participating with their fellow youth in a movement in which they seem to be the principal actors, rather than because of a deep appreciation of the philosophy which gave the impetus. It is not our place here to pick out the dangers of and for the movement. It is our purpose here only to describe it sufficiently to show it up as an illustration of our method which we are now describing of how youth acquires his spiritual life. Youth has been doing some thinking; he has been doing some comparing between how he thinks we ought to proselytize, and how we are actually doing it; comparing between what he thinks we ought to preach to outsiders and to members and what we are preaching; he has been doing some comparing between what we are actually spending our time studying in our Sunday school and Religio and what he thinks we ought to spend the time with in order to accomplish this reconstructed society, this Zion. It may be that in his reaction against that with which we have been occupying our pulpits and Sunday school classes, he is unduly prejudiced against an eschatological religion, with which he thinks our older men are chiefly concerned; and it may seem that an eschatological religion is essentially antagonistic to a social reconstructive religion more largely because of an intensified feeling for or against the youth movement rather than because of any essential antagonism.

Some Features of This Method

So far we have tried to illustrate copiously this method. We have tried to illustrate it in all its aspects, in subject matter, in degree of success in arriving at conventional conclusions, and at higher than conventional conclusions, in degree and effectiveness of thinking exercised, and with emotional setting. We shall now try to bring out some of its general features as shown up by the illustrations. As we delineate each feature, it may be well for the interested reader to go back and examine each illustration to see if he can find that feature as an essential factor in the illustration.

In the first place, of course, there must be a problem, a dilemma, a need of choosing. This much exists in the third method. There a problem confronts the person, but he meets it apathetically, and in accordance with authority or his desire to have the approval of those with whom he is meeting the problem. But in such cases it is presumed that the problem or dilemma comes to the child without any effort of his own. It comes to him from extraneous sources and by extraneous forces. But if the person should actively engage in a hunt for problems, for differing standards of morality and spirituality, he has advanced to the fourth method. Such a search for differing standards is quite possible. Men, instead of being satisfied with their own religion and what it tells them, have gone out to study Comparative Religions, in which they discover the standards of other religions. Our illustrations of the youth movement in China will illustrate this. These young Chinese have taken the initiative somewhat in discovering the differing standards. Of course extraneous forces had a large part to play in starting these young Chinese into hunting for differing standards.

In the second place, this method involves a comparison of standards. In this it departs from the third method. It involves a search for evidence which helps one to tell which is the better standard. This evidence will be gleaned from both the present and past life. A study of not only contemporaneous ethics and religion will be made, but of past ethics and religion. Of course any person may stop short of trying to get all the evidence possible, or he may pick out certain evidence and leave other evidence alone. Consequently it involves also a willingness to hunt evidence, a willingness to hunt facts, and then to permit such facts to influence one's decisions. It involves furthermore an ability to differentiate between facts and theories, facts and postulates, facts thoroughly proved, and facts not so thoroughly proved; it involves recognition that theories and facts blend into each other with no perceptible division line between them. Many of our illustrations will exhibit instances where the person has stopped short of getting all the facts and relevant factors to a decision.

In the third place, this method involves coming to a tentative decision, and trying that decision out as one's standard. It involves an energy to carry out the decision in one's life. This is, in another word, the principle of faith. Many a man goes so far as to say that such and such standards are his, but he does not try them out. These are those of us who preach one standard and practice another. In that case we have taken the third method. But when we actively engage in trying out our decision in actual experience, we are using the fourth method.

Even after one has made his decision and is trying it out, it involves a constant reexamining of the evidence, especially the evidence as developed by the trying out of the decision, to see what effect it may have upon our further decision and our further procedure. It may at times involve an entire reexamination of our decision.

All during the process it involves some degree of fellowship with the person who thinks differently than we do, in order to get his evidence and to understand his point of view. It involves fellowship not only with those who are living contemporaneously with us, both those agreeing with us, and those disagreeing with us; but also fellowship with those who have lived before our day; fellowship with Joseph, Moses, the Gracchi, Cæsar, Amos, Jeremiah, Ezra, Jesus, Irenæus, Saint Augustine, Saint Jerome, Martin Luther, Shakespeare, Milton, Napoleon, and thousands of others, not that we shall hear only what they have to say that favors us, but also that which disfavors us.

This matter of fellowship involves some problems. Shall Socialist fellowship with capitalist? Shall Negro fellowship with white man, or white man with yellow man? Shall men associate with women on equal terms? Shall Christian fellowship with Mohammedan? Shall Catholic fellowship with Protestant? Shall Latter Day Saint Sunday school boys fellowship with Methodist Sunday school boys? Shall we encourage Boy Scout troops of mixed religions, or with one religion only? Shall we continue to favor the public schools where our youth mix with youth of other churches? Shall our boys fellowship with harlots? What is the principle involved in order that this method may be used effectively, if it can be used effectively at all?

We would like to include one more feature. This method involves an understanding of ourselves, our motives, our natures, our feelings, our prejudices, the ways we are influenced, etc.

When we come to that part of our discussion where we shall discuss our opinions of these methods, which we as a church should use, how we should use them, the advantages and limitations of each for the accomplishment of a Zion, we shall have occasion to discuss these features in detail. We here briefly delineate them in order that the reader may begin to see the problems involved in the use of this method, its limitations, its advantages, its difficulties, its dangers. Some, perhaps, would not want to rely upon this method at all. Others would want to use it almost entirely. Others would use all under varying circumstances and in varying degrees.

Beauty

Athens had her public art treasures, and eighteenth century England her charming rural beauty; and these were unforgotten assets. Beauty is an ultimate good, because it augments the joy of life; whereas an ugly, hideous environment causes restlessness and social discontent. We need beautiful houses, beautiful villages, cities, and country sides, and beautified industrial areas. The elimination of smoke, cinders, rubbish, and hideous advertisements—the use of flowers, paint, statuary, architectural art, landscape gardening, and community planning—would go farther than we imagine toward making life quiet, happy, and satisfying. A beautiful country gives the impression of being a great country; whereas a ramshackle, run-down, weed-grown, littered country gives the impression of disintegration. To this objective we should divert more of our economic surplus.—Ross L. Finney.

NEWS AND LETTERS

Protracted Meetings Are Spiritual

EAST SAINT LOUIS, ILLINOIS, November 22.—Brother Richard Baldwin has just concluded a wonderful three-week series of meetings here. The branch has experienced a spiritual uplift, and many nonmembers are investigating the work. Two have been baptized.

Brother Baldwin has preached each evening except Saturday since November 2, and has given about forty patriarchal blessings, besides visiting, with his wife, many of the Saints in their homes. Sister Baldwin has also helped us greatly in our Sunday school.

Brother Baldwin covered the following subjects in his sermons: "A living church," "What is your life?" "Come, let us go to Gilgal," "Builder of right character," "The modern stumblingstone," "Are the days of prophets past?" "God's kingdom—one way in or many," "Who has power and authority from God?" "A living faith is needed for a living world," "Discarding Christ, throwing out the steering wheel," "Church organization," "The invitation," "Is it scriptural to expect revelation from God in this age?" "Why were former days better than these?" "Restoration of the gospel," "Obedience."

President Frederick M. Smith preached Sunday evening, November 23, to a large crowd.

Macon, Missouri

November 24.—Macon Branch was well represented at the district conference which convened at Bevier, Missouri, November 1 and 2, at which time Brother Reese Jones was ordained a priest and Mr. and Mrs. James Burchett were baptized. This conference is one long to be remembered. Many of the Saints were pleased to meet Apostle E. J. Gleazer and hearken to the words of encouragement given to parents and words of admonition to the boys and girls. He preached two very fine sermons and was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

Evangelist Richard Bullard held a week's meetings here recently. On Wednesday evening the prayer service was held as usual, and Brother Bullard spoke under the inspiration of the Spirit, admonishing them to come up higher and push forward in the work. His visit to Macon will be long remembered.

District President E. F. Robertson and Missionary J. W. A. Bailey have been here at different times, occupying the pulpit, so the local members of the ministry have been having quite a vacation. Elders A. R. Moore and S. J. Joyce are back in the harness ready to thrust in the sickle with all their might, praying that the harvest will be great and that Macon will again be put on the map and become the hub of this district. Two babies have been blessed in the last two months, and three little girls have been baptized.

The Embroidery Circle meets the first Tuesday of every month, and the girls—little, big, and old—are learning to sew and embroider in order that they may be of service in the home or church or wherever their lot may be cast. Also the Department of Women is doing all it can to help raise money for branch expenses, etc. A food exchange was held at Joyce's Grocery Store, the proceeds going for the upkeep of the church.

Wednesday evening, November 19, a goodly degree of the Spirit was present, and thirteen out of the seventeen present prayed and testified of the goodness of God. The young people also spoke of their responsibility to attend prayer service. Prayer is the keynote to success; may we all pray in faith unceasing that this thought may be instilled in the hearts and minds of every young person, that when the old are called to lay their armor down the young will be ready to take up the work and not only stand in the congregation and sing, "I'll go where you want me to go, I'll be what you want me to be," but speak the words with sincere hearts, consecrating their all for the establishment of God's work and the redemption of Zion.

The senior class of girls and their teacher are going to give a pie social Friday evening, November 28, the proceeds to go for Christmas offering. Also a committee has been chosen to arrange for the Christmas program.

Elder A. R. Moore and wife have been visiting in Kansas City and Independence, Missouri, for about ten days. Sister Dorcas Clark of Independence was in Macon on business and was a visitor at the prayer service Wednesday evening. Visitors are always welcome at Macon.

Clitherall, Minnesota

November 25.—In spite of a blustery day on November 23 a fair number of Saints came out to hear District President George W. Day of Bemidji. The forenoon was occupied with prayer service and the annual business meeting. Brother Day gave some very timely advice during the prayer service, urging the Saints to honor the different officers in their calling, from the First Presidency down to the humblest local officer. He made the remark that he was glad to recognize the fact that he has superior officers.

The former officers were sustained, the only change made being in electing J. W. Peek as janitor. Upon his reelection as president of the branch, Brother Lester Whiting asked for the active cooperation of the Saints in their daily lives, that they might live so as to attract, not repel, nonmembers.

Brother Day preached in the afternoon on the need of living careful, prayerful lives, and said no progress could be made without overcoming obstacles, and that every strong character was the product of hardship.

Owen Sound, Ontario

November 23.—Since last reporting to the columns of the HERALD, our branch has been favored with the opportunity of entertaining the district institute, which convened October 25 and 26.

The institute opened Saturday morning at ten thirty when those who had gathered united in prayer to God that his Holy Spirit might be present in the various meetings of the institute and that all things might be done in harmony with his will.

Following the season of prayer, Sister Blanche Edwards, whom those in charge of the services had been successful in arranging to have with us, was introduced to the Saints and addressed them using as a topic "Promoting religion." In the afternoon she again spoke on the Department of Women. In the evening the assembly was entertained by a volunteer program under the supervision of Musical Director George T. Furness.

While the primary object of the institute was to assist the Saints to gain a wider vision of the work of the various departments, the Saints, when assembled Sunday morning for prayer service, remembered the afflicted in body as well as our limited understanding of the work we are engaged in.

Sister Blanche Edwards talked to the gathering twice on Sunday explaining religious education and junior work in the church. She was able to convey many new thoughts to the minds of the people, which were very much appreciated by them. It is believed that the departments will take upon them a greater vision, and a more constructive program will be realized as a result of her being among us.

Among our visitors were Bishop A. F. McLean and family, also Elder Whitehead, of Toronto. Their presence was very much enjoyed.

Sister Edwards left Sunday evening by motor for Wiarton and Port Elgin where she addressed gatherings of the Saints.

The musical and Sunday school departments of the branch are preparing a cantata, "The coming of the King," for Christmas entertainment.

We must inform the many friends of Elder J. L. Mortimer that his physical health is little improved since we last wrote.

Moorhead, Iowa

November 26.—A nice sum was netted to the Department of Women from the dinner and supper which they served on election day. The annual bazaar will be held on December 13.

Evangelist U. W. Greene is now conducting the third week of a series of meetings at the local church with increasing interest. The attendance has been good considering the harvesting of the corn crop by the farmers. Roads and weather have been excellent for this time of year. The sermons have been very spiritual and have assisted the Saints much in making proper preparation for the upbuilding of Zion.

As many questions had been handed in, Tuesday evening, November 25, was set apart for a round table talk and answering the questions, which proved very profitable. Brother Greene announced that on the evening of the 26th, it being Thanksgiving Eve, he was going to call upon different ones for short speeches on what they had to be thankful for. A Thanksgiving address was given by Brother Greene Thanksgiving evening.

Sister J. N. Mann, of Decatur, Nebraska, visited last week among Saints in and near Moorhead. She was taken to her home Sunday, November 23, by Brother Earl McIntyre and family.

District President Joseph Lane has made our branch several calls during the past month. He is always a welcome visitor among the Saints.

Brother Ammon McIntyre has been absent from home all fall, as he has been building a house for his son Charles and family who reside on a farm near Bronson, Iowa.

Sister Holda Hendrickson has returned to her home with her daughter, Sister John Adams, after spending a few weeks with Sister Dena Mortensen since the death of her husband.

We miss from our services the kindly face and presence of Grandma Bollinger, as she has gone to spend the winter with her daughter in Nebraska. About twenty-five Saints met at her home at the close of the evening service a few days before her departure to bid her farewell. Light refreshments were served by the self-invited guests, and a beautiful prayer was offered by Brother Greene in behalf of our aged sister, that God's care might be with her.

Sister Nellie Larson, who is a teacher at Humboldt, Iowa, is at present visiting home folks and taking a short rest, as her health has been poor of late. Brother Frank Larson was called last week to Colorado to be with his wife, who on account of poor health has been spending the past few months there.

Sister Perry Mann entertained a group of friends on the afternoon of November 18 in honor of Sister Arvilla Blackman's birthday. Sister Mark Jensen on the same day entertained for dinner Grandmas Bollinger, Townley, Larson, Johnson, and Conyers, in honor of Grandma Bollinger. The ladies' ages ranged from seventy-two to eighty-nine, although they term themselves "the girls." Fine times are reported from both places.

Warton, Ontario

November 22.—Since our last report we have had the privilege of attending the institute held at Owen Sound, at which Sister Blanche Edwards lectured on certain subjects. Her lectures and talks were very inspiring as well as educational. The following Monday night, the Warton Saints had the privilege of listening to Sister Edwards's lecture on "The opportunity of the home." Anyone securing her services in this line especially will never regret it.

Brother W. C. Elliott of Owen Sound preached in our church here the evening of November 9, on "Thanksgiving." The church was quite well filled, and Brother Elliott is to be complimented on the talk he gave.

Elder J. Yager has been holding services here during the past week. Next week he intends to start another series at Harriston. Our other missionaries, Elders P. Farrow and S. G. St. John, are at Rainy River and Chesley.

Some in our branch are installing radio sets and hope the church will soon have the new broadcasting station erected so we can listen to sermons and programs from Zion.

Burlington, Iowa

November 24.—Sunday morning, November 23, a large audience enjoyed a program given by the juniors. The children especially seem to enjoy these services. Song number 108 was sung by the parents as an invitation to the children, and they were answered by the children singing the third verse of the same song. A group of six girls gave the text for the hour, "A little child shall lead them," which was taken from the Bible reading found in Isaiah 11: 1-7. The Bible reading was by Theodore Kunz, who was recently ordained to the priesthood at the district conference. Elder G. Scott Daniels explained the reading to the children in such a simple way that they enjoyed every minute of his talk.

The first father and son banquet was held at the home of E. F. Kunz, 414 South Central Avenue, Thursday evening, November 20, at seven o'clock, with thirty-two present. Following the banquet a program was given. Elder G. Scott Daniels was toastmaster, and Elder Amos Berve of Nauvoo was the principal speaker of the evening. H. F. Broman and E. R. Williams gave short talks, and a solo was sung by H. F. Broman. The evening was enjoyed by all present.

The series of services conducted by Elder Ammon White came to a close on November 2. The morning service was the regular sacramental service, which was enjoyed by all present. In the afternoon Brother White gave us a heart to heart talk with a continuation of the same spirit which was enjoyed in the morning services. In the evening was the regular preaching service, the closing meeting of the series. These meetings were the source of much strength to the Burlington Saints, and we hope to be able to have Brother White with us again sometime for another series.

Brother A. R. Daniels and wife, of Cameron, Missouri, are here visiting their son and family.

San Francisco, California

November 24.—At our sacramental meeting November 2 we had with us Apostle D. T. Williams and Elders E. B. Hull and Virgil Etzenhouser, missionaries. It was a good, spiritual meeting, enjoyed by all.

The same evening Apostle D. T. Williams began a series of meetings to last for one week. Fourteen of the members made house to house calls, leaving tracts, with an invitation to attend the meetings.

A social was held November 6 at the home of our branch president, John A. Saxe. Refreshments were served, the proceeds to be used for building our social hall on the rear of the church.

November 9, College Day, collections were taken in the Sunday school, Religio, and church, netting $25.

Our district held a two-day meeting November 15 and 16 at Irvington. We had with us President Elbert A. Smith and Apostles D. T. Williams and Roy S. Budd. There was a good gathering of the Saints and friends, and services were much enjoyed. It has been many years since Brother Elbert has been with us, and everyone was glad to meet him and listen to his teachings. Arrangements were made for campers, and the food served was excellent. Services were held in the city for those who could not get away. These services were in charge of Cecil Smith, deacon, and L. B. Parish, priest, preached. They were a success.

Other preachers here of late have been Apostle Roy S. Budd, and Elders Virgil Etzenhouser, J. A. Saxe, and George S. Lincoln. All is going nicely here, and the Saints are working in harmony and peace for the spread of the gospel.

Sioux City, Iowa

November 24.—At the regular priesthood meeting held November 2, plans were effected to hold like meetings the first Tuesday evening after the third Monday of each month. A constitution and by-laws have been drawn and passed by the fifteen members of this organization. It has not been decided just what shall be taken up as a study, but church history, Doctrine and Covenants, and Rules of Order have been mentioned.

District Superintendents J. A. Gunsolley, Mrs. Doctor Kennedy, and Mrs. Myrtle Crabb, of the Sunday school, Department of Women, and home department, respectively, visited this branch in their official duties the 16th. They had real messages that were received very kindly.

Troop 17 of the Boy Scouts has been reorganized, with former scout, C. Franklin Rich, as scoutmaster. Troop 17 is the only five-year veteran troop in the city, having given continuous service for six years. The veteran insignia will be sewed on the troop flag in the very near future.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Keairnes and Frank Keairnes of Gallands Grove and Mr. Maurice Spence of Cherokee have recently come to this city.

On the 13th a real old-fashioned "Harde Tyme" social was sponsored by the Temple Builders. A good time was enjoyed, and friendliness was magnified by the informal nature.

Mr. A. C. Croft, inventor of a very successful wireless corn-planter attachment, was baptized by Elder W. W. Baker Sunday, the 16th. We are glad to welcome Brother Croft as one of our number.

Our quota of $56.28 in the radio fund has just about been met. We are glad at this place to know that the angel message can be sent to the world by this modern method.

Elder Roy Parker and family, of Des Moines, Iowa, visited here during the past month. Brother Parker always feels that he is coming home when he comes to this city. At one time he served as pastor of the branch.

Missionary Charles J. Smith has been holding a series of meetings at Wagner, South Dakota. He has baptized a number at that place. It is hoped that a branch will be organized there in the very near future, together with its departments. Elder Benner, of Walthill, Nebraska, is moving there.

Kingston, Missouri

November 27.—The Saints here are still striving to go forward with the work. Brothers O. W. Okerlind and T. W. Curtis have been with us about two weeks and preached some fine sermons. They also preached several nights at Cowgill about twelve miles southeast of here. That is where Brother A. M. Baker debated with William Freeman Jones last February on church propositions. Elder Jones represented the Church of Christ, nonprogressive. Brother Baker certainly made some friends for the cause, for when Brothers Okerlind and Curtis went there three weeks ago the progressive division of that church furnished them with a nice church building in which to hold meetings, and their minister came out to hear, and offered prayer and assisted in opening the meetings, while his wife presided at the organ. We hope that the seed sown may bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of God.

Since our last letter two have been added to our number by baptism.

Sister Ford, wife of Elder J. T. Ford, peacefully passed away this morning. They were of the Oakdale community. May our heavenly Father cheer each sorrowing heart.

We pray God's blessing on each effort that is put forth for the advancement of his work. Brothers McPeck and James Dawson held services at the Wakenda Branch last Sunday.

Cherokee, Iowa

November 28.—We are glad to report that interest in all departments is on the increase, and the attendance at Sunday services is much better as a result of united effort on the part of all the Saints.

October 26 was a grand day, with a large attendance at all services. All seats filled for Sunday school was a new record. In the afternoon about thirty Saints drove out two miles to a beautiful spot on the banks of Mill Creek, where Fredric Luloff was baptized by A. R. Crippen. A song service was held, and short talks were made by Elders J. T. Spence and W. W. Reeder. This outdoor service was much enjoyed by all present.

The contest for new members and increased attendance being conducted by the Sunday school is showing good results. At present the Greens are a few points in the lead. On November 23 every seat was filled for Sunday school and morning preaching services, and the large audience gave excellent attention to the sermon by W. W. Reeder on, "What are your handicaps?" in which the speaker showed that not all handicaps are physical, but that we have a good many spiritual handicaps as well.

Twenty-five Saints from our branch attended district conference at Mallard, Iowa. The long drive was made in severe cold, but the spiritual feast we enjoyed while there far more than repaid for the effort made. The entire conference was a spiritual feast, and the gift of tongues and prophecy given answered the prayers and desires of some new Saints who had not yet enjoyed these blessings. The good, helpful sermons by President F. M. McDowell and Apostle John F. Garver will not soon be forgotten.

Our first cottage prayer meeting for the winter season was held November 9 at the home of Brother and Sister Evans. There were twenty-five present, and a great manifestation of the Spirit was enjoyed. We always enjoy these cottage meetings and believe much good comes as a result of them.

Thanksgiving prayer service was held at ten o'clock in the morning at the church. There was a small attendance, but we were greatly blessed and encouraged by a prophecy through Brother Crippen exhorting the priesthood to greater efforts, also to all the Saints to be more faithful. Brother Vernon Spence was told to prepare to work in the priesthood in the near future.

The Department of Women held a fine meeting November 13, at which it was decided to give twenty dollars to the radio fund and ten dollars to Graceland College. The women are planning a lot of work for the winter months.

The Sunday school is planning to give a Christmas tree and entertainment Christmas Eve.

Tawas City, Michigan

November 24.—Several from our branch drove to Whittemore October 15 to attend the chicken supper given by the Saints of that place; and on November 2, although a cold, blustery day, two carloads drove to Oscoda to attend the all-day services there. Good meetings were reported.

On November 17 Elder W. A. Somerfield was called to Whittemore to preach the funeral sermon of Brother Ambrose Wismer, formerly of Whittemore but lately of Flint.

District President Matthew Umphrey was a welcome visitor in our branch last week. All-day services are to be held Thanksgiving Day, and we anticipate a good time, as we are looking for Brother Umphrey and one of the district missionaries, Brother G. W. Tomlinson, to be with us.

Sister Laur and her daughter Iris of Bay City are making their home in our city at present and are regular attendants at church services. Brother and Sister Will Lake visited relatives in Tawas City Sunday.

Last Sunday afternoon Brother and Sister George A. Pringle drove out the hemlock road to call on Brother and Sister I. L. Fraser and family. Brother Fraser is an invalid, having had infantile paralysis some six years ago. He now sits in a wheel chair day after day, but he is cheerful and always hopeful. He needs the prayers of the Saints.

Davidson, Oklahoma

November 29.—The Davidson Saints feel they have much to be thankful for this Thanksgiving because of the advancement that has been made this year. There are only a few who are not up and doing, and nearly everyone is busy in at least one department.

The Department of Women meets Wednesday for their Bible study, and at a recent roll call each one told something she was thankful for. How good it makes one feel to hear them say, "Above all things, I am thankful for the gospel and the love we have for one another."

A number of the Saints met at the home of Brother and Sister John Parker for Thanksgiving dinner. Brother Parker's father, who is eighty-four years old, furnished the turkey. His mother is seventy-eight. Elder S. W. Simmons, of Holdenville, Oklahoma, was present and offered the prayer of thanksgiving.

In the evening a few of the Saints met at the church for a Thanksgiving prayer service and enjoyed the Spirit of the Lord. One of our young men was told by the Spirit to prepare, for the Lord had a great work for him, and two young married women were told that they would be the means of bringing many into the kingdom, and the Saints were promised a leader.

The Temple Builders are very active and help in all the departments. They are getting along nicely with the study of the Book of Mormon, and recently they put on a two-act play about prayer, which was very fine.

The Department of Recreation and Expression class is doing nicely and some fine programs are being put on.

The Saints are paying in their tithing. At least most of them have awakened to this duty.

Modesto, California

November 28.—During the past month the Saints of this place have been enjoying a lovely fall and general good health.

October 9 a harvest festival was held at the church. The pulpit was beautifully decorated with grape vines with bunches of grapes hanging on them, bunches of corn and cornstalks, melons, squashes, and pumpkins, all banked with flowers.

At the Sunday school hour, after a general review of the school, a program was given by the children, who did well. At eleven o'clock an address was given by Apostle D. T. Williams, and at half past twelve a hot dinner was served in the basement, to which all did justice. Elder Dawson, of Sacramento, California, was the speaker at half past two, after which a talk by Apostle D. T. Williams on Graceland was followed by a collection for our school, amounting to $12.52. A very interesting session of the Department of Recreation and Expression, with a short program, was held at a quarter of seven, after which Apostle D. T. Williams gave us another good sermon, ending a social and profitable day. There were a number of visitors from near-by branches.

Brother D. T. Williams held preaching services during the week, which made friends for the cause and strengthened the Saints. Brother H. W. Patterson made the branch a present of $500 on the church, which was very much appreciated. We hope to have more to pay on it in the near future.

The Sunday school is doing well, also the Department of Recreation and Expression. Attendance seems to be continually increasing.

The Department of Women have had one sale and will have another next month to help pay the debt on the church. When that is all paid off things will go more smoothly.

Machias, Maine

December 2.—Elder H. A. Chelline came here from Jonesport, Maine, and held a series of meetings recently. These meetings were quite largely attended for a small community and were greatly beneficial to all.

The Saints of this branch had a shooting match and supper Thanksgiving, and supper was served to the shooters at six o'clock. Baked beans, brown and white bread, clam chowder, and pickles were served, and after supper pie, ice cream, cake, candy, and corn cakes were on sale. The sum of $32 was cleared, and a very pleasant time was reported by all who attended.

Duluth, Minnesota

December 2.—The gospel flag is still floating over some earnest workers in this, a portion of God's vineyard. The faithful ones will always be found doing their part, whether in assembling together in the different services or bringing succor to some one in need, either physical or spiritual.

Our pastor, Brother C. B. Freeman, on the morning of November 9, spoke to the Saints with an appeal to come up to higher ground. Brother P. G. Schnuckle spoke in the evening to a good crowd.

Another precious soul was conducted into the kingdom of God November 16, the pastor officiating. Although we were compelled to cut a hole through the ice in order to fulfill the ordinance, we shall never forget the peaceful expression on the face of Sister Helen Lundeen as she came out of the water, realizing more and more God's promises to protect those who walk in his ways and strive to keep his commandments. Brother W. C. Stauty preached the morning sermon, urging the Saints to let their light so shine that others might see their good works and glorify their Father in heaven. Brother Freeman spoke again in the evening, bringing light to God's people.

On November 30 Brother W. E. Shakespeare surprised the Saints by arriving and spending the day with them. He preached twice for them and gave a short talk to the Sunday school. The priesthood also met again on this day and received more light on carrying on the duties of the servants of God.

The Department of Women is planning to hold a fancywork sale December 6 at one of the stores, as the basement of the church is not yet in shape for their accommodation.

