The Covenant of the Lord's Supper

However little we may know what confronts us this next year, next month, next week, or even next day, we may be assured that we shall have trials and difficulties through which we must pass; for we have been told that Deity will have a tried people. Only a people tested by the refining processes of tribulations and temptations successfully overcome can carry to ultimate consummation the great tasks which lie before us. So we must be prepared. The processes and methods of such preparation have been indicated by divine direction and light.

Before Jesus the Christ entered Gethsemane, he expressed to his disciples a great desire once more to celebrate the feast of the Passover with them. The impulsions composing this great desire have not been revealed to us in Holy Writ, at least by direct statement, so we are left to conjecture. Doubtless there are many, but may we not safely ascribe the following: Because it meant much to him as a Jew probably having participated in it from his boyhood up to manhood, and its rich traditional and symbolical meanings and significance being quite well known to him. This alone would have created in him such desire.

Besides this he undoubtedly had in mind, under the compulsions of keen prophetic foresight bearing not only upon his own immediate future experiences, but the needs of the race of man, that he wanted to set an example of great import to his disciples and all his followers to the end of time.

And there was probably still another cogent reason urging the desire to expression. While his disciples had previously been put under covenants and promises of faithful service and constant devotion, possibly many, many times, Jesus wanted to bind them once more to him and to one another by administering a rite in which is caught up at once the renewal of previous covenants and the impression anew of spiritual responsibility and devotion by the sacred vow of fealty to him and the socially great and religiously important covenant of fraternity.

And thus the Last Supper has become the beautiful and religiously important sacrament of the Lord's Supper. We meet at the Lord's table to renew our covenants with God and vow our continuous allegiance to the Great Leader of Christianity.

It is a preparation for whatever trials may come. It is preparation for our Gethsemanes, whether they loom large or small in our religious lives, whether they are entered frequently or seldom, according to our circumstances or natural and spiritual qualifications.

Then it behooves us as Saints and Christians to come to the Lord's table with full cognizance of the sweetness and spiritual value of the rite, and partake solemnly and full of faith, in order that the covenant may be deeply stamped, and our full determination aroused to keep it sacredly inviolate. "When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord thy God, thou shalt not slack to pay it; for the Lord thy God will surely require it of thee."

We know not what trials and difficulties may await us; but we do know the value of the sustaining faith which comes only from a close walk with God. And to walk with God means to keep his commandments.

Let us therefore be admonished to remember our covenants, not only from day to day, but throughout the year. Let us remember our covenants in the midst of our happiness, for they will glorify it. Let us remember them in our sorrows, for they will comfort us and lighten the burden of grief. Let us remember them in the midst of our trials and temptations, for they will strengthen and protect us against defeat. In remembering our covenants and walking after the commandments of God, we will keep the temples of our bodies clean, a living sacrifice to Deity.

Let us devoutly seek the table of the Lord.

F. M. S.

There are many paths that may lead us astray: there is but one that leads us to God. Error presents itself in a thousand forms: truth presents itself in but one. Many things can destroy: only One can give life. And all the constructive and beneficent forces of the universe merge in a great meaning which touches the least, but can not be fully mastered by even the minds of the great.

Concerning Winds

It is not a new thing to compare life to a sea, a thing beautiful yet fearful, having treacherous shallows and reefs, strong currents, numerous doldrums, and quiet harbors, and to think of men as mariners. Carrying out the symbolism, it is well to remind ourselves that the veteran mariner, the captain headed for a certain harbor, looks to the wind. To him the wind each day is a sort of weather pulse, and to make his voyage successful he must constantly keep in touch with it. To the sailor the wind is a companion. It is alive; it tells him of fair weather, of calm, or of storm. It distresses, yet it helps him. It perplexes and yet it pleases.

Sometimes with all of us the winds of life become unmanageable and threaten to carry us into strange and unknown ways. We suffer from dread, uncertainty, and fear. Steering true to our course seems too much for our strength. Determination wavers. Faith ebbs. At such times it is helpful to read of an outstanding experience in the life of Peter, and to apply it to ourselves:

And straightway Jesus constrained his disciples to get into a ship, and to go before him unto the other side, while he sent the multitudes away. And when he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, he was there alone. But the ship was now in the midst of the sea, tossed with waves: for the wind was contrary. And in the fourth watch of the night Jesus went unto them, walking on the sea. And when the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; and they cried out for fear. But straightway Jesus spake unto them, saying, Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid. And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water. And he said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus. But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me. And immediately Jesus stretched out his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt? And when they were come into the ship, the wind ceased.

God made the forests, but he never laid out a farm or a garden. Man with God has done that. God fashioned the quarries, but he built no cathedral. Man with God has done that. God gave the herbs and roots and furnished the brain that analyzes and the disposition to experiment, but he never established a hospital or a clinic. Man with God is doing that every day, healing and preventing disease and teaching the science of hygiene and preaching the gospel of health. God creates the raw materials, supplies the fundamental elements, gives the necessary and basic ingredients, and man does the gathering and mixing, and the result is man plus God working wonders and cooperative miracles. The distance between Saul and Paul is wide as conceivable. Saul was man made. Paul was the product of God and Saul, and the same thing can be said about all great minds and regnant souls.—Richard Braunstein.

A New Year's Resolution

This year we will go forward.

The success of a day's work often depends upon starting right: hitting the floor with both feet when the alarm rings; not crawling back into bed because the floor is cold, but dressing immediately and starting the furnace to heat the house for the rest of the family; following immediately with a good refreshing wash and shave; eating a breakfast not too heavy; and getting out of the house and on the way to work a good ten minutes before one absolutely must.

All of this requires the cheerful performance of a number of tedious little duties that are very necessary.

The success of a year's work often depends upon starting right: making our plans this very afternoon when it would be very much more comforting to sleep and rest; calling on teachers and officers this day instead of on a tomorrow that keeps slipping into the future; getting in touch with pupils this week instead of next; and in general cleaning up all the little routine duties that are a part of what we must do if we are to make the year prosper.

Looking forward with faith and trust that if we work others will work too, and that God will bless our efforts to carry on—this is what we should do.

If there is one complaint to make about the generally unsatisfactory year of 1930, it is that too many people sat by and waited to see what others were going to do. The result was that only a few people were doing things, and the few optimistic and determined workers could not make the great wheels of the indifferent world go around by themselves, and all suffered together.

There is a new spirit for 1931. American business is shaking itself out of a long and rather unsatisfactory sleep. Business promises to start stirring with the beginning of the first month, and there is no telling what the activities of the spring will bring. Everything promises to be better, and the astronomers say that even the spots on the sun, which have played irregular havoc with our weather and our radios, will be fewer and smaller this year.

So the church will take advantage of improved conditions. The people of the church—the local branches, the congregations large and small, and even isolated members—should make for themselves a new resolution: This year we will go forward.

The Auditorium

FACTS AND FIGURES REGARDING THIS IMPORTANT STRUCTURE

By J. A. Gardner

The Auditorium is not being built for the present only, and is not being constructed just for the convenience of the members of the church in Independence or the four surrounding stakes. In fact, it is a building for the entire church, in which each member has a personal interest, and in which each branch, stake, and district also has a very vital interest.

The gathering of the Saints for the purpose stated in the law will each year bring the Saints in increasing numbers in more direct contact with the services which the Auditorium can render. It is easy to foresee that soon the numbers of members who will become the direct beneficiaries of the usefulness of this building will be greatly increased.

The building is now and for many years is likely to remain the world headquarters of the church, and from it will radiate the direction, the service, and the activities of the general church. With the exception of four departments it now houses all of the general offices of the church. Its large auditorium, which seats 7,000 people, each person having unobstructed view of the speaker's stand, is, of course, the logical place to hold the General Conferences of the church. In addition to this yearly feature, it also offers a place for local and regional gatherings such as may be contemplated for the benefit of the Saints living within easy driving distances. Not less than 25,000 people are within this range.

Ever since construction was begun on the building, it has served the church in a missionary way. Next month, February, 1931, will be the fifth anniversary of the ground-breaking ceremony which initiated the construction of the Auditorium. In these five years many thousands of nonmembers, citizens in the immediate vicinity, the surrounding territory, and tourists from different States have visited the building. They have been conducted through its spacious assembly halls and corridors and have been told not only the interesting facts concerning the building but the story of the church, including its doctrinal beliefs and its spiritual aspirations and ambitions for working out a program in an attempt to demonstrate the social and economic philosophy of the religion of Jesus Christ.

These people have returned to their homes with a better understanding of the beliefs and objectives of the church. The old word Mormonism is giving way to the true word, Latter Day Saintism, and its true meaning is being eagerly received.

Let the Church Move Forward

The earnest, conscientious endeavor which characterized the months of November and December should be accepted as an index to the resources of the church and to the deep spiritual interest that forms the background of every Latter Day Saint who has really been converted to the message of the Restoration.

By common agreement and mutual consent, practically every member that could be reached in these two months made some contribution in tithes or offerings according to his ability and willingness to give. Not only have the families of our missionaries been given needed relief, but according to reports the branches which made consistent effort to reach every member have experienced a heightened interest in spiritual matters.

The simple and sensible thing to do is to continue the organization, which has so successfully made the personal solicitation, clear through 1931. The immediate results are sure to be, increased attendance at church meetings and increased spiritual mindedness concerning individual responsibility.

It is sound wisdom that the good work be kept going. There should be no let down in January, for whether we are contributing ability, service, time, or money for the glory of God and for the building up of his kingdom, it must be continuous and regular to insure success in reaching our 1931 marking goals. So long as business conditions are below normal, our efforts to support the church financially should be redoubled. God's work must go forward.

District and branch officers should take every advantage of the November and December gains in personal interest and convert them into definite activities in some department of church work. Holding and consolidating our gains and increases is vitally important now. Every member should be active in some group which is busily engaged in working out some problem connected with the development of the church.

The recent experience in November and December has proved to be a most rewarding piece of work. Again we urge that full and immediate advantage be taken of the situation.

Atonement

Sermon preached by John W. Rushton at the Memorial Hall, Independence, Missouri, April 13, 1930. Reported by W. McDonald.

For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell; and, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven."—Colossians 1: 19, 20.

In worship we may express one of two fundamental attitudes. One characteristic of Protestantism is not so much the worship and adoration of God as a sort of self-discipline in which the worshiper is more concerned about himself than God. In the ritualistic churches, the worship of God and the glory of his name are the chief things of the service. I have known of cases in our own church when, because the congregation was small, the minister would fill in the time by singing hymns, and then would have a testimony meeting, saving the sermon for the larger congregation, at least for one more worthy of the effort. According to the subjective idea of worship, which is distinctively protestant, the preacher can not be blamed. The people come out to hear the preacher, and if the congregation is not there to listen, it is quite proper to pronounce the benediction and go home. In the Roman Catholic or the Episcopal churches, the priest is not so much concerned with the congregation; in fact, it is not unusual for him to turn his back upon the congregation during the service; he is worshiping God, and the congregation joins with the minister in that worship. In the light of this explanation, I ask you to consider the spiritual meaning of the celebration of the religious festivals of our Christian calendar.

In the worship offered to God by the church, what is the significance of the atonement? What is the meaning of God's grace in this central feature of our faith? Is it not a reasonable challenge that we shall give some rational statement of our beliefs and at the same time check up these beliefs and see whether we are moving in step with the development of truth in other fields? Is there a place for the cross in the church today; and what does it signify to us?

Reconciliation, the Fundamental Purpose

Stripping this movement we represent of the external and mechanical features and looking at the essential value, it is clear that whatever we may say or think of the methods and experiences through which this work came into being, at the very least it represents another attempt on the part of God to approach humanity with a view to winning men and women to an agreement with himself. History shows that this is one of the periodical occurrences in the consciousness of some people at some epochs. Almost always when such a movement is developed, the messenger who voices the new call emphasizes the desire of God and the need of man for this spiritual reconciliation. This is always the essential meaning of these spiritual experiences. If it is granted that there is an adequate mind at the back of universal phenomena, then all things in the universe must be brought into compliance with the purpose and will of that controlling mind. There can not be success in human life unless we understand the purpose of God. Science and philosophy both are working to discover the facts and to find the meaning of the facts, so that in the light of this dual aspect of truth life will become increasingly richer and more powerful. Granted God is, then we must believe that he is both able and willing to correspond with humanity in an understandable way upon friendly grounds in order to secure the "fellow-laboring," which is Saint Paul's ideal of religion. Given an intelligent message and an intelligent obedience on the part of man, then the purposes of God designed in his superlative wisdom, power, and love will sooner or later be accomplished, in which his glory and the happiness of man will be realized.

The Principle—Atonement

This is "reconciling grace." This is the practical meaning (not necessarily the theological one) of that word which is used but once in the New Testament—atonement—a combination of three distinct words, at-one-ment. The ministry of the Christian church must always be a "reconciling ministry." The restored gospel, as we speak of it, can not be less than this, and must work its way through all of the unfavorable conditions to understanding peace and harmonious working which will result in "the unity of faith."

Looking back through the ages, it seems that men have always had some vague idea of this principle. While even in the Christian church the inability of human wisdom to express this principle properly has given us some grotesque and even tyrannical misrepresentations, which linger in the ecclesiastical terminology, the hymns we sing, and the ritualistic practices in vogue among most of the churches, we nevertheless must be fair enough to see that this central truth is adumbrated. We may no longer believe that the atonement had for its main object the appeasing of God's anger, that he demanded the sacrifice of a victim to satisfy his justice, or that the sublime tragedy of Calvary was the key which moved God to kindly disposition towards his children. Foolish and wayward though they may be, still they are his. The substitutional idea is regarded with suspicion and by many discarded; that God in his unrelenting desire for justice must punish some one; that if the guilty are not, then a substitute must be found who will volunteer to take the divine flagellations to permit man to escape the punishment due him.

The Theory of Substitution

If you consider for a moment, you will find that this substitutionary idea is not only a violation of the moral character of God but is an insult to the dignity of any man who is worthy the name. No honorable man would like to have the punishment due him inflicted upon some innocent person in order that he might escape his punishment through the generosity of a guiltless party; knowing that he could win the favor which otherwise could not be his.

I will not insult your intelligence by making any argument with reference to this matter, but will merely say that if God is accepted by us as a perfect being, there must not only be superlative love and mercy and patience, but there must be a recognition that in God there is superlative justice, and, as it is implied in the Bible and stated dogmatically in one of the inspirational books of the church which we call standard, that is the Book of Mormon, "mercy can not rob justice." There are men who would be willing to perform a charitable deed at even greater expense than would be required for a deed of justice. I have known in my own experience men who would rather give five dollars as a ministration of generosity than pay a single dollar of their just debts. It is surely not necessary to say to a congregation of this sort that no man is entitled to dispense charity until first of all he has done justice. The same is true with reference to God. There can not be on his part a consideration of the merciful deed if at the back of that merciful deed there is a lack of justice, for no one should be considered as doing his duty if in the performance of the merciful act there has been a deliberate refusal to recognize justice. As far back in the history of the evolution of the religious consciousness, as the Hebrew race, I find in what you might call the golden era of the prophetic ministry—in the days when Isaiah the prophet was proclaiming the mind and will of God to the nations—there arose in a little village a contemporary by the name of Micah, who seemed to be aware of the divine purposes; and he reviewed all of the mechanical processes by means of which the nation believed it could win approach to God and secure his approval; and Micah puts the question, asking if they can believe that God will receive an offering of the blood of bulls and goats, and even take an offering of their body (because they at times practiced the worship of Moloch which meant an offering of human sacrifices among the Jewish people) to win the favor of God. And this prophet asks the further question, in effect: Can you be so obtuse as to believe that there is any possible material equivalent for a moral misdemeanor? Can you give to God anything in the nature of a sacrifice, no matter how dear it may be to you, as an equivalent for an act of injustice? And then says the prophet, "He hath showed me, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

Here is stated for us in terms which none would be disposed to question, the basis of divine approach. Consider this fundamental truth of our Christian faith. Once more there stands out the very thing which the Apostle Paul makes clear to us as being the objective which God has in view, the reconciliation of man to God. Such reconciliation can not possibly be secured if any man intentionally or actually is defective from the standpoint of God's superior knowledge and superior moral standard. How can love love that which is unlovable? How can morality consort with immorality? How can justice become a next-door neighbor of that which is injustice in nature, in intent, and in results?

To those who believe that religion must have an ethical base, that it is morality as well as ecstasy of feeling, the substitutionary idea must be rejected. For even to our imperfect conceptions, it outrages the sentiments of ordinary life. It violates the intelligence which is ours and cancels the faith we have in God's perfectness of character. In our theological thinking, we must not interpret one feature of faith in such a manner that it makes another contradictory. Truth, above all else, must be self-harmonious.

Another Theory of Atonement

We will consider another view, which is expressed and developed by Saint Paul in several letters, particularly the letter to the Romans, the second letter to the Corinthians, and the letter to the Philippians. Saint Paul, in speaking of the atonement, or reconciliation, puts the emphasis on two points. The text for our study is found in the whole of Romans chapter 5, 2 Corinthians 5: 14-21, and in the letter to the Philippians, 2: 1-11. I will summarize the argument: In Romans the apostle analyzes God's justice, in the Corinthian letter the principle involved in the atonement, and in the Philippian letter an application of the principle.

In the Roman letter Saint Paul presents the argument as follows: Through our faith in Jesus Christ we are justified—vindicated (Weymouth translates the word "stand acquitted") and we enjoy peace (harmony) with God. Faith has introduced us to the state of favor with God which is ours now. Our hope is that some day we shall share God's own glory (perfected character). All our sufferings now are part of the necessary discipline through which the Holy Spirit is working out this destiny in humanity. God's love is the power which is at work. Its first proof is in the death of Christ who, while we were helpless, gave his life for us. Faith in his death brought reconciliation, and by faith in his life we shall be saved. As we made our trust in his death the means of reconciliation, so our trust in his life makes us safe.

By one man's sin the hereditary taint was transmitted to all men. But, through divine grace that hereditary taint is neutralized by Jesus Christ in his death. Death which had been dominant in human experience because of "one man's disobedience," through the obedience of one man, Jesus Christ, this regnant power was canceled. Where sin abounded, grace abounded more exceedingly, and the righteousness now accepted by man issued in eternal life.

In the Corinthian letter, the author states that in the death of Christ the hereditary penalty was canceled, and it was now possible for all men to live with God. To "be" in Christ (self-existing and active in the Christ atmosphere) is a new creation. The old state, or condition, passed away, and there is a new state in which God is all. Through Jesus Christ we are made one with him and share in this same ministry of reconciliation. "He who was without sin was made to be sin in order that we might become the righteousness of God."

In the letter to the Philippians, Saint Paul shows that Christ literally shed all that belonged to divinity and identified himself with man, even accepted the degradation of the lowest exemplified in the crucifixion, because of which God exalts him and makes him supreme in heaven and earth.

This is not the doctrine of "substitutionalism" but rather of identification. He lives our life, shares its defects and deformities, experiences the necessary "God-forsakenness" of the sin which is characteristic of man, and then lifts man up to God, identifying humanity with divinity.

The Parallel of Life

The teacher, leader, and reformer must submit to the pedagogical law which demands that the teacher identify himself with the life of the pupil to discover the needs and capacity of the pupil. By thus bending down to the life and level of the scholar, he can lift the pupil up to his own level, which is used as a stepping-stone to further advancement and power. So, the torch of life is passed from generation to generation and carried to higher heights, widening and deepening life and its possibilities. None can fail to recognize this same principle which characterized our Lord. It is the principle of his teachings and illustrates the philosophy of his work and is the exquisite demonstration of God's love which has its only counterpart in the love of a mother for her child. God so loved the world and gave his only begotten Son, who sounded all the depths of human limitation and need in order to lift man up to the highest possible level of divine glory.

Perhaps no statement of the apostle is so daring in its reach and elevating in its idealism as that found in Colossians 1:24: "Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is his church."

This is the apostle's ideal of the Christian ministry—making every man perfect in Christ Jesus!

I never read this but my amazement deepens. Think of the daring of this apostle of Jesus Christ, who not only suggests but actually affirms that the sufferings of Jesus Christ were incomplete and that the church can not be redeemed until every one of us will have contributed to the same suffering needed in order that the whole may be raised up to that place where everyone may enjoy communion with the divine.

In the light of these things I may say to you if we are going to make the approach to our fellow men in these days in terms that will win their support, we must try to make our religion fit in with the general scheme of things, and my concluding word with reference to this is: The apostle puts emphasis upon the fact that a reconciliation not only exists towards man and earth, but to heaven, that in Jesus Christ there shall be reconciled all things, not only which are in heaven but in earth.

The challenge to the church is to find God everywhere and in all things and to seek to interpret and evaluate all things in him. It is upon this ground I believe that this universal reconciliation will come. For all values ultimately are spiritual. These values whether in heaven or earth are things which will draw God and man together. As we shall remember the cross and memorialize the sacrificial sufferings of Christ, I urge that we shall give some time to the contemplation of the tragedy. Let us do so in the light of some of these things we have expressed.

Remember Christ did not die to avert God's anger, nor to be your substitute for the punishment which vindictively God must administer to satisfy his justice; rather let us think that through Jesus Christ and his ministry in life and death God himself was descending to the very depths of human life, taking hold of the lowest and worst to lift each and all up to the heights of perfect enjoyment with him. We look forward in glorious anticipation of that day when there will be perfect reconciliation between God and man, earth and heaven, time and eternity. To this end let us, during these days, consecrate ourselves.

"In His will is our peace."

The Thief of Souls

By Ray Whiting

In a recent issue of the Saints' Herald we find the following statements: "Must we always continue to hear the pathetic voice of hungry children crying for bread? Must mothers starve and suffer, while fathers, with idle time wasting their most productive years, wear out their thin shoe leather searching for work? Something is wrong. There is too much food in the world, yet thousands of working men can not buy, because there is no place to sell the one thing they have to barter for it: labor. Warehouses are overstocked with cloth, yet many thousands need garments. What is the wall that stands between these great surpluses of unconsumed commodities and the impoverished market that needs them?"

Strange it is indeed that in this day of exceeding riches, of almost unlimited power, of marvelous inventions and great achievements that men who ought to subdue the earth and who do command the very elements to obey, find themselves almost overcome with the weight of the power, wealth, and learning that they have evoked but can not control. So great has become this condition of maladjustment that whole nations are trembling with the weight of this problem, and men's hearts are filled with fear for what the future may hold in store.

In this day of great wealth, we find ourselves in poverty; in this day of knowledge we find ourselves ignorant of the most fundamental truths of life; in this day of safety devices and automatic controls we find our death rate by accident increasing; government reports show a steady increase in divorces and homicides until, with the apostle of old, we can say that wickedness is increasing. As all the wisdom and learning of the past have culminated in the production of all the beautiful and wonderful things of this modern age, so has all the cunning of the past come to a climax in this day of treachery, vice, and murder.

There is a more wholesome side of life than that which we have just presented, but it is this unwholesome side which is robbing us and the world of the beauty, the joy, the fullness of life which our Maker wants us to enjoy.

What Is the Thief of Souls?

What is this Thief of Souls which, in spite of wealth and power and beauty, is bringing sorrow, suffering, and distress? Some might say it is indifference, that people know better but remain indifferent. Possibly so, but I wonder if men can be indifferent to a situation which they know to be the cause of suffering and social unrest. I believe the history of the race shows that when men become conscious of a maladjustment, they make some effort toward adjustment. It might be by the trial and error method or by reflection, but they cease to remain indifferent. It is true that there is much indifference in the world, but indifference is the result of something else. What is the cause of indifference? That is the Thief of Souls.

Others might say that selfishness is the Thief of Souls, and again we agree that selfishness is the cause of lots of distress in the world, but we still ask, Why are men selfish? It is difficult to believe that a man would continue in his selfishness if he were really aware of the fact that his selfishness would finally destroy the thing he would save. Selfishness, like indifference, is the cause of something else. That cause is the Thief of Souls.

In a splendid sermon found in the October issue of the Homiletic Review we find these very interesting and truthful statements: "A blindness to sin is the greatest of moral calamities." "A lack of clean-cut convictions in regard to matters of right and wrong can not but be evident even to the passing student of trends of the times." "We have become morally color blind. We have lost the capacity for distinguishing between right and wrong. We call good evil and evil good. We refuse to recognize an abomination as an abomination." "A new spirit of intolerance of those things which no decent society should tolerate is one of the deepest needs of American life."

Is It Sin?

Without doubt the world has become blind to the awfulness of sin. Sin is so common that we look upon it with considerable allowance; we call it modified names and try to justify the sinner by calling evil good and good evil. Maybe we have lost the capacity for distinguishing between right and wrong.

Doctor Ellwood, in his book Man's Social Destiny, seems to quite agree with the statement quoted above. He says: ". . . it is precisely the lack of a sense of sin which is the most discouraging thing in modern religious life. Our spiritual complacency threatens to be as deadly as our political and social complacency. We are corrupt, but contented in our corruption. . . . We have no adequate sense of our moral imperfections, and hence no hope of improvement. This is the judgment not only of sound religion, but of sound science."

Isaiah (5:20) says: "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter."

But is Blindness to Sin the Thief of Souls? Why is it that men are not able to see the folly of their ways? If men knew that the things they do to get wealth would bring poverty, the things they do for happiness would result in sorrow, the things they think make for life end in death, would they do it?

Man's judgment is faulty—he is using a wrong standard. Not man and his wants, but God and his wants must be our rule of action. When any nation or set of people have lost sight of God, they perished. The road traveled by nations now extinct is the same road we find this nation traveling, and we find ourselves facing the exact situations they faced just before their final downfall.

The Lost Vision

So I would say that ignorance of God is the Thief of Souls, for the "fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Consciousness of God causes man to become conscious of his own insignificance; it is the beginning of humility. Puny man who stands up and blasphemes God and who shows disrespect toward him and his laws is not conscious of God. In every case, so far as I know, when men become really conscious of God they repent and seek his ways rather than man's ways.

Job said, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eyes seeth thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes."—Job 42: 4, 5. When Isaiah saw the Lord, he said, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." Eyes opened to God are eyes opened to the awfulness of sin. Indifference gives way to deep concern; selfishness turns to unselfishness. Isaiah said, "Here am I; send me." The persecutor Saul became the preacher Paul when he became conscious of God; and out of his sinful soul he cried, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do!" Although his physical eyes were blinded, his spiritual eyes were opened; his blindness to sin was healed when he became conscious of God.

Ignorance of God is the cause of indifference, of selfishness, of blindness to sin. It is the Thief of Souls. But knowledge of God is Life. Jesus said, John 17:3: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

The world, without doubt, has heard of God by the hearing of the ear, but it does not know God with that knowledge which saves it from indifference, from selfishness, and from a blindness to sin. To us, to this church, is given the task of so revealing God to men in this age, so clearly, so distinctly, so definitely through our spiritual, social, and economic relationships that they will be "constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ."

Teamwork

By Evan Fry

For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that body, being many, are one body, so also is Christ. For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one spirit. For the body is not one member, but many.—1 Corinthians 12: 12-14.

I wish that I had time to read the whole twelfth chapter of First Corinthians for you this morning, but I should like to ask that each one of my listeners get a Bible and read the chapter for himself some time today. You will remember that the whole chapter seems to be directed to some members among the Corinthians who apparently thought that they were quite important and necessary characters in the church—so important that by comparison some of the other members were not important at all. The lesson of this chapter is that it takes all kinds of people with all kinds of dispositions, temperaments, talents, abilities, and training, to make up a community or a church. Each individual is important and essential in his place; and so long as he fills his place well, and so long as he functions as his position demands, that long is he a good member of the body, and worthy of the respect and esteem of his fellow men.

All Kinds and Conditions of Men

If all Christian peoples could only learn this lesson, how much closer to a realization of the ideals of the kingdom of heaven the world would be! Whenever you see a man or woman who is too proud to associate with others, or to recognize as equals persons whom he believes to be on a lower scale socially, or mentally, or financially, you may be very sure that there is a person who has as yet caught not even a glimpse of the spirit of the Christ who taught his followers to love their brothers as themselves. As long as there are people in the world, there will be differences of ability and talent and training and degrees of proficiency between individuals. It is sane and entirely compatible with Christian conduct to recognize those differences. I realize, quite humbly, that I am much superior to some people I know; but I realize still more humbly that some of those same people whom I regard as my inferiors are quite probably my superiors in some other respects. It is all very well for me to be aware of the fact that I have had more education than my neighbor, but the whole purpose of that education is defeated and my life becomes intolerable to others if I feel that superiority of education so keenly that I snub my neighbor and treat him as an inferior while I exalt myself in my own estimation until I lose every vestige of brotherly love which I may have had. If you will think over the list of people whom you have perhaps been snubbing or looking down upon, I dare say that a little calm consideration will convince you that each one of those inferiors of yours has some quality—perhaps several qualities—in which he far excels you. We are all members of Christ. No one of us can say to the other "I have no need of you." Furthermore, I take this statement in a social way, as well as in a religious way. I have no right to look down upon the man who collects the garbage from my back door because his job brings him less money per week than mine; perhaps in a final analysis I might find that his job was more important than mine. If I find that I haven't time to repair my automobile, and that I wouldn't know how to do it anyway, I have no right to play the snob with the auto mechanic who does that job for me, just because during the process his hands get dirty and his nails broken and grimy, while my hands remain white and clean and guiltless of any callouses. I could enumerate examples—but these two are enough.

An Example of Teamwork

One little episode did more to impress me with the truthfulness of Paul's statement that we are all members of one body than all the sermons I have ever heard on the subject. This story is about three good sports who had learned to play the game with the team—not all by themselves. The first year after I was graduated from university, I found myself teaching school in a town famous the world over as a center of medical knowledge. I was a young and very green school-teacher. There was no congregation of my own church there, so I began to attend the Methodist Church, joined their choir, and when I came back for the second year, was asked to take the choir leader's place. The year rolled around until Easter time drew near, and I instituted a campaign for some extra singers to take part in the Easter music. Perhaps I shouldn't have been amazed at the response, but I was. One of the recruits turned out to be the superintendent of schools, who had power to hire and fire me, and who was easily old enough to be my father. Another was a man whose name is internationally known to the medical profession, and whose financial rating is well up towards the millionaire class—also old enough to be my father. Still another was the minister of the church, whom I felt to be my superior in countless ways. Those three good sports, any one of whom might have easily felt justified in looking down upon me, sat in my choir during the weeks of preparation and took orders from ME—the very green and very humble school-teacher. If I had criticisms to offer, they took them graciously and humbly, and no one could ever have known by a single act of any one of them that he thought himself superior to me. One was an expert in the field of education, another a specialist in the field of medicine, and the third a specialist in the field of religion. I was, for the time being at least, and so far as they were concerned, the specialist in the field of music. Each one of us recognized the other for what he was, and we worked together like the perfect team mates that we were for a very wonderful rendition of our chosen Easter music. To me, the beautiful harmonies of the Easter music by that little choir are only symbolical of the beautiful harmony which would prevail in the world if every man recognized his brother's superiority, and loved his neighbor as himself.

Education from the lowest to the highest range is challenged now to make a contribution to our day and generation in the presence of issues of the greatest magnitude ever presented to any people. The sensitive state of mind and conscience developed through education have made it impossible for the American people to neglect the issues rising out of poverty and unemployment. The threat of revolution that endangers the stability of organized society, as in Russia, may well lead us to ponder on the obligation of educated people to develop a social order where public welfare for the millions will receive the most earnest consideration. Our American ideals, developed and sustained in part by our education, must come to grips with the practical situation of the masses. The undergirding of this precious heritage will be found to be the happy union of education and religion. These sources sustain the thighs of our citizenship and reveal the vision without which the people perish.—Doctor William O. Thompson, president emeritus of Ohio State University. Quoted from the Journal of Education.

MINISTERIAL PROBLEMS

Local Preparations for the Missionary's Visit

By E. Y. Hunker

The following excellent suggestions are taken by permission from a letter and are here given for the benefit of both missionaries and local workers.

In contemplating the needs of our work, especially in regard to increasing the efficiency and effectiveness of the work of the ministry in organized districts, the following suggestions have come to mind:

1. That at least a week prior to a missionary effort in a branch the district president be urged to visit personally the branch and to organize the local priesthood for a house to house visiting of the membership in the interest of the effort to be held.

a. The local priesthood should be instructed to stimulate the missionary spirit among the members, thus preparing for and advertising the coming services.

2. That the local priesthood, through proper canvass and wise observation, list a number of desirable prospects for membership.

3. That various persons of the priesthood and of the membership who have personal friendship with prospects be instructed to personally introduce prospects to the missionary at the beginning of the missionary services.

a. A wise way of introduction prepares a splendid means of approach for the missionary to prospective members and paves the way for personal contact work so desirable in winning converts.

4. That the district and branch presidents endeavor to provide for proper musical cooperation for missionary series, recognizing the right of the missionary to offer suggestion in connection with the same.

5. That the branch pastor be instructed to counsel the missionary regarding the worthiness of candidates for baptism.

6. That the missionary be especially instructed to cooperate with the branch pastors and the local forces in every way.

a. This is particularly important relative to the missionary's carefully ascertaining the eligibility of candidates for baptism.

7. That the missionary should instruct the candidates for baptism regarding the financial law of the church.

8. That in at least two sermons of a series the missionary should be urged to teach and preach the law of tithing and the doctrine of stewardship.

9. That when the local priesthood have visited properly in the homes of the branch membership, the missionary be urged to devote more of his time and effort to laboring with prospective members.

a. In altogether too many districts the work of the missionary has of necessity been largely pastoral because of the lack of proper work by the local priesthood. Thus the hands of the missionary have been tied to the extent that it has been extremely difficult to carry out the real missionary work that should be done.

These suggestions are submitted in the sincere hope of further stimulating sound growth and spiritual progress. It is my humble belief that the putting into effect of such suggestions would generate new life in all phases of district, local, and missionary work.

Hands

By Inez Kinney

I saw a rugged mountain pile,
Whose peak loomed stark and grim
Above the clouds; and seemed to hold
The mysteries of time within.
Great seams and crevices had formed,
Through ages passed away,
By tempest, flood, and storm.
Massed snow lay in the clefts
High up those dizzy slopes;
Great hands—a kind of life they seemed—
Stretched forth in anguished hopes
To reach the top, trying there
To find the Absolute,
And learn all truth.
Through ages long they struggled up,
Those bloodless, straining hands;
Refusing they, to toil and wait
On tranquil, common lands
Where life is undisturbed by urge
Or pain, to look beyond,
To where all quests and answers merge.
A crystal lake lay on the plain
Stretched out in smiling calm;
Beside it passed the lives of those
Who found a soothing balm
In fruits of toil, and common things—
A humble recompense.
That mountain pile will surely stand,
Those hands stretch high, and high.
The crystal lake shall ever rest
And mirror summer sky.
Great souls will always struggle on
In anguished search for truth,
While others rest in faith and hope
Nor seek to draw the veil.

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Our Junior Young People and the Church School

By Leta B. Moriarty

Scope of the Church School

The church school seeks to use the Christ method of teaching. Its object is to reach into every phase of activity in the life of the boy and girl, exerting there an influence in the development of worth-while character. On the whole its aim is to produce a series of religious experiences in the lives of the young people which will affect on the Christian level the individual's intellect, emotions, and bodily reactions. Its program includes study, expression, worship, play, and work.

The church school is more than a Sunday school. It embraces more than one hour every Sunday morning when the young people gather to study the quarterly or to keep from studying it, and are then dismissed to face the week's problems until another hour on Sunday morning. Every week-day activity falls somewhere within the range of the modern church school plan, which seeks to correlate the activities of the boys and girls at home, at church, at school, on the street, and on the playground. And the plan in the working out is left much to the judgment and the initiative of the teacher-leader.

Educators and churchmen now think that two hours of service on Sunday, provided the program is sufficiently attractive, should replace the old-fashioned Sunday school period. A suggestive arrangement of the placement and time allotted to each activity of the Sunday morning's program under the new plan is: General worship exercises, thirty minutes; class period, forty minutes; song service, fifteen minutes; worship program, thirty minutes. A carefully planned program is necessary to successfully bring together all elements into a single impression on the mind of each boy and girl.

Week-day activities of the church school include a range of choir practices, debates, lectures, play rehearsals, hikes, work periods, correspondence with distant church school classes, and parties, all of which come under the supervision of the leader of social and recreational activities and the teachers.

The Continuous Study-worship Program

The continuous study-worship program is winning devotees. It is being tried. And it works.

Teachers and officials have seen a need for continuity of Sunday morning services, because adolescent boys and girls have not yet acquired the sentiments and traditions which draw many adults to church. They haven't the churchgoing habit. Instead they are accustomed after Sunday school to go home, only a small per cent remaining with or without their parents for the adult eleven o'clock service. A very few prefer the adult meeting, but the great majority go home or loiter about on the streets or at the corner drugstore until noon.

Experience is proving that if the right program offering is placed at the close of the study period of the church school, the children are eager to be present. The keyword to the success of this program is participation. The training coming from a series of programs rightly conducted by young-minded adults or young people and mainly given by the boys and girls themselves, is invaluable to the church of the future. It is real group work and worship.

The necessity for a well-worked-out program can not be given too much emphasis in an undertaking of this nature. No program at all is better than an "impromptu" service involving a snatching of some inexperienced pianist from the congregation; a hasty selection of unrelated songs; a wild rush into the adult congregation for some one to take charge; a long talk by an individual who tells how mean he was when he was a little boy, how the teachers couldn't do a thing with him, how as a young man he lay in the gutter and didn't come to himself until Christ came into his life. Such a program is a farce and cheapens the church in the sight of youth. After an experience or two of this kind, only the very "faithful few"—probably those who have to wait for their parents in the grown-up service—will be left as congregation.

Children are observing. They know when the officers and teachers are working for them, and they appreciate every effort. They reciprocate with love, good behavior, cooperation, growth.

In form the program should resemble that of the adults. Boys and girls like to feel that they are growing up and that their elders have respect for their age and standing. But the program material should be adapted to the age and understanding of the group which is to participate.

A junior young people's council of eighteen members representing seventeen classes of boys and girls from twelve to fifteen years of age enthusiastically commended the parts and the whole of the following continuous church school program:

The day's theme, "How may we show our gratitude?"

Worship period:

Song, "Great and marvelous are thy works".....

..... Congregation

Invocation .....A teacher

A Thanksgiving story, "Benefits forgot," told by a young woman.

Song, "Stand up, stand up for Jesus".....Congregation

Class period:

Lesson from the Book of Mormon, "Changed into his likeness." This was the story of the son of Alma and his young friends who had started on a secret mission to destroy the church of God, the visit of the angel, the illness of Alma, the conversion and work of the young men. The scriptural quotation was: "And thus they were instruments in the hands of God in bringing many to the knowledge of the truth, yea, to the knowledge of their Redeemer."—Mosiah 11:206.

Song service:

Hymns: "Come, learn of the meek and lowly," "Gratefulness," and "Praise ye the Lord."

Worship period:

"A lesson in thanksgiving," story by a girl of the department.

Hymn, "Love divine".....Congregation

The Lord's prayer repeated in unison.

Taking of a thank offering (by two boys of the department).

A song, "My God, I thank thee, who hast made,".....

..... Girls' chorus

Scripture reading, the story of the ten lepers: Luke 17: 11-19..... The pastor

"My prayer," a duet.....Two girls from the chorus

A very short address by the pastor, "How we may show our gratitude."

"We may show our gratitude by being true".....A girl

"We may show our gratitude by being generous," A boy

"We may show our gratitude by being honest".....A boy

"We may show our gratitude by being kind".....A girl

Announcements.

Hymn, "Praise ye the Lord".....Congregation

Benediction (soft music as the congregation left the service).

Notwithstanding favorable comments concerning the above outlined service, suggestions tumbled from the lips of the council after this manner: "Let's have a play." "Let's have more pictures" (stereopticon lectures). "Let's have a bishop explain tithing." "Let's not have so much singin'" (a boy). "Let's work it so more can take part." "Let's ask the pastor not to say 'Miss' or 'Mr.' when he introduces any of us boys or girls; it sounds silly!" "Let's have more stories."

Junior young people do indeed want a varied program, but the best thing about it is that they are more than willing to do all they can to get an education. They call it "growing up."

Guiding the Nursery Child

STUDY HELPS FOR PARENTS AND WORKERS IN THE NURSERY DEPARTMENT OF THE CHURCH SCHOOL

By Mrs. Bertha Stevens, Phoenix, Arizona

These assignments will appear early each month in the columns of the "Herald." They will run for one year and should be decidedly helpful to parents of small children and workers with the little tots. Monthly group meetings or classes may well be formed in every branch, under the direction of the church school. The text, Guiding the Nursery Child, by Mesley and Stevens, may be ordered from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, price, $1.25.

It is suggested that each study group organize the material in this unit of twelve lessons around the solution of problems. We feel that if this is done, the successful solution of such problems will find a greatly increased class interest as well as the necessary scientific information organized and ready for future use in meeting similar problems.

The problem for discussion and solution should arise, as far as possible, from the immediate needs of the group. With this in mind the problems stated for discussion in the accompanying outlines are merely suggestive.

Lesson One

Standards for physical growth and development.

Problem: Mary is two and one half years of age. She weighs twenty-three pounds. She has sixteen teeth. She is rather pale and appears undernourished. Help Mary's mother plan a daily schedule for her.

Before a helpful regime can be decided upon, we would need to know certain things concerning Mary. How much should Mary weigh? How many teeth should she have? What are the characteristics of an optimal (best-conditioned) child of Mary's age? After we have discovered these and other standards for physical growth and development of normal two- and three-year-old children, we shall have a basis for comparison. Only then can we set our goals and begin to plan a definite schedule for Mary.

The following outline may help us in finding and organizing the desired information:

Standards for physical growth and development for two- and three-year-olds:

References: Guiding the Nursery Child, pp. 19-22, 64, 65.

1. Weight?
  - a. Two-year-olds
    - (1.) Boys
    - (2.) Girls
  - b. Three-year-olds
    - (1.) Boys
    - (2.) Girls
2. Height?
  - a. Two-year-olds
    - (1.) Boys
    - (2.) Girls
  - b. Three-year-olds
    - (1.) Boys
    - (2.) Girls
3. Head characteristics?
4. Teeth?
5. Muscles?
6. Bones?
7. Heart?
8. Pulse rate?
9. Chest?
10. Lungs?
11. Respiration?

It would be interesting and helpful if we were to weigh, measure, and otherwise examine and compare the children of the mothers in our group. Perhaps we might even "borrow" the neighbor's "tiny tot" for this purpose.

Training for Service

By C. B. W.

In the nine months from April 1 to December 31 a total of 1,651 individuals have received cards of credit from the general department of religious education for institute, class, and correspondence credit. The three largest credit groups have been the following:

General Conference Institute .....	637 individuals
Institute in Zion .....	170 individuals
Kansas City Stake Institute.....	159 individuals

It is quite possible that the number of students to receive credit before April 1, 1931, will bring the total up to 2,000. This does not include those carrying unfinished courses. We think this is a significant number, possibly one fifth of our active leaders, accumulating credit toward certification in Religious Education and Leadership.

A Retrospect on Christmas

THE REDISCOVERY OF JESUS

Every man who finds Jesus must discover him by his own efforts. Others may point the way, or urge the journey, but each must tread the path that leads to Jesus for himself. One can not ride. It is a service that we can not buy and that can not be performed by proxy. Perhaps this is why, in these days of purchased services, more people do not find the Christ.

If salvation could be purchased by the payment of annual premiums of money, as insurance policies are, there would be many takers. If the payment of fifty, or a hundred, or even a thousand dollars, would redeem a man, there would be many saving for it, denying themselves all sorts of luxuries and necessities of life.

But the way of salvation is not like a train trip, for which one may buy a ticket. It is rather a pilgrimage of the soul that must be made on foot; and every man must find the way out of his particular part of the spiritual wilderness before he can travel on the highway that leads to eternal life.

Christmas gives the world each year a chance to rediscover Jesus. Many will never see him, because they have their eyes filled with the splendor of display and the luxury of the presents that are given and received at Christmas time. Some will even lose sight of the real Jesus in their absorption with the ritual and pageantry, and the eloquent words that are spoken of him in their church services.

The spectacle of Jesus before the world nearly two thousand years, and still so little understood by the masses of men, makes many feel that his mission was in vain, that men will never understand him, and that the world will go on as it always has.

Yet it is true that each Christmas some discover Jesus who had never known him before. At Christmas time some see the suffering of their fellow men, and they are taught to pity. Some see the hungry families, and are taught to give. Some see the ignorance and spiritual darkness into which so many of their fellow mortals are plunged, and they are taught to pray and serve. All these are somehow touched with that light which was in the spirit of the Master, are filled with the pity which swelled in his great compassionate heart, are persuaded to go about the business of an eternal Father whose mandates are the strongest of all laws.

We believe that Christ will eventually win, because he is on the side of life. Doubt and skepticism, selfishness and sin, all must lose because they offer nothing, they build nothing, and, like the state of death toward which they look, they end in nothing. It is like the difference between the blazing heat of the furnace and the cold of the mass of ore: the furnace will have its way. Or it is like the difference between the sun and the moon: the one makes a garden of the earth, and with its light brings the multiform manifestations of life into being and beauty; the other has only a reflected light, and smiles on like a meaningless caricature of a sun.

Jesus will win. The world-wide spirit of Christmas will prevail, in spite of all the sham and mockery, the indifference and futility that surround it. We wait upon the slow process by which men, season after season, rediscover the Christ.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Please address all news and letters to Editors of the Herald, Box 237, Independence, Missouri.

Omaha, Nebraska

'Tis truly said that the American people are living much too fast, and yet if our activities are directed in church affairs, we should not complain about being "too busy." The past season of the year—the fall—has been a busy, enjoyable, and profitable one for the Greater Omaha Branch. Busy? Yes, in that the church building is open for some service four and five nights a week. Enjoyable? Yes, as fellowship with those of like faith, and closer communion with the Divine can not but bring about more of that deep-seated satisfaction. Profitable? Yes, spiritually and financially.

The twenty-minute family worship period at the beginning of the church school is a splendid way of drafting into service each and every one. A well-organized schedule is arranged, which calls for three and four participants, and young and old alike must take part.

If we could get a few more funeral homes to attend here in Omaha, our new church edifice would not present such a hazy appearance. On November 6 a goodly number of our membership went through one of the beautiful mortuaries of the city. This advertising stunt of this establishment increased our building fund by thirty-two dollars. A cafeteria dinner at the church on November 17 helped to swell this same fund. The annual Christmas bazaar held at the Douglas County Courthouse December 17 and 18 realized for our workers nearly one hundred dollars. A Christmas offering dinner December 2 proved to be a profitable undertaking. There was no set price on the food, and each one was given the opportunity to contribute as much as he desired. The general church Christmas offering fund was enriched by ninety-two dollars through this endeavor.

The union services of Central Branch and the South Side Branch held on Sunday evenings have been very well attended. Under the general heading of "Essentials of salvation," Pastor Blair Jensen's sermons have been: "Virtue," "Knowledge," "Brotherly kindness," "Temperance," "Thankfulness," "Godliness," and "Diligence." The choir, under the direction of Harry Greenway, has been doing its part to make these meetings a success. Music by a quartet, composed of Harry Greenway, Anne Hicks, Constance Borders, and R. W. Scott furnishes the background for the Sunday morning pulpit service.

A beautiful Christmas musicale was given by the choir on Sunday evening, December 21. Elder Blair Jensen's sermonet was entitled, "The bells of Christmas." We, as a branch, also rejoiced on this day at the national recognition that our church received by the broadcasting of The Messiah.

The Christmas program of December 23 was given by the children's division and the young people's group. The songs and recitations of the youngsters furnished a good lot of enjoyment for the adults of the crowd. The young people presented the play, "The abiding Christ." We are proud of our children. In the early fall they voted to forego their annual Christmas "treat" for the Christmas offering fund. It was at this service that the young people's group gave Brother Jensen a new portable typewriter. Santa Claus had visited Sister Jensen earlier in the evening.

On December 14 a daughter came to bless the home of the Marion Coopers. This little one is the granddaughter of Brother and Sister John L. Cooper, of Kirtland, Ohio, and Brother and Sister A. A. Thiehoff of this city.

When we take a rather superficial and hasty invoice of the economic conditions of the country, we find that here in Omaha we have been bountifully blessed, and for this we thank our heavenly Father. Few of our number have been seriously ill, and few there are that are out of employment.

The year 1930 is gone, and we, with hope shining ever before us, push forward with every branch of this great organization into the first year of—the beyond, 1931.

Foraker, Oklahoma

December 29.—After a year's absence from the office E. Workmon was again made president of the branch at the annual election December 28. S. W. Simmons is to be assistant pastor while he remains here. Brother Workmon lives at Arkansas City and can not be here at all times.

During November Brother and Sister S. W. Simmons held a series of meetings. In response to the invitation of Foraker Saints, they are spending the winter at Shidler and are comfortably located.

Brother Fred Swain is enthusiastic over the new program of religious education. When retiring from the office of pastor, he influenced the Saints to adopt the new plan. He has been a faithful servant during the past year, and much credit goes to him and to Sister Swain.

We begin the year under the new program of the church school and hope to learn more of the truth and to better understand ourselves and our fellow men as we move forward.

Mobile, Alabama

The outstanding Christmas service in Mobile Branch was conducted the evening of December 21, and in this all the departments of the church school participated. The climax of the service was reached when the cantata, "The Child Jesus," was given by the junior department, under the direction of Sister George E. Burt. Following the benediction, the children sang very softly "Silent night."

In the afternoon of that day a radio was installed in the church in order that the members might hear The Messiah sung from K M B C, Kansas City, by a part of the Independence Messiah Choir.

Oshoto, Wyoming

Saints of Oshoto have met each Sunday for regular services. November 28 the women had their bazaar. The house was packed with people, and with the help of Brothers George Redding and Fred Cousins, who acted as auctioneers, almost everything was sold. A good sum was cleared to be applied to our new church.

Brother and Sister Horace Hartshorn are happy over the arrival of a daughter November 24. She has been named Grace Louise.

November 30 Brother Fred Cousins was the speaker.

December 7 was sacramental service, and the Saints came fasting. They were blessed with a considerable degree of the Spirit. After a basket dinner Brother George Thorburn preached a sermon and was also the speaker each night during the week. His sermons and music were fine, as were also his visits to our homes.

The following Sunday he spoke in the morning and in the evening went to Stroner, Wyoming, where he preached for four nights, then to Upper Cabin Creek schoolhouse for two nights, and December 21 in the morning he preached in the home of Brother Fred Cousins. That evening he returned to Oshoto with Brother Cousins and helped on the Christmas program, an entertainment of recitations, music, and the Christmas play printed in December Vision. This program also commemorated our branch organization a year ago. Pastor Cousins gave a summary of the accomplishments of the year. We hope to go forward during the new year.

MRS. CLARA MCELROY.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

December 29.—The Women's Department met December 11, with dinner at noon. Twenty-seven members and one visitor were present. After the transaction of business, a Christmas party was the order, and each woman received a small gift. The rummage sale netted the department more than forty-eight dollars. Several were remembered by gifts from the department and made the happier for the giving.

The Sunday school presented a Christmas entertainment of recitations, songs, and two short plays on December 23. All were made happy by the program, and Santa Claus arrived with a treat for the children.

The election of officers resulted in the selection of the following corps of officers: Pastor, Robert E. Madden; secretary, Lucinda Madden; treasurer, C. B. Turvey; superintendent of church school, Carl E. Turvey with C. B. Turvey and E. C. J. Swanson assistants and Sister A. H. Nieman leader of women; publicity agent, and historian, Vassie Sheets.

Speakers for the month were J. E. Matthews, Edgar R. Kimball, A. H. Nieman, H. E. French, A. E. Anderton, John R. Grice, and W. B. Reeves. C. W. Clark, pastor of First Branch, met with us December 28. MRS. VASSIE SHEETS.

Kirtland, Ohio

The Kirtland Dramatic Club, and the committees of the Department of Recreation and Expression met at the home of Brother Frank C. Webbe on Monday evening, November 24, giving him a complete surprise. The event was his sixty-fourth birthday. With John Collin, director of the club, acting as master of ceremonies, the group presented Mr. Webbe a handsome set of book ends. Mr. Collin expressed a wish that Brother Webbe would continue as stage manager of the club.

Under the direction of the Department of Recreation and Expression The Kirtland Dramatic Club was organized early in the year, with the dramatic committee acting as general officers of the club. This club presented a number of Brother Elbert A. Smith's church historical plays, a two-act play during the summer entitled "Among the breakers," and has just presented a Christmas cantata, "The story of a Christmas gift." The birthday party was held as an evidence of the untiring efforts of Brother Webbe on behalf of the club and the department.

On Thanksgiving evening a joint meeting was planned between the South Congregational Church and the Saints at the Temple, but on account of the heavy snowstorm the speaker was unable to come, so several of the young folks gave impromptu speeches suited to the occasion.

Under the capable leadership of Sister Mabel Thomas, who has been superintendent of the girls' department, Christmas carols were sung by two divisions, the Oracles singing in the early part of the evening and the Temple Builders and other young people singing later in the evening. Refreshments were served at the home of Brother and Sister Thomas Gale, who are always willing to open their home for occasions of this kind.

Sunday, December 21, Pastor John L. Cooper was the speaker at the morning service. He preached from the text, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins," and his subject was "The meaning of Jesus to his church."

Sister Helen Williams sang a solo entitled, "Troubled heart," by Jessie I. Pierson. Special singing was by the children during the Sunday school hour.

Lancaster, Ohio

1111 West Fair Avenue

The services for November were fittingly begun by a sacramental service at 10.45 in the morning, November 2, Elder William P. Vickroy in charge, assisted by Priest Elmer Caldwell. The Spirit was present in power. Elder S. E. Dickson, pastor, spoke at the evening service, which was well attended.

At the morning service November 9, Priest Elmer Caldwell was the speaker. Elder W. P. Vickroy spoke at the evening service upon "Where and what is hell?" Both services were well attended.

At 7 o'clock in the evening, November 15, Brother Eli W. Vickroy died as the result of an automobile accident in front of his home at Hamberg, Ohio. His funeral, which was held at the Hopewell Church, Clearport, Ohio, on November 18, Brother S. E. Dickson as speaker, was said to have been the largest ever held in that section of the country. He left many relatives and friends.

Elder S. E. Dickson spoke at both services on November 23. Brother Caldwell spoke at the afternoon service at the Hilltop Mission on Sullivant Avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

Elder Jacob Halb began a series of meetings on Tuesday, November 25, but was hindered by the bad weather, which set in and cut down the attendance to the extent that very few attended in spite of the house to house visits which were made. He continued the services until the following Tuesday. On November 30 Brother Halb spoke at both services. There was good attendance at these services.

Attendance at the church school, as well as the preaching services, has been growing, and we are encouraged. We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may grow in the grace and favor of the Lord, so that we may be prospered in our new location.

ELMER H. CALDWELL.

Rock Island, Illinois

The branch here ended the year with a birthday party on New Year's Eve. All members of the Birthday Club, those who have paid their birthday offering, were honored on this occasion, and gifts were exchanged. Several interesting program features were planned including a presentation of Hoffman's "The Christ," a picture purchased by the junior church as a New Year's gift to the congregation. The junior choir made its first appearance on this evening, and games, refreshments, and radio music continued until the cheers began to welcome the new year.

The Christmas season was joyfully celebrated. Our offering was increased to nearly eighty dollars by a special sacrifice of class and teacher gifts, placing the amount usually spent in this way with the Christmas offering. However, the Women's Department provided a treat for the children at the Sunday evening program. This sacred service was well attended. The primary department, under Sister L. A. White and Sister Emma Lindley, gave recitations, songs, and a dainty star drill. The juniors, under Sister Spengler, joined the intermediates in presenting the short drama, "On the road to Bethlehem," by Sister John Stiegel. As the closing scene the shepherds, wise men, angels, and holy family arranged themselves in tableaux, while the men's chorus reverently sang, "Silent night."

Several thanksgiving baskets were distributed to those unemployed and in need. An inspirational prayer service was held Thanksgiving morning, and in the evening the Men's Club presented a play written by Brother L. A. White for the occasion, which portrayed the Men's Club in action and was most entertaining.

The Men's Club has become an important working unit in the branch. With Brother Thomas R. Willets as president, they meet every other Thursday evening. A few weeks ago they served a delicious rabbit supper free to more than sixty members and friends, and all were royally entertained.

The Women's Department meets regularly each Thursday under the supervision of Sister L. W. Stiegel. The members have completed several quilts, and they enjoy social times.

Each Sunday evening at seven the Religio under Brother A. J. Gray's direction, presents a variety of musical, educational, and inspirational numbers as a prelude to the preaching service.

For the new year we have adopted the new plan of Religious Education with the following corps of officers: Pastor, L. W. Stiegel; assistant pastor and director of church school, L. A. White; assistant pastor and director of home visiting, Thomas R. Willets; branch statistician, A. J. Gray; solicitor, J. C. Stiegel; board of stewards (including treasurer): L. E. Stiegel, Thomas Willets, R. G. Huntley; superintendent of music, Sister Emma Lindley; and correspondent, Sister John Stiegel.

Gross (Kansas) Mission

December 29.—About three hundred people filled the schoolhouse to witness the two-hour Christmas program. To open the entertainment a hymn was sung by thirteen girls of the Sunday school, all of them nonmembers. After the entertainment the children were marched into the north room of the schoolhouse and treated to Christmas candies. One hundred and five pounds of candy were distributed to the children. Sister Creviston solicited most of the treats in Mulberry, Kansas, and with the aid of the Sunday school, all the children in Gross and vicinity had a Christmas treat.

I believe this entertainment will greatly benefit the church work here.

Elder Charles May is going to be here soon to hold a series of meetings.

J. L. CREVISTON.

Waterloo, Iowa

Sister Dana Ritchie and husband are the parents of a new little son named Donald Arthur.

Cliff Nichols is home for the holidays. He has been working in Minnesota for some time.

Elder E. R. Davis conducted an institute in the church for several nights, which was well attended. He also attended the annual election of branch officers, at which time it was decided to adopt the new way of conducting services. W. H. Wood was elected pastor with R. H. Allen as church school leader.

We are glad to welcome back to our midst R. C. McCormick, who has been in the hospital at Rochester, Minnesota, undergoing an operation for thyroid complications.

A Christmas program was enjoyed at the church Sunday evening, followed by a treat for the children. Many of the Saints enjoyed the splendid rendition of The Messiah over K M B C Sunday, December 21, those who have radios opening their homes to those who have not.

Alaric Fisher arrived home in time for Christmas dinner with homefolks. He has recently completed a three-year enlistment in the army, having been in the Philippines the full time.

IVY FISHER.

Durango, Colorado

We are now holding services at the community club, a hall much better located than our former meeting place. This building is at our disposal on Sunday, and we hold cottage prayer meetings in the homes of the Saints on Wednesday evenings.

A Christmas program was given the evening of December 28, the lateness of the date being due to sickness in various families of the branch. A number of nonmember friends took part, and many more attended the program.

The election of officers occurred December 3, when W. B. Farley was chosen president; Sister McLaughlin, supervisor of church school. The music director is Sister Florence Jenkins; treasurer, Sister Francis Stoddard; clerk, Sister Elsie Stoddard. With the new officers and all the members working together, we hope to do much during the coming year.

Missionary N. L. Booker promised to visit us a number of weeks ago, but we have not heard from him. We are hoping, however, that he will soon be among us.

MARY FARLEY.

A Busy Christmas for Workers

Montrose, Iowa.—We planned a busy holiday season for ourselves. We are giving a Christmas program in most of the branches of this district, the story of the Christ told by Lew Wallace in his book, Ben Hur. Using the lantern we give over sixty colored slides, then Brother Chase tells the story. This is the order in which we are visiting the several branches: Burlington, Fort Madison, Montrose, Nauvoo, Keokuk, Macon, Bevier. When we get this far on the way to Independence, we intend to go the rest of the distance and make a short visit with our daughter and family, Sister S. A. Burgess.

At the business meetings of Fort Madison and Montrose, Brother Chase was chosen to serve as pastor of both branches.

MRS. A. M. CHASE.

Sarnia, Ontario

In response to a letter from President McDowell asking what Sarnia Branch could do to relieve the financial situation of the church, our branch president stated that he thought the members could contribute a sum between ninety and one hundred dollars. However, when forces were organized to make the collection, the returns far exceeded our presiding officer's expectations. To date a sum of two hundred and twelve dollars and eighty-three cents has been collected in tithes and offerings. Because the building fund sum came due December 10, the request of the general church presented a difficult problem.

The matter was taken up with the priesthood, and they decided to ask the membership to contribute their share of building fund to tithes and offering, and sufficient would be drawn from the different treasuries to meet the payment on the mortgage on the church.

Early in September we set as an objective two hundred and eighty dollars principal and interest on our church debt. This mark was high owing to the fact that some of our members have not had steady work, and when the letter arrived from headquarters, we felt that we had a real task.

The amount of building fund that was paid was two hundred and twenty-nine dollars and seventy-five cents, and tithes and offerings amounted to two hundred and twelve dollars and eighty-three cents. The total collected was four hundred and forty-two dollars and fifty-eight cents. Much credit for the success of the undertaking is due the Department of Women. They presented the branch with a check for two hundred and six dollars. The Department of Recreation and Expression also helped and an organized Sunday school class of girls.

MRS. LILY M. SWAINSON.

Independence

Stone Church

A large congregation of Saints watched the New Year in at the Auditorium. The evening's program was planned to interest all ages, there being a song service, a worship hour in charge of the First Presidency, a one-act play, "The finger of God," by Percival Wilde, read by Sister Leonard J. Lea, and radio music. An illustrated lecture, "The history of the church," by Elder C. E. Miller, entertained and instructed the crowd, and the climax to the party was a stirring address, "New Year's message," by President F. M. Smith. At midnight the crowd sang "Onward to Zion"; President F. M. McDowell offered a prayer of blessing; "Consecration" was sung; and the benediction was offered by Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

The young people of the Stone Church school, who meet at the Auditorium and are directed by Elder E. E. Closson, are beginning the year with a new corps of officers elected from their own group: President, Blaine Bender; vice president, Paul Tandy; chorister, Joy Carpender; and pianist, Guinn Bronson.

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was observed by the adult congregation of the Stone Church at the eleven o'clock hour. It was the first communion of the year, and President Frederick M. Smith was present to speak to the people. Bishop Albert Carmichael also talked before the oblation offering was taken up.

"My purposes for the year" was the theme of the junior young people's sacramental meeting in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church, and Bishop M. H. Siegfried delivered the principal address. Elder H. W. Harder was in charge.

At the Campus the junior department of the school also began the new year with a service of communion. Short talks were made by Brothers J. R. Lentell and William H. Snead, and Brothers William Bolinger, E. E. Stonger, and William Cowan were in charge. The young worshipers were responsive in song, prayer, and testimony.

Stories of the origin of some of the most commonly used words of our language were woven together in the Sunday afternoon lecture of Apostle F. Henry Edwards to the older young people's group at the Auditorium. Irene, Mildred, and Evelyn Shupe contributed two vocal numbers to the program, and Kathryn Skinner Westwood gave a reading from Madame Butterfly.

President F. M. McDowell closed his series of Sunday evening sermons with a discussion of the subject, "I would see Jesus." He voiced his subject as a prayer, that he might see Jesus reflected in the lives of men and women and in the institutions of society. He pointed out some social and industrial conditions upon which the church must speak and act before Jesus can truly be seen among men.

The Stone Church Choir sang two anthems: "Turn ye even to me," by Harker, with Elizabeth Okerlind singing the contralto solo, Evan Fry directing; and "The Comforter," by Custance, with a duet by Nina Smith and Evan Fry, Paul N. Craig directing. Glenn Fairbanks, tenor, sang the solo, "How lovely is thy dwelling." Nina G. Smith, soprano, sang as a solo the hymn, "I know that my Redeemer lives." Robert and George Miller were accompanists at the organ and piano, and played an offertory duet. Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, and was assisted in the stand by Elder M. T. Williams. Elder John F. Sheehy led the congregational singing.

Organizations and Personalities

More than two hundred Graceland alumni, present students, young people who plan to go to Graceland, and friends assembled the evening of December 29 in the Stone Church dining hall for a social hour and a sort of "pep" meeting. First came a "good time" period when visiting was the order, old friends met again, and new friendships were created. The speakers, Elder John F. Sheehy, Almer Sheehy, Alice Chappelow, A. R. Gilbert, and President F. M. McDowell, were introduced by Elder Leonard Lea, who was in charge. Songs were sung by a quartet composed of Roderick May, Verl Jamison, and Marion and Lyle Woodstock, and also by the crowd led by Brother Sheehy, and refreshments were served by a number of Graceland's alumnae. That much-talked-of Graceland spirit characterized the gathering, and everyone had a happy time. This will certainly not be the last meeting of this kind for Gracelanders in the center place. A committee was appointed for the purpose of organizing an alumni local in Independence.

On New Year's Day word was received by Sister H. G. Barto, of Independence, of the disappearance of her nephew, Wallace Nelson, who has been spending the winter with relatives in Pasadena, California. The evening of December 28 the young man drove alone to the beach to take a swim, and did not return. Two days later his car, containing his clothes, was found on the beach by the police. Many friends and former Graceland classmates with his family anxiously await news concerning him. His nearest relatives are three sisters: Mrs. Keith Harder, Woodbine, Iowa; Miss Doris Nelson, Des Moines; and Miss Marie Nelson, Steamboat, Iowa; and a grandmother, Mrs. Sarah L. Weed, of Phoenix, Arizona.

The golden wedding anniversary of Elder and Sister J. M. Baker occurred December 3, 1930, but because their children and grandchildren could not be present on that date, the event was observed December 26 at their home in Independence. With nearly all their family about them, the happy couple enjoyed a musical program by seven members of the Auditorium Orchestra, a sketch of their life by a son-in-law, Elder J. L. Parker, who also read a poem, "Their golden wedding day," composed by Apostle J. F. Curtis. There were two vocal numbers by Miss Verba Parker, a granddaughter, and a mock wedding ceremony by the grandchildren. Brother Baker has been a minister of the church for forty years, and together they were in the mission field for twenty years. The worthy couple received the best wishes of many friends.

Sister Ida R. Evans, wife of Alfred N. Evans, passed away December 28 at her home. She was baptized a member of the church November 14, 1888. She is survived by her husband, two daughters, Mrs. O. V. Davison and Mrs. T. R. Walker, and a son, Walter W. Evans, all of Saint Louis; two sisters, Mrs. Jennie Oliphant, Independence; and Mrs. J. T. Bailey, Kaycee, Wyoming. The funeral occurred December 31, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Walnut Park

The speaker at Walnut Park Sunday morning, December 28, was Apostle E. J. Gleazer, who gave a forceful sermon summarizing the accomplishments and failures of 1930, and pointing the way to greater achievements during 1931. He used as a text the words of Isaac to his father as recorded in Genesis 22: 9. During the worship part of the service preceding the sermon Delta Maurine Nace sang "Blessed are the pure in heart," by Ward-Stevens.

The evening speaker was Bishop Albert Carmichael, who discussed the subject of financial statements. This was appropriate inasmuch as this is the time of the year when the statements should be made out. Brother Carmichael conducted an informal discussion on the subject, answering questions which had caused difficulty to some.

During the church school hour we held the annual election of officers necessary to complete the organization. Superintendent and Associate Pastor R. Barnhardt now has the following corps of officers to assist him: Albert Chapman, assistant superintendent; Sister F. R. Schafer, supervisor of the adult division; Ruth Bryant, supervisor of the young people's division; Sister Erwin Moorman, supervisor of the children's division; Alice Baker, secretary; and Sanford Downs, chorister.

Elder M. A. Etzenhouser was the lecturer at the class study hour at six o'clock, speaking on the subject, "Budget keeping." He pointed out the value and importance of the budget system as applied in family finances in particular, and showed how important it was in the operation of individual stewardships.

During the song service beginning at 7.30, a special musical program was given under the direction of Sister Bernice Griffith, assisted by Carletta Norman, contralto, and Isabel Garrett, pianist. The program included two piano numbers, vocal solos, and duets. It was much appreciated by the congregation.

On Christmas Eve a special worship service was held at the church, during which Christmas carols and other appropriate music were offered. The Walnut Park Quartet assisted in this service with two numbers. Miss Ruth Bryant read the story, "The other wise man," by Henry Van Dyke.

The senior young people's class, taught by Ruth Bryant, had a Christmas party at her home on Friday evening. Twenty-three were present and a good time was enjoyed by all. The events of the evening were the playing of Christmas games, mutual exchange of gifts, and the presentation of a wedding gift to Mrs. Frances (Behee) Bates, who is a member of the class.

December 11 the older young people's class taught by Sister Ethel Schwab had a social time together at the home of Margaret and Vera Chapman. The games and music provided were enjoyed by all. The program was in charge of Brother and Sister J. A. Dowker, jr. Prizes were awarded to the following: Delta Nace, David Hurshman, Helen Necessary, Milford Nace, and Margaret Chapman. Thirty-one members of the class were present.

An attendance of forty-three enjoyed the early service Sunday, January 4. Elder W. T. Gard, who will have charge of these prayer meetings regularly, was assisted by Brothers Roland Kapnick and Ira Stowell.

In the Sunday school we note a few changes. Sister E. E. Moorman, in charge of the children's division, has secured Evelyn Barnhardt Hight to supervise the beginners and primaries. About twenty young people combined classes to hear Sister Iva Robinson, an instructor in the Kansas City schools, introduce a course she has been asked to give in nature study, one period a month. The eager attention given her promises results.

At the eleven o'clock service Sister Bertha Kester Weyerman, from Colorado, presented her infant daughter, Catherine Eva, for blessing. Elders George Bullard and Benjamin Bean officiated.

The pastor and his assistants presided at the sacramental hour, with Brother Bean calling attention to the need for the oblation at this critical time when many worthy ones are in distress, and Elder George Jenkins, from Eldorado Springs, enjoining the Saints to consider seriously the covenant they made and the supreme offering they commemorated as they ate and drank of the Lord's Supper. Three hundred and eighty-five were counted present.

Apostle J. F. Curtis was the evening speaker, assisted by F. W. Lanpher and Paul R. Davis. The ambition of Paul expressed to the Philippians—to "press toward the mark for the prize"—was presented in plainness by Brother Curtis as an example in this day when so many are substituting inferior things for the "prize" and are so busily engaged in their endeavors to grasp them that they do not find time for "the prize of the high calling of God"—the blessings which would bind them so firmly to the gospel teachings that they would not be overcome by doubt in the time when trials assail them.

Enoch Hill

The Erodolphians, the young people's organization of Enoch Hill, observed the coming of the new year with a party in the church basement where games and refreshments gave everyone a happy evening.

The communion hour Sunday morning was in charge of Pastor O. W. Sarratt and other members of the local priesthood. John 15 was the scripture lesson read, and the pastor emphasized the need for our going into the future with a determination to apply ourselves more than ever before to the task of redeeming Zion. Brother Joseph Martin also spoke to the congregation. Elizabeth, the infant daughter of Brother and Sister Cecil Kester, was blessed at this service, and then the Saints were given time for prayer and testimony. So many were the expressions of gratitude for the achievements of the old year and hope for the new year, that the meeting ran beyond twelve o'clock before the worshippers were aware of the time.

In the evening Elder H. L. Barto spoke to the congregation.

Englewood

Englewood Branch celebrated the Christmas holiday season with a play on Tuesday night, December 23. This play, "When Santa Claus missed the Christmas road," was attended by about three hundred and ten people. Many of the visitors could not find chairs and had to stand in the back of the room. This emphasizes the fact that the branch needs a new room built to the basement. This room would take the form of the upper auditorium.

Brother W. I. Fligg, missionary to Canada, was the speaker for the morning sermon last Sunday morning. Brother Fligg spoke of the vision necessary to see Jesus. Brother John Ely, a local elder, spoke Sunday evening, emphasizing the use of tribulation in our lives. Brother Robert Cloy and Brother Ely had charge of the regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting the last week of the year.

About one hundred and sixty were present for the morning services Sunday morning, December 28, with a larger attendance at Sunday school than at church.

The church choir, under the direction of Sister Alta Hougas, gave a cantata during the regular preaching service hour the Sunday before Christmas. The choir has also been providing special music for both the Sunday morning and evening services. Regular choir practice is held on Thursday night.

Sunday morning, January 4, the regular monthly sacramental service was held.

Most of the departmental offices were filled the last Sunday of the year at a short business meeting held between church school and preaching service. Brother Arthur Welch will continue this year as head of the Recreation Department and assistant in church school. Sister Hougas will continue in the work of chorister, empowered to appoint her assistants for the various departments. Sister Koehler will be in charge of the junior school this year; Sister Fike, primary; and Sister Petentler, cradle roll. Brother Earl Ross, who moved into the branch only a few months ago, was appointed as church custodian and librarian. Glen Closson will continue another year as bishop's agent.

East Independence

Election of officers for this local occurred December 17. Pastor L. W. Moffet was reelected, and Frank Minton was chosen assistant pastor; director of Religious Education, Cornelius Edgerton; musical director, Sister Joseph Friend.

The Christmas program attracted members and friends to the church the evening of December 23. A play, "As came the Messiah," written by Sister Iva Edgerton, portraying the life and character of Mary the mother of Jesus and showing the fulfillment of prophecy in Christ's birth, was presented. Sister Thelma Countryman's contribution in typing the play was much appreciated.

Elder H. G. Barto occupied the eleven o'clock hour December 28, and in the evening Elder William I. Fligg. Both sermons were timely and sincerely spoken.

On the first Sabbath of the year the sacramental service was in charge of Elder Alva Christensen, who is soon to move into this community. Other families have recently moved here and are helping with their attendance and services.

The infant son of Brother and Sister Thomas Bailey was blessed by Elders Harry Friend and L. W. Moffet.

The pastor and his wife had been absent for some time, he having taken a position in Saint Joseph. This will necessitate his having to give up his pastorate, which all of us very much regret.

Officers have been appointed as follows: Assistant superintendent of church school, Tom Thatcher; secretary, Richard Smith; pianist, Elizabeth Friend; supervisor of adult division, Sister Iva Edgerton; supervisor of young people's division, Sister Florence Minton; supervisor of primary department, Sister Dutton. Sister Edgerton was appointed supervisor of women.

Brother and Sister Henry Butler, of Independence, are the parents of a son born December 24. Sister Butler was formerly Jennie Friend, of this group.

We greatly miss a former worker, Brother Roy M. Young, who has moved to Atherton, Missouri. He was active as a teacher and musician.

Spring Branch

The eight o'clock prayer meeting Sunday morning, January 4, was well attended, and was a spiritual service, in charge of Brothers J. E. Cleveland and Robert Fish.

One hundred and eighty-three attended the service of the church school, the largest attendance we have had. This was an excellent beginning for the year. Elder G. G. Lewis was present at this hour and remained for the communion meeting.

In the evening Elder J. W. A. Bailey spoke to a large and attentive congregation.

Giles Andes and Miss Edna Lewis, of Independence, were married New Year's Eve. The best wishes of the branch are extended to them.

Last Friday evening Brother and Sister Joseph Farrow gave a reception at their home for their daughter, Josephine, who on Christmas Eve became the bride of Ira J. Weeks, of Kansas City.

Sister W. A. McClain, who was stricken with paralysis December 6, is slowly improving at her home on East Lexington Street.

Central Church

Only God could have thought of Christmas. It stands out as the unquestioned time of true and generous giving, the anniversary of a gift of preeminent quality—a Babe at Bethlehem. And the story of this gift, so simple in its sublimity, so humble yet so heavenly, has charmed the world for over nineteen hundred years. Can the simplicity of the first Christmas give us courage to reexamine our standard of values, help us to appreciate the simple joys of generous giving, and to recapture the joyous faith that brought the wise men from afar to a manger in Bethlehem? With these thoughts presented in the bulletin by the pastor, at the call of Superintendent George Mesley, the congregation quietly meditated while the organ prelude, "Prayer," was being played by Sister Irene Wolfe. It was the Sunday before Christmas. A hymn was sung, and Brother Roy Thutchley offered the invocation. "No candle was there," an anthem by Lehmann, was sung by a quartet.

Following the lesson study and return to the main auditorium, the beginner, primary, and junior departments occupied the eleven o'clock hour, presenting a Christmas pageant and a cantata, "The Child Jesus," Sister E. L. Alter directing the pageant and Sister C. E. Wight the cantata. Little Bobbie Forties played a violin solo, "Twinkling stars," and Paul Babb a piano solo, "On patrol." The children brought gifts wrapped in tissue paper and made their contribution to a needy family which they had adopted for Christmas.

The evening service was a continuation of Christmas worship, a pageant, "The nativity," by Rosa Kimball, being presented by the young people.

Sunday, December 28, was a beautiful day. Following the opening song Brother B. B. Root offered the opening prayer. Brother Mesley told the children a story, and the lesson study began. Special music at eleven o'clock was by a quartet which sang "The new-born King" by L'Espor. The sermon was by Elder H. A. Higgins.

The vesper service centered around the Christmas story told through the medium of the picture masterpieces of all ages, accompanied by music from a hidden choir and a reader.

On New Year's Eve the young people and adult divisions had a party at the church. From eleven to twelve o'clock there was a watch night service in charge of B. B. Root, Sister Glenn Liddel, and Brother Glau Smith, assisted by the senior girls. On New Year's Day the O. B. K.'s met at Central Church for their fourth initiation-sacramental service. This function ended the holiday season activities.

Sacramental service last Sunday morning brought a large congregation of members to Central Church, each one thinking and hoping for the accomplishments of the new year. Scripture reading, prayer, hymns, organ music, the sacramental message by the pastor, meditation, and the service of the Lord's Supper proved a blessing to the membership, and they went away feeling strengthened for the tasks before them.

In the evening a sacred concert by the choir preluded the sermon by Pastor C. E. Wight. Two anthems were sung by the choir during the service: "Savior, when night involves the skies," Shelley, LeRoy Smith singing the baritone solo, and "Gloria" from "The Twelfth Mass," Mozart. The accompaniment was provided by our efficient musicians, Mrs. Clayton Wolfe at the organ, and Mrs. Everett Bowser at the piano. George Anway, director, sang the beautiful tenor solo, "Comfort ye," from Handel's "Messiah," with organ accompaniment.

A winter series of splendid Sunday evening programs is being arranged. The plans are to feature the music by the octet directed by Eugene Christy, apostolic speakers, a lecture series by the pastor, dramatizations, and an illustrated series by President F. M. McDowell.

Tomorrow afternoon at one o'clock the Women's Club will have a luncheon. The speaker will be Mrs. Allen from the Associated Clubs of Kansas City, and her subject is "Crippled children." Numbers of Central ladies will attend this first meeting of the year.

O. B. K. News

The Kansas City young people's organization held its fourth initiation-sacramental service at Central Church at eight o'clock in the evening January 1. While the number of candidates and the attendance was below that of former services, many declared it to be the best service yet held.

For the occasion, the chancel and church front were banked with fir trees, and three tall white candelabra served to complete the organization color scheme of green and white.

While the new members visited with the councilors in the annex, the active members were ushered to reserved seats by the vice councilors from each church. At the appropriate time the new members were led by groups to a central altar, where burned a tall candle typifying the Spirit of the Master. Here the councilor introduced them to the active members, and after they had received the pledge and badge from the president and vice president of the stake council, they were led to the secretary's table to sign the pledge and then join with the other active members of their church.

When all new members had been introduced, President F. M. McDowell, using Holman-Hunt's picture, gave an inspiring talk on "The Light of the World."

Then down the center aisle came the vice councilor from each church to light his church candle from the altar candle, and, as they did so, each church group present stood to renew its pledge. When all were standing, the hymn "Just as I am" was sung in unison. This completed the initiation service.

The drawing of the chancel curtains revealed the long table of the Lord, and the renewal of a church covenant followed, the renewal of the organization pledge.

John Sheehy, pastor in Zion, delivered the sacramental message for this part of the service, and after the Semper Fidelis Quartet had sung "Be with me, Lord, where'er I go," President McDowell invoked a blessing that touched many hearts. The singing of "I would be true" closed a solemn and enjoyable ceremony and service. Evan A. Fry presided at the organ, and the Central Semper Fidelis Quartet sang two numbers.

During 1930 the O. B. K.'s had set up a goal to have 50 per cent of their total membership contributing to local church expenses. In seven groups, Central, Fourth, Mount Washington, Gladstone, Chelsea, Malvern Hill, and Quindaro, the active members exceeded this percentage, and nine groups made a large increase in the total percentage of their members who contributed. In 1929, one hundred forty-two O. B. K.'s contributed eight hundred twenty-three dollars to their local church needs, but in 1930 there were two hundred forty-nine who gave $1,123 to the bishop's agents for local expenses. This giving was supplemented by regular church school and other special offerings.

Contributing to the general church tithing funds in 1929, one hundred sixty-five O. B. K.'s paid $2,094. In 1930, a year of much unemployment among their number, two hundred and seventeen paid $2,075. Seven groups of active members, Mount Washington, North Kansas City, Chelsea, Gladstone, Heathwood, Malvern Hill, and Quindaro, passed the goal of fifty per cent, and ten churches increased the total per cent of their members contributing. Next year every group should be able to reach their goal.

In the O. B. K. Basketball League six teams are competing every Tuesday in the Woodland School. A large gallery of friends witnesses and enjoys the games. There are twenty-one games to play before the tournament is complete, so it is a little early to predict anything except an enjoyable season of ball.

January is planned as inventory month. Bishop Skinner and Brother Mesley hope to meet with each church O. B. K. group to discuss with them the financial program of the church.

In February the stake council will sponsor a one-act play contest confined to straight dramas. A good deal of interest has already been aroused by the announcement of this contest.

Quindaro Church

C. D. Jellings was the speaker the morning of December 14, and brought many thoughts concerning forgiving and loving each other.

In the evening Missionary Ellis Rathbun, of Holden Stake, spoke on faith. Brother Rathbun has assisted Elder G. T. Richards in missionary work conducted from house to house. They have visited the sick and encouraged the Saints to greater application and diligence.

The evening of January 4 a series of meetings began, with Brother Richards as speaker.

The Christmas program was in charge of Sister Virginia Finley and was presented by the children. There were songs, readings, and exercises, followed by a Christmas tree and treats.

The morning of December 28 the Saints had as speaker Apostle F. Henry Edwards. That evening the choirs of Quindaro and Heathwood gave the cantata, "Hail, Messiah," by Ira B. Wilson. Soloists were Lilly Belle Allen, soprano; Sister C. E. Wight, contralto; Clayton Wolfe, tenor; Lester Fowler, bass; accompanist, Eola Hawkins; director, Otis Swart. This was much appreciated by a large congregation.

Christmas at Brick Church

Christmas Sunday was observed in all the departments of the church school at 9.30. At eleven o'clock all united in the general service. It had been announced as a family service, in which the members of families would sit together. There were several families in which all members were together.

The service began with a piano prelude by Thelma Lane, an arrangement of the best-known Christmas carols. The junior department, led by Iris Butts, was in the choir loft and continued with a familiar carol and the scriptural story of the nativity read responsively with the minister. One of the outstanding features of the service was the prayer. After the prayer by the minister, the congregation joined in the Lord's prayer. A trio of girls sang "Lift thine eyes," from Mendelssohn's Elijah. Florence Thompson, of the college faculty, told a story of a lad of Palestine who sought and met the Messiah, giving his best gift, his heart. G. N. Briggs spoke for ten minutes on the religious significance of the home.

In the evening the high school department of the church school sang several carols from the basement. During the opening prayer they softly hummed "Silent night." There were songs by the kindergarten and primary departments, and a costume song by some junior girls. The one-act play, "Dust of the road," was presented by members of the adult department, who are enrolled in a community drama club. Miss Thompson coached the play. The members of the cast were Mrs. Audentia Kelley, M. E. Mortimore, J. C. Bergman, and James A. Thomas. The plot is essentially a study of conscience, with a theme of brotherhood running throughout. That the congregation might leave with this in mind, the organ played "Blest be the tie," without announcement, and the benediction was pronounced.

Christmas Caroling

The delightful old custom of caroling was continued in Lamoni this year. Several organized classes cooperated with the bishopric in sending baskets of food and toys. Some of these distributed their baskets as they caroled. The Second Milers, the organization of older young people, began the caroling on Tuesday evening. The high school department and the class of young married people were singing on Christmas Eve. Early Christmas morning a group of college boys who remained in Lamoni caroled about the town from four-thirty to six o'clock. Many words of appreciation have come from the townspeople for this bit of Christmas cheer.

The Sunday after Christmas

The college students were away, and many former Lamoni residents were home for the holidays. This gave a different atmosphere to the services of Sunday. Two ministers home for the holidays were the preachers at the Brick Church, Apostle J. F. Garver and Elder L. G. Holloway. Arthur Oakman, baritone; Colin Ferrett, bass, and Charles Ballantyne, violinist, contributed to the musical part of the service. Charles Harpe, A. L. Loving, and Brother and Sister J. A. Gunsolley were in the congregation.

About the Stake

The survey of membership for the education of membership in finance of the church has continued. A corps of workers have been busy in Lamoni. T. S. Williams and James A. Thomas have been in Allendale. F. L. Sawley, who has been ministering to this branch during the winter months, has been confined in the Sanitarium at Independence during recent weeks. Bishop DeLapp has been in the Bloomington, Evergreen, Oland, and Andover neighborhood. Last week James Thomas was in Centerville and branches in the northern part of the stake. Results in nature of contributions have not yet been tabulated.

Far West Stake

Stewartsville

At the close of 1930, the centennial year of the church, we feel that some progress has been made. Nine new members have been added to our branch. Although three aged members were taken by death and a few others have moved to other localities, the branch has increased in membership and interest.

Pastor T. A. Ivie, hampered by illness and physical weakness, has tried to give his best efforts to the branch. As a new year moves in, Brother Ivie has asked to be released from the pastorate, and his request was granted at our local business meeting. Brother Gordon Hidy, one of the younger men of the priesthood of the branch, was elected to succeed Brother Ivie. We hope, during the coming year to give Brother Hidy the support that was accorded Brother Ivie, and to try even in a greater measure to unify ourselves and bring about the fruits that God requires at our hands.

As individual members, we need the prayers of the Saints to sustain us in our efforts. The incoming leaders know that they must have the good will and the whole-hearted support of all to be able to put across the program of the church and to accomplish that which is before them. The existing conditions in the land impress the fact deeply upon our hearts and minds that our contribution to this work must be whole-hearted, or it will not be accepted and will not produce material results. As we enter upon another year and another century, we must put away all hindrances and bend our efforts to accomplish that which must be done.

First Saint Joseph Church

The Department of Religious Education, under Hugh H. McLean as director, has just closed a twelve-week session of the Monday night church school. This however was city-wide. The average attendance for the twelve weeks was eighty. Four classes were held each evening. Brother Hougas, in his class on "Youth at the crossroads," discussed many weighty problems that will no doubt help our youth to choose wisely. Brother Burnett's subject, "Vitalizing life," gave us much to think about and enlarged our vision as to our duties and responsibilities as stewards. Brother Jones's class on "Feeding the multitude" was most instructive as was Brother Salisbury's on "Effective speaking." The last evening the classes were followed by an appreciation meeting and a recognition of those eligible for credit towards obtaining certificates in religious education. Then an hour of games, contests, and refreshments was enjoyed by the light of the Christmas tree. All pronounced the Monday night church school a success and look forward to another movement of this kind.

The Al-Lik-Us Players, a dramatic club organized over a year ago, has been very busy the last few months. They presented a three-act comedy drama at the Y. W. C. A. Auditorium November 20. This play was entitled, "The path across the hill." A large and appreciative audience helped the players to put it over in a most creditable manner. The play was repeated at Stewartsville and again at Saint Joseph at the Neely School, sponsored by the Parent Teacher Association. The players are to be congratulated on the thoroughness with which the action and words were worked out and the excellent characterization. Sister H. H. McLean is director of the club; Oma Johnson, president; Harold Constance, business manager; Earl Smith, stage manager. They are now planning active work in religious drama.

The choir under the leadership of Evan Ehlers has been doing good work. Besides the regular Sunday anthems they rendered a beautiful cantata for Thanksgiving, "The first Thanksgiving." The choruses were well sung, and the solo parts were of unusual merit. Soloists were Sister C. E. Haden, Sister R. A. Haden, Sister Bert Richie, Evan Ehlers, and Leonard Ehlers.

The Christmas spirit was present at all sessions of the church school throughout the month of December. The themes of the worship services breathed the Christmas message of "Glad tidings."

The children's division furnished the morning program December 21 after the lesson period. The nursery and kindergarten sang, "Away in a manger" and gave the little exercise, "When Joseph was a-walking." The primary department dramatized "The first Christmas" under the direction of Sister Emma Beadnall, and the juniors gave the play, "The stocking's revolt," directed by Sister Ruth Fairbanks.

At 7.30 in the evening the junior choir of girls, under the leadership of Sister Lettia Timm, sang the cantata, "The glorious King." Dressed in white they formed a semicircle on the platform, and tapers were lighted about them. This candlelight service was most effective. The cantata was followed by "The story of the other wise man" illustrated with lantern slides by Brother Ward A. Hougas.

About twenty-five members of the choir went caroling after the service, especially remembering to call at the homes of the sick.

The church school has a fully worked-out system of departments in the children's division. Though there are not as many in each department as we would like to see, we feel that under the new system we are better equipped than ever before to do more efficient work, as well as to increase the membership.

Holden Stake

Atherton

November 30 the Saints at Atherton had an enjoyable day when they listened to two good sermons by Patriarch J. T. Gresty in which he gave much fatherly advice. We also had the pleasure of hearing several beautiful solos rendered by Sister Lilly Belle Allen at the morning and evening services. One was taken from The Course of Time, the oratorio written by Brother Gresty.

Brother R. T. Cooper and family visited us at the eleven o'clock hour December 7. The usual sacrament service was held, and a beautiful spirit prevailed, with many helpful testimonies. The evening hour was occupied by Brother D. R. Snively, who has recently moved his family into our midst.

Last Saturday the men of the branch visited the cornfield of Brother Van Tuyl and transferred the corn from the field to the crib. This was much appreciated by Brother Van Tuyl, as he has just returned from the Sanitarium and is recovering from an operation for appendicitis.

Last Sunday morning A. E. Allen preached on "Repentance" and used the parable of the fig tree as his text. He said that it was not enough to repent and enter into the service of God, but that it was also necessary to be active and bring forth fruit. In the evening we listened to Bishop G. W. Eastwood. This was his first sermon in the last six months because of ill health, but he is now on the road to recovery.

Lees Summit

The Women's Department held its annual Christmas party at the home of Sister Childers. The dinner was held in the basement of the home. A study hour was conducted, and all reported a splendid time.

Marshall

The Christmas program took two nights. The Sunday night before Christmas the children's program occurred. They were dressed in white, and stepped forward without being announced, and did their part well.

The young people gave a play Christmas Eve, "Wondrous night." The scenes of that holy night were well portrayed with song and music. Much credit is due to Sister Dixie Spohrer and Sister Frankie Thayer for their faithful work in presenting these programs.

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Notices

Mobile district conference will convene at Bay Minette Branch, Saturday, January 24, 7.30 p. m. The annual election of officers, as well as the disposition of some of the reunion problems, will be the order of business. All reports should be in the hands of the district secretary by January 18. The business session will be held Sunday, January 25, at 11 a. m.—Franklin Steiner, district president, Route 2, Box 193, Mobile, Alabama.

Central Oklahoma district conference will be held at Tulsa, Oklahoma, February 6, 7, and 8. Arrangements have been made to expedite the conference business so that the majority of the time will be utilized for a series of lectures and discussions which will be of special interest to the ministry. The first lecture will be given Friday evening, at 7.30, and it is especially urged that every member of the priesthood in the district be present. We also extend an invitation to the the membership to take advantage of these lectures and discussions. F. Henry Edwards and E. J. Gleazer of the Quorum of Twelve will deliver the lectures and conduct the discussions. The meals will be served in the new Tulsa church at a reasonable cost. This will be one of the big events of the church in the State of Oklahoma for 1931, and the ministry and Saints from adjoining districts are invited to be present.—F. E. Dillon, district president.

Our Departed Ones

ALLEN.—Florence Theodotia Belt was born near Wabash, Indiana, March 29, 1878, and died at her home in Aledo, Illinois, December 24. She was the third daughter of James and Angeline K. Belt. Her girlhood was lived in Nebraska, and as a young woman she moved to Illinois where she made her home the rest of her life. Married Frank A. Allen April 6, 1898, and to them were born nine children. One child passed away in infancy. Her husband, four sons, and four daughters survive: Leon, Ogden, Utah; Amos, Mrs. Eva Ewing, and John, of Aledo; Mrs. Eunice Wagner, of Eliza; Mrs. Olive McDearmon, of Lyndon; and Mary and Eugene at home. Twelve grandchildren also survive besides four brothers and four sisters: Mrs. Clara Hull, Shattuck, Oklahoma; Mrs. Nora Matticks, Aledo; Mrs. Mabel Rader, Seaton; Mrs. Blanche Seivers, Aledo; Roscoe L. Belt, Charlie C. Belt, Eldon J. Belt, of Aledo; and Roy C. Belt, of Joy. She was a faithful member of the church which she joined in Millersburg, later having her membership changed to Joy. The funeral was from the church in Millersburg, Illinois, E. R. Davis preaching the sermon. Interment was in Millersburg Cemetery.

HOUGH.—Annie Hough was born in Leon, Decatur County, Iowa, November 12, 1858, and died at the home of her daughter in Neola, Iowa, December 20, 1930. She is survived by two sons and four daughters. She became a member of the church in 1900, was a faithful member, and was known in her community as a good woman. She had great faith in the ordinances of the church and a short time before death received administration which was greatly appreciated. The funeral service was held in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Neola, Iowa, in charge of J. A. Hansen. Interment was in the Neola Cemetery.

JESS.—Mary Davison Jess, of Scott's Bay, Nova Scotia, passed away December 4, 1930, at the home of her daughter, Nellie M. Legge. She was born October 27, 1847, and was baptized into the Fine interest was shown in the missionary meetings conducted by Brother E. B. Johnston in Casper, Wyoming, and the Salt Creek District. Every encouragement was given by the people for carrying on the work in these districts. There are fine groups of Saints in both places. It is thought that in following up these meetings more will be added to the church.

church in her thirty-fifth year by Joseph Burton. Although she never had the privilege of meeting with the Saints, she was faithful to the end. Surviving are three children: Minnie E. Gates, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Miner O. Davison, Roxbury, Massachusetts; and Nellie M. Legge, Scott's Bay, Nova Scotia.

MCLEAN.—Matilda Coldan was born November 5, 1873, in Ontario, Canada. Married J. S. McLean, of Hastings County, and to them were born five children: Charles, of Buffalo; Jennie, living near the old home; Archie, Albion, New York; John, Blackwater; and Reta Pearl, at home. She was baptized by James McLean in 1897, at Proton, Ontario, and was enrolled with Toronto Branch. Although isolated from church privileges, she contended for the faith and lived to see all her family in the church. She suffered for about a year and passed peacefully away November 29, 1930, at her home surrounded by the family. The funeral was in charge of Elder Weegar, Buffalo, New York. Sermon was by D. W. Cameron, Toronto. Interment was in Thomasburg Cemetery.

VICKROY.—Elia Wesley Vickroy was born August 23, 1851, in Ohio, and died at Hamburg, Ohio, November 15, 1930. He married Susana Burgoon August 8, 1880, and to them eight children—six sons, and two daughters—were born. His wife, two sons, and two daughters preceded him in death. He was baptized July 6, 1924, by S. E. Dickson, and was true to the faith. There survive to mourn four sons, twenty grandchildren, one sister, one brother, other relatives and a host of friends. All his life he was a hard worker, and he had many friends. He met death by being hit by a motor car in front of his home. For seven years he had lived with his son, William P. Vickroy. The funeral was held in the Methodist Episcopal Church in which he was formerly a member. The sermon was by S. E. Dickson. Interment was in the adjoining cemetery.

TYLER.—Jean Arden Tyler, son of C. W. and Helene Tyler, of Casper, Wyoming, was born December 13, 1930, and died December 13, 1930. He was the great-grandson of J. W. Gillen. The funeral sermon was by E. B. Johnston, of Kansas City, Missouri.

WAITE.—Lola M. Wise, daughter of Samuel and Alice E. Wise, was born November 23, 1891, at Switz City, Indiana. She married Clifford C. Waite and to them were born five children: June Marguerite, Victor Reed, Malcolm C., Lamarr Eugene, and Martha Ann, a baby of eleven weeks. Her illness was of nearly ten weeks' duration and she died October 12, 1930, at Kelley's Hospital, Argos, Indiana. She was not at the time of her death a member of any church but she believed the gospel, in which she had been trained by her mother and other relatives. Left to mourn are her husband, children, mother, one sister, Doctor Gladys M. Wise, Phoenix, Arizona, and many other relatives and friends. The funeral was conducted at the home in Culver, Indiana, October 14, 1930, by Elder S. W. L. Scott. Interment was in Burr Oak Cemetery.

ANDERSON.—Margaret Jane Horning was born November 16, 1862, at Woodbridge, Canada. She married John C. Anderson, October 1, 1885, and four children were born to them, two sons and two daughters. One son passed from life in babyhood, and the other died in young manhood. The two girls, Flora Belle and Violet, survive and live in Port Huron, Michigan. Mrs. Anderson was baptized September 24, 1911, by William M. Grice, and was faithful to the end. She passed away December 15, 1930. Left to mourn are her husband, two daughters, several grandchildren, and a host of friends. The sermon was by William M. Grice December 17. Interment was in Roseburg Cemetery, Michigan.

BEATY.—Edna Inez Beaty was born in Jackson County, Missouri, May 30, 1894. She married Webb Beaty, November 1, 1912, and to them were born seven children. Two preceded her in death. She united with the church in early childhood. Passed away December 5, 1930, at Brush, Colorado. Left to mourn are her husband, five children: Rex, Max, Welby, Wanda, and Nila Jean; a brother, Joe Fletcher, of Illinois; and many other relatives and friends. The funeral was conducted by Elder George E. McConley, of Sterling, at Brush, Colorado. Interment was in Brush Cemetery.

The Year for the "Herald"

Since 1860 the Herald has been the standard bearer of the church, the official organ through which the leaders have kept in touch with the widely scattered membership and directed the far-reaching arms of missionary enterprise. The Herald and the church have weathered many a storm and period of trial together, and have come through victorious.

It has been the task of the Herald, in times lean and fat, to furnish the membership with inspirational articles, with instruction, with news of the church and the people—in short, to provide the "spiritual food" so essential to the needs of the members. Sometimes the drawers of the editorial desk have bulged with a supply of fine articles; and sometimes they have been otherwise. But whatever the case, the needs of the people have had to be met.

On occasion, when the times and circumstances have demanded it, the Herald has had to bend its back to carry burdens that could not be borne otherwise. Financial conditions became trying, and we were asked to reduce the number of pages to twenty-four. Yielding to this temporary necessity, we tried to carry on the full task with curtailed space. Then when the Department Journal was discontinued, the Herald was asked to take over its important work of getting the necessary instruction materials to the leaders who needed them. In order to meet both of these demands, the news and articles suffered heavily, especially the latter. Pressed on every side, we tried to make the best of the situation, but that best was none too good, and could not be very good. We could not curtail the quantity of articles so heavily without impairing the principal work of the publication.

Protests and criticisms have come. Some few were unreasonable, but most of the letters were fair and kindly.

It is the purpose of the Herald to meet all of its obligations and to serve all of its readers to the best of its opportunity and capacity. When thirty-two pages are restored, which we hope may not be far away, it will be able to do better work. Programs, educational and technical matter, will be kept within a desirable minimum to serve the needs of church workers. But so far as possible the Herald will keep to its original task and its main work, which is to publish material for the inspiration and benefit of the members of the church at large. However, that does not mean that it is to remain stationary, for it must grow and progress and help to lead the people forward.

The Herald editors welcome good articles from the writers of the church, and do not favor any particular class. It is glad to welcome articles from those who have furnished spiritual food for the church in past years. It also welcomes articles from the younger men and church workers in all lines. Needless to say, articles must have a constructive value. They should be short—anywhere between 500 and 2,000 words, with a preference for articles under 1,500 words. If longer ones are submitted, they should be arranged so that they may be divided for presentation in installments. And it would be very helpful to the editors if all articles could be typewritten and double spaced. The space demands, and our readers expect, things of value.

We have some good promises for the future. We expect a series of health articles from Doctor Teel, the Church Physician. There are to be some special articles for the priesthood. Soon to come is something from H. O. Smith on the Word of Wisdom, and we have in hand some substantial material from the pen of A. B. Phillips.

The Great Thrill

The world is hunting a thrill. In a day when mechanical devices have reduced the work in the home and women and children have more leisure, when tasks at the office are routine, when social enterprises are no longer undertaken by family groups, when churchgoing is considered by thousands as an old-fashioned custom of the very pious, youth and old age crave excitement in some form or other.

The day of pioneering is gone, they think. The day of adventuring is past. And they turn to movies, to speeding vehicles, to professional sports, to endurance tests, to intrigues, and even to pleasure parks for their thrills. To them life is a monotonous existence to be punctuated by the unusual. These have not lifted their eyes above material things; they are the "isers." They are deaf to the challenge of science, to the call of the world to intellectual and spiritual growth. They do not sense the demands of modern civilization—love and brotherhood with their fruitage of peace. If they ever knew it, they have forgotten the divine injunction: "Seek first the kingdom of God."

The biggest thrill men may experience lies in seeking the kingdom of the Father—living daily the best we can, growing in love for and agreement with big souls, attuning our hearts to the divine will, and making our minds fit workshops for the carrying out of the Father's purposes. Christ challenges every soul to come up to his standards, and there lies in wait for us a magnificent thrill in the undertaking to become Christlike. It is not for us to find a real thrill on the park roly coaster but in the exercise of an informed, robust, and adventurous faith. With President Hoover we believe that "we must wage peace continuously with the same energy as they waged war."

A fertile field for pioneering lies about us—our homes, our schools, our church, our community. There is time and there is room for every man, woman, and child to adventure in thought, deed, and accomplishment. There is no good excuse for carelessness, idleness, and ennui. Let us remember that all is before us and that we start from where we are. Christ, if we will let him, will be our Companion, our Guide. He has said: "I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me." Finding Him is the Great Thrill.

Parables of the Parson

On the Subject of Fools

Once upon a time there came to me an old man, saying, Lo, my son who is young is also vain and foolish. He wasteth his substance in riotous living, he turneth the night into day, he followeth after false gods, he hath no regard for the conventions and customs of his fathers, he defieth his elders, he hath run wild—and he hath made a fool of himself. And the father was sorely grieved, and I did my best to comfort him; but alas, the best is none too good when it is a matter of having a foolish son.

Not long after there came to me a young man, saying, Lo, my father who is old hath also become foolish and flighty. He mistaketh second childhood for youth, he hath forsaken his home for the pursuit of pleasure, he maketh eyes at every comely damsel, he causeth my mother sore distress and his children much humiliation, he observeth not the dignity and wisdom which becometh maturity, he giveth not the sober counsel which his sons seek of him. He hath surely made a fool of himself—and surely there is no fool like an old fool.

I had beforetime heard this same proverb spoken, that there is no fool like an old fool, but when I thought of both the young man and the old man who had given unto me their complaints, I said to myself, Behold a fool is a fool, be he young or old, and when a man hath made a fool of himself, it matters not whether he be in the springtime of youth or in the autumnal days of age—he is still a fool, and that is that. And no man is free from foolishness merely because of his years, or his lack of them.

The Friendly Church

One of the bloodless tragedies of human existence is loneliness. A great human need exists for friendship. People can live without many things in this life, but life is scarcely worth living if it does not furnish some sympathy, tenderness, and love for each individual. And yet it is strange that a world so well filled with people provides so few who are friends. Acquaintances, associates, and neighbors are plentiful; but there are never enough friends.

More than any other great leader, Jesus was a friend to men. He knew them, loved them, served them, taught them, corrected them when it was necessary, and in the end died for them. In all these phases of his life work he was not the cold and heartless advocate of a systematic religion, but above all a friend of men.

The church that carries on the work of the great Master must necessarily be friendly, or fail in its mission. It must open its doors to men and welcome to that fellowship which is one in Jesus Christ. But the spirit of hospitality is not completed by providing a seat and a service for the stranger to attend. There must be something more.

The pastor should be friendly. Many a pastor not gifted as a fluent speaker has done a wonderful work in his personal contacts with the people. He must love the people and be interested in them in order to work with them. One of the finest things a pastor can do is to take an initial step and be at the door at the end of the Sunday service, or at the end of any service, to say good-bye to each one of his departing congregation. And this will lead to that friendliness which is the true work of the pastor.

The people should be friendly, not only to the strangers but to each other. The love of the gospel can not even begin to unite them until they are bound together in the deep and lasting ties of friendship.

A sister from a distant city visited the service of a large congregation. She entered, and no one welcomed her; and she had to find a seat for herself. The service ended. The speaker turned his back upon the congregation and in a few minutes disappeared. The people arose and went down the aisles without speaking to each other, and without noticing the stranger.

Suppose that stranger had been the spirit of the Master, coming to see how his servants had carried on his work?

No church can maintain itself that does not open its arms to the stranger. Its numbers will dwindle, and it will gradually die. Indeed, it has no mission to perform in the world if it is not organized to promote among men that highest and best friendship, which is the love of Christ.

Hints for Speakers and Writers

By L. L.

Quote Accurately

One of the rare satisfactions an editor has is in receiving a manuscript from a writer who has a reputation for quoting accurately. Just a few writers for the church papers are scrupulously accurate in all their statements and quotations.

But most of the time the editors and proof readers are put to endless trouble to verify and correct the manuscripts they receive. It takes their time, and because a church institution is paying for their time, the church loses money. Furthermore, all of them are crowded with duties, and are often put behind in their work because of the single fault of inaccuracy in the contributors.

Verify your references. Be sure that you use the exact words whenever you inclose them in quotation marks. Use the same punctuation that your text contains. And then be sure that you give the correct page and chapter numbers, and the correct name of the book.

Only last week the editors received one manuscript in which the writer said that his quotation was from the book of Acts. The editor found it, at last, in the gospel according to Luke. The writer gave wrong chapters, wrong verses, and changed the punctuation, as well as leaving out words. Not all manuscripts are this bad, but many of them have inexcusable faults. Other editors would have thrown the material in the wastebasket. But after the editors have put as much work on the article as the author did, the article will sometime appear in a church publication.

The Auditorium

LOCATION, SIZE, AND CONSTRUCTION OF THE BUILDING

The Auditorium, located in Independence, Missouri, on one of the highest points in Jackson County, is situated near the north boundary line of the original Temple Lot plat of 66 2-3 acres designated by Joseph Smith in 1831 as the place on which eventually the Temple of the Lord shall be built.

The building has a frontage of 250 feet and a depth of 270 feet built on foundation walls two feet six inches thick. The foundation walls and the footings for the supporting columns rest upon the ledge of rock which underlies the entire Auditorium structure. One hundred and four reinforced concrete columns carry the weight of the interior and the dome. The top of the dome is 131 feet above the basement level, and the ceiling is 76 feet above the floor in the main assembly room. The balcony is constructed without visible supports, which permits each person when seated to have unobstructed view of the speaker's stand. The seating capacity of the main assembly room, including the balcony, is 7,000.

The dome is a marvel of architectural and engineering skill. Elliptical in form, measuring at the base 168 feet by 214 feet, it has an outside area of approximately 27,000 square feet. The large building topped by its majestic dome is visible from vantage points many miles distant on the arterial highways approaching Independence from all directions, which fact alone has brought hundreds of visitors to see the Auditorium.

Five corridors connected by ramps make all rooms easily accessible. The lineal measurement of these corridors and ramps is over a mile. On the top or fifth corridor there are thirty doors opening into the balcony, which permit quick entrance and exit. Three additional entrances, in addition to the one at the front of the building which opens into the main foyer, enable the main audience chamber to be quickly seated. Two of these entrances are located on the east and west sides of the Auditorium and the third is the subway entrance. Not only may the building be quickly filled, but it is estimated that it may be emptied in from three to four minutes.

The service and utility features of the Auditorium never fail to interest the visitor, for not only does its massive construction stamp it a monumental edifice, but the combination of uses to which it will be put indicates that eventually it will be the central point from which will radiate the forces directing the development of our church program.

Divine Imperatives

By F. Henry Edwards

I want to couple two phrases together to serve as the basis of our discussion. The first is from the 25th chapter of the Gospel according to Matthew, verse 27, just two words, "Thou oughtest"; and the second, even more basic than that, is found in the Gospel according to Mark, the 8th chapter, verse 31, where it says of Jesus, "And he began to teach them that the Son of man must."

I want to talk to you regarding some of the spiritual imperatives which ought to have right-of-way in our lives. There is at the present time a widespread revolt against imperatives. In our homes there is a tendency to resent discipline. In the nation there is similar resentment of any mandate which contravenes our personal wishes. Some people even regard it as a semi-religious duty to protest against any prohibition seeking to limit their right to drink what they want to drink.

The Need of Authority and Discipline

Yet it is true that we can not achieve mastery unless some voice shall speak with authority in our lives. If you would excel in sport, there are certain commands that you must obey; and if you refuse to obey them, you can not excel. If you would excel in the field of art, you must submit yourself to a most rigid discipline, and freedom and power and excellence in artistic functioning follow only after such slavery. If you would excel in the field of national service, self-control and direction are imperative. Only such men and women as are willing to discipline themselves and to recognize the right of the body politic to say "thou oughtest" can render any major national service. Only those people in whom this "thou oughtest" merges into "I must" can give any lasting contribution to the growth of this or any other nation.

Many years ago Edmund Burke said, "It is ordained in the eternal constitution of things that men of intemperate means can not be free. Their passions forge their fetters." Freedom is not won through casting off restraint, but rather through obedience to rightful imperatives.

Christianity stands four-square against the revolt against restraint. Jesus himself was dominated by certain inner compulsions, and seems to have felt no resentment at this. At twelve years of age, when his mother came to him and chided him somewhat because he had not stayed with the caravan, he said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" When he began his ministry, he said, "I must preach the gospel of the kingdom."

During his ministry he told those who listened to him something which we have quoted again and again, "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold; them also must I bring."

Such inner compulsion is greater than all outward constraint. "I must," has a more mandatory authority than "thou oughtest." "Thou oughtest" expresses the voice of duty, the schoolmaster to bring us to the truth which is in Christ Jesus; but that truth centers in the even more important phrase, "I must," and of course, "I will." Real freedom, real power, as I have said, come only through obedience to these inner mandates.

Freedom the Reward of Obedience

I am free to sit down to a piano and to play it; but because I have not yielded myself to the discipline of instruction I am not free to produce harmony and melody. The real musician is a slave, bound by conventions; but he produces music which angels stoop to hear. He who would produce the music of eternal life must willingly become subject to the laws of spiritual excellence, and can produce divine harmony only as these laws have free play in his life. In the final sense, none of us is free born, but, like the Roman officer, we secure this freedom only at a great price.

I want to look with you at some of these outstanding imperatives. What are some of these things we must do? The first of these is, "I must believe in the best." That is not just advice. That is one of the demands of my spiritual superiority. "I must believe in the best." This "must" is invested with the commanding tones of voice of God speaking in our own souls. Such belief as this, the belief in the best that I must have if I am to be the Son of God, is not just a matter of reception but of achievement. I can not receive as a gift even from God himself my deep-rooted conviction that the best will survive. Such achievement comes only in struggle and in pain.

In history as in character what men believe matters more than anything else, and the unhappy consequences of believing little things in a little way can be overcome only as men's lives are transformed through believing big things in an expansive way.

"I Must Believe the Best"

It is a hard battle to believe always in the best. It is not an easy thing, ever. It is not easy to have a constructive faith in God in the face of personal bereavement. It is not easy to have an abiding faith in God in the face of the treason of those whom we have trusted. It is not easy to believe in the best when we get closely in touch with some of the many social maladjustments of our time. It is hard to see how God can be concerned in this chaotic world of ours, and how his infinite love can permit some of the things which are involved in the present social order. A faith that is worth while can not bury its head in the sand; a faith that is worth while must confront the facts as they are; must look in the face pain and disloyalty and disorder and the many manifestations of our incomplete development as the Sons of God. A faith that is worth building can not turn its back on the facts of life; but a faith that is worth having will recognize that behind the surface appearance of this present scheme of things there is an eternal reality which guarantees to us that the best shall persist. I must believe in the best.

While it is sometimes hard to believe in the best, it is even more difficult to believe in less than the best. Who wants to trust nature if there is no God behind nature? Who wants to trust man if there is no Eternal Being directing his destinies and calling him on a continually greater crusade? Who wants to believe in society unless society is guided by the definite urge to merge itself into the kingdom of God? Faith in nature, faith in man, faith in society, faith in anything is insecure unless we recognize God within the shadow. One of the demands of my spiritual life is that I shall be absolutely assured of the present interest of God.

To believe in the best is not to refuse to face the facts of life, but it is to face all of the facts of life. To believe in the best is to recognize that faith is sometimes difficult, but to recognize also that unfaith is even more difficult and is utterly bereft of any eternal promise.

"I Must Be Transformed"

I must believe in the best. And yet, my friends, such belief is utterly impossible unless it comes as the result of a transforming spiritual experience. Such a belief can not be matured out of the mere desire to possess it. Such a belief can not come into being overnight by the functioning of our own spiritual desires. The experience of the best of men who have responded most readily and most nobly to the divine imperative within them, has been that this imperative has been quickened only through the benediction of the Spirit of God.

Stanley Jones, missionary of the Methodist Church to India, says in one of his recent books: "Increase the ornateness of the rituals of the church if you will, improve the quality and the quantity of its religious education as you may, raise the standards of qualifications of the ministry as high as you can, pour money without stint into the coffers of the church, give it everything except the one thing that Pentecost gives, and you are merely ornamenting the dead."

In going through the Panama Canal the ship runs into a huge lock, the doors are closed, and the water surges up to a new level round about. The incoming of this power lifts the ship gradually until the inner doors of the lock open and the ship sails easily to the next level. Then, again, the doors are shut, and then, again, the water comes crowding in and again the ship is lifted, and again it goes forward. The soul, too, moves forward by just such incomings and upliftings, such as can come only from the great reservoirs of power prepared at the behest of divinity.

Belief in the best to which I must attain is absolutely imperative if I am to be the son of God. And while the voice of God speaks to my own soul, and tells me that I must believe in the best, the voice of God also speaks to me with an equally urgent imperative and says that I must interpret my belief in action. I must not be content just to believe, but my believing must merge into action as a condition of its own persistence.

"I Must Follow My Beliefs with Action"

It is a perilous thing to separate belief from action, to recognize the great affirmations of Christianity without translating those great affirmations into a great way of living. Mr. Justice Brandeis in a recent court action in which the State of California was concerned, gave a rather lengthy decision in which I was not particularly interested until I discovered this startling statement: "The greatest menace to freedom is an inert people." The greatest menace to freedom is not what some one else might do to us, or might want to do to us. It is our own lack of responsiveness to the demands of freedom.

That is true in the spiritual realm. We are challenged to believe big things and to act in accordance with our great beliefs. We are heirs of a great destiny. Our only reasonable course is to match this great destiny with a great character. There is direct analogy between a river and a human life. Rivers which follow the course of least resistance thereby become crooked, and people who follow the course of least resistance become crooked, too.

It comes to this: You can not prove the truth of Christianity by any argument, by any sequence of logic. The proof of the gospel of Jesus Christ lies not in what men say, but in what men do. The demonstration of our righteousness lies not in our claims but in our living. The Apostle John said right in the beginning of the Christian era, "He is righteous that doeth righteousness." No matter what a man may say he believes, I know what he believes by what he does. Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge. You can know a good many things about God from thinking about him; but you can come into the radiance of his presence only as you work with him; and the need of this church today is not merely to be able to tell things about God but actually to sense his divine presence. The possibility of thus cultivating the presence of divinity lies not merely in our thinking about him, but in our definite and soul-searching cooperation with him in which we shall make his purpose our purpose, giving ourselves without stint, and responding with all our lives to the imperative that says within us: "I must translate my best belief into my best and most responsive action."

The first step to spiritual power is not to ask for that power, but to put yourself in such a condition that you must have it. The disciples were not the recipients of the Pentecostal benediction just because they prayed for that benediction, but because they went out to do a Pentecostal work. Then they were given power commensurate with their task.

"I Must Fight My Battles Now"

In the book of Chronicles there is a story of a man named Benaiah who belonged to the foreign legion of King David. Benaiah loved adventure, and he decided that he wanted to kill a lion. Lots of people dream of doing big things while those big things are distant. Right at the beginning of his adventure, Benaiah found that some of his enthusiasm had evaporated. It was cold. It was slippery in the pit where the lion lay waiting. There were plenty of excuses to hand. But instead of using these, Benaiah did one big thing that marked him out as a man of courage and vision. He went right down into the pit; and by that act cut off his own retreat so that he had to kill the lion else the lion would kill him.

It seems to me that some Latter Day Saints need to emulate Benaiah. I have known many a Latter Day Saint who has determined to fight his lion, but just as he has been about to climb down into the pit some petty hindrance has presented itself and he has said: "I won't fight that lion today. It is slippery." And then has put off the combat to a more convenient season.

My dear friends who have your lions to kill, take Benaiah's example and get right down where you can't run away, and fight things out now. We need this in the church. We need it right now. We need people who recognize the tremendous difficulties that lie between us and the achievement of our great objective, and who will climb down into the pit and so force themselves to fight for life. Latter Day Saints must learn to burn their bridges behind them. Only by so doing can we merit and secure the Pentecostal power which we need.

The young man who has persuaded a girl to marry him on his promise to love and care and protect her, has no right after she has committed herself to him to say, "I am tired of the bargain; I will back out." A relationship has been brought into being on the presumption of faithfulness of both parties. Once they have committed themselves, neither party has the right to recant.

"I Must Live My Religion"

And that is true in the church. There should sound in the soul of every one who has entered into the work of God a certain clear imperative that says, "I must do that which my great belief commits me to do," and which makes us know that we have absolutely no right to quit in the endeavor no matter what the excuse may be.

I am finding that the absence of this imperative is hindering us in our church work. Too many people have discovered excuses for secession, and their recession from their vows of allegiance is imperiling the Union. I am much concerned that these people shall not suffer spiritual reverses which are bound to come when they ignore the spiritual imperatives which say, "You must believe in the best. You must not draw back from the service of the best."

My dear friends, in this day of revolt against authority, please do not forget that the outstanding men of all times have been readily responsive to these great imperatives. Today, as in every other day, the only way to excellence is the way of obedience to rightful commands. Outstanding among these imperatives are these two: "I must win through to a transforming belief in the supremacy of the best," and "I must respond to the demands of this great belief."

May God help us that, responding to the imperative voice of God which speaks in our souls, we shall rise in new dignity and nobility of character and enter into the great heritage which he guarantees to those who love and obey him.

"The shortest, surest way to enjoy life is this: Try to make it a habit to thank God for everything that happens to you. For it is certain that whatever calamity seems to come your way, if you get down and thank God for it, you turn it into a blessing."

The Sacrament

By Frank L. Holmes

It is a fact worthy of note that of all the sacred times and seasons the only feast that we regard of the old economy is the Feast of the Passover. The perpetuation of the feast was provided for and announced in its original institution. "And this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the Lord throughout your generation; ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance for ever." (Exodus 12: 14.)

On the night that Jesus was betrayed, he ate of the Feast of the Passover with his disciples, and at that time established the Holy Communion as its successor. It was Christ who discontinued the old ceremonial tradition of the Passover Feast, and substituted the universal ordinance of the eucharistic supper.

At the paschall feast, a lamb was the center of the paschal feast, and with it was eaten bitter herbs and unleavened bread. The bitter herbs were a reminder of the days of toil and weariness in Egypt and the unleavened bread the symbol of a sinless life. The two together set forth the nature and the necessity for repentance. At the Holy Communion we remember with sorrow our Lord's passion for us and with joy his breaking of our bonds. It is in memory of his sacrifice that we renew, at the sacrament, our vows of devotion to our heavenly Guest, "whose flesh we eat and whose blood we drink."

"Take and eat: it is my body." "Take and drink: it is the cup of my blood." These words spoken by Christ, and understood in their meaning, literally and without metaphor, are to human reason a mystery impenetrable. The bread which Christ gave his disciples to eat, and the wine which he gave his disciples to drink was to them symbolic of the body that was to be broken and the blood that was to be shed.

The partaking of the sacrament implies a life on our part, if we are worthy, far different from the ordinary kind; a life so far above this world, a life united with him who has overcome the world, a life tinged with hues reflected from heaven, a life which shines with the glory of the ineffable Presence to which we approach with our earth-dimmed souls.

If we are to enjoy Christ in all his glory, our guest-chamber must be ready. Not one that is built with hands, but a chamber or temple built within us—a spiritual chamber or temple whose stones have been carved and polished by the Spirit of God. It must be an upper chamber—the highest part of our being. It must be the sanctuary of our soul. A place where we can love him—not alone in words, but in thought and deed. It must be furnished and ready to receive him, and furnished with the things he loves—prayers, hymns, thanksgivings, kind words, and good deeds. It must be a large chamber. If we desire his graces, we must open our hearts to him to receive the good measure he yearns to bestow.

When as Christians we present ourselves before the altar, in order that we might renew our covenant with our God, and receive his gracious blessing, we perform a sixfold act. It is an act of obedience, not a suggestion or a time-honored custom, but an explicit and emphatic command. It is an act of remembrance. Christ needs not a memorial, but we need a memory. It is an act of thanksgiving. In this eucharistic feast we honor the world's Savior. It is an act of fellowship, for we join with the host of heaven and earth to magnify his glorious name. It is an act of testimony. It is a link in the chain of testimonies that was begun in the upper room at Jerusalem. It is an act of expectancy, for we demonstrate to the Lord that we are willing to wait until he comes in his glory.

Each time we partake of the sacrament may we be so strengthened in the renewed union that we may in the throes of our own peril say like Martin Luther: "I shall not die, but live and declare the works of the Lord." We must not fear the waves of this tempest-trampled sea which tosses the world to and fro, but we must remember that somewhere in this incommensurable space God lives and reigns; that the hand which grasps the scepter of the universe and sways events and circumstances, unfathomed by human conjecture, is for one purpose: that of bringing everlasting peace.

Discipleship

By J. E. Vanderwood

Those who desire to learn of Christ, should understand that discipleship carries with it the desire to learn of, and become acquainted with, the philosophy and life of Christ. When the ear has been saluted by the sound of the gospel, and when the heart has felt the warming influence of the gentle Spirit of Christ, the individual thus being awakened to a consciousness of the beauty of the message of the Master, at once becomes a disciple, in the sense of being desirous to learn of him. As yet, however, he still lacks many of the necessary qualifications of a saint. He must consider his development and growth, and we are able to determine the worth of the individual by the manner in which he puts himself to the task of qualifying for the high calling which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. When Jesus was upon earth teaching men, he said unto certain Jews, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He desired to have those Jews who believed in his name, those men who were convinced that he was the promised Messiah, to know that a passive belief was of but little or no value to them; but that they must continue in his word, if they were to be his disciples in very deed; and that if they would do so they would come to know the truth, and the truth should make them free. Jesus realized that there is, and can be, no freedom of life for mankind apart from a clear and comprehensive grasp of the truth. This of necessity involves a defining of the term, and for our part we prefer to let the Master give this definition, so we quote the word of instruction to this church in these last days: "Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come." Remember that this means knowledge of things as they are, not as they seem to be, or as they appear to the untrained and undeveloped eye. It means also that we will see and understand things as they were, and also what they will become. He who is earnestly following the quest of truth will surely grow into the likeness of the Master, and this is precisely what the term discipleship means.

The person who would become a disciple of the Master has no time to trifle with trivial things; he has no time to be cumbered with the petty things of human nature. It is his privilege to lead in the things that are worth while, the things that make for life and peace. He who would continue in the word of Christ, that is to say, he who would persist in the quest of truth, has no time to be disturbed or worried over petty things. He naturally arises above them and goes on in his endeavor to become a fully trained disciple of his Master. He is conscious of the necessity of revealing in his life and conversation the true spirit and genius of the Master's message. Discipleship therefore requires continually learning of him; it requires the constant training of self in order to have that self reveal the life and the true message of the one who was, and is, possessed of all humility and love.

When we reason from this point of view we can better understand what the Master had in mind when he said unto his disciples of old: "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit, so shall ye be my disciples." Jesus is simply saying to them, there is no way of escaping the consequence; the fruit you bear will testify of you. If you bear fruit that will convince all men that you have learned of me and have partaken of my nature, then there will be no question about your relationship; and the life you live, and the spirit you manifest, will cause all men to glorify God.

When the Jews were questioning the authority of Jesus, he said to them: "The works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me that the Father has sent me." When we who profess to be his disciples come to reveal him in our lives so that there can be no mistake about our identification, there will no longer be difficulty in winning men for Christ. If we are able to give confidence and courage to men, if we cause them to feel the presence of the divine Spirit as we converse gently with them about the things that mean more than life to us, if we inspire them with a burning desire to become sharers in the very nature of God, then are we able to speak with authority, and our discipleship will become so fully established that all men will be able to recognize in us the representatives of the meek and lowly Jesus. He who arises to this happy state is in every sense of the word free, for he has become a disciple indeed, and he has come to know the truth. He sees things as they are, he understands them as they were, and he comprehends fully what they will become. He, then, who is a true disciple of Christ, has no need of clamoring or contending for his rights; the very universe will accord them to him. He will be able to go forward with a message that is constructive and uplifting to man.

The word of the Lord to us is: "Teach one another." We should be better able to learn of him as we come to try to impart to others the excellency of his message. We must remember, too, that acts speak much more loudly than words, and that example is much more effective than precept. I think it was Emerson who said: "What you are screams so loudly than I can't hear what you say." This is evidently what was intended to be conveyed in this recent instruction to the ministry of Christ, and let it be remembered that every minister should be desirous of learning of him. We read:

There is a great work to be done by mine elders, and that they may be fitted to do the work and the accomplishment thereof be not prevented, it is enjoined upon them that they shall not only be kind of heart and of a lowly spirit, that their wisdom may be the wisdom of the Lord and their strength the strength of the Spirit, but they shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and they shall study to approve their ministration to the people by candor in speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ.

This is evidently the work of the disciples of Christ, and he who would qualify in the role of discipleship must strive to reveal the characteristics named.

The Master demonstrated his Sonship, and he requires us to also demonstrate our discipleship. May we therefore bestir ourselves, make a careful inventory of our lives, balance our assets against our liabilities, and then begin in real earnest to learn of him. The work is ours if we are going to qualify as his disciples, and therefore we gain nothing by delay. The way is before us, the open door has been set before us by the Master himself, and no man can shut it for us. We only can determine whether we will enter in and occupy with him. Surely we have a sacred and a blessed privilege in the possibilities of discipleship, and if we are wise we will arise and follow the Master until we have come to share in his freedom, his knowledge, his love, his mercy, his kindness, and his patient continuance in the work that the Father gave him to do. It will require men of courage, men of faith, men of persistence to become true disciples. No weakling can qualify. The privilege of discipleship places before us a challenge that demands of us all there is in us, as we may better understand from the words of the Master, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he can not be my disciple."

Tolerance

By Evan A. Fry

The newspapers all over the country carried screaming headlines not long ago to call the attention of the public to a disgraceful and silly performance in a New York cathedral, when a prominent bishop so far forgot himself as to defile the sanctuary by stooping to vilification and unsportsmanlike abuse of a man who also promptly forgot himself and, it seems unwittingly, committed a disturbing sacrilege in what was supposed to be a house of God. The whole performance was nauseating—regardless of one's personal feelings and sympathies for either of the two men—and started me thinking again on the ever recurring subject of tolerance.

All men are by nature intolerant. It is quite the normal thing for men to associate themselves together in groups, and to seek by ridicule and persecution if necessary to maintain the solidarity of their group and to maintain a solid front against intrusions of outside thought or outside influences. Tolerance comes only through training, which checks and redirects man's natural impulses and, sadly enough, such training still seems to be woefully lacking in the world today. To put it briefly, every man wants to have tolerance and complete liberty of thought and action for himself, but let a neighbor come along with an idea which crosses his, and he promptly forgets all about tolerance and begins to vilify his neighbor to try to get him to change his idea. It never seems to occur to the average man that other people are just as much attached to their ideas as he is to his; or that other people have an equal right to hold and to perpetuate their ideas.

We read the beatitudes as recorded by Matthew: Blessed are the poor in spirit—the meek—they which hunger and thirst after righteousness—the merciful—the peacemakers. Did it ever occur to you that the intolerant man can be none of these things? If I am positively sure that I am right—one hundred per cent right—and that everyone else is wrong, do you think that I am apt to be very poor in spirit? Can a meek man, or a merciful man, or a man trying to make peace be so firmly set and so rabidly fanatical in his own ways that all other men who do not believe as he does are social and religious outcasts? Can a man who is hungering and thirsting after righteousness deny a sympathetic hearing to any other man, even though he be of diametrically opposite ideas, when there is always a chance that there will be some new righteousness exposed in the process? The intolerant man has shut himself up in his own smug, self-satisfied cell, which he occupies in the lonely but lordly state of one who knows he is right, and who hates everybody that is wrong. It is worthy of note at this point that the Puritans who were among the early settlers of this new country, after suffering all the hardships of intolerance and persecution in the Old World, promptly instituted a regime of bitter religious persecution and fanatical intolerance in their first colony. It seems sometimes that the more religious people are, the more intolerant they are. Perhaps that is one reason why so many brilliant minds prefer to remain outside the fold of the church; they are afraid of the intolerance which they may encounter on the inside.

There is a very real, a very difficult, and a very fine point involved in this question of tolerance. Just where can a conscientious Christian draw the line between tolerance and compromise with evil? We can not compromise with evil, but it seems that far too often in our zeal to overcome evil we have overlooked good and slandered him who propounded that good. In trying to analyze this subject in my own mind, I have about come to this conclusion: that tolerance consists merely in giving the other fellow credit for being sincere, and loving him with a broad and all-inclusive love that can take in him and his supposedly erroneous beliefs all at once. If you give your neighbor credit for being well-meaning and sincere, and if you really love him as yourself, you will be able to overlook a lot of your neighbor's ideas that may not agree with your own.

Let me illustrate by means of a few hypothetical cases. Personally I do not believe in infant baptism; but that belief, or rather that lack of belief, does not cause me to assert that all Methodists and Congregationalists and Episcopalians are a bunch of scoundrels and rascals. As a Protestant I have no belief at all and probably too little sympathy with the doctrines of transsubstantiation and the infallibility of the Pope, but nevertheless I manage to maintain some excellent Catholic friends, and I refuse to believe that all Catholics are liars and hypocrites and sons of perdition. As a Latter Day Saint, I believe in closed communion, but that belief has not hindered me from sharing in the communion service of other denominations who practiced open communion, at such times as I did not have access to a service of my own church. I can not bring myself to believe in ancestor worship, nor in transmigration of souls, but nevertheless I can bow in awe, and perhaps even in reverence before the spectacle of Chinese and Indo-European civilizations which were ancient when your ancestors and mine were filthy savages roaming the wilds of Central Europe, and I can maintain my faith in and love for the races of China and India.

Let me repeat: Tolerance is after all only giving credit to the other fellow for being sincere and having as good sense as yourself. If he is wrong, you certainly can not convince him of his error by calling him names, or throwing mud, or passing laws or burning him at the stake. And even if you are absolutely certain that the other fellow is wrong, it is possible to hate his error or his sin with a venomous and undying hatred, yet at the same time to keep warm within your heart a love for the fellow man who you think has gone into error. If you hate the man as well as the error, you have lost all chance of reclaiming him; if you keep your love of the man, and if his opinions are wrong and yours right, by the grace of God you may be able to bring him to see the right.

Blessed are the poor in spirit and the meek—those who are not so sure that they know it all. Blessed are those who hunger and thirst after righteousness—whose hunger and thirst is so unfeigned and sincere that they will accept that righteousness even when it contradicts their old established ideas. And last of all, blessed are the merciful, who do not persecute their brethren in bigotry and intolerance.

As followers of the Lord Jesus, who loved all men, let us resolve that we will also love all men, even those who may be in error, and those whose ideas cross our own.

There is no one else who has the power to be so much your friend or so much your enemy as yourself.—Selected.

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Suffer the Young People

By E. E. C.

This is an appeal to adults. For a long time we have been thinking of our young people in terms of doubt, amounting almost to mistrust. They have been considered a "problem." We have asked ourselves, "What can we do with these young people?" But this question has never been satisfactorily answered, because as adults we have had no time to waste in leading young people's groups, neither have we been willing to trust them to manage things on their own initiative.

But let us not blame each other for past failures. The golden now is upon us, and present attitudes and actions are all important. Groups of boys and girls, young men and women, present not a problem but an opportunity. If we can only bring ourselves to trust them, to have faith in their good intentions, and confidence in their deep religious feelings, the "task" of supervising youth becomes a really pleasant and satisfying experience.

In The Adult Student for December, 1930, W. S. Montgomery has a short article in which he pleads for the sound virtues of youth. We quote:

"Young people, as a class, are deeply religious today, though they may not be religious in the same sense or manner as some older people are. They may not express themselves in the same way. Instead of putting much emphasis on outward forms or religious customs to be observed, as older persons are inclined to do, young people are wanting a religion that becomes an expansive force in their lives.

"Young people of today, being more practical than ever before, do not seriously regard the church when it deals wholly in matters of doctrine, inhibitions, negations, ritual, and routine. All this is a part of established Christianity, and young people do not object to it as such; but they will not take it as a steady diet. The church must give them other substantial food; and for such vital food of the spirit young people are really hungry. They will follow a living voice and drink from a living fountain; but they dislike to listen to echoes, and have no taste for stale waters.

"What young people need most is not advice, but example. They will save the church to the future and all time when they clearly see that religion is a way of life and not merely a system of doctrines. On the other hand, the quickest way to drive them from us is for the church to regard them as a 'problem' or liability. Young people will respond to a leadership that trusts them."

And thinking back on the time when we adults looked not too sternly upon some types of frivolity, yet were capable of thinking the long, long thoughts of youth, recalling those serious moments and giving youth credit for similar feelings, let us renew our confidence in the young people of today. They may try to appear indifferent, when at heart they are burning with a desire to serve; they may commit some un-sanctioned act more for the satisfaction of hearing our shocked expressions than for any love of evil doing. But as long as we suspect them and accuse them of insincerity, there will be friction between age groups with resulting indifference on the part of young people. Let us not urge them to do something that we would refuse to do were we in their place. In short, let us do unto young people what we would have had adults do unto us twenty-five or more years ago.

With an abundance of love and sympathy for each other manifest in our daily contacts, misunderstandings will soon be dissolved, and the bonds of brotherhood will be unreservedly established.

Youth looks to its elders for examples of leadership; may the older members of our congregations merit this confidence and give in return an evidence of their love by sacrificing some of their own desires for the sake of their younger friends!

Using Worship Materials

By C. B. W.

"They that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."—John 4: 24.

There is a gentle art in worship which must be cultivated. The term is derived from the root worth and suggests means of expressing worth or worthiness of the Deity to whom we give adoration and reverence. The evident purpose of our worship is to draw us nearer to God, to remove barriers, to make us more conscious of his presence, his love, his power, and his desire for us. It is a definite effort on our part to come into divine presence, to appreciate more fully and enjoy our relationship as sons and daughters of God, not only that God may be revealed to us, but that the image and spirit of God in us may be nourished and revealed. Especially is it essential that we discover the source of our spiritual power, as in song, in prayer, in picture, in story, in appeal, in response, we are lifted upward in thought and desire. The supreme moment of our worship comes when we have moved with the upward flow of the service to express clearly our desire and, individually and collectively, we give affirmation of our love and loyalty and go out to live in daily life the ideals we have been considering.

The art of worship seldom comes by chance. It is no desecration of our sacred privilege of worship to say that the plan, the materials, and the processes are subject to continual improvement. Desired results in soul growth can come only as we comply with the natural laws which control our thinking and feeling, willing and doing, with the natural laws which govern in the operation of the Spirit of God.

Among these laws we may note, the importance of surroundings which are conducive to quiet reverence and loyalty. There should be a plan of service in which all elements are carefully chosen in harmony with a definite purpose or ideal which we wish to achieve. Programs and materials should be prepared and distributed that there may be an uninterrupted flow of the service, with no breaks in the thought by jarring incidents or distracting influences. A climax of the service should come at or near its close, which sends the participants away with clear ideas, with loyalty to the new or nobler ideals which have taken form, and with a new power to go out and live in harmony with the new purposes.

The service is successful only to the extent that it brings the individual into helpful touch with God and his fellow men, and sends him out inspired and able to cooperate more fully with God in daily living.

Worship materials recommended for use in January have appeared in the closing weeks of December. In no case is it assumed that the programs as published should be used without change or modification. Indeed, the programs are suggestive only. The songs listed may not be available or the best ones suited to local singers. If the picture or story listed is not available, try to select another which may serve a similar purpose.

In most cases the programs printed are too long for local use. This permits of selection, as some parts must be omitted. Fifteen or twenty minutes well used is quite sufficient for the church school worship period. Even in Junior worship services, story-tellers and children's sermon preachers must be limited to from six to ten minutes. Attention and interest can not be longer sustained without loss.

Above all, let us lead the service in all sincerity "in spirit and in truth." Those who lead must devoutly worship if they would lead the worshippers to the Master. Materials and personality are essential, but they must be lost in the true spirit of worship. In increasing amount our own distinctive materials must be used, other songs and ideas being introduced only because, after careful consideration and weighing, they are found to express truths and to carry a spirit which serves to increase the value of the worship experience. This selection of materials and the conduct of the worship service is of vast importance in the growing life of a people. Everywhere care must be taken that we do not blunder clumsily.

Let us study the gentle art of worship, that we may, indeed, "worship Him in spirit and in truth."

Woman's Work in the Local Church

By John Blackmore, Director of Adult Division

The years roll by, and each new one brings its quota of progressive movements and social changes. This is true in the activities of the church as well as in the affairs of the world. No better illustration may be asked for than a brief review of the expanding work of the women of the church. Commencing their organized work as the "Daughters of Zion," which developed into the "Woman's Auxiliary," through the successive stages of the "Women's Department" into the "Department of Women" in which every sister of the church was considered a member, we now find their work merged into the Department of Religious Education.

The total activities of the women in each period had outgrown the preceding organization. The old was not large enough to include all of their expanding work. The present work of the women is larger and more expansive than provided for by the Department of Women.

Present Scope of Work

Let me repeat, the work of the women of the church has outgrown the older type of organization. Many of the sisters have been giving a valuable contribution to the church as officers and teachers in the Sunday schools. Others have been ministering to the spiritual needs of the various congregations in the field of music, as choristers, leaders of orchestras, organists, pianists, singers, etc. A large percentage have been working constantly and faithfully in performing acts of neighborliness. Some in organized class work have been studying so they may be better qualified for motherhood. Still others have found their field of service in sewing circles and aid groups. A great number have been planning and working so that the debt on their church home might be paid and the building dedicated, or perhaps they have earned the funds to paint and decorate the church.

A Tribute

Some of the local church buildings would not have been built had the sisters not accepted the task—and a task it was—of earning the money. Other sanctuaries of the church would not be so cozy, warm, and inviting if the good women had not quilted, sewed, or conducted bazaars and bake sales to raise the money for the purchase of a carpet, or a pulpit, or a snow-white cloth for the table of the Lord's Supper.

Thousands of the children of the church would not have received valuable religious instruction if the sisters had not responded to the tremendous need and courageously worked in the schools of the church. In other words, the life and ministry of service has been shared by the women of the church. They have borne the heat and burden of the day's work.

Plans for the Future

Under the "unified plan" this field of service is so expanded that the ministry of the women enters into most of the activities of the church. More fields of service are constantly

Please address all news and letters to Editors of the Herald, Box 237, Independence, Missouri.

Tulare, California

The sacramental service of November 2 was in charge of Pastor James A. Damron. Brother and Sister Hiram Holt were visiting here at the time, and Brother Holt talked interestingly in the evening concerning his missionary experiences. Twice during the following week he spoke.

District President G. P. Levitt arrived November 17 and held meetings for four evenings, giving screen lectures on the history of the church and the present progress of our organization.

The women's auxiliary gave a food sale and bazaar uptown December 13 and disposed of all their food and many fancy Christmas gifts. They cleared more than forty dollars.

Election of officers was held December 16. James A. Damron was sustained as pastor; clerk, Collis Renand; treasurer and solicitor, Walter Damron. Frank Snively was elected director of religious education; publicity agent, Gertrude Damron; historian, Ella Walker; director of music, Mary Snively; librarian, Cleo Renand.

Elder Levitt remained over the evening of the 17th, showing pictures that evening on "The Life of Christ." This is a group of beautiful pictures and was greatly enjoyed this Christmas season.

A pretty tree decorated the rostrum Sunday, December 21, and the Sunday school children gave a good program after the lesson period. The teachers presented each pupil a bag of candy, nuts, and an orange. The adults were also treated, theirs being purchased by donations received from some of their number.

All Sunday school collections that day went to the Christmas offering. A sum of $17.58 was received and swelled the offering above the $125 goal to $145.21. Sunday school attendance is about thirty-eight.

The season has been very dry and cold for this region of California. Over in the hills fifteen miles from here, smudges are burning to save the orange trees from the frost. The smoke hovers over this part of the San Joaquin Valley like a fog. The orange growers fear this crop of oranges is lost; they are trying to save the trees.

opening. It is merely a matter of initiative on the part of the women of the local congregation working in cooperation with the pastor and the church school officers.

Every branch should have organized groups of women workers doing the essential social projects, such as, aid and social service work, sewing circles, committees for sending flowers to the sick, and other work groups organized according to the particular needs of the congregation.

Where possible each local should have week-day class groups studying subjects of particular interest to the sisters. Classes may be organized in such courses as dietetics, health, mental and physical hygiene, home sanitation, home beautifying, etc.

Every pastor (branch president) should see to it that the opportunities for the work and ministry of the sisters of his congregation should not in any sense be curtailed. Every church school director and adult supervisor should plan for and stimulate these most essential activities.

To be sure, the sisters should be given scope and legitimate freedom to exercise their natural initiative and well-qualified judgment in service. Plan now for the women's activities of 1931.

Brooklyn, New York

The Saints of Brooklyn Branch under the leadership of Pastor T. J. Elliott, are looking hopefully to the new year.

At a well-attended business meeting the evening of December 17, a movement was made to bring into more complete operation the work of the church school.

On Sunday, December 28, an inspiring installation service was held at the morning preaching hour. Paul Bellisle, newly elected head of the church school, spoke briefly on the future work of the Sunday school. Our pastor in a brief talk emphasized the slogan of President F. M. McDowell's articles in the Herald, "The Church Must Teach." Sister William Nichols, head of the adult division of the church school, read a paper outlining the work of her department and made known the appointees in the various units of her department, Sister T. J. Elliott, social; Sister Anna Potts, drama; and G. W. Parrish, literary.

Sister Aleta Spencer, reelected head of the primary department of the school, gave a talk on her plans for future events and a junior church. Sister Ada Schenk is her assistant. The intermediates are cared for by Sister Paul Bellisle, and the young people's group is directed by Sister Martha Moseley. Sister Ella Squire was reinstated as organist; Brother Roy Squire, director of music; and Sister Gladys Harris, secretary of the branch. Howard Moseley was elected treasurer and is also financial agent for the church. William Nichols and Ephraim Squire gave talks, the former emphasizing the financial needs of the church, the latter the possibilities of the new year.

December 23 a jolly Christmas play was given by the junior and primary children under the direction of Sister Aleta Spencer and Sister Ada Schenk.

The Women's Department presented a play at a party given at the home of Brother and Sister Joseph Squire, sr., in Ozone Park. A large number came, and a good time was had.

Some of our Gracelanders were home for the holidays. This branch is now represented at Graceland by five young people, Dorothy Elliott, Frances Hartshorn, William Nichols, jr., Paul Jaques, and George Potts, jr. G. W. PARRISH.

Kirtland, Ohio

On Sunday evening, December 28, a Passion Play lecture was held at the South Congregational Church. It was given by Miss Sherman, director of music in Chesterland Schools. The Temple congregation was invited to attend, and the invitation was gladly accepted. There were no services at the Temple that evening. Miss Sherman spoke well and has a fine personality. Elder Cooper assisted the Reverend Yohannan, who gave the Temple congregation a fine address of welcome. A ladies' quartet from the Temple sang two numbers, and the boys' orchestra of South Church played one selection. Mr. Blauch, teacher in Kirtland High School, led the congregational singing. We feel that this Christmas has brought our town very close together.

Sister Leola McFarland Matteson, of Kirtland, passed away at Saint Luke's Hospital December 29, following a brief illness. She was moved to the hospital late Sunday night and an operation performed. Her death was a shock to her family and many friends. She was the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. S. McFarland and was born in Kirtland, October 11, 1903. She spent her entire life here, attending local schools and later the Andrews School for Girls. She was a monitor for nearly two years of a local group of Oriole Girls, loved her class, and was faithful in looking after the girls' interests. She is survived by her husband, Frank G. Matteson, her parents, and three brothers, Donovan, Vernon, and Raymond. The funeral was held from the Temple, Brother Stone officiating.

The town was saddened on Christmas Eve by the death of Brother James Moore, who was living with his family in Claridon, where they moved only a few months ago. The funeral was held at the Temple the following Saturday and attended by many neighbors and friends. The deceased was born in Lebanon, Ohio, fifty-nine years ago, and spent his early life in the southern part of the State. Married his wife in Virginia, and twenty years ago moved to northern Ohio, living in Kirtland for many years. Besides his wife he leaves three sons, Otto, Roy, and Gale, and three daughters, Mrs. Jennie Johnson, Mrs. Dora Gest, and Mrs. Nellie Avery. Elder John L. Cooper gave the funeral sermon.

Des Moines, Iowa

In the Des Moines Register and Leader for November 17, 1930, there appears a good picture of the church in Des Moines, and also one of its pastor, C. B. Hartshorn. Our church is recognized as a pioneer church of Des Moines. The present church edifice is the fourth one the Saints have occupied and is valued at fifty thousand dollars. A partial list of pastors was also given. A more complete list shows those who have served for one or more years. Five others served for a briefer period according to the memoranda sent us by the district historian, C. E. McDonald. Robert Young appears to have served the longest period, between 1870 and 1899. Here is the list of pastors: William Stevens, Robert H. Smith, Robert Young, Joseph Lilly, Marcus Cook, E. O. Clark, Orman Salisbury, J. M. Baker, D. T. Williams, A. E. Warr, Henry Castings, D. E. Dowker, and C. B. Hartshorn.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

The annual business meeting of the branch, Sunday school, and Women's Department was held in December in joint session, with the branch president, John D. Carlisle, in charge. The following officers were sustained for the coming year: Pastor, Elder Carlisle; recording secretary, Sister Minnie Cramer; solicitor, Sister Marie Graff; chairman of the flower committee, Sister Laura Warner; publicity agent, Sister Edna Howells; and chorister, S. B. Mansell. The members of the priesthood were also sustained. Sister Ruby Angus was elected church pianist and Sister Grace Robson assistant pianist. Richard Watkins was reelected Sunday school superintendent; Paul Watkins, assistant superintendent; Sister Ethel Watkins, secretary; and Sister Veneta Warner, pianist. Sister Hazel Noble was reelected primary superintendent; Sister Ada Stein was chosen president of the Women's Department for another year; and Sisters Anna Cramer and Nettie Bigler were elected to take care of the study and social activities of the society. The unified plan of service was adopted and will be tried for the first time January 11. The first Sunday of the year had an attendance of one hundred and forty-four.

Sacramental service on January 4 was enjoyed by a large number of Saints, and the infant son of Brother and Sister Melvin Bigler was blessed by Elder William L. Goudy. Special prayer was offered for two of our sick members by Elder Charles Cramer, who also gave an admonition to the Saints.

An entertaining Christmas program was given Sunday evening, December 21, to a large audience, by the primary department, admirably assisted by the junior girls' choir. The program was in charge of Sister Veneta Warner and Sister Dorothy Briggs, and Brother S. B. Mansell, who are to be congratulated on its success.

We were pleased to have Apostle Clyde F. Ellis with us for two evenings the early part of December. His first evening was devoted to explaining the financial difficulties confronting the church at the present time, and the following evening he preached an inspiring sermon.

The Women's Department held its regular meeting December 18 at the church. A Christmas exchange and special program was the feature of the evening.

Fresno, California

Even though we have not been often in the pages of the Herald with our correspondence, we have not been idle in the work of endeavoring to build up the kingdom of God during the past summer and fall. Branch President A. S. Votaw and his coworkers in the priesthood have constantly endeavored to minister to the Saints in humility and love.

While at times there have been misunderstandings, and the spirit of criticism has started up, as a whole there has been great spiritual development here, and especially of late cooperative efforts have been marked. We confidently look into the new year, expecting to see further spiritual growth.

District President G. P. Levitt spent several days here during the latter part of November and presided at the annual business meeting when officers for the coming year were elected. The reports of the priesthood showed growth, and especially in the matter of finances contributed to the general church were we commended by the district president.

Elder A. S. Votaw, who has presided over the Fresno Branch since January 7, 1925, asked at this time that some one younger in years be elected to relieve him of some of the responsibility of the branch work. Frank Enix, who has been loyal in his work as teacher and is admired by everyone as an exemplary member, was placed in nomination, and the district president accepted this nomination, stating that Brother Frank had already been placed before him by the Spirit of God to be ordained to the office of elder. Brother Enix was elected at this time for the year 1931.

It was also voted to enter into the educational church work as outlined by the General Conference of last April, and Sister Lillie Jennings was elected to act as superintendent and authorized to complete the organization by choosing superintendents of the adult, young people, and children's divisions of the branch. Sister Votaw, branch clerk, and treasurer W. F. Crane were sustained in their offices for another year, and Brother Stanley Sessions was placed in charge of the music department of our work.

During the past summer and fall several of the old church workers visited us and labored in our midst. Elder Hiram Holt was here for a week and preached here and in Dinuba. It was good to see his enthusiasm in the work of God as shown in him, even though he has been blind for a number of years. On his return to his home in Whittier, California, he again stopped with us.

Also Elder R. S. Salyards, who for many years was general church secretary, made us a visit of a week and occupied the pulpit at every opportunity, encouraging us to faithfulness in our gospel work.

Six of our elderly members have been called to their reward, and Pastor A. S. Votaw responded to the duties of the last sad rites over their bodies except for the last to be called, Sister Milla Morgan. District President Levitt came up from Tulare where he was laboring and conducted her funeral service.

District President Levitt has been untiring in his efforts to help us in our work and has announced an institute on church educational work, to be held here February 4 to 8. The younger members are expecting to receive much help and encouragement.

One aged sister, Martha Lightowler, who was born in May, 1839, is still blessed with excellent health and every sacramental day receives in thankfulness the emblems of the sacrifice of her Savior, as the members of the priesthood wait upon her.

The evening of December 8 Apostle M. A. McConley preached to us. This is Brother McConley's first visit in about four years, and everyone greatly enjoyed hearing him once more.

DOROTHY M. FUGATE.

Nowata, Oklahoma

This branch is improving in activity. A goodly number was present at the sacramental and prayer service January 4, and all expressed a desire to do a greater work in the new year than in the one just gone.

At the annual business meeting in December the following officers were elected: Pastor, O. A. Duncan; clerk, Louise Hayworth; chorister, George Hayworth; pianist, Mida Bly; librarian, T. W. Hayworth; publicity agent, Effie J. Lumm; Sunday school officers: superintendent, A. J. Bly; assistant, Anna Groover; chorister, Vida Bly; pianist, Elinor Hayworth. A Women's Department was organized, with Anna Groover as president; Bertha Simms, assistant; Effie J. Lumm, secretary. The department began the new year with a meeting on New Year's Day, fourteen being present. Our desire is to do a good work this year.

The branch and Sunday school have been much benefited by the attendance of Brother Harding's family and other Saints from Bartlesville, Oklahoma.

It has been announced that we will have at least two and probably three preaching services the second and third or fourth Sundays of each month.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

December 31.—The year has drawn to a close. Retrospection brings sighs of satisfaction and sighs of regret. Can we agree with the words of the poet, "Something accomplished, something done has earned a night's repose," a respite from the turmoil of carrying on? Perhaps we do not need to turn to Longfellow to voice our thoughts, for who has not experienced the sweet peace of contentment that comes after a hard task has been done well? All the little duties during the year come to a climax in a supreme effort, at the close of the year, to do more than ever for others in commemoration of the birth of Christ.

Preparations here have been many to take care of the needy in various ways. Those who lacked food, clothing, and toys were taken care of by the junior church. They scurried around pantries at home and also those of friends until they had collected enough to take care of ten families for Christmas Day.

Those who were hungry for glimpses into the Holy Land at the time of the birth of Christ were given a treat on Sunday night, December 21. Katherine Schaeffer had arranged a good program. The children came first with their Christmas songs, then tableaux told the old, old story of Mary and Joseph and the precious gift which was intrusted to their care. The following Sunday the choir rendered the cantata, "The coming of the King," by Dudley Buck. The training had been brief but intense. A church full of appreciative people helped the choir to make the cantata a great success.

Sister Livingston's class of young people helped to raise the amount of the Christmas offering by netting a profit of $21.50 from a dinner given at Fuhrman Inn, a place sponsoring educational advertising in the form of dinners made from well-known products.

The new program adopted by this branch is presenting problems and also accomplishments. Sister John Zimmermann, sr., former leader of the Women's Department, now leader of the adult division, was fearful of just how well a woman could lead men. She made an admirable start by suggesting a banquet for the fathers with their sons as guests. Perhaps she forgot the old saying of how to win the support of men, but the affair was greatly enjoyed by more than fifty men, who devoured turkey as fast as the women could serve it.

And thus we could go on and on, each week bringing something. We are not soon forgetting the thrill of hearing Handel's Messiah. The deep tones raised in dedication by our President would have been sufficient to our eager ears here in the East, but along with that came familiar strains and a consciousness that here was something of high art. The rendition, to our way of thinking, was perfect, and we will never forget the familiar voices carried over the ether waves for fifteen hundred miles. As large and as full as the year 1930 was, just so much greater is the work for 1931.

Mallard, Iowa

January 2.—As we gathered in prayer service the last night of the old year, the Spirit was felt to quite a degree. The testimonies gave expression to a desire to do better in the coming year, and all were thankful for God's protection during the past twelve months.

The branch president has been well pleased with the amount of money sent to the Bishop from Mallard during the last year. It is our wish to help the great work of latter days move forward. We were proud to be able to send in $10.30 more than our quota for Christmas offering, and our hope is that all those who are working for the church and their families may be well cared for.

Several from here attended the district conference at Woodbine and reported an excellent gathering. They gained strength and encouragement from its sessions.

The branch business meeting was held Saturday afternoon, December 27. All officers were sustained in their respective offices.

A good Christmas program consisting of a short play by the young people directed by Sister Violet Hahn, and songs, short talks, and stories by the older people, entertained the branch.

Brother Edwards preached the morning of December 28.
MRS. FRED HAHN.

Ottumwa, Iowa

Fourth and Washington Streets

December was a busy month. The women's club with its committee composed of Sisters Fullmer and Erskine raised over one hundred dollars, and in addition more than fifty dollars was raised by the bazaar.

Church services were well attended and the sermons helpful. The pastor closed a series of Sunday morning sermons on "The Value of the Church," which brought out many new thoughts. Bishop Charles Fry was the speaker Sunday morning, December 28, and Apostle D. T. Williams in the evening. Both sermons were very helpful.

The young people's division was out Christmas Eve until early morning singing carols. The program was presented the evening of December 21. The children, directed by Sister A. A. Goodwin, presented their part first; then the adult and young people's divisions presented the play, "The Story Beautiful," Sister A. J. Epperly directing. Lighting and scenery were in charge of J. H. Pedrick. Attendance was large.

The election of officers for 1931 resulted as follows: Pastor, Frederick C. Bevan; director of church school, William I. Williams; supervisor of adult division, Sister T. A. Richards; supervisor of young people, Sister E. E. Santee; supervisor of the children's division, Sister F. A. Davies; director of music, H. Fry; organist, Sister A. A. Goodwin; secretary and treasurer of branch and church school, Sister E. Hughes.

The young people's division has a study class on "Know Your Church," each Friday evening. They held a watch night party in the church basement on New Year's Eve.

Some remodeling has been done inside the church. The stairway to the basement has been changed, the work being done by Orie LaPointe.

The members were happy to have present during the holidays Myron LaPointe, from Graceland College, and John Hughes, from Iowa City.

The young people were given an illustrated lecture December 26 by Bishop Charles Fry, some of the scenes from church history.

Sister T. A. Richards is the leader of the woman's club for 1931, Sister G. D. Johnson, secretary, and Sister A. H. Howells treasurer.

Buffalo, New York

At a recent business meeting the following list of officers was chosen by the members to care for the activities of Buffalo Branch: Pastor, Elder P. L. Weegar; assistant pastor, Elder Earl Wagner; supervisor of adults, Elder Frederick Harper; supervisor of young people, Pearl Reddick; supervisor of primary department, Doris Weegar; bishop's solicitor (sustained), Cecelia Voltmann; treasurer, Max Voltmann; music, Maurine Weegar and Anna Lloyd; publicity agent, George Schaefer; clerk, Anna M. Lloyd; publicity committee, George Schaefer and Anna M. Lloyd; and librarian, Robert Harris.

Coffeyville, Kansas

Eleventh and Washita

A Christmas program was given at the church the night of December 21. A tree and other reminders of the season decorated the room, and a large crowd enjoyed the numbers given.

Election of officers occurred the evening of December 17, and the following corps was chosen: Branch president, O. E. Pender; secretary, Sister James Reynolds; publicity agent, Sister Raymond Whitmore; pianist, Ruth Reynolds; chorister, Mildred Reynolds; Sunday school superintendent, Loyd Martin; assistant, James Reynolds; secretary, Mildred Reynolds; Religio president, Raymond Yeubanks; vice president, Sister Florence Martin; secretary, Wilma Walton. The next day the following officers were elected for the Women's Department: President, Sister O. E. Pender; vice president, Sister Florence Martin; secretary, Sister Stella Edens; cradle roll superintendent, Sister W. C. Yeubanks; home department, Sister W. M. Smith; friendly visitor, Sister O. E. Pender; chorister, Sister Florence Martin.

The last Sunday afternoon of the year two young people united with the church, Madeline Storm and George McMannus, Elder O. E. Pender officiating. The confirmation at the church followed the baptism, Elder Dan Gray, of Parsons, assisting.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Brother and Sister W. C. Yeubanks at six o'clock on New Year's Day when Miss Madeline Storm, of Wimer, Oklahoma, became the bride of Raymond Yeubanks. The day was the thirtieth anniversary of the wedding of the bridegroom's parents, Brother and Sister W. C. Yeubanks. Elder O. E. Pender read the ring ceremony in the presence of a few relatives and close friends.

Attendance in all departments has increased, and a good spirit prevails. We hope that the new year will find all of us trying to profit by the mistakes of the past and working with renewed courage and faith to do more than ever before to promote the gospel.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H Streets

Of late weeks a number of activities have kept the members busy. A box social in charge of Sister Poague, Temple Builder leader, had as entertainers the Campfire girls led by Esther Shrunk. The money earned goes to help buy new Saints' Hymnals.

The Department of Women gave a Thanksgiving program and social November 21. Sister Genevive Reichenbach was in charge of the entertainment. About sixty were present. The annual bazaar of the women netted about fifty dollars.

Sister Capatolia Wright, teacher of the young people's class, gave a party at the home of Sister Reichenbach. A pleasant evening was reported. Members of the adult class surprised Sister Agatha Taylor at her home the evening of November 16, the occasion being her birthday.

Brother Scott, of Omaha, worshiped with us December 7 and assisted Brother Anderson with the sacramental service.

In the recent drive for tithes and offerings, Lincoln Branch raised $437.34, fifty-two persons contributing. All who assisted in the drive are to be commended for their capable manner of carrying it on and also those who so generously gave of their earnings. God will surely bless them. Brother E. J. Lenox, president of Southern Nebraska District, reports a successful drive. He and Brother D'Arcy are working together in this effort.

At the request of Pastor E. J. Lenox, the Department of Women met December 13 to disorganize. Seventeen were present and enjoyed luncheon at noon. After a short business meeting and the singing of Christmas hymns there was a Christmas tree with treats, and gifts were distributed. The women feel that they have had a profitable year. May their spirit of cooperation and fellowship continue in the church school organization of the branch.

The church school Christmas program was held the evening of December 23 in charge of Sister Marcia Omey. It was much enjoyed by all ages, and a tree with treats and gifts completed the program.

Mrs. E. E. Stake has asked for the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her husband, who is in the hospital suffering from a nervous breakdown. Although not members of the church, these good people have associated with the Saints for years. We trust God will see fit to hear our prayers in their behalf.

The annual business meeting for the branch will occur January 9.

Denver, Colorado

December 9 the young people's dramatic class presented the play, "The Rock," under the direction of Sister Myrtle Bennett. This is an inspiring religious drama, and the young people played their parts well. Sister Bennett is to be congratulated on the results of her diligent and efficient work.

Brothers E. J. Gleazer, E. B. Hull, and H. E. Winegar paid us a surprise visit December 9, remaining until the 11th, when Brother Gleazer and Brother Winegar left for a visit to the Saints in Albin, Wyoming. At the same time E. B. Hull and Glaude Smith visited Otis, Yuma, Wray, and Brush, Colorado. All were back in Denver for Sunday, December 14, when we had the pleasure of hearing two excellent sermons by Brother Gleazer.

The Women's Department held a successful bazaar December 4, 5, and 6, the result of many weeks of faithful work on their part.

The Young People's Choral Club rendered the cantata, "Chimes of the Holy Night," by Fred B. Holton, Sunday evening, December 21. The soloists were Fred and Farr Kemp, Una Holmes, Lefa Lutz, and Thelma Gardner. Mr. William G. Mitchell, of the South Denver School of Music, kindly gave his services in training the chorus. The church was well filled, and many expressions of praise and appreciation were heard afterward for the splendid work done by these young singers. They repeated the cantata the following Tuesday evening at the Old Ladies' Home in North Denver, bringing much pleasure and cheer to the inmates, who expressed warm gratitude for the entertainment.

Mildred Fishburn, who is attending Graceland College, is at home for the holidays.

Elizabeth Williams, daughter of Brother and Sister E. J. Williams, was married on Christmas Eve at her home, to Francis McClendon of Denver. The bride's father read the double-ring service in the presence of relatives and a few close friends of the young people. Brother Glaude Smith sang "Because" and "I love you truly."

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Redfield on Christmas Day, which was the first anniversary of their wedding. Mrs. Redfield is a daughter of Brother David Williams, of Englewood.

The usual Christmas Eve entertainment was held at the church, in charge of Sister Louisa Fishburn, and was given by members of the primary, intermediate, and young people's departments of the church school.

Our district president, E. B. Hull, addressed us Sunday morning, December 28. The sermon in the evening was by the pastor on the subject, "Walking with God."

Sacramento, California

Twenty-fourth and Kay Streets

Twenty-seven members and friends went by auto and train to attend the special musical services at Oakland Branch Sunday evening, a district program given by district musicians and singers. Six of our musicians were in the orchestra and eleven singers in the choir.

Christmas Sunday was observed with a choir program in the morning, Sister Birdie Clark directing. A local music house had loaned us a radio, but our large western stations did not carry the Independence program we were so anxious to receive. In the evening the church school program, arranged by Gertrude Bidwell, superintendent, was given. Vocal and instrumental numbers, with an exhibition of handwork by the primaries and kindergarten and a song by the juniors, preceded the major number of the evening, a play, "The greatest Gift." Twenty-six persons were in the cast, chosen from the various departments from the young people to the primaries. Children carol singers and a hidden quartet added to the musical setting. The quartet was composed of four young men, Melvin Howe, Cleland Levitt, Ives Honeychurch, and Claire Goldsmith. This play was undertaken on short notice, and much credit is due the director, Sister Florence Epling. Others assisting include: Marion Burton, costumer; Ives Honeychurch, electrician; and Edna Burdick, accompanist. After the program all were invited to the lower auditorium, where Santa Claus was waiting with bags of homemade candy, contributed by some of the mothers.

In November we were happy to have President Briggs, of Graceland College, here to speak for us one week evening. He was accompanied by Brothers Roy Weldon, of Lafayette, and Will Collins, of Oakland. Brother Weldon was in charge of the evening's service, and Brother Collins introduced the speaker.

Thanksgiving week the Idola Club enjoyed a surprise party at the home of Missionary and Sister G. P. Levitt, in the form of a food shower.

One Sunday evening, preceding the sermon by Pastor W. H. Dawson, a sacred drama, "On the road to Damascus," was presented by several young men of the branch. Sister Florence Epling directed. This was a contribution from the young people's department, supervised by Sister Epling.

A November entertainment for the branch was a Thanksgiving pageant presented by the Department of Recreation and Expression, Sister Marian Burton directing. After the program refreshments were served in the lower auditorium.

The first Sunday evening in December the orchestra, led by Brother E. C. Burdick, gave a pleasing program preceding the sermon.

Owing to necessary changes among the workers, Sister Mary Bussell has been in charge of the junior church the past two months. Sisters Edna Price and Marian Burton are taking up the junior teaching and worship, in preparation for service in the new year when our branch will function under the new plan. Sister Bussell will then have the intermediate department. Christmas week nine juniors enjoyed a visit to the Crocker Art Gallery, a beautiful old mansion containing a collection of priceless paintings, a gift to the city. Sisters Hazel Blohm, junior superintendent, and Mary Bussell planned the party and were assisted with another auto driven by Sister Agnes Ensley.

The Temple Builder Girls' Club held a mock Christmas tree party at the home of Sister Evelyn Howe on December 19. Margaret Goldsmith was received into the club by initiation. Sister Rose Ida Dawson was chosen secretary-treasurer for the new year. Sister Edna Burdick has been appointed as leader for another year. After the party the girls left their decorated tree for little Melvin Howe, jr.

Sister Inez Honeychurch was hostess to the young people of the church at a shower party given in honor of Brother and Sister Claire Goldsmith, recently married here.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Reemts were present at a recent Sunday evening service and had their baby, Richard Thomas, blessed by our pastor and Elder E. C. Burdick.

Sister Julia Crocker, of Loomis, is convalescing from her recent accident and illness. She is confined to her bed at home.

Oakland, California

From the Oakland Bulletin

At the annual business meeting presided over by G. P. Levitt all officers were retained except Sister Minnie Ingham, whose health and arduous duties necessitated resignation. Sister Kaeha Meyer was elected.

The sacramental service for the month of December was characterized by good attendance and spirit. At the close, the appeal of the Presidency and Bishopric was made, and before the dismissal a sum of eight hundred dollars had been raised. The hope of the pastor has been realized, that the branch could make a Christmas gift of more than one thousand dollars to the general treasury. It was suggested that the Saints reduce the amount they had planned to spend for Christmas gifts and give that which they saved to the church.

Early in the month the basket ball team played the First Baptist Church at Berkeley. It was a splendid game, but our boys failed to chalk up another victory.

Congratulations are in order for Sister Ruth Bricker, who gave birth to a baby daughter December 11, and to Brother and Sister W. A. Davis who are also the parents of a daughter.

December 19 the Christmas entertainment was had. A large tree was beautifully illuminated, and there was generous distribution of Christmas fare. The children of the Sunday school gave a drill under the direction of Sisters Bush and Strand. The event of the evening was a dramatization of Dickens' "Christmas Carol," under the direction of Sister Decoto.

Apostle M. A. McConley stopped off on his way home and worshipped with the Saints December 14, preaching in the evening.

Lambda Delta Sigma Party

On Thursday evening before vacation, about thirty members of the Lambda Delta Sigma Society had their annual Christmas dinner in the home economic room. According to custom, this dinner was prepared and served by the men; and the women of the society are now willing to admit that the men are culinary artists along the lines of preparing roast chicken, mashed potatoes, gravy, stuffing, and ice cream with chocolate dip. However, the men could make use of a little instruction in the art of serving, since they seemed not to recognize the breaches of etiquette in serving food in mixing bowls, in not providing sufficient silver, and most important of all, in one of the cook's eating his dinner with his apron on. The meal was a very pleasant one, the table and room decorations adding to the spirit of Christmas festivity, and when everyone had eaten his fill, Mrs. Morris Mortimore gave a fitting and clever criticism of the dinner.

Election of the dishwashing committee was next, and Eva Wallace, Miss Thompson, Miss Condit, Mr. May, Mr. Evans, and Paul Utnehmer were honored by being selected to fulfill the duties of this office.

And then came one of the most thrilling events of the evening. Santa and Mrs. Santa came from the north pole with a pack of gifts for the Lambda Delta Sigma members. Of course, each gift was very satisfactory to its recipient, since Mrs. Santa read a letter to Santa Claus which those present at the dinner had written.

After spending a few minutes in chatting and displaying their gifts, most of the members departed, leaving the dishwashing committee to its task of washing the dishes and straightening the room.

Pre-Christmas Festivities at Walker Hall

Holiday festivities at Walker Hall began with the Christmas party Thursday, the day before school closed. From preparations for the homeward journey and study for the last-minute tests on the morrow the girls gathered themselves about the cheery blaze in the fireplace. This party had been the topic of many a conversation, and many plans had been made for it. One of the first of these plans was to have each girl hang her stocking on her door knob, and then the girl who had drawn her name should sneak it away and fill it with goodies. After they considered the hard times and the disappointment to some poor children who would receive little, if anything, the girls decided to donate their quarters to the Lamoni poor. However, all the girls had such a good time singing Christmas carols, playing quiet games, and listening to the impressive reading of that favorite story, "The Other Wise Man," that I'm sure no one regretted having made her small sacrifice. As their annual Christmas gift with which they endeavor to show their appreciation to Miss Morgan, the dean, the girls presented an electric toaster. Meanwhile they munched apples and candy which she had furnished.

When the freshmen went to their rooms they failed to notice that the upper classmen stayed downstairs, so it came as a complete surprise when they heard the soft strains of "Silent Night" somewhere in the halls. The sound grew louder, and as they watched from their doorways they could see a long line of the old students, candles in hand, marching slowly by and singing the old favorite carols. Up and down the halls they went, praising God and bringing to the hearts of the girls who listened a new thrill. This custom is one of the best-loved traditions of the dormitory and is carried out each year.

After this the older girls were allowed to sit up after hours and enjoy the dying embers in the grate while doing some of their deferred studying, so it is doubtful whether they appreciated as they might have the early morning caroling of a group of freshmen the next day. The peppy songs sung by these sunrise carolers waked everyone, and started the last day of school in 1930. Between the rush to classes, everywhere one could see girls trying to get everything they wanted to take home in too-small suitcases, laughing and making plans for the vacation. Everyone seemed excited and eager to be gone. How different will be the scene in June, when everyone will leave with regret. Friday afternoon the exodus began, and by Sunday morning only those few who were staying were left.

ROBERTA LEWIS.

Christmas on the Hill

Those who remained on the hill during the Christmas vacation period have resented the sympathy which their schoolmates have been passing out. They do not regret the fact that they were forced to remain at the school during the holidays while the majority of the students were at home or with friends. It would have been a joy to see friends and loved ones, hundreds or thousands of miles away, but no one uttered a word which betrayed homesickness or regret.

About fifteen boys and four girls, along with Mother Brook, stayed behind. Music, games, parties, and many other forms of amusement, not to forget first class meals cooked in Mother Brook's best style, made the time pass quickly and pleasantly. All too soon the clamor and noise of returning classmates broke the quietness which prevailed on the hill. It was a cosmopolitan group which was at the school. From Pennsylvania in the East to Washington in the West, and from Canada on the north to Texas in the South were representatives, as well as from far-away Holland and Australia.

On Christmas Day the customary turkey was very much in evidence. When dinner time arrived, the crowd was smaller than usual, invitations to dinner having cut the crowd to ten persons. And what a meal they sat down to! Turkey with its attendant fixings, fruit salad, and a large piece of Mother Brook's famous angel food cake sent everyone away from the table exclaiming that he had just finished one of the best Christmas dinners he had ever eaten.

A Christmas tree and old Santa were not in evidence, but they were not needed. Over the radio came strains of Christmas music, and the sound of Christmas chimes ringing out their glad messages. Programs from lands across the sea were listened to, and other parts of the world were brought near to the group on the hill.

From the foregoing it is easy to see why the stay-behinds are resenting the sympathy of their friends. They, too, enjoyed Christmas in a real way. Oh, wait! I almost forgot something. Christmas morning at 4:30 a group of the fellows traveled the streets of Lamoni singing the well-loved Christmas carols before the homes of faculty members, and friends in Lamoni. Christmas Day on the hill, a new experience for most, has passed, but many memories of it remain with those who stayed behind.

JAMES B. MOSES.

The New Year Party

The strange quietness that had settled over the campus after the close of school was rudely dispelled on the evening of Tuesday, December 30, when the "faithful few" who remained on the hill during the vacation, and their fair friends gathered in the big dining room in the basement of Walker Hall. The expanse of floor space, from which the usual array of tables and chairs had been removed, proved to be an irresistible invitation for a frolic.

Rothbe Cook began the evening's program by staging an old-fashioned candle-lighting contest. Each contestant was required to light the candle while sitting on a bottle which had been laid on its side on the floor, the only strictly enforced regulation being the removal of hands and feet from the floor while the candle was being lighted. Several of the unskilled performers complained feelingly, either about the over-size bottle which Mr. Cook had chosen, or about the hardness of the floor.

Under the leadership of "Unk," games were soon under way, and the room echoed to the shouts and laughter of the gay crowd. After a period of strenuous play, the refreshments, served by Mother Brook and her willing helpers, were indeed welcome. After refreshments, games began again with even greater zest, and continued until the flying hands of the clock told that it was time for Graceland's last big social event for the year to come to a close, and the party broke up with the interchange of hearty good wishes for the New Year, and helpful advice concerning the making of New Year resolutions.

WALTER N. JOHNSON.

School Reopens

Once again Lamoni is awakened. Dilapidated Fords, miraculously held together, rattle through the town and pull to a screeching stop in front of the dormitory. Tired, dirty, but exceedingly noisy students stumble in amazing numbers from such conveyances to pummel the backs of near-by friends. Dormitory walls strain and bulge from the unrestrained hilarity and chaos within. Here and there are found some faces of sorrow, for home ties, renewed and strengthened by the days spent at home, are difficult to break. However, in prominent evidence are the smiles of those students made happy with the prospect of the continued companionship of their school chums. Rows of schoolbooks are removed from shelves, and the accumulations of dust vigorously blown from the covers. Some restore these immediately to their original places to gather yet another layer of dust. Others resignedly turn the pages, and, with a sigh, begin work once again. School has reopened.

PAUL S. JAUQUES.

Basket Ball in Swing

One week after laying away their football suits, the Yellow Jackets swarmed out on to the basket-ball floor, thirty strong, and began training for a stiff fourteen game cage schedule. During the five weeks which have ensued, their ranks have gradually been cut till at present there are only seventeen. The team this year will be centered around Delmar Jones, guard and captain, Harbert Sprague, center, also a returning letter man and some promising "prep" material.

The intensive training before Christmas suffered a relapse in the form of a seventeen-day vacation period. The joys of nondormitory hours, home, and the perpetual eating that goes along with a short visit, and the feasting of Christmas and New Year's Day, have left their mark upon the squad. However, the boys seem just as glad to get back as they were to leave, and are seriously preparing for their first game with Iowa Wesleyan Saturday, January 10, on the home floor.

Since the acquiring of Zimmermann Hall, basket ball has become one of Graceland's main athletic interests. Its schedule is of equal interest to the people in the surrounding community. The squad is expecting some record crowds to be feeling and yelling "Go, Graceland" at its seven foreign games as well as the equal number to be contested on the home floor.

Puyallup (Washington) Branch

Enumclaw, Washington.—We installed a radio in our little chapel for the broadcast of The Messiah. I am happy to report a fine reception. There were about fifty present. We hold our services at Puyallup, Washington.

We have been having some very interesting services and programs. One of particular interest and beauty was the blessing of Brother P. P. Reed's baby. The curtain opened revealing the babe in its basket, with father and mother kneeling on either side of basket and at the rear a young woman dressed to represent an angel. Standing at the front were the two elders. One of the elders read a scripture reading suitable for the occasion. The angel then sang the last two verses of "Dear Shepherd, Lead Them Gently," after which the elders took the babe in their arms and blessed it.

We had a very nice Christmas program on Tuesday evening before Christmas.

We are looking forward now to Brother and Sister Richard Baldwin's meetings, to begin sometime next month. Then in March Brother and Sister H. I. Velt have promised to hold a series of meetings.

LESTER W. BRONSON.

Decatur, Nebraska

December 29.—On December 14 Elder C. A. Kress ended a series of meetings in Decatur. Attendance was good each night of meeting.

The members enjoyed a good Christmas program, in which the smaller children took part. We have great hopes that our talent will in the future be developed into something very useful to the church.

A fine spirit of fellowship exists in this group of members, and the work of the church is progressing. This gives us courage to press forward.

Kalamazoo, Michigan

The work in Kalamazoo has progressed during the past year through the untiring efforts of Branch President Charles H. Wade. Nine were added to our number by baptism, many of them coming from the ranks of our Sunday school.

The new system of Religious Education has been put into operation and is proving successful. We are hoping to grow with it and to see more accomplished here in the future than what has been achieved in the past.

Kalamazoo Saints do not own a building but rent a room in the Moose Temple on Portage Street for Sunday mornings. The Sunday evening and midweek services are held in the homes. In order to have the evening services, both Sunday and mid-week, on a working basis considerable effort was expended by the branch officers. Many times it seemed as if the work would have to be given up but continued efforts are proving successful. The college has brought some new talent to our branch for the present year which is helping in the work here. A few members have recently moved to this vicinity whom we have been unable to locate.