The Sunday school is planning a Christmas entertainment, and the committee appointed is progressing nicely in their work.

Some of the young, with older members, gather every Sunday morning except the first Sunday in the month for prayer service. Though at first not many results were obtained, it looks now as though the service is gaining momentum, and a more active part is taken. What greater results can be obtained than by prayer? Christ has said, "Pray oft, and never faint." We ask the prayers of the Saints for the young of this place, as they are not coming forward as they should.

May the contention that is prevalent in the church cease and love and peace reign supreme.

Akron, Ohio

The annual home-coming of the Akron Branch was celebrated November 30, with about three hundred in attendance. The meeting was a decided success. The principal speakers for the day were Bishop Charles Fry, recently appointed to Kirtland District, and William Patterson of Australia.

Under the directorship of Charles Romig, the Barberton Branch orchestra furnished some pleasing selections throughout the day. Under the direction of Myron Kelsey, the Akron choir gave two special numbers, and Myron and Alice Kelsey sang "Watchman, what of the night?" Also Mary Sikuti sang a special solo, which was very much appreciated. J. J. Dildine sang a baritone solo, "The Book of Life," words and melody of his own composition, arranged by S. B. Mansell, of Dover, Ohio.

An entire program was rendered November 16 by the Romig family orchestra of nine pieces. It is unusual to find so much talent in one family. The program was a splendid one, and included vocal, violin, tuba, and clarinet solos of merit; a cornet and clarinet duet; and full orchestra numbers.

Oakland, California

November 28.—President Elbert A. Smith was given a hearty reception by the Saints of Northern California at an arbor-day gathering held on the reunion grounds at Irvington November 15 and 16. This gathering was in accord with the will of the last district conference, that two-day meetings be held in various localities to replace the spring conference.

The date of the outing was planned to coincide with the convenience of Brother Elbert and the apostles assigned to this territory, R. S. Budd and D. T. Williams. After the dedication services, in charge of District President J. D. White, were over, Brother Elbert turned over the first ground, which opened activities. Ten of the thirteen branches of the district were represented, most of whom had prepared for the occasion by bringing trees and plants with them, but there were plenty of plants to go around, and each branch had its particular spot to beautify. Those who were not interested in horticulture played games or spent the time in visiting. The weather was ideal.

At seven o'clock in the evening the banquet hall was thrown open to the people, who filled the tables to overflowing. After all were seated, the hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds," was sung, during which our guest, Brother Smith, and the speakers for the occasion, entered.

After prayer by Brother Woods of Fresno, dinner was served, which was followed by a program. Brother Virgil Etzenhouser, Bay District missionary, acted as toastmaster and called upon Apostles Williams and Budd and Brother Elbert, whose talks were interspersed with music. The whole performance was delightfully impressive. After the banquet accommodations for spending the night on the grounds were offered all who cared to stay.

During the prayer service Sunday morning Brother Smith voiced a spiritual admonition to the young folks which was indeed encouraging.

Many Saints came from surrounding territory to the Sunday morning preaching service who could not attend the banquet the night before. This meeting was so successful we look forward to others at close intervals.

Lachine, Michigan

November 27.—We have been enjoying a series of meetings held by Elder E. N. Burt of Onaway for the last two weeks. Two more were added to our number November 23, when quite a number gathered in spite of the cold to witness the baptismal ceremony.

We were sorry to learn November 23 of the passing of Brother C. Ford, who leaves a wife and brother to mourn. Also Sister Hall of Alpena was recently taken to her last resting place. Although we all have many things to try us, we have many things for which to be thankful. One great blessing we have here is a warm little church to go to every Sunday, which is kept ready by our faithful deacon, Brother Cole.

We have a good Sunday school, which is followed by prayer service, with preaching in the evening, and another prayer service on Wednesday night.

A Thanksgiving Day service was held the evening of November 27 in charge of Elder A. Guy of Hillman. We also had a short visit from Elder James Blackmore and wife of Detroit November 16.

May the blessings of love and charity remain with us, and may we all be found ready when the Master comes in the prayer of your sister in this great work. S. PUSHMAN.

Anamosa, Iowa

November 28.—Just a few lines to say the Saints of this place have been having a feast of spiritual food, of which we were sadly in need. Elder Leonard Houghton gave us a few very inspiring sermons which were very helpful, adding a few words of encouragement. He is truly a sincere and humble servant of the Master.

Next came Elder E. A. Davis and wife. Brother Davis is a true missionary and seems to have just the right message at the right time. But when we try to express our sentiments regarding Sister Davis we have to pause a moment, for it is hard to tell of all the beautiful truths she drove home in her earnest way. She spoke of the duty and privileges of a mother in the home, especially in regard to the family altar; also in regard to cheerfulness in our offerings of all kinds. If a thing is given grudgingly, it is not acceptable to the Master. No spiritual blessing can come from unwilling service.

Sister Davis also spoke on all parts of the work of the Department of Women and the pressing need for Latter Day Saint mothers, young and old, to study and be ready to occupy at any time, in the home and otherwise, in an acceptable and constructive way.

May God bless each one to do his duty so that he may lead us all to higher ground.

MRS. FRANK LEAPER.

Simcoe, Ontario

November 27.—Simcoe Branch is still on the map, with Elder Dickhout in charge, though we were sorry to lose Brother and Sister Martin; also Brother Archy Turner, who went to his father.

We have some afflicted ones in our midst. Sister Sovereign is sorely afflicted, and Brother Sovereign would like very much to have a patriarch sent here, as he and his wife greatly desire their blessings, and Sister Sovereign desires administration. There are also others here who desire their blessings.

Sister Helen M. Sovereign was married last Saturday to H. Prittle.

Some here have recently been interested in the angel's message, and we ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may set a good example before the world, that many may be gathered into the fold.

El Reno, Oklahoma

December 2.—We are privileged to listen to testimonies in our prayer services that afford the strongest evidence of the power of the gospel to change the very nature from corruption to a peaceful and upright life. One year of church life affords more real pleasure than all the previous life in a round of so-called worldly pleasure. These are proving their sincerity by being always at the prayer meetings and taking part.

The Sunday school here is preparing for a suitable Christmas entertainment under the care of a competent committee.

Thanksgiving was observed here for the first time in the history of the branch by a service at half past ten, consisting of singing and a short talk by the pastor. After the service Sister Terry and I were taken to the home of Sister Reeves, whom I met in Kansas when Brother I. N. Roberts and I were there on a mission forty years ago. She made us welcome and gave us a sumptuous Thanksgiving dinner.

Brother W. A. Connell occupied the morning hour Sunday on "The eternal purposes of God." The Sunday school and Religio were well attended. The Religio is studying the regular quarterlies with good interest. Sunday night the pastor was greeted by a good attendance. The theme was "The perfect law of liberty as a mirror," as spoken of by James. We had some visitors from Alaska at this meeting.

We are pleased to announce that Brother G. C. Lewis has changed his plans and will remain here for a time at least. Brother Lewis occupies well as our Sunday school superintendent.

Among our faithful attendants at our Sunday services we mention our two extensive Oklahoma farmers, Brother H. K. Rowland and Brother H. V. Piatt, and their faithful companions. They each have some two hundred acres in small grain, but they hold their church interest first in importance. They report crops looking quite well.

We have been competing with Zion and California in good weather, which has been ideal to the present time. To-day is cloudy, and the wind is from the south. Several of our members are in the cotton fields, but the harvest is about over, and we look for their return to our church services. One county, Pottawatomie, in Oklahoma, will market about 35,000 bales this year.

J. M. TERRY.

Fall River, Massachusetts

December 1.—Elder W. A. Sinclair, president of the Southern New England District, was a speaker of recent date. His sermon gave the Saints material for much serious thought. He was accompanied by his family, and Sister Sinclair played the organ in the absence of the local organist. Brother Alma Coombs was the morning soloist.

Local speakers have been Pastor James W. Heap, Elder John Rogerson, Priest Moses Sheehy, Teacher William Baldwin, and Deacon Alma Coombs.

The pastor and a few of the members attended the departmental conference at Providence, Rhode Island, in October, and some will make an effort to restore the Religio.

The Department of Women held their sale of fancywork and served supper November 22, realizing about $150. The Temple Builders and Sunday school each had a booth, and the affair was largely attended by Saints and friends.

The Temple Builders had a Halloween party to which the boys were invited. The boys voted them fine entertainers. They especially enjoyed the lunch. Florence Sheehy and Gertrude Howlett received the costume prizes, while George Nickerson received all other contest prizes. Much merriment was caused in finding the ring, thimble, and button in the cake. The boys continue to meet and have a good time Friday evenings.

It was advertised that Elder O. L. Thompson would hold a series of meetings at Fall River beginning November 13, but at the last moment he canceled this date, as he was tired in body from holding services at Dennisport and New Bedford. It is said that the interest was good. The Saints were greatly disappointed, as invitations had been sent out, and it was impossible to notify all on such short notice. Brother Thompson is expected here December 3. He is liked by all.

Sister Margaret Henderson is busy rehearsing the children for the Christmas play.

Sister Florence Sheehy entertained her Sunday school class of young children on her birthday, November 29. The children had a wonderful time, and all had a turkey filled with candy to take home.

The church has recently been shingled with fireproof shingles. This is a much needed improvement, of which the Saints can be justly proud.

Successful Convention at Rock Island

(The following is an excerpt from a letter written by Elder E. R. Davis, of Kewanee, Illinois, to the First Presidency.)

We just closed a very successful young people's convention at Rock Island, beginning Thursday night, November 27, and closing Sunday night, November 30. The attendance up to Saturday night was rather small, but Saturday night and all day Sunday we had a full house, and on the whole the convention was more of a success in this our first effort than we expected it to be. There was a wonderful spirit present all through, and during the whole of Saturday forenoon during the prayer service and the two class periods the good Spirit was present in great power, so that everyone was in tears most of the time. We feel that this has been one of the best things that this district has ever had.

During this convention we had one program, three prayer services, four class periods, and five addresses. Brother McDowell presided at two of the prayer services and at two of the class periods and delivered three of the addresses. Sister Blanche Edwards presided at two of the class periods and delivered two of the addresses. Besides the above, there were several recreational activities in charge of Brother E. A. Curtis, two baptisms, and two confirmations.

The messages brought to us by Brother McDowell and Sister Edwards were wonderful and inspiring from beginning to end. In presenting the program of our church and in putting it across to the people so that they can grasp it, and in rousing and stimulating the interest of the young people, Brother McDowell is without a peer in the church. In making the people actually feel the message, in getting close to the people, and pouring out her very soul to them, Sister Blanche Edwards has no equal. She is one in a million. There is no other woman in the church that can take her place.

Alliance, Ohio

December 3.—For more than a year the Saints of Alliance have had no place of meeting except the homes, but on Sunday, November 16, we met in our new quarters on the third floor at the southeast corner of Seneca and Main Streets, entrance on Seneca Street. We feel we were fortunate in securing this place on our main street, just two squares from the Pennsylvania Railroad depot and one square from the interurban depot and public square. So those who wish to visit us, don't forget the place and that visitors are always welcome. Our hours of services are: Sunday school half past nine; morning worship, quarter to eleven; and evening service, half past seven. Wednesday evening prayer service in the homes.

Our district president, Elder George Neville, met with us Sunday evening, October 26. We enjoyed his visit and hope he can come again soon.

Our pastor, Elder R. A. Smith, attended the ministerial conference in Cleveland November 9 and 10. He reported good meetings and felt the time was well spent.

There were no services here on November 30 because of the home-coming at our church in Akron which some wished to attend. We feel enough cannot be said of the good done by these gatherings, especially to the branches situated as we are. Listening to the testimonies of the Saints and the struggle they had to get the work established, when they were few in number like ourselves, it gave us courage to face our difficulties and renewed energy to strive to put our work on a firm foundation in this place. As we think over the events of the day, the thoughts brought out in our Sunday school lesson, the excellent sermon by Bishop Fry in the morning, the stirring admonition given by the district president in the afternoon service, with the testimonies of such men as Elder J. C. McConnaughy, Patriarch A. R. Manchester, and Missionaries William Patterson and W. C. Neville, as well as the many others, we feel that truly we had the very cream of human enjoyment. We were unable to stay for the evening service because of the icy streets and the snowstorm which was raging, having thirty-five miles to drive. But though the storm raged, till at times we could not see our way, yet our hearts were warm and glad for the experiences of the day. God help us to add to our numbers here till we can entertain our brothers and sisters in a like manner, and hasten the great home-coming which we all look forward to in Zion, the beautiful.

Groton, Connecticut

December 4.—New London Branch has recently been favored by a visit from Bishop M. C. Fisher and Elder E. H. Fisher, of Somerville, Massachusetts. An interesting discourse was delivered by Bishop Fisher Sunday evening, November 16. The theme, "Zion and its establishment," is one of inexhaustible interest to the Saints here. The statement was made that we must learn to love and tolerate each other, and it was exemplified in the story related by Brother Fisher of a group of people of Maine who demonstrated the spirit of good fellowship, and in their everyday life "pulled together."

The Saints look forward to another visit from the Fisher brothers. The inspiring thoughts and presence of such men of the church are indeed appreciated and welcomed.

Brother and Sister John E. Blastow are in Miami, Florida, for the winter, and according to report Sister Blastow would be pleased to meet with some Saints if any are residing there.

Mapleton, Kansas

December 2.—Our district superintendent of Recreation and Expression, Miss Helen Hawley, and Sister Mabel Martin, superintendent of the Department of Women, made the Mapleton Saints a visit recently. Miss Hawley showed the necessity of recreation as the learned people of our Nation see it, also giving the aims of the church for this department. Sister Martin showed the necessity of well-informed mothers to be able to save the nation and church. Their talks were enjoyed by all.

The ladies' aid gave a program, bazaar, and supper Thanksgiving night, which was well attended. Everybody enjoyed the supper, which consisted of roast turkey, goose, duck, and everything that goes with it to make a Thanksgiving supper complete.

The series of meetings announced for some weeks ago was postponed on account of the Christians or Campbellites beginning meetings. It was thought best not to try to hold two meetings at the same time. However, Brother Lee Quick began his series last Sunday night, and so far there has been good attendance and interest. It seemed Satan tried to frustrate these meetings, as Brother Quick had quite an accident on Tuesday. He was riding on a wagon with a hayrack on it and his foot slipped, giving him a fall which fractured two of his ribs. The Saints all felt very much discouraged over the prospects of the outcome of our meetings, but Sunday Elders J. E. Hughes and John Graham administered to him, and the Saints all united their prayers in his behalf, and when preaching time came that night Brother

Quick was in the stand. He has been able to continue with the meetings, and the Saints feel to praise our heavenly Father for his goodness.

The Methodists had held a three-week meeting and won about eighty converts. Then the Christians converted about twenty. If we do not get any, we hope to get some to see the difference between truth and error and hope to reap a harvest in the future.

Independence

Stone Church

Apostles Paul M. Hanson and J. F. Curtis returned to Independence last Friday morning from their trip abroad in the interest of the church. Brother Hanson spoke Sunday morning at the church, giving an account of his trip to Palestine and Egypt. He spoke especially of the fulfillment of the times of the Gentiles, and compared Palestine now with what it was when he was there in 1906 before the Turks were driven out.

Brother Curtis found on his return that his son, Earl, had been operated on the night before his arrival for acute appendicitis, but reports are that he is doing nicely.

Bishop A. B. Phillips was the speaker Sunday night on the fundamentals of religion.

Bishop James F. Keir was at Lamoni during the week on church business. Bishop I. A. Smith has also been out of town attending to legal matters in western Iowa.

The Messiah Choir, composed of members from all our churches in this vicinity, including Kansas City Stake, is working hard on the "Messiah," which is to be given December 28. The production this year promises to be the best ever given here.

Second Church

Elder Joseph Luff delivered the morning sermon to a large congregation, some of whom were visitors from other parts of the city.

The afternoon prayer service was saddened by news arriving soon after three o'clock of a very sad accident which occurred soon after two o'clock to Brother and Sister H. H. Campbell, who were going from town to the Stone Church to prayer meeting, having been to the photographer to have their picture taken for the children's Christmas. Before they had succeeded in getting away from the main part of town, a speeding car ran up on the walk to avoid a collision with another car and struck both Brother and Sister Campbell. Sister Campbell was very seriously injured, suffering a fractured skull and many bruises, for she was dragged quite a distance. She is at the Independence Sanitarium in a very serious condition. Brother Campbell suffered some cuts and bruises, but is not considered to be in a dangerous condition.

Sunday evening's song service was conducted by Brother Earl Audet, and the sermon by Pastor C. Ed. Miller on the Book of Mormon drew a congregation which filled the house to its capacity.

More than eight hundred dollars have been raised in the drive to liquidate the indebtedness of the Second District. It is hoped to reach the goal before Christmas.

Walnut Park

Sunday speakers were R. S. Salyards at eleven o'clock and J. W. Peterson at half past seven.

At Tuesday evening's business session, Glauđ A. Smith, at present the local Sunday school superintendent, was nominated for pastor, and Guy Reynolds for caretaker.

On Wednesday evening, the 17th, instead of the regular group prayer meetings, the groups will meet together at the church at eight o'clock for a half hour's prayer service, followed by election of department heads for the coming year.

The Englewood Band will play at Walnut Park on Friday evening, the 19th, in place of the eight o'clock Religio session. These band concerts are usually well paid for, but as several Walnut Park people are members of the band this program will be given free.

Liberty Street

W. H. Kelley was the speaker Sunday morning, the main theme of his subject being the disobedience of the early Saints and why they were driven out of Jackson County.

Patriach Richard Bullard preached at night on the fulfillment of the prophecies of Isaiah. There was a good crowd out to enjoy his very fine sermon.

Englewood

There was a very fine feeling at the branch business meeting held last Wednesday for the election of officers for the coming year. At this time Brother J. E. Warne was chosen to succeed himself as pastor, and Brother Robert Clow was elected custodian.

Elder J. V. Roberts, of Enoch Hill congregation, was the speaker Sunday morning, and Elder Lyman Fike occupied in the evening.

East Independence

Brother A. H. Parsons, the pastor, was able to be present again Sunday, after an absence of some weeks. He was the speaker both morning and evening.

A business meeting of this congregation will be held Wednesday night to elect officers for the coming year.

Holden Stake News

Buckner and Sibley

The Buckner and Sibley groups are trying in our weak way to live the gospel law and demonstrate the greatness of it by letting our lives show what it has done for us. The interest in our services seems to be greater each week, and the Lord has blessed us often by the gift of his Spirit in words of comfort, instruction, and direction to us individually and collectively.

The Spirit has indicated those the Lord desired as officers in our group. We feel truly thankful for all these as well as many other manifestations of his love, and we are determined to keep on trying, even though we often make mistakes.

Brother R. B. Cook, our pastor, met with an accident in which his leg was injured. This incapacitated him for work for a few days, but he is improving and hopeful to be out again soon.

Atherton

Sunday, November 31, the primary department gave a very fitting little program to remind us to take an inventory of the many blessings throughout the year, after asking the question, "Are we thankful?" We truly are thankful for what God has permitted us to enjoy.

Our place of worship has been beautified in the interior—the walls retinted and the wood work revarnished. Brother J. B. Hiffner deserves the credit for this, and the sisters for the cleaning of windows and floors.

We had with us both morning and evening, Bishop Albert Carmichael of the Lamoni Stake. He talked on the stewardship program and the necessity of organization preparatory to the redemption of Zion. We had a very appreciative audience anxious to learn of God's laws.

Lees Summit

The Lees Summit Saints were privileged to have Brother C. F. Scarcliff, stake superintendent of Sunday schools, with us Sunday, November 31. He gave us two good sermons. In the afternoon Sister Strathers gave us a talk concerning the Kirtland Temple. It was very interesting.

Sunday morning, December 7, was sacrament. A splendid meeting was had. The voice of the Spirit was heard admonishing the Saints to be more faithful, to be more exact in their deeds, and live closer to God; then we would receive greater blessings.

In the evening Brother Arthur Allen preached concerning the first coming of Christ. We hope he will come again and tell us of Christ's second coming. The young folks are busy preparing for our Christmas program. The choir is putting forth an extra effort to learn some Christmas anthems.

East St. Louis, Illinois

December 11.—President Frederick M. Smith preached here Sunday evening, November 23. This was the first time a great many members of the branch have had an opportunity to see or hear the Prophet, and we were certainly glad to welcome him.

Elder Clarence Dickens was the speaker Sunday morning, November 13, and Elder Henry Brunkhorst, branch president, spoke at the evening service.

On December 7 we had a grand sacramental service, with many of the young people and new members of the church testifying. The pulpit was occupied in the evening by Elder George F. Barraclough.

The young people of the branch are preparing a play for Christmas, "The Messiah cometh." Sister Elsie Barraclough is the author and director. It is very good, and we hope to make quite a success with it.

Glasgow, Montana

December 2.—A few of the Saints were not able to attend our district conference at Andes November 8 and 9 on account of sickness. Our district president could not attend because his wife has been in the hospital very low for several weeks. We are all praying for her recovery.

Elder Chase and a couple of the sisters accompanied the writer by automobile, leaving Glasgow at midnight and arriving at Andes about ten in the morning. Conference was not large in attendance, but a good spirit prevailed, and all went home feeling it had been a profitable time. It was rather a home gathering to the branch secretary, Brother Earl Wilcox, as there were nineteen of his relatives present. Elder G. W. Thorburn had the usual amount of spirituality, and all enjoyed his talks and sociability very much.

On November 16 Brother Joseph Sandidge addressed us in the evening, beginning by calling on several to give three reasons why they believe there is a God. One answer was: By what I see, hear, and feel. Another: By reading the Scriptures and history of the fulfillment of scriptural prophecies. By nature and by enjoying the presence of that Spirit which is promised us if we do the will of Him who sent Christ. Another stated that Ingersoll and other agnostics had proved the existence of a God by trying to prove otherwise. Ingersoll, after all his doubts, declared when standing at the foot of his brother's grave, "In the hour of death, hope sees a shining star and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing." Then how much better if we carry along through life with us a hope of a supreme Being and a Ruler of the universe, who, when all is over, will give a reward to the justice of all rather than have before us nothing but doubt. Brother Joseph's talk was enjoyed by all, and we hope the occasion for another will soon come.

The Religio is in a position to be developed. Several meetings have been missed during the last two months, and at present we are holding meeting Sunday evenings to favor another body that is practicing in the hall for a play to be given December 11.

The Sunday school is very progressive, especially in attendance. We have selected a committee to have charge of the entire Christmas program, and they have gone willingly to work.

Several of the members are diligently practicing on musical instruments, and we still hope to see Glasgow Branch with a good orchestra. There are now forty-six members enrolled in the branch.

Wichita, Kansas

The best conference ever held in this district convened here Saturday and Sunday, October 4 and 5, with a good representation from each branch and group in the territory. Elder C. E. Wight of Lamoni Stake, also Elder C. E. Harpe, our district missionary, were with us.

The lectures and preaching of Brother Wight were of the highest order. He presented in his lectures a social viewpoint of the church, its doctrines and organization; while in his sermons he presented the doctrine of stewardships in a way that was greatly appreciated by our people. It gives us much encouragement to see the way the people received the idea of stewardship as presented by Brother Wight. Brother —, a man of some means, expressed himself as being much pleased with the idea and inquired why there is so much delay in putting this wonderful scheme into practice. It makes me heartsick when so much good time is going to waste when our people should be educated in the way of stewardship. In one of the big churches down town a young man talked about "putting the stew in stewardship," which it seems to me this church must do soon. We believe that men of the type of Brother Wight should be sent to all the districts and branches throughout the church.

We believe the people in this district are making progress in that the group spirit is being developed among them, and I can see they are growing to have a better appreciation for a social interpretation of the church and its objective than when we first came among them. I was told by some of the good people when I first came that I was not preaching the gospel when preaching along this line, but now we hear no such expression. I am encouraged in the work here.

THOMAS S. WILLIAMS.

Byron, Oklahoma

December 1.—Elder Charles E. Harpe preached here two weeks, and the people certainly enjoyed it.

A group of live Saints from Hardtner, Kansas, gave us a surprise when about eighteen came down in a truck forty miles. They are a live bunch, full of the Spirit. We were rather discouraged, but when these people came and gave us a warm refreshment, it gave us new life, and the people of the country could see that the Saints have something the world does not have. I know it made me one hundred per cent stronger than I was before. These Saints certainly deserve great commendation for the help they gave us.

necessary to qualify us in this important department of church work.

"All are called according to the gifts and callings of God unto them." Efficiency should be our slogan along every line. The Lord has told us through his prophet that the hastening time has come for the gathering in of the precious fruit of the earth into the church or kingdom of God.

Central Michigan is blessed with a great number of exceptionally intelligent, energetic young people, and we want their cooperation in the Master's work. God is calling you to service, and we want trained, spiritual teachers and consecrated superintendents and workers in every Sunday school.

Abraham Lincoln said he freed the slave that America might be a free country, not only in name but in deed. We are anxious for the Sunday school to become a department of the church in very deed; therefore, we request branch presidents and the officers of every department to cooperate with us to bring the work up to a standard of greater efficiency.

Brother Earl Burt, of Saginaw, assistant superintendent of the district, will have charge of the teachers' training department and the organized class work. Both Brother and Sister Burt spent one year in Graceland College, and can be of great service to you along this line of work. They will be very glad to give you any information concerning this part of the work you desire.

Fellowship in Christ

AN EDITORIAL FOR CHRISTMAS DAY READING

There are human needs and cravings more fundamental than the primary desires for food, shelter, and clothing. When these needs are not satisfied, food may lose its flavor and the finest housing become distasteful.

Man naturally craves human association and fellowship. Robinson Crusoe found food and made good enough shift for clothing and a house. His animal needs were satisfied. But the sight of a human footprint on the sands of his lonely island stirred his soul as none of those things had done. In fact, the perennial appeal of the Crusoe story is the dread fascination a story of utter solitude and isolation from human kind has for the imagination—with the possibility of escape and return to fellowship ever in mind.

A man may crave adventure and travel in strange lands. This craving satisfied, he may find himself among the most beautiful scenery and splendid surroundings utterly desolate and with but one longing in his heart, and that to be again a member of the loved home circle. He then realizes that to sit before the fire in the evening with his wife by his side—to tuck his small boy into the old trundle-bed—to hail some passing friend known for many years—such things mean much more to him than to view the Matterhorn or the Grand Canyon of the Colorado or to dine at the famous hostelrys of the world.

"Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home;
A charm from the skies seems to hallow us there,
Which seek through the world is ne'er met with elsewhere."

The old song never loses its appeal. And its appeal is due to the fact that home ministers to fundamental spiritual needs. Its ministrations are through fellowship.

Jesus himself seems to have suffered homesickness. Perhaps it was after a walk at night through the streets of some village during which he had looked in at open doors and windows to see happy families gathered about the family altar under the home roof-tree, that he said, "The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." He was homeless for us. And no doubt he sought comfort in the homes of the saints and in the fellowship of such as Mary, Martha, Lazarus, John the Beloved, and many others. Of these it is written, "Having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end." We, alas, quite too easily permit our love to be turned aside long before the end.

Jesus very well said, "Man shall not live by bread alone." Mohammed, who by us might be considered gross in his theological outlook, nevertheless said that if he had but one piece of money he would go without his dinner and buy a hyacinth with which to feed his soul. The spirit no less than the body must be fed.

The fellowship found in a happy home no doubt sinks deepest into our consciousness. It comes closest to us and is most constant. Then comes the fellowship of those tried and true friends whose habits and viewpoints are congenial—those who, found not wanting in time of need, are considered friends indeed—those who with us have shared the conflicts as well as the pleasures of life.

The man who has experienced filial, marital, parental, and fraternal fellowship has tasted the sweets of life. He has fed his soul. The love of parents, of brother or sister, of wife and children, of friends, these have made his life rich and full.