A Christmas program was given in the hall the morning of December 21.

Annual business meeting was held December 14 and considerable change was made in the personnel of the various offices. Elder Edwin J. Goodenough was elected branch president with Brother Harry Whipple as his associate. Charles H. Wade was elected church school director with Glenn L. Myers as his associate. Sister Elsie Dunn was elected clerk and Sister Dean West was retained as pianist. Miss Lucreta McCormick was elected chorister. Although she is young we think that her high school training in this work will be a great help in her practice.

The women have not met with much success during the last few months, but they are looking forward in faith to accomplishing more in the coming year.

The church school has grown during the past year. The new church school directors are planning some attendance contests to terminate at Valentine's Day with prizes for the children having perfect attendance. The class with the lowest percentage of attendance will furnish a program for the church school.

We planned a business meeting and a watch party for New Year's Eve. The year's business was closed and the new officers were installed. The women served refreshments after the business meeting, and games were played.

It seems a long time since we had a visit from a missionary, but we are expecting District President William Osler here for a few days after he returns from spending the holidays with his family.

GLENN L. MYERS.

Independence

The nine congregations of the church in Independence report an increase in membership during 1930 of 174 baptisms and 627 members who came here from other congregations. During 1931 pastoral and missionary work will be given emphasis, together with the development of a program of religious education in which recreational features will have an important part. The religious education program for the city is being carried out, under the direction of Elder G. G. Lewis. Plans are under way for a summer school at the Campus during the vacation period, and recreational activities, conducted weekly, are now a part of the program at the Auditorium gymnasium. The advancing year will bring in their seasons indoor sports and gymnastics, an institute for summer school workers, tennis tournaments, and baseball games.

The nine congregations are divided into forty-four groups, each under supervision within its own territory. Wednesday evening devotional services held in these groups have been well attended during the past year. The midweek worship period will be continued.

A very good representation of the various groups in Independence assembled last Monday evening at the Stone Church to transact business in the capacity of quarterly conference. President F. M. McDowell was in charge. Reports were read and adopted from Associate Pastor John F. Sheehy; G. G. Lewis, director of Religious Education; C. L. Olson, statistician; and from the second quorum of teachers and the first and second quorums of elders.

The choice of pastors for the various groups was indorsed as follows: East Independence, L. W. Moffet; Englewood, D. S. McNamara; Enoch Hill, O. W. Sarratt; Gudgeon Park, P. A. Sherman; Liberty Street, F. A. Cool; Walnut Park, Samuel C. Smith; Spring Branch, J. E. Cleveland; Second Church, A. K. Dillee; and Stone Church, John F. Sheehy.

Names recommended for ordination were approved as follows: To the office of elder, Clarence Savage; priest, Ralph G. Blackburn and Arthur Welch; deacon, Glenn B. Closson, George W. Burrows, Jesse Hart, and Ted Butler.

The report of the bishop's agent for Independence, Stanley Kelley, gave the 1931 budget as $14,027, which with recommendations was approved. The building fund budget of $4,500 was adopted.

Stone Church

Apostle E. J. Gleazer was the speaker of the morning hour Sunday, taking as the text of his sermon, "Let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel," from 1 Kings 18:36. He emphasized the necessity for the revelation of God today as well as in Elijah's time. It is the mission of this church to bring to the world a positive revelation that God is. This will come, he said, in and through and with the cooperation of the people of God. We and others must be conscious of the presence of God in our midst if we are to reveal him to the world. Apostle Gleazer affirmed that not alone upon possession but upon our use of divine organization and doctrines shall depend our achievement of salvation.

The Stone Church Choir sang two anthems. Evan A. Fry directed "Turn Ye Even to Me," by Harker, Elizabeth Okerlind singing the contralto solo. Paul N. Craig directed "The Comforter," by Custance, the soprano-tenor duet being sung by Nina Grenawalt Smith and Evan A. Fry. Robert and George Miller played an organ-piano number for the offertory. Elder Wallace Smith was in charge and was assisted by Elder M. T. Williams.

During this service the marriage of Velma Thompson and Richard Bradshaw was solemnized by Elder M. T. Williams. Miss Thompson is the daughter of Brother and Sister George Thompson, of Independence.

Columbus was the character about whom Elder C. Ed. Miller centered his Sunday morning sermonet, "Faith in Ourselves," addressed to the junior young people. Brother Miller, who is a favorite speaker of the young people, was given musical support by the girls' chorus and by Willa Mae Redfield and Joy Harder, pianists. The pastor and his assistant were in charge.

Sunday evening proved a propitious occasion for the opening of a series of historical playlets, written by President Elbert A. Smith. The large crowd included the author of the play and numbers of Saints from other congregations.

In an effort to show the place of drama in religious education the pastorate of the Stone Church is being assisted each Sunday evening by the White Masque Players. On Sunday evening "The Birth of a Prophet" was presented by Nina G. Smith, W. Wallace Smith, and W. Earl Page, directed by Sister Leonard J. Lea. The sermonet was by Leonard J. Lea.

Congregational singing was led by Pastor J. F. Sheehy, who was also in charge of the service.

Organizations and Personalities

The place of the church as a teaching agency was the central thought of the short address of President F. M. McDowell at the Sunday school business meeting the evening of January 6, in the basement of the church. Elder G. G. Lewis was nominated by Pastor John F. Sheehy as his assistant and director of the church school, and his election was unanimous. Other appointments approved to complete the organization of the Stone Church school were: General assistant director, S. A. Thiel; assistant directors of worship, H. W. Harder and Vernon Reese. Adult division: Supervisor, Harry Barto; Sunday morning activities, Sister J. F. Frazier; week-day activities, Sister G. G. Lewis. Young people's division: Supervisor, E. E. Closson; junior young people's department, Leta B. Moriarty; senior young people's department, Fae Gardner; older young people's department, L. E. Flowers; Children's division: Supervisor, Myrtle Weber; nursery department, Anne Friend Roberts; kindergarten department, Tessie Smith; primary department, Ruby Williamson; junior department, Hazel Moler. Elizabeth Okerlind was nominated and unanimously reelected secretary of the church school, and Edith Bullard was reelected Christmas offering superintendent.

At a recent meeting the Laurel Club elected officers for 1931 as follows: President, Sister T. J. Watkins; vice president, Sister William Williamson; second vice president, Sister J. R. Sturges; secretary, Sister Alex McIntosh; treasurer, Sister C. Ed. Miller; historian, Sister J. L. Layton; publicity chairman, Sister O. L. Newcomb.

An adult class formerly taught in the basement of the Stone Church by R. T. Cooper, and discontinued for a time, has been reorganized under the name, "The Three Books Class," with Leon Snow as president, Ada Cochran, secretary, and Molly Davis, assistant teacher. R. T. Cooper is again the teacher. The class meets from 6 to 7.15 Sunday evening in its old place. At its second meeting over fifty were present. All are invited.

Most of the organized classes of the Stone Church School have in the last month chosen new officers who have taken charge of activities. These classes because of their number can not be given individual mention, but their work together is characterized by interest and enthusiasm.

The young people's group which for a number of weeks has been meeting at the Auditorium for a social hour on Sunday afternoon, held election of officers last Sunday and chose to direct its activities: President, Roy McNeil; vice president, Ammon Davis; secretary-treasurer, Phyllis Dobson; and librarian, Margaret Mills.

The funeral rites of Wallace Nelson, twenty-four years old, who drowned at Venice Beach, near South Pasadena, California, December 28, 1930, were conducted at Independence Saturday afternoon, January 10. The body was found on Monday, January 5, and arrived in Independence Saturday, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. President F. M. McDowell was in charge of the service, and the sermon was by Apostle E. J. Gleazer. Wallace was a graduate of Graceland College and of the University of Chicago. He was employed in Pasadena by the National Theater Supply Company. Surviving are three sisters, and many other relatives and friends.

New Year's greetings from its president, Sister H. C. Burgess, a lecture on French and French-Canadian folk music by Sister R. R. Redfield, and songs by Sisters E. C. Harrington and Kathryn Skinner Westwood entertained the members of the Independence Music Club at their first meeting this year. Sister Pauline James Arnson was guest artist and sang folk songs of the eighteenth century in French. She was accompanied by her mother, Sister Belle James. Two groups of two piano numbers from French composers were given by Sisters J. Adelbert Withee and Kathryn Haberlein, and a piano solo was contributed by a new active member, Sister Bertha Ellerick. Tea was served by Sisters J. A. Holsworth, John Blackmore, and Eben Miller.

The office of the First Presidency, at the Auditorium, received a telegram last week from Elder G. J. Waller, announcing the death of Sister Waller on January 7. Recently Brother Waller arrived in San Francisco from Honolulu, to be at his wife's bedside. She has been in ill health for some time. Her death occurred in San Francisco where the funeral was held January 9, Elder John W. Rushton officiating.

"The Elizabethan Drama" was the theme of January's meeting of the White Masque Players, and Sister S. A. Burgess delivered the lecture. This is the fifth of the series of programs included under the year's subject, "Development of the Universal Drama." "The Merchant of Venice," written by William Shakespeare, was reviewed by W. Earl Page, and the dramatization of Act I, Scene II, of the play was directed by Jo Zelma Taylor. Club business transacted included the hearing of a report by the secretary; the acceptance of the resignation of Beatrice McNamara as treasurer and the election of L. E. Flowers to that office; and announcement of the resignation of Dorothy Carmichael as club artist and appointment of Emlyn Fender and Mae Dillon to assist Cecil Weeks as club artist. Marcine Smith was hostess for the evening.

Walnut Park

A marriage of general interest in Independence took place the evening of January 10 at the home of Elder and Sister F. W. Lanpher, when their daughter, Ruth Irene, became the wife of George W. Pennell, Elder Samuel C. Smith, Walnut Park pastor, officiating. Attendants were Alice Lanpher, the bride's sister, and Carlos Smith, only the immediate families being present. The bride and bridegroom are among the active young people of the church and have many friends who wish them happiness. Their home is at Twenty-ninth and Santa Fe, Beverly Hills.

January 11 the Sunday school enjoyed having outside musicians to furnish the special number after the class period. Gomer Watson gave a violin solo of his own composition, accompanied by Harold Buseth.

A sermon picturing the life work of Christ was delivered by Missionary A. M. Chase at eleven o'clock. After stirring the hearts of his hearers by the manifest devotion of the Master, the speaker taught how we ourselves must come to where the work will mean to us what it meant to Christ; then "we will do because we love to do; we will give because we love to give," and thus the work will be accomplished. This service was in charge of the pastor, Elder S. A. Burgess offering the prayer. The anthem by the choir was "My Faith Looks up to Thee."

At the six o'clock period of class work, "Methods" was continued by G. G. Lewis. The course in "Vocational Guidance," introduced last Sunday by C. L. Olson, was taught by Doctor C. F. Grabske. Other competent instructors are promised for this course designed for young people.

The evening song service now begins at 7.15, preaching at 7.30, and choir practice at 8.30. The choir sang at the opening, "O Love Divine," and the sermon was by Elder A. H. Christensen, well known as a missionary and church writer. He brought out in an interesting way what our covenant to the Lord means when we become baptized believers: we are baptized not merely from our sins, but unto a work—a work for God, the work of establishing Zion.

The friends of Elder Ira Burdick will be glad to know of his improvement. He was seriously injured by falling timbers while doing carpenter work on a Kansas City Board of Trade Building, his leg being broken in several places below the knee and badly fractured. After spending twenty-three days in the hospital, he returned home and is now able to get about on crutches, and his doctors promise his complete recovery.

Gudgell Park

At the business meeting in December the following officers were elected to serve in this congregation: Pastor, Elder P. A. Sherman; assistant pastor, John Inman; superintendent of church school, Roy Sherman; bishop's agent, Clarence Martin; custodian, O. A. Story; director of music, Sister Esther Hook.

Elder I. M. Smith spoke the morning of December 21, and that evening the juniors gave the cantata, "The Child Jesus." Before the cantata Brother Johnson played a beautiful piano number and Sister S. A. Thiel told a Christmas story. The presentation of the cantata was splendid, and a large crowd received it with appreciation.

The Christmas program was given on Christmas Eve, a collection of songs, readings, and dialogs given mostly by the smaller children.

Communion hour January 4 was attended by a good spirit. The local priesthood presided. In the evening Elder W. A. Atwell spoke. Attendance was smaller than usual because the junior choir went to Blue Springs to present the Christmas cantata.

Last Sunday attendance at Sunday school was fine. One class had twenty-one young people in it.

Elder A. B. Phillips spoke in the morning, and in the evening Elder J. M. Terry delivered an old-time gospel discourse. Seats had to be brought in to accommodate the congregation.

Englewood

Church members and their friends of this congregation are this week enjoying a treat in the form of a series of missionary meetings, having as speaker Elder R. D. Weaver. Morning and evening last Sunday Brother Weaver was the speaker, his themes being respectively "The Mind of Christ," and "Laboring with God." Because of the quarterly conference on Zion on Monday night no service was conducted at Englewood, but in spite of snow on Tuesday night the crowd again filled our basement auditorium to listen to the speaker. With the exception of Saturday night, the series continues every evening this week, and Brother Weaver will again speak twice on Sunday.

Mission Branch

Near Marseilles, Illinois

Elder Roscoe E. Davey held a series of meetings at Mission Church from November 24 to December 6. The Zionism program with special emphasis on the financial law of the church was the theme of his sermons. Much interest was shown by members and nonmembers. Sister Davey and family were with him the last week of the services. Always we are glad to welcome two such noble, consecrated workers.

Immediately following this series of meetings, Pastor I. E. Turner and Brother Vernon Hougas canvassed the branch in the interest of the filing of inventories. Every member of the branch filed his inventory. We are hoping that with God's help and the determination to sacrifice we shall be able to pay our tithing.

December 13 and 14 we received a visit from Henry Castings and Brothers Burnett and McDonald, of Des Moines, Iowa, in the interests of the Penn Oil Company, an organization composed of Latter Day Saints. Saturday night an oyster supper was had at the home of S. E. Williamson, and Sunday morning the brothers worshiped with us. Brother McDonald taught the men's Bible Class, and Brother Burnett preached at eleven o'clock.

The church school gave a good program on Christmas Eve, one in keeping with the Christmas theme. The first part was composed of songs, recitations, and exercises by the children of the primary and junior departments, under the direction of Sisters Blanche Anderson and Sadie Hayer. A play, "Christmas at the Inn," published in Vision, directed by Winifred Thorson, was the concluding number.

Friday evening, January 2, the annual business meeting was held. The officers elected will occupy their offices until October, when the next business meeting will occur. The officers elected are: President, I. E. Turner; counselors, Walter Anderson and Marten Anderson; clerk, Walter Anderson; chorister, Sister I. E. Turner; pianist, Sister Lottie Hougas; publicity agent, Ethel Williamson; director of church school, Vernon Hougas; adult supervisor, Ethel Williamson; young people's supervisor, Winifred Thorson; children's supervisor, Blanche Anderson; secretary, Clarence Classon; librarian, Clarence Classon. The spirit of unity and hope for the future prevailed throughout the large congregation as the business was transacted.

Visitors for the holidays came from Carthage and Bloomington.

Sister Margaret Hayer, a faithful worker, will enter the Morris Hospital, January 15, to begin a course of nurse's training.

The spirit of consecration and devotion characterized the sacramental service January 4. The theme, "Can the Lord Depend on Me to Carry on His Work?" was enlarged upon in most of the testimonies.

We invite anyone passing through Marseilles to stop and worship with us. Our church is located in a rural community ten miles northeast of Marseilles.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The prelude, "A Cloister Scene," Mason, opened the worship period of the church school Sunday morning. The invocation was by Roy Pritchard, and Eugene Christy, tenor, sang a solo. Sister D. H. Blair told the story.

"Remember Now Thy Creator," Adams, was the anthem by the choir, and there was a solo by Pauline James Arnson, soprano. Elder H. A. Koehler delivered the sermon. George Anway directed the music, Irene Wolfe played the organ, and Lucy Bowser, the piano.

The cantata, "Hail, Messiah!" by Wilson, was given by the Quindaro and Heathwood Choirs Sunday evening. Soloists were Lilly Belle Allen, soprano; Alice Burgess, contralto; Clayton Wolfe, tenor; and Lester Fowler, bass. The cantata was directed by Otis Swart, musical director at Quindaro. Apostle D. T. Williams preached the sermon.

The turning point in the life of many Latter Day Saints has been the receiving of a patriarchal blessing. This should be approached with preparation and understanding. On the evening of January 13, J. T. Gresty, the stake patriarch, will preach on "The Patriarchal Office." Young people are particularly encouraged to attend.

Central's basket ball team remains undefeated. The schedule of games is full and promises to keep the team and its friends at their best in work and support.

Central Branch now has an enrollment of five hundred. Of this number seventy-five have pledged $2,234.40 of the $6,937 budget for 1931.

Grandview Church

The Women's Department cleared about one hundred dollars at its annual bazaar and chicken dinner, held December 11 at the church.

Christmas was appropriately observed by all departments. On Sunday morning, December 21, Sister C. D. Jellings told the story, "Why the Chimes Rang," and Pastor C. D. Jellings gave a sermon. In the evening the choir, directed by Sister Fred Brose, sang a cantata, "The World's Redeemer." The children of the primary and intermediate departments, under the direction of Sisters Fred Brose, D. L. White, and D. S. White, entertained with a radio Christmas program, which was effective. Santa Claus made his visit and distributed a treat to the children. The O. B. K's. went carol singing the evening of December 22.

Brother Charles Martin, aged sixty-two years, passed away at his home January 3. Funeral services were conducted by Stake Missionaries H. H. Sevy and G. T. Richards, January 5, from the Fairwether-Werner Mortuary, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery at Independence. He was a patient sufferer for a number of years. He and wife came to Kansas City from Perry, Iowa, about six years ago.

Brother Edward A. Skinner, age seventy-four, former resident of Kansas City, Kansas, for forty-seven years, died January 5 at his home at Strasburg, Missouri, where he recently moved. He served as superintendent of the old City Hospital on the Kansas side from 1907 to 1918 and was superintendent of the Wyandotte County Farm during the year of 1918. Funeral services were conducted from the Grandview Church, January 8, and interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Mrs. Mary Truitt Pate passed this life January 1, at Providence Hospital. The funeral service was from Long's Mortuary in charge of Elder E. W. Lloyd, sermon by Elder W. S. Brown. Burial was in Quindaro Cemetery. She lived and conducted a business for several years at Eighteenth and Parallel Avenue. Her former home was in Leon, Iowa.

Gladstone Church

A Christmas program was given the night of December 21. Carols and piano numbers were given by the young people, and readings and short exercises were contributed by the juniors and younger children. A Christmas tree, treats, and Santa Claus in his most jovial mood brightened the evening's entertainment.

December 28 Brother Seth Sandy, of Central Church, spoke on finances and budgeting for the coming year. The O. B. K's had charge of the evening hour, and Elder Joseph Curtis was the speaker.

We are glad to welcome Brother and Sister E. B. Johnston back to our midst. They are willing helpers, and were missed during their recent sojourn in the West and Canada.

The young people held a Penny Party at the home of Naomi and Leona Grunig, January 3, to aid the treasury of the athletic organization.

Attendance at the sacramental service was unusually large. After administration of the emblems, two special prayers were offered. Elder Charles G. Lewis offered a prayer for forgiveness and a spiritual revival throughout the church. Elder A. R. Moore offered the second prayer, one for renewed dedication as individuals, branches, and the entire church.

William Pence was received into the church in the baptismal and confirmation service at Central Church in the afternoon.

In the last Gladstone items it was reported that William Pence was the bandit victim of November 26. It should have read William Price. We are sorry to have made this error and can offer the similarity of names as the only reason.

Brother and Sister Elijah Day are the parents of a son, born December 29. He has been given the name John Lloyd.

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference Institute

The Western Oklahoma district conference and educational institute will be held at Eagle City, Oklahoma, February 13, 14, and 15. An entertainment is being prepared for the enjoyment of those who will be here the night of the 12th. Elder John Blackmore will be ready the morning of the 13th to conduct institute work. Apostle E. J. Gleazer will be here and will have something for us along the lines of his work and our need. District officers wish very much that all of the priesthood and as many of the members as can will attend. Preparations are being made for the feeding and housing of visiting Saints. Will you please notify R. L. Diamond of Eagle City concerning your intention of attending conference, that we may be able to prepare for all who come. Do not stay away, however, because you do not have time to notify us of your coming. For additional information concerning conference, write Roy L. Diamond, district secretary. —Roy L. Diamond, Eagle City, Oklahoma.

Conference Notice

Semiannual conference of Kentucky and Tennessee District will convene at the Odd Fellows Hall, 209 Market Street, Paris, Tennessee, at 10 a. m. February 14, and continue over Sunday. Secretaries of the branches, please show your statistical reports made out and forward them to Sister Valie Seaton, Rural Route 4, Puryear, Tennessee. Elders, will you also have your reports written to be read at the conference? We trust that all the membership who can will be present and help to make the conference successful.—Thomas Newton, district president, 709 Poplar Street, Paris, Tennessee.

Rally Days to Replace District Conference

Owing to the fact that there will be no General Conference of the church this spring, officers of Idaho District have decided not to call a spring district conference. However, we are contemplating holding a rally day in each branch at a time convenient to those concerned.—Silas D. Condit, district president, Hagerman, Idaho.

Our Departed Ones

GAMET.—James Floyd Gamet, eldest son of David and Nancy Gamet, was born September 17, 1866, in Harrison County, Iowa, near Mondamin. In 1885, he attended Commercial College at Shenandoah, Iowa, and a little later was associated with his father in the mercantile business in Mondamin. October 23, 1888, he married Minnie M. Beaman, and they began married life on the farm. Nine children were born to them, five sons and four daughters: Everett E., of Trenton, Missouri; Eva M. Ruffcorn, Omaha, Nebraska; David W., Cameron, Missouri; L. Burl, Gallatin, Missouri; Clarence A., Saint Joseph, Missouri; Anna Shannon, Mondamin, Iowa; Carroll G., Kansas City, Missouri; Elma Hoag, Bucatunna, Mississippi; and Mildred Moore, Cameron, Missouri. With their mother these children survive, having enjoyed the rich heritage of a father's love. There are also twenty grandchildren. This is the first time death has invaded the family. Of his father's family there survive three brothers and four sisters: Christie A. Stuart, Rimby, Alberta; Hannah P. Derry, Kellerton, Iowa; Alice Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa; Ira D., of Independence, Missouri; Harriet E. Garner, Mondamin, Iowa; Parley L., Colorado Springs, Colorado; Miriam Coffman, of Wagner, South Dakota; and George L., of Mondamin, Iowa. July 5, 1895, he was baptized a member of the church by Elder T. W. Williams, and has been a loyal and faithful member. In the spring of 1924 he retired from active farming and moved to Cameron, Missouri. He was interested in making a personal application in his life of the gospel of the Golden Rule, and his dealings with all men were honest and just. His was a life of industry and honest toil. He passed away January 1, 1931.

EVANS.—Ida Rosetta Gee was born April 5, 1873, at Sadora, Illinois, and died at Independence, Missouri, December 28, 1930, of asthma. She became a member of the Christian Church in early girlhood and in 1888, at the age of fifteen years, was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Rich Hill, Missouri. On November 20, 1889, at Schell City, Missouri, she was married to Alfred N. Evans, and to them were born four children, three daughters (one, whose name was Duty, passing away in infancy at the age of 14 months) and one son. Surviving her are her husband of the home; two daughters, Mrs. O. V. Davidson and Mrs. Theodore R. Walker, and one son, Walter Winburn, all of St. Louis, Missouri; four grandchildren; two sisters, Mrs. W. M. Oliphant, of Independence, Missouri; and Mrs. J. T. Bailey of Kaycee, Wyoming. A true and noble woman, a faithful wife, and a devoted mother has passed on. The funeral service was held in Independence, Missouri. Elder E. E. Willard was in charge and the sermon was by Apostle Clyde F. Ellis. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

MEADOWS.—Nancy W. Meadows was born August 16, 1854, at Troy, Lincoln County, Missouri. She became a member of the church July 2, 1911, at Saint Charles, Missouri, being baptized by George F. Barraclough. She met death November 25, 1930, at Saint Charles, when she was struck by an automobile, passing away shortly after at a local hospital. She was a faithful member of the church. Surviving are a son, George Meadows, Saint Louis; a daughter, Cora Hunter, Saint Charles; seven grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. She was an active woman, being a frequent visitor in the sickroom of her friends and able to care for her business affairs. Her presence will be greatly missed at the services of the Saints. The funeral sermon was preached by Russell Archibald, and interment was in Oak Grove Cemetery beside her husband, who passed away six years ago.

CRAVEN.—Susie Belle Craven was born at Knife River, Minnesota, June 1, 1904. She attended the local schools and took nurse's training at the Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri. She made her home with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Sloan. Was baptized a member of the church June 29, 1912, and was an active worker. At the time of her passing she was supervisor of young people in Duluth Branch and was active in the Christmas program given December 28, 1930, at the church. She passed away December 30, 1930, at Two Harbors from heart trouble. Surviving are her father and stepmother, Mr. and Mrs. William Craven, Knife River; two sisters, Mrs. Henry Webber, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and Mrs. Richard Bowden, of Chicago; a brother, Doctor Arthur Craven, of Nashvauk; two half sisters, Edna and Lucile, and two half brothers, James and Clyde, all of Knife River. The funeral was conducted from the First Methodist Church, Elder C. J. Smith, of Omaha, Nebraska, officiating.

The Service of Love

A few years ago in one of the "Little Journeys" I took with Herald readers, I told of a visit to a home in Deer Lodge, Montana, where a patient, devoted daughter was unostentatiously giving kind and loving care to an equally patient and loving but invalid mother. The incident touched me, and I tried to convey to Herald readers some of the emotions and thoughts aroused.

A few weeks ago I stood with that daughter beside the body of her mother, and as we looked upon the peaceful face so quiet in the repose of death, the daughter held herself in control, but one could imagine the emotions that swept over her, and the tears that she kept back.

I thought of the reward of duty well performed; but I also thought of the service which is beyond that, that service which is under the compulsion of deep and abiding love. Such service that mother had and that daughter gave.

Who can measure the reward which lies in the memory of such devotion? And who can doubt that in the mind of such a devoted one there is the modest thought: I might have done even more.

Such examples of devotion remind us of the love divine so unstintingly bestowed, under whose protection we move and have our being, and under the spirit of which we can comprehend the love which casteth out all fear and selfishness. To see the manifestation of such love lifts us up towards God.

F. M. S.

The Laurel Club

In another column will be found a summary of the activities of the Laurel Club, of Independence, for the year 1930. Even a casual reading will show that the club has been very active, and that the results have been gratifying. The report however gives only a partial idea of the constant efforts of this efficient organization. It has won a place in the activities of Independence of which the club members may be justly proud, and the Saints in Independence are in turn proud of the club. Congratulations are due the Laurels for their successful prosecution of a work which to them has become a devotion.

On Getting Organized

Now there is a saying among moderns which, although it is often used in a sort of lightness, has in it much of importance. Many times of late hath one or another, especially those of youthful years, been heard to say, "Let's get organized!"

As I have pondered somewhat upon this saying, it has seemed good. For I was thinking of certain conditions which prevail in various of the cities of the land. I was thinking of a great variety of leeches and parasites which do prey upon the people and fasten themselves upon the institutions which are intended for the common welfare. And many of these, it seems, are most difficult to remove.

Then came to my memory an event which had transpired in a city neighboring that in which I was dwelling. A certain thief (one who in this age is called a bandit) had entered into the house of certain money-brokers (who in this age are called bankers) and had divested it of much riches, and had departed with his spoils. But no sooner had he betaken himself into the street than he was beset upon every hand by members of the community armed with such instruments of warfare as did soon convince him of the error of his ways and the impossibility of escape. And the riches were returned to the money-brokers, and the thief was imprisoned in the place which is provided for such as he.

Now the secret of the thief's undoing was that there were certain men in the community who had offered of their services to the scourging of those who might seek to despoil the money-houses. They had been commissioned to assist in the preserving of the law and of the properties of the people. And they were quick to action when the alarm was sounded; thus did they issue forth with such despatch to the consternation of the thief and the complete foiling of his evil work.

Methinks there are many other things which do threaten the tranquillity of the people, against which we might well be as watchful as against the money thief. For when many are watchful and many are willing to help, the way of the transgressor is indeed hard. Verily, let us get organized.

Further Recognition for Graceland College

Graceland College has been accorded a new and a wider recognition as a nationally accredited three-year educational institution. This recognition was granted by the United States Bureau of Education through the action of a national meeting of college educators held at Berkeley, California, in November. This adds materially to the standing of the college, which is already recognized as a three-year institution by the Iowa Intercollegiate Standing Commission, and as a standard junior college by the North-Central Association.

Graceland is to be congratulated on this new step forward. It provides additional certification, if any could be needed, to assure parents and young people that Graceland is a good place, a standard and recognized place, to secure an education. Graceland is, moreover, a place where ideals mean something, and where the development of character and personality are taken at least as seriously as the transmission of information.

High school seniors are now turning their eyes toward the institutions of higher learning. Some of them have already selected the places where they will go. All young people should carefully consider the fine advantages to be had at Graceland.

We might paraphrase the advertising slogan of a certain make of fine car, and say to those who are wondering about Graceland:

"Ask the man who has been there!" L. L.

Due Appreciation

The News-Record of Pittsburg, Kansas, recently carried a story about Elder Jasper M. Richards of that city. The article says in part:

For fifty-nine years Mr. Richards has been a minister of the gospel, and never in all that time has he accepted one penny for his ministrations. He is not rich. Except for the modest pension given him by Uncle Sam, he has nothing but what he earns by the sweat of his brow. Yet he is at all times glad to share his little with anyone he thinks needs it, not "deserves it." . . . You'll find him working in his garden, and if you're in need of spiritual advice, if you are broken in spirit and feel that there's nothing left to live for, he'll send you away with a song in your heart.

"God is not dead," said he to me, "nor has he gone on a vacation. He is just as vital a force as in the olden times, and his loving care for his children is just the same."

There is but little that we can add to this sincere and loving testimony. We can only wish that in every community we could have at least one such member of the church. He would be an active missionary, self-sustaining, and under a kind of perpetual appointment.

It occurs to us that it is an excellent thing that some one was thoughtful enough to appreciate the high type of Christian life of this brother while he is still alive to hear the kind words spoken of him.

Medical Examinations

Apropos the definite move made at the last General Conference to have our general church officers and appointees undergo a thorough medical examination, it is interesting to note what the Milwaukee Railroad is doing in this direction. A special car has been equipped with X ray and other apparatus suitable for making physical examinations. Under the supervision of the surgical department of the roads, this car with its corps of medical attendants will go over the system and examine the employees engaged in train operation, also applicants for positions in this department. This examination service is in expansion of the service already rendered in the medical department.

The car with its equipment was designed by the chief surgeon as a means of promoting greater efficiency among employees of the railroad, for it is felt that physical condition is an essential factor in efficiency, especially in the matter of safe operation of trains. In commenting upon the car, Doctor Metz, the chief surgeon, says:

"The examination car, completely equipped as it is for a most thorough examination, in addition to contributing to the safe operation of trains, will give the employees now in service an opportunity to learn of any early physical defects they may have which can be corrected, thus keeping them in the best of health possible and at the same time prolonging their period of usefulness."

The doctor has briefly set out one of the great advantages of periodical and systematic physical examinations, and I have rejoiced to believe that we have fully entered upon such a course and operative rule in our church and for the benefit of our workers.

Knowing the need of the world—social, industrial, racial, national, and spiritual—and knowing the need of every individual heart throughout all time, Christ gave his message to the world. It is unique. It is universal. It is adequate. That message is ours to give to the world. Giving it to the world constitutes the Mission of Christianity. That message is the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is not merely a philosophy of life; it is not merely a theological doctrine; it is not merely a social service program. It is more than all of these. It is the revelation of God to men empowering them to become sons of God.—Anna A. Milligan.

The Auditorium Welcomes the World

By H. A. Koehler

During the past several months the author has been on duty at the Information Booth and Guide Station at the Auditorium and has collected many interesting facts about the people who have come to see the largest building of the church. Perhaps some of the figures will serve to show our readers the important place the building is taking in spreading a knowledge of the church and its work to larger and ever larger numbers of people.—EDITOR.

Many questions are being asked concerning the Auditorium and the number of visitors who are shown through the building.

In June, 824 visitors registered. In addition it is estimated that 178 did not register for want of time, and 153 business men came for specific purposes. July recorded a noticeable increase in visitors. Nine hundred and ninety registered in the reception room. Approximately 230 did not sign, and 189 business men came to the building on special business.

The month of August registered 1,365, the largest number of the season. From 350 to 400 did not register, and about 230 salesmen called on business matters. The geographical distribution of the home States of the visitors during August is interesting: Missouri led with 560, Kansas followed with 142, and Iowa was close behind with 102. Other States were represented as follows: Utah, 74; Texas, 28; Illinois, 60; Ohio, 37; California, 21; Tennessee, 19; Michigan, 26; Arkansas, 20; New York, 14; Indiana, 36; Nebraska, 42; Colorado, 18; South Dakota, 16; Wyoming, 12; and Washington, District of Columbia, 8. Nearly every State in the Union was represented. There were also three visitors from England, three from Holland, and nine from Canada. There was a slight decrease in September, 1,125 registering, over 275 not registering, and 316 business or professional men coming for business reasons. In October there was a decrease in numbers from the September registry, but 882 is a surprising number when we remember that the school and other vacations were over. Over 260 did not register, and 136 business men called at the different offices.

In November, 735 reported to the guide. Over 225 did not register for the lack of time, and 165 business appointments were made. During this month on Sundays the crowds were unusually large and taxed the corps of guides to the utmost. At one time there were two guides, each of whom were conducting a group of about 65 visitors. This was one of the reasons why so many did not register.

The foregoing statistics showing the number visiting the building do not include all, for over 892 school children came here during the fall festival. Thousands came every day and night during this festival. High school crowds for miles around Independence came into the building led by their teachers. The Gold Star Mothers, who were having a convention in Kansas City, numbering 300, came for a banquet. Thousands have been here for pageants, plays, political meetings, and other gatherings. These thousands are telling other thousands, and I dare say the number of guides will need to be increased next summer. Mr. Kelley, the distributing agent for the Kansas City Star, said, "When your church completes the building of the Auditorium, you will have five times as many people as you now get to visit the building."

Hints for Speakers and Writers

BE BRIEF

By L. L.

He is a good writer who knows what to say; he is a genius who knows what to omit.

"Brevity is the soul of wit," ran the old proverb at a time when wit still meant intelligence.

There are many names for the fault of writing too long, and all of them have a disagreeable sound: verbosity, prolixity, redundance, tautology, and others.

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver," say the Proverbs. But Matthew records Jesus as saying, "But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

The first principle of art is selection. The scribe may write a thousand statements on his subject. The scholar will select the ten most important things, and say them well. He says what is necessary; he says it clearly; but he says no more.

All who would learn to write well should heed the advice of the poem printed last year in the Herald:

If you have a thing to say,
Cut it down!
Something you must write today,
Cut it down.
Let your words be short and few,
Aim to make them clear and true,
Monosyllables will do.
Cut it down!

Are you writing for the press?
Cut it down!
Make it half or even less,
Cut it down!
Editors like pithy prose,
Lengthy letters are their foes,
Take a hint from "One Who Knows,"
Cut it down. —Grenville Kleiser.

The Unfinished Work of Christianity

By John Zimmermann, Jr.

He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name.—John 1: 10-12.

Now it happens that the great Teacher in the lesson he gave his disciples said, "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." And then he goes on to state the issues upon which men shall be judged and their lives evaluated.

What is the character of this judgment? What are the determining factors in the approbation or rejection of the judged? To the righteous, he said, "I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me."

The Law of the Golden Rule

And the wicked are condemned, because they have not done these things. The context shows that the virtue of the righteous does not consist in the rendering of these specific services to the judge himself. The construction is indeed very liberal. Evidently such acts of kindness and mercy, to even the least of his brethren, is what is covered in the judgment. The golden rule covers it all. This is the "law and the prophets."

Approval is to be given to a certain kind of character which is defined as having done something, and the condemnation is to fall upon those who have come short of filling these rather simple requirements.

How does it happen that the world has wandered so far from such standards of righteousness? Why is it that the standard for examination in this world is so different in character from what is indicated by the Great Teacher?

There never has been a time when the business world as a whole believed that business could be carried on with success by following the golden rule. It is probably true that many men who serve as managers in our shops and factories would be unable to succeed with such a policy. And yet it is certainly true that many of our labor troubles might be averted if superintendents understood human nature better. It is probably too much to expect that they shall all be philosophers.

And yet there are managers working hundreds of men who never strike, and the secret is simply this:

without making any formal announcement of such a policy, they run their shops on the golden rule.

I was reading the other day of a manager who had spent a considerable sum of his company's money in paying the wages and surgical attendance of a poor boy—the only support of a widowed mother—while he recovered from an injury. There was no obligation to do this; the injury had been received in rough play during the noon hour. But he had found the boy making a brave effort to work when he should have been in a surgeon's hands. The boy pleaded to be allowed to continue his work because of the needs of his mother. But the manager sent him home, engaged a surgeon to care for him, told him his wages would continue, and the company paid the bills.

He explained that he preferred to treat his men in this way, because it gave him pleasure to do so, and he had convinced his company that he could make it pay. He made each man feel that he was a friend, and consequently they gave him hearty and enthusiastic service. This same man, during a strike in which his men did not take part, is quoted as having said, "I don't want any soldiers. My men will defend our works."

The Kind of Character Required

To be capable of such things requires qualities that all men do not possess. I do not think this man was following this policy merely because he thought it his duty to do so, nor do I think he was seeking profits in this world or rewards in the future world. He was doing it in response to his own personal instincts. It was a kind of action which was characteristic of him as a man. This man was a real captain of industry.

In estimating the value of such men to society, it must be admitted that one who does right because he knows it is right, is capable of much greater things than one who is continually tempted to do wrong and who succeeds in resisting the temptation.

The musician who for the first time plays a grand harmony must give continual attention to each succession of simultaneously sounded notes. But he very soon plays it without conscious effort, and then he begins to feel, and can give musical expression to the tumults of passion, the bursts of divine exaltation which swept the soul of the composer, and which his music can awaken in those who hear.

And just so the man or woman who has learned to engage in good works, to lend a helping hand, to share the sorrows of the unfortunate and stricken ones of earth, to comfort and encourage the broken hearted, that person, I say, is beginning to appreciate the great symphonies of eternal life.

We are told that "eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." Does it require too much of a stretch of the imagination to grasp the fact that the keynote of this great symphony was struck in the simple mandate of the Master, "Love thy neighbor as thyself"?

The Story of the Holy Grail

Some of you may be familiar with the stories that have been told concerning the quest for the Holy Grail. You will recall that the Holy Grail was the cup from which the Savior administered the sacrament just before his death and crucifixion. James Russell Lowell relates a story in The Vision of Sir Launfal, about a brave knight who started upon this search and was stopped at the very gates of his castle by a crippled beggar who held out a tin cup and entreated the knight to fill it with water at a spring nearby. But the knight had a very important errand, and he could not tarry, and so he brushed the beggar aside and hurried on. I will not burden you with the details of the story. Suffice it to say that after years of fruitless search, after much suffering and sickness and privation and sorrow, this knight returned home, a wiser and a humbler man. And at the gateway of his castle once more he found the crippled beggar. But this time he did not ignore the plaintive petition of the suffering one. Years and years of his own sorrow had taught him the lesson of love. And getting down from his horse, he took the cup and filled it at the spring. But as he passed it to the stranger, a great change took place. It seemed as if a cloud had passed from before his eyes and there before him stood the Savior, and in His hand He held the Holy Grail!

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me!"

In our search for the great things of the kingdom, let us be careful that we do not ignore the humbler brother of Jesus Christ, who may be sitting upon our doorsteps.

Artificial Incentives to Righteousness

There are two artificial incentives which prompt some people to do right. The first is the fear of punishment. It is sad, but none the less true, that many people in this world refrain from deeds of evil simply because of their fear of being apprehended and dealt with according to their misconduct. But the Son of Man has taught us that he who refrains from wrongdoing merely from fear of punishment is still a wrongdoer in the moral sense. He is a standing threat against society. He is continually planning to do the wrong and elude the officers of the law. The Savior said, "As a man thinketh, so is he." The evolution of the divine character within us is probably the result of thought much more than of action.

Another class of people are prompted to do the right in the hope of a promised reward. Such people remind me of the old broken-down race horse who was goaded on to run his last race by waving before his eyes a bundle of hay. Such a plane of ethics is somewhat higher than that occupied by those who refrain from wrongdoing to avoid punishment, nevertheless it is not a high plane of ethics.

The idea of securing the favor of heaven by barter or as a sort of bounty money upon the delivery of good deeds done here is repulsive to us all. That kind of inducement to righteousness may be suited to a certain grade of moral development. It may still appeal to many who must be reached, who must raise themselves to this level before they can reach a higher level.

But the followers of Christ do not live in the fear or favor of the law, but in the love of God. The doing of deeds of love and mercy has become a part of their natures. They do right because they are right-doing people. They are not tempted by those things which tempt depraved wretches. They can not be. They have become like their divine Master. They have begun to develop the character to which he urged his disciples when he said to them, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

Men who are under the law, who must be repressed and controlled by mandatory influence from without, can not understand this injunction. Former ages have ignored it because they did not understand it. But what a world of meaning it has to him who has learned to live in the love of Christ and his fellow man. He may not be perfect in all things, but he is surely well on the road. The man who shares the sorrows of the poor, who lightens the burdens of the weary and the heavy laden, and who does such deeds not merely because he considers it his duty to do so, not because he is bargaining under the divine law for heavenly favors, but because it has become his nature to do them—I say that man has reached the divine heights.

And how do the frivolities of fashionable society with its endless round of anxieties about nothing, how do the ambitions and the successes of the Mammon worshiper shrivel into nothingness as we contemplate such a career—the career of him who goes about doing good?

I recall a story that our old high school principal, Doctor Thompson, used to tell. The tale is of eastern origin, coming from a Moslem tribe called the Soofis. It seems that a certain king while hunting in the forest met a woman carrying a lighted torch and a pitcher of water. He asked what these were for, and she replied, "To quench the fires of hell and to burn up heaven, that men may love God without fear of punishment or hope of reward."

I believe it was John Greenleaf Whittier who first asked the question, "Can heaven itself be heaven and look unmoved on hell?"

And it is doubtful in the mind of the author if there be a condition of supernal bliss and contentment as long as there remain a single soul in trouble or in need. It seems to me that God himself would leave the place and go out to search for the lost one.

The evolution of the divine character among the busy masses of men, each struggling with the problems of his own life, each of necessity a minute part of a civilization constantly changing in its character and growing in complexity goes on by slow degrees.

These grand precepts of the greatest of teachers have been working in men's minds and hearts for nearly 2,000 years, and still there is work for them to do. The uplifting of humanity into godlikeness is not the work of a day. It is a growth, which in the individual and in society continues as long as growth of any kind is possible. In the individual it continues through life. In society it lasts through the ages.

We hear doleful tales of corruption and fraud in business, in politics, and in business politics, or political business. Such evils can never be cured by political revolutions or by replacing the rule of one party by that of another. It can be done only by means of education—education that begins at home and in the family. It can be done only gradually by replacing men who do right from fear of punishment or from hope of some personal advantage, by men who do right because they are the kind of men who do right; who do right as the meadow lark sings its own song, and is never tempted to croak like a full frog. The man who must be bribed to do right is in danger of being bribed or hired to do wrong. With him it is merely a question of price.

The Place of the Moral Sense

Society has assumed the right, and it necessarily possesses the power to punish those whose moral sense has not been quickened into self-control. But the laws of the state lay no hand on the murderers who have not found their opportunity, or upon the thieves who have not stolen. They make no distinction between those who refrain from crime from fear of punishment, those who are deterred by the hope of some kind of reward, and those who are not criminals.

It is most demoralizing to society that the idea has become current and is given general credence, that while stolen property is under some circumstances evidence of guilt, it is not always so; that when the property is very valuable and the thieves very influential, possession of such property is nine points in the law of defense for permanent ownership.

The educational side of such proceedings is by far the most important element in the matter to every citizen. It far outweighs any mere matter of dollars and cents that may be involved.

The law of the state, so far as it touches the question of good and evil, demands simply that the citizen shall do no wrong to his brother. It does not touch the questions of righteousness upon their affirmative side.

It seems that even in ecclesiastical history, men have been approached by such appeals as they were able to grasp. Rewards have been offered to the righteous, and if we go back far enough we find a lower standard, because men were on a lower plane.

Certainly one could hardly conceive of a more businesslike proposition than is contained in the vow of the patriarch Jacob. When he was seeking a wife and had the dream of the ladder which reached to heaven, he made a vow in which he said, "If God will be with me and will help me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God. And this stone that I have set up for a pillar shall be God's house, and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give a tenth unto thee."

Here we have one who seeks to secure divine favor in return for specific service. It may be that even such service will not be rejected, but what a fathomless gulf there is between such a spirit and that to which the Son of Man appealed when he said, "Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," with no fear of punishment, no thought of reward, but as a result of having partaken of the divine nature. For moral grandeur, what is there on earth to compare with this? It appeals to the noblest instincts of mankind. It contains within itself the germs of all that is best in individual life and character. It is a promise of endless growth through generations yet unborn. It is the greatest and most inspiring sentence that ever fell upon human ears.

The law of the state with its threats of punishment forces us upward and away from the lowest depths. It is like the pushing locomotive at the rear of a train of cars. Ecclesiastical law also has its threats of punishment; but by its promises of reward, men are drawn to higher moral levels. In this respect it is like the pulling locomotive at the head of the train. There is no mechanical distinction between a push from below and a pull from above. Both are artificial incentives, of a rather low order, imposed upon the individual from without and tending to lift him to higher moral and ethical planes, but—

To be perfect as God is perfect, is to be an intellectual and moral prime mover, equipped with one's own machinery, vitalized, energized, and made active by the fires of eternal truth!

Hot Drinks

By H. O. Smith

I believe that the term hot drinks, as found in section 86 of Doctrine and Covenants, means tea and coffee, and that it means nothing else but tea and coffee, or at least it meant nothing else at the time the section was given. The following are my reasons for adhering to my belief that the term quoted means tea and coffee.

The Word "Hot"

A persistent effort has been made to make it include other drinks as well as tea and coffee that are taken hot. I am told that I can not take hot soup without violating the Word of Wisdom; that I can not drink a cup of hot water or any other kind of drink and escape condemnation. I knew a man once whose eyes were afflicted in such a way that he could see but one object, and if he turned his gaze the slightest degree to the one side or the other, that object would disappear and another would take its place, because it would be in line with his narrowed vision. It seems that the most of those, if not all, who treat this question of "hot drinks" are afflicted with this trouble. They can see but the one word, hot, standing out in clearness. All other words are indistinct to their view, and in their estimation the temperature is the only injurious thing to be considered.

Hot Toddy

A recent writer has introduced the idea that the term might mean "hot toddy," but according to his formula the principal ingredient of the drink is either whisky or brandy, or at least one of these ingredients is one of the beverages named, thereby making God repeat himself where he mentions strong drink as not being good for the stomach of man, but good only for the washing of the body. A wiser, or perhaps I should say a more careful and discerning, writer puts it this way:

There is no doubt in our mind that the term hot drinks was intended to include tea and coffee. True, the words tea and coffee do not appear, yet they are covered by the general term. In a similar way, whisky and brandy are not specifically named, yet their use is discouraged under the clause which refers to strong drink.—Elbert A. Smith, in Saints' Herald, vol. 69, p. 1115.

It is no use, then, to try to avoid the issue by asserting that it might mean any form of drink wherein any of those beverages known as strong drinks are a part. That would be charging God with folly and needless repetition.

Reasons for My Belief

My parents were both members of the church in the days of Joseph the Martyr, my mother being the daughter of Lyman Wight, one of the apostles at the death of the founder of the church, and they taught me that the term in question meant tea and coffee, and my father was a strict observer of the Word of Wisdom as he understood it. I do not think that I ever saw him drink a cup of coffee or tea. My mother used it moderately, but did not attempt to excuse herself by claiming that it was doubtful if tea and coffee were meant. Both father and mother asserted that the question was never raised, until years after the revelation was given, in regard to the meaning of the term hot drinks, but it was universally accepted as meaning tea and coffee.

My grandmother, the widow of Lyman Wight, lived with me and my wife for a number of years after we were married, and she corroborated the statement of my father and mother, thus confirming me in the belief that this term meant tea and coffee. She was in Kirtland at the time the revelation was received and knew of personal knowledge what it was considered to mean.

History Confirms

After I began the study of church history, I discovered that the teaching of my parents and my maternal grandmother was confirmed. By consulting the Church History, I find that the Word of Wisdom was given "on Wednesday, February 27, 1833." I find nothing that would indicate that the preface to that document was inspired, and the man who undertakes to hide behind the statement "not by commandment or constraint" is taking rather unsafe grounds upon which to stand, if we are to believe subsequent history on the question as an indication as to how the church regarded the matter. As stated, the Word of Wisdom was given February 27, 1833. In the same month, and the twentieth day, 1834, not quite a year after, the high council assembled to consider a question concerning the violation of this document. I will let Joseph Smith himself tell the tale:

Kirtland, February 20, 1834.

The high council met this evening to determine concerning the elders going out to preach, etc. The President opened the council by prayer.

At a church meeting held in Pennsylvania, Erie County, and Springfield Township, by Orson Pratt and Lyman Johnson, high priests, some of the members of that church refused to partake of the sacrament, because the elder administering it did not observe the Words of Wisdom to obey them. Elder Johnson argued that they were justified in so doing, because the elder was in transgression. Elder Pratt argued that the church was bound to receive the supper under the administration of an elder, so long as he retained his office or license. Voted that six counselors should speak upon the subject.

The council then proceeded to try the question, whether disobedience to the Word of Wisdom was a transgression sufficient to deprive an official member from holding an office in the church, after having it sufficiently taught him.

Councilors Samuel H. Smith, Luke Johnson, John S. Carter, Sylvester Smith, John Johnson, and Orson Hyde were called to speak upon the case then before the council. After the councilors had spoken, the President proceeded to give a decision:

That no official member in this church is worthy to hold an office, after having the Words of Wisdom properly taught to him, and he the official member neglecting to comply with or obey them; which decision the council confirmed by vote.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 434.

There is nothing stated in the history as to the extent the Word of Wisdom was violated in this instance, neither is the particular offense named. It may have been that the elder was addicted to strong drink or tobacco, but whatever the offense it is certain that "constraint" was exercised in this instance, and the party was considered in transgression of law or commandment, and the man through whom the revelation was given rendered the decision. Were he and his councilors wrong? If so, then the Reorganization is in error in passing resolutions unfrocking their ministers for using tobacco and strong drink, for these are two of the articles condemned by the Word of Wisdom that are not to be taken as a "commandment or constraint."

I now turn to volume 2, page 113, Church History, and find the following:

About May 28, 1837, at a general meeting of the church, the following was passed: Resolved, unanimously, that we will not fellowship any ordained member who will not or does not observe the Word of Wisdom according to its literal reading.

Turning to page 120 of the volume of Church History from which I have just quoted, I find what the Saints of those days considered the "literal reading" or meaning of the Word of Wisdom. The narrative is as follows:

The congregation, after a few remarks from Sidney Rigdon, unanimously voted not to support stores and shops selling spirituous liquors, tea, coffee, or tobacco.

The charges against David Whitmer included the charge that he would not obey the Word of Wisdom, but violated its provisions. It is not stated just what part of the word was violated, but it is evident from the resolution just quoted that they considered tea and coffee as part of that word, and it was number one in the itemized charges against him.

Hyrum Smith's Statement

I stated in my book, Talks about Joseph Smith, that it was reported that Hyrum Smith had stated in a sermon in Nauvoo, hot drinks meant tea and coffee. This has been made light of, and the recent writer whom I have quoted has this to say: "Some one has said that some one else has said that Hyrum Smith said that it meant tea and coffee." It is admitted that if Hyrum Smith did say it, he was good authority. Well, if we are to credit the record, Hyrum Smith did say it, and said it publicly in Nauvoo. If the reader will take the trouble to go to the public library of the church and look in Times and Seasons, volume 3, page 800, he will find the statement. So it is not based on what "some one has said that some one else has said that Hyrum Smith said," etc. The statement is found in no less than three places in the publications of the church; first in the place just quoted, then in Saints' Herald for April 1, 1914, and republished in Saints' Herald of November 29, 1922, these last two articles from the pen of President Elbert A. Smith. The quotation reads:

And again, "Hot drinks are not for the body, or belly." There are many who wonder what this can mean; whether it refers to tea and coffee, or not. I say it does refer to tea and coffee.—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 800.

My parents, and others who told me of the above instance, always asserted that Hyrum Smith used the words "in the name of the Lord" after the words "I say" in the above quotation, but he is not made to use these words in the above quotation. As he had been one of the Presidency, and at the time this sermon was preached was the Presiding Patriarch of the church, his word should be considered as having great weight, especially when it is confirmed by history.

A Convention in Hades

A FANTASY

By an Unwilling Delegate

I had strayed from the straight path. I had not gone many steps away when the winding path I had chosen led at such a sharp angle from the narrow way that when I woke up to consider my position I discovered that I had a long, hard fight to get my feet back into the beaten path of rectitude.

As punishment for my carelessness, the Judge-of-All-the-Earth decreed that I should spend certain days in hell. Those days of despair can not be described in words. At the end of the allotted period, positive though I was that never again would I be tempted to stray from the conventional path of the good, the Judge-of-All-the-Earth, concerned for my safety and to make certainty doubly sure, dispatched me to Hades for a visit. Heretofore, you understand, I had not left the earth. Hell is a condition that may be suffered at any location on the earth.

Stealthily I slipped into the audience chamber of the nether regions, sneaking like a thief lest I be seen in such a place. Scarcely had I gained a dusky corner when there followed me into the high-vaulted chamber, a black-winged messenger, just returned from the world above.

The messenger entered on swift, winged feet, but came to a sudden, sliding stop in the center of the silent room, staring in amazement, as I was doing. His Satanic Majesty sat, tilted comfortably back on his throne, those famous, cloven feet of his protruding grotesquely over the edge of the high desk before him. For once the master of turbulence was caught napping.

Not for long, however, was the quiet of the place unbroken. In a moment after the evil eyes had opened upon the messenger, the room filled with imps of all sizes and colors, from the deepest black to a dirty gray that tried to look white.

"Speak!" roared the voice of authority.

"I bring bad news," the messenger began his tale. "Some one has been sleeping on the job." He cast a sidewise glance at His Majesty.

"Never mind your cheap humor. Get down to business," his master commanded surlily.

"Very well, then," the messenger agreed. "I found things in general running along smoothly. Prohibition is still a mooted question; youth still flames and age gets gay. The boys detailed to the routine work have stayed on the job. Those detailed to destroy the sanctity of the marriage covenant have probably done the neatest job of any of them. I don't know but those boys are going to turn the trick. They've made a good start."

"I don't see any bad news about that," one of the foremost imps remarked. "What's all this holler about bad news anyway, waking us up and making such a disturbance when everything is going fine?"

"Fine, is it, you say? How about the church?"

"Oh, the church, is it? The churches aren't usually such a problem these days. They pretty well take care of themselves with their petty quarrels, their gossip, their jealousy of each other, and their holier-than-thou attitude. You've had a pipe dream."

"Then put this in your pipe and smoke it," the messenger said angrily. "There is a general religious awakening among the people. Not just the ignorant and excitable people, but people of education and influence are turning to the church as a solution of the world problems. Churches are saying that there will be a great religious revival this year. In fact, it has already started."

"It is time we got on the job," His Majesty said indifferently, "but it will be easily handled. "How about the saints? Have they recovered yet from the jolt they got a few years back?"

"They are fast recovering, I should say. They are leading in this revival with their individual missionary work, their decision days, and their complete-the-family-circle drive. Recently they had their centennial celebration, and it looks like a big step forward for them while we sit here resting on past laurels."

"We are not entirely resting on past laurels." His Majesty spoke with some dignity but with an evil leer; it seemed directed toward my corner. "I have been looking forward to this time for ages and have been preparing for it. We had our invisible delegate at the centennial conference. But the church is on its guard there. In fact, it is a part of my present plans to let the church prosper, let them think they are accomplishing wonders. The thing we must do now is to follow their lead and do more personal work. 'Wreck the family circle,' will be our motto."

"That means a lot of work," one imp complained. "It is much easier to get something started in a big way and then go off and let them fight it out. This way means small jobs and constant work."

"Good! You have the right idea, my lad. "We'll let you in on the job. You see, the thing we must do is to make trouble between husbands and wives, and between children and their parents—anything that will wreck homes. Let the church go on with its work and think it is doing fine and getting near to perfection. Then let it discover that it is weakening at the core, at the very heart of the organization, the home."

"But these people are shy on that subject. Their standard has always been high. They are nearly impossible to reach in that way," the discontented imp complained while all of the others nodded assent.

"It is because their standards are so high that they will be easy to reach. You don't have to get them to 'go the limit' as these mortals so glibly express it—just a suggestion of off color is enough to ruin them. Don't be bashful, boys; go after the know-it-alls as well as the little fellows. They are on their guard in public matters, but it is so long since they have had to fight the stigma of polygamy that they have come to consider themselves impregnable along these lines. Now is the time to hit. I have been working up to it for a long time. Oh, you will find the stage ready. There is this new freedom between the sexes. It is not a bad thing. In fact, they can accomplish much more by working together than they could possibly in the old segregated fashion. But I have encouraged the idea and tried to get them to go just a little too far. Anything that works well for good work is just as effective for my work. Then there is all this talk about—be free, let yourself go—express yourself rather than repress. Yes, you will find conditions ripe for your attack. I haven't been so much asleep as some would have you believe."

Those dark, evil faces had been growing more and more serious and ugly to look upon. With an hypnotic smile the Evil Genius looked over his helpers. "It means a lot of work, but we can do it. There isn't a lot of time left. I have been saving this stunt as a final exhibition of my power. It shall be done. Now—GO!"

In a twinkling the room was empty except for the occupant of the throne and myself. He smiled his twisted smile and rubbed his hands, complacently licking his lips already over the commotion he was about to stir up in the ranks of dignified sanctity.

Suddenly the smirk left the great schemer's face. He cocked his head to one side to catch the faint sound which drifted softly but persistently into the dark confines.

"God speed the right." So humbly sincere were the words sung by the church that they penetrated even to these lower regions.

His Satanic Majesty ground his teeth, and his brow clouded ominously. I shrank further back into my corner. Before him floated the vision—hateful, maddening—of the glorious heights these mortals might attain could they but keep their eyes fixed on the goal.

"Go on," he shouted; "speed the right. I will lose out in the end, I know. That is written. But before the end comes there will be some pretty victories on my side of the ledger." He smiled a wry smile, for he knew his power as well as his limitations.

I crept from the evil presence and gratefully breathed the clean outer air. When I felt the hard-beaten path of the narrow way again beneath my feet, I rejoiced and did not long for the winding paths that beckoned me aside. And when I felt the bright sunshine of God's forgiveness and favor, I lifted my face to it, glad that no cloud or shadow intervened. And my eyes I kept steadily forward upon the goal which I was determined to reach. I did not miss the crimson flowers which had tempted me to stray, for day by day there opened before me new beauties.

An "If" for Ministers

If you can show the young men how to wrestle
With flesh and blood, and how to buck the line,
And at the same time be a chosen vessel
Filled to the brim with love and power divine;
If you can please the modernists who hear you,
And give them sermons fully up-to-date,
Can calm the fundamentalists who fear you,
And make them think that you are truly great;
If you can speak so loud that Deacon Purvus
Will hear distinctly every word you say,
Yet speak so softly that poor Mrs. Nervous
Will not be driven by your noise away;

If you can uniformly preach with unction
No matter whether stocks are up or down,
Can show up well at every social function,
And yet on Sunday look swell in a gown;
If you know how to kiss the little babies
And tell each mother hers is just too sweet,
Can cater to the Has-beens and the Maybes,
And be hail-fellow-well-met on the street;
If you can boast a wife who's never weary
Of making calls and doing parish work,
Who plays and sings and has a voice that's cheery,
Is never sick and never known to shirk;

If you have children who are an example
To all the other parish girls and boys,
Who never scold, nor answer back, nor trample
The neighbor's lawns, nor make unseemly noise;
Added to this, if you have good digestion,
And liver trouble never makes you blue,
Can answer promptly every Bible question,
I think, "perhaps," my brother, you may do.
—Charles Dood Crane, in The Congregationalist.

Gibbons' account of the Emperor Gallienus is instructive: "He was master of several curious but useless sciences, a ready orator, an eloquent poet, a skillful gardener, an excellent cook, and a most contemptible prince." This might describe many of our spiritual lives. We are everything and nothing—everything, and "most contemptible" Christians.—E. Stanley Jones, in The Christ of Every Road.

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Jesus and His Message

A QUARTERLY BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS

Reviewed by C. B. W.

Many adult classes in all parts of the church are looking forward with keen anticipation to this production. Sister Salyards has been a life-long student, a clear thinker, and an able writer, editor, and teacher. Forty years and more she has given herself without reservation to the preparation of lesson material for the Sunday school. Undoubtedly her lessons, in all these years, have wielded a tremendous influence in the constructive religious thinking of the masses of the church, young and old. We are fortunate in the mental and physical ability which permits Sister Salyards to continue her task.

A group of lessons centering about the life and message of the Master are now being printed and bound in book form. With characteristic richness and beauty of expression the lessons carry a message of truth and love and power rarely to be found in quarterly lessons.

Adult students and older young people will welcome these lessons bound in book form. They will be convenient for class study and as a source of ready reference later in one's library. This text is prepared as one of a series forming a continuous course of several volumes dealing with the gospel message as found in the standard books of the church.

Jesus and His Message, a year of lessons bound in book form, makes a splendid addition to our religious educational literature. It may be used as a class text Sunday morning, Sunday evening, or for week-day groups. It may be studied individually or by a class for certification credit. It is one of the best texts yet prepared in its field for priesthood study.

Bound in cloth, postpaid $1.00. In paper, $0.75.

The Ministry of the Women

By John Blackmore, Director of Adult Division

The church is more than a group of baptized people living individual religious lives. In essence and spirit it is a family whose members are closely bound together by the ties of a sacred fellowship. The church is also a religious group adventuring in the work of social pioneering.

The women have in the past been in the vanguard of the progressive march of the church. They have often kindled the fires of religious fervor in our homes, and kept the spark of spiritual life in many congregations alive. These faithful women have worked to assist the men to purchase the lot of ground upon which the small chapel—their church home—was built. They have courageously borne their share of the burden and cost of the new building. Their ministering hands have comforted and brought cheer to the sick. By their constant stitch, stitch, old and worn clothes have been transformed into warm garments for the needy of the church. They have worked side by side with the men of the priesthood in the spiritual ministry of teaching the gospel to those—adults and children—who did not understand. They have worked together and with God for the building of the kingdom.

The organized ministry of the women of the church should not cease. Every branch should have an organized group of women studying and working to improve their individual and combined ministry. Affiliated with the adult division of the church school, the women will organize in a satisfactory manner into work and study groups, thus enabling them to carry forward their constructive work of the past. More religious education is derived from rich experiences of constructive work and in the acts of practical ministry than has ever been secured from a course in theory.

Under the "unified plan" of organization, adequate provision has been made for the corporate ministry of the women. Every adult division supervisor of the church school should see to it that work and study groups of the women are organized in a satisfactory manner.

Church School Worship

SUGGESTIONS FOR FEBRUARY

By Mrs. H. A. Gould, Kansas City

The following outlines provide materials from which local worship programs may be builded. The services should be brief, not over fifteen or twenty minutes. Study to develop a feeling of reverence and to encourage real participation in worship. If class work is to follow, let the worship period serve as the opening part of the church school session.

In addition to our own books, the following four source books from which materials are taken will be used in these programs throughout the year. If possible, at least one copy of each should be purchased for the use of leaders.

Story Worship Programs, Stowell, $1.50.

Worship for Youth, Stacy, $1.50.

Knights of Service, Bradshaw, 85 cents.

New Hymnal for American Youth, Smith, $1.15.

Order from Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

THEME FOR FEBRUARY: "OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER"

FEBRUARY 1

Theme: "Forward with Christ."

1. Instrumental Prelude.

2. Call to Worship:

"God of the nations near and far,
Ruler of all mankind,
Bless thou thy people as they strive,
The path of peace to find."

3. Prayer. That we may help bring about a sympathetic understanding between nations, our brother's keeper indeed.

4. Hymn: "Onward to Zion," President F. M. Smith.

5. Theme Talk: Christ said, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." If we would go forward with Christ, we must assist all men of all nations to go forward with Christ.

"Of all things beautiful and good,
The kingliest is brotherhood;
For it will bring again to earth
Her long-lost poesy and mirth;
And till it comes these men are slaves,
And travel downward to the dust of graves.
Clear the way, then, clear the way;
Blind creeds and kings have had their day.
Break the dead branches from the path;
Our hope is in the aftermath,
To this event the ages ran:
Make way for brotherhood—make way for man."
—New Hymnal for American Youth.

6. Hymn: "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," Saints' Hymnal, 52.

7. Scripture Readings: Revelation 14: 6, 7, and Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

8. Story: "Rachel and David," in Story Worship Programs, page 71, or "Doctor A. L. Shelton," in Worship for Youth, page 107.

9. Hymn: Quartet or solo or choir number, "In Christ

There Is No East or West," New Hymnal for American Youth, 299.

10. Sentence Prayer.
11. Offering. Appropriate quiet music.
12. Hymn: "Anywhere with Jesus I Can Safely Go," Praises, 19.
13. Prayer.
14. Class Work.

Theme: "The Call of Brotherhood."

1. Instrumental Prelude.
2. Call to worship. Solo, "Come to the House of Prayer," Hymnal, 126.
3. Prayer.
4. Hymn. "Let Us Go to the House of the Lord," Praises 119.
5. Theme Talk: One of the most urgent calls that comes to us today is that of brotherhood. Christ's life was a challenge to brotherhood. The gospel of Christ is the best answer to, and the only solution to the world's needs. In a few days we will commemorate the birthday of Abraham Lincoln. He had the fine courage to stand against all odds for brotherhood. As the poet writes:

"Up from log cabin to the Capitol,
One fire was on his spirit, one resolve—
To send the keen ax to the root of wrong,
Clearing a free way for the feet of God,
The eyes of conscience testing every stroke,
To make his deed the measure of a man.
He built the rail pile as he built the state,
Pouring his splendid strength through every blow:
The grip that swung the ax in Illinois
Was on the pen that set a people free.

"So came the Captain with the mighty heart;
And when the judgment thunders split the house,
Wrenching the rafters from their ancient rest,
He held the ridge pole up, and spiked again
The rafters of the Home. He held his place—
Held the long purpose like a growing tree—
Held on through blame and faltered not at praise,
And when he fell in whirlwind, he went down
As when a lordly cedar, green with boughs,
Goes down with a great shout upon the hills,
And leaves a lonesome place against the sky."

6. Hymn: "Jesus Is Calling," Praises 111.
7. Scripture Reading: John 1: 11-18.
8. Story: "Abraham Lincoln," page 85 in Story Worship Programs.
9. Hymn: First and last verses of "The Old, Old Path," Praises, 207.
10. Sentence Prayer.
11. Offering. Solo, first two verses of "Forward through the Ages," New Hymnal for American Youth, 263.
12. Hymn: "Loving Each Other," Praises, 83.
13. Prayer.
14. Class Work.

FEBRUARY 15

Theme: "The Worth of Friendship"

1. Instrumental Prelude: Medley of hymns.
2. Call to Worship:
"Make a joyful noise unto Jehovah, all ye lands,
Sing forth honor to his name,
Make his praise glorious,
Let all nations be glad and sing for joy."
3. Prayer. That we may appreciate the true worth of friendship.
4. Hymn: "You May Sing of the Beauty of Mountain and Dale," Hymnal, 168, verses 1, 2, 3.

5. Theme Talk: If we would be our brother's keeper, we would extend a sincere friendship unto him, and thus be able to serve better, as we serve our friends best.

"Where true love bestows its sweetness,
Where true friendship lays its hand,
Dwells all greatness, all completeness,
All the wealth of every land."

6. Scripture Reading: John 15: 12-18.
7. Hymn: "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life," solo or choir.
8. Reading: "The Making of an Anarchist," Worship for Youth, Stacy, page 180.
9. Hymn:

"Let us all be brothers, brothers of the world,
With the flag of friendship, from the heart unfurled
Smile and keep on smiling, over land and sea,
Make the whole world brothers, brothers you and me."

10. Sentence Prayer.
11. Offering. Appropriate quiet music.
12. Concluding Thought:
"Lord, what change within us one short hour
Spent in thy presence, will avail to make;
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take;
We kneel, how weak! We rise, how full of power!"
13. Hymn: "I Have Found a Friend in Jesus," Praises, 120.
14. Prayer.
15. Class Work.

Theme: "Reflecting the Love of God"

1. Prelude: "Holy, Holy, Holy," Praises, 131, words to be read by the leader while the music is played softly on the piano.
2. Call to Worship: "The hour cometh and now is when true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth, and the Father seeketh such to worship him."
3. Prayer. That we may reflect the love of God in our relations with all people.
4. Hymn: "Loving Each Other," Praises, 83.
5. Theme Talk: The opportunity is ours each day to reflect the love of God in our contact with our fellow men. Surely George Washington, whose birthday we commemorate today, must have reflected the love of God, to have merited the title, "The Father of His Country."

"There is a destiny that makes us brothers;
None goes his way alone;
All that we send into the lives of others
Comes back into our own."

6. Scripture Reading: Psalm 67.
7. Solo: "If I Can Stop One Heart from Breaking," New Hymnal for American Youth, 242.
8. Story, "George Washington," Story Worship Programs, by Stowell, page 87.
9. Hymn: "Come, Holy Ghost," Saints' Hymnal, 105, verses 1 and 4.
10. Sentence Prayer.
11. Offering. "Bless Thou the Gifts," solo or choir, New Hymnal for American Youth, 340.
12. Concluding Thought:

"God is love.
Each kindly word or deed of ours
Is God revealed.
Though varied they, the loves we know
Are sparks from his great fire of love, Revealing him."

13. Hymn: "Have a Heart of Kindness," Praises, 118.
14. Prayer.
15. Class Work.

The Sunday Morning Continuous Service

By C. B. W.

In recent months a new plan for the use of Sunday morning time has gained much favor. It has become quite obvious that to hold two or three separate services on Sunday forenoon, each constituting a unit by itself, each presided over by a different set of officers, and each with a program and objective of its own, does not make for unity, and is distracting and wasteful of time and energy. Too often there is seemingly little relation between the services, and frequently the intermission is a noisy time which seriously breaks into the reverent, worshipful attitude we are seeking to cultivate in all services. There is also a strong suggestion for one to leave the church house and to go home or elsewhere at the end of the first session, after a closing song and benediction.

A better idea is to unify the services of Sunday morning so that together they constitute a single unit, planned for beforehand and carried out with no loss of time and with a maximum of reverence and spiritual uplift.

The order in which the services occur is not especially important. Local conditions perhaps should govern. Usually the session opens with a church school worship period of ten or fifteen, and not more than twenty minutes. Suggestive plans and programs are published in the Herald. These must always be modified and worked into local plans. The local worship program must be carefully planned by those in charge and should flow smoothly and naturally. Best results are had when there is little or no announcement of parts. A copy of the program should be in the hands of all, or at least in the hands of those who are to take leading parts.

At the close of the worship period the transition to the next period should be made quietly, promptly, and in order. As much as possible the worship should have led up to the next service and prepared the people for active, earnest participation. In many places a reverent, meaningful worship service has taken the place of a hasty, scrappy "opening exercise."

If worship is followed by the class work of the church school, the further change to the preaching service at or near eleven o'clock may be made without serious interruption. There is no closing or dismissal. While reverent music is being played the choir and the ministry take their places, members of the audience may shift to their accustomed places for the sermon, all in the space of a few minutes, and the service moves on. If a junior service is held, a little longer period of change may be necessary for the younger ones to care for personal needs, and more movement should be provided to give some physical exercise.

Usually the continuous service plan results in a saving of time, such that the morning service may close a few minutes earlier than usual. This extra time may be used to splendid advantage for social converse in which friendly greetings are exchanged and good fellowship maintained. It is desirable, however, that loud talking and boisterous conduct be avoided.

The above described "continuous service" should not be confused with the "unified program" or the "new plan" of a single department of religious education. The terms used are so similar that some have misunderstood them.

The unified program of a single Department of Religious Education has reference to the change from separate programs of the three former departments, and the working out a single unified program of worship, study, work, and recreation, carrying throughout the week and meeting the needs of all the congregation.

The continuous service type has been favored by the general department of religious education, especially as it affects the conduct of the church school, and promises to increase the value of the total church experience.

Kansas City Young People Are Active

By E. E. C.

A recent report from Brother George Mesley, president of the Kansas City Stake O. B. K. Council, contains an excellent idea that could be developed by the young people of every local congregation. To teach obedience to the financial law of the church is one objective undertaken by the Department of Religious Education. Brother Mesley has probably gone further than most church school directors in introducing this practice into the regular activities of his young people's program.

We quote from his most stimulating letter:

"The inclosed chart will give you in graph form an idea of one phase of church activity in which our young people in Kansas City Stake are actively engaged. Using this chart as a talking basis, and the O. B. K. organization to stimulate group activity, Bishop Skinner and myself plan to teach the financial law in every group.

"While the total membership of the O. B. K. group (664) takes in everyone from 13 to 30, only about half of these qualify as active members.

"During 1930 the O. B. K.'s had set up a goal to have fifty per cent of their total membership contributing to local church expenses. In seven groups, Central, Fourth, Mount Washington, Gladstone, Chelsea, Malvern Hill, and Quindaro, the active members exceeded this percentage, and nine groups made a large increase in the total percentage of their members who contributed. In 1929, 142 O. B. K.'s contributed, $823 to their local church needs, and in 1930 there were 249 who gave $1,123 to the bishop's agents for local expenses. This giving was supplemented by regular church school and other special offerings.

"Contributing to the general church tithing funds in 1929, 165 O. B. K.'s paid $2,094. In 1930 a year of much unemployment among their number, 217 paid $2,075. Seven groups of active members, Mount Washington, North Kansas City, Chelsea, Gladstone, Heathwood, Malvern Hill, and Quindaro, passed the goal of fifty per cent, and ten churches increased the total per cent of their members contributing. Next year every group should be able to reach the goal set.

"At present we have a healthy six-team basket-ball league playing every week. We are getting ready for volley ball and tennis tournaments in the spring, and we have developed a keen interest in a one-act-play contest for February. These activities, we hope, are but stepping-stones toward a fuller and more whole-hearted support of the local church activities and general church program.

"We assure you of our desire to go forward."

Rules for Efficient Committees

Spokane, Washington

An impressive ceremony marked the installation of officers of the church school for 1931. The service was held Sunday, January 4, at 6.30 in the evening, Pastor Alma Andrews presiding and giving the charges first to the counselors, then to the three directors of the church school, next to the division supervisors, and finally to the teachers and workers in the school. Each group stood as it was addressed, and when all were standing they sang "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go." Officers installed were Elder W. W. Wood and Elder G. E. Ward, counselors; director of church school, H. E. Kinney; associate, Margaret Kenny; home visiting director, D. V. Coleman; supervisor of adult division, W. W. Wood; associate, Connie Silver; supervisor of young people, Arleigh Weeks; supervisor of children's division, Alice Kinne; musical director, Muriel Whiting; organist, Grace Nichols; clerk, Orpha Coleman; publicity agent, Millicent Kinney; orchestra leader, Myrtle Hunt; historian, Catherine Porter; librarian, Ethel Johnston.

The Messiah was greatly enjoyed by Saints in Spokane. A fine radio was installed in the church, and the reception of the oratorio was very clear. The solos were especially good, and all were happy to hear this musical masterpiece, which came to us over the Columbia Chain.

We are proud of our new black choir robes in which the choir made its first appearance for the vesper service the evening of December 21. This program consisted entirely of Christmas music in the form of solo, duet, quartet, trio, and chorus numbers from the choir. Instrumental numbers were supplied by the orchestra. Much credit is due the musicians of our branch for their consecrated efforts. One incentive for consistent practice was the thought of a chili supper promised by the leader. The chili was served at a "kid" party at the home of Brother and Sister Henry Kinney January 3. The branch musicians were on hand garbed in rompers and half socks. Rachel Porter, dressed as a French Doll, took the prize. Lysle Kinne, a typical "Percival," was awarded the prize offered the best representation of a small boy.

Another feature was a white Christmas service at which a special Christmas offering amounting to $40.25 was given.

On Christmas Eve the adult division, young people, and children's divisions were represented in a program. At the close Santa Claus appeared with huge sticks of candy for the children.

Little Barbara Ann arrived December 11 to gladden the hearts of her parents, Brother and Sister James Jones.

We are sorry to lose Brother and Sister Albert Nelson and Brother and Sister Clark Coleman, who recently moved to Portland, Oregon. We hope Portland Branch enjoys them as much as we did.

Lately another loss was suffered in the death of Elder George Johnston, a pillar in the branch for a number of years. All sympathize with Sister Johnston and the three daughters.

Spokane district institute held at the church in Spokane, December 5, 6, and 7, was one long to be remembered by those who attended. A fine representation of the district showed interest in the religious education classes conducted by Elder Daniel Sorden, of Portland, as well as the handcraft classes taught by Sister Alice Baldwin. Brother Baldwin's lectures were fine, as were Brother Curtis's sermons. A. C. Martin, district missionary, was present and did his share in making the institute a success.

The sacramental service Sunday morning was one which stands out among many others. Words of admonition, commendation, and comfort were given by the Spirit to the membership in general, to the district president, and to the conference appointees of the district. The experience was one which might be termed a Pentecostal shower.

At a special business session during the institute, the district officially adopted the church school plan and chose A. C. Martin as director. At this meeting the organization of the branch at Pasco, Washington, was authorized. At a special ordination service Sunday afternoon Brother Alvin Buckley was ordained an elder, and Brother Peter Peterson was ordained a priest. These ordinations will make it possible for W. W. Wood, who has been in charge of Pasco-Kennewick Branch, to devote his time entirely to Spokane Branch.

Prayer week was observed in Spokane with nightly prayer meetings held in the homes. From them we believe much benefit was received.

With the new plan for Religious Education inaugurated, and with a consecrated corps of officers and teachers, we are confident that this year will mean much in the way of spiritual development.

Madison, Wisconsin

219 Jackson Street

Elder Amos Berve spoke the evening of December 8 on "Various Trials."

We are glad to welcome back to Madison Brother Charles Clark's family. They were gone all summer.

The December sacramental service was spiritual and had a large number in attendance. The oblation amounted to more than ten dollars, and an offering was taken for the pastor to the sum of more than fourteen dollars.

December 10 the pastor called the people together for the election of officers. Our priesthood consists of three elders, two priests, one teacher, and two deacons. Orville Dahlem was elected financial agent and custodian of the church. Other officers are: Recording secretary and branch clerk, Mary Woodstock; publicity agent, Leda Colbert; superintendent of music, Sylvia Dennis; supervisors of church school, Lee and Archie Root; financial secretary for church school, Carl Wirth.

Elder Leonard Houghton was home to spend the holidays. Brother and Sister Berve have moved into the Houghton home, 316 North Few Street. Sister Houghton is going to her son Warren, in Detroit, Michigan, and Brother Houghton returns to his Canadian mission.

The women held election of officers at the home of Sister Leonard Houghton December 18, almost every home in the branch being represented. Elder Berve was asked to take charge, and gave an explanation of the operation of the church school, advising the women to organize into a working group of the church school to help raise finances. Sister Walker was elected head of the group and has for her assistant, Nora Root. The ways and means committee is composed of Nora Root, and Sisters Houghton and Wirth. Leah Miller was made recording secretary.

Brothers Clark, Houghton, and Woodstock occupy the pulpit on Sunday mornings. Brother Berve preaches in the evenings, using for subjects such topics as these: "Be Not Conformed to the Things of the World," "My Stock on Hand," "I Am That I Am," "The Christ of 1931," "My Inventory," and "If."

The priesthood and executive heads met at the home of Carl Wirth the latter part of December to consider the budget for 1931.

January 2 the pastor again called the branch in a business meeting to accept the financial agent's report, and receive the budget for the coming year to the amount of $782.

New Year's Eve the young people met for a social time from 7.30 to 10.30, after which program and food were had. At 11.45 the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered.

New officers and teachers of the church school took their places January 4. Ora Miller is pianist. Teachers chosen were: Adult class, Sister Brigham; seniors, Sister Houghton; young people, Leah Miller; boys' class, Orville Dahlem; juniors, Nora Root; primaries, Lula Griswold.

The sacramental service was a spiritual hour, Brothers Berve and Woodstock in charge. The opening remarks were by Brother Berve, and a letter was read from Brother and Sister W. A. McDowell. We appreciated their remembering us at the beginning of a new year.

The women met at the home of their president January 6 to make plans for the year.

Apostle D. T. Williams arrived here the next day and gave a forceful sermon, "What Is Your Religion Worth?"

The young people's class on Thursday night, and the Beliefs of the Church Class on Sunday night are well attended, and much interest is shown.

Sister Sylvia Dennis provides special singing for the preaching services and has organized a choir.

Looking into the Year

December 30.—May I come in? Thank you. I am a patient at Herman Kiefer Hospital, Detroit, Michigan, curing for tuberculosis, and have been here eleven months. My name was sent to the Herald some time ago for prayers, and I wish to thank all those who have been so kind as to remember me, also those who sent the lovely cards and letters of encouragement which I have received.

My life at one time was despaired of, but I have received wonderful blessings through administration and was very pleased to be able to meet Elders Case and Lancaster with a smile yesterday and tell them of my improvement.

I wish for every one a happy and prosperous new year. The old year seemed to go very fast, with work, play, sleep, journeys, and a goodly share of happiness and sadness. But those twelve months are gone, and twelve new ones are slated to take their place. There are before us new problems, new experiences, new friends. Perhaps the happiest part of the old year which we take with us is that which includes our friends. Behind all the losses and disappointments of time, sweet memories remain of those with whom we have shared happy hours.

It may be that one thing faces us more than anything else as we enter the new year—regret. But there is nothing to be gained by carrying a single regret over with us. Rather let us enter our activities with a finer sense of responsibility and a more determined spirit to leave more of worth and happiness behind us than we have ever left before. I like the daily resolution better than the yearly one. To do better, to live better, to be better in our hearts than yesterday, is resolution enough for anyone.

I like to compare the new year to the turning of a leaf. The old sheet has become torn and spotted, but the new one is white and whole. All of us are authors in this great book of life. Everyone of us has a chapter to write. Some have ability to write only a few lines, but lines often live longer in memory than whole books. The task is to write well that which we know.

I hope as this new year grows, many who have known mists and darkness may see the light and grow braver and happier out under the rays of the golden sun. For the unfortunate ones I would like to have the flowers more fragrant in scent and more gorgeous in color and beauty. These are only wishes, but multiply them many times and you will grasp the meaning of my hope for you this year. I am ever praying for the progress of the great and glorious gospel.

NINA WOOD ROE.

Alexander, Kansas

During the latter part of the summer of 1930, a number of families of this branch motored to Colorado, visiting noted places and viewing the beautiful scenery. Numbers of local Kansans enjoyed the reunion held at Colorado Springs. All returned home refreshed and happy to be back in the branch.

Brother Peter Schaben, while doing the morning chores and preparing to attend church October 5, suffered a stroke of apoplexy, and passed away late that night having never regained consciousness. In losing Brother Schaben we miss a helpful brother, a friend to humanity. Always he did more than his share to keep up church expenses. His widow, three sons, and five daughters are left to mourn, along with Alexander Branch and other friends.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Elder O. L. D'Arcy were here October 19 to assist in an all-day meeting at the church. We hope they will return to conduct meetings. They went from here to Goodland, Kansas.

Sister Eva Teeters was stricken with illness October 24, and five days later was taken on a bed to Hays City Protestant Hospital, where for two weeks hope of her recovery was slight. Her daughters, Mrs. E. S. Boyd, of Canon City, Colorado, and Vida Teeters, a sophomore at Graceland, were summoned to her bedside. Prayers were asked for her at Graceland College; Alexander and Bazine, Kansas; Norfolk, Nebraska; and Fanning, Kansas. On November 17 she was able to return home to her loved ones.

Christmas was celebrated at the church with a program in which the children, under the direction of Sister Elsie Boese, did well.

Branch business meeting occurred December 27, and election resulted as follows: Branch president, John Teeters; secretary, Lois Teeters; organist, Clara Wood, Bazine, Kansas; chorister, J. A. Teeters; treasurer, A. H. Reed; church school officers: superintendent, Clara Wood; organist, Clara Wood; secretary, Archie Stephens; teachers, J. A. Teeters, Bible Class; Clara Wood, juniors; Emma Schaben, beginners. There is a movement on foot to organize a young people's class.

Sister Robbins, who is eighty years old, fell the night of October 14 and lay on her back for six weeks. She is now able to sit up in a chair. She has been greatly blessed through prayer.

Sister Ruby Jones is the mother of a baby daughter born December 29.

Sister Teeters was made happy on Christmas Eve when the women of the United Brethren Church presented her a box of Christmas gifts. Several sisters of the branch sent the family delicious food on Thanksgiving, and during the seven weeks Sisters Teeters lay ill at home she was remembered by the various women with delectable dishes. She is grateful to all her friends.

San Francisco, California

Little Brown Church, Caselli and Danvers

With the new year this branch put into operation the plan of Religious Education, and everyone is enthusiastic and wishes to make it effective. With such a spirit we are bound to progress.

On Armistice Day Brother Truman Hutton, of Alberta, Canada, was laid to rest in Cypress Lawn Cemetery. The sermon was preached by Brother Saxe. Brother Truman was taken ill while on the train and brought to the San Francisco Hospital. He was administered to several times and given a blood transfusion by Cecil Smith in an attempt to save his life. We regretted to see this splendid young man called beyond, but we feel that he has a work to do on the other side.

Elder H. W. Savage was here the evening of November 23.

And Elder R. S. Salyards was here a short time also. President G. N. Briggs, of Graceland College, was another visitor, and discussed his first love—Graceland. He was here in 1915 and said that since that time he has carried pleasant memories of this city.

Herbert Hinton, missionary, has many times been in this local and will now be here permanently as our missionary pastor. Brother Saxe, who has been the faithful father of the branch for many years, cheerfully gave his place to Brother Herbert and became his associate, with Brother Emery Parks.

The annual bazaar of the Women's Department was held December 5 and 6 in a store in the Castro Valley. A food sale, fish pond, and candy table were special attractions, along with many pieces of handwork. Much more could have been sold, but, as it was, the funds of the department were increased nearly one hundred dollars.

Elder G. P. Levitt was here at the business meeting, when officers were elected for the coming year.

The Christmas entertainment was given entirely by the children. A playlet, "The Christmas Spirit," was beautiful. Other plays and numbers were well rendered. This year only the children exchanged gifts. The money usually spent in a general exchange was put into the Christmas offering.

Brother and Sister John Shipman have a new son, born the night of our Christmas entertainment, December 23.

Saint Louis, Missouri

The holidays in Saint Louis were colorful. Family reunions attracted a splendid group of young people and their friends from near and distant points. From Gravenhurst, Ontario, Canada, came Dave Archibald to join his wife, Etta, and their two children who had preceded him several weeks. Carl and Helen Larsen arrived a few days later from Phoenix, Arizona; and Harold Archibald and his wife, Adrienne, from Muskogee, Oklahoma.

Dorothy Elliott and Bill Nichols, of Brooklyn, New York, and Stanley Barrows, of Lamoni, Iowa, were guests of Billie Lloyd, daughter of the R. A. Lloyds, and with Ruth Crabtree were the representatives from Graceland College here for the Christmas vacation. Alice Evans, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gomer Evans, was home from Missouri University, where she is a freshman.

Mr. and Mrs. George Fisher, of Chicago, and their daughter, Gloria, joined Mr. Fisher's family. Also here from Chicago, were Hilda Edstrom, who spent several days with her brother and sister-in-law, Pastor and Mrs. C. A. Edstrom, and Mrs. Naomi Milham, who visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Thomas.

The Shankland S. Arnson family, of Claremore, Oklahoma, spent several days here as the guests of Mr. Arnson's family. Later they went to Independence.

Among the families spending the holiday season out-of-town were the Elvin Luffs and their small daughter, who motored to Independence, Missouri, and to Lamoni, Iowa; and Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Trowbridge, who visited in Dallas, Texas, with their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Fielding Keeney.

At a Christmas party in the church, the branch presented Pastor Edstrom and Elder Bruce Brown with purses. Since his arrival in the fall, Pastor Edstrom's work in the organization of the branch has won the admiration and respect of all, and his steadily growing influence is making itself felt in the various departments of the church. He and Sister Edstrom accompanied a group of carolers Christmas Eve, and took an active part in the "watch" party given New Year's Eve, under the supervision of Brother and Sister Cecil Conklin.

Prior to the holidays, a young people's conference was held. Apostle F. Henry Edwards, the principal speaker, stressed the development of character, urging the young people to stand for the principles which they knew to be right. Howard Elliott, teacher of the class which sponsored the meeting, also spoke, urging the young people to stay with the church and lend to it the benefit of their progressive spirit. The conference opened Saturday evening, December 20, with a banquet, planned and prepared by Brother and Sister Eugene P. Fox, and closed the following evening with a cantata, directed by E. C. Bell. RUTH ANN THOMAS.

Bremerton, Washington

On November 13 District President and Missionary Harold I. Velt came to Bremerton for a series of meetings. The first week he gave lantern lectures on prehistoric America. The second week chart lectures occupied the time until Thanksgiving Eve. Brother Velt went home to Seattle for the holiday and a few days' rest, and returned to Bremerton for a week of fine sermons. Never was there a lack of quantity in the crowd but what it was made up by the quality, and now we have a fine prospect list and several follow-up visits have been made.

The time intervening between the close of the meetings and Christmas was so short that there was little time to prepare much of a program, but some of the women arranged a varied program followed by a tableau of the Christmas story. Everyone seemed to enjoy it, and there was a fine crowd composed mostly of nonmembers.

The Sunday morning before Christmas we had the pleasure of listening in to that wonderful broadcast The Messiah, from K M B C, Kansas City. Brother Day installed his radio in the church, because we learned the program was to come during our regular church hour. The branch wishes to thank each one who took part in making this broadcast possible. We know something of the stupendous undertaking which a production of this kind involves. Solos, choruses, and orchestra came in distinctly, with nothing to mar their beauty.

January 5 the branch met for its first business meeting of the year. Officers of the past year were sustained and the branch business dispatched in perfect harmony.

Patriarch and Sister Richard Baldwin are expected January 10 for a stay of two weeks. EVA LUNDEEN.

Akron, Ohio

77 West Crosier Street

We are trying to carry on the Lord's work in this part of his vineyard. Since last report the local pulpit had been filled by Brothers William Goudy, of New Philadelphia; Cecil Neville, of Willoughby; George Neville, of Willoughby; T. J. Haynes, of Cleveland; and speakers of the local priesthood.

Elder James Bishop, district president, held a two weeks' meeting ending December 14, and baptized two adults. He gave some interesting stereopticon lectures.

December 15 we held the annual business meeting, E. M. Knight, branch president, in charge, James Bishop assisting. The following officers were elected: President, E. M. Knight; secretary, Edna Rhodes; treasurer, Charles Shadle; church school superintendent, Hubert Mitchell; supervisor of adults, Gretchen Knight; supervisor of young people, William Brown; supervisor of the children's department, Pearl Schlotterback; chorister, J. J. Dildine; choir director, M. I. Kelsey; junior choir director, Josephine Ebeling; church accompanist, Mable Dixon; birthday secretary, Wellington Shook; librarian, Earl Spriggle; publicity agent, J. C. Kriebel.

We have adopted the envelope system as recommended by the Bishop of the general church, with Ruth Kriebel as financial secretary.

A. R. Manchester, patriarch, has been sick for some time but is now able to be back at services. Sister Lodema Spurrer has just returned home from the hospital, where she underwent an operation.

Far West Stake

Richmond

At the annual business meeting December 15 the following officers were elected: Pastor, William Hamann; director of church school, William Ferguson; chorister, Oscar Case; branch secretary, A. A. Hughes.

The week of prayer was observed by the Saints. Attendance at church services was lower than usual on account of sickness and death, yet much encouragement was gained, and a feeling of brotherly love and peace was mingled with a deeper appreciation of God's goodness and blessings. It is our prayer that we will be diligent in the work assigned us to do, so that we shall not have time for the things which mar the beauty of harmony and cooperation.

The sudden passing of Brother and Sister Lloyd and Ione Graybill is keenly felt. We believe that we needed them to do all they could for the advancement of the work here, but looking to Christ, we acknowledge his wisdom, and say to each other, "They are just away." May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

Harriet Prosser Cato passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Grace Kugler, January 5, being seventy-four years old. She had come from Idaho in August. She was the widow of Elder James N. Cato, who preceded her several years ago. Her funeral was held from the Saints' church in Richmond January 8, in charge of Elder O. W. Okerlind, missionary to Idaho. Interment was in Norborne, Missouri, Cemetery.

Sacramental services held here January 4 with Elders Hamann and Case in charge had as visitors six members from Liberty Street Branch, Independence.

Hilliard Hamann and Aarona Booker, students at Grace-land College; Marie Kugler, in training at the Independence Sanitarium; and Velma Graybill, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, were among the holiday visitors with homefolks.

We are looking forward to the visit of Moses Hinderks, of Stewartsville, who is to be here January 18.

Visitors are always welcome at historic Richmond.

Holden Stake

Atherton

December 21 was the day we chose for the Christmas entertainments. At the eleven o'clock hour, the children, under the leadership of Sisters Bogue and Gladys Beebe, responded to the message of the birth of Christ. In the evening, the choir and the glee club, under the direction of Sister Hughes and Sister Holman, combined to give a most interesting program.

The children voted to sacrifice their usual treat this year, and gave their offering to the church. The night before Christmas, Sister Holman took the glee club out caroling. They went as far as Independence and serenaded Pastor A. E. Allen and family. After visiting at the home of Bishop Koehler, who invited them in, many other families were serenaded.

Brother McWethy, of the stake presidency, was here again December 28, and occupied at the eleven o'clock hour. He asked these questions: "What have you done for Christ in the year that is past? What will you do in the year that is to come? Do you know how to do for Christ?"

In the evening, a group of young people from Lees Summit gave a play entitled, "Christmas at the Inn," taken from December Vision. We express appreciation to these young people who chose to bring to Atherton this interesting little play.

New Year's Day the men met at the church and worked all day. Among this number was Brother Allen, pastor, who is also counselor to the stake bishop, as well as auditor of the general church.

Sacrament was observed with earnest resolutions for the new year, and a good spirit prevailed.

In the evening Otho Clark preached on his favorite subject, "Stewardship," and many said he did his best.

Last week the men again showed their desire to help one who was unable to do his work, when they met in the field of Brother John Thompson and husked his corn. Brother Thompson had the misfortune to break several of his ribs.

January 11 the morning service was in charge of the teachers of the branch, Brothers Van Tuyl, Guy Hanson, and L. L. Bogue.

In the evening Bishop J. A. Koehler preached an excellent sermon on the prophecies and promises of God fulfilled.

Ava, Missouri

Recently our little church seven miles from Ava has undergone some improvements inside and out. Money for this work was raised by the Women's Department. A pie social was held at the church October 10, and a box social at the home of Brother and Sister Davis November 7. The proceeds amounted to nearly thirty dollars.

December 21 District Missionary W. E. Haden called on us and preached at the eleven o'clock service.

Now that the church has been repaired and is more comfortable, we hope Elder Haden will return and hold a series of meetings.

The Christmas entertainment occurred December 24. A program of dialogs, recitations, and songs was well received. Christmas numbers were given by the branch orchestra.

Because a number now work away from home, the congregation is not so large as formerly. We hope some of these will soon return.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

Harmony and beauty characterized every phase of the church school last Sunday morning, beginning at 9.45 and continuing until 11.45. Apostle M. A. McConley was the speaker in the service period, and music was by the choir. In the evening Patriarch J. T. Gresty was the speaker at another of our special Sunday night services. Music was supplied by the octet from the choir.

A committee of those interested in dramatic work has been formed to produce a series of dramatic worship programs for the Sunday night services. Each program will carry a theme and present a message.

Tryouts for the Central play, "Mansions," in the O. B. K. play contest were conducted Sunday evening. The contest will occur at Central Church March 2, 3, and 4. Three plays will be given each evening.

Sister B. B. Root will give an eight-week series of lectures on "The Growth of Christian Personality," beginning at Fourth Church, Forty-third and Garfield, at 6.30 next Sunday evening. A large class is organized there. Central teachers whose duties prevent them from taking Sister Root's class during the Sunday morning hour, have been invited to meet the class every Sunday evening.

Second Church

The Saints are striving to keep the latter-day gospel before the minds of the people in this vicinity. Attendance at meetings is small, but we hope for improvement. Sickness and removal of many to other neighborhoods and cities have left only a few to carry on the work.

There is always something special on such days as Grace-land College Day, Decision Day, and Rally Day.

Of late speakers have been Elders Alvin Knisley, Ross Higdon, E. W. Lloyd, P. J. Raw, E. S. Zink, G. T. Richards, George Mesley, H. H. Sevy, and Pastor F. A. Evans.

Sister Iva McCaulla held a Halloween party at her home. Sister Homer Waddell donated the doughnuts, which were sold and the proceeds given to the Auditorium.

The leader of the O. B. K.'s is Mildred Lungwitz. We are proud to say that she is doing splendid work with the young people. This organization presented a program Christmas Eve. After the entertainment the young people sang Christmas carols to some of the sick members.

Some of the members had a New Year's Eve watch party at the home of Pastor F. A. Evans.

Sister Zink is much better, and the little son of Brother and Sister M. J. Flynn is improving in health.

Observes Week of Prayer

South Boardman, Michigan, January 4.—I am happy to write of a delightful experience I enjoyed today at home, isolated from church services because of age, poor health, and bad roads. I was thankful for the appointment of a week of prayer and the suggested scripture lessons or readings. I read them thoughtfully and prayerfully, and at the hour of prayer and sacramental service, I tried to unite my petitions with those of the faith, and this I shall continue to do. I know that I was permitted to enjoy a portion of God's Holy Spirit. I felt that he owned me for his child as I tried to unite my prayers with those of the Saints assembled together. In my heart I was moved to say: "I thank thee, O God, for a prophet to guide us in these latter days."

I am thankful for the gospel and all that it means. I know it is of God and his Christ. I have received many evidences of the truthfulness of this grand work, and I am grateful for all God's blessings. I pray that he will hear us as we offer our petitions at this time and that his work will prosper and be accomplished in his own due time. I wish that I could be of greater service, and I try each day to do the best that I can. Though I am isolated I am happy, and all that I have belongs to God.

ORMA GARDNER.

Topeka, Kansas

621 Jackson Street, Floor 3

A junior church service was conducted by Sister Mildred Goodfellow the morning of November 16, the theme being "Doing Our Part."

Late in November the young people's class was entertained at the home of Sister Fern Weedmark. Thirteen were present to enjoy the dinner and make plans to attend the young people's meeting of the district at Atchison, November 30.

December sacramental hour was in charge of O. E. Weedmark, F. O. Kelley, and R. J. Crane, of Kansas City Stake. Brother Crane gave a talk to the Sunday school on "The Christmas Offering."

The Young People's League gave a chili supper at the home of Sister John Killen the evening of December 11. This was its first project, and the experience of doing something to boost the Christmas offering was much enjoyed.

Members of the priesthood occupying the pulpit during the last month were F. O. Kelley, G. G. Phillips, and O. E. Weedmark.

The evening of December 14 was the occasion for a talk by Sister Pitsenberger at the Recreation and Expression Department meeting. Many experiences were related concerning her vacation and trip with Mrs. Sarah Welch in Southern California. Points and branches visited were Hollywood, Los Angeles, and San Diego.

The annual Christmas party and exchange of gifts by the Women's Department were held at the home of Sister C. J. Sheets December 19, where Christmas dinner was enjoyed. The proceeds of the apron sale December 20 and also of the box supper at the home of Sister Weedmark were turned over to the building fund. This marked the close of a splendid year of work under the leadership of Sister Helen Hays.

The Christmas entertainment was held the evening of December 21. Appropriate decorations with a tree and treats for the children added to the pleasure of the occasion. Those on the committee were Helen Hays, Mildred Goodfellow, Emma Happe, L. M. Pitsenberger, and F. O. Kelley.

The annual business meeting was held December 28 and the following officers were elected: Branch president, O. E. Weedmark; branch clerk, Sister H. C. Pitsenberger; custodian of funds, F. O. Kelley; musical director, Sister Anna Alfrey. The new plan of religious education was adopted. F. O. Kelley was chosen church school director; home visiting director, B. F. Deller; leader of adult division, Sister Mary Sheets; young people's division, Sister Fern Weedmark; children's division, Sister Mildred Goodfellow. The service rendered the branch by G. G. Phillips while he was pastor is appreciated, and we trust that his business affairs will enable him to assist much in the coming year.

Saints and friends of Sister Sarah Williams who has passed through a serious illness, will be glad to know that she is recovering. She continues to need the prayers of the Saints.

MRS. H. C. PITSEMBERGER.

Saint Thomas, Ontario

The Women's Department met in the church December 15 for the election of officers. The following were chosen: President, Sister Ira Kinsman; vice president, Sister Cordery; secretary, Sister L. Burger; treasurer, Sister G. Taylor. The financial depression has touched Saint Thomas, and the Women's Department has done much relief work.

The Christmas tree December 22 proved a success in every way. Brother Kelley acted as chairman of this undertaking. The sisters who were back of the entertainment and Christmas treats are to be commended for their work.

Credit is due Sister Burger for splendid Christmas music and the contributions of the choir.

Saint Thomas Branch met its obligations during the drive made in December to the amount of $206.20.

Sacramental service January 4 had for the encouragement of the Saints a degree of the Holy Spirit's presence. The Saints were assured that God is well pleased with our efforts to serve him.

The young people met to organize and choose officers for the year. Reports were read showing the progress made during the year. The following selections were made to direct the work this year: President, William Duncan, jr., elected by the branch; vice president, Margaret Ford; secretary, Eva Johnson; assistant secretary, Donald Duncan; treasurer, Emily Saint John; chorister, Audrey Le Courtois; assistant chorister, Winnifred Hitch; pianist, Hazel Ford; assistant pianist, Sister Harry Rock; librarian, Kenneth Duncan, and assistant, Walter Rock. Teachers are Sisters Hazel Ford and Edith Stephens, assisted by Margaret Ford and Audrey Le Courtois. Following the election a program and lunch were in charge of the officers and teachers of the department. This meeting is growing in popularity. One teacher was sufficient at first.

In the report of the annual election of officers, which appeared in Saint Thomas news, page 1419, Saints' Herald for December 31, 1930, there is some confusion of names. The counselors to the president of the branch are Elder Albert Cordery and Nelson Kelly, priest; secretary, Sister L. J. Burger. Auditors are Hazel Ford and Colin Hammond.

Many of the Saints enjoyed the message delivered by the choir in The Messiah, which came over the radio December 21, sung by a part of the Messiah Choir of Independence. The words were very clear and distinct.

Stone Church

Brief talks by Apostles M. A. McConley and J. F. Curtis have opened the church school sessions on the last two Sundays for the adult and junior young people who meet in the main auditorium of the Stone Church.

Pastor John F. Sheehy spoke at the eleven o'clock service Sunday morning on the subject, "Judge Not." We judge folks entirely too much by outward appearances, he said. Hereafter let us try harder to see the inner man; let us try to have more human sympathy and understanding; let us try to fulfill the "new" commandment, "Love one another." Elder W. Wallace Smith presided and was assisted by Bishop J. A. Becker.

Under the direction of Paul N. Craig, the Stone Church Choir sang the anthem, "Hear My Prayer," by Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, Nina Grenawalt Smith singing the soprano solo. Organ and George Miller played the "Grand Aria" as an organ-piano offertory; each also played a solo number.

"Faith in Others" was the theme and keynote of the junior young people's worship service in the lower auditorium, and Elder E. E. Closson delivered a splendid sermonet. "The Good Bishop," a story, was told by Miss Ella Jones. Music was furnished by the congregation, by a double duet of girls, by Mary Grace Pruitt who played a piano solo, and by Joy Harder and Wilma Luff, pianists. The pastor and his assistant were in charge.

In the evening the second of the series of historical plays written by Brother E. A. Smith, "Joseph Meets a Minister; the Story of the First Vision," was presented under the direction of Sister Leonard J. Lea. Miss Allegra Luff, Reginald Smith, and H. A. Koehler made up the play cast. Congregational singing, led by Elder John F. Sheehy, and a sermonet, "Can a Man See God?" by Elder Leonard J. Lea, preceded the play. Music, drama, and sermonet combined to produce a program enjoyed by the large congregation. Elder J. F. Sheehy was in charge of the hour, assisted by Elder H. O. Smith.

Two well-known women of the church have been called to the beyond in the past few days. Sister Julia Maria Danielson, seventy-one years of age, died January 11 at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Carl N. Hynden, Fairland Heights, where she had lived for the past three years. She had been ill ten months. Surviving besides Mrs. Hynden are a son, Henry C. Danielson, of Los Angeles, California; and three sisters: Mrs. W. H. Sumption and Miss Ella Hayer, of Lamoni, Iowa; and Mrs. W. E. Hougau, of Blythedale, Missouri. A short funeral service was conducted in Independence in charge of Elder W. A. McDowell. The body was taken to Lamoni for services at the Brick Church and interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

Sister Iva Myrtle Roberts, fifty years of age, passed away January 17, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. Woodruff Barbour, west of Independence, after an illness of nearly six months. For six years Sister Roberts was a technician on the staff at the Independence Sanitarium, and for three years filled a similar position at the Mercy Hospital in Kansas City. She spent one year in Lockhart, Texas, in the same work. Besides her daughter, she is survived by five brothers: Frank Peterson, Saint Joseph, Missouri; Fred O. Peterson, Bristol, Tennessee; Edward O. Peterson, Bagnell, Missouri; John W. Peterson, Bay City, Michigan; and Bert E. Peterson, Independence; and two sisters: Mrs. Lois Stephenson, Independence; and Mrs. Ardella Cox, Kansas City, Kansas. The funeral was conducted Monday from the home, Elder W. B. Paul in charge, the sermon by Elder J. M. Terry. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Second Church

For some reason, new year's resolutions perhaps, or good weather, services for the first two Sundays of the year were characterized by excellent attendance.

Communion service, January 4, was conducted by Elder T. A. Beck assisted by A. K. Dillee and F. N. Mortimore. Apostle Clyde F. Ellis talked for several minutes, his thoughts adding inspiration to the meeting.

Other members of the Quorum of Twelve who have been with us this year are Apostle F. Henry Edwards, who preached the evening of the first Sunday, naming God as our greatest need and sin as our greatest menace, and John F. Garver, who delivered a forceful discourse the morning of January 11, being assisted in the stand by D. T. Williams. At this hour a large congregation listened to the sermon, some coming from other branches and some being strangers to us. Sister Irene Barnhard sang a solo. Brother Edwards spoke again in the evening. And last Sunday night E. J. Gleazer was the speaker.

Following the church school session in the morning on Sunday, Elder A. W. Whiting preached to the Saints.

Walnut Park

As usual the morning prayer service was a busy and profitable hour, with more than the usual attendance. To some this old-time prayer meeting means more than any other service of the day. They feel their need of this hour of meditation, prayer, and song, the exchange of spiritual experiences, the nearness to the Father and renewed courage that come with the grateful acknowledgment of his goodness. W. T. Gard, Eli Kester, and Orlando Nace were in charge.

At Sunday school it was evident that the new officers are studying thoughtfully their duties and privileges as shown by the numerous announcements for special meetings for various groups. The coming week may see a number of workers' plans in operation. For the special number before closing, the orchestra furnished a trio of violinists.

Apostle J. A. Gillen occupied at eleven o'clock with his usual intense interest in his subject. He took for his text one used by a former apostle, "Let us go on to perfection." Our growth must be constant; thus we may be growing perfectly, even while we are yet imperfect, going through a transformation which approaches gradually the divine likeness. The pastor presided at this service, the invocation being by Elder Lyman Smith. The anthem, "Praise the Lord, O my soul" by Rolfe, was the offering of the choir.

C. G. Closson has been appointed assistant to Ruth Bryant, supervisor of young people, and their first venture was a fellowship service Sunday evening at six o'clock preceding the lesson period. E. E. Closson, invited to be present, led in a question and answer contest on Bible information. This was enjoyed to the extent that it was voted to carry on the contest next Sunday. All are invited to take part, or to observe.

Miss Myrtle Weber has returned from her vacation and will resume her place as "Methods" instructor. The class in "Vocational Guidance" enjoyed a talk by R. M. Ryan, consulting engineer for the General Electric Company, on "Engineering as a Vocation." He will continue on this subject next Sunday evening.

At 7.30 the choir, thirty-one in number, presented an anthem, "Father, Thou Hast Been Our Dwelling," Sister A. C. Dobson directing, Sister Carletta Norman, pianist. An illustrated lecture followed by C. G. Closson on "The Pilgrim Fathers," he having secured slides from the Graphic Arts Bureau.

Spring Branch

Three treats were in store for the Saints of this congregation January 11. Elder R. V. Hopkins spoke to the young people's class during the church school session on "The Quality of the Home," and at the eleven o'clock hour Apostle J. A. Gillen preached a fine sermon. Apostle J. F. Curtis talked in the evening.

The early morning prayer hour last Sunday was marked by a splendid service. At the church school Elder W. A. McDowell spoke to the young people's class, and preached at eleven o'clock. He presented much food for thought to a large congregation.

Bishop J. A. Koehler talked in the evening.

The evening of January 16 the young people's class of the church school and its teacher were entertained at the home of Pastor and Sister J. E. Cleveland. Every guest voted the host and hostess splendid entertainers.

Enoch Hill

The funeral of John Arthur Hartman, one of our school-boys, who died from an accidental gunshot wound at the home of his parents, Brother and Sister Clyde Hartman, January 8, was held at the church Sunday afternoon, January 11, there being a large crowd of sorrowing relatives and friends present. The boy, who was thirteen years old, attended Alton School. He is survived by his parents, three sisters, Ola Ruth, Bernice Evelyn, and Elsie Lee, and other relatives. Elder W. D. Bullard preached the sermon, assisted by Elder O. W. Sarratt.

A service for the purpose of installing the church school officers for the year was conducted the evening of January 11, Elder G. G. Lewis speaking on the theme of the evening, "Building for 1931." Teachers and officers, seated on the platform, were introduced by the presiding officers, and, in turn, presented their assistants.

That morning Apostle Clyde F. Ellis preached on "It Is Much Better to Obey Than to Sacrifice."

Chili and pie a la mode were chief appetite attractions served at a benefit supper held at Liberty Street Church, Friday, January 16, by the young people's organizations of that congregation and Enoch Hill. The number who came, though small, received a special treat in the program. Guest talent included George Anway who sang two tenor solos, and Blaine Bender, who gave two readings.

For speakers last Sunday Enoch Hill had Bishop Charles Fry and Apostle J. F. Curtis. These visiting members of the ministry were made welcome, and gave their contributions to the program with earnestness and sincerity.

Laurel Club Activities for 1930

The year 1930 was one of the busiest for the club since its organization, May 17, 1906. The fact that last year was an important one for both the general and local church added to the opportunities of which the club was quick to take advantage for the furthering of its purpose—the furnishing of the kitchen and dining room in the Auditorium. Over a period of years, funds have been accumulated by the club to accomplish this aim. And the occasion of the Centennial Conference seemed opportune for the Laurel Club to make its biggest permanent investment in equipment for the Auditorium. A sum of approximately eight thousand dollars from the club's funds was spent for equipment.

The women have gained considerable experience in efficiently serving large crowds; and although the new equipment was used for the first time at the conference, the visitors were satisfactorily cared for. Meals were served at the conference beginning April 5 for fifteen days, between two and three thousand meals being served each day.

During the year a number of dinners and banquets were served, the net proceeds of which were added to the fund which the club is accumulating to furnish additional kitchen and dining-room equipment for the Auditorium. On New Year's Eve, 1929-30, church members from all congregations in Independence gathered for a New Year's party in the basement of the Auditorium. Light refreshments were served by the Laurel Club, which netted $20. An informal dinner was served to local bishops and deacons January 31, 1930, which was attended by one hundred men. A special effort was made among local members in February to provide a floor for the Auditorium gymnasium, and a special dinner was served to an organization committee of sixty.

When the Australian delegation arrived at General Conference, an informal dinner was served to them by the Laurel Club on the evening of their first day in Independence. On March 18 a bankers' convention was entertained with a banquet at which sixty plates were laid. During the late spring a dinner was served to a group interested in religious education, Brother George Lewis being the guest of honor. In the late winter a five-dollar banquet was given for the purpose of raising money for the Auditorium gymnasium floor. One hundred and two attended this event. The proceeds were added to the funds of the club, and a gift of $1,500 was made by the Laurel Club toward the cost of the new floor. April 4 a banquet was held by the members of the Quorum of Seventy, which was attended by one hundred. The Laurel Club remembered President Smith's birthday and invited a number of guests to spend a social evening in his honor at the home of Mrs. T. J. Watkins. A birthday cake was presented. When Apostle Paul M. Hanson returned from England prior to last General Conference, the Laurel Club arranged a reception and dinner for fifty persons in his honor. A birthday cake was presented in honor of his birthday, which occurred on January 8. Following the General Conference, a banquet was served for seventy-five members of the Y. K. T. Stone Church School Class and in September another for seventy-five members of the intermediate department, and a dinner for the junior department, at which seventy were present.

A banquet for the Service Star Legion was provided for three hundred members of that organization. An informal dinner, served to the men and their wives interested in the financial affairs of the church in Independence, was the occasion for the introduction of Elder J. Stanley Kelley to his associates, when he was placed in charge of the finances in Independence as the representative of the Presiding Bishopric. The annual bazaar which the Laurel Club has held for a number of years gave way this year to a carnival in the Auditorium basement at the close of the Harvest Home Festival. A rummage sale, conducted by Mrs. Newcomb and Mrs. Dunn, cleared about $40, which was added to the club treasury.

The Laurel Club published a cookbook which was placed on sale during General Conference. A number of copies are still available.

Under the general direction of the Laurel Club, Mrs. Harvey, assisted by Mr. Harvey, Mrs. Matthews, and Mrs. Downs, has been conducting a lunch room in the Auditorium; and although a small profit is realized from this undertaking, it is chiefly maintained for the convenience of the members of the office force who buy their noon meals and for visitors and tourists who come to the Auditorium.

The net profits from serving meals at the last General Conference amounted to $4,700. The total income for the year was $14,115.56. On January 1, 1930, the club paid tithing to the amount of $125.60. Three large cash gifts have been made during the year, one of $1,500 toward the gymnasium floor as mentioned above, another of $2,500 to the new Sanitarium Building, and $8,000 was spent for new equipment for the Auditorium kitchen and dining room. The Club closes a most profitable year with a balance of $4,135.13, which is carried on deposit with the Presiding Bishopric.

Good Times for February

All who are interested in recreation and social times for the young people will be glad to read an article in the issue, of Vision for February, 1931, entitled "Plan a Peppy Party."

This is not the only reason for getting Vision. There are other interesting and useful articles for people of all ages. If your young people like to read stories, and most young people do, they will find some good ones in Vision.

Leaders of young people should encourage their young friends to take and read this magazine. It is their work to lead young people to the right things of life.

Fulton, Iowa

January 5.—Election of officers occurred here December 21, and I was sustained as president of Fulton Branch. I was first elected to this office June 16, 1888, and have held it ever since. My oldest son was this year elected to assist me, and another son was made the superintendent of Sunday school. Every officer and teacher took up his work the first Sunday of the year without a jar. There was good attendance at Sunday school and communion service.

We believe that the financial effort recently put forth has benefited this branch. Interest during the past two months has been good.

The fine Christmas program was well attended. The tree was loaded with gifts. At the conclusion a candle and song drill by eight members of the Sunday school was very effective. Arleen Heide, four years old, sang "Holy Night," her mother accompanying.

JOHN HEIDE.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church, 1423 First Avenue South

Annual business meeting was held December 17, Elder C. J. Smith, missionary and district president, in the chair. It was voted to adopt the new plan of religious education. Elder Harry Ratcliff was elected branch president. The following Sunday evening the pastor called another business meeting, at which time Sister R. H. Freeman was chosen director of the church school; supervisor of adult division, Vera Ratcliff; supervisor of young people's division, Ferne Shackow; supervisor of children's division, Leola Henneman; pianist, Elsie Brown; chorister, Sister Ratcliff; branch clerk, Courtney Rotzien; financial officer, Bernice Brown. It was voted to adopt the envelope system for raising finances.

The Department of Women held an open meeting December 12 after church. The program consisted of a duet by Virginia Walker and Ina Freeman; Elder Lester Wildermuth gave a talk entitled, "Others"; a solo by Sister Ratcliff; an address by Elder Ratcliff on "Loyalty"; a duet by Sisters Hunter and Ratcliff; a reading, "In the Valley of Shriveled Hearts," Sister Rotzien; and a recitation, Jean Good.

Elder Lester Wildermuth preached two fine sermons before leaving for the holiday vacation at his home in Illinois.

Elder Thomas Leitch spent the holidays visiting and encouraging isolated Saints.

The Sunday school gave a Christmas program Sunday evening, December 21. It was well attended by members and friends and consisted of recitations, songs, tableaux, a dialog, "Inasmuch as Ye Have Done It," a play, "Christmas at the Inn" taken from Vision. At the close Santa Claus appeared with treats for all.

Patricia Jean, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Frank Stowell, was blessed at the opening of the Christmas program by Elder Ratcliff.

Saints here were much surprised to hear of the recent marriage of Elder Swen Swenson at Independence. All join in wishing the couple a happy wedded life.

A pretty unveiling service was held at the close of the Sunday school December 28, when the picture, "The Hope of the World," was presented as a gift to the school by the officers. Elder Ratcliff made the presentation, after which the school sang, "Jesus Loves the Little Children of the World." Then came the story, "The Artist Who Forgot Four Colors."

The total Christmas offering for the year was $92.05. Members living outside the branch sent in $63.50, making a total of $155.55.

The members were saddened to hear of the death of Brother Ed. Yockum, of Mapleton, North Dakota. He has been in ill health for a long time, and suffered a stroke prior to his death. Left to mourn are his wife and four children.

The sympathy of the Saints is extended to the bereaved family.

The contest between the Willing Workers and the Busy Bees resulted in the latter team winning by one hundred and forty-three points. The losing side entertained the winners with a party. The children's group met at the home of Brother John Rotzien the afternoon of December 31, and the adults and young people gathered at the home of Brother Ratcliff in the evening. Members were divided into groups for making candy and pop-corn balls and playing games. Merriment marked their watch for the new year.

IRENE E. ROTZIEN.

Cleveland, Ohio

Cleveland Branch observed Christmas with programs on Sunday, December 21, the children presenting an attractive entertainment in the morning. In the evening the branch musical director was in charge, and the "message of the season" came from the pastor, P. E. Farrow. There were solos from our talented singers, and anthems from the choir and from a female chorus. Meditation, organ music, and Christmas carols contributed to the enjoyment of the evening.

For this day the church was prettily decorated by Sister A. E. Mehlisch with evergreens, poinsettias, and a large painting by Frank Webbe, of the manger scene.

The evening of December 23 the church school had a Christmas tree entertainment. The program was in charge of Arlene Andes, S. Talbot, and Virginia Webbe. The children took their parts well, and Santa Claus distributed the Sunday school treat.

"Mispha" is the name given a club recently organized and composed of thirty-six members of the younger people. The object of this organization is to further a congenial feeling among this group by social affairs and entertainments both pleasant and remunerative.

The Boy Scouts have reorganized under the leadership of Rex Mason, and at present number sixteen members. A flag was given the scouts by Sister Bradley.

We are beginning the new year with optimism, regardless of the depressing times, and though a number are confined to their homes through illness our services are well attended.

Bisbee, Arizona

Bisbee enjoyed a visit from Elder George H. Wixom, who arrived December 16 and preached that evening. He also preached Thursday, Friday, and Saturday evenings and Sunday morning. Then followed a basket lunch at the club building where we meet. In the afternoon he baptized Ira Cunningham, whom he had interested in the gospel in previous visits while he acted as state missionary. Last May he baptized Sister Cunningham, along with several others. We are happy to see the husband and wife united in the gospel and feel that two staunch members have been added to this branch. They were thoroughly converted before they asked for baptism.

Sunday evening the Christmas program was well given. Brother Wixom then departed for his home in San Bernardino, California, for the holidays. We enjoy his visits and hope his travels again bring him this way.

State Missionary S. S. Smith arrived in Bisbee the morning of January 10 and preached that evening to a good congregation. He preached again Sunday morning and in the evening, besides giving a short talk to the Religio. In his morning sermon he urged the Saints to pay their tithing. He has promised to return in about six weeks.

The young people of the branch have reorganized the Department of Recreation and Expression, and they presented a good program Sunday evening. This will surely result in growing interest in church activities among the young people.

Our Departed Ones

THOMAS.—Agnes Agatha Abraham was born October 30, 1893, at Au Sable, Michigan. She became a member of the church February 22, 1914, being inducted into the kingdom by E. A. Thomas at Cleveland, Ohio. Was the wife of Benjamin Heber Thomas, of Detroit, Michigan, and the mother of three children, Howard, Virginia, and B. H. Junior. She passed away January 1, 1931, at Detroit, leaving her family, other relatives, and many friends and neighbors. She was a devoted member of the church and a good wife, mother, and home builder. The funeral sermon was by Hubert Case.

MARTIN.—Charles B. Martin was born January 14, 1867, at Pomeroy, Ohio, and joined the church March 20, 1904, at Woodbine, Iowa, being baptized by W. A. Smith. He died January 3, 1931, in Kansas City, Kansas, where his funeral was conducted by George Richards and H. H. Sevy. For several years he was a great sufferer, but many times he received a blessing through administration. Beautiful floral offerings came from the orders of conductors and trainmen, of whom he was a fellow worker for years. The deceased was a friend to the ministry, and the circle of his friendship included many people. Surviving are his wife, Nellie Hawley Martin, three daughters: Mrs. Roberta Scofield, Lincoln, Nebraska; Mrs. Chloe Swam, Kansas City, Kansas; and Mrs. Corinne Glass, Kansas City, Missouri. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

HARTMAN.—John Arthur Hartman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde E. Hartman, was born in Independence, Missouri, June 12, 1917, and passed from this life January 8, 1931, at the home of his parents, 1404 South Osage Street. John was a student at the Alton School. He leaves to mourn his passing his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde E. Hartman; three sisters: Ola Ruth, Bernice Evelyn, Elsie Lee; his grandfather, Mr. Mell Henderson, of Kansas City, Missouri, a number of other relatives, and many friends. Funeral services were held from the Enoch Hill Church, Sunday, January 11. Elder W. D. Bullard delivered the sermon, assisted by Elder O. W. Sarratt. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

NELSON.—Wallace Arnold Nelson, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Nelson, was born October 18, 1906, in Francis, Saskatchewan, Canada; passed from this life December 28, 1930, while bathing in the Pacific Ocean at Venice Beach, California. For the past ten months Wallace had made his home in South Pasadena, California, being employed by the National Theatre Supply Company. On October 18, 1914, he united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, being baptized and confirmed by Elder Thomas J. Jordan, at Benson, Canada. Wallace was a graduate of Graceland College, belonging to the class of 1926; he also was a graduate of the University of Chicago, year 1928. His father and mother having preceded him in death, he leaves to mourn his passing three sisters: Mrs. K. C. Harder, Woodbine, Iowa; Miss Doris Nelson, Des Moines, Iowa; and Miss Marie Nelson, Steamboat Rock, Iowa; his grandmother, Mrs. Sarah L. Weed, of Phoenix, Arizona, a number of other relatives, and a host of friends. Funeral services were held from Stahl's Funeral Home Saturday, January 10. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was the speaker, assisted by President Floyd McDowell. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, at Independence, Missouri.

JOHNSTON.—George Johnston was born at Atchison, Kansas, January 9, 1871, and passed away at Spokane, Washington, December 1, 1930. He was baptized July 15, 1891, and was a faithful member for thirty-nine years. Was ordained an elder December 14, 1913, in Spokane, by T. C. Kelley and G. W. Wilcox. The funeral was held in the Spokane Church, Patriarch Richard Baldwin preaching a wonderful sermon. Interment was at Riverside Cemetery, Spokane. Left to mourn are his widow, Lulu B., his three daughters: Elizabeth, Ethel, and Margaret; a niece, Mrs. B. F. Moats, of Kansas City, and one brother, Atchison, Kansas.

MAYNARD.—Frances Shippy, daughter of John and Sophronia Shippy, was born in Laporte, Indiana, October 23, 1842. She became a member of the church June 15, 1879, at Cedar Springs, Ontario, being baptized by George Cleveland, and spent her life in service to her church. At the reunions each summer at Erie Beach, she was a devoted listener. She passed beyond December 18, 1930, at her home in Cedar Springs, where she had lived more than sixty years, beloved by all her neighbors. The funeral was conducted by Elder David Snobelen in the Saints' church, choirs of the United Church of Canada and the Saints' church singing some of her favorite hymns. She was a beloved relative and friend and a good neighbor. Left to mourn are four sons: Fred, John, and Gilbert, of Cedar Springs, and Alex, of Alberta; and a daughter, Mrs. Henry Dammam, of Detroit. Her husband died seventeen years ago. There also survive a sister, Mrs. Walter Claus (Miriam Shippy), of Harrow, Ontario; and a brother, Saleda Shippy, Lamoni.

GIVENS.—Ruth Martha Givens was born July 14, 1908, at Wellsburg, West Virginia. She was baptized into the church in 1916 by Elder L. D. Ullom. Died December 29, 1930, at her home in East Liverpool, Ohio. She leaves her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Givens, four brothers: Hyrum, Samuel, Clarence, and Raymond; and one sister, Mae. Funeral services were held in the home in charge of Elder William Richards, sermon by Elder James E. Bishop. Interment was at Bellaire, Ohio.

The Auditorium

About five years ago, to be exact on February 1, 1926, work was begun on the Auditorium. That occurred after a delay of some years following the subscriptions and donations from Saints and friends for that purpose. It had been my fond hope that work on the edifice would be continuous until completed; but that is another hope delayed by circumstances and conditions.

However, we can congratulate ourselves that it is in a state where it can in some of its appointments be used continuously and in others occasionally as demanded. Two General Conferences have been held in the spacious auditorium, and its great advantage, though only partially completed, causes some of us to look forward with renewed hope to the day when the whole building will be finished and ready for general and local continuous use.

Even with its facilities limited by its incomplete state, the building has become a part of church activities and life which is noteworthy, and it is at least my hope that its functions may be gradually expanded, though present conditions have forced a cessation in the work of completion indefinite in duration.

Buildings and building program mark stages in a people's development, and it is an interesting matter of conjecture what the Auditorium will eventually symbolize in the life and progress of our people.

On Following Jesus

Nothing is ordinary. Nothing is humdrum. Nothing in any corner of the earth is commonplace. Everywhere there is that which is beautiful and true and just if we have eyes to see it. But the rush of the age has blinded us to many rare benefits. Modern miracles of light and comfort and conveyance and entertainment are accepted as matters of course and are not appreciated until their contributions to society are suddenly denied. Not only that, but we in our blindness are hourly passing by opportunities for the little tendernesses, courtesies, and cheering acts which make life livable. We boast that we live in a machine age, and talk long and learnedly of efficiency, advertising, large scale production, and scientific methods. But in those extraordinarily rare moments between finishing one task and beginning another, we come face to face with ourselves and the realities of life, and are dissatisfied. We wonder.

Just how far do cheering words go in the lives of the sad? How much do children appreciate fair and courteous answers to their questions? What is the standing of one who is not afraid to show tenderness to an old person? Are these after all such little matters? How do they compare with catching that seven o'clock bus? with getting that business matter transacted on the dot? with making that ten-mile drive as fast as possible? with getting through Saturday's work so you can spend the afternoon at golf or a movie? Jesus, too, was a busy man, but he had time for such things, and in the doing he gave them grandeur. "Be of good cheer," he told his disciples. "Suffer little children, . . . to come unto me." "I have compassion on the multitude."

Christ, our Master, loved men and women, and babes he took in his arms and blessed. His short life compels the admiration of all men, whether they admit his divinity or not, because he was kind and just and truthful and helpful. His teaching was of superior quality because he lived what he taught. Here is a single incident which tells us some of the things required of those who wish to follow him:

And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honor thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. The young man saith unto him, All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet? Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me.

Are we today as much interested in treasures in heaven as we are in bank savings and life insurance? Are we following Jesus? What lack we yet?

Teaching Church History by Visual Methods

Much has been said during the last few years of the efficacy of visual education. It is not a new thing, though the use of the moving picture and more recently the "talkie" for that purpose are late developments. Our missionaries who have used charts for years could give a testimony as to the value of visual illustrations.

Although they are not yet ready to present their methods in writing, some of our more energetic missionaries have made use of opportunities to use little dramatic sketches to present and teach the principles of the gospel and the laws of the church. We hope to be able to present some definite material on this work at a later time.

Those who like to follow the news of Independence will have noticed reference to the presentation, for several Sunday evenings, of the "Conversations" by President Elbert A. Smith. These are historical episodes written for dramatic presentation which appeared in our magazine Vision from January to November, 1930.

It is impossible to give in print an adequate notion of the effect of these plays. The Stone Church has been filled, practically every seat taken, during the series. The audiences have been there and ready by 7.30 each time. Then there has been a half hour of singing of the old songs of the church, expressing as they do the hopes and aspirations of the people; and then the plays, and finally a short talk of explanation. This was what was seen and heard; but there was a spirit present that could only be felt, and it was sensed by the whole of the large assembly. The results have been far finer than anyone had hoped. The "Conversations" are to be recommended to all branches that have not yet used them.

Miracle

A miracle, so called, is not an impossibility at all. That miracles should be is the most scientific of statements. A so-called miracle is merely the putting by God, over against the forces the laws governing whose operation we at best partially understand, certain other forces the laws governing whose operation we do not comprehend. I can, in a limited way, act similarly myself. Here is a book. Suppose I drop it out of my hand. It will drop down and hit the ground, by operation of the law of gravitation. But when it is half way down I thrust out my hand and catch it. Have I broken the law of gravitation? Is it violated? Do the sun and the moon and the stars stop acting according to gravita-tion's law and fly into everlasting chaos? They do not. The old law of gravitation is still working. I have, however, interposed a force, my arm moved by my will, the law of which supersedes in this instance the lower law of gravitation. Personality has overcome impersonal force. So is it in infinite degree with God. He has at his command innumerable laws the nature of which we do not comprehend, according to which His Supreme Personality can interfere with normal effects of lower laws without destroying those laws in the least degree. If one admits that God is, and that God loves us, then follows the inevitability of God doing often just this sort of thing.—Bernard I. Bell.

Return of the "Little Journeys"

Other members of the Editorial Staff are glad to receive again one of the popular "Little Journeys with the Editor in Chief." Readers, too, will welcome them. They have been eagerly followed in the past, and we have received many inquiries as to when they were to be resumed. At this time, then, we resume. President Smith intimates, in this latest contribution, that he may have more of them. We hope that he will find time and opportunity to fulfill the promise.

Hints for Speakers and Writers

DON'T SEND CARBON COPIES

By L. L.

There are three prize abominations that enter the editor's office, usually by stealth. The first is the illegible handwritten manuscript, the second is the single-spaced typewritten manuscript, and the third is the carbon copy.

The carbon copy provides an easy means for an author to preserve an exact duplicate of the article he has sent to the editor. It saves time and labor, and if the original is lost it saves the great difficulty of reproducing the article.

But the carbon copy smudges easily. Every time your hand and sleeve touch it, they carry away some of the sooty color, to the detriment of both hands and sleeves. Besides, each such contact blurs the print and spreads the color over the page. Now it happens that both in editorial rooms and in printing shops, the copy furnished by the author has to be handled many times and by a number of people. Before it has gone far, it is usually illegible and so messy that no one can tell what was originally printed there.

Publishers who pay for manuscripts can and do demand a fairly strict observance of the rules we have been presenting in the "Hints." However, editors who receive writings from authors who contribute gratuitously must often take what they get, make the best of it, and not complain. In these little articles we are trying to give our contributors these suggestions, because they will benefit the writers as well as the editors. Everybody who wishes to do a job wishes to do it well. Our contributors in general are people who are happy to receive suggestions, to cooperate, and try to improve.

The Auditorium Welcomes the World

NUMBER TWO

By H. A. Koehler

So great have been the numbers of visitors to the Auditorium that from three to eight guides are kept busy on Sundays and on holidays. As they explain the features and purpose of the building, they have an exceptional opportunity to tell the story of the church. This is especially important as nine tenths of those visiting the building are nonmembers.

It is surprisingly evident that the great majority of visitors to the Auditorium have been led to confuse the Reorganized Church with other factions growing out of the original faith. The nonmember visitor usually asks this question: "What is the difference between your organization and the Utah Mormons?" It is, of course, not difficult to establish the identity of our church, once the question is asked. The few words of explanation necessary are eagerly and thankfully received by visitors to the Auditorium; for indeed the outstanding characteristics of Latter Day Saintism, as taught and believed by the Reorganized Church, clearly and satisfactorily identify it as the true successor of the original church. An explanation of our social principles stimulates many to ask questions concerning our belief, and all have a better understanding of the church before they leave the building.

In June, 152 Christians, 141 Methodists, 132 Baptists, 82 Mormons, 75 Catholics, 72 Latter Day Saints, 56 Lutherans, 32 Presbyterians, 9 Congregational, 9 Unity, 3 Brethren, 3 Evangelical, and 1 Unitarian registered.

In August, when the largest number of visitors was recorded, out of approximately 1,800 people who came to visit the building, 118 were Latter Day Saints, while 64 were Utah Mormons, 134 Methodists, 74 were Baptists, and a proportionate number were members of other churches. There are hundreds who do not give their church affiliations.

Approximately 7,250 pieces of church literature have been distributed to persons whose interest has been aroused by personal interviews with the guide while they were being conducted through the Auditorium. Thousands of sermons have been preached on such occasions to as many eager listeners. In the first place, the visitors voluntarily come to the Auditorium and then while there they are willing listeners to our story. When we find people who are interested, we communicate with the authorities of the church in the places where these people reside so that the contact thus made may be followed up.

Two experiences show what splendid opportunities the guides have to interest the people. One professor from a certain college brought twenty-three young students, each of whom will become a professor. We took them from the "cat walk" under the dome to the rooms underneath the main Auditorium. A more interesting group has seldom visited the building, and for an hour and a half they listened to an explanation of interesting features concerning the Auditorium and the church in general.

At another time a minister of a large church in Kansas City, in company with his wife and servants, was shown through the building. While engaged in conversation discussing religious matters, this minister said to his two servants, "Come here, Sambo and Liza, I want you to hear what this man is saying." At parting he said, "Mr. Koehler, I want to hear more concerning your people."

The increasing number of visitors is giving wide publicity to the mission and program of the church. The guides on duty at the Auditorium reach a great many more nonmembers by personal contact over a period of months than the same number of missionaries in the field would interview in the same length of time.

God Is Your Help

Let your life be a life of faith. Do not go timidly about, inquiring what others think, and what others say. It seems the easiest; it is the most difficult thing in life to do this. Believe in God. God is near you. Throw yourself fearlessly upon him. Trembling mortal, there is an unknown light within your soul which will wake when you command. The day may come when all that is human, man and woman, will fall off from you, as they did from Christ. Let his strength be yours. Be independent of them all now. The Father is with you. Look to him, and he will save you.—Robertson.

Righteousness and Prosperity

By J. A. Koehler

NUMBER ONE

I recall very distinctly the general character of the sermons preached by our ministry when I first came in contact with the Latter Day Saint Church; particularly the sermons preached for the instruction of the nonmember. I heard many sermons based on such texts as Acts 2: 38: "Repent and be baptized . . . and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is to you . . ." And I recall very clearly that such scripture was commonly used to test the divinity of every gospel taught by every other church people. "The promise is to you," we said, "and if that promise is not fulfilled in you, it is because your righteousness is not the righteousness of God."

In those days there seems to have been a conviction that righteousness has its certain reward; and that conviction found expression in several different forms. While such texts as Acts 2: 38 were used to test the discipleship of the individual, Mark 16 and other similar texts, "These signs shall follow them that believe," were used to test the divinity of churches as such. Such scripture was often used by laity and ministry alike in religious controversies (or theological controversies as the case may be) to prove that other churches were not of divine origin, or that they had lost favor with God. Righteousness has its own reward; only the unrighteous do not realize upon the promises of God.

Whether or not this contention on the part of the Latter Day Saint Church members was warranted by their own personal and corporate experiences in the gospel is a question on which there is some diversity of opinion. However, this much is certain—very early in the experiences of the people of Bible times, it had become a settled conviction that "righteousness exalteth." Christianity has practical utility. Its doctrines prove out in human experience. God is true. Whatsoever is sown, that also shall the reaping be. "Prove me," has always been the challenge of the Christian religion.

There are two aspects of righteousness: (1) the personal aspect, and (2) the social aspect. There is a right and a wrong to every phase of conduct: social as well as personal; public as well as private; collective as well as individual; political as well as devotional. Every phase of human experience is governed by law. And it is just as certain that for the keeping of the law of God by peoples "there is great reward," as it is that for the keeping of the law of God by individuals "there is great reward."

I repeat this truth, for it is a truth that church men generally have overlooked; few there be who seem to have apprehended it: the righteousness of God is as certainly the hope of social prosperity for the peoples of the church as it is of their spiritual prosperity. The economic aspect of human experience is as subject to the law of God as is the devotional aspect. It is as much the duty of Christian peoples to make their economic behavior orderly, efficient, and just as it is to make their ritualism instructive and sublime. Every aspect of social behavior, whether it has to do with the family, the church, or the community, is subject to the law of God.

It is this social aspect of righteousness which conditions the peace, the prosperity, and the happiness of peoples. Look where you will—to Moses, to Isaiah, to Malachi; or to Jesus. All the prophets of the Christian religion have affirmed this truth: that peoples as such have duties to God. And because they comprehended this truth they called their peoples to higher levels of corporate righteousness, forecasting the glories that must arise from the godly behavior of peoples, and predicting the calamities that must overtake the nations that forget God.

Just now the nations of the world are in the throes of an economic calamity. Unemployment is driving millions to desperation. And the proof that this calamity is the wages of social unrighteousness is the fact that the struggle for emancipation from economic serfdom is taking place in the midst of plenty. We have scarcely begun to exploit our natural resources. Our production continually outruns our consumption. What we offer for sale is more than the money we receive as wages enables us to buy. And every man's hand is against his neighbor in the most titanic business struggle the race has ever seen.

Here is the wages of sin for peoples. And the peoples of the church share the inevitable fate of those who forget God. The nations that forget God shall be sent into hell. Sin never was happiness. It never will be. It can not be. Confusion; chaos; disorder; strife; exploitation—these, with their resultant unemployment, excessive riches on one hand and poverty on the other, and the hatred these engender in the hearts of men—these are Babylon.

But these are not the kingdom. The kingdom is order, efficiency, justice, and their resultant peace, prosperity, and happiness. And so with the call of God to redeem Zion—to set up the government; to build the kingdom—there was made this promise. It is not an arbitrary decree. It is the law; the law of God; it is the law of life for peoples. This is the promise: "If Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her." The willing and the obedient shall eat of the good of the land. Zion shall be a place of peace, of safety, and of refuge. Righteousness shall exalt the people. "The promise is to you"—Zion. Only the unrighteous do not realize upon the promises of God. And hence, if this promise is not fulfilled in us, it is because our righteousness is not the righteousness of God.

I say, while ministers of our church and laity alike censure spiritual poverty in other church peoples as the unmistakable effect of their unrighteousness, they do not conceive their own temporal poverty to be the effects of their own ungodly misbehavior. They feel and act as if these promises to Zion were arbitrary; as if they were not conditioned in any natural law; as if the realization of these promises awaits only the personal pleasure of God. And this they do in an unconscious endeavor to escape the conviction of their own unrighteousness.

I find few men who distinguish "a people" from a "population," or from a membership of a church which is scattered from Dan to Beersheba. A people is a whole mass of persons who live within a definite area and who have some form of self-government of the essential activities of life. If the men of the church understood this, they should know that both the possibilities and the responsibilities of the peoples of the church are both different from and greater than the possibilities and responsibilities of individual men whose life activities are but indefinite parts of a heterogeneous and discordant and almost aimless population.

The business of peoples is government. It is the business of peoples to secure individual rights and the fulfillment of individual obligations. It is the business of peoples to set men in proper relations to each other in association; to direct the course of its civilization; to maintain order, and to administer justice. Government is the business of peoples. And it is the duty, it is the responsibility, of peoples to attend to this business.

And the possibilities of self-government for peoples are gathered up in the promises to Zion if she will make her self-government the embodiment of the will of God. These possibilities are prosperity, territorial expansion, numerical strength, glory, independence, peace, happiness, and honor. And because the business of peoples is government, it has become a maxim of the race that the glory of a nation is the peace, the prosperity, and the happiness of its peoples. These imply order, efficiency, and justice. They are the tests of godly government.

Latter Day Saints are called to be "A People." This is the unmistakable logic of the doctrines of the gathering; of Zion; of stewardships; of community organization. It is our task to set up the government of God. It is our business to build the kingdom. It is our calling to redeem Zion. This is our joint responsibility—to give direction to our group life and to control our corporate behavior in accordance with Christian ideals and purposes.

This call of God to us men of the church to establish ourselves as peoples is a positive provision for maintaining the authority of the Christian religion; i. e., to prove that it works under test. By "test" I mean under controlled conditions. This understanding of the purposes of God touching us is the light which has come to us and which means certain tribulation if we walk in darkness, and certain peace, prosperity, and happiness if we walk in the light.

This affords me an opportunity to say something about our present stewardship attempt at Atherton through the columns of the Herald. I have turned away reporters of cosmopolitan newspapers. I have said that we are not ready to talk. I have even provoked some of our own people by my persistent refusal to be inveigled into any sort of publicity stunt. And I will tell you why. It is because I am not yet ready to exhibit Atherton and say: This is what a church of 100,000 members is putting into its attempt to set up the government of God. This is the importance they attach to their calling; this is how much they are concerned about realizing the kingdom.

Our progress has been so slow, and we seem so reluctant to move out in a way to show our faith by our works. I can point to single families in the Latter Day Saint Church who put more into their own private business adventures for gain than all of us together are putting into our public business of redeeming Zion for righteousness' sake. And I am not proud of the fact.

But last week I did talk to a representative of a syndicate of newspapers. And if the story of Atherton is accepted by them, I hope that its publication will shame us into an attempt to make Atherton a testimony of our devotion to the cause of righteousness, and a witness to the divinity of the Restoration movement.

Now, when we say that the certain rewards of social righteousness are peace, prosperity, and happiness—and this we have done repeatedly—if we are intellectually honest we must confess that the test of our righteousness as a people is our peace, our prosperity, and our happiness.

I don't like to paint the picture as it is seen in such a test. I would not do it except to change it from an ugly picture to one that is beautiful. It makes little difference whether we contemplate peace from the standpoint of the individual soul, of our church congregationally, or of the business life of our people. It makes little difference whether we contemplate prosperity from the standpoint of our spiritual experiences, of our members, or of our enjoyment of wealth. The facts are distressing. They speak for themselves. And the language of the facts is much more convincing than any that can be penned.

My fellow Latter Day Saints, what is the level of our righteousness as it is revealed in such a test? Is our social righteousness the righteousness of the gospel? Is our group behavior the embodiment of the will of God? Have we molded our mass into the kingdom?

We see the outcome of our corporate behavior; of our economic conduct; of our social righteousness. It is not the righteousness of God. It can not save. It can not satisfy. If we would be an exalted people, we must be a righteous people. If we would have peace, we must walk in the ways of peace. If we would be happy, we must be right. Righteousness exalteth a people.

In following articles I will continue this discussion in an attempt (1) to point out the cause of our present situation, and (2) to elucidate the relations between righteousness and prosperity.

Report of the Department of Statistics

By Carroll L. Olson, Statistician

During the month of December the following numbers of the various types of reports were received, resulting in the indicated changes in the total net enrollment of the church:

Enrollment of the church as of December 1, 1930.....	108,383
December baptisms .....	177
Gains from the unknown.....	15
Gains by correction.....	3
Total gain .....	195
Deaths .....	100
Expulsions .....	30
Losses by correction.....	17
Total loss .....	147
Net gain during the month.....	48
Enrollment of the church as of January 1, 1931.....	108,431
Transfers .....	604
Blessings .....	166
Marriages .....	73
Ordinations .....	29
Divorces .....	12
Silenced .....	1
New Branch .....	1

The 177 baptisms reported during December bring the grand total for the year 1930 to 4,208 baptisms. While this is not as great a number as had been expected at the beginning of the year, it nevertheless reflects a very creditable degree of missionary activity. It is well above the average for the past ten years and has been exceeded by only two years in the decade, namely 1921 and 1929. Therefore, when one reviews the many difficulties which the church has been obliged to meet during the past year, especially along financial lines, the degree of missionary zeal shown is encouraging.

During the month of December the outstanding district was the Detroit District, which reported a total of 17 baptisms. Seven of these were performed at Detroit by Missionary Hubert Case. The other 10 baptisms were performed by Missionary A. E. Boos, 7 being credited to the Pontiac Branch, 2 to Orion, and one to Flint. This brings the Detroit District total for the year to 188.

The Central Illinois District reported 14 baptisms during the month, all of them performed by Missionary H. V. Minton. Ten of these took place at Taylorville and the other 4 at Decatur.

The Central Oklahoma District was credited with 12 baptisms during December, 10 of which were performed at Sperry by Missionary William Bath. Tulsa had two baptisms, one performed by Elder F. H. Cunningham and the other by Elder Earl D. Bailey.

The branches and district nonresident groups outside the stakes which reported 3 or more baptisms are the following:

	Baptisms
Sperry, Oklahoma .....	10
Taylorville, Illinois .....	10
Florida Nonresident .....	9
Detroit, Michigan .....	7
Marlin, Texas .....	7
Pontiac, Michigan .....	7
Ludington, Michigan .....	6
Freedom, Oklahoma .....	5
Onaway, Michigan .....	5
Decatur, Illinois .....	4
Des Moines Nonresident.....	4
Limerick, Ohio .....	4
Arkansas Nonresident .....	3
Brush Creek, Illinois.....	3
Deselm, Illinois .....	3
Edmonton, Alberta .....	3
Twin Creek, Kansas .....	3
Woodbine, Iowa .....	3

The 18 branches and nonresident groups listed above had a total of 96 baptisms. In addition to them, 10 branches and one nonresident group reported two baptisms each, and 24 branches and one nonresident group reported one baptism each. This accounts for a total of 143 baptisms for the United States and Canada outside the stakes.

Zion and the stakes lined up as follows:

	Baptisms
Lamoni Stake .....	9
City of Zion.....	5
Kansas City Stake.....	4
Far West Stake.....	1
Total .....	19

The British Isles Mission reported 9 baptisms in December and the Norwegian Mission 6 baptisms. This means that Norway has reported 7 baptisms during the year, which is a very creditable showing when one considers that they had only 72 members of the church in Norway at the beginning of the year.

SUMMARY FOR THE YEAR 1930

Inasmuch as this is the last report for the year 1930, we have decided to give herewith the standings of all the districts, stakes and foreign missions in respect to baptisms by showing the objective, total baptisms reported, and the percentage of objective achieved for each. These figures are as follows:

Name	Objective	Total Baptisms	Percent Achieved
City of Zion	375	174	46
Far West Stake	190	104	55
Holden Stake	140	113	81
Kansas City Stake	250	170	68

British Isles	100	29	29
Continental Europe	50	27	54
Hawaii	30	36	120
Society Islands	120	82	69

In analyzing the preceding table it should be borne in mind that the average for the church as a whole is 60.1 per cent. Therefore, those districts, stakes, and missions which are above this percentage are above the average, and those which are below this figure are below the average. The stakes as a whole averaged 58.5 per cent, the districts 61.2 per cent, and the foreign missions 52.0 per cent.

Toward the grand total of 4,208 baptisms for the year, the stakes contributed 641, the districts 3,307, and the foreign missions, 260.

The following summary shows the number of the various types of reports received during the year, together with the indicated changes in the total net enrollment of the church:

Total enrollment of the church January 1, 1930.....	106,140
Baptisms during the year .....	4,208
Gains from the unknown .....	444
Net gain by correction .....	4
Total gain .....	4,658
Deaths regularly reported .....	1,085
Deaths on disorganized file assumed because of age .....	1,062
Expulsions .....	218
Total loss .....	2,365

Net gain during the twelve-month period ..... 2,291
 Total enrollment of the church January 1, 1930.....108,431

It is interesting to note in the above summary that in addition to the gains by baptism during the year a total of 444 names were transferred from the Unknown File to the counted membership of the church. In each of these cases contacts were established or renewed between the branch, district, or stake officers and the individuals concerned. In addition some appropriate literature has been sent out to them from the Herald Publishing House.

A total of 1,085 deaths were reported in the regular manner. This is slightly above the average for the past ten years, but of course an increase must be expected as the church grows in age and in numbers. On the other hand, some of these additional death reports are for deaths which occurred years ago but have just come to our attention during the year as a result of the continuous effort which is being carried on throughout the church to bring the records up-to-date.

One thousand and sixty-two deaths on the Disorganized File were assumed because of the extreme age of these names enrolled therewith and because nothing had been heard of such individuals in many cases for as much as twenty or thirty years. The matter of counting out such names as losses by death assumed was discussed beforehand with the First Presidency and bears their approval.

In regard to the total number of expulsions reported during the year, it is interesting to note it in comparison with the number of baptisms. The ratio is 1 to 21. This means that for every expulsion during the year there were 21 baptisms. So the loss from this cause is relatively very small.

The next summary shows how the various types of changes have affected the main subdivisions of our church membership, namely, the stakes, districts of U. S. and Canada, unorganized territory, foreign, disorganized, and suspense accounts:

ganized File from 6,222 to 4,928 or a decrease of 1,294. Contributing largely to this decrease were the assumed deaths previously referred to, but in addition to them, 296 persons were located and properly enrolled with some active branch

	Enrollment Jan. 1, 1930	Baptisms	Gains by Transfer	Loss by Transfer	Deaths	Expelled	Enrollment Jan. 1, 1931
The Stakes	16,117	641	1,443	2,300	165	12	15,724
Dists. of U. S. and Canada	74,027	3,223	4,978	5,312	720	160	76,036
Unorganized Territory	2,025	82	340	444	23	22	1,958
Sub-Totals U. S. & Can.	92,169	3,946	6,761	8,056	908	194	93,718
Foreign Missions	6,261	262	23	48	84	22	6,392
Totals for Membership Properly Enrolled	98,430	4,208	6,784	8,104	992	216	100,110
Disorganized File	6,222		113	296	1,110	1	4,928
Suspense Accounts	1,488		2,616	665	45	1	3,393
Sub-Totals	7,710		2,729	961	1,155	2	8,321
Grand Totals	106,140	4,208	9,513	9,065	2,147	218	108,431

It will be observed in the above that there has been a loss of 393 in the number enrolled with the stakes, including Independence. This was due to the fact that at the first of the year the Kansas City Stake sent over a list of over 1,400 names of persons who were unknown to the stake officers and which were therefore transferred from the stake file to a suspense account.

Unorganized territory has also had a loss in its total membership. This was because in checking over this file we found a large number of names there enrolled which should have been counted with various organized districts, whereupon proper transfers were made.

The total for membership properly enrolled has increased from 98,430 to 100,110, an increase of 1,680. This increase would have been greater had it not been for the great loss taken with respect to the Kansas City Stake and other stakes and districts in a lesser degree.

We have been able to cut down the number of the Disor-or district, and 48 deaths were reported in the regular manner.

The suspense accounts, we are sorry to note, have shown an increase. In addition to 1,434 names reported unknown by the Kansas City Stake, other stakes and districts have added 1,182, making the total reported unknown during the year of 2,616. However, upon a person being reported unknown to this office, we immediately set in operation means of locating him, and as a result 665 such persons have been located, 45 reported as deaths and 1 as an expulsion. This total of 665 persons located should be added to the 444 names gained from the Unknown File during the year to make a grand total of 1,109 persons thus prevented from becoming entirely lost.

In addition to the reports above indicated, the following were also received: 2,006 blessings, 1,273 marriages, 351 ordinations, 70 divorces, 21 silences, 5 restored, 7 new branches, 17 branches disorganized, and 76 deaths on the Unknown File.

A New Book

Religions and Philosophies in the United States of America, Julius A. Weber, Compiler. Wetzel Publishing Company, Los Angeles, California. Order from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, price, $2.50.

The compiler of this book has sought to produce at once an authoritative and an unprejudiced account of the religions and philosophies that have achieved standing and membership in the United States. To accomplish his end, he has asked officials of each organization to issue a statement concerning the work they represent.

The result is at once informative and interesting.

And it is surprisingly current. The book tells what these organizations and philosophies are today, not what they were at their beginnings. A single reader might, with long study and much research, collect the information that it presents, but he would not be able to find such information elsewhere in a single volume. Needless to say, it is valuable.

Members of our own faith will be happy to know that we have been allowed the liberal assignment of six pages in which to present the claims of the church. This book will carry an introduction to many people who would not otherwise hear or know of the church.

Reaching the Source of Spiritual Power

By Evan A. Fry

The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!"—Matthew 6: 22, 23.

One morning my alarm clock went off as usual, and I climbed sleepily out of bed and began pawing over the wall for the light switch. It was in the usual place, and I had no difficulty in finding it after I got myself wide awake enough to know what I was doing, but the customary flick of my finger failed to bring the usual response in the electric bulb. I went through the house trying other switches in the hope that perhaps only part of the lights were affected, but found them all dead as the first. Then began a search for matches and a candle. I knew exactly where the matches were, and I thought I knew exactly where there were numerous small candles left over from some forgotten party, but a long search failed to find them. I thought of my flashlight, but I knew that the bulb in it was burned out. After burning a handful of matches and scorching the ends of my fingers several times in the process, I succeeded in locating a large and unwieldy candle which could be propped up to give me enough light to find my way into my clothes.

When I finally had made myself fairly presentable, I headed as usual for the radio studio. Everything there was equally dark, and not only dark, but silent. As I came past the generator room I missed the usual steady hum of the motor-generator unit. Evidently some portion of our usually efficient municipal power plant had failed, and a goodly portion of the town was without either lights or power.

An investigation by telephone brought the information that a fire in the neighborhood of the power plant had burned down the transmission lines which carried the electricity to our part of town. The power plant was still as efficient as ever; it had steam up as usual, and the generators there were whirling at the usual rate of speed, but all that equipment and all that power were doing no one any good because the connecting link between the source of power and the consumer was broken and melted in two. The lights in my house and in the other houses all over town were in just as good condition as they had been the night before, and the electrical apparatus of the radio station was in equally good order, but the lack of two or three little strands of copper wire tied up every light and every piece of electrical equipment in the neighborhood.

No, I'm not telling you this story to advertise the Independence light plant, or to warn you to keep a candle or flashlight handy for such emergencies. I think that this story can be made into a parable, or at least into an allegory.

All light, spiritual or physical, is the product of energy. The electricity which lights our homes can be traced in every instance to that great source of all the world's energy—the sun. The great source of all spiritual energy, as well as the giver of the energy of the sun, is our heavenly Father. His supply of power and potential light is limitless; the boilers always have an adequate head of steam, and the generators always maintain a speed great enough to supply the greatest demand that man can put upon them. And yet, how pathetic it is to see men who need the light and strength that God can give, refuse even to reach out and turn a switch which will bring that light into their soul! They continue day after day to grope around in the darkness of sin and worldly pleasure, just as I groped in the dark for matches and a candle that morning.

And then there are the men who reach out and turn the switch, as I tried to turn the light switch, and who are so disgruntled and disappointed when nothing happens that they declare that God has gone out of business; that he no longer hears prayer or helps his human creation. By some far stretch of the imagination I might have surmised last Tuesday after my futile attempts at illumination that the light plant had quit business—but it hadn't; all that was needed was a few feet of copper wire. We know that God is the same yesterday, today, and for ever; he has not gone out of business. If our souls and our whole bodies are not filled with light, there is need of a connection somewhere—usually a very small connection, and God will meet us more than half way if we will but attempt to complete it.

Unfortunate indeed is the man who has never felt the light of God within his soul, but a thousand times more unfortunate than he is the man who has felt and known that light and who has then allowed the connection between himself and the power house to burn through or fall into disrepair. The darkness of that morning was all the more intense to me and to the other people, because for month after month we have been accustomed to having all the light we needed. The darkness seemed darker by contrast with the light which we had previously known, and we groped unfamiliarly about the homes that had been so familiar to us in the accustomed light.

If you have never tapped that source of limitless spiritual power, may I suggest this morning that you lose no time in running a line to the great power house of God? And if you already have opened a line, and have partaken of his boundless energy, and light, be sure that nothing comes to interfere with that connection which will fill your bodies perpetually with glorious light. And may I suggest, too, that you do not neglect to snap the little switch of prayer each morning, so that the light of God's Spirit may constantly flood your soul.

The Way of Salvation

By W. J. Haworth

Recently an American minister asked me if the Latter Day Saints in Australia taught the same as those in Independence. Upon my replying in the affirmative, he more particularly referred to the ordinance of baptism and asked if we thought it saved men. My reply was to the effect that ultimate salvation depended upon a great many other things and the observance of all the Savior's commands. While conveying the information that he had baptized a number of people the previous evening, the opinion was stated that faith was the saving factor.

The conversation then closed, but there ensued a discussion with a fellow missionary which considerably widened the field of inquiry. This article aims to be an elaboration of this wider discussion.

Are We Saved Now?

It is quite popular in certain religious circles to assert that one is saved now. The Scriptures justify us in saying that we are saved by certain ordinances and principles, but nowhere indicate that such salvation is absolute. Notable examples are: "By grace are ye saved through faith." "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "The like figure whereunto baptism doth even now save us." "He saved us, by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost."

Thought upon the issues raised here leads us to the conclusion that though there is promise of salvation in each of the above texts, neither faith nor baptism of itself will save us in the ultimate sense. As an illustration of the temporary nature of the salvation mentioned in some places in the Bible, we quote the statement of Christ to a certain woman: "Thy faith hath saved thee." She had been temporarily saved from some physical disability. We have reason for believing that she afterward died. Her salvation from physical ills was therefore temporary.

The way of salvation is a long one. It is not a broad highway paved with good intentions, but a straight and narrow way, leading ever upward toward the glory God has prepared for the obedient. It is a rough and stony path, with many steep rises. To climb it requires faith, fortitude, endurance, and entails sacrifice and suffering; but there is this assurance: "If so be that we suffer with him . . . we shall be also glorified together."—Romans 18: 17. At the end, not the beginning of the road, is ultimate and eternal salvation.

Is It Possible for the Saved to Fall Again?

The logical conclusion of reasoning that faith alone saves is reached by those who aver that once a person is saved he can not fall again into sin. Is this doctrine tenable? What say the Scriptures? The writer of the Hebrew letter, after discussing the lack of spiritual progress among certain disciples, enumerated the beginnings of the gospel, including the principles we are discussing, and adjured them to "go on unto perfection." Then he added:

For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.—Hebrews 6: 4-6.

If the position that it is impossible for one "in grace" to fall again into sin were tenable, what place should the above excerpt have in the Bible? The possibility of "falling away" is clearly admitted, and its seriousness pointed out. What must be the state of an individual who has entered the grace of Christ by a covenant to follow Him in newness of life, being once enlightened, having tasted the heavenly gift and the very powers of the world to come, when he falls again into sin? The Hebrew writer says it is impossible to renew him again unto repentance. Who would contradict this plain statement of the case?

Further, the same writer states very plainly:

He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses. Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden underfoot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the spirit of grace?—Hebrews 10: 29.

These Bible quotations should be a sufficient answer to those who speak of ultimate salvation, from which we can not fall away, coming to us through either faith or baptism alone, or in combination, unless backed by a life of observance of the principles of righteousness enunciated in the commandments of God.

"He That Shall Endure unto the End"

In the great race for eternal life there will be many starters, but not all the entrants will endure to the end. Some will find the upward path too steep and narrow; others will discover its roughness and turn aside; many will listen to the whispered entreaties of worldly friends and seek the by-paths. Only those with determined purpose and invincible faith will continue. The promise of eternal salvation through Christ is not to the man who believes well, or who is thoroughly baptized, but unto the one who takes all the steps necessary to complete obedience and who keeps up the struggle against the world, the flesh, and the Devil to the very end. "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."—Mark 13: 13.

The Place of the Gospel Principles

Christ said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Nor were these commandments his own:

I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting; whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak.—John 13: 48, 49.

The commandments of God, given through Jesus Christ, are therefore great and divine truths. Taken all together they are "life eternal." Separated from one another, they are not effective.

The Place of Faith

It is written, "By grace are ye saved, through faith"; but, again, it is just as authoritatively written, "Faith without works is dead." To be effective, then, faith must be accompanied by works. What kind of works? Certainly not humanly devised ones, for salvation is not of such deeds, "lest any man should boast." There is a class of works, however, wholly acceptable to God. Paul tells us that the saved "are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." (Ephesians 2: 10.) Faith, then, must take its place among the good works which God has ordained for us to do. It takes precedence over the others in that it is placed first. Accompanied by the other works, it is effectual unto salvation. Unaccompanied, it is ineffective and dead.

Gospel Principles Enunciated

The writer of the Hebrew letter clearly enunciates the principles of the gospel which have saving value—faith, repentance, baptism, the laying on of hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment. (See Hebrews 6: 1, 2.) These are the works which God has ordained we should commence to walk in. After them, we are to go on unto perfection, without which no man will be saved. It will therefore be seen that the way of salvation is clearly defined from beginning to end. Salvation is at the end and will result from self-abnegation and the putting on of Christ from day to day through obedience to the divine plan. It is not attained through shirking compliance with God's commands revealed through Jesus Christ.

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Junior Worship Suggestions for February

By Mabel Killpack, Graceland College

These worship suggestions must be adapted to local situations and may be used at whatever time seems advisable. If the children are not together during the entire Sunday morning service, a short worship program may be had as a part of the church school session. It is urged that the children meet with the adults in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

FIRST SUNDAY

Theme: "The Gift of a Beautiful Life"

Note: On this first Sunday of the month, there should be an attempt to prepare children for the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Musical Prelude.

Song: "Look for the Beautiful," Zion's Praises, 147.

Scripture Reading: Galatians 6: 1-10.

Talk. Show the value of giving a beautiful life to the world.

"Though we travel the world over to find the beautiful, we must carry it with us or we find it not."—Emerson.

Song: "Just for Today," Zion's Praises, 124.

Prayer.

Song: "I Need Thee Every Hour."

SECOND SUNDAY

Theme: "Our Time as a Gift"

Musical Prelude.

Scripture Reading: Romans 9: 6, 7.

Leader: "But this I say, he which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

Response: "God loveth a cheerful giver."

Song: "Something to Do," Zion's Praises, 228.

Poem:

"Not what we give, but what we share,
For the gift without the giver is bare;
Who gives of himself with his alms feeds three—Himself, his hungry neighbor, and Me."

Prayer.

Talk by the superintendent: Our time may be used so as to be a real gift to God, to others, and to ourselves. Tell the story of Dorcas, Acts 9: 36-42.

Song: "Master, Use Me," Zion's Praises, 166.

Offering. Music while the offering is being taken.

Song: "Loving Each Other," Zion's Praises, 83.

Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY

Theme: "Giving Our Talents"

Musical Prelude.

Scripture verse to be read by a child:

"And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward."—Matthew 10: 42.

Song: "We'll Scatter Good Seed," Zion's Praises, 115.

Poem:

Others

Lord, help me live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayers will be for others.

Help me in all the work I do,
To ever be sincere and true,
And know that all I do for you
Must needs be done for others.

—Charles D. Meigs.

Scripture Reading: Matthew 25: 14-40.

Prayer.

Talk or short sermon: How boys and girls may use their talents for the benefit of others.

Offering. (Quiet music.)

Song: "Have a Blessing Ready," Zion's Praises, 126.

Story: "The Hero of Labrador." This is the story of Doctor Grenfell and can easily be found in school and city libraries.

Song: "I Love to Scatter Sunshine," Zion's Praises, 136.

Benediction. Repeat in unison the Lord's Prayer.

FOURTH SUNDAY

Theme: "Giving Our Money"

Musical Prelude.

Scripture Reading:

"For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content."—1 Timothy 6: 7, 8. Also read Mark 12: 41-44.

Song: "Bring Them In," Zion's Praises, 98. Before singing, explain that it is necessary to give money to help in the missionary work of the church.

Prayer.

Story: "The White Flower of Happiness," in Fireside Stories for Girls in Their Teens, Eggleston.

Song: "Trust and Obey," Zion's Praises, 4.

Talk or short sermon: "Giving Our Money." Are we honest? Are we unselfish? Are we giving God his share?

Explain junior stewardship. See Introduction in Junior Stewardship Record Books.

Offering.

Dramatization. The children will enjoy playing "The White Flower of Happiness."

Song: "What Is Your Song?" Zion's Praises, 121.

Benediction.

Are You "Grown Up" or Growing?

By H. Voas Meredith

Is it not surprising, when we come to think about it, that so many of us have looked upon the Sunday school as a provision for children? I wonder, could we have been conceited enough to think that we, the adults, were "grown-up" and consequently knew all we needed to know in order to "accomplish the work"? Or can it be that the words, "suffer little children," have been closing our minds to the realization that Jesus also saw fit to devote a considerable portion of his time to the teaching of even his twelve leaders?

Whatever the reason for this minimizing of adult education, it is certainly thrilling to know that the days are now about past when anyone is considering religious education as a mere preparation for life, a preparation that is completed in one's teens. It is highly commendable that we (both as a church and, more and more, as individuals) are listening more intently to the words of our Great Teacher to the adults—listening to such searching questions as, "Can ye be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with"; listening to such invitations as, "Come, learn of me"; listening to such challenges to progress as, "Ye have heard it said . . . but now I say unto you."

When we were children, we thought as children, but now that we are adults we should expand our childish concepts. This is not implying that our early teachings were wrong, or even faulty, but it is appreciating that they were necessarily elementary and immature. Where is the man who knew all about his trade or profession in his teens? Or the woman who does not still turn to the pages of her cookbook? Then how much more vital is it that we bring our adult capacities, our more mature thought, and our wider experience to the fuller comprehension of the Word of God!

Education is not a preparation for life: it is an aspect of abundant living. Education is not a qualification for future service: it is an essential part of all intelligent helpfulness. We can not cut life into layers—first getting an education, then earning a living, next building a home, and finally (if we live long enough) giving to God and serving our fellows. Life is one whole—a whole that becomes "more abundant" only if it is always characterized by a growing mind, by working hands, by home sharing, and by a love for Zion and for its builders.

We should be happy that the church is making very definite and constructive efforts to feed its "sheep" as well as its "lambs." And more, we should be responsive—positively and enthusiastically responsive—to the educational opportunities it extends. It is the obligation and privilege of every Zion builder to "study to show himself approved unto God," one who knows his ways and his purposes. Seek, knock, ask! Keep growing!

A Threefold Cord Is Not Quickly Broken

The Holy Bible

The Book of Mormon

Book of Doctrine and Covenants

The man who knows his Bible is wise, for it contains the gospel of the Son of God, the gospel of salvation.

If this man knows the Book of Mormon, his faith in Christ and his work is increased, and that is the purpose for which the record is given to the people.

If he has the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and searches its pages, he sees the consistency of the three, and the words of the old prophet of Israel come to have a new meaning to him: "A threefold cord is not quickly broken."

Get your Doctrine and Covenants and search its pages. It has helped others; it has help for you. Have an extra copy for loaning to inquirers. Let the word of the Lord become familiar and precious to you. 803C, Cloth, 80c; 803L, stiff leather, $1.25; 803F, flexible morocco, $3.25.

Little Journeys with the Editor in Chief

It has been some time since I have taken a little journey with Herald readers. So many other things have demanded attention that time to make the journey seemed rather curtailed. Perhaps it would be better to say that it is a matter of what I have chosen to give my time to and for; for it seems that when the number of matters which press for attention increase, as they seem to do with the passing of years, choice must be made. And it is so easy to decide to put off writing when there are other things pressing. Anyway, our journeys have been interrupted.

Several months ago a promise had been made to the branch authorities at Toronto, that when the new building was ready for official opening I would be present if at all possible to do so. So when Brother J. L. Prentice wrote me that January 18 had been set for that occasion, I felt under obligation to be there. It happened that on that date the joint council of Presidency and Twelve, and also the Board on Appropriations were not yet through with their work; but despite this, it was thought best to fulfill the promise. Therefore, Brother R. S. Budd, of the Twelve, and I made our arrangements to leave headquarters and go to Toronto to be present at and participate officially in the formal and ceremonial opening of the Toronto Branch church home.

Thursday afternoon, January 15, after a very busy day (and busy days are the rule at the Auditorium), I left the Auditorium for home with Lois my daughter and acting secretary, to make hasty preparation for the trip; and a few minutes before eight o'clock Brother Budd and I met in the Union Station prepared for the journey.

Accommodations were secured on "The Hummer," a Chicago and Alton Railroad train which has for many years been giving regular and excellent service between Kansas City and Chicago; and after a comfortable night we found ourselves at the Union Station, Chicago, on time, just twelve hours after leaving Kansas City. A taxicab enabled us to make a quick transfer to the LaSalle Street Station, where accommodations were secured on the Nickel Plate Limited for Buffalo. But having time, we repaired to the restaurant for refreshments.

For a number of years past, in fact back as far as the time of the Pan American Exposition, the majority of trips which I have made eastward have been over the Nickel Plate Road. And so I felt quite at home when Brother Budd and I took our assigned quarters on a Nickel Plate train, eastward bound; though I must add that recent years and months have made quite some improvements in the equipment and service of this very train.

The day was spent in reading and writing. It has been my custom for years to use a table on the coach and occupy much of my time on railway trips in trying to catch up with my correspondence and other matters demanding composition.

The train was due at Buffalo at 10.40 p. m.; but, delayed by an obstreperous freight train which dragged its slow way ahead of us, the Lackawanna Station was not reached till about a quarter of an hour after eleven. A surprise—a pleasant one—awaited me there, but it did not seem to surprise Brother Budd at all. A telegram had been sent to Doctor Weegar, president of the Buffalo Branch, informing him that we would arrive at a certain time. I should not have been surprised to see him; but on the platform were two or three of the brothers of the branch with Doctor Weegar; and on entering the waiting room we found Sister Weegar, daughter, and several others of the Saints, who had come down to the station to extend friendly and saintly greetings. Some others had come, but on the train being delayed in its arrival, had left.

Well, we appreciated the cordial welcome extended. But that was not all; for Doctor Weegar bundled Brother Budd and me, with our luggage, into his car, and soon we were at his hospitable home on North Main Street, where we enjoyed a visit with the family and some light refreshments before being shown our room for the night. For the first time Brother Budd and I found ourselves bedmates. Got along all right. He proved to be quiet enough, but he hasn't said whether I slept aloud or not.

A night's rest, and a refreshing breakfast next morning, and Doctor Weegar took time from his patients to take us to the Lehi Valley Station, where we boarded a Grand Trunk train for Toronto.

For a while after leaving the station, we skirted the rim of that marvelous chasm hewn out of solid rock by the Niagara River, and we caught some fascinating vistas of rushing waters and deep canon. We crossed the boundary line at Suspension Bridge and soon had passed customs and immigration inspection.

Without undue incident, we reached Toronto and detrained at Sunnyside station. Sunnyside is one of Toronto's fine parks, built up on the north shore of Lake Ontario. Each year the city seems to make the park more beautiful and attractive; and I doubt not that the growth of West Toronto has been greatly stimulated by the development of this fine recreation center. I recall that a few years ago Brother Leslie Prentice built a home near the station when it was quite alone; but now his home has plenty of neighbors, though the fine view he has from his home of park and lake is still uninterrupted.

At the station we were met by several brothers: Brother Prentice, Bishop McLean, Hubert Case, and "Jack" Hughes. Brother Prentice introduced a reporter, representing a Toronto paper, and I was interviewed. Many questions were put to me, which I tried to answer to the best of my ability, under the circumstances. Even the reporter had heard "rumors," and wanted to confirm them. It is quite interesting to learn the various things that Sir or Madam Rumor has to say about me. In fact, it is more than interesting at times—amusing, irritating, irksome, and something else. Oh, well, I guess one has to pay the price of being a public man. The rumor he wanted to verify was one connecting a sister's name with mine in matrimonial intentions. Of course, I entered an emphatic denial, and felt quite irked at the rumor, for the sake of the sister mentioned as well as my own. But rumor will talk and rumor gets wide of the mark many times. And this was a case where the mark had been missed quite widely.

Brother Budd going with Brother Prentice, and I with Brother Hughes, we sought opportunity to rest for a while. But early evening found us at the new church for some committee work and "settlement of cases." I arrived at the church before Brothers Prentice and Budd came and took advantage of the opportunity to inspect the building. I had, of course, seen the plans of the new building and knew what was expected. And I was quite pleased with what I saw. It is well-appointed and, though not complete, will meet the needs of the branch fairly well for the present. The unfinished portion is the main or upper auditorium, which will be above the lower auditorium, the latter so constructed that it will be well adapted for recreational and auxiliary activities. It will seat perhaps four or five hundred. The ceiling is high, and in the east end is a commodious stage for choir and dramatic purposes, with a baptismal font beneath the stage floor. On the same level with this auditorium floor in the west end is the kitchen, whose adequate equipment is testified to by the efficiency with which meals were served on Sunday, the 18th, both noon and evening. The heating plant located in the northwest corner is well appointed, and efficient. On the basement floor as well as on the first floor are ample comfort and rest rooms.

A pleasing feature of the building is the large foyer on the first floor, where the incoming guests may be greeted, or where the Saints may visit and exchange amenities of saintly greetings. On one side of the foyer is the pastor's study; on the other is the "office." On the second floor are classrooms, some five or six, ranging in size from one designed to accommodate a class of a dozen or so to one large enough to seat twenty-five or thirty; while on the third floor are other classrooms, one large enough to seat one hundred persons, adequate for priesthood meetings, prayer meetings, or group activities.

It was pleasing to see those busy Toronto Saints putting on the finishing touches and cleaning up for the next day's festivities. From basement to top floor they were at work, too busy even to stop to talk. Young and old, they were determined everything would be "ship shape" by next day. And they made good.

Well, Brothers Budd, Prentice, and Clark having arrived, we began work in the pastor's office; and when we left after some two or three hours, those busy Saints were still at work. I had passed through the kitchen two or three times, and a busier lot of women you never saw. It looked to me as though they had food enough for an army. But they knew their job, and from what I saw next day I judged they had the food situation well in hand so far as quantity was concerned. And from personal knowledge I can say you never need fear that the quality will be below par.

Sunday, the 18th, was the day set for the official opening. The day dawned with promise of fair weather, a promise well fulfilled. It was a busy day, well scheduled and with the plans well carried out. The activities began, so far as meetings were concerned, at nine o'clock in the morning when the Saints assembled for prayer service. I had quite fully intended to be present from its opening; but having been on short rations of sleep for several nights, and the night being a restless one, I overslept when I finally did go to sleep, and by the time I had breakfasted and outlined the morning sermon which I would have to give, I found the prayer hour nearly over; but Brother Prentice found me in the "office" at work on my notes and ordered me into the prayer meeting, saying there were some children to bless. I protested, saying the local men had best do the blessing. But Brother Prentice is a diplomatist and told me why I had to go in. I did, and Brother Budd was speaking, so I quietly took a seat behind him, thinking he did not see me. But he did, and what is more, introduced me to the audience. And so I spoke.

About four hundred persons were in that audience, and from where I was it appeared as though one half were young people, a fine group of youth and adults. And of course Brother Budd and I tried to leave a message of encouragement.

And then three children, babes in arms, were blessed ceremonially. A good omen, let us believe, that the first meeting was a prayer meeting which included blessing of babes.

By the time for the eleven o'clock preaching service, the auditorium was full, all seats and available space for chairs were taken, and standing room was at a premium. Representation was there from most of the branches in the district, as well as from near-lying districts. And all seemed happy to participate in the occasion.

On the arrival of the hour, the services began with the entrance of the choir, neatly robed, from the two side doors in the rear, whence they marched down to the front and mounted the platform through the side doors of the stage. The choir is under the leadership of Brother Clifford G. McCormick, who directs from the organ console. And here I might say that the first unit of a Legge organ, the product of a Toronto factory, has been installed, which will be expanded for use in the upper auditorium when erected. It is an electrically equipped console; and though the organ is small, it answers the needs for the present very well.

That the choir can do something more than wear robes and march soon became evident. The music of the day was well selected and well rendered, giving good support to the speakers.

It was a pleasure to me to be supported in this meeting by Brother Frank Mesle, of Sherrill, New York, who had fortuitously dropped into Toronto in time to take part in the opening ceremonies.