This desire for fellowship is everywhere evident. It is the moving force in most fraternal orders. It is sought, sometimes in vain, in clubs and societies. Even the saloon owed no small part of its lure to this natural desire. Most men drank, at least in their novitiate, because they could drink with some one. The man who came to drink alone for the sake of the drink was looked upon by his fellows with a sort of scorn. This is a fraternity of thieves and crooks and beggars. So both good and bad institutions recognize the eternal craving in human nature, and each in its way seeks to minister to or profit by it.

Jesus proposes to put fellowship on a consecrated basis. He makes it holy and admirable as well as strong and appealing. The home where both husband and wife believe and obey the gospel is truly a happy and blessed home. There the soul is fed in the truest sense of the word. Children growing up in such an atmosphere have an inheritance that is invaluable.

Friendship formed under and blessed by a common belief in and obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ bring a joy and comfort not elsewhere found. Ruth recognized that, when she said to Naomi, "Whither thou goest, I will go, and thy people shall be my people and thy God my God." Jonathan and David could develop their friendship along fine and noble lines because Jonathan could join David in his psalm, "The Lord is my shepherd."

My experience has been that among the many things the church has done for me, one of the best things has been to give me many fine and good friends, together with the realization that our common friendship is hallowed and blessed under the gospel bond: "Yours is gospel bonds" is an old-time expression that should not become obsolete.

Jesus himself has said, "I will call you friends." And he has said in one of our later revelations, "Let nothing separate you from each other." It may be difficult to preserve unchilled the ardor of pure friendship when there are radical differences of opinion. When minds run far apart it is not often that hearts beat in unison. And therefore, to our regret, too many of us do fail in this, and fellowship suffers diminution. In that we experience loss that is to be regretted. And we should at least try to minimize that loss. May we not look forward to a clearer and more mutual intellectual apprehension of truth under which fellowship will thrive better? "Sanctify them through thy truth." A mutual perception of truth brings minds together, and then hearts are in less danger of division, and sanctification is easier. Let us pray that our Lord will hasten the day of clearer vision.

In the meantime I doubt not Christ is just as willing and eager as ever to bless and sanctify our fellowship in all forms of its expression, and particularly so in our homes. Well may we subscribe to the sentiment of the following poem by Daniel Henderson:

Hymn for a Household

"Lord Christ, beneath thy starry dome
We light this flickering lamp of home,
And where bewildering shadows throng
Uplift our prayer and evensong.
Dost thou, with heaven, in thy ken
Seek still a dwelling place with men,
Wandering the world in ceaseless quest?
O Man of Nazareth, be our guest!

"Lord Christ, the bird his nest has found,
The fox is sheltered in his ground,
But dost thou still this dark earth tread
And have no place to lay thy head?
Shepherd of mortals, here behold
A little flock, a wayside fold
That wait thy presence to be blest—
O Man of Nazareth, be our guest!"

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Brighter Days Ahead

I awoke this morning with a start—mind alert—every faculty alive. It was as though some invisible Presence had suddenly roused me from deep sleep, summoning me to some definite and active service.

My environs: a berth in a west-bound Southern Pacific train. My destination: home. My purpose: a short respite from missionary labors; the holiday season spent with relatives and friends.

I retired last evening feeling unusually depressed and discouraged. My thoughts necessarily were upon the church and her distraught condition. I turned over and over in my mind the various issues on which there is division, seeking some satisfactory and amicable solution. My sleep was fitful and disturbed.

In my waking moments, I pleaded earnestly with our heavenly Father for light and understanding to know, and power to do, the right. I prayed that he would reveal the causes of our troubles and that we might have wisdom and grace and power to overcome them. I pleaded that the time might come when the ministry and membership might come to a common understanding of the mind and will of God, and that the spirit of fellowship and friendship and good will might once again permeate all the councils of the church.

I raised the blind, hoping that day had come. I was disappointed. The sky was drab and overcast; not a break anywhere. The darkness of the night was accentuated by overhanging clouds. The promise for the coming day was bleak and dismal. Musing, yet still conscious of an Intelligence which seemed to impel my reveries, I looked out upon the night. The moon was entirely obscured—not a star was visible. I could not conjure up a more discouraging or depressing outlook. And I soliloquized: "How like the present condition of the church!" As I reviewed the stormy scenes and troublous experiences of the past few years, I queried: "Is this a portend of the future of the church? Are we doomed, forever doomed, to cloud, and storm, and stress, and confusion, and darkness? And is there no surcease? And the Presence seemed to say, "Wait. Listen to the exhortation of the Dawn."

And, again I looked out into the night. I noted no change. I waited, hoping that I might receive something which would be an answer to my prayer. And, as I looked, far out towards the east I saw a faint streak of light, a momentary rift in the darkness. And then it disappeared, and the night settled down heavier and seemingly more dismal and gloomy than before. I continued to look, and, after a time, there was another break, larger and more distinct. It streaked the horizon, standing out against the blackness of the night.

This continued intermittently. Each recurrence of the light was more pronounced and of longer duration. The night stubbornly resisted the approach of the day. At times it seemed that the odds were with the night. But eventually the darkness was beaten back; the night withdrew; the sun came out of his hiding and the day appeared—the day, in which lie all the verities of life. And I heard as it were a voice saying, “The night must pass. The day is always superior to the night.”

As I continued to look, the sun rose above the horizon and flooded the desert and the mountains with light. At first there were canyons and depressions which the sun did not reach, but as it rose higher and higher the shadows disappeared, and, as if in keeping with the surroundings, the clouds were dissipated, and day in all its glory was revealed.

And the following thoughts were presented to me: The confusion and disorder within the church are due to a failure to observe the order of the church as contained in the law and in which the rights and prerogatives of the officers of the church are clearly indicated. Men must learn that they cannot further the divine purpose except in God's way. The church cannot be built up save it is upon the foundation which Christ himself hath laid. Before ever there was a man upon the earth, God formulated his plan. It cannot be improved upon.

Innovations have crept into the church, causing division among the ministry and membership. God cannot and will not acknowledge or bless any purpose which is at variance with his plan. Confusion will continue until the men of the church are willing to build in harmony with the order set forth in the Scriptures.

For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ.

For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jew or Gentile, whether we be bond or free; and have all been made to drink into one Spirit.

For the body is not one member, but many.

If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling?

But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body as it hath pleased him.

And if they were all one member, where were the body?

But now are they many members, yet but one body.

And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor can the head say to the feet, I have no need of you.

Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary;

And those members of the body, which we think to be less honorable, upon those we bestow more abundant honor; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness.

For our comely parts have no need; but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part which lacketh;

That there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another.

And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member is honored, all the members rejoice with it;

Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular.

And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.”
—1 Corinthians 13:12-28.

I was given to see that here the Apostle Paul anticipated our present condition. There should be no conflict in the church as to position and place and prerogative or function. Each and every official is necessarily a complement to every other official. There cannot be isolation or separation in functional activity. As in the human body, intelligence is not husbanded or centered in one organ, so likewise in the church inspiration is imparted to each according to his need, and power is diffused in such a way that individual expression is not hampered, but intensified.

The church is in God's keeping. His purposes will not be frustrated. This is the day of his preparation. Men are being tried as in a crucible. Those who, in humility of spirit, will seek to serve rather than to be served, and who will emulate Christ in giving themselves to minister to others rather than to be ministered to, will be chosen to carry on the work of salvation in the earth. It is by the way of Gethsemane and Golgatha, through surrender and denial, that men can become ministers for Christ.

And there came over me a spirit of peace and joy. For I know that the truth will triumph and no man or men will be permitted long to hinder the work of God. Men have their agency, and God gives them opportunity. If they build as he has directed, then are they blessed; if they permit ambition or worldly purpose to deflect them from the right way, they will, in time, be removed and others will take their places who will do the will of God, for “No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things."

The glorious day of God's power will yet come, when God will pour out of his Spirit upon the church, when the things which offend will be taken out of the way and the power and Spirit of God will be with his people. I am heartened and encouraged to press on in the service of Jesus Christ, looking always unto him as the head of the church in all things both in heaven and in earth.

Authority in Church Government.—No. 3

By some it has been supposed that because certain officers in the church are designated as spiritual authorities, and therefore have spiritual jurisdiction, such officers should not attempt to interfere in temporal affairs. This mistaken idea seems to be largely based upon the supposition that as the law of the church declares that the bishopric "should not be burdened with the spiritual care of the church," except when the bishop's court is required, it would follow that spiritual authorities should not be burdened with temporal affairs. Not only have previous quotations shown that this is not the case, but both revelation and practice in the church show that the bishop should consult these spiritual authorities and be directed and authorized to proceed in accordance with their counsel when certain important work is to be done. This is emphasized in the following revelation:

The bishop should be directed and authorized to proceed as soon as it shall be found practicable by consultation with the general authorities of the church who are made the proper counselors in spiritual and temporal things to carry out the provisions of the law of organization which are by the law made the duty of the bishop.—Doctrine and Covenants 128:9.

Various other instances also show that the spiritual authorities have temporal responsibility in the affairs of the church when occasion requires. They are declared to be counselors in both spiritual and temporal things, and as all temporal means are for doing spiritual work, it is evident that spiritual results are affected by the manner in which temporal means are used. Therefore without spiritual supervision of temporalities it would be impossible for the spiritual head to control spiritual work or its results in any effectual manner.

History and Work of Bishops

In the days of Moses, and subject to his direction, Aaron was appointed in charge of the temporal affairs connected with the tabernacle and outward ordinances, assisted by the priests and Levites of the lesser priesthood. In the New Testament church a change in the priesthood and law made it no longer necessary for one to be a descendant of Aaron in order to act in his priesthood. In Hebrews 7:12 we are told: "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." This change of the law emphasized the supremacy of the Melchisedec priesthood, and enabled the lesser priesthood to be chosen outside of the lineage of Levi and Aaron, without which no Gentile could have officiated in any of its offices.

The fact that a high priest after the order of Melchisedec may officiate as bishop in temporal affairs, even though not of the lineage of Aaron, has been noted. In the New Testament age bishops were ordained and placed in various cities, including jurisdictions among the larger churches of the time. Following the precedent of the church council held in Jerusalem in the time of the apostles, general church councils were held, at which, among other important matters, the rights of the various bishops were defined. For several centuries no bishop of the church held supremacy over all the others, and as late as A. D. 325 the church met in general council at Nicea and defined the rights of the three leading bishops, located respectively at Alexandria, Antioch, and Rome, as being equal or similar, each in his own jurisdiction. A strife for supremacy developed, however, that lasted several centuries, in which the bishops of Jerusalem and Constantinople were also at times involved. In the course of time the bishop of Rome, with the assistance of the emperor, obtained the supremacy over other bishops and finally gained control over the properties of the church. A series of disputes followed which resulted in a division of the church that has continued to this day, one being known as the Greek Catholic, and the other as the Roman Catholic Church.

When God restored his church through Joseph Smith, junior, bishops were provided for who should act under the presidency. Of this Joseph Smith states:

After the First Presidency, in point of time in the order of their calling, came the Bishop and his counselors, officers who were appointed to have charge and direct administration of the temporal and financial affairs of the church, under the counsel and general supervision of the First Presidency, the High Council, the conferences, and the immediate word of revelation. Many items used in our article on the First Presidency confirm this position.—Saints' Herald 40:177.

Responsibility of Bishops

In 1831 Edward Partridge became the first bishop of the church, being appointed by revelation. In the same year another revelation provided that other bishops should be set apart to act in a similar ca-capacity, to be appointed by the First Presidency in the following manner:

There remaineth hereafter in the due time of the Lord, other bishops to be set apart unto the church to minister even according to the first; wherefore they shall be high priests who are worthy, and they shall be appointed by the first presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood, except they be literal descendants of Aaron, etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 2.

The fact that other bishops were in due time to be installed who should "minister accorder to the first" shows that the presiding bishopric were not given sole charge of the temporalities of the church, for the temporalities were to be under the charge of all the bishopric. This fact is made plain in later revelations also, of which one revelation states:

The word has been already given in agreement with revelations long since delivered to the church, that the temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the Saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations.—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

Years before this time the president had inquired concerning this matter, desiring to know what should be the attitude of the church in regard to it, and had received a revelation which informed him what the procedure should be. This revelation, accepted by the church, states:

To this question I was answered, that the book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10 (April, 1902).

Some years later, in harmony with this instruction, "the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole," resulted in the preparation by the Order of Bishops of a book entitled, The Law of Christ and Its Fulfillment. This was issued to the church pursuant to a resolution of General Conference of 1910. In the book was included, in its fifth chapter, an article entitled, "Duties, responsibilities, and faith of the Saints," which had been issued by the bishopric as a special address, December 23, 1901, and contained a statement by the bishopric concerning the application of the law of temporalities.

Rights of People Protected

It may be noted that in the revelation just quoted, and given to the church the year after the bishopric had issued this address, the church was instructed that unless the people's liberties were jeopardized

"the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to." This revelation also provided that if attempt should be made to make application of the law in such a manner as jeopardized the liberties of the people, an appeal should be made to the three quorums provided for in the law, the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy. (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.)

A few have construed the statement that the temporalities are to be "under the charge and care of the bishopric," to mean that in temporalities the authority of the presiding bishopric is equal to that of the presidency. Such a construction is disproved, however, by the revelation which says:

Wherefore the office of a bishop is not equal unto it (president of the high priesthood), for the office of a bishop is in administering all temporal things: nevertheless, a bishop must be chosen from the high priesthood, unless he is a literal descendant of Aaron, etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 32.

Not only does the revelation place the charge of temporalities upon the bishopric as a whole, and not upon the presiding bishopric alone, but this charge is plainly declared to be subordinate, not equal, to that of the presidency. Neither is it outside of the jurisdiction of the presidency, for if so the word equal would have no proper application as given in the revelation just quoted. The unanimous decision of the Quorum of Twelve on this point indisputably supports this position, and declares:

Bishops can possess no authority which is outside of or superior to that which is exercised by the presidency of the high priesthood of the church.—Adopted unanimously by the Twelve, and sent to the First Presidency, March 25, 1918.

Precedents and Past Viewpoints

As the bishops can possess no authority outside of that exercised by the presidency, and their authority is not equal to that of the presidency, even a child should be able to understand that the presidency holds chief authority or directional control; otherwise there can be no control of the church work. Both the precedents and viewpoints of past church authorities are in harmony with this position. Early church history abounds with instances of directional control by the presidency over the work of the bishopric, at times being exercised in connection with action by the high council.

After the bishop came into office the president continued to exercise directional control in temporal affairs. In June, 1833, the bishop received written instructions from President Joseph Smith, junior, which concerned the taking of consecrations and inheritances. He also directed him in regard to matters which the bishop was to present to a council of high priests (Millennial Star 14: 450). In September, 1833, the First Presidency also met and appointed men to act for the "literary firm," which concerned publishing interests of the church.

The High Council and Temporalities

On various occasions the presidency took authoritative action concerning financial matters, at times presenting them for the decision of the high council. An instance of this nature occurred in May, 1838, of which Joseph Smith wrote:

President Rigdon and myself attended the high council for the purpose of presenting for their consideration some business relating to our pecuniary concerns.—Millennial Star 16: 151.

At least one item of the business referred to by Joseph concerned the providing of an allowance for their families while engaged in church work, the bishop being instructed by the council with reference to the matter. On July 18, of that year, a revelation was given concerning the disposal of tithed property as mentioned in a previous revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 106.) The Prophet Joseph records this later revelation as follows:

Verily, thus saith the Lord, the time has now come that it shall be disposed of by a council composed of the first presidency of my church, and of the bishop and his council; and by my high council; and by mine own voice unto him, saith the Lord. Even so. Amen.—Millennial Star 16: 183.

Not long after this revelation was given, action in harmony therewith was taken by the presidency the high council and the bishop's court, concerning properties in the hands of the bishop. At this time it was also unanimously provided by vote of this joint council:

That the bishop be authorized to pay orders coming from the East, inasmuch as they will consecrate liberally, but this is to be done under the inspection of the First Presidency. 4th. That the first presidency shall have the prerogative to say, to the bishop, whose orders shall or may be paid by him in this place, or in his jurisdiction.—Millennial Star 16: 204.

The Late President Joseph Smith

This financial supervision, which recognized the authority of the presidency above that of the bishop "in his jurisdiction," was according to the procedure generally recognized by the church from the beginning. No law which annuls this right has ever been established by the church, and no other custom has ever abrogated it. As already shown, and as will further appear, the assertion made recently, that the late President Joseph Smith did not claim this right, is not according to facts as shown by his own writings. Concerning the Temple Lot suit, he wrote:

That we failed because the church did not begin soon enough, was not the fault of the Bishopric. Some blame may possibly attach to the Presidency for not urging procedure long before, but the Bishopric proceeded as soon as authorized to do so.—Saints' Herald 45: 709.

Had not Joseph Smith recognized that the authority of the bishopric was not equal to that of the presidency in temporal affairs, the "blame" must have attached to the bishopric instead of the presidency. An editorial previously quoted (SAINTS' HERALD 40: 177), and other of Joseph's writings also show that directional control by the presidency over the temporal affairs of the church was the recognized rule of procedure. The new claim that the presiding bishopric are superior to these established rules and precedents of the church, is contrary to the law as accepted by the church and its leading authorities from the beginning, as the evidence submitted abundantly shows.

Special Charge to the Twelve

Soon after the late Joseph Smith became president of the church, a revelation was received authorizing the Twelve to exercise temporary supervision over temporal affairs, in order to assure the church that the Lord would not suffer the new president to squander the funds of the church (see Doctrine and Covenants 114). By a later revelation the Twelve were released from this charge, it being explained that:

The one whom I had called to preside over the church [Joseph Smith], had not yet approved himself unto the scattered flock; and I gave this command unto the quorum next in authority in spiritual things that the scattered ones, and those who had been made to suffer [by the apostasy. A. B. P.] might have assurance that I would not suffer that he whom I had called should betray the confidence of the faithful, nor squander the moneys of the treasury for the purpose of self.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 5.

This unquestionably proves that if the quorum "next in authority in spiritual things" had not been given special temporary jurisdiction over temporal affairs, the presidency could have squandered the "moneys of the treasury," because the presidency normally possessed chief directional control over temporal affairs. The revelation itself therefore recognizes the temporal jurisdiction of the presidency with power to "squander the moneys of the treasury"; otherwise the charge to the Twelve would have been a farce.

Our abiding conviction that this church, its laws, its ideals, its spiritual forces, and its priesthood are of divine appointment, is being tested and revealed in the measure of our service and loyal devotion. Every officer will be supported, each in the place to which he is called, so long as the Holy Spirit guides our faith, our actions, and our destiny. Under prophetic inspiration we have come thus far in our journey toward the Promised Land; let us not wander in the wilderness of reluctance, doubt, and hesitation.

Christmas Offering

In order to facilitate publication, Sunday schools will kindly send their Christmas offerings direct to this office as soon after December 25 as possible.

In other years, on account of the delays occurring by turning the funds over to the local solicitor and then to the local bishop and Bishop's agent, the names of some schools failed to appear in the Blue Stepping Stones until the following year. This is always a disappointment to the school. It can be avoided by following this request and sending the funds direct.

Following the custom of recent years, it is preferred that only the name of your school and the amounts contributed by it will appear in print. This greatly reduces the cost of publication.

Fraternally yours,

B. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Lamoni Electric Company

In a recent business letter from Bishop F. B. Blair, 811 Lydia Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri, he says, concerning the Lamoni Electric Company:

"This company is in a highly healthy condition. We have recently extended our lines and taken in the town of Pleasanton, where a good percentage of the inhabitants are Latter Day Saints. We now furnish service for Lamoni, Kellerton, Grand River, Davis City, and Pleasanton. The bonds we are issuing bear 5 per cent interest and are due in 1929. We consider them a very conservative investment, as they are secured by a mortgage on all the property of the company, amounting to more than $100,000."

The company is offering a small issue of these bonds, as is announced in the advertising columns of the HERALD, and as the management has been conservative from the beginning and has been operating for almost twenty years, it would seem Bishop Blair speaks within the facts when he says the investment is a conservative one.

Men are waiting anxiously for two good days, and when they come the aerial for the new station will be completed. Operating and battery rooms are finished, and the studio will be ready and in use by the opening of the New Year.

Equipment is arriving and many of the principal items are being placed. Some parts are still to be received. Prospects are that it will be possible to have the completed new station in operation by January 15, and then "Every ear shall hear" the gospel's joyful sound.

Is "A Strongly Centralized Government" Desirable?

BY C. B. HARTSHORN

Centralization of power is not peculiarly a modern institution in either church or state. It is, in fact, ancient and archaic. The scepter of king and monarch, the rule of patriarch and pope, are essentially of this type. The history of civilization is a record of the struggles of mankind to obtain rights of self-determination, or agency, individually and socially. It rises to sublime heights in the American Constitution, which supports "that principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before Me," as stated in latter-day revelation.

A recent HERALD article announces that the church has come to a time "when a strong authoritative leadership is its greatest hope and greatest need." This is indeed interesting. It is startling! We take it some new turn of affairs makes it imperative that a new kind of leadership be advanced. The old kind and the old way are inadequate. The dictatorships in Italy, Spain, and Russia are cited as evidence of support for this "hope" in the hour of need.

Let us examine the source as well as the import of this doctrine. Is it of heaven or of men? Will it bring us nearer to God and to each other? Does it accord with the "law and the testimony"? When these answers are given, our course will be clear for action.

The church is a theocratic-democracy. While this is admitted by all, the extent of our theocracy has been but little discussed. It seems to be taken for granted when God speaks to the church it will come by revelation through the prophet and be accepted by the church. Upon its acceptance, and not until, it becomes binding. Divine instruction given ninety or sixty years ago is just as theocratic as though received to-day. True, the rights to administer in the gospel ordinances are confined to the priesthood, but the inspiration and the gifts of the Holy Spirit are the common heritage of all true Saints. This is also theocratic. We become responsible for the light we individually receive, but not for the light another has received or claims to have received from this source. If God wants his church to change from its former democratic nature to one characterized by "a strong, authoritative leadership," then that is the kind of government I want. If he does not, then none of us want it, I am sure. The one is the antithesis of the other. Absolutism and dictatorships have no place in democracy. And as long as the theocratic element is functioning, priesthood dictation cannot exist.

Aspirants for the Seat of Moses

In an editorial on kingdom building (HERALD, July 15, 1881) the late President Joseph Smith said:

Kingdom making has been a favorite work with Latter Day Saints, and some rare work in this direction has been done by them. . . . [The efforts of Rigdon, B. Young, Strang, Brewster, Thompson, Morris, Davis, etc., are cited.]

We believe in the kingdom of God, and feel safe in permitting him to build and establish it forever; but we are now and have been for a long time opposed to the encroachments of kingcraft, and kingdom builders upon the gospel economy, and whose edifices fair though they may appear as they build, shatter into human ruins at the first touch of ambition and lust of power. No; aspirants for the seat of Moses and the throne of David have been numerous, before and after Shiloh came, but those who, through the preaching of the covenant, became the heirs of Abraham, may safely trust in the Captain of their salvation, the Prince of Peace, until he chooses to come and prove his title to be King of all the earth.

Those who want to place the church under "a strong authoritative leadership" of one who shall lead the church to-day "like unto Moses" in the twilight of civilization, will do well to ponder long on the above.

The goal which has more recently been set for this church can hardly be realized without embracing some of the evil effects of a dictatorship. Here it is:

If Zion is to be redeemed, if Zion is to be established, it is going to take a strongly organized, strongly centralized government. . . . You determine what are the laws he (the president) executes, even if he becomes absolute in his power as administrator of the law.—F. M. Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, March 3, 1920.

Three years later from this same official source comes this thought:

Our system of government and administration should be so flexible as to enable us to meet every emergency. As our work develops there must be ever-increasing power placed in the hands of the priesthood, for when Christ comes the kingdom must be in that shape that it will be ready to turn over to him.

It has been said that we should give "our leader" full authority and unhampered support to accomplish the big work before the church, and then "hold him answerable." But this seems to me to be trusting in "the arm of flesh" to an extent not warranted by the divine character of our work. Since God is in this work, we had better trust him to show his might, not man's.

"I will proceed to do a marvelous work . . . the wisdom of their wise men shall perish . . ." the Lord has decreed. If "a great program needs only a great leader to put it into operation" and all we members need to do is to "assent" to that program and leadership, the way seems indeed simple. But it is hard to tie these positions together. Faith in God and faith in man are frequently at variance. He told the elders in 1882, "I will hasten my work in its time," which rather indicates that human expedients are not necessary.

Those who desired a king in Book of Mormon times were so insistent, that a war was fought between the "freemen" and the "kingmen" to decide whether they should continue their "rule of the majority" or have a monarchical form of government. In the darkest days of the American Revolution, even after colonial independence had been won, Washington was urged by some to "say the word" and the power of the army would make him king.

Washington Resists Temptation of Kingship

True, it was a gloomy picture they held before him. That winter at Valley Forge had been very bitter. The army was only half fed and half clothed. The soldiers could not be discharged and sent home until there was money to pay them. Several months back pay was due. Congress was floundering under the magnitude of its new burdens, and its "scrip" money was "not worth a continental." Under these trying conditions the "Father of his country" was temptingly offered the "kingdom." Colonel Nicola offered the full power of the army to set up a government with Washington as king. Let us grant that the motive of the tempters was to find a way out for the "New World." Let us suppose that Washington had the personal qualifications, the vision, the powers of leadership to have promptly produced order from chaos; yet we must consider that upon this one decision the entire history of America would have turned, the fruits of a bitter war for freedom have been lost, and instead of being "first in the hearts of his countrymen," Washington would be classed with those who had betrayed the cause of liberty. Caesar, Cromwell, Napoleon, all were tempted by this dream of power, and each one of them either dallied with it and compromised, or yielded to it and fell.

Queen Esther saved the Hebrew race in the hour of its greatest need. Deliverance came, though, only when faith cried out in the extremity of her soul, "If I perish, I perish." If a crisis confronts this church, let us meet it with faith in God and not compromise by adopting a system which God has neither fashioned nor approved. It is not of heaven. It must be of men. The entire history of the church may turn on the result of a wrong decision on this point.

Modern Trend Away From Centralization of Power

An examination from the standpoint of government, industry, home, and school will substantiate this statement. On this point we commend Doctor Frank Carlton, who, in his book, The History and Problems of Organized Labor, says:

Centralization of power and of wealth in the industrial field is building up opposition to itself in obedience to the law that action and reaction are equal and opposite in direction. Trusts and large corporations reduce the relative number of employers and small business men, and increase the relative number of employees. The latter band together and, as labor organizations, demand a larger share of the increased earnings due to the economy of large-scale industry. The captain of industry will probably share the fate of the autocratic monarch. The Louis XIV view of business is being gradually replaced by the democratic constitutional form. The employee and the general public are being gradually admitted into the councils of industry. A manager may no longer do exactly as he pleases in business management. The industrial world is actually emerging, as did the political world, from its era of autocracy.

No better evidence of the decay of any "government of the people" can be cited than a calm submission to a dictatorship. When public service corporations become insolvent and are no longer able to operate, the courts appoint a receiver who, in a way, becomes a dictator over the institution as an agent of the State. When the people of any city, state, or nation, cannot or will not take care of their own business by the exercise of their powers of franchise, then, and then only, is a strongly centralized government, or some form of dictatorship, advisable.

The author of the article commending the creation of dictatorships as a voluntary and sovereign act of the people of Italy, Spain, and Russia, has certainly been misinformed. The Literary Digest for October 25, 1924, tells of the "stinging condemnation of Fascism in a resolution adopted by the Leghorn Liberal Congress," a political party in Italy. Further it quotes "Italy's most distinguished philosopher and critic" as saying: "Therefore Fascism, in my judgment, could not and should not be anything more than a bridge to lead to the restoration of a more strictly liberal regime in the frame of a stronger state."