For the theme of the occasion I spoke on some of the ideals and goals of the church, a subject which, of course, gives one wide latitude and which is well calculated to stimulate zeal and a forward-looking attitude. Ideals and goals determined, there is likely to be developed among any progressive people generally accepted plans or methods for reaching those objectives. In fact, progress is impossible otherwise. But even then consistent adherence to and working out of those plans are necessary if real progress is to be made. And so I could not but express the hope that Toronto Branch, in its new church home, keeping the ideals and goals of the general church ever in view, might enter upon a new era of expansion of work and activities which will carry it forward rapidly and on a sound foundation.

No person had need to leave the church at the noon hour. Toronto Branch had determined to feed all comers on that day; and with its usual efficiency accomplished the task. In cafeteria style well-laden plates were issued to all persons who applied at the kitchen, each person exercising his own whim or ingenuity in finding a place to consume the food.

At 1.45 p. m. I was again at the church, this time to meet the members of the priesthood. We met in the large room on the upper floor, and a check showed that seventy were there, all orders of the priesthood being represented. And for about an hour I talked to them, trying to point out ways of helping progress by their own activities. In this meeting I missed Brother Budd. Lately out of the hospital, his strength not yet fully recovered, it was necessary for him to conserve his energy. So he rested, storing strength for the other meetings of the day.

Comments from various brothers present at the meeting lead me to believe that it was helpful to the men of the priesthood, and this repaid me for any effort; for my interest in the men who have priesthood responsibility is great, and knowing how large the tasks which they individually and collectively must perform, I am anxious to see them doing all in their power, and making every effort possible to extend the limits of their capacities.

At three o'clock in the afternoon was held the official opening ceremonies. Brother Prentice and his assistants had arranged a goodly program, which was well carried out, under his chairmanship. His Worship, the Mayor of Toronto, and another city official, the Controller, were present and, when introduced by Brother Prentice, in well-chosen words congratulated the local church on the progress made, and expressed appreciation of the good work being done and the contribution being made to Toronto's welfare and progress by promoting better spiritual conditions. The mayor very happily expressed the thought that the resources of any city were not all enumerated until the spiritual forces working within the municipality were recognized and given proper setting.

The city officials secured Brother Prentice's permission to withdraw to attend to other matters and meetings, and we carried on.

The chairman called upon various department officers to speak, district and general representatives, and others, and some from other districts: Brother Dayton, president of Owen Sound District; Frank Mesle, of New York District; Brother Budd, of the Twelve; Bishop McLean, of Toronto; Brother Clark, president of Toronto District; and others. All responded in appropriate speeches. Interspersed throughout the program were appropriate musical selections; and the prayer of consecration was feelingly made by Brother John F. Martin, of the patriarchate. As the last speaker, I tried to catch up the spirit of the occasion, and made a plea for the Saints to remember the effectiveness of symbolism well maintained, and suggested that the branch and district make consistent effort to make the church building stand as a testimonial of the ideals of the church, and by living up to the church ideals and teachings let the building symbolize to the community the religious philosophy and social ideals of the congregation which worships within.

Again every seat was taken, and standing room was inadequate. A fine feeling prevailed; and if I am to judge the future by the opening ceremony, the success of Toronto Branch is assured. But I know the necessity for constant watchfulness and keeping before the Saints their duty and responsibility to God and the church.

Under the faithful leadership of Brother Prentice, the branch president, the Saints of Toronto have done a splendid piece of work in securing a new church home. The North Toronto Branch for some years past under the leadership of Brother "Tom" Clark, now united with the Toronto Branch under a consolidation or amalgamation movement, brings to the older organization an earnest band of workers; and under the impulse of unifying forces, there are fine prospects for an onward movement of the work in Toronto.

I shall not here attempt to name all of Brother Prentice's helpers, the department heads; but to any observer it is apparent that Toronto Branch is blessed with good talent, both old and young; and one of the most hopeful signs is the earnest zeal of the youth. Behind Brother Prentice and his corps of officers stands a fine body of youngsters who seem deeply interested in and alert to the needs of progress of the church and its work. The future of Toronto seems bright.

Under many circumstances and conditions, any meeting closely following the official opening ceremonies would be somewhat anticlimactic in effect; but not so in Toronto. Brother Budd was scheduled as the speaker, and a record crowd attended. In fact, so many more came than could crowd into the main room that an overflow meeting was hastily provided, and Brother B. H. Doty was sent up to the upper story, and about a hundred people followed him there and had a meeting in the room in which the priesthood meeting had been held in the morning.

Brother Budd was in good form despite his hospital experience, and built a good sermon about the theme expressed by Paul when he suggested the necessity of going forward, forgetting the disappointments and failures of the past but remembering their lessons. To have a good "forgettery" at times is as necessary as having a good memory. This is especially true in the matter of personal feelings and resentments.

And so the day of the official opening of Toronto's new church passed into history. That the gathered Saints enjoyed greatly the occasion was manifested in many ways. Despite the long and very busy day of services, the Saints after the last meeting was dismissed remained in large numbers, talking over the day's events and renewing old acquaintances. And it was long after the formal dismissal when the last of the Saints left the church building. It was a day which will live long in the memories of the Saints of Toronto District, and which I feel quite sure begins an era of more rapid and systematic growth of the work there.

At home, January 26.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Several Graceland students spent the Christmas holidays in Nauvoo, and their friends and relatives here tried to make their stay a pleasant one, while they, in turn, gave their assistance in carrying out the church programs. Albert Fisher and Gertrude Newcombe were guests of the Sanfords; and Dorothy Mesle, Margaret Chrestensen, and F. C. Danforth, of Manlius, New York, were guests of the Lewises. Their son, Bertram, and daughter, Roberta, were also home for the holidays, as were Irene Layton, Mary Lee, and Myron Wood.

The weather was ideal and the skating excellent, so the time sped rapidly. There were a hike to David's Chamber with a steak fry at noon, a New Year's party at the home of the Lees, a buffet supper at the Ourths and one at the Laytons, and an evening's entertainment at the Lewises, which included a trip to a country schoolhouse to see the Christmas program put on by the teacher, Mildred Sanford, and her seven pupils, besides a number of other gatherings.

Christmas was observed at the church on Sunday, December 21, during the eleven o'clock hour, when the children gave their program of songs and recitations between beautifully decorated trees on the rostrum. At the close a box of candy was given to each of the children. In the evening the choir, under the direction of Mildred Sanford, sang "A Great Adventure." Florence Ourth told the story of the little Jewish boy who left home and traveled with the caravans up to Bethlehem, reaching there just at the time Jesus was born. The story was interspersed with solos, duets, and choruses, emphasizing each part of the story.

An illustrated lecture on "Ben Hur" was given the following Wednesday evening by Elder A. M. Chase, of Montrose, who, with his wife, spent Christmas with the Pages.

The evening of December 28 we were entertained by the visiting Graceland students. They occupied seats on the rostrum and were introduced by Arnold Ourth. Albert Fisher took us on a historical tour of Boston, Gertrude Newcombe told a number of interesting things about Canada and described the banking system, showing why there were no bank failures in Canada, which was especially interesting at this time. Mary Lee described the Graceland prayer meetings; Roberta Lewis, life at the "dorm"; and Bertram Lewis told of student life at Columbia University and described some of the interesting things he had seen in New York. Irene Layton, Mildred Sanford, and Myron Wood assisted in the singing of three of the college songs.

The following sacrament Sunday the Graceland students were asked to lead out in testimony. They responded immediately and expressed their appreciation of Nauvoo.

A number of interesting programs have been interspersed with the preaching services on Sunday evenings. The historical programs written by President Elbert A. Smith have been faithfully carried out under the direction of Arnold Ourth, and each one has been accompanied with a good degree of the Spirit.

On International Sunday the church was decorated with flags of the different nations, a large American flag occupying the center of the rostrum. Arnold Ourth introduced the characters representing different countries, and a pleasing program was carried out. A. L. Sanford, representing America, gave a talk, and a group of Americans sang songs. Wilfred Wood, representing Canada, gave a reading; L. H. Lewis, dressed in the Scot Highlander costume, gave a Scotch reading; Mrs. August Lee wore a dress that was woven and made in Germany by an eighteen-year-old girl and worn on her journey to America one hundred and fifty years ago. The material seemed as strong and firm as the day it was woven. Sister Lee recited the Lord's prayer, told a bedtime story, and sang a song, all in German. Mr. Lee accompanied her on the guitar. Brother Page, dressed in Indian costume, gave a song and reading. Sister Page, Florence Ourth, and Jack Sanford, dressed in Spanish costume, sang a song in Spanish, while Jack accompanied on the guitar. All then gathered about the American flag and sang, "Let Us All Be Brothers."

A dramatization of Elijah was given one Sunday evening. This was written by L. H. Lewis, who took the part of Elijah, with Sister Page as the widow, John Buckert the widow's son, and Mildred Sanford the heavenly messenger.

"Skybird," by Dixie Wilson, was sung by the choir on another occasion. Florence Ourth told the touching story, and solos, duets, and choruses were interspersed, making a fine evening's entertainment.

On January 11 W. O. Hands was with us and gave an illustrated lecture on health, the Boy Scout movement, and the finding of the graves, in which he played so important a part.

The Sunday school class of H. C. Snively surprised the teacher on the evening of his birthday, December 22. All arrived singing "Happy Birthday to You," bringing with them a large birthday cake and other refreshments. A pleasant evening was spent, and Brother Snively was presented a Sheaffer pencil as a memento of the occasion.

Another surprise was carried out at the home of Florence Ourth, on Christmas Eve, the occasion being the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of her parents, Brother and Sister A. L. Sanford. When the couple were brought to the home, they found the relatives assembled and were told to take their places before L. H. Lewis, who was stationed in front of the fireplace with Albert Fisher, namesake of A. L. Sanford, and Gertrude Newcombe, daughter of Ada Sanford Newcombe, who was maid of honor at the wedding. As they did so, Lohengrin's "Wedding March" was played by their daughter Mildred. Their son Jack sang "Silver Threads among the Gold." L. H. Lewis spoke fittingly of the occasion and pronounced them husband and wife, father and mother, grandfather and grandmother.

Minneapolis, Minnesota

Queen and Fifth Avenue, North

Services continue to be of high order, and attendance is good. The local priesthood are giving good instruction in their sermons and setting higher objectives for us to work toward. Attendance at prayer meetings is not as good as it should be, but those who do attend feel greatly repaid.

Thanksgiving morning a prayer meeting was held at the church. The Saints here have much for which to be thankful, since they were not seriously affected by the business depression.

The night of December 5 the Women's Department held its annual bazaar and supper. This project was successful and netted about one hundred and eight dollars. Renewed interest in the women's work is being shown, and it is going on nicely, under the direction of Sister Muriel Williams.

A Christmas program was given the evening of December 21. Slides picturing the Christmas story were shown, accompanied by congregational singing of Christmas carols. The junior choir sang four numbers; then came the play, "The Most Precious Gift," by Winifred Stiegel. Those taking part did exceptionally well, and the play was favorably received by the audience. Treats of candy, nuts, and apples were distributed at the conclusion of the play.

The morning of December 28 H. H. Gold, of Lamoni, delivered an interesting discourse in which he gave encouragement and timely counsel for the new year.

Monday evening, December 29, the annual branch business meeting for election of officers was held. Action was taken changing the time of the election from December to the September quarterly meeting, thus allowing the new officers to take their place at the beginning of the new church school year. Those elected December 29 hold their offices for nine months only. The following were elected: Pastor, Vernon Lundeen; counselors, L. S. Wight and Charles Johnson; director of church school, Sister Lydia Wight; assistant, Robert Gunlock; supervisor of the adult division, Muriel Williams; supervisor of young people, Kenneth Wolfe; children, Ruth Gunlock; head of the music department, Jessie Watkins; branch secretary and publicity agent, Leon Judson. The financial committee of five members includes Charles Johnson, L. S. Wight, Harvey O'Hara, Fred Sumption, and Wesley Elvin. An exception was made in the time of choosing this committee; it will continue to be appointed in December, that its work may coincide with the business year of the church.

These officers are making careful plans for the year, and with the cooperation of the members, we hope to see considerable growth in Minneapolis Branch.

Minneapolis has forty-five boys and girls enrolled as junior stewards. During the last year some have done remarkably well in keeping their budget books and paying their tithing. The sponsor, Wesley Elvin, felt that these boys and girls should have some commendation for their work, so on New Year's Eve a get-together was held for the junior stewards and their parents. A short program of talks opened the evening. Speakers were Brothers Harvey O'Hara, Vernon Lundeen, L. S. Wight, and Wesley Elvin. These men brought out reasons for having junior stewards, reasons for keeping a budget, and the need for the help and encouragement of the parents. The rest of the evening was spent in playing games. Inspiration for better work was received, and several were heard to remark that they were going to put forth a greater effort to keep their budget books this year.

Coldwater, Michigan

It is encouraging to report progress in the spiritual and temporal interests of the Saints here. A closer observance of the coordination of departmental work is leading to higher grounds, and a larger vision of the work to be done is apparent. At a recent Sunday round-table meeting a goodly number was present, and everyone expressed faith and good will with determination to move forward.

The Christmas spirit brought splendid services. A tree decorated with gifts for the children occupied the church platform, and there was a program reflecting the never-ending lesson of the anniversary of the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem. The juniors seemed to surpass previous preparations in readings and music, and sang with the senior choir the anthems of the service. The accompaniments of Miss Oneh Ogden, violinist, and Judson Corless, pianist, were much appreciated.

A junior choir of nine members was recently organized. Its officers are: President, Eunice Dexter; secretary-treasurer, Ruth Ann Dexter; assistant director, Dorothy Scott. They unite with the senior choir of nine members and are directed by the branch chorister and assistant.

The annual business meeting of Coldwater Branch in December elected the following: President, S. W. L. Scott; secretary, Martha Fish; pianist, Ethel Gallagher; chorister, S. W. L. Scott; librarian, Dorothy Scott; custodian, Elvin Corless; trustees, Edgar Peer, J. H. Hamilton, and Franklin Perry. The departmental organization is: Director of church school, Maude Corless; secretary, Ethel Gallagher; pianist, Grace Peer; chorister, Martha Fish; director of School of Expression, Mae L. Scott; secretary, Eunice Dexter; pianist, Grace Peer; chorister and director, Dorothy L. Scott; Women's Department: President, Ethel Gallagher; secretary, Blanche Peer; publicity department, Sister Alta Stroh; visiting minister, Edgar Peer.

A service devoted to the coordination of the departments, particularly the merging of church school and pulpit work with the orderly functioning of senior and junior choirs, was found to be an effective link.

Saints living in the vicinity surrounding Coldwater encourage us from time to time with their presence.

A baked goods sale was staged by Sister Martha Fish and her helpers.

Brother Scott was lately called to the vicinity of Clear Lake to officiate at the wedding of Sister Martelle Smith and Mr. Ernest M. Bland, of Angola, Indiana. The bride is the daughter of Brother and Sister Clyde Smith. The house was prettily decorated for the ceremony, and plates were laid for twenty-five guests. The bride's cake, furnished by her aged grandmother, weighed five pounds. Sister Martelle is a member of the Clear Lake Branch. Her husband is an employee of Standard Oil.

Dow City, Iowa

Since the death of Pastor J. L. Butterworth we are without an elder, and the branch is now under the supervision of the district presidency. Elders lately visiting us have been M. O. Meyers, Deloit; Frank Fry, Woodbine; Warren Oliver, Deloit; and Gerald Gunsolley, of Logan. The last named, being district president, had charge of the business meeting December 22. We hope to organize under the new plan of religious education as soon as better understanding of it is obtained. Brother Gunsolley has promised to spend a day with us soon for that purpose.

Membership here is one hundred and twenty. The Sunday school has the best attendance, there being seventy present last Sunday. This, however, included a majority of non-members.

The evening service on Sunday consists of a short program followed by class work.

A group of members from Dunlap was here December 14 and presented the play, "The Ten Virgins." We hope they will come again.

Christmas was observed at the church the evening of December 21 with an appropriate play, exercise, and pageant. Miss Zeta Clothier was committee chairman.

The Methodist young people and our young men and women met at the church on Christmas Eve and went about town in a truck singing Christmas carols to shut-ins, and later around a beautifully illuminated community tree in the public square. Santa appeared, and over five hundred received a treat. A real community spirit prevailed, and we were happy to participate in the yuletide festivities.

MRS. M. A. PEARSALL.

Holden Stake

Holden

Yes, Holden is still on the air. You haven't heard from her for a few weeks, but she has been busy doing some things of interest. In memory and in keeping with Christmas, Holden young people put on a Christmas play, "Why the Chimes Rang." After the play, a group of young folks went carol singing, visiting the homes of the shut-ins, sick, and aged.

A special service was arranged by Sister Carr, matron of the Holden Home, and her daughter, Gladys, for the old folks at the home. The service was on Christmas morning, the young people being the major participants. It is hard to get along without Brother Macrae, he is always ready and willing to meet emergency calls; this time it was to take a part in a quartet number.

Sunday evening preceding Christmas, the children's division gave a beautiful little candle service. The Saints of Holden are indebted to Mr. Floyd Hazelbeck for the fine scenery which he painted and arranged for the Christmas play.

Shortly after the holidays, the Sunday morning service was furnished by the West Virginia people, numbering more than eighty persons, Saints who, with their families, came to Holden. Their program of West Virginia songs and reminiscences was interesting, and the testimonies of those who pioneered in the gospel in West Virginia were faith inspiring. The odds against which they worked, abuses they endured, and the sacrifices which they made gave us a new faith.

Holden is enjoying the workable new program of religious education. We also appreciate and are profiting from the worship programs printed in the Herald each month; it is something branches have needed for many years. We are organized under the three divisions, adult, young people's, and children. The work of congregational services and home visiting is being administered through the pastors. Each of the three divisions of the church school is organized and doing special work in its division.

During the period preceding Thanksgiving and Christmas, when the missionary families were so far behind with their allowances, the young people gave Brother and Sister W. H. Eliason a pound party and furnished them with everything that makes a holiday dinner complete. Soon after, the adult division surprised Brother and Sister W. S. Macrae in a similar way. It is useless to say that these families appreciated these expressions of helpfulness.

Because of the ill health of his wife and office duties, Brother Macrae has been kept away from many of the stake duties that demand his attention and that he is desirous of caring for. Brothers Macrae, McWethy, and Eliason spent the most of the week of January 11 to 18 in the interests of the stake away from Holden. Brother Macrae's duties call him to fifteen locals in the stake and to various other parts of the State.

The people of Holden were very happy Sunday, January 18, to have President F. M. McDowell present to lecture to them about his trip to Europe last summer. His evening lecture was on the subject, "Taking the Part of Jesus," in the Passion Play at Oberammergau. We are looking forward to more visits from Brother McDowell. Wherever he goes he leaves in the hearts of the people desires and ambitions to make more of themselves and have a care for the better values in life.

Lamoni Stake

A New Year's Service

On the first Sunday evening of January the service was planned about the new year. The congregation sang hymns of challenge and hope, such as, "Here Am I," and "Take My Life and Let It Be Consecrated." These were mimeographed for the service.

The stake leaders talked concerning the plans for this year in Lamoni Branch. Roy A. Cheville, associate pastor and director of the church school, spoke first, discussing plans and dreams in religious education; G. L. DeLapp, stake bishop, discussed his plans in social and economic fields; T. S. Williams, pastor, talked of pastoral needs and prospects. The service was stimulating and inspiring.

First Union Prayer Meeting

The union prayer service is ordinarily held on the third Wednesday in the lower auditorium. The call to the week of prayer and the opening of the year brought an extra one on the first Wednesday. The upper auditorium was used. On the platform were the stake officers.

Fervent prayers and testimonies marked this gathering. As if in magic swiftness, the time went by, and after an hour and a quarter the service closed. A warmth of fellowship pervaded.

Priesthood Sacramental Service

On the third Sunday afternoon members of the Lamoni priesthood met in the lower room. The table was prepared, and the presiding ministers sat in their places as the priesthood arrived. There was no visiting; solemnity prevailed. The hymns had been selected in keeping with the service, and hearts blended in unity as these hymns were sung.

T. S. Williams told of the purpose of the service, and Roy A. Cheville charged the men to the fulfillment of this purpose. The succeeding week had been designated as "visiting week" in Lamoni. From this service the ministry were to go into the homes of the people, carrying assurance and inviting them to activity. Several of the men spoke of the warmth and revival the service brought.

C. E. Wight Visits Lamoni

Cyril Wight, former stake president of Lamoni, visited Lamoni January 11 and several days following. The occasion for the visit was a series of three lectures to the college students. The Sunday morning service was unusually inspiring.

Bridging the study period and worship period at eleven o'clock was an organ interlude of favorite hymns played by Neal Deaver. During the offertory the A Cappella Chorus entered, gowned in choir robes, and sang after the offertory, Pratheroe's arrangement of "Crossing the Bar." The congregation joined in the hymn, "You May Sing of the Beauty of Mountain and Dale," the third stanza in particular finding a response of fellowship. W. E. Prall offered the prayer, and the congregation remained standing for the response, "Hear Us, O Father," by the chorus. "My God, How Wonderful Thou Art" breathed a majestic reverence throughout the congregation. The chorus then sang just before the sermon one of their best-loved numbers, the hymn, "Take Time to Be Holy."

Elder Wight was appreciative of the home-coming spirit and of the tone of worship. In turn, the congregation were responsive to him in the fervor of his preaching.

Independence

Stone Church

Sunday's services began at the Stone Church with an adult prayer service in the main auditorium and the first church school executive council session of the year in the lower auditorium.

Apostle R. S. Budd spoke briefly to the adult and junior young people departments of the church school at 9.30.

Avoid gossiping, and shun the very appearance of evil so that you may not be the victim of gossip, was the advice of Pastor John F. Sheehy in his sermon at the eleven o'clock service Sunday morning. The Stone Church Choir, directed by Evan A. Fry, sang two anthems: "The Earth Is the Lord's," with Lilly Belle Allen singing the soprano solo; and "Peace I Leave With You." George and Robert Miller played a piano-organ number for the offertory. Elder W. Wallace Smith presided and was assisted by Elder Earl F. Hoisington. The first half hour, from 11 to 11.30, of this service is broadcast over radio station K M B C each Sunday morning of the month except sacrament Sunday.

"Faith in God" was the theme of the junior young people's service downstairs, and two of the boy members of the department were the speakers, Arthur Smith and Kenneth Clow. Five girls sang a special number, and there was a piano solo by Teddy Beck. Pianists for the service were Wilma Luff and Willa Mae Redfield. The pastor and his assistant were in charge.

"The Four Great Wishes" was the title of the talk of Sister M. A. Etzenhouser to the Sunday afternoon young people's group at the Auditorium. Layard Smith, trumpet soloist, played two numbers, and there were program features by E. E. Closson. Doctor Frank Criley was guest director of the singing school, which is a regular feature from four to five o'clock.

A large congregation filled the main auditorium of the Stone Church early in the evening, for it had been announced that song service would begin at 7.30. "The Coming of the Book of Mormon" was the third of the "Conversations" written by Brother Elbert A. Smith, to be presented under the direction of Sister Leonard J. Lea. Character parts in the two scenes were taken by Reginald Smith, Blaine Bender, L. E. Flowers, Kenneth Morford, Frank Jennings, James Gardner, and C. S. Hawker. The sermonet was by Elder Leonard J. Lea. Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of the hour and led the song service. He was assisted in the stand by President F. M. McDowell.

Organizations and Personalities

The Independence unit of the Patroness Society held its first meeting in its room at the Auditorium, January 23, conducting an all-day session. Forty-four members were present to quilt and work on the linens designed for the new hospital. A letter of thanks and appreciation for the quilts and linens contributed during 1930, from Miss Copeland, superintendent of the Sanitarium, was read to the society. The Patroness president has received a check for three hundred dollars from the Philadelphia unit of the society, to furnish that local's private room in the new hospital. This is the first check to come in from any local organization of the society to furnish a private room in its name. The Philadelphia women are to be commended for their endeavor. A box of linens and other useful articles was presented the Sanitarium as a Christmas gift by the Independence Patroness Society, and the women are working faithfully to prepare the furnishings for their own private room, as well as bed-clothes and linens for general use in the new edifice.

Remembering that President F. M. Smith's birthday was January 21, the Laurel Club and its friends planned a party in his honor as near that date as they could get it—January 22. A large birthday cake baked by the members of the club bore the required number of candles, and refreshments were served to eighty-five guests. George Anway, tenor, sang a group of songs. The president of the club, Sister T. J. Watkins, opened her home for the party.

About fifty boys and girls of the first-year Stone Church junior young people's department were entertained the evening of January 23 in the dining hall by the recreational director of the department, Miss Hazel Clow. Everyone played, and the evening passed with lively games and much merriment. This party was the first of a series of three for the department. This Friday evening about sixty second-year boys and girls will be guests, and next week the five third-year classes.

Enoch Hill

Sunday evening it became very evident that there are many Saints on Enoch Hill who wish to know more about the Book of Mormon. That evening marked the beginning of the Book of Mormon class, taught by Sister C. J. Hunt. More than one hundred assembled to hear Sister Hunt introduce and outline her course to continue two months and more. The text to be studied is the quarterly, "The Book of Mormon, Is It Necessary?" The teacher was pleased at the response given by the congregation to the invitation to come and study the Book of Mormon, and the class is pleased with the promise of the study course.

Evangelist U. W. Greene was the Sunday morning speaker, delivering with sincere forcefulness inspiring ideas, admonition, and counsel.

At the 7.30 service in the evening, the talk was by Elder Evan A. Fry, who asked of the congregation, "Is ours a present-tense religion?" Psalm 50 formed the basis for his discourse.

Walnut Park

The young people's plans are receiving notice each week in Walnut Park. They are having prayer meetings on Wednesday evenings, the juniors and intermediates in charge of C. G. Closson and Fred Wille, the older young people in charge of E. E. Moorman. The A. W. Z. Class will serve a chili and oyster supper February 6 in the church basement to raise funds for their Christmas offering and branch expenses. The intermediates have organized by choosing Melba Moorman president, Harold Dillee vice president, and Mary Jane Bean secretary. One council member was elected by each class to work with the above officers and their supervisors in planning desirable activities. A chorus of twelve-year-old intermediates, Helen Brown, Barbara Closson, Marie Mose, Argene Wenholz, Grace Willoughby, and Melba Moorman, sang at the Sunday school service January 25 "Murmuring Waters" and "The Cuckoo Clock," Delta Nace accompanying on the piano.

With true pastoral spirit Elder S. C. Smith addressed his congregation at eleven o'clock in an endeavor to stir every member to serve the church in his or her capacity to the limit of possibility. He talked of the sin of omission, of being hearers but not doers, of enjoying idly the fruits of those who work, quoting the Master's words, "Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom, but he that doeth the will of my Father." His desire was not to find fault but to see his flock enjoying the results of diligent service. These results were beautifully impressed by the words of the closing hymn, Zion's Praises, 224, "Blessed Are Those That Do."

The evening sermon by Elder G. G. Lewis from the text, "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he," supplemented the teaching of the forenoon speaker. When we think or believe a thing to the point of conviction, we will exert ourselves in an effort to live up to our convictions. Being convinced that God is, and that the church is of his appointing, we will give of ourselves to help make it successful.

Englewood

Elder C. Ed. Miller occupied all of the Sunday school hour last Sunday with slide pictures depicting the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and church history up to the time of the Reorganization under Joseph Smith, the younger. Brother Miller started his lecture shortly after 9.30 and continued until nearly eleven o'clock. He was also the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour, his talk dealing with the future of the church.

The first of a series of church history plays, written by Brother Elbert A. Smith, was given Sunday night at 7.30 with Irene Fike, Roy Howery, and Glenn Closson, jr., playing the parts. Sister D. S. McNamara directed the play. Elder A. B. Phillips gave a sermon on "The Background of the Restoration." We hope to give the other plays of the series, published in Vision last year, on Sunday evenings during the coming months. Special music has been planned for every evening service.

The church school sponsored a parent-teacher meeting last Friday night at the church with the hope that the parents will give the teachers their cooperation by working with the pupils at home. Each department in the school was represented.

The boys of the senior class gave a steak fry last Friday in honor of the girls of the class. There was an attendance of over twenty. The boys gave the steak fry to fulfill their part of the agreement last fall when the girls raised more money for the building fund than the boys in a given period of time.

Sister McNamara entertained her Sunday school class of intermediate girls the evening of January 24 at her home. The evening was spent in playing games. Each girl brought a gift for Elizabeth Ross, a classmate whose home was recently destroyed by fire. Sister Fred Koehler, superintendent of the department, was also a guest.

We were glad to welcome back to Independence Brother and Sister Francis Holm and family. They have been away for the past three years.

Elder R. D. Weaver recently held a series of meetings here. The services were well attended, everyone showing keen interest. This minister was a real help to us.

The Englewood Saints are working with the purpose in mind of living the law of Christ in its fullness.

Spring Branch

The 8.15 prayer meeting Sunday morning was well attended. Those who come to worship in this service realize the necessity for meeting often to receive inspiration and courage to carry on the Lord's work.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis spoke to the young people's class of the church school on "The Value of Friends." For his sermon of the morning he chose a text from John 3:2: "We know that thou art a teacher come from God." The junior choir, directed by Dorothy Mabbott, sang "He Leadeth Me."

At three o'clock in the afternoon a group of Atherton Saints met with us. Misses Irene and Hazel Custer, Fred LaVerne Immer, and Harold Henry Peck were baptized, Pastor Amos Allen, of Atherton, officiating.

Patriarch U. W. Greene was the evening speaker.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

Kansas City continues to enjoy the mild weather enjoyed in winter resorts; the thermometer the past week hovered in the sixties. While this mild weather has been a blessing to the poor and unemployed of the city, it has brought about a number of "flu" cases, and several from the ranks of Central have been confined to their homes and unable to attend the services.

Sunday, at the request of the chorister, the congregation joined in singing "Savior, Lead Me Lest I Stray," which was followed by the invocation by Brother James N. Curtis. The children's song was "Onward Still and Upward." Sister Blanche Mesley told the morning story, "A Cup of Water," which not only reached the hearts of the children but the adults as well.

During the study period the young people's division assembled in the main auditorium for a discussion in charge of Bishop J. A. Becker, the theme being "Stewardship." These discussions will continue throughout the month of February and will cover several phases of our distinctive church message. They should prove a great aid to the young.

At the eleven o'clock hour the choir assembled in its place with the singing of a hymn; prayer was offered by Elder C. E. Wight. "Unfold, Ye Portals," by Gounod, was sung by the choir, Brother George Anway taking the tenor solo. Bishop J. A. Becker was the speaker, using for his theme "Love," quoting words of the Master to his disciples, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." He pointed out the fact that love suffers long and that it thinks no evil, and urged that we cultivate that great love in order to be true children of God.

At the evening service the octet consisting of Elizabeth Hitchcock, Helen Scott, Clayton Wolfe, Eugene Christy, Luella Wight, Estelle Moore, E. P. Nelson, and A. D. Hitchcock furnished fine music.

Central was very glad to have for its speaker Apostle Roy S. Budd, who recently has recovered from a long illness. Apostle Budd has many friends at Central and spoke to an appreciative audience.

On Tuesday evening at the Woodland School the Central basket ball boys play their keenest rivals, the Chelsea group. Only four more games remain in the L. D. S. league.

Brother Fred Walmsley met with a serious accident when he had just finished serving some customers and was standing talking with them at the car. A truck plowed into the car, knocking Brother Walmsley about twenty-five feet, narrowly missing breaking his neck. He suffered severe head injuries and is now confined at the Trinity Lutheran Hospital.

The attendance contest of the church school ended last Sunday, the highest score being attained by the adult division. One important factor of the contest was the decrease of tardiness, and it is hoped that this will continue.

A veteran of Central Church, Elder Robert Winning, eighty-four years old, died Sunday, January 25, at his home, 3501 Paseo. Surviving are his widow, Sister Nellie Winning, a daughter, Amy Winning, and a son, Blair Winning. Funeral services were conducted from the church Monday afternoon at 2.30. Interment was in Memorial Park Cemetery. Brother Winning has been a familiar figure at Central Church for many years and will be missed.

Quindaro

Elder S. E. Miffin, missionary in Far West Stake, was the speaker at eleven o'clock January 11, using as a text the latter part of the fifth verse of 2 Timothy 3: "From such turn away." Elder Mifflin has been assisting Elder G. T. Richards in a series of meetings which began January 4 and ended January 16. The Saints feel well repaid for the effort of supporting these meetings. Several nonmembers were present each night and listened attentively as the gospel was explained.

Mrs. Olga M. Gaunce was baptized Sunday, January 18, by Elder Mifflin and confirmed by Elders Richards and Mifflin.

Cottage meetings are being conducted every Friday afternoon at two o'clock by the missionaries, and we hope that before long others will be added to our numbers.

Sister Ella Susan (Dollie) Jones, forty-three years of age, passed from this life January 6 at Bethany Hospital. The funeral was conducted from Long's Funeral Home in charge of Elders Richards and Mifflin. Interment was at Elmwood Cemetery. Though severely afflicted, Sister Dollie was a faithful Saint, beloved by all who knew her.

The funeral of Mr. Charles Weakley, thirty-three years of age, was conducted from Quindaro Church January 8, Elder Richards in charge. Interment was at Memorial Park Cemetery. He leaves a wife and four small children.

The evening of January 18 Pastor H. A. Higgins occupied the eight o'clock hour. His text was part of John 14: 16: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."

Argentine Church

The morning sermon January 25 was by the former stake bishop, Frederick B. Blair, his theme being the living sacrifice, of Romans 12: 1.

In the evening Elder G. T. Richards, stake missionary, discoursed on that part of the twenty-first chapter of John, referring to the remarkable draft of fishes and asked his audience as Jesus asked Peter, "Lovest thou me more than these?" Then feed my lambs and sheep, was the command.

On Saturday, January 17, at two o'clock in the afternoon, Brother Richards preached the funeral sermon of James A. Rowe at the church, it being the wish of his family, based on the former attitude of Mr. Rowe, that the service be held there. A much larger crowd assembled than could get into the building.

Bennington Heights

Sunday morning, January 4, the sacramental service was observed, and nearly every seat was occupied. The speaker in the evening was Apostle Clyde F. Ellis.

The following Sabbath the speaker was S. S. Sandy, of Kansas City Stake. We hope by using the pledge system to more nearly meet our obligations this year.

The evening service was conducted by Apostle M. A. McConley. Patriarch J. T. Gresty was present and led the singing.

Elder C. A. Vernon, of Fourth Kansas City Church, was the morning speaker January 18, and in the evening one of the stake missionaries, Elder H. H. Sevy.

Last Sunday the speaker was Patriarch J. T. Gresty, and in the evening Elder Joseph Curtis talked.

All the services of the month have been inspiring and uplifting, and we hope and trust they will continue so throughout the year.

Far West Stake

First Saint Joseph Church

The theme for the worship service of the church school Sunday morning was "The Blessing of Labor." The school was in charge of H. H. McLean, director. The piano prelude played by Muriel McLean was "Softly Now the Light of Day." The theme talk was given by Elder R. E. Jones. Then like a benediction came the voices of the junior choir from a secluded spot in the balcony, singing "Youth's Prayer."

After the study period, Bishop Milo Burnett gave the morning sermon, "The Open Door." Evan Ehlers sang "The New Commandment."

The evening service was in charge of Howard C. Timm, assisted by L. A. Keck. The choir sang the anthem, "The Lord Brings Back His Own." Elder Ward A. Hougas gave a sermon on "Worth-while Play."

On January 16 the UI-Lik-U's Players held their annual business meeting and party at the home of Sister Helen Beadnall, there being about twenty members present. The following officers were elected: Director, Sister Olive McLean; president, Margaret Reeves; secretary, Helen Beadnall; stage manager, Earl Smith; business manager, Harold Constance; costumer, Oma Johnson. Three new members were voted on: Delpha Black, Esther Schmidt, and Herman Johnson. The next regular meeting will be held at the church Thursday night, January 29. They are preparing the dramatic service, "The Challenge of the Cross," to be given soon.

Last Thursday night Elders E. E. Closson and F. M. McDowell were present at the young people's monthly recreational meeting. This was the first meeting under the leadership of Howard C. Timm, newly appointed supervisor of young people. Brother McDowell in his talk challenged the young people to heed the lesson found in this statement: "See, I have set before thee an open door, which no man can shut, for although you are weak, you have not renounced my name." He said that science had made this world into one of magic, and that though much had been accomplished in the years just past, he wondered if the most worth-while things are not yet before us. He challenged the youth to be brave enough to lead the way instead of being content to follow the gang.

Elder Closson then explained the need of organizing for more efficient work. Delpha Black was elected president of the group, John Rea, vice president, and Helen Beadnall, secretary. These, together with the pastor, Ward A. Hougas, the director of religious education, Hugh H. McLean, and the supervisor of young people, Howard C. Timm, will constitute the executive council. About forty-five young people were present and all seemed enthusiastic over the plan of organization. They will choose a name at the next meeting.

The church school basket ball team is doing fine work this winter, having won ten out of twelve games so far this season. They are scheduled to play Helena Methodist Team at the Y. M. C. A. very soon, and also the A. Z. A's, a Jewish organization.

The adult group will have its first recreational meeting February 5. We hope to adopt some definite objectives for the year ahead.

Toronto Church Is Dedicated

The new church builded by the Saints of Toronto, at Bathurst Street and Saint Clair Avenue, was dedicated January 18, President F. M. Smith and Apostle R. S. Budd being present at the service. With a photograph of the new edifice, The Evening Telegram, Toronto, for January 19, printed the following news story:

A step forward was taken yesterday by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints when they opened a new $100,000 church at the corner of Bathurst Street and Saint Clair Avenue. The opening of this church amalgamated the center branch and the North Toronto Branch of the city. Members were present from Hamilton, Niagara Falls, Sault Sainte Marie, Detroit, and Ottawa.

The morning service was taken by President F. M. Smith, of Independence, Missouri, who addressed the gathering on "Ideals and Goals of the Church."

The afternoon service at three o'clock was the dedication service, when Mr. J. L. Prentice was the chairman. Mayor Stewart in a brief address congratulated the organization on their fine building and wished them every success. Controller Hacker also extended his best wishes for their future. The other speakers of the afternoon included: Mr. A. F. McLean, Mr. H. A. Dayton, president of the Owen Sound District; Mr. Frank Mesle, of the State of New York District; Mr. Hubert Case, of Detroit District; Mr. S. G. Clarke, of the Toronto District; Apostle R. S. Budd, general missionary of Eastern States and Canada, and President F. M. Smith, of Missouri. Mr. Smith, in his address of the afternoon, said that the church built should symbolize the ideals of its people, and stressed the fact that cleanness in living should be taught the young, because he said "cleanness is next to godliness."

Apostle R. S. Budd addressed the evening service, telling the people to forget the past and to go forward profiting by their mistakes.

About 700 people attended the afternoon service, and, owing to the distance some of the members had to come, dinner and supper were served at the church.

There will be a banquet tonight for the executive and members.

Logan, Iowa

Since October 1 Logan Branch has been functioning under the new plan of religious education, with Myrtle Crabb in charge of the church school, Ruth Gunsolley superintending the adults, Leila Gamet the young people, and Belle Miller the children. These leaders seem pleased with the results and speak well of the cooperation received from the membership. The December business meeting resulted in no changes in these departments and but few in the personnel of other branch offices.

The Christmas season was celebrated by a worship program on Sunday evening, December 21, during which the different classes presented special offerings, collected at the morning service.

Those of our young people who are engaged in activities away from home and who spent the holiday vacation here are Charles Hansen, a student nurse at the Edmundson hospital in Council Bluffs, Mabel Killpack, Bernice Lenz, and Edgar Salts, who are spending the year at Graceland College.

The pulpit has been filled the past months by local members of the priesthood and those from neighboring branches.

The week of prayer, January 4 to 11, was observed, thus beginning another year with the spirit of reverence and gratitude to the Giver of all good. Those observing the week were strengthened and blessed in the effort put forth. So we go forward, hoping that a greater zeal, a deeper consecration, a more earnest effort will merit richer blessings before 1931 is gone.

Coleman, Michigan

January 19.—Since the death of our beloved brother and elder, W. S. Methner, early last May, Coleman Branch has suffered adversity. But at the December communion service we were made to feel that there are brighter days ahead. And the spiritual condition of the people has greatly improved, the Spirit meeting with us in many services. We have been blessed with encouragement and hope.

On January 13 the first branch business meeting for more than a year was conducted, and the people responded to the call to transact business. The spirit of fellowship experienced was that of a communion service, and there was perfect harmony.

Sylvester Yager, priest, a brother of Joseph Yager now in the South Sea Islands, was chosen branch president. His father was made Sunday school superintendent, and Sister Fern Methner, who lately changed her name to Mrs. Deloss Bauphman, was chosen leader of the Women's Department. The new year is before us, and with these capable people in charge we feel that a new period of activity is opening here.

It has been over a year since the district president visited Coleman, and we are hoping to have him among us soon. We also await opportunity to extend the district missionary a welcome. We know these two men are sorely needed in other fields; nevertheless we hope to count them among our helpers.

With the future promising us growth and achievement, we wish to call upon the quorums of the ministry for their prayers in behalf of our leaders. ALLEN H. YAGER.

Middletown, Ohio

2025 Logan Avenue

January 14.—Under the leadership of Pastor P. W. Barker, Middletown Branch adopted the new unified program on November 11, to become effective January 1.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis made a brief visit here Monday evening, December 1, calling upon the Saints to help the general church financially at this time. He also gave a splendid sermon on the "Son of Man."

During December $182.40 was paid in tithes and offerings from this branch. Sunday School Superintendent Claude Barker had set the Christmas offering goal for the year at $125, but on Sunday, December 21, we went over our goal to $128.38.

Missionary Jacob G. Halb was home during the month of December, and while here preached on Sunday evenings.

Missionary John R. Grice was also here before the Christmas holidays and preached two evenings. Other speakers for November and December were Elders P. W. Barker, Claude Barker, Leonard Barker, and W. H. Rhoades.

Sunday school attendance has been about sixty. Following the children's Christmas exercises on December 21, they were given a candy treat by the Sunday school through a little Santa Claus, who looked as though he might have been Santa's son.

New officers for the year 1931 are as follows: Pastor P. S. Rhoades; associate pastors are Elder Claude D. Barker, director of church school, and Elder Pious W. Barker, director of home division; Mary Stults, supervisor of adult division; Julia Davis, supervisor of young people's division; Edith Sintz, supervisor of children's division; Elder Leonard Barker, leader of junior worship; Mary Stults, branch secretary; Leonard Barker, treasurer, solicitor, and publicity agent.

Following a short business meeting January 6, we were treated to a lunch prepared by several of the sisters in the social room. The lunch was a compliment of the priesthood to the members of the branch. Then we again assembled in the auditorium for a drill on the "new system." Our new pastor, Elder P. S. Rhoades, explained how he wanted us to assemble in the fore part of the room for prayer service at 9.30 on Sunday morning, and two ushers would show us to our seats. Elder Claude Barker gave a brief outline in regard to the church school, and then Elder Leonard Barker put on a demonstration of the junior worship service.

Unfortunately, our new pastor can be with us only for the Sunday morning services. But we have as his assistant, Brother Claude Barker, who is willing and able to look after meetings on Sunday evening and throughout the week.

January 4 Elder Claude Barker gave a splendid sermon on "Counting the Cost." And January 11 Elder W. H. Rhoades preached.

On Monday evening of this week, we had a conference for teachers and leaders, in which we discussed methods and ways of handling our problems in religious education.

LEONARD W. BARKER.

MISCELLANEOUS

Conference and Priesthood Institute

Eastern Colorado District will hold a priesthood institute in conjunction with the February district conference, in the Denver, Colorado, church, Speer Boulevard and Logan Street. Institute will begin Friday morning, February 20, at 10 o'clock. On Saturday, February 21, district conference will convene at 10 a. m. Send credentials and reports to Secretary C. D. Liggett, Adams Crossing, Colorado Springs, Colorado. Saturday evening and all day Sunday will be devoted to institute work. Apostles E. J. Gleazer and F. Henry Edwards will be present to conduct the institute. This institute will be especially interesting to members of the priesthood and all who are working in departments of the school of religious education. We wish that all members who can will be present, as this will be one of our important gatherings this year.—E. B. Hull, District President.

Conference Notice

Eastern Oklahoma district conference will convene with Haileyville, Oklahoma, Branch February 21 and 22. All Saints are urged to be present. The priesthood are especially invited to this conference. Branch secretaries will please forward their reports to Jewel J. Jackson, Route 1, Wister, Oklahoma.—C. G. Smallwood, district president.

Two-day Institute

At Kingston, Missouri, Saturday and Sunday, February 14 and 15, a special two-day institute is called for the members of Kingston, Oakdale, Far West, and other nearby branches in Far West Stake. All are urgently requested to be present. A similar institute was recently held at Guilford, Missouri, and produced surprisingly effective results. Class work on practical problems of modern youth will be in charge of Stake President Ward A. Hougas. Missionary R. E. Jones will conduct several forums on recreational problems. Interesting and lively social functions are planned for the entertainment of all. Come and enjoy the benefits of this institute.—The Stake Presidency, 413 American National Bank Building, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

New Address

O. E. Weedmark, bishop's agent, 515 West Third Street, Topeka, Kansas.

Our Departed Ones

BOYD.—Almonta M. Boyd was born in Bloomfield, Missouri, August 24, 1860. While he was yet an infant, his parents moved to Graves County, Kentucky, where he grew to manhood. In 1884 he married Virginia Sanders, who survives him, together with one son, one grandson, three granddaughters, one brother, J. V. Boyd, Farmington, Kentucky, and two sisters, Mrs. Ludora Arnold, Mayfield, Kentucky, and Mrs. Alice Harding, Palmersville, Tennessee. Three sons and one daughter preceded him in death. He was baptized a member of the church August 26, 1890, at Farmington, Kentucky, by W. H. Griffin. Died December 17, 1930. His funeral was held at the Walnut Park Church, Independence, Missouri, Elder W. L. McClain in charge, sermon by Elder T. C. Kelley.

WALLER.—Annie Holmes was born at Newcastle on Tyne in England. She married Gilbert J. Waller in Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii. To them were born five daughters and one son: Henrietta, Ruth, Christiana, Gilbert (who passed away at Monrovia, California, five years ago, in full manhood), Esther, and Beatrice. All her life Mrs. Waller was devoted to her home and family, cheerfully spending herself for them and their comfort. For several years she had been looking forward to the day when Brother Waller might be permitted to arrange his business affairs so that they could be united in home life on the mainland of the United States. Owing to her health it was impossible for her to live in the tropical climate of the islands. Just when it seemed this might be realized, she was taken ill, and it was deemed advisable to cable for her husband and daughter Esther, both of whom were in Honolulu in business. They arrived on the last day of the old year, 1930, and ministered to her comfort during the few days of her earthly pilgrimage. Death took her amidst the surroundings of the home in San Francisco, with all her family present January 7, 1931. Besides the immediate members of the family, there mourn her departure, a sister in England and a brother in Honolulu. A few days before Mrs. Waller's death, a cablegram was received informing them of the death of another sister in England. The funeral was conducted in the home by Archdeacon Noel Porter, of Grace Cathedral (Episcopal), and John W. Rushton. Interment was at Cypress Lawn Cemetery.

HOLLING.—Augusta Dellwig was born at Goslar, Amhartz, Germany, November 13, 1848. When eighteen years of age she immigrated to America, making her home in Park Presidio District, San Francisco, California, where she was a pioneer. She married William Holling, who preceded her to the better land forty-two years ago. To them were born three sons: William T. and Doctor Alfred L., both of San Francisco, and Emile who died in infancy. Mrs. Holling was a member of the church, having been baptized several years ago, and maintaining in her quiet and gentle way her loyalty thereto. All of her life she was devoted to music, was a pianist of talent, and for many years was a teacher, having her pupils until within a year of her demise. Her final illness began about a year ago, and gradually her faculties ceased to function. She bore this trial with fortitude and patience until death touched her, and she fell asleep on Tuesday night, January 6, 1931. She was cared for by her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Holling, with whom she had made her home for many years. These with a sister, Mrs. Ehrenpfort, of Oakland, a brother, Louis A. Dellwig, of Washington, District of Columbia, a grandson, Eugene, and many other relatives and friends mourn her passing. The services were conducted by John W. Rushton, and the final rites were at the Mount Olivet Crematorium.

BURWELL.—Robert N. Burwell was born January 1, 1867, at Bothwell, Ontario. Died January 6, 1931, at Riverdale, Illinois. Was married October 13, 1889, to Ella La Bar, at Junietta, Michigan. To this union were born two sons, Harry Wesley Burwell, Louisville, Kentucky, and Edward Nelson Burwell, Dolton, Illinois. Services were held at the home in charge of E. O. Byrne, sermon by H. P. W. Keir.

DAVIS.—John William Davis was born December 11, 1849, near Elizabeth, Indiana. He died December 21, 1930, at the home of his son, William H. Davis, in Indianapolis, Indiana. He spent the greater part of his life in business in Derby, Perry County, Indiana, where he was known as an honest, conscientious man, a good citizen, and a true friend. He was a stalwart defender of the gospel, and his home was always open to the missionary, a place where he found rest and refreshment. Left to mourn are a son, William H., of Indianapolis; three daughters: Mrs. Rose Scruggs, Hot Springs, Arkansas; Mrs. Pauline MacKenzie, Wichita, Kansas; and Doctor Edith Davis Hamar, Indianapolis; and a host of friends. A short service was held at the home of his son, December 22, and the body was taken to his former home in Derby, Indiana, for interment beside his wife. The services were in charge of Elder Arthur W. Gage, assisted by Elders Charles H. Fish and J. Leonard Glenn.

SMITH.—Bettie B. Smith was born July 30, 1855, in Itawamba County, Mississippi. She became a member of the church February 22, 1874, at Long Valley, California, receiving baptism at the hand of J. R. Cook. Passed peacefully away after long physical suffering at the Kings Daughters Home, Oakland, California, November 16, 1930, her faith and hope strong to the end. Surviving are two children, Eva Jones and Simmie Smith, of California.

ROSS.—George E. Ross was born May 20, 1841, in New York City. He became a member of the church May 1, 1870, at Buckland, Iowa, being baptized by Sam Ackerly. Was ordained a priest in May, 1870. He passed away January 11, 1931, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Della Bailey, Independence; his wife having preceded him by fifteen years. Left to mourn are four children of a family of nine: Mrs. Della Bailey, of Independence; Doctor John F. Ross, Indianapolis, Indiana; Benjamin Ross, Adrian, Missouri; and Joseph A. Ross, Independence; eight grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren. The service was held in Independence, January 12, in charge of Elder J. M. Terry. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SKINNER.—Edwin Alfred Skinner was born at Exmouth, Devonshire, England, December 25, 1856. He married Miss Sarah Newton, at Exeter, England, July 25, 1877, and to them were born five sons and two daughters: John W., Edwin, Frank, Harry, Charley, Mary Ann, and Charlotte. They came to Canada in 1882, and one year later moved to Kansas City, Kansas. For thirty-six years he lived there. During that time he was superintendent of the City Hospital from 1907 to 1911. He was chief of the county jail from 1911 until 1918, and during 1918 he was superintendent of the Wyandotte County Farm. In 1919 they moved to Strasburg, Missouri. He was baptized May 4, 1930, by Elder Thomas Newton, at Grandview Branch, Kansas City, Kansas. Passed away January 5, 1931. Surviving are his wife, four sons, two daughters, two brothers, seventeen grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. The funeral services at Grandview Church were in charge of Elders Richard Bullard and J. M. Terry, January 8, 1931.

THOMAS.—William Edward Thomas was born July 28, 1858, at Folsom, California, and died November 29, 1930, at the Edmundson Hospital, Council Bluffs, Iowa. He leaves to mourn his widow, Mrs. Rosa Thomas, and eight children: Mrs. Maude Coffelt, Logan, Iowa; Essie Thomas, Council Bluffs, Iowa; Myra Thomas, Neola, Iowa; Mrs. Ula Sutherland and Arlene Thomas, of Lincoln, Nebraska; Alma and Kenneth Thomas, Neola, Iowa; Marvin Thomas, West Point, New York; a sister, Mrs. Mary Cox, Hornick, Iowa; two brothers: J. J. Thomas, Logan, Iowa, and David Thomas, of Neola; four grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. The funeral was conducted December 1, 1930, at the Grange Church by Elders Ray Whiting and George Beatty. Interment was in Grange Cemetery. Although not a member of the church Mr. Thomas was a firm believer of the gospel.

A Landmark Passes

When a building has been used for nearly a half century as a church home, its destruction can not but bring deep sorrow to thousands of people. And so the sight of the ascending column of smoke and fire which told the onlookers that the old Brick Church at Lamoni was doomed brought tears to the eyes of all who loved the old structure, and people wept without the least attempt to hide their tears. It was on Thursday night, January 29, that the building burned, and the passing of the historic structure has left the Saints and friends of Lamoni, the first storm of sorrow passed, in a state of quiet though sorrowful determination to carry on as best they can under the circumstances.

It was while the fire was still raging that I learned the news; and I quickly determined to be with the Lamoni Saints as soon as practicable; and on Friday, the next day, with Bishop Carmichael and Brother John Garver, I drove to Lamoni, to be with the Saints in a meeting that night.

I was pleased to see how quickly the Saints had recovered their equilibrium, and to note the firm determination to make the best of a bad situation. By using the Coliseum, the High School auditorium, Zimmermann Hall, and other rooms about town, the regular services and meetings will be carried on, and adjustments made as rapidly as possible. At a business meeting Sunday afternoon a committee of seven was appointed to develop plans for a new building, the local committee to work in conjunction with the general church authorities.

It seems to be the determination of the local authorities that no debt will be contracted, but that the building will proceed as the means are available. This is wise.

The Old Brick Church

To many of us the passing of the old Brick Church in Lamoni by fire is like the death of an old and loved friend. The general church also loses the building that next to the Kirtland Temple was our most historic public edifice. A half century ago such pioneers to the "Lamoni Colony" as Joseph Smith, David Dancer, Asa Cochran, and many others, poured into this structure their strength and vision.

Considering their numbers it was a tremendous undertaking. It is said that David Dancer, a man of some means, and himself colossal in stature, refused to be a party to the erection of a church on any smaller scale. Thus they built a church building that came to serve the Lamoni Branch and Stake all these years, and also for many years served the general church for its conferences. Through its portals flowed the spiritual life of the Reorganization. Truly when the old church fell it "left a lonesome place against the sky."

To us "old-timers," as we may appear to a younger generation, the old Brick Church was more than an historic edifice. In our youth, to it we came with high-beating heart to meet the one and only girl. Later to its altar we brought our children to be blessed. From its doors we saw father and mother carried away to their long rest. In its aisles we oftentimes clasped hands with hundreds of close friends. There we received ordination. From thence we went to diverse missions. From its pulpit we heard the gospel preached by such veteran ministers as Joseph and Alexander Smith, Mark H. Forscutt, W. W. Blair, Heman C. Smith, John W. Wight, Joseph Lambert, and scores of other men of like calling and consecration. From its pulpit we oftentimes ourselves have preached the gospel under a peculiar unction of power and light and warmth.

It will be difficult for us ever in Lamoni to preach behind or worship before a new pulpit. Yet time moves on, and God's providences are wisest. We cheer our hearts with the belief and the conviction that from the ashes of the old Brick Church there can, and will, and must arise a new and more modern structure that in time shall come to mean to thousands of younger people all that the old church meant to us.

We send our children to Graceland to be educated and desire that their spiritual life shall there be conserved, hence many fathers and mothers, in many States, and even abroad, have a common interest with all those who loved the old church to see to it that the Lamoni Saints have aid in prayers and in finances to rebuild in such way that the work and spirit of the Old Brick Church shall be carried on to coming generations. At her embers a torch must be lighted that shall carry on for another half century.

Robert Winning Passes

Always a dignified, well-spoken man, a faithful, loyal church member, a good friend, a benefactor to the needy when able, a student, a logical thinker, a thoughtful father, and citizen of high ideals, when the hour of passing came for Brother Robert Winning many Saints and others find they have lost a loved and respected friend and the church a faithful servant. For nearly sixty years a member, he was ever ready to give such service as he could; and as a leader in the Saint Joseph Branch, and until recently a member of the Kansas City Stake High Council his wise counsel and unswerving faith have been stabilizing factors in the lives of officers and members of the church.

Many join the family in mourning the passing of a noble man, but rejoice in the hope which sustained him and enabled him to approach calmly the hour when through the portal of the grave he could pass to the reward which awaits the faithful in the mansions on high.

I recall Brother Winning as a not infrequent visitor in the home of and close friend and trusted fellow worker of my departed father. And had I not known Brother Winning for his own worthy self, I would still mourn the passing of a good friend of one whose memory I revere. Another faithful friend and stalwart churchman has passed.

Graceland Plays Its Part in the Development of a Distinguished Family

Those who have read the February issue of the American Magazine will already have noted the article about the Travis family. Those who do not read the American should unbend and get a copy, at least for this one time.

The story, very briefly sketched, of the trials and struggles of the parents to subdue the stubborn soil, to match their wits and strength against the pitiless adversities of drouth and blizzard, and to raise a large family of boys and girls to be useful, intelligent, and trained citizens, honest, religious, and right living, is an inspiring one. From that brief story some Hansum could write another Growth of the Soil for America.

In that story Graceland College plays its part. The Travis family were members of the church, and they believed in it to the extent of sending their young people to Graceland to have them trained for life. It is said that since the two older boys, Ralph and Lee, went to Graceland in 1912 there has been only one school year up to 1929 that there were no members of the family there. Another lapse and there will be four more young people to go. Certainly whenever they have been present they have been among the leaders of the school in some way or another, and often in many ways. The Travis boys and girls have been a traditional part of Graceland's school life. They have by this time distinguished themselves in higher institutions of learning, and in other walks of life. It is a record of which they may be justly very proud, though it may be said to their credit that they are modest about their achievements.

Many other families have sent young people to Graceland who have done well in after life, and at the institutions of higher learning. Many others have become a credit to themselves and to the college. It is hoped that many others will continue to crowd the halls of Graceland, to grow and develop, and to make a name for sincerity, honest work, and good character.

Graceland is a college with a character. If there is something good in the boys and girls, Graceland will help to develop it. While the college can not reform a character whose education and home training has been, up to the time of his arrival, entirely wrong, it can do much for boys and girls who have the right kind of material in them.

The "Herald" Grows

It is encouraging that even in these hard times the list of paid subscriptions to the Herald is continually growing. We are happy to see this trend, for it leads us to believe that the Herald continues fulfilling its mission of meeting a definite need.

Criticisms are in order. The Editors are grateful for letters indicating how their readers react to what is presented. It is true that we hear most often from those friends who are dissatisfied and would like to see us improve. Right now the section devoted to "Church Work and Services" is under fire. We wonder how many are finding the materials useful. We are not fishing for commendations; but those who think this material should appear in the Herald should let themselves be heard. We wish the Herald to grow in usefulness as well as in circulation.

No living man can fully estimate the exact momentum of the principles at work in his own time. The objects that obtrude upon his consideration are too near him to be seen in all their just proportions. Time, that great revealer of secrets and infallible exponent of the wisdom of all human schemes, must pass its solemn verdict upon every human enterprise before its proper character can be fully and justly appreciated.—Alexander Campbell.

The Auditorium

HOUSES MANY ACTIVITIES

By J. A. Gardner

The Auditorium Building, by providing space for the many activities of administration, has become practically the headquarters of the church. From it one can follow the performance of the various tasks of the church in many parts of the world. Every day brings its streams of visitors to the offices, and its sacks of mail. Letters from everywhere asking for help and counsel, people from everywhere wishing to see or to visit, or perhaps to get advice, missionaries and officers constantly coming and going, and bags of mail going out to give assistance to the ministry and branches at a distance—all these are a part of every day's routine.

Changing the headquarters from Lamoni, Iowa, to Independence occupied a period of some years, and during that time the church worked at a distinct disadvantage due to the geographical division of its general offices. The Auditorium, up to its present stage of completion, has made it possible to place practically all of the offices under one roof. The Department of History, the Statistician, the Library, and the Graphic Arts Bureau now occupy the Library Building, one block distant from the Auditorium. It is highly possible that further work on the Auditorium will make it possible to accommodate these four departments and by so doing further unify our work.

In the Auditorium at present will be found the offices of the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve. The Presiding Bishopric with its bookkeeping department which cares for the business interests of the church and the proper accounting of all receipts and expenditures is also housed here. The Department of Religious Education with its quarterly editors, the Church Architect, the Social Service Bureau, General Church Secretary, Presiding Patriarch, Transportation Bureau, the Local Pastor in Zion, the Department of Bishopric in Zion, the Department of Religious Education for Independence, the General Church Auditor, and the Department of Publicity all occupy rooms in the Auditorium.

The Laurel Club, which has furnished the money for the installation of several thousand dollars' worth of kitchen and dining-room equipment, makes its headquarters in the building in a room which is also used for a headquarters for the Patroness Society of the Independence Sanitarium—a group of women which, with representatives in scores of branches throughout the church, is working in the interest of the Independence Sanitarium.

The basement of the building can be adapted to a great many uses. Here is located the kitchen, which the Laurel Club has furnished with modern equipment. It is a part of the Auditorium and is the property of the general church. Overnight the basement can be transformed into a dining room for the accommodation of two thousand guests. Visitors to the General Conference in the past can appreciate the necessity for having a dining room of adequate capacity where meals can be quickly served.

The basement has accommodated the annual Harvest Festival for the last three years. It is particularly adapted to this kind of exhibit. Because of its concrete construction, the wear and tear of building display booths and the heavy traffic of thirty thousand people have no effect at all on the basement room, whereas in the ordinary building it would be a matter for serious consideration.

The basement room can also be made into an auditorium to accommodate crowds of fifteen hundred to two thousand and is suitable for lectures, entertainments, and dramatics of the kind usually given during and preceding General Conference. It is also suitable for gymnasium purposes and is being patronized by the young people of Independence and Kansas City for indoor athletics.

The service features of the main assembly room which houses the general conferences is too well known to require mention here; however, last conference brought this main assembly room into three new uses and proved how much the church needed such a room. The occasion of the Centennial Oratorical Contest brought together the largest number of Latter Day Saints ever gathered in the history of The Reorganization. Even in its unfinished condition, the acoustic properties of the room were satisfactory. The performance of the Oratorio conducted by John T. Gresty demonstrated a new use for the main auditorium chamber. The presentation of the Centennial Pageant, Fulfillment, the largest spectacular feature ever given in the Auditorium, again demonstrated its adaptability for this kind of entertainment.

The Auditorium is built for the use of the members of the entire church, and belongs to the entire church. Twenty-five thousand Latter Day Saints live within easy driving distance of the building, which makes its service features and special gatherings accessible to approximately one fourth of our enrollment. A family living this year in Maine or California or some other distant place may be in Independence or vicinity next year. Changes like this are taking place continually, and it is probable that such movements will increase in the coming years; therefore, it is not difficult to understand how increasingly important the Auditorium becomes to every member.

Righteousness and Prosperity

NUMBER TWO

By J. A. Koehler

In my article last week I said that Latter Day Saints have been committed to the proposition that "righteousness exalteth"; that the rewards of social righteousness are peace, prosperity, happiness, security, honor, and the like; and that our own failure to realize upon the promises of God to Zion is certain proof that our social righteousness is not the righteousness of God.

In this article I will set out what I believe to be the principal causes of our failure to set up the government of God. And I do this, not to find fault, but to help to bring about a better understanding of both the personal and the social adjustments that must be made by us if we are to realize the kingdom.

The first factor in our unfortunate situation as a church membership (we ought to be a people in the large sense) is our hopeless hope of a hocus-pocus prosperity. The earth belongs by a natural right, which is a divine right, to the peoples who will use it best to satisfy the primary wants of men universally, "to please the eye, to gladden the heart, . . . and to enliven the soul." But we have hoped to inherit the land of Zion without rising above the level of conduct of other peoples in the uses of the natural creations. We have hoped to build a Zion with the economic institutions of Babylon. We have been content with established economic customs as we found them. Many of our church members have stubbornly resisted any attempt to institute new forms of property, which is the crux of an economic order. And, sharing in the world's economic misbehavior, we have had to share in its economic fate.

Thousands of members of our church have looked toward "Zion" with longing eyes, believing that their mode of life would bring them prosperity if only they could live that mode of life in their promised land. In some un-understandable way, some mysterious way, the mere declaration that this business of mine—which I will continue to conduct in the identical old property relations—is now on the "stewardship" basis, is to convert it into a fountain of wealth and an instrument of social justice.

But there are other evidences of this hopeless hope, such as the wish for a Rockefeller Foundation. Economic prosperity, according to some, is to issue from checks which can be cashed at the bank. Hearing one of our prominent men express such a hope, I asked him: From what do you expect the prosperity of this people to arise? From the private philanthropy of individual church members, or from the righteousness of the people? Of course, he dared make but one answer. And so I asked him as I ask you: Then why do we spend so much of our energy trying to collect another dollar, and so little of our energy trying to mold the life of this people to conform to an ideal?

Why should God take wealth away from other peoples and give it to us? What claim do we have upon the wealth produced by other hands? In the sweat of thine own face shalt thou eat, is God's law. By thine own industry, thrift, and frugality—by thine own economic righteousness shalt thou achieve prosperity, is the decree of God for all peoples. And any people who seek social prosperity by acquisitive measures lays the foundation for its own poverty—a poverty of either material or immaterial wealth or both.

The second factor in our unfortunate situation is the apparent inability of our men to discriminate (1) the economic prosperity of peoples from (2) the financial prosperity of individuals. This second factor may be the antecedent of the first. There is a difference between public wealth and private wealth which men who seek the kingdom must learn to make.

The current social income consists only in the total current output of commodities and services. The wealth of a people is only the material and immaterial goods which are used to satisfy its wants. Whereas, private incomes may consist primarily in rents, interest, profits, or dividends. The wealth of the individual may be chiefly in the form of notes, stocks, bonds, credit, and bank accounts, not one of which has anything to do necessarily with the prosperity of the race. Every note, bond, certificate of stock, mortgage, and issue of currency could be utterly wiped out without diminishing one mite the total supply of goods upon which the subsistence of the race depends.

Of course, the sudden destruction of a medium of exchange and a measure of values in trade would greatly upset our present economic commercial relations, and would necessitate some new agency of distribution. Money does have social value, not only as a medium of exchange and a measure of values in trade; but, if society were properly constituted, as an instrument of accountability.

In the present business conflict, money is both a weapon of offense and a weapon of defense. And the men of the church, even while they are endeavoring to realize the kingdom, may be under the necessity of using money for both these purposes the while and in so far as they are parts of a mass engaged in a struggle for private gain. But for the men of the church to attempt to realize Zion with her peace, prosperity, and happiness in the use of money for mere acquisition is to make impossible the very kingdom they say they seek to build.

True prosperity for peoples arises only as men individually make positive contributions to human welfare; and that means to the social income. And if all the resources spent by the men of the Latter Day Saint Church in speculation, in business competition, in investments for dividends, and what not, had been spent in building communities that were embodiments of the righteousness of God—if they had been used for public welfare instead of private gain—we would not be paying out so much in one year for interest while the allowance of our missionaries' families are left unpaid.

No people can misbehave as we have misbehaved and realize the peace, the prosperity, the happiness, the greatness, and the glory which is the reward of social righteousness. How is it that men of the church can not see that the very nature of acts which seek private gains which are not at once social gains is to destroy peace and happiness, to create unemployment, and business crises, and to reduce the mass of men to poverty? The kingdom can not be an economic jungle.

The third factor in our unfortunate situation is our failure to discriminate social righteousness from personal righteousness and our failure to conceive the government of God in terms of social righteousness. At this very time Latter Day Saint ministers even are asking, What is the need of building stewardship communities? And when they ask that question, they reveal their ignorance of the necessity of government and of the nature of social righteousness. Think of it! Expecting to realize order, efficiency, and justice in society without government! They expect Zion to grow up like Topsy—as it grows up. It can't do that and be anything but a topsy-turvy affair. And consequently the membership of our church is a mere mass instead of a people. A heterogeneous and discordant mass at that, so far as its economic life is concerned.

Now the measure of the righteousness of a people is their "corporate" behavior; their "group" life; their self-government. No people can express its will except through its social institutions. If its ideals are realized at all, they must be embodied in social institutions. We have no other way of expressing our concept of righteousness in domestic life except through the family institution. We must make our laws, which say that one husband shall have but one wife. We must bind men together in such relations. There is no other way to express this righteousness. No social ideal can be applied to the problem of human living that is not clothed in social institutions.

And yet in spite of the decree of God, repeated over and over again in the revelations to the church: "This people must be organized"; "there must be an organization . . . to advance the cause you have espoused"; "gather together to the places appointed"; and so on and on, we are asked, What is the need of building stewardship communities? The need is this: These communities are the only possible way we have of expressing our concept of the government of God. It is through these community organizations that we must express our social righteousness, if it is expressed at all.

The fourth factor in our unfortunate situation is our reluctance to confess to ourselves that the government of God has anything to do with giving direction to and controlling the actions of men in economic life. Its experiences with corrupt government have bred into the race an aversion to all forms of restraints in economic life. We are afraid to trust men with authority to administer the concerns of economic life to make them orderly, efficient, and just. And this is the feeling of the mass of men in spite of the fact that the very cause of their economic serfdom is the absence of such a government in economic life.

It is true that the risks of government are great when it is administered by unscrupulous men, or by men whose judgments are perverted by personal favors or prejudices, or by men who are incompetent to perform such offices, or by men who are lacking in their sense of social justice. There is no form of government that does not entail risks. But we must have government. If we abolish one, we must set up another. And so we must take risks.

The presumption is (and I think it is well grounded) that the born-again men of the Christian movement are the best men to intrust with the task of making the economic life of the peoples of the church orderly, efficient, and just. And if the revelations to the Latter Day Saint people do not mean that they have a duty to institute a government of their own in economic life, and that in their own right as citizens of the state, then I think they mean nothing at all.

When these revelations were given, the church was warned that they were for our "salvation."

And we are beginning to see that our salvation from the evils that are distressing the world, in which we share, is conditioned in our own godly government of the affairs of our own economic life. Because we have not done this we find ourselves poverty stricken and distressed.

The essence of government is law, order, and office. But how many men who have accumulated worldly goods are willing to yield to any authority except their own private wills in the determination of the affairs of business life? And yet it is the very nature of government that the individual must be in subjection to the constituted authorities.

Contemplate the revelations to the church. What is their essence? In them we have one succession of laws, intended to serve as our code in the government of the affairs of our economic life. In them we have provision for office and the exercise of authority in the affairs of economic life. In them is positive provision for the organization of economic life. And that is the essence of order. The whole substance of our stewardship program is the godly government of our economic life.

But before we can realize the government of God in economic life, we must have a highly developed sense of social justice. And here we find the next factor in our unfortunate situation, and that is our failure to apprehend the elements of social justice. Justice! the very foundation of peace. Justice! the stuff in which the government of God is grounded.

How is it that such men as L. T. Hobhouse, professor of sociology in the University of London, have so much better understanding of the question of social justice than the body of our ministry? Read his book: The Elements of Social Justice. Read John Dewey on the same question. Read Ward and Hobson and Carver and Towney and Rauschenbusch and Gore and Beckett and all the rest. These men have a clear comprehension of the nature and elements of social justice and its relation to the peace, prosperity, and happiness of peoples. Read the contributions of these men, and, if you know your Book of Doctrine and Covenants you will think that these men have drunk of the same waters of life that refreshed the souls of our prophets. These men have written the good books that we are admonished to study.

Just a quotation from our book of revelations, for that is all we can give in a short article like this, to remind you that men who seek the kingdom with its prosperity and happiness must have a highly developed sense of social justice:

What man among you having twelve sons, and who is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith to the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just.

Now what is this? Is it not a repudiation of the present system of distribution? Does it not declare the institution as is to be an ungodly institution? And must not the men who build Zion apprehend the true nature of existing institutions? And must they not build new institutions through which to achieve some measure of social justice?

But we have not done that. Not a few—some of them men of office; some, men of influence—deny that doctrine of social justice either in theory or in practice or in both. And because there is such a disparity in our concepts of social justice we have not been able to find common ground upon which to lay the foundations of our Zion structure. And today, in spite of our splendid opportunities; in spite of the great need for the peoples of the church to demonstrate the authority of their religion; there are no towers of Zion to reflect the light of God and to say to the nations: This is the city of righteousness. Come and learn the ways of peace, of prosperity, and of happiness. No; but instead we trample the banner of Zion in the dust of our own poverty and crush her truths with the feet of our own waywardness. What a record of performance!

In the next article I shall discuss the relation of righteousness to prosperity.

Social Aspects of the Message of Jesus

By A. B. Phillips

The most important—because the most far-reaching—problems of life concern the relationship of men with each other. The word of God in Genesis, which declares: "It is not good that man should be alone," applied not only to Adam but to the whole human race. The principle concerns every person, family, and social group in existence, and implies the necessity of being able to live in friendly association with each other. More than this, it expressly implies that men inherently possess those faculties which are essential to proper social relationships, and which are normally expressed through association with others.

In the course of time the social powers of the human race had become perverted. Men became selfish and disregardful of their obligations to the social group. Their interest in life had become narrow, sordid, and short-sighted, resulting in the prevalence of wickedness, misery, and general degeneration. The beauty of life had changed to hideous deformity, and the glory of God's image in man was pitifully giving place to the sinister shadows of evil. Self, instead of the social good, dominated the thoughts and purposes of man and distorted his views of life and its responsibilities.

To the Jews had been committed the privileges of a kingdom with laws of social justice and equity. For a time it appeared to flourish, but wickedness became prevalent, and decay set in. Soon the glory of Israel was no more, and only the memory of former greatness remained; this, and bitter mourning. In the depths of distress and exile, spiritual leaders remembered the promises of the Scriptures. It had been foretold that the Messiah should appear and establish in triumphant glory a kingdom of equity and righteousness that should never be destroyed.

1. Announcement of the Messiah

In the fullness of time, Jesus came as the long-expected Messiah. His coming was heralded by angels with the declaration:

He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.—Luke 1: 32, 33.

With high hopes the Jews flocked to hear the announcement of their Savior-Messiah. They expected him to throw off the hated yoke of Roman rule and establish again the civil power and glory of the Jewish kingdom. Indeed, they looked for the new kingdom to far eclipse the glory of their former state. As he preached to them in the synagogue of Nazareth, they were thrilled by his wonderful words:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.—Luke 4: 18, 19.

But their selfish joy turned to amazement and wrath when they learned that he required them to repent of their sins, live righteously, love their neighbors, and be pure in heart. What concern had all this with the glorious kingdom of the Jews? When they made inquiry concerning the matter, instead of proving his mission by freeing them from the haughty Romans, he answered them in riddles:

And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you.—Luke 17: 20, 21.

Would the true Messiah censure their holy priest for avoiding the unholy stranger, and praise the despised Samaritan who disregarded their traditions? (Luke 10: 3-37.) Would he charge that their strict and sanctified Pharisees were worse than the abominable publicans and harlots? (Matthew 21: 31.)

Surely the Anointed One would associate with the rich, the scribes, and the honored men of the world; and not with the poor, the sick, and the despised rabble. That he must be an impostor became their shallow verdict.

2. The Kingdom Program of Jesus

Even the disciples of Jesus for a time failed to understand the import of his mission. Some believed that he would soon manifest his divine power by establishing his kingdom by force. Even after his resurrection, the spiritual realities of the kingdom of heaven were still strange to them, for they asked him:

Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?—Acts 1: 6.

As yet they little understood that the very principles which the Master had intrusted to them were to be vitalized by a power that would change swords into plowshares (Isaiah 2: 3), and end the savagery of war (Micah 4: 3); or that the peaceful vine and fig tree would eventually displace the battlements of strife throughout the world as a result of his message to mankind. Neither did they realize what a glorious experience for them was implied in his answer to their inquiry when he said:

It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.—Acts 1: 7, 8.

While many had turned away from the new Messiah in worldly disappointment, a few were beginning to see that his message held marvelous meaning and hope for them. They did not yet understand that his kingdom program was to succeed by pure altruism, but they knew that it was to be a kingdom of justice and equity, in contrast to the injustice and oppression which existed in the kingdoms of the world. They knew that it would be a righteous kingdom in which a brotherhood of friendship and peace would prevail, and thus in a limited way they viewed the kingdom of God that should prevail on earth and stand for ever.

The kingdom program of Jesus began with the regeneration of the individuals composing it, formed the church as a missionary and social order to promote it, and established the social principles of love, justice, equality, and brotherhood for its security. The ideals which are revealed in this program comprise the most marvelous social concept that the world has ever known. Yet its essential features are so simple that a child may understand them.

3. Social Significance of the Kingdom

The law of social existence demands that our mutual dependence upon each other shall be recognized, and also that the mutual obligations growing out of this dependence shall be accepted by us and willingly discharged. The social teaching of Jesus places this relationship at once upon the loftiest and most intimate possible foundation, and binds it with the holiest and most enduring of all ties. It describes the kingdom of God as a sacred family relationship, in which God is the Father of all, and all under his fatherhood are brothers. It makes known the fullness of the Father's all-prevailing love, and the obligation of man to reciprocate that love and to prove its reality by love to man.

The purpose of the kingdom of God is thus shown to be the benefit and happiness of all mankind. In accordance with its principles, both the majority and the minority, however great or small, must seek the good of each other and all others. The foundation upon which this social concept is based is declared by Jesus to be:

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.—Matthew 22: 37-40.

The social security of such a kingdom is apparent, for it does not tolerate the injustice of favoritism or selfishness, but requires of every subject whole-hearted devotion to the interests and ideals which it represents. The great Teacher himself commanded that his followers give it their first consideration, saying:

Wherefore, seek not the things of this world; but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.—Matthew 6: 33, Inspired Version.

Thus while the everlasting kingdom was the ultimate condition to be reached, it must be a righteous people composing it, and to accomplish this object Jesus sought to establish indelibly in the hearts of his followers the attitude and conduct that would cause such a kingdom to endure. This far-reaching program not only required enduring principles and upright personal character, but also an organization that would secure social solidarity and missionary effectiveness without disregarding the brotherhood of equality on which it must be established.

4. The Social Principles of Jesus

Because his social program must be realized by the process of individual regeneration, and not by mob revolution, Jesus taught his followers principles that would convert their hearts and purposes to the divine will. Not violence and bloodshed, but love, peace, and good will would bring in the kingdom of God. These were, therefore, qualities which Jesus commanded his disciples to acquire if they would share in the blessings of his triumphant kingdom and glory.

Human society is innately interdependent, and this social law is revealed in the common characteristics of mankind. Mutual interests are therefore superior to segregated interests, and the common good is more important than self aims. Man must think of himself in relation to others, and can not separate from them indefinitely without becoming extinct as a race. Some degree of human cooperation is therefore essential to our very existence; and the more complete cooperation becomes, the greater is the power of human accomplishment. Inasmuch as society is built upon the principle of likemindedness, which is essential to its existence, Jesus taught principles that would develop likemindedness in the right direction.

If men could be made to see and choose true values, their social and personal problems would be solved. To accomplish this result, the great social Teacher applied the principle of regeneration and the new birth directly to the individual. This principle is fundamental to the social philosophy of Jesus, for man must not only be educated to know the truth, but he must also acquire the disposition to follow where it leads—to motivate his life by it. The importance of the new birth is thus declared by the Master:

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born anew, he can not see the kingdom of God.—John 3: 3, English Revised Version.

5. Social Habits of Thinking

It is clear that the Savior understood and utilized the power of habit in right thinking. If his social program was to succeed, his followers must think in social terms. Therefore he utilized the habit of prayer as a means of socializing their thoughts. Man's utmost sincerity and humility will be manifested when he seeks to approach God, and this was the ideal occasion for Jesus to impress upon his disciples something of the grandeur and social meaning of his mission. After listening to the most wonderful discourse ever heard by human ear, the disciples were inspired anew by the marvelous yet simple prayer of their incomparable Teacher as he taught them, saying:

After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father who art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.—Matthew 6: 9, 10.

In this prayer is found no room for one who thinks only of himself. He must even share his heavenly Father with others, for if he prays "Our Father," he must think of others as his brethren. This consciousness of the universal fatherhood can not be separated from the realization of universal brotherhood, and he who disregards fraternal concord can not find acceptance with God, for Jesus warns him:

I say unto you, That every one being angry with his brother, shall be amenable to the judges: and whoever shall say to his brother, Fool! will be subject to the high council; but whoever shall say, Apostate wretch! will be obnoxious to the burning of Gehenna. If, therefore, thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there recollect that thy brother has aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go, first be reconciled to thy brother, then come, and present thy gift.—Matthew 5: 22-24, Emphatic Diaglott.

Furthermore, to pray that God's will be done on earth is to desire that righteousness and the common good shall prevail among men, and one who utters this prayer sincerely must seek to do the will of God. Having this magnificent concept of the divine program, the petitioner finds his own petty notions to be of little importance, for the glorious ideal of the coming kingdom overshadows every other ambition and hope. This ideal is kept before him daily through the habit of prayer.

He who realizes how universal is the love which is manifested in the fatherhood of God will also recognize the great responsibility of his brotherhood, and will desire to help all men to receive its blessings. For the tie of human brotherhood is indissoluble and enduring; it can not be assumed or repudiated at will, but is ours by virtue of the divine creation.

But he who will not choose the kingdom of God as the divine means of establishing universal righteousness, love, and equity, will not accept its obligations, and therefore can not be trusted with its glorious and eternal privileges. He will neither love God with all his heart nor his neighbor as himself, and though his lips may form the words: "our daily bread," his thoughts will be concerned with "my daily bread." How can this man have part in the kingdom of God?

Inner Cleansing

The oldest living city of the world is Damascus. The secret of its long life is in the fact that it nestles close up to the mountains and the river that rises in the mountains is turned under the city so that it reappears in sparkling fountains and in bubbling pools; it becomes, in fact, the flushing system for the whole city. The city is thus being constantly cleansed from within. The river also furnishes power to turn the wheels of the city's industries, both cleansing and power coming from the melting snows of the mountains. The city is thus endued with power and cleansing from on high.—E. Stanley Jones, in The Christ of Every Road.

A loving heart always finds some way to help others toward joy.

In the Herald of January 7 there appeared an abridgment of the following poem. We are glad to present the poem in this issue in complete form as it originally appeared in the Globe Gazette of Mason City, Iowa.

Hands

By Inez Kinney

I saw a rugged mountain pile,
Whose peak loomed stark and grim
Above the clouds and seemed to hold
The mysteries of time within.
Great seams and crevices had formed
Through ages passed away
By tempest, flood, or forces deep
That triumphed in their day.

Massed snow now lay in crevice deep
High up those dizzy slopes;
Great hands—a type of life they seemed,
Stretched forth in anguished hopes
To reach the top and surely there
To find the absolute,
And learn all truth, all treasures rare
Of Heaven's attribute.

Through ages long they struggled up,
Those bloodless, straining hands,
Refusing they, to toil and wait
On tranquil, common lands
Where life is undisturbed by urge
Or pain to look beyond
To where all quest and answers merge
Into the perfect bond.

The Salten Sea lies on the plain
Stretched out in smiling calm.
It typifies the hearts of those
Who find a soothing balm
In fruits of toil and common things,
In faith and confidence,
And all the peace that trusting brings
In humble recompense.

That mountain pile will surely stand,
Those hands stretched high and high,
The Salten Sea shall ever rest
And mirror summer sky.
Great souls will always struggle on
To find their Holy Grail,
While others toil in faith and hope
Nor seek to draw the veil.

Where would you be? Upon the plain Beside the Salten Sea?
Just toiling on and trusting God
For all eternity?
Or would you be upon the heights
To stand transfixed and mute
Because you'd strove as far as death
To reach the Absolute?

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Junior Stewardship for 1931

As previously noted in Herald columns, the church-wide experiment in junior stewardship extending over two years has demonstrated its value as an educational project. Reports from sponsors who have given the plan a fair trial are uniformly favorable to continuing the work in their branches, and many are enthusiastic. The children are happy in the experiences of accounting, and parents are appreciating a larger responsibility to provide training for their children in industry and thrift. At the same time most valuable lessons in the observance of the financial law of the church have been given, both to the children and to the adult members of the branch. Junior stewardship affords a concrete illustration of adult stewardship on a small scale.

A new third edition of the Junior Stewardship Record Books has just been made to supply the demand for 1931. It is urged that, wherever the books are desired, the pastor, financial agent, and the church school director choose a sponsor for the group of boys and girls who will keep the records. It would be most happy if the bishop's solicitor, himself, were to sponsor the movement in junior stewardship. The plan affords unusual opportunity for effective teaching of the financial law.

For project use under direction of the Department of Religious Education, the books will be supplied by the Presiding Bishopric at five cents each. Under this plan the sponsor agrees to give careful attention and encouragement to the boys and girls and to report their progress.

The books may be obtained for independent use from the Herald Publishing House at fifteen cents each.

For obvious reasons, the records for 1931 should begin in January. A supply of books and directions should be secured at once. Address

The Women at Work

By John Blackmore, Director of Adult Division

We can not waste time and enjoy eternity. This thought is implied in the instructions contained in Doctrine and Covenants 11:2. "Behold, the field is white already to harvest, therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God." Wasted time is damaging to the personality and destructive to the soul.

To be sure, the women of the church in the field of their unordained ministry have worked long and well. They have in the past stood shoulder to shoulder with the men of the church in the practical and spiritual ministrations which give to the church its social value. Of course, they do not share the responsibilities of priesthood, but they do share the call to minister in acts of kindness, sympathy, and service. All are called according to their gifts to labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

Organizing for Work

Since the movement was begun to unify with the Department of Religious Education the work previously done under the old organization of the Department of Women, many of the good women of the church have wondered how their work was to be carried forward. Letters constantly come to the desk asking for help and advice regarding the way to organize the work. Of course, before a local group should organize, they should well consider the task to be achieved, and the type of work to be done.

It may be well to review some of the work of the women as they are busy in the functioning of the local congregation. Many are teaching in the various divisions of the church school, others are ministering in the field of music, while some are studying in week-day class work. Others are working in groups earning finances by conducting bazaars, sales, dinners, etc. Then there are those who are busy doing types of social service work and visiting the sick and needy in a neighborly, friendly, and helpful way. Each task is essential and is a part of the ministry of the women. No one phase of the work should be considered more important than any other.

The essential organization for these tasks is already arranged for in most locals. The Sunday sessions of the church school provide the facilities for some teaching and for ministering in the field of music work through the usual avenues provided for that service. Unfortunately in some localities provision has not yet been made for other practical aspects of the women's work.

What to Do

In branches where the unified plan has been established, the supervisor of the adult division should survey the field and stimulate practical projects for work. We would advise in locals functioning under the new plan where the women's work groups are not as yet organized that the adult supervisor in consultation with the pastor arrange for a meeting of the women to form work groups or clubs. If, perchance, the adult supervisor can not meet in the initial meeting with the group, some qualified sister may be appointed to arrange and preside at the meeting. The women interested in a project will then organize themselves into a group to carry forward their particular work. This class or group will be a functioning part of the adult division.

The type of group organization arranged must be determined by the nature of the work to be accomplished. In all of this work the sanction and cooperation of the pastor should be sought before any particular projects are commenced.

These local work groups or clubs may choose a name for their own group, if that is desired. Of course these groups are not independent; they are a unit in the great cooperative endeavor of the whole branch or congregation. Next week we shall discuss further the ministry of the women.

For Bible Students

"Jesus and His Message," by Christiana Salyards

This most excellent study of the Scriptures is now ready for mailing. The lessons have been freshly written by one of the ablest students of the Scriptures the church has produced. The treatment is interesting, the style attractive, and the argument convincing. Mrs. Salyards, the author, brings to her task the study and experience of a lifetime of editorial effort in the preparation of lesson materials. Her lessons breathe the spirit of the latter-day message. Her present treatment of Jesus and His Message challenges the admiration and inspires the confidence and love of the student.

The fifty-two lessons are bound in a single volume, to provide a full year of study. They are admirably adapted to use in older young people's or adult classes of the church school, on Sunday morning or during the week. They may be carried for credit if arrangements are made with the general department.

In paper binding the book is strong and durable, suitable for class use.

In cloth binding it is a valuable addition to one's library, an ever-ready reference text.

By mail, postpaid, in paper covers, 75 cents; in cloth covers, $1 each.

Guiding the Nursery Child

STUDY HELPS FOR PARENTS AND WORKERS IN THE NURSERY DEPARTMENT OF THE CHURCH SCHOOL

By Mrs. Bertha Stevens, Phoenix, Arizona

These assignments are appearing early each month in these columns. They will run for one year and should be decidedly helpful to parents of small children and workers with the little tots. Monthly group meetings or classes may well be formed in every branch, under the direction of the church school. The text, Guiding the Nursery Child, by Sisters Blanche Mesley and Bertha Stevens, is a splendid work in its field. Order from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, price, $1.25.

It is suggested that each study group organize the material in this unit of twelve lessons around the solution of problems. We feel that if this is done, the successful solution of such problems will find a greatly increased class interest as well as the necessary scientific information organized and ready for future use in meeting similar problems.

The problem for discussion and solution should arise, as far as possible, from the immediate needs of the group. Take actual situations, similar problems of mothers with nursery age children. With this in mind the problems stated for discussion in the accompanying outlines are merely suggestive.

LESSON TWO

Food Needs of the Preschool Child

Problem: My three-year-old child constantly rebels against food provided for her. She doesn't like milk and cares little for certain vegetables. How can I be sure that she is adequately nourished?

Many factors enter into the problems of nutrition. We need to consider the properties of various foods, the amounts needed, the time and frequency of serving, as well as the age and special requirements of each individual child.

The attitudes of members of the family toward various foods and the general atmosphere surrounding mealtime are important elements to be considered when planning for the food needs of the young child.

The following questions will serve as a basis in gathering and organizing important information on the diet of the preschool child helping in solving the foregoing problem.

1. List the different food classifications (pages 23-25; see references below).
2. What special purpose does each have in body growth and well-being? (Reference: Any good book on foods used by home economics departments.)
3. Explain the importance of each vitamin in the diet.
4. List the different vitamins—A, B, C, D, and E—and under each list the foods high in content of each vitamin.
5. How is food value measured? Explain.
6. How much of each food requirements for the two-year-old? For the three-year-old?
7. Plan a food schedule for the two-year-old. For the three-year-old.
8. Discuss means of forming right food habits. Pages 30, 62, 72-74, 144-146.
9. How may we overcome a child's distaste for certain desirable foods? Should we insist on his eating food he dislikes?
10. Discuss the menu on pages 26-29, 66-72, on basis of the appended outline, which many mothers have found helpful. It helps to keep in mind the six groups of foods from which we must provide each day. If we include in the child's diet each day food from each of these groups, we can be reasonably sure he is getting a balanced ration.

THE DAILY MEALS OF THE PRESCHOOL CHILD

I. MILK:

- 1 pint, absolute minimum.
- 1 quart desirable and important.

II. VEGETABLES AND FRUITS:

- 2 fruits, one of which is raw.
- 2 vegetables in addition to potatoes, one of which is leafy.

Examples of leafy vegetables:

Cabbage	Celery
Lettuce	Cauliflower
Spinach	Kohlrabi

III. CEREAL, BREADS, ETC.

- 1 whole cereal each day.

IV. MEAT, EGGS, CHEESE, FISH, POULTRY, GELATINE.

- One serving of any two.
- This plan should include 1 egg per day.

V. FATS, including BUTTER, CREAM, and COD LIVER OIL.

- 1 tablespoon of butter is minimum.
- $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon cod liver oil.

VI. SUGARS, SYRUPS.

- Used to add fuel to the diet and to add flavor and variety. Used sparingly at end of meal.

The Merrill-Palmer Nursery School authorities recommend that if any of the following foods are served at the noonday meal they be served to the little child in these portions:

- $\frac{1}{8}$  cup creamed cabbage.
- $\frac{1}{8}$  cup stewed tomatoes with croutons.
- $\frac{1}{8}$  cup stewed prunes.
- $\frac{1}{8}$  cup salmon loaf.
- $\frac{1}{8}$  cup green beans.
- $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoon cream sauce.
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup cream of tomato soup.
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup cream tapioca with crushed pineapple.
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup cream vegetable soup.
- 1 cup chocolate blanc mange.
- $\frac{1}{8}$  cup scalloped potatoes.
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup buttered carrots.
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup baked custard.
- $\frac{1}{8}$  cup scrambled eggs.
- 1 small baked potato.
- $\frac{1}{8}$  cup apple sauce.
- $\frac{1}{4}$  cup stewed apricots.

Below are three tested recipes used in a nursery school and especially recommended to be included in the nursery child's diet. They would serve twenty-four children of nursery age if each child was served one half cup. For home use the quantities specified would need to be reduced according to the size of the family.

Baked Liver Pudding

- 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  pounds of liver, ground.
- 5 medium-sized potatoes.
- 2 medium-sized onions.
- 1 bunch celery.
- 12 medium-sized carrots.
- 4 cups canned tomatoes and juice.
- 2 cups stale bread crumbs.
- 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  tablespoons salt.

Put all vegetables (except tomatoes) and stale bread through food chopper. Cut tomatoes into small bits. Combine all ingredients. Turn into baking dish. Bake in moderate oven one hour.

Fruit Cups

NO. I.

- 18 oranges—sweeten to taste.
- 8 ripe bananas.
- 2 cups pineapple—fresh grated or canned may be added.

NO. II.

- 18 ripe bananas.
- 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  cups orange juice.
- $\frac{1}{2}$  cup light Karo corn syrup (enough to sweeten the orange juice).

Allow to stand twenty minutes before serving.

Little Journeys with the Editor in Chief

I closed my last "Little Journey" with an account of the ceremonies of the official opening of the Toronto Church, newly erected. It had been our intention (Brother Budd's and mine) to leave Toronto after the evening services. One of the brothers had offered to take us to Buffalo in time to catch a train west at 4.30 a. m. But as there were some matters which needed our attention, we decided to postpone our departure. Besides we were strongly urged to attend the "official banquet" on Monday night. We were encouraged in this by the suggestion and partial promise that we would, following the banquet, be taken by car to Buffalo so that we might board a 4.30 train Tuesday morning, which would put us in Kansas City Wednesday morning, a day later than we had planned.

Well, Monday we spent at the church from about ten o'clock in the morning until late at night. Conferences with officials, etc., occupied our time, with "time out" for lunch. About five or six o'clock, the Saints began to gather, and by the time set for the banquet the church was again a scene of happy activity. The entire auditorium was occupied by tables, neatly arranged and decorated, with places for about two hundred; but nearly fifty more were served. So much per plate, but all profits to go into the church building fund.

I am not going to take much space here to detail the happenings; but to say a good time was had is to state it well. Under the leadership of Brother Prentice again as chairman, a program was carried out which lasted until ten o'clock and past. Songs by the "crowd," songs by soloists, readings, instrumental numbers, toasts, speeches, introductions, interspersed with "courses," whiled away the time all too quickly; and the Saints admiring the efficient way in which the women had provided and served the tables, pleased with the entertainment that "Leslie" and his followers had given, and happy with the efficient equipment of the building (which will care for Sunday school, prayer service, preaching, committees, musicales, dramas, and other activities needed in a live branch) broke up the "party" with friendly exchange of amenities, and separated pronouncing the opening exercises of the new church an unqualified success.

An interesting feature was the introduction of contractors, general and sub, and workmen who had built, decorated, and equipped the building.

Now a problem confronted Brother Budd and me. Brother "Sam" Clark, who had planned to take us to Buffalo, had not been at the banquet, and we had not heard from him. But knowing he doubtless had good reasons behind his moves, we accepted the situation. Well, Brother Frank Clifton said he would take us, even if it meant driving all night. The weather, however, had been such as I had seen a number of times in Kansas City, viz, drizzling at a temperature near freezing, and as evening came on the temperature dropped a few degrees. So, peering outdoors, and noting a thin coating of ice on the streets, I decided we had not best try the trip, though it meant a delay of another day in reaching home. So we stayed over, and spent the next day until about three o'clock in the afternoon looking after some matters related to the work in Toronto.

Three o'clock Tuesday afternoon found Brother Budd and me on a Canadian Pacific train leaving Toronto for Buffalo, to cross the unbarricaded boundary line again. Unbarricaded? Well, try to get past immigration and customs officers along that line with something you should not, and one is quite likely to find that line somewhat "protected." Now don't misunderstand me! Neither Brother Budd nor I had any difficulty in either direction; but on that trip out we saw or two who did. A traveling salesman near us was somewhat embarrassed—in fact, much embarrassed—by the shrewd customs officer finding about two quarts of liquor concealed in an overcoat pocket or pockets. The liquor was confiscated, and the salesman escaped a fine. Question: What did the customs man do with the liquor? Who knows? We heard some guesses made, but have no way of testing their correctness.

We arrived in Buffalo on time, and soon were at the Lackawanna station again. Securing accommodations on Nickel Plate Train No. 5, we sought refreshments. And at 7:45 we left on our westward trip home.

We spent some time on leaving in reading. I had noticed that Brother Budd gave evidences of being weary; but he was saying little. While the night was still young, I missed him; and on peeking into his bunk, saw he had "turned in." And I soon followed him. What time? Well, it was not after nine.

Next day was the 21st. This day has always been a red letter day in life, young and old. The anniversary of my birthday. Back in Independence a birthday dinner awaited me, if I were there in time. That was the problem. Ten minutes till eight o'clock in the morning found us at the LaSalle Street Station, and a few moments later at the Union Station, where at 9.35 we expected to board a train for Kansas City, Chicago and Alton No. 11. But that train was due in Kansas City at 9.45 p. m., and Kansas City is ten miles from Independence.

The day was spent in reading, writing, and napping. A happy thought had occurred to me at Chicago. I sent a telegram to the office, telling when I would arrive home. And at Louisiana, Missouri, a telegram was handed me from my daughter saying, "The Luffs will meet you at Independence."

Now this is what that meant: Old-time friends of mine are Mr. and Mrs. John W. Luff, she being a one-time playmate and schoolmate in Lamoni, way back in the last century. Their eldest daughter, Agnes, put in her earthly appearance on the 21st day of January quite a number of years later than I did. For the past few years Mrs. Luff has graciously said to me: "Come down and help Agnes eat her birthday cake." Well, that has become an annual event when I am home. And I am pleased to say that always there is a cake put in front of me with a number of candles corresponding to the number of years which have passed over my—bare head. So the telegram said rather plainly to me: Luffs are waiting dinner for you.

Then the question, How about the train stopping at Independence, not a regular but a flag stop? Well, Brother Budd, who is an experienced traveler, made inquiry and received the information that it would. And so it did. And on the platform we were met by Brother Luff, his son, and John Garver, whose Independence home is with that family. And so I had my birthday dinner after all, though a bit late. It was near midnight when the ceremony and visiting were all over. Visiting? Can you guess, when old-timers, half-centennarians, get reminiscent?

Yes, I had my cake, and helped Agnes eat hers. We all did, and mine, too. Candles on both.

Now it is a pleasant sight to see a blazing cake, and one with fifty-seven candles on it surely makes a blaze. I have not said how many candles burned on Agnes's cake; but we each succeeded in blowing them all out in one breath. I will say, however, that "my cake" was devil's food, while hers was angel's food. Any significance in that? Depends on who answers.

I have been very grateful to the Luffs for having me share the birthday festivities with them, and appreciate the gracious way they have taken me into the family for one day in the year.

I can not pass over the birthday matter without telling of the next night. The Laurel Club, of which I ought to be an honorary member, if I am not already, has also had a custom in recent years of giving a party for my benefit. So this year it was held on the 22d. And at the home of Sister T. J. Watkins the Laurels met their invited guests. It was a jolly party, though the jollity was subdued. Games, quiet ones, were played, songs were sung, and refreshments served—a most pleasant occasion. Again I am placed under additional obligation to the Laurels.

And so, after little journeys to Toronto, and two birthday celebrations, we drop back into the routine and grind of office work and attention to administrative details.

At home, January 27.

About Our Savior's Next Birthday

Christmas for the past several years has been a big problem to me. I could not see why, for I always liked the Christmas season of giving and receiving and the Santa Claus part for the children. I thought it almost a sin to rob them of the joy of believing in Santa Claus. Nevertheless for the last several years after Christmas was all over, I have said to myself, "It's all wrong. I do not know how, but I do know that it's all wrong." By the next Christmas time I had forgotten this feeling of dissatisfaction, and was ready to give and receive once more as I always had.

Every year the problem has grown worse, until this year I had a strong notion not to take any part in it, but the habits of a lifetime are hard to break. I had been wondering why it seemed wrong to me when others continued to get the same thrills out of it, when I picked up a Herald and, glancing through the pages, chanced on a short letter. I do not remember who wrote the letter or what the title was, and that Herald has already been sent to others, but the words which caught my attention ran something like this: How would we like to have a birthday and have everyone give everyone else beautiful presents, but give us none at all?

In an instant I knew why Christmas seemed wrong to me. One picture after another flashed through my mind.

First came a picture of the Christ with head bowed and shoulders drooping under the burden of debts. His eyes were saddened by the selfishness of his children, who were robbing him of his gifts. He wishes above all else the work of his church to go on, but we in our blindness have tied his hands, hindering his progress by withholding the gifts which would help him to spread abroad his glory. We are robbing him. How can that place of safety, the Zion for which we pray, talk, and sing, be realized if we continue to keep from him his own? Money may be the root of all evil, but Zion can never be built without it. Our cries of hard times and our pleadings for help must make him sorrowful, when he has plainly told us that we must learn obedience even if it be by the things we suffer. Still we go on our way, and when we suffer more than is pleasant, we begin to beg him to bless us, to tell us what to do when we have not begun to do the things he has already told us.

But I see another picture. The eyes of our Savior brighten; a smile is on his face. His beloved children have learned that it is more blessed to give than to receive. They have not ignored him on his birthday but have sacrificed to honor him. The debts of his church are lifted; new missionaries are sent out; the work in Zion is progressing; and most of all, the attitude of his children is such that he can bless them as he desires.

Under the conditions of the second picture, our children are taught from the beginning the great love of Christ instead of Santa Claus. They are taught to give rather than to receive.

Saints, if we could look through the year, and every one of our one hundred and eight thousand members plan on the next Lord's birthday, December 25, 1931, to present to him only one dollar, there would be great joy in the church next Christmas time? His countenance would indeed be bright, and his work would move forward. Then would we feel in position to ask for his richest blessings. It is within our reach to make his next birthday the happiest in history. Are we going to remember him?

Beloit, Wisconsin

236 Saint Lawrence Avenue

We are greatly encouraged as we look into the coming year, for it seems to promise growth and progress. The young people are carrying on the major projects of the branch. It is with new zeal and life that we go forward.

The church school officers are all under the twenty-four year age limit, and the music director is only thirteen years old. This is the result of the annual business meeting December 16. Amos Berve, district president, from Madison, presided. Our officers are: Pastor, Elder H. A. Wasson, Jamesville; associate pastor, Priest J. F. Loomis; church school director, Ephraim Johnson; assistant director, Lucille Johnson; secretary, Clara Barton; branch clerk, Sister J. F. Loomis; treasurer, Noah Johnson; music director, Shirley Johnson; librarian, Sister Clara Barton; custodian, publicity agent, and solicitor, Guy L. Allen.

Apostle D. T. Williams recently made another visit to Beloit and gave encouragement in his discourses the evenings of January 2 and 3 and Sunday morning following. His words of counsel caused us to more keenly realize our position and to have a greater desire to help in unity to establish Zion.

The branch budget was set January 11, at the amount of four hundred dollars. This assures a larger and better church school and some improvements on the church building which will make it more convenient for worship and more inviting to strangers.

The pastor, Elder H. A. Wasson, has outlined many activities in the year's program.

The church school director is making an effective organization to ascertain if our church has a real place for religious education in this city. As we watch the work of our members, we are caused to hope that the youth of other localities will catch the vision and make it possible for all to enjoy the opportunities our church now affords.

Atchison, Kansas

Ninth and Santa Fe Streets

The two weeks preceding the holidays, W. A. Smith, missionary, was in Atchison. Preoccupation of the people in holiday activities prevented a general attendance at the services, and we hope the future meetings of this brother will be more successful here.

December 21 the church school gave an appropriate Christmas program arranged by Sisters Anna Lentz and Isabel Gildhaus. At the conclusion of the program the school was pleasantly surprised by the presentation of a treat to each member, a box of candy from Anna Lentz.

At the sacramental service January 4 the infant daughter of Gilbert F. and Eva Hedrick was blessed and given the name, Ruth Emma. December 7 the daughter of Mr. Beryl and Sister Dorothy Reynolds was blessed and named Dolores Jeanne, Frank G. and Gilbert F. Hedrick officiating.

Brother Robert Johnston received a telegram December 1 from Seattle, Washington, conveying the sad news that his brother, George Johnston, was accidentally killed that morning by the caving in of a sewer. Before going to Washington, Brother Johnston was a member of this branch. He presided over the group in 1906.

Elkhart, Indiana

We are endeavoring to do our bit in advancing the cause of Zion in this city of thirty-eight thousand inhabitants. Services continue every Sunday at 2245 Morton Avenue. Although there is opposition, we are blessed, and the Lord is raising up friends for us. We are often reminded of the prophecy quoted by S. W. L. Scott of the comparative growth of the Lord's work with latter-day Israel: "I will take you one of a family and two of a city, and bring you to Zion."

The Sunday school is interesting, and the children and teachers manifest a commendable degree of enthusiasm. We are availing ourselves of every opportunity for good.

January 4 was a day characterized by fine spirit. We were blessed and encouraged in the five services of the day. Elder Scott was here. Sunday school began at ten o'clock, a sermon at eleven, dinner at the noon hour in cafeteria style, and at 2.30 in the afternoon Brother Scott administered the rite of baptism to three people in the Y. M. C. A. Building. The confirmation service came at four o'clock, followed by sacrament and devotional period until the lights were turned on.

Eight people from Gary, Indiana, seventy-five miles away, were present.

Brother Walters, priest, from Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, is superintendent of the Sunday school, and Sister Wilsey is the secretary as well as a teacher. Brother Wilsey and son, Robert, take charge of the music with violin and cornet, and Sister Slack is pianist.

The industrial depression has hit this city as elsewhere, and the unemployment problem has handicapped efforts at evangelization. An effort is now being made to locate all the members in Elkhart, that they may be told where to meet us in worship.

Sister Wilsey is loaning church books. The Call at Evening was given to one woman who said that she could stop reading it only with difficulty. She called one evening to talk with Brother Scott on divine healing. She is reading our books and seeking to learn the truth.

Pleasant Valley Branch

Lucasville, Ohio

Many members here are alert to the needs of the gospel and are growing in number and in spirituality.

Fair attendance marked the Sunday school and prayer and praise services which opened the month of December. This same day the emblems of the Lord's Supper were shared by the Saints in the tent at Valley View, seventy-six being present at the Sunday school and prayer service in the afternoon. Two brothers were divinely admonished to prepare for a work. One of these, Brother James Cheffen, was lately baptized by Brother Jacob Halb.

The Sunday school is doing fine, and this we think is due to the effort of the new officers. E. E. Williams is superintendent and Donald Bealor is his assistant. Sister Lizzie Hill is leader of the women and their department is active.

The last report from the tent gave Walter Culp as superintendent of the Sunday school, with Harry Culp as assistant. The work is progressing. Attendance during December amounted to between sixty and eighty every Sunday. Because interest continues here we feel this group will soon be organized into a mission or branch.

Sorrows have been our share as well as joys. December 20 Jason Crabtree, near Henley, Ohio, was injured while raising a barn. A piece of falling timber broke his arm and leg. He suffers greatly.

Charles Culp, the victim of an accident several months ago, in which he suffered a broken arm and leg, left the hospital too soon, and hurt his leg over. He underwent an operation for the second injury and is getting along very well.

The Christmas entertainment came the evening of December 23, and a fine time is reported at the tent on Christmas Eve. Missionary Jacob Halb is expected here soon to hold ten days or two weeks of meetings.

Fisher, Arkansas

We recently had the assistance of Missionary A. M. Baker in an attempt to enlarge our boundaries. Elder Baker held a good audience throughout the meetings. Here it is not a matter of proving the divinity of the latter-day work, but rather the people need to be taught to be religious. We hope to have Elder Baker here again before conference. Many friends assisted in the singing, which was much above the average.

The people here have much for which to be thankful. In many places nearby the Red Cross is feeding hundreds of people. There is noted a tendency on the part of many individuals to be thankful for things previously overlooked.

We should be grateful for the opportunities we have to serve rather than lament because of the things which we can not do. We are hopeful of the future but are endeavoring not to look so far ahead that we ignore the blessings and opportunities of the present.

This branch is like the country in general; it has turned to more substantial progress. C. G. ZIEGENHORN.

Cherokee, Iowa

For several months the priesthood have labored faithfully to bring the Saints into harmony with one another and with God's law to the extent that we can grow in accord with the progressive program of the church given to us by the last General Conference.

We have been slow to organize under the new order of church school, because we did not fully understand it. But Brothers Reeder and Crippen attended a district meeting of the priesthood at Woodbine in September and received so much help concerning the work that when Brothers Gunsolley and Adams came here for a two-day meeting it was not hard to convince all the members that we should organize our working forces according to the program designed by the church. Brother Gunsolley, district president, was asked to return, and December 16 the branch business meeting was conducted, there being a fine representation of the membership present. There it was voted to organize under the new plan, and Brother A. R. Grippen was again elected pastor after twenty-eight years of service in that capacity. Brother Albert Haynes was chosen superintendent of church school; clerk, Brother Reeder; financial agent, Alfred Ballantyne. E. M. Chiles will continue as bishop's agent. Brother Gunsolley stated that he had never conducted a business meeting in which such a degree of the Holy Spirit was manifested.

Brother Crippen and the supervisors of departments visited Logan Branch December 28 to observe the workings of their church school. They report pleasure in the trip and the learning of many things which will help us locally.

Albert Haynes was severely burned December 27 by the explosion of dust in the furnace at the school where he is employed. He was unable to take the trip to Logan with the other workers; however, he had recovered sufficiently to conduct the first church school session of the new year.

Brother and Sister E. M. Chiles were bruised and shaken when struck by an automobile the evening of December 26, and two grandchildren were slightly injured when the wagon in which they were riding was demolished. Brother Chiles, pulling the wagon which contained the children, was crossing the street when the accident occurred.

Guy Haynes and family, former members of this branch, have returned from Waterloo, Iowa, and will again make their home here. Elder Haynes is a worker whom we gladly welcome.

Ten members of the branch attended district conference at Woodbine and report a profitable and spiritual season of worship and instruction.

The Saints enjoyed a good Christmas program on Christmas Eve given by the children of the church school.

Pastor A. R. Crippen and wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary New Year's Day. A family dinner was given by their daughters, Sisters Reeder and Hahn. An informal reception was held in the afternoon, when many friends called to offer congratulations and best wishes. The happy couple received many flowers and a beautiful mirror as a reminder of the esteem in which they are held in the community.

The first Sunday in the new year was a busy day for the Saints. Priesthood meeting convened at eight o'clock, junior church at nine, church school at ten merging into sacramental service at eleven. The new organization worked harmoniously, and the Spirit of God was felt throughout the day, giving evidence that God is ready to bless his people if they will work with him.

The Week of Prayer is being observed. It started with a fine spirit of cooperation.

Brother E. Y. Hunker conducted two weeks of services during December, baptizing one candidate. This was his first visit here, and he will be welcome to return at any time. His splendid sermons were much enjoyed.

Webster Groves, Missouri

January 12.—The cantata, "White Gifts for the King," was presented the evening of December 21 to a large and appreciative audience. Everyone spoke of the beautiful setting and of the acting by members of the school. Sister Beatrice Hill is to be complimented for her work in arranging the scenery. Many of the gifts went to needy families of the church.

There is an average attendance of seventy-five students in the Sunday school, and many are striving to win a pin as an attendance prize.

Pastor C. L. Archibald spoke to the congregation regarding attendance at church services on January 11, and we are hoping good results will follow. So far this winter, attendance at all meetings has been fair, but owing to sickness in the neighborhood, some are unable to attend.

The Sunday school superintendent, R. C. Hands, has entered the Missouri Pacific Hospital. We look forward to the time when he will return to our midst.

Plans are to have B. E. Brown hold a series of meetings in the near future. Surely this will be fruitful in results. Brother Brown is a capable missionary.

RUSSELL E. CHOATE.

San Diego, California

We of San Diego Branch have elected officers for the coming year and believe that the Holy Spirit directed our selections. Apostle M. A. McConley was in charge, and the meeting was characterized by harmony and good will. Everyone came resolved to transact the business for which the meeting was called. Our hope is that this unified spirit will be manifested throughout the year.

The following are the officers elected: Pastor, E. C. Aylor; clerk, J. N. Munroe; publicity agent, deacon, and treasurer, M. O. Harder; auditor, C. W. Long; Sunday school superintendent, Sister Barbara Kellerby; superintendent of Department of Recreation and Expression, Sister Phoebe Kieffer; superintendent Women's Department, Sister E. C. Aylor. Brother E. C. Aylor was ordained an elder under the hands of Apostle M. A. McConley, Elders J. N. Munroe, Clyde Walrath, and W. F. Kellerby.

As we review the past we find it is the sum total of the present; and the future is all we have to work for, to hope for, and to live for. The year 1930, as an allotted portion of time, does not show a material gain, yet to the spiritual understanding the branch has made progress, identified through the unified thought and purpose of our existence. We realize that Christ has made intercession to the Father for us, and our time of probation has been extended that we may yet be instrumental in establishing Zion.

There are two things I have added to my individual task for the year 1931—every member of the branch a tithe payer and a Herald reader. To the accomplishment of these ends I ask the faith and prayers of the Saints. M. O. HARDER.

Savanna, Illinois

January 11.—Saints here have been attending an institute held for eleven nights under the direction of District President E. R. Davis. Attendance and interest shown have been gratifying, and we feel that much good will result from the instruction received. A desire has been created to comply more fully with the gospel laws and move forward toward the goal, which can be accomplished only by acquiring an intelligent understanding of our church program and incorporating these principles in our lives, so that we may become doers of the word and not hearers only.

Brother Davis is a teacher by example as well as by precept, and is well fitted for the great teaching task, inspiring the rest of us to become coworkers with God in the redeeming of mankind.

We observed the call to prayer and united our petitions with the Saints all over the world in behalf of the various needs of the church, and believe that God will bless his church, if we are united in a sincere desire to do all we can for his glory. Let us seek his aid at all times, diligently striving to live up to the program of the church, that we may demonstrate to the world that the gospel is more than theory.

Fresno, California

District President G. P. Levitt was here December 18, 19, and 21. The first night he preached an excellent sermon, the second he had charge of the ordination of Frank Enix, our new branch president, called a few weeks ago to the office of elder. In addition to this ordinance, the new officers were installed with appropriate ceremony. At this time a number of the sisters being installed were spoken to by the Spirit and encouraged to greater faithfulness, being promised the strength needed for their work. Sister Violet Stoner Smith asked to have her infant daughter blessed.

Sister Lillie Jennings made appointments as follows: in charge of adult group, A. S. Votaw; young people, Pearl Roberts; children, Alatheia Kraschal. These three will make plans and appoint teachers where necessary.

The Religio presented its Christmas program Sunday evening, December 21, under the direction of Sister Roberts. This was in the form of a pageant, "Gifts unto His Manger Bring." Then Brother Levitt showed slides on the life of Christ.

The next evening the Sunday school presented its program, also directed by Sister Roberts. There were orchestral numbers, readings, class exercises, pantomimes, and a tableau. Christmas treats were given to everyone.

Sister Annie Jennings, sixty-eight years old, passed away December 31. She had been in poor health for a number of years and has suffered several illnesses in the last few months. She was taken sick again Christmas Day at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Charles Cheney, who lives near Tulare. The funeral was conducted at Tulare by A. S. Votaw January 2. Sister Jennings will be greatly missed by her many friends here. DOROTHY M. FUGATE.

Fremont, Nebraska

Though the Saints here are an unorganized group functioning under the direction of the district presidency, we hope to build a working unit organized to function as a branch.

We were well represented at the reunion at Decatur, some attending the full time.

The Women's Department is active. We do not have as our primary aim the making of money, but have held three food sales this fall and winter with gratifying results. The group meets every week and has just completed two years' study of the Book of Mormon. Now we take up the study of the Bible.

District Missionary C. A. Kress moved his family to Fremont, and their help and association are much appreciated. Brother Kress has held two series of meetings here. Keen interest was manifested. There is opportunity for accomplishing much in this town.

The Christmas program was conducted December 24. Everyone enjoyed the program, and Santa Claus left a treat for all.

The passing of the old year was celebrated by a prayer meeting opening at ten o'clock. Everyone was asked to contribute something to this meeting. Lunch was served at the beginning of the new year.

The election of Sunday school officers was held the first Sunday of the year as follows: Superintendent, George Fowler; assistant, Sister Jay Crocker; secretary treasurer, Sister Otis Gardner; assistant, Richard Kress; chorister, Sister C. A. Kress; organist, Beulah Gardner; assistant, Helen Kress; correspondent, Sister George Fowler.

We have been greatly blessed with health and employment, and hope as a group to merit greater blessings in the future.

Brother and Sister Kress have been called to Minnesota on account of the serious illness of Sister Kress's mother.

The home of Brother and Sister Fenold Olry has been blessed with a baby girl.

Saints who happen to pass through Fremont will be welcome at our services.

Flint, Michigan

The week of prayer brought to the Saints of Flint some of the richest spiritual experiences enjoyed for many months. A prayer service was conducted each evening in the week, attendance increasing every night.

Sunday morning, January 11, the prayer service was in session for almost three hours, and the church was filled to capacity. The peace of God that "passeth all understanding" thrilled the souls of all, and we were lifted into heavenly places. We prayed for a Pentecostal experience, and the windows of heaven were opened and the word of God which is "quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart," was heard in our midst. Gifts of song and revelation were enjoyed.

At this meeting Brothers Fred Hutchins and Theo Bush were called to the eldership, and Brother William Joplin to the office of deacon. Many of those present, including the district presidency, confirmed the calling of the brothers named and witnessed to the divinity of the message given.

Since the week of prayer, many members have been heard to say that they are enjoying a peace and fellowship with God now which they never before experienced. May we profit by the experiences of this week and in the future be more diligent in prayer than hitherto, that the presence of God may continuously abide with us.

The Saints of Flint are rejoicing with Elder W. E. Alldread, who held the winning ticket at the auto show in Flint last week, and won a new Chevrolet Coach, fully equipped and with license. Brother Alldread is very deserving of this good fortune.

The work of the church in Flint is onward. Much has been accomplished in the past two years, but our vision for the future includes greater things.

T. L. CLARKE.

Santa Barbara, California

Santa Barbara Branch is starting the new year by putting the plan of religious education into effect. At the last business meeting in 1930, officers were elected. Brother Harry Pedersen was sustained as pastor, while Brother Leonard Younger and Brother Bates were appointed as his associates. Brother Bates, however, could not serve, as he was about to leave Santa Barbara, and the place was left open until January, when Brother Paul Reed was appointed. The remaining officers are as follows: Branch clerk, Sister Louise Winniford; branch treasurer, Brother Eckright; chorister, Sister Torrison; musician, Margaret Daggett; director of religious education, Brother Heth; secretary, Crystal Pedersen; director of Recreation and Expression, Roy Curtis; director of Women's Department, Ethel Heth.

We are working towards a church building. Although there seem to be many difficulties in the way, we hope to get it this coming year. We know that if we had a nice-appearing building instead of a rented hall, many more people would attend our services. It seems a pity that anyone lets the building's appearance stand in his way, for the salvation that is preached in our little hall is the same salvation that would be preached in a fine church. Many people are offended at the stable, and forget the Christ.

At the first sacramental service of the year, the hall was almost full, several nonmembers attending. The presence of the Holy Spirit was felt by all, and filled the room with such glory as I never felt in any other church. Many testified, even some of the nonmembers, and bore witness to the mercy of God. A baby, Billie Joe Bledsoe, was blessed by Brother Pederson. The baby is a year old.

We are planning many activities for the coming year. All the new officers are very enthusiastic, and hope that the close of this year will find our little branch at least twice as big as at the beginning.

LOUISE WINNIFORD.

Oshoto, Wyoming

January 25.—The Saints met December 28 at the usual hour. The Sunday school adopted the church school plan of conduction. Pastor Fred Cousins presented the name of Sister George Redding as supervisor of the church school, which was approved. Sister Redding selected Vaughn McElroy as her assistant; secretary-treasurer, Lucile Hartshorn; organist, Marjorie McElroy; chorister, Sister W. H. McElroy. At the same time, the branch held its business meeting, old officers being retained, with Brother Fred Cousins as pastor.

The Department of Women met January 6 at the home of Brother Cousins. Although Sister Cousins was confined to her bed, Brother Fred gave the women a fine dinner. Ten members were present. A short program was presented, and Brother Cousins gave the name of Sister W. H. McElroy as leader for another year. This was accepted. Brother Cousins gave the women an encouraging talk. After the report of last year's work was made, plans for the new year were formed.

January 7 Brother Fayette Cole held prayer meeting at the home of Tom Gray, and on January 8 Brother Horace Hartshorn conducted a good prayer service at the home of George Redding. There was also a prayer hour January 11 after Sunday school, Brother Horace Hartshorn in charge. The following week Brother Fayette Cole preached a good sermon on stewardship.

MRS. CLARA MCELROY.

Independence

Stone Church

Completing the coordination of the church school services in the main auditorium of the Stone Church, officers announced Sunday morning that the Sunday school hour will in the future begin at 9.45 instead of 9:30.

A large congregation attended the sacramental service in the main room of the Stone Church. In the stand with Pastor John F. Sheehy were Apostles F. Henry Edwards and Frank Curtis and Elders R. T. Cooper, W. Wallace Smith, H. G. Barto, and Stanley Kelley. Apostle Edwards chose for a scripture reading a part of the first chapter of the first epistle of Saint John, touching on the subject of our fellowship with God and with each other, supplementing this reading by a brief talk in which he emphasized the fact that men must make life an active worship.

"An Industrious Christ" was the theme of the talk of Elder E. E. Closson preceding the sacrament in the junior young people's worship hour. The girls' chorus directed by Sister H. C. Burgess, sang two numbers a cappella, and before the oblation offering was taken Sister G. G. Lewis told the story of "The Widow's Mite." Elder H. W. Harder presided over the service, and with him in the stand were Elders E. E. Closson and John Gardner, and Priests W. Earl Page, Gerald Phillips, Kenneth Morford, Oral Andes, and Paul Elliott.

Some excellent interpretation was given to historical characters in the church and their achievements last Sunday night when the White Masque Players presented three "Conversations" written by President Elbert A. Smith. These plays, "The Church Is Organized," "Farewell to Nauvoo," and "Young Joseph Comes to the Reorganization," concluded the four Sunday night series of scenes from church history. Character parts were taken by Reginald Smith, Wallace Smith, Kenneth Morford, Craig Siegfried, Blaine Bender, E. E. Closson, Sister Wallace Smith, James Gardner, Frank Jennings, C. S. Hawker, Allegra Luff, and L. E. Flowers.

Each Sunday night in January drew to the Stone Church a large congregation of people to enjoy the plays and the sermonets by Elder Leonard J. Lea. The plays have been the product of much work, and a group of members has contributed faithfully: Sister Leonard J. Lea, director; Sisters Frank Jennings and Aileen Bullard in charge of make-up; Sister J. A. Gardner, casting and music; Sister F. M. McDowell, costumes; Emlyn Fender, artist; Brother and Sister J. Weeks, properties; and W. Earl Page, lights.

The evening meeting Sunday opened with a song service led by Pastor John F. Sheehy, and invocation by President E. A. Smith. Soft organ music, the ordination scene of Young Joseph, and prayer by Elder Charles Blair, only known survivor of the Amboy Conference in 1860, made an effective close to the hour.

Organizations and Personalities

The first general meeting of the women of Independence under the plan of the church school was held in the basement of the Stone Church the afternoon of January 28. Over two hundred and eighty women responded to the invitation to attend. After a brief song service, Pastor John F. Sheehy addressed the women on the importance of the home. Two numbers by the Mothers' Quartet preceded an explanation by Sister Thomas Hartnell, in charge of the Commodity Shop, of group functions and needs of the Commodity Shop. Sister G. G. Lewis, in charge of the week-day activities of the women in Zion, then spoke to the women concerning their work. A fine feeling was created by this meeting, and the women expressed themselves as happy at the prospect of working once again.

Like the day high schools the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, at the Campus, is now on its third week of work in the second semester. The business depression and its consequent letting off of workers, has made it necessary for some of the Campus students to seek work in other places, and drop night school for the remainder of the year. Nevertheless, there are some ten or eleven large classes continuing full-year courses of study, and three new courses began with midterm commercial law, sociology, and botany.

The grand honor roll of William Chrisman High School containing forty-six names appeared in the Independence Examiner last week. These boys and girls who for the first semester have an average in their grades of E or S include a good number of the church's young people. We are proud of their achievement.

Miss Delta Nace, soprano, and Miss Gladys Good, contralto, winners of the contest for young singers held at the last General Conference, will give a recital next Sunday afternoon at 2.30, at the Liberty Street Church. Gomer Cool, winner in the violin contest, will assist them. Everyone is invited to be present.

The Auditorium leagues in basket ball and volley ball draw people who are interested in sports to the Auditorium basement two nights each week. Under the supervision of G. G. Lewis, assisted by Kenneth Morford and L. E. Flowers, the volley ball league has been organized to play every Tuesday night, and includes the following teams: Gudgell Park, Enoch Hill, Liberty Street, South Side, East Independence, and Spring Branch. The basket ball league, under the same direction, plays every Thursday night and counts in its organization teams from the Stone Church (the Criterions), Enoch Hill, South Side, Sugar Creek, Gudgell Park, Spring Branch, and Jackson County Bank. Both leagues are playing for silver cups, and their games are scheduled until the first week in March.

All games are played on the Auditorium floor, and a small admission fee helps to cover expenses. A weekly feature is the basket-ball game between one of the Auditorium league teams with a team representing the Latter Day Saint division of the Elliott league (Kansas City Stake).

Here is the standing of the teams after last week's games:

Basket Ball	W	L	Volley Ball	W	L
Stone Church	3	0	Gudgell Park	20	1
Enoch Hill	3	1	Enoch Hill	15	3
South Side	2	1	South Side	10	8
Jackson Co. Bank	2	1	Liberty Street	9	12
Gudgell Park	1	2	Spring Branch	3	15
Spring Branch	0	3	East Independence	0	18
Sugar Creek	0	3

It was with much consternation and sorrow that Independence received news of the burning of the Brick Church at Lamoni last Thursday evening. It was an edifice for which many members here cherish tender memories. President F. M. Smith and Bishop Albert Carmichael left Independence last Friday to attend a special mass meeting of the citizens of that community Friday night at the Coliseum, to consider future plans for the church in Lamoni.

The office of Brother Vernon Reese, in charge of the properties of the Central Development Association, has been moved from the Auditorium to the Battery Block with the American Underwriters.

Second Church

Since the reorganization of the church school this year, the work is progressing in a way worthy of commendation. All the new officers, with Brother Floyd Mortimore as superintendent, are serving faithfully. Classes are interesting and well attended. In general, the efforts of officers and teachers each Sunday morning are to make the church school session an experience for growth in the life of every member.

At eleven o'clock January 18, A. W. Whiting, a local elder, was the speaker. His subject, "Repentance," was well treated; he stressed the idea of repenting by doing rather than by ceasing to do. Gladys Good sang a solo, which, like all of her songs, was enjoyed by Second Church people

"Divine Incentive" was the theme of Apostle E. J. Gleazer in the evening.

It is the custom of Pastor A. K. Dillee to "talk" rather than preach to his congregation on one Sunday at the beginning of a new year. This he did January 25. In his discussion he summarized the work of the past year and advanced plans and hopes for the new year.

At the morning service two little daughters of Brother and Sister Frank Westwood were blessed, A. K. Dillee and E. E. Robinson officiating.

G. W. Eastwood was the evening speaker January 25 and gave it as his belief that indifference is a grave danger and that service is the remedy.

One who passed from life on the last day of the old year in this district was Sister Mae Welton, fifty-nine years old, and wife of W. A. Welton. She is survived by her husband, her mother, two sisters, five brothers, an adopted son, and other relatives and friends. The funeral was held at Second Church and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The eight o'clock prayer meeting the morning of February 1 was an inspirational meeting exceptionally well attended. The theme was "Beauty."

All meetings last Sunday were excellent. The communion services of our church are by far the most beautiful of our rites. The one Sunday was no exception. Apostle J. A. Gillen was in charge. The spirit of reverence and consecration to be had on the first Sunday of the month is sufficient to supply the spiritual needs of the Saints for the month if they but desire to make it their own. Elder G. G. Lewis was the evening speaker.

During the week two funeral services were held at the church. One on Tuesday was that of Mrs. Edith Savage Butler, sixteen years old, conducted by Brother J. L. Conyers, D. A. Whiting preaching the sermon. Edith formerly lived in the South Side District. The funeral of Mrs. Fannie Robinson, seventy-five years of age, was held Saturday. She was a Saint who lived in this community for thirty years. Brother Will Inman had charge of the service, and the sermon was by J. L. Conyers.

Walnut Park

On Wednesday evening, January 28, a union prayer meeting for all the groups and all ages was held at the church. Jesse Hart and Ted Butler were ordained deacons at this time and Ralph G. Blackburn a priest.

During the week, a vocalion, an imitation pipe organ, was set up in the church by Orlando Nace & Son for the use of the Saints, with the privilege of purchasing it if they wish. Preceding Sunday school, Delta Nace at the organ and Rosamond Sherman at the piano played together, and as the audience became hushed in appreciation of the music, the orchestra came up the aisle, took their places, and began the service. During the intermission following Sunday school, the organ music was resumed, which tended to maintain orderly silence and produce the atmosphere so desirable at this hour, continuing while twenty-nine of the priesthood filed to seats in the choir loft for the next service.

Charles E. Blair, deacon, gave a cheerful talk on local finances preceding the oblation, and assured any needy ones among the Walnut Park membership of help from this fund upon application. G. F. Bullard's talk before the serving of the emblems expressed his attitude toward the sacrament which might well be observed by all. We can not afford, he said, to partake at the Lord's table, then go away and not give out to others of good received. When we do go out from the church building to serve another in a helpful way, we are to that extent advancing the Lord's work and becoming more worthy participants of his favors. The evening sermon was another call to action. "Quit you like men; be strong," was the text for a healthful, strengthening message by Elder Benjamin Bean.

The young people's class in "Vocational Guidance" continues to enjoy competent instructors, secured through the efforts of C. L. Olson. Roland O. Flanders, secretary of the Blue Valley Foundry Company, spoke on January 25, on "Accounting as a Profession"; and on February 1 Robert S. Clough, county farm agent, talked on "Scientific Agriculture as a Life Work."

East Independence

East Independence is progressing under the direction of Brother Frank Minton. He has his new home nearly completed, and hopes soon to be living in the neighborhood of the church.

Several members have been quite ill of late. Among these were Sister Florence Minton, Sister Ethel Tudor, and Brother J. C. Friend. They are better now, some being able to get out.

Notwithstanding sickness in the district, good congregations have attended the Sunday services, and the prayer meetings are improving in the number who meet to worship. The church school is interesting, and the lines of little people marching to places to learn the way of life inspire the members.

The speakers for the month have given much good teaching. Elders G. W. Eastwood and W. J. Brewer spoke January 11. Elder A. M. Chase preached the morning of January 18 and delivered an illustrated lecture in the evening, proving the Bible to be true by archaeological evidences. The contralto solo of his daughter, Sister S. A. Burgess, was much appreciated. Brothers N. Carmichael and H. J. Friend occupied the pulpit January 25.

A happy get-together meeting will make us remember the evening of January 16, when Elders E. E. Closson and G. G. Lewis were here to help. The former directed the games.

Sacramental service Sunday morning was largely attended, there being present visitors and former members. A large part of the congregation was composed of children and young people. The adults are happy to see those of tender years interested in the latter-day gospel.

Fairland, Oklahoma

January 12.—At the beginning of the year we had regular business meeting at which W. B. Hillen was elected branch president. He has as his predecessor of last year Elmer R. Hart. Both are able men and have served as branch president of this group at stated intervals for several years. Attendance at this meeting was not large, but the spirit of those gathered to transact business was admirable.

Many members here live on farms and are unable to attend services as much as they would like.

Every second Sunday, junior church is directed by Joseph G. Jones, and the children greatly enjoy these services.

Good attendance marks the Sunday school session, and the superintendent, C. C. Shepherd, although he lives on a farm, is nearly always present.

Not much success has greeted the meetings of the Recreation and Expression Department, because the greater part of the young people live on farms and do not always find it possible to come in at night. Nevertheless Ott S. Jones, president, has been faithful in trying to hold interest.

This branch has not yet taken up the church school program. We are, however, trying to understand it more fully and hope soon to adopt it.

Apostle J. A. Gillen was here about the first of December for two days and nights. His visits and services were greatly enjoyed. Most of the preaching of late has been by local men.

The Women's Department has been meeting to tack comforts. Because work and money are scarce, we have not been charging the Saints for this service. We are not progressing very fast financially, but we enjoy meeting and working together.

MRS. OTT S. JONES.

Hiteman, Iowa

The new year finds some marked changes in local affairs. We have accepted the church school program in part. Election of officers was held December 3.

The new corps of officials stands: Branch president, Edward Rowley; deacon, Dave Smith; solicitor, Nell Smith; auditor, Leoma Burke; clerk, Mary Marshall; musical director, Margaret Allison; librarian, Dave Smith; publicity agent, Mary Marshall; pianist, Leoma Burke; superintendent of Women's Department, Nell Smith; assistant superintendent, Letetia Clark; friendly visitor, Margaret Allison; Sunday school superintendent, Margaret Allison; assistant, Myrtle White; president of Department of Recreation and Expression, Leoma Burke; assistant president, Annie Van Buskirk.

The evening of December 10 Elder James A. Thomas, of Lamoni, gave a lecture on tithing and stewardship. He visited with the Saints a couple of days and returned home.

The branch installed a new furnace in October. This was greatly needed in our church plant.

A large attendance was given the Christmas program.

Installation of officers was conducted the evening of December 30. The officers took their places with Sister Ruth Smith playing the processional. Brother Rowley gave a lecture on our duties as officers and spoke of the support of all the members necessary to the progress of the work. The officers responded with the song, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go." Sister Edith Clark and Sister May Hull sang, "The Bird with the Broken Pinion."

Elder Thomas returned to Hiteman January 2 and completed his tour of visiting with the Saints.

Two days later the sacramental service was held, Brother Thomas assisting Brother Rowley. A goodly number was present to feel the Spirit's power.

The Sunday school is increasing in numbers. We contributed our Christmas offering quota and more.

Sister Nell Smith is at present on our sick list.

Honolulu, Hawaii

1680 North Mott-Smith Drive

The first Sabbath of the new year was observed with a joint sacramental service, the three Honolulu branches—Hawaiian, Chinese, and Japanese—meeting in the main church. It was a beautiful and inspiring service, and there were gathered together Saints representing various nationalities, but all motivated by the same spirit—the love for Christ. Indeed, God is no respecter of persons when hearts turn to the Master. At the Savior's table everyone may partake of the same spiritual food, provided he comes in the right spirit. The songs, testimonies, and prayers manifested a real new year spirit, one of thankfulness and gratitude for God's blessings during the last year; a spirit of consecrated service to carry on this great work during the new year; a spirit of humble supplication for divine guidance and succor; a spirit of faithful assurance that, if the effort be put forth in unity, love, and cooperation, the mind of the Master will truly direct and aid. It is with this happy and optimistic spirit that the three Honolulu branches have commenced their 1931 programs. Like the Saints in other branches, we also anticipate a successful year.

Reviewing the work of the last half of the year, we would like to mention and briefly comment on some of our activities. With the arrival, in July, of Brother and Sister Macrae, the social and recreational activities continued to be a source of great enjoyment. There was the social in honor of the new missionary and his companion. This was soon followed by an around-the-island picnic. Then there was the Sunday school picnic out at the famous Waikiki Park and Beach. And the Halloween party? No, we shall not soon forget it.

Entering the social hall by way of the "back-door tunnel" added tenfold to the weird and creepy atmosphere. It required a "Sherlock Holmes" to identify Brother Macrae, masquerading in the costume of a "sandman." Peter Hoe, who devised the novel method of admittance, must have hit upon the idea while studying some annals describing ancient oriental tortures. Then there were the weekly Friday night meetings of the young people for games and recreation. These meetings continued to be a great source of physical and social enjoyment for the active young folks.

The Women's Department has also been active. Besides its regular weekly meetings, there have been several swimming parties and beach luncheons. It has also conducted several candy and cake sales which "went over big." At the last bazaar that this department sponsored, it "cashed in" over one hundred and fifty dollars. More power to these active sister Saints during 1931!

The more strictly religious services were not made to suffer because of the other activities. With all the various things going on, the place of worship was ever foremost. Besides the regular services, the branch observed the following special occasions with appropriate programs and moved the membership to act in the spirit of the day: Graceland College Day, Decision Day, the first anniversary of the dedication of our Main Church, Thanksgiving Day. The year's activities were concluded with the customary Nativity program. On the evening of December 21, the young people's choir rendered a beautiful Christmas cantata. On the following night the Christmas program for the children was held. The cantata was especially well rendered, and those who sacrificed their time and effort to make it such a success certainly must have enjoyed "a divine happiness"—the satisfaction that comes from knowing and feeling that they had rendered well a great thing. The following Saints are to be congratulated: Brother Macrae, director; Sister Gardie Thompson, pianist; Brothers Mahi, Kaaukauwo, Lee, Richmond, De La Cruz, Evans, and Kiefer; Sisters Bernice Kahanamoku, Clarke, Macrae, Antone, Cummings, Rose Mahi, Emma Kaaukauwo, Emma Oneha, Emmaline and Violet Lee.

A word concerning the junior church services. Sister Macrae, who is in charge of this department, is developing a wonderful spirit of worship among the juniors. They are not being passively taught how to worship God, but are given every opportunity to actively engage in a purposeful worship, simple though it be. We look to a greater year for this department.

During the last few months, Brother Waller added six new members to the household of faith; Brother Macrae also baptized four young members. Our beloved Brother Waller, by the way, is at the present time in San Francisco, where he was suddenly summoned due to the critical condition of his companion. Our sympathies are with the dear brother, his wife having passed away January 7.

Brother Etzenhouser and his family spent Christmas here. They will go to Maui soon.

At the final business meeting, held December 17, the following officers and department heads for 1931 were elected: Pastor, Brother Macrae; associate pastors, Brothers Mahi, Kelii; treasurer and solicitor, Peter Hoe; secretary, Winifred Piltz; publicity agent, Elias Kaaukauwo; correspondent, Keizo Tsuji; auditors, Henry N. Thompson, K. Tsuji, John Wright; director of church school, Miguel De La Cruz; superintendents: Adult department, Emma Kaaukauwo; junior department, Sister Macrae; Women's Department, Mollie Antone; Music Department, Gardie Thompson; Recreation and Expression Department, Winifred Piltz. The various departments are directly under the supervision of the director of church school. Each department head will either appoint or have elected at the meeting of his department, the other officers that are necessary to carry on its work. The members have honored youth by electing young folks to head all the departments. These young leaders sense the responsibility resting upon them; they realize likewise the opportunity they have of accomplishing some real constructive work for the church. They appreciate the faith shown in them by the older members, and with their wise counsel and cooperation will strive to fulfill their trusts.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

Sunday was another beautiful Sabbath, the air being like that of a March day, and as the strains of the prelude, "A Song of Hope," by Lorenz, came from the organ, the main auditorium was filled. The congregation assembled early in the spirit of meditation and reverence, as this day had been set apart as one of fasting and prayer in behalf of the general church.

A hymn in Zion's Praises was sung, prayer being offered by Brother Burdette Root. The Semper Fidelis quartet, Marcene Murphy, Amy Blankenship, Dorothy Eden, and Melva Blankenship, sang "O Shepherd of Israel," by Morrison, being accompanied at the piano by Sister Alice Smeeton. After announcements, the young people's division assembled in the main auditorium, while the adult division occupied the various classrooms and listened to an address by Elder George Mesley.

At the eleven o'clock hour the reassembling in the main auditorium during the prelude "Communion," by Battmann, was for the partaking of the sacrament. The service was in charge of Elder C. E. Wight, and after an inspiring hymn, Elder S. S. Sandy offered prayer. The sacramental message was by Brother Mesley, who reminded us of the purpose of the meeting. After the administering of the emblems, the spirit of testimony prevailed, words of gratitude and comfort being spoken.

The monthly choir concert preceded the evening service, when the choir rendered a lovely program to an attentive congregation. "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" was spiritually sung by the choir and congregation, prayer being offered by Elder Harry Paxton. The anthem, "Seek Ye the Lord," by Roberts, was followed with a violin solo, "The Holy City," by Otis Swart. "The Lord Is Mindful of His Own," by Lieurance, was sung by Clayton Wolfe, tenor, and the climax of the concert of praise came when the choir rendered the anthem, "Praise Ye the Father," by Gounod. Elder Wight's message was the beginning of a series to last over a period of time and was of vital interest to all.

Beginning this evening, the women's club will serve dinner, and at the prayer meeting which follows Brother Wight's Sunday evening sermons will be the topic for a forum discussion.

Central's basket ball team still remains undefeated. They will play Fourth Kansas City Tuesday evening. Plans are being made for the trip to Lamoni on February 21, when they play Graceland. Memories of the good times on several previous trips to Lamoni make our young people eager to again meet the hospitable Gracelanders and renew old acquaintances.

Brother Fred Walmsley, who has been confined to the Trinity Lutheran Hospital for the past ten days, has recovered sufficiently from his injuries to return to his home. He is still unable to return to his work.

Grandview Church

Elder Floyd M. McDowell, of the First Presidency, gave a vivid portrayal of the Passion Play of Oberammergau, as staged by the citizenry of that little hamlet, in the foothills of the Alps Mountains. His lecture was supplemented by stereopticon views from photographs taken by himself while on his trip there. The first appearance of this historic play, or religious service, was in 1634, and it has appeared at ten-year intervals ever since. Eight hundred people are required to present the realistic drama.

Four of the Twelve have been recent speakers since Christmas. Apostle Roy S. Budd, on December 28, delivered a forceful sermon, summarizing the accomplishments and failures of 1930, and urged each one to forget the things that are behind and press forward to the high calling in Christ Jesus. January 11 Apostle E. J. Gleazer took as his text 1 Kings 18:36: "Let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel." He said there is a necessity of a revelation of God in this day. We must build our altars and worship around them, asking God to reveal himself to us, his people, that the world may know he is God. Apostle Myron McConley, using as his text, Nehemiah 4:6, stressed the importance of prayer and faith in God in our everyday lives. We must have hope and confidence in God, utilizing the opportunities for service that come to us from time to time. John 5:35-47, Hebrews 5:10, and Revelation 12 formed the basis of Apostle Clyde F. Ellis's remarks. He stressed the importance of the priesthood, of authority, and power. A man can receive nothing except it is given him from heaven; everything in our possession comes to us from God.

Other speakers have been the pastor, Charles D. Jellings, State Missionary G. A. Richards, and Elder Levi Gamet, who claimed as his bride some months back, Sister Pearl Carr, and at present is making his home in our neighborhood. The Saints of Grandview are benefiting by his kindly advice and long experience as a missionary for the church.

The Kansas City Night School Orchestra, under the auspices of the O. B. K.'s, rendered a concert at the church January 23. They were assisted by the Night School Chorus and Brother Lester Fowler, soloist.

The baby of Brother and Sister David Richards was blessed Sunday morning, January 25, by Elders W. B. Richards and Daniel Tucker, and given the name, Virginia Lee.

Fourth Church

December 14 Bishops C. A. Skinner, F. B. Blair, and S. S. Sandy talked to the group, which was divided into three classes, on the financial law. At the 6.30 evening young people's service, Brother A. H. Christensen, of Independence, gave an illustrated lecture on the ancient inhabitants of America. He used Old Testament prophecies that touched upon the subject. George Mesley, of the Kansas City Stake presidency, preached to a good audience at eight o'clock in the evening. His text was, "He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not shall be beaten with many stripes."

December 21 a beautiful Christmas program was given by the young people at the eleven o'clock hour. Again at the young people's 6.30 service, Brother A. H. Christensen gave an illustrated lecture on ancient America.

"Love is the fulfilling of the law," was the text used by Elder R. D. Weaver, of Independence, and on this he preached a beautiful and spiritual sermon, on the morning of January 28. In the evening the Saints were favored with a mixed chorus from Independence, and Fourth Kansas City Church, which rendered the "Messiah" chorus.

Sacramental service on January 4 was very spiritual, and many blessings to the Saints were related. Sister E. L. Comer told of a wonderful blessing received through administration under the hands of Pastor J. O. Worden and E. W. Lloyd, when she was relieved of gallstones.

At the 6.30 service, G. T. Gresty, patriarch, spoke on the subject, "The Ten Lost Tribes," touching also upon the rest of the Book of Mormon, which we are to receive in God's own due time. At the eight o'clock hour, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, using as his text, "The Good Shepherd," preached a sermon that reached the hearts of the Saints.

A week of short talks by some of the young priesthood of the group, from January 5 to 11, was much appreciated by those that attended each night. Sunday, January 11, Brothers M. Worden and E. Babcock were the speakers.

January 18, at the eleven o'clock hour, Pastor J. O. Worden preached on the theme, "The Changing of Life." And at 6.30. Sister Lulu Sandy gave a talk on the art of molding the character of children. The Saints were favored in the evening with a spiritual sermon by Elder J. A. Gardner, from Independence, based on the statement of John 1: 14, "And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us."

Providence, Rhode Island

Bellevue Avenue between Cranston and Dexter Streets

Recently I read somewhere the following: "Thou shalt not wait to be told what thou shalt do, nor in what manner thou shalt do it, for thus will thy days be long in the job which hath been given thee to do."

This job which has been given me to do is not altogether in my line, but publicity, whether in business or church, is a factor in keeping the thing in which you are interested at the front, and while my days in this job may not be of long duration, I trust that from time to time as I endeavor to place Providence in the minds of those who are always interested in her progress as a branch, I may be able to give these happenings in such a way as to make all feel that we are still in the faith.

Standing a little bit beyond the threshold of a new year, we believe that the new corps of officers in charge is looking in the direction of better things. Branch officers are: Pastor, William Patterson; assistant pastor, George F. Robley; secretary, Georgie Spinnett; treasurer, Edward M. Joy; organist, Charles Cockcroft, who is also in charge of deacons and caring for the church building. Under the directorship of Alfred Toombs, the church school has begun, and with John Colburn, Tillie Streeter, and Ed Joy in charge of the different departments, is working in harmony, and bringing out to its sessions the people. Ninety-one were out recently.

The Women's Department, under Evelyn Joy, is taking on new life and aims to redecorate the church building inside.

The men's club, under A. O. Toombs, is doing a work that has long been needed here. All in all the entire branch is moving forward.

And because we are going somewhere, we expect from time to time to blow our own horn when we do things. I also read in the article from which I quoted above: "Thou shalt not be afraid to blow thine own horn, for he who faileth to blow his own horn on the proper occasion, findeth nobody standing ready to blow it for him." D. F. J.

Sault Sainte Marie, Ontario

(Owen Sound District)

We have had another short visit from H. A. Dayton, district missionary and president. During his stay he gave us a few lectures along the line of religious education. He is also director of religious education in the district. Several nights he set apart for questions, and the Saints were privileged to write questions on the new plan of church school administration. We enjoyed them. Some nights it was ten o'clock before the meeting was dismissed. Attendance was not so good as usual, as some of the members were preparing for the Christmas concert, which took up much time.

While he was here Brother Dayton baptized the mother of Brother A. Davidson, of McLennan. She is eighty-two years of age, a fine woman. She has been acquainted with the latter-day work for a long time and lived the life of a Saint, but could never quite make up her mind until a short time ago. We enjoyed hearing her testify soon after her baptism.

December 14 an all-day meeting brought Saints from across the border to be with us. Brother J. J. Ledsworth was holding a series of meetings in Sault, Michigan, and wanted to baptize two young people. They have no church building there, and the weather was very cold, so he asked the Canadian Sault Branch if he could use the font for that purpose. They agreed to make it an all-day meeting.

At ten o'clock in the morning Brothers Ledsworth and Dayton were in charge of a prayer service. A wonderful spirit was present during this hour. At 11.15 church school was conducted as usual, and in the afternoon at 2.30 baptismal and confirmation service, Elders Ledsworth, Dayton, and Edwards officiating. Soon after the confirmation, Brother Ledsworth delivered a fine sermon. After that the visiting members left, as they were to have services in their own branch. Before they left, Brother Ledsworth requested the calling of the priesthood meeting and asked the members of the priesthood if they would give some of their time to the Michigan Sault Branch. To this they responded with the spirit of service. Each plans to give one Sunday a month.

That night Brother Dayton preached an inspiring sermon on "My Task." The next day he left for Manitoulin Island and then home, leaving the promise that he will soon return. The young people are looking to that time, for he has a wonderful influence with them. He is known to them as "Pa."

Little Visits in Zion

Late in November wife and I visited Second Church on the south side of Independence, where we were permitted to meet a splendid group of Zion builders. To get into their main auditorium, one has to climb, physically and spiritually. Pastor A. K. Dillee has charge of a healthy flock of sheep which feed in the green pastures of the Spirit. I enjoyed good liberty trying to portray to them the grandeur of the latter-day work. Elder T. A. Beck, assistant pastor, is a pillar to the work there.

By invitation we visited Lees Summit (Missouri) Branch late in December and there greeted a happy group of workers. We told them to "press on to eternal perfection."

At one morning service we attended church at Mount Washington in Kansas City Stake, and found there another group of faithful members. They have a comfortable building which shows splendid taste in adornments, assuring one that they have great interest and activity on the part of the sisters. A goodly and attentive audience greeted us in trying to tell of the latter-day work. Surely our cause is truth and will prevail.

In the evening we were invited to Gudgell Park, where we found a small church packed full of anxious workers. We were pleased with their junior choir, which sang beautifully. Elder Sherman needs more room for his congregation, but we believe it is better to be crowded in church than to be lonesome.

Sister Terry and I often think of the Saints in Oakland, San Francisco, and Seattle, and others on the Pacific slope, and offer a prayer for their continued blessing. We spent twenty years of service with them.

Recently I attended a very spiritual meeting of the group elders and pastors of Zion. Brother John Sheehy, pastor in Zion, was in charge, assisted by Brother C. L. Olson, church statistician. With such an army of faithful workers, the cause of Zion will surely move on to victory. To this end we labor and wait.

J. M. TERRY.

Grand Island, Nebraska

Saints at Grand Island were privileged to hear several good sermons by Elder O. L. D'Arcy, and to enjoy a sacramental service. We seldom are blessed with a meeting of the latter nature, because we do not have in our number a member holding the offices of priest or elder.

The Sunday school is growing, and much interest is being shown in the ladies' auxiliary, which meets every week and gives a fine program and a social for the young people once a month.

Conference Notice

Arkansas district conference will convene at Fisher, Arkansas, February 28, 10 a. m. It will close Sunday, March 1, 9 p. m.—F. O. White, district president.

Request for Prayers

Sister Nora Pelton, Junieata, Michigan, asks the prayers of the Saints.

New Address

William I. Fligg, field address: 536 Pall Mall Street, London, Ontario.

Marriage

McLAUGHLIN-PUCKETT.—Miss Alaura McLaughlin, of Warren, Arizona, became the bride of Mr. Calvin Puckett, of Upper Lowell, Arizona, at the Saints' church in Bisbee, the evening of January 18, Elder S. D. Condit officiating. A large gathering of friends was present to wish the couple a happy wedded life. Bridesmaids were Mrs. Martin Vaclav and Miss Mildred Puckett, sisters of the bridegroom, and Martin Vaclav and Walter Brooks attended the bridegroom. "Lohengrin's Wedding March" was played by Miss Eveline Nicholas. After the ceremony, refreshments were served, and a social hour was enjoyed by a number of relatives and friends of the couple.

Our Departed Ones

HAND.—Charles Edwin, son of Hezekiah and Hannah Hand, was born October 10, 1842, at Cleveland, Ohio. He departed this life January 14, 1931, in Muscatine, Iowa. Married Miss Frances Walters April 5, 1870, and to them eleven children were born. During the Civil War he served his country in Company C, One-hundredth Regiment Indiana Infantry. He became a member of the church February 16, 1884, being baptized by J. S. Roth. Was ordained an elder March 6, 1887, and served the church many years in this office. His wife and three children preceded him in death. The funeral was from the home of his son, Edwin, the sermon by L. G. Holloway. Interment was in the family lot in Helena Cemetery. Left to mourn are a host of relatives and friends.

WOODSIDE.—Lewis Woodside, son of Hugh and Mary Ellen Woodside, was born in McDonald County, Illinois, January 13, 1857. He died in Farragut, Iowa, January 12, 1931, being survived by one sister, Mrs. Belle Palm, and one brother, Clyde, who live at McCloud, Oklahoma. His father died when he was a small boy, and he was reared by his mother and other relatives in Fremont County, Iowa, near Riverton. His mother with her family of three little children moved to the present site of Hamburg, Iowa, and within a few years she passed away, leaving the children in the care of their grandmother. Lewis was a faithful helper, working at home and in the field to carry forward the plans of the family. When his grandmother became an invalid, he cared for her. He was bright at school and although denied the privilege of high school, finished the study of many high school branches. After the death of his grandmother, he farmed for several years, but most of his later life was spent working for Mr. Thomas McCoy, near Farragut. During the past few years he has been unable to work and he has lived in his home in Farragut. He was a friend to all, and a community mourns his death. He united with the church June 22, 1930, in Shenandoah, and was faithful until the end. The funeral was conducted in the Methodist Church in Farragut by Saints from Shenandoah, Elder R. E. Pratt in charge and Elder J. O. Rennie delivering the sermon. Interment was in Mount Zion Cemetery south of Riverton, Iowa.

EDSON.—Elizabeth Barr was born in Ireland January 18, 1844. In 1857 she came with her brother and sister to America and located at Wilton Center, Illinois, where she married Charles A. Edson September 11, 1870. Five children were born to them. In 1862 she was baptized into the church by James W. Gillen, and lived a faithful Christian life. Passed away December 12, 1930. The funeral was held December 14 at the home near Schaller, Iowa, where she lived nearly half a century. C. J. Hunt was in charge assisted by the Reverend E. L. Gibson of the Presbyterian Church.

HARDING.—John Samuel Harding was born December 29, 1850, in the State of Indiana. Became a member of the Reorganized Church July 15, 1877. Passed away January 12, 1931, at his home at Frontenac, Kansas. Surviving are his wife, Mary J. Harding, and a number of stepsons and daughters along with their children and grandchildren. The funeral was held at the Saints' Church in Pittsburg, Kansas, G. E. Harrington delivering the discourse and being assisted by J. A. Gunsolley. Interment was in Mount Olive Cemetery.

BAKER.—Marvin A. Baker, son of Mrs. Bessie Roberts Baker, of Saint Louis, and the late Clyde Baker, was born May 1, 1910, at Saint Louis, Missouri. He was baptized a member of the church April 25, 1924, at Saint Louis. Died December 27, 1930, following an illness of several years. The cheerfulness of this young man who had hoped to become a missionary, was a source of inspiration to everyone who visited him during his last sickness. Before his death he expressed a desire to thank the members who wrote to him in answer to a request for prayers published several months ago in the Herald.

MAHOOD.—William F. Mahood was born in Pennsylvania, July 18, 1866. His parents moved to Missouri, where he met and married Della E. Jackson, September 17, 1893. To them were born twelve children, ten of whom survive. For the past six years he has made his home at Omak, Washington. He and his companion united with the church in April, 1926. Passed from this life December 31, 1930. Left to mourn are his wife, three sons: Martin N., of Seattle; Samuel, of Omak; and William of Wenatchee; seven daughters: Mrs. Ethel Baird, of Oklahoma; Mrs. Lola Corum, Omak; Mrs. Zoe Dalbee, California; Susana and Della May, of Seattle; Zella and Betty, of Omak; two brothers: Harry, of Monetu, Washington; and James, in Missouri; two sisters: Anna Collin, in California; and Mary Mahood, in Missouri; and twelve grandchildren. Interment was in Omak Cemetery.

LLOYD.—Emma Geeson was born December 22, 1855, at Saint Louis, Missouri. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints August 25, 1867, at Saint Louis, Missouri, by John Molyneaux and confirmed by William Smith. Married James Lloyd about 1916. She passed away December 29, 1930, at Saint Louis. Surviving are her husband, two sisters, Mrs. Eliza Cowlshaw, and Mrs. Clara Ebert; and four brothers: Henry C., Edward, and G. Geeson, and William Stubbs.

PERRIN.—Marie Raisbeck, daughter of Clarence and Ollie Raisbeck, was born at Beetown, Wisconsin, October 13, 1903. She was married to Lloyd Perrin, November 9, 1921, at Dubuque, Iowa. To this union were born three children: Carson, Phyllis, and Dorman. She departed this life January 13, 1931, leaving to mourn her husband and children, her parents, three sisters, one brother, and a host of friends who manifested their love by a beautiful array of flowers. The funeral was conducted from the Methodist Church at Beetown, Elder Amos Berve, of Madison, officiating. Interment was in Bloomington Cemetery.

EDGINGTON.—James C. Edgington was born at West Union, Iowa, November 25, 1865, the son of William Edwin and Jerusha Ray Edgington. He came to Wisconsin, and while living at Ellenboro, was married to Eliza Zeigler August 13, 1890. In 1895 he moved to Flora, where he has since resided. No children were born to this union. He became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints January 12, 1896, being baptized by Elder J. W. Peterson. He was ordained a deacon February 1, 1897; to the office of priest June 27, 1905; and an elder February 16, 1915. He was faithful to the church until he departed this life January 10, 1931, after a short illness. Leaves to mourn his wife, an adopted son, and a host of friends. The sermon was by Amos Berve, assisted by Leonard Houghton. Interment was in Flora Cemetery.

POWELL.—Bettie Jean Powell, daughter of Pearl and Haskell Powell, was born September 12, 1930. She passed away January 5, 1931, being three months and twenty-four days old. The funeral sermon was preached by Alvin Smith, of Commerce, Oklahoma, and interment was in the Grand Army of the Republic Cemetery, at Miami, Oklahoma.

CATO.—Harriet Jane Prosser was born April 28, 1856, in Carroll County, Missouri, the daughter of William and Zorada Prosser. Married James N. Cato January 1, 1880, who preceded her in death thirteen years ago at Meridian, Idaho. To this union nine children were born, three of whom died in infancy. The following survive: two sons, John B., of Meridian, Idaho, and Willis, of Salt Lake City, Utah; four daughters, Mrs. Ella Dellenbough, of Meridian, Idaho, Mrs. Belle Bullock, of Boise, Idaho, Mrs. Grace Kugler, of Richmond, Missouri, and Mrs. Gladys Van Trump, of Independence, Missouri. Besides these children she is survived by twenty grandchildren, three great-grandchildren; two sisters: Mrs. Charlotte Rose, of Modesto, California, and Mrs. Mae Ritter, of Copan, Oklahoma; two brothers: Joe and Robert Prosser, of Denver, Colorado; and a host of other relatives and friends. Mrs. Cato united with the Reorganized Church shortly after her marriage and remained a faithful member until her death, which occurred at Richmond, Missouri, January 5, 1931. The funeral was from the Saints' church at Richmond, the sermon being by O. W. Okerlind. Interment was in Fair Haven Cemetery, at Norborne, Missouri.

conflict. A close student of European conditions makes the following comment:

The resulting arrangement contained three major sources of future controversy. One was the reparations problem. Another was the matter of armaments. And the third was the extensive territorial readjustment of Europe. A minor source of controversy, but one bound to produce considerable irritation, was the war guilt clause, under which Germany and her allies accepted full responsibility for bringing on the conflict. All of these sources are active today. . . .

As a result of these problems, the nations of Europe have been tending to divide naturally into two great groups. In one group are the nations that lost by the peace treaties and want a revision. In the other are those that gained and demand that there be no change. There are two exceptions: Great Britain has remained aloof; and Italy, not satisfied with what she gained, has joined the first group. Thus there are arrayed on one side Germany, Austria, Hungary, Italy, and Bulgaria, and on the other, France, Belgium, Poland, Jugo Slavia, Czecho-Slovakia, and Rumania. From a military point of view, the first group is definitely less powerful than the second. But that condition will not last many years, and if both sides refuse to compromise, it is hard to see how a conflict can be avoided.

There is a degree of turmoil throughout the whole world. It is manifest in South America, Africa, Asia, and Europe. In Europe at two extremes stand Russia and Italy. Italy, imperialistic to the last degree, follows the dictates of the warlike Mussolini, who talks constantly very much as the Kaiser did during the years immediately preceding the World War. At the other end of the extreme is communistic Russia, really ruled by a dictatorship, and pledged to promote red revolution throughout the world. The resulting conditions indeed bring confusion and "perplexity of nations," even as was predicted.

Twenty years ago those who fondly hoped for the immediate dawn of universal peace were doomed to disappointment. Disappointment awaits those who have the same expectation today, no matter how generously they may lend themselves to the splendid endeavors being made to promote peace and disarmament. "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."

We may presume that the words of the Master will be fulfilled until the end, and peace will come universally only when the Prince of Peace comes and is received and acknowledged and his laws obeyed. In the meantime the Saints were admonished that when they saw these things coming upon the earth they should "lift up their heads and rejoice." They were to rejoice, not because of human suffering and misery, but because the day of redemption was drawing near.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

The Irrevocable Bargain

Then Judas, which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces to the chief priests and elders, saying, I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? See thou to that.—Matthew 27: 3, 4.

The conditions of life attach a certain fatality to our words and acts that make them irrevocable. Once issued, they take on an independent existence entirely beyond our control. They are benevolent or tyrannical according to the character of the thought that gave them birth, and they are the true giants that stalk in the land of our existence.

It is this character of fatality that makes every Christian deeply serious about every move that he makes and every word that he utters. His record of deeds and words becomes something of supreme importance. He can write the future as he will, according to his talents and abilities; but the record of the past can not be altered by a single letter or dot.

There is a curious immortality, too, in what one says and does. The man dies, but his career lives on in the minds of those who know him. And if he happens to do something that strikes the imaginations of men with bold strokes, he becomes imperishable. In the quotation above we have the record which gave to Judas an undesirable distinction and immortality.

When Judas betrayed Jesus for the thirty pieces of silver (which was the price of a man according to the ancient law), he thought that he had struck a fair bargain. But when he wished to retrieve, he found that the price of the Savior had gone up infinitely: neither the thirty pieces of silver nor any other sum that Judas could command would buy Jesus back. The cold words of the chief priests and elders informed him that the injustice of his bargain made utterly no difference. It was up to Judas to see to that. Judas found the only solution for his miserable dilemma at the lower end of a stout rope.

When we yield to sin, we can not buy back our innocence and integrity for any price. If in dissipation we sacrifice our health for pleasure, nothing can return it to us, without we pay the inescapable price. If we become diseased, we must suffer our course of punishment.

Life is filled with irrevocable bargains: words that can never be unsaid, acts that can never be undone, losses that can never be retrieved. It is important to be careful.

Righteousness and Prosperity

NUMBER THREE

By J. A. Koehler

In this concluding article of this little series, I will discuss the relationship of righteousness to prosperity.

It is not difficult to understand the relation between coordinate action in the organs of the body and the health or "prosperity" of the body. Any obstruction of the function of respiration instantly impairs the function of circulation; and, if that obstruction is not removed, the body can not prosper. It may die.

If the cells of your body are robbed of their nourishment, your body will become emaciated. The nourishment made available to the body by the action of the digestive organs must be distributed properly to the several parts of the body or some parts will suffer at the expense of others; and, in time, all will suffer by this miscarriage of function or purpose.

Your body can not prosper if some parts of your organism are fighting other parts. No organism can prosper the parts of which are in opposition to themselves. And that is as true of a social organism as it is of an animal organism or an automobile. There is a direct relation between rightness and prosperity.

Of course, the terms right and wrong are terms that have special moral significance and should not be applied to the action in the parts of an automobile. These are terms which have to do with human "conduct," i. e., with the choices we make between two possible courses of action. "Righteousness" is a quality of rational beings and free agents.

Now, our corporate behavior is what we make it by our own choices. If we choose a mode of behavior as peoples which sets men in harmonious and reciprocal relations to each other, and which maintains adequate action in all parts of the social organism by the proper care of all parts, we will have peace; there will be plenty; and men will be happy. But if we choose a mode of behavior as peoples which sets the interests of men in opposition to each other and diverts the social income from parts where it is needed to parts where it is not needed, nothing else can result except social distress. Social righteousness is the basis of social prosperity.

In contemplating the relation of righteousness to prosperity, do not forget that men are rational beings. Men are not machines, neither are they mere animals. Men have a sense of right and wrong. Men can feel outraged on one level of living as well as on another. Justice is vital to social prosperity.

The actions of men as members of a social organism are directly affected by what they conceive to be unjust. Injustice upsets the action of society in its parts and robs it of its power as a whole. There can be no social righteousness without social justice. And no people can continue to prosper whose administration of its affairs is unjust. "Righteousness exalteth a nation."

In a later article I intend to discuss the reasons why Christianity left the great task of setting up the government of God in economic life until the latter days. All that needs to be said here is that in no civilization of which we have any knowledge did advancements in the utility arts make such demands as they make today for godly government in economic life. And in no civilization of which we have any knowledge did the political institutions of peoples so poorly match the conditions of industrial life as they do today. And prominent thinkers are coming to say more and more that unless we can match our progress in the arts and sciences with corresponding progress in the art of government, our civilization is doomed. We shall find ourselves in the throes of one of those terrible long swing-backs that the race has several times suffered.

Let us look now at part of one paragraph of stipulations of God's social righteousness as it is set out in the revelations to the Latter Day Saint Church. I use this statement because I think it contains more wisdom, has more utility as a remedy for our present-day social ills, than all the legislation that has been written into our Congressional Record in the last one hundred years. I am sure this is the conviction of the many men who really comprehend its import.

Zion must arise and put on her beautiful garments; therefore, I give unto you this commandment, that you bind yourselves by this covenant, and it shall be done according to the laws of the Lord. Behold, here is wisdom also, in me, for your good. And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even an hundredfold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.

In this stipulation of social righteousness, there is a whole world of social philosophy. And we see in it the answer to every problem arising from the industrial revolution, whether it be the problem of unemployment, the problem of inequitable distribution, the problem of commercial imperialism, the problem of racketeering, the problem of public indebtedness, or the problem of economic waste. Here is the inspiration and the vision of a prophet.

Roughly, and in brief, these are the elements of this scheme of social behavior:

(1) A unified economic life. The organization of the functions of industrial life. The coordination of all the activities of the business life of the community.

(2) Group control of the physical basis of subsistence. Not only the right, but the duty of the race to manage the resources of the race or the good of the race.

(3) Equal opportunity for economic expression through the functioning of social organism. An assured place for every man in the industrial life of the community.

(4) Every man equipped for his task. Society's savings, i. e., its capital, mobilized according to the needs of the industry of the society in its parts.

(5) Every activity of every citizen of the nature of a positive contribution to social welfare.

(6) Personal freedom within the limits of social purpose.

(7) Individual responsibility for the management of particular economic functions and individual accountability for economic behavior.

(8) Equitable distribution and the consecration to the group of the surplus arising from society enterprise, and the application of that wealth to the advancement of the well-being of men universally.

(9) Liberation from commercial imperialism. Each community its own capitalist. The socialization of the function of credit.

(10) The sublimation of labor. Industry promoted to a moral basis. Social service the test of personal worth.

This is the righteousness which exalteth. This is the highway to the peace, the prosperity, and the happiness of peoples. This is the government of God.

I do not say this concept is perfect. I do not say the application of these principles of right corporate behavior will work themselves. They must be made vital by the choices of godly men. The plan is self-perpetuating and the benefits automatic in the hands of kingdom-building men. I do not say that there can be only one application of principles. Methods may vary with the circumstances of both individuals and peoples. All I say is that this mode of social life is the price of true prosperity for peoples.

Let us examine one or two of these stipulations of social righteousness to unfold their relation to the prosperity of peoples.

Item No. 2. An assured place for every man in the life of the community. What bearing does a scheme of social organization in which this rule is a logical part have upon the problem of unemployment? What bearing upon the problem of unionism? It is an insult to one's intelligence to assume that it requires to be explained. It is self-explanatory to every normal man. The way of life, indeed, is so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein.

Item No. 4. Every individual equipped for his task. What relation is there between the wealth of a nation and the fact that every man is adequately equipped to perform his function in the industrial life of the community?

Item No. 5. Every activity socially valuable. What would be the effect if all the energy spent in shady business transactions, and wasteful duplications and commercial warfare, and racketeering, and idling in its thousand forms of activity were applied to the task of providing more, better, and increased forms of socially valuable goods? Or to the relief of burdensome toil? Of course this rule by itself is without meaning in relation to the peace, prosperity, and happiness of peoples. But as one stipulation in a scheme of social organization, it is highly significant. When they are coupled with item 8, equitable distribution and the consecration of the surplus through social agencies, items 3, 4, and 5 become tremendously significant. What I mean to say is that increased productive efficiency is not a remedy for social ills. The chief problems of modern economic life are (1) the problem of unification or organization, (2) the problem of distribution, and (3) the problem of individual accountability. And these problems can be solved, provided only that other problems are solved along with them. That is to say, as I have tried to say throughout these articles, that it takes social righteousness, it takes right community organization, to achieve the glory of peoples.

But social prosperity is psychological as well as physiological. Prosperity for peoples is immaterial as well as material. And social righteousness, therefore, must promote personal qualities as well as social institutions. In this relation, note items 7, 9, and 10 coupled with item 3. Here we have a provision for personal adventure within the limits of personal good and social purpose. Here is opportunity for individual initiative. And here, then, are the conditions for personal contentment through personal achievement. And the contentment of men has a lot to do with social prosperity.

Contemplate these same items in another relation —in relation to self-respect and to a personal sense of security. Free men from domination by the will of others privately; free them from the necessity of being obsequious in order to come into their social inheritance; and at once you enrich their personality; they feel that they count for one along with all other men; they gain a feeling of self-respect.

The rule, "You are to have equal claim upon the properties," is a truth which is declared over and over again to be a foundation principle in that social structure we call "Zion." Listen to this: "It is not given that one man should possess that which is above another, wherefore the world lieth in sin," and answer me: Do we Latter Day Saint peoples not lie in sin so long as that right of property is a foundation principle in our economic life? And are we not distressed by the outcome of that sinning?

Look at the outcome of this principle of property rights for a moment—this instrument of oppression. Everyone knows that we are in the midst of a world-wide business depression; business is not prospering; the mass of men are in economic distress. But why do we not prosper? Why are we in distress? We have as many factories as if we were prospering. We have as much raw material to draw on as if we were prospering. We have as much man power as if we were prospering. The facts are that our poverty is marked by our plenty. Then why do we not prosper?

The answer is found in our behavior touching the "possession," or rights of property in these material things, and the uses or misuses to which they are consequently put. The answer is found in the fact that the surplus produced by all of us belongs only to some of us. The answer is found in our economic laws, our economic system, and our economic institutions. That is to say that the answer is found in our social behavior—a behavior which we are compelled by its outcome to us to confess is not godly; it is unrighteous.

Economic society, as it is now constituted, is chaotic; it is wasteful; it is opposed to itself in its parts; its purpose is abortive; it is unjust. And when we say that, we say that we have an ungodly way of governing the affairs of economic life. The only possible remedy for this ungodly social behavior and its terrible social consequences is godly government. The way to achieve true social prosperity is to build a highway of social justice. The price of true social prosperity is social righteousness.

Now I know this is a very partial analysis of this paragraph of stipulations of social righteousness. I know that the wording of this analysis is only roughly true. But it is essentially true. And that is enough for our present purpose.

Once we apprehend what the law of God is for peoples, as such, it should not be too great a task to comprehend the relation of righteousness to prosperity. "If Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her," is no arbitrary decree. It is the natural reward of godly behavior for peoples. We can not hope to achieve prosperity while we walk in darkness, as do other peoples. Neither can anyone rob this people of this prosperity if it will make its social righteousness the righteousness of God. How much suffering must we endure before we learn obedience?

Report of the Department of Statistics

By Carroll L. Olson, Statistician

During the month of January the following numbers of the various types of reports were received, resulting in the indicated changes in the total net enrollment of the church:

Total enrollment of the church January 1, 1931.....	108,431
January baptisms .....	118
Gains from the unknown.....	27
Gains by correction.....	2
Total gain .....	147
Deaths .....	129
Expulsions .....	21
Losses by correction.....	3
Total loss .....	153

Marriages .....	163
Blessings .....	145
Ordinations .....	23
Divorces .....	10
Branches disorganized .....	4
Deaths on unknown.....	3
Silences .....	3
Restored .....	2

There was a slight loss in the total enrollment of the church during the month, due to the fact that the number of baptisms reported was not sufficiently great to offset the number of deaths.

The outstanding district during January in the matter of baptisms was the Detroit District, with a total of 21. Fifteen of these were credited to the city of Detroit, with the following persons officiating in the ordinance of baptism: Missionary Hubert Case, Elders Amos A. Surbrook and James F. Winegarden, and Priests Morris Bartholomew and Robert L. McGee. Three baptisms were performed at Flint, Michigan, by Priest Robert Luce, 2 at Pontiac by Missionary A. E. Boos, and one at Otter Lake by Elder J. J. Rusnell.

Of the foreign missions, Holland held the lead with a total of 9. Hawaii reported 4 baptisms and the British Isles 2 baptisms.

The following branches in the United States and Canada, outside the stakes, reported three or more baptisms each:

Detroit, Michigan .....	15
Ogden, Utah .....	5
Toronto, Ontario .....	5
Rockford, Illinois .....	4
Sarnia, Ontario .....	4
Flint, Michigan .....	3
Hammond, Indiana .....	3
Omaha, Nebraska .....	3

Social Aspects of the Message of Jesus

PART TWO

By A. B. Phillips

6. The Leaven of the Kingdom

Jesus did not employ selfish inducements in order to gain converts to his cause. Such a course would have been fatal to the results sought by him, and would have encouraged the very evils which his kingdom was designed to eradicate. On the contrary, he appealed only to the highest and noblest aims that could be aroused or inspired within the human heart, and which were to be realized always by doing good to others. He sought to pour into the hearts of men the leaven of the love that would bring universal fraternity and righteousness. The ultimate power of this leaven was foretold by him when he declared:

The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened. All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables; and without a parable spake he not unto them: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, I will open my mouth in parables; I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world.—Matthew 13: 33-35.

The secret of the universal brotherhood kingdom which in due time shall result from the leaven of his message is clearly indicated in this prediction of the Savior-Seer, and is further explained by the similitude of the growing seed, concerning which he declared:

So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground; and should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how.—Mark 4: 26, 27.

It is like a grain of mustard seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth: but when it is sown, it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it.—Mark 4: 31, 32.

The sublime vision which Jesus here reveals of the social power of his gospel seed is truly amazing, when we consider the apparent barrenness of the field in which it then took root and grew. The growing social concepts of the world today should help us to discern that the time is drawing nearer when the social glory of his message shall give all mankind rest under its gracious shadow.

7. Society and the Individual

Although Jesus sowed his seed with liberal hand, it must fall in individual soil, for the elements of an ideal society can not exist regardless of those who compose it. For this reason he dealt with the conduct of the individual rather than with that of society as a whole; yet the social purpose of his precepts is always prominent, for they concern individual behavior toward others. Inasmuch as society can not be regulated except through the conduct of those composing it, Jesus purposed to form the ideal social order of men actuated by sound social principles.

The methods of the Master Teacher were supremely scientific, for they regarded the fundamental law of social fraternity and happiness. They applied to each person as a unit of society, not to an isolated "Crusoe" on an unknown island. Justice, equity, love, and righteousness, essential principles of his teachings, are all of social significance, and must be expressed in social relations.

The teachings of Jesus gave men a broader concept and higher purpose in all their acts toward others. They covered all essential relations, including business, labor, and service, the family, friends, and neighbors. They dealt with civil, political, juridical, and ecclesiastical polity and law; but always to inspire such personal conduct as would maintain social amity, equity, and peace. He clearly recognized that right personal principles and considerate conduct are necessary to the well-being of society, and taught that men should have equal regard for others, declaring:

Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets.—Matthew 7: 12.

This rule of sympathetic regard for others should be applied without expecting or desiring them to make recompense for benefits received. Good deeds must spring from the love and generosity of the heart, and not from covetous or other unworthy motives, for Jesus declares:

For if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? sinners also do even the same. And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again. But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, causing no one to despair; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil. Be ye merciful, as your Father is merciful.—Luke 6: 33-36, Sinaitic Manuscript, by Tischendorf.

8. The Acquiring of Wealth

It was not the chief aim of Jesus to relieve distress, but rather to induce men to live by principles that would remove the causes of distress. He desired them to avoid the error of considering wealth to be the chief object of life. The goods man possesses are intrusted to him by God as a temporary trust which he must soon relinquish, and he who uses this trust for selfish ends is reminded that God's ownership is superior to human possession. So the rich man who enlarged his barns to hold more goods, intending to gratify his own sensual desires for many years, is startlingly warned:

But God said to him: Thou void of reason! This night thy soul will be required of thee; and to whom will belong these things provided by thee?—Luke 12: 20, Syriac Version.