From the same journal for November 15 we note this language: "Spain's disgrace in the eyes of the civilized world was the topic of violent speeches attacking Dictator-General Primo de Rivera at a dinner in Madrid presided over by a committee of political leaders. . . ."

Of Russia, we shall say little. For years reports have come to America, almost monthly, of the demoralization and dissolution of the soviet government. Whatever of virtue there may be behind the facts of the statement in the HERALD of November 19: "Poor socialistic, communistic Russia was never so bossed, and seems to be making some headway," the proponents of supreme directional control are quite welcome to.

It occurs to me that instead of claiming virtue for the people of these nations in accepting a dictatorship, that it should have been explained as a process in the war readjustment program. When a branch falls into disorder, the officer in charge may take arbitrary control of things for a season, but the measures which are justifiable in an emergency would be autocratic and intolerable under normal conditions.

Dictatorship in School and Home Disappearing

Student government is now quite common in our high schools and colleges. It is not an experiment in democracy; it is an essential part of training for citizenship and marks a distinct contribution in practical education. Elective subjects, the trend towards the practical in education in contrast with the old disciplinary theory which molded the school curriculum for over two hundred years, all negate the idea that the way of modern progress is in the direction of dictatorship. On this subject Professor John Dewey, in Elementary School Teacher, condemns the placing of supreme authority in the school superintendent for the selection of textbooks: "For no matter how wise, expert, or benevolent the head of the school system, the one-man principle is autocracy."

The home is also becoming more democratic. While many social workers admit that the home influence is weakening, yet none, so far as I can learn, advocate that we go back to the patriarchal order wherein the father or grandfather ruled with an iron hand, nor yet to the old English custom where the wife and mother were subordinated to the rank of chattels or property. Professor H. Kilpatric, in Teacher's College Record, on the subject of decline of Authoritarianism, says:

Authoritarianism in the affairs of men wanes to its death. The time was when kings held sway by a "divine right," about which their subjects were held to have no choice. Governmental control and its authentication were alike external. In recent times government increasingly derives its powers from the consent of the governed. External authority yields to internal authority.

Expert's Functions Are Subordinate

The theory of employing an expert to do our thinking, planning, and executing has a strong appeal for some. It is not altogether strange that even in the church, we should hear the advocacy of the doctrine, "Let the experts direct." That there is a place for the expert in business, state, and church is willingly admitted. That he should be given unquestioned control is unsound in principle and absurd in practice. As "wisdom is justified in all her children," the benefits of expert advice should commend itself to human judgment. Any form of coercion of the human reason is wrong and unjust. It is the antithesis of everything theocratic and democratic. The most clear, logical, and forceful presentation of the real situation that has come to my attention is that of Joseph Lee, in Atlantic Monthly, November, 1908. A few brief extracts will have to suffice at this time. He says:

It is true that the function of the expert will always be a subordinate function; that, though he can help you to carry out your purpose, the purpose must be forever, intimately and concretely, your own. His employment must always be to specific ends which you have prescribed, and not for general purposes; and even within the specific end the trust is always revocable. The one act of sovereignty that the mind cannot perform is to abdicate. . . .

And in all this question of when and how to trust, and whom to follow, though judging may in any given case be difficult, there is one comparatively simple test, and one that democracy very generally applies. . . . Does he appeal to your intelligence or against it? Does he say, "Use your mind, enter, examine, test, and draw your own conclusions"? or does he say, "That is a great mystery; keep out. Seek not to understand"? According to this test, the expert has been tried and has been found wanting.

Leader of Reorganization Condemns Centralization

The late President Joseph Smith, in touching upon the principle of centralization of power, condemned it in no uncertain terms. Of his many utterances, we present only one:

It has often been asserted, and with perfect consistency with truth, that one-man power was not desirable, nor tolerated in the church of Christ. While we heartily agree with this proposition, there have been some ideas manifested, that hinge thereon, that we might examine with profit and instruction.

The power of one man to rule and guide the church we admit would lead to wrong; would endanger both the prosperity of the church as a whole, and the liberties of its members as individuals, would have a tendency to make them subject to his will, and the powerful temptation of self-exaltation and aggrandizement would surround him too constantly, for his welfare, and the safety of the church. This necessitates the great truth constantly affirmed by the Book of Mormon, that the voice of the people should rule.

It is here affirmed that when one man has power to rule and guide the church it leads to wrong and puts in jeopardy the safety of the church. Here we have the vision and understanding of the prophet through whom God revealed his will in the establishment of the reorganization. Evade it if you will, but the church must soon give answer, whether it will stand by our theocracy of the past or recede from the position so long maintained. Joseph Smith was human and never claimed to be infallible, but all the virtue and power which praying men have to prevail with God were just as effectual then as now. Therefore, let the church be again admonished by him that "one-man power [a strongly centralized government, or, in other words, supreme directional control] is not desirable nor tolerated in the church of Christ." In the light of this definite counsel, the statements from the revelations that "the burden and care of the church is laid on him"; again, he is "to preside over the whole church and be like unto Moses"; or, as it says in another place, that his business is "to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of the church"; when fully analyzed, giving each revelation its appropriate bearing upon each of the others means something quite different than supreme directional control by the president.

"Ample Protection"?

We have been assured that protection to the body against prostitution of centralized power is amply provided in the law. The only "law" mentioned in this connection is that General Conference can refuse to sustain, and his power is shut off; then out go the officials called of God as unceremoniously as a Prime Minister of France or England. It would be just as consistent to claim that there was ample protection to the state against crime and misdemeanors with the sole remedy of capital punishment in its hands. Of course, dead men do no wrong, but the "death or nothing" penalty can hardly be considered ample or adequate to meet every need in administering the affairs of either state or church.

The experience of organized labor to improve working conditions through the tedious and expensive method of legislative enactments has been discouraging. Indifference and even hostility in the administration of the laws, together with adverse court rulings, have effectively squelched the operation of many labor laws. Hence one labor leader expressed himself to this effect: "Give me control of the men who are to execute the laws, and I do not care what laws you enact." In like manner, the more that power is centralized in the executive line in this church, the greater becomes the danger of abuse, with loss of confidence as the result. Diffuse the functions of government among the people according to the divine plan, they learn to govern themselves under God, and their interest, initiative, and loyalty will be secured on terms compatible with the sovereignty of their own minds. Thus the will of the people will be raised to meet the will of God in a theocratic-democracy.

Steadying the Ark

Surely the church will not make the mistake of putting forth human strength to steady the ark, as was done in ancient Israel. We have heard the church compared to an orchestra. We have also heard the church compared to a business corporation, both of which are good so far as they go, but the church is neither an orchestra nor is it a big business concern in which each member is a hired employee to be commercially controlled.

Jesus Christ is the author and finisher of our faith, and our right to change the character of our government is limited by the fact that the laws of God cannot be changed by man and still be God's laws. Our exercise of our agency permits us to ignore the safeguards which the Lord has provided for our protection, but we do so at our own peril.

Keep the Ballast in the Ship of Zion

The story is told of an old sailing vessel that was passing through the third day of tropical calm without making noticeable progress. At last, in exasperation, the sailors besought the captain to lighten the ship of its ballast so that it could be more easily driven before the light breeze. The better judgment of the captain told him of the dangers of this course, but the crew were determined, and at last the captain consented. The next day a storm came up, and the little craft was soon at the mercy of the winds and waves; as a result the ship and most of the crew were lost.

A charge is made in the HERALD article of November 19, of which previous mention has been made, that "an insurgent minority is impeding the progress of the work." If it were true that one side were entirely wrong and the other right, which is seldom the case, the spirit of intolerance herein manifested can hardly be justified. If long years of experience in the work, together with the testimony of God's power found upon their lips, still means anything to us, this so-called minority deserves a respectful consideration. Even if the issue be judged alone from the standpoint of intellectualism, still may we urge that the argument is not entirely in favor of those claiming to be the majority. When we can remain humble and teachable, we are all worthy of divine grace. Intolerance should have no place among us.

It occurs to the writer that it is much more important to the church of God as well as to ourselves to be with the right than to be in the majority. The stigma of being classed with an "insurgent minority" may weigh heavily with some, but I call to witness the fact that of such parentage the Reorganization was born; yes, from the insurgency of Luther's Reformation was conceived the more abundant life of modern civilization.

From the above and for many other reasons the writer is of the opinion that supreme directional control and a centralization of power in any official or quorum of the church is wrong in principle, unscientific in practice, un-American in character, and unwarranted in the law of God.

Are We Advancing or Drifting?

BY HENRY C. SMITH

From 1830 to 1844 the church received a membership of more than one thousand per month, on an average. The Reorganized Church, from 1860 to 1924, has received a membership of not more than one hundred and thirty per month, on an average.

When the membership of the latter was from forty thousand to fifty thousand, the church was able to send into the field from three hundred to four hundred missionaries; but now we are struggling under the weight of sending one hundred and fifty into the field.

The most important part, and the supreme object of the organization of the church, should be the preaching of the gospel.

Query

Why this lessening of missionary force, while the membership is increased to double the number above mentioned?

The present agitation in the church signifies a diseased body.

The body of the church is compared to the body of a man, and if foreign matter enters the body he suffers pain. Now pain is a pathological cry for help, and points out and locates the foreign matter. Hence, pain in the human body is a blessing. Agitation in the body of the church signifies foreign matter and should continue until said foreign matter is located and an effort made to remove it.

The church is represented as the bride of the Lamb, and is suffering with pain and crying for relief. Shall we not as a body seek to relieve her?

Large bodies of water are kept pure by agitation. The air, on which human life depends, is also kept pure by agitation. The sweetest flowers in the floral garden do not give out their odor until they are pinched.

Will we profit by the agitation? How long will the church be recognized as the body of Christ if she continues in this diseased condition?

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 9, 1924.

An Open Letter From the Church Membership to the Church Authorities

BY N. T. CHAPMAN

After having read the "Open letter," and the official reply, "Concerning church government," from what may be termed the leaders of a controversy pertaining to church government, we feel it would be proper for us to write you; and while we cannot secure the signatures of all the membership to attach to this article, we do feel to express ourselves freely, and all can say "Amen," though you may not hear all our voices at the same time.

As members of the church we have accepted the faith, believing this church to be the Church of Jesus Christ, a restoration of the church of New Testament times, having the same message of peace and good will that was sung to the shepherds on the hills of Judea at the announcement of the birth of the Prince of Peace. We have believed, and do yet try to believe, that the same sweet spirit of love and true fellowship should not only be manifest in the unordained membership of the church, but should also be manifest in the priesthood, especially in those whom we look upon as leaders; that no controversy could, or should, arise among them of sufficient consequence (important or not) to cause them to lose sight of the holy purpose for which they were called; believing as we do that their work is to preach the gospel of peace and salvation to a perishing world, and their service to us as members of the church should be a service of helpfulness—to edify, to sanctify, and to bring us to that perfect stature of the fullness of the Son of God, to a Zion where equality, safety, and good fellowship would reign supreme, where the people would be happy with their ministers, love them and support them, giving to them the necessities of life, which they, while giving their time to the ministry, could not supply. That by a united effort we could be a happy, pure, and unselfish people, "Zion, the pure in heart," where even vicious beasts could be tamed by the wonderful spirit of peace and good will, to the extent that they could be trusted in company with the helpless little lamb; that the wonderful vision of the Prophet Isaiah would be fulfilled in us, where "they shall not hurt or destroy in all my holy mountain." We were happy with these ambitions and expectations. We delighted in such ideals, and while we may be slow in moving out and occupying, we believe we were moving here a little and there a little towards our goal.

We have admired the integrity, virtue, and unselfish service of the ministry of the Reorganization which our fathers, who refused to support the confused, self-aggrandized royalty, or priestcraft of a deluded, passion-loving priesthood, rescued from the disrupted masses of the early church, and became the saviors of the Church of Christ, thus perpetuating the purity, peace, and graces of the gospel. We thank God for such ministers. Their lives are worthy of emulation. They were brave, true, and noble. We can well say with the prophet, How beautiful upon the mountain are the feet of those who bring good tidings, who publish peace, who publish salvation, who say unto Zion, Thy God liveth. God grant that we may not dishonor their memory by setting their counsel at naught. Because "they loved righteousness and hated iniquity," they were moved by compassion "to the saving of their brethren." Though they were ignored and disfellowshipped by the very ministry they had formerly loved and supported, left in a disorganized condition by bishops, pastors, and apostles, scattered, worried, tried, despised by their own brethren, and had seen the fair name of their Lord and his church brought down to shame; bigotry, polygamy, false teachings, and base crimes occupying the minds of those that had first brought to them the story of love, purity, and service. Now, alone, poor, forsaken, they began anew to rebuild the structure broken to pieces by the very ones who should have been its protectors, guides, and standard bearers.

A great heritage is ours, left us by our fathers. Why dishonor such men, or again break in pieces the beautiful building left to our keeping? Why "sell our birthright for a mess of pottage"? Why sacrifice all that is near and dear to the hearts of this people on the altar of confusion and strife? Can you not hear the voice of the Good Shepherd saying to you, "Why break the hearts and wound the souls of my people because of your unbeliefs?" Do you not know my children are in the depths of sorrow and distress because of your failure to be "humble and full of love" and in this way agree on my word?

And now I say unto you, mine elders, apostles, and high priests of my church, continue ye in the ministry unto which you have been called; and if ye cannot fully agree on all points of the law, be patient and be not contentious; so far as you can agree work together without heat, confusion, or malice. Ye are equal in worth of position and place in the work of the church; and if in honor ye shall prefer one another, ye will not strive for precedence or place in duty or privilege, and shall be blessed of me. Yea, verily, thus saith the Lord, unto the elders of the church: Continue in steadfastness and faith. Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called; and I will be with you by my Spirit and presence of power unto the end. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 122:16, 17.

Because you will not do this, we are in a condition of despair and unbelief. Confusion and strife are everywhere prevalent.

How can you expect the support and confidence of the membership when you are scattering seeds of contention? You have not the support or confidence of each other; and criticism, complaint, and unpleasant conduct in office is on every man's tongue. How can you teach a warm, heartfelt fellowship of Saints when you are full of fears toward each other? What profit is your education and your advanced learning, if you fail to fellowship with men of like attainment? Is this the cause of indifferent, cold, unapproachable attitudes? The gospel kind of mental development will not keep you from appreciating each other, nor cause you to fail to enjoy and be enjoyed in your official capacities in the church. It would be better to build up the kingdom of God on earth with the proper kind of learning, or another rebellion might be started here, for it was a "bright and morning star" with a selfish motive that originated the first rebellion in heaven. Humanity learned in the beginning that the tree of knowledge is not the tree of life; that however high your station or calling, or how learned in the things of men, you are made of clay like the rest of us mortals; even men of high standing can err. Remember that it was an apostle who betrayed his Lord; that even they can deny the Lord who bought them. "Chief apostles" and pillars of the church may err. According to the Scriptures, Peter, James, and John were the three presiding apostles of the church, being chief among them, and some of them had need of repentance and conversion. (See Matthew 16: 23; Luke 22: 31, 32; Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2, 7.) Apostles have withstood each other to their faces and that when the discussion was of no greater value to the church than "circumcision." Error crept into the church while it was still in charge of its first chief apostle (Doctrine and Covenants 2: 2, 3). A little later the same church was led to a "salt land not inhabited" through the influence of the leadership of seven apostles, some of whom, if not all, were very talented men.

That such talented men can produce argument from scripture in defense of any position they occupy is very evident. They deceived thousands of people by their interpretations and reference to the following scriptures: Isaiah 2: 2, 3; 1 Kings 15: 5; 2 Samuel 12: 7, 8; Matthew 8: 11, quoted to support their opinions. They can manufacture revelation and be guilty of purgery to defend their own conduct, or to promulgate their own schemes or priestcraft.

Higher criticism and infidel literature affect all kinds of people, including apostles, prophets, evangelists, elders, and bishops. None of us are exempt from the effects of improper or poisonous mental diet. The "bread of life" became polluted in the mouths of those who had been deceived. Priesthood or talent is not the armor of righteousness, nor are they proof against the fiery dart of the Adversary. None of us are safe until the goal is reached. The great apostle to the Gentiles confessed when he preached to others he feared he himself might become a castaway. He conceded it was "woe to me" if he did not continue to preach the gospel of peace and good will. He also stated, "If we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you, let him be accursed." It must be admitted by all that a gospel which is not for peace among the brethren is a curse, although we do not desire "peace at any price," or that which is bought with the "price of bondage and chains." God forbid! Are we dealing with that type of men in high standing? We hope not. Then why declare war or sign declarations of independence. Why call on the membership to settle your grievances? Are we more capable of adjusting these disputes than you? Is it not possible that we, too, will become divided and separate ourselves into two reorganized churches of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, thus becoming carnal? (See 1 Corinthians 3: 3, 4.) It appears that both contending parties have concluded that this controversy cannot be adjusted by the quorums or the priesthood to whom it was heretofore intrusted. This is either a confession of weakness or a desire for opportunity to display power or talent before the conference body. Parties concerned would not be willing to concede either.

Why employ the extreme process of settlement until all other means at hand have been put to the test? Why should nations rush to war because their leaders disagree? Why not save life, suffering, and disaster by thoughtful consideration? You must confess you are not working along divine lines—that you are trying to put into effect your own ideas, not being willing to do that which is commanded of you. You have not complied with the divine way of reconciliation. As church officials your reason for existing as ministers is to carry out the divine plan. If you confess you cannot do that, you should not have the support of the membership; you should not receive any allowance from the church treasury for your maintenance. Why should we support you to carry on your own convenience? Who will pay tithing or consecrations to maintain such conditions?—that is why our treasury is empty. If you cannot carry out the divine plan, why sustain you in office? If you cannot or will not do the work you have been ordained to do, why continue in office? It is better for the body (church) to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into hell (confusion and strife). Why ask us to come to conference to settle your difficulties? Why not ask us to come to carry out the divine plan which is our democratic privilege and cease to support any or all of you in your office? If you must fight it out, do it among yourselves. When you can no longer appeal to the membership for a decision, you will get together, quit aggravating each other, and find a way to peace.

Jesus said, "Unless you are one, you are none of mine." "By this shall you know my disciples, they shall love one another." Jesus prayed "they may all be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Who would know this church to be the church of Christ if void of the fundamental attributes that make it the church of Christ—those qualities that Christ, as the head of the church, invites the world to identify it by? All our boasted perfection of organization falls to the ground unheeded; and, void of these fundamentals, fails to accomplish its divinely given function. Such organization cannot do the work of the ministry or bring the people to a knowledge of the Son of God; neither can it perfect or edify the Saints. Such a "creed is an abomination," and we should not maintain it or give it support.

Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be by the things they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

Behold, I speak unto you, and to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work [ministers surely have this desire]; and no one can assist in this work, except he be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care. I am the light and the life of the world, that speaketh these words; therefore, give heed with your might, and then you are called.—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4, 5.

So, without discussing with you or for you the difficult subjects of your differences, we plead for the unity of the faith, purity of thought, and the united fellowship of the Saints, without which we cannot rightfully pretend to be the children of God.

Section II

We would suggest, if in your controversy there must be a challenge made, in place of challenging each other to make a display of your eloquence before General Conference, you try Elijah's challenge to the priests of Baal: Let the ones whom God recognizes, let them be right. It would be so much more pleasant for the Saints at the coming conference to hear from the source of light and truth than to be compelled to sit for hours and listen to lengthy arguments that may possibly be void of the effulgency of light, and that will wear out our patience, and power of endurance, and by so doing cause us to quarrel with each other and, finally, to divide ourselves into factions.

May we suggest to you that we unitedly call upon our heavenly Father through our Lord, Jesus Christ (whom we profess to worship), who has called you by a holy calling to serve him in the various capacities in which station you are supposed to be serving his people, to hear us in this hour of our need? He has not forgotten us; neither has he gone on a "journey to a far country." For if this matter of discussion is of such consequence as some of you think it is, Christ knows the truth about it, and has the solution for it (he and none other); but his people must show they are willing to hear his voice and follow his instruction. So, let us call a solemn assembly. Let those so much interested in the welfare of the entire church who have signed the open articles to the people as epitomes of their faith of church government, humble themselves in love and sincerity, unitedly approaching the throne of grace, asking for a decision of the divine mind, human minds having failed to agree on a decision.

In olden times men of God often showed their humility, integrity, and sincerity by adorning themselves humbly in sackcloth and sitting in ashes, by fasting and prayer which continued for days and perhaps weeks. They wrestled and prayed until they could not be turned away unanswered. Why not you men of God try out this plan of settlement? It would be better and wiser for the membership to accompany you in fasting and prayer than to attempt to decide this controversy for you by themselves in a promiscuous conference, consisting of men, women, and children, some of them not being acquainted with the law or the facts, others being biased because of personal choice of ministers or affected by personality.

Perhaps our Hedrickite brethren would permit us (and possibly accompany us) to gather in solemn prayer on the plot of ground dedicated for the building of a temple to the true and living God. Perhaps we can build a human temple on this holy place that would be more pleasing to God than one of wood and stone. Our humility would move the entire church to supplication, and towards peace and good will. We would enjoy a fellowship, a trust, a confidence not equaled since the time when the disciples were of "one heart and one mind," where none of them "thought of the thing which he possessed as his own but had all things common; when grace was upon them all, and with great power gave the apostles witness of the Lord Jesus; neither was there any among them that lacked, for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them and brought the price of the thing that was sold and laid them down at the apostles' feet."

This is the Zion we have been looking for; this is the Zion you have been working for, preaching to us, and teaching us to prepare for "Zion, the pure in heart." Why not arise now and put on our beautiful garments? Why not enter in now? "To-day is the acceptable time"; this is the "acceptable year of the Lord." The endowment of Pentecost would be reenacted; the heavens would weep for joy, and men's hearts would leap with gladness. "This cannot be brought to pass until mine elders are endowed with power from on high."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 3.

As for stewardships, no effort to induce men to bring their wealth and lay it at the feet of the bishops or apostles would be needed. They would be convinced before you would approach them. People of every race and language would run to see this kind of glory in Zion. The ministry with this power could touch the hearts and souls of men. They would go to the "highways and byways of life" and bid all that were worthy "to come to the marriage supper of the Lamb." No physical force would be necessary. The poor, the oppressed, and the honest in heart would "flow to Zion." The icebergs of the frigid zone would melt and a "highway would be cast up in the sea" for the people to bring their offerings; and those who will not take up their sword against their neighbor (brother), will come to Zion with "songs of everlasting joy." The warring nations around about would say, "Let us not go against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we cannot stand." "They will be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and of his Christ. . . . The nations of the earth shall tremble because of her," not because of her war material; for Christ says, "I do not require at your hands to fight the battles of Zion. I will fight your battles. I require you to build up Zion according to the laws of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself. "The time is nigh, even at the door." Shall we enter in? Or shall we continue to wander in the wilderness of human confusion and dwindle in unbelief? "Come, all ye sons of Zion, and let us serve the Lord."

Brethren, in your present spirit, no amount of argument or voting of conferences can bring peace and joy to the people. Your preaching of stewardships cannot be effective. Your plans and schemes of making a Zion of merchandise cannot be accomplished. Your storehouses and plans for employment of labor have largely proved to be the schemes of men and have weakened and failed. "Turn then to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope; even to-day do I declare I will render double unto thee." "Come unto me and learn of my ways, for I am meek and lowly; take my yoke upon you, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." It is not Christ's burden that is weighing heavily upon you now. It is the burden of unbelief, personality, and provocation.

It is our hope that it will not be said of us as it was said of ancient Israel, that "they hardened their hearts in the day of provocation"; "in the days of temptation in the wilderness" (in their time of confusion); that we proved him and saw his work for forty years, and then have him say of us, "They do always err in their hearts and have not known my ways." "To-day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts as in the day of provocation," for if we obtain his ear and hear his voice we can enter into his rest. "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need. For we have not a high priest which cannot be touched by the feelings of our infirmities."

To-day we are on the banks of our Jordan, waiting for the priest to carry the ark of our covenant through the waters of confusion. If we move forward in faith, bearing the presence of God with us, we doubt not that the troublous waters before us will divide and we will go safely through. The joy of accomplishment will doubly repay every effort we put forth. You men in the front rank, you who are bearing the ark, cease facing each other; place your feet in the water, cleanse your minds of the muddy confusion of the recent past, turn your faces to the light of the great eternal sun and become a living revelation of that light, and you will receive the greatest wish of your heart. The obstacles before you will vanish, and you will soon be placing stones on the Temple Lot, building the temple of God in memory of your victory.

You can accomplish this in God's way by being "humble and full of love; having faith, hope, and charity, and being temperate in all things delivered to your care." "Let charity, humility, and temperance [in talking] be your armor and your shield." Let every man among us be "slow to speak," "slow to wrath." Let us believe with all our hearts that God loves his people; that he does not delight in the loss of any of us. Remember "the Good Shepherd" loves all the sheep and will leave the ninety and nine and go out and seek the lost one. His sheep hear his voice, for his voice is kind and gentle, and he bids them follow him; they love to draw near unto him and are not afraid. The church needs us all; the weakest and less honorable and feeble have his constant care, for the welfare of the whole grows better as each one plays his part.

We must not be less than all we possibly can be. We are here for a great purpose, and to that purpose must we ever be true. We must not live for things, but for that greater life that reigns in the eternal spirit of all things. Nor shall we let the coming or going of things cause us to depart from the lofty position we have taken. We will know no defeat if we live the life we have elected to live. We will know no failure if we gain a richer life from every experience, circumstance, or event that may come to us. We will know no loss if we ascend to the greater when the lesser passes away. If our thoughts shall be to love much, and to do much, that we shall do nothing that will not add to the welfare and happiness of our fellows, then will we be enabled to unitedly thank God for giving us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Then can it be said, "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb"; and we can "be glad and rejoice, for his wife [the church] hath made herself ready." She will "be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white." He can then present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."

If we do not build a house (church) unto his name and do not the things he has commanded us, we can hear him say:

I will not perform the oath which I made unto you, neither fulfill the promises which you expect at my hands, for instead of blessings, ye, by your own works, bring cursings, wrath, indignation and judgments, upon your own heads, by your follies, and by all your abominations, which you practice before me, saith the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 14.

And again I say unto you, I give unto you a new commandment, that you may understand my will concerning you, or, in other words, I give unto you directions how you may act before me that it may turn to you for your salvation. I, the Lord, am bound when you do what I say, but when you do not what I say, ye have no promise.—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 3.

And now behold, I give unto you a commandment that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know how to act and direct my church, how to act upon the points of my law and commandments, which I have given, and thus ye shall become instructed in the law of my church, and be sanctified by that which ye have received, and ye shall bind yourselves to act in all holiness before me, that inasmuch as ye do this, glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received. Inasmuch as ye do it not, it shall be taken even that which ye have received.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 3.

NEWS AND LETTERS

U. W. Greene in Meetings at Persia, Iowa

December 10.—We feel that we have been greatly favored the past few weeks, as Elder U. W. Greene, of Independence, Missouri, is preaching here, commencing December 1.

It has been storming more or less during the past week, but we are in hopes the weather will quiet down so the attendance will improve. Persia Branch is glad to have Brother Greene here to labor in behalf of the work, as they receive much spiritual food and a broader vision of the field in which God's people should occupy, that their influence may be more effectually felt in the community.

We are hoping that when the meetings close the people of Persia and vicinity who have been out to hear our brother relate his experiences and preach the gospel, will be led to believe there is more in this church than they have thought, and will give it more than a passing notice.

A great statesman once said the things worth doing at all are worth doing well. It is the same with Latter Day Saints. We believe in harmony and success. What is worth studying is worth becoming acquainted with.

Weir, Kansas

November 30.—Elder Amos T. Higdon has just closed a series of four weeks' meetings. Good crowds were present almost every night, and several nonmembers attended throughout the meetings. Brother Higdon has an affirmative message and made many friends while here. One middle-aged woman was baptized from the Presbyterian Church, who is a splendid worker and promises to be good help in the branch. We feel that our church is gradually coming into its rightful place in the community.

Bishop C. J. Hunt was with us several days during the year and preached along the lines of the temporal law. Brother Hunt radiates good cheer wherever he goes.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer favored us with one sermon during October. A large crowd was present to hear him, and we felt much good was done by his sermon, "The backfire of the creeds."

Brother and Sister Blackmore, Brother Lee Quick, and Brother A. P. Crooker, have also been with us at different times during the year, encouraging the members and filling each one with a desire to be of greater service as time goes on.

Our Department of Women is active, with Sister Emma Mobley as president, and we feel greatly encouraged over what we have been able to accomplish. There are seven members, and we are studying the Book of Mormon, after which the remainder of our time is spent quilting, selling aprons, giving socials, bake sales, or anything that willing hands find to do. In this way we have been able to make many improvements on our church building. We also take fruit or flowers to all our sick and try to give showers, etc., for those in need. We began this year by paying tithing on all our earnings, as well as sending our share to the general treasurer of the Department of Women. Our president always plans to have different missionaries meet with our department when laboring in our midst, and many useful lessons have been taught by them.

Attendance at Sunday school is on the increase. The superintendent, Sister Pearl Jones, appointed one member of each class to be on the lookout for new pupils, and the plan is bearing fruit. Plans are under way for a Christmas tree and program, and everyone is trying to make the Christmas offering larger than ever before.

There is only one room in our church building, so it is given over at eleven o'clock once a month for junior service in the hope of keeping our young interested. We have good spiritual prayer meetings, and there seems to be a general feeling of good will among our local members, although there is deep concern over the things that are confronting the church as a whole. Many are planning to attend General Conference in April and are praying to the end that all may come to an understanding, so that we may be better able to work as one united band throughout the world and demonstrate the Zion we long for.

Bradner, Ohio

November 28.—We have with us at this time Elder Jacob Halb, a missionary whose home is in Middletown, Ohio. Brother Halb is giving a series of sermons that gladden the hearts of the local Saints.

Sunday evening, November 23, Brother Halb gave a discourse with "The thief on the cross" as his subject. It was a wonderful Latter Day Saint sermon, and at its conclusion members and nonmembers had much food for thought. Brother Halb delivers his sermons in such a clever and convincing manner that it is a pleasure to hear him.

Under the capable supervision of Sister Olive Ulrich, a fine program consisting of songs, recitations, and a beautiful cantata will be given Christmas Eve at the local church. Our entertainments are always well attended, and those in charge should receive the commendation due them in making them a success.

Omaha, Nebraska

December 10.—One Sunday during Father and Son Week, our Sunday school superintendent, Sister Rose Adams, made a very strong appeal to the fathers in a talk on "Character." She urged fathers to set an ideal of principle and conduct before their sons that would enable the latter to respect them and determine to follow in their footsteps. And she pleaded with sons that they should strive manfully to "carry on," trying to be even better men than their fathers were before them, thus fulfilling the divine purposes of creation. "Character is not only what we do, but what we think," and the springs of conduct should be kept pure at their source—the mind.

A luncheon of the church on November 19 was attended by fifty-four sisters, about eighteen dollars being cleared. It was served by a representative of the Corn Products Company, and each woman present was given a bag of sample product to carry home. The annual bazaar is on at the present time, this time being held in the Flat Iron Building. The sisters have been untiring in their preparations for this annual event, the one time during the year when the proceeds come from the pockets of the public on Christmas shopping bent.

On the evening of November 23, the La-da-sa Choral Society gave an evening of song. Considering that they had been organized but six weeks and had rendered an anthem each Sunday evening since their organization, the preparation of the fine program mentioned was a decided achievement. Two anthem numbers, two numbers by a male quartet composed of Brethren Cecil Burton, Harold Madsen, Howard Elliott, and Harry Fryxell, solos by Howard Elliott and Sister

Lois Francis, prelude and offertory by our pianist, Sister Charlotte McDonnell, made the setting for the twenty-minute talk by our pastor, in which thoughts of Thanksgiving and musical appreciation were blended. A silver offering of generous proportions was evidence of the pleasure of the congregation.

Graduating exercises of the beginner and primary departments of the Sunday school were held on November 30, at the eleven o'clock hour. Seven were promoted from cradle roll to beginners, receiving, in addition to certificates, little picture books of Bible stories; sixteen were graduated from beginners to primaries, and ten from primaries to juniors, all of these receiving leather bound New Testaments in addition to their diplomas. The exercises in charge of Sister Whalley were thoroughly enjoyable and served to give a significance and importance to the work of the children that can but be encouraging and beneficial to them.

That evening Missionary Charles J. Smith of Sioux City preached to an audience rather smaller than usual, owing to the presence in Council Bluffs of President Frederick M. Smith. The priesthood meeting held over there in the afternoon had been widely advertised and was attended by members of the priesthood from a score or more of outlying branches. It was indicative of the sacrificing spirit of our missionaries and their loyalty to duty that Brother Charles could so cheerfully forego the pleasure of hearing President Smith and come over and talk to our little group. His sermon was helpful and timely, and appreciated.

President Smith brought his wife with him on this visit to our city and to the one across the "Big Muddy." Sister Smith was born and raised in western Iowa and used frequently to visit Omaha when a young girl. It was a pleasure to her to see the development of our state metropolis and to meet again many of her girlhood friends. She is still with us, and it was our privilege to make a little birthday dinner for her on last evening. It is good to note her very great improvement in health. Her testimony at the sacramental service on Sunday was very helpful and encouraging to the Saints, as well as the little message which came to her by the Spirit through Pastor Whalley.

On Saturday, November 29, President Smith blessed the young son of Brother and Sister Harlow Fredrick, a little fifteen-month-old who bears his father's name, with "Junior" attached. Would that we, looking forward, could know that these dear little ones shall develop steadily towards the divine, shall be guided in safe paths, shall be able to avoid pitfalls, and to render a willing and valuable service to God!

It was good, on sacrament Sunday, to have with us once more Brother T. J. Edmunds and Sister Genevieve Thiehoff, both of whom, we firmly believe, have been healed through prayers and faith. Both victims of accidents, it seemed impossible for them to live, but God is good, and his arm is not shortened in answer to the desperate needs of his trusting people.

Brother Paul Gamet of Colorado Springs and Brother Claud Carter and family, from Decatur, Nebraska, are new additions to our number. The branch family seems to be steadily growing, and it is looking forward to a year of great prosperity. Several innovations are to be introduced at the beginning of the year, and we feel the time is ripening for an impetus to be given our building plans. Already overflowing our space, the added room supplied by the upper auditorium seems more and more imperative.

Other visitors of late have been Sister Shirley Kinney of Mason City, who was with us on the 16th; Brother Richard S. Salyards, who spent the 23d with us, preaching in the morning and offering prayer and benediction at the young people's concert in the evening.

Sister Lois, the talented young daughter of Brother and Sister Harry Wrenn, put on a little dramatic skit for the La-da-sa Choral Society on the evening of November 30. She was assisted by a dozen or more children, all pupils of Miss Amy Woodruff, a well-known Omaha teacher of expression, who was present and gave a few words of encouragement to the young people. Many parents of the assisting children attended also, so for once the "social hour" which follows our choir practice each Sunday evening was enjoyed by a full house. Last Sunday was the ever popular "eats" night; next Sunday will be a series of charades, to be followed at an early date by a debate. The interest is splendid, and this group of young Saints are becoming a definite force in the activities of the branch.

Fairview, Montana

The closing month of the year finds Fairview Branch going strong and planning for next year. This is especially true of the Sunday school.

We can see quite an improvement over a year ago and find greater faith and willingness among the little folks. They cast in freely of all their talent and wealth, so a nice Christmas offering is growing, and a program is being arranged.

Some of the juniors are ahead of their parents in complying with the temporal law of tithes and offerings.

Bellair, Illinois

December 13.—Elder L. C. Moore of Mount Carmel has just closed a two-week series of meetings, and as a result of them one precious soul was returned to God. During this meeting we had a two-day meeting with L. C. Moore and Brother Ulrich of the Central District. We expected an apostle, but were disappointed. However, we were informed that he would be with us at a later date. Those visiting from afar were: Sister Clifta Lane, of Charleston, Illinois; Brother and Sister Edmunds and family of near Robinson; Brother and Sister Curtis and family, Brother and Sister Crysler and family, Brother and Sister Austin and children, and Brother Wright and family, all of Casey. Brother Bertie Kidd and his sister of Willow Hill, and many nonmembers, came with well-filled baskets and stayed all day Sunday.

The prayer meetings were spiritual food for the thirsty soul, and the Saints were greatly strengthened.

We have our Sunday school and prayer meeting regularly, with preaching on the first and third Sunday nights in charge of the local brethren.

Branch business meeting was held November 12, at which time officers were elected for the new year.

Our missionary, Henry Sparling, was here in September and did some wonderful preaching.

Brother L. B. Hackett's are quarantined for scarlet fever. Also Brother L. M. Edwards and his son have been laid off from work because of infection in their hands.

The son of Brother James Matheny met with a sad accident on Thanksgiving when he was shot below the knee. He is improving.

Word comes from the Saints at Moundsville, West Virginia, that they have just been holding their own the past six weeks. They sold their church and have been meeting in private houses. They are now holding Sunday school at the home of Brother and Sister Lydick, also Wednesday night services. They are trying to get a church but are working under great difficulties. They request the prayers of the Saints for their success.

Lamoni Stake

LAMONI, IOWA, December 14.—There has been very little of interest outside of the regular services for several weeks, hence the absence of a report from this branch.

Our regular Sunday services have been made unusually interesting by the spice of variety for several weeks. Since our last report we have heard the following speakers: President F. M. McDowell preached on the subject, "Dare the church be Christian?" It was the first regular service broadcast from the church in Lamoni so was doubtless enjoyed by many. This was followed in the evening by J. A. Gunsolley in a doctrinal sermon which was criticized by the extreme modernists but was greatly enjoyed by those who still think the so-called "first principles" should form an important part of our church creed.

Elder L. G. Holloway delivered the Thanksgiving address, it being a review of the first Thanksgiving story and a comparison of conditions then and now.

Two years ago Stake President C. E. Wight spoke on, "Do we need Christ," and the personal touch which was inculcated in the message brought by Christ and the need of a closeness to him to-day were splendidly illustrated. Roy Cheville followed in the evening with a sermon on "The great comradeship." Brother Cheville is a very pleasing speaker, his kind and gentle sincerity strengthening his message.

The sacramental service last Sunday fell on Golden Rule Sunday, and the theme of the morning drifted along those lines. Some very profitable thoughts were expressed, such as, In what does the keeping of the Golden Rule consist? Is it broad enough to include those of other nations? Are we broad enough to include in our prayers the Turk, who is seeking for greater religious light? Are we tolerant of those holding opposite views? and many others. Provision was made for Golden Rule contributions to be sent to Near East Relief to be given to the bishop of the stake.

Brother C. E. Willey spoke in the evening about some of the necessary things in the redemption of Zion, the principal one being righteous living as individuals and as a group.

Perhaps the most comment has been started by the sermon of this morning by A. Max Carmichael, who chose as his subject, "Can we love the church?" As a basis for his talk he made the statement that in order to love a thing we must be able to see its imperfections and work toward its improvement. He then presented some of the extreme views of the so-called radicals. The church is still in the making, according to Brother Carmichael, and many of the things which we have clung to traditionally as the firm foundation may prove only the scaffold. Brother Carmichael is a man of extreme views, and he believes it the duty of everyone to take a clear and concise stand on questions of the day. Dealing in generalities is not sufficient.

This evening the junior chorus, which has grown to such proportions that it almost fills the choir loft, gave a thirty-minute concert under the direction of Sister C. E. Wight, which was splendid. The program consisted of Christmas carols by the chorus; a duet by two little tots, Alberta and Doris Young; a duet by Misses Grace Land and Helen Anthony; a cello and violin duet by Misses Verna and Lois Garver. Miss Margaret Lasley and Dorothy Gunsolley presided at the piano, and Miss Dorothy Prall at the organ. Lonzo Jones followed with a sermon on what it takes to make a Christian.

A committee consisting of Sisters C. E. Wight, W. A. Blair, and Ailene Brackenbury are working on a mixed Christmas program to be given Sunday evening at the church.

Fourth Church

Since the last report we have had as speakers President F. M. Smith, E. W. Lloyd, Pastor J. O. Worden, J. W. Paxton, Lionel Babcock, G. E. Raveill, Church Architect Henry Smith, and James Bunt. President Smith's address was to the Servo Club, consisting of married people exclusively. In announcing Brother Smith, The Ivanhoe Pilot, their weekly calendar, said: "There are two reasons why every young married person in our group should be present. First, Brother Smith will discuss a deep, personal, vital subject; and second, as President of the church our respect and loyalty to him should be expressed by our presence at this meeting." A further comment states that the meeting was very worth while. The meeting was accompanied by a song service, at which time two of Brother Smith's compositions were sung. The closing song was, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

As a sample of a week's work at this church, note the following for the week of November 25: Half past eight, young people's prayer meeting; half past nine, Sunday school; eleven, preaching; Tuesday at half past seven, boys' meeting; Wednesday at eight o'clock, prayer meeting; Friday at ten, Department of Women meeting, and at one, church history class. All the departments are doing their best for the success of the work at this church.

Grandview

In spite of the rainy weather, December 4, the ladies of this group, under the direction of Sister P. J. Brose, were quite successful with their annual bazaar and chicken dinner. They cleared about $307. In connection with the bazaar the Orioles and Temple Builders, under the leadership of Sister C. D. Jellings, had an art and candy booth from which they cleared $50.

At the December sacrament service their hearts were made glad by the presence of the Spirit of God, in impressive prayers and testimonies.

First Chicago Branch

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, December 17.—Many pleasant experiences have been enjoyed since our last letter to the SAINTS' HERALD. Wonderful sermons have been received from Brethren Baldwin, Passman, F. A. Smith, and the local brethren, including our pastor. What a wonderful people we could be if we would incorporate the beautiful lessons we receive from God's servants into our lives. May God help us so to do.

Our choir sang a musical oddity December 4, which was a very pleasing and entertaining experience. The title was "The stationary express," depicting a railroad coach and the passengers in various costumes, including the colored porter. This program should be repeated.

November 22, at the home of our pastor, Sister Weatherslee of Brush Creek Branch was married to Mr. Harry Henriks. May God speed these young people on life's journey.

November 23, Brother Passman gave us much light on the Scriptures, explaining them after having the experience of meeting the exact conditions in the Holy Land. Visitors were Brother and Sister Young, of Battle Creek, Michigan; also Brother McNichols and his mother. At our annual business meeting, December 3, the branch selected a new pilot to guide the bark for a year, Brother C. A. Edstrom.

December 9, the ladies held a bazaar in the lower auditorium of the church, which from all reports has turned out quite successful.

Sunday afternoon, the 14th, Brother Baldwin baptized Sister Skinner, which caused much joy in the branch. Brother

Skinner will now have a real helpmate. Others are ready to step forward for Christ.

May God bless his people. The holiday season is upon us, and all the children are ready for Santa Claus. Visitors are always welcome at 4416 Gladys Avenue.

Independence

Stone Church

Next Sunday evening the Messiah Choir will give Handel's "Messiah" in the Stone Church, beginning at eight o'clock. People who expect to listen on the radio should note the change of time from half past seven to eight o'clock. The Messiah Choir is made up of singers from all the churches in Zion, and some come from Kansas City Stake, and numbers one hundred and twenty-five voices. They are directed by Brother Paul N. Craig. The soloists are: Mrs. I. A. Smith, soprano; Miss Josephine Smith, contralto; Mr. Eugene Christy, tenor; and Mr. James Houghton, bass.

Brother Houghton is coming from Boston to sing the bass solos in the "Messiah" and also has consented to present a concert to the people of Independence as a benefit recital for the Messiah Choir, Friday evening, January 2. Tickets are being sold for this purpose for twenty-five cents, and may be obtained from members of the Messiah Choir and at Watkins' Music Company. Brother Houghton has been attending Harvard for three years, having done some splendid work there, which has been recognized to the full by the Harvard Glee Club for which he has acted as bass soloist on their annual tours. Brother Houghton has been doing very fine work and promises to give us a very interesting program.

An enlarged picture of the late Joseph Smith was presented to the junior department of the Sunday school by Mrs. Fred Koehler, who has been acting as chorister and teacher in that department for the last year.

Announcement was made Sunday of the installation services for the officers of the Sunday school to be held January 4, at half past seven.

A joint council of the teachers and officers of the intermediate and senior departments and the pastor in Zion, Brother C. Ed. Miller, was held in the library room at eleven o'clock Sunday morning to consider the question of what our attitude should be toward worldly amusements being participated in by our young people.

The beginner department, with Sister Tessie Smith as superintendent and Sister R. D. Etzenhouser as assistant, had their annual Christmas party Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. The program, which lasted about an hour, was participated in wholly by the children.

Patriarch F. A. Smith spoke Sunday morning, and in the evening President Elbert A. Smith gave an illustrated lecture on the life of Christ, which was greatly enjoyed by all.

President Smith has been in the East for a short time, visiting Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, besides other points. He is expected back December 23.

All of the Twelve in America are at home for Christmas. J. A. Gillen, R. S. Budd, E. J. Gleazer, J. F. Curtis, P. M. Hanson, and F. Henry Edwards are in Independence; J. F. Garver and D. T. Williams are in Lamoni; John W. Rushton and T. W. Williams in Los Angeles. Apostles M. A. McConley and C. F. Ellis are in their mission fields, unable to spend the holidays with their families.

Quite a number of the Independence young people who have been attending school at Graceland are home for the holidays, accompanied by friends who are too far away to go to their own homes. All are anticipating a good time here among friends and home folks.

The eighty-eighth anniversary of Sister Abbie A. Horton was celebrated in Independence by the Saints of London, Ontario, where Sister Horton joined the church, eleven members of the branch at that time being present. From the oldest down, of the elders present, speeches were given in memory of the associations with our aged sister, and experiences of a spiritual nature were related, as well as some facts that were humorous, which gave mutual pleasure to all. She received flowers and fruit, and a radio set was installed for her pleasure and benefit. A closing prayer was offered by Elder Joseph Luff, and feelings of love were exchanged. Expressions of thankfulness were given the visitors by our honored sister, and she was left feeling happy.

Second Church

Sister Mary Campbell died on Tuesday of last week as a result of being struck by an automobile the previous Sunday. The funeral service was at the Stone Church Friday afternoon, and the interment was at Mound Grove Cemetery. The entire congregation is saddened by the result of this terrible accident, and the bereaved husband, suffering from broken bones received in the same accident, has the sympathy of all.

Sunday morning Elder E. A. Curtis was the preacher, and Sunday evening Pastor C. Ed. Miller closed his series of Sunday evening lectures on the Book of Mormon.

Sunday afternoon the baptismal font was used by Elder J. D. Shower, who had the privilege of baptizing his father.

Christmas Eve will be celebrated by an entertainment at eight o'clock this evening, given in the church auditorium, under the auspices of the Sunday school.

Liberty Street

At the business meeting held last week, Elder J. M. Baker was unanimously chosen to succeed himself as pastor. It was gratifying to see, when the vote was taken, that the congregation stood as one in his favor. Brother John Zion was chosen as superintendent of the Sunday school and C. E. Willis as superintendent of the Religio. Upon the earnest solicitation of Sister Alice Cowan, who called attention to the good work that has been done in Department of Women this year, Sister Carrie Ballinger was chosen to continue as head of that department for another year. This is very important work, and the Saints feel to congratulate themselves upon having one so efficient in this office.

The morning of December 21 the primary department gave their Christmas program, being given the eleven o'clock hour for the purpose. The principal theme was the Babe in the manger, and much credit is due Sister Rhoda Bowen, superintendent of the department, and Sister Ossia Knoepker, chorister of the same department, for the success of the program. At the conclusion of the program, the Temple Builders gave the children a Christmas tree, and each child was given some nice toy. This was followed by the Sunday school treat for all the classes in the primary, junior, and intermediate departments.

Elder W. A. Smith preached Sunday evening on "Where there is no vision the people perish, but happy is that people who keep the law."

The women and girls of this group held a bazaar Saturday afternoon, accompanied by a bake sale, so a goodly sum was realized.

Enoch Hill

Elder J. A. Dowker visited us the morning of December 17 and preached a powerful sermon, the Spirit of the Master being felt to a great degree. Many were melted to tears and thrilled with the Spirit's touch. At seven o'clock in the evening Elder C. B. Hartshorn occupied, and his discourse was greatly appreciated by a good audience.

The Sunday school held its annual election of officers December 8, the result being the election of F. J. Lewis for superintendent; Robert E. Whitsett, assistant superintendent; Sister D. T. Chapman superintendent of the primaries and beginners, Sister Amos Allen, assistant; Sister Mary Brewer, secretary, and Lester Coon, treasurer.

The election of officers for the Religio December 19 resulted in the election of Brother Kenneth Morford as superintendent, Frank A. Peek as assistant.

On Monday night, at eight o'clock, the membership were present at the church in goodly numbers to nominate a pastor for the ensuing year. Elder W. J. Brewer was again chosen to fill this office, subject to ratification by the conference in Zion. At this meeting Sister Agnes Hartman was chosen as local supervisor for the Department of Women.

Last Sunday Elder George E. Harrington preached a splendid sermon, his theme being the necessity of getting in touch with God. At seven o'clock Elder E. A. Curtis preached to a very appreciative audience.

Wednesday evening at eight o'clock the junior and intermediate departments of the Sunday school will give a Christmas program, at which time a special collection will be taken up as a contribution on the local church building debt. Sister Charles Warren is in charge of the committee arranging this effort.

Walnut Park

Our new Sunday school superintendent is Chester Constance; Religio superintendent, Marion Schafer; head of the Department of Women, Mrs. F. R. Schafer; head of the Department of Music, Orlando Nace. All group pastors were sustained.

The evening of December 21 the choir gave a very fine cantata, "The risen King," under the direction of Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, Brother W. C. Norman taking the part of King Herod. Others having special parts were Gaud A. Smith, John A. Dowker, and Earl Cox as the Three Wise Men; and solo parts by Mrs. Osro Campbell, soprano; Miss Margaret Gard and Mrs. Earl Cox, contralto. Mrs. Carletta Norman and Mrs. Gladys Reynolds were the accompanists.

Sunday school Christmas programs will be given Wednesday evening and Friday evening.

Mrs. R. Barnhard's Oriole Girls are setting a good example to everybody this year. They have become interested in furnishing Christmas cheer for some of the needy ones in our town; and their own means being limited, they are utilizing used clothing and odds and ends, and with their monitor's help and their acquired skill are making up many worth-while gifts, some of them requiring real sacrifice to part with.

Pittsburg, Kansas

December 8.—Sunday, December 7, dawned with the weather in doubt, and we wondered as we listened to the patter of raindrops if the weather would mar the events of the day. But as time passed, the weather cleared and gave us a "golden day of perfect weather." And with the approach of the Sunday school hour the marked increase in attendance bore testimony that something out of the ordinary was at hand. It was the day in which a number of the Sunday school children were to be baptized.

At the sacramental service the pastor, Brother Blackmore, announced that we would be granted the use of the Y. M. C. A. pool from twelve to half past twelve, and that it would be necessary to dismiss the service a few minutes early. After the dismissal of the sacramental service, we went to the Y. M. C. A., only a block away, where, after singing a verse of "Jesus, I my cross have taken," and prayer by Brother E. E. Gilbert, Brother Blackmore led nine bright children into the water. One little girl in the junior department enlisted the assistance of her teacher to gain the consent of her mother to be baptized.

In the afternoon a number of the young people gathered at the hall at three o'clock to rehearse Christmas music. Then at half past four the orchestra met for practice. Religio at six o'clock was followed by preaching at a quarter after seven. Three babies were blessed, and seven of those baptized were confirmed. The sermon by Brother Blackmore was very much enjoyed.

The day was full, and all went home feeling it is good to be a Saint in latter days.

Topeka, Kansas

Topeka Branch is gaining some ground, some members moving in from other communities, and a few uniting by baptism. Mrs. Ord Lasley was baptized and confirmed November 2.

Brother and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser of Independence were in Topeka November 9, and Brother Etzenhouser delivered an interesting sermon, though the audience was not large. On November 23 Elder A. H. Parsons of Independence, who has been visiting in Topeka, preached to us, and afterward he and District President Samuel Twombly conducted a series of meetings at the church. They touched on various points of interest which were greatly enjoyed by the Saints. These brothers remained in Topeka until after the conference, visiting with various members.

Progress has been made in the past year, especially in the matter of attendance at weekly prayer meetings, which, largely through the efforts of Branch President Chapman, has been greatly increased. It is hoped the attendance will continue to increase and that the spirituality of the branch will increase in proportion.

A campaign to keep up interest and attendance is being conducted by the Sunday school in the form of a contest to regain old members and gain new ones. There are three classes studying the senior quarterly. The school is represented by a basket ball team which has played several games with other Sunday school teams of Topeka. Attendance is required in order to belong to the team, and this is thought to be a good plan.

The Department of Recreation and Expression has instituted a class in English under Sister Helen Copp, and one on social ideals of the church under Brother Robert Holman, which are greatly appreciated by those attending.

The branch is engaged in raising money towards paying off the church debt, and a box social was held by the Department of Recreation and Expression at the home of Sister Helen Hayes which brought in over one hundred dollars in sales and pledges. A rummage sale held later by the Department of Women cleared over fifty-five dollars, and the material left over was sent to the old people's homes.

Branch election of officers for the coming year was held December 1, and Elder A. P. Crooker was elected branch president.

The conference of the Northeastern Kansas District was held at Topeka November 29 and 30, but on account of inclement weather there was not a very large attendance from outside the city. Apostle F. Henry Edwards and wife of Independence were with us, and business went along smoothly. Brother Edwards gave an enjoyable sermon Sunday morning, speaking of spiritual growth and development. He also spoke Sunday night to an appreciative audience. The Saints here would appreciate having Brother Edwards with them more often. Arrangements were made at the conference for the ordination of Brother David Little, of Scranton, as a priest. He was called some time ago when the Scranton Branch was organized, after having been dissolved for some time. We are glad to have another branch in operation so near us, as there is none other close. Some of the Topeka priesthood have been occupying part of the time at Scranton. Among the visitors at conference were District Sunday School Superintendent Cecil Schmid, of Troy, and Sister Pearl Schmid, district head of the Department of Women; also Sister Vera Twombly, district supervisor of music. Then from Scranton there were Brother and Sister J. H. Bailey, Brother and Sister David Little and family, Brother Lyter, and Brother Bullard. Brother and Sister Ray Whiting and Sister Ewing of Lawrence were also there, as well as Brother O. Salisbury, president of Far West Stake, and J. D. Stead, missionary for this district. The next conference will be held at Scranton after General Conference, the date to be decided later. Topeka Branch was very glad to have this conference here and hope to have it here again.

We regret to state that Brother Leonard Pitsenberger has been seriously ill for some time, but we hope for his early recovery, that he may again meet with us in the services.

The branch choir at Scranton, Pennsylvania, are planning to give the cantata, "The World's Redeemer," the evening of December 28, under the direction of Brother John R. Jenkins. Judging from present indications, the rendition will be quite a success.

Selden, Kansas

December 11.—The two-day meeting held at Selden November 29 and 30 was deemed quite a success, although bad weather a few days before the meeting caused the Saints from a distance to give up coming. Saturday afternoon we had a fine spiritual prayer meeting with Brother John Nutt presiding, which seemed to open the way for good meetings the remainder of the time.

Saturday evening our services began a little later than scheduled, as our president, Brother Nutt, was called at the last moment to perform a marriage ceremony in town. Brother Nutt finally arrived and found a full house waiting, as a Union Sunday school had been invited to attend—all nonmembers. We had a short program, followed with a sermon by Brother Nutt, which was instructive to those seeking light. Quite a number of these good people returned Sunday to hear the further services.