Repeatedly Jesus impressed upon his disciples the important truth that property is but incidental to the purpose of life, and that God requires earthly possessions to be used in righteousness. Not temporal but eternal things are the chief object of life, and not goods but goodness will enrich the soul. He did not sympathize with the aims of those who were devoted to worldly riches and indulgence, and when one requested: "Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me," Jesus denied his petition, and cautioned his disciples:

Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.—Luke 12: 15.

Only a mercenary person would presumptuously seek to involve Jesus in a quarrel that did not concern him, and whatever the circumstances might be, he could not encourage wrong motives, for social and economic good do not arise from selfishness, envy, or worldly ends. Therefore he said to them:

Be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat; nor for your body, what ye shall put on. For the life is more important than food, and the body than raiment.—Luke 12: 22, 23, Syriac Version.

His wonderful power to discern real values enabled Jesus to point out the futility of preferring the things that perish, rather than the treasures that shall endure for ever. For this reason he admonished his followers:

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.—Matthew 6: 19-21.

9. The Nature of Man's Estate

Jesus not only taught his followers to distinguish true values in life, but he also gave them principles to guide them in the use of all their powers and possessions. He informs them that these possessions are not theirs in absolute ownership, but are committed to them by the divine Father as a sacred trust, and are to be used by them in accordance with his commandments until their stewardship is accomplished and the kingdom of God is established on earth as it is in heaven. This truth is emphasized in his parable of the nobleman and his servants, in which he declares:

A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, Occupy till I come.—Luke 19: 12, 13.

To those who are faithful and administer their trust wisely, the reward of the Master will be given according to the merits of the service rendered. This is explained in the parable, which shows that every man is required to give an account of his service and its results, and declares:

Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds. And he said unto him, Well, thou good servant: because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities. And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds. And he said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities.—Luke 19: 16-19.

The estate of man on earth and his responsibility for the trust committed to him is referred to by Jesus repeatedly. In one of his parables he likens this estate to a vineyard placed in the hands of husbandmen, from whom he finally demands some of the fruits of his vineyard. Concerning this he declares:

A certain man planted a vineyard, and inclosed it with a hedge, and dug in it a wine vat, and built a tower in it, and put it into the hands of husbandmen, and removed it to a distance. And at the proper time, he sent his servant to the husbandmen, to receive of the fruits of the vineyard.—Mark 12: 1, 2, Syriac Version.

In a somewhat different form the obligations arising from the trust which man has received are referred to by Jesus in connection with the promise of his second coming. Of this great event he issues the solemn warning:

So be ready yourselves, for the Son of man is coming at an hour you do not expect. Peter said, Lord, are you telling this parable for us, or is it for all and sundry? The Lord said, Well, where is the trusty, thoughtful steward whom the lord and master will set over his establishment to give out supplies at the proper time?—Luke 12: 40-42, Moffatt Translation.

Concerning the same momentous event and the nature of the trust which God has given to man, Jesus declares that each will be responsible according to his capacity, and explains:

Why, it is like a man who, when going on his travels, called his bondservants and entrusted his property to their care. To one he gave five talents, to another two, to another one—to each according to his individual capacity.—Matthew 25: 14, 15, Weymouth Version.

10. The Obligations of Possession

In all of these parables the teaching is clearly presented that man can not accept the trust involved in the possession of earthly goods without becoming obligated to use them for the purposes which God requires. Human resources should be recognized as means to the divinely appointed ends, and the means are to be subordinated to those ends, but not made the chief object of life. To make worldly possessions and their enjoyment the dominant aim in life would defeat the true purpose of life itself. This was the great mistake of the rich man who rejected the advice of Jesus—and with it the kingdom of God—for instead of accepting gladly his responsibility to aid the needy, he turned away with a gloomy face. The love of the Master was burdened with sadness as he remarked to his disciples:

Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!—Mark 10: 24.

If they would not value the human soul more than the fleeting possession of property, and more than their own selfish aims, he could not save them. In that day when the earth shall be no longer a mart for the miser, but shall become a refuge for the righteous, no place will be found for those who have lived selfishly. Some will ask in confusion:

Lord, when did we see thee hungry or thirsty or homeless or ill-clad or sick or in prison, and not come to serve thee? But he will reply, In solemn truth I tell you that in so far as you withheld such services from one of the humblest of these, you withheld them from me. And these shall go away into the Punishment of the Ages, but the righteous into the Life of the Ages.—Matthew 25: 44-46, Weymouth Version.

These condemned stewards have betrayed or disregarded their sacred trust by valuing riches above righteousness—the temporal means of service above the souls who need that service. They can recall only with remorse the ominous meaning of the words with which the Lord forewarned them:

For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?—Mark 8: 36, 37.

When death robs man of all his earthly treasures for which he has foolishly given his all, he has nothing left to give in exchange for his soul. Whatever his apparent success in worldly gain, he has lost it all, and also that which is worth infinitely more to him, but which he valued less.

Repentance—Don't Forget to Turn

By C. L. Winniford

While riding one afternoon with a friend of mine, I was discussing the Colation of Scripture in the big Bible that I had with me. I was reading some of the headings—such as Faith, Hope, Patience—and at the same time watching the road. For while it was a familiar road to me, it was strange to my friend. Just as we came to the corner where we should turn, I said, continuing my reading, “Repentance—don't forget to turn.”

The accident of my words impressed my friend as being a singular coincidence. “Repentance—don't forget to turn.” We fell to discussing it, and afterwards, when I thought of it again, it impressed me even more. For how many of us, after repenting, forget to turn? How many of us pray the Lord with tears of sorrow to forgive us, and then continue in the same sinful broad path to destruction?

Some may say that they do not know how to turn, or where; some may plead weakness, but whosoever repents, and then fails to turn, is not truly repentant. For we must turn away from our wickedness, our selfishness, our pleasure seeking along the broad road to destruction, and enter in at the straight gate of the narrow way that leads to salvation.

How to turn? By steadfastly refusing ever to commit again those sins of which one has repented. I say “those sins,” but naturally that includes all sin, for if one is truly repentant one does not draw the line between “big” and “little” sins. For one can not lie a little, steal a little, cheat a little, deceive or take advantage in petty affairs, and still hope for salvation on the grounds that one has not committed any serious sins. All sins are serious, more especially those which one has been in the habit of looking upon as unimportant.

In order to repent, one must first have an understanding of the law. And the whole law is this: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength; and thy neighbor as thyself. By this law we may know when and how we sin. Understanding the law, and having therefore a lively knowledge of our own sins, we are moved to repentance, and a desire to be washed clean, that we might start anew.

The first fruits of repentance is baptism. Being baptized we become as though new born, our sins being all washed away; and we stand spotless before God and man. Now this is the corner where we must not forget to turn. For, having been washed clean by the blood of Christ, through the ceremony of baptism, if we go straightway and commit all our sins over again, we make the mercy of God of none effect, and crucify Christ again in our hearts.

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Nursery Department Organization and Administration

II. OBJECTIVES FOR THE NURSERY DEPARTMENT

By Bertha Constance Woodward

This is the second of a series of articles prepared especially for the parents and teachers of children under four years of age.

If a department is to be constructive in its work, it must have objectives or goals toward which to direct its efforts. First there must be an ultimate objective for the department, then general objectives according to years, and objectives which will motivate religious living.

Following are the objectives for the nursery department of the church school. The curriculum material, for use with the nursery child, has been written with these objectives as a basis. Parents and workers should carry these in mind as they work with the child.

I. Ultimate Objective of the Department: To give unto each nursery child, through the rich experiences of everyday living, an appreciation of God and of the things of highest value, and a development in habits of living which will cause him to live at his best.

II. Objectives According to Years: The teacher and parent should be conscious of certain general objectives to be accomplished in the child's life as he advances from birth to four years. During the first and second years of the child's life, practically all work of this department must be done through the parents. They are church teachers functioning in the home. They are assisted by the nursery superintendent and teacher, and by the adult supervisor. The health of the child is the parent's first consideration. They also must understand how to help their child form concepts of right and wrong and must help the child to realize the friendliness of God in connection with good experiences. They must appreciate the necessity of keeping their own lives worthy of imitation in both conduct and attitudes.

During the last of the second year and through the entire third year, the church-school teacher has more opportunity to directly assist the child. He is then old enough to join with others of his age in the church school class, and this gives an opportunity for the trained and consecrated teacher to supplement the parent's efforts in teaching the child to live religiously.

III. Objectives Which Will Motivate Religious Living: If the purposes expressed in the following seven objectives are increasingly realized in the nursery child's everyday experience, they will come to influence his appreciations and choices in life. These objectives represent the greatest good from the Christian heritage and from the Christian ideal which can be sensed and used by the nursery-age child.

1. Guide the child to appreciate God as an ever-present companion who loves, cares, helps, and gives—a reality in the child's everyday experiences.

2. Lead the child to think of Jesus as the Son of God, a kind and loving friend who loved and helped people, and who still loves and helps us.

3. Assist the child in forming beginning concepts of right and wrong. Develop a right conscience leading to Christian character.

4. Make it possible for the child to find satisfaction in a Christian adjustment to associates; in being kind, helpful, obedient to parents, etc.

5. Assist the child to have a satisfying experience in the church-home associations, and help him to appreciate the church building as a house of worship and learning.

6. Lead the child to feel that God needs him for a helper,

For we must not only repent and be baptized; we must endure to the end if we would seek salvation. The weakness of the flesh is known to the Father, and he therefore gives us a way whereby we may overcome temptation. That way is through faith on the name of Jesus Christ. We must now grow in righteousness, even as previously we grew in wickedness. We must go either one way or the other. If we forget, or refuse, or in any way neglect to turn from wickedness into righteousness, we are condemned even more than if we had never repented, and must proceed onward to our own destruction.

But if we do turn; if, after being washed clean by the blood of Christ, we do seek constantly to do the will of God, he will give us strength that we may stand fast. When tempted, we have only to call upon God, through the name of Christ, believing, and he will surely save us. It is necessary that we should be tempted, to try our faith, and increase our strength, but we shall never be tried beyond our strength, if we really have faith.

Having once turned out of wickedness into righteousness, we must continue steadfast, constantly striving to overcome our weakness, even to the smallest of "small" sins. For we are commanded to be perfect, and in the nature of perfection there is not room for even one little sin. The small sin is in fact the most dangerous, for whereas it is easy to see and avoid a mountain, we must watch carefully to avoid a mole hill. A small sin is like a pebble in the path of a racing machine, deflecting it from the true course only by a small fraction, yet the driver must take care and correct even that, lest it turn him into the ditch.

After repentance, don't forget to turn, but having turned once, continue on in a straight line until the very end.

According to Doctor Henry Van Dyke, there are just four steps to the achievement of godliness. He says: "It is only by thinking about great and good things that we come to love them; it is only by loving them that we come to long for them; it is only by longing for them that we are impelled to seek after them; and it is only by seeking after them that they become ours and we enter into vital experience of their beauty and blessedness."

If Christianity is to conquer the world, it must, on the one hand, return to its own living roots, and on the other, apply itself in ever-widening circles to the problems of the present time.—Doctor Rudolf Eucken.

and to appreciate the experience of cooperation between God and little children.

7. Seek to give the child an appreciation of the Scriptures, which tell of good people and of God and Jesus.

Junior Stewardship Recognition

By C. B. Woodstock

One of the most promising activities developed as a part of the church's program for its youth is provided in connection with the keeping of a Junior Stewardship Record Book. These record books are prepared by the Presiding Bishopric primarily for the use of boys and girls between the ages of eight and fifteen. They may be used to excellent advantage for personal accounting by any age.

The method of accounting is clearly associated with the ideas of stewardship in the church; industry, thrift, savings, the distinction between necessary and other expenditures, the making of offerings, the payment of the tithe, and the method of accounting with the Lord as with a partner, are clearly set out in several pages of helpful directions. The record pages themselves are so ruled and columns so named as to make the keeping of the record a comparatively easy and pleasant task.

As in many other ventures, success comes only through persistent and faithful entry of the items of accounting. And this, too, is a most vital element of Christian character and good stewardship. Every inducement is given to encourage the boys and girls to keep their records conscientiously throughout the year, making up the totals and the summary and balance at the end of each month, as becomes good bookkeeping.

The project was in operation in 1930 in some 150 branches of the church. Much credit for the success attained is due to the faithfulness of the sponsors in each branch. Not all have reported to date, but a summary of fifty-seven reports shows some most interesting possibilities. In these places where 501 record books were in use, 205 are reported as being kept satisfactorily. Of the 501 junior stewards reported upon, 227 are paying tithes amounting in about six months to $335.04; 133 are contributing through the oblation; 144 have savings accounts.

These 57 sponsors have given personal help and encouragement to 224 junior stewards, talked before groups of junior stewards 141 times, talked to the school 102 times and before the branch 46 times. One hundred and four visits have been made in juniors' homes to encourage the cooperation of the children and their parents in record keeping.

Junior stewardship has proved a most valuable and happy educational experience in every place where the sponsor has been earnest and active, and where parents and officers of the branch have given their hearty support and cooperation.

As a special recognition of faithful junior stewardship in 1930, the Presiding Bishop has issued a neat certificate of commendation to each boy and girl whose record has been faithfully kept for at least six months ending December 31, 1930:

The Junior Stewardship Award reads:

"In recognition of your faithful effort to serve God as a Junior Steward in the year 1930, and on the recommendation of your sponsor and branch solicitor, you are granted this CERTIFICATE OF COMMENDATION.

"We trust the joy you have experienced in earning and saving, in keeping your record, and in paying to the Lord your tithes and offerings, may remain with you always to enrich your life of service in the church. In the coming year and as you grow older, there should be ever more opportunities to increase your stewardship.

"We wish to express to you the appreciation of the church and our faith in you as one of its young workers.

"Signed.....

"Presiding Bishop."

Junior Stewardship Record Books may be secured from the Presiding Bishopric for use under the direction of a sponsor in 1931 at five cents each. The sponsor should be selected by the branch pastor, the financial agent, and the director of the church school. As a project in religious education, Junior Stewardship is carried out under the immediate direction of the general department of religious education.

For individual use, the Record Books may be purchased at fifteen cents each, at the Herald Publishing House,

Long Beach, California

Long Beach Branch is entering upon the new plan of religious education, with W. A. Teagarden reelected to serve as pastor and Jonathan L. Milner as religious education leader. The children's department has as its superintendent, Harry O. Sacre; the adult superintendent is Arthur H. Moran; and the young people's department will be under the supervision of the religious education leader until further arrangements can be made.

An interested group of local workers has been for some months studying religious education work, taking the course outlined by Brother McDowell for the conference classes. At the completion of this course we were given the opportunity of attending the Standard Teachers' Training School of the Long Beach Council of Religious Education, and the attendance of our own group was remarkable in comparison with the percentage of city-wide attendance. We were third in point of registration but first in percentage of membership. We feel that no little good was accomplished by our cooperation in this local work, and at least a little attention was attracted to the things we as a church are trying to teach and live. We also enjoyed the association with the other religious workers of the city. Doctor Kurtz, a local pastor of vast mental scope and dynamic force, made us realize and appreciate, if we had not before, the needs for religious education. He said that the first need of religious education is insight—insight into the conditions of the world and all nations and what they need. The second need is enthusiasm, and the third need is training.

Eli Bronson, pastor of Los Angeles Church, was the speaker Sunday, December 28, and delivered one of the finest sermons we have had the pleasure of hearing for some time. As he talked on "Brother, wherefore art thou come?" we were made to realize that not only were we created with a purpose, but that it is expedient that we find that purpose and set about accomplishing it.

This holiday season we attempted a new plan of celebration; we tried to create the spirit of giving, rather than getting. Instead of the usual tree and treat for the children, we gave them the privilege of bringing their gifts to the church, and several boxes and baskets were filled with provisions for the missionaries of the district. Friday evening after Christmas, the players of the Double T Circle staged a short play, "Joshua's Gift," which was unusually well done. Again the thought of giving was stressed in the story of Joshua, a boy who gave his heart to the child Jesus, because that was the most precious thing he had to give. The work of little Paul Crum, as Joshua, was highly commendable. With Peggy Crum as the mother of Joshua, Virginia Kuykendal as Mary, Leo Pendarvis as Joseph, Simon Kuykendal as Rabbi Simeon, Bob Pendarvis, Benjamin Corley, and Harold Palmer as the wise men, and George Scott as the shepherd, the characters were well cast, and the performance was at once beautiful and effective.

We opened our year of activities with the theme, "Service." The Sunday school program was planned along this line, and the topic of the testimonial service followed the same thought. In the evening another group of the Double T Players presented a short play entitled, "Service." The idea of the play was to convey the thought that simple service done with no thought of reward is the true service; yet every true service brings as its own reward, fruits of service, or happiness. The play was written by our director of dramatics. Following the play, a sermon by the pastor was delivered on the theme of the day.

New Year's Eve the branch had its usual Wednesday evening prayer meeting; then the crowd adjourned to the basement for a social time. About eleven o'clock they returned to the main auditorium and closed the evening with a devotional service as the old year died and the new year was ushered in.

We recently voted to do away with the usual Friday night study classes, and try a program of expression and recreational activities. This is a new venture in our branch, and we hope for splendid results.

We have had the pleasure the past few weeks of meeting and knowing the parents of our local deacon, Brother Robert Leibold. Brother and Sister Leibold are from Independence, and their visit has been a mutually happy one. On Sunday afternoon, January 11, a group of Saints took their lunches to the park for a picnic lunch with the Leibolds, and spent the afternoon taking pictures and visiting. We are sorry to bid the visitors farewell.

We feel that the Long Beach Branch has been greatly blessed in the past year, having but little sickness and few deaths to sadden us. And while there are some who have been deeply affected by the general depression and financial hardships, we know that there are many in other places who have been worse off than we, and so are fully cognizant of our own blessings.

It is interesting to speculate whether the general depression is or is not the immediate contributing force back of the trend of our thoughts in this branch; but certain it is that more and more we find our minds and aspirations turning "Onward to Zion." May God bless this movement, wherever there is a spark of desire flickering in the heart of a Saint, and not only prepare the way for, but speed the time of, our gathering.

E. LEOLA NICE.

Hazel Dell Branch

Weston, Iowa

Church attendance has continued good this winter, because so far the roads have been passable and the weather fair, permitting the people to get away from their farms.

Two babies have been blessed, a daughter of Brother and Sister Percy Andersen and a daughter of Brother and Sister Leslie Handlan. It gladdens us to see the little ones brought to the house of the Lord to be blessed as Christ blessed them when he was on earth.

The Saints of this vicinity were saddened at the death of Elder C. B. Bardsley, Neola, Iowa, who for years was an active worker in the Master's cause, and who also was president of the old Boomer church, now consolidated with our branch.

The uncertainty of life was also brought home to us by the death of Elder Floyd Graybill, of Richmond, Missouri, and about a month later by the passing away of his wife, Iona. Both were born and reared in this community. They were willing to do their share in the branch work. Their two small children are now with their grandparents, Brother and Sister Hans Andersen.

A Christmas tree and vesper service reminded the people of the Christmas season. The second service was given by the young people and proved to be outstanding in the community.

Members of the local priesthood attended the banquet given at Council Bluffs and the priesthood meetings at South Omaha.

We have placed our order for the new songbooks and are eager to get them.

This year we look forward to rendering a better service in the cause we believe to be true.

At the head of the Sunday school this year is Earl Jensen, son of James Jensen, for years Sunday school superintendent. To guide the affairs of the church work we have chosen John Hansen, together with James Jensen and Hans Andersen.

In the Sunday school there are now three classes, all with able teachers. We trust that God will bless our work, that we may do our share in bringing his kingdom closer to our fellow men.

The sisters have presented the branch a new individual communion set, and they have also paid about half the price of the new piano for the church. POUL S. NIELSEN.

Belleville, Illinois

Twenty-first and West Main

Is Belleville looking up? She is. With memories of a good Christmas play and the performance of the new religious education plan assured, we have been surprising ourselves. It is possible that we will, in retrospect a year from now, be positively astonished.

The monthly business meeting was well attended. Elder G. S. Trowbridge, of Saint Louis, was requested to preside. Brother Edstrom, pastor of Saint Louis Branch, was also present and assisted.

Branch finances have been given a chance to untangle themselves with the efficient help of the newly created finance committee. The envelope system of collecting pledges has been adopted, and much is expected of it. The Christmas offering is up and coming. Goals of the various classes total more than double the amount raised in 1930. The young people's class has set forty dollars as its milestone. The class averages about fifteen members.

That great intangible asset, enthusiasm, has a large balance in the ledger of the boys' and girls' clubs. These two organizations are comprised of the members of the junior division, nine to sixteen years, a recent addition to the church school family which bids fair to be the most "peppy" one.

WALTON LAMBKIN.

Eagle City, Oklahoma

Branch business meeting was held January 7. Elder Lester E. Dyke was reelected branch president; teacher, John R. Dyke; priest, Roy L. Diamond; deacon, Raymond Dyke. At a meeting in July the Saints voted to adopt the new church school plan and elected Lester E. Dyke pastor; associate pastor, Roy L. Diamond; director of church school, Roy L. Diamond. These and other officers were sustained by vote at the January meeting.

A cradle roll graduation with suitable program was held in September. Five babies were promoted to the beginner class.

October 20, 1930, Brother Marvin Pierce met with a car accident near Wellington, Texas, and passed away October 24, being twenty-seven years of age. He and his wife were baptized here in 1922 by Elder W. D. Tordoff.

The young people's class filled and distributed baskets to needy ones at Thanksgiving.

The Temple Builders held a bazaar and the Department of Women a food sale December 5.

Canton Saints whose membership is held here are active at Canton, eight miles away. Sunday school and preaching services are held by elders from here and from Seiling, and the Women's Department is active. Prayer meeting Thursday night is in charge of Roy L. Diamond and L. E. Dyke. Elder Ammon White baptized three adults from Canton at Eagle City this fall.

We now have electric lights and by the use of colored bulbs were able to present "Wondrous Night" on Christmas Eve, in a way which called forth praise from the large audience.

Preparations are now under way for the district conference, to be held here February 13, 14, and 15. The conference will begin with a program by local talent the evening of February 12.

Haileyville, Oklahoma

Elders C. G. Smallwood, S. W. Simmons, and H. R. Harder have preached here at intervals in the recent past. Their visits have been much enjoyed by the members. Apostle E. J. Gleazer spoke two evenings here during his tour of the district with Elder Smallwood.

Two carloads of our group attended an all-day meeting at Fanshawe, November 9. Apostle Gleazer's three lectures during the day were profitable to the Saints.

Brother Smallwood, with some local help, painted the church building the early part of December. Sister Ora Dollins furnished the paint. Brother and Sister Smallwood came last week and finished the work on the church by hanging the paper. We now have a neat place in which to worship. To show appreciation of Brother Smallwood, a tacky and pound party was given as a surprise to him at the home of Brother and Sister H. T. Hampton the evening of December 10. Saints from Wilburton spent the evening with us, and about forty were present.

The Sunday school celebrated Christmas Eve with a tree and program.

Election of officers for the Sunday school occurred the last Sunday of December. W. E. Parham was reelected superintendent, with W. P. Hubble, assistant; secretary, Sister W. P. Hubble; treasurer, Sister M. H. Dollins; pianist, Martha Hubble; chorister, Grace Winslow; and librarian, Judean Winslow. The Sunday school is growing. A teacher's training class is being organized under the leadership of Sister Ora Dollins.

Haileyville members were grieved to hear of the death of Brother Robert Smith, of Lawton. He was a member of this branch for years. His family has our sympathy.

The Saints extend sympathy to Sister Janie Winslow at the loss of her companion. Brother Simmons was called to preach the funeral sermon. Sympathy also goes to Brother Hank Poor at the loss of his father, and to Martha, Joelene, and Joy Jaccohi at the loss of their father.

Mr. Robert Lee was drowned at North McAlester December 29. His wife, Sister Maud Lee, and little daughter, have our sympathy.

Sister Mary Sills is suffering from a stroke of paralysis. She was stricken the early part of July, her entire right side being paralyzed.

Mr. and Mrs. George Holland announce the arrival of a new baby in their home.

Moline, Illinois

January 25.—The Saints feel greatly encouraged in the work, especially since the beginning of the new year. The new church school plan has been adopted and put into practice since that time.

Sunday night services are held the first time for more than a year, and the attendance and interest are good.

Brother Harry Eckright is pastor; Brother H. R. Cady, associate pastor, and Brother Leslie Davis, director of the church school.

During prayer week the first of January, three prayer services were held, and by the spiritual help received those attending felt strengthened and encouraged to go on in the work.

A good spirit is present at all of the prayer services. The midweek meetings are held at the homes of the Saints during the winter months.

A young people's choir has been organized.

W. O. Hand, of Kansas City, delivered an illustrated lecture to a well-filled house Sunday evening, January 18. It was interesting and educational from beginning to end, and we felt that hearing him was a privilege and wish him success on the remainder of his trip. The part perhaps most interesting to the Saints was that devoted to the story of the finding of the bodies of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in Nauvoo. Practically all of our people have been to Nauvoo, and recognized the spots shown.

A tri-city teachers' training class is held once each week under the direction of Sister Winifred Stiegel.

Brother E. T. Williamson, an employee of the United Light and Power Company, recently received a one thousand dollar check as the prize in an essay contest sponsored by his company. He was the only one of more than thirty employees of the company and its subsidiaries whose essay was considered worthy the prize. The article, five thousand words in length, was in the form of a survey of the progress of the electric light and power industry during the five years prior to 1925 and a forecast of the subsequent five years.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

Christmas was observed Sunday morning, December 21, by the children's division. The children from each department contributed to the program which was held in the basement. A Christmas tree with treats and gifts completed the program. In the evening at eight o'clock a vesper service was held which was in charge of Sister Dorothy Stoff, choir leader.

A unique service was held on New Year's Eve. The church was dimly lighted during the reading of a story, "The Precious Thing," by Sister Vinnie Hatch; the singing of "Come, Sweet Comforter" by Sister Wilda Currie Snyder; and a talk on "Resolutions" by Brother Walter Woodward. Pastor Ray Whiting gave a worth-while talk on some things we as Latter Day Saints might resolve to do the coming year and years. He used his fine stereopticon to show pictures illustrating the need of health and active, intelligent minds, and above all the need to make our lives a fit place for God's Spirit.

The short visit of Brother and Sister Walter Woodward, of Trenton, Missouri, during the holidays was enjoyed by Council Bluffs Saints.

The sacramental service at the beginning of the year was in charge of the branch presidency and was marked by a rededication of lives by old and young.

The annual branch business meeting was held the first Monday of the new year. The branch budget adopted is lower than for several years, yet there is more money available in it for expenses and educational work, which is a bright outlook for our branch. Since September 1 we have been using the envelope system of financing, and we are happy to report an increase of seventy-eight per cent over the same period of time in 1929, with an increase of one hundred per cent in known contributors to branch expenses. Tithers have increased three hundred per cent during that time. A gas burner was ordered put into our furnace. This has been installed and is giving satisfactory service. This change makes it possible to have added room for church school purposes.

The following officers were elected to serve our branch: Pastor, Ray Whiting; associates, Peter Heuermann and Amos Graybill; director of religious education, Orace Currie; adult supervisor, Nels Hansen; young people's supervisor, Merle Spence; children's supervisor, Lavinia Allen; branch secretary, James Hartnett; assistant secretary, Minnie Hartnett; treasurer, H. M. Kerns; historian and librarian, J. F. Mintun.

On this occasion we were privileged to meet Brother Rathbun, the new missionary, and to again shake hands with Brother Hunker.

The adult department held its monthly potluck dinner in the church basement January 9. On account of considerable sickness among our people, not so many were present as at the two previous meetings, but an enjoyable time was had.

On the morning of January 18, two young men, who were properly called and recommended, were ordained, Brother Herbert Alexander to the office of deacon, and Brother Amos Graybill, an elder. They were ordained by Elders Whiting and Beatty. In the evening, Omaha's pastor and choir and Council Bluffs's pastor and choir exchanged pulpits. It was a new venture, but we believe one that can well be repeated. The music furnished by Omaha's choir of twenty-four voices was beautiful and much appreciated by their new congregation, as was also the sermon by Brother Blair Jensen.

Brother William Kuykendall, who underwent a serious operation at Mercy Hospital, is reported as improving nicely, and will soon be permitted to go to his home.

Sister May Rudd, who was called to Rochester, Minnesota, and Spokane, Washington, on account of the death and burial of her only son, Harrison Ross Rudd, is again at home. Sister Rudd is nursery mother during preaching service each Sunday morning, and she received a royal welcome from the little tots, who told her they had missed her and were glad she was back.

January 19 occurred the marriage of Phyllis, second daughter of Paul and Mabel Wight, of Council Bluffs, and Donald Jensen, son of W. C. Jensen, of Weston, Iowa. The ceremony was performed in Sioux City by Elder C. J. Smith. The bride has been a kindergarten teacher in our church school for a number of years and is one of our finest young women, well fitted to be a home keeper in Israel. The bridegroom is an exemplary young man and a farmer. We wish for these young people a happy wedded life.

Oakland, California

From The Oakland Bulletin

In observance of the week of prayer, the church was open each morning at nine o'clock, a place where the members might come for a season of meditation and private prayer. Those who could not do this were requested to find opportunity at eleven o'clock each morning to read the scripture selected for the day and offer prayer.

The cantata the evening of the last Sunday in 1930 was well given. Soloists and chorus were in splendid form. The tableaux were artistically arranged and gave color to the program. The collection taken was divided between the district and the local church.

The night of January 8 our aged sister, Augusta Holling, of Park Presidio Branch, passed away after a long illness. She was one of the pioneers in Park Presidio District, having settled here when sixteen years of age immediately upon her arrival from Germany. Her life of eighty-two years was spent in caring for her family and home and the pursuit of her musical profession. The funeral was conducted January 9.

We also regret to report the passing away of Sister Gilbert J. Waller, whose illness was brief. She was spared to greet her husband and daughters, who were in her home in San Francisco when death came. In 1882 Brother Waller joined the church in Oakland, and the family has been well known in the church locally and generally through the ministry of our brother in the Hawaiian Islands and on the coast and through the work of the daughters, Ruth and Christiana. Sister Waller was devoted to her home and family. The funeral occurred from the home January 9. The sympathy of the branch goes to both bereaved families. Interment was in Cypress Lawn Cemetery.

The church organ is installed, and speaks its own message with melody and power. All are delighted with it. The chimes, which are of the finest quality obtainable, are not as yet operating, awaiting the material for dampers. During the regional institute held here recently, Mrs. Meyer and Mrs. Austin played for the enjoyment of the congregation. We hope shortly to be able to announce the dedication of the instrument, when we will, through the cooperation and kindness of Mr. Lowe, secure the services of a guest organist to give a recital.

January 11 the baby daughter of Brother and Sister Bricker was blessed by Brothers C. Hawley and M. F. Ralston. Her name is Mary Joan. On that day Brothers Carmichael and Savage occupied the stand.

We were pleased to welcome the visitors to the church who were here for institute work, which was conducted under the auspices of the Northern California District. The sessions began Wednesday evening, January 14. Brother G. P. Levitt was in charge of the religious education program and spent much time preparing the curriculum. The banquet which opened the session was not as largely attended as the members had hoped, but a splendid meal was served by the Department of Women, and a fine spirit of fellowship prevailed. Brother Levitt had the adult division in religious education. Sister Blohm, of Sacramento, had the teachers and leaders in children's division, but because of a severe cold was able to give only one day's work. Miss Genevieve Opsal could not be present. In the assembly period the pastor gave lectures on the life of Christ.

Elder G. J. Waller was given a welcome hearing by the congregation the morning of January 25.

On Friday evening, January 23, the two organized classes of the Religio held parties, the Key Stone Club at the home of Sister Ruby Strand, and Brother Rushton's class at the church where an organization meeting was held. Those receiving the honor of office were Ned Jacobson, president; Irene Bonham, vice president; Hazel Gann, secretary; Elwood Murphy, athletic director; Ilene Presley, stewardess.

Denver, Colorado

The young people held their first prayer meeting of the new year at the church on Sunday morning, January 4, at 8.15. They had good attendance and an interesting and encouraging meeting, during which plans for the year's work in their department were briefly outlined. A similar prayer meeting will be held on the first Sunday of each month.

At 10.45 o'clock in the morning the regular sacramental service was held, with the pastor, assisted by E. J. Williams, in charge. The church was well filled, and a profitable hour was spent. The theme for the day was "A New Year of Righteousness." In the evening, after a short sermon by Brother Glaude Smith, the Young People's Dramatic Club presented the pageant, "The Challenge of the Cross," under the direction of Sister Glaude Smith.

For January 11 the theme was "We Are Laborers together with God," the sermon by the pastor in the morning being "Coworkers with God," and in the evening "Evangelists of Love." Brother Smith sang a solo: "Love Lifted Me."

On January 18, during the church school hour, three girls, Dorothy Wildermuth, Elaine Salyards, and Amnah Robertson, gave short readings in harmony with the day's theme: "Making Ourselves Worthy through Helpfulness." District Missionary H. E. Winegar spoke in the morning on this subject, and Brother Smith addressed us in the evening, his subject being "He That Overcometh."

Our young men on the basket-ball team are working hard and making a good showing in their games with other teams in the church league.

On Saturday afternoon, January 18, a party was given at the church for the primary and junior children, under the direction of Sister Louisa Fishburn. They were entertained by stories, songs, and games. Refreshments were served.

The adult division enjoyed a social held in the basement of the church Thursday evening, January 22. Sister Ethel Fishburn presented a mock radio program which was cleverly arranged and given the enthusiastic approval of the audience. One person was heard to remark that our "Amos 'n' Andy" compared very favorably with a more famous pair.

Glaude Smith gave an excellent sermon the morning of January 25 on the subject, "The Joy of Doing." In the evening we again had the privilege of hearing H. E. Winegar. E. W. Fishburn sang a solo.

The Young People's Dramatic Club drove to Colorado Springs last Sunday evening and presented the pageant, "The Challenge of the Cross," before the Saints of the Colorado Springs Branch and their friends. The church was filled, and all expressed their appreciation to the young people. In a pleasing little ceremony the pastor, Brother Joseph Ebeling, presented to the Denver pastor, Glaude Smith, a large gilded key to the church, as a token of their friendship and good will. The young people have been invited to give this pageant at the Edgewater Community Church February 8.

Brother and Sister Irby Mundy, of Uteville, Colorado, have been in Denver for two weeks. Brother Mundy participated in the rodeo events which were a part of the Stock Show held in Denver by the National Live Stock Association. Through his kindness in giving out complimentary tickets, many of the Saints had the pleasure of attending some of the performances.

Davidson, Oklahoma

January 22.—The first event occurring after the writing of our last letter was the marriage of Mrs. Lula Perkins, daughter of Elder S. W. Simmons, to Robert Skinner, which took place in the home of Brother and Sister John Parker the morning of November 2. Sister Parker is a sister of the bridegroom. In the presence of forty-nine relatives, the ceremony was read by Elder B. F. Renfroe, a brother-in-law to the bridegroom. Preceding the ceremony a prayer of blessing was uttered by the bride's father; then a trio composed of Mrs. Homer Qualls, Miss Valeria Parker, and Homer Skinner, nieces and nephew of the bridegroom, sang "God Keep You True."

Baskets and vases of autumn flowers banked the rostrum of the church on Wednesday evening when ninety-one friends and relatives surprised the happy couple with a musical program and wedding shower. Following the program little Miss Devergle Skinner played a march, as Miss Doris Young and Otis Guy Parker acting as bride and bridegroom and Miss Betty Jean Hood, bridesmaid, marched up the aisle of the church followed by a beautifully decorated toy wagon filled with lovely gifts for Brother and Sister Skinner. The couple will make their home in Davidson. Brother Skinner is an employee of the State Highway Department.

Elder S. W. Simmons preached two fine sermons during his visit here.

December 4 Apostle E. J. Gleazer arrived. He remained only one night, giving a splendid sermon replete with ideas and suggestions.

Hallie Burks, one of our young girls, has recently been a patient in an Oklahoma City hospital, where she underwent a major operation. She is recovering nicely.

To the large crowd which attended the Christmas program the evening of December 25, there came that sweet spirit which expresses itself in worship of Him who was born in Bethlehem. The service opened with the choir singing three anthems, "Behold, I Bring You Good Tidings," McPhail; "Glory to God in the Highest," Beirly; and "Father, O Hear Us," Palmer, directed by Sister L. A. Carrow. After several numbers by the children, the plays, "Christmas at the Inn" and "Wondrous Night," were presented by the adults.

What could be more pleasant than to have our "home boy," Zenos, pastor of Oklahoma City Branch, with us during the Christmas holidays? Apostle Gleazer promised Brother Renfroe the holidays at home if he would preach some good sermons while here. Zenos did that and more, and we are grateful to Brother Gleazer.

The old year closed for us with a rush, and now the new year is well under way. On January 2 the annual business meeting was held and the following officers were elected:

Pastor, B. F. Renfro; counselors, E. B. Stafford and Ray Carrow; clerk, J. W. Parker; director of music, Valeria Parker; general supervisor of Sunday school, Iral Parker; pianist, Sister Troy Parker; head of the Women's Department, Sister Tom Skinner, assisted by Sister Roy Skinner.

The opening sacrament of the Lord's Supper was observed with great interest. Through the Spirit we received encouraging words of instruction.

The first matrimonial undertaking of the new year was that of Miss Emma Stafford, young daughter of Elder and Sister E. B. Stafford, to Loyd Bell, of Davidson, January 4. For a number of years the bride has faithfully filled the office of church school secretary.

The members of the young people's Sunday school class feel in this wedding their loss, but the young married people will be happy if Emma succeeds in interesting her young husband in their class. At the time of her marriage she was employed by the Davidson Telephone Company.

Des Moines, Iowa

An impressive installation service was held at the opening of the Sunday school the morning of January 4. A presentation speech was made by the pastor, the charge being delivered by District President Henry Castings, who used as a lesson the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem in the days of Nehemiah. He told them that this man was chosen because of his courage and faith and ability to overcome obstacles, and that they had been chosen for similar reasons. They were warned that as Nehemiah was asked to come down and quit his task and his answer was, "I am engaged in a great work and can not come down," so they must answer any who might try to get them to quit the work to which they had been assigned.

Brother Castings was in charge of the sacramental service, E. O. Clark and William Robinson assisting. The Saints were urged to speak of their happy experiences of the past year rather than of their discouragements which advice was followed, and a spiritual time was enjoyed by the worshipers. Brother Lloyd Mussell was present and gave his testimony, which touched the hearts of everyone.

Two children were baptized by the pastor preceding the evening classes.

A special musical program, under the direction of Mrs. C. W. Wolf, was the feature of the evening service.

A short address on the subject of service was made by Brother C. B. Hartshorn to a class in home nursing who appeared in white gowns, to the number of twenty-four, and were seated on the platform. Sister J. W. Chapman is responsible for this class, which has been trained to care for the sick in a very efficient manner. These have been busy since in taking care of as many as seven patients a day. Their service has been offered for twenty-four hours a day where needed. Many are grateful for this splendid example of love and care one for the other. The part the class took in the service was to present the church with a service tree, and the teacher with letters of appreciation for her work and interest in the class. Then they sang the song, "We Have Entered into Service."

A small group of the home and service department met at the Hartshorn home the afternoon of January 9 to hear Mrs. S. Joe Brown lecture on the subject "Interracial Good Will Movements," a discussion of the problems of the Negro race.

The annual budget was the order of the service on Sunday the 11th. The amount pledged was considered ample under existing conditions.

A heavy snow January 18 made the attendance light at all services, there being only one hundred and sixty in attendance at Sunday school. The pastor spoke on the subject of prohibition in the morning, and J. L. Parker preached at night on the subject "Twenty-five Years of Achievement."

Brush Creek, Illinois

Brush Creek began its fall activities by observing Rally Day. A short program was given by the church school September 28. Brother James Slover led his thirteen-year-old son into the waters of baptism.

We were saddened October 8 to learn of the death of J. W. Slover, one of the oldest members of the branch. He was eighty-four years of age and lived at Evansville, Indiana, at the time of his death. The funeral sermon was preached at Brush Creek by R. H. Henson, assisted by V. E. Sheppard. Interment was in Mount Pleasant Cemetery in charge of the American Legion. He was a Civil War veteran.

A Halloween social was held in the dining hall on the reunion grounds October 31. Proceeds went to the branch fund.

November 13 the Religio held a dramatic contest. The judges called it a tie, so both sides will treat.

Two days later Elders V. E. Sheppard and H. O. Plumb arrived to hold a series of meetings. This lasted four weeks. November 17 a number of Saints and friends gathered at the water's edge, where Nora and Malinda Henson and Mrs. Pearl Jones were baptized.

At eleven o'clock Thanksgiving Day several Saints gathered at the church with baskets filled to the top with good things to eat. After all had partaken of the bounteous dinner, there were testimonies of thankfulness for God's goodness to his children, and Brother Sheppard gave an interesting talk. On Monday night before the missionaries left, the Saints and their friends, numbering about fifty, gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Allen for a surprise party in their honor. Readings were given by Kate Morris, Pearl Jones, Olive Pifer, and Katie Burgess. Kate Morris and Maudie Caudle sang "They Cut Down the Old Pine Tree," with guitar accompaniment. The missionaries departed December 15 to spend the holidays with homefolks.

The evening of December 18 Miss Eula Morris was united in marriage to Mr. Willie Shehorn, of Rinard, Illinois, at the home of the bride's parents by Brother William Clements. They will make their home in Rinard.

Mrs. Effie McGrew, of Cisne, was married to Isaac Brown. They have moved to his farm near the church and are welcome in our midst.

Of late some of the Saints have received wonderful blessings in answer to prayer and administration.

This branch adopted the church school program, which was published in the Department Journal and Herald about a year ago. Almost everyone thinks it is a much better plan than the old form of conducting services.

The Christmas tree and program on Christmas Eve were much enjoyed by a large crowd.

Brother and Sister Harry Sevy, of Independence, were here December 28. His morning sermon on stewardship and his talk on the divinity of the Book of Mormon in the evening were much appreciated. We are glad to have missionaries and other church officials visit us, and we enjoy their encouraging talks.

January 4 being sacramental service, many Saints were present to renew their covenant with Christ.

The regular midweek prayer service has been changed to Sunday evening at six o'clock for the convenience of the pastor and several other members living far away from the church. When the weather improves with the coming of spring, it will be changed back to the middle of the week.

The Women's Department meets all day each Thursday to quilt. At two o'clock they have their lesson. Ethel Jones is superintendent. There is also a chapter of women at Johnsonville working on quilts to sell.

The Recreation and Expression Department meets every Friday night when the weather permits, and a good crowd of young people attends.

Sister Carmen Leathers, of Bridgeport, who was seriously injured in a car wreck near Topeka, Kansas, has been in a critical condition for some time. She is somewhat better now. She is a daughter of Sister Fannie Caudle, of Brush Creek.

Beaverton, Michigan

January 25.—The annual business meeting was held the latter part of December. Willis Shrock was sustained as pastor. Lloyd McDonald was elected church school director; Bertha Shrock, head of the Women's Department; Sunday school secretary, Emma Rosevear; Sunday school and branch treasurer, Edith Rosevear; branch clerk, Bertha Shrock; Sunday school pianist, Leona Asch; chorister, Elva Hubbard; branch pianist, Edith Rosevear.

The new Year was begun with a watch party.

A choir of thirty-two members was organized the first of the year and made public appearance the evening of January 25. The musicians are planning to work up special numbers.

Our Sunday school membership is one hundred and six. There were one hundred and seven present the morning of January 25. About seventy-five were young people and children. The young women's and men's classes, taught by Edith Rosevear and Willis Shrock, respectively, are working on an evening's entertainment to be given soon. Proceeds are to go into the Christmas offering fund.

We are following the unified service plan for the morning meetings. Everyone is interested and eager to see the work go forward.

Des Moines District

District officers have held special services in nearly all the branches and groups in the district the past year.

Two all-day meetings were held at Mason City in the home of Sister Inez Kinney, where the Saints of that place and Charles City have been holding Sunday school for a year or more. Brothers Castings, E. O. Clark, and C. E. McDonald ministered to the Saints, by driving two hundred and eighty miles the round trip the same day.

On June 22 Brothers Castings and N. V. Anderson preached in a grove near Webster City to the Saints and a number of nonmembers who came for an all-day meeting and a picnic dinner. This was an enjoyable occasion made possible by Doctor J. E. Slocum and his worthy assistants. Brother Castings' text was from Doctrine and Covenants 64:7. His sermon was impressive; he emphasized the condition we must be in before we can dwell in the land of Zion.

Brother Anderson related his experiences of leaving his home in England and coming to America in search of the gospel, how he found it, and his experiences in its service.

On August 3 N. V. Anderson and Doctor G. F. Hull preached to a group of nonmembers at Metz, who were so much interested that they asked for them to return. Doctor Hull preached twice afterwards on Sunday nights to this group. These four sermons convinced many of the truth, but they are bound by the prejudices and traditions of years, and as yet none have been baptized. Brother Anderson preached about his experiences in coming into the church, and Doctor Hull preached on "Protestantism Has Failed," "The Divine Organization," and "The Soul of Man, Is It Immortal?"

On August 10 an opening was made by Brothers Anderson and McDonald at the Babbitt Schoolhouse, just east of the city limits of Des Moines. This opening was made possible through the efforts of Brother Will Butterfield and family, who live across the road from the building. We shared the schoolhouse with the Friends for a while, but have it every Sunday night at present. Brother E. O. Clark is keeping up the appointment. There is a splendid interest, and there will be some baptisms soon, we have no doubt.

The home-coming services began at Newton on November

2 with Brothers Castings and Clark as special speakers. This was a spiritual experience, and the effects of it are manifest in the lives of the Saints until this day. The missionaries came soon afterwards and continued the good work.

Rhodes had its service November 23 with Brothers Castings, Orr, and McDonald as speakers. There was an outpouring of the Spirit during Brother Castings' sermon that will not soon be forgotten by those who were present. The church was comfortably filled with Saints, and an enjoyable time was had.

Nevada's service was on November 30, at which time Brothers Stephen Robinson and N. V. Anderson ministered the word in power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit. There are only a faithful few at this place, but they have repaired and repainted the church building the past summer until it shines within and without.

The business meetings of branches and groups engaged the attention of district officers during December, Brother E. G. Beye attending all outside of the city of Des Moines. Brothers Castings and McDonald attended only a part of them. Perry had a district presidency's day on January 18 with Brothers Beye and Castings as speakers. The other member of the presidency was ill.

Escatawpa, Mississippi

The new year found the Saints here going forward. Not many made new resolutions but redoubled their efforts toward keeping the old ones. Our number is small, but we continue to have regular meetings: Church school Sunday morning 9.45; review or class work, 11 o'clock; prayer meeting, Wednesday night, 7.30; class study, Thursday night, 7.30; social hour Friday night, 7.30. At the last-named meeting we play and make friends from 7.30 to 8.30. Our crowds are growing larger all the time.

A fine Christmas program was given by the smaller folk of our branch. Sisters Bethel Mizell and Lou Smith directed it. The Christmas tree was loaded with fruit and candy for the children.

New branch officers were elected on January 1. The congregation voted to sustain the branch president, who has served faithfully for eight years.

News of Sister Dorothy Mizell's illness was received not long ago, but she is now improving.

MYRTLE SHERMAN.

Wabash, Ontario

This is one of the older branches of the church in Ontario.

In the past year we have had here Apostle C. F. Ellis, Brother Williams, district president, Brother Brown, and Brother Dent. They have given some excellent sermons. At the present time we are listening to Brother Njeim, of Syria, and are enjoying his series of services. The crowds have been good, and attention is excellent. Our brother is a good speaker.

This week completes four weeks of meetings. Tonight is the last sermon. Lantern slide pictures of scenes in Palestine have interested us and many of our friends. We hope that a better understanding will exist between us and those not of the faith as a result of the services.

Last fall the district conference was held here with good attendance and services. On Sunday dinner was served to over four hundred and fifty people. A splendid spirit prevailed throughout every session. We trust the members carried this influence with them to their home branches.

Our leading officers are branch president, C. W. Badder; superintendent of Sunday school, Sister E. Ross; assistant, Clayton Ross; Religio presidents, L. M. Taylor and W. L. Ross, jr.

EULALIA ROSS.

Stone Church

The theme thought of the opening exercises of the church school on Sunday morning centered about the life of Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln is not only a great figure in American history, asserted Elder G. G. Lewis in his brief talk, but he is also a world hero. Patriotic songs were led by Brother Earl Audet, Sister Opal Goode Doty at the organ. Associate Superintendent H. W. Harder was in charge.

Observing Boy Scout Sunday opening Boy Scout Anniversary Week, the junior young people worshiped with the adults in the main auditorium. Sections were reserved for the Boy Scouts, for the boys who are not scouts, and for almost one hundred girls with their leaders and teachers.

That the true estimate of a country's wealth is not to be had in its industries, farms, and business enterprises, but in the quality of its citizenry was the principal thought of Pastor John F. Sheehy's address on the purpose of scouting and standards subscribed to by those directing the movement. His plea to the congregation was to help our boys by supporting the undertakings of the local scout troops. Everywhere during this its twenty-first anniversary week the Boy Scout movement is being given emphasis.

The Stone Church congregation sponsors two large scout troops, 223 and 226. Much care has been exercised in the choice of the following directing committees: For troop 223: H. W. Harder, Albert Brackenbury, Roy Chapman, Orval Thompson, and S. A. Thiel; A. E. Bullard, scoutmaster; for troop 226: G. G. Lewis, Earl Audet, William H. Snead, T. A. Beck, and E. E. Closson; W. Earl Page, scoutmaster. Brothers H. W. Harder and G. G. Lewis presided over the Sunday morning service.

Music was by the Stone Church Choir which sang under the direction of Paul N. Craig the anthem, "Praise My Soul the King of Heaven," by Galbraith, Gordon Kress singing the baritone solo. Organ accompaniment and special numbers were by Lorena Kueffer. Scout ceremonials added a pleasing tone to the service.

The young people's group, which meets every Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, listened last Sunday to a talk by Elder Leonard Lea, to a violin number by Gomer Watson, and to a humorous reading by Margaret Mills. Roy McNeil, recently elected president, was in charge of the hour. The afternoon of February 1 Pastor John F. Sheehy spoke to this group.

A crowd filled the church Sunday evening to hear the special program of music given by the Independence Chamber of Commerce Glee Club and a thoughtful sermon by Apostle M. A. McConley. For the basis of his discourse, Brother McConley chose to read Doctrine and Covenants 42, and presented suggestions concerning the way we should study to obtain the most from the things we would learn. Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, assisted by Bishop C. J. Hunt.

The prayer meetings of this congregation both in the groups and at the church on Sunday continue to be helpful to all.

Liberty Street

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper becomes increasingly meaningful and significant as one to an added degree values association with his fellows.

The fact that the February communion service was probably the last at which Elder F. A. Cool would break bread for the congregation as pastor made the occasion both difficult and sacredly beautiful for him. Many commented that this was one of the most uplifting services of this nature experienced since the new type of communion worship was instituted. Elders Walter Curtis and Chester Young assisted the pastor in conducting the service.

The ministry of music was the feature of the evening service February 1. Students from the Storms School of Music playing in ensemble under the capable direction of Arthur Storms gave a concert consisting of a number of the much-loved compositions of the old masters. Clyde Brower and Melvin Idleman played a trumpet duet, "My Song of Songs," by Smith. The accompanist for the entire program was Mrs. Margaret B. Storms. There is no doubt of the religious significance of music after hearing a program such as this. The sermon was given by Pastor F. A. Cool. The study of the piano and other musical instruments on the part of our children must never be substituted by the radio and other musical devices so common today was one of the outstanding thoughts expressed. Music in the fullest sense will cease to be a part of us if we allow other people always to execute it for us.

A union prayer service of the four Liberty Street groups was held at the church Wednesday, February 4. After the worship service a surprise party was given in honor of Pastor F. A. Cool. Elders John F. Sheehy and G. G. Lewis officiated in the presentation to the Cools of a beautiful floor lamp given them by members of the congregation.

The importance of the Boy Scout movement was the central thought in the sermon at the beginning of Boy Scout Anniversary Week, February 8, by Pastor F. A. Cool. The Boy Scout organization has probably done more to develop wholesome and worth-while attitudes and ideals on the part of growing boys than has any other single factor outside of the Sunday school.

That the "land shadowing with wings" mentioned in Holy Writ is the land of America was conclusively proved in the illustrated lecture by Elder C. Ed. Miller in the evening. The zeal and enthusiasm with which Brother Miller presents the claims of the Book of Mormon to a congregation of Latter Day Saints makes us wonder to what lengths he might go in sermonizing on it to nonmembers. Special music consisted of two quartet numbers and a class song by the members of Brother B. H. Bunten's class.

The activities of the junior young people, under the leadership of Raymond Wrigley and Cecil R. Walker, are varied and interesting. Frederick Fish is a new and energetic worker in this department. The study of the Book of Mormon is becoming an engrossing adventure to the members of the Minute Men Class under the tutelage of this young man. All the teachers of the younger people's classes seem to be consistently following the gleam of the new plan and the ever-widening circle of interests and attitudes it is trying to bring to our youth.

Gudgell Park

Several members from our congregation were at Nauvoo and Carthage Sunday, February 1. They report a pleasant trip and good time.

Early morning prayer service on the first Sunday of the month was much enjoyed by those present. It was a hundred per cent meeting, and all were encouraged to see the young doing their part to make the hour mutually helpful.

The Saints are pleased to see the church school growing rapidly. It begins to look as if we would soon have to have more room.

Sister Roy Sherman, who has been ill, is improving.

The women held an all-day meeting last Friday at the home of Sister Irene Barnhard. They sewed for some of the sisters.

January 25 the new orchestra, under the direction of Brother Davies, made its first public appearance at Sunday school. We have been looking forward to this for a long time. At eleven o'clock Patriarch W. A. McDowell gave a splendid gospel sermon.

The sacramental service for February was well attended, Brothers Ivor Davies and John Inman in charge. In the evening Brother Inman was in charge, and Brother Gross was the speaker.

Last Sunday morning the Saints gladly welcomed Apostle R. S. Budd, who gave a splendid sermon. Patriarch Mc-Dowell was again here in the evening. A special number came from the junior choir, and Brother Atwell sang a solo.

The women are organized and ready for work under the leadership of Sister Irene Barnhard. During the last two weeks they have been sewing for needy families.

The junior choir is working on a musical program to be given in the near future.

Gudgell Park's boys have been holding their place in the volley ball games of the Auditorium league.

Walnut Park

The intermediates' organization made one of its plans known in Sunday school February 8 when C. G. Closson presented the suggestion that the church school officials sponsor a Girls' Scout movement. This idea had been discussed in the girls' week-day meetings; Mrs. Crowthers, a worker among Girl Scouts, had come from the Y. W. C. A. in Kansas City, and explained what it was; a desirable monitor had been secured, Sister Paul Roberts; patrol leaders and corporals were selected from among their own number for four patrols, and a session of actual work had been held. Now by vote the school indorsed the organization, and a course of enjoyable education lies ahead of the twenty-seven girls who have joined.

After the school classes Mary Jane Bean, one of the above girls, sang "In the Beautiful Garden of Prayer," with Thelma Schwab, also an intermediate, playing the piano accompaniment. Another girl of this age, Margaret Wanita Gregg, was baptized in the font during the junior service by George F. Bullard, and confirmed by Samuel C. Smith and G. F. Bullard.

At eleven o'clock an hour was spent in the interest of the boys in the main auditorium in charge of C. L. Olson. The choir's anthem was "Lead On, O King Eternal," Mrs. Earl Cox, pianist. The Boy Scouts were present with their leader, Ammon Badder. Kent Scott bore the scout flag and Jimmie Rowland the American flag. Jimmie Rowland gave the scout oath, Harold Dillee the scout law, and Elder E. E. Closson, with years of experience in scout work, appropriately gave the forenoon sermon. The service closed with the hymn, "Dare to Do Right, Dare to Be True." Walnut Park has eight Boy Scouts enrolled, with six more registering this week.

In the evening, instead of the usual congregational song service and anthem, numbers were sung by a quartet from the Stone Church, Sister Israel A. Smith, Sister J. D. Gault, Sister Mark Holman, and Sister B. J. Scott. The sermon was by Bishop B. J. Scott, a former pastor, who with his sterling faith in God discoursed on how forces arise to hinder every good work and how these forces may retard but can never frustrate God's purposes. His closing words summed up his conviction of the unfailing power of the Almighty: "My power is unlimited! I can accomplish my work!" How many of us will have faith enough to work with Him during the days of testing before us?

Enoch Hill

A surprise awaited Elder and Sister O. W. Sarratt the evening of January 30 when neighbors brought them to the church basement where the congregation was assembled to bid them farewell. The Sarratt family is moving to a farm near Independence. For several years Brother Sarratt has faithfully served the congregation as pastor, and his help will be missed. The large crowd of friends was well entertained by a program of music given by one of K M B C's male quartets in which our young brother Duane Swally sings, and by local musicians, and there were talks of appreciation by Elders Joseph Martin and W. J. Brewer, with responses from Brother and Sister Sarratt.

Attendance at the February sacramental service was especially good. Everyone seemed to sense the opportunity before him in this meeting, and there was universal expression of gratitude for blessings received.

Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker morning and evening last Sunday. His presentation of the gospel was forceful and held the attention of a large number of members and their friends.

Downstairs the junior morning worship centered around the man Lincoln and his works. The sermonet presented sketches of his life, then the children were asked to relate incidents they had read of this national and world hero. Music, prayer, and scripture reading gave an appropriate background for the lesson of love and kindness the service sought to instill in the hearts of the young worshippers.

Spring Branch

Eight o'clock Sunday morning prayer meeting February 8 was well attended and an especially good meeting. Elder Stanley Kelley addressed the young people at the church school and later the entire group; Sister Harold Edwards sang "Zion the Beautiful"; and Pastor J. E. Cleveland, observing Boy Scout Day, gave a short talk.

At eleven o'clock Elder Howard P. Andersen, the speaker, read for the basis of his sermon 1 Corinthians 13. His subject was "The Greatest Thing in the World." An anthem, "Some Blessed Day," was sung by the choir, Sister Harold Edwards directing.

Elder John Blackmore was the evening speaker. He also read 1 Corinthians. His topic was "A More Excellent Way."

January 28 Betty Ruth Hampton, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Robert Hampton, passed away at her home on Lexington Road. The parents have the sympathy of the Saints.

Following the midweek prayer meeting January 28 a farewell party was given Brother J. C. Mabbott and family, who have moved from this district.

A few close friends went to the home of Brother Joseph Farrow February 8 to remind him of his birthday. A happy evening was spent.

London, Ontario

At the regular business meeting of the branch a few weeks ago Elder J. E. MacGregor was again chosen pastor for the coming year with Elders J. Winegarden and W. Hardey as counselors.

The branch has adopted the continued service with Elder Frank Gray as church school director. Elder J. Winegarden is in charge of the adult division, Sister Grace Perry the junior division. Sister Dorothy Abell was appointed organist, and Fred Heddington chorister.

Sister Martha Timbrell is about again after a recent severe illness.

"Uncle John" Vasbinder is recovering from the effects of a bad fall on the icy steps of his veranda.

District Missionary W. I. Flegg has been working here the past month. Attendance at the Sunday evening services is encouraging.

The sacramental service on January 4 was largely attended. Two children were blessed and two were confirmed. They were the grandchildren of Sister Henry.

Elder J. Winegarden, district president, has been visiting near-by branches for two Sundays.

An enjoyable evening was spent by some of the members at the home of Sister Alda Galagher, the occasion being the birthday celebration of her mother, Sister Likins. The evening was spent in games and conversation, and closed with a dainty lunch.

Elder Samuel Tomlinson, one of the old-time Canadian missionaries, passed to his reward December last. He came from Niagara Falls and resided here until death claimed him. He was buried at Niagara Falls beside his wife, who preceded him two years ago. Several sons and daughters are left to mourn, among them Sister Martha Timbrell and Sister Lizzie Constable of this branch.

Central Church

Beautiful weather encouraged a large number to arrive early for the church school session last Sunday morning. Organ music, children's voices raised in song, and a story by Sister Leonard J. Lea combined with the prayer of the officer in charge and the songs of the congregation to fittingly begin the Sabbath.

Elder C. Ed. Miller preached the sermonet at the eleven o'clock period of church school worship, being assisted in the stand by Pastor C. E. Wight. The choir sang "Gloria" from the Twelfth Mass by Mozart, George Anway directing, Elizabeth Hitchcock organist, and Lucy Bowser, pianist.

In the evening the pastor continued his February series of sermons, using as a theme "Adventuring in Religion." The subject of each Sunday night forms the basis for prayer meeting discussion the following Wednesday.

The Wednesday evening dinners serve three good purposes; they promote fellowship, add to the building fund, and increase prayer meeting attendance.

Next Sunday evening we will have the first of a series of drama worship services. At this hour the Central Church O. B. K's will present "Mansions," their play in the stake one-act play contest. Special stage equipment is being made for this presentation and for the contest in March.

A baptismal service is being arranged for February 15. Several have communicated with officers in charge, requesting admission into the church.

Gladstone Church

There are a number sick in this branch. Some are improved, but others are still in critical condition. Special prayers are asked for Sister William Pence. The son and daughter-in-law of Brother and Sister Showalter were seriously injured in an automobile accident January 20, but are much improved.

Stake Missionary G. T. Richards was the speaker at the Sunday morning services during the month of January.

The one-week missionary meetings held at the home of Brother and Sister E. Moran was well attended, some eighteen nonmembers being present.

On January 25 Mrs. Charlotte Mace was received into the church by baptism and confirmation at Central Church.

The O. B. K's had a special program at 6.30 in the evening. Ina McCord and Anita May, of Independence, were guest entertainers, the former giving a reading, the latter a piano solo. Other numbers consisted of instrumental and vocal selections, as well as readings by local young people.

Elder C. Ed. Miller spoke at 7.45 in the evening, giving an illustrated lecture on "The Resurrected Christ in America." Almost two hundred heard the lecture, which was preceded by a special song service. The words were flashed on the screen, and everyone sang.

Scranton, Pennsylvania

Fine attendance has characterized recent Sunday services. On January 11 Pastor Thomas Jones preached two sermons on the Restoration, showing the distinctive features of the work committed to Joseph Smith by the angelic messenger.

District President T. J. Elliott was here January 18, giving two more splendid sermons which emphasized the necessity of pure living. That honesty of purpose and purity in living are the crying needs of our church and country is the belief of this minister.

The economic situation in this vicinity is alarming. Many of the mines are closed by the business depression. It seems to us that the question of production is solved, but the great need at present is distribution, so that none lack for warmth, clothing, food, and other necessities. God has promised abundance for all. More than ever it appears that we must learn through the stomach the things we do not learn through the heart and head.

Sees Familiar Names in "Herald"

Toll Gate, West Virginia, February 1.—Having seen a number of familiar names in the letters from the various branches of the church, I want to mention those with whom I have become acquainted and for whose services I am especially grateful.

Now and then we read of Brother and Sister Frank Minton, whom we so much loved at Parkersburg during their stay in this district. We hope that they may be sent back to us.

Also we see the name of Apostle C. F. Ellis, whom we met. How we would have enjoyed hearing his talk to the church school at Spring Branch, Independence, Missouri, on "The Value of Friends"! We have friends in other churches who are wonderfully kind to us, but none like those of the children of God.

Occasionally Brother U. W. Greene's name is printed. We remember a testimony he gave in the little humble log cabin church at Goose Creek, where we met at my first conference.

And another is Apostle Roy S. Budd. He gave a most inspiring sermon at Clarksburg. It encouraged every member who heard it.

Nor would we forget President F. M. McDowell, who challenges the youth to be brave enough to lead the way instead of going with the "gang." May all the workers be blessed and the Saints grow together in harmony and accomplishment.

FLORENCE WILLIAMS.

Kirtland, Ohio

On January 4 a fine sacramental meeting was held at the temple.

Annual business meeting has convened, and officers were elected. The new plan of the church in religious education was unanimously adopted. Officers chosen for nine months are: Pastor, John L. Cooper; secretary, Edward Davidson; treasurer, William Davidson; director of religious education, John R. Booher; director of children's division, Auvener Proper with Mary Gale assistant; supervisor of young people, Paul Booher with Beatrice Gale assistant; supervisor of adult division, Edward Davidson; and music director, Brother Wouters. The envelope system for caring for the general finances was adopted. The spirit of optimism toward the work for 1931 seems to be the ruling influence. In the young people's division Brother Paul Booher and Sister Beatrice Gale head contesting sides, and points are being given for attending church services, Sunday school, sacramental meetings, recreation, and expression.

About thirty young people and their teacher from Chagrin Falls visited the Temple one Sunday during the past month according to a prearranged program. Elder John Cooper on that Sunday preached an instructive sermon concerning the history of the church. Dinner was had in local homes, and in the afternoon the class was shown the temple, as were other visitors of the day.

Brother and Sister Milton Schniethorst are the parents of a son born January 7. He has been named after his father, James Milton.

The Reverend S. Hohanen, minister of the South Kirtland Congregational Church, delivered a profound discourse at the temple Sunday, January 25. His text was Luke 14: 24: "For I say unto you, That none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper," his theme being "The Master's Theory of Values." Brother George Neville sang a fine solo. This was a community service and was well attended by members of both congregations. Brother E. P. Smith occupied the pulpit in the evening.

Brother Ernest Wilson, who left about five weeks ago for Lynn Haven, Florida, was in town for a day last week. He came north with friends on a flying trip to points in Pennsylvania. He could not resist looking in at home, Kirtland, if only for a fleeting glance. MAE GILL.

Ottumwa, Iowa

Fourth and Washington Streets

The women's club of this branch closed a remarkable year last December. As a result of their program of activities during 1930, a sum of $742 was taken in. If their enthusiasm continues, it will not be long before the church debt is paid.

Attendance at services in January was fairly good. The midweek prayer hour has been well attended.

Mr. Allen Campbell, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., of Ottumwa, was the speaker at the church school workers' meeting in January. He gave an interesting talk which was followed by a round table discussion.

Bishop Charles Fry was the speaker the evening of January 25, bringing a fine message on "Surplus."

A number who have been sick are now improving in health.

We are happy to have with us another son of Bishop Fry, from Kirtland, Ohio.

Several adult members had a surprise party on Veta La-Pointe January 22 at Avery, Iowa, where she is teaching school.

The young people's division, under the leadership of Sister E. E. Santee, is continuing its Friday evening study classes. The last Friday evening of each month is set aside for recreation.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

Through the faithful assistance of the women, our branch debt was liquidated. We are thankful to all who made this condition possible.

A wonderful spirit was present at the opening sacramental hour of the year, and the members were encouraged to go forward. An attractive individual sacramental service for taking the emblems to the sick was donated by Sister Margaret Horne and dedicated by Bishop H. E. French.

J. E. Matthews preached a splendid sermon in the evening on "Eternal Life."

The year was only eight days old when the Women's Department met in the social room of the church for potluck dinner at noon. Twenty-three members and five visitors were present. We wish this year to learn more about our American poets. Sister Nelle Swanson gave a short talk on American poets and read, "A Psalm of Life," by Longfellow. Sister A. H. Nieman gave a review of 1930, and urged the women to take faith, hope, and charity with them during the year.

The young girls' leaders are Lucinda Madden for the Temple Builders, Leah Turvey, Orioles, and Lepha McMillin, Blue Birds.

Brother and Sister Winston Simmons brought their baby boy, Winston Churchill, jr., to be blessed January 11. J. E. Matthews and R. E. Madden officiated.

Edgar R. Kimball preached on "Christ's Salvation." In the evening District President A. E. Anderton spoke.

Church school officers' and teachers' meeting was held January 12 in the social room of the church, fourteen being present. We hope to see our school grow this year; our goal is one hundred present each Sunday.

The primary department is growing since its separation from the older people. The children are showing great interest.

The morning of January 18, "Fearful and Wonderful" was the topic of R. E. Madden. In the evening Doctor W. B. Reeves discussed "Faith in God."

Sister M. A. Horne, recently at Mount Carmel Hospital, is at home. It is hoped that she will soon be strong and well again.

"A Century of Church Development" was the theme of Bishop H. E. French the morning of January 25. C. W. Clark, pastor of First Branch, preached on "A Mind to Work," in the evening.

Fifty were present at a meeting of the Women's Department January 27 held in the social room of the church in honor of husbands of the members. H. E. French was toastmaster.

For the first time the Columbus high schools had midyear commencement exercises January 28. Two of our young girls graduated, Dorothy Jackson from North High, and Ruth Wemlinger, from South High. They are both seventeen years of age. MRS. VASSIE SHEETS.

Indianapolis, Indiana

Pratt and Chester Streets

The new year has started well for Saints in the Hoosier capital. Last year brought us many blessings for which we should be thankful. Notwithstanding trials and depressing times the Father has cared for us, and we go forward with hope, knowing that he is yet guiding his children.

The Women's Department opened the year January 1 with a dinner for the entire membership. Sister Lena Burch, supervisor, is alert to the needs of the local.

The sacramental service three days later was well attended, a good opening service for the new year and for the week of prayer. A splendid spirit prevailed throughout all the meetings of the week. Such an influence is productive of spiritual growth.

District President and Missionary J. O. Dutton was here the first part of the week and assisted.

The Sunday school is forging ahead under the leadership of Sister Alice Hartje.

January 13 was annual business meeting, and officers were elected for the year. Unity and cooperation characterized the meeting and augured well for the future of our undertakings. Little change was made in the official personnel of the branch. Elder Arthur W. Gage was the unanimous choice for pastor, Sister Rebecca Nolan, clerk. The priesthood were sustained by unanimous vote, which is the expression of a desire on the part of laymembers for mutual service.

The Sunday evening study hour is increasing in attendance and interest. The Doctrine and Covenants is being studied, Elder W. P. Creviston teacher.

Blessed through Prayers of Saints

Fort Pierce, Florida.—I have just read a short piece in the Herald which made me think of myself. Here are the words I read: "The shortest, surest way to enjoy life is this: Try to make it a habit to thank God for everything that happens to you. For it is certain that whatever calamity seems to come your way, if you get down and thank God for it, you turn it into a blessing."

I have tried to thank God for everything ever since I was just a small child, and I really do think I receive great blessings every day of my life.

Last spring my health became very poor; I lost six pounds in two weeks and became very sick. I tried two doctors, and neither could help me. I sent a letter to the Saints asking for prayers, and in July I began to gain weight. Now I weigh twenty-three pounds more than I did last June, and feel much better. I want the Saints to know that I thank them for remembering me in their prayers, and I thank God for my health, and hope soon to be able to help carry the gospel message to other people.

I do not find any Saints in Fort Pierce. If members come here, or pass through, I would be glad to see them. I live on the Okeechobee Road in front of a filling station.

I want the contributors to the Herald to know that I enjoy reading the articles, and like the whole paper better every issue I receive. I am always eager to get the next number.

MRS. W. A. STOKES.

Modesto, California

Second and G Streets

Three young men were called to the priesthood the first Sunday of December, and a splendid sacramental meeting was enjoyed. Brother A. H. Pierce, deacon, was called to officiate as a priest, and two of our boys about eighteen years of age were called, Ralph Griffin, teacher; and Arthur Phelps, deacon.

The ordination service was had January 7. At this time there also occurred the installation of officers, and the district president was here. The Saints were much encouraged by words of admonition and instruction.

The church school is being conducted under the new order and is thriving splendidly. Sister Eva Stark is the supervisor of religious education. The women are taking home economics and home making. The young people's class for evening worship is being conducted by Walter Waldren.

A successful institute was closed January 24. On the evening of the 21st a banquet was served to sixty-three persons. Then a meeting of enrollment was had when nineteen enrolled for the leadership courses, finishing after four days with eighteen. Saints of Stockton met with us. The fifteen-minute worship service each evening was restful and inspiring. The instructor and lecturer was somewhat handicapped by his helpers' not being able to attend. One was ill; the other could not attend for other reasons. Nevertheless, everyone felt well paid for the effort put forth to attend. Brother G. P. Levitt is an able teacher.

There is very little sickness here, and everyone seems to be happy in active service.

Two baby girls were blessed the latter part of January, daughters of Brother Charles and Ihah Rose, and Mr. Fred and Sister Myrtle Talbott.

Far West Stake

Baptismal Service at Trenton

Sunday, February 1, was an outstanding day in the history of the Trenton Branch. The day was ideal, and roads were fine. Saints and their friends came from far and wide to be in attendance at the all-day activities which marked the close of a series of meetings held by Elder Walter S. Woodward, one of the stake missionaries.

The day's activities opened with a preaching service at 10 o'clock, at which Elder John E. Hovenga, of Stewartsville, a member of the stake bishopric, was the speaker. An hour later found about one hundred people gathered on the banks of the Grand River about a mile southeast of Trenton. There Elder Everett Gamet, pastor of Trenton Branch, baptized four young people who had asked for baptism as a result of Brother Woodward's meetings.

Following the basket dinner the confirmation service was held. This was presided over by Elder Ward A. Hougas, stake president, from Saint Joseph. Elder Benjamin R. Constance, of Cameron, was also present and assisted in the confirmation. Brother Hougas preached following the confirmation, and Brother Woodward occupied the pulpit at night.

Brother Woodward and his wife have been in Trenton since last November and have succeeded in arousing considerable interest among the membership and nonmembers. Sister Woodward has done much work among the young people. This work came to a climax Saturday night with the presentation of the religious drama, "The Most Precious Gift." Nonmembers outnumbered the membership about three to one at this meeting. Brother Hougas preached Friday night.

The Sunday attendance was augmented by visiting Saints from Spickard, Chillicothe, Jamesport, and other near-by points.

Second Saint Joseph Church

The work at Second Saint Joseph Church has shown a steady growth for over a year.

About a year ago the men of the group decided to excavate and build a basement, which was very badly needed. As the excavating had to be done by hand the men decided to do it themselves in the evenings and spare time. This seemed to be an almost Herculean task, but by constant and consecrated effort it was accomplished, and now a new gas-heating system has been installed, a cement floor laid, and we think that in a few days the lower auditorium, as we now call it, will be ready for use.

January 1 Elder O. Salisbury was made pastor of Second Church, with Elder John Ruoff associate, succeeding Elder T. E. Hale, who has served the church for eight years.

There has been quite a revival of missionary effort among our priesthood. We have four missionary teams holding cottage meetings in the homes of various Saints and friends. Each of these meetings was arranged to run twelve weeks. The teams are T. E. Hale with R. E. Jones; Frank Gist with Robert Agee; Charles Brooner with E. M. Vaughn, supplemented by R. E. Jones; and J. L. Bear with R. E. Jones. Brother Jones is our city missionary, and he and the local men have been doing valiant service. Several have already given their names for baptism, and we are hoping for more. Our new font will soon be ready for them.

Attendance at all church services has been on the increase for some time. R. E. Jones has been serving us for Sunday evening services for several months. For morning speakers we have had Brother Hougas, stake president; Brother Ben Constance, of Cameron; T. E. Hale, F. R. Gist, George Glenz, O. Salisbury, and J. L. Bear, all of the local priesthood.

The work seems to be moving in the other groups of the city also, as Brother Coventry Archibald, pastor of Fourth Church, has recently completed a two-week series of meetings resulting in eleven baptisms to date.

Our beautiful winter weather seems to have a beneficial effect on our spiritual life. We wish to continue in the good work.

Cameron

The new year ushered in a new organization, officers, and spirit for Cameron Saints.

The annual business meeting held in December set aside some of our old forms of worship and decided to venture into something that would make greater opportunities for us. The new church school program as outlined by Brother F. M. McDowell was adopted. The business meeting resulted in the election of the following officers:

Pastor, F. L. Hinderks; associate pastor, D. W. Gamet; church school director, Clifford Constance; supervisor of adult division, Mrs. G. Scott Daniel; supervisor of young people's division, D. C. Fiddick and wife; supervisor of junior division, Mrs. D. W. Gamet. The music department was placed in charge of a music board composed of Paul T. Fiddick, Sister Ralph Livingstone, and Sister G. Scott Daniel.

Attendance and interest have already increased, and we feel sure that the new program will be the means of advancing the work in the branch.

The young people meet each Sunday evening preceding the preaching services for class study, taking up the "Ideals of Youth." Cameron is fortunate in having a splendid group of young people.

Solicitor D. W. Gamet reported sending to the bishop of the stake several hundred dollars of tithes and offerings, besides many inventories.

We have recently lost two of our faithful members, Brother J. F. Gamet and Sister Angie Dwyer.

MISCELLANEOUS

Notice of District Presidency Appointment

The resignation of Elder S. A. Dobson as president of the Portland (Oregon) District has been received and accepted, and the Presidency hereby appoint Elder D. B. Sorden to serve as president of this district, and Elder H. W. Savage to act as his associate. These recommendations are subject to the approval of the district conference. We urge the membership of the Portland District to give their loyal and united support to these brethren.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 4, 1931.

Conference Notices

Southern Ohio district spring conference will convene at First Columbus Branch, Saturday and Sunday, March 7 and 8. All branches must report through their secretaries to the district secretary, Sister L. M. Madden, East Kossuth Street, Columbus, Ohio. This is a delegate conference, and each branch is entitled to three delegates. Will each branch have its delegates present, properly certified to the district secretary. Apostle C. F. Ellis will be present, also Missionaries John R. Grice, J. G. Halb, and Bishop H. E. French. There will be a program on Friday evening, March 6, by First Columbus Branch to which all are cordially invited. We anticipate a good conference and want to definitely organize the district under the new Department of Religious Education. This is an important step in our church progress, and we ask the support of every branch.—A. E. Anderton, district president.

Our Departed Ones

AHLSTAND.—Johanna Mattson was born September 24, 1853, near Stockholm, Sweden. Came to America when she was about fifteen years old. She married Jacob Madsen, by whom she had six children. He died in 1887. In 1892 she became the wife of Edward Ahlstrand, by whom she had one child. Five children survive. Brother Ahlstrand died in 1917, and since that time she has made her home with her children, who live in Omaha and Council Bluffs. Was baptized a member of the church when sixteen years of age and remained true to her covenant, always seeking in her humble way to represent the Christ character. Died January 19, 1931, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Caroline Edwards. The funeral was held in the Omaha, Nebraska, Church, by J. F. Mintun, Blair Jensen assisting.

ROBERTS.—Iva Myrtle, daughter of Peter and Phœbe Peterson, was born September 4, 1880, at Harlan, Shelby County, Iowa. She died at the home of her daughter in Independence, Missouri, January 17, 1931, after an illness of several months, during which she exhibited remarkable patience and resignation to the divine will. November 23, 1904, she married J. A. Roberts, and to them one daughter was born. Was baptized a member of the church by I. N. White May 4, 1890, at Stewartville, DeKalb County, Missouri. Left to mourn are her daughter, Mrs. Pauline Barbour, Independence; two sisters, Mrs. Lois Stevenson, Independence; Mrs. Ardella B. Cox, Kansas City, Kansas; five brothers, John W., Bay City, Michigan; Frank, Saint Joseph, Missouri; Bert E., Independence; Fred A., Bristol, Tennessee; and Edmund O., Bagnell, Missouri; besides many other relatives and friends. The funeral was held from the home January 19, W. B. Paul in charge, sermon by J. M. Terry. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

GOODMAN.—Margaret J. Dunlap was born May 3, 1873, in Antrim County, Michigan, the daughter of William and Annabelle Dunlap. With her parents she moved at seven years of age to East Jordan, Michigan. March 16, 1898, she married Herman A. Goodman, of East Jordan, assuming the task of being a real mother to her husband's three motherless children. She was baptized a member of the church October 25, 1908, at Bellaire, Michigan, by L. Dudley, and was a devoted member of the church. She was a member of the East Jordan Branch and for twenty-two years served as treasurer. For some time she suffered from ill health. Passed away at the Lockwood Hospital in Petoskey, December 23, 1930. Left to mourn are her husband, one daughter, Mrs. Hazel Dewey, Bellaire; two sons, Clyde Goodman, of Grosse Point, Michigan, and Lionel Goodman, of Forest Park, Illinois; two sisters, Mrs. James Murray, East Jordan, and Mrs. F. C. Smith, of Independence, Missouri; three brothers: William, George, and Frank, all of Boyne City, besides a host of friends. The funeral was held December 26 from the Saints' church, Allen Schreur, of Gaylord, in charge, assisted by Arthur Starks, of Gaylord. Interment was in Sunset Hill.

WHERRY.—Emily Johnson was born at Ann Arbor, Michigan, November 11, 1846. Died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Alvin Guild, on the morning of January 7, 1931. She married David Wherry in 1866, who preceded her in death. To them were born ten children, six living at the time of her death. She united with the church in August, 1912, and was loved by all who knew her. Left to mourn are five daughters, one son, one brother, one step-sister, fifteen grandchildren, and nine great-grandchildren. The funeral service was held in the Saints' Church, Belding, Michigan. Sermon by Elder W. E. Aelick. Interment was in River Ridge Cemetery.

HOAGUE.—Abbie Murwin was born in Fulton, Rock County, Wisconsin, July 13, 1854. Departed this life January 7, 1931. She married Warren L. Hoague May 23, 1874, and ten children were born to them, two dying in infancy. Those who survive are Mrs. John McGrave, Baxter, Iowa; Bert L. Hoague, Milltown, South Dakota; James M. Hoague, Janesville, Wisconsin; Charles W. Hoague, Beloit, Wisconsin; Louis D. Hoague, Brookfield, Illinois; Mrs. D. D. McDuffie, Augusta, Montana; Mrs. E. K. Peck, Portage; Frank L. Hoague, Melrose Park, Illinois; ten grandchildren, and two brothers. The funeral was held from the Kimball-Scott and Nelson's funeral home, Amos Berve, of Madison, officiating. She was baptized into the church in September, 1922, at a reunion in Madison, by Patriarch W. A. McDowell, having been converted to the gospel through the Ensign sent to her by her sister-in-law, Sister Charles Hoague, of Evansville, and as the result of a marvelous spiritual experience. Her life was a living testimony of the gospel. Her husband was baptized in 1926 and preceded her in death February 16, 1927. They spent most of their life on a farm near Fulton; moved to Janesville, Wisconsin, in 1911.

DANIELS.—Irene, daughter of Leon and Mary Condit, was born September 3, 1902, at Malta, Idaho. She married T. C. Daniels June 3, 1922, and five children were born to them. One preceded her in death. Was baptized a member of the church February 15, 1920. She passed away December 28, 1930, in a hospital at American Falls, Idaho. Left to mourn are her husband, four children, Jean, Jack, Virgie, and Robert, her father, five brothers, one sister, her grandmother, Sister M. C. Condit, and many other relatives. The funeral was conducted at the Saints' church at Rupert, Idaho, January 2, 1931, the sermon by W. A. Connell. Interment was in the Burley Cemetery.

HANAWALT.—Magdalena Reich was born in Germany October 20, 1869. She came to the United States with her parents when but a young girl and settled in Saint Joseph, Missouri. There she grew to womanhood and married July 20, 1892, William Hanawalt. Seven years later they moved to Denver, Colorado. She died at her home on Laporte Avenue, Fort Collins, Colorado, January 9, 1931, after a long illness. For forty years she was a member of the church, being baptized by Mark H. Forscutt. The funeral was held at Balmer's Mortuary, J. R. Sutton, of Genoa, Colorado, officiating. Interment was in Grandview Cemetery. Surviving are her husband and five children: Forrest, Elmer C. Hanawalt, Miss Marie Hanawalt, Mrs. Terrel Moore, all of Fort Collins; Donald Hanawalt, of Kingman, Arizona; one brother, three sisters, and four grandchildren.

The Signs of the Times. II—Famine and Pestilence

When the Master was questioned concerning the signs of his coming and the end of the world, he said, "There shall be famines and pestilences." (Matthew 24: 7.) We had come to believe that medical science was able to protect the world against pestilences. This belief was shaken only a few years ago when the epidemic of the flu swept around the globe. The advice given was, "Put the patient to bed at once and send for the doctor immediately, but there is little that he can do when he comes." It is true that today we know more about the nature of the flu, but it is equally true that out of the unknown there may again come pestilences quite beyond our power to combat.

There have been recurrent famines during the past century in China, India, and other parts of the world that have swept away many people. In America we had come to think ourselves safe from such an infliction. One of our men a year ago, speaking upon the subject of the Word of Wisdom and the statement that meat might be used during a "time of famine," said that a famine had never been known in America.

The long-continued drouth of 1930 opened our eyes to the fact that even in a "land of plenty" famine can be brought to us in a very short period of time. This winter for the first time in our history we have seen farmers with weapons coming to town seeking foodstuffs for their starving families. The Red Cross in a recent bulletin reports conditions of famine affecting thousands of families in Missouri, Texas, Tennessee, Oklahoma, and Illinois. This splendid institution is asking for contributions amounting to ten million dollars with which to combat these conditions. Under date of January 29, the Red Cross reported 701,609 persons being fed by them and the number constantly increasing.

Thus even in a land of plenty the thing that we thought impossible has come upon us. Famine, however, may not be the result alone of a failure on the part of nature to provide; unemployment has brought want to the homes of thousands of people; and we are reminded of the statement of Lloyd George some years ago, "You can not blame poverty upon Providence." In fact, in many instances this very condition of famine seems to be the result of overproduction. There are millions of bushels of wheat held in reserve by the Government or by private individuals because there is no market. There is a great surplus of cotton, and we are told that there has been an overproduction in sugar of one and three fourths million tons. Thus the offense of the land seems to be that she has produced so liberally that her children must starve and freeze. There is so much wheat that many must go hungry. There is so much cotton that many must go without clothing. There is so much coal and oil that many must suffer cold.

The situation is not, then, alone the result of a drouth or a visitation of disaster; its roots go deeper even than we comprehend into our present economic system. One phase of the situation is the speed with which machines have superseded human labor. Under our system of mass production, machines are constantly being installed that may be operated by one or two men and will do the work formerly done by twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, or more employees. Thus those who own and control the machinery of production are enabled to dispense with human labor. Men are thrown out of employment, and we discover as we observe, that many of them have been living very close to the verge of want. The great masses of laboring people have been only a few weeks ahead of hunger. We have come to live almost literally from hand to mouth. In the wake of unemployment there comes naturally an inability to buy the products of the machines and so speedily the owners who had thought to profit by the installation of machinery find themselves without a market, and they, too, come to grief—though probably the owner of the machines does not actually come to hunger as does the man who was discharged when the machine was installed. The problem is worldwide. It has brought confusion and fear into many nations. It challenges a most devoted study by the keenest minds; but we are forced to believe that there is no solution excepting as it shall be found in the divine plan.

Some hope to revise and reform the present economic system so that it will meet human needs. Others would promote red revolution, overthrow the old economic order, all existing governments, and experiment with a new order, as was done in Russia. Either horn of the dilemma is formidable. It is apparent, however, that while we have succeeded brilliantly in developing the machinery of production, we have failed miserably when it comes to the question of safe and equitable distribution; and thus economic factors may be largely to blame for producing just the condition the Master had in mind when he said, "There shall be famine and pestilence."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Church Decorum—Our Social Responsibility

Social responsibility is a term which has come into prominence in a modern age. Many people glibly refer to it, but few understand its significance, and fewer still take the trouble to consider its place in their own lives. Nevertheless the principle was known to the ancients, and wherever a people have grown it has been because the principle was recognized.

Here let us consider only a small part of our social responsibility, the matter of teaching church decorum and reverence to our children. It goes without argument that the best way to teach our children reverence, is to give the example of reverence by our conduct.

Paul wrote to the Hebrew saints: "Let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear." It is quite possible that he had in mind the Mosaic instruction: "Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord," and its interpretation and application to the life of his time. Paul was a student of human nature. He watched people as they did things, saw their mistakes, and was fearless and persistent in advising improvements.

Let us, too, look about us. Let us go to church next Sunday and forget for the moment the whisperings and wiggings of the children before us, and watch the older people. The things we see and hear among officers, musicians, and senior students will cause childish irreverences to fade into the background. On a recent Sunday morning I sat through the worship services of a church school session. The congregation was large, there being almost two hundred children seated in the central part of the auditorium and an equal number of adults in the gallery and choir loft. It was Lincoln Day, and while the opening talk centered about that world hero and the flags on the rostrum, and the congregation sang "God Bless Our Native Land," and the opening prayer was voiced, two gray-haired sisters, seated in a class in the choir loft, carried on an animated conversation in whispers. The worship service lasted fifteen minutes; so did the conversation. At least half the children not only saw but heard these two grandmothers! Teaching reverence?

Latter-day revelation is specific in the matter of training our children to be reverent in the house of God. We are commanded to bring them up "in light and truth," teaching them by precept and example. "Establish a house," we are commanded, "even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God." Indeed, it is very apparent that we adults need to heed instruction in order that our children may be "taught more perfectly."

Let every one of us—officers, teachers, parents, grandparents, and neighbors—look more to matters of decorum in the service of the Lord. This is one phase of our social responsibility. L. B. M.

Biography

Arthur Leverton

In this week's Herald begins the autobiography of Arthur Leverton, to be presented in installments. While he was living, Brother Leverton bore a strong testimony of the truth of the gospel message. He lived valiantly, and to his strong conviction, his tireless efforts, and his steady sacrifices, many owe their membership in the church today. Now that he has gone, his voice will be heard no more in testimony among his friends of this world. They, however, are still encouraged by his triumphant Christian example.

Before he passed on, he dictated the story of his life to two young women, who prepared it for publication. We owe a debt of gratitude to the two sisters, Nellie Andrew and Illa Brown, for the service they have rendered in preserving this record.

There are others who have been strong and faithful in the work of the Reorganization. In not many years many more of them will have followed their contemporaries to the "other side." Some of them, unfortunately, will carry the record of their lives with them for the lack of biographers.

Here is an opportunity for those who are interested to perform an important service. Young friends and relatives who have been trained to write can preserve the stories of their lives. In the lives of these men will be found the early history of the Reorganization. It is suggested that old letters are very important as sources of information. They should be included, or exact copies of them, with the manuscript.

These manuscripts can not all be used at once. Of some of them, only selected parts can be used. The discretion of choice must remain with the editors. The Herald Editors would be pleased to receive such manuscripts.

Hints for Speakers and Writers

"DON'T STRETCH YOUR MATERIAL TOO FAR"

By L. L.

This "Hint" applies more generally to speakers, for the simple reason that there are more speakers than writers. But the Editors would be pleased to have writers take notice, too.

All of us have heard speakers who had in hand excellent material for a good fifteen- or twenty-minute talk, but who insisted on stretching it over a forty-five-minute discussion, and sometimes even an hour. We like to hear a good sermon of a forty-five-minute or an hour's length; but no congregation likes mere padding. Those who complain that audiences are impatient with long sermons had better look more carefully to see if the audiences are not impatient with poverty of ideas. If the sermon is really good, an audience will sit patiently an hour without moving or making a noise.

A neighbor of mine once had a pup that was very pretty. One Saturday afternoon at about one-thirty I looked through the window and saw the pup playing with a rag doll; the sight was very amusing, and I watched him for some minutes. His zeal did not flag, nor did he tire. But when I looked out at three o'clock and saw him still worrying the doll, I felt indifferent. The doll had by this time lost a leg and a part of its insides. At four o'clock the doll was completely dismembered and scattered all over the yard, and I felt annoyed at even so pretty a pup. Speakers and writers sometimes worry their theme to pieces and wear their subject out by working on them too long.

If you have material for a fifteen-minute talk, stop at the end of fifteen minutes. If you talk longer, the audience will dislike both you and your theme; and the only thing they will remember is that you talked too long.

Do not be lazy in preparation. Bring more material to your task than you can possibly use, and if you have prepared reverently and faithfully, the spirit of inspiration will direct you what to use and what to leave out when you are on your feet, facing your audience. If you are properly filled by study, and by the prayer that you should always make in behalf of the need of the people, the Lord will overlook your own weakness and unworthiness in order to bless your needy hearers, provided you are sufficiently humble and earnest.

It makes little difference whether you are at the pulpit or at the writing desk. The same rule applies. Give your best and give richly, but do not adulterate your inspiration and thought with mere padding of words.

A Note on Christian Communism

The following comment on the doctrine of stewardship, uttered by a member of another faith, has been sent to us by the kindness of Brother S. B. Mansell. The excerpt of the article is from The Daily Reporter, of Columbus, Ohio.

Declaration that armed conflict between capitalism and Russian Communism is inevitable unless one side or the other is Christianized was made by Doctor Ralph S. Cushman of Rochester, New York, in an address prepared for delivery before the Ohio Pastors' Convention here today.

Asserting the world is not big enough for the contrasting economic orders, Doctor Cushman said both were opposed to the Christian point of view by which "property simply must be stripped off as a matter of absolute ownership and personal indulgence and put to use for humanity and God."

"My conviction," the speaker said, "is that the only hope of avoiding this terrible conflict is found in a principle of property which I wish to call Christian Communism. . . . This principle . . . is nothing more or less than the application of Jesus' law of love and brotherhood to prosperity and income."

Christian Communism, Doctor Cushman continued, "was a voluntary recognition of the idea of Christian stewardship. There was nothing compulsory about it. The present Russian experiment is a different thing. Not only is it professedly godless, but is thoroughly despotic.

"But right here we ought to recognize a vital resemblance between Christian Communism . . . and one phase of Bolshevism. Both have a program of world reconstruction. The Russian leaders evidently are sincere when they declare they are out to save society from the evils of an unjust and greedy capitalistic order. In other words they are out to establish by force, or by any other means, the kingdom of righteousness and justice on earth. Was not this one of the things Jesus came to do, although by an entirely different method? . . ."

Appreciation and Criticism

Readers have generously responded to the request for criticisms of the materials in various departments of the Herald. We appreciate the criticisms and are much encouraged by the commendations. Both classes of comment point the way for us to do more to meet the needs and desires of our readers. If there is anything that we can do to help the work of the church in a local way, or to help isolated families, we shall be glad to hear what it is. Let our readers feel free to write to us. We may even become brave enough to publish selections from the letters!

What Is the Remedy?

By John W. Rushton

To prescribe effectively, the doctor must know the symptoms and be able to interpret them. Diagnosis must precede treatment.

That there is much radically wrong with humanity today everybody is agreed. A crisis more or less cataclysmic is believed by our publicists to be not remote. In politics, economics, social and moral life, as well as in the church there is uncertainty, disorder, and dismay. Truly, the "wisdom of the wise seems to be folly"; and "men's hearts are failing because of fear." Education was never more easily acquired than today; never was so vast a sum of money spent in the training of youth for life as now; machines intricate and powerful, with uncanny skill produce in miraculous variety overwhelming quantities of things to meet every conceivable need; socially, the luxuries catering to every form of self-indulgence have removed the strain of living except that which is required to gratify a vitiated taste and a culture whose chief characteristic is ennui; the churches are most impressive for the very things which Christ himself spurned and regarded as detrimental to a spiritual experience: massive and elaborate architecture, ornate ritualism, artistic equipment, eloquent pulpites whose desire to entertain seems to be stronger than the passion "to convict the world of sin and of judgment to come." Just as humanity in social and industrial life seems to be the victim of a machine age, so religiously we have become more attracted to the "plant" and the "equipment" than we have to the "spirit and the truth" without which one's worship of God is not that which he desires.

Optimism and Deception

Truly the apostolic warning was never better fitted as a description of prevailing ills than now. What is heart failure a symptom of? It is a serious warning of strain, and unless there is obtained immediate relaxation, a slackening of the tension, there will be inevitable break and possibly death. The journalistic soothsayers who are attempting to drive men's thinking into optimistic tracks by refusing the recognition of facts which are tragic in their actuality and import is but the cacophony of impudent fraudulence. To the multitude sick and dizzy because of the reality of failure and poverty, it is the refinement of cruelty to refuse to admit the facts and sing the siren song of the "happy days." Like Banquo's ghost the stark facts of reality can not be downed by the journalistic persiflage. Truth whether pleasant or otherwise will crowd to the front and insist on being noticed.

Symptoms of Disease

Here are some of the facts which are symptomatic and will help us in an effort to discover what is wrong: Fifteen million unemployed, which represents four others in the family group, dependents upon these for sustenance and shelter. Even in America, the land of easy wealth and the shrine of the god "Success," it is estimated that there are anywhere from 2,500,000 to 9,000,000 out of work all the time or part of the time, and recently our government has allocated $1,000,000,000 for the immediate relief of the sufferers in the large cities. Because of fear the assets of our Nation as with France, Argentine, and other countries are frozen. Money, like the blood, is beneficial only when in healthy circulation; stagnant, it is the source of deadly disease. The supplies vastly outrun the consumption. The surplus backs up and fills the arteries with a back-wash which means expense and waste.

In politics, Hitler, Mussolini, Stanlin, and other demagogues are hurling defiance at all and sundry; and with impish-like glee are playing with high explosives, and their coruscating oratory might easily cause a detonation which will shake the world. Expert thinkers who read the signs of the times are fearful that the increased armaments which exceed those of 1913 portend another deluge of blood, fire, and destruction. H. G. Wells has said that we are nearer to such an outbreak than we are to the year nineteen twenty-five.

Think of our own social life: Mischief-makers who largely through accident have become the voices of the American consciousness fill the avenues of publicity with their venomous attacks upon law, ministers, governments, and administrations, and encourage ill feeling among the nations and arouse contempt for law and order at home. In our educational centers, teachers do not scruple to use their high office and their influence as scholars deliberately to poison the fountain of truth to gain the gifts of commerce and finance, regardless of honor and principle, exploiting the public needs to their own advantage. Then, the attitude of the students, without speaking of anything but scholarship, according to a late and popular indictment, is exceedingly ominous in view of the fact that our present civilization is to be placed in the hands of the generation now pressing so hard upon the heels of the present; three out of every four university students will fail to gain their diplomas, and the consensus of opinion by the men who know the college and university youth is that there is a lack of intelligence and of the will to work and discipline themselves. Of what use is the exposure to university opportunities and the varied curricula if there is not the cultivation of those qualities which Viscount Bryce said are absolutely essential to the welfare of the democracy: "intelligence, conscience, and a sense of responsibility on the part of the governors towards those whom they govern"? The fact that the I. Q. tests show that the average intelligence of the present generation is that of about a fourteen-year-old child, and that conscience is as rare a thing as a dinosaur's egg, and that graft is so rampant in our public life that it is no longer a scandal; surely there is a need for a prophetic voice and some one who with moral and spiritual purgatives can cleanse humanity of its diseases.

Indications of Decline

One of the most significant aspects of our present situation is the use or misuse of leisure time and the margin of possessions which are "ours." What we do as employees of another who pays us wages or salary for time and energy we devote to him or his interests does not register our real worth as what we do with the time and with the money we can spend in our own pursuits. What are we doing with that margin of time after we leave the factory or the office or the home? What kind of amusements or sports do we spend our money on? Answering these questions makes the real test of a civilization. Lecky, in his History of European Morals, points out that the two chief causes of the decline of the Roman Empire were immorality regarding sex, and the bestializing of sport. Debauchery and the gladiatorial combats were the ruin of the empire. It is proverbial that "Where women are honored, the gods are complacent; where women are dishonored, it is useless to pray." Can we congratulate ourselves on any improvement in the relations between men and women today? Are our women seeking honor and chivalry among men? Is the Madonna now the standard of virtues to modern women? Have they not in the last decade at least given notice of a welcome to things which once were hated, and the cold shoulder to those things which once were esteemed? Can the present hope to escape the condemnation which came upon the past if we seek to outdo anything of which the past has record in these turgid experiences?

Let history inspire prophetic utterances!

Ancient Ideal and Modern Fault

What of our "play": Classic Greece revered the human body for its strength and beauty. Every four years the winner of the Olympic games was crowned with an olive wreath and was esteemed as the most important person of the state. The ideal citizen was an artist, athlete, soldier, statesman, and philosopher, of whom Pindar wrote poetry, and to whom Myron dedicated his sculpture. Today—how different this field of human activity! In America we are spending over twenty billions of dollars for the sports and amusements of the people in which the great mass do not take part themselves but merely as spectators to watch the "play" of others for commercialization. We raise indignant protest against the killing of cattle in the Spanish arenas and express disgust at the stories of the Roman gladiatorial shows, yet we kill 25,000 people a year with our automobiles and maim over 600,000. For a boxing match between two professional bruisers, 135,000 spectators paid over two millions of dollars. Each year 20,000,000 pay to see the baseball matches between the teams of the two major leagues; and over two millions of dollars are paid to the players. Read Stuart Chase's article on play in Whither Mankind? and learn of the demoralization of the realm of sport through brutality and commercialization. This is not the worst feature. The passion for victory has robbed all games practically of the joy and zest of play. No matter what may be the price to be paid—win!—win at all costs! The purpose of play and recreation should be relaxation, health, and the development of a fine spirit of justice through fair play. When we make victory more than the game, when, though not using the implements of the gladiators, we have their spirit, how can we escape the consequences as summarized by Lecky? "It is an essential characteristic of a refined and cultivated taste to be shocked and offended at the spectacle of bloodshed; . . . The gladiatorial games destroyed all sense of disgust and therefore all refinement of taste, and they rendered the permanent triumph of the drama impossible."

The Basic Cause

May we not say in summation that our chief trouble seems to be that we have lowered our standard of values? Saint Paul places the vital difference between the Christian and non-Christian precisely here—"the fruits of the Spirit" in contrast with the "works of the flesh"—and analyzes the characteristics of each. His warning is that the manufacturers of the "fleshly works" can not enter the kingdom.

In speaking of the success of Christianity in the early days, Lecky says: "One great cause of its success was that it produced more heroic actions and formed more upright men than any other creed"—men heroic in right. Among the great changes which Christ brought about in human experiences, the most important was the transmutation of values. He disclosed the value of the human soul and put that above all else. In one of the Psalms (143) there occurs this significant phrase, "I lift up my soul to Thee." The real value of life is determined by what we aspire to rather than by what we have achieved. What is the real and essential self (that within us which is and proves that it is by what it does) striving for? What are the ideals we lift ourselves up to?

We need to recover our lost ideals. The ideals of spirit—The Vision Splendid. To have faith which is "confidence in what we dare to hope for and the conviction of the reality of things we do not see," Fosdick describes it as "Vision plus valor." This is absolutely essential. We need reverence for the holy. We have degenerated through consorting with the inferior until we can be and are contemptuous in the presence of "the altogether Lovely." Whenever we lose our reverence for that which is consciously higher than ourselves, any sin is possible! Carlyle asks: "Does not every true man feel that he himself is made higher by doing reverence to what is really above him?" Above all we need to discipline ourselves in high willing." No matter how skilled, clever, or intellectual and artistic we may be—where there is no will there is no character.

To Restore a Sense of Values

We are disposed to place the responsibilities we should carry individually upon others, or some institutions or some mechanical appliances. After all, it is our inner sense of values and the responses we make to them that determine heaven or hell for us and demonstrate our reality. Neither priest nor sacrament can save that which is not worth saving. The whole Christian philosophy is in Saint Peter's pentecostal challenge: "Save yourselves from this untoward generation." The Revised Version of the New Testament gives this interpretation of a familiar scripture: "If any man wills to do my will, he shall know," etc.

We need more than all else to cultivate self-discipline. The mass can not be better than the individuals composing it; in human society the majority is below the individual. The help of the church must be found in its witnessing for Christ, and revealing his will, and achieving his purpose. There can be no other proof of church identity that will win but the functional. Perhaps one of the clear calls to the church today which is apropos is that given by Frederic Dewhurst in his The Investment of Truth, which I quote through the courtesy of a friend:

Let us then not confound things that are often easily confounded. Let us keep a clear and steady vision as we look out on life. Let us remember that the fate of the church as one organized expression of religion does not decide the fate of the religious spirit itself. The church might totally disappear and religion still be alive. Indeed, some aspects and functions of the church are visibly disappearing. It must lose its officialism. It must surrender its prerogative of regulation and control. It must abandon its monopoly of any special territory of life. It must do all of this in order that it may remain as a center of inspiration and inward leadership. It must die to itself in order that it may live. For my own part I have no fear that the church will disappear, nor that its higher and vital function will perish. But it will be transformed. It is being transformed before our eyes. And the day of its transformation will be the day of its victory. When it comes clothed with no commission except the commission to inspire, to illumine, to clarify the field of life, and to help coordinate its activities and spheres of service, then it will speak its most commanding and convincing message.

No matter which way we turn for guidance and help in our trouble, there seems to be but one remedy for our ills: those who would look to science as the saving grace must be discouraged when so famous a scientist as Einstein tells us that science can not supply morality but merely facts. It is our use of facts which reveals our morality. His warning is a solemn condemnation of our present attitude:

Never forget that the fruits of our work are not final in themselves. Production is to ennoble and make our lives easier, to give to our lives a touch of beauty and refinement. Never should we allow ourselves to be degraded into mere slaves of the thing we call production.

Another voice of authority today has reminded us that:

Science itself can not defend us against this danger which it has raised (the increase of knowledge of power and its use). To do this we must greatly strengthen these stabilizing forces like an adequate art and literature, and a sound religion, a sane and moral political philosophy, the only agencies which have yet been found to make consistently for social justice and for life's larger and least perturbable satisfaction.—Christian Ganss.

One of the most commanding prophets of the Victorian era, John Ruskin, said: "Nobleness of life depends upon consistency, clearness of purpose, and quiet and ceaseless energy."

A most serious statement is that of Momerie: "God can create innocent beings, but he can not create a perfect character: that is the result of man's own choices."

We need more than all else besides to accept the gospel of repentance and turn away from the things which degrade and make our response to that which is above.

Social Aspects of the Message of Jesus

PART THREE

By A. B. Phillips

11. The Social Example of Jesus

If Jesus had only preached his philosophy of life, it is probable that no one today would know that he ever existed. It was the power of his example that made his precepts immortal. His sermons in the synagogues, his parables to the multitude, and his precepts to his disciples, were but verbal expressions of the principles that ruled his life among men. Of worldly goods he had none, yet no one ever gave so much for humanity as he gave. To heal the sick, comfort the afflicted, pardon the sinner, and cheer the downcast, were but incidents in his strenuous life, which was constantly active in the service of God and man. To the scribe who offered to follow him, he frankly explained the hardships which he endured, by saying:

The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.—Matthew 8: 20.

The completeness with which he gave himself for others will always remain the marvel and supreme inspiration of the noblest men of earth. The spirit and nature of his deeds are summed up in the simple words of Peter when he declares:

God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power, who went about doing good.—Acts 10: 38.

With unswerving loyalty to his mission, Jesus rejected the illusions created by the pomp and show of the world, and gave to society an undying example of humility when the supreme heir of heaven and earth made his kingly procession into Jerusalem riding meekly upon the humble ass. The astonished prophet to whom God had foreshown this event could do no less than exclaim:

Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy king cometh unto thee; he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, even upon a colt the foal of an ass.—Zechariah 9: 9, American Revised Version.

This act of meekness arose from no chance impulse, but was the true expression of the great Teacher's heart. The deceptive allurements of worldly pride and false ambitions had no value to him; and when his disciples strove for supremacy and place of honor, Jesus gave them a new concept of greatness by reminding them that the Son of God was among them as one that serveth. To this was added a lesson in humility never to be forgotten, when he set a child in their midst, and said:

Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 18: 3, 4. (See Mark 9: 33-37.)

The unselfish deeds of the Savior were always without show, but left no room for doubt. It was evidence of his Messiahship to John that he preached the gospel to the poor. He amazed his enemy, the high priest's servant, by healing his wounded ear. When he was made prisoner, his thought was for his disciples, and he said, "Let these go their way." The things he taught were made convincing by the life he lived. Appearances were only baubles, but good deeds were priceless jewels. His unanswerable criticism to doubters was: Though ye believe not me, believe the works."

12. Diligence in Labor for Humanity

The disciples of the Master were directed to sow the seed of the kingdom with a liberal hand and with diligence. They were admonished: "Freely ye have received, freely give." The magnitude of the work before them gave him so much concern that he sought to impress its importance upon them by comparing it to the ripening harvest field, admonishing them:

Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest. And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together.—John 4: 35, 36.

To socialize the world in accordance with the principles of the kingdom of heaven would not only require extensive time and continued faithfulness, but there would be constant and growing need for an increased number of laborers. Therefore Jesus declared:

The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest.—Luke 10: 2.

It was but natural that his followers should desire to know when the great work before them would be completed, and the coming kingdom be established upon the earth. But Jesus informed them that this was unknown even to himself, for the time was in the hands of God. However, lest they should become careless and disregard the work intrusted to them, he cautioned them:

It is like a man living abroad who has left his house, and given the management to his servants—to each one his special duty—and has ordered the porter to keep awake.—Mark 13: 34, Weymouth Version.

This great trust which is given to man for the good of humanity is also a means of determining whether or not he shall be worthy to receive for himself the priceless gift of eternal life in the heavenly kingdom, for this gift shall never be taken away from those who receive it. In the presence of the Pharisees Jesus gave warning of the test to be applied to the deeds of life, and declared:

If therefore you have not proved yourselves faithful in dealing with the wealth that is tainted with fraud, who will intrust to you the true good? And if you have not been faithful in dealing with that which is not your own, who will give you that which is your own?—Luke 16: 11, 12, Weymouth Version.

Hot Drinks

Why the Term "Hot Drinks"?

The argument is often used: If the Lord meant tea and coffee, why did he not say tea and coffee, and place the matter forever at rest? It is unfortunate, perhaps, but no more unfortunate than the usual way in which God reveals himself to men. I have often wondered why God reveals himself in the form of dreams and visions, parables, symbols, etc. Why could he not tell the straight narrative so that there would be no chance whatever to mistake his meaning? There must be a reason for it, and I sometimes think that God in his mercy has left a loophole through which the recalcitrant might squirm, so that his condemnation might not be so great as it would have been had the plain facts been revealed. But no matter how plain the words may have been given, there would be those who would have doubted anyway. I preached a sermon upon one occasion in which I thought I enjoyed a wonderful degree of the Spirit in handling my subject. At the close I met one of the elders in the aisle, and he began to criticize my position. I told him that I had enjoyed a wonderful degree of the Spirit in my presentation of the subject, and I took it as an evidence that God approved of my position. He scornfully replied that if I had enjoyed the Spirit I would have made him and the whole congregation see it my way. The fact that I had not converted all of them to my way of thinking was evidence to him that I had not had the Spirit. I replied that I read in the Scriptures that the prophets of old had written and spoken as the Spirit had moved them, and yet they had failed in making the world see alike on spiritual things. If they had failed, why should I not fail, even if I did enjoy the Spirit?

I have discovered that God speaks to men through his Spirit, giving the thought, and leaves his servants to clothe the thought in their own words. The words used in those days, when the Word of Wisdom was given, to designate tea and coffee were "hot drinks," and the prophet used those words to convey his meaning. And that it was generally understood as tea and coffee, subsequent history confirms.

Why I Believe Tea and Coffee Alone Are Meant

At the time the Word of Wisdom was given, these beverages alone were used as common drinks, except those coming under the head of strong drinks. Since then other drinks have been invented as common beverages, but these two alone have come under the ban of the doctors as being injurious to the human system, affecting the heart especially, until a "coffee heart," a "whisky heart," are common terms to denote the effect of these two beverages, one denoted as "hot drinks" and the other as "strong drinks" in the Word of Wisdom. I conclude from this that it is not the temperature that is especially injurious, but the intrinsic evil in the beverages themselves. Some years ago the Philadelphia Ledger published an article entitled "Coffee Worse Than Alcohol." In part it reads:

It would shock a teetotaler to tell him that coffee drinking is more injurious to the human system than whisky drinking; yet that is practically what Doctor Oliver P. Rex, medical director of the Penn Mutual Insurance Company, says. The medical gentlemen who guard the interests of the insurance companies have done much to teach the present generation how to live. Having the best opportunities of studying physiological problems, they are able to draw accurate general conclusions from the great number of individual cases which come under their observation as medical examiners.

The article then goes on to describe the process through which injury to the human body is produced by the use of different kinds of stimulants. A heart beat consists of two sounds, one long and one short. In the first, blood is filling the relaxed heart; in the second the heart contracts, with a corkscrew motion, and violently expels the blood through the arteries. It is essential to a healthy circulation that the first movement should be completed and the heart filled before the second is begun. Strong stimulants disturb this regular action, shortening the length of the long beat, and a long continuance in their use may make the derangement permanent. The Literary Digest publishes another article on the question, a portion of which reads:

We have quoted several extracts recently illustrating the conclusion that many medical men are fast reaching regarding tea and coffee, which is well expressed by Modern Medicine when it asserts that tea and coffee are medicines, not foods, and, if used at all, should be used as drugs in definite and carefully prescribed doses and not as common beverages.

The article then goes on becoming a symposium on the question, numerous doctors giving their conclusions on the subject, forever putting at rest the matter of the effects of tea and coffee on the human system. One doctor expressed the belief that iced tea is more deleterious than hot or warm tea, thus disposing of the idea that the temperature is the only harmful feature of those beverages.

Just a little common sense applied to the consideration of the term might dispel some illusions held in regard to it. Here is the sentence:

"And again, hot drinks are not for the body or the belly."

When speaking of tobacco and strong drinks, the Lord very plainly says that while they are not good for man taken internally, there are uses for which they are recommended. Tobacco may be used for "all sick cattle," and strong drink is for the "washing of your bodies"; but when speaking of hot drinks, they are not recommended for anything, but are good for neither the inside nor outside of the body. We can not apply the term to hot water, for we know that hot water is good for the body, and that no bathroom is complete without its hot-water faucet; and water reasonably hot is a common application to the body to alleviate pain.

I think that a very good indication of how the medical fraternity regards the Word of Wisdom is illustrated by an incident that happened when I was attending the reunion at Portland, Oregon, about eight years ago. We had a health day, and Brother Marcus Cook, who had charge of the reunion, went to the health department and asked that they send a physician to talk to the Saints at the eleven o'clock service on that day. I do not recall the name of the man whom they sent, but I was informed by those who knew that he was one of the finest physicians of the city. During his talk he invited questions, and some one said to him, "How about tea and coffee, doctor?" The doctor smiled and said:

Oh, I know you people, and I know your Word of Wisdom, too, and I want to say to you that if this world would comply with that word it would be infinitely better off than it is today.

He did not rebuke the person for applying the term hot drinks to tea and coffee, but took it for granted that that was the correct interpretation of the term. But why quibble? All acknowledge that tea and coffee are included in the term, whatever else may be, and if they are, why not discard them?

(To be concluded)

It is said of Alexander V, who was born a beggar, that he was "born mud, but died marble." It is no disgrace to be "born mud," but with those qualities for self-development you possess, it is a terrible disgrace to stay mud.

The Story of My Life

By Arthur Leverton

(As told to Nellie Andrew and Illa Brown)

I was born on the 7th day of September, 1844, at Colingham, Nottinghamshire, England. My parents' names were Richard and Elizabeth Leverton; my mother's maiden name was Cragg, but of the past history of my ancestors I know very little, so will not attempt to say anything about it.

My parents emigrated with their family (which consisted of one girl and myself) from England to this country in the year 1850, leaving Liverpool October 11, and landing in New York on the 19th of November. From there we came by canal and steamboat to Toronto, where my father left his family for two weeks to go and search for work, as his means had become exhausted. After securing work, my father returned and took us to Hamilton. Very shortly after arriving there, my sister was taken sick with the measles, and in a few days she died, being then about eighteen months old. I shall never forget the funeral, although only a trifle over six years old. Oh! how lonesome; my father was the only pallbearer, and my mother and myself constituted the entire funeral procession. We were truly strangers in a strange land. A few days after this sad event, my father procured work on the Great Western Railway, as the work of constructing that road had just begun.

He remained at that work only a short time, as a gentleman employed my father and mother to conduct a boarding house for him. We therefore moved from Hamilton to Copetown, where my parents took charge of the boarding house. Here, let me say, our surroundings became more lively, and sometimes too lively, for we had from thirty to thirty-five boarders continually, and remembering the fact of the very free use of liquor in those days and its effects on men, I assure you we had more life from that source than we wished for.

It was here that my eyes beheld one of the strangest sights of my life, which was the notorious Copetown Railroad riot. I was playing around with other boys close by the works on the railroad, when, hearing strange noises over in the railroad cut, we ran over to see what was going on. And, oh, such a sight! The other boys ran away immediately, but I thought I must stay and see what they would do with each other, for there the men were, about two hundred in number, all fighting in a most ferocious manner, striking each other with shovels, picks, clubs, and any other weapon that they could secure. Well, the result was that after the fight was over three men were carried out of the cut dead, three or four more fatally wounded, and a number of others severely hurt. I then ran home to tell my parents the strange story, but the news had arrived there before I did.

When spring came my parents left the boarding house, as they did not like the situation very well, although my father was very successful in managing the men and kept very good order in the house, especially so, when we consider the class of men he had to handle. As for myself I was a great favorite with the men, but the example they set before me was anything but good. After my father left the boarding house, he returned to again work on the railroad. That summer I went to work on the railroad with him, my occupation being water boy, but I did not stay at my work long, for I was taken sick with the fever and ague, which did not leave me altogether for nearly a year, and I assure you I was a poor, delicate-looking boy. It was the latter part of the summer of 1852 that we located in Komoka, my father continuing to work on the railroad there. My health became much better, but physically I was a dwarf, for to all appearances I had not grown a bit since we left England. In this place I went to school for a few weeks. The moral element was bad. To give a little idea of the state of society, the head of each home procured a forty-two-gallon barrel of whisky, so under such circumstances drinking and drunkenness was the order.

Frequently the men would coax me to drink some whisky, but very seldom could they get me to take any. Although very young, I could see the great evil, misery, and broken hearts brought about by such a practice. One day, thinking over the situation of what I saw, I made a covenant that I would never follow the example that was set before me. Today I thank God for that covenant. Surely I was inspired by the Spirit of the Lord when I made it.

In the year 1854 we moved from Komoka to the Township of Zone, Kent County, which was at that time a dense forest. There was no road, only as each settler cut a sleigh track through the woods to the various lots where they settled. After we got settled on the lot my father had taken, we found our nearest neighbor lived more than three miles away. I was then about ten years old, and I went daily with my father to work, chopping, logging, and doing other work incidental to clearing up a farm.

I must here relate one incident which took place about this time that I shall never forget. It was in November, 1854. My father was finishing our log shanty to shield us from the cold storms and tempests of winter; his supply of nails became exhausted, so he sent me to Thamesville to get a fresh supply, a distance of about seven miles. When about two miles from home, I was following on the path which led around the edge of a small marsh to cross over a beaver dam. Immediately after crossing the said dam, I suddenly came close upon three wolves playing around a fallen tree top. This frightened me so that I climbed a tree so quickly I do not know how I did it. I remained there until the wolves went away; then I came down and returned home double quick. I told the story to my father, which he could not seem to credit, giving as his reason that I could not go that distance and return in the time I had been from home, let alone being up in a tree for some time, but he said he would go back with me and see. I saw that moment there was trouble ahead for me if there was not some good evidence to prove my story to be true, and I wondered what there could be to prove it. But when we arrived upon the spot, there hung the bag I had taken to carry the nails in on one of the limbs of the tree I had climbed; so all was well, and I was pleased. Nothing of any import occurred for two years, only incidents common to pioneer life; but when I look back upon those lonely days of the long ago, I see many things that would be considered by people now to be severe hardships. There were no schools, no places of worship, and father and I had to carry in on our shoulders all the provisions to sustain physical life.

In the fall of the year 1856 I went to live with an aged couple by the name of Metcalf, to do chores for my board and go to school. About the last of October I commenced upon my new duties; this I continued until about April the following spring, at which time my services were required in another direction, so that ended my schooldays. The following summer I worked for Mr. Metcalf for four dollars a month. I continued to work out by the month or by the job, and gave all the proceeds I could possibly spare to my parents. In the year 1858 my father and I worked the spring and summer months on the railroad. I saw a great deal of immorality. However, in the fall we returned home. By this time a new log schoolhouse had been built, and a Methodist minister by the name of William Savage had received permission from the trustees to hold divine services. Later on Mr. Savage held revival meetings. I attended them and became convinced that I ought to be a better boy; so I went forward and with others was put on probation. I worked at home with my father that winter, getting out saw logs, as there was a saw-mill in our neighborhood.

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

The Task of Early Training

By Myrtle A. Weber

There is no task more beautiful, no opportunity more welcome, than that of working with the little children that come to our church schools. Nothing is so beautiful as a little child. He is our greatest asset. These little lives intrusted to our care for a short time each Sunday are more precious than riches, more sparkling than diamonds, more to be desired than the possessions of all the world. No greater recompense than the love of a little child could be meted out for one's untiring efforts in this field of endeavor.

With the ever-rising complexities of civilization, the responsibilities of the home are constantly being shifted to outside agencies. To the public school is assigned the task of systematic education; to the church school the responsibility, indeed, the privilege of guiding little footsteps for the first short distance along the path of religious nurture. Realizing that one's moral code influences his attitude toward life and determines more or less his behavior, we have a slight comprehension of the task that is ours in shaping moral concepts and in developing ideals and loyalties of Christian character.

Froebel began his work with the older children. Finding they lacked much, he sought the cause in the grade from which they had just come. There he found that something was still wanting, and he inquired as to the training of the class from which they had come. And as he went down the ladder of education, he discovered that the foundation was not firm. Consequently, he began his work with the kindergarten child, his purpose being to develop the child's natural tendencies, thus giving him the proper start on which to build. If our senior groups lack something, and the intermediate and junior classes are found wanting, this reflects on the kindergarten and primary training. It is for us, therefore, to lay a strong and firm foundation on which the child can build intelligently. Our task is to mold the spiritual side of the child after the great pattern, Jesus. Our task is a high privilege, a privilege next to that of the parents.

The following poem is quite significant and worth each teacher's consideration:

I took a piece of plastic clay
And idly fashioned it one day;
And as my fingers pressed it still,
It moved and yielded to my will.
I came again when days were past;
The bit of clay was hard at last;
The form I gave it still it bore,
But I could change that form no more.

I took a piece of living clay,
And gently formed it day by day,
And molded with my power and art
A young child's soft and yielding heart.
I came again when days were gone—
It was a man I looked upon,
He still that early impress bore,
And I could change it never more.

—Miriam Maxwell.

Using Worship Materials in the Church School

By C. B. Woodstock

A real worship experience is soul refreshing. It brings renewed confidence and courage. It makes God seem near and reveals to us hidden sources of power and achievement. Too frequently our worship services have been handled clumsily, or the occasion has been cut short, or omitted entirely. In any of these cases those to whom the service should minister have been deprived of a sacred privilege and must inevitably suffer loss. When the service has been successful, however, the entire group or congregation has been uplifted, strengthened, and caused to grow.

Inducing the Spirit of Worship

It should be no secret that we definitely seek a close communion with God through worship. We may control, if we will, many conditions which make or mar the service. We readily realize that unpleasant surroundings, uncomfortable seats, poor light or ventilation, distracting sights or sounds make continuity of thought and reverent participation quite impossible. Congenial, friendly surroundings, freedom from distractions, and especially the presence and leadership of men and women in whom we have confidence, make a favorable setting for worship. The playing of music or the singing of hymns rich in their power to suggest the noblest idealism and best aspirations of the soul, with mutual participation in song, prayer, and response, perhaps all in a setting of architecture or of nature which contributes to the reverence of the occasion, make worship natural and easy.

Indeed, there is a gentle and refined art of worship that may be cultivated, if we would worship successfully. It is a matter of controlled surroundings, an uninterrupted flow of the service, a careful selection and preparation of materials, a prearranged program with parts well assigned to include all present in participation. On the human side, variety of expression and balance provide most favorable conditions for helpful worship experiences. Such an effort made in humility and in earnest striving to merit the presence of the Spirit of God can hardly fail of desired results.

The most important essential is the spirit of genuine worship on the part of those who lead in the various phases of the service. By no means should our search for the art of worship lead us to descend to the low plane of artifice. The one who would lead us in scripture reading or prayer must express his own devotion if he would minister to us in a spirit of worship. The soloist, the musician, the teller of the story, the minister who preaches the sermon or sermonet, each in his sphere and with his special ability must reverently express his own deepest convictions if he would move us to spiritual heights of worship. Quality of voice and personal demeanor on the part of a leader are important elements, but an assumption of the artificial in tone or emphasis, or a resort to strategy is empty, hollow, meaningless. Worship is a sharing of experience. One can not share what he does not possess.

The spirit of true worship is to be induced only by a harmonious approach into the presence of the divine. The brief worship period should serve as a school, a trial ground, in which we consciously seek to discover the true, the beautiful, and the good through the avenue of worship. Our enriched experiences should then carry over into other services of the church, into our homes, and out into every avenue of daily living.

Adapting Materials

It has been urged repeatedly in the columns of the Herald that the worship programs as printed offer merely a suggested order of service and source materials for use. It is not even probable that the arrangement will fit all situations.

It is most desirable that those in charge work out their own programs, making such use of the printed suggestions as may seem best. Seldom should all the materials be used. Often a variety of songs or a number of pictures or stories are listed from which leaders are expected to choose the ones available and most suited to the local conditions. Or quite other materials known to the leader may be used in place of those suggested.

It is highly desirable that local leaders of worship become self-reliant and acquainted with a fairly wide range of source materials. Too frequently we fail because we rigidly follow a set form or printed outline. Our effort then may be mechanical, perhaps halting, and lacking in genuine spirit. On the other hand, the inexperienced leader may well follow, at first, recommended ways and means which have already proved their worth.

The Time Element

A common fault is to carry the worship service of the church school beyond its allotted period. This often comes from beginning late, a delay in the order of service because of a misunderstanding or some one's failure, or too much time may be taken by one person in some feature of the service, as a long-continued prayer or a rambling talk. Sometimes we really plan too much material for the length of time the service is to occupy.

Experience will teach us to plan a simple service to be completed in not over fifteen or twenty minutes. We will check up closely on those who are to participate to see that each is present and ready for his part. We will personally warn long-winded people that they are to use but a certain number of minutes of the brief period.

It is unfair to other services of the morning for the worship service to encroach upon the time allotted other activities.

Source Material

The three standard books of the church naturally furnish our best supply of source material. There is great need that the most useful and helpful passages be gathered from each of the three and made more readily available for church school and worship use. The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants each contain beautifully expressed words of life and truth, words of admonition, words of hope and cheer, the commandments of God to man.

Other churches have led the way in the selection and arrangement of scripture readings taken from the Bible. Our own literature is extended and enriched by the additional materials, so significant to Latter Day Saints, found in the Jaredite and Nephite records and in latter-day revelation. The preparation of this latter material for general use in the worship of the church school must be a matter of immediate concern.

Leaders of worship will find much help in the use of certain collections of stories and songs, reference to which is made in our printed worship programs. Those responsible for our programs have been limited in their reference to a few of the best collections, and from these selections will be made each month. It is urged that where the printed programs are regularly used, an effort be made to secure one or more of the reference books for the branch library. Usually these reference materials are protected by copyright, and we are not at liberty to reprint them.

We have recently read the copy prepared for number three of the current adult quarterly entitled, The Church Program for a New Century. This particular number is the April, May, June issue, and its lessons will discuss "The Worship of the Church." Workers in the church school, and especially those concerned with its worship service, will find these lessons most interesting and helpful.

Church School Worship Services

SUGGESTIONS FOR MARCH

By Mrs. H. A. Gould, Kansas City

The following outlines provide materials from which local worship programs may be builded. The services should be brief, not over fifteen or twenty minutes. Study to develop a feeling of reverence and to encourage real participation in worship. If class work is to follow, let the worship period serve as the opening part of the church school session.

THEME FOR MARCH: "WE WOULD SEE JESUS"

MARCH 1

Theme: "The Christ of Courage."

1. Prelude: Medley of hymns.
2. Call to Worship: "I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me."—Isaiah 6: 8.
3. Prayer. That we may have such an abiding faith in God that it will impart to us "the courage of Christ."
4. Hymn: "'Tis the Blessed Hour of Prayer," Praises, 114.
5. Theme Talk: We would see Jesus in the fine courage which he showed in always doing those things which would please his Father. His was a courageous character, a character that always stood firmly for his convictions, even when it cost him his earth life.
 "We kneel, how weak. We rise, how full of power!
 Why, therefore, should we ever do ourselves the wrong
 Or others, that we are not always strong,
 That we should ever weak or heartless be,
 Anxious, or troubled, when with us is prayer;
 And joy, and strength, and courage, are with Thee?"
6. Hymn: "O for a Faith," Saints' Hymnal, 104, verses 1, 2, and 3.
7. Scripture Reading: Luke 4: 1-16.
8. Hymn: The last two verses of number 104 in the Saints' Hymnal.
9. Reading: "Courage," in "Heap O' Livin'," by Edgar Guest; or the story, "Three Mighty Men of Valor," page 74 in Knights of Service, by Bradshaw.
10. Solo: "We Would See Jesus," Praises, 133.
11. Sentence Prayer.
12. Offering. Accompanied by quiet music or solo, Hymn 339 in New Hymnal for American Youth.
13. Hymn: "Dare to Do Right," Praises, 79.
14. Prayer.

MARCH 8

Theme: "The Christ of Hope."

1. Prelude: "Rock of Ages."
2. Call to Worship:
 "O love the Lord, all ye his saints,
 For the Lord preserveth the faithful;
 Be of good courage,
 And he shall strengthen your heart,
 All ye that hope in the Lord."
3. Prayer. That our hope be a spiritual reality, through which we may see Jesus and his way of life more clearly.
4. Hymn: "Hear Our Prayer, O Lord," New Hymnal for American Youth, 342. Should be sung very softly and slowly as a solo or choir number.
5. Hymn: "Sov'reign and Transforming Grace," Saints' Hymnal, 131, verses 1, 2, and 3.
6. Theme Talk: The Hope of the world is Jesus. Without hope there can be no endeavor. Tennyson refers to "The mighty hopes that make us men." Whittier writes:

"Behind the cloud the starlight lurks,
Through showers the sunbeams fall;
For God, who loveth all his works,
Has left his hope for all."

Through Christ there is hope of life abundant, here and hereafter.

7. Hymn: "Precious Name," Praises, 127, verses 1 and 2.
8. Scripture Reading: Book of Mormon, Moroni 7: 45-50.
9. Story: "The Prince Who Sought Happiness," Knights of Service, page 70.
10. Solo: "We Would See Jesus," Praises, 133; or choir number, "Lift Up Your Hearts," New Hymnal for American Youth, 3.
11. Sentence Prayer.
12. Offering. Quiet instrumental music.
13. Hymn: "Be Pure in Heart," Praises, 103.
14. Prayer.

MARCH 15

Theme: "The Christ of Peace."

1. Prelude: "Holy, Holy, Holy," Praises, 131.
2. Call to Worship: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."—Luke 2: 14.
3. Prayer. That we may live in such humility of spirit, that we may experience that peace which Christ came to give.
4. Hymn: "Light of Life," Hymnal, 71.
5. Scripture Reading: John 14, 21-28.
6. Solo or Quartet: "Sweet Peace, the Gift of God's Love," Pentecostal Hymns, Book 3, No. 102.
7. Theme Talk: "The Christ of Peace." Peace is one of the priceless gifts of God. When was there ever a greater need for this Gift of Peace than in this age of jazz and restlessness? In Isaiah 32: 17 we read, "And the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever." And Paul says in Philippians 4: 7: "And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." We would see Jesus better in the quieting, assuring influence of his peace.
8. Hymn: "How Gentle God's Commands," Hymnal, 80.
9. Sentence Prayer.
10. Offering. First and last verses of, "I Need Thee Every Hour," Hymns for the Centennial, sung softly.
11. Concluding Thought: Solo, "Peace I Leave with You," page 34 in Services for the Open, by Mattion and Bragdon; or,

"Drop thy still dews of quietness,
Till all our striving cease;
Take from our souls the strain and stress,
And let our ordered lives confess
The beauty of Thy peace."—Selected.

12. Hymn: "Abiding Rest," Praises, 92.
13. Prayer.

MARCH 22

Theme: "The Christ of Love."

1. Prelude: "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," Hymnal, 72.
2. Call to Worship: Duet, "There's No Love Like His Love to Me," Praises, 20.
3. Prayer. For this love to fill every heart; that it may give light and understanding and a loving service to each life that we touch.
4. Hymn: "Love Divine," Praises, 143.
5. Theme Talk: We can not fail to see Jesus in his love for all humanity. Jesus made love the test of obedience to his word: "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments." And in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 11: "No one can assist in establishing the cause of Zion except he shall be humble and full of love. In John 13: 34, 35, John quotes

Christ's words: "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

6. Hymn: "Come Tell the Story of His Love," Praises, 6.
7. Scripture Reading: Moroni 7, verse 50 to the end of the chapter.
8. Story: Hymn story of how George Matheson wrote: "O Love That Will Not Let Me Go," in One Hundred and One Famous Hymn Stories.
9. Solo, quartet, or choir: "O Love That Will Not Let Me Go," New Hymnal for American Youth, 154.
10. Sentence Prayer.
11. Offering. Quiet music.
12. Hymn: "Tell Me the Story of Jesus," Praises, 27.
13. Prayer.

MARCH 29

Theme: "The Challenge of Christ."

1. Prelude. Selected quiet music.
2. Call to Worship: Poem, "We Would See Jesus."

O God whose love is over all the children of thy grace,
Whose rich and tender blessings fall on every age and place;
Hear thou the songs and prayers we raise in eager joy to thee,
And teach us as we sound thy praise, in all things thee to see.

To see thee in each quiet home, where faith and love abide,
In school and church, where all may come, to seek thee, side by side;
To see thee in each human life, each struggling human heart,
Each path by which, in eager strife, men seek the better part.

—Selected.
3. Hymn: "Take Up Thy Cross," Praises, 95.
4. Prayer. That we may have the courage to accept the "Challenge of Christ"; to become like him and follow more closely his way of life.
5. Scripture Reading: Matthew 5: 1-17.
6. Hymn: "Oh, to Be More Like Jesus," Praises, 128, to be sung by the choir.
7. Theme Talk: The Challenge of Christ. "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with me."—Revelation 3: 20.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."—Matthew 7: 12.

"It will always help me to be kind and true,
If I ask in earnest, what would Jesus do?"

8. Sentence Prayer.
9. Offering. Quiet music.
10. Concluding Thought:

"We can do all things through Christ;
We can only fail without him."
11. Hymn: "Jesus Is Calling," Praises, 111.
12. Prayer.

Great living means being true to the vision, when we no longer behold it; carrying it loyally across the desolate plain and even through the valley of shadows, in the certain faith that the hills will rise again, we shall ascend them, and again behold the vision of life, still and clear at our feet. He who lives as if the highest were true, when he can no longer see it, helps to make it true in his life.—Edward Howard Griggs.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Address all news and letters to Editors of the Herald, Box 237, Independence, Missouri. Correspondents are requested to make their letters brief. The Editors reserve the right, on account of space limitations, to shorten all letters as circumstances require.

Madison, Wisconsin

219 Jackson Street

Elder Amos Berve, during the last month, has spoken a number of times to this congregation. Two of his texts were: "Come now, let us reason together," and "By faith we understand." He is teacher of the young people's class. Each Wednesday evening at 6.30 he also conducts a class for teachers, using the textbook, Methods of Teaching. This period is followed by prayer service and choir rehearsal. Not long ago Brother Berve began a series of missionary sermons, which are proving instructive. During the first week of February he broadcast from a Madison station at 7.50 each morning on "Starting the Day Right." Indeed Brother Berve is helpful in every line of activity.

Elders Charles Clark and Henry Woodstock are taking turns preaching on Sunday mornings.

The women's working club meets every two weeks. They are making a name quilt at ten cents a name. When completed the article will contain ninety-five dollars' worth of names. It will then be quilted and sold. The latter part of January four women served a chili supper in the lower auditorium, the proceeds to go to the purchase of new hymn books.

Under its new director, Brother Root, the church school is going forward.

February's sacramental meeting was well attended. Thirty minutes were devoted to prayer, song, and testimony.

Vancouver, British Columbia

Vancouver Branch has settled down for a busy year. Every department is doing its share of work.

The Women's Department deserves special mention for its good accomplishments. At the beginning of 1930, talent money was given to each woman to increase. The money came back five-, ten-, and almost thirty-fold. The bazaar was also a success, making the year a financial success. This department donated generously when the recent call for funds to the general church came. Now the women are presenting to the branch new church pews costing about three hundred dollars. Officers for the year are president, Sister Dallyn; assistant, Sister Stoyhoff; teacher, Sister Isaac McMullin; and secretary, Sister Gerrie.

J. E. Johnston is branch president, with Isaac McMullin and George E. Mille as counselors. Sunday school officers are, superintendent, Herbert Stanbridge; assistant, Chase Taylor; secretary, Stanley Stoyhoff. Religio officers are, president, Edwin Spargo; assistant, Charles Stanbridge; and secretary, Lillie Spargo.

Elder H. I. Velt is preparing for a big missionary campaign in Vancouver, and he has the support of every member. We expect to have a good report for the Herald when our campaign is over.

John Gerrie was called home owing to the illness of his mother, who passed away since his return to Vancouver.

EDWIN SPARGO.

Bisbee, Arizona

Elder George H. Wixom stopped in Bisbee January 24 on his return to his mission field in southwestern Texas. He spent Christmas with his family in San Bernardino, California. He preached here morning and evening on Sunday.

And in the afternoon a few cars motored to Douglas, where Brother Wixom baptized Calvin Puckett's bride of a week. They now begin their life together in the service of the Master. Sister Puckett has been acting as pianist for the branch since Christmas.

Kimball (Ontario) Branch

February 2.—Under the church school plan the branch prospers. From eighty to ninety per cent of the branch attend the Sunday morning prayer service and Sunday school. Preaching comes at night. During the week we have song service, a music class, Boy Scout meetings, and cottage prayer meetings which are well attended. The last named help greatly in building our spiritual characters.

We have engaged a competent music teacher from Port Huron to teach a large class of young people on the instruments of their choice. The response and results are pleasing. This movement is being sponsored by Francis Shaw.

JOHN H. HARKNESS.

Gaylord, Michigan

In the last month two weddings have been solemnized here, that of Sister Helen Widrig and Leonard Jensen January 18, and that of Mrs. Hilmer, of Detroit, and Brother Earl Widrig on January 28. Elmer Widrig officiated at both.

The young people are faithfully attending choir practice every Monday evening, and the congregation is benefited by their Sunday night special numbers.

Suppers served here lately by the Women's Department have been much enjoyed.

Elder Hector McKinnon has lately visited several branches in the interests of the Sunday school work.

Sister Hartnell, of Boyne City, lectured here on the church school.

Pastor Elmer L. Parkes took the girls' quartet, Helen McKinnon, Eleanor Buddy, Flora Widrig, Reva Henrietta, and Sister Ilah Schreur, pianist, to Boyne City, to furnish special music during the series of meetings conducted there by Elder Ledsworth.

General branch work progresses. Several new members have been recruited in the Sunday school.

Several of our families are enjoying the radio sermons from the Stone Church studio in Independence.

MRS. GEORGE S. WILSON.

Sperry, Oklahoma

February 7.—Elder William Bath started a series of meetings November 2. His first three sermons were on home building. Wednesday evening O. A. McDowell, pastor of Tulsa Branch, gave a lecture on stewardship. Thursday evening Sperry High School came in a body, filling the house. They gave the evening's program; Brother Bath gave a talk on the home and school.

Sunday, November 12, Apostle Gillen arrived and preached that night to a full house. They decided to continue for another week, as the interest was very good. Brother Gillen and Brother Bath preached some wonderful sermons, and we believe the meetings were the best ever held in this place. Nine were baptized.

Our annual business meeting was held, and Brother Selma Stephens was elected to succeed Brother Rumsey as superintendent of Sunday school. Brother Stephens is a young priest and a capable man to have in this important place.

The Women's Department is active. Sister Rumsey has a program that gets results. We are glad to have opportunity to express our appreciation to them. They maintain a fund for caring for the sick, beautifying the church, and helping with missionary work. Their slogan is, "Doing More Than Our Part."

Rupert, Idaho

Church work in Idaho is progressing. The entire State, excepting a small portion in the extreme north and an area in the southeastern corner, is included in the Idaho District. There are only four branches—Boise, Hagerman, Filer, and Rupert. We have a large scattered membership. Permanent reunion grounds are maintained at Hagerman, and the annual reunion is time for spiritual refreshment and happy association. Our plan of serving free meals has proved successful.

The enrollment of Rupert Branch is over one hundred members, but distance prevents a large per cent from attending frequently, and some do not get to come at all. We are now operating under the new plan of the church school and find it an improvement over the old method. W. A. Connell is pastor; Arthur Condit, home visiting director; and William Storey, director of church school. The adult department is under the supervision of Brother Condit. The young people's division, under Sister William Storey, has organized into clubs and meets on Friday night for study period. Junior services are held every Sunday excepting the first Sunday of each month, at the home of Brother and Sister Montrose near the church, under the direction of the children's division supervisor, Sister W. A. Connell.

About once a month a group social is enjoyed by all.

Choral service is conducted each Sunday night before preaching under the direction of the chorister, Sister Ethel Godfrey. The Women's Department meets every Thursday afternoon. Sister M. Condit, affectionately called "Grandma" by all of us, is the leader. No class work is being done, the members receiving that in the adult club. The women sew and do other things to raise money to help branch expenses.

One of our young members, Brother Calvin Cunningham, met with an accident last October in which he was severely burned from the hips down. He will be confined to his bed for months yet.

Apostle J. F. Curtis and District Missionary O. W. Okerlind, held meetings in Rupert before the holidays, and a few were baptized.

MRS. W. A. CONNELL.

Bradner, Ohio

December 29 the branch met in business session for the annual election of officers. The following are the heads of the departments: Pastor, R. F. Slye; counselors, Walter R. Wirebaugh and Edward Patton; church school supervisor, Edward Patton; Recreation and Expression, William F. Smith; Women's Department, Sister R. F. Slye. With few exceptions a complete change was made in the official staff of last year. More young people were chosen for office than ever before. This surely is a step forward in branch work and will be a means of training and stimulating the youth for greater responsibilities, which will be theirs if they are faithful.

As requested by the First Presidency, the branch observed the week of prayer.

January 18 eight families of the branch united Sunday dinners in the home of Brother and Sister Henry Smith, five and one half miles from Bradner.

MRS. R. F. SLYE.

Calumet, Oklahoma

The branch in Calumet is progressing, and regular meetings are being conducted by all departments. The annual business meeting convened December 2 and adopted the new plan of religious education. The following officers were chosen: Pastor, A. G. Owings; associate pastor, Elmer Richards; church school director, Arthur Crownover; supervisor of adult division, Sister Lillie Elwell; supervisor of young people, Harold Crownover; children, Lydia Crownover; pianist, Mildred Owings; chorister, Harold Crownover; secretary, Nettie Armstrong; treasurer, Thomas McGraw.

The Women's Department had an all-day meeting the 28th at the church and tacked comforters and sewed for a needy family. The brothers took advantage of the day and came with teams and scrapers to level and beautify the church ground.

The sacramental service the first Sunday of 1931 was marked by the spirit of love and unity.

MRS. M. CROWNOVER.

Hammond, Indiana

6243 Monroe Street

The week of prayer, January 4 to 11, made a fit beginning for this year's activities. Each family was given a list of prayer themes and scripture readings for its guidance in the proper channels of thought. The pastor made an urgent appeal for serious thinking and earnest prayer.

Our interests are centered around the new plan of religious education. The organization has worked splendidly, and as we go along we hope to perfect this system and beautify our services to such an extent that they will be pleasurable and beneficial to each group concerned. D. H. Smith is director of religious education, and for assistants he has H. G. Cresse for the adult division; Clair Ellis for the young people's division; and Eleanor Myers for the children's division. The adults have organized a class to study Sister Wight's course, "Religion in the Home." The theme is very interesting and offers a wide field for study and development.

To better care for the needs of the children, a beginner and primary church has been arranged to supplement the junior church hour.

Apostle D. T. Williams gave some interesting discourses during his short stay with us in the first part of January. "On to 2030" and "The Paralysis of Fear" were two subjects which he discussed.

District President William Osler stopped one Sunday at Hammond en route from his home in Canada to his mission field. We are glad to welcome him back to the district after his Christmas recess.

Because we feel the importance of prayer, special attention has been given the midweek devotional services. Quiet music while members are assembling helps to bring us into the proper attitude for communion with God. A large attendance on January 28 made the prayer service a very effective and beneficial one. The sacramental service on February 1 seemed to be a climax to our spiritual experiences. A feeling of reverence and fellowship radiated from each personality, and the bond of friendship and love for the gospel was great.

Several weeks ago there appeared in a Sunday issue of the World Herald, Omaha, Nebraska, a news story featuring the life and work of Brother Walter Thurston Lowe, in charge of the South Side Church, at 2609 D Street. Like many other men in the church, Brother Lowe during the week follows his trade, and on Sunday presides in the house of worship. He is a barber in Omaha, having followed the trade more than thirty years, and his customers have been impressed by his sober, straightforward manner of doing business, his studious reading, and his interest in the church.

Kewanee, Illinois

Sixth and Tremont Streets

Kewanee Church held annual business meeting in November. Elder E. R. Davis, district president, was chairman. It was voted to adopt the new religious education plan. Elder Harry Jones was elected branch president, Edwin Winquist, director of the church school; supervisor of adult division, Sister Dessie Burchett; supervisor of the young people's division, Beatrice Jones; supervisor of children's division, Clara Winquist; branch clerk, Elizabeth Jones; supervisor of music, Laura Bennett; treasurer, Hyrum Epperly; financial secretary, Tressie Sanfleben; and publicity agent, Edward Jones.

The women of the adult division are organized into a class with Sister Violet Mitton president; vice president, Sister Ann Godke; and secretary, Sister Tressie Sanfleben. They have chosen for a name Zion Builders' Class, and for their motto, "Zion Our Goal." The class has a membership of twenty-three, and the members recite Bible verses to answer roll call. Their meeting is held once a month in the church. The afternoon is divided into three parts—worship, work, and social.

Much interest has been shown in the children's division. We are following the junior church programs outlined in the Saints' Herald. The children are looking forward to their spring festival, when their handwork will be displayed in the basement of the church.

We are working this year with optimism and hope to make every month a successful period of time in the Lord's work.

CLARA MAE WINQUIST.

Independence Sanitarium Patroness Society

The year 1930 was one of pleasure. The Patroness Society of the Independence Sanitarium has given many an opportunity to express their gratitude to God through service to humanity.

While ours is a humble service, we hope the time is not far distant when every pastor will see the necessity and realize the spiritual worth of a Patroness unit in his branch in harmony with the recommendation from President F. M. Smith and Bishop A. Carmichael.

The amount of work done during the year by the Independence unit has been beyond our expectations. About eight hundred people are now members of the organization, and at the close of the year 1931 we hope this number will be doubled. Is this too much to expect? We think not when our people know the amount of work it takes to fill the demands of such an institution. Many know the needs of the Sanitarium and have donated generously in the past, for which we are thankful. But the needs of the community and the church at large have outgrown our dear old Sanitarium, under whose roof many of us have experienced the healing power of God and have been bathed in the comforting influence of his peaceful Spirit, and our generosity must continue.

Sixteen units of the Patroness Society have been organized in the church, and six of these have taken upon themselves the task of furnishing a private room each, the cost being three hundred dollars with a yearly upkeep (linens and painting) of seventy-five dollars. We are happy to report that one of these units has already sent in its amount, Philadelphia Branch.

We appreciate the inquiries and work of isolated Saints. We know they find joy in their service, and hope that many who are not in touch with a branch or unit will write our president, Mrs. H. L. Loosmore, 1117 West Van Horn Road, Independence, Missouri. Your requests will be promptly taken care of, she will be glad to send a list of the needs of the Sanitarium—bed linens, quilts, table and tray covers, etc., to any who ask for them.

The women in Independence are working hard. Most of the quilt material has been furnished by them. Over one thousand pieces were turned in from the society last year, besides about seventy-seven quilts. The quilt committee has been busy quilting many of the quilts here and sending to the different units.

The Sanitarium endowment fund has not been stressed as we would have liked, our efforts and ambitions being concentrated on the work of furnishings that are and will be needed as the new building nears completion. Nevertheless, a sum of $144.75 has been received for the fund.

Pastors of Zion are cooperating with the workers of the society. We plead for an organization of a unit in every branch, so that the joy of service may come to all. Women, Temple Builders, and men, too, may become members of the society. The dues are one dollar a year, which is used to buy material for your own unit. Information regarding the organization of a unit may be had by writing the president.

A fine meeting was had in the unit in Zion, January 23, it being the first one of the year 1931. Work, lunch, songs, business, and distribution of home work composed the program of the day. We wish to thank all who have assisted in making the past year a successful one, and if the spirit of unity and service which is now manifested is an omen for 1931, we are already assured of a happy and successful year.

MRS. H. L. LOOSEMORE, President.

MRS. ALMA BOOKER, Corresponding Secretary.

Skiatook, Oklahoma

T. P. Greenwood's father has been seriously ill with blocked heart. This sickness prevented Brother Greenwood, branch president, from meeting in services for five weeks.

The holidays were observed with good programs and social gatherings. And beginning with the new year the branch unanimously adopted the new plan of religious education. It will be put into operation as soon as the changes can be made.

Harry Robinson, of Tulsa Branch, was here the first Sunday in January. He talked on the Book of Mormon. Brother Robinson, who is a wonderful teacher, has been with us before, teaching from the Book of Mormon.

Salmas Stephens, from Sperry Branch, preached the second Sunday evening of the month. His sermon was edifying to the Saints. Brother Stephens is a young man and young in the ministry.

T. G. Williams, from Walco, branch teacher, preached four sermons in succession a few weeks ago on Sunday evenings. The sermons were specially designed for the consideration of the members and treated on the subject of unity and how the Saints should live.

Brother T. P. Greenwood preached his first funeral sermon a few days ago in the city funeral home. The deceased was a Mr. Stokham, a Methodist, and an ex-soldier.

We have four or five families favorable to uniting with the church. We have been meeting nonmembers in their homes and in social gatherings. Brother Bath, missionary, is expected here soon after the district conference at Tulsa, February 6, 7, 8. The Saints are working with friends and neighbors to get them ready for the meeting.

The branch feels good results from the week of prayer.

Some of the Saints have prepared a Negro minstrel, which is popular in various parts of the community. They go to different places and charge a small admission. The proceeds go to pay church debts.

There is much sickness at present with the "flu" of the throat and ears.

Mr. E. L. and Sister Ruby Hicks have a son born December 18. Also Brother and Sister J. R. Hicks have a son born January 21.

Independence

Stone Church

The annual concert of the Wahdemna Choral Club, given Sunday night, was the outstanding event of the week at the Stone Church. For one hour and a half it enthralled a crowd of hundreds of musicians and friends with vocal and instrumental numbers. The chorus sang eleven selections a cappella, and soloists of the evening were Delta Nace, Gladys Good, LeRoy Smith, Gomer Cool, violinist; and Lorena Kueffer organist. Two numbers were played by an instrumental quartet: Orrin Fry, violin; Lillian Green, violin; Gomer Cool, viola; and Milford Nace, cello.

The excellent quality of musical contribution the choral club offers this community is recognized by everyone. Often the chorus is invited to sing at public functions in Independence and surrounding points. The evening of February 8 it sang at Holden, Missouri.

Since its organization Paul N. Craig has been conductor of the Wahdemna Choral Club. Bertha Ellerick is the accompanist, and Lorena Kueffer, organist.

Three intermediate boys assisted the officers in conducting the junior young people's worship program Sunday morning, giving added meaning to the day's theme, "Knights of the Deed." Elder J. R. Lentell, a teacher in the department, was the speaker. The guest pianist was Miss Kathryn Haberlein. Superintendent Howard Cook was in charge of the program, assisted by another teacher in the department, Priest Oral Andes.

Pastor John F. Sheehy was the speaker at the morning service Sunday. His sermon was a discussion of Doctrine and Covenants 42, which he called "the constitutional law of the church," emphasizing particularly the principles of brotherhood among men and accountability to God.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Evan A. Fry, sang two anthems, "Incline Thine Ear to Me," by Himmel, and "New Every Morning Is the Love," by Bullard. Alice Mae Burgess, contralto, and Lilly Belle Allen, soprano, sang solo parts. Lorena Kueffer played two organ numbers. George Miller played the piano accompaniment for the musical service.

The funeral of Brother James E. Hall, who died at his home Friday night, occurred at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon in charge of Pastor John F. Sheehy. Elder W. S. Macrae, of Holden Stake, preached the sermon. He leaves to mourn his wife, two sons, two daughters, other relatives, and many friends. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Second Church

Our boys took prominent part in the morning services February 8, which was Boy Scout Sunday. A newly organized quartet of older intermediates, Laurence Wiseman, Walter Folkes, Chester Curtis, and Norman Inman, sang two numbers, being accompanied by Gladys Inman. Jamie McPherson, also an intermediate, played a violin solo. Elder Henry Stahl spoke on the Boy Scout movement.

The junior church service, conducted in the basement by J. L. Conyers, attracted the largest number so far, one hundred and seven boys and girls. A German family, John Drigalla, wife, and four daughters, furnished the program. Brother Drigalla talked a few minutes, and the girls sang songs in German and English.

Attendance at all services was good. The theme of the early morning hour, "Let Us Do What the Lord Would Have Us Do in the Way He Would Have Us Do It," influenced the meetings of the entire day.

The funeral of Sister Rena Dievendorf occurred at the church the afternoon of February 10. She is survived by five sons and three daughters. Mrs. Sarah Noble and Mark Dievendorf are of the home and members of this congregation.

Two intermediate girls, Lynida Page and Dorothy Peek, contributed to the musical program of the morning service last Sunday. Miss Lena Mortimore, who has recently learned to play the organ, also took part on the program. Brother Floyd Mortimore was the speaker.

Walnut Park

Elder W. T. Gard, who is in general charge of the Sunday morning prayer meetings, attended by the five groups in this district, has been choosing the ordained men in a certain group to preside on a designated Sunday. February 15 the officers of group 29, west, presided: Pastor G. F. Bullard, E. E. Moorman, Orlando Nace, Lewis Mauzey, and William Haskins. Forty-one were in attendance. Sunday school followed with four hundred and twenty-two present, including thirty-five of the thirty-eight teachers.

At eleven o'clock officers of group 27, north, were in the stand, their pastor, Elder C. K. Greene, delivering the sermon on the subject, "The Second Coming of Christ," a discourse replete with well-chosen, well-applied scriptural references.

The funeral of Brother George W. Tousley, deacon and janitor at Walnut Park Church, was held at 2.30. He passed away February 12 after an illness of one month. The sermon was by Elder U. W. Greene.

The evening congregation listened to a serious and intensely interesting sermon by Apostle M. A. McConley, who warned us that conditions prevailing make it imperative that those who would see this work triumph let nothing hinder their devoted service, even to the extent of much self-denial. He reminded us how much the Saints in Zion owe to the church at large in living exemplary lives. The sermon was cheering to some, but only to those who are willing to consecrate themselves to a full obedience to the laws of the church.

Group 28 reports its monthly social, where old and young members of the group are made welcome. The February meeting was held the evening of the 12th at the new residence of Brother and Sister Ammon Badder. Songs, games, and refreshments have place in these "get-acquainted" gatherings. The women's "gypsy basket," a novel idea for collecting funds, had just completed its round of the group and contained five dollars.

Spring Branch

All those whose birthdays come in the months of January, February, and March were guests of honor at a Valentine-birthday party conducted by the congregation the evening of February 13 at the church.

"Gardening" was the topic of Brother Dan Lloyd's talk to the women at their meeting February 11. His ideas will prove helpful to all the members who plan to raise fruits and vegetables for the Harvest Festival this fall.

The first junior church service to be conducted in this branch occurred Sunday morning, Elder Swen Swenson speaking to the children. Officers hope to make this meeting a regular activity.

Doctor F. J. Lewis addressed the young people's class Sunday morning in the church school session. "Are you dependable?" was the text of Elder J. A. Gardner's eleven o'clock sermon, and the junior choir sang "Lift a Little." In the evening the young people's class gave a program following the study session of the church school. Bishop C. J. Hunt was the evening's speaker.

Brother and Sister Dee McNeeley announce the birth of a daughter, Nola Dee, February 4. Sister McNeeley was formerly Miss Marie Harper.

The funeral service of Miss Eva Sedoris, who died last Friday evening, was held at the church Sunday afternoon. The family has the sympathy of the Saints.

East Independence

The annual community song fest of East Independence and Fairmount Methodist Sunday Schools and Spring Branch and DeKalb Schools did much Sunday night to promote the feeling of community consideration and fellowship. This year it honored the birthdays of three illustrious men born in February—Abraham Lincoln, George Washington, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. The contributions of this congregation were a pantomime of old songs by the children of the intermediate, junior, and primary departments, under the direction of Sisters Iva Edgerton and Alta Dutton, and a chorus, "Keep the Home Fires Burning" by the women of the district.

Elder Stanley Kelley spoke Sunday morning, explaining the peace of Christ and the Christian life as that of action, not of stagnation. Encouraging and instructive discourses by Elder C. B. Woodstock and Apostle Clyde F. Ellis were part of the Sunday program February 8.

The evening of February 9 we heard the second of a series of lectures by Robert S. Clough, county extension agent. The subject, "Poultry Raising," is one of interest to nearly all of our members. We are taking advantage of an opportunity to gain ideas which are tested in the State Agricultural College.

An adult meeting to outline the work which we hope to accomplish this year was in charge of the congregation's officers the evening of February 13.

Traverse City, Michigan

February 2.—Traverse City Branch has been working under the new plan of church school organization since last October, when all the offices were filled by election.

Traverse City was one of the first branches to go over the top with its 1930 Christmas offering, and we expect to do the same this year.

The twenty-eighth annual anniversary supper was held in the church basement January 28, and was indeed a success. The program was planned by and in charge of Sister Conklin and Sister Richardson, the theme being "Looking Ahead." Brother Ray Dick gave an address of welcome to nearly ninety people. Brother Shelley, of Freesoil, Michigan, who is the assistant district president, delivered the main address of the evening, and several young men gave short talks on subjects of interest, "The Branch," "Church School," "Youth of the Church," "Church Building," "Finances," and "Music." A number of good musical selections were also enjoyed.

Patriarch Davis, of South Boardman, better known in Northern Michigan as "Uncle Jimmy," was present and offered the opening and closing prayers. Sister Davis was with him.

Plans are being made for the enlargement of the church. In its present condition it can not properly meet present-day needs.

The Women's Department has started a building fund. Their aim is one mile of pennies.

The past year has been successful for Traverse City Branch. We are looking ahead to one equally as good, if not better.

R. C. MORAN.

Stonington, Maine

The illustrated lectures given by E. F. Robertson on the Sunday evenings during November and December were interesting and educational. The church was well filled each evening.

On December 16 the Department of Women, under the leadership of Sister Cornelia Shepard, held its annual bazaar and supper at the Odd Fellows Hall. This, with the sale of fancywork outside, netted the sum of one hundred and two dollars.

The Christmas program given December 28 consisted of numbers by the children and a play by the young people. Sister Nettie Cook, assisted by Linnie Eaton, had charge, and they are to be commended for the good work accomplished.

The death of Sister Florence Smith occurred December 21.

Formerly Sister Smith had been a faithful and efficient worker in the branch, but had been for a number of years a constant sufferer confined to her home.

The Loyal Workers' Club, organized a year ago with Sister Gertrude Robertson as leader, gave an interesting entertainment at the church January 16. Ice cream, cake, and candy were sold during the intermission. The women of this organization have taken up a study of church history at their weekly meetings during the winter.

The branch business meeting was held December 31. The church school plan of organization was adopted. We trust the change will prove advantageous. Attendance during the month of January has been encouraging.

We are glad to learn that Sister Vera Billings, of Deer Isle, has returned to her home from the Memorial Hospital at Blue Hill, where she underwent a serious operation.

Former residents and missionaries may be interested to know that Stonington now has regular airplane service.

North Manchester Branch

Since receiving the "barometer" for the Christmas offering the children have been trying to reach the goal we set ourselves in the branch. We are a small branch, and we aimed rather high so regret we were not able to accomplish this. But we mailed to our bishop a postal order for one pound, ten shillings, the extent of our effort.

We are doing our best here to keep the latter-day work progressing, and although few in number, are trying to utilize the material we have at hand to the best advantage. We have since January had a change in the pastor. High Priest Nephi Dewsnup, former pastor, asked to be released for greater responsibility in the mission. By unanimous vote of the branch, Elder F. H. Smith was elected, and we feel we have made a wise choice, because the officers seem happy in service under his presidency. He is also the director of religious education.

The children's division is wide awake. All ages except the nursery class bear testimony in the fellowship services and offer prayers. Even those in the nursery class ask Jesus to make them good and bless the sick people, and they believe that Jesus will, because they ask him.

On December 20 the leader invited the children to a party. Several of the members of the branch gave gifts of money and foodstuffs towards the effort, and it turned out a huge success. The previous year "Daddy" Christmas came and gave gifts to each child. Because one of the small kiddies was frightened at him then, he did not stay to see them this year, but filled their stockings and left them hanging around the fireguard in the room where, after tea, the children were allowed to go to have a romp. It was good to see their happy surprise when they saw the stockings.

At 7.30 in the evening some of the adults came, and a social was held in charge of Pastor Smith. First of all, after the opening ceremonies, the children were grouped together to form a clock and sang "Tick Tock." There were also recitations from the nursery class and games such as "Ducky, Ducky," and "Advertisements," and a competition for "Men Only" caused a lot of amusement. The song, "The Milkmaid," was given by a boy and girl from the junior class. Three of the intermediates acted "Jack and Jill" in pantomime. One of the star features of the evening was a concerted item, "The Gospel Chariot," adapted from a song which is sung in the Salvation Army, and as it was much enjoyed we have decided to do it again for the party on Saturday. The closing number was by the children, "Piggy Back."

We have not many young people in the branch, but we have determined to get together along educational and social lines, and the pastor will provide the spiritual education. The evening of January 13 we held our first social, and it proved very enjoyable. We are looking forward to others of like nature. For the next four Tuesdays Elder Abel Hall has kindly consented to give us a series of lantern lectures on the Book of Mormon.

Owing to her serious illness, Sister Maud Nelson was unable to retain the position of musical director in the branch. Our sister has done splendid work in this department, and we are grateful and hope the Lord will bless her.

With the dawning of the year 1931, there has come such a pleasant feeling of unity among us that we are determined to fight the good fight. It will be a hard struggle, but we do not ask for a bed of ease in church work.

"We'll go forward unto Zion,
We will pledge our lives to Thee."

OLIVE HEYWOOD.

Chicago, Illinois

First Branch

First Chicago Branch started the year with Elder H. T. McCaig again at the helm and Elder A. O. Skinner as counselor. The Sunday school, Department of Recreation and Expression, and the Women's Department have been consolidated and now operate as the Department of Religious Education under the plan adopted at the last General Conference. Elder J. W. Pettersson was elected director of Religious Education; Elder J. L. Gautchier and Sister C. Ballinger, adult supervisors; Priest Eric Edstrom, young people's supervisor; and Elder F. E. Bone, children's supervisor.

Friday night, January 23, a banquet was given for the young people, at which time their "part in the church" was discussed. They were accorded the floor to voice desires as to future meetings and what they wished to do with their time.

The women of the branch, working under the plan of the church school, are divided into three groups, each having its own leader. The Oak Park group, under Sister E. Studtman, is expected to give a good account of itself this year. Nearly all the members are wives or sisters of members of the priesthood. Having such a backing, the group should be a model for the others to follow. The West Side women have Sister C. Ballinger for a leader, while Sister A. Karll will direct the activities of the North Side group.

The choir this year is again directed by Sister Ruby Newman, and at the present time an Easter cantata is occupying the attention of its members.

The evenings of January 24 and 25 found Brother W. O. Hand, of Kansas City, in our midst. Brother Hand delivered illustrated lectures to the branch, and the subjects chosen were well presented.

Far West Stake

First Saint Joseph Church

The "Call of Brotherhood" was the theme for the worship service Sunday morning, February 8. The piano prelude by Muriel McLean was from "Symphony Pathétique," by P. T. Tschaikowsky. "Let Us All Be Brothers" was the call to worship. We were favored with a visit from Elder Clifford Constance, of Cameron, who gave an appealing talk on "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" Sisters R. E. Haden and Harold Schleezer sang "Come to the House of the Lord." After the lesson Deem Ferris sang "The Lord Is My Shepherd." Brother Mifflin occupied the eleven o'clock hour in place of Brother Milo Burnett, who was detained at home by his physical condition.

In the evening we enjoyed a unique service. Sister Edna Ehlers at the organ rendered the "Chant d'Amour," by Gillett, while the adult choir filled one side of the rostrum and the junior choir the other. "God Is Love" was the opening hymn, and prayer was by L. A. Keck. Then the junior choir, directed by Sister Letha Timm, Muriel McLean at the piano, sang "Looking to Jesus." We are glad when youthful voices assist in the ministry of song. The adult choir, directed by Evan Ehlers, sang "More Love to Thee," by Chester Nordman. The solo part was taken by Sister R. E. Haden. Then the lights were extinguished and the words of "Trust and Obey" were thrown on the screen. Everybody sang, and the walls fairly resounded with the strains of the hymn.

With this setting, Ward A. Hougas gave an illustrated lecture on Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. Old and young breathlessly followed Christian in his journey through life until he came to the Beautiful City. Then with the lights still low the words of "Shall We Gather at the River?" were flashed on the screen, and the people sang.

The adult group met Thursday, February 5, and though attendance was smaller than was expected, good was accomplished. The needs of the church were discussed and plans made to meet what seem to be the four most urgent present needs: A better attendance; more home visiting; a greater spirituality; and a strengthening of finances.

The dramatic club is rehearsing "The Challenge of the Cross," to be given during the stake conference the second week in March.

Graceland Chats

Last week the principal topic of conversation was the burning of the Brick Church. Thursday night almost every resident student ran to the fire and stood with Lamoni folk in silence and reverential regret as the flames shot up from the old structure. It had come to be the church home of many students during recent years.

Meetings in Zimmermann Hall

Had a stranger been passing Zimmermann Hall the evening of January 30, he might have been genuinely surprised to hear, instead of the wild cheering which usually issues from a college gymnasium; the poignant melody of an old-time hymn. If this phenomenon had drawn him inside, and had he been informed that on the previous evening the church home of this congregation had been completely demolished by fire, his wonder would have grown as he noted the calm spirit of self-possession and firm resolve to "carry on" which hovered over the crowd.

Few were the empty seats during any of the four meetings there; for though his usual meeting place was gone, no one stayed at home to mourn his loss, but rather exerted more effort and came to the hill. The first of these services took the form of a mass meeting in which memories of the past were relived and plans for the future discussed by the general officers of the church who attended. The following evening Apostle E. J. Gleazer concluded his interrupted series of sermons on "Life" with an inspiring talk. Sunday morning witnessed the group renew their covenants and dedicate their energies to the task which is ahead. Everyone was privileged in the afternoon to catch at least a small glimpse of the building program of the church and how it applies to Lamoni's problem, through the eyes of our President, Frederick M. Smith.

These inspirational meetings taught a lesson which should prove valuable to us as we make our readjustment to our new church home, the Coliseum, that regardless of the type of building, wherever the children of God meet to worship him, there will he "deign to be."

ROBERTA LEWIS.

Apostle Gleazer in Chapel

E. J. Gleazer spoke at the Friday morning Chapel, January 30. A piano prelude opened the service, and Roy Cheville offered a short prayer. After a hymn, Apostle Gleazer was presented. He came as a supporter of Graceland's growth and contributions. "Nothing but Leaves" was the descriptive title of his spiritual talk.

Gloucester, England

The home of the Young family at Maise more, on the banks of the Severn, is at present serving as the church home of Gloucester Saints. Though very few in number, they enjoy some wonderful meetings, due undoubtedly to their sincerity and faith, strengthened because of the importance they place on their "meeting together often in fasting and prayer." They have had many manifestations of God's love for them in the healing of the sick, and of his will concerning the work in this part of the vineyard. The lack of a larger and more centrally situated meeting place does not prevent these members from enjoying their social "get-togethers."

January 14 saw the holding of a somewhat overdue Christmas party. About twenty Saints and nonmembers sat down to a sumptuous repast, prepared by Sisters Meadows and Young, and "fully" enjoyed themselves. This was followed by games, including a vocal competition strictly confined to amateurs. Maybe Caruso would not have been jealous, yet Brother Harry Young deservedly took first prize. Another pleasing event was the presentation of a Book of Mormon to the director of religious education, Sister Jarvis, as a surprise gift from the branch. The distribution of various gifts to the younger people brought to a close an enjoyable evening.

Edwin Meadows was recently ordained an elder. This will help considerably in the branch and will lighten the load of the president, A. T. Trapp, who is also the bishop for the British Mission.

The Saints often refer to the short but very enjoyable and educational visits of Brothers F. M. McDowell and F. H. Edwards, and now look forward to the promised visit of Apostle Paul M. Hanson early in February.

At the business meeting early this month, the members took a decided step in an effort to obtain a permanent meeting place, and though it will call for unstinting loyalty and courage on the part of the dozen Saints, it will be worth while. More will be heard of this when they write of their ambitions and successes later in the year.

For the past few months, with the exception of two or three visits to other places, I have had the pleasure, along with Sister Davies, of meeting with these good people, and though there is nothing tangible to report in the way of baptisms, the future will probably bring the reward. The prayers of the Saints are for their brothers and sisters throughout the world, and God's blessing on the march to Zion.

FRED DAVIES.

Clinton, Missouri

The most interesting series of meetings held here in years closed Sunday night, January 25, having continued three weeks with Brothers J. Charles May, Ammon White, and George Jenkins as speakers. These ministers gave wonderful gospel sermons, carrying us back in memory to the time of our conversion to the faith. A number of nonmembers came out to hear, increasing until there were more out the last night than before, which was an encouraging sign. Brother Ammon White, a graduate of the high school here, renewed acquaintances among old friends. Some of the leading citizens of the town came out to hear him preach and expressed themselves well pleased with his sermons, even though he did not hesitate to declare unto them the whole counsel of God.

The people enjoyed the music and songs furnished by Brother May, who helped in every way he could to make the meetings successful. His sermons were much enjoyed. Brother May is a worker and does not hesitate to tackle anything, whether it is preaching the gospel, leading the song service, looking after the advertising, or doing the janitor work. Brother Jenkins could not be here long but preached some fine sermons.

The editor of the Daily Democrat treated the Saints very kindly, giving space every day for a write-up of the services, which were held in the Family Theater the last two weeks.

Praise is due Post Oak Saints who rallied to our assistance with attendance and finances.

At the close of the meeting we feel some are near the kingdom. We pray that the seed sown will be blessed.

We would ask the prayers of the Saints in behalf of Sister Roy Payne's husband, who is ill with pneumonia. He opened his home for meetings and helped in caring for the elders, besides freely using his car to take the members back and forth to the meeting. He is a Saint at heart if not as yet in name.

ERMINA PERKINS KEARNEY.

Fort Madison, Montrose, and Keokuk, Iowa

February 6.—The recent fire at Fort Madison church has proved in some ways advantageous rather than disastrous to the work there. The insurance adjustment has made possible some remodeling and redecorating of the interior, which gives almost the effect of a new building.

The church school, under the superintendency of Byron Brumm, is progressing and increasing in numbers. Sister Wright's stories to the juniors are enjoyed, while Brother McIntire's class of about twenty women are enjoying the study of "Personal Evangelism."

The Department of Music has taken on new life, and with both orchestral and vocal numbers is adding to the interest and attendance at the regular Sunday evening services.

Brothers F. T. Mussell and A. M. Chase are planning a series of missionary meetings to be held there beginning February 8. Montrose will join with and assist in these services at the request of Brother Chase, who is pastor of both branches.

Robert Brown, of Fort Madison, lately organized a Sunday school at Farmington, Iowa, where there are now seventeen members. They have secured the use of the Congregational Church building and hold Sunday school at two o'clock in the afternoon each Sunday. They are asking for a preacher for Sunday nights.

At Montrose the church school is progressing. Joseph Reed is now in charge. The Wednesday evening prayer service is increasing in interest. One fine feature is that the junior class from the church school is present there, and each member takes active part in the meeting.

The Women's Departments of these branches are working hard and successfully in gathering means to help in the local expenses.

Keokuk has a group of energetic women. When their presiding elder left them some time ago, being forced to seek employment elsewhere, they had no one of the priesthood there. These women have kept up an interesting Sunday school, also an active Women's Department. At their request, one of the priesthood of Fort Madison, or Montrose, has been giving them a sermon each Sunday morning, following the Sunday school, with the exception of the first Sunday of the month, when the sacrament is shared.

Brother and Sister Chase drove to Keokuk every Friday night from reunion time until Christmas week, for a preaching service. In these efforts they were assisted by talent from Montrose. Those who attended these services are asking that these Friday evening meetings be resumed.

Brother and Sister Chase were guests of the Women's Department at a chicken pie dinner, at the residence of Sister Wright Wednesday evening. Over one hundred tickets had been sold at fifty cents per plate.

Were it not for the loyal support given by the local priesthood, Elder Chase would not be able to keep the work of these three branches going. Not only do they lend their aid in the home branches, but when called upon to visit and assist in the work at one of the neighboring branches, it is seldom that they refuse. In this way are the calls met in this part of the district.

We rejoice in the achievements of our young people, and report that two of our juniors at Montrose are outstanding in their work in the public school: R. N. Smith, jr., son of R. N. Smith, has taken first prize four years in succession in declamatory contests—two years while in the grades, and the last two years in high school. He is preparing to enter a State contest in about a month. Junior looks forward to Graceland after finishing his work in high school. Edith Strange, daughter of Elder B. F. Strange, took first prize in a declamatory contest in the grades here just before the holidays.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

Two little members of the junior department of the church school, Betty Jeane and Geraldine Mallams, were administered the ordinance of baptism by Elder C. E. Wight, the service being a part of the worship exercises of the church school Sunday morning. Also Mr. Caswell, of Bennington Heights Group, united with the church. Confirmations were announced for the prayer service tonight.

The young people's division during the class period assembled in the main auditorium and listened to an educational lecture by Bishop A. B. Phillips.

During the "Festival Prelude" the adult classes returned to the auditorium for the service period. "Festival Te Deum," by Dudley Buck, was sung by the choir, George Anway directing, Irene Wolfe at the organ, and Lucy Bowser at the piano. Elizabeth Hitchcock, Estelle Moore, Clayton Wolfe, and Alfred Hitchcock assisted the choir with quartet work in the anthem. Elder A. B. Phillips spoke on "The Restoration."

The Central Church O. B. K's were in charge of the evening service, the first of a series of drama worship services arranged for the year. "Mansions" was presented by three O. B. K's, Doris Faler, Rebecca Dunn, and Clelland Raber. T. B. Dunn directed, and Wallace Burlington was in charge of the settings. The Wednesday evening prayer meeting will discuss the theme of the play.

Central Women's Club and their friends plan a tour of the Country Club Laundry tomorrow afternoon, followed by a tea at the home of Sister B. F. Moats. The club will receive twenty-five cents for every member making the tour, the proceeds being designed for the building fund.

A box of beautiful flowers and ferns sat at the foot of the pulpit and a bouquet of tulips adorned the pulpit at the services throughout Sunday, a tribute by Miss Amy Winning to the memory of her father, Brother Robert Winning, who would have celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday but for his decease several weeks ago.

Boise, Idaho

From "The Boise Clarion"

The Boise Clarion is a mimeographed sheet published monthly by the Department of Recreation and Expression of the branch. Its staff is as follows: Editor, John R. Mamerow; associate editor, Winona Porter; news items, Lucile Fletcher; reporters, all members of the branch.

During December the Saints were busy preparing the Christmas program under the direction of Sister Jackson. The entertainment proved to be the best ever given in this local. All who took part are to be commended for the service.

November 21 at a special business meeting, Elder John B. Cato was elected president of the branch in the place of Elder Hull. The branch voted to pursue the church school program as outlined by the general church, and Elder George B. Anderson was elected associate pastor to have charge of the church school; Elder T. B. Jackson was elected associate pastor in charge of home visiting.

On January 7 Boise Branch held the regular quarterly business meeting. It was decided at that time, in order to be in step with the rest of the church, to elect branch officers at the first of each year rather than in July, as has been our previous practice. Election of officers for the year resulted as follows: Pastor, Elder John B. Cato; associate pastors, Elders George B. Anderson and T. B. Jackson; treasurer, Elder T. B. Jackson; pianists, Sister John B. Cato (branch), Helen Bullock (church school); secretary, Gladys Chamberd; chorister, Sister Charles Likins; assistant chorister, Bethel Cato; librarian, Bessie Hull; superintendent of Sunday school, Lester Dellenbaugh; assistant, John R. Mamerow; secretary, Ella Dellenbaugh; assistant, Rolla R. Bullock; superintendent Department of Recreation and Expression, John R. Mamerow; assistant, Winona Porter; secretary, Rolla R. Bullock; assistant, Margaret Bullock.

During the first part of January, Boise Branch observed the week of prayer. Services were held each evening at 7.30 except Sunday, January 11, when the final meeting was held at 2.30 p. m. Following this meeting John R. Mamerow was ordained a priest.

Word has been received that Sister Harriet Cato died at the home of her daughter, Sister John Kugler, at Richmond, Missouri, January 5. She was born April 28, 1856, and married James N. Cato, January 1, 1880. Her husband was a zealous worker in the service of the church and died in Meridian, Idaho, in 1917. Sister Cato was well known throughout the Idaho District. There was hardly a reunion that was not attended by her. She was a faithful and willing worker in the service of the Lord. Burial was at Norborne, Missouri, January 8.

Sister Bessie Hull has received many kind letters from Saints throughout the district expressing condolence at the death of her husband, our beloved brother, Cecil Hull. She is happy at the beautiful thoughts expressed by those who have written.

Holden Stake

Atherton

There are at present nine families of stewards in the Atherton valley, and all are happy at their work. Brother Charles Scribener, of Kansas City, Kansas, wishing to learn more about stewardships, is spending the week donating labor. He is painting poultry houses for the stewards. Eleven have been built during the past year.

Bishop G. L. DeLapp, of Lamoni, spoke Sunday morning concerning the fact given in Holy Writ, that God has given men power to become the sons of God. In the evening C. E. Bogue's subject was "Love."

We hope soon to have the church school plan in full operation. D. R. Snively was chosen superintendent, and has to assist him, Anna Bogue, supervisor of the children's division, and Gracia Holman, supervisor of young people.

The work on the Sunday school rooms of the new church progresses.

Part of the evening hour the last Sunday in January was given to the ordinances of blessing of children and confirmation, two candidates being confirmed members of the church.

Post Oak

Pastor Joseph Duffy and family have of late been called to pass through severe trials. A son passed away, and a daughter is now very ill in Kansas City. The prayers of the members are for her recovery. Many other families are troubled with sickness.

Patriarch Ammon White paid this branch a visit the last Sunday in January, and preached a helpful sermon.

The young people's class is active. Early in the month they enjoyed a party at the home of Henry Savage.

Sunday: "Religious Education from Our Church Point of View," 9 a. m.; Church school, 10 a. m.; sermon, 11; men's meeting and women's meeting, 1.30 p. m.; prayer service, 3; preaching at 5.45. Send your reports early. Be on hand for the conference.—Bruce E. Brown, district president; C. J. Remington, district secretary.

Rock Island District will assemble in conference at Rock Island, Illinois, February 28 and March 1. The church is located at the corner of Eighteenth Avenue and Tenth Street. Meals will be served in the basement, and visitors will be entertained at the homes of the Saints. On Friday evening a program will be given, and all are invited to contribute numbers to this entertainment. Musical numbers, readings, and a short playlet are being planned. We have been promised a general church worker to be with us throughout the conference. We anticipate a very good conference and large attendance. All district officers are urged to be present and to send in their reports as soon as possible. All members of the priesthood are also requested to have their reports sent in to Brother Davis on time, so that they may be compiled before the conference. Statistical reports are not necessary at this time. Let us make this conference a success in every way.—Mrs. John Stiegel, district secretary.

Appointment of Bishop's Agent

Because of moving away, William Roy has resigned as bishop's agent of the Alberta District. The Presiding Bishopric, therefore, has appointed Lee Roy Allen, 7210 106th Street, Edmonton, Alberta, as bishop's agent of the Alberta District, effective February 1, 1931.

This appointment of Brother Allen is subject to the ratification of the next district conference.

The solicitors of this district are requested to forward their reports, due February 25, and each month thereafter to Brother Allen at the above address.

We feel confident the Saints of the district will give to him their loyal support, that their united efforts will bring satisfaction to them and benefit to the church.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

By M. H. SIEGFRIED.

Approved by The First Presidency, by F. M. McDowell.

Our Departed Ones

WILLIAMS.—Mary Jane Samuel was born August 6, 1867, in Wales. She answered the call to eternal rest on the morning of January 29, 1931. The relief came after an illness of a number of years' duration. She was patient and long-suffering during the entire time. May 22, 1888, she was united in marriage to William E. Williams. To this union twelve children were born, six of whom survive her. For almost forty-three years she walked down the pathway of life with her beloved husband, sharing the hopes and disappointments, the desires and ambitions, and the joys and sorrows incident to married life. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1890, and for forty-one years she was a faithful member. She is survived by three sons: Thomas S. Williams, of Lamoni, Iowa; Reece Williams, of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Glenn Williams, of LaJunta, Colorado; three daughters: Martha Truman, of Wichita, Kansas; Eleanor Russell, of Norfolk, Nebraska; and Margaret Williams, of Wichita, Kansas; eight grandchildren; four brothers, and four sisters. She was a good mother and a loyal and true Saint. Services were held at the Gill Mortuary at Wichita, Kansas, in charge of the pastor of Wichita Branch, Arthur E. Stoff.

GRAVES.—Edwin B. Graves, son of Fred and Bertie Graves, was born February 21, 1918, at Joplin, Missouri. He passed away early the morning of January 31, 1931, at Saint John's Hospital, Joplin, Missouri, death being caused from injuries received the evening before in a motor car accident. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at the age of eight years. At the time of his death, he was the president of his Sunday school class. He was preceded in death by a brother, who died in infancy. There remain of the immediate family to mourn his passing, the parents, two brothers, James and Harold, and six sisters: Helen, Eva Belle, Ozella, Mary Frances, Margaret, and Margie, a grandmother, many other relatives, and a host of friends. The funeral services were conducted by Elder Frank McDonald, assisted by Elder O. C. Karlstrom, at the Saints' Church in Joplin. Interment was in Fairview Cemetery.

CARR.—Sarah Ellen Mann was born in Stanton, Delaware, October 27, 1873, and died at her home in Elk Mills, Maryland, January 7, 1931, after a lingering illness. On June 11, 1893, she was married to Harry H. Carr, and to them were born five children, two daughters and three sons. Surviving her are her husband; five children: Thomas M. of North Charleroi, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Wilhelmina E. Hubbert, Leroy, Delbert, and Audrey, of Elk Mills, Maryland; eight grandchildren; her parents, George S. and Emma J. Mann; two brothers, and six sisters. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, April 14, 1895, by Elder A. H. Parsons. The funeral services were held in Elk Mills, Maryland, Elder A. H. Parsons conducting and preaching the sermon. Interment was in the Cherry Hill (Maryland) Cemetery.

HOSKYN.—Gladys Ann Hoskyn was born at Oroville, Washington, February 10, 1911. In early childhood she moved with her parents to the Deer Lodge valley, Montana, where she has since made her home, beloved by all who knew her. She passed peacefully away the morning of December 22, 1930, in her twentieth year, leaving to mourn, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Hoskyn, three sisters: Elizabeth Ann, Lillian Jane, Stella Jean, numerous other relatives, and a host of friends. Funeral services were conducted from the Saints' Church in Deer Lodge by D. L. Allen.

REESE.—Gomer Reese was born at Pittston, Pennsylvania, February 18, 1857. He moved to Montana with his parents in 1863, and settled in the western end of the Gallatin valley. December 23, 1875, he married Miss Chloe M. Moore, and to this union were born nine children, four of whom died in infancy or youth. Two sons and three daughters, with Sister Reese, mourn his departure. He has one brother living, Thomas Reese, Independence, Missouri. He was baptized November 12, 1876, by A. B. Moore, and was ordained an elder August 1, 1880, by W. W. Blair. When the Montana District was organized, in 1880, Brother Reese served as the first district secretary. He passed to his reward December 19, 1930, at his home in Bozeman. Funeral services were conducted by D. L. Allen.

EDWARDS.—Myrtle Etta Edwards was born November 12, 1880, at Geneseo, Illinois; baptized October 5, 1921, by John Edwards. She died December 28, 1930, at the hospital in Lancaster, Wisconsin, after a short illness. She was a faithful and efficient worker in the church, and will be very much missed. The funeral was conducted from the Methodist Episcopal Church, which was filled to capacity, the sermon by Elder Amos Berve. Interment was in the Brodsville Cemetery.

KEYPORT.—Mary Elizabeth Donaldson was born August 25, 1870, near Savanna, Illinois, and passed away January 28, 1931, at her home in Cameron, Missouri. She was married at New Hampton, Iowa, August 28, 1889, to William Henry Keyport, who passed away November 11, 1930. They resided the greater part of their life at Packard, Iowa, and moved to Cameron, Missouri, in the fall of 1923. To this union were born five children: Mrs. Maud Tackman, Clarks-ville, Iowa; Mrs. Mable Townsend, Battle Creek, Michigan; Mrs. Alfreda Smith, Winterset, Iowa; and two children who died in infancy. She leaves besides her three daughters, three grandchildren, two great-grandchildren; three sisters, Mrs. Anna Higlin, of Mount Carroll, Illinois; Mrs. Minnie Kirkey, of Hanover, Illinois; and Mrs. Clara Hennigh, of Ulysses, Kansas; and one brother, Charles Donaldson, of Larned, Kansas. On July 7, 1894, she united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, being baptized by Elder W. H. Kephart. To this faith she remained true till death. She was always found at her post of duty, willing to make any sacrifice to forward the cause she so much loved.

STROEBEL.—Eva May Stroebel was born January 3, 1860, at Monroe, Wisconsin; baptized a member of the church July 25, 1919, at Portor, Wisconsin. Death came to her as a release from suffering January 21, 1931, at Peoria, Illinois. For almost thirty years she had suffered severely with rheumatism and at the time of her death was entirely helpless. She was a faithful member of the church, but could attend services only when some kind-hearted Saint brought her. Her husband preceded her in death. Surviving are three sons in Peoria and a sister in Chicago. The funeral was conducted by the Reverend Munns, of Peoria, at Boland's Undertaking Parlors. She was a daughter of the American Revolution, which organization assisted at the memorial services.

TURNER.—Luella May Turner was born February 10, 1881, at Wheeler's Grove, Iowa, and died December 5, 1930, at Chico, California. She is survived by her husband, Fred A. Turner, two sons, Lyle and Leslie, of Chico; her mother, Mrs. Stephen H. Opsal; and three sisters: Mrs. Irene Henry, of Oakland, California; Mrs. Mattie Uhl, and Mrs. Ethel Bailey, Chico. The funeral service was conducted by G. P. Levitt, and interment was in Chico, California. Mrs. Turner was baptized at Smithland, Iowa, by Elder F. E. Chort in 1896.

DELONG.—Editha Brooks, eldest child of Mr. and Mrs. J. Vardaman Brooks, was born in Kentucky December 7, 1849, and brought by her parents to Harrison County, Missouri, about ten miles from Lamoni, Iowa, when she was but six months of age. She grew to womanhood there and February 18, 1866, married Isaac Newton DeLong, who had lived a neighbor just across the Iowa line in Decatur County since 1851 or 1852. To them were born thirteen children, nine of whom survive: Mrs. Rose Manchester, Davis City; Mrs. Mulda

Important Changes in Financial Program

The swiftly shifting economic and social conditions have necessitated in recent months readjustments in practically all organizations in order to meet the changed conditions. The character of some organizations permits a rapid adjustment, while others have difficulty in overcoming the inertia of momentum. In the latter class the church falls, and we will probably experience the hardships contingent upon such conditions. Several trains of circumstances and conditions have run together to present a perplexing situation. This situation the councils of the church have been facing and attempting to meet by careful analysis with resultant method of procedure.

The Appropriations Committee was scheduled to meet the first of December last, but the meeting was postponed; and later the date was set for February 12. Previous thereto the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric met, and the condition of the church and affairs in general were discussed at length as well as later in the meeting of the Appropriation Committee.

At the opening session of the Appropriations Committee, I as President of the church, announced that the resignations of Bishops Becker and Siegfried had been presented to me, and accepted; and that I had appointed to fill the vacancies Bishops L. F. P. Curry and G. L. DeLapp, these brethren having indicated their willingness to accept the responsibility.

These appointments were made with the idea of Bishops Curry and DeLapp bringing the results of a wide experience in business circles to the assistance of the Presidency and Bishopric in guiding the policies of the financial department in carrying into effect a program which was presented to the council by the President. Bishop Carmichael retains the position of Presiding Bishop. To this arrangement Bishop Carmichael has given his consent and promise of full and hearty cooperation.

The program presented by me is one looking to reduction of church debt and cessation of expansion in building, etc., until proper reserves have been established. It is well that I should here present to the church the program suggested. In presenting the matter to the Appropriations Committee, and suggesting the reorganization of the Presiding Bishopric, I said:

The reorganization indicated in the foregoing should be had with the following objectives in view, here expressed in general terms, without attempt to elaborate or even suggest the details. These can well be left to the Bishopric to work out:

1. Enter upon a concerted and concentrated program of debt reduction, with the object of eliminating all interest-bearing credits, especially those held by persons or institutions other than our own members or concerns.
  2. Placing, as soon as possible, all notes, bills, accounts payable upon the basis of definite maturity, with suitable plan of amortization.
  3. With the reduction of the interest-bearing debt well under way, create definite reserves or surplus funds, and increase these reserves until the appropriations can be had on the basis of money or funds in hand rather than anticipated or probable income.
  4. To accomplish the foregoing it will be necessary to agree upon a non-expansion program until a large enough reserve has been created to justify resumption of expansion program.
  5. Limit all building to structures whose need is beyond question, and then build only as the money is in hand.
  6. Go upon a budget basis which will keep the appropriations within the limits which will make the foregoing possible.
  7. Reduce the overhead expenses of both field and local work.
  8. Reduce salaries and allowances of stipendiaries, always of course with specific factors in view and consideration.
  9. Convert into cash, holdings and properties now owned by the church but which are not needed or used for local or general church activities, as soon as is practicable without undue loss, and apply the proceeds to reducing the interest-bearing debt, especially where held by nonmembers.
  10. Reduce overhead at the general offices.
  11. Find work, church or otherwise, for many who are now drawing allowances for which little or no return is made.
  12. Increase the efficiency of all workers, departments, and offices, where necessary or possible.
  13. Refund the college endowment as soon as practicable, and invest it in a variety of securities of well-known safety.
- To reduce the appropriations to a point where there will be a margin to apply on debt retirement, basing the appropriations on the lowest probable income, will under present conditions be necessarily extended over a long period, and a span of a decade may be required to eliminate the debt and create the desired reserves.

This plan was discussed at great length, and by a unanimous vote was approved. And every member of the council pledged himself to the support of such program.

Acting from this basis, the Appropriations Committee approached its task, and as a result there has been a marked reduction of appropriations in all departments of the church work.

To meet the reduction, the work of some departments will for a time at least cease, and their tasks will be absorbed by other departments where possible and the work must be done.

As a result of the reduction of appropriations, the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric entered upon the difficult task of reducing the number of appointees. It has become necessary to release a large number of men, and these men in turn have the difficult task of readjusting themselves to changed conditions.

Together with this there will be a reduction in allowances, and salaries or wages, as well, in all departments, with a curtailment of expenses. In the many instances where approach to men and departments has been made with reduction of budget in view, there has been found a fine spirit of cooperation and cheerful willingness to make the readjustments, even though some hardship might be entailed.

The release of men from the appointment list will in many if not all instances throw a larger responsibility of work upon the local members of the priesthood; but I feel quite certain that the local men will respond with characteristic loyalty and devotion.

The adoption of the program above outlined in general means a distinct curtailment of expansion, and to this I have given my consent and promise of hearty cooperation in working for the objectives indicated. Our expansion has perhaps been too rapid to properly absorb and assimilate, and efforts now made to consolidate the ground gained will strengthen our position.

In a short time there will be forthcoming from the Presidency and Bishopric epistles and letters to the Saints which will further inform them on the program and plans.

We are in the midst of trying times; but we as a people have been tried before, and are, perhaps, all willing to be tried again; for the Lord tests his people before he imposes greater tasks.

As soon as the present Council meetings of the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric shall have finished their arduous tasks, the members of the Twelve will take the field, looking to a more compact and harmonious organization and larger activity of the local priesthood, branch, and district organizations, in a unified plan of work and progress.

Reflections of the Week

One of the most important items in this week's Herald is the article "Pre-Easter Missionary Activities," by F. H. Edwards of the Quorum of Twelve. Needless to say, every branch officer and indeed every parent should study the article carefully for local use.

* * * * *

Many of the leading churches of the country are facing grave financial difficulties. Open expressions of their concern appear in church and other periodicals. Our church is no exception. "These are times that try men's souls." They have to decide frequently between the necessities of life and the obligations of religion that they acknowledge. And in many cases the most generous of people can give nothing because for the time they have too little for their necessities, let alone for their benevolences.

* * * * *

Most people divide what they have as best they can to keep both church and home financed. It is a tribute to the work of the church that even in the hardest of times people will sacrifice to support it.

* * * * *

"Brother Elbert's" Blue Pencil Notes have been prevented from appearing this week due to the unexpected length of this week's official communication, for which sufficient space was not allowed. The Notes will appear next week, and there will be plenty of space provided for them.

* * * * *

Readers will note that the "Little Journeys" with the Editor in Chief have been shifted from the News to another department. This is for a purpose of our own.

The belief in God is here. I accept it not because it is proved but because it appears to me the best explanation of the universe of men and things which I can find. If the belief can be proved to be out of line with human reason—that is to say, if it can be positively disproved by irrefutable logic, I stand ready to surrender it. No such disproof, however, is yet in sight, and when it does come in sight it will travel upon basic assumptions which can not be proved. I shall always reserve the right to look both at the logic and the assumptions.—Francis J. McConnell.

Fences for Christians to Straddle

By Evan A. Fry

"No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye can not serve God and mammon."
—Matthew 6: 24.

A casual glance at the churches and church members about us today, or at the history of individuals and institutions of the past two centuries, will prove that ever since these words were uttered, and probably for centuries before that, man has consistently refused to believe that they were true, and has devoted his life to the task of trying to prove that he would be an exception to the rule—that he could serve God on Sunday and mammon the rest of the week. Occasionally the drab picture is illuminated by the life of some man or woman who takes this statement at face value and surrenders everything to Christ, but most of us ignorantly or willfully or carelessly try to maintain a position astride the fence so that we can get to either side conveniently as occasion demands. The world has an attraction for us that even religion and Christ and his church can not always successfully combat because of the deep-rooted love of worldly things in the hearts of the church's members, and too often the church and the cause of Christ are crippled and handicapped because its members are neither saints nor sinners; they are just ordinary, medium grade, lukewarm, fence-straddling Christians.

But let us stop being general and use some specific examples. Some men find themselves carried away by the quest for money. Day after day they work long hours, neglecting wife and family and home, and seldom or never going to church, or taking any part in the religious life of their chosen congregation. Oh, yes, they are interested in the church; they wouldn't invest their money in a town where there were no churches, but after six days of hard work and strenuous nervous activity they would much prefer to stay at home and read the funny paper and the sport page on Sunday morning. Time to pray? Well, no, not always; that is, scarcely ever. The wife takes care of that and sees that the children say their prayers every night, but they just can't find time to do it.

Of course money isn't the only thing that men can seek so assiduously that they forget God. They may seek power, or fame, or position, or influential friends, or postage stamps, or Chinese pottery—or, in fact, almost anything will do, if the man has an overwhelming hobby for it. Then, too, there are the people who profess to belong to a church, but who say that they must have a little recreation now and then; that they can't go to church all the time.

Very true; God never expected people to spend every spare moment of their time in church, but he does expect them to spend every moment of time in something which will make them better people—people more fitted for a life with other perfect souls in the land beyond. And it is just here that most people refuse to make their break with the world. They get the idea somehow that religion is a sort of dolorous and lugubrious process, and that every so often a really live person must break away from it all and hunt some excitement. I'll almost agree to that, but not without qualifications. Even religion—at least certain kinds of religion—can get very monotonous, and the man engaged in the most Christlike work is very apt to get tired of it. What he needs, however, is a change in the kind of work, not in the quality of it. He doesn't need to stop being good a while and turn bad just for the sake of variety. He can temporarily stop one kind of good works and seek out some equally good and appealing recreation which will leave him a better man, refreshed and renewed for the recurring labors of another day or another year.

It is in precisely this respect that many Christians make their big mistake. They have the idea that in order to shake off the boredom of religion they must approach the borders of wickedness, just for the sake of a little recreation and variety. Are you trying to serve the Lord in your daily work and Sunday worship, yet trying to serve mammon in your recreation? To be still more explicit—I have maintained for years, and shall continue to maintain, that theater going in itself is not an evil, but I do sadly admit that going to the average modern theater is more like serving the Devil than serving God. I have seen plays presented from the secular stage which were a benediction and a blessing from God—which did me more good and cleansed my soul more thoroughly than many a sermon could have done. But if I go to a theater seeking some recreation which will also make me a better Christian, I wonder whether I find it if I come away with vivid memories of glossed-over immoralities and lewdness and unfaithfulness and profanities and obscenities to haunt me through the coming weeks. If I attend a dance looking for some refreshing recreation for my soul as well as for my body, and come away with a mind intoxicated by savage music and a body inflamed by lust, am I serving God, or Mammon? There isn't time this morning to run through the list of things which Christians do which drive the Spirit of God far away from them. You can probably name several which are bothering you right now. I'm sure I can.

The soul that wants to be truly happy must have given itself completely to God—must have cut all ties which bind it to a corrupt and sinful world. Dwight L. Moody used to tell a story of two men who came down to the waterfront late one night in an exaggerated state of intoxication, intending to get into a rowboat and row across the bay to their homes on the other side. They rowed all night very patiently and assiduously, only to find in the morning that they had not moved from their starting place. Daylight revealed that they had forgotten to untie the rope which held them to the wharf. When you began your journey to Christ and an immortal life in his kingdom, did you untie the rope, or will you wake up some morning to find that you are still tied to the wharf of this world?

Pre-Easter Missionary Activities

By F. H. Edwards

By common custom among the various Protestant denominations, the pre-Easter season has come to be regarded as a time of intensive missionary activity. During these weeks the combined forces of the churches are being used to increase the number of church members. In all the larger cities of the United States, special effort is being made to promote great ingathering into active church membership.

Because of the background provided by this intensive activity, and for the special reason that the present industrial depression has made men peculiarly susceptible to religious influences, it is particularly timely that we shall observe the month preceding Easter as a period of special missionary activity throughout the church, in accordance with the instruction of the recent General Conference.

The brethren under missionary appointment will be actively engaged in their missionary duties during this period. Work along these lines can not be greatly intensified except as added experience enables the brethren to do better work in the same time and with the same sacrifice that they have hitherto put forth.

The distinctive call at this season is, therefore, for church-wide local cooperation in missionary endeavor. All the signs point to the coming of a great revival, and this revival will be hastened in the measure that we increase the missionary productivity of our local forces at this time. The church spread in the Roman Empire because of the testimony of the saints, and the book of Acts tells the story of this wonderful achievement. A new book of Acts can be written in our day if we will rise to our opportunity. The power of God is in no sense diminished. He is depending on us.

One of the most successful methods which we have yet discovered for winning people to the church is to hold special classes for preparation for church membership. These classes can be held in any branch over a period of four to six weeks, and for one, two, or even three nights a week. Persons who have a passing acquaintance with the church or an undeveloped interest in its program should be urged to join these classes. The purpose of the classes should be to present in a constructive and inviting way the fundamental requirements of sainthood, and the material presented should of course be adapted to the needs of the people in the class. Some excellent outlines and suggestions for use in connection with these classes have already been published, as follows:

Preparation for Church Membership (Adults), by C. E. Wight:

Lesson One—Why Join the Church? (Herald for May 14, 1930.)

Lesson Two—The Functions of the Church. (Herald for May 14, 1930.)

Lesson Three—The Structure of the Church. (Herald for May 21, 1930.)

Our Program of Evangelism, by C. B. Woodstock, Department Journal, May, 1930.

Decision Day, by C. B. Woodstock, Herald for October 8, 1930.

In addition to the foregoing, considerable help can be gained from study of our outstanding tracts. These are also invaluable for personal study. Here is a selected list of tracts which can be secured from the Herald Office:

The Angel Message Series:

What Did Jesus Preach?	A Glimpse of the Govern- ment of God.
Faith in God: Is It Scien- tific.	The Apostolic Office.
Repentance.	The Moral Code.
Baptism in Water.	The Latter Day Work.
Baptism of the Spirit.	The Sublimation of Labor.
Laying on of Hands.	A Remarkable Church with an Unusual Mes- sage.
Immortality and the Res- urrection.	The Apostasy and the Res- toration.
The Eternal Judgment.	The Dollar Library.
Latter Day Saints, and What They Believe.	This is a selection of tracts numbering over thirty and containing subjects to cover the entire field with du- plications eliminated.
The Latter Day Glory.
The Church of Jesus Christ.
The Book of Mormon Veri- fied.

For a more extended class study some of our books prove excellent texts. Among these are the following:

The Old Jerusalem Gospel, by Joseph Luff. An old-timer, but still extremely valuable.

Joseph Smith Defended. A very able presentation.

The Fall of Babylon. An extensive treatment on the Apostasy, Reformation, and Restoration.

Man Here and Hereafter. A comprehensive study of the nature and destiny of man.

The Call at Evening. A splendid church novel for adult readers. Has been a major factor in winning many converts.

A further desirable method of evangelization at this time is the preaching of special "invitation" sermons on Sunday evenings. It is presupposed in preaching these sermons, however, that they have been preceded by informative missionary sermons such as are being delivered Sunday evenings in a large number of the more progressive branches of the church. It is quite unwise to invite people to accept the responsibility of church membership until they are well acquainted with the meaning of these responsibilities and eager to accept and discharge them.

Basic to any method of successful evangelism is personal invitation and testimony on the part of the membership of the church. During this pre-Easter period, then, Saints everywhere should be particularly active in personal witness regarding the work of the church and the saving power of the gospel.

Those to whom this witness is taken should be invited to attend services and should be followed up with tactful and intelligent persistence. Branch and district presidents will do well to reread the carefully written articles on the prospect list, published in the Herald for July 16, 23, 30, and August 6, 1930. These articles are available in pamphlet form from the Herald Office. The pamphlet on "The Place and Meaning of Personal Evangelism" (10 cents) should also be found useful.

During this period quite a number of people will probably become interested in church work but will not be brought to the point of decision. Do not allow these people to slip away from the influence which has been developed. Keep them coming to the services. Subscribe to the Ensign for them at the nonmember subscription rate of sixty cents a year. Visit with them socially. Loan them books and tracts. Keep the good work going: Your testimony may win another Paul or another Peter, for whose coming the church is waiting. Your class may build an important nucleus for the church in your city.

Social Aspects of the Message of Jesus

By A. B. Phillips

13. Social Significance of the Church

The program of Jesus was of such universal and far-reaching importance that it must be promulgated and maintained by the organized cooperation of its adherents. The laws of nature show that all of the forces of God are admirably organized for their intended purpose. The Savior could not adapt the political or social organizations of the world to his use, for they were in opposition to the spirit which must actuate his people in all of their relationships. His followers—the called-out ones, the church—must function as a united and mighty society, with power to regenerate and transform men into new creatures having new ideals, new vision, and new purposes.

Jesus provided for the church to represent him and to function as the visible family of God on earth. It must, therefore, be organized flexibly enough to reach every problem, yet strong enough to sustain the many burdens it must bear, and so efficient in all of its varied activities that the well-being of man and the growth of the kingdom should be promoted. It must be aggressive in giving to all men the transforming message of life, or it will become like the salt that has lost its power to season. Its great responsibility to society is revealed in the admonition:

Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill can not be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 5: 14-16.

To the extent that the church has failed to recognize its great social responsibility to be the light of the world, to that extent its light has become darkness. It was the divine power of the church to bear witness that Peter exemplified when he declared, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus himself declared that Peter received it as a revelation from God, and solemnly affirmed:

I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Matthew 16: 18.

The power of the church to convert the world and promote the new social order is dependent upon its own social solidarity and whole-hearted support of the Master's program. Our Lord was deeply concerned for the unity of his people, and earnestly prayed:

That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.—John 17: 21.

The Savior knew, however, that even in his church the imperfections of human nature would be manifested, and the church must therefore at times deal with them in order to preserve the discipline and fraternity of the body. For this reason he directed that one who refused to be reconciled with his brother should be accountable to the church, upon which he conferred remarkable powers to represent the kingdom of God on earth. Concerning the incorrigible member of the church he commanded:

But if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican. Verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.—Matthew 18: 17, 18.

The social powers of the church are here made evident. If unregenerate, unsocial, and disruptive forces were permitted to contaminate the body, it could never accomplish its mission among men. He who will not fraternize and cooperate with the church can not obtain or appreciate its benefits, and is not in reality consecrated to its divinely ordained program, or converted to its social precepts.

14. The Social Law of Gathering

Inasmuch as the church was made the divine nucleus of God's kingdom on earth, it must bring together such individuals as are able and willing to be assimilated into the body. The principles which Jesus taught are attractive to those who possess the qualities which God can use for this purpose. Therefore the proper presentation of his message by a unified church should bring together a body of people who will work faithfully and in concord to accomplish the work divinely intrusted to it. The nature of the message itself tends to bring into the fraternity of the body such as shall be fit for the kingdom of God.

The law of church association demands that the members of Christ's body shall be welded together in devotion to his ideals and program. This devotion is the soil in which thrives the greatest social principle known to man, the love for each other which Jesus both taught and exemplified. It produces an equality and a bond which is closer and stronger than death, which manifests the spirit of the Savior's admonition:

But be not ye called Rabbi; for one is your Rabbi, and ye are all brethren. And ye shall not call yourselves Father on earth; for one is your Father, who is in heaven. And be ye not called guides; for one is your Guide, the Messiah. And the great one among you shall be your servitor.—Matthew 23: 8-11, Syriac Version.

It is the spirit and bond of this association which brings the very presence of Christ, and is the required condition of his promise:

Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.—Matthew 18: 20.

Those who are in harmony with Christ possess the basis of harmony with each other; and thus form a concordant body. This is the divine foundation on which his people are brought together, concerning which he declares:

He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad.—Matthew 12: 30.

It was the purpose of Jesus to gather together his people. Before he finally declared the rejection of the Jews, the high priest Caiaphas was permitted to prophesy and declare concerning it:

Being high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation; and not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together the children of God that were scattered abroad.—John 11: 51, 52.

That this is a part of the program of our Lord was clearly indicated in his solemn lament over the rejected Jews, in which he declared:

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not!—Luke 13: 34.

The social program of Jesus will not be completed until the gathering of his people is accomplished. He refers to it as a great consummation, saying: "They shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."—Matthew 24: 31. This great work shall finally bring in the kingdom of God triumphant, and shall be crowned by the glorious reign of the King of kings and Lord of lords, when all his people at last are ready for his coming, of which he says:

Whithersoever the saints are gathered, . . . thither will the remainder be gathered together. This he spake, signifying the gathering of his saints; and of angels descending and gathering the remainder unto them.—Luke 17: 37, 38, Inspired Version.

Thus in fulfillment of the Beatitudes of Jesus, the pure in heart, the poor in spirit, the peacemakers, and the meek, shall inherit the kingdom where pride, arrogance, and selfishness can not enter.

Hot Drinks

My Own Experience

I have proved to my own satisfaction that the Lord was right when he said hot drinks are not good for man. As I said in the beginning of this article, I was raised by parents who believed in the Word of Wisdom according to its literal interpretation, and while my mother used these beverages moderately, my father never touched them, and I hardly knew what they tasted like. I did take a cup of tea occasionally when having a sick headache, as it would relieve me, but as a beverage they were taboo. When I became a man, or to that age that I could make a hand in the field, I hired out to a neighbor whose wife was an expert coffee maker, and she gave me a cup for my morning meal as regularly as the morning came. I soon found out from experience that it was not good for me, and told the lady that I would not drink it any more. She thought to tempt me into breaking my word and set the cup of coffee at my plate every morning for one week, but I refused to touch it, although God knows I wanted it, and wanted it bad. At the seventh time, the lady picked up the cup untasted, with the remark: "I will not tempt you further, but I wish I had your resolution." For a month or more, no matter how heartily I might eat of the morning meal, I felt as though I had not eaten breakfast. This feeling would pass away about eleven o'clock, but the next morning it was back again. After it finally passed away, so far as daily recurrence was concerned, it would return at times with an intensity that was almost irresistible, but I persevered, and it finally left me entirely. This experience does not come with any of the other so-called "hot drinks," such as cocoa, chocolate, Postum, and so forth. I can drink these beverages for a year and break them off immediately, and feel no bad effects. However, I seldom indulge in even these, as I do not think that they are of any special benefit. They are considered foods, however.

Foods may be distinguished from stimulants in this way: One food will take the place of another food. If I do not have enough bread to satisfy my hunger, I can supply the need with potatoes, meat, or any other food, and not feel lacking in something. But with stimulants it is different. A man may stuff himself with food, but if he is in the habit of smoking, he fills his pipe, lights his cigar or cigaret, often before he leaves the table. If he is addicted to the use of coffee, tea, or liquor, his meal is never complete without them; no amount of food will take their place. One form of stimulant will not take the place of another form of stimulant. The tea drinker must have his tea, the coffee drinker his coffee, and so on.

The Moral Phase

Of this phase of the question Winfield S. Hall, M. D., of Northwestern University Medical School, says:

Let us discuss briefly this question of sense gratification. There are five senses: The tactile sense, the sense of smell, the sense of taste, hearing, and vision. Animal organisms in general, including man, are endowed by nature with these senses for particular purposes; for protection from danger, for the discovery, selection, and procuring of the proper food, drink, and air; finally, for increasing the happiness or well-being of the race; that is, of the associate, and especially of posterity. The use of these five senses in the pursuit of any or all of these objects always results in their higher development. The exercise of any power or attribute of the body in a legitimate use gives the animal pleasure, an exhilaration, a consciousness of gratification. This experience of pleasure is nature's compensation for activity. Man has become very ingenious in devising means for sense gratification. It may be stated as a general principle limiting self-gratification that those forms which benefit the individual benefit the race, while those forms which do not benefit the individual injure the race. And how will the useless gratification of sense injure the race? By adding to the moderate influence of heredity the very strong influence of environment; the two factors working together to make the following generation less resistant to temptation.

Students of humanity and society tell us that the race is more important than the individual, and that the great problems of society are those which deal with the comfort or well-being of the race. If this be true, it must follow that any act which benefits the race is legitimate and to be encouraged, while any act which injures the race is illegitimate and to be discouraged.

If we accept the premises, it leads us inevitably to the conclusion that even the moderate use of tobacco by adults is to be discouraged, though we view the question from the standpoint of the physical effects alone. If we are to bring in questions of aesthetics, of the greatest good to the greatest number, of economy, etc., we would be repeatedly led to the same conclusion: that the moderate use of tobacco by the adult is to be discouraged.—Tract on "Tobacco," pages 10, 11.

It is true that Doctor Hall is talking about the effects of tobacco, but the same thing may be said of tea and coffee. I shall give two instances, one of each. The New York Medical Journal, several years ago, published the following:

When the Europeans first visited New Zealand they found the natives the most finely developed and powerful men among the Islanders of the Pacific. Since the introduction of tobacco, for which these men developed a passionate liking, they have, from this source alone, become decimated in numbers, and so reduced in stature and physical well-being as to be altogether an inferior type of men.

And the following on the question of tea and its effects on the future generation:

A writer in the London Telegraph contributes some interesting suggestions to the discussion, and takes the ground that nothing has more seriously injured the health of women of the working classes than the cheapening of tea. He adds, "I have no hesitancy in saying that it is the constant drinking of strong tea which makes the women of our toiling masses delicate, and their children anæmic; for not only do these latter inherit that weakness from their mothers, but become ever greater sinners in this direction than their parents."

This same writer, and in the same article, says: "Many warnings have been given against tea intemperance, especially if the tea be iced." This seems to indicate that iced tea is more injurious than warm tea, and furnishes another evidence that it is not the temperature that is especially hurtful.

The two incidents above quoted seem to place tobacco and tea, at least, in the same class, both hurtful to the human system, and an indulgence in their use unfits one to become a father or mother in the fullest sense. And if it unfits one to function fully in this, would it not hinder the fullest exercise of one's faculties along all the lines of activity. I think there is a great temperance lecture in the incident that is related of the eminent European surgeon, Doctor Lorenz. It is said that at one time when he visited this country, and a banquet was given in his honor, wine was served at the table, but he refused to partake. When he was asked if he was a total abstainer from such beverages, his answer was:

I can not say that I am a temperance agitator, but I am a surgeon. My success depends upon my brains being clear, my muscles firm, and my nerves steady. No one can take alcoholic liquors without blunting these physical powers which I must keep always on edge. As a surgeon I must not drink.

Here is the crux of the whole matter. If indulging in tea, coffee, tobacco, strong drinks, or any other form of narcotics, lessens our powers, physically, mentally, or spiritually, and the consensus of opinion seems to indicate that they do thus affect us, the one who indulges in these things is not serving God with all his might, mind, and strength. It would be well for all Latter Day Saints to think of the answer that Doctor Lorenz made to the inquiry if he were a total abstainer. Surely our work as spiritual advisers is as important as the surgeon's. The surgeon deals with the body, while we deal with the soul's welfare, and surely it is important that we keep our faculties always on edge.

It would be well, too, if we would always remember the principle laid down by Doctor Hall, and given before: "It may be stated as a general principle limiting self-gratification that those forms which benefit the individual benefit the race, while those forms which do not benefit the individual injure the race," and govern ourselves accordingly.

I am not a crank. I am not a fanatic. Cranks and fanatics do not deal in cold facts. I do, however, want to see God's word regarded and honored. And if the Word of Wisdom is God's word, I would like to see it obeyed. I believe that God's commands are given to us because he wants us to get the most out of life. It is a manifestation of his great love for us. Surely we should be grateful to him for this manifestation, and avail ourselves of the knowledge he imparts to us, whether it comes by way of command or advice. Any other course is bound to result disastrously. This is just as inevitable as that night follows day.

The Story of My Life

II. FIRST CONTACT WITH THE CHURCH

By Arthur Leverton

As told to Nellie Andrew and Illa Brown.

The following summer we had preaching, class meetings, and Sunday school, and I took an active part in the last two. One Sunday, returning from Sunday school and class meeting, I was invited by Mr. John Dent to go and take dinner with him and another gentleman by the name of Kirk. After dinner Mr. Dent and Mr. Kirk entered into a scriptural conversation, the principal topic being the signs following the believer. After considerable discussion on the subject, Mr. Dent made the remark: "Why don't the signs follow the believer nowadays?" to which question no reply was made by Mr. Kirk. Disappointed at not having the question answered, I spoke up and said, "I will tell you what I think about the matter. I think if you can find the true believers in Christ Jesus today, you will find the same spiritual signs following them." To this answer my older brethren seemed astonished, but after a moment's pause Mr. Dent said, "Well, I don't know, but I think Arthur is about half right."

The next winter, 1859, I took a job of cutting down twenty acres of heavy timber from a man by the name of Hartwick, he giving me my board and a span of colts for pay. I completed the entire work without any help, took the colts home, and gave them to my father. The following summer I worked for farmers, but when winter came on I went to work in the lumber woods. Here I soon drifted with the tide in the river I had set sail upon, with one exception, and that was drinking liquor, and the temptation was very strong to lead me off in that direction. But the dead past would come to life, and the covenant I had made would come up anew before me, and then I would say: "No, I will not follow the drunkard's steps." From the lumber woods I went to work in the sawmill, working in all the departments of the mill, from tail sawyer, to head sawyer, and from fireman to engineer. Up to this time I had helped my father pay off the debt on his small farm, clear it up, and build a barn, having faith and confidence in God that if I did what was right with my parents the Lord would bless me in future days. But I don't wish to convey by the above statement that I was trying to live a life devoted to God. Oh, no! I had become reckless as regards to religion, and very sinful; I had contracted the very bad habit of swearing and taking the name of God in vain.

About this time, 1864, I left home with the intention of doing something for myself towards getting a future home. Before leaving home I gave my folks all the money I had, save fifty cents.

About this time the Latter Day Saints had held services in the neighborhood of Mr. Elgin, viz, Louisville, seven miles east of Chatham, and a number in that vicinity had joined them. The excitement was running high. The "Mormons" was what they were called, and of course we thought that was just what they were. During the summer the neighbors were called out to do statute labor, the so-called Mormons with the rest. It was only a short time after we met on the work before the discussion—or I should call it persecution—of the "Mormons" commenced and was kept up all day. It pleased our pathmaster, for he was bitter against them, and so long as we were giving the "Mormons" "Hail Columbia" he did not seem to care whether we were doing any work or not, and we young fellows soon took in the situation. As I had read Female Life among the Mormons, I seemed to be a little better posted than the rest, so I confess I took a very prominent part in the discussion, though not because I had any ill-feelings toward the "Mormons" or cared in the least what anybody believed or how they worshiped God. If they were pleased, I was satisfied. The main object was to get the best of the pathmaster, and we got it. But just before quitting work in the evening, Mr. John Traxler (one of the so-called Mormons) and I were talking, when all at once he stopped work and looked at me very earnestly and said, "Young man, you have had a great deal to say today about the Mormons, but I will be mistaken if I don't live to see the day when you will be a Mormon, as you call them." I made light of the idea, of course, but an old Negro who was close by and had not taken any part before spoke up and said, "I have been out to hear those people preach, and all I have to say they preach more Scripture than any other people I have ever heard." This statement made an impression upon my mind that never could be eradicated, and from that moment I made up my mind that if I ever had an opportunity to hear them preach, I would go and hear them.

Immediately after leaving those parts, I came home and went to work in the lumber woods hewing timber, etc. During that fall and winter the dancing parties were my craze. My time and finances were greatly taken up with the dances. Towards spring a man by the name of Mr. Hooper, a Methodist minister, conducted a protracted meeting in the neighborhood, and, as my inclinations always did lead to a better life, I finally attended those meetings and joined the Methodist Church. I continued with them until I was married. Then I entered another sphere of life, having married Mary Porter, the only child in the family, on the fourth day of May, 1868.

After my marriage I commenced to investigate the doctrine of baptism, as I became quite unsettled on that point, and at a district meeting they put me on the Methodist plan as an exalter. That rather agitated my mind, as I did not think I was a very competent man to go on preaching to others. That led to a deeper investigation, and I commenced reading other writings on the matter. The minister and I had several discussions on the subject. The further we went, the more he convinced me immersion was right and affusion was wrong. Consequently, in October I made application to the Baptist Church to be baptized, thinking I was getting nearer to God and would enjoy a greater measure of his Spirit. But I was disappointed, with the exception of being in harmony with the law of words, and my spiritual experience did not increase any. Then I thought I was clear of preaching. I did not feel confident. But to my surprise, the Baptist authorities announced that I would fill a certain appointment that they had for preaching. I was quite displeased with this, but there was such a large gathering that I did not like to disappoint them, so I filled the appointment, giving the authorities to understand that I did not want to do that any more. They wanted to know why. I said, that the authority of preaching became a question in my mind. I had had no call from God to preach the gospel, and it occurred to my mind that no man has a right to preach unless he is called of God.

Little Journeys with the Editor in Chief

To Lamoni

On Thursday night, January 29, in my home, my daughter Lois and I were entertaining a life-long friend and his companion, and a pleasant evening was in progress of development. The telephone rang, and on answering it the voice of Brother John F. Garver from the other end of the line said: "Fred, my wife has just telephoned me from Lamoni and told me that the old Brick Church is burning—the roof has just fallen in."

Well, not pleasant news that! It came as a distinctly disruptive factor in pleasantries and social amenities; yet we must at times, aye, often, carry on with smiles when frowns might more nearly represent our feelings. But I had a pleasant evening of reminiscence and chat, anyway.

Later in the evening another telephone call brought the news from another source. This time it was Bishop DeLapp, calling from Lamoni. "Come and cheer us up," was the chief message. So next morning after a conference with some of the brothers at the Auditorium, it was decided that some of us from headquarters should go. After hasty preparation and a busy few hours at the desk, and about three o'clock in the afternoon of Friday, the 30th, Brothers A. Carmichael and John Garver and I left the Auditorium in my Nash car, and laid a course north towards Lamoni. We had decided to go by way of Highway 69, so went first to Courtney, a village just north of Independence, lying at the foot of the Missouri River Bluffs on the south side of the bottoms. Then over a badly pitted but graded road across the bottoms, to what is termed the New Liberty Bridge, built a short time ago over the river.

A toll was collected from us at the bridge. I am, perhaps, not different from many other persons in having a dislike for tolls, either road or bridge. Just how that dislike was formed I have never analyzed. But as Brother Carmichael paid the toll this time, the resentment was not so strongly stirred. Some day, however, the State may buy the Liberty Bridge and make it a free passage one. It may be that such objective was in view by the builders.

The short distance from the bridge to Liberty negotiated, we entered Highway 69 and were soon rolling rapidly along an old macadam road, but one in splendid condition, towards Excelsior Springs. Between the Springs and Cameron, because of road construction being in progress in places, bridges and fills, some short detours were made. Everyone knows what to expect on detours. But they were "not too bad," as a Canadian would say.

A brief stop for gas was made at Cameron, and then onward. But I will not here attempt a description of the journey in detail. Suffice it to say that with a good "slab" of concrete most of the way, and the dirt roads in good condition because of an extraordinarily mild and dry winter, we made good time all the way. To us who had been reared on the prairies of the great Mississippi Valley, in Iowa, remembering as well we might the rigorous winters, the snow, and ice, and keen cutting winds, it seemed a remarkable experience to be riding swiftly along a clear highway, no snow in sight on a day at the close of January with car windows open, no overcoats on, and with a gentle wind, almost balmy, blowing. No wonder we could make good time. So Pattonsburg, Bethany, and Eagleville were laid behind the swiftly moving Nash, and we were at the State line. Familiar ground here, to Brother Garver and me, old-time ball players and fans.

And as I entered the town of Lamoni on its southern border, over a smoothly laid concrete road, graded according to modern engineering principles and methods, I could not but contrast the road conditions with some I recalled. I quite well remember the clay hill south of town, short, steep, and slippery, which in rainy and wet weather was such a task to negotiate, either up or down.

In on State Street, we determined to go at once to the church offices in the town center; but as we crossed Sixth Street, we could not refrain from taking a look in the direction of Clark and Sixth Streets. Just a mass of crumbled walls over which rose the thin smoke of smoldering ruins.

From the moment the news of the burning of the church reached me, I found a constant tendency for thoughts to turn to the experiences of earlier days, and on the trip many instances of the past connected with the Brick Church and earlier days were commented upon. So as I nosed the Nash into the curb across the street south from the church offices, at the corner of Linden and Main Streets, is it any wonder that the brick wall of "White's Store" was for the moment metamorphosed by memory into the red wooden wall of "Tom Teal's store" of 1881? The time of putting the front wheel against the curb that day was about 5.40. We had reached Lamoni without delay. At least quite a number of people think there was no delay on our trip, despite our asseverations that several detours delayed somewhat. I was interested in noting that the odometer showed a distance from the Auditorium to Lamoni center of about 130 miles, the shortest distance I ever remember of traveling between the two towns. When 69 is completed, the distance will be somewhat shorter yet.

Well, up the stairs into the church offices, we were soon in conference with Brothers Thomas, DeLapp, and others of Lamoni Stake. About what were we talking? Why ask? First we from the south wanted to learn what we could about the disaster which had destroyed a well-known landmark. And then the chief theme became, What shall we do? And so plans for future activities were discussed in their general aspects. It was evident in a very few moments that if we were to judge the Lamoni Saints by the officials with whom we were discussing the situation, the moments of grief and confusion consequent upon the shock of the disaster to the community, were soon followed by an adjustment to the situation which gave everyone a forward-looking attitude. "We have had a severe blow by misfortune; but to grieve over our loss will not meet our present needs. So let us to work and make the best of a bad situation." Such seemed to be the spirit we found in the men of the stake, and such we later discovered is the spirit of the entire group. Of course there may be some few exceptions to this, for there are always some in whom pessimism and other factors work to develop a spirit of gloom and foreboding.

It was apparent, however, that for the moment the work of the branch was quite deranged; but with the high school auditorium, the Coliseum, Zimmermann Hall, and other places made available for meetings, classes, etc., it would be only a short time before the officers could have activities following about the usual course.

I almost forgot here to tell about one other official we found at the church offices. It was Brother Gleazer. He had been holding a series of meetings in the Brick Church and had a meeting scheduled for eight o'clock Thursday night. The fire was discovered somewhere about seven o'clock. Brother Gleazer wore his usual smile, but there were evidences of the strain the occasion had put him under. He has gained a new distinction by the disaster. He is the man who preached the last sermon in the old church. "So," says Brother Gleazer, "my name is linked now in history with that of Brother W. W. Blair, for he preached the first, at the opening." I wonder how many sermons by how many men were preached in the interim between those two occasions!

Repairing to a table in Gibson's Cafe, we continued to discuss the situation. Also plans were discussed for the "meetings" arranged for Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. Brother Gleazer's meetings were temporarily interrupted, and we learned that a mass meeting had been called for that night at Zimmermann Hall, the college gymnasium. Lamoni may well consider herself fortunate that so commodious a building is available.

Well, at the appointed hour, or a little before, we went "out on the hill," and by the time set for the opening of the

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Send for Primary Worship Programs

Due to the demand for Herald space to be used for adult materials, the Kindergarten and Primary Worship suggestions were not printed in these columns for February. In response to a number of requests, however, typewritten copies of the programs were prepared and sent out to children's division leaders who were depending upon them.

We are very anxious to supply this need and will send out programs for March on request. Perhaps when we know the extent of this demand, we can plan in a more satisfactory way to supply the materials. Send a two-cent stamp for postage. THE DEPARTMENT OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

Certification in January

By C. B. W.

Certificates in Religious Education and Leadership are awarded in January and July of each year. This plan makes possible the stimulation of a number of students in each branch to complete their preparation to qualify for one of the three grades of certificates at these stated times. It is urged that the certificates be presented with dignity and appreciation at a time and place most appropriate in the district.

The three grades of certificates represent, respectively, 150, 300, and 500 hours of personal study and effort in preparation for efficient service as a teacher or leader in the fields of religious education. The plan serves to stimulate and direct our study and to begin to standardize the elements of our training program.

Certificates were awarded in July, 1930, as follows:

Joseph Bates, Senlac, Saskatchewan, Gold Seal.
 Clarence L. Bruno, Denver, Colorado, Gold Seal.
 Floyd Engstrom, Colorado Springs, Colorado, Gold Seal.
 Ruth Minkler, Lorain, Ohio, Gold Seal.
 Mrs. L. R. Wells, Dallas, Texas, Gold Seal.
 H. E. Winegar, Denver, Colorado, Gold Seal.
 R. J. Crayne, Kansas City, Kansas, First Grade.
 Gracia Robinson, San Antonio, Texas, First Grade.
 Mrs. F. J. Gerber, Kansas City, Missouri, Second Grade.
 Mrs. Mary Tubbs, Freesoil, Michigan, Second Grade.
 In January, 1931, the following certificates have been won:
 Mrs. Chattie Everett, Dallas, Texas, Gold Seal.
 Mrs. S. N. Gray, Joplin, Missouri, Gold Seal.
 F. W. Kendall, Anaconda, Montana, Gold Seal.
 Mrs. Letha M. Tilton, Fort Collins, Colorado, Gold Seal.
 Mrs. Anna K. Ward, Barberton, Ohio, Gold Seal.
 W. T. Wellman, Omaha, Nebraska, Gold Seal.
 E. R. Davis, Moline, Illinois, First Grade.
 J. R. Epperson, Council Bluffs, Iowa, First Grade.
 Hazel L. Minkler, Wellington, Ohio, First Grade.
 Mrs. F. L. Waters, Kansas City, Missouri, First Grade.

We take this occasion to recognize the worthy attainment of those listed above. Their effort represents much earnest, personal application to study, and self-sacrificing devotion to the teaching work of the church. By no means should the receiving of a certificate mark the close of preparation and growth in service. It is but a step to yet higher and better things. The period of training represented is but an introduction—a mere entry into the vast field of possible achievement.

We wish for those whom we honor, above, the further joy of continued growth through study, and the happiness of a life of service in the church, made more happy because of the enlarged vision, the greater control, the enriched knowledge of materials and means, and the acquired skill which comes through consistent training. We commend these leaders to the confidence of the Saints in their several localities when their service is rendered in a spirit of love, exemplified by the Master Teacher of all men.

Worship Suggestions for Use in the Children's Division

By M. A. W.

Printed programs often become stiff and stilted unless wisely adapted to the needs of each particular group. To be truly meaningful to the children, programs must be carefully and prayerfully planned, with a specific group of boys and girls in mind. General programs are helpful only in so far as they serve to stimulate the leaders and give suggestions as to some usable material and direct where it can be found. It is the privilege and opportunity of each leader to experience the thrill that comes in the thinking through and the arranging of materials for her own group. Appreciating the truth of the foregoing facts, for the month of March we are giving in skeleton outline a form or type of service that allows for worship and pupil participation. Do not feel that it is necessary to follow the outline precisely, but shift and rearrange as seems best.

We suggest that you use as the theme for the month of March: "Looking for the Beautiful." Stories, songs, and other necessary materials are suggested, by means of which the theme can be carried out through the month.

It is urged that the children meet with the adults on the first Sunday of each month to partake of the sacrament.

A Suggested Type of Service

Theme: "Looking for the Beautiful"

Instrumental music.

Call to Worship. (May be read by the leader, by a Junior, may be repeated in unison, or may be used as a responsive reading.)

Song.

Prayer. (May be offered by leader, by a junior, or take the form of a sentence prayer, where the leader makes a brief prayer and is followed by any number of the boys and girls, each in a sentence prayer.)

Offering Service. (Music may be softly played during this service. Let Junior boys take the offering. Offering may be brought to the altar and a blessing asked on it by the leader.)

Song, or solo, duet, reading, dramatization, or teaching of a new song by use of a hymn story or pictures.

Sermon Talk.

Song, or special number by boys or girls themselves or by a guest.

Story.

Closing Song.

Benediction—by the leader or a junior.

Suggestive Materials

Creating after the Image

By J. E. Vanderwood

While perusing the Note Book of Elbert Hubbard a few days ago, I read this statement: "Man, like Deity, creates in his own image." This is scientifically true, and perhaps unfolds more to the thinking mind than the average reader would at first suppose. It may be more fully illustrated in this manner: A group of writers assembled one evening for the purpose of discussing the merits or demerits of the productions of their group, and after a short poem had been discussed for some time a lady said to a certain man, "Did you write that poem?" He, in order to draw the matter out more clearly inquired, "Why do you ask me that?" and the answer came, "It expresses your personality." Yes, man, like Deity, creates in his own image, and whether he is conscious of it or not, he is revealing his own likeness in all that he does or says here. When I read the message of a friend, I do not need to look for the signature, for the production itself reveals the image of the one who has written it, and what is true of literary productions is also true of any other form of creative work. The image of the creator is discovered in the thing he has created.

Whether we know it or not, we are constantly creating the world in which we live and move and have our being. By this I mean the social, the intellectual, the moral condition around us. We attract to ourselves the things that are akin to us. The disagreeable man is constantly finding a disagreeable world, while the cheerful, pleasant man is discovering a cheerful, pleasant surrounding. The grouch is beset on every hand with unpleasant conditions, while the agreeable man is attracting to himself pleasant surroundings and pleasant associates. Man is just as certain of coming into his own as the sun is to rise and set again. The language of the old Hebrew prophet which says: "Be sure your sins will find you out," has more than a theological meaning. Not only do one's sins find him out, but his virtues do also. It is scientifically true that man must reap the fruitage of his planting in life. No amount of sophistry can change it, the law of the universe is the law of compensation, so when I receive back what I have given out I must remember that I am sharing in the thing I have been creating.

The negative man defeats himself; he destroys his own foundation by trying to destroy that of another. The constructive man makes safe his own position by simply pursuing the course of right and letting the error of others reach its own destruction. He who would subdue others will himself be subdued, and he who would protect others will himself be protected. Elbert Hubbard has expressed it thus:

Force expends itself and dies; every army is marching to its death; nothing but skull and skeleton fills helmet and cuirass; the aggressor is overcome by the poison of his pride; victory is only another name for defeat; but the Spirit of Gentleness and Truth is eternal.

When men come to discover the real import of this statement, they will come to create a much better world about them, because they will be much better men, and we are reminded again that man, like Deity, creates in his own image.

The folks who keep on sawing wood in all kinds of weather, are the folks who have the biggest woodpile at the end of the season.

Toronto, Ontario

January 18 the Toronto and North Toronto Branches were amalgamated, at the opening of the new church on Bathurst Street at Saint Clair Avenue. The church was tastefully decorated with lilies and palms, generously provided by a corps of active deacons. Visitors approximating one thousand, and representing fifty different towns and cities, from Vancouver on the west to Ottawa on the east, and a number of States in the United States of America, were present at the various services of the day.

Prayer meeting was held at nine o'clock in the morning and was in charge of Apostle R. S. Budd, who expressed the thought "that as Christ began his ministry with prayer, it was fitting that active service in our new church should be begun, in like manner, in a prayer service." The opening prayer was offered by Toronto's oldest living missionary, Elder John Shields. The boys, with their leader, Brother Bertram Gozzard, occupying seats at the north side of the church, and the girls with their leader, Sister Minnetta Pycock, the south side. The lower Auditorium was taxed to capacity.

At 10.50 Clifford G. McCormick played a voluntary on the new organ, while the robed choir marched to its place in the choir loft. President Frederick M. Smith was the speaker. Two anthems were rendered by the choir, "Praise Ye the Father," and "O Love That Will Not Let Me Go."

The dedicatory service was held at three o'clock in the afternoon, at which the Chief Justice of Toronto, Mayor Stewart, and Controller Hacker were our guests. Mayor Stewart commended us on our spiritual work in the city, and numbered some of our members among his personal friends. Five-minute speeches were given by the following brothers: Bishop McLean, who gave a synopsis of Toronto branch history; Elder H. A. Dayton, who spoke as president of Owen Sound District; Elder Frank Mesle, for New York District; Elder S. G. Clark, as president of Toronto District; Elder Hubert Case, for Detroit; Apostle R. S. Budd, representing the church in the world; and Elder J. Leslie Prentice, as president of Toronto Branch.

A special prayer was given by Patriarch John F. Martin, and the choir sang "Who Fathoms the Eternal Thought?" and "Tarry with Me, O My Savior."

President Smith gave the dedicatory message, stressing the thought that the church should symbolize the ideals of its people, and the necessity of teaching cleanliness of thought, word, and action, to the young of the church.

The evening service commenced with an organ prelude by Brother McCormick. The opening hymn was "God Is Marchaling His Army," and prayer was by Elder B. H. Doty, missionary in Toronto District. Members were requested to go to the junior Sunday school department room, where an overflow meeting was held, to make room for the visitors. Sister Jackson sang "Just for Today." Apostle Budd was the speaker of the hour. The anthem, "God Moves Out," was rendered by the choir, and the benediction was by Patriarch John Martin.

January 19 a banquet was held in the new church, attended by about three hundred. At the conclusion of the dinner, a half-hour musical recital was given by Mr. Legge at the organ and Brother McCormick at the piano, as a dedication of the new organ. Toasts to the King and country, and to the church were proposed by Elder James Pycock and Bishop McLean, after which was the regular program of speeches by general church officers and those who were instrumental in building the church, interspersed by vocal solos by Sister Blanche Needham and Brothers George Murphy and James Irving, and readings by Sister Lois Panter (nee Bryan).

The Department of Recreation and Expression is giving five opening concerts to aid the organ fund. On January 23 a piano recital by artists from the studio of Professor George E. Boyce was given. Three grand pianos were used. The entertainers were assisted by vocal and violin artists from the Musical Arts College of Toronto. January 30 Don Hutton's twenty-five piece orchestra played to a well-filled house.

The Women's Department held its annual meeting January 27 in the new church. This department had many activities to report for the past year. They are on the third year of the group system, and recommend it highly as a means of enlisting the assistance of every sister in the branch. The department's slogan last year was "All together." This year it is "Spend your money with us." During the year the department has turned to the Building Committee $3,500, and has also equipped the kitchen in the new church. New members are being added to the department, and the women are busy on local and community interests. Besides the promotion of the social side of church life, they have been given the responsibility of the yearly interest on the church debt.

Sunday evening, January 30, Patriarch J. F. Martin commenced a series of doctrinal sermons, using as his subject, "What We Believe about God." We feel that much good will be accomplished by these sermons, and pray that Brother Martin's health will be completely restored, so that he may continue the good work started in this place. P. CRUMP.

Oelwein, Iowa

The week of prayer was a splendid introduction to the activities of the year and served as a challenge for us to go "forward with Christ." Indeed, our activities keep us so busy we wonder at times how they all can be handled, but we find room for them because they are the Lord's work.

Every Thursday evening finds an interested group taking a course in teacher's training with Sister Esther Shippy as teacher. Most of the members are teachers and workers in the church school, all of whom are found in other discussion groups solving problems and making plans for the betterment of the work.

The new church plan which our branch adopted last October is getting in better working condition all the time. Indeed, we find it a great improvement.

The women of our branch have remained organized as a group, studying and doing relief work. Our present subject for study is "Health."

The following classes are organized into clubs: the young people's class forms the Excelsior Club, with Ruth Smith as leader; the intermediate boys make up the Sunawa Club, with Esther Shippy leader; and the junior girls are our Blue Birds, Ruby McFarlane leading.

The quarterly branch business meeting was held recently, and among the matters taken care of was the branch budget.

The members were saddened at Christmas time by the death of Margie McFarlane, seven-year-old daughter of Mrs. Ira Shippy, of Newton, Iowa, formerly of Oelwein. Funeral services were held in Oelwein the day before Christmas. E. A. Davis, of Independence, Missouri, preached the funeral sermon.

Two months ago another prospective helper in the church arrived in the home of Sister Jessie Sims, supervisor of the adult division. His name is Marvin Sims.

Our branch membership is not large, and we have lately lost a number by transfer, nevertheless we have enough with which to carry on. George McFarlane is pastor. Charles Shippy is the church school director.

Shenandoah, Iowa

On Sunday night before Christmas the choir, under the direction of Sister Mayme Miller, gave a cantata, "Chimes of the Holy Night." A good crowd attended.

The children presented their program on Tuesday night, songs, recitations, a playlet, and a pantomime of the wise men following the star to find the Baby Jesus. Santa Claus came with a treat for each one at the close of the entertainment.

The annual business meeting was held December 17, J. O. Rennie in charge, assisted by Ray Whiting, district president, and J. R. Epperson. At this time we adopted the new plan of religious education. J. R. Epperson was chosen pastor. He has recently moved here from Council Bluffs, Iowa, and is a capable man. Other officers are: Director of visiting, R. E. Pratt; director of religious education, Mayme Miller; chorister, Mayme Miller; pianists, Alta Royer and Luella Topham; financial clerk, Charley Martin; branch clerk, Luella Topham. It was left with the director of religious education, in consultation with the pastor, to appoint the supervisors of the three divisions. Those chosen were: Supervisor of adult division, J. O. Rennie; supervisor of young people, Alta Royer; of children, Minnie Epperson.

On the Sunday after Christmas we had the pleasure of having Brother and Sister T. A. Hougas and son Ward and his wife, here. Brother Ward Hougas gave a good sermon in the morning.

As a branch we have resolved to press forward to the mark of the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus.

LUELLE TOPHAM.

Terlton, Oklahoma

Missionary meetings were the lot of Terlton congregation the latter part of January. Elder William Bath, the speaker, continued his effort one week, his sermons along the line of improving the homes of the members. While here he responded to an invitation to address the high school. His lecture was on "The American Home and Its Youth." From here he went to Jennings for a week's meeting, then on to Oilton.

While Brother Bath was here, the branch was shocked at the sudden death of Sister Blanche Pearson. Sympathy is extended the family of this good woman. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Bath.

A number of members attended the conference held at Tulsa the first of February. There they met many members from other branches, and together enjoyed a profitable time.

The midweek prayer meetings, Sunday school, and women's meetings are doing the best work possible under existing conditions. Sickness, unfavorable weather, and the removal of some members have had their effects. Nevertheless we are happy in our work and hope to help the church move forward.

Santa Ana, California

Shortly after the first of the year Santa Ana Saints met for the annual business meeting and election of officers. Brother Will Teagarden, of Long Beach, district president, was here. A. M. Starkety was reelected pastor, Sister Charles Calkins superintendent of Sunday school, and Sister William Kuhn head of the Department of Women. The next Thursday the ladies' aid society met at the home of Sister Kuhn, at which time she chose her assistants. The afternoon was spent sewing, and later refreshments were served. In Santa Ana, this society meets at the homes of its members, and refreshments are always served and a social time enjoyed. This has successfully kept up attendance, strengthened friendships, and contributed to the material needs of the branch.

Members of our Patroness Society were happy to send a box of linens to the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital last week, and are planning a program to raise money to send.

Sister Lottie E. Walker Metcalf, eighty-six years of age, has gone to her reward. She was a member of the church for years and knew well many early-day missionaries. The funeral services were held in Santa Ana. Brother Bronson, of Los Angeles, preached the sermon.

During the past year members of Santa Ana Branch have given eight of the "Conversations" by Elbert A. Smith.

February 8, Elder Leonard Rhodes, our former pastor, came over from Downey, with his daughter, Eilene. In his sermon he mentioned the day as being the anniversary of twenty years a member of the priesthood and of the happiness he had found in service.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church, 1423 First Avenue, South

With the hearty directorship of our new pastor, Elder Harry Ratcliff, progress is being made here in the new plan of religious education. The Sunday morning classes meet at ten o'clock, followed by a piano prelude for a period of meditation before the congregation enters into a season of prayer and testimony. At seven o'clock in the evening, the adult division has a study class in the Book of Mormon. Worth Couey presents the lesson. The young people have a class in church history at the same hour. Every other Sunday they hold a prayer service at nine o'clock in the morning.

Our active young people have obtained space in the home of Elder Thomas Leitch, back of the church, for club rooms, and hold social and literary meetings there on Wednesday evenings. On Friday evening the girls meet at the home of Sister Ratcliff for a class in home economics.

Choir rehearsals are held on Tuesday evening at the church, and progress is being made in musical lines.

The ladies' aid meets at the club house on Thursday afternoon for class study on "Religion in the Home." They plan also to do some handwork.

Good sermons have of late come from Elder George Day, of Bemidji, Minnesota, from Courtney Rotzien, deacon in this branch, and from Pastor Ratcliff.

Social activities have included a Valentine party for the children, and a birthday surprise party for the former pastor, Elder Thomas Leitch.

The workers of the church school here appreciate the articles in the Herald under the heading, "Church Work and Services." We hope they will be continued.

Parkersburg, West Virginia

Although industrial conditions in this region continue unfavorable, this branch decreased its church debt by one hundred dollars, when the notes came due in February. Not least in carrying forward the get-out-of-debt enterprise is the Women's Department. The sisters are earnestly availing themselves of every opportunity to do their part. They are keeping up their monthly church debt pledge. With this spirit characteristic of our undertakings, we are hopeful of the future.

Our church was asked to take part in a religious and unemployment survey of the city the week of November 30 to December 7. It is the first time we have been asked to take part in any activity with the other churches.

A two-week series of meetings near the end of last year by Brother A. C. Silvers served to acquaint us with this member of the ministry and his wife. They are wintering at Harrisville, West Virginia, and have on a number of occasions spent Sunday with us. Their help has been much appreciated, as there is only one member in Parkersburg to do the speaking.

A number have been ill this winter, and death has claimed some, Brother William Harmon, Sister Minnie Keyse, and Paul Withee.

The quarterly conference last fall brought out facts which encouraged our small membership. One of these was a total of tithes and offerings for the year of $1,425.15. The publicity agent reported over sixteen hundred lines of church news in the two city papers for the year. Harry Smith was at this time reelected president of the branch. A branch budget of $223 running expenses was approved.

Outstanding activities in the closing quarter of 1930 were a Labor Day Picnic, the quarterly conference, a rally day October 26, commemorating the tenth anniversary of the branch, a Halloween party, and the visit of Brother and Sister Frank Minton before their return to Independence.

During this season Brothers Burns Wilson, James Withee, and A. L. Williams gave the church a much-needed coat of paint. Members donated money to buy the paint.

Woodbine, Iowa

Elders E. Y. Hunker and Ellis Rathbun opened a series of missionary meetings January 11 and continued until February 8 with good attendance. Some wonderful sermons came from the lips of these consecrated servants. Elder Gerald Gunsolley was here several evenings, and Saints came from Logan, Dunlap, Magnolia, and Biglers Grove.

The Department of Religious Education under the supervision of Brother K. C. Harder is doing splendid work. The women are also active.

On Decision Day last fall Brother William Chambers, of Persia, was here and baptized his son-in-law, Floyd Hammond, and two grandchildren, also Myrl Sanders, another grandchild, from Logon. They were confirmed at a succeeding sacramental service.

At the close of the year Pastor F. A. Fry called a priesthood meeting for the purpose of planning a complete ministerial program for 1931.

Sister Nancy Emeline Mefford, eighty-one years old, a member of the church from childhood, passed away lately. The funeral was held from the church February 2, in charge of F. A. Fry.

Sacramento, California

Twenty-fourth and Kay Streets

District President G. P. Levitt opened the work of our institute the evening of January 28. The initial event, a fellowship dinner, was attended by a fine group of workers. Following the meal greetings were sung to Brother Levitt, and to Mr. and Sister C. H. S. Bidwell. Sister Bidwell is director of religious education, and Mr. Bidwell is mayor of the city of Sacramento. As a surprise to Pastor Dawson, whose birthday it was, Sister Marie Honeychurch asked Brother Levitt to present a gift from the branch, a fountain pen. During the congratulations he was also presented a beautifully decorated cake from Sister Bidwell.

Brother Levitt then talked concerning the work of the institute, and classes began, to continue throughout the week. Brother Levitt taught adults and young people; Sister Hazel Blohm taught subjects dealing with the children. Elder John W. Rushton, of Oakland, gave three lectures on "The Life of Christ," and also conducted a class on "Worship" one evening.

The opening sacrament of the year was marked by a spirit of deep consecration and purposefulness, on the part of officers and members. The officers for the year were installed by an impressive ceremony. Elder Levitt was in charge.

A new plan for Sunday night services has been arranged between the pastor, the supervisor of young people, and the music director. A half-hour program will precede the preaching service. The orchestra, directed by E. C. Burdick, the choir by Sister Birdie Clark, and the various groups of the young people's division, will present the programs.

The officers of the various divisions have many plans for those in their charge, and some of these are at the present time being worked out.

Brothers Joseph Bussell and Jabez Elam have started a mission at Auburn, holding services in the afternoon. The members there are working to cooperate with this endeavor.

We were saddened by the news of the death of Sister Sarah E. Osmer February 5. She was eighty-six years old and leaves a host of friends. Brother Levitt officiated at the funeral. Interment was in Wamego, Kansas.

Oshoto, Wyoming

In charge of Sister George Redding, who has as assistants the three supervisors of the divisions of the school, the church school is moving forward. It gave a short program before the lesson period the morning of February 1, the theme being carried out as far as possible according to the outline in the Saints' Herald. The sacramental service which followed was in charge of Brothers Fred Cousins and Horace Hartshorn.

At the last meeting of the Women's Department it was voted to take up the study of some church book, the members to write papers on assigned themes for each meeting. This active group meets frequently at the various homes in the community. It is doing some good work.

Kentucky and Tennessee Conference

The spirit of unity and real fellowship made all happy who attended the semi-annual conference of Kentucky and Tennessee District which convened in the Odd Fellows' hall in Paris, Tennessee, February 14 and 15. Rain kept many who had planned to come from attending, notwithstanding a goodly number assembled to take part in the business, in the prayer services, and to listen to the excellent sermons by local and district representatives.

Brothers T. U. Thomas and C. B. Gallimore were elected as counselors to the district president. Other items of business were disposed of and the remainder of the time given over to prayer and preaching services.

P. J. Weston was called and ordained to the office of elder and Arthur Norton to that of priest. Elvin Seaton's name was presented, by Foundry Hill Branch, for ordination to the Melchisedec priesthood, and approved.

Throughout the meetings the Spirit of the Lord was felt. The gifts of the gospel were manifested, and the Saints were admonished to be more obedient and prayerful. We have been given the promise that if we heed the divine message, a great revival awaits the work in this district.

Enfield, England

New Church, Lancaster Road

Many splendid meetings have been enjoyed in our church home, and the Spirit has blessed us abundantly with its presence. Not least impressive of these services have been the decision days. Eight people entered the church during 1930. The first to be baptized in the new church font was Frank Folkes, younger son of Elder and Sister L. Folkes. This baptism took place March 16. On the next decision day, July 6, three people were candidates, May Oakman, Nellie Ackland, and Amy Hatch. The last named is a sister of Sister W. Cole, of Bognor, and traveled from Bournemouth, eighty miles for the ceremony. Two more entered the fold on the next decision day, November 2, Lily Cozzi, and Gladys Castle. The Saints were very happy at the next decision day over the baptism of William and Emma Butler, two whom they have long wanted to see enter the portals of the kingdom. All of these candidates were baptized by Pastor John A. Judd.

Several socials and concerts have been held with good spiritual and financial results.

The Saints still have glorious memories of the visit of President F. M. McDowell and Apostle F. Henry Edwards. A reception was held in their honor, at which Apostle Paul M. Hanson was also a guest. Following this, President McDowell planted two small trees in the church grounds, and these are affectionately termed "Mac's twins." The splendid talks of these brothers spurred us to greater activity. Apostle Paul M. Hanson has carried on their good work with splendid effect.

With P. T. Andersen in Denmark and Norway

Porsgrund, Norway.—It may not be amiss to let Herald readers know where I am and what I have been doing since I left my home in Council Bluffs, June 7, 1930.

In company with Brother Fred Davies, I left New York June 14, and on June 23 we landed at Liverpool, England, where I left Brother Davies. June 24 in the evening I landed at Esbjerg, Denmark. I had a fine trip, enjoying good health and being in good company, for all of which I was thankful. I went to Aalborg, my former field, and some of the Saints were at the station to meet me. I started meetings in our old meeting place, but at that time of the year it is hard to get people out. As I had to go to Copenhagen in order to have my passport extended, I thought it best to go while the weather was good and while I was not able to get the people out. Later in the season I hoped for better church attendance.

So on July 19, I left Aalborg for my birthplace, Hunds-lund. I have a sister and a host of friends there I wanted to visit on my way to Copenhagen. I visited around till August 4 when I left for Copenhagen.

We have had a few Saints at Copenhagen from the time that Peter Anderson, H. N. Hansen, and Peter Muceus did missionary work in that city. I tried to find some of them, but succeeded in finding only one sister, a woman baptized by Brother H. N. Hansen just before he left the mission in 1915. Some had died. Others had moved away; and I found that some had joined other denominations. I visited the sister, who seemed glad to see me. We have a host of good friends in Copenhagen whom I also visited, and I had many talks with them about the gospel. I hope the time is not far distant when we can take up the work in that city.

While at Copenhagen, I had a letter from Apostle P. M. Hanson, stating that President F. M. McDowell and he would be in Copenhagen Sunday morning, August 17, coming from Stockholm, Sweden, and that they would like to meet me the next day at noon at a certain place in the city. I was not able to meet the brethren, as I had a few days before sent word to the few Saints at Helsingborg, Sweden, that I would be up there that Sunday. I had no way of letting them know of the change of plans if I did not go, so I decided to take the disappointment myself, in not meeting Brothers McDowell and Hanson, rather than disappoint the few Saints up there. I am happy that I went, for they were very glad to see me. We have but two sisters there now, Sister Nelly Poulsen and Sister Alfrida Appelkvist. Brother Appelkvist died about a year ago. I went up on Saturday afternoon, as I knew that the sisters would be off work, and we had a little meeting at Sister Poulsen's home that evening. I felt blessed in talking to the two dear sisters, and the Lord verified his promise to us, that where two or three gather in his name there he will be to own and to bless. Again on Sunday afternoon we had a meeting at Sister Poulsen's house. There were two nonmembers there besides Sister Appelkvist's little daughter. A second time we were made to know that the Lord had not forgotten us; we were wonderfully blessed, and the dear sisters bore some wonderful testimonies to the truthfulness of the latter-day work; their faith is strong, and their hope is brighter than ever before, even though they stand alone. These two sisters meet together often and have prayer together, and in that way they obtain strength to continue faithful.

After meeting we went to the cemetery to see the last resting place of Brother Appelkvist. An attractive granite monument marks the grave. From there we went home with Sister Appelkvist and spent the evening with her and her little girl.

The next morning, August 18, I left for Billes Holms Grube to visit Brother Isaksen and family. They, too, were glad to see me, and I stayed with them for two days, enjoying my visit. Brother Isaksen is a faithful soul, who lets his light shine so that others may see to find the way. Sister Isaksen does not belong to the church but is friendly to the work, and takes good care of the missionary when he comes round. I have always been made welcome in their home. Brother Isaksen told me that he had received much strength during my visit with them, and that he was determined to hold out faithful to the end.

Letters came from Saints in Norway inviting me to spend some time with them, and Brother V. D. Ruch also wrote. For a time I hesitated to leave the work in Denmark, but having received permission from Brother Paul M. Hanson, and made my plans a matter of prayer, I concluded to go. October 22 I left Aalborg for Oslo, Norway, where I was met the next day by Brothers Ruch and Johan Andersen. Brother Ruch had a meeting in Oslo that night in a rented hall, and I assisted him. The next night we had a meeting at Brother Johan Andersen's home, and I did the talking that night. The next day, Saturday, I went home with Brother Ruch, to Bøn, and on Sunday evening I preached my first sermon at our little church at Bøn. Brother Ruch had planned that I should do all the preaching while there, and that meant work. I felt blessed in my humble effort and enjoyed a wonderful degree of the Spirit.

I left Bøn for Porsgrund November 15 and had my first meeting at Brother Wilhelm Carlsen's home the next day, Sunday. We could not get the hall till November 23, as it was under repair, so I decided to visit the Saints at Kragerø. I went down November 19 and came back the 22d, holding two services there. November 23 I had my first meeting in the hall at Porsgrund, and I conducted two meetings a week until December 14, with fair attendance.

Having been invited to spend Christmas with Brother and Sister Ruch at Bøn, I left Porsgrund December 18 for Oslo, where I met Brother and Sister Ruch next day, as that was the night for meeting there. From there we left for Bøn, and I spent a very happy Christmas with Brother and Sister Ruch and little Velma. They made me welcome, and I felt at home.

December 30 the Sunday school had its Christmas tree. There were about a hundred children, and they all got a treat. The last day in the old year we met at the church at ten o'clock in the evening to see the year out and welcome the new year. The last two hours of 1930 we spent very profitably, with songs and short talks, and the last two minutes of the old year we spent in silent prayer. At midnight Brother Arthur Iversen tapped a gong twelve times, while Brother Ruch read the Lord's prayer, and the old year 1930 went into eternity. The Spirit of God was brooding over us in great measure and I prayed that all of us might live in such a way that it would continue throughout the year.

On January 4 we had an old people's fest (gamlefest). All the old people in town were invited. In all there were over a hundred. The fest started at four o'clock. The guests were served coffee and cake when they came. After that we had devotional service. Brother Ruch read Psalm 23 and made a few remarks, but I had to give the main talk. The rest of the brothers of the local priesthood made short talks. I was happy to see so many happy old faces, and we entertained them with song and music, then took them by the hand and marched around the Christmas tree singing Christmas songs. We tried to make them forget their cares and trials of life for that evening. They were served lunch by the Women's Department, and it was close to midnight before they left the little church, wishing each other a happy New Year and hoping to meet again next year.

I left Bøn January 6 for Oslo. I wanted to spend a couple of days down there visiting some friends, and I was engaged to preach there the 8th. On Friday evening, the 9th, we had a sacramental service at Brother Johan Andersen's home, and the next morning I left for Porsgrund, where I started meeting Sunday evening and intend to continue till about March 1.

P. T. ANDERSEN.

Far West Stake

Guilford

Stake President W. A. Hougas and R. E. Jones, one of the stake missionaries, came to Guilford, according to previous arrangements, and held a church school institute January 17 and 18. Class work was as follows: Saturday, 10 a. m., "Worth-while Folks Get the Most out of Life," Brother Hougas; 11, "Getting Together," R. E. Jones; 1:30 p. m., "Games," R. E. Jones; 2:30, "Fill-ins." In the evening Brother Hougas gave an illustrated lecture on "The Other Wise Man." Sunday the church school at ten o'clock was in charge of local officers; sermon, "Is the Church Worth While?" by W. A. Hougas, at 11 a. m.; Class work, "Songs and Paradology," R. E. Jones at 1:30 p. m.; class work, "The Greater Patriotism," at 2:30, by W. A. Hougas. These services were attended by Saints from Ross Grove and Bedison Branches. About fifty attended the series of classes, and seventy-five attended the illustrated lecture.

At the branch election late in December Brother W. B. Torrance was selected as pastor with W. T. Ross to assist him. Sister Neva Brittain is the church school director.

Among the ministry who have this year been very helpful in this branch are Brother Wilfred J. Winn, of King City. Brother Winn has assisted in sacramental services and has preached some good sermons. Brother Mose Hinderks, of Stewartville, was here early in February and delivered an interesting sermon.

As a branch, Guilford wishes to support the general church in every avenue of endeavor. Prayerfully we go forward.

The Baldwins in the Northwest

A leadership institute of the Seattle-British Columbia District, the first of its kind to be held under the direction of the Department of Religious Education in this region, occurred at Seattle January 30 and 31 and February 1. It was a seven-session institute, the first class occurring on Saturday, the last Sunday afternoon.

A mixer on Friday evening, a sacramental service on Sunday morning, preaching services with Elder Richard Baldwin as speaker, and almost continuous class sessions, all under the institute theme, "God's Workmen," drew delegates from every branch in the district except one. The district director of religious education, Sister D. S. McDole, of Seattle, was in charge.

Classes conducted for credit were: "You Can Learn to Teach," Sister D. S. McDole; "The General Conference Institute Extension Course," Richard Baldwin; "Handcraft in Religious Education," for teacher-leaders of girls, Sister Richard Baldwin.

Good music by district choir workers, an enthusiastic response by students and congregations, and the prevailing spirit of fellowship repaid those in charge for the effort put into the institute.

Brother and Sister Baldwin began the year in Seattle, attending there on January 6 a workers' conference, held under the auspices of the Department of Religious Education. This session opened with a dinner attended by sixty-five workers. The program was planned by Sister McDole, who introduced Mr. Victor N. Witter, religious educational director of the Western Washington Baptist Conference. Mr. Witter addressed the guests on "The Teacher and the Task." "The Use of Art in Religious Education," and "Missionaries to Youth," were subjects of talks by Sister and Brother Baldwin. Attending this dinner were District President H. I. Velt and Elder A. C. Martin.

A series of meetings was begun at Bremerton January 10 by Brother and Sister Baldwin, interest being good from the start. Attendance increased each night. The list of prospect names grew. During the first week Brother Baldwin spoke especially to members of the church; the second week he devoted exclusively to missionary endeavor.

In this branch the new program of religious education had not yet been adopted, because the members did not understand it. So each night at the close of the sermon, Sister Baldwin spoke for a half hour, explaining the provisions of the plan. At the close of the first week the branch was ready to adopt the plan, and the second week Sister Baldwin spent helping the Saints to understand the organization of their local group and the duties of each divisional head.

At the invitation of Branch President Bacher, the Baldwins visited the Navy Yard, going over shops and departments. They inspected the battleship Tennessee.

Institutes Point the Way in Clinton District

The institute movement has grown of late in Clinton District. The first conducted by President F. M. McDowell, and the second by Elder John Blackmore, definitely outlined the organization plan of the new program of religious education, stressing its adaptability to local church schools. As a result several of the branches adopted the plan to suit their needs.

A third institute was administrative in nature, and answered many questions of local workers regarding the new plan. District President Birch Whiting, assisted by the district director of religious education, the supervisor of young people, the supervisor of children, and musical director, had studied the needs of our branches and on February 7 and 8, at Butler, Missouri, conducted the institute. Effective discussions of the duties and possibilities of church school officers were given a background of real fellowship.

Another institute will be held at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, June 13 and 14, in charge of Patriarch and Sister J. A. Gunsolley. This will give all in the district opportunity to gain a more complete knowledge of the gospel plan and its operation.

Birmingham, England

Under the leadership of Pastor Peter S. Whalley, lately from the United States, this branch is going forward. The Saints have greater confidence in each other. Our financial burden is lifting, the last quarter of 1930 showing vast improvement. We know that our friend, President F. M. McDowell, and others are watching us, and we are not going to disappoint them.

Three new members have lately been added to our ranks. Brother and Sister Rock were baptized by Elder A. Kendrick and confirmed by Elders Whalley and Kendrick. Their little daughter, Iris, was presented for blessing. November 16 Morris Bailey, an eleven-year-old lad, requested baptism at the hand of his grandfather, Brother T. Anderton, being confirmed by E. Norton.

We now have the honor of a visit from Apostle Paul M. Hanson. He is giving a series of lectures this week. Already his sermons have raised us to greater heights of living and serving. We appreciate his help.

The week of prayer was faithfully observed, and the week-night prayer service was richly blessed.

Holden Stake

Warrensburg

Warrensburg Branch is trying to follow the plans of work laid out by the general church, and the spiritual condition of the local is advancing.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards came from Independence January 25 and preached in the morning. With him came his wife and son and Miss Lois Smith.

During the holiday season we had several good programs, one a vesper service December 21, and another a pageant written by Sister Walter Johnson, which was given December 23.

The Saints are now recognizing dramatization as a means of education, and are contributing their services in this activity. Sisters Esther Rich and Leroy Morgan are showing talent in planning little plays.

We who read the letters from other branches, which appear in the Herald, receive much benefit from the various ideas given. They encourage us to press on.

Mikado, Michigan

Four people, two young men and a middle-aged couple, were led into the waters of baptism February 1, and were confirmed in the evening by Elders Guy and Stewart. Again the next morning Brother McGuire was called to open the hole in the ice for another baptismal service. Four more were inducted into the kingdom, two young women, one suffering from tuberculosis of the hip, a young man, and the mother of one of the girls. A woman who has passed her ninety-third birthday and is suffering from blindness has requested baptism. There are more ready to obey the gospel summons.

Mikado Branch has been very active since Elder Guy, of Hillman, arrived December 28 and opened a series of meetings. These were well attended, especially by the young people. Elder Pendleton, of Beaverton, came to assist Brother Guy January 9. The two brothers visited many homes and preached the gospel to members and nonmembers. Surely we have all been blessed by God's Holy Spirit during these experiences.

The Saints are planning to build a church in the spring. Our services have been held in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows' Hall.

With Brother Baker in Arkansas

Siloam Springs, February 14.—The missionary labors of Elder A. M. Baker have for the past few months extended over a large area. Outside his appointed field (Arkansas and Louisiana) he has worked in Tennessee and Alabama, meeting many devoted members.

Drought and business depression have colored the missionary outlook with discouragement, Arkansas being especially hard hit. Nevertheless a fair degree of success has marked the efforts of this minister, who moved forward to discharge his duty.

At Hot Springs the reunion was enjoyed, though attendance from other points of the district was small. With S. W. Simmons, Judge White, and W. H. Hampton, Brother Baker continued meetings for about ten nights, and five persons were baptized.

After a two-week meeting at Fisher, Brother Baker joined Truman Ziegenhorn, a man much interested in the cause of Zion. Brother Ziegenhorn has helped in song service and fireside preaching, as well as occupying in the pulpit. These two held a series of meetings at Caraway. Homer Wilson, a young school-teacher, and his wife, and another young man were baptized.

Of his last missionary effort, let Brother Baker tell in his own words: "We have just closed one of the most interesting series of the year at Wheeler, Arkansas. Sister Viola Fohrman moved into this community with her son and family about thirteen years ago. They planted a vineyard and orchard on the rough hillsides. Grandma Fohrman, a granddaughter of William Napier, who was murdered at Haun's Mill, during these years has borne a faithful testimony to the angel message. It was through the invitation of this family that I came to Wheeler and commenced meetings in the union church. The church was crowded from the beginning. Interest was intense. The homes of the people were open to us. Just before the close fourteen were baptized, eight of them adults. There are more to follow. Last Sunday we organized a Sunday school with J. V. Fohrman as superintendent."

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H Streets

The branch made January 9, the evening of the business meeting, the occasion for establishing its plans and recruiting leaders and workers for the year's undertakings. Elder E. J. Lenox was chosen pastor and selected for his counselors Brothers Anderson and Poague. Brother Poague was made director of the church school, and the heads of the various divisions were also chosen. Brothers Farrar and Pfanmiller were recommended by the pastor for ordination to the office of deacon, and Francis Shrunck priest. A number of officers of last year were sustained in their offices.

One thousand dollars was the budget named for this year, and the twofold envelope system will be the means of meeting the branch expenses. Sixty packages of envelopes, representing seventy-two members, are out and will, no doubt, increase the list of tithepayers.

The women, in charge of Sister Hale, meet weekly to quilt. Sister B. M. Anderson reads aloud as they work. The calendar method of raising money is being tried out by this group this year.

Pleasant Valley Branch

Lucasville, Ohio

District President A. E. Anderton, of Columbus, was here the week-end of February 6 to 8, and conducted our branch business meeting the evening of February 7. E. E. Williams was elected branch president and given by the people a corps of consecrated assistant officers. Two brothers from McDermott were ordained, George Shope, teacher, and Brother Harold, deacon.

At the tent at Valley View, near Portsmouth, Brother Anderton the next day organized a mission. Officers were chosen to conduct the work there, headed by Walter Culp and O. A. Rexroad. This mission has for a number of months drawn its energies and activities as well as membership from Saints and friends of this vicinity. Its Sunday school has now claimed a number of our members.

Several have been called from this life, among these three aged sisters, Sister Jaonn Crabtree, Sister Martha Bealor, and Sister Galiger. John Benton Crabtree died at his home February 9. He was forty-three years of age. Surviving are his father, one sister, two brothers, and a host of other relatives and friends.

Early in the year Elder Jacob Halb conducted a ten-day meeting at the tent and led into the waters of baptism four candidates, three small girls, and a mother of a family. These baptisms completed two family circles.

Though local forces are somewhat weakened by the building up of our neighbor mission, the courage of our members is high, and we are pressing on. We look forward to the district conference at Columbus, Ohio, March 6, 7, and 8.

Independence

Enoch Hill

The Enoch Hill Volley Ball Club went through the season, winning the pennant in the Auditorium Volley Ball League on the final night, February 17. The team was entertained by its manager, E. H. McKean, at his home the evening of February 20 with a chili and pie supper. During the season the Enoch Hill boys won twenty-six games and lost four, coming into the championship the final night. The Enoch Hill Basket Ball team also made a good season's showing.

Missionary meetings to continue throughout this week were opened by Patriarch Ammon White, who preached two excellent sermons Sunday. The response which is being given by the congregation is good.

A Valentine party at the home of Daisy and Martha Christensen the evening of February 14, entertained the members of the young people's division with stunts, games, and refreshments.

The speakers February 15 were Apostle R. S. Budd and Elder Walter M. Self.

Fanning, Kansas

Living up to its slogan, "Know your own church," the Religion Department covered considerable historical ground in a contest which closed early in the year. The book, Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, formed the basis for questions concerning church history. The losers in the contest entertained the winners at the Dittmore home January 27. This department was led in 1930 by William Gurwell, and this year is in charge of Sylvia Chestnut.

The branch expressed by vote a desire to adopt the church school organization, but does not as yet completely comprehend its provisions.

Five years of perfect Sunday school attendance is the record of Sister Hazel Thomas, during which time she has served as assistant secretary, and is now the secretary. As an acknowledgment of her faithfulness she was awarded a ring set with her birthstone.

Two quilts for the new Sanitarium at Independence compose the contribution of Fanning women. One has already been delivered, the other is now being quilted. An all-day meeting February 5 was devoted to quilting. A covered-dish luncheon was served at noon to thirteen workers.

Sorrow has laid its hand on the Saints and their friends in this community. We mourn with the family of Brother Steven Davis, an old settler, who died November 5, 1930. Elder Samuel Twombly preached the sermon. A daughter of Brother Davis, Sister Nettie Watkins, of Sparks, Kansas, passed away January 1, and was laid to rest beside her father, Brother Twombly again speaking words of comfort and assurance.

The community was shocked January 19 at the death of Emmet Nesser, twenty-seven years old and fourth son of Brother and Sister Arnold Nesser, near Sparks, Kansas. Emmet with his brother was chopping a tree which fell on him, killing him almost instantly.

Lancaster, Ohio

1111 West Fair Avenue

Attendance at the meetings of this local is increasing. All services of late have been marked by good spirit and attention. Some splendid discourses have been preached by such men of the ministry as S. E. Dickson, W. P. Vickroy, and C. W. Clark, of the district bishopric.

At the business meeting held early in the year, Elder S. E. Dickson was chosen pastor, and given a group of willing and able fellow officers. Under their leadership the Saints hope to achieve many things, and they ask the prayers of the church that they may be strengthened for their tasks.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

Pastor C. E. Wight continues his series of Sunday evening talks. Each week the thoughts presented in the Sunday evening discourse are discussed at the Wednesday evening prayer service.

The administration committee is ready to serve all who need this ordinance. They are available at the church Sunday morning and evening and Wednesday evening.

Next Sunday evening the Wahdemna Choral Club, of Independence, will appear on the evening program.

The work taken up by the women's club is progressing. The members of this group hope to enlist the cooperation of all the women of Central Church.

Last Sunday evening the congregation was treated to a sample of what may be expected from the drama contest March 2, 3, and 4. Ten plays will be presented by the stake young people. These plays are high class royalty plays and will be worth many times the price of seventy-five cents, the cost of a season ticket. Single admission is thirty-five cents.

Chelsea Church

The family worship hour is in charge of a different class each Sunday. This plan of service has proved successful and has generated considerable interest. The Grandview O. B. K. Trio visited here recently and furnished some excellent music.

Stake President C. E. Wight delivered a discourse based on the scout laws February 8. Brothers Mesley and D. E. Hough were speakers the following Sunday.

The O. B. K's are active. They recently gave a luncheon at the church. They are planning to hire a truck and drive to Lamoni next Saturday to attend the basket ball game between Central team and Graceiland.

Argentine Church

Elder E. T. Atwell, speaker for last Sunday evening, took for a subject "Fundamentals." Bondie Shireman, deacon, was the morning speaker.

Mallard, Iowa

A short time ago three of the ministry drove sixty miles in a snowstorm to help this branch, Brothers Crippen, White, and Albert Haynes, of Cherokee. They assisted us in organizing on the new religious education program basis of operation. Brother Crippen was the morning speaker, using as a text a portion of Doctrine and Covenants 84. The words of encouragement of this trio of brothers spurred every member to greater application.

Alexander, Kansas

Elder O. L. D'Arcy, of Nebraska City, Nebraska, the first missionary to visit Alexander since last April, arrived January 27, and began meetings the following evening. This is the first series of meetings conducted here for more than two years, and the people were much interested. He preached six times, being much blessed by the Spirit, and his message was willingly received by Saints and nonmembers. His kindness, sincerity, sympathy, and devotion won him many friends. He left after promising to return in six weeks. During the services Miss Clara Wood, of Bazine, Kansas, sang two solos and Glenster Schaben and wife, of Bazine, also sang.

Since January 1 weekly prayer meetings have been conducted in the members' homes, a wonderful spirit being present.

Meals will be served in the basement of the church on Saturday and Sunday at the following prices: breakfast: adults, 15 cents, children, seven years and under, 10 cents; dinner and supper, adults, 25 cents, children, seven years and under, 15 cents. In addition to Apostles Edwards and Garver, Patriarch W. A. McDowell, all stake missionaries, and local bishopric will be in attendance. Plan now to spend the week-end in Saint Joseph and obtain the benefits of this conference.—The stake presidency, 413 American National Bank Building, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Conference Minutes

MOBILE.—District conference was held at Bay Minette, Alabama, January 24 and 25. The first meeting was a preaching service on Saturday night, the sermon by George E. Burt. Business session opened Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, Franklin Steiner presiding. George E. Burt was chosen to preside during business session. Music was furnished by Mrs. Jesse Baggett and Miss Vera White with Jason Booker in charge of singing. Minutes of the last conference were read and approved; official report of the president was read and accepted, also report of reunion committee. Ministerial reports were read from J. W. Hancock, H. M. Aebli, Franklin Steiner, W. N. Howell, J. C. Yocom, and Norman J. Wiggins. Statistical reports were read as follows: Bay Minette, 94; Mobile, 264; Escatawpa and Vancleave Branches were not reported. Nonresident report was not read. A recommendation from Mobile Branch that R. C. Smith and Frank Miller be ordained to the office of priest was accepted. The ordinations were left with the district presidency. Reunions were withdrawn for the coming year or until it is seen fit to continue them. A committee was chosen to dispose of all reunion property except dishes. The reunion fund, $30.94, was transferred to the district fund, and the Bishop is to be notified. Suggestion that a week's combined institute to be held with Alabama, Florida, and Mobile Districts was accepted; and the district president conferred with officers of the other districts as to the time and place of institute. Time and place of next conference were left with the district presidency. The suggestion that the district president preside over district conferences was accepted. Officers elected for the coming year are: President, Franklin Steiner; counselors, George E. Burt and H. M. Aebli; secretary, Irma Tillman; treasurer, Irma Tillman; director of religious education, George E. Burt; auditor, R. C. Smith; musical director, Mrs. George E. Burt; budgeting committee: Franklin Steiner and Irma Tillman. Franklin Steiner was the speaker for the two o'clock meeting Sunday afternoon. Conference adjourned to meet at the call of the district presidency.

Our Departed Ones

DOBSON.—Robert Dobson was born July 9, 1854, at Arthur, Ontario; united with the church March 1, 1898, being baptized by Elder J. L. Mortimer. He was a friend to the traveling ministry who labored in Ontario. In March, 1885, he married Flora McLean at Port Elgin, Ontario. Left to mourn are his widow, four sons: Robert, John, and James Levi, at home, and William G., of Toronto; one grandson, five sisters, and six brothers. Following a short illness he passed away January 24, 1931, at his home in Port Elgin. The funeral service, largely attended, was held in the Saints' Church, January 26, in charge of Iden Leeder, president of branch, assisted by Reverend D. C. Cowan, pastor of United Church, and D. E. Perkins, of Warton, past president of Owen Sound District, the last named delivering the sermon. Interment was in Sanctuary Park Cemetery.

BURLEY.—Martha Elizabeth Burley was born in Charleston, West Virginia, September 24, 1857. She was united in marriage to Jesse

The Holy Bible

The Book of Mormon

Book of Doctrine and Covenants

The man who knows his Bible is wise, for it contains the gospel of the Son of God, the gospel of salvation.

If this man knows the Book of Mormon, his faith in Christ and his work is increased, and that is the purpose for which the record is given to the people.

If he has the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and searches its pages, he sees the consistency of the three, and the words of the old prophet of Israel come to have a new meaning to him: "A threefold cord is not quickly broken."

Get your Doctrine and Covenants and search its pages. It has helped others; it has help for you. Have an extra copy for loaning to inquirers. Let the word of the Lord become familiar and precious to you. 803C, Cloth, 80c; 803L, stiff leather, $1.25; 803F, flexible morocco, $3.25.

H. Burley in 1873. Nine children were born to this union. Her husband and five children preceded her in death. Three of the remaining four children were present at the funeral. She passed away February 8, 1931. Over forty-five years of her life were spent in the church, she having been baptized by R. M. Maloney at Seligman, Missouri. The funeral occurred from the Carson Funeral Parlor, Independence, Missouri, the sermon by J. M. Terry.

YOUNG.—James M. Young was born in Newtongrange, Témple Parish, near Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1850. Immigrated to the United States in 1869, settling near Sharon, Pennsylvania. He married Chloe P. Notman in 1870. To them six children were born, three boys and three girls. Adam died in infancy and James about four years ago. His wife passed from this life in May, 1928. He united with the church in 1889, being baptized by L. W. Powell. Died January 4, 1931, leaving one son, George S. Young, and three daughters: Mrs. H. G. Early, Mrs. J. P. Hess, and Mrs. J. A. Becker with whom he lived; eleven grandchildren, and fourteen great-grandchildren. The funeral was from Carson's Funeral Parlors, Independence, Missouri, in charge of E. F. McGuire. Sermon was by U. W. Greene. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

LAWSON.—Earl Eugene Lawson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Lawson, was born February 2, 1931, at Independence, Missouri. Died February 6, 1931, and the funeral services were held at the home, Elder C. E. Blodgett in charge. Interment was in Wood Lawn Cemetery, Independence, Missouri.

WILBY.—Martha Ann Wilby was born at Dewsbury, Yorkshire, England, in 1842. She came to Canada in 1875. Was baptized by J. D. Stead December 5, 1923. One son, Donald, with whom she has lived since coming to western Canada some thirty years ago, is a member of the church. She passed peacefully away December 30, 1930, surrounded by loving friends, her son, Donald, and an only daughter, Jessie, at her side. Left to mourn are four children, a devoted daughter-in-law, Lilly Wilby, and six grandchildren. She spent an active and useful life and was favorably known in the community. She had a strong belief in the hereafter and esteemed her faith in the latter-day work as well founded. Doctor Farrell, of Edmonton United Church, conducted an impressive funeral service. Interment was in Heatherdown, Alberta.

ORNDOFF.—Mary C. Orndoff was born September 1, 1861, at Clinton, Illinois. She became a member of the church February 9, 1896, being baptized at Cameron, Nebraska, by Samuel D. Payne. Passed away January 4, 1931, at Rochester, Minnesota, where she had gone for medical treatment. She was a Saint who had many interesting stories to tell of the blessings given her because of her faith. Left to mourn are her husband, E. J. Orndoff, Cairo, Nebraska; four sons: John and Ted, Cairo; Bryan, Albion, Nebraska; and Duward, Alliance, Nebraska; three daughters: Mrs. Anna Brundage, Mrs. Goldie Irvin, and Mrs. Opal Irvin, Cairo. O. L. D'Arcy, of Nebraska City, delivered the funeral sermon at the family home in Cairo January 7.

BURR.—Mary Ann Burr was born in Ontario, Canada, April 4, 1850. Died January 9, 1931. She was married to A. E. Burr December 30, 1874, and to them four children, three daughters and one son, were born. She joined the church July 14, 1899, being baptized by J. J. Cornish. Left to mourn are her husband, one son, three daughters, one sister, one brother, eleven grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. The funeral sermon was by E. S. White. Interment was in Oak Ridge Cemetery, Bay City, Michigan.

DANI.—Elizabeth Brown was born in Huntersfield, England, September 6, 1845. She with other members of her family united with the Utah Church in England in 1861. In 1863 with an older sister she immigrated to the United States, their objective being Utah. While they were passing through Missouri, Elizabeth met Gabriel Dani, who became her husband; she did not accompany her sister to Utah, but went with her husband to California, and with him was baptized into the Reorganized Church at San Juan by J. R. Cook in 1873. To them were born the following children: Mrs. Mary E. Swending, of Monterey; Mrs. Jane A. Twitchell, Santa Cruz; Mrs. Ada Harlan, of Monterey; and Lucia Dani, Monterey; Alvin Dani, Big Sur; Anthony Dani, Aromas; John Dani, of Watsonville, California. Another son, Reil Dani, for years an employee of the Government, died a year ago. Her husband passed away in 1908. Through the righteous life she lived she made many friends for the gospel, and through the teachings of herself and husband all of her children and many grandchildren and some great-grandchildren have united with the church. There are forty-seven grandchildren and sixty-nine great-grandchildren. She died at her home in Monterey, California, February 5, 1931. The funeral was held in King City in charge of Elder A. R. Lawn.

PEARSON.—Nancy Blanche Parshall was born in Greenfield, Ohio, May 2, 1882. She moved with her parents to Oklahoma in 1894. Married Bert Pearson July 4, 1901. Eleven children were born to them. Three died in infancy. She was baptized a member of the church July 20, 1904, at Terilton, Oklahoma, by W. M. Aylor. Passed away January 27, 1931, leaving to mourn, her husband, eight children, her father, five sisters, two brothers, and one grandchild. She was a good wife, mother, and friend. The funeral occurred from the Methodist Church at Terilton, the funeral sermon being preached by William Bath. Interment was in Terilton Cemetery.

MAYBEE.—Alvira Catherine Kast was born in the town of Scott, on April 26, 1868, the daughter of William and Mary Kast. She departed this life at Soldiers' Grove, Wisconsin, January 30, 1931, after a short illness. She was married to William Maybee March 13, 1885. This union was blessed with thirteen children, three of whom preceded their mother, Walter, Willie, and Nellie. Living are her husband, five sons, five daughters, seventeen grandchildren, four great-grandchildren, four brothers, and five sisters. Sister Maybee not only cared diligently for her own large family, but she was constantly helping others, and she leaves a host of friends in the neighborhood where she lived. Her life was one of service. She was a faithful member of the church for seventeen years. The funeral was from the Soldiers' Grove Church, and the sermon was by Amos Berve, assisted by Arthur Davenport.

KING.—Richard Martin King was born February 28, 1855, in Jackson County, Mississippi. Died January 30, 1931, at his home in Bayou Labatre, Alabama. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints March 17, 1879, by H. C. Smith, at Bluff Creek, Mississippi. Was ordained an elder March 11, 1911. Surviving are his wife, two sons, three daughters, and several grandchildren. The funeral was conducted by George E. Burt and Franklin Steiner.

VERMILYE.—Ino Maxine, daughter of Oscar V. and Hazel Stahlle Vermilye, was born in Peoria, Illinois, May 27, 1918. At the age of four weeks she came to Plano, Illinois, with her mother, living with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Stahlle, for a year while her father was in the service of his country during the World War. At Doctor Vermilye's return, her permanent home was in Plano. Maxine was in the seventh grade at the time of her decease. She was an exceptionally good student, and had developed rare ability as a pianist for one of her age. She was baptized July 18, 1926, by Elder W. A. McDowell, confirmed by Elders McDowell and L. O. Wildermuth. She was always faithful in her response to her church activities. She was ill for four weeks, passing away at the Saint Charles Hospital in Aurora, February 3, 1931. She is survived by her parents, one sister, Gloria Jean; her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Stahlle, of Plano, Illinois; and of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Vermilye, of Sandwich, Illinois; and a host of other relatives and friends. The funeral services were held from the Methodist Church because of its larger seating capacity. R. E. Davey delivered the discourse, assisted by J. M. Blakely. Maxine was loved by the people of Plano, and her death was felt by all. The stores all closed for the funeral, and the upper grades of the grade school were dismissed.

PENDLETON.—Joseph Thomas Pendleton, son of Joseph T. and Mary E. Wright Pendleton, was born February 3, 1849, near Council Bluffs, Iowa. He died at Lyons, Wisconsin, February 3, 1931. He leaves to mourn, two sisters, Mary Emmeline Pendleton and Rosella Felicia Pendleton. The funeral sermon was by Elder Amos Berve. Interment was in the Lyons Cemetery. He became a member of the church August 4, 1898, at Lyons, Wisconsin, being baptized by F. M. Cooper.

MIDDLETON.—Warren E. Middleton, of Kanorado, Kansas, died suddenly at the home of his son-in-law, Russell Bartlett, Saturday morning, February 14, 1931. He was born January 12, 1871, at Edina, Missouri, and was married to Lillie May Fender June 4, 1899. To them eight children were born. One son, Lester, and one daughter, Mary, preceded the father in death. The living children are: Mrs. Russell Bartlett, and Elsie, Raymond, Lucile, Orwin, and Dorothy of the home. These with the wife and two brothers, March and Ed Middleton, survive him. Mr. Middleton and his family were among the earliest residents of Sherman County, Kansas. For a number of years he was a member of the church in which he held the office of deacon. He was a highly esteemed man, one who worked for the betterment of the community in which he lived. The funeral occurred at the Christian Church at Kanorado, Elder J. D. Curtis officiating, and interment was in the Kanorado Cemetery.

"The Way Out"

In another column is an article from the Presiding Bishopric which should have the careful attention and reading of all Saints, particularly those of the ministry. A reading of the article will show that the Bishopric in administering the finances of the church has entered upon a policy of retrenchment and debt reduction, which was indicated and outlined by and in the policy adopted by the Appropriations Committee in passing judgment upon the various items and general aspects of the budget allowances. It will be remembered from our presentation last week that this policy was also approved by the members of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric. In fact, it is well to state here that the Bishopric as previously constituted was aware of and concerned with the problem of church indebtedness, and had considered ways and means of meeting the situation.

In presenting the five points constituting "the way out," the Bishopric while iterating what has previously been said, has briefly set out what might be greatly expanded in detail. Two things by way of dilation I mention here.

Several letters coming to the desk have indicated a fear on the part of some that once out of debt, the administrative authorities will at once "plunge into other debt," and it is thought that some assurance should be given against such procedure. In the fourth principle cited, this matter is covered succinctly, for to "work under a balanced budget" will prevent the very situation indicated in the fears cited. A balanced budget will provide expansion only from reserves already set up and surpluses in hand.

The policy outlined by the Bishopric means a course of frugality in church expenditures; and Bishop Carmichael in discussing the matter with me suggests that we should lay great emphasis upon the necessity of every family and every member of the church entering upon a period of stringent frugality as well as the church doing so. And he is right.

The present financial and industrial depression has impressed many severe lessons, lessons we might well have learned by obedience and observation rather than from the things we suffer. But even the Master had to learn obedience by the things he suffered. So while facing the issues and with our faces determinedly to the future, we have no energy to waste in mourning about "what might have been." It is better that we apply ourselves to the task, "This is what must be done."

In unity lies our strength.

Blue Pencil Notes

Signs of the Times: III.—"Perilous Times."

Paul declared, "This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come."—2 Timothy 3: 1.

The developments of science in medicine and along other lines, together with more universal and liberal education, were presumed to promote human safety and peace. Yet such has not always been the result. In fact, some of our most cherished inventions today make the times eminently more perilous. For example, the lists of killed and wounded in automobile accidents annually read like the record of a great war: in the United States in 1930 there were 32,500 persons killed and 960,000 injured. The man who fares forth upon the highways, either on foot or in his automobile, incurs a risk that begins to become comparable to that of going into battle. In a recent report the Travelers Insurance Company says: "It's worse than war. In the eighteen months of the World War 50,510 members of the A. E. F. were killed in action or died of wounds. But 50,900 persons have been killed in motor car accidents in the last eighteen months."

Disturbances in the social order tend to further mark the times as perilous. In years gone by we talked seriously of invading Mexico to restore order and protect American citizens against the menace of bandits; we were concerned for the safety of our citizens in Morocco and other distant lands. Today the front page of almost every daily paper in every city is adorned with the reports of outrages committed by bandits. Not only are citizens robbed, they are frequently tortured maliciously and without provocation. There are wholesale machine gun massacres in Chicago and other less notorious gang resorts. Kidnappings for ransom are more frequent than they were in Mexico.

Peace officers seem either unwilling or unable to protect the citizens. In many cities the peace officers are in league with the criminal element, and themselves are paid, first by the city to protect its citizens, and then by the criminals to see that the citizens are not protected. Even where there is an honest endeavor to furnish protection the automobile renders the problem exceedingly difficult. A robbery or murder occurs, the criminals dash around the corner, change their caps for hats, dust off their coats, light fresh cigarettes, and are lost in the crowd. Even if apprehended, conviction in the courts is exceedingly uncertain. It has reached a stage where many begin to argue that the law-abiding citizen must arm himself and learn how to shoot as they did during the frontier days of the country.

We had fondly hoped that modern enlightenment and education, together with religious influences, had developed humanity beyond a stage of savagery, but Paul went on to say that in the last days men should be not only selfish and without natural affection, but they should be fierce. The wanton cruelty and disregard for human life and suffering by those engaged in some of the activities mentioned above is appalling and reminds us of the further statement of the Master that at the time of his coming it would be "even as in the days of Noah." The Biblical statement concerning the days of Noah is that the earth was "filled with violence."

To the elements of unsafety already mentioned may be added economic conditions, the fear caused by the actual realization of unemployment and poverty. The foundations of more than one government today tremble because of the unrest of people who are out of work and in need. To give them a dole which will support life will not remove the peril, because an idle populace is always a menace to the safety of a country.

James in writing about the signs of the times in the last days said: "Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days."—James 5: 3. He added, "Your riches are corrupted . . . your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Howl for your miseries that shall come upon you."—James 5: 1-3.

There has been a heaping together of treasures on the part of the rich such as was never before witnessed in the history of the world. Some of those who have heaped this treasure together use it as a stewardship for the good of humanity, but many others use it in wasteful, wanton ways which serve to inflame the passions of the unemployed and those in need. As James said, "Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter." This condition of the unequal distribution of wealth, the great heaping together of treasures in the hands of a few, this revelry and waste during a time when the world is burdened and torn with sorrow and want fan the slumbering embers of revolution, until there is danger that they shall break into flame, bringing disaster upon rich and poor alike.

To the physical and economic perils before mentioned may be added those moral menaces that undermine the home and the characters of the members of the home circle, striking at the very roots of civilization. Our gravest perils are spiritual. There have always been evils in the world; but today the forces of vice and immorality are better organized, better intrenched than ever before, better financed, better equipped with all sorts of modern paraphernalia to make their work effective.

Latter Day Saints are not pessimistic, even though they see the untoward signs of the times. Beyond the present turmoil, destined perhaps to increase for a time, they see the rise of a better era when Christ shall reign in peace. Safety will be found only in righteousness. To his warning, Paul adds the admonition: "Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned, and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Representing the Church

When a local paper prints something concerning the Restoration that needs correcting, it is a good policy for the persons who feel moved to make those corrections to write to headquarters for suggestions and data. It sometimes happens, through no fault of their editorial staffs, that papers carry material that gives a wrong impression; but they show their fairness and honesty in their general willingness to print corrections.

Members of the church, with the best of intentions, sometimes make very serious errors because they do not know how to present the history and doctrine of the church in concise journalistic form. Sometimes their articles represent the church so incompletely and leaves its identity so confused that

OFFICIAL

The Way Out

Doubtless the members of the church studied with anxious care the announcement in last week's Herald, by President Frederick M. Smith, of the financial program adopted by the Appropriations Committee. Discussion of the program by the Presiding Bishopric may prove helpful, and may be necessary for the purpose of indicating the mind of those upon whom the responsibility for the guidance of church finance chiefly falls. Some things stated previously require repetition, for a second telling may serve to emphasize the importance of the principles adopted and the work to be done.

The laity, as well as the priesthood, has felt a genuine concern for the well-being of the church. A brief summary of what has happened to us will disclose a substantial basis for this concern, for our church treasury had felt the severe effects of rapid changes in the social, economic, and religious life of our time, in addition to the changes in our own organization.

From the point of view suggested, some social changes are very significant. In many States the period of required schooling has been steadily lengthening, frequently not ending until the pupil's sixteenth year. This has made a heavy inroad upon the parental pocketbook, as every parent can feelingly testify who has been faced with the heavy expense this longer educational period entails. To the majority of children the additional schooling thus required is a blessing whose merits may not be overstated, but these merely make the expense more bearable; they do not reduce it. It is trite to say that living conditions have been advancing. The automobile, the radio, better and more fashionable clothing, foods attractively and conveniently brought to us, finer and more beautiful homes—the list is unending. But each advance has made living more expensive. The desire to spend money has been increased by advertising through every conceivable medium, making a subtle and powerful appeal with which our fathers were almost entirely unfamiliar. And the desire has been made easy of fulfillment by installment buying.

With the social changes increasing, as they have, the costs of existence, a number of economic it would be better for the authors not to attempt to correct other errors at all.

Send clippings to headquarters, and material will be sent as soon as possible. This is not to "muzzle" local writers, but to insure that the church will not be misrepresented.

changes have raised themselves. We are now very gradually emerging from a business depression which for severity, in the life of our Nation, has had only six counterparts. It has caused widespread unemployment as business activity has been reduced or ceased. Drouth, with resultant crop failures, has afflicted the land. Financial institutions have perhaps never before been compelled to meet so severe a test. But aside from these effects, other factors have been operating for some time. Real wages have begun to decline; part time employment, to some extent because of increased mechanization of industry, has cut money income; the employable ages of workers have been restricted, until in many factories a man of thirty-five or forty is too old to be hired.

The religious life of the world about us has suffered from indifference by many to the enduring elements of the Christian faith. The way of pleasure has been more alluring than the way of truth. Our church has not escaped, for, with or without reason, inactivity, indifference, and distrust have beset us. Possibly many have not realized and are not now aware that a time of testing has come.

The changing conditions, sketched above, have caused in our church a decreasing income, while on the other hand, costs of maintaining our properties and conducting the work of the church have been mounting. The requirements of missionaries and their families, of those in growing number whose active days in church service have passed; the expense of larger holdings and institutions; the efforts towards the establishment of Zion, have thus brought about a serious situation. What is the way out of it?

The way out is indicated by at least five general principles, the following of which although requiring a severe, even painful, effort, should be permanently valuable to the church. First, not only arrest expansion, but in providing for future growth on a "cash and carry" basis, be certain that maintenance of broader activities is possible from current income without endangering the money needed for activities already in effect. Second, stop the leaks from costly operations, diversion of liquid resources to fixed investments which increase maintenance costs and add to the drain from current income. Third, having our church objectives in view, digest assets now in our possession as rapidly as possible by diverting to productive uses, or converting into cash by sale as conditions may warrant. Fourth, not alone this year but in ensuing years, work under a balanced budget, where income reasonably to be expected is not overreached by outgo. The attainment in that direction this year, despite its accomplishment by severe sacrifice, we hope will

"Our Creed, All Truth"

AN EXPLANATION

By S. A. Burgess

We were really quite startled recently to be told that to scholars the above-stated creed sounded "presumptuous."

Such a conclusion could come only from what seems to us a complete misapprehension of its meaning. We have never understood it to mean that we of the church individually here today possess a knowledge of all truth, or that we collectively have all the truth that is to be had. To the contrary, that creed instead of being presumptuous is one of humility.

This church in its history has rather refrained from any attempt to formulate an official and definite, but limited, creed. Individuals coming out of other churches have brought with them some creedal ideas, but if we have really understood our own position it has been and is that which is sometimes called an attitude of scientific open-mindedness.

It has seemed to us many times as remarkable that one who had as limited an education as Joseph Smith had should have set forth such clear scientific principles, so much in harmony with modern thought.

In Doctrine and Covenants 76:5 we find set forth the idea of conservation of matter and eternity of intelligence, or the indestructibility or conservation of intellectual energy. These clear concepts, though they may have been touched upon by philosophers at different times, hardly became ordinary teaching as early as 1832 and 1833. The statement that truth is a knowledge of things as they were, as they are, and as they shall be, is quite significant from a philosopher's point of view. That the truth is not things, but the knowledge of things is a distinct statement of philosophic thought: that it requires a perceiving intelligence for a fact to be true.

Joseph Smith, jr., opened the Restoration with the statement of James 1:5: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally." This promise was given by James to the church, and he recognized the privilege and responsibility of every member of the church to make that appeal to the Divine and that open-minded approach to the truth, that true revelation should not be restricted to outworn forms of worship, but our intelligence left free always to find more of truth.

Joseph Smith's son confirmed again and again the same theme, divine responsibility and the open way before us. His grandson, our President F. M. Smith, twenty-five years ago made the declaration that if each of his hearers would note down his own idea of God in detail, place it in an envelope and lay it away for ten years, he would guarantee that when the envelope was opened his ideas would have changed. We may well say that we would hope that it had; that our concepts of our heavenly Father had approached more nearly the truth, and our knowledge of that which is true increased.

"Our creed—all truth" means that our minds are not shut to any truth; that our dogma is not to be limited to our past, or even our present concept; that all truth is divine when discovered and is part of our creed. Instead of being a boast, it is rather a humble acknowledgment that we see through a glass darkly; that we have much to learn; that we will not close our minds to truth as it may be discovered; that we hope to progress to a greater knowledge of the truth as time passes. We recognize human frailty and our own tendency individually to make mistakes at times, but we hold that any truth scientifically proved can not be inconsistent with the Perfect One, with our Beloved Elder Brother, with our Savior, Jesus the Christ.

This belief therefore challenges us to accept the developments of science as they unfold. But one asks, "Do you, then, believe in evolution? Do you believe that man was descended from a monkey? Is that part of our creed?" No, that is not part of our creed, because it is not yet shown to be a part of truth. The correct approach is one of open-mindedness, a willingness and desire to learn the truth. To close students, it is only a theory. Other assumptions are hardly worthy of the dignity of being called theories, and are only hypotheses. But so far as anything is discovered to be scientifically true, it is not inconsistent with the Word of God, let alone with God himself.

Thus, for example, in the Bible story of the creation it stated that God made the world in six days, and yet it was the fourth day when he set the moon and sun in the heavens and divided the night from the day. It is, therefore, evident that these six days could not have been days of twenty-four hours in length, which we now call a day. Evidently they refer to periods of time. A thousand years is as a day to Him, and a day, for that matter, as a thousand years. A million years is only a measure of time.

We have rather rejoiced in this feature many times, that our faith is such that it is open to receive any and every truth as discovered; that we may approach humbly seeking to find out always that which is right, that which is truth, that which has been, which is, and which shall be. We believe that no truth is contrary to our creed, not that we ourselves possess all truth, but that we do not shut out any fact when discovered and proved. That seems to us a wonderful and splendid platform on which to stand.

The Story of My Life

III.—GROPING TOWARD THE LIGHT

By Arthur Leverton

As told to Nellie Andrew and Illa Brown

Up to this time the Latter Day Saints had preached only once or twice in the neighborhood. The Baptists had an evangelist come and hold a series of meetings. We held a prayer meeting in the afternoon during the week, in which they expected the question of my call would be satisfactorily decided upon, so the evangelist took me to task. He asked, "Don't you love the Lord Jesus?" "Yes, sir," I replied, "if I understand the principle of love." "Wouldn't you like to engage in the service of bringing sinners to Christ?" "Yes," I answered, "if the Lord wants me to, but I do not know whether he does or not, as I have no assurance." "What do you want?" he asked. "I want satisfactory evidence that the Lord wants me to assist in the work." "According to your own conversation you have all the evidence that any of us have," he returned. "Is that true?" I asked him. "Yes," he replied. "Well," I said, "I do not think very much of your evidence."

I met Brother Joseph Snively and John Shaw on the road the following day. We commenced talking church and religion, and discussed the question of the authority to preach. They agreed with me and commenced to show me from the Bible that it was a real necessity. I wondered if I left the preaching alone, if there was not sufficient to save me without changing my church fellowship. I continued to go to meetings. Some said, "You are not going to go to those Mormon meetings, are you?" I said, "Yes, I am. If the Devil himself should come along and give out an appointment, I would go and hear what he had to say." I became thoroughly convinced that even if the so-called Mormons were wrong, I was not right. So on the eighth day of January, 1871, I attended a service at John Traxler's, conducted by the Latter Day Saints, and was baptized. Before I returned home from my baptism, I prayed that God would give me such a testimony and evidence of the gospel I had now embraced that I should never in the future be left to doubt its truth for one moment. This I did not receive, and my wife thought I had thrown myself away. She fretted and cried and made it very difficult for me and caused considerable sorrow, for if ever two loved each other, we did. I prayed for the evidence, but I did not receive it, and it appeared that all the spiritual light I had ever received on religion was taken from me. I finally became disgusted with any kind of religion, and fully made up my mind I would have nothing more to do with religion or church.

On the twelfth day of January, 1871, I was called to the office of elder. That same evening the Zone Branch was organized, and I was chosen its president. As I had not received the above testimony, I continued to pray for it, but God still withheld it from me. So there I was, some of the duties of an elder pressing upon me and I in spiritual darkness, having no direct evidence from God of the truth of the work that I was now called to represent and teach to others. This I could not do. So I took the stand that I would not preach and teach to others something of whose truth I had no direct evidence from God. Accordingly, I refused to take any part in religious services whatever, and would not even go where such services were held. For over five months this state of spiritual darkness continued. During that time so great was that darkness that I lost confidence in all forms of religion, and almost in the existence of a God. Life itself with me seemed to have no charms, no hope, no light. Oh, that state of mind—I can not find words to express it. But to illustrate further the horror of such a state of mind, I will here relate a short prayer which I offered. One day, feeling despondent and sorrowful, I retired to a grove and there fell on my knees and said, "O God, if there is such a being in the universe, and thy power is as unlimited as stated, let, I pray thee, light come into my soul. Otherwise take my life from off the earth, for I do not wish in this state to remain here any longer." A short time after the above prayer was uttered, I chanced to be where a man was ridiculing the doctrines taught by the Latter Day Saint Church and persecuting the Saints in general. Without thought on my part, and before I had time to think what I was doing, I was on my feet defending both the doctrine of the church and the Saints. Afterwards I wondered why I did so, but was unable to decide. Another incident I must here relate:

In talking with Brother Snively (who baptized me), I said, "If there is a God, and this is his work, I wish you to have my name taken off the church records; for the way I am now I am a damage to the church, and if it is true I do not wish to do the work any harm." I was told that the Saints that same evening in prayer meeting prayed to God for wisdom in regard to the matter and were told in reply to let the subject rest, that it would be all right in time. Some time after this I was, one evening, passing the home of John Taylor, where the Saints met for prayer meeting. They were then gathering for meeting. I felt impressed to go in with them and see how they were getting along. I did so. I was invited to take charge of the meeting. This I refused, for I had no intention of taking any part in the meeting whatever. However, the service commenced, prayers were offered, and testimonies borne. I was thinking over the past, and suddenly there came into my mind a promise I had made to God years before. It was on this wise the promise was made: I had been to a love feast in the Methodist Church that day and had neglected my duty in speaking for Christ, so on my way home I felt condemned for such neglect. So there and then I promised God that in future where any opportunity was given to speak for Christ I would do so. Now it came to my mind this way, after the invitation was given for all to take part: "Will you keep your promise, or will you lie to God?" I soon decided to keep my promise, but I did not know what to say. I rose to my feet to say something, but I did not speak, for before I could do so the Spirit of the Lord came upon me in such power that I was unable to speak, so took my seat again. After a short time I arose again and was then able to say, "I know this latter-day work is true, and from this time, God being my helper, I shall stand in its defense and try to do something towards its advancement." After receiving the testimony of the Lord concerning the truth of the work, I took my stand as a minister of the church, and God blessed me in preaching.

Odds and Ends

By Voas Meredith

The "odds" are determined by the "ends." Life is a game of choice, not a game of chance. Whether or not the odds are against a player depends on the ends for which he is living. I repeat, our odds are determined by our ends—by our objective, our goal, our purposes, our motives.

We can sanctify ourselves "for their sakes," or we can merely "eat, drink, and be merry," as we will. We can enjoy the privilege of a home, or we can refuse the obligations of home life, whichever we choose. We can acquire athletic, musical, and industrial skill, or we can bury our talents and "pass the time," as we desire. We can live as a friend to man or we can exist "unhonored and unsung," according to our choice.

The one distinguishing characteristic of man which makes him the crown of creation and only a little lower than the angels is this ability to determine the ends for which he will live. Not that man can choose to fly as a bird and, having chosen, soar through the air; nor that he can will to live entirely "unto himself alone" and, having so willed, ignore the great principles discovered through centuries of human experience. There does abide biological and cultural heritage as well as personal endeavor; but the greatest of these is personal endeavor. It is important to recognize biological limitations and possibilities; it is important to study and correlate the enduring values of the ages and their accumulated wisdom; it is tremendously more important, however, to contemplate these limitations, contributions, and ideals to the end of consecrating one's life to further creative achievement. Why understand the nature of man's organism or the type of environment that surrounds him except as these may be used as means in attaining some progressively constructive end? What could be more odd or more unintelligent than a humanity concerned with knowing the kind of machine man is and the kind of materials that he has at his disposal while lacking in any vital care as to the end-product he is creating and marketing?

Parents who know how to give good gifts to their children are parents who have chosen to "know their job" and who are squarely shouldering their responsibility. Children who are growing in wisdom and stature and favor with God and man are children who are choosing to be "about their Father's business." Business men who are really sharing in the work of the world are those who are choosing to "labor together with God." Friends who are "giving themselves with their alms" are those who are choosing to become the "servant of all." Teachers who are truly "sent of God," and whom the "people hear gladly" are those who are choosing to "study to show themselves approved" and who are daily deciding to "love mercy, deal justly, and walk humbly" with their God.

What are your ends? Are the odds against you? Is the percentage of the choices you are willing to make in terms of more adequate and more enriched living on the decline or the ascent? "Choose ye this day," and every day, to seek, not hide; to become, not succumb; to grow, not dwarf; to achieve, not drift!

Pleasure is like a sprained ankle, you have it all to yourself; but happiness is like measles, you can not have it without giving it to some one else.—Selected.

Defiling the Temple

By Evan A. Fry

If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.—Matthew 6: 22.

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.—1 Corinthians 3: 16, 17.

No matter what their denomination may be, the ministers of today are practically unanimous in their opinion on at least one thing. Ask any minister what is wrong with his church today, and you can be almost certain that he will deplore the lack of spiritual power among his people. He will look with longing eyes toward the marvelous experiences of the early New Testament church, and especially towards that crowning marvel of spiritual blessing on the day of Pentecost. If you ask him still further, you will discover that this average minister holds a rather pessimistic view of the spiritual state of his parishioners; that he believes that the thing practically every one of them needs is a thorough conversion and an overwhelming baptism of the Holy Ghost, such as was experienced by the primitive church under the ministry of the apostles.

By no stretch of the imagination can the present age be called a spiritual or a religious age. People have very largely ceased to care for things of the spirit, and have consequently ceased to seek after them, or to believe in the spiritual life of those faithful few who have sought and found a higher life. Even a casual observation of the life of the world today is sufficient to account for this lack of spiritual power even among the church members and professed religionists. People do not seek after and cultivate spiritual power; their eye is not single to the things of God, and their bodies are so defiled as to be unfit dwelling places for the Holy Spirit should it try to come and abide.

I wish to discuss some of the ways of defiling the temple of the Holy Ghost. Some of them may seem trivial, but it is by the little things that we nearly always stand or fall. A very little mud or filth tracked into a very clean and very beautiful temple each day for a month would render that temple uninhabitable for a cleanly person. Similarly, a very little defilement of the temple of the Holy Ghost, if oft repeated and continued, may soon bulk large enough to drive the Spirit from its home and render the temple desolate.

In a physical sense, defilement of our body may enter through any one of the five senses. I do not think it makes very much difference how the defilement comes; the fact of its being there is sufficient. I do not think we can conscientiously excuse ourselves for defilement on the grounds of its relatively small degree or minor importance. Dirt is dirt, whether it be little or great.

There are two types of defilement; that which defiles the mind of man and that which affects the physical body. Anything which affects the physical body will of course react upon the efficiency of the mind; therefore the two types are essentially the same after all.

Your mind may be defiled through the gates of your ear when you hear a lewd and smutty story that leaves a dark smudge on the heretofore clean surfaces of your mind. Your mind may be defiled by hearing constant profanity and blasphemy which you could just as well avoid. The hearing of anything which takes your mind from what is good and pure and of good report will defile your mind.

Your mind may receive defilement through the gate of your eyes, which read trashy literature, feast upon lewd pictures, or revel in movies or stage plays whose sole apparent purpose is to cater to the lusts of man through their carnal appeal. Christ said in no uncertain terms that whosoever should look upon a woman to lust after her should not have the Spirit, and I don't recall that he said whether the woman should be on the printed page, in a picture, or behind the footlights of a modern stage. The effect in any case will be the same.

The temple of your body may be defiled if you pamper it with the satisfaction of all fleshly lusts which gratify the sense of feeling, or the sense of taste, or the sense of smell. You can not expect your body to be filled with the Holy Ghost if it is so slothful that it has to spend most of the time in bed out of sheer laziness. You can not expect your whole body to be filled with light if you keep it full to saturation of rich and unhealthful foods or stimulating drinks. We Latter Day Saints have a modern revelation which is known as the Word of Wisdom, which expressly cautions our people against excesses of eating and drinking, which advises us against strong drinks, against an excess of meats in the summer season, and against the use of hot drinks as stimulants. This same Word of Wisdom states in no uncertain terms that tobacco is not good for man, but that it is to be used as an herb for the treatment of sick cattle. This Word of Wisdom does not condemn the man who violates its advice, but it does extend promises to those who will heed that advice.

How many of the people of the world today do you know whose bodies are overstuffed with rich and fancy foods, whose nerves are constantly jangled by stimulating drinks, whose brains are dulled by tobacco, and whose physical powers are dulled by sheer physical lethargy and laziness? I don't think that it is a terrible and damnable sin to over-eat, or to drink tea and coffee, or to smoke cigarets, but I do think that the people who do indulge themselves in such things are to some extent defiling their body, which is the temple of the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost can not dwell in a body soaked with nicotine or caffen, or alcohol, or poisoned with undigested and unabsorbed food, any more than it can dwell in a mind filled with the lusts of the world. And in the day of final reckoning, we shall all have to give an account of how well we kept that temple of the Holy Ghost which was intrusted to us.

If you and I have been defiling this temple, let us make it clean today, and resolve that no more shall defilement of any kind be allowed to enter there and remain. Then we may truly rejoice in the knowledge that our whole body is filled with the light of God's love and his Spirit.

Our Zionic Homes

By Raymond G. Wrigley

The pillars of Zion are the homes, which are the strength and stay of our social order. The foundation of the Zionic home is the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation. These homes, molded of the composition of the individual family membership, must measure up to a certain definite standard of efficiency and perfection in order to meet the acid test of the conditions and forces of life. The homes are just as strong Zionically as the family is. And the family is just as strong Zionically as the individual membership is. And inasmuch as the forged chain of metal is only as strong as its weakest link, so we find the stability of the organization of our people is in proportion to the individual unit strength. Therefore, having so great a mission attached to our homes, what manner of domestic institutions ought we to have?

The living material of the home is the family. A family may be designated as a unit society of two or more individuals, bound together by the bonds of matrimony, by love and common interest. The strength and beauty of these binding ties are promoted by high moral standards, physical well-being, spiritual mindedness, and intelligence of the members of the family. The contribution of this unit society lies in its ability to glean the best from the rich heritage of the past and from the intellectual offering of the present; which rich fruit, when combined with a vision of the future, provides a family solidarity, relative in strength to the unity of the family members.

We find in the present time, homes of various types and qualities, some as assets and some as liabilities to the society of which they are parts. Inasmuch as we find two great contending forces of life waging a great struggle and conflict involving the enlistment of human souls—one destructive, immoral, and wicked, and another constructive, moral, righteous, and life-giving—we choose carefully the motivating force for our ideal home and unit of society. Specifically, then, we as a people are preparing ourselves for the task of building Zion by moving on to perfection that ours might be a united society of perpetuation.

Some of the greatest assets to the full, rich home life may be considered as follows:

- (A) Common ideals of life and its living.
- (B) An understanding of the divine plan of the Master for family activities.
- (C) Church literature; the three standard books, the main circulating periodicals, a rich collection of the literature, and worth-while contributions of the current times. A suitable time set aside for the study and perusal of each.
- (D) The filing of an inventory and a stewardship in obedience to the celestial law.
- (E) A bond of mutual appreciation for the many problems and perplexities confronting the members.
- (F) Ability to close the doors of the home to the disintegrating forces of worldly powers and influences.
- (G) Ability to open the windows of the home for the inflowing of the constructive forces of life energizing light and truth.
- (H) A beautiful disciplinary rule for all the members—not so drastic as to be harsh, nor so elastic as to be unstable, but stern enough and yet pliable enough to meet the ever-changing troubles and cares of living.
- (I) Respect of the children for their parents throughout their growth and development.
- (J) Cleanliness both in regard to dwelling and inmates; in dress, candor in speech, softness of tone; the sunshine of nature is matched by the sunshine of happy and pure hearts.
- (K) Suitable recreation in its season, both for the adults and the youth, which should be wholesome physically and mentally.
- (L) An effort to live up to the pattern of life set by Jesus.
- (M) The Spirit of God which abides because of family prayer and individual supplication; ever ready to cheer, to comfort, and guide the inmates along the rugged course of life, in proportion to their earnestness, sincerity, and faith.

Thus as the goal of our united social order has been Zion for this hundred years of time, realizing the mission of the home in the Zionie plan, let us strive to keep our homes inviolate, and the spirit of earnest prayer alive. To cement our home fellowship and the fellowship of the Spirit in such enduring ties as to render our homes sanctuaries of refuge and of hope, is our constant purpose.

Sainthood as a Career

By Edwin H. Davies

There is no more important period in life than in which one chooses a career. It may involve a number of minor decisions which are to come later, but these are only incidental and are not to be compared in importance to the one great choice when we decide in which channel the current of our life force shall flow towards the wheels which we are to turn in the world.

Paul, in his letter to the Corinthian saints, speaks of his career as an apostle, which he states was allotted him of God. The parallel thought in this chapter is that they were called to be saints with the same certainty that he had been called to be an apostle, and that they were to live lives so pure as to be worthy the name of "saints of God."

It would be much more beneficial to us if we were to view our religious life as a career, not as something added to our lives, but as life itself. It is certainly not a correct perspective when a man thinks of himself, firstly as a father, brother, or a statesman, and lastly as a Christian, and relegates to a secondary position things of a spiritual character.

The teaching of Christ was, "Seek first to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added to you." I am sure that our spiritual lives would be infinitely enriched, and all our relations of life blessed, if we would give the church our first and supreme consideration, as there is no business that can afford to prosper at the expense of one's sainthood.

If the purpose of our lives here were to get rich and get on in the world, and we could take our wealth into the next world, and so add to our character there, some allowance could be made, but this is not so. We are here to develop our manhood and womanhood, and enlarge our moral natures with deeds of love and kindness, which only can bring us into close fellowship with our Savior Jesus Christ. When one sacrifices character and fellowship with the Master for the sake of something which is transient and ephemeral, a sad mistake is made. It may be true that his bank account may grow larger year by year, but as his bank book expands, his soul gets smaller and smaller, and the spiritual side gets less attractive and less charming.

Sometimes it is not money that attracts, but power. People begin to think it is no use living in the world unless they can have influence over others. In following this out, they soon begin to feel the restraint from their religion. Conscience gradually becomes deadened. Their friends tell them, "When you are in Rome, you must do as Rome does." They believe, and soon consent to follow suit, and thereby blemish their characters and mar their vocations as saints.

Had Christ yielded to such a temptation when he was spiritually weak after forty days of abstinence from food, when Satan offered him the world to get him to betray his mission in exchange for temporal power, how miserably he would have been cheated. But no, he could not be bribed by such an offer, nor tempted away from the paths of duty for the kingdoms of the world and their glory, or for ease, wealth, luxury, or power. His name in consequence is revered in millions of homes, because he was strong enough to resist temptation which was designed to mar his career as a saint, and as a Savior of saints.

Again, not power but pleasure may sometimes be the attracting force. Some are tempted to sacrifice goodness for the sake of pleasure, and often pleasure wins, and goodness and sainthood are again sacrificed that pleasure might not be lost. Many start with good intentions and high ideals, but in the pursuit of pleasure they are brought into temptation. The proverb today is, "Be good and you will be lonely," and eventually pleasure wins the struggle. The church is neglected in order that the gaudy butterfly called pleasure may be pursued and captured, only to find that it soon dies, leaving nothing but the empty case, so transient is pleasure.

Let it not for a moment be understood that to be a saint means to sacrifice all that the joys of life can offer. It is possible for one to have business successes, power, happiness, and pleasure without sacrificing his sainthood, but sainthood must never be relegated to a secondary consideration in our lives. For example, Abraham was a man who had great riches and prosperity, but he always gave God and the work first service. You remember how he was called a friend of God. In order to keep our faith bright and untarnished, service to God and his work must be held as the first and highest thing in life.

It is a great mistake to think that in giving of oneself heart and soul to serving God, it will in any way narrow his horizon or make life less enjoyable; that is not so. The flowers of this life may fade, but the fragrance and bloom of a Christian's life lives forever. Dear Saints, you can depend upon it, everything else will change or perish, but your career as a Saint need have no sunset; age can not wither it, nor will time destroy it.

Building Strength of Character

By Charles H. Arven

Fortunate indeed is the church of today that can hold the interest of its young people. And after much thinking and investigation, it does seem that the home is the only logical place to start training the youthful mind for that strength of character so necessary in the lives of Christian men and women. In this day and age, strength of character is certainly greatly to be desired, and it is highly needful that the young folk of our church be endowed with a strength of character that will enable them to take charge of the tremendous task that the church has undertaken, and to stand shoulder to shoulder, to battle against the forces of evil that are sure to be arrayed against it.

The church must have young men and women who have had training and possess the courage to carry on the work when the enfeebled hands of our present ministry are forced to lay it down. On the strength of the character of our young people, the great work must depend. Let us hope, and let us pray, that we may be able to train these young folk and that they will be ready when the call shall come.

Just now there is a movement on among certain clergy of an eastern State, to become confidential advisers to the young people of their church, not alone in a spiritual way, but to help them to solve the problems that confront them day by day, which they may not understand, or have not the courage to battle alone. The idea seems good, and may bring good results in the way of confidence in the ministers and the strengthening of the young people's characters. No doubt there are certain young people who at times would like to take their problems to some good man whom they could trust and confide in, one who would sympathize with them and give them the right kind of advice and the courage to go on. It would be interesting to learn just what success these ministers are having.

The great work that our church has undertaken to accomplish will certainly require young men and women who have enough strength of character to become leaders and specialists in this important work. If the above idea or any other that can be conceived that is better and more practical to build up and strengthen this line of specialists for this glorious undertaking, we should not be slow in grasping it and bringing it up to a high state of efficiency. It is a day of specializing, and every advantage must be given those who are selected to become specialists in our line of work. Therefore, if a way can be opened to help the youth of the church to solve their daily problems more readily, in a way they can clearly understand, it may be able to form characters that the church can rely on in times of great need or stress.

Out of the Shadows

By Mary E. Gillin

Out of the mists and the shadows
Where each must grope alone—
Into the Light Eternal—
Welcomed by those we have known.

Out of the mists and the shadows
Where we strive in vain to know
The "why" of today and tomorrow,
And the path where each must go.

Out of the mists and the shadows,
Into the sunlight above
When all that here lies hidden—
Made clear by our Father's love.

Out of the mists and the shadows
Where we falter and lose the way—
Then to waken where all is beauty,
And the Darkness turned into Day.

The Door is closed on our going—
Hidden awhile from your sight—
But ever and always the Morning
Is driving the Darkness of Night.

Though mists hug the earth like a blanket,
Beyond is the arching blue!
And Faith will dispel the shadows
As the sunlight dispels the dew.

Out of the mists and the shadows
Where each must go alone—
Into the Light Eternal—
Welcomed by those we have known!

PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

For more than twenty years Sister Eva May Stroeble suffered with rheumatism till her body was twisted and she was rendered quite helpless. On January 21, 1931, she was released from bondage and has passed out of the shadows that have so long surrounded her. In memory of her, Sister Gillin has written the above poem.

Little Journeys with the Editor in Chief

Lamoni

In my last I closed by referring to the Lamoni audience as being unique. We were in Zimmermann Hall, awaiting the arrival of the exact time to open the meeting—the mass meeting called after the burning of the Brick Church. Some of my first work as a public speaker was done in the old Brick Church, and hence as a speaker in those days I did not know by way of contrast how the Lamoni audiences differed from others, though by statements made by visiting speakers I learned somewhat about it.

This uniqueness was quite marked at the meeting in Zimmermann Hall. Quietly, with complete control of deep running feelings, the audience took their seats and listened to the addresses, with no demonstration of feelings so common with other audiences. A few of us gathered on the platform, and after the usual form opening, Brothers Garver, Gleazer, Carmichael, and myself spoke to the Saints. Of course, we could not but speak of the calamity which had befallen the community. Combining reminiscences aroused by the holocaust which had leveled the historic landmark, with analysis of present needs and conditions and forward-looking attitude, we tried to present to that quiet audience, which has long been trained and able to closely follow every speaker, the general aspects of a forward-looking and progressive plan of adjustment. Who could doubt what that group of people would do? Of course they would rebuild and thus supply their needs! There was never a doubt of this. The very quietude bespoke such determination; for only a people without a plan are confused. Confidence in their leaders seemed pronounced and bespoke a willingness to give unqualified support to any reasonable plan which might be developed to lead them out of the present difficulty.

No attempt was made to put on an impetuous drive to raise funds for building, just a manifest determination to get behind any move in the right direction.

And so after listening to the various talks, the audience adjourned and sought their homes. The home I sought was that of one of my elder sisters, Mrs. Frank Weld, or "Carrie," as she is affectionately known to the family. Needless to say I found a characteristic welcome.

The next day was Saturday. I had made up my mind to put in some of the day about town, just visiting. And so, breakfast over, I took the Nash to "Bert" Derry's garage for some professional attention that Bert is so well qualified to give. Then I went about town, stopping here and there to greet old-time acquaintances and pass a few words—Jim Jones, Len Dickey, Henry Miner, Joe Traxler, Dave Hanson, Dina Denio, Fred Hartshorn, George Fowler, Harry Bass, Clare Smith, Clif Merritt, Art Lane, Ted Sheen, and many others, older and younger, all remembering me of bygone days. I even saw an old-time neighbor of Independence, Burr Loar, who had come to Lamoni with a truck load of household goods. And finally I ran across Brother Carmichael, who had been doing about as I had been. I met him a few minutes later again as I went into Hinderks' store to talk guns and knives with Brother Hinderks. Made a purchase or two, and with Brother Carmichael went to get a "bite to eat." At the restaurant we met and chatted with, as we ate, John Haas, another old-timer.

Then Brother Carmichael and I thought to look about a bit on some matters which interested both of us. We had talked with Brothers DeLapp, Garver, Gleazer, Thomas, and others in the forenoon and knew somewhat of further plans for meetings, etc., and knew we had time between noon and night. So getting the Nash from the garage, together we drove to the old church site, and spent a few rather sad moments looking over the ruins. The destruction was complete; and smoke was still rising in a few spots, showing the ashes were still hot.

Well, what our ruminations were neither one said; and after a short while we went on. We went to the home of Brother Mortimore, a professor on Graceland's faculty, popularly known as "Mort." He had previously said something to me about limestone and limestone outcrops; and Brother Carmichael and I were both interested. We found "Mort" at home, and he readily consented to go with us. So he was soon in the car with us. I noticed he had his hammer with him. He's not a knocker, but he carries a hammer with him at times. We went to the college and to the home of Brother "N. Ray" to get Brother Carmichael's "rubbers." I had mine in the car. Then we followed Highway 69 straight east—a fine concrete "slab"—and about four or five miles from the center of Lamoni visited what in my boyhood days was known as the Boswell rock quarry. It was owned and operated by Brother Joseph Boswell, and from it was taken most if not all the stone used in the basement and foundation walls of the old Brick Church, and most of the other buildings in Lamoni erected in the early days of the town. At the quarry the limestone crops out because of the erosion which formed the valley of Grand River. Only a slight overburden permits quarrying without insurmountable difficulty. We reached the quarry in a few moments after leaving the college, and I could not but recall the days at times "Fitz" (short for Professor Fitzpatrick) and I, hammers in hand (as "Mort" now had his), had "trudged" that four miles or more for the privilege of hunting paleontological animals in and around the dumps of the old quarry. It was a real day's work, those days, and we usually carried our lunch.

Leaving our car at the gate, we all donned our rubbers and climbed the hill to the abandoned quarry. I was in a "chatty" mood; and in reminiscing those "geologizing days," I mentioned the fact that one day I surprised "Fitz" by finding a fine specimen of trilobite. Well, I discovered that the mere mention of this fact surprised "Mort." "What's that?" he asked. "Do you say you found a trilobite in this quarry?"

"Yes," said I, "and I'll mention his family name. It was a Phillipsii Sangamonensis." He seemed to know the fellow and said he'd stir his students by telling them I had found a trilobite there. Then I told him how "Fitz" tried to trade me out of that specimen. He finally did, and it is now somewhere in Iowa City, if I remember aright. It is the only specimen so far found in Decatur County. So there is another record for the Graceland students to match.

So we trudged up the hill, talking paleontology, and I noticed as we reached the dumps at the edge of the quarry, both "Mort" and I were watching those dumps, and each would stoop and pick up some fossil, old friends. But I noticed another thing. My eyes lacked the skill of the practice had some years ago, and "Mort" picked up about four to my one. And pretty soon he said: "Well, well! A trilobite!" But it was only a part of one, just the tail; but it was one of the same family as the one I mentioned before, and I was glad to have my story corroborated.

By this time we were at the quarry, and then we fell to discussing with Brother Carmichael the possibilities of quarrying suitable building stone. Here was our purpose in visiting the quarry. Brother Carmichael had said, as we stood beside the smoldering ruins of the old church: "Brother Smith, I'd like to see the new church constructed of native stone." So would I. And so we were interested in the old quarry. We found the stone in there, one or two strata being particularly desirable. Of course these same strata are likely to be found wherever this particular formation is to be found. Lamoni is situated on a typical glacial drift formation, anywhere from one hundred feet in thickness to two hundred or more. Below this lies the Bethany Falls limestones. So to get stone for Lamoni from this formation one must go north, east, or south to get below the drift. To the west the drift thickens till it reaches a point near Mount Ayr, some twenty-five miles or so from Lamoni. Mount Ayr is situated on one of the highest points on the southern boundary of Iowa. The glacial drift is a conglomeration of clays, sands, granite boulders, limestone rocks, gneiss,

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Guiding the Nursery Child

STUDY HELPS FOR PARENTS AND WORKERS IN THE NURSERY DEPARTMENT OF THE CHURCH SCHOOL

By Mrs. Bertha Stevens, Phoenix, Arizona

These lesson assignments are appearing early each month in "Herald" columns. They are designed to be directive and helpful in the study of all parents of small children and nursery workers. They should be especially helpful for the use of monthly group meetings or classes under the direction of the church school. The text, "Guiding the Nursery Child," by Mesley and Stevens, is an outstanding work in this field, and thoroughly reliable. Order from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, price $1.25.

Lessons One and Two appeared January 7 and February 4, respectively. C. B. W.

LESSON THREE

Clothing the Preschool Child

It will be helpful and add interest if the group has been asked to bring illustrative material—garments, fabrics, pictures, posters, etc., in connection with this lesson on children's clothing.

Not only modern apparel but old-fashioned garments of the "long ago" little tot will have appeal. Garments both good and poor from standpoint of suitability, service, and comfort should be displayed and discussed. Or it might be better in some instances for the leader to arrange the display to illustrate the points of emphasis in the lesson.

Perhaps your home economics teacher, your county home demonstration agent, or even a children's wear department of a local store may assist or loan illustrative materials for the occasion.

The problems arising for discussion will bring out information which may be organized around the following outline:

- I. A Suitable Wardrobe for the Preschool Child.
  - a. One who attends a nursery school, or
  - b. One who spends his time largely at home.

quartz, and various disintegrated formations carried by the ice from northern points.

After inspecting the old Boswell quarry and speculating somewhat upon the commercial possibilities of the shales interspersed among the strata of stone, we returned to the car, and driving to a point a mile or so east, followed a creek for some distance, to see other outcrops. This done, we entered the car again and drove several miles north and west of Davis City, towards Terre Haute, and leaving the car again in the road took another walk of a mile or so to see an outcrop, cliff shape along the creek bank.

Then, once more in the car, we drove to Terre Haute. I wanted to see that part of the territory again. I had not been there for some years. Well, I would not have known it. Only a few houses left, three or four, and the old bridge over Grand River. But the trip recalled many memories of my boyhood days. Then back to Lamoni over the old "ridge road," now a county highway. And about four or five o'clock we were back in Lamoni. And we had covered ground which formerly would have taken many, many hours. And the running talk with "Mort" on geological topics recalled former studies and trips, and I enjoyed the day (half day) greatly.

At Home, February 9.

F. M. S.

Keep in mind the following points in planning this outfit:

1. Purpose of the garment.
2. Suitability for the occasion (season, play, school, or dress up).
  - a. Materials.
  - b. Design.
  - c. Boy or girl, type, etc.
3. Serviceability:
  - a. Materials.
  - b. Design.
  - c. Workmanship.
  - d. Ease of laundering.
  - e. Replacements.
4. Accessories, shoes, etc.
5. Cost.

II. How may one ease the laundry burden and still maintain a satisfactory standard of cleanliness?

III. Suggestions for helpful, simple, and practicable garments originated or adapted by members of the group.

References, Guiding the Nursery Child, pages 34-37, 76-82, 149 paragraph 4, 150 paragraph 2.

In connection with Lesson Three and succeeding lessons for Guiding the Nursery Child, the following are suggested as the most helpful supplementary texts for study course leaders:

1. Nursery School Procedure, Foster and Mattson.
2. Growth and Development of the Young Child, Rand, Sweeney, and Vincent.

If one must choose between the two, perhaps the first should be chosen, as it is considered the best in the field. Both are very good, however, and should be in the branch library for nursery workers and parents of the nursery child. Order from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

An Investment in Juniors

By C. B. W.

At Merlin, Ontario, a unique experiment was carried out in connection with the junior stewardship project in 1930. The local church school voted to loan its twenty juniors twenty-five cents each, for investment, the use of which was left to the initiative of the junior under the advice of a sponsor. It was understood that the gain at the end of the year was to be sent in as Christmas offering, after the twenty-five cents had been returned to the school and a tithe of the increase, in each case, had been sent to the Bishop.

The plan seems an excellent one. It gives the junior the feeling that the school has confidence in his ability, there is occasion for the keeping of a financial record, the loan from the church emphasizes his partnership with God, a tithe of the increase is most reasonable, there is the return of the loan (payment of an honest debt), and finally there is the making of a free-will offering of the net gain.

We are informed that all but one of the twenty returned with the loan, and eighteen had made material increase. The individual gains ranged from sixty-six cents to four dollars and seventy-five cents. From the group, three dollars and sixty-one cents was paid as tithing, and thirty-one dollars and ninety-five cents as Christmas offering. The junior stewards returned over seven hundred per cent on the investment!

We doubt, however, if the financial return is to be compared with the richness of spiritual blessing attained by these juniors and those associated with them in the project. Lessons of industry, thrift, consistent accounting, earnest effort in a good cause, compliance with the financial law, and sacrificial giving to God through the church—all are best learned through actual practice.

The Merlin plan may not fit all communities. But some such plan of cooperation and encouragement will vastly increase the pleasure and the ultimate value of junior stewardship.

Northwestern Iowa Young People's Convention

A most outstanding event for the young people of Northwestern Iowa District was their convention at Missouri Valley February 14 and 15, outstanding for the splendid speakers, the excellent spirit, and for the royal way in which the Missouri Valley Saints received all the visitors.

Mention of the name of Elder E. E. Closson, a guest speaker, is sufficient to assure the readers of the success of the meetings. Brother Closson filled the days with enthusiastic lectures which brought the young people many practical suggestions for helping themselves and leading others to the more abundant life.

Saturday's work culminated in a sumptuous banquet served by Missouri Valley women. Approximately one hundred guests were entertained. Elder E. Y. Hunker capably served as toastmaster, his theme "The Stewardship of Youth." The toast by Elder E. B. Rathbun, "The Preparation of Youth," made us realize that in a growing church more careful and greater preparation is needed to meet our problems. Elder Ray Whiting's toast, "The Conservation of Youth," was given with convincing forcefulness. "The Compensation of Youth" was given by Sister Bertha VanEaton, and "The Stewardship of Youth," by Elder E. E. Closson. Elder Gerald Gunsolley had used real foresight in planning this service and others of the convention.

The number present at the 8.30 prayer meeting Sunday morning gave assurance that the young people considered this meeting very strengthening to spiritual life. "What Fruit Will You Bring for the Master?" was the theme.

The eleven o'clock service was preceded by an inspirational period of worship of congregational singing, scripture reading, a beautiful duet by the Kilpach sisters, of Logan. Then the sermon was by Elder E. Y. Hunker, "The Challenge of the Church to the Youth." "Lo, I set before you an open door" was the text.

A fitting climax to the convention was the effecting of a young people's district organization. This new step promises many achievements for the coming year. Frank Fry, of Woodbine, was chosen president, with Louise Louis, Missouri Valley, to act as vice president.

"To fully appreciate this young people's convention," writes Sister Zeta Clothier, of Dow City, "one must have had the experience. It was highly beneficial, full of enthusiasm, a splendid means of making social contacts, and a force in making resolutions to climb higher."

Graceland Chats

Many interests are engaging the students just now. Week before last the Graceland basketball team won over the Creston Junior team, and lost to the Kidder team. Last week the men's teams of the literary societies have been playing. The Pleiades and Kaps were winners. Social clubs are beginning to hold seasonal banquets. The "G" Club members are planning their annual carnival. The faculty have been holding meetings preparatory to outlining next year's catalog and carrying on publicity work. The girls are practicing for their annual gym show. Meanwhile the library is the scene of studiousness.

Representative Students Chosen

The Acacia, Graceland's annual, is installing as a feature of this year's publication the pictures of Graceland's three most representative women and three most representative men. The election of these representatives was recently held, the student body making the choice. The election was made on the basis of personality, character, scholarship, extra-curricular activities, and college spirit.

When the votes were counted it was found that Miss Eva Wallace, of Cleveland, Ohio, was the ranking coed, while Mr. Almer Sheehy, of Independence, Missouri, ranked highest amongst the men. Both of these students well deserved the honor accorded them. Miss Wallace is in her junior year at the college, a member of the Tower Staff, Press Club, Lambda Delta Sigma, Graceland Girls' Athletic Club, president of Walker Hall, president of the E. T. A. Club, editor of the Acacia, a member of the Crescent Club during her sophomore year, and a former vice president and president of the Pleiades Literary Society.

Mr. Sheehy is president of the F. O. M. Club, president of the Royal Thirteens, president of the "G" Club, business manager of the College Players, and during the first semester was president of Herald Hall, and president of the Kapforean Literary Society. He is a member of the sophomore class. In addition to these activities both Almer and Eva hold industrial positions.

Second and third places among the women went to Miss Daisy Black, of Stewartsville, Missouri, and Miss Vivian Castings, of Des Moines, Iowa. The positions among the men went to Paul Utneher of Antigo, Wisconsin, and Delmar Jones of Taylorville, Illinois. JAMES B. MOSES.

Vestae Filiae Meet

The Vestae Filiae Club held its monthly professional meeting Saturday evening, February 14, in Briggs Hall. After some musical numbers, Miss Opal Roark, superintendent of Lamoni Public Schools, talked to us about what she expects of teachers in her system. As most of our group intend to become teachers, we were much interested in learning what qualities we would be expected to possess. Miss Ruth Derry, of the home economic department of the Lamoni school, then told us of the many new and varied opportunities now offered home economic students. It was reassuring to know that there were other means besides teaching for us to express ourselves. Before adjourning we were served punch and wafers and discussed plans for our coming party.

EDNA MAE REDFIELD.

Unusual Wednesday Service

Last Wednesday evening in the chapel there was held another one of Graceland's worship services. As a prelude to the service, there came from the piano the air of a sacred composition. A mixed quartet then brought into the theme of the meeting "Softly Now the Light of Day." This was followed by a solo, "Prayer Perfect." A short prayer was offered by Roy Cheville, and the congregation joined in the hymn of the sea, "Jesus Savior, Pilot Me." Then the cast of "Menfolk," to be presented as a part of the service, was announced. The cast of characters was Anna Lynn Vanskike, as the daughter-in-law, Rose; Madelyn Weegar, as the mother Jenny; and Olive Curtis as the grandmother, Granny. The lights were lowered, and from the balcony came the air of "Remember Me," rendered by a male quartet. The curtain opened, and the play was presented. The play-carried with it the theme of sorrow and mournfulness of the homes from which the sea took the "menfolk." The play ended. There remained a hushed silence, and again from above the male quartet sang "Now the Day Is Over" as a closing hymn. The service was indeed one of worship and sacredness.

LESLIE KOHLMAN.

Calgary, Alberta

Calgary Branch was happy to have for its speaker the first two Sundays of February Elder E. E. Eliason, missionary in charge of the district. He arrived here from Great Falls, Montana, February 4, and left for Edmonton and Ribstone February 16. During his stay in Calgary he held meetings at Sister Gibson's home, his theme being "The Spirit of Evangelism."

The annual business meeting for the branch, conducted in January, resulted in the choice of Elder William McLeod as branch president. Brother W. Atkinson will act this year as Sunday school superintendent.

The spirit of our sacramental and prayer services teaches the members that there is no excellence without labor, and that this is indeed a day of earnest endeavor. The Women's Department is active, the members meeting every two weeks. They held a successful tea and sale of home cooking the afternoon of February 18 at the home of Sister Hanna, making a sum of twenty-five dollars.

The young people hold prayer service every other Sunday evening an hour before the preaching service. This is well attended.

Rich Hill, Missouri

Ninth and Walnut Streets

When Rich Hill was chosen headquarters of Clinton District a little over two years ago, Elder Birch Whiting, district president, and his counselors automatically became the branch presidency, and an elder was nominated by them as pastor. Changes followed from time to time in the conducting of local work to the extent that following the Centennial Conference it was very easy to adopt the new plan of religious education, outlined by the church. Only a few changes were necessary, as our local had been functioning with fair success along a similar line.

True to the promise given the Saints of this community, Rich Hill is getting to be quite a gathering place. Saints are here from Canada, Montana, North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Arkansas, Kansas, and various points in Missouri. Because of increasing numbers, our church building proved inadequate to care for the branch activities, and a near-by store building was purchased, remodeled, and is now used as a classroom and recreational center. On Sunday five classes occupy the new room; also the junior church; on Monday night the teachers' training class assembles there; and the women use this room for their activities.

W. F. Perry is in charge of the church school and is assisted by a well-chosen corps of officers.

During last summer we received help from such workers as Elder and Sister J. A. Gunsolley, Elder W. I. Fligg, Elder J. Charles May, and Elder George Jenkins. Our district president who lives here contributes much to our program.

Our young people are busy, some of them to the point of being overburdened with activities, but they attend the mid-week prayer meeting in goodly numbers. We are proud of them.

The city cooperates with our branch in recreational activities, furnishing free lights for the playground. During the summer two nights a week are given to games, such as basket ball, volley ball, and croquet. Our ground is a real gathering place for the community, and numbers of townspeople drive up and sit in their cars to watch the games.

The economic situation here, as elsewhere, is lamentable, and the churches have united in forming a charity association to help the needy. Our people are active in this. The association elected our pastor chairman, and as far as possible, is trying to provide work for those who need it.

The Saints are much interested in the stewardship movement and, as we are not able to enter into a stewardship organization, are thinking in terms of individual stewardships. About twenty have applied for recognition in this line. The young people are interested in the Junior Stewardship Budget Books.

The community was shocked on December 15 when Brother F. A. Winders was killed by a train. Though he was deaf, he was one of our most able speakers. At the time of his death he was helping enlarge the rostrum at the church to accommodate the Christmas pageant. He had started home for lunch when the accident occurred.

The pageant, "The Bringer of Gifts," which required seventy-five people to present, was given on Christmas night to a crowd of more than four hundred people. So many were turned away that the production was repeated on the following Sunday night to four hundred and thirty people. And still they were turned away.

Elder and Sister A. B. Kinney have a new son.

Buchanan, Michigan

Thirty-five Saints and friends drove fourteen miles February 8 to South Bend, Indiana, where nine candidates were baptized in the Y. M. C. A. swimming pool. Confirmation service followed in the evening. The following Sunday seven more were baptized. And several others are investigating our teachings. These baptisms are the fruitage of the work begun here November 9 by J. W. McKnight, who conducted missionary meetings until a storm forced him to discontinue November 25, and by the splendid follow-up work of O. J. Hawn, who began a three-week series January 25.

Four of those baptized are heads of families and will, we believe, prove a great help in this branch.

Nor do we want to discount the help given by our young people who are always ready to do their share in keeping up the Sunday school and their own meetings held every Thursday evening.

The Women's Department works unceasingly to pay the rent of the church and to meet other expenses.

God has blessed us in our work. There has been no serious illness in our branch this winter.

Elder J. W. McKnight is president of both the Galien and Buchanan Branches. He plans to be with us as much as possible.

An outstanding event of the late summer has never reached the Herald. On August 31 Brother McKnight baptized a class of eleven young people in this branch. These with those recently baptized make a total of twenty-seven new members in the last six months.

Clinton, Iowa

"It is encouraging to note the progress in our branch since the first of the year," writes Sister Robert Cassiday, from Clinton on February 19.

At the annual business meeting the branch adopted the new church school plan and elected C. A. Beil as president of the local and director of the church school.

Cottage prayer meetings are exceptionally well attended, the number in attendance being on the increase. This is also true of the church school sessions and preaching services.

Pastor Beil has devoted the Sunday evening service to missionary sermons, and the number of those present has more than doubled. A large per cent are nonmembers, and there are several prospects for baptism.

On two recent Sunday mornings Brother D. M. Cassiday, of Evansville, Indiana, preached here.

Some of the members are planning to attend the district conference to be held in Rock Island, Illinois, February 28 and March 1.

Conference-Institute for Western Oklahoma

All branches of the district and the nonresident group were represented at the district gathering at Eagle City, Oklahoma, February 13, 14, and 15, the program of which included six or eight class periods, three prayer services, two sermons, three business sessions, and a program the night of the 12th.

Shortly after noon on Friday, Elder M. Crownover arrived bringing Elder John Blackmore, and class work began in the afternoon to continue until Sunday afternoon. The time Friday morning was spent in a prayer service and a talk by Bishop's Agent Lemuel D. Dyke.

The regular routine of business was conducted in the three business sessions.

B. A. Howard, of Erick, Oklahoma, was ordained an elder at the Sunday morning prayer service, and the gifts of the gospel were given at this hour.

Rainy weather necessitated the changing of some program plans, a number who had planned to participate being hindered from attending.

Altogether the gathering was highly profitable to every member who came.

Santa Rosa, California

Of late this branch has listened to sermons by Elders G. P. Levitt, Herbert Hinton, and R. S. Salyards. On the third Sunday of every month an elder from Oakland or San Francisco, usually J. B. Carmichael, comes to stimulate interest.

Pastor Herbert E. Walker, priest, has charge of the branch. Sister Frieda Budworth is the Sunday school superintendent and with her helpers is teaching the members of the school the principles of the gospel. She has started a junior orchestra in the Sunday school.

On the third Sunday of February, which was observed as Lincoln's Day, a program honored the memory of this great American. Elder G. P. Levitt and wife and friends drove from Sacramento, one hundred miles, to preach to us.

We are hoping soon to build a church.

Bald Knob, Arkansas

"Notwithstanding the fact that over five hundred thousand people, or about one third of the population of the State of Arkansas," writes Brother Thomas W. Emde, "are depending on the Red Cross for support because of the drought and financial depression, I know of none of our people in the Arkansas District who are calling on any charitable institution for help. And Bald Knob Branch raised more money in tithes and offerings during 1930 than ever in its history."

The year has brought many changes to this branch—marriages, births, and deaths. Interest in the church work of the district is high. Attendance in the Bald Knob Sunday school has particularly increased since the beginning of 1931.

November 12 Sister Erdna Harbour passed away after an illness of two years' duration. She was a splendid Saint, and the funeral was conducted at the Christian Church in Bald Knob, the sermon by Brother Thomas W. Emde.

In the month of July Sister Fern Harbour became the bride of Mr. Clarence Emde; they live on a farm near Bald Knob. Two months later Brother Argis Harbour motored to an adjoining county and claimed a bride. They too live on a farm near Bald Knob. About two months ago our county judge and district president, F. O. White, announced his marriage to Sister Ina Pollet.

Several babies have arrived in this branch in recent months, the first coming to the home of Brother and Sister Fred Johnson, a girl, Vida Cordell. A son was born to Brother and Sister Thomas W. Emde, and named Thomas Gillen. Ara Irell, a daughter, has also been made welcome in the home of Brother and Sister Anson T. Tucley.

Brooklyn, New York

At a business meeting held the evening of January 7 a committee of three was appointed and authorized to proceed with the work of renovating and repainting the church building at Schenectady Avenue and Park Place, in Brooklyn. George Potts and Howard Mously, deacons, two members of the committee, proceeded to let contracts immediately, and the work is now practically complete. The entire interior has been repainted in a harmonious color scheme, a new carpet laid over the auditorium floor, the roof repaired, and many improvements made in the basement.

A meeting of those interested in the literary work of the church school was held on Thursday evening, January 8, at the home of Brother and Sister William Nichols in Forest Hills. Sister Nichols, who has charge of the adult group work of the church school, and T. J. Elliott, pastor, were much interested in the study plans of the literary group.

At a meeting January 25 the literary club decided to take up the study of Wells' Outline of Universal History. Interest in this undertaking is good.

This branch observed prayer week, January 3 to 11. Special services of prayer were held on Sunday evenings at the beginning and end of the week and at the regular midweek hour.

Problems of branch work have been taken up and discussed at priesthood meetings and by the officers and teachers of the church school.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the church January 18, when Sister Alice Lester, daughter of Brother and Sister Frank Lester, was united in marriage to Mr. Stanley Lyomn, of Brooklyn. Elder Ephraim Squire officiated.

The dramatic club, under the direction of Sister Anna Potts and Sister William Nichols, prepared and presented a patriotic pageant at the district conference February 21. Some beautiful tableaux and color lighting effects were executed. The club meets weekly, and interest is at a high pitch.

The junior church has been inaugurated by Sisters Aleta Spencer, Howard Mously, and Ada Schenk.

Before Brother C. W. Harris left for Hot Springs, Arkansas, in the interest of his health, a surprise party was given him.

A good sermon was preached Sunday, January 25, by Brother Eben Miller, of Independence, Missouri. He is in New York on business.

Young People Active in Small Group

The young people of New Albany, Indiana, group, a part of Louisville, Kentucky, Branch, are exceedingly active. The Sunday school has elected James Robinson superintendent, with Sherman Figg and Susie Langford to assist him. These three are around twenty-one years of age and are pushing the Sunday school forward. The young people have started a meeting of their own on Friday night at the hall and have drawn up as their ideal the following:

"The purpose of the Junior League is to promote the welfare of the young people of the community in order to equip themselves with a better knowledge, understanding, and capacity for enjoying the pleasures of the Lord's kingdom."

The league has answered Yes to the question: Shall we have entertainment? and a program committee will take care of that part of the meeting. The services will include songs, prayers, special numbers, business, study of the Book of Mormon, and debates. George Maymon is superintendent of the movement, and James Robinson teacher.

"Our crowd is small, but our aim is big," writes Brother Robinson. "We belong to the Louisville Branch, but have a nice hall here in New Albany, where we meet often. Services are in charge of E. A. Jaegers and W. O. Robertson."

New Liskeard, Ontario

This branch has been enjoying many of the good things of the gospel, as well as sharing in the progress characteristic of the church in general. In this northern outpost of God's vineyard his Spirit has been at work in the hearts of men.

In spite of business depression, the Saints are looking hopefully into the future.

Elder B. H. Doty, district missionary, spent most of the month of November holding a series of meetings here in the church and in the home of one of the members. He presided at the business meeting in December, when the new plan of religious education was adopted. Earl Bartlett was chosen director of the church school, and given three able division supervisors.

"Wondrous Night" was the Christmas play, directed by Mrs. Bartlett.

Early last fall missionary meetings were conducted, first by Elder James Cameron, who also spent much time visiting the isolated members, traveling as far north as Timmins and Porquois Junction; then Patriarch J. F. Martin in a series of services preached to the largest congregation ever assembled for a preaching service in our church building. The Baptist people generously helped with musical programs, and in return Brother Martin entertained at their B. Y. P. U. with Hawaiian experiences and music. He also entertained the guests at a Kiwanis Club luncheon.

Chicago, Illinois

Central Branch, Honore and Sixty-sixth

February 2 C. E. Schmid, city missionary, and R. E. Davey, district missionary, started a series of meetings. Though the crowd was not large, a number of strangers were present, and interest was good. The music department served faithfully, and there were selections from visiting musicians.

The annual business meeting occurred toward the close of the year, and the new church school program was adopted. Brother H. P. W. Keir is pastor and is assisted by the local priesthood. Brother Arthur Sherman is superintendent of the church school.

The Sunday morning worship program enlists the young in the service of the Master. The church school has several very interesting classes which are well attended. Sister Lilly Nelson teaches a women's Book of Mormon class; Sister Stella Thoman, "Parent Problems"; Pastor Keir a young people's class; and Brother Eskridge teaches a men's class.

In recent weeks sermons of instruction and warning have come from Elders O. C. White, H. P. W. Keir, C. E. Schmid, R. E. Davey, W. O. Hand, of Kansas City; and H. A. Merchant, of Omaha, Nebraska. Anthems by the choir and solos by its members and visiting helpers have played no small part in the preaching services.

Among the special festivities and entertainments are those of Christmas, a play, "Christmas at the Inn," and treats for the children; a playlet, "The Indian's Call to Worship," given the evening of December 30; a dialog the evening of January 25 concerning the gospel and the gift of Jesus to the world; a Washington's Day program the evening of February 22.

Elder Davey preached the funeral sermon of Sister Rachel Brown February 4. Sister Brown had been ill for more than a year.

There has been some illness among the members of the branch, but the Lord is very mindful of his own. Sister Sarah Balton met with a painful accident when she was struck by an automobile while shopping in the Loop.

Brother Ralph and Sister Letia Sherman are rejoicing over the birth of a baby girl. Sister Alice Adamson, also, is the mother of a daughter, born February 16.

Under the leadership of Sister Walter Kimball, the women of the branch are at work. January 29 they had a supper at the church followed by a program. One hundred and fifty were present. The young people also held a social last month.

During the past year four plays were given by the women, the young people, and the juniors, and a sum of five hundred dollars was added to the building fund.

We were happy to hear our pastor say that in spite of business depression the year just passed has been the best, in a financial sense, in the history of the branch. This encourages us to go forward.

Guelph, Ontario

The Saints have started a missionary campaign. Brother Hockaday, jr., is giving a series of illustrated lectures on "God's Dealings with Prehistoric America." These are well attended by members and nonmembers and are creating a spirit of real inquiry.

Social events have helped to make the members happy. The entire branch had a sleighing party January 5. A merry group of all ages filled the sleigh and sang snappy sleighing songs. Then all gathered at the home of Brother and Sister Hall to play games and partake of the refreshments. A Valentine party was held in the church basement February 13.

The Christmas concert was given by young and old December 23.

The annual business meeting occurred in December, at which time the new plan of religious education was adopted. John R. Hockaday, jr., was chosen pastor, and Brother Hockaday, sr., made church school director. They have some willing helpers.

During this month Apostle D. T. Williams visited Guelph. His message concerned the church financial needs.

The Women's Department has been again organized and is under the leadership of Sister Hockaday, sr.

Muscatine, Iowa

908 East Ninth Street

The new plan of the church school was adopted by this branch at the annual business meeting which was attended by District President E. R. Davis. Elder Philip Wagler was reelected branch president; Elder Griffith Goddard, associate pastor; and Sister Mary Symmonds, superintendent of the church school.

In January the Saints enjoyed an illustrated lecture by W. O. Hand, a visitor here.

Grandma Lane does not improve. She is a patient sufferer, and our prayers are that she will have strength to bear her affliction.

The infant son of Mr. and Sister John Harmon, born February 12, died February 13. The funeral was conducted at the Fairbanks Home for Funerals by Philip Wagler February 14.

Announcement has been made of the marriage of Sister Alice Freers, of Berkeley, California, to Mr. Archie Zahniser, of El Cerrito, California. The ceremony was performed in the new church at Berkeley, January 26, by Elder J. W. Rushton. The couple will live in El Cerrito.

Some of our members who are out of work are looking forward to the coming of spring to better employment conditions.

A basket ball team has been organized to play in the church league in Muscatine. Games are played in the Y. M. C. A.

A son was born to Brother and Sister Wagler February 22.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

February 24.—The Women's Department, forty-one in number, had a luncheon at the Fort Hayes Hotel February 12. Hazel Gribben was toastmistress, and Mrs. Brand gave a lecture on her visit to the land of the midnight sun. She had a pair of dolls dressed in the native costume of each land. There was also a talk by our leader, Sister Rosa Nieman, and solos were sung by Lucinda Madden and Ethel Kirkendall.

The Sunday school gave a Washington's Birthday party in the social room of the church February 23, eighty-five being present.

February's communion service opened a month of profit and instruction for the members here. Speakers have been R. E. Madden, Edgar R. Kimball, G. T. Griffiths, Jacob Halb, A. E. Anderton, and G. P. Myers. All chose texts and scripture lessons to benefit the congregation.

John William, son of Brother and Sister William Standard, was blessed by H. E. French and G. T. Griffiths.

East Saint Louis, Illinois

Thirty-eighth and Forrest Place

Elder and Sister B. E. Brown began the new year in this branch. Brother Brown, who is district president, assisted in the morning service and in the evening met with the priesthood to advise and encourage. That evening he opened a two weeks' series of meetings.

A musicale on February 1, given by the young people, attracted considerable attention. Important among the performers was the Owl Male Quartet, which sings from a Saint Louis radio station.

Sister Minnie Roberts became the bride of Brother S. Six before a large gathering of friends January 24. Elder G. F. Barraclough officiated.

A play, "The Old Country School," was the chief feature of entertainment of the New Year's Eve watch party.

Dallas, Texas

Dallas and Third Avenues

Elder J. W. A. Bailey has been conducting services here every night for two weeks and is preaching to a full house. Interest is high, and nonmembers come every night. His lectures and pictures are splendid. His enthusiasm is infectious, and we appreciate his store of knowledge. We hope he will continue several weeks longer.

Pastor W. R. Standefer is an ardent supporter of the new church school plan, under which the branch is now working. The adult division, supervised by Sister J. E. Nicoll, meets every two weeks. The young people, led by H. C. Bliel, meet every Sunday evening. The first Sunday of the month they meet in the church council, the next two they study public speaking, and the last they have prayer meeting. This group has also enjoyed several social events.

The Blue Birds meet twice a month. The Trumpeters, our boys up to fourteen years of age, meet every Saturday, in charge of H. C. Bliel, assisted by Forest Wilson.

This branch has lost two good workers in the persons of Brother and Sister D. A. Fuller, who have moved to Missouri. Brother Fuller has served since the organization of the branch as bishop's agent, and Sister Fuller was always ready to help in every way possible. A farewell party was given them at the home of Mrs. W. E. Everett, and the congregation presented them two lovely books.

Burlington, Iowa

Twelfth and Locust Streets

February 24.—Last Sunday two young sisters were baptized into the church in an impressive service, Mrs. Roy Standard, a young woman who has been faithful in attendance since coming to this city a short time ago, and Doris Walters, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred L. Walters. The confirmation followed a sermon by Elder Fred Mussell, Brothers Ed. Williams and Henry Bromann officiating.