Sunday school was held at ten o'clock, followed by preaching by Elder Mark Williams. About sixty people were out to enjoy this service. A basket dinner was held at noon, and at three o'clock we listened to an interesting sermon by Elder Luther Shoemaker of Lucerne. Visitors were present Sunday from Grinnell, Rexford, Lucerne, and Colby, Kansas. The aged couple who came from Colby are the parents of one of our brothers, and are seeking for more light. They were very anxious to attend our meetings, that they might receive sufficient light to convince them of the truth of our work. Brother Nutt preached in the evening to a very attentive audience, taking for his subject, "The fall of man and the plan of salvation." After the sermon Sister Nutt and Mrs. Don Pettite sang the duet, "Come, Sweet Comforter," composed by President F. M. Smith. It was beautiful and inspiring. All felt repaid for the effort they had made to attend.

Flint, Michigan

December 8.—The annual business meeting of the Flint Branch was held Monday evening, December 1. The president of the branch had been elected at the bimonthly meeting in October, and with two months' time he had his nominations ready for the annual meeting. Several resolutions were presented and discussed, some of which were adopted, and others lost for the want of proper support. The system of the Flint Branch in the working of the amalgamation of the three churches under the coordination plan is as follows:

The president of the branch is elected at the bimonthly business meeting of the branch in October, which gives him two months to consult with the various departments and workers towards the selection of his nominees for the annual election the first Monday of December. At the annual meeting all the department heads are elected, and as soon as possible after, the various churches meet to complete the organization of the departments. By this plan all the officers of the branch, and the departments, are ready to take office the first of the year, and no time is lost by any of the churches having to wait for the completion of organization. This plan has worked very well here, and we can recommend it to any branch working under the same system.

There were very few changes in the official family of the branch. The presidency of the branch stands intact, with Elder A. H. DuRose as president, and Elders F. G. Smith and F. Z. Harder as counselors. Brother Benton Cataline was elected secretary, and Allen Pohly, treasurer. Elder B. F. Anspaugh will be the pastor of First Church, Elder F. G. Smith at Second, and Elder F. Z. Harder at Third. Mrs. F. Z. Harder is the head of the Department of Women.

The activities of the branch during the month of December are many. The annual bazaar of the Department of Women will be held in the big store of Mr. A. M. Davison, who has donated the use of the building.

The necessary electrical work to light the building is being done by the Flint Electric Company which was also donated. These donations were made possible through the work of Elder M. W. Liston. The Public Coal Market furnished the coal for the heating. Complete returns of the bazaar are not available, but indications point to a very successful event. The fancywork of the groups made a beautiful display of handwork. The baked goods sale in charge of Sisters Charles Hutchins and Benton Cataline, who also had charge of the lunch counter, report good returns. The bazaar was given under the direction of Mrs. C. H. Robertson, who had charge of the work of the department for 1924.

The opening of the new Third Church, of which more will be said next time, is all set for the 14th. Elder A. H. DuRose will be the speaker at the evening meeting. The building is not completed as yet, but the work will be dropped till spring, as the building has been made comfortable for the winter season. One interesting feature of the treasurer's report for the annual meeting was that only $320 had been spent on the building for labor, the balance being donated by the brethren of the branch.

The Sunday schools are preparing their Christmas programs, and the Department of Recreation and Expression are planning special features for the holiday season. With everything in readiness for this time of the year, with the factories increasing production, the outlook for 1925 is bright in Flint; not only in the industrial world, but in the church work in general. Thus Flint extends to the church the season's greetings, looking forward to the New Year with great anticipations of what might be accomplished with a united effort on the part of the church as a whole.

Oxford, Michigan

December 9.—As you have not heard from Orion Branch for some time, we thought it might be well to let you know that we are moving along nicely. Our services are well attended by the members of the church, with a few nonmembers occasionally.

Officers for the coming year were elected at our business meeting last Sunday, and with the new corps of officers ready to work, good progress should be made this year.

I am expecting to spend the winter in El Paso, Texas, and would like to know whether there are any Saints residing there.

JULIA HAMMOND.

EDITORIAL

Authority in Church Government.—No. 4

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—The author of this series, Bishop Arthur B. Phillips, calls attention to an error in the number published December 24. On page 1234 appears a quotation from Millennial Star 16:183, which should read: "Verily, thus saith the Lord, the time has now come that it shall be disposed of by a council composed of the first presidency of my church, and of the bishop and his council; and by my high council; and by mine own voice unto them, saith the Lord." The error was a substitution of the word him for them, the fourth from the last, of the words here reproduced. This error was purely typographical. Please look it up and reread the argument made in connection with the quotation.]

The statement has been made that "Jesus never concerned himself about place or position," and that "The only title which he arrogated to himself was that of friend." It can be clearly seen, however, that neither of these statements is quite accurate, if we concede that Jesus himself provided for the offices distinguished in his church by various titles, as the office of apostle, the seventy, the elder, the bishop, the priest, the teacher, the deacon, etc. It must be recognized that the position each held determined the character of his work and the relationship of one office to another, which if regarded must tend to a harmonious working of the church.

With respect to the word arrogate, it means: "To claim or demand unduly or presumptuously; to claim from vanity or false pretensions; to lay claim in an overbearing manner." Hence Jesus did not arrogate to himself even the title of friend. He did, however, claim several other titles, though in at least one instance he cautioned his disciples against title seeking, saying:

But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father upon earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven. Neither be ye called masters: for one is your Master, even Christ. But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant. And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted.—Matthew 23:8-12.

Ye call me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am. If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet.—John 13:13, 14.

No one can deny that Jesus, while recognizing his important office, occupied it in beautiful humility, yet with dignity and authority, refusing to permit it to be degraded by others or robbed of its holy responsibilities. It is a thing to be commended, that each serve humbly; but it is quite a different thing for one who occupies an office of lesser responsibility to charge that, "Ye take too much upon yourself," as was charged against Moses. Such an act was not humility, but sedition, when it attempted to undermine confidence in the authority of the chief office in the "church in the wilderness."

Authority of General Conference

The rule of common consent, which some have asserted should not be disregarded, finds its general expression most concretely provided for in the General Conference delegate system, by which every district, branch, and stake of the church may be represented by those whom they believe will vote for the measures they desire to be upheld. When the majority thus speak in conference vote, it is an expression of what their common consent desires to voice on that subject. It would hardly tend to create confidence, therefore, if those who assert that "General Conference enactments are binding without exception upon members, officials, and quorums," should immediately proceed to disregard the particular enactment of General Conference that they did not want to comply with.

While not all, if many, of the ministry and members of the church will hold that General Conference is higher authority than the General Assembly, which seems to be intended by the statement published last June that it "is the highest authority in the church," yet it will doubtless be generally held that General Conference enactments should be respected and complied with if the question with which it deals is not referred elsewhere for final decision. This reference might be made by the conference itself, which has declared the General Assembly to be the means of deciding various questions (see my article in HERALD for December 10, page 1190), and has therefore recognized its authority.

Those who have protested their subordination to the General Conference could hardly be justified, therefore, if they were to openly or secretly violate its enactments in order to accomplish their purposes.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

No illustration is needed to show that those who would do so could hardly be depended upon to adhere to that which they themselves affirm. If in such violation of conference enactments they should proceed to publicly offer to the church propositions on church government, such an act would not only be a defiance of the conference, but might be the means of sowing dissension and heresy and would then constitute insurrection in the body.

Conference on "Herald" Controversies

After many years of experience it was decided by General Conference that when vexed questions arose or were under consideration by officials of the church, such matters should not be discussed in the world or in the branches or other places where the elders labor, but only by the proper officials and in "solemn conclave" under rules of restraint. A few urged strenuous objections on various grounds, but the great majority felt that more harm than good resulted from too wide a discussion of matters that must in any event come before the proper officials for final decision. The right to represent the church did not include the right to use promiscuously the prestige of office to set forth views not accepted by the church. As early as 1879 it was declared:

We are further of the opinion, that until such time as vexed questions now pending are definitely settled by the competent quorums of the church, the discussion of them should be avoided in all places where the elders labor, in the world and in the branches, and should only be had in solemn conclave when necessary to examine them for settlement, under proper rules of restraint.—Resolution 222. Presented by Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair, and adopted.

In spite of this there was at times a tendency on the part of some one to present his adverse notions or grievance elsewhere than where conference had indicated, and discussions of this nature had even crept into the HERALD. This created much confusion and distress among members, who felt themselves helpless to decide questions upon which experienced officials might not agree. It was recognized that the Lord had provided a way for such questions to be considered in council, and such a disposition of the matter could then be had as would become decisive; and the faith of those not able to grapple with such problems, and those not authorized by the Lord to deal with them, would grow stronger, instead of weaker through dissension. A committee was appointed by General Conference some years later to consider the question, resulting in the adoption of a resolution by conference, which required the editor and Board of Publication to see that no improper use of the HERALD be made, and also requiring:

That where radical differences of opinion occur between leading representatives of the body, the discussion of them should take place in quorum capacity, and not through the columns of the HERALD.—Resolution 298: 3.

Solely for Church Interests

This order of General Conference has never been repealed, and the editor and Board of Publication are therefore under its requirements to see that the HERALD is not used for discussion "where radical differences of opinion occur between leading representatives of the body." The right of the conference to make this order can hardly be questioned by those who affirm that all are subject to its enactments. But in addition to this, the HERALD is a creature of General Conference, and was brought into existence (first, as a monthly) by its order and for the purpose which it specified, which was:

That the church publish a monthly paper to be devoted solely to the interests of the church.—Resolution 35.

This object should therefore guide the editors who may be required to find material for the various HERALD issues, the work of the church in its several departments being there supported, and the general ideals, teachings, and purposes of the church being kept before the membership. In this way the HERALD will fill its intended mission to promote the activities, spirituality, and growth of the body.

Editing Rights of the Presidency

As previously shown, the law of the church makes the Presidency the official instructors in the teachings of the church (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 1, 2), the leading "interpreters and teachers of the laws and revelations of God." (Resolution 386: 9.) While the quorums of the church may decide on doctrinal matters, it would be a grave menace if all persons could publically teach their opinions as being the laws of God to the church. This would lead to confusion, discord, and schism in the body. The church is guarded against this by the provisions made in the law, if these provisions are heeded.

It being necessary that articles correctly representing the church should be issued to the members and the world, a joint council, which had met as directed by revelation, submitted a document that became a law to the church. Concerning articles written "upon leading gospel topics" for the HERALD editors, this law required:

Said articles to be subjected to the inspection of the committee as heretofore named [First Presidency], and to be accepted or rejected at its discretion.—Doctrine and Covenants 123: 25.

The Presidency were not only directed to inspect the articles thus sent to the HERALD editors, and to reject those not approved, but the Lord gave a revelation some years later which required that tracts written for publication should also be subject to the approval of the Presidency before being published:

These tracts to be written by those in the ministry and those of the brothers who are not of the ministry who have a talent for writing, and to be submitted to the Presidency before being published.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 11.

Danger in Subverting the Law

It is therefore beyond reasonable dispute that the Lord and the church made it the right of the Presidency to determine what should be published concerning church laws and teachings. To seize control of the HERALD and prevent this supervision, the laws thus authorizing the Presidency still being in force, would place the church in a position of danger not equaled since its reorganization, unless the Presidency had so broken the law as to menace the interests of the church. Even in this event the action would be unlawful and unnecessary, as the law of the church provides that trial by court shall be had in cases of this kind.

The church cannot be protected against heretical, mischievous, and other damaging teachings from many sources, without proper safeguards to prevent such a calamity. Quite naturally, the presiding and prophetic office is best calculated to afford this protection, and one who is not safe for this work would not be safe for the chief office in the church. On the other hand, it is a dangerous thing to permit any department or unauthorized group to obtain a control that nullifies the powers and responsibilities of the chief executive office in the church, especially if those powers are wholly or in part assumed by adverse forces.

By Virtue of Office

It was by virtue of their office that the Presidency had the right to perform this supervision of articles in the interests of the church. That no others were to perform that duty is clearly indicated by the action of General Conference of 1914, of which the record states:

The committees on tracts and on organization of quorums were abolished and the work thereof left to the direction of the Presidency as a function of their office.—Resolution 732.

It is clearly to be seen that if the official organ of the church ceases to be under the supervision of those who are made by the law of the church the proper officers for that work, it no longer officially represents the body. Both the issuance of tracts and the publication of articles in the authorized church organ must of necessity be subject to such inspection as the church itself provides, if they are to be recognized in the manner that the law contemplates. Otherwise the church is liable to become a trumpet of uncertain sound, a spreader of dissension, perplexity, and discouragement among the people.

Principles, Not Personalities

In the situation now existing in the church, it is difficult, perhaps, for one to write at length upon the subject covered in this series without being misunderstood. To interpret a statement to mean what it does not say, is not altogether unlikely in case one judges it by what various others believe or are supposed to believe. However, if everyone who is at heart loyal to the church (and who is not?) will but yield the same kindness and confidence toward all that he desires yielded to him, a removing of difficulties will be certain to follow. A judicial discussion of principles will help to a common understanding, but a prejudicial dealing in personalities will inevitably produce bitterness, resentment, and many other evils, and will incidentally reveal the spirit actuating the one yielding to such an impropriety.

It is hoped that this series will stimulate the study of the word of the Lord to the church, for upon such study must largely depend our future development. A divinely authorized and divinely led church must of necessity be unlike any organization of human invention and must be considered earnestly and with persistence, in order that an application of the revelations received be properly made to the needs of the members. It would be nothing less than disrespect toward God to ask him for more revelations, if those already given to the church are not prized and heeded. This duty becomes a pleasure as we draw closer to God and heed the leadings of his Spirit.

Commonwealth Cooperative Community

Before the beginning of the Christian era men were discussing social reform and the ideal city. The record for Christianity for nearly two thousand years is full of various ventures, more or less practical, for an ideal community. In some instances an effort has been made to put these ideals into effect with more or less success. The experiences of the past four thousand years would indicate that those with a strong religious content have proved most successful. It also has shown that any real communism has had a serious weakness, since it destroys private property and also undermines the family.

Another great cause of decline has been the persistent effort of domination or control by one man, usually, or by a very small group.

Of recent years these efforts have multiplied. The subject is becoming a serious one for humanity. Many bulletins have been written, and possibly more on this subject in the last ten years than in any previous century.

While we are thinking of this subject seriously as members of the church, it should prove profitable to consider occasionally what others have planned, what they have done and have tried to do. It is for this reason that we call attention to the Commonwealth Cooperative Community of Ouachitas which is taken from the American Vanguard for September, 1924:

The latest organized, most interesting, and to all appearances the most promising, of all the secular, cooperative communities is the Commonwealth Cooperative Community of the Ouachitas, located at Ink, Polk County, Arkansas, in the Ouachita Mountains. Eighty per cent of its membership is composed of native-born Americans, many of whom are of the old pioneering stock. Two members of Holland birth, three members of Scandinavian birth, one of Polish, six German, and four of English, but all of long residence and citizenship in the United States account for the other twenty per cent. The membership constitutes a typical American community, drawn as it is from every section of the United States, northern and southern, eastern and western.

One of the significant things about Commonwealth Community is that every charter member has had some experience in cooperative communities. The eighty-two adults of the new community are not novices in cooperative community building. Fourteen members, 17 per cent, have had from eight to ten years of experience; seven members, 9 per cent, are in their fourth or fifth year; seventeen members, or 21 per cent, are in their third year; nine members, or 11 per cent, are in their second year, and twenty-six members, or 31 per cent, have had from a few months to a year's experience in cooperative community life. This group is thus bringing many years of experience to bear upon the problems that face Commonwealth Cooperative Community. These seasoned workers in integral cooperation constitute an organization such as no other like community ever had in its pioneering stages.

With such a background of practical experience one would expect a practical working program with practical working rules, rather than the mass of theories usually found at the beginning of such ventures. Such is the case. The plan of organization and operation is a practical rather than a theoretical plan. It is the result of experience.

Location

The Commonwealth Community has selected what is in many ways an ideal site. It has purchased about three square miles of land on the banks of the Ouachita River in Polk County, Arkansas. This tract is in the midst of a valley some seven or eight miles wide and twenty miles long. The valley itself is some eleven hundred feet above sea level. It is surrounded on all sides with the wooded ranges of the Ouachita Mountains, which rise at some points to a height of 2,800 feet. The wooded mountains are a part of the National Forest Reserve. The valley is all in farms. The soil of the tract varies from a light, sandy clay loam to a dark-chocolate loam with here and there outcroppings of gravelly soil, which are excellent for fruit culture. The products of that section are diverse. Corn and cotton are staple crops. The peaches are excellent, and apples do well, while all the small fruits and most of the vegetables of the temperate zone flourish. The region is noted for its climate. It is subject to neither the extreme cold of the North nor the extreme heat of the South. Its elevation takes it out of the range of the fevers and other afflictions of the low, swampy lands of the South.

The Ouachita River furnishes power for the woodworking and other industries of the community, as well as electricity for lighting and other purposes.

The tract contains several hundred acres of excellent timber.

Plan of Organization

Commonwealth Cooperative Community consists of three distinct organizations, which are each and all integral parts of the community. The first and the fundamental organization is the Community proper, which owns all the land and productive capital; the second is Commonwealth University, which owns its own equipment and supervises education from the cradle through the collegiate departments; the third is the Commonwealth Press, which manages all the publications of the community.

The Commonwealth Community Corporation is controlled by the usual board of directors. The interesting thing about this board is that its members are nominated by industries, a system of proportional industrial representation having been put into operation. Commonwealth University is controlled by a board of trustees, made up of all the members of the teaching staff. The Commonwealth Press is in the hands of a board of six trustees, who are from the publishing department.

Years of experience in cooperative community life has demonstrated to these people that this division of the productive, the educational, and the publishing activities is best. It puts production in the hands of producers, education in the hands of educators, and publishing in the hands of publishers. Yet the individuals in each division are part of the community and live the cooperative life. The farmer, the mechanic, the teacher, and the editor all live on the same communal plane. No one of them has any preferential economic advantage over any of the others. Also, the separate units conduct their activities in such a way as to promote the group welfare.

Membership

In the matter of accepting memberships, the group has profited by its years of experience. The charter members are, as stated above, seasoned colonists who have worked together, some of them for years. No new members are accepted without a capital investment, a period of residence on probation, and physical, intelligence, and ethical tests.

One of the great complaints against communities or colonies in the past has been that the capital investment of the person who joins is not returned if the individual wishes to withdraw later on. The method of accepting members and the plan of financing in the Commonwealth Cooperative Community does away with that complaint or objection.

Any person wishing to become a member, purchases a thousand-dollar interest-bearing bond of the community. If it is a family rather than an individual, the head of the family purchases a thousand dollar bond and such additional bonds for members of his family as the board determines. The amount of the bond for each dependent depends upon age. The individual or family then lives in the community during the probation period of one year. If before or at the end of that time he wishes to withdraw, he retains his interest-bearing bond of the community, which will be payable in full at maturity. If the prospective member decides at the end of the period of probation that he wishes to remain in the community, and if the community decides that he is acceptable, then he exchanges his interest-bearing bonds for noninterest-bearing bonds of the same amount and purchases one share of stock in the Commonwealth Cooperative Community. If at any later date the member wishes to withdraw, he surrenders his membership stock and exchanges his noninterest-bearing membership bonds for interest-bearing nonmembership bonds and departs in peace.

The membership stock, which is only $5 per share, and of which no individual may purchase more than one share, is reassignable and remains in the community. No person residing outside of the community permanently will own or possess any of the stock of the corporation. The membership stock is not for purposes of financing, but for purposes of achieving resident democratic control of the community.

Financing

The Commonwealth Community begins operation with many thousands of dollars worth of property and equipment. Each new member of the organization will put in his membership capital investment, as explained above. Such capital investment will be expended in the purchase of capital equipment, in land payments, and for such current expenses as cannot be met out of current income from production.

There is always an initial period in any venture such as this when capital investment is greater than income, due to the fact that it takes some years for orchards and vineyards to come into bearing, and also considerable expense and time to construct power plants and workshops. During this early period the capital investment is bound to be greater than income from production, unless general farming operations will return a surplus great enough to offset it.

Aside from the membership bonds, the community will dispose of regular interest-bearing bonds, covered by the property of the corporation, for purposes of expansion and development of agriculture and industry. Such bonds will run for periods of five, ten, and twenty years, and will bear interest at four per cent. These bonds will be issued in denominations of $50, $100, $500, and $1,000 each, or in such other denominations as may be expedient.

Education

The Commonwealth Community is a noteworthy exception to the ordinary run of cooperative community ventures in the unusual emphasis it puts upon education. The community is made up of individuals of more than average education, and for that reason the educational system is ultra modern in its methods and rather complete in its scope. The educational plan covers the development of the child from the cradle through the collegiate departments of the university.

The school system consists of a nursery, kindergarten, companionate, preparatory school, academy, and university—the first four are the childhood institutions of Commonwealth Community. Commonwealth University consists of various collegiate departments and the academy. The university formerly established at Newllano, Louisiana, and known as Commonwealth College, is relocating in Commonwealth Community as an integral part of the community organization. The childhood institutions are organized for the children of the community alone. The university will admit a limited number of students from outside the community.

The nursery shall take charge of all children from about one year to about three years of age; the kindergarten from about three to six years; the companionate from about six to ten or twelve, depending on the physical and mental development of the child; the preparatory from ten or twelve to fourteen or fifteen years; the academy from fourteen or fifteen until they complete its course; and the university from graduation from the academy on through the collegiate department.

Nursery

Any mother may place her child in the day nursery before it is one year old, if she so desires. Every child from one to three is to be placed in the community nursery, the nursery being in charge of some experienced and qualified mother, who has no children in the nursery. Nursing mothers who put their children in the nursery before they are weaned will be given such work as will enable them to visit the children periodically during the day. Such mothers will be provided with work they are able to do. The community nursery will prepare food and feed all infants in its care.

It is rather significant that the community has incorporated in its educational plan the most up-to-date thought of the students of childhood problems. It is now generally accepted by students that the child even at a very early age, needs the companionship of other children of its own age; that it requires the sense experience provided by toys, music, etc.; that the mother needs a respite from the constant contact with and care of the child. The nursery system is the most efficient and economic method of supplying the needs of infancy. It has been successfully employed for many years in many places, and the technique has been carefully worked out. The nursery idea fits in very well with cooperative community life.

Kindergarten

On arriving at the age of about three and from then on until about six years old, all children are to be placed in the kindergarten and will be under the control of the supervisor of the kindergarten during the kindergarten hours. The usual kindergarten methods are to be employed, with the addition that the children under the guidance of the supervisor will begin to assume duties in a small way.

Companionate

The companionate is to include all normal children from about six years of age until the child reaches ten or twelve, depending on his or her physical and mental development. There is to be no formal schooling during this period; on the contrary, the children are to be associated with competent companions, who by constant observation and study of the children will stimulate and draw them out in whatever direction they show an interest or aptitude. The children will learn to read informally and will be given an opportunity to express themselves artistically in weaving, molding, painting, singing, etc. Their interest in and knowledge of the fundamental facts in the natural sciences will be developed in the course of informal wanderings and discussions. Every basic fact in biology, botany, geology, and astronomy may in this way be acquired by the child during the companionate.

Preparatory

During the preparatory school period, which is from ten or twelve to fourteen or fifteen years of age, the youth will learn how to study systematically and will make the acquaintance of formal subjects. The purpose of the preparatory school during this period of the child's life is to teach organization, and systematization of the knowledge that the child already possesses, and to add such information and methods as may not have been gotten during the companionate; for example, formal grammar, the geography of foreign lands, unusual mathematical processes, etc.

Control

All control of the childhood institutions, that is, all institutions up to the academy, are to be under the management of a board of eight members, made up of the supervisors in control of the nursery, kindergarten, companionate, and the preparatory school, three parents, elected by the parents with children in those institutions, and a professor of education of the university, the latter to be named by the university staff.

Rules for the conduct of the children outside the home, and outside the childhood and educational institutions, are to be drawn up by a committee appointed by the board of directors of the community. Enforcement of such rules of conduct shall be in the hands of persons appointed by the board. Parental encouragement of the infraction of the community, industrial, and school rules will be considered sufficient cause for expulsion from the community.

Training of the Children

The child is to begin early in the kindergarten by a system of simple yet specific tasks to realize his relation to his fellows and to assume some responsibilities, even though small. This system will be continued in the companionate and preparatory school, the size of the task and degree of responsibility being increased with the age of the child—care being taken not to destroy the communal interests of the child by the imposition of drudgery. This can be accomplished by using the task rather than the time system with the children. When the youth reaches the academy he will be ready to assume his responsibilities in the community on a time basis and will be given a place somewhere in the industries on the same basis as the university students.

Up to the academy the tasks of the children and the responsibility for the carrying out of those tasks are to be in the hands of the teaching staff. After that, tasks and responsibilities will be under the general management of the community—with such arrangement between the staff and the management as will prevent the educational objective in industrial training from being lost sight of in the desire for production.

Commonwealth University

Commonwealth University, which has been operating the past year at Newlano, Louisiana, as Commonwealth College, will include all collegiate departments and supervise and control the academy.

It is a school of, for, and by hand and brain workers. However, it is not a propaganda institution. It holds no brief for any religious, political, or economic dogma. Its aim is to develop personality and the power for leadership among the sons and daughters of workers. It seeks to put within the grasp of children of the workers demonstrated scientific facts and to develop in their minds the scientific attitude, which challenges and tests the accepted ways of looking at life with its institutions, its purposes, and its problems. Commonwealth attempts to make evident to its students that dogmas are a positive menace to a dynamic, progressive world, and helps them to realize that intelligent experimentation carried the only hope of adjustment or solution of our personal and social problems. In each of its students, Commonwealth attempts to develop an appreciation of the arts that will make for a richer and more abundant life, and provides avenues for the expression of such creative artistic abilities as the individual may possess. In those fields of human interests that are beyond the realm of possible experimentation, it attempts to cultivate the fullest measure of tolerance.

The university is inaugurating as rapidly as practicable the "Task and Conference" system of study to take the place of the usual formal system of recitation and promotion. This system, under various names, is now in successful operation in several schools throughout the country. Under it the bright student, the faithful worker, progresses more rapidly than is possible under the old method where he is retarded by the dullard. It enables the one not so quick mentally to spend more time and to take more pains with his work than would be possible in a class where he was discouraged—as he often is—by feeling the necessity of keeping up with the faster ones. It throws the students upon their own resources and leads to self-discipline and initiative, and enables the teachers to select the really worthwhile students and eliminate those who do not have the capacity for advanced education.

Faculty Control

The university is to be governed by a board of trustees which shall control all educational methods, and shall receive and disburse all funds which come to the institution. The board of trustees of Commonwealth University is to consist of all the members of the teaching staff at the time of the founding of Commonwealth Community, and of such other instructors as may be added subsequently, providing they become members of the community, but such instructors coming later shall not become members of the board of trustees until they have served on the staff for a period of three years. An advisory council, made up of interested persons from without the university, and a student council made up from the student body, advise and make recommendations to the trustees relative to the general policies of the school.

Economic Activities

The basic occupations of Commonwealth Community during its initial period are and will be general farming, dairying, fruit growing, and trucking. A cannery will be erected to take care of such surplus fruits and vegetables as do not find an immediate market. Service industries, such as machine shop, wagon shop, blacksmith shop, etc., will be established from the first to take care not only of the community needs, but of the surrounding section, also.

As soon as a hydro-electric power plant is installed on the Ouachita River, the community will further diversify its occupations and put in woodworking shops and other industries that can be developed successfully in that locality. Several established industries are already considering the matter of locating in Commonwealth Community as soon as the power plant is completed and electric power available.