We rejoice to see the effort put forth at our Wednesday night prayer services. During the past several weeks we have been made to realize to a greater extent the wonderful power of prayer. Many earnest prayers were offered in behalf of the sick, especially for Ralph Welday, of Cedar Rapids, a former worker in Burlington. And our prayers have not been unheard. The Lord is indeed kind and merciful when we go to him in prayer.

Since the beginning of the year the new church school plan has been inaugurated here. While there is still room for improvement in our methods, we are encouraged by the results obtained. Attendance is good, last Sunday's being the record for the year, with ninety-one attending church school.

We continue to work to reduce the debt on our church. The ladies' aid is endeavoring to get a new carpet for the church auditorium. Recently we were able to purchase enough benches to fill the back part of the auditorium, where heretofore chairs have been used. This has improved the appearance of the room.

A committee was lately appointed to make plans to have the church redecorated and the benches and woodwork revarnished. This is now in progress. It is now almost six years since our church was built, and the redecorating of the interior will make it look like new.

The Temple Builders recently gave a bag social in the basement of the church, the returns to go to the church debt. Musical and dramatic numbers in the form of a farce radio program entertained the guests, and refreshments completed a happy evening.

The progress of this branch is due not a little to the work of Pastor Fred Mussell, who has the added responsibility of work in Nauvoo District. He is district president and, with Elder A. M. Chase, of Montrose, has been busy with missionary meetings held in various branches.

Word was lately received of the passing of a faithful member, H. N. Snively, who after the death of his wife last September, moved to Lamoni, where he made his home with his two daughters.

After a "vacation," choir singers have resumed weekly practice under the direction of Henry Bromann.

Los Angeles, California

Central Branch

February 23.—It was with genuine regret that Central Branch gave up the services of Brother Frank Holmes and his charming companion. We had just come to know and appreciate these folks, and with their talents and zeal there was so much that could have been accomplished had circumstances permitted them to stay. They carry with them the best wishes and earnest prayers of their many friends here.

We, like many other branches, have, as suggested by the general church, adopted the new type of branch organization, and find it a distinct improvement over the old plan.

Perhaps most important of the departmental divisions of the new organization is that of religious education. It is far-reaching in the scope of its activities. In addition to the regular sacramental, preaching, and prayer services of Los Angeles Central Branch, there are afforded in this department courses in Bible study, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, stewardship, public speaking, sermon construction, vocal and instrumental music, young people's music club, adult choir, dramatics, etiquette, social work, problems of youth, home visiting, athletics, Boy Scout work, and needlecraft. Also there are junior church activities with class work for all ages of children, including a well-supervised nursery.

One of the factors that enter in largely to make these activities possible is the splendid church plant that has been provided here—a truly wonderful building, indicating by its appointments and arrangements a great deal of architectural ability and much concentrated effort and thought by some one.

There is a gratifying increase in attendance, both morning and evening congregations being larger than at any time in the past year. The necessity for purchase of additional sacramental service equipment is one of the things indicative of this growth.

A special series of Sunday night missionary sermons by Pastor Eli Bronson has met with a degree of approval that shows beyond a doubt that this latter-day gospel has lost none of its appeal for thinking men and women.

With its two branches and ten missions working, and other missions forming, Los Angeles unit of this organization endeavors to carry out in this part of the vineyard the great missionary program of the church and to make its contribution to that which will bring to its consummation the task lying ahead.

We extend to all within reach, a cordial invitation to join with us in Southern California district conference, convening here April 4 and 5.

Omaha, Nebraska

Thirty-sixth and Burt Streets

The fact that Omaha has been listed in Forbes' Map of Business Conditions as one of the best "spots" in the country for the last three months, does not give us an oversecure feeling, but rather makes us thank God for our blessings and sense more keenly our responsibilities to those less fortunate.

The twenty-minute worship periods preceding the church school hour, which we call the family worship period, is growing in popularity and gives a good background for the day's sessions. February's theme was "Heroic Lives," and topics for five-minute talks have been, "Home Heroes," "Abraham Lincoln," "Joseph Smith, Our Martyred Church Hero," and "George Washington."

Elder Leslie Wight, of Minneapolis, was present to assist our pastor with the sacramental service February 1. And the following Sunday morning Guy Riley was the speaker, basing his discourse on Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10. That evening Brother Jensen, in his sermon on "Abraham Lincoln," impressed us with the fact that the contributing factor in this man's success was his deep religious conviction.

The young people's division and women of the adult group sponsored a dinner and carnival the evening of Friday the thirteenth. That this was not a jinx day for us was proved by the sum raised from the event—ninety dollars.

The young priesthood were in much evidence in the pulpit service February 15. Marion Cooper was in charge, prayer was offered by Mindred Keairnes. Merle Grover's sermon on "The Christ of the Youth," had for a text: "Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught." The evening sermon was by Elder Stephen Robinson, of Des Moines, Iowa.

Some of the speakers during the month of January were Fremming Self, a young member of the ministry, Pastor Jensen, Elder Ray Whiting, of Council Bluffs, Apostle John F. Garver, and Elder J. F. Mintun.

The week-end of January 23 was a busy one for the men of Omaha and Council Bluffs. Members of the priesthood and their wives banqueted at Council Bluffs on Friday evening, which was the opening of a two-day ministerial institute under the guidance of Apostle J. F. Garver. The institute lectures were given at the Omaha South Side Church.

The young men of the branch have formed a basket-ball team and entered a church league. They have suits of purple and gold, decked with the initials L. D. S.

Independence

Stone Church

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was observed at the eleven o'clock hour Sunday morning, with Pastor John F. Sheehy in charge. Talks were given by President Frederick M. Smith, on the theme of the Vision of Sir Launfal and the quest of the Holy Grail, and by Elder C. Ed. Miller, who spoke of the Lord's Supper as the "master memorial."

Sunday morning, February 22, Elder Leonard J. Lea spoke on the life and influence of George Washington.

The theme of the junior young people's communion hour Sunday morning was "Ours an Industrious Church," and Bishop M. H. Siegfried outlined some of the duties of boys and girls as members of the church, basing his talk on Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4 and 81: 4. Elder H. W. Harder was in charge. The girls' chorus of the department sang pleasingly.

The evening's congregation listened to a helpful sermon on Biblical evidences of the Book of Mormon by Elder H. O. Smith. The Stone Church Choir sang the anthem, "I Need Thee Every Hour," and Glenn Fairbanks, tenor, sang a solo. Robert Miller played the organ. Elder W. A. McDowell was in charge of this service, assisted by Elder John Davis.

"The Law of the Spirit of Life" was the subject of Elder A. B. Phillips the evening of February 22, and the ladies' chorus sang three numbers.

Organizations and Personalities

A patriotic program, a covered-dish luncheon at noon, quilting, and fancywork made the all-day monthly meeting of the Patroness Society, February 27, a bright spot in the lives of the members. The Independence unit of the society lately received a box of useful articles for the Sanitarium from Santa Ana, California.

Numbers of other clubs and classes are actively carrying forward their 1931 programs.

Among those who have passed away of late was Sister Rosalie Ella Gray, wife of Brother James L. Gray. Sister Gray was born fifty-five years ago in Ohio, and spent most of her life in Independence. She leaves to mourn her husband, a daughter, three sisters, four brothers, and many friends. The funeral was conducted from the Stone Church February 26, in charge of Elder H. G. Barto. Doctor Joseph Luff preached the sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Sister Julia Sarah Farr, sixty-nine years of age, is another who has passed away. She died at her home February 28, leaving two grandchildren of the home, a son, of Chicago, a sister, of Wheeler, Arkansas, and many friends. The funeral was conducted from the Stone Church Monday afternoon in charge of Apostle Roy S. Budd. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The two troops of Boy Scouts sponsored by the Stone Church, 223 and 226, spent the night of February 21 with their leaders and committeemen at the Salvation Army Camp near Independence. The trek was begun early Saturday afternoon, and games and supper made a happy evening. Rain cut short the Sunday morning program, and sharpened the desire of both troops to "go again."

Walnut Park

The evening sermon March 1 was by Apostle C. F. Ellis. His consciousness of the need of a divinely appointed ministry to carry on the work of God and his anxiety that others should share this consciousness were emphasized. His experience has shown him that some of our people have partaken so deeply of the philosophies of speakers and writers of other denominations that they have become indifferent to the superiority of the provisions of the restored gospel. While having a name with the church, they doubt the necessity for divinely called representatives to carry the gospel message, and in other ways fail to savor the wonderful privileges of Latter Day Saints, hence live beneath these privileges. Brother Ellis declared his determination to spend the present year in a more consistent effort than ever before to teach the gospel in its purity, unadulterated with foreign theologies; to build up a people rich in spirituality even though poor, as an institution, in this world's goods.

All services of the day were enjoyed, with the usual good attendance at the sacramental hour. At this time the principal speaker was Elder C. K. Green, who used effectively the scriptural warning that those who partake of the emblems unworthily come under condemnation, while those who refuse to partake shall have no part with Christ. Only the way of the obedient is left to be desired.

At the evening class hour, Elder Howard P. Andersen, resident merchant, addressed the "Vocational Guidance" Class on "Merchandising." Last Sunday Paul N. Craig talked on "Music" and Blanche R. Farrar on "Library Work."

Enoch Hill

Sunday evening was to have been the concluding night of Elder Ammon White's missionary meetings, but so good was the response all during the week and so splendid were the sermons and talks, that the congregation voted to have him continue another week. The discourse Brother White delivered Sunday evening presented with convincing forcefulness our essential need of unity in every undertaking. One night last week was Question Night; another night Patriarch F. A. Smith took Brother White's place, preaching a good sermon. The series continues this week with the exception of tonight and Saturday night. Local and neighboring musicians are generous with their help.

Union prayer meeting of the groups will be held at the church this evening, and a pastor will be chosen to take the place of Brother O. W. Sarratt, who is now living on a farm some miles from Independence.

A good sacramental meeting was experienced by the Saints Sunday morning. Elder Ammon White was in charge, assisted by the local priesthood. A baby was blessed, and one sufferer was administered to.

In the afternoon George Rawlins and Virginia Ballinger were baptized in the Second Church font. The confirmations preceded the evening service, and Rogene Irene, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Rawlins, was blessed.

Brother Charles Warren, who has been in charge of the church school for the past year, has accepted employment which will take him from Independence the greater part of the time. His services will be missed on Enoch Hill.

Spring Branch

Two babies were blessed at the sacramental service here, the daughter of Brother and Sister Bee McNeely, and the daughter of Brother and Sister J. W. French. Elders D. R. Snively and J. E. Cleveland officiated in the ceremony.

The members were happy to have Brother Snively here again. He is a former pastor of this congregation and is now living at Atherton.

The evening's sermon was by Pastor Cleveland, who chose for a scripture lesson Romans 13 and part of the following chapter. "Changed Lives" was the theme of his discourse.

Sister W. A. McClain, who has been ill since December, is now able to get about her home on crutches.

Englewood

Although the attendance at the Sunday morning services, particularly the study period, has fallen almost fifty in the last two Sundays because of inclement weather and sickness, the officers of the branch anticipate an increase with the coming of spring. Sacramental service Sunday had the largest attendance of the morning.

The fifth of the series of eleven church history plays was presented Sunday evening at the regular service, and was followed by an appropriate sermon by Elder S. A. Burgess. Attendance is increasing but not as fast as those in charge wish.

Apostle Roy S. Budd delivered two sermons February 22.

The senior class, taught by Brother Perry Hiles, met at the church February 23. Games and refreshments helped to make a merry evening. These young people intend to have other meetings before the election of officers the last Sunday of March.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

A banquet for members of the priesthood and their wives from North and Southwestern Iowa Districts and from Eastern Nebraska was held in the basement of the church the evening of January 23. One hundred and ten of the priesthood and their wives partook of the three-course dinner. Elder Blair Jensen, pastor of Omaha Branch, was toastmaster and introduced Amos Graybill, who talked on "Brothers of Men"; Ellis Rathbun, our new missionary, on "Builders of Men"; and Brother Wellman, of Omaha, on "Leaders of Men." Apostle J. F. Garver then gave a lecture on "Ministerial Decorum." The dinner was prepared and served by the women of the branch.

January 25 was Priesthood Day in South Omaha Church, about fifty members of the priesthood being present. Apostle Garver gave four lectures. Luncheon was served at noon in the home of Brother and Sister Lowe, by the women of the branch. Most of the priesthood from Council Bluffs attended Brother Garver's lectures, leaving Elder F. C. Fullberg in charge of the morning service. The sermon was by Elder W. Walling on "Peace on Earth. Good Will to Men." He proved from the three standard books that we should have peace in our hearts and radiate good will by our lives before God will usher in his "peace on earth."

A room at the back of the church was recently fitted for classroom purposes, and a contest is being held to see which of three classes will have it for a period of months. The three classes contesting are Brother Whiting's class of younger married people, Sister Irene Turpen's class of young people, and Sister Grace Kern's class of young people of high school age.

Beginning the first Sunday in February, the half hour immediately preceding the evening preaching service has been devoted to program work as an expressional feature. It has proved a drawing card for church attendance as well as provided an avenue of expression for all ages.

Since Washington's Birthday this year fell on Sunday, patriotic services were had morning and evening. In the morning at the church school we were presented a beautiful silk American flag by members of the Woman's Relief Corps, the presentation being made by Mrs. Hilda Hansen of Relief Corps No. 165. Smaller flags were also presented the three departments in the children's division by Mrs. Ethel Shepherd, president of the Relief Corps. The flags were accepted by Amos Graybill, associate pastor. The program was interspersed by orchestral music, also a number by a mixed quartet. "True Patriotism," the morning sermon, was by Elder L. S. Wight, of Minneapolis. The evening program consisted of a piano solo, "Narcissus," by Junior Garner, and a short play, "For His Country," by the boys of the junior department. The choir sang, "Glorious Forever," by Rachmaninoff, and the sermon was by Elder J. A. Hansen.

The orchestra under the leadership of Gene Turpen has again organized and is furnishing music each Sunday.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

As an expression of appreciation for the help Central Church has given it in the past, the Wahdemna Choral Club, of fifty voices, asked for the opportunity to present its annual sacred concert last Sunday night. The congregation and all its friends were happy to hear the fine musical offerings. Paul N. Craig was director, Bertha Ellerick, accompanist, and Lorena Kueffer, organist.

The sacramental message Sunday morning was by Pastor C. E. Wight. Hymns, prayers, scripture readings, meditation, and sharing of the emblems of the Lord's Supper made for the members a hallowed experience.

Tonight concludes the O. B. K. drama contest. Ten churches have entered one-act plays which have been produced in local groups. The contest opened at Central Church Monday night. Three judges, selected by the White Masque Players, of Independence, will select the winning play, and the O. B. K. trophy will be presented the group giving it.

Events for March include a series of morning sermons by the pastor; three new illustrated lectures by President McDowell, March 15, 22, and 29; and a Graceland concert.

Fourth Church

Proper expression was given the blessings received by this congregation in the Sunday morning sacramental hour for February. Many appreciate the blessings of health, association, progress, and are grateful for the fine winter weather which lessens the sufferings of those who are unemployed.

In the evening of the first day of February, Sister B. B. Root started a ten-night teachers' training course, of which a number took advantage. Apostle Clyde F. Ellis spoke on the text, "I will build my church."

Mr. Johnson, of the Anti-Saloon League, gave a convincing talk on the life and work of a Christian on the morning of February 22, and admonished the citizens to acquaint themselves with the characters of the men for whom they vote.

Some splendid sermons have been given in this group by the following speakers: G. T. Richards, Ammon White, Curtis Vernon, Roy S. Budd, and C. A. Skinner.

On a recent Thursday night the O. B. K's gave a play, "The Valiant," to a crowded house.

Coldwater, Michigan

Good word of spiritual experience and progress in the pulpit, church school, school of expression, and choral association comes from Coldwater. The leaders in the departments are loyal to the principles of the Restoration, and diligence with faith renders them competent teachers of the gospel with vision to see the beauties and proprieties of its provisions.

The program features of the services are not only attractive and expressional experiences for the members, but they create a better attitude on the part of the public and bring the teachings of the gospel to the fore. Of this, the Washington's Birthday party, given by the School of Expression, under the direction of Sister S. W. L. Scott, is an example.

This celebration, a supper and program, was staged in honor of the juniors, and a fine group enjoyed a lesson on Americanism.

The junior stewardship movement was recently discussed, and a class organized with Sister Galagher as sponsor.

The junior and senior choirs were united to form the choral association.

The merging of the church school into the pulpit work by the tap of a bell and the marching of classes and choir to their places, the reading of scriptures, the rendering of the response, adds to the spirit of worship and makes a pleasing service.

Recently some excellent thoughts were presented by Elder S. W. L. Scott on the theme of preparing to solve the problems of the future and make the world a better place in which to live.

Elder S. W. L. Scott was called on February 24 to Garfield Avenue, to officiate at the wedding of Mr. Paul Dunn and Mrs. Mary L. Kline, aged, respectively, seventy-one and seventy years.

Registration of the unemployed at the city hall in Coldwater recently revealed about three hundred people out of work. The citizens, the council, and all civic and fraternal and church organizations contributed to the community chest and opened up labor on the streets.

Opening of New Church at Thayer, Missouri

Brother G. A. Davis, of Thayer, Missouri, extends to all Saints a cordial invitation to be present at the opening services for the little stone church building near completion at Thayer. The date is April 5. Head officials from Independence are expected to be present.

Elder W. E. Haden, district president and missionary, has done a good work in that local, the effects of which will be felt for many years.

A number of members of the church live in the community of Thayer, which is two miles from the Arkansas line where is located one of the largest springs in the United States. Saints seeking a new location and having some capital will find a welcome in this region and should get in touch with local officials. This country is rough in places, but the soil is strong and produces well.

WHY THE THREE BOOKS?

"Most important of all is the fact that these books are to govern us in matters of life!"

This is but one lead to the fine treatment of this subject by Elbert A. Smith in his article,

"USING THE THREE BOOKS" which appears in the March number of Vision. One of the "Know Your Own Church" series.

The Way Out

demonstrate the church's ability to meet this issue. Finally, to begin and continue the discharge of debts until the church shall stand free; to carry on there-with the building up of funds, from the income of which superannuations may be placed on a pension basis, and we may meet the needs of such institutions as homes, college, and sanitarium. Completion of this phase of our task may prove slow and tedious, but the effort must be adhered to tenaciously.

We feel deeply the effects upon many which curtailments under this program have made necessary. There can be no question of the devotion with which service has been rendered, nor of the willingness of all concerned to do what is required to help strengthen the foundations of the church. For those who have gone before, bearing the heavy burden of responsibility connected with the financial work, there is deep gratitude for the unremitting labor performed for the cause.

In order that this labor and devotion may not prove in vain, it is highly essential that every one of us demonstrate by "works" our faith in the program unanimously adopted by the Appropriations Committee, for, after all, the test of sincere acceptance of any program is the manner of its execution. What will your attitude be towards the contribution of tithes and offerings as you may be blessed? How enthusiastic and unremitting will be your personal effort to carry on the work, locally and generally, to which the church has set its hand? Will you support this program?

Surely as we endeavor to deal justly, and in the spirit of love "to walk humbly with our God," we shall merit the blessings of Him who so loved the world that He gave his Son.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

March 3, 1931.

A. CARMICHAEL.

The Supreme Court Speaks

The constitutionality of the Eighteenth Amendment has again been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States. In its recent decision, the Court reversed the ruling of Judge William Clark of New Jersey, who held that the amendment was invalid because it was ratified by state legislatures instead of by state constitutional conventions, as he contended it should have been.

The Court not only ruled that it was entirely the specific power of Congress to direct which method of ratification should be used in the case of any particular amendment, but also that Judge Clark's objection, were it well taken, would apply to several other amendments as well as to the Eighteenth. (All the amendments have been ratified by state legislatures.)

We should not feel so inclined to say anything about this decision of the Supreme Court were it not for the fact that Judge Clark's ruling was hailed with such loud acclaim by those who so eagerly pounce upon anything that might be made to appear in the least sense an anti-prohibition victory. At least equal attention should be given to the Supreme Court decision—or, if you deal in proportions, the further consideration warranted by the facts that this is the highest tribunal of the Nation and composed of its most eminent jurists, and that the decision was unanimously concurred in by the eight justices of the Court who sat in the case.

So far as the Eighteenth Amendment is concerned, this decision confines the efforts of the anti-prohibition forces to the repeal movement. The ruling of the Supreme Court was not a surprise. The most surprising thing of all still is that Judge Clark was able to concoct such a lengthy opinion as he did on a point upon which there seems so little confusion.

Have We the Spirit of Greatness?

Just how selfish are we? And how much do we permit our selfishness to show in the things we say and do? Selfishness is the mark of an under-developed or a one-sided development of character. It is not a characteristic productive of true character greatness. And it is forgotten when we look about us at the vast amount of tasks to be achieved, and pit against them our own puny ability to contribute and the probable time we have in which to make our contribution.

Our debt to society is very great. It was a wise man who asked the question: "Which of us can truthfully say that he has done as much for others as others have done for him?" And because we owe so much to men and women who have helped us, it behoves us to begin right where we are, doing the first task at hand as willingly and efficiently as we can. By starting humbly, we realize and overcome our own limitations and have sympathy for others who, too, are limited in their work. And by continuing humbly and faithfully, overcoming all difficulties, we shall make our own the spirit of greatness.

Let us endeavor to pay our intellectual and spiritual debts to society, even as they were paid by one whose name we revere as a great American, Abraham Lincoln, who lived so honestly and unselfishly that he won the admiration of friends and enemies. Not long ago an oriental Christian, Kagawa, a Japanese, looked into the eyes of a group of missionaries and said, "My prayer for America is, 'Father, please open America's eyes and give her people the spirit of Lincoln again.'"

Today we need to think less about ourselves and more about other people. In unselfishness lies the opportunity to greatness and happiness. "I am the good shepherd," Christ taught; "the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." L. B. M.

Hints for Speakers and Writers
 GIVE RICHLY

By L. L.

Some writers and speakers like to save their material. They are afraid that they will run out of something to say for the next time, and that if they tell all they know in this sermon about this subject they may never have another idea on it. While they are so busy hoarding their petty little stock of thoughts, they miss the rich opportunities of getting new ones.

Do not be stingy. Give all that you have on the subject right now, and the next day will find you enriched with something new on the subject. Have faith, and trust the Lord to give you something to say next week. Those wells of water are best that are pumped most frequently. In fact, a well requires frequent pumping in order to stay good. Those who hoard will find the springs of their inspiration drying up. Those who give to the limit will find that they have inexhaustible supplies.

Our Departed Ones

ZIRKLE.—Howard Quenton Zirkle, infant son of Donald and Vida Zirkle, was born at Tecumseh, Kansas, October 14, 1930. Died at Tecumseh January 27, 1931. Surviving are his parents, a brother, Donald Dean, jr., of Tecumseh; grandparents: Mrs. Jennie Zirkle, Tecumseh; Mrs. Esther Bootman, Saint Joseph, Missouri; and many friends. The funeral sermon was by G. G. Cadwell, of Independence, Kansas, assisted by O. E. Weedmark, Topeka, Kansas. The services were conducted from Pleasant Hill Methodist Church, and interment was in Pleasant Hill Cemetery.

RICHARDSON.—James Richardson was born in England February 16, 1849; was baptized into the church October 10, 1869. Ordained a teacher June 5, 1892. He married Isabel Robinson in 1875, and to them were born three children, two of whom preceded him in death. He passed away January 10, 1931, at his home near Sanger, California, leaving to mourn his wife, one son, and eleven grandchildren. The funeral was in charge of Elder A. S. Votaw. Interment was in Bethel Cemetery, Sanger, California.

JENNINGS.—Annie Jennings was born in Willard City, Utah, February 25, 1862. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints May 8, 1871, living a faithful Christian life until the end. Died December 31, 1930, leaving to mourn two daughters, Lillie Jennings and Mrs. Lenora Cheney, and one grandson. The funeral service was conducted by Elder A. S. Votaw. Interment was in Tulare Cemetery, Tulare, California.

LIVELY.—Mary Edith, daughter of Herbert and Marietta Lively, was born in Saint Clair, Michigan, July 9, 1913. In her early childhood she moved with her parents to Detroit, Michigan, where she was baptized in 1921. Was an active church member, taking part very successfully in choir and dramatic work. She died January 8, 1931, after an illness of three months. Besides her parents she leaves two sisters, Ilene Meredith, Elizabeth Ruth, and one brother, Herbert Charles. The funeral was conducted from the Saints' church in Detroit by Elder Hubert Case. Interment was in Hillside Cemetery, Saint Clair, Michigan.

McTAGGART.—Ida McTaggart was born September 22, 1865, at Hadley, Michigan. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints June 29, 1904, at Watertown, Michigan, by William Davis. Was first enrolled with Flint Branch then with Otter Lake, Michigan. Died at Otter Lake, Michigan, January 22, 1931. The funeral sermon was by A. H. DuRose, of Flint. Surviving are her husband, one son, and several grandchildren.

HOLT.—Thomas Green Holt was born April 12, 1847, at Princeton, West Virginia. He married Miss Margaret Susan Weese, of Fayetteville, West Virginia, and to them eight children were born, Ida May, Molley, William, Lizzie, Clara, Thomas, Bessie, and Vivian. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church by J. C. McConaughy November 23, 1920. Died February 17, 1931, at Mount Hope, West Virginia, leaving to mourn his wife and three daughters: Mrs. Clara Pack, Beckley, West Virginia; Mrs. Bessie Beesley and Mrs. Vivian Hinkle, Mount Hope, West Virginia. For many years Mr. Holt was a cripple. The funeral sermon was by J. C. McConaughy. Interment was in Price Dale Cemetery.

MCCULLOUGH.—Effie Josephine Lasater, daughter of Doctor and Mrs. J. B. Lasater, was born at Salem, Illinois, March 11, 1860. She had three brothers and two sisters. October 8, 1881, she married J. E. McCullough, of Alma, Illinois, and to them four children were born, one dying in infancy. In 1913 the family moved to Sesser, Illinois, where they have since made their home. She was baptized a member of the church in Marion County, Illinois, June 18, 1899, by J. D. Stead. She passed away January 30, 1931, leaving her husband, two sons: Laurence, of Saint Louis, Missouri; and John, of Sesser; and one daughter, Ethel, also of Sesser; two brothers: S. A. Lasater, of Alma, Illinois; and Emory Lasater, of Los Angeles, California; one sister, Mrs. Ida Gilham, of Los Angeles; two grandchildren, and many friends. Mrs. McCullough was well and favorably known in Sesser. She was in ill health some time before her death. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Ernest Roberson in the home.

A Threefold Cord Is Not Quickly Broken

The Holy Bible

The Book of Mormon

Book of Doctrine and Covenants

The man who knows his Bible is wise, for it contains the gospel of the Son of God, the gospel of salvation.

If this man knows the Book of Mormon, his faith in Christ and his work is increased, and that is the purpose for which the record is given to the people.

If he has the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and searches its pages, he sees the consistency of the three, and the words of the old prophet of Israel come to have a new meaning to him: "A threefold cord is not quickly broken."

Get your Doctrine and Covenants and search its pages. It has helped others; it has help for you. Have an extra copy for loaning to inquirers. Let the word of the Lord become familiar and precious to you. 803C, Cloth, 80c; 803L, stiff leather, $1.25; 803F, flexible morocco, $3.25.

Courage and Fortitude Manifested in Readjustments

As might well be expected, the action of the Joint Council of First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric relative to the financial situation in the church has been a common topic of conversation among the Saints since our article of two weeks ago appeared. This is evidenced in several ways; among others by the numbers of letters already reaching us. Judging from those received, it is evident that the move meets with general approbation and is likely to receive hearty support from the members generally; though it is not likely that the move and plan will escape the attacks of those with the tendencies of the carping critic.

From the men in the field, and especially from those affected by the releases the council felt under necessity of making, there come responses showing a splendid spirit, a readiness to adapt themselves cheerfully to whatever may be necessary, which can not but be a source of stimulation to the Saints. A few extracts from some of the letters we have received can not but be of interest to our readers. We give a few.

A missionary from a western field writes the member of the Twelve in that field:

"I received the Herald yesterday, read over the document from F. M. carefully, studied it prayerfully; and while I regret conditions, yet under the existing conditions I heartily agree with the decision of the council and stand ready to subscribe to the entire text. Wife and I are willing to accept whatever may be required of us, or put on us. We have also agreed that if in the opinion of the council it is thought best to release us and help us get something to do in another line of work, we are ready to step aside for a man who no doubt could do better work than I can. While I would not like to be dropped without something to take up, with only a little help in locating another place we will make it all right. Wife is a good missionary and is just as good when it comes to secular work for a livelihood. So, if by releasing us you can keep another man in the field, just feel free to do so. We are for the best interests of the church first."

The spirit of preferring a brother reflected in the foregoing is not at all rare.

From an eastern city one of the appointees writes this:

"With a deal of interest and appreciation I have just concluded reading Important Changes in Financial Program' as published in recent Herald; and if this depression has been responsible for such a safe and sound policy I thank God with all my heart for the depression. It is unfortunate that many of the General Conference appointees will be released, but if it be indispensable to the solidarity and salvation of the church, we must be prepared to pay the great price. And if the price paid will purchase for the church of the future a vigilant and sound economic program and policy, we shall be repaid."

From another eastern field one who has long been under appointment tells of a reunion committee session of which three of the five members were General Conference appointees, and adds:

"We considered probabilities. We decided to go ahead with our plans for a reunion for 1931, and if any or all of us were released from appointment we would do what is wise and well under such circumstances. Each man (speaking of the church in general) should have a spartanlike courage and face the issues and be loyal to the church. I am sure that it is the ministry of those, whoever they may be, that know the good Spirit, can be influenced by that Spirit, and have great confidence in the unique aspects of the Restoration, that will help solve the present problem. It will require that quiet determination, boon of an attitude of mind acceptable to God, that is willing to give one's own life for the Cause, to bring about the condition where the church will be able to move definitely towards the Zionite condition which is the great purpose of God in the social manifestation of his righteousness."

Brother D. T. Williams, by arrangements with Brother Garver and Brother Edwards, attended the conference at Rock Island, and of his experiences he writes briefly:

"At the excellent conference at Rock Island last Saturday and Sunday, there was a splendid spirit throughout; and when on Sunday afternoon I presented the special needs of the church, the interest was at its peak. I have seldom had such a response from any congregation as I had from those people that day. Their concern for the salvation of the church was beautiful to see. I am sure if I can get the same response from the people in my territory, the present issue will be met plenteously."

And so he moves on, encouraged, to his own field.

An aged brother, now on the retired list, says he is still interested in building up the kingdom of God. In all his years of service no unrighteous demand was ever made upon him for service, and now in times of great sacrifices the church has to make he wants to do his little bit. He has heard a few members say they felt under no obligation to help pay the church debts, but he is sure he should do his part.

Of course he should, and so should all other members feel that way, and all good members will feel that way!

From Joplin Branch comes this:

"At a meeting of the Joplin priesthood last night, the men all pledged themselves to go to work as they never have before, to put the work over in this place. The outlook in Joplin is good. There is a spirit at work among the people that is encouraging, many coming forward ready to go to work that have been indifferent for a long time. In the emergency the church faces, you may count on the Joplin Branch and the Spring River District to cooperate to the fullest extent to carry forward the work."

These extracts doubtless reflect the attitude of most men under appointment—a determination not only to "carry on," but to make any sacrifice necessary to accomplish our task. And besides these who have expressed themselves are the thousands who in quiet determination are facing the future in hope and faith and are ready to do their full duty.

Onward!

F. M. S.

Parables of a Parson

On the State of the Republick

My feelings in regard to the state of the Republick were most optimistic until one day I chanced to read several excerpts from divers popular magazines. Therein it was pointed out how the liberties of the people were being grossly encroached upon by the increasing power of the Federal Government. Particularly how they were browbeaten and hoodwinked into the passing of the Amendment having to do with the prohibition of the liquor traffick; and how they were oppressed and sorely afflicted under its yoke; and how it was the source of all manner of evil.

"Methinks," quoth I, "the state of the Republick is in bad shape!"

Then it happened that I paid a visit to a friend who dwelt in the neighboring country. And he did praise the conditions which do obtain in our Republick under the much-lamented prohibition, and did wish that in his own country they might have such a decree; and he spoke also of many who were laboring toward that end. And I marveled how he gloried not in the much-lauded personal freedom of his country of which I had heard. He spoke also of many even in other lands than ours who had set their hands to the task of abolishing this same traffick. And my friend was not a preacher, or man of politicks, or reformer, or fanatic.

Verily, thought I, if those of the outside do look upon us and envy us our condition, and aspire even unto the same for themselves, surely the state of the Republick is not so bad after all!

L. E. F.

Love—the Key to Happiness

Today anxiety is warping the souls of thousands of people. Problems meet men at every point, tremendous problems of living together with the neighbor next door, with the neighbor across the waters. Industrial woes, political corruption, social ills, and economic hazards combine to shadow the stream of life of countless numbers. It is only men of faith, vision, and understanding who look into the brightness beyond the clouds, who know that present conditions are the resultants of disobedience—yes, the disobedience of us all. The world has forgotten the words of Christ: "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." We are not obeying Him, and consequently, we suffer.

Love is the key to happiness, for if we truly love, we will serve one another whole-heartedly, honestly, constantly. We need indeed to be reminded that love is named first among the fruits of the Spirit; that love is "of God," and that it should be "without dissimulation."

When men love one another as Christ loved his brothers and helpers, the world will have peace. Suffering will be abolished. Injustice will become unknown. Selfishness will vanish. Harmony, growth, and beauty will reign.

Toward such a condition men who are Christians in heart, soul, and hand, are working. They are cultivating universal love. In this connection a recent Federal Council Bulletin prints first among its editorials "A Prayer for Freedom from Race Preju*dice*," written by Mornay Williams. Let us consider it:

O God, who hast made man in Thine own likeness and who dost love all whom Thou hast made, suffer us not, because of difference in race, color, or condition, to separate ourselves from others and thereby from Thee; but teach us the unity of Thy family and the universality of Thy love.

As Thy Son, our Savior, was born of an Hebrew mother and ministered first to His brethren of the House of Israel, but rejoiced in the faith of a Syro-Phoenician woman and of a Roman soldier, and suffered His cross to be carried by a man of Africa; teach us, also, while loving and serving our own, to enter into the communion of the whole human family; and forbid that, from pride of birth and hardness of heart, we should despise any for whom Christ died, or injure any in whom He lives. Amen!

Blue Pencil Notes

Signs of the Times. IV.—"Upon the Earth Distress of Nations with Perplexity."

When Jesus was asked concerning the signs of his second coming and of the end of the world, among other things he said that there should be "upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity . . . men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth."—Luke 21: 25, 26.

The Master's words very aptly describe the world's condition today. The World War, which was the greatest and most terrible in history, left problems proportionate to its magnitude; problems of a nature to write perplexity deeply upon the brows of the nations. These newer world problems are added to the age-old problems of racial animosities and divisions, jealousies over frontiers, languages, national rights and opportunities.

Again to these problems are added those peculiar to the economic conditions of this century as they develop. Reports from Germany in mid-January indicated unemployment figures rapidly approaching the five million mark. In Great Britain the number of unemployed persons reported at the end of last year, was the largest ever on record, two million, six hundred and forty-eight thousand. In America figures are less definite, but the situation is nevertheless serious. The president of the American Federation of Labor has estimated our unemployed at considerably in excess of five million. This condition has not developed in a day—especially so in Europe. And it is one of sufficient magnitude and threat to perplex the world. As a matter of fact, confusion and perplexity are sufficiently in evidence. Cyril Arthur Player, writing for the newspapers of the North American Newspaper Alliance, under date of February 21, said: "Here in Washington, with one's nose pressed against the front window of public business, there is confusion worse confounded."

The "distress of nations with perplexity" today is not alone from fear of foreign aggression; increasingly there is the fear of internal disorder and revolution. There is indeed perplexity in high places, and men's hearts fail them for fear in looking upon those things which are coming on the earth. In the place of the supreme confidence in the forward march of civilization which characterized the world over a number of centuries past, there is now an attitude of confusion, uncertainty, and fear, and from time to time eminent statesmen voice grave concern lest the foundations of civilization be found crumbling away beneath the nations.

Prevalent conditions of unemployment and destitution in the world furnish the richest sort of field for the sowing of the seeds of anarchy and communism, and out of the midst of it all rises the specter of the "colossus of the North," Russia, engaged in a strange and stupendous experiment, the making over of her social and economic order after a new pattern—ruling out religion, the family, and private property. In the name of labor, a small group of men in that country have assumed despotic control. Capitalists and middle men are being crowded out and exterminated. The holdings of private property are confiscated; whether a man has much or little matters not, one has his choice: If he becomes nasty over the situation, he is shot—if he is nice about it, he is permitted to starve. It is safe to say that there is scarcely a nation on earth that is not profoundly perplexed and alarmed over the situation in Russia and the propaganda that goes out from that land into all other nations, which propaganda is always aimed at Red Revolution, the overthrow of government and the establishing of a new order. So recently as March 3, Foreign Minister Aristide Briand warned the chamber of deputies in Paris that Soviet Russia has "the most formidable army in the world." At about the same time Adolph Hitler, leader of the Fascist movement in Germany, warned his countrymen that if they would not see Germany "swallowed up by the red tide that had engulfed Russia" they must fight and conquer the Soviet.

In the United States, in the spring of 1930, Congress appointed a group of five, led by Representative Fish of New York, to inquire into communistic activities. They have recently reported. According to their report, not only is there a world cam-

Peace for India

Does the world know that a new political power has appeared? Peaceful protest, in the form of civil disobedience, has effected what revolutions have failed to accomplish.

It is now a little more than two years since the All-India National Congress gave its ultimatum to Great Britain, and allowed one year for the meeting of its demands. The demands were not met, negotiations having failed to bring an agreement. Therefore, on March 12 of last year the program of civil disobedience was begun with the making of salt from sea water in violation of the British monopoly, and with the refusal to buy foreign made goods and the picketing of shops that handled them by protesting natives.

There was much suffering in India. England, too, felt the effects in the loss of a large market for her mill goods. Unemployment and distress followed.

The civil disobedience program reached the proportions of a revolution, not in violence but in magnitude. For the number of people involved there was remarkably little manhandling and bloodshed. The natives are to be commended for their close adherence to their original program of a nonviolent program of protest by civil disobedience. And the British are likewise to be commended for not taking the severe measures that they may have felt were justified by circumstances.

An army can be defeated, rebels can be captured and imprisoned or executed, violence can be put down; but no power on earth can coerce 320 million people, nor force so large a nation to do what it does not want to do. This is a demonstration of the invincible power of peace.

After centuries of violence and war waged by and among Christians, what a profound lesson it should be to civilized nations that a non-Christian group of peoples should demonstrate the power of peace!

Congratulations to the people of India, who know how and when to stand firm in their demands for their rights. Congratulations to the British, who know when to yield, and how to restrain the power that is in their hands.

Here was an opportunity for blundering militarists to blot another page of history with foul dishonor. Here was an opportunity for a great people to resort to violence and inaugurate a reign of terror and bloodshed. Here was a chance to set the world afire. All nations were apprehensive. But now the difficulty is on the way to a peaceful and fair settlement, thanks to men on both sides who have kept their heads!

Dramatics

American legal jurisprudence has set up another "little theater movement." Courts used to be dignified temples of justice. Then they became like theaters, and more recently they vie with the studios of Hollywood. Movie cameras click, flash-light powder explodes for the "still shots," and the cartoonists attend with pad and pencil.

Recently there was enacted in one of our courts something which started out like a murder trial. It ended like a romantic comedy with everybody living happily ever after, except the corpse, who was forgotten.

There was a party in which two couples were playing bridge. Very little was said about what they had to drink. A man and his wife quarreled; she found a revolver, and later the man was dead of bullet wounds. Perhaps he deserved to die, but there is some doubt as to whether one's wife ought to be his executioner.

A famous senator laid aside weighty business to defend the accused woman. It was to be his last sensational return to the judicial stage. Everyone seemed determined that his final appearance should be a success. As the senator talked his voice quavered with a tremolo of emotion. It was impossible for him to speak calmly on his subject. His white hair waved in the air as he shook his ponderous head. He shouted, he plead, he wept, and it is possible that he even stamped his feet. What could a jury do in the face of such tear-drenched and dramatic earnestness? What could they decide when such a magnificent show was staged for their benefit?

All that lacked for the lawyers to prove was that the dead husband had shot the living wife. After everything else surely this could not be an absurdity.

If anyone wishes to inquire why there is a declining respect for law in the United States, one need only point to a few of the farces that are conducted in our courts for an answer.

Is Latter Day Saintism a Culture?

By Ward A. Hougas

It is not so difficult to delve into the history of most of the authoritative churches, as well as Protestantism as a whole, and see in the life of the adherents of each religion a distinct mode of life. During the terms of existence of these religions, which date back many centuries for even the youngest, can be seen certain definite developments by way of thinking, acting, believing, and even hoping.

When, in modern revelation, the statement was made that the communicants of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church should be a "peculiar" people, did it mean that, as the world looks upon such things, Latter Day Saintism was destined to give to civilization a definite culture without an historic background of many centuries? In this the beginning of but the second century of the history of Latter Day Saintism, is it possible that such a culture could be discernible?

The Culture of Judaism

Naturally we ask, "What have the other religions mentioned had to offer as a result of hundreds and even thousands of years of life?" Four thousand years of continuous history stand back of Judaism. Of this the Jew is conscious. He is equally conscious that he is a son of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. He knows by similar means that he is a disciple of Moses and Isaiah. There still courses through his memory the scenes of Babylon, which to him are just as real as are those more modern tragedies of Palestine. Only too well does he remember that for centuries he has been driven before every nation of the world until prophecy has seen its fulfillment in his becoming a hiss and a byword. And still his heart beats faster and his whole physical being responds to the stimulation of triumph when he is called a Jew. He is proud of it, proud that after four thousand years of tragic history he still maintains his identity in a manner that there is no mistaking him for anything other than that which he is. He refuses to become assimilated in the melting pots of society. He is a Jew. In fact, he has been a Jew for thousands of years, and more than that he expects to continue to be a Jew. So much for a racial individualism that he has enlarged to a culture that need not be mistaken for anything but what it is.

Catholicism Also Has Features of a Separate Culture

Realizing that a Catholic is a Catholic wherever he may be found, and feeling that the thing of ultimate importance is not here but hereafter, or that the present life has value only in its relationship to the hereafter, puts Catholicism in a class by itself. Truly it offers civilization a culture which is distinct from all others.

Quoting from a recent issue of the Christian Century, we have this statement: "If a man is a Catholic, he is so not merely on Sunday nor when in church, nor when giving his ideas about such things as the Pope or the Bible, the mass or salvation, or Christ; but also when discussing Homer, or Dante, or Oscar Wilde; or building a cathedral, or attending the opera, or buying stocks. In a word, there is no activity into which the spontaneous reactions, which are peculiar to him because he is a Catholic, do not come."

According to Catholic authorities, some twenty million people, the Catholic constituency in the United States today, still hold substantially the same view toward life that was held by their Catholic brethren of the twelfth century. This totality of view is distinctly Catholic and accounts perhaps for their persistence in the maintenance of parochial schools and other institutions for a perpetuation of that type of thinking. The present is not the thing of importance to the Catholic mind, but the hereafter.

Thus in such a realm of thought there has been developed and perpetuated throughout the centuries a religious individuality which certainly is definite enough to be called a culture.

Mohammedanism

Mohammedanism offers a similar study in the development of a specific mode of thinking and living prompted by a religious motive. Mohammedanism dates back to the sixth century, and the development of its followers is incumbent upon the five essential requisites: A confession of faith that there is but one God and that Mohammed is his prophet, prayer, fasting, almsgiving, and a pilgrimage to Mecca.

With this more or less blind faith as the big fundamental of their religion, Mohammedanism has developed a people into a distinct culture which of course is vastly different from that offered by the other authoritative religions.

Protestantism at large has likewise developed a culture that is distinctive in its freedom manifested in the treatment of practically everything, including the soul's salvation. Protestants feel that this world is the only sure thing, though of course they believe with a greater or less faith in a world to come. The present is the big thing in the Protestant mind, however, in contradistinction to the attitude of the Catholic mind. This attitude no doubt is responsible for the general tendency on the part of Protestants to attempt to draw a dividing line between so-called religious activities and the other activities of life.

The Protestant culture is not so well defined as is that of the authoritative churches, neither is it of so permanent a nature. It is more susceptible to fluctuations, due, no doubt, to a lack of unity in the thinking of its people and the varying objectives representative of the many branches of Protestantism. Yet in spite of these differences there has been developed a culture marked by its spirit of freedom and lack of restraint.

In the face of the facts brought out in this brief and rather superficial analysis, what may we hope for Latter Day Saintism? As a people we do not have a history extending back four thousand years, nor even four hundred years. If we show signs even now of having begun in the development of a definite culture, it has been developed much more rapidly than have those of other religions.

If the consciousness of the fact that they are sons of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, or, in other words, the realization of a direct relationship with Deity, has been an important factor in the development of Jewish culture, it seems that the realization of the direct relationship of Latter Day Saintism should be an even greater factor in the development of a new culture. Basking in the sunlight of continued revelation, Latter Day Saint commicants should find incentive for the development of a culture distinctive, at least, to that produced by Protestantism.

If their "totality of view" as applied to life has become the dominant factor in the production of a Catholic culture, surely the "totality of view" as expressed in Latter Day Saint stewardship should prove a factor in producing a Latter Day Saint culture.

Mohammedanism looked to its faith in one God and his prophet as the major factor in producing its peculiar culture. Of all religions, what people has a greater right to have faith than have Latter Day Saints? Should it not be an important factor in the production of a distinctly Latter Day Saint culture?

Even from the Protestant culture comes that spirit which leads to the stressing of the importance of the present life. This, combined with the Catholic fundamental that the chief value of this life is that of leading into a future life, might even be a large factor in the development of such a culture as we suggest.

Latter Day Saintism has not yet produced a culture. Therein lies our weakness. As the consciousness of our individuality as a people takes possession of our thinking processes to the extent that our reactions to life will be strictly Latter Day Saint reactions, as we too become appreciative of our heritage, as we swell with just pride when called a Latter Day Saint, and as we learn to stress the value and importance of our present life without forgetting the life to come, there will automatically be produced a distinctive type of life. Then Latter Day Saintism will have produced a culture, and out of that culture, even Zion, God will shine.

The Story of My Life

IV.—FIRST MISSION AND PERSECUTION

By Arthur Leverton

As told to Nellie Andrew and Illa Brown

Brother Miram Askin and I in a prayer meeting at John Taylor's were commanded to go and preach in the Township of Brook. There was no particular place mentioned. We knew the direction in which to go, but neither one of us had been within twenty miles of that township. We started on our mission. I knew the road for about three and a half miles. We came to the River Sydenham, but we had no idea how we would cross, as there was no bridge within four miles of each side of us, so we went to a little grove and prayed and asked the Lord to direct us. When we arose from prayer, the Spirit of the Lord through a gift of prophecy told us to go to the end of the road which would strike the river road, turn to our left, go to the curve in the river, and cross there. We were full of amazement, wondering how we were going to cross, as there were no boats or bridges. We did as we were told, went down the river to the curve, and there was a rapid. We walked over from stone to stone without taking our shoes off and did not even get our feet wet.

After crossing the river, we continued on the road about two miles, when we came to some men who were working and asked them the nearest road to the Township of Brook. They instructed us, and we proceeded on our way; went about two miles and became lost and confused, not knowing which way to go. We went to the woods, which were plentiful, and presented our case to the Lord again, but each of us had to pray twice before we received an answer. Then the Spirit came to us again and said, "Behold, I am directing you on this mission; therefore, inquire not of men. You have gone one mile out of your way; you are to turn back and take the road to your right."

Shortly our road led into a cedar swamp, and the shades of night were approaching. Brother Askin said, "We are in the cedar swamp for the night." I said, "No, we are not. We will not go far before there will be a place for us to stop." We went only a few rods before a light appeared. We could not see it while we were talking because of obstruction between us and the light. I said, "Brother Askin, do you see that light? That is where we are going to stop overnight." By this time it was quite dark. I went up to the door and knocked. A lady came. I said to her, "Madam, we are representing the gospel of Christ in its fullness. We have been overtaken by the night. Would you be kind enough to give us a place to lodge until morning?" She said, "Come in." The words seemed to come right from her heart. After we were seated, she asked, "Have you had your supper?" I said, "No, but we are glad to have a place to lodge and do not want to put you to any trouble." She said, "You are going to have some supper." She commenced to prepare the meal; while doing so, we asked her if she would mind if we sang some hymns. In reply she said No, so we sang three or four hymns while she was preparing supper. She was so attracted that she would forget her work for a time and then go on again. She had two sons; one would soon be thirteen years old, the other fifteen. We had our supper and finally went to bed.

In the morning we arose, and while she was preparing breakfast she asked us to sing one or two of those hymns over again. We did so. After breakfast we had prayer and then sat down and had a little talk. It appeared that just two weeks before she had buried her husband. It was a house of mourning. She rehearsed the sad story to us and said, "How thankful I am that you came! Indeed, you seem to be messengers of peace to me." Of course we told her of our mission, and she was very anxious to give us all the instruction she could, but I had to tell her we were instructed by the Lord and could not be instructed by human beings.

Shortly after we left the house we knelt and had prayer. The Lord told us to turn to the right when we came to the main road, continue until we came to the brick schoolhouse on the left side of the road, "for that is where I have sent you to preach. Call at the first house on the right side after you pass the schoolhouse, and there you will receive the necessary instructions." We continued about a mile from where we had prayed, and there was the schoolhouse. We looked for the house on the right, and there stood a little cabin in the corner of the field. An elderly lady came to the door. We inquired as to the whereabouts of the trustees. She informed us that her son, who lived across the road, was one. We crossed the road to her son's home and obtained permission to hold services in the schoolhouse, provided the other trustees were willing. The second trustee was visited, and he also gave his consent. This being Saturday, there was no school.

We then traveled all over the neighborhood announcing our meetings. After we completed our rounds we had about one hour before meeting, which we spent in a fence corner studying. To our surprise we had nearly a full house. After meeting everyone left. One man returned and asked, "Has no one invited you home for the night?" I said, "No." "Come home with me," he said; "I'll put you up." We held two meetings on Sunday and had a large attendance at both services. Some became interested and invited us to their homes, but we retraced our steps following the afternoon meeting.

Persecution raged against the church, a large number of people believing that we were Mormons and taught polygamy, and still a larger number wishing we were Mormons and did teach polygamy, so they would have some excuse for persecuting the Saints. In company with Brother John Taylor, I was sent by direction of the Lord to preach in the Township of Osborne, Huron County. The Lord told us some things would appear dangerous to us, but if we were faithful no harm should befall us.

After we got there some of the people raged and imagined vain things. One man swung an ax over my head, saying as he did so, "If we kill you, there is no law." I said, "You wouldn't be a murderer, would you?" He said, "No," and dropped his ax. A lady standing by almost fainted, expecting to see my head smashed. But, poor fellow, he is dead, and Brother John and I still live. Others believed the gospel. This was in the fall of the year.

The following June Brother John and I were again directed to return, the Spirit of the Lord testifying to us that persecution would rage against us, but if we were faithful we should baptize some before we returned to our home. This was all stated to us before we left home. The third day of June found us again in Osborne. Shortly after our arrival, a young man came to us and said, "Gentlemen, I have come to advise you to get out of this place as quickly as possible. I do not wish to see any harm befall you, and there is a mob collecting now who swear they will kill you before you will be allowed to baptize another person in this place." I thanked the young man for his kindness to us and the trouble he had taken to warn us of the approaching danger, but I told him we were sent there by the Lord to do a certain work, and it was not in the power of men or devils to drive us away until that work was done. That evening I preached; some offered themselves for baptism. It was arranged to baptize at noon the following day. That night the mob was waiting for us on the road, but we did not fall into their hands; we escaped to the woods, where we made our bed beside a log and slept till morning, Brother John Hartnell, jr., being associated with us. The mob caught Brother John Hartnell, sr., cut the hair off one side of his head, and let him go.

The next morning the sun called us from our bed of leaves beside the log to the activities of another day. The first thing we did was to locate a place for baptism. After this was done we returned to the house, where we were to meet at twelve o'clock sharp to proceed to the baptism. At about eleven o'clock clouds commenced to gather; soon after it began to rain. However, according to appointment, we went to the waters of baptism. After singing and prayer I went into the water and baptized ten people. We then returned to the house, unmolested, the rain driving the people into their houses; so no one knew of the baptism except those who took part.

At about one o'clock the rain ceased, the clouds dispersed, and the sun again shone bright and clear. The news went out that ten had been baptized, so that night the mob came out in a rage, with lances, thistle spuds, butcher knives, clubs, false faces, and whisky, to take us dead or alive. At about midnight the dog gave the alarm that trespassers were near; soon after I heard footsteps around the house. I had no fear whatever, for we were told that evening by the Spirit of the Lord that we should not receive any harm from the hands of our enemies; thus fulfilling David's statement that the angel of the Lord encampeth round about the righteous, delivering them from wrong. However, the mob continued to tramp around the house, at last asking if those d—d Mormons were in the house and to let them in.

About this time a power came upon me which I had never felt before and never have since. Under its influence and power my feelings indicated that I was floating in the air, yet my intelligence conveyed the knowledge to me that I was lying in the bed. I got up; as I did so, I looked out of the window and saw men standing around in front of the window. I returned to the bedside to put on my clothes, but immediately I was turned about, went straight to the window, struck the sash on the corner of four lights with my fist, knocked them out, and thrust my arm out through the hole. While I was doing this, the mob had procured a fence rail and, using it as a battering-ram, had knocked the door in on the other side of the house. It was admitted by the people (not of the church) the next morning that it was a miracle how I could go through that hole in the window and light on my feet. It was by the power of God it was done and in no other way, for the lights were seven by nine, or eight by ten, I am not sure which, and the bottom of the window was breast high when I was standing on my feet.

After passing through the window, I went through a narrow strip of orchard, and there was a very high fence built by an old gentleman along the lane to prevent the cattle from destroying the orchard. I have no knowledge of how I got over that fence. A lady who had just stepped outside and saw me running thought the mob would overtake me at the fence, but she said just as I approached the fence my hands went up and immediately the fence was between us. All I knew, the fence never stopped my progress. It was a beautiful moonlight night. All the clothing I had on was two shirts, and I ran for half a mile trying to unbutton my white shirt so as to remove it at the first obstacle that came between me and the mob. At the end of the half mile there was a woods with a creek at the edge having water about two feet deep. I passed through the creek, slipped behind a tree, pulled off my white shirt, folded it up in a lump in my hand, then stepped sideways for a few rods. Consequently, the mob lost sight of me.

I thought that in their madness and intoxicated condition when they came to the creek with perpendicular banks three feet high a ducking would take place. I stopped to see what happened, and as I expected, three went headlong and were buried in the water. The two following went into the water but not over their heads. The mob was estimated at sixty in number, composed of stewards, class leaders, local preachers, and so forth, of the Bible Christian Church. One of the oldest officials of the church furnished five gallons of whisky, which was their spiritual power and strengthened them in their work. I then proceeded back to the house through thistles, stones, chips, and sticks without receiving one scratch on my feet, leaving the mob in the woods hunting for me.

After I had dressed myself, a young man took me to the home of some neighbors, an old gentleman and lady, and told them the circumstances. The lady put two kettles of water on the stove and with dipper in hand said, "Let them come here, and I will scald them." The gentleman fixed up his shotgun and placed it by the door. They told me to go to bed, which I did, this being the only time I ever had a bodyguard in my life to watch over me.

Our work in that place finally culminated in the organization of the Osborne Branch. Just think for a moment of this kind of work going on in this enlightened Canada of ours, and with church members, class leaders, etc., associated in the ungodly work.

(To be continued.)

The Unknown God

By Evan A. Fry

Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars hill and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.—Acts 17: 22, 23.

The Apostle Paul addressed this statement to a people who were so steeped in idolatry, and whose flock of idols and gods and goddesses was so large and varied, that they were fairly overrun with superstition and dread lest in spite of all their precautions they might have overlooked one of the minor deities. Hence they had erected their altar to the Unknown God. No wonder Paul rebuked their superstition, and began to preach to them of the one true and unknown God who dwells not in temples made with hands—who is Lord of heaven and earth, and who giveth to all, life and breath and all things. We modern Christians usually read this passage as we read so many other significant and stirring passages of the Bible—with such self-satisfaction that we fail altogether to catch the modern application. Stop and ask yourself the question, “How many of our Christian churches today have been erected to an unknown God?” We do not put the inscription of the Athenians over the door, but the steadily waning interest in the church, the steady decline in morality and integrity among the human family, and the forsaking of the things of God for the things of the world, all speak far more loudly than mere inscriptions in stone to tell us that the people of this country today, though they be nominally Christian, do not know God. I would not say that there are none at all among the American people who know God, but I am just pessimistic enough to believe that they are in an almost hopeless minority. And more hopeless still, those who do not know him have not the slightest desire to know him, and scoff at those who do still maintain that longing for the peace of companionship with the Holy Ghost.

Those who want to know God can find him anywhere. We may find him in our own hearts. We may find him in the starry splendor of the Milky Way, or in the dazzling light and limitless power of the sun. The scientist finds him in the atom and molecule; the chemist in the laws of almost uncanny chemical reactions; the anatomist finds him in the marvelous intricacy and efficiency of the human body. In botany, in geology, in history, or in any of the arts and sciences, God's hand and his Spirit may be discerned by him whose mind is tuned to catch the manifestations of divinity.

In a still different way we find God in our fellow man. When we see a sinful creature touched with healing balm and refining fire of spiritual power, we may know that God is there. Wherever we find proud men made humble, selfish men made generous, lustful men made virtuous, hateful men made loving, or backbiting men made charitable, we may find the manifestations of God in his power to change men's lives. You have seen men so changed, and so have I, but how many of us laugh at them and jokingly remark that another sucker has got religion? Even in the regeneration of a precious human soul, we fail or refuse to see the hand of God.

The best possible way of knowing God, however, is by means of intimate, direct, and personal contact. Our knowledge of him through our observations of his work in our wondrous universe may be very convincing, but after all it is a rather cold, distant, and impersonal thing. We may observe that God can change the lives of others, but until we have personally felt the regeneration of God's Spirit and the joy of being of one mind with him, our knowledge of God is partial and incomplete. We may have a partial knowledge of a fellow man through our observation of the work of his hands, or through our observation of his influence on the life of some other person, but we can not really say we know our fellow man until we have met him, talked to him, lived in close proximity to him, observed him in all his varied aspects, and searched his soul in intimate conversation and mutual understanding. Yet how many of us go to church once or twice a week, where we enter into the ritual more or less passively, and then return to our homes content with having done our duty and paid our respects to God for another week! How many of us maintain a constant contact with God every day, as well as every Sunday? How many of us have the indwelling of that Holy Spirit which assures us of God's goodness and mercy, and leads us in paths of truth and righteousness and light? I fear that most of us have only a bowing acquaintance with God, rather than a deep and abiding friendship, and perhaps some of us are so busy that we can not take time to see him even in the wonders of nature or in the lives of men.

Happy is the man who knows God, who has sought after him while he may be found, and called upon him while he is near—the man who knows and loves the unknown God.

If it be slothfulness and negligence that keep us from knowing God, let us throw off that lethargy and seek God diligently until we find him. If sin stands between us and God, let us pray for strength to separate ourselves from that sin, that our knowledge of God and our communion with him may be complete and satisfying. If hard feelings for a brother stand between us and God, let us reconcile ourselves, that the perfect triangle of love between fellow men and God may be unbroken. When we all know God perfectly, then shall we find it no longer necessary to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven," for Christ's kingdom will be established here, and God's will will be known and observed by all the children of men.

Report of the Department of Statistics

By Carroll L. Olson, Statistician

The report of the Department of Statistics for the month of February shows the following changes in the total enrollment of the church:

Total enrollment of the church February 1, 1931.....	108,425
February baptisms .....	258
Gains from unknown.....	23
Gains by correction.....	2
Total gain .....	283
Deaths .....	124
Expulsions .....	18
Losses by correction.....	5
Total loss .....	147
Net gain during the month.....	136
Total enrollment of the church March 1, 1931.....	108,561

In addition the following miscellaneous changes took place:

Transfers .....	565
Blessings .....	165
Marriages .....	107
Ordinations .....	30
Divorces .....	10
Restored .....	1
Branch disorganized .....	1

The total of 258 baptisms reported during February is encouraging, because it is well above the average for this month and has been exceeded by only two Februarys in the past twelve years, 1921 and 1922. The twelve-year average for February is 180, so it will be seen that 1931 exceeds this average by 78, which in terms of percentage is equal to forty-three per cent. This is a very good start for 1931, especially when one considers the trying times through which we are passing.

The grand total of 258 baptisms was distributed as follows:

Zion and the Stakes.....	41
U. S. & Canada outside the Stakes.....	131
Foreign Missions .....	86
Total .....	258

The outstanding among the districts, stakes, and foreign missions this month was the Australasian Mission with a total of 68 baptisms. The five Australian branches reporting the most of these baptisms were the following: Leichhardt, New South Wales, 14 baptisms; Wallsend, New South Wales, 14 baptisms; Norwood, South Australia, 14 baptisms; Richmond, Victoria, 9 baptisms, and Tiona, New South Wales, 5 baptisms.

Among the stakes and districts of the United States and Canada, the Far West Stake took the lead. Of the total of 18 baptisms, 14 were performed at Saint Joseph, Missouri, by Elders C. Archibald, T. E. Hale, and Orman Salisbury, while 4 were performed at Trenton by Elder E. E. Gamet.

The Eastern Colorado District ranked next with a total of 16 baptisms. Ten of these were performed at Denver on February 22, by Missionary H. E. Winegar, Elder J. Arthur Davis, and Pastor Glaude A. Smith. In addition the Genoa Branch reported 6 baptisms by Elder J. R. Sutton.

The Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District also had 16 baptisms, all performed by Missionary O. J. Hawn and credited to the Buchanan Branch. Nine were baptized on February 8 at the South Bend Y. M. C. A., and the other 7 the following Sunday at Buchanan.

The Arkansas District reported 15 baptisms. Missionary A. M. Baker baptized 14 of these at Wheeler, Arkansas, during the first week of February. The other baptism was performed by Elder F. O. White at Baldknob, Arkansas.

The branches, missions, or nonresident groups in the United States and Canada outside the stakes which reported three or more baptisms during the month were the following:

Name	Number of Baptisms
Buchanan, Michigan .....	16
Wheeler, Arkansas .....	14
Jackson, Ohio .....	10
East Jordan, Michigan.....	8
Casper, Wyoming .....	7
Eastern Colorado N. R.....	7
Rock Island, Illinois .....	7
Genoa, Colorado .....	6
Toronto, Ontario .....	5
Boyne City, Michigan.....	4
Omaha, Nebraska .....	4
Underwood, Iowa .....	4
Boone, Iowa .....	3
Denver, Colorado .....	3
Cardin, Oklahoma .....	3
Webb City, Missouri.....	3

"But religion is more than an affirmation about the character of life and the universe; and its conflict with the thought forms of the modern day is therefore not its only difficulty. It is a way of feeling about life and a way of living; and both religious feeling and religious living are imperiled in the modern world on other grounds than those supplied by the scientific temper."—Reinhold Niebuhr.

An Example of Faithfulness in Service

By J. E. Vanderwood

More than half a century ago a poor girl came from the factories of England to this country. The one thing that had drawn her was her desire to fill the requirements of the gospel she had embraced in her native land. She made the voyage and journey only to find that she had not reached as yet what she was seeking; because she made her way to the Utah territory where she had been led to believe she would find the people of God. After arriving there she found herself in abject poverty, and only by untiring effort and sheer determination she was able to secure the scantiest of provisions upon which to subsist. After this woman had been in that part of the country for a time, she married a young man by the name of Robert Coy. He, too, was a man in very ordinary circumstances, and therefore they often felt the pinch of necessity in their endeavor to provide the necessities of a growing family. They struggled on together and trusted in the God of their salvation with the assurance that he who sees the sparrow's fall would also see the need of his children who trust in his promises.

During these years of necessity, the representatives of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints came into that part of the country, and Robert Coy heard their message and united with the church. His good wife, who had been taught that the "Josephites," as they were called, were enemies to the church of which she was a member, felt sure her husband had made a serious mistake, and she set to work to so convince him. As she went into the matter, she discovered that he had some very strong points in support of his position, but still she felt he had made a very serious mistake and so informed him. But he was a man of a very even temperament and went on faithfully in the truth which had come to him and made himself a better husband than he had previously been. He patiently endured the opposition that came to him and meekly met the unkind criticisms that were hurled at him at times. She often wondered why a man who had, as she supposed, made such a serious blunder in accepting the faith of the "Josephites" could be a calmer, meeker, and more Christlike man than he had previously been; but be that as it may, she was convinced that he was wrong.

However, when she saw that he was gaining wisdom and acquiring knowledge along with the newly accepted faith, she began to wonder the more, and finally she began to pray that the God whom she had learned to love, and whom she was trying to serve would give unto her the evidence necessary to convince her companion of his errors. She said in her heart, Lord, show me so I can convince him if he is in error, but if he is not then let me know wherein he has gained that which he seems to possess. When she had been praying thus for a time and daily applying herself to study, she was given a very peculiar experience which opened her eyes to the power that accompanied her husband's religion. The circumstances were these: Her elders had consecrated a bottle of olive oil which she had purchased and taken to them. It had been set up on the top of a safe or cupboard that stood in their log room which provided shelter for them at this time, and the next day two of the elders of the Reorganized Church called to visit Robert Coy. Noticing that a new bottle of oil had been purchased, he asked these men if they would consecrate it for him. This they consented to do, and the bottle was set up again in its previous place. That night about two o'clock or a little after, Mrs. Coy was awakened by what sounded to her like glass falling, and she arose, lighted a candle, and made search for the thing that had fallen and awakened her. She found this bottle of olive oil had fallen to the floor, a distance of about seven feet, and was not broken. When she picked it up she noticed it had changed to a transparent color. The incident impressed her wonderfully, because the color of the oil was not changed when her elders had consecrated it, but when the elders of Robert Coy's church consecrated it, it was changed to a transparent whiteness. This caused her to marvel. She knelt down to pray, and the Spirit bore witness to her that there was power in the Reorganized Church that did not belong to the church she was connected with. Then she promised the Lord she would also unite with her husband and give her life and the best there was in her for the true church. She was baptized right away, and on coming into this church she was told by her previous ward bishop, "We'll ruin you," but she went on with confidence in the God who had given to her the evidence of the power that accompanied the work of his ministry.

At that time the words, "We'll ruin you," were not to be laughed at, and she was conscious of what it meant, but she said, Lord, I have now accepted the faith that you have shown to me is true. I am now asking you to come to my assistance and protect me in the cause that means so much to me. Open the way for me, and foil the snares of my adversary. The threat was enforced, work was cut off from Robert Coy, the scanty provision was growing less, and the children were lacking the necessities of life. This good woman, undaunted by the circumstances, sought the aid of the infinite powers.

She said, Lord, if you will open the way for me, I will keep the covenant that was made by your servant Jacob, and of all that thou givest me I will give the tenth unto thee.

At this time Mr. Fred Koezel, a wholesale business man in the city of Ogden, gave her credit for a basket full of merchandise at wholesale prices. This he told her to sell, and then she could pay him the cost price and use the profits for living. This she did until her basket trade became so large she could not handle it. Then by some unforeseen means some one helped her obtain a horse and cart, and she enlarged the basket trade to a horse and cart trade. Later the trade thus being carried on became so large she could not longer meet the need, and she put a stock of merchandise in her home. Here let me say that every penny that came into her hands was tithed, and she then paid the wholesale merchant and used the remainder for herself and family. Her trade became so large that her home would no longer hold it, and she determined to build a store. She prayed much and then proceeded to build, as she had the means, a little at a time until eventually she had the store building completed. Every dollar that went into the store building had been fully tithed, and when she opened the new store, the bishop who had so proudly threatened to ruin her was forced to close his doors, for he was her competitor in business. Things had gone against him, and he was no longer able to carry on his business, but Sarah Coy continued to prosper. Like Midas, everything she touched turned to gold, and she was blessed abundantly in her work. She made a home for the missionaries, she fed and clothed them, she continued to tithe her possessions, and when in later years I sat within the hospitable home and shared the bounties of this faithful sister she told me the story as I have here briefly related it. Frequently she would tell the circumstance in her testimony, and she would say, "I am sure the Lord blessed me because I kept my covenant with him and tithed everything that he helped me come in possession of in my life.

Sarah Coy lived to a ripe old age. She was honored and respected by all who knew her, and when in the later years of her life the writer was the financial agent in that district, Sarah Coy paid more tithing and gave more free will offerings than any member in the entire district. She has long since gone to her well-earned rest and a reward that is glorious, for she lived greatly, and her works were great, and the reward of her faithfulness will be great and satisfying. The life of this good sister is only one of the outstanding evidences that they who are willing to do the will of the Lord will be prospered and blessed in their work among men.

Little Journeys with the Editor in Chief

Lamoni

I closed my last with the return from a "geologizing" trip with "Mort." I had an important appointment for that evening. I want to tell you briefly about it. Some months ago three young men entered my office at the Auditorium. They were Craig Siegfried, of Independence, Brother Hands of Council Bluffs, and Brother Stoft, of Omaha. With characteristic directness they said they had come to solicit me to become a member of their fraternity at Graceland. It is the T. T. T. Of course I wanted to know something about it; and they told me. Then I wanted to know something about their objectives, and they told me of that. I shall not tell all they said. They were frank, and said they had in mind a record which would put them in the front rank of help organizations at Graceland. I finally told them that I would be glad to help in achieving their objectives as outlined. And if my becoming an honorary member would help in that direction, all right. But I have been in Lamoni only rarely, and usually hurriedly, since then.

Friday night, January 30, some young men approached me, and said: "We are Tri T's and want you at our dinner tomorrow night. Can you and will you come?" I said Yes, and was told the dinner would be at the "Clare" Smith home. So on returning from the geology trip, I "cleaned up" a bit and went to the place indicated with considerable interest. "Clare" and his wife are old-time friends. In fact, at one time in the history of Lamoni, Clare and I were fielders on Lamoni's official baseball team.

I was early, and so was there when the "boys" came in. And as the boys were introduced to me, I discovered I was among a group several of whom were sons of former playmates and schoolmates: "Jim" Smith, son of Thede Smith; "Bob" Kelley, son of Jim Kelley; and so it went. And in the "fraternity mother" I found an old-time friend, "Goldie" Brooks. And so I felt quite at home. Besides this, I later learned that the meal was to be served by daughters of other old-time acquaintances and friends.

Well, a short while before dinner time, I was told that I was to be initiated into the mysteries of the Tri T's. And so, going up into the club room, I was taken through the ceremonies of initiation. The club room is the attic room of the Smith residence. Modest in furnishings, yet it gave promise of one of the ambitions of the fraternity to some day have a home of its own. The ceremonies over, I was cordially greeted as one of the group and spent a few moments in social chat with my new fraternity brothers. And then we went to dinner, a nicely prepared meal well served, and interspersed with song and speech. In the course of the speech making I learned more from President Bathe, and others, about the objectives and purposes of the fraternity, and in my talk in response to request I assured the boys that I was quite in sympathy with the purposes indicated, and would be glad to help them all I could. In Professor Mays, of the faculty, and one of the Tri T's, I found a fellow alumnus of Kansas University.

Altogether it was for me a pleasant occasion, and from what I saw of those boys I feel quite sure they will make themselves felt as an organization with helpful intentions for Graceland and her progress.

Our fraternity meeting over, with some of the boys and "Mother" Brooks, I went out on the Hill to attend the closing meeting of Brother Gleazer's series, which had been interrupted by the destruction of the church. Again Zimmermann Hall was well filled, and Brother Gleazer was in good form and made fitting close to his series. He pledged anew, without reserve, his devotion and service to the cause of the church and its work. If Brother Gleazer's effort that night was a sample of his series, I can quite well understand why the officers and Saints believe the series was well calculated to advance the cause in Lamoni.

Then we all went home and sought rest, feeling that the day had been a busy one and yet one with sufficient variety to give zest for the services of the morrow.

Sunday, February 1, dawned with the marvelously fine weather of January continuing, more like mild fall weather than winter. A sacramental service was the first one provided, for Sunday school had been temporarily suspended. So the hour of ten o'clock found the Saints beginning to wend their way out to the hill. And in cars they came, not only from Lamoni and immediate vicinity, but from various other branches of the stake. So when the time set for the meeting arrived, Zimmermann Hall was filled with a fine congregation of worshipful Saints, who had evidently come with a spirit of religion which insured a fine meeting. And so it was. Under the able direction of Brother Williams and his assistants, the whole sacramental service moved smoothly forward through its course. And I am sure all present were strengthened and benefited by the splendid ceremony in which our covenants are renewed.

Half past two o'clock in the afternoon found another large audience in Zimmermann Hall; and as speaker I tried to give some direction to the determination of the Saints to rebuild the church, by suggesting some of the ideals of the branch as they might augment and promote the ideals of the general church, and tried to draw from the past lessons whereby we might profit by the mistakes in not having definite plans in our material expansion and especially building program. I was given the usually splendid attention characteristic of Lamoni audiences.

Without disassembling, at the close of the preaching service the character of the meeting was changed, and a business session was held. Under the presidency of Brother Garver, steps were taken by the branch toward rebuilding. A committee was elected to cooperate with a general church committee to arrange plans for raising funds, getting designs for new structure, etc. A most pleasing unanimity prevailed; and it took only a few minutes to elect the committee and give formal expression to the determination to rebuild.

About four o'clock, or perhaps before, the business session was over, and Brother Carmichael and I made our plans to return to Independence. Brother Gleazer took the place Brother Garver had occupied on the up trip, and after collecting our baggage, saying good-byes, etc., we left Lamoni about 4.35 p. m., headed south, and in not a long time thereafter were in Cameron, where we stopped for supper. An hour later we were again on the road for Independence, which we reached in due time, and where I left Brothers Carmichael and Gleazer at their homes, and I was soon on the familiar road between Independence and my own home.

So here I am back home, and after all I have not said much about the Brick Church. Not once but several times I went to the heap of smoldering ruins, and as I beheld the crumbled walls a mixture of emotions stirred within me. At one moment thoughts would be reaching into the past to conjure up memory images of events, things, and persons of other days, and then I'd find my eyes straining to see into the future and contemplate some structure to rise over the ashes of the old; for in thinking of the many ways in which the old church building had served the community and its people I could not but think of the services to be rendered in the future. Erected as the old structure had been when Lamoni was a young and small town, midst the circumstances surrounding a people building up a new country and town, the old structure represented zeal and progress and faith in the future such as to call out large effort when compared to ability and means. Will the structure now to be built to replace the old in equal measure represent the zeal, progress, and faith in the future of the people it must serve?

I had scarcely realized before what an intimate part the Old Brick Church had played in my life. I can faintly recall some of my Sunday school experiences in the stone church in Plano, and some in the small wooden structure in which the Lamoni Branch worshiped before they built the Brick Church, but my youthful experiences in Sunday school and church meetings were largely in the Brick Church. Almost forgotten memories of Sunday-school teachers and superintendents arose, of offices held, work done, festive occasions celebrated. My first church office held was clerk of the Lamoni Branch, and I recalled faint memory images of business meetings held in the basement. I could even recall the appearance of the old record of members over which I had to work to record and make reports. Memory went back to high school graduating classes whose functions at graduation were held in the old church, and I recalled the wet and rainy night through which I trudged along the muddy road from "Liberty Hall" to be present at and participate in the exercises of the second class to graduate from the Lamoni High School. I even recalled the title of my "oration," "Throw Mud Enough and Some Will Stick!" I recalled another graduation exercise, when as sole member of the first class of Graceland I "orated" on the college and its future. Fleeting visions of past choirs, orchestras, clubs, reading circles, student socials, recitals, musicals, entertainments, conferences local and general, ran through the channels of memory; as Herald reporter at the press tables, as young elder sitting with the Fifth Quorum of Elders, and later as secretary and president of that quorum; of General Conferences when I sat beside my father as assistant.

It would take a long time to enumerate the events connecting the old structure with my life. I had not taken time to even think about it. Is it any wonder that as I stood beside the excavation for the basement, now filled with the tangled rubbish left by the fire, and saw how complete was the destruction of the historic building, that I felt somewhat as though I stood beside the bier of a dear friend? Is it any wonder that tender thoughts of other persons also associated with the old structure, but who are now gone on before, should come back in a way to fill the eyes with the dew of love's memories? How closely, indeed, had the old structure woven itself into my experiences as a citizen of Lamoni! And as I thus came into a realization of how intimately the old building had connected itself with my life's experiences, and thought of how many other lives it had also touched, I could quite understand how deep were the emotions of the moment when persons standing in the street saw the consuming fire destroying a structure so long and intimately connected with their community and personal lives. And, too, I can quite understand why they would weep without any effort to conceal their tears.

As large structures go, the Brick Church was not old. Fifty years is not a long time for a church to stand; but because it was erected very early in the life of the town it served, and its life being almost coexistent with that of the town, it was a landmark of great historic value and as such will be missed and talked about for long.

Memories of what the old Brick Church was and the part it has played in Lamoni's development, and an appreciation of its contribution to the cultural, religious, and spiritual life of the community will not solve the present problem; but tender recollections of its past may well stimulate to efforts to erect over the ashes of the old a larger, better-appointed, and more beautiful edifice which may serve the larger and better Lamoni of the future as well as the Brick Church served the young community in which it was first built. We revere the memory of the old but turn to the problems and tasks of the present and future.

Missionary Meetings at Centerville, Iowa

A three-week series of meetings was opened on February 8 at the church in Centerville with an all-day meeting. Elder Marvin K. Fry, of Missouri Valley, Iowa, has been in charge and has been ably assisted by James A. Thomas, of Lamoni Stake bishopric.

The local Saints served supper in the church on February 15 to the Red Rustlers, a high school organization from Lamoni, under the direction of Fred Condit. This group presented a varied program at the evening service.

Sister C. E. Norris, of Allerton, Iowa; Zimmerman's orchestra of Lovilia, Iowa; a male chorus; and the local choir have assisted in the musical programs which were given each evening of the meeting.

Interest and attendance have been good, and the message brought by Brothers Fry and Thomas has greatly encouraged Centerville Saints.

On March 5 the Saints will meet with Brother and Sister F. Roy Whipple, at their new home in the Lee Apartments, for a cooperative dinner. Following the dinner, the weekly church history class and choir practice will be held.

A Way to Help

"I am happy every time I pay something to Jesus' great work," writes Brother Abraham Miller, a priest living in Port Arthur, Ontario.

Will we continue to make the Bishop call for money? Why not bring our means to him before he has to call? are some of the questions this member asks. "It took money to bring us into the church," he says. "It will take money to bring our neighbors to see the Restoration. If the gospel is to be preached to all nations, it will take money. If this is the day of sacrifice for the cause of Christ, shall we as his people neglect our duty in paying tithes and offerings into the storehouse?"

Brother Miller has had four years of difficulties and troubles—sickness, operations for himself and wife. These hindered him from doing what he wanted at Christmastime. It seemed impossible for him to send payments to the church. Then his employer gave him a present of fifty dollars for work well done, and this present he forwarded at once to the Bishop.

"If we are willing workers for Christ," he writes, "the way will come whereby we can pay to the cause of Christ. May our faith be increased."

Chatham, Ontario

Chatham Branch celebrated its forty-fifth birthday February 22. It was organized at Bloomfield February 21, 1886, by Elder Arthur Leverton, with a full corps of officers. Since its organization the following men have served as pastors: George Shaw, George Shippy, J. N. Terrell, E. E. Long, Stewart Lambert, Duncan Clatworthy, R. H. Jones, and the present incumbent, V. E. Pritchard. Besides the officers elected at the first meeting of the branch and Brothers Arthur Leverton and Richard Cobourn, instrumental in the organization, thirteen other members were present. Of these, four are now living: Sisters Thomas Vince, sr., Thomas Vince, jr., Unice J. Shaw Smith and Thomas Miller, the last two of Detroit.

During its early history the branch had several meeting places. It was in 1897 that the lot on which the church now stands was purchased. Six years later the edifice was built, the opening service being held October 25, 1903, Elder Daniel Macgregor as speaker. The sacramental service set now in use was bought the following year. Two years after its erection, the church building was dedicated to the Lord's work.

So many events occupied our time and attention at the opening of the year that our officers' installation service was not had until February 1. Then an impressive ceremony marked the giving of the charges to branch officers, Elder D. J. Williams in charge. The branch is trying the new system of religious education outlined by the church; and under the direction of Elders V. E. Pritchard and D. J. Williams the local group is progressing.

We have been fortunate in securing the services of local and general ministers. Elder George Negeim was the speaker one Sunday in January, giving an illustrated lecture on life in Palestine. In February, Elder W. O. Hand, of Kansas City, was here to give an illustrated lecture.

Centralia, Illinois

March 1 saw the close of a four-week meeting in which four candidates were baptized. The baptisms occurred the concluding Sunday afternoon in the new church font. This font was built by volunteer contributions and labor. Missionaries Shepherd and Plumb are two who assisted in the construction, as did also several nonmembers.

The Saints are elated over the success of the meetings, for a friendly feeling towards our faith has been created in the community. We wish to do all within our power to bring the people in contact with the truth.

Long Beach, California

The Saints were made happy a few weeks ago to have as speaker Brother N. T. Chapman, former district president and pastor. Brother Chapman has been incapacitated for active work because of serious illness for several years. We need men who inspire and cheer us as does Brother N. T., and ask for him the prayers of the Saints, that he may be given strength necessary to carry on the work so dear to him.

The young people of the branch left early Sunday morning, February 22, for a trip into the mountains to the snow regions. They had an early morning prayer meeting and spent the rest of the day in wholesome sports.

Removals of Saints and the addition of two new families to our branch, are bringing about changes here. Former Pastor W. A. Teagarden, at the request of San Bernardino Branch, has moved his family there, where he will preside as pastor. That branch is soon to begin its new church plant, and the Teagardens will work there during the period of construction. We were reluctant to see them leave, but have in mind the good of the whole, and wish them well in their work there. The family of Harvey Long has moved to the center place and is located at Atherton, and the family of W. J. Burton hopes soon to move to Missouri.

The Saints were sorry to hear of the death of Mrs. Asher Hager, of San Bernardino, mother of George S. Nice. She had been afflicted with heart trouble for some time.

Kirtland, Ohio

A blessing was pronounced on the Temple congregation by Patriarch G. T. Griffiths, who was here February 15, a blessing and commendation for the good work which is being done here. His admonition to the members was to specialize in the three standard books of the church. "If we study and apply these books," he said, "any blessing we ask will be granted. If not, there are some who will lose out because of lack of faith and understanding."

Other fine helps in sermons and talks have come from Brothers John Cooper, W. O. Hand, of Kansas City, and Patriarch A. E. Stone.

A Lincoln address was given at a special program in honor of that great man February 8 by Elder John L. Cooper, and music was furnished by the ladies' quartet. The Boy Scouts attended Sunday school in a body and gave the flag salute. They ushered at the morning and evening services.

The Temple doors opened to another spiritual sacramental hour the morning of February 1.

Recently Elder John L. Cooper was called to DeKalb, Illinois, to attend the funeral of his sister, Mrs. C. D. Carter. He is now attending a reunion committee meeting at Steubenville, Ohio.

General church authorities have confirmed local recommendations to the offices of publicity agent, and head of the Women's Department.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

A special program was arranged February 8 in honor of the seventeen members of the Sabbath school who attended every Sunday during 1930. Each member was presented an attendance pin in recognition of his faithful attendance, and Elder Goudy preached a fine discourse on "Christian Fidelity."

The unified plan of service, adopted at the beginning of the year, is being carried out faithfully each Sunday, and attendance is somewhat improved.

In the evening of sacrament Sunday for this month, many of the members motored to Uhrichsville, Ohio, and conducted services. Elder John Carlisle, pastor, was the speaker, and the service was attended by many nonmembers.

The funeral service of William P. Watters, our oldest member, who passed away February 22, was held at the church February 24. Brother Watters was eighty-eight years old and had been a member of the church since 1927. He was a member of the G. A. R., having served in the Civil War for three years and six months as a member of the 43d regiment, Company G, Ohio Infantry. Elder William L. Goudy preached the sermon. Interment was in Gnadenhutzen, Ohio.

O. W. Hand, of Kansas City, was here February 27 and delivered a good illustrated lecture.

Cleveland, Ohio

Lee Avenue and One Hundred and Tenth Street

March 2.—Cleveland is beginning to make preparations for the conference of Kirtland District, to be held here March 21 and 22. Our church rooms are large and well arranged for such gatherings, and we are hoping for a record crowd.

A father and son banquet, sponsored by the Boy Scouts, was had February 9, the majority of the guests being nonmembers. The boys gave a splendid demonstration, after which an excellent supper was served. The speaker was Mr. Shoats.

The gospel gifts were given the Saints at the communion service for February. Three of the branch officers were given divine instruction, and the Saints were admonished to "be of good cheer." We pray that we may be worthy this instruction.

About the middle of February Elder O. W. Hand, of Kansas City, lectured here showing slides on six different subjects.

Sherrill and New York District

Soon it is spring again, after a never-to-be forgotten fall and winter in which so much want and misery have been experienced in a land of plenty, a condition hard to reconcile. Locally the people have not suffered to a great extent, there being work nearly every week, but we live by comparison. However, prospects now look better.

Two weddings have occurred in this branch since last summer. Orville Comfort was married in August to Miss Netta Rucckwald. Brother Orville is engaged in meat and grocery business here. In September Sister Charlotte Montgomery and Brother Raymond Lodato were married at the church. They are making their home in Rochester.

The Women's Department has been meeting nearly every week for silver teas, the rule being to go where invited. We have found place for all the money we could raise. The women were in charge of serving meals at the district conference held here the first part of October. This conference was well attended. Elder J. E. Vanderwood was in charge, and Sister Vanderwood was also here. Among the Saints here from distant parts of the district were Brother Weegar and family.

Buffalo Branch is striking out on its contemplated building program to add to the present church building. Labor and material being lower in price makes the time for building seem opportune.

We were impressed by the army of children and young people coming on to help in the work at Niagara Falls, in our visit there in November. Burrell Landes was in charge of the branch. Both Buffalo and Niagara Falls have developed considerable musical talent.

Though few in number, Saints at Rochester are struggling to keep the gospel banner afloat. They have made a record in financial progress.

Since two succeeding trips on Labor Day to Greenwood, we have wished that we could again visit that group. There is a loyal group of Saints at that point without a shepherd.

We enjoyed some Sunday afternoon services with Fulton Saints in August and were also at the home of Brother and Sister N. L. Starks at Red Creek.

In November a visit was made to members at Johnson City.

A covered-dish supper in the basement, a program upstairs, and treats for the children helped Sherrill Saints to pass a happy Christmas Eve.

At the annual business meeting it was voted to try the new program of religious education in so far as we can. It has not yet been given a trial because of the depletion of our ranks by illness.

At the request of the Congregational and Methodist ministers, we held a union new year's service which was well attended. The Methodist minister was the speaker. And now for six weeks prior to Easter, we have joined with the two churches in union services in the evening. Brother Mesle was the speaker last Sunday night at the Congregational Church.

The results obtained from the use of the envelope system are gratifying. This group has done well.

Arrangements have been made to have Syracuse Saints here for Easter.

Sister Esther Montgomery is now in charge of the music, and Dellis Mesle acts as pianist.

During the winter our young people are few in number, some off at school, some nursing, and others engaged in various activities.

Great Falls, Montana

The branch at Great Falls is only a little more than two years old, yet we feel its accomplishments are well worth mentioning.

Last fall it was decided to give the new church program a trial until the first of the new year. This plan was found to be such an improvement over the old method that it was adopted unanimously at the last election. We have had some inspiring and educational programs in our church school, and find the programs as outlined in the Herald to be very helpful. Although not always carried out in detail, we find sufficient material and suggestions in these outlines to meet the needs of our group.

Recreational and social activities are very much enjoyed.

N. P. Coleman, formerly of Spokane, Washington, is our pastor. Although his secular work oftentimes requires his attention until late at night, he finds time to prepare spiritual food for his flock. It was through his efforts that the branch was organized. The majority of the members are young in the work as far as experience is concerned, but they are a band of consecrated workers. Their devotion and loyalty to their pastor is an outstanding characteristic.

With a degree of reluctance the branch bade farewell to E. E. Eliason who left us recently to take up his work in Alberta, Canada. The Saints feel they were greatly benefited by his labors among them, and pray for his success in his new field.

Sunday, February 22, we had a visit from Patriarch George W. Thorburn and wife. Sister Thorburn came to execute her official duties as district director of religious education. Brother Thorburn, being the father in the gospel to most of the Saints in this territory, is always a welcome visitor in the Falls. Notice of their coming had been sent to some isolated Saints, and one family drove ninety miles to be present at the services.

The building we now occupy is located on one of the principal streets in the city. A new sign with the name of the church and time of services has recently been placed on the building. We believe this is a fertile field for the gospel, and hope some day to have a church building of our own.

Utleyville, Colorado

Utleyville Branch started the new year by putting into effect the new plan of conducting the church school. Elder and Sister H. E. Winegar were here to explain the plan. We feel that we are now organized to accomplish much.

Brother Roy Webb was injured quite seriously two weeks ago when a horse kicked him. He is, however, making improvement in the hospital at Lamar.

"We were very grieved," writes Sister I. N. DeLong, "to learn of the burning of the Brick Church at Lamoni. This was our church home, and its destruction seemed almost like the passing away of an old friend. Just as soon as we can, we are going to send in what we can to help build another church there."

Hubbard Lake, Michigan

Elder Marshall McGuire, who successfully conducted a series of meetings at Hubbard Lake, Michigan, last fall, has again returned to work in that region of Northern Michigan District. His fall work was one of preparing the way for bringing people to see the truth. He visited the people, spoke to them with clearness of the provisions of the gospel, and left in the hearts of many an earnest desire to follow the Master. Surely this minister's work will avail much.

Under Brother McGuire's hands, Brother Hickey, who has suffered for many months, received a blessing.

Brother George Barrett, a Civil War veteran, was lately called away by death. He will be greatly missed by the Saints among whom he has made his home for years.

The most of the members are enjoying good health. The weather is very favorable for this time of year, and we are eager to see the gospel work go forward.

Graceland Chats

Graceland Students Elect Representatives

Recently the Acacia staff sponsored a contest to choose the three most representative women and the three most representative men on the campus. They were elected by popular vote. Eva Wallace of Columbus, Ohio, was chosen first lady with Daisy Black and Vivian Castings running a close second and third. Miss Wallace figures in the Crescent Club, Tower Staff, Lambda Delta Sigma, Press Club, President of Walker Hall, G. G. A. C. (a club of girls who have won the athletic "G"), E. T. A. Social Club, editor of Acacia and past member of Athenian Council. Almer Sheehy was chosen for first place among the men, and he is president of the "G" Club for the second semester, president of the F. O. M. Club and of the Royal Thirteen Social Club. Last semester he was president of Herald Hall and of the Kapforean Literary Society. He is also a member of College Players. Paul Utnehmer and Delmar Jones were elected to second and third places. These students were chosen on personality, scholarship, activities, and Graceland ideals. WINIFRED HOWE.

Graceland Receives Kansas City Young People

On the twenty-first and twenty-second of February, Graceland was privileged to have as its guests a delegation of Kansas City young people who came to witness a basket-ball game between Central Church and Graceland. However, before the game Graceland endeavored to show its friends something of its spirit and varied activities by entertaining them at a General Athenian program. The music department was represented by the orchestra, soloists, and the A Cappella Chorus. The dramatic arts department was represented by a one-act play, "Bargains in Cathay," and several readings. At the game a spirit of friendly rivalry expressed itself in shouts and cheers from opposite sides of Zimmermann Hall. Graceland won the battle by an easy margin, but the game was both interesting and exciting. After the game all the girls congregated at Walker Hall and all the boys at Herald Hall for a house party. Thus, through songs and games and friendly chats did Central and Graceland become better acquainted. On the following day the new dormitory and the library had "open house." At noon Kansas City was Graceland's guest for dinner. Graceland was glad to receive its visitors, and it hopes that Kansas City was pleased with its reception. GLENN HANDS.

College Players Win State Contest

The Graceland dramatic organization attained fame when their production, "Men-Folk," carried off highest honors at the State contest at Iowa City on February 20. The play is intensely dramatic, with a gripping appeal. It is a sea story typifying the tragedy of the life of a woman whose men-folk follow the sea. But the hope of a coming generation that will "beat back the old woman, Sea, for all time" keeps the ending from being tragic. Miss Thompson exhibited her usual skill in casting and directing, and Don Pierson did his "stuff" as stage manager, with the aid of Morris E. Mortimore. The cast did excellent work. They were: Olive Curtis, Independence, Missouri—the grandmother; Madelyn Weegar, Buffalo, New York—Jinny, the mother; and Anna Lynn VanSlike, College Mound, Missouri—Rose, the daughter-in-law. We are very proud of these College Players and also our director. We look for more honors in the future.

VIDA TEETERS.

"Am I Religious?"

Graceland's Chapel was the setting for a prayer meeting which was the most inspiring and devotional meeting that Graceland students have participated in and enjoyed for a good long time. Roy A. Cheville, who to us is "Unk," most fittingly presented the theme, "Am I Religious?"

In the splendid and unique environment of the "dear old chapel!" we expressed and meditated on the question, "Am I religious?" by trying to answer to others and to ourselves these ten sub-questions. After the hymns and prayer, copies of these questions were distributed:

1. Do I sense that I may be more than I am?
2. Do I endeavor to ascertain for what ends I should live?
3. Do I feel expanded and yet humbled in the presence of great forces of nature?
4. Do I feel myself linked to and responsible to all humanity?
5. Do I find an intelligent uniformity in nature?
6. Do I realize that somehow my conduct has an eternal consequence, and do I act accordingly?
7. Do I perceive a great "cosmic drift" toward the realization of righteousness?
8. Do I appreciate sacrificial service and righteously directed capability in others?
9. Do I sense and cultivate a warmth of fellowship with the "Universal Presence" that is personal and purposive?
10. Do I associate with those who are striving to attain a better world?

Each time we read these questions over, all of them stir our hearts to the very bottom. If these questions have stirred within you your religious nature, you can somewhat understand the statement that this hour of worship was filled with deep religious meditation. Each one not only carried away his questionnaire but also wholesome thoughts which mold themselves into our characters, and which our memories store away to be retained forever. ALMER SHEEHY.

All-College Party

Friday night, February 27, found Briggs Hall transformed into something other than the quietness of class routine. It was an all-school party sponsored by the Crescent girls. Everyone seemed to have a "ripping" good time.

The fun started at six o'clock. In the various rooms there were such games as old maid, peggoty, rook, jack straws, checkers, pit, and others. Some of the students were so interested they didn't go to the show, but stayed all evening playing different games. After playing awhile they would wander down a flight of stairs to the fascinating Vestæ Filix Inn, where good things to eat were served. Then back upstairs again, but no, what is all the attraction in the corner? After craning our necks, we find it to be none other than a gypsy fortune teller, who is enlightening us on our future life.

Everyone seemed to have a good time. There was no need to feel left out, for there was plenty to do. We hope to have more of these good times in the future.

"Criteria's" Visit Graceland

Last week-end Graceland again acted as host to a group of out-of-town people, this time a delegation from Independence. This group accompanied the Independence Criterion basket-ball team.

Saturday night the four societies met, before the game, in their individual rooms, and each had many guests whom they entertained with a peppy program. After society all adjourned to Zimmermann Hall to boost their teams in the game. The Graceland Yellow Jackets came out on top with a score of 48 to 13. Nevertheless, the Criteria's were good losers and showed their spirit of good sportsmanship.

After the game the women were entertained in Walker Hall by some of the college girls, and the Herald Angels showed the visiting men a good time at the Hall. Sunday found most of the visitors guests at the commissary for dinner.

Press Club Meets

The Press Club met February 12 to listen to an interesting talk by Mr. D. O. Thomas, of the Blair Printing Company, and to formally admit those who were eligible to become associate members of the club. The president, Paul Utneher, officiated, and read the constitution to the new members. A linotype slug was presented to each one after he had signed the membership list. Miss Elefson, the sponsor, welcomed the new members, and gave some advice and encouragement for the work for the rest of the year.

Mr. Thomas's subject for the evening was, "Journalism from the Printer's Viewpoint." He made his talk very interesting and amusing by relating some of his personal experiences. It is planned to have many interesting speakers in the journalistic line before the club.

The appearance of refreshments, ice cream, and cookies, added a social tone to the meeting. At the next meeting it is planned to discuss the church publication, Vision, at the request of the associate editor, Leslie E. Flowers.

Kansas City StakeThe Play Contest*

The O. B. K. Council of Kansas City Stake sponsored a one-act play contest, held March 2, 3, and 4 at Central Church. Ten of the fifteen churches in greater Kansas City entered the contest. The plays were selected from an official list of dramas compiled by the council. Three judges, selected by the White Masque players of Independence, picked the winning players. Seventy per cent of a total of one hundred points was allowed for acting and interpretation and thirty per cent for settings. The seventy per cent was divided into four subdivisions; twenty per cent for unity and teamwork; twenty per cent for vocalization, clearness, expressiveness; twenty per cent for smoothness, freedom from prompting, miscues, etc.; and ten per cent for gestures, face, and body expression. The thirty per cent for settings was subdivided into three parts; ten per cent for simplicity and effectiveness of the settings, ten per cent for costuming, and ten per cent for make-up and lighting.

The ten plays which were presented in this contest were "The China Pig," "The Hour Glass," "The Valiant" (by two groups), "Trifles," "Mansions," "The Bishop's Candlesticks," "Bread," "The Fifteenth Candle," and "The Finger of God."

"The Valiant" as presented by the Mount Washington group ranked first with the judges and missed only one point of ranking first with the audience. Those holding season tickets were permitted on the last night to vote for the most enjoyable play. This place was won by the Bennington group, under the direction of Miss Margaret Agin, in the presentation of "Bread." Miss Mary Nelson received honorable mention from this group by the judges for her portrayal of the blind girl in the play. All of the members of the cast of "The Valiant" by Mount Washington, did exceptional work under the direction of Mrs. Mae Price. The work of Franklyn Hunter as the warden is worthy of special mention.

Fourth players also presented "The Valiant" and were ranked second by the judges, and the third place was given to Central players, who gave "Mansions."

The cooperation of all the groups made this contest a success, and plans are now being made for other contests in comedy, religious drama, and folk plays. A music contest is also now in the making, which will include small and large choruses, group singing, and other numbers. This music contest will also be sponsored by the O. B. K. Council, under the immediate direction of a committee of musicians selected by the council. This committee is already making plans for the contest, and definite announcements should be forthcoming at an early date.

Some outstanding work was done in some of the plays by individuals who received honorable mention from the judges. These were William Fahey, who played the part of the fool in "The Hour Glass"; LaVerne Oberlag, who took the part of Mrs. Hale, the neighbor, in "Trifles"; Garland Tickemeyer and Marion Worden, who took the parts of the convict and his sister in Fourth's presentation of "The Valiant"; Rebecca Dunn, who portrayed the part of Lydia in "Mansions"; and Mary Nelson, who took the part of the blind girl, and Ruby Ladd, who played the part of the grandmother, in "Bread."

The promoters of this contest feel that it has been of much benefit, not only to those young people who participated in the actual production of the plays but to those who worked behind the scenes in coaching, directing, and planning the stage settings; and those who sat out front and enjoyed three evenings of good plays and realized, possibly for the first time, just what talent there is among the young people of the stake, which if rightly directed can be productive of much good for them and the church.

Central Church

The Sunday evening program for March was opened last Sunday by Elder G. G. Lewis, of Independence. On the next three Sunday evenings President F. M. McDowell will give illustrated lectures.

Pastor C. E. Wight is planning a series of pre-Easter Sunday morning sermons.

So much has the play contest profited Central Church and the entire stake that all are eager to hold a music contest. Later there will be play contests in comedy, religious drama, and folk plays.

The women's club is industrious. Tuesday they sponsored a kitchen demonstration at the Duff and Repp Furniture Store, receiving a little sum to add to its treasury.

The musicians of Central Church are to be commended for the high quality of their contributions to the services and the faithfulness with which they serve us. George Anway is the choir director; Irene Wolfe, organist; and Lucy Bowser, pianist. Regular choir rehearsal occurs on Thursday evening.

In obedience to doctor's orders, Elder George Mesley has entered the Sanitarium for rest and treatment.

Argentine Church

"Building Zion" was the theme of Bishop C. A. Skinner on a recent Sunday morning. His appeal to the congregation for a deeper consecration of time, talent, and money, to relieve the present church condition, touched the hearts of many.

Brother W. S. Brown has also occupied this pulpit.

Armourdale Church

The series of special meetings, conducted by Stake Missionary G. T. Richards, was successful in bringing in one soul by baptism. The local congregation was built up in spirit by the sermons and house to house visits of Brother Richards. He was assisted by Stake Missionary H. H. Sevy and Brother Miller.

Other recent speakers have been Elder Clark, of Atherton, Elder Levi Gamet, and Brother Stonafer, of Independence.

The Saints want to help the general church financially, spiritually, and in all missionary undertakings. They extend to all members an invitation to worship with them. Elder Ralph Goold is pastor of Armourdale Church.

Independence

Nowhere have the effects of the recently initiated retrenchment program of church finances been more keenly felt than at headquarters. Much readjustment is going on. Departmental appropriations have been reduced, also salaries and allowances of workers, and numbers have been released from general church appointment. Among the departments most largely affected by the program are the Publicity Department and Social Service Bureau, no longer in existence; the library, being moved to various offices in the Auditorium; the religious education department; and the pastor's offices. One or two departments were given no appropriation at all but are expected to be self-supporting.

Courage, loyalty, and real sportsmanship have characterized the actions of workers affected by the changes. They have accepted the reduction-of-the-budget movement and are winding up their office affairs and preparing to seek other work. Among those released at the Auditorium and library, some of whom will shortly leave Independence, are: Blanche R. Farrar, John Blackmore, George G. Lewis, Brother and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, Brother and Sister J. A. Gardner, G. W. Eastwood, E. E. Closson, and Vance Eastwood.

Plans are under way to stimulate interest in music. Student classes for orchestral training are in course of formation under the direction of Orlando Nace. He wishes all members and friends who have instruments not in use to get in touch with him. Many young people in Independence are unable to take musical training because they do not have instruments. It is hoped in these classes to discover and develop latent talents of many young men and women, and to enlist their help in the musical organizations of the church.

Stone Church

The half hour musical program which was broadcast from the Stone Church Sunday morning included a rendition by the choir of the "Hallelujah" from "The Mount of Olives," by Beethoven, and an anthem, "Into the Woods My Master Went." "The Cradle Song," Brahms, an arrangement for organ and piano, was played by the Miller brothers.

In his discourse of the morning, Bishop Carmichael compared the situation of present-day Israel with that of former-day Israel preceding their entrance into the promised land, basing his remarks on Deuteronomy 1: 3 and Doctrine and Covenants 42: 16 and 83: 8. As former-day Israel had for many years wandered in the wilderness, so also had the church in latter times, according to section 83, rested under condemnation because of failure to keep the law. Two or three things must be done in the immediate future if we are to get out from under this condemnation. One of these things is the making of our homes holy places. "We can not make a success of our group organization until we make the units of that group organization God-minded," he said. Before we became group stewards, he thinks, we must first learn how to become proper stewards over our own possessions.

Evangelist U. W. Greene, the evening speaker, devoted his attention to presenting the testimony and character of the Book of Mormon witnesses.

As the Chicago and Alton "Night Hawk" ran across Missouri the night of March 3, something went amiss, and five coaches or more plunged into the ditch. Aboard this train and headed for his southern mission was Apostle Gillen, who on Friday addressed a letter containing news of the mishap to the First Presidency.

Thinking that he would be traveling all the next day on the train and could nap, Brother Gillen took passage in the day coach from Kansas City. He was one of the first to climb out of a window of his derailed coach and assisted in helping other passengers out. The doors were telescoped. Working in the confusion and darkness, he had little time to think of himself, but decided that he had escaped unhurt.

However, when the excitement was largely over, he found that his left side, shoulder, and forearm were giving him considerable pain. This injury was incurred when he was thrown from one side of the coach to the other, as the train left the track.

A Wabash train, the track of which runs almost parallel at that point to the Chicago and Alton, took the cold and frightened passengers to Saint Louis.

"I think no one was seriously injured," writes Brother Gillen, "but for a time some appeared to be in pretty bad shape. I have often wondered what I would do in case of a wreck. Now I know that when a fast-moving train takes to the ditch, there is little choice but to yield to controlling forces. Today I am feeling well but still nervous from the shock."

Enoch Hill

Elder H. L. Barto is this congregation's new pastor. He was nominated by the First Presidency and presented to the people of Enoch Hill at the union prayer meeting last Wednesday evening. Acceptance on the part of the district was unanimous, and the Saints, with Brother Barto as their leader, hope to achieve much in the coming months. Elders John F. Sheehy and R. E. Whitsett were in charge of the Wednesday prayer and business meeting.

Sunday morning concluded Elder Ammon White's two-week missionary series. Certainly he has given us much help and encouragement. His last sermon was a fitting climax to the series, and was heard by a large number.

In the evening the new pastor spoke on "Eternal Life," basing his remarks on John 17.

The music at the Sunday morning service was particularly attractive. A sextet of intermediate girls sang "In the Garden," and Sister Amos Allen sang "Dwell in My Heart."

Walnut Park

The speakers Sunday were Bishop A. B. Phillips in the forenoon and Elder J. F. Sheehy in the evening. Brother Phillip's subject was "Loyalty." He taught the value of loyalty in various instances, finally showing how loyalty to one's position in the church demands that even when his opinions of right are overruled he will continue to work with the ambition to at least bring about the best results that can be under the existing circumstances.

At eleven o'clock, in the basement, a meeting for intermediates was called by their supervisor, C. G. Closson. This was experimental. The officers of their own organization were in charge: Melba Moorman presiding and leading the singing, Harold Dillee offering prayer, Drexel Mollison pianist. Justus Bean took the offering; Ilse Warnecke sang a solo in German; Carlene Norman sang in a duet with her mother. The short sermon was by Elder C. Ed. Miller on "How We Can Know This Is Christ's Church."

Evening classes were taught by Miss Gertrude Copeland on "Nursing as a Profession," Vernon Reese on "Law as a Profession," and Miss Myrtle Weber continuing on "Methods in Religious Education."

In the Sunday school a tribute was paid to Elder Lurett Whiting, it being his eighty-second birthday. He is still a regular teacher in the school, respected and well loved, valiant in testimony and good works. The postman happily surprised him by a shower of messages from friends far and near, numbering one hundred and sixty-five cards and letters. This pleasure was shared by his wife, a shut-in, now much improved in health.

East Independence

The month of March opened well in a musical sense. Orlando Nace, of Walnut Park, met with us in the interests of orchestral work. Brother A. H. Christensen, now located in this district, has had orchestral experience, and was given charge of the local undertaking. At a continuation of this meeting an outline of instrumentation was presented, and we have prospects of an orchestra of ten or twelve members. This movement will fill a need in East Independence.

Elder Christensen began a series of Sunday evening services the first Sunday of the month with a discourse on "The Second Coming of Christ." He hopes as soon as possible to make an effective missionary effort here.

A desire to serve the Lord in righteousness is manifested in the upward trend of the midweek prayer meetings. Attendance and participation in the services are good.

Last Sunday was Bishop's Day, but the blizzard prevented the scheduled speaker from arriving. T. W. Thatcher, local bishop's agent, did the speaking on a moment's notice, delivering a sermon filled with reminders of our financial duties. Because snow blocked the roads of our rural community, there was no attempt to hold an evening meeting.

Among the recent visiting speakers was Elder H. L. Barto.

Attractive program features reached a climax in February with a Washington's Day patriotic program.

Brother Christensen has accepted the position of teacher of the church school stewardship class.

Gudgell Park

Speakers who braved the snow to come to us last Sunday were Elders H. G. Barto and J. M. Terry. A number were present for the church school session, and the day was spent to the profit of every member.

The home midweek prayer meetings are attracting good attendance. Tonight we worship at the home of Pastor P. A. Sherman.

Words of wisdom and instruction have of late come to us from Elders G. G. Lewis, J. A. Gardner, J. E. Martin, John Bozarth, and C. E. Martin.

A helpful service of sacrament was outstanding this month, and musical selections have pleased the members.

Puyallup, Washington

Elder Richard Baldwin opened a series of meetings here February 8. The first week he talked particularly to the Saints. On Sunday afternoon, February 15, a group of sixteen met at the church to hand out cards that Brother Baldwin had had printed with his subjects for the week of the 15th. After prayer the workers made personal visits to some five hundred homes, handing out the cards and giving personal invitations to attend during the week. Generally speaking we were well received.

The success of these visits delighted everyone. That Sunday night the house was filled to capacity, and interest has been so great that instead of the two weeks of meetings, as Brother Baldwin had originally planned, he is now beginning his fourth week with crowds filling the building and some standing during services. Almost every church in Puyallup, of which there are about a dozen, is well represented each night, and comments indicate that our position as a church is much better understood. Attention, considering the crowded condition, is excellent. A middle-aged woman has given her name for baptism.

Bothwell, Ontario

Members of this branch were happy March 1 when four candidates were baptized. Sunday school convened at nine o'clock and was followed by the baptismal service. Bishop J. C. Dent, of London, gave the charge to the candidates, priesthood, and membership, and Elder William Leverton was in charge of the baptisms. Confirmation and sacramental service followed. Expression was given of a new impression on the worshipers of the sacredness of the church ordinances. Every member was encouraged, and the prayers and testimonies were well spoken.

Death of Sister J. J. Cornish

A letter from E. E. Eliason, newly assigned a Canadian district of the church, to President F. M. Smith, brings news of the death and funeral of Sister J. J. Cornish in the following words:

"I reached Ribstone last Tuesday afternoon and was met at the train by Brother Albert White, president of the branch, who took me to his home four miles in the country for the night.

"Upon arising Wednesday morning I was met by a call to go to Senlac, Saskatchewan. Brother J. J. Cornish's wife had died, and some people from Macklin were asked to call for me to take me to the funeral. Soon we were on our way on a forty-five mile trip to Senlac. Arrived at Brother Joseph Bates's place in time for dinner. The time for the funeral was set at 2.30, so we had not much time to tarry. After dinner, with Brother Bates I set out for the Cornish home about five miles farther on, and we arrived in time to see the funeral procession leave the home for the church a short distance away.

"I was deeply impressed by the beautiful simplicity of the service. Her sons and grandsons acted as pallbearers, carrying the gray casket of simple design to a spring wagon drawn by a span of black horses. Reaching the church, her body was borne to the front, where it was brought to rest on a couple of chairs, and we proceeded with the service. At the close, all who wished were given opportunity to look at her, and then the family came forward. As Brother Cornish took a last look at the face of his devoted little companion, faithful and true to him since 1875, he was heard to exclaim: 'Good-bye, little mother. We'll meet again! We'll meet again!' Her body was interred in a little cemetery on a hill about two miles from the church."

Holden Stake

Holden

The adult division of the church school sponsored a fellowship supper for the branch January 22. About two hundred people were present. A light supper, varied program, and friendly conversation made possible a pleasant evening.

Some fine Sunday programs have recently been our lot. The evening of February 8 the Wahdemna Choral Club of Independence presented a concert to a church filled with friends. The following Sunday Elder and Sister Leonard J. Lea were here morning and afternoon. They helped with talks, readings, and discussion.

This community suffered the loss of a promising young woman, Janice Hampton. For more than a year she had suffered ill health, being bedfast for four months. She died February 28. The funeral sermon was delivered by President F. M. McDowell, of Independence, and did much to relieve the family of its seemingly unbearable bereavement.

Among the recent social events a young people's Valentine party and program stands out.

Post Oak

Joseph A. Duffey passed away at his home here January 20, 1931, after an illness of several weeks. He was the son of Elder James and Susan Duffey, and had spent his life, except four years in California, at home. He graduated from the Leeton High School in 1925. He was born November 24, 1906, at Post Oak. Leaves to mourn his parents, three sisters: Mrs. Winnie Kirk, Independence; Mrs. Gladys Covington, Kansas City; and Geraldine of the home; two brothers, Zenas and Harold, also of the home. The funeral was held at the Saints' church in charge of Elder F. A. McWethy. The sermon was by W. S. Macrae.

Three members of the Duffey family are in the Sanitarium with typhoid fever, and a daughter, Mrs. Gladys Covington, is at the home of her sister, Mrs. Winnie Kirk, suffering from the same ailment. However, all are convalescing.

The community was also saddened by the death of Sister Daisy Green Reynolds, who succumbed to typhoid fever after two weeks. The funeral was by Brother William T. Beckett, of Post Oak.

Bids are called for the hard surfacing of Highway No. 13 from the county line south of Post Oak to Warrensburg. This work will be completed in 1931.

Sedalia

Considerable sickness has retarded the progress here this winter. Because the number of Saints is small, we have none to spare. All Sunday services have been held through the winter—church school, prayer service at eleven o'clock in the morning; Religio, 6.30, and preaching at 7.30.

The Bible reading contest ended with the young people in the lead by several thousand verses. The married group will entertain the winners in the near future.

Brother and Sister A. A. Weaver were called to McKenzie, Alabama, last week to the bedside of their son, Shelley, who was robbed by Negroes, shot, and thrown from a train. He lay unconscious on the ground until morning. His condition is now reported as favorable.

Davidson, Oklahoma

March 6.—The Zion Builders' Club was organized by the women February 5. Sister Helen Stafford Ridings was chosen president and Sister Iberia Renfroe Qualls, secretary. On this day, after preparing attractive baskets of food, the women went to the home of Sister Tom Skinner and spent the day helping each other with quilting, sewing, flower making, and singing hymns. The club is composed of fifteen members, who hope to accomplish much this year.

Several members attended the district conference at Eagle City, Oklahoma. In spite of rainy weather a happy time was had, the members from various points in the district associating together and listening to good lectures by Elder John Blackmore.

The sacramental hour for March was outstanding in significance. Pastor B. F. Renfroe was in charge. Each worshiper keenly felt the purpose of the meeting, and many testimonies of hope, thankfulness, and cheer were borne.

Unusually warm weather was our lot until March 1 when a winter's wind sailed down from the north, bringing with it a great snowstorm. Suffering has been caused by the sudden weather change.

Eastern Colorado Conference

Though a severe snowstorm forced many of the visitors to leave for home early, before the roads drifted full, a highly successful conference was had. Attendance was unusually good.

The Eastern Colorado semiannual conference convened at Denver February 21 and 22 with District President E. B. Hull in the chair. Members were disappointed that Apostles E. J. Gleazer and F. Henry Edwards were unable to be present, and the anticipated institute was not held.

Among the moving spirits of the conference were Elders E. B. Hull, H. E. Winegar, Glaude A. Smith, Sister H. E. Winegar, Elder G. J. Waller, and several others.

The business session opened Saturday morning. The conference appointed a reunion committee to decide about the advisability of holding a reunion and to care for all matters pertaining thereto. It was decided that the conference and reunion should be held the last week in August.

It was gratifying to learn how active the priesthood had been during the past six months and to know that Eastern

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL MICHIGAN.—District conference convened at Beaverton, Michigan, October 11 and 12, 1930. After the opening prayer the following resolution was adopted: "Desiring to be in harmony with the law and custom of the church and following instructions in a pamphlet by the First Presidency entitled, 'Duties of Branch and District Officers,' Resolved that: The president of the district with such general officers as may be present at this conference preside over this district conference and appoint the time and order of the meetings and the speakers and workers necessary to carry into effect the proper work of the conference." (Signed) "Charles Bellingier, Arthur F. Rogers, Ernest Edwards, Stephen H. Barr, and B. S. Turner." Reports were read and spread on the minutes from the branch presidents of Beaverton, Bay City, Gladwin, and Tawas City; statistical reports from Farwell, Bay City, Gladwin, Whittemore, Butman West Branch, Iosco, and Tawas City; church school report; district treasurer's report; committee on merging districts for reunion interests, which included a verbal report by E. S. White, one of the committee. This report was referred back to the committee for adjustment and recommendations. Minutes of the previous two conferences were read and adopted. Adjournment followed the reading of the president's report. In the afternoon business meeting the committee for amalgamation of reunion interests presented its reports with recommendation. A motion prevailed to omit from the report a certain resolution presented at Independence.

Colorado District had, despite the depression, made a good financial showing.

Saturday evening the girls of the Department of Religious Education of Denver Branch gave an impressive pageant.

The Sunday school was well attended, and Brother Glaude A. Smith preached in the morning. Sacrament was served in the afternoon, the district presidency officiating. At this meeting ten precious souls who had made their covenants with the Lord, were confirmed, and Reuben E. Ard, of Pueblo, was ordained a priest. Brother Ard is the leader of Pueblo group.

After discussion the following motion was presented by Bishop Siegfried and adopted: "Resolved, that we favor an amalgamation with Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, Detroit, and Eastern Michigan Districts for the purpose of holding a reunion in 1931 in some agreeable place and under the best condition available; and that a committee of three be appointed to carry out this resolution in conjunction with the Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and apostle in charge of this field, and that we request each of these other districts to appoint a like committee." The committee provided for in this resolution was chosen: Otto Bartlett, J. W. Peterson, and G. W. Burt. A communication from President F. M. Smith, addressed to the conference, was then read and spread on the minutes. The appointment of bishop's agent was one thing which occasioned the visit of M. H. Siegfried, who announced that after conference with the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric the name of the nominee would appear in the official organ of the church, the Saints' Herald, for adoption at the next district conference. A motion prevailed that the secretary be instructed to inform every branch monthly of the collection to be taken in each branch to defray district expenses. Business arising from the president's report: A motion prevailed to refer the matter of organizing a branch at Mikado, to the apostle in charge. With regard to the situation at McIvor, it was discovered that Sister Pringle, of Tawas City, held the title and deed to the property. The suggestion of the report, that the branch there be disorganized, was adopted as the will of the people. A motion to disorganize the branch at Brinton prevailed. It was resolved that the district recommend to the Presiding Bishopric the sale of the property there. The situation at South Brant occasioned a motion that the matter be deferred for one year. The amalgamation of branches at Butman and Section 8 was then considered, and the matter deferred for one year. The conference adopted the recommendation regarding the ordination of B. S. Turner to the office of elder; the ordinations of Ray Osborne and F. S. Banks, of Bentley, were left in the hands of the missionary in charge, the district president, the president of the branch, and the Bentley Branch. J. W. Peterson was sustained district president, and the district treasurer was sustained for the coming year. The report of the reunion committee was presented by Otto Bartlett in the evening business meeting, and was by vote turned over to Brother Siegfried to be audited in connection with the books of the late district treasurer. A motion prevailed that the district president nominate his counselors. It was the will of the people that the new plan of religious education be adopted throughout the district. Discussion revealed that it would be well to wait until the district president nominated his two counselors before this department was organized. Sister Hulbert was sustained district secretary, Arthur Oakman to act as assistant. C. M. Lambkin was chosen to act as district chorister. Sister Clara Nichols was recommended to the church historian to act in this office for the district. Sister J. W. Peterson talked concerning the Harvest Home Festival, held annually at Independence, and urged that Central Michigan District be represented in the display. She was chosen as superintendent of this district undertaking. It was carried that when we adjourn, the time and place of next conference be left in the hands of the district presidency. A meeting was held at 4.30 p. m. Sunday, October 12, to receive the nominations for associates for district presidency. Names presented were Otto Bartlett and Floyd Burt, both of Midland, Michigan. They were unanimously elected, and expressed willingness to serve to the limit of their capacity. A rising vote of thanks was given Beaverton Branch for the conference accommodations.

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.—District held its conference at Brooklyn, New York, February 21 and 22. The conference was well attended considering the existing economic conditions, there being visitors from most of the branches. Business meeting was held Saturday evening, and reports were presented by the priesthood, the various district officers, and the reunion committee. The last named presented the following recommendation: "That in view of the loss entailed by the operation of the 1930 reunion and the continued economic depression, the reunion for 1931 be abandoned, to meet in 1932." The recommendation was accepted, the Saints sensing the wisdom of it even while they keenly regretted the necessity of doing it. Officers for the year were elected as follows: District president, T. J. Elliott; counselors, H. L. Livingston and A. H. D. Edwards; superintendent of Religious Education, E. Walter Lewis; chorister, Clara S. Thumm; secretary, Elizabeth Teal. The next conference will be held at Scranton in the fall, the exact date to be determined by the district presidency, who will notify all branches. A pageant by Brooklyn Branch followed the business meeting and showed stirring scenes of American history. Then came a party for the young people. Sunday began with the priesthood meeting in the lower auditorium and young people's prayer hour upstairs at nine o'clock; Sunday school, 10 a. m.; preaching by John Zimmermann, jr., 11; in the afternoon general prayer meeting; preaching in the evening by H. L. Livingston.

Our Departed Ones

LUCAS.—William E. Lucas was born November 7, 1882, near Mapleton, Kansas. He married Miss Mandy Costeel November 29, 1905. To them three children were born. He was baptized a member of the church by W. E. Haden September 15, 1928. Was instantly killed February 23, 1931, by a falling tree. Left to mourn are his wife, three children, one grandchild, several brothers, and three sisters. The funeral was from the Saints' church, Hallie Dennis in charge. Interment was in Mapleton Cemetery.

GRAY.—Rosalie Ella McMullen was born in Ohio, October 9, 1875, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. McMullen, and one of a family of thirteen children. When a child she came with her family to Independence, where on July 25, 1887, she was baptized a member of the church. At the age of twenty years she became the wife of James L. Gray, and to them twin boys were born but were immediately taken away. To her covenant Sister Gray remained true, and her life portrays high ideals to all who knew her. Surviving are her husband; an adopted daughter, Mrs. Gerald Gunsolley, Logan, Iowa; two grandsons; four brothers: Isaac, of Washington; Walter, of California; Oliver and Joseph, of Joplin, Missouri; three sisters: Mary, of Kansas City; Mrs. Frank Lanham, of Maywood; Mrs. L. A. Haldeman, of Inglewood, California; Elva Merrill Juergens, of Carroll, Iowa, who for many years made her home with Mr. and Mrs. Gray; and many other relatives and friends. The funeral was conducted from the Stone Church, the sermon by Doctor Joseph Luff. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

TURNOUR.—Jules Turnour was born November 17, 1853, in Galicia, Spain. Was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church September 2, 1883, at Lawrence, Michigan, by Columbus Scott. He was a professional clown trouping with some of the largest circuses in the world, but his heart was always with the one-ring show. He declared the modern three-ring shows "mammoth monstrosities," in which the clown's art was lost. He was in his time one of the most proficient pantomimists in the business. Began his show life as an acrobat and later excelled as an acrobatic clown. Until two years ago he was an active performer. His last clowning was in Madison Square Garden, New York, in 1928. He died at Valley Stream, New York, January 26, 1931, leaving two daughters, Grace and Elizabeth, and one son, George, and a number of professional friends. The funeral and interment were in Valley Stream.

McCLAIN.—Maybell Gilstrap, daughter of W. H. and Mary S. Gilstrap, of Seneca, South Carolina, was born twenty-one years ago. She passed away at the Columbia Hospital February 18, 1931, leaving to mourn her husband, J. B. McClain, a son, Haison, eighteen months old, her parents, and the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. Jennie Miller, of Ben Wheeler, Texas; Mrs. Hattie Cleveland, Seneca; Mrs. Essie Martin, Seneca; Mrs. Addie Fennel, Kerr, North Carolina; J. L., I. W., and Guy, and Mrs. Pearl McDonald, of Seneca; Runtie Lake, and Henry Gilstrap. The funeral was conducted at Hopewell Baptist Church February 19 by the Reverend Julian and the Reverend Gibson. Interment was in the adjoining cemetery.

CORNISH.—Mary Jane Stratton was born December 24, 1852, at Toronto, Canada. She married John J. Cornish in October, 1875. She joined the Reorganized Church in 1874, and remained in that body until her death. Died at Senlac, Saskatchewan, February 23, 1931. Her husband, three sons: W. J. Cornish, Senlac; A. J. Cornish, Senlac; John J. Cornish, Wolfe, Saskatchewan; and three daughters: Bertha Cornish, Senlac; Mrs. B. F. Atkinson, Senlac; Mrs. Howard Allison, Paradise Valley, Alberta; thirty-eight grandchildren, and several great grandchildren mourn her demise. A daughter, Anna, preceded her some years ago. Mrs. Cornish was admired and respected by many in and out of the church. She was a pioneer of the district where she died. The funeral sermon was by Joseph Bates, of Artland Branch. Interment was in Long Lake Cemetery, North Senlac, Saskatchewan.

DIEVENDORF.—Arrena Waldsmith was born July 3, 1868, on a farm near Nebraska City, Nebraska. On September 8, 1887, she was united in marriage to J. Leslie Dievendorf, who preceded her in death September 4, 1906. To this union were born eight children: Leslie A. Dievendorf, Council Bluffs, Iowa; Mrs. George Weller, Lincoln, Nebraska; Mrs. J. S. Bell, Norcatur, Kansas; Reuben W. Dievendorf, Joliet, Illinois; Paul F. Dievendorf, Wray, Colorado; Walter E. Dievendorf, of California; Mrs. Bert Noble, Independence; and Mark L. Dievendorf, Independence, all of whom are living. Her mother, Mrs. J. W. Waldsmith, and one sister, Mrs. Amy Gerstenberg, also survive her. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1880, and has always been a valiant defender of the faith, and a faithful follower of her Lord and Master. She was a devoted mother, friend, and neighbor.

paign of revolutionary propaganda, there is an economic thrust being made by the Soviet, as for example: in possession of an almost unlimited acreage of wheat land, confiscated, therefore costing them nothing, with an almost unlimited supply of labor at fourteen cents per day, with the most modern farm machinery, purchased from America and not yet paid for, and with the aid of American brains, last year the Soviet planted and harvested a volume of wheat that flooded the markets of the world, sweeping away from American farmers their wheat market. This year Russia proposes to very nearly double her acreage of wheat. They intend to follow with a similar mass production of cotton, live stock, and other commodities. Thus there enters into the economic circle in the world a new and strange element.

The Soviet evidences an unexpected vitality and an astonishing ability in organization and administration. Back of its economic organization is another, military in nature, with an almost unlimited supply of man power. The announced purpose of Russia is to promote revolution in every land, and her agents are busy wherever opportunity is offered. There is little question that should the flame of revolution break out in any country, along lines favored by the Soviet, the vast military resources of Russia would be, to the extent possible, at the disposal of the revolutionists.

In the United States the commission above referred to recommends that the communist party be declared illegal and be outlawed; that immigration laws be perfected to prevent the admittance of communists, and provide for the immediate deportation of all alien communists; to amend the naturalization laws so as to forbid the naturalization of communists, and to cancel United States citizenship previously granted to communists; to amend Post Office laws to declare unmailable all literature advocating revolutionary communism. Thus the dread is recognized even in America, far distant from the seat of the Soviet experiment.

Thus, even a hasty and rather superficial survey of world conditions convinces us that it is not too much to say, in the language of prophecy, that upon earth there is "distress of nations with perplexity."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Sister Cornish Passes

From Saskatchewan comes the news of the passing of Sister J. J. Cornish. Few men in the church are more widely known than her husband, Brother J. J. Cornish, for as a long-time missionary—one of the early ones of the church—and one who has baptized hundreds of persons, he is known to thousands who look upon him as a father in the church. And these thousands mourn with him over the passing of "Little Mother," the quiet, retired little woman who patiently bore the burdens of home work so that "Father" could be in the field preaching the word.

It was not my privilege to know Sister Cornish intimately; but her unswerving devotion and loyalty to husband and the church have won a place in the hearts of all who know her.

We join his many friends in extending sympathy to Brother Cornish.

Carry On

The financial depression has caused a reduction in the volume of revenue for the church that has made radical readjustments necessary in the financial program. A part of this readjustment has made absolutely necessary the release of workers in all departments of the church service in order to reduce the budget to a point where finances may be conducted on a secure basis.

The loss of workers everywhere, from the headquarters to the districts where missionaries are laboring, will cause many problems. Those who remain will face heavier tasks and greater responsibilities. Officers who are not receiving compensation will have to replace those who have been on the pay roll of the church. The time they can give will be what can be spared from daily work rather than the full-time service of the regular worker.

The church has had to meet other crises in its history. Other times have been hard. But the people of the church have always rallied to the church and have somehow managed to carry on the work. Volunteer workers are needed at this time for the local work of the churches, and we believe they will be forthcoming.

"The work must go on," is the mood and sentiment of the people of the church. Too much has been invested to let it be lost. Bound by the conviction of the importance of our work and message, we can not do less than make the most of what we have in the way of resources and opportunities.

The little group of faithful followers that met with Young Joseph in April of 1860 faced a situation that would have been appalling today. Yet they were not discouraged, for they were rich in that wealth of which neither time nor change of fortunes could rob them.

Judged by the standards of the world, we are poor. If all our hope should lie in wealth, then would we be poor indeed, too poor to call ourselves children of the kingdom.

But judged by other and more enduring standards, we are rich—rich in friends of like faith and ideals, rich in companionship, rich in the joy of the message that has come to us, rich in the great hope which we together cherish, and rich in spiritual blessings that inure us to suffering from what men of the world call hardship.

The work must go on. It will go on, because those who love it and love the people that it serves will see that it does.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Archaeological Support of Book of Mormon Dates

[The following Associated Press dispatch appeared in the Kansas City Star, February 24, 1931. While the correlation is not exact, the approximate agreement is interesting.]

Professor Alberto R. Escalona, Mexican archaeologist, has returned from Yucatan with what he believes is proof the Maya Indians settled in America some time prior to the fourth century before Christ.

Their civilization flourished, he said, until between 1063 and 1103 A. D., when their cultural leaders mysteriously disappeared and their civilization fell into decadence.

He could not say what prompted the Maya wise men, priests, and chiefs to migrate and leave their people to their fate, but he pointed out that their departure was simultaneous with the disappearance of the cultural leaders of the Toltecs, a pre-Aztec civilization of Mexico.

"It now can be stated as a fact," he said, "that the Mayas arrived in America some time before 336 or 356 B. C. The first date noted in the hieroglyphics is somewhere within that period, and it served as the basis for the Mayan computation of time.

"The Mayas arrived in Yucatan about 275 B. C. and settled the city of Chichen-Itza between 235 and 255 A. D."

He said the word Yucatan was derived from the Mayan Yuaktan, meaning "noise makers," and applied by the Mayas to the Spaniards because of the noise produced by their firearms.

The Church Debt

Release thyself from bondage.—Doctrine and Covenants 18:5.

From time to time we have been warned against the dangers of debt. At a time when Graceland College was in debt the Lord said: "The college debt should be paid." (Doctrine and Covenants 125:16.) In 1906 we were told: "In the establishment of the Sanitarium and the home for children debt should not be contracted nor too large or expensive buildings be built at the outset." (Doctrine and Covenants 127:4.) At an earlier date we were advised: "Owe no man anything."

Advices and even commandments are given with qualifications, subject to our ability to heed and obey. Under modern conditions it may not be possible always to conform strictly to the advice: "Owe no man anything." Yet without doubt that was the goal indicated as desirable to be obtained—and we were to work toward it rather than away from it.

Debt is bondage. In 1830 the Lord advised: "Pay the debt thou hast contracted with the printer. Release thyself from bondage." (Doctrine and Covenants 18:5.) When we are in debt we may not do what we wish to do; we must do what our creditors tell us to do. Collectively as a church our obligations must be met promptly in order to preserve the splendid credit of the past. This must be done even when we would wish to do other things.

That means our annual interest charges as a church must be met; and indirectly yet arbitrarily those charges determine the scope of our missionary and pastoral program. Until that heavy annual burden is entirely removed or at least greatly reduced, it is idle to hope that we may develop such a missionary and pastoral force and program as we need and must have in order to do the work near to our hearts.

Debt is particularly distressing in times of business depression. For then the money that was very easy to borrow must be paid back with dollars that are very hard to get. All fondly hope for an early return of "Prosperity." But it is folly to presume that prosperity will return to remain. The economic system of the whole world is floundering in uncertainty. If it is not reformed very drastically, a desperate world may arise and establish another order—flying from the evils that they know too well to those that they know not of. In any event we may expect other and worse periods of depression. Will it not be well with the return of better times to make it our first business to get the church free from debt? "Free thyself from bondage!" And then to keep out of debt so far as possible. This should be a good slogan: "Get out of debt and keep out of debt."

The foregoing paragraphs were written prior to the convening of the recent joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Order of Bishops. I was not able to attend the meetings of the council, but was highly gratified to note the first resolution set up in the program of retrenchment and rehabilitation:

1. Enter upon a concerted and concentrated program of debt reduction, with the object of eliminating all interest-bearing credits, especially those held by persons or institutions other than our own members or concerns.

To my mind that is the wisest decision that we have reached in a number of years, and it was adopted unanimously. Some may mourn that it was not reached sooner: the Apostle Paul mourned that he was "born out of due season," yet when he determined to press forward on a safe road, he accomplished a wonderful work in a few years. Lessons learned by bitter experience are not soon forgotten; and having learned our lesson thus we had best turn our faces forward resolutely to profit by it and do the things that shall make for safety in the future. Given unity of purpose and action, and prayerful and persistent devotion, with undivided allegiance to the cause, we should be able to accomplish the task—and even turn some of our present liabilities into real assets. "Pay your debt . . . release thyself from bondage."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

To Stay Out of Debt

To say that "rumors travel faster than facts" is but to paraphrase the adage that falsehood will out-run the truth. All movements which depend upon popular support suffer because of this.

In the outlined policy of retrenchment recently issued, it is positively set out that the movement to eliminate the church debt will be followed by another to keep on a cash basis, appropriations made on the basis of money in hand rather than anticipated income. And yet we hear that some are saying: "Well, we would gladly contribute to the payment of the debt if we could be assured that we would stay out of debt." The policy adopted asserts this, and administrative methods will be formulated accordingly.

I am quite sure that the general authorities of the church keenly feel the necessity of acting on this basis and will do so faithfully.

F. M. S.

Budget Allowances

It was quite to be expected that the announcement made recently in these columns of the financial policy adopted by the Appropriations Committee, approved by the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, and according to which the Presidency and Bishopric are carrying on their administrative work, should cause much comment and concern among the Saints. They are rightly concerned; and in some instances a watchful waiting attitude may be assumed; but on the whole the policies outlined have met with the approbation of the people, and it is to be presumed that they will get behind in a substantial way the movement towards retrenchment.

The question of the total budget allowance has been to the fore in many "discussions" among the Saints, and it is well that the allowances made should be presented to show how seriously the committee took their work. The reader is referred to the article in the Official Column signed for the Presiding Bishopric by Bishop Curry.

A comparison of these appropriations with those made a year ago will show a great reduction, and that the cuts in appropriations have been well distributed. In harmony therewith the administrative offices have been rearranging their work and activities.

The supervisors of the fields, and the bishops, bishop's agents, district officers, etc., will carry to the people what knowledge of the situation is needed, so that the officers and members everywhere may intelligently apply themselves to the task of re-

Immediate Objectives

For a number of years we have set our eyes upon a distant goal. We have thought of Zion and prayed for its establishment. We have taught stewardships, and as we have taught so likewise have we attempted to make our philosophy practical. In looking forward to our objective, it appears that as a people we have not builded as safely as we should, else we should not now be confronted with problems which demand our attention. The first approach made toward a solution of these problems has been the abrupt curtailment of our expansion program; a program which has gathered momentum because of the desire of this people to approach our Zion goal. That this momentum has been stopped is not the fault of any one man or small group of men, but rather because we did not have a group consciousness of certain trends that were developing as we journeyed along the way, trends which did not prepare us for the economic depression that seems to encircle the entire world.

In the readjustment which we find it necessary to make, some changes may be made which seem to one who does not have full knowledge of the facts to be out of harmony with the idealism of brotherhood and Zion, yet in the light of these facts there seems no other way than the one we have chosen. This, however, should not dishearten us but rather stimulate us to even greater endeavor to bring about a condition of righteousness. Zion is yet possible of attainment for those of courageous hearts and strong convictions. For such as these the task becomes that of preparation for the long pull ahead; and incident to getting started on the long pull, there are certain immediate objectives to which we must give our attention.

Perhaps the most important problem confronting us at the present time is that of assisting in the readjustment of those, who for the time being, at least, are the most vitally affected by the changes which have been necessary. There have been carried over into the year 1931 accrued obligations in the way of family allowances which we must meet, and especially must we give consideration to the needs reducing the church debt and removing some of the handicaps under which the work now finds itself.

Despite false rumors to the contrary, the administrative officers are desirous of getting the facts frankly before the people and are working to this end.

F. M. S.

of those who, as already suggested, are most vitally affected.

We are confident that the Saints will respond in the way of tithes and offerings that this objective may be attained. We do not wish, however, to emphasize this one objective to such an extent that the Saints will lose sight of the long pull ahead, already mentioned. We believe that now is the time for us to give careful consideration to the need for liberal and regular contributions. Consistent compliance with the financial law is essential, and it is also necessary that educational endeavors in this connection shall be increasingly emphasized.

We not only ask the support of the Saints in tithes and offerings, but also request cooperation in assisting those who are having to make adjustments into other lines of activity. Working together, the burden will be lightened in many instances.

We have before us as another immediate objective, the refinancing and refunding of existing obligations, which carries with it the problem of the liquidation of assets not necessary to the carrying on of our major tasks. All of this is included in the whole program of debt reduction, consolidation of activities in some instances and coordination of others are being effected, which we trust will have a bearing on the successful carrying out of our program.

In the achievement of these objectives, it will be necessary that definite steps be taken to organize in stakes, districts, and locals for a year-long program of spiritual and temporal activity. The Presidency and Quorum of Twelve are leading the way in the organization of our forces for the task which is ours. Our faith and trust in the Saints and in their willingness to come to the support of the church in this hour is unbounded. Together we shall set our hands to the task, building upon a firm foundation, believing that God's kingdom shall yet be established.

The Revised Budget

The Presiding Bishopric has been very anxious to present to the church a balance sheet as of December 31, 1930, together with a statement of income and expenditures for that year. Several difficulties have stood in the way of their preparations, and it does not now appear that we shall have tentative figures ready before April 1. Any material corrections required will be given subsequently. However, the expense budget unanimously approved by the Board of Appropriations which began its sessions February 12, last, and continued about ten days, is given below. It is our desire to fully inform the church as to conditions obtaining, so that there will be no ground for unwarranted surmises, and our reasons for requesting each member to support the program stated by President Smith in the Saints' Herald of February 25, 1931, will be fully understood.

Paying for the Church

The following story, taken from an exchange, makes a good point for use on those who object to giving to the church. The church is a necessary institution, like the school, the home, and the hospital. It serves human needs. But, like the others, it requires steady support.

THE UNFAILING SIGN

"A minister called upon one of his parishioners who had grown lax in his church duties and asked him for a subscription toward a new Sunday school building that was in process of erection. Before he had finished his request, he was impatiently interrupted: 'It seems to me,' said the member, 'that this church is always asking for money.' 'It is,' answered the minister, and then continued: 'I had a little boy once. When he began to grow he was always costing me something. He was ever needing shoes, stockings, or clothing of some sort; but one day he died, and he does not cost me a dollar now.'"

And this calls to mind the story of the colored man who came to his pastor with a question:

"Brothah Jones, I thought you said salvation was free. How come you always askin' foh' money?"

"Brothah White," answered the resourceful parson, "salvation am free. But it's like watah. Watah's all free, but you got to pay foh the pipin'!"

Crime

A story is told of an Indian chief who was concluding a treaty of peace with the whites. The chief was a man of noble mind and lofty character, and he was led to make an observation and a warning which seems to find its fulfillment in our day:

"The time will come," he said, "when there will not be enough good people to take care of the bad."

The present troubled times seem to be caused by the great increase in the number of people who prefer to make trouble whenever there is a profit in it. Crime has been found exceedingly profitable. Capone of Chicago has been called "gangster," "criminal," and "notorious" by papers from one end of the country to the other, but he is reported to have made over $10,000,000 for himself by his chosen profession. The tone of the press has altered a little in the direction of respect, if one may judge from recent articles. Can one be called notorious who has the genius for organization to accumulate so much money while defying the law? The people love and respect money too well to be over critical. Capone could even become a sort of hero. In our materialistic civilization, money and power are the marks of success, and Capone has both of them. It may be said now that he is no longer notorious, but famous.

The danger is that more people, seeing the success of this man and his methods, may "go Capone." A great many have already done so. The term "racket," which characterizes the gangster operations, has shouldered itself up beside its more respectable relative, "business."

The better elements have waited for some time for the expected revulsion of disgust in the public mind which would rise and stamp out the great wave of crime. There have been sporadic manifestations of indignation, but they have not had the power or influence to do much against the growing volume of criminal activity. Criminal elements have almost got out of control. The situation is serious.

When the great majorities of people in the country really want law and order, when they show that they are determined not to tolerate crime, we will see a return to peace and security.

There is truth in the famous statement that "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." The license and corruption from which we now suffer is another form of excess which is a menace to true liberty. The people have allowed their vigilance to relax, and crime grows apace.

Our main hope for a return to peace must lie in the organization of those who desire peace, security of life and property, and honesty in government, in such a way that crime can be made unprofitable, and punishment certain.

It is imperative that the contrasts between Christianity and Jesus be clearly revealed and strongly emphasized. First, because the real significance of Jesus is obscured by the widespread belief that organized Christianity truly reflects his religion; and second, because it will be practically impossible to abolish giant evils while they are hallowed by the blessings of the churches. As long as ministers and laymen labor under the delusion that contemporary Christianity is the same religion that Jesus practiced they will remain immunized against his way of life and will lack the vision and power to overthrow entrenched iniquity.—Kirby Page.

A Great Spiritual Opportunity

By F. Henry Edwards

World-wide industrial depression is forcing the various nations to adopt programs for drastic economy. Russia has her five-year plan. Gandhi is proposing a ten-year program of self-denial for India. Sir Oswald Mosley is calling on the people of Great Britain to adopt what seems to be a compulsory form of guild socialism. These inclusive and balanced programs are calculated to develop economic resources to the utmost possible strength, and in each case they are national in scope.

Whatever the differences in methods between these programs, they are all based finally on moral and spiritual forces, without which there is no possibility of success. In India, Gandhi is counting on the efficacy of the vast moral resources whose strength has already been demonstrated in the conflict between India and Great Britain. In England the appeal to industrial leaders to sink their competition in cooperative effort for the national good is based on essentially spiritual and intangible forces. As a recent issue of the Christian Century states even Russia has managed to give the transformation of the economic and social organization of her country "a spiritual significance which is enlisting the emotions and loyalties of her people to an extent seldom equaled even under the stimulus of great religious upheavals."

These economies are being necessitated by the stark facts of the industrial situation; but they are likely to reveal possibilities of real gains which were overlooked in more prosperous times. In England, for example, the program for national financial stabilization is coupled with insistence that there shall be genuine and rapid progress in disarmament. There is reason to believe that the value of this particular economy will so commend itself to thinking people that it will be copied by other countries.

In view of these facts, it is not surprising that the church now finds herself in a condition roughly parallel to that of the nations already mentioned, and, in a lesser degree, to that of the United States. The reductions in our departmental activities and in our missionary force were determined upon only because of the urgently serious financial situation with which we are confronted. The program we have adopted follows the lead given us by the financial specialists of the countries mentioned in that it is church-wide, that it is an economy measure, and that it is intended to be the basis of later reconstruction leading to greater efficiency.

Looking backward from our present vantage point, it is easy to see where we might have taken steps which would have mitigated the severity of our present experience, and it is quite natural that some of us should thus look backward. There is no great profit, however, in such retrospection except as a means of impressing upon our corporate consciousness the lessons of our suffering.

The appropriate attitude of the entire church at the present time would seem to be one of penitence and readjustment. We need to face the fact that we have fallen short of our highest possibilities because we have not lived as close to Divinity as we ought to have done, and we need to face the further fact that the way out of the present morass is to discover what divine instruction can be applied to our present situation and then to obey this instruction pending the receipt of further light.

Looking into the revelations given us in the past, we can find much to commend the present church program of economy and reconstruction. We ought to have heeded this instruction before we got into the present situation; but since we did not, the best we can do is to get in line now. The voice of the Lord which has been confirmed to us in our experience should come to us with double power and should never again be forgotten. Here, in particular, are some of the principles which the church as a whole needs to keep well in mind:

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties to their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a deed and a covenant which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, . . ."

—Doctrine and Covenants 42:8.

"If ye seek the riches which it is the will of the Father to give unto you, ye shall be the richest of all people; for ye shall have the riches of eternity; and it must needs be that the riches of the earth are mine to give; but beware of pride, lest you become as the Nephites of old."—Doctrine and Covenants 38:9.

See that ye love one another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires; cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; cease to find fault one with another; cease to sleep longer than is needful; retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated; and above all things clothe yourselves with the bonds of charity, as with a mantle, which is the bond of perfectness and peace; pray always, that you may not faint until I come; behold, and lo, I will come quickly, and receive you unto myself. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:38.

"In order that the temporal affairs of the church may be successfully carried on and the accumulated debt of the church in its respective departments where debt had accumulated may be properly met and in due time discharged, the church is instructed, both as members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continuous onward progress of the general work; and both in private and in public expenditures carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and the repression of unnecessary wants, and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body."—Doctrine and Covenants 130:7.

As has already been stated, the nations of the world expect to marshal their spiritual resources to the support of their program of economy. The church should be able to call on the moral and spiritual resources of her membership in the present emergency with even greater anticipation of wholehearted response than any of the nations of the world can manifest. The present crisis may easily prove a great spiritual blessing if it shall call us to greater unity, greater sacrifice, greater care in making sacrifices effective, and deeper appreciation of the constant necessity for keeping in mind the instruction received from our heavenly Father.

Such a program of economy and conservation as we now enter into can not fail to have widespread and deeply beneficent results if we enter into it in the proper spirit. While the immediate challenge is for conservation of our financial resources, this must necessarily extend to conservation of our spiritual assets. It must lead to the elimination of spiritual waste and to concentration on primary values and the elimination of lesser things which might displace greater responsibilities. Necessarily such a program will eventuate, before long, in increased local priesthood activities in promoting and caring for the increased spiritual activity of the membership. It will lead to more hearty cooperation in missionary activities on the part of the Saints throughout the church, and in more frequent missionary services conducted by local priesthood entirely. These things in turn will lead to a very necessary return to the practice of scripture study, to renewed prayer at the family altar, and to the widespread practice of personal evangelism.

Through considerable pain we have come to the place where we now are, but despite the sadness with which we contemplate changes which have had to be made, we look for a more healthy growth than seemed possible a short time ago. The whole church is challenged to take advantage of the present spiritual opportunity and to carry forward the work in spite of the handicaps of our depleted official force.

Why I Am a Latter Day Saint

A radio sermon.

By A. B. Phillips

When you travel in these parts by airplane, you will notice the great white dome of a large building lying about nine miles east of Kansas City, one of the largest domes to be found in the United States today, and which may be seen for a distance of many miles from various places along the auto roads that converge toward this great metropolis of the West. This great building has drawn many thousands of visitors to the city of Independence, Missouri, in which it stands, for it is the headquarters of the religious organization known over the civilized world as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Frequently the visitors who come here ask the question: Why are you a Latter Day Saint? What is there in the faith of that denomination which causes you to prefer it above the hundreds of religious beliefs of our day? In answering this question, permit me to call your attention to the fact that we do not usually make a deliberate choice of our church beliefs because of any similarity which they bear toward others, but rather the things which impel us to a choice are the points of difference.

Not long ago I attended a lecture by a certain representative of another faith in which the speaker stated that he was a member of his church because he believed in God, because he believed in Christ as the Son of God, and because he believed that Jesus was the Savior, the promised Messiah. These are all excellent reasons for believing in biblical religion as distinguished from atheism, pantheism, or polytheism, so far as this reasoning goes, but they do not constitute a reason for belonging to any particular Christian denomination as distinguished from other Christian bodies.

If there is no good reason for choosing one Christian body in preference to another, then there is no good reason for the existence of any particular church. I think all must admit that men will always have their preferences in religious belief as well as in other affairs of life, for after all, true religion is a thing to be chosen, and not a penalty to be enforced upon men. We can not really possess a religion in which we do not believe, and of which we do not approve. It naturally follows that if we believe in any particular religion we must possess what seem to us sufficient reasons for that belief.

My church membership is based on both theological and sociological reasons. But tonight I will consider only a few of the former, leaving the others for a later time.

Faith Is Cumulative

If I were asked to name one particular thing which alone caused me to become a Latter Day Saint, I could not do it. Some things more than others influenced me toward the faith I now hold, but religious convictions are cumulative, and many influences combine to decide our church affiliations. Perhaps the underlying basis of my present belief was the deep reverence and faith in the Scriptures which from an early period were instilled in me by my parents and by youthful associations. In some respects I am a fundamentalist, for I very strongly believe that the Scriptures contain much of genuine inspiration from God, though expressed through imperfect and fallible men at times.

With this conviction the faith of the Latter Day Saints accords, for it teaches that "In the Bible is contained the word of God, so far as it is correctly translated." It teaches us that God in ancient times revealed himself to men through his prophets, and that these revealments should be held sacred by us; that when God speaks man should obey. This is a fundamental belief without which I would not be inclined to the church of my choice today. I find it wonderfully satisfying to the soul, when I look out upon life with all its many experiences and hopes and aspirations, to feel the sure conviction that God is interested in us all and is ever seeking to lead us upward toward his own celestial place—the life divine.

But this belief alone would probably never have determined my present church home, for there are others who also hold this belief in much the same way as do we. The thing which to me makes this belief more richly significant is the fact that we not only believe in a God who anciently spoke to men and revealed his will to them, but in a God who does now reveal his will to his people and who speaks to man for his guidance today. The Bible itself declares that God is unchangeable, and during the thousands of years of biblical history he revealed himself repeatedly from age to age, both through many of the prophets and by other remarkable manifestations of his grace.

We hold that it is but a reasonable faith to recognize a God who lives today in the same sense as in all the ages of the past, and who deals with his people in the same way. I have no desire to speak for others, but it would be difficult for me to believe that God was once so interested in mankind that he inspired them to an ever-increasing knowledge of his nature and his will, but that for some unknown reason or without reason he suddenly ceased to make himself known. Surely we have not yet reached that spiritual growth and degree of perfection to which we should aspire, and until we do attain it we shall be in constant need of divine wisdom in ever-increasing potency to lead us on.

Progressive Needs of Man

The objection has been urged that we do not need anything more from God for our guidance in life. I do not agree with this view, and I do not believe there ever was a time in the history of the world when men needed divine guidance more than today. I believe it is a principle of progress that the more we know the more we need to know in order that we may continue to develop in the right way. This same principle may be clearly seen in the fields of science, for every knowledge acquired branches out into many other fields of knowledge. And religion, if we will but understand it, is really the science of all sciences, for it is the science of the complete and supreme life—the life that ever grows, ever increases, and ever reaches greater achievement worlds without end.

Our textbook in the laboratory of religious life is the inspiration of God, by which we apply the tests of experience to the divine knowledge which we receive from him. I am sure that I need his inspiration more amid the increasing complexities of my present experience than I needed it when I followed the simpler paths of childhood, for I now have greater problems to solve, and I can not solve them without his aid and guidance, any better than I could solve the simpler problems of the past without him. If God were not an ever present guide in his universe today, the pathway of life would be dark and thorny indeed.

Just as God has so wonderfully provided for the increasing needs of men in physical life, by which an abundance of every good thing is obtainable in accordance with the developments of every age, so he has provided for the spiritual requirements of every period of time. The disciples of the New Testament era were not content to read in the Scriptures of the Old Testament that God manifested himself to the prophets and righteous men of by-gone ages. And Jesus did not want them to be content with what God had revealed to men of the past, for he told them that the Spirit of God—the Spirit of Truth—would also reveal to them the things of God and would show them things yet to come.

It is still the purpose of God to show us things to come if we will but receive them, to give us more and more light as we go forward on the road of life. The gift of divine revelation is one of his most precious and abiding promises to his people. We can not even know him as he is without it, for Jesus has solemnly affirmed:

No one knoweth the Father, except the Son, and he to whom the Son is pleased to reveal him.—Matthew 11: 27, Syriac Version.

But when the Spirit of truth shall come, he will lead you into all the truth. For he will not speak from his own mind; but whatever he heareth, that will he speak: and he will make known to you things to come.—John 16: 13, Ibid.

God Reveals Himself through Faith

It is usually believed in the religious world that God will never again speak to men as he did in days of old. I have no desire to criticize any who may hold this idea, but to me it is entirely inconsistent with all that the Bible tells us about God, and inconsistent with his promises and the promises of Christ. It is also inconsistent with my own experience of religion and with what I realize of human need today. If I had no evidence that God does inspire men now, when they seek him in faith and sincerity in the time of need, I would have no evidence that other promises he has made would be realized by me, for his other promises are no more clearly stated than is his promise to reveal himself to his people.

Paul tells us that all the prophets and righteous men of the past received answer from God through their faith. If faith can remove mountains, as declared in the sacred book, it can surely remove the veil that shuts out the revelation of God's glorious light to men whom he made in his own image, and whom he commanded to call him "our Father." This principle of divine revelation from God to man, according to his faith and his need, is so important that it constitutes one of my greatest reasons for associating with the church that holds it to be fundamental to its own existence and continuance, and, in fact, fundamental to divine religion itself.

It seems to me quite clear that we can know nothing about God in any personal way unless he is willing to make himself known to us in some illuminating manner. If he has told us to call him our Father, we must logically conclude that we are his children. And no child worthy of the name, so far as we may understand that relationship, will be kept so far outside of the paternal care that not even a personal message or word of recognition is permitted to come to him.

The Church under Divine Guidance

Closely concerned with my belief that God reveals himself to his people today is the conviction that so long as the church is recognized by him, so long will he guide it in its work and its development. I do not mean by this statement that in some unknown way God will overrule the efforts of his people and cause them to always choose the right. I do not believe God does that, for if he did it would not really be a choice so far as they are concerned, and they would be mere machines to do whatever they were compelled to do. When the church split into the fragments of various beliefs, I do not believe that God ordered it or was pleased with divided beliefs. He would be infinitely more pleased if the church should become united in one faith, provided that one faith is the one he commanded his people to observe and teach.

Perhaps some will think these are old-fashioned ideas of religion which are now out of date. I admit that they are old-fashioned, as old-fashioned as are the Scriptures, but no more so. And if they are out of date they are at least not out of harmony with the word of God. No one can read the experiences of the New Testament church without having the conviction that the believers of that day were conscious of the power of God in their lives. When the disciples taught the people, their words were with divine power that gave assurance and conviction of the truth of their message. We need the same power in the church of this age.

There are two very specific means by which God has promised to guide the church, if it will but heed his guiding voice. Both of these means are considered to be fundamental to divine religion, by those who hold the faith I represent. One of these is the spirit of inspiration by the Holy Spirit to the member directly, by which the things of God are unfolded and by which the follower of Christ is urged onward in the way of the Lord. The other is the spirit of revelation to and through the ministry of the church, by which those who are called into the ministry are designated, and by which the church receives the word of the Lord in direction, reproof, admonition, or encouragement.

The Call of the Ministry

There are three theories of church procedure usually held by various religious bodies with respect to the call and designation of those who shall be ordained to the ministry. One is that since the choosing of the New Testament apostles, all of their successors are sufficiently authorized by the act of ordination by one whose authority was derived in succession from the apostles by similar ordination. This is sometimes called the authority of succession from the apostles.

Another theory is that God has committed to the church all necessary authority, and that anyone who is chosen and set apart by the vote of the church is properly empowered as a minister for Christ. This idea is nearly parallel to the old Latin saying: "The voice of the people is the voice of God." I do not believe this position is either logical or safe, for in effect it would make God sanction the choosing of men regardless of what their church might teach, and what they would therefore be expected to teach.

The third teaching concerning the calling of men to the ministry is that God selects whom he will as his representatives, and sends them out to teach according to his word. As Paul declares that "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron," it seems clear to us that no man by human choice has the right either to select himself or any other person and send him as God's minister. For according to the Scriptures, God has always revealed himself and chosen who should be ministers for him. This is another reason why I find myself united with the Latter Day Saints, for I believe this is the way God has ordained to choose those who shall go to all the world and preach his message in its purity to all mankind.

These fundamental beliefs of the church are only a few of many that I hope to present the next two Sunday evenings.

Higher Achievements

By J. E. Vanderwood

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 7: 21.

Even a casual reading of the above text will enable us to see that Jesus clearly distinguishes between saying and doing. Our success or failure, our achievements or our defeats are to be determined by the manner in which this principle of life is recognized and utilized by us. The one element has to do with the receiving of information only, while the other has to do with the living of the life. It is not enough that I shall gain information about things, but it is very important that I should learn how to relate myself to men and things about me. He is not educated who has simply gathered together a few abstract statements about the universe, but he who has learned to do the things that have made his own life useful, and who has come to know how to assist his fellow men to better things is indeed well educated. He who is able to quote Virgil or Homer may be informed in that particular line, but he who is able to show to his fellows a clean character and a noble life is educated in the things that are worth while. He who can quote Bible may be a scholar or a theologian, but only he who is able to live and demonstrate the truths of the Bible in his daily life is worthy of the name of Christian. It is, therefore, evident that we must achieve something higher than the mere memorizing of Bible words and phrases if we are to become qualified to teach the children of men the thing that is of most importance.

In speaking of Christ, John records these words, "In him was life; and the life was the light of men." He did not say that the profession was the light of men, nor did he say that the mere articulation of the words was the light of men, but he made it clear that the life was the light of men. If we are to be the means of lighting the way for others, we must learn to live, and we must not only learn to live, but we must live. If I take an oil container and fill it with water, I can get nothing but water out of it; if I take a grape juice container and fill it with vinegar, I can get nothing but vinegar out of it; I can get out of a thing only what has been put into it. It is, therefore, self-evident that I can put out in my life only that which I have been taking in. Let us not forget that it is the life that is the light of men, and I can light men into that, only, which I have become the recipient of. It is evident, therefore, that I can not lead where I am not qualified to lead. What then is really required of me? Simply this, that I learn to search for, and fill myself with, that which is pure, true, noble, just. When I do this, I shall be able to put out the same things. If I would become kind to my fellow men, I must think kind thoughts. If I would be charitable unto others, I must think charitable thoughts. If I would reveal a pure life, I must continue to dwell in thought on that which is pure and lovable. I can not be a mental scavenger and keep the channel of my life pure and clean.

When the Lord was preparing men to lay the foundation of this church that now means so much to us, he said, "Fear not to do good, my sons; for whatsoever ye sow, that shall ye also reap; therefore, if ye sow good, ye shall reap good for your reward." This is but another way of saying, That which you do shall enrich your life or degrade it, so be sure to choose the right course and learn to do the best you can. A few days later he instructed another young man thus: "Put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good; yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit." Surely this is a simple and wise rule to follow.

Not long ago I heard a conversation in which a party said it was a rather difficult matter to judge of the spirit that prompted people, that one never knew whether he was being prompted by the Spirit of God or whether it was some other emotion. I at once invited the attention of the person to the principle involved in this text just quoted, and suggested that it was not at all difficult to determine the source of a thing if we trained ourselves to think straight and to distinguish between good and evil; that the clearer we draw our lines here, the more easily we may distinguish the spirit that actuates us. And that if we would reach higher achievements we must learn to think higher thoughts. The poet has expressed it nicely in these words:

And good may ever conquer ill,
Health walk where pain hath trod.

Surely the wisest way to achieve the blessings of peace is to dwell in peace in our mental realm. The surest way to insure truth is to dwell constantly in thought upon that which is true. The means of purifying our life is the method of thinking pure thoughts and the doing of noble deeds. If I would achieve the best, I must do more than acquire knowledge, I must vitalize that knowledge by living it. A poet has expressed it in these words:

Not only what I come to understand,
But what I here apply and daily live;
Not that which I may hold within my hand,
But that which I have truly learned to give;
Not that which I have placed within my reach,
But that which I reveal in deeds of love;
Not that alone which I in word may preach,
But that which makes me gentle as a dove,
Is what I must determine to achieve
If I would really fit myself for life,
And be the means of helping to relieve
My fellow men from error and from strife.

Let us learn that no place can be heaven where the condition of harmony is wanting, and that if we would enter into the heavenly place we must first enter into the heavenly state. It is written, "No unclean thing can enter the kingdom of God"; therefore, we may be assured that only as we come to achieve the essential qualities of heaven in our daily walk and conversation can we hope to eventually enter into the pearly gates that have been sung and talked about so much by mankind.

If, then, I would achieve higher things, I must learn to think higher things, to do greater things, to pursue constantly the things that are revealed in the life and teaching of the Master. To commit to memory a poem or the contents of a book is not enough. I must live the poem, and I must vitalize the message of the book. Jesus said, "I came to do the will of him that sent me." Too many times we lose sight of the doing, and deceive ourselves into thinking that talking about it will suffice. No worthy achievement can be made in this way, and I am sure there is no need of wasting time with anything short of the real thing, which is learning to do the thing that shall fit us for the Master's presence by having learned to do his will.

"It Is Finished"

By Evan A. Fry

I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.—2 Timothy 4: 7, 8.

Disagreeable as it is, we must all face the fact that life is a precarious and insecure thing at best. No one knows whether he shall live to complete this day's work and retire to a well-earned rest tonight. Every daily paper is liberally sprinkled with accounts of sudden death—some of them occurring in such unthought-of manner that we can scarcely credit the published accounts.

The healthy mind spends little time worrying or brooding about this situation, and it is well that we do not, or we should soon be cowering and gibbering imbeciles with a constant obsession of impending death. Yet it is good for the health of our souls to sit down calmly, occasionally, and take a sort of inventory of our lives—to ask ourselves the question, "If I should die before tomorrow dawned, what kind of treasure would I find waiting for me when I arrived on the other side?" Would my work here be finished? Would my race be run, or would I have to drop out of that race only half way to the goal?"

After all, it matters little whether we live to a ripe old age of three or four score and ten, or die before we have completed half that amount. The important thing is not how long we live, but how we live, and whether our life is finished when we are called home. All long lives are not necessarily finished. Many a man has died at a ripe old age with his life's work scarcely begun. Neither is a short life necessarily unfinished. Christ's life on this earth lasted a short thirty-three years, and yet no life before or since has so affected the human family, or spread such happiness among mankind. Christ's life was short, yet at its close he could say with literally his last breath, "It is finished." In a prayer a few hours before his betrayal, he said, "I have glorified thee on earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."

Christ's disciples could not understand why he should have been taken from their midst so soon and so suddenly. To their still worldly minds, his kingdom was not yet established, and with his expiring life expired their last hope of the establishment of that kingdom in a material sense upon the earth. In the dark hours after his death, any one of them would probably have said that his work was unfinished, for so it appeared to earthly eyes. So it often seems to earthly eyes when some one is snatched from this life before his work is apparently well begun. But it is possible to live always so that your life is finished at any moment—so that you are always ready for the summons that may come when you least expect it. If you are ready to meet sudden death at any moment, the chances are that you think very little about such a possibility; your mind is calm and free from any worry as to the future, and you can go confidently and unconcernedly about your daily tasks, knowing that you can trust the future, no matter what the day may bring. It is the man who knows that he is not ready that worries lest he may be taken before he has had time to prepare.

As we go through this new day, let us each one resolve that each minute shall find us with our work finished, our battles fought and won, and our race well run. And whether the beginning of a new life and the end of this shall come today or years from now, may we all be able to say with the Apostle Paul: "I have fought a good fight: I have finished my course; I have kept the faith."

The Story of My Life

By Arthur Leverton

V.—SPIRITUAL EXPERIENCES IN THE MISSION FIELD

As told to Nellie Andrew and Illa Brown

At one time there was quite an agitation on the soul-sleeping question, some thinking that the spirit and body sleep in the grave from the time of burial until the resurrection. Since this was a doctrine not spoken of very much, we were not able to defend our position, so just before I went to preach in London I had a vision. In this vision I seemed to go to bed, then immediately got up, dressed myself, and went out through the lane to the main road. When I opened the gate leading to the main road, it seemed to get larger and was a macadamized road. The people on the road, as far as I could see, were going in the same direction, some singly and some in groups. I turned and started in the same direction, but did not go very far until a bridge loomed up before me. "My, this is a wonderful bridge," I thought, "beautiful and strong!" I went a few rods farther, and there was a river, apparently quite dismal; but as we were going along, a large procession of the people went down the bank at the approach of the bridge to the right, and another portion of the people went down to the left. Once in a great while one went over the bridge. When I came up to the bridge, I said, "I don't want to go over there by the side of the bridge. I want to go over the bridge." Immediately I was on the other side of the river, and everything seemed to change and be filled with life and vigor. Looking to my right, I saw a mountain with a straight, narrow path slanting up the side. I was halfway up when I heard the most beautiful music I have ever heard in my life. I could not describe it, but as I proceeded up near the top of the mountain, there seemed to be a band of musicians all dressed in white, and their instruments seemed to be pure gold. One of the musicians, with an instrument on his arm, came to meet me. We went into conversation, which I can not now recall, but later on he made this remark, "See that dark spot away down there in the distance?" I said, "That is the earth." He said, "Yes; you have to return there again." "Oh, why!" I asked. "I don't want to go back there." "Your mission work is not done," he said, "and you have to go back to finish." With that he came to me, and we came down the mountain side, over the bridge, down the road, and to my own gate, where everything seemed to be natural again. We continued into the house and I offered him a chair, and the first thing I remember saying is: "How can these things be? This is my spirit, and there lies my body on the bed lifeless." He said, "At the present time you can lie down beside your body, and in a short time you will wake up and everything will be natural." I did so, and then my curiosity caused me to rouse up on one elbow, feel my face, and examine my body. I said, "I certainly did all right." I lay down again, and almost instantaneously I was awake, which thoroughly convinced me of the dual nature of man, and prepared me, when I went to London, to meet a man who was very strong in that belief.

Another time I was preaching in the Township of Cochester, and while doing so, stones were thrown around my head, but the voice of the Spirit of God said to me, "Fear not, for none of them will hit you." Neither did they, and I kept on preaching as if nothing had happened. While in this place a delegation from one of the popular churches came to me and said they were instructed to offer me $800 a year and a free manse if I would take charge of their church and work for them.

I will here relate one testimony which I received of the divinity of this work. My wife and I were returning home from meeting at Kentbridge, fourteen miles from home, one very dark night in October, and on our way we were conversing about the necessity of having faith in God, when I made this remark to my wife: "Mary, it appears to be my special duty to try to get people to have faith in God, both in the church and out." My wife replied, "I always did believe that if we put our whole trust in God we should never be allowed to go astray." Immediately after this remark was made, a sound like a ball from a heavy shotgun shot over our heads, and we were encircled with a bright light. The voice of the Spirit came to me while we were in the light and said, "Inasmuch as you put your whole trust in God, you shall never be led astray."

About the fall of 1876 or 77 Brother Robert Davis and I were billeted to go into eastern Michigan to open up the work there. My zeal probably exceeded my wisdom, for I determined to go on the trip as Jesus said to his disciples—without purse or scrip.

We proceeded, when the time came, on our mission, and on foot. The first night on our trip we arrived at Brother David Johnston's and remained with him overnight. The next morning he drove us down to the ferry landing in Mooretown. While sitting on the wharf ready to go on the boat, and without a cent in my pocket, I was wondering how I was going to pay the ten-cent fare to cross the river, but as Brother Johnston shook hands to bid me good-bye he left a five-dollar bill in my hand, which furnished me all the funds necessary to reach my destination, and also to help Brother Davis out a little.

We finally arrived at Goodland, Michigan, and immediately set to work to organize meetings and proceed with the gospel work. Shortly after our services commenced, we had an appointment on Sunday morning at ten o'clock, but on Saturday night there was a snowstorm which left six or eight inches of snow on the ground. We had about three miles to go, and Brother Davis and I had the pleasure of breaking the road through the snow. As we were proceeding, suddenly there appeared a man about a quarter of a mile ahead of us coming in our direction. I told Brother Davis that I had an impression. "Do you see that man coming?" I asked. He said, "Indeed I do, but what is there special about that?" I said, "There is an Israelite, indeed, in whom there is no guile." As I was walking on the same side he was, we consequently met. I said, "Good morning, sir." "Good morning. Quite a storm last night." "Indeed it was," I said. "Have you obeyed the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ?" Looking at me, amazed, he replied, "I don't know whether I have or not." I said, "Don't you think it is time you found out?" He said, "Maybe it is." I then told him who we were and our work, and asked, "Where do you live, sir?" "I live back north." "We preach back there tomorrow night. I don't know whether it is near you or not, but we would like you to come out and hear for yourself." He said, "Where do you preach?" I said, "In the house of Brother Hines." He said, "That is just about a mile from my house. I believe I will try to come out." Sure enough, when we met there was the gentleman sitting in the house with quite a large number of others. He was very deeply interested in the preaching, and came up and shook hands. I said, "Well, how did you like it?" He said, "It seemed all right." "You heard me announce meetings for tomorrow night. Come again." Next night he was there again, his wife and family with him. The third night he asked me after the meeting if I couldn't come and preach in his home. I said, "Yes, sir; as soon as I can make arrangements."

We went down and preached in his house for about a week, and I baptized six, the creek being just down the bank from his door, where the baptism took place. This man was Brother John Bailey, one of the first patriarchs to be ordained in the church, and he has been a worker ever since, or while his strength permitted him to be.

The outsiders had an idea that immersion couldn't possibly be right, as the disciples couldn't baptize by immersion the three thousand on the day of Pentecost. Consequently, the day being stormy and very cold we had everything convenient. They timed me in baptizing the six, but not to my knowledge, and reported afterwards that I baptized the six in five minutes. I almost wondered how I did it, but I stood in the water while Brother Davis helped them in and out. That stands as the explanation. We never heard any more about the impossibility of baptizing the three thousand after that.

Michigan at that time was the great gospel field. There were more places opened up and more calls for preaching than Brother Davis and I could fill both working together, so we decided to separate and keep two appointments going at the same time. I took an appointment at Black's Corners about four miles from Brother D. Wolf. Brother Davis took an appointment at Sharp's Corners and vicinity, about four miles in the opposite direction to Brother D. Wolf's from where I was. I thought I had the ideal place for the gospel. I had a full house, and people were so interested apparently that they would give me applause sometimes when I would make a point on the Bible, but at the end of the week I became lonesome. There wasn't a Latter Day Saint in the vicinity, so on Friday I made up my mind and said to the people where I was stopping that I was going down to Brother Wolf's and would not be back until night. I had not been at Brother Wolf's over twenty minutes before in came Brother Davis. To get the start of him, I said, "What sent you here?" "I don't know; maybe the same reason that sent you here." We talked together, and both agreed that we should join forces again, but I said, "Brother Davis, come over with me. I have an ideal place, a big schoolhouse and good crowds. I never saw people more interested." Brother Davis said, "I think you had better come over and help me. I have just as good a hearing as you, and the people are interested. This is where we should preach." I was determined I was right, and he was determined he was right, so we agreed there was only one way to settle the matter, and that was to go in prayer to God and seek his direction. After having prayer, the Spirit of God rested upon me in prophecy, to my great surprise and wonder, directing me to go back and labor with Brother Davis. I was so much surprised that while delivering the prophecy, I thought, "Can that be possible?" The moment this doubt entered my mind the Spirit left me, and we had to pray again to receive the balance of the prophecy.

I returned with Brother Davis and commenced preaching in the vicinity. The result was that we commenced to baptize, and in that locality there were five branches raised up in the church. To my knowledge there has never been a soul baptized where I was preaching to this day. I give this testimony to show that the wisdom of man is not sufficient to direct the work of God, but I believed then, and I believe now, that while the church may appoint the field of the missionary, the missionary should live in sufficiently close communication with God that to be a success he may be directed in the portion of the field in which he should labor. Paul received the Macedonian call, "Come over and help us," and I believe that the church needs that as much today as it ever did.

The Rich Young Ruler

By Charles H. Arven

With Jesus and the rich young ruler as its chief characters, a true story might be written of great interest. Certain it is that the character of Jesus would stand out so vividly that the reader would be deeply impressed by His wonderful characteristics. The young ruler would also be a character of great interest from the fact of his personality, his striking appearance, his clean, wholesome manner, and great wealth which gave him power to rule over others. These two characters enacted a drama which must have been one of thrilling power and interest. What a vivid scene it must have been: "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?"

No doubt this young and ambitious ruler was of good character, had lived an exemplary life, and had kept most of the Bible commandments. No doubt he considered himself as good as most men and perhaps better than some. Just why, then, did he come to Jesus to ask this question? From curiosity alone? No, hardly. A man of his character would not be apt to waste time on curiosity alone. No doubt, he had heard much of Jesus that was good and desired to question him to learn just what Jesus really knew of things spiritual. As for believing Jesus was divine, it is not likely that he did.

He perhaps thought of Jesus as a preacher going throughout the country, who had gained great fame as a teacher of men, and he, living what he thought was a religious life, felt there was still something lacking in his religious nature, a something he knew not what, but desired to have—of this he felt sure. Then having kept the commandments of the Bible as he says, a feeling of pride may have arisen in his heart which might have caused him to expect great praise from Jesus for the manner in which he had lived.

If so, he was not disappointed, for Jesus did praise him and showed him the one thing he lacked—the thing he had been seeking but had failed to find. Now that it was brought before him as a reality, it came as a sudden shock. It was not what he expected it to be, nor what he would have liked it to be. The surprise was so great, the disappointment so bitter, that he turned sadly away. Like others, when brought to the test he could not part with his wealth. "Hardly shall a rich man enter the kingdom of heaven," said Jesus to his disciples as the rich young ruler went his way.

Still, there is something about this young man's personality and appearance that is likable. We should not judge him too harshly perhaps, for when we consider that, brought up as he was in that time and age, when Jesus was still young in his ministry, it is remarkable that with his great wealth and the power he possessed, and the aristocratic class that he had been reared with, he had advanced so close to the kingdom of God.

It was indeed a great drama—a drama of life—a drama of the significance of eternal life. It is illustrative and shows how we may stand or fall, and helps us to guard against the things so typical of this great event. Perhaps had the young ruler more time at his disposal, that the words of Jesus could have penetrated more deeply, he might have accepted the advice of the Master and gone on his way rejoicing.

It is a tradition that later on the young man complied with the requirements of Jesus and became a devoted follower. However, the lesson learned from the great drama teaches that no sacrifice is too great in exchange for eternal life. No doubt there was a great longing, as well as sadness, in the heart of the young ruler who had chosen between wealth and eternal life.

Great wealth has always been a drawback to living a religious life in its fullness. It seems that when man accumulates riches, his personality quickly changes and takes on an independence wholly foreign to his former self. He makes sure of his own pleasures in life, and forgets what he owes to God, even so little as a tenth of what he may possess. And like the rich ruler, when we are brought to the test, many of us may be found lacking in humility and an honest stewardship to God.

This young man stands out even today as one of the most prominent characters of the New Testament, and has been and is now, a subject of much thought and discussion; perhaps for the reason of his prominence which his wealth gave him, the questions he asked, and the divine character of the Man who answered him. He perhaps was not lacking in moral purity, but he was lacking in one important thing: the courage to make a full surrender—the wisdom to exchange his riches for eternal life.

But the lesson learned from this great drama is one of value and one we should never forget. If we are the possessors of wealth, we should remember the reply that Jesus gave to the young man—a test, no doubt, of his sincerity and willingness to sacrifice. As our soul may be required of us at any time, our anticipations of great wealth must pass on into oblivion, but if we have absorbed ourselves in pursuit of eternal life, we have lost nothing. What we have gained we will be given credit for on the book of judgment. How foolish, then, for man to let his riches stand between him and eternal life.

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Sunday Evening Study Courses for Use in the Children's Division

By Bertha Constance Woodward

In many local churches there is need for a Sunday evening study course for children. Either the Religio is still functioning, or there is an early Sunday evening study period under the direction of the church school officers.

Since there is no quarterly being published at present for use at this period, the following materials are being recommended:

For Use with the Kindergarten Class:

"Through Nature to God," by Tessie Smith (quarterly for one year).

Mr. Saucy at the Zoo, by Marcella Schenck. Price, $1.

Sleepy Hour Stories, Ethel I. Skank. Price, 75 cents.

More Mother Stories, by Maud Lindsay. Price, $1.50.

In the Child World, by Emilie Poulsson. Price, $2.50.

For Use with the Primary Class:

Standard Bible Story Reader, by Lillie A. Faris. Book I, price, 80 cents. Books II and III, price, 90 cents.

Sadie and Her Pets. Price, 75 cents.

First Primary Book in Religion, by Colson. Price, $1.40.

Second Primary Book in Religion, by Colson. Price, $1.50.

For Use with the Junior Class:

Junior Religio Quarterly. These are quarterlies published before the Religio was dispensed with, but they contain valuable material which never grows old. These quarterlies may be used for two years in the following order:

First Year:

July, August, September, 1926, "Interesting Men and Women of Modern Times," Ethel Brooner.

October, November, December, 1926, "A Study of Modern Heroes and Heroines," Bertha Constance.

January, February, March, 1927, "Character Building Stories used in a Project of Zion Building," Constance.

April, May, June, 1927, "Character Building Stories used in a Project of Zion Building," Constance.

Second Year:

July, August, September, 1927, "The Book of Mormon Story," Marcella Schenck.

October, November, December, 1927, "The Book of Mormon Story," Marcella Schenck.

January, February, March, 1928, "The Book of Mormon Story," Marcella Schenck.

April, May, June, 1928, "The Book of Mormon Story," Marcella Schenck.

Third Year:

The Story of Grenfell of Labrador, Wallace. Price, $1.75.

There are numerous good books that might be used which are not listed here. We have endeavored to recommend as many of our own church publications as is possible. If other books are used, they should be chosen with care, for their content should stimulate children to live in harmony with the ideals of our church.

In local situations where it is necessary to provide only one class for the entire children's group, select the book or quar-

Cadillac, Michigan

The church here rejoices in missionary accomplishment. In numbers attending we have passed all previous records, there being present on one night 441 persons. Because all could not crowd inside the building, 109 returned home. The remainder filled the church to overflowing. Elder Ernest N. Burt, of Onaway, assisted by Harry Briggs, Brother Scott, and others, conducted the series. If a larger building had been available, we believe we could have had fifteen hundred people to hear our message. This filling of the building to the doors was the fulfillment of a prophecy given here a year ago.

This missionary campaign was worked out through the suggestion and effort of Brother Burt. Two contests were held. Captains were selected who chose their helpers. The first contest closed with fine increase in attendance, and the second by choice of the captains because no room was available for all already coming. A social event followed each contest, the losing side furnishing much of the entertainment. A large number of nonmembers participated in the campaign.

We are fortunate to have a man of Brother Burt's capabilities, one who brings people together to work toward a specific end. He has during these services demonstrated the fact that he has studied to show himself approved, "a workman who needeth not to be ashamed."

Services were held in the homes of the Saints during the first week and in two different parts of the city, but the number in attendance warranted a special effort at the church, and services have now been conducted there four weeks. It is expected that the meetings will continue another week or two.

Since coming to help us, Brother Burt has baptized five persons and completed two family circles. Several children of Both the quarterlies and the books may be ordered from the Herald Publishing House.

Additional Junior Stewardship Recognition

The following names have recently been added to the list of Juniors to receive special recognition from the Presiding Bishop, as published in the Herald of February 11:

Merle H. Swoffer, Croswell, Michigan.
 Bruce William C. Swoffer, Croswell, Michigan.
 Eleanor M. Swoffer, Croswell, Michigan.
 William Sheldon, Croswell, Michigan.
 Mildred Sheldon, Croswell, Michigan.
 Earnest King, Croswell, Michigan.
 Arthur Wellman, Croswell, Michigan.
 Marie R. Anderson, Albion, Wyoming.
 Jean McCormick, Albion, Wyoming.
 Emily McCormick, Albion, Wyoming.
 Nadine Brettel, Kimball, Nebraska.
 Joy Brettel, Kimball, Nebraska.

Certification in January

The name of Mrs. Keo M. Robinson, San Antonio, Texas, was omitted from the published list of those who received certificates in Religious Education and Leadership up to January, 1931. Mrs. Robinson received a second-grade certificate.

C. B. W.

nonmembers have been blessed by Brothers Burt and Joseph Scott, pastor. And how the prospect list has grown!

Credit is due Clyde Price, musical director, for the way he has conducted musical activities during the meetings. Eunice Slusser has played the piano almost entirely throughout the services, and her work has been a splendid contribution toward the success of the meetings. Soloists and friends who helped in musical lines are remembered with appreciation.

Recently a new sign was placed above the main entrance of the church, and now that our services are regularly advertised in the local paper, we feel that publicity work is well cared for. The special meetings are given generous notice in the Cadillac Evening News.

Brother and Sister Price announce the arrival of a son, Duane Keith.

We pray that within the heart of each Saint is the faith and courage which led the poet to say,

"Go on in faith, ye Saints, go on,
 Fear not, the cause is good."

Spring River Young People's Convention

The young people's convention, held February 22 to March 1, at Webb City, Missouri, was a new thing for this district. Elder John F. Sheehy, of Independence, was the speaker the first five nights. His Sunday night sermon, "Playing Second Fiddle," brought to the young people a message they will not forget. All of Brother Sheehy's sermons were appreciated, and it was regretted that he could not remain over the week-end. Elders F. M. McDowell and E. E. Closson came from Independence Friday afternoon and were here over Sunday.

One hundred and thirteen young people sat down to a banquet on Friday evening, District President Frank McDonald acting as toastmaster, and Miss Mary Hobart, of Webb City, in charge of the "pep" singing. Toasts were given by Albert Cobb, Webb City; E. E. Closson, of Independence; Eva English, of Joplin, and President F. M. McDowell.

Last November 23 a group of young people attending the Spring River District Conference at Joplin, met at the home of District President McDonald to spend a social hour. The suggestion was made that the young people hold a series of meetings, planned, financed, and conducted by themselves. An executive committee was appointed, composed of members from Carthage, Joplin, and Webb City. This committee had full charge and appointed other committees to carry out the details.

Saturday's all-day services were attended by many young people from over the district, and included a prayer meeting, class work, friendship hour, recreation, and an illustrated lecture by Brother McDowell on "I Have Seen Jesus."

President McDowell was in charge of the largely attended Sunday morning service of sacrament. He was assisted by the priesthood of various branches. "Consecration" was the theme, and many of the young answered the call to consecrate their lives to the work of Christ. It was a wonderful meeting. "The Challenge of the Church to the Youth" was a stirring appeal voiced by Brother McDowell.

At three o'clock in the afternoon Brother Closson conducted a class, following which the organization of the district was perfected: President, Albert Cobb, Webb City; vice president, Frank Shank, Carthage; secretary, Clara Hobbs, Carthage; treasurer, Marguerite Sheppard, Joplin; and recreation and social sponsor, Elsworth Gilbert, Pittsburg, Kansas. The district president pledged Brother McDowell the services of the young people in the work of the church; and the new president, Albert Cobb, was much pleased to have representatives from Independence and Pittsburg, Kansas, come to him after the organization and offer their services whenever needed.

"I Would See Jesus" was the sermon by Brother McDowell, which closed with a challenge to youth to action. The church was packed. The young people are awake; they have accepted the challenge made by the church. They will go forward.

The young people of Spring River District are grateful for the help and inspiration of "Uncle John," "Gene," and "Big Brother Mac."

Centralia (Washington) Dramatic Society

"No Account David," a three-act play written by Lillian Mortimer, was presented at the Liberty Theater two nights by the Centralia Church Dramatic Society, and proved a huge success. The returns of over three hundred dollars were given to the Centralia Welfare Committee for the unemployed.

A little over a year ago the young people's group of Centralia Branch, under the direction of Sister Jessie Ward and Mr. Milton Jastrom, organized a church dramatic society. This group has developed to such an extent that fifty per cent of its membership personnel is nonmember. Due to the success of the play just given, another is being rehearsed and will be presented in the near future.

Saginaw, Michigan

"After I heard him the first time I could not stay away," some said of Elder Arthur Oakman, who has been holding missionary meetings in Saginaw the past few weeks. His sermons were an inspiration to all, and he closed each service with a song which added the finishing. He has now gone to Beaverton.

Eight were baptized, the Saints being permitted the use of the Y. M. C. A. swimming pool for the ordinance.

Elder Oakman did much good around the firesides of our homes and in musical as well as spiritual lines.

The branch is now working under the church school program, and problem meetings each month help us to check up the results obtained. Regardless of the financial conditions in this city, Saginaw Branch is forging ahead.

Oakland, California

From The Oakland Bulletin

The last February number of the Bulletin was devoted to the dedication of the new organ in our church. It contained a description of the instrument and the order of the service in detail. The organ recital that Sunday evening was well attended, and the organ, under the touch of Mr. Herman C. Hiller, of Oakland, was all we had hoped for. The soloists did excellently. This was indeed a service of praise.

Congratulations go to Miss Maxine Ashley, who lately won first prize for her essay, "The Development of the Port of Oakland." This was read before twelve hundred guests at the Scottish Rite Temple, February 10, Harbor Day. The Sunday Tribune reported the event and printed a good picture of Miss Ashley.

On a recent evening Sister Decota presented her "Thespians" in a vaudeville performance that was highly successful. A crowd attended and gave hearty response to the numbers offered. The scenery was contributed to the church by Sister Decota and members of the young people's class.

Mabel Patricia, youngest daughter of Sister Mavel Canning, passed away following a short illness February 16. The funeral was conducted at Grant D. Miller's Parlors, and interment was at Evergreen Cemetery. Pastor Rushton officiated.

Beginning March 29 we plan to hold a week of special services to conclude Easter Sunday.

Bremerton, Washington

Elder and Sister Richard Baldwin arrived here early in the year and started a series of meetings. The first week Brother Baldwin preached to the Saints in a way much appreciated, bringing spiritual strength to all. Attendance during the second week was good, attention being given to missionary effort. These two workers helped us initiate the program of the church school, which, under the capable hands of Sister Cora Jones, is moving along. The children are eager to take part in our programs, and all are much interested.

Nearly all workers of the branch attended the institute in Seattle January 30 and 31 and February 1. Sister Jones and Brother Day were in Sister McDole's class on "You Can Learn to Teach"; Sisters Richard and Lundeen attended Sister Baldwin's class in "Handcraft." Since the institute, Brother Day has a class in teacher training, assisted by Sister Jones. The group meets from 6 to 7 o'clock each Sunday evening.

The Harmony Club, composed of women of the branch and their friends, meets twice monthly. At each meeting more nonmembers are present than the one before. Sister Richard, assisted by Sister Lundeen, teaches handcraft for an hour. The rest of the afternoon is occupied with a short business meeting, a program, and a social time.

Brother Baldwin was called here from Puyallup early in February, where he was holding meetings, to preach the funeral sermon of our aged Sister Molly Richmond. Though this sister was unable to attend services often, she was an inspiration to those who sought her in her home.

A party was sponsored by Sister Bernice Richard, superintendent of the young people's division, February 20, for all the young men and women of the branch.

Brother Lundeen, superintendent of the adult division, and Sister Day, assistant, are sponsoring a Saint Patrick's Day party.

Brentwood (Missouri) Branch

Much sickness has been in this branch of late. During February three babies were taken from our midst, and three families have been bereaved.

March 10 and 12 Brother W. O. Hand, of Kansas City, was present to give illustrated lectures on scenes from church history.

In the early part of February a play, "The Closing Day at Beanville School," was given, but because of weather conditions, attendance was not as large as had been expected. Sister Beatrice Hill directed the play, the cast being largely composed of girls of her class.

Some of our members, when they visit Saint Louis Branch, think how profitable a thing it would be if ways and means were had to present our message over the radio. Surely there is much to be done in this great city, and it offers promise of a strong branch.

We, too, have felt the business depression, some of our members being out of work. Nevertheless, we are hopeful of economic improvement.

For some time we have dreamed of the work of a missionary in this branch, but now, it occurs to us, that the general church, because of its present economic situation, can not afford to send us a helper. Missionary responsibility, therefore, falls on local members.

Independence

Stone Church

Pastor John F. Sheehy was the speaker at the eleven o'clock service Sunday morning, his theme being, "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me." Love and service for God are expressed in the things that we do for others, Elder Sheehy said.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Evan A. Fry, sang two anthems: "More Love to Thee, O Christ," by Speaks; and "The Woods and Every Sweet-smelling Tree," by West. Lilly Belle Allen, soprano, and J. Glenn Fairbanks, tenor, were soloists.

"Houses of God" was the title of an illustrated lecture given to the junior young people Sunday morning by Elder C. Ed. Miller who showed an excellent collection of temples and places of worship the world over from the tabernacle in the time of Moses to our own temple at Kirtland. The pastor was assisted by Elder C. B. Woodstock.

Elder Hubert Case spoke to the evening congregation on Bible proofs of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Two pleasing solos were sung by George Anway, tenor, now director of the Central Kansas City Church Choir.

No group of musicians in Independence is more active in church and community service than the Auditorium Orchestra, led by Orlando Nace. Last week was especially busy. On Sunday night, March 8, they gave at our church in Sugar Creek, Missouri, an hour concert preceding the sermon, contributing much in a musical way to the choir organization movement there. The following evening an organized class of North Kansas City Branch sponsored the orchestra in a program at the North Kansas City High School. The family banquet at the Auditorium Tuesday evening had as musical entertainers the Auditorium Orchestra. Thursday night found musicians and their instruments stowed in cars and on the road to Lexington, Missouri, where music was furnished for a play. It has taken hours of practice on the part of every member of the orchestra, and much forethought on the part of the untiring conductor to prepare the group to present a musical setting for so great a variety of programs.

Five hundred guests helped to make the family dinner last Tuesday evening one of the biggest banquets ever served in the Auditorium by the Laurel Club. Fathers, mothers, children, they came in groups small and large, happy to meet their friends, to hear the excellent program, and to eat the good food. Officers in charge thought it wise this year to combine the annual father and son and mother and daughter banquets, making one big event in the life of the community.

Recent meetings of the White Masque Players, the young people's Sunday afternoon group at the Auditorium, organized classes, units of the Parent Teacher Associations of Independence, the Stone Church Choir, the Wahdemna Choral Club, and other organizations have entertained and edified the Saints.

Second Church

Miss Jennie Willis and John Davis were married March 11. The bride is an active worker at Second Church, and Mr. Davis is also a member of the congregation. Although the wedding was not generally announced, many were present at the weekly prayer service of Group 15 to witness the ceremony. Brother Fields officiated.

Sister Rose Hart was recently married to Mr. Sheak.

A series of illustrated lectures on Book of Mormon subjects by Elder C. Ed. Miller, attracts a large crowd of members and friends each Sunday evening. Last Sunday night he presented the third of his series.

Morning speakers on Sunday in the last two weeks have been Elders John F. Sheehy and J. M. Robinson. Last Sunday morning there was music by a quartet of young people from Walnut Park.

Walnut Park

"What are we going to do with Jesus who is called Christ?" was the text taken by Elder H. Lyman Smith Sunday forenoon, March 15. A valuable missionary sermon on the Restoration was presented. A baby blessed at this service was Tessie Willowdean, daughter of Brother and Sister Carl Thomas, blessed by George F. Bullard and S. C. Smith.

In the evening Bishop A. Carmichael preached on organization of stewardships, and was invited back to continue on this subject the evening of March 22.

The juniors at 11 o'clock, supervised by Sister E. E. Moorman, enjoyed a program arranged by one of the Girl Scouts, Grace Willoughby, who had secured a popular story-teller from outside the district, Sister Ruth Cool. Marie Mose will secure numbers for the program for next Sunday. The supervisors are finding a variety of ways of putting these young people to work, thus relieving the older, busier workers.

At 6 o'clock Alden Russell, widely known as Ted Malone, radio announcer, talked to the class in the main auditorium on "Working in Radio as a Profession." Miss Myrtle Weber concluded her twenty-night course in "Methods." Walnut Park teachers feel sincerely indebted to Miss Weber for her devotion in so thoroughly preparing and presenting this interesting and practical series of lessons.

Beginning next Sunday at 6 o'clock Elder John F. Sheehy will give a ten-night course of instruction on "Church History and the Doctrine and Covenants," to which the whole congregation is invited. This also is a credit course for teachers who attend regularly.

Following the class hour March 22 there will be a half hour's concert by the Independence Chamber of Commerce Glee Club, beginning at 7 o'clock.

Englewood

President F. M. McDowell's theme thought Sunday morning was, "See, I have set an open door before you which no man can shut. Even though you have been weak, yet you have not denied my name." That there is a challenge for each of us he brought out by developing the statement, "The resources of God are promised to those who undertake the program of God." Our responsibility is to act. Our work is to build Zion the beautiful.

Englewood Saints have much for which to be thankful. There is a willingness on the part of many to do their share. Our big problem now is the need for a larger church building so that we can expand.

The Wednesday social service is becoming a great interest factor. Families bring their baskets at 6.30, and supper is followed by the social service.

Under their group leaders the women are busy.

Spring Branch

The garden committee for the Harvest Festival is busy with spring seeding plans.

Splendid sermons were delivered Sunday by Bishop B. J. Scott and Elder J. R. Lentell. Sister Corrinne French was present and sang a beautiful solo.

Among our sick there is improvement. Our aged Sister McClain was present Sunday for the first time in several months. The little daughter of Brother and Sister Ammon Essig is still confined to her home.

A Correction

An error which Herald editors are happy to correct, occurs in Centralia, Illinois, news, page 230, Saints' Herald, in the first sentence of the first paragraph. There we are informed that a four-week meeting had just closed in which four candidates were baptized. The number baptized was fourteen. Saints of this city are happy to have this large addition to their membership.

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan

A wonderful winter, no snow or severe weather, but bright, sunny days, has favored church undertakings in this region. Elder and Sister Ward L. Christy left by car February 27 to visit the Saints in the Glenellen District known as Daisy Hill Branch, where they gave what they called a "rapid fire chautauqua." They report an excellent time of entertainment, the creation of special interest, and good attendance.

District President E. L. Bowerman, of Shellbrook, took Brother Christy's place at Saskatoon. The sacramental service in the morning was marked by a spiritual atmosphere, and Brother Bowerman in his testimony exhorted the young people, and older ones, too, to come closer to God. In his evening sermon he stressed the fact that any attempt to improve the present social order must have as a basis of operation the gospel.

The gospel work in this far northern point is progressing under Pastor Ward L. Christy, and Sister Christy is director of the religious education movement. Classes are meeting each Sunday morning and Friday evening.

Our radio services continue each Sunday over Station C J H S or C F Q C at 1:30 p. m. Brother Christy's sermons and music by the choir are appreciated by many not of the church.

Sister C. E. Diggle has been seriously ill since the latter part of December. She is an efficient and willing worker and holds several offices in the branch. She has spent a number of weeks in the hospital with what physicians think is a nervous breakdown. However, she is now beginning to improve, and the Saints are praying that she will soon be well again.

The Christmas pageant, directed by Sister Christy, presented scenes of the birth of the Savior in an almost perfect setting of music, dramatization, and costumes. Friends who are not members of the church but assist with radio music and other programs, gave assistance. Four days later came the children's program and Christmas tree.

All Are Called to Sacrifice

Ladysmith, Wisconsin, March 13.—From week to week we have been noting in the Herald the serious position of the church. It is grievous to see this condition, and so I want to add my mite to the pleas of abler pens than mine, calling all the Saints over the world to rally to the cause of the Master.

Must we have our missionaries taken from the fields? Let us sacrifice to the last ounce of our ability rather than suffer men, whom the church sorely needs if it is to go forward, to be removed from the field. The Presidency would not put men in the field unless they were needed, so let us help in order that those who have already been released from active missionary service can soon be put back in the territories needing them.

In the World War we as a nation did without many things we liked that our country might win. Can we who have so many times declared our love for the church do less when we face so grave a problem?

There are many who do not now have the means to help a great deal, possibly any for a time, but there are enough who can help, at least a little, so that we can take the gospel to the world.

Here are some of the ways we can save and be able to give more to the cause of Christ. We can do without a cake or a pie sometimes and put the price of it away to send to the Bishop. We can forego candy, gum, and shows, saving our pennies and nickels that they may help. The women can alter last year's gowns and save the price of new ones. I am sure we can find enough who love the church to do this.

Let us all look about to find where we can sacrifice some things that are not absolutely necessary to our lives, that the work of the Lord need not stand still.

In these last days every reaper is needed in the harvest field of souls. Let all local men work also to assist in the gathering of the sheaves of the kingdom, but if we keep our missionaries we can do more. I intend to save all I can, and pray that we may rally to the standard.

We have a large family and can not do as much as we would like, but certainly we will do all we possibly can. We see our missionary only twice or three times a year, and life would be a wilderness here without his visits. Of course we may not lose our missionary; we sincerely hope not, but if we need our Brother Shakespeare, so do all others need their missionaries. Let us help them at any cost.

DORA STEEDE.

Rock Island Conference

A good increase in attendance, interest, unity, and spiritual development throughout the district, and nine baptisms since January were items in the report of District President E. R. Davis to the district conference which met at Rock Island Church February 28 and March 1. Four teacher-training accredited classes have been organized since November, and more are anticipated. During the past four months Brother Davis has labored in ten branches.

Visitors were present from many branches, and almost a full corps of district officers helped to make the conference a success. Apostle D. T. Williams, of Lamoni, Iowa, arrived Saturday evening and delivered some powerful sermons.

The Tri-Cities presented a varied program on Friday evening. There were readings, hymns, instrumental and vocal solos, numbers by the Moline Male Quintet, and the Gray family orchestra from Davenport. Then three Davenport girls presented a one-act play.

An inspirational prayer service and round table discussion were held Saturday morning. Topics considered were the envelope system, general finances, and problems of local concern. Organization in all lines of work was stressed.

The business session opened in charge of the district presidency. From the report of the district treasurer and bishop's agent the following items were gleaned: Received in tithes and offerings for the months from January to October, inclusive, a little more than $2,600; for district fund, $144.68; including the $150 loan made to Galesburg Branch, district expenditures total $273.52; balance on hand February 28, 1931, $425.05. The district publicity agent made a verbal report of his activities, and urged that those who wish to take advantage of the dollar rates on the new hymnbook be sure to have their orders in by April 1. Of the one hundred and five members of the district priesthood, fifty-four have made their annual report.

Apostle D. T. Williams preached his first sermon Saturday evening to a large congregation. Choosing his text from Deuteronomy 2:3, "Ye have compassed this mountain long enough: turn you northward," he made the application to modern Israel also seeking the promised land but tarrying too long at the mountains of difficulty. The task of establishing Zion is a challenge to all the courage, strength, and endurance we possess plus the vision and dauntless faith of Columbus, who cried "Sail on!" when all seemed lost.

The Sunday morning church school was conducted after the usual order, D. T. Williams addressing the young people and E. R. Davis the men's class. A spiritual experience of sacrament and the renewal of our covenant followed.

In the afternoon Brother Williams described in detail the action of the late Joint Council and the distressing conditions which made it necessary to withdraw so many of our missionary force from their fields of labor and to discontinue certain departments of the church. We mentally resolve that nothing we can do shall be left undone to relieve this situation and to reinstate our church in its former place and make the upward move secure.

The conference approved the recommendation that L. A. White be ordained to the office of elder. Elders D. T. Williams and E. R. Davis performed this rite during the sacramental service, at which time Lon Mercer was also ordained under the hands of L. W. Stiegel and Edward Jones to the office of deacon. Both of these men have performed creditable work, and will serve the Master with faithfulness.

"God's Responsibility to Us and God's Response to Us" was the theme presented by Brother Williams at the closing conference service. Then the visitors departed feeling appreciative of all those who helped to make the conference enjoyable: Brother Davis whose plans and supervision made it possible and practicable; Sister Holmes, in charge of the music; the Rock Island Women's Department which served the meals; the Saints who entertained the visitors in their homes; the Moline Choir which furnished anthems; and all who contributed to the programs. Especially do we appreciate the contribution of service of Brother Williams.

Denver, Colorado

Eastern Colorado District held its semiannual conference in Denver February 21 and 22, bringing many visitors from all over the district. A priesthood institute was held February 20 and 21 in connection with the conference by Elders E. B. Hull, H. E. Winegar, and Glaude A. Smith. On Sunday afternoon ten people were baptized, three of whom are now members of Denver Branch: Fredna Marie Briggs, Clark M. Davis, and William F. Warner.

Denver Saints have been saddened by the death of Brother Thomas O. McCaslin March 5, after an illness of more than a year. The funeral was held March 9 in charge of Pastor Glaude A. Smith. Brother McCaslin was born April 24, 1883, at Donnellson, Illinois, and united with the church in Denver in 1917. He leaves to mourn, his wife, Phoebe McCaslin, and daughter, Fern.

The Young People's Drama Club is rehearsing a play to be given March 31. The combined choirs are preparing a cantata for Easter Sunday. E. W. Fishburn is directing them. Sister Myrtle Smith is directing the young Thespians.

District President E. B. Hull, Missionary H. E. Winegar, and Apostle E. J. Gleazer spent a few days here early in March and were present March 8. Brother Gleazer gave two good sermons.

Group No. 1 of the adult division held a social for the branch March 5. A short play, "The Wrong Baby," was given by the members of this group.

San Antonio, Texas

First Branch, Rockwood Court and South Cherry Streets

Elder George H. Wixom has just closed a profitable two-week series of meetings in this branch. Throughout the meetings the speaker was blessed with a degree of the Spirit. In spite of unfavorable weather conditions and flu, attendance increased until the closing night. We are thankful that Brother Wixom has been in our midst, for he did much to revive the ambitions of the members, as well as to convince nonmembers of the truth of the gospel.

The Southwestern Texas district conference convened February 22 with Second San Antonio Branch, with good attendance and spirit. R. E. Miller tendered his resignation as district president, and E. L. Henson was unanimously chosen to fill his unexpired term; J. A. Robinson also tendered his resignation as director of religious education, and this office was unanimously given to Sister Flossie Waite. While we regret that circumstances compelled these brothers to retire from district activities, we think those who have been chosen to fill the vacancies are with the cooperation of the members capable of carrying on the work.

An illustrated lecture by J. A. Robinson, on the growth of the Auditorium at Independence, deeply interested the members. The scenes of construction in the various stages made us grateful that we have been able to erect a building adequate to meet the needs of the growing conference crowds.

Under the new church school program the women are starting study work. They use The Seven Laws of Teaching by Gregory. They have named their organization the Bluebonnet Club. The bluebonnet is our state flower. Sister Elinor Priebe is president, and Sister Evva Richardson secretary and treasurer.

A visit from Apostle J. A. Gillen is expected in the near future.

Mallard, Iowa

It was our pleasure not long ago to hear a nonmember who had been attending our services say that she had enjoyed the services and thought the Saints a sincere people. This was Mrs. J. A. Carmichael, of Primghar, Iowa, who visited at the home of Brother and Sister Carmichael a couple of weeks.

Under the new program of the church school this branch progresses. All meetings are helpful, and visitors from other cities are often with us. Our young people, busy with school activities, are not always permitted to be present at the mid-week meeting, but they are found at the church on Sunday morning. Our interest is theirs, and we enjoy working together.

Detroit, Michigan

From Detroit's Beacon Light

A complete missionary survey of the city is being made. A. E. Boos, Leo Willsie, Fred Miller, and Floyd A. Moore have driven with Hubert Case, city missionary, to visit many homes, and local priesthood are doing splendid work. One half day's drive recently resulted in the location of twenty-two prospects for church membership.

The missions are doing well. Roseville has been active. Brightmoor is doing well, and a new mission is now open at 306 State Fair Avenue in charge of Brothers Leland and Bartholomew. About two hundred Saints and nonmembers are interested in this recent opening.

A general check of the work being done in the various congregations in Detroit—First Church, East Side, River Rouge, Wyandotte, Roseville, Brightmoor, and the new mission—shows that the priesthood and teachers and officers are stressing home influence, prayer, faith, music, and education as elements in the cultivation of sound characters. Local men are active in preaching the gospel to Saints and friends.

The Board of Stewards pridefully calls attention to the fact that the Women's Department has in the past year given to the mortgage fund account a sum of more than fourteen hundred and one dollars. Diligently the women have worked to add to their fund for this purpose, and the branch is grateful.

Throughout the city the junior church movement is achieving good results. Musical development is encouraged in our young people and children. The members are friendly and often meet in social functions. Though there has been considerable illness during the winter, the members are ob-servant of the hours of worship.

The city Patroness Society spent February 2 and 3 at the church, sewing for the Independence Sanitarium. A business meeting bore fruit in the decision to have a Bunco Party to raise money for the society. The women are also planning to give a play.

Edmonton, Alberta

Our long-expected district president, Elder E. E. Eliason, has at last arrived after much negotiation with the Canadian immigration authorities. If all the immigrants Canada admits are of the caliber of Brother Eliason, this will be a fortunate country.

The evening of February 22 Brother Eliason spoke to a house crowded with a record attendance. Many drove in to Sunday school and service that day as far as sixty miles. Members were present from Westlock, Pibroch, Bon Accord, and other points.

Already Brother Eliason has won the hearts of the members. He has gone to Ribstone, Michigan, Branch, and other points needing his help, but expects soon to return to Edmonton.

Attendance at recent services has grown, and the new interest shown is encouraging. Our debts are all paid, and branch finances are on a good footing.

A splendid sacramental hour was experienced March 1, everyone being spiritually blessed.

It is our prayer that the good work will continue everywhere, and that the honest-hearted will open their souls to the light of truth.

Minot, North Dakota

A charter member and faithful Saint of this branch has been called away by death, Sister Maude McElwain, wife of Pastor Warren McElwain. The call came to Sister McElwain at her home in Lansford, March 3, after an illness of two months. The funeral was held from the Lansford Methodist Church, Elder Charles J. Smith, of Sioux City, Iowa, in charge, assisted by the Reverend C. Keplar. The service was one of deep sadness at the passing of one who for thirty years had been a resident of the branch and who was active in the cause of her Lord. Her unswerving faith, high ideals, and Christian life in the community where she lived and reared a family of three sons and one daughter, have demonstrated and will continue to demonstrate what it means to be a Latter Day Saint. The family has the sympathy of many friends.

Winter here has been marvelous, and good health has been the rule. Regular church services have continued.

District President Charles J. Smith has made us several visits, the most recent being March 8, at which time he delivered a sermon to the members which commanded the close attention of everyone. He spoke of tithing and the redemption and building of Zion. This branch wishes to continue in service to the Lord and live nearer his ideals.

Ottumwa, Iowa

Fourth and Washington Streets

March 12.—Sermons of two visiting members of the ministry helped this congregation in the month of February, Apostle D. T. Williams, and Elder Stephen Robinson, of Des Moines. Illness prevented the pastor from carrying out his full schedule of pulpit work during this month, and a number of his congregation also suffered from the flu.

The women's club has had a busy month. From their activities the women raised eighty dollars.

Attendance at services has been good. The number attending the midweek prayer services has grown, and a fine spirit is felt.

The adult division of the church school sponsored a surprise birthday party February 12 for Sister Richards, a member of the women's club.

The Women's Relief Corps presented the branch a silk American Flag the morning of February 22. Sister A. G. Erksine, chairman of the organization, made the presentation, and the pastor accepted. This patriotic service was well attended, there being special music and a sermon by the pastor.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

Sunday was a lovely day, even though there was a cold, biting March wind, and at the call of the church school bell the major part of the attendance was on time. Sister John Isaacks sang a solo, "The Good Shepherd," by Van de Water.

At the service period the choir, under the direction of George Anway, sang the anthem, "God So Loved the World," by Stainer. Elder Cyril E. Wight was the speaker of the hour.

President F. M. McDowell occupied the pulpit at the evening service, giving an illustrated lecture on the theme, "I Have Seen Jesus," speaking particularly on "Jesus in the Art and Architecture of Europe." These lectures will continue throughout a period of several Sunday evenings. Special music was by the octet chorus.

Despite the handicap caused by the depression that has swept the country, Central people are working vigorously on their church debt. The Business Women's Club is sponsoring a playlet to be presented by the Graceland Players on April 3, the proceeds of which will go to the building fund. They are also taking orders for hosiery, salted peanuts, and engaging in various activities in an effort to be of some assistance in liquidating the indebtedness.

On Thursday evening a large number of the membership of Central gathered at the Armory, at Thirty-seventh and Main, to witness the basketball game between Central and Fourth Kansas City. There was some fine work by both teams. The final score was 43 to 29 in favor of Central team. This was a challenge game, Fourth Kansas City having defeated Central in the series. Final score for the Central team is the loss of one game to Graceland. All other games they played they won. Brother William Ely, coach and manager, has given untiringly of his effort and time to bring the team to a high standard of efficiency.

The choir is working on the cantata, "Olivet to Calvary," to be rendered on Easter Sunday evening.

George Mesley, who has been confined to the Sanitarium for the past week, is reported to be improved. Sister St. John, who is confined at the Saint Joseph Hospital, expects to be able to return to her home sometime during the week. Sister Fred Gerber, who has been ill for several weeks, was able to attend service yesterday; also Brother Fred Wamsly, who suffered a severe injury from an automobile accident.

A representative group of the stake priesthood gave attention to the fourth chapter of Cope's Religious Education in the Home, at the regular monthly meeting of the ministry. Practical application of the lesson was made by Elder C. E. Wight, the instructor, to the stake family on loyalty. The meeting was held in the Plus Ultra room at Central Church.

Argentine Church

Elder G. T. Richards preached his farewell sermon in Kansas City Stake last Sunday evening at our church, using as his theme the song, "I Would Be True." Brother Richards has been transferred to other fields, and will go first to Ottumwa, Iowa, then to Far West Stake. His companion in the stake work, Elder Harry H. Sevy, has been released. Both changes were made necessary by the retrenchment program of the general church.

On Sunday morning local problems formed the basis of the sermon by Pastor Roy E. Brown.

Gladstone Church

A play by the young people, "The Hour Glass," February 15, was followed by a sermon by Elder H. J. Bootman, from Malvern Hill. This play was given in the contest at Central Church February 23.

The O. B. K's had Bishop C. A. Skinner and Stake Director of Religious Education George Mesley as speakers March 1.

The women met at the home of Sister A. R. Moore March 5 and discussed plans for the year's work. The next meeting will be held at the home of Sister L. C. Connelly March 19.

Attendance on March 8 was smaller than usual, due to the heavy snowstorm.

Quindaro Church

Through the cottage meetings conducted on Friday afternoon by the stake missionaries, Brothers Richards and Sevy, several nonmembers have become interested in the gospel. Brother Levi Gamet has consented to speak at these services.

Pre-Easter services will be held at the church from March 29 to April 5 at 7.45 each evening.

Recent visiting speakers have been Elder C. B. Woodstock and Bishop C. A. Skinner. Local men occupying the morning hour have been Edward Baker, Charles Scriviner, Albert Hallier.

Attendance at the March sacramental service was unusually good. Many were the expressions of gratitude for the gospel, and a marked degree of the Spirit was present. The Saints were admonished to be diligent and to love one another. The infant daughter of Sister Edith and Mr. Frank Munden was blessed by Elders Emmet Palmer and H. A. Higgins, and given the name Lurella Mae.

The prayers of the members are asked in behalf of Leonard Hawkins and Marie Meiers. Both are critically ill.

Death of Sister Elvina Richmond

Papeete, Tahiti, March 2.—Saints in America who knew Sister Elvina Richmond during her stay in the United States while taking nurse's training in the Independence Sanitarium, and later practicing her profession, will be grieved to learn of her passing from this life. Her death occurred at the Leprosarium at Orofara, Tahiti, a little over a week ago. The body was interred in the cemetery there February 22.

"This is a sad blow for the family," writes Brother R. J. Farthing, "which less than two months before lost the husband and father, Frank F. Richmond. His death occurred December 30.

Silver Linings

By Mary E. Gillin

Back of every shadow falling
 There's the sun in skies of blue,
 Giving clouds their silver lining,
 Though they may look black to you.

Storm and rain—an untold blessing—
 Desert sands greet shine alone;
 Sweeter grows the fruits that nourish,
 Where both shine and storms are known.

Pain locks arms and walks with Pleasure;
 Never far apart are they—
 Had not Love first given you treasure,
 Waiting Pain outside must stay.

Useful, then, both calm and tempest—
 Shine and darkness, as they're sent—
 Never artist painted picture
 But both light and shade were blent.

Certificates Mailed Local Officers for Delivery

Hereafter the certificates of blessing and baptism issued by the Department of Statistics will be forwarded to the local branch, stake, or district secretaries for delivery. They will be sent out with the regular monthly branch mail instead of being mailed directly to the parties concerned. This will mean a slight delay in some cases, but on the other hand will enable the branch officers to make contacts where they might not otherwise. Members of the priesthood performing blessings and baptisms are asked to advise the parents and individuals concerned that the certificates will be delivered by the local officers. This rule is effective regarding all reports received in this office after March 1.

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATISTICS,

By C. L. Olson.

Conference Notices

Wheeling District will hold its annual spring conference with Bellaire Branch April 4 and 5, which takes in Easter Sunday. A special order of business is the passing on the new district by-laws as revised by the committee, and this will be the opening feature at 2.30 Saturday. The rest of the conference will be devoted to educational and entertaining features, including an illustrated lecture Saturday evening and possibly Sunday evening. Sacramental service is expected to be held in the forenoon, and Sunday afternoon will likely be occupied with an institute session with short addresses by prominent workers. Apostle Clyde F. Ellis and L. F. P. Curry of the Presiding Bishopric are booked to be present. Come and learn the problems before the general church.—Samuel A. Martin, district secretary.

Central Illinois District will hold a district conference at Taylorville, Illinois, Saturday and Sunday, March 28 and 29. Apostle John Garver is expected to attend.

Our Departed Ones

JACK.—George Jack was born August 11, 1850. He lived for sixty years in Haynes Township, Michigan. Died March 7, 1931, at his home. Surviving are his aged wife with whom he lived fifty-three years. To this union were born seven children, of whom three sons and two daughters survive, also two sons by a former marriage. He was baptized a member of the church thirty-five years ago, and was a true believer of the gospel. He was a friend to all and will be greatly missed, a generous host to the ministry. Although isolated from church privileges, he kept in close touch with the activities of the church. The funeral service was conducted from the home March 12, 1931, the sermon by Elder Summerfield of Tawas City, Michigan.

BOREN.—May E. Drury was born in Albuquerque, New Mexico, October 4, 1886. She married Will A. Boren June 20, 1911, at San Bernardino, California, and was baptized in the same city by her husband January 1, 1919, and confirmed by Elders Arthur H. Mills and A. E. Jones. She served that branch as clerk and taught in the Sunday school. She was a true Saint, an example of faith, love, and patience. Leaves besides her husband, three daughters: Mazie, Gertrude, and Gracie; one sister, Mrs. Otto Beusch, of Silver Creek, Washington; one niece, May Beusch, and one nephew, O. W. Beusch. The funeral was held at Fissel's Funeral Parlors, Chehalis, Washington. The sermon was by Elder Orville L. Oppelt, pastor of Centralia Branch.

SNIVELY.—Hugh Nephi Snively was born near Pittsfield, Illinois, April 9, 1845. He lived at Keokuk, Iowa, from 1869 until 1882 when he moved to the vicinity of Lamoni, Iowa. The last thirteen years he lived at Burlington, Iowa. Passed away at Lamoni, February 7, 1931, after a critical illness of only a few hours. November, 1870, he married Miss Ellen Wilson, and to them were born five children: Bertha, Charles, George, Myrtle, all of Lamoni; and Olive who died in 1907. He lost his companion by death in 1910, and in 1917 was married to Mrs. Margaret Wright, of Burlington, Iowa, who died September 26, 1930. He was baptized at Montrose, Iowa, in July, 1867, by Elder J. H. Lake; ordained to the office of priest at Keokuk, Iowa, in June, 1869; and to the office of elder at Montrose, in March, 1878. He was a man of strong faith, confident in the final triumph of the church. Is survived by two sons, two daughters, three grandchildren, three brothers, and a number of other relatives. Funeral services were held at the home February 19, Elder W. E. Prall preaching the sermon.

The Revised Budget

From the above figures we have omitted an item of $20,000 from both 1930 and 1931 lists, representing the amount of real estate given to the church as a tithe or offering. As this form of payment does not constitute usable cash funds, the amount has been excluded from both income and outgo. This also holds true in regard to an item of approximately $51,000 covering offerings to elders from Saints and friends deducted from the 1930 list of appropriations and not included in 1931. The budget therefore shows what will involve actual cash expense decided upon for the year 1931.

A comparison of the totals for 1930 and 1931 is interesting and illustrates the policy of economy which has been adopted. This will show a total reduction of $323,000. The actual difference is less than that, as no money was set aside against the retirement and allowance reserves set up in the 1930 budget. Furthermore, it must be borne in mind that the budget once adopted must be put into effect, and, unfortunately for immediate results, this can not be done within a few days. It will be noticed that some departments have been discontinued, and the appropriations of others severely reduced.

What amount is to be available for debt reduction after the budget, as reduced by the Board of Appropriations has been provided for, is of special importance. Last year, the total cash income approximated $426,000. On the basis of a budget of about $394,000, this would leave for debts about $32,000, assuming 1931 income will equal that for last year. This is not enough, and administratively we are endeavoring to reduce the operating expenses to a point well under the budget allowed by the Board of Appropriations, making more money available for debt reduction. We consider it imperative to save money in operating every department, and for example have already achieved results, with Graceland College, the offices of the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric, and general salary reductions. The cooperation extended by those concerned has been whole-hearted, because all are most earnest in their desire to attain the end to which we are committed.

The urgency to save for debt payment is strong, for considerable has been carried over from 1930 operations which can be met only as current income or sale of unneeded assets make it possible. To illustrate (and until the balance sheet is ready we can not vouch for the complete accuracy of the figures), past due 1930 allowances now amount to about $32,000, and practically no 1931 allowances have so far been paid. In other words, $33,000 paid on allowances since January 1, 1931, were on 1930 accumulations. Some current debts of other kinds that can not be postponed will require payment, and there are other liabilities such as ministerial obligations previously incurred to be considered. Total interest requirements, listed in the budget, amount to $80,500. Every cent of that which can be saved by discharging the debt it refers to will be just so much more to use towards the normal work of the church. Emphasis upon reduction of debt from current income is being made above, because the liquidation of unneeded assets for that purpose, necessarily will be slow.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By L. F. P. CURRY.

A religion which is to be real to men must offer to them a religious interpretation of the activities in which most of their life is spent and of the ends to which their energies are in the main directed. In the Christian view, the good things in secular civilization are God's gifts and are to be received thankfully at his hand. They should call forth our worship. We need today a church that sanctifies the values of secular civilization by lifting them up into worship, a church which seeks to make all genuinely creative activity consciously, what it is unconsciously, an act of worship to God the Father.—

Comments from Letters

Brother Newman Wilson, who has long been on the list of appointees, but who was released recently, in response to our letter of notification writes from Jonesport, Maine:

"I want to assure you, Brother Smith, that as far as my strength and time will permit, I shall continue to serve the church in this branch and district. In the annual town election here today I was chosen to be first selectman of Jonesport. This gives me a small sum of money per year which will help me out. My prayers are for the church and for you personally, that God will bless with light and strength as it shall be needed.

"I shall do all that I possibly can to encourage the Saints to do their full duty along every line of church activity. You can depend on me to do my level best for the church."

Such a response would be expected by all who know the fine, loyal spirit of Brother Wilson. He loves the church.

Brother G. P. Levitt, from the western coast, writes of his first impressions in learning of the reduction of missionary appointments. Of course he was depressed, though he himself was not released; but he makes his readjustment. He writes:

"Brother Smith, I want to assure you that you have my sympathy in these weeks that I feel are a trial to you as you endeavor to make the readjustments that are necessary. You have my confidence, and I pledge you my support, for I sincerely desire that you shall succeed.

"While I feel that I have been carrying on about to the limit of my strength the past years, I feel that I can do a little more in these times that seem to challenge our best."

Those words help, and the spirit to "do a little more in these times" reflects the spirit of true loyalty and devotion to a loved cause.

A business man of known ability and success says:

"I want to go on record formally that I am much pleased to hear of the resolution you have made regarding a number of the financial affairs of the organization. I firmly believe that you are on the right track, and I hope that you will succeed in putting over your program."

Brother E. J. Gleazer, who has gone out with strong determination to meet the situation with cheerfulness and hard work, writes from Denver:

"Sunday morning I had fine liberty in preaching, and it was well received. In the evening the building was crowded, and I preached as I seldom do. I wish I could repeat elsewhere what I said that night. One of our best members said, 'And yet we ask, "When is the endowment coming?"' The Saints believe we are on the right track, and are optimistic. I am quite happy in my work. All the brethren that I have talked with are behind you in this new program. They will back you to the limit."

More encouraging words, those!

Brother D. T. Williams writes after seeing one of the released men:

"I had a talk with Brother and Sister B—— yesterday concerning the fact of their release from appointment. I want to say that they take it like the good sports they are. Brother B—— said: 'Brother Williams, I wish you to know that I feel that in the work of the church I have found my place in life, and when the time comes that the church feels it can use me again I will hold myself in readiness to answer its call.'"

A fine spirit, that, and quite in consonance with that which has prompted service from an appreciation of divinely imposed responsibilities.

Brother James E. Bishop writes after having had a conversation with one who was for the time unduly depressed, and hence was pessimistic:

"I think the future is purposely hidden from many; and as it unfolds it will try to the limit. Those who stand up will constitute elements to lift the church to a higher level."

Yes, we will be tried. We have been repeatedly so warned. And rightly so; for only a tried people can carry our burdens and do our tasks. But the trying time is onerous, and only divine grace will enable us to pass through.

A business man from the East says:

"I have no desire to add another burden to your ever-increasing mail, but when I read the new financial program in the Herald I could not but express my approval. While there came a feeling of sadness, there came also a feeling of security. I have been dealing with business problems in a small way for ten years, and yet it took ten years to learn this one thing, that we can not operate with full success on an anticipated or probable income. For a number of years my main thought was one of expansion; more business and larger tithing, but giving little thought to the length and effect of a prolonged depression. I am thankful for the lesson this depression has taught me."

Another long-time missionary recently released says:

"I have just read our new church policy and can place my hearty approval on it, and will pledge my support to bring about the fulfillment of the entire document.

"My heart is in the gospel and still burns with the old missionary fire of days of the past. The happiest days of my life were spent preaching the gospel, and if God will bless me with health and respectable clothing I'll do all I can to help carry the angel's message to the honest in heart, and put my shoulder under the load that is so heavy for you brethren to carry. May God freely bless you all and give you faith and power of endurance till the goal is reached."

We hand these extracts to Herald readers feeling that good will come from these expressions of determined loyalty and faith. The members of the council faced their task with similar spirit, with the good of the church constantly in view.

With an eye single to the glory of God, we shall still move forward.

F. M. S.

First Things First

This work began in prayer and repentance.

Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another. . . . The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.—James 5:16.

Humble yourselves and continue in prayer unto him.—Alma 16:28.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God.—James 1:5.

The title to this editorial is not original with me. Brother Oliver McDowell used it in the Herald some time ago. It seems too good a title to pass out of circulation. It is my desire and purpose to make this series of articles affirmative and constructive. To be sure, when we affirm a truth incidentally, all things in conflict with it are denied or negated, but that is not the fault of the affirmation.

The theory that we discover truth by study and investigation leads us forward to new truths, but the associated and even more important theory of Latter Day Saints that God guides us in our search for truth causes us to revere and hold to the ancient truths long ago revealed. Certain truths have been revealed that are termed fundamental or foundational. It is God's way to build upon a sure foundation. He who abandons such foundation builds on the sand. We should have the "open mind" for new ideas dear to science, but by no means a mind closed to the eternal truths of divine revelation. Rather should we have retentive minds, obedient to the commandment, "That which thou hast, hold fast till I come."

What are the things that are first or primary in importance to this church? How did our work have its inception? In the beginning, Joseph Smith was found seeking God in prayer. The commandment, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him," is just as vital today and just as primary as it was in 1820. Joseph Smith was not found upon the streets in idle conversation, neither passing from door to door with vagrant rumors. He was found taking himself to God in prayer. Thus this work began. The Lord revealed himself and revealed his Son, making the statement, "This is my Son, hear ye Him." This work had its beginning in prayer and revelation.

Even after this experience, as was quite human, Joseph became careless over a period of time, and then he was found seeking God again, not only in prayer but with repentance. He did not waste his time attempting to place the blame upon others or running about in the neighborhood finding fault with others and excusing himself. With deep repentance and in humility he went to the Lord in prayer. Thus the church had its beginning. Under that spirit it came forth—the spirit of repentance and of prayer. Those things yet remain among the things that are first.

It is a time now for us to seek the Lord in prayer. It is a time for us to seek him, when necessary, with repentance. If during the prosperous and easy times that have been upon earth we have become careless and indifferent, let us repent. If we have been lifted up in pride or vain ambitions, let us repent. If we have judged each other harshly and have been quarrelsome with, and contemptuous of the brethren, if we have slandered them or misjudged them or been bitter toward them, let us repent. If we have withheld tithes or offerings or service that belonged to the Lord, let us repent. If we have done the things that we should not have done or left undone the things that we should have done, let us repent. If we have divided our allegiance and diverted it in any degree from the church or put anything between us and the commandment, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God," let us repent. If it is necessary so to do that we may

THE REVIEWER'S PAGE

Liquor and the Automobile

Speaking of automobile accidents a friend observed the other day, "What a terrible condition we would have if the saloons were to open again!"

The condition would truly be terrible. One of the most dangerous combinations in the world is that of liquor and the automobile. Even the smallest amounts of alcohol make a driver less dependable, and the average quantities consumed by those who drink make them a peril on the road.

In the old days the drunken driver had only a horse. The animal could generally be relied on to have horse sense, even if his owner did not. The horse could keep in the middle of the road. If he lost his head he never ran much more than twenty-five or thirty miles an hour, and he could not keep it up for a great distance. Horses did not kill many people, even when their drivers were drunk.

Nowadays few people drive horses. It might be said that the country is losing its horse sense, which was a strong safety factor. Instead, drunken men are permitted to drive cars that will do ninety miles an hour. If they get caught driving while intoxicated, there are various penalties. If the saloon returned, it would be a common thing for intoxicated persons to drive, instead of an illegal act as it is now.

Most horses need a furious whipping to make them run dangerously. Few drunkards are capable of administering that kind of whipping while intoxicated. With a car it is only necessary to exert a slight pressure on a little button to send a car up to sixty or seventy-five miles an hour. The intoxicated person, with diminished muscle control, with reduced nerve sensitiveness and befuddled reason, is in no position to know when he is pushing the button down too far. If he only shears off a telephone pole or reaches a convenient ditch, society is rid of another menace as the undertaker does his duty. But when a car goes weaving down the highway, it forces sober drivers into the ditches and ends by killing innocent persons.

The possibility is easy to imagine. If prohibition were abolished, the saloon would be reopened. With the open saloon the number of drinkers would be increased. Drinkers will and do drive, and drive dangerously. As bad as the record of the automobile is for slaughter of innocent persons, it would be many times worse with the return of liquor.

Christian people will consider these things as they go to the polls to vote on candidates of "wet" inclinations.

The Quest for Peace

The path to peace is crossed by many obstructions. Fear of foreign aggression, race suspicion and hatred, economic competition, and the greed of the armament makers all stand in the way of our attaining peace. Every nation, too, has numbers of people who believe in an imperialistic kind of expansion and aggrandizement, even for democracies. These people, many of them with the best of intentions, with their highly developed notions of patriotism, also delay the coming of peace.

There is one thing, of course, more important than peace: it is security. This ideal, like that of peace, seems difficult of attainment. Definite moves toward world peace must be accompanied, or even preceded, by dependable assurances of security. Nations can not be blamed for refusing to throw away the old means of protection, no matter how bad and expensive they may be, until new protections are established.

It is easy to understand why humanity longs for peace most earnestly in time of war: then they need it most. But the world is like the improvident farmer who could not repair his roof in rainy weather, and didn't need it when the weather was dry. Eternal vigilance is the price of peace, as well as of liberty.

During the World War men thought and spoke much of Jesus, who was called the Prince of Peace. It would be well for the future of the world if men thought and spoke more of him and his teachings now.

Moves for peace are largely concentrated on the effort to abolish combat. Combat is not the cause of the trouble: it is the effect of a deeper wrong. The great thing that needs to be remedied is the troubled mind and the darkened spirit of man. Only Christianity can bring peace to the troubled human race. When men's hearts are changed we can have cessation of combat, and then peace. Even the cynics tell us that we can not have it before. L. L.

Lift Up the Standard

By R. S. Budd

Go through, go through the gates; . . . cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people.—Isaiah 62: 10.

When I was a boy, we played a game in which we chose a standard bearer. The strongest, most active boy was usually chosen for this place. His mission was to lead out with some particular stunt, and each boy of the gang was to follow in his regular turn, performing the same feat in precisely the same manner. Three trials were given, but a failure the third time meant expulsion from the game.

Life is a great game, in which a standard is necessary. Jesus voluntarily accepted the position, and at the request of his Father came to earth to demonstrate his ability to function. We often hear the expression, "Jesus came to earth to preach the gospel," which is true; but the great object of his coming was to demonstrate his proposition. He came to establish a standard of living that would give men life—"more abundant life."

When Jehovah sent Isaiah out as his ambassador, he pointed out four things necessary for his development and success. First, "Go through the gates." Do not wait for others to influence your actions; be a leader. Second, "Cast up a highway." Make it possible for others to follow in the way you go. Third, "Gather out the stones." Be your brother's keeper. Try to eliminate, for your brother, the difficulties you encountered. Fourth, "Lift up a standard." Those who come after you will need a method of measuring themselves to determine their progress or fitness.

A standard is that which is established by a sovereign power as a rule or measure by which others are to be adjusted. Jesus was fully qualified to establish a standard, since he was the Son of God, the King of Glory. Paul, in urging the Ephesian saints on to perfection, asked them to measure up to "the stature of the fullness of Christ." Paul was speaking, not to the rich or the poor, not to the high or the low, but to all classes. This standard is usable by the carpenter, the machinist, the laborer, and the man of business. It is for the employer as well as the employee, and is to be used on week days as well as on Sunday.

In the United States, as in all other countries, we have standards of weight, ounces, pounds, and tons; we have standards of measurement, inches, feet, yards, rods, and miles. These standards apply in New York, California, and Ohio alike. Without standards it would be impossible to carry on business or exchange in a systematic way. The standard Jesus gave to the world did not establish tables of weights and measures for exchange. His standard had to do with the attitudes and relationships of men toward each other while engaged in using these standards.

The Standard of Jesus

To use the standard of Jesus efficiently, it is necessary for us to keep in mind the fact that his message had to do with this present world and not some imaginary state, set off in the future. While he dealt primarily with spiritual life, he demonstrated by application the effectiveness of his standard in the everyday affairs of men. Jesus sought to place his standard in the heart of every man, so that he might have it close at hand to determine his position or standing without appealing to others. This would eliminate the jealousy and faultfinding indulged in so generally today.

"Nothing is easier than faultfinding; no talent, no self-denial, no brains, no character are required to set up in the grumbling business," says Robert West. Quite often faultfinding is confused with criticism. A faultfinder is a nuisance, but a critic is a valuable asset to society. A faultfinder complains and snarls, contending the thing you are doing is wrong, and leaves you there. The critic points out not only your error, but the cause, and a way of correcting it. It is one thing to find fault with an employer for methods used in his factory, and another to offer methods to replace them which will bring returns on the investment. It is one thing to find fault with an employee for putting out inferior work, and another to show him how to produce a perfect pattern.

The Standard of the World

The Apostle Paul was a critic, not a faultfinder. In his second letter to the Corinthian saints, a number of times he calls their attention to their failure. In the tenth chapter he points out their unwillingness to measure themselves by the measure or standard "which God hath distributed," and the fact that they measured themselves by themselves and compared themselves among themselves, as the cause of their failure. Their actions were determined by those of the persons with whom they associated, instead of using the standard set up by Jesus. Rather than each man striving for perfection in his work, he was contented to say, "My work is as near perfect as the fellow's who works next to me," and instead of turning out a fair number of pieces according to his strength and ability, each one took care not to turn out more than the regular day called for.

Paul's criticism is applicable to the spirit of the present age. Here is an illustration: One time I purchased my little girl her first pair of galoshes. A day or two later she came home from school with only the bottom buckle fastened. "Can't you buckle your galoshes, Maxine?" I asked. "Yes." "Didn't you have time to buckle them?" "Yes." "Do you like them unbuckled better?" "Yes." "Are they more comfortable?" "No." "Do you think they look nicer?" "No." "Then why do you wear them that way?" "All the rest of the kids wear them that way, daddy." Unbuckled galoshes are not particularly offensive to me, if the ladies like to wear them that way, but this analyzes the actions of men and women in society, in business, in the shop, on the street, and in all walks of life. Their course is not a well-defined and thought-out proposition; they do not have a standard by which to measure their acts. They are measuring themselves by themselves and comparing themselves among themselves.

The Herd

When I was starting out in life for myself, as a young man, I started a bank account. A friend a few years my senior, who was earning a larger salary than I, expressed surprise that I should save money from my small income, and assured me that he could not save from his. Today that friend is receiving five thousand dollars a year and is still without a savings account. His alibi is that as his salary increased his associations changed, and the change called for greater expenditures. When he received one thousand dollars a year, he traveled with a thousand-dollar crowd. Since he gets five thousand a year he travels with a five-thousand-dollar crowd. According to his statement, after paying his rent, lodge dues, club dues, etc., made necessary by his associates, he is poorer than when he received one thousand dollars a year. This man is not a leader, he is a follower, just one of the common herd. He does not have a standard; he measures himself by others. He is not the kind of a man the world needs and God chooses. God chooses men who will go through the gate and lift up a standard for the people, even though they must travel alone for a time.

"My conscience does not trouble me," is the oft-repeated phrase. Conscience is a creature of education. It can be trained to do whatever you desire it to do. There are two kinds of conscience to be avoided, the brittle and the elastic. The brittle kind breaks off quickly; is self-righteous, suggests burying your talent, and condemns without investigation everything which has not been proved to its own satisfaction. The elastic conscience, which for convenience' sake will stretch to most any length desired, is the more prevalent today. First, it is an auto ride until late at night; next, a stop at the road house; then a dance at the road house; and later, a drink and disgrace. Each time the conscience is stretched to accommodate the new experience, and finally, as Paul puts it, "Having their conscience seared," they can do anything without the slightest rebuke from their consciences. Like a piece of rubber the conscience has lost its elasticity; it has no come back. A trained conscience is a valuable thing, and he who would train his conscience properly must have a standard.

Making Life's Choices

Life is a problem of making choices: "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." God created man with a conscience so that it might assist him in making choices which would bring him success and happiness. Success and happiness always come through proper choices. There is always the good and evil, and unless we have a standard to govern in our choosing, we are likely to choose the evil, bringing to ourselves sorrow instead of happiness. Micah suggests that a man should train his conscience "to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God." Translated into modern terms, this means, think clearly, feel deeply, and act wisely.

The one great choice necessary for man to make is between pleasure and happiness. Pleasure is momentary and fleeting; it vanishes away. Happiness is contentment of a lasting nature which reaches even to eternity. Happiness looks ahead and plans for the future, while pleasure thinks only of the present.

A young man in the West explained to me that he ate only two meals each day. He contended that his appetite was not altogether satisfied, but by a proper choice of foods he found he could keep his body fit and in condition for his work. His object in leaving off one meal was to enable him to purchase some much-needed books for his course in the university, where he is preparing himself for a special line of work. He is working his way and is getting some fine training in self-denial. However, he is thinking clearly, feeling deeply, and acting wisely. He has chosen happiness rather than pleasure. He is not one of the common herd; he has a standard. An observing person would recognize him as a superior individual.

Jehovah desired his people to be so outstanding that even the Gentiles might behold their righteousness. Isaiah puts it in this language: "Until the righteousness therefore go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness and all kings thy glory." A righteous man does not need to tell folks he is a Christian; neither is it required of him to think about different things than do his associates, but it is required that he think differently about them. One may think of his work as a means of gathering together a few paltry dollars, while the other thinks of it as his part in the great world drama, played for the purpose of making happiness a possibility for every human being.

The Marks of Character

The keen manager can determine the method of thinking indulged in by his men, for thoughts produce words and acts, which involuntarily make up our habits and form our characters. Your associates know whether or not you are a Christian without your affirming or denying, for your speech betrays you, and "By their fruits ye shall know them."

"Oh! what a tangled web we weave when first we practice to deceive," even in thought. Peter imagined he could deceive the damsel and others and even took oath that he did not know Jesus, but the damsel had proof; his speech betrayed him. His association with Jesus had caused him to think thoughts that had formed themselves into words; upon those words the damsel based her judgment, and the judgment was just.

In September, 1923, en route to Portland, Oregon, on a Union Pacific train, the common topic discussed in the observation car was politics. I took part in the discussion, offering my views regarding present-day politics and my hope for the future. After returning to my seat in the Pullman one afternoon, a gentleman who had been quite prominent in the discussions came to me and introduced himself as Mr. —, an attorney from —, Idaho. Acknowledging the introduction, I said, "My name is B—. I am a politician from Kansas City." "What party do you represent?" inquired my new made friend. "The Republican Party," was my reply. "Well, that is funny, indeed," said Mr. —. "Not any funnier to be a Republican than to be a Democrat, I should say." "I beg your pardon," came the quick reply from Mr. —. "I did not mean it in that way. The point is this: after you left the observation car we all discussed your possible profession, and every man there thought you were a minister." Even a minister's speech betrays him.

Sometimes in life we do not get what we consider a square deal, but we should not blame the other fellow for our failures. The game of blaming the other fellow was first played in the garden of Eden. Adam placed the blame on Eve, and Eve placed it on the serpent, but God was in no way baffled by their deceit. He drove them out of the garden. God would no doubt have thought more of Adam if he had faced the music and admitted his weakness, accepting the responsibility of his sin. Jehovah advised Isaiah to lift up the standard himself, not to find fault with others because they did not lift it up. "Look up and laugh and love and lift," says the poet.

The Difference That Makes a Christian

After stating his determination to give a three-year-old son, whom he held in his arms, a first-rate education and other advantages possible to make of him a noble man, a husband began to recount to his wife the many blessings that had come to them during their years of married life. There was the house, the car, the radio, the children, and many other things. The wife agreed that God had blessed them. Placing his arm about his wife, the husband said: "Mary, the day we were married I made a solemn covenant, not in the words of the ceremony read by the minister, but in my heart I pledged my life to you. My personal desires and ambitions were to be sacrificed for your happiness. In many ways I have failed, Mary; but I have tried to be true to that pledge." "You have done well, John. You have made me happy; you have sacrificed much for my comfort; and I have often thought there is one thing that you could do that would make my happiness complete." "If there is only one thing, pray tell me what it is and I will try to do it." "I have wished so many times that you would become a Christian, John." "What is a Christian, Mary?" "A Christian is one who has given his heart to God and has joined the church." "Are you a Christian?" "Oh! yes, I have been a Christian since I was a child." "To know that you are a Christian makes my problem much harder, Mary, for since our marriage we have indulged in so nearly the same amusements. Very seldom have I gone without you—to shows, to parties, to dances—we have gone and enjoyed them mutually. If you have gone to church without me, I am not aware of the time. I confess I have not prayed, and I have not known that you did. When I have subscribed one hundred dollars to the church budget, you have complained that fifty would have been quite sufficient. Now I understand you are a Christian and I am a sinner, and I am puzzled to know the difference. Tell me, Mary, what change would take place in me if I became a Christian according to your wishes?"

Christian friends, if I were to go to your neighbors and acquaintances, with whom you associate in a social and business way, and ask them for a definition of a Christian, what would their answer be? I can not answer. I warn you, "Thy speech betrayeth thee"; and in the words of Isaiah I charge you, "Go through the gates, cast up a highway, gather out the stones, lift up a standard."

Why I Am a Latter Day Saint

A Radio Sermon

By A. B. Phillips

PART TWO

Sometime ago I asked a prominent religious leader to name the science that has had the most important influence upon the development of human character. Without hesitation he said: "The science of theology has probably exerted the most powerful influence in this respect, though this influence has not always been recognized under that name." At another time I put a similar question to another leader in human affairs, whose work was of a somewhat different order, and he named sociology as the most important science that deals with the development and character of men.

These answers represent two viewpoints of the world's greatest problem, the problem of human society in the use and enjoyment of its highest powers. I believe both answers are so nearly right that together they constitute the answer that God himself has already given to us through his inspired prophets, and especially through his Son Jesus Christ. It is stated briefly, but clearly, in two great precepts that cover every phase of human action and thought and purpose. When he commanded us to love God with all our hearts, he gave us the only perfect basis of scientific theology. And when he enjoined us to love others as ourselves, he presented to us the one sociological foundation upon which both ideal and practical society can unite.

Some of the theological reasons for my present church relationship were stated in a previous article. I expressed my conviction that God is that kind of a Father who actually communicates with his children and from time to time makes known his will to them, and that he personally selects those whom he will send to mankind as teachers of his will and his law. To this conviction permit me to add another: It is the conviction that God intends to use his church as the instrument of his cause among men, and to so direct its functions that it shall represent him, and not the selfish desires or the caprice of men.

The Church Is God's Agent

I have what to me are sound and sufficient reasons for this belief. If my belief is correct, then the church is not its own master, but belongs to Christ, and should be under his inspiring direction. The very name of the church belongs to him, and it was he who gave it its name. Its teachings were given through him to his church—his body—and at no time has he authorized the church to disregard his teachings or to introduce other teachings contrary to those he enjoined upon it. The teachings of Jesus are perfect for the full accomplishment of his great mission to men, and the church must not change any of them or disregard them. Should the church presume to do so, it must forfeit his divine approval and must therefore be condemned for its departure from the faith.

The sacred Scriptures make it quite clear that the church was ordained to be under the direction and guidance of Christ. For instance, Paul tells us that he "is the head over all things to the church," and Jesus himself said to Peter: "I will build my church." So also Luke informs us that the churches of his time were established in the faith by the ministry who delivered the decrees for them to keep. Those who did not keep the decrees ordained of the Lord were not recognized as in the faith.

The church is called to be the agency through which God will perform his work among men, but unless it performs that work according to his will and direction it can not really be his agency. It becomes a law unto itself, when it disregards his commands. For this reason I believe it is highly important to compare what the church teaches with what Christ and his authorized apostles taught. The teaching and practice of the church are the means by which we may determine whether or not it is faithfully performing the work God would have it do. We are authorized to believe that it will do so, if it is truly his church. I am convinced that there is a church which is following our Lord more fully than others are doing, and I know of no sure way of identifying it except by comparing it with the New Testament pattern.

Identifying Marks of the Church

The Scriptures clearly show that God revealed himself to his church and that he chose his own ministry to represent it. I believe that his church today will possess these marks of the divine oversight and guidance. The Scriptures also show that the church belonged to the Lord, and was called by his name as the only name which he authorized it to bear. I am therefore very partial to that name as the divinely constituted name of the divinely constituted church on earth.

Some one has suggested that the name is not very important, and that "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet." But that is not a fair comparison. The church is the family of the Lord, for the Scriptures tell us so. Therefore suppose your name happens to be Jones, and I am looking for the Jones family. I would not find the Jones family by asking for the Smith family, and the Brown family, and the Allen family, and the Baker family. These might all be perfectly good sounding family names, but none of them would in fact be the Jones family.

Not only should the church bear the name which the Lord gave it, but it should also have the marks of identification as an organic institution which characterized his church in the days when he formed it. For instance, Paul tells us that he set in his church certain officers to perform its administrative work. In both the Corinthian, Ephesian, and other letters it is stated that officers known as apostles, prophets, the seventy, the bishops, evangelists, elders, and several others were ordained to constitute the officers of the church. This constitutes another reason why I am a member of the church of my choice, for it has all these officers which the New Testament church contained. This reason alone would not be sufficient for me to unite with it, but it strengthens my other reasons.

These various officers among God's people comprised an order called the priesthood. The Scriptures make it clear that this was a part of the divine plan by which God designed to teach, lead, and preserve his people until his work of salvation should be completed. The priesthood existed in two divisions or departments, of which one was the greater and was known as the Melchisedec priesthood, while the other was called the Levitical or Aaronic priesthood. In the church of my choice I find these priesthoods represented as in the scriptural periods of old.

Characteristic Teachings of the Church

In one sense these are incidental marks of identity, and I do not present them as being the most important. They are rather marks which distinguish Latter Day Saint belief from most other beliefs of modern times. Many important beliefs we hold in common with most other religious bodies. And we have no intention of minimizing their importance, but because they are commonly held it is not necessary for us to stress them at this time, though if they were generally disregarded we would feel the need of doing so.

We believe that God is eternal and of supreme goodness, power, wisdom, and love. We hold that Jesus Christ is the Son of God manifested in the flesh as the Redeemer and Savior of the world, the Messiah promised through the prophets of past ages. We teach that by sin man became separated from God, but may be reclaimed and forgiven upon repentance, faith in God and in Christ, and obedience to the divine commandments. We do not believe that saving faith will or can be exercised by one who does not repent of his sins and turn to God with full purpose of heart. The doctrine of repentance is one of the world's greatest needs today.

But we believe some things that, while not of essential or prime importance to man's eternal salvation, are of considerable interest to the religious world. We look forward to the day when the Jews will occupy the beloved land of their biblical ancestors, for prophecy in the Bible predicts it. It is our understanding of the promise of Christ that he will again come to earth in person, and will eventually establish a wonderful reign of peace and righteousness for a thousand years. Because we believe this, and because we believe that we are now living in that period known in the Scriptures as the latter days, the members of our church are called Latter Day Saints. We do not use the term saints to imply that we consider ourselves holier than others, but in Bible times the Lord's people were called saints, and we believe we are numbered among those who are the Lord's people today.

We believe the righteous will be rewarded and the wicked punished after death. In this respect we differ somewhat from many other faiths, for we hold that there are different degrees of reward and of punishment in the next life, and that every person will receive his reward or his punishment according to the degree of good or evil he has intentionally committed. We think this is justice and equity, and we deny that a wrong act ignorantly done merits as much punishment as the same act done willfully. Paul says: "Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor."

Doctrine of the Gathering

Perhaps one of our most distinctive beliefs is that which we call the doctrine of the gathering. It appears to have been according to the divine plan for God's people to work together for the accomplishment of his purposes, and the Scriptures show that he has sought to gather his followers together in some place where they may cooperate more perfectly for the furtherance of his work on earth. Jesus himself speaks of the gathering together of his people, and predicts that such a gathering will take place in the latter days. It is our belief that this principle is of fundamental importance, in order that lives of equity, justice, and love may be facilitated, and that temporal benefits may also come to the people.

It will be noticed that at various times in Old Testament history the Jews were gathered together under the direction of God, of which perhaps the most notable instance was the gathering under Moses and Joshua to inhabit the Promised Land. The future gathering of the Jews is predicted many times in the Scriptures as one of the important events which God will accomplish, and Jesus himself made some remarkable predictions concerning this event. But the gathering is by no means confined to the Jews, for various texts clearly show that it applies to the Lord's people because of the important principle which it involves.

Prophecy of the Bible clearly shows that the Lord will have a people gathered together in preparation for his second coming. The place of this gathering will be called Zion, but the word does not necessarily mean any particular location, as the meaning of the term is "a fortress," and the place of God's people at that time is evidently to be the fortress of their protection. In fact, this will be one of the important reasons for the gathering itself, by means of which they may be able to protect themselves spiritually and temporally against the injustice and wickedness of the world. We believe that such a place will be established before the Lord shall come to his people.

Spiritual Meaning of the Restoration

What has been said during the last two Sunday evenings comprises much of my reasons for believing in the need for a divinely directed restoration of God's work on earth in our day. The Latter Day Saints hold that such a restoration has actually taken place and is represented by the church of which they are members. But it is of the great spiritual significance of this movement that I would particularly speak. The fact that we believe in divine revelation today is less important than the results which such a belief involves. The gift of revelation to God's people is designed to develop a constantly growing consciousness of the divine in all their relationships with him and with each other.

Jesus said: "When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth." The marvel of this holy influence, and the marvel of its power in transforming the lives of those who receive it, are expressed by Peter when he affirms that it is the means:

Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature.—2 Peter 1: 4.

It is our great conviction that the gifts of the Holy Spirit are absolutely essential to the proper

The Tobacco Question

COME, LET US REASON TOGETHER

By Ernest Crutcher, M. D., Los Angeles

(Reprinted by permission from The New Age for November, 1930.)

Man's physical investment is cared for by sixteen or more diligent, vigilant servants, his ductless glands. His progress through the world depends entirely upon their functioning. He is sick or well according to these mysterious agents' activities or sloth. Any habit or indulgence that impairs their utility is just so far toward suicide—suicide of the body, mind, and spiritual inhabitant.

The ductless glands are called "hormones" or endocrines, meaning "I stimulate," or "I arouse." These compel work by other organs of the body. To interfere with their work is like stirring up a hive of bees—the harmony of the community is disrupted, and work ceases to be constructive.

Great age depends upon the vitality of the ductless glands. Through their healthfulness, the arteries remain resilient and unhardened—atheromatous, which causes sudden death in many elderly people. All glands are tied together interactively; what hurts one injures the other; for often one set spiritual growth of the soul. This functioning of the Spirit of God in human lives is a supremely important part of the processes of the regeneration of man. It is the divine anchor of the soul which reaches within the veil, confirms the faith of the believer in God, and bears witness to the reality of eternal things. It ties man to God with cords that are infinitely stronger than the dreaded bands of death. They draw him into the glorious reality of life everlasting.

The restoration which we believe has come to us today, is recognized as the means of bringing to pass a wonderful work in this hastening time of the world. We believe that God is moving among his people as never before in all human history, and that he is developing and using man's knowledge of natural laws to bring about the consummation of his work, long yearned for and long prayed for by the righteous of past ages. In spite of its evils, and waywardness, the world is now in its most marvelous age of development. It is the time of the end, when Daniel the prophet foretold that knowledge should be increased. And God is using this great increase of knowledge to hasten his work on earth.

holds the others from violent destructive activity. Character is largely dependent upon these glands, and crime is frequently due to change within or disturbance of their work. Until comparatively recently, these organs were suspected of being vestigial, remnants of an ancient era when mankind was on a lower scale and lived differently. Now we realize their importance and imperative necessity for keeping them in health. Whatever hurts or impedes them surely destroys the house we live in. The body is not you but yours. These glands are servants, and they serve well and faithfully if allowed. "Fearfully and wonderfully made" indeed. And the making goes on through the ages, and each "builds more stately mansion" or grovels into deformed, misshapen bodies in after lives.

It would be delightful to write extensively of these marvelous agents that govern our fate. Space forbids more than brief mention. The thyroid is largely concerned with the teeth, hair, skin, and eyes. It is a sex gland, also, and affects instincts and emotions. A good nose bridge indicates a good thyroid and good pituitary. Fine teeth can not be had without a good thyroid and adrenals. Whatever involves the first brings decay of teeth in quick order. In the use of cigarets the back teeth and front lateral incisors promptly begin to decline. The same cause that brings this decay stimulates the adrenals, which provoke hairiness of face and arms. An interesting story could be written on this subject. It would involve discussion of the sex glands. All skin diseases of dry, scaly sort are benefited only by treating the thyroid and discouraging the adrenals from undue activity. Moles, freckles, pigmentations come from overactive adrenals.

The thymus gland is most active in childhood. At puberty it lessens in size and activity, else the child could not develop the characteristics of adolescence. The boy then remains infantile, with long legs, slouching gait, high-keyed voice, feminized; the girl is undeveloped, flat-chested, unwomanly. Observation declares that the immature child who uses cigarets never unfolds into beautiful manhood or womanhood. Boys simply can not grow tall and manly nor girls rounded in figure and loveliness if they use tobacco in any form. Lorand, a great European doctor, says:

Smoking acts even more injuriously upon the delicate organisms of females than upon males. Not only is she less able to resist the poisonous action of tobacco upon her ductless glands, but, like a flower, she is apt to fade and wither quickly, and invite old age prematurely.

Even air laden with tobacco smoke is capable of exerting damage to the ductless glands, especially of children.

A woman requires smaller doses of medicine, when ill, than man. The effect of tobacco is more wicked in effects upon her than upon the male. The dullness of eye, lusterless hair, thinning of this ornamentation of the head, hairiness of face and arms, with other derangements peculiar to her sex, droopiness of mouth corners—all these are symptomatic of tobacco poisoning through cigarets—a silly habit that affords no compensation whatever. Then the teeth quickly demand attention by the dentist, who is unable to help unless the foolishness is quit. Mental and emotional faculties engage, and uncertainties of temper must be expected, in a cigaret smoker.

I write as an old and experienced physician. I oppose cigarets with all my heart. The only beneficiary is the maker and dealer. The fact that seventy million dollars was last year invested in propaganda for cigarets proclaims why subtle, persistent prominence is given this habit as "style," "smart," chic, and insouciant. The tribe of the simple is large, and the silly will hatch any egg put before them if thereby they get notice or provoke remark. The susceptibility and credulity of the average mind is beyond comprehension; print and pictures prove this psychological fact. This is why the great publications are owned and controlled by a few masters of the masses. What is seen in print is taken as ex cathedra, out of the blue. The quantity of cigarets made is scrupulously published, indicating how popular and stylish is their use, suggestive of how back-number you are if you do not smoke. The percentage of habitues is exaggerated for the same reason, though common sense indicates that "everybody" does not smoke. Most of the stories written of late, insinuate heroes and heroines whose principal business in social life is to smoke cigarets. No decision or speech is made until a fag is lit, and the mind stimulated into thought.

"Of course a woman has the right to smoke, but when she begins I take her name off my visiting list," said one of the greatest men of the Nation.

A few doctors have rented their photographs to boost a yeast or other proprietary, even as "medical" articles are printed lauding cigarets and tobacco brands. True, some doctors smoke. One of the highest paid dope lecturers is a confirmed cigaret fiend, nor comprehends that few ever become dope fiends who have not first become tobacco users.

It is a singular fact that all dopesters endeavor to seduce others into using their drug. This is true of cigaret smokers: they try to beguile associates into their folly.

The Penney stores will not employ a smoker. Many of the largest institutions of America forbid tobacco to employees. If a workman does his duty by cigarets, he hasn't time for anything else. In fact, all he does is indifferently done. As a driver he is unsafe, and as a mechanic, hampered and unreliable. Where he has charge of others' lives in driving any vehicle, he should have every faculty alert and awake, not hampered by tobacco, drink, or drugs.

A smoker is uncertain of himself; this is why he smokes. He is self-conscious. He does not know what to do with his hands and would shuffle uneasily and shift about if he did not have his fag in hand or archly curling smoke from his lips. It makes him insouciant, he thinks. He is resentful if anyone objects to his habit; his irritable nerves are rasped by criticism. His nerves are on edge, and soothed only by repeated indulgence in what he vows does him no harm. What a monstrous servitude he has voluntarily assumed, and what does he get in return! His condition and that of the dopester is similar. How fatuous that some men can not even wash their faces of morning before smoking a cigaret. They can not eat a meal without interrupting it with frequent puffs, often in public places, totally disregarding of the comfort of others who may object to their stench.

This article is not for confirmed smokers. "Egypt is wedded to his idol." I am appealing to such as have not yet surrendered to this silly indulgence and monumental folly. You simply destroy your own house, and the price is great for the questionable return.

It is the cigaret smoker who flunks out of college. Look at the shambling, stoop-shouldered adolescent who smokes. Ask any educator who have the bright minds; who lead the classes. It won't be the smokers.

The pituitary gland is concerned with making a lad tall and manlike. It is also concerned in intellection. If it is dull, the mind is dormant. It is one of the most singular organs of the entire body. The anterior portion of it is chiefly masculine and the posterior section of vital importance to the woman. Without it she could never have a child born. It is placed deeply under the brain, and when diseased, as sometimes happens, causes disaster to the possessor. It is particularly sensitive to cigaret poison, and best thinking can not be done under such conditions. It is hooked up in its workings with the thyroid and sex glands, and anything that injures one of these carries vast hurt to the others. A sad price does a smoker pay!

A large volume could be written against cigarets and their incalculable hurt to individual and nation. Let ours not go the way of retrogressive nations. The mark of the dollar on news publications keeps protests against this noisome stench from public knowledge, though several of the larger magazines have yielded to the demand of outraged family folks and child lovers, and have barred these obnoxious advertisements from their columns.

Uncontrolled, cigarets will cause the decadence of our beloved America. It is the menace of our noble land.

Doctor David Starr Jordan said:

When a young man begins to smoke cigarets, we no longer worry over his future. He has none. The cigaret-smoking boy rarely makes a failure in after life. He has no after life.

Doctor Solly, surgeon, Saint Thomas' Hospital, London:

Tobacco stimulates the generative system, to later extinguish the sexual appetite, and annihilates the reproductive faculty.

Doctor Tyrrell in London Lancet:

Tobacco is one of those pleasant vices which the just gods make instruments to scourge us, destroying the very principles of manhood.

Many similar opinions of scientific men could be cited. Space forbids. I never met a drug addict who was not first a tobacco user. We declaim against the dope fiend, yet tobacco is a drug, a sedative, a dope.

Most all bespectacled children had tobacco-using fathers. The germ of life was impaired. Cigaret-smoking women rarely have fine children; besides, they are not child lovers. Fortunate for the world!

Henry Ford discriminates against the tobacco users, and many of the great firms refuse to employ them. The list is long.

Hudson Maxim said:

The cigaret is a maker of invalids, criminals, and fools, not men. The yellow finger stain is an emblem of even deeper degradation and enslavement than the ball and chain.

George Torrance, once superintendent of the Illinois State Reformatory:

Cigarets are not the effect of crime, but they are the causes of crime. The boy's moral fiber is gone; he is apathetic, listless, and inattentive in school; he fails to hold a job for the reason he has not sufficient strength to do the work that a boy of his age ought easily to do; his vitality has been spent, and all the vigor of a normal boy is gone. A boy guilty of a grievous offense is generally found to be a cigaret user.

Judge Crane, of New York City:

Cigarets are ruining our children, dwarfing their intellects, and making them criminals fast. The boys who use them seem to lose all sense of decency, right, and righteousness. Forceful means should be used to check this pernicious, death-dealing habit.

We must realize in ourselves a new type of Christian manhood, which seeks to overcome the evil in the present world, not by withdrawing from the world, but by revolutionizing it.—Rauschenbusch.

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Intensive Program of Activities in Philadelphia

Many letters are received from pastors in the office of the First Presidency commenting on the work of religious education in the various branches. From Philadelphia there comes a cheering message of activity and growth which will be suggestive of what is being done in many live groups. We quote from a letter by the pastor under date of March 9, 1931:

"You will be interested in knowing that we are making a little progress in our church school program since adopting the new form of organization in religious education. While we are grateful for the advancement made so far, we still see room for a great deal of improvement. We will always work for a growing school.

"The adults have activities on Tuesday nights in the homes of the Saints, as there are too many classes meeting at the church to permit them to gather there. Last week twenty-five ladies were present at the class studying the Old Testament, and they seem to be very much interested. On Wednesday at the church the ladies meet for work in the morning, and in the afternoon there is a class studying the financial law of the church. The Clover Club meets at night to have a class and a social time. The women seem to be well taken care of in the adult division, but our problem is to provide for the men, strange as it may seem. We have no trouble with the Women's Department, as their work continues on even more efficiently than under the former plan.

"The Young People's Division has an activity in the church nearly every night of the week. Monday there is a sewing class for the girls and at the same time the boys have the library and can play games if they choose. There is also a class of the younger girls in dramatics in the main church. Tuesdays the Junior girls have an hour of recreation, and then there is the orchestra and young people's choir rehearsals. There is also a class in dramatics for the older young people in the library room.

"Wednesday the Boy Scouts have the Sunday school room, and the older young people have a research class in the library. Thursday night is prayer service, which is well attended by the young people who come very regularly. Two of the girls left the meeting early last week to attend a basketball game. Afterward they came to the Young People's leader and told him that they had begun to sense the value of the prayer service and were sorry that they left. Sunday, following the incident, the leader called on these girls to tell their experience. If our folks are getting a sense of God in the meetings, we feel very happy about it.

"Friday is recreation night for the young people, and it has been very successful. There are ping-pong tables, quoits, and all sorts of table games available. The older folks I note enjoy the young people's night, too, for several come and join the games and have a good time. I admit that I like it, so you know where I am on some Friday nights. Saturday night is bath night for the church, but if our activities increase it looks as though we will have to use that night also. It is much better that the church building be worn out in the right way than to rot out, and sometimes it is used pretty roughly.

"The Children's Division has its activities under the leadership of two of the sisters. The juniors have a room by themselves now, which makes it much better for them. We have been in touch with about one hundred and thirty-five children who are not yet members of the church. Some of course are not yet old enough, but with proper training what a field to work in! A task for teachers to give them what this church has to offer!"

Church School Worship Services

SUGGESTIONS FOR APRIL

As in previous months, the following is offered as materials from which local worship programs may be builded. It is hoped that pastors and church school leaders will find the suggestions helpful.

The service should be brief, should begin promptly at the advertised time, and should move without hesitation or interruption. Those in charge should see that careful plans have been made beforehand. A little care in the procedure will yield abundant returns in the spirit of orderly, confident, reverent worship.

With the first notes of the prelude there should be perfect quiet and reverent participation. Late comers should wait quietly at the door until there is a pause in the program, when they may move without noise to the nearest seat. There is a beautiful art in observing the proper reverence for the house of the Lord, and respect for the season of prayer.

Theme for April: "Life"

Easter Sunday is universally observed this year on April 5. A beautiful print, "Jesus in the Garden" on the Resurrection Morning," may be ordered from the Herald Publishing House. It is one of a set of six, each 20x30 inches, rare masterpieces of Bible subjects in color. This one, showing Jesus as he appeared to Mary, carries the Easter message.

If possible, it should occupy a prominent place on the platform, where it may remain throughout the month.

APRIL 5

Theme: "The Victorious Life"

1. Prelude: Medley of Easter hymns.
2. Call to Worship: Verses 1 and 2 from No. 272 in the Hymnal, read while the accompaniment is played softly.
3. Prayer. Of thanks for the glorious life of Christ that brings hope and peace to all.
4. Hymn: "Lift Your Glad Voices," Hymnal 180.
5. Scripture Reading: John 20: 1-18.
6. Choir: "The Shout of Triumph," Praises 176.
7. Theme Talk: The victorious life of Christ is the brightest spot in all history. It has shed light, hope, cheer, and peace on all life down through the ages.

"He died!

And with Him perished all that men hold dear;
Hope lay beside Him in the sepulcher,
Love grew cold, and all things beautiful beside,
Died when He died.

"He rose!

And with Him hope arose, and light, and life.
Men said, 'Not Christ, but death died yesternight.'
And joy and truth and all things virtuous,
Rose when He rose." —Selected.

8. Story: "He Rose Again," page 102, Story Worship Programs, or the reading, "If Easter Be Not True," page 238, Quotable Poems.
9. Hymn: "I Know That My Redeemer Lives," Hymnal 187.
10. Sentence Prayer. Offered by the leader, who pauses to permit many others to add each a brief sentence prayer, these expressing in a most earnest way the desire, the appreciation, the gratitude of all.
11. Offering: Music of Hymnal 187.
12. Hymn: "Sweet Are the Promises," Praises 41.
13. Prayer.

APRIL 12

Theme: "The Giving Life"

1. Prelude: Quiet Instrumental Music.
2. Call to Worship:

"Grant us, Lord the grace of giving,
With a spirit, large and free.
That ourselves and all our living
We may offer unto Thee."

3. Hymn: "All Along Life's Pathway," Praises 44.
4. Prayer. That we may more fully realize each day that to live is to give. That true living is the giving of our best to the cause of Christ.
5. Choir: "Give of Your Best to the Master," Living Hymns 51; or, solo, "If I Can Stop One Heart from Breaking," New Hymnal for American Youth, page 242.
6. Theme Talk: The giving life is the challenge of service. I am of the opinion that my life belongs to Christ, and as long as I live, it is my privilege to serve freely all whom I meet.
Some one has said: "I want to be thoroughly used up when I die, for the harder I work, the more I live. I rejoice in life for its own sake. Life is no 'brief candle' for me; it is a sort of splendid torch which I have got hold of for a moment, and I want to make it burn as brightly as possible before handing it on to future generations."

7. Scripture Reading: Luke 6: 27-38.
8. Hymn: "O Jesus the Giver," Hymnal 170, verses 1, 2, and 4.
9. Story: "Unto One of the Least of These," in Seventy-five Stories for the Worship Hour, by Margaret Eggleston, or the poem "The Giving Life," quoted below:

"It is in loving, not in being loved,
The heart is blest;
It is giving, not in seeking gifts,
We find our quest.

"If thou art hungry, lacking heavenly food,
Give hope and cheer.
If thou art sad and wouldst be comforted,
Stay sorrow's tear.

"Whatever be thy longing and thy need,
That do thou give;
So shall thy soul be fed, and thou indeed,
Shall truly live. —Selected.

10. Hymn: "Just as I Am," Hymns for the Centennial 124.
11. Sentence Prayer.
12. Offering. Solo, "I'll Live for Him," Living Hymns 60, or quiet music.
13. Hymn: "Earnest Workers for the Master," Praises 99.
14. Prayer.

APRIL 19

Theme: "The Abundant Life"

1. Prelude: Medley of Hymns.
2. Call to Worship:

"O come let us worship and bow down;
Let us kneel before the Lord our Maker.
Oh, may we give,
Out of the gifts Thou freely gavest;
Oh, may we live,
With life, abundantly, because Thou livest."

3. Hymn Prayer: Solo, "Light of Life," Hymnal 71.
4. Scripture Reading: John 10: 1-11.
5. Hymn: "Look for the Beautiful," Praises 147.
6. Theme Talk: Christ said, "I am come that you might have life and that you might have it more abundantly." It is only as we come to know Christ and become like him that we may experience this more abundant life.

That every man should strive his best
To serve his neighbor's need;
"God first, then man—serve all you can!"
That was His simple creed.

He taught that every man should do,
As he would be done by,
For as man gives so he receives,
With utmost equity.

Give love and love will fill your life;
Give hate and hate is yours;
For as you give, so you receive,
And shall while life endures.

But not of force comes Love.
For God is Love and Love is God,
And Love is born of love alone,
And Love alone is Life." —Selected.

7. Hymn: "Carry Blessings with You," Praises 25.
 8. Reading: "O Master, Let Me Walk with Thee":

O Master, let me walk with thee,
 In lowly paths of service free;
 Tell me thy secret; help me bear,
 The strain of toil, the fret of care.

Help me the slow of heart to move
 By some clear, winning word of love;
 Teach me the wayward feet to stay,
 And guide them in the homeward way.

Teach me thy patience; still with thee
 In closer, dearer company,
 In work that keeps faith sweet and strong,
 In trust that triumphs over wrong,

In hope that sends a shining ray
 Far down the future's broadening way;
 In peace that only thou canst give,—
 With thee, O Master, let me live.

This may be given as a reading or read slowly and accompanied softly with the music found in the New Hymnal for American Youth, page 197.

9. Sentence Prayer.
 10. Offering. Quiet music or solo, "O Christ, the Way, the Truth, the Life," New Hymnal for American Youth, page 216.
 11. Hymn: "Light of Life," Praises 163.
 12. Prayer.

APRIL 26

Theme: "The Greatness of Living"

1. Prelude: Medley of Hymns.
 2. Call to Worship:
 "Thine, O Jehovah, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty; thine is the kingdom, O Jehovah, and thou art exalted above all; both riches and honor come of thee, and thou rulest over all; and in thy hand is power and might; and in thy hand it is, to make great, and to give strength unto all."
 3. Hymn: "One Sweet Hour with Jesus," Praises 134.
 4. Prayer. That each choice we make in life may bring us closer to our Master; that we may see and understand the greatness of living.
 5. Theme Talk: It takes spiritual vision to sense the greatness of living today in this age of hurry and unrest. There is so much tinsel and so much glamour, making the nonessentials appear attractive, that it takes careful choosing to put the most important things first, or sense the greatness of living.
 "True worth is in being, not seeming,
 In doing each day that goes by
 Some little good not in dreaming
 Of great things to do by and by."
 6. Hymn: "Oh, to Be More Like Jesus," Praises 128.
 7. Scripture Reading: Matthew 6: 24-34 and 7: 12.
 8. Choir: "Blessed Are They That Do," Praises 224.
 9. Story: "Jesus' Plan," page 105, Story Worship Programs, by Stacy; or, the reading, "The Life That Counts," quoted below:

The life that counts must toil and fight,
 Must hate the wrong and love the right;
 Must stand for truth, by day, by night—
 This is the life that counts.

The life that counts must hopeful be,
 In darkest night make melody,

Must wait the dawn on bended knee—
 This is the life that counts.

The life that counts must aim to rise,
 Above the earth to sunlit skies,
 Must fix its gaze on Paradise—
 This is the life that counts.

The life that counts must helpful be,
 The cares and needs of others see;
 Must seek the slaves of sin to free—
 This is the life that counts.

The life that counts is linked with God,
 And turns not from the cross—the rod,
 But walks with joy where Jesus trod—
 This is the life that counts.

10. Hymn: "Lord, for Tomorrow and Its Needs," Praises 124.
 11. Sentence Prayer.
 12. Offering: Quiet music or solo, "God Who Touches Earth with Beauty," New Hymnal for American Youth, 223.
 13. Concluding Thought:

"Lord, as the path of duty is made plain,
 May grace be given that I may walk therein,
 Not like the hireling for his selfish gain,
 But cheerful in the light around me thrown,
 Walking as one to pleasant service led,
 Doing God's will as if it were my own,
 Yet trusting not in mine, but in His strength alone."

14. Hymn: "Are You Witnessing for Him," Praises 201.
 15. Prayer.

Beautiful Pictures in Color

MODERATELY PRICED

A most exceptional opportunity is now offered to church school workers to secure rare artistic masterpieces in rich color, vividly portraying Bible scenes in the dress, customs, and habits of Palestine and the East.

The prints are 20x30 inches in size and made on good art paper, suitable for framing, or for picture-story purposes when displayed on an easel under special light.

The following six subjects are available for immediate mailing:

- No. 106—"Ruth and Naomi."
 No. 114—"Jesus in the Garden" (Easter Morning).
 No. 306—"Jesus and the Woman at the Well."
 No. 311—"The Light of the World" (Behold, I Stand at the Door and Knock).
 No. 325—"The Call of the Disciples" (By the Sea of Galilee).
 No. 827—"The Good Shepherd."

The above have been selected from over 400 subjects to serve as illustrations for the church school worship program for the year. Each should be in use for two months, or they may be framed and given a place of permanence on the walls of the church.

We are all eye-minded. We learn far more through good pictures than from printed or spoken words alone. "One picture is worth a thousand words."

Choice of any one or more of above six pictures 50 cents each.

Set of six pictures mailed postpaid in secure roll, $2.50.

Rally Day for Southern Idaho

Saints of Southern Idaho District held rally day services at Boise Church February 22. Since District Missionary O. W. Okerlind was spending a few weeks laboring in an adjoining district, he was unable to meet with us.

A worshipful prayer hour opened the day's services at nine o'clock, and Sunday school at ten o'clock was followed by preaching service at eleven. District President Silas Condit spoke on "Let Us Go on to Perfection."

A delicious basket dinner was served in the kitchenette and classrooms at the rear of the church, and the Saints visited until the opening of the afternoon service.

Brief talks by the priesthood were followed by round table discussions in the afternoon meeting. Brother Condit explained the unified church school program, which has proved interesting and satisfactory in Hagerman Branch. Brother Mamerow spoke on "The Value of the Department of Recreation and Expression." Brother Dellenbaugh's subject was "The Sunday School," and Brother Jackson's "Branch Finance." The Necessity of Religious Training in the Home was discussed by Brother Gilmore.

An inspiring sermon on "Humility and Service," by Brother Condit closed a day which was characterized by a feeling of real fellowship.

Deserted Church in Use Again

A flourishing branch of the church existed several years ago at McIvor, Michigan. But after a time members moved away, the branch was disorganized, and the church building stood empty and deserted.

In October, 1930, through the initiative of District President J. W. Peterson, a group of young people from Tawas City, Whittemore, and other near-by places, met in the church and formed an organization which has since taken the name, Iosco Young People's Progressive Society. A constitution was adopted and officers elected as follows: Superintendent, Sister Olive Davidson, Tawas City; secretary, Leona Ulman, Tawas City; sergeant-at-arms, Stephen H. Barr, Whittemore. A literary program is given each meeting, followed by an hour devoted to recreation, then refreshments are served.

The group meets every two weeks on Friday evening. "We are indebted to Sister Pringle, of Tawas City, present owner, for the use of the building," writes Arthur F. Rogers, of Whittemore.

The Gates of Zion

Esther, Missouri.—"The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob," is a statement made by King David concerning the Zion of Jerusalem in Psalm 87: 2. To my mind God's affections are greatly set on our Zion to be at Independence, the city we expect to establish by righteousness for the benefit of rich and poor of the household of faith.

During the year just after the great tornado at Saint Louis, in September, 1927, I was out sight-seeing and came to a neatly built church home of a popular denomination. The building had been struck by the storm and partly destroyed. On the outside walls I read the beautiful words which I have quoted above. I wondered how they applied those words to their creed, and have since thought how beautiful they would appear on our Auditorium.

Zion, the pure in heart, can not help but be a pure city, a spiritual city, for the Lord says all his laws and commandments are spiritual and not carnal. It is worth every effort we can exert to build the city of our God. Let us labor to establish Zion.

A. C. RICHARDSON.

A Stalwart Pastor Dies

It is the concensus of opinion of members of the church in the Southern New England District, and of others who knew him, that in the death of Elder John E. Rogerson (which occurred at his home March 8) the church has lost a stalwart and consecrated member and minister.

Brother Rogerson was born at Fall River, Massachusetts, May 19, 1861, and united with the church in 1872. At the age of twenty-four he was ordained a priest of the Aaronic order. Three years later the office of elder was conferred, and to the end of his days he gave unstinted, enthusiastic, and loyal service to the church.

For seventeen years he presided over the New Bedford (Massachusetts) Branch, and during that period maintained a substantial church center. Since that time, for short periods, he has presided over Fall River Branch.

His service for the church reveals a thorough conversion to the restored gospel, and he received an undying testimony of its divinity. His living faith matured with the years, and he was able to meet the end with complacency and with the assurance of immortality. His last conscious thoughts were of the church.

He is survived by his widow, Alice (Holland) Rogerson; his son, Ismael E.; and two grandchildren, Marion and Willard. Following a brief service at his late home, the body was taken to the church Tuesday, March 10, where a large gathering of people paid sincere respect to a devoted relative, an honorable citizen, and a consecrated minister. Elder William Patterson preached the funeral sermon and was assisted by Bishop M. C. Fisher, and Pastors D. E. Dowker and Abram Law, of Boston and New Bedford, respectively.

Conference in Southern Ohio

Three ordinations were cared for at the close of the early morning prayer service, Sunday, March 8, during the sessions of the district conference held at First Columbus Church. Joseph Williams and Emery Williams were ordained elders and William Davis a deacon, Brothers Rockwell, Grice, and Anderton officiating. The first two names together with that of Brother Jesse Reed, of Jackson, were approved on the preceding day by the conference. Brother Reed was ordained at the Saturday evening service by Brothers Roy Gray and A. E. Anderton.

The business meetings on Saturday brought news that Apostle C. F. Ellis could not be present until Sunday morning and that Brother Jacob Halb had been transferred to Northwestern Ohio District. Working organization was effected by the choice of Elder A. E. Anderton, of Columbus, to preside over the conference assisted by Floyd Rockwell, J. G. Halb, J. R. Grice, H. E. French, and C. F. Ellis. G. H. Kirkendall, T. R. Beatty, and Roy Gray were made credentials committee; Nathan Weate, chorister; John Crosier and William Welsh, ushers; A. W. and S. B. Kriebel the administration committee; Elmer Caldwell, publicity man; Sister Lucinda Madden, secretary. Reports were read, and there were talks by the district missionaries.

A prayer hour led by the district missionaries opened the conference sessions.

Other business was cared for, and officers elected: District President, A. E. Anderton; vice president, Floyd Rockwell; director of church school, Leonard Barker. These were given a splendid corps of helpers in musical, worship, financial, and educational lines.

After the business session, encouragement was given by Bishop H. E. French, who told of conditions in the general church and changes that are being effected. He gave us an intense desire to help carry forward the program of the church.

An entertaining program was presented at eight o'clock by the dramatic class.

On Sunday, following the prayer, ordination, and church school services, Apostle Clyde F. Ellis spoke. District singers enhanced the attractiveness of the program. A short meeting to conclude business in the afternoon, and a talk by Brother Halb, then Apostle Ellis was the evening speaker.

Despite the general financial depression, this conference was well attended and the members strengthened. A splendid feeling of fellowship ruled. With Brother Ellis we have come to the conclusion that this financial depression is the best thing that ever happened to the world in time of peace, because it brings men to the realization that they can not carry on their affairs by their own power. We pray for strength and greater courage to do God's bidding, that all may go forward.

Far West Stake

Annual Conference

Apostle E. Henry Edwards presented a forceful sermon the evening of March 6 at First Saint Joseph Church, which opened the annual conference of Far West Stake. In spite of Saturday's blizzard, a good-sized group of people met for the opening business meeting at eleven o'clock and remained throughout the day. Apostle Edwards spoke Saturday and Sunday evenings, and on the latter night about three hundred heard him.

Elder Ward A. Hougas was the Sunday morning speaker and emphasized the recommendations made in his report to the conference. The afternoon found the basement of Second Church filled with Saints and friends and prepared for a service of baptism. Eight people were baptized; then followed the confirmation service at First Church.

An outstanding feature of the conference was the religious drama, "The Challenge of the Cross," presented by First Saint Joseph players as a prelude to Brother Edwards's closing sermon, "What Is a Latter Day Saint?"

In the business sessions the following officers were elected: Director of church school, Clifford B. Constance, Cameron; supervisor of women's activities, Sister C. R. Liggett, Saint Joseph; stake chorister, Evan J. Ehlers, Saint Joseph. The matter of the selection of councilors and the reorganization of the high council was covered in a document presented to the conference by the stake president. Action was unanimous concerning each name presented, and the following recommendations were approved: Counselor to stake president: F. L. Hinderks, Cameron; high councilmen: Archie B. Constance, Stewartville; Benjamin R. Constance, Cameron; Thomas Fiddick, Cameron; William G. Hamann, Richmond; Alec Jensen, Conception Junction, Missouri; L. A. Keck, Saint Joseph; Howard C. Timm, Saint Joseph; David Gamet, Cameron, Missouri.

Various reports were adopted in the form presented. By vote it was determined to declare the branch at Edgerton Junction disorganized. No active work has been carried on there for some time.

Meals were served in the basement of the church.

In spite of inclement weather, attendance was good, and the spirit of harmony and peace characterized all sessions. That the church is facing a new epoch in its development seemed to be the sentiment of everyone present. Ours is a tremendous task. Let us be at it.

Side Lights

Faith and Works

Several years ago a Protestant minister living on the west side of the Mississippi River, held meetings on the east side. The river was half a mile wide, and the preacher employed a public service man who owned a little boat propelled by use of two paddles to take him across to his appointment. The energetic evangelist often engaged in an argument with the boatman on gospel topics, although they strongly disagreed.

One Sunday morning the question of faith and works was discussed. The preacher advocated that faith alone was all sufficient to gain full salvation in Christ, while the captain asserted that works must be associated with faith, assuring the passenger that the Bible taught that faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, and other gospel principles were necessary to full obedience. The discussion reached its height at the midchannel of the stream, at which time a happy thought came to the oarsman, and he said to the preacher, I will demonstrate my position by naming my two oars, Faith and Works. He then laid the one named Works in the bottom of the boat, using Faith only, with the result that they were soon going round and round. He then put Faith aside and used Works, reversing the experience. Finally the minister consulted his watch and nervously said, "I don't want to be late to my appointment; please use both Faith and Works."

Let us learn a practical lesson from the foregoing, and then faithfully abide by the whole gospel law which includes tithes, offerings, etc. Then the blessed old ship of Zion will make swift progress, and the safe anchorage "designed of God for his people, unity, sanctification, and glory" will soon be realized. It can be done. Will you be a more faithful helper this year? The truly courageous members are those who never give up.

Living beyond Their Means

The National Association of Credit Men, through its president, Doctor C. W. Phelps, says the American people have abused the installment credit selling and buying system so greatly that the ill effects on business and destruction of happiness and homes can not be estimated. More than one fourth of the American people are living beyond their means. They contract weekly and monthly obligations larger than their incomes. They fail to rightly budget their incomes. It is also estimated that only one half pay bills promptly, forty per cent are slow, and ten per cent buy on credit without even intending to pay, hence "the time is here when true happiness, strength, peace of mind, prosperity, and in a large measure morals depend on whether the people will live within their means."

Waxed Fat and Kicked

"But Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked: . . . then he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation."—Deuteronomy 32:15. It is very evident from present-day happenings in this Nation that cause and effect are very much the same as in Old Testament times. The Israelitish ruler, Jeshurun, amassed wealth and power, but by not using them for righteous purposes soon forsook God. Thousands of happy homes are broken up every year because one or more of the family permits the "deceitfulness of riches" to allure them into those evil things so destructive of true Christian character that the wealth of materialism often destroys their desire and ability to do good. In some instances our own church has suffered in like manner. A careful observance of the temporal and spiritual law of the church is a safeguard for the well-being of every family. Righteousness blesses the home, the church, and exalts a nation.

Churches in America

A popular newspaper reports that there are two hundred thousand church buildings in the United States, and in sixty thousand of these edifices not one convert was made in twelve months. The paper further states that "there was a time when it was hard to find enough pulpits for men who wanted to preach the gospel; now it is impossible to find anywhere nearly enough men to fill the existing pulpits." The movie and radio are listed as causes for church declines. It is estimated that about one fifth of the population of the United States attends the movies each day.

Life Insurance

It is reported that the total volume of life insurance in force in the United States at the end of 1930 was $108,500,000,000, and that America owns about seventy per cent of all the life insurance in the world.

Paragraphs of Interest

"Those who do only what they are paid for will never be paid very much. Success comes to people who are not considering the narrow question of what they are paid for, but the broad question of what they can do to be helpful. It is that attitude which leads to promotion of the individual, the profit of the business, and the prosperity of the nation."

It might be well not to exhaust all your patience and strength on one child, for cares and anxieties are born with every one, and quite frequently, as the children are bent, the parents are inclined to "go broke."

Doctor John W. Holland said, "Troubles are no proof that God has forgotten us, but rather a reminder of the fact that we may be worth refining in the fire. . . . Temper uncontrolled is a sort of insanity. If we master our tempers, we can also master our tongues. Flee temper as you would the Devil if you expect to make another person happy."

C. J. HUNT.

Bisbee, Arizona

Bisbee Branch had as guest and fellow helper, Stake Missionary S. S. Smith Sunday, March 8. Good congregations listened to his discourses morning and evening. He also preached some miles out in the country in the afternoon.

Bisbee members are not standing still. Raymond Ratterree, teacher of the young people's class, has created considerable social interest among the young people. They have organized a young people's prayer and testimony service, which meets every Tuesday evening at 7.30 in one of the homes. The Department of Recreation and Expression is going forward. A splendid play was presented the first Sunday of the month by the young people, and now the adult class is preparing an Easter play, "The Beautiful City."

Iowa Members Are Busy

"We are keeping busy at Montrose, Fort Madison, and Keokuk, Iowa, dividing our time between these places," writes Sister A. M. Chase. "This week Brother Chase is conducting missionary meetings at Montrose which are quite well attended."

The Women's Department at Montrose is active and contributes liberally to branch expenses. The young people's class, under the supervision of Sister O. T. Miller, is planning to give the play, "The Challenge of the Cross," at Easter. A bazaar will be held about that time by the Women's Department, Sisters Ben Strange and R. N. Smith in charge.

Fort Madison Saints are working to keep up payments on their church. They have advertised a dinner on a night in the near future. A play will be given March 27, and a bazaar the early part of April.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

Because President F. M. McDowell was called from headquarters, Elder U. W. Greene was asked to preach in his place Sunday evening. He used his collection of slide scenes taken a few years ago on his trip to Palestine. Brother McDowell will be with us next Sunday evening, to give a short address in connection with the evening Easter program.

Young people of the stake between thirteen and thirty years who can sing or play are eligible to enter the music contest. There will be mixed choruses, boys' and girls' quartets, mixed quartets, vocal solos, piano, and violin. No other instruments will be entered this time. More definite announcements concerning rules of the contest will be made next week. The committee is hard at work.

Sunday's services of worship, study, music, and preaching were planned and carried out to supply the needs of the entire congregation. Pastor C. E. Wight delivered the morning sermon.

Fourth Church

The young people were more numerous than the adults at our sacramental service the first day of the month. There has been a decrease in attendance, but growth in numbers is anticipated now that the weather is warmer.

Clarence A. Burney, criminal judge of Kansas City, talked the evening of March 1. Judge Burney gave lax discipline in the home, laxity of living religiously, and lack of church influence as causes for many of our present social problems.

"Shall He Find Faith on the Earth?" was the title of a sermon by Elder H. O. Smith, of Independence, the morning of March 8. That evening Elder H. H. Sevy preached from Matthew 9: 16, 17.

During the Sunday morning family worship period March 17, Elder E. W. Lloyd read a letter from Bertha Horn, an eleven-year-old isolated Saint, of Richmond, Missouri, which encouraged all those who heard. G. T. Richards preached that morning on the Indian, saying, "White man talk too much," emphasizing the fact that often he does not practice what he says.

Esther, Missouri

This is a small branch near Flat River, Missouri, in the lead belt, organized a few years ago under the direction of Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Elder H. A. Higgins. Elder A. M. Baker was the instigator in setting up the kingdom of God here through district tent preaching. Others who have labored here are Elders J. W. Paxton, G. F. Barraclough, G. S. Trowbridge, and J. W. A. Bailey.

Our one elder, Brother Ellis Jarrells, is branch president and does most of the preaching. To help him he has Brothers Albert and George Richardson, priests. These men are exerting themselves to keep the flock together, which task is made difficult at times by the fact that we have no church home.

District President Bruce E. Brown was here last fall and gave much good advice, and as a result, obtained better attendance.

Five adults have been baptized during the last year by Elder Jarrells, and the branch record numbers twenty-one members. We have adopted the church school program.

Independence

"Jackson County has the finest system of schools of any in the State," was the observation of W. G. Dillon, state school inspector, who lately visited the rural institutions of the county in company with the county superintendent. Improvements in the schools of the county in the eight years he has been inspecting them, have impressed Mr. Dillon, who praised the acquiring of new buildings and equipment and the good teaching staff.

Stone Church

It was a timely subject that Presiding Bishop Albert Carmichael brought to the Saints Sunday morning, "Stewardships." The choir and instrumental musicians created for the speaker a musical background. There were two anthems, "Sing to the Lord," and "Praise the Lord," a soprano solo by Lilly Belle Allen, and a trio of organ, piano, and cello by Robert Miller, George Miller, and Irving Jenkins.

One hundred and one years ago this month, the first edition of the Book of Mormon was taken from the print shop to the world, and of this event the Stone Church made special observance in its evening program. In drama form was told the story of the Savior's birth, life, and death, as it was witnessed by the people of the western hemisphere and recorded in the Book of Mormon. The play, written by Sister W. A. Page, was presented by the White Masque Players under the direction of Sister Louise Jennings. Good characterizations, stage settings, lighting effects, and organ music made the entertainment very impressive. Music was furnished by the ladies' chorus and the congregation. Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge, assisted by Elder H. E. Winegar, of Colorado.

The general Sunday prayer services offer members the opportunity to worship with prayer, song, and testimony. The Saints meet at eight o'clock in the morning in the main auditorium, and in the afternoon at 2.30 Elder J. M. Terry is assisted by other local ministers in the lower auditorium. These services do much to give the members courage and good cheer.

Elder C. B. Woodstock talked to the junior young people in their 10.45 Sunday morning worship service on "Reverence for Wisdom," and music was by girls of the department.

Socials and parties during this week have commemorated the birthday of Saint Patrick, chief entertainments being sponsored by the adult division of the Stone Church school which met in the dining hall Tuesday evening for a time of conversation, music, and refreshments; and the Herald Publishing House which on Friday entertained its employees and their families to the number of eighty with games, a program, and refreshments. Friday was also the regular monthly meeting of the Patroness Society, and a Saint Patrick's program of readings and music was enjoyed. On this day two new members were voted into the society.

Among the members whom death has lately claimed was Marvin L. Booker, twenty-one-year-old son of Sister Maude Booker. Marvin, who was ill only a short time, passed away at the Independence Sanitarium in the early morning of March 18. He leaves to mourn his mother, eight sisters, three brothers, a grandmother, and many friends. The funeral was held from the Stone Church, March 20, in charge of Elder J. M. Terry. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Fourteen young women of Independence this week complete a course in Girl Scout leadership training which opened March 16 under the instructorship of Miss Ansel, a national Girl Scout worker. Of this number ten are from the Stone Church congregation, and will function this summer in the organizations of our girls.

Walnut Park

Saints in Independence are hearing often concerning their duties as citizens of the center place. The speaker March 22, Elder Herbert Barto, spoke pointedly of evils that must be entirely eliminated by those who will be allowed to remain in this city of refuge while the righteous are gradually gathered in and the undesirable ones removed.

In the evening Bishop A. Carmichael continued his sermon of last Sunday on organizing stewardships. He showed why some past efforts had failed, and is eagerly longing to see the Lord's plan followed in detail by all professing Saints. "When ye do what I say, then am I bound; otherwise there is no promise."

Preceding the evening sermon, a well-filled house enjoyed a sacred concert by the Independence Chamber of Commerce Glee Club, a number of the members being Latter Day Saints. J. M. Sexton is director, Brother Robert Miller, pianist.

There have been some very sick ones among our number recently, but all are reported better. Lewis Mauzey is home from the Sanitarium, and little Warren Closson is said to be out of danger. Sister Leonard Hoisington is gaining just a little. Sister Glaude A. Smith, of Denver, has relatives and many friends here who are remembering her prayerfully in her severe illness.

Enoch Hill

Good sermons have been heard by Saints of this district the last two Sundays from Elders C. K. Green, A. B. Phillips, J. E. Vanderwood, and B. J. Scott.

The resignation of Charles Warren as church school director was accepted by the branch Sunday morning, March 15, and C. E. Beal was elected to take his place.

An especially responsive prayer meeting of the young people was held March 11 at the church. Program numbers were enjoyed, and the time allotted to prayer and testimony was profitably spent.

L. F. Heath, a young man of this congregation employed at the Portland Cement Plant, suffered a severe head injury March 18, while helping move some heavy machinery. The cable which was being used to move the machinery broke, the free end striking Brother Heath on the left side of the face and slashing up into his ear. He was rushed to the Sanitarium, where he is reported to be improving.

Ottumwa Saints received sad news March 17 when word arrived from Honolulu of the death of the son of Brother and Sister Santee. The young man was serving in a navy hospital in that country, and death was caused by an abscess on the brain. He was twenty years of age. The body will arrive in Ottumwa about April 15. The deceased was a promising youth whose three years of service in the navy would have expired next November. He had planned at his release to come home.

Our Departed Ones

RICHMOND.—Molly Clara Richmond, wife of R. J. Richmond, died at the family home in East Bremerton, Washington, February 9, 1931. She lived in East Bremerton a number of years. Was born in Baltimore, Maryland, October 8, 1848. Became a member of the church in San Jose, California, September 6, 1906, and was a faithful member. Though isolated most of her life, her light did not cease to shine. Besides her husband she is survived by a son, W. A. Green, a stepson, Kenneth Richmond, two grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

JUNKINS.—Ethel Alma Junkins was born June 3, 1889, at Belmont, Nebraska, and died March 5, 1931. She united with the church November 13, 1899, at Cove, Arkansas, and remained a true member. November 27, 1907, she married Guy Lane, and to them two children were born, Mildred Carrie and Orville Thomas. On November 13, 1922, she was married to Herbert Junkins. Leaves to mourn her husband of Kansas City, Missouri; her son and daughter, of Independence, Missouri; mother, Mrs. L. J. Rudd, of Holden, Missouri; four sisters and one brother: Mrs. John Diehl, Lees Summit, Missouri; Mrs. Pearl Williams, Holden, Missouri; L. B. Rudd and Mrs. W. C. Williams, Kingsville, Missouri; and Mrs. A. E. Powers, Merriam, Kansas; other relatives, and many friends. The funeral was conducted by F. C. Scarcliff. Interment was in Holden Cemetery.

EVANS.—Mary Ellen (Nellie) Evans was born in Mountain Ash, South Wales, April 14, 1891. Died suddenly at her home in Scranton, Pennsylvania, January 30, 1931. She married William Evans in April, 1909. Surviving are her husband; one son, Arthur; two daughters, Ann and Mable; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lot Bishop, of Johnson City, New York; brothers: William and Ernest Davies, of Scranton, and Albert Davies, of Philadelphia; and several half-sisters, of Johnson City, New York. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints August 1, 1906, and was faithful until the end. The funeral was held at the home February 3, the sermon by Thomas Jones. Interment was in Washburn Street Cemetery.

SCHUMAKER.—Grace Deborah Schumaker was born at Northville, Illinois, June 14, 1904; and passed away at the Waterman Hospital at Waterman, Illinois, March 16, 1931. At the age of two years she moved to Little Rock, Illinois, with her parents where her entire childhood was spent. April 9, 1920, she was united in marriage to George Kimpan. To this union was born three children, one daughter, Angolda, preceding her in death March 6, 1924, Georgie and Sylvia Grace. She was baptized and became a member of the church June 15, 1930, Elder R. E. Davey officiating. She was a member of the Women of Mooseheart Lodge. She leaves to mourn her untimely departure, her husband, George; one son, Georgie; one daughter, Sylvia; her father and mother; four sisters: Mrs. Blanche Shau, Mrs. Velma Flauin, Gladys, and June; and one brother, Clair; also a host of other relatives and friends. Funeral services were in charge of Marion M. Blakely, pastor of Sandwich Branch. Elder J. M. Blakely gave the address. A service was held at the home in Sandwich, also at Community Church in Little Rock, Illinois.

BOOKER.—Marvin Lee Booker, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Booker, was born at Skinnerton, Alabama, May 18, 1909, and passed from this life March 18, 1931, at the Independence Sanitarium after a brief illness. On August 5, 1917, he united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, being baptized by J. R. Harper, at McKenzie, Alabama, and confirmed by S. M. Slover and J. G. Vickery. His father preceded him in death. Left to mourn are his mother, Mrs. Maude Booker, of the home at Independence, Missouri; eight sisters: Mrs. Alice Patrick, Independence; Mrs. J. M. Enfinger, Brewton, Alabama; Mrs. Madie Hunter, Kansas City, Missouri; Eula, Mary, Milder, and Johnie May, of the home; and Jewell, of Repton, Alabama; three brothers, Zeno O. Booker, Independence; Burnie and Lloyd of the home; a grandmother, Mrs. Ella Raines, Repton, Alabama; other relatives, and many friends. The funeral at the Stone Church in Independence was largely attended. D. O. Cato was in charge; and the sermon was by J. M. Terry. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

JENSON.—Lorraine Joyce Jenson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Anton Jenson, of Audubon, Minnesota, was born August 29, 1929; blessed June 1, 1930, by Swen Swenson and M. O. Erickson, at Audubon. She passed away November 24, 1930, after three days of illness from intestinal flu.

TRUE.—Isaac True was born April 14, 1835, and was a pioneer member of the Canton, Ohio, Branch. He became a member of the Reorganized Church February 6, 1890, and was ordained a priest by Gomer T. Griffiths September 11, 1898. He had been a citizen of Canton for fifty years, coming there from New Philadelphia, Ohio. His first wife, Hester Walker True, died March 27, 1887. Eight children were born to this union, and there now survive from this marriage: Mrs. Josephine Ormsby, of Harvey, Illinois; Mrs. Margaret Livingston, Canton, Ohio; Mrs. Catherine Fisher, East Canton; Harlan True, Missouri; Mrs. Emily Dougherty, Canton. He also leaves a widow, Susan M. True, two sons, Mahlon and Charles True, a daughter, Mrs. Lillian Lippirt; twenty grandchildren, thirty-eight great-grandchildren, four great-great grandchildren, and many friends. He died March 4, 1931. He was of a determined and loyal disposition, and set an example of faith and endurance for all. Interment was beside his wife at Melshimers Cemetery, at North Industry, Ohio, March 7. Sermon was by W. E. Lewis, assisted by R. A. Smith.

BRADSHAW.—Lewis J. Bradshaw was born August 4, 1843, at Charleston, Virginia. He was baptized and confirmed a member of the church June 11, 1876, at Pittsfield, Illinois, by Charles Mills. Was ordained a deacon July 24, 1886, at Clinton, Missouri, by I. N. White and William Thompson. Was ordained a teacher March 16, 1897, at New Windsor, Colorado, by J. B. Roush and C. B. Goldsberry. His life and labor were a constant testimony to the love he had for the gospel. He was instrumental in converting many to the faith in Colorado, people who are now faithful workers. Passed away January 1, 1931, at Ontario, Oregon. The funeral was held at Eaton, Colorado, in charge of K. G. Broliar, of Fort Collins.

The First Easter Lily

*Dead hills slate faced against a pallid moon,
A brooding sea—
A restless forest whispering a song
Of mystery;
And sorrow cringing at the gates of old Gethsemane.*

*Misty the stars as though the stress of grief
Had filmed their eyes.
Voiceless the world with God's black bars adown
The brooding skies.
As though to shut the makers of his woe
From paradise.*

*But lo! a gleam lights up the somber hills,
The dead trees stir,
Across the heavy night steals the sweet scent
Of spice and myrrh.
A golden halo rests above a cold
White sepulcher.*

*And in that glow, an angel robed in white
Stands all alone;
One hand upon a chariot of stars,
One on the stone
That seals the grave of Him the grieving God
Has named His own.*

*And all unseen by man or beast or bird,
Ere night has spun
Her sable woof across a saddened world,
The sleeping One
Answers the call that floats adown the stars,
"Come, my dear Son!"*

*Thus Christ arose from his white sepulcher
And journeyed home;
And where the angels knelt, a lily grew
Beside the tomb;
And those who came saw Christ in its glad face

—A. P. McKisknie.

First Things First

II.—“HEAR YE HIM”

On a certain memorable occasion Christ said to his apostles, “Whom say men that I am?” There were many answers to be given, for the air was as full of rumors then as it is today. Opinions ranged from the belief that he was a glutton and a wine-bibber to the conviction that he was one of the major prophets. Christ then put to his disciples this question, “Whom say ye that I am?” Peter answered, “Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God.” An instant later the Master said, “On that rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.” The church, with all that it is and has, with its doctrines, its organization, its ideals, its hope and belief, rests upon the fact that Christ is the Son of God. Collectively and individually we must build upon that rock.

Safety When Things Go Wrong

Bishop Carmichael is one of my most valued and intimate friends; more than a friend, he has been a teacher to me. Many years ago he brought home to my mind forcibly in one of his sermons the fact that every Latter Day Saint should cherish first of all within his soul the testimony and the conviction that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God. He should pray for this testimony to be in his heart, and for its perpetuity. Then no matter what shall go wrong in the world or in the church, the fundamentals of his faith are not shattered. He can always fall back upon that eternal truth. If false and agnostic philosophies endeavor to shake his faith, if trusted men fail and go wrong, if there is confusion in the world and betimes trouble in the church, he can always fall back for consolation and support to that eternal truth and plant his feet upon that eternal rock. In these perilous times the safety of the church and of the individual members of the church will be found in adherence to that fundamental truth.

He Builds the Church

In the first revelation given to Joseph Smith in the beginning of the marvelous work and a wonder, Christ was presented to him, and the Lord said, “This is my son; hear ye him.” It is fundamentally important, then, first of all, that we shall not only believe in him but that we shall hear and heed him. He declared, “I will build my church.” He is the master builder, we the fellow laborers with him. If we would build in accord with his wishes, we must hear and heed his voice. If we would work in harmony with his will, we must be under the direction of his Spirit.

Be Ready to Hear His Voice

If we are to heed his voice, it follows naturally that we must be in condition and in position to hear his voice. He said, “My sheep know my voice, and another they will not follow.” Have you the assurance within your own soul that you are one of those designated as his sheep? No matter what the process of repentance and spiritual adjustment that may be necessary, it is well worth the cost to put oneself in that category. In the times of trial coming upon the earth and upon the church, there is no thing more vital or primary or important than that we as a people and individuals should both hear and heed his voice. Let us earnestly beseech his guidance and be ready in the hour and in the day when he shall speak.

The Root of Many Sorrows

Most of the sorrows of the church in the past have come from a failure to hear and heed his plain and oftentimes explicit warnings. The classic example with us is the warning against polygamy. Reinforcing the law already given in the Book of Mormon, to us he said, “Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else.” Time revealed the wisdom of that commandment. Were the warnings less plain that were given us more recently against the dangers of incurring debt, against the “spirit of speculation and greed for gain” (Doctrine and Covenants 127: 7) that was to invade and all but wreck the business world, and against contention, especially among the priesthood of the church? It is not necessary to comment on the loss that we have suffered in those regards when we did not “hear Him.”

The Fountain of Our Blessings

On the other hand the great spiritual and temporal blessings, the times of joy and of peace have come to us individually and as a church when we did “hear Him.” Our times of spiritual and mental growth, our periods of pentecostal blessing, our happy moments of undivided fellowship “like to that above” have been ours when and only when we were willing to “hear Him.” May we learn to heed his warnings against dangers, and equally to heed his plain teachings that open the fountains of blessing and success. “Hear ye Him.”

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Adversity is like the period of the former and latter rains—cold, comfortless, unfriendly to man and to animal, yet from thence come on the flower and the fruit, the date, the rose, and the pomegranate.
—Sir Walter Scott.

God's Will—and Ours

It is a mistake to place upon God the responsibility for conditions that have come about because of the errors of man. This we are inclined to do at times.

For instance, we quote, "The poor we have always with us," and forget to do all that we might to relieve poverty. We say, "God will have a tried people," and submit to trials that could have been avoided had we been alert and more courageous. We console ourselves with, "Whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth," when the blows of our own ignorance and folly have fallen upon us. We bow our heads in resignation and say, "It is the will of God," when times without number the misfortune which has come is simply the result of our failure to do the will of God.

The retrenchment measures adopted recently by the church have been interpreted as "the will of God" by some who have felt the need of facing the future philosophically. I think there is a more secure philosophy.

I can not conceive of its being the will of God that this people, or the world, should be subject to economic diseases of which this is but one example. I think it is the will of God that men shall make the laws of his kingdom the laws of social life; that through this transformation the injustices and inequalities of our present society shall finally be eliminated. Anything less is not the will of God but the will of man.

While we are quoting, we may well recall these lines from the Fishing River revelation of 1834: "Were it not for the transgressions of my people . . . they might have been redeemed even now; . . ." But they "are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, . . ."

If we have not been so united, if we have not launched our lives out upon these principles, we have suffered the disappointments of our failure to do so. This is our will. The will of God is that we shall yet achieve the union that will build his kingdom.

"Religious Education Carries On"

Our readers and church workers are especially requested to note the communication from the First Presidency which is presented in the department of "Church Work and Services" in this issue. With the readjustment of the budget and the drastic reduction that has taken place in the ranks of our workers, the church is obliged to realign its forces for the carrying on of its tasks. With the loyal cooperation of all who will and can help, we should succeed in pushing the work forward even in this lean and trying year.

A New Department

A new department is appearing in this week's Herald. "Fact and Opinion" will be a heading under which will appear articles from our readers of a constructively critical and suggestive nature. For some time it has been the intention of the editors to provide some means for the exchange of opinion upon topics of current interest. The article that appears in the new department gave the necessary excuse for starting.

We hope that we may receive from our readers articles and letters that will be of value and of general interest to the people of the church. We shall not feel responsible to publish contributions which in our judgment do not have these qualities.

Rumor

In trying times, guesses and speculations multiply. Sometimes they have a foundation in fact, and sometimes they do not. Whatever their basis in fact may be, they do not long stick to the facts. Soon they are embellished with extravagant imagination. What one person relates as a guess, a second person tells as a probability, a third asserts as a fact, and a fourth will swear is eternal truth. Such is the credulity of humanity.

If these rumors were harmless, like ghost stories and fairy tales, no one would care. But they are often imbued with malice, jealousy, mischief, and even revenge.

It has been this editor's experience within the last two weeks to hear three rumors concerning men and the church which were stated as positive facts. He investigated them and found them to be false, as false as if they had been deliberate lies. More than that, they were maliciously false; they harmed character, and they harmed the church. It will not be long before their falseness will be exposed to everybody. The simple course of facts will disprove them. We would wish that the gossipers would be abashed by their inaccuracy. But such is the character of the monger of rumor that he is not ashamed when he is exposed. He goes blithely on concocting more rumors. There seems to be no way to devise fit punishment for him.

All that we can do is to warn other people against the bearer of rumors, especially of a disparaging nature. Check up on his statements before you believe him. Then if you find that he has made unfair or false statements, never believe him again.

One member of the Twelve was told by the people after his visit in one branch: "We are glad you came; you have settled for us a good many false rumors that are afloat."

Let us determine to carry on in the work, and resolve to be sure of the truth before we believe a rumor.

Power from Without

The second thing that differentiates Pentecost sharply from modern tendencies is that whatever happened power seems not to have come from within man, but from without. "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." "There came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind." Pentecost presented resources from without to man; it was not merely a quickening and developing of resources from within.—E. Stanley Jones, in The Christ of Every Road.

Religious feeling develops in man's reaction to two mysteries, the mystery of the world and the mystery of self. Religion is not only reaction to mystery, but it is that at least. Primitive man stands in awe of the immensities of nature and combines with his reverence a sense of dependence upon the vast forces of the world which impinge upon his life, defy his control, and yet frequently determine his destiny. While some primitive religion represents a crude attempt to bend these forces to man's will and need, religion in its higher reaches expresses gratitude for and dependence upon the universal forces which affect him beneficially. Modern science has not abolished mystery nor changed the fact of man's dependence. But modern urban civilization has produced a type of person who is divorced from nature and lives under the illusion that he is the master of his fate, except as he recognizes his dependence upon his fellows. . . . Naturally, the mystery of the world concerns man only or chiefly as it relates itself to the mystery of selfhood. Men discovered the world before they discovered themselves, but they explained the world in terms of the phenomena of conscious life even before they discovered themselves.—Reinhold Niebuhr, "Christian Faith in the Modern World."

Appointment of District Presidents

Owing to recent changes in assignment of missionary fields by the Joint Council, the following appointments of district presidents are made by the First Presidency to fill out unexpired terms. These changes are made subject to approval of the next district conference:

Eastern Colorado District: Glaude A. Smith, vice E. B. Hull, resigned.

Central Nebraska District: E. B. Hull, vice R. M. Russell, resigned.

Northeast Nebraska District: E. B. Hull, vice Blair Jensen, resigned.

Southern Nebraska District: O. L. D'Arcy, vice E. J. Lenox, resigned.

Northwestern Kansas District: O. L. D'Arcy.

Central Michigan District: Hubert Case, vice J. W. Peterson, resigned.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 27, 1931.

Oh, the bigness of mind and heart and soul man can express in the little things! It is not the big philanthropic movements but the little things which test and try a man's religion. Meeting with fortitude the daily temptations, patience always with those little interruptions, kindness shown to the erring brother, these, practiced daily, give us the religion of everyday life. Love, shown daily, not spasmodically, beautifies the world.—Selected.

A Ballad of Trees and the Master

Into the woods my Master went,
Clean forspent, forspent.
Into the woods my Master came,
Forspent with love and shame.
But the olives they were not blind to Him,
The little gray leaves were kind to Him:
The thorn tree had a mind to Him
When into the woods He came.

Out of the woods my Master went,
And He was well content.
Out of the woods my Master came,
Content with death and shame.
When Death and Shame would woo Him last,
From under the trees they drew Him last:
'Twas on a tree they slew Him—last
When out of the woods He came.

Retribution

Last week an amateur detective aided in the capture of a man who is said to be a most dangerous kind of criminal. If the man who was taken is guilty of the crimes his captors think he is, the "long arm of the law" has reached and taken another who thought he had escaped.

At the time of the now famous Saint Valentine's Day massacre in Chicago, it was feared that the guilty had escaped. One of the gangs in its struggle for control of the vice-gambling-and-beer rackets of the city had captured a number of the members of another gang, lined them up in an old garage, and mowed them down with a deadly shower of bullets. The world at large is almost complacent when gangsters kill each other, for it means simply a reduction of an element that is always a menace. But there was something so brutal and revolting in this massacre that it seemed a threat against society.

This capture should bring a small measure of much needed assurance to those who obey the law and expect it to protect them. It should also be a warning to those who would enter a career of crime. Justice is hard to defeat. The fugitive is always in danger.

Now we know that there is one use in reading detective story magazines. The man who first suspected the captive did so because he had read the story and had seen the pictures in such a magazine.

Unpreparedness

"The trouble with goloshes," remarked one of our fellow editors, "is that they are always in the other place. If it rains during the day, I have left them at home. If it rains at night, I have forgotten and left them at the office."

Unpreparedness strikes all of us at times. Sometimes it is a financial obligation, sometimes it is the woodpile when a cold snap comes, and sometimes it is a Sunday school lesson. We fail because we have not prepared.

There are times in life when we are spiritually unprepared for the conditions of life that we have to meet. We know our duty, we know the means of keeping ourselves spiritually fit, and that means of preparation is freely available to every one of us from the weakest to the strongest. Let us be prepared.

Golden Anniversary of the Red Cross

Fifty years ago next month a little group of men and women at Danville, New York, wrote in deeds the first chapter of the career of the Red Cross organization in America. Danville was the home town of Clara Barton, and she was the first president of the American Association of the Red Cross. This group began the first disaster-relief movement of this country by collecting money and gathering clothing and food, little realizing to what proportions their undertaking would grow in a period of a few years.

Now the Red Cross occupies the role of the mother organization of the world. Its help is extended to sufferers in many lands. Its record tells us of aid extended in no less than one thousand disasters. It has spent roughly $60,000,000 derived from voluntary contributions, and right now in America is applying itself to the titanic task of caring for several hundred thousand people in twenty-two drought-stricken States.

The international Red Cross movement was begun in Europe something more than a quarter of a century ago, the agreement of the nations tending toward the lessening of the horrors of war by rendering neutral all surgeons, chaplains, and other persons engaged in caring for the wounded, both friend and foe. The United States was invited to join, but fearing an "entangling alliance" hesitated—procrastinated. Miss Barton, who had just successfully completed a nursing campaign in the Franco-Prussian War, grasped the situation, and hurried home to Washington, where she wielded personal persuasion to the extent that the government with some misgivings joined itself to the thirty-one States already in the humane compact. President Garfield appointed her the first president of the organization in America.

At once the possibilities of the organization as a means for aiding sufferers in time of calamity became paramount with the officers, and the Red Cross first carried the gifts and sympathy of the American people to hundreds rendered homeless by the great fires in Michigan, and then to flood sufferers in the Mississippi Valley.

Never has the Red Cross failed to appear early on the scene of disaster, be it earthquake, storm, fire, flood, or riot. It nurses the injured and sick, feeds the hungry, clothes the naked, and helps families to find themselves. Rescuer, mother, nurse, it deserves the honor and support of every one of us.

Rest unto Your Souls

By Evan A. Fry

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.—Matthew 11: 28-30.

There is an old saying that "Experience keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other." Long years ago, experience taught me that some kinds of rest are not rest at all, but the hardest kind of work. I had been working pretty hard at a ceaseless round of activities that kept me busy night and day, and I was due for a brief vacation. I arranged that vacation so that for the first two days and a half I would be in a place where I didn't know a soul, and where I knew I wouldn't be bothered by anyone asking me to lift a finger to do anything. Those two days and a half were packed full of the longest and most tedious hours I ever spent. I bought, read, and discarded every magazine in the hotel, stripped the candy county of chocolates, went boating and swimming when and for as long as I pleased, and in general worked very hard at killing time. It was with a distinct feeling of relief that I saw the advance guard of the rest of the party approaching about noon of the third day. I thought I was going to have a wonderful time resting, but on the contrary my rest was about the most tiring thing I have attempted to do either before or since.

From that little experience, and from more like it since, I have come to the conclusion that rest consists not in a cessation of all activity, but in a change of activity. To illustrate: I spend most of my time indoors humped over a table or desk, and when it is possible for me to get away, I love nothing better than a tramp through some wild, woody country, with an open fire and outdoor meal at the end of the hike. For me, cross country hiking is rest, because it is a change from my usual round of activity. But for the man who walks miles every day across all manner of wild country as he inspects pipe lines, cross country hiking would hardly be called rest. At other times when I have had a more or less nerve-wracking day, I like to climb into my car and drive out into the open country after dark—there to wander aimlessly up and down the highways seeking new scenes and new ways home, and letting the cool night air sweep into my starved lungs. That is rest for me, but it would hardly be rest to the driver of a transcontinental bus whose job was driving a motor vehicle some three hundred miles per day.

All of this dissertation and all of these illustrations can be boiled down to this: that rest is not a state of body; it is a state of mind, or a condition of the soul. Christ never promised that those who came to him should be able to sit down in a rocking-chair, fold their hands, and dwell thereafter in peace and plenty without bodily exertion. He did not say, "Come unto me, and you'll never have to do another day's work in your life"; but "Come unto me, and I will give you rest unto your souls." The fact that he couples with his invitation a command to take his yoke upon you, is prima facie evidence that he expected his followers to keep on working. The yoke is the symbol of servitude—and servants must work. The animal who is brought under a yoke is forced to toil for the benefit of man. So must the Christian, who is brought under the yoke of Christ, be subject to toil and labor and perhaps nights and days of weariness in body for the sake of those he loves. The promise is that the yoke will be easy, and the burden light, if we learn of Him and become like Him—that is, meek and lowly of heart. It is the man who is proud and rebellious of heart who never finds rest unto his soul.

We often sing about and think about the rest that is to be prepared for the righteous in that city whose builder and maker is God. Will that be actual and perpetual physical rest—utter stagnation? Or will it not rather be the rest of a contented mind—of a soul which is made contented by its occupation with the thing that it best loves to do? It seems to me that the most perfect form of rest imaginable for the afterlife would be an uninterrupted opportunity to do all the work that we never had time to complete in this life—with plenty of time, no worry about exchanging our labors for filthy money, and no danger of rejection or bitter criticism from those about us. Kipling has a beautiful and very famous poem expressing this thought, in which the average man and his hobby is presented metaphorically as a painter, who when he reaches eternal rest can "work for an age at a sitting, and never be tired at all."

And now in conclusion, I wish to quote some selected verses from the 37th Psalm: "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him; fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of him who bringeth wicked devices to pass. Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass. Delight thyself also in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thy heart."

When we can truly rest in the Lord, with our mind stayed on him and our labors devoted to the building of his kingdom and the establishing of his will on earth as in heaven, then shall we truly find rest for our souls.

Why I Am a Latter Day Saint

By A. B. Phillips

PART THREE

It was through the message of the church for which I now minister that I became conscious of the great social meaning of Christianity. Today I am profoundly convinced that Jesus Christ was the greatest scientist the world has ever known. I do not refer to the science of botany, though his wisdom has immortalized the lily of the field which toils not, neither does it spin. I do not mean his great knowledge as a naturalist, though it was he who made known to us that even the sparrow is not lost to the notice of God. Neither do I refer to his marvelous power to heal the sick and cure all diseases, before which all the medical science of the ages becomes feeble and insignificant.

The science of the life more abundant, which Jesus has unfolded and demonstrated to us, is the science of all sciences. The laws of this science are presented to us so clearly that everyone may understand. All other sciences have value only when used to promote the supreme science which brings immortality within our reach. And the immortality which Jesus offers is a social status in his heavenly kingdom. But this social good does not begin in the hereafter; it begins here in this life, for its principles apply here as well as in the world to come.

The Kingdom of God

The principles of Jesus are designed to form a social body that shall be assimilated into the kingdom of God which shall finally prevail over all the imperfect systems of men. The triumphant kingdom of God has been promised by all the prophets of the ages who saw the coming of Christ, and the Savior renewed that promise on many occasions while he ministered on earth. The church is ordained of God as the earthly agency of that great social triumph; and if it does not promote it, then its mission must fail.

The kingdom of God is maintained by divine rulership over a people who rightly govern themselves. This may sound like a paradox, but in reality it is a very important truth. God does not intend to take from the righteous their eternal freedom of choice, and he will never need to do so, for they will choose, wisely and well, to walk in his ways. His law is called the perfect law of liberty, because it preserves the only true liberty that anyone can possess. All other roads lead to bondage and death.

The world has invented many systems and schemes of government, most of which were founded upon selfishness, avarice, or lust for power. The foundation of the kingdom of God is pure altruism, therefore it seeks to implant in human hearts the spirit of equity, justice, and brotherhood. Jesus never appeals to selfish qualities, nor encourages selfish aims. Those who obtain eternal life shall live together in amity, hence they must begin to learn this all-important lesson in this life. This social development and its processes must be under the divine law, for we should not labor for the things of this world, except as they are incidental to spiritual values. For this reason Jesus said: "Labor not for the meat that perisheth."

The Principles of the Kingdom

Jesus founded his entire mission upon the principle of love. In promoting the kingdom of God among men he taught them that true love has two expressions, one directed toward God and the other toward man. Out of these two expressions grow all the proper relationships of life, and by them is promoted the well-being of all mankind. The nature, scope, and extent of that love is expressed in the divine command: "Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This command was not intended to be used solely as a motto with which to adorn the walls of a room, but rather it was to be expressed in the deeds of life, and from day to day.

Latter Day Saints believe that all the children of God constitute his kingdom, which is composed of angels and heavenly beings, as well as those on earth who are loyal to his law. In due time the Savior will bring with him all the redeemed of heaven and will establish on earth the millennial reign—the kingdom triumphant, at which time the righteous dead will be resurrected and will reign with him in a glorious kingdom of peace and righteousness which shall cover the earth.

The principles of this kingdom are essentially those which will produce equity, justice, peace, prosperity, and brotherhood wherever they are made the basis of human relations. Heaven would cease to be heaven if unrighteousness prevailed there, and earth would become a heavenly place if all sin were forever banished from its domains. For the principles that produce heaven must find expression in all the relations of life. Life here gives us the opportunity to cooperate with God and further his designs, without which our aims lose importance and our efforts must ingloriously fail.

The Work of the Church

The church is something more than the bearer of good news. It is God's instrument of equity and righteousness among men. If it ceases to promote these things, it is no longer the instrument of God, but becomes the delusive tool of disloyal men. In the faithful performance of its great mission the church is holy, but if it shirks its task it becomes like salt which has lost its seasoning power, which Jesus warns us is good for nothing but to be trodden under the feet of men.

The social principles which our Lord has committed to the church are eternal, and no substitute has been authorized; for all the substitutes of man fall far short of divine wisdom, and it takes divine wisdom to enable man to become immortal. These principles deal with individual conduct, for society is made of individuals. Hence Jesus commanded: "Do unto others as you would have them do to you, for this is the law and the prophets." It is not enough that we are able to quote these sacred words—the Devil can quote scripture. If we are the people of God, we must follow his precepts by performance.

The Savior himself placed emphasis upon deeds rather than words, when he said: "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?" The challenge of his own life was unanswerable to the Jews, for he charged them: "Though ye believe not me, believe the works that I do." The world has disobeyed God and has made a miserable failure, compared to its possibilities. The path that leads into the realm of true freedom is hidden from its eyes, for Jesus says: "Except a man be born anew, he can not see the kingdom of God." Only one born again can sincerely and understandingly pray "Our Father," and only one who is truly brother to all men can say from the heart, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." To accomplish this work in the hearts of men is the task of the church, and it can be done only with divine aid.

Repentance and Regeneration

Christ did not promote his kingdom program by the sword, or by engines of destruction. As the greatest scientist who ever discovered a truth, he taught repentance as the beginning of a better life, and from this change in the human heart follows the regeneration of the individual. Into the soul of his regenerated church God poured the spirit of the divine Fatherhood and human brotherhood, and commanded that it should live according to the law of mutual dependence upon each other by discharging the mutual obligations growing out of that dependence. Thus would the church, as a unit of his kingdom, become a sacred family under his eternal Fatherhood.

The evidence of repentance and regeneration is most convincingly manifested by the new life. Paul says: "The things I once loved I now hate," and to one who is born again these words are sweet with divine meaning. He can understand the wonderful significance of the apostle's exclamation: "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new!" It is the most marvelous experience of the soul. Without this transformation the program of Jesus can not be successfully carried forward by his church.

The Work of the Holy Spirit

The relationship of men with each other has been the greatest problem of all time. It has involved all of the activities of individuals and groups, of families and communities, of states and nations. God made men to live together, and when he affirmed: "It is not good that man should be alone," his direct reference to Adam was not intended to hide the great principle which binds all the human race together. But the social views of men have become perverted until strife, injustice, and crime have blunted their sensibilities and robbed them of their heritage. Only the Devil, or one who has borrowed the Devil's robe, will be guilty of asking the question: "Am I my brother's keeper?"

The influence of the Holy Spirit is essential to that people who manifest one Father and one brotherhood. It melts the heart in unity, and opens the eyes to see spiritual things as the real things of life that do not pass away. The sociological importance of this truth is repeatedly taught in the Scriptures. In no other way can we acquire the mind of Christ—the universal mind of truth—for he declares that when the Spirit of truth is come, "He will guide you into all truth." The revelation and the unfolding of more truth are necessary to those who respond to Paul's admonition: "Let us go on unto perfection."

Cause and Effect

The doctrine of Christ is not a web of unreality or vain theorizing. It is the wisdom of God concerning human needs and human conduct. It is the essence of eternal principles which are necessary to bring success. It is the law of certain results, and it bears the formula: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." We can not serve God and mammon, and the wages we choose are the wages of righteousness, or the wages of sin. The path we choose determines the place to which we go, for every act of life must produce its results.

There is no such thing as an act which has no consequences.

Our great problem is embedded in the individual differences that cause the wrong choices of men. The kingdom of heaven is like a net that gathers of every kind, says Jesus. It thus becomes our stupendous task to unify the thinking processes of a people who are more or less blindly struggling for a common goal. We must help all to see that selfishness and evil choices are the most expensive of all luxuries.

Is it by nature's law that untold millions are starving today because the world has just produced the greatest crop of food products ever known? Does the bountiful harvest produce famine? Does the sweat of diligent labor cause men to go without the useful articles they have created? Is the lack of employment caused by lack of wealth? To produce all the things we need would not be difficult, if the things produced were impartially distributed. Within a reasonable time every necessity of life and every required convenience would be in common use, and every worthy brother could share in the common good.

The Divine Plan

The church I represent believes that religious, social, and industrial life are one life in the larger sense, and are all comprehended in the principle of Christian brotherhood, which seeks the unhampered accomplishment of each through the unselfish devotion of all. Founded upon regeneration, the motives of a righteous people will lead to spiritual, social, and economic progress and equity. Surplus wealth should be devoted to community of interests, for the word of God teaches that mutual interests overshadow those of the individual. The common good is superior to selfish aims, and he who will not accept his social responsibilities can not be trusted with its benefits. Yet there can be no coercion of those who may differ from the views of others. The ways of God are the ways of peace and fraternity.

God is the owner of all things, but he has given us the privilege and duty of using them as a sacred trust for the benefit of others as well as for ourselves. The church of the Saints believes that all earthly possessions and talents are intrusted to us as stewards of God, with the obligation to use them according to his law and the golden rule. In one of his parables Jesus himself declares that man is a steward, and he commands us: "Occupy till I come."

Every day of life is testing our faithfulness as stewards, and the Lord admonishes us: If ye have not been faithful in that which is another's, who will give you that which is to be your own? He who values worldly riches more than human souls and human need, can not be trusted with the unlimited riches and privileges of eternal life. God created man with social faculties to make living together a divine success. To deny this is to say that he did not provide for the very object he designed to accomplish. But man has strayed far from the divine way, and by his perverted course has caused all the miseries of the world. Such devious paths can never lead to the happy fold of the eternal Shepherd.

The Urge of an Ideal

The great achievements of life result from great struggles to reach ideals. The ideal of religious, social, and economic freedom has inspired all the prophets of the ages, and now Jesus has pointed the way for its attainment. Many societies have been formed with this in view more or less dimly, and from these varied experiences of the past we have learned much. But Christ has warned us that full emancipation is possible only through regeneration and a new life, and it is his plan alone that will or can succeed.

From its beginning, a century ago, this church has stood for the principle of stewardship, the motive of which is love toward God and man. In an early day a colony was formed, and out of the suffering and sacrifice of that time there rises today in silent dignity the world-famed temple of Kirtland, Ohio. The pressure of world forces caused the devoted band of only a few hundred souls to move westward into Missouri, and later into Illinois, where unbelievable sacrifices were made. Today many thousands have returned to Missouri under the urge of this ideal, to emancipate and consecrate anew their sacred powers until God reigns in the hearts of men, and with new-born vision they behold the glory of his kingdom.

Count it your joy to train the members of your church in the fine art of living together. It is the most difficult of all arts, and the church is the school ordained of God for perfecting this art. . . . When you straighten out the tangled relations of your church members to one another, you are contributing to the solution of social problems everywhere.—Doctor Jefferson.

The Story of My Life

By Arthur Leverton

VI.—THE GROWTH OF THE WORK

As told to Nellie Andrew and Illa Brown

We had preached in a number of places the principles of the gospel, but we had never preached a sermon on the coming forth of the Book of Mormon connected with the Restoration. People requested that this subject be presented, so it was announced in the different places that I would preach at the central point on Sunday two weeks from that time, and would endeavor to grant their request. During the time between the announcement and the meeting, I contracted a very severe cold and coughed continually, to the extent that I sometimes coughed blood. There was a very large congregation, and Brother Davis, after the opening exercises of the meeting, made all the apologies that were possible for a man to make, drawing their attention to my condition, and said, "Unless the Lord blesses him, it will be impossible for him to preach," and he even said to me, "Brother Leverton, you can not preach today." I said, "Brother Davis, I can try, and if I fail I will not be under condemnation, but if I do not try I will be under condemnation." Brother Davis arose and announced the speaker and the subject. It was said that I preached two hours and ten minutes, never coughing once. Everybody said it was certainly a miracle. As soon as my preaching service was over, I was coughing as badly as ever. I tell this to show that God cares for his people and will assist them in the discharge of their duty when they put forth an effort to do the will of the Lord. I then had to leave on Monday morning for home. I received word from Brother Davis after I returned home that he baptized a number on Monday (four I think) as the results of that sermon. I was away three months on this particular mission, having left home without a cent, and never wanted for anything. When I returned I had the sum of $2.50 in my pocket.

A Spiritual Feast

When I was presiding over the district, I came to the Kimball Branch, and while there the Saints of the Saint Clair Branch in Michigan and the Saints of the Kimball Branch agreed to have a joint meeting on Sunday. In the prayer meeting Sunday morning there was great diligence manifested by the Saints in their devotions to God, and the Spirit of God was poured out abundantly, so much that the house seemed to be filled with the Spirit. In an open vision given to me, a supernatural being rose in the center of that congregation, having a book on his left arm and a pen or pencil in his right hand. As the Saints arose giving their testimony, I saw his hand distinctly write across the page of the book. As soon as the testimony stopped, his hand stopped writing. As another rose to bear testimony, immediately his hand would write again. This continued for four testimonies, after which the vision closed. Immediately this passage of scripture came to my mind: Malachi 3:16, 17: "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." It left the impression upon my mind that God is ever watching over his people and desiring that their record should be full and that no blank places should be found in the record in the house of the Lord. If we realize that fact, how anxious we should be to bear testimony, to speak of the goodness of God, and have it recorded in the sacred record. It was a wonderful meeting, and I thank our Father in heaven today for his kind acknowledgment.

A Remarkable Prediction

I wish here to relate a prophecy given at the Port Huron reunion held in the fall of 1912, in which the Saints were wonderfully blessed by the outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord, through John W. Wight, who spoke with the gift of tongues and the interpretation of tongues. Almost immediately after he had delivered the message, the Spirit of the Lord rested upon me in the gift of prophecy. After the introduction to the Saints, commending them for the good things they had done, they were warned in the following words: "Behold, verily saith the Lord unto my people, I have warned you of trouble and calamity coming upon the earth by which many, yea! very many, would be bowed down in grief and sorrow, but it has been like an idle tale that was told. The warning was soon forgotten, but now behold it is even at the door, and in a short time nations will clash together in war, blood will flow in torrents, grief and sorrow will be felt among nearly all nations, on account of the calamity of war. Behold, there are other serious trials coming in the church by which the faith of many will be sorely tried, and there are those that appear now as pillars in the church who will fall and not rise again. Therefore, take heed and be faithful, that you may find favor in the sight of the Lord." This prophecy was so different and contrary to the existing circumstances of that day that while some of the Saints knew the Spirit of the Lord was there in power they almost doubted the prophecy being true. Since that time some have said they would give much if they had it in print because of the exact fulfillment of its predictions.

Organizing the Branches

After I had been in the church nearly two years, the work seemed to demand more attention than it was getting, for at that time we had but very little communication with the head of the church. I, therefore, at the fall or district conference of 1872 offered my entire services to the church on condition that my family should receive proper care, but I asked nothing from the church for my own support. I said I would preach while my funds lasted. At that time the Saints were only few in number, with no very large finances among them. The matter was considered, and they concluded that the burden would be more than they would like to assume. I said, "Well, brethren, that being the case I will have to take care of my own family, and that means I will have to extend my business" (for I had only twenty-five acres of land), "and I will do what I can for the church outside of my own domestic affairs." I purchased more land, and every opportunity I had I went into the field and preached. The Lord abundantly blessed me during that time. I started and organized branches in Osborne, London, Battle Hill, and Chatham, besides preaching in Windsor and other localities. The Lord stood by me so that I have never drawn one dollar from the general fund of the church, though the Saints in the branches have helped pay my fares in traveling to quite an extent.

Quieting an Opponent

Upon one occasion I had a call to preach in the Township of Colchester. I was then making five dollars a day hewing timber in the woods, but I responded to the call, leaving my work, traveling over a hundred miles, remaining away two weeks from home, paying all my expenses, and not receiving one copper. However, I am thankful to God I was able to make the sacrifice when I recall the comfort and joy that came to those to whom I administered. Upon one occasion I was called to administer to a sick sister by the name of Holestead. I could not reach their home by any conveyance, there being no railroad within thirty-five miles. I rode as near to the place as I could on the train and walked the thirty-five miles. After my services were rendered, I repeated the experience, walking the thirty-five miles back to the station, feeling well repaid for the sacrifice made on account of the great blessing received from the Lord by the afflicted sister.

I do not think this short biography would be complete if I did not relate an amusing instance that took place at a bee in our neighborhood. While I was a member of the Baptist Church, a committee of five was appointed by the church. One of the principal men of the committee (by the name of Kirk) came to me and offered me $600 for the first year, a horse, buggy, cutter, and a house to live in if I would attend their college, become more scientifically equipped for the ministry, and take charge of the Zone, Bothwell, and Euphemia Baptist Churches. I told them I could consider the matter, for in those days $600 was a pile of money. It made one almost feel rich to think about it. I related the circumstances to my wife, and she said, "No, never. I would rather stand at the washtub and wash for our living than see you accept anything like that." This vetoed our proposition, but about a year afterwards a large number of the neighbors gathered at the raising of a log building, giving sufficient time to talk and gossip. The said Mr. Kirk, who was a bitter opposer of the so-called Mormons, said, "You gentlemen need not be surprised at him for following those crazy people. He said he had an aunt crazy in the old country, his mother was crazy, and he was always considered a little bit lacking himself, so it is no wonder he is led off by these crazy people." I replied, "I get it honestly, for it seems to be hereditary." Then turning to our neighbors, I continued, "You heard this man's statement. This is one of the men who composed the committee of five in the Baptist Church who, after the deliberation of their convention, came and made me an offer [repeating the proposition mentioned above]. In your estimation this is a gentleman of intelligence. Who do you think was the most crazy—myself, or those on the committee, or the Baptist Church when they sent such an offer for this crazy man to preach to them?" He stammered and pounded, while the crowd cheered, but he found nothing to say. I never heard again from that day to this about being crazy.

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Religious Education Carries On

Incident to the changes made necessary by an adjustment to the reduced income of the church during the present financial depression, certain changes have been found advisable and necessary in the general administration of religious education. With other departments of church work, those in charge of religious education are making every effort to adjust themselves and the work of the general office in harmony with the exigencies of the situation.

A Unified Effort

The men under appointment who have been working in the general office have made an outstanding contribution in the past year in the direction of a unified program. They have developed a well-balanced and extended educational program for all ages of the church. They have been ably assisted by Mrs. Bertha Constance Woodward, who has with great energy and clearness of vision directed the perfection of plans and materials for the Children's Division. For the first time in the history of the church we are approximating a closely organized and integrated program of study, worship, work, and play suited to the needs and capacities of groups of all ages, from the nursery child to the advanced groups of adults.

Those who have been doing the constructive work deserve credit for accomplishing in great measure the stupendous task of recasting our quarterly studies and merging the interests and activities of the three former departments into a single unified working force known as the church school in the local branch. The church school as a branch function is directly under the responsibility of the pastor, who directs and coordinates its activities with all other phases of branch work. True, this has not been done completely in all branches, but the movement is well under way and giving splendid satisfaction wherever studiously and earnestly undertaken.

Leaders Still to Carry On

It is much to be regretted that those associated in the general department could not have continued their work so earnestly and energetically begun. The fact that the working force of the general office is greatly reduced should not in any way reflect disparagingly upon the workers or the good work undertaken. Expenditure for this phase of our work must be reduced in keeping with the demands made upon all departments of church effort.

With characteristic fidelity, courage, and good will, those relieved from appointment by the recent action of the Joint Council will seek employment elsewhere, but will give as generously of their time and effort to the work of religious education in the church as their location and circumstances will permit. Brother John Blackmore, although relieved from appointment, will continue as director of the Adult Division. Brother Closson is writing a new quarterly for junior young people and will remain in the office until July 1, giving his special attention to the completion of the young people's program for the church. He will continue after that to give of his effort as may be found possible in the interests of the church as director of the Young People's Division. These men are rendering a most valued service, and we are happy that we shall still have the benefit of their council and help. Mrs. Bertha Constance Woodward will continue as director of the Children's Division, although she, also, will be self-supporting and away from the office. She will be available for advice by mail on all matters concerned with children's work.

The direction of religious education will continue in the office of the First Presidency under President F. M. McDowell. For the present, C. B. Woodstock will remain as associate director, as editor in chief of the quarterly series, and as director of training. It will be impossible for the former volume of work to be maintained, but assurance is given that every effort will be made to meet the growing needs of the church.

A handbook for workers in the church school is under preparation and will soon be ready for general distribution. This will set out in a definite way the best advice to be given by general officers responsible for religious education in the church. The handbook will sell at a nominal cost and should become the basic text on organization and administration in church school activities.

Religious Education Is a Task of the Church

In religious education, as in other phases of church work, it will be increasingly necessary for local pastors and leaders to carry much responsibility for the development of an efficient program. This will be true also of district presidents and district directors of religious education. One of the most significant developments of recent months has been the growing conviction that religious education is not a program apart from the regular work of the church. It is an essential phase of all church activity.

Hence, the general direction of religious education is assumed as one of the essential prerogatives of the First Presidency. The administration of religious education in its broader aspects, as its program affects the welfare and the progress of the church, is a matter of primary concern to the Quorum of Twelve and as apostles in charge of fields. Their vision, sympathy, and encouragement will add much to the impetus of educational endeavor throughout the church.

Stake and district presidents will be held responsible with the district directors for the organization and administration of an effective educational program, not only for the stake or district as a whole, but for direction and encouragement within each branch. Naturally, the pastor is primarily responsible for religious education as a necessary function of the branch. Its success will depend largely upon his vision, tact, sympathy, and the effectiveness of the local organization of the church school. It is probable that a reporting system will be worked out in which the activities of the church school will be reported through the regular means of reporting in the church and not as a separate institution.

The Responsibility Is Distributed

Under this plan we trust the work of religious education may carry on, if possible, with increased efficiency. The general office will be chiefly concerned with the development of methods and materials. Those in charge will be glad to give general advice whenever desired, but local questions of policy or administration should be referred first to the officers of the church in charge in the local, district, stake, or mission. This will mean that men of the priesthood, and especially general officers of the church and men under appointment, will need to keep well informed of the purpose and plan of religious education as a part of the church program, both that there may be a harmonious interpretation of the plan, and that the influence of their effort may always be constructive in the highest sense.

So far as seems consistent, general information intended for local workers will be passed out from the general office through mission, stake, district, and branch officers whose work it is to direct and supervise the administration of all phases of church work.

A Call to Consecration

We are called to teach and lead a people to whom has been committed the supreme task of demonstrating the will of God among men in an ideal society called Zion, and to the preaching of the message of the Restoration in all the world. While the task of preaching is primarily the assignment of the priesthood, the accomplishment of the Lord's purposes is a collective responsibility for which each member of the church must seek the highest qualification in preparation and in service. Especially is this true of those called to teach and to lead among the people.

To the accomplishment of the work intrusted to us, we unhesitatingly commit ourselves and the resources at our command.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
F. M. MCDOWELL.

Worship Suggestions for Use in the Children's Division

Below are listed theme topics, songs, pictures, stories, etc., which may be assembled and used in programs for the month of April.

April brings with it Easter, and with Easter a message of joy and hope. In the northern hemisphere another winter has slipped by, and spring again bursts forth. All nature seems to be in tune with God, and in its splendor praises its Creator. Do not the following verses thrill your soul with Easter joy?

All hail this joyous Eastern morn,
When earth arises newly born.
The daffodil has left the mold
To praise the Lord with lips of gold;
The butterfly its coffin rends
And to the sunlit sky ascends,
And every bush and tree and clod
Uplifts an offering to God.

Salute this glorious Easter Day
When angels rolled the stone away,
And from the dark and lowly door
The Lord, arisen, came of yore,
His feet among the lilies white,
His garment aureoled with light,
And in his hands for thee and me
The gift of immortality.

—Mina Irving.

It was with such thoughts of Easter and spring in mind that we chose as a theme for this month: "God's World." Enough material is given to care for the last three Sundays in April. It is suggested that the first Sunday of the month, Sacrament Sunday, the Juniors meet with the older folks to observe this ordinance.

"Resurrection Morn," by Hardy, size 20x30 inches, price 50 cents, in colors. Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri. This is a beautiful study in rich color. It should be prominently displayed in the church throughout the month.

No. 036, "Song of the Lark," by Breton, size 9x12 inches, price 4 cents.

No. 1184, "Landscape with Windmill," by Ruysdael, size 5½x8 inches, price 2 cents.

No. 1187, "Landscape with Wood," by Ruysdael, size 5½x8 inches, price 2 cents.

The last three pictures may be purchased from the Brown Picture Company, 38 Lovett Street, Beverly, Massachusetts.

Topics for Sermon Talks:

Theme for Month: "God's World"

"God in Nature."

"A World of Life."

"The Whole World Is God's World."

Stories:

"The White Lily," The Golden Goblet, by Jay T. Stocking.

"The Road to the Castle," Stories for Sunday Telling, by Bailey.

"The Two Windows," Stories for Sunday Telling, by Bailey.

"Night and Day," Parables from Nature, by Gatty.

Realizing that it may be a bit difficult to obtain the Jay T. Stocking book, we shall briefly sketch the story from his book. Anyone who is used to telling stories will be able to build and enlarge on the facts given.

The White Lily

The scene of the story is laid in the beautiful garden of a rich and great man, where the white roses of Sharon, the purple iris, and the red lilies grow. Nathan, a poor gardener, cared for and tended this beautiful garden. Though he worked in the midst of all this loveliness, he seldom smiled.

Benjamin, Nathan's son, worked in the garden with his father. As they worked about among the flower beds, the son questioned his father with such questions as these:

"Father, why do they call this the iris? Why are all red lilies not white?"

Gloomily the old man's replies were made to each question: "Because that is what it is"; or, "That is the way they grow in this country."

Turning a corner in the path, the gardener and his son came upon a new tomb which the master of the garden had built for himself. The lad asked: "Father, where do we go when we die?"

"I do not know. Some say we go nowhere," was the gloomy answer.

"But the Galilean Teacher says we shall live hereafter," insisted the lad.

"Impossible, my son. I will not believe such talk until the sky turns green, and the grass turns blue, and the red lily comes up white."

As the two were discussing the Teacher, a queer sound was heard outside the garden in one of the streets. Nathan and Benjamin hastened to see what it all meant. Down the street came a great crowd, and in the middle were soldiers with three prisoners. Benjamin recognized the tallest prisoner to be the Galilean Teacher, and immediately sensed the situation.

"Father, they are going to kill him!"

Dropping their spades, Benjamin and Nathan rushed off and followed the crowd. In the crowd they became separated. Nathan next saw his son as he stood near the cross where the Galilean had been raised.

Coarse voices from the crowd mocked the Galilean and called him a blasphemer. Indignantly Benjamin retaliated: "He is no blasphemer. He is a good man. You are the blasphemer."

The lad was struck a heavy blow. He fell to the ground, where he lay white and still until his father came and gently carried him away.

In the dusk of the evening Nathan and his son were seated in the garden talking over the day's happenings: how the sun was darkened with strange clouds which cast a sickly green tint over the sky and reflected their weird light over the grass, making it look blue in the shadows. Old Nathan wondered. "But the lilies remained red"; he mused, "they never could turn white." Hushed voices and quiet steps are heard in the garden. They went to see who it could be, and they saw their master and two servants carry the body of the Galilean and place him in the new tomb. Some of the women who had stood near the cross weeping, followed. The women remarked that they would come again after the Sabbath, to bring sweet spices and fresh ointments.

Early on the first day of the week Benjamin went to assist the women in their loving service to their dead friend. He was surprised to find the tomb empty and the women standing near, amazed and frightened. They told him that the Galilean was gone and that an angel said he had risen.

Quickly Benjamin ran to call his father: "Father, he is alive! The women said so; an angel told them."

"Nonsense, my son. I shall believe such things when the red lily comes up white." He no longer dared to say when the sky turns green and the grass blue.

"Oh, father, look!"

Old Nathan turned to see what amazed his son. There, near the tomb, under a poplar tree, growing as straight as a queen out of the dark earth, was a perfectly shaped lily, but instead of being red like the others, it was white as snow.

"What can it mean?" murmured old Nathan to himself. "A red lily growing up white! What the women said, then, must be true. The Galilean must surely be alive."

Old Nathan became a changed man. No longer was he gloomy, but filled with hope and joy. For, had not the Galilean, the Master himself, arisen?

Beautiful Pictures in Color

Church school workers are fortunate in a recent purchase by the Herald Publishing House of a limited supply of Bible pictures, in large size and on good art paper, suitable for framing for the walls of the church or for the children's room. These prints are made in England, and each is a rare masterpiece in beautiful color, blended to give the native atmosphere of the Holy Land. The artist spent years in Palestine and painted his studies there, vividly portraying dress, customs, and habits of the people as they have existed since the Bible scenes were enacted.

The following six pictures were selected by church school workers as being the ones most useful as an introduction of picture-story work in the church.

They were chosen from over four hundred beautiful prints, many of which we hope later to make available in the same way.

No. 106, "Ruth and Naomi."

No. 114, "Jesus in the Garden." (Easter Morning.)

No. 306, "Jesus and the Woman at the Well."

No. 311, "The Light of the World." (Behold, I Stand at the Door and Knock.)

No. 325, "The Call of the Disciples." (By the Sea of Galilee.)

No. 827, "The Good Shepherd."

These six pictures were especially chosen to illustrate themes treated in the year's series of church school worship programs. They may be inexpensively mounted on heavy cardboard and used for picture-story talks. If displayed on an easel with special reflected light, the effect is most beautiful. Framed in harmonizing tones, they make a most welcome transformation to bare church walls and lend beauty and inspiration to classrooms.

Especially prepared picture-story talks will appear in these columns to assist those who use the pictures. Their purchase in any branch should mean vastly enriched experiences for all, a personal appreciation of Bible characters which may have been little known heretofore. The inspiration of Biblical teaching should take on new color and meaning as characters become familiar companions who greet us and help us make sacred our places of worship.

The pictures are uniformly 20x30 inches in size, quite large enough to be seen readily from all parts of a moderately sized room. They are produced in England, and purchased in quantities to permit their distribution at a price far below the usual cost of prints of this type.

The present supply is limited, and branches desiring them should place their orders early. If these pictures are appreciated, provision will be made for a wider range of selection and for new studies each year.

By mail, postpaid, in secure mailing roll. Choice of any one or more 50 cents each.

Set of six pictures as listed, $2.50. Send cash with order.

Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Sympathy, personal friendship, love of man for man irrespective of social distinctions, are the cementing forces which will heal our divisions, as no devices like cooperation or profit-sharing ever will.

The Vanishing of the Indian and His Native Culture a Loss to Civilization

The following is an extract from an article in the "San Antonio Light" of March 22, 1931, written by Richard Randolph. The clipping was sent to us by the kindness of a reader, and will be of interest to all who think seriously of the fate of the Red Man.

This era, known as modern American civilization, might have been something infinitely better had the American Indian been permitted to develop along the lines indicated by archaeological researches, according to Doctor Carl Guthe, professor of anthropology at the University of Michigan.

"We have found the Indians began a civilization whose relation to the New World was comparable to that of Greece and Rome to the Old World," Doctor Guthe said. "This relationship was primarily one of economics, as contrasted to the development of art and culture in Greece and Rome."

"Every time we sit down to a meal," he said, "although we may not realize it, there is at least one article of food on the table that we owe to Indian development. Most of our great highways are old Indian trails. The Indians of Central America, the Mayans, were the first to invent a symbol for zero, or completion. They were the first to invent positional enumeration, or Arabic notation.

"The activity of the Indians in the realm of agriculture brought forth the most elaborate and precise cultivation of plants the world possesses. They did a much greater job than the Europeans in this respect. More than one half the economic products on the American farm today are a heritage from the American Indian."

The highest type of civilization in Indian history, according to Doctor Guthe, originated in tropics of Central America, where the Mayan race flourished. The height of civilization which the Indians attained before the invasion of the Europeans, gradually receded from Central America northward.

"The Pueblo Indians, whose natural habitat included southern Colorado and northern New Mexico, also were exceedingly progressive," he said. "One branch of the Pueblo race, the cliff dwellers around Mesa Verde, Colorado, were notably progressive, as archaeology has shown. As we go east into the Mississippi Valley, we find there a concentration into villages. Beyond the Great Lakes region, the 'mound builders' flourished. Further than that, climate prevented any distinctive advancement."

It was the white race, according to Doctor Guthe, that disrupted the Indian civilization at a time when

Do We Want Church Work and Services? Where?

By Blair Jensen

After some time of active interest in church school development, I am glad to pass on to you some observations that have come to us in our efforts. I speak not with the intent of negative criticism but rather in an affirmative sense.

We find that the church school helps and material that are being published in the Herald are of practically no value to us, because they are not built and sent out far enough ahead. The church school must develop all individuals and not just the class who can most readily and quickly respond. This can not be unless worship programs are built six or eight weeks ahead and given out to the various participants so that all will be able to be fitly prepared. Unless adequate individual preparation is made, this period will soon lose cast. Again we find a decided reaction against using the Herald for this purpose. Those whose interest in church school work is meager object to the Herald containing several pages of uninteresting work. Church school workers do not like to have to search out the Herald for their material and, having found it, have it in no condition for worth-while preservation. Fifty-two Heralds filed away for three or four pages of church school material is almost out of the question.

We suggest from our experience and comments passed on to us by workers that this material be placed in Vision. A large part of the Visions are filed away, and twelve of them could nicely be cared for as containing a year's work in a condition for ready reference and use. Again, a majority of church school workers are young people, or are vitally interested in young people's activities, and as such are already taking Vision. The Herald subscription will hold up, and there is a good possibility of increasing the number who will be taking Vision.

it was about to ripen into something really notable in world history.

"First, they brought over diseases and spread them among the healthy Indians; then they forced the Indians out of their homelands, into strange new environments where they lost all they had gained," Doctor Guthe said. "Lastly, a flock of missionaries, imbued with the idea they were the acme of perfection, took the Indians out of their old haunts and tried to civilize them, when they already had developed a civilization superior in many respects to the artificial one in which they were thrust."

Preliminaries of the Harvest Home Festival this fall got got under way the evening of March 23, when a meeting was called in the pastor's office by Elder John F. Sheehy for the purpose of discussing the next annual exhibits. The following evening the Great Northwest Club staged a benefit in the dining hall of the Stone Church. There were music, games, talks, and refreshments, the proceeds to buy seed potatoes to plant crops in the Atherton Bottoms. "A mountain of potatoes for the Harvest Festival" is the promise of this club.

Expansion in the industrial exhibits, an innovation of last year, is anticipated by the festival management. Already there have been inquiries about space from concerns not represented last year.

Stone Church

Elder Leonard Lea was the eleven o'clock speaker Sunday on the theme of Palm Sunday. He stressed the significance of Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem, not simply as an event of earthy acclaim and approval, but as foreshadowing his spiritual and eternal kinship.

The Wahdemna Choral Club, under the direction of Paul N. Craig, sang two chorus numbers. Gomer Cool played a violin offertory. Lorena Kueffer was the organist.

The junior young people's council concluded its term of service Sunday morning by assisting the pastor, Priest W. Earl Page, at the 10.45 worship service in the lower auditorium. "Reverence for Law" was the morning's theme, and the seventeen girls and boys of the council, seated on the platform, helped with music, scripture reading, and collecting of offering to make the program impressive. Next Sunday morning in the Sunday school hour the classes of the junior young people's department will elect a new council to serve until September.

Sixty-one Girl Scouts-to-be and their officers crowded the Y. K. T. Class room Sunday afternoon at a special girls' meeting and signed up for membership in four troops which are meeting for the first time this week. The troop committee is composed of six women: Miss Leta B. Moriarty, Mrs. Fred O. Wilkinson, Mrs. J. Glenn Fairbanks, Mrs. Clarence Savage, Mrs. Ray Moler, and Miss Ina Hattey. Captains of troops have been selected as follows: Mrs. Jack Gardner, Miss Hazel Clow, Mrs. Don Cox, and Miss May Snead; and lieutenants: Mrs. E. E. Closson, Miss Muriel Farrell, Miss Violet McFarlane, and Miss Gladys Vernon. The girls are setting about the task of attaining Tenderfoot Scout ranking with enthusiasm and resourcefulness.

In the evening a large congregation listened to a program of music presented by Storms' Ensemble, and to a sermon which emphasized the necessity of our measuring up to the standards of Christ by Patriarch U. W. Greene.

Among those lately called from our midst by the angel of death are Mrs. Pearl Beverstock, who leaves her husband and five children; and Joseph Lily, who is survived by three sons and a daughter. The funeral service of the former occurred at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Brother Lily's body was taken to Des Moines for funeral and burial services.

Brother M. M. Turpen, who during his years of missionary work brought many to know the truth of the gospel, passed away at the Independence Sanitarium March 28, and his body was taken to Pleasanton, Iowa, for burial. Brother Turpen was born in Decatur County, Iowa, August 19, 1853, and accepted the gospel in baptism in 1873. He occupied during his life the offices of Aaronic priest, elder, seventy, and high priest. Besides a large circle of friends he leaves his wife and several children.

Floyd Robertson, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Robertson, of Fanning, Kansas, and formerly a student in the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, met death near Kansas City, Kansas, March 29, when he ignited a match to demonstrate the presence of gas fumes in an old water well. In the explosion the young man was thrown into the forty-five foot shaft from which he was brought out by Kansas City firemen after two hours, but died a few hours later at the Bell Memorial Hospital.

Choirs, classes, and departments are making Easter plans. First of these comes the sunrise devotional service for the city of Independence, to be conducted at six o'clock in the Stone Church. In the afternoon at 2.30 there will occur at the Stone Church a special service for the blessing of children.

Second Church

Miss Hulda Hansen, a faithful worker in the primary department at the Second Church for several years, was married March 21 to John H. Hufford, of Winfield, Kansas. The wedding took place at Miss Hanson's home, Pastor A. K. Dillee officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Hufford left soon after the ceremony for Winfield, where they will live.

The speaker at the eleven o'clock service March 22 was Elder Levi Gamet, who made a strong plea for confidence in the church and its ministry. He emphasized also the necessity of application of the spirit of sacrifice. Special music included a quartet of choir members, a vocal solo by Miss Dorothy Peek, and a saw solo by Rex Conyers.

On Wednesday night instead of group prayer meeting, all the groups assembled at the church for a union service.

Elder D. A. Whiting, of the local ministry, preached March 29 in the morning. His talk concerned the theme of Palm Sunday and Easter. This was the last Sunday night of Brother C. Ed. Miller's lectures on the Book of Mormon. Appreciation was vouchsafed by excellent attendance.

Walnut Park

Elder R. D. Weaver was the forenoon speaker March 29, this being his farewell sermon before leaving for his Canadian mission. The sermon was an earnest reminder of our duty to be diligent in service, to be a light to the world, since the church is designed to serve the purpose that Christ served on earth. In the evening Bishop A. Carmichael again spoke, urging the demonstration of securing inheritances and working in organized groups.

The anthem for the forenoon service was, "Let Us Go unto The House of the Lord," directed by Mrs. A. M. Dobson, Isabel Garrett pianist, and Mrs. R. D. Weaver singing the soprano solos. In the evening Marvin Turnbull played a violin solo accompanied by Rosamond Sherman. The assistant superintendent, Albert Chapman, arranges for special numbers at each Sunday school session, those on the 29th being a violin solo, "Serenade," by Schubert, played by Betheen Barnhardt, accompanied by Drexel Mollison; and a solo by little Mildred Crabb, accompanied by her sister, Lavona Crabb.

In the afternoon Pastor S. C. Smith had the pleasure of baptizing his niece, Iva Winnie Oliver, of Pisgah, Iowa, now a nurse in training at the Sanitarium. She was confirmed by S. C. Smith and F. W. Lanpher.

At seven o'clock in the evening nineteen girls were invested with the rank of Tenderfoot Girl Scouts, and received their pins. This troop is directly under the captainship of Sister Anna Julia Roberts.

Enoch Hill

Sunday's speakers on "the hill" were Pastor H. L. Barto, whose theme was, "The Life of Christ," and Brother Benjamin Bean, of Walnut Park.

Sister Charles Warren is to be commended for her work with the young ladies' choir. Music has been supplied by this group for the past two Sundays.

Elder W. K. Gard, of Walnut Park, spoke interestingly to the juniors Sunday morning.