It is the purpose of Commonwealth Community to engage only in those occupations in which it has an economic advantage. Goods and services that can be produced cheaper elsewhere than in the community will be purchased with the income from the economic surplus of our industrial and agricultural pursuits.

Outlook

This short review of the organization, educational system, and economic activities of Commonwealth Cooperative Community reveals the fact that it has no intention of cutting itself off from the civilization and problems of to-day as so many communities in the past attempted to do. On the contrary, it evidently desires to keep in the vanguard of social progress and hopes to contribute to the solving of the social, educational, and economic problems of our time. The community thinks its plans, guided by the past experiences of the group in particular, to be wholly in the trend of the world's best thought. Truly there is nothing of the fanatical, of the visionary, of the ascetic, or of the recluse in the make-up of the community.

One outstanding characteristic of the Commonwealth Community is that the group is made up of experimentalists rather than dogmatists. The individuals have no inflexible notions about the right methods. It is true that the group has tried many things in its ten years of experimentation. Many things have failed and have been discarded. Others have succeeded and have been retained. The group will not re-try methods that have proved themselves to be wrong. Neither will it discard methods that have worked satisfactorily. There are still many unsolved problems in cooperative community life, however, that afford ample scope for experimentation. The group is open minded toward any proposed ways of bettering and perfecting cooperative production and marketing, and is open to any suggestion that promises to further remove the economic wastes and social frictions that are hang overs in the community from the competitive world.

Commonwealth Community is made up of skilled mechanics, experienced horticulturists, farmers, gardeners, educators, editors, engineers, office workers, accountants, writers, carpenters, builders, printers, machinists, nurses, housewives, and livestock men.

It is clear, when one looks over the field of operations of Commonwealth Community and the task that it has set for itself, that there will be no place for the faint-hearted or hesitant, the ne'er-do-well, the self-centered individualists, the sensation seeker, the loafer, or the idle dreamer. The middle name of every individual in the group must be WORK, and spelled in capitals at that. The lazy man, or shirker, wouldn't last very long in such an organization.

It is a rather remarkable thing that members of this group, after years of pioneering in cooperative community life, are not only ready and willing to begin another venture on a new location, but are anxious to do so. They laughingly remark that "Community life gets into the blood, and you can't get it out." It is such types and such perseverance that will work out a successful and practical method for the cooperative community life.

It will be noted that the above plan possesses democratic principles of membership. That is, that each member has one and only one vote. The plan of management is not directly set forth. That is, how its members are secured and the extent of their authority. If such a settlement were not too large, and it appears to be limited to eighty-two adults, it would be practicable for them to hold regular meetings and decide.

The emphasis placed upon education is decidedly interesting. Still, it is not a new feature of economic plans. Robert Owens emphasized strongly the necessity of education and some have even suggested that his community would have been an ideal one for children, at least he was considering the psychology of the child about one hundred years ago.

The plan of education in this community extends from the nursery through the kindergarten to the university. But it may be well to note that experience has usually shown that mother love and mother care are best. Still it may be found that there is no harm for the mother to be relieved for a limited number of hours of the immediate attention of the children. Nor does this plan call for early weaning of the children. It appears an effort to train from the very cradle a race for community living. Many other projects have failed in trying to do this. For their children have drifted away from the community.

In copying the above we omitted the personnel. It will suffice to say that fifteen members have had from nine to eleven years' colony experience; nine have had seven and eight years' experience; seven, four and five years; nineteen, three years; eleven, two years, and twenty-one have had one year of experience. Also, it is of interest to note that while this is a new venture, that all of these have had at least one year's experience in colony work. Some of these were instrumental in starting a community in southern California a few years ago. Socialists have informed us that the rules were so strict that in the hands of one man was placed all authority, and any who opposed was punished by having the most disagreeable work to do. The methods were prompt and effective. The control was complete. However, this colony does not appear to have been a complete success, though the same parties were instrumental in establishing a colony in Louisiana. But this colony has moved and the same people, or part of them, have started a colony in western Arkansas.

These people would seem to have had rather a wide variety of experiences. In this last venture the provision is made that anyone withdrawing from the community may withdraw his investment by taking a bond, and receive interest thereafter on his investment. It may be interesting to watch with what measure of success this venture is pursued and to learn more of its details, so as to determine the elements of success and failure. Evidently they have not been fully satisfied, and hope their experiences have fitted them for a better organization.

Concerning the Prophet Frederick Madison Smith

This book, written by Ruth Lyman Smith, wife of the Prophet, is on our desk, and answers in detail to the description given in the HERALD for November 19. It contains two hundred and fifty-nine pages in large, round print, and deals with the personality of Frederick M. Smith, from the time of his early youth until after the death of his father, President Joseph Smith, when he was made President of the church.

It is likely the young of the church will read the book and get a better understanding of the personality of President Smith than they have been able to glean from other sources. They will see him through eyes that looked upon him from just such a point of view as that from which they would wish to make his acquaintance; and as to the view of his developed manhood, who is better qualified to speak of a man's habits, his problems, his aims, than is a truthful and devoted companion in marriage?

The volume disclaims being a history, a biography, or a statement of the doctrines and beliefs of the church. It is a creditable effort "to create a picture of the President and Prophet of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as it has been my privilege to know him."

The publishers are the Burton Publishing Company, Kansas City, Missouri; the price is $1.50.

Weighed in the Balance

Supreme Directional Control

That the rank of every officer of the church, including its departments, is pointed out in the law, the presidency being first and taking precedence over all, the other officers ranking in subordinate positions, the lower being subject to the higher according to the jurisdictions concerned. — SAINTS' HERALD, December 10, 1924, p. 1192.

That "the temporal means are to be subordinated to the spiritual activities of the church; and those activities are under the direction and control of the Presidency . . ."—SAINTS' HERALD, December 17, 1924, p. 1211.

That "inasmuch as these agents [Bishop's agents] are financial agents for the church, they should not be appointed or selected by the Presiding Bishopric without approval of the First Presidency." — SAINTS' HERALD, August 20, 1924, p. 798.

There has grown up the custom of having selections and nominations to fill vacancies in the council of Presidents of Seventy made by the council itself. We are of the opinion that such selections and nominations should come to the General Conference from the First Presidency, after approval is had by the Quorum of Twelve and Seventy. — General Conference Minutes, 1919, p. 2694.

I may have said, for I hold, that General Conference, being legislative, should not presume to issue orders to any man or officer. Such "orders" should issue only through the administrative line.—SAINTS' HERALD, August 20, 1924, p. 798.

Doctrine and Covenants

The twelve traveling counselors are called to be the twelve apostles, . . . And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned. The seventy are also called to preach the gospel, . . . and they form a quorum equal in authority to that of the twelve especial witnesses, or apostles, just named.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

. . . and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.

The bishop of my church may also choose and appoint bishop's agents, until it shall be wisdom in me to ordain other bishops, in the districts and large branches of my church.—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 10.

The following also received in 1885, is added by direction of conference of 1894: "My servants of the seventy may select from their number seven; of which number those now being of the seven presidents of seventy shall be a part; who shall form the presidency of seven presidents of seventy as provided in my law."—Doctrine and Covenants 121: 5.

. . . and the duty of the bishop shall be made known by the commandments which have been given, and the voice of the conference.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.

Kingdom of Heaven a Monarchy

BY FRANCIS EARL

"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

The kingdom of heaven is also the kingdom of God, because in it God is king. (See Psalms 29: 10; 47: 7; Malachi 1: 14.) His government and ownership are absolute. (Psalms 50: 12.) His government extends throughout the entire universe, and all are his. (1 Corinthians 3: 21, 23.) The law and principle by which he governs is righteousness, and is revealed in the gospel. (Romans 1: 16.) With him, then, is supreme directional control. This control emanates from him through authority delegated by him.

The gospel is preached that those who hear it may become perfect as God is perfect (Matthew 5: 50). It was delegated to Christ when volunteers were called for (Genesis 3: 2, 3). Also an extract from the book of Abraham says, "The Lord said, Whom shall I send?" Christ accepted the call, giving honor of supreme control to him who delegated, even his Father (Genesis 3: 3). He became perfect through suffering (Hebrews 2: 9, 10; 12: 2).

"Thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." The church is his government in the earth. In it is delegated supreme directional control. It emanates from God through Christ, his Son; to the church through the First Presidency (Doctrine and Covenants and other places). In one or two places the presidency controlled the finances (Genesis 14: 36, 39).

Some have expressed great fear of supreme directional control, lest an army should be built. What has the Lord said of the First Presidency? It should be like Moses (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42). To build an army like Moses (Doctrine and Covenants 4: 3). What was the army Moses built? Was it not the church? (Acts 7: 38; 1 Corinthians 10: 2-4.) He organized the priesthood. Supreme directional control was through him, but not from him (Exodus 25: 40; Hebrews 8: 5). Through him the apostolic quorum was called (Numbers 1), also the seventies (Numbers 11: 16). The lesser priesthood and financial department, through him, was conferred upon Aaron. Is it different now?

The twelve are called by revelation; so are the bishops, presiding and subordinate.

To be like Moses. He directed in all the affairs of the church. Humanity is not perfect. God knew
www.LatterDayTruth.org

this and made provision for it in the Twelve, Seventies, and Standing High Council in Zion, and the common consent of the body on every revelation given through the First Presidency.

I am one who firmly believes that supreme directional control comes from God, the Father, through Jesus Christ, his Son, to the body of Christ, through the First Presidency.

Supreme Directional Control

BY DANIEL MACGREGOR

It has always been a problem to determine the boundary between our rights and those of the other fellow. The line-fence fight will forever continue.

Indeed, it is the cause of all our trouble, political and ecclesiastical. It is the issue before the church to-day.

It is not our purpose to define the "international lines" that should mark the territorial boundaries of the quorums concerned. We leave that for the church in conference assembly to determine. We are interested in a weightier matter.

We are concerned with conserving the rights of the common people, the membership, against the growing encroachment of those who plead for "supreme directional control."

In the wise providence of God, a prescribed sphere of action has been assigned unto each and all. Within that sphere one may occupy, untrammelled by interference from another. It is his home, and no man dare enter unannounced and uninvited. Overstepping the inflexible radius of that sphere, one may expect to encounter trouble. We then become an obstructionist in the orbit of another. And this is the law of the universe.

Countless millions of heavenly bodies moving majestically in the undeviating pathway of their divinely defined courses, never clash with each other. They respect the rights of their fellow spheres, never trespassing upon their fields of service.

It is difficult to conceive what would happen if some star of first magnitude, ambitious of supreme control, should wander out of its course and invade the domains of another. Instantly there would be a wreck of matter, and the whole creation, interdependent upon each other, would hurl itself into an unfathomable debris.

The mechanism of a watch is so delicately constructed that if any of its parts were enlarged or overweighted without due consideration to the corresponding demands of each and every other part, it would be rendered useless as a timepiece. Interrelationship and a corresponding balance must be maintained.

It is the same in carrying on an administration of government. Each and every official wheel must be allowed to do its work, and the Holy Spirit as the mainspring of action will impart supreme directional control.

The evil of assuming overreaching powers is painfully apparent in the history of all times; and the fault has been with the common class, who, unmindful of their franchise, have suffered their rights to be usurped. Nor have they resisted until made to feel the lash of an unsympathetic administration exercising its supreme control.

An imperishable instance of the folly of it all may be pointed out in the story of the French revolution. The dominative rule administered by the king and his courtiers beggars all description.

Two thirds of all the lands of France was owned by the church and state. One third, only, was in the hands of the common people, numbering some 26,000,000. They had no say in the government. It was their business to be governed and pay the taxes. Suddenly, as if overnight, a storm arose. It was the wrath of the downtrodden, rolling in ominous clouds. In their exasperation they resorted to drastic measures; no other course was possible. The administration of the law being in the hands of the king's appointees, it was impossible to secure justice. Beheading their king, they elected another. Defying the doctrine of the divine right of kings, they selected a representative of the people. Democracy prevailed, and France prospered.

But that democracy was short-lived. The frenzied French in their idolatrous adoration of their newly elected consul president, forgot their franchise. Napoleon wanted to be king. He wanted supreme directional control. He got it and France fell.

The story of the church is on a parallel. While democracy ruled the church prospered. There was no supreme directional control in the church of the New Testament, save in the orders of a general conference. The largest power given to any man was that of "Go ye into all the world and preach"; again, "Feed my sheep."

The one supreme directional controlling power to which our Lord ever exhorted his disciples to give heed was the Holy Ghost. "He shall teach you all things"; and "guide you into all truth."

Paul in his itinerary followed the directions of the Spirit as imparted to him personally in vision and dream. If there was any restraining hand of a first presidency, other than the quorum of twelve, controlling his work, we do not read of it. He received revelations and delivered them, independent of any presidency. He issued orders and directed ordinations; and to-day his writings and revelations are received, regardless of any official questioning as to whether his labors were indorsed by any presidency exercising supreme directional control. The big thing that counts in a man's work is whether or not it bears the impress of the Holy Spirit.

The gifts of the gospel were general in their distribution. The common membership shared alike with the priesthood, the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, prophecy, etc., and the direction received through this channel of inspiration was quite as supreme as that which might come through any man claiming supreme directional control. There is no direction more safe or reliable than that which comes from the Holy Spirit.

God never made any one man's mind to do the supreme directional thinking of another. In the hash day of creation, when brains were passed around, he dished out a portion unto all.

For this reason the Apostle Paul did not hesitate to withstand Peter to the face because, as he tells us, "He was to be blamed."

Peter was a foremost apostle; some think he was the president of the church; but whether he was or not, Paul certainly did right in resisting him, regardless of any supreme directional halo hovering over his head.

There is but one place in the New Testament where the supreme control notion is mentioned. It is in Paul's revelation of what was to come. He denounces it as a Man of Sin and predicts its ultimate destruction at the coming of the Lord.

For that day shall not come except there come a falling away first and that Man of Sin be revealed who opposed and exalteth himself above all that is called God so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

The great apostasy was only possible when some influential leader should arise claiming abnormal power. Under an apostolic administration where one member stands on the same footing with every other member, it was not possible to centralize supremacy upon any.

But the apostles passed away, and gradually the authority of the church became self-centered in a few. The bishop at Rome, by reason of the prestige of the seat of empire, speedily gained the ascendancy over his fellows, which was soon followed by his monstrous claims for priority. With his rise dates the start of the papal imposture and the downfall of the Christian church.

This is that Man of Sin, who sat in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

It would be well for students of our modern church history to review the events that led to the disruption in 1844. That apostasy which well-nigh meant the ruin of the church was not accomplished in a day. The temple of lust pinnacled by polygamy and erected in Utah was only possible after the laying of a foundation that took years of preparation.

That foundation was nothing less than the doctrine of one-man power, or supreme directional control, whichever you are pleased to term it.

Had the church been intelligently functioning with its franchise, it would never have been possible to introduce a doctrine so revolting. Through years of neglect the deliberative conscience of the church had become ossified through the disuse of her franchisnal faculties until it became possible to introduce anything, so long as he who exercised supreme directional control ordered its enactment.

Indeed, there never would have been a Danite band with its deeds of infamy, had the general church been consulted. Only supreme directional control made it possible.

Supreme directional control is a euphonious phrase of foreign importation. It originated with the Roman hierarchy about the sixth century, at a time when they started butchering heretics. Galileo tells us all about it in his enforced recantation. Many efforts have been made to incorporate it into the language of America, but up to date, thank God, those efforts have been isolated and ostracized.

Such a doctrine is un-American and strikes at the root of representative government. The political sons of Washington and Lincoln will never receive it. Never!

It is a rare specimen of an almost extinct species. Possessing a chameleon skin of attractive appearance, it is well calculated to elude the eye of the untrained. As occasion may demand, it will frown or fawn. Its eyes are everywhere, and nothing may occur but what is duly reported by its myriad minions.

It was such a doctrine asserted by a misguided king that started a revolution among the early New England settlers, bringing on a fratricidal war with its holocaust of horror.

We had thought that such an imperial preachment was buried with the signing of the Declaration of Independence, but somehow or other this pesky relic of medievalism bobs up every now and again in some new form. But it is well that it is so. It will awaken us to an appreciation of the sacrifices of a liberty-loving ancestry who died that we might live.

If we would save the church from the shoals of disaster, we must maintain the sovereignty of the people expressed in an intelligent exercise of franchise, under the canopy of inspiration, as the only supreme directional control.

NEWS AND LETTERS

Evangelist Pitt in Florida

All things earthly have an end. So our season's work in dear old Kirtland came to a close on the sixth of last month, when we packed our suit cases and loaded up our auto and headed for the Sunny South.

We had enjoyed our season's labor in Kirtland, where we had the pleasure (for indeed it was a pleasure as well as an honor to serve as custodian of the house of the Lord, the only building on earth to-day, built by divine direction) of conducting over ten thousand visitors through the temple, to many of whom we had the privilege of telling the gospel story, as well as dispensing a lot of church literature. Our strength sometimes was severely taxed, especially on the part of wife, who had household cares as well as temple duties. Most of the time during the week our task was easy, as just a sufficient number came to make it interesting. But on Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays, visitors came in crowds, sometimes more than five hundred in one afternoon. At such times wife would receive them at the door, invite them to the office to register, during which time she would explain in brief our position as a church, that we were not "Mormons," and would then conduct them into the main auditorium, where I would explain in brief the history of the church and the architecture of the building. Many times the aisles would be full, and they would manifest so much interest that I would avail myself of the opportunity of telling them the gospel story, sometimes for twenty minutes or half an hour at a time. When this continued for an hour or two, Sister Pitt would come in, and I would take her place, and at times she would have the aisles full of interested listeners who would come out seemingly hungry for our literature, and leave, thanking us over and over again for what we had told them.

So we have reason to believe that our season's work in Kirtland was not altogether in vain. If any good was accomplished through our feeble efforts, to God belongs all the praise. I must not forget to say that during our busy seasons several of the brethren would come to our aid, sometimes serving the whole afternoon, upstairs and in other parts of the building, doing all in their power to make this temple work a success.

On leaving, we left the temple in charge of Brother Van-Voorhis, who had always been faithful in assisting us and who takes the greatest pleasure in this temple work. He, with other brethren who are always willing to assist, will doubtless be able to care for the temple during the winter, when visitors are few.

Our journey south, on the whole, was a very pleasant one. The weather was fine and the roads fairly good most of the way. Our car gave us no trouble; only one little puncture, and that occurred near a repair shop. Our first stop for the night was at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where we were made more than welcome at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Benners. Here we were invited to remain over Sunday, but we thought perhaps we could do more good if we stopped with the few Saints in Washington, District of Columbia, so we hastened on. We met a warm reception at the home of Brother and Sister Froyd, where we arrived Saturday afternoon. In the evening a number of the Saints assembled, and wife and I gave talks on our temple work. On Sunday we met with the Saints in their hall and were surprised to find about thirty zealous members, who seemed hungry for the truth. It was indeed a great pleasure to minister to them. There were two outsiders present, one of whom has since united with the church, largely the result of the faithful labors of Brother A. Edwards, who drives in with his auto from beyond Baltimore to minister to them nearly every Sunday. Elder Edwards is held in very high esteem by the members. Brother Davison, I believe, is the name of the other faithful elder who has charge of the Sunday school work there. It is a pleasure to meet with Saints who are as united and faithful as this little band. May God bless them in their efforts.

Continuing on our journey, we passed through Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia, reaching the end of our trip south on November 17, just ten days in actual travel, our speedometer registering 1,600 miles. Wife did all the driving and proved a splendid chauffeur. We are located in Leesburg, sixteen miles from Howey, where we spent last winter. We are here because of the better accommodations, Howey being a new city, mostly on blue print as yet, but is destined to be a beautiful city in time. We hold services every Sunday in the schoolhouse at Howey and are pleased to find the same good interest as when we left.

We expect to remain here about a month longer and then hope to visit Orlando, Tampa, Saint Petersburg, and perhaps may get as far south as Miami. We drove to Orlando last week and had the pleasure of meeting with a few scattered Saints there. Were made very welcome at the pleasant home of Sister and Brother Entrican, formerly of Peoria and Chicago. We hope to hold services near there later on.

We trust the Saints who desire us to visit them will note our address and bear in mind we have a car and will be glad to render any service within our power.

I am pleased to say my health is better, and am hopeful of the future.

Our address is 200 Cleveland Avenue, Leesburg, Florida, phone 185.

In gospel bonds,
LEESBURG, FLORIDA, December 13. F. G. PITT.

Report of Spring River District Conference

The semiannual conference of this district convened November 7, 8, and 9. We are pleased to say that it was the best attended conference ever held in the district and in some respects the most pleasant. All at the early morning session of the first day were gratified when the district president announced that our esteemed President of the church, Frederick M. Smith, would be with us. We were also pleased to have with us Apostle Gleazer and Missionaries Lee Quick and Amos Higdon. We must not forget to mention Bishop Short, who again made the acquaintance of old friends.

The conference opened at ten o'clock Friday morning with District President John Blackmore in the chair. The usual procedure of organization of conference and officers' reports were attended to, and all was made ready for a most profitable conference. All district officers and department heads reported work of their respective departments.

The Friday afternoon session was an educational program under the auspices of the Department of Women, with Sister John Blackmore in charge. During this program President Smith and Bishop Short arrived. We were pleased to greet them, while a very pleasant and peaceful influence filled the room. Brother Smith favored us with one of his fine talks on the "Social status of women."

Friday evening at seven o'clock, the program was under the direction of the Department of Recreation and Expression, with Superintendent C. C. Carter in charge.

Saturday morning at a quarter of nine, a very spiritual prayer service was enjoyed, which gave strength and encouragement to many. Two business sessions followed in charge of the conference presidency. Some very important business was transacted which will be of value in the future work of the district. A motion tabled last May and made the order of the day for this conference provided that all future conferences of the district will be mass conferences in lieu of the past practice of delegate conferences. A new set of resolutions was adopted to cover the affairs of the district. A copy of these resolutions will be forwarded to each district officer and department head. The recommendations by the district president that four of our brethren should occupy in the Melchisedec priesthood were indorsed, and provision was made for the ordinations. We congratulate our brothers and wish them success in their work for God. We are pleased to name them: Alvin Smith, of Miami Branch, Oklahoma; John Jones, of Weir, Kansas, Branch; Guy G. Cadwell, of Independence, Kansas; and O. A. Duncan, of Nowata, Oklahoma, Branch. Sister John Blackmore was elected to the office of district superintendent of the Department of Women. Delegates were elected to General Conference.

At half past seven a short program was given by the Webb City, Missouri, Oriole Girls, with monitor Nelvita Cowen in charge.

At eight o'clock President Smith gave us a fine talk upon the very pertinent subject of "Stewardship." Questions were allowed, and a wonderful explanatory discussion was enjoyed. Hazy notions of stewardship were replaced by valuable gospel and social truths. He placed before us in a very plain manner the path of our duty.

Sunday morning at half past eight, prayer service was enjoyed. Many sincere testimonies were given. At half past nine Sunday school was held, with the district and local officers in charge. This being Graceland College Day, talks were made by four of Graceland's former students: W. W. Manning, Sister W. W. Manning, M. F. Cheeseman, and Sister John Blackmore. Two hundred and sixty-eight were present, and $31.18 collection for Graceland was announced. The pulpit was again occupied by President Smith at 11 o'clock, Apostle Gleazer in charge. A general priesthood meeting was held at half past one.

It was advertised that President Smith would speak at a quarter of three. As the crowd was so large the local church could not contain all of the people who desired to hear the discourse, Christian fellowship on the part of the Methodist Episcopal Church overcame the difficulty, for they granted to us the use of their fine church for this occasion. Brother Smith spoke on the "Social aspects of Christianity." A crowded building greeted him, and close attention was given as the socializing influences of true Christianity were explained by the speaker.

At the close of the evening's service, a tired yet happy people rose at the suggestion of the district president and enthusiastically sang that real Latter Day Saint hymn, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," as a mark of their esteem for and confidence in President F. M. Smith. A fitting close to a splendid conference.

Commendation of Article on Diet

I have enjoyed reading the article on diet by Brother Ralph W. Farrell. I am certainly glad to see an article like that in one of the church papers. Of course, some will take exception to it on the ground that "that which goeth into the mouth defileth not the man," but this scripture refers not to food, merely, but to the kind of food, and mainly to meats as distinguished from one another. I have felt at times that the Latter Day Saints, some of them, needed admonishing as to their eating, for it would appear as though much eating were a part of their religion.

There are only two diseases, poisoning and starvation, and about seventy per cent of the population of our country are at present half starved, even with their much eating.

Those who go to Zion and remain there are going to be whole people, physically, mentally, and spiritually. Note, I said spiritually, not morally. There is a certain philosophy which teaches and proves that a balanced body means a balanced mind; and a balanced body and mind mean a balanced spirit; and, while this does not refer to diet, it shows the relation of the three to each other, and this relation is hindered by the American "white diet."

"Drink no longer water" is a wise admonition. Water that has not been distilled deposits lime on the teeth, in the joints, and in the arteries, and modern food scientists are teaching people to use such foods as to give the proper amount of natural pure water to the system. Roasting and baking should be done in closed utensils, such as are to be had from the dealers.

If the Latter Day Saints will be Daniels as pertaining to their methods and habits of eating, it will be a great missionary work.

Tells of Conditions in Saints' Home at Lamoni

As I have not written anything for the church papers for a long time, I take this opportunity of writing a few lines to let the Saints and friends know what has become of me, where I am, and what I am trying to do.

After receiving about twenty-five or more General Conference appointments to several fields of labor, and because of bodily afflictions and other circumstances over which I had no control, our Bishop thought it best for me to come to the Saints' Home. I came here one year ago, on my sixtieth birthday, hence feel that I am fully established in the home. I believe this is the oldest old people's home in the church, where our worthy Sister Alice P. Dancer has been acting as matron for nearly twenty-seven years. She is now our much-esteemed matron, over seventy years old.

At present there are, including the inmates and help, about thirty people residing here. The oldest is about ninety-eight years old. A few are quite feeble, while some are able to do considerable work of different kinds. Several of the sisters do sewing, knitting, crocheting, embroidery, and all kinds of tatting. Sister Anna Crudis, past eighty years, who has been blind since she was five years of age, makes many kinds of tatting and has sold many dollars' worth. She still receives many orders for her work. She is well educated and reads and keeps up correspondence with her relatives and friends.

Peculiarly, though a man, I crochet, knit, embroider, sew, and tat. I tat, using from coarse to number seventy thread, and make any kind of tatting desired. My work this year has been sent to England, Canada, and to several States. Three of us are always glad to get tatting orders so we can earn a little to help ourselves.

Besides this I try to cheer and help others by reading, when I am well enough, an hour each evening; then I play the organ and sing and get others to sing. I preach occasionally, and have charge of other services. All these activities keep up our spirits, so I am sure we get along very well for so large a family of old people, and the most of us appreciate our home very much.

We learn that the Bishop has consented to our having a radio with loud speaker, something we will surely appreciate. We are wondering if there are enough good Saints who might contribute a little to help us get one put in. If so, it could be sent direct to me, where it will be kept carefully until there is enough to get a radio. We might then enjoy many of the sermons being broadcast. I hope this is not asking anything unreasonable, for it will help to entertain a large family of old, worthy Latter Day Saints who would much appreciate the giving.

I hope all who read this will learn now where I am and perhaps write me a few lines, or a letter, so I will not feel that I am forgotten by the many I brought into the church, among whom I labored during the years of my missionary work.

F. L. SAWLEY.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Oakland, California

December 8.—December 7 we had five baptisms in our church font, three boys and two girls, Brother Etzenhouser, our district missionary, officiating. They were confirmed by our pastor, J. B. Carmichael, and Brother Etzenhouser.

November 24 to 31 we had with us Brother D. T. Williams, the apostle appointed to this district. While with us he offered a series of lectures on the principles of the gospel. We are delighted to add that the lectures were well attended throughout and that the Saints not only supported him with their presence, but brought their friends who do not belong. Brother Williams was most masterful in his presentation of the gospel.