Death has taken an aged and faithful member from our midst, Sister Mary C. Brewer, who was born March 11, 1848, in Kentucky. She was baptized more than thirty years ago. Leaves beside her husband, John W. Brewer, two sons and a daughter. Sister Brewer was the mother of a former pastor and ardent worker in this district, Elder William J. Brewer. It was at his home that she passed away. The funeral was held from the church in charge of Elder Joseph Martin.

Spring Branch

"The Challenge of the New Century" was the theme of Elder C. B. Woodstock in his Sunday morning sermon. He also spoke to the church school. In the evening Elder Ammon White emphasized the need of prayer.

Elder G. G. Lewis was in charge of and spoke to the juniors at their worship service, and Sister Myrtle Weber told a story.

The sons of Brother and Sister J. J. Teeter, Orrin and Ervin, who were injured in a filling station explosion Saturday, March 21, are recovering. Ervin, who was taken to the Sanitarium following the accident, is now at home convalescing rapidly.

East Independence

Those who have occupied the pulpit during the past few weeks have been Brother C. W. O'Neil and A. H. Christensen, local men, and J. A. Taylor, of Graceland. All brought messages of encouragement.

There has been much sickness in this branch, and death has claimed an aged member, Brother L. Ahrons, who was ill for some time. The funeral was held at the church in charge of Elder J. M. Terry.

The congregation was entertained by an all-Irish program the evening of March 17, general invitation having been issued by Mrs. Iva Edgerton, adult supervisor. The guests had Irish names for the evening. Stunts and games added glee to the entertainment.

A synopsis of the important events of the week between Palm Sunday and Easter interested students of the church school Sunday morning. This was presented by Cornelius Edgerton. At eleven o'clock the junior choir from Spring Branch, directed by Sister Roberts, gave three program numbers.

Council Bluffs, Iowa307 West Pierce*

A supper was given March 4 to swell the Graceland scholarship fund. Plates were laid for one hundred and forty. A table, appropriately decorated, was reserved for members of the G. A. R. and D. A. R., guests of honor. A song complimentary to the G. A. R. was sung by the ladies of the D. A. R., and responded to by C. E. Reynolds, a member of the post, who will be ninety-three years old next month. The occasion was also the birthday anniversary of Sister Blanche Currie, and places were reserved for her family at one of the tables.

The junior church was the subject under discussion at the adult dinner March 13. Brother Nels Hansen, adult supervisor, was in charge. Talks were made by Sister Vinnie Hatch, on the continuous church school program for juniors, and Sister Nellie Harper on what junior church should mean to children and parents, adding a plea for closer cooperation between parents and leaders. Brother and Sister

Walter Woodward were guests at this dinner, and Sister Woodward gave a ten-minute talk on the principles underlying religious growth. Entertainment was provided by Sister Nellie Hall's circle, and was much appreciated by all present. This circle of young women sponsored and served the dinner. About eighty were in attendance.

Prayer services have been well attended of late, and all have been benefited by being present.

The funeral of Sister Emma Voorheis was held in the church Sunday afternoon, March 22. Sister Voorheis, the mother of Sister H. L. Boggs, was past eighty-three years of age, a woman loved by all who knew her. The sermon was by Elder J. F. Mintun, assisted by Brother George Beatty.

Artland, Saskatchewan

Our church services have been well attended during the winter months. The programs are interesting, and the weather has been mild. Midweek prayer services have been conducted in the homes of the members on Wednesday afternoon. On the third Wednesday of each month the young people meet at the hall at 7:30.

W. J. Cornish held a week of services near Kindersley, Saskatchewan, interesting a few in his message. He called at Battleford Branch, but was summoned home by his mother's death. Sister J. J. Cornish passed peacefully into the beyond February 23.

Some of the young people are taking a normal training course under the instructorship of A. J. Cornish. These class sessions occur on Friday evening and are followed by a program or games.

A pie social March 6 helped to defray expenses of the church school.

A. J. Cornish has been visiting some of the schools in the district.

Lewiston-Clarkston Branch

Asotin, Washington, March 19.—For six or seven years we have been holding meetings in Clarkston, Washington, in the K. P. Hall, making it convenient for Saints who live round about. Some live across the Snake River at Lewiston, Idaho, and others up Snake River at Asotin, Washington, seven miles.

About five years ago, Elder Eli Bronson, district missionary at that time, was secured to hold a series of meetings here, with splendid results. Five souls were added to the kingdom, and interest was awakened.

Elder Peter F. Klaus has tried to keep the gospel work going in this group and assist isolated members, as well as manage his own affairs. Brother Klaus has baptized several of the present number into the church.

"Our members here," Brother Klaus says, "like those in other places, are called upon to go through their time of trial. Nevertheless, it is true that God does not ask us to go far, and through the darkest clouds the Master's face will again appear."

About twenty-five attend the Sunday school and branch meetings.

Five weeks ago Spokane District Missionary A. C. Martin consented to hold a series of meetings at the home of Brother Klaus in Asotin, Washington.

He began the meetings February 8, and continued for four weeks. Three other denominations were holding meetings in this little town of seven hundred souls; still we had from thirty to seventy at our gatherings all the time. Fine comments on Brother Martin's sermons came from those who attended. The series closed March 8 with a good crowd.

The Saints voted to move the Sunday school to Asotin for a time to lessen expenses, as the members could rent the Christian Church here for only eight dollars a month. The conveniences of this meeting house are appreciated.

The people want the Saints to continue to hold Sunday school here, that their children may attend. Brother Klaus and his helpers are planning to do this, and they also expect to secure the help of Brother Martin in another series this summer or fall. The meetings through which these members have passed have strengthened them and increased their faith.

Oakland, California

From the Oakland Bulletin

Last Sunday was Palm Sunday, and in this branch there opened a series of meetings to continue until Easter Sunday. The members and their friends are giving good support.

District President G. P. Levitt, a favorite of this congregation, was the speaker March 15, and the Sunday morning before Brother J. B. Carmichael delivered a helpful discourse. The pastor is active in our own and neighboring pulpits.

It was encouraging to see the number at the Lord's table the first Sunday of this month. The spirit of fellowship prevailed, and guest Saints were present from a distance.

Congratulations are extended Brother Carpenter, of Park-Presidio Church, who was married last Thursday afternoon, Pastor Rushton officiating.

Fall River Young People Hike

A twelve-mile hike was the first outdoor undertaking of the Hi-Art Dramatic Club and friends, of Fall River, Massachusetts. This eventful undertaking started from Oak Grove Avenue and New Boston Road early in the afternoon of March 14, sixteen young men and women composing the merry party. And before they arrived home shortly after the sun, a great red ball, slipped behind the western horizon, their experiences had varied from the very happy to the very troublesome. They waded through mud; took pictures; climbed Copicut Tower, which is 410 feet high, to enjoy the view of the beautiful countryside; ate; played pranks; gathered pussy willows; and arrived home tired but pleased at the new turn of recreational activities.

Flint, Michigan

Flint Church was highly favored last September by the coming into our midst of Brother and Sister Franklyn S. Weddle. Brother Weddle was immediately chosen director of the church choir and is making a wonderful contribution to the church. There are twenty-six members in the choir at present, and the membership is constant, making it possible for the group to master some of the most difficult anthems.

There is a fine spirit of cooperation and loyalty in the Flint choir, and it is a real asset to the worship of the church. It appears every Sunday at the evening service. Maunder's "Olivet to Calvary" was presented by the choir Palm Sunday evening to a packed house and a very attentive audience. This was the choir's first appearance in robes. These have been recently purchased and add much to the impressiveness of the services.

A music festival is to be held at Flint in May, in which our choir, with most of the choirs of the city, will participate.

Pastor Thomas L. Clarke is delivering a series of Sunday evening sermons upon Christ's Sermon on the Mount. He has presented nine, and has sixteen more to deliver. They are based on the Inspired Version of the Scriptures and are inspiring. They are being taken in shorthand by Sister Zola McNamara, and the Saints of Flint are hoping they will sometime appear in print, either in the church periodicals or in book form.

Several are to be baptized here on Easter Sunday.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Nauvoo Branch has an enrollment of sixty-four, and the average attendance at church school for the first quarter of 1931 is about sixty. This breaks any previous record. The morning worship period is attended by a little less, while more come out in the evening. The midweek prayer meetings fall considerably below the number of enrollment, but the quality of the meetings is good.

Death invaded our number March 6 when Elder H. C. Snively passed away. He was sixty-nine years of age, and leaves his wife and ten children. The funeral was conducted from the church March 8 in charge of Elder J. W. Layton. The eldest son of the deceased, D. R. Snively, of Atherton, Missouri, preached the funeral sermon. Interment was in Montrose, Iowa, beside his parents.

Elder W. O. Hand, of Kansas City, Missouri, was here in January, giving his lecture at the church one Sunday evening to one of the largest attended meetings we have had. The next day he addressed the Nauvoo High School, showing slides, and on Tuesday morning he talked at the Catholic Parochial school. The local pastor, James C. Page, made the school appointments for Brother Hand, and accompanied him. This brother is to be commended for the effort he is making in taking a trip of about two thousand miles, going from Kansas City to Toronto, Canada, and back, and filling more than sixty appointments. He is paying his own expenses, and a recent card from him informs the Saints that he had not missed an appointment, had had large crowds out to hear him, and many words of praise for matter presented.

District President F. T. Mussell held a week's meetings beginning February 23. So many activities were in progress the first part of the week that the meetings were poorly attended. The sermons won many expressions of commendation.

Under the leadership of Sister Carrie Grotts, the Women's Department has been holding weekly all-day meetings nearly all winter, quilting for the Sanitarium and for others.

Other visitors who have addressed the congregation of late are Bishop Charles Fry, Elder O. P. Hayer, of Carthage, Illinois; and a Mrs. Furgerson, of Chicago, formerly a missionary to South Africa, but now representing the W. C. T. U.

Since the hard surface road has opened into the city, five times as many visitors have been coming to see points of historic interest. Elder and Sister James C. Page, caretakers of the Joseph Smith Homestead and Mansion House, report 6,175 visitors registered during 1930. Recent additions to the collection of antiques are:

A large oil painting of Sister Hodges, mother of Sister Marietta Walker, from Sister Stebbins, Lamoni, Iowa.

Secretary, a combination bookcase and writing desk, owned and used by the Prophet Joseph Smith, at Kirtland, Ohio, from Elder John L. Cooper, Kirtland, Ohio.

Six Bible pictures, "Jesus in the Temple," "Baptism of Jesus by John," "Jesus Healing the Sick," "Jesus Taking Leave of His Mother," "Jesus' Betrayal by Judas," and "Finding the Lost Sheep," from Elder Lorenzo D. Ullom, Bellaire, Ohio. Brother Ullom had already sent sixteen pictures.

An old walnut, oblong parlor table, from Bert Van Dine, Burnside, Illinois.

Italian Book of Mormon, 1852, published by Lorenzo Snow, Liverpool, England, from John A. Widtsoe, Liverpool, England.

Framed poem, written in England three hundred years ago, by Peter Cook, from Sister Sam Gasaway, of Dallas

City, Illinois, a descendant of Francis Cook, brother of Peter Cook.

A square stand table, said to have belonged to Joseph Smith, from Sister Langford, of Burnside, Illinois.

May good courage possess every Saint and cause him to work with his fellows to lift the church from its financial difficulties.

Madison, Wisconsin

219 Jackson Street

The congregation here is larger than a few months ago, and greater interest is taken. Everyone seems eager to put his best into our program. The women's club quilts, sews, and applies itself to the problem of helping raise the budget. Thirty attended the last meeting. This year the women also made enough to order fifty of the new songbooks.

The week is full of services, and Pastor Amos Berve is active in his leadership. On Sunday occur the priesthood meeting at 8.15, church school at 9.45, preaching service at 11. In the afternoon the choir rehearses, practicing at present on an Easter cantata. Religious education in the home class comes at 6.45, and preaching in the evening. Every other week the women go to club on Tuesday night, and on Wednesday at 6.30 is held a teacher's training class, prayer service at 7.30, choir rehearsal at 8.30. Young people's meeting falls regularly on Thursday evening.

The men of the branch served a dinner of chop suey, Spanish salad, and apple pie March 19 in an effort to add to the budget fund. Mr. Fields, a nonmember who is a regular attendant at church, prepared the food except the pies which two of the women baked.

Members of Brother Berve's class on "Church Projects, Stewardship, and Tithing," have written papers on different phases of the lessons.

Splendid topics have formed the basis for the pastor's Sunday evening sermons. Other local men of the ministry occupy the Sunday morning pulpit.

Bishop C. J. Hunt spoke recently, helping the entire congregation with suggestions of cheer and courage.

A junior service followed the regular church school hour March 8 in place of the usual preaching hour, the theme being "The Christ of Hope." Special music, a sermonet, a story, sentence prayers, Scripture reading, and birthday offering composed the program. Lee Root, the director, gives much thought and study to this work.

A son was born to Brother and Sister James Allen March 19.

San Antonio, Texas

First Branch, Cherry and Rockwood Court

Herald readers will be pleased to know that the gospel work is going forward in this city, known to the radio land as "The Playground of America."

Having outgrown the old church building on South Flores Street, First Branch decided to build a new home, and plans were drawn up and accepted. A favorable location was secured, and by September 28 the new building was ready for the opening program.

Since that date work has steadily progressed. Later in the fall Apostle J. A. Gillen preached a series of wonderful sermons. Again it was thought wise to have meetings, and District Missionary G. H. Wixom was invited to preach to us over a period of two weeks. He began February 15. Elder John A. Robinson, pastor of Second Branch which meets at 912 North Colorado Street, attended with a number of his workers, and their presence and assistance were much appreciated. During the series Elder Robinson spoke one night, using his stereopticon machine and showing scenes of the Auditorium at Independence in construction, and other buildings in the center place.

Elder Wixom used two large charts to make clear his message.

During the meetings the Saints were happy to make the acquaintance of a couple who are members of a popular church, but stated their discouragement at the teachings of the modern Protestant churches. As Brother Wixom set forth the gospel plainly, yet forcefully, the man, who is a minister, was much interested. At the close, his comment was: "That was one of the best sermons I ever heard. I wanted to say amen so that all could hear."

Brother Wixom is a gifted speaker. He is familiar with his text, the Bible, and can with ease hold the attention of his congregation. As a result of his effort, the members of both First and Second Branches were encouraged and given a brighter outlook. Many are more determined than ever to do all they can to help build up the work in San Antonio.

The Saints are sad because of the conditions prevailing in the world, and are much concerned regarding the action of the Joint Council of the church. Nevertheless they are not discouraged, and they look with favor upon the retrenchment program of the church. They feel that God is indeed directing his work, and that out of present distress will come a people consecrated and trained to carry forward every undertaking. We look forward to the time when the church indebtedness will be no more, and when Zion shall grow under the command of God.

Apostle J. A. Gillen arrived a few days ago and was given a hearty welcome.

Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania

March 24.—The Saints have been made happy by the good work of District Evangelist George W. Robley, who comes from time to time preaching the old Jerusalem gospel in power. Five adults have been baptized in the past few weeks, and others are interested. Neighbors and friends have opened their homes for preaching. This is a fine way of reaching those not of the fold.

Sister Pealer, who each Sunday morning tells the school a story, called on Brother Robley a few Sundays ago. He told the story of the talents and then distributed dimes to those wanting to do something practical. Two months is allowed for the dimes to work, and it is hoped that they will have earned enough to paint the church building inside and out, a real need in this local.

Bloomsburg Saints have enjoyed the winter months, a season usually characterized by study and accomplishment. Although labor conditions have been bad, the members have not suffered for the necessary things of life, and can say God is good.

Each Tuesday evening finds men and women meeting in the homes of the Saints listening to Pastor Walter Lewis teach God's dealings with his people on this continent. This is the Book of Mormon Class. And on Wednesday night occurs the regular prayer meeting.

A Sunday school pupil, Margery Fritz, seven years old, was run down by an automobile December 13, and after much suffering passed beyond March 3.

The women meet once each month to work for the branch. They are planning a supper for March 28.

Some of the members attended the New York-Philadelphia conference held at New York, and came back much encouraged. They report a fine conference.

The branch is in good growing condition. The church school program has not yet been adopted, but we hope soon to incorporate it in our services.

The group of members at Byrneville, Indiana, was shaken on March 22 by the sudden and violent death of a young church worker, Agnes Byrne. The car in which she was riding with two of her sisters, a brother, and a cousin, was struck by another automobile, the collision killing Agnes and injuring several of the others. Agnes was the daughter of Brother and Sister Robert Byrne and was thirteen years old. She was one of the most enthusiastic workers in the branch at Byrneville, and will be missed by the entire community. The funeral on March 24 was in charge of Brother J. O. Dutton, and interment was in Byrneville Cemetery.

Des Moines, Iowa

717-719 East Twelfth Street

Almost two hundred people were guests at the young people's banquet which on February 6 opened the district conference. The committee on arrangements, Stephen and William Robinson, J. W. Rudkin, and Eva Cook, planned a good program, and the Women's Department served the meal, the menu being: Conscience clear, tender memories, peace, love, truth, active life stuffed with service, clear thoughts, loyalty to our ideals, mizpah. The program was given by talented representatives of the general church and district and made a good setting for the address by Bishop Albert Carmichael on "Ideal Citizenship in the Kingdom of Heaven."

The business of the conference was completed at the two o'clock session on Saturday, and officers elected were District president, Henry Castings; counselors, E. G. Beye and Clyde McDonald; church school director, William Robinson, together with district heads of the church school divisions. The program or organization adopted by the 1930 General Conference was accepted by the conference.

Saturday's meetings consisted of a morning prayer hour, two business sessions, and in the evening a sermon by Patriarch F. A. Smith, his discourse striking the keynote of the conference—the gospel makes provision for all the needs of a man his life through. This thought was the theme of Bishop Carmichael in his address to the priesthood at 8.30 Sunday morning. The Bishop stressed the appointing of inheritances as the objective toward which the church should strive until every man had received his inheritance, and urged the priesthood to become stewards as fast as possible. The main auditorium was full to hear Brother Carmichael's morning sermon.

Four men were ordained at the two o'clock sacramental service according to previous arrangements of the conference: Oscar Tesdahl, of Boone, an elder; Harold Shippy, of Newton, an elder; Ernest Kirlin, of Newton, a priest; and Joseph Benson, of Newton, a teacher. Bishop Fry and Elders E. G. Beye, A. L. Loving, and C. E. McDonald officiated in the ordinations.

A miscellaneous program had been arranged for the 6.30 hour by Stephen Robinson, district superintendent of the Department of Recreation and Expression. This consisted of a pageant, "The Organization of the Church," by a group from Boone, and other members by district members.

Patriarch F. A. Smith preached the closing sermon of the conference.

All meals were served without charge by the Women's Department of Des Moines, directed by Sister J. L. Dalbey. Two collections were taken on Sunday to meet the conference expenses and replenish the treasury of the district, the amount being one hundred and fifty dollars.

Music was furnished by Sister Kathryn Wolfe and the Des Moines choir on Sunday. Sister Bessy Laughlin acted as secretary in the place of Sister Margaret Wilkinson, whose daughter, Elnore, met death in an accident shortly before the conference.

Des Moines Branch was shocked at the resignation of Pastor C. B. Hartshorn, one of those released from general church appointment, and following a session of the priesthood, a special business meeting was called, that the people might choose one to fill out his unexpired term. Brother E. O. Clark, pastor for seven years, and district bishop for seventeen years, was the choice of the people and the priesthood. He chose as his counselors, V. L. Deskin and William Robinson. Brother Hartshorn will continue his school work at Drake University until September, when he expects, by doubling up on his schedule, to receive his degree.

The Des Moines Choir presents a concert the first Sunday night of each month. This group is planning an Easter program, a Seth Parker program, and the cantata, "Ruth," as contributions to the branch.

A sum of seventy-five dollars was applied to the mortgage as a result of the "Fun Revue" given in the lower auditorium of the church under the leadership of Sister Kathryn Wolfe, choir director, and Sister V. L. Deskin, dramatic director.

The junior choir, under the direction of Verba Parker, is giving a concert each fourth Sunday night.

We welcome "Blue Pencil Notes" in the Herald again.

Child labor yet continues. Factories are often moved from sections where children are protected to those States where they are not. A country can be measured as to its stability and its future by its treatment of children. As long as business is selfishly blind to child life for the sake of profits, it is distinctly and surely un-Christian. It should have left off that practice before government asked it to do so.—Frank D. Slutz, in The Church School Journal.

Beautiful Pictures in Color

MODERATELY PRICED

A most exceptional opportunity is now offered to church school workers to secure rare artistic masterpieces in rich color, vividly portraying Bible scenes in the dress, customs, and habits of Palestine and the East.

The prints are 20x30 inches in size and made on good art paper, suitable for framing, or for picture-story purposes when displayed on an easel under special light.

The following six subjects are available for immediate mailing:

No. 106—"Ruth and Naomi."

No. 114—"Jesus in the Garden" (Easter Morning).

No. 306—"Jesus and the Woman at the Well."

No. 311—"The Light of the World" (Behold, I Stand at the Door and Knock).

No. 325—"The Call of the Disciples" (By the Sea of Galilee).

No. 827—"The Good Shepherd."

The above have been selected from over 400 subjects to serve as illustrations for the church school worship program for the year. Each should be in use for two months, or they may be framed and given a place of permanence on the walls of the church.

We are all eye-minded. We learn far more through good pictures than from printed or spoken words alone. "One picture is worth a thousand words."

Choice of any one or more of above six pictures 50 cents each.

Set of six pictures mailed postpaid in secure roll, $2.50.

HOME BEAUTIFYING SUGGESTIONS FOR EARLY SPRING

There Is Satisfaction in Bringing Beauty into the Home through one's Own Handiwork—Savings Important, Too!

SEVEN DAY TEA TOWELS

20 Cents for Set No. 561.

For Christmas, the hope chest, shower, bride, or bazaar, as well as for us who have long since qualified as homekeepers, a Tuesday tea towel for Tuesday, and a Sunday one for Sunday, is most encouraging. Outline stitch, two strands of any favorite hue, quickly transforms the stamped material into mighty clever towels, each with a chubby baby, struggling with the task of the day. Pattern No. 561 at 20 cents supplies the set of seven designs in wax transfer form to use on anything from linen crash to sugar sacks.

We can also furnish this set of designs, seven of them stamped on soft, part linen toweling, ready to embroider and use. This is No. 562, and is $1.40 complete, postpaid. Three skeins of embroidery floss in colors to match the border are ten cents extra.

TURTLE PILLOW OR DOOR STOP

Here is a chubby green turtle. His oilcloth body is shaped to make him high enough for a stool, a rather thick pillow, or a door stop. All of the top parts are jade green and all underneath parts bright yellow, of excellent quality oilcloth. Darker green yarn blanket stitching finishes the edges with running-stitch markings for the shell. The turtle is 19 inches long from nose to tail tip, and about 11 inches broad. There are no eyes; he's really inoffensive, and the most lovable thing in turtles that we have seen. Stamped oilcloth, green and yellow is number 664X, and includes enough dark green thread to complete. Price for all materials is only 50 cents.

We also have an oilcloth Frog, number 244, that provides all stamped materials and thread for 50 cents.

Appointment of Bishop's Agent

Brother D. A. Fuller, having moved from Central Texas District, has presented his resignation as bishop's agent for that district, and we hereby appoint as his successor, Lester Hershey, subject to the ratification of the next district conference.

The faithful and efficient service of Brother Fuller while acting as our agent has been greatly appreciated.

Brother Hershey comes to us well recommended, and we are confident will receive the earnest cooperation of the membership in giving their support to the church work.

The solicitors are requested to send their reports to Lester Hershey, Handley, Texas, on or before April 25, 1931, and each month thereafter.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By G. L. DELAPP.

Approved by the First Presidency, by F. M. McDowell.

On account of change of duties, Bishop L. F. P. Curry has resigned as bishop of Pittsburgh and Wheeling Districts, the same effective March 31, 1931.

The Presiding Bishopric, therefore appoints Leroy S. Eschrich, 1859 Fallowfield Avenue, South Hills Station, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, as bishop's agent for Pittsburgh District, and Samuel A. Martin, Box 267, Bridgeport, Ohio, as bishop's agent for Wheeling District, effective April 1, 1931.

The solicitors of the Pittsburgh District are requested to forward their reports thereafter to Brother Eschrich, and solicitors of the Wheeling District will send their reports to Brother Martin at the addresses given above.

Brothers Eschrich and Martin have come well recommended, and, we believe, are capable of successfully handling the duties placed upon them. We bespeak for them the confidence and support of the membership in their respective districts.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By G. L. DELAPP.

Approved by the First Presidency, by F. M. McDowell.

Appointment of Bishop over Additional Territory

Due to circumstances which have made possible the taking on of additional church work by Bishop H. E. French, we are appointing him to labor in the following territory, in addition to Southwestern Ohio District, of which he is now bishop: Northwestern Ohio District and Kirtland District.

It is understood, however, that Brothers H. H. Harms and John L. Cooper will continue to act as bishop's agents in their respective districts, and forward their reports to the office of the Presiding Bishopric as before.

By G. L. DELAPP.

Approved by the First Presidency, by F. M. McDowell.

Our Departed Ones

STREETER.—Clement Streeter, sr., was born in Jude province, Quebec, Canada, October 15, 1856. He died February 5, 1931. Came to the United States in 1862, and moved to South Dakota in 1880, settling in Union County, McCook Lake, where he lived until his death. He married Miss Agatha Harbeck May 9, 1875. He was baptized in McCook Lake July 9, 1905, by William A. Smith. Brother Streeter was ordained a priest February 15, 1920, and an elder July 16, 1922. He leaves, beside his widow, two sons and one daughter. Five children preceded him in death.

MORGAREIDGE.—Della Morgareidge was born in Little Sioux, Iowa, October 15, 1885; died of cancer January 22, 1931, at Sioux City, Iowa. She was baptized into the church October 27, 1901. November 5, 1908, she married Orville E. DeHarty, who preceded her in death. She married Dave Morgareidge March 30, 1918. Leaves to mourn her husband, Dave; three daughters: Mrs. Genevieve Sands, Bonnie and Dorothy DeHarty; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Dickey; one brother, five sisters, a granddaughter, and many friends.

TRUMBLE.—Estle Cedric Trumble was born in Hartford, Michigan, February 1, 1891, and died at Independence, Missouri, January 18, 1931, following an operation for appendicitis. He was baptized at Hartford when eight years old by E. C. Briggs. He is survived by his wife, his mother, Maude Trumble, and a brother, Maynard Trumble, of Independence. The funeral was conducted at the Stone Church, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

VOORHEIS.—Emma Walker Voorheis was born August 23, 1847, in New Jersey. In early life she sought the Lord in a popular church, but was never satisfied until she heard the latter-day gospel and accepted it in baptism November 11, 1920. Many gifts and blessings were hers after uniting with the faith. Her death, though sudden, was peaceful, occurring March 22, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. L. Boggs, Council Bluffs, Iowa. The funeral was conducted from the Saints' church in charge of George R. Beaty and J. F. Mintun. This sister of the faith leaves many friends.

BRADY.—Eula Brady was born in Mondamin, Iowa, September 8, 1901; died January 19, 1931, at Sioux City, Iowa. She married Mark Brady July 25, 1921. Was baptized a member of the church June 26, 1910. Leaves to mourn, her husband, two sons, Ronald and Charles; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Bryant; one brother, Charles, and three sisters: Mrs. Joy Bowers, Mrs. Geraldine Rider, and Alma Bryant, besides many friends and neighbors.

WARN.—Charles Henry Warn was born November 2, 1867, in Genesee County, Michigan. Married Effie Ross, of Sonora, Kentucky, 1892. To them five children were born. He became a member of the church in 1888. Died at his home in Dayton, Ohio, March 17, 1931, leaving his wife, four children, five grandchildren, four brothers, and one sister. He was zealous in church work, doing all he could to promulgate the gospel. In liberality, personal testimony, and preaching the word he has builded to his memory an enduring monument. The funeral was from the Saints' church, the sermon by Elder Francis May. Interment was at West Milton, Ohio.

BYRNE.—Agnes Ruth Byrne, daughter of Robert and Ruby Byrne, was born November 17, 1917, and died as the result of an automobile accident at Byrneville, Indiana, March 22, 1931. She leaves to mourn, her parents, five sisters: Jessie, Harriet, Mrs. Alliene Fouts, Mrs. Nellie Sturgeon, and Mrs. Vernette Fouts; two brothers, Robert and Ward; a grandmother, and many other relatives and friends. She will be greatly missed in the community school and Sunday school at Byrneville. The funeral was conducted March 24 by J. O. Dutton, and interment was in the Byrneville Cemetery.

First Things First

III.—“SEEK YE FIRST TO BUILD UP THE KINGDOM OF GOD”

Christ leaves us in no doubt as to what should be first in our lives. His commandment as recorded in the Inspired Version of the Bible is, “Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness.”—Matthew 6:38. To build up the kingdom of God, then, becomes to us the first and biggest thing in life.

It would be considered presumptuous to claim that the church embodies in its present form all that is contemplated in the term the kingdom of God. Potentially, however, it does involve all that the term implies. And no matter what other good things we may see in the world that might be considered correlated to the kingdom and subject to divine approval, to us as Latter Day Saints the church is the primary expression on earth of the kingdom of God. If we are to put first things first, then, it becomes our first duty to build up the church and establish in it and through it the righteousness of our heavenly Father.

An Undivided Allegiance

The ancients were oftentimes assured that God is a jealous God. That was perhaps the only way he could make them understand that he would not tolerate a divided allegiance. Speaking explicitly to us in these last days, he declares, “Behold, I say unto you, that all old covenants have I caused to be done away in this thing, and this is a new and an everlasting covenant; even that which was from the beginning.”—Doctrine and Covenants 20:1.

We are not to divide our allegiance between this covenant and other covenants. We are not to divide our time, our strength, our prestige, our influence, our money between his covenant and other covenants, but we are to make our first aim to build up his kingdom. The Lord is insistent upon singleness of purpose: “Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and shalt cleave unto her and none else. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, might, mind, and strength, and him only shalt thou serve. Seek first to build up the church and kingdom of God.

“This One Thing I Do”

The Apostle Paul was one of the greatest missionaries and pastors that ever lived. The secret of his greatness is revealed in his declaration, “This one thing I do.” No great builder divides his allegiances. “You can not serve two masters,” was the explicit statement. The ministry of the church are to be leaders and exemplars, builders of the church, and if they are to put first things first, should render an undivided allegiance to the church. This applies most obviously, perhaps, to those general church officers and appointees who are supposed to devote all of their time to the interests of the church. They bear a double responsibility, first to God who has called them, ordained them, and sent them forth to engage single-heartedly in a specific work; secondly, they owe an allegiance to the people whom they represent in that work and who by their tithes and offerings sustain them in it under the presumption that all they have and are, in time, strength, influence, prestige, intelligence, and devotion goes singly and undivided to the support and upbuilding of the church.

“All Are Called”

It is probably equally, though less obviously true, that a similar responsibility rests upon the membership. It is true that they must give their time to the winning of a living for themselves and their families, but their chief objective even in that is that they may be able to live, that living they may exemplify in their lives the ideals of the kingdom and contribute to its upbuilding. Furthermore, having a surplus of time or energy or money left from the mere task of winning a living, all these things shall assist in the building of the kingdom.

Even in the humblest of avocations or vocations this objective may be maintained. When about twenty years of age I moved to Lamoni, Iowa, filled with zeal and devotion and with the ambition to engage in church work. The only thing that I could find to do directly in church service was to work in the Herald Office in the book bindery at fifty cents a day. By spreading plenty of paste I managed to stick to the job until I became foreman of the bindery with the princely salary of fifteen dollars a week. When the day's work in the office was done, I spent the evening, sometimes late into the night, studying and making preparation for other service. On Sunday, with others of like purpose, I went into the country to organize Sunday schools, and later to preach, as opportunity afforded. I felt myself one with the apostles and prophets and seventies and high priests engaged in the building up of the kingdom. It was a great experience; and that consecrated feeling may come to anyone in the church who will make it his first purpose to build up the kingdom.

Revival and Rededication

No more worthy allegiance can be found. No higher objective is offered to us. This work still remains, in spite of our follies and mistakes, which oftentimes have beclouded it, a “marvelous work and a wonder.” About us in the world is increasing confusion, but God's purposes remain clear, definite, and unchanged. It is our privilege to give ourselves whole-heartedly to the carrying out of those purposes.

There should be, there must be, and I am persuaded that there will be presently a revival of purpose in the church to make first things first, a re-consecration, a rededication under the very spirit and power by which the gospel was committed to us; and in the spirit of our fathers we will heed the admonition of the Master, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God." The world offers many enticements, many pleasures, many honors, many emoluments that would drag us away and induce us to divide our time and our allegiance, but in none of these in the end shall we find profit or even pleasure. Let us, with the Apostle Paul, highly resolve, "This one thing I do."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

The Great Commission

Our text for the cover is particularly appropriate to the post-Easter season. When its words were uttered, the agony of the cross was over; the tomb had been opened. Jesus, triumphant over pain and death, had been received into glory, which was the reward of his obedience and sacrifice. Then he went to meet his disciples by appointment in Galilee.

The record says, "And when they saw him, they worshiped him: but some doubted." There are those who doubt today; but there are also many who believe in him, rejoice in his victory, and worship him.

"Go ye therefore," continues the record, "and teach all nations"—"Go ye into all the world," are the majestic words reported by Mark, "and preach the gospel to every creature"—while Matthew ends, "baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

Under this divine imperative, countless men and women have laid down their tasks of life to take up the service of the Master. They have in many cases given all, even life itself, to teach the gospel. They have carried its message of personal salvation around the world, until the name of Christ has been heard by all men.

With our special views of the nature of authority, and our particular belief as to the principles and meaning of the gospel, the great commission comes to us with a manifold intensification. If the message that we possess is as great as we think it is, then truly is our task awesomely great and tremendously important.

The Master's words echo and reecho, repeated by the lips of innumerable followers, a divine imperative that grows stronger and more solemn with the passage of time—

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

Revelation and Discovery

It is often our custom to make a wide and sharp distinction between truth which has been revealed and truth which has been discovered. As a matter of fact, revealed truth must always be discovered, while discovered truth always has in it an element of revelation.

We sometimes say, "We have the revealed truth—we do not need to discover it for ourselves." There is both truth and error in this statement. Whenever a truth has been revealed, it must still be discovered by each individual person for himself. He must discover its full meaning, he must be convinced of its true worth, he must discover it to the extent of using it, of following where it leads! Otherwise it might just as well not have been revealed—in fact, it is not truly and completely revealed until we have so discovered its divinity and made it part of our life.

On the other hand, to him who has diligently and reverently sought in whatsoever field he may for the hidden truths of humanity, of nature, of the universe, when as a result of his preparation and his persistence new truth comes forth—to him most certainly comes not only the thrill of discovery but also the gleam of revelation, revelation through discovery.

It is for us then to discover anew the truths of revelation that we may have considered ours and yet which we have failed to act upon. And let us continue also to search for the revelation which shall come through the discoveries of our own Christian adventuring.

The Coin of Our Rental

A nationally known girl worker once said: "Our service to youth is the rent we pay for the space we occupy here." Excellent. But I believe she could have said much, much more with the same number of words: Our service to others is the rent we pay for the space we occupy here.

And what is the coin of our rental? I like to think of it as the coin of our best selves in the paying of which we emulate the example of Socrates, Christ, and our mothers. But the wise man looks well to his coin of payment, that it be not counterfeit; he understands and is master of himself, and he knows that to pay in the most acceptable manner, he must be considerate of the medium of exchange.

The man who would pay his rent in the best coin looks first to his God for direction and strength. He knows that the person who utterly abandons his own interests and those of his family for the interests of others, is not making payment in the coin asked by the Great Landlord. And he seeks to cultivate within his own character those things helpful to others. In a thousand ways he endeavors to put his coin of rental at par: He brings out the kindness and strength of his character; he observes the laws of health, temperance, and safety, keeping himself in good physical, mental, and spiritual condition so as not to be a burden to society; he does all within his power to educate himself and to make that education usable; he cultivates love and understanding for his fellows; he tells the truth, refrains from gossip, and knows the effectiveness of keeping silent; he saturates his home with the spirit of true hospitality; he grows in his garden the prettiest flowers in the neighborhood; he supports with impelling enthusiasm movements for public betterment; and, because he has made himself a partner of divinity, he gives of the richness of his life to his brothers. This is the happy man, the renter who pays high in the coin of his best self, for he knows that the coin which is used the most is the brightest.

Start Now to Prepare for Harvest Festival

Now is the time to start preparation for a greater Harvest Festival this coming fall. Both planting and planning must now get under way which will determine the quality and size of the exhibits and contributions that will appear at the Auditorium next fall.

Each year the Harvest Festival has grown to greater proportions and importance. Each year it has had wider publicity, and has brought greater numbers of people to the Auditorium. Last year, with the cooperation of the merchants of Independence, it assumed the proportions of a fair. The possibilities for this fall are even better.

The Harvest Festival is also an institution of mercy. The contributions which have gone into the exhibits are turned to the helping of the poor, and to the benefit of the Sanitarium. During the past winter, with many unemployed and needy, the supplies from the Harvest Festival relieved much suffering, and even kept some from the possibility of starvation.

The needs for charity for the coming year will be as great during the coming winter as they were last winter. Much good has been accomplished, and it is hoped that much good will again be done by these gifts.

Next week's Herald will carry an article about the Harvest Festival which contains announcements of importance. Readers are asked to look for it.

The Church as the Scourge of Sin and the Friend of Righteousness

Modern skeptics claim to see little value in churches and nothing for the ministry to do.

New York City, in its demand for a clean-up of the conditions of graft and corruption which civic leaders assert to exist, are finding one very important use for the ministry. Among the leaders of the revolt against the reign of vice are the ministers of the city. Their influence, through the demand for complete investigation and through their power over public opinion, is being felt in the high political places. The church is again functioning in its old role as the scourge of sin and the friend of righteousness.

The history of the country is marked with the influence and power of a clergy that, from earliest times, took seriously their responsibility to purge society and government from their iniquities. Of late years churchmen have been accused of indifference and complacency as to the trend of conditions. But now that the need has arisen, they show signs of a return to their old power and importance.

Jesus, after his triumphal entry into Jerusalem, went into the temple, and seeing how all its sacred functions had been turned into purposes of business, took a scourge and drove the corrupters out. This is a time for another cleansing of the temple—a cleansing of the temple of justice and of public morality. And the ministry are those who should apply the scourge.

Against Hasty Marriages

One of the most prolific sources of the growing numbers of divorces in this country has been the hasty and ill-considered marriage. Young folk in their late adolescence, seeking a new thrill, rush into marriage. It is said that many marriages are contracted under the influence of liquor. Such marriages frequently end disastrously for the individuals concerned and work detriment to society's most fundamental and one of religion's most sacred institutions.

The legislature of Wyoming has recently passed a bill that will require couples to declare their intentions five days before the license will be issued. Thus it is aimed to prevent inadvisable marriages that result from intoxication or temporary adolescent enthusiasm. Five days is sufficient time for even the most excitable to get cooled off. It seems to be a good law. It ought to work for better and more permanent marriages.

Shall the Criminal Triumph

Whatever may be said as to the merits or demerits of the Wickersham report, there is much to be said for the men constituting the commission.

With the finger-print expert on the one side and a woman deputy on the other, I heard Charles J. Loesch, eminent member of the National Crime Commission, discuss their experiences in their investigation and their findings. Mr. Loesch is well informed on the subject of crime conditions. His last few years have been spent as president of the Chicago Crime Commission, whose aim was to clean up the local situation.

His question, "Shall the criminal triumph?" was answered by everyone present—"No. Not so long as there are such able men actively engaged in studying the problems of criminology and combating them."

The assembled gathering—the Los Angeles Academy of Criminology—included judges, professors of law and sociology at the local colleges, police women, police men, social service workers—the practical and the theoretical meeting to work out together a workable program for the correction of a nation-wide problem which holds the citizenry appalled and bewildered by its magnitude.

Mr. Loesch, though already seventy-nine years of age, said he expected to live to see Al Capone electrocuted, if he was not shot by some of his own henchmen first. He regards his first sentence as the beginning of the end.

As to the prevalent status of crime, Mr. Loesch excoriated the law-enforcing system heavily. He pointed out the superiority of the criminal gangs as to organization, cooperation, loyalty to fellow members, preparation for their work, equipment, and devotion to death, as compared to lax organization of police, overlapping between city, county, and state agencies, poor preparation for work, inadequate equipment, and disloyalty, with susceptibility to bribes.

Mr. Loesch considers it highly important that we should reorganize the machine so that police will be operated in at least state-wide units, that each man should be an expert in his field, and the pay sufficient to attract persons of high caliber. He also recommends the reducing of technical difficulties in arrest, prosecution, and conviction, also the appointment of judges for longer terms. His first aim is to divorce politics from the protective forces.

The Public Takes a Hand

When the general public gives help toward the apprehension of criminals and aids in the prevention of crimes, the administration of justice is speeded up and the general safety of life and property is improved.

There was a time when it was easy to arouse sympathy in favor of criminals whose picturesque lives made them heroes of a sort; but the fact that crime has caused so much public discomfort and inconvenience has brought a change in sentiment.

People discover that the capture of criminals, besides being a service to society, is an interesting game, in which they can aid the officers and courts to make society safer for everybody.

Not long ago a man who liked to read the "true" detective stories identified a fugitive from justice and brought about the capture of a most dangerous criminal. It is to be hoped that nothing prevents him from collecting the full reward for his work. More recently a priest, for no reward at all, gave positive identification of the slayer of a newspaper man.

The latest and best tale is of a bank robbery in New York that was broken up by the combined courage of a teller and a customer. At some risk the teller turned the switch that started the alarm siren, and a daring customer seized a bag of nickels and hit the nearest bandit on the head, causing his capture.

All these cases show a subsidence of fear and an increase of courage. The officers of the law are public servants, and as such deserve public support and aid in the pursuit of their duties. It is well known that captures of criminals in foreign quarters are made very difficult by the fact that the people of those quarters give little information to the police, doing as much as possible to shelter the fugitives, who are often kinsmen or friends, or fellow countrymen. A reversal of public sentiment is necessary; and when it comes, the "crime wave" in the United States will diminish.

Wells of Living Water

By C. B. Hartshorn

And Isaac digged again the wells of water, which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father, for the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham.—Genesis 26: 18.

It is our purpose to show that spiritual life is dependent on institutions for its expression and effectiveness.

The claim has been made, through medical science, that man has been known to live seven to nine weeks without food, but will perish in seven to nine days without water. On account of the importance of water to life, the control of the sources of water in Palestine in the days of Isaac was a vital concern. If a well became stopped up, or its water was polluted by an enemy, it was a serious threat on the lives of those people who depended upon it.

The Wells of Palestine

The twenty-sixth chapter of Genesis tells the story of Isaac's coming into Gerar, a territory in Canaan under control of Abimelech, king of the Philistines. God directed him to go there, rather than into Egypt, to escape a famine. The king was friendly. Isaac was prospered. He became so great that the envy of the Philistines was aroused. The old wells digged by Abraham were filled with earth, and Isaac and his people were asked to move on.

Another camp was established at the site of another of the old wells which was restored by Isaac's servants. It was called after the name originally given it by Abraham. Soon the Philistine herdsmen began again to contend for the water, and Isaac moved the second time, only to have the experience repeated.

The fourth move proved more favorable to the Israelites, and they named that well Rehoboth, meaning "room," for they said, "Now the Lord hath made room for us." Nearby, at Beer-sheba, Isaac built an altar and worshiped God.

Sychar's Well in Samaria

As Jesus traveled from Judea toward Galilee on one occasion, he came to one of these old wells which Jacob had dug. He asked a Samaritan woman, who came for a pitcher of water, to give him a drink. Her reply was to remind him of the fact that Jews and Samaritans were not on speaking terms. Jesus said that if she "knew the gift of God and who it was that saith to thee, 'Give me to drink'; thou wouldst have asked him, and he would have given thee that living water." It should be like a "well of water springing up unto everlasting life."

Wells of Living Water

A well is an institution for making water available. As a boy it was my lot to take my turn, with the other boys of the country school to which I went, in getting the water supply from a well about three quarters of a mile distant. It was the "old oaken bucket" which served us here so well. The water was acceptable most of the time. But occasionally some luckless rat or other varmint would render it unfit for use. Song and story have cast a halo over this type of water supply, but from the standpoint of sanitation and accessibility it was not much better than more primitive sources of pond or river.

A few months ago I had the privilege of visiting the place of my birth in northern Iowa. I drank again from the old wells my father had digged. These are artesian "wells of water springing up" continually. The water is most delicious on a warm summer's day.

"Wells That Our Fathers Digged"

It is the source of supply for the kind of water that Jesus offered at Sychar with which we are most interested, the kind that quenches the parching thirst of sin, that refreshes eternally. Only the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ can give this eternal water. Let us consider, then, some of these institutional wells which have proved themselves worthy of striving for in the onward march of the race. It is not that we would turn the clock of history backward, nor point disparagingly to "the good old days" upon which time and fond memory have placed a crown of glory. But perhaps some very good wells which our fathers dug need reopening today. Human nature changes so slowly that the spiritual institutions of the past may serve us quite well today. Come with me while we inspect a few of these old wells of living water.

The Family Altar

When Isaac felt well settled, according to our lesson, he built an altar and worshiped at Beer-sheba. An altar is an institution for getting a needful thing done. Nothing has come to my knowledge which will take the place of the family altar, nor do the work God intended it to do, quite so well. Old-fashioned, it is true, but it has produced strong characters, not only among the ancient patriarchs, but also among latter-day Israel, and therefore it is justified by its results.

In Doctrine and Covenants 68:4, parents are commanded: "They shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord." It is my observation that unless some set and regular time is established in the home for praying and instruction, this command simply is not carried out. The Lord is not particular what time of the day, nor just what method is employed. The command is, Get it done. My father had one method which suited his farm life quite well. The time chosen in my own home is different, because I feel that it suits my purpose better. At the beginning of each day, before we breakfast, we find it most regular and satisfactory to worship at the family altar.

Doubtless, every true Saint wishes to drink from this old well which our fathers dug. Some have not learned to overcome the obstacles and make it a going institution. "The family is never all together at one time." "My companion does not belong to the church." Well, suppose your companion is not a Christian. Praying is good for anybody. Have you tried to get that companion to cooperate? Suppose he has refused? Just "cast your net on the other side of the boat." You may have been fishing on the wrong side. Do not give up too easily; you have too much at stake. When you get the "earth" which the "Philistines" have thrown into your well dug out, and the living water springs up once more, much of the discord and strain of domestic life will be washed away.

The Neighborhood

That good old Anglo-Saxon word neighborhood suggests another of the splendid old wells our fathers enjoyed. And with it comes to me a picture of the old blacksmith shop on father's farm where the neighbors gathered on rainy days to have tools and implements repaired. As an institution of religious education it had no standing at all. But it spelled friendliness, helpfulness, and equality in capital letters.

When a new life was to be ushered into the world, some good neighbor woman was standing by with a prayer in her heart that God would give her wisdom and strength, so that every move would be the right move. Sorrowing hearts were never left alone with their dead in that community. Large families and farm cares were not considered justification for neglecting the sick neighbor either.

This is not said to reflect discredit on our use of hospitals, or the use of the undertaker's establishment instead of a home "wake." The modern telephone is a fine adjunct to social grace and friendliness. But I do reflect on the fine, neighborly, Christian character developed by the old system and ask you to decide if we have not lost something valuable in the exchange. "Inasmuch as ye do it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me," said our Lord. I am confident that in some communities, even among Latter Day Saints, the old well, called "neighborhood," has been stopped up by our enemy, and should be cleaned out, that we might again drink of its soul-refreshing water.

Midweek Prayer Meeting

In some communities at least, the prayer meeting is a rather feeble institution. The walls of this old well are crumbling, and the water supply is low. It is not that our leaders and workers do not appreciate the strong, sturdy characters it has produced throughout the ages, but we let ourselves be victimized too easily by circumstances which hinder us from profiting by the prayer meeting. It is certain that we shall get no appreciable benefit unless we are in the meeting. Our blessings are usually proportionate to our activity as an individual. "But, what shall I say?" asks one. We have tried to answer this by announcing a theme, and a citation from one of our three standard books, which, if you will read and meditate upon during the week, will enable you to participate, and the spirit of unity in our expressions will give a cumulative effect for the good of each. However, if this does not prove of sufficient help, speak of your own experience and observation. But find satisfactory expression at all costs.

This is not said to find fault, but rather to help those who are willing to try. This old well has no substitute that is "just as good." It has justified itself by its fruits. Do not expect to gather figs from a thorn tree.

"Why do we not have more of the gifts now, as they used to have in our prayer meetings?" one asks. I think I know a simple answer to that question. It is because we do not desire them earnestly enough. Let us test this. Have you ever prayed very earnestly, even once, that God would give you the gift of prophecy, or of tongues, that you might be the instrument to bless this people tonight? "Oh, no, I think that is not for me; the pastor, or members of the priesthood, should have that duty." Just where will you find scripture to justify that attitude? Paul admonished the Corinthian saints to "covet earnestly the best gifts." (1 Corinthians 12:31.) Also "covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues." (1 Corinthians 14:39.) But again let me ask with equal seriousness, have you prayed frequently and earnestly for any particular member of the priesthood, that he might be blessed with the gift of prophecy or tongues? Now

God has not purposed to bless every man alike, but "dividing to every man severally as he will." (1 Corinthians 12: 11.) It may not be the divine will to give either of these gifts to the one you think should exercise it. Why not take the admonition to yourself and "covet earnestly" that you might bless others? Remember, God does not change. It is simply that we do not desire the gifts for ourselves to the extent other Saints have. Perhaps we should clean out this old well, too.

The Women's Work

Another old well which has justified itself in the experience of the church is the women's work, or "The Busy Club," as it has been recently renamed here in Des Moines. It would not be proper to refer to it as "one of the wells our fathers digged," for our mothers handled the spades in this excavation. I know it is the butt of ridicule in some places; a synonym for gossiping, and an incubator of contention. But no finer work has been done by any organized group under my pastorate here than by this splendid group of women who meet each Thursday to fellowship, and to devote their labors to the financial needs of the branch.

Professor A. LeRoy Huff, of Drake University, in an address at our installation service in 1929, speaking about the value of the project method in religious education, said that the best piece of religious education being done in most of the churches was that done by the ladies' aid. Here Christian living and cooperation is learned by actually living together and cooperating. My only regret is that more of the younger women do not get into this group and experience its splendid fellowship, its spiritual tone and devotional ideals. We shall lose much when we permit this old well to become clogged up and cease to provide its power of living water.

Lord's Day Reverence

"I can worship just as well at home as I can in church." This oft-repeated formula is perhaps true, but the question remains: "Are you actually doing it? Business can be conducted without banks, but we do not carry on that way. Our boys and girls can get an education without schools and classes, but they do not do it. It is just about as rarely that men stay at home to worship. It just simply is not being done. Those who talk that way are generally trying to cover their wayward tendencies with sophistry.

Thoughtful men all over America are saying that the greatest threat against our Government, and against our national security, is that the people are not taking time to worship. Sunday is an open date with pleasure. Self-servers and thrill-mad throngs are recruiting to their ranks many thousands who formerly were devout worshippers. Many think that there is a direct relation between this situation and the lawless and rebellious tendencies of the past decade.

"Isn't it all right to go visiting on Sunday, to have an occasional picnic, and a few sports?" ask some. Christianity is not a system of negatives. Anyone who lays to his charge the keeping of the first and greatest commandment, "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," will be able to answer all his own questions. Reverence of the Lord's Day is one of those fine old institutions which has brought much good to the race. If we let the "Philistines" destroy it, we shall suffer great loss.

Broken Cisterns

Jeremiah called the attention of the Israelites to two evils: "My people have committed two evils; they have forsaken the fountains of living waters and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water." This is applicable to our time as well. Building "bigger barns" and creating institutions of pleasure is like hewing out leaky cisterns. Our fathers builded with stone, but we want an up-to-date model of concrete. They are more easily built and look better.

A friend was telling me last week of a windmill in Decatur County which was working as well as usual, but the stream of water kept diminishing. At last it was necessary to get a well digger to come and remedy the situation. He found the intake pipe screen was covered over with a slime of muck and refuse which had prevented the water from coming to the surface.

The great need of the day is a reconsecration of self to the old institutions of proven worth. If we forsake the wells for cisterns of our own making, let us be sure that they are able to hold the living waters that spring up to life eternal.

As I leave this lesson with you, may we meditate upon these two great truths: First: No man has the moral right to ask that others build and maintain these institutions so that he and his children will share the benefit unless he is willing to give of his labor and talent in return. That would be selfish, hence unchristian. If the institution is worthy, it should be supported by every man in the community who benefits.

Second: The hosts of heaven are in league with the righteous. Salvation is promised only on God's terms. Let us seek him while he may be found.

Report of the Department of Statistics

By Carroll L. Olson

During the month of March the following numbers of the various types of reports were received, resulting in the indicated changes in the total net enrollment of the church:

Total enrollment of the church March 1, 1931.....	108,561
March baptisms .....	133
Gains from the unknown .....	19
Gains by correction .....	3
Total gain .....	155
Deaths .....	71
Expulsions .....	14
Losses by correction .....	4
Total loss .....	89
Net gain during the month.....	66
Total enrollment of the church April 1, 1931.....	108,627

The following miscellaneous reports were also received:

Transfers .....	556
Blessings .....	138
Marriages .....	95
Ordinations .....	23
Divorces .....	5
Silences .....	2
Restored .....	1
Branch disorganized .....	1
New branches .....	2

The outstanding district this month in the matter of baptisms was the Central Michigan District with a total of 15. Eight of these were performed at Mikado, Michigan, by Elder Amos Guy, and the other seven at Saginaw, Michigan, by Missionary Arthur A. Oakman.

The Southeastern Illinois District reported 14 baptisms, all of them being credited to the Centralia Branch. They were the result of a series of missionary services conducted there by Missionaries H. O. Plumb and V. E. Sheppard. The baptisms took place on March 1 and 2.

The following branches, missions, or district non-resident groups outside the stakes reported three or more baptisms each:

Centralia, Illinois .....	14
Jackson, Ohio .....	10
Mikado, Michigan .....	8
Saginaw, Michigan .....	7
Galesburg, Illinois .....	6
Miami, Oklahoma .....	6
Cadillac, Michigan .....	4
1st Chicago, Illinois .....	4
Skiatook, Oklahoma .....	4
Springfield, Missouri .....	4
Florida nonresident .....	3
Lingle, Wyoming .....	3
Logan, Iowa .....	3

All the baptisms this month were reported from the United States and Canada. Twenty-five were reported by the stakes, 11 from Far West Stake, 9 from Independence, and 5 from Holden Stake.

It is of interest to note that two new branches were organized this past month. The third Columbus Branch was organized on March 11 by Apostle C. F. Ellis and District President A. E. Anderton. The Jackson, Ohio, Branch was organized on March 15 by A. E. Anderton. Both of these new branches belong to the Southern Ohio District.

The Story of My Life

By Arthur Leverton

VII.—PREACHING IN CHATHAM PARK

As told to Nellie Andrew and Illa Brown

I presided over the District of Canada, so-called, as Canada was all in one district at that time. Later on it was divided into Chatham and London Districts. I continued to preside over the Chatham District, which occupied a great deal of my time and thought. During the time, I was once preaching in the town of Chatham, in the park, where there was at that time a class of people very bitter against the Saints. My crowds increased until upon one occasion there were five hundred people. The filling of those appointments meant something to me, working on the farm during the week and preaching in the park on Sunday. I never had a rest day from the 20th of April until some time in September. In order to get to my appointment Sunday morning I had to arise from my bed at half past four in the morning; and if I could conceal my going from my wife, I did so, to save her trouble and work. I then walked three miles to the station to get the morning train. Arriving in Chatham, I held social service in the morning, preached in the park at half past two, and in the hall at seven. On Monday morning I caught the early train for home, worked on the farm all week, and repeated the Sunday experience. Many a time Sunday was my hardest day in the week, but finally we broke down prejudice, a number were baptized, and a branch was organized.

From one of the Methodist churches just below Chatham, a place called Prairie Siding, we baptized some of the members. Among others was their organist, who was Mrs. Henry Lively, of Saint Clair, Michigan. The Methodists did not take this kindly. They sent for a specialist to come down to swallow up or destroy the Mormons in some way. The Saints informed me of the fact and, at the time appointed, I was at the field of battle. Well, poor fellows, they did the best they could. They gave us a terrible hash of Joseph Smith, Mormons, polygamy, and Brigham Young, and finally doomed us all to destruction. After the meeting was closed, I tried to get a chance to reply to some of their false statements, but there was such confusion I was unable to do so. No less than seven men had their coats off ready to throw me out of doors, but there were seven more ready to pull off theirs to see that they did not throw me out.

We finally procured a hall in Chatham, and I replied to their nonsense—I could not call it anything else. That seemed to end the extreme strife, but we had jolly times in the park. Sometimes they would rise—you would think they had their guns loaded to kill a bear or an elephant—and when they fired off their guns their ammunition charge was not strong enough to kill a mouse. I remember one Sunday a man came and thought he was ready to explode everything in our profession, but another gentleman out of the church caught him in time and said, "You keep quiet. That man will swallow you in two mouthfuls." The influence of the park preaching went, more or less, all over Canada.

In regard to my patriarchal work, I have little to say, as that is principally recorded in the blessings given, but one instance occurred when I was on the Georgian Bay Mission which was so admirable that I feel it should be recorded among my experiences.

At a place called Claring, near Wiarton, a zealous Scotchman came in for his blessing, a man I had never met before in my life. You would have thought by his rugged appearance and sturdy build that he had never seen a sick day in his life. To my great surprise, when I laid my hands upon him, after the introductory statement the blessing went on to say, "Brother Larry, you have seen some serious times in your experiences. Your life has been prolonged through the power of God because of the honesty and integrity of your heart; yea, I have snatched you from the jaws of death and given you opportunity to obey the gospel and become a citizen of the kingdom of God." After the blessing was given, I said, "Brother Larry, you apparently have gone through some tight places in your life according to your blessing." He said, "There was never a truer word spoken." I said, "Would you mind rehearsing some of the events in your life?" He replied, "Not a bit," and told the following experiences:

"I was working with a road gang one time, and they sandbagged me and left me for dead. A more remarkable event occurred another time when I was working in the woods with some others. We felled a tree which lodged in another one. We did not want to cut the other tree down, so I went up to cut the limb in order to let the tree slide down to the ground, but to my surprise I had hit the limb only a few blows with the ax when it sprang and let the tree go, and I fell into a small brush heap. A little maple tree had been broken off, and a sliver was sticking up from the stump, somewhere in the neighborhood of two feet long. I fell with my neck on the sliver, and the sliver ran clear through my neck, not going far enough through to break the skin on the opposite side, but going far enough to make a bulge. They took me to the house and sent for the doctor immediately. The doctor came and took the broken sliver—as he thought—out of my neck, thinking of course that I would die in a very short time. But my sister came the next day and said, 'Larry, I am going to take you to Toronto.' They said, 'You can't do that. He will die on the way.' She took me to a specialist in Toronto. They took me into the surgery, examined me, and said, 'There is no use. It is impossible to save his life. There still remains a part of the sliver in his neck.' My sister said, 'Go on, doctor. Do the best you can. Where there is life, there is hope.' The doctor said, 'This is one case where there is life, but no hope.' 'Never mind,' she said, 'go on and do the best you can.' They went on, took the rest of the sliver out of my neck, and gave me two teaspoons of milk, which ran out the hole in my neck. The doctor said, 'There is no use tormenting the man.' She said, 'Go on, and do the best you can.' So he did. I had to remain under the doctor's care. About two weeks after the operation, the doctor came and said, 'Larry, you are going to get well. I don't understand it. We haven't another case on the medical record where a man recovered who had an article penetrate his neck as you have. This is a mystery to me.'

"Well," the man concluded, "here I am just as you see me, an exhibition of long-suffering and the mercy of God."

The God of This World

By Albert Loving

But every man walketh in his own way and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great which shall fall.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3.

Who is this god whose image is set up by every man, and followed by the millions who walk in their own ways? What is this that is said to be as the substance of an idol which shall perish in Babylon?

Recently the research division of the National Education association of America prepared a report entitled, "Investing in Public Education," based on the most reliable figures available. In 1928, the last year for which there are figures accessible, the Nation's bill for schools was $2,448,633,561; for life insurance, $3,145,584,000; for luxuries, such as tobacco, soft drinks, ice cream, amusements, jewelry, and cosmetics, $6,401,650,000; for passenger automobiles, $12,500,000,000.

Compared with other lands, this is a rich country, "a land choice above all other lands," yet the United States spent a smaller fraction of its national income for all public purposes than did any of the other large nations of the world, although its estimated income per capita is $742 as compared with $427 for Great Britain, which is the next highest figure. These figures are from the American City Magazine. A study of the people living the type of life that makes records of this kind, reveals the quality of soul and mental objectives sought.

Can this church determine the soul quality of her people? If so, how? Will it not be by the kind of deeds that are done? Booker T. Washington said, "The world desires to know what a man can do, not what he knows."

The God of the Land

Ether, the ancient prophet, uttered the decree of the Almighty concerning this land when he said:

And he [God] had sworn in his wrath unto the brother of Jared, that whoso should possess this land of promise, from that time henceforth and forever, should serve him, the true and only God, or they should be swept off when the fullness of his wrath should come upon them. And now we can behold the decrees of God concerning this land, that it is a land of promise, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall serve God, or they shall be swept off when the fullness of his wrath shall come upon them. And the fullness of his wrath cometh upon them when they are ripened in iniquity; for behold, this is a land which is choice above all other lands; wherefore, he that doth possess it shall serve God, or shall be swept off; for it is the everlasting decree of God. And it is not until the fullness of iniquity among the children of the land, that they are swept off. And this cometh unto you, ye Gentiles, that ye may know the decrees of God, that ye may repent, and not continue in your iniquities until the fullness come, that ye may not bring down the fullness of the wrath of God upon you, as the inhabitants of the land have hitherto done. Behold this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ, who hath been manifested by the things which we have written.—Ether 1: 30-35.

Those of us who accept and believe the Book of Mormon may read and ponder the cause of the decay and overthrow of those ancient enlightened people, and among other things we learn that pride, selfishness, revolution, lying, murder, and unmentionable evils caused their downfall.

In the Des Moines Register of February 24, 1929, J. N. Darling, in writing of Yucatan, says:

Behind the long, low sandy shoreline of Yucatan, half buried and overgrown with tropical trees, stand stately temples of sculptured stone, and castle-crowned pyramids, unread hieroglyphics, and images of strange gods and unknown conquerors. They are not stray accidental bits; but miles and miles of them, with hardly a stone missing, bear unforgettable evidence of an ancient era of genius and grandeur so old that there is no living soul who can recall the faintest legend of its existence. One sits among these ancient ruins with the moody thought that if such a civilization with so much intelligence and so much power could drop so completely from the history of mankind, then what will become of ours?

That is the question—What will become of our civilization? The Lord, because of his love for man, has told us; and in his word to the church he has given many words of encouragement with promises of sustaining grace, spiritual power, and ultimate success—success from his standpoint, not the world standard of success.

On April 6, 1830, the Lord said, "For behold I will bless all those who labor in my vineyard with a mighty blessing."—Doctrine and Covenants 19: 3. The demonstration which is so much talked about concerning Zion is that of soul quality, not so much wrapped up in a successful business venture; men have seen that sort of thing to their heart's sickening. If that were all that were required to set the light of Zion on the mountains of the world, then God made a mistake by speaking to a poor unknown boy in 1820. "How shall they who trust in riches enter into the kingdom of God?" Is there not a danger of Russianizing the whole world? Why can not men use their wealth and energy for the greater task of Christianizing denominationalism? The Prophet Zenos is quoted by Jacob as found on page 187 of the Book of Mormon as forecasting the laborers in the vineyard for the last time, and of them it is said:

And it came to pass that the servants did go, and labor with their mights; and the Lord of the vineyard labored also with them, and they did obey the commandments of the Lord of the vineyard in all things. And there began to be the natural fruit again in the vineyard; and the natural branches began to grow and thrive exceedingly.

Will this natural fruit not be determined by the soul quality of the repentant who accept Jesus and cultivate in their daily lives the Christ nature?

Spiritual Gifts Necessary Today

By V. D. Ruch

As I have perused the columns of the Herald the past year, my heart has been made glad to note that the spiritual gifts have been enjoyed in many branches and reunions throughout the church. I am led to believe that the exercise of these gifts is on the increase rather than the decline.

A few years ago I thought I could discern a tendency in some quarters of the church to discourage and ridicule the gifts of tongues and prophecy. This attitude tended to cause the Saints to hesitate in exercising the gifts when moved upon by the Spirit to do so. If this condition actually existed, the church was treading upon dangerous ground and placing itself in a position to win the disfavor of God.

From the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants we learn that the gifts are a part of the fruit that accompanies the gospel of Jesus Christ in its fullness. If the time ever comes when they are not enjoyed in the church, something will be radically wrong. It will indicate that we are not worshiping God in harmony with his divine will and that we are living far beneath our privileges as a people.

The Prophet Moroni, in closing up the record called the Book of Mormon, has this to say:

And again I exhort you, my brethren, that ye deny not the gifts of God, for they are many; and they come from the same God. And there are different ways that these gifts are administered; but it is the same God who worketh all in all; and they are given by the manifestations of the Spirit of God unto men, to profit them. For behold, to one is given by the Spirit of God, that he may teach the word of wisdom; and to another, that he may teach the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; and to another exceeding great faith; and to another, the gifts of healing by the same Spirit. And again, to another, that he may work mighty miracles; and again, to another, that he may prophesy concerning all things; and again, to another, the beholding of angels and ministering spirits; and again, to another, all kinds of tongues; and again, to another, the interpretation of languages and of divers kinds of tongues. And all these gifts come by the Spirit of Christ; and they come unto every man severally, according as he will. And I would exhort you, my beloved brethren, that ye remember that every good gift cometh of Christ. And I would exhort you, my beloved brethren, that ye remember that he is the same yesterday, today, and for ever, and that all these gifts of which I have spoken, which are spiritual, never will be done away, even as long as the world shall stand, only according to the unbelief of the children of men. . . . And now I speak unto all the ends of the earth, that if the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief. And wo be unto the children of men, if this be the case; for there shall be none that doeth good among you, no not one. For if there be one among you that doeth good, he shall work by the power and gifts of God. And wo unto them that shall do these things away and die, for they die in their sins, and they can not be saved in the kingdom of God; and I speak it according to the words of Christ, and I lie not.—Moroni 10: 8-14, 18-21. Book of Mormon, pages 775, 776.

From the foregoing we learn that if these gifts are not found among us in rich measure today it is because of our disbelief and our sins. We can reach no other conclusion.

The saints in New Testament times were profoundly blessed with these spiritual manifestations. Many of them prophesied and spoke in tongues immediately after receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost. (See Acts 10: 44-46; 19: 6.) Paul admonished the saints to covet the best gifts (1 Corinthians 12: 31)—not to sit indifferently by waiting for God to endow them with some special gift, but to covet it, desire it—yes, pray for it.

Paul further instructs the church with these words:

Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy. . . . I would that ye all spake with tongues, but rather that ye prophesied: for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying. . . . Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church. Wherefore let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue pray that he may interpret. . . . How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying.—1 Corinthians 14: 1, 5, 12, 13, 26.

How wonderful it is to be present at a prayer service where several manifestations of the Spirit are enjoyed! I remember with pleasure the closing prayer meeting of the 1928 General Conference in the Stone Church in Independence. It was a spiritual feast for my soul. The gift of tongues, the interpretation of tongues, several gifts of prophecy, and the gift of discernment were present. Several Saints related spiritual dreams and visions which had been given to them, while others told of miraculous healing which they had experienced. The Spirit that accompanied these gifts was beautiful and convincing. In at least one instance several present were given the same message. It was a message delivered to the writer by one of our trustworthy, dependable sisters—a message which lifted a great load of worry from our mind. The brother in charge of the meeting testified to its genuineness, while several came to me at the close and informed me that they, too, had been inspired with the same message.

From the early days of my childhood when I attended the prayer meetings with my mother, I remember the deep impressions received from listening to a prophecy or a tongue. I have never outgrown the feeling and belief that all of the spiritual gifts are necessary in the church today. While I pride myself in believing that I am progressive, I find that I am still old-fashioned enough to insist that there is still a place for the gifts among us.

Think of the encouragement, admonition, counsel, and advice the Saints have received through the gifts of prophecy and tongues! Many doubts and dark clouds have vanished, and the sunshine of hope and cheer has come once more into our lives as a result of a word to us from our heavenly Father.

When the church of Jesus Christ was restored to earth in 1830, the spiritual gifts which had not been enjoyed among men for many hundreds of years because of apostasy, were given to the saints in their organization meeting. From that day they were enjoyed richly by the early Saints. The history of the church records a rich outpouring of them upon that wonderful occasion when the temple of the Lord was dedicated at Kirtland. The church has not advanced nor will it ever develop to that point of wisdom, knowledge, or spirituality which will render the gifts unnecessary.

On the other hand, if the gifts are not found abundantly among us, it is because we have wandered away from God, are living in sin and worldly pleasure, and have lost faith in our Maker. Woe unto us if the gifts ever cease and become a matter of history in the church! We will be in the depths of iniquity and in a lost and fallen condition.

No one will deny that we still need wisdom, knowledge, and faith in the church. And surely there is a place for the healing of the sick and the performing of miracles. Then why should there not also be a need for prophecy and the gift of tongues?

These spiritual manifestations were all enjoyed in the church in Book of Mormon times and in the New Testament church. And, as stated, they were also restored to earth as a part of the fullness of the gospel in 1830. I am happy that they are still in the church today after one hundred years of its existence on earth in these latter days. I only wish that they were enjoyed in richer measure among us. But as we as a church cleanse our lives from iniquity and sin and develop a more childlike faith in God, an increasing measure of God's gifts and blessings will come to us. Lord! help us to hasten the day!

A Question of Justice

By D. H. Schmidt

We accepted the writer's invitation to "Read, not to contradict nor to believe, but to weigh and consider." Our readers may be interested in the writer's protest against conditions as they are. He is not alone, and is probably representative of many others who are not satisfied with the present economic arrangements of the country. It is the self-assumed task of the critic to point the way to better things. Critics, like doctors, may disagree, but "while physicians disagree, the patient recovers."

Justice demands that you and I render financial service to society (religious, fraternal, or governmental) because these make us what we are. The amount differs in proportion to our different financial abilities.

Little should be required from little, and much from much, but not according to our present legal requirements. These are not based upon our differing abilities but are placed upon consumption, business, or traffic. Most of these legal requirements sell us the right to live or do business. These unjust requirements demand license to travel on the road, a franchise to haul passengers, to sell milk or what not. If you have not the money, you can get out of the way or die. If taxation without representation is tyranny, what is taxation without the ability to pay?

A few rich people may own as much wealth as all the rest combined; if they own a billion dollars and the rest together own a billion, justice should demand that they pay one half of all the public expenses, and the other great horde of people pay the other half.

Under our present governmental requirements, they can not do this, because taxes for public expenses are not levied on the two billions of wealth, but are mostly derived from revenues, tariffs, occupation taxes, franchises, licenses, poll taxes, etc., none of which are based on the possessions or abilities of the taxpayer. Economic justice, which is true Christianity, demands that every man should take care of his own. If my house needs painting or shingling, why should I expect you to do it? Or where is my sense of honor if I allow you to do it, if it be a legal requirement? If I do, my pretended religion is false. Yet that is exactly what is taking place in this country and others. Money is the representation of all material wealth. You and I own just as much of the country as our money will buy; no more and no less. You may be able to buy a small stock of goods, a lot, a house, or a small farm. I may be able to buy a chain of stores, a railway system, or a million acres of land.

It is said that less than five per cent of the people own ninety-five per cent of all the wealth, or all America. It is true then that they should maintain, take care of, and defend what they own. That means that these few immensely rich should pay ninety-five per cent of all public expenses, build ninety-five per cent of the roads and streets, build and maintain ninety-five per cent of the schools, asylums, public hospitals, prisons, parks, fire departments, etc.

These internal expenses are but a small part of their financial responsibilities. They should pay ninety-five per cent of the expenses for wars and defense that is necessary to protect their own. That means they should pay ninety-five per cent of the twenty or more billion dollars of the World War debt, and that is not all; they should furnish ninety-five per cent of the soldiers and lives to defend this Nation, while the rest, the great mass of people, should pay only the remaining five per cent. If this were enforced, how many wars would we have? It, therefore, becomes the duty of everyone to do what he can to bring about this state of affairs.

"For unto whomsoever much is given, of him much shall be required; and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more."
—Jesus. Luke 12: 48.

There are many causes, but the above mentioned injustice is the chief cause of our financial depression. By adjusting this, we would get the most permanent relief.

We have mentioned only man's first obligation to his fellow man, and have not hinted that the rich should divide anything with the poor. Justice must go before generosity.

The man who dodges this obligation and then gives to charity will not receive commendation from justice-loving men, or a just God, because that which he gives belongs not justly to himself but is the property of other people. After a man has met the requirements of justice, his offering will bring its reward.

The one hundred per cent American is he who contributes his full proportion. To whatever extent anyone falls short of this, he is just that much of a slacker, even more so, than the one who refuses to fight for what other men mostly own and control.

Of what consolation is it to hear and read about the impending prosperity, and how much worse off other people are, when you are failing and know that the majority are going down, while a few are going higher than was ever known?

Can the people help themselves out of financial depression by building public improvements and taxing themselves in the above mentioned manner to furnish the money? We say, verily nay; a man doesn't build an addition to his house when he is losing it, or lift himself over the fence by his boot-straps.

If you pay one hundred dollars annually (taxes) on the only thousand dollars of property that you own, why should not I pay one hundred on each thousand that I own if I should own many millions? The misuse and injustice in the accumulation and distribution of money is the root of most all evil, therefore justice and mercy applied in these matters is the cure. Read David's description of a worthy man (Psalm 15: 5): "He that putteth not out his money to usury nor taketh reward against the innocent."

When any individual, corporation, or association controls the price of any commodity, the consumer of that thing is the innocent, the helpless one. It follows then that the person drawing income from any such enterprise according to this scripture will be ruled out, be he philanthropist, preacher, church leader, or anything else. God can not be bribed; there is no way to evade justice to the innocent consumer.

Excepting some direct and inheritance taxes, the only just tax based on the financial ability of the payer has been our income tax. But those who stand as our public servants have been and are determined upon cutting it down, even now recommending the exempting from income tax the proceeds from nontaxable bonds. Can you guess why?

The amount of tax-exempt money in the hands of rich men in this country is appalling; it is many billions of dollars. The excuse that heavy taxation of wealth would have a depressing effect on business is silly. When the poorer people (who are the majority) are bled until they can not keep on spending, we have a very real business depression. Even now we have to resort to the dangerous expedient of furnishing government employment; when the projects undertaken are completed, there will not be other labor, and it will not do to drop these men to starve. This leads to the making of more work, resulting in the nationalization of labor and industry, repeating the condition existing during the building of the pyramids. The possibilities are dangerous.

We can largely remedy all of this evil. We should stop requiring everyone who buys or sells to have the mark of the beast (license, occupation tax, franchise, etc.). We should take all kind of taxes and restrictions off of every business and article, unless it be luxuries or detrimental things. We should have no nontaxable bonds. We should make a law invalidating every note, bond, stock certificate, and security of every description that does not bear the collector's stamp.

We should prevent anyone from owning more land than a certain value, many acres where it is cheap, and few where it is high, except where public interest requires otherwise; thus dividing the land into millions of small farms and making possible the kind of home-owning that materially exalts a nation and reduces crime. (A real "Better Homes in America" movement.)

The home is basic to all prosperity. But the "back to the land" talk under present conditions is utter nonsense. It can not possibly be done. If a land limit is not enforced soon, the present bad condition will become far worse by a system of chain farming that will make other additional millions homeless and destitute. Justice demands equality of opportunity. Those that went before made our opportunities. It is our duty, if we are established, to make opportunities for others.

We are not now preaching charity. Justice goes before generosity. The excuse that many would waste an opportunity if given to them is pernicious. If I owe you a debt and refuse to pay it because I am sure you will waste it, I certainly ought to be punished.

Without economic justice we are building a marvelous structure on an unsafe foundation. Our churches, industries, arts, mechanics, inventions, with our education, are in danger of collapse. Why not put first things first?

"The love of money is the root of nearly all evil."

Moral righteousness and economic or industrial righteousness are one, and neither can exist (here) apart from the other.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."—The Bible.

TWO GOOD REASONS WHY

Every young person, and especially every officer or leader, should have his own copy of Vision:

1. That he might keep in touch with the things other young people in the church and throughout the world are doing.
2. That he might have the specific helps and suggestions which are offered for young people's activities, programs, and services.

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Guiding the Nursery Child

STUDY HELPS FOR PARENTS AND WORKERS IN THE NURSERY DEPARTMENT OF THE CHURCH SCHOOL

By Mrs. Bertha Stevens, Phoenix, Arizona

These lesson assignments are appearing early each month in the "Herald" columns. They are designed to be directive and helpful in the study of all parents of small children and nursery workers. They should be especially helpful for the use of monthly group meetings or classes under the direction of the church school. The text, "Guiding the Nursery Child," is an outstanding work in this field, and thoroughly reliable. It is a most worthy production of our own church people. Order from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, price, $1.25.

Lessons One, Two, and Three have appeared in former months.—C. B. W.

Fresh Air, Cleanliness, Exercise, and Rest

To provide for variety in the routine of the group study, this lesson may easily be divided into three sections, each with a different leader to guide the discussion if so desired.

Encourage the members of the group to bring their own particular problems for consideration.

The leader needs to have an abundance of problems and illustrative material at hand to stimulate participation by the group.

It is not particularly easy to guide a conference on the "problem" basis, but it is very worth while, for much may be contributed from the experiences of the group.

The price of success is thorough preparation on the part of the leader.

While encouraging participation by the entire group, she will often need to guide the discussion back to main channels when it promises to go astray.

I. Fresh Air and Sunlight.

1. Values: In addition to values pointed out in the text, it is well to keep in mind the following facts: Fresh air helps to dissipate the poisons of fatigue thrown off by the body. Vitamin D, found also in cod-liver oil, egg yolk, milk, and green vegetables, is present in the direct rays of the sun. This vitamin has a profound effect upon health and growth. It exerts an antirachitic effect through enabling the body to effect a better mobilization of its calcium and phosphorous. The lack of this vitamin produces varying types and degrees of rickets. It can be stored in the body. Many authorities are advocating the substitution, at least in part, of sunlight for cod-liver oil. Do you consider this wise?

We know that a six-year-old requires twice as much oxygen per body weight as an adult. The increased proportion of oxygen in fresh air combined with bodily activity stimulates deep breathing, thereby increasing vital capacity. Vital capacity is lung capacity in terms of largest possible amount of air contained and forcefully expelled. The ratio of lung capacity to weight is vital index. Measurements show that girls are inferior to boys in this at every age, but it is also found that girls who live in the country and exercise in open air have a higher vital index and develop a vital capacity more like that of boys. (See Study of the Junior Child, by Whitley.) When we realize the prevalence of anæmia and tuberculosis to which the adolescent or teen-age child seems especially prone, we see something of the importance of any means that will increase vital capacity and develop good breathing habits in the preschool age.

2. Provisions for fresh air and sunlight in the daily routine:

- a. Amount.
- b. Precautions.
- c. How best secured.

II. Cleanliness:

1. Necessity for cleanliness.
2. Aids to cleanliness.
3. What we may expect from the preschool child in the matter of cleanliness:
  - a. habits.
  - b. Abilities. (Some authorities say that by three years children should be able to wash and dry hands, palms and backs.)
4. The Tub Bath:
  - a. How often.
  - b. What to do with children who are afraid of the tub both. (Text, pages 107-4b, and 109—"Law of Effect." Page 112—"Fear." Celluloid floating toys also useful.)

III. Exercise and Rest:

1. Exercise. (Pages 34, 83, text.) Will be discussed more fully in Lesson Five—"Play Needs of the Preschool Child."
2. Rest:
  - a. Necessity for.
  - b. How much.
  - c. How best provided for.
  - d. Problems connected with sleep.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

The following is from a card distributed by a Kansas City brother, W. O. Hands, who takes his religion into his business of surveying:

My Religion

The boxer or wrestler with a religion will be a better sport than he is without one. He will be less liable to foul his opponent. The business man with a live religion is a better man than the scoffing non-believer. You can trust him further.

To my religion I owe my ability to make and keep good friends. To my religion I owe my home and the peace within it.

The man whose trust in God is strong enough to lead him to go to the church of his choice is my brother; do I choose to attend elsewhere, we'll not let our views build a wall of prejudice between us.

I am a better citizen and a kinder neighbor and truer friend because of my religion.

Employment and Morals

The following extract is taken from the "San Antonio Express" for March 28, 1931. It is a sharp criticism of some of the conditions that exist under our present economic system. Unemployment is one of the most serious challenges confronting our whole social structure today.

A system under which it is possible for six millions of willing and able-bodied men to be out of work for months at a time and with no other source of income than their toil, can be said to have failed in at least one very important detail, Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore Ohio Railroad, said today:

"I can think of nothing more deplorable than the condition of a man, able and anxious to work, but unable to secure work, with no resources but his labor, and perhaps with others even more helpless dependent upon him.

"Unless he is willing to starve and see those who justly look to him for support also starve, his only alternative is to seek charity and, failing in that, to steal. While I do not like to say so, I would be less than candid if I did not say that in such circumstances I would steal before I would starve."

Willard said that with all its defects, "and doubtless there are many," the capitalistic system affords in his opinion "a better and fairer basis upon which to build an economic structure than any other system so far devised and tested by man."

Graceland Chats

Last week-end Graceland students enjoyed a two-day recess. Thursday afternoon found them awaiting the close of the last period classes. The usual large number turned toward Independence and Kansas City to their homes or with their friends. Students who remained on the campus were anxious to relax from regular schedules. Many who stayed express high resolves of completing terms papers, book reports, and the like. Track men remained in order to be in readiness for the meet with Iowa Wesleyan, April 18. Already students are beginning to figure that there are only eight weeks of school left in this year.

"Olivet to Calvary"

On the evening of Palm Sunday the Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society presented this sacred cantata. It was not given as a concert but as a service of worship, and throughout its rendition was breathed the spirit of devotion.

It was presented in the Lamoni Coliseum, the present home of the adult congregation of Lamoni Branch. The chorus was seated in the balcony, where the choral work is now done. On the platform were the tenor and bass soloists, Arthur Oakman and Colin Ferrit. Mrs. Lina Hunt, soprano soloist, sang from the balcony with the chorus. Two numbers were sung by the A Cappella Chorus.

At the opening of the service the congregation stood with Noble Kelley for the invocation and for the hymn, "Tell Me the Story of Jesus." The scriptural accounts of the cantata were read from the balcony by Roy Cheville. The cantata led into the old hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," as the finale. Quietly the congregation rose, and as they left, the chorus continued with "Rock of Ages" and "Jesus, Lover of My Soul."

The soloists sang with excellence of interpretation. The chorus was blended and balanced. The humming of the hymns at the close resembled an organ. Rae Lysinger and Thelma Lane were the pianists, the former with the chorus, and the latter with the soloists. Mabel Carlile directed. She had hoped to make this the outstanding musical contribution of the year. In this she succeeded.

"G" Club Carnival

On Friday night, March 29, Zimmermann Hall was gay in true carnival style. The "G" boys staged their annual frolic. Booths were around the walls. In the center was the refreshment stand. In the front were the seats for the entertainment. A heavy snow prevented townspeople from getting to the hill, but gay spirits characterized those who did attend.

The entertainment was a success. The minstrel was lively and well planned—it was "spicy and full of good, clean fun." G. R. Bathe, captain of last year's team, was master of ceremonies. Art Locke, Ralph Baldwin, Jim Smith, and "Beans" Jones made a jolly quartet of end men in true Negro dialect. "Stan" Barrows and his orchestra provided music that kept things moving.

During the evening a "G" queen was chosen. Each five-cent purchase entitled one to fifty votes for a candidate. About ten girls were entered. Marie Barnett, of Texas, was finally chosen and was presented a bouquet of roses by Almer Sheehy, president of the "G" Club.

Easter Vespers

On Wednesday night before Easter, a formal vesper service was held in the college chapel. At the opening of the service, candles on an improvised altar were lighted, making with the ferns and cross of white a beautiful setting in the alcove of blue curtains. A mixed choir of twelve voices, directed by Colin Ferrit proceeded to the platform. The service was planned with anthems by the chorus, hymns by the congregation, male quartet numbers, a harp solo, poems, responsive scriptures, and a reading of the death of Christ. Roy Cheville presided.

Plays Presented

Responsive to several requests, the one-act play, "Men Folk," was presented in the chapel one evening last week. This is the play that won first place in the state junior college contest with cast of Anna Lynn Vanskike, Madelyn Weegar, and Olive Curtis. With it was presented a delightful humorous sketch of modern romance, "Grandma Pulls the Strings."

Toronto, Canada

Since the opening of the new Toronto Church, we have been actively engaged. It was a disappointment that Patriarch John F. Martin was compelled to leave us because of illness. He was doing a wonderful work, and we hope for his speedy recovery. Local men stepped into the gap, and the Lord blessed their efforts. Bishop A. F. McLean, Elders S. G. Clark, J. A. Wilson, Dougald Cameron, and B. H. Hewitt, of Toronto, Elder John Taylor, pastor of Grand Valley Branch, Elder Charles Hannah, pastor of Hamilton Branch, and Missionary Elder B. H. Doty were the speakers. We have baptized eleven this year.

On February 28 Mr. Alfred Bishop and Miss Florence Newton were the first couple to be married in the new church, and a family Bible was presented. Pastor J. L. Prentice officiated.

We are sorry to say that we have also had the first funeral in our new church. Sister Marjorie Swainson Evans, daughter-in-law of the late R. C. Evans, passed away on March 3. Elder J. L. Prentice had charge of the service, and Bishop A. F. McLean preached the sermon.

The Department of Women has been very busy. They are divided into twelve groups of ten, each group having a captain. Each woman gives ten dollars annually, and each group endeavors to raise extra money. One group has set five hundred dollars as its objective for the year. The captains report to Sister James A. Wilson, president of the department, and their total objective is set at two thousand dollars. This covers the interest on the church mortgage. Some of the activities of the different groups are: school day reunion, masquerade party, home cooking sales, chicken dinner, trip to Europe and back in slides, and they intend holding a May Day fair on May 2.

The Department of Recreation and Expression, under the leadership of W. F. Clifton, is working hard to make things interesting and also to pay the balance due on the pipe organ. Professor Boyce put on a musicale with three grand pianos. Another evening featured an orchestra entertainment led by Mr. Don Hutton. Chorister Clifford G. McCormick and the choir put on an evening's program. Brother Walter N. Harris and his forty minstrels, the boys at the church, gave their show on two evenings. Bert Gozard's class of boys gave a mother and father banquet, at which the principal speaker was the Reverend D. T. Bell, vice president of the Ontario Parole Board. Last Friday night the department held an athletic banquet. We have three teams in the Interchurch League, and the president of that league was in attendance and gave an address. Alderman Hamilton, of the City Council, was also present. The Girls' Orchestra plays at these entertainments and also for other organizations for which they are paid, the proceeds going to the pipe organ fund. We have organized a tennis club of twenty-eight members under the supervision of Brother Leonard Castle. Good Friday, the girls and boys started on a hike at ten o'clock, Sister James Pycocock having charge of the girls and Brother Bert Gozzard leading the boys. They returned to the church for supper and a concert in the evening. Next Friday night Bert's boys are putting on a play, and in a couple of weeks Sister Lois Byran Panter, leader of the Dramatic Club, is also presenting a play.

Our Sunday school, supervised by Elder W. J. Bavington, is working well. Sisters Marshall and Castle have charge of the children. One evening the kindergarten gave an entertainment, acting the nursery rhymes, "Little Jack Horner," etc., which was a great success. We have classes for all. This week we organized a new class to study church history. It will meet each Monday evening in the church parlor.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

April 2.—The spirit which prevailed at the March sacramental service gave to each member greater determination to go forward. In the evening we met with First Branch congregation to hear Elder W. O. Hands, of Kansas City, Missouri, give a stereopticon lecture.

District conference convened at First Branch March 8, a representative gathering of the district membership. As a result of its sessions, the members were strengthened to meet the emergencies confronting us.

Five new members were taken into the Women's Department which met March 12 for potluck dinner and study session. Twenty-five members and seven visitors were present. Under the able leadership of Sister A. H. Nieman, the department is growing. Sisters John R. Grice and William George were made honorary members of the department. A short talk on the lives of James Whitcomb Riley, Edgar Allen Poe, and Lawrence Dunbar, with a poem from each author, was the contribution of Sister Stratton to the program. A paper on "Bridges" was read by Sister Dora Hoffman. On March 31 the department entertained the Loyal Club of First Branch with a tea, thirty-eight being present.

A dramatic and glee club has been organized by Lucinda Madden, and we expect to see much talent cultivated.

Good sermons this month have come from the following speakers: J. E. Matthews, A. H. Nieman, R. E. Madden, H. E. French, W. B. Reeves, A. E. Anderton, and C. W. Clark.

Brother John Brush, who has been in the hospital for a length of time with both legs broken, is about in a wheel chair. Sister Margaret Horne is in the hospital very ill.

Brother Hands Completes Good-will Gospel Trip

After a volunteer missionary trip in central United States and Canada, nearly five thousand miles in length, which took him from home seventy-three days, Elder W. O. Hands is again at his home in Kansas City, Missouri. He reports on this pilgrimage delivering an illustrated program averaging three hours long sixty-three times. He preached eleven sermons, administered to thirty-two sick people, and by many fireside talks endeavored to strengthen the confidence of the Saints in the leaders and program of our church.

In a letter summarizing his work during his absence from the center place, Brother Hands writes: "I want to thank the Saints of Canada and the States for the fine hospitality I enjoyed while with them. I found them good listeners, and really envy the missionaries whose duties carry them among such devoted groups of members as I found in the branches visited. May the Lord bless you all, is the prayer of an old engineer."

Independence

The school enrollment of Independence now ranks sixth in the State, according to the statement of Superintendent E. B. Street. Only Saint Louis, Kansas City, Springfield, Saint Joseph, and Joplin outstrip the local schools in enrollment. The past ten years have made a 54 per cent increase in the enrollment, jumping from 3,042 in 1921 to 4,700 this year.

Assembly at William Chrisman High School April 3, was in charge of Graceland College Players, of Lamoni. "Men Folk," a one-act play, was presented under the direction of Miss Florence Thompson, of Graceland College, and included in its cast a last year's William Chrisman graduate, Miss Olive Curtis. The program was announced by Miss Pauline Siegfried, also a Chrisman graduate. Many of the school's alumni were present at this assembly, students from the universities of Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma, and from Graceland College and William Woods College.

Almost every branch in Independence welcomed home college students and other friends for Easter.

With "Fellowship" as the theme, one hundred and seventy young people, representing all of Independence, participated last Tuesday evening in a banquet at the Auditorium, which it is hoped may become an annual event. The winning teams in the Auditorium athletic leagues, Enoch Hill in the volley ball, and the Criterion Class of the Stone Church in the basket ball, were guests of honor.

Blaine Bender was toastmaster, and the following toasts were given: "Getting Acquainted," by Verla Waters; "The Art of Making Friends," by Albert Nigh; and "The Price of Friendship," by Pauline Crawford. Pastor John F. Sheehy spoke on the subject of "Crystal Gazing," and President F. M. McDowell on "Summing Up."

Two numbers were given by a clarinet trio composed of Arlon Chapman, Thelma Moorman, and Alfred Waters. Charles Stover said grace. Songs by "the whole bunch" were led by L. E. Flowers, with Dorothy Mabbott at the piano.

The banquet tables were arranged into a "Wheel of Friendship," with a rock garden as the hub. The Laurel Club served.

Stone Church

A six o'clock Easter sunrise prayer service brought several hundred members to the Stone Church Sunday morning. Organ music, the story of Easter from the scriptures, inspirational talks, short prayers, and the meditative withdrawal from the place of worship hallowed the hour in the heart of every worshiper. In the stand were Pastor J. F. Sheehy, President F. M. McDowell, and Elder George G. Lewis. Robert Miller played the organ. Nina Grenawalt Smith, soprano, sang "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth."

Every department of the church school opened its Sunday morning session with appropriate Easter ceremonies. Decorations of lilies, greenery, and pictures heightened the effectiveness of the services.

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was observed by the adults at the eleven o'clock hour, with Pastor John F. Sheehy in charge. President Frederick M. Smith spoke of the Lord's Supper as the ceremonial by which Jesus spiritualized and made universal the old Jewish Passover observance, and which carries with it the new commandment, "that ye love one another." Others who assisted in the stand were: Elders Harry Barto, R. T. Cooper, Paul N. Craig, G. Leslie DeLapp, U. W. Greene, J. Stanley Kelley, F. M. McDowell, and W. Wallace Smith. Lorena Kueffer was at the organ.

"The Message of Easter" was the theme of the communion hour downstairs when more than one hundred and fifty junior young people and an equal number of adults renewed their covenants with Christ. Elder E. E. Closson was in charge and spoke to the congregation. Assisting him in the stand were Elder G. G. Lewis and Priests W. Earl Page, Gerald Phillips, Oral Andes, Kenneth Morford, and Paul Elliott. Mary Grace Pruitt played a piano solo, and the pianist for the morning was Miss Velma Resch.

The junior department at the Campus also held service for the purpose of remembering and renewing their promises made to the Savior.

The evening sermon, "The Risen Lord," by President Frederick M. Smith, was given appropriate setting by the Easter program presented by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. Solo numbers were sung by Lilly Belle Allen, soprano, Alice May Burgess, contralto, and Albert Brackenbury, bass. The choir sang a choral grace by Sammond, "Into the Woods My Master Went," Nevin, and "As It Began to Dawn," Foster. Robert Miller was organist, George Miller pianist.

Taking up the experience of Christ and his disciples at the Last Supper, the speaker presented the teachings of the One who was called the Man of Sorrows, the One who because he traveled a difficult, trial-laden way, suffered death that men might live, and came forth from the tomb in newness of life, asks us to follow him and do his will. Bringing this scene to a modern setting, President Smith expressed the hope that the Saints will add no more to the griefs of Christ by disregarding his will and frustrating his purposes, but that, observing his commandment, "love one another," we shall go forward to realize his ideals.

Pastor J. F. Sheehy presided over this service, being assisted by Elder J. S. Kelley.

Thirteen babies were blessed at the special Sunday afternoon service at the Stone Church. To the lily-decked pulpit, parents carried their little ones and placed them in the hands of the priesthood for the ordinance of blessing. Music and special prayers enhanced the attractiveness of the hour. The following infants were blessed: Maynard Miles McBroome, Melvin McBroome, Thomas Ernest Dooley, Edward Eugene Closson, Charlene Billings, Harold Eugene McClain, Daniel Spencer Davis, Roger Eugene Bessmer, Anna Lou Radmall, Charles Ellis Cornell, Raymond Ray Shutt, Marion Louise Egli, and David Lloyd Wilkie. Elders officiating were John F. Sheehy, G. G. Lewis, J. M. Terry, M. Rasmussen, L. E. Flowers, Clarence Savage, E. E. Closson, and H. G. Barto.

Another ordinance of the church ceremonialized at the church on Easter was that of baptism. During the course of the day six candidates were baptized: Marvin Atkins, Marcelene Hammontree, Dolores Heilman, Carl Whitteck, Wallace Robert Isaacks, and Raymond Shutt. Those of the ministry who officiated in the baptizing were Elders Ira G. Clutter, U. W. Greene, and M. Rasmussen. They were assisted in the confirmation by F. G. Christy, H. B. Sterrett, J. A. Gunsolley, and G. G. Lewis.

One who has gone on at the call of the death angel is Elder Wilhelm George Danielsen, who died at his home in Independence March 31. The funeral was conducted at the Stone Church April 2, Elder U. W. Greene in charge, and Elder George E. Harrington preaching the sermon. Six of his eight sons were pallbearers. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Brother Danielsen was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, May 28, 1853, and became a member of the church in 1915. He was an inventor and maker of plows. Leaves to mourn eight sons and two daughters.

Liberty Street

Easter communion service Sunday morning brought a large number of worshipers to the church to partake of the spirit of peace and reverence which prevailed.

In the evening the choir, under the direction of Fred Friend, presented the cantata, "Lord of the Eastertide." Though Brother Friend is not a member of this congregation, he willingly gives his services in leadership, and the help of all singers is asked by the choir. Choir rehearsal is held each Friday evening.

This congregation welcomes its new pastor, Elder John R. Lentell, and his wife. Brother and Sister Lentell formerly worked as missionaries in Illinois, but of recent months have found places for themselves in the Stone Church school. Their willingness to help in this district is much appreciated by the members.

One of our little girls has been taken from our midst by death, Lena Ruth Curtis, seven-year-old daughter of Elder and Sister Walter E. Curtis. She died of pneumonia Saturday afternoon at her home. There survive her parents, four sisters, and many friends. The funeral was conducted from the church Monday afternoon, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sympathy goes to the bereaved family.

The funeral of Raymond F. Hand, who died as the result of injuries received in an automobile accident Sunday afternoon, was conducted at the church Tuesday afternoon. The deceased was twenty-two years old, and leaves his wife, mother, a brother, a sister, and other relatives. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. This death was a decided shock to our district.

Walnut Park

Members of the priesthood who are faithful in encouraging attendance at the 8 o'clock Sunday prayer meetings were encouraged by the large number present April 5. The usual very prompt participation was enjoyed.

Suitable numbers for Easter Sunday were given during the Sunday school session. Besides orchestra music, there was a reading by Frances Bullard, a solo by Delta Nace, and a violin trio, "The Flower Song."

The sacramental service at eleven o'clock was in charge of the pastor, with special talks by Fred Horn, deacon, and J. W. Davis, missionary. Two babies were blessed, Richard Ray, son of Brother and Sister Frank La Grece, and Howard Clayton, son of Brother and Sister Forest Ziegenhorn.

Just before the close of the service, announcement was made that a marriage was to be solemnized. After a solo, "At Dawning," by Delta Nace, the bridal party entered the church, Sister Jessie Baker and Brother Eli Kester, attended by Ruth Bean and Milton Gold, while "Love's Old Sweet Song" was played on the organ by Drexel Mollison, who continued with "Love Light" through the ceremony. Samuel C. Smith performed the ceremony, after which the couple received congratulations. The bride and groom are the secretary and assistant secretary of the local Sunday school. They will begin housekeeping at once in their newly furnished home on East Sea Avenue.

The evening sermon was by a stranger to most of the congregation, Elder A. E. Boos, from Pontiac, Michigan. Brother Boos, however, is not a stranger to the problems of Zion building. Though young in experience in the church, his understanding of human nature, his faith in the written word, and his ability in expression made his sermon a timely and valuable one, his subject being, "Jesus, the Hope of the World."

Preceding the sermon, the local orchestra and choir together gave a short concert, including "Gloria," from Farmers' Mass; Orlando Nace director, and Rosamond Sherman, pianist.

The reorganization of Wagner Branch March 29 stands out as an event in the history of this group, a step forward. For a year the Saints went without business meeting, but on this day they gathered to choose officers and organize forces. Two members of the priesthood were available for service, Charles W. Hare who was made branch president, and John T. Coffman, deacon. Faithful sisters and brothers not of the ministry were placed in positions of responsibility.

The Spirit of the Father was manifested throughout the services of the day which opened with church school at ten o'clock in the morning, in charge of the superintendent, Sister Nina Amundson. The morning worship at eleven o'clock was in charge of Charles W. Hare who was also the speaker. He took his text from Psalm 8: 4.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The funeral service of Brother Lloyd Robertson, a member of Central Church and an attendant of the Young Men's Progressive Bible Class, who met death in a gas explosion, was conducted by Elder John F. Sheehy at ten o'clock Thursday morning, April 2. A brief service was held, and the body was taken to Saint Joseph, Missouri, for burial. The congregation at Central extends sympathy to the family and friends of Lloyd in their bereavement.

Wedding bells rang on Friday evening at six o'clock when Miss Lois Smith, daughter of President Frederick M. Smith, and Mr. Edward Larsen, of Copenhagen, Denmark, were united in marriage at Central Church, President Smith officiating in the service. Preceding the ceremony, George Anway sang two solos, "Come, Sweet Comforter" and "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms." Evan Fry played the wedding march. A reception was held at the home of the bride, only the immediate family and friends attending. Brother and Sister Larsen will sail for Denmark early in June.

Graceland players presented two playlets to a well-filled house on Friday evening, receiving hearty applause for their fine work. Miss Florence L. Thompson directed the plays and also gave readings.

After a week of cold and inclement weather, Easter Sunday dawned a beautiful day. "Magdalene," by Warren, was reverently rendered by a ladies' quartet, consisting of Marcene Murphy, Amy Blankenship, Dorothy Eden, and Melva Blankenship, at the worship period.

The sacramental service was beautiful, and an inspiring message was delivered by Pastor C. E. Wight, after which the congregation enjoyed a period of meditation and the receiving of the Lord's Supper.

At 7.30, preceding the rendition of the cantata, "Olivet to Calvary," by Maunder, by the members of Central Church Choir under the direction of Brother George Anway, President F. M. McDowell gave a short address, using for his theme, "I Have Seen Jesus," which was a fine thought to blend with the story as told by song, of the trial and crucifixion of Jesus. The choir did some splendid work in this rendition. The soloists, Elizabeth Hitchcock, soprano, Clayton Wolfe, tenor, and Le Roy Smith, baritone, received congratulations for the manner in which they assisted the choir. Irene Wolfe accompanied the choir at the organ and Lucy Bowser at the piano. The choir repeated the cantata over K M B C at ten o'clock.

Plans for the music contest of the stake are under way. April 12 has been set as the time limit for contestants to enroll. The contest will consist of mixed choruses, quartets, vocal solos, piano and violin, and the age limits are thirteen to thirty.

Brother Arthur Oakman, recently assigned as missionary to Kansas City Stake, is now with us, and we extend to him a cordial welcome.

Gladstone Church

Chelsea Church Choir visited the Gladstone O. B. K. meeting March 8, giving a program of music directed by Jessie Bell Taylor. Ray Blyle was the soloist. Stake President Cyril E. Wight was the speaker for the evening service, and Sister Wight sang a solo.

Though sickness is prevalent, Sunday school attendance continues good.

A particularly interesting sermon was given by Bishop A. B. Phillips March 15. Associate Pastor L. C. Connelly spoke to the adult group March 22, and Elder A. R. Moore, director of religious education, conducted junior church services.

The O. B. K's have charge of the evening services on the last Sunday of the month. They secured Brother E. S. Zink, of Second Church, as speaker last month. The morning hour was occupied by Patriarch J. T. Gresty.

Argentine Church

Patriarch J. T. Gresty was with this congregation at the sacramental service last Sunday and was the speaker in the evening on the theme, "The Living Christ."

Savanna, Illinois

Savanna Branch is active and growing spiritually. Membership is just fifty-three, representing seventeen families. Nevertheless the Sunday school has an average attendance in the sixties. The prayer meetings are followed by class study, "How to Teach Religion." This group has a Women's Department and Book of Mormon study; the young people have a choir; and recreation night tips off the week-time activities.

Sister A. R. Batcheller, writer of news from Savanna, has just returned home from Independence and, after a talk with the Bishop, writes concerning financial support of the church: "I feel that we as a church could do much more financially to help the church. Small amounts given regularly by a large number of people make a grand total. The Woolworth Building, in New York, was built with dimes, and if each Saint would lay by ten cents weekly for two years, the church could finish the Auditorium and pay the missionaries' family allowances so that they need not feel the pinch of want as they are now doing. When we remember the great sacrifice of our Lord, how can we withhold so small an amount? And those able to pay larger tithing should do so. We need to be up and going, so that when the Lord comes, he will see that we have oil in our lamps and are numbered among the wise virgins.

"I believe that each local branch should curtail local expenses as much as possible, so as to give more to the general church, helping it to get out of debt and stay out. May the Lord help each one of us who bears the name of Saint, to sense his responsibility along these lines and be obedient to Him who said: 'If you love me, keep my commandments,' also 'Faith without works is dead.' Let us be busy spreading the gospel message by helping financially as well as by word of mouth, and by living the life which will show others that we are a people really called out from the world and set apart to be his Saints."

Coffeyville, Kansas

March 31.—General church officer visitors have given impetus to activities here. Elder and Sister J. A. Gunsolley spent ten days here the latter part of March, holding services. An Apostle F. Henry Edwards and District President Frank McDonald were here for one night March 27. The sermon by Brother Edwards was wonderful and followed the text: "The pure in heart will build Zion." Brother McDonald returned for a business meeting, at which time we voted on members who had been ordained to the priesthood, James Reynolds and Lloyd Martin. We are happy to have the help of these brothers, for they were needed.

Since our last letter to the Herald, two have been added to this branch by baptism. Though we are few in number, we are going forward, and our hopes are high.

The Women's Department, supervised by Sister O. E. Pender, is quilting and making ready for a bazaar. They study the Doctrine and Covenants.

The young people will present a program on Easter night. Not long ago a wedding occurred in this branch, that of Madline Storms and Raymond Yeubanks.

Saints from here attended meetings in Independence, Kansas, last week, hearing some good sermons by Elders Lee Quick and J. Charles May.

Skiatook, Oklahoma

A and Fourth Street

Five new members, a score of nonmembers much interested in the gospel, and the Saints of this group encouraged, are the immediate results of a series of missionary meetings just closed here by Elder William Bath. At every service the speaker was blessed with a degree of the Spirit, and though weather was unfavorable and sickness prevalent, attendance increased each night.

Church prospects at Skiatook are more favorable than they have ever been. Elder Bath did much to revive the ambition of the members and to start them forward. All are hoping for another series before many days.

Pastor T. P. Greenwood, who before the meetings closed was confined to his home with flu, is now recovering.

At the beginning of Brother Bath's series, Brother and Sister S. W. Simmons, of Shidler, were here.

Friends were saddened at the news of the death of Brother and Sister Theron Wood's baby son. He passed away March 16 from the effects of severe burns. Brother Bath preached the funeral sermon.

An Easter party for the children is being planned, also a program for Easter evening.

Boise, Idaho

From The Boise Clarion

This branch held an all-day meeting February 22, District President Silas Condit being present to help. The services opened at nine o'clock with prayer meeting, preaching at eleven, Brother Condit the speaker. Sabbath school at ten o'clock. Dinner was served at the church, and in the afternoon a round table discussion was held, several of the priesthood speaking on selected subjects. Brother Condit spoke again at night.

Two days earlier than our all-day program, the Department of Recreation and Expression spent a pleasant evening of lesson period, program, and pop-corn refreshments in the home of Brother and Sister Bullock. A week later the department met at the home of Sister Fletcher, and the following two regular meetings were had in the homes of Brother and Sister Wilson and Brother and Sister Cato.

The members are preparing an Easter program under the direction of Sister Jackson. Rehearsals have been the order each Sunday afternoon and one evening during the week.

Word has come from Brother and Sister Van Trump, of Independence, of the death of Grandma Van Trump March 15. She was a faithful member of the church, and sympathy is extended her family by Boise Saints.

Members here attended the funeral service of Brother Sherman in Nampa March 15.

Delta, Colorado

March 29.—Delta Branch is rejoicing that our missionary and wife, Brother and Sister N. L. Booker, are retained in this district because of the splendid interest that has been developed among the Saints since their appointment here. Nearly all families of Saints living nearby are regular attendants.

The church school services are patterned after the suggestions given in the Herald, with some alterations to meet our conditions. We feel that this has been a great help in that it has given different persons opportunity to contribute to the programs.

The envelope system is being used for our offerings and is proving successful. The women have been holding food sales in local stores every week for the past three months, applying the proceeds on the church debt, which will soon be paid. Members of the branch and district have been liberal with contributions towards the church debt as well as other necessary expenses.

A joint meeting of the priesthood and branch officers was held March 1 with a good representation. Everyone was made to feel the greater responsibility placed on each member, and the necessity for the putting forth of more strenuous efforts.

A musical program, followed by a social gathering, was held at the church in honor of Brother Booker's birthday March 3.

Sister Booker is conducting much-appreciated courses for the women each Wednesday. March 18 the women surprised Sister Williams and Mrs. Gene Park. The lesson study was dispensed with, and a short program was followed by refreshments.

On several nights each week Brother and Sister Booker are teaching study courses for different groups in scattered sections of the branch.

Saints miss the gentle presence of Grandmother Rose, who passed from earthly life February 19.

Brother Booker preached the funeral sermon of Mr. James Greenwood, one of Delta's well-known business men, at the Baptist Church before a large congregation March 27.

Saint Thomas, Ontario

The young people's group moves forward. Their meetings are opened every Thursday night either by President Bill Duncan or the vice president, Mrs. P. Ford, and the junior choir of girls leads the singing. Prayer is offered by Branch President Skelding. A program is given each night, but there is something special every two weeks. In January a night was set aside when the members were to bring vegetables for the needy both in and out of the church. One hundred and fourteen people were present that night, and there were bushels of vegetables fresh and in tins. The young people went for a sleigh ride party in three one-team sleighs. After the ride, they returned to the church, sang songs, and ate a hot lunch prepared by the older members. In February a Valentine party attracted a large number, and Elder Skelding was presented a purse for his faithfulness to the branch. In March Brother Orlo Hodson, of London Branch, gave a talk, "The Result of Thought on Our Body." The junior members presented a play, "The Ten Virgins," under the direction of Sister Stephens, Sister H. Ford, and Sister La Courtois. Attendance is good, and nonmembers are interested.

Attendance at the branch evening services is increasing. All meetings are well attended, and a spirit of unity pervades the group.

Three new members were taken into the fold March 15. Bishop Dent, of London, gave the charge to the candidates, priesthood, and laity. Mrs. Helen Brown was baptized by Elder Skelding, and Brother Kelley, superintendent of the Sunday school, baptized two of his Sunday school pupils, Ruth Size and Donald Ford. The service was most impressive at the close of a good sermon by Bishop Dent. Confirmation was in charge of Brothers Dent and Skelding. More baptisms are expected in the near future.

Saints are expecting Elder W. I. Fligg for Easter services, and plan to hold special services during the following week.

A son, Robert Ira, was born to Brother and Sister Alvin Mann March 19.

The women meet on Thursday afternoon with a good attendance. Quilting is their main work at present. They are also doing the relief work of the branch, and the response to this undertaking has been good.

The Sunday school is progressing. In spite of considerable illness, attendance stands between fifty and sixty.

The aim for Christmas offering this year is one hundred dollars. This we are trying hard to reach, and it will take some work because of much unemployment.

President McDowell to Visit Maine Districts

To the Saints of Western Maine: President F. M. McDowell expects to spend the greater part of May in the State of Maine, and we hope he will have opportunity of meeting most of you. May 3 will be dedication day at Sargentville, and it is hoped that many of the Saints from the surrounding district can be present. May 9 and 10 will be conference of Western Maine District at Stonington. We expect a number from the Eastern District, as well as representatives from the various parts of the Western. May 16 and 17 will be conference of the Eastern District, which will also partake of the nature of a young people's convention, and we are hoping to see a goodly number from the Western District in attendance at Jonesport. May 24 will be dedication day at Little Deer Isle. Brother McDowell will be at all these functions, and we hope to have Bishop E. L. Traver at some of them. It is also hoped that Elder Newman Wilson can, at least, attend the conference at Stonington.—E. F. Robertson, district president, Stonington, Maine.

Our Departed Ones

SHAY.—George W. Shay was born March 14, 1843, at Batavia, Branch County, Michigan. He married Miss Ellen M. Hurley February 2, 1866, and to them four children were born, two sons and two daughters. The eldest son died in infancy. Mr. Shay was baptized a member of the church June 4, 1898, by Elder J. Arthur Davis; was ordained a teacher at Topeka, Kansas, September 30, 1904. He died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. W. J. Birkhead, January 13, 1931. He was a faithful Saint. Mrs. Shay preceded him in death nineteen years.

ELLIS.—Leo Owen Ellis, second son of Elder and Sister W. D. Ellis, was born March 10, 1885, near Reed City, Michigan. Death came suddenly to him March 22, 1931, at the home of his daughter at Eaton Rapids, Michigan. He was married May 19, 1906, to Dolores Mills. He is survived by his invalid wife, three daughters: Mrs. Viola Houston, of South Boardman; Mrs. Margery Eckhart, of Eaton Rapids; Dorothy Ellis; also one son, Winfred, at home; his mother, Mrs. Effie Ellis; one sister, Mrs. Julia Davis, of Pontiac; three brothers: Alvin, of South Boardman, Clyde, of Independence, and Wellington, of Pontiac. The funeral was from the church at South Boardman, sermon by B. H. Doty.

HUTCHINGS.—Lyman Elias Hutchings was born in Utah, April 16, 1855, but moved to California with his parents when a small boy. He was the eldest of a family of eleven children, seven of whom survive him. His early life was spent in Watsonville, where he joined the church and became a devout and faithful member. His first wife passed away in Woodland in 1900, leaving a family of small children. He married a second time and is survived by his wife and five of his eight children. His parents were Lyman S. and Mary Rigby Hutchings, who spent many years as pioneers in Iowa and Kentucky. He passed away at Woodland, California, January 14, 1931.

SANDAGE.—Joshua Sandage, eldest son of Thomas and Clarrissa Sandage, was born November 10, 1859, near Derby, Perry County, Indiana, where he lived with his parents until he was twenty-one years old. They moved to Missouri, settling in Harrison County. The following year he returned to Indiana to marry Miss Minnie Elizabeth Hendershot. To this union four children, two sons and two daughters, were born: Clarence, of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Garrison, of Rockville, Missouri; Mrs. Effie Walling, of Rich Hill, Missouri; and Mrs. Mary Le Neve, Taberville, Missouri. His wife died when his daughters were small, and he married Miss Lizzie Boch. After her death he took for a wife Mrs. Ordillia Gough in December, 1922. He died March 3, 1931, of heart failure while visiting at the home of a friend. Was baptized by Hubert Scott at Lily Dale, Indiana, when he was nineteen years old, and served the church as a deacon and teacher. His home was always open to Saints, and his life was a testimony of the practicability of the gospel. The funeral was conducted in the Rich Hill, Missouri, church, Birch Whiting preaching the sermon, assisted by J. A. Marsteller. Interment was in Taberville.

BREWER.—Mary C. Brewer was born March 11, 1848, at Greensburg, Kentucky. Moved to Glasgow, Missouri, in 1865, and married John W. Brewer March 12, 1871. In 1890 she moved from Nevada, Missouri, to Arkansas. Thirty-four years of her life were spent in Arkansas and Oklahoma, and she moved to Independence, Missouri, in 1923. She was baptized into the church in November, 1900, at Grannis, Arkansas, by John Harp, and confirmed by H. O. Smith. Surviving are her husband, John W. Brewer, two sons, and one daughter: William J. Brewer, of Independence; Lula Chromster, of Independence; and John W. Brewer, jr., Choctaw, Oklahoma. Twelve grandchildren and six great-grandchildren also survive. She passed away March 24, 1931, at the home of her son, W. J. Brewer. The funeral service was conducted by Joseph Martin at the Enoch Hill Church, Independence.

TURPEN.—Martin M. Turpen was born August 19, 1853, at Hamilton, Decatur County, Iowa. He became a member of the church July 20, 1873, at Fayette, Iowa, being baptized by Charles H. Jones. Was ordained a priest in 1879, an elder in 1884, a seventy in 1888, and a high priest in 1900. He was an elder in the southeastern mission field for fifty years, living at Mobile, Alabama. He moved to Independence, Missouri, two years ago. Passed away at the Independence Sanitarium following an illness of two weeks with pneumonia, March 28, 1931. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Joana May Turpen, of the home address; three sons: Stephen Turpen, Saint Paul, Minnesota; George Turpen, Newton, Iowa; and David Turpen, of Pleasanton, Iowa; and a daughter, Mrs. Clara McNeal, of Pleasanton, Iowa. The funeral service was held from the Latta Funeral Home in Independence Saturday evening, March 28, in charge of J. W. A. Bailey, the sermon being by T. C. Kelley. The body was taken to Pleasanton, Iowa, where on Sunday afternoon a service was held in the church by W. A. McDowell. Interment was in the Hamilton Cemetery at Pleasanton.

ROWLETT.—Florence S. Anderson was born May 28, 1886, at Bedson, Missouri. There she united with the church June 28, 1896, and was a faithful member all her life. She married John Rowlett, at Guilford, Missouri, January 31, 1909, and to them three children were born: Mrs. Mildred Schmidt, Ruby, and John, Jr. She was taken sick last July and never recovered but passed peacefully away at her home near Mound City, Missouri, March 28, 1931. Left to mourn are her husband, three children, a son-in-law, eight brothers, three sisters, and a host of other relatives and friends. She was a faithful wife and mother. The funeral was held at the home in charge of Elder I. M. Ross, the sermon by Elder Ward A. Hougas. Interment was in Maitland Cemetery.

WELLS.—Willard Richard Wells was born January 19, 1866, at San Bernardino, California. He was baptized into the church July 28, 1878, by George H. Shute, at Gaylord, in Smith County, Kansas. Married Luella Jane Austin, at Plattsburg, Missouri, October 25, 1889, who survives him. To them five boys and two girls were born. One daughter, Mary L. Peters, died in 1921. Mr. Wells passed away at Saint Joseph, Missouri, March 10, 1931. O. Salisbury officiated at the funeral. The deceased leaves besides his immediate family a sister in Washington and one in California, and a brother in Montana. His children are: Edward, at Wichita, Kansas; Guy, at Cameron, Missouri; George, at Saint Joseph, Missouri; Millard at Saint Joseph; Austin, Philadelphia; and Mrs. Edward Schoff, Saint Joseph.

McCORMICK.—William McCormick was born in Ireland November 30, 1843; he immigrated to Michigan when eight years of age, lived there until he was twenty-one years old, then moved to Saint Clair County, Missouri, when he was twenty-four. He married Miss Lavina Boots. To them were born: Henry, Sam, Thomas, and Wallace, the last named having died at the age of forty-one at Independence, Missouri. Mrs. McCormick preceded him in death thirty-five years. Later he married Mrs. Mintie Bennett. Three children were born to this union; two died very young, Maryn is still living. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints about forty years ago. The funeral was conducted by Elder George Jenkins. Interment was in the Clintonville Cemetery.

Conference Minutes

KIRTLAND.—Annual district conference was held at Cleveland, Ohio, March 21 and 22. The sessions opened Saturday morning at 10:30 with business. Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was associated with District President James E. Bishop in presiding. Minutes of the preceding conference were read and approved. Statistical reports were read. Reports of branch presidents were read as follows: Cleveland, Alliance, Youngstown, and New Philadelphia. Reports of officers: The superintendent of church school, William F. Webbe; district chorister, Sister F. T. Haynes; treasurer, Edna Rhodes (reported for year 1930); financial secretary, Mae Gill (report for three months 1931). These reports were approved: Bishop's agent, John L. Cooper; district president, James E. Bishop. A budget was presented to the conference with the recommendation of the district officers that it be adopted. Motion prevailed that we adopt the budget presented. Officers elected are: District president, James E. Bishop; counselors, E. Guy Hammond and William Goudy; superintendent of Religious Education, William F. Webbe; district chorister, Samuel Mansell; secretary, Edna M. Rhodes; financial secretary, Mae Gill; bishop's agent, John L. Cooper, was sustained. Saturday evening Jerome Andes was in charge. Special music consisted of two vocal solos by Sister Percy E. Farrow and Sister Agnes E. Martin; the sermon was by James E. Bishop. Sunday at 9:45 a. m. the devotional period opened, there being a prelude, scripture reading, and a children's story, "The Measuring Rod," by Sister Gretchen Knight. Special classes were: "Priesthood," taught by Clyde F. Ellis; "Music Appreciation," by Mrs. F. T. Haynes; "The Project Method in Teaching," Ruth Minkler. This was followed by an organ interlude, an organ and violin selection, and an anthem by the choir. The sermon was by Apostle Clyde F. Ellis. Prayer and testimony meeting came at 2:30 p. m. A rising vote of thanks was given Cleveland Saints for their hospitality to visiting members. Motion to adjourn carried. A peaceful and unifying spirit prevailed throughout all meetings of the conference.

HOME BEAUTIFYING SUGGESTIONS FOR EARLY SPRING

There Is Satisfaction in Bringing Beauty into the Home through one's Own Handiwork—Savings Important, Too!

SEVEN DAY TEA TOWELS

20 Cents for Set No. 561.

For Christmas, the hope chest, shower, bride, or bazaar, as well as for us who have long since qualified as homekeepers, a Tuesday tea towel for Tuesday, and a Sunday one for Sunday, is most encouraging. Outline stitch, two strands of any favorite hue, quickly transforms the stamped material into mighty clever towels, each with a chubby baby, struggling with the task of the day. Pattern No. 561 at 20 cents supplies the set of seven designs in wax transfer form to use on anything from linen crash to sugar sacks.

We can also furnish this set of designs, seven of them stamped on soft, part linen toweling, ready to embroider and use. This is No. 562, and is $1.40 complete, postpaid. Three skeins of embroidery floss in colors to match the border are ten cents extra.

TURTLE PILLOW OR DOOR STOP

Here is a chubby green turtle. His oilcloth body is shaped to make him high enough for a stool, a rather thick pillow, or a door stop. All of the top parts are jade green and all underneath parts bright yellow, of excellent quality oilcloth. Darker green yarn blanket stitching finishes the edges with running-stitch markings for the shell. The turtle is 19 inches long from nose to tail tip, and about 11 inches broad. There are no eyes; he's really inoffensive, and the most lovable thing in turtles that we have seen. Stamped oilcloth, green and yellow is number 664X, and includes enough dark green thread to complete. Price for all materials is only 50 cents.

We also have an oilcloth Frog, number 244, that provides all stamped materials and thread for 50 cents.

664X Stamped Oilcloth and Thread for Turtle ..... 50 cents

PATCHWORK PATTERN BOOKS

We now offer four patchwork books, each containing twelve authentic old-time quilt designs, with exact cutting patterns of each part and detailed instructions for making. Each book has 16 pages, 7½ by 10 inches, printed in two colors. The patterns given in each book are as follows:

First Things First

IV.—PREACH THE GOSPEL

The great commission given to the church by the Master was, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." The first work that Christ himself did was missionary. He went "throughout all Galilee preaching the gospel in every synagogue." The first work devolving upon his church is missionary. It is true that pastoral work follows immediately, so closely, in fact, that a line can scarcely be drawn between the two. Both are included under the commandment, "Preach the gospel."

Our Investment in Men

If the church is to put first things first, it will always be of primary importance to build up and maintain an adequate ministry as the Lord may call and choose and the finances of the church permit. It is no less than a tragedy for the church to be compelled to reduce the missionary force. There is no other investment that I can think of more important than our investment in men. There are many investments that I can think of that are not nearly so important.

As quickly as possible every obstacle should be removed that stands in the way of a rapid increase in numbers and efficiency of our ministry. Young men should constantly be added to the list of our missionary appointees, to replace those who because of age or infirmity must give over their labors in the vineyard, and to take care of the increasing demands of the work both at home and abroad. I can not at this time find words adequately to express my conception of the importance of this matter. We must have an increasing rather than a diminishing zeal for missionary service, and an increasing rather than a diminishing ministerial force working actively both in preaching the gospel to the world and in caring in a pastoral way for those who may be converted.

What Shall Our Men Preach First?

Coming now to another phase of this subject, What is it that our ministers are to preach? It is idle to build up and maintain a ministry unless they shall preach the particular thing which they are called and ordained and sent forth to preach. There should be no dubiety of mind on that point. The word of God leaves us in no doubt: "Go preach the gospel." The commandment is given, "The elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

The principles of the gospel are so clearly set forth in Hebrews, the 6th chapter, that there can be no mistake, while in the closing verses of the 5th chapter the apostle refers to them as the "first principles of the oracles of God." It follows necessarily that the first principles in the eyes of God are and ever will be fundamental and the first thing for his ministry to preach.

A Word of Advice

During a mass meeting of the priesthood at which the sacrament was served during the General Conference of 1920, on April 4, the spirit of prophecy was bestowed with power, and this admonition was given to the ministry:

When you go forth to preach to the world, you are not to preach your own speculations or idle imaginings, and you are not to preach the philosophies of men. You are to preach the gospel, as it is in the books that have been given to the church, and you are to cry repentance to this generation. And when you stand to teach the Saints you shall say to them as Moses did of old, that they shall go forward. If you are to be called leading men you must become leaders of men—leaders and exemplars in all good works and Christian graces, and in showing forth all the fruits of the Spirit—that the Saints may observe you and be strengthened and comforted. If you will do this, and seek to work together in patience and love, and to obtain a common understanding of my law, I will be with you to bless and direct.

Why Preach the Gospel

There are many very interesting things to be preached about, but the particular thing to which our men are called is the preaching of the gospel. I do not dwell upon this point merely because it is orthodox or alone because the principles of the gospel are so clearly expressed in the scriptures; but also because of a conviction that they are the very thing that the world today needs to hear, perhaps more than ever before in history. The first two named, for example, faith and repentance, should run through all our preaching. Atheistic philosophy is prevalent today, not only in the schools of the learned but among the ranks of the common people, the men upon the streets and in the field, and especially does it encroach upon the attention of the young. There can be nothing more important to preach, first of all, than faith in God, and that message should be preached to the world and with no less emphasis to the church.

In this century when the forces of evil are organized and intrenched and financed as never before, and when all manner of immoralities undermine the homes and the characters of men and women, there is no more important message to preach than that of repentance. Not without reason were we commanded, "Cry nothing but repentance to this generation." I am in accord with John W. Rushton, who in the Herald for February 18 said, "We need more than all else beside to accept the gospel of repentance. That message should be preached to the world, and there are in nearly every branch members of the church who from our own pulpit should hear the call now to repent."

Putting Foundation under Life

The man who believes in a Supreme Being, in the immortality of his own soul, in his agency to choose between right and wrong and his responsibility to forsake the wrong and choose the right, has the only basis for a philosophy of life that will be worth while. Those beliefs are foundational in citizenship as well as in worship. Only on such foundation can good character and good homes and good citizenship be erected. Those beliefs and ideals are inherent in the principles of the gospel, faith, repentance, regeneration, the assurance of the resurrection and the judgment. Eternally they are first in true philosophy as well as in true religion. And eternally they are first in true life. "I have come that they might have life and have it more abundantly," said the Master. "My words they are life and they are light." A man never gets so big or so wise as to grow away from the principles of the gospel: "not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection."—Hebrews 6: 1, Inspired Version.

Beginning with the July Issue "Vision" Will Carry Church Programs

Elsewhere in this issue of the Herald will be found an open letter addressed to former subscribers of the Department Journal and all church school workers.

We trust that our readers will give more than passing attention to this letter. It deals with matters of vital significance to the onward progress of the church. If the church is to succeed, much depends upon its teaching ministry. If it is to succeed in its teaching ministry, its forces must be trained, supervised, organized, directed. The means and methods of providing this direction are therefore important.

Various attempts have been made in the past to place in the hands of officers and teachers of the church school these materials. For a time they were published in the Autumn Leaves, later in the Sunday School Exponent, still later in the Department Journal, and more recently in the columns of the Herald. A large number of consecrated and devoted volunteer workers have constantly hungered for those helps which they feel absolutely essential to the success of their efforts.

The program of religious education adopted by the last General Conference has placed even greater demands upon local officers, teachers, and leaders. They are now clamoring for help. When for financial reasons it was necessary to discontinue the Department Journal, it had over two thousand regular readers. This in spite of the fact that it had been published but a comparatively short time. Hundreds of these readers protested to the Board of Publication and have during the months continually insisted that help be furnished them.

As an expediency, arrangements were made to print in the columns of the Herald under the heading "Church Work and Services" such of this material as space would permit. It was recognized by some from the first that this attempt would be inadequate, but it was thought that at least we would do the best we could.

While many have expressed their approval of this venture, others, including some of the general church officers, have sincerely felt that this material was not suitable for the Herald. Former church pastors and local church school workers have expressed as their preference that this material be published in a monthly magazine, since such will be so much more easily preserved and bound for permanent use. They complain that copies of the Herald are easily lost and that they have had to search through several copies to get what they wanted, and finally that it has not reached them soon enough.

In view of all of these considerations and after discussing the matter with a number of those directly affected, it has been decided to provide through the pages of Vision these suggested programs, activities, and helps for church school workers. Such a venture will be in harmony with the spirit of retrenchment, since it will be economical. It will provide program material a month in advance in a form that can be preserved and bound if desired. We believe that this material in the interests of youth will be consistent with the spirit and purpose of the young people's magazine. In a word, what is proposed is a combination of Vision and the old Department Journal. It should be added in passing that many churches have found such a combination of material to be practicable and serviceable.

We now come with an appeal to all of those interested in the work of religious education throughout the church that they lend their support to this effort to place each month in the hands of those upon whom we depend to teach and lead our members, especially our young people, that sort of material which is absolutely essential for the success of the work. District directors of religious education, local superintendents of church school, division supervisors, and all teachers and leaders should be especially concerned in this venture.

If the church is to succeed, it must teach. If it is to teach adequately, it must teach efficiently. Efficient teaching is not guaranteed through consecration alone. There must also be provided training and tools at least partially adequate to the task of building character for God.

1931 Reunion Schedule

In the next column the reader will find a tentative schedule for the reunions of 1931. We respectfully request that the general officers of the church, district and reunion officials, study this proposed schedule carefully, reporting at once to the office of the First Presidency any errors or discrepancies discovered.

It is possible that some reunions have been included which may well be omitted this year. In view of the financial situation in the church, it would be well to have such reported at once. Where a reunion is set to be held, let those responsible for it make sure that the place and date given in this schedule are correct. Please report any error and discrepancy at once.

Death of T. W. Williams

The news of the death of T. W. Williams in Los Angeles on the morning of April 11 came as a shock. He was a member of the city council of Los Angeles, and was at the time of his death in the midst of his campaign for reelection from the twelfth district. The report received in Independence said that death was caused by cerebral hemorrhage.

T. W. Williams' long and active career in the service of the church is too well known to need recounting here. He distinguished himself by his ability as a speaker and by his intensive activity. In the mission field and in pastoral appointments he rendered important and on some occasions strategic service.

Perhaps the dominating interest of his life was humanitarian. This interest colored much of his church activity. It led him to participate in practical politics during two periods of his career. After his active connection with the church work was discontinued in 1925, his time and attention were increasingly given to political affairs, in which he proved to be an influence to be reckoned with in his own city.

Tentative Reunion Schedule for 1931

We submit below a tentative schedule for 1931 reunion season. Since we have experienced the usual difficulty in getting detailed information in all cases, the schedule submitted will no doubt contain some inaccuracies. We therefore request all responsible reunion officials to check the list carefully and report at once to the office of the First Presidency any omissions or errors in the list. This will make possible the publication of a correct and final schedule at an early date.

Though he was no longer young—he was born in 1866—it may be said that he was still in possession of some of his best powers. The unexpected close of his career, at a time when he was filling a position of honor and trust in service to the civic government, will be a cause of regret to many people.

An Open Letter

TO ALL CHURCH SCHOOL WORKERS AND TO FORMER SUBSCRIBERS TO THE DEPARTMENT JOURNAL:

Dear Coworkers: An increasing number of our people hope and believe that some day the teaching force of the church will be so thoroughly trained and efficiently organized that there will be provided for all the opportunity for a systematic growth toward that quality of character requisite in the kingdom of God. This faith demands continuous effort if we are to make consistent progress.

THE DEPARTMENT JOURNAL was established by the church to train leaders in the field of religious education for the work of the church. More than two thousand workers found it a practically indispensable aid in carrying on their work. These workers, as well as the editors, were keenly disappointed when the Journal had to be discontinued on account of losing money in publication.

THE SAINTS' HERALD, when the Journal was discontinued, undertook to carry the most important of the religious education materials for leaders in a section called "Church Work and Services." Some readers have not been satisfied to find these rather technical materials in the Herald, and our workers have found it difficult to use and preserve them when they are buried in the heart of a weekly publication. Both necessity and preference indicate that a change is in order.

VISION, our young people's magazine, now offers some of its space for the suggested programs, activities, and helps for the church school. The heavier and more lengthy informative articles will appear as before in the Herald, but Vision will contain the "handbook" type of materials for church workers.

A SPECIAL OFFER that will make it possible for the program material to reach all workers in convenient, easily preserved form in Vision has been made by the Herald Publishing House. Up to July 1, there is a special introductory offer to new subscribers of a year's subscription to Vision for $1.35, a substantial reduction from the usual price of $1.75. Fill out the coupon which appears elsewhere in the Herald.

WHAT YOU CAN DO. Just this—every church worker and former Journal subscriber should take Vision. Officers and teachers should have it. We are counting on the kind of loyal support which you formerly gave to the Journal being transferred to Vision. We need your cooperation. Make sure that workers and leaders of your branch and district have it.

OUR RELIGIOUS EDUCATION BUDGET has been cut to a minimum, and we are working in line with the retrenchment program. Direct mail communication must be replaced by communication through the church papers, particularly through Vision, and the Herald.

FILL OUT THE COUPON TODAY, if you are not a subscriber to Vision. You will need it. Get others to subscribe. If our faith in the great teaching program of the church is to be rewarded, much will depend on you.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By F. M. McDowell.

The Philosophy of Jesus in a Modern World

PART ONE

From a Series of Radio Talks

By C. E. Wight

It is a far cry from the quiet environment of the Judean ministry to the mad rush of our present-day life; from the white-robed, sandal-clad, swarthy oriental to the minister of today, light of skin and dressed in the garb of the twentieth century.

It is a real test of any philosophy if it has been able to pass through the environmental changes of twenty centuries and still have meaning to those who live today. It would be too much to expect, however, that a philosophy presented twenty centuries ago would come through all of these changing conditions without modification.

It shall be our effort to attempt to follow the philosophy of our Master presented twenty centuries ago, through the various vicissitudes of the years; then to try that philosophy in the light of our modern problems to see if it will meet the challenge of the twentieth century.

In order to appreciate the basic simplicity of the teachings of Jesus, it would be necessary for us to divest ourselves of the ecclesiastical paraphernalia which we have accumulated through the centuries and go back to the days of his flesh; going to the top of the mountain, without the benefit of church structure and churchly ceremonial developed through the experience of the years, to sit at the feet of the Master and listen to him say:

"I give unto you to be the light of the world."

"Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy but to fulfill."

"The light of the body is the eye; if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light."

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."

In these and other statements of Jesus there was set forth a philosophy which differed widely from the ecclesiastical formula of the predominant religionists of his own age. There was in this philosophy a challenge to man to develop his own resources and think out for himself the relationship that should exist between himself and his God.

For this challenge to the accepted order of things, Jesus paid dearly. Those whose leadership and profit depended upon the unquestioning allegiance of the people were disturbed. They raised a hue and cry against this man who dared to usurp their place of authority and utter what purported to be divine truth.

When finally they had carried their persecution to its logical conclusion and brought Jesus before the tribunal, his judge demurred on the ground that no cause of action could be found against this just man. Then came the real accusation and the only one that could logically be recognized: "He stirreth up the people to sedition."

Yet this man who was accused of stirring up the people used none of the classic emblems of revolt. It is apparent that he never carried a sword. In fact, he rebuked the impetuous Peter for his hasty attack upon an enemy, calling to his attention that "those who live by the sword, perish by the sword."

Furthermore, when questioned as to the temporal authorities of his day, he without reservation proclaimed, "Render unto Cæsar that which is Cæsar's."

So we have the remarkable spectacle of a man gaining the confidence and leadership of great groups of people—not through a magnetic personality, because "there was no beauty or comeliness that we should desire him," but through the very penetration and lasting quality of a unique philosophy.

The uniqueness of this philosophy is found in the very reversal of accepted beliefs. That Jesus was no respecter of established traditions can scarcely be denied. When finally he had gathered about him a group of disciples that he could trust, he imbued them with the spirit of the message and sent them out to tell the glad news to others.

It is not our purpose to review at this time the failure of these men to measure up at all times to the responsibility placed upon them. They were human, and we are aware that "to err is human, to forgive divine."

We prefer, rather, to see these men in the difficult role of leadership after they had passed through their baptism of fire and proved that at heart they had really been touched by this strange philosophy.

Through the years of the ministry of these disciples of the Master, there was built a large following of this delightful new doctrine which taught man of the dominance of his own personality and of a God who was no longer to be worshiped as a stern judge, but as a loving Father.

Somehow, Jesus and his followers brought God very near. Men were made to feel his nearness and his interest in the vital problems of their lives. Men were made to feel that all together they were a vast fellowship through whom the problems of life were to be worked out. No longer was God ready to condemn for a thoughtless act, but rather ready to forgive in response to a broken heart and a contrite spirit.

Under the compelling force of this beautiful philosophy, there was a solidification of the followers of the Master into an organic structure for the perpetuation of these glorious teachings.

As time went on and men passed farther and farther from the immediacy of the presence of the Master, the true significance of his teachings became less clear. The power and force which had captured the imagination of men became less evident. In Walker's History of the Christian Church we are told that within the first century following the death of the Master there was an attempted revival on the part of one Montanus, of the gifts and blessings which had already disappeared from the church.

As the years passed into centuries, the original freshness of the message was lost. Its place was taken by ritual and ceremonial. The story of how, from time to time through the centuries, there arose men of vision and vigor in an attempt to bring back the original power of the gospel story, is familiar to most of us.

In memory of the tremendous influence of such men as Luther, Wesley, Calvin, and others, some of the great present-day denominations have been named.

For fear there may be those who would misinterpret our analysis of the religious development of the centuries, let me say that in the presentation of our own religious beliefs we have no desire to wound or offend those whose philosophy may be at variance with our own. We stand in humble adoration of those who as Mohammedan, Buddhist, Catholic, Hebrew, or Protestant have contributed to the onward progress of humanity. These various individual and congregational contributions have been many, and we honor those who have blessed the world by their contributions.

We shall attempt no comparisons. But most certainly we should lack the courage of our convictions if we failed to present a present-day philosophy of our Master when we see in that philosophy forces which may so conspicuously bless humanity. We do not feel that it is necessary for us to tear down the structure others have builded in order that we might have material for the erecting of our own. In the words of Charles Hall Perry, we feel that "the Christian will honor Buddha, Confucius, Mohammed, Moses, and every other noble leader of the faith of his people, without in the least lessening his devotion to his Christ."

To return now to the picture of the development of our ecclesiastical structure through the centuries, we find men from time to time leading revolts against practices which they felt violated the original idea conveyed in the philosophy of our leader. But unfortunately we find these very men bringing with their revolt a harshness and cruelty of spirit that obliterated the beautiful humanitarian spirit which was the very essence of the philosophy of Jesus.

Men were burned at the stake because of a supposed heresy, and the pages of our own national history are blackened with the terrorism that reigned under the sway of superstition accompanying the belief in witchcraft. In a land where men had come to find relief from religious bigotry, now hatred and persecution reigned.

Thanks to the development of a more enlightened public opinion, these intolerable conditions gradually disappeared. But the marks of the centuries had left their indelible impress, and we find at the beginning of the nineteenth century an ecclesiastical formula which had stiffened in the mold until the creeds had become quite fixed and set. With the development through many decades of the idea of infallibility, transferred during the Middle Ages from a man to a book, there came the settled conviction that God had spoken to men for the last time.

This was apparently not in harmony with the philosophy of Jesus, which took as its foundation stone that God is the God not of the dead but of the living. Amid the toil and stress of the work of living men, God always finds the greatest opportunity for the expression of his divinity.

So finally there came a challenge to the philosophy of a settled creed and a closed revelation. Out of this challenge has come the development of another ecclesiastical body whose creed is so short as to need but two words for expression—"All truth." This body is in your midst today with several thousands of adherents in Greater Kansas City. In a great centennial celebration recently closed in Independence, Missouri, there was given to this group a very definite challenge. This challenge is set forth in a tremendous program of Christian stewardship of which we shall have more to say later. Let me without reserve say that I am willing to throw open to intelligent scrutiny the entire doctrine and practice of the group that I represent. I am willing to reexamine my own philosophy as I ask you to do yours, to see if we are in harmony with the beautiful teachings presented by our Master.

In approaching this doctrine of God's present revelation to the children of men, let me use again the words of Mr. Perry relative to the present yearning of the human soul:

"Man thinking new thoughts, remolding old ideas into new conceptions, wondering if God is drawing nearer into a closer intimacy. And underneath, a vague hunger for a soul in his material progress—a spiritual interpretation commensurate with his physical grossness—something to make immortal his overweening earthliness."

In his challenge to present-day religion, Mr. Perry asks these questions:

"Did God speak once and then become dumb? Are there no new revelations, that we must test our faith by what men thought two thousand years ago? Shall not religion see new revelations, written large and demanding interpretation? Has God finished inspiration, told all of infinite truth? We live in an era of stupendous miracles. The amazing wonder is man. God will match his capacity with gifts—power and truth."

It is our belief that God does deal intimately with men today. That through the present-day operation of his Spirit he is presenting a message of power and of hope.

As we have the opportunity of presenting this message of hope, it shall be our purpose to bring to your consideration those contributions of our present age which have returned to the world the philosophy of Jesus in all of its simplicity and power and so adapted as to meet the needs of a modern world.

Prepare Now for the Harvest Festival

By C. C. Koehler

While the earth lasts, seed time and harvest shall not fail.

Seed time is with us; the harvest (and Harvest Festival) are in prospect. Both are sure to follow.

Already preparations are being made in and around Independence, on a much larger scale than ever before, for the 1931 Festival.

Meetings are being held to organize and plan for the coming event.

Space in the Auditorium is being asked for beyond that assigned to branches and organizations in the past. For instance, Holden Stake, with ten feet last year, has requested sixty feet for '31, and promises to stage an exhibit that will far surpass anything ever put across by that group. This is just one of the many moves of like nature to make this year's season of Thanksgiving take on the aspect of "filling the storehouse."

At a meeting of the pastors, supervisors, women workers, and other interested organizations held at the Stone Church, Monday evening, March 16, an actual necessity for a much larger festival was emphasized by Pastor John Sheehy.

The response was very gratifying. Pledges were made for not only doubling the amount contributed last year, but as far beyond that as it was possible to go. Only those who had to do with the distribution of the products of the last festival know how urgent it is that the larder be filled to overflowing this year, that the poor and unfortunate be properly taken care of. To date very little is in store, and ere another season of production is on us, the needs of many will remain unfilled.

A "mountain of potatoes" and another of pop corn were pledged by one club, and immediately an offer from a wholesale house was forthcoming for the purchase of the corn in order that a fund be created to buy sugar, rice, coal, and other commodities. Plots of ground are being secured, church vacant lots, etc., are to be cultivated and caused to produce, jars are being called for, meetings preliminary to canning and preserving-time activities are to be held; these in order that the workers might secure sugar, jars, and other accessories for processing where group or community canning is to be carried on. For example, one branch held a meeting in the spring last year, the church was decorated with the beautiful things of nature, flowers, grasses, vines, etc., a high class program was put on, the price of admission was a jar of sugar, preferably a Mason jar that could be used later to fill. Several hundred pounds of sugar and many dozens of jars were secured. The big thing was the spirit of the "Harvest" and "Thanksgiving" that prevailed, carried through, and made possible their success.

Time and space prevent a history of the 1930 Festival being broadcast at this time. We just mention a few "high points" to give those at a distance some idea as to the splendor, value, and influence of occasions of this sort. On the north stage, an Aurora Borealis was a center of attraction. This was in constant action, and it took an hour for the same combination of colors to come around. This was put on by Walnut Park Branch and was accompanied by 1,500 quarts of products. Kansas City exhibited "Industrial Zion," showing a skyscraper sky line with attendant industrial establishments. This meant hours of planning, nights of labor, mostly in the cellars preparing the buildings, getting their proper proportions, slant, setting, color, etc., and what an array of products! And how nicely arranged and marked! Another 1,500-jar offering with bags and baskets of raw vegetables and fruits. A picture for sore eyes.

The exhibit of Hawaii (by Sister Sakamoto, as chief decorator and designer), with its volcano in action and its tropical products, was the object of many favorable comments, as was that of Maine, with the sea foods, blueberries, and a typical Maine coast setting. These were ribbon winners in the "other than local" offerings and exhibits.

The Stone Church exhibit, with a forty-foot frontage, showed the three periods of sacrifice; the lamb on the altar, the Supreme Sacrifice of Christ, and the present-day sacrifice of wresting from the soil, laboring together with God to produce the good things of the earth, and bringing in the first (best) fruits to the House of God and laying them at the feet of the Bishop. Englewood with its "Milk and Honey Blessed" pastoral scene and hive exhibit, and Gudgeon Park depicting a night scene at the turbulent Niagara, showing early missionary effort, were outstanding exhibits, and ribboned by the judges. They were very good and had to be, as other local productions of art and handicraft and display of products crowded them closely for honors.

The "Great Northwest Club," ably assisted by the Milwaukee Railroad, had a wonderful setting. One Oregonian was so anxious to get his fruit in on time that it was sent parcels post.

Tables carried wonderful specimens of flowers, and a local greenhouse contributed three hundred or more beautiful cut roses.

If the members outside of Independence could have seen the many workers during the period of preparation and heard the expressions of gratitude and thanksgiving as the Bishop or his agent meted out their portion to the poor or unfortunate, it would have aroused a determination to assist, and a yearning for opportunity to help their fellow creatures.

The Kansas City Board of Trade, Federal Department of Agriculture, and County Farm Bureau all helped to make the festival a big success.

The Jackson County exhibit was of grains, grasses, fruits, etc., that took the Blue Ribbon and State cup at the State Fair. Here we suggest that all farm communities send in these products as if they were to be in strict fair competition, properly wrapped and labeled, that they may be compared with like products from other parts of the country.

Our industrial exhibit, thanks to Stanley Kelley and R. R. Redfield, was a success, and at that only a starter for a much larger one in '31.

We were hosts to 50,000 visitors. We hope our members, both local and world wide, will weigh and analyze this angle to the event, draw their own conclusions, and if we have not yet heard from you, let us see if you are with us in 1931.

Faith

By William Heywood, Manchester, England

If we turn to Mark 11:22, we find these words: "Have faith in God," or as it is put in the marginal reference, "Have the faith of God."

Faith is the first principle of the gospel. Paul, in Hebrews 11:1, says, "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." And in Hebrews 11:6: "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Indeed this chapter, Hebrews 11, is a general treatise on faith. But let us look nearer home than in the ages of long ago. In doing so, we ask ourselves the question, "Is faith necessary today?" Men will answer and say, "Have not we our governments, our army, our navy, our air force, our police force, our courts of justice, etc.? What more then?" We reply, Yes, to all these questions, and every man, be he Christian, atheist, Moslem, Mohammedan, Stoic, or whatever he may call himself, must exercise faith as a principle of life.

Faith as a Principle of Life

Let us look first into the home life: The husband must have faith in the wife, the wife must have faith in the husband, children must have faith in their parents, else where would be the solid and firm foundation of what makes up the home as we understand it? This fact is acknowledged by all men in every walk of life. The artisan must have faith in himself that he can accomplish the task, or particular piece of work that he has in hand to perform. The master must have faith in his workmen to do the work which keeps his establishment going as a paying concern. Faith must be had in a great degree in our business world, also in our social world. The artist has faith that in mixing colors he can get the desired tint or color which he wishes to apply to the canvas to complete the picture. The doctor has faith that in a certain formula he produces a remedy for the case he has in hand. The schoolmaster looks at his pupils and has faith that he sees before him the future leaders of religion, of medicine, of surgery, of chemistry, of mathematics, of art, music, industry, of learning, and possibly the leaders of the political parties of their day and time. If—ah, if, that little word which means such a great lot in this world—if, I say, he put his utmost into his teaching. "Faith without works is dead." (James 2:17.) So with the man or woman who seeks salvation, faith is the great dominating principle. Therefore, we come to a conclusion that faith is the great active force, not only in our work-a-day world, but in our efforts towards our eternal salvation.

In James 5:15 we read: "The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." Here we come to the principle of prayer, which is a twin sister to faith, and the two when exercised in joint harmony are very effectual. Naturally the question may be asked, "What is prayer?" Prayer is the sincere desire of the heart or soul expressed by word or thought to a supreme being or personage in whose ability to grant our request we must have complete faith. Thus Jesus says, "Have faith in God, believing that he is," and James 1: 5, 6 says, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him; but let him ask in faith nothing wavering."

Many might ask the question, "Where is God?" and "What is he like?" This is a reasonable question, seeing that we say that faith must be demonstrated towards him, so we answer, "God is in heaven!" (Ecclesiastes 5: 2.) And to describe him we say that he is a personage having parts and passions, for (Genesis 1: 26) "God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." So if God made man after his own image, we can confidently speak to him in prayer, demonstrating faith that he can grant our request, be it whatsoever it may be, in all reasonableness.

When we look at the make-up of man, and realize the valuable senses that man possesses, we must conclude that "God is a wonderful personage." Since we are like him, we say that God made or created nothing more highly endowed with intelligence than man is.

In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus was teaching the multitude many things, and one of the principal things was prayer. In Matthew (6: 10) these words appear, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Looking back into that day and into and through the ages up to the present, who will not say that faith must have been demonstrated to a great extent to pray, believing, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."

Man's conception of heaven is in a varied sense. Some express the idea that heaven is beyond the clouds. Some say that heaven is a prepared place for a prepared people. Some say that heaven is a place that will open to our view in the uncertain future, where all will be at rest, nothing to do but play on golden instruments and make music for all eternity. But mark the words of our Lord. He says, "Pray, Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as in heaven." Therefore, what is reasonable is the thought that the kingdom of heaven will be established on the earth and in the earth.

If we look up into the firmament above the earth, which by the way is looked upon as the place where heaven is located, and we gaze upon the many millions of stars that give her light by night, we see the moon also giving her light as she travels through the heavens, also the sun by day, as he also travels from the rising in the east to the setting in the west, all going one eternal round, all obeying the mind and the will of the Creator who made them, we can readily understand the words of the Master, "Pray, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven." Some might ask, What is the will of God on earth? We reply that it is the will of God that all men shall be saved and enjoy an eternity of bliss where God and Christ shall be for ever and ever. It is readily agreed upon, that under the present order of things, man would not be in a perfect or better environment. So we find that our heavenly Father provided for the restoration of the heavenly kingdom on the earth.

Now in the beginning God—among all the rest of his creation—made man. We learn he placed man in a garden called Eden, and gave him specific and definite commands. But alas, man disobeyed God. Through the disobedience of the divine commands of God, the whole earth was cursed. (See Genesis 3: 17-19.) In the Holy Scriptures we learn it was God's plan to save mankind from sin and its consequences; for Paul says, "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans 6: 23. In this we conceive that our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ had a great part in the redemption of the world and mankind; inasmuch as, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16. What a promise!

Now it is not my purpose to go into the details of believing the principles of the gospel, as found in the teachings of Jesus, but to bring to your minds that the principle of faith must be demonstrated by all men if they would inherit the earth for eternity. Jesus said, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."—Matthew 5: 5. The word shall is an auxiliary verb used in the future tense, thus indicating a future state of happiness, under a future ideal environment or condition. Now how shall this future inheritance come about? Again, Jesus says: "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."—Luke 12: 32.

"Ah," says one, "how will this come about, and what good will the earth or the kingdom be unto us? We see on every hand that the earth is divided into countries and nations; and all have their own governments to formulate laws to rule, and each country is doing commerce one with the other, using up all the resources of the earth; so again I ask, What good will it do? If the meek inherit the earth, how shall these things be?"

I suggest here that faith declares that in the new heaven and in the new earth shall be all the resources which shall be necessary for the inhabitants thereof for all eternity. Well may Jesus say, "Have the faith of God."—Mark 11: 22. Man is an unbelieving creature, but experience teaches us that God our heavenly Father is a benevolent, loving, and all-wise parent. Let us look into the records of Moses concerning the creation of the world. And some people will go so far as to say, "If you believe that, you must have some faith." Look into the first two chapters, and we find that God created everything for the use of man. In the air the birds; on the earth the trees, herbs, fruits, vegetables, animals, etc.; under the earth and in the earth, minerals and precious stones; in the sea fishes, etc., each and everything bearing its own seed within itself, after its own kind for reproduction. The statement of the Lord was unto Noah, "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease."—Genesis 8: 22. Can we not, therefore, put our trust and confidence in one who is supreme above all, one who is benevolent in the extreme, whose love is to all mankind, one who has said, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else."—Isaiah 45: 22.

David asks the question, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?"—Psalms 15: 1. He goes on to answer thus: "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved."—Psalms 15: 2-5.

Therefore, have faith in God. Have the faith of God.

Faith works with power but will not plead
The best of works when done;
It knows no other ground of trust
But in the Lord alone.

It gives no title but receives;
No blessing it procures;
Yet, where it truly lives and reigns,
All blessings it ensures.

Its sole dependence and its stay
Is Jesus' righteousness;
'Tis thus salvation is by faith,
And all of sov'reign grace.

The more this principle prevails,
The more is grace adored;
No glory it assumes, but gives
All glory to the Lord.

The Story of My Life

By Arthur Leverton

VIII.—DIVINE INTERVENTION

As told to Nellie Andrew and Illa Brown

Brother and Sister Thomas Vince were isolated from the church. Their daughter Rosey was taken sick. The doctor was called in attendance, but the case was so peculiar he did not understand it. and Rosey continued to grow worse. Finally Sister Vince said to her husband, "We will get an elder to administer to Rosey, for she suffers so much pain in her back and seems so sick. People think she is going to die." I was the nearest elder, living about twenty-eight miles away. Brother Vince came on the afternoon train. We got ready and returned on the night train to Prairie Siding. Brother Vince being an employee on the railroad, his house was on the railroad. We, therefore, succeeded in getting the engineer to stop the train opposite the house. We went in and found Rosey in a rather deplorable condition on account of the pain and suffering. After due preparation we had prayer and I administered to Rosey. In a very short time she went to sleep. I said to Brother and Sister Vince, "You are worn out with sitting up. Go to bed and have a sleep, for Rosey will not waken until morning." Sister Vince said, "Do you think so?" I said, "That is the way I feel; don't be alarmed, for she won't waken until morning." Then we went to bed. I don't know how long we had been in bed, but I awoke with a terrible pain in my right arm. I did not want to make any disturbance, for everyone was tired and sleepy, so I rolled and tossed and did the best I could to keep quiet. Finally there came a little lull, and I went to sleep. I dreamed that when I administered to Rosey the pain had left her body and entered my arm, and as it passed through my arm everything would be all right in the morning. When I awoke in the morning, the first thing I did was to grab my arm and see if everything was all right. I said, "If that poor girl was suffering with pain of that type, it certainly was terrible to bear." We sat down to breakfast, and it being warm weather, Sister Vince went out to replenish the table necessities. She came running back and said, "What do you think?" "Well," I said, "Sister Vince, in this day you don't know what to think." "If Rosey has not gotten up out of bed and is out there playing on the road with the other children!" It was another evidence of God's watchful and loving care over his children, and we felt to thank God for his mercy toward us.

Another case of healing that I wish to relate is as follows: A brother and I visited a Sister Belle, who was the only member of the church in the family at that time. We spent the evening in pleasant association with the family, and as we arose to go home, Sister Belle said, "Would you mind administering to my boy?" I said, "No, if you so desire." The boy sat there apparently well. I asked no questions, but knew he was afflicted in some way or she would not have asked for administration. We bowed in prayer, then I administered to the boy. There was nothing extraordinary. Apparently we enjoyed the Spirit in the administration, and then we returned home. Some few years afterwards my services were demanded in that quarter again, which was over one hundred miles from my home. On my way I had to pass the Belle home, so I called in to see how they were getting along, and in a few minutes a young man came in quite grown up, probably fourteen or fifteen. Sister Belle said to me, "Do you know this boy?" "Well," I said, "I do know he is a Belle, but I can't recognize which one." "This is the boy you administered to when you were here before," and she spoke in such a way I felt there was something behind it. After the boy went out, I said, "Sister Belle, was there anything special at that administration?" She said, "Why, did you not hear?" "No, I never heard a thing from that time until this day." She said, "It was wonderful. That boy was ruptured on both sides so badly that we did not know what to do. We tried every appliance we heard of but to no avail. You remember it was evening when you administered. The next morning when I went to dress him, there was nothing the matter with him, and we never have had to put any appliances on him since." Now I want to say here, I was only the instrument in the hands of God in administering the ordinance, but I am perfectly convinced and satisfied it was through the fastings and prayer and devotion of that boy's mother that he was healed, proving the Doctrine and Covenants statement that some have faith to be healed. Many other instances I have had with the power of God to heal, which I forbear presenting in this account, but these two were so important I thought they should not go unnoticed.

CHURCH WORK AND SERVICES

Importance of the Home

By C. B. W.

It seems strikingly significant that so practical a magazine as Better Homes and Gardens should carry as a leading article in its April issue one from the modern philosopher, Albert Edward Wiggam, under the caption, "The Home Is Five Times More Important." What product can be of more consequence in our home-building program than the conduct, the character, and the success of boys and girls, men and women, whose lives take shape and find expression in the intimate associations of the home! A timely article, this, in a "Better Homes" magazine.

The author's thesis is tersely stated in his opening paragraph:

"A child's character and the entire emotional tone of his life, and therefore his success, are determined five times as much in the home as by all outside agencies combined. This is also as true of the man and woman as it is of the child.

"Home is the place where nearly all your fundamental attitudes toward life are developed. The school, church, club, and business office do their best, but they can never do what the family and home can do, for either good or ill, in educating the emotions and attitudes."

The result of an extensive study of over 10,000 school children, ranging in age from eight to sixteen, obtained in a thoroughly reliable manner, gives conclusive evidence to the tremendous influence of home life and surroundings upon growing individuals. Outstanding among potent home influences were the attitudes between husband and wife, between brothers and sisters, between parents and children; attitudes of the home toward the church, toward the community; toward law, benevolence, industry, frugality; toward amusements, toward ideals, toward personal rights, etc. In very great measure, far more than is usually supposed, are lives shaped and molded, success or failure determined by the lives we are living in our homes.

Doctor Wiggam concludes:

"I think then we can now say with the backing of science—what of course our common sense led us to expect all along—that the greatest thing in the world in making boys and girls into strong, self-reliant men and women, able to stand on their own feet and meet an imperfect world with high ideals of their own, is the broad general attitudes toward life and about life that are taught in the home."

All of which serves to emphasize the need for religious education among adults, and to give direction to the efforts being made to develop an adequate training of fathers and mothers which shall make of them efficient members of the church, worthy parents and companions of the unfolding lives among us. Parents of the church, how fully are we answering the challenge?

To Leaders of Young People

By E. E. Closson

Leaders of young people's groups will welcome the materials appearing in the May issue of Vision designed to point the way to a varied program of activities for local use. It is contemplated that each month the Vision will print useful program helps, stimulating to those who plan and execute the church school activities in each branch.

The Tenth Legion has been officially recognized as an activity in the young people's division. It has a threefold purpose:

- a. To stimulate individual compliance with the general church program.
- b. To encourage personal achievement in all phases of church, school, and community life.
- c. To officially recognize this achievement, and to record the names of participants.

Already there has been a number of requests for enrollment blanks, and the young people seem to welcome this organized movement within their ranks. Leaders should not hesitate to write for information concerning The Tenth Legion. Now is the time to get this church-wide movement started in every branch.

Never before have the young men and women of this church had a better opportunity to accomplish big things for God and for humanity! And I doubt if the church has ever before had as large a group of willing followers as the young Latter Day Saints of 1931! There is work to be done that will try our mettle; there are choices to make for which we must be prepared. But by consistent work and wise choices we are developing character; and best of all, we shall be leading the way toward a kind of daily life which insures peace and happiness to every man.

FACT AND OPINION

(Contributors are responsible for their own statements.)

Urges a Progressive Policy for the "Herald"

By Leonard S. Rhodes

The "Herald" Editors are glad to get a constructive article of helpful suggestion and criticism like the following. We have been waiting for this opportunity to print it.

Dear Editors of the Herald: It seems to be in order to express opinions concerning the Herald, so I am venturing to offer mine. Generally speaking I have liked the Herald except during the time preceding the 1925 General Conference, when it became an organ of contention.

Not long ago some one on the Herald staff became apologetic because the Herald had had to be reduced from thirty-two to twenty-four pages. Of course it is proper for you to strive to please the majority of your subscribers, but for my part I would very much prefer that you keep it at twenty-four pages. With limited space, the articles are shorter, better written, and more to the point. With greater space the articles are longer, written less carefully, and much is printed that is of little value. We live in a busy age, and there is a large variety of good material to choose from on the literary and magazine market, and people have less time or inclination to pick out the chaff from the kernel, or vice versa, as the case may be. A periodical called Time makes a big appeal to its readers by its pledge to not increase the number of its pages.

Regarding the letter department, I realize that some of you are proud of it, having built it up to what it is now by much correspondence and hard work, and I appreciate also the efforts and cooperation of your correspondents, for which reason I would not wish to seem unkind or unappreciative of all your efforts. But I do believe there is vast room for improvement of that department. What do the great majority of your readers care for the contents of most of the letters appearing there? What do they care about what was the speaker's subject on a given occasion, no matter how good the discourse was or how well they might have enjoyed hearing it? What do they care about the dinner, the bazaar, and a lot of things like that, unless it is from their old home branch. But you see how impossible it is for the average reader to have had residence in very many branches reporting in the Herald. The Herald for January 14 contains letters from twenty-three branches. I leafed the pages through and found myself not interested in one of them, except perhaps a small portion of the write-up under Independence. I used to be interested in that under the subheading "Personalities," but since it has been changed to "Organizations and Personalities," and the contents accordingly, my interest waned. I would have been interested in letters from Centralia, Washington; Boise, Idaho; or Santa Ana, California, had any appeared, because I have lived and labored in those places. I imagine I am a sample of the average reader in that respect.

My suggestion would be to select some one who has studied journalism and who has had experience and training as a reporter on some up-to-date daily or weekly to take charge of this department. It would never occur to a newspaper man to publish the news to his readers in the form of letters by unskilled persons from the various towns he wished to "cover." I would suggest that our reporter or newspaper man establish consent and understanding of his correspondents that he would edit their contributions; that is, that he would glean from the letters coming to his desk only those items that would be of interest to all or a large portion of his Herald readers, and then rewrite them in news form and publish them with headings and subheadings just as the daily or weekly newspapers do. He would probably find it necessary to coach and train his "reporters" in the first principles of news gathering and writing. If some could not or would not learn and he had to dispense with their contributions, the Herald readers would at least be no worse off than they are now. Some of them might eventually gain sufficient skill so that he could use their entire contribution without revision. Much less space would be required in the Herald for a department of this kind, and it would be many times more interesting. Surely there are many things of interest and with news value going on in the church, if properly presented, to warrant an arrangement of this kind! And it would save a lot of wasted space and printing which probably a great many of the "readers" do not read. The proper message for a letter department, to my mind, is not in reporting news of branches, but in testimonies of religious experiences, especially those of the distinctly Latter Day Saint variety. Dreams, visions, prophecies, healings, testimonies, salvation from personal sins, etc., form a vast field for letter testimonials of great value and comfort and help.

I believe your "Church Work and Services" should be continued. Undoubtedly there is plenty of room for improvement as experience and the suggestions of readers make possible. But just because some one does not want to read it is no reason for taking it out if enough do want to read it and profit by it. We are apt to resent a thing that is new, or which we do not understand, but I believe our workers need just that sort of help, if they will but utilize it. If they will not, it simply indicates that you are shooting a bit too high and should come down to their level until they can take the stronger meat.

The most interesting part of the Herald is the first three or four pages of each issue.

Disintegration Attacking Manhood

By Peter Lawrie

The author of the following article, an Australian brother, has recently been through severe experiences and privations. In the light of the facts, his keen resentment of the social injustice that he sees can be understood. It might be said that the spiritual leaders of the world today are concerned with this problem, but, like the author, they see no adequate answer to the great need. G. H. Chesterton, an English author, looks back to the Middle Ages for his answer, like a resurrected Don Quixote. Others look to the future, but through the mists of uncertainty they can see nothing clearly defined. It is clear that some social trends are inevitable, and they appear to lead to some sort of destruction for old privileges that we had regarded as inalienable rights.

We wonder—what do our readers think of the problem?—EDITORS.

The average toiler finds life hard. Our competitive system extorts the toil but gives not the joy of work. The pleasure of looking at some article made and feeling gladness at eyeing a good article of beauty or utility constructed by one's own hands, is gone.

Fear haunts him, "Am I near the leading hand's output? How can I keep sweet with the foreman?" Cash, drink, politics, religion, vice, tips for the races, secret societies! what?

Wheels within wheels—how can one keep himself among the machinery of production?

Strange things occur. Men in authority give orders and soon after countermand directions given. Hints, winks, and whispers, and one knows that a wire has been pulled somewhere. Not intelligence but self-interest rules. The depression makes life harder. The clever and the astute hold well, but the average and under the average question life's value.

Mother taught an honest day's work for an honest day's pay meant success. Nowadays it is not impossible for one's best to be received with a sneer. Greater production, greater production, GREATER production is life's solution. "See what the U. S. A. can do!" is thrown at the British. Through the countries it goes, till the coolie swelters under the production devil.

A Nazarene 1900 years ago said he was an example for others in this sad world. By example and precept, among other needs he taught work. Share one another's burdens, he said. He did not mean sympathetically but actually. Anger filled him to see authority give orders but not move a little finger to do the job.

But today his precepts have been altered to suit the lazy. He said if a man toiled not, neither should he eat, but that has been changed today.

He told us that it was graceful to help mother wash the dishes. Now it is, one is graceful only when mother dresses and washes to keep one in white silks. One who does no work is a graceful citizen. (?) To him is given the places of prominence in church and state, if he will condescend to take them. To work is considered a disgrace, as it shows one lacks ability. The further—by promotion, cunning, craft—one can get from actual toil, the more graceful and noble one is considered.

Nehemiah, a disciple of the Nazarene, was awfully angry at this conception of grace and nobility. Nehemiah (5:10) said this living on interest was the ruin of a nation.

The depression shows that this concept of grace is all wrong. The starved in India, the workers of China who hate the "foreign devils" production that throws them out of employment, the mass everywhere call out against this concept of gracefulness.

The Nazarene was right when he said we should toil and actually share one another's burdens. The striving for this false grace and false prominence is wrong. To contradict the Nazarene is simply ruin, madness, rebellion, and despair—a complete ruin of manhood.

An Interesting Letter

The following letter, addressed to President Smith, shows a fine spirit of one who has been led through a long and varied career by the light received at his conversion. Now, settling down to peace and tranquillity after his arduous adventures, he is concerned to bring that light to his neighbors, in whom he finds much good. The writer gave permission to print the letter.—EDITORS

Frederick M. Smith,
Editor in Chief,
Saints' Herald.

Dear Sir and Brother: I have been wanting to address you for a long time back. Somehow or other I was afraid it would annoy you. However

I will take a long shot at it anyway with the hope that I might hit something in your part of the woods.

You see, brother, it is like this: I have been isolated from church privileges for a number of years, probably twenty years, with much of my time in the frozen north, the land of the midnight sun; some of the time in the burning south, also the wild west and the civilized east, especially during the World War. However, it did not seem very civilized during my four years of service under King George as a British soldier.

During my twenty-five years of romance through these different countries, associating with all classes of people, I can truly say that I have never once waived my allegiance to the gospel, which I have loved since the day of my baptism.

After I returned from the World War, I came back to the mountains of old Kentucky, where I was born and raised, congratulating myself on the luck I had getting through the war. I took to myself a young widow for my wife, who had a little boy. My life has been one of sunshine and flowers ever since. I have done quite a little of fireside talk concerning my church. The people here do not seem to know very much about it. Very few of them have ever heard of the Latter Day Saints. However, there are several that seem to take quite a fancy to my talk, in so much that my wife has been watching her chance and wondering how she could be baptized for several years; also my stepson and my own son of nine years, and probably quite a few of my wife's people.

Also maybe some others, if they could hear a few sermons from a real Latter Day Saint. It is quite easy to see that these mountain people are of an Anglo-Saxon nature, so to speak. They think more of their word than they do of their money. This seems to come natural to them. They are regular fanatics on obeying the law and religious matters.

We live a slow life here in the mountains—too mountainous for automobiles—travel by foot, horseback, and by wagons. It would do me a world of good to have a good sharp elder come into this country. Sometimes I imagine he could almost make a landslide of it. I can take care of him at my home during his stay here.

If you are interested in this matter, let me know as early as you like. I will answer any and all questions that you will ask of me to the best of my ability.

Yours sincerely, J. J. S.

Self-sacrificing love is the atmosphere of heaven; and those who would be sons of God and abide with him, must learn to love as he loves, and to give for the good of others.—M. E. Kern.

London, Ontario

Elder W. I. Fligg, London District missionary, who for the past month has worked in London, is now with Delhi Branch. While here Brother Fligg did much effective visiting among the Saints, encouraging and cheering them in the good work. He preached on Sunday evenings.

The Dramatic Club presented a successful play in the church-school room the other evening. "Uncle John" Vasbinder is president of the club, and the organization is doing splendid work among the young people. A new curtain was installed for this and subsequent plays.

Prior to the regular service on a recent Sunday, Marion Judkins was baptized by Elder Fligg. Marion is just eight years old and was eager to comply with the teachings of her parents and Sunday-school teacher.

The church school orchestra gave a concert last week in the church auditorium. In spite of inclement weather, attendance was very good. Sister Grace Vasbinder gave a reading. The proceeds of the concert will be used for the benefit of the orchestra.

Pastor MacGregor and Elders Dent and Winegarden have given some forceful sermons the past month. They have stressed the need of the Saints to sustain the authorities of the church during the present depression. Our solicitor reports good response to the call of the church on the part of the membership during the last month.

The church school, under the direction of Elder F. Gray, is preparing for Easter.

A concert by the choir in February was much enjoyed by everyone. The program included well-known choruses by the choir, the opening number consisting of three songs, "O Canada," "Sweet and Low," and "Steal Away." For their second group the choir sang "Canadian Boat Song," "Lovely Evening," and "Long, Long Ago." The concluding group included "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" and "All through the Night." Fred Heddington, choirmaster, directed, and Mrs. C. Abell was organist and gave several solo selections. J. Vasbinder, president of the choir, made a brief talk during the evening. Assisting artists were Miss Madeline Timbrell, who contributed vocal solo numbers; A. Hodgson, violinist; Miss Grace Vasbinder, reader; Mrs. A. Ebsworthy and Miss Grace Perry, who sang a duet, and Mrs. Mayston, soloist. Good notice was given this concert by the press.

Portland, Oregon

Many briefly testified of their belief in the gospel and their trust in God at the March 1 sacramental service. The hearing of such testimonies tends to strengthen the faith of all.

Recently Brother Sorden changed the order of the mid-week prayer service. We now have a short time at the opening devoted to prayer, and continue with the class work on the subject, "Doctrinal Fundamentals." This is also conducted as a separate class each Sunday evening from six to seven o'clock.

Elder H. W. Savage lately held a series of meetings at Sherwood, near Portland, where quite an interest has been shown in the last year or two. He is at present working in another part of the district.

Apostle M. A. McConley was a recent visitor, taking charge of a special business meeting called to consider the release of Pastor Sorden from the missionary field, according to the action of the Joint Council of the general church. The branch budget was revised, and pledges were taken for the support of Brother Sorden and family, that they might continue to work in this branch and district. We realize the value of our missionary and would have experienced keen loss had he chosen to enter other fields of labor. We are hoping for the day when all the missionaries who have been released from the field during the business depression shall be recalled to continue their work.

Oakland, California

From The Oakland Bulletin

Considerable sickness prevailed among our members the latter part of March, there being an epidemic of influenza. Brother Jacobson is still in poor health. News was received of the death of Brother Frank De Sart, late of this branch.

Pastor John W. Rushton preached at San Francisco Church March 15, and lectured there the following Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday evenings. On Saint Patrick's Day he spoke on "The Characteristics of Modern Knighthood," at the banquet of the Knights of the Round Table.

Among recent speakers here have been Cecil Hawley, G. P. Levitt, and J. W. Rushton.

Enjoyable dinners have characterized Church Night. The object in inaugurating these services was to bring members to the church for social gatherings, to provide opportunity for those interested in religious education, and to give support to the prayer services. The money from the meals is donated to the new church building fund. This is a movement which deserves the support of every member.

A fine time is reported by the L'Amite Club, which had a Saint Patrick's banquet at the church.

The basket ball team played San Francisco at the San Francisco Boys' Club gym March 21.

Birmingham, England

Pastor P. S. Whalley, speaking to the Saints on the topic, "The Kingdom of God and How It Will Come," said: "Men and nations are striving for that kingdom, but we are told by God that unless we do certain things, we can not attain it. We believe that when Jesus said, 'I will build my church,' he meant that he would build his kingdom. He is still building his kingdom against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. Christ holds up before us a standard of conduct by which we must measure ourselves before we can attain his kingdom. We have tried war, and learned that that is not God's way of bringing about his kingdom. When the nations learn truth and righteousness, then will come peace and happiness—God's way of living. Are we conforming to his rules by loving and serving humanity and keeping his commandments?"

During the church school sessions, Brother Whalley has conducted a series of studies comprising "The Beliefs of the Church," "Thrift," and "The Financial Law."

His sermons have opened up a wide field for thought. They have inspired the members.

The women of the branch have organized a club. Brother Whalley has consented to act as president, Sister E. Bailey, secretary, and Sister N. Smith, treasurer. The organization is called the Women's Guild.

We pray that consecration will mark the lives of God's people, and that his will may be done on earth as it is in heaven.

Sons Follow Father in County Offices

At the January session of the county council, Elder William R. Leverton was elected warden of the county of Kent, Ontario, Canada, for the year 1931. He was chosen from a field of six strong competitors. This is a distinctive honor and proves his sterling worth as a legislator and also the esteem in which he is held among his fellows of the county council of twenty-nine members. On assuming the chair, he called upon Elder David J. Williams to open the proceedings with prayer and to invoke divine aid to guide the deliberations of that body.

Seven and a half years ago Elder Leverton was selected as a member of the Township of Zone, and two and a half years later was elected reeve of the township (presiding officer). This office makes him automatically a member of the county council.

It is interesting also to note that his younger brother, Frederick A. Leverton, as reeve of Orford Township, has also been a member of the county council for five years. He was at the same session elected a member of the road commission for the five-year term, which indicates the respect in which he is held.

Singularly as it may appear, Brother William is occupying the seat as warden that his father, our late Brother Arthur Leverton, occupied in 1899, and is the first reeve of Zone Township to hold that office since that time.

Brother Arthur had occupied as a member of the county council for a period of nine years. Prior to that he had been two years as tax collector for the township and two years before that auditor. He was also secretary-treasurer of School Section Number 5 of Zone Township for twenty-two years. In 1906 he moved to Orford Township and served that township for two years, thus being a predecessor to his sons in each township.

Chicago, Illinois

First Branch

At the conclusion of a special missionary series at Central Chicago Branch, District Missionary R. E. Davey and City Missionary Cecil Schmid began a series in First Branch, devoting the concluding two weeks of February to intensive visiting in the branch and among the members on the prospect list.

Beginning March 1 services were held each night except Saturday with fair attendance in spite of bad weather. The series culminated March 22 in the baptism of four people, Brother and Sister William LaBrant, Sister Carrie Moore, and Sister Christine Gautchier.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards was here the week-end of March 15, and in addition to counseling with the Chicago priesthood, added his bit to the success of the Davey-Schmid campaign. His sermons morning and evening were full of instruction, and his timely visit was much enjoyed.

Throughout the period occupied by the special services, our brothers were wonderfully blessed and enjoyed their work. Night after night the gospel was presented with clarity and vigor in a series of well-connected sermons. Though at times attendance was not great, interest and attention of the hungering ones did not flag, and a fine spirit was present.

The music department contributed to the enjoyment of the meetings, providing special numbers. Much thought was given to the details of the baptismal service, and plans were well worked out. Floral decorations of church and font added to the beauty of the ceremony. Believing that Herald readers will be interested in seeing how this program was worked out, we included the numbers: Prelude, instrumental trio (piano, violin, flute); call to worship, Romans 6: 3-5; hymn; prayer, Elder J. W. Pettersson; vocal solo, Sister Violet Bone; brief address by the pastor, Elder H. T. McCaig; anthem, First Chicago choir; offering; charge to the candidates, Elder C. E. Schmid; baptismal ceremony, Elder Schmid officiating. Before and during the ceremony, except while the baptismal prayer was offered, subdued music by the trio took excerpts from numbers 62, 66, 69, 107, and 131, Saints' Hymnal. Then came a hymn from the congregation, a charge to the membership by Elder R. E. Davey, scriptural citation, Galatians 3: 27, 28, hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers," by the congregation, and the benediction by Elder A. O. Skinner.

The confirmation of the new members was a part of the evening service, Elders Davey, Skinner, Pettersson, and Schmid officiating.

First Chicago Choir presented the cantata, "Easter tide," by Daniel Prothero, at First Branch the evening of April 5, and at Central Chicago Branch the evening of April 12.

City Missionary Cecil Schmid occupied the pulpit in this branch the evening of April 12, delivering an illustrated lecture on The Passion Play. On the evening of April 26 he will talk on The Book of Mormon.

Haileyville, Oklahoma

The Eastern Oklahoma district conference convened at Haileyville, February 21 and 22, District President C. G. Smallwood in charge. Because of sickness and unfavorable weather, attendance was small, but the business sessions were blessed with peace and unity.

Prior to the conference Brother Smallwood preached a few sermons here. On February 19, his birthday, a surprise followed the preaching hour. Sister Ora Dollins presented the gifts.