Our institute work at Religio is still holding interest. This is what makes church work successful. One Friday night, in a driving rain, cold and disagreeable, we went to Religio and found just fifteen grouped around the stove, and who do you think they were? Every officer and teacher except one, and eight pupils. The teacher of the home decorating class came with soaked feet, but would not allow the discomfort to keep her from her class. Do you wonder that a Religio that had averaged about thirty for years should suddenly leap to an average of over sixty when these teachers were put in office?

We hope to hold our sacraments in the mission after this. Until now it has worked a hardship on the officers, having to discontinue their meetings every month to attend sacrament in the main church. But it has been worth the effort, and at least one family has been brought back to activity through its labor. We look forward to a busy year in Oakland church circles.

Fall River, Massachusetts

December 12.—The special services by Elder O. L. Thompson were brought to a close December 12. The last service consisted of a short sermon by Brother Thompson, a program by the Saints, refreshments, and a purse of money for Brother Thompson. He has been here since December 3, and the interest has been very good, on the part of both Saints and friends. Everyone loves him, and he is very consecrated, realizing his responsibilities. He leaves Saturday for Plymouth.

The sacramental service December 7 was largely attended. Brother Thompson gave a short sermon, and at this service blessed the tiny son of Brother and Sister Charles Pillsbury.

Wednesday afternoon, December 10, Elder Thompson officiated at the funeral of Sister Eliza Millward Gifford. She was but thirty-one years of age and had lived in Fall River most of her life. She leaves her husband, three brothers, and one sister. The funeral service was held at the home of her sister, whose family are Baptists, but all thought Brother Thompson's sermon was beautiful and comforting.

Chadron, Nebraska

December 8.—Though I am on the superannuated list, I am still looking after church interests in my old field, Western Nebraska and the Black Hills.

After a period of poor health that lasted about a month, I went to Champion, Nebraska, the last of October, where there is a little group of Saints that are striving to do the Master's will and make a missionary feel at home when he visits them. I had a few splendid meetings there and baptized four.

From there I went to Spearfish, South Dakota, where I had a few more good meetings and baptized three. The little group of Saints here are of a high type of American citizenship and are loyal to the great latter-day work. They are surely worthy of honor for the vigilance they manifest in caring for the minister and seeing that he has means to pay his traveling expenses when he leaves them.

Leaving Spearfish, I came here and have preached a short series of sermons, closing last evening in a snowstorm. The Saints here seem to appreciate my visit.

I am glad to find the Saints cheerful and hopeful, and as a rule they seem to be imbued with the Zionite spirit and think of gathering when convenient.

May the Lord bless and hasten his work is the prayer of your brother in the faith,

C. W. PRETTYMAN.

McDermott, Ohio

December 11.—The McDermott Saints decided to dedicate their church home December 7, and as they wished to invite all the members of the district that could attend, they provided meetings to commence the 6th, Saturday evening. Elder Clarence Current consulted the district president about the services, and between us we planned the services, Brother G. T. Griffiths being chosen to give the dedicatory sermon.

The plans worked out, but there was one thing we did not plan on, and that was the steady downpour of rain. However, the meetings were well attended and of a high order. Sunday three cars were driven through the rain for a distance of over forty miles. When Latter Day Saints want to do things, they are done.

Brother Griffiths preached a fine sermon Saturday evening. He has been an apostle for thirty-five years, and his missions have taken him to various parts of the world. He is a student of human nature and of the revelations of God, and is a man of deep insight and unusual resourcefulness. He has mingled with poor and rich, and the failing strength of humanity has been under his observation. Outward appearances are not likely to deceive him, and he has no revulsion of feeling when he comes in contact with those who are poor in worldly possessions or in the span of the intellect, but adapts himself to the situation, trying to reach all. He thus reaches the highest type of ministry, referred to by the Great Missionary as being all things to all men. Many have thanked God for his ministry. May he live many years, that many more may call him blessed.

We assembled Sunday morning, and while we were waiting for the priesthood to gather, Brother Griffiths played the organ and sang such songs as "My times are in Thy hands," and "Nearer, My God, to Thee," while I looked dolefully out on the weather. He invited me to join him in singing "Jesus, I my cross have taken," and this spontaneous and informal activity brought a great flood of joy to me and assisted materially in speaking before the priesthood on, "The student life of the ministry." Sunday school and sacrament followed this service.

The dedicatory service was held in the afternoon, at which Brother Francis May, who is giving all of his time to church work, offered the invocation. Brother Griffiths again preached one of his characteristic sermons and raised the question, "Are we orthodox?" He followed by a definition of the terms used and proved by the word of God that we are orthodox, and that the purpose of the new building was that the orthodox gospel should be preached. He urged all to improve our time and talent.

After the dedicatory prayer was offered and a few other matters attended to, the meeting was closed and the visitors prepared to leave. Brother Griffiths went with Brother and Sister Holland to Ironton, where he expected to preach that evening, and the Saints there no doubt enjoyed his ministry. Notwithstanding the departure of so many and the rainy weather, a good crowd appeared in the evening, and I had good liberty in presenting the justice and mercy of God as shown in the plan of redemption.

Thus ended good meetings. The Saints of McDermott had been looking forward to the day of the dedication of their church home, and while it is a humble building, it means a lot to them and is for them an emblem of their sacrifice, a temple where the fullness of the gospel can and will be preached, having the support of the general church and the protection of the civil law in their endeavors.

May God bless the Saints of McDermott, that they continue in discipleship and know the truth, enjoying the full freedom guaranteed by the Christ. JAMES E. BISHOP.

Uteyville, Colorado

December 1.—That others may know of our progress in church work I offer these few lines.

We are located in the Eastern Colorado District, in the extreme southeastern part of Colorado. The work began here some eight or nine years ago under the influence of Brother Sade, who converted three or four people. Then about three years ago Brother J. D. Curtis, of the missionary force, came and began to labor, against much opposition by people of other faiths, which resulted in two debates and much bitter persecution. However, the work was fully established by the able efforts of Brother Curtis, and many were brought into the church, so that to-day we have a membership of about fifty-five. Many of the best people of the community have united with the church.

Last June, the writer, after corresponding for some time with Brother Curtis, decided to locate in Colorado to aid in the work. I met him at Graft, Colorado, about twenty miles from Uteyville, on June 13, where he was holding a series of meetings. At the close of the meetings seventeen united with the church.

We sent a petition to the district conference convening at the Colorado Springs reunion, requesting branch organization. Provisions were made for the branch, and three young men were called to labor in branch work. Then last Sunday, November 23, Bruce E. Brown, president of the district, and F. Henry Edwards, of the Twelve, came and organized the branch, ordaining the young men who were called. So we are rejoicing in the advancement of the work and are trusting to the guidance of our God rather than the wisdom of man.

Those who have opposed the work here have gone down in utter defeat, and many of them have left the country. Their church work has perished, or is perishing, while we are steadily advancing. Yesterday I had the pleasure of baptizing a fine young man.

I understand that several years ago James E. Yates and family were traveling through this country by auto, and hearing of some Saints at Uteyville, came down one Sunday morning and preached there after the union Sunday school was over. No doubt Brother and Sister Yates will be glad to hear there is a branch here now. The writer would like very much to hear from them, also Brother and Sister C. L. House, Brother and Sister A. V. Lockling, Brother and Sister F. M. Burch, and any others that may see this.

May God add his blessing and help us to fulfill our covenants is my prayer in the name of Christ our Lord,

H. L. BAUSELL.

Kiefer, Oklahoma

The visit of Brother Gleazer to Oklahoma has been a great help to the Saints of this field. His clearness of vision, his clean life, as well as the wise counsel he has given, have endeared him to all.

He organized a branch at Foraker with about seventy-five members, over thirty of whom have been baptized this year. Brother Christensen made the opening and baptized eight. This was followed by a meeting by Brother Christensen and myself some time later. They are a live band of workers, and we trust the good spirit of unity and peace will be with them.

The work is onward, even if the powers of evil are raging within and without to prevent the work of the Lord.

The weather has been very fine, and we can work here nearly all the year. By letter from Brother Terry of El Reno, we learn the work there is moving, and I am delighted to tell the church we are seeing some of the local men doing a fine work. The brothers of Calumet Branch held a meeting and baptized six. Brother Thomas, our new pastor at Tulsa, and District President Earl D. Bailey held a meeting about seven miles out of Sperry and baptized ten. This is as it should be; God bless and prosper them.

Brother Gleazer will visit a number of points in this field before returning home. Six were baptized at Sperry last Sunday, where he has been preaching the last two weeks, and we expect more as a result of this and other meetings held there and the generalship of their leader, Brother Ramsey.

I desire as a servant of the Master to send greeting to all the Saints and say, as we near the Christmas time and the end of the year, that it has been the banner year of my ministry in the harvest of souls and the joy and pleasure of service for the Master.

God bless the church and the people thereof far and near.

HUBERT CASE.

Denver, Colorado

December 8.—Our beautiful fall has caught a bad cold; quite a snowstorm last week.

Elder John W. Rushton was with us a couple of weeks ago and spoke morning and evening. The writer heard the morning sermon, and we really thought it was the best we ever heard him deliver; we have listened to him many times.

Sister J. N. Duncan, who has been at Saint Joseph's Hospital, and Sister Jennie Beardsmore, who has been at Park Avenue Hospital, are both much better.

Our young Sister Bradley of Colorado Springs has been confined to the children's hospital with rheumatism but at last report was improving.

Sister Keith Rodgers had to give up teaching to undergo an operation, and is still far from well.

The missionary meetings Sunday evenings begun by Elder

Frank B. Almond are well attended, and his subjects are very interesting.

Brother E. K. Patterson, who has so ably assisted in the missionary service, is leaving for his home in Iowa. He will be greatly missed by the young folks, especially the members of the Mizpah Club.

The sacramental meeting of the 7th was excellent, though the weather was stormy. Brother and Sister Fred Walling of Fort Lupton, were in attendance. We think it takes pretty good Saints to face a storm twenty miles to attend the church services, but the Wallings are that kind; storms don't hinder them.

At the close of the sacramental service, Brother E. W. Fishburn made a strong plea for the destitute Saints of Europe and took a collection of over sixty dollars for their relief, which will be cabled to them at once.

Friday night, the 5th, the Mizpah Club gave a chicken supper and entertainment at the church, which was a success both as to pleasure and finance.

Brother Charles Fenn and wife and daughter have returned from a motor trip to Iowa.

The Department of Women held a bazaar last week and netted over one hundred dollars.

Evansville, Wisconsin

December 16.—I do not expect this letter will be in the HERALD ere the new year's sun shines upon us, but as the old year draws to a close and we sum up the rich blessings of God given us, it might be well to send a few lines to our church paper, the HERALD, and share our joys with you, for surely we are glad to read of the blessings enjoyed elsewhere.

It has been a great pleasure this year to tell the gospel story, and never before has there been presented to my mind such a hope as has come while endeavoring to study and discuss some of the Zionie problems. In all the special gatherings which I have been in, I have found the Master's Spirit striving with his people to bless and encourage.

In the two reunions and conferences of three districts which I attended, I have noted an exceptional interest in the development of Zion, and certainly God recognized it, for in nearly every instance the Master recognized the need of his speaking to the Saints, and in every place there was an abundance of the Spirit of God to comfort, instruct, and encourage, which caused a great spiritual uplift.

The reunion of Northern Wisconsin District was considered by a great many as one of the best ever held there, and we were blessed in having with us at that time President F. M. McDowell, Apostle J. F. Garver, and Patriarch W. A. McDowell, who brought to us an abundance of food divine. Many others of the ministry and of the members did their part to make possible a foretaste of a heaven on earth.

President F. M. Smith visited Black River Falls at our conference time in October, speaking several times there, as well as reaching on to Madison and Beloit of the Southern Wisconsin District, and it was my great pleasure to be with him until he left Wisconsin.

It would be impossible for me to try to tell of all the good things brought to us at that time, but suffice to say that we did indeed sit in heavenly places, and the light that came to us with the message will never be forgotten. It seemed that the people could not let him go until he had talked to them much more, for his words were kind, his message encouraging, and his counsel was at the command of any who wished to talk with him of their problems.

At this time I am preparing to go to Central Illinois to labor, and having reached as many of the Saints of Northern Wisconsin as I could find time to do, I find yet that there are several more whom I cannot reach ere leaving for the new field. I take this means of saying to both those whom I have not visited and those whom I have that I have been blessed through you in the past few years. I have felt your support, and know somewhat of your sorrows, your endeavors, and your triumphs, and I know there is in you a power which, if associated with the power of the Master, you shall be of great service to him, and your joys can be increased.

I must now bid farewell to the district to take up work in another, but I cannot do so without telling you that I have learned to love you and shall not forget your kindnesses to me. I ask that your prayers may follow me to my new field.

I trust that God will abundantly bless you through the new year and inspire those who will have the special oversight of the district and branches, that you will all feel more keenly your duty in giving to the Master's cause that portion which is his as well as fully consecrating your lives to the service of God.

I beg to remain your brother in hope, E. J. LENOX.

Chetek, Wisconsin

December 9.—Our Northern Wisconsin district conference convened at Black River Falls October 18 and 19 and proved to be very good; a spiritual uplift to all.

One pleasant feature was the opportunity to meet the President of the church, whose timely talks were much needed and appreciated. Nearly every branch in the district was represented.

The election of officers resulted in some changes. Brother Lenox, who has faithfully and wisely labored among the Saints, was released from the office of district president, and S. E. Livingston was chosen in his place, to have as his counselors I. H. Bowen and J. H. Howe. The following were chosen delegates to General Conference: J. F. Garger, W. A. McDowell, E. J. Lenox, S. E. Livingston, A. L. Whiteaker, and L. O. Wildermuth.

The Saints of Chetek have been blessed with a visit from W. A. McDowell, who held a series of meetings for a week. He had good interest, and a peaceful spirit prevailed. Also L. O. Wildermuth and E. J. Lenox stopped over for two days as they were en route to Lady Smith, Harshaw, and other parts north.

The Department of Women has been busy making money to defray some branch expenses. They held a bazaar recently and netted about $35.

The young people had a pleasant time at a Halloween social and took in about fourteen dollars. We are slowly moving on and praying for the Spirit of the Master to direct.

Lucasville, Ohio

December 16.—Sunday night, December 14, we were pleased to have with us Brother Clarence Currant of McDermott, who delivered a spiritual sermon. He will preach here every two weeks.

A two-day meeting was held at McDermott December 6 and 7, when they dedicated their church. Brother G. T. Griffiths preached the dedicatory sermon. Thirty members and non-members from this place motored to McDermott to hear the sermon.

Brother R. Crabtree, of this branch, who had a stroke last March, is a little better.

Brother Pyles, the priest of our branch, has gone to Granite City, where he will work in the steel mill. He will be missed here.

Brother and Sister J. K. Bealor have returned home from their visit, and the Saints are glad to have them here again.

The Sunday school is progressing nicely with about forty scholars. As it is nearing the New Year, we hope and pray that by the help of our heavenly Father we and others may work to better our interest in the Sunday school.

As the Saints are scattered and the roads are getting bad, we have poor attendance at our Wednesday night prayer meetings.

Tulare, California

December 10.—A two-day meeting was held Saturday and Sunday, November 15 and 16, at Irvington, at the reunion grounds. Saturday afternoon was spent in planting trees, flowers, blue grass, etc., for the purpose of beautifying our reunion grounds. Other activities were indulged in during the afternoon. Several members from this branch attended and took with them many flowers which they planted. A collection was taken up by the Department of Recreation and Expression, with which blue grass was bought. A spiritual feast was enjoyed by those who attended.

The Department of Women held a bazaar on Saturday, November 22, and had useful household articles for sale, such as quilts, towels, buffet sets, aprons, etc. A cooked-food sale was held at the same time, which proved quite successful. Something over twenty dollars was cleared. They are planning to hold another food sale before Christmas.

Apostle Roy S. Budd stopped over for a couple of hours and preached for us Sunday evening, November 23. His sermon was very much appreciated, as it was inspiring and uplifting.

The Department of Recreation and Expression prepared four Thanksgiving baskets for four needy families of the town. The work was in charge of the superintendent of young women, Sister Elizabeth Smith.

The Sunday school is working on a Christmas program.

Minneapolis, Minnesota

With the completion of the work of enlarging and rebuilding the house of the Lord in Minneapolis has come a new period of activity in all lines of gospel work in the Twin Cities. The Sunday school and Religio have recovered from the partial disorganization due to the changes being made in the church, and now in their new and better quarters are determined to make the most of the opportunities of bringing the young people to understand and appreciate this gospel more fully.

The building is now one of which the Saints may feel proud. The auditorium seats about two hundred, with a large stand in front, and a place for the choir. Several extra Sunday school classrooms have been provided, and the basement has been fitted up with a kitchen, furnace room, toilets, front and rear stairways, and a good-sized space for recreation and gatherings of different kinds. The inside of the auditorium has been artistically decorated, and pews are to be provided instead of chairs. The outside of the building is stuccoed, and concrete steps lead up to the main entrance. A picture of the new church and part of the congregation was taken recently and may appear in a future issue of the SAINTS' HERALD.

The choir did their bit to help pay for the expense of this new building, by putting on a musical entertainment last month, the collection taken up being about forty dollars.

The Department of Women also has been doing its part, and on December 4 offered for sale the articles they have been making for the last few months. The total proceeds of the bazaar equaled almost three hundred dollars.

In the business meeting held December 1, the branch approved of the work done by the building committee and made arrangements to finish paying the contractor and carpenters for their work on the building.

Missionary work is being carried on diligently, and cottage meetings are held four times a week. A great deal of interest is being shown, and outsiders are opening up their homes in order to hear the preaching of the gospel. One young married man, whose father is a prominent worker in the First Baptist Church in Minneapolis and who has been unable to interest his son in religion to any extent, has taken hold of the restored gospel in a real way, and his interest is very encouraging. Opportunities for missionary work in the Twin Cities are very good.

Mr. Fillmore, the general secretary of the No-Tobacco League of America, spoke one Sunday evening in our chapel and gave some valuable information on this subject which should be of vital interest to every Latter Day Saint.

There have been two baptisms of late. One young man was baptized on Thanksgiving Day, before the special service held that morning, in Lake Glenwood, with a cold wind blowing from the northwest, snow on the ground and in the air, and the air so cold that the Saints on shore were uncomfortable. However, he was not to be stopped by that, and Brother Kress and he went into the water together. Another baptism was performed on the 7th, when a young lady obeyed the command of the gospel and came into the church.

Denver, Colorado

It is with sincere regret that we part with our fellow member, Elmer K. Patterson, as he has recovered from the illness which has kept him in our midst. We are sad to lose his inspiring and congenial personality and the ever good word he had for those about him, as well as his untiring efforts to build up the young people's department of the work here. Yet we are happy, for he will be with his family and friends again, who must love him as we have learned to do in his short stay with us. As chairman of our missionary committee and also as corresponding secretary he has done a great work. His tracting work was just beginning to bear fruit, which he could not stay to enjoy, but we will always appreciate his wonderful start in spreading the gospel.

May he ever be a faithful servant of the Lord and receive his just reward. We hope that the Master may again see fit to decree that he may be in our midst and bless us with his service. We wish him Godspeed on his way.

THE MIZFAHS OF DENVER.

Ironton, Ohio

December 9.—We have been privileged to hear some grand sermons here of late, making us more thankful and appreciative of the restored gospel of the Son of God. Elders J. D. Shower and James E. Bishop were with us during a part of November, holding a series of meetings which resulted in three baptisms, and we feel sure there are others very near the kingdom. There is a better attendance at all services since these meetings, so we think there was much good accomplished. We hope they come again, as we feel their work here is not done.

We have tried to do our part in preparing a house where men and women can hear the gospel in its purity, and these brethren know how to impart it so that all may understand. It does one good to see such men representing the church, and we have felt blessed with their association.

Hoping the good work may go on and the Spirit of the Master abide with all,

JENNIE A. CLEARY.

Independence

The Sunday school Christmas entertainment was held December 23, at which time the main auditorium was crowded with enthusiastic children and interested parents. Each of the three younger departments of the school contributed ten minutes of the program, and the remainder consisted of a Christmas play given by the Nonpareil Class of the Religio, J. D. Gault, teacher; Francis Holm, president. The play showed how Santa Claus carries on his business and demonstrated the fact that no one can do quite so good a job as Santa himself. At the close of the play the curtains were thrown back and colored spotlights played on a revolving Christmas tree, which sent a chorus of ah's from all in the house. It was one of the most beautiful spectacles seen anywhere. Following this Santa Claus and his helpers distributed about five hundred bags of candy, nuts, and oranges to the boys and girls of the beginner, primary, and junior grades. This entertainment was sponsored and carried out under the direction and expense of the members of the Nonpareil Class, and for its success this class deserves to be highly commended.

Sunday evening, January 4, the Sunday school installation service is to be held in the main auditorium beginning at half past seven, of which the main feature will be an address on teaching methods in the Sunday school by General Superintendent A. Max Carmichael. The program will be broadcast.

The evening of December 28 the Messiah Choir gave Handel's "Messiah." The chorus, which was directed by Brother Paul Craig, consisted of about one hundred and twenty-five singers from Independence branches and Kansas City Stake, the soloists being Eugene Christy, tenor; Mrs. I. A. Smith, soprano; Miss Josephine Smith, contralto; and James R. Houghton, bass. The whole program was very fine and was much appreciated by those who attended. The church was crowded in spite of the cold, disagreeable weather.

On New Year's Eve a watch party was held at the Stone Church under the supervision of the First Presidency, at which time a good program was carried out.

Next Friday night, January 2, Brother Houghton will sing in a benefit recital for the Messiah Choir. Tickets are twenty-five cents, and may be secured from members of the Messiah Choir or at Watkins Music and Drug Co. Brother Houghton will be accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Pauline Becker Etzenhouser, and assisting numbers will be given by Miss Emma Snead, violinist. The program promises to be very fine, and it will be well worth while to attend.

Announcement has been received of the marriage of Miss Lillian Zimmermann, head of the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, to Mr. James Fligg, son of Elder and Mrs. W. I. Fligg, at the home of Brother John Zimmermann, senior, father of the bride, December 30. Brother Fligg has been attending school at Lawrence, Kansas.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson has been quite ill with malaria fever for the past week. Though his temperature is sometimes not so high as at others, the doctors do not feel that he is gaining any yet. The Saints should remember him in their prayers.

President F. M. McDowell is in the Sanitarium, having undergone an operation for appendicitis Monday morning. The operation was successful, and it is believed he will recover nicely.

Second Independence

The Christmas entertainment was furnished largely by the children, and was of a kind to display the large amount of talent existing among them. A treat of fruit and candy was distributed to the children, and the priesthood of Section Two made their pastor a splendid gift.

Sunday's meetings were well attended despite the severe weather, Elder J. W. A. Bailey speaking at eleven o'clock, and Pastor R. J. Lambert at half past seven in the evening.

Sister Mary Tomlinson died Friday, December 26, on her sixty-third birthday, at the home of her sister, Dahlia Lyons. She was buried in Mound Grove Cemetery after services at the Second Independence Church.

Brother Walter Wisemore died suddenly on Monday, he having been indisposed for a few days, but appearing to be improved. The funeral has not been arranged for at the time of going to press of the HERALD.

Liberty Street

Last Tuesday night the senior department of the Sunday school gave the cantata, "The hope of a Christmas city," under the general direction of Miss Victoria Blackburn. Brother V. W. Gunsolley conducted the chorus.

Sunday morning, December 28, Apostle F. Henry Edwards preached on "The gateways of life," which was very fine. After the sermon Sister Carrie Ballinger read a report of the work accomplished by the Department of Women during 1924.

In the evening Brother E. A. Curtis preached, using for his subject, "Let us find the place where we can serve best." This sermon also was very fine, though the crowd was not as large as it would have been had the weather not been so bad.

The Orioles and Temple Builders of this district joined in with the Social Service Bureau and furnished four Christmas boxes for the poor. These baskets contained fruits, vegetables, meat, bread, etc., enough to serve at least eight people. Some money was also contributed, besides quite an amount of clothing and toys.

The Temple Builders had for themselves a Christmas tree. Each girl received some useful present from one of her associates, after which refreshments of fruit and cake were served.

Walnut Park

The name of Bishop B. J. Scott was omitted from Walnut Park's nominees. With Glau Smith's nomination as pastor, Brother Scott was included, he to be associated with Brother Smith.

Sunday speakers were J. A. Gunsolley of Lamoni, and B. J. Scott.

On the evening of the 24th the Sunday school children gave a pretty Christmas program, and on the 26th a group of Latter Day Saints came from Heathwood by invitation and presented a play which was beautifully appropriate and appreciated by many.

On the latter evening, the retiring pastor, Brother J. A. Dowker, was presented by Chester Constance with a Christmas gift from his many friends, who will always remember kindly the great amount of time and strength he has sacrificed for the good of Walnut Park.

A Christmas play prepared by the young people was postponed until Saturday evening, January 3. This will also be given the week following at the Quindaro church.

Enoch Hill

Patriarch Richard Bullard addressed a good-sized congregation the morning of December 28.

In the evening at seven o'clock we were glad to have with us President Elbert A. Smith as our speaker. The attendance at this meeting was below normal on account of the inclement weather, many also being drawn to the Stone Church where the "Messiah" was being given. Those who heard Brother Elbert felt greatly benefited.

During the Sunday school hour last Sunday an appreciative audience witnessed a program which was put on by the beginners and primaries. It was a great pleasure to see the little children responding so well to the patient efforts of those having them in charge.

On Wednesday night at eight o'clock the junior and intermediate departments of the Sunday school gave a very fine program which was enjoyed by a good-sized audience. Santa Claus, in the person of Brother E. Kramer, paid his accustomed visit, to the great delight of the children, to whom he distributed sacks of candy.

East Independence

The attendance Sunday both morning and evening was rather light because of the inclement weather. Brother A. H. Parsons, pastor, spoke in the morning. It seems good to have him back after an absence of several weeks' duration. Brother Albert Thatcher, jr., preached in the evening.

At the business meeting held recently all the officers were sustained for the coming year.

Church at Des Moines Burns *

Word from Elder David Dowker by telegram to Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire Monday morning conveys the unwelcome news that the church building of the Saints burned, entailing a heavy loss. This makes a sad closing of the year for the Des Moines Saints, and the church will sympathize with them.

Brother G. M. Vandell, the local pastor at Sioux City, Iowa, has been very ill for the past two weeks. He was given up by two doctors, but after administration he was, in about two minutes, on the road to recovery. The doctors are somewhat at a loss to account for it, but one of them is big enough to say the medicine was a very small factor in the case.

Request for Prayers

Sister Lucile Case of Cleveland requests the prayers of the Saints for her sister, Beatrice Brainard, who has been very ill for five months. They feel she will be benefited in some way, as God always gives us a blessing of some kind.

Secures a Home Site At Independence

Fine situation, nice sightly lots, good view, good soil, free access to city schools and high schools, and still no city taxes to pay, being just outside city limits and still inside Independence school districts.

Haden Heights

as previously advertised is filling a demand for good property within means of everyone. Twenty lots taken to date.

Cooper's Addition

I have just succeeded in acquiring a small tract connecting Haden Heights with the good existing oiled streets, shortening the distance from the north part of Haden Heights to the business center three fourths of a mile.

Lots are smaller to keep prices down. Good lots 40x107, at $175 to $185. Good lots 50x107, $250 to $275. Several damaged by water course $50 to $125. Write for combined map.

$5.00 down, $5.00 per month

Interest only 6 per cent, decreasing each month. Abstract guaranteeing perfect title with each lot.

5-room Bungalow and two lots 56x214,
$2,750—Six years time

$25,000 New Walnut Park Church, McCoy school, and Benton school within one mile, and only one and one half miles from tract to Courthouse and business center of Independence.
